Bill (No. 1) respecting the Administration of Oaths of Office.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

Mr. SPEAKER laid on the Table a copy of the Speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor General to both Houses of Parliament in the Senate Chamber this day, which is as follows :—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

In calling you together again for the consideration of Public Affairs, I may fairly congratulate you on a continuance of the progress and prosperity of the country.

During the recess I visited Manitoba and the North-West Territories and British Columbia, and everywhere I found myself received with the loyalty and good-will which I have learned to be characteristic of Canada. A comparison of my own observations with those of my predecessors shows clearly the great progress which has marked this part of the Dominion, in the settlement of the country and in the development of its great agricultural capabilities, of its mineral wealth and of its other natural resources.

In consequence of the repeated seizures by cruisers of the United States Navy of Canadian Vessels, while employed in the capture of seals in that part of the Northern Pacific Ocean, known as Behring Sea, my Government has strongly represented to Her Majesty's Ministers, the necessity of protecting our shipping, while engaged in their lawful calling, as well as of guarding against the assumption by any nation of exclusive proprietary rights in those waters. I feel confident that those representations have had due weight, and I hope to be enabled during the present Session to assure you that all differences on this question are in the course of satisfactory adjustment.

Having observed the close attention which has recently been given by the Imperial Authorities and on the Continent of Europe to the improvement in the methods of catching, curing and packing fish, I deemed it expedient to cause a Commission to be sent to Scotland and Holland to examine and report upon this subject during the fishing season. The report of the delegates will be laid before you ; it will, I am sure, give our Fishermen most valuable information and instruction as to the best means of improving and developing this important industry.

My Ministers have carefully considered the difficulties which surround the administration of the rights of the Dominion in its foreshores, harbors, lakes and rivers, and a measure will be submitted to you for removing uncertainty as to the respective rights of the Dominion and of the Provinces, and for preventing confusion in the titles thereto.

The Report of the Royal Commission on Labor, which was laid before you during the last Session, has been distributed throughout the country. I have reason to believe that the information which it contains will be found eminently useful in suggesting improvements in the administration of the laws which affect the working classes. Measures for the amendment of these laws, so far as they come within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, will be submitted for your consideration.

The early termination of the Acts of Incorporation of the principal banking institutions of the Dominion necessitates a review of our present system of Banking and an adjustment of the terms under which the Charters of these corporations should be renewed. Your attention will be drawn to this important subject.

Certain amendments to the Acts relating to the North-West Territories, calculated to facilitate the administration of affairs in that region, as also a Bill further to promote the efficiency of the North-West Mounted Police, will be submitted for your consideration.

Measures will be laid before you relating to Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes, to improve the laws respecting patents of invention and discovery, to amend the Adulteration Act, and the law respecting the Inland Revenue, to amend also the Act respecting the Geological and Natural History Survey of Canada, and to provide for the better organisation of the National Printing Establishment.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

The Accounts for the past year will be laid before you. It will be found that the Estimates of Revenue have been realised, and that after having fully provided for the various public services of the country, a substantial surplus will remain. The Estimates for next year have been framed with a due regard to the requirements of the Public Service.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I commit these weighty matters, and all others which may come before you, to your earnest consideration, and I rely upon your wisdom and prudence to deal with them in the manner which, under Divine Providence, may prove most conducive to the happiness and prosperity of Canada.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved :

That the Speech of His Excellency the Governor General be taken into consideration to-morrow.

Motion agreed to.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved :

That the Select Standing Committees of this House for the present Session be appointed for the following purposes:—1. On Privileges and Elections. 2. On Expiring Laws. 3. On Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines. 4. On Miscellaneous Private Bills. 5. On Standing Orders. 6. On Printing. 7. On Public Accounts. 8. On Banking and Commerce. 9. On Agriculture and Colonisation; which said Committees shall severally be empowered to examine and enquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House, and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Motion agreed to.

DEBATES COMMITTEE.

Mr. BOWELL. With the consent of the House I ask the privilege of moving for the appointment of the Standing Committee on the "Hansard." I propose the same names as constituted the Committee last year, with the exception of Mr. Colby, whose place will be taken by Mr. White (Cardwell). The Committee will then stand :

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ; and at 3.45 p.m. the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 17th January, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

The House proceeded to the consideration of His Excellency's Speech at the opening of the Session.

Mr. POPE. Out of compliment to the constituency that I have the honor to represent, the right hon. the First Minister has asked me to move the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I presume it is not out of order for me to apologise for my unfitness to perform the task entrusted to me on this occasion. My early training as a practical farmer has not been of any assistance to me as a public speaker, more especially upon the floor of the House of Commons. The eloquence that we are accustomed to use in the management of our animals upon the farm, although occasionally strong and forcible, would, perhaps, not be appropriate upon an occasion of this kind, and, consequently, I will have to depend on the generosity and good nature of this honorable House in asking them to extend to me the courtesy and sympathy which a new and young member may be entitled to claim. We are all pleased to note by the first paragraph that His Excellency, following the example set him by many of his illustrious predecessors, was pleased during the vacation to take the opportunity of visiting the far western portion of our Dominion, as far as the shores of British Columbia. We all rejoice in the fact that during the entire extent of that journey he was received loyally by our citizens at every hand and upon every side. Whatever may be said of the people of Canada, whatever their shortcomings may be, there is one thing that can never be imputed to them, and that is disloyalty to our noble Queen. This feeling of loyalty and devotion has been and is still being strengthened by the high personal and noble character of the illustrious statesmen whom Her Gracious Majesty has chosen from time to time to represent Her as Governors-General of Canada. There are practical results which flow from these visits of royalty. First, they give our people in the far West the opportunity of seeing in person the men of whom they have heard so much. It is but right and just that they should have the opportunity of seeing and becoming personally acquainted with the men in whom they expect to find true friends, and to whom they look to protect their interests. These visits also help to create what is most necessary, and what I am very sorry to see is greatly wanting in Canada, and that is a national sentiment. Canadians are too apt to belittle their own country in comparison with the nations of the world; they are too apt to forget its magnitude and its great natural resources, and to lose sight of what they are going to be and are bound to be. In this they work an injustice to themselves, and create an unfavorable impression with regard to our country abroad. We should feel proud of being part and parcel of the greatest Empire that the world has ever known; and what still further should be a great source of pride and gratification to the people of Canada is the fact that they are no longer a sick child in the arms of England, but have strength within themselves—that they are quite capable of maintaining themselves, and are, in fact, a source of strength to the mother country. I sincerely believe that our future will be a glorious one, but while we have these great gifts of nature in these natural resources, which are being developed by the courage and pluck of our Canadian people, under the fostering care of the wise fiscal policy of the Government of the day—while all these things are instrumental in making us more and more independent, at the same time I believe that the desire for British connection has never deeper root in the hearts and minds of the Canadian people than it is at this very moment. Like dutiful children we feel that we have a right to be thankful to those powers who protected us in our infancy; and now that we have become strong and are rapidly becoming powerful, we bow with humble feelings of patriotism and loyalty at the Throne of Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, the woman whom we all love, honor and respect. His Excellency notices, besides, the great strides of progress our West has made in agricultural and mineral development. As a practical farmer, I may say that we have a right to be thankful to the Great Giver of all good gifts for the past season. It is quite true that, in a great country such as Canada, with such a vast extent of territory, it would be impossible for every part, portion or section to produce just the character of crops desired; but take Canada as a whole, I believe that last year's crop was a good one, free from frosts, free from any extraordinary blight, and in every instance the production was of first class quality. In the far East our crops were very bountiful, and we had a very good harvest time to secure them. The hay crop, which is very essential in the eastern section of Canada, where we are forced by our long winters to stable our animals for many months, was an immense one, exceeding any for the last few years. The ranchers of the North-West had a beautiful winter. Their cattle came out in splendid condition. They had a magnificent summer for their grasses—a very essential element in the production of beef—and, consequently, the enterprise of the ranchmen has been rewarded with success. The farmers of Canada have been able to realise for their agricultural productions as great, if not greater, prices than those of any other section on the continent of America. I maintain that the markets open to Canada are as good, if not better, especially in the East, where, I say it without hesitation, the markets are the best that possibly could be found on this side of the Atlantic. The life of a farmer is a hard one. We are no sooner out of one work than we are into another. When we have harvested our crops, and marketed them, we must begin to prepare for the next year, and that preparation is a matter of great importance. The favorable weather we have had has admitted of ploughing in the North-West to an extent unknown before in the history of this country. Early fall ploughing insures early crops, and early crops insure, as a rule, early harvests. With a prospective, I believe a certain, rise in the price of beef, I think the farmers of Canada have the right to look forward with confidence to the year 1890. Being a new and undeveloped country, especially that section lying to the west, it is of the greatest importance that His Excellency should have personal knowledge of its wonderful capabilities. We are to-day reaping the benefits of the visits paid to that country by the illustrious predecessors of His Excellency. We now find them on the other side of the water saying good and kind things in reference to Canada, and endeavoring, by means of their position, to foster our interests. I beg, Sir, to say that I believe, when the present occupant of the position of Governor-General of this Dominion returns to his native country, we shall ever find him a true friend to our interests—in the same way as we have found the noble lords who have preceded him. I am sure both sides of the House will feel much gratified at that portion of His Excellency's speech which states that the long disputed point in reference to our fishery rights will probably be settled very shortly. The people of Canada have every reason to congratulate the Government of the day on the courteous, and, at the same time, firm stand they have taken upon this matter. They have evinced from the beginning every desire to treat our American neighbors with respect, and to make every allowance for their very peculiar way of mixing up international questions with ordinary corner politics, as though they were one and the same thing. We have given them every chance to cool down after the excitement of an election campaign, but at the same time we have not been negligent, nor are we going to be willing that they should infringe or trample upon our rights. The result of this firmness on the part of the Government of the day, accompanied by the willingness of the Government to treat the question fairly and without prejudice, has been that the world at large respect us for the courage we have displayed and recognise that we have rights peculiar to Canada the value of which cannot be over-estimated. In another paragraph of the Speech we find it stated that:

In consequence of the great value of our fisheries, the Government of the day appointed a Commission to visit Europe and to investigate the most approved means of catching, curing and packing fish. The report of this Commission will soon be laid before the House, and I am sure we will all agree that any reasonable expenditure which the Government may have made in the direction of gaining information on the subject of this great industry will be justifiable, especially when we take into consideration the fact that for the last five years the total aggregate of the fish catch has averaged $18,000,000 per annum. It is stated that in British Columbia, as well as in the Maritime Provinces, there are still undeveloped fisheries of great value. It must not be forgotten that, besides the money which we obtain from the sale of the fish, this industry gives employment to a very large body of men at remunerative wages, who form practically an army of sturdy men who make their homes with us and cast in their lot with us under the flag that waves over Canada. They form a navy of industrious men who, if the time ever arrives—which God forbid should ever come—when this country may be engaged in warfare, will ever show their zeal for the honor and credit of this country and of its people, and who will defend their families and their homes. The next paragraph refers to legislation affecting the rights of the Dominion in its foreshores, harbors, lakes and rivers. While the autonomy of our provincial rights should be maintained, the rights of the Dominion should not be infringed upon, and it is well that, as far as possible, all vexed questions of this character should be settled so that there may be as little friction as possible between the different legislative bodies by which we are governed. Based upon the Report of the Royal Commission on Labor, we shall be called upon to consider legislation affecting the working classes, a class to which I am proud to belong. They are not only a very important body, but they are equally deserving of kind consideration at our hands the same as any other class or section of men. To a very large extent they are Canadian born; they are moved by the same sentiments of loyalty as their employers; they remain here not alone for the wages they get, but from the fact that Canada is their native country and the home of their friends and relatives. By some ordination of nature they are not rich, but they are of our kindred, and they are entitled to the kindest consideration from the members of this House. We have had timely warnings from other nations of the world, and we know that the workman deserves protection at our hands. We have all read the account of the great strike in England, and we are continually reading in every American newspaper of the war between capital and labor in the United States. It is a vexed question in that country to-day, and may be an unsolved problem in the future. Let us, in fair Canada, endeavor, by the character of the legislation that we place upon the Statute-book during the present Session, to prove to the workmen that their best friends are within these legislative halls, and that we are prepared to protect the laborer, the honest, industrious worker, and to appreciate his citizenship as much as the citizenship of any other class which exists in Canada. Another paragraph in the Speech is as follows:—

“The early termination of the Acts of incorporation of the principal banking institutions of the country necessitates a review of our present system of banking and an adjustment of the terms under which the charters of these corporations should be renewed.”

I am not going to say much upon this subject, because I think I may be trespassing upon dangerous ground; but there are one or two matters which have come under my personal attention and to which I would call the attention of the First Minister. For instance: I have been asked by my banker to sign a document purporting to be a bill of exchange at three or four or six months, and I have found him, at the termination at that time, presenting that document to me and demanding that I should pay it. I think that, in future, matters of that kind should be attended to by the Government. Another paragraph in the Address reads as follows:—

In a rapidly increasing and developing country such as the North-West, with a population which is increasing very fast, and with resources which have been hitherto unknown, it behooves the Government to give every assistance in the way of legislation that lies in their power. Then, it is also stated that a Bill further to promote the efficiency of the North-West Mounted Police will be submitted. I did not suppose, from what I had heard of the North-West Mounted Police, that it could be made more efficient, but, if it is possible to make it more efficient than it is, I am glad that the Government is going to take steps in that direction. There is then reference to a Bill relating to bills of exchange and promissory notes. I have already referred to that subject. A Bill is promised to amend the Act respecting the Geological and Natural History Survey. I am glad to see that our Natural History Survey is not to be forgotten, and I trust the amendment will be in the direction of developing our economic minerals; for I would not support any assistance to the natural history section, if it simply means to dig out of the bowels of the earth any more fossils than we already have on top of us here.

“The Accounts for the past year will be laid before you.”

It will be found a source of congratulation to this House—to the supporters of the Government I am sure, and also to hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House—that, notwithstanding the great sums we have expended in assisting our railways and canals, we have been able to find, at the end of the year, a surplus.

“The Estimates for next year have been framed with a due regard to the requirements of the public service.”

I trust, Sir, that while they have been framed with due regard to the public service, they have also been framed in the direction of a further extension of those public works which will aid us to become a great and powerful nation. I am not a howler of taxation, and I do not believe that the Government of the day or the people of this country are howlers of taxation. I believe we are prepared to stand a reasonable amount of taxation provided the expenditure is reasonably made. In conclusion, I may say that I am very sorry that the gentleman who was to have seconded this Address is not present here to-day, owing to sickness. I looked upon him yesterday, and when I looked upon his broad shoulders I felt a grateful relief that I was the proposer of this motion. I felt that I would be able to cast upon his shoulders a great deal of the responsibility that, under some circumstances, I might be called upon to assume. Sir, on behalf of my constituency, I again thank the hon. Premier for the honor he has conferred upon them, through me, and I beg to move the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. PRIOR. In rising to second the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, I wish first to state that it was never intended that I should occupy this position to-day. Unfortunately my colleague was suddenly taken ill this morning, and I was called upon, at a moment's notice, to take his place; under those circumstances I hope that this honorable House will grant me the indulgence that they would have shown to my colleague if he had been in my place now. We are pleased to see that His Excellency the Governor-General, during the tour he has just taken through the Western Provinces, has been received everywhere with expressions of loyalty and good-will such as Canadians ever entertain towards any representative of Her Majesty the Queen who travels amongst them. In the far-off Province of British Columbia—where, I think I may state, without fear of contradiction, that the population is more cosmopolitan than in any other portion of the Dominion, where you can find every creed, race and nationality—I think His Excellency will acknowledge that the reception given him there was no less loyal than it was in the Eastern Provinces. Canadian sentiment, I am glad to say, is largely on the increase on the west side of the Rocky Mountains. Before the great national highway, that we are all so proud of, was completed, the people in British Columbia were, to all intents and purposes, cut off from relations with their Eastern brothers. The trade and commerce that we used to carry on was nearly all done with the mother country and with the United States of America. Our friendships were made with the people across the line, more than with the people of Eastern Canada. But now, Sir, I am glad to say that things are altering very rapidly, owing to the fact that it is much easier for us to have intercourse with the inhabitants of Eastern Canada, and we are now beginning to feel that we are Canadians indeed. I think one thing that tends to strengthen this feeling is the fact that every now and again we have visits from some of our public men from the Eastern Provinces. We are also glad to see that His Excellency, during that trip, noticed the great progress that has been made in the development of the natural resources of this country. No man of ordinary intelligence can travel backwards and forwards, as we members in that distant Province do, without seeing the rapid strides that every industry is making from year to year. Every man of course, knows, or ought to know, more about his own Province than he does of the rest of the Dominion; and I can say, Sir, that British Columbia, since the first day that a white man set his foot there, has never seen such an era of prosperity as she is enjoying to-day. Her fisheries are largely on the increase; her coal mines are turning out thousands and thousands of tons; her lumber mills are working full time day and night; and you cannot travel along the Canadian Pacific Railway twenty-four hours without meeting large car loads of machinery going to the coast to be used in cutting up the giants of the forest in that Province. Take, for instance, the fisheries on the Pacific Coast. Fifteen years ago the whole coast catch was 3,000 cases; to-day, Sir, it is 400,000 cases. Take the output of coal on Vancouver Island: fifteen years ago it was less than 34,000 tons, this year it is 450,000. Nobody can help seeing that the country is going ahead when he reads these figures. Where there was one lumber mill in those days there are ten now. Many new manufactories have been started—capital coming in from Eastern Canada and the United States. I think I can safely say that every hon. member who lives in that Province, and knows it as I do, looks forward to the time, not very far distant, when the people of the Eastern Provinces will have to admit that the wealthiest Province in the whole Dominion is British Columbia. Now, Sir, there is another paragraph here that is of particular interest to myself, and that is the one in which His Excellency draws attention to the Behring Sea, and in which he mentions the fact that strong hopes are held that a speedy settlement will soon be arrived at. This subject has been before the House for the last three years, and I think it is needless for me to go into any details in regard to the why and the wherefore of this claim. I would, however, like to call the attention of the House to some of the utterances and opinions of a notable man in the United States, one who, we would suppose, would back up the United States in their claim, but who, as I will show, maintains that they have no claim whatever—I refer to Mr. J. B. Angell. This gentleman is one of the most noted authorities on international law in the United States, and he was, also, I believe, the American representative on the Washington Treaty Commission that was held a little while ago. In an article in the "Forum" Mr. Angell states, in the first place—

"That Great Britain is proceeding with much deliberation and freedom from excitement."

And he hopes that, in a short time, both England and other foreign countries will come to an understanding with the United States with regard to the protection of the seals. Now, Sir, we are all very glad to hear that England is proceeding with "deliberation and freedom from excitement," but I think the sealers themselves believe there has been too much deliberation. It is pretty hard for them to have to wait three years or more to get reparation for the losses and insults to which they have been subjected. The next thing to which Mr. Angell draws attention is the fact that it is England's interest, as well as that of the United States, to look after the seals and save them from extermination, because all seal-skins caught in the Behring Sea are sent to England to be dressed. Then the next thing he draws attention to is this:

"The question is whether, for this laudable purpose of preserving the fur-bearing seals from extinction and maintaining our undisputed right to control the taking of these animals on the Friblyoff Islands, we may rightfully board, search and seize foreign vessels in Behring Sea more than three miles away from land."

In 1821, when Russia issued an edict claiming sovereignty over the sea for 100 miles from the land, Mr. James Quincy Adams, who was Secretary of State for the United States, protested most vehemently against such a claim being set up by Russia; and England also protested. The consequence was that the Treaties of 1824-25 were drawn up, when the Russians surrendered their claim. It will be worthy of notice that when Russia did claim that 100 mile limit, it did not advance it on the basis that it was a closed sea; but, at the same time, Mr. James Quincy Adams saw fit to draw Russia's attention to the fact that it had no valid claim on that basis. I, therefore, think that these facts will refute any argument which the Americans can bring forward on that point. Mr. Angell then asks: What is the definition of a closed sea? He cites a great many authorities, giving different distances between the headlands, but the conclusion arrived at by most of them he thinks is, that any sea where the entrance is sufficiently narrow to be easily defended by a naval power, is a closed sea. Now, the least distance between the points at the entrance to Behring Sea is 139 miles. The Straits of Gibraltar are a little under 9 miles wide, so I do not see that the Americans can lay claim to the Behring Sea being a closed sea; and Mr. Angell has come to that conclusion too. The other claim they bring forward is that, as all the seal-breeding grounds are on islands belonging to the United States, when the seals leave their breeding grounds and go to the high seas they are the property of the United States. Mr. Angell sets forward the fact that many ducks breed in the North-West Territories of Canada, and this being the case Canada has a right to declare that they should not be slaughtered elsewhere. Many opinions of other eminent men in the United States are given in some of their leading newspapers, showing that opinion is very much divided in that country as to whether the United States has any just claim or not. I must say that I firmly hope the Government will not let the matter rest, and that the sealers who have suffered so much may find that they can look to England for that protection which has always been given to her subjects. I observe, Sir, that it is the intention of the Government to send a Commission to Holland and Scotland to obtain information in respect to the catching and packing of fish. This undoubtedly will be of the greatest benefit to the country at large. I believe it will more particularly apply to the Atlantic coast, but it will also be productive of the greatest benefit to the Pacific coast, as at this time nothing but salmon are caught in very large quantities, while there are myriads of all kinds of fish that undoubtedly, if the proper men were engaged in the industry and if proper information were obtained, would be caught and packed, as is done in the case of salmon, and a large and profitable industry would thereby be established. Some time ago a salmon-canning deputation waited on the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries in regard to many matters which required attention in the Province of British Columbia, and I am glad to say that they were so fortunate as to obtain nearly every request they made, not because they intimidated the Minister in any way, but because they submitted only just demands. One request, however, they failed to obtain and that was a promise from the Minister that he would proceed to the coast and observe for himself our grand rivers and fisheries. If the hon. gentleman will give that promise and keep it, I will assure him a right hearty welcome, such as that obtained by his predecessor, and I feel satisfied that he will be abundantly rewarded for all the trouble and hardship of the trip by the information he will obtain as to the present condition of the fisheries of our Province. The next paragraph in the Address refers to the question of the rights of the Dominion in its foreshores, harbors, lakes and rivers. I am glad to observe that this question is receiving the attention of the Government. It has always been my opinion that these matters can be dealt with most effectually by the Local Government of the Province in which these foreshores and harbors are situated, and I think, in the long run, it will be found more satisfactory and economical, as the Local Government can obtain plans and witnesses on these subjects more easily than can the Dominion Government. I am glad to learn that the Report of the Royal Commission of Labor has been distributed to the country. That report shows without doubt that great abuses had existed, and that the relations between the employer and employé had in many cases not been such as should have prevailed. I think that every well-wisher of the working classes, and every one who has their welfare at heart, must feel that the Government has adopted a course that merits the sanction and approval of the country. We are also glad to learn that it is the intention of the Government to proceed with the Geological Survey. I feel certain that the revenue spent in this way will produce an adequate return from the East and the West in the fresh mineral resources that will be developed. In regard to the Province of British Columbia this is more especially true, for, while many shafts have been sunk in the more accessible regions, a large portion of the country remains undeveloped for lack of the services of intelligent men who understand geology. Before taking my seat I would ask hon. members, one and all, to travel over the national highway and visit the Province of British Columbia. Start at Halifax, where you will see the British flag floating over the forts; travel through the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario, and see the busy workshops filled with your own countrymen. Go over the plains and see the millions of acres that are awaiting settlement and are ready to grow grain for the whole world; go through the Province of British Columbia, whose mountains are covered with magnificent timber and are filled with precious metals of all kinds; pass down the Pacific coast to Esquimalt and see the British bulldogs lying there with the same old British flag floating at the peak as was seen at Halifax—and then tell me can any man possessing any national feeling be so craven or be so deficient in manhood as to hold up his hands in the cause of annexation? Sir, there is no more glorious Province in the world than British Columbia, as hon. gentlemen will say if they will visit it. No reading of books or hearing accounts from people who have visited it can give any adequate idea of its resources. Let hon. gentlemen go and see it for themselves. Sir, I have the honor to represent a city of the Pacific coast; my duty is to watch over the interests of that city while I am here, but my first duty I consider is to assist to maintain the Dominion as a whole. Let us all drop our sectionalism, and let us all strive together to maintain Canada as a great and grand country whose interests must be guarded by us and whose people are able to defend themselves. I have great pleasure in seconding the motion.

Mr. LAURIER. I offer my very hearty congratulations to the mover and seconder of the Address on the eloquent manner in which they have discharged the always difficult task they have just performed. They have gallantly struggled to put flesh and blood, nerve and sinew, into the dry bones which the advisers of His Excellency put in his hands yesterday as the programme of the Session, but if the Speech from the Throne remains a skeleton it is no fault of my hon. friends. The hon. mover of the Address has the honor to bear a name popular in this House, and though I differ from him politically very widely, though in my estimation the electors of Compton would have better served their country by electing my friend Mr. Monroe, still I say to the hon. gentleman, and I say it with perfect sincerity, that it is a great pleasure to friends and foes to welcome to this House a young member, the son of an illustrious father, and to find that he is true to the parent stock. But in listening a moment ago to the eloquent strain of the hon. gentleman, and a moment afterwards to the no less eloquent language of the hon. member for Victoria, who both depicted in glowing terms a country famed for its present prosperity, I asked myself whether the hon. gentlemen could have meant Canada; but, as they proceeded, I could not but be certain that the country they had in their minds was indeed Canada, and then I concluded they must have been, both of them, mesmerised by the great mesmerist on the other side, for they spoke not of things real but of things fanciful. They spoke of things not seen by the stern eye of reality, but seen by the fantastic vision put before their gaze by the great wizard. To speak of the prosperity of Canada at present, and especially of the farmers of Canada—well, if all the farmers of Canada were in the position of my hon. friend from Compton, if they had all cash accounts at the bank as he has, I could well understand these hon. gentlemen speaking of the prosperity of Canada in the glowing terms they used. But where is that prosperity to be found? Certainly not in the East; certainly not in Quebec; certainly not in the Maritime Provinces; certainly not in the great Province of Ontario itself. For it cannot be denied, whatever may be said to the contrary on the other side, that the farmers of Canada never were so pinched as they are at present. It cannot be denied that there is at this moment a deep agricultural depression all over the country, and when the agriculturists of any country are not prosperous, that country cannot be considered thriving. The hon. gentlemen referred to the trip taken by His Excellency across the continent, and to the greetings of loyalty which His Excellency met everywhere. No doubt in the West there must be a deeply seated feeling of loyalty, for those people have been treated in a manner which, if they had not been loyal, would have produced the very direst consequences. The North-West settler has not been treated in a manner creditable to Canada. On the contrary, everything has been done by the Government to hamper him. He has been forced for many years to buy in a distant and dear market when he could have bought in a near and cheap market. He has been saddled for years with a crushing monopoly forced upon him by a wanton abuse of the power of disallowance in the Government, and it was only when the feeling of loyalty was at last giving way, and when rebellion was becoming a possibility, that the Government were induced to yield and remove the monopoly—but only after that monopoly had crushed its enemies. But even after its removal, the condition of the people seems to be no better; for the great company to which the hon. gentleman alluded, the Canadian Pacific Railway, is at this moment discriminating in an unwarranted manner, according to my judgment, against the North-West settler in favor of the American settler. The Canadian Pacific Railway, at this moment, is charging the North-West settler for carrying a bushel of wheat from Winnipeg to Toronto, 27 cents, whereas it is only charging the American settler for the same carriage between Minneapolis and Toronto the sum of 15 cents, so that at this moment the Canadian Pacific Railway is taking from the hard earnings of the Canadian settler 12 cents per bushel more than from the American settler. Under such circumstances it cannot be said that the Canadian settler is a prosperous individual. Here is a grievance, and I call the attention of the Government to it. I claim that it is the duty of the Government to enquire into this matter and to see that this railway company, which has cost so much money to the people of Canada, is made to serve the people of Canada at least as efficiently as it is made to serve the people of the neighboring country. Though I call the attention of the Government to this subject, it is, perhaps, perfectly useless on my part to do so. I do not expect that the Government will answer my demand; I do not expect that they will make any enquiry into this subject, or give any relief to the people of the North-West. I do not expect it, because it is altogether vain at this moment to expect of the Government anything like activity. They are in office, they enjoy the sweets of office, but they seem to have lost all power, all nerve for action. Why, they do not even perform the ordinary duties of administration! Yes, I charge deliberately against the Government that they have not at this moment sufficient nerve to discharge the ordinary duties which pertain to an Administration. For instance, we derive our revenue chiefly from Customs duties, and in one of the chief ports of the Dominion, the port of Toronto, the Collectorship of Customs has been vacant for over two years. Is it the duty, or not, of the Administration to fill up that vacancy? Is not that a simple matter of administration? Yet one year, two years have elapsed, and still the vacancy exists. What can the reason be? Is there no one among the hon. gentlemen who sit on your right, Sir, who would be ready to serve his country as collector for a good round sum every year? Or, is the right hon. gentleman afraid to open a constituency in a Province which for the last ten years has given him its chief support? Or, has my hon. friend the Minister of Customs become so fastidious in his tastes that he cannot find anybody suited to fill the office? Or, is it simply because the Ministers, reclining in their chairs, cannot raise the energy necessary to make this appointment?

An hon. MEMBER. Economy.

Mr. LAURIER. It cannot be economy, because if it could be economy to dispense with a collector at Toronto, the Government would remove all the other collectors in all the other ports. They would be bound to remove, not only the collector at Toronto, but at Montreal, Halifax, and all the other ports. There is more. We have a nominative Senate in this country. The Senate are appointed by the Crown. In my judgment this is a most inefficient system, one which cannot last very much longer. But the other side have always maintained that a nominative Senate—that at least has been their pretension in my Province—is the very bulwark of Conservative institutions. Well, if that is the case, I should deem it of some importance that appointments should be made when vacancies occur. I find that, in the month of November last, there were no less than six vacancies in the Senate. As you know, Mr. Speaker, death has been of late very cruel with us, but out of the six vacancies the Government summoned up the necessary energy to make two appointments, and, after having done that much, their energy was exhausted and they fell back in their cushioned seats and left the other four vacancies unfilled. Why were only two appointments made when six should have been made? I do not know the reason why all the other seats were not filled; but in regard to one I have reason to know that the cause why it was not filled was that there were two rival claimants, who had rendered services—not to the country but to the right hon. gentleman, and the hon. gentlemen were balanced between the two and found it impossible to make a selection. This is hardly a good public reason for the neglect, and we ought to have a better reason than that as a justification of the omission to fill those offices. Take, for instance, the seat of Mr. Plumb, which has been vacant for two years; take the seat of Mr. Ferrier, who has been dead for eighteen months. Certainly I was justified in saying that the Government are now in such a position that they cannot perform ordinary administrative acts. Perhaps, however, I am doing an injustice to the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government. Perhaps he is inactive because he is intimidated, because he fears to make a false move, because of late he has not been as lucky as he was formerly. Of late it seems that, every time he has made a step,—if I may be allowed the expression—he has put his foot in it; because, if he took a step in advance, he has had to retrace it. Examples are not wanting. It was only in 1888 that he compelled his followers to vote to forbid the free entrance of fruits and other articles from the United States, and four weeks had not elapsed before he retraced his steps in regard to that. Then again, about ten weeks ago, the Government passed an Order in Council prohibiting the carrying by American vessels of bonded freight to Victoria, B.C.; and not only that was totally reversed, but we have another example and a more famous one. In 1888 the Government were induced to put an additional duty of $1 upon pine logs, but it was not long after before the Government were convinced that they had made a false step. It would not be convenient, in view of the time at my disposal, to give all the examples of the manner in which the Government have been moving forward and backward, and, though the Government were pressed again and again to retrace their steps, they refused to do it in this House, because they felt it would be to their detriment, though they did it afterwards. My hon. friend from North Norfolk brought the question of the duty on saw logs before the House, and asked the House to compel the Government to carry out the policy which he proposed; but they would not do it, and the Government policy was defended by their followers, by the member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), and by the member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), and by my hon. friend from Toronto. Yet the prorogation had scarcely taken place before the Government abandoned the policy which they had forced their followers to accept a few weeks before. At the same time the Government did something further, for which I am bound to give them credit. While they abandoned the duty on saw logs, they invited reciprocity in lumber with the United States. It is not often that I can congratulate the hon. gentleman upon his policy, but in this case I do so, although he has not altogether met my views in regard to it. He offered certain reciprocity to the United States, but his offer was too niggardly. Why did he not offer reciprocity over the whole line and the whole list? I do not know why he did not. Perhaps he was conscious that he was stealing the clothes of his opponents, and felt some remorse in consequence. I give him credit for having that feeling, but he need not have been afraid. We are generous on this side of the House. It is our policy to feed the hungry and to clothe the naked; and when the hon. gentleman feels inclined to put his hand into our wardrobe the next time, I invite him to take the whole suit. The National Policy is such a threadbare policy that we are moved to compassion when we see that there is nothing more than that on the shoulders of the hon. gentleman and his party. I must give full credit to the hon. gentleman and his policy. I would not take an unfair advantage of anyone. Though they have only appointed two senators, still they appointed a Commission to go to Scotland and to Holland to find out the best methods of catching and curing and packing fish. Why, Mr. Speaker, to send Canadians abroad to learn from the Scotchmen and the Dutchmen how to catch and cure and pack fish is something extraordinary. I should have thought that it would have been the Scotchmen and the Dutchmen who would have come here to learn from Canadians the best methods. I suppose that we shall have a report of that Commission presented to us, and I do not want to speak about it now.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then why do you?

Mr. LAURIER. I do it because I strongly suspect that this Commission is merely a herring drawn across the track to hide an otherwise indefensible transaction. In the Speech presented to us to-day, it is manifest that the Government have not anything of great consequence to present or anything which requires any lengthened remarks; but it is also manifest that they have not taken into consideration the condition of the country at this moment, and especially the condition of the agricultural population. The Government seem to have reached a state of perfect felicity in the contemplation of their own perfection. They have invented a National Policy which they seem to consider the ultima thule of all possible progress.

While, as a Canadian, I cannot but regret such an attitude in those who are entrusted with the future of this country, I must say, as a party man, it does not break my heart to see the Government and their friends the victims of such infatuation; for the truth is that, at the present moment, with the exception of the monopolists who have been made wealthier by the restrictions of the tariff, there is no class in the country who does not desire some reform in that tariff. It may be, and it is probably true, that with the greater number, the exact form the relief, which will be welcomed, ought to take, has not yet been formulated, but it is equally true that the great majority of those who, ten years ago, put their faith in the National Policy, are now reluctantly forced to the inevitable conclusion that the National Policy has been a failure. And how could it be otherwise? By the fruits we shall know the tree; and what are the fruits of the National Policy? Let us look around the country. The National Policy has favored a few. There is no doubt of that; but it has injured the many, and there is no doubt of that either. It has imprudently been stated that the price of land has increased near some of the railway centres; but it is equally true that the National Policy has reduced the price of farming land all over the country. It has reduced the price of farming land in the great Province of Ontario by $22,000,000, as is shown by statistics. It has turned out millionaires, but it has made the lot of the toiling masses harder than it was before. It has created sugar barons, and cotton lords and railway kings, but it has put nails upon the doors and windows of thousands of homes and sent their inhabitants to a foreign land. Sir, I arraign the Government upon that issue. When the hon. gentleman was in Opposition, 12 years ago, he boasted to the people of this country that if he were restored to power he would introduce a policy which would put a check to emigration. The people of the Dominion took him at his word; they entrusted him with power, and the result is that at this moment emigration is a greater curse than it has ever been before. Now, I know very well what the answer will be to this statement. The answer will be—tergiversation. It is always easy to deny the past.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And to assert.

Mr. LAURIER. Especially to assert a fact which is within the knowledge of everybody. I appeal here to the intelligence and to the experience of every man upon these benches. I do not appeal to those who made the promises, but I appeal to those who believed the promises that were made, and I defy anybody to stand up here to-day and say that the anticipations which were raised in 1878 by the National Policy have been fulfilled; I defy anyone to say that the price of land has been improved in the rural parts, that in the rural parts of the country every family is contented at its own fireside. But if any man can deny these things, then by all means let him stand up for the National Policy. But if that man is bound in his conscience to admit that his anticipations have not been realised, that the price of farming land has been decreased everywhere over the country, that there is not, perhaps, in the rural parts one single family which is complete at its fireside, then I would expect that man, whatever would be his party preferences, to stand up for the cause of reform. Hon. gentlemen may deny, but the fact is plain. Whatever may be the language spoken here by the Government followers, I believe their conscience tells a different tale. They are like the man going through the woods who whistles to keep his courage up. They may speak bravely, but their actions once more show they have not escaped the general feeling of uneasiness which is at this time permeating the whole community. Since the hon. gentleman seems to be obdurate upon this question, I propose to show that in the ranks of those who follow him, even amongst his own colleagues, the impression is deeply seated at this moment that the country wants reform, that the National Policy has not accomplished what was expected, and that the farmers of this country, especially, must in some way be relieved. Not later than the Session of 1888 my hon. friend from East Middlesex (Mr. Marshall) proposed a motion which reads in this manner:

“That the establishment of mutually favorable trade relations between Great Britain and her colonies would benefit the agricultural, mining, lumbering and other industries of the latter, and would strengthen the Empire by building up its dependencies, and that the Government should ask the other Colonial Governments to join in approaching the Imperial Government with a view of obtaining such an agreement.”

The debate was participated in by several prominent members; amongst others was the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), a very strong supporter of the Administration. The hon. gentleman upon that occasion spoke not so much to the motion of the hon. member for East Middlesex, but he spoke to a motion of which he had given notice, which he moved, and which ran in the following language:—

“That it would be in the best interests of the Dominion that such changes should be sought for in the trade relations between the United Kingdom and Canada as would give to Canada advantages in the markets of the mother country not allowed to foreign states, Canada being willing for such privileges to discriminate in her markets in favor of Great Britain and Ireland, due regard being had to the policy adopted in 1879 for the purpose of fostering the various interests and industries of the Dominion, and to the financial necessities of the Dominion.”

The hon. member from Simcoe, in speaking to that question, stated that he and those with whom he was acting—all followers of the right hon. gentleman—were endeavoring to create a trade with Great Britain and to obtain a market in Great Britain for our surplus farming productions. The debate was participated in by several members; amongst others were the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper), now Minister of Marine and Fisheries, also by the hon. and gallant member for Shelburne (Gen. Laurie), and by the no less hon. and gallant member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), all to the effect that in their opinion the present condition of the country was not satisfactory, and that something ought to be done to relieve it. What was the meaning of that motion? If the National Policy had realised everything that we had in view, if it had developed the country in the manner which had been predicted by hon. gentlemen here, why should there have been such a motion? Why was such a question opened up? Simply because, in the opinion of those gentlemen, the condition of the country was not satisfactory, the condition of agriculture was not satisfactory, and something needed to be done to improve that condition. It is to be remarked that upon that occasion not a word was said to the contrary by the hon. gentleman or by anybody supporting him. Then, what conclusion should be drawn? This conclusion: that the Government themselves shared in that view. Then you would expect that, sharing in that view, they would have brought forward some measure of reform, since they admitted that there was an evil to be cured. But, Sir, we could not expect them to go that length. They knew the evil, but they presented no remedy and they let the evil remain. Now, Mr. Speaker, while I agree with those hon. gentlemen in their opinions respecting the evil, I say there is a remedy to be sought for in our condition. Though this is their conviction, they do not act upon it. That conviction is the basis of the policy which we support on this side of the House. The policy we support asks that some reform should be made in the condition of our country. I wish, for my part, that I could agree with hon. gentlemen opposite in the remedy they have suggested; I wish, for my part, I could believe that we could find for our surplus agricultural products a market in Great Britain; but, certainly, I cannot agree in the policy which has been suggested to us, for that policy, to say the least of it, is a singularly foolish one. Hon. gentlemen opposite propose to establish a trade with Great Britain. They propose to induce the people of Great Britain to take our surplus products—and how? By opening our doors to the trade of Great Britain, which doors are now closed to that trade? Not at all. By inducing Great Britain to open her doors to us? No; they are already open to us and to the world. But it is to induce the people of Great Britain, if possible, to shut their doors to the rest of the world and keep them open to ourselves. Hitherto the policy has been Canada for the Canadians, but hereafter the policy will be England for the Canadians. The object the hon. gentlemen have in view is to induce British workmen to remove all competition from the products of the American farmer and thereby to enhance the price of bread and foodstuffs for themselves. Will the British working classes adopt such a policy? It is preposterous to assume it. What have hon. gentlemen opposite to offer to the British workmen for the sacrifice they will be called upon to make? Do they offer to admit here British products free of duty? No; on the contrary, it is proposed to lower, by a few inches only, the barriers which the hon. gentlemen opposite have set up against the productions of British workmen. And that is what they call fair trade. Some of the hon. gentlemen opposite have the candor to believe that the British public at large can be induced to adopt such a policy. It is impossible to conceive that the British people would adopt a policy so absolutely delusive. Where are the public men in England who would countenance such a policy? You could not find them in the ranks of the Liberal party, or in the Radical party, or in the Conservative party, although the Conservative party in England are entitled to the reproach that they have opposed every reform that has made England what she is to-day. Yet as soon as some reform has been adopted it becomes the common inheritance of every Englishman, and the last reform carried in England was the adoption of the great principle of free trade. England has been the pioneer in trade, as she has been the pioneer in the science of government. She obtained a full measure of fair trade 100 years at least before any other continental nation. It was so also with respect to free trade. They adopted a system of freedom in trade, as in politics and everything else, and so paved the way for the other nations to follow. It is true, as has been often stated, that their policy has not been answered, that other nations have not responded, and that the idea, the dream and the hope of those who advocated the gospel of free trade has not been realised. I do not believe so. Only fifty years have elapsed since the principle of free trade was proclaimed in England, and fifty years, it must be admitted, form a dot on the ever revolving panorama in the life of a nation. Fifty years is but a dot in the life of the world, and it cannot be expected that that great principle should germinate, blossom and fructify within half a century. But if it cannot be said that the expectations of those who have proclaimed the principle has been fulfilled, it is manifest that it will be fulfilled yet, and the first nations to adopt it will be those nations of British blood and tradition, the offshoots of England. It is true that Canada and the United States are to-day far from this position, but the time may come, and it may not be distant, when Canada and the United States will adopt a policy—which we on this side of the House have advocated—a policy not to seek a market on the other side of the ocean, but to seek a market on the other side of the line; and it would seem to me that this consideration should commend itself to our friends on the other side of the House, that if we were to effect a commercial alliance between these two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon family, it would be a great step towards effecting what they have in view, and that is, our obtaining a market at some ultimate day in Great Britain and Ireland. In this respect I do not consider the Government will ever change their policy; but it must be apparent to the right hon. gentleman opposite, from the feeling manifested among his own supporters, a feeling not in favor of reciprocity but yet a feeling in favor of a change, that the change we propose is the more logical one and is bound to be carried out at no distant date. In the Speech which was delivered yesterday there is an important paragraph, and an important paragraph only, it is the paragraph in reference to the difficulty we have in respect to the Behring Sea. It is now more than three years since Canadian vessels fishing for seals in Behring Sea were ousted from those waters by the American authorities. Three years had elapsed, and after three years this is the reference to the subject by His Excellency. His Excellency informs us, practically, that Canadian fishermen have laid their claims before the Canadian Government, that the Government have referred those claims to the English Government, and His Excellency goes on to say:

“I feel confident that those representations have had due weight, and I hope to be enabled during the present Session to assure you that all differences on this question are in the course of satisfactory adjustment.”

Well, certainly caution could not go any further than it goes there. His Excellency informs us that he believes—what? That the difficulty will be settled during the course of the present Session? No; but that they were in the course of satisfactory adjustment. That is all he can assure us. The statement is not that the difficulty was adjusted, but that during the present Session it would be in course of adjustment. It appears, therefore, that, so far, it has not been in the course of adjustment at all, and that it is only from this moment it will be in course of adjustment; and even this statement is made with caution. His Excellency does not say that he can even "assure" us, but he "hopes" to be enabled during the present Session to assure us that all differences are in course of adjustment. To the Canadian fishermen who were ousted from Behring Sea three years ago this is not a very satisfactory prospect. What can the cause be? Here is what we conceive to be an unwarrantable assumption of authority by the American people over Canadian fishermen, and yet, after three years, all the satisfaction we obtain is that, perhaps, during the present Session His Excellency will be able to assure us that the difficulty is in course of settlement. In regard to what has taken place during these three years there is a blank, the Government has not informed us; but, although the Government has not informed us, I think I know pretty well what has taken place, if we may judge the past by the present, and what has taken place on this question by what occurred on former occasions. It was simply this: His Excellency, on receiving the complaint of the Canadian fishermen, sent his statement of complaint to the Colonial Office in England. The Colonial Office sent the statement to the Foreign Office; the Foreign Office wrote a letter to the American Minister; the Minister probably called upon the Minister of Foreign Affairs. The Minister of Foreign Affairs wrote to the British Minister at Washington, and probably wrote also to the Secretary of State at Washington. Probably the British Minister and the Secretary of State at Washington had a conference, and more despatches were sent from Washington to London, and from London to Ottawa, and then the matter was probably laid before the hon. the Minister of Justice here, who no doubt wrote a very able paper upon it, which some day will see the light of day, and then the matter was again referred to London, and from London to Washington. This was what took place some two or three years ago, and no doubt is what is taking place again upon this occasion. Now, British diplomacy can be very active or very slow, just as it suits the purpose of British diplomacy. In 1861, when Slidell and Mason were taken on board a British ship, the British Government at once sent to Washington a note temperate in language, respectful and courteous in tone, and the result was within a month the difficulty was settled to the satisfaction of both parties. If the same diligence had been used on this occasion, probably we would have had an answer before this; for the issue is a simple one between two contending parties. The Americans claim jurisdiction over the disputed waters. This is not the place to discuss whether or not this contention is well or ill-founded, but I have no hesitation to say that, in my judgment, the American contention is not well founded. However, this subject will come up for discussion at the proper time and on the proper occasion. We do not admit that contention, we reject it. Well, was it not possible within three years to have reached some solution of the difficulty. What is the reason we have not? Sir, if I am to credit a paragraph published some time ago in the American newspapers, the cause of the delay lies with the Canadian Government themselves, because the American papers some time ago represented that the American and British Authorities had come to some arrangement which was about to be completed when the Canadian Government asked to be consulted and to be allowed to give its views, and though several months have elapsed no representation had been received from the Canadian Government. If that be true, then all the blame falls upon the Canadian Government, and for their want of action they will have to render, some time or other, a very severe account. This is no trifling question, but one of great importance; and although it has to be approached in a friendly spirit, still it has to be approached in a firm and temperate manner consistent with our own dignity and rights. I cannot conceive, however, that if the Government had been as diligent as they should have been in this matter, our fishermen would not have received redress long ago. But we shall hear more upon this question during the Session. I do not intend on this occasion to exercise any more criticism than can be avoided. I have in former years followed the practice of not indulging in more criticism than is fairly invited by the Speech from the Throne, and propose to follow the same practice to-day, and, therefore, shall conclude my remarks by expressing my intention to do my best in furthering the business of the Session, and I call on the Government to lose no time in bringing down business.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am very glad indeed to find from my hon. friend's speech that we may have some prospect of getting at once to work. He is not going to move an amendment, and his speech shows that he means business. I am very glad that such is his intention, and we shall be delighted to have his assistance in entering on the work of the Session. In his speech, delivered in the hon. gentleman's usual agreeable and pleasant style, which always gives pleasure to those who listen to it, he entered into a little prologue before the play, a little preliminary chaff. He must blow off the froth before he gets down to the porter, and though his speech was nearly all froth it was very pleasant froth, indeed. My hon. friend commenced by submitting that he and his friends are the only persons who know what the situation of the country is. He said that on this side we labor under an agreeable delusion. We fancy that the country is prosperous, we fancy that Canada is in a state of prosperity, but it is a fatal delusion, and he says that it must be the enchantment of the wizard which induced my hon. friends the mover and seconder to make the glowing statements they did. Well, my hon. friend is the leader of a party and also a distinguished member of the legal profession. My hon. friend who moved this Address, and who did it so ably, and who was so well and properly congratulated by my hon. friend, is a practical farmer. He should know whether the farmers are prosperous or not in his part of the country, rather better than my hon. friend, though he comes from the same Province. Now, he tells us, as a practical farmer, and not only a practical but a wealthy farmer, that the Province of Quebec never was more prosperous, that the farming interests in Quebec never were more prosperous than they were in the past year of 1889. My hon. friend also supposes that the same fatal hallucination has blinded the eyes of my hon. friend from Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior). He is a man of business, a shrewd man of business, he knows what he is talking about, and he says that the people in the Province of British Columbia, and especially his own constituency, were never so prosperous before as they were this past year. Yet my hon. friend ventures to say that they are mistaken, and that we are mistaken, and that the majority of the people of this country are mistaken, and that we are a miserable, desponding, ruined, depressed and retrograding country. That is the style of the speech of my hon. friend. As long as my hon. friend entertains those opinions, and those whom he leads entertains them, he will, I regret to say, remain at your left, Mr. Speaker, and will not come to the position to which his great abilities entitle him, of leading the majority of the people of Canada and their representatives on the right of your chair. There is a difference of opinion between my hon. friend and the majority of the people of Canada. We know that when in a lunatic asylum somebody asked an inmate how he came to be there? "Oh, said he, "I am here as a consequence of a difference of opinion: all the world think I am mad, and I think all the world mad, and the majority carried it." So it is with my hon. friend. The majority of the people of Canada will declare that the hallucinations, the delusions, are on that side of the House and not on this; but it is a misfortune to my hon. friend's party; it is a sort of blindness which has come upon them for their sins, by which they have become prophets of evil, in their press, on the stump, on the platform, everywhere, and now in Parliament. We find that their raison d'être, the basis and foundation for their party, is that Canada is ruined, and will remain ruined, and will be more ruined every day, until there is a change of parties and my hon. friend comes on this side. I am afraid the people of Canada will prefer to be ruined under us, than to be prosperous after the fashion of my hon. friends on the other side. You know the story of Lord Palmerston, when a wine merchant sent him some special Greek wine, which, he said, was admirably adapted for gouty patients, to cure gout. Lord Palmerston tasted the wine and said "I would rather have the gout." So the people of Canada would rather have Canada, with all her misfortunes, real or imaginary, governed by the Liberal Conservative party, even when led by your humble servant, than have it directed by all the abilities, all the force and all the patriotism of my hon. friend opposite. My hon. friend seemed rather disappointed at the statement of the mover and the seconder of the Address, that the people in the West were loyal. He seemed to be rather surprised at that statement, as they have been so badly used—look at the way, said he, in which the people in the North-West have been used and the people in British Columbia, and yet they are loyal. My hon. friend was quite surprised at that, and I remarked that there was not one single response or cheer to the statement of the hon. member from Victoria in reference to the loyalty of the North-West—from the other side of the House. The hon. gentleman objects to the want of matter, apparently, in the Speech from the Throne. I think it is a very practical speech, and I think it would puzzle the hon. gentleman to have suggested new subjects for discussion during the present Session, excepting the one with which he wound up his speech. Although he commenced with a criticism of the Speech and the Address in answer to it, he found it was rather hard work; it was up-hill work, and so he fluttered off into a discussion of free trade, unrestricted reciprocity and Imperial federation. He says, among other things, that the Government have become so indolent and apathetic that they are not able to carry on the ordinary administration of affairs; and what is the reason he gives to prove his statement? That there has not been a collector of customs appointed for Toronto. If he had been able to state that, in consequence of the non-appointment of a collector of customs in Toronto, the business of the country had been neglected, there might have been something in the charge; but, in the meantime, as an economist, and hon. members in Opposition are always economists, I think he might have congratulated the country upon the saving of the salary of a collector of customs in Toronto for two years. Then he says we had not the energy to fill the vacancies in the Senate. The hon. gentleman, as a public man, as the leader of a party, ought not to attribute bad motives when only good motives exist. Could he not imagine that a good motive was the reason why those positions were not filled? The hon. gentleman might have thought that we were of opinion that there were too many Tories in the upper House, that we were looking to the possibility that the great ability and energy of the hon. gentleman might put him at the head of affairs, and he might have supposed that we were keeping a certain number of vacancies in that House to enable him, after he succeeded in attaining power, to fill the four vacancies in the Senate, so that the complaint which has been made that the Senate has too much of one complexion would be removed. I shall not now enter into a discussion or reply to the hon. gentleman's remarks as to the vacillation of which he accuses us in regard to the duties on fruits and sawlogs and the regulations in regard to coasting. Those questions will come up during the present Session in a more legitimate form, and it would be a waste of time to discuss them now; but I assure my hon. friend that, in our opinion, we have a good answer and we have good reasons to give for every one of those actions which the hon. gentleman is pleased to call vacillations. The hon. gentleman says he gives us credit for one thing. We made some steps towards reciprocity with the United States, but he ventures to say that we have been stealing the clothes of his party. Mr. Speaker, we would make a great mistake if we took the clothes of hon. gentlemen opposite. We are well clad now, and we do not want to wear any Opposition rags. I am an older public man than the hon. gentleman, and can look back a little further, and I think he will find that all the successful exertions towards reciprocity, after those which were made by Sir Francis Hincks and his party, have been made by the Conservative party. The hon. gentleman says that the National Policy has been a failure. The country does not think so. There is no evidence that the country thinks so. Every evidence that we have points in the other direction. The hon. gentleman said that the reason why we did not fill up the Senate was that we feared to open constituencies. It does not appear that that is our reason. Since last Session there have been three vacancies and three elections, and I had yesterday the honor and pleasure of introducing three supporters of the Government after those elections. The hon. gentleman says he could not help grieving over our position in consequence of the failure of the National Policy. We deny that it has been a failure, and, if it had been a failure, the hon. gentleman, instead of wasting his time in simple grieving, should have had something like active sympathy with us, because I remember when the hon. gentleman was a National Policy man himself. I remember when the agreeable eloquence of the hon. gentleman was used in pointing out that Canada must be for the Canadians, and that a protective system was the proper one to adopt. But, other times, other manners, other opinions, and the hon. gentleman is quite right, if he thinks he is right, to change the opinions he once professed; but he is not able, and will not be able, to carry the country with him. I am, however, exceedingly glad, as a party man, that the hon. gentleman has induced his party, after a great deal of vacillation and a great deal of chopping and changing, to come down and nail their colors to the mast of free trade. That is the issue now before the country; but the hon. gentleman will find that Canada will remain, as most of the civilised nations of the world have remained, advocates of a national policy—every one with the exception of England. For the sake of my party I am glad that the hon. gentleman has taken that course. The hon. gentleman has seen in the papers, if he has not otherwise been aware, that I have attained the ripe age of three-quarters of a century. I cannot hope to be much longer, here or in this world, but I have this satisfaction, as a Canadian, as one interested in the future development and prosperity of Canada, of knowing that, after I go hence, the party which I believe is the true patriotic party of Canada—the Liberal Conservative party—will remain in power as long as the hon. gentlemen opposite adhere to the unwise, the unpatriotic policy which has been indicated by the hon. gentleman.

Paragraphs one to eleven agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved:

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 20th January, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 2) to permit reciprocity in wrecking and the towing of vessels and rafts.—(Mr. Trow for Mr. Charlton.)

Bill (No. 3) to admit vessels registered in the United States to wrecking, towing and coasting privileges in Canadian waters.—(Mr. Ferguson, Welland, for Mr. Patterson, Essex.)

Bill (No. 4) to permit foreign vessels to aid vessels wrecked or disabled in Canadian waters.—(Mr. Kirkpatrick.)

Bill (No. 5) to make further provision as to the prevention of cruelty to animals, and to amend chapter 172 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.—(Mr. White, Cardwell, for Mr. Brown.)

BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 6) relating to Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes. He said: This is the Bill which received some consideration at the hands of the House last Session, and I introduce it now in accordance with the understanding then arrived at.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

ELECTION ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. JONCAS moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 7) further to amend the Dominion Elections Act, chapter 8 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Explain.

Mr. JONCAS. It is the same Bill I presented last year, and is purely of local interest. It asks to put Gaspé on the same footing as Algoma in the Province of Ontario, and Cariboo in the Province of British Columbia; since the delays now provided for are not sufficient to allow the returning officer to post up his proclamations in time.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

MAPLE HILL POST OFFICE.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Whether the Maple Hill Post Office, in the County of Bruce, has been closed? If so, why? Is it the intention of the Government to re-open it?

Mr. HAGGART. The post office of Maple Hill has been closed. It was closed on account of the resignation of the postmaster. It is the intention of the Government to re-open that office.

TRIAL OF ROBERT VOLLET.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Do the Government propose defraying the expenses of the trial of Robert Vollet, of Durham, who was tried at the assizes in Walkerton last autumn?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We have had no application on that subject.

ELECTORAL DIVISION OF SHAWINEGAN.

Mr. DESAULNIERS asked, Whether the Government have been informed of the death of the Hon. James Ferrier, Senator, appointed for the electoral division of Shawinegan, in the Province of Quebec? If they have been so informed, why has this vacancy in the Senate not been filled, when the Counties of St. Maurice and Maskinongé have made known to the proper persons, through their representatives, the views of the electorate?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government has been informed of the death of the Hon. James Ferrier; the appointment of his successor is still under the consideration of the Government.

PAYMENT TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. PERRY asked, Has the Government of Prince Edward Island drawn any money from capital at Ottawa since the 14th January, 1889? If so, what amount, and when drawn?

Mr. FOSTER. The Government of Prince Edward Island has not drawn any money from capital at Ottawa since the 14th January, 1889.

THREE PER CENT. LOAN OF 1888.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) asked, Whether any portion of the 3 per cent. loan of 1888 has been purchased for the sinking fund since June 30, 1889? If so, what amount, at what date and at what price?

Mr. FOSTER. The following amounts have been purchased out of the 3 per cent. loan of 1888 on sinking fund account:

Date.	Amt. purchased.	Rate.	Accrued Int.	Net rate.
July.....	$56,456.86	95½	nil	£95 10 0
Oct.....	92,591.34	95½	3 mos ½ p.c.	94 0 0
		95½	3 " ½ p.c.	94 10 0

CONTRACTORS' CHEQUES.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether it is customary to transfer amounts put up by contractors from Chartered Banks to the Government Savings Banks? Has such been done in any case during the last year?

Mr. JONCAS.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not customary to transfer amounts put up by contractors from Chartered Banks to the Government Savings Banks, and I know of no case in which such has been done.

DISALLOWANCE OF PROVINCIAL BILLS.

Mr. LANDERKIN moved for:

Statement showing the total number of Bills disallowed since Confederation, also the total number disallowed each year during the same period; giving the titles of the Bills, the Province where passed, and the reason for said disallowance.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would suggest that my hon. friend make a little change in the motion he has just made, and insert the following:—

And the reasons for such disallowance so far as to show whether each Act was not within the competence of the Provincial Legislature, or upon grounds of public policy; also, in like manner, the Bills reserved for the pleasure of His Excellency the Governor General to which his assent was not given, showing the reasons for such refusal.

The hon. gentleman's motion asks the reason for such disallowance. Well, that means, of course, the printing of a very long correspondence in each case, and down to a certain date we are already in possession of that. I suppose what the hon. gentleman desires to have is a short synopsis of the Bills disallowed, and shortly the reasons for this disallowance. If the hon. gentleman will accept this suggestion I will not move it as an amendment.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I may be allowed to explain that last Session there was laid on the Table of the House a second blue book on this question which showed the title of every Act reported upon, giving the full text of the report in every case; and that brought the subject down to the end of the calendar year of 1888, I think. If this motion carries it will be simply necessary to bring down the supplementary papers to those which have been laid on the Table so far. Besides that, in the blue book which contains that report as brought down last Session, the hon. gentleman will find a carefully prepared table showing the year in which every Act was passed in each Province, the chapter of the Act, the title of the Act, the observations that were made upon it, and the date of the Order in Council; so that not only is the return asked for by the hon. gentleman already down to a certain date, and a very recent date, but it is also in the form of a synopsis which is very convenient for reference, and which the hon. gentleman will find, I think, to answer all his purposes.

Mr. LAURIER. I think my hon. friend might readily accept the suggestions of the Minister of Justice; that would provide all the information which, I presume, he has in view by making this motion.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I only wish to have an extension of the return that has been already brought down. The suggestion of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is worthy of consideration, and I have no objection to adopt the suggestion he has made.

Mr. McCARTHY. The information is all included in the returns already made, but I thought the hon. gentleman simply desired to obtain it in some short form.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That is the idea.

—Mr. MCCARTHY. If it could be shortly stated, without giving any reasons, whether the action taken was on grounds of public policy, or on the ground that it was ultra vires, it would be desirable; but perhaps it would not always be easy to make the distinction.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I suppose if the return will be brought down in English and French, the hon. gentleman will not object to that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman will allow it, the information will cover matters since the date of the last return.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Certainly. I hope it will not be refused because it is going to be in French too.

Motion agreed to.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Return giving the names of all persons who were tried before a Magistrate for selling whiskey to Indians in the County of Grey or Bruce, in the year 1888-89; together with all papers, documents and letters on the subject; also the name of the party who laid the information, the name of the Magistrate before whom it was tried, the name of the constable employed and the name of the lawyer retained in each case, together with the decisions of the Magistrate, stating the fines imposed, if any; also, if any appeals were made from the decisions of the Magistrate, stating before what Judge the appeals were tried and what was the result; giving the cost of each trial before the Magistrate, and of each appeal before the Judge, together with the name, occupation and post office address of every person who received money for any service whatever, either at the trial at the Magistrate's court or at the appeal before the Judge; the total cost of all the trials, the total fines imposed and collected. If costs were refused at any trial, giving the reason for such refusal; also showing whether any of the Indians who received intoxicating liquors were electors of Bruce under the Electoral Franchise Act of Canada.—(Mr. Landerkin.)

Return showing the number of Dominion Franchise Voters Lists of 1889, printed outside the Government Printing Bureau, the names of the offices in which they were printed, and the amount paid for the printing of each respectively.—(Mr. Innes.)

Copy of Government Engineer's report of survey of harbors of Pinette and Wood's Island, and also copy of report of survey of New London Harbor and Breakwater, in the Province of Prince Edward Island.—(Mr. Welsh.)

Return showing the amounts of money deposited in the several Savings Banks in the Dominion, and in the several Post Office Savings Banks, the location of each, and the gross amount of deposits in each on the 30th of June and December last.—(Mr. McMullen.)

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved :

That a special committee of seven members be appointed to prepare and report with all convenient speed, lists of members to compose the select standing committees ordered by the House on Thursday, the 16th instant, and that Sir Hector Langevin, Sir Richard Cartwright, Sir John Thompson, Messrs. Bowell, Laurier, Mills (Bothwell) and the mover do compose the said committee.

Motion agreed to.

CONTRACTORS' CHEQUES.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to call the attention of my hon. friend, who asked with reference to the contractors' cheques, to information which I have had sent to me since I gave the answer to his question; and I will refer him for a complete answer to C-12 Auditor General's report of 1887-88, in which the report of the Deputy Finance Minister and the Order in Council are given in full, and which may in some little degree modify what I stated in answer to his question.

BEHRING SEA FISHERIES.

Mr. LAURIER. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether it is his intention to lay on the Table the papers connected with the Behring Sea question?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the present intention to lay them on the Table. We may be able to do so during the course of the Session.

Mr. LAURIER. That is very vague.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When papers of that kind are referred to in the Speech from the Throne, the practice always has been to lay them on the Table as a matter of course. I think I have heard the hon. gentleman insist on our following this practice, on a former occasion, when we were on that side, and unless my memory is entirely at fault, that is the practice always followed in England.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The subject is of importance and of course properly should be alluded to in the Speech from the Throne. My hon. friend stated that the language was very vague. The language is vague and purposely vague.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No doubt.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Discussions are going on at Washington, and I have every reason to believe, as His Excellency put it, that a satisfactory solution of that question will be reached. In the meanwhile it is not in the public interest that the papers should now be laid on the Table.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not in the Government's interest.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have met unusually early, and I presume the Government business is in a state of forwardness. I would ask the Minister of Finance whether he expects to be able shortly to bring down the Estimates?

Mr. FOSTER. I expect to have the Estimates probably about the middle of this week.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 3.40 p.m.

G., Minister of Public Works, the Honorable John Costigan, Minister of Inland Revenue, and the Honorable George Eulas Foster, Minister of Finance, to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons, as Commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of the 13th Chapter of the Revised Statutes of Canada, intitled: "An Act respecting the House of Commons."

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 21st January, 1890.

FOREIGNERS AND ALIENS.

Mr. TAYLOR moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 8) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract to perform labor in Canada.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Explain.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is a Bill intended to protect the laboring classes of Canada. It is similar to a Bill passed by the Congress of the United States in 1875; it is a copy of the American Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I desire to ask if the Minister of Justice has considered this Bill, and if he is of opinion that this House has power to interfere with contracts of this kind?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have not seen the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DEPUTY SPEAKER—CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I heard last night that you, Mr. Speaker, were threatened with an attack of influenza, and although I gave notice that to-morrow I would move for the appointment of a Chairman of the Committees of the Whole House, with the consent of the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Laurier), I will move the motion now.

Mr. LAURIER. I have no objection.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved :

That John Fisher Wood, Esq., Member for the Electoral District of the Town of Brockville, be appointed Chairman of Committees of the Whole House.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, we, on this side of the House, have never been quite satisfied that the office that the hon. gentleman now proposes to fill was either necessary or even absolutely useful. But as the House has on two or three different occasions pronounced differently from our views on this as on many other subjects, I do not propose to question the advisability of this policy; on the contrary, I look upon it as a settled matter. As to the choice which the Premier offers to this House to fill this important office, I must say that it is altogether acceptable to this side of the House. I have always considered, and I think that it is the opinion of the House at large, that the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood) is a good species of wood, although I am afraid that it has been his misfortune to grow in a very unhealthy camp; but it is a misfortune so prevalent in this country that we cannot take it as a cause of reproach in this case. I bear testimony that the hon. gentleman has always bore the character of being endowed with a calm temper and judicial mind, and, I believe, in discharging the important duties now conferred upon him, he will distribute equal justice to all, without fear or favor.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On behalf of the majority of this House, I thank the hon. gentleman for the cordial manner he has spoken of our recommendation and the manner in which it has been accepted by the Left.

Motion agreed to.

ADULTERATION ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 9) to amend the Adulteration Act, Chap. 107, Revised Statutes. He said: The first object of this Bill is to change the present law so that if food or drugs be found in the possession of any person which on analysis be found to be adulterated, the cost of such analysis shall be charged to the owner of such adulterated article. This Bill when passed will be no tax whatever upon the honest trader and it proposes merely to make the vendor of adulterated articles pay the cost of the analysis. The other amendments are principally with the object of strengthening the hands of the department in prosecuting under this Act. On account of the wording of one section of the Act, we find a difficulty in proceeding in certain matters, and to remove that difficulty, the amendment is proposed.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT—THE DUAL LANGUAGE.

Mr. McCARTHY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 10) to amend the North-West Territories Act. He said: In introducing this Bill I think that perhaps it might be as well that I should offer some explanation, though I do not think that any defence or apology is called for on my part in bringing this matter before the House. It is, however, necessary that there should be some explanation, because it must occur to us all that it is most extraordinary that in the North-West Territories, and so long ago as 1877 an Act should have been passed in this Parliament whereby the dual language was imposed upon the Territories; of course without any consent of theirs, because at that time there was practically no people in the Territories to assent, or consent, or dissent from the proposition. I think it is also requiring of explanation, not, as I say, to move for a repeal of this clause, but to give some account of how and why it is we find this clause in the North-West Territories Act. Now, the history of the matter, as I understand it, is this: I think it was a year or two, or perhaps three or four years, before the Act was passed to which I am about to refer more in detail, that the North-West Territories were constituted, or, at all events, brought under some kind or form of government—during the time my hon. friend the Prime Minister who now leads the Government and the House was also in the position he occupies to-day. In 1877, however, when my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) was Minister of the Interior in the Administration of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), he brought in a Bill to amend the North-West Territories Act, but that Bill as it was introduced into this House did not contain the clause with regard to the dual language which I now propose that the House should expunge. The Bill went in due course to the Senate, and in the Senate it was amended by the introduction of this clause; and, so far as I have been able to ascertain, there appears to have been no objection made in that body to the clause, which was introduced, as I am told, by an hon. Senator at the instance of the then leader of the Government in that House, the Hon. Mr. Scott. I do not pretend to vouch for that, but I am so credibly informed. I rather think that that cannot be true, however, because when the Bill reached this House with these amendments, and concurrence in them was called for, my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) seemed to be surprised at the introduction of this particular clause, and expressed his regret at it. I have extracted from Hansard what he said on that subject, and I can hardly imagine that his surprise was feigned, or that his astonishment was not expressed in perfect good faith. Speaking of the amendment, the hon. member for Bothwell is reported to have said :

"One of them, he stated, provided for the publication of the proceedings of the North-West Council in English and French, and for the use of both languages in the courts. They had thought that this was a matter which had better be left to the Council in question. He regretted that the amendment had been made, but it would be impossible to get the measure through at this late period in the Session, unless the amendments were accepted. The action taken by the Senate would add very considerably to the expense. Almost every one in that part of the country spoke Cree, though some spoke, in addition, English or French, and, if the proceedings were to be published in the most prevalent language, Cree should be chosen for the purpose."

With these observations the amendments were concurred in without any objections being made, so far as I have been able to see, by any hon. member on the floor of this House ; and I was either present or ought to have been present, and I therefore share in the blame attachable to the proceedings on that occasion. Then, I think it was in the year 1880, this North-West Territories Act was again dealt with, and again we find this clause, which I venture to call an objectionable clause ; and I believe that on that occasion also it was passed through both Houses of Parliament without objection being made by any hon. member on either side of the House. And finally, last Session, in the proposition submitted to us by the Government in the Bill then brought down, the same clause is to be found ; and although the Bill did not advance very far, so far as it did go, no objection appears to have been made to the clause. Now, Sir, all this may appear, perhaps, to form some good reason against the proposition I have now the honor to make. I venture to think, however, that that is not so. The enactment in question is as follows :—

"Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the said Council, and in the proceedings before the courts, and both those languages shall be used in the records and journals of the said Council, and the ordinances of the said Council shall be printed in both those languages."

Now, I venture to say that if a constitution were framed for a new country, it would never occur to any person to do so foolish a thing as to stipulate for two official languages. I venture to think that, with the knowledge which there is on the subject at this time, it never would occur to any person that it was a proper thing to create or perpetuate, as the case might be, two official languages ; and yet practically that was what was done in that North-West Act. What is the explanation, Mr. Speaker, of this extraordinary piece of legislation, which appears to have been assented to by the House on three or four different occasions without objection on the part of any one ? It is not to be found in the Treaty of Cession, although a very large number of persons seem to be under the impression that by the treaty negotiated at the time this country was ceded to the British Crown, the right of the language was guaranteed to the French. As I say—and the fact cannot be too widely known or too often repeated—that is not so. The mistake is one which very generally prevails ; and on looking at articles on this subject—articles by very learned men—I have been surprised that this statement has been very generally made and very generally accepted. But there is not a word to be found in the treaty or in the Articles of Cession anywhere by which the language was guaranteed to the conquered French.

Mr. AMYOT. Not conquered—ceded.

Mr. McCARTHY. Ceded, my hon. friend says, although I venture to think the other expression is the more correct. But there is not a word to be found either at the time of the cession or conquest, or whatever it may be called, which gives any ground for the statement that the language was guaranteed to the French inhabitants of this country. Nor is it to be found in the Act known as the Quebec Act. That Act went a good deal further than the treaty, as we all know. The treaty guaranteed to the French people their religion, and that so far as the laws of Great Britain permitted ; but the Quebec Act went much further. It restored to them their laws—the civil laws to which they had been accustomed ; and it restored to their church certain rights and privileges which are enjoyed to this day ; but it dealt not with this question of language. Well, the next stage would be perhaps in 1791, when the Province of Lower Canada was constituted ; and at the time of the constitution of that Province the language was not dealt with either ; though very shortly afterwards, it is perfectly true as an historical fact, the French members of the Assembly then constituted did claim the right, and enforced the right, to use their language ; and I believe the proceedings were carried on in both languages in that Assembly—however, not by any statute law, or by anything more than a resolution of the Assembly, which had a perfect right to so resolve and so act. Well, we come down to the time of the Rebellion and the Real Union of the Provinces in 1840 by the Act of that date ; and there, so far from the language being allowed to the French, as we all know, consequent on the report of Lord Durham, who was sent out here to investigate the causes of the Rebellion—a report which was recognised on all hands as a most statesmanlike document—that in Lower Canada, at any rate, it was more a trouble of race than that of alleged misgovernment, a clause was introduced into the Union Act of 1841 by which the use of the French language was absolutely prohibited instead of being permitted. So that the first piece of legislation we have on the subject is a clause prohibiting the use of the French language. That was followed in the Parliament of the United Provinces by an Address to the Crown, passed unanimously, I think, in 1844, asking for the repeal of that clause, and accordingly, in 1848, that clause in the Union Act was repealed. Now, Sir, I come down to 1867, to the time of the British North America Act, and there we find that the dual languages are for the first time permitted by legislative enactment ; but the permission is restricted to this Parliament and to the Assembly and Legislative Council of the Province of Quebec. It is not at all intended by that Act, from anything to be gathered from it, that the use of the dual languages is to be permitted in any of the other Provinces, much less in any Province which did not even then belong to Canada, and which were acquired afterwards when the Hudson Bay Company sold us their territory of Rupert's Land, by which that great country passed under the Dominion of Canada. Therefore, there was no legislative warrant for the use of the French language in that territory in any sense, and it is based and founded, if founded at all, simply on the will of Parliament, and it ought, therefore, to be based on some good and sufficient reason. Now, is it, or is it not, a matter of importance that the dual language or the additional French language should be permitted—I will not say permitted—should be encouraged and fostered throughout the Dominion of Canada? If it is a matter of no importance—and so, perhaps, it was considered at the time—of course the motion I am making to Parliament, the Bill I have had the honor to ask leave to introduce, is an unnecessary measure, and will no doubt be so received and dealt with by this House. But in my judgment it is by no means an unimportant matter. On the contrary, I think, and I assert here in my place in Parliament, that there is no more important matter in the formation of the character of a people than the language that they speak, and, after all said and done, I think it will be found that nations and races are distinguished and are distinctive more by reason of the language they speak than by the blood which is common to or supposed to be common to them all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Switzerland.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think it would be found upon an investigation of the subject, and I will appeal to the very closest investigation upon the subject, that this is the well-known and accepted truth. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) refers to Switzerland or to the Swiss. When the proper time comes for the discussion of this Bill, that will certainly be a proper illustration to be dealt with; but I think my hon. friend would not, even if his view were correct, adopt the rule from the exception. Everyone knows that the use of several languages in Switzerland is an exception to the general rule, and should not be adopted as the general rule.

Mr. DESJARDINS. Well, well.

Mr. McCARTHY. My hon. friends laugh, and I hope, when the proper time comes, they will justify their laughter by something more than sneers. Before I sit down I will fortify my statement by an authority whose opinions I believe will be accepted, and certainly cannot be gainsaid. If, then, as I assert, it is an important matter in the great question of national life, I would ask my hon. friends in this House what we are assembled here for if not for the purpose of promoting national unity and building up a great country in the enormous territory we have under our control? Is not that the grandest and greatest object that has been entrusted to us as the representatives of a people; and towards that great object are we dealing truly if we are sowing the seeds of dissensions and of future trouble by legislation of this kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCARTHY. My hon. friends perhaps will allow me to proceed quietly because there will be a full opportunity of debating this subject, and then I hope there will be a fair hearing given to all opinions in this House. I have a right to my opinion and I intend to maintain it, notwithstanding what my hon. friends may say. In my opinion it is of the greatest importance to endeavor to make this great country united in fact as we are endeavoring to unite it in substance. We are spending our means, we have spent enormous sums of money, we have united the Atlantic to the Pacific, we have spent enormous sums, I say, on the Inter-colonial Railway to unite the Maritime Provinces with the heart of the Dominion, but what profits it if, at the same time, we are passing measures and promoting legislation which separates and divides the people into two separate races, or which is perpetuating that division; which is not only permitting it in the Province of Quebec, but in the new territories belonging to the Dominion. As a matter of dollars and cents, as a matter of mere money, the acquisition of the North-West, looked upon as a speculation, has been a loss, and, except for the purpose of building up a great nation, which we are willing to do, there can be no justification for the expenditure, not only in the acquisition of that great country, but in the building of those great railways at enormous expenditure, bringing into the market, to compete with our farmers, vast quantities of land, which must diminish the value of the land of the farmers in the older Provinces, while they are actually spending their money in the acquisition of the land which accomplishes this result. The only object we have had in all this has been to create on the northern part of this continent a great nationality, to build up a great country, one that our descendants would be proud to occupy and proud to belong to; and that is the only justification of the procedure which has been adopted from first to last since the passing of the Confederation Act. As I stated before, I will read from a document which I do not think hon. gentlemen will say does not convey a fair statement of this question of language. I will read from an article written by Professor Freeman, in which he deals with this question in the following words:—

“And now, having ruled that races and nations, though largely formed by the working of an artificial law, are still real and living things, groups in which the idea of kindred is the idea around which everything has grown, how are we to define our races and our nations? How are we to mark them off one from the other? Bearing in mind the cautions and qualifications which have been already given, bearing in mind large classes of exceptions which will presently be spoken of, I say unhesitatingly that for practical purposes there is one test, and one only, and that test is language. We may at least apply the test negatively. It might be unsafe to rule that all speakers of the same language have a common nationality, but we may safely say that, where there is no community of language, there is no common nationality in the highest sense. As in the teeth of community of language there may be what for all political purposes are separate nations, so without community of language there may be an artificial nationality, a nationality which may be good for all political purposes, and which may engender a common national feeling, still, this is not quite the same thing as that fuller national unity which is felt where there is community of language. In fact, mankind instinctively takes language as the badge of nationality. We so far take it as the badge that we instinctively assume community of language as a nation as the rule, and we set down anything that departs from that rule as an exception. The first idea suggested by the word Frenchman, or German, or any other national name, is that he is a man who speaks French or German as his mother tongue. We take for granted, in the absence of anything to make us think otherwise, that a Frenchman is a speaker of French, and that a speaker of French is a Frenchman.”

I think that will not be denied as a correct doctrine, but I will further trouble the House with a reference from a man very distinguished in this branch of science, Professor Müller, who, in his lectures delivered before at the Oxford University Extension meeting, says :

"It is said that blood is thicker than water, but it may be said with even greater truth that language is thicker than blood. If, in the interior of Africa, surrounded by black men, whose utterances are utterly unintelligible, we suddenly met with a man who could speak English, we should care very little whether he was English, or Irish, or American. We should understand him and be able to exchange our thoughts with him. That brings us together far more closely than if we met a Welshman speaking nothing but Welsh, or a Scotchman speaking nothing but Gaelic; or for all that, an Englishman who, having been brought up in China, could speak nothing Chinese. A common language is a common bond of intellectual brotherhood, far stronger than any supposed or real community of blood. Common blood without a common language leaves us as perfect strangers. A common language, even without common blood, makes the whole world feel akin."

Again, speaking of the other question, the question of race, a subject of very great interest, a subject which has been pursued by scientific men up to a recent period, this seems to be the result. The Professor quotes in his lecture from the Director of the American Bureau of Ethnology, who says :

"There is a science of anthropology composed of subsidiary sciences. There is a science of sociology, which includes all the institutions of mankind. There is a science of philology, which includes the languages of mankind. And there is a science, philosophy, which includes the opinions of mankind. But there is no science of ethnology, for the attempt to classify mankind in groups has failed on every hand."

There is no such thing as a Celtic skull any more than a Saxon skull; no such thing as Celtic hair any more than Saxon hair. It is only by language and by the community of language, that men are formed into nations. Finally, speaking of the whole subject of the science of language, the professor says :

"These may seem but idle dreams, of little interest to the practical politician. All I can say is that I wish that it were so. But my memory reaches back far enough to make me see the real and lasting mischief for which I feel the science of language has been responsible for the last fifty years. The ideas of race and nationality founded on language have taken such complete possession of the fancy, both of the young and the old, that all other arguments seem of no avail. Why was Italy united? Because the Italian language embodied Italian nationality. Why was Germany united? Because of Arndt's song, 'What is the German's Fatherland?' and the answer given, 'As far as sounds the German tongue.' Why is Russia so powerful a centre of attraction for the Slavonic inhabitants of Turkey and Germany? Because the Russian language, even though it is hardly understood by Servians, Croatsians and the Bulgarians, is known to be most closely allied. Even from the mere cinders of ancient dialects, such as Welsh, Gaelic and Erse, eloquent agitators know how to fan a new, sometimes a dangerous, fire."

I would just add to that an extract from the report of Lord Durham who dealt with the matter, not solely from a scientific, but from a practical point of view. When he was sent here, as we all know, he was a Liberal of the Liberals, and he was sent here by Lord Melbourne's Government for the purpose of investigating the difficulties and ascertaining what caused the rebellion in both Upper and Lower Canada. I have nothing to do at the moment with his report with regard to the Upper Province, but in his report on the Lower Province, he found the rebellion to be caused mainly, if not altogether, by race difficulties. Whatever else there was, whatever other prejudices there were, whatever other causes there might be, the trouble, when probed to the bottom, was found to be caused by race difficulties. Now, it may be said that has nothing to do with language, but when hon. gentlemen take the trouble to pursue the subject further they will find that when speaking of race, they mean a community speaking the same language. When you talk of a race you will find, when you investigate the subject, that the race is made up, not of men of one blood, but of men who have been adopted into the race, and there are instances of that in the Province of Quebec. I would like to know whether the Highland soldiers who were disbanded after the cession have not been received and adopted by the French Canadians, and are not now considered as much French Canadians as those who came from France a hundred years before that time? That process is going on constantly. Can you distinguish an Englishman who came over at the time of the Conquest from an Englishman of three or four centuries earlier? Or, to come back to more recent times, is the Frenchman who came over to England during the time of the troubles, and owing to the troubles in France, and after a generation or two changed his name to an English name; is he to be distinguished from those who have descended from a long line of English ancestry? It is plain, that what makes the nation is language; and, therefore, when one speaks of race, as these distinguished writers have done, they meant a community speaking the same language. But at the moment I am not dealing so much with that question, which I will come to by-and-bye, as with the particular matter of the difficulties in the Lower Province, and I will quote again from Lord Durham's report about this difference of language :

"The difference of language in this respect produces effects quite apart from those which it has on the mere intercourse of the two races. Those who have reflected on the powerful influence of language on thought, will perceive in how different a manner people who speak in different languages are apt to think; and those who are familiar with the literature of France, know that the same opinion will be expressed by an English and French writer of the present day, not merely in different words, but in style so different as to make utterly different habits of thought. This difference is very striking in Lower Canada; it exists, not merely in the books of most influence and repute, which are, of course, those of the great writers of France and England, and by which the minds of the respective races are formed, but it is observable in the writings which now issue from the Colonial press. The articles in the newspapers of each race are written in style as widely different as those of France and England at present, and the arguments which convince the one are calculated to appear utterly unintelligible to the other. The difference of language produces misconceptions yet more fatal even than those which it occasions with respect to opinions; it aggravates the national animosities, by representing all the events of the day in utterly different light."

Now, I venture to think, I have, at all events to some extent, made good the proposition which I am dealing with, that is, that language is of great importance, that it is of vital consequence to a nation that the language spoken by its people should be common to them all, that they should not, at all events, be encouraged and trained in speaking different languages.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Alsace and Lorraine seem to be exceptions to the rule.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to see that my hon. friend, at one time Minister of the Interior, has changed his views. He regretted the introduction of the French language in the North-West Territories at the time he consented to that amendment, and I give him credit for good faith in that regret. Certainly circumstances since have not altered in favor of the policy which my hon. friend seems now to have adopted. But I am glad to see that he stands firmly by the Bill which he fathered. At all events, on his part there can be no going back, and he is not accustomed to change any opinion he has once entertained. Now, I say, what has been the result in this country? Let hon. gentlemen remember that when this country was ceded to the British Crown there was not more than 60,000 or 65,000 French Canadians—I think that number includes, though I am not quite certain, those who dwelt on the banks of the Illinois, and who did not form a part of what is now the Dominion of Canada. However that may be, instead of encouraging them in the use of their language, had a policy been pursued of inducing them—not by any harsh means at all, not by any aggravating measures—to speak the English tongue, I want to know whether to-day, instead of the difference, the cleavage of race, which we see going on, and which is becoming more and more pronounced, and which is calculated to rend this Dominion in twain, if some stop is not put to it—I would like to know whether we would see the spectacle that we see to-day? I think it is perfectly plain that we would not see it. I think no injustice would have been done, and that in one generation, or in two at most, my hon. friends that now represent the Province of Quebec, or their ancestors, would have been speaking English, and would have been English in fact, English in sentiment, just as much as those who have gone to the other side of the line, no matter what country they come from, whether from Austria, from Italy, from Germany, or any other country in Europe, have now become assimilated and form part of the American people, not merely in name but in truth and in fact. Well, it is said that this is a matter of no consequence. Now, I venture to state that Lord Durham did find it to be a matter of consequence, and as I am desirous of convincing my hon. friends, if I possibly can, I want to give authority for what I say. I see there is a good deal of feeling on the subject, more than I should have expected, but I assume that my hon. friends are open to reason, and willing to listen to argument. Now, Lord Durham says in his report again:

“I expected to find a contest between a government and a people; I found two nations warring in the bosom of a single state; I found a struggle, not of principle, but of race; and I perceived that it would be idle to attempt any amelioration of laws or institutions, until we could first succeed in terminating the deadly animosity that now separates the inhabitants of Lower Canada into the hostile divisions of French and English.”

Further down:

“We are ready to believe that the real motive of the quarrel is something else, and that the difference of race has slightly and occasionally aggravated dissensions, which we attribute to some more usual cause. Experience of a state of society, so unhappily divided as that of Lower Canada, leads to an exactly contrary opinion. The national feud forces itself on the very sense, irresistibly and palpably, as the origin or the essence of every dispute which divides the community; we discover that dissensions, which appear to have another origin, are but forms of this constant and all-pervading quarrel, and every contest is one of French and English in the outset, or becomes so ere it has run its course.”

Now, I think that, as regards that time, at all events, Lord Durham's statement may be taken as good evidence—and no one would question his perfect impartiality—of what he saw on the spot here and reported to his Government. I hear the First Minister remark that Lord Durham did not write the report himself. That may be perfectly true; but a man as competent as Lord Durham was here—Mr. Buller—who is credited with having written the report, and so, whether it is called Lord Durham's or Mr. Buller's report, does not alter the fact, if fact it was, that such was the result of their investigation on the spot. But is it true or not that these things have changed, is all this matter of language a matter of no moment, a matter which does not call for investigation in this House or inquiry by the representatives of the people? Why, we have had statements made by the Premier of the Province of Quebec, who leads a great majority of his fellow countrymen in that Province, and there is no use denying, and I say it in the presence of the right hon. gentleman and the Government that I have hitherto followed, that there can be no question whatever that Mr. Mercier is to-day the true representative of the French Canadians of the Province of Quebec. Has he given any uncertain sound upon this question of Nationalism? What means it when he forms a party and calls it the National party? We have our National Policy. That was not a policy confined to one Province or one part of the Dominion, but a policy intended to apply and embrace the whole Dominion. We know, however, that the Nationalist party in the Province of Quebec is intended to embrace and consolidate one of the races, divided by the language—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. McCARTHY—and that it has successfully done so.

Mr. AMYOT. No such thing.

Mr. McCARTHY. I cannot accept the hon. gentleman's disclaimer.

Mr. LANGELETT (Quebec). We cannot accept your assertion.

Mr. McCARTHY. I may be asked what evidence I produce. I ask what is the meaning of the word “Nationalist?”

Mr. AMYOT. I will tell you later on.

Mr. McCARTHY. I shall be glad to have an explanation, but I must accept the definition of the word as I find it. Nationalism means French nationality in that sense. What did Mr. Mercier say, speaking in the presence of the hon. gentleman leading the Opposition in this House, if I am not misformed—at all events, the hon. gentleman spoke very shortly after him.

Mr. LAURIER. I spoke for myself.

Mr. McCARTHY. I said Mr. Mercier spoke in your presence. I am only stating what Mr. Mercier said.

Mr. LAURIER. You do not expect me to accept your statement.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am going to do justice to the hon. gentleman, and say that he disclaimed it. Now, what did Mr. Mercier say?

“To-day the rouge and the blue should give place to the tri-color. They must be united if they wish to make their nationality powerful.”

Mark the words—“their nationality.” Perhaps these words do not mean what they appear to say:

“It was a triumph for the National cause.”

It does not need an explanation from the hon. gentleman, who, I believe, is a warm supporter of Mr. Mercier in provincial affairs.

"For the sake of their nationality, for the sake of their religion, they must be united."

Who must be united ?

"The strength of the French Canadian people lay in the union of the people with the clergy. By coupling the name with Jesuit hero, Brebeuf, with the immortal Jacques Cartier they said to their insulters, it is useless to imagine that we will ever cease to be French and Catholic. This monument declares that after a century of separation from our ancient mother we are still French; more than that, we will remain French and Catholic."

Is there any doubt about these words? What is meant by "National?" These words were said in the presence of the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition in this House, as he does not deny, and he allowed them to pass without rebuke. I quite admit that when the hon. gentleman spoke he made no such declaration of policy in his own behalf, and when he delivered himself afterwards in Toronto—perhaps it would have been better if he had said it in Quebec—he stated that he for one was not in favor of French nationality. There is no doubt, at all events, as to what was meant by the hon. gentleman who leads the 'Local Government' in the statement which called forth in Toronto a disclaimer from the leader of the Opposition in this House. But the hon. gentleman will remember that when he went back to his Province he was not warmly greeted for this frank and rather liberal declaration which he made in the Pavilion at Toronto.

Mr. LAURIER. Do not pander to party prejudice.

Mr. McCARTHY. When the hon. gentleman returned he threw himself into an election then pending, and the result (I should like the hon. gentleman to explain, if the result was due to any other cause,) was that the majority of the candidate for the seat of the late Capt. Labelle was very much increased, the position not being appreciably changed except by this declaration, which was not received with favor by the press of Quebec, or a portion of the press of that Province. Is it not perfectly true also, that a large section of that press, more or less influential, having, I believe, an influence quite as great perhaps as any newspapers are supposed to possess, spoke out on this subject with no uncertain sound. Let me read to the House, what is perfectly well known to the members of the Province of Quebec, what La Vérité said on more than one occasion. We gather the signs of the times from newspaper articles and from the declarations of public men. I may perhaps be belittling Mr. Mercier by reading newspaper extracts in attempting to bolster up that hon. gentleman, but that newspaper makes such a declaration that I cannot pass it without remark. That journal says :

"But such was not, is not, never will be, the desire of French Canadians. For us, Confederation was and is the means to an end. It is a means of enabling us to dwell in peace with our English neighbors, whilst safe guarding our rights, developing our resources, strengthening us, and making us ready for our national future. Let us say it boldly—the ideal of the French Canadian people is not the ideal of the other races which to-day inhabit the land our fathers subdued for Christian civilisation. Our ideal is the formation here, in this corner of the earth, watered by the blood of our heroes, of a nation which shall perform on this continent the part France has played so long in Europe. Our aspiration is to found a nation which, socially, shall profess the Catholic faith and speak the French language. That is not, and cannot be, the aspiration of the other races. To say, then, that all the groups which constitute the Confederation are animated by one and the same aspiration, is to utter a sounding phrase without political or historical meaning. For us the present form of government is not, and cannot be, the last word of our national existence. It is merely a road towards the goal which we have in view, that is all. Let us never lose sight of our own national destiny. Rather let us constantly prepare ourselves to fulfil it worthily at the hour decreed by Providence, which circumstances shall reveal to us. Our whole history proves that it is not to be a vain dream, a mere Utopia, but the end which the God of nations has marked out for us. We have not been snatched from death a score of times; we have not multiplied with a rapidity truly prodigious; we have not wrought harvests of resistance and of peaceful conquest in the eastern townships and in the border counties of Ontario; we have not absorbed many of the English and Scotch settlements planted among us in order to break up our homogeneity; we have not put forth all these efforts, and seen them crowned with success, to go and perish miserably in any all-Canadian arrangement."

I could multiply quotations of this kind; but perhaps La Presse is a paper which may be said to speak with more authority, and I may give a quotation from it. I find, however, that I have not a quotation from that paper here. My hon. friend will perhaps remember it sneeringly alluded to the fact that the people were astonished at his observation, they could not accept it, they could not credit it, and instead of cheering it they merely said "hear, hear," being induced to do so by astonishment, but such was not the views or the policy of the French Canadian people. Now I have endeavored to show to the House so far, that this is not merely a sentimental matter but that it is a matter of practical politics and a matter which must be dealt with. I have endeavored to show that as early as the years 1837-38 it was then recognised as being the great cause of trouble in the Province of Quebec. I think I have also successfully shown (I do not think, in fact, I needed to have shown it, because it is familiar to us all) that these difficulties exist at present, and that now that the French race, or those who speak the French language, to be more accurate, have attained to a considerable numerical strength, their ambition is rising in proportion, and the difficulties which ought to have been foreseen long ago are now upon us and must be dealt with, at all events, as far as our new Territories are concerned, and that we must not allow the same difficulties to arise in that part of the Dominion. But if I have given the views of those within the Dominion, let me draw attention also to the views which are also entertained on this question outside of the Dominion by impartial spectators. I am not going to read from any journals that are hostile to the French Canadians, because I know that my quoting them as authority would produce no effect upon those whom I am very anxious indeed should very seriously consider this question. There ought to be no such differences between the English and French Canadian members of this House. There ought to be no differences on the subject between those who come from the Province of Quebec and speak in the French language, their mother tongue, and those who come from the other Provinces of the Dominion, and who speak the English language. If, in truth and fact it is in the interests of this Dominion, that there should be one race, one nationality and one national life, it is the duty of all of us to strive to bring about that result. I am now about to quote from a paper, from a Catholic journal, which was introduced to this House last Session by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice. I confess I did not hear of it before, but no doubt it has now become historical. It is called The Month. Dealing with this difficulty with the French language in Canada in the year 1885, the writer speaks as follows:—

“While freely admitting that the French Canadian is behind his English-speaking neighbor not only in farming, but in commerce, trade and all kindred branches, we must not take for granted everything that this same English-speaking neighbor says of him. One of the most striking and curious things in the social life of Lower Canada is the latent hate which the French and English-speaking races have for each other. It is a sad thing to say, but truth requires that it should be said, that English-speaking people, no matter whether they are English, Irish or Scotch, have rarely a good word for their French neighbors; and it is still sadder and more unaccountable that of all those English-speaking people, the Irish are those between whom and the French there seems to be the least rapport and the greatest enmity.

An hon. MEMBER. Do you believe that?

Mr. McCARTHY. This journal was accepted as a good authority last Session. I am reading from the same authority as my hon. friend the Minister of Justice quoted last Session.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That was twelve months ago.

Mr. McCARTHY. The article goes on to say:

“If the French Canadians were not Catholics, if they were not the people of all others whom the Irish are supposed to love, one might not be so puzzled over this social enigma.”

It goes on to give reasons or to account in some way for this cause of the hatred being greater between the Irish and the French, than between the French and any other nationality, and says:

“The preservation of the French language in Canada seems to be the most absorbing subject at present, not only in that country, but in France, and public opinion in both countries seems somewhat divided about it. All Frenchmen, and most Canadians of French extraction, are as one as to the absolute necessity of preserving their language in America; but how is it to be done? The best way would, of course, be to annex Canada to France; but that is not to be thought of. One thing is certain, and that is that in spite of the wonderful tenacity with which the French have stuck to their language in Canada, there are signs that it is losing ground.”

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not see that.

Mr. McCARTHY. Neither do I; but that is the opinion of this writer. Finally, the writer in The Month says:

“It would appear as if the French Government has become fully aware that the French language in Canada is in danger, and that steps have been taken to bring about a more cordial and general intercourse between the French-speaking people on both sides of the Atlantic. This can be done in many ways, but in no way more effectually than by close commercial relations.”

In another article it gives my hon. friend the Secretary of State credit for the endeavor he has made to bring about that good feeling between France and the people of the Province of Quebec, which good feeling up to that time was not to be discovered. I have read these extracts from The Month, which I thought would be accepted as undoubted authority, having been quoted before in this House by the Minister of Justice, and I now propose to read from the Catholic World, published in New York, and from its publication in the year 1885 I make the following extracts:—

“The growing power and importance of the French in Canada is the cause of the annexation feeling now taking root in Ontario and Nova Scotia. It is felt by all sections of Canadians that the connection with England must be severed, but the dread the French entertain towards annexation and the English towards independence prevents the sundering of the fragile tie.”

An hon. MEMBER. You don't believe that.

Mr. McCARTHY. I hear my hon. friend say that I do not believe that. Sir, I have heard that argued over and over again, and it is not very long ago since I heard a gentleman, who was a distinguished member of this House, say it was the only remedy for the existing condition of things—that gentleman said that the only remedy was to swamp my hon. friends from the Province of Quebec in the great American Confederacy.

Mr. LAURIER. Are you then an Annexationist?

Mr. McCARTHY. Not by any means. I do not at all concur in that, Mr. Speaker. I think that within the lines of the Constitution and in this Dominion of Canada this question can, will and must be settled, but I think that if that question is not settled considerable difficulties, as I have said, must arise.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is settled.

Mr. McCARTHY. The article in the Catholic World, to which I refer, commences by this:

“We are Englishmen speaking the French language,” said the late Sir George Cartier, the colleague and close personal friend of Sir John A. Macdonald.”

And the article goes on to explain that the result of that statement made by that distinguished Canadian statesman was:

“Before this he was the undisputed leader of the French Canadian element in Canada; three years later he was unmercifully beaten at the polls for Montreal East by an obscure young lawyer by the name of Jetté. The crushing defeat was the French Canadian way of punishing Sir George for his ultra-loyal speech and the misrepresentation it embodied. Not that French Canadians are not well affected to the Empire as things go; only it must be understood they are well affected as French Canadians.”

I would just ask the House to allow me to trouble them with another extract.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it another religious book?

Mr. McCARTHY. I will not further trouble the House with quotations. I have endeavored at all events to make good my statements, that both from within and from without the general opinion prevails that this question has come to the point where it is likely to cause further differences, as it has already caused differences in the Dominion. I come back now, Sir, to the North-West Territories. I am not attempting here, and hon. gentlemen know that, at all events in this form of motion, I could not attempt in any way to interfere with any rights under the British North America Act which are guaranteed to the French Canadians of the Province of Quebec, and to the French Canadians in this Parliament. I am treating, Sir, of what this Parliament is competent to deal with. I am treating of the question of the dual language of the North-West Territories. I hold in my hand, though it has not been yet presented to the House, a petition from the Legislative Assembly of the North-West Territories. Where that petition is I cannot say: whether it is in the hands of the Government, whether it is to be brought before the House, whether it has been sent to Mr. Speaker, or where the petition is I cannot say; but, that the Legislative Assembly of the North-West Territories did, at their last session discuss this question and pass the following resolution on the subject, by what was practically an unanimous vote, there can be no doubt. That petition of the Legislative Assembly of the North-West is as follows:—

"Address to the Honorable the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament Assembled, adopted by the Legislative Assembly of the North-West Territories, on Monday, 28th October, 1889.

"The petition of the Legislative Assembly of the North-West Territories in Session assembled, humbly sheweth:—

"That, whereas by Section one hundred and ten of 'The North-West Territories Act' it is enacted that 'Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the Legislative Assembly of the Territories and in the proceedings before the Courts; and both these languages shall be used in the records and journals of the Assembly, and all Ordinances made under this Act shall be printed in both these languages.'

"And, whereas this Assembly is of the opinion that the sentiment of the people of the North-West Territories is against the continuance of the section recited, on the grounds that the needs of the Territories do not demand the official recognition of a dual language in the North-West or the expenditure necessitated by the same.

"And, whereas this Assembly is also of the opinion that sound public policy demands the discontinuance of two official languages in the North-West:

"Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray:

"That your Honorable House may be pleased to pass an Act repealing said section one hundred and ten of said Act.

"And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray."

Not only, Sir, was this petition thus with almost practical unanimity resolved upon, but I am informed, and I believe the fact to be, although I have not examined it, that every newspaper published in the North-West has declared in favor of the abolition of the dual languages—every paper which has referred to the subject, I mean. One distinguished paper, the Regina Leader, I believe, has not yet thought it a subject worthy of notice; but almost every other paper has pronounced in favor of abolition. So that we have practically the unanimous opinion of the people of that territory. Now, are we going to perpetuate this system of things? Are we going to permit it to grow into what might be called a vested right, so that by-and-by a French Canadian can urge, and with some degree of truth, "I have left my own home in the Province of Quebec and have gone and settled in the North-West Territories, relying on the faith of an Act of Parliament by which it was said I should be allowed to have my language." Is it, or is it not, a matter which we ought to deal with, and deal with promptly? Sir, I have nothing further to add on the general question. I will only say, in conclusion, that while I have thought it right at this early stage to make a statement of the reasons which have actuated the course I am taking, I desire here, as I have done elsewhere, to disclaim any feeling of hostility of any kind against the French Canadian race or their representatives in this House. I desire to say that I have no such feeling.

Mr. BERGERON. Thank you.

Mr. McCARTHY. My only desire is to promote the welfare of us all, and I think our truest interest will be found in trying to create and build up in this country one race with one national life, and with a language common to us all.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. (Translation.) I have listened to, with more curiosity than interest, Mr. Speaker, the speech which has just been made by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). I must con-

cess that I have been astonished, and that in no slight degree, at seeing an Ontario member arrogate to himself the right of coming here, into this House, and asking for amendments to the Act erecting the North-West Territories. It is thought good to make an attack upon a right which is very dear to us, to all of us French Canadians—a right which we possess under the British made constitution which governs us. And what astonishes us still more, connected with the means employed to-day, is that they begin by attacking a handful of Métis scattered throughout the North-West Territories, with the object of crushing them out. I think this is a cowardly act, an act of cowardice which we must oppose with all our powers. To what end is all this exertion made? Why,—if sincerity exists,—if this French language ought no longer to be spoken in Canada,—why do they not attack its use throughout the whole Dominion of Canada; why do they not endeavor to prohibit its use universally, instead of proceeding to attack, as I have just said, a handful of French Canadians, away off yonder, who cannot defend themselves; but who count upon us to be their defenders? I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to follow the hon. member throughout the speech which he has just delivered; I shall only allude to certain passages. He stated, among other things, that the language of a people is the foundation of its nationality. I ask myself, if this idea is correct, how does it happen that in the Islands of Jersey and Guernsey, which have been English possessions for more than two hundred years, they have preserved the French language,—that the French language only is spoken,—and that that language is the only one recognised officially? How comes it that in the Island of Saint Lucie and the other islands in the Antilles which happen to be British possessions, the French language is spoken? Is this merely a privilege which the peoples of these places have arrogated to themselves; or is it not rather a privilege granted by the British Crown, by the laws, and by the constitution of these countries that the mother tongue of the inhabitant is allowed them. So that the power which we possess, we French Canadians, of using our mother tongue is no unprecedented concession; it is not a right possessed exclusively by the French Canadian subject, but it is a right which belongs to subjects in other colonies of the Empire. The hon. member has observed that it is only in Switzerland where the use of two languages is permitted. I think that if he had studied history he would have found that in other countries likewise the use of two distinct and different languages is sanctioned. In Belgium, among others, two languages are allowed; French is the official language, even though the public documents and papers are printed and published in Flemish. So that Canada forms no peculiar exception. The strongest position of the hon. member for Simcoe rests upon the celebrated report of Lord Durham, or supposed to be that of Lord Durham. All my fellow countrymen know what this report is worth. It was not prepared with the object of favoring the population of this country; it was not drafted in the interests of those who then dwelt in Lower Canada; but it was projected with the aim of Anglicising and of being able to persecute the population which then dwelt in the land, to the benefit of the immigration which had come out to possess it. Under such circumstances is it allowable to make use of this report in order to support the attempt which they are at this moment making adversely to our interests? Those who take advantage to-day of this report are worthy successors of him who prepared it. I must here remark, Mr. Speaker, that there exists a false impression about the history of this country. They wish to treat us as if we were a conquered people, whereas Canada was not conquered but was ceded to England under the terms of a treaty. In this treaty it is provided that our religion, our laws, and our customs as they existed at the time, should be protected, and I ask myself whether it cannot be affirmed to-day, that within these conditions and terms is included the conservation of our mother tongue, which we spoke at that time and which we still speak. From such reasoning it results that when the hon. member for Simcoe states that there was no such guarantee in the treaty,—that is to say the guarantee of the use of our language,—I can tell him his statement is false. The gravest insult that can be offered to us in the course of this discussion, which has hardly yet opened in this House; is that men should wish to have our enemies believe that because we do not use the English language habitually we are not loyal subjects of Her Majesty. They attack us on this line when taxing us with disloyalty. Well, when we see what our ancestors did when the time had come to defend the frontier, can it not be fairly said that they showed themselves quite as loyal if not more loyal than our fellow subjects of British origin? Can it be that people have forgotten the celebrated battles which we fought against our powerful neighbors the Americans? And if Canada still remains a British possession, to whom does England owe its retention if not to the French—but still loyal—population of the Province of Quebec. No, Mr. Speaker, in the present state of affairs they have thought it expedient to endeavor to excite prejudices in order perhaps to avenge the defeat which they suffered last year in another matter; but on this question, as on every other where our laws and our religion are attacked, I believe that we shall remain unmoved; and more particularly, that we shall defend in this House, as is but our duty, against the attacks this day attempted to be made against them, the few men of our own race who are scattered throughout the North-West country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Bill introduced is in terms of very great importance, and of course we can weigh it with reference to its effect on the North-West. But the line of argument my hon. friend has taken raises questions of such a nature, his whole line of argument is of such a kind, as to involve most serious and grave questions—so grave that I think we must take full time to consider what his arguments are, what they tend to, in what direction they lead, and what consequences may follow if the measure is persisted in. I, therefore, Sir, would hope that the discussion would end here—that the Bill should be allowed to be read the first time, and that after we have an opportunity of reading the carefully prepared speech of my hon. friend, we may, on the second reading, have an opportunity of discussing this important, this very grave question in all its bearings.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. May I be allowed, not to enter into a discussion of this question, but—as my hon. friend from Simcoe has quoted the authority of a great name, a great statesman and writer—only to cite one authority which I suppose will be accepted by himself and the whole House, as it has already been accepted by the whole country. A great statesman, at the time of the Union, wrote these words which have never been forgotten in this country :

“I must, moreover, confess that I for one am deeply convinced of the impolicy of all such attempts to denationalise the French. Generally speaking they produce the opposite effect from that intended, causing the flame of national prejudice and animosity to burn more fiercely. But suppose them to be successful, what would be the result? You may perhaps Americanise, but, depend upon it, by methods of this description you will never Anglaise the French inhabitants of the Province. Let them feel, on the other hand, that their religion, their habits, their prepossessions, their prejudices if you will, are more considered and respected here than in other portions of this vast continent, who will venture to say that the last hand which waves the British flag on American ground may not be that of a French Canadian.”

These words were those of the noble Lord Elgin, and I ask my hon. friend to read them and to meditate upon them.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have read them.

Mr. LAURIER. I did not understand my hon. friend from Simcoe, in his opening remarks, to say that he expected that this question would be debated at this stage of his Bill. I understood, on the contrary, that he expected that it would be debated, as is usual in this House, only on the second reading. This is our customary practice, and, therefore, perhaps, the hon. gentleman will permit me to tell him that it would have been preferable if he had not introduced in his remarks a good deal of controversial matter, which is quite debatable, no matter what stand is taken on the Bill. The hon. gentleman must allow that a man may be in favor of his Bill, and not agree with a good deal that he has said. For my own part, Sir, I do not propose at this stage to express an opinion on the Bill which he has presented. I reserve that for the second reading. I propose to follow in this instance the very safe practice which has always been followed in this House, of not expressing an opinion on a Bill, even if the tenor of it be well known in advance, until it has been placed in the hands of all members, and until they have read it and can form a mature judgment upon it. There is a good deal that I would personally take exception to in the hon. gentleman's remarks. I will not do so to-day; but the hon. gentleman will permit me to give him a piece of information as to which he appears to be in obscurity. He wants to know what was the cause that the Liberal candidate was defeated in the County of Richelieu. So far as my information goes, I have always understood that the cause was the bank notes of the defunct Mechanics Bank.

Mr. McCARTHY. May I be permitted, Mr. Speaker, to say that I am sorry if I have introduced what my hon. friend calls controversial matter. I deliberately adopted the course I have taken in making my statement, which I endeavored to make as impartial and fair as possible, on the introduction of the Bill. I understood it to be the English practice, and I think it is the fair practice. I have made my statement now and hon. gentlemen have an opportunity of considering it before the second reading, and then I shall have an opportunity of defending my position in answer to the objections that may then be made.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CUSTOMS DUTY ON MEAT.

Mr. MARSHALL asked, Is it the intention of the Government at the present time to increase the duty on mess pork or meat of any kind coming into Canada?

Mr. FOSTER. This is a question which it would be inadvisable to answer at the present time, as it is in regard to tariff matters.

INSPECTOR OF FISHERIES FOR PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. PERRY asked, Have the Government appointed an Inspector of Fisheries for Prince Edward Island in the stead of Col. John H. Duvar? If yes, who is he? What is the date of the appointment? and at what salary?

Mr. TUPPER. Mr. Edward Hackett was appointed, on the 1st July last, Inspector of Fisheries for Prince Edward Island, at a salary of $800 per annum.

IMPORTED FLOUR AND WHEAT.

Mr. CAMPBELL asked, How many barrels of flour have been entered for consumption in Canada during the six months ending on 31st December last, with amount of duty paid on the same? Also, how many bushels of wheat were entered during the same time for consumption, and amount of duty paid on same? Also, number of barrels of cornmeal entered for consumption during the same period, and amount of duty collected on same?

Mr. BOWELL. The number of barrels of flour entered for consumption in Canada during the six months ending on the 31st December last, was 108,408 barrels, and the duty collected on the same was $54,204. Those figures, however, do not include the return from British Columbia for the three months ending the 31st December last, for the reason that they have not yet been received. The returns showing the different descriptions of grain are only received quarterly, and, as a number of the ports have not yet forwarded their reports for the last two quarters, answers to the last two questions cannot be accurately given now.

BAR AT THE MOUTH OF THE THAMES.

Mr. CAMPBELL asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to complete the work of removing the bar at the mouth of the River Thames, in the County of Kent, Ontario, as soon as the weather will permit in the spring?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government have not as yet considered this question.

NORTH SHORE RAILWAY.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec) moved for:

Copies of all correspondence between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or between the Government and the Board of Trade of Quebec, or other public bodies or persons, as well as all other documents, respecting the debentures of the North Shore Railway Company.

He said: Every hon. member of this House knows that in the year 1875, the Government of the Province of Quebec undertook the construction of a railway from Quebec to Ottawa, which was then called the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway. That railway was completed in 1879. In 1880, the Government of the Province took possession of the road, and undertook the management of the same. In 1882, when the Hon. the Secretary of State was Prime Minister of the Province of Quebec, the railway in question was sold—one portion, that between Ottawa and Montreal, to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the other section, that between St. Martin's Junction, in the County of Laval, and the city of Quebec, to a company which was constituted by the same Act, which authorised the sale of the railway. By that Act, the company, which was known as the North Shore Railway Company, was empowered to issue debentures at the rate of $25,000 per mile over the whole length of the railway. Acting on the powers contained in that Act, the North Shore Railway Company issued debentures to the amount of about one and three quarter millions, in round numbers. I do not pretend to give the exact figures, but that was about the amount. I understand that a portion of these debentures was handed over to the Government of Quebec as collateral security for the obligation entered into by the company with the said Government of Quebec for the payment of the price of the railway. As I understand, half a million was paid cash, but the rest, three millions and a-half, is still due to the Government of Quebec. Of the total amount of debentures issued some $1,108,000 was given as collateral security by the company to the Bank of Montreal. At the time of the sale of the railway to the North Shore Railway Company, a great deal of opposition was shown to the scheme of the Government, not only by the members of the then Opposition, but also by a great many supporters of the Government of which my hon. friend the Secretary of State was then the head. That opposition from his own friends was stopped, in a large measure, by the representations which were made—that that was the only way to prevent the railway from going into the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. That sale took place in 1882, and not later, I think, than February, 1883, the same railway was sold to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I do not mean to say that the line of the railway was sold, but an agreement was entered into by the North Shore Railway Company, which was then represented by the late Senator Senecal, and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, by which the stock of the former company was transferred to certain parties representing the interest of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. The Grand Trunk Railway Company then took possession of the railway, and what was the result? The city of Quebec had subscribed a large sum, a much larger sum than it could relatively afford, if we consider the needs of the city of Quebec. That subscription amounted to $1,000,000. In order to help the construction of the North Shore Railway the city of Quebec made this immense sacrifice, so as to secure a rival line between that city and Montreal. After the line was sold to the Grand Trunk Railway, that rivalry for which the city of Quebec had paid so much ceased altogether to exist. Not only that rivalry ceased to exist, but an arrangement was entered into by the Grand Trunk Railway and the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, which was then controlled by the same syndicate, by which Quebec was put under the control of a monopoly ruinous to its trade. There was no more competition at all between the different lines of steamboats and railroads, but the whole was conducted as under one management.

Mr. MCCARTHY.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. And the rates were lower than ever before.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I do not say what the rates were, but I mention, as a fact which cannot be denied, that Quebec was worse off than she has ever been before. There is another fact. A good many members of this House were also members of the House in 1885 when the present Government brought down their resolutions for the construction of the so-called Short Line. I may say, in passing, that it has now been proved that not only was it not the shortest and best line, as it was represented to be by the Minister of Public Works who expounded the policy of the Government, but it is now established that there is a much better and a shorter line through our own country than the line which was then adopted. It was pretended, at that time, that it was necessary to cross American territory and to expend millions of our own money to build a railway in the United States, because we had to build the shortest line. It is now proved that it was not the most advantageous for the country, but it was the most advantageous line for the then Minister of Railways. It was a bitter pill for the friends of the Government from the district of Quebec to swallow, and in order to sweeten the pill the Minister of Public Works, by the same series of resolutions, proposed to give a subsidy of a million and a half to secure to the Canadian Pacific Railway access to the Harbor of Quebec. I admit at once that a large portion was voted previously, but a million and a half was voted as compensation to Quebec and to give satisfaction to the city of Quebec. It was stated that that million and a half was to be expended in order to give Quebec the advantage of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to enable that road to reach the city of Quebec. The hon. gentleman in charge of the Government resolutions explained clearly what he intended to do. He stated that if the Grand Trunk Railway would not consent to transfer the North Shore Railway to the Government, in order that the Government might transfer it to the Canadian Pacific Railway, another line would be built parallel with the North Shore Railway. But a million and a half was voted on that representation; and then it was stated further by the Minister of Public Works that a million and a half would be expended not only for securing control of the North Shore Railway, but in order to put it in a working condition, to repair some of the bridges, and, in a word, to give us, not an imaginary communication with the Canadian Pacific Railway, but a real communication. But this is the fact that I wish to make clear: The Government entered into an agreement under that law, first, with the Grand Trunk Railway on the 19th September, 1885. Acting under the legislation of the previous Session the Government made an agreement with that road by which the whole stock of the company was transferred to the Government with the understanding that it was to be transferred immediately by the Government to the Canadian Pacific Railway; and this was done. On the very same day another agreement was entered into between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway by which the railway and its franchises were transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I wish to call the attention of the House to clause 3 in that agreement, and which is number 35 of the Sessional Papers of 1886. Clause 3 of the agreement reads as follows:—

“In consideration of the premises, the Government agree to apply and use part of the said sum of one million five hundred thousand dollars, to wit, the sum of nine hundred and seventy thousand dollars, in aid of the said company in acquisition of the said railway, in the following manner, that is to say:—In the event of the net receipts of the operation of the said railway, after paying the operating expenses thereof, proving insufficient to meet the interest on the first mortgage bonds of the said North Shore Railway Company, including those held by the Government of Quebec as collateral security for the balance of the price of the said railway, the Government will apply the interest on the said sum of nine hundred and seventy thousand dollars, at the rate of four per cent. per annum, in whole or in part, as may be required, towards the payment of the deficiency. But if, or when after payment of all such deficiencies, the net receipts of the said railway, as aforesaid, shall be sufficient to pay the interest on the said bonds, the said company shall cease to have any further claim or demand upon the Government in respect of the said sum of money; provided that, as regards operating expenses, the cost of no new works or renewals of a more expensive character than existing works were when new, shall be accounted as forming part of such operating expenses, unless the previous consent of the Minister of Railways and Canals has been obtained to their construction.”

The object of the clause I just read was this: that, first, the running expenses of the railway were to be paid out of the gross receipts and the interest on the amount due to the Government of Quebec, the balance of three millions and a half, was to be paid to that Government. And if any of these receipts remained after the payments of these two items, then interest was to be paid on these debentures which I have mentioned, and which debentures amounted to the sum of $1,108,000, and which cost the Government, as I believe, from information I got last year from the Minister, $970,000. The result has been this: it has become the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway not to develop the trade and the traffic of that railway, but to prevent it from being developed. It is quite evident that it would be against the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway to take proper steps to increase the traffic, because if the traffic is increased it would be simply in the interest of the Government, it would be simply to enhance the value of the debentures now held by the Government. The result has been most ruinous to the trade of Quebec. I may mention another fact. No expenditure for renewals can be made without the consent of the Minister of Railways. Some of the bridges on the North Shore Railway are, and have been, in a dangerous condition for several years. One of them, called St. Jeanne, or Pont Rouge, became so dangerous that some three years ago the bridge inspector of the Canadian Pacific Railway reported that it was no longer in a safe condition for traffic. The Canadian Pacific Railway, I understand, applied to the Government for permission, under clause 3, to make a better bridge. As usual the matter was postponed until to-morrow. These men are not men of to-morrow but men of to-day. They said: We shall stop running trains between Montreal and Quebec unless the bridge is rebuilt, because if an accident occurs we shall have to pay damages. Eventually the Minister of Railways consented to the reconstruction of the bridge, and it was reconstructed. More than a year was occupied in securing the repayment of the money expended, which was $70,000. What has been the result? Now the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who are operating the road, do not want to build any more bridges. Another bridge is equally as dangerous, namely: the Portneuf bridge. I am always afraid when I pass over it. It is 65 feet high over the level of the river, and if the bridge were to fall there would be a terrible catastrophe. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have carried out insignificant repairs, but the bridge will have to be rebuilt. The consequence of the present state of things is that the company cannot run heavy locomotives between Quebec and Montreal, and not one of those heavy locomotives now used for freight trains can be run on the lines between St. Martin's Junction and Quebec. The Board of Trade of Quebec, in fact all the merchants of that city, have made representations to the Government asking them to terminate the existing state of affairs. The only way to do so is to cancel the debentures which they now hold on the railway. When in 1885 the hon. members of this House, especially the hon. members for Quebec, were induced to vote $1,500,000 for Quebec, it was represented that the money would be expended to promote trade that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were supposed to be able to bring to that point. The money has not been expended as it was understood would be the case. It is true that the money has been expended, that the money has been paid over. It is true that $525,000 have been paid to the Grand Trunk Railway in order to get back a railroad that had been sold in 1882 by the Government of the present Secretary of State. It is true that $970,000 have been paid to the Bank of Montreal to redeem debentures that had been given by the North Shore Railway as security for loans obtained from the bank, but the Government now retain these debentures. So, as a matter of fact, they have not expended the money in the interest of the City of Quebec. They keep these debentures as security, and we want some steps taken to secure the fulfilment of the promises made in 1885. At that time it was promised that Quebec should have a grain elevator, that many bridges—I am repeating the statement made by the Minister of Railways—would be repaired, that better rolling stock would be placed on the line. I hope the Government will take steps to give us the facilities promised in 1885.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Carried.

Mr. LAURIER. I should have expected to have received some answer from the Government to the very serious representation made by the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Langelier). I do not think the Government is treating the House properly in simply answering "carried," to such a motion as that before it. My hon. friend has made a most serious charge, which, in substance, I will state. Before I do so, I may remind the House that in 1884 Sir Charles Tupper, speaking as a member of the Government and Minister of Railways, distinctly stated that the policy of the Government was to make the harbor of Quebec the summer terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That was the policy stated by the hon. gentleman, upon which a series of resolutions were introduced and adopted. What has been done with regard to this question? No less than $1,500,000 was voted by the House to carry on that object, namely, to acquire certain interests which were then controlling the railway, and placing the road in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The charge of my hon. friend is this: That the policy proposed by the Government and adopted by the House has not been carried out, because the Government have actually expended no money whatever, because they have acquired the debentures of the road and such appear as Dominion assets in the Public accounts. I do not understand how the Government can resist the conclusion suggested, rather than formulated, by my hon. friend, that it is the duty of the Government to wipe out those liabilities on the road and place the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in a position to carry out the improvements which are necessary in order to make the road a first-class road and make Quebec the summer terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway. My hon. friend has explained in a lucid manner that it is actually the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company not to make any improvements on that road, because immediately they did so and developed traffic over the line, they would become liable to the Government for $960,000. I call the attention of the Government to this subject, and ask that it be dealt with in the manner indicated, when the appropriation was made by Parliament, and unless they do so we must call attention to it on another occasion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can assure the hon. gentleman who made the motion that no disrespect whatever was intended, but quite the reverse. The hon. gentleman's statement was calm and clear in every respect. The motion itself does not disclose the object that my hon. friend has in moving for these papers, but we know now what they are and we have the statement of my hon. friend in making his motion.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC POST OFFICE—SUPERANNUATION OF OFFICIALS.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec) moved for:

Copies of all Orders in Council, correspondence and documents respecting the superannuation of certain employés in the Post Office at Quebec, and in the Post Office Inspector's office at Quebec; and the filling up of the vacancies caused by their superannuation.

He said: I would like the Government to bring down the papers in this matter as soon as possible as some most extraordinary things have taken place with regard to those changes in the post office. I may state that Mr. Bolduc, one of the gentlemen superannuated, as well as the deputy inspector of the post office, Mr. Fréchette, were perfectly capable to fulfil their duties for some ten years to come, at least. It cannot be on account of ill-health that they were superannuated, for I do not think that either of those gentlemen have ever failed one day to go to their office. They are both in as good health as I am in, and in as good health as the Postmaster General himself. If they were entitled to be superannuated, he is entitled to be superannuated also, for those gentlemen are physically as strong and not any older than he. Not only are those two superannuated officials in good health, but I have never heard any complaint against them. On the contrary, I have heard Mr. Bolduc, the deputy postmaster, praised as being one of the most efficient men not only in the Quebec post office but in any post office in the Dominion. I heard a very high official of the Post Office Department state that he did not know of one man in the whole post office service more capable of discharging his duties than Mr. Bolduc. It has been publicly stated in Quebec that the deputy postmaster received notice of his superannuation in the most accidental and most extraordinary manner. About a month or five weeks ago, he arrived at his office one morning and he found another young man occupying his chair : Mr. Simard, and a very nice young man, I am informed, about 22 years of age. I have nothing to say against Mr. Simard, because he has been represented to me as being a very respectable, intelligent and active young man. However, the deputy postmaster found this young man seated in his chair, and Mr. Bolduc, who is a courteous gentleman, waited some time for him to rise, and after waiting some time, he said : "If you please I have something to write and I would like to have my chair." The young man said : "Mr. Bolduc, before you sit down, here is a very important letter for you from the Post Office Department and please read it." Mr. Bolduc read the letter and nearly fainted as he found from it, for the first time, that he was superannuated. I did not hear the manner of the notification to Mr. Fréchette, the other gentleman who was superannuated. I am quite impartial in speaking on this question, because the post office officials interested have all been good supporters of the Government and their friends are also strong supporters of the present Administration. Another gentleman in the Quebec post office, named Mr. Vohl, was, without any reason given him, taken from the Post Office Inspector's office, and made mail clerk. He is now acting as mail clerk on some railway, and he does not know himself why he was removed from the Inspector's office and made a mail clerk. Those gentlemen I have referred to are well known and most respected citizens of Quebec, and are remarkable for their courtesy and attention to the people doing business with the post office. There never has been any complaint against them ; the public are anxious to know why they have been superannuated in such a despotic manner. For my part, I have never heard of such a removal of a respectable and efficient officer except, perhaps, in Russia or Turkey.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no correspondence other than the report to Council in reference to the matter enquired into by the hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier). Mr. Bolduc was a very old officer and was for a long time in the service.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). He was only 62 years of age.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, he was 62 years of age. There has been no appointment as yet to his place, and the report and Order in Council will be brought down at the request of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I may say that the City of Quebec was taken by surprise in this matter. I happen to know the two gentlemen referred to, and they are men in active life and of very good health, neither of whom deserve the treatment they have been subjected to by the Government. Unless there should be some reasons which are known to the Government and as yet unknown to the public, those two officials should certainly not have been disturbed in their positions. For my part, I believe that the Government has been misled by some wrong information as to the exact position of those two officials, and I believe that if the Government should take the opportunity of examining into the question once more, they would find sufficient reason to recall the order that has been made. I have met those gentlemen every day as I went to the post office, and I know that they are in as good health as the hon. the Postmaster General is in at the present moment, and as well fit to perform their duty as ever they were. I suppose I am about the same age as the hon. gentleman, and I do not think that he will deny that there may be several years of useful career before us yet, nor will he admit the principle that we should be shelved on account of our age just now. Unless the American system should prevail in this country, I think the superannuation of those officials has been a faux pas.

Mr. LAURIER. I think my hon. friend was altogether too mild in characterising the conduct of the Department in the matter as a faux pas. If I understand aright the answer just given by the hon. Postmaster General, a man 62 years of age, while engaged in the regular discharge of his duty, was superannuated without a word of communication being sent to him previously.

Mr. HAGGART. The statement has been made, but I am not aware of it. It has been told to me for the first time now.

Mr. LAURIER. I understood from the hon. gentleman a moment ago that there was no correspondence, except the order. Therefore, it follows that there was no communication whatever made to this man before he was superannuated.

Mr. HAGGART. There might have been.

Mr. LAURIER. Well, I ask again if the House is to tolerate such a system, that an officer in the vigor of 62 years, engaged in the discharge of his duties, who states that he is in good health, should be superannuated without any previous communication to him. It is not only a piece of tyranny against this man, but it is an utterly indefensible act on the part of the Government. On what ground was this man superannuated? Certainly not on account of age or ill-health. It must then have been on some ground which cannot see the light of day.

Mr. AMYOT. We must not assume that Mr. Fréchette is 62 years of age. I do not think he is 55. He is quite a young man. If we were all to be put out of public life when we are 55 years of age, most of us, and some of the most important members of the House, would be away.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no intention on the part of the Department to superannuate any officer without notice. If this man has not received notice, it is through some misunderstanding or fault of the inspector. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that in cases of superannuation there should be some communication or conversation with the officer beforehand. No doubt the report of the superannuation when brought down, will give the reasons, and we shall then be able to discuss it intelligently.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I am not here simply speaking in the interest of this man, although he belongs to my division. But speaking in the public interest, I think it is a waste of public money to superannuate men in perfect health. I can state without fear of contradiction that neither of these men has ever failed to go to his office, and there never has been a complaint against them in the discharge of their duties, and to all appearances they may live for many years yet.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC LAND SLIDE.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec) moved for :

Copies of all Orders in Council, correspondence and documents respecting the falling down of a portion of the rock on which the Citadel of Quebec is built, which fall took place on the 19th of September last.

He said : Not only every member of this House, but every man in this country, is aware of the terrible accident which took place at Quebec, on the 19th of September last, when a large portion of the rock upon which the Citadel is built came down, crushing eight tenement houses, in which a large number of families were living. About 50 people were killed or mortally wounded, and a good many others were very seriously injured. Serious losses were suffered—I do not speak so much of the owners as of the tenants. The owners of those houses are well-to-do people ; and while they are of course entitled to justice, they are not in such immediate want of justice as the tenants. All the tenants of those houses belong to the laboring classes. Most of them are the families of ship laborers, and they are very badly in need of clothing and furniture, which they lost by the accident. Many representations, in the shape of petitions and letters, have been addressed to the Government asking for redress. I must say that the whole population of Quebec was under the impression that the Government would not dispute for one moment their liability to the sufferers. Several years ago a report was made to the Government by the city engineer of Quebec, Mr. Charles Baillargé, calling their attention to the dangerous condition of that rock, in which a crack was already visible, and it was easy to see that sooner or later the whole rock would crumble with just such serious consequences as have occurred. Very little attention seems to have been paid to that report. I have seen some of the ministerial papers, after the accident took place, attempting to base the defence of the Government on the ground that the plans suggested by the city engineer of Quebec had been carried out by the Government. I do not admit that that is true ; but supposing it were, it would be no defence of the Government, because it was not the business of the City of Quebec to point out what precautions should be taken to prevent the accident ; it was for the Government and their engineers to see to that. But no serious steps were taken, with the result that I have stated. At the time the accident happened a committee of citizens was formed. It was proposed to organise a general subscription from the public to come to the help of the sufferers. A good many even of the supporters of the Government said they did not want to organise a public subscription because the Federal Government, with a budget of about thirty-six millions a year, was able to pay its debts, and it would be preposterous for the citizens of Quebec to put their hands in their pockets in order to pay the debt of this Government. The result was that a comparatively small amount—I think only about $5,000—was subscribed by the people of Quebec, and it was distinctly understood that that amount was only for the relief of the sufferers according to their immediate requirements, but was not intended to buy new furniture or new clothing for those sufferers. Since that time repeated demands have been made upon the Government. Letters and petitions have been sent, and correspondence of all kinds has taken place, requesting the Government to come to the redress of the sufferers. I must say that, on the spur of the moment, the Minister of Public Works undertook the responsibility for the Government of doing this. I state at once that the hon. gentleman cancelled the telegram he had sent, but, in cancelling that telegram, I did not understand that he intended to cancel the responsibility he had accepted for the Government. When he visited Quebec and went to the place where the accident had occurred, I understood that his view was that the Minister of Militia had taken the matter in hand, and he did not want two Ministers to take charge of one subject. That was a good explanation, as far as I understood it, but I did not understand him to retract the responsibility of the Government for the telegram which he sent to the chairman of the road company, in which he said the corporation might go on to repair the consequences of the catastrophe, and the Government would recoup them. There is more than this. The sufferers have not only lost their furniture and clothing, but the street is completely blocked. Between 40,000 and 50,000 tons of rock have fallen into Champlain Street, and everyone who has been in Quebec knows that Champlain Street is a very narrow street, lying between the cliff and the wharves, and it is by means of the wharves that it is connected with the St. Lawrence River. When we wanted to clear the street, to clear away the débris, and to open the roadway, we were asked by the engineers of the Government not to touch the rock which had fallen, because that would result in bringing down a much larger quantity of rock, as that which is now there acts as a buttress to prevent the fall of the rest of the rock. But nothing has been done since. All we have is letters acknowledging receipts of petitions and complaints which have been sent from time to time, and in the meantime the corporation of Quebec has had to go to a great deal of expense to open a temporary roadway. It is only a temporary roadway, and it is a very dangerous roadway, because we are threatened with another very serious accident of the same kind. I cannot understand the negligence of the Government in regard to this matter. At present a very much larger piece of rock is threatening to fall, and if it comes down, as it threatens to do, I do not know how many lives will be lost. The Government cannot ignore this matter. The report of their own engineers, which was communicated to me by Gen. Middleton, states that sooner or later a portion of the rock—and not a small portion, but a portion weighing about 150,000 tons, will come down if no means are adopted to prevent its falling, and yet nothing has been done. All that has been done is that the Minister of Public Works came down and looked at it, and the Minister of Militia came down and sent two gentlemen from the Military School at Kingston, and they examined it and made the report I have been speaking of. The Minister of Militia, who is well posted in military matters and in military engineering, knows that reports will of themselves be no buttress against those rocks; and, if no step is taken, if no action is authorised to prevent the disaster, I think the Government would be criminally liable for any lives which might be lost as the result of another slide. They have been twice warned without effect. Now, they have had another warning, and a more serious one than before, in the shape of the loss of the lives of fifty people. They did not take any step to prevent that, and, if another accident should happen, everyone would be justified in holding them criminally responsible for the lives that would be lost. Now that the House is sitting, I hope the Government will not be so remiss in discharging their duties in this matter.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman has made use of rather strong expressions, and has spoken about the possible criminal responsibility of the Government in regard to the great accident to which he has referred, and which we all so much regret. I believe the time to discuss that is not just at the present moment upon the motion which has been made by the hon. gentleman to produce the papers, but that it is when the papers are laid upon the Table. Those papers will show the course which the Government have seen fit to adopt after taking all the advice which it was proper for them to take on a matter of that importance. When those papers come down, I shall be prepared to show that the action taken by the Department, upon the report of Mr. Baillairgé, to which the hon. gentleman has referred, has been the proper course to follow.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I belong to the city of Quebec, and I know something of this matter. I saw with my own eyes what will come, and what may come possibly in a few days or even in a few hours. There is a great fissure in the rock and no one can tell what the result may be. The corporation of Quebec has informed the Government in reference to this matter, but that accident must come and will come, but at present the hands of the city of Quebec are tied. There is a statute of the Province of Quebec by which no one is allowed to touch or to undermine the cape, so that the matter rested entirely in the hands of the Government. It is a military property and, therefore, under the direct control of the Minister of Militia, and I do not see that anybody else but the Department of Militia is responsible for preventing future accidents. I am sorry to say that there is no denying the fact that at the present moment that part of the city is as much in danger of a slide as it was before the accident occurred. The danger is so evident that the firing of the gun on the citadel was stopped, as it was feared that the shock would detach another large portion of the rock. Under these circumstances I think the Government ought to take, and ought long ago to have taken, immediate steps either to take that part of the cape down or to adopt such other means as the Government engineers may suggest in order to prevent a recurrence of accidents of life and property.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I must say that I am greatly disappointed by the course taken by the Minister of Militia on this subject. Of course I did not expect him to admit his guilt; that would have required more philosophy than I gave him credit for possessing. But I thought he would explain to the House what the Government intended to do in the matter. Whether the Government have been guilty or not in the past, is one question, but what should be done in the future is a very different question. I think the people of the city of Quebec have a right to know at once if any measures are to be taken to protect them in the future from similar accidents. They have a right to know, because, as I said a few minutes ago, they are obliged to pass through a temporary and difficult passage that they have made, because Champlain Street has been blocked up, and we have been asked by the engineers of the Government, who came down to inspect the scene of the accident, not to touch the rock which is there—

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Been advised, not asked.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec),—in order to prevent the rest from falling down. The street cannot remain in that condition for all time to come. At present, people who have business in that quarter are obliged to climb over that mass of débris. The proprietors on the other side of the street cannot rebuild their houses; in fact nothing at all can be done until we know what the Government proposes to do. I do not ask whether the Government are going to pay an indemnity, but I ask what they are going to do to prevent further accidents, and to put an end to the state of things from which the people in that locality are suffering very much, and have been suffering for so many months?

Motion agreed to.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Copies of all correspondence and documents respecting the appointment of Mr. Joseph Gareau as Superintendent of Government Works at Quebec; and respecting his removal and the substitution of a person named L. P. Lepine.—(Mr. Langelier, Quebec.)

Copies of all Orders in Council, correspondence and documents respecting the superannuation of certain employees in the Culler's Office at Quebec.—(Mr. Langelier, Quebec.)

Copies of all correspondence between the officers of the Temperance Colonisation Company and the Department of the Interior, or any member of the Government, and the Saskatchewan Land and Homestead Company with the Department of the Interior; and all correspondence between Rev. Alexander Sutherland and John T. Moore and the Department of the Interior, or any member of the Government, in relation to the location of lands and claims for placing immigrants on lands, and compensation for assisting immigration to the said lands, together with all Orders in Council relating to such claims.—(Mr. Somerville.)

ADJOURNMENT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With the permission of the House I would ask that the House now adjourn. There are only two or three matters left, and they can stand until to-morrow. The reason that I ask the House to adjourn is this: There is a very large and important deputation present from Montreal, which the Government promised to see, and which we expected to have been able to see before now, if the House had adjourned earlier. We want to meet them now, and if my hon. friend opposite will agree, I now move that the House adjourn.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 5.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 23rd January, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 11) further to amend the Act, chapter five of the Revised Statutes of Canada, intituled "An Act respecting the Electoral Franchise."—(Mr. Choquette.)

INDEPENDENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. CASGRAIN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 12) for further securing the Independence of Parliament. He said: The object of this Bill is to cause to be administered to members of Parliament the essentials of the oath which is required to be taken by any person holding an office under the Crown. Although the office of member of Parliament is not held under the Crown, still it is an office of great trust and great responsibility, and I believe that the safeguard of such an oath as I propose would add a great deal to the successful performance of the duties devolving on members of Parliament. That is the object of the Bill. If a member comes to take a seat in this House it should be required that he should declare himself free from any objection which might impede his conduct in Parliament, or which might affect his seat. So far as I have been able to draw the Bill, it follows the very expression of the law to secure the independence of Parliament as it stands now. I believe that the Bill, when read by the members of this House, will receive due consideration, and I believe also that every elector in the Dominion will be glad to find a Bill of this description introduced, which will be an additional security for the performance by members of Parliament of the high trust committed to them. I have included in the Bill one of the Rules of the House concerning the duties of members of Parliament, namely, that the offer of any money bribe for a promise to promote or impede a measure before Parliament is a misdemeanor. That is embraced also in the oath. The Act also provides that the oath required to be taken by members shall be taken before the Clerk of the House, and that a record of the oath, in writing, shall be kept by the Clerk of the House. That oath is taken in addition to the usual oath of allegiance, which is also mentioned in the Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would ask my hon. friend if there is to be any provision in the Bill imposing penalties in case of a breach of the oath to be taken by members of Parliament?

Mr. CASGRAIN. There is no other penalty than this: that if the oath, being on record, is violated, the usual course of the law will follow; there is no special penalty attached. I thought of providing that if a member returned as elected should refuse to take the oath, he should not be allowed to sit, and the matter should be reported to the Speaker of the House, and then the House should say whether, by the refusal of the member to take the oath, the seat would be vacated or not. I have not inserted that provision; but I intend, if the Bill comes in due course before the House, to suggest something of the kind.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would ask my hon. friend also, if there is to be any clause providing that any cases of bribery or corruption shall affect a member's seat?

Mr. CASGRAIN. If a member is entitled to his seat according to the law, he is all right.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. GORDON asked, Have any application, either verbal or written, been made to the Government, or to any member thereof, by any person, persons or corporation, for a repeal of the Act restricting and regulating Chinese immigration into Canada, or of any of the provisions of the said Act? If so, when and by whom?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No applications that we are aware of have been made to the Government, or to any member of the Government, on these subjects.

I. C. R.—RECEIPTS AND EXPENSES.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT asked, What are the receipts and expenses of the Intercolonial Railway for the half year ending the 1st January, 1890, and for the half year ending 1st January, 1889?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. For the half year ending the 1st of January, 1890, the earnings were $1,562,897.48; the working expenses $1,834,046.29. For the half year ending the 1st of January, 1889, the earnings were $1,543,341.70; the working expenses $1,808,481.72.

DUNDAS AND WATERLOO ROAD.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth) asked, 1st. At what date were the papers respecting the Dundas and Waterloo Macadamized Road handed to the Department of Justice for a report as to the ownership of the said road? 2nd. Has the Minister of Justice reported thereon? If so, how soon will his report be presented to the House? 3rd. If not, how soon may we hope to have his report?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first communications with the Department of Justice were in September, 1885. The Department of Justice and my own Department have been in communication several times since, and the Department of Justice have put a number of questions to my Department to which my Department are now preparing answers, in order that the Department of Justice may be in a position to give an opinion on the question as to whether that road should be under the control of the Federal authorities or not.

REPORT.

Report of the Postmaster General for the year ended 30th June, 1889.—(Mr. Haggart.)

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

—Mr. McMULLEN moved for:

Return showing the amount of money expended by the Dominion in each Province since Confederation to the 30th of June, 1889, under the following heads: 1st. Subsidies to railways in each Province, excepting the Canada Pacific main line and Sault branch; 2nd. The several railways built by the Dominion in each Province, including the Intercolonial branches and extensions, but not the main line as originally constructed; 3rd. The buildings erected or purchased in each Province, their location and cost.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The first part of the hon. gentleman's motion can be readily granted, that is as to subsidies to railways in each Province, except the Canadian Pacific Railway main line and the Sault branch. As to the second branch of the hon. gentleman's motion, which reads as follows:—

“The several railways built by the Dominion in each Province, including the Intercolonial branches, sidings and extensions, but not the main line as originally constructed.”

I have this note sent to me by the Department:—

“Is it understood that the main line as originally constructed is intended to cover the Intercolonial Railway from Chaudière Junction to St. John, Halifax, Point du Chêne and Picton, or is the line purchased from the Grand Trunk (Chaudière to Rivière du Loup) to be included? The main line should be defined. That done, the returns can be readily made, provided the word ‘sidings’ is omitted, but if the sidings are to be included, the returns could scarcely be brought down this Session.”

Perhaps, if I sent this memorandum over to the hon. gentleman, he might look at it and we will allow the motion to stand over until to-morrow.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have erased the word “sidings” in the motion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I was not aware of that, but then, as to the definition of the main line. If the hon. gentleman means what the words in his motion would imply, if he means all the branches which I have referred to in the memorandum I have read, it would be difficult to bring down the returns within any reasonable time, and I would like to know whether he means to include or exclude those branches to which I have referred.

Mr. McMULLEN. My object was to get a return in regard to the branches which have been added to the Intercolonial Railway since the construction of the main line. At the time of Confederation the understanding was that the Intercolonial Railway was to be built for the purpose of uniting the Provinces, but since that, branches have been constructed in order to serve the trade of various places in different Provinces and not as a national concern.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think I understand what the hon. gentleman wants; but in the third part of his motion he asks for the expenditure on buildings erected or purchased in each Province, their location and cost. Does he mean all buildings, but not railway buildings?

Mr. McMULLEN. No; not unless they are connected with the main line or the branches.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman means simply railway buildings and not post office buildings, for example.

Mr. McMULLEN. The last portion of my motion has reference to post office and custom house buildings.

Motion agreed to.

PAYMENT AND EXPENSES OF MINISTERS, &c.

Mr. McMULLEN moved for:

Return giving the names of each Minister of the Crown, High Commissioner or other Foreign Plenipotentiary, from Confederation to the 30th June, 1889. 2nd. The amount of money drawn by each under the following heads:—Salary, sessional allowance, travelling expenses, cab-hire and all other sums drawn under any other head during their term of office. 3rd. The total amount paid to each for all purposes during their term of office up to the 30th June, 1889.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would ask my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) to be a little more explicit. He asks for an order of the House giving the names of each Minister of the Crown, High Commissioner or other foreign plenipotentiary. This is the first time that I have received the information that I or any other Minister was a foreign plenipotentiary. In fact I was not aware that we had any foreign plenipotentiaries. It has been contended that we should have foreign plenipotentiaries.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am willing to alter that: from foreign plenipotentiary, to foreign agent.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. But we have no foreign agents. Canada cannot have any foreign agents. The only foreign agents we have are the Consuls General and Consuls who come to this country from abroad.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend means Commissioners who have been sent to foreign countries, as we know they have been sent.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not what he says.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is what I intend. I am willing to make all the alterations necessary in order to secure the information for which I ask.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have no doubt that the returns asked for by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), will prove to be a valuable addition to the ancient literature of Canada. Of course they will cost a large amount of money, as the return dates back to Confederation, which is more than twenty years, and no doubt it will cost about $100 a year to bring down that return. I am of the opinion that when that return comes down, it will not be a volume which we would care to have sent down to posterity at such a cost, unless it embraced something more than the hon. gentleman proposes, and I therefore move that the following words be added:—

4th. A detailed statement showing the purposes to which the amount received by each Minister of the Crown, High Commissioner or other Foreign Plenipotentiary was applied or disposed of, together with a statement in detail showing:—

1st. The names of all members of the House of Commons since Confederation.

2nd. The total amount received by each member as sessional indemnity, travelling expenses or for any other purpose.

3rd. The amount expended by each member while living in Ottawa and attending to his parliamentary duties; the names of the parties to whom any sum or sums were paid and the purposes for which paid.

4th. The amount expended by each member of the House of Commons in travelling to and from the Capital to attend to his parliamentary duties.

5th. The names of those who travelled on passes, and the name of the railway company issuing the same.

6th. The number of returns moved for by each member, the cost incurred in preparing each return, including the printing of the same and what was subsequently done in relation to each return.

7th. The number of times each member addressed the House, the length of time occupied in speaking, the cost to the country of each speech so made and the value thereof, computing the same on the basis of the length and cost of each Session.

8th. The number of motions and the name of the member making the same, other than for returns, and the disposition of such motion after being made.

9th. The number of votes given by each member and the number of times each member refrained from voting and the reasons therefor, showing the character and nature of each motion, the purposes for which made, and whether in each case that a member refrained from voting he had the consent of the House for so absenting himself.

10th. How the sum of $500 extra sessional indemnity granted in 1885 was expended by each member of the House for that year, and what proportion of it was paid to agricultural societies, subscription to church funds or other charitable purposes, as promised by certain members when accepting the same.

Mr. McMULLEN. Before you put the amendment I beg to say that my object in moving the resolution I have placed in your hands is simply to be in a position to show the people of this country what the Government has cost from the time of Confederation down to the present time. I have no desire to eliminate any Reform or Conservative Government, and I have asked for an entire return down to the present moment. I have not attempted to leave out the names of those of our friends who might possibly figure in that return as well as those on the opposite side of the House. Now, I think there is a feeling throughout the country generally that the Government of this Dominion is costing the people more than they can afford to pay. I am not myself in a position to give the information to my constituents with regard to the exact figures of expenses for the officers of the Crown from Confederation down to the present time, and I wish to be in a position to tell them the exact cost of the public service down to this time.

Mr. TAYLOR. You have got it all in the Public Accounts.

Mr. McMULLEN. If it is in the Public Accounts it will take a very long time to gather all the items out of the Public Accounts in order to find the information asked for in my resolution. It is evident that the hon. member who has moved this amendment wants to burke the information I am asking for, he wants to attach a tail to it that will make it utterly impossible for all the clerks now in the service of the House to furnish all that information at this Session, or next Session, or before a general election can take place. That is evidently his intention, but mine was an honest intention to give the people of this country information that they do not now possess, information that they have a right to have, and we have a right to see that they get. Now, we know perfectly well that there is a feeling throughout the country that the governmental machinery of this Dominion is altogether too cumbrous for the people to bear, and we believe that it is the duty of the members of this House, as well as the duty of the people outside this House, to secure a full statement of all the cost entailed upon the people by the Government of this Dominion; and if we can alter or change in any shape that machinery so as to reduce the cost, I think it is clearly our duty to do so.

Mr. GUILLET. There is every facility for obtaining this information in the Public Accounts, and the hon. member himself can, by looking up the proper page, find, under the proper headings, statements of expenses for the items he has mentioned, and the total cost of the civil government. There is no difficulty about it. He has the public records to show the people, and he can save all this expense to the country which his motion, if carried, would involve. He has full detailed statements in the Auditor General's Report, and in the Public Accounts, which were published yearly before the office of Auditor General was established. Therefore, I see no necessity for the expense this motion will entail.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I see that the amendment made by my hon. friend has attracted general attention, and the apparent approbation of the House. I think the amendment was meant to signify that there was no necessity for the resolution. As my hon. friend who has just spoken says, the hon. gentleman can get all this information for himself. To prepare the return he asks for will cause a great deal of expense without any necessity whatever. The hon. gentleman says there is a general feeling in the country that the expenses of government are too great. Well, one of the great portions of the cost of government is caused by the legislation of the country, and we must get the whole cost if we are to inform the people what the cost of federal government is, including legislation. A great portion of this amendment, as moved by my hon. friend, is a necessary sequence of the motion of the hon. gentleman. Perhaps the hon. member had better allow his motion to stand over, and I think the best way to dispose of it will be to move that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. LAURIER. I must say that I regret to see the course the Prime Minister has just taken in regard to this amendment. I must tell him that he is giving assistance to what I cannot regard otherwise than a frivolous lowering of the dignity of this House. This amendment is nothing else but a lowering of the dignity of this House. We can all take issue for or against the motion of my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen). It can be granted or it can be refused. Everybody may have his own view upon that, but why not treat it in a manly way? Why not consider it upon its merits, instead of attempting to throw ridicule upon the motion, which, after all, is properly put.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The motion in itself is ridiculous.

Mr. LAURIER. The First Minister did not say so in the first instance.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I thought so.

Mr. LAURIER. He only objected to the wording of it. I understood that the hon. gentleman's objection to the motion was confined to the wording of it. Certainly the hon gentleman is aware, and everybody is aware, that we have had commission after commission sent to foreign countries on one pretence or the other and have never obtained any result from such commissions. Under these circumstances, it would be fairer to the House and fairer to the hon gentleman, and more in keeping with the dignity of the House, if the First Minister had stated that he could not allow the motion to pass, for reasons given; but for the First Minister to permit such a frivolous amendment as that offered by the hon member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), to be submitted, and for the right hon gentleman to then move the adjournment of the debate, is to adopt a course against which I must protest, as one not in the best interests of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not so very easy for hon. members of this House to obtain from the Public Accounts of fifteen or twenty years the detailed information which the hon gentleman asks. It is a matter of some moment to the people of this country to know what sums of money have been expended on the various commissions for promoting foreign trade, what sums have been spent by the several members of the Government in their trips abroad, what sums have been spent by our High Commissioners and by other persons who have been entrusted by the Government with the task of carrying on more or less successfully, I am sorry to say less rather than more successfully, negotiations with foreign powers. If the First Minister thought any portion of the motion of my hon friend which was likely to entail a disproportionate expense, then it was quite within his right to oppose it, and ask my hon friend to modify it, so that the information could be got at a reasonable cost. But I must say I entirely agree with my hon friend beside me (Mr. Laurier) that the introduction of the amendment, many of the details of which it would be impossible to carry out, is not the way to treat this motion, and lowers the dignity of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon gentleman's motion had been confined to the subject mentioned by the hon gentleman who has just spoken, to ascertain the number of commissions, and the expense of those commissions, there would be no objection to it. But this motion covers every possible expense of almost every possible employé of twenty odd years, and was so absurd I could not help seeing that hon gentlemen on the other side of the House were laughing at the motion when it was moved by the hon member. The reason why I moved the adjournment of the debate was because I thought that before another day perhaps both motion and amendment might be dropped. It was with that object I moved the motion. No doubt the amendment is a sarcastic and ironical motion, but I think it was fully called for by the very absurd motion of the hon member.

Mr. LAURIER. If the right hon gentleman will advise the hon member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) to withdraw his amendment, I will suggest to my hon friend to let his motion stand; but, with the amendment now before the House, we cannot allow the debate to be adjourned.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think that will be fair. I will ask the mover of the amendment to withdraw it if the hon member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) will withdraw his motion and give notice of another similar to that suggested by the hon member for Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright).

Mr. LAURIER. I will appeal to the right hon gentleman's better nature. The hon gentleman is aware that very often motions are amended across the floor, and I understood the right hon gentleman was adopting that course when he drew attention to the expression "foreign ministers." This course was being followed a few moments ago. If the right hon gentleman had suggested that certain words be admitted, I should have asked my hon friend to agree to the suggestion; but the hon gentleman must admit that when such an amendment as that proposed by the hon member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) is offered, the debate cannot be adjourned on it, but it must be disposed of.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is perfectly clear that we cannot allow such a motion to stand over as an adjourned debate. The First Minister has himself stated that it is a sarcastic motion, one intended to cast ridicule on the original motion. The hon gentleman who moved the amendment has asked for information which it is absolutely impossible for the House to supply, information with regard to the motives which actuated members in receiving indemnity, how much money they expended in coming to Parliament and residing here. He will have to go to some of the graveyards to get the information which he seeks, and I do not think he will be successful in getting it even there. The House itself would be doing what my hon friend the leader of the Opposition, affirmed, it would be lowering its dignity by consenting to adjourn the debate upon a motion of that kind. The proper course for the First Minister to take would be to ask the hon member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) to withdraw his amendment, and then suggest to my hon friend what he considers objectionable portions of his motion; and I am sure that this side of the House would be disposed to advise my hon friend to accept any reasonable suggestion which might be offered. Surely, if my hon friend wishes information of this kind and seeks to obtain it in a form which will be authoritative, and which may be used by him in addressing his constituents, it is not unreasonable, although it might be obtained by searching through the Public Accounts for twenty years, to get the information in a formal way, at least every part that can be consistently given. The First Minister says there are some absurd things in the motion. Let the hon gentleman point out what is highly objectionable, and then let my hon friend amend his motion in accordance with the First Minister's suggestion, and there will be no difficulty. It would be a most improper course to take, and surely the First Minister cannot have considered the effect of the motion that he made, to adjourn the debate upon such an amendment as that proposed by the hon member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have explained the reason why I made the motion to adjourn the debate: Because I considered the motion as presented by the hon member as altogether unreasonable, and I still think the motion of my hon friend in amendment was quite justified by the fact of the original motion being altogether inadmissible. My object in making the motion was that the whole matter might be dropped, and the hon. gentleman have the opportunity to move another motion which would be acceptable to the House. The hon. member for Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) suggested a matter which is worthy of inquiry. It is now asked that the hon. member for Leeds should withdraw his amendment, and that we should help to amend the original resolution. It is not part of our business to amend the hon. gentleman's motion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You do it every day.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is no part of our business to do it. I shall object to the motion and to any amendment of it, because it was moved for no good purpose, and it would involve a great expense. Under the circumstances I ask leave to withdraw my motion.

Motion to adjourn debate withdrawn.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). As the leader of the Government requests me to withdraw the amendment, I ask leave of the House to withdraw it.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. LAURIER. Might I ask my hon. friend, under the circumstances, to withdraw his motion?

Mr. McMULLEN. I have no objection to comply with the request of my hon. leader. I may be permitted to add that I simply moved the resolution in order to get the information, and that is all I want.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend can bring it on again.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) can put it in another shape.

Mr. McMULLEN. All right.

Motion withdrawn.

MARINE AND EMIGRANT HOSPITAL, QUEBEC.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec) moved for :

Statement, in detail, showing the expenditure made in connection with the Marine and Emigrant Hospital at Quebec, since the 30th June, 1886, the said statement giving: 1. The sum voted each year by the Dominion Parliament. 2. The amount expended. 3. The number of sailors and emigrants taken in each year, and the total number of days that each one of these passed in the hospital. 4. The number of persons not being sailors or emigrants, taken into the said hospital, and the number of days that each one of this class passed there. 5. The total cost day by day of each patient. 6. The amount received by the Government for the patients who are neither emigrants nor sailors. 7. The amount received from the Sick Mariners' Fund under the Act 49 Vic., chap. 76, section 16.

Mr. TUPPER. I beg to ask the hon. gentleman whether he desires any special return other than what is contained in the annual report of the Department that has been laid on the Table of the House for the year. For instance, the information given in the precise form that the hon. gentleman asks now is contained in the annual report, which brings it down to the end of the fiscal year 1888. The same information up to July, 1889, is contained in the report now in print for this year and which will be shortly laid on the Table of the House. What I desire to know is whether the hon. gentleman wants the information to be taken from the reports themselves, or is the information contained in the reports in a form suitable to the hon. gentleman?

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). The object of my motion is to put those matters in detail before the House. The return I ask for is the very same which was made to this House a long time ago, and my object is to complete that information down to the latest date possible. A similar motion was made and in exactly the same words in 1887. I do not know what hon. gentleman moved the motion, but I have in my desk the return which was then made, and my object is to have that return completed down to the present date.

Mr. TUPPER. There can be no objection to the motion passing. The information was brought down in the annual report.

Motion agreed to.

CHARTERED BANKS AND LIQUIDATION.

Mr. HESSON moved for :

Return giving the names of all the Chartered Banks in Canada that have suspended payment, gone into liquidation, or become insolvent since Confederation, showing the amount of capital stock authorised, the amount of stock subscribed, the amount of stock paid up, the assets and liabilities of said Banks at the time of such suspension or failure, the nature of such assets and liabilities, the dates of said charters and the dates of forfeiture or relinquishment of such charters.

He said: I desire to ask the indulgence of the House while I make a few remarks on this subject, which, hon. gentlemen will observe, is a matter of very considerable importance. The House was advised at the opening of Parliament in His Excellency's speech that the subject would be brought under consideration this Session. I do not rise to make any remarks which would throw any reflection whatever upon the financial institutions that have been so admirably conducted by the directors and managers of the banks of the Dominion. I wish to state, in the presence of every gentleman in this House who may occupy a position of authority with reference to the great financial institutions of our country, that I have the highest admiration for the success they have achieved in the past. That there have been financial failures in Canada is well known to us all, and that some of these failures have brought serious consequences to many of our people is without doubt, but a crisis of that kind must necessarily arise in the trade and commerce of any country.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Thanks to the National Policy.

Mr. HESSON. My hon. friend suggests the National Policy. I would say to my hon. friend that if there is great evidence of prosperity and growth in Canada, it is due to the National Policy, and that such prosperity has been developed to a greater extent since the National Policy was introduced than during any period of our country's history. If I am compelled to draw attention to that matter, my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Landerkin) must be responsible for it. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is of some importance to the people of this country to know that the standing of our banks in Canada is worthy of the admiration and confidence of the people of this continent, and I believe that it is possible that the position of the banks to-day may be improved.

by the careful consideration and attention of the Government in the matter of renewal of their charters. I have no hesitation in making the statement that it is in the interests of all the people of Canada that the privilege hitherto granted to the banks of circulating their own promises to pay should not be renewed or continued for any great length of time. I am aware, Sir, that it is necessary to gradually introduce the system of national issue of notes which will be a legal tender everywhere in the Dominion. It will be a great convenience to the public if the difficulties which now arise from the interchange of provincial notes from hand to hand in different parts of the Dominion should be removed. We pride ourselves on being a great nation, but I conceive that we are not following the wisest policy in connection with our banking institutions if we do not remove the system by which a note good at par value in the Province in which it was issued is subject to a discount of perhaps 5 per cent. in another Province of the Dominion. This is not creditable to us. It brings the blush of shame to us when we cross to the American side to see that the notes of our banks having a high standing in Canada should be discounted in the United States. It is a fact known to every gentleman who has travelled in the United States that there is not a single issue of bank notes, excepting the Government legal tender notes, which are not subject to a discount of 5 per cent. in the United States, while we accept the greenbacks issued by their national government at par value. That is an indignity not only on our banks but on the country itself. A Government circulation in Canada would be equally acceptable to the Americans in our commercial intercourse with them, and it would prevent the difficulties arising in the case of people coming to this Province from New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island or British Columbia, and endeavoring to pass the bills of banks of their own locality, which they find refused, save at a discount, though the banks issuing them are on a perfectly solid basis. Now, the Government have issued something like $16,000,000 of legal tender notes. The banks have to-day locked up in their vaults about $9,000,000 of this issue, held as specie. How did they get this specie? In the regular course of trade; and when we add the reserve of specie which they now hold, amounting to $6,620,000, we find that they have altogether over $16,000,000 locked away in their vaults not earning a single penny for the directors or the shareholders of those institutions. I appeal to the judgment of any hon. gentleman in this House whether such a state of things is necessary. The circulation of the banks is often shortened by the conservative policy pursued by the directors in forecasting the future, which may bring some severe pressure upon those institutions, and make it impossible for them to leave their circulation at such a point as to meet the demands of trade, notwithstanding that their own vaults are full of gold and Dominion notes. They do that on a principle which we can all understand as perfectly right, but it does not serve the full wants of the country. If, instead of their own promises to pay, they had a circulation provided by the Government, there would be no danger of this circulation coming back upon them, and their being compelled to redeem it at an unfavorable moment in the condition of the trade of the country. I am satisfied that the banks themselves would be benefitted by this change. I cannot conceive why over $16,000,000 of specie and Dominion legal tender should be locked up in the vaults of the banks and withheld from the trade and business of the country. In addition, the banks hold other securities to very large amounts. They hold Dominion Government securities, debentures or Government stock, to the amount of $2,600,000; British provincial or foreign and colonial securities, not Canadian, to the amount of $5,546,000; loans, discounts or advances for which stock, bonds or debentures are held, not Canadian, to the amount of $13,250,000; and they hold loans of corporations, which are usually recognised in Canada as good securities, to the amount of $23,879,000. Here we have a total of $63,550,000 under the heads I have given of good securities locked up in the vaults of the banks of the country. Now, I cannot see that the banks would be placed at any disadvantage if required to gradually withdraw their circulation and gradually replace it with a Government issue in the shape of legal tender notes. It would be much more advantageous to the stockholders and directors of these banks to have their securities in the shape of Government stock, or other debentures bearing interest, earning something for them, than to have them lying in their vaults without earning a single penny. Therefore I contend that the banks are in a position, without the slightest inconvenience to their customers, without requiring to refuse a discount to any man worthy of receiving it, to replace the entire circulation of this country on a basis of legal tender notes issued by the Government, and to put in the hands of the Government the most satisfactory securities that could be desired by the people. It is all very well for the Journal of Commerce and other papers which usually view this question through the spectacles of bank directors and stockholders, to say that they want a flexible currency. Well, I say that we have in the legal tender notes the most flexible currency that we can desire. What are the facts? To provide for the trade and commerce of Canada, the banks have to-day in circulation about $35,000,000 of their promises to pay. The Government would have the benefit of that circulation, and would gain considerable from wear and tear. In the creation of a single plate for the whole currency of the country, the Government would also effect a great saving to the thirty-eight other institutions which now require to have their separate plates. We have no means of ascertaining what the wear and tear amounts to, but it is very considerable to-day, and yet it will scarcely pay the cost of the circulation to the banks. When we speak of a flexible currency, and the undesirability of renewing to the banks their charters with the privilege of circulating their own promises to pay, I would remark that they have been able to give discounts to the business men of Canada to the amount of $150,000,000 on a circulation of $35,000,000 of those promises—let us remember that for the privilege of enjoying that circulation they tie up gold securities to the amount of over $16,000,000. Now, it is of no use saying that the bank is the only means by which the country can obtain its gold. The bank has no means of creating gold.

They cannot manufacture gold; and I am satisfied that, if, instead of exporting, as we do now, the enormous amount of money required to settle our foreign interest and foreign balances—the debt was one to the people of Canada, with the trust which they have in the securities of the Dominion—we might keep in the country the amount of interest which we are now exporting every year in that way. For the past few years the Government have been receiving very large amounts from the depositors in the savings banks. We have now in the savings banks about $42,000,000. The Government has chosen to reduce the rate of interest to the depositors to 3½ per cent. Still that amounts to a very considerable sum, and that is paid out to the people of this country instead of to foreigners, and I think there is not an hon. gentleman but will say that a foreign indebtedness being turned to a home indebtedness would encourage the people of the country, while the Government would obtain the money at the lowest possible rate of interest, and at the same time encourage the people who have small savings to make. The deposits in the savings banks have grown within the past ten years from $9,000,000 to $42,000,000, and those are the savings of the people of Canada. If it were possible for the Government to realise what they desire for the amount required for expenditure on public works, and the public expenditure generally from the people of this country, would that not be better than to obtain it from abroad? Even since Confederation, without referring to the time before, if the Government had been in a position to obtain loans from the people of this country, instead of borrowing abroad, we would have saved for interest $120,000,000 which has been exported out of this country, would we not be in a better position than we are to-day? Think what that means. This may be in the form of the issue of bonds or the issue of stocks, but it is well known to every member of this House that we have to continue drawing upon the resources of this country to settle these foreign balances and foreign interest, thus impoverishing the country. The sooner Canada recognises the fact, that it will be better for our people to keep that money in our own country, the better. Our people have shown that they have faith in our institutions, and there is no doubt that the banks will not be injured by the adoption of such a system as this, because we know that now the weaker banks can be driven to the wall and crushed by the stronger banks. I am not saying anything against the banks of this country, and I do not think it is possible for anyone to cast any slur against the management of our banks. It is not for that purpose that I arise, but, speaking for my own constituency, which is a rural constituency, I say that ninety-nine out of one hundred—leaving out the proprietors and stockholders in the chartered banks—would say, Give us a national currency. The Government can very easily arrange the conditions with the banks on which this could be carried out. This has been done already to a certain extent, first in prohibiting the banks from issuing the bills as low as $1 and $2, and then in prohibiting them from issuing notes as low as $4. That was done without any injustice to the banks. Why should not the Government go further? That measure has been accepted by the people of this country, and they know that it is the best security they can have except the gold in their vaults, and I doubt if even that is as good. When this return comes down, perhaps I may have a chance to again address the House on the subject, but in the meantime I move this resolution.

Mr. CASEY. The motion just made by the hon. gentleman, coupled with his remarks, which were rather discursive, leads me to believe that the object of his motion and of his speech is to point out the necessity for a greater measure of security in our national currency. I think that is the general drift of his remarks. As I said, his speech was so discursive and dealt with so many points that I am not quite positive as to the exact means by which he proposed to give greater security to our currency. But I think that I did gather that, in his opinion, the Government should issue all the currency issued in the country. If I am mistaken in that interpretation of his opinion, I hope he will correct me. If that be his view, it is a matter deserving of very serious consideration, whether we should endorse his view or not, for it is possible to raise a very grave objection against the Government as the source of issue for the whole currency of the country. If the Government are allowed without limit, or even within very wide limits, to issue legal tender as a means of carrying on the business of the country, as a means of paying the obligations of the country, complications are very apt to arise. Governments have not the means of gauging the necessities of the country as well as the bankers have, they do not know, in fact, as well as the bankers, how much currency the country needs to carry on its business. They do not know to what extent the commerce of the country can be carried on, or is being carried on, by checks and other methods instead of currency as well as the bankers know it. So that if the issue of currency were left entirely in the hands of the Government, it is very easy to foresee that this sort of complication might arrive: The Government, having to make large payments, instead of having recourse to borrowing or other methods of making those payments, might simply put on the market a large issue of legal tender notes, which, of course, would be redeemable in gold, because I did not understand the hon. gentleman to propose an irredeemable currency. Well, the country being constantly flooded with a large issue of redeemable legal tender notes, if that issue happened to be in excess of the actual wants of the country for circulation, for purposes of currency, the result would be that very soon a large quantity of these notes would come back to the treasury for redemption, and it would be found that the Government, instead of obtaining any material advantage by the issue of this large amount of currency, would simply postpone for a comparatively short time the necessity of paying in gold, or the equivalent of gold, for the services they require. But, on the other hand, if my hon. friend only means that it is the duty of the Government to see that all public currency, which is issued as money in this country, is absolutely safe and is redeemable at any moment in gold, I am prepared to agree with him most heartily. I think it is the duty of every Government to see that no public currency is issued as money which is not redeemable in real money, that is to say, gold, at any moment. Of course, we know that at present, under the law giving note holders a first lien on the assets of banks, there it probably in every case, I may say certainly in every case, a sufficient ultimate security for the note holder in the assets of our Canadian banks; that is to say, that when banks fail and are finally wound up, it will be found that there are sufficient assets to cover all their notes. But in the meantime there will be necessarily a discount of the notes of that bank, and even if the time occupied in winding-up be very short, the man who has some of its currency in hand when the bank fails, will lose the discount if he has to use the notes immediately and is not able to hold them until the bank is wound up. I think it is, therefore, the duty of the Government to devise some scheme by which, no matter what may happen to the bank itself, the currency issued by a bank should remain of a definite value, an absolute par value. I am not, at present, going into a discussion of the various means by which this might be brought about; it is certain that we shall have another opportunity of doing so during the Session. But I wish to urge the general principle thus early in the Session, even before the Government's Bill on the subject is brought down, that it is the duty of the Government to take upon themselves any risk that there may be in connection with the currency. The notes of chartered banks pass from hand to hand without inspection. The poor man takes them on his wages, the average citizen, whether poor or rich, takes them for the most part without looking to see what bank has issued them. Now, I say that it is the duty of the Government of any country to see that any currency which is passed in this way, from hand to hand, without inspection, is absolutely safe, that if there be any risk in the matter, the country at large, and not the individual note holder, should take that risk. As I say, I hope to have another opportunity of presenting one or two proposals as to how this might be managed, and I shall not, therefore, do so now. But I am prepared to sustain my hon. friend or anybody else who takes it up, in the contention that nothing should issue as money in this country which is not absolutely as good as gold, which the Government does not guarantee to be as good as gold. My hon. friend from Perth (Mr. Hesson), in discussing the business of the banks, said that the banks could not produce any gold, that it was the exports which produced gold, and that—I took down his words—"there is where the wealth comes from." I understood him to mean that when we exported a surplus of products and got the balance in gold, that constituted the wealth of the country. That is the good old-fashioned argument, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the balance of trade. I certainly would have thought that my hon. friend, sitting, as he does, behind the Government of the day, and supporting that Government, would not have brought up that argument just now; for if it be true that the excess of exports over imports is the measure of the wealth of the country, if it be true that the amount of gold we import is the measure of our actual profits, then, Sir, the Government of the day have landed this country in a very sad financial condition, because for a long series of years, with one exception, our exports have been less than our imports, and we have imported less gold than we have exported, so that during the whole term of office of the present Government, with the exception of one year, we have been going to the dogs, according to the doctrines of the hon. member for Perth, and according to the doctrines of the school to which he belongs. In view of these facts, I am astonished that he should have brought up this argument. I do not believe, myself, that the test which he proposes to the people is the true one, but I am astonished that he should bring it up, and that he should cast upon his leaders the responsibility of the fact that we are apparently running behind from year to year in our account current with foreign countries. I do not think it is necessary to say anything more at the present time with regard to this matter, and I reserve a great deal of what I shall have to say for a later opportunity.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not going to enter into the somewhat abstruse questions which have been raised by my two hon. friends at this moment, at any rate; but it is a convenient opportunity of asking the hon. Minister of Finance whether he will not, at a very early date, lay before the House the proposals which the Government intend to make with respect to any modifications they may see fit to propose in the bank charters. I would suggest to him that these ought to be placed before the House, and before the country for a period of some weeks, before we are called upon to go on with the formal discussion, as no doubt the Government have maturely considered the subject and have made up their minds in regard to it. It has been referred to in the Speech from the Throne, and, therefore, we have reason to believe that the Government have made up their mind as to what they ought to do.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right in his suggestion that the Government have been giving a great deal of consideration to the matter, and in due course of time—and I hope it will not be at a very distant period—the Government will be in a position to lay before the House the outlines of their measure. In the meantime there is no objection to the present motion passing. The two hon. gentlemen who have spoken have, no doubt, aided in this direction at least, in directing the minds of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House to what, no doubt, will form the subject of a very important and intelligent discussion. I think that I can promise the hon. gentleman opposite that it will not be a very long period before the Government measure on this subject will be before the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I trust the Minister will be able to do so soon, because this is a question on which the country ought to have the fullest information for a period of some weeks before it is discussed in this House.

Mr. FOSTER. I might add that, before the measure is brought down, the opinion of the bankers will be obtained with regard to it, and they will have an opportunity to lay their views before the Government. They have held their meeting, and I have an appointment to meet a deputation from them on Saturday to discuss the proposed measure.

Motion agreed to.

ELECTORAL LISTS.

Mr. CASGRAIN moved for :

Return of all the expenses generally incurred to this day for the making of the Electoral Lists for the Dominion of Canada.

He said : This return can be prepared within a short time, as it will not involve a great amount of labor. The people of the country wish to know the cost of printing the Electoral List, and a fair estimate of the cost can now be made.

Motion agreed to.

REGISTERED LETTERS.

Mr. McMULLEN moved for :

Return showing the number of registered letters sent to the Dead Letter Office during the years 1887, 1888 and 1889, up to the 31st December last.

Mr. BOWELL. In the absence of the Postmaster General I may say that if the hon. gentleman will refer to the return laid on the Table by the Postmaster General he will find all the information asked in his motion. That return was laid on the Table to-day. The annual returns for each year contain all the information asked. We have no objection to bring down such a return if the hon. gentleman thinks he will obtain further information from it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am willing to take the information contained in the blue books up to the 30th June last, but I wish a return to cover the period from 30th June to 30th December last. There are clerks employed to do this kind of work, and if the members have to ferret out all the information from the blue books, they may spend all their time in doing so, and do nothing else.

Mr. BOWELL. I have no objection to the motion as amended, but I can assure the hon. gentleman that when I occupied a seat opposite I did precisely what he objects to do now. I have spent hours, and sometime half the night, in trying to find out what my opponents were doing.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do a great deal of that kind of work.

Motion agreed to.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Return showing, by years, the cost of printing the Ordinances and other official papers and publications in the French language, from the time of the passage of the North-West Territories Act of 1877. The number of copies of the Ordinances from time to time printed in said language. The number distributed, and the number remaining in stock.—(Mr. Denison, for Mr. McCarthy.)

Return giving a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures to 1st January, 1890, together with statement of the same for the half year ending 1st January, 1889.—(Sir Richard Cartwright.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ; and House adjourned at 4.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 24th January, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CONTROVERTED ELECTION.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honor to inform the House that I have received from the Registrar Mr. FOSTER, of the Supreme Court of Canada a certified copy of the judgment of the said court in the election appeal for the Electoral District of the County of Haldimand, by which the appeal was dismissed and the election declared void. In conformity with chapter 9, section 46, of the Revised Statutes, I have issued my warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 13) to amend the Act to incorporate the Alberta Railway and Coal Company.—(Mr. White, Cardwell.)

Bill (No. 14) respecting the Port Arthur, Duluth and Western Railway Company.—(Mr. Dawson.)

Bill (No. 15) to incorporate the Saskatchewan Colonisation Railway Company.—(Mr. McMullen.)

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DOYON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House to a fact which is personal to myself. The Empire published yesterday a paragraph couched in the following terms :—

“ ABSENT MEMBERS.—There are still a number of members of Parliament who have not yet reported at the House. Amongst them are the following—”

Among several names cited, I find my own and that of Mr. Ste. Marie, the member for Napierville. I do not desire to cast blame on this journal, which I suppose was badly informed ; but, nevertheless, I must indeed state, in justice to my colleague of Napierville as well as to myself, that we were here both of us since the opening of the Session. I would not have this false piece of news hawked about by all the press, seeing that it is of a nature to injure us in the eyes of our electors ; and if I might be so bold I would beg this newspaper to correct the statement.

PRIVATE BILLS—EXTENSION OF TIME.

Mr. BERGERON moved, That the time for receiving petitions for Private Bills be extended to Tuesday, the 11th February next, and the time for presenting Private Bills to Tuesday, the 18th February next, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Motion agreed to.

GREEN COVE BREAKWATER.

Mr. LOVITT asked, Whether the Government have received any tenders for repairing Green Cove Breakwater, County of Yarmouth? If so, have they accepted any tender? If not, is it the intention of the Government to make arrangements for repairing this breakwater as early as possible?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Tenders were received for repairing the Green Cove Breakwater in the County of Yarmouth. Those tenders are receiving the attention of the Government, and I hope in a short time that the proper one will be accepted. When I say the proper one, I mean the lowest, which is always accepted unless there are reasons to the contrary.

COPYRIGHT.

Mr. EDGAR asked, Whether the Copyright Amendment Act of 1889 has yet been brought into force by proclamation of the Governor General? Has any correspondence taken place between the Canadian and the Imperial Governments respecting the Copyright Amendment Act of 1889? Is the Government prepared to state to the House the substance or the result of such correspondence, or to lay it before the House at present?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Act has not yet been proclaimed. There has been some correspondence on the subject, and there is no objection to lay it upon the Table in a few days.

POSTAL SERVICE IN LOTBINIÈRE COUNTY.

Mr. RINFRET asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to supply an every day mail service to the Parish of St. Édouard (Rivière Boisclair Post Office), in the County of Lotbinière?

Mr. COLBY. In the absence of the Postmaster General, I beg to inform the hon. member that this matter is under the consideration of the Government.

TOBACCO SALES.

Mr. SMALL asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government during the present Session to amend the Inland Revenue Act, in so far as it relates to the sale of tobacco?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The subject is being considered, with a view to meet the wishes of the trade, if it can be done without prejudice to the revenue.

FISH-BREEDING ESTABLISHMENTS.

Mr. JONCAS asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to continue, according to the plan now followed, the creation of fish-breeding establishments? Or whether it is the intention of the Government either to increase or lessen their number?

Mr. TUPPER. It is the intention of the Government to continue, according to the plan now followed, the creation of fish-breeding establishments. The question of increasing their number is under consideration.

CATTLE DISEASE IN THE WESTERN STATES.

Mr. INNES asked, Has the Minister of Agriculture made himself acquainted with the cattle disease now prevalent in some of the Western States, and has he taken steps to prevent its introduction or spread in Canada?

Mr. CARLING. No report of any special cattle disease prevalent in the Western States has reached the Department of Agriculture, but the quarantine of ninety days to which cattle from the Western States are subject on crossing the Canadian frontier, is sufficient protection to prevent the introduction of any cattle disease into Canada.

CAUGHNAWAGA RESERVE QUARRIES.

Mr. DOYON asked, How much does the Government pay per square yard for the measuring of the stone in the quarries of the Caughnawaga Reserve? What is the name of the person employed in measuring this stone? Is this person engaged in any other public employment whatever in the said reserve?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Government pays 2½ cents per square yard for measuring the stone in the quarries of the Caughnawaga Reserve. The name of the measurer is Moïse Lefort. He is also employed as a constable on the reserve.

Mr. DOYON asked, What is the price per toise charged by the Government during the years 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, and 1889 against those persons who have worked the quarries on the Caughnawaga Reserve, in the County of Laprairie?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Government charged per toise during the years 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, and 1889, $1.50 for stone of large dimensions and $1 per toise for rubble.

Mr. DOYON asked, Whether the Government are prepared to lay on the Table of the House the report of the operations carried on by McLea Walbank in the Caughnawaga Reserve, in the County of Laprairie? If they are so prepared, when do they intend so to do? If they are not, what reason have they to offer?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is no objection to these papers being brought down.

RELIEF OF SAMUEL MAY.

Mr. DENISON moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 16) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of Samuel May. He said: It appears that some time ago the gentleman asking for this legislation bought a patent, which, in the usual course, should have run for fifteen years. It had only been extended for five years of the fifteen, and I believe it is customary to extend a patent for successive terms of five years. At the end of five years he should have paid a small fee and had the patent renewed for a further term of five years, but through some oversight, or negligence, or forgetfulness, or want of knowledge of the law, he omitted to do this, and the Bill is to put him in the position he would have occupied if he had made his usual payment at the time. It is customary to give a patent fifteen years, and through this oversight he has been deprived of a valuable right.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

STEAMSHIP LINE BETWEEN VANCOUVER AND JAPAN.

Mr. PRIOR moved for:

Copies of all correspondence between the Dominion Government and the Imperial Government, and between the Dominion Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in regard to the granting of a subsidy to the latter company for lines of steamships to run between Vancouver, B.C., and Japan and Australia.

He said: My object in moving this Address is to find out, if possible, when the correspondence I am asking for is brought down, who is responsible for the state of affairs now existing on the Pacific coast in regard to the calling of the China and Japan steamers at the port of Victoria. It seems to me an extraordinary thing, as it must seem to any other hon. member who knows the geography of that part of the country, that a large subsidy has been granted by this Government to a company to run steamers from the port of Vancouver to China and Japan, and that nothing was inserted in the charter in regard to their calling at the port of Victoria, the capital of British Columbia. It seems to me that, as that port pays a very large amount into the public treasury—over a million dollars was paid for the last twelve months in duties and internal revenue—at the very least a clause ought to have been put into the charter making it imperative on the company who run these steamers to call on the outward and inward passage at the port of Victoria, especially as they go within a very short distance of that port already and will do so as long as they run. At the present time they go direct to Vancouver city on the mainland, and according to the best nautical authorities it would not require more than two hours or two hours and a half for them to call at Victoria. I may say that when the Imperial agent—Sir Arthur Blackwood, I think—was out in Victoria, he told several residents that he saw no objection to the vessels calling there. I was also informed by the right hon. leader of the Government that he had requested Sir Charles Tupper to interview the Imperial Government in regard to this matter, and that Sir Charles had done his best; and I wish to find out on behalf of my constituents why that has not been done, whether it is the fault of the Imperial Government or of the Dominion Government; and what is the cause that a clause was not inserted making it imperative on the company to call at Victoria.

Motion agreed to.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. GORDON moved for :

Return showing: 1st. The total number of Chinese immigrants who have arrived in the Dominion of Canada from the 31st March, 1887, to the 31st December, 1889, specifying the ports at which such immigrants have arrived. 2nd. The amount of fees or duties collected from Chinese immigrants during the same period. 3rd. The number of certificates of residence that have been issued to Chinese, as provided for under section 13 of the Act to restrict and regulate Chinese immigration into Canada, since the passage of the Act. 4th. The number of Chinese who have been detected in attempting to land in Canada upon fraudulent certificates and who were prevented by the courts from doing so. 5th. Copies of all correspondence having reference to the removal from office of Mr. Vroman alias Mr. Gardner, and also all correspondence having reference to the appointment of a Chinaman to the position of interpreter at the port of Vancouver, in the place of the said Mr. Gardner. 6th. The number of Chinese who have passed through Canada in bond for passage from Vancouver by steamer to China, and the regulations that have been prescribed for placing them securely on board said steamers to prevent their disembarkation into Canada. 7th. The total number of Chinese other than those in bond who left Canada during the first mentioned period, and the number of return certificates that have been issued.

He said: It is not my intention at the present time to detain the House by discussing the Chinese question, my object being chiefly to get certain returns which, so far, I have been unable to find in the Trade and Navigation Returns. Perhaps my inability may have arisen from an attack of "La Grippe," but I have not the time to search for that information. My desire is to have the whole returns in a consolidated form, because, as this House is well aware, the question of Chinese immigration is a very important one to British Columbia.

Mr. BOWELL. I have no objection to bring down the return asked by the hon. member. I should like, however, to call his attention to the fact that, as regards the fifth question, Mr. Vroman alias Mr. Gardner never was an interpreter for the port of Vancouver, and, consequently, no such successor has ever been appointed. It would be impossible to answer the seventh question, because we have no record of those who smuggled themselves into the country and left it in the same way; but the total number of certificates granted can be brought down. We will bring down all the information on the subject in the possession of the Department.

Mr. PRIOR.

Motion agreed to.

THE ROYAL PREROGATIVE.

Order of the House for :

"Copies of all correspondence between the Canadian and the Imperial Governments relating to the provisions of the Dominion statute 51 Victoria, chapter 43, whereby it was provided that, notwithstanding any Royal prerogative, no appeal shall be brought in criminal cases from Canadian courts to the Imperial Privy Council," being read,

Mr. EDGAR. The question involved in the papers which are traversed in this motion is one of very considerable importance. It involves the question of the right of this Parliament to regulate, restrict, and indeed to abrogate the Royal Prerogative in cases where this Parliament had legislative powers to deal with the matters in question. It appears that, in the closing days of last Session, a return was laid on the Table of the House which contained an Order in Council, with a very full and able report from the Minister of Justice upon the subject of the legality of this Act, or at least on the subject raised by the Home Government as to the propriety of this Parliament passing such an Act. I had not seen that return when I placed this motion on the Notice paper. I am very glad to be able to concur in the position taken by the Minister of Justice in that very able paper. In it he sustains very skillfully and firmly the right of Canada to legislate even questions involving the Prerogative of the Crown. He succeeded, as the papers show, in his contention, just as I think all Canadian statesmen have succeeded, and will always succeed, when they respectfully and firmly insist before the Imperial Government that Canada shall have the fullest right to self-government in all respects. I hope the papers which the Minister of Justice has to-day promised to lay before the House very soon, on the question which has arisen between Canada and the Imperial Government as to the right of Canada to legislate on the subject of copyright, will also show that the Minister has sustained the same sturdy Canadian ground, and has been equally successful. I beg to withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

FRESH BEEF IMPORTATIONS.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland) moved for :

Return showing the quantity of fresh beef imported into Canada from the United States during the fiscal year ending 30th June last, and also for six months ending 31st December last, distinguishing by Provinces.

He said: The reason I moved this motion is that during last year fresh beef was brought into the Maritime Provinces from the United States in such very large quantities as to affect the interests of our farmers in that respect. I have turned to the Trade and Navigation Returns, but I cannot find any information as to the extent of the fresh beef imports. Under the general head of beef appears to be included all beef imported, whether in barrels salted or in quarters or carcasses fresh. An examination of the returns of some years past show that the imports of beef have very largely increased. I find that in 1880 we imported into New Brunswick and Nova Scotia only 364,148 lbs. of beef for home consumption. There was a small increase in that quantity in each year until 1886, when it reached 1,173,325 lbs. Since that time it has increased very rapidly indeed. In 1887 the imports reached 1,520,337 lbs.; 1888, 2,507,335 lbs.; 1889, 3,210,351 lbs., showing an increase during last year of 1,200,000 lbs. I believe this very large increase during last year is due to the fact of the large import of fresh meat from the United States. It will, no doubt, seem strange to many members of the House that in a country like the Dominion of Canada, from which we export to Great Britain beef cattle to the amount of nearly six millions of dollars, that there should be any import of meat from the United States; and an examination of the facts connected with this trade would, I think, interest the members of this House, and show to them that the importation of meat is largely due to the mode in which this business is carried on. The large exporters in Chicago and other points of the west ship the meat in large quantities in refrigerator cars. They have large buildings specially prepared for storing this meat, from which they distribute it to those local markets as from time to time they require it, and during the last few years they have been pushing this business in the Maritime Provinces to a greater extent than before. Now, every one acquainted with the matter knows that the cost of shipping live stock a distance of 100 or 150 miles is fully equal to one-half cent per pound on the dressed weight. I venture the assertion, although I have not the figures here, that these large exporters are able to ship their dead meat to the Maritime Provinces at a cost which is not in excess of what farmers 150 miles away from our markets would have to pay. So far as the cost of transportation is concerned, I believe that at the present time the farmers of Illinois and Wisconsin have practically as cheap access to our markets as our own farmers who are only 100 or 150 miles away. I notice a motion on the paper asking for an increase of duty on fresh meat and also pork and bacon, and I suppose this will come up some other day for discussion. The result of our experience for the past year in the Maritime Provinces has certainly been in favor of an increase of duty upon fresh meat; and whatever may be the action of the Government in respect to other meats, I trust, so far as this is concerned, that they will increase the duty to at least double what it is at present.

Mr. BOWELL. I may inform the hon. gentleman, as he is aware, no doubt, that he cannot find anything in the Trade and Navigation Returns which would indicate the quantity of fresh meat brought into the country. The returns, which are made from the different ports, include all classes of meats under a general heading, whether they be salted or fresh, and hence it would be impossible for the Department to give the information that he seeks. Under the circumstances, I presume that the hon. gentleman will withdraw the motion.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). If the information cannot be obtained I will withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Return of all papers and correspondence between the Ontario Manufacturers' Association and the Dominion Government, during the years 1883, 1884 and 1885, on the subject of proposed legislation relating to factories.—(Mr. Edgar.)

Return showing the total amount of expenditure to date on the Government Printing Bureau building, the total expenditure to date on type, presses, and all other printing and binding machinery and material placed in the Bureau; also the total amount paid in salaries and wages to officers and employes in the Bureau, from the 1st July, 1889, to 1st January, 1890.—(Mr. Innes.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 3.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 27th January, 1889.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PATENT ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. CARLING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 17) to amend the Patent Act. He said: The primary object of the amendments with respect to the first two of these Bills, the Patent Amendment and the Trade Marks Amendment, is to remove the jurisdiction for the trial of cases arising under them as they at present stand, from the Minister of Agriculture or his deputy, to the courts. The jurisdiction in the three Bills is made uniform. It is placed in the Exchequer Court concurrently with the ordinary courts having jurisdiction in such cases.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 18) to amend the Act respecting Trade Marks and Industrial Designs.—(Mr. Carling.)

Bill (No. 19) to amend the Copyright Act.—(Mr. Carling.)

REPORT.

Report of the Auditor General on Appropriation Accounts, for the year ended 30th June, 1889.—(Mr. Foster.)

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DOYON. (Translation.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, Mr. Speaker, I again wish to draw the attention of the House to a matter personal to myself. On Friday last, I drew the attention of the House to an article which appeared in the Empire, stating that I had not yet taken my seat. With a strict regard to truth, I must say that I was here since the opening of the Session. This is what, according to the Hansard, I then said:—

“Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the House to a fact which is personal to myself. The Empire of yesterday—”

That is to say, the Empire of the 23rd instant—“has published a paragraph couched in the following terms:

“ABSENT MEMBERS.—There are still a number of members of Parliament who have not yet reported at the House. Amongst them are the following:

“And among several names given, are to be found my own, and that of Mr. Ste. Marie, the member for Napierville. I do not wish to cast blame upon the journal which has published this piece of intelligence, because I think it has been misinformed; but I must indeed state in justice to my colleague of Napierville as well as to myself, that we were here both of us since the beginning of the session. I have no wish that this false intelligence should be bandied about by the press, inasmuch as it is of a nature to injure us in the minds of the electors; and if I so far could presume, I would ask this newspaper to make this correction.”

Well, Mr. Speaker, this is the correction made by the Empire after having published this false intelligence:

“MR. DOYON'S EXPLANATION.—Mr. Doyon, M.P., rose to a question of privilege to-day. The Empire had stated yesterday that he had not arrived at Ottawa. This was a mistake, as he has been here from the beginning of the Session. He made this explanation, as otherwise his constituents would think he had been on a ‘bum.’ This explanation was made in French and evoked much laughter from the French members.”

Well, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the House whether if there are newspaper representatives who conduct themselves like “bummers” in the streets of Ottawa, they should not be compelled to act as gentlemen in this House. I owe it to myself and to my constituents to make myself respected here. If those young persons do not know how to behave in the streets of Ottawa, and are accustomed to haunt the lowest drinking dives, and if they have not the decency to conduct themselves like gentlemen when they are in the deliberative assembly of the Dominion, I insist that the orders be put in force and that they be expelled. There is no need for corrections made in such spirit. There are many among those people, whom I might call “bummers,” did I but know their names.

BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. LAURIER. I wish to call the attention of the Government to the fact that the name of Mr. Edwards does not appear on the Committee on Banking and Commerce. I think it should go on.

Mr. BOWELL. I remember distinctly seeing the name written upon the list. I suppose it was left out by some inadvertence.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I move that the name of Mr. Edwards be placed on the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 13) to amend the Act to incorporate the Alberta Railway and Coal Company.—(Mr. Shanly.)

Bill (No. 14) respecting the Port Arthur, Duluth and Western Railway Company.—(Mr. Dawson.)

Bill (No. 15) to incorporate the Saskatchewan Colonisation Railway Company.—(Mr. Watson.)

POST OFFICE AT ST. EDMOND.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL asked, Whether the Government have received a petition from the inhabitants of St. Edmond, in the County of Berthier, Mr. DOYON.

asking for the erection of a post office in the said parish of St. Edmond? If they have received it, do the Government intend to grant the prayer of the petition, and when? If not, why not?

Mr. HAGGART. There is no trace of any such application in the department.

MONTREAL HARBOR POLICE.

Mr. CURRAN asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to ask Parliament for a gratuity to the sergeants and members of the Government Harbor Police Force, lately disbanded at Montreal?

Mr. TUPPER. This question is now receiving the consideration of the Government.

WHARF AT STE. ANNE DE LA POCATIÈRE.

Mr. DESSAINT (Translation.) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to repair and bring to completion the wharf at Ste. Anne de la Pocatière, in the County of Kamouraska, as prayed for in a petition from the Hon. Mr. Elisée Dionne and others, which petition was handed over to the Department of Public Works, more than a year ago, through the intervention of the member for Kamouraska?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This question has not yet been decided.

POST OFFICE AT PALMER ROAD CHAPEL.

Mr. PERRY asked, Whether a post office has been established at or near the Palmer Road Chapel, Prince County, Prince Edward Island, as promised by the Postmaster General? If so, when; and who is postmaster?

Mr. HAGGART. There has been no post office opened at Palmer Road Chapel.

MR. RUFUS STEPHENSON.

Mr. BRIEN asked, Whether Rufus Stephenson, late Inspector of Colonisation Companies, has been in the employ of the Government since June 30th, 1889? If so, what were his duties, what his salary, and amount of money paid either as salary or expenses, since that time?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Rufus Stephenson has not been employed by the Government since June 30th, 1889.

CATTLE QUARANTINE STATIONS.

Mr. POPE asked, Is it the intention of the Government to establish a cattle quarantine station on the frontier at some inland port in the Province of Ontario or Quebec? If not, why not?

Mr. CARLING. It is not the intention to establish a cattle quarantine station on the frontier at any inland port, either in the Province of Ontario or Quebec. The reason “why not” is: that the Government find it impossible to do so, without imperiling the present advantageous position between the Dominion and United Kingdom, in virtue of which Canadian farmers can send their store and fat cattle to Great Britain without restriction. It may become necessary, in consequence of a recent intimation received from the Imperial Government, to suspend for a time all importations of cattle into Canada from countries in which the disease of pleuro-pneumonia is known to exist, as a condition of continuing to enjoy exemption from being placed on the schedule list, which would imply immediate slaughter on the Foreign Animals' Wharf immediately on arrival.

POST OFFICE AT OYSTER PONDS.

Mr. KIRK moved for :

Copies of all petitions and correspondence with the Postmaster General or other officer of the Government relative to re-opening a post office at Oyster Ponds, in the County of Guysborough; and also, copy of a report or reports of the Post Office Inspector at Halifax thereon or in relation thereto.

He said : Oyster Ponds is the centre of a district ten miles in extent. A post office had been in existence for a number of years at that place, but five or six years ago, or perhaps longer, the office was closed and has remained closed ever since. More than a year ago I applied to the Postmaster General to have a postmaster appointed there and the office re-opened. I make the present motion to ascertain whether the hon. gentleman is going to carry out the request I made at that time.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman desires to know simply whether the post office has been re-opened or not. It was re-opened on the 23rd of last month, and Geo. G. Kerr was appointed postmaster.

Mr. KIRK. That will be news to the people in that district. Before leaving on the 14th inst. I saw a municipal councillor of the district, who lives near Mr. Kerr, of whom the hon. gentleman spoke, and he did not know there was a post office there. I am glad to know from the Postmaster General that a post office is to be open there and Mr. Kerr appointed.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman has misunderstood me. I said that the post office was ordered to be opened there on the 23rd inst. and that Mr. Kerr had been appointed postmaster.

Mr. KIRK. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. LANDERKIN. By reason of action taken last Session, postmasters in rural districts have had their salaries reduced. I have heard a good many complaints in regard to this matter. Hon. members are well aware that the salaries of country postmasters are not very great, and I understand that, under the operation of the Bill passed last Session, the salaries of postmasters in many small places have been reduced. At some places, I understand, the postmasters have refused to keep the offices on the terms proposed by the Department, and consequently some offices have been closed. If there is any class of officials that is not fairly used by the Government, it is that of country postmasters. Last year I complained in regard to the salaries they were receiving, and I stated that I had found the average salaries of postmasters in rural parts of my riding was $11.50 a year. It is absurd to expect that a post office will be kept open every day when such a salary is paid, especially when, under the operation of the same Bill, the Government took power to give larger salaries to some postmasters in cities who already have large salaries, and at the same time took away from the country postmasters the salaries they formerly enjoyed. This is a considerable hardship. I wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to the matter, so that in future he will deal fairly, at all events, with country postmasters, many of whom keep post offices more in the interest of the district than in their own interests.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. There was no Act passed last Session with respect to this matter. The mode of calculating the pay has remained the same for a number of years, and it is upon that principle country postmasters are still paid.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The fact which I have spoken of is borne out by matters which are within my own knowledge, and which have come under my own observation. Some officers have had their very small salaries reduced, and, I am told, that if they operated under the Act as formerly existing, this would not have occurred. This may be, however, in keeping with the general policy of the Government, which is reducing the business of the country all over the Dominion.

Motion withdrawn.

POST OFFICE AT LITTLE DOVER.

Mr. KIRK moved for :

Copy of all petitions and correspondence with the Postmaster General, or other officer of the Government, relative to establishing a post office at Little Dover, in the County of Guysborough, and mail communication to connect it with Cape Canso, and also a copy of the report of the Inspector at Halifax thereon.

He said : Little Dover is a fishing village situated about five miles, or, perhaps, a little more, from the town of Cape Canso, and, up to the present time, the inhabitants of that village have had no post office nor any postal communication whatever. About twelve months ago I applied to the Postmaster General to establish a post office in connection with the office at Cape Canso, but no post office has as yet been established there. There are about thirty-seven families at this village, and they have to journey to Cape Canso to get their mail matter. A post office established there would not only serve the thirty-seven families who are resident there, but it would also be a great convenience to those who come from other sections of the country to fish in Little Dover during the summer season. I, therefore, wish to enquire from the Postmaster General, through this motion, whether he intends to establish this post office for the convenience of the residents of this place as well as for the convenience of the summer visitors?

Mr. HAGGART. I ordered an enquiry to be made into the establishment of a post office at Little Dover or Dover Bay, and I found that the revenue from a post office established there would be likely $15 and the cost of service $20. As the receipts so nearly balanced the expenditure, I ordered the post office to be established there.

Mr. KIRK. After the satisfactory answer given by the Postmaster General, there is no necessity for passing the motion, and I beg to withdraw it.

Motion withdrawn.

POST OFFICE AT CORINTH.

Mr. LANDERKIN. While on this subject, I might bring another matter to the attention of the Postmaster General. Some two or three years ago, when the present Minister of Agriculture was Postmaster General, he wrote a letter informing the people of the Township of Bentinck, at a place called Corinth, that a post office would be opened there. Up to this time the pledge of the hon. Minister has not been redeemed, and the office has not been opened, although the people are still anxious to have the office established. I brought the matter to the attention of the present Postmaster General last Session, not only in the House, but I also spoke to him outside the House, and I was informed by him that he would give this matter his attention, and I supposed he would carry out the pledge of the former Postmaster General. I draw his attention again to the fact that the office has not yet been opened, as I wish the responsibility of failing to carry out the pledge given the people should rest upon the shoulders of the Government, for I do not wish to be blamed if the ministerial pledges are not kept.

THE JESUITS' ESTATES ACT.

Mr. O'BRIEN moved :

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will be pleased to lay before the House, copies of the reports or opinions of the Law Officers of the Crown relating to the Act passed by the Legislature of the Province of Quebec, intitled: "An Act for the settlement of the Jesuits' Estates," and also copies of the case or cases or other documents or reports submitted to the said Law Officers, or to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, in relation to the said Act, and upon which the said opinions were obtained, and also all the despatches and correspondence in reference thereto.

He said : This motion, Mr. Speaker, is intended to obtain from the Government some information with reference to the terms, or the conditions and circumstances, under which the opinions of the law officers of the Crown, with reference to the constitutionality of the Jesuits' Estates Bill, were obtained. It is obvious that the value of that opinion must largely depend upon the conditions on which the case was presented; upon any correspondence which accompanied the Bill, and upon all the attendant circumstances. This is especially necessary, because the opinions themselves are so worded that they may be confined within the most technical and narrow sense, or else they may embrace the widest and most general sense. That can only be decided when we know the conditions under which these opinions were obtained. I want to know whether any case was presented by the hon. Minister of Justice or by anyone on behalf of the Government, and whether the Bill itself was sent or what documents accompanied it. I think it is but justice to the Government, who presented this as so conclusive and so authoritative an opinion that no appeal could possibly prevail with regard to it, and I think it is also in justice to those who were called on to accept that opinion, that we should have this information. I have only further to say, Mr. Speaker, that I think it rather unfortunate that when the Government found it necessary to fortify themselves with this opinion, after their very positive declaration of their own confidence in the course they had taken, that they did not do what a great many of their supporters wished them to do, and submit the case to some legal tribunal where it could fairly and manfully be fought out, and where both sides of the case could be presented. Had that been done, a great deal of ill-feeling and irritation would possibly have been prevented, and public opinion, instead of being intensified and aggravated, would be satisfied and calmed. However, the Government did not choose to take this course, and I think we have therefore the right to ask for the information which is called for in the resolution which I have read.

Motion agreed to.

LOYALTY TO HER MAJESTY.

On the Order :

Address to Her Majesty, declaring the desire of the Commons of Canada, in their own name and in behalf of the people whom they represent, to renew the expression of their unswerving loyalty and devotion to Her Majesty's person and Government; &c.—(Mr. Mulock.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would ask my hon. friend to let that stand over until I have an opportunity of conversation with him.

Motion allowed to stand.

TIGNISH BREAKWATER.

Mr. PERRY moved for :

Statement, in detail, showing the expenditure made in connection with repairs to Tignish breakwater, Prince Edward Island, during 1889; the date of commencement of work, and when completed; the name of party in charge of work.

He said : I desire to say a few words in explanation of the reason why I make this motion. It will be remembered that, last year, I informed the Minister of Public Works that a great deal of money spent on the Tignish and other breakwaters in Prince County found its way into the pockets of private individuals instead of being expended on the works themselves. I informed him that a gentleman was acting there on behalf of the Government, buying material and trying to go on with the work at the wrong season of the year. The Minister's answer to me was that he knew nothing at all about it; yet it was impossible for me to believe that that gentleman could be going on with the work without having direct instructions from the head of the department. On returning home I found that he was still in charge. The expenditure there may have been in the vicinity of $1,000; I believe this gentleman kept the work going for over three months, so that, at the rate of $3 a day, he would have drawn about one-third of all the money expended; and all this was done in order that the boys of two or three friends about the place should receive employment, to the exclusion of other men who were able to earn their wages. The whole of that work should have been done in a month or six weeks, but it was delayed in order that this partisan friend should get $300 or $400 of the money, whereas less than $100 would have been quite sufficient for the superintendence of the work. I wish also to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the fact that at least half-a-dozen gentlemen who carried on the work there turned the tower of the Tignish lighthouse into a cooking house. I say it is wrong that the public lighthouses of this country, which are for the protection of the lives of mariners and fishermen, should be used in this way. I trust that the Minister of Public Works knows a great deal more of what has been done during the season of 1889 in connection with the breakwater at Tignish than he did last year. Last year he said he knew nothing at all about it. He did not know that Mr. Thomas Bernard was appointed inspector of the work. He said that in due time a clerk of the Government would be appointed to take charge of the work, while at the same time Mr. Bernard was in charge. I asked my question on the 10th of April, and on the 12th the Minister made these remarks; and I am aware that the work had commenced late in March or early in April. I trust that these papers will be brought down in good time, in order that the House may be put in possession of all the facts.

Motion agreed to.

KAMOURASKA WHARF.

Mr. DESSAINT (Translation) moved for :

Copies of the accounts connected with the building of a wharf at Kamouraska, in the Province of Quebec, made up during the course of the year 1889.

He said : Before placing this motion in your hands, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make some remarks in its support. It is not a declaration of war which I am going to make on the Government, and I am sure that they will take in good part the few words I am going to utter. In 1886, I think, the Dominion Government, at the request of Mr. Blondeau, gave orders for the building of a wharf at Kamouraska. In ordering the construction of this wharf the Government naturally thought that it was necessary, indispensable in fact; and I must state that when my predecessor made this request, he did it not only in the interests of his county, but in the interests of the country in general. Therefore, so far from blaming the Government for having taken action in this matter, I think that they rather deserve to be congratulated thereon. In the autumn of 1886, the Government caused certain works to be constructed, but unfortunately at a too advanced time of the season, for the works were not able to be finished and the ice demolished them in part during the course of the winter. The consequence was that from 1886 to 1889 we remained without any wharf. They were obliged to break up the new wharf and pile the wood on the old one. In this way for three years we were in a worse position than before. The old wharf was encumbered by pieces of timber belonging to the remains of the wharf begun by the Government; and the stone which was used to fill up this wharf remained on the site, so that at the end of the Taché wharf was found an immense mole of stone from eight to ten feet in height and more than one hundred feet in length. This obstacle made the mooring to the wharf almost impossible; and placed the harbor in a most dangerous condition for navigation. In fact several vessels in the autumn storms chanced to be thrown upon this mole of rock and suffered damage to a greater or less extent. In the month of November, 1888, I think, three sailors were shipwrecked there and nearly lost their lives. Captain Belanger, his brother and a sailor almost lost their lives on that spot. In going ashore from their schooner with their boat alongside—it was during a dark night—their boat capsized on this reef and they were barely able to gain the shore by swimming, driven onwards by the surf which pushed them to the strand. Unfortunately for the Government, they were three of their political friends who thus narrowly escaped with their lives, owing to the negligence and want of foresight of the Government, but happily for them Providence saved them. I thought it my duty as member for Kamouraska to bring these facts to the knowledge of the Minister of Public Works. I must say to his credit that after the facts had been made clear to him, the hon. Minister took them into consideration, and did what was right, as it was his duty to do. I am not addressing myself to him in order to curry favor. I have no right to it, because I am not a supporter of the Government; but I speak in the interests of the public. Last year, the hon. Minister ordered the building of the works anew; a portion of the works as planned was carried out; and I must say that this time they have been constructed in a practical manner, and the work done is in accordance with the requirements of the situation. But this is not all,—only a beginning of the wharf has been made. The wharf as determined upon was to be two hundred feet in length, and to end in the form of a "T". Well, the portion now completed may be about one hundred feet in length; and the wharf as planned was to have at least two hundred feet. I have no doubt that, having regard to circumstances and the needs of navigation in this quarter, the hon. the Minister of Public Works will take again this question into his serious consideration, and will complete the works as contemplated according to the plans furnished by the department. I have the greater excuse for making the request I have done, inasmuch as the design of the Government was to build the works in the manner I have just indicated. When the Government thought it good to order the construction of these works, it was because there was need of them, for there is truly a considerable trade carried on at Kamouraska. Navigation opens early with us; and several days before it is open at Quebec, we have twelve or fifteen schooners in our port. The county of Kamouraska is essentially an agricultural one, which produces in abundance hay, oats and other grain which are exchanged with the people of the county of Charlevoix for cord wood, the principal article of commerce of the latter. At all times there has been quite a trade carried on between the north shore and the south shore, and I would venture to say that the harbor of Kamouraska is not only a harbor of refuge for the inland navigation, but that it is perhaps the most important harbor as regard local traffic on the lower part of the river, with the exception of that of Fraserville. Such being the facts, I say that the Government are right in continuing the work begun; and I will add that they should carry on these constructions by contract and not by day work, as has been done in the past. I am persuaded, and I think the hon. the Minister of Public Works, who has had more experience than I have in such matters, will admit that if these works were done by contract the Government would save nearly 50 per cent. I think, seeing how the case stands, the Government would encourage inland navigation by the completion of these works. We should not only protect ocean trade; we ought also to encourage inland navigation, and protect the poor sailors who are engaged in so laborious an occupation, and earn their livelihood at the price of so much wretchedness and sacrifice. I am persuaded that if the Government would give themselves the trouble to send to these parts an engineer who would ascertain the needs of the locality, instead of relying on a person who makes out the plans in his office, I am persuaded, I repeat, that the hon. Minister would order not only the lengthening of the wharf he has commenced, but that he would also cause to be made a pier at Ile Brulée, which lies opposite to Kamouraska; which would allow the Saguenay Company's steamboats to run a regular line between Kamouraska, Malbaie and Quebec. I am persuaded that all the facts which I have brought out will be substantiated by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Cimon), who is conversant with the considerable trade carried on between the county of Charlevoix, which he represents, and the county of Kamouraska. I venture to hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Government will take this matter into its serious consideration, and that they will complete the works of which I have just spoken.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) In reply to the hon. member, I must say, in the first place, that there is no objection to the granting of his motion. No one can find fault with either the shape or the manner in which the hon. member has made his motion in this House. As to the contracts, of which he spoke, as a general rule it is better to ask for tenders and to allot the contracts according to the tenders; but there are circumstances where it is not preferable, or, I might say, where it is not possible to ask for tenders. For example, when the case in point is a portion of work which is badly built, or is old; or, again, when the matter is the raising of work which has fallen, it is always difficult to furnish specifications sufficiently accurate for a contractor to make a tender and not lose money by it; or, again, he will ask for too large a sum of money. In cases such as these the Department of Public Works prefers to give out its work by day-work. As to an extension, of which the hon. member speaks, if the Government decide to carry out this piece of work, I am persuaded that it will be better to have it done by contract than by day-work.

Motion agreed to.

AMERICAN FREIGHT IN BOND.

Mr. LAURIER moved for :

Copies of all Orders in Council or Departmental Orders prohibiting American vessels from carrying bonded freight from American ports to Victoria, B. C., or any other Canadian port, and copies of all Orders in Council or departmental orders revoking the same.

Mr. BOWELL. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman, if he desires to obtain all the information—as I have no doubt he does—that he should add: “and the correspondence connected therewith.” I think the correspondence should accompany the departmental orders issued, though I may say that it would be impossible for me at present to bring down all that correspondence. I have received important letters in connection with the matter this morning, but I will bring down all the correspondence we have, and, subsequently, we will be glad to lay the balance of the correspondence before the House.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand my hon. friend to move an amendment?

Mr. BOWELL. I ask the hon. gentleman to add those words, and at the same time I inform him that I will not be able to bring down all the correspondence at present.

Mr. DESSAINT.

Mr. LAURIER. Is the matter under consideration?

Mr. BOWELL. No; but the correspondence is still going on.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

HALF-BREED CLAIMS.

Mr. LAURIER moved for :

Copies of all Resolutions of the Legislative Assembly of the North-West Territories respecting the settlement of the Half-breed claims.

He said: I understand that the North-West Assembly have made some important representations to the Government as to the claims of the Half-breeds. I have only seen the statement in the newspapers, and am not in a position to speak in regard to those claims, but I would like to have the information as soon as possible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They shall be brought down at once.

Motion agreed to.

ATLANTIC MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. LAURIER moved for :

Copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada, or any of the Departments, and the Messrs. Anderson, or any other parties, respecting the Atlantic mail service.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I must ask my hon. friend to allow this motion to stand over for the present. The correspondence is very full, and the contract provides for a certain time within which the company may ask that the contract should be cancelled. The contract was cancelled at the request of the company, and the Government are now proceeding in their endeavors to obtain another fast line on the Atlantic. It would not do to bring down correspondence with the Andersons at present, because it would be giving other parties information which it is not in the interest of the Government to do.

Motion allowed to stand.

BANK OF UPPER CANADA.

Mr. McMULLEN moved for :

Return showing the lands sold and prices realised for the same, as well as all sums of money realised from other sources by Clark Gamble, acting for the Crown, in the case of the Bank of Upper Canada; also all payments made by him in connection with said bank, and to whom made.

He said: I desire to state that I do not reflect upon the standing and honor of the parties who were connected with the winding-up of the Bank of Upper Canada, but I have been requested by a party who is, I believe, in some way interested in the matter, to ask for this return. I do not wish to be understood as making any insinuations against anyone.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN COMMISSIONERS ABROAD.

Mr. McMULLEN moved for :

Return giving the names of each Commissioner or other Agent appointed by the Canadian Government since Confederation to the 30th June, 1889, on missions to foreign countries; the salary paid per month or year; the total amount paid for salary, travelling expenses, living allowance, and all other expenses of any kind, during their term of office up to the 30th June, 1889.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Although the hon. gentleman could, if he exercised his usual zeal and energy, and diligence, get this information for himself, yet, as these officers are exceptional officers, I have no objection to this motion.

Motion agreed to.

SALARIES AND EXPENSES OF MINISTERS.

Mr. McMULLEN moved for :

Return showing the names of each Minister of the Crown from Confederation to 30th June, 1889. The amount of money drawn by each during each year of their term of office, under the following heads: Salary, sessional allowance, travelling expenses, and all other sums drawn or paid under any other head, during their term of office until 30th June, 1889. The total amount paid to each up to the same date.

He said : In moving this resolution again, which is virtually a copy of the one I brought before the House a few days ago, and which was withdrawn at the suggestion of the leader of the Opposition, I do so in order to be in a position to lay before my constituents and before the country a statement of the expenses which have been incurred under the head of Government and by members of the Government. When this resolution was brought before the House on a previous occasion, the First Minister took objection to it on the ground that it would cost a great deal to comply with its terms. I would willingly cut down the time to the last ten years, from the 30th June, 1879, to the 30th June, 1889, but my reason for including the whole of this time is that hon. gentlemen opposite might object to a return which would simply include the period during which they themselves were in power, leaving out the time when hon. gentlemen on this side were in power. I repeat to-day what I said then : That the people of this country are of opinion that the expenses connected with the several departments and the heads of those departments, and the expenses incurred in connection with the discharge of the official duties of Ministers of the Crown, are far in excess of the power and ability of the people of this country to support. If we are going to cut down the public expenses—and I am sure there never was a time more opportune than the present, as everyone who knows the condition of this country will agree with me in saying—it is our duty to begin at home and to begin with the heads of those departments. After adjusting the expenses which are excessive in that regard, we may go on and deal with other matters, and see if we cannot bring the annual expenses within such an amount as the people who have to pay the taxes can bear. That is my object in making this motion. When I brought this matter before the House on a previous day, the Minister of Customs threw out the hint that I could gather the information out of the blue books. I do not believe that members of Parliament are supposed to make book-worms of themselves. The Minister himself, when he sits in his easy chair in his office, does not supply himself with the information he needs from the documents in his Department, but he simply touches a bell which is very close to his chair, and calls on his subordinates, who come dancing around him and give him all the information that he requires. I would like to know if a man who receives a salary of $7,000 a year, and a sessional allowance, and a considerable number of perquisites in addition to that, is not better entitled to perform the duties of searching through all the documents and Public Accounts than an humble member of this House who only gets a sessional allowance. Now, I say that it is unfair for the hon. gentleman to cast up that insinuation. In the first place there are a number of Orders that passed this House for returns that could be very easily picked up if the people were only willing to search the blue books. If there is one duty at all devolving more especially upon the Opposition than another, it is that they should closely and carefully criticise the public expenditure in connection with the several departments here, and in conjunction with the general service of this country. That is one of the important duties devolving upon the Opposition ; and I want it understood that, so far as I am concerned, I shall ever endeavor to perform that duty. Now, there has been a considerable amount of criticism with regard to my bringing this motion before the House, and I notice that some journals have taken a great deal of notice of it, and challenged the propriety of my doing so. I wish it to be distinctly understood, Mr. Speaker, that I care not what criticisms are made, I care not what sarcastic or scurrilous remarks may be made ; when a duty of this kind devolves upon me I shall do it, regardless of all those criticisms and insinuations, whether made by a subsidised journal of the Government or any other journal. I want that to be distinctly understood, in the start. If they fancy that they can close my mouth by these sarcastic criticisms, they are very much mistaken. Now, Sir, I have given the reasons why I moved this resolution. As I said before, if the First Minister, or any Minister, thinks it is going to be a costly return to prepare, that it is going to take a long time to get it, and if he is prepared to cut the time to ten years in place of twenty-one, I shall accept the amendment to my resolution and be content with ten years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I may say that I greatly sympathise with my hon. friend for these very improper attacks made upon him in the newspapers. It is the penalty, however, that all men in public life pay for greatness—for being active in assisting to carry on the Government. I am rather surprised, however, to see that these unworthy attacks on my hon. friend have not been confined to the Conservative press. There are some papers called Reform papers, so utterly devoid of a proper sense of their duty as to sneer in the most sarcastic way—if they were directed against myself, I would say, in the most offensive style—at the action of my hon. friend. For my part, I fully understand the course taken by the hon. gentleman, and I quite appreciate the patriotic motives that induced him to make this motion. He wants to understand exactly what the cost of the Government is, what it has cost to conduct the administration of affairs ; but he has not taken advantage of what has been suggested to him when this matter was before the House the first time, and he has not included, in his very patriotic and proper enquiries, the cost of the whole administration of public affairs : the cost of legislation—the cost of running the whole machine. He has confined himself to the salaries and perquisites, as he calls them, of the members of the Government, and, while that is a very small portion of the expense, he has not obtained what he wants to obtain—that is to say, what the whole cost of administration is, with a view of cutting expenses down. Now, I think he ought to have gone on a little further. In the first place, he ought to have told us whether these salaries of Ministers are too large; I think he ought to have gone on still further, and told us if he thinks the allowance made to the members of the two Houses of Parliament is excessive. He says the whole cost is excessive, but he does not descend to particulars, and he does not in any way show how a reform can be obtained. One thing rises in my mind, in considering the speech of my hon. friend, and it is this: The hon. gentleman has abandoned the idea of being a member of a Reform Government, because if he had the most remote expectation of coming over to this side—a position which his abilities entitle him to claim—if he had the most remote idea of that ever coming to pass, I do not think he would have stated that the salaries of the Ministers were too large. I might almost think that he intends to abandon public life, otherwise he would not be so stern an economist, and he would not have attacked the amount of salaries received by the members of the Government—not a farthing too large, in my opinion:—but then we are an extravagant Government, you know, Mr. Speaker. We support the salaries and the allowances made to members of this House. We have no intention in the world of diminishing our own salaries, or of proposing to diminish the salaries of our successors. But for all that, Mr. Speaker, supposing the hon. gentleman is right in his ideas that great reform is required, that is not the motion. He does not move for any reform. He does not make any economical proposition, but he merely wants to get a return, at considerable expense, which he can, with very little trouble, procure for himself. Now, that was proposed the last time the hon. gentleman moved it, and there seemed to be a general consent to that proposition on both sides of the Chair. I shall oppose his motion as one which is not called for. It is throwing away money for nothing, and it is opposed to the general economical principles of my hon. friend himself.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend behind me is certainly discharging an unpleasant duty when he is attempting to look into questions of the expenditure of members of the Government. My hon. friend opposite makes the admission that this is an extravagant Government. That is well known throughout the country, but I am afraid the hon. gentleman does not want the whole of their extravagance to be put in such a shape that every elector can see it. It is objected by my hon. friend behind me that we should not have to go over the twenty-one or twenty-two Public Accounts published since Confederation, and he wishes for a statement showing the whole extravagance, by way of contrast, of the members of this Government as compared with the extravagance of their predecessors. This is the object which my hon. friend has in view. Of course, any hon. gentleman can go over the votes of the House for the last twenty years and pick out for his own information that which might be brought down in the form now desired. I do not see why the motion should not be granted; it is a legitimate motion, and nothing could be more plain than that the people should have the fullest information as to the cost of Government. The right hon. gentleman says he has no intention to reduce the salaries of Ministers. That is not the question. The country knows exactly what Ministers receive every year in the way of salary, but the country does not know what they receive every year by way of perquisites. This is what my hon. friend has in view. I understand the perquisites are almost as large as the salaries, and this of itself should be a good reason why the motion should be granted.

Motion negatived on a division.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Copies of all Resolutions of the Legislative Assembly of the North-West Territories respecting the application of moneys voted by this House for the use of the said Territories.—(Mr. Laurier.)

Copies of Orders in Council, despatches, correspondence and documents relating to the resignation of the Advisory Council of the North-West Territories and the appointment of their successors.—(Mr. White, Renfrew.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 4.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Bill (No. 24) respecting the St. Stephen's Bank.—(Mr. Weldon, St. John.)

Bill (No. 25) respecting the North-Western Coal and Navigation Company (Limited).—(Mr. White, Cardwell.)

BILLS OF EXCHANGE, CHEQUES AND PROMISSORY NOTES.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 6) relating to bills of exchange, cheques and promissory notes. He said: The House will remember that this Bill was introduced early last

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Session, and that considerable progress was made with it. Before its introduction, even then, it had been fully distributed throughout the country, among institutions immediately connected with commerce; not only to the banks, but to chambers of commerce and boards of trade, and to any person who manifested interest in the subject. That distribution resulted in a number of suggestions, more or less valuable, emanating from banking institutions and persons connected with trade and commerce. Those amendments and suggestions were eventually incorporated in the Bill brought before the House when the House was in committee; but, at a subsequent stage, it was considered desirable, in view of the great importance of the subject, and the necessity of having a fuller consideration of it by members of the House, to withdraw the Bill for that Session and introduce it early in the present Session. That has been done. In order to furnish further information the Bill was distributed once more to upwards of 100 organisations and persons throughout the country. The result of the second distribution was not to elicit further suggestions of any importance; and I have, therefore, to invite the attention of the House again to the Bill and to ask that it be now read the second time.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Minister of Justice state briefly the particular changes made in the Bill now under the consideration of the House, from the Bill of last year, especially changes in regard to notarial action?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Bill is now in precisely the state in which it was, with a few verbal exceptions, at the time it was withdrawn last Session. The hon. gentleman may recollect that, after the second reading of the Bill and before progress was made in Committee, the amendments which I intended to make were embodied, in galley form, in a Bill then distributed, not universally throughout the House, but pretty generally. This is the Bill as then printed. I omitted to state that the Bill has been distributed in advance of this Session to members of both Houses.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I may say by way of explanation that the second clause of the Bill contains the definitions embodied in the English statute on the subject of bills of exchange, with the exception, of course, of letter "c." The English Act defines that a banker is a person or body carrying on banking, whether incorporated or not. Inasmuch as our banking institutions in this country are corporations, the definition has been made to correspond with our system in Canada; otherwise the section is the same as the English law.

On section 8, sub-section 4,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The words "or order" would not be necessary to make it transferable. This is the effect of this section, is it not?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is so.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not know whether the rule is uniform in all the Provinces or not, but where there has been an endorsement by a party in whose hands the bill has not been, as where the endorsement is intended as additional security, would that endorsement be accepted? There are some advantages to endorsements of that sort by a person in whose hands the bill never has been as a holder. There have been some American decisions that an endorsement by a party in whose hands a note has never been as holder is only a guarantee of the note, and the party cannot be proceeded against until an attempt has been made to collect the amount from those who would otherwise be liable. Of course, the English rule is different. I do not know whether it is uniform in all the Provinces or not, or whether it is the intention to make it so.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think there have been conflicting decisions in some Provinces on that subject.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the hon. Minister intend by this Bill to establish any rule?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Not by this section. That is done hereafter.

Mr. LANGEЛИER (Quebec). What is the meaning of sub-section 5?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is to make a bill negotiable, unless it is declared that it shall not be negotiable. Some bills, instead of being made payable to A. B. or his order, are made payable simply to the order of A. B., and this is to declare that such a bill is, nevertheless, payable to him or his order, at his option.

Mr. LANGEЛИER (Quebec). Is it necessary to declare that? Is that not already the law?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is the law now, but it is a point that has had to be settled. We are embodying a good deal of the common law in the Bill.

On section 9,

Mr. LANDERKIN. What rate of interest is meant in sub-section 3?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Any rate which the bill may bear; and if it bears no interest, the rate is provided for by the interest law of the country. The object is to meet this difficulty in the common law: that, in order to be valid, a bill or note must be for a certain sum; this section provides that it shall be considered to be for a certain sum, even if it specifies a certain sum of money with interest or by instalment.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is the rate of interest?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The legal rate is at present 6 per cent., but may be varied from time to time by Parliament.

On section 10,

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). This is a clause which I think elicited some discussion last Session. The present custom is that a bill payable at sight has three days' grace, but it is proposed by this section, as I understand, to make such a bill payable on demand, the same as a demand draft or bill. I would ask the hon. Minister of Justice to consider the advisability of continuing the practice which at present prevails in regard to sight bills.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the discussion which took place, of which I have some recollection, referred to bills payable at sight, and it was not intended by the Bill as introduced last Session that days of grace should be allowed on sight drafts; but if the hon. gentleman looks at section 14, he will find that it provides that days of grace will be allowed on a bill unless it is payable on demand.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I think that would not affect this clause, which provides that a bill which is expressed to be payable on demand or at sight is payable on demand. What I wish is that there should be a distinction between the expressions "on demand" and "at sight."

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I do not agree with the hon. member for Renfrew. There has always been a difficulty with drafts payable at sight, and it seems to me it would be better to make such drafts the same as demand drafts, without any days of grace.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). In the discussion which took place last Session, I think this distinction was made. Bank drafts are usually made payable on demand, when it is intended that they are to be collected on presentation; but, as was stated here during last Session frequently, when a draft is drawn payable at sight, the person on whom it is drawn really owes the money, but is not able to meet it at the moment, he has the three days' grace after his acceptance. That is the present custom, and it seems to me that is a considerable convenience to the mercantile community. If it has not at present the effect of law, it has the effect of custom, and I think it would not be well to make a change in that respect. I hope the Minister of Justice will give his attention to this matter, so that he may provide that, instead of a bill payable on sight being payable on demand, it should be payable only after three days' delay.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This provision is simply following the English law, by which a bill payable on sight is payable on presentation. As far as circumstances will allow, it would be well to follow the same rule as the mother country.

Mr. BARRON. The custom has been to allow three days' grace on a sight draft, and I think it would be dangerous to interfere with that established custom.

Mr. CHARLTON. The commercial practice in this country has been to allow three days' grace on a sight draft, and I think it would be generally acceptable to the creditor as well as to the debtor if that were continued, because, if those three days are allowed, a far less number of bills would be dishonored than if the sight draft meant payment on presentation.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I feel the same in regard to this matter, and I think the Minister should yield. If the bill is to be paid on demand it should be so drawn, but I think it would be very unfortunate to make a sight draft a demand draft.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The draft in that case should be made one day or three days after sight. I think, in the majority of instances, sight bills are paid on presentation.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not agree with the last speaker. We have a system which is well understood by the farmers and the business men, and, in fact, by all the people of this country, which is that a sight draft has three days' grace. Why should we change that system and introduce a new one? I am sure the Minister of Justice, who is always so anxious to meet the views of commercial men in this country, will see the advisability of making this change in his Bill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I understood that to be the wish of the House last Session, and I meant the Bill to be so drawn. The hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) has called my attention to the fact that a slight amendment will be necessary in section 10, and I will, therefore, allow that to stand for the present.

On section 12,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is that the present law?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The present law is very obscure, and this is intended to remove the doubt in the same way as it has been done in the English law.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Do I understand that the parties would have to show the true date?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). That may lead to a difficulty.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is simply a choice of the lesser difficulty. Perhaps the hon. gentleman has not given full consideration to the latter part of the proviso in this section.

On section 14,

Mr. LANDERKIN. Do you propose to recognize civic holidays in cities and towns?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; only those prescribed by this Parliament and by the Legislature of the Province.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Because on civic holidays banks and such institutions are closed up.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Is the provision respecting the date on which a bill will fall due the same as the law as it now stands? For example: Would a bill dated 31st January, payable one month after date, fall due on 28th February, under the law?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, under our present Canadian enactment.

Mr. WHITE. Is it proposed to make any alteration in the law in that respect?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No.

On section 15,

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Under the law of the Province of Quebec, and also under the law of the Continent of Europe, it is obligatory, not optional, with the holder of a bill to send to the referee.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is so. In making a uniform enactment on this subject, the question is simply whether we shall adopt the law of the Province of Quebec or that which prevails in all the other Provinces. The hon. gentleman is quite right in stating that, on the Continent of Europe, the reference in case of need makes presentation obligatory. It was an unsettled point in England down to the passing of the English statute, but it has been definitely settled by enactment that it should not be obligatory.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I simply wished to enquire whether this was the English law. I agree that it is desirable to have an uniform practice with the English law, because our business relations are much more extensive with England and the United States than with the Continent of Europe.

Mr. BARRON. The English law provides for the insertion of the names of one or more persons in case of need. Does the Minister intend to confine it to one person?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The provision is the same as the English statute.

On section 16,

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Under our Code it is provided that on a bill of exchange drawn in the Province of Quebec it can be stated that there shall be no protest, or, if a protest, that the costs shall not be borne by the drawer of the bill. Not only may the drawer do so, but also any endorser. This has been found a very useful provision, because it saves very large costs. Especially was this the case when the system was in force some years ago in Quebec of charging 10 per cent. damages on a bill of exchange drawn on England, and 6 per cent. on any bill of exchange drawn on the United States, if returned under protest for non-payment.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The practice to which the hon. gentleman refers has been acted on in other Provinces as well. We have a provision of that kind in the bill, and the only modification is one that has grown up by usage: the adoption of the short form of the words "without protest."

On section 17,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I desire to enquire as to how this provision will affect letters of credit?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I understand that this Bill will not affect that subject. A letter of credit can hardly be considered an acceptance of bills. It is simply a contract, as I understand it, on the part of the writer of the letter, that the bills will be accepted. It seems to me that the remedies will stand in precisely the same position under this Bill as they would at common law. I may call the attention of the Committee to the fact that subsection "c" has been inserted, as recommended by the representatives of the banking section of the Toronto Board of Trade.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I understand that a letter agreeing to accept a bill which is not yet drawn has been held good as an acceptance.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I understand such letter as an agreement to accept simply, and it is hardly an acceptance of the bill.

Mr. BARRON. I believe the practice is that banks frequently accept those letters of credit in the form of an acceptance.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not think that would be in any way effected by the bill.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In the present mercantile law amendment the party who draws the bill would have a right of action under the bill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will give that matter careful consideration, and, in the meantime, we need not allow the clause to stand.

On section 19,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). That section would not bind the holder to take a qualified acceptance?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No. I may call the attention of the Committee to one alteration that was made in this section, in accordance with the view that was generally expressed by the House last Session. The House may remember, when the Bill was under discussion last year, it contained a provision that an acceptance to pay at a particular place is a general acceptance, unless it expresses that the bill is to be paid there only and not elsewhere. That is, in fact, the provision of our present statute as regards the Province of Ontario. I think the feelings of the members from the Province of Ontario was, that it was undesirable to continue that principle, and that it should not be extended to the other Provinces. For that reason the clause was changed; and, for the present, I have omitted that provision.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). The bill must be held to mean what it says. What is the use of saying that a bill is payable at a particular place if it is to be paid at some other place? I do not think it is common sense; and if it is the law of Ontario, I do not think it is desirable to give bad law to the other Provinces.

On section 22,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I would suggest whether corporations should not be given power to draw or accept bills of exchange and promissory notes. The law of England is indefinite as to whether they have that power or not. I remember that, a short time ago, an action was brought against an educational society, which was erecting a building, and which gave a promissory note in the course of business; and I felt very great doubt as to whether that note was valid or not. It would be a great benefit to these corporations if they had that power, which, it seems to me, could not be easily abused.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The subject is provided for, as regards companies incorporated by letters patent, under the Joint Stock Companies' Act, and it seems to me that the effect of this provision will be to enable a corporation to make a promissory note if the capacity to do so has been conferred upon it by its charter. At present the practice pursued by the Provincial Legislatures in granting charters, is to make provision that the companies shall have power to make promissory notes and bills of exchange. We have heretofore objected to Provincial Legislatures undertaking to confer that power, as being a power within our jurisdiction. This provision will have the effect of removing that doubt from provincial charters which purport to confer that power, so that if the charter of any corporation, no matter by what Legislature granted, confers upon it that power, it will have the right to exercise it under this Act. Whether we should go further and declare that any company should have the power, whether its charter gives it the power or not, seems to me rather doubtful.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The language of the section, as it stands, is too indefinite to accomplish what the hon. Minister states to be his object. It refers simply to a general Act relating to incorporated companies, but would not refer to the powers given by a special Act of incorporation.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I propose to meet the difficulty by inserting the word "such" before the word "corporation."

On section 24,

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). What would be the effect of this clause, supposing the name of the drawer of a promissory note was forged, and the note after endorsement passed into the hands of other parties? Would the fact of the forgery of the drawer's name make the note a complete nullity, or would not the endorser be liable?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This does not alter the present law. It simply carries out the provision of the common law in the case of the signature being forged.

On section 26,

Mr. MITCHELL. It appears to me there is some inconsistency in this clause. The first part provides that, where a person adds words to his signature indicating that he signs for or on behalf of a principal, or in a representative character, he is not personally liable thereon. But then it says that the mere addition to his signature of words describing him as an agent, or as filling a representative character, does not exempt him from personal liability. It seems to me there is some inconsistency in that.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). That is the present law.

Mr. MITCHELL. It may be the present law, but I understand this measure is intended to improve the present law and to remove its incongruities. I would suggest to the Minister that he should reserve that section, with a view to consider and amend this provision.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. As the member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) has stated, this is simply the present law; but perhaps the hon. member (Mr. Mitchell) has misunderstood the clause, the purport of which is to provide that, where John Smith signs a note in the name of, say, the Ottawa Manufacturing Co., he is not personally liable, but if he signs the note "John Smith" and adds, "Agent of the Ottawa Manufacturing Company," as in that case he is simply adding his own description, he is personally liable.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then, I understand that if in the one case he signs the name of the principal, with himself as agent, he is not personally responsible; and if, in the other case, he signs his own name as the agent, he is responsible. I think that is rather inconsistent, and it would be well for the Minister to reserve that clause.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The English law provides just the same thing. It would be well to have this clearly defined in order to prevent any doubt arising, and I think the adoption of the English rule will remove any doubt.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have often objected to one thing in this House, and that is, the endeavor on all occasions to follow English practice and English precedent, and to adopt the wording of English laws. My hon. friend states that this is the practice in England, and that where a man signs as agent there is a very great deal of doubt existing as to his liability. I say this section continues and retains that doubt. In my opinion it ought to be immaterial whether a man signs his name in a representative capacity, as agent for a principal, or whether he signs the principal's name and signs his own as agent of that principal. My hon. friend says people in the country know this distinction, because it is the law. How many people who are doing business with manufacturers' agents, and the agents of various merchants and others, know about that clause of the law? They may think, when they sign as agents of a manufacturing company, they are simply creating a liability on the part of the company. My hon. friend and the Minister both admit, and the Act itself states, that if the agent signs as the agent of a manufacturing company, he is personally liable, in addition to the liability of the company. Now, I think that ought to be removed, and wherever a man puts upon the back of a bill any explanation of his attitude with a view of protecting himself from liability, that should have the effect of relieving him from personal liability, and only bind him in his representative capacity.

Mr. BARRON. I would suggest to the Minister that he had better add the words "for the purpose of identity" after the word "character"; because I think it is wise to retain, as far as possible, the wording of the English Act, as there are decisions under the English Act which would help us.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am afraid that would only continue the obscurity. Let the hon. gentleman reflect that some of the illustrations given in the Bill are these: Where executors sign, stating that they sign as executors, they are nevertheless bound personally. Under this Act it is intended that they should be bound. I think, with respect to the remark of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), we have, first of all, to keep in view the great necessity for providing, in the case of contracts of this kind, plainness as to who is to be bound by these contracts. In the second place, this principle must be borne in mind: that if there is any ambiguity in the instrument itself the person who has the opportunity of removing that ambiguity is to blame for it, and should bear the burden. We provide a distinct rule, and in doing that we accomplish a great deal by removing the obscurity that now exists upon that subject. We provide that if a man desires not to be bound himself, he must sign the name of his principal to the instrument and declare that he is merely an agent; but that if he signs his own name first he shall be personally bound. When we have laid down a clear rule upon the subject, the fault will be clearly that of the person who wants to limit his liability, if he does not follow that rule. If we had the subject to reconsider de novo, there might be some weight in the contention that where it appears in any way on the face of the instrument that a person acts in a representative capacity he should not be personally bound. The difficulty of changing the law upon that subject is not merely that we are not following an English precedent—that would be, as the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) says, comparatively of little consequence—but we would be changing the course of the law which we have followed ever since the settlement of the country, or, at any rate, ever since the settlement of this question at common law, and we would be establishing a new rule, and, I am afraid, introducing a great deal of inconvenience, because it would conflict with the English law and with the common law which has prevailed in this country for so long a time.

Mr. MITCHELL. I admit it is difficult to follow the hon. gentleman, with his great ability and his great powers of speaking, and putting forward his views in such a gentlemanly and clear manner. The hon. gentleman says that it would be altering the principles of the law well understood for many years past. Now, I think it has been a great and fertile source of litigation, and a great source of revenue for the lawyers of the country, to define what the liability of an agent is, when he is personally liable and when he is not. The hon. gentleman says it would be wrong to depart from the principles of the common law which have been so well understood. If I understand the object of this Bill, it is to define and make clear those parts of the law where doubts have existed in reference to the usages and decisions that have been obtained in past years under the common law. Now, here is a very strong illustration which could be given: that if this legislation, now under consideration, is to be worth anything, it is desirable that whenever a point arises in the consideration of this measure, affecting, as it does, the commercial law of the country and extensive business transactions, the single object is to describe when and where an agent shall be liable personally and when he shall not. What would be the natural conclusion if we were to frame laws de novo upon that subject? It would be this: that in any commercial document in which a principal was represented by an agent, whenever the agent, in the execution of that document, placed in words upon the face of it that he acted as an agent only, he should not be personally liable. That is clear. Why, then, should the ambiguity be continued in this section of the Bill? My hon. friend says that he has defined when an agent is liable and when he is not, by the words of the Bill. How many people throughout this country will ever read that section of the law? How many of the hundreds of thousands of people who are carrying on business and signing documents, acting for principals, will ever know the fine distinction contained in that section of the Bill? If that is the case, why should we allow these men unnecessarily to get into trouble and create a personal liability for themselves which was never intended by the persons with whom they are acting, nor by the principals for whom they are acting? I think the main object of this measure is to make clear the law where it is doubtful now, and this is one doubt that now exists, and I hope the hon. gentleman will reserve for consideration this section, with the view of amending it.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I think the best course to adopt is to leave the law of agency completely out of this Bill. This section conflicts with the question of agency. The liability of an agent does not relate to notes and bills of exchange. I also remark that this section will introduce a change in the law relating to agency, which law is very satisfactory as it now stands. Under the law of the Province of Quebec an agent is responsible if he is a commission merchant; he is personally responsible, even when he acts in his capacity of agent, if his principal is in any foreign country. That has been found very satisfactory; but if this section passes, that provision of the law would be removed so far as bills of exchange are concerned.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is the law all over Canada.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). That section also would apply to all bills of exchange drawn from foreign countries. It is most desirable that the law as to agency should not be changed.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Minister of Justice is no doubt well aware that a knowledge of the law is the exception, not the rule, among business men. I take it that if a man signs his name as agent, he does so under the belief that it exempts him from personal liability. To insert a clause in this Bill to hold him personally liable, when he thought he was not liable, would hardly be just. The fact that a man signs as agent is prima facie evidence that he disclaims all personal liability. It is for the party who drew the bill to obtain information in relation to the party in question. But to provide by this clause that unless the party complies with certain phraseology and a certain form, although, in point of fact, he does explain what his position is, or supposes he does so, is to work an injustice. The fact that he has signed as agent indicates that he is not the principal, that he has not signed for himself, but as the agent of another party, and that circumstance should exempt him from personal liability. The clause now proposed would work disadvantageously and unjustly in a great many cases.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I do not think the difficulty is so much as regards principal and agent as parties representing estates, such as executors or persons holding official positions. They sign in their official capacity, and understand, when they sign as executors or agents, that they are not holding themselves personally responsible. Clauses might be inserted to cover this point. In some cases a party signs a note or bill of exchange as executor, not supposing that he makes himself liable; but, after a lapse of time, in consequence of the failure of other parties, he is held to be liable. Of course there are difficulties surrounding the question, but the English rule might be followed, that a party must expressly exempt himself from liability.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) disapproves of the provision on the ground that very few persons are acquainted with the law. He must remember that if this clause were cut out the common law would remain; and if few persons are acquainted with the statutes, still fewer have studied the common law. In regard to the law of the Province of Quebec, I understand the principle of the law on this subject is the same. I have no objection to allow the clause to stand, but I do so with the understanding that I have in no way modified my views in consequence of allowing further consideration.

Mr. MITCHELL. The point I make in regard to the hon. Minister's last remark is this: I do not care whether the common law or the statute law contains this provision or not, but I hold it is due to the country that, where a man represents that he is the representative or agent of another, he should not be personally liable. That is the point I desire to make. It is the duty of the Government, in codifying the laws, to frame a section to provide that when a man signs a document, purely in his representative capacity, believing that he is not making himself liable, at the same time the receiver not expecting him to be liable, he should not be liable. I think the hon. gentleman has such great ingenuity and ability as to be able to frame a clause to accomplish this object. As the hon. gentleman has allowed the section to stand, we will have an opportunity to discuss it again.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. On the other hand, we should take care that innocent persons shall not be given pieces of paper which are worthless. Farmers receive many promissory notes; and if the suggestion of the hon. gentleman opposite be adopted, a man may sign himself as the agent of some person, or as acting in some representative capacity, and give notes which will prove to be worthless, and thus escape liability. There must be a distinction drawn. I do not see how this can be done except in the words of the section. If the person signs in a certain way he should be personally liable; if he chooses to put after his name the statement that he is agent of some company, that fact should not allow him to escape liability; it might be that he was a lightning-rod pedlar or something of that kind. If a man signs ostensibly for a company, then let the company be responsible, and no one else; but if he signs his own name he should be held to be liable.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We will allow the section to stand, in the hope that hon. gentlemen opposite will become convinced. When the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) is almost convinced, he always accuses me of special pleading.

Mr. MITCHELL. I regret that the tone of the hon. gentleman's voice was so low that I did not catch the force of his, no doubt, very forcible remark. When the question comes up again, I hope to meet the hon. gentleman with a view to endeavor to come to some common understanding whereby innocent persons will be protected.

On section 30,

Mr. MITCHELL. I think, Mr. Chairman, there might be some doubt in regard to this section. It uses the words "for value or not." I would quite agree that the holder "for value" of such a bill should make the maker personally liable, but I doubt the propriety of allowing the holder "without value," or where a bill was fraudulently obtained, to have recourse against the maker. Suppose a man forces a bill out of another and gives it to another party, that other party can prosecute the maker.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). He cannot, because he does not get it from the holder in due course.

Mr. MITCHELL. The wording seems to indicate that here, but it may be that it is intended that only lawyers can understand this bill.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if he has incorporated in this Bill a provision that where notes are given for the purchase of patent rights, they must have stamped upon them "given for patent rights?"

Mr. MITCHELL.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That provision is not in the Bill, but it is in the present law.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think we should have a clause of this kind in the Bill. It is an important provision, as a great many notes given for patent rights are largely given fraudulently.

Mr. BURDETT. That provision is an Act of Parliament by itself, and is not repealed by this law. I intend to introduce a Bill directed against this kind of rascality, and also against another species of rascality adopted in our part of the country, in relation to notes given for seed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I must say that I agree with the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick). If we are mentioning exceptions in the case of notes, all those exceptions ought to be incorporated in the body of the Bill.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it would be wise to follow the suggestion of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick).

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. If we are consolidating the law in this respect, the matter I have referred to should be incorporated in this Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think that law is better separate than it would be embodied in this Bill, because that law aims at what may be regarded as a criminal offence. It is to protect parties against certain fraudulent proceedings.

Mr. LAURIER. Would the hon. Minister explain what he means by the third sub-section of section 30, referring to usurious consideration?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is now the Canadian statute law.

On section 31,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It seems to me that when a person endorses a bill in a representative capacity, the mere statement of that fact should be prima facie evidence that he does so without making himself personally liable. This section puts upon him the necessity of using words to relieve himself of personal liability.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. A man may, for instance, be bound by his duty as an executor to endorse a bill, and this provision permits him to add that he does so in his representative capacity only.

Mr. MITCHELL. This sub-section is inconsistent with section 26, which states that the mere addition to a signature of words describing the signer as an agent or as filling a representative character does not exempt him from personal liability.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. On the contrary, the sections exactly fit each other. This section is to provide that, notwithstanding the previous section and that principle of law, a man may validly endorse a bill as executor, and at the same time add words stating that it is not binding on him personally.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I fancy that the difficulty would be that if a note or bill went into the hands of an innocent holder, how would he know in what capacity it had been endorsed unless it were so stated on the bill?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This provision is to mitigate the force of the principle laid down in section 26, in cases where persons are under obligation to endorse bills or notes in their representative capacity.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I think there is a good deal of force in what the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) says in regard to the comparative ignorance of business men of acts of this kind. Take, for instance, the case of the secretary of a company. A note is payable, say, to the National Manufacturing Co. The secretary is bound to endorse that note, and he does so as secretary of the National Manufacturing Co. It seems to me that that ought to be sufficient notice to the subsequent holders of the bill that he has endorsed it in his capacity of secretary of the company, and that it ought not to be necessary for him to add any additional words declaring that he is not personally liable.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Might I direct the attention of the Minister of Justice again to section 12 of chapter 123 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that every bill of exchange or promissory note given in consideration of the purchase of or interest in a patent right shall have written across the face thereof the words, "given for a patent right." That is the law now, but you are proposing to repeal that law, and I do not think it would be wise to do so. I hope the Minister will introduce that clause into this Bill, because, by the schedule, you are proposing to repeal it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have already made a note of that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think any gentleman in this House will suppose that my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Charlton) is not a very intelligent member of Parliament or that he does not know what the laws of this country are. I do not think I am a fool myself, but neither my hon. friend nor myself knew until now of the existence of that provision referred to by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick). Therefore it shows the necessity of that provision going into this Bill.

On section 33,

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think this section brings up again that question of patent rights. I think that, from the rascality which has been practiced by the persons who take these notes around the country, this House ought to take some action in the matter. If it were made the law of the land that these transactions should be cash transactions, that would be all right, and if it were understood that no note for a patent right should be negotiable, it would prevent these rascals from going through the country and victimising the people they meet. Certainly some drastic measure is necessary, and in that case some of the men who are now imposed upon by the artful, wily schemers who go through the country, would be no longer imposed upon. This thing ought to be stopped, and I believe this is the way to do it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If these were to be made payable in cash, that would hardly be within the provisions of a Bill in regard to bills of exchange.

On section 34,

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Is that the law at present?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

On section 42,

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Is it stated what is the customary time for acceptance?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Is it to differ in the various Provinces? Ought we not to state the number of hours that a bill may be left for acceptance?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It is usually twenty-five.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It might be so stated, as the rule may not be the same in all the Provinces.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Does the hon. gentleman propose that a rule shall be established on this subject?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think so.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Then let this section stand.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 5.50 p.m.

PEAKE'S STATION, P. E. I.

Mr. ROBERTSON asked, Whether the Government have received a petition from the inhabitants of Peake's Station, Prince Edward Island, asking that Peake's Railway Station be made a booking station? If so, is it the intention of the Government to grant the prayer of their petition?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That subject is now under the consideration of the Department.

TRENT VALLEY CANAL COMMISSION.

Mr. BARRON asked, When were the Trent Valley Canal Commissioners appointed? What has been the entire cost to the country up to the present time of the Trent Valley Canal Commission? Is it expected that the Report of the Commission will be received this Session of Parliament; if not, when?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Judge Clark, Frank Turner and J. Kennedy were appointed on the 10th October, 1887, Trent Valley Commissioners. Judge Clark having to resign, Judge Charles A. Weller was appointed in his place on the 1st December, 1887. The entire cost of the Commission to date is $2,271.39. The Report of the Commission is expected during the present Session.

LETTER OF MGR. GRANDIN.

Mr. AMYOT asked, Whether the Government are aware that the following letter has been addressed by His Grace Monseigneur Grandin to persons occupying a high position in the Province of Quebec :—

DIOCESE OF ST. ALBERT,
ALBERTA, N.W.T., CANADA, 20th Nov., 1889.

To His Eminence, Monseigneur Taschereau, Cardinal Archbishop of Quebec, and to Monseigneurs the Archbishops and Bishops of the late Ecclesiastical Province of Quebec.

Your Eminence and Most Reverend and Venerable Sirs :— Permit one of your humble brothers in the Episcopate, overcome by the troubles and anxieties which are crushing him, to have recourse again to your affectionate sympathies, hoping that you will be able to aid him at least with your prayers and your advice, and that our Saviour himself will inspire you to devise some plan to succor him.

Since the annexation of our Territory to Canada, in the portion fit for settlement of my diocese, the physical hardships of former times have much diminished, they have even ceased to exist in certain localities, but I am compelled to admit that the moral afflictions which have succeeded them, especially those which we anticipated, cause us to regret the past years. At the time of the annexation the French Canadians and Métis were, we may say, the only settlers in the country which their fathers had discovered. They lived at peace with the traders of the Honorable the Hudson Bay Company, and with the few English settlers who had but recently taken up land.

After the annexation the immigrants came in great numbers, and I can tell you that out of every hundred there were but ten Catholics; the English and Protestant population thereupon increased rapidly, and in a few years we must be content to find ourselves in the minority. God forbid that I should wish to accuse in a sweeping manner this new majority of wishing to ill-treat us; there are among the new comers respectable and honest families who regret the war that is being made upon us. This war, my Lords, they will not admit, but I for one will certify to your Eminence and your Graces that it is the Dominion Government which, by means of the staff of the Indian Department, has first declared war upon us, taking the initiative and with so much the less fairness, seeing that on their part there has been no declaration of war; and as for us, not being able to imagine all, we did not in the beginning make any resistance. Since the time that the Indians concluded the treaty with the Government the entire control of the Indian Department was, in my diocese at least, generally and exclusively under that of Protestants using the English language. For reasons which they will not admit at any time these gentlemen compel our Christian Indians to withdraw from our establishments, in consequence of which we were compelled to close them. This conduct was as equally opposed to the treaty conditions as to the physical and moral interests of the Indians. When, after that, we desired to establish ourselves among the Indians at their own request, you could not conceive the difficulties which they stirred up against us. Without regard to the religious faith and the wish of the Indians, Protestant schools were the only ones granted to them; and the poor Indians were pressed, even threatened, to compel them to send their children to schools where their faith was not respected. Apart from an industrial school, there is not in my diocese a single Catholic school which we were not obliged to establish ourselves, often against a lively opposition, and to support in a measure in the beginning. In November, 1887, I was assured most positively from Ottawa that such a course of action was going to cease. I must certify that the persecution—I can make use of no other word—is more keen than ever. In spite of all this, you will be surprised to hear it we are the guilty ones; like good sheep we should allow ourselves to be torn and swallowed without even a bleat.

This fanaticism is an epidemic and has spread from the reserves to certain centres of civilisation. Our schools are hunted down. It is a crime for us to take advantage of the education laws to procure assistance from the Government. Our reports are studied; they are found fault with, in order more especially to be able to accuse us and deprive us of that assistance which is ours by right. Although in the minority, we might be able, nevertheless, to send two representatives to the House, but they have succeeded in making this a thing impossible for us. I again charge the Dominion Government, who in marking out the electoral districts have divided up the two French Catholic centres in such a manner that it is impossible for us to secure representation. You are also acquainted with what is going on this very day at Regina. In spite of the efforts of the Honorable J. Royal, Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West, and the Honorable Judge Rouleau, all our representatives, not one of whom is a Catholic, demand, with two exceptions, the abolition of our language and the amendment of our school laws in order to impose upon us the so-called secular schools which are nothing else but anti-Catholic schools, even admitting that they are not Godless schools. Imagine what will be the consequence of all this, in a new country, in a savage country. These petitions were addressed to His Excellency the Governor General in the name of the people of the North-West. They are certainly not ignorant how we are opposed to these doings, but we count for nothing in the eyes of these gentlemen.

This studied contempt of the French Catholic population has already had very sad consequences. Although the Half-breeds gained nothing by their uprising, they are not on that account more insensible to contempt. Nothing would at this moment be easier than to fire the powder. Let one of those so-called loyalists, so ready to question our loyalty and patriotism, presume that another rebellion would advantage him, and he will find all the less difficulty in inciting our population to it because our Catholics have no longer the same reliance in their clergy. They have been told so often that we are paid by the Dominion Government to work for it against them, that they now believe this. Certainly, we have supported it, as we always sustain constituted authority; but we are bound to acknowledge that we have been very badly required, and those who have found fault with us on this account are partly justified. Nevertheless, the French Catholic party, which is now in the background, has rights of which it cannot be deprived without injustice, it even has a right to the gratitude of the powerful party which is inclined to oppress it. Are not these French Canadians and Half-breeds the men who made possible the settlement of the North-West, who rendered more easy the intercourse between the white man and the Indian, and who are to this day the connecting link between them? But it seems that gratitude, even the remembrance of an obligation, is not a quality to be met with in the powerful; and that we, the minority, must submit to being of no consequence socially, and should only be too glad if we are allowed to live as conquered outcasts. Although possessing a certain amount of humility, which I have tried to practice, I can hardly resign myself to existence on such terms. I am often told that a French Catholic immigration into the North-West should be organised. This is very true; but what can I do towards this immigration? One can do nothing without money, and I have none—our population is poor. If, with this object in view, I appeal to your charity, you will doubtless repeat what several persons in your dioceses have very properly said to me: The Province of Quebec must not be depopulated in order to people the boundless North-West. Very true, my Lords, but without impoverishing yourselves, bestow upon us at least the crumbs which fall from your tables. How many thousands of your flock leave each year for the United States, where they too often lose both spiritual and bodily health, and are moreover lost, not only to your Province, but to the Dominion, unless we are to imagine that they prepare the way for a union between Canada and the United States. Both you and I, my Lords, have other views and other hopes.

If even one-fourth of those who emigrated from your Province during the past ten years had come to us, we would still constitute the majority, or would at all events be a powerful minority which would have to be taken into account and against which none would think of enacting extraordinary laws. To people this territory, to people our land, as the aborigines call it—and the Half-breeds and French Canadians have some right to use that expression; for French Canadians discovered this vast country; French Canadians and Half-breeds opened it up to religion and colonisation—to settle our lands there are sent men from every nation, men without faith and without religion; Mennonites are brought from a great distance, even Mormons are admitted and are seemingly held up as examples to the Blackfeet; yet each year a multitude of Canadians are allowed to depart—honest and hard working, but too poor to come this far to settle. Do you not think, my lords, that this is a great evil? Can no remedy be found? Since our Government appears to take no heed, I think that, with the assistance of your patriotic and devoted clergy, of your pious, intelligent and influential laymen, of generous charity of every one, you could enable those brave Canadians to settle comfortably in the North-West. You would obtain from the Dominion Government, and from the various railway companies the means of preserving to Canada these good and upright citizens; and the Province of Quebec would be none the poorer, but would, on the contrary, acquire strength by extending its influence, and would at the same time protect the poor Canadians who are threatened with the fate of outcasts on their own lands.

I therefore beseech you, my Lords, as well in my own name as in that of my missionaries, in the name of the French Catholic party, in the name above all of the interests of the Church in the North-West, to see what you can do, and I appeal to you, in the name of God, to take action.

Pardon my pressing entreaty, and believe me, my Lords, your most devoted and grateful servant and brother.

2nd. Have the Government any reason to doubt Bishop Grandin's word, who signed the said letter?
3rd. Is it the intention of the Government to take any steps to remedy grievances complained of by the Bishop, what steps and when?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have not received the letter set out in the question, or any copy of it. I have been informed that it appeared, without signature, in the Montreal Witness. I would simply say that the letter has never come before the Government except in the manner I have mentioned. The Government will attend to the complaints of Monseigneur Grandin, and those of any other clergyman or person in Canada who has any complaints to make.

CRANE ISLAND MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to cause for the future the mail service of Crane Island, in the County of Montmagny, to be performed by way of Montmagny or by way of Giles' Bay?

Mr. HAGGART. The question is now engaging the attention of the Department. No decision has yet been arrived at.

SUMMERSIDE HARBOR, P. E. I.

Mr. PERRY asked, Whether a further examination for a breakwater at the entrance of Summerside harbor, Prince Edward Island, has been made during the year 1889, as promised by the Minister of Public Works during last Session? If so, has the engineer made a report thereon?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, an examination was made of Summerside harbor last season, and a report has been submitted. The work proposed for the improvement of the entrance to the harbor consists of a breakwater extending southwardly from Willing's Point a distance of 3,800 feet, and a second from the lighthouse 1,000 feet in a southerly direction towards Indian Head, the cost of these two structures being placed at $75,000.

MIMINGASH BREAKWATER, P. E. I.

Mr. PERRY asked, Whether it is the intention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to repair the damages done to the Mimingash breakwater, Prince Edward Island, as promised last Session by the Minister?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As the hon. gentleman puts in his question the words, "As promised last Session by the Minister," I may say that on referring to Hansard, I find that on April 22nd the hon. gentleman asked this question:

"Is the Department of Public Works aware of the amount of damages done to the breakwater at Mimingash, P. E. I., last fall? If so, is it the intention of the department to repair said breakwater immediately?"

The answer given by me was:

"The attention of the Department was called to the damage done to this breakwater, and the matter is now receiving the attention of my department."

Mr. LAURIER. What do you do this year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is not asked.

THE TRADE IN OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth) asked, Is the Dominion of Canada the British North America referred to in the official Trade Returns of the United States for the eleven months ending November 30th last, which show, among exports to British North America, "Oleomargarine, 534,146 lbs."? If so, has the hon. Minister of Customs any reason to believe that oleomargarine enters into consumption in Canada under a fraudulent or assumed name? Has any recent investigation been made by the officers of the Department to ascertain whether it is being brought into the Dominion, in evasion of the statute forbidding its importation?

Mr. BOWELL. There is reason to believe that the part of "British North America" to which the oleomargarine referred to is exported, is the colony of Newfoundland. There is no evidence that any of it was imported to Canada, and entered into consumption in the Dominion. The officers of Customs are instructed to exercise constant vigilance everywhere for the prevention of such violation of law. A few pounds of the article was sent to a party in St. Thomas, Ont., from Chicago as a sample without orders. It was seized by the Collector of Customs and confiscated by the Department. A consignment of oleomargarine from the United States to a party in Halifax was entered for consumption, and was seized by the Customs officials, but upon evidence being produced that the entry was made in mistake, it was allowed to be amended and the article exported to Newfoundland. Similar entries were made in Cornwall, Ont., in December last, which are under seizure, the parties who imported claiming that they purchased it as butter, and they are holding it for exportation to Great Britain. There is reason to believe that a great quantity of oleomargarine passes through Canada in transitu to other countries, and that in this as in other articles exported from the United States, which are forwarded through the Dominion, are entered in the Export Returns of the United States as being exported to British North America, that being the first foreign country which the article reaches, which may account for the entry in the Trade Returns referred to by the hon. member for North Wentworth (Mr. Bain).

THE MAIL STEAMER OTTER.

Mr. AMYOT asked, 1. Is there a contract now in force between the Government and the Messrs. Holiday & Fraser for the carriage of the mails by the steamboat Otter, along the north shore of the Lower St. Lawrence? 2. What is the sum for which the Government have bound themselves to pay these contractors for this transport service? 3. How many trips are they bound to make under the said contract?

Mr. HAGGART. There is a contract for a service between Eskimo Point and Rimouski. It is held by Alexander Fraser & Co. The rate of payment is $200 per trip, and the service is fortnightly during the season of navigation.

DUTY ON MEATS.

Order of the House being read :

That, in consequence of the large importation into Canada annually of fresh beef, mutton and salt pork or bacon, it is expedient, in the interests of the farmers of this country, that the duty on such should be increased.—(Mr. Marshall.)

Mr. FOSTER. I think I would suggest to my hon. friend that he should withdraw that resolution for the present. It has reference to tariff matters which are under the consideration of the Government, and it is not probable that he would get as full and free discussion on the subject now as he would wish.

Mr. MARSHALL. Under those circumstances I will withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

LOYALTY TO HER MAJESTY.

Mr. MULOCK. On Monday last when I was about to move the resolution which I now desire to move, the First Minister requested that the motion should be allowed to stand, in order that he might have a conversation with me on the subject. The motion accordingly stood, and I had the advantage of a conversation with the First Minister. I may say that the whole tenor of the conversation was simply that I might make certain verbal changes in the resolution without, in the slightest degree, impairing the effect of it. I mention this circumstance particularly, because I have been told that very inaccurate reports have gone abroad as to the proposed object of the First Minister in speaking to me. The whole tenor of the right hon. gentleman's conversation with me was that he highly approved of the spirit of the motion, but thought it might be possible to improve the style of it. I entirely concurred with him, and, as a result of the conversation, the motion has been slightly varied, and a reprint of the altered motion placed in the hands of hon. members. I may say further that I omitted to consult an important element in the House at the time, and, therefore, the draft of the corrected motion went to the printer without having been submitted to the representatives of all the various parties in the House. After it was printed the leader of the Third party suggested to me that there should be a little further change, and that suggestion I thought reasonable.

Mr. BOWELL.

I mentioned it to the First Minister and he thought it reasonable, and, consequently, I presume that everyone will think it reasonable. Therefore, with the consent of the House, I will now read the motion proposed to be submitted, and ask the permission of the House that it be substituted for the one of which notice has been given, as follows :—

That an humble Address be presented to the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty in the following words :—

MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY :

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, desire most earnestly in our own name, and on behalf of the people whom we represent, to renew the expression of our unswerving loyalty and devotion to Your Majesty's person and Government.

We have learned with feelings of entire disapproval that various public statements have been made, calling in question the loyalty of the people of Canada to the political union now happily existing between this Dominion and the British Empire, and representing it as the desire of the people of Canada to sever such connection.

We desire, therefore, to assure Your Majesty that such statements are wholly incorrect representations of the sentiments and aspirations of the people of Canada, who are among Your Majesty's most loyal subjects, devotedly attached to the political union existing between Canada and the mother country, and earnestly desire its continuance.

We feel assured that Your Majesty will not allow any such statements, emanating from any source whatever, to lessen Your Majesty's confidence in the loyalty of your Canadian subjects to Your Majesty's person and Government, and will accept our assurances of the contentment of Your Majesty's Canadian subjects with the political connection between Canada and the rest of the British Empire, and of their fixed resolve to aid in maintaining the same.

We pray that the blessings of Your Majesty's reign may, for your people's sake, be long continued.

My object in submitting this motion is not for the information of the hon. members of this House, or for the information of the country. I think for anyone to suggest that such a course as this was necessary for such a purpose would be to offend the intelligence alike of the House and the country. We may have our party differences in regard to what we deem to be the best methods of promoting the public welfare, but we also have, I trust and believe, a common bond of union—the great principle of British connection; a principle which, I submit, controls all political thought in Canada; a principle before which all other questions dwarf almost into insignificance; a principle which is, and I trust will continue to be, the touchstone of political thought in Canada. That principle has developed for us the position here which we enjoy as citizens of the greatest Empire known to civilisation, an Empire which, I think, to-day commands in a greater degree than in any other period in the history of our country the admiration and the love of the whole people of this country, and which has, I believe, developed amongst us a common standing-ground and common cause which makes the hearts of the whole people beat as one. I repeat, therefore, that I do not make this motion for our information or for the information of the country, believing it to be but a feeble echo of the sentiments which are entertained by the whole country; nor do I make it out of any individual or party considerations, nor because of any circumstance which has occurred, or which is occurring, within the borders of Canada; but I make it for the purpose of removing, if possible, misapprehensions, and contradicting statements that have been made and, which, perhaps, have already been of great injury to Canada, and which, if allowed to remain any longer unchallenged, are calculated to be injurious to our best interests. I am sure that, in an assemblage such as this, it will be unnecessary for me to observe any particularity in regard to what I refer to. We are all observers of current events, we are all readers of the literature of the day, and we have had the opportunity of observing the trend of the American press during the last few months. In that press, you find a doctrine set forth as if it were the expression of one mind, but appearing in the whole of the press of the United States and being in that way spread far and wide. You find it asserted there that the political institutions in Canada are broken down: that we are a people divided against ourselves or amongst ourselves; that we are torn apart by internal dissensions; that race is set against race, creed against creed, Province against Province, and the Dominion against the Empire; and that this has created a feeling in favor of independence or annexation which is now only awaiting the opportunity to take practical form and shape. These statements have, no doubt, already done injury to our country. A surplus population does not seek countries which are supposed to be bordering on revolution. Capital does not seek investment in countries which are supposed not to be blessed with stable Government. Therefore, for the information of the outside world, for the information of those who have not had the advantage of being born or becoming Canadian citizens, for their advantage and for our own advantage ultimately, I have asked the House to adopt this resolution. To give further color to these statements, we find that the United States Congress appointed a Committee of the Senate, ostensibly to enquire into the relations of Canada with the United States; but if anyone investigated the proceedings of that Committee, he would find that apparently the principal anxiety of the Commission is to discover satisfactory evidence that this country is in a frame of mind to be annexed to the United States. I know of no better way of meeting their curiosity on that subject, and at the same time of settling this question, than for the people of Canada, through their representatives here assembled, to make an authoritative deliverance upon the subject. Such a deliverance will go far, I believe, to settle the question in the minds of the people of the United States, and in the minds of the people of the old land, those of England and of continental Europe, and then I hope it will result in setting once more flowing towards our shores the surplus capital and the surplus population of those old lands which are so much wanted for the development of the resources of this vast Dominion. I make this statement in no feeling of unfriendliness to the United States. We cannot blame them for casting longing eyes towards this favored land, but we can only attribute that to Canada's worth, and, therefore, to that extent we can appreciate their advances. But that the American people seriously believe that Canada, a land so full of promise, is now prepared, in her very infancy, to commit political suicide, I cannot for a moment believe. Do the American people believe that this young country, with her illimitable resources, with a population representing the finest strains of human blood, with political institutions based upon a model that has stood the strain for ages, and has ever become stronger—do they believe that this country, possessing within her own limits all the essentials for enduring national greatness, is now prepared to abandon the work of the Confederation fathers, and pull out from the Confederation edifice the cement of British connection which holds the various parts of the edifice together? Do they, I say, believe that the people of Canada are prepared in that way to disappear from the nations of the earth, amidst the universal contempt of the world? No, Mr. Speaker, the American people are too intelligent to believe any such a thing. They have been trying to make themselves believe it, but they cannot do it. But whether they believe it or not—no matter who believes it outside of Canada—I venture to say the Canadian people do not believe it; and whatever be the destiny of Canada, I trust that such as I have indicated is not to be her destiny—Canada, full of a people who rejoice, as I said before, more, perhaps, than they ever did yet, by reason of their connection with an Empire that has girdled the whole earth with a confederacy of provinces for the promotion of a higher civilisation, not for the sake of conquest. Sir, that connection, I believe, has, if possible, intensified the feeling of love which is entertained by the people of Canada towards the Union, and nothing, perhaps, has more aided it than the glories of the Victorian era in which we now live. It is not my intention to refer to anything that can possibly suggest a controversy upon this question. In order that this motion may have the fullest effect it should have, I think the heartiest endorsement, the unanimous endorsement of this House, I shall, therefore, avoid any further discussion of this question, believing, as I do, that there is nothing in respect to British political connection that ought to interfere with the material prosperity of our country. Believing this, and believing that the present is an opportune time for us to make a candid declaration of what we deem to be the sentiments of the country, and believing also that such a declaration will not be an unwelcome communication to Her Majesty, I beg to move the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. AMYOT. As a British subject of French descent, I have great pleasure in seconding the motion of my hon. friend. I endorse every one of his words, and I am happy to choose this occasion to speak in the name of the county which I have the honor to represent in this House. I think the motion is opportune, and I will take this occasion to tell the new members of this House who, perhaps, have not studied our history fully, the exact position that we have occupied in the past, so far as loyalty is concerned, and the reasons why we French Canadians are loyal to the Crown. After the Treaty of Paris, a great many struggles occurred between the old and new colonists, as might have been expected, and as is always the case when a sudden change takes place in a country. After many petitions and representations the Act of Quebec, in 1774, passed, and it was accepted by our forefathers as a good step in the right direction. That Act was granted in spite of the opposition of some fanatics and of some speculators, and the very next year our forefathers had occasion to prove their gratitude to England and their loyalty to the new flag. The Americans invaded the country, and it was owing to the efforts, to the chivalry, to the valor of the French Canadian people, powerfully aided, of course, by the few English troops that were here, that Canada was retained as a possession of the Crown of England, in 1775. As my words alone may not be of sufficient authority, I will quote from Biggar, in his work: "Canada—a Memorial Volume," at page 27, where he says:

While there was, as a matter of course, a good deal of friction between the new subjects, as the French were called, and the British settlers, or 'old subjects,' under the temperate and judicial guidance of General Murray and Sir Guy Carleton, matters proceeded hopefully and the country entered upon a career of prosperity, rapidly increasing in population and wealth."

At page 28 he says:

"The colonists were now called upon to pass through another war period—bloody but brief—and this time with their own countrymen across the border. In the year following the passing of the Quebec Act, the long smouldering fires of secession in the American colonies burst into flame. On April 19th, 1775, the 'Minute men' of Concord, Lexington, 'fired the first shot heard around the world,' and the War of Independence began, which ended in the loss to England of her 'American' colonies. One of the first steps taken by the secessionists was to capture Ticonderoga and Crown Point on Lake Champlain, and thus possess the gateway to Canada. Forts St. John and Chambly soon followed, and on the 12th November, Montreal succumbed; but the tide turned when, flushed with their first success, the Americans essayed the capture of Quebec, two daring attempts resulting in disastrous failure."

In 1808, although we did not possess then a full measure of liberty, though our old laws and customs were not entirely recognised, yet our forefathers were always loyal; and we find that Sir James Craig, the Governor, expressed himself as follows in opening Parliament:—

"He added, however, that means for meeting adverse eventualities were not to be neglected; and he had the firmest confidence that the co-operation of the people in that respect would not be wanting; while the loyalty and zeal of the militia met his own warmest approbation. All appearances gave promise that, if the colony were attacked, it would be defended in such a manner as was to be expected of a brave race, who fight for all that is dear to it. The reply of the Assembly was of a character which ought to have persuaded Britons that they might reckon on the fidelity of the Canadians, despite the prejudices and fears which late repeated appeals to it betrayed."

In the years 1812, 1813 and 1814 a new war occurred between England and the United States. Again our forefathers had the opportunity to show their fidelity to the British Crown. Those who have read our history cannot but admire the struggles that took place then, and the extraordinary victories won by a few hundred men over thousands of soldiers. I again quote Biggar, from page 30:

"In the year 1812-14 the young auxiliary nation was called upon to undergo a severe ordeal through the United States declaring war against Great Britain, partly because of sympathy with France and partly through misunderstandings between the two Governments. The United States naturally selected Canada as the first object of attack. The position of the two countries was very unequal. Canada was totally unprepared for the conflict. She had less than 6,000 troops to defend 1,500 miles of frontier. Her entire population was under 300,000, while that of the United States was 8,000,000. Despite this startling disparity the Canadians, rallying as one man to the loyal support of their Government, bore themselves so nobly throughout the two years' struggles which ensued, that when it ended the advantage lay clearly upon their side, and the victories of Queenston Heights and Chateaugay are to-day pointed to with the same patriotic pride as the Englishman takes in Waterloo or the Frenchman in Austerlitz."

Mr. AMYOT.

Our celebrated historian Garneau, at page 188 of the English translation, says:

"The result of the campaign of 1812, in which the zeal and spirit of the Gallo-Canadian population rivalled British courage and loyalty, was a practical justification of the sage and conciliatory policy of Sir George Prevost. This worthy Governor assembled the Chambers on the 29th December. He informed them that, in virtue of the power entrusted to him, he called out the whole colonial militia, and expressed his liveliest satisfaction at the public spirit, orderliness, firmness, love of country, and respect for religion and the laws which had been manifested by all ranks of the people. Such a conduct as theirs, he observed, would make their country respected at home and redoubtable abroad."

It might be objected that in 1837 there was a revolution; but that revolution occurred in Upper Canada as well as in Lower Canada, and only a few men took part in it. I shall not enter into the details, but everyone knows that the great majority of the people remained perfectly loyal to the Crown. When Canada was attacked by the Fenians, our French Canadian battalions were called upon to march to the front. None of them hesitated one moment, and everywhere along the frontier, at the points of danger, we saw French Canadian troops ready to give their lives in defence of the British flag. Lately, when there was a rebellion or trouble in the North-West, two French Canadian battalions were called out; and no one hesitated a moment. They went to the front, they executed all orders given them, and not for one moment was their loyalty suspected, and when they returned they received praise from the authorities of the country. The Governors, which England so carefully selects, have recognised our loyalty on many different occasions. Lord Dufferin and Lord Lorne, who have represented the Queen in this country, and the actual noble man who presides over our destiny, have all expressed themselves most emphatically on this matter. Lord Dufferin, whose name has remained dear to all hearts in this country, used the following words in 1878, and I like to repeat them, because these sentiments are calculated to promote harmony, peace and contentment in this country:—

"Year by year I have had better opportunities of appreciating the devotion of the inhabitants of the Province of Quebec to the Throne and Government of the Queen, and to the interests of the Empire, and nothing has given me greater pride than to observe, when a cloud of war recently threatened Great Britain, that Her Majesty's French Canadian subjects were not a whit behind their English, Scotch and Irish fellow citizens in testifying their willingness to rally to the defence of Her dominions."

"It is quite true that the distinctions of race which exist within the borders of Canada, complicate to a certain degree those problems of government with which the statesmen of the country are periodically called upon to deal with, but the inconveniences which may sometimes arise from this source are more than counterbalanced by many advantages which ensue from it. I do not think that ethnological homogeneity is an unmixed benefit to a country. Certainly, the least attractive characteristic of a great portion of this continent is the monotony of many of its outward aspects, while I consider it fortunate for Canada that her prosperity shall be founded on the co-operation of different races. The inter-action of national idiosyncrasies introduces into our existence a freshness, a variety, a color, an eclectic impulse, which otherwise would be wanting, and it would be most faulty statesmanship to seek their obliteration. My warmest aspiration for this Province has always been to see its French inhabitants executing for Canada the functions which France herself has so admirably performed for Europe. Strike from European history the achievements of France, subtract from European civilisation the contributions of France, and what a blank would be occasioned."

Lord Lorne, in answer to an address presented to him by the St. Jean Baptiste Society, said :

"I have obeyed a pleasant call in being amongst you today, to testify my respect for our French Canadian fellow citizens and my appreciation of the value of the element furnished by its noble and gallant race in influencing for good our young and Canadian nationality. I am here to show how much I prize the loyalty evinced by you on all occasions towards Her Majesty the Queen, whose representative I am."

I need not adduce more proofs of our loyalty. But it is not without reason that we are loyal. It is a sentiment, but it is based upon principle; it is based upon our faith and upon our interest. At all times our clergy have taught the people of the Province of Quebec, or of any part of this continent, to be loyal. I may quote as far back as 1791. The following words were spoken by Mgr. Plessis, in the Cathedral of Quebec, in the course of his funeral discourse over the remains of Mgr. Briand. I quote this because it will convince everyone that if we are loyal we are essentially so, and we know why we are loyal—

"Our conquerors," said Mgr. Plessis, "regarded (at first) with a jealous eye and lowering brow, inspired in us feelings only of detestation or aversion. We cannot be persuaded (for the time), that a race of men, strangers to our soil, to our language, to our laws, to our worship, could ever be willing to render to Canada an equivalent for what it lost by changing its masters. Generous nation! which has made us aware, by so many evidences, how ill-founded were our prepossessions; industrious nation! which has developed the earth's fecundity, and explored its hidden riches; exemplary nation! that, in critical times, taught the attentive world wherein consists that liberty which all men aspire to obtain, but so few know how to keep within proper bounds; pitying nation! which has just welcomed, with so much humanity, the most faithful yet worst-used subjects of that realm to which ourselves once belonged; beneficent nation! which daily gives us men of Canada fresh proofs of its liberality:—no, no! your people are not enemies of our people, nor are ye despoilers of our property, which rather do your laws protect; nor are ye foes of our religion, to which ye pay all due respect. Pardon us, then, for that, our first (and now past) distrustfulness of a foreign race, whose virtues, being as yet unexperienced by us, we had not the happiness to know; and if, after being apprised of the overthrow of the monarchy and the abolition of the only right worship (le vrai culte) in France, and after experiencing, for 35 years, the gentleness of your domination, there remains still among us some natures purblind enough, or to awaken in the popular mind disloyal wishes (désirs criminels) to revert to French supremacy—let Britons be assured that such beings are rare among us; and we beg that what may be true of the malcontent few, will not be imputed to the well-disposed many."

Mgr. Briand's maxim ever was, that true Christians and sincere Catholics are (and must be) all obedient subjects of their legitimate sovereign. He had learned, from Jesus Christ, that we must render to Cæsar what belongs (of right) to Cæsar; Saint Paul has taught him, that every soul should be (voluntarily) submissive to established authority; that he who resists it is in opposition to God himself, and thereby merits damnation; he had learnt from the chiefest of the apostles, that the magistrate (rex) bears not the sword in vain; inculcating, that we are to accredit him by our obedience, as God's representative (propter Deum); and to honor him, not only in his own person, but in the person of his lawful deputies, (sive ductibus tanquam ab eo missis). Such are, my fellow Christians, the principles of our holy religion in that regard; principles which we cannot too often impress upon your minds, or over frequently bring under your view; for they form an integral part of evangelical morality, upon which our eternal salvation depends."

Those words were spoken in 1791. After Confederation, the Bishops of the Province of Quebec, Mgr. Baillargeon, Mgr. Langevin and nearly all the others sent pastoral letters to their flocks with regard to the change of the system of government. I will quote especially from the pastoral of Mgr. Baillargeon, dated 12th June, 1867, and you will see from those remarks that the same sentiments which animated Mgr. Plessis in 1791, animated the Bishops of the Province in 1867. Mgr. Baillargeon says :

"CHARLES FRANÇOIS BAILLARGEON, Bishop of Tloa, &c., &c. To the Clergy, Secular and Regular, and to all the faithful in the Archdiocese, Greeting and blessing in our Lord.

"Her Majesty, our Gracious Sovereign, has just issued a Proclamation, by which it is ordered, by virtue of an Act of the Imperial Parliament, that, dating from the 1st of July next, the Provinces of Canada, of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick shall form a federal union under the name of the 'Dominion of Canada.' The State thus formed shall possess a common legislature which shall concern itself with the greater interests of the whole confederated territory; but this State shall be divided into four Provinces distinct, each possessing a local legislature occupied with the particular interests of the Province. In this way Lower Canada, henceforth separated from Upper Canada, shall form under the new regime a separate Province which shall be styled 'The Province of Quebec.'

"This order of things having been established by competent authority, at the request also of our representatives in the Canadian Legislature, there remains nothing for us, my very dear brethren, but to submit to it with a good grace; to do so is for us all a duty imposed by conscience. If, during the century and more since our country was ceded to Great Britain, the form of our government has changed several times, let us remember that the essence of authority does not vary, but remains ever the same. Authority is requisite for the maintenance of all human society, and experience has shown us into what misfortunes those peoples fall who venture to throw it aside.

"Do not let us forget, my very dear brethren, the wholly Divine origin of this authority, which fact has been so often disregarded in our so-called era of enlightenment. It is to God that we must ascend in order to discover its source; it is He Himself who has delegated it to men for the preservation of the community fresh from His hands.

"To God alone," says the Apostle Jude, 'belongeth dominion and power' (verse 25). 'By me kings reign and princes decree justice,' saith the Lord in the Book of Proverbs (ch. 8, v. 15). Jesus Christ teaches us our duties towards those in authority when he says:—'Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's.' (St. Matthew, ch. 22, v. 21.) St. Paul saith:—'Let every soul be in subjection to the higher powers: for there is no power but of God; and the powers that be are ordained of God. Therefore he that resisteth the power withstandeth the ordinance of God.' (Romans, ch. 13, v. 1-2.) And in order further to convince us, he adds:—'Wherefore ye must needs be in subjection, not only because of the wrath, but also for conscience sake.' (Romans, ch. 5, v. 5.)

"Therefore, my very dear brethren, inasmuch as the federal union which is going into operation, proceeds from lawful authority, you will regard it as a law for yourselves, and you will obey the command of God by obeying it in all sincerity. It is besides to your interest to do so, as it is a matter of conscience, in order that it may result in the common good, and in this way secure the benefits to individuals. Soon you will be called upon to choose those who either in the Federal Parliament or in the Local Legislature will work to put into practice the new Constitution. You will then guard against giving your votes in favor of those who are disposed to fight against it or prevent its working, but you will give them to citizens proved and acknowledged as having at heart the wish to make it useful in promoting the greatest good of the country."

Now, Mr. Speaker, you may go amongst our parish priests in Lower Canada, and you will find that every one of them—men of talent and science as they are—you will find that they teach to the bottom of their hearts pay obedience to the laws, and be faithful and loyal to the Crown. That is one of the reasons why we are loyal. It is also our interest to be loyal. In this country we enjoy the fullest freedom that citizens of any country may expect. We practice freely our religion, we talk our language, we enjoy our own customs, and we live in peace and harmony with all the different races and creeds of the Dominion. We enjoy a constitution which we admire, and we are proud of being British subjects, because we belong to a country which has mastered nearly the whole world, and because the constitution of that country is based on an experience of centuries, and assures the liberty of the people. We are loyal because we find freedom, justice and peace under that constitution. We do not believe—for my part I do not believe—and I know that I express the views of my constituents, when I say that they do not believe in the republican form of government, under which a president or an executive becomes an autocrat for four years after an election. We believe in the British constitution, under which the majority of the people are always and at every moment commanding. We believe that, with the civilisation and enlightenment of the present century, the people are fully able to govern themselves by themselves; and this is the essence of the form of government we have received from England. Of course, we would feel some pride in being our own masters, in having no colonial tie; but, Mr. Speaker, the advantages we derive from that tie—the protection of the British flag all over the seas, and our more intimate relations with the English people—fully compensate for the want of that sentiment of pride in being our own masters. Besides, if in years past England has been perhaps unfair to Canada, of late years, I must say, she has become more and more just, she has been extending greater liberties to Canada, she has come to look upon us as one of her most important possessions, one of her possessions most able to govern itself; and we have the pleasure of seeing every day that English statesmen are learning more about Canada, and are coming more to respect her and to give her full protection. I find in an English author a résumé of the benefits which we derive from British connection. Dr. Withrow, in his "History of Canada," says:

"The conquest of Canada by the British was the most fortunate event in its history. It supplanted the institutions of the middle ages by those of modern civilisation. It gave local self-government for abject submission to a foreign power and a corrupt court. It gave the protection of the Habeas Corpus and trial by jury, instead of the oppressive tribunals of feudalism. For ignorance and repression, it gave cheap schools and a free press. It removed the arbitrary shackles from trade and abolished its unjust monopolies. It enfranchised the serfs of the soil and restricted the excessive power of the seigneurs. It gave an immeasurably ampler liberty to the people and a loftier impulse to progress than was before known. It banished the greedy cormorants who grew rich by the official plunder of the poor. The waste and ruin of a prolonged and cruel war were succeeded by the reign of peace and prosperity; and the pinchings of famine, by the rejoicings of abundance. The habitants could now cultivate their long-neglected acres free from the molestation of Indian massacres or the fear of British invasion. Even the conquered colonists themselves soon recognised their improved condition under their generous conquerors."

Well, Mr. Speaker, we have kept our civil laws, but we have also with thanks and gratitude received from England her criminal laws, and I believe that the criminal laws of England are as perfect as human genius and experience can make them. Our civil laws, based on the Roman laws, are also admirable and are quoted in all the tribunals of the world. Under this system of laws we feel happy and contented. So, Mr. Speaker, you see some of the reasons why we are loyal. The more we know of our English-speaking friends in this country, the more we learn to appreciate them; and I may say that if among those who do not know us there may be sentiments against us, those sentiments soon disappear when we have opportunities of mutual intercourse and are enabled to know each other more perfectly. We admire the qualities of the English-speaking subjects of Britain, and they seem to regard the qualities of our race with pleasure also. I think, on this part of the continent, by mutual agreement, by mutual forbearance, we may live in harmony under the protection of the British flag, and approach the consummation dreamed by many of our people—that there may be a great Canadian nation composed of different races, but all animated with the desire of fostering the general welfare of all. In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I will with pleasure repeat the words of one of our most popular and celebrated public men, Sir Etienne Pascal Taché: That the last gun that would be fired in defence of the British flag on this continent will be fired by a French Canadian.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When I first saw the motion of my hon. friend on the paper, the only doubt in my mind was whether there was any special occasion for the Commons of Canada to renew the assurance of their loyalty towards Her Majesty. If I had any doubt whatever, it has been more than removed by the clear and lucid statement of my hon. friend in moving the resolution. I cordially agree with every word of his eloquent remarks, and I hope and believe that the House will respond to the resolution and to the sentiments which my hon. friend has expressed. As my hon. friend has just stated, the conversation which I sought with him was simply for the purpose of suggesting for his consideration some verbal alterations, because I thought it well that if possible the resolution should be received and carried without any amendment or suggestion of amendment; and my hon. friend was kind enough to view with favor some of the suggestions I made. I hope that the desire expressed by my hon. friend, that this resolution should be adopted by the House without any controversial remarks or any statement which in any way might impair the effect which my hon. friend's address ought to have in this House and in the country, and out of the country, will be realised. I shall say no more, Mr. Speaker, except that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice has suggested an amendment which did not occur to me, but which is perfectly correct: that is, that the Address should, according to the ordinary form of Addresses to Her Majesty, begin, "Most Gracious Sovereign." However, I cordially agree with everything my hon. friend has said. I believe the resolution truly expresses the sentiments of the representatives of the people and of the whole people of Canada; and after hearing him, I am of the same opinion as he is, that this is a very opportune occasion, under all the circumstances, for expressing the sentiments contained in the resolution.

Mr. LAURIER. I am also of the opinion that perhaps there was no occasion for my hon. friend moving such an Address as this. We all appreciate the motives which have induced him to do so; but the resolution itself, unless it were coupled with some such remarks as those which have just fallen from the First Minister, would almost imply that there was some necessity for renewing our expressions of loyalty to the British Crown. Now it is useless to say that there is no such necessity whatever coming from any quarter, because from all quarters of Canada there is nothing but the most unswerving loyalty to the British Crown at this moment, and devotion and attachment to the person of Her Majesty. The great qualities that Her Majesty has exhibited as Queen and as woman during her long career, have made the question of loyalty not only a feeling of duty, but a personal feeling in the heart of every one of her subjects. What I am afraid of, however, is that there is a mistake made sometimes, that what is mistaken for disloyalty is nothing more or less than the natural anxiety which all Canadians naturally have as to their future. I thank my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) who has spoken for the race to which he and I belong, for the way in which he has alluded to the French Canadians. He has alluded to the fact that in the first year of Her Majesty's reign our compatriots rose in rebellion against the Crown; but I repeat what he stated, that the fair and generous treatment which we have ever since received, and which I hope we will ever receive in the future, has converted that sentiment of bitterness into a sentiment of devotion to the British Crown. My hon. friend, however, said that our aim was to create a great nation on this side of the ocean. Well, if this is our aim, as it is, to create a great nation on this side of the ocean, based, as I hope, on British institutions, this brings us to the fact that our connection with Great Britain cannot remain forever what it is at the present day. As long as the powers of self-government, which we now enjoy, are adequate to our national requirements, for my part I endorse and will endorse every word which is contained in this Address, but—I speak with all candor—I do not expect that Canada will remain forever a colony. There is no necessity to enter into this question at present. Now our citizenship is adequate to our requirements, but I think our condition might be improved, and this might be the subject of further discussion. I cannot lose sight of the fact that at present there is a movement in favor of Imperial federation. That movement implies that our present relations with Great Britain might be improved. It does not follow that our relations with Great Britain are deemed unsatisfactory, but simply that they might be improved. I agree with the sentiment that our relations with Great Britain may be improved, whether in the way indicated by that movement or in any other way, but, whatever may be the future relations of this country to Great Britain, as long as we remain as we are to-day, with the great measure of liberty which we have received from Great Britain, we are quite happy to express our feeling of attachment to the Crown of England and to the person of Her Majesty.

Mr. MITCHELL. It may not be inopportune for me to make a few remarks on such a proposition as this. I endorse every sentiment which has been uttered by the mover of the resolution (Mr. Mulock), and I listened with pleasure to the repetition of the history of the loyalty of our French fellow-subjects to the Throne of England. I may say that I looked upon it with a little suspicion when it was first introduced, because I thought it might imply some antagonism to our neighbors and kinsmen on the south of the line, but I think that the present resolution will not be looked upon as in any way antagonistic to them. I believe it is the interest of this country to maintain the most friendly relations with the people of the United States, and, as I understand the statement of the mover of the resolution, he was induced to take this step mainly in order to correct the impressions which our friends on the south of the line might have obtained from statements made to them, or from the press, as to the sentiments or the loyalty of the people of Canada. I have been pleased to hear the expressions from both sides of the House in reference to our loyalty to the Throne and Constitution of England. I am as loyal as any man in this country. I am no annexationist. I am no advocate for independence. But, as my hon. friend, the leader of the second-rate party in this House—because I recognise three parties, and, perhaps, for all I can tell, there may be four parties—has stated, I recognise that Canada cannot and will not always remain a colony; but I am willing to abide the tide of events. We have made a success as a colony. We have had prosperity; perhaps not always as great as many might desire. We have had just laws; perhaps not always executed as justly as some of us might expect. But we have had peace and prosperity in this land; we have, under the aegis and protection of the greatest nation in the world, attained to a position which, notwithstanding what certain statesmen in England some fifteen or twenty years ago may have said as to the weakness of Canada, prevents anyone now from denying that we are a source of strength to the home country, and must be so as long as we remain in connection with her. Long may it be before that connection is severed; but, I may say, that it cannot remain in harmony and with satisfaction to the people of Canada if the interests of Canada are neglected or overlooked. I make this one observation not to raise any discussion on a motion of this kind—for I would deprecate that—but simply to tell the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government, that it is his duty and that of his Government, when they are sending this Address to Her Majesty, to inform her Ministers that there are some people, at all events, in this Parliament of Canada who think that the interests of Canada have for some time past not been receiving that attention and protection to which they are entitled. I will not particularise now this question to which I allude. Every one here understands to what I refer. I only hope that the Government, in sending this Address to the home Government, will represent that, if Canada shows a fealty to the English Crown and a desire to aid in the protection of the Empire, she has a right to expect a corresponding protection from the Empire in regard to the rights which really belong to it, and in connection with which that fealty is given. In conclusion, I may say that there are some political doctors who, of late, have promulgated vague changes and ideas under the name of Imperial Federation, as to the advantage which the Empire and Canada might gain from the creation of a central authority in London with colonial representation. We are progressing satisfactorily now, and I want these political doctors to leave us alone. We are satisfied with the relations which Canada has with the Empire at present, and they had better leave well alone. If they imagine that we will submit to any sort of taxation dictated by a body assembled in London, they will find that no one possessing any sense in Canada will consent to anything of the kind. There is no man of sense in Canada who would consent to it. I merely throw this suggestion out now in order that, when we are sending this devoted and loyal Address to Her Majesty, as representing the sentiments of the people of Canada, we should also let Her Majesty's Ministers know that if they countenance, as some have countenanced, this agitation for a change in our relations, based upon giving up a certain portion of our liberties, the people of Canada are not unanimous, at all events, and I believe there is only a small fragment of them that feel inclined in that way. I felt it a duty to myself, as a representative man, when we are sending this Address, that we should also let them know that there are some things in which our relations to the Empire, and to the Executive of the Empire, might be very much improved in the interests of Canada.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). Representing a remote part of Canada on our most southerly frontier, and which is to some extent cut off from the rest of the Dominion, I may be permitted to say that I cordially join in the sentiments of the mover of this resolution. I would not have trespassed upon the time of the House were it not that I have seen in newspapers lately some reference to my constituency, and to the town in which I live. Well, Mr. Speaker, although I do not think it necessary to contradict every newspaper report, I take this opportunity to say there is no truth in the newspaper statements derogatory to the loyalty of my constituency, or of the town of Windsor in which I live. I believe it as loyal a town as is to be found in Canada, and I would like no easier task than to contest that constituency with an annexationist. I may say that the town gave me a very large majority at the last general election, and I am very certain that the question of annexation if put forward, would increase rather than lessen that majority, as there are many patriotic old Reformers who would support me upon such an issue. Some statements have been made in the press affecting a fellow townsman of mine, Mr. Solomon White, lately a member of the Provincial Legislature. I have Mr. White's personal assurance that what he did say was, that if our relations were to be changed, if there was to be any constitutional change in the direction of independence, while he is perfectly satisfied with our relations with the mother country now existing, rather than support independence he would go in for political union with the United States. While I do not echo his sentiments in that regard, I think there are men in this House, and a good many men in the country, who would agree with him. I think Mr. White has a perfect right, as we all have, to exercise our own judgment as to the future, because we all must look forward to some future for this country. For my part, I hope the time is far distant when there may be any severance of the tie binding us to the mother country. I believe there is no possibility of annexation to the United States under their present constitutional system. Our own constitution rests on a far broader basis of liberty; we are more in touch with popular sentiment, and the people have a more direct control over those who serve them in a public capacity. During the greater part of my lifetime I have lived upon our south-western frontier and have had exceptional opportunities of studying the two forms of government, and I have no hesitation in saying that all my sympathies are with our own system, as infinitely superior in the spirit of true liberty, and all my energies will be devoted to supporting and perpetuating the system of government which we possess. I heartily endorse the sentiments of my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) in the Address which he has moved in this House this afternoon.

House divided on motion of Mr. Mulock.

SETTLERS ON THE RAILWAY RESERVE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. LAURIER moved for :

1. Copies of all petitions addressed to His Excellency the Governor General by settlers in the districts of Cranberry, Cedar, Wellington, Nanoose, and Nanaimo, British Columbia, asking the privilege of obtaining the lands on which they had squatted on the Island Railway Reserve on ordinary terms allowed to settlers, viz., that their grant should include surface and minerals. 2. For copies of all Orders in Council passed to authorise a Commission to enquire into the claims of the said settlers.

He said : It has been represented to me that certain settlers who are interested in this motion are squatters upon land which subsequently became part of the railway belt in the island. It has been represented to me also that they were desirous of obtaining pieces of land, and should have obtained them before the lands became part of the railway belt. I have been also informed that upon several different occasions they have made complaints and representations to the Government in that regard. It is a matter of public notoriety that upon one or two occasions they made their complaints to His Excellency the Governor General when he visited British Columbia. I understand a rumor has gone abroad, founded or not founded in fact, I do not know—and this is a point on which I desire to be informed—that in answer to petitions which were placed in the hands of His Excellency, an Order in Council had been passed authorising the issuing of a Commission to investigate the claims of those settlers. Whether such an order has been passed or not, the impression has certainly prevailed for some years past in that district that such an order had been issued ; and what I desire to ascertain is whether such an order has been issued or not ; if the order has been issued why is it not complied with, or, if the order has not been issued, whether it is the intention of the Government to enquire into the claims of those squatters in order to ascertain whether they can be granted or not ?

Mr. GORDON. This motion has taken me somewhat by surprise to-day, and also at some disadvantage, as I am not very well. If I remember rightly I called for a similar return, in fact for all correspondence relating to these railway lands, in 1887, and from the return brought down, I was unable to find either the petition referred to in the motion of the hon. gentleman or the Order in Council referred to in the motion. I took every opportunity, and made every effort possible, to ascertain if anything had emanated from the Government, or any department thereof, giving the settlers any reason to believe that they were to be entitled to the mineral rights under the lands within the railway belt. When the Bill granting those lands to the Esquimault and Nanaimo Railway Company was before this House, I think, on referring to Hansard, it will be found that in pleading for those settlers, I mentioned the fact that there were 122 settlers on those lands. I also mentioned the fact that they had been led to believe by different persons that they had a claim, not only on the Local Government, but also on the hon. gentleman who led the Government in 1875. It was a vague claim, however, and when it came to be examined it really did not amount to a claim. Other difficulties have arisen with respect to the mineral rights. Some of the parties who claim to be squatters, and justly so, and who have been squatters within my own knowledge since 1870, have so far failed to obtain the right to their pre-emption records. As will be remembered, the Local Government were constituted by that Act the agents of the Government of Canada. There was no alternative given to the Canadian Government to dismiss them and appoint other agents, but their agency was complete ; and any settler who happened to incur the displeasure of the railway company met with opposition to their records from the then Commissioner of Lands and Works in British Columbia. Some of the settlers have, to my own knowledge, suffered very great hardship and are now threatened with eviction. But it is not my fault ; and I fancy this appeal to the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition has been due to a feeling entertained by those settlers that their interests have been neglected by the Government, and perhaps by myself, although they do not convey that view in their communications to me. They simply inform me of the fact that they have placed their case in the hands of the leader of the Opposition, and referred him to me for information on the subject. I have had no communication with the hon. gentleman beyond asking him, the other day, to allow the motion to stand for one day in order that I might read over my letter from the party again, and to which the hon. gentleman kindly consented. Referring to the complaints of those squatters, the very foundation of them lies in the passing of the Bill under which the land was handed over to the railway company. I find the hon. gentleman's name among the names of those who voted for that Bill, which gave that company all the rights they possess and all the powers they are exercising over the people who now complain. My name is not to be found in that list. In answering the people who applied to me I stated my surprise that they had asked the leader of the Opposition to investigate the matter when he himself was among those who—I do not say wilfully, but in ignorance of the condition of affairs in British Columbia—voted for a Bill which, no doubt, he believed to be right but which at the same time caused all the injury of which these people complain. I do not know that I can add anything further than to say that I relieve the hon. gentleman of any desire to interfere in matters within the electoral district of Vancouver. It is his right, if appealed to, to take this action, and if he can devise any means by which the wrongs of those people can be righted he shall have my support; if he can devise any means to repeal that Act, that is acting more harshly than was even dreamed of when I appealed to the House on the subject, he shall have my support to the fullest possible extent. In any condemnation of that scheme he himself must stand as having assisted its adoption. I hope, however, some relief may be obtained, by which the courts may be placed in a position that they may not find the power vested in the Bill to transfer to that company the rights which they now claim to exercise, and that the people will yet be enabled to obtain their rights. If the motion of the hon. gentleman will tend in that direction, I will, on their behalf, feel very much obliged to him and to hon. members who will support it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. In reply to the appeal made by the leader of the Opposition, I may state, as the hon. member for Vancouver says, that all correspondence in relation to this matter was brought down in 1887, on June 22nd, in accordance with the motion passed. The Department over which I preside has no record of any Order in Council having been passed directing that a Commissioner be appointed to enquire into that matter. There is no Order in Council that I can place, and I believe none has been passed. Since the date those papers were brought down to the House, we have no communications whatever in our Department with reference to this matter.

Mr. LAURIER. I did not bring up this subject with a view to raise any question as to the suggestion of any policy to be followed in regard to these matters. The only desire I had in view, in bringing up this matter, was to know whether or not there had been such an Order in Council passed, as I am informed had been represented in the district to have been passed. The return which was brought down in 1887, as far as I understand, contained no petition whatever from the inhabitants of these districts. This was surprising to the people, and that is the reason why I brought up this motion, because they allege for a certainty that upon one or two different occasions they laid their grievances by petition before His Excellency the Governor General, on his visit to British Columbia. Now, it is extraordinary to them that having presented those petitions and submitted their grievances, that when they ask to have these petitions brought before the House, the answer should be there is no petition at all. They believe somehow that those petitions have been pigeon-holed away and forgotten, and that if a full enquiry were to be instituted, those petitions would be found. At all events, one thing is certain: that they will know by the debate which took place to-day the position in which they stand. The only object I had in view in bringing forward the question was to know exactly how the matter stands. The settlers in these districts will now know that their petitions are not in the Department; they will know no Order in Council has been passed to investigate their claims, and they will take their remedy afterwards. As to what course ought to be followed by them afterwards, or as to whether their claims are well founded or not, the instructions which I had do not go so far as to say. The instructions were to have something tangible on which they could act one way or the other, and now they have this, which is nothing at all.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have given the hon. gentleman the information I obtained from my Department after I saw his notice on the paper. I will make further enquiries, and if I find that there are other papers anywhere of course they will be brought down.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand this motion is to stand.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If you please.
Motion agreed to.

SULTANA ISLAND.

Mr. BARRON moved for:

Return showing whether or not the island known as Sultana Island, in the Lake of the Woods, has been sold, and if sold, showing by what right or title the Government of Canada claimed to have the power to sell the same; showing, also, all correspondence had between the Government of Canada and the purchaser or purchasers of said island, or the solicitors or other persons acting on behalf of such purchaser or purchasers (if any); showing, also, the area of land contained in said island, and the value and extent of the pine timber thereupon, and the price or amount for which the said island was sold, and the names and addresses of the purchaser or purchasers thereof.

He said: I would like to have that motion amended so as to include the bringing down of any map there may be showing the location of the islands themselves.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior whether the Government of Ontario have not claimed these islands as a portion of the Crown domain of that Province; and if so, whether any correspondence has taken place between the Department and the Government on the subject? If that be the case, I think it will be very desirable that this motion should be amended so as to embrace that correspondence also.

Mr. DEWDNEY. In correspondence with the Deputy Minister of my Department, I found out that the Crown Lands Department of Toronto had laid claim to Sultana Island, after it was found that there were mineral deposits upon it, and probably there may be correspondence upon the subject. If so, I will be glad to bring that down, as well as the maps which the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barron) asked for.

Mr. BARRON. Since putting that motion on the Order paper, I have been advised that at one time the island was leased prior to the sale. I would like to have the motion so amended as to include any lease there may be.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am not aware of any lease, but I will bring everything down.

Motion agreed to.

C. P. R. BRIDGES IN BAGOT COUNTY.

Mr. DUPONT (Translation) moved for :

Copies of all petitions, letters or other documents addressed to the Government, complaining of the condition of the bridges on the branch lines of the railways in the county of Bagot and the neighboring counties, worked by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

He said : I am not inspired by any hostile design, Mr. Speaker, against the Canadian Pacific Railway in making this motion. Quite on the contrary, for I have always been, as much as lay in my power, by my votes in this House, favorable to this company, which was destined to develop the portions of our country, which ought to have been and which were not up to that time accessible to colonisation. For some years past, certain lines of railway in the county of Bagot and the neighboring counties, running under charters obtained from the Local Government, fell under the control of the Canadian Pacific. On these railway lines, originally called the "South Eastern," "The Montreal, Portland and Boston" and "The St. Lawrence and Lake Champlain Junction Railway," there were temporary structures; portions of the railway and the bridges were built of wood of a very inferior character. During the ten years since these lines have been built, these bridges have not been renewed, and the working of these lines has been carried on as in the past by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Several citizens of the county of Bagot and the neighboring counties state that certain portions of these roads are dangerous to the travelling public, and that there will result sooner or later, to the company as well as to the public, considerable injury and loss, owing to the bad condition of these lines. My intention, Mr. Speaker, is to draw the attention of the Government to these facts before a catastrophe takes place. I trust that the Government, through its engineers, will prevent in this portion of the Province of Quebec, a catastrophe as disastrous as that which overtook the "Vermont Central" through the imperfections of that line—I allude now to the accident at the White River Junction. The Canadian Pacific Railway, Mr. Speaker, is not always readily disposed to renew certain works which ought to be so renewed, when they are not owners of the lines but merely lessees of certain branches of these roads. For this reason I will venture to ask the Government to see that this company places the travelling public and the citizens of this portion of the country in a position to be able to travel with the same safety and comfort that is to be found on all other lines of railway. I have no intention to injure in any way the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but I make these observations, I repeat, in the interests of the public, of the Government itself, as well as of the company; for if any disaster should happen on these lines, it would throw a heavy responsibility on the Government and on the company.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There can be no objection to this motion passing. If there are any petitions or correspondence they will be brought down. From the memorandum sent me, I do not find that there are any such petitions or correspondence; but I am sure we are all obliged to my hon. friend for calling the attention of the Government to the state of these railways. Of course, it is of the greatest importance that there should not be any doubt as to the safety of any railway, and since the hon. gentleman has called my attention to the matter, I will, as Minister of Railways, make it my duty to cause an immediate enquiry to be made as to the state of the railways to which he refers.

Motion agreed to.

THE GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. RINFRET (Translation) moved for :

Copies of all petitions, correspondence and documents of every character respecting the Great Eastern Railway, or any line of railway which it is proposed to lay between Lévis and Montreal, following the course of the river St. Lawrence.

He said : Last Session, Mr. Speaker, I drew the attention of the House and of the Government to the great importance, looking towards the general interests of the country, that was to be attached to the granting facilities for the building of a railway connecting the last railway station at Lévis with the city of Montreal. The Hon. Minister of Public Works answered that the Government would interest themselves in the construction of this line : which statement he has verified by granting subsidies to it on many occasions. At the last Session I had the pleasure of seeing that grants were made for the encouragement of the Great Eastern Railway; but unfortunately the grants of the last Session have not been drawn upon, for reasons which I cannot understand; but I suppose that the contractors had not the necessary means to carry out the works of construction. These delays in the building of this road have caused grievous disappointment in the county which I represent, as well as in the neighboring counties. And I might say that not only in these counties but also among business men and merchants in general of the cities of Lévis, Quebec and Montreal, there are misgivings as to the final success in securing the building of this line; so keen did these become that last summer, the French Board of Trade of Montreal considered it right to interfere. It called a meeting at Nicolet, composed of delegates from Montreal and the other parts of the Province interested in the building of the Great Eastern Railway. At this meeting, certain resolutions were adopted, and, although they may be somewhat lengthy, I do not think that I can do better than to bring them before the House, in order that it may see their importance. This is how they read :

The convention having been organised as aforesaid and debate thereon having taken place according to the usual forms, the following resolution was unanimously adopted by the delegates present:—

1. Whereas the parishes ranged in sequence on the south shore of the river St. Lawrence, from the parish of La Prairie to the city of Lévis, and the parishes adjoining the said parishes, but more particularly those included in the territory between Lévis and Sorel, are deprived of the advantages to be derived from a railway which would give them direct communication with Montreal and its great network of railways to the west, and with the Maritime Provinces on the east by way of the Intercolonial Railway;
2. Whereas the assured success of the railway from Montreal, as regards a number of the said parishes, and that of the other lines projected or partially built admits of grave doubts;
3. Whereas the Intercolonial Railway does not pay expenses because at a point in the neighborhood of Lévis its traffic is absorbed by a line which controls the rates for freight or passengers from Halifax to Montreal, to wit the line of the Grand Trunk Railway;

4. Whereas a railway starting from the present terminus of the Intercolonial Railway at Lévis, would reach Montreal by passing through the said parishes of the south shore, and would absorb the Montreal and Sorel Railway, and the other lines projected or partially built,—would be able to pay expenses by means of its local traffic, seeing that the parishes in question include a population of more than 60,000 souls, producing an annual value of exports of about $3,700,000;

5. Whereas such a railway would aid, by forming one unbroken means of communication or trunk line between Montreal and the Maritime Provinces, to further develop the rich country through which it would run, while at the same time releasing the Intercolonial from a duty which is a heavy charge upon the Dominion exchequer;

6. Whereas the Intercolonial Railway was projected and built in its inception with the object of binding together all the Provinces of the Dominion; and with its present terminus it does not fully accomplish the object of its construction, which would be attained if it was pushed as far as Montreal;

7. Whereas the extension of the Intercolonial Railway as far as Montreal, along the St. Lawrence River, on the south shore, would not be injurious to the railways constructed in the interests of the Province of Quebec, but would be, on the contrary, a new reason for their material development;

8. Whereas the aforesaid parishes, which only possess communication with the important centres of the country during the summer season, are unanimous in demanding the said extension of the Intercolonial from Montreal to Lévis in order to remedy these inconveniences which are injurious to their development;

It is hereby resolved to pray the Dominion Government to undertake at their own cost the construction of a railway, from the present terminus of the Intercolonial, as far as the city of Montreal, proceeding by way of the south shore of the river St. Lawrence.

This resolution, Mr. Speaker, was adopted by all the delegates present, who numbered from two to three hundred. I consider that these resolutions are of great importance,—and that it was my duty to bring them before this House. I do not expect that the Dominion Government can pronounce this day upon the question. However, I shall take advantage of the opportunity to remark that there are only 160 miles of railway yet to be built in order to connect the Intercolonial with the other railways of the west. We have spent more than $100,000,000 on the Intercolonial and the Canadian Pacific. There only remain about $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 to spend in order to link together these lines which are the most important in the country. I think, further, that it would be easy to prove to the House that this addition to the public debt, so far from being a burden upon the country, would be of great service to it, inasmuch as the projected line would pay its expenses. It is a well known fact that the Pacific line from Montreal to Quebec, on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, is one of the best paying portions of the Pacific Railway. The parishes on the south shore are as rich or richer, perhaps, than those on the north shore of the St. Lawrence; and I have no doubt but that in a few years from this time the local traffic will be sufficient to pay, not only the interest on the money expended, but even handsome dividends. The building of this line would have, besides, the advantage of increasing the traffic on the Intercolonial: the carriage of freight between Montreal and Lévis often meets with difficulties and delays, because the Grand Trunk is not equal to the traffic between these two points. Another disadvantage, which I may mention in passing, is that up to the present time the carriage of freight is absolutely controlled by the Grand Trunk. It follows from this that the Intercolonial does not reap the benefits which it would were there a direct line between Lévis and Montreal. So I say that if the Government would consent to build a line between Lévis and Montreal, the Intercolonial would derive considerable advantage; which would enable it to lessen considerably the annual deficits. At the meeting held at Nicolet, of which I spoke a moment ago, there were other proposals made, not put in writing but merely enunciated by the speakers present. It was proposed that if the Government did not wish itself to undertake the building of this line between Lévis and Montreal, they could assist in another way, namely, in helping to construct the bridges of the road. I know that it is not customary for the Government to make grants for such a purpose, although such a course may not be without precedent. But I regret to say that a request to this end was made by the Great Eastern Company and they were refused. I hope however that the Government will reconsider its decision, and that if they do not decide upon building the road from Lévis to Montreal, they will at least aid in the building of the bridges on this line,—one of the most important in the country.

Mr. GUAY. It is with the greatest pleasure that I rise to support the motion which has just been made by my hon. friend from Lotbinière (Mr. Rinfret). I do not hesitate in saying that I but echo the sentiments of the people of the south shore of the St. Lawrence from Lévis to Montreal, when I state that they would be most happy if the Government would undertake to build the Great Eastern Railway, in order to make a direct connection between the Intercolonial present terminus and Montreal. Last summer a meeting was called at Nicolet by the members of the French Board of Trade of Montreal, and the leading citizens who were interested in the scheme. The object of this meeting was to pass the resolutions which have just been read to the House by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Rinfret). I had been invited to be present and I had promised to be there, but unfortunately vexatious circumstances—sickness in my family—prevented me from going there. However I seize the present opportunity to declare before the House, that I wholly concur in the resolutions which were adopted by the Board of Trade of Montreal in meeting assembled at Nicolet. And I venture to hope that the Government will find the means to place in the estimates of this Session a sum of money sufficient to assure the building of this road, or at least to grant a sum sufficient to aid in the construction of the bridges. In fact, if I am well informed, I believe that this is almost the only thing which hinders at the present moment the construction of this great iron road. I am informed that there are bridges which will cost very great sums of money—something like three-quarters of a million of dollars. In conclusion, I venture to hope that the hon. Minister of Public Works, who has so far shown himself to be favorable to this enterprise, will continue to give it his patronage, and that he will assure, by his influence, during the present Session, the construction of this great iron highway.

Motion agreed to.

RETURNS ORDERED

Copies of all petitions, reports of engineers, and all correspondence in reference to the dredging of the bar at the mouth of the River Thames, in the County of Kent, Ontario.—(Mr. Campbell.)

Return showing the date of the creation of the Trent Valley Canal Commission, the time and place of the first sitting, the actual number of days it has actually been occupied in the work appertaining to the said commission, and the number of days and of sittings held in taking and receiving evidence, and the places whereat thus far sittings of the commission have been held.—(Mr. Barron.)

Copy of the quarantine regulations of Grosse Isle, together with all Orders in Council and instructions given to the medical officers at said station.—(Mr. Landerkin.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 5.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 30th January, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 32) to incorporate the Grand Orange Lodge of British America.—(Mr. Wallace.)

REUTER'S TELEGRAPH AGENCY.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Have the Government expended any money upon the account of any telegrams sent from Canada in the year 1889 through Reuter's Agency? If so, how much, and under what head does it appear in the Auditor General's Report?

Mr. COLBY. The sum of $135.60 was paid in the year 1889 for telegrams. Nothing has been paid since March last. The amount was paid out of the contingencies of the Privy Council. I am not aware under what head it appears in the Auditor General's Report.

CENTRAL EXPERIMENTAL FARM.

Mr. DUPONT (for Mr. CROMB) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to establish an experimental dairy department in connection with the Central Experimental Farm? If so, when?

Mr. CARLING. The subject is now receiving the consideration of the Government.

MANITOBA SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. WATSON asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to offer for sale any of the school lands in the Province of Manitoba at an early date? If so, in what districts are the lands situated that will be offered for sale?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No date for holding the next general sale of school lands in Manitoba has yet been determined on, nor has it been decided what particular parcels of land will be offered. An inspection of the school lands in the Province, with a view to determining their probable value and eligibility for sale, has been in progress for the past season. The public will be duly notified, as in the past, when it is decided to hold such sale. One or two small parcels may be offered in the interval, as, for instance, a quarter of section 11, Township 5, Range 14, west of the 1st Meridian, which the Government of Manitoba ask to have put up because the Northern Pacific and Manitoba Railway Company want to acquire it for town site and station ground purposes.

RECIPROCITY IN WRECKING, &c.

On the Order for second reading of Bill (No. 2) to permit reciprocity in wrecking and the towing of vessels and rafts, being called;

Mr. CHARLTON. It is arranged between the promoters of the three wrecking Bills now before the House, that this Bill shall stand over until Thursday, if the Government will consent to have the three Bills made the first Orders upon Thursday.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As it will be, no doubt, more convenient to have a day fixed for these three Bills, I see no objection to the request of the hon. gentleman.

Order allowed to stand.

I. C. R.—PASSENGER AND MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec) moved for:

Copies of all correspondence and documents respecting the passenger and mail train service on the Intercolonial Railway between Lévis and Campbelltown.

He said: I wish to call the attention of the Government to the arrangements existing between Lévis and Campbelltown, especially Lévis and Rimouski, with regard to passenger and mail service, as there are general complaints on the subject. The following statement has been given me of the hours when the trains leave Lévis and arrive at Rivière du Loup. Since the beginning of October there have been three passenger trains a day. One leaves Lévis at 8 o'clock a.m., arriving at Rivière du Loup at 3 p.m.; another leaves Lévis at 3.30 p.m., arriving at Rivière du Loup at 6 o'clock in the afternoon; and the last one, which is called the market train, leaves Lévis at 5 p.m., arriving at Rivière du Loup at 1 a.m. From Rivière du Loup to Lévis the trains leave as follows: One at 7.45 a.m., one at 9, and a third at 9.20 a.m., and there is no train whatever for Lévis after that until 10 p.m. The first arrives at Lévis at 3 p.m., the second at 6 p.m., the express train from Halifax at 1.10 p.m., and there is no other train until 10 o'clock at night.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Is the train that arrives at Rivière du Loup from below the fast through train?

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). The fast train is the one leaving Rivière du Loup at 9.20 a.m., and arriving at Lévis at 1.10 p.m., so that there is no train at all from 9.20 a.m. until 10 at night. Another objection to the train arrangements is that the mail train does not stop at several important stations where there is a large quantity of mail matter. The mail bags are thrown from the train as it passes, and caught at the station; and the mail bags to be received on board are thrown on board in the same way, and the result has been that on several occasions mail bags both ways have been lost, and could only be found after several days' search. This system causes a great deal of confusion and inconvenience to the trade of that portion of our province. What the people along the line ask, is, that the same arrangements which are made in summer should be continued in winter. There is no complaint whatever about the train arrangements in summer, and to make this change would not involve any additional expense, as it would not entail any additional train service. It seems as if that portion of the line from Rivière du Loup to Quebec was not to be considered at all. The train arrangements seem to have been made to suit some other portions of the line, without paying any attention whatever to the requirements of the public on that most important section. There is not a portion of the Intercolonial Railway which passes through a richer and more thickly-populated country, and that part of the country certainly deserves more consideration. The trade of the city of Quebec has suffered a great deal, the train arrangements being such that they give an interest to the people of that district to go straight through to Montreal, instead of stopping at Quebec. I postponed making this motion for a few days at the demand of the hon. member for Rimouski. I regret he is still too unwell to be in his seat, and do not care to risk postponement any longer, as I am afraid the motion would go too far down on the Order paper. I may add that it is at his special request I draw the attention of the House to this matter, and I am quite sure the Government will take steps to have the train arrangements made to suit the people of those localities.

Mr. DESSAINT. (Translation.) Seeing that the Intercolonial Railway passes through the county which I have the honor to represent, Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few words to the remarks which have just been made by the hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier). Since the last changes in the departure of the trains have been made, I have been informed that several petitions have been addressed either to the Government or to Mr. Pottinger, the General Superintendent of the road, asking for the restoration of the hours as they existed last year, because the present arrangements are not most certainly in accordance with the desire of the population or the needs of commerce. As has been said by the hon. the last speaker, nothing would be more advantageous for the public than the changes asked for. In answer to the petitions which have been presented, Mr. Pottinger, or the railway authorities, have replied that as the time-tables have been made for some time, it would be almost impossible to make the desired changes. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is in my opinion, a poor reason for refusing a request which would be to the general interest of all this section of the Province which the Intercolonial traverses. It would have been easy, methinks, to change the hours; and the reason given for not doing so at the time is so far from being correct, that on that portion of the railway between Moncton and Halifax, changes in the hours have been made since the time referred to, and no fear was expressed that they would result in any inconvenience. But in the portion of the Province of Quebec of which I am one of the representatives, it has not been considered proper to take into consideration the reasonable complaints which have been made for a long time. We ask for nothing out of the common. We ask, simply, that the hours of the arrival and departure of the trains be fixed the same as last year, before the winter arrangement; by doing this everybody will be content. I have nothing to say against the local superintendent who received our representations with much good nature, but he was unable to make the desired changes. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the Government will take into consideration the reasonable demands which are made upon them. There is so much inconvenience under the existing system, that the Government would find, if they took the trouble to look into the question, that it is their duty to remedy the state of things. For example, let us take the station of St. Paschal, in the County of Kamouraska; the trains come in, the one at 1.45 p.m. and the other at 5.25 p.m. I must remark that fresh changes have been made in the carriage of the mails. Formerly the mail cart driver was compelled to make a journey to meet each train. To-day all this is changed and the driver of the mail cart is allowed to make but one trip in the afternoon, so that the mails reach us in Kamouraska very late in the evening, and often it is impossible to receive them in time to answer them by the next morning, because the trains leave at half-past seven, and the mail-driver makes but one trip in the morning. All this is very inconvenient for business and professional men. If we had the same hours for the arrival and the departure of the trains as we had last year the public would be fully satisfied. This is all we ask for. Another source of inconvenience we suffer from, is that in the County of Kamouraska the express train does not stop at all the stations. It should stop at least at the more important stations. For example, the express does not stop at Rivière Ouelle, which is an important parish, and where it did stop last year. This station serves also for St. Pacôme. The trains do not stop also at Ste. Hélène or at St. Alexandre, the centres of great business interests. Now, in the County of Temiscouata, represented by my hon. friend Mr. Grandbois, who, I trust, will concur in the statements I have made, the express does not stop at Cacouna, St. Arsène, St. Simon, or at St. Luce. Besides this, in the whole length of the valley of the Metapediac from St. Flavie to Campbellton, there are, if I am not mistaken, fifteen stations, and out of these fifteen stations the express stops at only two; whereas in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia the express stops at nearly all the stations, and stations of far less importance than those I have mentioned. I hope therefore, Mr. Speaker, on account of the reasons which I have given, the grievances of which we complain with so much cause will be removed, and that the hours of the departure and the arrival of the trains will be restored to what they were last year.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I fear I was unable to follow my hon. friend from Kamouraska (Mr. Dessaint) in all the remarks that he made in French, but there is no objection to bringing down all the papers, so that the House may be fully charged with the subject which my hon. friend has brought up. I had expected my hon. friend to make this motion every day for a week or ten days, and I had a memorandum from the Department on the subject, but I have not got it here to-day. The papers will be brought down at once. I know there is a very considerable feeling, from what my hon. friend from Kamouraska (Mr. Dessaint) has told me, in favor of a re-arrangement in regard to some of the trains. The Government may attempt to place some accommodation trains on that line, though of course my hon. friend cannot expect that the express trains will stop at every station.

We desire, however, to accommodate every part of the country through which that railway passes, from Lévis to Halifax, as far as possible.

Motion agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY—THE ESTIMATES.

Mr. FOSTER presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message as follows :—

STANLEY OF PRESTON.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1891, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," the Governor General recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 30th January, 1890.

Mr. FOSTER moved that His Excellency's Message, with the Estimates, be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

LOSS OF THE STEAMER QUINTÉ.

Mr. PLATT moved for :

Copy of report made and evidence taken by the Court of Inquiry ordered by the Department of Marine to investigate the loss of the steamer Quinté, which was burned on Bay of Quinté in the autumn of 1889.

Mr. TUPPER. There is no objection to the motion passing, but I would like to inform the hon. gentleman that it will take some time before the Department will be ready to bring down the return. The evidence has been taken, and it is very voluminous, and the final decision has not been reached. If it meets the wishes of the hon. gentleman, this motion can pass, and as soon as the matter is decided, the papers will be brought down.

Mr. PLATT. How long a time is expected to elapse before the decision will be reached ?

Mr. TUPPER. Not an unreasonable time. Simply sufficient time to allow me to look into the papers, which have only just reached the Department.

Motion agreed to.

DUNDAS AND WATERLOO ROAD.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth) moved for :

Return of copies of all correspondence, petitions, reports or other papers respecting the sale, ownership or condition of the Dundas and Waterloo Macadamised Road, since the close of the Session of 1889.

He said : This is not a matter of very great moment to anyone but the inhabitants of my own county, but it is a matter which has been held in consideration since 1884. The road is only twenty miles long, seventeen miles of which lie in my county, and three miles in the adjoining County of Waterloo. The road is decorated with four tollgates, and, of course, the first duty of the proprietor is to see that no man gets through those tollgates without being tolled. Some six months after the sale, when the conveyance to a new proprietor should have been executed, there was a hitch discovered, and it was found impossible to complete the conveyance, more particularly as the purchaser declined to form a company under the Joint Stock Companies' Act of Ontario.

He kept out of the operation of that Act, and special legislation had to be introduced in this House to enable the Government to convey the road to the purchaser. About that time the Ontario Government set up a claim to the ownership of the road, and the Bill which was introduced here was withdrawn. In 1885, correspondence began between the Department of Public Works and the Department of Justice, with a view to ascertain who were the proprietors of this road. The hon. Minister of Public Works, at the close of the Session of 1885, intimated to the House that at the earliest possible moment the papers would be looked up and the question of ownership would be settled. We find that correspondence began in September, 1885, and we find that in the Session of 1890 that correspondence is still in progress. In the meantime the gentleman that purchased this road, like every other business man, not feeling that he had a very sure tenure of the property, although he was in possession, did not particularly exert himself to put it in a very high state of repair. But he was particularly careful to attend to the tollgate question. He proceeded to load up that road with a series of check gates and devices for the purpose of extracting money out of the community, until at last the community got tired and some of these gates disappeared mysteriously in the night. Since then, not finding that he had sufficient encouragement from the Minister of Public Works to maintain his aggressive policy, the people have been allowed to go by paying the old series of tolls ; and a year ago the County Council of Wentworth felt that it was becoming a nuisance, and they passed a resolution urging the Government to take some steps to settle the ownership of this road. The Reeves of the municipalities of Beverly and West Flamboro', through which the seventeen miles in my county run exclusively, and where they have the honor of paying toll at three distinct gates, also petitioned the Minister of Public Works to have the road inspected, believing that a competent engineer would indicate that the road was not in such a condition as would entitle the proprietor to collect tolls. The Minister kindly sent an engineer, and he went over the road. His report as presented contains sufficient internal evidence that he did not consider the road was in a very high order. I do not know what his instructions were, but there was no indication from the tenor of that report that he was required to inspect the road with a view of ascertaining whether improvements were required, or whether they should be effected. He stated that he saw certain quantities of material lying on the road, and some men at work, and the appearances were that the proprietor was improving that road. The residents on that road tell me that that material is a part of the stock-in-trade, that it has been on that road, not quite ever since they can remember, but that it has been lying on the roadside until the thistles and the weeds have grown up through it ; and if the engineer would go along there again he would see it just waiting to go on the road, as it was years ago, and as it had been there for years previous. Now, when I tell you that the engineer simply appeared on one end of that road and went through to the other in less than one day, you can understand the nature of the inspection. I feel satisfied that no engineer who is expected to report on the condition of a road can make an effective survey of the road in such a limited period: and the result is, that things are dragging on just as they were five years ago, after the road was sold and transferred into the hands of this party. We are told this Session that the correspondence is still going on between the two departments, and that a series of questions that had been sent over to the Department of Public Works for answer, respecting this road, are in process of being replied to. This process has been going on for three or four years. I know that last summer, about every two months, I felt it my duty to write down to the Minister of Public Works and ask him if these papers had found their way to the Department of Justice, with a view of having this question settled; and, invariably, in the course of a week or ten days, I received a reply, saying that they had received my letter, and that they were commanded to acknowledge the receipt thereof; and that as far as I could get. I got as many answers, from time to time, from that Department as would fill a cart—if I had only preserved them. In addition to that, to be just to the Minister, I must say that every time I have interviewed him about this question, he has always been exceedingly kind and exceedingly civil, and promised that the thing should be attended to; and I sometimes felt, after leaving him and saying hard things to him, that I ought to go out into a back yard and hire some individual to kick me for being so uncivil to so gentlemanly a Minister. But, all the same, while this state of things is going on, the people that travel this highway are the parties that are suffering. And there is this difficulty: Since this road was sold the community in the County of Wentworth became tired, thoroughly tired, of the way in which the public highways, upon which tolls were levied in that county, were being maintained; and there has been a systematic warfare upon the proprietors of those roads, simply to require that if the community pay toll on these highways they should, at least, give them a passable highway upon which to travel, with the result that, in some cases, the proprietors of the roads in that county have been obliged to give up their tolls until such time as they made effective repairs. I know one company that for over a year were unable to get tolls replaced upon their highway until these repairs were completed to the satisfaction of the local engineer, who was appointed to inspect these roads; and to-day one of the roads that belongs to the county is in the same position. The engineer inspected that road, and he intimated to the county that unless repairs were completed within a certain time the tolls should go off, and when the time appointed came the tolls went off, and to-day the people are travelling free on that road because the county did not comply with the instructions of that engineer. I have no hesitation in saying that if this road had been in the same category the tolls would have been off that road long ago, and then the community could have waited, with some degree of patience, until this question of ownership was settled. But they are in this position: that while the road is nominally under the control of the Dominion Government, no engineer can interfere with that highway unless he is sent out by the Dominion authorities at Ottawa. The people have petitioned the county judge, and they have moved the county council, and they have worried me, and I have worried the Minister, and still the thing goes on, and still the people are paying toll. I say it is discreditable to the Administration that they should be placed in that position. I know it is a two-penny-half-penny matter interest to this whole Dominion, but I leave it to any member in this House if, under these circumstances, it is not a serious thing to be thus, from year to year, kept in the position of being forced to pay tolls for a road that I have no hesitation in saying, if it was under the same circumstances that other roads in that county are under, and in other portions of Ontario, there would not be a toll on it for a single week after a competent engineer had inspected the road. I only want to move the Minister, if possible, to require that the officers in his Department shall just hurry up a little bit faster than five years the hunting up of those papers concerning the construction of this highway. The road was built as an old Government highway some forty or fifty years ago, but in face of the fact that the people are suffering from the present condition of things—and I do not blame the present proprietor of the road—I do ask the Minister that, in the midst of a multiplicity of other cares pressing upon his attention, he would devote a little bit of attention to this matter and try and urge the question on, and let us have the question of the proprietorship of that road settled, and give the community a chance for fair play. It is for this reason that I have moved for the papers in this connection, because, although it is a small matter to a Legislature of this size, it is a very important matter to very many people residing in my county.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not find fault with the hon. gentleman who has brought this matter before the House on a motion for papers. They will be brought down as soon as it is possible to have them prepared, after the opinion of the Minister of Justice has been obtained. The hon. gentleman is perfectly correct in stating that it has taken a long time to bring this matter into its present position. The question was and is one between the Federal Government and the Ontario Government. The Ontario Government claim that the road might belong to them. When a Bill was brought before the House to legalise the sale made of the road, Mr. Mowat communicated with me on the subject, and I was authorised by my colleagues to withdraw the Bill in order that an examination might be made to ascertain whether the ownership rested in the Federal or Ontario Government. As the hon. gentleman has stated, this matter was a very old one, of probably more than fifty years' standing, and accordingly we had to cause search to be made, not only at Ottawa, but elsewhere, in order to ascertain where the ownership rested. We have now completed it, and the papers are being placed in order, and the latest papers will be placed in the hands of the Minister of Justice in a very short time, when the Minister will be in a position to examine the matter on the answers given to his questions, and then advise the Department on the subject. If his decision is that the road is one that belongs to the Ontario Government, of course the transfer will be made accordingly. I hope the hon. gentleman will be satisfied with my statement, and that he will see there is every desire on the part of my Department, and on the part of the Government, to bring this matter to a close, and I think the end is very near.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). While I am perfectly satisfied with the present position of the matter, I would like to suggest this: that if the settlement is going to be delayed for some time it would be only fair to the people there to send an engineer, with instructions to ascertain the actual condition of the road, whether it was fit for travel and whether tolls should be collected. The people of the locality are suffering a wrong while a settlement is being delayed from time to time. I have no wish to press for the papers, and beg to withdraw the motion.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think the delay will be sufficiently long to render this necessary. If there was a prospect of a long delay I would comply with the request of the hon. gentleman, but I think we will soon come to a decision on the matter whereby the necessity will be avoided. If the road remains in the hands of the Federal Government, it will be necessary to send an engineer and obtain information in regard to it. If the road passes to the Ontario Government, of course it will be their duty to look after it.

Motion withdrawn.

KETTLE CREEK.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin) moved for:

Copies of all letters to the Government asking that engineers be sent to examine Kettle Creek, between St. Thomas and Port Stanley, with a view to ascertaining the feasibility of building a canal; and all reports, maps and other documents sent in by such engineers.

He said: In moving for copies of all letters sent to the Government asking that engineers be sent to ascertain the feasibility of constructing a canal on the line of Kettle Creek, from St. Thomas to Port Stanley, I do so for the reason that it appears to me that no man who had lived in that section for any length of time, or who had had an opportunity of knowing the locality or anything as to the course of Kettle Creek or the lack of water supply there, could be so stupid and so insane as to imagine that a canal could be built between those two points. That a letter should have been sent to the amiable Minister of Public Works, asking him to send an engineer to make an examination and prepare a report on such a scheme, is to me very strange indeed. I can understand well that the kindness of heart which distinguishes the Minister of Public Works and his desire to please everybody, more especially those who are Conservatives, is such that he could easily make up his mind to send an engineer or engineers to make examination. It must, however, be borne in mind, that the Minister himself had been in that locality prior to that time; indeed, the hon. gentleman, with the rest of his colleagues, made frequent visits there. For a number of years past, whenever an election was about to take place they visited the locality, and the hon. Minister of Public Works had every opportunity of knowing the quantity of water that is in Kettle Creek and the impossibility of constructing such a canal. I am told, although of course I cannot vouch for the truthfulness of the statement, that after the survey had been made it was found that a canal to St.

Thomas would require to be 300 feet deep. The Government would not care about that; there would be lots of money to spend; they had plenty of funds, and it would prove advantageous to the district, and would thus be a means of inducing the electors to make up their minds to support the candidate of such a generous Government. I have no objection to that. I tell the Government now that, if they will build a canal from St. Thomas to Port Stanley, even if they have to go down 300 feet on account of lack of water in Kettle Creek, or if they tap the Thames, twenty miles distant, by boring through the earth, I will step aside. Let them select their Conservative candidates; for such a project would be a marvellous one and one capable of being conceived only by some people of St. Thomas, assisted by the ability of the worthy Minister of Public Works. I have been told further that, on account of the lack of water in Kettle Creek, they were going to adopt some means whereby they might use the water of the lake. Of course if they adopted such a scheme, which would benefit the good people of the locality, and more especially good Conservatives, I should be delighted to see it carried out, because, if we got a canal built from St. Thomas to Port Stanley and the lake water conveyed into the canal, it would solve a very great problem and relieve the difficulty we are now laboring under for lack of a sufficient supply of water for domestic purposes. It is admitted by everybody who knows anything about the matter, that there is not even a sufficient supply of water running there to serve a population of some ten or twelve thousand inhabitants. Yet we are told that the Minister of Public Works is going to build a canal there, and that he is going to have some of those big ships we hear talked about, sailing in that canal. It may be that the Minister intends to send some of those ships which protect our fisheries up there to look after a few Americans who live in St. Thomas, and who go down in the spring-time to catch a few suckers. Perhaps the Government are going to protect the fish there—and that, no doubt, will be a very laudable course for the Government to pursue. At all events, it would be the only apparent object in building the canal. I suppose I have no right to complain, but I was totally unaware that anything of this kind was likely to take place, until I heard that the engineers were upon the ground. I represent the views and wishes of the majority of the people in that locality, but if any communication did take place with the Government, it took place between them and some other person beside myself. Perhaps the communication was with my late opponent, for I understand that he, to a certain extent, controls the patronage of that district, and being unable to secure any other position, I suppose he is quite satisfied with that one. But, Sir, I declare that, in all common fairness, no more unjustifiable course could be pursued by the Minister of Public Works than in his trying to make the people of that locality entertain the idea of the possibility of the construction of a canal from St. Thomas down to Port Stanley. There was plenty of useful work for him to do at the port, and I have called his attention, time and again, to the state of neglect in which it was left. I have frequently called the attention of the Government to the number of wrecks that take place there on account of the neglect of the port at Port Stanley. True, the Government says: "We have no control over the port; it was transferred to the railway company, and, therefore, we have no right to interfere." But I hold that the Government have plenty of work, if they will only do it, to put Port Stanley in a proper condition, without trying to deceive the public with the possibility of constructing this canal. Suppose there were a canal there, what would they do with it? What benefit would it be to the country? What have you to convey from Port Stanley to St. Thomas, or from St. Thomas to Port Stanley?

An hon. MEMBER. Suckers.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). My friend here says "suckers." No doubt there are plenty of them at Port Stanley, as there are at other places; but let me return to the question of what object there can be of building this canal. Why, one flat car would convey all the freight that passes from Port Stanley to St. Thomas in a week, and what traffic there is, is all done by the railroad. How, then, I would ask, can anyone conceive the idea of building this canal, at enormous expense, when there is really no traffic to go in that direction? It is an absurd proposal; and I am surprised that the hon. Minister of Public Works should so far be deceived as to send his engineers to kick up their heels there for a week or ten days while they were making their surveys, taking their levels, and having a good time generally. It may be an amusement to them, it may give the worthy Minister an opportunity of spending a little money, but I do say that the people look upon the project as something most supremely ridiculous; and that the individual who recommended it is looked upon as only fit for—well, I will not say what—but he is certainly not fit to direct and advise the Government as to what they should do in the interests of the people of that locality. I therefore move for those papers in the hope that we may see that the Government are not quite so absurd as to think that they will build a ship canal from St. Thomas to Port Stanley.

Mr. CASEY. I thought perhaps the hon. Minister would say something about this matter, but if he has no explanation to make in connection with it, I cannot lose the opportunity of adding my voice to that of my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Wilson), in pointing out the absurdity of this whole proposal. The question did come up in this House before, when my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) was Minister of Marine and Fisheries; and, for the purpose of killing time, one night I started the proposal of making Kettle Creek navigable. After three hours' discussion, between midnight and three in the morning, we agreed that it would be possible, for an expenditure of half a million dollars, to make the river navigable at least for fish between these two points.

An hon. MEMBER. Suckers.

Mr. CASEY. Yes. I think the idea never entered into any reasonable mind that it could be made navigable for traffic, or that anyone believed, as my hon. friend says, that there is any traffic for it if the canal were built. Some years ago, the hon. Minister of Public Works may remember that somebody started the idea of digging a canal from the River Thames to Lake Erie through my county, and passing by a village called Iona, and that surveys were actually taken for that. I remember asking my hon. friend, the Minister, for the figures regarding that scheme, and the figures in regard to it were pretty much the same as those my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Wilson) mentions in connection with this canal at St. Thomas, viz.: that it would take a cutting of somewhere about 300 feet in depth to carry the waters of the Thames down to Lake Erie by that route. The one project is just as absurd as the other, and whoever recommended it to the hon. Minister must have known it was absurd. Whoever had this survey made had it made for the purpose of making a little political capital out of it; but I am confident that that idea will work the wrong way. Instead of making political capital out of it, the parties who recommended it have succeeded in obtaining for themselves a very fair amount of public ridicule instead.

Motion agreed to.

LONDON AND PORT STANLEY RAILWAY.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin) moved for:

A statement of all tolls and other receipts collected by the London and Port Stanley Railway and by the Great Western and Grand Trunk Railways at the port of Port Stanley, and of the disposition of all such revenues; and copies of all reports of engineers as to the state of such harbor not already laid before this House.

He said: In moving for this, I may state that it is a repetition to some extent of a motion which I had previously made. I have time and again called the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the condition of the port at Port Stanley. I have frequently requested, when the Estimates were under discussion, that there might be an item placed in the Estimates to put the harbor in a decent state of repair. I have been told as frequently to exercise patience, and that perhaps the Supplementary Estimates might contain an item in them that would gladden my heart and please the people in that locality. I did keep patience until I knew the hon. the Minister as well as I know him now, and I had some hope, when he held out these promises, that perhaps I might realise something from them. But it has occurred so often that I have no hope that any redress will be given to the people of that locality at the present time. I could quite understand their being neglected during the time I have represented the locality; but, prior to me, a Conservative represented it, and during his time the people and the port were as much neglected as they have been during the time I have had the honor of occupying that position. I might say, in passing, that in a sense the people have been rightly served. The majority of them are Conservatives, true and staunch supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite, ever faithful and true in recording their votes for them, while the number of Reformers among them is very small. But I suppose the Minister of Public Works knows full well that he can rely on the Conservatives in most parts of the country to support him whether he does right or wrong—that, according to the saying of the First Minister, he does not thank persons who support him only when he is right, it is when he is wrong that he wants their support; and I suppose he expects the people of that locality to come to his assistance in times of need, whether he deals fairly or unfairly with them. I say he is dealing unfairly with them; and Port Stanley, from having been a thrifty and prosperous village, has so dwindled down that very little traffic or business is now done there; the traffic has been almost wholly forced from the lake, and is carried over the railways running east and west. It may be said on behalf of the Government that they have no control over that port, because it was transferred years ago to the London and Port Stanley Railway Company. No doubt my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture knows something about that matter; but he knows very well that his own city is now appealing against the wrong inflicted on the people by the London and Port Stanley Railway Company, and it is time he woke up to see that something was done to overcome the difficulty, lest the people of London complain of his indifference. He ought to bring pressure to bear on the Minister of Public Works to induce him to do something towards putting the port in a reasonably good condition, so that vessels may be enabled to land and ship cargoes there. What is the use of a canal from St. Thomas to Port Stanley if the port is left in its present condition? It would have to be put in a better condition before the vessels could be got through, and the hon. Minister of Public Works ought to see that the railway company does its duty in accordance with the agreement it entered into with the Government, that tolls and other revenues derivable from the port should be expended upon it. I therefore hope that when the papers are brought down the Minister will see the necessity of forcing the railway company to do its duty, and of having the harbor put into a proper and efficient condition.

Mr. CASEY. This is a matter which I have a good deal of knowledge of, for the reason that Port Stanley was formerly in my riding, though it is now in the riding of my hon. friend who has just spoken, and I think he is highly justified in calling the attention of the Government to the condition of that port. The terms of the lease under which the London and Port Stanley Railway Company were allowed to have control of the harbor, were, that they should spend all receipts from the harbor in keeping it in proper repair. I had a Committee on the condition of that harbor as far back as 1875, and it came out in evidence, even so long ago, that a great proportion of the receipts of the harbor had been diverted by the railway company to other uses. At a subsequent period we got a small Government grant, which went a long way towards putting the harbor in repair for the time being; but what we have complained of continuously ever since the harbor came into the hands of the railway company, is not so much that the Government did not make grants for it, but that they did not, neither the previous Government nor the present, insist on the railway company carrying out the terms of the lease under which it held the harbor. At the present time I do not know that there is much use in insisting on that provision of the lease that all receipts shall be spent on the harbor, because the company have effectually managed to kill off receipts by levying extremely high tolls, and the Government have supplemented their efforts in that respect by high duties, which have almost entirely put an end to the import trade which used to be done at Port Stanley. At one time nearly all the coal imported for the supply of London and several adjacent districts was imported at Port Stanley, and the tolls were very considerable; but now, between the National Policy and the high tolls levied by the railway company, which prefers to bring the coal around by Buffalo on its own line, hardly any coal is imported at that port, and so with other things. Now, to put the port into decent repair, it will be necessary, not only to enforce the expenditure of all tolls on the harbor itself, but to make a considerable additional expenditure there. The Government are not unaware of the condition of this port. It has been examined and reported upon by their engineers several times during the last fifteen years. A great deal of money was spent on it about forty years ago, and we are now losing the benefit of that expenditure, because the port is being allowed to fall into disrepair, and is now useless except as a port of call. And the basin at the head of the piers, where vessels should have room to load, is filling up every year, and it is now almost entirely unfit to receive vessels. The Government are not unaware of the importance of the harbor and of its condition, which has been reported to them; but I would urge upon them and the House consideration of the fact that this harbor, situated about midway on the north shore of Lake Erie, directly in the way of vessels trying to escape from the prevailing winds on the western part of Lake Erie, should be put, at all events, in a decent condition of repair. I am speaking from personal knowledge of the fact that the piers, which were put up at great expense by this country, are absolutely rotting away, and unsafe even for foot passengers. My hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works, has frequently expressed himself as having kindly feelings to that part of the country, and there is no reason why he should be unwilling to encourage trade and commerce there as elsewhere. If he will put his mind to it, he will be able to find somewhere the necessary few thousands to do what is absolutely required for this very important work.

Motion agreed to.

PEMBROKE POST OFFICE ROBBERY.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew) moved for:

Copies of all communications sent to the Post Office Department in relation to the robbery of the post office at Pembroke, on the night of 19th or morning of 20th April last, together with copies of all claims for reimbursement by the Department of moneys abstracted from registered letters lying in the said post office at the time of said robbery.

He said: I make this motion for the purpose of drawing the attention of the hon. the Postmaster General to a case of extreme hardship, and to endeavor to enlist his sympathy on behalf of those whose money was stolen. The post office was broken into the 19th or 20th April last, the safe forced open, and all the registered letters that remained over from that day's delivery were rifled, and their contents abstracted from them, or the letters themselves taken. The amount of money thus stolen was in the vicinity of $2,000, as far as can be traced. Many of the persons whose money was taken were very ill able to afford the loss, and in many cases these letters were posted in localities where there was no other means of transmitting money except through the Post Office Department. They were posted in small towns where there were neither express offices nor money order offices, or banks, or any other mode of transmitting money, except by registered letter; and if the hon. the Postmaster General can see his way clear, under the law, to reimburse the sufferers, I am extremely desirous that he should carry out the suggestion I now make, and allow his sympathies to be extended towards those poor people.

Mr. HAGGART. The facts of the case are, as Mr. White has stated, that a robbery was committed at the post office and a lot of money taken from several registered letters lying in the safe. These parties who have lost the money are entitled to every sympathy; but it is a rule of the Department, which cannot be departed from in any case, that losses of that kind are never made good. This is the rule laid down in England and the United States, and in other countries which have similar regulations, and a departure from that rule would entail a very great responsibility on the Government which they would not be justified in assuming.

Motion agreed to.

RETURN ORDERED.

Statement showing the amount of dredging done during the season of 1889, in Prince Edward Island, by the dredge Prince Edward, the names of harbors and other places dredged during said season, and the amount of work done in each harbor.—(Mr. Perry.)

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 4.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 31st January, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 33) respecting the People's Bank of New Brunswick.—(Mr. Weldon, St. John.)

Bill (No. 34) to amend the Act to incorporate the Saskatchewan Railway and Mining Company.—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 35) to incorporate the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company.—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 36) to confirm the agreement between the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Steamship and Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway.—(Mr. Davis, Alberta.)

Bill (No. 37) to amend the Act to incorporate the Imperial Trust Company of Canada.—(Mr. Huds-peth.)

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 38) further to amend the Dominion Elections Act, chapter 8 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. He said: The object of this amendment Mr. WHITE (Renfrew).

is to provide against promises on the part of candidates, of Government expenditure in their ridings. Another object is to provide that the Government shall not expend money for the purpose of influencing elections, that being one of the most fruitful and dangerous sources of corruption existing.

Motion agreed to; and Bill read the first time.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. McCARTHY. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the leader of the House whether it would not be convenient that a day should be fixed for the second reading of the Bill that stands in my name with reference to the North-West Territories Act. I have suggested to him Wednesday week, if that would be convenient to the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a subject that will interest the House a good deal, and it would be well that a day should be fixed. The day suggested, Wednesday, the 12th February, would be a very convenient day, provided it meets the convenience of the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. LAURIER. As far as this side is concerned, we are quite prepared to take it up on that day.

Mr. COOK. I may not be here then, owing to other business; but I will forestall the course I intend to take by stating that, if here, I shall certainly vote against the Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is certainly an appeal to my hon. friend's magnanimity, and I think he should consult the hon. member for East Simcoe, and ascertain what day will suit him.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would be quite willing to do that, but as the hon. gentleman has indicated his intention, before hearing any discussion on the subject, of voting against the Bill, perhaps that is unnecessary.

Mr. COOK. I have read the speech of my hon. friend on the subject, and the Bill speaks for itself.

Mr. McCARTHY moved that the Order for second reading of Bill (No. 10) further to amend the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 50, respecting the North-West Territories, be the first Order of the day on Wednesday, the 12th of February.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What rule does the hon. gentleman propose to adopt? I would suggest that we should proceed regularly through these items, and if for any reason the Government wish to alter that course, they should give us notice the night before, so that we shall know from day to day what items are likely to be taken up.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the suggestion of the hon. gentleman is one that will meet the approbation of both sides of the House, and I will see that this order is carried out. I might also suggest, before we go into Committee, whether or not we could agree, as far as possible, in going over the items of Civil Government, to keep our discussion to the items which are before the Committee. Last year, as will be remembered, we were led, while taking up the items of Civil Government, into a discussion of all the expenditure in regard to the Departments. Of course, it is difficult to keep absolutely to the item under discussion, but I would suggest that, as far as possible, members should keep at least to the general line of discussion suggested by the item.

Mr. LAURIER. It seems to me that we have endeavored to do that. Of course, sometimes the item might lead to a digression into other matters, but I think the hon. gentleman cannot complain of the tone which we adopted last year, and of the manner in which we endeavored to do everything to facilitate the business of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, it would be premature to ask the hon. gentleman when he will be likely to bring down his Budget. However, I suppose I am safe in supposing that it will not be brought down next week?

Mr. FOSTER. Not next week, or the week after.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Charges of Management..... $179,902 36

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe that there is a reduction of $3,000 for the office of the Dominion Auditor and Assistant Receiver General, Victoria. I should be glad to hear under what circumstances this reduction has been effected, and, in particular, whether it is a permanent reduction, or simply means a transfer of one of the officers to some other department or branch.

Mr. FOSTER. The reduction is due to a rearrangement in the office of the Receiver General at Victoria, by which Mr. Graham, who was the Deputy Receiver General, has been superannuated, and the officer next in charge has been appointed at a far lower salary. Then some of the extra help has been dispensed with, making a reduction in the annual amount of $3,000, which, I hope, will be permanent. Taking in the superannuation allowance with these salaries, the total amount is just about the same, and all around I think it is a very good arrangement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then I understand that, practically, there is no reduction, that we have to pay out in a superannuation allowance what equals the amount of the nominal reduction.

Mr. FOSTER. We have the advantage of avoiding the payment of a very large salary to the head officer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that Mr. Graham had a salary of $3,000 before. I should like to know who takes his place and at what salary?

Mr. FOSTER. The officer who takes his place is J. H. McLaughlin, who was receiving $1,200, and who now gets in his new place a salary of $1,800.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose another officer is put in Mr. McLaughlin's place?

Mr. FOSTER. There were previously five officers. One of them, Mr. Chambers, died during the year, and his place has not been filled. Mr. McLaughlin, who was next to Mr. Graham, takes charge of the office at a salary of $1,800, and a third class clerk has been appointed at a salary of, I think, $500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is Mr. Graham's retiring allowance?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not that item here, but I will give the hon. gentleman the information.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When did the retirement take place? I suppose the amount will not appear in the Superannuation Accounts of this year?

Mr. FOSTER. It took place this year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman state whether Mr. Graham has retired on the proportion of his year's salary, or whether anything has been added?

Mr. FOSTER. Nothing has been added. He has the usual superannuation allowance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He lives in Victoria?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Country savings banks in the Maritime Provinces—I would like to know if it is not possible for the Government to do away with these Dominion savings banks. When we have a good system of Post Office savings banks now all over the Dominion, I cannot understand the necessity of keeping in existence a number of banks in the Maritime Provinces, and paying away $13,000 or $14,000 a year for salaries, when they can just as well be dispensed with, and all the work done by the Post Office savings banks. I presume the reduction of $1,000 this year means that one of these institutions has been closed up. Now, I would like to know, if that has been done, why we could not eventually wipe out all these institutions in the Maritime Provinces?

Mr. FOSTER. Following out the end suggested by my hon. friend, we have adopted this policy: Whenever an officer in charge of one of these savings banks—at least outside the large cities—dies or resigns, the amount of the deposit is then transferred to the Post Office Department, and thereafter managed the same as the Post Office savings bank. Last year, for instance, I transferred over a million dollars from Dominion savings banks, that were closed in that way, to the Post Office savings banks; and gradually, by following out this system, we shall, with the exception, it may be, of some of the large cities, in which there are other circumstances, have them all amalgamated with the Post Office savings banks system, and go on more economically, as I admit.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is virtually an acknowledgment that these institutions are simply kept alive for the purpose of finding a salary for those men employed in them for past years. The Minister admits that as soon as these men die the offices will be closed up. That is a confession that the necessity of their existence is gone. I don't think the country should be asked to continue institutions of that kind simply because some men have got to be provided for. The fact of the matter is, we are providing for too many men now. If there can be no better excuse given for the continuation of this system than the Minister has offered to the House, then the sooner he wipes the whole thing out, the better.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Commission on sum for payment of interest on public debt, $36,094.05. I observe, in connection with this, that there has been a correspondence between the Auditor General and the Finance Department with reference to a supply of vouchers for brokerage charged on the last loan. There is no doubt a good deal of force in the contention of Baring & Glyn, that vouchers cannot be supplied under the usual terms of doing business. On that point I am not disposed to object; and it was only proper and right that the demand of the Auditor should be complied with as regards persons who receive brokerage when the amounts are paid separately. Apparently nothing further has been done than to call their attention to it, but there has been time enough now to receive some information on the point. I see that this letter of the Auditor General was dated on 5th December, 1888, being considerably over a year ago; and in the period that has since elapsed it seems to me there can be no possible reason why that information has not been given. I see that the subject was brought to the notice of Baring & Bros. in January, 1889. I find this in the Auditor General's Report, C 25 and 26.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to that I may say that the correspondence there, as my hon. friend will see, rests on the arrangement that when Sir Charles Tupper came to this side he would see the Auditor General and make full explanations to him. That, I believe, has been done, and so much to the satisfaction of the Auditor General that he has passed the accounts. With reference to the vouchers mentioned by my hon. friend, I will ask whether these have been received or not? The correspondence does not show that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not want to insist upon this item, which is correct enough, being held over on that score. But it is quite clear, I think, that what the Auditor General asks for is reasonable enough. He waives his claim for the vouchers; all he wants is to know the name of the brokers employed and the sums paid; and you will observe that Baring Bros. do not dispute that they can furnish them, although they refer the Auditor General, or the deputy Minister, to Sir Charles Tupper for explanations. Now, I presume that the details have been given, and I shall ask the hon. gentleman, if this matter is not to be discussed further now, that he will agree to cause to be laid on the Table a statement of the brokers to whom these sums are paid, and the amounts.

Mr. FOSTER. I will make enquiry into it, anyway.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will you agree to lay that statement on the Table, supposing it has been furnished, if you have not got it?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not got it, but I will enquire about it. There is no objection to lay on the Table everything that can properly be brought down.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is no difficulty in this. We ought to know what sums are paid to the various brokers. Then the hon. gentleman can tell me, I suppose, when the House goes into Committee of Supply again, what he can say on this matter, to save the necessity of making a formal motion for it.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. The House will remember that when we were discussing the question of appointing Sir Charles Tupper as High Commissioner in London, the First Minister stated to us that a great saving to the country would be effected by having a High Commissioner in London. He stated that we would more than save all his salary and expenses by having him there to look after loans, and commission, and so forth. But, in looking over the Public Accounts, I cannot see that there has been any change in the charges this year, as compared with past years. It appears to me that all the items for expenses in connection with meeting the interest, paying loans, and generally handling the accounts of the Dominion in London, are about as high as they were before a High Commissioner was appointed at all. I should like to know what particular duties in connection with the public debt the High Commissioner performed, whereby this country is saved large sums of money, as was promised by the First Minister. Hon. gentlemen will remember that when the appointment was under consideration, the right hon. the Premier distinctly stated that a very large sum would be saved in connection with the duties which the High Commissioner would be able to perform in London with respect to the national debt. Can the Finance Minister state any sums that have been saved by Sir Charles Tupper in connection with handling the public debt?

Mr. FOSTER. With regard to the item at present before the House, payments for commission and brokerage, my hon. friend will understand that this payment is in pursuance of the arrangement which has been running with our financial agents for a number of years. I think the last arrangement was a modified one, made by Sir Leonard Tilley during the time he was in office as Finance Minister, by which arrangement charges which had hitherto prevailed were very largely reduced. This reduction took place, and an arrangement was made, based upon the condition that it should continue for a number of years. This period will not expire till 1892; and I am sure the hon. gentleman would not wish any breach of faith between the Government, on the one hand, and the financial agents, on the other, with regard to the payment of commissions. As to the benefits derived to the country from the presence and action of the High Commissioner on the other side, that is a subject which we are not afraid to discuss when any item in regard to it comes before the Committee, if the hon. gentleman wishes to discuss the advantages to the country of having a High Commissioner resident in London.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not challenge the statement of the Finance Minister with respect to the duties performed by the High Commissioner outside the public debt. It may be that he has discharged the duties very well. It must be remembered, however, that when the question of the appointment of the High Commissioner was before the House, the First Minister stated that a large saving would be effected in connection with the public debt by having a High Commissioner there. The House was, however, virtually misled, for, according to what the Finance Minister has said, the First Minister must have known that this arrangement with the financial agents was then in force. The Finance Minister now states that the arrangement will not expire until 1892, that Sir Charles Tupper's presence in London is of no consequence or advantage to the country, notwithstanding the fact that the First Minister had previously stated that his presence would be of very great advantage. This is a very striking confession on the part of the Finance Minister.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am afraid there was too much truth in the remark of my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen), that the benefit expected to be derived from the appointment of a High Commissioner, in the direction of saving brokerage and commission, has certainly not been realised. However, I desire to enquire from the Finance Minister with respect to another matter. The Minister is aware that there are two ways in which our bonds are held. Some are used as ordinary securities and held by the parties, and others are put on register. Does the hon. gentleman know in what way we are holding those sums which are invested for sinking fund purposes? Are they held under register, or do our trustees receive and keep the bonds per se just as they buy them on the market?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot answer that question, but I will make enquiries.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am inclined to think, if there is a register, it would be better to avail ourselves of it, to prevent any possible loss or accident.

Mr. FOSTER. In regard to the item of $50,000 for printing Dominion notes, I may say this is an increase of $7,000. By reference to the Public Accounts it will be seen that the amount voted has been for several years too small, and this was the case last year. I propose to take a vote which, in the opinion of the Department, will be sufficient to cover the expenditure, namely, $50,000.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Has the Government any contract for the work? Was it let to the lowest tenderer?

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose so. The contract was for five years, from the 22nd October, 1886.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who holds the contract?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Burland.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I was about to call the attention of the House to the fact that, whereas a vote was taken under this heading for $184,000, no less than $20,000 more was spent last year. It is useless to bring down Estimates when the expenditure cannot be brought within them. The estimated sum last year was $179,000, but the Government actually spent, of course in part without authority, $202,276. Has the Minister reason to believe he will be able to keep any better within the present estimate than he was able to do last year?

Mr. FOSTER. I think there will be no difficulty in keeping within the present estimate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The excess was over $20,000.

Mr. FOSTER. It was largely for printing Dominion notes.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. My question has not been answered. Was the contract let to the lowest tenderer?

Mr. FOSTER. The contract is with Mr. Burland, who had had the contract for a number of years; and in the renewal of the contract in 1886, no doubt regard was had to the fact that Mr. Burland had had this contract before, and had been put to all the expense that was necessary in the procuring of the plant and other requirements to carry on the very responsible work of printing bills. At the time of the renewal a very significant reduction was made from the old price, and I have no hesitation in saying now, after having made full enquiry into the prices paid for similar work, not only in this country, but in the United States, that we are getting as good work and as cheap work in this line as we can hope to get, consistent with the necessity for having the work done near to us and having it under our supervision.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). You did not answer the question. Did some one ever offer to do it cheaper?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Are we to understand that no tenders were asked for this work, the last time that this contract was let? Is it not a fact that parties offered to do this work at a much lower price than Mr. Burland?

Mr. FOSTER. It is a fact that parties sent in offers to do the work, but I do not think it is a fact that the offers were at lower prices.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The Finance Minister ought to be able to give us some definite information in reference to this matter. It is quite a large expenditure, and I think we ought to be put into possession of the facts. If the hon. gentleman does not know what the facts are, the item should stand over until he gives us the information.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think there is any necessity for that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Unless my recollection deceives me greatly, Mr. Desbarats, of Montreal, tendered for this work, and I think Mr. Desbarats was not allowed to be a tenderer. He has asserted, if I am not entirely misinformed, that he was prepared and able to do this work (which is an important work and one which costs us, in the course of five years, some three or four hundred thousand dollars) for decidedly less than Mr. Burland was in the habit of receiving. At all events, we ought to have one rule and one measure in those matters. If the hon. gentleman is going to abandon the system of tendering for such purposes, well and good. We can dispute it from this side, but we would understand it. We ought to know, and the public ought to know in advance, what the responsibility of the Government is in respect to contracts running for several years and involving expenditures of several hundreds of thousands of dollars. My own impression is, that, undoubtedly, we ought to invite tenders for this work, seeing that a large sum of public money is concerned, and seeing that Mr. Desbarats, and others in his position, are as well entitled to have the chance to do the work as Mr. Burland himself.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister will see that he is wasting a good deal of the time of the House in not giving a direct answer to a direct question. It has taken us now a considerable time to elicit the fact that no tenders were asked for this work; but the fact has come out all the same. If the hon. the Minister of Finance had given the information directly, he would have saved a good deal of the time of the House.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think we ought to be in possession of the information we ask for, before this item is passed. We are entitled to know the price paid to this firm over the prices asked for by the other firm in Montreal. I contend that the Minister of Finance was not in a position to judge whether the firm that tendered to do this work at a much less figure than the present contractors, would not perform the service as well and as faithfully as the firm who are favored with the contract without any tender. We should have this information from the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. This matter has been discussed every year. We have considered this item for the past three or four years, and I think the House is seized of all the facts in connection with it. I think my hon. friend will agree that it is not quite possible to follow exactly the same course in a matter of this kind as it is with an ordinary tender for new work. There are various considerations which come into this which would not come into an ordinary tender. Mr. Burland received this work at first, and he performed it to the satisfaction of the Government. He had incurred a very large outlay for plant and for the necessities to carry on the establishment, and as the Government felt that this work should be done in Ottawa, under supervision as close and efficient as possible, Mr. Burland agreed to come to Ottawa, and to put up buildings in every way suitable for the work, where we might have a thorough supervision of the printing and engraving of these bills. In addition to this, Mr. Burland also made a very considerable reduction on his rates for engraving and printing. As I said before, the work has been done very satisfactorily, and it is done now as well and as cheaply as that style of work is done anywhere.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I would like to enquire whether the Government are the owners of the engraved plates which are used in the production of the notes, or is the contractor the owner of these plates?

Mr. FOSTER. The Government, of course, are the owners of the plates.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. If the Government are the owners of the plates, it is a good guarantee that the work will be done as well by any other contractor as by Mr. Burland, for they would use the same plates.

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Certainly; they do not make a different plate each time.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman knows that there is a great difference in the inks used in that class of engraving and others.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It appears to me that the information given by the hon. Minister is very far from being satisfactory.

Mr. FOSTER. It is reasonable.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It is either necessary to call for tenders, or it is unnecessary. We have no Mr. CASEY.

right to consider the original tender in a renewal, for the contractor tendered to do a work for which he was amply and fully paid. Are we to allow these contractors to continue this work year in and year out because they have done the work well? I hold that if the Government pretends to let contracts by tender they should allow this work to be tendered for as well as others. If the Government think it is unnecessary to call for tenders for work; if they think they can manage it better without tenders, why do not they announce to the country that they do not intend to have work performed by tender, and that they intend to let contracts to their favorites without any protection to the public at all. I really think it is unfair that the hon. Minister of Finance should hedge himself in the manner in which he does in reference to this matter. He should have said at once that the Government did not call for tenders, or that they did not intend to call for tenders, and that in the opinion of the Government the work would be much better done if left to the option of Ministers. If the hon. gentleman had stated that manfully at the commencement, we would not object to it. Is it because Mr. Burland has agreed to come to Ottawa, and that he has done the work satisfactorily, that we should consider he is entitled to a prior claim to everybody else? That is an unreasonable proposition for the Government to make. Carry that principle throughout the various departments of the Government and you will see how disastrously it will end. The question arises: Is it necessary to have any tenders for work at all? If it is not, let them announce to the country at once that they do not intend to have any more tenders, but that they intend to give the work to their favorites, to run the machine entirely in the interest of their friends and supporters, and then we will understand it quite well.

Gov.-General's Secretary's Office..... $10,150

Mr. FOSTER. The only increases are statutory increases.

Office of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada..... $27,405

Mr. FOSTER. The increases are the usual statutory increases and one messenger.

Department of Justice..... $21,235

Mr. FOSTER. Statutory increases are the only increases.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many are there?

Mr. FOSTER. Eight at $50, one at $25, one at $30, and one at $22.50.

Department of Justice,—Penitentiaries branch..... $6,250

Mr. FOSTER. There is one statutory increase at $50.

Department of Militia and Defence... $43,300

Mr. FOSTER. There are sixteen statutory increases of $50 each.

Department of the Secretary of State..... $35,972 50

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Four officials appear to be required for this Department, in addition to the twenty-eight it had before. I shall be glad to hear from the hon. Secretary of State on what grounds he requires so large an augmentation of his staff?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Since the Act was passed allowing employes to receive commissions, the number of commissions issued, for which fees are paid, has been very much increased, so much so that, since the passage of the Act, four employes have been constantly occupied in engrossing the commissions. They were paid from $2 to $2.50, and I think one at $3 per day. It is special skilled work, as was shown by specimens which were laid before the House, and I must say it is a work which is creditable to the Government and creditable to those who are receiving those commissions. Instead of leaving those employes to be paid at so much a day, we have put them on the permanent staff, where they should be, I think, because it is not likely that their work will decrease.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. Minister tell us how many gentlemen are required to receive commissions under the regulation to which he refers? Whatever may be necessary, it appears to me that he should hardly require to keep four men employed permanently, from year to year, to engross commissions.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They are also required to engross proclamations and other documents, and the work done by them is very voluminous. I shall be glad to give the number of commissions in a return to the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. To what grade are the commissions issued?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I think down to second class clerks, as well as a great many in the outside service.

Department of Printing and Stationery, $22,710

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I would like the Secretary of State to explain in some measure this expenditure. It seems to me that an extraordinary number of employes are required to administer the affairs of the printing bureau, in comparison with those who were employed by the contractors.

Mr. FOSTER. I will give the hon. gentleman a general statement on that subject. There were eight statutory increases at $50, one at $30 and one at $20, making a total of $450. There was one new first class clerk at $1,400. There was an addition to the salary of Mr. Foran, as caretaker of the printing bureau, $100. Then there is an increase, by additional second-class clerks' salaries amounting to $3,300, less $2,900 paid to the same officers last year, making a total increase of $2,350. Then there is the difference between the salaries voted last year for two third-class clerks and those of their successors, $950, making a total increase of $1,400.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I suppose this would not be the proper time to discuss the expenditure on the printing bureau.

Mr. FOSTER. That will come under an item, later on, I think.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think, however, the contractors got along with a less number of employes than this. I do not think they had more than one-fourth of this number employed to discharge the duties which are now costing $22,710 a year.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend, though he has been long in the House, unfortunately thinks only of the printers and the contractors, but he should remember that the Department of Printing and Stationery existed when we had contractors. That Department existed under the Administration which preceded this one, and it has, in fact, always existed. In the printing bureau itself, I do not think we have more than one or two employed in addition to those who were employed under the contractors, and we have no contractors. Certainly the contractors were worth two men.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The explanation of the Secretary of State was quite unnecessary, because, at page 12, letter G, anyone can find the explanation. I was quite aware that the expenditure for the Printing and Stationery Department is included in this item, but I say that there are a good many now employed more than were employed by the contractors.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Do you mean printers?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. No; I am talking of the clerks and the managers.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Then my hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I find there are twenty here, altogether.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If you take Mr. McLean and Mr. Roger, our last contractors, as being worth two, you will find that there has been no increase in the number.

Mr. McMULLEN. As far as I can see, we have a bigger contract on hand in regard to this printing bureau than ever we had before. I think it is going to be a pretty costly arrangement for this Dominion. The Secretary of State, when he introduced the Bill to establish a printing bureau, assured the House in plain terms that he anticipated a considerable saving, that he thought the work would be done better and more satisfactorily, and at less cost than before; but, since we have been in Ottawa, it has appeared to us that it will prove more costly than ever. None can deny that the building is a very creditable structure, but it is a very expensive one, and, when we realise the amount it is going to cost us—though I hope it will be much less than is reported—we must see that it will be a very costly establishment. The hon. gentleman appears to be getting into deep water with the printers and others in connection with it. We all hope his prediction will be true, and that the country will save money by this work, notwithstanding what has appeared in the press.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When the proper time comes, we will see to that. I know my hon. friend generally takes a gloomy view of the expenditure of the Government, and that he is not over liberal in giving to the Government the allowances necessary for the public expenditure; but, if we had not had the accidents which have occurred, and which, I hope with him, will not occur again, the condition of affairs would have been different, and, when the printing bureau is fully and completely in operation, I believe we shall be able to realise the economies which I anticipated, even without reference to the improvement in the appearance and quality of the work. If we cannot do so, it will not be my fault.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I understood, by a report which I saw in a newspaper, that the Secretary of State had admitted to a deputation of printers that waited upon him, that the printing had, so far, cost much more than it did under the contractors.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I said it had cost more than I had anticipated, owing to the difficulty in which we have been placed, because we have had to carry on two establishments, in consequence of the unfinished state of the building. What I said was, that this year the economies had not been what I anticipated, and I asked the printers not to press the Government at present, as the results this year had not been what we anticipated in regard to economy.

Department of the Interior—Dominion Lands.....$87,187 50

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here, again, we find a very large increase asked for. Last year seventy-one officials were required for the Dominion Lands branch, and this year we find that eighty-one are required. Turning to the end of this volume, the House will see that, in addition to the $87,187 which is asked for here, an amount is asked for Dominion Lands chargeable to income, of $172,143, and for Dominion Lands chargeable to capital, of $95,000, making, if you include the Minister's salary and the contingencies of his Department, a sum total of very close to $400,000 which is required for the Department of the Interior practically for the administration of our lands in the North-West, from which the actual receipts last year were just $237,000. That is, we are asked to expend $400,000 in order to collect $237,000. A bad showing, that, Mr. Chairman, for the redemption of the promises which were so solemnly made by the First Minister and Sir Charles Tupper, that within about a year from the present date we should be in the reception of $50,300,000 net, as the result of our expenditure upon those lands. I should be glad to hear why this increased expenditure is necessary, and, in particular, why the hon. gentleman wants to have ten additional gentlemen appointed now, in order to collect $237,000 at a cost to the country of $400,000 per annum?

Mr. DEWDNEY. If the hon. gentleman had felt inclined to treat me with a little fairness, I think he would have drawn attention to page 98 of the Estimates, where he will find that I am proposing a saving of $13,605 on the Dominion Lands expenditure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I dare say, and taking it out here.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The reason of the increase of a certain number of third class clerks to Civil Government is this: We have a very large number of temporary clerks, some of whom have been in the service from three to eight years, and it is proposed to take some of these clerks and put them into the permanent class. We are paying to the clerks that I propose to take out of the temporary class, $6,525, and in the permanent class we shall pay them $4,200.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman is asking the same amount of contingencies as before, out of which these clerks are paid.

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; these clerks were all paid out of Dominion Lands moneys, and that is where Mr. CHAPLEAU.

the saving is. I have not forgotten the debate we had upon this question last year, and I have given a great deal of attention to the remarks made by the hon. member for Bothwell, and I hope to make, during the year, some re-arrangement which will, to a great extent, meet the recommendation he made last year. I have enquired, during the recess, into the working of the Dominion Lands branch in connection with our head office, and I have come to the conclusion that there is a great deal in what the hon. gentleman said last year. I find there is considerable duplication of work, which I hope to remedy during the coming year. In reference to the large expenditure which the hon. gentleman has mentioned, he has only given the figures of the cash received for land sales and timber license fees; but he has forgotten the amount of scrip which, as I mentioned last year, we should be given some credit for, and which I think will amount to five or six hundred thousand dollars. He must also recollect that we are giving away land for railway subsidies. We are receiving greater value, I think, for our lands on account of that work. Although we are not getting as much cash as we expect to get, at the same time we have the work which must be done, and we must have the force to do it.

Mr. McMULLEN. In comparing the accounts of the Department of Interior the last two years, I find that the entire receipts in 1888-89 are $239,830, for land, timber and pasture land, everything that came into the hands of the Minister for the year. Then take Civil Government at Ottawa. The payment of salaries at Ottawa amounts to $137,916; outside service, including land board at Winnipeg, $152,012, making a total of $289,928. Deduct from this sum the amount received for land, timber and pasture, and it leaves an actual loss of $50,107. Then we have the Survey branch. I find that $130,577.51 is charged to capital account; that makes $180,685.44; to that we have to add contingencies, $19,301, which makes an actual loss in the Department of the Interior to the country during last year, of $199,986.44. It is surprising that the Minister of the Interior can present to the House the statement he has just made, in face of the promises that were made to us with regard to the receipts we were to get from lands in the North-West. We have to take into consideration the enormous sums paid to the outside service, $152,000, including many officials at Winnipeg, the expensive land board we have got up there, the many inspectors and officials that are roaming around over the prairie, which has virtually been constituted, as my former leader pronounced it, a happy hunting ground for officials of all kinds that can be put into offices, and they are sent to the North-West and put upon the resources of the country. I think it is time that a complete cleaning out of the whole institution should be agreed to, and a stop put to all this abominable business. Here we have another High Commissioner—a tony fellow, if fancy he, must be—that lives in Winnipeg and draws $5,000 a year, with some considerable perquisites into the bargain. I think we ought to do away with that land board, and the whole work done either here or in Winnipeg. We are paying a staff of officials $137,000 a year, and we are paying another staff in the North-West $152,000 for doing the same work. When a case comes before the land board at Winnipeg and it is not settled to the satisfaction of either party, surely no judge, nor jury, nor land board here can settle it more satisfactorily. Now I say that, under these circumstances, we should abolish either the one or the other.

Geological Survey Branch..... $47,330

Mr. FOSTER. There are nineteen statutory increases, $950; one at $30; one first class clerk, $1,400; amount of Mr. Richard's salary over his predecessor, $100; then, $200 for the librarian, which, make $2,680 of an increase. Then, difference between the salary of the technical officer and his successor, $450; difference between the salaries of Tyrrell and Adams and their successors, and difference between the salaries paid to Faribault and Richard, $650; making decreases of $1,110, leaving a net increase of $1,580.

Mr. CASEY. I understand the Minister to say that all the increase in the permanent salaries is caused by the transfer of clerks from the extra service to the permanent staff.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Transfers from the extra to the permanent staff.

Mr. CASEY. Have they all passed the examination?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They have not been appointed, but they will have to pass the examination.

Mr. CASEY. It seems to be very ungenerous to find fault with a department, but I cannot allow this item to pass without entering my protest, in order that I may have an opportunity at a later stage to develop more fully my views: that notwithstanding the very high character and abilities of nearly all the gentlemen on the Geological Survey, we do not derive that benefit from the Department which should be derived. Those who remember the results achieved by the very much smaller staff under Sir William Logan, and even later management, must be satisfied that this Department is not practically managed. No doubt the members of it are very able men, and are doing their best to earn their salaries, and, in fact, are doing a great deal of work; but the practical results are not what they should be. It is true that for this year there are many excellent reports, but, after all, I do not think the work of exploration is such as it should be.

Department of Indian Affairs..... $46,890

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here, again, there is a very considerable increase both in the expenditure and the staff.

Mr. FOSTER. The increase is explained by twenty-four statutory increases at $50 each, one at $25, one at $30, and one at $12.50, one new appointment at $900, two new appointments at $400, and a promotion giving $50; the total increase being $3,018.14.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why should three additional officers be required? There is a staff of forty-four men, exclusive of the Minister. All through the list we find large increases—four in one Department, ten in another and twelve in another. These increases do not merely mean the salaries at which the appointees begin, but in a very few years their salaries are increased to $1,200 or $1,400 each. This increase is unnecessary, and, at all events, we should have an explanation regarding it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The statutory increase covers $1,259, leaving $1,600 to be accounted for. There have been appointed two-third class clerks at $400, and one, in the technical branch, at $800. This increase was found to be absolutely necessary, and provision was made accordingly. The item for contingencies has been reduced $1,000, owing to two temporary clerks paid out of it having been placed on the permanent list. The Deputy Minister advises me that these appointments are absolutely necessary, and also one in the accountant's branch and an assistant type-writer. The increase is made entirely on account of the statement of the Deputy Minister that they were absolutely necessary.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have had a good deal of experience of this plan of taking men from the temporary and putting them on the permanent staff. Our experience has been, that, although the Government during three, six or nine months endeavor to effect the economy intended, yet after eighteen months there were as many men employed on contingencies as before, while the increase on the permanent staff remained. Here the increase has been four and not three, because the messengers have been reduced by one. This is an increase, practically, of more than 10 per cent. Is the hon. Minister of the Interior now administering the Department of Indian Affairs? If so, is it the policy of the Government to re-unite the office to that of the Minister of the Interior, and, if so, for how long?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot say with regard to the future, but I understand it has been attached to the Department of the Interior for a number of years; at all events, it has been since I have been connected with the Department.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It was severed in 1879. It was then taken charge of by the First Minister, and, if it has been united, it must have been since the present Minister took office.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think Mr. White represented both Departments.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Are we to understand that the volume of the business of the Department has increased to an extent requiring the proposed additional number of clerks? We have had no representation beyond the statement that the deputy has said more employes were required, and the Minister thereupon acceded to the wishes of the deputy. We will wait till we get the contingencies, and very likely we may find that the contingencies ought to be reduced also. I want to know, is there a larger volume of work being performed in the Department than there was last year, necessitating an increased number of employes to do the work? If the Minister cannot establish that he ought not ask the House for an increased number of clerks.

Mr. DEWDNEY. If the hon. gentleman would only read the annual report he will find the business of the Department of the Interior has been increasing very largely. If there had been no increase I should be the last to have supported the recommendation made by my deputy. This Department has been extending for years, and the report shows that the business has been increasing materially for the past year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman seems to be speaking of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; the Indian Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman said the Interior Department.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That was a mistake, it was the other.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not exactly see that there is any increase of Indians. We have not made any new treaty, have we?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Only a small one last year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where was that?

Mr. DEWDNEY. With the Indians north of Prince Albert; the surrendering of 11,000 square miles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The number of Indians there is very small, is it not?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes, about 800 families.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would account for some additional work. Still, it is not an important treaty; and, excepting that, there has been, I think, no increase in the Indian population.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am sorry to say there has been a decrease.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes; I was about to remark that, on the contrary, the number of Indians are decreasing.

Mr. DEWDNEY. But a large number work on the reserves.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Still, considering the enormous outside force we have had in connection with the Indians, I should think that would not throw any great amount of extra work on the Department here. We have got, as the hon. gentleman knows, a host of new instructors and other officers of various kinds to look after the Indians on the reserves—quite enough, I should think, to do the work without imposing on the Minister any necessity for additional clerks here. The Minister stated, generally, that there was more work, but he did not say how it came about.

Mr. DEWDNEY. When the Indians come in on their reserves more officers are employed. There is more correspondence and the returns are more numerous, which we insist in having from each agency. For a year or two previous to the last year we have divided several of the large agencies, which has necessitated the appointment of more agents, and would necessarily give us more work in the head office.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I may state to the hon. Minister that I always read the departmental reports when they are brought down. I have not had an opportunity of reading the report of his Department last year, but most certainly I cannot see that there was any extra work done in the Indian Department. As my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) says, the Indian population has not increased, and I do not suppose it is likely to increase. I think the Minister must be mistaken in saying that there is more work in the Indian Department. It appears, according to the hon. gentleman's statement, that when the Deputy Minister says he wants a little more assistance, so that the balance of the clerks will not have to work so hard, the Minister always accepts his recommendation. I do not think that this is a good system. In looking over the Auditor General's Report, I find enormous expenditures for the inside and outside service of the hon. gentleman's Department. I would like that the Minister would point out to the House wherein the volume of work in the Indian Department has so increased so as to require an extra number of clerks. If he does that, I think the House will say that this is a necessary item, or otherwise I do not think we can concur in it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. If a Minister is not to take the word of his deputy with regard to the work transacted in his Department, I would like to know from whom he is to get the information?

Mr. LAURIER. From himself.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I am aware that the Minister took the word of his deputy last year.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; and you will probably hear some more before the Session is over. I may state that I was myself satisfied that the work of the Department was increasing, before I consulted my deputy, and, if I thought it would be necessary, I could have got for the hon. gentleman a statement of the increased correspondence and work of the Department. I shall be glad to bring it down later to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman explain the item at C 39 of the Auditor General's Report: "Thomas McKay & Co., reporting on flour, 73 samples, at $5 a sample; 60 samples, at $4 a sample; total, $605?"

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have nothing to do with that. That is an outside vote.

Mr. McMULLEN. How does it come under the heading of "Departmental Salaries, Ottawa?"

Mr. FOSTER. It is not under Civil Government. If you will look at the page you will see that there are two columns, and the Auditor General has this year, different from any previous year, gathered all salaries together, those that are outside and those that are at Ottawa.

Mr. LAURIER. No one will father that item.

Mr. FOSTER. The Auditor General will tell you its percentage.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the Minister of the Interior take note of that and give us some information on it?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; certainly.

Department of Inland Revenue ...$37,882 50

Mr. FOSTER. The increases are due to two new second class clerks at $1,100, ten statutory increases of $50 and one of $22.50, and the difference in the salaries of messengers, $150.

Customs Department.....$36,730

Mr. FOSTER. There are twenty-one statutory increases of $50 each, two promotions from third class to second class, one statutory increase of $30, and the difference in the salaries of messengers, $200.

Post Office Department.....$191,210

Mr. FOSTER. There are one hundred and sixteen statutory increases of $50 each, eight of $30, and four of $20; four promotions from third class to second class, one second class clerk omitted last year, four new third class clerks, and three new packers, making a total increase of $9,920; less the salary of the Financial Comptroller, $3,200; the difference between the salaries of two second class clerks and those of their successors, $350, and the difference in the salaries of packers, $120; total decreases, $3,670; making a net increase of $6,250.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What has become of the Financial Comptroller's office?

Mr. HAGGART. The Financial Comptroller died, and we intend to dispense with the office, giving the secretary the work formerly done by the comptroller.

Mr. ELLIS. The returns prepared with reference to the number of persons employed in the Post Office Department seem to me to be somewhat misleading. Last year the Postmaster General estimated for 199 employés, but 260 persons appear to have been paid. His estimated expenditure was $184,960, while the actual expenditure was $188,134; and the sum of $12,312 was paid out of contingencies. The number of extra persons employed in that Department seems to be exceedingly large.

Mr. HAGGART. It is very large. The contingent expenditure is nearly $12,000 a year for that purpose, and the reason for the increase of the staff this year is that I am going to transfer some of the temporary clerks to the permanent list, and I am asking $6,500 less for contingencies this year than last year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Surely the hon. gentleman has made a mistake in that statement, or the printers have, for they have put down $35,000 for contingencies, as against $25,000 last year.

Mr. HAGGART. I have made no mistake. I have said that the amount I ask this year is $6,500 less than the expenditure of last year. My expenditure last year was largely in excess of the estimate.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the whole system is bad and misleading. A large number of persons are employed every year in the different departments as temporary clerks, and their salaries ought to be provided for among the estimates for the permanent expenditure of each department, and not in the contingencies. Anything that cannot be foreseen ought to be provided for out of contingencies, and everything that can be foreseen—and the experience of the members of the Government is sufficiently long to enable them to determine this matter—ought to be estimated and included in the ordinary expenditure of the Department. Therefore, in many of these cases large additions should be made to the estimated expenditure for each Department, leaving to the contingent account only those expenditures which cannot be foreseen or exactly estimated.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman must be mistaken, or I do not understand the object of the contingent account, which is not to provide for unforeseen expenditure.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then it is not contingent.

Mr. HAGGART. My contingent account is not for any such purpose as that. It is for the purpose of paying expenditures which are foreseen and known, and which might be estimated for. It is for accounts which are regular, but which do not come into the ordinary items. The only part of my contingent account which can be called unforeseen is that for extra clerks, which only amounts to $9,000 or $12,000 a year, which I intend to decrease in the direction the hon. gentleman suggests as fast as possible, because I believe that each person who is employed in the Department should have his salary estimated for during the Session, and that it should be voted for that purpose.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then it is a misnomer to call that a contingent account.

Mr. ELLIS. It appears that more than twenty persons have been added to this Department during the year. Is that statement correct, and, if so, what is the reason for the increase?

Mr. HAGGART. The addition was caused for two reasons. There was a large increase in the post office receipts, and a large increase in the savings bank branch receipts, and in the money order receipts, and there was a larger increase in the cost of management. In the savings bank branch there is an increase of $1,300,000 in deposits, and that requires a large increase in the staff of clerks. In the money order department the business has also increased, and that has demanded an increase in the number of clerks; but the increase of the clerks employed in each case is less in ratio to the business done than the number of clerks employed before.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How many temporary clerks are there in the Post Office Department?

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot say off-hand. The hon. gentleman will find the amount in the return, and the pay is about $399 a year, on the average. I think the amount is about $12,000, and, if he divides that by about $400, he can arrive at the number of extra clerks as nearly as possible.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Have you not had the time to count them?

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Can the Postmaster General tell me how many permanent officers there are in the Post Office Department?

Mr. HAGGART. You can see that by looking at the list.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did I understand the Minister to say that the deposits in the savings banks were increasing at present?

Mr. HAGGART. I said that there had been transfers from the Finance Department to the Post Office Department amounting to about $1,300,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that from the Dominion savings banks?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How did that take place? Did the Finance Minister shut up these offices and the Post Office take them over? Were they altogether in the Maritime Provinces?

Mr. FOSTER. They were all in the Lower Provinces, except, I think, one, which was in British Columbia.

Department of Agriculture.....$55,960

Mr. FOSTER. In this there are twenty-four statutory increases at $50, $1,200; two statutory increases at $25, $30; two at $30, $60; and one salary of a third-class clerk, omitted last year, of $650. Then there is an amount of $500 to provide for the appointment of Miss Steacy, and there is an increase by promotion of one second-class clerk to first class, amounting to $1,100, or a total of increases of $3,560. The decreases consist in two guardians dropped, $1,000, and the difference between the salary of Mrs. Lyster and that of her successor, $70, leaving the net increase $2,490.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are these guardians who have been dropped?

Mr. FOSTER. I believe they were guardians of the Patent room.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that there is an amount charged for Mr. George Johnson of $2,400. Was that an amount left over from last year, or how does it come to be put into this year's vote?

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Johnson's appointment was only permanently made during the present financial year, and before that he was paid out of the general vote. He is now a permanent officer, receiving $2,400 a year, which is the maximum salary of a chief clerk.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where does he come in here under the head of the Department of Agriculture? You had four chief clerks last year, and I see the same number estimated now. Under which of the items does Mr. Johnson come?

Mr. CARLING. His salary was estimated for last year, but the appointment was not made until this year.

Department of Marine.....$29,417 50

Mr. FOSTER. There is an increase here, caused by the promotion of three second class clerks, amounting to $300; nine statutory increases at $50, $450, and one at $37.50, making a total increase of $787.50.

Mr. McMULLEN. In regard to Charles F. Cox, who was employed last year at $3.50 a day, what is his position?

Mr. TUPPER. Mr. Cox has been in the service of the Department for a number of years, and is an assistant to Mr. Anderson, the engineer. He is an extremely valuable officer, and Mr. Anderson would not be able to get on without him. I think the amount paid him is very moderate for the work he does. He is entirely engaged in regard to the construction of lighthouses.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How long has he been in the service?

Mr. TUPPER. He has really been employed by the Department for three years. If he were made a permanent officer, it would simply mean that his salary would increase from year to year, and we are now able to secure his services for the amount which has been paid to him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the nature of his work such that after a time his services could be dispensed with?

Mr. TUPPER. In connection with officers of that kind, the idea followed is this: The salary is as fairly chargeable to the work performed as to Civil Government, but this gentleman has been specially employed in connection with our lighthouses. He is a draughtsman and engineer; and I think, as far as the Public Accounts are concerned, it is better to keep his charges in their present shape than to appoint such an officer a permanent officer of the Department. He is simply employed to perform that work in connection with lighthouses, and, if not paid in this way, would have to be paid out of the amount voted for the construction of the lighthouses.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many days' work did this gentleman perform last year?

Mr. TUPPER. Although he is called a temporary clerk, he is permanently in the employ of the Department at $3.50 a day.

Department of Fisheries.....$16,975

Mr. FOSTER. Here there are nine statutory increases at $50, $450; one at $12.50, and there are increases in class, bringing the total up to $637.50.

Department of Public Works.....$46,100

Mr. FOSTER. These are simply statutory increases, seventeen at $50 and two at $30, making a total of $910.

Department of Railways and Canals...$56,150

Mr. FOSTER. In this Department there are twelve statutory increases at $50, $600. Then there is an addition to Mr. Page's salary of $1,500, and an addition to Mr. Bradley's salary of $400, and there is a provision for one new first class clerk of $1,400, making a total of $3,900. There is a decrease in the accountant's salary of $1,800, a difference between Mr. Costin's salary and that of his successor of $300, and the difference between the salaries of two third class clerks promoted and those of their successors amounting to $1,000, or a total decrease of $3,100, leaving a net increase of $800.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know that I have any objection to make to the increase of Mr. Page's salary. He has been a very valuable officer, and has been for a long time in our service. Whether some of the hon. gentleman's friends and supporters equally appreciate him, may be doubted. But I presume that this is really not so large an increase as it appears. I think Mr. Page received formerly some other allowances.

Mr. FOSTER. This is not in lieu of any other services. It is an absolute increase to his salary.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Will the Minister give us the reason for increasing Mr. Bradley's salary?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Bradley is an old officer of the Department, and has been continually in the service for about twelve years. It was considered that his services entitled him to an increase of $400.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice that this increase is hardly correctly stated as regards Mr. Schreiber. In last year's Estimates he figured in two different places. His regular salary as engineer of Government railways was $4,000. It is true there was an allowance made him, but that was for special services.

Mr. FOSTER. That was an absolute increase to his salary of $2,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He has received a sum, I am aware, of $2,000 for a long time, and it was stated to be for a distinctly different service. "Mr. Schreiber, $2,000 a year as chief engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to be paid out of the appropriation for that railway." This is really an increase of $2,000, because I presume that work on the Canadian Pacific Railway has closed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With respect to Mr. Schreiber's salary, although it is quite true that the work on the Canadian Pacific Railway has ceased to a very considerable extent, still, his labors on the whole have not decreased. The work is incessant, not only to look after the Intercolonial and its branches, but the whole system of railways that have been assisted by subsidies have got to be under his strict supervision. The two salaries, $6,000, is not at all excessive, is very moderate, for an engineer of the standing of Mr. Schreiber, who has so much responsibility. I can assure the hon. gentleman that Mr. Schreiber has remained in the service from a sense of duty, because there were certain responsibilities which he had undertaken as chief engineer; and he has abandoned a much larger salary, if he would only accept it. I think it is desirable that we should retain an officer like him who, if he has any fault, has too great a regard for the public treasury. I may say that he has incurred a good deal of personal unpopularity through his desire to protect the public treasury. He is a most valuable officer and most conscientious.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not disposed myself to say that an officer of such importance, and with such duties, would be overpaid at the salary, although it is a large one compared with salaries which the heads of the departments get. Would the hon. gentleman explain to us the sums paid to my old friend, Mr. Page, and to the Secretary of the Department, whose salary he has increased by $400. Mr. Page, I see, is raised from $4,500 to $6,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With respect to Mr. Page, the hon. gentleman knows the great work that is now upon his shoulders—the whole work of carrying out the canal system, the enlargement of canals, the completing of the system, the completing of the Sault Ste. Marie canal; and when his salary is compared with those of hydraulic engineers, he has been kept down at a very low rate. I do not think the hon. gentleman, however economical he may be, will object to that salary. With regard to Mr. Bradley's salary, I ask that it be allowed to stand.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). In regard to the Chief Engineer of Railways, we have the positive assertions of the First Minister, and of the Minister of Railways in previous Sessions, that, as soon as the Canadian Pacific Railway was completed, the item of $2,000 would be struck out of the Estimates. We bore with it, expecting to see that promise realised. Now they tell us the railroad is completed, yet the $2,000 appears in another way. The Prime Minister assures us that this official is a very patriotic servant, that he is sacrificing himself to the interests of the country for the sum of $6,000 a year. It is certainly very generous on his part. I should think the First Minister feels wonderfully grateful to him.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. So I am.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). No doubt of it. We are paying for the official's gratefulness a pretty liberal salary, and one entirely different from what we expected to pay when the Canadian Pacific Railway was completed. A few words with respect to Mr. Page. No doubt he is a very efficient officer; at least I am inclined to think so, although some of the right hon. gentleman's own supporters are evidently not of that opinion, because there is a motion on the paper to impeach that official. When threatened with impeachment it is hardly fair to increase that official's salary by $1,500 a year, unless it is by way of consolation. Canals are to be built and enlarged under his responsibility, and at the same time there is impeachment hanging over him by one of the First Minister's leading supporters. Are we to understand that these men are to be compensated, because one is certain of impeachment and another is such a patriotic man, that he is willing to sacrifice not only himself but his relations in the service of the country? I cannot understand the item with respect to Mr. Bradley; but that is allowed to stand. It appears to me that none of these items are thoroughly understood. They have not been considered, and I hope the Government will see their way clear, after reconsidering them, to come to the conclusion that they are paying one man a little too liberally for being patriotic and another too much for being threatened with impeachment, and will strike out the increases.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As the hon. gentleman says, although the statement may satisfy the hon. gentleman from Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), it will not satisfy him. I have undertaken many great works, including the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but I shall never undertake to satisfy the hon. gentleman. If we look through Hansard from the time he has had the honor and advantage of being a member of this House, I do not think it will be found that the hon. gentleman has expressed satisfaction with any one measure brought forward, or with any statement made, before Parliament, and I, therefore, decline to attempt to give satisfaction to the hon. gentleman. As regards the impeachment of Mr. Page, that will be another page in his history. In the meantime, I repeat that I believe both those gentlemen are well worthy of their present salaries. Canada can afford to pay engineers fair allowances for their services, if they are really good engineers, and I believe these two men to be good engineers and to render valuable services. The hon. gentleman has said he remembers my making a statement about Mr. Schreiber's salary being cut down when the Canadian Pacific Railway was completed. That is not my recollection. I paid very little attention to these matters; my predecessor, Mr. Pope, looked after them for himself. I do not mean to say that some discussion did not take place in which I may have spoken, but I have no recollection of making such a statement, and the matter was not within my Department. I am sure the Committee will accept these two increases, although they may not be quite to the satisfaction of the hon. member for Elgin.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I regret exceedingly that I cannot place that amount of confidence in the First Minister which I should like to do. I acquired a history of the right hon. gentleman before I came into the House. I had full opportunities of knowing that it could hardly be expected that the right hon. gentleman would satisfy one of the Opposition if he merely depended on statements made by him. Could I for a moment expect to be fully satisfied, unless I had some evidence, proof and substantial guarantee, given by the hon. gentleman that certain things would be carried out? I can well remember when the hon. gentleman held up his hands and declared these hands were clean, when they were not clean. I can well remember when the hon. gentleman was conducting certain elections, that he asked for another $10,000. I well remember, also, when he held up his hands and said: Would to God he could catch a certain individual, when, at the same time, he was giving Bishop Taché $1,000 to get him out of the country. Could it be expected that on the right hon. gentleman's simple assertion I should be ready to believe him? The hon. gentleman might be able to build the Canadian Pacific Railway; in fact, it was an easy matter for him to do so. He could put his hands into the public treasury up to the elbow, and proceed with the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with the Dominion at its back. I would advise the hon. gentleman, in making comparisons and statements as to his ability to convince, not to use the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway as an illustration. He should hold his head in shame for many things connected with that road.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I retract any remarks if I am out of order. I wish to say this: that if the hon. gentleman would give some reasonable proof why I should be convinced by him, I would be prepared to accept any proposition and legislation in the interests of the country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would simply say that I do not object to the hon. gentleman's speech, although I think a good deal of it has been heard before on the stump, and will, no doubt, be heard on the stump hereafter. I said I did not undertake the task of satisfying the hon. gentleman. There are no means of satisfying him. Why, the hon. gentleman's own side cannot satisfy him. He was not satisfied with the resolutions of my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock), and how can I expect him to be satisfied with anything coming from a rabid Tory like myself.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Anyhow, the item stands.

Mr. LANDERKIN. When was Mr. Page's salary increased?

Mr. FOSTER. It is proposed to increase it now.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Did I understand that Mr. Bradley's salary was to stand at $2,400, or that the item was to stand?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, it was the item that was to stand.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 5.40 p.m.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 3rd February, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

JOSEPH AIMÉ MASSUE, Esq., Member for the Electoral District of Richelieu, introduced by Sir John A. Macdonald and Hon. J. A. Chapleau.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 39) to incorporate the York County Bank.—(Mr. Denison.)

Bill (No. 40) to incorporate the National Construction Company.—(Mr. Brown.)

Bill (No. 41) to incorporate the Canada Cable Company.—(Mr. Hesson.)

Bill (No. 42) to amend the Indian Advancement Act.—(Mr. Doyon.)

Bill (No. 44) to further amend chapter 5 of the Revised Statutes, respecting the Electoral Franchise.—(Mr. Barron.)

FRAUD IN THE SALE OF CEREALS.

Mr. BURDETT moved for leave to introduce a Bill to prevent fraud in the sale of cereals and seed grain.

Mr. SPEAKER. There has been no notice of that Bill. Being a public Bill, notice has to be given.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.

Mr. HESSON moved:

That the Public Accounts of the Dominion of Canada for the fiscal year ended the 30th June, 1889, and the Report of the Auditor General on Appropriation Accounts for the same year, be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Motion agreed to.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 43) to amend chapter 4 of 52 Victoria, intituled "An Act to authorise the granting of subsidies in land to certain railway companies." He said: At our last Session, when the Dominion Lands and Railways Subsidy Bill was before the House, the land asked for by the Alberta Company was given to the North-West Coal and Navigation Company, through a clerical error. It is only to correct that mistake.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suppose the gentleman responsible for that mistake will pay all the expenses of this legislation. He ought to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That will be the railway company.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PRIVILEGE—LOYALTY TO HER MAJESTY.

Mr. COCKBURN. Before the next Order is called, I wish to make a personal explanation. I shall read to the House an article which appeared in the Montreal Herald of Saturday last, and which runs as follows:—

"DID HE SHIRK?"

"Mr. Cockburn, one of the members for Toronto, and, we believe, some other Conservative members, at being called to account by the press for having, it is alleged, shirked the vote on Mr. Mulock's Loyalty motion, an impression has been created that during recess some remarks were made elsewhere, tending to show Mr. Cockburn's annexation tendencies, and attributing to him a closer connection with the direction of Canadian affairs than he quite possesses. Mr. Cockburn, it appears, was not in the lobbies at the time the vote was taken, but had already started from the Capital. It is held by some that there is very little difference between the two things, because it was known that the vote was about to be taken."

In reference to this matter I have to state that there is a certain modicum of truth in it, because it is true that I was not in the lobbies at the time the vote was taken, but I had already started from the Capital; indeed I had started four days before, having been called to Toronto by urgent business. I regret that I was not able to be present at the time the vote was taken, and I need only say that had I been present it would have given me the greatest pleasure to vote for the loyal resolution proposed by my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock), and so ably seconded by the gallant member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot). Indeed I would not have thought it necessary to take any notice of this article at all, but I could not regard it as an ordinary article. It appeared in a paper of which the merits have been held forth to our admiration so often, and so loudly vaunted by a member who occupies no ordinary position in this House, that I thought it required my attention. Moreover, I am not dealing with an ordinary member, but I am dealing with the sentiments of a great party, a party which is one and indivisible, and which, in the interests of the country, I hope will ever remain so.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am very glad to find that the hon. gentleman recognises that, in referring to the columns of the Montreal Herald, he is dealing with no ordinary paper. Indeed he is not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is an extraordinary paper.

Mr. MITCHELL. No doubt the right hon. gentleman feels that sometimes. I am glad to find that a compliment is paid to myself by the hon. gentleman when he says, speaking of the gentleman connected with that paper, that he is dealing with no ordinary man. Sir, he is not.

Mr. SPEAKER. According to the Rules of the House, I would remind the hon. gentleman that he is out of order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have been attacked, and I am giving a personal explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER. These personal explanations must be very short.

Mr. MITCHELL. If you will tolerate the few remarks I have got to make, we will get through it much quicker. He is dealing with an independent man, and that is what I am scarcely inclined to believe the hon. gentleman will state in reference to himself. After having heard his explanations, and the feelings of loyalty he has expressed, I will say that I accept the apology he has made.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 20) respecting the Goderich and Canadian Junction Railway, and to change the name of the company to the Goderich and Wingham Railway Company.—(Mr. Madill, for Mr. Rorter.)

Bill (No. 21) to incorporate the Lindsay, Bobcaygeon and Pontypool Railway Company.—(Mr. Corby, for Mr. Hudspeth.)

Bill (No. 22) to amend the Act to incorporate the Belleville and Lake Nipissing Railway Company.—(Mr. Corby.)

Bill (No. 23) to incorporate "Belding-Paul and Company (Limited)."—(Mr. White, Cardwell, for Mr. Curran.)

Bill (No. 24) respecting the St. Stephen's Bank.—(Mr. Weldon, St. John.)

Bill (No. 25) respecting the North-Western Coal and Navigation Company (Limited).—(Mr. Shanly.)

Bill (No. 27) to incorporate the Sault Ste. Marie and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—(Mr. Dawson.)

Bill (No. 28) to incorporate the Ottawa, Morrisburg and New York Railway Company.—(Mr. Hickey.)

Bill (No. 33) respecting the People's Bank of New Brunswick.—(Mr. Weldon, St. John.)

Bill (No. 34) to amend the Act to incorporate the Saskatchewan Railway and Mining Company.—(Mr. Wallace.)

PASSAGE RATES TO WINNIPEG.

Mr. DOYON asked, How does it happen that, whereas immigrants coming from Europe pay only $13.50 as passage money from Portland, in Maine, to Winnipeg: Canadian-born immigrants from the United States, wishing to return to their native country, are obliged to pay $28 to $30 as passage money for the same journey?

Mr. CARLING. The passage rates between Europe and Winnipeg, and between Portland and Winnipeg, are fixed by the transportation companies, and are not under the control of the Department. However, I shall take an early opportunity of communicating with the railway companies on the subject.

SURVEYS IN MONTCALM.

Mr. THÉRIEN asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to have published, shortly, the report of the exploratory surveys made of late years in the County of Montcalm by F. D. Adams?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The work of Mr. Adams, referred to by the hon. gentleman, will appear in the summary report of the Department of the Interior for this year, which report is now in the hands of the printer. It will be enlarged on when the geological map, which is now under preparation, is completed.

CAPTAIN TAIT ROBERTSON.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Whether the attention of the Government has been called to an outrage that was committed on the steamer Baltic last season while on a voyage in the Georgian Bay, through which a young man named Hambly lost his life? If so, is it the intention of the Government to cancel Captain Tait Robertson's license, he being the captain who was in command of the Baltic at the time the outrage was committed? If not, why not?

Mr. TUPPER. My attention was called to this so-called outrage by the press, and, having observed the reports in the papers regarding it, I, some time ago, gave directions to obtain full information, with a view to ordering a strict enquiry into the conduct of the captain.

RAILWAY ACCOMMODATION AT BRYANTON.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to carry out the promise made by the Department of Railways and Canals, of putting in a switch at Bryanton in connection with the Derby Branch of the Intercolonial Railway?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The memorandum I have from the Department is that a platform was promised at Bryanton, and that there is no record of a promise to build a switch. However, my hon. friend has told me there was a verbal promise made, and I will take occasion to make an early enquiry into it.

RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS.

Mr. CASEY asked, Whether the Government has received a petition from the railway mail clerks, asking for increase of pay; the establishment of a mutual benefit fund, &c.? If so, what are their intentions in regard thereto?

Mr. HAGGART. Such a petition has been received, and will be given due attention.

OXFORD AND NEW GLASGOW RAILWAY.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. McMULLEN) asked, What is the entire sum expended in connection with the production and equipment of the Oxford and New Glasgow Railway, up to the 31st December last; the entire length of the new line; the entire length from Oxford to New Glasgow via the new line; the length from Oxford to New Glasgow by the old line of the Intercolonial?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The entire sum expended up to 31st December, 1889, was $1,543,831.27. The entire length of the new road is: Main line, 67'60 miles; Pugwash, 4'75 miles; total, 72'35 miles. The distance from Oxford to New Glasgow by new line is 82'40 miles. Distance, Oxford to New Glasgow by old line, 89 miles.

BEAUHARNOIS CANAL.

Mr. BERGERON asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to enlarge and deepen the Beauharnois Canal this year; or when?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The whole subject of the enlargement and deepening of the St. Lawrence canals is now engaging the attention of the Government.

THE CASE OF LÉBOURDAIS BROTHERS.

Mr. BERNIER (for Mr. CASGRAIN) asked, Whether the Government has any official information as to remittance, in whole or in part, of the sentence against the two brothers Lebourdais, tried in Scotland last year? If so, what is such information, and when will their detention be ended?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. On 3rd June a communication was received by the High Commissioner from the Colonial Office, covering one from the office of the Secretary of State for Scotland, dated 14th May, 1889, stating that the Secretary of State, having given most careful consideration to the case, found there was no ground for the statement in the petition that there had been a miscarriage of justice, but that, in view of the whole circumstances, he felt justified in stating that he would be prepared to recommend the release of the parties at the expiration of one year from 10th May last.

Mr. LANDERKIN.

ALASKA AND CANADA BOUNDARY LINE.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. CHARLTON) asked, What progress has been made in settling the boundary line between Alaska and the Dominion of Canada? Are difficulties likely to arise in the settlement of the boundary?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No difficulty is likely to arise in regard to the boundary between Alaska and the Dominion of Canada. That boundary is defined in the Treaty of 1825, known as the Treaty of St. Petersburg. It will doubtless be necessary that a delimitation of the boundary shall be made, at least at several points, by actual survey; but although the Government of Canada have expressed readiness to join with the United States in making such a survey, the United States Government have not, so far as this Government are aware, taken any steps to that end up to the present time.

AMOUNT OF CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant) asked, 1. What was the estimated population of the Dominion on which the amount of Customs duties paid per head of population (as per Table No. 7 of Trade and Navigation Returns of 1889) was calculated for each of the years from 1880 to 1887? 2. On what date was based the estimated population for the years 1887, 1888 and 1889, as given in said table? 3. Was the same rule adopted in estimating the population for the years 1880 to 1887 as for the years 1887 to 1889?

Mr. BOWELL. The figures used from 1871 until 1880 for the calculations in column 3 of No. 7 of Trade and Navigation Tables were the numbers ascertained by the census of 1871, plus 113,508, the estimated population of British Columbia, Manitoba and North-West Territories. From 1881 to 1886 the figures were given annually to the Customs Department by the Department of Agriculture, and were based, I am informed, on the census of 1881, with the percentage of increase between 1871 and 1881 added thereto. Since the publication of the Statistical Abstract in 1886, a table has appeared in it, giving the population estimated for such year, and this differs in 1887 and 1888 from the numbers published in the Trade and Navigation Tables, the latter, as I am informed, being estimated only up to 4th April (date of census of 1881), while the former was for the fiscal year ending 30th June.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

Mr. DICKINSON asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce this Session legislation to regulate Benevolent Societies?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not the present intention of the Government to introduce this Session legislation to regulate Benevolent Societies.

THE JESUITS' ESTATES ACT.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Before we pass over the questions, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice, whether, among the papers moved for by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) is included the correspondence with Mr. Graham of the Star, and if not, whether the Government is prepared to bring down the memorandum or letter of the Minister of Justice to Mr. Graham, along with the other correspondence?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the papers are not covered by the present motion, but there can be no objection to bring them down?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It would be very desirable to have them all before us.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They will be brought down.

THE PUBLIC CURRENCY.

Mr. CASEY moved:

That the Government should issue, or guarantee the absolute soundness of all paper currency issued or circulated as money, taking adequate security in the latter case, and to make such guaranteed currency a legal tender, whether issued by the Government or by banks.

He said: I trust the House will permit me to make the few verbal amendments in the motion I have just read, and which is slightly different from that on the Order paper. My object in bringing this motion before the House is not to ask any expression of opinion, by way of a division, which it would be unreasonable to ask, in view of the fact that we are shortly to have a Bill on the subject of banking; but to attempt to elicit from the House by discussion a sort of general opinion with regard to the great principle of the matter which I propose to have introduced. I may say, in the first place, that I have no idea of proposing anything in the line of "greenbacks" or trying to nourish that ill-fated "rag baby." On the other hand, I do not wish to propose anything in exact accordance with the National Bank system of the United States, nor yet with the system in force in England, as concerns the issue of paper money by the Bank of England. I propose to attain the same thing that is attained in these nations by somewhat different means, which I will explain as I go on. But the leading principles which I wish to urge are, that the Government is responsible for the absolute soundness of all currency which it allows to be circulated and used as money in currency, and that all such currency, whose soundness is guaranteed by the Government, should be made legal tender in the same manner as Dominion notes are at present. I will take this matter up somewhat in the manner of the good old-fashioned preachers who used to divide a sermon into three heads; and I will ask, first, why should the Government be responsible for, or guarantee the soundness of the currency? In the second place, why is it preferable for the Government to guarantee the soundness of the currency, issued by banks rather than issue it directly themselves? And, in the third place, I will ask why the Government should make it a legal tender? As to the responsibility of the Government for the soundness of the public currency I maintain that, prima facie, are just as responsible for the soundness of the paper currency which they allow to circulate as for the absolute purity of the coinage which they circulate as money. In the latter case the responsibility of the Government is universally admitted all over the civilised world. Governments, and they alone, issue coinage and insure through their mint, and by the stamp on each coin, the purity of that coinage. This is looked upon as a public duty of the Government—and it is a duty, because Government should protect from all losses, in buying and selling, the holders and takers of currency who have not the means of protecting themselves. If that is true in regard to coinage, it is, I think, still more true in regard to paper currency, because, in regard to coins, the holder has some means of protecting himself. It is possible to test the genuineness of a coin by means of a little acid and a pair of scales, but there is no means of testing the goodness of a bank note unless one is an expert in banking matters and knows all possible counterfeits, and unless one is perfectly well informed as to the financial standing of the bank whose notes are offered to him. Therefore, I hold that the duty of the Government, to secure the absolute soundness of the paper currency, is greater than their duty to secure the absolute purity of the coinage. The duty of the Government in issuing coins is universally admitted, and the duty of securing the soundness of paper currency is almost as universally admitted by all the nations of the civilised world. It is admitted by all the great nations, at all events; these Governments hold themselves responsible for the soundness of that currency. Now, admitting the duty of the Government so to secure the currency, the next question that arises is, how should they secure it? It might be secured by the regulation of the bank issues, to a great extent; it might be secured by a Government guarantee stamped on the issues of the banks; or, it might be secured by issuing all the currency directly from the public treasury, making it a direct promise to pay from the Government to the holder of each note. As to the regulation of the bank issues, we have done a great deal already. We have provided that a bank may issue only to the extent of its paid-up capital, that it shall hold certain reserves in gold and Dominion notes, and that beyond that, in case the bank suspends payment, the holder of its notes shall have a first lien on all the assets of the bank before any other creditor shall be satisfied. These provisions would seem to afford a very high degree of security. It has been found, in practice, that they do afford a very high ultimate degree of security; but still they are not quite sufficient to accomplish the purposes the Government should aim at in connection with the currency. In the first place, after a bank suspends, a considerable time is required to liquidate its assets, and during that time the holder of its notes is in such a position that, if he must realise on them immediately, he has to dispose of them at a discount, large or small, according to the public estimate of what the assets of the suspended bank will be when liquidated. I would like to refer here to the rumored proposal of the bankers to the Government, that they should make a mutual agreement to redeem each other's notes in case of suspension. If such an arrangement were carried out, it would still further increase the security, and make it, to my mind, nearly absolute; because, on looking at the combined assets of all the banks, and comparing them with their combined issues of currency, it is clear that there are plenty of assets to cover all the issues, leaving a large surplus. According to the last statement published in the Gazette, the paid-up capital of all the banks was $60,289,000, their assets, $252,166,000, and the note circulation, $33,577,000; so that, even allowing a very large margin for over-estimation of assets, it is perfectly clear that the banks, taken altogether, could redeem the bank circulation, or could relieve any individual bank. But still, although that arrangement would afford a security known to be good by experienced business men who understand the system and the standing of the banks, there is one thing it would not secure—the general and absolute recognition of that security; and I contend that the Government's policy in regard to the currency of the country should be such as would not only secure its absolute soundness, but also the universal knowledge and recognition of that soundness; just in the same manner as the Government is not content with seeing that each gold piece has the right number of carats of gold, but also stamps it in such a way that everybody shall see that it is pure and genuine. I think the currency should be equally secured, so that everyone to whom a note is presented would take it not only with safety, but without any fear of loss. Now, the present currency certainly does not meet that requirement, and even the arrangement proposed to be entered into by the banks, as reported in the papers, would not secure it. It might secure the goodness of the notes, but there would be nothing on their face to show to anybody that they were so secured, or that he might take them without loss. The inconvenience of such a state of things is very obvious. In the first place, as anybody who has travelled in the United States well knows, our bank notes are either non-current at all, or they are received with great suspicion on the other side of the line, while their greenbacks pass without question here, for the reason that they are Government notes, and everybody knows that the Government is responsible for their payment. The people of the United States do not know the standing of our different banks, and know very little indeed of the credit of our Government, and therefore regard all our notes with some suspicion. If they saw that all our notes were guaranteed by the Dominion Government, they would look into the matter, and our notes would pass there at as small a discount as their currency does here. But even in the Dominion of Canada, if the Finance Minister should visit British Columbia, taking with him some of these bank notes which pass current here, and should offer them to some one who did not know he was the Finance Minister, he might have some difficulty in passing them. The people of one end of Canada do not know the standing of the banks at the other end; the Dominion is a large country, and such knowledge is not as widely diffused as a knowledge of politics. We also often find that notes of newly-established banks, or those about which there are rumors, are received with some distrust or refused altogether. Then again, in litigation between parties, the question sometimes arises as to whether payment has been duly offered, and whether it was done with bank notes or with legal tender; and even though bank notes are sound, they do not satisfy the requirements of the law because they are not legal tender. There are great inconveniences arising from the existence of a currency so diverse in its character, so little known beyond the neighborhood of the bank which issues it, and so liable to cause disputes between parties dealing with each other. In respect to counterfeiting, also, we find difficulties. The very diversity of the issue facilitates counterfeiting. When counterfeit money is put in circulation, it is nobody's business in particular to detect and punish the counterfeiters. The banks do not care much about them, for their tellers are experts and sure to detect counterfeit money. The only person who suffers is the innocent holder who presents the counterfeit notes to the bank, and then discovers that he has no recourse, and is unable to find the man who passed it upon him. Now, a case arose illustrating this a few years ago, when a number of counterfeited notes of different Canadian banks were issued in Detroit, and nothing was done towards having the counterfeiters arrested, until they began to counterfeit some Dominion notes, when Dominion detectives were sent to ferret out the guilty parties, who were discovered and arrested. If these parties had not tried their hands on Dominion notes, they might have gone on uninterruptedly swindling the people out of a large amount of money, and no means taken to check them. Having established, as far as I am able to do at present, that it is the duty of the Government to secure the soundness of our currency, and to make that soundness known, the question arises: How shall the Government make it known? You, Sir, no doubt have read Burns' famous lines:

“The rank is but the guinea stamp,
The man's the gowd for a' that.”

Which means that the rank conferred upon a man by the Government, or conferred on money by the Government, would not of itself give the man or the currency any value; but it yet remains true that the rank, though not the cause of value in gold, is the proof to all the world that the value as represented exists. The King's stamp is the proof of the purity of the gold, and the Government stamp upon a bill is the only absolute proof of its soundness, the only absolute security for its redemption in gold at any time. I believe this guinea stamp, this tower mark, this proof of absolute soundness, should be given by way of a guarantee of all notes issued by the banks, rather than by their direct issue by the Government. Bankers have the best opportunities of knowing what the needs of the country are in the way of circulation, and it is most convenient that our currency should be issued only through the medium of the banks, and that the Government should not pay out any notes directly, but leave their issue to the banks; and my motion is to the effect that, in that case, the Government should take security from the banks. What would be an adequate security for the Government to take? We know that in the United States the demand for Government bonds is rather more than dollar for dollar; we know that in England a sovereign is required for every pound's worth of currency issued. I think both those systems would be too inelastic for this country. We all know that at times greater expansion than usual is required, and the banks are the best judges of the necessity for any sudden expansion. The figures I have given of the assets of the banks show that the Government would have absolute security if they had the first lien on those assets which are now held by note holders. As the case stands at present, the note holders are forced to accept this as their only security, and have to take the risk of its being sufficient. They have no means of knowing whether it is adequate or not, and they have no control over the banks, and, therefore, I think the public, rather than the individual, should assume this risk, as the Government have both the knowledge of the standing of the banks and control over them. It is, therefore, eminently fair and just—in fact, it is the only just way—that the Government should take the risk the note holders take and accept the security which the note holders now have. In other words, the Government should take the first lien on all assets of the banks, and guarantee the note circulation of those banks within the prescribed limits; and, if these were not found sufficient, I fancy very small additional guarantees and securities would make up the deficiency. I cannot expect the Government to take action on this motion, as they contemplate bringing down a Bill of their own on this subject, and I do not hope to be able to teach the Government; but I make this motion in the expectation that it may bring up a discussion on this subject, which may be instructive to the House and the Government. I now come to my last point. Why not make the guarantee currency legal tender? If the Government has absolute security and guarantees, why not compel everybody to accept this currency in payment of debts? Nearly all Governments who have a guaranteed currency make it a legal tender, and it only seems logical that they should do so. Such a course would cause this currency to be taken with greater confidence, not only at home but abroad, and our people would be put in possession of a national currency second to none possessed by any country in the world.

Mr. FOSTER. I have listened with great attention to my hon. friend who has spoken to his motion, as he himself intimated, rather with the idea of starting a discussion in the House which might elicit opinions for the mutual information of members and the Government as well, than with any idea that the Government would, at this stage, indicate its policy with reference to the Banking Bill which it is its intention shortly to bring down. The hon. gentleman's views, which he has enunciated with much ability, will be printed in the Debates, where I will have the pleasure of reading them at leisure, and of considering the various principles he has laid down; and, having stated his views, I am convinced my hon. friend is prepared to withdraw his motion, and not press it to a vote.

Motion withdrawn.

MAIL SERVICE IN GASPÉ COUNTY.

Mr. JONCAS moved for:

Copies of all letters, reports and other correspondence now in the possession of the Postmaster General respecting the carriage of the mails between Campbellton, in the Province of New Brunswick, and Gaspé Basin, in the Province of Quebec.

He said: I desire particularly to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that, from the 15th October last to the 15th January, almost every day our mails have been behind time from twenty-four to seventy-seven hours. I have received lately a number of letters complaining of the state of affairs in our county. On the 17th January, the head of one of the most important commercial firms wrote as follows:—

"Our mail service is as bad as possible. It makes no difference whether roads are good or bad. Even with the slow time allowed, mails are always behind. I do not believe that, in the last three months, we have had a mail on time, and frequently they are twenty-nine hours late, and sometimes fifty-three hours, and even seventy-eight hours."

On the 22nd January, another gentleman well known in the county wrote:

"Three mails again due this morning. The mail that left Campbellton on Friday last, the 17th, is not yet in—130 hours to travel 180 miles."

This is a very bad state of affairs. Who is responsible for it? I do not wish to blame anyone principally, but I think the evil lies in the fact that, if I am well informed, the Postmaster General is obliged to accept the lowest tender whenever tenders are invited for the carrying of the mails, and also in the manner in which the contracts are worded. If the law is so framed that the Postmaster General is bound to accept the lowest tender whenever tenders are invited for the carrying of the mails, I think the law should be changed, because the consequence of it is that every Tom, Dick or Harry can tender, every irresponsible party can tender for the carrying of the mail, and consequently irresponsible parties who have not the means of doing the work tender too low, get the contract, and then cannot do the work properly. I think also that the manner in which the contracts are worded has something to do with this. One of the clauses of the contract contains these words:

"That the contractor will be obliged to be at such a place at such an hour, weather permitting."

These two words, "weather permitting," are made very elastic, and the couriers are sure to find an obliging postmaster to write on the way-bill a statement that the roads are bad. What is the remedy for this state of things, which is, as everybody in this House will understand, prejudicial to the trade and business of the County of Gaspé? I have had the pleasure of having a conversation on the subject with the Postmaster General, when I respectfully submitted that something should be done in the way of improving the service; and I think that a good way of improving the service would be to strike out of the contracts the words "weather permitting," and oblige, under a penalty, the contractor or courier to be at such a post office at such a time. We have no railway in the County of Gaspé. We are almost out of the world for six months in the year, and I think the Government should at least give us a good mail service. It is within my personal knowledge that important commercial firms have spent as much as $300 and $400 in telegrams, just on account of delays in the mail service. I hope my hon. friend the Postmaster General, will see his way clear to put a few hundred dollars more in the Estimates this year to give the County of Gaspé a better mail service. We must remember that there is in that county a population of 60,000, that the trade of that part of the country is very important, and that such a state of affairs is disastrous.

Mr. HAGGART. No letters or correspondence on the subject are in the Department in reference to irregularity in the delivery of mails in the district which my hon. friend mentions. I suppose the reason of it is, as he says, that the contract for the whole distance between Campbellton and Gaspé is divided into two or three contracts. The reports of the postmasters will show that when the mails arrived late there was some reason; the weather was unfavorable, or there was some other reason. The contract for the delivery of the mail from Campbellton to Gaspé used to be one single contract, and the delivery was better than it is at present. The first information I had of the irregularity of the delivery was a conversation with my hon. friend the member for Gaspé (Mr. Joncas) the other day. The suggestions which he made to me I have embodied in a letter that I sent down to the inspector to report upon, and as they have no railway communication there, and it is an important section of the country, the Department will pay every attention to the suggestions of my hon. friend, and I hope to make the service between Campbellton and Gaspé, in the future, everything that the hon. gentleman desires.

Motion agreed to.

REBATE ON CORN.

Mr. LANDERKIN moved :

That whereas distillers are allowed a rebate of duty upon malt imported for use in the manufacture of spirits for export, it is, in the opinion of this House, but just and right that farmers and stock raisers who import corn to feed cattle or other stock for export should also receive a similar rebate.

He said: Last Session I brought this matter before the House, and we had a considerable discussion of the subject. My views have not changed since that time. I believe in the correctness of the resolution; I believe in the soundness of the resolution; I believe in the justice of the resolution, and hence I have felt it my duty to bring it again before the House for further deliberation and further consideration, so as, if possible, to remove from the tariff of this country what appears to me to be a great blot upon it. We have a very high tariff, and we find many anomalies in connection with it. We find many distinctions of an invidious character in connection with it. We find many matters in it prejudicial to the interests of the great masses of the people, and in favor of the interests of classes of people in this country. It is in order to remove this anomaly that I have brought this resolution before the House. I have thought that in a British Parliament where fair play should be the predominant feature of the deliberations of the House, measures should not be passed, nor assented to by the Government, that deal out uneven-handed justice to the people of this country, as is done in these statutes and in the Order in Council upon which this is framed. When I brought this matter before the House last Session, my hon. friend the Minister of Customs told me of the difficulties there would be in the way of enforcing such a resolution as this. He gave us to understand that it would be impracticable to carry out a resolution of this character; that while he was able and willing, and while he could recommend to the Government to pass an Order in Council that would give a rebate or a drawback to the distillers of this country, he was unable to offer any solution of such a problem on behalf of the agriculturists of this country. He appeared to indicate—or his words bore out that construction—that the farmers of this country, and the consuming masses of the people of this country, could not be relied upon in making their declarations in reference to what they might see fit to import for purposes of production. Now, Sir, I will tell the Minister of Customs, in order to relieve his mind, that one of my objects in bringing this before the House is to draw the attention of the Government to the fact that these inequalities exist, that injustice is being done, repeatedly done, against the great consuming masses of the people of this country. It is for that reason that I have drawn the attention of the House to this matter, and it is in order to secure, if possible, the support of the Minister of Customs, and to relieve him of the difficulty of solving the problem of giving any relief, or of giving any aid, or of giving consideration, to the farmers and agriculturists and the other classes of the people of this country. I purpose to say to him, I purpose to take him into my confidence, and tell him that what I propose by this resolution is to strike a blow at this drawback system in the tariff of this country. This matter is but in its infancy, and I propose to nip it in the bud now while we can. It will grow, it will become strong, and it will become impossible for the Government, if this is allowed to go on, to grapple with this great and pressing evil, an evil that is fraught with a great amount of expense to the people of this country. Young as it is, in infancy as it is, I find that last year the drawbacks amounted to something over \$20,000. The bounty that was given to the manufacturers of pig iron amounted to over \$37,000, making in all \$58,305.58 last year. That is a pretty promising infant for this country to feed, that is a pretty promising industry for the people of this country to grapple with, if, when these Orders in Council have only been in force, some of them with which I am dealing, for little over a year, they have been able to extract from the people of this country over \$58,000. Now, Mr. Speaker, this resolution is something that should meet with fair play, and commend itself to the judgment of every member of this House. I believe it can be comprehended by every man in this country with the instincts of fair play, that whereas we are willing to give to this class I am dealing with here, a rebate on commodities that they import for the purpose of manufacture and re-exportation, we cannot give it to the larger classes, or that we do not give it to the larger classes, but they are discriminated against by the Government of this country. If there is one class of people in this country to whom the Government ought to give a helping hand, it is the agricultural and the laboring classes. It is upon these classes that the success and the future of this country very largely depend. It is certainly the duty of this House, and it should be the high privilege and pleasure of this House, to do everything they possibly can to lessen the burdens of these great classes, instead of adding to their already heavy burdens. Now, we find that this is a two-fold evil. While it not only adds to the taxation of the people, while it not only imposes heavier burdens upon them, it enables the distiller to bring in corn to fatten cattle and to have the duty taken off his corn, while the farmer alongside of him, if he sees fit to import corn to fatten his cattle, is obliged to pay $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents per bushel. What is the result? Both their products have the same market. The distiller has his corn at $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents a bushel less than the farmer. The farmer is obliged to compete in the markets of the world with the distiller and pay this additional $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents duty on the corn. I appeal to the sense of justice of the House if this should be allowed to continue; I appeal to the sense of fair play of hon. members to say if such a principle should be allowed to exist either on the statute book or in Order in Council. It is a blot upon the deliberations of this House, and it does not harmonise with what I would regard as a system which could carry out the feelings of hon. members. The farmer is handicapped by this resolution—as many other resolutions to which I shall call the attention of the Government. I propose to urge upon this House the impropriety of the continuance of such Orders in Council or statutes that favor special classes of the people and impose burdens on the great mass of our population. With our high tariff, with a protective system in operation, a system that is taking the life blood out of the industries of this country, a system that is producing a depression more severe in its character than has ever been felt in the history of Canada, a system that has depreciated the value of property more than ever before, a system that possesses anomalous features which are always creeping to the surface—it becomes the duty of members of this House to rise in their might and sweep from the statute book regulations so obnoxious and so oppressive upon the industries of the country. It is well known, not only by the farmers but by many manufacturers, that the taxing of the raw materials they use, as is the case under the present tariff, is obnoxious and detrimental to our best interests, and it becomes the duty of this House to consider these matters with a view to relieving the distress that prevails so widely over the Dominion. A few years ago we were told by the Government of the day that they could make peoplerich by Act of Parliament; that it was scarcely necessary to continue their energy and enterprise, for by parliamentary Acts they could add to the people's wealth and bring about prosperity. How fallacious have been the promises they made. It is known from one end of the country to the other how fallacious have proved to be the promises made in regard to that policy. It is known to hon. members of this House, and you, Mr. Speaker, know it as well as any of the hon. gentlemen, that these promises have proved fallacious; that their fallacy has been exposed, and that the country now understands that this protective tariff has been the means of inflicting great injury on the country, evil which will take many years to repair, and many years will elapse before we will be able to restore to the farmers the prosperity that previously existed. An hon. gentleman suggests that I should take a drink. He will vote for the distiller; he is not an advocate against drawbacks, but he is anxious that those anomalies should exist. He is anxious that the people should be burdened with this species of class legislation, as they have been burdened for the past few years. Another matter which occurs to me in connection with this subject, and it is an important one, is this: I notice that these Orders in Council granting drawbacks to certain classes of the community, and I confess to a great many classes, have been passed either just before or just after an election. It appears that every man who was not promised to be a Senator at the last election has obtained a drawback on something that he manufactures. This is another way in which the liberties of the people are affected by this rotten and corrupt system of legislation. I saw in one of the returns brought down the name of a gentleman who formerly supported hon. members on this side of the House. An Order in Council was passed, just after the election, granting him a drawback on certain articles which entered into his manufactured goods, and under that order he received \$1,500 for that one year. That was something tangible for him, and it was to him a good and sufficient reason why he should change his political creed. But should the Government have the power of taking the people's money and handing it over to any individual or any class, in order to debauch them and lead them to oppose principles they believed to be correct? Certainly not. I presume if I were to go through the list I could find a great many instances of this kind. It is well known that there are many, many instances on record; but I will not occupy the time of the House in doing so. I have taken my stand on this matter. I am going to fight unto death this drawback system. In season and out of season I am going to draw the attention of the House and country to the injurious effects that are calculated to arise from a system so unsound as this and one so far removed from a fiscal system which merits the support of the people. I will oppose this system to the bitter end; and my object is not to oppose the Minister of Customs, but to come to his rescue and to the rescue of the people, and relieve them of the burdens placed on them by the drawback system, which oppresses them and discriminates unfairly against the farming class. Entertaining this feeling and being convinced of the soundness of this view, I shall, unhesitatingly, go forward, and everywhere fight to the bitter end the drawback system which is calculated to do so much injury to the people of the country.

Mr. CORBY. As the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) has brought a resolution before the House, asking that the farmers of the Dominion be granted the same relief as distillers on corn imported to feed stock for export, I should like to give the House a few figures as to the quantity of corn brought in by distillers for manufacturing purposes, the quantity of spirit exported, and the rebate allowed distillers on the spirits exported for the last five years. First, I will give the corn used by distillers in manufacturing spirits.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Might I ask when the Order in Council was passed? The hon. gentleman is reading figures for the past five years. Will he state when the Order was passed?

Mr. CORBY. I am giving you figures for the past five years.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The Order in Council was passed a year ago.

Mr. CORBY. I only went back five years, and I thought that would cover the whole ground.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is all nonsense bringing figures before the Order in Council was passed.

Mr. CORBY. Indian corn, used by distillers in manufacture of spirits, Dominion of Canada, was as follows:—

Year ending 30th June, 1885	48,780,428 lbs.
“ “ 1886	61,044,700 “
“ “ 1887	70,067,303 “
“ “ 1888	74,285,727 “
“ “ 1889	77,666,625 “
Total	331,844,783 lbs.

The grand total of Indian corn is 331,844,783 lbs., which, divided by 56, the number of pounds in a bushel, equals 5,925,800 bushels, the import duty on which, at 7½ cents per bushel, is $444,435, which is paid by the distillers in the Dominion for the last five years. Against that I will give the figures of the spirits exported for the Dominion of Canada for the same time, which are as follows:—

Year ending 30th June, 1885	Proof gals.
1885	10,322'26
“ “ 1886	9,309'94
“ “ 1887	4,596'89
“ “ 1888	7,889'38

or a total quantity exported by the distillers of the Dominion for the last five years of 40,849'30 proof gallons, which, at 20'4 lbs. for one proof gallon, equals 833,325 lbs. of grain in spirits exported, and 80 per cent. of corn in 833,325 lbs. of grain equals 666,660 lbs. of corn at 56 lbs. to the bushel, which would be 11,905 bushels used in the manufacture of the amount of whiskey exported. The rebate on this would equal $982'87 for the last five years, and even this large sum has not all been claimed, for we find that only $412'60 has been claimed as rebate during all that period. Not only do the distillers of this Dominion pay an import duty on corn to the amount of $444,435, but they also pay an excise duty of $4 a bushel on 5,925,800 bushels, which was brought in by them for manufacturing purposes during the last five years.

An hon. MEMBER. $4 a bushel.

Mr. CORBY. That is right. It is $1'30 a proof gallon, and as there is a little over 3 gallons to the bushel so the excise duty is over $4 a bushel. Now, Mr. Speaker, as a distiller, I do not ask, nor do I want this Government to grant me any rebate on spirits exported, nor do I want the Government to make any difference between me and the farmers. I am satisfied of one thing, and that is, that if corn is allowed to be brought into this Dominion as proposed by the resolution of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin), there is no doubt but that it will reduce largely the price of our coarse grain which is now used by the farmers for feeding purposes. Feeding corn to-day can be bought in Chicago and laid down in our city at about 30 cents a bushel in bond, whereas we are now paying, and have been all winter, in Belleville, 45 cents per bushel for rye, which would make a difference of 15 cents discrimination against the farmers in our part of the country, which would have been lost to the farmers had corn been allowed to come in free. With these observations I will close, trusting that in the interest of the farmers, as well as in the interest of the manufacturers of this country, that the Government will not accede to the motion of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. I would not touch this subject at all were it not for the fact that it seems to be the custom of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) to bring this question up, year after year, for the purpose of trying to make capital with a large class of his constituents in that part of the country. Grey is noted for its being a fine agricultural county, where all kinds of grain that the farmer usually raises are raised, and on which cattle and other animals are fed. Let me say that the cattle are not fed, as the hon. gentleman says, always for export. They are raised for the purpose of selling to the first buyer who comes along and who gives the farmer a profitable price for them. The first feature of the hon. gentleman's remarks to which I would refer, is, when in almost stentorian tones he wished to impress upon this House and upon this country the evils of the system of giving drawbacks. He said that, in the interests of the country, the system should be nipped in the bud; that it is an evil, and a growing evil, and therefore the earlier we do away with the evil the better. But, in the same resolution in which he proposes the abolition of this evil, he asks that it should be continued and extended, not to the manufacturer, but to the farmer. It is impossible for two wrongs to make a right, I think that the hon. gentleman could hardly convince intelligent people that it would be an improvement to extend what he calls an evil to a much larger class than the one to which he refers. I can only say that, from my knowledge of the pursuits of the farmers, from my knowledge of their intelligence, that they are too intelligent to be gulled by any such—I was going to say clap-trap, were it not for the fact that that might be unparliamentary—but, at all events, I believe the farmers are too intelligent to be gulled by such false logic as is advanced here for that purpose. The farmers of the country understand that this motion is brought up here for the purpose of creating among them a feeling that in some way or other the Government discriminates against them in the interest of the manufacturers. What is the usual course adopted by the farmer when he feeds cattle for the market? He feeds them on the coarse grain which he raises on his own farm, and which the soil of the country is better adapted than for other grain, and the surplus of this coarse grain he sells in the market. As my hon. friend (Mr. Corby) says, if corn were allowed to be brought in free of duty it would very largely reduce the value of the coarse grain to the farmer and put him in a worse position than he is in to-day. We know that before the duty was put upon corn and on oats we had grain imported from the Western States right into the County of Grey. I know this, because it was sold in my own village, and I have the honor to be one of the constituents of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin). I know that this imported grain was sold, to the detriment of the farmers who are raising oats in that district. They knew how this imported corn was coming into competition with their oats, and for that reason they turned around in large numbers and supported the National Policy at the general elections of 1878, and have continued to support that policy at every succeeding election. But would it benefit the farmer if the hon. gentleman was enabled to accomplish what he aims at, and if the farmer got a drawback on the corn he imports to feed cattle for exportation? Farmers do not import grain to feed cattle for exportation. They feed with the grain they raise on their own farms, and if they were obliged to import grain to feed their cattle they could not make the business of raising cattle a profitable one. Neither do the farmers feed their cattle for exportation. They feed their cattle to sell them on the market at the highest price they can get, and whether the beef is killed in their own district, or sent to Toronto or Montreal, or out of the country altogether, they care not so long as they get their price. I hold that it would be a great calamity if the duty was taken off this corn, because then the imported article would come in direct competition with what the agriculturist of the country produces, and out of which he makes his money. Provided the Minister of Customs saw fit to make a rebate, what would the farmer think of having to go to the Customs house officer to give him the necessary papers to make out for a few cents rebate of duty. I have only spoken on this one resolution so far, but I believe there is another motion on the paper, put by the hon. gentleman from South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) or one of his friends, a short time ago, in reference to the corn imported into the country for soiling purposes or for feeding cattle, such as fodder and other corn. How much would the farmer receive rebate if such a proposition were carried out? I think in the whole County of Grey the man who uses the largest amount of corn for the purpose of feeding cattle does not sow 15 acres, or probably he does not sow 12 acres. So far as my information goes, I think I use as much as any man in the county; I have some eight or ten acres sown with it. How much rebate would a farmer be entitled to on three-quarters of a bushel to the acre? Last year I sowed five bushels on seven acres, on which the rebate would amount to 52½ cents; and out of that I had nearly 100 tons of ensilage. Now, would it be to the interest of any farmer so situated to go to some Custom house officer and get papers made out, and perhaps have to get it done through a broker, in order to get a rebate of 52½ cents? He would think it a privilege not worth all that roundabout trouble. I think the hon. gentleman is availing himself of this opportunity, as he has done before, and will probably do again, for the purpose of creating the impression in the minds of the farmers that they are in some way unfairly dealt with. When you analyse his proposition, and consider the difficulty of carrying it out and the slight return which would be made to the farmer, you must come to the conclusion that it is only a buncombe resolution offered for no good purpose, and with no substantial grievance to be remedied. I find five such resolutions on this paper, and the same purpose and principle appears to run through them all; there is really nothing in them for the benefit of the farmer; and the sooner the hon. gentleman comes to the conclusion that the time of this House could be better employed than in listening to such speeches, made for the purpose of sending them out to his constituents, and that we should devote ourselves to redressing substantial grievances and doing something for the good of the country, the better for the House and for the country.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). The position of the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House is very different from that of the man who makes his entire living from the farm. The hon. gentleman has his profession, and a few cents of duty here or there are of very little consequence to him; but the farmer who looks to his farm for his living is not so well off, and from his standpoint I will make a few remarks. The farmers of Canada have a perfect right to be heard from on this question. Promises which were made as to what the National Policy would do have not been fulfilled. The First Minister told them that their cattle and produce would all be consumed in the country when we got all those tall chimneys and that immense population to be produced in the country by the National Policy. Those promises have not been fulfilled. Again, last Session, when the Finance Minister made his Budget speech, he told us that there were only two hundred articles of raw material imported into Canada duty free for the benefit of the manufacturers of the country. I ask why he could not point to a number of articles brought in duty free as raw material for the farmers? They are excluded from the benefits which are granted to the manufacturers. Let me quote some of the duties which the farmers pay. We were told last Session that they pay almost no duty. Now, I find that on clothing they paid in 1887 17½ per cent., in 1888 30 per cent., and in 1889 35 per cent., so that that duty is increasing steadily. During the time of the Reform Government any agricultural society could import into Canada all the agricultural implements the farmers required free of duty, while in 1880 there was a duty of 25 per cent., and in 1889 it had gone up to 35 per cent. Now let me show how the tariff discriminates in some other articles against the farmer. On stone-ware and crockery which the farmer uses he pays 35 per cent, while the china which is used by a man in a little better position is charged only 30 per cent, and when we come to the case of the goods the rich man puts on his table, we find that only 20 per cent is charged on silver and gold plate. We also find that jewellery, about which we heard so much in the Budget speech last Session, and which is a luxury of the rich, comes in at 20 per cent., while spades and shovels, which farmers use in making a living, are charged 46 per cent. On forks and hoes the duty is 53 per cent., and on a little article called the hay-knife, which every farmer has to use, the duty is 79½ per cent., so that one of these articles, imported at a value of $3.15, has to pay $2.51 of duty. When we find that the farmers of the Dominion are discriminated against in this manner, we have a right to claim that they should get a rebate on some of their materials. We know that strong pressure has been brought to bear on the Government by the millers for a change of duties in their interest, and one of the statements made in their association was that while some classes of property were increasing in value, the value of the properties of the millers was remaining stationary. If the farmers could say as much they would not have the same reason to complain that they have; but our property is not remaining even stationary, it has been reduced in the last five or six years about 25 per cent. Taking all these facts into consideration, and also considering that this rebate is supposed to be given for the encouragement of a very important industry, that is, the export of cattle, it is only a fair demand. Last year we exported 102,000 head of cattle, of which, according to the Trade and Navigation Returns, over 60,000 head, valued at $83 per head, went to the English markets, while we sent 37,000 head to the United States, and they were sent there at prices that could not pay any farmer to raise them; but I suppose, under present circumstances, the necessities of farmers compelled them to part with a very large quantity of stock which they would not otherwise part with. Would you believe me when I state that these cattle were exported at an average price of $13.07 per head? Now, if we could obtain corn for fattening cattle, it would be one of the cheapest feeds we could obtain. I have been examining the papers to-day, and I find that the price of barley in Toronto is from 38 to 48 cents per bushel; and we were told by the hon. member for West Hastings that corn could be laid down in Canada in bond for 30 cents per bushel. Now, if we could sell our barley at 38 cents, and buy our corn at 30 cents, and get fifty-six pounds of feed for forty-eight pounds of feed, would not that be a great benefit to the farmers? But we have been told that that would reduce the price of our coarse grains, which would not be as dear as they are to-day. Well, I find that at present in Toronto, there is only a difference of 2 cents or 2½ cents in the price of oats as compared with Buffalo, which I hold to be a fair comparison, so that that would not to any extent interfere with the price of coarse grains. Now, with respect to the price of corn, I find that in 1881, the price of corn in Canada was 66 cents, while in the United States it was only 55 cents; and in 1886, the price of corn in Canada had fallen to 49 cents, a reduction of 17 cents per bushel, while in the United States it had only fallen 6 cents in the same period, showing plainly that the National Policy has not kept up the price of corn for Canadian farmers, and it is only two or three counties that raise corn here. When we come to cattle, I hold that no benefit could be conferred upon the farmers to such an extent to give them cheap food, in order that 37,366 head of cattle might be got ready for slaughter before they left our own country. It is the duty of the Government to do all they can to foster this young industry. When we go back to 1877 and 1878, we find that not over 500 head of cattle per year were sent to the English market, while this last year 60,000 head were shipped; and when we get the Trade and Navigation Returns of next year we will find the shipments amount to 85,000 or 90,000 head. Ald. Franklin of the city of Toronto gave a report, at the close of the shipping season, showing an increase of 30,000 head of cattle shipped during the past year to the old country markets, and a very large number of those cattle were shipped as stockers. If we could get corn at 30 cents in bond in Canada to-day, a great many farmers would avail themselves of this opportunity of getting corn cheap, and would keep their animals at home and feed them for the English market, instead of shipping them as stockers. Supposing these 37,000 head of cattle could be all made into beef, and sold, as no doubt they would be sold, at $45 per head, that would mean a profit of $30 per head, which would amount to $1,111,000, which would go into the pockets of the farmers of the Dominion. We have been told that this motion is brought up as buncombe; but hon. gentlemen will find, when the next elections come round, and the farmers are made aware of the injustice they suffer under the tariff—when they are told that they have no advantage under it compared with other classes of the community—that this is a serious matter. We were told that the distillers during the last year consumed 77,000,000 pounds of corn, or 1,386,404 bushels. But there was a total home consumption of imported corn of 2,894,838 bushels, which leaves 1,508,534 bushels of corn consumed by the farmers. I hold that, taking the price this corn came in at, a considerable amount must have been used for seed purposes, and there was a duty of $113,135 collected on the corn consumed by the farmers. That is one of the little items that my hon. friend spoke of when he said that no farmer would pay more than 30 cents or 40 cents, but it amounts to that sum in the whole; and when we consider that the whole salvation of the farming community lies in producing upon the very cheapest possible scale—when we consider that feeding cattle to-day for the English market is one of the most important industries that Canadian farmers engage in, and one that is fairly remunerative, provided we can get food as cheap as possible—I hold the Government is not doing justice to the farmers when they do not give them a rebate on corn. If the rebate that is given to the distillers and starch manufacturers were given to the farmers, they would send to the English markets more cattle than they do; and they are certainly more entitled than the manufacturers of liquor to have a bounty or rebate. Not only are the distillers and starch manufacturers given a rebate, but the iron manufacturers enjoy a rebate of $1.50 per ton on pig iron; besides a protective duty of $4 per ton, while the only articles used by the farmer which are allowed in free of duty are cotton seed, meal and oilcake, and animals for breeding purposes. Small seeds are also admitted free, but I cannot congratulate the Government on granting us this boon, because it was granted under strong pressure, and had it not been for that strong pressure we would have been without that boon to-day.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not propose to enter into a general discussion of the National Policy, or as to whether it is a burden either upon the manufacturing or farming industries of this country. The question before the House is a very simple one. It is whether the system of drawbacks should be extended to those who import corn for the purpose of fattening cattle for exportation, because the law provides for the refunding of the duty paid upon corn from which whiskey is made. No doubt the hon. gentleman who proposed this motion was actuated by the purest motives; but it is somewhat singular, that, holding the opinions he does upon so important a question as that of drawbacks paid to manufacturers or to others who establish industries in this country, he should have been so long in finding out the iniquities of a provision in the law of that kind. It has been on the statute book for a great number of years. It was found there and re-enacted by the Government whom he supported in the year 1877, when the Customs Act was consolidated. The hon. gentleman spoke of the anomaly and iniquities of the tariff. There is no provision in the tariff providing for drawbacks. The clause is contained in the general Customs Act, and that has been on the statute book ever since I have known anything of the provisions of the law.

That provision has been carried out by all Governments, by the Government which preceded this, and the Government which preceded that, as well as the present Government; is it not, therefore, very singular that the iniquitous character of that clause should only be discovered when it is being carried out, I admit, to a greater extent than it was under the former Government. It depends in a great measure, it seems to me, with hon. gentlemen like the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin), whose ox is gored. When his party were in power he did not discover the wrong and the inequality which he says exists, and which he has now only discovered. If the system of drawbacks is as bad as it is represented by the hon. gentleman, why should he ask to have it extended? I leave that problem for him to solve. He says we have this year paid a large sum in drawbacks to manufacturers. I only regret, in the interest of this country, in the interest of the artisan and of the laboring population of this country, that the sum has not been quadrupled; and I hope, in future, instead of multiplying the figures by units, he may be able to say we have paid thousands in drawbacks to manufacturers in this country on the portion of articles which have gone into the manufacture of goods which have been exported. The system of drawbacks, if it has any effect at all, must be in the line of encouraging the manufacturing industries of the country; and just as we encourage the manufacturing interests, we will in proportion furnish more work for the artisan, the workman and the laborer; and just in proportion to our doing that will a market be furnished for the product of every farm and of every garden in the country. There is another reason why we should continue the system of drawbacks, and I refer to this more particularly because the hon. gentleman stated that the object he desired to attain was not so much to have this principle extended to the agricultural interest of the country, as it was to strike a blow at the promising infant, which he said was growing rapidly. I think it is the duty of all statesmen to nourish and feed promising infants, and I should like to know if the hon. gentleman desires to have these promising infants treated as puppy dogs—kill them as soon as they come into the world? It is known that the system of drawbacks prevails, to a great extent, in the country to the south of us, and that, if we desire to create an export trade in the articles we manufacture, particularly considering the disadvantages under which our manufacturers labor from the position they occupy, not being upon the seaboard, as many of the manufacturers in the United States are, we must pursue the same policy as that which is pursued by the protective country to the south of us, and that is, to grant liberal drawbacks upon the articles on which duty has been paid which enter into the manufacture of goods which are exported from the country. I lay that down as a principle. If we are to adopt the principle which I believe the hon. gentleman desires to have adopted—free trade—let us have a direct attack; but, as long as the protective tariff exists, as long as our manufacturers have to compete in the markets of the world with others who are allowed drawbacks on articles which enter into competition with them, just so long must this country pursue the same course. I do not know how many hon. gentlemen on the other side will accept the proposition of the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin). I know that many of them have been urging upon the Government, and upon the Department of which I have the honor to be the head, the extension of the principle of drawbacks, and have claimed that we have not gone far enough in that direction—in fact, they have claimed that we ought to pay a drawback on all articles entering into the manufacture of goods which are exported, equal to the duty which is levied on those goods imported from a foreign country; in other words, that a bonus should be paid by us to the manufacturer of every agricultural implement which is exported.

Mr. MULOCK. And so discriminate against our own consumers in this country.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not aware that that is the argument which the gentlemen use. The argument which has been enforced in this House and upon the Department, is that a drawback should be given for every article exported, whether the materials used in its construction were manufactured in this country or not. The policy of the Government is to levy a duty upon all articles imported which are manufactured in the country, and, if that duty is to be refunded, it would strike a blow at the fundamental principle of the party now in power, which has been three or four times endorsed by the people of Canada. We hear from my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. McMillan), the threat which we have often heard from him, as to what the people will do when they are next appealed to. We have heard that threat for ten or fifteen years, and, for one, I have no objection to his using all his power and all his logic on that subject in the counties which he may visit. I believe he has tried his eloquence in the county adjoining my own, but it was not sufficiently persuasive to induce the farmers to reject the hon. gentleman who is now sitting on this side of the House. When the farmers, who are an observing and an intelligent people, have the facts laid before them fairly, I have no doubt as to the result. One word more to my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Landerkin). The House and the country might imagine, from that hon. gentleman's motion, that applications have been made for a drawback on corn imported by persons who have used it for feeding cattle intended for exportation. This question has been before the House for a great number of years. I remember that, seven or eight or nine years ago, it was brought under the notice of the Government by the then hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Fleming), and it has been discussed nearly every Session since with the same result. As I informed the House at that time, whenever an application is made to the Department for a drawback on corn, used in the manner suggested by my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Landerkin), then will be the time to take into consideration, not only the feasibility of the proposal, but to see if the law would permit it. I am very much of the opinion, which the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me have expressed, that the quantity of corn imported by farmers for the fattening of cattle for export is very limited; and, if it were otherwise, it would have the effect which has been pointed out by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), that it would take the place of the coarse grains raised in this country which are now used for the fattening of cattle, and would be, as the hon. gentleman said he desired, a blow at the operation of that National Policy which has been a protection to the agricultural industry of this country. I know that there are many gentlemen who have strong views upon the question of trade, and free trade in particular. If the policy is to be attacked, let it be attacked fairly, in all its parts, and then we will be better able to meet it. But it appears to be the plan of the Opposition to adopt some system of guerilla warfare, to attack it wherever they think they can make a point with those whom they represent. Whether they will accomplish that end I am not prepared to say; I doubt it very much. The agriculturists and the farmers, a vast majority of them, are too intelligent to be led astray by any such fallacious arguments—I will not call them arguments, but any such fallacious statements as those which have been made upon this subject. The difficulties which my hon. friend referred to in dealing with the question of drawbacks, are not of that minor character that he pretends they are. The most minute calculations have to be made whenever an application is made from any manufacturer. It has to be dealt with cautiously, and in the most searching manner, in order to prevent larger sums being paid than that which has been paid by the manufacturer for duty, unless we are to adopt the system of bounties. I must dissent in toto from the inference which the hon. gentleman says he drew from my language last year in explaining very shortly the difficulties that present themselves in arranging a fair basis upon which a drawback should be made. I deny that I insinuated that the farmers of this country were not to be trusted, that their oaths were not to be accepted like those of other people. I made no such statement; no such inference could possibly be drawn from any remarks I made. Whenever an application for drawbacks or refunds is made, we have to look at it from every possible standpoint in order to protect the revenue, but that is not a reflection upon those who make the demand, and I repudiate in the strongest possible manner the insinuation which the hon. gentleman has made, in the deductions which he pretends to have drawn, from anything I may have said upon this subject. I do not know whether it is necessary to pursue the subject to a greater extent. I would ask the House to remember this fact: that no application has ever been made under that clause, which you will find in the statute book, and which gives power to the Government to grant these drawbacks—by any feeder of cattle or by any farmer in the country; it is, therefore, for the House to say whether it is necessary to affirm the principle contained in the hon. gentleman's resolution. When a wrong has been shown to exist, then it will be time enough for the House to act; but until that wrong has been shown to exist, until it has been shown that injustice has been done to any one of the classes to whom he has referred, then I am quite satisfied, speaking from a departmental standpoint, and also for the Government, that the injustice will at once be remedied. But until that is done, I do not think the Government or the House should be asked to affirm a resolution such as has been placed before us.

Mr. FISHER. From the last few words which have fallen from the Minister of Customs, one would almost suppose that to-day, if a farmer makes application for a rebate such as is asked for by the motion of my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Landerkin), the Government are in a position to grant that rebate. I think it is well that the farmers of the country should thoroughly understand this matter, and if no other good object can be obtained by the debate which has arisen from this motion, this object alone would certainly justify my hon. friend from Grey in having made his motion. I was not aware, and I confess, until the Minister and the leader of the Government put it more clearly, I cannot quite understand or believe that the farmers of this country are in a position to demand, under the law, a rebate upon any corn or other grain which they may feed cattle for export, upon which they have previously paid a duty. If that is the case, I think it would be well for those who are in charge of this particular Department to state it clearly upon the floor of Parliament, so that the people throughout the country may clearly understand it and be able to take advantage of this law in the same way in which our friends the distillers are doing, as has been pointed out this afternoon by one of them. Sir, I think this question is not to be dismissed so lightly as the Minister of Customs thinks he may do. Although he said he did not wish to take up the whole question of protection and discuss it here, he really did touch largely upon a very important point of the policy of protection. The question of rebate seems to be intimately bound up with the question of protection, and I think that in passing upon the system of protection, which is fathered by hon. gentlemen opposite, we can fairly consider this question of rebate. While the hon. gentleman seems to object very much to particular details of the system of protection being taken up and being attacked, I venture to say that this is one of the most effective ways by which the fallacies of the system of protection may be brought home to the people. I venture to say that if this system of protection cannot bear the test of being carried out to its legitimate conclusion and being dealt with by the method of reductio ad absurdum, then that system is a false system, and ought not to be imposed upon the people of this country. Sir, some of the other motions which are upon the paper have been alluded to—I thought a little out of order, by the hon. member for North Grey and the hon. Minister of Customs, when discussing one particular motion.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is in error; I referred to no other motion on the paper.

Mr. FISHER. I accept the hon. gentleman's correction; I suppose it was the hon. member for Grey alone who did so. The question we are discussing here this afternoon is simply whether the farmers of the country shall be put upon the same basis as the distillers, and treated in the same manner. The distillers are getting a certain advantage, an advantage which the Minister of Customs has spoken of and pictured in the most roseate hues. I took down a few of the words which he uttered—and what did he say? That rebates increase the profits; that rebates enable the manufacturers to employ more labor; that rebates are having a good effect; and that they increase the manufactures of the country. Now, if these good things are going to be done for the sake of the distillers, why should not the same things be done for the sake of the farmers, who, I venture to say, are the most important class of manufacturers in the country! It is usual, on the floor of Parliament, to speak of the farmers as if they were not manufacturers, as if they were hewers of wood and drawers of water. But I venture to say that if you examine the exports of this country you will find that the farmers are the greatest manufacturers we have among us, and that the exports of the so-called protected manufacturers of the country, whom these hon. gentlemen have taken under their ægis, are a mere fleabite in the gross exports of this country. They make no showing at all alongside the exports of the manufactures produced by the farmers. If these things are going to be of benefit to any manufacturers in this country, if the rebate is going to help the distillers, and does help the distillers, to manufacture here, things which they could not otherwise manufacture, then let the farmers get the same advantage, let them be induced to go more largely into the manufacture of beef, and butter, and cheese, to be sent out of the country; and if they are able to bring into this country certain classes of raw material which are produced in the neighboring republic at a cheaper rate than here, and if they could bring these raw materials into this country and turn them into good beef, butter and cheese, to be exported, then let them have that advantage, let them be enabled to do so, let them be encouraged to do so—for, by the manufacture of that class of products, not only are those who manufacture them benefited by obtaining their profit, but the whole country is improved by the fact that, in consequence of the importation of those articles and the feeding of them to our cattle, the fertility of the country is increased, the products of our lands are augmented, and our ability to compete in the markets of the world is increased. It is only by these advantages and the profits which our farmers are able to secure that our manufacturers have a home market, of which hon. gentlemen opposite say so much. What is our home market? It is the market which our farmers make for our manufacturers; and were the market of the farmers and agricultural class to be shut up and the products of our manufacturers not sold in that home market, where would our manufacturers go? Our manufacturers would have no market whatever, for under the hotbed system of hon. gentlemen opposite, they are not able to export their goods and compete in foreign markets with the free trade manufacturers of England. The hon. gentleman has, however, said a good deal in reply to the remarks of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin), as to the whole question of rebate. I thoroughly and heartily concur in the objections formulated by that hon. gentleman to that system. I believe it is an iniquitous offshoot of the protective policy of hon. gentlemen opposite; I believe it is an almost necessary offshoot of that policy, and one which, with that policy, should be condemned by the people. But if we are going to have rebates, let there be rebates all around; if we are to maintain a system of protection, let us have it all round. If one class is to be protected, and that protection is believed by hon. gentlemen opposite to benefit that class—that protection should be extended to every class, to the farmers as well as to other classes, if it can be accomplished. If rebates are to be given to whiskey dealers, they should be given to farmers likewise, and they should be allowed to reap such benefit as may come from the system. What are the facts? The hon. member who spoke on behalf of the whiskey dealers said that this rebate was a very little thing that did not amount to much. Then what is the good of it; why does the hon. gentleman want to continue it, and why do occupants of the Treasury benches want to continue a system by which they make an invidious comparison between two classes of the community? It is admitted that the object of the rebate is to benefit the distillers, and it is supposed they have been benefited. The Minister of Customs has himself said he thought it benefited the distillers. It is, I believe, a little thing, and has not been availed of by the distillers to any great extent, and the Minister of Customs, who generally poses as a good temperance man, thinks it is a great pity that the distillers have not manufactured more whiskey.

Mr. BOWELL. You would rather have it drank here; but I would rather have it exported. That is all the difference.

Mr. FISHER. I would rather not have it manufactured in this country at all. I would like to make it unprofitable for distillers to manufacture it here, and not give them advantages to enable them to maintain their distilleries, and even increase them, and in fact show that their business is such a profitable one that other people will be induced to enter into it. I do not believe in this system adopted by the Government. It would be a great deal better if advantages were withheld, rather than given to distillers. By their actions the Ministers, who continue this system of favoritism to the distillers, show their support of this traffic, and that they seek to foster the interests of whiskey manufacturers rather than those of the manufacturers of beef, butter and cheese. So long as they continue to make this invidious comparison and favor such an invidious system, and draw such invidious comparisons between the two industries, the people can draw no other conclusion than I have stated. There is another point brought out by the remark of the hon. gentleman for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). The hon. member spoke about the price of coarse grains, and intimated that if the Government allowed free corn and a rebate to the farmers on corn imported for feeding purposes, fed to cattle for export, that would reduce the price obtained in our home market for our coarse grains. As a matter of fact we know, as was proved very conclusively by my hon. friend behind me (Mr. McMillan), that our farmers can, by showing a little business capacity, sell their coarse grains to good advantage and buy cheap corn and other articles from the United States. It would be well if our farmers can introduce a little business capacity into their dealings. But how is it with the whiskey distillers? If the whiskey distillers were not allowed a rebate on the corn which they import from the United States, would they not be forced to buy the corn of our own farmers, in Essex, Kent and other parts of western Ontario. If the argument holds in regard to coarse grains it must also hold in regard to corn. If the Government think our coarse grains in danger, let them remove the rebate on corn imported, and exported in the shape of whiskey, and allow our western farmers to reap the advantage of the increased price which their corn would realise. But hon. gentlemen opposite do not wish to do so. It is by exposing such a fallacy as this that we are able to show the gross inequalities furnished by the whole protective system. Although the Minister of Customs said this is not a fair attack on the system, I tell him and his leader that this is an attack which will be effectual and one which will show them up to the people, especially to the great farming class, on whose vote they have in times past depended and whose votes they have obtained, but whose votes they will not secure in the future, because promises made to them have not been fulfilled. The farmers are awakening to the fact that promises made to them have not been fulfilled, and that they form the only class of the community who are not protected, whose interests are not covered by the protective policy, and, knowing this, they will take good care to send to the right-about hon. gentlemen opposite when again they appeal to the people.

REPORT.

Annual Report of the Department of Public Works.—(Sir Hector Langevin.)

RETURN ORDERED.

All memorials, petitions and resolutions of the Legislative Assembly of the North-West Territories passed at its last Session, whether addressed to His Excellency the Governor General or to the Parliament of Canada.—(Mr. Daly for Mr. Davin.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ; and House adjourned at 6.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 4th February, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 45) to incorporate the Tilsonburg, Lake Erie and Pacific Railway Company.—(Mr. Brown.)

Bill (No. 46) to incorporate the Mount Forest, Markdale and Meaford Railway Company.—(Mr. Sproule.)

ST. CROIX RAILWAY BRIDGE COMPANY.

Mr. WELDON (St. John) moved :

That the 52nd Rule of the House be suspended, as far as it relates to the petition of Russell Sage and others, asking that an Act be passed, authorising them to construct a railway bridge over the St. Croix River, in the town of St. Stephens, N.B., in accordance with the recommendation contained in the fourth report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Motion agreed to.

PROTECTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. TUPPER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 47) to amend chapter 91 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, intituled : " An Act respecting the protection of Navigable Waters." He said: This Bill is intended to improve the machinery for enforcing the statute as it now stands, giving jurisdiction to the superior courts. The proceedings now are confined to the Summary Convictions Act, and very often that means the impossibility of enforcing the Act as it is intended to be enforced. The second clause of the Bill is of a more important character, and I purpose to repeal the clause of the statute as it now stands, giving power to the Governor in Council to exempt any rivers or streams from the operation of the Act, and to permit those mill-owners who now enjoy an exemption under the old statute to make preparations during the next year to dispose of the sawdust and prevent its deposit in streams and waters; and after that the Act shall apply equally.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE FISH COMMISSION.

Mr. LAURIER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, when we shall have a report of the commissioners sent to Scotland and Holland to report on the curing and packing of fish? The fish season is about to open, and perhaps fishermen would like to have the benefit of that report.

Mr. TUPPER. I am happy to be able to inform my hon. friend that the report to which he refers is already in type, and is, I hope, bound by this time. I will lay it before the House at the earliest possible moment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In sufficient numbers to be distributed among the fishermen?

Mr. TUPPER. I hope so—at any rate in the localities interested.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Amount required to provide for the contingent expenses of the High Commissioner.....	$2,000
--	---------

Mr. McMULLEN. Is there any detail given of these expenses?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think there are any detailed accounts given.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is it supposed to cover? The practice of paying a lump sum by itself without any vouchers, is not a proper one, no matter to whom it is paid. Some account ought to be rendered by the High Commissioner of the sum he receives. I do not perceive anything in the Auditor General's Report bearing on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. In C 76 you will find the items.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I was looking at C 76, and if the hon. Minister will glance at the next item he will see that the contingencies include taxes and insurance on official residence, income tax, &c. These items appear to be in detail, even down to so minute an item as repairing the electric bells, which is charged at $3.40; but there is a lump sum paid to Sir Charles Tupper of $2,000. Now, some details ought to be given of that. It has not been our habit to pay a lump sum in addition to a salary and receive no voucher for it.

Mr. FOSTER. In order to explain that, I must first ask the House to allow me to make a change in item 25, which, as it reads now, is misleading. It says there: "Including taxes and insurance on official residence." I want to leave out those words after "contingencies," and put in their place: "London office, income tax, rent, fuel, light, stationery, &c., $6,050." The item in C 76 in the Auditor General's Report has reference to the official residence, and not to the London office. So the items are not included in the vote of $6,050.

Included in that amount are the following items: Rent of office, $2,812, same amount as last year; gas and repairs, $250, reduction of $100; printing and stationery, $650, reduction of $100; postage expenses, $800; miscellaneous and petty cash, $960; travelling expenses, $200; income taxes, $122; newspapers and periodicals, $225; total, $6,050, being a decrease, compared with last year, of $450. With regard to the sum of $2,000, it is paid monthly, and I do not see that any items are given in the Auditor General's Report.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They should be given.

Mr. FOSTER. When Sir Alexander Galt was in London we gave him a certain sum, $4,000, out of which he was to pay contingencies and rent of house. A house is now furnished the High Commissioner, and $2,000 seems to have been allowed for expenses covered by the $4,000, less what was paid for house rent by Sir Alexander Galt.

Mr. McMULLEN. If this has been the system in the past, it is time it should terminate. Every item of expenditure connected with the official residence of Sir Charles Tupper in London is charged in the Auditor General's account. If Sir Charles Tupper leaves London his travelling expenses are charged. If he makes a short trip on immigration matters, his travelling expenses and living allowance appear under the heading of Immigration. We have a perfect right to obtain an account of the $2,000 granted, especially when, in the other amounts granted, we find all items connected with his official residence covered. If the hon. Minister will turn to page C 76, he will find such amounts as ground rent of official residence, $332.15; house duty and taxes, $97.33; income tax, $250.02; insurance premium on house, $35.90; repairing electric bells, $3.40. What accounts does this item of $2,000 go to pay? The House has a perfect right to an explanation on this point, as every single item in connection with the official residence of Sir Charles Tupper in London is paid and set out in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. COOK. I should like some information respecting Sir Charles Tupper's visits to Spain. It has been stated that much of his time is occupied in hunting up civil servants, and sending them here to replace Canadians in the Civil Service.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Committee is entitled to some further information. If the Finance Minister states he is not in a position to give it, I suppose the item must be allowed to pass.

Mr. FOSTER. I have already given the information in my possession. With regard to the item of $2,000, I stated that the items for this amount did not appear in the Auditor General's Report. I also stated how that payment arose: that in Sir Alexander Galt's time, $4,000 was granted for contingencies and official residence; but as we now provide an official residence, the interest on the purchase money, which will amount to $1,500 or $1,700, $2,000 is allowed for contingencies. There are a great many contingencies in connection with the London office. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has spoken in regard to charges made by Sir Charles Tupper for travelling expenses on immigration service. Those expenses are for an entirely different service, and have no direct connection with his duties as High Commissioner, so far as regards these contingencies.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It is evident that the Government cannot give explanations with regard to this item of $2,000. If the Finance Minister can give no details, and is unable to show the necessity for the vote, the Government should drop it. The Committee should not vote money when the Government are unable to explain the manner in which it will be expended. The Government admit that they do not know how Sir Charles Tupper spends this $2,000. He does not spend it for contingencies, as was provided when the grant was originally made to Sir Alexander Galt; and if he does not spend it in the way it was intended to be expended, and his expenses appear to be provided otherwise, the vote should be dropped, or the High Commissioner's salary should be increased from $10,000 to $12,000.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. Minister's explanation accounts for the way in which the $2,000 was appropriated, leaving the sum absolutely at the disposal of the High Commissioner; but the Minister will see that the amount Sir Charles Tupper receives now is very much greater than the amount appropriated to the office when Sir Alexander Galt was in charge. The sum of $4,000 was granted, and Sir Alexander Galt had to provide himself with an official residence out of it. Now the official residence is provided, which the Minister estimates to be equal to an annual charge of $1,500, but which represents a good deal more; and further, Sir Charles Tupper is allowed $1,250 and $2,000, which aggregate nearly $5,000 appropriated, whereas in the days of Sir Alexander Galt $4,000 was granted for the purpose.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have forgotten what the total cost of house and furniture was, but I think it was about $50,000.

Mr. FOSTER. About $45,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That represents $2,000 a year, at the rate we are paying for savings bank deposits. I do not see it follows that, after having provided house and furniture, which I suppose we are debited with and have to keep in order from time to time, there should be any reasonable ground for the further allowance of $2,000, when I find $1,250 were paid for just such contingencies as I think Sir Alexander Galt formerly met out of the $4,000. It is quite clear there is a very considerable excess over the sum granted in Sir Alexander Galt's time, and it was for the express purpose of avoiding all that difficulty that we were induced, somewhat against our inclination on this side of the House, to become proprietors of an official residence in London, and to furnish it.

Mr. McMULLEN. We have several times been given as an excuse for items of this kind that some previous High Commissioner had been granted certain privileges, and had done certain things, and that, therefore, this item of expenditure should be continued. We have the same reply to-day, but there is no answer to the question as to how this $2,000 was spent. It is entered as "contingencies," but there are no contingencies to be paid, because everything necessary seems to have been paid already out of the public purse. We are told that some previous High Commissioner was granted $4,000 contingencies, but there was no official residence then, and there might be some reason for it. It would be much more satisfactory if the Government would openly and manfully make Sir Charles Tupper's salary $12,000 a year, instead of making this gift of $2,000 extra.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Can it be possible that this sum has been paid to the Reuter Agency for telegrams sent from this country. It would be a very likely idea that such was the case. The Government has not given us the information on this subject that we are entitled to, and I do not know but what it would be both in the interest of the Government and of the country that copies of these telegrams should be laid on the Table of the House, so that we could see the nature of them and be able to know if this sum was required for that service.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. We have no information in the Auditor General's Report showing how this $2,000 was spent, and we have a right to know what became of it. If Parliament is prepared to give Sir Charles Tupper $2,000 a year in addition to his salary, let the House say so; but, at all events, the people of this country are entitled to know what becomes of their money. It is shown by the Auditor General's Report, that all the necessary expenses of the High Commissioner are paid outside of this grant of $2,000. If it is a gratuity to Sir Charles Tupper, let the Government say so, and let us know the facts of the case. I do not think it is proper that the Minister of Finance should sit in his place and refuse to give us this information. If he does not know how Sir Charles spends the money, he should find out, and let the item stand until he is prepared to inform us. It is, at all events, quite apparent that the money is not necessary to pay the contingencies of the High Commissioner's expenses at London, as every item appears to be paid for outside of this grant. The Government should act fairly and manfully in this matter and let the country know that Sir Charles Tupper is not only paid $10,000 salary, but that he gets $2,000 from the Government in addition.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister of Finance appears to be under the impression that the $4,000 which he refers to was paid to Sir Alexander Galt in a lump sum. In looking at the Public Accounts for 1881, I find, under the head of contingencies for the High Commissioner, a series of sums amounting to £1,000 sterling, but they are all accounted for in detail, such as "balance on account of house furniture," "house rent," "fuel and gas," "travelling expenses," "cablegrams." That is a proper mode of rendering an account, and it appears to have been correctly rendered in former times, when Sir Alexander Galt was High Commissioner. A similar statement, it appears to me, ought, in all conscience, be submitted to the House now. I will send the Minister of Finance the book if he wishes, and he will see for himself that, to all appearances, the accounts were given in detail formerly.

Mr. MULOCK. When this item appeared in the Public Accounts a few years ago for the first time, the present High Commissioner stated that this account was to cover the various incidental expenses which are now charged in detail in the Public Accounts. If any hon. gentleman will turn up the Hansard of that date, he will find that this item for contingencies was never intended to be in addition to the various items which are now paid for under their proper head, and which so appear in the Public Accounts.

Mr. FOSTER. Carried.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. No. I do not think it is right that an item of this kind should be allowed to pass before the Minister gives us the necessary explanation. If the Government has a desire to make Sir Charles Tupper a present of $2,000, let them say so. The Minister ought to give us some explanation or allow the item to stand.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought I had sufficiently explained this matter. I have given the House all the information I have at hand, and I do not think the House will ask me to give anything more. If you look at page C 76 you will find that all the items charged there are for taxes and duties and insurance premiums, and the like of that, upon the official residence. In Sir Alexander Galt's time I find that there are items of contingencies outside of any of these that would fall under this head. It is quite plain that the official representative of this country to England must have some expenses outside those mentioned in C 76 which are necessary in order to keep up his establishment and to perform his duties, and this $2,000 is to cover these contingencies. Sir Charles Tupper is not expected to travel as High Commissioner and pay his expenses on his official visits. Part of this sum may go for travelling expenses. As I said before, all these expenses were formerly charged to Immigration; and these now are defrayed out of this sum of $2,000 granted for contingent expenses, personal and otherwise.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Sir Alexander Galt gave a detailed report, which appears in the Public Accounts, and the same thing should be given now.

Mr. FOSTER. I have stated that I have not this this detailed account, and, therefore, cannot give it. I will see if it can be obtained.

Mr. COOK. The Finance Minister is not exactly correct in his statement that this refers to the taxation of the official residence. I see that there is an income tax of $250 on the income of the High Commissioner. People in this country who get high salaries generally pay their own taxes, and I do not see why we should make an exception in this case.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The Finance Minister explains that a part of this expenditure is for travelling expenses. It is well known that when Sir Charles Tupper comes to Canada his expenses are charged. There was a large item in the Public Accounts of last year for his expenses on the occasion when he last came out, and it is fair to presume that all his travelling expenses are provided for in other ways than out of contingencies. The Finance Minister says that, in connection with the official residence, it is necessary to have provision made for contingencies other than those enumerated on page C 76 of the Auditor General's Report. If it is necessary to have such contingencies provided for, it is equally necessary that this House should know what they are, and I protest against this system of passing a $2,000 vote for contingencies which cannot be explained. I think the Government ought to have more respect for themselves and for their character in the country than to allow a vote of this kind to pass through the House without any explanation, and I think the Finance Minister ought to allow this vote to stand until he can give us the information, which he should be able to do, before these Estimates are all passed.

Mr. McMULLEN. We are not quite aware, on this side of the House, Mr. Chairman, as to whether that item is to be allowed to stand in the meantime.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I declared it carried.

Mr. McMULLEN. If this item is to be forced through in this way, I think we should have at least one promise from the Finance Minister, and that is, that this will be the last year that items of this kind will be passed without a detailed account, and he had better make a note that the House will insist next year, if we come back here, on a detail of this item.

Mr. FOSTER. I will make a note of that, if that will satisfy you.

Salaries of Board of Examiners, and other expenses under the Civil Service Act.....	$4,000
--	---------

Mr. CASEY. I cannot let this vote pass, or any other vote in connection with carrying out the Civil Service Act, without protesting that the whole affair is a farce—that the examinations are inefficient, that they are not the sort of examinations recommended by the Government's own Commission, appointed nine years ago for the purpose of framing a system of Civil Service reform, and that the Government have not abided by the results of these examinations, as required by the law. I have constant information which I consider trustworthy, the sources of which I cannot reveal, in reference to the passing over of people who have a right to promotion in favor of others who have not passed the required examination, in reference to the admission of persons to the service who have not been successful at the examinations, and other statements of that kind. I must also protest against the employment of members of the Civil Service as members of the Board of Examiners. The examiners being dismissible at the pleasure of the Government, are sufficiently at their mercy, without being selected from men already in the service of the Government, whose whole time is supposed to be bought and paid for by the Government, and who are so much more at the mercy of the Government. A Civil Service Board absolutely at the mercy of the Government of the day is a farce. It cannot, in human nature, be expected to be absolutely fair and unbiassed in its transactions. The gentlemen themselves are as respectable as any who could be named, but it is not to be expected that the public will believe them to be as independent as men who are not so subject to the control of the Government. I find that Mr. DeCelles, the librarian, who already receives a large salary in that office, and whose whole time is supposed to be given to it, is paid $558.33 as a member of the Board of Examiners; Mr. LeSueur is paid $558.33 as a member of the board, and also $700 for acting as secretary of the board. Mr. Thorburn, the chairman of the commission, holds a position in the Geological Survey; and as to the clerk of the board, Mr. Keays, I do not know what other positions he may fill. But

I find that all of the commissioners themselves are members of the Civil Service, and I maintain that appointing members of the Civil Service, holding subordinate positions, to act as Civil Service examiners, exposes them inevitably to the suspicion that they will act under the coercion of the Ministers whenever that coercion is exercised; and I could present to this House evidence that such coercion has been exercised, and that the examiners have departed from the spirit and letter of the law, were it not that, in order to present such evidence, I should have to reveal to the Ministers the names of my informants. My mouth is, therefore, absolutely sealed, except to state as a member of this House that I know such to be the case. The continuation of this system is, therefore, under the circumstances, to be deplored. The fact that we have nominally a Board of Civil Service Examiners, tends to give people a sort of confidence in the administration of the service which that administration does not deserve. There is nominally a board which is supposed to be a safeguard as regards entrance into and promotion in the service, but that safeguard really does not exist, and it is a farce and a fraud on the public to keep this board in existence. Another evil resulting from this system is that thousands of young men and many young women are induced to present themselves for examination, with the illusory idea that if they pass satisfactorily they will thereby obtain some claim to a position in the service. These young persons for the most part have prepared themselves to be school teachers, or to enter some profession, but when they have passed a satisfactory examination and obtain a certificate, they hesitate and delay going on with their occupations or professions, in the hope of obtaining a position here. In that way hundreds of them are kept waiting and losing their chances for making a living for themselves, in the illusory hope held out to them by the Government that the passing of that examination may obtain for them a position here. For all these reasons I protest against the continuance of the Civil Service Board of Examiners as long as the Act is in its present shape. If it were an Act really providing some check upon the administration of the Civil Service, the matter would be different; but as it stands, considering the composition of the board and the nature of the Act, I protest against the whole item.

Mr. FOSTER. Most of the remarks made by my hon. friend are reiterations of those he has made before on other occasions, and I would not have risen to reply were it not for one statement he made which it is necessary I should notice. He has stated that he is in possession of information, which is conclusive to him, that the Government has interfered with the board, and used compulsion upon the board to make them vary the results of the examinations. If the hon. gentleman has any information of that kind, he ought to come out fairly and squarely with it, and prove his charge. So far as I am concerned, I know nothing of any such interference, and I do not believe the Government has ever in any way interfered with the work of the examiners. The hon. gentleman has got out of the necessity of making proof very easily, by saying that his lips are sealed because he cannot give the names of his informants; but when the hon. gentleman makes the charge he has made, I think he is bound to give us the evidence in support of it.

Mr. CASEY. I can only reiterate my statement. Certain facts have come to my knowledge, and I am justified in using that knowledge to enforce my other remarks. Perhaps I was not just to my informants in saying as much as I did, but I know I was not unjust to the Government. Certainly, I shall not take steps to inform the Government who the parties were who gave the information, as I know in that case what their fate would be. I do not retract my statement, and if I have to apologise to anybody, it is to those who casually gave me the information to which I referred.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not the way to get over a charge of that kind. The hon. gentleman makes a charge not only against the Government, but against the examiners. These gentlemen have got their characters as well as the hon. gentleman. Their character is as unexceptionable as that of the hon. gentleman himself, and when he says that the Government compelled them to give false certificates, and that they were dishonest and dishonorable enough to yield to that compulsion, he is making a charge which he is bound to substantiate or withdraw. The hon. gentleman has no right, either as a member of Parliament, or as a man and a gentleman, to make such a charge unless he is able to support it.

Mr. CASEY. The right hon. gentleman in part mistakes my charge. I am not attacking the honor of the Board of Examiners, but I am attacking the use the Government have made of their influence. I say the Government have influenced the Board of Examiners—not to make false certificates—I do not charge them with that—but that they influenced the Board of Examiners, in their conduct of the examinations, to arrange matters so that certain persons might receive certificates and others would not—that they so arranged certain questions that one man could pass while another could not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. CASEY. Yes. The hon. the Postmaster General probably shows his acquaintance with the process, since he said "hear, hear," when I mentioned it.

Mr. HAGGART. I did not say a word.

Mr. CASEY. It is very easy, as anyone knows, to prevent an employé from going up for examination at all. I am informed—and my information I believe to be trustworthy—of a case where employés were refused the right to go up and pass the promotion examinations, and of a case where the Government used their influence to prevent the carrying out of the Act.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not the case.

Mr. CASEY. Further, the questions put in the promotion examinations are not made up by the Board of Examiners at all, but by the officials of the Department, and it is very easy for those officials, who are the subordinates of the Government, to fix those questions in such a way that favorites of the Government or their own personal favorites will pass, and others will not.

That is the charge I make, and which I could sustain, were it not for the reasons I have given.

Mr. BROWN. Does the hon. gentleman say that there is one class of questions put to one man and another to another man? Or, that, when a candidate comes up for either preliminary or qualifying examination, there are different classes of questions put so as to suit different individuals?

Mr. CASEY. I have not been able to catch exactly what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. BROWN. I will speak louder. I wish to know if the hon. gentleman states that, when the candidates go up for either the preliminary examination or the promotion examination, there are two sets of questions, or that questions are made up to suit this or that man, according to the idea of the examiner?

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman cannot suppose that I am so ignorant of the mode in which all examinations are conducted as to imagine that there are two sets of examination papers, one given to one man and another given to another; but I say that, to the officers in the Department, who know what knowledge is possessed by one candidate and what is possessed by another, it is easy to fix a set of questions which one may not be able to answer while the other may be able to answer.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I am not surprised that the senior member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) should be excited in regard to this question. If rumor is to be credited, it is likely that he will avail himself of the Civil Service before long. At any rate, it is so reported in Hamilton, and it is well known to the House and the country, and to the Government also, that men who do not pass these examinations are often put in office in preference to those who do. It is often found that those who do not pass examinations are put over the heads of those who have passed severe tests as to their fitness; and, probably before long we may hear that the senior member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) may be pitchforked into a fat Government position with a salary of $2,400 or $3,000 a year, without having to pass any examination. I would like the Minister to state, if he can, the number of candidates who are now on the successful list, the number of men who have passed the examination who are available for the Civil Service at the present time, the number of those who have passed during the last year, and the number of those who have passed the examination who were appointed during the past year.

Mr. FOSTER. The Secretary of State is not here just now, from whom the information could be more properly asked in order to get a direct answer, but I think his report has been brought down, and, in that case, my hon. friend will see the number who have been examined and the number who have passed. I think it will be impossible to get the number of available men who have passed these examinations. We do not keep track of them. Some may be in one country and some in another.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Could you not give an approximate idea?

Mr. FOSTER. I could not give even an approximate idea.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Say 5,000 or 6,000?

Mr. FOSTER. I could not state at all. Some have gone to other countries, and some have died, and we have no trace of these.

Governor General's Secretary's Office
—Contingencies..... $13,500

Mr. McMULLEN. There are several items here in regard to which an explanation ought to be given. For instance, I find at page C 66 of the Auditor General's Report: "Advertising New Year's reception" in Ottawa papers, $72; and "Advertising Drawing Room, February 2nd," in Ottawa papers, $144. I do not understand why it is necessary that the country should be asked to pay these expenses. It seems to me that it is absurd that the country should be asked to pay for these things. I should like to know if that has been the custom in past years?

Mr. FOSTER. It has been the custom.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then it is time that we should put a stop to that custom. Already to-day we have noted an expenditure of $2,000 in connection with the High Commissioner's office, and I think we should stop that, and I think also it is time that we should put a stop to this item. The way in which the expenditures connected with the general management of affairs in this Dominion are placed before us from year to year, shows that we will never be able to put a stop to them until the people turn out the men now in power, who have started this abominable system and are carrying it on, and increasing it from year to year. This should not be tolerated. It is unfair. Fancy an amount of $144 being expended for advertising in Ottawa papers a Drawing Room at Rideau Hall on February 2nd.

Mr. COOK. I think the people are beginning to see that the Governor General's Department is getting to be rather an expensive toy.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. COOK. I am not speaking about the Governor General, but about his Department, and you should be more careful, before you call members to order, and know what you are talking about. I say I think this Department is getting to be rather an expensive toy to this country, and the fact that a few individuals are to be notified in the city of Ottawa to attend a reception at Rideau Hall at a cost of $144 is a most outrageous thing. The item may be a small one, but I should like to know why my constituents, or the people living in Toronto or anywhere else in the Dominion, should be called upon to pay for advertising this reception at Rideau Hall. The item may be small, but it may be increased from year to year. The Finance Minister states that it is the custom, but, if it has been the custom, the quicker it is dropped the better. I know it has been the custom with this Government to increase expenditure in every Department. We find they have their own jaunting cars. In going through this country they have their own cars at the expense of the country, even when they are going on their own private business. I think it is time that the people of this country should understand how they are placed, and I object to these expenditures, not only in the Governor General's Department, but in every Department, which are not in the interest of the people, but which are simply in the interest of this or that hon. gentleman. The people are sick and tired of paying these expenses.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I would like to have an explanation of these items which I find on page C 66 of the Auditor General's Report :— Postage charged to the Governor General's Office, about $600, of which there are charged, $472 at Ottawa, 97 cents at Montreal, $91 at Quebec, and $36 at New Richmond. What does this mean? Is not the Governor General at liberty to frank his letters?

Mr. FOSTER. If they are franked, they are charged as matters of account, as they are in other Departments.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is all the franking done by members of Parliament charged in that way?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. I find that, at this rate, it would be necessary for the Governor to send 66 letters a day.

Mr. FOSTER. I know that all the postage to foreign countries was charged. I may not have been correct in stating that the domestic postage was charged.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I thought so, because I did not discover any similar charge in the other Departments.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There is an item here the Minister of Finance should examine carefully. I notice that Gunner Morrison receives 25 cents a day, but when he goes to a ball he receives $4. I would like to have some explanation about that.

Mr. FOSTER. I will ask the gunner.

Mr. CASEY. Without going into these expenses in detail, there are certainly a number that, if they are paid by the country at all, should be charged to the domestic expenses of Rideau Hall, and not to Civil Government, under the heading of the Governor General's Department. I am not going to discuss the question whether they should be paid by the country, but if they are so paid, these items: printing, stationery for Rideau Hall, and cloak tickets, and this kind of thing, ought not to be considered part of the expenses for administering the Governor General's Department. They ought to be charged to the cost of maintenance of Rideau Hall.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. There is one strange item in the account which, although it does not amount to a great deal, seems to be out of place. That item is: printing an address on satin for Mrs. Leyden. How did that come about?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the explanation. All I find is the item.

Mr. CASEY. It is a very small item, but it is a very funny one. It would give the Minister a good chance for a joke if he could explain it, and it would give us a good chance for a joke if he could not. Is Mrs. Leyden a clerk in the Governor General's Office, or is she an orderly, or a chambermaid?

Mr. FOSTER. She is not a gunner.

Mr. COOK.

Privy Council Contingencies..... $11,100

Mr. LANDERKIN. There are some items in that expenditure last year to which we might draw the attention of the House with profit. I leave it to the honor of the Government, that they have spoken about to-day, whether these items are to be continued. I notice on page C 67 of the Auditor General's Report of last year, that in addition to the ordinary indemnity to the members of the Government, and in addition to their official salary, we defrayed their travelling expenses, their cab hire, and we also provided lunches for them at the Privy Council. We not only provided lunches for them, but we provided refreshments for them. In the former instance the lunches amounted to $231.34, and the refreshments were very moderate—I suppose it is in deference to the temperance feeling that pervades the country—they only spent $86.37. Now, I do not think we should take away these perquisites from the Government. We give them their salary, we give them their indemnity, we give them their cab hire, we give them their travelling allowance; and why, in the name of reason, should we not feed them? Why should we not give them their refreshments likewise? If there is anything else they want let them bring it down in a bill of fare and let us know what they want, and we will see what we can do for them. The country is very grateful to the hon. gentlemen. They give us nearly every blessing we enjoy. They give us good government, and they look after themselves. We give them the refreshments, and the lunches, and all those things. But there is a serious aspect to this. I would like to know how the Government can have the face to get up in the House and talk to us about honor, and about the principles that should actuate hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, when they come and actually ask the poor, toiling masses of the people of this country to pay the expenses of their lunches, their refreshments, and all that sort of thing! There is one thing I do not object to. I see we paid last year for some disinfecting fluid for them. If there was any one thing more than another they wanted in the Privy Council chamber it was a disinfecting fluid. We will not object to that. Next, I notice that they have a clerk; and what is the use of a clerk without a gown, and what is the use of a gown if it is not a silk gown? So they have provided their clerk with a silk gown, and the people of this country pay for the silk gown the sum of $35. What would be the use of a silk gown without a hat, and what would a hat be good for unless it were a silk hat? And so they bought him a silk hat which only cost $25. There are a number of other things I might mention, but I presume I have done enough for to-day.

Mr. COLBY. My hon. and facetious friend has drawn the attention of the House to an important item. Owing to the remarks, last Session, on this subject of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), I have procured a statement which I will submit to the House, and which will, perhaps, relieve the hon. gentleman's mind to some extent. The member for West Elgin, last Session, desired a comparative statement of the contingencies of the Department, showing the expenses for the year 1876, and the expenses of last year. Now, I find that in every other item except the one item that the hon. gentleman has referred to, there has been a very large increase. I find that the expenditure for newspapers in 1876 was $745; for the last year it was $440, a little reduction.

Mr. LANDERKIN. People used to read in those days.

Mr. COLBY. They selected their own literature.

Mr. CASEY. What Department is the hon. Minister reading about?

Mr. BOWELL. The Privy Council.

Mr. COLBY. I am answering now the hon. gentleman's question as well. In 1876, telegrams cost $358; in 1888, $2,300. Postage, in 1876, $63; in 1888, it was $260; and so through the various items, all which I will read if necessary. The cost of luncheons in 1876, was $1,100, and in 1888, it was $144.38, so that in voracity, in eating at the public crib, those gentlemen have far away exceeded their successors in office. That possibly may account for the small amount of disinfectants required in that Department during the last year, which, I believe, only amounts to $1. While upon that point, however, I may say, that while the expenses of that Department have increased, the work has enormously increased. It has increased, according to the estimation of the deputy, some tenfold. The expenses of the Department have been doubled since 1876, but the work of the Department has increased, I am certain, at least, four or five fold, and, according to the estimate of the deputy, very much more. But the eating capacity possessed by the Ministers has not reached, or even approximated, the capacity of the hon. gentlemen in the former period.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Let me remind the hon. Minister, that in those days the Ministers had to feed a hungry Opposition.

Mr. CASEY. I did not understand, from the hon. Minister, whether he had compared the figures for newspapers in all the Departments, or only in his own Department.

Mr. COLBY. I was only speaking for the one Department.

Mr. CASEY. I do not find in the Auditor General's Report for this year a statement for the total cost of subscriptions to newspapers for the various Departments; but I have been looking over the amounts, and I wish to treat the question as a whole for all the Departments. The expenditure of the Privy Council, as the hon. Minister has stated, was $259.75 for Canadian papers, $31.35 for American papers, and $151.73 for European papers. I have roughly ran over the subscriptions to Canadian papers, and I find that they aggregate for the different Departments over $6,000. I need not give the exact figures. I should think that the English and European amount to more than one-third additional; so that, roughly speaking, the newspaper subscriptions for the various Departments reached between $8,000 and $10,000. I have protested before, and I protest now, and I will protest another year if a reform is not made, against wholesale subscriptions being made for newspapers for the different Departments. It is utterly absurd to imagine that either the Minister or his secretary can read all the newspapers received, or that it would be worth their while to do so if it were possible. For whose use, then, are they? Only for the use of the clerks in the Departments, who should be busy while they are on duty, or for the use of casual visitors, for whom such accommodation should not be provided. I have maintained before, and I still contend, that it is necessary to have some collection of Canadian newspapers to which the Departments can refer, in order to see what is said about public and departmental affairs in different parts of the country. It is undoubtedly necessary that the Government should be informed in regard to what is being said about them and about public business, and an assortment of Canadian papers is required for that purpose; but whether so many American or European papers as are found in the list are required, is open to doubt. There should be only one collection for all the Departments, and it should be placed in one building accessible to all the Ministers and secretaries, and there information as to the spirit of the press might be derived. In fact, a suggestion, which I think good, was made to me the other day, that there should be some Department selected, and one or two clerks of good judgment appointed to look over the papers and extract all items relating to the different Departments, and forward them to the Departments interested. I suggest to the Minister, that the Privy Council Office would be the best place to have such an arrangement carried out, and that if he would engage one or two clerks, and take only one set of Canadian newspapers instead of thirteen or fourteen sets, and arrange that all items concerning public business should be cut out and sent to the respective Departments, much money would be saved, and the Departments would be much better informed. I do not pretend that the system of subscribing for newspapers originated with this Government. It originated many years before this Government or its predecessor took office. Neither Government is blamable for the system, but a Government may be blamable for the manner in which it is carried out. The subscriptions of the various Departments for Canadian newspapers differ very considerably. The Governor General's Office subscribed to the amount of $281, Privy Council $259, Justice $700, Militia $681, Secretary of State $681, Interior $648. In regard to the Department of the Interior, it is undoubtedly necessary that attention should be paid to all the newspapers published in the territory over which it has control, but, notwithstanding this fact, its subscriptions are less than those of several other Departments—those of the Finance Department amounting to $779. I hope the President of the Privy Council, who is a new broom and may be expected to sweep clean, will take this suggestion into consideration and consult the heads of the different Departments to see whether he could not have an information bureau, or press bureau, in connection with his Department. Let me now consider subscriptions paid for English and American newspapers. The Governor General's Office paid $106 for American papers, and $215 for European papers; Privy Council, $31.35 for American and $151.73 for European; Department of Justice, $10 for American and $12 for European; Militia Department, $7 for American and $234 for European. I cannot understand how the Department of Militia should require any such quantity of European papers. The Minister and his subordinates might like to look over the London and Paris illustrated papers and the comic papers of the different capitals, but they cannot be needed for their use as a Department of Militia. The Secretary of State's Department subscribes but a small amount, and nothing appears for the Queen's Printer. The Department of Interior subscribes $6 and $5 respectively. For the Audit Office there appears $38 for Canadian and $10 for European; the officials have not much time, evidently, to read the newspapers. These are fair samples of the figures, and they show that very large sums have been spent on subscriptions to American and European as well as Canadian newspapers, and those amounts are entirely unnecessary; and I submit that the amount expended for Canadian newspapers can be greatly reduced by the adoption of the suggestion I have thrown out, which I hope the new Minister will take into his serious consideration.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has addressed himself to the interesting question of subscriptions to newspapers, and as I had occasion, a short time ago, to look into the figures and the charges to contingencies in this connection in the different Departments, I am glad to be able to inform him, and no doubt he will be glad to know it, that the result of the enquiry has been that in the last two years a great reform has been accomplished, and the expenditure considerably reduced. I hold in my hand a statement showing the expenditure in the five years when the hon. gentlemen opposite were responsible for the amounts chargeable to advertising and subscriptions.

Mr. CASEY. I am only speaking of subscriptions.

Mr. TUPPER. I am speaking of the amount of subscriptions and advertising charged to contingencies. That is the general subject to which the hon. gentleman alluded. At any rate, whether he alluded to it or not it is important. I might inform the House that for the five years from 1874 to 1878, inclusive, the total amounts charged to contingencies, and newspapers, and advertising, amounted to $89,000 in round numbers; and for the five years from 1884 to 1888, inclusive, it amounts to $59,000, in round numbers. I have here the number of items in reference to the different Departments, each Department being given, and if the hon. gentleman is interested in studying this subject thoroughly, I am sure he is welcome to look through these papers and these items. If the Committee will allow me, I will hand the statement to the official reporter, so that the House may be in the possession of the facts.

Mr. LAURIER. Read the statement.

Mr. CASEY. I disclaim any intention of charging the Government with the system of subscriptions to newspapers, and I instituted no comparison as to figures.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. CASEY. No; I did not. I merely wished to point out, and I did point out, that a great economy could be made by the abolition of the present system and the introduction of another system. I would be pleased to see the hon. gentleman's figures, and I think they ought to be read for the information of the House, if they are not too voluminous.

Mr. CASEY.

Mr. TUPPER. I will read them or hand them in.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read.

Mr. TUPPER. Very well, I will read them. They are as follows:—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman's figures would be more satisfactory if they were not given in the form in which he has put them; but what I wish to call the hon. gentleman's attention to, is, that I do not notice any statement in regard to the Railway Department. Under the administration of my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Mackenzie) the Public Works Department embraced the Railway Department.

Mr. TUPPER. The amount for the Railway Department is stated there. I may have omitted it in reading over.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman does not say what he includes in the department of the Department of the Interior. He does not state whether the Indian branch is included. The Indian branch has not been under the Department of the Interior for many years.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will find when the statement is published that it is more ample than the hurried figures I gave to the House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain what the expenditure of $20,000 was to which he referred.

Mr. TUPPER. That will be for the hon. gentleman to explain, as it was in his time. I do not think that he will be able to without a little trouble.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. the President of the Council a moment ago referred to the contingencies of the Privy Council for 1878. I went to the Library and I got the contingencies of the Privy Council for that period, and I do not find in the contingencies one single dollar for lunches or for refreshments charged.

Mr. COLBY. That is a mystery that was covered up.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The contingencies of that office at that time were $4,454.77, and the amount of contingencies we are asked for this year is $11,100. I will read the whole of the item if the House wishes; and if you find one single dollar for lunches or refreshments in 1878, I will take a back seat.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will read, because it was stated in the House that lunches were procured at that time and were in the Public Accounts.

An hon. MEMBER. You cannot read them if they are not charged there.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They are not charged, but I will read the item, so that the House may see. They are as follows:—Montreal Telegraph Company, $224; Dominion Telegraph Company, $124; directories, $3; ditto, $5; ditto, $8; ditto, $7; ditto, $2; books, $7; ditto, $13; ditto, $2; ditto, $30; maps and stationery, $30; ditto, $205; stationery, $14; ditto, $2; maps, $12; plans, $12; atlas, $20; guides, $10; travelling expenses, $200; ditto, $185; ditto, $44; ditto, $82; ditto, $16; extra work, $16; contingent expenses, $1,100; cab hire, $10; ditto, $34; ditto, $146; and so on through all the items for that year there is not a single item for lunch or refreshments. I would like the President of the Council to explain how he made a statement of that character, when it is not in keeping with the record.

Mr. COLBY. Unfortunately in those days we had no Auditor General to give us every Session a minute statement of the expenditures. I made the statement on the authority of the deputy head of my Department. If the hon. gentleman has any doubt about it, I will undertake to let him have every voucher on which it is predicated. I will bring them to-morrow, so as to relieve his anxiety on the subject, when he will find not only how all these amounts were paid, but for what objects they were paid—how much for eatables, for drinkables and for smokeables, if these are included.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would prefer to take the statement of the Public Accounts to that of the deputy head of the Department, who may be some new appointment, some new creature there.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I suppose that, in matters of this kind, my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey) is quite within his right in suggesting a plan which he thinks might be more economical than the present, whether it should prove to be so or not. Nor do I know that I object to the line taken by hon. gentlemen opposite, in comparing the expenditures of the two Governments; that is, perhaps, the best defence they can make; but when they make comparative statements of this kind, I trust that they have been careful that they are done on a fair and proper basis. When the hon. Minister of Marine read his comparison, it appeared to me, so far as I could see, to be made on a fair basis; but when the discrepancy was pointed out in the figures of the Customs Department, I think it was hardly right for the Minister to say that it was for us to find out where the discrepancy was. An hon. member who furnishes figures to the House as infallible ought to be ready to show that they are so. The figures he gave were not for the one item of subscriptions to newspapers, but for subscriptions and advertisements; and it did strike me—I do not challenge the hon. gentleman's figures—that, when some Departments showed only a difference of probably $1,000, while in another there was a discrepancy of $27,000, if I were preparing such a statement, I would examine it very carefully lest I should be trapped when presenting it to the House. The solution that occurred to my mind was that, perhaps, advertisements were not charged to contingencies under the previous Administration, while they are under the present one. I do not know whether I am right in that or not, but it occurred to me that there must be some explanation of that kind, and that the Minister was not entitled to credit for the whole of the diminution which he claims credit for.

Mr. TUPPER. I did not pretend to base any argument on the figures I gave to the House, and I purposely said so. I did not analyse the different items at all, and it may be, for all I know, that some items which are now charged to contingencies were not charged to contingencies then, or vice versa. It only shows us all how necessary it is to make a very careful examination of these items, instead of founding an argument on the mere figures which we find in the Auditor General's Report or in any other report. If hon. gentlemen will allow me to say so, it has been the custom of some of them, in criticising items, to draw conclusions too quickly from the bald figures as they find them. My intention, in giving the figures just as they stood, was to enable any hon. gentleman to examine them who chose to do so. Even if there were a slight excess in the last five years, it would be a highly creditable state of affairs, because the years from 1884 to 1888 have been years in which great and extraordinary public works have been carried on in the country.

Mr. BOWELL. I have not seen this statement before, nor would I have referred to it but for the remark made by the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), in which he left the impression on the House, whether intentionally or not I do not know, that the charges included in this statement of subscriptions to and advertising in newspapers, might have been covered up in some other account.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Not covered up, but found under a different head.

Mr. BOWELL. They are not even found under a different head. They are kept under the same head and in precisely the same manner as they were from 1874 to 1878; and although I have not verified these figures, I venture the statement that they are strictly accurate. I am speaking of the Department of Customs alone, to which the hon. member for Brant called the attention of the House.

Mr. CASEY. I think my hon. friend from Brant has, after all, struck the solution of this question. It is very possible, and the hon. Minister of Marine has admitted, that the items in the different Departments might not have been charged in the former years as they were in the latter years. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs says the statement is a correct one, and that things were much the same then as now, but, on further explaining, he said that the amounts were charged as they appeared in the headings of that paper. Now, until I have examined that paper and compared it with previous records, I will be unable to criticise the classification made by the hon. the Minister of Marine; but I would caution him, to echo his own words, against the danger of basing arguments upon mere figures without considering their relations to each other, and the changes that may have been made in the system of keeping accounts. He began by stating that he meant to found no argument upon these figures. Well, if he knew they formed the basis of no argument, I cannot understand why he should have read them to the House at all. He could only have read them with the idea that they would produce the impression upon the House that greater economy prevailed now than under the administration of my hon. friend who sits in front of me. But he has since fairly and properly admitted that they do not really form a basis for any argument, and do not really show any increased economy. I would advise him, for that reason, to be more cautious in the future in making comparisons which are not complete. My hon. friend has so mixed the figures of the two periods together that there is no telling whether more or less is spent now in subscriptions to newspapers than in the other four years to which he referred. I would ask him if he could furnish the figures separately?

Mr. TUPPER. I furnished all the figures I had myself.

Mr. CASEY. It would take a little time, but, of course, they could be collected from the Public Accounts.

Mr. TUPPER.

Mr. TUPPER. There are no more details in the Public Accounts that I could find.

Mr. CASEY. With these remarks on the statement presented by the hon. the Minister of Marine, I drop the matter for the present, merely asking that the subsequent discussion should not divert the attention of hon. Ministers from my original proposition for greater economy.

Mr. ELLIS. The extravagance of the past, if there was extravagance, does not justify extravagance at present. It seems to me quite unreasonable that the Departments should require $10,100 worth of newspapers per year. Here is the total amount of subscriptions for newspapers paid by the Departments:

Governor General's Office.....	$602 00
Privy Council.....	441 00
Minister of Justice.....	722 00
Militia Department.....	922 00
Secretary of State.....	743 00
Interior.....	709 00
Indian Affairs.....	226 00
Audit.....	48 00
Finance Department.....	918 00
Inland Revenue.....	809 00
Customs Department.....	616 00
Post Office.....	724 00
Agriculture Department.....	440 00
Marine Department.....	361 00
Fisheries Department.....	152 00
Public Works.....	908 00
Railways and Canals.....	740 00

I should think that the Departments would be glad of some plan by which they could get rid of what must be to them, undoubtedly, a nuisance. I cannot conceive that the Ministers, or the deputies, or even their clerks, can find time to read any great portion of these papers. Some of the English newspapers must be subscribed for, and, no doubt, the leading Canadian papers ought to be taken, but some plan should be devised by which the Ministers could get rid of the greater part of this heavy item.

Mr. BURDETT. I understand there are some ninety new members serving in this Parliament who had no seat in the House of Commons prior to 1877, and, therefore, they are in no way responsible for the extravagance of Governments prior to that date; the new members on the Opposition side are certainly not responsible for any extravagance since then. Life is too short and time too valuable to have both continually wasted in recriminations of the sort indulged in to-day. This Government is continually in the habit of declaring that the Mackenzie Government was the very worst, and that this is very best Government that ever administered the affairs of the country, and whenever they are charged with extravagance or waste of public money, they shelter themselves behind the argument that they are as good as the Mackenzie Government, or at least no worse than that Government which they continually pretend was the worst Government that ever existed in Canada. I do not think that extravagance on the part of the Reform Government in 1877 will justify extravagance on the part of the Government to-day. Governments, like individuals, ought to improve, and if the Mackenzie Government was extravagant, the present Government is not only guilty in permitting that extravagance to go on, but in continuing such practices. They cannot possibly shelter themselves behind the alleged extravagance of the Mackenzie Government, when they cannot justify the items of expenditure which are brought under discussion. The point is, whether we are entitled to take $10,000 of the people's money and literally waste it in subscriptions to subservient newspapers, or newspapers that are practically of no use to the public or the country. Can it be possible that the Departments require all these newspapers? No man can reasonably say that they are required in the interests of the public service. Why, then, is this money wasted in subscriptions to these papers which are not wanted? Enterprising newspapers are able to live without Government patronage or Government pap, and I submit it is our duty, instead of continually indulging in recriminations and saying, "You were as bad as we are," to set ourselves to work and lop off a great many of these useless branches of extravagance. It is perfectly manifest, no matter who is to blame, that the public expenditure is increasing year by year and day by day. It is evident that the resources of the country are becoming exhausted, and the time has come when we, as representatives of the people, ought to put our hands to the wheel and see if we cannot put an end to these absurd expenditures in some way or other. All I ask is that both parties should unite and prune down those accounts, and lop off all these limbs that ought not to exist, and we would soon find that we would have a public tree of great health and vigor. I repeat, our time is too valuable to have it continually wasted by Government supporters trying to prove, when charged with extravagance or mismanagement, that they are no worse than the Mackenzie Government was ten or twelve years ago—that Government which they are continually boasting was turned out for its extravagance. If that be true they ought, by their own admission, to step down and out, or else very largely reduce these expenditures.

Mr. COOK. I wish to call the attention of the Government to two or three items here that have not as yet appeared in any of the Public Accounts of the past. The items are small, but still it is but the thin end of the wedge, and they may grow to great proportions if not checked. I refer to the charge of a stationary trunk, two travelling bags, and repairs to travelling bags. If the hon. gentleman will remember, last Session I introduced a Bill to compel the railway companies to pay for baggage they had smashed. The Government opposed that measure. The Minister of Justice particularly took exception to it, and I do not know but that, at that time, he may have had it in contemplation that they might have the misfortune to have their baggage smashed, and to have it repaired at the public expense. I would, therefore, ask the Government to assist me this year in passing that Bill, and I will especially ask the Minister of Justice to help me so as to rid his Department of the odium and difficulties which appear to surround it by charges of this nature.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Before we leave this item, I desire to say that I do not admit the charge which has been assumed—that the Government of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was an extravagant Government. On the contrary, the total amount of the expenditure each year shows that it was a highly economical Government, and that it administered the affairs of this country with efficiency as well as economy. I think we shall be able to show, at the proper time, that the comparative statement laid before the Committee by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is an illusory statement, and does not properly represent the comparative expenditure of the two Governments; and further, that the statement of the Minister of Customs, that the accounts of his Department are kept now in the same way as they were under the administration of the late Mr. Burpee, is not accurate, but that the Public Accounts and the Report of the Auditor will show that he is mistaken, and that many things were charged in Mr. Burpee's time, when he was Minister of Customs, to these particular accounts, which go to make up this very large sum, which are not now embraced in the accounts in the same way. I do not propose to delay the Committee at present by going into this matter, but I have my general recollection of what the expenditure was, and I have no doubt that I, or other gentlemen on this side, will be able to show that the statement which the hon. gentleman has submitted to the Committee is a misleading statement, and one which will not be warranted in reference to the comparative expenditure of the two Governments. It is only necessary to look at the aggregate expenditure of the two Governments to see that the increase has been enormous. The explanation which is given for the expenditure being much larger is that the labor is five times more than it was? Is the country more wealthy? Are the people more prosperous?

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is the population five times greater? An hon. gentleman says that the people are more prosperous. He has only to go to the loan societies to find out what the comparative prosperity is. He has only to go to them to find out the reduction in the valuation of real estate, from Halifax to Vancouver, and that will show him the difference in the prosperity of the country. I deny that there has been such an increase in the work of Government as to justify the large increase which has taken place in expenditure. Further, I say that, if the Government could show that a Government which died ten or twelve years ago was extravagant, it would be no answer to the demand that they should economise now. We are not to refuse to make improvements because improvements were not made at that time. Still, I deny that the statement of the hon. gentleman represents accurately the expenditure of the Government of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), or is an accurate comparison between that and the expenditure of hon. gentlemen to-day. Let hon. gentlemen confine their examination of these accounts to the merits of their own expenditure, and not try to justify that by making an inaccurate or unfair comparison between their expenditure and that of a Government which has been dead for twelve or fourteen years. We are supposed to live in an age of improvement and of progress. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been in power for a long time, and their experience ought to enable them to administer the affairs of the country efficiently and economically. It would be no justification for extravagance on their part if they could succeed in showing that the expenditure on the Department of Customs was larger formerly than it is to-day, but I deny entirely that the statement which the hon. gentleman has read is a fair representation of the relative cost of that Department ten years ago and to-day.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) ventures the assertion that the statement which I made was not accurate. He made a general charge, and attributed to me a statement which I never made. I referred exclusively to items which are before the House—advertising and subscriptions. I did not say a word in reference to anything beyond those two items, and I repeat what I then said. The hon. gentleman is very apt to indulge in charges of inaccuracy, and even to make stronger statements in reference to gentlemen on this side of the House. I repeat now what I then stated: that in regard to these items of advertising and subscriptions to newspapers, the amount charged in the accounts is precisely the same as those of the hon. gentleman's colleague, the late Mr. Burpee, when he occupied the position which I now hold. I repeat that statement, and I challenge the hon. gentleman to the proof of his insinuation, either on the floor of the House, in the Public Accounts Committee, or anywhere else.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think this discussion ought to lead to some good results, and I entirely approve of the suggestion of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey). We have a reading room connected with the Commons and one connected with the Senate. In these rooms we are supposed to have all the newspapers published in the Dominion, and duplicate copies of them, besides a large number of the leading English and American newspapers. These reading rooms are open to all the members of the Government and to civil servants, and I understand they are also open to the reading public of Ottawa. What necessity is there, then, for each Department to obtain copies of all the newspapers which are to be found on the files of the reading rooms of the Senate and House of Commons? I contend that the large number of newspapers that are received in the different Departments must really be a nuisance to the heads of the Departments and to the men in those Departments who are there for the purpose of rendering a service to the country for the wages they receive. Of course, they may be used by those drones who are to be found in almost all the Departments, who want to put in their time, and render no services, by reading these newspapers; but, at the same time, I think it would afford them some exercise, and be of some benefit to their bodily health, if they were required to step up to the buildings here when they want to refresh their minds by reading the newspapers. I think this system of having newspapers sent to the Departments, as well as to the reading rooms in this building, should be put a stop to. We find even that justice is not done in the Departments to those who are desirous of reading the news; because I have no doubt that it will be found, upon investigation, to be a fact that the newspapers ordered by the several Departments are not the general newspapers of the country, but they are newspapers that support the Administration. The Liberal newspapers are not ordered by the Departments at all. Those who read newspapers in the Departments must confine their reading to papers that support the Government, but if they want to get general information, they have got to come up here to the reading room. I believe that if an investigation were made, you would find very few Liberal newspapers subscribed for in any of the Departments. There may be a few leading newspapers, such as the Toronto Globe and the Hamilton Times, but the great bulk of the papers subscribed for are those supporting the Government. Now, I think the suggestion made by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) is a very good one, and if the Government will avail themselves of it, they will effect a saving to the country of from $8,000 to $10,000 every year. This may not be a very large item in the estimation of a Government that thinks nothing of voting millions of dollars for certain enterprises, but it is an item which will strike the people of this country as an important one. Here we can save from $8,000 to $10,000, and the service of the country will be just as effectively performed, and the men in the Departments at Ottawa, and their friends, will be just as thoroughly versed in the news of the day, by coming up to the reading room to see the newspapers, as if they had not to step out of their own offices. I urge upon the Government to accept this proposition and act upon it. I noticed some time ago in the newspapers that the Secretary of State had announced that he intended to make some marvellous reform in the matter of advertising in newspapers, and I expect to hear from him this Session in what direction this reform is to be made. I know that a vast amount of money is squandered every year in this way by giving what is known as "pap" to Government newspapers. The money is actually thrown away, because it is of no use to the public service. Advertisements are inserted in British Columbia papers of matters pertaining to the Maritime Provinces, and in the papers of the Maritime Provinces of matters pertaining to British Columbia, and in this way the money of the country is squandered. Now, I ask that the Secretary of State will accomplish what some of the newspapers have said that he intends to accomplish in the way of economy in this direction, and I trust the suggestion made by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) will be adopted, and that we will no longer find sums ranging from $8,000 to $9,000 expended every year for newspapers for the Departments. I entirely agree with what my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Burdett) has said: That the members of this House are not responsible for the conduct that has been pursued by members of former Parliaments. We are here to conduct the affairs of this country in the best way we know how. We are here to economise as much as we can in the interest of the public. But we are not here to be told that because so-and-so did this or that, it is right for this Government to do it. We are not responsible for the acts of a former Government. A good many men may be sitting on this side of the House who did not support the Mackenzie Government at all. They may have had their eyes opened since, and have come to the conclusion that, although the Mackenzie Government did commit errors in some respects, they see that this Government, of all Governments that have ever ruled in this country, is the most extravagant and corrupt that ever sat on the Treasury benches. It is high time that the people of this country were aroused to a determination to compel the Government to exercise economy, not only in large matters, but in small, in administering the affairs of this country.

Mr. TUPPER. I would just like to say a word to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who seems to think the Committee should take his ipse dixit in reference to the statement I brought before the House. To my mind, it only shows the utter recklessness of that hon. gentleman, when he was forced by these figures to make a statement that he could not have considered before making, when he said that my statement was false and misleading. Upon what authority does he say so? He has not had an opportunity of examining one single figure. The hon. gentleman, let me tell him, if these figures are misleading, is himself responsible for them, to a large extent. They are figures published by the Government of which he was a member. The statement I made is true in every particular. The hon. gentleman may have had a guilty conscience in reference to the deductions that were made from that statement. But I went no further than this—that that statement, prepared and brought before the House in Committee, was an accurate statement of the items charged in the Public Accounts against the contingencies for advertising and subscriptions to newspapers in those different years. I leave it to hon. gentlemen to draw their own conclusion; I leave it open to any hon. gentleman to say whether, before an attack can be made on one side or the other, a careful and fair investigation is demanded. I brought those figures before the House simply for what they were worth. I made no charge; I made no insinuation. But the hon. gentleman became restive and feels uneasy because, in the comparison, he was shown at a disadvantage. The hon. gentleman did not seem to object so much to the comparison in reference to his colleagues, but he found great fault with the comparison that places him in rather an unpleasant plight.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, I did not.

Mr. TUPPER. I have only to remind the hon. gentleman that the time has not come for him to make the charge, that the statement is misleading. If he is able to find that it is misleading, the charge may be properly brought against the officer who prepared those accounts for him, in his own time, and enabled them to be entered upon public journals. I think the House will agree with me that the production of these figures has been beneficial in securing a fair discussion. Hon. gentlemen opposite who were making glib charges before these figures were produced, and though they are discussing a matter of logic as to whether it is fair to quote the proceedings under former Governments, I think the House will agree with me in believing that the comparison has had the effect of making them more reasonable, and in making them feel that, in entering upon this discussion, they had better make a careful examination into the facts and figures before they criticise them.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not see how we can very well ascertain the correctness of these figures without the vouchers. I would like the Minister of Customs to be as frank as the President of the Privy Council, and say now, without any formal motion, that he will bring down the vouchers, not for the whole five years, but, as a preliminary, the vouchers for 1878, and those for 1888, pertaining to the Customs Department alone—all the vouchers connected with contingencies.

Mr. BOWELL. From when?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). For the years 1878 and 1888.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Half of 1878 was their year.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Let them take 1877, and 1887, if you like, so that we can see the difference. As the hon. Minister knows we have not the details in the Auditor's account of 1877 that we have here, and the system of making up the accounts. I did not charge that the accounts were different; the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will agree with me that I did not say his figures were wrong.

Mr. TUPPER. I alluded to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills).

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I thought there was such a discrepancy, that did not exist in any of the other Departments, that it was only natural to infer that some different method had been followed; and with all deference to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and while accepting his word that he means what he says, and that he has himself personally examined the vouchers, and knows the way in which the contingencies have been made up, still I think he may have made a mistake, and that the cost of advertising in connection with his Department may appear somewhere else, and not under this head, and the same may have been under a previous Administration. I throw it out merely as a suggestion; it may be so, but we must have the vouchers before we can ascertain whether that be the case. You see, Sir, that there is over $600 spent this year for subscriptions to newspapers—$590 for Canadian papers alone. Five years would bring that up to $3,000, almost the whole thing, and that would leave the Customs Department with scarcely any advertising during five years. Now, hon. gentlemen will agree with me that, under the Mackenzie Administration, it is a most improbable thing that the Minister of Customs (Mr. Burpee) spent $6,000 a year in subscriptions to newspapers. They will not entertain the idea, surely, when $600 now strikes the members of the House as a large amount, that ten times that amount was expended in that year by Mr. Burpee. If that be so, the difference must be in the question of advertising. Will the Minister say that the Minister of Customs of that day spent money needlessly for advertising—$27,000 in five years—more than he has spent under that head. I am not saying that he will not, and that he cannot say so, but it does not seem to me to be probable; and the only way is to have the vouchers for two years, to make a comparison.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not understand exactly what the hon. gentleman means by having the vouchers. If he desires to obtain them, he had better make a motion to have them brought down from the Auditor General's Department. If he will refer to the contingent account for the different years, as published in the public record, he will find that for which he is asking.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No; I beg the hon. Minister's pardon. The hon. President of the Council, in reply to my hon. friend for South Grey, (Mr. Landerkin) who said he could find nothing for refreshments, said the amounts did not appear there, but he could bring down the vouchers and show them.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman desires to leave the impression on the House that the Customs Department has been managed lately in the same manner as the Privy Council contingencies account was managed in the year to which I have referred, he will have to call for some other vouchers than those which cover advertising, because, if I understood the statement of my hon. friend the President of the Privy Council, he is prepared to lay before this House accounts and vouchers covering those refreshments, which did not appear in the Public Accounts—that is under the head of refreshments. If that is what the hon. gentleman means, I have no objection that he should make a motion for the most rigid investigation into that question. I can inform him that there has been very little advertising done for the Customs Department since I have been at the head of it, and that may account, in a great measure, for the difference in that matter as between the five years of my predecessor and myself. If he will turn to the Public Accounts—and this is all I can give him—unless I went to the different Departments and examined all the accounts which had been rendered for the last ten or twenty years—he will find the contingencies account for Customs, 1879, which I hold in my hand and which covers the accounts of one of the years largely under my predecessor, is entered in this way: “Sundry persons, subscriptions to and advertising in newspapers, $7,269.88.” In 1876 it is entered in the same way: “To sundry persons for subscriptions to and advertising in newspapers, $621.97.”

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The advertising is not charged in the contingencies of the Customs now.

Mr. BOWELL. Simply because there was none. There has been an occasional advertisement, but I think only $75 was expended during last year, and during some years scarcely anything. I can explain, I think, to a certain extent, how the large expenditure in question occurred. Every time a new port was opened under the old Administration; it was advertised in nearly every Liberal or Grit sheet throughout the Dominion, at an enormous cost. If a port is now opened, I insert a notice in the official Gazette, and that is all. I think those interested in the opening of the port, men who desire to send their goods there, will find out the fact without the Department expending $300 or $400 in advertising in different sections of the Dominion. I put a stop to that system of which the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Paterson) has complained, by which advertisements which did not interest any but a particular section of the Dominion, appear unnecessarily in many local papers.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I entirely agree with the Minister of Customs that he has administered his Department with a good deal of economy, in fact, there is no doubt as to that being the case; but the charge he has made, that his predecessor published the opening of every port in every Grit newspaper throughout the Dominion, requires a little stronger evidence than the mere assertion of the hon. gentleman to establish it. I admit that that rule is not applied by the Minister of Customs now, but it is adopted largely by the Minister of Public Works and by other Ministers in regard to advertising. I understand the Secretary of State is going to establish a new practice with regard to advertising, and I hope the Minister of Public Works will be able to show a better record for his Department in the future than in the past.

Mr. CASEY. I do not understand this point: If it be true that the amount for advertising and subscriptions under the Mackenzie régime reached the figures stated, how did the result come about? The Minister of Marine has said that the total amount for advertisements and subscriptions for the last four years reached $59,000, while I find, in the Auditor General's Reports, that advertising alone cost nearly $77,000 last year.

Mr. TUPPER. Is that in contingencies?

Mr. CASEY. No.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman either did not listen to me, or did not understand.

Mr. CASEY. If the hon. gentleman will listen to me, I will listen to him. He is a very young member, but he is a Minister. The advertising does not appear as a separate item. The explanation of the whole matter is, that that expenditure which was included under contingencies for the four years of the Mackenzie régime, now appears largely under a separate item.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has in this case, as is his practice in dealing with other subjects, made the matter as clear as mud.

Mr. CASEY. I am prepared to submit to the impertinence of greenhorns, of course; I have had to submit to it often before, and I will submit with the graciousness of a senior in age as a member of the House, and I can afford to submit to it. On the other hand, I have shown that no comparison can be made from the unfair and misleading statements submitted by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. TUPPER. I take the statement back that the hon. gentleman made it as clear as mud; he did not do anything of the kind.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). No doubt, so far as the Customs Department is concerned, it has been very economically administered under the present Minister—so far as regards advertising. It has been shown, however, that advertising is now a separate item, on which $77,000 have been expended, the bulk by the Department of Public Works. It has been shown that almost every paper in the Dominion, from the Maritime Provinces to British Columbia, receives advertisements from the Public Works Department.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman will excuse me. Does he find anything whatever that controverts what I said in regard to the Customs Department?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I say that in the Customs Department there is no advertising charged.

Mr. CASEY. Nothing appears under contingencies except casual advertising, the necessity for which arises during the year, but in the years between 1874 and 1878 nearly all the advertising came under the head of contingencies, and there is where the absolute misleading character of the comparison comes in.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries put words into my mouth which I did not use. I did not characterise his statement as false, but I said it would be found to be misleading. The hon. gentleman said I had no right to state that, simply because I had not before me all the Public Accounts for the years within which he instituted the comparisons; but, Sir, I was speaking generally of my impression, for I follow the expenditure of the Government with some attention from year to year, and I purposed to invite the attention of the Committee to the paper which he has submitted for the latter period. But, in the Auditor General's Report, the particular item to which my hon. friend who sits beside me has referred, shows how utterly inaccurate and with what little care the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has made up his statement. Why, Sir, within the expenditure of one of the Departments for one year there is an amount of money for printing almost equal to the expenditure of the whole five years made in the statement which the hon. gentleman has read. I refer to that one fact in order to show the accuracy of my impression. The statement which my hon. friend beside me has made has vindicated the accuracy of my impression and the misleading character of the paper which the hon. gentleman has submitted to the Committee.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. There is another matter to which I wish to call attention, and, as I see the First Minister in his place, I would like to have some information with regard to it. I know it is not very popular for any one to refer to the personal expenses of the right hon. gentleman, but, at the same time, a member of Parliament has a duty to perform, and though it may be disagreeable, he should not fail to discharge it. I would like a little explanation in regard to the cab hire business, for it seems to be increasing instead of decreasing. I thought, after the assault made on that expenditure last year and the year before by my friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), that probably the Government would use a little more economy in their expenditure for cab hire. I find that the right hon. the First Minister expended $928.75 for his own personal cab hire. Why, he must have been riding in cabs nearly all the time, and when he was not riding in cabs he must have been riding in the pay car "Jamaica." I am sorry to know that that source of enjoyment which the First Minister had so much at his command formerly, has passed out of existence; for I believe that fire has destroyed the celebrated "Jamaica." The First Minister also travelled to the extent of $566.61, besides the cab hire; and I find that in the same expenditure, not only the First Minister draws a large amount for cab hire, but that $260 was paid to persons not named in vouchers. Now, this question has been up before the Public Accounts Committee for some years; and when we ask that these accounts be brought down for the information of the Committee, we get a lot of tickets that are passed from the Department to the cabmen, but we cannot trace who these unknown persons are. It was urged in this House that some method should be adopted by the different Departments in order that the public might know the persons who benefit by this travelling in cabs other than the Ministers and their assistants. I hold that it is due to the public that there should be some means of ascertaining who these people are. I observe that my hon. friend, the Minister of Customs has, last year, pursued his usual frugal course and that he has travelled, as the Scotch say, on "Shank's mare" most of the time. I observe, however, that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine, who is a young and athletic man, has been rather extravagant in the matter of cab hire, and I think that a gentleman who is noted for his ability to play a good bat at cricket, ought not to set such a bad example as he does in this matter of cab hire. I think he should follow the example of the Minister of Customs and be more economical. I also see that the Postmaster General is an economical man, as far as cab hire is concerned, and for this he ought to be commended. I notice also, with regard to the cab hire at Ottawa, that the Hon. C. H. Tupper received not only $231.35, but that there are various other persons named in the Auditor General's Report, as connected with his Department, receiving public money for cab hire.

An hon. MEMBER. Name.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I observe that one Madame Lamouche was paid $46 on this account, and I think it is due to the House that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should show what services Madame Lamouche rendered to the country for this $46. I would also like the First Minister to assure us that he will be more economical in the matter of cab hire for the future, and that a system will be established whereby the members of the House and Public Accounts Committee may know the names of these unknown persons who travel to the extent of $260 at the public expense in the cabs of the city of Ottawa.

Mr. COLBY. I have not been very long in the Department which has been presided over until recently by the right hon. the Premier, but I must state to this House—and I feel it my duty to state it to the House on my own responsibility—that I have been there long enough to find out that the First Minister has not always treated the House with perfect frankness and ingenuousness. With regard to this item which the hon. gentleman speaks of as being personal to the First Minister, I made a complete investigation into this, and I find that the hon. Premier has concealed from this House and from the country, Session after Session, when he has been charged with making extravagant expenditures for his own personal advantages, the fact that he has paid his personal cab hire specially and separately from this item, and that last year he gave his cheque for $500, and the year before that he gave his cheque for $500 also, and that he has paid, according to his judgment, that proportion of the cab hire account which could properly be included as personal. The hon. gentleman would not expect, no hon. member of this House would expect, that the Premier of this country, every time he discharges a hack, should make a special entry in his own note-book to distinguish whether it was personal or public. His time is, perhaps, altogether too valuable for that. But the right hon. gentleman, against whose personal integrity no charge has ever yet been successfully made in Canada, has felt it his duty to pay that portion of the account for cab hire which he, in his judgment, considered he should fairly appropriate; and when I assure the House that the sum of $500 was paid by him last year, and the sum of $500 the year before, I think hon. members will agree with me that that sum fairly covers the portion of cab hire that could be called personal. The right hon. gentleman has permitted himself to rest under this imputation; I suppose it is his modesty, though I should have thought he was old enough to have outgrown that. I suppose he felt that if any gentlemen were disposed to consider him unworthy enough to pilfer from the public treasury a paltry amount for his own personal advantage, he was quite ready that they should continue to entertain that opinion of him.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think the hon. gentleman has not approached the subject under discussion at all. We have an item in the Auditor General's Report, page 66 C, showing that cab hire at Ottawa for Sir John A. Macdonald, amounting to $928, was paid, and just below that on page 67 we find another item of cab hire for persons not named in vouchers, $260. What I claim is that this House has a right to know how the public money is expended. I do not wish to be small in dealing with the Premier in this connection at all. I think he should enjoy the comforts of life now that he is so advanced in years, but I think this expenditure is extravagant, and what I complain of is that we have not been given the information asked for, as to who the persons are who took advantage of the right hon. gentleman's good nature, as the President of the Council says, and imposed on the Privy Council and on the people of this country, by having this item of $260 charged in the Public Accounts for their cab hire. Now, we have a right to know who those persons are, and I shall not be satisfied until I do know who they are. The President of the Council says it is not right to insinuate. I am not insinuating at all. I make a public charge here, based on the Auditor General's Report, that the public money is squandered to the extent of $260 for cab hire, and that no account can be given of that expenditure; and I think that the President of the Council, who has this particular Department in charge, will not be doing his duty, unless he ascertains for us who got the benefit of this money, and unless he establishes some practice in the Department which will prevent such items appearing in future accounts. That is the position I take, and that is a position that cannot be assailed, and that has not been assailed by the President of the Council on this occasion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not at all object to the hon. gentleman bringing this matter up. I do not at all object to the course he takes. He is performing his duty, and he is quite right in doing so. However, with respect to this particular item of $260 for persons not named in vouchers, I can give him no information. I know I did not give any tickets to any person for any such purpose. Whether that work was done for the Department of the Privy Council or not, I cannot say. Of course I have no vouchers here, because there are no vouchers, I am told. All I can say is that I have not the slightest objection to the Committee on Public Accounts looking into the whole matter to any extent. As regards the cab hire, the fact of the matter is, as I have said before, as long as

Mr. COLBY.

I am Premier the overburdened taxpayers of Canada will have to pay my cab hire, and I believe they will be quite willing to do so, because the older I get the less will my powers of walking become, and the more frequently shall I be obliged to use a cab. I may tell the hon. gentleman that in winter time I drive in a cab from my house to Parliament; and during last summer, in order to economise a little, I occasionally took a ride in a buss, and I saved a little money for the country by riding in the buss instead of Buckley's cab. But they are too cold for my feet in the winter time, and I am using a cab just now, and I hope the House will pardon me.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I am afraid the hon. First Minister must have been out of pocket when he rode in a buss, because there is no charge for buss expenses in the accounts here. However, as I said before, I do not complain of the expenditure particularly, if we can get at the bottom of it. I want to find out who these unknown persons are, and I think the hon. Minister should have such supervision over his Department as to enable him to give us that information. I would like the Minister of Marine to explain his cab hire items.

Mr. TUPPER. With reference to my own cab hire, the vouchers exist for every dollar which I have charged, and the hon. gentleman can get them. With reference to Madame Lamouche, she is a very worthy lady in the employ of the Government, who had the misfortune to meet with an accident and break her ankle, and during the time she was recovering, instead of sending work to her house, the Department allowed her a small amount, something like 25 cents per cab or per day, and the $46 covers the time during which she was recovering. When she could walk, I am sorry to say we compelled her to do so.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is now six o'clock, but I am not going to permit this item of cab hire to pass, because I have a remark to make upon it.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 6.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 5th February, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 48) respecting the Northern and Western Railway Company, and to change the name of the company to the Canada Eastern Railway Company.—(Mr. Weldon, St. John.)

Bill (No. 49) respecting the New Brunswick Railway Company.—(Mr. Weldon, St. John.)

Bill (No. 50) respecting the Manitoba and North-Western Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Wallace.)

Bill (No. 52) for the protection of persons employed by contractors engaged in the construction of railways under Acts passed by the Parliament of Canada.—(Mr. Purcell.)

PUBLIC STORES ACT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 53) to amend the Public Stores Act. He said: In 1887 Parliament passed a statute to prevent the counterfeiting of marks by which public stores connected with the Imperial service, as well as the Colonial service, are recognised, and we have been requested by the Home Authorities to amend the Act to meet a slight change that has been made.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RIVER ST. LOUIS.

Mr. BERGERON (Translation) asked, Does the Government intend to push to completion, this year, the works on the River St. Louis?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) I can give, Mr. Speaker, no definite answer to the hon. member to-day, but I can tell him that the Government are engaged in considering the question.

81ST BATTALION OF PORTNEUF.

Mr. FISET (Translation) asked, (for Mr. DE ST. GEORGES), Are there any complaints or reports lodged with the Militia Department respecting the 81st Battalion of Portneuf, its commanding officer or any other of its officers? If such have been lodged, what is the nature of these complaints or reports? Is the Militia Department satisfied as to the condition and working of this Battalion? If not, is it the intention of the Department to remedy matters?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. (Translation.) In reply to the hon. member, I have the pleasure of telling him that there is no complaint or report before the Department of Militia and Defence respecting the 81st Battalion of Portneuf. No complaint has been made by any person whomsoever against the officers of this Battalion; and the last report from the Deputy Adjutant General on the manner in which this Battalion performed its duties when in camp at Lévis, is quite favorable. There exists no reason why the Department should complain of the manner in which this Battalion is managed.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. PLATT), asked, When did the Board of Visitors last visit the Royal Military College at Kingston?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The last visit of the Visitors of the Royal Military College was made on 18th October, 1881.

PAYMENTS OF PUBLIC MONEY.

Mr. RINFRET asked, 1. Whether Messrs. J. S. Hall, advocate, M.P.P. for Montreal Centre; Charles Auguste Cornellier, advocate, of Montreal; and Gabriel Des Georges, advocate, of Montreal, have been employed in any way by the Dominion Government? If so, in what capacity, and what have they received for their services? 2. Did the Government employ Mr. Elie Moreau, advocate, of Sorel, in the case of Boucher, postmaster of St.

François? 3. Have the Government anywhere in their employment a workman or foreman named Octave Leclerc?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Hall has been occasionally employed for legal purposes in the city of Montreal. The sums which have been paid to him from time to time appear in the Public Accounts. Mr. Cornellier was consulted, especially by the Customs officers, in relation to the infringement of the Customs laws, and on one occasion he was paid the sum of $200. Mr. Gabriel Des Georges has not been employed, so far as I am aware, and I understand he is not an advocate. Mr. Moreau, of Sorel, has been employed occasionally. I cannot answer in regard to Oliver Leclerc, as his employment does not come under my Department.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. So far as regards my Department, the party in question has not been employed by it.

ST. MICHEL WHARF.

Mr. AMYOT asked, 1st. Whether any resident of the parish of St. Michel, County of Bellechasse, has written, during the past year, or during the present month, to the hon. the Minister of Public Works, or to any officer of the Department, respecting the expediency or inexpediency of making repairs to the wharf at St. Michel? 2nd. What are the names of the signers of any such letter or letters?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Six communications have been received during the year 1889 in reference to repairs to the wharf at St. Michel. 1st, No. 97117, a petition of the 3rd April, 1889, through Mr. G. Amyot, M.P., from the Municipal Council of St. Michel, asking for further repairs to the wharf; 2nd, No. 101774, a letter from the Secretary-Treasurer (L. A. Mercier) of the Council of St. Michel, dated 14th September, 1889, asking on behalf of the Council why the execution of repairs is delayed; 3rd, No. 91388, a letter (25th September, 1889,) from Rev. L. A. Déziel, asking that repairs be at once proceeded with; 4th, No. 103090, a telegram (29th October, 1889,) from G. Amyot, M.P., reporting damage and asking that engineer be sent; 5th, No. 103091, a letter (29th October, 1889,) from A. Sansterre, pilot, asking that repairs be made; 6th, No. 103313, a petition received on the 8th November, 1889, and signed by 122 citizens of St. Michel (the Curé, Rev. L. A. Déziel, Mayor A. Forgues, Councillors E. Goupil, L. Mercier, G. Ray, J. Bissonnette, N. Leclerc, H. Gagnon, &c., and 114 others), asking that an additional sum be granted to repair the damage lately caused to the wharf by a gale. I suppose the hon. gentleman does not require a list of the names in the petition.

WHARF AT ST. PETER'S BAY.

Mr. MCINTYRE asked, Whether the Minister of Public Works has given instructions to his engineer to hold a survey at St. Peter's Bay, King's County, Prince Edward Island, with a view to the construction of a public wharf at that place, as asked for by a petition largely signed by the inhabitants of that locality, and sent to the Department? If so, when was the order given?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. On the 17th December a petition dated 11th December was received by the Department, asking for a grant to complete a wharf at the mouth of St. Peter's Harbor. It was acknowledged by Mr. Gobeil, secretary of the Department, on the 18th, and forwarded to the chief engineer's office on the 19th. On the 10th January the following letter was written on behalf of the chief engineer to the resident engineer :—

"SIR,—I enclose file 104405, being a petition for a grant to complete a wharf at the mouth of St. Peter's Harbor. Is this wharf the one assumed by the Department and known as St. Peter's Bay?"

"Please enquire into this and furnish the usual report, and return No. 104405 therewith."

"Yours obediently,"

"(Signed) LOUIS COSTE,
"For Chief Engineer."

No examination has been ordered, but I am informed that the resident engineer proposes to make the enquiry this week. Therefore, this examination could not affect the last election.

THE CAUGHNAWAGA RESERVE.

Mr. DOYON asked, 1. What are the names of the parties who worked the quarries on the Caughnawaga Reserve since 1884? 2. Are some of the said persons indebted to the Department in connection therewith, and, if so, to what amount? 3. Did they furnish good and sufficient sureties, and to what amount? 4. Who are the said sureties? 5. When and how do the Government purpose collecting the amounts due?

Mr. DEWDNEY. 1. John D. de Lorimier and Thomas Jocks—both members of the Caughnawaga Band of Indians. 2. The former owes $2,594.87; the latter, $1,314.14. 3 and 4. These parties are not under security. 5. The Department is taking steps for the recovery of the amount due, but it would not be prudent to state what those measures are.

Mr. DOYON asked, What was the cost of the survey of the Caughnawaga Indian Reserve, in the County of Laprairie? Has the expenditure caused by this survey been taken out of the Indian Reserve Funds, or has it been charged against them?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Walbank, the surveyor who was employed in laying out the Caughnawaga Indian Reserve in allotments, has rendered accounts for the work up to $22,250.32. Of this sum, $19,000 has been allowed and paid up to date. There is a balance of $3,250.32 as yet unpaid, and in regard to which the Department is in communication with Mr. Walbank. Payment was made out of the funds of the band.

SUMMERSIDE HARBOR BREAKWATER.

Mr. PERRY asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to build a breakwater in Summerside Harbor, Prince Edward Island, in accordance with the recommendation of the engineer?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The works proposed for the improvement of the entrance to the harbor consist of a breakwater extending southwardly from Welling's Point a distance of 3,800 feet, and a second from the lighthouse on a length of 1,000 feet in a southerly direction towards Indian Head, the cost of these two structures being placed at $75,000. The Government do not intend erecting these works.

Mr. McINTYRE.

DUTY ON FISH IN BOND.

Mr. EISENHAUER asked, 1. Whether any changes have been made during 1889 in the regulations regarding the bonding of foreign fish, and, if so, what changes were ordered? 2. Have the changes so made been carried out by the Collectors of Customs at the ports where foreign fish were entered in bond?

Mr. BOWELL. There have been no changes in the regulations, but instructions were sent to all Collectors of Customs by Departmental Order No. 3015, of the 26th July last, requiring them to comply with the provisions of the law as amended by chapter 14, 15 Victoria, as to treatment of foreign fish in bond. The instructions have been carried out, so far as is known to the Department of Customs. If the hon. gentleman has not a copy of that order, I will have pleasure in sending it to him.

I. C. R.—FREIGHT CHARGES.

Mr. AMYOT asked, What is the sum charged over the Intercolonial Railway for the carriage of a barrel of flour from Quebec to Métis? What is the charge made over the Intercolonial for the carriage to the Maritime Provinces of a barrel of flour coming from Montreal or from Toronto by the Grand Trunk Railway?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Intercolonial Railway freight charges on a barrel of flour from Quebec to Métis is 32 cents. The Intercolonial Railway receive out of the rate on flour from Montreal to Amherst, N.S., 57 cents per barrel.

THE SHIP BRIDGEWATER.

Mr. EDGAR asked, 1. Whether the Government has received any further representations, since the close of last Session, respecting the seizure of the ship Bridgewater from or on behalf of the owners, or from the Imperial Government, or from the Government of the United States? 2. Has the Government yet made any settlement of the owners' claims for damages for such seizure? 3. If any settlement has been arrived at, what amount is to be paid by Canada?

Mr. BOWELL. No further representations have been received from the Imperial Government, or from the Government of the United States, respecting the seizure of the ship Bridgewater, since the close of last Session; no settlement of the owners' claim has been made or recognised, and no amount has been paid or promised to be paid.

PROVINCIAL LEGISLATION.

Mr. EDGAR asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to reprint the correspondence, reports, and Orders in Council upon the subject of Provincial Legislation, from 1867 to 1884, so that members and others may obtain copies?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That subject has not yet been considered at all. I understand that the volume is out of print, but I am not aware that there has been any particular demand for it.

PURSE SEINES AND GILL NETS.

Mr. McINTYRE moved for :

Copies of all petitions from fishermen and others interested in the fisheries on the coast of Prince Edward Island, and all other correspondence with the Department of Marine and Fisheries, having reference to the prevention of taking mackerel by means of purse seines and gill nets within the territorial waters of Canada.

He said: In making this motion, I desire to say a few words in reference to it. For many years it has been recognised by those interested in our fisheries, that the purse seine is one of the most destructive agencies ever invented for taking fish. Of course, we have not to seek far to find the cause of this. An immense net is thrown around a large shoal of fish, and fish of all kinds are captured; but only those wanted are taken out of the net, and those not wanted are thrown out to become food for other fishes. This evil became so great on the coast of the United States that, some years ago, Congress was compelled to pass a law making it illegal to take mackerel on the coasts during the spring months up to 1st June. During that month and afterwards, the fish work their way to the northern waters, going along the coasts of the United States and Nova Scotia into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, or, as it is now called by fishermen, the North Bay. They are immediately followed by the American fishing fleet, and in the Gulf of St. Lawrence are joined by our own seining vessels; and from the depredations of these two fleets, which continue to operate until late in the fall, the fish are rapidly disappearing from those waters. The three last years, in the mackerel fisheries, have been exceedingly bad years, and the last year has been the worst of all; and although our own fishermen have the privilege of fishing in the three-mile limit, their catch is growing remarkably small, as well as that of the Americans. Our fishermen state that the evil of the seine is not wholly in the destruction of the fish, although that is a large factor, but they claim that the seine has the effect of frightening away the fish. Whatever the cause may be, the mackerel are fast leaving their old haunts and disappearing from our waters, so much so that last summer they could not be caught either by the seine or by the fishing line. Within the last few years the gill net has been added to the seine as a destructive agency, and all along the coasts of Prince Edward Island, within the three-mile limit, along the north shore especially, these nets are strewn in all directions. Our fishermen claim that these nets have the object and effect of frightening the fish in the same manner as the seines, and they say that they are quite as destructive. They are kept set the whole time, both day and night, and the fish caught in them are not taken out, as no boats can approach them in rough weather. The consequence is that the fish drop out of them, and are used as food by the others. Individually, I have not formed any particular notions in regard to this matter. I can readily understand that it is a rather difficult question. In the present instance, I am merely voicing the sentiments of my constituents. Large meetings have been held all over my county during the past fall, at which strong resolutions have been passed against the use of purse seines and gill nets, and the desire was expressed by them that some steps should be taken by the Minister of Marine to put an end to the destruction which has been going on during the last few years.

Mr. FLYNN. I differ from my hon. friend from King's, P.E.I., in the views he has expressed to the House in regard to the destructive character of gill nets. Gill nets have been used for years along the coasts of Nova Scotia for the catching of herring, mackerel and alewives; in fact, we could only take alewives and herring by using them. They are fish which do not take bait, and cannot be caught in any other way than by the use of gill or floating nets. I have never heard that there are any complaints whatever as regards the destructive quality of gill nets, or that they in any way interfere with the fish. The prohibition of the use of these nets, which are largely employed on the Atlantic coast, would simply take from the fishermen their means of livelihood. But, while dissenting from the views of the hon. member for King's (Mr. McIntyre) as regards gill nets, I entirely concur in what he said concerning the destructive character of purse seines. There can be no more destructive method used in prosecuting the fisheries than these purse seines. Until recently, they were altogether used by sailing vessels, but now they are used by steamers, and by steam launches; and in the calm weather, when the mackerel can be seen sporting on the face of the water, these launches can steam over and surround them in a very few minutes, and, by means of their purse seines, catch the lot. There are two reasons why purse seines are destructive. In the first place, they gather in all kinds of fish. When the fish show on the surface of the water, the fishermen are not able to tell what kind of fish they may be, but seine them indiscriminately, and any herring or small mackerel not marketable which are caught they destroy. It is said by those who are in the business that the quantity of small fish not marketable, caught in the course of the season even by one seiner, is so large that the amount is incredible. As the hon. member for King's has said, having exhausted the fisheries on their own coasts, the American Government found it necessary to enact a law prohibiting the catching of mackerel on their coast before the 1st of June. It is well known, from the habits of the mackerel, that they come down in the summer into the North Bay where they spawn and remain during the summer, and then go back south in the winter, only to return in the spring, reaching the furthest part of Cape Sable about the middle of May, and making their way to Cape Canso the latter part of May or first of June. The Americans, prohibited from fishing on their own coasts, have come with their steamboats and sailing vessels to catch the fish off our coasts, and the noise made by their vessels coming in frighten the fish from the coast altogether, and prevent our fishermen from making any catch. While the Canadian Parliament may have the power of prohibiting the use of purse seines on our coasts, there will be little use in their doing so, so long as the Americans come in, not only to the three-mile limit, but, as they frequently do, inside the territorial waters of Canada. This would be a fit subject for international correspondence. The Americans themselves are coming to the conclusion that this practice is injurious to the fisheries; and unless something is done in the matter our mackerel fisheries and other fisheries will become completely extinguished. The statistics show that year after year the catch is falling off. There may be some other cause, but I believe in a great measure that falling off is due to the use of these destructive purse seines. This is a serious matter, and I would suggest to the hon. the Minister to take such steps as will lead to action on the part of both Governments, to prevent this destructive method being continued.

Mr. TUPPER. The papers called for will, of course, be brought down. Last December I received some petitions from the district of Prince Edward Island, relating both to the subject of purse seines and gill nets. As the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn) has said, there is considerable difference of opinion with reference to the use of gill nets, but there is almost no difference of opinion as to the destructive effects of the purse seines. The injury caused the mackerel has been very clearly stated, but, as the hon. gentleman who preceded me has pointed out, there arises the very grave question as to how far it would be prudent or wise, looking to the interests of this particular fishery, to interfere in connection with the three-mile limit, or to legislate upon that question and restrict our fishermen in our territorial waters, while foreign fishermen can harass these fish and destroy them at will by the use of purse seines or any other method, up to that three-mile limit, or even within it when they get the chance. The question, therefore, has to be approached very carefully, and I may say that, before the petitions were received from Prince Edward Island, my attention was directed to the subject, and I have been since endeavoring to obtain more complete information with a view of dealing particularly with the question of purse seines. The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn), however, was slightly inaccurate, when, in referring to the trouble experienced by us on account of the United States fishermen, he said the American law prohibited American fishermen from using purse seines for mackerel up to the 1st June, on their own coasts. I may remind the hon. gentleman that the law of the United States is not restricted to the catch on their own coasts, but prohibits the importation of any mackerel caught in any waters by purse seines up to the 1st June. It is, of course, possible that, by international arrangement, the subject should be fully dealt with, and that the waters of both countries should be freed from this very destructive engine. The difficulty in dealing with this question is, of course, enhanced by our experience in the past, because it is well known that there have been years, before the purse seine was ever seen in our waters at all, when the mackerel fishing in districts fell off entirely. In 1868, I think, there was great distress among the fishermen all over our coasts, owing to the almost complete disappearance of the mackerel, and people assigned all sorts of reasons for their disappearance. Happily the mackerel appeared again in greater numbers than ever before. I merely throw this out to show what difficulties there are in dealing with this important matter. Even in Prince Edward Island, as my hon. friend knows, while in some districts the number caught was very small where there were gill nets used, still, in other districts, miles away from any gill nets, the same experience occurred. There is no doubt our American friends, fishing in the open waters, have themselves suffered considerably from the use made in recent years of these purse seines, because the catch of mackerel by the United States fishermen in these waters along our coasts outside the three-mile limit has very materially decreased. This year, I think the proportion of our catch to that which we usually have will show that the American fishermen have suffered worse than our own fishermen. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the subject will be considered in every aspect, and I hope, before the next Session of Parliament, to be able to make some definite announcement in regard to it.

Mr. MITCHELL. The subject of this motion is one of considerable importance to this country, and its importance is not confined to the motion itself. It has been stated by an hon. member that he differs with the mover in regard to the use of gill nets. As far as my experience goes, the only question as to the use of gill nets is in places which are not protected. Where the action of the open sea cannot affect gill nets, there can be no objection to their being used. It is only when, in consequence of the open sea, it is impossible to reach them in order to clean the nets and take out the fish, that an objection arises, because in that case the fish becomes putrid and of no use, except, perhaps, as food for other fishes. The hon. gentleman who presides over the Department of Marine and Fisheries has referred to the efforts which have been made to protect the fisheries on our coasts. The fact is, that no effort has been made in the proper quarter to protect the fisheries on our coasts. The great difficulty which has arisen in connection with these immense seines is that they come into waters which, by the Treaty of 1818, belong to Canada, and that for the last twenty years Great Britain has studiously avoided taking up and discussing this matter. When I heard the eulogy paid to the efforts made by this Government, on the part of the second of the Address, as to their endeavoring to protect the interests of Canada, I thought that, if he only knew as much about the subject as I do, he would see that the British Government have not done what they ought to do in order to protect the interests of Canada. On the contrary, they have studiously avoided dealing with the great headland question, in regard to which, if it were properly enforced and duly set before the American Government, and pressed, as it ought to have been pressed, not by war, but by diplomacy; if the interests of Canada had been kept to the front, we would not have these questions arising and we would not have the Americans coming into our waters within the three-mile limit, coming into our bays within our headlands, and sweeping all the fish out of our waters. In that case we would not have had the Americans breaking up the schools of fish which come to their natural resorts. Until the Government of this country presses upon the British Government the necessity of taking up and dealing with this headland question, and not only of dealing with the Atlantic fisheries, but also of dealing with the seal fisheries on the Pacific and the fisheries on the Newfoundland coast, they will find no attention paid to these matters by the British Government; because they quietly ignore the complaints which are made on such subjects from the colonies. They allow these matters to drift, and allow us to suffer these abuses; and the Government of this country has not pressed this matter upon the Government of the mother country as it ought. I think these platitudes which we hear every year upon this subject should cease: the statements that the Government are doing their best; that they are opening or continuing negotiations; that there is correspondence going on, and so forth. What is the result of the whole? Do we not know that our Commissioner at Washington deliberately ignored the enforcement of the headland treaty? Why, that was giving up the whole case; and it is useless to talk about protecting the interests of Canada when the British Government are not attempting to do anything in that direction.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I cannot altogether agree with the statements which have been made by two hon. gentlemen as to the gill nets. In my Province it has been found that the gill nets were almost as bad as the purse seines in regard to the catch of mackerel. In my county large meetings were held and strong resolutions were passed in regard to the use of gill nets. I have some of these resolutions here, which I will read. At a meeting at Monticello, held on the 6th December last, it was resolved:

"Whereas, it has been made apparent to this meeting that the method, so largely resorted to during the past summer, of catching mackerel in gill nets, has resulted in driving the fish from our coasts, and, as a consequence, the mackerel fishery has, in those places, proved a total failure."

Here is another resolution, adopted at another meeting at Fairfield:

"Whereas, it has been brought to the knowledge of our fishermen that the several methods now in use, namely, netting, seining, &c. (particularly the former), are a source of the greatest injury to the mackerel fishery along our coast; and whereas, in various localities where the catch of mackerel was formerly large, this year, owing to netting being carried on extensively, the catch was, comparatively speaking, very small by hook and line, while in places where hook and line were exclusively used, the catch was good."

The destruction of our fish, and particularly of the mackerel, by the use of gill nets and seines, is becoming very important; and I might refer the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the report of Lieut. Gordon, in which he says that the use of these gill nets and seines will ultimately destroy our mackerel fishery. He says that, after the mackerel pass a certain point, they are met by traps in every direction, and the result is that the mackerel fishery is being driven from our coasts. The Government is spending large amounts every year to protect our fisheries by cutters, but, if this netting and seining is to go on, there will be no use for the cutters. The Government also give bounties to encourage the fishermen to catch fish, but what will be the use of that if there are no fish to catch? This question is of the greater importance, because, a few years ago, the Government received $5,000,000 from the Americans for the use of these fisheries. The fact is that the fish will be encouraged to come only where hook and line are used, on account of the quantities of bait thrown into the waters from boats using hook and line, thus drawing the fish towards the shore inside the three-mile limit. It affords a large employment to our men and boys, especially in Prince Edward Island, and the result is that our fisheries are worth from $70,000 to $100,000 a year if preserved. It is of vast importance that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should take this matter into his consideration. I am very glad to see that he considers it such an important matter, and I hope that all parties and all sections of the country will take an interest in it and endeavor, if possible, to protect our fisheries.

ANNAPOLIS POST OFFICE.

Mr. WELDON (St. John) moved for:

Return of a copy of the contract and specification for the erection of the Post Office and Custom House building at Annapolis, Nova Scotia; the several tenders and amounts thereof; also, any order or orders altering the quality and nature of the stone used in the construction.

He said: In moving this motion, I wish to call the attention of the House to some facts in connection with the giving of the contract. The contract was awarded to Rhodes, Curry & Co., of Amherst, Nova Scotia, at a price which was something like $750 lower than the next higher tender. After their tender was accepted and the contract awarded to them, I am informed that an alteration was made and that brown freestone was substituted in the place of the granite, which change makes considerable difference in the amount of the contract. Now, it seems to me that this is not a fair course towards the other parties who tendered. I may say that, as far as we know in the Maritime Provinces, this firm of Rhodes, Curry & Co. seems to be rather a favored firm. Now, it seems to me, when the Government made specifications upon which parties tendered, these specifications should be adhered to. I am informed that the change in the quality of the stone mentioned in the specification and the stone actually used, would make a difference something like $1,250. It seems to me this gives the successful firm an unfair advantage over the other parties tendering who, had they been aware that any such change was to be made, would have made their tender lower than that of the firm who obtained the contract.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is no objection to granting this motion. But, I must say that the hon. gentleman is mistaken about the alteration of the quality and the nature of the stone used in the construction. The tenders were eight in number, as follows:—

Rhodes, Curry & Co., Amherst, N. S.	$12,497, lowest tender.
C. B. Burton, Annapolis.	13,250
J. Burns, Ottawa.	14,623
McDonald, Aylmer, Que.	14,750
F. Toms, Ottawa.	14,886
J. Sykes, Yarmouth.	15,200, rec'd 2 dys. late
J. McIntosh, Stellarton.	16,300
T. Connor & R. McDonald, Moncton.	16,737

The specification required, "approved grey granite from Lawrencetown, or other approved granite of equal quality," for the whole of external work and dressings above ground line. The contractors submitted a sample of red sandstone from North Port, United States, which was found every way equal in quality and durability and more pleasing in color, better adapted for use in conjunction with red brick, and adding to the effect of the building when completed, as the greater portion of the exposed surfaces is to be quarry faced, viz.: without dressing. Mr. Fuller says: "This stone, from its pleasing color and durability, must be considered one of the finest stones on this continent." The change will not cause additional expenditure. That stone was accepted on the statement of the chief engineer that the building would appear better with that stone than with the other.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). No reduction was made in the contract price.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, because the stone was as good as the other—probably better.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I am told that it is much more easily quarried and much more easily worked than the granite.

Motion agreed to.

BANK CHARTERS.

Mr. EDGAR moved for :

Copies of the original charters of the Bank of British North America and of the Bank of British Columbia, and of all amendments thereto.

He said : I am aware that the House will have an opportunity during the present Session to consider the whole banking system of the country, and I do not propose to introduce a discussion on that subject now. What I desire is to obtain some information, which I hope will be brought down by the Government at an early day, to assist the members of the House in considering that very important legislation when it comes down. It is necessary for me to ask for copies of the charters of the Bank of British North America and of the Bank of British Columbia, for two reasons : one is, that these charters are not accessible to members of the House at the present time, they are not contained in any Canadian Act of Parliament ; they are not contained in any Imperial Act of Parliament ; they are simply letters patent, charters issued in England to these commercial associations. Another reason is that the present Bank Act of Canada, by several of its clauses, makes very exceptional legislation in favor of these banks ; and it is important for us, therefore, to see the charters of these banks which can justify the exceptional legislation that exists to-day, in case it should be proposed to continue that exceptional legislation in the Bank Bill which the Government are going to lay before the House this Session. Section 87 of the present Banking Act which refers to the Bank of British North America, specifies a number of the antecedent sections of the Act which apply to the Bank of British North America, and says that the provisions contained in the other sections of this Act shall not apply to it. Now, when we come to look at the sections of the Bank Act which by these provisions are said not to apply to the Bank of British North America, we find that a great many of the most important clauses of that Act are among them. Now, I admit that some of the exceptions made by that section are justified by either the original or the amended charters of the Bank of British North America containing clauses which, more or less, supply the place of the clauses in our own Bank Act, which are not made to apply to the Bank of British North America. But I can point out to the House several important clauses which are not applied to the British bank, and which are not contained, or anything like them, in the charters of that bank. For instance, section 4 of our Canadian Banking Act says that all the charters of the Canadian banks enumerated in the schedule shall expire in 1891. That does not apply to the British North America Bank, and an amendment to the original Act extends the time to 1st

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

June, 1894. That is an important provision. Then the question of the circulation of our banks is one which is certain to engage the attention of the House very largely during the Session. We know that, under our own Act, there is a limit to the circulation of our Canadian banks—that by section 40 the circulation is limited to the amount of the unimpaired paid-up capital of those banks. That section also does not apply to the Bank of British North America, and there is no provision in their charter of a similar character. Probably the most important of the whole provisions from which that bank is exempted from application, is the clause relating to the double liability of shareholders. Section 70 of our Banking Act provides for all persons dealing with the bank and making deposits there, or accepting their notes—a very valuable safeguard in the shape of the double liability of the shareholders. I think it will be news for members of this House, when I tell them that the clause respecting double liability of shareholders does not apply to the Bank of British North America, which receives the money of the Canadian people in the shape of deposits and circulation to the extent of about $9,000,000. There, is moreover, no provision in their charter, either original or amended, so far as I have been able to ascertain, providing for anything more than the ordinary liability of shareholders of a joint stock company to pay up for once the amount of stock subscribed. I do not say any harm has occurred to the country ; I do not say that the Bank of British North America is not one of very high standing and very conservative administration, but still I do not see any reason why an exception should be made in its favor. There is another important exception. We know, and we have seen the importance of it. There is a provision in our law which says that, in the case of the insolvency of a bank, any shareholder who may have transferred his shares within one month of suspension shall still be liable upon those shares for a double liability. That does not apply to the Bank of British North America, and, in case of the bank's insolvency, there is no law that would enable the creditors of the bank to reach the shareholders if they transferred their shares twenty-four hours before suspension. What reason is there for making an exception in favor of that bank ? It is not, surely, because it is a bank having its head office in London, England, and because the bulk of its shareholders are not Canadians. I know that a good many of the shares are held in Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and in the western part of Canada, but the shareholders are perfectly willing to send their proxies over to London to be used to elect a board there. I do not think that furnishes any special reason why an exception should be made in its favor. I do not say that Canada will not be glad to receive British capital to assist her banking institutions, but I think, when British capital comes in here, it should be placed on the same footing as our own Canadian capital which is used in the banking business of the country. While it is true that some British capital is sent out here to benefit us, it must be remembered that out of the $13,000,000 of capital used in the business of the Bank of British North America, only £1,000,000 sterling is the share capital, the rest of it consisting of deposits and circulation, the money of the people of Canada. It is important there should be uniformity in our banking system, and it will be advantageous to ascertain how far these bank charters prevent that uniformity, and how far they agree with our general law

Motion agreed to.

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE ACT.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin) moved :

That, in the opinion of this House, the Electoral Franchise Act ought to be repealed, and that it is preferable to revert to the plan of utilising for the elections of this House the Provincial franchises and voters' lists.

He said : I move this resolution with the object of ascertaining whether hon. gentlemen opposite, as well as hon. members on this side of the House, after having had the experience of that Act since 1885, have not come to the conclusion that it would be in the interests of all parties concerned that we should revert to the old system of utilising the various Provincial lists. It appears to me that if I could, by any possibility, approach the supporters of the Government, and by any means ascertain their views and feelings ; if I could induce them for the moment to withdraw their attachment and fidelity to their party, and to express their un-biassed opinion as to the utility of keeping the present voters' lists, as prepared by the Dominion, still upon the Statute-book, I would find almost an unanimous voice on that side of the House. saying that they thought it was useless to continue any longer the voters' list in its present form. I am perfectly aware that we can hardly expect hon. gentlemen on that side of the House, led by the First Minister, to easily forsake this Act. The right hon. the Prime Minister is very tenacious of his Franchise Act, and I do not blame him for it, because he had a hard struggle to build up the infant franchise to its present condition. It was a difficult and an arduous task for him, and no doubt the labor he bestowed on it has very much endeared the Franchise Act to the right hon. gentleman. But, Sir, after we have had an opportunity of proving the inutility of the measure, I think that the members of this House are to-day better prepared than they were at the time the Act was placed on the Statute-book to form an opinion as to its usefulness. I am well aware, from my own experience—and I think every hon. gentleman in the House will agree with me—that this Act is a cumbersome Act. If you examine the complicated machinery that is necessary to enable a person to be placed on the voters' list, under the Dominion Franchise Act, you will find that it is very cumbersome and almost unworkable. I maintain that where an Act of that description has been found, after experience, not to work smoothly or evenly, and not to be in the interests of the people of the country, the Act should be amended or repealed, and relief granted to those who require to go before the court to get their names placed upon the list. Not only is this Act cumbersome and inconvenient, but I think that every individual member of this House will agree with me that it is an extremely expensive Act, and that the expense connected with the carrying out of the machinery essential to the revision under that Act is so enormous that, at the present day, we ought to hesitate to longer continue the Act in force. When the Bill first came before the House for discussion we were apprehensive lest our opponents were going to get a great advantage over us through its operation, and we naturally feared that the revising barrister system and the other machinery in connection with the Act would work much more favorably towards members supporting the Government than it would towards us. But I will guarantee that if I ask any member in this House who has taken an interest in the preparation of the voters' lists in his constituency, that he will at once admit that the Act is cumbersome, troublesome and expensive. Although the Act is to us, on this side of the House, troublesome, irksome, a great annoyance and a great expense, it is almost equally so to gentlemen on the other side. They know full well that if they are not alert in seeing that every member of their party is placed upon the voters' lists that the candidate upon the opposite side may get an advantage over them in having a larger number of his friends placed on the list, and so carry the election. Therefore, members on the Government side are called upon to exercise the same amount of vigilance, industry and activity in the preparation of the voters' lists as the opponents of the Government. I call the attention of the House to the fact that up to the present time we have had only one full revision and one partial revision. Does anyone pretend that that failure to have revision is on account of the cost? Do you suppose the hon. the First Minister or the Government of the day were influenced to hold back the revision on account of the great cost it would be to the country? When we remember the extravagant course of the Government in the past, I am not inclined to think that the question of cost would interfere with the action of the Government. No, Sir ; it was not the question of expense, but it was the power behind the Government which prevented the revision from taking place. The Government supporters have gone to them and told them distinctly that on account of the great inconvenience, the great annoyance, and the great expense connected with the revision of the voters' lists, that it was neither prudent nor desirable, in the interests of the supporters of the Government, that a revision should have been made. I do say that it is an outrage upon the electorate, and that it is unjust and unfair that the people of the country should be deprived of their votes because of neglect to revise the lists. It ought to be the pride and the boast of the Legislature that every man who is entitled to be placed on the voters' lists should have an opportunity each and every year of exercising his franchise. I say it is wrong, and I say it is unjust and unfair that a man in every way qualified to vote for a representative to the Parliament of Canada should, through no fault of his own, but only because the supporters of the Government advise that the lists should not be revised, be deprived of his right to vote. It is unjust to the people that if there should be an accidental election in any one of the constituencies, an elector would not have the opportunity of recording his vote. We have been told that the First Minister was desirous of extending the franchise and of making it more liberal than it was before. Such cannot be the case, because we find that there are thousands of electors entitled to have their names placed on the voters' lists who were deprived of the privilege of voting when an election took place in their county. Therefore, I say that this of itself is a reason why we ought to resort to some other means whereby we can prevent this injustice being done to a large portion of the people of the country. I have referred you to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that we had only one complete revision and one partial revision up to the present time. Let us consider what the revision has cost, and then let us remember what the cost would be to revise and utilise the Provincial lists in lieu of this Dominion list. Last February a return was brought down to the House, in response to a motion, and I find in that return the following amounts for the revision of 1886 :—

Amount paid for printing.....	$174,340 68
for revising officers' salaries.....	93,767 94
Amount paid to clerks and bailiffs.....	79,494 93
Other expenses.....	67,318 21
Claims still unsettled.....	5,264 49
Making a total of.....	$420,186 25

Which the revision cost up to that date. Now, Sir, if you were in the House in 1885, you will remember that it was estimated on this side that the preparation and revision of these voters' lists would cost from a quarter to half a million dollars; but hon. gentlemen opposite declared that no such sum, and nothing approaching it, would be required for that purpose. I have no doubt that, had the supporters of the Government imagined that the cost would swell up to half a million dollars, they would have withheld their assent to the passage of such an Act. Now, what has been the cost of the partial revision which has been made up to the present time? On looking at the returns brought down, I find that we have paid, up to February, 1889, the following amounts :

Type and material.....	$63,849 80
Composition and presswork.....	15,511 04
Paper.....	292 11
Rent and steam power.....	1,413 00
Proof-reading.....	666 00
Ink.....	97 50
Revising copy for printers.....	885 50
Stationery.....	6 29
Erection of shed.....	601 80

Making a total of..... $86,313 04

Then, you will remember that during last Session the Government took a vote of $260,000 to defray the expenses of a revision of the Franchise Act. Whether they have used all that money or not, it is difficult to say, but I suppose they have, and a much larger amount. Therefore, so far as we have returns, the second revision has thus far cost $346,513.04. If you add this to the cost of the original revision, you will find that for one complete revision and for one partial revision nearly $800,000 has been spent, and no doubt before the second revision is completed the cost will reach a full million dollars for only two revisions since 1885. Now, you will agree with me, Sir, that it is unfair to the electors of this country, that there should be only one revision every three or four years. A revision according to the Act means an annual revision, so that every person in a constituency who has a right will have his name placed on the voters' list; if that is not done, an injustice is done to him, just as much as if he were refused the right to vote. Only those who have committed some criminal act are supposed to be deprived of their votes, and yet those whose names are not on the voters' lists are treated just as if they had committed some crime.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin).

Now, the general tendency of public opinion, not only in this country, but in the United States and in Great Britain, is towards a more liberal and more extended franchise; the general feeling is that a manhood franchise ought to prevail; we have heard of leading statesmen of England declaring openly in their public speeches in favor of the principle of one-man-one-vote. If we examine the franchises existing in the various Provinces of the Dominion, we shall find that manhood suffrage, or something very near to it, prevails in nearly every one of them. In Prince Edward Island, for instance, every man above the age of 21 years has a right to vote, even under our Dominion law; and the same is the case in British Columbia. In Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, very liberal franchises exist; and in Ontario we have manhood suffrage. There is only one Province in the Dominion in which the Provincial franchise is not, perhaps, more liberal than that of the Dominion—that is, the Province of Quebec; yet, I am told by those who ought to know, that the franchise of that Province is as liberal, or more liberal than the Dominion franchise. Now, hon. gentlemen opposite contended, when we were discussing this subject in previous Sessions, that it would not do to repeal the Franchise Act, because, if we did so, we should be depriving a number of people of votes who had votes under the Dominion franchise and not under those of the Provinces. If the local franchises have become far more liberal than that of the Dominion, that argument has been removed, and hon. gentlemen have no right to urge it any further; and I contend that their own argument can be used against them, for they must admit that, by using the local lists, we should be giving the right to vote to a large number of people than now possess that privilege under the Dominion Act. I am inclined to think that the Government themselves desire to have this Act repealed. During the discussion last Session on the amendments to the Franchise Act, the Government conveyed the impression that at some future Session, before another election took place, they would reconsider the whole matter and perhaps resort to some other franchise than the one now in force. Lest it might be contended that, in saying this, I am misrepresenting the members of the Government, I will read what the right hon. the First Minister, on that occasion, said to the House, and I have no doubt that any statement made by him will be accepted as good authority by every hon. gentleman opposite. I do not think I would go quite so far, but I must say that I understood him then to hold out to us inducements that if we would only refrain from opposing the amendments then being made, the whole subject would at a future Session be reconsidered. In reply to my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) the right hon. the First Minister said :

“The hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) and the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Colter) took that line, and they both, I have no doubt, would agree with my hon. friend, Mr. Mills, to have either universal suffrage, or manhood suffrage, or the various suffrages as they exist in the different Provinces, adopted, as giving our electorate for the Dominion Parliament; that is their opinion, and it has been their opinion. But I do not think that question comes up this Session, and at this period of the Session, in connection with this measure of practical politics, I do not think there is any chance of our immediately going back to seek a renewal of confidence from our constituents.”

You will remember this was very shortly after the debate on the Jesuit question, when the Government felt very confident, because they had obtained a large vote on this side, as well as on their own side.

"I think, especially after the strong vote of confidence given by the hon. gentlemen opposite to the present Government; that we can well consider that we are going to last for a year or two.

"Mr. MITCHELL. You get some of that vote under protest, you know.

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; but we got the vote."

As a general rule, that is all he cares about.

"Mr. MITCHELL. Oh, yes; you got the vote.

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We got the vote anyhow, and the protest will stand for what it is worth. In the meantime, I hope that we will not be drawn into a discussion of that great and important question, which, I think, when it is brought up on its own merits, for the purpose of altering our constitution and our parliamentary representation, shall receive full consideration. I know the strong feeling that the hon. gentlemen opposite entertain on that point, and I know that they will take care that before there is an appeal to the people that that question will be brought up. Meanwhile, this is a simple proposition to amend the law as it is, and I will invite the consideration of hon. gentlemen opposite to this Bill as it stands, and as a Bill simply amending the law as it is. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) says that he will, this Session, and before this measure gets through the House, bring up the entire question. If he thinks it right to do so, or if any other hon. member thinks it right, we will have to discuss the general principle. I am not quite sure that the hon. gentleman will take my advice that it would just be as well to postpone that for another Session—"

What did the hon. gentleman mean if he did not mean to convey the impression that it would be better to let the matter rest then, and that this Session he would take into consideration the question whether we ought to repeal the present franchise or not.

"—and to discuss then, on its merits, the question: What ought to be the representation of the people of Canada in the Dominion Parliament of Canada? In the meanwhile, I would ask that we should not be induced to enter upon that large subject, which can produce no practical result this Session, but that we will discuss this Bill on its merits, as a Bill merely amending, and amending in no important principle, the Franchise Act as it now stands."

You thus see, Sir, that the right hon. the First Minister was in favor of our reconsidering the question of the electoral franchise, and deciding whether we should repeal the present franchise or extend it to manhood suffrage. I do not wish to delay the House upon this question. I will confine myself to stating that if our hon. friends opposite will only consider the real interests of the country, and what the country really desires, they will agree with me that the time has arrived to make the change of utilising the local lists in lieu of the Dominion lists. If you will consider, Sir, how these local lists are prepared, you cannot fail to admit that they are made up with much care and efficiency. It may be said: Oh, but you have political feeling and partisanship in the election of your county councils, in the appointment of your assessors and clerks, and in your courts of revision, and, therefore, there may be partisan lists prepared. I would reply that, if you will go from one end of the Dominion to the other, if you will take every constituency in the Province of Ontario and in the other Provinces, you will find that the municipal councillors are chosen from both parties; you will find that the assessors and the clerks are as free from partiality as any revising barrister you could possibly appoint. I may add, that in Ontario the revision of the lists is made before the county judge, who is appointed by the Dominion Government, and who, therefore, is not at all likely to be a Reformer. If reports be true, an appointment to the position of county judge has been made very recently in my constituency. No doubt the gentleman appointed will revise the local voters' lists, and it is not to be expected that, in so doing, he will act partially in my interest. I do not say that I will not have every confidence in him, for I have every confidence in our local judges; and it is just as much in the interest of hon. gentlemen opposite as it is in the interest of hon. gentlemen on this side, that there should be no Dominion lists, as their interest will be served just as well as ours by utilising the local lists. If we take all matters into consideration, if we consider the expense to which the country has been placed on account of these lists, if we consider the interests involved, we must admit it is the bounden duty of this House to pass a resolution repealing the Dominion and authorising the use of the local lists, and, by so doing, we will save to the country at least half a million dollars on every occasion when it is necessary to have a revision. Feeling strongly on this subject, and feeling satisfied that, perhaps, anything I might be able to say might not to any extent influence hon. gentlemen on the other side, I shall conclude. But, having attempted to show them that it is as much in their interest as it is in ours, and in the interest of the Dominion at large, to repeal the present Franchise Act, and to utilise the local Acts, and that no injury can be done to any individual in the Dominion by taking that course, I appeal to them strongly to adopt it, and I think they must feel that the time has come to revert to the system which prevailed for seventeen or eighteen years, from which no grievance has ever arisen, no injury has ever been complained of, no abuse has been heard, and no wrongs have been inflicted on the people. Under those circumstances, I claim that, according to the British system, when there are no wrongs to redress, no measure of redress should have been brought forward, and there was no reason for introducing that Act in the first place, but there is a great reason for repealing it at the present moment.

Mr. LAURIER. It is evident that, upon this occasion, as five years ago, hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are not disposed to discuss this question, or the principle involved in the Act, any more than they were then disposed to discuss the principle involved in the Bill. Those who were present here five years ago can quite well remember that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House were always ready to vote for the Franchise Bill, but were never ready to give a reason for their vote. They could always screw up their courage to the point of giving a bad vote, but they could not screw up their courage to the point of giving a bad reason; and it is evident that this year they have not changed their minds on that subject. It is very plainly evident that the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) will not carry, and that the force of numbers will have success, but not the force of reason. Everyone who was here five years ago will remember that a long struggle took place to free the country from the iniquitous Franchise

Bill, which afterwards became the iniquitous Franchise Act. We had then every reason to believe that it was iniquitous in its conception, and would prove obnoxious in its practice, and it cannot be doubted that the experience we have since had has confirmed, and more than confirmed, these views. It is, I am certain, an almost unanimous consensus of opinion that that Act has been an unmitigated evil. It is vicious in its conception; it interferes with the federal principle of our constitution, it removes from the Provinces a power which properly belongs to them; it interferes with and takes away from the people the system which previously existed of having the lists prepared by the people themselves; it has proved expensive in its operation, and now we find that not a word can be spoken in commendation of that Act. I do not know what the experience of others may be, but I know what my own experience has been, and I believe it has been the same as that of others, and I say that I have never heard one word of commendation spoken in favor of the Franchise Act. There is not a redeeming feature in any of its numerous clauses, but the great objection to me is chiefly that it is an interference with the federative principle upon which our constitution rests. I know very well that on the other side of the House that may not be considered a very strong objection to the Act. The opinion is held by many on that side that the federal principle is the weak point of the union of the Provinces; but I entirely dissent from that view. It may be said that the federal principle was adopted at the time on account of the peculiar position of the Province of Quebec, because we had not a homogeneous race; but I say that the best and the only way to unite under a free Government, even a homogeneous race, is under the federal principle, especially if the people are scattered over a large territory. Take, for instance, the people of the United States. It is manifest, or ought to be manifest to everyone, that a variety of climatic conditions, of geographical situations, of natural productions and of industrial pursuits, must create a difference in regard to the wants, the desires, the pursuits, and the conditions of the people. Climatic conditions alone will modify the features of the same population. In the United States, the man from the North, the man from the South, the man from the West, and the man from the East, though exhibiting all the common characteristics of the same race, still exhibit marked differences of character and of manners. Is it not manifest that these different classes of people will have different wants, different tastes and different requirements, and will not be always in accord with the people of the rest of the country? Take, for instance, Texas and Maine, Louisiana and Massachusetts, Illinois and Mississippi, they must have different requirements arising from their different pursuits and their different wants. The question is, how are these wants best to be ministered to? Is it to be by a single Parliament or by local bodies? Would it be contended that these different interests can be served by a single Parliament as efficaciously as they are served by Local Legislatures? Is it not manifest that if there were in the United States only one legislative body, only one executive body, the local interests of the different sections would suffer materially, and they could not enjoy the same prosperity and the same contentment that they now enjoy? What is true of the United States is exactly true of our own country. We are similarly situated, and it must be obvious to every man that the mountainous region of British Columbia, for instance, must have special wants and requirements which will not be the wants and requirements of the prairie regions, and of the Eastern Provinces, and vice versa. Under such conditions, I ask, can we have a better system than the one we possess, where local wants are controlled by local bodies, the wants which are common to all being looked after by a Parliament representing all sections of the country? Sir, this principle seems to be so very obvious that at this age there can be but one opinion that the best system that has yet been devised for the government of a large country is, after all, the federal system; and it is this system which we have in view every time and on every occasion that questions come up in this House for a solution. Now, the charge I make against the Franchise Act is that it is conceived in entire antagonism to the federal system of our constitution. It is not so glaring a violation of the constitution as the disallowance of Acts of Local Legislatures, which constituted so shameful an abuse in the past; but though the invasion is not so glaring, it is just as insidious, it is just as dangerous. Now, I contend that the regulation of the franchise is, above all, a matter of local legislation, local in its provisions, in its nature, and it should be determined by the local legislative bodies. I believe my statement is proved to be correct by our own history upon this question. What has been our history upon this question? During the twenty-two years that Confederation has lasted, we have had seventeen years of local franchise and five years of a Dominion franchise. For the first seventeen years of Confederation the franchise was regulated by the Local Legislatures, and not one word of complaint was ever heard. I insist especially upon this, that not one word was ever heard against the working of the Provincial franchise. It is true that during those seventeen years the hon. the Prime Minister, who is well known to be in favor of a legislative union, at least in principle if not in practice, endeavored upon two or three or four different occasions to introduce his pet scheme of a universal franchise for the Dominion. He endeavored to carry it; he introduced such legislation two or three times in succession, but the antipathy felt for such legislation by his followers was so great, that upon each occasion he was compelled to abandon his measure after having introduced it. In 1885 he introduced it once more, and then, screwing up his courage, and that of his followers behind him, who were then no more in favor of it than before, he rammed it down their throats against their will, and we remember that they had to swallow it with many painful contortions; but swallow it they did, though the Act was no more popular on that side than it was on this side of the House. Well, we have had five years of the present Act, and what has been the result? What has been the consensus of opinion throughout the country? Sir, we have never heard one word, so far, in favor of the Act. I have often heard it attacked, but I never heard it defended heartily yet. Dissatisfaction has been the result of the Act, such as we have it now. Then, I say again, that the Act itself proves conclusively that the franchise is a matter for local legislation. Take the very opening chapter of the Act, the regulation of the franchise. One of the bases of the franchise is real property, but the same rule concerning real property does not apply to all men. You have different rules applying to different kinds of real property; one rule for property in cities, one rule for property in towns, and another rule for property in the rural parts of the country. If a man is possessed of a piece of land worth $300 in a city, he can be an elector; if his piece of land is worth only $200 he cannot be an elector, but if his piece of land happens to be in a town, then he can be an elector. If a man is possessed of real property worth $150 in a city or town he cannot be an elector; but if it be in the rural parts, he can be an elector. What is the reason of all this? The reason is, that real estate has not everywhere the same value. It varies in price in different localities. Now, if it varies in price within the limits of one Province a fortiori it must vary still more in different Provinces. If, therefore, it is obvious, even from the very first clause of the Act, that real estate will vary in price, this basis of the franchise must also vary in different parts of the country. In this view of the case, who is the best judge to determine what kind of real estate should command a vote? Clearly, the Provincial Legislatures. If that question is to be settled by the Dominion Parliament or by Local Legislatures, I ask, in the name of common sense, which is the most competent body to settle it? Is it not the Local Legislature of the Province where the real estate is situated? So, Mr. Speaker, we find in the very first clause of the Bill the evidence that the best method of regulating the franchise is to leave it to the Local Legislatures. Moreover, the regulation of the franchise is so much a provincial, a local matter, that in the United States—which are situated very much as our Provinces—I understand that there are scarcely any two States which have the same franchise. In one State it is manhood suffrage, pure and simple; in another State it is manhood suffrage, coupled with some restrictions; in another State the basis is the payment of taxes, in another the basis is real property. When we find such various provisions where there might be uniformity, it is manifest that the best method, after all, is to leave each state to determine what, in its opinion, should constitute the qualification of its electors. As I said, we are similarly situated, and a rule which applies in the United States ought also to apply here. But there are considerations of a higher moment—the regulation of the franchise, above all things, and the question of education. Very few civilised States have the same qualification. In France, in England, in the United States, in Germany, in Spain, and in Italy, I am sure that you cannot find the same basis of franchise. The tendency at this moment is, as has been stated by my hon. friend who introduced this resolution, in favor of extending the franchise in the direction of complete manhood suffrage. Well, in the Province to which I belong, there has always been a feeling of suspicion against universal manhood suffrage. It may be a prejudice; I think it is founded on reason. I claim now, and I have always claimed, to be a Liberal of the Liberals, but I say here that I would not be disposed to favor manhood suffrage. It may be perhaps a prejudice of my race, but still, prejudice or not, I am prepared to defend my opinion. Though we have long been separated from France, yet we have always followed closely the history of our ancestors. Up to 1848 the franchise of France was very limited; in fact, out of a population of 30,000,000, the number of voters under the régime of Louis Phillippe was under 200,000. After the revolution, the first act of the Republic was to proclaim manhood suffrage, and to jump at once from 200,000 electors to 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 electors. The result has not shown that the example is one which should commend itself to the civilised world, because the very first act that was done by manhood suffrage was to vote away the liberties of France into the hands of an adventurer, and again and again France, being called upon to pronounce an opinion upon the question, pronounced in favor of the same adventurer. Having these examples before us, we are not disposed, in the Province to which I belong, to adopt at once manhood suffrage. It may be, if we follow the example of the rest of the Continent and the civilised world, that we may come to it; but at this moment, I am sure, the great majority of the race to which I belong are not in favor of such a measure. But, at the same time, I hasten to say this: if we do not want manhood suffrage for ourselves, we do not wish to deprive any other Province of manhood suffrage, if it favors it. If Ontario wants it, let her have it—and she has it to-day, I understand. If New Brunswick wants it, let her have it; let all the Provinces that want universal suffrage have it, but do not let us impose it upon those who do not want it. What will be the result if we keep the present Act on the Statute-book? The result must be that you must deprive Provinces of manhood suffrage when they want it, and impose it upon some which do not want it. Cannot there be a solution between these two extremes? Yes, there is a solution. And what is it? The solution is, to stand by the true principle on which Confederation rests, to stand loyally to the federative principle, and leave every Province to determine that vexed question. If you allow every Province to determine for itself the question of the franchise, there cannot be any discontent anywhere and every person will be satisfied with it. If you pass from the principle of the Act to its details, you will find it is just as bad in its disposition as in its conception. Why, it is so bad that the Government themselves are ashamed of their own progeny, they dare not exhibit it to the people in all its hideousness. They exhibit it only when they are compelled to do so by force of circumstances. One of the provisions of the Act is that there should be a revision every year. This is the law of the land, introduced by hon. gentlemen opposite, introduced by hon. members on the Treasury benches, voted by their followers, carried against the determined opposition of this side of the House. Has there been a revision every year? No; there have been only two revisions in five years. Hon. gentlemen opposite were ashamed to go before the people and submit them to such an enormous expense as is necessary. That is the reason of their action. If not, what is the reason? If it was necessary, as it was enacted, that there should be a revision every year, why did we not have it? If it were not necessary, why should this House have enacted that a revision be made yearly? The reason is the one I have given: that the expenditure is so enormous to the country, to hon. members and to candidates, that the Government dare not impose such expense on their followers and on the country every year. These are some of the reasons why we ask that this Act, which the Government dare not put into execution, shall no longer be retained on the Statute-book. I have nothing more to say on the subject. The question of expense is one to which hon. members should give serious consideration. When, in 1885, we, on this side of the House, contended that the expenditure under the Act would reach half a million dollars, the notion was ridiculed by hon. gentlemen opposite. That was the only answer they could give at that time to our objection, but when the Government had to stand before the glaring fact that our argument and our predictions were absolutely true, they adopted the other method, of not applying the Act at all. Under such circumstances, we contend that, if the Act is vicious in conception, expensive in its operation, there is no reason why it should be retained on the Statute-book, and it should be got rid of at once.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have renewed, or tried to renew, the debate which occupied twelve or fourteen days of a previous Session.

Mr. LAURIER. Seven weeks.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was debated about twelve days consecutively. I do not know for how many days they have commenced the debate now, but they appear surprised that we do not follow suit in discussing the question. We are not disposed to continue that debate, which was closed by the vote of Parliament after due and long consideration, after which the measure was passed through this House and through the other House, and was sanctioned and became the law of the land. The Act has been put into force. We have seen the working of the statute, and hon. gentlemen opposite now wish the Act to be repealed, on account of the large expenditure incurred under its provisions. It was, however, well understood when the Bill was under consideration, that it would entail a large expenditure. It involved the introduction of a new system and required a number of officials to establish it. The Act has been put into force, the officials have done their duty, and we have had lists prepared and elections held under those lists. I do not think we on this side of the House, at all events, have cause to complain of the result of the working of the Act. I do not think hon. gentlemen opposite either should complain, for they favorably compare with those opposed to us previous to the passage of the Act, and therefore, I think the hon. leader of the Opposition should not complain that the Act which, according to his statement, was one which was vicious in its conception. Those are strong words, and the hon. gentleman must allow us to differ with him in regard to the working of the statute. We think it works well. It may have been expensive in the beginning. We will try to make it less expensive, and no doubt, now that the machinery or the machine is in operation, the expense of the revision will not be so great as hon. gentlemen opposite predicted and expected. The leader of the Opposition stated that the franchise should not be in the hands of the Federal Parliament, that we should divest ourselves of that power and leave it entirely in the hands of the Local Legislatures. And why? It is the basis of our existence here as a Parliament, and it is the basis of our existence as members of Parliament. It is the Act by which we receive the right to come and to take our seats here as representatives of the people; and are we not to have anything to do with the basis of that franchise, or must it be left, as hon. gentlemen opposite say, entirely to the Local Legislatures? Well, we have discussed that long ago. We discussed it when this Act was under consideration as a Bill before Parliament, and we differed entirely from hon. gentlemen opposite on that head. I do not think that on our side of the House we have yet changed our opinion. We believe that the determination of the Dominion federal franchise should be in the hands of this Parliament, and we believe that this Parliament should determine who has the right to vote and who should not vote. We have made the franchise very wide; as wide as I think the leader of the Opposition would have wished it to be, and I was glad to hear him say just now that he was not in favor of universal suffrage. I have never believed in that either. I think that those who vote should have some interest in the country, and that the first adventurer who may come to the country should not have a vote to determine whether the hon. gentleman or myself should sit in this Parliament. Those who determine who should sit here as their representatives must be persons who have an interest in the country and who can be governed by this Parliament. Therefore we think and we believe that the regulation of that franchise should be in our own hands. The hon. leader of the Opposition speaks of the local franchises of certain Provinces, and he says that these are as liberal as they should be, and are as liberal as our own franchises. Well, when the hon. gentleman was so speaking, I thought of the exceptions which have been made in certain Provinces, by which large classes of people who have a great stake in the country—people who own large properties in this country, and are interested in the welfare of the country, have been disfranchised. In the Province of Quebec all the officers of the Federal Government have been declared to have no vote, and even a workman who might be employed by the Intercolonial Railway for one day was disfranchised by the Local Parliament. Why should he be deprived of his vote more than any local officer of that Local Government? I do not see the reason. He is not less interested in the welfare of the Province of Quebec than the messenger of one of the Ministers there, or the man employed by the local board of works for a day's work. Therefore, I do not see, Mr. Speaker, how the hon. gentleman can say that that franchise is preferable to ours, and I speak of the Province of Quebec especially, because I know personally the facts of the case in that Province. I believe an attempt was made, in the first instance, by the Quebec Government to disfranchise the members of this House, and especially the Ministers of the Crown. If that had gone into effect we would have had no resource left but to resign our portfolios, vote for our candidate, and try our luck at getting re-elected. But the hon. the leader of the Opposition goes further than this. He makes a comparison between our constitution and the constitution of the United States of America, and says that, of course, the constitution of the United States is better than this constitution. Well, I wish him to excuse me if I do not agree with him in that. The constitution of the United States, he says, is a federal one, but ours also is a federal one. He says that in the United States they have only one Legislature; but how do they look after the wants of the different States? They have their Local Legislatures in the United States, and their local wants are attended to by those local bodies. But that is no reason to suppose that here, under our constitution, we have not also our local bodies to look after the local wants of the Provinces. We have them as well as they have them in the United States, the only difference being that their local bodies are for different States while our local bodies are for Provinces. There is a difference in name, and that is all. If the hon. gentleman had continued his comparison between the two constitutions, and had asked whether the constitution of the United States or the constitution of Canada was the more democratic and the more popular one, he would have been obliged to admit that here the federal executive is directly responsible to the representatives of the people, and that the representatives of the people may at any time by their vote change the Government of the country. It is not so in the United States, as the hon. gentleman knows. The Ministers there are not responsible to the people. They are responsible to the President of the United States, and so long as that President holds office and does not violate the constitution of the country, he is there for his four years. There is no vote of Congress which can change him and put another in his place though they may not like him, and though they may consider that he is not governing the country as it should be governed. I do not see how the hon. gentleman can, in comparing the two constitutions, find that of the United States better than ours. Of course it is a good card to play, in order to show that the Government of this country are not looking after the wants of the people. But when you go into the merits of the constitution, you must admit that the constitution of Canada is much more democratic than that of the United States of America. For all that, I do not intend to depreciate the institutions of our neighbors. They are prospering under their constitution, and we are glad to see them prosper; but, on the other hand, we wish that our neighbors should leave us alone, under our constitution, prospering, as we do, from one end of the country to the other. I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to follow the hon. gentleman who spoke on the different clauses of the Act, and on the working of the Act. I think I am expressing the opinions of hon. members on this side of the House, in saying that we are satisfied with that Act as it is. If any remedies or changes are shown to be necessary, we will not stand in the way of changes or improvements. We have shown many times that we are a progressive Government, and therefore, if hon. gentlemen can show something that is really a want in that Act, or in any other Act, we are open to conviction. Other members may wish to speak on this subject, and I will not continue the discussion further. I have only to say, that I hope that a large majority of the House will vote down the resolution of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). When this Franchise Act was before the House in 1885, it was stated that the passage of that Act would necessarily lead to motions for its repeal, and debates following them, in every subsequent Session. Of course, that idea was based on the fact that on almost any measure introduced into or passed by Parliament, there is something to be said in favor as well as something against it, upon which a debate might fairly arise. But this measure has proved an exception to the general rule. It is a measure which those who support it with their votes are apparently unable or unwilling to defend with their utterances. It is true, the hon. Minister of Public Works at this time has screwed up his courage sufficiently to say: We passed that Bill in 1885, we got a majority of members returned to this Parliament to support us under it; we therefore think it is a good Bill, and having a majority in this House, we intend to keep it on the Statute-book. Well, that is all very well as a declaration, but as an argument it does not go for much. If we expected very much by way of argument in defence of this Bill, we might have known, from the scene which was enacted when it was first introduced to Parliament, that we could hardly expect it. True, the measure as it stands is one in favor of which something, however little, might possibly be said. We know that the Bill, as originally conceived and introduced, and as attempted to be forced through this House by sheer overpowering numbers, was so iniquitous in its nature that there was no one found for days and nights together who had the hardihood to open his lips to attempt to defend it. Sir, the Bill as introduced into this House was a deliberate attempt of a Government to subvert the rights and liberties of a free people; and they endeavored to pass that Bill by wearing out the strength of the Opposition, compelling us to sit here continuously from three o'clock on Thursday afternoon until the stroke of midnight on Saturday relieved us — because these gentlemen, hardened as they were in that iniquity, would not encroach on the Lord's Day. And they found the attitude of the Opposition at that time so determined against the measure, and the country so aroused because of their persistent attempt to force it through the House, that they did not impose upon us any more continued night and day sittings, but for weeks afterwards they gave us sessions lasting from one o'clock in the afternoon instead of three to two or three o'clock in the morning, during which time the Opposition had to carry on the whole debate, for no man on the other side dared to rise to defend the measure. During all the years from Confederation the Canadian people had freely enjoyed the right of the franchise, and were exercising it; but what was the fundamental principle of the Bill as introduced by hon. gentlemen opposite? It was to appoint an irresponsible officer, and to place in his hands absolute and complete power over the voters of this country, without any appeal whatever from his decisions; no matter what proof was adduced, he could say to this man, you shall go on the list, and to another man, you shall not; then taking out of the people's hands the control of the franchise and putting it in the hands of a nominee of the Government, who was to be absolutely secure in his position, who could only be removed by an Address from this House, having as its majority the members who attempted to perpetrate the act. Sir, that was the Bill as originally introduced; but, after days and nights of debate, when they found that the Opposition were willing to sacrifice health, if necessary, in defending the liberties of the people, and when they could not hope, even by overpowering numbers, to carry the Bill through this House, they were obliged to abandon part of their iniquity, and the Act we have on the Statute-book to-day, which is infinitely better than the one sought to be forced upon us, became the law of the land. But, even to-day, modified as it is, where is the gentleman on the other side who will rise to defend it? Last Session, as has been read to you, the First Minister said that by-and-bye, in another Session or two, we would discuss it. The Session is here; the motion is before you; and the hon. gentlemen opposite are asked to rise and defend the vote they are about to give against the proposition to wipe the Act from the Statute-book, and to revert to the Provincial list. The hon. Minister of Public Works said that this Parliament has a right to keep its franchise in its own hands, and to say who shall, and who shall not, vote for members of this House. Sir, will it not be keeping the franchise in its own hands, if it solemnly declares that the franchise for this House shall be the franchises adopted in the different Provinces? We would be doing it just as much as we do by placing a separate statute on the Statute-book, and we would secure just as much uniformity throughout the Provinces as is secured by this Act, which was the only claim made on its behalf. But hon. gentlemen have not ventured to use that argument to-day. Why? Because, when they attempted to carry out this Act in its details, they found that it was impossible to secure uniformity. You find that principle violated time and again by seeing that certain persons in one Province may vote, while like persons in another Province may not vote. This measure has been challenged by the mover of this resolution for several reasons. It has been challenged by the leader of the Opposition for that which is a mighty objection to it: that it is a subversion of the federal principle held dear on this side of the House. I need not attempt to enlarge on this objection, which I could not do in as able a manner as has already been done. Another argument which has not been met by hon. gentlemen opposite, is the enormous cost of this Act to the country. Figures have been given showing that a complete revision has cost over $400,000. Now, five revisions should take place during the life of a Parliament, which would mean the expenditure of $2,000,000 of the money of the people of Canada—for what? To secure lists better than the Provincial lists? No one has ventured, or will venture, to declare that they are better lists than the Provincial lists. But hon. gentlemen reply: You have only had one revision costing $400,000 imposed on the country during the past four years, the difference of $1,600,000 being saved. How has it been effected, this saving of the other $1,600,000? At the expense of the franchise to men who are entitled to vote for representatives in this House. In that way only can that economy

be made, for it is a well understood principle of the Franchise Bill—and if it is not a principle of that Bill, it is a principle that should be held in this House—that the voters' lists should be revised every year. If not revised, it does not require much observation to ascertain what the consequences will be. Young men all over the Dominion, attaining their majority, with the opinions and aspirations of young Canadians in their breasts, believe that in this land, in which are centred all their interests, they have the right to vote; they believe that on attaining manhood the right of a Canadian subject should be theirs. But of this right they must be deprived, because this Government keeps an Act upon the Statute-book so expensive in its nature that they dare not carry out its provisions, and dare not revise the voters' lists even once every four years. I hold the Government to it. To revise the lists means an expenditure of $2,000,000 to the country; not to revise them, means the sacrifice of the votes of those who have the right to vote. And this expenditure of $2,000,000, will anyone pretend to say it is of any use? It is absolutely useless. The Provincial lists cost us not one cent, and they are more carefully and accurately prepared than the Dominion lists. What could be done with this $2,000,000? If you could do no better, you could strike that amount off the burden of taxation which is weighing down the people of this country. Or, if for other purposes you wish to keep up your taxation, what useful public works could not be constructed in the country that we are told time and again cannot be done, if you were to save this money. I hold further, that in reverting to the Provincial lists we would not only save the entire cost of this expensive and inadequate franchise system, but the people of each Province would secure a franchise suited to their wants and their desires. The hon. the leader of the Opposition told us frankly that his Province had not yet reached the point he desired it should reach, of manhood suffrage; but, with the principles of a true Liberal, he said that although he did not believe manhood suffrage would be in the best interests of his own Province, he did not wish to withhold that privilege from the other Provinces to which it was best suited. In the Province of which I have the honor to be a representative, we believe in that principle. We have adopted it in the Local Legislature, which is elected on that basis, and I believe that is the principle which should prevail in our Province in the elections for the Dominion Parliament; but while our young men, growing up with all their interests in this country, with all the aspirations of Canadians, anxious to have a voice in the affairs of the country, have a voice in our local affairs, they are not entitled, many of them, to cast their votes under the lists prepared by the Dominion officers. There is another right which we have established under our Provincial lists, and that is the right of one man to cast one vote. We have done away with the anomaly of one man, because he may have a little real estate in one county and a little more in another county, and so on, having half a score of votes, while another man who may have more property in one place than the other has all combined in the several places, can only have one vote; or that he should have any more right to vote than the young man who has all his interests in this country, who makes his living here, and who lends his influence and his work in building up the land. He it is who is the first one to volunteer in the defence of his country when called upon, and if he would not volunteer—but he always will—if he would not, it is he who, if it were necessary to make a conscription, the Government would first compel to go to the front. Why, then, should he not have an equal voice in the making of our laws, when he contributes to the revenue of his country as much as the man who owns a little parcel of land, and is equally liable to be called upon for the defence of his country? The principle that prevails in Ontario to-day is that he should have an equal right. Therefore, it is as a representative of that Province I am strongly in favor of the proposition of my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Wilson), that we should wipe out this Franchise Act from our statutes, an Act that was conceived in injustice, and which has been carried out in a measure of the injustice in which it was conceived; an Act utterly useless, and which costs $2,000,000, if properly revised during each Parliament, according to the figures we have; an Act, which, in the Province of Ontario, and other Provinces where manhood suffrage prevails, limits that suffrage, takes away the rights of the people, and destroys the federal principle which ought to be dear to every member in this House.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 6th February, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 54) to incorporate the Interprovincial Bridge Company.—(Mr. White, Renfrew.)

Bill (No. 55) to incorporate the Shore Line Railway Bridge Company.—(Mr. Weldon, St. John.)

VANCOUVER ISLAND RAILWAY LANDS.

Mr. GORDON asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to cause an investigation to be made in the alleged grievances of certain squatters on the railway lands on Vancouver Island, who claim that they have been denied the right guaranteed them under sub-section 2 of section 7 of the Act passed by the Parliament of Canada, intitled: "An Act respecting the Vancouver Island Railway, &c."?

Mr. DEWDNEY. In the transfer to the Esquimaux and Nanaimo Railway Company, the rights of the squatters under the Act 47 Vic., cap. 6, have been reserved and protected, and their remedy (if any) seems to be against the company. An officer of the Department of the Interior will, however, be sent, at an early day, to investigate the alleged grievances, with a view to ascertaining the rights of the squatters under the said Act and the patent of the company. With the permission of the House, I desire to offer an explanation to the leader of the Opposition. When the hon. gentleman's motion was before the House the other day, I stated in answer to the hon. gentleman, that there were no petitions from squatters as referred to in the motion. I found, after further search, that there was a petition sent in 1882, which was brought down with the papers in 1887. I make this explanation because I find I was misinformed. There has, however, been no communication received since 1887.

AID TOWARDS CROSSING THE SAGUENAY.

Mr. COUTURE (Translation) asked, Whether it was the intention of the Government to grant to the inhabitants of the County of Saguenay assistance towards the crossing of the Saguenay in the winter time, either by steamboat or otherwise?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) In answer to the hon. member, I must state that this matter has not as yet received the consideration of the Government.

PROPOSED WHARF AT ESCOUMAINS.

Mr. COUTURE (Translation) asked, Whether it was the intention of the Government to place a sum of money in the public estimates for 1890-91, to be devoted to the proposed wharf at Escoumains, and what was the amount of that sum?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) In answer to the hon. member, I cannot now give him any information on the subject; he must wait until the Supplementary Estimates are laid on the Table.

WHARF AT TADOUSAC.

Mr. COUTURE (Translation) asked, Whether it was the intention of the Government to place in the public estimates for 1890-91, a sum of money for the completion of the wharf at Tadousac, and what was the amount of that sum?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) In answer to this question I will refer the hon. member to page 53 of the Estimates, which are now before the House, and he will find there the answer to his question.

MALBAIE MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. COUTURE asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to grant to Tadousac a daily mail from Malbaie, as prayed for? If not, why not?

Mr. HAGGART. The present service by mail is three times a week in summer by stage, and four times in summer by boats, between Chicoutimi and Quebec; that makes seven services per week in summer. In winter the service is four times per week by stage. The estimated cost of the service applied for is $941, and the revenue received from that place is $354. The Department think that the service at present is sufficient.

THE TOBACCO TRADE.

Mr. THÉRIEN asked, Whether the Government have received a petition from the tobacco manufacturers, praying for the passing of an Act to compel tobacco growers to sell their tobacco to manufacturers only?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No petitions of that kind have been received by the Government.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

STANLEY OF PRESTON.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I thank you for your loyal Address, and I rely on your wisdom and judgment to aid me in such measures as are necessary to promote the happiness and prosperity of the Dominion.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
February 4th, 1890.

REPORT.

Annual Report of the Department of Militia and Defence, for the year ending 30th June, 1889.—(Sir Adolphe Caron.)

DUTY ON FISH IN BOND.

Mr. BOWELL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to correct, to a certain extent, the answer which I gave yesterday to the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) in reference to the curing of fish in bond. On further enquiry I find that one or two cargoes of fish were permitted, since the order I spoke of, to be cured in the old way—that is, dried and pickled on the wharf at Halifax. The reason why that permission was given was because the cargoes were purchased before the issue of that order.

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE ACT.

House resumed debate on proposed motion of Mr. Wilson (Elgin):

That, in the opinion of this House, the Electoral Franchise Act ought to be repealed, and that it is preferable to revert to the plan of utilising for the Elections of this House the Provincial Franchises and Voters' Lists.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on the motion now before the House, I will take my inspiration from the last remarks which fell from the lips of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) yesterday, who, in closing his address, said, "he hoped that the House would not lose much time in discussing this question, for any member who could give a vote condemning the Bill, could give such a vote on the motion now before the Chair." I tried to learn if anything new had been said on this question, by referring to the debate which took place in 1885, at the time the Franchise Act was passed, but I must confess that yesterday I heard nothing new on the subject. It is true that one of the members on the other side of the House, if he did not speak so long as he did in 1885, at all events spoke louder; and my hon. friend who leads the Opposition appeared to be a little more emotional when he spoke of the privileges of the people and the infringement upon Provincial rights and autonomy. I must say further that I was rather—I will not say disgusted, but discouraged, in trying to peruse the Hansard, in finding that the debate of 1885 occupies 1,800 pages, contained in two volumes of the Hansard, and in reading over it I ascertained the fact that, when the Bill was introduced, our hon. friends on the other side of the House said that they did not know anything about the measure, and that the House should not be called upon to vote, because the right hon. Premier had introduced it at the end of the Session—although far from the end of the Session it turned out to be. They objected to the Bill, because they said the Premier should not force upon the House a vote on a question which they had not time to study. It is true, the right hon. Premier had already introduced a Bill to the same effect, two or three Sessions previously. But to prove the accuracy of what they had said, my hon. friend spoke for over eight weeks on that subject. It is alarming to the man who consults the Hansard of those days. I have read in the discussion which took place yesterday, that one of my hon. friends on the other side of the House said that the Government had carried that measure only by sheer strength of brute force. True enough, but it was not on our side that the brute force was exhibited; and if the House was obliged to sit to the small hours of the morning, we on this side certainly had not much to do except to listen, if we did listen, or to sleep and wake up again in time to ask if a motion was to be put or a vote taken. And I see by the reports of those discussions that when everybody was ready to vote, the eloquence of our hon. friends was not yet exhausted: they were freely quoting extracts from the voyages of Gulliver, and from the explorations of the Challenger, in the course of that discussion; I read almost everything in those extracts. It is true, the Chairman of the Committee was constantly calling those members to order, and then they were obliged to discuss the Bill in question. But, Mr. Speaker, to speak seriously on this matter, and not to keep the time of the House, let me ask what were the objections urged against this measure? The objections taken were these—that the Bill should not pass, and the House should vote against it, because it was an encroachment upon provincial rights, an attempt against the liberties of the people, against the principle of a Federal Government, and against the autonomy of the Provinces in the practical carrying out of that Government. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition repeated that yesterday with force and eloquence, but reducing his argument to a minimum. Well, let us meet the question squarely and in the face; is this an attempt to encroach upon Provincial liberty, upon Provincial autonomy or upon Provincial rights. It is not; on the contrary, I maintain that what has been done by the right hon. Premier and his Government, has been in the line of right policy for the true enactment of the federal principle of government. We do not want to interfere in Provincial matters. I shall not take a lesson or an inspiration from my hon. friends on the other side of the House on the subject of Provincial rights. I have been fighting for them in my Province; I have been fighting for them in this Parliament; I have been opposing an attempt to interfere with them, which was made and defeated in this House, and I had the hearty support of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) on that occasion. I shall not take my inspiration on the subject of Provincial rights from the other side of the House; but I say that if you want to put into practice the independence of the Provinces, you must begin at home, and practice the independence of the Federal Parliament. By whose voices should the representatives in this Parliament be elected? Is it the Provinces that should decide? If you say it is the Provinces, you are encroaching on their privileges; you have no right to ask them to do that duty; you have no right to require them to say who shall come and take their seats here. If you do, you are going to put in conflict the provincial and the federal franchises. My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, gave us an example. I am glad to see that my hon. friend is coming quietly and gradually, but truly and surely, to good Conservative principles. He has shown himself to be so by his ultra-loyal utterances last summer in the Province of Ontario, for which I praise him and give him my compliment; but he has scandalised his Radical friends of the Province of Quebec, and the principal organ of the Liberal party in Montreal, La Patrie, if I remember well, in committing that great sin of finding fault with the present political tendencies of democratic France. I do not reprove my hon. friend for that sin, for I have committed it before him; but he went one better than I did; for, Liberal as he was, he said he could not approve of the radicalism of the French system of government; he stamped it, as it should be stamped, as the most odious effect of the lower democracy in France; and when he said that the atrocities in that country should be reprov'd by every good man of French origin as he reprov'd them, he went a little further than I did; but he said something that did not displease me, though it scandalised his Radical friends in the Province of Quebec. Everybody knows that my hon. friend is Conservative in instinct, in manner, in every inch of his body, and every grain of his soul. But I must qualify this assertion, Mr. Speaker. I say that every good Britisher in the world is really a good Conservative.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh!

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When I say that—and I am sure my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, will agree with me—I make a distinction between a Conservative and a Tory.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain. What is the difference?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I shall explain in quoting my hon. friend. I remember one occasion—and my hon. friend will excuse me for repeating the incident—when a friend of his and of mine on an election platform, asked him if he would have a cigar, and he said: “No, Sir, I do not smoke;”

then he was asked if he would have a glass of wine, and he answered: “No, Sir, I do not smoke, I do not drink, and I am not a Tory.” But if he is not a Tory, he is a good British Conservative. Yesterday he told us that he was opposed to that first platform of the Liberal party in other countries and in this country—he is opposed to the platform upon which the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson) stood when he spoke: my hon. friend says that, personally, he is opposed to manhood suffrage. I agree with him on that point, and I agree with him also when he says that though it is his opinion, he does not prevent others from having theirs.

Mr. LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend will see that his argument turns against him on that point. My hon. friend is opposed to manhood suffrage; he does not want representatives in this House to be elected on manhood suffrage; but, he says, that although his Province does not want it, he does not wish to prevent other Provinces having manhood suffrage to elect members to this House. Suppose the local cabinet of Quebec—I will not call it a Liberal cabinet; it is not a Liberal cabinet; it is another kind of a Conservative cabinet—not such a good kind—perhaps too much of a Conservative cabinet; but supposing Mr. Mercier and the Legislature of Quebec should establish manhood suffrage as the suffrage of the Province of Quebec, would my hon. friend say: Although I think members of the Federal Parliament should not be elected by manhood suffrage, yet I bow to your decision? My hon. friend had no difficulty in saying that he would bow to Nova Scotia, but Nova Scotia has not manhood suffrage; and that he would bow to British Columbia and to Prince Edward Island, which have manhood suffrage; but in his own Province he is opposed to manhood suffrage. Are we then to have here two representatives in one? Are we to be represented here by the hon. member for Arthabaska (Mr. Laurier), who is opposed to manhood suffrage, and yet who might be elected under the system of manhood suffrage imposed on our Province by a First Minister of Quebec. The hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson), and the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson), we have heard exclaiming that the liberties of the people were attacked, that every man should have a vote, and that there should be one vote for one man. There are some phrases which sound very well, and “one man, one vote” has a very attractive ring. But the hon. the leader of the Opposition is diametrically opposed to the hon. members for Brant and Elgin. He says, One man, one vote, you cannot have. If we are to have manhood suffrage, I can understand hon. gentlemen opposite; but if we are to have property qualification, I say that a man should have the right to represent his property in every county where it lies. You have no right to say to me, that if I happen to have property in three counties, I must, without being able to protest by my vote, submit to be represented in two of them by a twopenny-ha'penny scallawag, or a man unfit to be a representative. The hon. member for Brant said, “One man, one vote;” but if we are to go by the Provincial lists, instead of having the one system in the whole country, there is one section of this country where a man has not one vote. I understand that in Toronto the voter has only two-thirds of a vote (the other third, I am told, is reserved for the Grits). One elector has to vote for three members, and yet he has only two votes. He should at least have three votes. But the Provincial Legislature, in their wisdom, have so arranged it, and, though it may be wise in Provincial matters, I say it is not in Federal matters. So much for the infringement on the rights of the people and on the rights of the Legislatures. But has it not struck my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson)—and I am very much surprised that it has not struck the hon. the leader of the Opposition, who is a very careful leader—that from no Province, not from any one man, from the Premier to the lowest member of the Opposition in any Provincial Legislature, has any complaint been heard that we were infringing upon provincial rights when we took upon ourselves here to define our franchise? Have you heard, Sir, a protest from the Legislature of any one Province? Yes; we had a curious one from the Province of Quebec. We had one from Mr. Mercier, whose policy in matters of electoral franchise I do not wish to discuss, as that is his business. Mr. Mercier has taken upon himself to disfranchise every man who is in receipt of a salary, whether a high salary or a merely nominal one, from this Government. He has refused to every man who is an official of this Government and Parliament the right to vote in Quebec Provincial elections. He refused a vote to men who shovelled snow, after a storm, on the Intercolonial! What has my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Wilson), who is so strong an advocate for manhood suffrage, to say against such an abominable infringement on the rights of the people? Again, the Provincial law of Quebec disfranchises all officers of the Provincial Governments and Legislatures in Dominion matters. But why should the officials of the Provincial Governments be disqualified from voting for members of this House? I do not believe they should, nor do hon. gentlemen opposite. In glancing through the debate in 1885, I find that the corrupt principle which hon. gentlemen opposite asserted was at the bottom of this Bill was the facility it gave the Government to choose servile officers to carry out the law. Hon. gentlemen opposite declared that these officers would be nothing but slaves to the Government. I wish the hon. the leader of the Opposition had been Secretary of State for the last two years, and been obliged to read the letters of the different revising officers; he would then have seen how far they are from being slaves. If ever I have seen independence of mind exhibited and received free expression of opinion, it has been from the revising officers since this law has been in force. My hon. friend need only call for the correspondence, and he will find from it, either that these men, who only hold their positions during good behavior, have been made independent by their sense of duty, or that this bad Government has made a very good choice of those officers.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. You were forced to appoint the judges.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We were not forced; but we framed the law in such a way that it should be so.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. No.

Mr. CASEY. You were forced to change the law.

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Let me quote, for the benefit of my hon. friends from the Province of Quebec, where two-thirds of the revising officers are not judges, and will I ask the hon. the leader of the Opposition if he has heard, either here or in the Provincial Legislature of Quebec, which takes upon itself very often to ventilate other grievances than its own, complaints against the Government revising officers in that Province?

Mr. LAURIER. Yes; complaints were made in Parliament here.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There was only one complaint made, and the case was not made out. It is now five years since the law has been in force, and I ask my hon. friend whether everybody is not satisfied with the perfect independence and good behavior and faithful discharge of the duties of the revising officers appointed by the Government?

Mr. LAURIER. No.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I challenge my hon. friend to formulate a single accusation. If my hon. friends opposite wish, I could give them letters from many Conservative electors who have complained to me that really the men appointed by the Government were more of a Liberal shade than Conservative, and complained of the rigor and severity with which these officials performed their duty.

Mr. CASEY. What things people will say!

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They will say the truth sometimes, even outside of this House. It is true that, during the discussion on the Bill, the then member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) complained bitterly, and predicted that all the nominees of the Government for the execution of that iniquitous law, as he called it, would be so much the slaves of the Government that nobody would feel secure in his seat. That prediction has not at all been fulfilled, and my hon. friends opposite know that as well as I do. But a member of the Government is obliged to tell the truth—

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Obligated to?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He ought to.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We have a conscience that obliges us to. I was about to say that my hon. friend from Brant—I do not mean the hon. member who spoke yesterday—on one or two occasions did not appear to be very much under that obligation. But I must confess one thing. At the time we first discussed that Bill, it was stated that the cost would be at least a million dollars a year.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no; half a million.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not want to be obliged to refer to Hansard; but the lowest estimate was about $500,000.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes; the hon. member need not object to the statement, because I can quote the authority. It was stated that the Bill would be very costly in execution. That was true. The Government did not deny it; but the Government did in that case as they have done in other cases. I think everyone in the country now admits that we ought to have a Federal Electoral Franchise. The Government never denied that the cost would be large; but, I think, I stated at the time that the first cost would be heavy in this case, as well as in any other case where a new system was being put into execution; but that the cost would be diminished by degrees, according to the improvements which might be introduced into the system which was adopted. I stated that the cost might reach half a million. I must say that, for the first year, the cost exceeded that estimate; that was not on account of the system, but on account of the time which was lost in the discussion—useless, I might say scandalous, considering the enormous expenditure it entailed—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. CHAPLEAU—on account of the scandalous prolongation of that discussion during the Session of 1885, when eight or nine weeks were taken up in the useless discussion of that Bill. I do not count the uneasiness, the harm really committed upon the persons, the bodies of the members, by the endurance they were obliged to submit to; but, taking the expenditure of this House at $1,000 a day, which is a low estimate, you have an idea of the amount lost in the discussion of that Bill—in the useless part of the discussion of that Bill. Let us put that at $80,000, which would be a low figure; and it has been estimated at a much larger figure. According to the well scrutinised Report of the Auditor General, an authority recognised by hon. gentlemen opposite, and often quoted by them, the cost of making the lists in 1886 came to $409,000 or $413,000.

Mr. CASEY. Quote from the authority.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Is it necessary, when a Minister gives his word on the floor of the House, to quote his authority? According to the Report of the Auditor General the cost was $413,454.68.

Mr. CASEY. Cost of what?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Cost of the first revision.

Mr. EDGAR. There are $5,000 to be added to that.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have the Auditor General's Report showing the expenditure to 31st January, 1890, for the electoral lists in the Dominion of Canada. The expenditure on the first revision was what I have stated. The first report was $409,000, but afterwards reports were made which brought it up to the amount I have stated—$413,454.68.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman does not include in that the use of capital and the wear and tear on the new printing establishment.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have always stated that the wear and tear of this House were not included, and I may add that the wear and tear of the printing house is not included either.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Nor the interest on the capital.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend from Brant yesterday said we would have lost at least two million dollars if the law had been properly executed. The law has been properly executed with a view to the wants of the country, and, remembering that it is a new law, it has been very properly and efficiently executed.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Having elections on a list made four years ago.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The law was passed in 1885, and the elections of 1887 took place under lists which were revised in 1886. I have never heard any complaints in regard to them, or any statement that they have not been an improvement on the previous lists. It is true that some hon. gentlemen opposite complained that the returns of some of their friends were not reported soon enough. It was, perhaps, better. It prevented false representations to be sent abroad as to the result of the elections, as, in order to catch votes, it was stated in some parts of the country that the Government were beaten on all the lines in the Provinces, so as to prejudice the elections in the Territories. I have not heard any statement that the lists, as revised by the revising officers, were not fair. Was it then necessary to have a revision of those lists immediately after the election? We had to look after the system, which was a new one, and we had to look after the expenditure. I do not want to take credit to myself, but I have been working to that end. I do not say that I have succeeded, as much as I would like to have succeeded, in reducing the expenditure, but this return will show that the expenditure has been greatly reduced, and will be still further reduced. My hon. friend said that in four Sessions this would cost two million dollars. This year the revision has been made after three years, and everyone understood that the cost would be considerable. The necessity of printing two supplementary lists has had its inconveniences, particularly as it was not foreseen and took us by surprise, as it took the revising officers by surprise. I was sorry that sickness prevented me for six months from attending to my business, so that I was unable to consult with the revising officers in regard to this matter. Whether they were Grit or Tory, Liberal or Conservative, I should be glad to follow their advice whenever it was possible, but I was not able to follow it last year because I was absent through sickness. I hope I shall be able to follow that advice now; and I know that these officers are as anxious as myself to reduce the expenditure. But what do we see in regard to the revision of 1889? Did it cost $500,000 or $413,000? No; it has cost $150,134 up to this moment, and, including the new furniture, plant, &c., put into the printing bureau for that purpose, amounting to $1,223, we have a total of $151,357.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does that pay the whole expense?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It pays the whole, less a very small fraction of the accounts that have not yet been sent in. My hon. friends will believe me when I tell them that when the revision was ended in November and December, the accounts very soon began to come in.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does that include the bureau expense, or just the outside expense?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It includes the new furniture that was put in the printing bureau; it does not include the interest on the cost of the printing bureau itself. It does not include the interest of the plant that was bought for printing the voters' lists. I will speak of that when we come to the item which is to be voted for the revision of the list next year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does it include the printers' wages or salaries?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It does.

Mr. LAURIER. Does it include the price of outside printing?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes; and I will, to-morrow, lay before the House the cost of printing done outside. I know that the Liberal press has been very eager in saying that the distribution of that patronage on my part was something scandalous, and that this year the patronage and expenditure outside the printing of these lists would be enormous. The printers, as well as the revising officers, were not slow in sending in their accounts, and the accounts I have now for all the outside printing amount to not more than $9,000 up to the present moment. But I must say that our experience shows that the printing, which at first cost, for some reasons depending on the difference in price, 10 cents a name, has cost this year only between 3 and 4 cents a name. When the proper time comes I shall be ready to lay before the House a statement showing that I have exercised all possible economy in the expenditure incurred by the execution of the law. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will complete my argument, and I will say that the law as it stands to-day is an expensive machinery. I do not think it is too costly for the benefit we have derived from it, but I shall say that up to the present moment it has cost too large a sum of money if it had to be repeated every year at the same cost.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am very glad to hear my hon. friends say "hear, hear." I feel that I would say "hear, hear" myself, and I have said it to myself before. If that expenditure of $150,000 or $160,000 had to be incurred every year, I would say that the law was too expensive. I said the last time that the expenditure, which was $409,000 or $413,000, would be reduced the second time by at least 50 per cent., and it has been reduced by more than 50 per cent.; and I think I can say that the next revision will show a reduction of more than 30 per cent. again upon that figure. But I am not ready to give an opinion to the House now, whether the revision should take place annually or bi-annually; I am still less ready or authorised to give an expression of the intention of the Government upon that subject. But I express my own personal opinion. I do not see that it is necessary, I do not see that it works harder for one side or the other, that a revision should take place every other year. My hon. friend said: You are ashamed of your law, because the law said that revisions should take place every year. So it might; and I think that with the improvement in the machinery that we have for the printing of these lists now, it may become possible, and not very costly, to have the revised voters' lists printed yearly without adding much to the expenditure of the country. As I said, it is my personal opinion that if the cost were to remain as it is, the expenditure would be too heavy to incur every year. But is it absolutely necessary that the revision should take place every year? I will answer my hon. friend. I know something about this law, and the working of it. My hon. friend will say that the changes of residence in a city, the movement of electors from one district or one county from another, are very great—and so they may be at certain times—and if an election were to take place every year, many of the electors would be deprived of their right to vote. Now, speaking of the Province from which I come, I may say that for the last twenty-five years, on an average, we have never had elections on which the lists were not two or three years old. I speak of what I know, I speak of my own Province, and my hon. friend knows it to be true. We might remedy this in the law, and prevent the difficulty which I anticipate by migrations of electors, especially in large cities; that difficulty might be avoided in the law by giving the right to vote in their old district to those who have changed their domicile—that is, giving them the right to vote there for one year at least. Now, I want to answer another observation of my hon. friend. The objection is: You cannot in Federal Parliament, in a Confederation like our own, have a uniform mode of voting. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition quoted the United States. Well, what is the electoral franchise in all the States, with the exception of one or two? It is manhood suffrage, with residence, or with notice of residence, or being citizens of the United States, or declaring one's intention of becoming a citizen of the United States. Can this apply to our country? Will my hon. friend, who is opposed to manhood suffrage, say that we should follow the example of the United States, that we should do as they do there, because really that kind of franchise is uniform in the American Republic? It is not uniform here, and as long as we establish a property qualification, it cannot be uniform. But, Mr. Speaker, we make it to suit ourselves. Is there not now a difference in the qualification of electors in a large portion of the Maritime Provinces and in a portion of the Province of Quebec? Have not the fishermen who belong to a portion of the population which is specially located in one or two of the Provinces, been treated exceptionally? We are obliged to do that. My hon. friend said the value of property in Ontario is not the same as in the Province of Quebec. We know that very well. The vote in towns and rural districts is not the same. But, Mr. Speaker, we could not remedy that, and the Provincial Legislatures could not remedy it. In conclusion, therefore, I say this: The first objection taken, that this Bill was an infringement of provincial rights, has not been sustained, and, in fact, does not exist. The second objection, that relating to the corruption and servility and inefficiency of the officers connected with its administration, has been completely refuted by the work performed by the revising officers all over the country; and I say it to their credit. The third objection, that relating to the expenditure, is one in regard to which I may say that we are steadily reducing the expenditure with the growth of the system, and I hope before long that the improvements will be such that, after one or more trials have been had, a revision will be able to be made every year without incurring much cost to the country.

Mr. CASEY. That the Government feel this to be a serious question, is shown conclusively by the fact that they have put up to defend their case the hon. gentleman, who is admittedly the most eloquent, either in the French or English language, of

hon. members on the Government benches. That he, the champion of the Government, has felt this to be a serious question, is proven by the care with which his speech was prepared; by whom prepared, I cannot say. The result of his speech comes out in the last sentence or two that he uttered. He told the House in the very last passage, which usually contains the pith of a speech, that a franchise cannot be made uniform so long as property qualification is retained, and that, therefore, according to him, a franchise arranged by the different Provinces must be unsound and not an uniform qualification. Why, in 1885, the great argument used in favor of this special Bill which the hon. gentleman has been put up to defend, and almost the only argument used, was, that it would establish a uniform system throughout the Dominion. Has it done so? No. What is the franchise in Prince Edward Island and in British Columbia? Is the franchise there the same as that we enjoy in Ontario, or the same as the hon. gentleman's French constituents enjoy? By no means. In the two former Provinces they have manhood suffrage; in all the other Provinces we have property qualifications. So, on the confession of the champion set up by the Government to defend this Bill, it does not give a uniform franchise, and, on his own confession, it cannot give a uniform qualification throughout all the Provinces. The hon. gentleman has said that we have introduced nothing new into this debate; that the remarks have simply been a rehash of what was said in 1885; that there have been no new facts or arguments advanced. So far as facts are concerned, we have new facts; but I admit we have no new arguments. And the reason is this: the arguments we advanced in 1885, and enforced from day to day, and which in many cases compelled the Ministry to change their policy in regard to the details of the Bill, have been justified by the facts which have occurred since. Does the hon. gentleman want new arguments to prove that the earth is round, or that such a force as the attraction of gravitation exists, and that the solar system is moved by that force? If he does not, it is no more of a reproach to our arguments to-day to say they are not new, than it would be a reproach to the arguments of Newton and Galileo to say that they are not new to-day. The arguments we used in 1885 against this Bill are as old as truth, justice and fair play, and hon. gentlemen opposite will hear them year after year, unchanged in any particular, but reiterated and reinforced by new facts, until this iniquitous and fraudulent Act has gone the way of many Acts that have preceded it. The hon. gentleman has said the chief objection adduced in 1885, was that the Bill was introduced too late in the Session, and yet eight weeks were spent in discussing it, and that, ultimately, it was passed through by brute force. The hon. gentleman said so himself. I am not quoting what he said about us, but what he said about his own side of the House, and he stated that they did not have to do much, but sit still and listen, and go to sleep once in a while, and waken to vote. I am glad to have the hon. gentleman's candid confession of the business of his followers in regard to passing the Bill in 1885, whose duty was to sleep until they were called upon to vote, and then to vote. That is exactly what they did, and of what they complained.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They were called to vote, but did not vote.

Mr. CASEY. They did vote when required. The hon. gentleman has told us that the Government had a sweeping majority, who were ready to awaken when the division bell rang, but whose ears were closed at all other times to the arguments presented on this side of the House. The hon. Minister has argued that this Act is no encroachment on Provincial rights, and he has said, that he does not wish to interfere with those rights. He failed, however, to give us any arguments to prove that proposition. From the commencement of Confederation to the passing of that Act, the Provinces had the right to fix their own franchise as well for elections for this House as for elections for the Local Legislatures. Will the hon. Minister contend for a moment, that the taking away of that right from the Provinces was not an infringement of rights which they had enjoyed since the beginning of Confederation? I admit that this Parliament had a legal right under the constitution to pass such an Act; but I say it was an infringement of Provincial rights, to the extent of taking away from the Provinces rights they had continuously enjoyed, and rights which they could fairly expect to continuously enjoy so long as Confederation lasted, and in that sense the Act was a distinct invasion of Provincial rights. Not only was it an invasion of rights which had been enjoyed, but it was an invasion of rights which should be enjoyed by each Province whether previously enjoyed or not. Who knows so well what is a proper basis for the franchise for each Province as the Legislature of that Province? Would the hon. gentleman be willing to admit that this House knows more about the circumstances of the Province of Quebec as to what franchise would best suit the genius of the people, than does the Local Assembly? We must scout such an idea. No doubt my hon. friend near me would be the first to take up his musket against such a proposal and go to the front. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, if you are as patriotic as I believe you are, you would share this sentiment. And a similar argument applies to Ontario. Each Province truly knows what sort of a franchise is best suited to its needs. In Ontario the Local Legislature has seen fit to adopt the principle of manhood suffrage. In Quebec they still adhere to a property qualification. I do not know which is right, but I am aware that the Legislative Assembly of Ontario reflects the opinion of the people of Ontario, and the Legislative Assembly of Quebec reflects the opinion of the people of Quebec, and therefore those two assemblies have the right to fix the franchise for their own elections, and they should have the right to fix the franchise for election to this Parliament. If it were possible to obtain a uniform suffrage for the whole Dominion, I have no objection to it, but we have pointed out time and again, and we have enforced by divisions taken in this House, that the only way by which we could obtain a uniform suffrage for the whole Dominion is by introducing the principle of manhood suffrage. My hon. friends opposite have voted down and decried the only kind of suffrage that could possibly be uniform in the whole Dominion, and they have instituted instead certain property qualifications which are piecemeal, and which are unfair to many Provinces, and to many thousands of the electors of this Dominion. I think that my hon. friend the Secretary of State gave away his whole case. He is a generous man, a very generous man, when he admitted that this Act was so costly that the revision could not be enforced every year. That was our contention in 1885, but hon. gentlemen opposite insisted that the revision was to be so cheap that we would not notice the cost of enforcing it. Now, the spokesman of the Government, the eloquent champion whom they have put up to defend them, and the Minister who is directly in charge of this Department, admits that this Act cannot be carried into effect annually, because it is too expensive. I contend that a Franchise Act providing for the revision of the electoral lists which is not carried into effect every year, is not practically carried into effect at all. I say that a revision every three or four years, which he tells us is sufficient (and, I suppose from his statement that the Government intend to have a revision only every three or four years), is not enough. I hold that it is not carrying out the law, and that it is not giving to our young men as they grow up the rights which they are entitled to as citizens of this country. Why, Sir, ever since Confederation, in respect to Provincial elections, and up to the passing of the present Act, in regard to Dominion elections, every young man who attained the age of twenty-one years, and had the qualifications required by law, knew that he would have a voice in the government of the country. But my hon. friend the Secretary of State now says to these young men: You cannot have these rights under the present law, you will have to wait two or three years; we will have these revisions exactly when we like, and if we think the list is favorable to us, we will not revise it again until after the next election.

An hon. MEMBER. They will postpone the revision.

Mr. CASEY. Yes; they will postpone the revision when it suits themselves. On the other hand, the Government say: If we have anything to gain by a revision we will have it before we go to the country; and by this system the rights of the electors are not considered at all. The hon. Minister said that the rights of the Province were not concerned in the postponement of this revision, but I maintain that the rights of the individuals of this country are concerned, and by his abject confession it is shown that the Government have passed a Bill that they cannot work. By his admission that they do not intend to work it yearly, he has shown that the Government is doing a direct injustice to the young men of this country, in depriving them of rights which are inherent in them as citizens of Canada and as British subjects. More than that, the Government by this course is doing what is traitorous to the interests of the country, as well as what is unjust to the people. A revision which is only to be enforced every two or three years is disloyal. That word "disloyal" is a favorite one on the other side of the House, and I think I have found a very suitable application for it now. Any Act which provides such a disfranchisement of the young men of the country is disloyal, because it is disloyal to deprive, on the mere whim of a Minister, British subjects of their right to vote which they have acquired according to law. The hon. gentleman does not even propose that this revision shall take place at stated times, but he proposes that it will be left at the will of the Government to say when the revision shall take place; and that means, as I have said before, that the rights of Canadians to vote shall be subject to the whim of the hon. the Secretary of State and of his colleagues for the time being. I am glad, I am very glad, to have heard such a full confession from the hon. Minister, and to be able to herald to the country at large the fact that henceforth the votes of the young citizens of Canada are at the mercy of the Secretary of State. The hon. Minister says that we, on this side of the House, indulged in scandalous calumnies in 1885, when we said that the revisions of this list would cost $500,000. He told us that the minimum estimate was half a million. Well, Sir, my memory of that debate is quite as good as his, and I venture to say that the maximum estimate from this side of the House was not much more than half a million, while I know perfectly well that the minimum estimate began at $250,000 and ran up to half a million, and a little over. Now let us consider how our estimates were justified. We find in the Sessional Papers of 1889 a return showing that the cost for the last revision had been $414,921.76, and that $5,264 and odd cents were still unsettled. The hon. Minister himself gave the figures at $413,454; more than a thousand dollars less than the amounts found in the Sessional Papers which were laid before the House. I do not know where he got his figures, or where he arrives at the less sum than the official report. It is a small matter, but still it is worth noticing that he differs from the official report in his statement of facts. For this last year the Minister tells us, on the basis of information known to himself alone so far, that the cost will be $150,000, and he admits that, even at a cost of $150,000 a year, it would be absurd and abominable to place such a tax upon the country annually for revising these lists. I think, Sir, that our statements, which he denounced as scandalous calumnies in 1885, have been more than justified by the facts, and that his own humble confession to-day is more damaging to the Government than anything which we stated against them at that time. The Secretary of State says, speaking for his own Province, that the Provincial lists used in elections there have been usually two or three years old. I have heard strong expressions of dissent from that statement from members of the Province of Quebec who sit around me, and I have yet to ascertain how far the hon. Minister is misinformed in regard to that statement. I know, however, that the local lists used in the Province of Ontario are not usually two or three years old, but that they are usually prepared very much more promptly than the Dominion lists and ready for use much earlier in the season. I will leave it to the members for Quebec to defend the promptness of their own municipal officers in that respect. Suppose it were true that the lists, commonly used in Quebec, were two or three years old, I will call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the County of Haldimand, and ask him what was the age of the lists used in that county last election? How many hundreds of men who had as good a right to vote in the County of Haldimand as the hon. the Secretary of State had in his county, were prevented from exercising that franchise by his iniquitous refusal to enforce the revision of the lists every year? Taking his own statement of the facts in Quebec, be it correct or incorrect, the state of affairs there could not be worse than that which has prevailed in Dominion elections in Ontario since the last general election. Then, he says, look to the United States, and see what is the franchise there; the franchise there, he says, is practically uniform. Why, Mr. Speaker, the franchise in the United States is a State franchise; an exact parallel of what we ask for here. Each State fixes the franchise for itself, and that is the same franchise under which men vote in the Federal elections. The hon. Secretary of State himself has referred us to the United States, and I accept the reference gladly; because, as most of us know, but as possibly he did not know—because there are some things he does not know—the reference strengthens our view of the case, but not his. The United States is a Federal Republic; and we are practically a Federal Republic, though working under monarchical forms; and we find that the same kind of franchise prevails there that we desire for this country. The inference is that if the hon. Secretary of State would only turn his eyes there, he would see that he ought to support this motion instead of opposing it. Now, Sir, I do not think there are any other points in the hon. gentleman's remarks. I am glad he has made this speech, for two reasons: in the first place, because he has confessed that this Act is unworkable; and in the second place, because he has told us that the Government do not intend to work it. We now know two things we did not know before—that the Government admit that this is an unworkable Act, and that they are only going to revise the lists every few years. These are two things worth knowing, and however valuable the time of the Secretary of State may be, I think he has spent some of it to good purpose this afternoon in telling us these facts, so that the young voters who are growing up in the country will learn that they must wait for their votes until it suits his whim or the purpose of the Government to have a new revision of the lists.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Before the vote is taken, I beg leave to engage the attention of the House for a short time to express my opinion on this question. I feel a good deal of backwardness on rising to speak on a question that has been handled so ably by old parliamentarians, but I feel it my duty to express to this House and the country my opinion on the working of this Act. The hon. the Secretary of State, in his very eloquent and forcible address, stated at the outset that nothing new was adduced in the arguments on this side of the House. He must know that although there are no new arguments, there are plenty of old ones to be urged and pressed home until hon. gentlemen opposite are induced to grant a repeal of this Act, which I believe the majority of the people of this country is anxious to have. But almost in the next sentence the hon. Secretary of State stated that the line of argument pursued on this side was different from the line of argument pursued four years ago. If so, something new must have been said. Therefore, I think he hardly considered that point before he expressed himself as he did. The hon. Secretary of State appears to have spoken on this question wholly and entirely from a Quebec standpoint. It appears to me that he has a crow to pick with two hon. gentlemen, one of whom is present in this House, and the other in the Legislature of Quebec. He appeared to combat the arguments of the hon. leader of the Opposition and the Hon. Honoré Mercier in regard to certain views promulgated by them. But these things do not concern us who live in the west. We have a right to discuss this measure from an Ontario standpoint, and it is wholly from that standpoint that I present my arguments to-day. I believe an injustice is done to the Province of Ontario by this Franchise Act. In the first place, it is unjust to Ontario because it is illiberal. We were told last night by the hon. Minister of Public Works that, in his opinion, this Act was very liberal. He said that from a Quebec standpoint; and not one single hon. member from the Province of Ontario who sits behind him has the moral courage to stand up and speak on behalf of the people he represents. You know, Sir, that both parties in the Province of Ontario are in favor of manhood suffrage. Only two years ago the leader of the Conservative party in the Ontario Legislature moved a resolution in favor of the Government extending manhood suffrage to the young men of that Province, and he was supported in doing so by every Conservative member of the House; and although the Government at that time did not accept the resolution, only two years passed when the Reform party of Ontario enacted a law giving to every young man of the age of 21 years and over the right to vote; and both parties in the Legislature voted unanimously in favor of that Act. Now, Sir, we have in this House a large number of members sitting behind the Government, from the Province of Ontario, and not one of them has put forth a plea for the young men who engaged so actively in their elections and brought out the voters, or asked for them the franchise. As the Dominion Franchise Act does not extend that privilege to the young men of Ontario, we have a right to demand of the Government that the Act should be repealed, in order that the privilege should be extended to them by the more liberal, more enlightened and more progressive Government of Ontario. Now; how do the young men of Ontario argue in regard to this matter? They argue in this way: We are using every year articles upon which duties are imposed, and, therefore, we contribute to the Dominion revenue; we, therefore, should have a voice in the administration of affairs at Ottawa, and in seeing how these moneys are expended; but this right is denied us by the Dominion Government, and if this Act is repealed, the Act of the Ontario Legislature will place us in a position to vote for members of the Dominion Parliament to look after our interests at Ottawa. Again they argue in this way: We have an interest in the public domain of this country. The older people have entered upon their inheritance, but we have not yet entered upon ours; we are standing at the very threshold of our manhood, and should have a voice in the management of that public domain which is being frittered away by the Ottawa Government. Many have pointed out to me a few facts to show how this great inheritance is being dissipated. One gentleman, for instance, who sits in Parliament, received fifty square miles for $250, and realised from the same $200,000. Another hon. gentleman who sits on the Treasury benches, received a grant of land for $316, and the parties into whose hands that went realised on it $50,000 or $60,000. There is another case, that of Hunter's Island, which was sold for $7,500 to private individuals who afterwards re-sold it for $650,000, thus realising a fortune out of the inheritance which properly belongs to the young men of this country. And the Government at Ottawa, under the Dominion Franchise Act, refuses to grant to our young men the privilege of voting, refuses to give them the right of sending men to Ottawa to look after their interests and protect the public domain, which is their inheritance and on which they have not yet entered. These young men say also: We have a right to vote for Dominion members, because if any disturbance arises anywhere in this country, it is we who are expected to shoulder arms and bear the brunt of battle; and they point to the rebellion of 1885, brought about by the maladministration of this Government, brought about by the neglect of their duties towards the Métis of the North-West, and they ask: Who were the men, when that rebellion broke out, who left their farms, and their workshops, and their schools, to fight Canada's battles in the North-West, and restore to this country the harmony we now enjoy? If the Government, they say, can make war and force us into fighting their battles, we demand the right to have a voice in sending men to Parliament to represent our interests. They say also, and with much force, for it is an important matter: Give us a chance, upon the very threshold of manhood, to take our share in the affairs of the country, and you will thereby cultivate among us a national spirit; but if you deny us what the United States grant their young men, we will, as many have done, go to the United States, where the full privileges of citizenship will be conferred upon us, and we will be able to take our part in directing the destinies of the country whose wealth and strength we are building up. Refuse to Canadian young men privileges which other countries grant them, and they will certainly go as many have gone. The hon. the Secretary of State says it is not necessary to revise these lists every year, and he gave us, as instance, his own Province, where, he said, very few changes were taking place, and where the lists revised in one year would do several years without change. Let me mention to him a fact in disproof of that statement. A newspaper in his Province, called La Justice, stated that during the election in Rimouski, it was found that 350 heads of families, who were on the lists in 1886, had disappeared, and they had not disappeared to take up homes in other parts of the Province, but they had gone to the United States, where they can enjoy those privileges which Lower Canada refuses to grant her young men. In the small parish of St. Mathieu, of 200 names on the list, 48 had gone to the United States since 1886, showing conclusively that the people of Lower Canada are moving, and as those who take their places are not added to the lists, the lists consequently are very inaccurate. Another reason I would press in favor of the repeal of the Act is its cumbersomeness. It requires, as everybody who knows anything of its working, a great deal of machinery to operate it. It requires revising officers, clerks, bailiffs, lawyers, and I do not know how many other officials, to revise these lists; and I appeal, in all soberness, to every Conservative member who has had anything to do with the revision, if it has not been very expensive to the people, as well as expensive to the Government. We have lawyers' fees, clerks' fees, appellants' fees and witnesses' fees, to pay, summonses to serve, registration, postage, and many other sources of expenditure, which weigh very heavily upon those interested in the revision; and when you add those expenses to the expenses incurred by the Government, you will find that this Act is a most expensive piece of machinery which is not at all necessary. We used the other lists for seventeen long years. Was there any agitation from any part of the country in favor of a new method? No. Did hon. members urge upon the Government the necessity of establishing a Dominion franchise? Not at all. Did the people hold meetings and pass resolutions in favor of any change? No. Were there any delegations sent to Ottawa to interview the Ministers concerning it? No. There was no move on the part of the people in this direction. Every county and every Province, Conservative and Reform, was perfectly satisfied with the system followed during those seventeen years. I hold, therefore, that the Act, absolutely unnecessary, should be repealed. Another good reason for its repeal, and a very important one, is the question of expense. There has been some discussion with regard to the amount of the expense. I have gone carefully over the Auditor General's Report, and after adding the different items carefully together, I find the expense of the first list amounts to $492,625. Let me give you a few figures with regard to the expense in my own county, and if each hon. member would give the expenses in his own county we could tell closer the aggregate expenditure. In our county it has cost us, according to the Government reports, $8,064 for the one revision. If you will add to that $7,000 for the second revision, you will find $15,064 for the two revisions, and if you will add the expenses entailed upon the two parties fighting the lists through the various courts, you will get $18,000, at least, of expenditure in one solitary county divided into three ridings. According to the population in my county that would be no less than 27 cents per every man, woman, and child in the county, for the two revisions, and there was only one election under the two revisions; so that it cost $1.19 for every voter who was placed upon the list, the number of voters being 15,363; and it comes to $1.61 for every voter who polled his vote at the last election, the number being 11,229. If that is not an expensive method for this country to adopt, I should like to hear some explanation why it is not. I would ask gentlemen opposite, apart from their own political leanings, apart from their interests here, but in the interest of their country, in the interest of their constituency, in the interest of themselves individually, if that is not too much expense to entail upon the people of this country, and that for a law which is absolutely unnecessary for the promotion of the public business. That cost comes to $2.30 on every farm in the County of Huron, and, as that county is largely agricultural, you may say that it amounts to a tax of at least $2 on every farmer. I am almost sorry that my friends battled so nobly as they did in 1885, when they fought here for six or seven weeks, night and day, with a determination, a vim, and, shall I say, a valor, in the interest of the country, which has never been surpassed. If they had allowed that monstrosity of a Bill to pass in the shape in which it was first introduced, I believe the representatives of the people of the country would have repealed it long before this. But, acting in the interests of the country, they gave to the country a Bill which was better and more acceptable than if they had failed in their opposition. The Secretary of State to-day admitted that the fighting of the Opposition at that time had purified the Bill and made it better. That the revising officers being chosen from the judges of Ontario was a better provision than that they should be chosen from the barristers or lawyers of the Dominion, because he believed the judges would be more impartial than the barristers selected from the lawyers of Canada. I believe that to be true. I believe that in many parts the revising barristers are acting as well as they possibly can, but they complain in many places that they cannot understand the Act. They say that the changes which have been made render it almost impossible to harmonise its provisions. I know that the revising barristers who are employed in my county are as good lawyers, and as sincere and honest, as any in the country; but one of the revising barristers told me that the Act was not properly understood, and he blamed the Government for not placing an Act upon the Statute-book which could be more easily understood. The clause alluding to students and others attending schools is difficult to interpret. I appeared before the court in Wingham, in order to get my son on the list, he being twenty-one years of age, and a student in Toronto. The judge decided that the Government having repealed that section in reference to students, my son could not go on the list. Afterwards, however, he got new light, and allowed students to go on; and, when he was asked: Why did you prevent Dr. Macdonald's son from going on? he said that there was another student in the riding who was on the opposite side, and he did not allow him to go on, and the one would balance the other. Was that any satisfaction to me or to my son? I say, therefore, that the law is cumbersome, that it is not well understood, and that it is unjust to the party which is not in power. There is no hon. gentleman opposite who will sit down and talk quietly in regard to this matter, who will admit that he would like to place in the hands of his political opponent the making of the lists on which he is to be elected. I challenge any hon. gentleman opposite to rise in his place and state that he would desire to place such a power in the hands of his political opponent. It is easy to get names on these lists, and, once they are on, it costs at least $2 each to get the names off, and sometimes you cannot get evidence to satisfy the judge. It is altogether unjust to the party in opposition, and, if I were on the side of the Government to-day, I would say the same thing. I ask the House to consider this question on its merits, and to extend the right to Ontario to place on the voters' lists its young men to whom it is prepared to give manhood suffrage. In regard to the Province of Quebec, I agree that the views of those who have spoken should be perfectly considered. They state that they are not prepared to give manhood suffrage to their young men. We spend $6 in Ontario for every $1 which Quebec spends on education, and, therefore, we educate our young men in Ontario so that, when they reach twenty-one years of age, they are fit to exercise the franchise.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I challenge the hon. gentleman's statement.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I will refer my hon. friend to the Statistical Record issued by this Government, wherein the expenses of the educational systems in both Provinces are given. There he will find that we in Ontario last year spent $3,935,000 on educational purposes, while Lower Canada spent $625,000 on educational purposes; and, I think, that is about six to one. I do not say this at all in an offensive spirit to the French Canadians, but I say it in order to show that we are preparing our young men for public life, and that, when they attain their majority, we are ready to pass over to them their share in the government of this country. I think this Government should repeal an Act which has cost so much and which keeps certain classes out of the franchise, so that a more enlightened and progressive Government may give to the young men of Ontario a privilege which the Tory Government at Ottawa refuse to accord.

Mr. LISTER. It seems to me, Sir, that on every occasion this question comes before the House, hon. gentlemen on the other side pursue the tactics they did in 1885, and remain silent or else leave the House. The Government, for the purpose of defending themselves from the attack made by the hon. gentleman who moved this resolution, have put up one of the ablest men in the Cabinet of the day—by all odds the ablest debater, the most eloquent speaker; but if the defence that he has made for the Government is a defence of this Bill, then I say, unhesitatingly, that the Bill is indefensible. Sir, the words which the young Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in his youthfulness and inexperience, thought proper to use to a gentleman on this side of the House the other day—that he “had made the matter as clear as mud”—would apply with great force to the speech made by the Secretary of State. That gentleman is scarcely fair in his criticisms; he is scarcely fair when he states that the Premier of the Province of Quebec had disfranchised the Dominion officials. He ought to have gone on and stated, in all fairness, that the hon. gentleman had also disfranchised every official of the local Government. Sir, I am one of those who believe that it is in the interest of the public service of this country that the men who have pledged themselves, by entering that service, to devote themselves to the service of this country, should be removed from the stir and turmoil of political life, that the moment they become public servants of Canada they should cease to be partisans; and I believe that I voice the feelings of the great majority of the public servants of this country, when I say that if their wish was regarded by the Government, they would not be asked to vote for one party or the other. The hon. gentleman has told us that this discussion in 1885 was a scandalous discussion. He talks about what he knows nothing of. He was not in the House, and he has admitted that he did not even take the pains to peruse the discussion upon that occasion. Did he tell us that the Bill which was introduced by the Government was the most scandalous Bill that was ever introduced into a free Parliament? Did he tell us that if that Bill had become law in the shape in which it was introduced by the First Minister it would have fettered and manacled the electorate of this country, and that it was through the efforts of the Opposition of this House, day in, and day out, that we even have the law as we find it now upon the Statute-book? Did he tell us, that while the members upon this side of the House were battling for the rights of the people at large, the members who support the Government were called in to vote when the bell rang, or that they reposed upon their seats in sleeping postures? Did he tell us that the Finance Minister had found it necessary to bring a pillow into this House in order that he might rest his beautiful head? Did he point out to us the calm appearance of that hon. gentleman when he slumbered so peacefully on his pillow? Why, Sir, it will be for all time a disgrace to the Conservative party of this country, that they should have introduced such a Bill, and it will be a disgrace to the independence of those who supported that measure, that they should have so blindly followed the Government. Sir, that Bill will last as long as the present leader of the Government lasts. I believe that there is not a single man on the Conservative side of the House to-day who, if he expressed his own free wish, would not say that he wished that Bill were repealed—that we should have no such measure as that. I can say that I have spoken to many a Conservative in this House, and I have yet to find one single man amongst them who will admit that it is an honest measure, that it is a good measure, that it is a measure in the interest of this country. I cannot hope to add anything to what has been said in opposition to this Bill; but I conceive it to be my duty, on this and on every other occasion, to the people whom I represent, to emphasise their disapprobation of such a measure as this. I do not complain of the gentleman who has been acting as revising officer in the county which I represent. He has done as fairly as it is possible for a man to do; but I oppose the principle of the Bill because, while revising officers may act fairly, it is within their power to act unfairly and to disfranchise electors throughout the country. The Government put up the Minister of Public Works to defend this Bill. He bobbed up serenely as soon as the leader of the Opposition had closed his speech, and that hon. gentleman's speech was a complete justification for the complaints which we are now making against the measure. He admitted that this Bill was expensive; he did not pretend to say that it was necessary, but he expressed the hope that they might reduce the expenditure required to carry it out. That hon. gentleman referred to the system of government they had in the United States; and I would remark, in passing, that he is not evidently a very close student of the American system of government, because the account which he thought proper to give us was of the most superficial character. Sir, in passing this measure, the Government of the day have invaded the rights of the Provinces, they have usurped the rights of the Provinces, as recognised and admitted for seventeen long years. Suddenly the leader of the Government thinks that it is necessary to deprive the people of this country of the advantages of the system under which they have lived for so many years. He tells us that the present system of preparing voters' lists in this country is in accordance with a federal system. I challenge the Secretary of State, I challenge the Minister of Public Works, the only two men who have dared to get up, out of all the men who support the Government, and make any attempt to defend this iniquitous measure. I challenge these gentlemen to show me any state in the world having a federal system which takes upon itself the preparation of the voters' lists, where these lists are not left to the several provinces or states forming that confederation. This list is an expensive one. As has been truly said by the gentleman who just preceded me: it is not only the cost that the people of the country have to bear in supporting the Government, but it is the cost which individuals have to bear in seeing that the lists for the representation of the parties are fairly made out. I say here that the cost which individuals have to bear in the preparation of these lists almost equals the cost which the Government have to pay for the preparation of the lists. I say that this Act places it in the hands of the Dominion Government, in the hands of the officials appointed by that Government, power to wrong the electors. It is not necessary to say that they have not wronged the electors, for the Act puts it in the power of the officials to do so. It adds enormously to the burdens of an over-taxed people. We have here to-day the Secretary of State admitting that the first revision of this list cost over $400,000, and he tells us that whenever it is revised in the future it will cost over $100,000. I venture the prediction here now, that whenever that list is revised it will cost over $200,000. I say that the estimate that he has given us to-day is entirely inadequate, and does not represent the true amount that has been expended by the Government for the last revision of the list. Sir, in addition to that, what have we upon our hands? If there is a man living, and if there ever was a man born in the world, fond of patronage, the Secretary of State is that man. He lavishes it with a prodigal hand. His friends in the east, west, north and south must live at the public crib, and if they do not get what he wants, he sulks and threatens to resign, until the leader of the Government makes it up again. That hon. gentleman, for the purpose of patronage, for the purpose of placing in his own hands power, invents this magnificent idea of what I call a "white" elephant—the printing bureau. He invents that scheme for the purpose of distributing patronage, nominally because it is necessary to printing the voters' lists of the country. From Vancouver to Prince Edward Island every Tory sheet appears in the Public Accounts for an enormous sum of money. The hon. gentleman said we were going to save that amount by establishing the printing bureau. Look at the Public Accounts, however, and see if it is not a fact that, in spite of the printing bureau, the sheets are down for almost similar amounts as in previous years. With a country such as ours and with the country in its present condition, reckless and profligate extravagance of the people's money should receive the censure of this House. The sum of $400,000, instead of being wasted upon useless printing, on giving us a list that is not accurate, and placing in the hands of appointees of the Government the power to disfranchise any man if they think proper, should be expended in erecting necessary public buildings and works throughout the country, and the Provincial lists should be used. This should be done instead of wasting it upon what must always be looked upon as a vast monument to the folly of the Secretary of State, the printing bureau. Year after year, as time rolls on, it will become a sink-hole of corruption, as surely as I am speaking in this House to-day. The Secretary of State, or whoever manages it, will have to be responsible for it. Strikes and favoritism will characterise it from the beginning to the end, and I am satisfied that he will regret that his inventive genius ever led him to erect such a monument in this country. Sir, it is a waste of the public money. Since this Government has been in power, nine years, they have increased the yearly public expenditure by from $12,000,000 to $14,000,000. Canada was never in such a distressed condition as it is to-day. Our farms have depreciated from 25 to 40 per cent., while everything the farmer wears and uses has increased in cost from 32 to 100 per cent. The markets for our farmers are shut off on account of the Government's policy, and there never has been, in the history of this country, such appalling distress as exists among the people, from the west to the east.

Mr. HESSON. Draw it mild.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman says "draw it mild." The hon. gentleman draws his $1,000 a year here, and from the savings of a frugal life no doubt he has a nice little income at home. He is, therefore, not in a position to sympathise with the working people and the farmers, who to-day are receiving less for their labor than ever before in our history; and such a word from him will not receive a response from the people whom he represents in this House.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. His family are all in the Civil Service.

Mr. LISTER. I will not say anything about that. Our public expenditure is $14,000,000 more than it was in 1878, and it is yearly increasing. The Finance Minister declared that he would reduce the expenditure, and I believe he did reduce it in some small matters; but, in spite of the hon. gentleman's efforts, the expenditure is continuously growing, while the power of the people to pay the taxation is becoming less yearly. The First Minister, in introducing this Act, adopted a cunning device to perpetuate Conservative rule in this Dominion. The first little trick was to gerrymander the whole of the Province of Ontario. In order to do it he found it necessary to have a census taken, and in that census to include as residents of the Province of Quebec people who had long ago left the Province and were living in a foreign country. This was done in order to swell the population of Quebec, and thus give increased representation to Ontario. In order to give those three seats to Ontario, he slashed and divided every constituency from the east to the west, for the purpose of keeping himself in power. He grouped counties giving large Liberal majorities and so divided counties that it was possible for him to stifle the vote of the great Liberal party of the Province and return himself by a very considerable majority. That little scheme was not sufficient. It was feared that an election might still work against the party, and the First Minister introduced what is known as the Franchise Act. Whether it has had the effect of adding to his strength, it is impossible to say. Perhaps I should not have used the word "cunning," so far as the First Minister is concerned. The other day I was sitting at the table with a friend, and a constituent of the hon. member for Selkirk was sitting at one side of the table and, I think, a clergyman at the other. They commenced talking about Sir John A. Macdonald, the leader of the Government. The constituent of the hon. member for Selkirk thought Sir Charles Tupper was the more honest man of the two, that there was no cunning about Sir Charles Tupper, that Sir John A. Macdonald was an old cunning fellow. The clergyman said: That is where you are entirely mistaken; Sir John is not a cunning man at all, he is the most simple man in the world—it is tact you mistake for cunning; tact is a God-given gift, but cunning you know comes from the other source. Following what that gentleman said, I am scarcely accurate in designating the action of the leader of the Government as cunning. Sir, I think this Act is unnecessary, unjust and expensive, and it is the duty of the Opposition, and of every hon. gentleman who is opposed to the measure, to condemn it year after year. For these reasons I shall vote for the resolution of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. EDGAR. It seems that the defence of the Franchise Act has been left to two Ministers from the Province of Quebec. I wonder if it is an indication that the Province of Quebec is the only one in which the Act will be tolerated. If the other Provinces are not to be heard from, I am very much afraid the House and the country will come to that conclusion. Now, Sir, the Minister of Public Works, at any rate, had the advantage of knowing something about the history of the law which he undertook to defend. He was present in the House during its introduction, and, whether he was asleep or not, he was always in his seat when we discussed it. But the hon. the Secretary of State undertook to defend the measure when he did not know anything, from personal knowledge, of the discussion which took place upon it. He told us that he had perused the debate. Perhaps he did; but it did not look much like an attentive perusal, when he claimed for the Government the credit of having appointed the county court judges of Ontario to be revising officers for that Province. If he had perused the debate as he should have done he would have found that the Government proposed to appoint their own nominees among the barristers to decide all questions of law and fact without any appeal whatever, and it was only by working night and day that we, on this side of the House, compelled the Government to make that concession to the public opinion which was aroused on the subject. We had one advantage, however, in hearing the Secretary of State speak to-day. He told us what would be the outside figure of the cost of the revision of 1889, and while I am not at all disposed to think that he is safe in placing the amount at $153,000, still, for the sake of argument, we will assume that that figure is correct. I will ask the hon. the Minister of Finance if $153,000 a year does not represent a capital sum of nearly five millions dollars at the rate at which the last loan was effected for Canada? Even taking the lowest figures given to us by the Government we find that the cost of this annual revision of the lists represents a capital sum of five million dollars; and, consequently, if this motion of my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Wilson) is carried, and if the House repeals this law, the Minister of Finance, without adding one cent to the burthens of the people, can go to London and get five millions to expend on the public works of this country. The Secretary of State further told us, as a Minister of the Crown, that he did not think it was necessary to have a revision of the voters' lists every year. I admire the audacity of that statement, and I do not think I use an unparliamentary term in saying so. Why, Sir, there is no free country in the world which would tolerate a franchise law under which a qualified voter should not have a right to be put on the list every year, nor would it be tolerated that the list should not be purged every year of the bad votes entered upon it. The theory of our Government here is that there may be an appeal to the people whom they represent at any time in any year; and is Parliament to be asked by the Government to suspend the revision of the voters' lists at their mere will, while at any time we may have an appeal to the country? Such a thing should not be allowed to exist. I hold that the declaration we have had to-day from the Secretary of State is the most serious we have heard in the House for a long time, for I believe it to be entirely unconstitutional for this Parliament to prevent the annual revision of the list of voters to elect the members for this House. Suppose an election had taken place in the fall of 1889 (and nobody can ever tell in parliamentary government when an election may be forced upon the people), what condition of things would we have seen? We would have seen a general election, as we have seen many bye-elections take place upon a list of voters, based upon the assessment rolls of 1885. What would we have found in the cities? I know it was so in Toronto, and the members for that city in this House cannot deny it, that if an election had been held in the fall of 1889, there would be many polling places where 75 per cent. of the bonâ fide electors would have been disfranchised; that is to say, that the old lists based upon the assessment roll of 1885, contained more than 75 per cent. of names which ought not to have been there, and which were struck out at the last revision at Toronto. Not only would a large number of genuine voters have been disfranchised if an election had been held then, but 50 per cent. of bad votes which were wrongfully on the lists might have been polled. We have then the fact that men who were not honestly qualified, and who were struck off the lists by the revising officer at the last revision, would have been in a position to vote. I contend that the position taken by the Secretary of State is an absolutely unconstitutional position for any Minister to take. It was not the position taken by the Government when it introduced this Bill. With all their boldness they dared not pretend, and they did not even argue, that there was not to be an annual revision. Why,

Mr. EDGAR.

Sir, at the general election, with all their sins to answer for, if they had, in addition, declared to the people that under the new Franchise Act they proposed to suspend its operation year after year, they could not have carried the country. I do not believe, to-day, that the Government have any intention of appealing to the country at the general elections with any such propositions as the Secretary of State made to-day. They have got to say to the people, at any rate: "We will give you a revision every year, and although it will cost a great deal you are entitled to have it." I think that when I am discussing a question of this kind example may be better than precept, and I will inform the House and the country of some matters which occurred in my own constituency at the last revision of the voters' lists in 1889. There is a prosperous little town there called Uxbridge, in which there is a small but intelligent Reform majority. That town has only three polling places, and when the final revision was coming on I thought it proper to give notice to the revising officer to have some seventy-six Conservative voters struck off the lists, on the ground that they were no longer qualified to vote. I gave the notices properly, and I appeared before the revising judge at Uxbridge. The notices were duly proved, the assessor was brought there, and other evidence was given which showed that all those seventy-six names on the list were those of persons not qualified to vote, and they were struck off. I had supposed that the Conservatives in the riding would probably have given the proper notice to strike off an equal or greater number of the names of Reformers whose votes had become bad by lapse of time, but I certainly did not conceive it my duty to give notice to have Reform votes struck off. The result was that for some reason the Conservatives gave no notice at all in that place; and how does the matter stand to-day? In that small town, with its three polling subdivisions, every single Reform vote that was on the list in 1886, whether good or bad, stands there to-day, and if an election comes on under the present lists, every one of those Reform voters, probably a hundred, who are not now qualified in reality, will be qualified by this Franchise Act to vote as much as any other men on the list, while the seventy-six Conservative names are struck off. That, Sir, is a nice state of affairs. It gives my Conservative friends a taste of their own medicine. It is not our fault on this side of the House, however, because we have pressed on the Government over and over again, whenever the Franchise Act has been before the House, to put in an oath of qualification, which will check the casting of votes of that kind, but the Government refuse to do so, and insist that the reviser's list must be final. That is an illustration of the practical working of this beautiful Franchise Act. I say that a law which will allow that sort of thing should never be on the Statute-book. It should be repealed, not only on the general principles which we have heard discussed to-day, and on which its repeal may be justified, but the practical operation of the Act is so outrageous that the people of this country should not tolerate it any longer.

Mr. CURRAN. I think the discussion which has taken place in the last two days on this subject must convince this House that hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken would have done far better, one and all, to have said ditto to the speech of their hon. leader, than to have reiterated, more or less forcibly, the arguments adduced by him in his opening speech, as they have done, in their attempts to debate this question. We have heard the same statements made over and over again, without one solitary new idea being expressed on the subject. We have been told over and over again that this law is an invasion of the rights of the Provinces; and in the speech of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), who followed the hon. Secretary of State, any force put into that argument by the hon. leader of the Opposition was lost in his manner of treating the subject. We all know, or ought to know, that there is not one tittle of evidence to show that there is the slightest invasion of the rights of the Provinces by the Dominion Parliament in passing this Act. The passing of this Act was specially provided for. The Provincial lists were to serve until such a law as this was enacted, and that law having been enacted, it has not been claimed anywhere that it is unconstitutional, and it cannot be shown, except by assertion, that any right or privilege of the Provinces has been assailed or in any way infringed upon. The hon. leader of the Opposition said that whilst we had heard great complaints of this law in various parts of the Dominion, we had never yet heard one word of commendation for it. I may say that I have heard and read a great deal of commendation of this law. But it is not surprising that hon. gentlemen opposite should not have heard it; they hear things very late; when other people are convinced of things, they are entirely in the dark. For instance, on the 23rd of February, 1887, there was not a newsboy in any of the streets of the Dominion who did not know that hon. gentlemen opposite had been routed—horse, foot and artillery; but, strange to say, hon. gentlemen and their organs proclaimed that they had a majority of three—so much so that even till the 28th of February the Toronto Globe was still claiming that they had carried the country, and that this Government must go before very long. Therefore, it is not surprising that on a matter of this kind they should be still in the dark. But, more than that: we remember the discussion which took place in this House, and which made this House almost a laughing-stock in the country, owing to the manner in which hon. gentlemen opposite conducted it. After this question had been seriously discussed for seven or eight days, those gentlemen continued discussing it and everything else, from Milton's "Paradise Lost," down to "Jack the Giant Killer," and almost every other conceivable thing that could be thought of, and after several weeks the Bill became law. One would have supposed that after making this exhibition of themselves in the House, they would have carried on the warfare in the country; but what did they do? Two of the leading spirits of the Opposition went through the country, and discussed the trade question, the North-West question, and other questions, but on no platform was the Franchise Act assailed, on no platform did they say one word about it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh!

Mr. CURRAN. Well, if they discussed it and went thoroughly into it, the people condemned them by a large majority, and still they have not learnt their lesson; they look on the people of Canada as five or six million people, mostly fools, and that is what leaves them in the lurch, where they were when discussing this Act before. But we are told that we should take the franchises from the Provinces. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the Local Legislatures, or those who control them, would attend to their own affairs, we might be justified in allowing them to manage the franchise. But when we see them upon every conceivable occasion not attending to their own affairs, but endeavoring, by means of the power they hold, to interfere with the franchise and make it suit their own purposes, we cannot tolerate in this House that our rights should be taken away and that they should dictate to us who shall come here. Only last year in the Province of Quebec what did we find? We found the Premier of the Province undertaking to disfranchise thousands of men, against the principles of his own party, against what had been preached by his own leader, and by the greatest men of the Liberal party from time immemorial, and against the protestations of the strongest Liberals in the Local Legislatures,—Liberals, not men who had stolen the livery of heaven to serve the devil, but true Liberals, like Lareau and others. Mr. Lareau, in his speech, emphasised as follows the doctrines of the Liberal party:—

"They were face to face with an electoral reform; they had to decide, yes or no, whether a large number of honorable men should be deprived of the right to vote. It was said it would be better for the employé, while others pretended it had been tried in other assemblies and created trouble. Again, had the promoters of this Bill been requested by these employés to deprive them of voting? He did not know, but did not think so. He concluded by quoting a number of authorities opposed to restricting the right of voting to any class of citizens."

Are we to adopt here that principle? Are we to allow a large class of people to be thus disfranchised—a disfranchisement which is not merely against our principles, but against the principles of the party the promoters of that Bill claimed to represent? What did the Hon. Sir Antoine Aimé Dorion, one of the most eminent leaders the Liberal party ever had in this country, say, in 1874, when dealing with the question as to whether those people should have the right to vote. He said:

"With the ballot I do not see why public officials should not vote. With the ballot everybody should vote." That was the doctrine laid down by Sir A. A. Dorion when he occupied a seat here on the ministerial benches. What has been done in the Province of Quebec has been done elsewhere. The hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries showed in his speech during the last debate on this question, that twice within eighteen months in Nova Scotia the gentlemen who controlled affairs there had changed the electoral franchise, in order to carry out their own purposes. In what position would we find ourselves under the old system? In this position: that upon the eve of an election, any Province whose local authorities were opposed to the Dominion authorities here would be found enacting such a law as to prevent an honest expression of opinion and curtail the privileges and rights of the people. There are various other subjects on which those gentlemen have shown that they are not animated by proper motives. Has it not been apparent to everyone that the majority who now hold power in the Provinces will not restrain themselves within the limits of their own jurisdiction?

What did we see in the interprovincial conference, that great manœuvre on the part of the Premier of Quebec? Did the representatives at that conference manifest any desire to confine themselves to their own affairs? Not at all; they went beyond all their attributes, they dictated what should be the fiscal policy of this country, and what should be its trade relations with other countries. They told us we should do away with the veto here, and transfer it over to Downing street, and thus go back perhaps fifty years or more in the constitutional history of our country. It is to such people we are asked to commit our franchise; it is to them we are asked to leave the decision as to who shall occupy seats in this House. The proposition is absurd. Further, the interests at stake are different. The subjects confided to each Parliament, whether local or Dominion, are different; and the franchise that may suit a local Parliament, having to deal with local affairs, may not suit the Dominion Parliament. That must be apparent to the mind of the most superficial observer. Under all the circumstances, and in view of the fact that, while in some parts the franchise has been slightly restricted, in others it has been largely extended and made nearly uniform, considering that the principle at the bottom of the law is one which meets, and has met, with the approval of the people, I am opposed to any change. In the Province of Quebec this franchise law has greatly extended the franchise, and I have never heard one word raised against it in any of the large cities. Hon. gentlemen opposite dare not, in the face of the working classes, where the wage-earners have been given a vote, go before the people and say they are opposed to this Act. We never heard a remark in the Province of Quebec about this nine weeks' debate, such as those which have been uttered here to-day. The people would have felt that they had been unjustifiably treated, that the money of this country had been expended in an unjustifiable manner, in indemnifying members for six months sitting, when one-half of the time would have sufficed to do the business of the House. That was an enormous expenditure brought about by the attempt of hon. gentlemen opposite to destroy the working of our parliamentary institutions; and the people of this country in the general election which followed showed, by the confidence they expressed in the Administration of the day, that this Parliament had done its duty in passing this law and in asserting its right to say who shall or shall not have representation here. That verdict was one which hon. gentlemen opposite should have taken to heart; but so long as they ignore the facts, so long will they fail to gain the confidence of the people. We have no right to complain, and we do not complain of their course. We are satisfied with the meaningless tactics they adopt on this and other subjects, because they secure to the Conservative party continuance in office.

Mr. McMULLEN. I did not intend to take up the time of the House in discussing this important question, had it not been for the speech delivered by the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran). I must say that I usually admire his style when he addresses the House. He is usually pretty good in delivering an intemperate speech on an occasion of this kind. There are two things in which the hon. gentleman excels: one is performing a duty of the kind he has performed to-day, and the other is singing "Old King Cole," and I cannot really say in which he excels. Now, we have had a little experience in this House of the operation of the Franchise Act in the constituency which the hon. gentleman represents. In that constituency it worked very well in the hon. gentleman's interests, so far as we can judge by the evidence brought before this House. It was shown to this House pretty plainly, that a number of men who were engaged upon the canal in Montreal, were removed from their positions through influence brought to bear on the Minister of Public Works, simply, because they did not comply with the request presented by the hon. gentleman's friend, and vote in the proper way. That is the manner in which the Franchise Bill worked in the interest of the hon. gentleman in Montreal, and because that measure assisted him very much he is evidently very grateful to it. In regard to this measure, I believe the country could well do without it. I believe the system which we had in the past, of electing the members of this House on the electoral lists previously adopted, was more perfect and more satisfactory to the people. They understood that system better and were better pleased with those lists than they are with the present list. We have the opportunity of taking advantage of the municipal lists, which are in a more perfect condition than the present Dominion list; and, I think, at present it is desirable, in view of the crippled condition of the finances of this country, that the Dominion list should be dispensed with and that this Act should be repealed. There is no necessity for it. Throughout the municipalities of this country we have men, both Conservative and Reform, who are elected to discharge the duty of preparing the municipal list, and they are men better qualified to judge who is properly qualified to vote than any judge or other revising officer can be. These men are discharging that duty most admirably, and we have the lists which they prepare without costing the Dominion anything. When we have those lists at hand and can obtain them without cost, it is altogether an unnecessary expense to keep on the Statute-book a measure which is cumbersome, which is hard to work, and which is not satisfactory to the electors themselves. I am sure that, if the friends of the Government would speak their minds, they would admit that this measure is not acceptable to them. We have not had a single man on the Government side from the Province of Ontario, get up to defend the present Act. All those who have defended it on that side, have come from the Province of Quebec. The Secretary of State led the way. It is fitting that he should do so. He was not in the House during the long debate which took place on this measure, but he says it was an unwarrantable thing on the part of the Opposition to delay the passage of that measure. But, Mr. Speaker, we brought the Government to their knees on that occasion. They came to time. We made them come to time. We made it known to them, by the determined stand we took on that occasion, that we would not allow the Government to take into their own hands the power to appoint the men who were to revise the voters' lists. After we went up to midnight on Saturday, after a sitting of, I think, 66 hours, on the Monday morning the Government came down and gracefully accepted our proposition that the county judges should be the revising officers, and that only when they declined to act would the Government retain the right to appoint the revising officers. We notice that a little advantage was taken of us even in that regard, because we have in Ontario now eight or nine junior judges who were appointed in counties, not because their services were required, not because the work of the county judge was more than he could properly perform, but simply because it was necessary to charge to the expenses of the judiciary, and to add to the list nine judges in order to make them revising barristers, and that was done. However, on the whole, the judges have discharged their duties very creditably. In my riding, the judge who revised the list set to work to get the best and purest list he could get, but the supporters of the Government themselves in that riding are so disgusted with the working of the Act that they declined to take the necessary steps to purge the list of those who should not be on it this year. I am sure there are 150 men who are registered in my constituency to-day as voters who should not be on the list, if it were a proper one, but their names are there because the people would not go to the trouble to get the names removed. That being the condition of things, the Act itself proves, by the experience which the people have had of it, that it is not a proper Act. The people should not have to go before a judge, and to take all the steps required to get themselves put in such a position as to exercise the franchise. It is unfair that the people should be put to that trouble. I say that men should be enrolled without any action on their part, except that of giving their names to the assessor, and, if their names appear on the assessment roll, they should be put on the voters' list. Any additional trouble to which they are put is unnecessary and uncalled for, and should not be tolerated. There are a great many features in this Act which require improvement. In the first place, my experience in the last revision was this: I believe it was the intention that young men who were away attending college or learning their profession, whether it was that of a mechanic or any other calling, should have the right to be registered. We went to the revision this year with the expectation that such men would be put on, but, when we commenced the revision, and the judge began to look into the Act, we found that the very clause which enabled the revising officer to put these young men on the list had been rescinded in the last amendment of the Act, and the judge was powerless to put these men on the list. I know that, in my own riding, there are dozens who are justly entitled to be put on the voters' list whose names do not appear. I hope that, unless the Government decide to rescind the Act altogether, they will, at all events, amend it, so as to enable these young men to be put on the list. The feeling in my riding in regard to this Act, on the part of my political opponents, is that it is a most expensive, a most annoying and almost an unworkable Act, because of the trouble to which they had to go in order to send out notices, and so on. Then, last year the Postmaster General raised the amount to be paid on registered letters, and now, instead of paying three cents and two cents for registration, it is necessary to put a stamp of five cents for registration, in addition to the three cents when you want to give a man notice that he is to be struck off the list. In many cases the notices have been sent to men who were dead, or who had gone to the States, or who had gone somewhere else, and I have no doubt that the men employed in the Dead Letter office have had a great deal of their time occupied in examining these letters, which were sent to men notifying them that they were to be struck off the list.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. McMULLEN. When you left the Chair, we had been discussing the question, whether it would be wise, in the interests of this country, to rescind the Franchise Act. That question has received the consideration of this House at every Session that has been held since its passage. Frequently we have had to amend that Act, but notwithstanding the amendments made to it, the people are not by any means satisfied with the continuation of that Act upon the Statute-book. We feel it our duty, under these circumstances, to press upon the Government seriously to consider the propriety of rescinding the whole measure, and going back to the old system by which members of this House were elected for a great many years. Now, I contend, that under the present circumstances, there is no necessity for the continuation of that Act. We are aware that a considerable agitation exists throughout the country with regard to the question of dual language. Well, Sir, we have a dual system of electing members; we have a dual franchise list: we have a Provincial franchise list and a Dominion franchise list. The Provincial franchise list is prepared by the very same men who prepare the Dominion franchise list—that is to say, the judges are the ultimate authority for purging the Provincial list of any names that should not be on it, and the same judges are the men who purge the Dominion list. Consequently the same lists are perfected by the same ultimate authority, and, under these circumstances, I consider it is altogether unnecessary, in view of the present financial embarrassment to which the people of this country have been subjected, owing to the increase of the national debt and the demands upon our resources, that we should maintain this cumbersome Act which costs the people three or four hundred thousand dollars a year. The Act was not introduced because there was a general expression of opinion throughout the country that it was necessary. There was no expression of opinion whatever. There were no petitions sent to this House asking that such an Act should be passed; but the First Minister conceived in his own mind the desirability of controlling the electorate throughout this Dominion, and of placing under the control of the Government of the day the power of saying virtually who should vote and who should not vote. When that Act was introduced, as has already been stated to the House, it contained a great many objectionable provisions. Those provisions were eliminated by the persistent efforts of the Reform party, to try and secure as good an Act as possible, if an Act we were to have at all. If that Act had been passed with all the provisions it contained when it was brought down to the House, I believe the people of the country would have risen to such a feeling of indignation that the Government would have been compelled to rescind the Act at once. The Secretary of State said to-night, that there was no great necessity for an annual revision. Now, I think that if the Act is to be kept in force at all it should be revised annually. I am sure those who have taken part in the revision that was made this year, have come to the conclusion that anything less than annual revision will be a great mistake. Taking the old lists this year, that were issued in 1886, and taking those that have to be made in order to make even the imperfect list that has been produced this year, about one-half of the old names that were on the old list have been eliminated, and about as many more have been added. That shows of itself that the changes that are going on in the municipalities and in the towns from time to time, require that if the electors are to be placed in a position that they can exercise their franchise, should any emergency arise, the list should be revised annually. I say it is unfair to the people of this country that their rights to exercise the franchise should be controlled by any Government, and that the Government of the day should be empowered to say just when they shall be properly enrolled, and when they shall be permitted to exercise that right. The Government should not ask to have such a power. I say that if we are to have an electoral franchise list at all, the law should be put in such a shape that the judges should be the absolute power to revise the list, and the Government should have nothing to say as to when the revision should take place. A revision should take place every year. If there is anything at all sacred to the people of this Dominion, it is the right to exercise the franchise, when it becomes necessary that they should do so, and if the law is to remain upon the Statute-book, we should have an annual revision. The Secretary of State said to-night that the first revision cost $413,000. Well, Sir, I am quite sure from my personal experience, and also from the opinions I have gathered from other members of Parliament, that it has cost the members of this House another $413,000 in paying lawyers, paying the expenses of issuing summonses, attending to all the necessary routine to get a man put on or to get a man struck off. I am positively certain that if every member of this House were to count his own valuable time, or the time he took to engage others to attend to these particular duties, the steps necessary to bring parties before the court, or to have the names struck off, it would be found to have cost them at least $413,000 more to carry out the revision of the list the first year. This would make the cost in the neighborhood of a million dollars. Now, the Secretary of State says that, with the changes he has made, the experience he has gathered from the past, he is able to present the country with a revision this year that will only cost $151,357. I say any person that has taken notice of the manner that the revision has been conducted throughout the country this year, will come to the conclusion at once that the revision is not as perfect and complete as the one that was made in 1886, because the necessary machinery for providing for a thorough and proper voters' list has not been put in force in each riding. I contend that the necessary steps have not been taken in a great many cases to procure a proper list in each riding. Even admitting the work can be done for $150,000 a year, it will cost members and candidates a large sum to secure a revision on their own side of politics in their respective counties and ridings. Calculating that it will cost a further sum equal to that mentioned by the Secretary of State, $150,000, the cost will aggregate over $300,000 as that involved in obtaining the revision of this year. I am satisfied that that sum is far under the mark, because the Secretary of State has not obtained the returns from several revising officers; and although the hon. gentleman may have made a careful estimate as to the entire cost, I have no doubt that the expenditure will reach nearer $200,000 than $150,000. Supposing the cost to be $175,000, I wonder if it would not be much more acceptable to the electorate, particularly to the farming community, if that amount had been devoted in granting a bounty for every lamb exported. We exported 365,000 lambs last year, and on these a bounty was paid of 50 cents per head to get them into the American market, which is the only market available. Supposing it were decided that instead of spending this amount on the Franchise Act, each farmer should be paid 50 cents per lamb exported, the outlay would reach $175,000, and a revision of this list would cost about the same amount. If the Government adopted this course, the farmers would be most grateful for that small sum, rather than have the expenditure made on the Franchise Act. But if the Act is to remain on the Statute-book, there should be a revision held annually, and the judges for the several counties should fix a period within which a revision should take place and conduct the work themselves, being paid a fixed sum for their services, and provided with the necessary amendments to the Act to secure a proper and cheap revision. Suppose the Government met with a defeat during the present Session, is there a correct list on which an appeal could be taken? Large numbers of young men who are of age and who are attending our collegiate institutions and seminaries are not on the list for the present year. The reason is that the section referring to them was eliminated last Session when amendments were before the House. I do not think it was the intention of the Minister of Justice to rescind it, but it was rescinded, and many young men who were previously on the voters' list are now deprived of the privilege of voting. In my own riding there are many young men of over twenty-one years, some of whom have been studying law or medicine during one-half the year, who are not entitled to vote, because the provision covering their case was rescinded. I, therefore, hold that even if the expenditure of the revised lists was $150,000, it was virtually thrown away, because there had not been any proper revision. Why should we suspend the revision of the voters' list for a year any more than we should suspend the drill of our volunteers? We expend public money in order to have the volunteers drilled, in order to have an efficient corps. On the other hand, if we are to have the electorate qualified to efficiently discharge their duties as electors, we want a revision to be made every year, so that at any moment, when an emergency arises, they will be properly enrolled and be prepared to record their votes. The Act is objectionable for several reasons. First, on account of its expense. It imposes unnecessary expense on the country and on candidates for Parliament, and it is generally conceded that the Act is cumbersome and unnecessary, and the people will be glad to have it rescinded. Further, it is troublesome and annoying. Men have had to walk several miles to have their names placed on the voters' list, when there was no reason why they should be put to that trouble. Had the municipal lists been adopted, men could have attended to their ordinary avocations instead of travelling to distant points in order to secure the right to exercise the franchise under the present Act. Another effect of the Act will be this: that poor men will be unable to afford to become candidates, and will be driven from public life, because of the very large amount of expenses they will be called upon to pay to watch the revision of the list. Members of Parliament have to make considerable sacrifices in attending to their duties, but under the present system, on returning home, they are obliged to put in force necessary machinery to secure proper and exact revision of the voters' list. This is troublesome to members and one which should not be imposed upon them, and this will be the means of driving from political life a great many who otherwise would be elected and would prove ornaments to this House. The Government should not seek to control the franchise of the country. If we are to have a Dominion Franchise Act let us give the whole power to the judges, taking advantage of the municipal machinery of the Provinces and preparing a list over which they will have no control. My own impression is, and I am confident it is the feeling of many Conservatives, that the Act was one that originated with the First Minister, and that it was pressed on his friends and the House because the hon. gentleman made a personal request on his party to place it on the Statute-book. I have no doubt that when he ceases political life, or drops off, the Act will be rescinded; but with that absolute devotion to the First Minister which characterises his followers, hon. gentlemen opposite will support the Act because their leader wishes to have this power, so that the electors will be subjected to be placed on the voters' lists in accordance with, and at whatever time the Government choose to hold a revision. With the present stringency in the money market and the great desire to cut down the annual expenditure, the Government should, in their wisdom, abolish the Act and revert to the old system which has operated so faithfully and well in the interest of all parties, and was not objected to by any, in place of expending this $400,000 a year to keep a law on the Statute-book which is offensive and annoying to everybody who has anything to do with it.

Mr. PLATT. It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is unnecessary to multiply arguments or to reiterate the statements which have been made in support of the motion now before the House. Every member of this House has had the benefit of an experience of what is known as the Dominion Franchise Act during the last few years, and anyone who has benefited by that experience, cannot fail to have arrived at the conclusion that there exists on our Statute-book to-day no Act more unpopular among the people of this country than this same Franchise Act. I am convinced, Sir, that from every part of the Province from which I come, the prevailing opinion amongst both political parties is that we were better with the Provincial lists in days gone by, than we are with the Dominion lists to-day. The universal opinion among the people is that the Act was unnecessary in the first place, that it is expensive, and that a vast amount of trouble ensues every year in the revision of these lists. We have not only to consider the cost which it is to the country directly, but I am sure that hon. members of both sides will agree with me that there is nothing more disturbing to our peace and happiness, and, I may say, prosperity, than that during the summer months many of the leading men of both parties should be engaged for weeks, and sometimes for months, assisting in the revision of the voters' lists. It has been truly said that the revising officers throughout the country have done their duty, and done it well. I believe that is true of the majority of those officers, but I think, Sir, if you consult the revising officers they will tell you that their success very large depends upon the assistance rendered them by private individuals—by those who receive no pay for their services, but who expend large sums out of their own pockets in order to render that assistance to the revising officers. In the Province of Ontario, (for which I am better able to speak than the other Provinces) I know that upon many platforms of the country, during the bye-elections of the last few years, this Act has been almost universally attacked. It has been stated here to-day, that very few were found sufficiently courageous to attack this law upon the platforms of the country. My experience, Sir, is just the reverse. It has been universally attacked, and I have not yet found a man courageous enough to defend it on a public platform in our part of the country. So unpopular is this Bill, that on many occasions I have heard supporters of the Government of the day declare they were in favor of the repeal of the Act, and pledge themselves to vote for its repeal in case they were elected. I have here in my hands, both the Provincial and Dominion lists. Here is the Provincial list, nicely printed. Ask any sensible man in the community, if it does not contain all the names of men in the county who have a right to vote, and ask him also which list he prefers and which is the most convenient? The universal expression of opinion is that the Provincial lists are the fullest, the most complete, and, by all odds, the best lists on which to proceed with an election. The people prefer Provincial lists, and we can very truly say to them: "You can use that Provincial list without a dollar of expense, or you can take the more defective and a worse list, and use it at an expense to the country of some two or three hundred thousand dollars annually." There can be only one answer to the question: Which do you prefer? And that answer generally is: "We prefer the Provincial list, and wish to return to the system of some years ago." The debate of to-day has drawn out a phase of the question which was not so prominently brought forward in the earlier debate on the subject, and that is, that the representatives of the Province of Quebec on the Government side are those who are principally interested in the support of this measure. I do not remember if such was the case when this Bill was introduced in 1885, but it seems to me that those gentlemen who have taken up arms in support of this Bill from the Province of Quebec have placed themselves not altogether in the most favorable position in the eyes of their fellow-countrymen. The Minister of Public Works, assisted by the Secretary of State, and ably supported by the member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), all cry out against the Province of Quebec, as though that Province was incapable of itself of making such a voters' list as would be acceptable to the people. They seem to ask the other Provinces to come to their assistance and relief. They say that this wonderful man, Mr. Mercier, has done some wonderfully wicked things in connection with the franchise of the people, and they ask for the assistance of the other Provinces. Is Mr. Mercier the whole of the Province of Quebec? Do they have a responsible Government in that Province? Is the Ministry of that Province not responsible to the people, and are not the people themselves responsible for the acts of that Government? Whatever may be charged against Mr. Mercier and his Government, can be indirectly charged against the people of the Province. I say it is unfair for the members of that Province to come to this House and ask assistance to help them to crush out what is the public opinion in the Province of Quebec. If the Government of that Province has done wrong let the people be responsible for it, for they have the remedy in their own hands. For my part, I am perfectly willing to trust the people of Ontario. If Mr. Mowat's Government should do anything which the people there believe to be decidedly wrong, Mr. Mowat shall be called to account, and the people of the Province shall take the responsibility on themselves. I think it would be more manly for the representatives of the Province of Quebec to say, that when a Government does wrong: "We, the people of Quebec, will bring them to account, and we will see that no such illegal and unholy transaction shall be allowed to go unpunished." We have heard it said, Mr. Speaker, that the leader of the Opposition is disagreeing with most of his followers on the subject of manhood suffrage. I believe, Sir, it may be truly said, that those who advocated the continuance of this measure to-day are disagreeing with a large majority of their supporters of the Conservative party of this country. We know very well what is the opinion of that party in Ontario on this Franchise Act, and we know very well the awkward position in which the Conservatives from Ontario in this House are placed, when they are called upon to deny to their own Province the fulfilment of that opinion which they have expressed at the polls their Government should carry into effect. We know that a demand for manhood suffrage is the prevalent opinion existing in Ontario, and yet we have the representatives of that Province in this House denying their people the same justice and the same rights with regard to the elections for the Dominion House, which they now enjoy in regard to the Provincial Legislature. I believe, Sir, that the leader of the Government is, perhaps, not exactly in accord with some of the gentlemen who have spoken on his own side of the House to-day. I have never heard that the Premier was so strongly opposed to manhood suffrage. I think I can remember distinctly, when, in 1885, in justification of giving votes to the Indians, he gave as one of his principal arguments, that the Indian of the country paid in to the revenue as well as the white man. The Indian, he told us, wore taxed clothes and paid for taxed tobacco, and, perhaps, excised whiskey, just as well as the white man, and this he strongly put forward as a justification for giving votes to the Indians. It may be that that argument holds good in regard to the Indians and does not hold good in the case of the wage-earners and farm laborers of Ontario, who, by this Act, are largely excluded from the exercise of the franchise. It is an unfortunate occurrence, though perhaps not intentional, but it has been brought to the attention of the Government time and again, that by the provisions of this Act which we are now attacking, very many farm laborers in Ontario are excluded from the franchise as their earnings, in nine-tenths of the cases, do not come up to the amount required by the law. Now, Sir, I again express that dissatisfaction which I have always expressed, and I think I am justified in the ground I have taken in voting for the motion of my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Wilson), and I believe that we, on this side of the House, are justified, whenever the occasion presents itself, in attacking this measure. We may be accused of prolonging a debate, but you know very well, Sir, the feeling that has ever been manifested by members on this side of the House with regard to that Act, and we are doing nothing more than showing our extreme earnestness in endeavoring to promote the welfare of the people. I am sincere in my belief that the welfare of the Dominion of Canada will be greatly promoted by the passing of the motion of my hon. friend, and I will heartily give it my support.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, we are at present being treated to our annual dissertation on the evils of the franchise laws; but it is amusing and interesting to those who have occupied seats in this House for a number of years to observe the change which takes place year after year in the nature of that discussion. The first and most notable time that the Bill was under discussion, in 1885, almost the entire gist of the arguments advanced by hon. gentlemen opposite was that the Government were controlling the franchise of the country, that the law was intended to favor Conservatives and work against Reformers, that it would not be administered fairly, and that the opponents of the Government would not receive fair play in the making up of the lists. They were told that in all probability the lists would be made up by the judges of the land, in whom almost all the electors of the country had confidence. But at that time the members of the Opposition seemed to have no confidence in them. As time advanced and the Act went into operation, experience proved that the fears of the Opposition were not realised, because when we came back the following Session, although there were a number who still contended that the Act was unfair to the opponents of the Government, there was not anything like such a consensus of opinion on that side of the House that they were unfairly dealt with as there was before in anticipation. The following year we had the subject under discussion again, when we heard still less about the lists being unfairly made up. This year we have not heard a single complaint of that kind, well grounded or sustained, by anyone throughout this discussion, but to-day the gist of the argument is the expensiveness of the Act. For the purpose of making that argument still stronger, some of them have pressed into service the noted printing bureau and its expensiveness, and they have mixed the two things together to attempt to show to the country that the carrying out of this Act is enormously expensive. They have not attempted to divide the expense fairly, to show how much the franchise law is responsible for, and how much the printing bureau. They seem to forget that before we had the printing bureau we had the printing done by contract at a great expense, and that much of the printing was so unsatisfactory that many members of this House expressed a desire that the printing should be under the control of Parliament, because it would be done better, more cheaply and more expeditiously. The Franchise Act had nothing to do with the establishment of the printing bureau; but because the work of printing the lists is done there, these hon. gentlemen drag in the cost of that bureau in their attempt to convince the people that the Franchise Act is responsible for it. Hon. gentlemen talk about the Provincial lists, which they say we have already without costing us anything. Is that a fair argument? Do those lists cost us nothing? The only difference is that the making up and printing of the Dominion lists is borne by the Government, while the cost of the Provincial lists is made up out of direct taxation, paid by the people in the municipalities. Which is the most easy to be borne? Which is felt the most? The people must feel the cost less when the work is done by the Government, and when they are not taxed directly for it. The Provincial lists must be made up and printed. The judges who revise them must be paid, as well as the judges who revise the Dominion lists; so that I do not see how any gentleman can advance the argument that the Provincial lists cost nothing. It is true they cost this Parliament nothing, but if a fair calculation is made, I believe it will be found that they cost the people as much as the Dominion lists, while they feel the expense a great deal more. The hon. member for South Brant told us that in 1885, hon. gentlemen opposite decided that they would every Session bring up this question, and endeavor to have this Act repealed. They came to that conclusion, notwithstanding that the Act might turn out to be one of the best ever put on the Statute-book. They cared not whether it was a good Act or a bad Act, but religiously made that solemn agreement, and they have carried it out, and I suppose they will do so every Session in the future, and that we shall only hear the last of that Act when the last member of the present Opposition dies out. The hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt), after advancing what he has been pleased to call a few arguments, but what I think are merely statements or assertions, says: "I think I have advanced sufficient arguments to satisfy the people that this is an obnoxious law, and should be repealed." What are the arguments he advanced? The sole one was in answer to an hon. gentleman who stated that this Act had not been discussed on the public hustings at the last elections and had not been condemned. The hon. gentleman said: "My experience is the reverse; it was discussed on every platform." Yet, we find that those persons who are responsible for putting it on the Statute-book were not condemned by the electors. Is it not a curious circumstance that although the Act was so obnoxious that no supporter of the Government would defend it, the electors sent the same men back to Parliament with increased majorities as an indication that they believed that the laws those men were making were for the welfare of the country? Suppose the Act is expensive; have we any law on the Statute-book about which the same cannot be said? I think it is not a valid argument against any law to say that it is expensive. Is not the Supreme Court law expensive to the country? And yet we have several times refused to repeal that law, because it was sanctioned by the matured judgment of able legislators; and if that were a valid argument, it might be used against almost every useful law, whether civil or criminal, which we have on the Statute-book to-day. Then, again, the question is raised whether we should have the lists revised annually or only once in a few years. There seems to be a difference of opinion amongst the members of the Opposition on that point, some saying that the lists ought to be revised annually, and others urging that the expense of revising annually would be so great that that should not be done. From what I can gather from the arguments of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), I am inclined to the opinion that he would like to see the lists annually revised, if for no other purpose than to furnish him in the future with the argument that the annual revision is so expensive the Act ought to be done away with. If I am correctly informed, in some of the Maritime Provinces the lists are only made up periodically before each general election, and there have been no complaints that this plan did not work well.

Mr. EDGAR. What Province is that in?

Mr. SPROULE. In Prince Edward Island, if I am correctly informed. There is a tendency in the legislation of this Parliament to make as far as possible our laws universally applicable over the whole Dominion. For instance, we have the Joint Stock Companies' Act, under which companies are incorporated; the Railway Act, the chartering of Dominion railways; and this Act we passed in the endeavor to make a general law on the subject applicable to every Province, which would be much more definite, easily understood and much more national in character than could be any local law. Our criminal law, also, we have endeavored to make applicable over the whole country, as well as our commercial law, and our laws concerning trade and navigation and insurance. In every matter, the tendency of legislation of this Parliament is towards endeavoring to make our laws universal, so that the people in all sections of the Dominion may be subjected to the one system of laws. If that uniformity is found desirable in other lines, why not in this? But, outside of that, the very strongest argument possible lies in the fact that we should have the same franchise for the election of members from every part of the Dominion to this Legislature, and not have each Province exercising a different franchise. Ontario has manhood-suffrage, Quebec has a different franchise, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and British Columbia have different franchises. Now, I hold that as we all come here to sit in the same Parliament, we should endeavor to be elected by the same class of constituents in every part of the Dominion. We should have members from Prince Edward Island elected by the same class of constituents as those from British Columbia and Manitoba.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is not the law, and the hon. gentleman voted that it should not be the law.

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell the hon. gentleman that, comparatively speaking, that is the law. Hon. gentlemen opposite had better wait for their laugh until they get something to laugh about. There is no law in all the world which has not some slight exception, and this law is, with one or two exceptions, for the purpose of making it suitable to differences that exist, in harmony with the principle of uniformity on which it is based. We all know that the Provincial Legislatures, in the different Provinces of the Dominion, were tampering with the franchises upon which members of this Legislature were elected. We knew that to be the case, and when we found that to be the case, it was time the Dominion Parliament should step in and take that power out of the hands of the Local Legislatures. What would Mr. Mowat say to-day if the Dominion Government were to change the basis of the franchise on which members are elected to the Ontario Legislature? What would Mr. Mercier say in Quebec if the Dominion Government took the franchise out of his hands? How indignant would not the people of Quebec be if we were to interfere with their local franchise. Yet we are asked to sit quietly by while the Local Legislatures are tampering with the Dominion franchises, and make no effort to remedy the grievance. If there was only one instance instead of dozens given us of this local interference, this Government would be entitled to take under their own control the Dominion franchise, and make a general franchise law applicable to the whole country. In my opinion the arguments advanced against the franchise law are every year becoming less and less—less powerful and less logical; and as time will prove the expediency and value of the law, and as we improve the law from time to time, almost every argument will be swept away from under the feet of hon. gentlemen opposite. When we improve it from year to year, as experience will show, in certain lines it may be changed and as we simplify it and reduce the cost we will find in a few years hence that hon. gentlemen who so strongly oppose the law to-day will be left without a single argument to advance against this measure. It is intended for a good purpose, and, I believe, is effecting a good purpose, and notwithstanding the fact that it causes a little expense to-day, I believe that we should continue the measure, and year by year we will find fewer who will have the hardihood to rise and oppose it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. In supporting the motion before the House, I wish to say that I do not do so for the reason that I have to find any fault with the revising officers in my immediate locality. There are four of them within a few miles of my house, and I believe each one has discharged his duty honestly and faithfully, and to the satisfaction of all with whom they came in contact. I have heard the same reports of other revising officers in that part of the country. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) seems to take a great deal of credit to the Government for this, and the hon. the Secretary of State this afternoon referred to the opposition before the House, when the Act was first brought down, as a scandalous opposition. But I need not tell the hon. member for East Grey, and had the hon. the Secretary of State been here when the Act was brought down, he would have known, as the hon. member for East Grey knows, that it was just by that very opposition, which the hon. gentleman now terms scandalous, that we have in office to revise the lists men of that stamp. The Bill, as brought into this House, was a deliberate scheme to take the franchise out of the hands of the people and give it into the hands of irresponsible parties. Neither do I advocate the repeal of the Act on the ground that this House has not the constitutional right to declare what shall be the franchise on which its members shall be elected. I know it has been customary to take that ground; but I am not one of those who look upon the question in that light at all. On the contrary, I say it is the right of this House to provide a franchise by which its members shall be elected. Not only is it their right, but it is their duty to do so; and one of the first duties that devolved on this Parliament after Confederation was to provide the franchise on which its members shall be elected. And the Dominion Parliament did provide that the local franchises in existence in the different Provinces should be the franchises for the elections to this House. In doing so they acted wisely and well. The experience of seventeen years, during which these franchises were used, was in favor of their continuance, and it was generally conceded that this House had acted wisely and well in adopting these franchises. During those seventeen years not one word of complaint was made, nor a single request made in this House for a change, nor was a single petition presented to this House asking for a change. So that, on the ground of expediency alone, this House would have justified, would have been doing the best thing for the country, if they had continued to use that franchise. I need not remind hon. gentlemen that each Province in this Dominion has adopted a different franchise. The circumstances of the country demanded that there should be a difference in the franchise. The very conditions of the people, the mode in which they hold property, the nature of the property which they do hold, their different pursuits and callings, all demand that there should be a variation of the franchise in the different parts of the Dominion, so that, in adopting the franchises of the different Provinces, the Dominion Government did what I think was one of the wisest acts ever adopted by this Parliament, because they respected the different genius of the people in the several Provinces, they respected the different circumstances, and they allowed the people in each Province to provide the franchise in accordance with those circumstances. We have heard from the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) a strange statement in reference to the cost of getting up the list. We have local lists, which are got up without any cost whatever to the Dominion of Canada. The member for East Grey thinks that the getting up of those lists is a great burden on the people, but it is a necessary burden, it is one which must be borne by the people. In order to run municipal institutions and in order to provide the franchise for the local elections, local lists must be got up. There is no getting out of it. They must have them. And the machinery for providing those local lists is of the simplest kind. They are provided at a minimum of cost to the people of the different Provinces. The hon. member for East Grey says the people bear that burden without any grumbling, and then he pleads that the people ought to be pleased, on that ground, to bear the additional expense which the preparation of a Dominion list entails. It is a strange argument, that because the people are weighed down, as the hon. gentleman says, by one burden, they should be compelled to take an additional burden. The hon. member must take the people of the country to be a very gullible lot, and, when he sees the way in which they bear the burdens which this Parliament imposes upon them from time to time, he may be inclined to apply to them the words of the old patriarch: "Issachar is a strong ass, crouching down between two burdens." There is another strong argument as to the way the two lists are prepared. The local lists are taken from the assessment roll, the whole machinery is within the domain of the local authorities, there is very little expense connected with it, and every provision is made for getting honest lists at the smallest expense that can be incurred. They have a court of revision to which every person in the municipality who thinks he is wronged, either by certain parties being put on the list who should not be there or by parties being left off who ought to be there, can appeal; and in the Province of Ontario the judges have adopted a system which I think is a very just one, that, in cases where the court of revision has refused to rectify a wrong and there is an appeal to the county judge, the municipality is saddled with the expense of the appeal. That is a very just provision, which prevents private parties from suffering in justice. It is far different in regard to these lists which we are now considering. If a person is aggrieved, if he has been left off the list, or if individuals have been wrongly put on, or if he is a candidate seeking the suffrage of the people, he has to go to the expense of having the list revised, and he or some other private party has to sustain the expense of giving the notices, issuing the summonses, bringing the parties before the court, and paying their expenses while they are there. That is a burden which few men in private life are able to bear, and it is one which they should not be called upon to bear. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) pleads that the list, as we now have it, is a uniform list, and the only argument which it was ever attempted to put forward when this Act was before the House in 1885, was that we ought to have a uniform list throughout the whole Dominion. Have we a uniform list under this Act? The hon. member for East Grey says there is a uniform principle underlying these lists, but is it not a fact that in two Provinces at least that supposed uniformity is violated, and that the local lists are those used in the Dominion elections? If you allow only one Province to be an exception, you give away the whole case, and you have no uniformity and no excuse such as that which was pleaded for passing the Act. A word or two in regard to the expense: I remember, when the Act was first brought into the House, that I made a prediction that at least $400,000 would be required to put the Act into operation and prepare the voters' lists. I remember how the First Minister sneered at that statement, but we find to-day, by the statement of the Secretary of State, that that amount has been largely exceeded. But that is only part of the expense. There is all the expense to the parties who want to get their names upon the list, there is the expense to the members of this House upon whom the duty devolves of seeing that an honest list is prepared, and I venture to say that those expenses more than double the expense incurred by this House in the preparation of the list. That very circumstance is likely to prevent good men from attempting to find seats in this House at all. Then we had this afternoon the startling information from the Secretary of State—I do not remember the exact words he used, but they were to this effect: that it was not contemplated to have a revision of the voters' lists every year. Why, can you imagine anything more antagonistic to the interests of the country than such a statement as that? We heard to-day from the member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) that in one city at least 75 per cent. of the electors had changed between the first revision and the last one. We know that an interim election is likely to happen at any time, and that even a general election may take place at any time. Is it fair that even an interim election should be held on such a defective list as that? Not only that, but every man who considers the matter rightly must hold that the franchise is not something given, that it is not something which this House may give or withhold as they think fit, but that it is a sacred right which the people of this country enjoy, that it is something which they have a right to claim and which they should insist that the Legislature of this country should see that they continue to enjoy. Now, Sir, if for one year you neglect or leave in abeyance the revision of the list, it must happen as a necessary consequence, from the changes that are constantly taking place in our constituencies, from the removal of some, and from others coming of age and acquiring property such as to entitle them to the franchise—it must happen, if an election should take place, that large numbers must be debarred from the use of the franchise, and from the enjoyment of one of their dearest privileges. For all these reasons, on the ground of the expenditure, on the ground of conformity with the opinions and interests of the various Provinces, this Act ought to be repealed, and I intend to-night to record my vote against it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. When this Act now under discussion, was placed upon the Statute-book, I did not have the honor of occupying a seat in this House, consequently I did not have the privilege and pleasure of listening to the arguments that were advanced in its favor. I have listened to-day with a great deal of attention to the arguments which have been advanced, I am sorry to say, only on one side of the House, upon this all important question. The question is of so much importance to the people of this Dominion, if we judge by the amount of money that it costs, and the trouble and expense the people are put to, that it strikes me as something remarkable, that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was the only member from Ontario that had the courage of his convictions to rise and say one word in its favor.

Although the cost to the country of this Act has been already nearly $700,000, which in itself is no small sum, we must also remember that when we consider the expenses which the people of both parties have been put to, I think I can safely say that another $700,000 has been lost to the country, making at all events over one million dollars that it has already cost the people. When we consider this matter it does seem strange that hon. gentlemen occupying seats on the opposite side of the House cannot say something in favor of it. No Act that costs the people of this country such an immense amount of money as that, ought to be allowed to remain on the Statute-book, unless there is some good and sufficient reason for it. There has not been in my hearing to-day, one single word advanced why that Act should remain upon the statute-book. The arguments which were advanced before, I believe, have been repudiated now, that it was desirable that we should have a Franchise Act, that would be uniform in its character all over the Dominion, that has been proved to be not the case with the present Act. As was remarked by my hon. friend who just took his seat, when the system is varied from in one particular, the argument falls to the ground. I believe that in no less than two Provinces in this Dominion the franchise is much more liberal than it is in others. In the Province of Ontario, a man must be assessed for $300 before he has a vote. In the Province of Prince Edward Island, I believe, manhood suffrage prevails. Then what possible arguments can be advanced in its favor? Surely, if there were any arguments to advance the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson), whose voice we often hear sounding melodiously through this hall, would be ready to take up the cudgels and say something in its favor. But although the debate has gone on for nearly two days that gentleman has not had the courage to rise in his place and give one reason for the retention of this Act. I am inclined to think that very little can be said in its favor. I am entirely opposed to the Act because I think it is unnecessary. As has been already remarked, the franchise law under which we carried on the affairs of this Dominion for eighteen years, gave universal satisfaction. No single protest was ever heard in this Parliament against that arrangement; we find no petitions coming in praying the Government to repeal that Act, no Legislative Assembly throughout the Dominion uttered any protest against its continuance. Therefore an Act that was in existence for eighteen years and gave universal satisfaction to the people of this country, surely must have been a good Act, and ought to have been retained. Why, then, this Act should have been repealed I cannot say. I contend that the old system was the fairest and best that possibly could be carried out. I say that the system by which the votes of the electorate of this Dominion were taken, was a much fairer system than you can possibly get under the present arrangement. Under the old arrangement the preparation of those lists was always left to local men, men selected from both the Conservative and Reform parties in the different counties, men that were generally selected on account of their uprightness of character, or from holding prominent positions to which they had been elected by the people. Then the means of rectifying any errors or omission that might possibly have been made, were easy and within the means of all, and in nearly every case the errors that might possibly creep into the list were easily, cheaply and readily rectified. These local men knew who should have votes, whose names should go on the list, and whose should stay off; consequently under that old system we always obtained an honest and fair list of voters throughout the country. But that is not the case under the present system. I venture to say that the present list prepared this year is not at all a correct list. I know that in the county which I have the honor to represent it does not at all fairly represent the people. Whether the Conservative party have received some private information that an election would not be held upon this list, I am not prepared to say; but at all events the Conservative party in that county took no steps whatever to get names upon that list. The consequence is that there are a great many young men there whose names ought to be on the list but whose names do not appear there. There are a great many names on that list of men who have moved away and have no right at all to vote in the county, yet their names appear there. But, you will not find that in the local voters' list. The man who prepares the local list and the man who prepares the assessment roll is a local man. He goes through the township from house to house, and has a personal knowledge of the work he is performing. But the revising barrister simply takes the assessment roll and goes over the names that appear on the roll, and revises his own list from it. But a great many men have come of age this year and others have come into the county, and unless the two parties took steps to send in their names and certified to them by affidavit or otherwise, they would not be placed on the list. The consequence is that this list, which according to the Secretary of State has cost $153,000, and a great many bills yet to come in will, no doubt, bring the sum to $200,000, is an incorrect and unreliable list; and yet it would be upon that unreliable, incorrect and unfair list an election, if one occurred now, would be fought out. At the same time we have a correct list available, which has not cost us one cent. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) said, that as the local lists would cost a good deal of money, it was a matter of selection between the two lists; for, he said, the local list is paid by Provincial taxation, while the other list is paid by the whole Dominion. Then the hon. gentleman asked: which is the better one? It is not, however, a question of choice as between two lists. The local list has to be prepared whether we have a Dominion list or not.

Mr. SPROULE. I say both have to be prepared.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Whether you prepare the Dominion list or not, the local list must be prepared every year.

Mr. SPROULE. And also the other. Why not say, do away with the local list.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the preparation of the Dominion list would do away with the necessity of preparing the local list, then we might consider the case as to which is the better one; but when the local list has to be prepared every year, and you cannot lessen the expense by one dollar by preparing a Dominion list, what is the use of expending $200,000 a year to prepare another list which is virtually a duplicate of the one prepared by the Local Administration? The explanation is, party exigencies. The hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) said it was no argument to say that the statute was expensive to carry out, because all Acts on the Statute-book are expensive in their administration. While that may be true, it must be remembered that all Acts placed on the Statute-book are supposed to accomplish some good object and to be necessary in the interest of the people and protect them in their rights and privileges. But this Act is not in the interest of the people, it is unnecessary and very expensive, and should be abolished.

Mr. SPROULE. Every criminal will say that of the criminal law.

Mr. CAMPBELL. As has been pointed out, this Act has cost already nearly $500,000 for the first list. I venture to say that it has cost the people of the different political parties almost another $500,000. I know that in Kent it cost the different political parties a good deal more than it cost the Dominion Government, and no doubt the same will apply to other counties also. If that is the case, and if it can be shown that the Act is of no use, that it does not secure the preparation of a better list than already exists or one more in the interest of the people than the old list, which we can have for nothing, where is the necessity of retaining it on the Statute-book? Surely, it would be wiser and more in the interests of the people that it should be repealed. I know that in the county which I have the honor to represent, you cannot find any man, either Conservative or Reformer, who will say that the Act should be retained on the Statute-book. At the last election this Act was charged against the Administration, and it was partly on that account that the Conservative majority of 275 was changed to a Reform majority of 112 votes. The people believe that the money thus expended could be used to better advantage in the public interest. They notice that the expenses of the Dominion have increased during a few years from $24,000,000 a year to $36,000,000. They observe that necessary public works are postponed, on the ground that the money cannot be found. In the County of Kent, two or three small public works are required, but the Government reply that they have not got the money and that they cannot afford to carry them out; that the country is poor, and while those works may be in the interest of the people, the Government are unable to carry them out at present but they must stand over. And yet a sum of $200,000 is thrown away. It is the bounden duty of the representatives of the people to cut down this expenditure, which can be done without detriment to the efficiency of the Government, and wipe the expenditure out by a stroke of the pen; and hon. members are not doing their duty to their country and constituents if they refrain from voting that this iniquitous Act should be repealed.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not trouble the House frequently with any remarks, and I would not do so on the present occasion, except for the fact that it appears to be very difficult to satisfy some of the hon. gentlemen opposite. They are not content to have discussed this matter for eight weeks on the introduction of the measure, they are not content, in season and out of season, with bringing up the Franchise Act, but once more they insist on forcing it upon the attention of the House. And if we sit still, as we have done, and patiently listen, as we have patiently listened, to their statements, and we have read in the papers and in the Hansard every single statement they have made and a great deal more, they stand up and taunt the Government side of the House by stating that we have nothing to say. When they have been fully and effectively answered on every point by the Ministers from Quebec, hon. gentlemen opposite, for want of some argument, next say that nobody in Ontario will defend the Act. It was that statement which called me to my feet. I wish to say to those hon. gentlemen, not only is the Conservative party in Ontario prepared to defend the Act, but, as the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt) has said, it was fought out at the last election. In my county one of the great issues raised by my opponents was the question of the Franchise Act. What was the result? Like the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), I may say that the result was that a Reform majority was turned into a Conservative majority. And more than that. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) spoke very feelingly of the expenses of the Act in Kent. From all the public press has said, and from some investigations that have taken place there, Kent is a very expensive place in which to run an election, and it is said—I would not mention this, except for the manner in which the hon. gentleman put it—but it is said there were more potent reasons than any question of the Franchise Act to change the majority in that county. Having now for the first time, as a member of the Legislature, taken the responsibility of speaking on this Act, I wish to say that, underlying the principle of this Act, there is something as grave as any question which has hitherto come up in this House. There is a question of national independence in this as contradistinguished from any question of expense. If we are anxious (as I think the majority of the people of this country are anxious) to see Canada a great nation, we must have it distinctly understood that the supreme power of the House of Commons shall be above all the Provinces. Let the Provinces have their rights and let us see that they have their rights, and I ask hon. gentlemen to judge me from my actions, whether upon all occasions when such matters came up in this House, I have not stood up for what I believe to be the rights of the Provinces. But over and above, and superior to all that, we must have a central power around which national sentiment can gather. Now, whether this Act is expensive or not, I say there is in it a higher underlying principle, and that it is indispensable to the independence and power which is necessary to make a central government that we should protect the rights and liberty of the Federal constitution. If gentlemen opposite want to wipe that away, then there may be some reason for their argument, that we should not have control of the power to regulate the franchise for this House. I have listened in vain for any suggestion to improve the Act from hon. gentlemen on the other side. There are sage legislators there, and a great many of the hon. gentlemen opposite have long parliamentary experience, and some are first-class constitutional lawyers, yet they have not suggested any amendment to the Act. No; they do not want to amend it, they want to crush it out altogether—and why? Simply because the Dominion Government is in the hands of the Conservative party, and if they could get the control of the franchise for this House under the heel of the Reform party in the Provinces, they might be able to prevent the free exercise of the voice of the people in electing members to this Parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, Oh!

Mr. TISDALE. It is all very well to laugh, but I tell you I have been waiting in vain for sensible arguments on that side of the House. I leave it to hon. gentlemen opposite themselves if their arguments do not simmer down to these two: first the expense of the Act, and, secondly, that the Provinces should regulate our franchise. Well, we have heard all that before. I ask hon. gentlemen: if we are not to have higher politics and if we are not to have national sentiment? But, without national sentiment, how are we to attain this end? I would like to see the Franchise Act much cheaper in its operation, but if it were twice as expensive I would support it if stronger arguments are not advanced against its continuance. I always endeavor to be frank and I will say that when the right hon. the leader of the Government passed this Franchise Act with the assistance of the Conservative party, there was a good deal of feeling in Ontario on the question of expense, because we are sensitive on the question of dollars and cents, as we should be, in that Province. I know that in the part of the country from which I come this was a fact; but people did not then grasp the principle, and when the hon. member from one of the Wellingtons said that "we would stick to the Act on account of our love for the Prime Minister," I may reply to him that we stick to it not for that reason but because we have become satisfied that the Premier was wiser in this measure (as he has been in many other measures which have benefited Canada) than those who grumbled at the Franchise Act. There are thousands of Conservatives throughout the Province of Ontario, who, since they have understood the principles of the measure, are determined not to let go of it. You talk of the principle of manhood suffrage in Ontario, and some gentlemen mentioned the United States in connection with the same matter. I maintain that they manage the manhood suffrage properly in the United States, but that the government in Toronto make it as difficult for a man to get on the election roll under manhood suffrage as it was under the most complicated of suffrages. In the United States there is no municipality and there is no political machine allowed to interfere with its operation. They have a registration system by which every man can be registered in the different districts and there is no question whether he is on this roll or on that roll; it is one-man-one-vote, but in Ontario, under the complicated machinery they call manhood suffrage, it is a great many men without any vote at all. Let me tell you that in most cases, the Federal Government of the United States controls its own franchise. It may happen occasionally that the registration is at the same time as for the State election and it is true there may be a few States where the roll is prepared specially for that purpose, but the Federal Government regulates its own franchise, which is another proof that we are right here in our federal principle that we shall have a voters' list for ourselves. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that the Provinces should regulate our franchise; but to show the absurdity of that argument let an hon. member propose, in this House, for one moment, that we should prepare the franchise for the Provinces. We are the greater power and unless there is a mistake somewhere we have a better right to regulate the franchise of the Provinces than they have to regulate the franchise of the Dominion. What would the Provinces say if we proposed to do such a thing? Surely it is a sound contention and more to the point that the greater power should control the less than the less should control the greater. I wish to correct the hon. member for South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) and I use the word "correct" because I am quite satisfied that he would not intentionally say anything wrong, but he certainly misled the House woefully in his explanation of the Franchise Act in the Provinces of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island. These Provinces do not use the local lists, and the only distinction is that they have a little larger franchise than any other Province. There was added a clause to the Bill that any man in those Provinces who had a qualification under the then existing laws should retain that so long as he retained that qualification in addition to the qualification necessary all over the Dominion. There was no concession to these Provinces by this Parliament, and I am glad it is so, for I do not believe in giving a special right to Provinces. Again the same hon. gentleman misunderstood the question, or he further misled the House when he taunted the Government that they changed the law because the Opposition brought pressure upon the Government so that the judges in Ontario became the revising officers. The fact is the law has not been changed, and the Government if they saw fit to appoint any one else beside a judge can do so. However, the hon. the Prime Minister, as it will be in the recollection of any man who heard him speak, and as it was stated in the papers, said when he introduced the Bill that he intended to appoint the judges as revising officers. I have this confidence in the Premier, and the people of Canada have over and over again shown the same confidence, that when the First Minister says a thing he does it, and that when he makes a statement in this House or in the country they can believe him, because he has been true to them and they have been true to him. Hon. gentlemen opposite have always looked forward to the happy land of promise when they would be in power, but until they get some greater question to attack the Government on than this, I am afraid they will never get there. How are they going to reconcile this matter among themselves if the people insist upon this law, which I claim is right, that this House should regulate the franchise? Because the leader says he will not agree to have what his followers are taunting us in Ontario for not insisting upon; he does not believe in manhood suffrage and will not consent to it, so that his arguments and those of his followers are entirely different. Of course, if you consent that each Province shall have a different franchise, as you are contending to-day, it would be all right.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TISDALE. Do you think that is a logical conclusion? I will show you that it is not. Suppose the Province of Ontario takes a notion to divide itself up into so many franchises that it would get an undue proportion of members—

Some hon. MEMBERS. It could not.

Mr. TISDALE. What I want to show is the absurdity of leaving to any Province that power which it could exercise in regard to this House. Now, some hon. gentleman said that there had been no fault found with the state of things that prevailed before the passage of this Act, and that there was no reason for it. Why, they surely forget how the Province of Nova Scotia changed its franchise within eighteen months. That, I suppose, was the immediate cause of the matter being brought to the attention of the Government of the day, and of revealing the danger to which it was exposed. Probably the old state of things might have gone on if a change had not become necessary from the Act of the Province of Nova Scotia and from the antagonistic position assumed by the different Provincial Governments towards the Federal Government. I think it was a blessing, and I think I shall yet live to see the Reformers of the Province of Ontario satisfied with the principle of this Act, though you may amend it if you please; and if hon. gentlemen opposite were on the Government side of the House, I would support them just as heartily in this. I was a young man when Confederation was started; and there are many who are growing old like myself, who believe in the future of the country, men born in it, who have grown up in it, and who hope with God's blessing to die in it. In the foundation which the right hon. leader of the Government has laid so broad, during the long life that Providence is giving him, he has done many things which hon. gentlemen opposite laughed at, and which many of his own followers doubted, like the Pacific Railway, but which we have lived to see accomplished. I remember well, in the elections of 1874—though this may be a little irrelevant—when hon. gentlemen opposite supposed the Conservative party would never rise again, I had the honor of opposing the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). Then you had your chance to establish a National Policy and build up the country; but I remember the incredulity of my hon. friend at the idea of ever building anything like the Canadian Pacific Railway. I mention this to illustrate what I am saying now. If this House does not insist on such rights and powers as will make a Federal Government powerful over all others, giving them their rights, but keeping them within them, we shall never deserve to be a nation, and we shall never have the proper sort of laws and constitution to challenge the confidence of our people.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I have hitherto not taken much interest in this debate; but as I intend to vote on the question, I feel it due to myself, to this House, and to the country to give some explanation of the vote I am going to give. The hon. gentleman who has last spoken referred to the necessity of having a strong central Government. I am one of those who had the honor of assisting at the formation of the constitution of this country in a humble position as a representative of my Province, and I think I can appeal to the right

hon. gentleman to bear me out in this, that on every question that came up, one object I had in view was to avoid the difficulties that had occurred in the country to the south of us in connection with the question of States' rights, where a strong Federal Government was found to be defective. I was anxious that a strong federal power should be formed in Canada under our constitution, and I think we fairly laid the foundation of that intention. Up to this time, I think, there has been no complaint on the part of any one that the constitution under which we live does not give to the Central Government all the power that it finds necessary for conducting the business of the country in a judicious and proper way. Sir, I was proud to be able to give my aid and assistance in England in laying the foundation of a strong central power for Canada; but while I did that, I felt that it was necessary to have a due respect to the rights of the different Provinces, more particularly the smaller Provinces, and I had hoped that in the constitution we had formed no collision would have arisen between the central power and the several Provinces. Sir, later developments—largely arising, I may say, out of what I believe to be the maladministration of the Government who have conducted the business of the country for several years—have led to collisions between the several Provinces and the central power, and have created the very difficulty which led to that great internecine war in the nation to the south of our border. Sir, it is a subject to be regretted. We find that attempts have been made to enforce rights that ought not ever have been claimed. Sir, I will not now illustrate the different points to which I have referred, but I will confine myself to the question of this franchise Act which is before the Chair. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that when the original Bill was before the House I stood on the other side of the House and criticised it pretty severely. I denounced the details of the Act; I found fault with their fancy franchises and their Indian votes, and the troublesome and cumbersome machinery which it was necessary to call into existence to carry it out; but I stood by the right hon. gentleman on one of the main principles of the Bill, and I did so because I believed that scientifically and artistically the principle he contended for was right. The question was whether or not the lists of the several Provinces should be adopted for this Parliament, or whether when passing a franchise Bill we should give to this central Legislature a machinery for the purpose of retaining within itself the power to regulate the franchise of the people who elected the members of this House. Sir, what I did at that day I did honestly. I did it believing it was right to establish that principle, and I do not think there is any hon. gentleman on either side—although many contended against it at that time—who will not admit that, artistically speaking, and constitutionally speaking, it was the proper thing to do. I am free to admit that that influence and that conviction then controlled me, but while I voted with the right hon. gentleman, when that particular question came up, I at the same time condemned the legislation. I voted it cumbersome, and pronounced it to have, as its main object, the enabling of the Ministers of the day to control the free exercise of the votes of the people. I made no bones about stating what my opinions were of the details of what I conceived to be an iniquitous measure. I have changed my mind about the vote that I shall give when that principle comes up again. It may be all very well to say that it is artistic and scientific that members of this House should control the franchise for the election of members to this House, but when we set in the scale on the one side the enormous expenditure which experience has shown us that Bill creates, and the cumbersome machinery which it has created, and the trouble it gives to the representatives of the people to watch from year to year these lists, and the expense it causes the people's representatives and the people themselves in following these revisers from parish to parish—when we consider the fact that this measure is one calculated to crush out the liberties of the people and to give to the Government a power and influence which will prevent the people freely exercising their votes and freely selecting of their representatives—when we weigh all these defects I feel that, between the scientific and artistic solution on the one hand, and the practical solution on the other, I am prepared to recant the vote I gave four years ago and vote to accept the lists made up by the officers of the different municipalities. Although unscientific in principle, I am prepared to accept this system as being more honest, just, fair and economical, and as being less troublesome and expensive than the present law. I have risen solely to give my justification for the vote I am about to give. From 1867, when Confederation was inaugurated, up to 1885, when this Bill was passed, our elections were conducted under the municipal lists, and during all that time I have had a seat in this House and have never heard one man get up and find fault with the manner in which these lists were made up, or attempt to show that any injustice was perpetrated, or that the people had not a fair representation in the making up of those lists. But what do we find now? We find by the admission of the hon. Minister of Finance, and by the statistics which have been presented by gentlemen from this side, that the cost of making up the first list was between $400,000 and $500,000, and that the partial list which was made up this year cost about $150,000. We find that in defiance of that statute law, which the right hon. gentleman submitted to this House, and caused to be carried, and which requires a yearly list to be made up, they passed over a year, and another year, and just make up the list when it suits themselves. When we look at the dangers on the one hand of giving power to the Administration to do that kind of thing, and the expense to the people on the other hand, we are justified in saying, when neither of these evils exist under the municipal arrangements, which worked admirably for nineteen years, we can afford to repeal this cumbersome Act, and revert back to the former system. I have never gone into my county to follow the revisers making up the lists. I take my chance with the people, and those who choose to follow them and make up their lists can do so; but I trust to the people to return me notwithstanding that. I have been told by some hon. gentlemen here that it has cost them a thousand dollars to follow the revising officers and employ people to inspect those lists. If the system is so expensive as it is said to be, and is so defective in its working, I had rather take any chance, unscientific though the arrangement may be, and trust to the electoral lists made up by the proper officers appointed by the municipalities, than trust to those made up by the nominees of the right hon. gentleman and those who sit behind him. I have merely made this statement in justification to the vote I intend to give. I shall vote against this Bill. I voted against almost every detail it contained when it was under consideration, and, though I supported the main principle of allowing this Parliament to make the lists, I find now I was mistaken in that. I see now that by the unfair working of the measure, and the enormous expense it creates, not only to the Treasury, but to the members and the people who represent them in the various counties, it is my duty to make this public declaration of the course I now intend to pursue of voting in favor of the repeal of the measure.

Mr. HESSON. I would not trouble the House were it not that we have been taunted on this side with being silent. It has been charged against us that we sit here day after day listening to hon. gentlemen on that side declaim against the provisions of this Bill and offer no word in reply. I do not think hon. gentlemen on that side can complain that we are not willing to listen to their charges, if they have charges. My experience of legislation in this House has been that, when complaints are made which are well founded and reasonable, the Administration is not only willing but ready to make the changes required. When, however, they occasionally do make changes they are taunted with so doing. Who that has had the privilege of a seat in this House from year to year has not heard the charges made against the Ministry that they made those changes after the working of some part of their administration did not prove exactly what the wants of the people required? We know that when the Ministry introduced the National Policy and had to change it from year to year, as experience gave them the information to change it, they were taunted from day to day with having made those very changes. I say it is that which is keeping this Ministry in power. The Government feel that it is the duty of any Government to listen to the complaints of the people, and we have now sat here and listened to a repetition of the stories we heard five years ago from the hon. gentlemen opposite until we were nauseated with the amount of them, when they were doing nothing but speaking against time, because they had adopted a course from which they would not withdraw. But, if we have patiently listened to them, they must give us credit for possessing common sense. Let them make their complaints, and we will assist them as far as we can in getting them remedied, but on every occasion that I have listened to them I have failed to hear one gentleman contend that the judges of Canada are not worthy to be entrusted with the preparation of the list of the voters of this country. I challenge hon. gentlemen to give instances of that. Let them come down to particulars. It is very well to make wholesale charges against the Bill. We are prepared for that. It has been the policy of their party always. I have had the pleasure of sitting in this House for twelve years, and these hon. gentlemen have never accepted any Bill from the Government without complaint. Now they are complaining because the Government yielded to some of their wishes, and I think it is a hopeless task to attempt to obtain fair consideration for any Bill, no matter how valuable it may be, which is brought down by the Government for the benefit of the people of Canada. We have heard their charges again and again in reference to the National Policy, which has been accepted over and over again by the people. Yet they have the same feeling to-day in reference to that. And now they badger the House and badger the Government and waste the time of the House on this subject, and they compel men to sit and listen to them as patiently as we can. I ask the indulgence of the House for having occupied even five minutes' time, and I would not have risen if I had not been challenged by an hon. gentleman opposite. It is not because I have any doubt as to the working of the Franchise Act, but, when hon. gentlemen draw us to our feet, they must expect to listen to an infliction from this side as well as from that. The hon. gentleman objects to the national franchise, and I think that is a good name for it. What is it that we desire in this country? Is it that provincialism should be continued forever? If this Parliament has not the right to legislate as to the franchise and the liberties of gentlemen in this House, what measure is worthy of the legislation of hon. gentlemen here? We have been taunted because this Franchise Act is not a uniform Act, because, in certain Provinces, special considerations were made on account of the circumstances which existed there. Prince Edward Island had manhood suffrage and British Columbia was under the same conditions, and was it unreasonable, after all, for the Government, during that Parliament, to make an exception in those cases, considering that the gentlemen who had been sent here by a certain class of electors thought they ought not to be asked to disfranchise any of those electors? I think that was a very good reason for the action of the Government in those two particular instances, but the Government is blamed even for that, and it is said, you have not a uniform franchise after all your boasting that you were giving a national franchise to the people of Canada. I would insist upon the franchise being made uniform in those cases when there is to be another appeal to the people. Then, at all events, the electors could not complain that the gentlemen they sent to this House had not guarded as far as they could the rights and privileges of the electors who sent them here. But there is not the slightest hope of convincing hon. gentlemen opposite that anything good can come from this side. The great objection which was made to this Act at the outset was the enormous cost which it would be to the country. I confess, speaking the honest sentiments of the heart, that I thought at the time that possibly it might cost more to us than it was worth under the circumstances, but, that difficulty having now been removed, and the Act working smoothly and satisfactorily, as I believe, everywhere, and the cost having come down to what may fairly be considered reasonable for the election of the representatives in this House under the national franchise, I think we have sufficient to justify us in supporting it, especially remembering what the Secretary of State, in whose charge, I believe, that part of the work is, has stated that for the future he considers there will be a reduction of 33 per cent. more. Hon. gentlemen have said a good deal about disfranchising the young men of Canada. I think I know them pretty well, having lived amongst them for forty-seven years, from a time when some hon. gentlemen opposite were children or had no existence. I venture to say that there is not a young man in my constituency worthy of the franchise, who is disfranchised under this Act. Hon. gentlemen opposite have said, you are disfranchising the volunteers of Canada, the men who must come to the defence of the country and protect it when the occasion arises. I will ask any gentleman if he can from memory mention a young man in any battalion with which he is acquainted who is disfranchised as a volunteer? Within the last three or four weeks, I have been compelled to attend the revision of the local list for the County of Perth, when there were six or seven hundred appeals, and I have compared the local list with ours, and, if there is any difference. I am satisfied it is in favor of the Dominion franchise, because there are gentlemen of property who are so circumstanced that they cannot live on their property or live in the county, who are still electors under the Dominion franchise, and I think are fairly so as taxpayers, as men who have invested their capital and who own property in this country. I say that a provincial franchise disfranchises those men, and there is not one-man-one-vote in these cases. I know hundreds of them in my own county. I could name forty or fifty in my own city, disfranchised by that act of Mr. Mowat, who will not have a vote in their constituencies, because they have no residence there; but under this Act, where their property is, where they pay their taxes, they are entitled to be registered and entitled to be voters. In that way we are more liberal than the Provincial franchise. Then we give all the officers of the Local Legislatures the right to vote, with the single exception, I think, of sheriffs, and one or two other officers of high rank. Is that not fair? We look upon them as an intelligent class. Here we have the Local Legislature of Ontario and the Local Legislature of Quebec both disqualifying some of the most intelligent men we have in Canada, men who have been selected to serve their country, men who have been employed because of their intelligence, men who make Canada their home. But these men are disqualified by the laws of both Provinces, while I may say the tramp is recognised if he can only get himself enrolled, and it is very easy to be enrolled sometimes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that that statement is true. Intelligent men are disfranchised under both Local Legislatures, and instead of one-man-one-vote, you know well they are not entitled to vote although they may be heavy taxpayers in their own constituency. I can give you an instance of a gentleman residing in the city of Toronto. I do not know that he holds property there, I do not know that he owns a foot of land there, or that he is even registered and qualified to vote. But he pays $500 taxes in the city of Stratford, and he ought to have a right to vote there in order to protect his rights. He could not retain his vote, however, though he wrote me about it. And what was the answer? He required to be a resident in that constituency.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he will permit me—

Mr. HESSON. Will the hon. gentleman just be quiet and sit down. That is the way you serve me when you are speaking. Now I would like to ask hon. gentlemen one question; I presume some of them will be able to answer it: Why should they complain against the Dominion franchise and say that it disfranchises a large number of people in Canada, especially young men? Let me tell hon. gentlemen—and no one knows it better than the hon. member for Bothwell himself—that the local lists are the basis of our Dominion lists, and every one who is entitled to be on those lists, is upon ours.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. HESSON. I assert it again, it is so. It is true that there is no property qualification required by the Local Legislature. That is manhood suffrage, I admit. It is also true that there is no property qualification required, so far as young men are concerned, under the Dominion franchise. They must be wage-earners, they must have some means of living so as not to be recognised as tramps. Now there is not a young man I presume in the city of Stratford, none that we respect or we consider worthy to be entrusted with the franchise, who is not able to earn enough to qualify himself under the Dominion franchise. I maintain that they are virtually the same. What does the Act require? That he shall be twenty-one years of age, a British subject by birth or naturalisation. Is that not a qualification by itself? That is just the same qualification as far as the Dominion Act is concerned, only he shall have some visible means of support, that is, he shall not be a charge upon the community, in point of fact he must earn his own living. Now, any man that has any interest in Canada we desire to be enrolled rather in that list than in the other. The hon. gentleman seems to desire that a poor wayfarer, if he can only get himself enrolled, may travel from town to town and can turn up as a good voter when he is required, whereas a man with property who has to pay taxes to support that man on his tramps, is disfranchised. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) seems very anxious about the cost of the revision of these lists. That has not been my experience. The hon. gentleman, I dare say, is more liberal than myself, he may be more in the habit of spending extravagantly among his constituents. I think a number of gentlemen on the other side have been in the habit of doing that very liberally; they may be blessed with more means than gentlemen on this side of the House. I can only give my own experience. I have attended every revision held in my county. I found it a pleasure to do so; notwithstanding what the hon. member for Northumberland said, I felt it a pleasure to be amongst my constituents. If I heard any complaints, I was there to recognise them, and to see if they could be adjusted. I think it is the duty of every member to go amongst his constituents, and I do not think a more opportune time could be chosen than that. Whenever an elector may have a grievance of any kind, he at all events, has a right to be recognised, he has a right to express his opinion, and to express it by a vote when the time comes. Now, I have gone, as I said, amongst my constituents and attended all these courts of revision. I only spent what it cost for the day, my trip, and my dinner. I heard no complaints anywhere. Every one was treated fairly and right. The hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) has the very same revising officer as myself; he will know whether I am speaking correctly. I think he has been treated in the very same way. He could spend what he likes. If he chooses to employ a solicitor to look after his business, he can do so. I never heard what that hon. gentleman spent. I have heard no complaints as to the manner in which the revising barristers discharged their duty. The hon. member for Middlesex, who spoke in a very frank and open way, rather favored this, only for the cost; but as far as he knew, the revising barristers had discharged their duties to the satisfaction of all. Now I do not propose to detain the House. I should not have risen at all, but that the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) challenged me and said I was a free lance and occasionally interfered in the debates, but at present I was silent. Well, it is not because I do not feel that this Act can be defended. I feel that every year that Act is becoming more necessary to the people of Canada, if we are to become a nation, and is much preferable to leaving the matter to the whim, or to the caprice, of a Local Legislature to form the lists upon which members shall be elected to this House; one coming here to represent men, perhaps, without any qualification whatever, and another coming here to represent electors, who have a money qualification. I say every man in this House representing his constituents should stand upon the very same footing. I am not at all satisfied with the local lists. I think there are a number of gentlemen in this House who know that the local lists are not prepared with the same prudence, with the same skill that could be desired, on account sometimes of political bias. The local lists are prepared with that feeling, at least. We know that the elections in every municipality of Ontario, have for years been fought out bitterly upon party lines. There is not a ward in the city, not a ward in the township, I am sorry to say, where these battles have not been fought, and hon. gentleman opposite may as well admit the truth. If they try to conceal it from themselves, they do themselves an injustice. I may say that in the appointing of the assessor, in the selection of a revision court, in the effort to get not only a party man as an assessor, but a majority of the court of revision—all the way through that list has been in view, in order that each party may strengthen themselves. And so, even to get rid of that difficulty, this is a good Act and one that should not be repealed. If we are ever to hope for peace and harmony in the country and to get rid of party difficulties which exist in municipalities, and many times those difficulties have interfered with the success and prosperity of municipalities, we give the people by this Act the prospect of a solid nationality in the future.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I believe I opposed this Bill at its introduction. I have not changed my mind as to the character of the Bill since then. I believe the Premier changed his mind in connection with it; he consented, after some persuasion on our part, to changes in the Bill. I do not know but there are some heavy indictments in connection with the history of this Act to be laid against the First Minister. I do not know but that he may be liable to have actions brought against him by certain classes whom he neglected under this Bill. The House will remember that he introduced the measure several times before it passed. The House will also remember that in the Bill when presented he proposed to give the ladies of the Dominion the franchise. But the hon. gentleman broke his promise to the ladies, he committed a breach of promise, and I should not be much surprised if the First Minister and some of his Ministers may yet be tried for breach of promise for neglecting the interests of the ladies in connection with this Bill. The hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) spoke about the people of the country having given their support to the Premier so long. I have sometimes heard it stated in this House and out of it that the Liberal party, if they could, would do some injury to the First Minister. I do not know why any person should make a statement of that character with a view to arousing the passions of those who support the right hon. gentleman. I believe he has invariably been kindly treated by those who have opposed him. I believe he has received every consideration at the hands of those who have opposed him and who felt it to be their duty to oppose him on public grounds. He has had a pretty long day, and he should not complain of the innings he has had in public life. He has made mistakes, and, in my opinion, a great many political mistakes. He has made mistakes, the effects of which will be felt by the people not only at the present time but for years to come, and will not be recovered from perhaps in this generation. One of the injuries inflicted on the people is the adoption of this Act, and if I except the Gerrymander Bill and the License Bill and a few other Bills, which I will not mention just now, this Franchise Act is one of the most atrocious ever submitted for the consideration of Parliament. There was no good reason why it should have been introduced at the time it was introduced. There was no objection to the lists which had been prepared and used since Confederation. They were prepared by the Provinces in accordance with the well-understood wishes of the people of the Provinces. In different Provinces they necessarily would have different franchises under which they would record their votes. That was the acknowledged principle, and no evil resulted from it. It was also trusting the matter to the people, leaving them to arrange the basis on which they should vote. That was one of the principles had in view at the time of Confederation. I was pleased to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), one who was interested in bringing about Confederation and establishing the basis on which Confederation should be built, and I was highly pleased with his speech and with the principles he enunciated and the intention he expressed of opposing this Act in the interests of the people, not only on principle but on the ground of expense. The causes that led to Confederation are well known. A deadlock existed, owing to local affairs having to be transacted in Parliament. Under the Confederation Act local affairs were to be administered by the Provinces, and hence the difficulties that arose then have since ceased to exist. An hon. gentleman has told the House in regard to the Conservative platform. It is well known that the Conservative party in Ontario has no platform. Its representatives in the Local Legislature have advocated manhood suffrage. In this House the Conservatives have not advocated manhood suffrage. The Conservatives have a certain platform in one place and a different platform in another. In Ontario, that party gauged the wishes of the people better than have the Conservatives in this House. Some hon. gentleman said it was desirable to have uniformity and that that was one of the objects of the Franchise Act. But we have not obtained uniformity under it; that object has been defeated. Then there was the Indian franchise. They make the Indian an elector in some places and not in others; they gave him a vote in Ontario and Quebec, but not in the North-West Territories and British Columbia. While they gave him a vote under this Act, the Indian Act took away his citizenship; accordingly, he has not the rights of citizenship, although he has the right to decide what shall be and what shall not be the legislation of the country. There are many objections to the Act independent of that of the enormous expense. That is, of course, an objection. That is sufficient to lead hon. members to vote in favor of the motion of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson). The cost has been very great, and if the Act is operated fairly and properly it will continue to be very great; and this House would make much better use of the money expended if they would carry out works necessary in the interests of the country rather than in carrying out an Act which is unnecessary, costly and not in the best interests of the people. By consulting the report of the Minister of Public Works for the last year, I find there was expended on the building for the printing bureau $125,421.82. I do not know whether there was any more plant previous to that year or not, but I notice for the plant and the printing bureau, according to the Auditor General's Report, there was spent last year $165,179.97, which makes altogether something in the neighborhood of $300,000. Then, if we add the cost of operating the Act this far, we find altogether that up to the present this Act, including the printing bureau and its organisation, has cost us between eight and nine hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. RYKERT. A million.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. member for Lincoln says a million, and the hon. member for Lincoln is sometimes correct in his figures and he may be correct on this occasion. I think that the Government find they have a white elephant on their hands in this printing bureau. Through its operation they are attempting to enter into competition with the press of this country and attempting to do that which is a legitimate business for the press of the country, and which ought to be done by the people engaged in that branch of business. It is natural to suppose that difficulties will arise and will continue to arise so long as the Government enters into competition with the press of the country whose work this legitimately is. By reason of this bureau the business is drawn away from the city and the local press which legitimately belongs to them. Under the Act of the Local Legislatures the local papers throughout the Provinces print these lists, and any gentleman who compares the local with the Dominion lists will find that the local lists are better printed and are better managed and have more to show for the money expended on them than the lists prepared and printed in this Government bureau. Here at the outset is an injury done to a large and important section of the people of this country, and an injury which we should not attempt to perpetuate. Again, I have just been informed that under this Act the employés of the Intercolonial Railway are placed on the list for three or four constituencies. If that is the case it will be possible for one of these employés to have several votes at the various elections in different ridings, although they have no other qualification than their income of three or four hundred dollars a year. It will be easily seen that if the principle admitted in some of the Provinces of one-man-one-vote was in operation this injustice could not be perpetrated. This, I am told, occurs in Rivière du Loup, St. Flavie and Campbellton, where over 60 of the employés of the Intercolonial Railway are on the list of these three divisions. It has been stated here to-night that the Franchise Act is complicated in the Provinces, and in this connection reference has been made to Ontario. Now, Mr. Speaker, you know that the Act in the Province of Ontario is a very simple one. The lists, as you are aware, are controlled by the municipal councils. They have a court of revision and if any names are omitted they can be placed on by the court of revision of the council and if anybody is left off after that court of revision there is a final court of revision before the county judge, the same gentleman who is revising officer under the Dominion Act. I shall not take up the time of the House much longer in discussing this matter. I believe as strongly as ever I believed that this Act should be repealed. I believe it is not in the interest of the country to perpetuate this Act and I believe, in addition to the enormous expense, the possibility of fraud and injustice being done to the electors are sufficient to justify this House in repealing the Act. I believe that if this House fails to repeal it they will deserve the condemnation of the country.

Mr. WALDIE. The revision of the voters' lists which took place in 1886 was based upon the primary roll of 1885. At the election of 1887 the question of expense was then discussed, but as there was some of that expenditure which had not been paid and was not in the Public Accounts, the amounts stated by the Opposition as the cost of that revision was questioned and was not a factor in the election of 1887. The object of my addressing the House is to point out the danger that will arise from the continuance of the non-revision of the lists, if that is to be the practice from year to year. In the year 1888 the third election in the county which I represent was held since the revision of the voters' lists, and on that occasion there was fully 30 per cent. of the voters who had not the privilege of exercising their franchise. The hon. member for Perth (Mr. Hesson) said he knew of no volunteers who were deprived of the privilege of voting, but I can tell him that there were 30 of 100 volunteers then drilling at Niagara who were not on the voters' lists of 1888. If the franchise is to remain as it is (and I have no serious objection to this House adopting any franchise they may see fit) it would be in the best interests of this country and in a spirit of economy

if the municipal authorities were permitted to prepare the lists. The municipal lists are now printed in duplicate, which is to say that there are names on the lists of the municipal voters and the provincial voters, and there could just as well be a treble list with the names of parties who are entitled to vote for members of the House of Commons. If this were done the House would still control the character of the franchise which elected its members. The Secretary of State informed us in his address that it was not the intention of the Government to revise the lists annually. I ask if it is not a most unfair proposition that the Government of the day shall decide when the revision of the lists shall take place. Is it not an essential thing that every one should know the stated periods at which revisions shall take place? Is it possible that it can be meant that the Government shall assume for themselves the right to choose the franchise upon which they shall be elected, and that they can choose for the franchise the lists of 1889 if it suits them, and if it does not suit them they can reject it and revise again. Is it a reasonable proposition that they shall be judge and jury of their own actions? I hold that the revision should take place at the same time throughout the whole country, and that it should not be in the hands of the Administration of the day to say when such revision shall take place. The Administration of the day have the privilege of dissolving the House and calling upon the people to elect their representatives. I do not ask that they should give up that power, but they should not have the right to say what persons shall elect them. If the proposition of the hon. Secretary of State is carried out, and the Ministry of the day can set the law aside which provides that there shall be an annual revision, and only hold a revision when it suits them, I think that is an assumption of power which is not reasonable and which this House should not assent to. The revising barristers have had a great deal of pressure brought upon them by the friends of the Administration of the day to do what would be unfair and unjust. I had an opportunity of conversing with a revising barrister, not one of the Province of Ontario, but of another Province, who said to me: "I am a Conservative, and was appointed by Conservatives, but I admit that this business of revising the lists has been a more unpleasant duty than any I have ever had to perform. I have been pressed repeatedly by active friends of politicians to put names on the list which I was not entitled to put on, and which I refused to put on, and they even presumed to tell me that that was what I was paid for." Although it is to the credit of the revising barristers that they have not been influenced to any extent, in many cases they have been constantly brought under pressure, and that is one reason why I think it would be better to have the primary lists, prepared by the municipal bodies, used for Dominion elections. If that were done, every opportunity would be given to all for the correction of errors made by the municipal bodies by an appeal to the county judge. Now, I think it would be a very serious matter not to have an annual revision of the lists. It was thought desirable to add wage-earners to the list of voters, and yet it is proposed and practiced that for three years all the young men who come of age during that time shall be deprived of the right to vote. I feel that it would be a greater sacrifice of the rights of the people to have the revision controlled by the Government of the day than to be obliged to pay $100,000 or $200,000 a year for an annual revision. I would rather pay the money, and have the lists revised from year to year.

Mr. WELSH. I am going to say a few words on behalf of the Government. I speak for the Province which I have the honor to represent, and I can assure the Government that if they would accede to the demand of this side of the House for going away with this cumbersome Act, they would gain about a thousand votes in Prince Edward Island, although I do not say that they would even then be able to carry the Province. We are accustomed to give our young men votes when they reach the age of twenty-one years; and I think it is unfair that a young man who is born in the country, and lives in it as a taxpayer, should be deprived of his vote. Therefore, I think the Government would do well to let the Provincial franchise be the Dominion franchise also. By doing so they will save a very large sum of money; and I believe the people of the country will be better satisfied. I have listened to the remarks made during this discussion, and there have been many able speeches made, especially by the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), who made the question as clear as daylight. I am sure that if this question were put to the vote of the people of Prince Edward Island, ninety-nine out of every hundred would say: "Let us have the Provincial franchise for our Dominion elections."

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). There is one class of voters whose case I think has not been sufficiently represented before this House, that is, that of the young men employed by the farmers of Ontario. A great many of those young men have been disfranchised by this Act. Notwithstanding what the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) has said about the wages prevailing in that county, I know that in my own county and throughout the western part of Ontario the majority of the young men who work on farms do not receive sufficient remuneration to entitle them to be placed on the Dominion voters' list. In examining the report of the Bureau of Industries to-day, I found that the average annual remuneration received by that class in the Province amounts to only $157. I was present last fall when there was an adjourned revision of the Provincial voters' list and a revision of the Dominion list afterwards. Several young men whose names were on the Provincial list were excluded from the Dominion list on the ground of not having sufficient salary. I do not say that the judge acted unjustly; I think he acted perfectly right in not placing their names on the list from the evidence before him; but I say that the Dominion Franchise Act does this large class of enterprising young men a great deal of injustice. The hon. member for North Perth stated that the Provincial and the Dominion franchises are the same, but I say they are not. He says that the Provincial lists are not revised with the same care and diligence as the Dominion list; but he gave himself away when he admitted that the Provincial lists were the foundation of the Dominion lists, so that if the Provincial lists have not been got up with care, it is impossible for the Dominion lists to be so. But I state positively, having knowledge of what I say, after sitting for ten years in one of the municipal councils of Ontario, that you can hardly find a single township council where there are not both Conservatives and Reformers, and they both pay strict attention to the revision of the lists; and I know further that in not a few townships, where young men or others who should be on the lists are found not to have been placed there, then the court of revision sits, under a clause in the Provincial Act, the court may adjourn and the assessor become appellant to place names on the list which he had not before him when going round. That has been done frequently, and, therefore, I state that the Provincial lists are prepared with much greater care than the Dominion lists. And if it should be found that a single municipality or municipal council would attempt to manipulate the voters' lists in favor of either party, they have only one year to hold office and the electors would call them to account very rapidly. But, under the present system, the Government has complete control of the lists, and there is nobody to take them to task for not getting them up properly. We have heard a great deal about the appeal to the country and about the Government being sustained in 1887 after the Franchise Act had been passed; but I could mention some potent influences which had been used to control certain constituencies. Let me point out the Gerrymander Act and the Franchise Act, and I might go back before the last general elections and show what took place in the Lower Provinces, when certain gentlemen promised that, if they supported the Government, large subsidies would be granted those Provinces. When in fulfilment of these promises large votes were brought before the House, the statement was made that the granting of certain bonuses was going to shorten the distance to the Atlantic coast by 45 miles, but we found, after large sums had been spent in fulfilment of the election promises, that this distance was only shortened by seven miles. Those are some of the influences that were brought to bear on the electors to induce them to support the Government, and yet hon. gentlemen opposite have the hardihood to say that a fair appeal was made to the electors and that no undue influences were exercised. In connection with my own riding, I have conversed with both Conservatives and Reformers with respect to the Franchise Act, and I have yet to meet the Conservative who would justify the action of the Government in passing that measure. In fact, the very arguments of the Opposition to-day are sufficient to show that it is not in the interests of the people. They say that the expense ought not to be taken into consideration, but I hold that it is the duty of the Government to give the most just and effective measure of franchise at the very lowest cost, especially at a time like this, when such depression is sweeping over the country, and a majority of the agriculturists of the Province of Ontario are suffering severely. What did the hon. the Secretary of State say? He stated that it had cost $150,000 to revise the lists, and that when reduced to the very lowest estimate the revision will cost $105,000 annually. This of itself is sufficient cause for us to repeal the Act, when we know that lists as effective, as honest and as much in the interests of the country, can be prepared without all this expense. I hold that the Provincial lists are better for the people to vote on. Young men of the western part of the Province of Ontario feel very keenly their being debarred under Dominion franchise from voting, when they are allowed to vote under the Provincial franchise, although they are but little affected by Provincial legislation. The only extent to which local legislation affects the young men is with regard to statute labor, but the Dominion Government imposes all indirect taxation, and the young men pay a large amount of taxation according to income—I believe more than any other class of the community, and for this cause, if for no other, they ought to be placed on the lists. I do hope the Government will take this into consideration, and agree to the resolution of my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Wilson), which, as a representative of a rural constituency, I am bound to support.

Mr. WATSON. Coming from the western portion of this Dominion, and from a Province largely interested in the resolution before the House, I feel it my duty to give my reasons for recording my vote in favor of the resolution. In the new Province from which I come, into which there is continually going a large population, a large number of men who could have a vote are disfranchised. The hon. the Secretary of State spoke of the debate on this measure, when introduced in 1885, as a long and useless debate, but the Bill as introduced was intended practically to disfranchise every man, if necessary, in order to elect the present Administration. The Bill, as it was introduced, is not at all the Act which is on the Statute-book, for in that Bill the Government took power to appoint a revising barrister of two years' standing, who might be an irresponsible individual, and who would be enabled to fix up the lists. Were it not for that so-called useless debate, I am satisfied the Bill would have passed in the shape to deprive Canadian citizens of the right to the franchise. We are told that this Franchise Act has cost the country $413,000 for the first revision. I know that in the county I have the honor to represent that revision cost in the neighborhood of $5,000, or rather more than $1 a vote for each vote in that county. That is an expense that could easily be avoided. We are told that a partial account has been made to-day of the expenditure this year, and that the expenditure so far has amounted to $150,000. I object to this Act more particularly on account of the restriction it exercises on our franchise. In Manitoba in local affairs we have manhood suffrage, and I believe, we are entitled to manhood suffrage in Dominion matters as well. The local system is very simple. All that is required is registration to entitle a man to vote. Under that system we provide, on the one list, that the persons named as qualified to vote for the Legislative Assembly, shall be designed by the letter L, and, for a municipal official, by the letter M. By that means the two franchises are contained in the one list. I claim that in Canada while we raise our revenue by a revenue tax, every British subject twenty-one years of age should be entitled to vote. There might be certain objections to manhood suffrage for municipal purposes or for a Local Legislature, but for Dominion purposes, as long as we raise our revenue by indirect taxation, every man ought to be entitled to a vote. Our local franchise provides for one-man-one-vote. I approve of that. We have had it tested in two elections in Manitoba, and it has worked well. I do not think a man who has his property divided up in three or four districts should have three or four votes, when he may not be worth more than a man who owns his property in only one district. That system also prevents a great deal of expense. For these reasons and for others which I might mention if it were not so late, and if other gentlemen had not spoken upon the subject, I will vote for the motion of my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Wilson). I have no expectation that this House will carry the resolution, judging from the fact that we have men like my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), who does not give his own opinion, but says that he thinks his leader knows more about the subject than he does; and, though he occasionally growls, he is satisfied to support him in this matter.

Mr. DALY. I did not intend to take up the time of the House until I heard the remarks of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson). He has referred to the manner in which the Legislature of Manitoba makes up its municipal voters' list. He has told the House that the list which is prepared under the law of Manitoba contains two columns, one showing those who are entitled to vote at municipal elections, and another showing those who are entitled to vote at parliamentary elections. To show how our friends opposite, who are represented up there by the Greenway Government, carry out the idea of "one-man-one-vote," I may state that my name has been upon the assessment roll for seven years in the town in which I reside, but the enumerator saw fit to leave it off the voters' list, and it was necessary for me to appeal in order to get my name put on that list. Further, as the hon. gentleman knows, owing to the bungling of the Greenway Government in their legislation, every municipal election which was held in Manitoba last December had to be held upon the list of 1888, because the machinery which the Local Government had provided did not arrange for a revision of the lists in time for the elections in December. The consequence is that, although all the municipalities were put to great expense in printing those lists, they were of no avail at the elections and are of no use to-day. I have heard no hon. gentleman on the other side state, and I have no doubt the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) would not say, that as far as the Dominion lists in his constituency are concerned, the provisions of the law are not carried out fairly and above board, that the revising officer in his constituency does not perform his duty properly. We must remember that nearly throughout the length and breadth of Canada the revising officers under the Dominion Electoral Franchise Act are the very men to whom, under the local Acts, an appeal is allowed, showing that the Local Legislatures of Ontario and Manitoba, at all events, have confidence in the officers to whom the Dominion Parliament has entrusted the revision of the voters' lists. The Local Legislature of Manitoba has seen fit to allow an appeal to the county judges, who are the revising officers under the Dominion Franchise Act, so that it goes without saying that, as far as the revising officers in Manitoba are concerned, no word can be said against them. The whole argument, as far as I can make it out, which has been used by hon. gentlemen opposite is the question of expense; but, as the Secretary of State has announced, that expense has been reduced by some 60 per cent. this year, and I have no doubt, as the Department gains experience, even that expense will be materially decreased. I have not heard anything advanced to show that there has been anything wrong in the making up of these lists. I think one hon. member stated that he would like to go back to the days when the lists were made up from the assessment rolls, but surely he knows that the assessment rolls form the basis of the lists under the Dominion Elections Act. Under that Act, any young man who is 21 years of age, who has resided in Canada for one year, who is a British subject, and who has earned $300 within that year is entitled to be put upon that list, and I would ask the member for Marquette whether he believes there is one young man in his constituency possessing those qualifications who is not on the Dominion list. If there is, it is the fault of himself or of his friends. It comes down practically to manhood suffrage, because as far as Manitoba is concerned, I am proud to say that there is not a young man of 21 years of age who does not earn sufficient to entitle him to go on the Dominion list. I know, from the revision of the Dominion list and the revision of the local list, that they are almost identical, except that the Dominion list is fuller and contains more names than the local. I could go into the question of the way in which those local lists have been prepared, and I could show that our Grit friends are just as capable of manipulating those lists in Manitoba as they are elsewhere. We have had some experience of their capacity in that respect. When the present Manitoba Government were in opposition, Mr. Greenway and others of that party promised that, as soon as they got into power, our local Election Act would be so amended that none but municipal officers would be enumerators, and yet to-day there is scarcely one municipal officer holding the position of enumerator in the Province. They are all or nearly all the appointees of Mr. Greenway and his partisans. In my constituency there are sixteen thousand names upon the voters' list. So that, except Montreal East and Toronto West, I represent more voters that anyone else in this House. Still, I have never heard one complaint from Grit or Tory as to the making up of the Dominion lists, and I have never seen the subject discussed in the newspapers or during the election, either in Marquette, Winnipeg or the other constituencies. As far as my own constituency is concerned, the electors are perfectly satisfied with the Dominion Franchise Act. I do not think any argument has been brought forward to-day to show that there would be any justification for this Government retreating from the position they have taken, that, as far as the federal electorate is concerned, this Parliament, and this Parliament alone, should have a right to say who should vote for the members who are to be sent to this House.

Mr. LAURIER. I would suggest that we now adjourn. It is now 11 o'clock, and I do not think that the House desires to sit any later.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Don't you think that we might sit for a couple of hours more and finish this?

Mr. LAURIER. If I could hope that a couple of hours more would convince the other side, we might go on. I think we might give the debate another day.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Does my hon. friend think that there is no chance of closing to-night?

Mr. LAURIER. I think not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then I must accept my hon. friend's suggestion.

Mr. TROW moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 7th February, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Bill (No. 58) respecting the Brantford, Waterloo and Lake Erie Railway Company.—(Mr. Paterson, Brant.)

Bill (No. 59) to change the name of the Vaudreuil and Prescott Railway Company to the Montreal and Ottawa Railway Company.—(Mr. McMillan, Vaudreuil.)

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 65) further to amend the Criminal Law. He said: The objects of the Bill are: First, to make the seduction of a servant by a master or employer a criminal offence; second, to define and punish incest; third, to make more effectual provision for the suppression of polygamy; fourth, to allow jurors refreshments when on duty; fifth, to enlarge the powers of judges when dealing with convictions under the Summary Convictions Act; sixth, to authorise a justice to submit a case for the opinion of a superior court; seventh, to make certain provisions as to recognisances under the Speedy Trials Act; and, eighth, to make it clear that courts-martial may send to county goals.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE, CHEQUES AND PROMISSORY NOTES.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 6) relating to bills of exchange, cheques and promissory notes.

Mr. LAURIER. Under circumstances which the right hon. gentleman must be aware of, I think the House ought now to go into Committee of Supply. On Tuesday last, when the House was about to go into Committee of Supply, the hon. the Minister of Finance asked me if we had any amendment to move. I informed him that we intended to move an amendment for the removal of the rebate duty on corn manufactured into spirits. My hon. friend asked me not to move that amendment, for certain reasons, and I at once acquiesced to his demand; but I supposed that the hon. gentleman would give me the first opportunity to move that amendment. If we are not given that opportunity now, I do not think the hon. gentleman will be acting towards me with the fairness I have the right to expect from his side of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope that what I say now will convince my hon. friend that we have no desire to act unfairly. We have no desire to prevent my hon. friend from moving his resolution, but the fact is that on Friday, on both sides, a good many members go away, and I do not think it would be fair to the Government to ask a division to-night. The debate would have to be continued over to Tuesday, in order to obtain a complete vote on the resolution. I can quite understand that, in consequence of other notices of motion on the paper, my hon. friend might fear that his motion might be forestalled on Monday, but I shall take care that he will not be put in that position; and, if necessary, I shall give him an opportunity to-night to make his amendment by moving the House into Supply before adjournment, and his amendment will stand over until Tuesday.

Mr. LAURIER. I am quite satisfied.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 49,

Mr. BURDETT. I want to know if the Minister proposes to saddle a man who endorses a note, with $2.50 for the pleasure of doing so, in the shape of a protest? In Ontario, you get 50 cents for the protest, 25 cents for each notice, and the postage.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). We have not got to that yet.

Mr. BURDETT. We are pretty near it—close enough to talk about it, anyway. I think it is hard enough to pay a note you have endorsed without paying for a protest. Possibly, the Minister of Justice has had no experience of that kind, but we who have had experience of that kind do not want to pay any more than we agree to pay; and we who are not bank solicitors do not intend to pay $2.50 for the privilege of endorsing a note for a friend. I intend to divide the House upon the question of charging more than the present rates for protesting a note in Ontario. I do not think that anybody can fairly charge more. No man honestly earns more than is now allowed in the Province of Ontario, for protesting a note. A bank solicitorship is simply a sinecure at present, given to some friend of the bank, who makes so much out of it in protesting notes. It is not honest nor fair, when a man sees fit to put his name upon a friend's paper, that he should have to pay some bank solicitor for the privilege of having done so. It is hard enough in many cases, and disastrous enough, to have to pay the liability, without paying an unnecessary and exorbitant charge for it. The hon. Minister of Justice comes from a Province that may have a different rule, and different charges; I am stating the fees as they are charged in Ontario. They are large enough, in all conscience—too large, in my judgment; but I am not in favor of changing laws that are known and well understood. But upon the question of protest, and upon the three days grace, I have a very strong opinion. I think a man who signs a note, knowing what he signs, or a man who endorses a note, knowing what he endorses, ought to pay it at the time he agrees to pay it, and he ought to pay the amount that he agrees to pay, provided he is able to do so; if he is not able to do so, his creditor ought to forgive him. But this charge of $2.50 in this Bill for a protest, is simply indefensible, and I trust the hon. Minister of Justice will make the charges as they are now in Ontario, or less, if possible.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That is in the schedule—when we come to it.

Mr. BURDETT. It is near enough now. I do not intend to let a dog bite me before I kill him.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). We are not discussing that question just now.

Mr. BURDETT. You are a bank solicitor.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Yes; and a responsible position it is.

Mr. BURDETT. The responsibility consists in drawing the pay.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I will meet my hon. friend on that question when the proper time comes.

Mr. BURDETT. I do not expect to be able to convince solicitors of banks. It is hard to convince men who have their pay in their pocket, but the poor fellow who has his name at the back of a note is easily convinced that he should not pay more than that sum. My experience has been that of having my name on notes and not at the foot of protests. I have strong sympathy with the man who has to pay, and not with the man who is paid for doing little work.

Mr. LISTER. There is nothing about protests in that section.

Mr. BURDETT. You are a bank solicitor, I guarantee.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the suggestion of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) is a correct one. The subject referred to by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Burdett) is one of great importance. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in supposing that I have framed the Bill with a view to suit matters in my own Province.

Mr. BURDETT. I did not say you had.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The fees in all the Provinces, except Quebec, are the same as those in Ontario, and the scale of fees proposed in the Bill is that of the Province of Ontario. It is submitted simply as a suggestion, with a view to making the law uniform in that particular. If the Committee think the fees are too high in Quebec, one of two courses can be adopted: To decline to make them uniform, or to make them uniform by reducing them.

Mr. BURDETT. I am not accusing the Minister of any desire to increase them, but I am simply calling attention to the fact. I presume the Minister is aware that, under the law of Ontario, where notice of dishonor or protest has not been given, and the party endorsing the paper promises afterwards to pay the bill, that is held to be a question of fact, and if found against the promisor he is obliged to pay the bill, although no notice of protest has been given. That, in my judgment, is an infringement of the Statute of Frauds. Promises made after a bill has been dishonored or when overdue, should not be admitted, except made in writing. I do not know whether the Minister of Justice is aware that this has been held to be the law in Ontario.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, and in other Provinces also.

Mr. BURDETT. In my judgment, this system has led to a great deal of hard swearing, and a clause should be inserted in this Bill providing that such promises must be made in writing.

Mr. LISTER. Under this Bill it is not necessary to give a written notice, but if the notice is imperfect, it can be supplemented by a verbal notice. This leads to much litigation. The whole system of presentation and protest will have, ultimately, to be abolished. When a man endorses a note, he enters into a contract to pay the amount, if the maker of the note does not pay. The service of the notice of dishonor is a mere form. I repeat, that if a man accepts a draft or endorses a note, he undertakes to pay it, and he ought to be held liable until it is paid.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). An endorser simply undertakes to pay if the maker of the note does not pay. It is very important that an endorser should have notice, because he may thereby be enabled to take measures to protect himself from loss. I agree that a party should not be placed in a position so that he can avoid payment on some technical objection. I am not, however, prepared to abolish the notice, for I can see that an endorser might be placed in an exceedingly difficult position, and might not know whether the note had been paid or not. If at the time he had notice, he might be able to secure himself from the prior parties. But the party deciding to wait for twelve months and then come upon him, it seems to me, would, under the circumstances, be a very great hardship.

Mr. BURDETT. The admission made by the two hon. gentlemen who have just sat down calls to my mind the time when the Ontario Legislature, in their wisdom, increased the members' indemnity from $600 to $800. A distinguished member of the House at that time said: "This is a subject upon which we can all agree." And, as I find two distinguished solicitors of banks admitting that protests may, and ought to be abolished, I respectfully submit to this House, "that this is a subject on which we all can agree." I, therefore, suggest that the Minister of Justice wipe out of the schedule that little list of fees to those who act as solicitors for banks, so that the poor fellows who are unwise enough, or good enough, to endorse notes will only have to pay the notes, and not pay for the pleasure of some gentleman walking up to the bank and telling him he has got to pay. As we all agree on the question of abolishing protests, I trust there may be no trouble about it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Perhaps we may attain the hon. gentleman's object just as well by leaving in the provision for the protest and abolishing the fees.

Mr. BURDETT. That will do just as well.

Mr. LISTER. The difficulty with my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Burdett) is that he has not been able to get appointed solicitor for a bank.

Mr. BURDETT. My reputation is too good for any bank to employ me to do any such work.

Mr. LISTER. So far as this notice of protest is concerned, it merely gives the man who entered into the contract, and who intended at the time he entered into the contract to pay, if the principal debtor did not pay, an opportunity of escaping from the liability which he believed would be incurred. Why should a man who becomes security on a promissory note be in a different position from a man who becomes surety on any other instrument? Why should a man who becomes security for a party's bond, not demand notice that the bond has not been performed, in order to hold him responsible to the same extent as the endorser of a promissory note? This whole law is based on an old fiction which has come down to us from our forefathers, and which is no reason for the additional expense. The whole question of protesting promissory notes is one which is kept upon the Statute-book, not in the interest of the man who has become security, but in the interest of the bank solicitors. The hon. members for Quebec, who are members of the notarial profession, have, I see, very liberal fees indeed payable to them. I do not care whether the Minister of Justice retains that tariff or not, but, so far as I am individually concerned, I think the amount payable to us in the Province of Ontario for that service, if it is to be continued, is abundantly sufficient.

Mr. BURDETT. I have one convert.

Mr. LISTER. I, for one, will support what my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Burdett) suggests—that the fees should not be increased.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). He wants to abolish them altogether.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think there is a great deal in what has been said by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister). The difficulty I see is, how is the endorser to know whether the note is paid or not, or into whose hands it has gone. If the note was not a negotiable paper he would have no difficulty, and it would be his duty, by the exercise of due diligence, to ascertain whether this liability existed or not; but a note given by A. to B. in the city of Ottawa to-day, may, next week, be in the hands of some one in Rochester, Buffalo, or New York, if the party is well known, and the endorser may have no means of knowing in whose hands the note is, nor may he be able to communicate with the party for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is paid or not. That is the distinction between a note and a bond, for although it may be assignable it can always be traced, and the property represented may be changed by simply passing from hand to hand. My hon. friend from Hastings says that the endorser ought only be liable for the amount mentioned in the note. That might be a very good rule for the endorser, but it would be a very bad rule for the solicitor whose business it was to make protest, and it would be quite as good an objection against the payment of 50 cents as it would be against the payment of $5. It is not a question of more or less, as my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Burdett) says, but a question of whether there should be liability or no liability at all. I suppose my hon. friend allows nothing for insurance for every solicitor who takes a note, and who, by negligence, fails to make a proper protest, incurs the liability of the face value of the note, and is bound to pay it. Therefore, although the solicitor takes considerable risk, and is dependent upon his clerks or upon his partner to do the work properly, if they fail, he will have the liability to meet without any compensation whatever.

Mr. BURDETT. My hon. friend misapprehends me. My remarks were all predicated upon the assumption that he who signed a contract, simple, special or of record, ought, if he is able, to perform the contract according to the terms thereof. If he is not able he ought to be forgiven. I do not see any reason why a man who endorses a promissory note for a friend ought to have to pay $1.50 more or less to find out that he has endorsed that paper, when he who goes security for a friend in a contract, simple or special, or of any character, needs no such notice to make him liable. If I enter into an agreement with a friend or become security for the performance of any contract, no matter whether it is in the United States or Canada, I may be sued upon that agreement or that contract upon its non-performance. I do not see why any difficulty should exist in the case of promissory notes. My own experience is that if I have a note against an individual, endorsed by another, and it is not paid at maturity; it will not be many days before the endorser will hear of it. I do not think it would be asking too much of the holder of a note to notify the endorser without fee or reward. We are simply preserving a relic of past times which is more expensive than useful. It is of no material benefit either to the maker, the endorser, or the holder of the note, that he should be notified in writing, or otherwise, that he has become bound that his principal should perform the contract. As to the liability of the lawyer, if the law is changed so that he incurs no responsibility for not protesting, then, where there is no liability and no responsibility, and no duty or work performed, surely there ought not to be any pay. The duty performed in this case is simply perfunctory, formal and unnecessary, and costs a man a dollar or more in many cases, when he is scarcely able to pay the principal. In all fairness, I think this whole system of protesting paper ought to be done away with. I cannot see any difference in a man's liability, either moral or legal, whether he puts his name on the bottom or on the back of the note. Knowing that he has agreed to pay it at maturity, he ought to pay it if he is able, whether it is protested or not. This other system of three days' grace also leads to a great deal of misapprehension. In these days of silk gowns, scarcely any of these gentlemen can agree on a proper mode of framing a Bill on the simplest of all contracts—promissory notes. I, therefore, hope the hon. Minister of Justice will see fit to do away with the schedule of fees at the end of the Bill, at least, if not with the whole system of protesting promissory notes. If he does, I think his action will meet with the approval of the House and the country. It will certainly meet with the gratitude and approval of all unfortunate sinners, who, like myself, have endorsed notes for friends.

Mr. SPROULE. I agree with a great deal that has been said by the hon. member for Hastings, but I think he goes a little too far when he proposes to do away with the notice entirely. When an endorser puts his name on a note, it is done for a limited period, in the belief that the person who makes the note will be in a position to meet it when it falls due; if it were to be for an indefinite period, he would in many instances refuse to put his name on it. The notice informs the endorser that the contract is not fulfilled, and it gives him the opportunity to save himself in the event of the other party endeavoring to make away with the property or being unable, from some unfortunate circumstance, to discharge his obligation. I agree with the hon. gentleman, however, that if the fees cannot be done away with entirely, they should be reduced. I certainly endorse every word he says when he suggests that the party in whose interest the note is drawn should be compelled to notify the endorser at his own expense; but if the sense of the House is different, I think the fees should be made the smallest that would be considered fair compensation for the work done.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It seems to me that we should be taking a very serious risk if we made any such radical change as is proposed. If endorsers were held liable without notice a man might find himself sued on a note five years after endorsing it without the slightest intimation, and without any recourse against the maker. An ordinary bond cannot be transferred, but a promissory note may pass from hand to hand, and therefore it is not unreasonable to require that the holder shall notify the sureties. That, of course, entails a little expense; and my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Burdett) seems to think that the fees are a great benefit to the bank solicitors. I can tell my hon. friend that it is a pretty serious matter to take the responsibility of protesting notes, because if the solicitor fails to give the proper notice of dishonor, he may become liable for the whole face of the note. It is a question whether the present practice is not, after all, the best in the interest of the commercial world. If the endorser got no notice, and thereby saved this trifling expense, he might find himself served with a writ which would, perhaps, put him in for very much larger costs. The notice is really for the benefit of the endorser, to enable him to protect himself, and to see that the party who is primarily liable shall meet the note.

Mr. BURDETT. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken cannot comprehend the law of Ontario when he speaks of contracts not being assignable. Of course, we know that promissory notes are assignable by simple delivery from hand to hand; but by an Act of the Ontario Legislature all contracts have been made assignable by any form of writing, without notice to anybody, and the assignee may sue in his own name without any notice to any party to the contract. In order to protect himself against other assignments, he may have to give notice; but that is aside of the question. I do not see any just reason why a man who has agreed to pay a sum of money at a fixed date should be obliged to pay $2, or $2.50, for being told by a solicitor, however respectable, that he must pay.

On sub-section j of section 49,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I propose to strike out this, because there is no Insolvency Act to which it would be applicable. It was merely inserted with a view that it might fit in with the provisions of an Insolvency Act, should such be adopted.

Mr. LISTER. There are Acts in the several Provinces for the winding-up of an insolvent estate.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This sub-section was not intended to fit those cases. To make a sub-section to suit them we should have to see what the law of each Province is, and would have to recast it—the section.

On sub-section l of section 49,

Mr. KIRKPATRICK moved that the words "on or before the next following juridical or business day" be inserted.

Motion agreed to.

On sub-section 4,

Mr. MONCRIEFF moved that the following words be added to the fourth line, after the words "at the place at which such bill is dated," "or at his customary address or place of residence."

Motion agreed to.

On clause 50,

Mr. BURDETT. I do not like that word "implied." I think a man who endorses paper, or makes it, should know the ground on which he stands, and that term "implied" is very comprehensive, and ought to be stricken out of the Bill. I think the notice ought to be express and ought to be in writing. In my judgment, if this Bill passes in this shape, the result will be that a notice of protest is not necessary to bind the endorser but is simply given for the purpose of making costs. Where you say a man is excused if not guilty of negligence, or default, or misconduct, who is to say what is negligence, default, or misconduct? What does "implied" mean? I submit that the term ought to be defined, and a man ought to know what he has to rely upon. That word "implied" ought to be stricken out, and the waiver ought to be in writing. I would go so far as to say that it should be signed by the party in charge, or by his agent. That when a man is relieved from the payment of a note that he has endorsed, by reason of its not being protested, he ought not to be bound to pay that note unless he in writing agrees to pay it. Where he has to pay a fee for receiving that notice, he ought to have some corresponding advantage. The whole result of this clause is, in my opinion, that any man may, for some of the reasons given, be excused from protesting a note, and yet he may get the fees for protest.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I could not undertake to propose to the Committee an alteration of the law of contracts so sweeping as that. We have the law of waiver as regards every right that a person possesses. We have the doctrine of implication running all through the law of contracts, both as to waiver and everything else. The hon. gentleman knows that contracts may be made by implication, rights may arise by implication, and surely these ought to be capable of being waived by implication. There are some very plain cases in which one ought to be held to have waived his rights to a notice of dishonor. For instance, if the person bound, whether endorser or drawer, before the time comes for giving the notice of dishonor, says to the holder that the note will not be paid at maturity, but that he will pay it if he be given a certain time, he makes a binding contract by which he shall get that extension of time. He makes no express stipulation as regards payment by notice; surely he ought to be held, in that case, to have waived notice, when he has received all the consideration, and made all the terms that include notice, and when he has got relief by the notice, knowing that the bill may be dishonored at maturity. The other case the hon. gentleman refers to, is that of a man who ought to have given notice, but, not having given it, afterwards promises to pay. It is not held that he has made no contract with regard to that, but it is simply treated as evidence that he has waived the right which would accrue to him of having notice of dishonor, or that he has waived the right of disputing his liability in consequence of the notice not having been given. If I could view the decisions as the hon. gentleman has given them, namely, that he is held virtually to a new contract, he might fairly hold that the subsequent contract should be in the same form as the original contract, namely, in writing. But the subsequent promise to pay is treated as evidence of an agreement to pay, and that evidence is capable of being rebutted.

On section 51,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I propose to add the words, "or at any place in Canada, situated five miles therefrom." This is to facilitate the making of protests, and prevent hardship likely to occur in country districts.

Mr. SKINNER. Perhaps it would be well, as far as the Province of New Brunswick is concerned, to make the bill payable at one o'clock on Saturdays. The banks down there, generally close at one o'clock on Saturday and a clerk has to be kept there without any reason, for a couple of hours.

Mr. COOK. That is their business.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think we should have a uniform hour in this matter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think so too.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think that the closing of banks at one o'clock on Saturday is a great inconvenience to business men. There is more business done on Saturday in our part of the country than during any three days of the week, and I think it would be a mistake to alter the hour.

On section 54,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is there any reason why the acceptor of a bill should not guarantee the genuineness or validity of the endorsement as well as the genuineness of the signature? It seems to me that the one should be considered to be guaranteed as well as the other.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We will let the section stand.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. The drawer in his own favor, certainly, after he has accepted the bill, should be stopped from denying his signature, but should the bill pass fraudulently into the hands of another party who forged the endorsement, the acceptor should not be stopped from denying the genuineness of the endorsement.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The bill may be endorsed after the acceptance, and that is the endorsement that the acceptor does not guarantee.

On section 60,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that this clause is one which should not be adopted without very grave consideration. If I understand its meaning, a bank would be discharged from all liability, and the honest owner of the bill be defrauded of the entire sum to which he is entitled without having any recourse against the bank. Apparently, the bank is to be discharged from liability if it pays a bill on which an endorsement has been forged. I do not think it is desirable to relieve the bank in such a case. It is the business of the bank to see that they do not pay on forged endorsements or without proper authority. I do not see why the Minister of Justice has introduced this provision, but I certainly think that the present law is more in the interest of the public, and that the banks, to which we have given considerable privileges, should be called upon to see for themselves that they do not pay on forged endorsements.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This provision has been inserted in the English Act in order to relieve the banks from this liability, on the ground of the great convenience which they are to the public; but in this Bill the provision is inserted and brought before the Committee rather in order to obtain the opinion of the country on the subject. For my part I have no strong opinion in regard to it, and, if the House is not prepared to consider it this evening, I will allow it to stand.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This has been the law in England since 1853. It is a question of considerable difficulty, and this entirely changes the principle which has hitherto prevailed in this Dominion.

Mr. SKINNER.

Mr. MULOCK. I quite agree with this provision. I think, when people draw cheques payable to order on banks in which they are depositors, they not only use the bank as an agent to pay money to somebody else, but they cast upon the bank an obligation which it is not bound to undertake—to see that the transaction is a correct one. If cheques are to be handed around to any number of persons, how is the bank to know whether the signature is genuine or not? Of course, the bank is bound to know the signature of the depositor. It has many ways of knowing his signature, but it has no means of knowing whether the signature of the endorser, who may be an entire stranger, is valid or not, and they would be justified in refusing payment, until it was shown that the endorser's signature was genuine. Yet, at present, they would be liable to an action for so refusing. Either a cheque should be made payable to bearer, or the bank should not be compelled to find out the endorser.

Mr. CHARLTON. I cannot agree with the last speaker. If a cheque is made payable to bearer, it may be used as currency, and, in that case, it is the duty of the individual, or the institution paying it, to discover that it is really in the hands of the person to whom it is payable. It is the business of the bank to find out that for itself; and it is easy, when an individual offers a bill payable to order, to require an identification of the person. I think it would be a dangerous innovation if banks were relieved from the liability which they now have in regard to the payment of a forged acceptance or note. The present law works well enough. If a man goes to a bank with an acceptance payable to their order, they are required to have an identification of that man, and it is quite legitimate for anyone in that case to do so; but to say that the banks should be relieved from that liability will be to place in the power of the banks the opportunity to do business loosely and carelessly, and to exonerate them from the consequence of doing their business carelessly. I hope this provision will not be engrafted upon the law of Canada in regard to banks.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The subject is too important to finish the discussion before six o'clock, and I, therefore, move that the Committee report progress.

Committee rose and reported progress, and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 13) to amend the Act to incorporate the Alberta Railway and Coal Company.—(Mr. Shanly.)

YORK COUNTY BANK.

Mr. TAYLOR (for Mr. TISDALE), moved second reading of Bill (No. 39) to incorporate the York County Bank. He said: The hon. member who has the Bill in charge asked me to move the second reading, as he had to leave for Montreal. There is nothing in the Bill but a slight amendment in one clause. He wanted it advanced a stage, that it might go before the Committee.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 41) to incorporate the Canada Cable Company.—(Mr. Hesson.)

Bill (No. 50) respecting the Manitoba and North-Western Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Wallace.)

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Contingencies—Privy Council..... $11,000

Mr. McMULLEN. When the Committee rose we had considered at some length the expenditure for cab hire. I object to the item on the ground that the Estimates contain no provision for this expenditure. If we are to have cab hire as an item, it should appear under the proper heading, and be made a distinct item to be voted each Session. It may be thought strange that the Opposition should consider it to be their duty to examine into this matter; but if hon. gentlemen opposite will look back to 1886, they will find that an investigation was held before the Public Accounts Committee with respect to this item. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), who was Chairman of the Committee, will remember that the Committee's attention was drawn to the fact that from the 10th to the 21st of November, 1886, a cab-driver named E. Riopelle drew from the public treasury $30.50 for driving the President of the Council from November 10 to November 21. When we came to examine as to whether the President of the Council had used Mr. Riopelle's cab or not, we found that the Minister was not in Ottawa at that time, but that he had left Ottawa on the morning of the 10th November and that he had been absent during the entire period in the west. In order to enable the man to draw the money the President's secretary certified the amount as correct. But the President's secretary was also absent from Ottawa, he being with the First Minister on an election tour throughout western Ontario. When such things occur it is the duty of the Opposition to carefully scan and criticise all items of this kind. I do not for a moment say that the First Minister intended to do anything wrong, and I do not wish to be understood as making any such insinuation. It is quite evident, however, from this fact and other evidence that there is looseness in management. The investigation held, had a good effect, for it resulted in items for cab hire to persons not named being cut down, and the expenditure being reduced from $596 the year before last to $260 last year. I do not wish to be understood as saying that the First Minister is responsible for the item to which I have called attention. The officers and clerks are responsible; and I am ready to concur largely with the hon. gentleman in the statement that he cannot be expected to know every item and be able to check every account submitted. I admit all that; but if he has found in the past that he is surrounded by persons who are ready to drag him into such a position as he has occupied before the country on this question, when it is shown that $30 were paid for cab hire which had never been earned, he should either remove those officers or compel them to do their duty. Has the hon. gentleman done so? Mr. Pope, the hon. gentleman's private secretary, certified that account. Has the hon. gentleman divested himself of the services of that official? No; Mr. Pope has been rewarded, and is now filling two offices and drawing two salaries. Upon that occasion the present President of the Council came to the relief of the First Minister, and endeavored to show that the hon. gentleman had paid his own cab hire. The President of the Council said that he was certain the First Minister paid his own cab hire. We are not insinuating that he does not do so; but all we want is that items should be submitted and information furnished. The whole system has been abused. I do not know whether the First Minister is responsible for having introduced the system of cab-hire charges to and from the House of Commons or not. I have carefully investigated the Public Accounts and have failed to find that while the Mackenzie Government were in power such items were charged. No doubt if the First Minister is called away on public business, cab hire to the depot should be paid, but when he is domiciled in the city the people have no right to be called upon to bear the expense of taking the Minister every morning from his residence to the House of Commons and back. This is not done in any other line of business. The manager of the Bank of Montreal would not dare to charge cab hire to and from the bank every day. The officials of the Government, also, are beginning to learn the lessons taught them by Ministers, and the Public Accounts show that the deputy heads are charging cab hire in a similar manner. If we are to continue such a system the Government should submit an estimate for this expenditure each year, but unless this is done, it is unfair to the people that the present system should be allowed to continue. The President of the Council stated that he attributed the fact of the certificates for $250 not being furnished to the House largely to the modesty of the First Minister. I regret that such modesty exists, for we should not excuse any gentleman, who, in the discharge of a public duty, would allow his modesty to interfere with giving the necessary explanation in regard to the items in this account. I hope that, in the future, matters of this kind will be as fully submitted and explained to the House as any other item. I dare say hon. gentlemen opposite will pronounce it a small matter on the part of the Committee and of any member to criticise a matter of this kind. The press representing hon. gentlemen opposite have severely handled men like myself who undertake to criticise these matters. But we are now in the commencement of a system which should not be tolerated and which should be stopped in the beginning. As far as I am concerned, were my friends in power tomorrow, I would not support them if they carried out a system of this kind.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, no; you would not!

Mr. McMULLEN. I would not; and the present Government should have not set us the bad example, lest sometime they may be compelled to take the Opposition side of the House, for they will then have very poor precedents for their arguments against those who may then occupy the Treasury benches. I hope that, in future, full explanations will be given of every item, and that we shall not have to complain about this matter again.

Travelling Expenses—Inspector of Penitentiaries..... $1,631 16

Mr. SOMERVILLE. This item of $1,631.16 for the travelling expenses of Mr. Moylan seems to be a large sum of money for one officer of the Government to spend in travelling. It amounts to a good deal over $5 a day all the year round, and some explanation ought to be given.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The principal part of the duty of the Inspector of Penitentiaries is the visitation of the penitentiaries throughout the country two or three times a year. One of the complaints most frequently made of late years has been the want of inspection of the distant penitentiary of British Columbia. Last year I requested Mr. Moylan to visit that penitentiary, and a large amount of the item was, I have no doubt, incurred in making that visit. The visit was principally required by the fact that complaints had been made in the management of that institution in the press and elsewhere, and although the inspector had visited British Columbia the year before, I thought it necessary to ask for a more particular inspection. Otherwise the travelling expenses are merely the ordinary amounts.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Can the Minister of Justice state how long Mr. Moylan was in British Columbia performing his duty?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think that his stay in New Westminster was from two to three weeks.

Mr. McMULLEN. $1,600 appears a large sum for that length of time.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. As I have explained, Mr. Moylan visits the different penitentiaries two or three times a year, and the expense to British Columbia had largely increased the item.

Mr. McMULLEN. Suppose he was travelling every day in the year, the sum would amount to about $5 a day, and his visits to the penitentiaries two or three times a year would hardly account for this large sum.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is there any record kept by the Department of the time occupied by an officer, say like Mr. Moylan, in inspecting the prisons? Has the Department any check as to the number of days he devoted to the penitentiary in New Westminster?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In answer to the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), I may say that the inspector, like every other civil servant travelling on duty, is allowed his actual moving expenses and his hotel allowance besides. As to the time occupied by the inspector, it is kept on record in the books of the penitentiary; and a minute book of his own as to the duty discharged by him every day is laid before the Minister.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Can we get a copy of that record before the Public Accounts Committee?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Certainly. I think the annual Penitentiary Report, which will be presented in a few days, will show this. In addition to that the other record is available.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. This matter was referred to last year when Mr. Moylan's travelling expenses were equally heavy, and we were unable to get particulars before the Public Accounts Committee. If the Minister brings us down the record he refers to, we will be better able to discuss the matter.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears from the accounts that Mr. Sedgewick, Deputy Minister of Justice, Mr. SOMERVILLE.

receives $3,600 a year, and also $400 as solicitor of Indian Affairs. Would the Minister explain that?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That practice has been in vogue for a number of years—at all events, before I came here. The salary of the Deputy Minister of Justice was always understood to be $4,000—$3,600 charged to Civil Government, and $400 to the Indian Department.

Mr. McMULLEN. I also see he has $1,491 for travelling expenses. Can the Minister explain that?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There was an important case before the Supreme Court of Canada, relating to the title of the Dominion of Canada to the precious metals in the belt of British Columbia. The Dominion Government succeeded before the Supreme Court of Canada, and the Province took an appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Our counsel there was Sir Richard Webster, but, during the time the appeal was going on, Sir Richard Webster was so engaged on the Parnell Commission that it was impossible for him to conduct our case. We had then to run the risk of instructing new counsel or get some one to go from this side. Mr. Sedgewick went to London and conducted the argument before the Privy Council. The travelling expenses are largely in connection with that business, and no allowance has been made to him for his professional services.

Contingencies—Department of Printing and Stationery..... $7,500

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The hon. Minister of Marine, in his statement the other day, represented that during 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877 and 1878, the amount expended for subscriptions to and advertising in newspapers was $89,007, as against $59,800 in 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887 and 1888, for the same services. During the former period, there was, of course, no Auditor General, but we find that the advertising of the different Departments was then all charged to contingencies. The statement for the second period should, in reality, be called a statement of amounts paid for subscriptions to newspapers. There are included charges for advertising in one or two Departments, as in the Queen's Printer's Department, but the bulk of the charges are simply for subscriptions. For instance, taking the year 1888 alone, we find, according to the Auditor General's Report, that the amounts mentioned in the Minister's statement for the Governor General's Secretary's office, $1,203, and for the Privy Council, $876, are the exact amounts paid for newspapers. We also find that $903 for the Interior Department and $200 for the Indian Department were expended for subscriptions, making the $1,103 charged against those Departments in the statement of the Minister. The amount charged to the Department of Justice, $452, is also for newspapers; the amount charged against the Militia Department, $788, is for the same. In the Finance Department, I find that subscriptions to Canadian newspapers amount to $659.20, American $45 and European $87.22, making exactly the $791 mentioned in the statement. The amount charged against the Public Works Department, $862, I find is entirely for newspapers; the same is the case with regard to the Marine Department, the Fisheries Department, the Inland Revenue Department, the Department of Agriculture, and the Post Office Department. I find that the subscriptions for Canadian papers alone in the Customs Department amounted to $537.90, the amount in the statement of the Minister being given as $538. The amount charged to the Queen's Printer, $514, is, I admit, for advertising; but, as I have shown, the large bulk of these items are for subscriptions. On turning to the accounts for advertising in the Auditor General's Report, I find that it is impossible to ascertain the amounts chargeable to the different Departments, but the total advertising for 1888 amounted to $64,020.62, which I claim should be added to the amount for that year as given in the Minister's statement. If we add it to the total, $59,800, it actually brings it up to $123,820, as against $89,000 expended during the five years of the Mackenzie administration. It seems to me that that explains the discrepancy in the hon. Minister's statement, and it shows how very different is the actual position of the matter from what the hon. Minister's statement represented it to be. It shows that instead of there being a decrease in the expenditure, there has really been an increase of nearly 50 per cent., although I am only taking one year's advertising.

Mr. TUPPER. I do not question the accuracy of the hon. gentleman's statement as to the result of his investigations in the Auditor General's Report with regard to advertising generally. I think I admitted as much the other night, but since the Auditor General's time there has been a separation of these items. For instance, there is advertising and subscriptions charged to contingencies, and there is no doubt the hon. gentleman referred to the other account of advertising generally—advertising charged to public works which were advertised, and so on. But the difficulty in making a comparison, as no doubt the hon. gentleman found, is that it would require a great deal of time in 1874 and 1878 to find exactly from the Public Accounts, under the system then prevailing, the amount of advertising charged outside the contingent account. In fact, from the example given by the President of the Council the other evening, it would be impossible to trace in the Public Accounts the different items of advertising not charged to contingent account, as the vouchers would have to be consulted, and the same examination made of them as the Auditor General makes now. I was referring to the items which appear in the Public Accounts as charged to contingent account, and when I saw in Hansard the statement to which the hon. gentlemen has just referred, that that purported to be a statement of the payments for subscriptions to and advertisements in newspapers generally. I corrected it in the proof sent to me and added that much to contingencies, because it was only that statement I had referred to in the recent discussion, and that statement, purporting merely to be a statement of the items as found in the Public Accounts charged to contingencies, was accurate.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I was a little in error in one respect, and I admit it is very difficult to get at the amount in the previous accounts; but, take for instance, 1876: I find in the Customs contingencies, newspaper subscriptions and advertising, $6,857.

Mr. TUPPER. As stated, yes.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). As stated. It is clear, my hon. friend will not find in the Public Accounts of 1876 any separate account for advertising, as there is in the Auditor General's Reports of this year and last year. But in making up hastily the amount, I was not doing justice to the Government in this respect—that, in adding the $64,000, I was adding to one year the sum total for years. But take 1878 as compared with 1888. In 1878, according to the statement of the hon. gentleman, he put in subscriptions and advertising $15,921, for all the Departments, and in 1888 he puts $11,853 for the same Departments; but if he will add the $64,000 of advertising, which was divided among the different Departments, not separated as it is this year by the Auditor General, it makes actually $75,000, as against $15,000.

Mr. TUPPER. But the hon. gentleman does not go further back and add to that $15,000 in 1878, the corresponding items charged outside of contingencies. It is very difficult to find those items.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). My hon. friend will find that the contingencies were added; and my recollection is that some years ago, during the time my hon. colleague and friend was in this seat, some discussion on this subject took place, and I think the Minister of Customs then admitted there was a change in the mode in which the accounts were kept. While Mr. Burpee held office, he had charge of the contingencies, and in that way they appeared larger than in later years. I have taken the years 1888 and 1878, and I have shown that, while under the statement put forward by my hon. friend, to a casual observer the amount would appear $4,000 less than during the corresponding years of the Mackenzie Government, if we add to that the $64,000 paid for advertising, which I found in the Auditor General's statement for 1888, that will make $75,000 in one year, as against $15,000.

Mr. BOWELL. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that in a discussion at some period I had admitted that there was a difference in the mode of keeping the Public Accounts.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Of charging certain things to contingencies, generally, by Mr. Burpee, which are not charged by you. I did not say the mode of keeping the accounts was different. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) rather confirmed me, the other night, in the view I take.

Mr. BOWELL. If that statement were allowed to go uncontradicted, it would leave the impression on the House that the mode of charging contingent expenses had been changed. What I stated was, that there was a large number of extra clerks who were not upon the permanent list in the Customs when I took charge, and who were charged to the contingent account. I had relieved those clerks of any further duty, not having anything further for them to do, and, consequently, they could not afterwards be charged to contingent account; but, where I found there was absolute necessity for keeping on an officer permanently, I put him on the permanent list. But if my hon. friend will look at the Public Accounts to-day he will not find on the permanent list more than one or two, at the outside, over 1878, when I took charge of the Department. It is true there is a staff connected with the Department of Customs not upon the permanent list, which did not then exist. There is also the laboratory for the testing of sugar imported into the whole Dominion. These officials are not upon the permanent list, but charged under the head of laboratory, and is altogether a new Department. There has been no change so far as charging to contingent account is concerned; but I notice that when my hon. friend referred to the statement of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, while he justly avoided pointing out that I had in any way misstated the facts, when this matter was under discussion when the House was in Committee before, he repeated three or four times there was an item in the Auditor's Report for newspaper subscriptions in the Customs Department, but I did not notice he said there was anything charged at all for advertising, and I take it for granted that if there had been he would have added the two together, to show that the Customs Department had spent a larger amount than appeared for advertising in the contingencies. I do not know why, except it was that the comparison was greater between the expenditure for contingencies in the Customs Department than, perhaps, in some of the others, that he avoided calling attention to that fact, although he repeatedly referred to the Customs Department as having a newspaper account, which is quite correct.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). No doubt the amount expended in 1888 by the Customs Department for newspapers was $538. Is there any charge in the contingencies for 1888 for advertising, or was that paid in any other way?

Mr. BOWELL. It was not paid in any other way.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I find that $64,000 was paid for advertising in 1888, but that was not apportioned among the different Departments. This year it is so distributed, and I find there is nothing charged for advertising to the Department of Customs, though there is an amount of $12.50 charged for printing.

Mr. BOWELL. The $538 is for newspaper subscriptions.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then that is all there is?

Mr. BOWELL. If hon. gentlemen object to such economy, I will try to spend some more next year.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This was previously charged to contingencies, and now it is taken out of that, and the only fair way to make a comparison is to cut out the amount for advertising. The hon. gentleman said that Mr. Burpee advertised largely, when he knows that a different system was adopted at that time. No doubt, in that way, he has reduced the amount apparently paid in his Department, and I am not finding fault with that, but simply referring to it because a large amount was charged in 1878 to that Department under a different system of keeping accounts. It is clear that the statement which was made by my hon. friend the other night was misleading, and we find the great bulk of the recent expenditure was confined to newspaper subscriptions and did not include advertising.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think, if the hon. the Minister of Customs chose, he could explain this expenditure to the satisfaction of the Committee. I think he knows why the advertising and printing charged to contingencies while the Hon. Mr. Burpee was in office was much larger than it is under the present Administration. He knows that, at that time, it was necessary, in the interests of the commercial men of the country, to advertise every week, in almost every newspaper, the discount which was allowed on American invoices. That advertisement was placed in almost every newspaper throughout the country, and, if the Minister of Customs would be candid, he would explain that that is the way in which the amount expended on contingencies in the Customs Department during Mr. Burpee's administration was more than that expended under his administration. I give the hon. gentleman credit for his economy. I think, as an old newspaper man, he is too economical. I think he ought to advertise more than he does, because, in fact, he does not advertise at all; but I do not think he should cast reflections upon his predecessor because of an expenditure which it was then necessary to make for advertising in regard to the discounts on American invoices. Those advertisements were published in all the leading newspapers of the country, from week to week and from year to year. It was not that Mr. Burpee desired to be extravagant in advertising or in patronising newspapers, but it was because the public interest demanded that this should be advertised, for the benefit of the men who were transacting their business. That is as well known to the Minister of Customs as to me or to any other business man.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the observations which have been made by my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Weldon, St. John) vindicate me in regard to what I said, that the comparative statement laid before us by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was an illusory statement, and did not represent the comparative expenditures of the two Governments. That statement caused the hon. gentleman to attack me with some violence. He said the Committee would not take my ipse dixit in regard to it. But it is now clear that my statement was correct, and that his comparative statement, which was prepared with care, and which he should have examined carefully before he submitted it, was entirely erroneous.

Mr. TUPPER. The statement which I laid upon the Table was absolutely correct, and the hon. gentleman cannot show any particular in which it was wrong.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman undertook to institute comparisons between the expenditure of the Government from 1874 to 1878 and the expenditure of the succeeding Government from 1884 to 1888, inclusive. His comparison was made in regard to the expenditure for newspapers and advertising by the two Governments, but he included the newspapers and advertising of the one Government, and omitted the advertising of the other. Can he now deny that that was a misleading statement to put before this Committee? Does he think it is worthy of a Minister of the Crown to submit to a Committee of the Whole a statement which is wholly erroneous from beginning to end? Yet that is what he has done. My hon. friend beside me has pointed out that, if you add the amount of advertising in a single year, 1888, $65,000, to the $11,000 which was given in the hon. gentleman's formally prepared statement, the difference would at once be shown. The hon. gentleman submitted an erroneous statement and thought to profit by that, and to obtain a little cheap praise from the newspaper press supporting the Government in that way. He had placed at the disposal of the press supporting the Government a statement to show that this Government has been remarkably economical in this matter, notwithstanding that this is not a proper comparison between the expenditure of this Government and that of the preceding Government for the like purposes.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is rather excited for an old member of the House, and I am afraid I must have touched upon a raw spot the other night. I was not in any temper, but I ventured to correct him.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). To contradict him.

Mr. TUPPER. I ventured to correct him, and to give him a little wholesome advice.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. TUPPER. Surely the hon. gentleman does not consider himself too old to receive advice, and I will give him the advice again—in perfectly good temper and without any ill-will—and that is, that it is necessary, in criticising the Public Accounts, to take pains to analyse those accounts, and not to rush to a conclusion by simply making up the totals. Now, what were we engaged in doing on the occasion to which the hon. gentleman alludes? We were engaged in considering the amounts charged to the contingency account of the different Departments; we were not considering how much any Government had expended in advertising in newspapers. Fault was found with the amount charged in that account, and in no other, for subscriptions to, and advertisements in, newspapers. I think that is a fair statement of the business that was before the House; and the hon. gentlemen were holding up their hands in holy horror at some of the large amounts they found charged to the contingency account in the different Departments. All that I did—and I think it had a pretty good effect, notwithstanding that the hon. gentleman will not take my advice—was to suggest the production of a comparative statement of the amounts charged to the same account in the different years, from 1874 to 1878, and that charged to the same account, from 1884 to 1888. I was particular to guard myself against the charge the hon. gentleman seeks to fasten upon me, of attempting to make the House believe that either of these statements included and covered every item charged for advertising in newspapers. I said that, on examination, it would probably be found that amounts were charged to the contingency account in the different years, both from 1874 to 1878, and from 1884 to 1888, against public works, and, no doubt, in many instances, the amounts for advertising would be found to be large in the period from 1884 to 1888, since a great deal more had been done in public works, and a great deal more important works had been carried on by the Government. The hon. gentleman ought to know that the Government is bound by statute to ask for public tenders for all these works, and the larger amount of advertising, with the greater circulation of those advertisements for tenders, the greater benefit will accrue to the country. Now, the hon. gentleman need not get so angry, and need not feel so alarmed because some newspapers have copied from the Debates of the House the statement I submitted. I again call the attention of the House to the fact that at this moment, notwithstanding that the hon. gentleman has devoted so much time to this question, the statement that I made is absolutely correct, so far as it goes—and I stated exactly how far it went—and that it accurately represents every dollar that was charged to contingencies, so far as could be found in the Public Accounts. It does not pretend to show, as the hon. gentleman asserts, simply the items for subscriptions for newspapers in one year and advertising in another, when the account showing the items charged to contingencies covers only the subscriptions to newspapers. But I think the hon. gentleman will find, in looking over the Public Accounts from 1874 to 1878, that the account is as I have stated, not the amounts chargeable to contingencies. For instance, I hold in my hand the amount charged for contingencies in the Department of the Secretary of State, which is headed "Subscriptions to, and advertising in, newspapers," and so on through the whole account. It is patent to every one, and was at the time I ventured to take part in the discussion, that in order to ascertain whether there had been extravagance under either regime was not to take a particular item and then base a charge upon it, but to examine carefully the vouchers and ascertain exactly if there had been extravagance in the advertising, whether there should have been advertising at all, whether it was the bounden duty of the Government to advertise, and whether a wise discretion had been exercised in the matter. I say it is idle to fritter away the time of the country by hon. gentlemen in this Committee rising to formulate charges in reference to any of these accounts, until they have been thoroughly sifted. There is a proper place to sift them, and hon. gentlemen, in my humble judgment, lose a great deal of valuable time in that quarter in the Committee on Public Accounts. Instead of directing their attention to these smaller items of cab hire, travelling expenses of Ministers and the officers of the Department, these large amounts to which they are now alluding, this account of $64,000 for advertising should be carefully gone into, not with a view of showing that their opponents are dishonest, that they are charging accounts to the public wrongfully, without having examined the accounts to see whether the money was spent for the purpose that the accounts mention, but whether the amount expended was necessary and in the public interest.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman submitted to the House a statement a few evenings ago, that was intended to be a comparison, not of one contingency account with another, but of two items of expenditure incurred by the two Governments for those years concerning which the hon. gentleman has instituted a comparison. The hon. gentleman was asked whether these accounts or statements that he read to the Committee represented the respective expenditures of the two Governments for these different years between which the comparison was instituted, and the hon. gentleman informed the Committee that it did.

Mr. TUPPER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. Surely he does not wish to misrepresent me. I stated several times over that it accurately represented the amounts charged to contingencies in those different years. I said that fifty times.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman said these charges in the contingencies were exactly the same, embraced the same items, between the different Governments.

Mr. TUPPER. I did not say anything of the kind. The Hansard is there, fortunately.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why, Mr. Chairman, what value had the comparison if a large number of items were left out of one account and was included in the other?

Mr. TUPPER. That is not the question at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What object had the hon. gentleman in instituting a comparison? Supposing the entire printing account had been left out of the present Government vote, would the hon. gentleman have informed the Committee that the Mackenzie Government had expended $89,000 in those five years, and the present Government had expended nothing at all? Would that not have been a misleading statement? Does the hon. gentleman intend to palter with the Committee by addressing such observations as he addressed to the Committee during the past fifteen minutes? The hon. gentleman has read a formal statement here. That statement is intended to exhibit the relative expenditure of the two Governments with reference to two items of expenditure. If these two items embrace everything in the expenditure under these two heads, then the hon. gentleman's comparison was strictly accurate, was strictly honest; if they did not embrace everything under the heads of these two items, then the comparison read here by the hon. gentleman was, as I characterised it, an illusory and a misleading comparison. I say that these words are not strong enough to represent the action of the hon. gentleman in reading such a table as he read to the Committee a few evenings ago. I will give him some advice, and that is, if he wishes to retain the confidence of the House in any statement which he makes, if he wishes to retain the good opinion of this House, he had better not undertake to present statements of this sort to the House, and he had better take the trouble of seeing whether the comparisons which he produces, or the statements which he makes to the House, are honest and fair statements, or whether they are not.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has, in the hearing of the Committee, made a statement—I hope it was made in the excitement of the moment—which is absolutely and totally incorrect. It shows how impossible it is for the hon. gentleman to approach the subject in the spirit in which I opened it. The hon. gentleman has stated that I made an illusory statement and endeavored to mislead the House, and made this Committee believe that I was giving a fair representation of what was expended from 1874 to 1878 for advertising, and what was expended from 1884 to 1888 for the same purpose. The hon. gentleman has a

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Hansard in his hands. If he will turn to page 252 he will find I said this:

"The hon. gentleman has addressed himself to the interesting question of subscriptions to newspapers, and as I had occasion, a short time ago, to look into the figures and the charges to contingencies in this connection in the different Departments, I am glad to be able to inform him,"—and so on.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Go on.

Mr. TUPPER. On page 256—for there were hon. gentlemen who are as unwilling to understand me as the hon. gentleman seems to be now—he will find I said:

"I did not pretend to base any argument on the figures I gave to the House, and I purposely said so. I did not analyse the different items at all, and it may be, for all I know, that some items which are now charged to contingencies were not charged to contingencies then, or vice versa. It only shows us all how necessary it is to make a very careful examination of these items, instead of founding an argument on the mere figures which we find in the Auditor General's Report, or in any other report."

I have said the same again to-night, but the hon. gentleman will not listen, but rises and goes through a long statement which he has made before, in which he directly misrepresents what I said. But, again there were other hon. gentlemen unwilling on that occasion, and are still unwilling, to accept the argument that I was making or the figures I was simply presenting; and on page 262 he will find I said:

"But I went no further than this—that that statement prepared and brought before the House in Committee was an accurate statement of the items chargeable in the Public Accounts against the contingencies for advertising and subscriptions to newspapers in those different years."

I think the hon. gentleman, if he wishes to consider questions of this kind and retain the confidence of the House, should first teach himself before he attempts to lecture others. I have quoted the language I used then, and which I have repeated several times to-night, and the Committee can judge whether I misrepresented the matter or whether the hon. gentleman has persistently done so.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) If the Minister of Marine would apply to himself some of the advice he gave in the early part of his speech, he would benefit himself. The hon. gentleman gave us to understand a few moments ago, that a cursory reading of the Public Accounts and the Auditor General's Report might give rise to very misleading results; and he gave us to understand that it did give rise to such results, in regard to forming an opinion as to the expenditure for advertising and subscriptions to newspapers. But he has said: "What did I do?" I was not misled by any cursory reading of the Public Accounts or the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. TUPPER. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The hon. gentleman said: "I did not depend upon memory or cursory reading."

Mr. TUPPER. I did not say anything of the kind. The hon. gentleman was not here and did not hear me. He cannot find a word of that in the debate.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I am speaking of what the hon. gentleman said to-night when I was present. I will give him from Hansard a few remarks he made the other night, and which he has carefully omitted to read to the Committee, and I will show that the hon. gentleman professed to submit the other night a comparative statement in detail, carefully collated from the Public Accounts and the Auditor General's Report, showing what money was expended by the Mackenzie Government for subscriptions to newspapers and advertising during five years.

Mr. TUPPER. I did nothing of the kind.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) We shall see in a moment.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is absolutely incorrect.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) And he showed what had been paid for the same service from 1884 to 1888.

Mr. TUPPER. I deny that absolutely.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The hon. gentleman said in submitting that statement:

"I am glad to be able to inform him, and no doubt he will be glad to know it, that the result of the enquiry—" It was not a cursory enquiry, but an official enquiry, and he desired that the country should know it—" has been that in the last two years a great reform has been accomplished, and the expenditure considerably reduced. I hold in my hand a statement showing the expenditure in the five years when the hon. gentlemen opposite were responsible for the amounts chargeable to advertising and subscriptions."

Mr. TUPPER. Go on, and read the whole sentence.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) That is the whole sentence.

Mr. TUPPER. Read the sentences which I read.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) They are not in that speech.

Mr. TUPPER. In the same speech.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) They are in the speech found at page 255, but the sentences I am reading are those delivered previous to the introduction of the statement. Having made this introduction he read the statement. What does the statement show on its face? It reads: "Statement of amounts paid for subscriptions to and advertising in newspapers during 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877 and 1878." "Statement of amounts paid for subscriptions to and advertising in newspapers during 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887 and 1888." Now it turns out that the hon. gentleman has omitted from that statement a sum amounting to nearly $65,000 per year for an expenditure on the very subject which the statement he submitted to the House pretended to embrace. If that amount of $65,000 yearly for the five years, making $325,000, had been embodied in that statement, and the hon. gentleman had been honest enough to show a real comparison, what would have been the result? Instead of there being a comparison of $59,000 under the present Administration as against $89,000 under a like period under the Mackenzie Administration, the figures would show $89,000 under the Mackenzie Administration as against $383,000 under the Administration of hon. gentlemen opposite. That is the state of the facts, and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) put it in a nutshell. If that was not a comparison which the hon. gentleman submitted, for what purpose was it submitted, what object had the hon. gentleman in view? If he leaves out money expended by his own friends and includes that expended by the Mackenzie Government, what would be his object? The hon. gentleman will not be accused of deliberately attempting to mislead the House, but he has been guilty of crass neglect in submitting a statement without seeing that it was properly compared and prepared, and submitting it to the Committee, and furnishing it to Hansard and to the newspapers, when that document contained statements which were directly the reverse of the facts. That is the position in which the hon. gentleman stands.

Mr. TUPPER. I do not wonder that the hon. gentleman was handsomely beaten in the election in Prince Edward Island, if he made statements of that kind, or in that spirit, to the electorate of the tight little island. I never was so amused in my life, and I am sure hon. members must have been immensely amused, when I saw the hon. gentleman spring into a debate and into a discussion in regard to occurrences which took place behind his back, and yet was so absolutely positive as to what occurred on that occasion, as the hon. gentleman has been to-night. But that is nothing new. The hon. gentleman is always strong in statement, but I have yet to learn that he is noted for accuracy. On several occasions I have seen that hon. gentleman wilt, and even blush under the lash, when hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have shown the extraordinary number of his inconsistencies found on the pages of Hansard. Does the hon. gentleman think that no one has been listening to this debate? Does the hon. gentleman think the argument of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) was not heard, and that the Committee has forgotten that only five minutes ago I told him that that part of Hansard which he quoted was incorrect and was absolutely at variance with the statement I made to the House, and that the moment that statement reached me from the Hansard office I corrected it in the proof. I told the hon. member for St. John (M. Weldon) so; and he will recollect that early in the evening I added to that statement, in order to make it agree with what I had stated to the House, the words "charged to contingencies." And the hon. gentleman, without any sense of fair play and acting in a most extraordinary manner, quotes against me the inaccurate statement placed in the Debates by the Hansard reporters. And the hon. gentleman after I had given three different quotations from my speech on the former occasion, proving exactly the position I have taken all along, appealed to that speech in support of the statement he endeavored to put into my mouth. The hon. gentleman if he had any desire to make an investigation of the statement only exposed his ignorance of the subject, when he endeavored to make the Committee believe that I came before the House and pretended that that statement covered every item in the Public Accounts for advertising and printing in the years from 1874 to 1878. Does he find the "Anglin" printing frauds in that statement? Did I pretend to include in the expenditure in question that of the Citizen Publishing Company of Halifax, which unseated two members of this House, one of them a member of the Government? Was I pretending to give a history of all the iniquities that occurred between 1874 and 1878 in connection with printing scandals and all that.

I simply confined myself to one point (and I have said it several times and I will say it again when the hon. gentleman attempts to put words to my mouth). I confined myself to the point that that paper was absolutely and exclusively as representing the amounts charged in those years against contingencies. I said nothing more then, and I say the same thing now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. Minister evidently imagines he is on the stump, for he has just made a little political speech, for what purpose I do not know. The hon. gentleman admitted to night that he came before the House the other day and delivered a statement that was published in Hansard totally incorrect. He knows that without correction that statement has been published from British Columbia to Nova Scotia. Has he taken any means to correct that statement in the newspapers?

Mr. TUPPER. That is not my business.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman would have stood in a much better position before this House if he had openly and manfully come before the House when the question was broached and said: "I am sorry I was guilty of the mistake. I find that the comparison was against me and I will acknowledge it." If he had gone further than that, and said: "When I found I was in error I corrected the error in Hansard," he would have acted more manly.

Mr. TUPPER. There is none to correct.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon. gentleman had stated that he showed in Hansard in his revised speech that the comparison was against the present Government instead of in favor of it I would understand it, but instead of making a correction so that the public would understand that the Government of to-day had spent three hundred thousand more than the previous Government he corrected it by putting in the words "for contingencies." How would the outside public understand that? I have not seen his correction; I do not know where it is, but I am speaking from Hansard as his speech is here. If the hon. gentleman wanted to correct and to put it properly before the House and before the public, why did he not put in the $65,000 he omits in his comparison?

Mr. TUPPER. That had nothing to do with the contingent account.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It had to do with the amount paid for advertising, which was then under discussion, and that is the very question we are discussing to-night. We are trying to get at the truth of the facts. Is it true or is it not true that the large amount of $300,000 was spent for two special services, more by the present Government than were spent by their predecessors in the previous four years? Is that the fact or is it not? Now, if it is the fact, and it has been proved to be so, why has not the hon. gentleman acknowledged it, and placed it against this misleading statement published in Hansard and repeated by the press. The hon. gentleman tries to get out of the mistake and the mess he is in by saying that the statement he published was corrected by adding the words "for contingencies" merely—a correction which any one who had not carefully examined the Public Accounts, and who was not thoroughly conversant with the eight years of expenditure compared by the hon. gentleman, would not have understood at all. Therefore, I say that the hon. gentleman does not stand in a favorable position before this House. He does not stand in a position which justifies him in giving advice to any member of the House. The hon. gentleman is in the position of one who has made a serious mistake coming from a Minister, and if he had the frankness to acknowledge it I think we would be prepared to excuse him, on the ground of his rashness, if not on the ground of his youth.

Mr. BOWELL. I desire to refer to one or two of the remarks made by the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville). I have yet to learn that I have cast any reflection, either directly or indirectly during the discussion, on my predecessor in office. Every word I have said in this debate has been in defence of the Department over which I preside, and I have said nothing whatever reflecting on what occurred previous to that. I am quite willing to admit that the advertising of the discount upon American invoices formed a portion of the large amount that was paid for advertising during the occupancy of the Department of Customs by my predecessor. I say more than that. I say that the advertising which then took place was to a very great extent (and I would not say this were it not for the remarks which fell from the hon. gentleman) totally unnecessary. I am not at all surprised, knowing the tactics that have been pursued by the members of the Opposition in discussing questions of this kind, that they should defend the greatest extravagance and unnecessary expenditure of money, if it were done by their own friends, and that they are ever ready to condemn a member of this Government because he has not followed in the extravagant footsteps of his predecessor. I have no doubt that many of the hon. gentlemen who are unable to attack the administration of the Department on account of unnecessary expenditure in the contingencies would much rather I had followed the course of my predecessor and spent thirty thousand or forty thousand dollars which ought not to have been spent. I tell the hon. gentleman from Brant (Mr. Somerville) that if he makes a thorough investigation of the expenses of the Customs Department from 1878 to 1888—including the amounts that were paid by myself for old accounts, and which will be found in the Public Accounts of 1889—if he makes an investigation of the items of expenditure in the Department, including advertising, newspaper subscriptions, and other expenditures which took place in every branch under the immediate control of the Minister, that I will prove to him that I saved during that time over $40,000, and performed more work than was performed during the time of my predecessor. I pledge myself to do that if he desires to go into this question. I am not surprised that he says he regrets that I have not spent more money, because if I did he would have then some cause of attack. I spend all the money that I think is necessary to be spent in the interests of the Department over which I preside, and if the hon. gentleman can point out to me that the public service has been injured, or that information that should have been given the country has not been given, by want of advertising in the newspapers, I will be glad to accept his advice, and in the future will see that the public obtain that information. I explained the other night that portions of that advertising, which had taken place during the last Administration, was unnecessary, and believing it to be unnecessary, and having some little knowledge of the business of printing, I put a stop to that extravagant expenditure, as I did to many other expenditures which I thought were unnecessary in the public interest. That is the defence I have to make for not having spent more money, and that is the explanation I desire to give in reference to the expenditures coming exclusively under the head of "contingencies," so far as the Customs Department is concerned. I should not have made this statement, had it not been for the assertion of the hon. gentleman that I cast reflections on my predecessor. I have not done so, and I trust I never shall. For my predecessor, personally, I had as much respect, and, certainly, I was on as friendly personal terms with him as any member of the House of Commons.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I do not think there was any intention of singling out the Department of the Minister of Customs. It was only referred to because the amount charged against Mr. Burpee's administration was the largest item in the statement of the Minister of Marine, and great stress was laid upon it. The Minister of Customs made a very fair explanation in saying that he had adopted a different mode with regard to advertising. I understood the hon. Minister of Marine to say that he had spoken to me about this statement after the House had risen. I have no recollection of his doing so, and I could not then have understood him because at that time I had not seen the statement, and I had not been able to catch it when he read it. I asked my hon. friend sitting in front of me if he had it and he informed me that he had returned it. But I understood from the statement put forward by the hon. Minister that a great reflection was cast on the late Minister of Customs, a gentleman whose memory I revere, and whose death was one of the greatest losses ever sustained by the City and County of St. John. It was represented that he had expended $30,000 for subscriptions and advertising, while his successor had expended only something like $3,700. Now, we find that last year the contingencies amounted to $231,975, as against $175,000 in 1875-76, an increase of some $60,000, without allowing for the large amount of advertising which is included in the smaller amount. My hon. friend was unfair in his comparison, because it would lead the public at large to believe that the items in the two were exactly the same, whereas we find that actually in one year $64,000 has been expended by this Government in advertising, which was not included in the statement, and even that year has been exceeded last year by $13,000. I admit that there is some cause for an increase, but when my hon. friend comes forward to make a comparison to lead the people to believe that the Mackenzie Government were more extravagant than the present Government, I think it only fair to put them on the same basis.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I am glad that the hon. Minister of Customs admitted that the statement I made was correct, as to the necessity that existed during the Mackenzie Administration for more extensive advertising. He admitted that it was necessary on account of the difference in American invoices, owing to the variation between American and Canadian currency.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say it was necessary; I said it was done.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It was done for the information of the business men of the country, and not for the purpose of benefiting the newspapers. I can easily see how it is that the Minister of Marine applied the comparison to the Customs Department. Everybody who knows anything about the working of the present Government, knows that the Minister of Customs is set up as the model man, so far as economy is concerned. He does not advertise, he does not hire cabs, he incurs hardly any travelling expenses. It is well for the Ministry that they have one man in their number who is entitled to some credit in this respect, because if you take him out of the Government you take all the economy from it. He is the only economical man in the Administration, so far as that kind of expenditure is concerned. I can point to the Minister of Public Works as being, with regard to patronage to the newspapers, perhaps the most extravagant man on the Treasury benches. He believes in patronising the newspapers, and he does it most effectively. I can point to the Minister of Agriculture, too, as an extravagant man in that respect; because if he does not advertise extensively he used to send out a great many pamphlets to be printed at extravagant prices, in some cases at fourteen times the price for which they could be printed if they had been given to the contractor. All any man requires to do is to look at the Auditor General's Report on pages 40 A, 41 A, 42 A and 43 A to see that during the past year the Government expended for advertising no less than $77,359.98 and for printing $115,335.55. Now, I have had occasion, during nearly every Session that I have had the honor of being a member of this House, to call attention to the extravagant expenditures that have been incurred for printing and advertising, and I am satisfied that I have convinced the country that this Government has been most extravagant in these expenditures. Nor have the expenditures been made in the interest of the country, but almost entirely for the benefit and support of the organs who support the Government. They believe in supporting their supporters, so far as advertising and printing are concerned. Why, I have brought the blush to the face of the Ministers sitting on the Treasury benches when, in a former Session, I have held up before their gaze a seven-by-nine newspaper published in the City of Ottawa, only once a year, and then only for the purpose of putting in a portrait of the Minister of Agriculture, or the Minister of Marine, or the Minister of Public Works—a newspaper called the Investigator, on which they expended $300 or $400 annually. I pointed out last Session also how a little newspaper in the town of Yarmouth was published merely as an offshoot of another newspaper there, in order to get the Government advertising, and how $300 or $400 per year was given to that. I held up one of those papers here, and it was full, bristling with Government advertisements, and the public received no benefit from it whatever. I see by the Public Accounts that this little Investigator has even this year been receiving money, although the man is actually dead and his newspaper has been dead two years.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a balance.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I do not know whether they have any communication with another sphere or not, but I see that the paper is still drawing money. And the Minister of Customs tells us that he has been very economical in advertising and printing. I admit that he has been, but I say that he is the exception to the rule, for in every other branch of the public service this Government has wastefully and extravagantly expended, year in and year out, enormous sums of money for the purpose of bolstering up their organs all through the Dominion. I say that this money has been wasted, because the advertisements have been inserted in newspapers where the public interest did not require that they should be inserted, and there has been no check apparently upon the money so wasted. Why, if you look over the Auditor General's Report, you will find almost every Tory newspaper, from Gaspé to British Columbia, has been drawing pap from the Government; and, if it was the interests of the public the Government were trying to serve, would it not be right to expect that an advertisement would occasionally be published in some Reform newspapers? But when you take the list of newspapers which have secured the patronage of the Government during the past year, and during every year this Administration has been in power, you will find scarcely one dollar paid to any other than a newspaper supporting the present Government. Yet these men claim they have been more economical in this matter than the former Government. I am surprised that the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries—a young man who has not been long in politics, and who has attained the high position he now occupies, perhaps not altogether on his own merits, but because he had a father before him—should speak in the way he has spoken here to-night, and attempt to dictate and give lessons in parliamentary decorum and conduct to hon. gentlemen on this side who have long held positions of public trust, and have filled those positions in a manner deserving of credit. I am surprised that he should get up here and lecture them when he well knows that the statement he made to this House was made for the sole purpose of deceiving members of this House, and deceiving the country at large with regard to this matter. He has admitted to-night that the statement he made was not properly represented in Hansard, that the comparison is not complete, and did not give a fair presentation of the expenditure in advertising which was charged to contingencies under the former Government, as compared with the same charges made under the present system of keeping the public accounts. He has admitted, although he seeks to cover up his admission by a multitude of words, the correctness of the accusations made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon); and, although, perhaps, not occupying as exalted a position in this House as the hon. gentleman, I may be allowed to give him a little advice. He is very anxious at all times to give hon. members on this side advice, but I would just advise him to be a little more modest in his demeanor when dealing with hon. gentlemen who are older in experience and have rendered, perhaps, more valuable service to the country than he has, although they may not have obtained as much money from the public purse.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has made the statement that I, as Minister of Agriculture, had paid for pamphlets fourteen times more than they could be printed for. Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to name the pamphlets, and when and where the work was done?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I have much pleasure in informing the hon. gentleman that, although I do not remember the year—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh!

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Wait until I get through. I proved to the satisfaction of the Public Accounts Committee, and have proved on the floor of this House, that, in one particular case, fourteen prices were paid to the Montreal Gazette for departmental printing. I am prepared to go before any committee or commission appointed by the hon. the Minister of Agriculture, and establish the correctness of my statement that the Montreal Gazette was allowed fourteen prices for work done—fourteen times a larger price than the same work could have been done for at the contract prices with the public contractor for parliamentary printing. It was in this case fourteen times; but in most of the cases it was from four to six, and eight times the price which the work could have been done for by the public contractor; and the hon. the late member for Cardwell, the then Minister of the Interior, was in this House when I made the statement, and he never attempted to gainsay the figures and the facts which I brought under the attention of the House.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman pointed to me as the Minister of Agriculture who had paid fourteen times the price of the pamphlets. I deny the statement; and the charge that he made was made against the Department before I had charge of it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I have great pleasure in freeing the hon. gentleman who now occupies the position of Minister of Agriculture from the charge. The late Mr. Pope was Minister of Agriculture at the time; but that does not remove the force of the statement I made. I am glad that my hon. friend, the Minister of Agriculture, has reminded me that he was not the guilty party; but, at the same time, the guilt was there, and he was a member of the Government which was responsible. He was Postmaster General at the time, and he might have had some supervision over the Department which was presided over by the late Mr. Pope. He knew that the money was squandered, and he did not get up in the House when I made the statement and say: Well, Mr. Pope, you made a mistake in giving these men so much money out of the public Treasury—more than ought to have been expended. He did not rise to the occasion then; but I am glad to say that his hands are clean so far as that is concerned.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think something should be done by this House to strike off from Hansard this carefully prepared statement that the hon. the Minister of Marine submitted to us the other night. I do not think it should be allowed to remain in Hansard. The statement is certainly incorrect; it is certainly not in accordance with the facts, and is calculated to mislead this House and the country as to the expenditure during the periods named. I really do not know what the Government will do about it. I really do not know what the High Commissioner would do about this were he here. There was none of the family that ever I knew of that could have been guilty of furnishing a statement to the House which was not borne out by the facts; and, if the father of this hon. Minister were to look down upon the deliberations of this House to-night, and see that his promising boy had submitted a statement which was altogether at variance with the facts—that he had, in fact, stretched the truth—what would be the feelings of the High Commissioner, to think that his son had so far forgotten the counsel and example set him by his father in public life? Now, any person on looking at this statement, and knowing the difference in the manner of keeping the Public Accounts at the different periods, will know at once, without further investigation, that it is false and misleading. It cannot be otherwise. Why, in the heading of the statement we find that it purports to be a statement of subscriptions to and advertising in newspapers, when in reality it is only the contingencies that are referred to in the latter period. There may be some palliation for the hon. Minister, for no doubt that statement was prepared by some officer in the Department. I asked for a statement to be made. The clerk says: I suppose you want it made pretty big in the later period? I said to him: I want it made right. And he prepared me a statement like that, and I saw the fallacy of it. I have the statement and am prepared to destroy it, and would not make use of it. I would give the hon. the Minister of Marine some advice: Do not make statements until you have examined them. Do not put yourself in a light before the House calculated to blast your future and damn your reputation, and leave you here in such a position that the right hon. the First Minister cannot any longer retain you in the service of the country. The Prime Minister would not keep a Minister in his Cabinet who would tell a falsehood for a minute. I remember one of his Ministers telling me, in days gone by, that it was impossible for a Government to exist for a day if its policy was honest. He said that a Government which was administered on the principle of honesty could not exist a single hour, and I suppose that policy is the one which has been accepted by the Minister of Marine. I am surprised that he, representing a constituency in the Maritime Provinces, from which I boast my father came, should appear in such a light—if he has any blood about him, he should be blushing now—for having submitted a statement to the House which is known to everyone to be at variance with the facts and the figures, and calculated to put that hon. gentleman in such a position in this House that in future his words and his statements cannot be relied upon by anyone in this House or in this country.

Mr. TUPPER. As the hon. gentleman plays the buffoon very often, we may enjoy his buffoonery, but I am afraid that to-night it bordered on insolence. If he had a father, or if he has one, I do not think the hon. gentleman would please the old genleman by the tone which his buffoonery has taken this evening. I took his pleasantry willingly. We have got accustomed to smile whenever he speaks, but I am afraid the hon. gentleman does not understand the English language if he thought that, under the guise of being a Court Jester, he could, at this time, and in this place, throw charges of falsehood across the floor of the House. That is the style of argument for a bar-room, but not for the House of Commons. I believe, however, that the hon. gentleman wants to throw up all the rights of this House. He thinks that we should not have a franchise of our own. Well, I do not think we should, if he is a specimen of the result of that franchise. The hon. gentleman has evidently been sleeping to-night.

An hon. MEMBER. Drinking.

Mr. TUPPER. An hon. gentleman makes a suggestion which I do not make, but, when he says that I made a misrepresentation to the House which was wrong in every particular, I shall show that he is mistaken, and then I hope he will feel thoroughly ashamed of himself. He repeated the statement which had been made by some of his friends that I endeavored to show that the expenditure on advertising and subscriptions under one régime was greater than it was under another. I have again and again explained what that statement refers to, and the hon. gentleman, in copying from hon. gentlemen who preceded him, ignored my explanation that the omission to which I have referred, was due to an inaccuracy of the Hansard reporter and not to me. Whether it is accurately printed or not, however, this language precedes it, and is what I have stated many times to this Committee. The hon. member for West Elgin interrupted me, and said he was only referring to subscriptions, and I then said:

"I am speaking of the amount of subscriptions and advertising chargeable to contingencies." I leave it to any one to judge of the position of any man who would rise in his place, after hearing that statement, and use the insolence to me which the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has descended to. He referred to my youth and to my family; but I should be ashamed to think that any hon. member in this House would use the language which he has in regard to any other member, and I am particularly ashamed that such a venerable old gentleman as he is should so far forget himself.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Something must be done in regard to this. This cannot be permitted to remain on the Journals of the House, notwithstanding the terrible offence I have committed in attacking the hon. the Minister of Marine, forgetting in fact that he is the Minister of Marine, and saying that I doubt the statement with he submits to be false and incorrect. For having doubted that it seems I am guilty of a terrible crime. It is a wonderful fault that I should rise and appear before the Minister of Marine and not shiver and tremble. It is a wonder that I do not want to go home. It is a wonder that I should want to say anything in regard to the hon. the Minister of Militia.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Marine.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Well, either of them. It is almost as much as a man's life is worth; and the idea of being impertinent to them! My gracious, do you suppose the sun will rise tomorrow? I do not desire to respond to the insulting remarks of the hon. gentleman. I am responsible to the constituents who sent me here for what I do and say, and, when I go back to them, I hope I will not have been responsible for making a prepared statement which can be shown to be entirely at variance with the facts.

Contingencies—Department of Militia and Defence.....$8,000

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Last year we had quite a discussion in this House as to the travelling expenses of the Minister of Militia. It is not a very popular thing to refer to this little matter, but I think the House and the country ought to have some information as to the way in which the Minister spent $819.71 in travelling expenses last year. The Committee will remember that in the previous year the expenses more than doubled this, but I think he had a visit to British Columbia in that year. I have not seen any statement that he has been paying any more devoted attention to the volunteers last year than is usual, or that he has visited many of the camps, and I should like to know how the money was expended, if it is not considered undignified for the Minister to give the explanation.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I fully expected that my hon. friend who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Somerville) would have congratulated me on the great saving I have made in travelling expenses. I find it is almost impossible to satisfy hon. members on the left of the Speaker. If, taking advantage of the criticism of the hon. gentleman, I improved, as the hon. gentleman himself has admitted I have improved this year, instead of receiving that fair share of congratulation which I thought I was entitled to I find the hon. gentleman again stating that, although I had not visited British Columbia, he would like to know where the amount of money which appears for travelling expenses was expended. I wish to tell the hon. gentleman and the House that the expenditure, so far as travelling expenses of the Minister of Militia are concerned, is an expenditure incurred in the interest of the public service. I wish to tell the hon. gentleman that although a newspaper man himself, I think that possibly he gives a little too much attention to his own paper, and does not read the other papers, which might convey to him the news that the Minister of Militia had been travelling from one place to another where the different schools of cavalry, schools of infantry, and batteries had been organised; that he accompanied the General when he was examining some of the camps, and that in doing so he was fulfilling his duty as Minister of Militia. However, I am glad to know that the hon. gentleman to-day is bound to admit that there has been some improvement. I think that if he keeps to his work, as he has done in the past, if he sticks to his duty as a member of the Opposition, and continues his criticising, I shall continue to improve every year, and I hope before this Parliament is ended that the hon. gentleman will congratulate me upon having saved a lot of money in the Department of Militia, and I believe that he will be prepared to say that the expenditure that has been made altogether in the interests of the service.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I did not rise for the purpose of irritating the Minister of Militia at all. I merely wanted information. Of course, I knew he would explain to the House how very economical he had been himself, but I did not think we would be able to congratulate him until we had the explanations. I have now great pleasure in congratulating the Minister on having effected some saving in the matter of travelling expenses. We all knew that to be a fact. We knew that last year his expenses were about double what they are this year. At the same time, I wanted to get some information as to the cause of those expenses. The Minister is in error in supposing that I devote all my time to newspaper business now, because I have not been in the newspaper business for four or five years, so perhaps I am getting a little rusty on that point, but after this I will devote a little more attention to watching the movements of the Minister, so as to ascertain whether the money is properly expended, and next year I may have occasion to congratulate him if he reduces his expenses to a considerably lower figure than this year.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I do not think the Minister is entitled to take a great deal of credit on account of any reduction this year. It may be an imaginary reduction. If I look at the Auditor General's Report, I find that he expended a pretty liberal amount last year in his Department, something over $9,000. He spent every dollar that was allowed him, and considerably more. Now, it is a very easy thing for a Minister to get on his feet and declare that every item was expended in the public service, and rendered the service more efficient. We are told that the money is judiciously expended. It may be. We have in these contingencies bald statements, without any evidence showing how the money has been expended, and only by a reference to the Auditor General's Report are we able to say how the money was expended. Now, I cannot for the life of me understand that, year in and year out, appropriations are taken for the various Departments, large sums are taken for the purpose of carrying on the different Departments, and yet over and above that, after making their estimates as to what they really require, we are asked to make an appropriation of $10,000 or $25,000 for contingencies. I say that it is a vicious principle. The Ministers, after having run those Departments for a number of years, ought certainly to be able to make an estimate of their requirements closer than they do, so that it would be unnecessary for them to come down and ask us to vote an appropriation of over $200,000 for contingencies of the different Departments. You know, Mr. Chairman, that it is not necessary. You will agree with me, if you look at the item, that the various Departments ought to make their estimates closer. I say the principle is a vicious; one it gives the Ministers in charge of these Departments the opportunity of using these funds as they may think proper, and then coming down to the House and saying that the money was all expended in the interest and for the efficiency of the public service. Now, I object to this; I say it is unnecessary, and I say that the heads of Departments ought to be able to make their estimates sufficiently close that sums of over $200,000 should not be asked for in this House for contingencies. We find in the present year an increase of over $12,000 in contingencies; yet the Minister of War will get up, with all his bravery—he is a brave man, of course—and say that we ought to give him credit for reducing the expenditure last year by a considerable amount. We see no evidence of its reduction. We see in the Auditor General's Report that he spent over $9,000. If he will give us some tangible proof of his economy, proof that he spent the money in the interest of the militia force, that he is travelling around to visit "B" Battery, and some other battery, that he is travelling to the seaside to see whether any batteries ought to be established there—if he can bring us an evidence of the saving which he has made we will be prepared to give him the credit for it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. You would not.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I am not prepared to give either the hon. gentleman, or any other Minister, credit for the fact that, after making their estimate for the expense of their Department, they come to this House and ask for ten, or fifteen, or twenty, or twenty-five thousand dollars in addition. I say they ought to make their estimates closer than that.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. While on this point, I would like to enquire of the Finance Minister if he has established the practice which he proposed last Session in the Public Accounts Committee, when it was shown him that the system he was following in securing money for the travelling expenses of Ministers and other public officers, was a system that ought not longer to be maintained. The system was this: a requisition was made on the Finance Department—say for $1,000—for travelling expenses for the Militia Department. The requisition was sent to the Department, and on the back of it there was a certificate attached, certified by one of the officers of the Department, that the money had been judiciously expended in the interests of the country. This certificate was attached to the requisition which was made on the Finance Department for the money before the trip was undertaken, and before the money was expended. This system was in force up to last Session; and when the matter was brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance in the Public Accounts Committee, he saw the absurdity of the certificate being attached to the requisition before the money was expended and the trip made, and he promised to establish a different system. I should like to ask if he has introduced a better system with regard to grants for this purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the hon. gentleman will find, on looking at the correspondence contained in the Auditor General's Report, that the form of certificate has been changed, and that each Minister certifies that the money which has been advanced for travelling expenses has been expended in travelling in the interests of the country.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. After the travelling has been done or before?

Mr. FOSTER. A certificate is given to the Auditor General before the accounts for the year have been made up, and after the travelling has been done.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Perhaps the Minister of Militia will state the reason why he hoped to be able to keep his expenditure within $8,000 this year. The Auditor General's Report for 1888-89 shows that the expenditure reached not $8,000 but $9,700. Can the hon. gentleman point out the items on which he is going to effect the saving of $1,700?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The only way I can answer the hon. gentleman, is by stating that I have been too modest in my demands. I have not asked enough, and I have been trying to keep the contingencies within the amount which I considered would be necessary for the public service; but I have found that the amount was insufficient, and I have to come to Parliament and asked a sum sufficient to complete the expenditure under the head of contingencies. I wish again to tell the hon. gentleman that when he rises and requires certificates to be given as to whether this money is expended in the public interest or not, and when a member of Parliament, a colleague, sitting in this House, comes forward and charges a member of the Government with expending public money which belongs to the people, and of which we are merely trustees, as the hon. gentleman has done, and who has been insolent and impertinent—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I mean what I say, and I maintain what I say.

Mr. CASEY. I rise to a point of order.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. When the hon. gentleman comes here and attempts to speak—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON,—of the public money being expended—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON,—for trips down to the seaside, I say it is an act—

Mr. CASEY. I rise to order. I say the word "insolent" is a word that no member of the House, be he Minister or not, has a right to hurl across the floor at another member, and I demand from the Minister a retraction of the word "insolent" as applied to any member of the House.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I say when the hon. member who sits for West Elgin attempts—

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I rise to order.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON,—to speak of public money being expended for trips to the seaside by any hon. gentleman, whether member of the Government or member of Parliament, is, I say, an act of insolence on his part.

Mr. CASEY. I have raised the point of order.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I say, moreover,—

Mr. CASEY. When a member rises to a point of order, the member who has been speaking must take his seat.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I trust the Minister will withdraw the expression.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, I will not.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw, withdraw.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If I have said anything that is offensive to the Committee I am prepared to withdraw it, because I respect my position as a member of Parliament, and I hope other hon. members will feel that the same respect is due to the dignity of the House as I feel is due to it. If I have said anything offensive to the Committee I am prepared to withdraw it. In answer to the hon. gentleman, I wish to say that in so far as the expenditure which has been criticised is concerned, I have taken every possible care I could as head of the Department to see that it was judiciously expended, and I have nothing more to say.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not want to criticise the hon. gentleman's Department, for I do not understand Militia matters sufficiently. All I asked was, whether the hon. Minister was prepared to satisfy the Committee that $8,000 would carry him through the year, because I see from the Auditor General's Report that $9,700 were expended last year. I also desire to enquire as to the items on which the hon. Minister hoped to effect the saving.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am not able to specify them. I will try to keep the expenditure within that amount. I endeavored to do so last year, but I found that it was short of what was requisite for the efficiency of the service.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I suppose, although the Minister mentioned the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) he had reference to a statement I made. I think the statement I made was submitted with the intention of ascertaining how it was that there was a discrepancy between the $8,000 and $9,700 expended, as appears in the Auditor General's Report. Not only that, but I was desirous of knowing, if possible, where it was that the saving had taken place. I asked him was it looking after "A" Battery; there was nothing offensive in that. I asked him was it looking after "B" Battery; and, again, there was nothing offensive in that. I thought perhaps that some of these items might have been incurred on account of visits to the seaside. I remember very well that, a year ago, the hon. gentleman stated that very likely during the coming summer—on account of the suggestions that had been made—that, perhaps, he might take a visit to the seaside. Was there anything insolent in my enquiring about that? Was there anything incriminating in the remark? I think not. I really must be inclined to the opinion that the hon. gentleman must have lost his temper, or that there must be some reason why he should be more irritable than ordinary when he takes offence at that. I have only used the words he himself used a year ago, when he said that on account of the suggestion made he would very likely take a trip to the seaside. I cannot understand that that is insolent or intended to give offence. I may have given offence by trying to extract information from the hon. gentleman, but he ought to have allowed the little information in his possession to come out without anger. No doubt it was very trying to allow the little information to escape from him, but I am not responsible for that. I wanted the information, and I hope the hon. gentleman will give it to me without charging me with insolence which I had no intention of conveying. He charged me with wrong-doing, and stated that he would no longer stand it; and he tried to frighten me, because, no doubt, he is the Minister of War, and I only a private individual. I hope that he will give me the information I asked of him, and then, perhaps, we will be good friends afterwards. I will not charge the hon. Minister with insolence, but, of course, if he displays a determination not to give me the information, I will have to think there is something wrong. Although he is Minister of War and I a private individual, I do not think I shall run from him. I want the information and I hope I will get it.

Mr. LISTER. Does the Minister refuse to give the information?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not know what information I can give more than what I have already given to the House.

Mr. LISTER. The information you have given is that you spent that amount of money, and you decline to account for it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I never declined to account for it.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman claims credit for economy during the last year, because his expenditure has not equalled that of the year before. I believe it to be the duty of a Minister, just as much as it is the duty of any employé of the Government, to furnish an account of the expenditure he has made during the year. I do not see upon what principle a Minister of the Crown should put his hand in the public Treasury, and take out one, two or three thousand dollars and ask Parliament to confirm his act, and to say, without knowing the facts, that that money was properly expended. As the hon. gentleman has himself said, a Minister is the trustee for the people. That is the position that members of the Government occupy. They are trustees of the money of the public, and if they occupied that position, so far as an individual is concerned, the courts would require that an account should be rendered for every dollar they have expended. I ask the House why it is that the members of the Government will spend large sums of money and decline, year after year, to give this House any account at all as to how they have spent the money. The Minister of Militia has no doubt done some travelling in the Province of Ontario, but I would remind him that the amount of $819,711 charged to him will do considerable travelling. I am not saying that he has not spent the money; I am not charging him with any impropriety in this expenditure, but I should say that every member of the Government owes it to himself, and to the House, and to the country, to show that the money they have taken from the Treasury has been properly expended. The hon. Minister claims that he has been economical, and he compares this year's expenditure with the previous year. If my memory serves me a right the hon. gentleman took a jaunt to the Pacific coast. He did not go as an ordinary civilian goes in the ordinary railway cars and pay his fare as ordinary people do, but there was a special car chartered, and my hon. friend the Minister had a few congenial spirits to join him on that trip to the Pacific coast, and this country has to pay the cost. I do not think that is just. If hon. gentlemen, because they happen to become members of the Government, can forget that before they occupied that position they had to travel as other citizens of this country do, and if because they become members of the Government they cease to be ordinary citizens and become something greater, something finer, and something better, the people have the right to know it. I say that every member of the Government ought to be bound to render an account of his expenditure of the public money. It is a duty that he owes to himself, to Parliament, and to the country.

Contingencies—Department of the Interior $18,000

Mr. LAURIER. Could the Minister of the Interior inform us whether surveys are now going on in the North-West Territories?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Some were going on during the last season, and we shall have a few surveyors out next year I suppose, but not many.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that the travelling expenses of Mr. Burgess, the Deputy Minister of the Interior, amount to $908.28. Possibly the Minister may be able to give us an explanation of that?

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is for the year that I joined the Government, and Mr. Burgess, before I came here, started on a trip of duty to British Columbia. He was there on important business, and was taken sick and delayed for some time in the city of Victoria, and the principal part of this item, I think, was incurred on that trip.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that H. E. Hume also got $549.80 for travelling expenses. What does he do?

Mr. DEWDNEY. He accompanied Mr. Burgess, as his secretary, to British Columbia.

Mr. McMULLEN. It possibly may have been necessary for Mr. Burgess to make the trip to the North-West, but I cannot very well understand why it should be when we have a Land Board at Winnipeg which is supposed to discharge all the duties in connection with Dominion lands, ranches, coal lands, and all other lands. We have home-stead inspectors, inspectors of colonisation companies, inspectors of coal lands, timber agents and all kinds of officials roaming over that country, and I think we should know what difficulty necessitated a trip by Mr. Burgess and his secretary to the North-West at the cost of the country?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot tell just now what was the special duty which necessitated his visit. It was before my time that his instructions were given. There was some special work, which also necessitated the land commissioner at Winnipeg accompanying him—some unfinished work which I think was left by my predecessor. I will find out for the hon. gentleman what it was.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think the item might as well stand until we get that information.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I should like to enquire whether the deputy heads of the Departments and other officers under them, when they make a trip of this kind, are required to furnish a detailed account of their expenses, or whether they occupy the same position as the heads of the Departments, who are at liberty to put in a bill for a lump sum without any items? And here I would like to supplement the statement made by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) with regard to the advisability, in the interest of the members of the Government themselves, of a change being made in that respect. I cannot for the life of me see why a Minister of the Crown should refuse to submit an account to the Auditor General and to this House, and also to the Public Accounts Committee if necessary, like any other public servant, showing in detail the expenses he incurs when he makes a trip in the interest of the public. It ought certainly to be the pride of any Minister of the Crown that he is discharging his duty honestly and efficiently, and how he can be content to lie under the suspicion which must rest on every member of the Government who expends large sums of money every year in travelling expenses, I am unable to see. In the Public Accounts Committee we have tried to get that system of detailed accounts established, and I cannot understand why any Minister should have any delicacy about it. I should think, out of respect for themselves, and in their desire to appear honest before the public, that they ought to be willing to submit, just as any other officer, a detailed account of the items of their expenditure, so that it could be properly audited. I think this is a system which ought to be established by the Government, and it would be creditable to them if they established it. I do not say that those expenditures are not made in the public interest, but I am astonished that the men who expend the public money in this way have not sufficient respect for themselves to remove any suspicion that may attach to them from putting their hands into the public chest and spending a lump sum without giving details. I would like the Minister to explain whether the deputy heads are required to give a detailed account.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will find the information detailed on page C 12 of the Auditor General's Report. The various Orders in Council which regulate the travelling expenses of the officers are there set forth.

Mr. McMULLEN. While they are looking up that item, I would like to draw the Minister's attention to a number of items on page C 79. I notice that there is a charge of $206.08 for 811 boxes of pens for the Stationery Office. How many officials are there altogether in the Department?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman exactly where all those boxes have been distributed. This includes the pens for the Survey branch, where a great number of different classes of pens are used in draughting, as well as the pens for distribution throughout the Department, inside and outside.

Mr. CASEY. In regard to this whole question of contingencies, I have to make one general protest. It is that these contingencies are not of the nature of contingencies really for the most part, but are items which might be estimated approximately every year. If you will take the average of the last ten years for cab-hire, for ink, for boxes of pens—the item to which my hon. friend beside me has called attention—you will be able to estimate very nearly what will be requisite for these different items for the current year; and, instead of putting the large lump sum of $200,000 at the disposal of Ministers to spend as they like, it would be much more constitutional, parliamentary and business-like if the Government would make an estimate, as they could, of the different items required. If you will cast up the different items for advertising, travelling expenses, cab-hire, telegraphy, postage and so on, you will see that the approximate amount for each year can be very clearly arrived at, and the amount that must be left to the credit of contingencies would not then exceed $50,000 instead of $209,000, as it is this year. When I say that an estimate of the contingencies required can be very closely made out, I am borne out by the fact that the Government are asking this year exactly $12,000 more than they did the year before. Why do they ask for this increase, if it is not because they have estimated that it will cost $12,000 more to carry out this service? And it is absurd, therefore, on their part to pretend that they have no means of getting at the approximate amount required. Would it not be just as easy to put down the items in which they expect an increase under their proper heading with the other estimates? It certainly would. But this Government, like other Governments, like to have a fund into which they can dip their hand at any moment, which they call the contingency fund, rather than have themselves tied down too closely to estimates. But when they ask for an amount of $205,000, a sum which, within the memory of some members of this House, would almost approximate to the revenue of a Province—and I think would approximate still to the revenue of some of the Provinces,—when they ask for a sum like that to be left entirely under their control, under the head of contingencies, I think they ask for what we, if we had a due regard for constitutional principles and our own dignity, should not grant, but which no doubt this House will grant. All we can do is to protest against the principle of leaving this large amount at the disposal of the Government, because if any real emergency occurred which called for more money than was voted, it is always within their power to obtain a Governor General's warrant. I do not intend just now to go into details, but will confine myself to entering a general protest against the principle of placing under the head of contingencies such a large sum as $200,000, to use a country phrase, "at loose ends," in the hands of the Government, without requiring from them proper vouchers for the expenditure. We have seen to-night that proper vouchers cannot be had. We have seen the hon. the Minister of Militia challenged to produce vouchers for travelling expenses, as to where he went and what public business he was doing, and he has not been able to do so, leaving us under the impression that he was not doing public business at all for part of the time, an impression which we must remain under until he produces vouchers for the actual railway fares, hotel expenses, &c. If travelling expenses are to be paid for any Minister, we ought to know that they have been actually paid out for trips taken on the public service and not taken for the benefit of the Minister's health, or for his pleasure, or for any other private purpose. I would call the attention of the House to one detail under the head of travelling expenses. Under travelling expenses, I find that Mr. Burgess, the deputy head of that Department, is charged with an amount of $908, and we have had no explanation as to the business upon which Mr. Burgess was travelling. I know Mr. Burgess is a very estimable man, a particular friend of mine, but we must have some explanation of this, and it is due to Mr. Burgess, as well as to this House and the country, that he should show vouchers for every dollar of that amount charged as his travelling expenses. He is a civil servant, just as much as a third-class clerk, and he is a servant of the country as the Minister of the Interior is. The Minister has no business to spend a dollar of the public money except in the regular way, and neither has his deputy or any clerk of his Department. When large amounts are put down for travelling expenses it is due to the character of these officials, which I believe to be of the highest kind, as well as due to the House and the country, to show how this money has been spent and to avoid any suspicion that it was spent on pleasure trips or anything of that kind. I will not go into the amounts charged for marking towels, for maps, and so on, which properly come under the head of contingencies, but I think these larger items should not come under that head. As, however, they are so classed, they should be verified either before the House or before the Committee on Public Accounts, which is the same thing.

Mr. LISTER. How long was Mr. Burgess absent during that trip?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think he went out in the latter part of July and did not return until the end of September or beginning of October. He was delayed for about a month, during which he was confined to his bed in Victoria through illness. In regard to what the hon. member for West Elgin has said, I may remark that I am quite sure that not a dollar of this money for Mr. Burgess's expenses would have been paid without the vouchers having been in the hands of the Auditor General. As has been stated by the Finance Minister, these expenses are regulated by Order in Council at a per diem allowance. I have no doubt that what brings up this amount to an apparently large figure is the delay which occurred through Mr. Burgess's illness, but for which he would not have been so long absent from headquarters.

Mr. LISTER. Then he was absent from July to the end of September or beginning of October?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think so.

Mr. LISTER. Then there must be some mistake in this amount. I understand the Minister to say that a detailed statement has been filed with the Auditor General?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think it must have been.

Mr. LISTER. Can you speak definitely as to that?

Mr. DEWDNEY. My knowledge of the Auditor General leads me to believe that not a dollar would have been paid if that were not so.

Mr. LISTER. I ask the question because, according to the Order in Council, the amount allowed to officers who go to British Columbia, Manitoba or the North-West Territories, or out of the country, is at the rate of $5 per diem for travelling expenses. According to this report, Mr. Burgess must have been absent 181 days.

Mr. TUPPER. The $5 a day is the living allowance, not the travelling allowance.

Mr. LISTER. Does the Minister know that Mr. Burgess was travelling in a special car?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am under the impression that, when I met him in the Territories, he had Mr. White's car, or it was a caboose, I am not quite sure.

Mr. LISTER. I believe it was a private car, and no doubt, in addition to all this, he had a pass from the railway company, so that this gentleman employed by the Government has charged $908 for a little trip to the North-West Territories which it is very doubtful there was any necessity for. No doubt he was not in good health at the time, and I do not object to the Government making an allowance for that, but we have $908 paid for six months' work, whereas he was probably working for six weeks or two months at the uttermost, and we have not a single detail of that expenditure, and the Minister is not in a position to give us any information in regard to it. The Government have a right to be liberal or to be prodigal in their expenditure, so far as they pay the money themselves, but when they charge the country with their expenses they are bound to give Parliament a strict account of how the money is spent. The statement has been several times made in this House that the Government are the trustees of the country, and are to give to their masters a proper account of their expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. The remarks of the two gentlemen who have last spoken might leave an erroneous impression. In regard, for instance, to the items for the Queen's Printer's Office, the Department of Indian Affairs and the Inland Revenue Department and others, because they are voted under the head of contingencies, and appear here under aggregated headings, therefore they suppose that no detailed statement has been given. It would be impossible to make up a book which could be handled by members of Parliament if every single item were shown on the pages of the book. Only the aggregate items can be shown here, but before these are paid the Auditor General must satisfy himself that this money is properly expended, and he does that by examining the vouchers which include, under each item, the details of the expenditure. Then he certifies to the expenditure, the payment is made, and the lump sum is put in the book under the proper item. Excepting small items, such as those for washing towels, and matters of that kind, for which petty cash is paid, every one of these expenditures has been submitted in detail, with vouchers, to the Auditor General before the payments were made. The Auditor General has the details, and he examines those details and the vouchers before payment is made, and these details are all given, with the exception of the Minister's travelling expenses, with reference to which the Auditor General does not himself require a detailed statement.

Mr. CASEY. That is just the point. He should require them.

Mr. FOSTER. That matter was fully discussed last year before the Public Accounts Committee, and I am quite sure the financial leader of hon. gentlemen opposite, who was the representative of that party in the Public Accounts Committee, quite agreed, and I think the majority of the Committee quite agreed, that if that was done it was quite sufficient, and that the details given in every other case, and the Minister's certificate given in that case, were quite sufficient for the Public Accounts Committee and ought to be quite sufficient for the House. There are several Orders in Council on the page to which I directed the attention of the hon. gentleman, C. 12, and in one of those, the fourth in order, it is stated that all advances made to such officers for travelling expenses shall be accounted for within one month from the close of the trip, and the officers shall render the Auditor General a detailed statement of such travelling expenses. Of course if these were asked for by the Public Accounts Committee they could be brought down, but it would be manifestly impossible to detail them in a book or for the Minister to carry them round in his pocket.

Mr. CASEY. These Orders in Council refer to officers in the employ of the Government, and not to Ministers. I do not find any Orders in Council compelling Ministers to give any account of their travelling expenses, for Ministers are not officers in the employ of the Government, and, therefore, do not come under these Orders in Council. I find no means of calling them to book.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You are doing it now.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. the Finance Minister says that only large items are put in the Auditor's Report, but he may be surprised to find that in this report there are items such as N. O. Côté, 50c. for cab-hire; W. F. King, cab-hire, $1.25; one yard of fawn felt, $2.50; and other similar items. And then, on the top of all that, we find in one lump sum $908 for the travelling expenses of Mr. Burgess, and $248. for the travelling expenses of Mr. Dewdney. All the small items are put down. When a broom is bought which costs 25c. or 50c. it is carefully entered in the Public Accounts, but when a Minister goes on a jaunt which costs $948 no details are given, and the Orders in Council referred to do not compel, as far as I can see, Ministers to give any account of their travelling expenses, either to the Auditor General or to anybody else. That is exactly what we complain of, that the little things are put down in detail to give an appearance of economy, while the large items are put down in a large sum. The item of travelling expenses is one which ought to be estimated and entered in the Estimates. We ought not to have these contingencies thus entered in a lump sum, so as to allow Ministers to take as much as they like out of them for travelling expenses without giving any details. It is just as absurd to do that as to allow any subordinate employé in the Civil Service to spend what he chooses for travelling expenses without giving the details, for the Ministers are only heads of the civil servants. The hon. the Minister of the Interior would not let any of his clerks do that. I think the country should not let him, or his deputy head, or anybody else in the Department, do that which neither of their colleagues would be allowed to do.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The Finance Minister would lead the Committee to suppose that when this matter was up for discussion in the Public Accounts Committee last year with regard to Ministers of the Crown being required to give the details of their expenses, the same as deputy heads and other officers of the Departments, the Committee decided that this was not necessary. Now, I have a pretty good memory, and have taken considerable interest in such discussions in that Committee, and I remember distinctly what occurred when this matter was up for discussion last year, and I do not remember that the leader of the Opposition in that Committee consented to the correctness of the contention taken at that time by the friends of the Government present on that Committee, that the Ministers should not give these details. My recollection is that he made no such concession. I can further say that the matter was never submitted to the Committee. You say that the majority of the Committee agreed with that contention. No doubt it did. The Minister knows that the majority of that Committee would always agree with any contention he makes; the Committee is selected in that way. It is to be expected that the majority of that Committee will agree with anything he says, or with anything any other member of the Government on that Committee says, because they are there for that purpose. But as to any expression being taken on that Committee in regard to this matter, I must say that I entirely differ with the Finance Minister. No expression of opinion was taken. The matter was discussed, and it was contended by a number of gentlemen of the Opposition that this system was incorrect, that it should no longer be pursued; and my recollection is that the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), who leads the Opposition in that Committee, did not make any such concession to the Minister of Finance or to any other member of the Government.

Mr. BOWELL. Do you remember what he said?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. No; I cannot tell exactly what he said, nor you either.

Contingencies—Department of Indian Affairs..... $7,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I want some explanation with regard to the item for travelling expenses, $1,695.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is for Mr. Dingman, our inspector of Indian agencies in this eastern part of the country. He is continually travelling.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister says that Mr. Dingman is inspector of agencies in this eastern part of the country. What does that cover? What reserves does he visit? How many trips does he make in the course of a year? How far could he be expected to travel? $1,700 for travelling expenses is an item that cannot go without ample explanation.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Dingman travels to inspect or enquire into any matters that require attention.

Mr. CASEY. What is his jurisdiction?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, wherever it is found necessary to send him.

Mr. CASEY. What reserves does he visit?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not know exactly what reserves he visited this year. It is impossible to give that information at present.

Mr. CASEY. Is that information in the Minister's report?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am not sure.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister does not know whether Mr. Dingman's work is shown in the report of his own Department or not. He does not know where Mr. Dingman has gone, or what he has done, or how far he has travelled, but we have got to pay $1,700 for it all the same. It is rather a loose way of doing business.

Mr. SOMERVILLE.

Mr. DEWDNEY. A great deal of this was incurred before I came here at all.

Mr. CASEY. But you ought to know the business of your Department, even before you entered into it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to draw the Minister's attention to a small item on page C. 39 of the Auditor General's Report. You will find there "Thos. McKay & Co., reporting on flour, 73 samples, at $5; 60 at $4—$605." That appears to be a ridiculous sum for making a simple inspection of 133 samples of flour.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That has been the charge since we adopted the course of inspecting every sample of flour, of having a sample made of every contract that is let for flour in the North-West Territories; $5 a sample has been the regular charge by McKay until this year, when it is $4. He is an expert.

Mr. CASEY. Can't you get it done for 25 cents?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It takes a good deal of time. We had to get the best expert we could. You will recollect that, before I came here, there was a good deal of discussion with regard to the quality of flour used in the North-West, and inspection was determined upon in consequence of that discussion.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister has not met my criticism at all about Mr. Dingman. I find that Mr. Dingman charges $1,700, less $5 for travelling expenses; Mr. Vankoughnet, $24; Mr. Orr, $63. There is another item of $37. There are several inspectors of Indian agencies. Mr. McColl, for instance, who inspects the Indian agencies in the eastern part of the North-West and the Keewatin district, who spent most of the summer travelling through that country in a canoe. I do not find any charge for travelling expenses for him.

Mr. DEWDNEY. You will find that under Manitoba.

Mr. CASEY. This is the Department of Indian Affairs, it is not confined to the Eastern Provinces. These are Dominion contingencies. If there are contingencies belonging to Manitoba, they ought to be here too. No other inspector of Indian agencies, except Mr. Dingman, has anything like that amount charged to him.

Mr. HAGGART. Civil Government contingencies.

Mr. CASEY. The Postmaster General explains for his friend the Minister of the Interior that the vote for Mr. McColl's expenses and the others, are charged under Civil Government, not under contingencies.

Mr. HAGGART. No, no; I did not.

Mr. CASEY. That is what I understood him to say.

Mr. DEWDNEY. These are Civil Government contingencies, and none of the Manitoba or North-West contingencies are included in this at all.

Mr. CASEY. They do not come under Civil Government. Then Mr. Dingman is in a different position from the other inspectors and Indian agencies. He is a member of the headquarters' staff—is that it? But although that point may be explained, I maintain it is outrageous that this House should be asked to pass a vote of this kind, without the slightest voucher being laid before the House or the Committee of Public Accounts. In the same list we find items such as $2.75, 50 cents, and 70 cents, and yet no particulars are given for an expenditure of $1,700.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is it not a fact that the superintendent of the Indian Reserve at Brantford has been under suspension for some time, and that Mr. Dingman has been discharging his duties?

Mr. DEWDNEY. He has not been under suspension at any time.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is not Mr. Dingman there?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; and he is getting the office into shape, for it has not been in as good shape as I would like to see it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I observe that $5 per sample has been paid for testing flour. What quantity is submitted, and what are the operations connected with the testing? No less than $605 have been paid for testing 133 samples. The hon. Minister could afford to hire a bakery, and bake bread by the barrel to test, and afterwards throw it to the hogs. How long has the arrangement existed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It has existed for several years, since hon. gentlemen opposite complained of Indians being fed with bad flour. The whole responsibility rests on the shoulders of hon. gentlemen opposite. We were determined we would use all means possible to ensure good flour, and at the same time satisfy hon. gentlemen opposite. I am not an expert on flour, and do not understand the process of analysis, but I understand $5 is a cheap rate for an analysis.

Mr. WATSON. It does not need an analysis to inspect flour, and the price paid is absurd. How is the inspection made? Is it on the flour after it has been delivered on the reserve?

Mr. DEWDNEY. When the flour is delivered according to contract on the reserve, samples are taken from a few of the sacks and sent to Ottawa, and these are compared with the samples on which the contract was made. If the flour is found to be unwholesome it is condemned; if it is not equal to sample, a reduction is made on the contract price. As to the suggestion that it is very easy to sample flour, I know it is very difficult to sample it, and although it may appear very nice it may be next to poisonous. I do not know what the hon. gentleman's experience on the matter is, but I am quite sure it is impossible to judge without making a very close and careful analysis.

Mr. WATSON. It does not require any such exact knowledge to tell good flour from flour that is almost poisonous. We know that the hon. Minister had considerable experience with bad flour some years ago. I call attention to the fact that two competent millers could be employed the year round for the amount paid for the inspection. The rates, at all events, should not be more than $1 a sample. I do not speak without knowing what I am talking about, and I say that the prices paid by the Government are absurd, and that the figures should be reduced.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Not only competency but honesty is requisite. Plenty of men can be obtained who would accept $1 per sample, but they are men I would not trust.

Mr. CASEY. I find a very considerable sum has been expended by the Inland Revenue Department for travelling expenses, Mr. Miall being down for over $400. Besides, I find the head of the Department down for $293.75 for cab-hire.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I cannot give the details of the $400, because the vouchers have been furnished to the Auditor General. Mr. Miall was obliged to visit the North-West and British Columbia, and this accounts for the increase in his account for travelling expenses. Mr. Gerald has to travel as Assistant Commissioner and as Inspector of tobacco and cigar factories all over the Dominion, and his travelling expenses are not excessive when we consider that. With regard to the item of cab-hire, I may say that all the vouchers have been presented for my own cab-hire. I am very glad to notice in the discussion that no remark has so far been made that any Minister did not honestly expend the amount charged to him. There is no charge of pilfering and the charge is confined to the statement that we spent too much money, whereas last year there was an insinuation made that this was a sort of perquisite to the Ministers in addition to their salaries. Sometimes I pay my cab-hire out of my pocket, but, as a general rule, I pay at the end of the month, and that account is kept by the messenger who orders the cab. I give the messenger my own cheque for so much cab-hire as was for my own private use. For my family I keep a horse, and the cabs for my private use I pay out of my own pocket. The vouchers can all be had and every cent there is what should be charged to the public service, and does not include a single dollar for my personal use or that of my family.

Mr. CASEY. I think that after my hon. friend's explanation we are compelled to admit two things: First that Mr. Gerald's travelling expenses must have been comparatively moderate, seeing that he travelled over a great part of the Dominion for the sum mentioned in the accounts, while it cost the hon. Minister $290 and some odd cents to travel about Ottawa in cabs. The hon. gentleman is entitled to consideration in making the admission that he keeps a horse and does not charge us for the maintenance of that horse. I hold that a Minister has as good a right to charge for the rent of his stable and the keep of his horse as he has to make us pay his cab-hire. The Ministers are paid a salary for discharging their duties towards the public, and these additions are simply perquisites that have accrued by force of custom. I do not say they are peculiar to one Department or the other, but, at all events, they should not be allowed. We ought to give a Minister a sufficient salary to enable him to pay his cab-hire instead of providing for it by contingencies. We feel thankful, however, to the hon. Minister, good and generous Irishman as he is, that he has not charged us with the keep of his horse as well as for his cab-hire.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY—REBATE ON CORN.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. LAURIER. I beg to move:

That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be Resolved that, in the opinion of this House, no rebate should be allowed on corn imported for use in the manufacture of spirits.

He said: I make this motion as a consequence of the discussion which we had lately in the House, and I believe it must commend itself to both sides of the House. We on this side are of opinion that if rebates are to be allowed to certain classes of the community, they ought to be allowed to all classes, to which they may be useful. If certain classes of the community are to be exempt from the operation of the Customs laws, it is nothing but fair that similar exemptions should be allowed to all classes which can be similarly affected or benefited. At present distillers can import corn, of course paying the duty provided by law, but after they have converted the corn into spirits to be exported, they are then allowed a rebate of the duty which they have paid: in other words, they are refunded the amount they have paid into the Treasury. On the other hand, if a farmer imports corn to feed cattle and exports the corn after he has converted it into beef, he is not allowed any rebate. Certainly, taking the two things together, there is as much reason to give a rebate to one as to give it to the other. If the distiller is allowed the privilege of being refunded what he may have paid into the Treasury when he exports his goods to another country, there can be no substantial reason given why a similar privilege should not be extended to another industry; and just as beneficial an industry, or a far more beneficial one to the country, I should say. We proposed this policy from this side of the House, and we were met with a double answer from the Government side; but the two answers go in absolutely the opposite directions. The hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Corby) stated that so far as the distillers were concerned they did not want any rebate at all, and he said further: "There is no use speaking of that class, because nothing could be made out of it, as the rebate was really inoperative." "No spirits," he said, "were exported from this country, and therefore no rebate worth mentioning has been paid out of the Treasury." This was an answer, and the meaning was obvious. It went to show that, really after all, there was nothing in the contention that a similar privilege should be allowed to the farmer, because the rebate gave practically nothing to the distillers. Immediately after we have another answer from a gentleman who represents another riding in the County of Hastings, my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, who said, if I understood his argument right, that the rebate provision should be kept on the statute book, because it served the good purpose of being an inducement to distillers to extend their business, and if they did so, we should have in the country the benefit of the labor which they would thus introduce. I have not to enquire at this moment which is which of these two different answers. I have not even to enquire as to the merits of the policy of my hon. friend the Minister of Customs lavishing his favors upon a class who do not want it, and refusing them to a class who do want it. I do not enquire at this moment into his policy. The only argument which I want to offer is this, that if rebates are to be allowed to one class they should be allowed to all classes similarly situated, but if they are not to be allowed to all they should not surely be maintained for a class that does not want them. We should extend the same measure of justice to all classes of the community; and without saying more I beg to move the motion placed in your hands.

An hon. MEMBER. Equal rights.

Mr. LAURIER. Equal rights—yes.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think, Sir, a few words are in order from myself, seeing that a motion to the same effect is on the Order paper in my name. I heard to-day for the first time, and I was very much surprised to hear it from the leader of the Opposition, that he had made known his intention of moving such a resolution to a member of the Government on Tuesday last, and he intimated that he was somewhat surprised to find that the wind had been taken out of his sails by a similar motion being placed on the paper by myself. I beg to say most distinctly that I had no intimation, directly or indirectly, of the hon. gentleman's intention, and I think it shows the impropriety of the leader of the Opposition having any private communications of that kind with the Government. Any such intention, I think, should be given publicly to the House, so that all the members will know it. The notice I put on the paper was put there without any intimation from the Government whatever. It was my own idea. I put it there of my own motion, and without any collusion with them. I state that on their behalf and my own. If it were my desire I suppose I could raise a point of order on this motion, but I shall not do so. I shall yield to the hon. leader of the Opposition the honor and the privilege of moving on this question; and as the reasons he has given meet with my approbation, I will support his motion.

Mr. LAURIER. I simply rise to a personal explanation. I made no insinuation whatever against the hon. gentleman; and as to the conversation I had with the other side of the House, I do not think he is at all fair in imputing any motive at all. I think it is best, in justice to both sides of the House, that due notice should be given.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes; but given publicly, so that all members may hear, and not to one Minister of the Crown.

Mr. LAURIER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman is right. It should be made public, and, so far as his views are expressed, I shall endeavor to meet them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am very glad this explanation has taken place. As the hon. member for Frontenac says, he has given notice of his motion at his own suggestion and instance, without any intimation in any way from the Government. I am very glad, however, that my hon. friend has taken that course, and I thank him for it, because after the communication that took place between my hon. friend opposite and the Minister of Finance it might place my hon. friend the Minister of Finance and myself in a somewhat unpleasant position; it might be supposed that we were attempting to throw the hon. gentleman over, and he does not think so himself. I must, however, take strong exception to the remark of my hon. friend as to the impropriety of communications across the House. If my hon. friend will look at the parliamentary history of England he will find that these communications are actually required for the facility of the public business, and are really in the public interest. These communications of course are on the responsibility of the leader of the House and the leader of the Opposition, or persons fully authorised by them. They are a matter of everyday arrangement in England, and with the immense amount of parliamentary business there all legislation or administration through Parliament would be impossible if these communications were not daily, I might almost say of hourly occurrence. I move that the debate be adjourned.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 10th February, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Mr. TUPPER presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

STANLEY OF PRESTON.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons the special Report of the delegates appointed in 1889, to enquire into the Herring Fishing Industry of Great Britain and Holland.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 10th February, 1890.

THE DISTURBANCE IN HULL.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to refer to a matter which has excited considerable interest in the country. It is not customary, I am aware, to bring up in the House of Commons breaches of the peace, and disturbances of that character. There has, however, been recently a disturbance, which, I think, calls for some expression of disapprobation and condemnation from the members of the Government. I refer to the riot which occurred in the city of Hull last Tuesday week, where an attempt was made by some Christian ladies, evangelists, to hold services in a hall in that city, which they had engaged for that purpose, and where they were interrupted, driven from the hall, and subjected to the most brutal maltreatment. We may well enquire whether this has occurred in Mexico or Spain, or in some South American State, or whether it has occurred under the British flag in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is this a question which can be discussed now?

Mr. CHARLTON. It is a question that may be properly alluded to now. It is exciting great interest in the country, and the question is whether we shall or not have civil liberty maintained in this country. I bring this matter up in order that the leader of the Government may express his opinion as to the character of the riot and give it some condemnation in his official capacity as head of the Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is not a question of privilege, I take it, but I have not the slightest objection to state that I, in common with the hon. gentleman and every other lover of order and freedom of speech, felt very much shocked at the accounts which have appeared in the newspapers, of violent outrage to a number of persons coming peaceably to meet, no matter for what purpose, if that purpose was a legal one. Everybody must regret it, especially as such conduct is calculated to arouse feelings that are apt to be aroused between persons of different religious opinions. These differences in religious matters are frequently those which are most calculated to excite feelings of enmity or hostility between man and man, and, therefore, they are to be avoided as much as possible. I have reason to believe, from the expressions in the newspapers, that the community at Hull were shocked as a whole, and that the corporation were equally shocked and disgusted, I may say, at that exhibition of violence. The law, however, is strong enough in either Ontario or Quebec to put down all such breaches of the peace, whether they are individual assaults or assume the character of riot, and I have no doubt that the authorities in the Province of Quebec will see that sufficient means are taken to prevent a recurrence of any such unfortunate outrage.

Mr. LAURIER. I may be permitted to say, perhaps, that some expressions of opinion should come from this side of the House, especially from myself, as I happen to belong to the same creed that the rioters are supposed to belong to. They are supposed to belong to the Roman Catholic faith, but I am sure they have not learned the spirit of the religion which they profess when they behave in such a manner. I am glad to say that I have reason to believe the authorities of Hull, who are Roman Catholic authorities, will take steps to vindicate the majesty of the law, and to make every one understand that in this country every form of opinion is free and must be protected.

RETURNS.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to call the Government's attention to a return brought down here in answer to an Order of the House for a return showing the amount of money deposited in the savings banks of the Dominion and the Post Office savings banks. The return simply gives the amount deposited in the savings banks, and not in the post offices. Whoever prepared the return merely took the printed abstract published according to the statute, chapter 121, section 16, and pasted it to a sheet of paper. This is not a return in accordance with the motion.

Mr. HAGGART. There is another return brought down, which gives the information wanting.

Mr. FOSTER. When that return was laid on the Table, it was accompanied by a statement of my own that it was only a partial answer, and I brought down the partial answer when ready so as to facilitate my hon. friend in obtaining the information he desired.

Mr. McMULLEN. I applied at the proper place, and the person who was there told me that this was the only return to be brought down in reply to the resolution.

Mr. HAGGART. There was another return brought down three or four days ago.

FISHERY COMMISSION.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I observe by the report of the Fishery Commission, which has been laid on the Table, that enquiries were only made in Holland and Great Britain, and I should like to know how it was that they did not take place in regard to the fisheries of the United Kingdom. What reason was there for confining them to Great Britain?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is so often that the term Great Britain is used, and sometimes simply England, in speaking of the United Kingdom, that one does not think of such a matter.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). For some reason or other you omitted Ireland.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know that there was any reason for omitting Ireland, excepting, perhaps, that they want Home Rule and do not want to join with the fisheries of England and Scotland. I may say, while speaking on this subject, that it is very unfortunate, in my opinion, that the United Kingdom has not a name. A soldier on the field of battle may say, "I will fight and die for England," but he cannot say, "I will fight for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the last drop of my blood."

ORANGE INCORPORATION BILL.

Mr. WALLACE moved second reading of Bill (No. 32) to incorporate the Grand Orange Lodge of British America. He said: As this question has excited a large amount of interest in the country and in the House of Commons, I desire to make a few remarks in moving the second reading of this Bill. The Bill which I have the honor to introduce to the House is quite different in character from former Bills which have been submitted to the House of Commons. As it is now framed, it is more extensive in its character, and I think meets all the wants and requirements of the Orange Association. This Bill in its present shape provides for many things which were not referred to in former Bills. The Orange Association is enlarging the scope of its exertions and its usefulness, and it requires powers which were not necessary some years ago. Now nearly every private lodge, especially those in the cities and towns, has a benevolent scheme attached to it under which sums are paid in and benefits are paid to members who become ill and are unable to pursue their occupations. In Ontario, at any rate, we have also an insurance scheme which has been now developed into very large proportions, and we require to have parliamentary sanction for the operation of that scheme. I believe that, by a recent decision of the Minister of Justice, it will be impossible to carry on our operations in that regard unless we have a Dominion charter, that the charters under which some of these associations have been working will require to be changed, and that Dominion charters will be necessary in order to carry on the insurance scheme. As I have already stated, we have now a large insurance scheme in operation in connection with the Orange Association, and it is very successful; but this is one of the many important reasons why the Order comes here to-day to ask for an Act of incorporation. In the past, objections have been made to the incorporation of the Orange body, and objections have been made to the form of the Bill. I think those objections will have no weight against the present Bill. We know that the Order of Grangers has been incorporated by the House of Commons, that the Methodist Church of Canada has received an Act of incorporation from the House of Commons, and that last year the Independent Order of Foresters received an Act of incorporation from the House of Commons. We are asking to-day for a similar Act of incorporation to that which was granted to the Foresters. The Bill which I place before the House is exactly on the same lines as the Act which was passed, I believe, unanimously, by the House of Commons last year, in behalf of the Order of Foresters, and was also passed unanimously by the Senate, and that after careful consideration of its provisions. We have followed the same lines and adopted the same rules, which, I believe, were submitted to the Superintendent of Insurance for the regulation of the insurance part of the scheme, and we appeal to the House of Commons to-day to grant an Act of incorporation to the Orange Order of Canada—not as a favor, because we do not and will not come to any Parliament asking for any favors—but demanding a right which has been granted to others, and which we, by our standing, by our past record, and by the constitution and laws of our Association, we believe we are entitled to obtain. It has been objected in the past by some that this Order is a secret Order, and therefore should not obtain an Act of incorporation. In almost every sense it is not a secret Order. We have the Constitution and Laws of the Loyal Orange Association of British America. These are the laws by which every lodge, whether grand lodge, district lodge, county lodge or private lodge, is governed; these are opened to the inspection of every member of this House, and to every man in Canada, and can be found in the Library of Parliament. This is no secret. In this book the objects of the Loyal Orange Association are declared to be as follows:—

Mr. McMULLEN.

"The Loyal Orange Association is formed by persons desiring of supporting, to the utmost of their power, the principles and practices of the Christian religion, to maintain the laws and constitution of the country, afford assistance to distressed members of the Association, and otherwise promote such laudable and benevolent purposes as may tend to the due ordering of religion and Christian charity, and the supremacy of law, order and constitutional freedom."

And the records of the Orange Order in Canada have been in conformity with their constitution; in conformity with that portion of the constitution which I have just read. Not only is the constitution of the Order open for the inspection of everyone, but the proceedings of the Order are also open. I have in my hand the proceedings of the Grand Orange Lodge of British America at the last meeting, which was held in Goderich. We have our proceedings, every line of which is published, and scattered, and is no secret from anybody. We have, besides, our ritual. That is partly secret; but I am not afraid to show the rituals of the Orange Order to anyone of the House, and let him see whether there is anything objectionable or improper in the rituals of the Order; so that the only things we have that are secret are the signs and pass-words of the Order. Now, Mr. Speaker, knowing as I know, and as most of the members of this House know, that the Orange Association is one that has done in the past useful and good work in Canada, one that is here to stay, one in which we join together for loyal, Christian, patriotic and benevolent purposes, I think we can fairly come to this House and ask you for an Act of incorporation. It is necessary that we should come to this House because our organisation extends to every Province in the Dominion of Canada, and also to the Province of Newfoundland, which we hope to see at an early day joined to this Dominion of ours. Sir, I might call attention to the fact, which has been observed here, that the Independent Order of Foresters, who have likewise their rituals, their constitution, and their secret signs and pass-words, precisely as we have, are also asking for a Bill which is on the same lines exactly as ours, having rituals, having signs, having pass-words, which are similar in their intent. We stand exactly on the same footing as the Independent Order of Foresters. Sir, one of the objections made to the Orange Order being incorporated, and one of the strong objections made when it was last before the House of Commons, was that the association was political. Well, Sir, that is an assertion which I am not called upon here particularly to affirm or deny; but if annexation to the United States is threatened in this Dominion, if our institutions under which we live so happily and, taking everything into consideration, so contentedly and so prosperously, are threatened, or if the connection between Canada and the rest of the British Empire is threatened, you will find, Sir, that the Orange institution is political, that it will be prepared to take sides, and give no uncertain sound if any of these evils are threatened to this country. Now, I will refer to one more particular before I close. During the last Parliament, when the question was before the House of Commons, a member of the Opposition, for a purpose which I cannot but consider an ignoble one, strongly opposed the Act of incorporation. That purpose, as I conceive, was to spread wider those differences of religion and, what is more than difference of religion, those animosities that occasionally creep in among the adherents of the different religions of Canada. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) was fairly successful in the impression he made in the House of Commons, but when those members who voted against the Bill went back to the country they were not so successful in being returned again to this House. I have in my hand a list of members who strongly opposed the Bill for Orange incorporation during that Session, and I am pleased to know that they are replaced in this House of Commons by gentlemen who, I believe, are prepared to support the Bill to-day. Therefore I say that, though that hon. gentleman may have made an impression upon the people of the country, they differed with him in the views he then took. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will leave the matter with you. I purposely abstain from making any remarks that would be offensive to any single member of this House whose religion might differ from mine. But while I think I have spoken with moderation, I do not wish that moderation to be misunderstood. If attacks have been made, or are made to-day, upon the Order which we now seek to incorporate; if attacks have been made—unjust and unfair attacks have been made in the past—I think it will be found, that the members and friends of the Order will be amply able in this House to justify and to defend an organisation whose whole record, both in the old country where it was established, and in this country in which it has attained such a strong and firm footing, is one of loyalty to the constitution, loyalty to the institutions under which we live, and loyalty to the great Empire of which we form part. I move, Mr. Speaker, the second reading of the Bill to incorporate the Grand Orange Lodge of British America.

Bill (No. 51) respecting the Hereford Railway Company.—(Mr. Ives.)

SHORT LINE RAILWAY—THE HARVEY BRANCH.

Mr. LAURIER asked, 1, Whether there has been any public money spent on the Harvey Branch of the Short Line Railway for surveys or other works since the close of last Session? 2. If so, what is the amount, and under what authority was the expenditure incurred?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Public money has been expended to the extent of $22,302.28. The expenditure has been partly paid out of the vote for surveys and partly by warrant.

Mr. LAURIER. Can the hon. gentleman say the proportion paid by warrant and that paid out of the vote for surveys?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, I have not got that information.

Mr. WALLACE.

MR. P. LESUEUR.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. COOK) asked, Whether the P. LeSueur who draws $1,024.30 for annual superannuation allowance, is the same person who enjoys the combined offices of Civil Service Examiner and Secretary to the Examiners at a salary per annum of $1,258.33? If so, is the arrangement to be continued?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Secretary of State, who will answer that question, is not present. I understand Mr. LeSueur is the same person, but as I cannot speak as to the figures, the question had better stand.

POST OFFICE AT ST. ROSAIRE.

Mr. McMULLEN (for Mr. CHOQUETTE) asked, Whether the Government have received a report from Inspector Bolduc, respecting the establishment of a post office in the parish of St. Rosaire, in the County of Montmagny? If so, what do the Government intend to do in the matter?

Mr. HAGGART. No such report has been received.

POSTMASTER AT CROW HARBOR, N.S.

Mr. KIRK asked, Whether John Ehler 3rd, of Crow Harbor, N. S., has been convicted of smuggling, or aiding and abetting smuggling, and is he now serving a sentence in the county jail in Guysboro', in terms of said conviction?

Mr. BOWELL. A man of that name has been convicted of smuggling and is now serving a term in the common jail, I believe, for it. I do not know whether it is the same man or not.

Mr. KIRK asked: 1. On whose recommendation was John Ehler 3rd appointed postmaster at Crow Harbor, Nova Scotia, last summer? 2. Why was not Mr. Scott, who was recommended by a petition of the people interested, appointed? 3. Is the John Ehler 3rd, who is now serving a sentence in the county jail in Guysboro', for smuggling, or aiding and abetting smuggling, the postmaster at Crow Harbor, Nova Scotia? 4. Is this the John Ehler who was dismissed from the lighthouse keepership at Crow Harbor? 5. Was John Ehler 3rd dismissed from the lighthouse keepership, shortly before he was appointed postmaster, on the charge for which he was since proven guilty, and for which he is now serving sentence in the county jail? 6. Who is now in charge of the post office at Crow Harbor? 7. Is it the intention of the Government to continue John Ehler 3rd, postmaster at Crow Harbor? 8. If not, will the Government appoint one who may be recommended by a petition of the people interested, endorsed by the representatives of the county? 9. If not, why not?

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to the first part of the question: The Postmaster General understood that the appointment of Mr. Ehler would be acceptable to those interested and to be a suitable and proper one. That also conveys an answer to the second part of the question. To the third part of the question the answer is: I have just learned to-day for the first time that this is the party who is undergoing sentence in the county gaol at Guysboro'. I have never learned that Mr. Ehler was dismissed from the position of lighthouse keeper at Crow Harbor. I suppose some employé of Mr.

Ehler is at present in charge of the post office at Crow Harbor. The matter of the continuance of this gentleman is under the consideration of the Government. The Government will study the recommendation of people interested and endorsed by the representatives of the county, and give every consideration to it.

POST OFFICE AT ST. EDMOND.

Mr. FISHER (for Mr. BEAUSOLEIL) asked, Whether the Government have received a petition from the inhabitants of St. Edmond, in the County of Berthier, asking for the erection of a post office in the said parish of St. Edmond? If they have received it, do the Government intend to grant the prayer of this petition, and when? If not, why not? He said: This is in regard to the establishment of a post office, and not the erection of a post office, which might be inferred from the way the question is put in the English version.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not draw any distinction. The answer I got from the Department is, that no such petition has been received.

CHAMBLY AND LONGUEUIL CANAL.

Mr. FISHER (for Mr. PRÉFONTAINE) asked, Would the Government have any objections to the construction by a private corporation of a canal from Chambly to Longueuil; provided that such a company obtained in regular course an Act of incorporation from the Dominion Parliament?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That would require an Act of the Dominion Parliament, and the Government have not considered the question.

LAKE ST. LOUIS PIERS.

Mr. FISHER (for Mr. PRÉFONTAINE) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to place in the Estimates for the present Session a sum sufficient to secure the erection of piers in Lake St. Louis, as recommended and approved by competent engineers, in order to prevent the dangers resulting from floods in the St. Lawrence, more particularly on the south shore?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am afraid the hon. gentleman will have to wait until the Estimates are brought down.

MONTREAL HARBOR COMMISSION.

Mr. FISHER (for Mr. PRÉFONTAINE) asked, Whether the Government have under consideration the question of the abolition of the Harbor Commission of Montreal, with a view to placing all the works of the port of Montreal under the control of the Department of Public Works of Canada?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That matter has not yet engaged the attention of the Government.

NORTH-WEST COUNCIL.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, 1. Has the Government received from the North-West Council, or any member thereof, any communication on the subject of the use of the dual languages in the Territories? 2. Are they aware of the existence of a petition either to the House of Commons or to the Government, or to both, in the words or the meaning of the words quoted by the member for North Simcoe in introducing his Bill (No. 10) of this Session? 3. Will the Government lay on the Table of the House copies of all petitions or communications in their possession received from the North-West Council, or any member thereof, or any other person or persons, bearing upon the subject of dual language in the Territories, before the second reading of Mr. McCarthy's Bill is proceeded with?

Mr. DEWDNEY. A memorial was received by the Government from the North-West Council. That has been laid on the Table of the House this afternoon. From it the hon. gentleman will be able to judge what the meaning of the words in the report is.

THE NEXT CENSUS.

Mr. FISHER (for Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government, in taking the next census, to enumerate only those persons who are actually resident in the country at the time such census is taken, or whether they intend to include persons not then resident in Canada who are alleged to be temporarily absent?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The intention of the Government is to carry out the next census exactly in the same way and on the same principle as the last.

OXFORD AND NEW GLASGOW RAILWAY.

Mr. KIRK asked, 1. When will the Oxford and New Glasgow Railway be finished? 2. Is any portion of it finished now? If so, what portion? 3. Has the Pictou end been completed according to specifications? 4. Has it been taken off the contractors' hands? 5. Have the contractors made any claims for loss sustained in carrying out their contract? 6. If so, is it the intention of the Government to pay these claims? 7. When will the line be open for traffic?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To the first question the answer is: If, when the spring opens, the season is favorable for work and the contractors vigorously prosecute the work, it will be finished in the middle of July, 1890. 2. The portion between Brown's Point and Manitou Road is practically completed. 3. With the exception of a few hundred dollars' worth of work yet to be done. To the fourth question the answer is in the negative. To the fifth question, the answer is in the affirmative. To the sixth question, the answer is that the matter is now before the Government; and to the seventh question, "When will the line be open for traffic," the answer is: When it is completed.

CLAIMS OF MR. HILLIKER.

Mr. THÉRIEN asked, Whether the Government have received the report of Fishery Overseer Luke, respecting the claims of Mr. Hilliker, of Clarenceville, County of Missisquoi?

Mr. TUPPER. The Department of Fisheries has received the report of Overseer Luke.

COST OF NORTH-WEST SURVEYS.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron) asked, What is the amount per acre for the survey of land in the North-West Territories and Manitoba?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The cost, including the expenses at headquarters for preparing plans and maps, is a little over 4 cents an acre.

EXTENSION OF THE FREE LIST.

Mr. FISHER asked, Whether any petitions addressed to His Excellency the Governor General, or the Honorable Senate, or this Honorable House, have been received by the Government, or any member or any official thereof, praying that corn, cotton seed, flax seed and all cattle food, ground or unground; also all manures, chemicals, minerals, and all materials whatsoever for the manufacture of manures, should be put on the Free List? If so, what has been done with them? How many were there of them? and from what sources did they come?

Mr. FOSTER. This is rather a comprehensive question. All that I can say at present is, that I am not aware of any petitions having been received. If, upon further investigation, I find that there are any, the answer may be modified.

EXODUS OF CANADIANS TO THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for :

Select Committee to consist of Messrs. Patterson (Essex), Kirkpatrick, Mills (Bothwell), White (Renfrew), McMullen, Weldon (Albert), Somerville, Bryson, and the mover, to enquire: 1. As to the extent of the alarming exodus of native-born Canadians and settlers in Canada of foreign birth to the United States. 2. As to the chief causes of such exodus. 3. As to the best means to be adopted to counteract the influences which have hitherto promoted such exodus, and for the purpose of suggesting means for diminishing this serious drain upon our numerical strength and our resources.

He said: I wish, Mr. Speaker, to preface the moving of this resolution with a few remarks. That there is a considerable exodus from this country to the United States is not, I suppose, disputed. Its magnitude is evident from various circumstances. One of those circumstances, which indicates it most unerringly, is the small increase in the population of this country as compared with that of the United States. Our population in 1871 was 3,635,000, in round numbers; in 1881 it was 4,324,000; an increase in the decade of 18·97 per cent. During the decade from 1870 to 1880, the increase in the population of the United States was very much more rapid. The population of that country in 1870 was 38,558,000, and in 1880, 50,155,000, an increase of 30·08 per cent., or 11·11 per cent. greater than the increase in the population of Canada. Now, I do not suppose that it will be claimed that the natural increase of population is greater in the United States than it is in Canada; in fact, it is easy of demonstration that the contrary is the case. It cannot be shown, either, that the immigration to the United States is greater, proportionately to population, than the immigration to Canada. On the contrary, the immigration to Canada between 1871 and 1881 was 46 per cent. greater, upon a per capita basis of calculation, than the immigration to the United States. If, then, we have these two facts staring us in the face, namely: that the natural increase of population in Canada is greater than the natural increase in the United States, and that the immigration to Canada has been 46 per cent. greater than the immigration to the United States, while, nevertheless, the increase of population in Canada has been 11 per cent. less than the increase in the United States, these circumstances prove most conclusively that there has been a very large exodus of the population of British America to the United States. Now, when we come to examine the evidence with regard to this matter, we shall be able, I think, to fix pretty conclusively, in an approximate way, the extent of this exodus. We have various sources of evidence bearing upon this question. First, we have the census returns of the United States, which give the nativity of all persons in that country. By the returns of 1870 it was shown that there were in the United States 490,041 natives of British America, exclusive of Newfoundland; in 1880 there were in the United States of British American birth 712,368 persons, an increase of about 47 per cent. in that period. Then, we have the evidence furnished by personal observation. No person can travel in any part of the United States without being aware that there is a large Canadian element in the population of that country. You will find Canadians, Sir, in Massachusetts, in New York, in Michigan, in Illinois, in Minnesota, in Dakota, in California, in Oregon; wherever you go you will find Canadians. It is said that there are 50,000 Canadians in the city of Chicago. And wherever you go in the United States you will find that the Canadians are a class of men who are energetic, who are making their way, who stand high in the estimation of the public, and who form a most valuable contribution to the population of that country. The fact that a person seeking employment is a Canadian is a passport to favor, and other things being equal, will, in most cases, secure him the position asked for. Last fall, while travelling through California, I was told by an old ranchman that he always hired a Canadian in preference to a man of any other nationality, because he secured a man who was both energetic and faithful, and who if he took a situation, did so intending to fill it and to perform the duties required of him. And wherever they are found in the United States, I repeat, they are making their way. They form a valuable contribution to the population of that country.

Now, we have the evidence furnished by the United States census as to the number of persons of British Canadian birth in the United States in 1880; and although we have no positive evidence furnished by the census of the United States of a later day, we have the evidence furnished by the censuses taken in many of the States in 1885, and we have other evidence of various kinds, which serves to render it quite probable that the exodus from Canada has increased, rather than diminished, in volume since 1880. I think there can be very little doubt that that is the case. We have first the evidence furnished by American frontier statistics—statistics taken at the frontier Custom houses of the United States, statistics taken in Port Huron and Detroit and at various other points on the international boundary line where emigrants cross to the United States; and the evidence furnished by these statistics uniformly points to the conclusion that the exodus from this country is gathering in volume from year to year. With regard to the censuses of the States, I may refer to that of Massachusetts. In 1880, the federal census showed that there were 116,601 persons in Massachusetts of British Canadian birth; in 1885 there were 64,503 French Canadians and 79,966 Canadians from the other Provinces in that State, a total of 144,469 in that single State, being an increase in five years of nearly 28,000 souls; and that increase has, beyond question, been very much greater in the five succeeding years than it was in the five years from 1880 to 1885. Then we have the census returns of Dakota, showing there is an enormous Canadian population in those two States, North and South Dakota. And we have the census returns of Minnesota, showing a very large Canadian population there, and also of the State of Michigan, showing a very large number of Canadians in that State; and the evidence which faces us at every hand forces upon us the conviction that the exodus is gathering volume, and that the number of Canadians in the United States is very large indeed.

I propose to examine, in the light of available evidence, as to what probably is the number of Canadians in that country now; and I make my calculation in full view of the fact that whatever my estimates may be, their correctness or incorrectness will be shown in a very few months by the United States census, which is to be taken in June this year. In view of this fact, I shall present the calculations I have made. The increase in the British American population of the United States from 1870 to 1880 was, in round numbers, 232,000 souls, or an increase upon the number in that country in 1870 of 47 per cent. Now, if that same percentage of increase has been maintained, the number—712,000 in 1880—will be swelled in June next to 1,047,000 of native-born Canadians in the United States. If we took merely the increment from 1870 to 1880, without dealing with the question of percentage, and merely add the increase in number from 1870 to 1880 to the number in the country in 1880, we would have now 944,000 in the United States. I predict that this calculation will be verified by the census returns, and that we will find there are over a million native-born Canadians in the United States at present—probably 1,050,000. Now, that constitutes a direct loss of that number of people to Canada, composed of the best portion of our population—the young, energetic and enterprising, those who have drifted away to seek a larger field, those whose services, energy and productive capacity we can ill afford to spare. There is this direct loss. Then there is what I may term a consequential loss. There were in the United States in 1880, 939,000 children of Canadian fathers, 931,000 children born of Canadian mothers, or, in round numbers, 930,000 children born in the United States of Canadian parents; and if the same proportion holds good now, if the increase in the Canadian population in the United States brings the number up to 1,047,000, and if the number of children bears the same proportion to the number of Canadians that it did in 1880, there are in the United States at present 1,364,000 children born in that country of Canadian parents, or a loss, direct or consequential, in the number of native-born Canadians who are in the United States, and in the number of children born to these British Canadians in that country, of 2,412,000 souls. Now, that is a terrible drain upon this country. It explains why the increase in population of this country has been 11 per cent. less in the last decade than it was in the United States. We have, in addition to this, to scrutinise the immigration returns, to see if we cannot arrive at some clue that will enable us to form an opinion as to the loss of immigrants coming into this country from the old world and leaving this country for the United States. We had in Canada, according to our own census in 1871, 582,668 persons of foreign birth; we had in Canada ten years later, in 1881, 598,388. The increase in the foreign element of our population in ten years has been thus barely 15,720 souls. Mark that fact, 15,720 souls was the increase according to the census returns in the foreign-born population from 1871 to 1881, but during that period we had received from the old world 342,675 immigrants. Now, what has become of all these 342,000 received, and only 16,000, in round numbers, more in the country in 1881 than there were in 1871? Where have they gone? They have left us. When we come to make a calculation and do so properly, we must take the death rate and strike the balance year by year. We should take the number of people in Canada foreigners, which in 1871 was 582,668; we should add to that the immigration each year; we should take the death rate and see what the loss by death was in each year; we should add to that number the immigration in the following years, and so on, carrying the calculation through for the ten years. There should have been in Canada in 1881, as the result of this calculation, 783,208 persons of foreign birth and there were in Canada 598,388, showing that, with a death rate of 20 to the thousand, we had lost 184,820 immigrants in the decade from 1871 to 1881, who, at the end of that period, were living in the United States. If we estimate the number of children born to these parents on the same basis as the United States returns give with regard to the native-born population, there was an additional loss of 240,000 children, and the consequential loss following that direct loss is 240,000 children born to these people in the United States. Now, the immigration from 1881 to 1890 has been 653,510, estimating the immigration for the present year—the hon. the Minister of Agriculture was unable to give me the exact figures—at 34,000, which the statistician, Mr. Johnston, says is approximately correct. 653,000 was the immigration into this country from 1881 to 1st January, 1890. Now, we lost of that number that came between 1871 and 1881, according to the calculation I have made based upon the census returns and the death rate of 20 to the 1,000 per annum, 53 per cent. of that acquisition to our population from immigration who had left us and gone to the United States, and were in that country alive in 1881. And if we take the same proportion of immigrants from 1881 to 1890 as having emigrated to the United States, we have remaining in that country, at the commencement of the year, 53 per cent. of the entire number, or 346,000 souls. Add to this those remaining in the United States on the first of this year of the 184,000 emigrants there in 1881, which would be 154,000, after deducting a death rate of 20 to the 1,000, and we have a direct loss from this source by immigrants leaving the country of 500,454 in the United States at the commencement of this year. If we add to this the consequential loss incurred in connection with children born to these parents, who otherwise would have been born in British America, figuring that on the same basis of the United States census returns, there was an additional loss of 650,590, making the direct and consequential loss, on that basis, 1,151,044 souls. This does not take into account one of the immigrants who left this country prior to 1871; it does not take into account, either, the grandchildren of immigrants or of natives of this country who have gone from British America to the United States.

Of course, I realise that the statements as to immigration must be to a large extent matters of speculation and calculation, because the American census returns do not furnish any data which is available for use in this respect, as these people are entered in the United States census as natives of the country from which they originally came. The summary of these statements is as follows:—Native Canadians in the United States to-day, 1,047,466; immigrants who have come into Canada and moved into the United States, 500,454; total direct loss, 1,547,920 souls. Then I assume the children of native Canadians who have been born in the United States at 1,364,664, and the children of immigrants who left Canada and went to the United States, those children being born there, at 650,590. This makes a direct loss of 1,547,920, and a consequential loss to Canada of 2,015,254, or a total loss of 3,563,174 souls. I do not doubt that this is substantially correct, and that it is even within the mark, because, as I have said, I do not take into account any one of the immigrants who left this country before 1871, and I do not count the grandchildren or other descendants of these people. There were 490,000 Canadians in the United States twenty years ago, probably there were 350,000 there twenty-five years ago, and probably there were 300,000 Canadians there thirty years ago. I think the above calculation is a moderate one, terrible as the drain appears to have been and vast as the amount is.

But there are some corroborative facts bearing on this question, and I desire to treat this matter in a perfect spirit of fairness. I do not wish to draw any deductions which are unwarranted by the facts or by the premises, but some of these facts are very significant. I find that the immigration into Canada from 1871 to 1880 amounted to 342,675, and that to the United States amounted to 2,812,190. Canada had an excess per capita on the basis of population of 108,326 souls, or 46 per cent. greater than the immigration to the United States. From 1881 to 1889, the immigration to Canada was 653,510, while the immigration to the United States during the same period, the month of December last being estimated, was 4,794,849. In that case, Canada's excess per capita was 253,950, or 63 per cent. above that of the United States. For the entire period from 1871 to 1889, the total immigration to Canada was 996,185, and to the United States, 7,607,039, showing a per capita excess for Canada of 362,266, or 54 per cent.; yet in view of these facts, we have fallen behind in the race, and our proportion of increase is 11 per cent. less than that of the United States. What does that indicate? What inference are we to draw from this? Have we less room for expansion than they have in the United States? That cannot be asserted, because we have almost one-half this continent. Have we less energy and intelligence in this country? I think we have more. We have a hardier race, living, as we do, in a more bracing climate which produces a population more capable of exertion than our neighbors, as they show when they are brought into competition in the United States with native Americans on their own soil. Have we a paucity of resources? On the contrary, we have unlimited resources in our fisheries, our lumber, our mines, our fields, our agricultural resources, generally. Our resources are practically without limit, and there is no reason why this country should not have advanced more rapidly, having regard to its natural advantages, the energy of its people, and the other advantages which they possess. Why, then, should there be such a showing as this, in comparison with the United States? I think it is a question which it behoves us to examine into. There may be one cause, or there may be many causes for this state of affairs. Instead of having a population of five millions to-day, we ought to have one of seven and a half millions or eight millions. With that population we would cut a different figure in the world than we do now, and if it is possible to arrest this exodus, and to place this country in a better position than it now occupies we ought to do so. In view of the necessity for enquiring into what can be done to serve our interests in this matter, I move the resolution of which I have given notice, and I wish the leader of the Opposition to name three French Canadian gentlemen to act on the Committee.

Mr. CARLING. I think there is no necessity for a Committee such as proposed by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). We have a Committee of Agriculture and Immigration, numbering something like one hundred members, and I think they are quite able to make any enquiry that is necessary to be made in regard to this question. The figures that have been given by my hon. friend from North Norfolk, I think, cannot be relied upon. He states that the Custom house officers at Detroit and Port Huron have returned a vast number of people as having left Canada and gone to the United States. I think the hon. gentleman will remember that a leading gentleman—Mr. Manning, the Secretary of the Treasury—stated in the United States Congress that the figures that have been given were altogether untrustworthy and unreliable. The census of the United States is to be taken this year, and the census of Canada is to be taken next year; and although my hon. friend and others have said that the population of Canada is falling off instead of increasing, I think they will find themselves very much mistaken, and that the population of Canada will be found to be much greater than they anticipate. We have every indication of that. We find that our railways are carrying a very much larger number of passengers every year; we find that they are carrying a much larger tonnage of freight every year; in fact everything indicates that the country is progressing, that the trade of the country is increasing, and I am sure that if it is increasing, and if the country is advancing and progressing, the population will also be found to have increased. I think that the motion made by my hon. friend at the present time is out of place and unnecessary. If any more information is required it can be obtained through that large and influential Committee which is now organised in this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. member for North Norfolk is not on that Committee, he can be placed upon it.

Mr. BRIEN. Before this resolution is put, I would just like to make a few remarks upon the very important question that it raises. The Agriculture Committee have hitherto failed to take such action as would thoroughly investigate this matter, and I think, therefore, it is important that this Committee should be appointed. There can be no doubt at all that there is a very large exodus of our most energetic and active citizens to the United States. If the cause of that exodus can be ascertained, and I have no doubt that it can be found out by this Committee, it would be very easy to suggest a remedy. In the section of country which I have the honor to represent, there is a very large increase of population, which, however, comes from the eastern parts of Canada, but, in the aggregate, owing to the large exodus to the United States, that increase is not what we should expect and desire. It has been stated in this House upon many occasions that we have not been able to retain our natural increase. Had our natural increase from births over deaths been the same as the increase in the United States, the population of 1871, which was then 3,605,000, would to-day amount to 5,169,200. Besides that, we have spent $4,644,689 for bringing immigrants to this country, which sum does not include the figures for the present year, as the Agriculture Report has not yet been received. We have received in this country by immigration 2,272,665, which, added to what our population should be from natural increase, would amount to 7,441,865, which would represent our present population if we had kept all our natural increase and all our immigrants. Evidently we have suffered a serious loss of population, and when we consider the large amount of money we have spent on immigration, the matter becomes a very serious one, which this House ought to take means to investigate. I may mention some other facts which show the loss we are suffering from emigration to the United States. In the Detroit medical colleges, 55 per cent. of all the students are Canadians. Now, we know that as the law stands in Canada to-day, students who obtain their degrees in the American colleges cannot practice in this country. It is to be remembered that these young men form part of our most energetic, ambitious and able citizens. We also find that of the veterinary surgeons who have graduated in this country, numbering over 1,000, 400 of them are now practising in the United States, showing another large loss of our most energetic and useful citizens. The number of families which crossed from Windsor to Detroit last year was 2,199, which, at an average of five to a family, would make 10,995 persons which we have lost at that port, and I believe that we are also losing large numbers at other ports. The effects they took with them to the United States amounted in value to $261,632. When we consider that this exodus seems not only to continue, but to increase, I think it is the duty of this House to accept the resolution moved by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton).

Mr. SPROULE. I fully agree with every word uttered by the Minister of Agriculture. Last year, I believe, we organised a very important Committee of the members of this House, for the purpose of looking after the agricultural pursuits of the people, and of ascertaining how far their conditions could be improved, and put them in a better position upon their way through life. Now, I am not going to question the accuracy of the statistics that were given by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), when he announced that such a Committee as he proposes is necessary. But, I can only say that year after year the Committee on Agriculture and Colonisation, of which I have been a member, has been endeavoring, as far as possible, to obtain correct information as to how extensive that exodus has been, whether it has been great or small, and I can assure the House that we have never been able to get authentic information sufficient to prove that there has been an increased exodus as compared with that of former years. We are two great countries, with extensive territory lying alongside by side. Our people are engaged in various pursuits. In some lines those pursuits are much more extensive in the United States than here, and, therefore, many of our young men go there because there are openings which do not occur here. Some also go there for the purpose of acquiring an education. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) gave as a reason why this Committee should be appointed, that a number of Canadians were found in medical colleges in Michigan. I can tell the hon. gentleman that if he had given any attention to the subject he must have known that this is due to the fact that the fees there are much smaller for tuition than in the colleges here. I know that, because I spent a part of my academic life in college there; and whereas the college charges in Canada are pretty high, those at Ann Harbor are merely nominal, something like $10 for each student. A great many Canadian students attend there, as was the case when I attended there in 1865-67. Did they remain in the United States? Not more than 5 per cent. remained. They returned to graduate in Canada and pursue their professions here, but they went there because they found it much cheaper to get their education at Ann Harbor. We may reasonably ask, if this exodus is going on, what class of the people are going to the United States? Are they the agriculturists? I think the hon. gentleman failed to give any reason why the farmers of Canada should go to the United States to improve their condition. I have before me a statement showing the average value of the crop raised in the States of the Union for a number of years, compared with the average value of the crop raised by the farmers of Ontario. I do not include the whole Dominion, because we cannot obtain correct statistics respecting some of the other Provinces, or, at all events, such correct statistics as we have for Ontario. I find that taking the value of the crop from ten acres during six years, the average value in Ontario is $18 per acre. I think hon. gentlemen opposite will not dispute these statistics, because they are collected by their own friend, Mr. Blue, statistician for Ontario, who is supposed to be one of the accurate men in this country. He gives the average crop in Ontario per year at $18 per acre. New York ranks next highest, but the amount is only $15. Ohio comes next with $13, Michigan with $13, Illinois with $12, Indiana with $12, Wisconsin $11, Kansas $11, Missouri $11. I need not go over the whole list, but in every single instance the average value is much less than it is in Ontario. I, therefore, ask, why farmers should leave Canada and go to a country where the soil produces much less per acre from the products of their labor than it does here in Ontario? If I take an aggregate of the years, I find that an estimate for ten years shows about the same proportion. In every instance, Ontario stands prominently at the head of the list, showing that our farmers can raise more value to the acre than those of any State in the United States. I, therefore, assume that our agriculturists are not leaving Canada because they can better their condition in the United States. Are the people leaving this country because there is a lower tariff across the line than here? We have heard so much about our iniquitous Canadian tariff that it might be supposed if Canadians went there, they would go to some Elysian fields where there would be no tariff whatever. But every one knows that the American tariff is very much higher than ours; probably nearly double. So Canadians do not go there to escape our iniquitous Canadian tariff. Why, then, do they go there? Some go because there is a greater variety of pursuits in the United States; because the development of American industries is so much greater than ours, as the wealth of that large portion of the population who for almost a century have been engaged in the remunerative industries, is such that they can invest more largely in enterprises than we can do here. Why do we find that the Americans have an advantage over us? It is because for nearly the last 100 years they have been following closely that policy which we have been pursuing since 1878, the lines of a protective tariff, and they have developed those industries to such an extent that to-day a greater variety of pursuits is offered there for the people of Canada than they find at home. But we have been endeavoring to remedy the evil. We have established a Canadian protective tariff, a national tariff, under which we are building up our industries, so that year after year we are opening up wider fields of pursuit to our people than heretofore, in order that we may be able to keep our people at home. As to the increase or decrease of population, I take but little stock in it, because the figures given by the hon. gentleman can be manipulated to prove any argument. It is not the census of our country that shows it; because the census does not show it. If we carefully go over the census, we will find there is a gradual natural increase in our population.

Mr. CHARLTON. Very gradual.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think it will do us much harm to wait a few years longer. We expect that in the course of a couple of years the census will be taken, and arguments not now forthcoming to disprove the contention of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), will then be available, and I am quite sure it will be found that he is entirely mistaken in the calculation he has submitted to the House, as he has been on many previous occasions. The House has at its command a very important Committee which can investigate the subject, so far as investigation can do any good. I do not see any necessity to appoint another Committee. If the hon. gentleman is anxious to get upon the Committee on Agriculture and Colonisation, in the belief that he can bring out information there that has not been brought out so far, the Government will doubtless be willing to put him there, and the Committee will gladly accept the services of such an able statistician. For the present, there is no need of another Committee. I, therefore, contend that there is no extensive exodus to the United States, and that there are not the inducements for Canadians to go there that the hon. gentleman represents, nor are they going in large numbers, as has been stated by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I confess my surprise at the line of argument adopted by the Minister of Agriculture. One would suppose if he felt confident that the representations made by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) were erroneous, he would be only too glad to have a committee for the purpose of establishing that fact. The hon. Minister says that we have a Committee already, but the hon. gentleman has, I suppose, not forgotten that we had this same Committee in 1876 or 1877, and that there was another Committee then appointed to enquire into the cause of the agricultural depression in the country. The hon. gentleman and his friends did not think at that time that the existing Committee was exactly the sort of institution that could make a very efficient enquiry into the specific matter about which enquiry was sought. The hon. gentleman supported the granting of this special Committee.

Mr. CARLING. When was that?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). At the time that the Committee enquiring into agricultural depression was formed.

Mr. CARLING. What year?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think it was the year 1876.

Mr. CARLING. I was not a member of the House then.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Well, the hon. gentleman's friends were, and the responsibility which they assumed I suppose the hon. gentleman will not repudiate now. The hon. gentleman's predecessor submitted a report to this House showing the extensive immigration brought from abroad into our North-West. I think this report shows the immigration to the North-West at something over 150,000 people. The hon. gentleman sought to verify the estimates in these reports by the taking of a census, and a census of the Territories was taken for the purpose of contradicting the statement which had been made on this side of the House. But that census showed that six-sevenths of these people which the report of the Minister of Agriculture said were in the North-West Territories were not to be found there. Now, if we find that six out of every seven persons who were supposed to be in the North-West Territories are not there, I think we may come to the conclusion that the information which the Minister of Agriculture from time to time presents to this House is not more reliable, so far as other parts of the Dominion are concerned, than they are with regard to the immigration to the North-West Territories. This is a serious condition of things which is disclosed by the facts and figures submitted to this House on the present occasion by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). The hon. member (Mr. Charlton) gives us the data upon which that information is based, and no hon. gentleman on the other side of the House rises to challenge it beyond the simple denial of his belief in the accuracy of the information which the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has put forward. I think, Sir, that upon investigation of our own statistics, as well as from an investigation of the statistics of our neighbors, we may come to the conclusion that the information which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) has given us is very nearly accurate. I do not think there can be much doubt in regard to that. We know that the increase of our population by the addition of the immigration from abroad does not by any means represent the natural increase of the population either here or in the United Kingdom. These facts of themselves show how very large the drain is upon the country. Now, Sir, what hon. gentlemen opposite promised when they came into office was this. They said: "You have now a very large exodus of the population from this country; put out the Government of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) and put us in power, and we will adopt a policy by which these people will be kept at home." They got into power for the purpose of putting an end to the exodus which they said existed. That exodus was something less than 23,000 a year during the period of my hon. friend's (Mr. Mackenzie's) administration, but now the exodus has increased to two or three or four times that number. The Government of the day, instead of succeeding in putting an end to the exodus, have in fact driven the people out of the country in fourfold proportion, and after having signally failed—I may say, after having disgracefully failed—in the fulfilment of the pledge which they made to the House and to the country, they now undertake to burk enquiry, lest the real facts of the case should be established by this Committee beyond all doubt. And why? Because it is so much easier to deny the statement made by my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) than it is to deny the report that would be presented by the Committee; that the hon. gentleman would prefer to vote against the granting of such a Committee rather than to undertake to argue against the information that Committee would afford. Sir, the proposition of the hon. gentleman to refer the matter to the Committee of Agriculture and Colonisation (an unwieldy Committee consisting of nearly 100 members and totally unsuited to an enquiry about which there can be any serious difference of opinion) shows that hon. gentlemen feel that if the Committee is granted the facts will show beyond all question that they have so far signally failed to adopt this policy, which they stated would succeed in keeping the people of Canada within the limits of Canada. One hon. gentleman has undertaken to tell us what the next census will show, and says that we ought to wait two years for the census, and permit this depletion to go on without any attempt to provide a remedy.

Mr. CARLING. Only one year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says "only one year." It will take fifteen months before the parties are appointed to take the census, and hon. gentlemen do not pretend to say that the House will be in a position to institute an enquiry the moment the enumerators are appointed. It is upon the report of the enumerators that enquiry will take place upon the proposition that has been made, and that report cannot come for a year after the enumerators have been appointed. Now, Sir, there is another side of the question. I believe that during the last census, persons who ever expressed any expectation of returning to Canada at a future period, whether near or remote, were counted in the census. I would like to know whether that policy is to be adopted next census?

An hon. MEMBER. The Premier said it would.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why, Sir, in that case all these parties which my hon. friend says reside now in Massachusetts and other Eastern States of the American Republic will be counted again as they were counted before. Numbers of men and families were counted then as part of the population of Canada who had never returned to this country, and who, if they are yet living, live in the Eastern States still. By such a system, the hon. gentleman proposes to count people who are out of the country as if they were residents of the country, and then to tell us that the census shows these people have not left it at all. I think the proposition made in my hon. friend's resolution is a reasonable one, and one that the Government ought to meet by granting a Committee and not by undertaking to burk the enquiry.

Mr. FISHER. Before this discussion is ended, I would like to say a few words on the question. I was rather surprised at the line the Minister of Agriculture took when he announced that this Committee was not necessary. My hon. friend of Bothwell (Mr. Mills) just pointed out the example of a few years ago, when just such a Committee as this now asked for was appointed at the instance, I believe, of the hon. gentlemen opposite. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture more or less declined the responsibility in that case when he said he was not a member of that House at the time, but I would just call to his memory the fact that in the last Parliament just such a Committee as this was appointed, for the express purpose of investigating the question of the agricultural industries of the country, at a time when his predecessor was the Minister of Agriculture, and when the present Minister of Agriculture was himself a member of the Cabinet which agreed to the appointment of the Committee. The Committee was moved for by my hon. friend for Rouville (Mr. Gigault), and the result of its investigations was such that the Government of the hon. Minister of Agriculture were obliged to institute an Experimental Farm, which to-day is one of the good deeds which, I think, the Minister of Agriculture will take most pride for in his administration. That Committee, I think, is a precedent for just such a Committee as this which my hon. friend from North Norfolk has moved for. It is a Committee which certainly does deal, more or less, with questions which come before the Committee on Agriculture and Immigration. But, Sir, the Committee moved for and obtained by the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Gigault) also dealt with exactly the subjects which from day to day and from meeting to meeting came before the Committee on Agriculture and Immigration. Therefore we do not have to look very far for a precedent for the appointment of just such a Committee as this. The hon. Minister of Agriculture said, however, that in a little while the census would be taken, and then we should learn the exact position of affairs with regard to the population of Canada, and with regard to the number of Canadians who had left the country. Judging by the character of the last census, I do not think the coming one will give us that information, which is of great value. The right hon. leader of the Government has to-day told us the principle upon which that census is to be taken; it is to be taken in exactly the same way as the old census, which was misleading, and which failed to give us the exact number of people resident in Canada at the time it was taken. It was not a census of the de facto population of this country, and if the future census is to be taken in the same way, we shall be unable to tell what our population is, because a large number of Canadians in the United States, who intend to remain there as residents, will be included in that census. But my hon. friends have alluded to the North-West population, and the hon. Minister of Agriculture has given us his prognostications of what the census will show regarding it, and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) depicted in roseate language what a magnificent showing we should expect. What did the last census of the North-West and Manitoba, taken by this same Department of Agriculture, show? It did not show that the predictions of the Government were fulfilled, but unfortunately for the people of this country—

Mr. SPROULE. The calculation was destroyed by the number of persons who went in to build the railway, and then left.

Mr. FISHER. The calculations were made by hon. gentlemen opposite, and if they have been unfulfilled, the fault is their own, and not the fault of those who criticise them. Hon. gentlemen have told us that these calculations of my hon. friend from North Norfolk are not reliable, and the hon. Minister of Agriculture has asserted that the statistics of the United States are not reliable. We who live on the borders do not require any statistics to tell us of the exodus of citizens of Canada to the United States, because we have the lamentable fact before our eyes every day. Unfortunately, this exodus extends beyond the great Province of Ontario. From the Province of Quebec as well the people are going in shoals to the United States to-day. We see the Provincial Government constantly occupied in discussing the problem, how they can best bring about the repatriation of the French Canadian people who have settled in the United States. How is it that both Tory and Liberal Governments find it necessary to do this? Is it because there are no Canadians there from the Province of Quebec? No; it is because the people who understand the Province of Quebec best, and who know where many of the people are who have been born and brought up in that Province, feel that they should do all they can to bring them back. Nor is that exodus confined to the French Canadians of Quebec. Those of us who live in the Eastern Townships know, unfortunately, that the best of our English-speaking youths are to-day in the United States. I can endorse every word that fell from the lips of the hon. member for North Norfolk, when he said that there is in the United States to-day, the cream of the youth of our country; and I do not wonder at it, because I know individual instances—and I think it may fairly be said to be the rule—of young men who have gone there and who have done so well and have so fully secured the confidence of their employers, that their employers induce them to write to their friends in Canada, urging them to go and enter the same employment. I could mention instances of men who have written home to their former friends and schoolmates, telling them: "If you come here where we are doing well, we can get you employment at once, because people here are only too glad to employ Canadians, believing that they are more energetic, trustworthy and capable business men than any others they can find in the United States." I am proud of this tribute to our people, and our nationality, but I am sorry to have to acknowledge that in Canada, unfortunately, work is so scarce, opportunities so few, and the scope so small, that our young men are tempted to go to the United States, where they have greater scope and greater opportunities; and if this is the case, it is the fault of hon. gentlemen opposite, who by their restrictive policy have forced the young men to leave their country. It is a misfortune to this country, and one which the country owes to the hon. gentlemen sitting on the Treasury benches at this moment. But, Sir, hon. gentlemen opposite will perhaps say, in the first place, "This is not due to the National Policy, but to the fact that you and your friends are running down your country;" and in the next place they point to the fact that in the United States there is a higher protective tariff than there is in this country, as a proof that what is good for the United States and has been successfully carried out there, must also be good for Canada. But they forget that the circumstances of the two countries are so different that the same rule cannot apply to both. This country, which is so small in area, in population and in consumptive capacity, cannot succeed to the same extent under a protective policy as the United States. But what are the facts as to the United States to-day? It is true, in the eastern parts of Canada there is an agricultural depression; it is also true that in the Eastern States there is an agricultural depression; and the people of the Eastern States are beginning to feel the effects of that policy in an alarming way. It has taken them many years longer to feel its effects than it has taken us in Canada to feel the effects of a similar policy. To-day in the Eastern States the pinch of protection is telling severely on the agriculturist. Unfortunately for us, we have not had for many years the immense home market which was provided for the agriculturists of the Eastern States by their manufactures. In this country the home market has not been so enlarged as it has been in the Eastern States to a certain extent by means of protection. To-day, the agriculturists and farmers of the United States are feeling this pinch; they are finding that the protection which was held out to them as providing a home market is not able to give them the advantages which they had hoped for. For a few years it did so; but it has not continued, and to-day the depression of the agriculturists of New England is beginning to be severely felt, and it is attributable entirely to the protective policy with they themselves supported in the United States for so many years; and much more quickly and closely following upon the cause is the effect in this country, and to-day our agriculturists are appreciating the fact that this protective policy which protects everybody but them, makes this country a dearer country to live in for the working classes.

and consequently has a depressing effect especially upon our agricultural interest. I do not think it is necessary that we should go into the question as to what has caused this exodus at further length. Already sufficient information has been given in this House to justify the appointing of a Committee to investigate into this fact, because a fact it undoubtedly is. No man who lives anywhere within reach of the border and who sees what is going on can attempt to deny it. That fact being established, we ought to investigate the causes which have produced it, so as to devise some remedy for this state of affairs. The true secret of the opposition of hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches to the naming of such a Committee is the fact that they dare not face the issue. They dare not have all the facts brought before the Committee, because they know that when that Committee will have finished its labors, its report could not fail to be equivalent to a vote of censure on the policy of the Government, specially their restrictive and protected policy. I do not think I need enlarge further on this point. I believe it would be in the interest of the people to investigate into this matter, and that the appointment of a Committee would lead to legislation which would be of the utmost benefit to the whole Dominion.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has had his usual fling at the National Policy. He is very desirous of having a Committee appointed to enquire into the causes of the so-called exodus, but the hon. gentleman who lives so close to the border ought to give us some reason for the depression which he says exists in the country. He ought to tell why it is that this country has not prospered and the other country has taken our surplus population.

Mr. FISHER. I gave it to you.

Mr. HESSON. If there is one single thing that has made the United States prosperous it is simply this, that they have pursued a policy entirely with reference to the people of their own country, and without any reference to outsiders. That policy they have found to be in the best interests of their people. That policy, no doubt, has attracted the attention of people of the old world as well as on this side, and I venture to say that this policy will be maintained, not only while the Republican party is in power, but even should the Democratic party take office again. The experience of that country has made the fact so evident, that there is no possibility of a party being formed in the United States to-day which would venture, in the face of the experience of the past, to change that policy as a whole. It is most remarkable, that 300,000 of the young men of Canada should leave their own country to go to one where a restrictive policy exists in its most pronounced form. How does the hon. gentleman solve that problem? There is not a Committee in the House, or out of the House, that could solve the problem which is troubling my hon. friend. How is it possible, that young men should be driven from this country, where there is less protection, to the United States, where protection exists in a most intensified degree. The hon. gentleman knows that the most important industry of this country has suffered to-day. Why does he not state the reason for that depression?

It is not because of protection, but it is because the productive wheat lands of the Western States have depreciated the value of the worn-out farms of the east. It is because of the ease with which land in our own western Provinces can be cultivated, that the value of farm products is lessened. Were it not for that, our lands in the western districts would be worth as much to-day as ever. I would ask my hon. friend, if he can possibly establish the fact that if to-day we were to open the Canadian market to American producers, the same prices would prevail in Canada that are now obtained? I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to produce the figures to show to the country that if we took the duty off corn, wheat and oats, and other products of American farms, the farmers of this country would smile and feel their pockets weighed down with gold.

Mr. CHARLTON. Give us the Committee.

Mr. HESSON. No Committee can possibly relieve that state of things. I would prevent every bushel of American wheat coming into this country and every bushel of American oats. Over 241,000 bushels of American oats have been imported in bond into the port of Stratford, which I have the honor to represent, and I would ask hon. gentlemen to bear in mind that if these oats had not been imported in bond they would have been sold in our markets instead of being exported as they now are. I ask the hon. gentleman, who plumes himself as being a representative of the farming interest, would it be in the interests of our farmers to let those oats in free? I venture to say that he would not have the courage and hardihood to go into any constituency of western Ontario and attempt to prove to the western farmers that it would be to their interests to glut our markets with the surplus products of the Americans. Give us the protection necessary to our young people, and you may depend upon their being loyal enough to Canadian institutions to stay here, and build up their fortunes in this country. They will build up here a strong nationality, a healthy and intelligent population. But my hon. friend seems desirous that they should continue to be driven out of the country, as they were in years gone by under the policy of his friends. I can tell the hon. gentleman that, so far as my experience of the farmers of the West goes, whilst they recognise the fact that they have smaller profits from their industry than formerly, they are wise enough to perceive that it is utterly impossible for the Government, if they allowed every bushel of American corn and every barrel of American flour and every bushel of American wheat to come in free, for our farmers to realise the prices that existed fifteen or twenty years ago. They recognise the fact that so long as 160 acres of excellent farm land can be obtained simply by occupying them, and railway facilities offered the holders of these farms for the export of their produce, our farmers east, whose farms are worth from $50 to $100 per acre, cannot compete against them in the growing of grain. How much worse then if you open the floodgates of this country to the producers of the American side. That will apply not only to the farmers but to the mechanics of this country. If you destroy one industry, you destroy the whole, and the farming industry is at the bottom of the whole. There is no possibility of any committee reaching the difficulty. The only thing for the hon. gentleman to do is to get better prices in foreign markets and in England.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HESSON. Yes; I know perfectly well what runs in the minds of the hon. gentlemen. I know the statements which they have given to the country as having come from hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, that we would give the farmers high prices.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HESSON. We never said so.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You did say so.

Mr. HESSON. No; we said we would give them a home market—we would give them their own market—the Canadian market. That would be the duty of any government which was in power. It is our absolute duty here, legislating in the interests of the people of Canada, to preserve our own markets for our own workingmen and our own producers.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Like flies on the wheel.

Mr. HESSON. Those hon. gentlemen were like flies on the wheel when they were on this side of the House, and the people remember it, and know that, if they were again on this side of the House, the same thing would take place, and they would allow this country to drift instead of adopting a policy which would promote its interests. I will not now detain the House by giving figures to show how this question stands, but I may have an opportunity at a later date. Hon. gentlemen say that this policy is taking our young men away from us. It certainly is not taking them away from the agriculturists, or it is not necessary for them to go to the other side for anything better than they can get here. If you compare Ontario with eight of the best States in the Union, taking the statement from the Washington Bureau of Statistics and the Ontario Bureau of Statistics, you will find that the average produce per acre in Canada was $18, against $15 for the best of the American States, including the State of New York. So much for the farming interest. My hon. friend will remember that in the Eastern States the farming industries have been practically wiped out; that farms are left vacant; that thousands of acres are uncultivated, and that good farm property can be purchased there now for a quarter of the price which they would have brought a few years ago. That would not indicate that it would be profitable for us to export our grain to the United States. There is a good reason here why we should protect our farmers, because, in consequence of the higher prices which farm produce attains here, if you were to take off the protection, the farming industry, which is the best we have in this country, would be absolutely obliterated from the face of the country.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The question which was debated this afternoon is one of great importance to both political parties. There is nothing clearer than the fact that a number of our people are leaving our country and finding a home in a foreign country, thus depriving Canada of its strength and prosperity; and, whatever may be the causes which lead these people to depart from Canada and seek a home in another country, I think it is the duty of this Parliament to ascertain, and, if it is in its power, to remove the causes which lead these people away from us. I think it is the duty of members of Parliament, irrespective of political leanings, to find means to remove those causes. I cannot understand why so many of our people leave this country, because I think we have the finest country in the world. There is no country whose soil is more fertile, whose people possess such energy and such enterprise. Our country is a storehouse of the best qualities of mankind, and there is no other that has a higher and better system of education than we have. The mention of the word education brings to my mind a comparison which I drew the other night, and which I regret. I drew a comparison between the education in our own Province and that in another. I think I should not have done so, and I now express my regret for having done so, and I hope those friends to whom I may have given offence will take my explanation in the sense in which I intend it. I was going to say that our educational system is higher than that of the United States. Our commercial facilities are equal to, if they are not better than theirs. We have every facility in this country which we could expect to have for the advantage of our commerce; and why is it that so many of our people leave our country for another? It is not on account of the system of government, because we have a better system than they have in the United States. We have a purer judiciary than they have in the United States, or, shall I say, than they have in any other country; because the judges of this country are able to administer justice in a more impartial manner than judges who are elected. Then, why are these people leaving this country? Is it because of the fiscal policy of the Government? Is it because of the operation of what is called the National Policy? I believe that does lead largely to this exodus, but I believe there are other causes, viz., comparative failure of grain crop, low prices, discrimination of freight rates against the farmer, heavy taxes for Dominion purposes, &c. The present leader of the Government stated the cause of the exodus, in his opinion, from this country in 1877, and I will read an extract from a speech delivered by him, and reported in the Hansard of 1878, page 857:

"We have no workpeople. Our workpeople have gone off to the United States. They are to be found in Western States, in Pittsburg, and, in fact, in every place where manufactures are going on. The Canadian artisans are adding to the strength, to the power and to the wealth of a foreign nation, instead of adding to ours. Our workpeople in this country, on the other hand, are suffering from the want of employment. The hon. gentleman opposite sneered at the statement that thousands of our people had left this country to seek for employment in the United States. Why, the fact is notorious that the Government of the Province of Quebec have been taking steps to bring back their people. If these people have not left this country, our Government would not have tried to get them back. Let any man visit any of the manufactories of the United States, and there he will find the Canadian artisan toiling and doing well, and, therefore, not going back. If Canada had a judicious system of taxation, the workpeople would be toiling and doing well in their own country."

Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman was returned to power in 1878 and he placed on the statute books of this country what he called "a judicious system of taxation." Now, in face of this "judicious system of taxation" have the people continued to remain with us? Are they working in Canadian factories instead of the factories of the United States? Are they remaining on the farms of our country instead of going to the Western States and taking up positions on farms there? No, Sir, but the "judicious system of taxation" has driven from this country a larger number than the system of taxation that was in vogue previous to his coming into power the last time. Only 22,000 people, according to the estimates of hon. gentlemen opposite, were leaving this country every year during the régime of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie); but nearly 80,000 per annum have gone under the "judicious system of taxation" which the hon. gentlemen have placed on the statute books of this country. I believe that the "judicious system" which was to foster the interests of the farming community of this country has been the strongest element among the causes which have driven people from this country. True, the policy that was placed before the House in 1878 by the present leader of the Government stated that it would foster the agricultural interests of this country. Sir, it has Fostered them. At first they were Tilley'd, and then they were Tippered, and now they are being Fostered, and they will be Fostered still more before the end of the Session by the hon. Finance Minister, who will add to the taxation of the agriculturists of this country and make them more discontented with this great country than they are at the present time. We have been frequently told that in pointing out these facts, the necessity of which we regret, we are decrying our country; I have no doubt that hon. gentlemen will tell this House and the country that I have been decrying the country in saying that so many people were leaving. But, Sir, if it is disloyal on my part, if it is unpatriotic on my part, if it is decrying the country on my part, as a simple member of this House, how much more unpatriotic, how much more disloyal, how much more is it decrying the country, when such statements as I have read come from the mouth of a man occupying such a proud and distinguished position in the affairs of this country? I do not charge him with unpatriotism, I do not charge him with disloyalty. It was his duty as a public man, and it is my duty as a public man, to point out the facts that are transpiring in our country, and to call the attention of the Parliament of Canada to them, so that by their wisdom they may adopt some plan by which our people will be prevented from taking up their homes in the United States. But, Sir, that was not all the hon. gentleman said. He blamed the Government that was in power that day for driving people from this country, and I think that, using an expression of his own, that "what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander." I could turn round and impute the whole exodus to the action of the Government now. Let me read to you what he said in this respect, endeavoring to cast the whole blame upon the Government of that day. This is an extract of a speech delivered by the leader of the Government at Sherbrooke, Quebec, on 7th July, 1877, as reported by the Toronto Mail, a very great friend of the Government at that time. He said :

"It grieved me to the soul as a Canadian, when in Sherbrooke the other day, to be told there, in that beautiful and rising place, which had grown, in my recollection, from a village to a town, and from a town to a city, that the population had decreased under the malign influence of the present Government, and that the young men and young women, who had gone into factories there, were unable to support themselves, and unwilling to be a burden to their parents, were obliged to expatriate themselves and add to the strength and prosperity of the United States. People whom we ought to have kept among ourselves, men, women and children that ought to have been working in our factories, have been drawn away by the unwise, by the demented, to use a good Scotch phrase, by the insane policy, or want of policy, of the present Government."

Now, Sir, that was a broad accusation to bring against the Government of that day. Would I not be quite as justifiable as the hon. leader of the Government in making such a charge as that against the present Government—that by their unwise, by their demented, and, to use the Scotch phrase, by the insane policy of the Government, they were driving people from the country? I do not believe that the whole cause is in the policy of the Government, and that is one reason why I support the resolution of my hon. friend from North Norfolk, when he asks for a Committee to investigate into the causes—for I believe they are many—and to ascertain what they are, and report to this House, so that the Parliament of Canada may take steps to remove those causes, whatever they may be, so as to keep the bone, and the sinew, and the energy of the people in our own midst, to add to the strength and power and influence of our own country, instead of adding to the strength and influence of the United States. Sir, it has been denied by the present Government, that so many of our people were leaving the country. I have a few statistics here which will convince the members of the House, if not already convinced, that a very large number of people are leaving this country every year. I have a very simple calculation which is easily understood, and which I will submit to the House. In 1881 the population of Canada, according to the census of that year, was 4,345,293. The natural increase to that population would be at least 1.50 per cent. per annum over the death rate for these seven years, say 10 per cent. The addition, then, to the population in 1881, would be 434,529. Now, according to the report of the Minister of Agriculture, I find that since 1881 no less than 719,510 immigrants came into this country, who stated their intention of remaining in Canada. Adding those three sums together, we would have the number 5,499,531 of a population at the present day, if we had not lost any. Subtract from that the present estimated population of Canada, 4,972,101, and we have lost during the seven years, 527,230, or each year, 75,321. Now, the loss each year during the régime of the Reform Government was 22,000, as against 75,321, notwithstanding the policy which was to foster the interests of the agriculturists and the interests of the manufacturers of this country, and not only that, but it was to add to the population of this country largely by bringing in from foreign countries a large number of people, who were to make Canada their home, and find work in the manufacturing establishments of this country, which were to be fostered by the National Policy. In addition to this, let me give the House a few items in regard to the exodus from certain quarters of this country. I stated the other day, that in Rimouski, in Lower Canada, according to the lists used in the recent election, there had been an exodus of 350 families to the United States since 1866; and in the small parish of St. Mathew, whose list contained 200 names in 1866, forty-eight of those people had gone to the United States. And, according to statements I have seen in the Quebec papers this year, no less than 120,000 people from the Province of Quebec have gone to the States during the year. Hon. Mr. Mercier denied that, but he acknowledged, if the papers reported him properly, that no less than 60,000 people had left within one year to find homes in New England among those who went before them. If the knowledge of the exodus went to the leader's heart in 1878, not to his heart alone but deeper still into his very soul, surely it will go to his soul to find that the people of Canada are still going to the United States, to add to the strength, wealth and prosperity of that country. According to the report of the United States Consular office in Toronto, 576 heads of families made application there for consular certificates last year. It is well known that hundreds and thousands of young people, men and women, who have no effects to take to the United States, do not require consular certificates; but the 576 heads who obtained them represented 2,880 souls, on an average of five to a family, who left that one particular point, Toronto. But from a report for 1885-6-7 from eighty-four consular points in this country it appears that 13,903 consular certificates were granted to people going to the United States, which means 69,555 souls. I represent a riding of 22,000 inhabitants. I made enquiries in different parts of my riding as to how many people left within the last ten years to go to the United States. I have reports from four of the eight municipalities which constitute the riding, and I have the figures before me, showing that no less than 1,042 persons left those municipalities for the United States within the last ten years. If I add the number who went from the other municipalities, the number would reach about 2,000 out of a population of 22,000, or about 9 per cent. of the total population. And yet hon. gentlemen opposite will maintain that there is not such a large exodus as occurred during the years of the Reform Government. I find the cause of this exodus is largely owing to discontent among the farmers. They have been deceived by the statements made in 1878 as to the benefits they would derive when the National Policy would be established. The House will remember that the farmers were told that their markets were glutted by American produce. Every one is aware that our markets to-day are more glutted by American produce than they were in 1878. Perhaps the House will allow me to give a few figures to prove my statement, and if any one doubts them they can be found in the Trade and Navigation Returns. There were imported from the United States in 1878 1,510 horses. The farmers were told by the Conservatives that those American horses were flooding the Canadian market and if a tax were imposed the Canadians would have their own market. What is the fact to-day? We imported last year 4,089 horses, or almost three times as many as 1878 under a 17½ per cent. tariff. Our farmers were told something similar in regard to sheep. A buyer would come round and say to the farmers: I would give you $4 per head but the market is glutted by sheep from the United States and so the price is low. When we refer to the returns we find that only 10,505 sheep came into the Canadian market in 1878, whereas last year the number was 43,255. In the face of that fact, where is the protection for the farmers and the home market for Canadians? The farmers have no protection. In 1878 we imported from the United States 2,806,557 lbs. of bacon and ham. The Canadian farmers were told this came into competition with their products, and if a duty were imposed, they would have their own market and a higher price. The returns, however, show an import of 3,653,728 lbs. in 1889. No less than 10,204,237 lbs. of pork were brought in during 1878, but now the quantity reaches 15,205,972 lbs. Thus I might continue to show that the promises made to the farmers in 1878 have not been realised by them, and therefore they are becoming tired of the National Policy, which promised so much and has given so little. Many of our young men are leaving the country, and even the older men, who have been unable to make ends meet, have gone to a country where they believe they can enjoy better advantages than they do here. Another fact to which I wish to draw the attention of this House is this: On whatever we sell to the United States we have to pay a large duty. Our farmers sold 17,277 horses last year and paid a duty of $422,756. They sent 37,360 horned cattle and paid a duty of $97,633. They sent 307,775 sheep and paid a duty of $183,666. They sent of barley, 9,934,501 bushels, on which they paid a duty of $993,450. On these items, together with hay, potatoes and wool, the farmers paid a duty of $2,076,110 for the privilege of entering the United States market. In consequence of these burdens imposed on articles exported to the United States, our farmers are determined to go into that country and be free to raise and sell without being called upon to pay duty. But we are told that the Canadian farmers do not pay the duty, and I have no doubt I shall be confronted with that argument this evening. The leader of the Government made a declaration on this subject, and I like to quote his words, because he stands so high in his party and in the country, and his judgment is relied upon by his own followers, by whom he is looked upon, and rightly so, as the head and crown of the Conservative party; and when they lose him they will lose their ground. I do not believe, and I speak my honest conviction, that the Government of which he is the head would last one week were they so unfortunate as to lose him. I believe, Sir, that during the last elections he received one-half of the Conservative votes in this country wholly on account of his being popular as a man and being the centre of the organisation to which he belongs. He is worthy of that confidence from his party. He is a man of great ability, and, Sir, I want to quote the authority of such a man. I want to put him in the witness box; and I always like to choose the best witness. I like to have the testimony of a man in whom hon. gentlemen opposite will have the greatest confidence. The right hon. Premier settled this question in 1878 in the words I quote below on "Who pay the Duties." I know that last Session, a certain hon. gentleman had the hardihood to try to prove that the farmer did not pay the duty, and that the parties in the United States paid it. I have, however, more confidence in the leader of the Conservative party than I have in the Whip. Sir John Macdonald, speaking in 1878 on the question "Who pay the Duties," wanted to make a point with the farmers, and he did make it, and the farmers believed it. He said:

"I find that the farmers of West Canada and East Canada could not understand there was anything in their barley, for instance, being obliged to pay a duty of 15 per cent. upon going into the United States, whereas the produce of the American farmers was allowed to be brought into this country free. It is said the consumer pays the duty, and that the farmer does not suffer anything. That is the statement, but when I put a simple case, which I have done frequently, I can get no answer."

No, Sir, you cannot get an answer. You cannot get any reply to shake the foundations of the truths you stated. And Sir John continues:

"I put a case in the Eastern Townships of a man upon the imaginary line which was between this country and the United States. Suppose a man has 100 acres on the Canadian side of the line and 100 acres on the American side of the line. Suppose he grows 1,000 bushels of barley on each of his farms. He takes his 1,000 American bushels to the American market and gets $1 a bushel for it. He takes his 1,000 bushels of Canadian barley to the American market and gets but 85 cents per bushel, because he has to pay 15 per cent. for taking it across that imaginary line. How can it, in this case, be said that the consumer pays the duty? It comes out of the pockets of the Canadian farmers."

I have, Sir, another authority on this question, and a very important one, to put in the witness-box to prove my contention that the farmers pay the duty upon horses. This witness is an hon. gentleman who occupied a very prominent position in the Cabinet of the hon. the leader of the present Government. He is a man who was selected from his party and placed in the Senate, and who was again selected from among the Senators and made speaker of that body; in fact he was afterwards taken from that position because he was considered to be of value in this House, and was made Minister of the Interior. Yea, more, his excellence and abilities were recognised by Her Gracious Majesty the Queen, and an honorable title was bestowed upon him. Surely, he can give good testimony on this question, and surely he is a good witness to place in the box. I refer to Sir David Macpherson. He stated in July, 1878:

"Suppose a farmer in this country takes five horses, valued at $100 each, to Detroit to sell. The duty on horses in the United States is 20 per cent., which the Canadian farmer must pay before he can enter the Detroit market. That is, he must pay $20 for each horse, and on his five horses $100, or the value of one horse at the United States Custom house, before he can take them to the market. Then he will get no more than a Michigan farmer will get for five equally good horses. Suppose that he and a Michigan farmer each sell five horses—each gets $500 for his horses. The American takes this $500 home in his pocket, while the Canadian takes home only $400."

Sir David Macpherson turns around and asks the question that I ask: "Does not the farmer pay the duty on the horses?" I will still give further evidence in regard to this matter, the testimony of a paper which at that time occupied a very prominent position in the Conservative party. In fact, Sir, I believe it was the paper that largely contributed to the success of the election of 1878. There was at the head of that paper at that time a man of eminent ability and one of the most eminent journalists of this country. He wrote editorials then strongly sustaining the National Policy of the then leader of the Opposition, and he afterwards claimed that by his able editorials he added largely to the success of the party in the country. I refer to the Mail. Let me read an extract from one of the articles written by that able journalist in reference to "Who pays the Duty." The extract is from the Mail of the 26th July, 1877, and says:

"The buyer cannot possibly give as much here as he does there, because the 15 cents must be paid ere the grain passes the American Custom house. Does any one mean to say that, quality being the same, the American buyer will give more for Canadian barley than for barley raised in his own country or State? The simple truth of the matter is, that, whereas, Canadian barley has to pay 15 cents toll ere it can enter the market, American barley passes toll free, so that the price realised by the producer here is so much less than the price realised by the producer there. It seems like child's play to try to prove anything so plain and so self-evident upon the very face of the matter."

Sir, I have now placed in the witness-box three important witnesses who testify to the position which I take, namely, that the Canadian exporters pay the duty on the articles mentioned, and, therefore, they are burthened to a large extent in getting many of the products of their energy and toil into the markets of the United States. But, Sir, the farmers of the country maintain that the highest duties are placed on the articles consumed by them, while it was maintained here last year (and I suppose will be maintained again) that a large number of the articles which are used by the farmers of this country are manufactured in Canada; that, therefore, there is no duty upon these particular articles and, consequently, that the Canadian farmer need not pay one single solitary cent of duty. Using the ordinary meaning of the word "duty" they are not called upon to pay it, because I understand the word "duty" to mean the money which goes into the Treasury of this country. But they are called upon to pay an increased price on every article they consume, on account of the protection that is afforded the manufactures of similar articles imported into this country.

Mr. GILLMOR. Don't the consumers pay the same duty on the barley on the other side?

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). No.

Mr. GILLMOR. Do they not?

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I can argue that question with my hon. friend and with hon. gentlemen opposite when I am treating of it. I can understand from the smile of the leader of the Government, and from his remark of "hear, hear," that he, too, has changed his opinion from the time he so eloquently discussed these questions upon public platforms in 1878.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Answer the member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor).

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). If the hon. gentleman has changed his opinion I would be very glad to hear his reason, and if he can give a good one for the change of opinion, I am sure I will accept it at his hands; but, Sir, until there is shown by my hon. friend to the right (Mr. Gillmor) a stronger and better argument than has been produced by the Premier and by myself, I am bound to hold my opinion, which I have shown is sustained by these three honorable witnesses to which I have referred. But, Sir, coming back to the direct point under discussion; it is stated now, and was stated here last year, that the farmer does not pay one single dollar of duty. Now, Sir, I am going to summon to my aid another eminent man who is well known in this country, whose name is a household name, a man whose ability is recognised not only by the party to which he is an ornament, but by the party opposed to him in politics—a man who occupied a high position in the councils of this country for many years; a man selected by the leader of the Liberal Government, although opposed to him in politics, to perform the duties of arbitrator in the arbitration on the Fishery question between the United States and Canada, and who discharged his duties with honor to himself and advantage to the country, a man who occupied the important position of Finance Minister no less than three times in the Cabinet of hon. gentlemen opposite, and whose ability and reputation were so noted that the hon. leader of the Government chose him out to be the first High Commissioner of this country to England, and whose services were also recognised by Her Majesty the Queen in conferring high honors upon him. I bring him into the witness-box to get his opinion on this subject. The Hon. Alexander Galt, in his Budget speech of 1863, stated that whatever tariff is placed upon importations, that tariff adds to the price of every article manufactured in the country in proportion to the tariff thus imposed, which is, therefore, a portion of the burden they are called upon to pay, not under the designation of duty, but what is the same to them, as an increased price on the goods they purchase. If that is the case, I hold that a great injustice is done to the farmers of this country in loading them down with such large burdens. Now, Sir, what are the articles used by the farmers which are so enhanced in price? Let me give a small list of them: Hoes, rakes, spades, harrows, seed drills, ploughs, cultivators, scufflers, reapers, mowers, threshing machines, nails, hinges, wagons, carriages, harness, fanning mills, furniture, crockery, clothing, blankets, sugar, flour, pictures, carpets, musical instruments, and a hundred and one other things. All of these articles are increased in price to the farmer by a duty of from 35 per cent. to 80 per cent. It may be said that all these are manufactured in the country, but according to the statement made by the eminent man to whom I have referred, every one of these articles is enhanced in price by the amount of the duty imposed. Now, Sir, the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) said that the prices of goods are lower under the tariff than they were before. Any man who has given thought to this question, knows that things ought to be lower to-day than they were twelve years ago, with all the improvements that have been made in that time in the application of machinery and labor, and with the discoveries and inventions which have taken place. We should not expect everything to be as dear to-day as it was twelve years ago, nor are goods as cheap as they would be if we had free trade. The hon. gentleman in speaking in that way is only begging the question and beating about the bush, and not presenting an argument, because to compare things as they are to-day with what they were twelve years ago, is to compare things entirely unlike. Let me inform the members of this House that no less than $275,000,000 rests on the farmers of Ontario in the shape of mortgages on their farms. No less than 80 per cent. of the farms are mortgaged, and no less than 40 per cent. of their value is covered by mortgages. Again, I have read in a paper published in the city of Montreal, called the Insurance and Commercial Chronicle, that no less than $30,000,000 rests on the farms of the Province of Quebec in the shape of mortgages. No less than 24 per cent. of the farms of Quebec are covered by mortgages. When we find, in addition to that, that farm property has depreciated in value, we need not wonder that so many of our people are leaving the country and going to the United States. Let me give you a few facts in regard to the depreciation in the value of farm property in my own neighborhood. I know a farm, within four miles of where I live, which was sold fourteen years ago for $5,500, and was sold again last fall for $4,200, or a depreciation in value of 23½ per cent. Another was sold a few years ago for $4,500, and recently for $3,500. Another was sold two years ago for $4,000, and recently for $3,200. Another was sold four years ago for $5,150, and a few months ago the owner became insolvent and made an assignment, when it was offered at an upset price of $3,900, but could not be sold at that. Another which was sold a few years ago, consisting of 214 acres with a saw mill, for $15,000, was sold recently for $11,200, or a reduction of 25½ per cent. Another was sold a few years ago for $7,500, and recently again for $6,200. Another was sold four years ago for $11,000, and recently for $7,500, or a reduction of 31½ per cent. On the whole of these farms there was an average reduction in price of 22½ per cent. These facts are known to myself, and they show the reduction which has taken place in the value of farm property in my own neighborhood. In many cases it has been found that mortgages on farms, a few years ago, only three-fourths of their value has covered their whole present value, so that many a farmer with his family has been obliged to leave to find a home in some other country where he can find better prospects of prosperity. Therefore, it is the duty of this Parliament and the Government to permit my hon. friend's resolution to pass, so that a committee may be appointed to ascertain, by authority, the causes of the depression existing among the farming community of this country, to ascertain the cause of the departure of so many of the bone and sinew of our country to the United States; and when it reports to this House what it has found to be the causes, then let us meet, not as political parties, not as a Government and Opposition, but let both parties put their heads together to devise some means for the removal of those causes and for the retention of our own people at home. We should seek to make this country happy, and prosperous, and great. We have the elements within our country for doing so; we have the people and the resources; and if we make that effort I believe the time will come when we shall have greater reason to be proud of our country than we have to-day, and have no more occasion to speak of depression or of the exodus that has been taking place.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron).

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). It may not be out of place for me to say a word or two in reference to this resolution. The hon. gentleman in his resolution has moved for a committee to enquire:

"1st, as to the extent of the alarming exodus of native-born Canadians and settlers in Canada of foreign birth to the United States."

Well, I think those of us who have had seats in Parliament during the last ten years have had the opportunity of listening to hon. gentlemen upon the other side, detailing, year after year, the number of Canadians who were in the United States, and who have gone yearly to that country since the present Administration has come into office; so that, perhaps, as regards the first paragraph of this resolution, no further information is necessary for the hon. gentleman and those who believe with him, than that already in their possession, and which they have been endeavoring to place before the country during those ten years. The second paragraph of this resolution declares that one of the objects of the committee is to enquire as to the chief causes of this exodus. Again, we have had the opportunity during the past ten years of listening to those hon. gentlemen declaring that one of the chief causes of the exodus was the fact that the present Administration had come into office in 1878, and had inaugurated a policy detrimental to the best interests of the people, a policy which had the effect of driving people out of Canada in great numbers from that period down to the present. That has been the reason adduced by these hon. gentlemen during the past ten years for the exodus. It is a reason which has been conclusive to them, if not to hon. gentlemen on this side. Today, it is quite true, we have had another reason given us by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher), and that is, that there is a constantly increasing demand in the United States for the energy, perseverance, industry, and the honesty of Canadians to fill situations in that country. There may, perhaps, Sir, be other reasons beyond those that these hon. gentlemen desire to discover to account for the exodus, but the reasons I have given are those which they have adduced year after year, upon the floor of Parliament and from public platforms throughout the country on every opportunity, and the cause which they have specially dwelt upon is their assertion that the present Administration have by their policy driven out of Canada a very large portion of our population.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). An hon. gentleman says "hear, hear." By what process of logic, I would ask, do they account for the policy of the present Administration having driven from Canada a large portion of our population? Is it not true that from free trade England, a considerable proportion of the population emigrate yearly to the United States? Can it then be laid down as a proposition that because in Canada we have adopted the policy of protecting our own manufactures, the natural and inevitable result of that policy has been to drive out people from this moderately protected country to that excessively protected country to the south of us? It seems to me that these hon. gentlemen have convinced themselves, at all events, as to the causes of the exodus, and do not require to make any further enquiries in that direction. My hon. friend in his third paragraph desires that the committee should enquire—

"As to the best means to be adopted to counteract the influences which have hitherto promoted such exodus, and for the purpose of suggesting means for diminishing this serious drain upon our numerical strength and our resources."

From what we have heard from the other side, the best means, from their point of view, of preventing this exodus would be to turn out the present

Administration and bring into their places hon. gentlemen opposite. If they could accomplish that, no doubt they would accomplish all they desire by the agitation they have kept up for the last ten years in reference to this matter; and if they could convince the electorate of Canada that they are correct in their diagnosis of the evils under which they declare Canada is suffering, they would achieve what they have been trying to achieve. But the difficulty that these hon. gentlemen experience is that they cannot make the people believe as they believe. They have been telling us in Parliament certain things for the last ten years, they have been telling the people, during all that time, from public platforms, the same thing, and yet the people declare by their votes that they do not believe in the nostrums these hon. gentlemen propose as a remedy for the evils under which they declare the people are suffering. It has been stated that the Committee on Agriculture and Colonisation has never attempted to deal with this question or to ascertain whether the statements which have been made with reference to the emigration from Canada were correct or not. The hon. member for Essex (Mr. Brien) made that statement in his speech this afternoon. I have only to draw the attention of my hon. friends opposite who have been members of that committee during the last few years to the fact that this matter has engaged the attention of that committee, that in 1884 we had a very extensive enquiry into the facts in connection with the alleged exodus from Canada to the United States, and that it was demonstrated, so far as the evidence of disinterested witnesses could demonstrate, before the committee on that occasion, that no such exodus had taken place as was alleged by the statisticians of the United States up to that time. It is true that our hon. friends on the other side, who were members of that committee, did all they possibly could to discredit the evidence of witnesses who appeared before the Committee; but I have in my hands a report of the Committee on Agriculture and Colonisation of 1884, in which the declaration is made by a disinterested witness, who had the means of knowing—who was in point of fact one of the officers who sent the return to Mr. Nimmo upon which that gentleman based the statement that a very large exodus was taking place from Canada to the United States—that the figures and the statements of Mr. Nimmo were based upon the merest guess work, that there was no foundation for them at all, and that in point of fact they existed only in the imagination of the people of the Bureau of Statistics in the United States. I know, as a matter of fact, that many of our people do go to the United States. It is characteristic of Anglo-Saxons that they have a tendency to move about, to seek to improve their fortunes, and I do not see that there is anything improper in our young men seeking wider fields for their talents than they can find in Canada, if they can find them in a foreign country. It is a tendency of the Anglo-Saxon nature; and no legislation we can enact here, no enquiry we can make with respect to this movement will prevent our people from going to the United States or prevent the people of the United States from coming here; and we know that when Americans find there is a field for their energy and enterprise in Canada, they do not hesitate to make this country their home. Have we not right here in our midst, under the shadow of this building, the best possible evidence that some of the people of the United States have found in this country an outlet for their energy, talents and perseverance, and that they have become some of the best citizens we have in Canada? There is no possible way, in my point of view, by which we can remove this tendency of Anglo-Saxons to seek to better their condition. Whether it be in the American Union, South America, Brazil, the Argentine Republic, the Indies, or any other part of the world, they will seek to better their condition. So I say that there seems to me to be no reason for the resolution which my hon. friend has placed upon the paper, nor does there seem to me to be any necessity for the appointment of a committee to enquire into those circumstances with which my hon. friend proposes to deal by means of that committee. If my hon. friend desires to investigate these causes, I believe there will not be the slightest difficulty in having his name placed upon the Committee of Agriculture and Colonisation, where he will have the fullest opportunity of enquiring into all these matters. There is no reason why the House should appoint a special committee to enquire into these circumstances, and I believe the committee over which I have the honor to preside is amply competent to investigate all these subjects which the hon. gentleman proposes to have investigated by the special committee he asks for.

Mr. WATSON. I did not intend to take any part in this debate until the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) referred to the committee of which he is the chairman. When I was first elected, I think at the first meeting of the committee afterwards, the deputy Minister of Agriculture was examined before that committee. The hon. gentleman has said that the statements made by that gentleman are reliable. That committee has often investigated matters of this kind, but we have found that any investigations which depended upon the statements of deputy Ministers of that Department were not reliable. It was the boast of hon. gentleman that, by spending large amounts of money, there would be, by 1885, 375,000 people in Manitoba and the North West. I was not surprised to hear the speech of the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson), in which he assured the House that everything was prosperous, and that we were actually keeping people in the country by means of the present policy, because I remember his statements in 1883. I had then to contradict the statement of the deputy Minister of Agriculture that 13,000 American citizens had come over and settled in Manitoba. I contradicted that statement because I knew it was not true. At that time the member for North Perth was surprised at my contradicting the statements of the deputy Minister, and he said, to use his own language: "If we get a good report from the deputy Minister, for God's sake let us have it." He was anxious that everything which was stated by that official should be taken for truth. When the census was taken in 1885, instead of 375,000 people which we had been told ought to be there, we found there only 108,000 people. That was the time for the members of the committee to discover why the people who were expected were not there. I think one great reason was that the reports furnished by the deputy Minister of Agriculture were false, because the people who were supposed to go into that country were people who were employed on the railway, and that showed that the report was not reliable. One very good reason which was given to the committee was that the Grand Trunk Railway Company were circulating American literature and inducing Canadians to go to the American North-West. But what was it that prevented our Canadians from going to our own North-West? It was that hon. gentlemen opposite who, by their restrictive railway policy, prevented competition in the carriage of freight in the North-West. I think it is important that there should be a committee to investigate the causes of the exodus. There are many causes for it, but I think we should retain, if we can, our Canadian people in Canada. In the North-West we have plenty of room for them all, though they may be crowded out in eastern Canada; but I only regret that those who are so crowded out do not find their way into the Canadian North-West. While we are glad to have European immigration, it is important that our own people should go there. It was stated this afternoon by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) that our Canadian young men are in great demand in the American North-West. So they are in our own North-West, and it is to be regretted that Canada to-day is only a sort of breeding ground for the United States. From the statements which have been made by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), I have no reason to doubt that he has looked into this matter carefully, and it is clear that no attempt has been made on the other side to contradict his figures. In regard to the matter of immigration, I think the Government ought to take the means not only to keep Canadians on Canadian soil, not only to offer inducements to them to go to our own North-West, but also to induce immigrants from Europe to go to our North-West and to settle our fertile plains. We find that the other colonies are spending large sums of money to induce immigration, but I am afraid that the Government and the members on both sides of this House have listened too much to the clamors of the trade unions in Eastern Canada. I believe that large sums of money spent to bring immigrants into the North-West, would be for the benefit of the whole of Canada, and I hope, instead of recalling all the immigration schemes, as at present appears to have been done, the Government will adopt some plan to induce immigrants to come from the old countries to the North-West. Our lands are not depreciating in value, but they should be made to advance in value, and the only thing to be done is to get the people in there to cultivate the soil. I should like to see the Government accept the motion before the House, and appoint a select committee which might enquire into the causes of the exodus, and advise the Government as to the best means of preventing our people going out of this country. At the same time, the Committee might show the Government how they might bring other people into the country. I do not believe that we can ever have a correct estimate of the number who leave the country or who come into it. The present system is a mere farce. The people coming into the Canadian North-West are simply examined by a man coming into a train at Port Arthur, who rides, probably, as far as Port William, about four miles, and then gets out of the train. He counts the people on that train, and the result is that the Government are credited with a certain number of immigrants, whereas, in a great many instances, many of the people riding on those trains, and who are apparently settlers, are simply passing through the Canadian North-West on their way to Washington Territory. I hope that the Government will see fit to accept the proposition of the hon. member for North Norfolk, and appoint a committee to investigate the matter.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not intend to prolong this discussion, but I wish to say that I cannot vote for the motion, and for a very good reason. I, myself, have no faith whatever in the figures and deductions of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton); and as far as gentlemen on this side are concerned, what is the necessity of such a committee when they know all about it? They know the reason why the exodus exists. I agree with one remark that fell from my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson). I do believe that it is a great mistake to abandon an energetic immigration policy; and if my hon. friends on this side, instead of moving for a fishing committee, would make a motion in favor of an energetic immigration policy, they would find that some of the Tories would be voting with them.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. I believe that some of the statements that have been made in this House today are a poor advertisement of our country, especially when we are told that there is such an enormous exodus going on from Canada. Is it true that we have had an emigration from Canada into the United States, but it is true, also, that a large portion of that emigration has returned to Canada. Since the inauguration of the National Policy, since we have started large manufacturing industries, a large number of those Canadians who went to the other side of the line to learn trades have come back, and are now working in our own factories. We are now forming a class of men who have no need to go abroad to find work or to learn a trade. They find in our own country the work they were looking for in the past and for which they had to go away. I say that instead of working against the interests of our country, the National Policy has, to a large extent, prevented that emigration that we have had to deplore in the past. Speaking of my own Province of Manitoba, perhaps I will astonish some of the members of this House when I tell them that about one-half of the population of my own county, Provencher, is composed of Canadians who at one time were residing in the United States, and who have come back to Canada to enjoy the freedom of our country, and to settle on the fertile land of the Red River Valley. They are men who had left the Province of Quebec in former years, and went into the States to try to better their condition, but when they heard that Manitoba was such a fertile country, and that that part of Canada could offer them what they were looking for, they came back by two and three hundred at a time. I may say that several of the parishes in my constituency are settled chiefly by men who at one time resided in the States; and, therefore, if we have to deplore the absence of some of our inhabitants, we have the satisfaction of knowing that they are coming back to-day. Let us consider the movement that has been going on during the past three or four years of emigrants who left Manitoba to go to Dakota and to the northern part of Minnesota. What did we see last year, and what do we see this year? We saw that most of those who went across the line, thinking they could better their position, have come back, or are willing to do so, and will come back to Manitoba sooner or later. Of course, we cannot locate people according to our own wishes; we cannot say to them, you shall go there, or you shall remain here. People will go wherever they choose, and, if they find they have made a mistake, they will correct it; and they did find that they were mistaken in going across the line, and they are now coming back. With regard to the policy of the Government on immigration, there is room for some improvement. It was thought at one time that by advertising the country at large, we would bring in immigrants. I think myself, that when the Government adopted that policy it was, perhaps, a little premature, because the Province was not ready to receive a very large immigration. We had not all the railway communication that we might have expected at that time. But now that Province is ready for immigration. We have railways in almost every direction, and the settlers are spreading out from the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We are now ready to receive a very large immigration, and I hope that the Government will see fit to give better inducements to immigrants, and to increase the amount devoted for that purpose.

Mr. FREEMAN. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the speeches that have been delivered by hon. members on the opposite side of the House.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. I hope I am included.

Mr. FREEMAN. Very much of what has been said seems familiar to me. It strikes me very forcibly that I have heard the same arguments and the same statements iterated and reiterated in this House before. It strikes me that we have something in this House like a company of people gathered together, who have exhausted their conversational powers, and they are going over the whole thing again, in order to use up the time. I do not say that is the object the hon. gentlemen have in view, for I do not think it is; but that is about what they are doing. We are told that people are leaving this country, and are going to the United States in great numbers, that they are building up the country on our southern border and neglecting the interests of our great Dominion. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be exceedingly troubled about it; they have been for years telling us these facts and their hearts are very sore in consequence. They lament greatly that our people are going away, and one would suppose from their statements that their first desire is that the people should be retained here and those who have left should be induced to return. I question, however, very much if they have any such desire, and if they do not wish to maintain this old grievance, because I have been very strongly impressed with the idea that the object of hon. gentlemen opposite is not so much to get the people back or to prevent emigration from the country as to secure seats on this side of the House. They imagine that this story of the people leaving the country will be a stepping-stone by which they will exchange places with hon. gentlemen on this side. That is the great object for which they labor. With regard to a committee appointed to investigate the cause of the people leaving the country, I ask myself what is this committee to do? I suppose hon. gentlemen opposite will say they are to ascertain the causes which drive away our people. Why do we wish to investigate that matter by a committee of half a dozen or a dozen members? Hon. gentlemen opposite have told us a score of times what the causes are, they have not failed to go into the details of the case. They have investigated the matter, gathered information from all quarters, and have stated the results of their labors distinctly and clearly to the House from time to time. I have listened for several years to the debates, and there can be no mistake as to the conclusions at which they have arrived. What are those conclusions? They say, in effect: look at the state of the country since we left office in 1878, look at the prosperity we brought it by our policy, look at its progress and prosperity then, and at the people remaining at home, happy and contented in their own country; look at what we did for the country? At length by some strange influences the people were led to cast us aside and let the Tories come in, and look at what has been the position of affairs since then? Look at the ruin which you have brought on the country and how the people have left it since you came into power; let us come back to power and we shall restore that prosperity which prevailed when we were in office. That is, in effect, the whole argument they present: You get out of the way and give us the administration of the Government and we will bring back prosperity; we will carry such reforms as will keep the people on this side of the line and give prosperity to the country and labor to the people, and we will again have that prosperity we enjoyed during 1874-5-6-7-8. I think, however, the people do not want that kind of prosperity again. But we have not been without committees. I have sat here and listened to statements with regard to a committee that was appointed by this House and have not given much heed to that committee, in regard to which I will not speak any further; but I know of another committee, one composed of the bone and sinew of the country, which is in possession of all possible information on this great subject and all other subjects connected with the country's prosperity, and which numbers between half a million and a million of people, and that committee sat in 1887. The committee took this matter into consideration and made a report, and as a result of that report hon. gentlemen are sitting on this side of the House. That committee will report again within a comparatively short period, and they will supply the place of the committee which hon. gentlemen opposite ask. Let me say that the Conservatives are quite satisfied to leave the question with that committee and to await its report. Hon. gentlemen opposite may talk, and I hope they will talk and do all they can to reverse the report of that great committee which will sit two or three years hence, and I wish them joy in their labors. Let hon. gentlemen opposite work on, and the more they labor and talk the greater will be the majority given by that committee to this side of the House. In regard to the fact that people leave this country, I may say that it is a fact which no one wishes to deny. We certainly do not wish to deny facts, for

we believe in truthfulness and righteousness in everything. We admit that a great many of our young people go away—the old people who have learnt wisdom stay at home—and they go over the lines to see the great United States, the great Yankee nation, the glories of a great Democratic country. They go also for another purpose. The great object for which our people go there is to get work. Where are they found? Are they found farming? I speak more particularly for my own part of the Dominion, and I say very few of them are found following agriculture in that country. The great majority are found in the manufacturing establishments of the United States, and there is hardly a town in the Republic, certainly in the northern portion of the United States, where you cannot find a large number of Nova Scotians in the manufacturing establishments. If you will give our people the same labor on this side of the line they will never go to the United States, and they will be prepared to remain at home at a less remuneration than they receive on the other side of the line. What have hon. gentlemen opposite done towards increasing our manufactures? What is their policy in that regard. Their policy is one quite the reverse of a policy of increasing our manufacturing industries. It is due to the policy of the Liberal Conservative party that our present manufacturing establishments are in operation in this country. It is the policy initiated by the leader of this Government which has given to the people that employment in manufactures which they now enjoy. Are hon. gentlemen opposite not laboring for this unrestricted reciprocity; this something that nobody can define; this something that they do not understand themselves; this great something, like a great balloon that flies all around the country, and at which they point and say: "Yonder is something beautiful, if you can only get it." We are told by them that this unrestricted reciprocity is to bring us wealth. What does it mean? It means a return to that state of things which existed when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and when all through this country we had the surplus manufactured goods of the United States distributed all over the country, underselling our own manufactures, because of the poorer quality of the imported article and driving our manufactories out of existence. If gentlemen opposite had their way our people, not in less number but in larger numbers, would go over to the United States to help to build up that country and to help the manufacturers of our own country to their ruin. We might delve away in the mines and get ores out, as Mr. Wiman says "In order to enrich the Americans, by bringing them into their country so that they would refine and prepare them for use," and we might dig and delve on and put the seed in the ground and get the grain and hand it over to them to prepare it for the people of this country. That is what we did in our own Province some years ago. We sawed wood and sent it to the United States, and there they made our buckets and washboards and everything of that kind and sent them back to us while we paid the freight back and forwards and the cost of their manufacture in a foreign country. We would have the same thing again to-day if hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. Let me just say here that notwithstanding the vociferations of one hon. gentleman on the opposite side, when last Session he held out his hands and declared that these emigrants to the United States, these sons of ours, who have left our Dominion, can meet the people of any country of the world and fight their way, and if they find their equals, they never find their superiors. He even told us that Canadians were prospering so much in the United States, that they got to be captains of their ships. That is a great way up when they are captains of ships. I agree with that hon. gentleman that you may take a Nova Scotian and place him beside a man of any country in the world, who has not had superior advantages, and he is equal to any one of them. I have seen my fellow-countrymen in different parts of the world, and I have never seen a Nova Scotian take a second rank yet. I will not say so much about Quebec and Ontario men, because I don't know so much about them.

Mr. COCHRANE. They will take care of themselves.

Mr. FREEMAN. My friend says they will take care of themselves, and I have no doubt of that. I have seen my own countrymen of Nova Scotia, in all parts of the world and they were never second best, but in nine cases out of ten they were first best, and they are never afraid to meet the natives of any country in the world. But you must not handicap them, for we are not so far superior to the people of all other nations that we can afford to be handicapped. It is one thing to be weighted down with unnecessary burdens and another to meet men on equal terms. There are numerous advantages which the manufacturers of the United States have over us, and which would enable them to drive us out of our own markets, although we may be superior to them or equal to them in skill and administrative ability. I do not want to see our countrymen delvers in the mines, hewers of wood and drawers of water, as they would be to this great Yankee nation if hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. I have nothing against the Yankees. In fact, I rather like the Yankees, but I like my own country best. I like my neighbor and I like my neighbor's family, but I like my own family the best, and I would not give much for the man who does not like his own family best. We are suspicious of a man the moment we see him leaving his own wife and going to his neighbor's house; and let me tell you the moment I see gentlemen on the opposite side of the House going to the other side of the line and coquetting with the people there, and saying: "Oh, you are lovely over here, you are beautiful over here, if we could only come here and live with you and have your advantages we could leave the old folks over there." The moment they do that they are neglecting their own people and their hearts are estranged from their homes and community on this side of the line. They may talk as they like about their loyalty, they may ridicule us about over loyalty but I never yet saw a man who had too much loyalty, and I don't think I ever will. I have, Sir, seen a great many who have not enough loyalty, and when they ridicule us about our loyalty let them remember that they are being suspected of not having that true loyalty which Canadians ought to have. I am speaking now of the men who are doing the manipulating and who are laboring most scientifically to get transferred from that side of the House to this. I believe, Sir, that if they were placed on the Treasury benches to-morrow they would forget all that buncombe they are giving us now. During the years it has been my lot to live in this country, to work in this country, to observe what is going on in this country, to read what is written about this country, and to travel around and keep my eyes open to see what is in this country, my impressions—I should not say my impressions but my convictions—are that we are as prosperous in this country as they are in any country in the world. My impressions are that we are doing as well as any country in the world, and that taking the country all and all, we are as wealthy as any other people. I am now speaking especially from the stand point of my own Province, and I will ask you to come down with me and look over my own county which if not one of the wealthiest counties of the Province of Nova Scotia is certainly not one of the poorest. It has not got the same advantages as some other counties, for we have been deprived of many advantages which other counties possess. Other counties in the Province have railways where ladies and gentlemen can travel in comfortable cars at the rate of twenty or thirty miles an hour, while we have to travel by means of horses and carriages at the rate of seven or eight miles an hour. The grain and other produce which we raise we have to send to market with horses over poor roads, covering only ten or twelve miles a day. We labor under greater disadvantages of this kind than other counties in the Province except one. But I hope—more than that, I am confident—that this liberal administration which we have on this side of the House will this year relieve us from those disabilities. I am sure that our cries for help have gone up to the ears of those gentlemen, and that they, with their broad and liberal views of the wants of this country, will this year come to our relief; and if they do, instead of speaking for ten or fifteen minutes, I will speak for an hour when the question of the support of the Government comes in question. If you come down to this county of ours, Sir, I will show you where the people have increased their wealth during the last twenty or twenty-five years, where a great many of them have doubled their wealth and have become comfortable and prosperous. But we are not a wealthy people; we do not expect to be wealthy, for there are a great many fishermen there, and they never look forward to much wealth; but all the people are comfortable, they have the necessaries of life in abundance, and they have some of the luxuries of life also. We have no persons who are clamoring for a soup kitchen in our county, and I am told there was once a time when there was such a thing as a soup kitchen in this Dominion. I am told that this country had fallen to so low a position that the people were clamoring for labor and could not get any, and a soup kitchen had to be established. I hope it will never come to that again; I hope the people will be wise, and never suffer hon. gentlemen opposite to bring them again to that condition. I am glad to see that this country is prosperous, notwithstanding all that hon. gentlemen opposite tell us to the contrary. Let them open their eyes and go through the country, and see the indications of its prosperity. When a man gets poor he begins to retrench, he begins to lop off some of the things he can do without ; but, instead of our people lopping off anything that may be considered a luxury, they are in fact increasing their luxuries. We have twice as many sewing machines in the Province of Nova Scotia as we had ten years ago ; we have twice as many organs, pianos and other luxuries. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House laugh. Perhaps they do not know what it is to be without those luxuries, but the poor man who has been without them for years appreciates them when he gets the means of purchasing them. These things show that our people are not getting poorer, but are increasing in wealth, not in leaps and bounds, as we are promised when Mr. Wiman becomes the master of this territory, but by a steady accumulation, year after year, beyond what is needed for the support of the family—a little of something laid by and put into the savings banks. Examine the deposits in the savings banks, which are another indication of the prosperity of the people ; no surer indication can be found. Tell a man who had not a dollar in his pocket on the 31st of December, 1888, but who has a hundred dollars on the 31st of December, 1889, that he is growing poorer, and he will tell you that you are dreaming. The people who have deposits in the savings banks know that they are better off than they were when they had none. These are the indications of their increasing wealth, and hon. gentlemen opposite are wasting their breath and their time when they attempt to convince the people of Canada that they are growing poorer instead of wealthier. Let me tell them that the people are seeing the falseness of their prophecies ; the people are intelligent and observing, and they can see that those gentlemen are not telling them the truth, and the best thing they can possibly do is to turn over a new leaf and tell the people the truth, and show that they have some better plan, some scheme by which they are going to bring greater prosperity to this country. They say that the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government made great promises previous to the introduction of the National Policy. They take good care not to make any promises, Sir. At one time they were going to give us free trade, but since that time they have been promising us everything and nothing ; they have been promising us a phantom ; let them tell us what they are going to do. They talk about unrestricted reciprocity, but they cannot give it to us ; we have to go to the Americans to see whether we can get that. What is their scheme ? What are they going to do to give us this greater prosperity ? Let them give us a well-defined policy, and then we shall understand what they propose to do, and will give them credit for being earnest and honest in this matter. My own impression is that we do not want this committee, and I shall vote against the granting of it.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Seeing that my colleagues who speak the English language, Mr. Speaker, have exhausted their arguments on the resolution now before the House, I trust that I may be permitted to express my own in French—more especially as the French language is soon to be suppressed in our debates. The resolution now submitted for our consideration seems rather to demonstrate that the Liberal party are seeking for a new political programme which will produce some effect upon the population, than a remedy suitable for the healing of the real ills which afflict the people of this country. The hon. members who now condemn the policy of the Government by attributing to this policy, the emigration which is directed towards the American Republic, ought to have, when they were in power and they controlled the majority in this House, when the emigration was much more considerable than it is now,—they ought, I say, to have sought for some means of curing this regretful plague. No persons more than we do, Mr. Speaker, desire to see stop this flow of emigration which runs ceaselessly in the direction of the neighboring Republic. But it is not, certainly, by adopting the policy of the hon. members of the Opposition that we shall witness the stoppage of this evil. For if we look at England, the natural home and the mother country of free trade, we find that it is the British Isles which people our uninhabited wilds and which furnish to the American Republic the largest contingent of emigrants which is guided to those vast and peopled States ; so that, Mr. Speaker, it is not by adopting the policy of the hon. members of the Left that we will be able to heal the sore of which they complain. On the other hand, let us look upon the American Republic. The hon. members on the other side of the House attribute this emigration to our protective tariff. But why, then, does the American Republic, which has a protective tariff much greater than our own, see the emigration from all the countries of the world head itself towards her shores ? There is nothing, Mr. Speaker, in the arguments of the hon. members which can make me believe that a Committee could discover anything new in this regard. It appears to me that the policy of the present Government has been of a nature to cause to cease as much as lies in our power the current of emigration which sets towards the American Republic. This Government does all that lies in its power to develop the resources of our country, and, let it be stated as an aside, that when the hon. members who now sit on that side of the House occupied the ministerial benches, and we reproached them with permitting our citizens of all origins to leave for the Republic, the hon. members and the Minister of Finance of that time did not utter the same language as the hon. mover of the resolution now before the House. The hon. Minister of Finance of that time said that we must bear our sorrows in patience, and that there existed no cure for our troubles. Now, the hon. members seem to have changed their opinions ; and because the present Government has changed the fiscal policy of the country, and for the greatest good of the country as the results show ; because the hon. members see their policy of free trade dead for a long time to come probably, they seek now to make carping enquiries into a policy which has produced its fruits, and fruits beneficial for our country. The hon. members, Mr. Speaker, see no cure for this tendency to emigrate,—for what they call the depopulation of our country districts. They see no other remedy than that afforded by a Committee. I believe that this Committee might serve the political interests of these gentlemen, and that by making an investigation, by summoning the attendance of witnesses and of experienced persons from all parts of the country, they might perchance discover a programme of political action more beneficial than that which they have advocated so far. I do not deny but that the policy of the Government might be improved. I believe that improvements might always be found in a policy however good it may be. But I see no other improvement to be adopted than that of developing the protective system which has worked such good results up to the present time. And I will venture to make one suggestion to the Government—a suggestion which has probably reached their ears before this—that is, to give a little more protection to the agricultural classes. Circumstances have changed since 1878. Agricultural production has considerably increased in the American Republic and in almost all the countries of the world. We have at the present day a very considerable competition with the American farmers. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that the Government might impose higher taxes on agricultural products which reach us from foreign countries. Amongst other things, the meats which come to us from Chicago and the Western States of America might be taxed a few cents a pound, which would be a benefit for the agricultural class of our country. We are in a condition, Mr. Speaker, in the great Province of Ontario and the Province of Quebec to furnish all the meats required for consumption in the cities of the Dominion of Canada. We are prepared to produce beef and pork in great quantities. If our agriculturists had sufficient protection, they could produce all the meat required at reasonable prices. And it appears to me that the Government might add a few cents to the present duty on American pork and beef, which encumbers the markets of Montreal and Toronto as well as the markets of all the other towns of the Dominion. If the hon. members of the Left are really in earnest for the improvement of the condition of the agricultural classes of the country, they will have to support this proposition. As I have no doubt but that these gentlemen are sincere in asking for the improvement of the agricultural classes; as likewise I have no doubt that they are sincere when they desire to stop the flow of emigration now setting towards the United States, I trust that they will support this proposition and that they will thus place the agriculturists in a position to hold the Canadian markets, by stopping this ruinous competition with the American Republic. In fact the Republic competes with us to our ruin, not only on the foreign markets, but even on our own markets. I do not see what we would gain by free trade with the United States, for it is certain that in the raising of grain we cannot compete with the immense production of the American West. The grains are cheaper there to-day than they are in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Maize, barley and oats come into ruinous competition with similar products from the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that the Government owe to the agricultural community which has heartily accepted industrial protection, in order to have more populous towns and to have a greater local market, the Government owe it, I repeat, to the agriculturist to grant him the protection, which he now asks for, to his meats. We could by this means produce more meat; we could furnish our markets with a product superior, so far as regards the health of individuals, to that which comes to us from the American West, and we could provision our markets at prices which would not certainly be exorbitant; which agricultural protection would be, on the part of the working and trading classes, a just return for the advantages which we have secured for them by accepting the principle of industrial protection. Under all circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I will be ready to support the Government in the furtherance of of this policy of protection which has produced, whatever the Liberal party in this House may say, results most auspicious for the whole country, for the Province of Quebec as well as for the other Provinces of the Dominion.

Mr. TISDALE. There appears to be a want of unity on the other side of the House and a want of confidence in the proposition of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). Very little has been said in its favor on that side, and I cannot see how the hon. member, in the short speech which he made, could convince any hon. gentleman to support his motion. At any rate, I am satisfied that there is no necessity for this committee, and I have not heard ten words from any hon. gentleman on that side showing the necessity for it. It appears to me that it is simply a sort of side attack on the National Policy. As the hon. gentleman introduced the subject of the exodus to the United States, it struck me that the scope of the enquiry might have been enlarged, and he might have asked for information as to the large number of Canadians who are in Dakota this winter and who were induced to go there by the speeches of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. If we can believe the representations which have been made, there are to be found in Dakota a great number of Canadians who are suffering more than any people are suffering in Canada. Though hon. gentlemen opposite talk very strongly about the difficulties which beset our own North-West and speak of its deterioration, or its "going back," if I may use that term, I have not heard one of them who, before he got through, did not answer his own argument on the subject of the National Policy. Take some of the remarks of the hon. member from Huron (Mr. Macdonald) in his long speech. As to the arguments in it, the House can judge whether they were sound or not, but I was amused, after he spoke about the exportation of horses, bacon and sheep, to hear him go on to show that, notwithstanding the National Policy, we exported more of those articles now than before, while at the same time a great part of his argument was taken up to prove how much poorer we were. He had hardly got through with that point when he said that he could give many more proofs that we were importing more now than we were before the National Policy, and were paying more duty on the importation. It seems to me extraordinary that the result of the National Policy should be that we exported and imported more than before, and still were poorer. The hon. gentleman wanted to show that we were paying the duties both ways, and he introduced the question which has been discussed till every one is tired of it, as to who pays the duty. The hon. gentleman, however, said we paid the duties both ways, and those statements are but an illustration of the absurdity of the proposition which is answered by the gentlemen who propound it. If it is true that we export more, and also import more, the hon. gentleman answered his own argument, because the country cannot be getting poorer if it sends more out and gets more in than it did before the National Policy was established. If the hon. gentleman had looked into his statistics in reference to the importing of the cattle and horses he would have found another great evidence of prosperity, because in the great majority of cases those articles which come into the country are improved stock, which come in free. What does the importation of improved stock mean, unless it shows that the country under the National Policy is improving in every way. Outside of Ontario I know very little, but I know a great deal of that Province, and I have yet to find that the farmers there are getting poorer under the National Policy. On the contrary, they are better off and are producing better stock. Wheat used to be the greatest staple in the Province, but the continuous cropping led to a less growth of wheat, and that proved to be better for the farmers, because they took to stock-raising, and to-day probably the personal property of the farmers in Ontario is nearly as valuable as their real estate. This shows that, if we are importing more largely, it is because the farmers are improving their stock and because they are competing in a country between which and us some gentlemen opposite desire to put up a wall, on the same terms with our neighbors. In reference to mortgages, I hope the next time the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Macdonald) speaks on the subject he will inform himself first. If he goes to the State of Ohio, or to New York, the Empire State, or to Michigan, or to any of these rich frontier States, he will find that the mortgages are double, and in some cases five and seven times the amounts they are in Ontario. I cannot see where there should be any pleasure in stating only one side—and surely it must be a pleasure, because it cannot do this country any good. I admit that I was surprised at the fine strain in which the hon. gentleman commenced, when he stated that this was the finest country under the sun, that our education and our administration of justice were better than they were in the United States; but then he wandered into his usual strain when he speaks of the material interests of the country. If the farmers of this country are in the position which he represents, is it not strange that they have not sent deputations here asking to have the tariff better arranged for them. All the other interests have done so, and I am sure the Government would be glad to do anything they could for the farming industry. Members representing rural constituencies are taking some steps this Session to have the interests of the farmers better regulated, and they will be. In the rural constituency which I represent, I know that the farmers approve of the policy of the Government. The hon. gentleman stated that the present system of taxation drove agriculturists out of the country. Is that true? I do not think it is. It was merely a statement. I think the beauty of our system is that while it resembles the United States protective tariff, it is better. Because there they have a number of taxes which are not necessary, and they tax articles which should not be protected. Our system is a great improvement upon that. Further, I think any inquiry of the sort the hon. gentleman proposes to have made by this committee would produce no result. What possible result can the hon. gentleman say it would produce? Can anything new be shown which has not been discussed or will not be discussed in the House? The hon. gentleman, who is Chairman of the Agriculture and Colonisation Committee, knows that things were very fully investigated there, and I was somewhat surprised to hear the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) say that in that committee the evidence produced by the Government could not be relied upon. Well, it is a new doctrine to me that when a committee is appointed to make an enquiry the Government produces the evidence. The hon. gentlemen could have had any evidence brought before that committee that he chose. I never heard of any witness being refused an examination. If the hon. gentleman had any evidence to bring forward then, why did he not produce it? If he knows of any now, if the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) knows of any, let them bring it forward, and no doubt the Government will make them members of the committee. If they have none to bring why go to the expense of appointing a select committee when all these statistics can be got at otherwise. I have come to the conclusion that we are bound to have a very long Session if we are to have debates on all these minor questions. Would it not suit the hon. gentleman's purpose just as well and have an equal effect upon the electorate, if they would make one grand attack on the National Policy and discuss all their points in the one debate, instead of having these numerous debates and endless motions. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to have a very irregular policy. They keep bringing up the same questions and repeating the same statements all leading to the one point, which is an indirect attack upon the National Policy. If they would only make one comprehensive motion and not accuse us of having nothing to say, we would sit still like good boys and let them talk for a week if they choose, although we have heard already everything they have to say. On all these motions no doubt the Government will be sustained, and I am quite sure hon. gentlemen opposite will not improve their position in the country in thus prolonging the Session far beyond the time necessary to get through with our practical business. Let me say a few words with regard to our North-West. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Larivière) mentioned a fact which pleased me very much, and one which I can corroborate personally, when he spoke of Canadians coming back from the United States to Canada. They say it is dangerous to be a prophet in your own land, but I do not speak exactly in the spirit of prophecy, because it is rapidly becoming a reality, when I tell you that, as the hon. member for Provencher has stated, Canadians are returning in large numbers to our North-West and not only Canadians but Americans as well. Let me tell you where I first got the information about this. In the city of Chicago there is a British American Society, composed of Canadians who have gone there, whether they have become American citizens or not, and the secretary of that society told me that through his correspondence he knew there was a large exodus from the American Western States to the Canadian North-West. It was last summer that he spoke to me and he said: "Mark my words, the largest and earliest emigration to the North-West will be from the North-Western States, not only Dakota but Kansas and Nebraska, and from the Territories where there is very little good farm land. The advertisements that were sent abroad directed the tide of emigration to those quarters, but the settlers are becoming disappointed; they find the land is not what they expected, they find that tempests, frosts and drouths, according to the different localities, prevail. The people are very poor; they cannot sell their grain; they are burning their corn, as they did this year; it does not pay them to dig up their potatoes, and there is a feeling rapidly setting in among them in favor of emigration to the Canadian North-West." I can confirm that statement. Every year the emigration from the United States will grow larger. We have evidence from the hon. members for the North-West that those who went away are coming back, and others with them; and the volume of emigration will be endless once it sets in, particularly from Dakota. People who have settled there, and took all they had and their families with them, have had to mortgage their farms, as the crops failed one year after another, and land that looked so rich and flourishing was unproductive through want of rain and moisture. The result will be that from those North-Western States we will get an excellent class of emigrants, because they are pioneers, and know how to take up and cultivate land in a new country and establish their own homes. The strongest opponent of the Government opposite must agree that the land in our North-West and Manitoba is of most excellent quality and unsurpassed in fertility. All what we want is immigrants, and immigration is rapidly setting in. But I tell you, Sir, that enquiries such as this, predicated upon the idea that there is an extensive exodus, are calculated to do much harm. The exodus which hon. gentlemen opposite speak of is largely exaggerated. They seem to be glad to exaggerate and to rely on these statistics, which are most untrustworthy. I looked in an almanac of the United States to-night which gives the immigration to the United States up to 1886, and according to it the average immigration from all the British possessions has been under 15,000 a year instead of 75,000. The statistics are given there every year; but these frontier statistics, on which hon. gentlemen opposite lay so much stress, are entirely unreliable, and intended to give an exaggerated impression of the exodus from Canada. Hon. gentlemen may say what they please about the United States, but there is one thing in which we should take example by them, and that is speaking well of one's country. The Americans fight their political battles with much vigor, but in the House of Congress no one dare run down his own country, because they have a summary way of dealing with men who belittle their own home. Members of Congress may belittle an opponent or attack all the actions of either party as to their hearts' content, or even make personal attacks, but the instant any one abuses his country he is not safe. Well, I do not believe in that sort of thing, but still I would be very glad if hon. gentlemen opposite would adopt some other tactics. Of course they may say that it is none of my business, but in all sincerity I would like to feel that when the time comes, as it probably will, when hon. gentlemen opposite will take control of the affairs of the country, they will have faith in their country. If they stand by the country, the country will stand by them. I would like them to be satisfied, as I am, that having unrivalled natural capacities in Canada, if we stand by the country it will stand by us. Any reasonable man ought to be content with the progress our country has made from one year to another. Take, in a winter such as this, the history of any State in the Union, or the history of the whole United States, and look at the condition of any country in Europe, and you cannot but be convinced that there is no people in the world better off, more comfortable and better provided for than our own; and if we do not stir up a spirit of discontent and dissatisfaction with the way things are progressing everybody will be reasonably well satisfied. I am satisfied for one that in the different constituencies throughout the country, notwithstanding that hon. gentlemen opposite are endeavoring to create an excitement about our present manner of government, our present relations with Great Britain, and the contemplated change with respect to the United States, there is very little excitement about it. Our people are a good, sensible, level-headed lot of people, and I do not believe that any number of motions of this sort will discourage the Canadians. But it is the effect abroad that we may have to deplore, and that will injure us most; it is the effect of such speeches that have sent many poor Canadians to the wilds of Dakota, where now they are sadly in need of relief. I wish hon. gentlemen to think and feel that they are taking a great responsibility upon themselves when they make the statements they do in regard to this country, and in regard to another country about which many of them know very little. Distance lends enchantment to the view, and they think that because the United States has 60,000,000 of people, and can make bigger cities than we have, because they have longer railroads and more of them, that because they are a great, big people, therefore Canadians would be better off there than they are here. Now, I do not believe that. I believe that Canada is large enough for the most ambitious man. I think that the world has yet to produce a finer country than ours. At the present time we are much in the same position that the States of the Union were when they first separated from Great Britain. We are 5,000,000 of people, and we have immense natural resources of mines, minerals, timber, with millions of acres of undeveloped land, and it all belongs to these 5,000,000 of people. In the United States all these things are developed. Their mines are beginning to be exhausted by their immense manufacturing industries; their timber is being swept off, their farms are settled up, and why should 5,000,000 people give up this vast heritage to 60,000,000 of people? I am not one of those who believe that this country will settle down to this view, and will accept a political party that is endeavoring to bring about this end, a party that is all the time hunting for something abroad to belittle and discourage us Canadians. I tell you that we have the germ of a great country here, and we have great possibilities before us. And more than that. The hon. member for Huron (Mr. Macdonald) made a statement more true than he supposed, when he spoke of the administration of justice in this country. I tell you that liberty here is liberty; in the United States, because of their political institutions and their elective judiciary, liberty is not liberty. We know here that if a man commits a crime he is going to be punished for it; if the rich man wrongs the poor man he goes into court, and there they are equal. But how is it over there? The law is precisely similar, but the administration of justice, owing to the fact that they elect everybody there to administer justice, is not at all so certain. We read long histories of criminal trials; we read of the rich men carrying their cases from one court to another. And you talk about combines here, and monopolies, and all that sort of thing. Why, they cannot touch those on the other side of the line. As I said, I think no other people in the world have a heritage equal to that possessed by these 5,000,000 of Canadians. All we have to do is to wait, and the Americans will come to us. They will come to us as their minerals become exhausted, as their timber is used up, and as their old settled farms are exhausted. They must come to us, and why should we go to them? Why should 5,000,000 go to 60,000,000? Would he not be a foolish man who has a mine of his own, to go and ask a hundred people to come and help him to make money out of that which he has been fortunate enough to discover? Would he not be a foolish man, who has found a fine tract of timber, to ask a hundred men to come and help him cut it down instead of reaping the benefit of his own discovery alone? And so in everyway. Canada, with its 5,000,000, has all these things, and the 60,000,000 or the 65,000,000, as some hon. gentlemen are fond of saying, would be glad to come to us; and if we do not get enough settlers from the States the immigration from Europe will grow every year; and so it will be our own fault if we do not in the future go on and grow, and reap all these benefits. Why, it was only the other day that Confederation took place. What were we then? Do you not remember that people said then that the leader of the Government was crazy, and that his colleagues were crazy? The hon. member himself who moved this resolution, and in the very riding that still returns him, counted up, in the election of 1874, that to build the Canadian Pacific Railway would mortgage every farm in Canada for so many thousand dollars. Well, is not the Canadian Pacific Railway built? And I ask the hon. gentleman to-night where are the mortgages on the farms? Why, people do not know that they have paid out any money, so far as taxation goes. We have got our farms, our land; we have got railways, and we are known all over the world. We have got a shorter route than the Americans to China and Japan, and Americans have to patronise our road and our lines of steamers when they go across. I tell you that instead of Canada being in danger of having to go to the United States, we are going to build up our nationality, and they will have to come to us.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, there is a matter to which I desire to invite the attention of the Government. I have no doubt that the members of the Government, in common with other members of this House, have observed a somewhat remarkable series of letters which have appeared within a few days in the columns of the Globe newspaper, purporting to be signed by a member of this House, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), and involving seriously the names of other members of this House. It is not my intention at present to discuss or comment upon these letters, but I desire to ask whether the attention of the Government has been called to them, and whether the Government intend to take any action in this House in regard to the matter? I deemed it right to give notice to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) that I would to-day call attention to this matter in the House, in order that he might give any explanation in regard to these letters, if he so desired, which might seem good to him. As I said, I do not intend to comment upon them now, but I should be glad to know from the Government whether they intend to take any notice of this correspondence?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think those statements appeared on Saturday last in the Globe. That is a periodical which I do not usually peruse, but my attention was called to this matter on Sunday morning, and then I saw the letters which were published in that paper. Some of those letters surprised me very considerably. I do not think that, as far as the Government are concerned, or as far as any member of the Government is concerned, they have much to do with the matter. As to the very interesting letters published in the newspaper between the gentlemen who are stated to have had the correspondence, they stand on their own merits or demerits—I have nothing to do with that. I can only say that, as far as the Government are concerned, and as far as the members of the Government who were in power at the time when these transactions took place are concerned, they are quite willing that any investigation that might be suggested should be gone into. There is not the slightest objection to that. As to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), every hon. gentleman in this House knows that he is a strong man in battle and can fight his own battles and defend his own position. As yet, the Government, having had other matters before them, have not really considered the correspondence which has been spoken of. I do not suppose that all my colleagues have had time to read those letters; I have not yet finished the perusal myself; but I can only state that, if that correspondence in any way, in any phrase or sentence reflects upon the honor of the Ministry or of any member of it, we are quite ready to defend ourselves and to ask for the assistance of hon. gentlemen opposite in the investigation. This, however, is hardly a question of privilege unless raised by the hon. gentleman himself.

Mr. RYKERT. I do not know whether at this time I shall be permitted to make a full statement of the facts connected with this case or not, but I do not desire to shrink from the question.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think it would be well to enter upon that now. We might do that on another day.

Mr. RYKERT. There might be a day fixed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; I think it is due to the hon. gentleman to fix a day, and I will arrange with him for a day on which the discussion may take place.

Mr. RYKERT. The hon. gentleman will remember that I applied to him yesterday morning to fix a day for this question, and I wish to have that day at the earliest possible time.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think you would need a week.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I must differ from the First Minister in regard to the question whether this is or is not a matter of privilege. I think any question which may involve serious reflections upon a member of this House does become a matter of privilege, and I think, if the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) desires to make an explanation, it would be well that the explanation should be made now, so that the House, which has seen the correspondence, should, in fairness to the hon. member, hear what he has to say upon it. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman will make his explanation in such a way, that it will not provoke any lengthened debate, and I want it understood, that no one on this side of the House desires to deprive the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) of the right which he and any other hon. gentleman whose character is impugned in the public press has to make an explanation. With all deference to the leader of the Government, I think it might be well to do that now.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a Government day and we want to get on with the public business. I have no objection to fix the discussion for to-morrow instead of to-day. I may point out that the hon. gentleman opposite did not end with a resolution, which is necessary in a matter of privilege, but he can do that if he chooses. I think the hon. gentleman had better postpone the discussion until to-morrow.

Mr. LAURIER. To-morrow is the day fixed for the debate on the French language in the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Suppose we say Thursday. That would give us time to look at the dates of the letters.

Mr. LAURIER. If the hon. member for Lincoln does not speak now, it is not by reason of objection from this side of the House.

Mr. RYKERT. It will necessarily take some time, but as the leader of the Government says this is a Government day, I have no objection to postpone the matter, but I shall take the first opportunity I have to give an elaborate explanation of the whole matter, to the satisfaction of hon. gentlemen opposite, probably.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will say Thursday. It is either a matter of privilege or it is not. If it is a matter of privilege the hon. gentleman can give notice to-day.

REBATE ON IMPORTED CORN.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster: That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair, for the House to go again into Committee of Supply, and the motion of Mr. Laurier in amendment thereto.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I desire to say that the Government consider this question, not as one to be discussed like ordinary motions—on its own merits. The Government consider that it is one of a series of motions which appear on the paper, affecting—I do not say attacking, but affecting—the fiscal policy of the Government. That policy is well known; that policy has been known since 1879. The Government, therefore, say that they will resist the premature discussion of this proposition on the paper, affecting the fiscal policy of the Government, the tariff policy of the Government, if you like, the protective policy of the Government. On this occasion I desire to make this announcement, Mr. Speaker, that the Government intend to bring down a tariff measure during the present Session of considerable importance, and affecting considerable interests, and that the subject, in all these motions and resolutions that appear upon the paper, including this one, will be brought up at the time when the Government come down with their tariff measure; but they will resist any premature motion, even by my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, until that period.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The announcement, in point of fact, means this, as I understand the question: that the Government of Canada, who, with the information in their hands, cannot fail to be aware that the agricultural interests of Canada, and notably of the great Province of Ontario, are at present in a state of extreme depression, and have been notified of that fact by the bodies representing the farmers of Ontario, are not disposed to raise their little finger for the purpose of relieving these depressed and suffering interests, are not even disposed to allow an obvious, an extraordinary anomaly in the tariff to be removed, even when, as I have excellent reason to know, many of their own strongest supporters are disposed to insist that the farmers of Canada at least should not be insulted—because it is an insult, practically—by saying that other bodies infinitely of less importance to the well-being of this community should receive an indulgence which is entirely refused to them. Now, Sir, I have had occasion at various times to note how exceedingly severely the duty on corn, and the duty on the importation of certain classes of grain similar to corn, press on the best interests of the farmers of Ontario. I know that in the section where I reside, though I do not represent it now, the distress which, as the First Minister must know, was extreme in the course of the last year or two, was very seriously aggravated by the fact that, in their extreme need, the suffering farmers were compelled to purchase fodder corn for the use of their animals at a greatly increased price, by reason of the duty. Now, a few days ago my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Landerkin) proposed that we should give the same indulgence to the farmers—who certainly represent one-half, and perhaps the best half, of this community—which the Government had freely accorded to the producers of a fluid which, I think—he will correct me, if I am wrong—my hon. friend the Finance Minister was wont to characterise as distilled damnation—begging the pardon of the House for quoting him on this occasion. Under these circumstances, I say, there is no just reason whatever why, if you refuse to grant this paltry and insignificant favor to the agriculturists of Canada, you should not at the same time equalise things and take the privilege away from the distillers. I say, Sir, that if there be any real honesty in the temperance gentlemen on the other side who are in the habit of supporting the right hon. gentleman, they, at all events, ought not to favor the distillers of Canada at the expense of the agricultural class. Now, I do not think that there is any occasion for me, or, indeed, for any of us, to enlarge greatly on the subject. There can be no plainer or clearer proposition than the one that is now laid down—that if you are going to have a protective tariff, if you are going, as you say, to foster the interests of all classes of the community, the very first and most obvious duty is to extend equal privileges to them: either grant to the farmers a rebate similar to that which you give to the distillers, or put them all on an equal footing. That is only fair, that is only just and right; and, therefore, I trust that my hon. friend will not be cajoled by the promises of the First Minister, to remove from the proceedings of the House this most equitable resolution. I hope that he will press it to a vote, and that he will give those hon. gentlemen who represent the agricultural interests, and in particular those hon. gentlemen, including the Minister of Finance, who have arrogated to themselves the special care of the temperance interest of this Dominion, the opportunity of showing that they, at any rate, are disposed to give as much fair play to the farmers of Canada as to the distillers and manufacturers of an article that my hon. friend was wont to describe in those terms.

Mr. BRIEN. Before this motion is put, I would ask the indulgence of the House to say a few words with regard to it. The motion which the hon. leader of the Opposition has placed in your hands is one which meets with my entire approval. The situation in the locality which I have the honor to represent, is one of a peculiar character. The remedy proposed by the resolution of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) is one which, I believe, would be in the best interests of the Dominion as a whole. It is not fair that the whole Dominion should reap an advantage at the expense of the inhabitants of the corn-growing districts. I take it that it would be quite unfair to them. As we have a protective policy, it is just and fair that protection should be dealt out to all parties and to all sections. The National Policy is sectional in its character; and if it has been established in order to raise revenue and to encourage industry, then those industries which are peculiar to certain sections of the country should be protected as well as other industries. I could not, therefore, vote for the motion of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin). With regard to the general principle of granting rebates, I am not going to discuss that question at the present time. While the protective policy is in operation, there should be justice in its application. My objection to the continuation of the privilege given to distillers is, in the first place, that it has a tendency to reduce the price of corn; and, in the second place, that it is a privilege granted to an industry which, I think, does not require any special privileges. Were a special privilege of this kind granted on the imported material, such as sugar, it would enable industries to be established in the corn-growing district which is also a large fruit-growing district, and the people would be able to manufacture large quantities of preserved fruits for both home and export. With the permission of the House, I desire to read a short extract from the Canadian Journal of Commerce with respect to the importance of the fruit-growing industry in this country, and the extent which it is followed. That journal says:

"The distinction of being the largest fruit-growing county in Canada is claimed by Essex, in western Ontario. The past season's apple sales were 70,000 barrels, costing the purchaser $122,000, including buyer's incidental expenses. There was also sold 5,000 baskets of peaches for $3,750, $5,000 worth of pears, $5,000 worth of small fruits, $1,500 worth of cherries, and $1,000 worth of plums, a total of $138,250. The figures relating to Essex County's immense grape crop, which has attained a national reputation, have unfortunately not been compiled."

If others who wish to establish industries in the fruit-growing section have to pay an import duty on sugar entering into manufactures, the distillers should do the same on materials which enter into composition of the products manufactured by them. The distilling business is a sufficiently profitable one already, and I have no doubt that, if they were satisfied with a little less profit, they could do without a rebate. My strongest objection to this special privilege being continued to this industry is, that the industry is not one which it is the true interests of the country to encourage. The less the liquor traffic is encouraged the better, and due respect should be paid by the Government to the temperance sentiment of the country. There is not the least doubt that it is an interest which, in all its details, is a curse instead of a blessing. I do not think any man would attempt for a moment to deny that fact, or to say that it is conducive to the welfare of the community in which it may be situated. While I object to the consumption of the article at home, I also object to the proposition that, while we do not wish to have this traffic ourselves, it is quite proper to encourage the distilling business if the liquor is exported, for I hold that if intoxicating liquor is injurious here, it is injurious wherever it may be consumed. It can easily be shown that even from a financial standpoint alone this industry involves great financial loss to the Dominion, instead of being a benefit. As regards the cost to the country, as far as my information goes, the amount of liquor consumed is an entire loss. In order to show that the distilling industry is one already profitable, I have only to quote from the census of 1881. The distillers' capital is entered as $1,303,100; value of the raw material, $1,092,100; value of product, $1,790,800; wages paid, $116,230; hands employed, the paltry number of 285. The profits, deducting wages and cost of raw material, were $572,230, or equal to 44 per cent. on the capital employed. The amount of wages paid in proportion to the profits is much less in this industry than in others, and it is, therefore, less advantageous to the laboring man. The percentage of wages paid to the value of the product is only 6 per cent., while in other industries it varies from 20 to 25 per cent. From my standpoint on this question, all the liquor consumed and all the liquor manufactured in the country entails a financial loss, and, more than that, it is a loss in various ways. The cost to the consumer and country of the amount of spirits used last year, as gathered from the Inland Revenue returns, was as follows:—Consumption of spirits 1,176 gallons per head, equals 5,808,000 gallons, which, at $5 per gallon, gives $29,400,000. Consumption of beer, 2,633 gallons per head, equals 13,150,000 gallons, which, at 50 cents per gallon, gives $6,575,000. Consumption of wine, 143 gallons per head, equals 715,000 gallons, which, at $6 per gallon, gives $4,290,000; or a total of $40,265,000. This cost is exclusive of the vast amount expended on the administration of justice and on the maintenance of paupers and criminals, and these items will add largely to the total. This capital, instead of being employed in an industry which is injurious from every standpoint, might be engaged in industries that would be profitable to the state. The corn is taken by the farmer to the distiller, by whom it is sold as liquor to retailers, and they each in turn obtain their profits. The retailers sell it to the consumers, and they also have to obtain their percentage. But what does the consumer obtain? Nothing but loss of health, and he is probably induced, under the influence of liquor, to commit some crime for which he has to pay the penalty of the law. From a financial standpoint, therefore, the distilling industry is injurious, and from a moral standpoint it is injurious; and whatever is injurious to the community is injurious to the country at large. I hope this motion will be carried. I am sure that no man having any desire to promote the welfare of the people will vote against this resolution, nor will any man who has temperance sentiments at heart and who wishes to promote the time which we all look forward to, when a prohibitory measure will be adopted by this Legislature, be found on the side of those who support the Government in this matter. I think it would be well if the Government would show the people that they are desirous of paying some attention to the great agitation which is being carried on in the country in favor of temperance. At the same time, the adoption of this motion would be an intimation to the distillers not to invest more money in their business, so that they cannot claim compensation for vested rights, in case the prohibitory measure which we all look forward to being carried in a short time at least shall become the law of the country. If the sentiment of the country is manifested by the results of the voting, when the people have been given an opportunity to express their opinion on these matters, then we may expect prohibitory legislation to be introduced into Parliament at a very early day. I think the present time is opportune for us to cease to encourage an industry which is detrimental to the moral, financial and intellectual welfare of the people.

Mr. O'BRIEN. This question, from a fiscal point of view, is one which admits of a very great difference of opinion and a very great deal of argument, but that question is not concerned in the motion now before the House. The question now before us is: whether a rebate shall be given upon corn admitted for a certain purpose. I take it that it does not matter for what purpose that is, whether for making whiskey or anything else; the fact that a rebate is given to a certain class on corn is sufficient to make it detrimental to the farmer, because it is obvious that, however small the amount of the rebate may be, yet, to the extent of that rebate, the imported corn comes in direct competition with the coarse grains of this country. It does not matter whether the rebate is one dollar or one million dollars. Whatever it be, to such extent does that corn come into competition with the coarse grains of the country. This is not a time, when an important principle like this is concerned, to do anything which would give the farmers of the country a reason to find fault with the operation of the National Policy. It is because I am a supporter of the National Policy that I certainly will not sustain the Government in retaining that rebate, no matter how trifling the amount may be, or no matter what little effect it may have on the revenue of the country. This is a question of principle, inasmuch as I hold that to the extent of that rebate of duty, the coarse grain from the United States comes into competition with the coarse grain of this country. The question of its bearing on the temperance movement is of comparatively little importance, and that I do not propose to deal with. As a consistent supporter of the National Policy, especially as affecting the farmer, I am bound to vote for any motion which looks towards the abolition of this rebate. I take this course, not on a general question of rebates, but because in this particular case the giving of the rebate puts our farmers, to the extent of that rebate, in an inferior position with regard to the American producers of Indian corn.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is in error in the statement he has made. There is no portion of the residue (if it may be so termed) of the corn, used in feeding purposes, which receives any drawback. On the contrary, the rebate is given on the proportion of a bushel of the corn from which the spirit is extracted. They pay $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents on each bushel of corn, and when they manufacture that into spirits, they receive two-thirds of the $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents as a rebate, provided the spirits are exported. The other one-third is supposed to cover, and does cover, and more than cover, that which is fed to the cattle. So, in fact, that which is fed in the country to cattle pays the duty. I have the Order in Council to this effect before me now.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I quite understand that a rebate is given only on a very small portion of the corn used even in distilleries. But I say that, to that extent, it is unfair to the farmers that it should be given.

Mr. BOWELL. Why?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Because if the distiller buys a bushel of Indian corn and brings it into this country subject to a duty of whatever number of cents per bushel may be imposed, and when he sends the whiskey to France, or wherever it goes to, he gets a rebate on the amount of corn exported for the manufacture.

Mr. BOWELL. He only gets two-thirds.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It does not matter whether it is two-thirds or two-tenths. The principle is the same, and, unless I am very stupid, I certainly think that I am correct in believing that, as regards the amount of that rebate, it deprives the farmer to that extent of the benefit of the National Policy. I understand that to be the case, and it does not matter, as I say, whether the amount be great or small, it is to that extent inconsistent with the principle of the National Policy. As a consistent supporter of the National Policy, I certainly cannot consent to that which seems to me to be injurious to it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The First Minister has to-day made an announcement not embraced in the Speech which was put into the mouth of His Excellency the Governor General. That Speech, as speeches are supposed to do, foreshadowed the legislative policy of the Administration for the Session. But there is nothing in that Speech with regard to the financial policy of the Government; there is no statement there that it was the intention of the Government to make any alteration whatever in the fiscal policy. The Government did not announce to the House that this subject was under their consideration. They did not announce to the House that they had discovered any serious defects, and that they were anxious to revise the tariff which had, with so much difficulty and after so many interviews, been imposed upon certain articles for revenue purposes and for the purposes of protection. Now the right hon. gentleman comes down to the House, at this fourth or fifth week of the Session, and informs the House that this subject is under consideration. I think we may fairly infer from the observations of the First Minister, how the Government will consider this question and what conclusion they are likely to arrive at.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Don't prophesy unless you know.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman tells me not to prophesy unless I know. I venture this prediction, whether it turns out true or whether the result is that I misconceive hon. gentlemen opposite: "The Government will be like Captain Scott's coon, and on this question they will come down." The hon. gentleman knows that last year he came down handsomely with reference to the duty upon saw logs, and he came down too after voting down a proposition submitted to this House on that question. Now, it seems to me, Sir, that it would be only fair to this House, in which the Government has so large a majority, that they can well afford to take the House into their confidence, if the Government were to announce now what their intention is upon this question. Why should the Government call upon their supporters, as they are calling upon the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), to choose between voting according to their convictions and according to their fealty to the Administration? They call upon the hon. member for Muskoka to choose between his devotion to the Government and his devotion to the National Policy, and the hon. gentleman has announced to the Finance Minister—and it was, no doubt, a painful announcement for him to make—that, if compelled to make the choice, he must support the National Policy and let the Administration go. Now, it seems to me that if the Government seriously contemplated making changes in the tariff, those changes ought to have been announced when His Excellency the Governor General made his Speech at the opening of Parliament. Why should the Government tell us what they intend to do with regard to the business of banking, with regard to the subject of bills and promissory notes, and with regard to certain other matters, and on this subject keep perfectly quiet? This much I think is tolerably clear—that the Government had not any policy on the subject, that they were not prepared to alter—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If we had no policy on the subject, how could we put it in the Speech?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have just explained why it is not in the Speech. I say it was their duty, if they intended to make a change, to announce it in the Speech. But the hon. gentlemen have been trying to do what, in the fable, the old man did who owned the ass.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We are the man on this side.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They have been trying to please everybody, and the result may be, after all, that they will not please a great many. The Finance Minister has not yet met with all the deputations who were seeking alterations in the tariff. I believe that hon. gentleman has been interviewed on several occasions since this Session opened. He could not tell the House whether there would be changes in the tariff or not, for he could not tell whether any changes would be seriously sought or not; but, having met with A, B, and C, and all the other letters of the alphabet, the hon. gentleman, who is anxious to please those who are dissatisfied with the tariff as it is, will be able, after a while, to come down and tell us what he and his various interviewers have agreed upon. The legislation, instead of being thought out and worked out by this House, as the representatives of the people, will be thought out by those who wish to have the tariff altered to suit their own circumstances, and the hon. gentleman will come down here with a mandate informing us what we are expected to do. What the House is expected to do, is not what the people have generally desired, not what they have promised the people they will perform; but it is what those particular parties who are seeking to amend or manipulate the tariff to suit themselves have determined upon, what they have told the Finance Minister they are ready to accept, and beyond which they are not ready to go. And so, having received his instructions from those irresponsible parties, he comes down to the House with his instructions to the supporters of the Government, and the result is, that the Administration and those who support them are here merely to register those changes which various interested parties from time to time seek to obtain at the hands of this House.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not wish to discuss this question particularly, but one thing strikes me, that, after the announcement made by the First Minister that there are to be tariff changes, and very important ones, it is desirable that the Finance Minister should bring down his budget at a very early day. Trade is sufficiently depressed now; and should the fact go to the country that very great, and, I should judge from the statement of the First Minister, almost radical changes, are to take place in the tariff of the country, business will be almost paralysed, and, therefore, I think it is desirable, in the interest of the country, that those changes should be announced by the Finance Minister at the earliest possible moment. That hon. gentleman knows, as does the First Minister and every business man, that what is most desired by the business men of the country is something like stability in our tariff. These incessant changes, this excessive tinkering with the tariff, is ruinous to many business men, and it is to be regretted that hon. gentlemen opposite, who are never tired of extolling the beauty and perfection of their tariff, should find it necessary to constantly tinker with it, to daub it up in certain places, to put in a new stone here, and pull out another there. It is to be hoped that, when the changes are made this year, the tariff will be, in their estimation, what they have always claimed it to be—perfect in its nature and its structure.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not have spoken, as it is not profitable at this time to debate this question, except for some expressions which have fallen from the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, with regard to the statement of the First Minister. As my hon. friend has amplified and exaggerated that statement, I thought it well to call attention to it. I was not aware that the First Minister stated that very great and very important changes were to be made in the tariff. As I understood him, he said that certain changes would be recommended, and some of them were of an important character; but that is far from stating, as my hon. friend put it, that very great and very sweeping changes were to be made. I did not know that it was possible, in the opinion of the hon. member for Brant, that the trade and business of this country could be any further depressed than it is. According to the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite in the debates that have taken place, it would seem almost impossible that a more depressed state could be induced in the country than is at present the condition of the country, so that my hon. friend need not, from his standpoint, have any very great fears that the moderate announcement made to-day will tend to paralyse the state of business which, according to the hon. gentleman, is already greatly depressed.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Your power for evil is not all gone yet.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend finds to-day a great objection to any attempt being made to better the tariff, and, of course, if anything is done on the recommendation of the Government this year, it will be to make the tariff better and more perfect than it is. My hon. friend has a great horror of attempting to tinker the tariff, and yet almost every day of his life he expresses the opinion in this House that the tariff is very bad, that it is injuring the trade and best interests of this country, and that something ought to be done with it. My hon. friend is not quite consistent. Neither, I think, is my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who spoke about the various processes that preceded the recommendations of changes in the tariff. Why, Sir, I think the only way in which a Government can act is first to put itself in touch with the country, and find out, by the most extensive investigation it can make, what are the wants of the country and the state of its industries; after having done that, it is in a position to make up its mind what it is best to recommend. It is surely not taking anything away from the prerogatives of the most independent members of this House, to give that thorough investigation preceding a thorough consideration, both to precede any changes in the tariff which may be recommended by the Government of the country.

Motion negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for West Hastings has not voted.

Mr. CORBY. I declined voting as an interested party. I refer the hon. gentleman to Room No. 16 of the House of Commons.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I., has voted and was not present when the question was put.

Mr. WELSH. That is right.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Department of Secretary of State—Contingencies $9,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon gentleman explain that increase?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The accounts which are in the hands of the hon. gentleman from the Auditor General's Report, show the necessity for this increase. Last year and the year before the vote was reduced, and last year the vote was exceeded, amounting to $11,000. I have succeeded this year in reducing the amount to the actual expenditure for the year, and I think I could pledge myself that the expenditure will not this year exceed the $2,900 more which are now put in the Estimates, but which are $2,000 less than what was spent last year.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the hon. gentleman explain what the item on page C—68 of the Auditor General's Report for advertising consists of?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is the advertising of passports issued by this Department at a certain rate, and informing people who wish to have passports to apply to the Department of the Secretary of State.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What countries are they needed in?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I could not state the number of countries where they are needed; but we have issued a large number, although not such a large number as would warrant the expenditure of advertising.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman has taken particular care that these advertisements should come before the eyes of the travelling public at large by advertising in the Hull Vallée d'Ottawa, the Ottawa Canada, the Montreal Prix Courant, the Montreal Trait d'Union, the Three Rivers Journal and the Winnipeg Emigrant. It does not strike me that, for instance, the Ottawa Canada is a journal of such wide circulation, and so much read by the travelling public, that the hon. gentleman should have spent $134 to advertise passports in it. I would like the hon. gentleman to explain why he selected these special papers.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I suppose the advertisements were asked for and given, as in every other Department, and as my hon. friend would have given them had he been in my place.

Mr. CASEY. We are not discussing what I would have done, but what the hon. gentleman has done. I want to know from him why he has chosen to advertise a matter of passports, which concerns the travelling public alone, in papers having a purely local circulation?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I suppose other papers put larger advertisements or they might have advertised that before. The advertisements were given to the newspapers when they were asked for, and it happens that this particular advertisement has been given to the papers mentioned.

Mr. CASEY. The necessity was this, that the newspaper which applies for an advertisement gets it, and the Minister does not exercise any discretion as to the usefulness of advertising in one paper.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No. Sometimes I exercise my discretion and refuse.

Mr. McMULLEN. We are losing our population quick enough without advertising passports to send them away. Hon. gentlemen should take steps to keep what we have got and bring in others.

Mr. CASEY. Without wishing to be hypercritical at all, I notice that the amount of travelling expenses last year in this Department came within a few dollars of $1,500, of which the hon. Minister himself spent $379, Mr. L. H. Tache $616, Mr. F. Colson $350, and there are other smaller sums. I do not say that these expenditures are wrong, but I think they are large enough to require explanation.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I must confess that some of these travelling expenses are rather large, but the expenditure has been incurred for the business of the office. My Department is not the same as it was, and a good deal of work has been required in connection with the printing bureau which has rendered necessary a considerable amount of travelling. It may be that a less amount should be required, and I can only say that, unless it is necessary to expend so much, the amount shall be smaller in future.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is another item which I think requires explanation. There is charged for postage in Ottawa $239.40, and for postage in France $12.14. There is also another item which I am surprised to see: cab hire in France for the Hon. J. A. Chapleau, $9.53. I cannot understand why we should pay cab hire not only here but in France.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have been more surprised than my hon. friend to see that last item, but I dare say, during my stay in France on business last year, there may have been something to be transacted by the Department, which was not done by me, but must have been done by a clerk or an officer of the Canadian agency there, who put it to my account. I assure my hon. friend that the whole of my cab hire in France was paid by myself. I am perfectly sure that whatever this was, it was in no way disconnected with the business of the Department or of the Government. I may add that the postage in my Department is very large. I have already stated that I am obliged to be the writer or the scrivener for the whole of the Departments. I write letters on behalf of Her Majesty in this country in every direction, and I am charged with postage for all Departments inside and outside, even for letters sent to foreign officers and foreign Governments. The postage is large, but I am sure that my hon. friend does not mean to say either that we are using postage stamps for our own purposes, or that this was not an expenditure warranted by the business of the Department. I am sorry that there is such a large amount for cab hire for myself, but, as my hon. friends know, I have been for two or three years in not very excellent health. I am sure they will be rejoiced to know that next year I will be able to walk more as a man in good health, and will not require to be driven so much as before.

Mr. McMULLEN. The statement of the hon. gentleman confirms the charge which has often been made from this side, that cabs are often hired by other parties than the Minister, and this statement in regard to the item I referred to shows that this is true, and that these items may be put in without his knowledge and consent and without his knowing anything of the debt. This is a matter which requires the attention of the House, the attention of the Opposition, and the immediate attention of the Government and every member of it. Then, in regard to the postage question, no doubt that postage is handled by the officers of the Department. If the hon. gentleman has an officer who charged $9.53 for cab hire improperly—

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Not improperly.

Mr. McMULLEN. May not a certain quantity of the postage be improperly charged? I find a very peculiar item here: of 75 cents for a bottle of alcohol. It does not say whether that was purchased in France, or in Ottawa, or anywhere else. It is a small item, but perhaps the Minister required it. I think, however, it would be better to have these small amounts brought in at the end of the statement in future without such detail as that.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If my hon. friend had been in my Department, perhaps the amount might have been larger, but I should think that ~~most~~ have been bought in France, for the price is very cheap.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think there is another item which requires some explanation. On page A 9, we find Arthur Arcand, extra clerk, Secretary of State Department, 365 days, $912.50. The same gentleman who is paid that amount for the whole 365 days, also gets $500 for engrossing the Commons Address to Lord Lansdowne.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have already stated that Mr. Arcand is one of the artists in the Department—and he is an artist—who do the engrossing work. He was paid out of contingencies, and one of the reasons for the decrease of $2,000 arises from the fact that we pay him $2 a day on the permanent staff. He does not work less than the necessary hours, and, if he has illuminated an address to one of the Governors of this country, surely the hon. gentleman will not grudge him the small pay he received for what he did for the House of Commons.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I now understand that this gentleman's services are worth $2 a day.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes, at least.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman paid him $1,412.50 for last year.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No; $912.50.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman paid him $2 a day for the whole 365 days, but during a portion of that time he earned $500 extra.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. He might earn $3,000 extra if he did work outside of his office hours, in illuminating. I think that work was done for the House of Commons and not for the Department. I may say, in regard to the three or four men who are employed in that sort of work, that better men, more conscientious men, more economical men, could not be found, and that not an hour is lost in the performance of their duty and not a dollar is paid to them more than is necessary for the performance of that duty. If they choose to work outside at night, it is their business and not ours what others may pay them. My report shows the work the clerks in my Department have been doing during the year, and no reflection or remark can be passed upon those gentlemen without a great deal of injustice.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not wish to pass any remarks that would be unjust to any one, but the Minister will see himself that fixing the salary at $2 per day—I do not know whether that would include 365 days or not—

Mr. McMULLEN.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We were paying $2.50 per day, and now they are appointed as permanent officers with a regular salary.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). These 365 days include Sundays.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Well, he does not ask them to work on Sundays?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No, Sir.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is about $3 that he has as an extra clerk. It will be to the credit of the Secretary of State if he has secured a man worth $3 a day to work for $2.50.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. He gets $2.50 a day, and I must say that he does more work than he is paid for.

Mr. CASEY. In that case, why not pay him according to his work? You are cheating the man.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If my hon. friend was paid $500 to illuminate an address, and if he was paid a salary in proportion to the commissions that are received by hon. gentlemen opposite as Queen's Counsel, he would make $3,000 a year. I may say that Mr. Arcand, Mr. Drouin and Mr. Matton were in the United States, and one of them refused a great deal higher salary than he could have commanded here.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How long was it after the Address was passed by the House of Commons, before it was, presented to Lord Lansdowne?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not know; that is not my business. I answer for my Department, and, I suppose, that is enough. I do not pay the money myself.

Mr. CASEY. It is an extraordinary fact that the Civil Service employes of this House should be so much more patriotic than the members of the Government. Men who will refuse higher salaries in the United States to work for lower salaries here, are scarce in the country, and I congratulate the Secretary of State upon having some of them in his Department. I am not finding any fault with Mr. Arcand at all, nor do I think that my hon. friend from Brant is finding fault with him for taking this money. But we want to understand how it was that there were 365 days in the year in the Secretary of State's Department, and $912 was paid by the Department, including Sundays. Being paid for Sundays, on which no man may work, may explain it. There is an item for extra clerks and messengers which will be found on page C 22. The details amount to $5,297. I think this amount is too much to be paid out in contingencies. I have no doubt that the Minister has been long enough in his Department to be able to form a good idea, from year to year, how many of these people are wanted. I think we ought to take a special vote for extra clerks and messengers, instead of paying them out of contingencies. I have no doubt that he can explain this item all right. Whether he has paid these men for 365 days, I cannot say.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I agree with my hon. friend. When the hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, it was the custom to keep what were called supernumerary or temporary clerks employed from year to year, and after a number of years they were put upon the permanent staff. I think my hon. friend will find that this year a very good step has been taken in this direction. I have pointed out that the expenses for contingencies last year were $11,000, and I do not think my contingencies this year will reach more than the amount that I have asked for. I agree with my hon. friend that when an officer is put upon the permanent list he should no longer be charged to contingencies. I have tried to do so, and I am going to do so, as far as my Department is concerned.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Will the Secretary of State please explain who fixed the price for the engraving of this Address?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I say he was not paid from my Department. My Department had nothing to do with it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I would like to know who did it?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When the proper Department is under discussion my hon. friend will repeat his question.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I would like information with regard to postage. As I understood the other day when the Government explained this matter, it is only the foreign postage that is charged to the several Departments. As I understood the Secretary of State to say to-day, he is charged with postage for letters sent.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No; I pay the correspondence for the whole Dominion.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Well, in the Dominion?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Outside the Dominion, also.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It is only the postage outside the Dominion, not postage inside the Dominion.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. In the Dominion we do not have to pay.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I wish to have an explanation with regard to this, because the Finance Minister gave us information the other day to the effect that each Department has the right to frank their own letters. Well, if the Secretary of State's Department has a right to frank all letters that circulate in the Dominion, certainly the business of his Department must pertain more particularly to the Dominion of Canada than to foreign countries. If it is only the foreign postage which is charged to his Department, then I think this is a very large amount.

Mr. HAGGART. His Department is charged with the postage to Great Britain and the United States, and other foreign countries. It is not in the Dominion.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What the hon. gentleman stated to the House led us to believe it was the postage for the Dominion.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No; you would have a great deal larger amount than that. All the business and exchanges of documents between the Dominion Government and the High Commissioner amounts to a large item—I do not speak for the House of Commons—all this is sent to my Department—and we have to pay postage on it. I have already protested against that. I say that I have to pay postage on business that does not belong to my Department. I have contended that the correspondence with the High Commissioner should be charged to the President of the Council. There is other correspondence, of which I will give an example. The result of the explorations of the Challenger has been presented to two or three universities in Europe, two or three in England, and one was presented to the Library, and we are obliged to post them from our Department. Of course, we cannot object to pay a few cents for postage.

Mr. CASEY. I see the hon. Minister has had a good deal of binding done during the year. This item of 312 volumes—would he be able to tell us what they were for?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I suppose that it will be in the next account.

Mr. CASEY. I see that 312 volumes were bound at a cost of $270.71. I did not know that there was a library in connection with the hon. gentleman's Department.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If the hon. gentleman will come to my office he can consult the authorities, for there is a very good reference library, which did not exist when I took office. That library will be there when my hon. friend takes the position as head of the Department.

Mr. CASEY. Of course I shall be gratified to find that library in existence. It seems, however, to be a wrong principle that each Department should establish a supplementary library. There is a general library here, and reference books can be had by any of the Departments on sending a messenger over. The principle of forming supplementary libraries for each of the Departments is certainly one that should not be encouraged.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Will the Minister give some explanation in regard to advertising the statutes?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We are obliged to advertise the statutes. When the Bill that was passed two years ago came into force we were obliged to advertise books for sale, instead of giving them away. We have advertised the sale of statutes pretty largely, and the returns are encouraging, compared with previous years.

Mr. LANDERKIN. A few years ago the statutes were supplied to magistrates. Many of the magistrates have complained recently to me that they have not been furnished with copies of the statutes, but only with portions that refer to criminal law. No less than $758.58 have been expended in advertising the sale of statutes, and if these had been given to the magistrates, the expenditure would have been a more judicious one.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It would have cost twenty times the amount, and produce no greater results.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There would have been very little additional outlay, and probably the administration of justice would have been more efficiently carried out.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The magistrates receive not only the criminal laws, but the revision, and every public Act which concerns the administration of justice.

Mr. LANDERKIN. But the magistrates complain that the statutes they receive are in pamphlet form, whereas formerly they received the statutes in bound form. It is impossible to preserve those now received by them, and they are frequently obliged to send here and there to get other copies in order to adjudicate upon cases. I contend that it would be much better to expend money in giving magistrates the statutes in proper form, than in advertising in newspapers that the Government have a number of the statutes on hand for sale.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When the magistrates have received a certain number of pamphlets they might send notice of having such a collection, and possibly I might ask a vote of the House to have them bound.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. In advertising statutes for sale, it must be remembered that the hon. gentleman has expended more for advertising the statutes than he has received from the sale of copies. The sales amounted to $619.27, while the expenses for advertising reached $757.57, or an excess of $136.30. I do not think business men would conduct business in that way.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They always begin in that way; they spend money in advertising first, and make money afterwards.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. If they did so, they would lose money continuously. The Secretary of State has undoubtedly used bad judgment in this matter. Moreover, the advertisements with respect to the statutes are confined to a very limited district. The hon. gentleman evidently imagines that people residing outside the Ottawa valley do not require the statutes for their guidance. The Secretary of State has evidently shown too much good nature in dealing with newspapers. The hon. gentleman admits that he gave the advertisements to those who came to solicit them, but he should have had backbone enough to refuse them when he was satisfied that it was not in the public interest that money should be expended in that way. I call the Minister's attention to this subject as it cannot be justified, and I fancy the hon. gentleman will not attempt to justify it.

Mr. CASEY. There is a remarkable connection between the manner in which advertisements are given out by the Secretary of State's Department and by the Queen's Printer. The names of the Vallée d'Ottawa of Hull, Montreal Prix Courant, Montreal Traité d'Union, Three Rivers Journal, appear in both accounts. I notice that scarcely an English paper, except the Winnipeg Emigrant, appears in the list of the Secretary of State's Department. In advertising the sale of statutes we find only United Canada, the Ottawa Journal, and the Waterloo Journal as English newspapers, and the Minister surely should exercise some discretion in giving out advertisements. If they are meant to be of any use, they should be given to papers that are read. In the list there are only two or three papers which English-speaking citizens are able to read. As for the others, the papers are of small circulation and influence even for French papers. The hon. gentleman must give some justification of the way in which he has spent this considerable sum on advertising, beyond that of first come first served.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If the remark had been made by one of the thirteen of the party of Equal Rights, I could have understood it, but I am surprised it should have come from the hon.

Mr. LANDERKIN.

gentleman. These advertisements are small and the larger ones are kept for other newspapers. I know this has not, however, been done with a view to make any discrimination, and I am sure there has been no favoritism in the direction in which the hon. gentleman appears to insinuate.

Mr. CASEY. If there has been no favoritism, it is a very remarkable coincidence that nearly all the papers receiving advertising should be papers in the hon. gentleman's own language, of which the bulk of the people of Ontario are ignorant. I have no fault to find with advertising in French newspapers. I believe the use of the two languages is absolutely necessary, and for that reason these advertisements should be published in English as well as in French.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) and the Secretary of State are viewing this question from wholly different standpoints. The hon. member for Elgin is regarding the question purely from a utilitarian standpoint, as to what the public are to gain by the publication of these advertisements. That is not the point from which the Secretary of State considers the question. He is trying to hold the balance evenly between various applicants for charity. Now, the hon. gentleman states that small papers receive small advertisements, for which small sums are paid, but papers of more influence and wider circulation receive advertisements of greater value; and so, the more influential the paper and the greater the circulation, the greater the value of the advertisements received. That might be a very charitable and magnanimous thing on the part of the Minister to do, but then there is the further consideration of the advantage that the public ought to derive. It does seem to me that it would be well worth the Minister's serious consideration to look at the question from the standpoint put forward by my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey), and see what the public are to gain by this advertising in newspapers.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to ask the Secretary of State what need there is to advertise the sale of the statutes? I do not think there is a lawyer, magistrate or any other person in the Dominion who, if he wants a Dominion statute, does not know that they emanate from the Government at Ottawa and that they can be obtained here.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There is this difference: Every one was under the impression that the statutes were given away for nothing, and we have advertised so as to disabuse their minds of that impression and to let them know that they are to be paid for.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You might as well give the statutes for nothing as to fritter away the value of them.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That question I have answered.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would ask the Secretary of State what is the difference financially between the position of giving the statutes for nothing and advertising them for sale at a loss? If he had given the statutes for nothing to all who applied for them, the Government would be about $137 in pocket. It is a ridiculous exhibition to advertise statutes for sale and pay $137 more for advertising than is received for the sale. The Minister has sacrificed more by advertising than if he gave the statutes away for nothing.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. And he has only informed the public partially, because the great mass of the people of the Dominion must be still laboring under the impression that the statutes are to be had for nothing. It is only those who reside in the vicinity of Ottawa, and Three Rivers, and Montreal, who know that the statutes are charged for. It will, therefore, be necessary for the Secretary of State to inform the other portions of the Dominion, by advertisement, that the statutes are for sale, and we may have a duplicate account for this next year. I think the Secretary of State had better own up that he made a mistake when he inserted these advertisements and showed the partiality which he did. The Secretary of State says it is a small matter; but I find that Le Canada, of Ottawa, received $181.72 for advertising those statutes and $134.80 for advertising "passports." Those are not very trifling items for those two small advertisements. I think the Secretary of State will have to give some better excuse for this wasteful expenditure of public money.

Mr. CASEY. I must again call the attention of the Minister to the very large item of $5,274 for extra clerks and messengers in the Queen's Printer's Department. I hope the Minister will be able to give me the same assurance in regard to this as he did in regard to the other items—that he is going to put such men as are necessary on the permanent staff, and not hire them out of contingencies.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. A number of these officers have been put on the permanent staff during the year. On account of the peculiar circumstances of the printing office a great deal of extra work which had to be done in the past will be done in the regular course of the Department when completely established.

Mr. CASEY. The next item is one which requires a little more explanation. It reads: Carter and horse, J. Donovan, $1,200. The idea of paying a carter $100 a month seems to be extraordinary, and, unless the Minister explains it on the ground of skilled labor, I do not see how it can be justified. I think it would be cheaper to buy a horse and rig and hire a carter.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If I thought it would be cheaper I would recommend it, but I think it is not. This is the man who has charge of the transfer of blue-books and stationery, &c., from one Department to another, and I think the service is well and properly done, and done with great economy.

Mr. CASEY. That is the man who brings the blue-books around?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes, I believe so.

Mr. CASEY. That is no explanation as to the amount of this charge. He uses a one-horse rig, for I am quite familiar with its appearance, and the idea of paying a man $100 a month for such a service as that is something outrageous.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman is speaking of something he does not know, and I do not say that to be unpleasant to my hon. friend. I can say that the work to be done is very laborious. This man has a horse, and another man is along with him doing the work. If the hon. gentleman can get me a man to do the work as well at the same or a lower price I will give him a job.

Mr. CASEY. If a man goes along with him he must be paid extra, for there is only a charge for one man here.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the Minister please explain the item of $245.45 for advertising the Canada Gazette.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I cannot say exactly, but I think it is in connection with the advertising of those making applications to Parliament. While on my feet I may say that this year, for the first time, the Canada Gazette has yielded a surplus instead of a deficit.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is it not a fact that a calculation was made some time ago with regard to the first six months' work done by the Printing Bureau under Government supervision, as compared with a similar period under the contractors, that that statement was intended for the information of this House, and that being found to tell against the Government supervision it has been withheld?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend must know that I am not in the habit of concealing anything, even if it is something which may necessitate an improvement. The information of which my hon. friend speaks I have asked for, and before the Session is over I will present to Parliament a comparative statement of what we have paid before, what we are paying now, and what we shall have to pay if the system is continued. I do not know whether the statement has been sent to me or not, but if it has been it will not be withheld from the House; and if it should be withheld I know that the first man who would look for it is my hon. friend.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I merely asked whether it was correct that such a statement was prepared, and kept back because it was unfavorable to the Government?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No.

Contingencies—Department of Public Works..... $7,000

Mr. CASEY. The personal expenses of Mr. Roy are such as to require explanation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My travelling expenses, as the hon. gentleman sees, are only $51. When I travel I always take my private secretary, Mr. Roy, with me, for when I am absent from my Department for weeks together, my correspondence follows me, and I transact the business with my private secretary during my absence. Of course, I do not charge for my travelling expenses, unless I am travelling in the public service. While on this subject, I may refer to the charge of $326 for postage. When I am absent from Ottawa I frank the letters I send away, and the post office which receives them charges the postage against my Department, because, according to the law, I understand the franking privilege is limited to the Capital.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman's own travelling expenses, considering the amount of work he has to do and the necessity he is under of visiting various parts of the country, certainly stand in a highly favorable contrast with most of the items of that sort, and are as low as anybody could reasonably expect them to be. I must here, however, again protest against the formation of a departmental reading room, as shown in the cost of the newspapers. I also notice a charge of $2,165 for stationery, which, I think, is so large that it should be estimated for especially, and apart from contingencies.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The quantity of stationery, the hon. gentleman will see, must vary according to the work to be done and the number of persons employed. Besides, according to the Order in Council regulating this matter, the stationery is supplied only on requisition from each Department, and the requisition is sent by the Deputy Minister in such a way as to limit the quantity supplied.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Does the private secretary sometimes travel without the Minister?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. How does the hon. Minister account for the expenditure of $51 for himself for travelling expenses, while his secretary has spent $611.90? If the secretary only went with the Minister and made no independent trips, how does it come that his expenses are so heavy?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It may appear so by the figures, but I only charge to the Government such expenses as I incur in the public service. If I go, however, travelling for recreation, which I require as well as any other man, of course I bring my private secretary with me and my correspondence follows me; and my private secretary must be paid, of course, his travelling expenses.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is this system carried out by the other Ministers of the Crown? Are they as economical as the hon. gentleman?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not know what are the habits of my colleagues. I am speaking for myself.

Mr. WILSON. Will the hon. gentleman inform me whether, in the item for departmental contingencies, the expenses of the survey of Kettle Bridge canal is included? I moved for a return, but have been unable to get it up to the present. Has any provision been made, and, if so, what amount to defray the expenses of that survey?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not included in this, and the return will come down very soon.

Mr. ELLIS. The hon. Minister has not stated whether there is any hope of these large subscriptions to newspapers being reduced.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The list of newspapers is now being looked into, in my Department, with a view of reducing that item considerably. I could not do it before, having had too much to do, but gave orders to have it done as soon as possible.

Mr. CASEY. I cannot avoid urging upon the Government the suggestion I made the other day—that, instead of there being a departmental reading room for each Department, there should be a central Press Bureau, where all the papers would be taken, and where a clerk would look over them and cut out and send to each Department the items concerning it. That would save the subscription of twelve sets of newspapers, and ensure better information for the Departments than is obtained under the present system.

Mr. CASEY.

Contingencies—Post Office Department..... $35,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This is an increase of $10,000 over the Estimates last year.

Mr. HAGGART. It is, but it is a decrease in the expenditure. Last year we estimated too low, and the expenditure was $40,372. The amount now asked is $5,000 less than that. I intend, I suppose, to expend just as much on my contingencies this year as last, less the amount of clerks taken from the non-permanent list and put on the permanent list.

Mr. CASEY. There are two ways of fixing these accounts when the expenditure goes beyond the estimate. One is to reduce the expenditure, and the other is to increase the estimates. My hon. friend has chosen the latter plan, and he may be able to keep within these $35,000, but this is the largest amount asked by any Department for contingencies, and it is too large an amount to be left at the disposal of any Minister. No doubt the hon. gentleman could show exactly how last year's vote was spent, and very possibly would show it was justifiably spent, but $44,000 is more than should be left at the disposal of any Minister, and when the contingencies of an office amount to that sum they should be estimated for as separate items. If we look through the accounts of this Department for last year, we see the item of $12,312 for extra clerks and messengers. The hon. gentleman has led us to expect that a large amount of that will be knocked off by making some of the clerks permanent. Next year I hope this item will have almost disappeared, because it is one that should not exist. I find again nearly $11,000 under the head of stationery and office printing and binding. That is too large a sum to be at loose ends in the Department of any Minister. Here is an amount for binding of $2,063. What could the hon. Minister of this Department have wanted with that $2,000 of binding out of contingencies, as there is a provision in the regular Estimates for binding the reports of these Departments.

Mr. HAGGART. Where is this provision?

Mr. CASEY. On page C 72 of the Auditor General's Report. The very last item there is a charge for binding of $2,063.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman asked why it is I paid $2,063 for binding when there was a provision in the Estimates of last year for binding besides this. Where is that provision?

Mr. CASEY. There is a provision for publishing the reports of each Department which is not to be paid out of contingencies.

Mr. HAGGART. Where is that provision?

Mr. CASEY. The item should be charged as an item of binding, and not in contingencies. It is easy to know the number of reports that require binding.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman may be right, but this is the way it has always been done.

Mr. CASEY. But the hon. gentleman is a new broom and ought to sweep clean.

Mr. McMULLEN. I find on page C 47 for calculating interest, $1,848.11. I suppose this is in connection with the contingencies in the Post Office savings banks? I would just draw attention to the salaries paid to some of those officers. For instance, Mr. Walter Rowan is paid twelve months' salary as postmaster, $1,200, and for computing interest he is paid $32.62 besides. There is Richard Shaw, who receives for his twelve months' salary as postmaster, $1,400, and for computing interest, $28.21. There is J. R. Smith, salary as postmaster, $1,400, and in addition to that for computing interest, he receives $47.55. I would like to ask upon what principle this computation of interest is paid for, and how it is that postmasters who are engaged in the employment of this Dominion, and are receiving the respectable salaries of $1,200 and $1,400 each, receive this amount in addition for computing the interest on deposit receipts. I do not understand why men who are paid such liberal salaries are allowed to charge the country for the work of a few moments in computing the interest of these receipts.

Mr. HAGGART. I explained this matter last year. This work requires a certain amount of intelligence and aptitude in making the calculation, which are wanted at stated times, and it has been found that the better plan is to employ those who are engaged in that work generally and to keep them for longer hours for this particular purpose. It is the form which, I think, is adopted in England; it is the form which is adopted in the United States. These men are conversant with the books and the accounts with which they have to deal, and it has been found practically that they are the parties who alone would be capable of doing this work. There was a proposition to put an amount in the Estimates to pay for this work being done, but it was found that the only practicable way was to employ these parties who understand the books to do this work during extra hours.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are these parties who have so much intelligence and knowledge of the work, those who are named here as postmasters?

Mr. HAGGART. No; these are parties who are employed in the inside service—in the Savings Bank Department.

Mr. CASEY. The Postmaster General seemed to misunderstand me in regard to what I said as to the estimates for printing and binding. At page 30 of the Estimates, under the head of Legislation, there is an item for binding newspapers, &c., $2,000. Then there is another item for printing, binding and distributing the laws, $1,000 (which was $6,000 last year). There is another item for printing, printing paper and book-binding, of $75,000.

Mr. HAGGART. That is for the House of Commons.

Mr. CASEY. This, I think, includes the issuing of departmental reports, because there is no book-binding done in any other shape, that I am aware of, except the binding of the reports.

Contingencies—Department of Agriculture $20,000

Mr. CASEY. Why is there such an amount charged for postage in this Department?

Mr. CARLING. It is on account of the large amount of literature sent to the old country.

Mr. McMULLEN. In reference to Mr. George Johnson, who is down for twelve months' salary, $2,400, I would ask if that gentleman is a permanent officer?

Mr. CARLING. He is now a permanent officer, but last year he was paid out of contingencies.

Contingencies—Department of Marine, $9,000

Mr. CASEY. Who are all these gentlemen who had so much allowed for their travelling expenses last year?

Mr. TUPPER. There was Captain McElhinney, who was allowed for bringing out the Government steamer. Then there were Mr. Chipman's moving expenses from England to Ottawa; and Mr. Anderson, who is the engineer of the Department—his expenses have been charged to contingencies instead of to the works on which he has been engaged.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that C. C. Chipman is down for a large amount.

Mr. TUPPER. That is in consequence of his removal from the High Commissioner's Office in London to Canada. There are vouchers for all the expenditures.

Mr. CASEY. I enter the same protest here as I did in regard to the Department of Printing and Stationery. I think it ought to be estimated for separately.

Contingencies—Department of Fisheries $3,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I observe that it is the custom to pay for 365 days in the year in the Department of the Secretary of State, and in the Department of Fisheries, and at Rideau Hall. I should like to know if that is a confirmed principle in all the Departments, that all men, when they are hired by the day are paid for every day, including Sundays?

Mr. TUPPER. Extra clerks are paid for every day, including Sundays.

Committee rose; and, it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Care of and cleaning Departmental Buildings $20,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What is included in this item?

Mr. FOSTER. The caring and cleaning of the departmental buildings. The details are to be found in the Auditor General's Report, C 74.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think that you will find that the cleaning and repairing of these buildings are already taken under the heading of departmental buildings, and that if that be the case you ought not to have such a large item as this. We find charwomen paid for cleaning, washing, &c.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that this does not take place in any of the Departments, with the exception of two or three persons in one Department, I think. That Department, if I mistake not, is the Privy Council, in which there are a few women whose services have been paid for by that Department, and that arrangement has not been disturbed. They are old servants who have been employed for a considerable time, and always paid in that way.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Would the Minister explain why it is that in giving the number of days there are 365 counted, for which employes are paid? Do these people work Sundays and Saturdays all the year round? You will notice that on page 74 C, and further down, you will find some credited with 366 days. Has the Government added another day to the year?

Mr. FOSTER. That may be for great merit.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What is the rule with regard to employes? Are they allowed for Sundays and Saturdays too?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that there are two classes; there is the first, under the heading of laborers, those are persons who are employed by the year; and the others are paid by the year, the number of days being stated. How the 366 days apply in two cases, I do not quite know, unless there may have been something running over from another year.

Mr. CARLING. Leap year.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Would it not be better just to charge for working days—312?

Mr. FOSTER. These laborers are employed every day. They have to keep the fires going.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that in all the Departments all the hands are paid for 365 days' work.

Mr. FOSTER. In this Department?

Mr. McMULLEN. Throughout the several Departments. I notice here, that the Finance Minister makes an exception in case of the women; they are paid for only 312 days. Can he explain how it is that women are not paid for Sundays, while men are?

Mr. FOSTER. Because the women do not work on Sunday.

Mr. McMULLEN. Neither do the men work on Sunday.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, they do.

Mr. McMULLEN. They do not at Rideau Hall. Gardeners do not work on Sunday, I hope.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not on that item now.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to remind the Minister that when we come to that item we will want explanations about it.

Printing Bureau—Cleaning, &c..... $3,300

Mr. INNES. This is a large item for that purpose, and I think we ought to have some explanation from the Secretary of State.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a new item, because the Printing Bureau is a new establishment. It was not included under the general head for cleaning, and, I believe, for this reason: that being a printing bureau, and having all the paraphernalia which is necessary to a printing bureau, it was thought best to have persons there to see after its cleaning and its care, who are kept permanently, and they are in some way under the supervision of the Bureau, while all these others are under the superintendence of Mr. Conroy, who is paid for that purpose. Probably some one who is acquainted with the management of a printing office on a large scale would understand why that was necessary. Anyway, it has not been estimated for under the heading of Departments generally, but it is estimated for by itself. I am not sure whether that includes the caretaker or not.

Mr. INNES. Of course, we know that this is a separate Department, but it is quite a new establishment, and it seems to me that this is a very large amount indeed to charge for cleaning it. There are only two or three large apartments. I cannot understand why so much money should be required for cleaning a new establishment where everything is supposed to be in spick-and-span order.

Mr. FOSTER. It is for cleaning, &c. That may include some caretaking.

Mr. INNES. That would come under the Department of the Queen's Printer and Controller of Stationery. There are two messengers and a caretaker. That cannot be included in the cleaning of the establishment.

Mr. FOSTER. I will make a note of that, and bring down the information.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It seems absurd to vote $3,300 to take care of that new building and to keep it clean. Any one who has been in the building knows that it is a splendid building for the purpose, and there can be nothing required in the way of cleaning it except sweeping. It is possible that cleaning means caring for the machinery.

Mr. FOSTER. Probably it does. I know there is some good explanation for it, because it passed under review at the time we considered the estimates, and it was considered to be a fair item to put in.

Administration of Justice..... $66,090

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. An increase of $1,500 is asked on account of the vote of last year being insufficient.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). According to the Auditor General's Report, the Minister did not expend the whole appropriation by $6,987. I cannot, therefore, understand why an increased amount is required.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The amount was expended last year and a small sum over.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). With regard to travelling expenses of judges in Manitoba: do we require to pay as large a sum for travelling expenses now, when there are railroads through many parts of the country?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. At that time the Supreme Court of the North-West Territories was not established. We had stipendiary magistrates, and they were allowed a round sum of $1,000 each for travelling expenses. Since that time we have paid the actual moving expenses, and a per diem allowance besides.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Only a little over $2,000 were expended last year, and yet the Minister is asking for over $4,000 this year.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The sum depends on the amount of business to be done each year. We have been accustomed to take a vote of $4,000, which is always sufficient and sometimes more than sufficient, and last year we had about $1,000 over. Still, I would prefer to take the usual vote. The scale of payment for travelling expenses is fixed, but the total amount expended, of course, depends on the amount of business to be done at the various points at which the judges hold courts.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to the item of $9,000 for judges in British Columbia, I notice there is an increase of $3,000.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This increase is in consequence of the appointment of the county court judges authorised last Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the Minister compute the white population of British Columbia to be? It really appears to me that the expenditure for judges in British Columbia exceeds reasonable bounds. We have five principal judges and four county court judges for a Province whose population, at the latest date of which we have authentic statements, did not exceed 55,000.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. 60,000, I think.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is out of all proportion to the number in other Provinces. Manitoba, with twice the white population, has eight judges instead of nine, and I need not say that the number compares very disadvantageously with that of the larger Provinces, where, however, the population is gathered more closely together. We have allowed this matter to be fairly run into the ground, and I cannot see why nine judges should be required for so small a population as that of British Columbia. I am well aware that the judges have to travel great distances.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman has stated the best reason that can be given, and that is, the great distances in that country. The figures were before me when I proposed last Session to take authority for the appointment of county court judges. It is true, as the hon. gentleman says, that the staff is much larger in proportion to the population, and that the cost of the administration of justice is much larger proportionately than that of any of the other Provinces. Seven or eight years ago the Provincial Legislature passed an Act providing for the establishment of county courts, and at that time, from negotiations carried on between the two Governments, it was considered sufficient, to meet the views of the Province for the time being, that an additional judge should be appointed to the Supreme Court, and the positions of county court judges remained unfilled. That was done, but, in consequence of the growth of the various settlements and to secure vigorous administration of justice, the Provincial Government has continuously pressed the appointment of county court judges. In the Act of last Session we did not make provision for the appointment of county court judges in all the courts established by the Provincial statute. We made provision for three, I think, and, as a result of the improved communication in the country and of localising the judiciary, the travelling expenses of the judges are from 50 to 60 per cent. less than they were six or seven years ago.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In addition to those nine gentlemen to whom we are paying in British Columbia $40,000 a year, pensions are paid to five stipendiary magistrates, or county court judges, who were retired at the time of the incorporation of British Columbia into the Dominion, and they receive pensions amounting to $8,000 or $9,000. It was understood at the time the pensions were given, that if it should be found necessary again to employ county court judges, their services would be utilised, if they were proper persons to serve, as they were represented to be. None of them have been re-employed by the Government; so that, as a result, we have four county judges on full pay with allowances, and we have also these stipendiary or county court judges who were superannuated a few years ago.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Those gentlemen on the superannuation list were, as the hon. gentleman will remember, appointees of the Crown when the Province was a separate colony. It was under the arrangement with the home Government at the time of Union that we provided pensions for them. Not one of them has the qualification for a county court judge. They were really stipendiary magistrates and not county judges, and not one of them was a lawyer, I believe. I think one or two are settled in the Province, but they are not lawyers.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Minister mean to conclude that the British Government, a Government which is so particular to appoint efficient officers, especially on the judiciary, appointed men who were really unfit to be re-appointed, now that we required them? It was with the understanding that they were to be re-appointed, if thought desirable, that pensions were granted them.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have not said that.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is the only inference that can be drawn from the hon. gentleman's remarks.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They really held different offices, and were not properly county court judges, although they may appear so on the superannuation list. They were, in fact, police magistrates.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think these parties were gold commissioners and stipendiary magistrates prior to the Union. Their duties were under the control of the Local Legislature, at all events so far as they were gold commissioners; and, if I remember aright, it was provided at the time of the Union that their pensions would fall on the Treasury here, and not on the Provincial Treasury.

Mr. MITCHELL. They had the power to determine in civil matters, which is one of the powers of the county court judges.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Gold Commissioners Act was passed after the Union, I think. I remember that it formed the subject of correspondence as to its being ultra vires. I think at the time of the Union they were not gold commissioners.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is one of the bad bargains we got from British Columbia. We have had a good many of them and among others we can refer to Mr. Trutch.

Mr. FOSTER. But we have large profits.

Four Official Arbitrators, at $1,000 each. $4,000

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That item was formerly in the Estimates under Public Works. The arbitrators are not arbitrators properly so called, but are referees of the Exchequer Court, and it has been considered proper to transfer the vote to the Department of Justice. This vote will be dropped under Public Works this year. It is for the same salaries as last year and the same parties.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is it not a fact that the duties of the arbitrators since the establishment of the Exchequer Court are now nearly all discharged by one man. I see by reference to the Auditor General's Report, that one of the arbitrators received $1,365.49 last year for travelling expenses, out of a total vote of $1,500. If he consumed nearly all the vote for travelling expenses he must have discharged nearly all the duties.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The duties are not all discharged by one person. The item which appears there is, I presume, an item for only one Department, probably Railways or Public Works. The referees are Mr. Cowan, Mr. Crompton, Mr. Muma and Mr. Simard, and all of them have been employed more or less. Mr. Cowan is very aged, Mr. Simard has been somewhat unwell, and Mr. Crompton has a good deal of work and so has Mr. Muma. Besides the duties of these gentlemen as referees of the court, they usually assist as referees for the purpose of investigating claims of the Government before they are litigated. In some cases, instead of their expenses being charged to the Arbitrations and Awards, they are charged to the work in respect to which their expenses have been incurred; and in other instances, I believe, they have been paid out of the contingencies of the court.

Mr. INNES. Mr. Cowan is a very old man. Is he able to travel at all?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I see there is an item here for him, and I suppose he does. I know he has been discharging his duties at the city of Ottawa within the last twelve months.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Does this $1,500 in the next item include all the travelling expenses of the arbitrators?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. As far as I know it is expected to include all. There has been a good deal of work last year in connection with the Cape Breton Railway, and that, of course, will cease now. I think the $1,500 will probably include all.

Supreme Court of Canada—Librarian... $1,000

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That item for a librarian is a new item. The members of the House who are accustomed to attend the library of the court, are no doubt aware, that up to the present time the library has been in charge of a caretaker merely, who has received $500 or $600 a year. I need not explain to them, at any rate, that the library is becoming a very large and valuable one, and for its safety, as well as for the convenience of those who resort to it from time to time, an efficient librarian should be provided, capable not only of taking care of the books, but of attending to their classification and arrangement. The vote is a new one, but I think it is a necessary one.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Is Mr. Ternent to be the librarian?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I may say that among the members of the bar who attend the Supreme Court, I think there is but one opinion as to the manner in which Mr. Ternent discharges his duties. He has kept the books in very good order, he is exceedingly attentive, and to place him under another person, after he has attended the library so long, would be scarcely fair. I think he has been there ever since the beginning of the court.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He was appointed about 1879.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I know that ever since I have been attending the Supreme Court he has been there, and it seems rather hard that he should now be placed in an inferior position, after having acted so long to the satisfaction of the members of the bar and of all others who are in the habit of attending the court. I quite agree with the hon. Minister of Justice that the library is a very valuable one, but its quarters are very inconvenient. A portion of the books are in one room, where the lawyers prepare their briefs, another portion is in another room, marked private, and reserved for the use of the judges, and another portion is in the extreme opposite end of the building. It seems to me that something ought to be done to have the books put together where they would be convenient of access to the professional gentlemen who attend the court.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the accommodations for the library are very bad indeed. Last Session I asked the Minister of Public Works to take a vote, which he did, for making an addition to the building, so that new chambers could be provided for the judges, and the rooms now occupied by them could be turned into one and used for a library.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman has not assigned any reason why Mr. Ternent should be superseded. I think he is a very competent librarian. I do not think it would be possible to go and enquire for a work, whether a text book or a report, which he could not at once put his hand upon. I do not suppose it has ever fallen to his lot to look after the selection and purchase of the reports; I do not know on whom that devolves.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The registrar.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then, as long as Mr. Ternent is fit for the public service, I do not think a more efficient officer could be had as caretaker and librarian.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am very glad to hear that that is the opinion of my hon. friends opposite. When I said that it was not intended that he should be the librarian, I did not mean to say that he should be superseded and dismissed; on the contrary, a better provision is made for him in the next item than has been made in previous years, and if, on an examination of the whole subject, Mr. Ternent is considered to be as efficient as my hon. friends suppose him to be, this vote will not be used at all. My impression, and the information I have received, though I must admit it is perhaps inadequate in consequence of my going there so little, is that he is not well adapted to be a librarian. I should be glad to be corrected in that respect if I am in error, and this $1,000 would be saved; but it has been represented that he is not sufficiently educated, and has not had the training, especially in law books, necessary to make him an efficient librarian for so large a library.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) My experience has been that Mr. Ternent, for many years back, has discharged the duties of his position with assiduity and intelligence, and has paid very great attention to the wants of those who have used the library. He has been found there at all times, has been courteous and kind in his demeanor, and has a perfect run of the books and can, at any moment, find any that are called for; and the books are kept in capital order. My experience, as well as that of those with whom I have conversed, is that he has in every way discharged his duties as to fairly earn any promotion or increase of salary which the Government should determine upon. I cannot see what necessity there can be for appointing an additional librarian, for I have never met any one who would deny Mr. Ternent's ability to discharge the duties in any way. He is not only a caretaker, but he is an intelligent man, pretty well read, and capable of using his pen; and, taking him all in all, I think he deserves an increase in his salary and the appointment of librarian, if that is to follow.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. What my hon. friends opposite say with regard to the appointment is entitled to the greatest possible respect, and in view of that I will drop this vote of $1,000.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I am very glad of that. I will say another thing: that he looks very sharply after us to see that we return the books. He deserves a great deal of credit for that.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The vote of $700 for the caretaker of the library has been heretofore paid, to the extent of $500, out of the contingencies of the court; but it is a permanent charge, as we must have such an officer. It is an increase of $200.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Very well deserved.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is partly accountable by his having to attend, for the convenience of the bar, when the Supreme Court is sitting.

Printing, binding and distributing Supreme Court Reports..... $2,000

Mr. MITCHELL. To whom are these reports distributed?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. To the Supreme Court judges. I think that is the only distribution made of them. All the rest are for sale.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to draw attention to the delay in publishing these reports. I never could understand why they are so far behind time.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There has been heretofore a great deal of delay, but I was under the impression that in that respect there was some improvement.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) A little.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have spoken to the reporters repeatedly about it, and every Session I have had a report in detail of the number of cases, and the reasons for delay in every case. It so happens that the information was never called for; and if my hon. friend will remind me of this later, I will see that he is furnished with a report. The reason given last Session was, that they had been very much delayed by the printer.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is it the intention of the Government to have these printed in the Government Printing Bureau?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is to be hoped that the new type will be better than the old.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I understand steps will be taken to make the necessary additions to the library.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

For the purchase of Law Reports and Text Books for the Supreme Court Library..... $2,500

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I explained to the House last Session the circumstances under which that vote was asked. The American reports were largely behind, and when I asked the House last Session for a vote I gave the House to understand I would ask the vote this year also, in order to obtain the American report.

Exchequer Court—3rd class clerk..... $800

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is an increase of $200. I would explain to the Committee that the organisation of the staff of the Exchequer Court was purely tentative the year before last. We knew nothing of the amount of business which would require to be transacted there or the grade of clerks that would be required. I took the ordinary vote for a third class clerk and a second class clerk, but I think that the amount of business done justifies my request that the vote shall be increased. The officers are the registrar, who receives $2,000 a year, and a second class clerk at $1,150. This clerk does a considerable portion of the duties of the registrar when he is absent as referee, as he frequently is, in taking evidence, and besides that, he occasionally acts as registrar to the judge on circuit and does work as a stenographer as well, and in that way undoubtedly saves a very large proportion of a salary. The duties devolving upon the third class clerks are decidedly laborious, and for an active, intelligent and suitable man, the sum of $800 is as little as can be paid.

Salary of Registrar of the Vice-Admiralty Court, Quebec..... $666 66

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This is a sort of legacy handed down from old Canada to the Dominion, and in connection with this, I wish to express my regret that the provision for court room in St. John and Halifax hitherto granted, is struck out in the Estimates. Now the registrar and marshal in Quebec are paid a salary in addition to their fees, while the registrar and marshal in other courts have to depend on the fees alone, and I think that the Government ought not to discontinue providing accommodation for these courts. The Vice-Admiralty Court is under the control of the Dominion entirely; and while Halifax is the seat of Government, St. John is not, and no Provincial building is there provided. The Dominion Government should see that provision is made for the holding of this court. Formerly, when the evidence was taken before the registrar, it was not so important, but now the witnesses are examined in court, and it is necessary that room should be provided for their attendance. A case has already occurred in New Brunswick, where the Vice-Admiralty Court had to sit in a criminal trial in a case of piracy, and they had to use the county court house. One hundred and fifty dollars a year is not a large item, but it gives a very commodious room where the court can meet. The court itself is a very important one, and I hope some steps will be taken to give these courts as much jurisdiction as the High Court of Admiralty of England. I do not know whether any correspondence or communications have lately taken place between the two Governments, but it seems to me to be very important for the Maritime Provinces that the jurisdiction of those courts should be extended. Under the present system, the proceedings are very speedy, and decisions can be reached in a very short time, compared with the proceedings in the ordinary law courts. If this amount, small as it is, is taken away from these judges, you will compel the judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court to find what place he can to hold his court. I think the accommodation should be provided for him, and that the cost should fall upon the Dominion. It is not a Provincial court—the Province has no control over it—but it is controlled entirely by Imperial legislation.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I should be very sorry that the cost of furnishing proper accommodation for this court should fall upon the judge, but the view I have taken is that provision for that accommodation should be made by the Provincial Government.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Why?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. For the reason that provision is made for other courts in the Provinces by the Provincial Government, and the Admiralty courts are no more Dominion courts than any other courts in the country. Those courts are established and the judges are appointed for the Provinces. It is true that they act under Imperial legislation; but the judges of the Provincial courts in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are appointed by this Government to do the work of the Province, and I have never heard any pretence that it is incumbent upon this Government to provide for their accommodation. In Halifax, I know that the Vice-Admiralty judge generally occupies the rooms of the Supreme Court. There is always sufficient accommodation for him. Two rooms were fitted up for his accommodation in the basement, and they would have been so fitted up if this provision had never been made. In St. John, there should be a provision made for the accommodation of the judge of this court as in the other Provinces; but it is unreasonable to expect this Government, providing, as we do, the salary of the judge, to provide also a room in which he is to hold his court. It is not at all within my contemplation that the cost of providing the room should fall upon the judge, but I fully expect that provision will be made by the Provincial or municipal authorities. In St. John, I have written to the judge with the view that he should communicate with the Provincial Government in reference to his accommodation. If we are to rent offices for these judges, we must furnish the rooms and provide caretakers, and that means the beginning of a very considerable expense.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The hon. gentleman seems to think that these courts are analogous to the ordinary Provincial courts, but the latter are created by the local authorities. They can either add to the number of judges, or diminish it, or create new courts. It is true, that the power of appointing the judges rests with the Dominion Government in those cases, but in regard to this court the Provincial Government has nothing whatever to do. It is a court entirely outside the jurisdiction of the Provincial Government, both as to its constitution and as to the mode in which it is carried on. In St. John, one difficulty has been, that the county court house is wanted for other purposes. The court house is not only used for the purposes of the courts, but also for the city council. It belongs to the city, and we contend that the city is not obliged to provide the accommodation for this court, and that this court being under an exclusive jurisdiction, it rests upon the Dominion to provide for its accommodation. We do not ask the Government to pay for a caretaker, but the judge is only paid $600 a year, and the result will be that the court would be held in some small room, where the judge will be in such a position that the court will lack dignity. I do not think the Province will recognise its liability to provide accommodation for the Vice-Admiralty Court. It never has done so. Before Confederation, the appointment was in the hands of the Imperial Government, and since Confederation it has been in the hands of the Dominion Government. In Halifax, the chief justice of the Province happens to be the judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court. In St. John, the judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court is not a member of our bench, but in Nova Scotia the office seems to be connected with the chief justiceship of the Province, and I can understand that the chief justice can easily get the use of the court house. Even in that case, I think it would be proper that provision should be made by this Parliament for the accommodation of that court. The sum is not very large, not really as much as the salaries which are paid to the registrar and marshal at Quebec, the former getting $666 and the latter $333, in addition to the fees which the registrar and marshal receive in other places. I think it would be wise to drop those two items rather than to drop this one, because in Halifax and St. John the registrars and marshals depend entirely on fees for payment for their services. I do not think it is fair to continue to pay these amounts and to discontinue the payment for the accommodation of the Vice-Admiralty judges in St. John and Halifax. The Vice-Admiralty Court in St. John is a very important one, and we do not want to have it sitting in such a place as it did sometimes formerly, when it was held in the first room that could be got.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. My hon. friend has said that there is a great difference in the organisation of the courts, the Vice-Admiralty Court being under Imperial enactment, and the other Provincial courts being under Dominion enactment. I cannot see what difference that makes. They are all for the benefit of the people of the Province in which they exist, and they are established to do the business of the people of the Province. My hon. friend says the Provincial authorities have never recognised their obligation to provide for the accommodation of these courts. In the Province of Ontario we have the Maritime Courts organised under Dominion legislation, and judges appointed by the Dominion Government. In some places, that court transacts a good deal of business, but we have never paid one cent for rooms for the judge. In the Province of New Brunswick, I am told—I stand corrected, if the hon. gentleman says I am wrong—there never was any provision made by the Dominion Government for rooms for the judge, until some six or seven years ago. Down to that time the judge's apartments had been furnished just like those of the Superior Court judges, by the Provincial or municipal authorities.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). They were not. For a short time the court house was occasionally used by the late Judge Hazen, and when Sir William Ritchie succeeded him he was not permitted to use the same room.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No expenses devolved upon this Government in connection with this accommodation until six or seven years ago. In Nova Scotia no charge was made for it. My hon. friend says that Judge Hazen was a city judge, and therefore got the use of the building. His successor was a judge of the Supreme Court, the same as in Halifax, and one would suppose that for the same reason, and on the same principle, he might have sat in his own court room with just as much authority, just as much right, whether he sat there as chief justice or otherwise. So it has been in Halifax. The present judge at St. John is a county judge, and I presume the Province furnishes him with suitable apartments as county judge. There may be some merits in the claim which I have not sufficiently weighed, but, so far as I know, it seems to me that the local authorities should take charge of the provision of necessary accommodation.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The hon. gentleman is in error in saying that the Province provides these rooms for the county court judges. The Province does not provide any court rooms; they are provided by the municipalities of the city and county of St. John, which provide the court house. It has been so for six or seven years. I do not know how it is about the Maritime Court. It seems to me that if we are going to have it all taken away, then let my hon. friend drop this $6,000 for Quebec and treat us equally all round.

Mr. DAVIES. I want to know on what ground that vote is defended? The Minister has spoken once or twice with respect to the request of the member for St. John for an appropriation for the use of the Admiralty Court in St. John, but he has not answered the question as to the appropriation of $6,000 for the registrar and salary of the marshal in Quebec. It may be all right, but why should we pay that in Quebec and not in the other Provinces?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The items to which my hon. friend calls my attention now are salaries for the judge, registrar and marshal. The difference between them and the item we have just been considering is this; that was an item for court house accommodation, in addition to the salaries already voted. I do not feel myself called upon at present to defend the amount of the salaries which are paid in the Province of Quebec. Those salaries, I understand, were fixed before the union of the Provinces, and have been current for a long time. The officers who held these offices were appointed upon those salaries, and I could hardly ask Parliament to reduce them.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). We find that the judge in New Brunswick and the judge in Nova Scotia get each $600 for this purpose, and I find that the judge of Quebec gets $2,000 a year. I venture to say, that there is as much business done in Halifax and St. John as there is in Quebec. Then besides the $2,000, the Minister will recollect that the Quebec judge gets fees in the Admiralty Court in addition. Besides, in Quebec, we find a salary for a registrar, who also gets fees, and a salary for a marshal, who also gets fees. The registrar and marshal in St. John and Halifax do not get any fees, and still the Minister is going to take away this $150 granted for the purpose of providing suitable accommodation for the court. In that case he should also cut down these two salaries which are not given to any other courts.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am not prepared to do that, considering that these salaries were established before the union of the Provinces and were established when the officers took them. There is a great difference between cutting them down and cutting down the perquisites which grew up, one item six years ago, and the other item three years ago. But as regards these salaries it is true, as the hon. gentleman has said, that the amount of business in St. John and Halifax each is as large as that done in the Province of Quebec, and there is no reason or principle why a larger salary should be paid in that Province than in any other. The only extenuating circumstance for the disparity is that in the Province of Nova Scotia the judge of the Vice Admiralty Court is likewise the chief justice of the Province, and receives a salary of $5,000 a year. In the city of St. John the judge of the Vice Admiralty Court is a county court judge, receiving a salary of about $3,000 a year, in addition to the salary voted.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The amount of salary paid to the judge, to the registrar, and to the marshal, I was not speaking about, because I do not know sufficiently what their duties are. Under the British North America Act we are obliged to pay the salaries of the judges of these several courts, but neither expressly nor by implication is this Parliament called upon to vote money to pay the salaries of the subordinate officials of that court, and there is no reason in the world why we should be called upon to pay them to the registrar and marshal of the Vice Admiralty Court, Quebec, more than we should be called upon to pay the same salaries to the same officers for discharging the same duties in the Maritime Provinces. It seems to me to be a practice which has grown up without any defensible foundation, and if the Minister is not prepared to drop the item to-night, I think it is a matter which he should carefully consider, because I do not think that we should be saddled for all time with the payment of these salaries unless there is some good reason for it, either arising out of some contract we have made or arising out of some duty laid upon us by the British North America Act.

Mr. SKINNER. I wish the Minister could see his way clear to continue the amount. A few years ago it was considered a grievance in our community that there was no court house in which to hold the Admiralty Court, and no court room available.

The judges' chambers were entirely unfit for the holding of the court with the requisite dignity, nor did they give accommodation for members of the bar or witnesses; and it came down to this, that the court would have to be held there unless a certain amount was paid by the judge out of his own pocket for a court room. Of course, he would not do so. Correspondence was opened with the Government here and it extended over a considerable time. At last the question was considered settled by a very small grant being made to meet the exigencies of the case. It is not as if a very large amount were asked or required. It is only a very small amount, and under the arrangement to which I refer a court room was properly fitted up, which gives excellent accommodation, and if this grant is withdrawn it will have to be abandoned and the court will have to be held in the judges' chambers. It may be said that the Province should provide a suitable court room, but even if it were the duty of the Province to do so, it must be remembered that the Province is very limited in its income. Since Confederation the cost of running the Province has very much increased, and the income has not increased in accordance with its requirements. In this Parliament we can increase our revenue by a vote of Parliament. There they cannot increase their revenue by any vote they may pass unless they go to direct taxation, which they have no wish to adopt as yet, at all events. The revenues of the Province render it impossible for it to go further in the administration of justice than it has done, and if this amount be dropped and if the Government will not provide this very small allowance for a court room for the Court of Admiralty, we shall be driven to go to the judges' chambers, which are wholly unfitted for the purpose. If the amount was, say, $1,000 a year I could understand the weight of the objection. But when the amount is so small, and when it was settled six or seven years ago and expenditure consequent upon that settlement was made, it is going further than is necessary to cut off that small grant at the present time. I wish the Minister to see if he cannot continue the grant for another year at all events.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is to be regretted that the Minister cannot see his way clear to continue the small grant to St. John, although there is something in the argument that all the Provinces should be placed in the same position with regard to providing accommodation for the Admiralty Courts. If the hon. gentleman were to place it on that ground alone, his position would be a more defensible one than the position he has taken to-night. I was glad to hear the Minister say that he did not feel called upon to defend the grant to the judge of the Admiralty Court at Quebec, and the grants to the registrar and marshal of that court. That fact would lead us to infer that that hon. gentleman had some doubts in his own mind as to the fairness of continuing a grant which, at the time it was made—I have no doubt under the control of the Legislature of Quebec—might have been considered fair under the circumstances. But I presume the Minister will not contend that this Dominion is pledged by any agreement or understanding or undertaking to provide salaries for those, if they have been extravagant at that time, for all future time; and therefore, I think, we have good cause for complaint that the salaries of the judge, registrar and marshal of Quebec are voted, when there is no vote at all for a registrar or marshal in either St. John or Halifax. The hon. Minister is aware that the business done in the Admiralty Courts at either Halifax or St. John is as large or larger than that in Quebec, and under those circumstances, he should be prepared to place the officers of those courts in as favorable a position financially as officers of the court of Quebec. What I most strongly object to is this, that we are pledged to maintain these old salaries which were fixed before we had anything to do with the Province of Quebec, and if it is found that in other parts of the British Dominion the functions of the Vice Admiralty Court can be administered as they are in St. John and Halifax, then it becomes the duty of the Government and the Minister to place all the courts in the same position, and if he cannot make a grant to St. John and Halifax as the House does to the court in the Province of Quebec, the hon. gentleman should adopt a better course, and one which would meet my views more—reduce the salaries, cut off the grants made to the registrar and marshal, and diminish the judges to the same amount as granted in other places.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There could hardly be a word said in defence of the smallness of the sum of $600 voted to the judges at St. John and Halifax respectively, except for the fact that those judges already hold judicial positions which return them fair emoluments. I do not want to be understood as admitting that we are pledged to this scale for all time. As regards the present judge at Quebec, we are pledged to continue the present salary to the present judge. That, I think, it will be right to do, and it is inconsistent with right principles that the salary of the judge should be dependent on the vote of Parliament from year to year. It should be fixed by law, in order to make the judge independent, as are our other judges, and not dependent on his salary being dropped or raised from year to year by the Government. I repeat, that I do not consider we are pledged to pay the judge's present salary beyond the term of the present incumbent, and I am not aware as regards the other two salaries that we are pledged even to that extent. I desire that this vote should be granted for the coming year and during the twelve months I will carefully revise the circumstances under which the votes have been taken from time to time, and if it be not inconsistent with good faith, I will have the amounts dropped from the next estimate. If I am not able to drop the votes I will explain the reason to the Committee.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The inference to be drawn from the hon. Minister's remark is that the judges of the Vice Admiralty Courts in Nova Scotia are sufficiently paid, because they hold other judicial offices. The Admiralty judge may, however, hold no other judicial office whatever, but be entirely independent. I quite agree with the hon. Minister that the salary of the Quebec judge should not be reduced during his incumbency, but it is not very long since the office became vacant, not more than about three years.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes; it must be six or seven years.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I trust that the hon. Minister will restore this vote this year. As I have pointed out, the practice is very different from what it was a few years ago. Then it was not so important to have a proper court, because the counsel and the judge were the only ones to attend, and the evidence was taken before a registrar and read to the judge. Now, as the hon. Minister knows, it is an open court, where witnesses are called at the trial the same as in a court of assize, and there is pressing necessity for proper accommodation.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think the Minister on this occasion has acted very correctly. If this item was a very large one, and if our friends fought it with the tenacity they display over this small amount, I am afraid the Minister's life would hardly be worth a year's purchase. I understand my friend to say it is wrong to grant these salaries to the judges in Quebec, but that we are perfectly willing that should be done provided we could get a place to hold our courts in St. John and Halifax. I do not understand that sort of justice, and I think it is hardly a fair way to force the Minister to act. We are to suppose he is administering justice, and yet they are trying to make him do an injustice, not only to Quebec, but to Halifax and St. John. On this occasion I think I must support the Minister and say that he is doing right.

Mr. BURDETT. This discussion proves one thing, and that is, that the time has about arrived when there should be an entire re-adjustment of the salaries of judges. I believe that there should be some system adopted and uniformity established in that direction. It appears to me that judges do not know quite where they stand in regard to their incomes, and that Parliament hardly knows what we are paying for the administration of justice. It is not only a question in Ontario whether the judges are paid enough or whether they are not paid enough, but whether men cannot earn much larger incomes at the bar than on the bench, and, therefore, the bench has no great attractions for the bar. I notice also in the County Courts that there is quite a marked distinction between the salaries of the judges in the different Provinces. In Ontario the senior judges get from $2,000 to $2,600 a year, and the junior judges are paid in every case $2,000. In all the other Provinces the County Court judges get $2,400, except one County Court judge in New Brunswick, who receives $3,000 a year. In each case the travelling allowance is, I believe, the same. This appears not to be a correct system, unless there is a very great difference in the work performed. Whether he works or not, a man who accepts the position of judge is expected to devote all his time to his duties. He is not permitted to employ his time in any other service, so that he might just as well be at work as idle. The great desideratum in selecting judges is to get men who are fit for the position, and who are enabled to live by the salary they receive, and are, therefore, above being obliged to increase their salaries in performing other services. My opinion is (and it is pretty strong on this point) that when a man is appointed judge he ought to devote his whole time to that service, and he ought to be sufficiently paid by the country to enable him to do so. I think the time has come when the Minister of Justice should consider the whole question of the salaries of the men who administer the laws of the land. I trust that before next Session of Parliament the Minister will have time to take this matter into consideration, and formulate a Bill that will remedy the defects of the present system. Vacancies occur too frequently on the bench, and it would be better if some permanent system were adopted by which new appointees would know exactly what they may expect.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). There is no trouble in filling a vacancy.

Mr. BURDETT. The Minister of Justice is much better able to answer that than I am. I quite agree with the member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson), that there is no public office vacant but that there are many men willing to take it. This, however, is an office which should seek the man and not the man the office, and the best man who can be got ought to be got for the judiciary. I am not saying whether it is advisable to increase the present salaries or not. It appears to me, and I know the fact is, that leading barristers and very many lawyers, who have anything like a fair business, earn more money than the judges on the bench, without having to do any more work, and in many cases not so much work. I think, therefore, as I have already intimated, that the time has arrived to consider this whole question, with a view of having it perfectly well understood what a man is to get when he goes upon the bench. It is an unquestioned fact, that in the Province of Ontario of late years, the services to be performed by the judges are much more arduous than they have been in the past, and these labors are continually increasing. As our laws are enlarged and developed, they necessarily cast more work on the judges in their administration, and this question ought also be considered in that light. The jurisdiction of the lower courts, whether rightly or wrongly, has been largely increased of late, and for increased services the judges should get increased pay. Of course, in some instances their appointment as revising barristers has enabled the judges to increase their income. It is pretty difficult for a judge, who has a family, to maintain them in the position he and they should occupy in the county, upon $2,000 a year. I, therefore, ask the Minister to take this matter into consideration, and I trust he will bring down a measure next Session covering the whole matter.

Mr. COOK. I think it is very necessary in the public interest that there should be another appointment made to the Queen's Bench division and the Common Pleas division of the Ontario courts. There are now only three judges in these courts, and the business of the courts is increasing so materially that suitors are often at a very great disadvantage. Frequently the judges are not able to attend to all the cases; and the consequence is that cases are postponed from time to time to the great loss of suitors, who have sometimes to bring their witnesses from long distances, perhaps three or four times, before the cause is disposed of. I think there should be another judge appointed to each court, and I do not believe there is a legal gentleman in the Province of Ontario who will disagree with me in this opinion.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not doubt that the judges have more than they can do to overtake the work in Ontario; but before we can make an appointment, provision must be made for it by the Provincial Legislature, and the last communication I had from the Attorney-General of Ontario, was that he was not entirely satisfied that a case could be made out for additional judges, but he might find it necessary to ask the judges to call in the services of some of the County Court judges, to assist in performing the work at Toronto.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). May I ask, to whom the money for the Vice-Admiralty Court rooms in Halifax is to be paid?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is paid to the commissioners of the court house in Halifax.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I understand that the Government has made an appointment of a junior judge for the County of Elgin, but I see no provision for his salary in the Estimates, as the same number of junior judges are provided for this year as last year. I would like to know whether any representation has been made by the senior judge as to the desirability of appointing a junior judge. We, who live in that locality, have expected that, perhaps, at some future time, a junior judge might be appointed, but we were informed that the Government would not make an appointment unless the population reached a certain number, or unless there was a strong representation made to them. I do not know that the senior judge has been in any way incapacitated for performing his duties efficiently. I think he is quite capable of performing all the work required of him, and not only so, but he accepted quite readily the position of revising barrister under the Franchise Act. I have no objection to the gentleman who has been appointed. He was my late opponent. I am very sorry he is out of the way, for I think I should like to run an election with him as an opponent again. I think he will make a very good judge, but I really cannot understand, unless a reason be given me, why the Government thought it necessary to make the appointment at all. I am satisfied that the senior judge is able to perform all the duties outside of the revision of the Dominion voters' list; and this appointment shows the absolute necessity of doing away with that Franchise Act, because it necessitates the appointment of junior judges in the Province of Ontario, and very likely in the other Provinces as well. I am inclined to think that the appointment in this case, of a junior judge, at a salary of $2,000 a year, was for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Franchise Act. I should like any information the Minister can give me on the subject.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I may say, in answer to the first question, that we do not depend on the despatching of another judge to find a salary for the gentleman who has lately been appointed in Elgin. The fact is that the salaries of judges and junior judges are provided by statute, and can, therefore, be paid without any vote of Parliament, and they are, perhaps, inserted on page 19, which the hon. gentleman evidently refers to, merely for the information of the committee and not for the purpose of fixing the amounts which have to be paid. As regards the judgeship in Elgin, it is true, as the hon. gentleman has stated, that the Government have not been disposed, except on representations from the senior judge, to make appointments unless the population reaches sixty thousand. The provincial statute authorises the appointment in any county where the population is forty thousand, and the Government, having adopted the principle of appointing one where there are sixty thousand of a population, have made however the provision that a special allowance should be made, in computing the sixty thousand, for the additional business furnished by cities and towns and large villages. I am not quite aware what the present population of Elgin may be, but I think it falls somewhat under sixty thousand, even making the additional allowance for the town of St. Thomas, and for the other towns and villages within the county, but my impression is that it does not fall far short of sixty thousand, if we add the fifty per cent. allowed for the additional business which always centres in cities, villages and towns. A junior judge was appointed there, as the hon. gentleman seems to have foreseen, on the strong representation of the county judge that assistance was necessary in the discharge of his duties. He did not represent that the work thrown upon him by the Franchise Act, and which he was at liberty to relinquish if he pleased, was the cause of that representation, but he did call our attention to the fact that since we had adopted the principle of requiring a population of 60,000, the work of the county judges had been very much increased by provincial legislation. I am glad to know that the senior judge, as the hon. gentleman says, is a very capable and active judge. We must remember, however, that he has reached the very ripe age of about seventy years, and, notwithstanding the fact that he is physically a very active, energetic and faithful officer, his request under those circumstances to have the assistance of a junior was a reasonable one, and certainly we had it, and had it in strong terms, before we made the appointment.

Mr. Cook.

Mr. ELLIS. This expenditure for judges' travelling is fixed by statute. Last year $3,200 were asked for the travelling expenses for the judges in New Brunswick, and this year a similar amount is asked, but last year $3,700 were expended, and Mr. Justice Palmer appears to have got a larger travelling allowance than any other travelling judge. His expenses for travelling, amounting to $1,100, exceed by $400 those of any other judge. How can a judge in equity draw such a large amount? I understand he holds a court at one or two places in the Province, but I do not understand by what possible means he could be entitled to a much larger travelling allowance than any one of the circuit judges.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is an equitable proceeding.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The travelling allowances in Ontario and the Lower Provinces are not regulated by moving expenses or per diem allowance, but each judge receives a fixed allowance of $100 for each court he holds. The judge has simply to return the number of courts that he holds, that is to say, the number of places he holds courts at, and he is entitled to receive $100 for each court. We have no authority to control the fixing of the circuits of the judges; they make the circuits to suit the public convenience, and we do not undertake to control them as to whether the circuits are too numerous or otherwise.

Dominion Police.....$21,000

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The new block which has just been occupied and the printing bureau require an increase of the staff. There has to be a guard in attendance at the door night and day in each building, and the printing bureau has to be supplied, and in addition there is what is called the departmental mail which is under the charge of the police, and the printing bureau has to be supplied with that.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). There is a charge here of $54 for overshoes. Do you supply the police with clothing?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, with the whole uniform.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). You clothe them as well as give them a salary?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Our police, which I think is a very efficient force, are not as well paid as the police force in the cities generally.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). They get $600 salary besides all their clothing.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I made the comparison when I asked to increase the pay two years ago, and I have a memo. here which will furnish information as to salaries paid.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It seems rather strange that police should be required down at the printing bureau. As a rule printers are supposed to be civil servants in all respects, and I think it is an imputation against their honesty that guards should march up and down and watch them. I cannot see any more necessity for guards being there now than when the contractors did the printing. The men who work there cannot be expected to feel comfortable with policemen in the building watching them. If the services of the police are to be paid for, I suppose it is as well to have the men there as anywhere else, but if they are not going to be of any service it would be much more comfortable to the men who are at work that they should not be under the supervision of the police. I can understand that some time ago there was a necessity for the services of the police when the Secretary of State or the superintendent of the Bureau of Printing telegraphed all over the country for extra hands to whom he promised three months' work, in order to get out the Government voters' lists, and after those men came here the Government saw fit to dispense with their services long before the time of their engagement would expire. This caused considerable excitement among the printers. There might have been occasion then to have policemen there, but I do not think there is any occasion under ordinary circumstances, and I think the printers would work more harmoniously and would do better work if they were not under the supervision of a police force.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The printers are not under the supervision of a policeman, and I think, if we in Parliament are able to stand the imputation which is implied according to the hon. gentleman from having a policeman at our doors, the printers might be able to stand that also. The policemen are there just as they are here and in the other buildings, to take care of public property, to prevent the intrusion of people who have no right to be there, and, after nightfall, to see that the buildings are secure against fire, intrusion and damage of every kind.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. When I was down at the printing bureau a week or two ago, I found there was a regular doorkeeper appointed there. What is the use of a doorkeeper if you have a policeman?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am not responsible for the doorkeeper, but I was requested by my colleague who has charge of that building to provide a policeman there, as the policemen are provided in the other Government buildings for the purposes to which I have referred.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is a matter of guard there, and of regard here.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The memorandum which I have, states that the increase of $2,000 is caused by an increase to the force of four men in consequence of the new printing bureau, being placed under its surveillance and the extension of the departmental police mail service to that building, the Geological Museum and the Supreme and Exchequer Courts building. The number of letters delivered by the police mail last year, was 43,144, an increase over 1888 of about 5,000, and over 1883 (the first year of its operation) of about 17,000. The strength and pay of the force are as follows:—1 commissioner, $1,700; 1 inspector, $2.25 per diem, $821.25; 2 sergeants, $1.90 per diem, $693.50 each; 27 constables, $1.50 to $1.65, $547.50 to $602.25. A comparison with other forces shows the following:—In Toronto, the chief receives $3,000 and allowances; deputy chief, $1,950; inspectors, $1,200 to $1,400; sergeants, $1,000; constables, $1.30, $1.50, $1.75 and $2.00 per day. In Hamilton, the sergeant-major receives $1,100 and house; sergeants, $800; constables, $1.40, $1.75 and $1.85. The force has, in addition to the supervision of the various Government buildings, the charge of the fire appliances, and since 1883 has had charge of the grounds around the buildings, which prior to that time were protected by watchmen employed by the Department of Public Works; and later, the Government having assumed the care and maintenance of the Major's Hill Park, it was found necessary in summer to have a constable there night and day for the protection of the shrubs, plants, &c., and to keep in check the rowdy element that would otherwise be an annoyance to the public who frequent it. The services of the force are also being constantly employed on special duty by many of the Departments of the public service. There are also thirty-eight constables appointed to the force at the nomination of other Departments (more especially the Indian Department), who are remunerated and equipped by those Departments, but whose duty it is to make returns to the Commissioner of Police at Ottawa at stated intervals. This latter note is added simply to show that the duties of the chief here are increased in that way, though those 38 constables do not belong to the Dominion Police force proper.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I must protest against the idea that there is any necessity to hire policemen to watch the printers. I think that item ought to be struck out. It is not required, and I know the men are very much annoyed that they have to be watched by policemen, that they are to be looked upon as dishonest men, because policemen are put there to watch them. These four policemen are not required there, and it is an insult to the men who are employed in the bureau. No other printing office in the country requires policemen to watch its workmen. If the Government insist upon this item, I think the expenditure should be charged to the printing bureau, because it is only fair, in making a comparison between the cost of the printing under the Government and what it was under the contractors, to add the cost of the four policemen to the former. There is another item in the police force account which to me appears absurd. I find: R. W. Powell, M.D., for medical services, $44.75. The Government give good salaries to the police, they give them good clothing, they give them underclothing, and even, as my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Wilson) has pointed out, they furnish them with overshoes. Do they pay their doctor's bills as well? Why should they not pay the doctor's bills of the clerks who work in these buildings as well as the doctor's bills of the policemen who watch these buildings? I should like to have some explanation of this.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have already explained that we employ no policemen to watch the printers at all, and that the increase of four policemen referred to is the total increase of the force required for the large block opposite and for the Supreme and Exchequer Courts building, as well as for the printing bureau. As to the doctor's account, I cannot at this moment state what the services were for, but we certainly pay for no medical services, except in the case of injury which has occurred in the service of the Government.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I thoroughly agree with my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Somerville). I consider that the Government are the best judges of those whom they have in their employ. I have no doubt that the Government themselves think it is very necessary that all the Departments should be carefully watched. They have been occupying that position for a long time, and I agree with them that they all require watching. I should like to have the Dominion Police watch the various Departments presided over by the members of the Government. I think a more vigilant watch would be a wholesome thing, not only for the printing bureau but for all the other bureaus we have in Ottawa.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Does the operation of the Dominion Police force extend out to the Agricultural Farm, to watch the chicken house, and the horse blankets, and root house?

Mr. CARLING. We have not come to that yet.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. We have built a hen-house out there at an expense of over $3,000 this year, and it must be a very good hen-house. They have a lot of good hens, according to all accounts, first-class hens. I think that the Dominion Police ought to have supervision over the Agricultural Farm hen-house. I would like to ask the Minister if there are any police out there?

Mr. SOMERVILLE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not know whether there are any police out there, but I understand that the pleasure of going to that place is so great that nobody requires to be paid for it.

Mr. INNES. I suppose the same force are on duty at the new building on Wellington Street?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, that is included.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many are watching the new building on Wellington Street?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think only two.

Kingston Penitentiary..... $155,263.23

Mr. McMULLEN. It will be within the recollection of the hon. Minister that we had considerable discussion last year with regard to the expenses of the several penitentiaries, and the Auditor General last year gave us a per capita cost for the several penitentiaries. I see that he does not do that this year. I think the country is entitled to it, and I would like to know why that particular calculation has been cut off this year. I would also like to know from whom the supplies are bought for the inmates of the Kingston Penitentiary.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. All the supplies, excepting, it may be, some casual purchases, are procured by contract. If the hon. gentleman desires information as to the names of the contractors, I can get it from the reports. As to the per capita statement, there is such a statement here, but it will be more in detail in the report that I will present to Parliament, I hope, to-morrow. At page C 120 there is a statement of the comparative cost, but I believe it is not figured out per capita. If the hon. gentleman desires that, I will have it in my report and if he needs it before going into this item we will let this stand.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think we ought to have the calculation of the per capita cost. We had it last year, and it was a considerable guide for us.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not know any particular reason why it was left out. But it was not full or complete at all as affording a comparison, for two reasons: in the first place it was necessarily only an approximation, we would have to take an average of the prisoners, whereas the number would be larger at one time and smaller at another. By the table which will be appended to my report, I think we will go more into detail as to the population of the prison, showing the population from time to time. Furthermore, as I explained to the Committee last year, it was somewhat unreliable for the reason that it necessarily took no account of stores at the beginning of the year and stores at the end of the year.

Expenses in connection with the Patent Record.....$10,000

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). There is an increase of $2,000.

Mr. CARLING. We pay so much for each number of the Patent Record, and it is in accordance with the number of patents issued. The receipts of the Patent Office are increasing rapidly every year, in fact they now more than pay the whole expense of the Department. I think the receipts last year were something like $80,000.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is this Patent Record printed in the bureau?

Mr. CARLING. No. It was under contract for five years, and the contractor has been notified that the contract will run out, I think, some time this year.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. How are the Patent Record publications circulated? We each get a copy; what becomes of the other copies?

Mr. CARLING. I will furnish the information.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The amount for printing the Patent Record appears to be very large. It is not a large publication or contains many pages.

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Burland has had the contract for the publication for several years, and he was notified, when the printing bureau was about to be established, that it would be discontinued so soon as the printing bureau was able to do the work. They have not so far been in that position, as a lithographic plant will be required; but when the bureau is in a position to do the work, the publication will be taken from Mr. Burland and published by the Government.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is it the intention to add a lithographic plant to the printing bureau?

Mr. CARLING. It will be necessary for the Patent Record.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When does Mr. Burland's contract terminate?

Mr. CARLING. It terminated some months ago, but it was extended for six months, but when the printing bureau is ready to do the work, it will be transferred to the Department of Printing.

Mr. INNES. I should like to ask if the Minister intends to do anything to make better arrangements for the models in the patent room. Although, the Department has been removed to spacious premises in the new building, I find the patents have been huddled together in the same way as they were in the old western block. No better means of examining them are afforded than prevailed under the old system. As the Department now occupies large and new premises, the public and those interested in patents should be given a better opportunity of examining the models.

Mr. CARLING. The models have just been removed from the western block to the new block, and the Minister of Public Works is making an estimate of the cost of placing the room in a good condition to examine the models.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Patent Record is an unnecessary expense, and I hope, when the contract ends, its publication will cease. I have distributed several copies to architects, mechanics and others and I have not heard any one say it was useful. It was originally published in the interest of some particular party, and it has been maintained since. If anyone wishes to obtain information they can obtain it in the Patent Department, and the Record is a totally useless publication.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The suggestion of the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is a good one. The publication is not in the interest of the public, but of persons who procure patents and they should pay for the publication.

Mr. CARLING. The publication is very important for inventors, and the amount of fees collected for patents was $80,000 last year. The expenses of the Record come out of these fees.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is there a similar publication in the United States?

Mr. CARLING. I am told there is, and that it is published by the United States Government.

Mr. INNES. How many subscribers are there to the Patent Record, for which I notice $3 a year is charged?

Mr. CARLING. I will give the hon. gentleman that information later.

Criminal Statistics $4,000

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I observe by the Auditor General's Report that amounts of $1, 5 and 2 cents are paid for each report.

Mr. CARLING. These sums for returns are fixed by statute. The Bill was brought in by Mr. Blake, when he was Minister of Justice.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). What I wish to know is the reason why this different scale of payments is followed?

Mr. CARLING. I am not able to give the information. I can only say that the rates are fixed by statute, and I cannot alter them.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister must be mistaken. Another point requiring explanation is this, that while $4,000 was voted $11,300 was expended.

Mr. CARLING. The number of returns may vary in different years.

Mr. CASEY. The difference between $4,000 and $11,000 is very considerable, and the Minister should be able to state the reason why he believed that the expenditure will not exceed $4,000 for the coming year.

Mr. CARLING. I do not know that I can give the hon. gentleman any further information.

Health Statistics..... $10,000

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). We would like some information in respect to this item. Each year when we ask for information we have been told that the return is handed in and if we look very carefully over it we will see the whole working of this branch. I have taken every opportunity to ascertain what value we receive from the expenditure of this money and I must confess that so far as I have been able to ascertain all the benefit in it is derived by a few individuals who have the collection of the health statistics as well as those who have situations here in Ottawa and are receiving good salaries. I have time and again called the attention of the Government to the fact that this matter should be controlled by the various Provinces.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). My friend behind me says no, but I hold it to be the duty of the Dominion Government, as far as it possibly can, to utilise all the machinery of the Local Legislatures, and to allow the Local Legislatures to do the work if they possibly can, as efficiently as the Dominion. It is wrong in principle for this Government to assume to control matters which they cannot control nearly so well as the Provinces. In almost every town, village and township of the Province of Ontario they have established efficient boards of health, well organised and carefully looked after. If any occasion arises the boards are immediately called together, the health officer notified and energetic means taken to prevent the spread of disease. Why, then, not allow the Provinces to carry on this work when they can do it much better than the Dominion? If you have a large number of persons here in Ottawa to whom you wish to give situations on account of services rendered to the Government, why not give them a salary to assist the provincial health boards and ascertain how they do the work? I blame the Minister for not attempting to utilise these various provincial boards to as great an extent as he possibly can, for I believe that it is in the interests of all parties to allow the Provinces to arrange the general health affairs of the people of the Provinces. We have enough duties to perform here without assuming to take under our control that which belongs to the Provinces, and I hope the Minister will give us the assurance that he is going to utilise this provincial service and make this law really beneficial and operative, instead of being, as it is, a dead letter on the statute book, and keeping up this law for the purpose of maintaining a few hangers-on in Ottawa. I am prepared to render the Minister all the aid and assistance I possibly can if he will adopt a scheme which will utilise the information at the disposal of the Provinces, and if he will endeavor to make this health protective service a really efficient one.

Mr. CARLING. My hon. friend seems to think that the gentlemen who are appointed in the different cities and towns are as he said supporters and hangers-on of the Government. Perhaps the hon. gentleman is not aware that the health officers are selected by the different municipalities and that we appoint the sanitary officers selected by the municipalities.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I am aware of that.

Mr. CARLING. Then I do not think the hon. gentleman ought to charge the Government with the appointing their hangers-on for the purpose of giving them salaries.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I had reference to the hangers-on about the city of Ottawa.

Mr. CARLING. This information is gathered in the different centres of population, in cities in Ontario and the other Provinces, and I believe it is carefully and well done. Whenever a board of health is established in a town having a certain population, and a medical officer appointed, that medical officer is selected by the Government to return the statistics and to revise and certify to the copies of the cemetery register made by the caretakers. I think the system works well and is giving satisfaction. We have officers in different centres all through the Dominion who furnish us with these statistics, which I believe are very useful and well worth the amount of money expended upon them.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It seems to me that the heading ought not to be "Health Statistics" but "Death Statistics." I think most of these men who furnish statistics are either grave-diggers or undertakers.

Mr. CASEY. Or doctors, which comes to the same thing.

Mr. CARLING. The mortuary statistics which are called "returns" are copied by the cemetery caretakers and revised by professional men.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin).

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I see a large number of undertakers in the list.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think there is very much in what my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Somerville) states, and I should like to have detailed reports from these various health officers, but I have not been able to find any. The principal returns they send in are the very returns referred to by my hon. friend: the number of deaths and burials that take place in the locality. They go to the sexton and they copy the statistics from his books, perhaps giving him 10 cents for the privilege of doing so, and these are the returns they send down here. Is it right to misname these, health statistics? They are death statistics, if you will; but they are no indication of the health of a locality or of what it is necessary to do to preserve the health of the locality, and it is absurd to speak of this as a useful branch of the public service. I believe the money is to a greater or less extent squandered. If the Government were desirous of making this branch useful to the country, they would utilise the various health boards in the different Provinces; but they make no attempt to do that. All that these officers report is the deaths of the people in the different parts of the country, and they obtain those from the sextons and grave-diggers.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. gentleman gave one of the very best reasons for this vote when he admitted that he was not aware of similar arrangements for looking after the public health in other Provinces to those existing in Ontario. If they do not exist in the other Provinces, it is the more imperative on the Dominion Government to obtain from them statistics showing the rate of mortality in the various parts of the Dominion; and this information naturally suggests to the intelligent professional man, if he finds the death rate low in Halifax as compared with Toronto, to enquire into the causes of the difference. The result of gathering these statistics is that we find comparisons constantly going on not only between various cities in Canada, but between cities in the United States and cities in Canada. Where the statistics show a low rate of mortality, the first duty in a medical man is to ascertain the cause: Is it salubrity of climate, the nature of the surroundings, social conditions, or the attention of medical men to the regulation of ventilation and drainage? I have looked over this report carefully, and I say it is a very important, interesting and valuable one, and the sooner the Government branches out very much further in the same direction, the better for the health of our people. We have a good work done in Ontario, which, however, might be done much better; but we do not know that the same is being done with equal success in the other Provinces, and, therefore, the greater necessity for the Government taking it up. A report has been distributed as a result of the work of the committee appointed here in regard to the nature of consumption when conveyed from animals to the human system, and it is a very valuable document, and one that will play a very much greater part in the future than it has done up to the present time. I say that this is a very wise and important expenditure of money, and I believe a very much larger amount could be expended to the advantage of the health of the people of this country.

Mr. CASEY. A short time ago I made a slight mistake as to the item we were discussing, but I was not able to discover it from anything the Minister said, and I do not believe he discovered it any sooner than I did myself. It was from a causal remark of another member that I found out the mistake. And now, when an explanation is required in regard to these health statistics, I find that the hon. Minister has to be defended by an hon. gentleman who, report says, might possibly succeed him in his Department. That hon. gentleman has told us that it is very important to know the death rate in different cities, and to know why it is different in different cities. That is the very thing we are not informed by these reports, and that is why my hon. friend from East Elgin is correct in saying that they are not health statistics, but that they are merely mortuary statistics collected from the sextons and undertakers of each town. For instance, I find that the two leading contributors of information in St. Thomas are the two leading undertakers in that city.

Mr. CARLING. These items are certified to by the medical officer.

Mr. CASEY. On looking over the list of parties paid for making these statistics, I find a very wide difference. For instance, Charlottetown in P.E.I., and Victoria, in B.C., are places about the same size, but in the former thirteen persons have been paid and in the latter only two; and while the officers in each place are paid about the same amount, there is a very considerable difference in the amounts paid in the different places. In fact, as the hon. member for East Elgin says, I have no doubt that the whole system of what is called collecting health statistics is a system for putting a little money into the way of supporters of the Government in each town. In every case the gentleman put down as an officer is a friend of the Government, and these men are paid $120, $150 or $200 for gathering a few statistics, which they can do without any exertion at all, and these payments are really contributions towards their maintenance. That is what they are in the town of St. Thomas, and I believe that is what they are everywhere else, and I must join in the protest of the hon. member for the east riding against the whole affair. We are spending over $11,000 for returns which we could get by copying the reports of the local boards of health. The hon. gentleman knows that this is really a means of paying the doctors from the different towns for giving us a report of their victims. No doubt the doctors are very useful members of the community, but to pay them both for putting us under the ground, and then making a return is going a little too far.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. In Ontario we have an effective system in operation of which the Government should avail themselves; we have boards of health, not only in cities and towns but in the townships, and these boards furnish not only statistics but valuable information with regard to the health of these localities. The report submitted by the hon. Minister of Agriculture only gives us information with regard to the deaths and by no means gives the complete statistics which are obtained under the Ontario system. I do not know what systems if any are followed in the other Provinces, but if the hon. gentleman would take those of Ontario he would make a great saving and have a more reliable report. I agree with the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Casey) that the plan adopted by the Government is simply a means of furnishing a little pap to the doctors, grave-diggers and undertakers who support the Government, and does not furnish any information to warrant the expenditure in obtaining it.

Mr. ROOME. I must agree with the hon. member for Grey that this Government has established a principle which has not been carried far enough. It is necessary that the collection of the statistics should be made under a system controlled by this Government, because although in the Province of Ontario the work is carefully done, in the other Provinces there is no system adopted, and it is just as necessary that all the statistics in the Dominion should be collected through one head centre as that we should have a Minister of Agriculture or any head of the Department in Ottawa. It is very important that we should have not only mortuary statistics, but births statistics as well, in order to make comparisons and be able to estimate accurately our national health as well as national wealth. The money that has been spent is well spent, but the collection of statistics should be extended further, and the system established perfected.

Mr. PLATT. As regards the returns furnished us annually by the Minister of Agriculture, it makes but little difference whether they are complete or incomplete, correct or incorrect. The question is as to their practical utility at this time. Several years ago we questioned the propriety of spending this large sum of money, and the plea put forward then was that the expenditure was intended merely to serve for the ground work of a system which would be of some practical utility. Year after year we have gone on spending and issuing the same kind of report, and I cannot conceive of any useful purpose the report serves. This large volume goes into the hands of a few people, who glance it over, some of them very cursorily indeed, and people are anxious to see whether something will grow up out of this which will be of use to the community. Mortuary statistics are of no use except for the purpose of leading to an enquiry, and to the establishment of some regulations or system that may improve the sanitary condition of the people. My own opinion is that the money we are now spending might be much more profitably divided amongst the various provincial boards to assist them in perfecting the work or in establishing boards where none exists. So far as Ontario is concerned, I am satisfied that the expenditure of money by this Parliament is money thrown away. I do not know that the Ontario Board itself relies to any great extent upon the assistance of the Dominion officials. I am very glad that my hon. friend from West Middlesex (Mr. Roome) has seen fit to bring this matter before the House, and I hope that something may result from the motion which he has placed upon the paper. I am certainly opposed to the expenditure under this item if it is to produce no better results than it has in the past.

Mr. INNES. There is a little periodical published in this city, called the Health Journal, which is regularly forwarded to members of Parliament. I do not suppose that is done without some remuneration, so I would ask if it receives any subsidy from this Government ?

Mr. CARLING. That does not come under this item, but it will come up later on.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I must congratulate the Minister of Agriculture, who possibly may feel a disposition before long to be exalted to a position more agreeable to his tastes than his present one, upon the assistance which he has received from the two aspirants to his present office. I warn him that they are dangerous characters, as they say doctors always are, and I would advise him to be cautious in accepting the advice of these two aspirants to the position of Minister of Agriculture. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) got to his feet first, and defended this item, as he always has done. He conveyed the idea to the House that I did not fully understand the question, or I would know that no other Provinces had a health board except Ontario, and that, therefore they could not be expected to adopt means by which the health of the different localities could be ascertained. He went further and stated that it was very desirable to know how many people die in a particular locality in order to judge of the condition of health in that locality. I certainly did not know that that was the way in which to ascertain the state of health in a locality. I thought there must be something else reported in order to ascertain that, but my hon. friend, in his zeal to show his ability to conduct the Department of Agriculture, did not think it necessary to obtain any other information. I may inform my hon. friend that there are other Provinces which have health boards.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman said he was not aware whether the other Provinces had or had not.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think I am capable of using words to convey my ideas, and, therefore, I can tell my hon. friend that I did know that there were other Provinces in which boards of health were constituted very much on the principles of the boards of health in Ontario. In regard to the suggestion of the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Roome), that we should have a central board here, to which all information should be sent, so that the whole of these health statistics should be arranged from Ottawa, I do not think that could be efficiently worked. I think this matter can be very much better conducted under the supervision of the Provinces, that they understand how to control these matters better than the Dominion could, and that, if we would attempt to make this service efficient, we should adopt the principle suggested by my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Platt). I do not think we would derive any benefit from having all the reports of the different officers throughout the Dominion sent here and examined in regard to the health or the longevity in each locality. As a rule, these officers make no attempt to ascertain the condition of affairs. There may be a physician in a town who tries to make a report of that kind, but from the rural constituencies, we get practically no information. The statement of the health of Ontario, for example, when it is limited to the towns and cities, without the rural municipalities making any returns, is of no value whatever, or rather it is worse than useless, because it is misleading. I think it would be better to drop this item altogether, than to leave the reports in the present condition.

Committee rose and reported the resolutions.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ; and House adjourned at 11.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 12th February, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. McCARTHY moved that the petitions which he had presented praying for an amendment of the North-West Territories Act, be now read and received.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 77) to amend the Act for the suppression of combinations formed in restraint of trade. —(Mr. Wallace.)

P. LESUEUR.

Mr. COOK asked, Whether the P. LeSueur who draws $1,024.30 for annual superannuation allowance is the same person who enjoys the combined offices of Civil Service Examiner and Secretary to the Examiners at a salary per annum of $1,258.33 ? If so, is the arrangement to be continued ?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Mr. LeSueur is a superannuated officer, and therefore cannot by law be compelled to do official duty except at a salary not lower than he received in his former position. He receives $1,024 of superannuation, $400 as a commissioner and $700 as secretary of the commission for the Civil Service examinations. He receives a lower salary than he received when he was in office.

FREE CARRIAGE OF PRIVATE MERCHANDISE ON GOVERNMENT STEAMERS.

Mr. LANGEVIER (Montmorency) asked, Whether the attention of the Government has been called to the allegation that goods are being carried for merchants and others from Quebec and elsewhere to Gaspé, or other ports on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, on Government steamers free of charge ? If so, has any enquiry been made respecting the matter, and with what results ?

Mr. TUPPER. I observed in a newspaper some time ago, during the last summer, that it was charged that the steamer La Canadienne carried passengers and goods to Gaspé. Having observed that, I called upon Commander Wakeham, the commander of that ship, for an explanation, and, after stating that he carried the usual ship's stores, some of which had to be left at Gaspé and stored there during the season, he says :

" I had some things which I had purchased and was anxious to send to my home in Gaspé by the Miramichi, on the 29th of April, but on trying to ship them I was refused by the agent, who refused to take them, as the steamer was not certain of calling at Gaspé, on account of the ice. These things I did bring down on board my own vessel. When I was trying to get my freight down on board the Miramichi, I met there a gentleman who was going down to Gaspé on her. She could take him, as he could be landed anywhere on the coast, but the purser would not accept his parcels. The gentleman came to me and asked me to take his trunks with mine, and I did so. We had not a cartload between us, and the Miramichi had refused to take them. It would have suited us both much better could we have got our things by the Miramichi."

OXFORD AND NEW GLASGOW RAILWAY.

Mr. DAVIES asked, Whether the Oxford and New Glasgow Railroad, or any and what part of it, has been completed? Has the Government taken over from the contractors all or any; if any, what part of such road? If not, why is not the road taken over? Is any part of such road now being operated by the Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. 1. The Oxford and New Glasgow Railway is not completed. The sections between Oxford Junction and Oxford Village and between Mingo Road and Brown's Point are practically completed. 2. No part. 3. Because the work of construction is not completed. 4. No part is being regularly operated, but freight is being carried over the three-mile section between Oxford Junction and Oxford Village.

CAPE CROCKER INDIANS.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, What was the annuity per head paid the Indians on the Cape Crocker reserve in Bruce County in the years 1887, 1888, 1889?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The annuity per head paid the Indians on the Cape Crocker reserve in Bruce County, in the fiscal year 1887-88, was $33.36, and in 1888-89, $35.40.

TRIAL OF PETER PAUL.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Whether the Government have defrayed all the expenses of the trial of Peter Paul, an Indian who was tried at Walkerton some time ago? If so, what was the total amount, and to whom paid?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The funds of the Chippewas of Cape Crocker were charged with the expenses of the trial of Peter Paul. The total amount of expense was $283.84, which was paid to A. B. Klein, Esq., of Walkerton, barrister, on the recommendation of the Department of Justice.

SHORT LINE RAILWAY—HARVEY BRANCH.

Mr. LAURIER asked, What is the amount of expenditure incurred for surveys on the Harvey Branch of the Short Line Railway, since last Session, paid by warrant?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. $13,782.28 was paid under the Governor General's warrant up to 11th February, 1890.

WHARF AT ST. LOUIS, N. B.

Mr. WELDON (St. John) asked, Whether the wharf at St. Louis, Kent County, N. B., has been completed? What was the entire cost? Has there been any revenue derived therefrom?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The wharf at St. Louis, Kent County, N. B., was completed on the 25th day of June, 1889, at a total cost of $1,897.-65. No revenue has been collected.

POST OFFICE AT LÉVIS.

Mr. GUAY (Translation) asked. Whether petitions have been forwarded to the Government, by the Municipal Council or the Board of Trade of the Town of Lévis, asking for the erection of a post office?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) In answer to the hon. member, I must state that enquiries were made in the Department, and that no such petitions were found.

THE DISTURBANCE IN HULL.

Mr. CHARLTON. On Monday last I referred to the outrage on the previous Tuesday at Hull, and I understood the Premier to assure the House and country that a recurrence of an outrage of that kind would be guarded against by the Government, and that the authorities of Hull would take proper precautionary measures to secure the privilege of freedom of speech in that city. Last night a disturbance occurred there again.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is the hon. member going to make a motion?

Mr. CHARLTON. No; I am making a statement to the Government, for the purpose of eliciting from the Government some information as to their intention with regard to this important matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. It would be more regular if a motion were made.

Mr. McMULLEN. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CHARLTON. I did not deem it necessary, and I think the House will agree with me that it was not necessary, to formulate a motion in regard to this matter. It is a matter out of which I have no desire to make political capital, no desire to say anything embarrassing to the Government, but the occurrence that took place in Hull last night was one of a character which, I think, demands the attention of this House. Miss Wright and some other ladies associated with her were mobbed and maltreated last week, Tuesday night. They went there again last night, and the disturbances were of a more aggravated nature than before. The assault was a murderous one, and the fact that murder was not committed is more a matter of good luck than of lack of intention on the part of the rioters. The reports inform us that 1,000 men assembled around the building where the services were being held, and assaulted the evangelists with a fusilade of stones, shouts, imprecations and curses, and that when the party inside emerged from the building and an attempt was made to reach Ottawa, they were followed by a hooting and howling mob, and two or three members of the party were stricken down with stones. Now, Sir, it is evident that the means adopted by the authorities of Hull for the purpose of preserving order were utterly inefficient. I say, Sir, that only six policemen to cope with 1,000 rioters is perfectly preposterous, and the good name of this Dominion is involved to some extent in the circumstances connected with this riot. We take pride to ourselves in this country upon being a law-abiding people; we profess that liberty of conscience is enjoyed, liberty of speech, liberty for promulgating religious views, anywhere under the British flag. That law has been denied in Hull, and been denied under the most aggravating circumstances; and the spirit of intolerance that exists there, and that has been manifested upon two occasions, is a spirit which, if not checked, is liable to spread. It is not improbable that it will be impossible to hold Protestant services in various parts of the Province, unless this spirit is suppressed. The proper way to deal with a mob is to put it down promptly and mercilessly. Severity at the start is mercy at the end, and if you allow a mob to get the upper hand, if you allow this spirit to gather headway, the coping with this spirit will become a matter of very serious danger, and the Government will not be discharging their duty if they do not see that this spirit manifested in Hull upon these two occasions is suppressed and checked. And it is their business to see it is done. I think there is a precedent for this action. If my memory serves me, in 1878, my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie) who then led the Government, directed the means for a peaceable Orange walk in Montreal. He alienated the Catholic support, and I doubt whether he gained any Orange votes, but he did secure to that part of our fellow-countrymen the right to parade the streets. There was a time in New York when the Orangemen determined to walk the streets. There were thousands of Irishmen prepared to prevent them, but the authorities surrounded that procession in front, in rear, and on the flanks with a body of 5,000 men. And I think that, when it comes to a question in this country of civil and religious liberty, the right to promulgate any views on any religious topic, the Government should see that those rights are secured and guaranteed to our people. It may be said that Miss Wright was injudicious, that she ought to have kept away from Hull, that she must have been perfectly well aware of the treatment she was likely to meet with, and that she was really provoking a disturbance by going to Hull. I do not think it was Miss Wright's duty to consider the state of public feeling in Hull. She believed she had a mission there, that she was called upon to go there and proclaim what she believed to be the truth. She was actuated by the highest motives in the matter. She is not, however, the first person who has been injudicious in this sense. St. Paul himself was rather injudicious. He was subjected to stripes five times, he was stoned once, he was thrown into prison, he was chained to a soldier for two years, and carried to Rome to be tried before the Emperor, and was, finally, beheaded, simply for being injudicious and running contrary to the prejudices of the people of that time. The whole progress of Christianity is marked by so-called injudiciousness, and Miss Wright was acting perfectly in line with all Christian history in going right to Hull, into the hardest quarter of Hull, and preaching what she believed to be the truth to the toughs of that city. If this spirit, I repeat, is to prevail in this country, if we are not to secure religious tolerance, if the Government do not consider this matter one of sufficient importance to command their attention, then it will be a serious mistake, in my opinion, on the part of those who lead this Government and this country.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is, no doubt, moved by the strongest Christian feeling, as well as philanthropy, in the manner in which he has brought this subject up twice. But, I think, if the hon. gentleman, instead of bringing up this question in this House, evidently for the purpose—the motive is good—of exciting public indignation, he might have done better. He says that Miss Wright was injudicious.

Mr. CHARLTON. I said nothing of the kind. I said it might be plain that she had been injudicious.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have the pleasure of knowing Miss Wright, and, I believe, she is a true Christian, and is anxious, according to her own views, to spread Evangelical religion. I say, as all hon. members of this House will say, that we should be only too glad to see her unmolested in her mission, and allowed to press her peculiar views on any audience she might address in this country, so long as she does not offend against the laws of the land. But it occurs to me that the hon. gentleman, instead of making speeches on the floor of this House, had better have gone and been one of the escorts of Miss Wright. But he says that St. Paul was injudicious; and, no doubt, the hon. gentleman thought that he, too, would be injudicious to go to Hull and get forty stripes instead of one. The hon. gentleman ought to know, and, in fact, he does know, what the law of the land is. He knows perfectly well that the administration of justice, especially of the criminal law, rests with the Governments of each of the Provinces of the Dominion. He knows that those Governments have, so far as I know, fully accepted the responsibility, and that peace and good order have been kept in all the Provinces. I have no doubt that if this riot or riotous proceeding had been called to the attention of the Provincial Government, as it ought to have been, either by the hon. gentleman or those who take a great interest in this particular mission of Miss Wright, the Government of Quebec, even Mr. Mercier, the supporter of the Jesuits, would have seen that the law was obeyed in Hull. All that had to be done was simply for any person to get two magistrates, if there was any fear of a riot, to sign a requisition, and the whole Militia force of the country would be brought out to protect Miss Wright and those who went with her. That has been done frequently, and wherever there has been any thing like riot or disturbance—and we have had disturbances in Upper Canada and Lower Canada, and we have had riots for various causes—whenever the magistrates called out the militia, they were on hand to effectually protect every British subject, every Canadian citizen, in the full enjoyment of his rights. There was apparently, from my reading of the newspaper this morning, a very great want of energy on the part of the municipal authorities; but I speak with some reserve, because we have only the statement in the press. It is very disappointing, however, I must say, that this lady could not go there with her friends and companions unmolested and hold meetings and see people, so long as the proceedings were not contrary to law or to morals. But all we can do is to express as individuals our strong disapprobation at such supineness, such want of energy, and want of a sense of responsibility—if the statements are true—on the part of the local municipality. I would ask the hon. gentleman to rise and say what the Dominion Government could do. What can we do? We have no power to administer the law of the land as regards the administration of justice. If the disturbances assume the proportions of a rebellion, then the military law comes in, military considerations arise, and then a power vested in the Dominion Government must be exercised and great would be the responsibility if the Dominion Government did not exercise it when disturbances amounted to rebellion. But so long as these are mere breaches of the peace, we are utterly powerless. Look at the statutes of the land, look at the constitution, and you will see that the Provinces, as regards the administration of criminal justice, retain the power they possessed before Confederation. The whole power they possessed, except that they will have to invoke the intervention of the Dominion, or, at all events, of the Military Department of the Dominion, if the civil force is unable to secure the protection of the subject. The hon. gentleman is doing no good by bringing up this matter here. He has had no design to do good, the House will see that. The hon. gentleman wants to pose as a special protector of certain classes and certain individuals. I must say that I look down upon the course of the hon. gentleman. If he had really wished to protect Miss Wright and keep order in Hull, he should have gone with her and stood by her, instead of coming here whining, in order to raise a cry in the country, when he would not raise his finger for her protection or for the protection of anyone with her.

Mr. CHARLTON. One or two remarks made by the right hon. gentleman call for a reply from me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Spoken ; order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not in order unless he has the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. He has spoken.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think the remarks of the Prime Minister call for some reply, and if the House will permit—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order ; spoken ; sit down.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move the adjournment of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. You are too late. It has already been moved.

Mr. MITCHELL. The reason I speak is because I think when a gentleman is attacked he should have an opportunity of defending himself.

Mr. BERGERON. He is the attacker himself.

Mr. MITCHELL. I know nothing of what happened before I came into the House, but I will move the adjournment of the debate, and I will do it simply for the reason of giving the gentleman who is attacked an opportunity of defending himself.

An hon. MEMBER. He was not attacked ; he commenced it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not approve of what my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) has done, but I think he has the right to have an opportunity of defending himself, and I move the adjournment of the debate.

An hon. MEMBER. There is no debate to be adjourned.

Mr. LAURIER. The remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) called from the First Minister an answer which was somewhat warm in tone, and the First Minister himself will agree, that on the spur of a moment he made some charges against my hon. friend to which it would certainly be unfair to refuse him the right to reply at this moment. I do not claim that my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has the right to go over the ground covered by his previous remarks, but every one will agree with me that he should have the right to give some explanation of the charges that are brought against him.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I brought no charges.

Mr. CHARLTON. It was not my desire, in the remarks I had made, to excite religious animosity and prejudice in this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Spoken ; order.

An hon. MEMBER. Why did you make them?

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman wants to make a personal explanation, I cannot deny that right to him, but it must not exceed the very limited field to which personal explanations are confined.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have to say that, in my opinion, the First Minister has no right to impute to any member of this House—no matter how humble he may be—any motives of the character he has imputed to me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair ; order.

Mr. CHARLTON. The course taken by the Premier was simply a piece of special pleading, to cast reproach and discredit on the position I have taken.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CHARLTON. He asks in a sneering tone : “ Why had I not gone over to Hull with Miss Wright, and acted as escort to protect her, instead of raising this question in Parliament ? ” Does the hon. the leader of the Government wish to have a civil war in this country ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does he wish the private citizens of this country to form themselves into an escort for the purpose of maintaining the laws which it is the bounden duty of the authorities to uphold ? Would he like to see a thousand men marching from Ottawa to Hull to enforce for Miss Wright the rights which she is under the law entitled to. The right hon. gentleman is inciting to riot and inciting to bloodshed in the arguments he has used on this occasion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No ; order.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman said that if I had any desire to do good I should go over to Hull to protect this young lady. I say again that the hon. gentleman had no right to impute any such motives to me that he did. I feel as every Protestant in this House feels, and as every lover of liberty in this country feels, that a gross outrage has been perpetrated, that the rights of free speech have been trampled into the dust, that the rights of the subject have been disregarded in a city of this land, and that the Government of this country, through the course taken by the First Minister, are laying themselves open to the charge of trying to palliate the offence.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no; order.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not come whining to this House, as has been said. I arraign the Government in the light of the public opinion of the country.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to say that the best interests of the whole community of Canada depend upon our observing—I will not say the tone or the language of the First Minister—but that fundamental rule which he laid down for our action in this matter. So long, Sir, as we feel that it is for the Province to act, we may well as citizens of Canada who do not dwell in the Province, watch the course taken by the Province, and express our opinions as citizens of Canada, as to what ought to be done, but we ought not to attempt to interfere, either coercively, threateningly or otherwise in a capacity in which we have no right to interfere, as members of this House. There is a Legislature sitting at this moment in Quebec, which has charge of this matter. There is a Legislature there sitting to whom the proper observations relative to what has taken place to our great regret in the city of Hull, might have been addressed. Let them be addressed there. Let us not despair—I shall not say despair, but rather let us confidently expect that in the Legislature to which this matter properly belongs, it will be brought up and that justice will be done. I can assure the hon. gentleman who has brought this question before this House, that the prospects of liberty and justice being advanced are not brightened, rather, they are darkened, when an attempt is made, by bodies which have no power to speak authoritatively in the matter, to interfere in a question belonging to provincial rights.

Mr. FLYNN. I cannot help saying that I am at a loss to know what motive the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) has in bringing this matter twice before this House. There is not a man in this House who does not deplore the unfortunate occurrence of last night, but the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) must have known, as he has been told by the leader of the Government and by my hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake), that this House has nothing to do with it. If that hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) was animated by a sole desire for the public peace of this country, why, when he came here at the opening of the Session, did he not call the Prime Minister's attention to the fact that the rabble of the neighboring city of Toronto attacked a high dignitary of the Catholic Church? If the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) was animated by a high and disinterested desire for our public welfare he would have brought that matter forward. Now he brings this matter forward, when it ought never to have been called, to the attention of this House.

Mr. BERGERON. He did it for the galleries.

Mr. FLYNN. I fear he brought it forward for the purpose of exciting the passions which unfortunately exist in Canada to-day; passions which ought not to exist, but which are excited and fostered by the conduct of that hon. gentleman for the last twelve months; passions not calculated to promote the material interests and prosperity of the country, passions which, if raised, will make people glad to leave this country. I hope, Sir, that the majority of the independence and intelligence of this country will be prompt to stamp out the efforts of these braggarts, these fanatics and these firebrands, and that they will soon find that they no longer have any influence to disturb the peace of the community.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman who last addressed the House has referred to the rabble in Toronto who attacked the Archbishop on his arrival in that city not so very long ago. I can say, Sir, for the city of Toronto that the mayor and the municipal authorities took every precaution that was necessary for the protection of that prelate on his entrance to the city. I can say that they called out the whole police force of the city, and that the attack that was made was publicly regretted and apologised for by every one in authority there, and that, after all, it was only the act of some half-dozen misguided young men and boys. These incidents which have occurred across the river last night and last night week, are incidents most regrettable in their character. In the first instance, we were told that they were the acts of some men under the influence of liquor, or of some thoughtless rabble; but last night the affair assumed a more serious aspect, and we are told there were a thousand people there, and that they went repeatedly to the stone quarries to get supplies of stones. Captain Joshua Wright, whom I saw last night in Hull, told me that he was struck down by a stone striking his forehead, that he was kicked after being knocked down, and that he was insensible for many minutes. He and his friends were attacked by men whom he knew, in a most cruel manner. This was the more regrettable, as he was performing a mission of peace. He had asked the citizens of Ottawa in a letter to the press, not to go to Hull and interfere, because he believed the citizens of Hull were peaceably disposed, and would be disposed to control any mob element that might show itself. It is regrettable that the mayor of the city and alderman Wright and others had so underrated the strength of this movement and the mob element in Hull, and it may be that the offer which was made to Miss Wright and refused by her in the first instance, that an escort of sufficient strength should accompany her, will be accepted on the next occasion, and that they will probably see that Miss Wright and those associated with her in her work are protected. I wish to make just one further remark. The hon. member for North Norfolk has mentioned that in 1878, on the occasion of the disturbances in Montreal, Mr. Mackenzie secured for the Orangemen of that city the right to walk. In that I think the hon. member is mistaken. A deputation met Mr. Mackenzie—

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. This is not the question.

Mr. WALLACE. I am replying to what was stated. A deputation met Mr. Mackenzie and he made substantially the same statement on that occasion that the right hon. Premier made on this.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question now before the House, on the motion for adjournment, is what happened in Hull last night, and it is useless to go back to discuss what took place in 1878.

Mr. WALLACE. I was simply replying to what was said.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would point out that the hon. gentleman opposite was allowed to state that the Government of Mr. Mackenzie allowed the Orangemen to walk. My hon. friend behind me says that that is a mistake, that my hon. friend then took the same course as I advocate, and as the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) pressed just now. The matter was left to the local authorities, and on the requisition of two magistrates, troops were called out and peace was preserved.

Mr. McMULLEN. I beg leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion to adjourn withdrawn.

BEHRING SEA SEAL FISHERIES.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I see it stated in the Washington correspondence in one of our dailies, that the United States Government are making preparations for a return of the police to Behring Sea, with a view, of course, to the exclusion of Canadian fishermen from those waters. I would like to know whether the Government have any information on the subject, and whether any steps are being taken to protect the Canadian seal fishermen there from depredations of this sort?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have no information of any such preparations on the part of the United States, and I may say I do not believe it. Negotiations are now going on with the Government at Washington, which will, I hope, pursuing the language of the Speech from the Throne, result in a satisfactory settlement of all those matters.

CENSUS RETURN OF PAGANS.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for :

Return showing the names of the six Pagans returned for the parish of Ste. Elizabeth, in the County of Joliette and Province of Quebec, in the census returns of 1881, as appears from the original schedule of the enumerator for that parish.

He said: I have just one word to say about this matter. These six Pagans, so-called, I am informed, consist of a Presbyterian family of French-Canadians, one of whom is a very respectable minister in this city. If it is the custom in the Province of Quebec to classify Protestants as Pagans, it evinces a state of feeling in that country which is much to be deplored, and I wish to know whether this charge made is correct or not—whether these six Pagans are, in point of fact, a Presbyterian French family consisting of six persons?

Mr. LAURIER. I would like my hon. friend to understand that the enumerator who took the census in the parish of Ste. Elizabeth is not the whole Province of Quebec.

Mr. BÉCHARD. Very probably the enumerator mistook the term presbytérien for païen, the termination in each case sounding alike.

Motion agreed to.

LANDS CLAIMED UNDER THE MANITOBA ACT.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. Though I would very much desire to have the information I proposed to ask for in the motion opposite my name, namely, for a list of every lot of land in the Province of Manitoba claimed under the provisions of the Manitoba Act, and occupied or possessed before the transfer, at the same time as I am informed that it would cost $1,500 to prepare such a list, I do not wish that such a large expenditure should be incurred. I hope, however, that the hon. the Minister will, in a future report, publish the information asked in this return, as by so doing he would save a good deal of expense in the future to parties purchasing land, who wish to find out about the titles of the same. I therefore ask that the motion be withdrawn.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I should be most happy to give the hon. gentleman any information I possibly can, since the hon. gentleman withdraws his motion on learning the enormous cost it would entail.

Motion withdrawn.

INDIAN RESERVES, MANITOBA.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE moved for :

List of Indian Reserves within the Province of Manitoba, giving location and area of each one, number of Indians belonging to it at the time of location of such reserve, and number now actually living on same.

He said: The object of this motion is to find out whether some of those reserves, which are almost deserted, should not be thrown open to the public, in order that settlement might not be interrupted. Located as they are in the midst of settlements, they are an obstruction to colonisation, and therefore the Government should throw open to the settlers those reserves which are not now occupied by a sufficient number of Indians.

EXTENSION OF THE DERBY BRANCH RAILWAY.

Mr. MITCHELL moved for :

Copies of all papers, correspondence and agreements between the Government and the proprietors of the extension of the Derby Branch Railway in relation to the said extension.

He said: I regret very much that the Minister of Railways is not in his place, because it is a matter of some little importance.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps better defer it.

Mr. MITCHELL. He is in the House, and if he does not remain in his place to defend himself in matters affecting the Department I am not responsible. I wish to say, in relation to this matter, that there is a road in connection with the Intercolonial, which was built by the Government as a branch to that road, extending from the point where it crosses the two branches of the Miramichi, up to a place called Indian Town, some sixteen or seventeen miles from the connection with the Intercolonial road. There is on the other side of the river running from Chatham, first, the Chatham Bridge which connects the important town of Chatham with the deep water, and then the Northern and Western extending to Fredericton and crossing at Blackville, near Mr. Farley's mills. The two roads converge to one point, but after the building of the Derby branch there was a gap of eight and a half miles which required to be finished, to complete the road on the north of the river and connect with the junction of the Northern and Western at the Farley mills. I applied to the Government some years ago for the purpose of getting them to extend the Derby branch by building across that break of eight and a half miles. I pleaded to the Government to build that link as a continuation of the Derby branch as a Government work, which they had built and owned. In place of doing that, the hon. Minister of Railways recommended that a subsidy should be given for the building of that section, and that subsidy was taken up by the owners of the Northern and Western. They built the link between the end of the Derby branch and the crossing of the Northern and Western at Blackville, but though they have had that built for several years, the road has never been opened to the public, and the public money has been appropriated for a purpose which gives no benefit to the people. This is a matter the Government should take some notice of. I make no complaint against the proprietors of the Northern and Western road, who built and owned that link, but I do say that when a subsidy is given out of the treasury to build a railway, those who build that railway should be compelled to operate it, and give the public the benefit of the money expended in this connection. That is the point which I take. Though that eight and a-half miles of road has been built for two or three years or more, it has never been operated. The people get no benefit from it, and the money which has been voted might as well have been thrown into the sea as expended where it was, if it is not operated. The expenditure was necessary, the connection was necessary, it was desirable that the road should be built and operated, but for some reasons that the Northern and Western people probably understand in their own interest, it has not been operated, and the people have had to pay the money which has been expended, and the expenditure of which should inure to their benefit. I hope some member of the Government will take down the points which I have made, and will let the Minister of Railways know what is required in regard to this matter. I hope he will also note what I now state, that what we require is to know: first, whether or not the Government have entered into any arrangement that the road shall not be operated; and, secondly, whether the Government have entered into any arrangement that the road shall be operated? I desire to get any correspondence which has taken place between the Government and the proprietors of the Northern and Western road. These gentlemen are friends of mine and supported me at the last election, but I owe a duty to the people of the country which I am determined to press, and I contend that where men receive public money, and have the treasury left open to them, in order that they may give a public benefit; where they receive the money and build the road they are bound to operate it, unless there is some arrangement between the Government and themselves that it should not be operated. I therefore ask for this information. I do not blame the Government or any one in reference to this matter, but I want to get at the facts. Where a subsidy is granted, where men accept that subsidy for the construction of a railway, and own and control that railway, the Government should take care that these men should be compelled to operate the railway when it is built. This is a standing scandal in the county.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course the papers will be brought down, but I have a note here to the effect that, so far as can be discovered by the records of the Department, there is no arrangement for operating this branch of the railway.

REBATE OF DUTY UPON MALT.

Mr. LANDERKIN moved :

That whereas distillers are allowed a rebate of duty upon malt imported for use in the manufacture of spirits for export, it is, in the opinion of this House, but just and right that farmers and stock raisers who import corn to feed cattle or other stock for export should also receive a similar rebate.

He said: This is another of the drawbacks to which I have the honor to call the attention of the House. I say that this discriminates against the great farming masses of this country, and hence I consider it objectionable and believe it should be removed. I reiterate now what I said the other day, that all these drawbacks which discriminate against any class of the people of this country shall have my uncompromising opposition. I am bound to press matters of this character upon the House and the country until I find even-handed justice meted out to all classes in this country. I think it is about time that this drawback should be removed. I think it is not in the interests of this country or tending to preserve that harmony which should exist between all classes in Canada. Equal rights to all has been my motto always, and I will continue to advocate that policy, and nothing but equal rights will suit me. Anything else shall have my opposition in and out of this House. For these reasons I move this resolution.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I desire to say a few words to show the importance of this motion. As a matter of fact, malt is not imported for the manufacture of spirits, and therefore there is no drawback to be given. There is an excise duty on malt produced in this country of one cent per pound, and the amount which has been received by the Government from that source in three years is about $38.

Motion negatived on a division.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will allow the other motions of which I have given notice to stand.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I desire this courtesy to be extended to me. When we ask that a motion be allowed to stand, I think it is usual to allow it. If the Premier does not desire to use that courtesy, we will take the yeas and nays. I wish it to stand for public reasons of my own, and I think they would be satisfactory to the House and to the Premier to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, I will smother the hon. gentleman with roses and allow it to stand.

THE BEAUHARNOIS CANAL.

Mr. BAIN (Soulanges) moved for :

Copy of the reports, estimates, &c., of Thos. Munro, Esq., civil engineer, on the enlargement of the Beauharnois Canal, or the construction of a new canal, on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, between Lakes St. Francis and St. Louis. Also all papers, petitions, letters or other documents relating thereto, since 1st February, 1889.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think that motion can be agreed to, although I well understand the object of my hon. friend. But further enquiries are going to be made, and some very important subjects have to be considered. The whole matter is so very important, that it engages the most earnest attention of the Government. There is a confidential report, but we must have a full report on all the subjects.

Motion withdrawn.

POST OFFICE AT PIERREVILLE, P.Q.

Mr. CHOQUETTE moved for :

Copies of two enquiries and reports made by Messrs. Bourgeois, King and Bolduc, respecting the post office at Pierreville, P.Q.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no objections to bring down all the papers which are usually brought down, but the reports of the inspectors are generally printed as confidential.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Strike out the words "and reports."

POST OFFICE AT PALMER ROAD, P.E.I.

Mr. PERRY moved for :

Copies of all petitions, letters, &c., to the Department at Ottawa, praying for a post office at Palmer Road, P. E. I.; also all correspondence to and from the Post Office Department at Ottawa and the Post Office Inspector at Charlottetown, P.E.I., on the same subject.

He said : I wish to call the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that a petition, very largely signed by influential men, was sent to the Department praying for the establishment of a post office in that locality. The reason why a post office is needed there is because there are fishing establishments in the locality, and the people who are interested in the fishing industry are compelled to travel backwards and forwards two or three times a week to obtain their correspondence. Instead of placing the post office at the cross-roads, the officials have carried it a mile and a half or two miles further, and it is a long distance out of the way. These fishermen very naturally applied to Senator Howlan last winter to present their petition for a post office to the Department. The Minister, in answer to Senator Howlan, declared that the office would be opened as soon as possible, and Senator Howlan wrote to a certain gentleman at Palmer Road giving the answer of the Department to the petition. His letter reads as follows :—

"OTTAWA, 20th February, 1889.

"I duly received yours of the 8th inst, covering the petition, &c., for a post office. I went immediately to work with the Department, and this morning I am informed the office will be opened as soon as the necessary arrangements are made."

Senator Howlan naturally supposed from this, and I myself would have supposed from this, that the post office would be established as soon as the necessary arrangements could be made. But we find that

March slips through and April, May, June and July, without anything being done. Up to July nothing had been done towards establishing the post office, and I find that Senator Howlan wrote to the Department, and the answer he received from the Assistant Postmaster General was as follows :—

"OTTAWA, 20th July, 1889.

"DEAR MR. HOWLAN,—I am afraid the Postmaster General has forgotten the Palmer's Road post office. I will call his attention to it the first opportunity. He is away just now.

Yours faithfully,

"WILLIAM WHITE."

It appears up to that time no action was taken with respect to the establishment of the post office ; but Mr. White assured Senator Howlan that so soon as the Postmaster General returns he will bring it to his notice ; and he gave the Senator to understand that the post office would be established. Senator Howlan, on the receipt of that letter, wrote to the people interested, to the following effect :

"CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I., 24th July, 1889.

"I enclose you a letter, which I received in answer to mine, which will explain itself. It appears your post office has been overlooked, but will be attended to in due time."

Well, that due time has not yet arrived ; it is still "to-morrow" with respect to the establishment of this post office, for nothing has been done. When I asked the Postmaster General the reason why it had not been established, the answer I got, and I suppose it was the correct one, was that Mr. Hackett had written a letter that the post office was not required. If Mr. Hackett or any other person, whether a defeated candidate or a private gentleman, knew better the wants of the people than the people themselves or their representatives in this House, or the Senator who represents Prince County, and who is the only Senator who represents it, it is time we should know it. If the demands of the people of the Island, backed up by their representatives in this House and in the Senate, are to be frustrated by a defeated candidate or by any one else, it is time we should know it. I want the Government to know this, that the people of the Island are not satisfied to put up with this sort of rough treatment much longer. What have they done elsewhere ? Perhaps if we get the opportunity at the next election of sending six more representatives, the Island might return twelve men occupying seats on this side of the House. It is a wrong done to the people. It is done because the Government are led to believe that the people are all Grits ? That is a mistake, because, unfortunately there are some Conservatives living there. This is an example of using Government influence in the wrong direction. The Postmaster General should not take upon himself the responsibility of depriving these people of a post office without having some better information than he has obtained from a man, who, I believe, never saw the place, who has no interest in it, who cares not whether there is postal accommodation afforded or not. Those people are, however, paying their taxes, and the people of the Island are shouldering their share of the burdens of the country, and are as much a consuming people as any other people in the Dominion ; and when they are thus neglected it is time they should rise in their dignity and insist on getting their rights, as regards the establishment of post offices. How have I and my colleagues been treated in these postal matters? The outgoing Postmaster General, who is now Governor of Nova Scotia, told us a few years ago that he had ordered a post office to be established at Baltic, Malpeque, Lot 18. When we went a year ago to the Postmaster General, asking the reason why that post office had not been established, he again said that a letter had been received from Mr. Hackett stating that it was not required. Mr. Hackett, however, never saw the place. He does not know who lives there, he hardly knows in what township it is; and I am doubtful whether he knows whether it is in Prince Edward Island or Kamschatka. I hope the Postmaster General will promptly see the necessity of establishing this post office. It is time that the hon. Minister should know something about this, and it is very poor satisfaction to me or to the people to be told by the hon. gentleman that he knows nothing about it. What have we got a Post Office Department here for if it is not to give that information to the people's representatives and to the people at large which we may lawfully expect? If the Postmaster General establishes a post office there he will do an act of justice. We don't come here asking any favors, but we ask what is lawfully due us and what we have a right to get. We are not going to Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick, or anywhere outside of this capital; we have a right to ask for our rights here, and we do ask them. I trust the Postmaster General will see his way to order the post office to be established and so save these poor people from travelling two miles one way and two miles back, through bad roads, in order to mail their letters, when they ought to be able to do so more conveniently.

Mr. HAGGART. I might state that the Government have no objection to bring down the papers in reference to the application for the establishment of a post office at Palmer's Road station. The hon. gentleman was mistaken, when he said that the Post Office Department promised that a post office should be established there. There has not been any promise of the Department to that effect. An enquiry was ordered to be made as to the suitability of the place for a post office, and the Post Office Inspector replies that it is a sparsely-settled portion of the country, that there is another post office within a mile and a quarter also called Palmer post office, and another within five miles. The receipts from either of these post offices do not justify the establishment of another post office there. It was on that account solely that there was not a new post office established there, and not as the hon. gentleman states, from the recommendation of Mr. Hackett that no post office should be established.

SICK MARINERS' FUND.

Mr. FLYNN moved for:

Copies of correspondence in connection with a claim made by the District of St. Peters, in the County of Richmond, for medical attendance and board of Kenneth Chisholm, a sick mariner, belonging to the schooner Jeanie.

He said: This claim is made by the District of St. Peters, in the county I represent, under what is known as the Sick and Distressed Seamen's Act. The head of the Department considers that it is not liable to pay the amount, and bases his opinion on the 6th section of chapter 76 of the Revised Statutes, entitled "An Act respecting Sick and Distressed Mariners." When the hon. Minister announced to me that decision, I looked over the Act carefully, and after reading the whole chapter, I thought that it was not proper to interpret the Act from that isolated passage. I know that in bringing this matter before the House, and in taking issue with the hon. Minister's interpretation, I am at a great disadvantage, as the hon. gentleman is a lawyer, who had the reputation in his own Province of being a good one, and my knowledge of law is very limited; but I will state my reason for the view I take. In the first place, the interpretation put upon that statute by the hon. Minister of Marine has never been put upon it in the last twenty years, or since, a little after Confederation, the Act was placed on the Statute-book. Ever since that time every sick mariner, when the owner of a vessel or a captain paid tonnage dues, was entitled to relief from the Dominion of Canada, and it is only within a very few months that a different interpretation has been placed upon the Act. The Department has always taken a broader, more liberal, and, in my opinion, more just view of the statute than it has taken recently. As I have stated, the rule of interpretation of statutes is not to take an isolated section and to say that it means so-and-so, but to bring to it the context and also the spirit of the Act; and if the statute is ambiguous or confused in its meaning, I believe the rule is to endeavor to ascertain what was the intention of the Legislature. I hold that it could not have been the intention of the Legislature, in passing this Act, to have it administered according to the interpretation the hon. Minister puts upon it. In substantiation of that view of the interpretation of statutes, let me quote from Maxwell, a high authority on the subject. Speaking of the statutes, he says:

"They have frequently more than one equally obvious and popular meaning; words used in reference to one subject or set of circumstances may convey a meaning quite different from what the same words used in reference to another set of circumstances and another object would convey. Many admit of indefinite extension or restriction, according to the subject to which they relate, and the scope and object in contemplation. They may convey faithfully enough all that was intended, and yet comprise also much that was not; or, be so restricted in meaning as not to reach all the cases which fall within the real intention. Even, therefore, where there is no indistinctness or conflict of thought, or carelessness of expression in a statute, there is enough in the natural vagueness and elasticity of language to account for the difficulty so frequently found in ascertaining the meaning of an enactment, with the degree of accuracy necessary for determining whether a particular case falls within it. But statutes are not always drawn by skilled hands, and they are always exposed to the risk of alterations by many hands which introduce different styles and consequent difficulties of interpretation. Nothing, it has been said by a great authority, is so difficult as to construct properly an Act of Parliament; and nothing so easy as to pull it to pieces. The literal construction then, has, in general, but a prima facie preference. To arrive at the real meaning, it is always necessary to take a broad general view of the Act, so as to get an exact conception of its aim, scope and object. It is necessary, according to Lord Coke, to consider, 1. What was the law before the Act was passed; 2. What was the mischief or defect for which the law had not provided; 3. What remedy Parliament has appointed; and 4. The reason of the remedy. According to another authority, the true meaning is to be found, not merely from the words of the Act, but from the cause and necessity of its being made, from a comparison of its several parts and from extraneous circumstances. The true meaning of any passage is to be found not merely in the words of that passage, but in comparing it with every other part of the law, ascertaining also what were the circumstances with reference to which the words were used, and what was the object appearing from those circumstances, which the Legislature had in view."

These passages, I think, sustain my contention, that the construction put upon the statute by the hon. Minister is too narrow, too limited, and not in accordance with the intention and spirit of the Legislature when the Act was passed. Now, Sir, the Act makes the payment of tonnage dues compulsory. No vessel can be entered or cleared from any port in the Dominion of Canada, unless the owner of the vessel pays those dues. The tonnage is 2 cents a ton on every vessel under 100 tons, payable once a year, and if the vessel is over 100 tons it is payable twice a year. It is the duty of the collector of the port where the vessel enters or clears to transmit these dues to the Finance Minister or the Receiver General, and they are kept as a trust fund known as the Sick Mariners' Fund, for the benefit of sick and distressed mariners. Now, if the interpretation put upon that statute by the hon. Minister of Marine is a correct one, then this fund could not be, as it purports to be, for the relief of distressed mariners, but it would be only a fund for the relief of a limited number of distressed mariners. My contention is that a vessel having been compelled to pay certain tonnage dues before entering a port and clearing, and the law stating those dues will form a fund for the relief of sick and distressed mariners, if any one of the crew become sick or disabled, he is entitled to relief from that fund no matter where that seaman may be landed. The hon. Minister puts another interpretation on the Act. He says that, according to the sixth section, the mariner is only entitled to relief where there is a marine hospital, or, in the absence of a marine hospital, only where the vessel has paid her tonnage dues, limiting the relief that could be afforded to the chance of a marine hospital being at the port, or of the tonnage dues being paid there. Now, in the Maritime Provinces, where there are so many ports, there are not more than fourteen or fifteen marine hospitals. Take the case of a vessel clearing, just as the case in point, from the port of Charlottetown and being obliged to land a sick mariner in the port of St. Peters, Cape Breton, where there is no marine hospital and no sick mariners' fund. According to the interpretation of the hon. the Minister of Marine, that sick mariner is not entitled to be cared for out of the fund; but my contention is, that no matter where the fund is collected that sick mariner is bound to obtain relief wherever he is landed, and that relief ought to be paid for by the Department out of the fund for sick and distressed seamen. Let me suppose that a vessel sails in the early spring from Charlottetown, having paid its dues, and goes down to the Bras d'Or Lake to trade in that section, and a man falls sick on board and has to be landed at St. Peters. He can get no relief. Why? Because the vessel paid its dues where the custom collector would not clear it if the dues were not paid, and because there is no marine hospital at St. Peters. If that interpretation of the law is the interpretation given by legal gentlemen, I hold that such was not the intention of the legislation, and that for the last twenty years such interpretation has never been acted upon. Even in the port of Arichat, cases have occurred month after month, there being no marine hospital there, of sick seamen having to be cared for, and the question was never asked of the captain, "Where did you pay your dues?" But, if it was found he had a receipt for the payment of the tonnage dues, no matter in what port he paid them, the sick mariner was provided medical attendance and board, and the bill for the expense sent to the Department and paid. That has been the interpretation for the last twenty years. That was the interpretation acted upon when the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) presided over this Department, and while he presided he gave general satisfaction to the people, and that is the interpretation acted upon until very recently. If the law is, as the hon. gentleman contends it is, it is a narrow and limited law, and I hold that it was the intention of the Legislature which passed it, that it should have a wider scope and a more general interpretation. I had a conversation with the hon. Minister, and not agreeing with his views of the law, I stated, and he consented to it, that I would put the question in order to elicit a discussion in the House. I have, as briefly and plainly as I possibly could, laid the matter before the House, and I now leave to hon. gentlemen who are conversant with the law to say whether my view or the hon. the Minister's is the correct one.

Mr. TUPPER. When the hon. gentleman spoke to me some time ago about this case of Kenneth Chisholm, I had no idea that his opinion of the result of our conversation was that we would submit the legal question to this House for decision, but I understood the hon. gentleman wished to bring up the question as to whether the Act relating to sick seamen and distressed mariners was broader than my interpretation of it. First of all, in reference to the case of Kenneth Chisholm, I do not think that under his, or any construction of the Act, that case could have been entertained. I wrote to the hon. gentleman some time ago that my information was that the collector had reported that the master of the vessel upon which Kenneth Chisholm was a seaman had never reported the case, or made any application to him for landing or providing for the seaman, and he had no recollection where the vessel paid sick mariners' dues the year in question. So that the case on which the hon. gentleman asked this House for an opinion was a case in which the master neglected every precaution and in which there was not the slightest evidence to show that he had paid the tonnage dues. In reference to the construction of the Act, I do not think there can be much difficulty. Clauses five and six state that wherever there is a marine hospital for the sick seaman of a Canadian vessel which has paid her dues in any port in Canada, that sick seaman may gratuitously be received and treated at that marine hospital, but if a ship comes into a port in Canada with a sick seaman and there is no marine hospital—not merely a marine hospital in which sick mariners are received—but one in which mariners are exclusively received, in that case the master, when he claims treatment at the hands of the Government through the Collector of Customs, must pay dues there, no matter whether he paid his dues before or not. The Act states that expressly, but the hon. gentleman appeals to a practice which he says I admitted prevailed in the Department. I could not speak of the practice of the Department twenty years ago, but I was informed in the Department that this construction of the Act had not been adhered to. I have no authority to pay a dollar out of what is called the Sick Mariners' Fund unless the payments are sanctioned by the Act, and I should be very sorry to have a discretion put in my hands to decide on special cases, when the payment might not be contemplated by the Act. Although the statute is very clear in the two sections to which I have referred, it goes on to refer to the case of sick seamen who do not come within those clauses, and this is the provision :

"Any shipwrecked, destitute or otherwise distressed seamen may, by authority from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, be temporarily boarded and lodged, and taken care of, at any Marine or Seamen's Hospital devoted exclusively to the reception, care and treatment of sick mariners."

Even in that case the Minister of Marine is not able to say where these seamen shall be cared for, and the Legislature has taken great pains in that regard. As to the policy on which that Act was founded, I might remind my hon. friend that we must follow the Act very closely in the administration of the funds, and now more than ever, because last year this fund, which was intended to be self-sustaining, had an amount of receipts of about $39,000, while about $41,000 was paid out. Since Confederation, we have expended about $11,000 on account of this fund over and above what we have received ; so that, while there is not the slightest intention on the part of the Department to refuse or to deny any privilege to which a sailor may be entitled under the provisions of the statute, there has been a very eager desire, as far as I am concerned, to see that none of the money constituting the so-called Mariners' Fund is expended for any purpose which is not within the provisions of that Act. Of course, if it should become the policy of Parliament to go further and to make a sweeping provision for the event of sickness occurring amongst the mariners, the Department will have to carry out the will of Parliament, but, in that case, it will have to be considered whether the fund should be self-supporting or not. The papers in regard to the case of Kenneth Chisholm will be brought down, but I may say that there was no intention to depart from the provisions of the Act in that particular.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This is a rather important matter to the Maritime Provinces, and I think the construction which is put on the Act by the Minister of Marine is a very narrow one. It is true that the language of the statute is not very clear, but it is provided that at certain ports this duty shall be levied and paid by certain vessels for the benefit of this fund. Vessels of less than 100 tons are to pay only once a year, and those over 100 tons three times a year. These vessels are to have the benefit of the Act whether they pay once or three times a year, but, if the construction put upon the Act by my hon. friend is correct, a vessel which enters a dozen ports in the course of a year would have to pay every time she entered a port, and that would conflict with the policy of Parliament, as expressed in the Act, that vessels of more than 100 tons should pay only three times a year, and vessels under 100 tons once a year. The fifth section provides that the master or person in command of any vessel paying any such duty may send to the Marine Hospital, where it exists, any sick mariner belonging to his vessel, and where such hospital does not exist, he may send him to any hospital designated and appointed by the Department. It is clear that where the rate has been paid once a year in the one case or three times a year in the other, the sick mariner would be entitled to the benefit of that provision, and it is very peculiar that this change should be made, because, if the contention of the Minister is correct, the master may send the sick man to a hospital in a port where arrangements have been made by the Dominion authorities for that purpose, after paying three times in the year, but, if the vessel goes to a port where there is no marine hospital, he must pay over again. The sixth section says :

"At any port at which such rate or duty as aforesaid is received, and at all for which there is no marine or seamen's hospital or other hospital so designated and appointed as aforesaid."

And so on. Taking those words and reading them with the other words of the Act, I am inclined to think that it should be read as if it were at any port where such money is received, that is, the ports designated in the 4th section, and in that case there is no reason for the contention of the hon. gentleman that the duty should be paid at the particular port where the sick man is left, but that it should not be distinguished from the port where there is a hospital designated by the Government. I think it means exactly the same as the 5th section, that, wherever such duties are collected, the sick mariner is entitled to be received in any port.

Mr. TUPPER. I admit the argument the hon. gentleman is now making is almost unanswerable, but if you will read on, you will find the words "which shall be paid by the master or person in command" of such vessels paying the duty.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I admit that, to a certain extent, the construction put forward is strictly a narrow interpretation of it, and would maintain the position taken by my hon. friend ; but when I read the whole language I cannot construe it so, and bring the whole Act into harmony. If a vessel goes to any port in those Provinces where there is a marine hospital she has got to pay the duty every time, but if she goes to a port where there is no marine hospital she is only obliged to say that she has paid at some other ports three times. Take a vessel belonging to Prince Edward Island or Nova Scotia ; she would probably visit half-a-dozen ports in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia during the year. If that vessel goes to a port where there is a hospital and a sick man wants to enter it, the master makes his entry and pays his charge to the sick fund ; but when he goes into a port like Shediac where there is no marine hospital, he produces a receipt that he has paid three times, and if he got sick two or three days afterwards, he would have to pay again. A man who would put himself in a position to take advantage of this Act would have to pay again, although he had paid three times during the year in order to get the benefit. That would be the result of my hon. friend's construction.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I must admit that the section under discussion is most unfortunately worded ;

I must further admit that, if the construction put upon by the Minister is correct, there is no doubt that the object and the intention of Parliament in passing this law will be in many cases entirely defeated. Now, if I understand the contention of the hon. gentleman aright it is this: that a vessel paying the sick mariners' fund fees, if she has a 100 tons burden, is obliged to pay once in a year, and the statute says not oftener. It is not affirmative that she shall pay but once in a year, but it is negative that she shall not be compelled to pay more than once. She is only entitled to pay once; she is not obliged to pay oftener in order that she may obtain the benefits which are to be derived under this Act for sick mariners. Vessels of over 100 tons are compelled to pay three times in the year, but not oftener. So if a vessel is under 100 tons she pays the sick mariners' fund fees once in a year, and comes under the statute and is entitled to the benefit of that statute which it is intended to confer upon sick or disabled mariners. Now, if that vessel goes into port where there is a hospital and the master produces an order, whether he pays the fees in that particular port or not, under the fifth section, there is no doubt that a sick mariner can be taken to that hospital and has a right to be treated. Supposing a vessel leaves Yarmouth, and she goes to Halifax, where there is a hospital, after paying her fees in Yarmouth three times, if she is over 100 tons, or paid them once, if under 100 tons, then she is entitled to the benefit of the sick mariners' fund. If she goes into a harbor where there is a hospital, whether it is a port where she has paid or not, under the fifth section, the sick mariner is taken care of and cured without any expense, and without the payment of fees. Then she goes into the port at Arichat, we will say, where there is no hospital, and, if I understand my hon. friend aright, she is not entitled to the benefit.

Mr. TUPPER. Unless she pays the dues.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That construction, it seems to me, may be technically correct; it is very hard to reconcile the words in the Act with any other construction. But the hon. gentleman will see that it is entirely opposed to and defeats the object of the statute. Take this very vessel we have in view. She leaves Yarmouth and goes to Halifax. One of the seamen breaks his leg and is immediately taken to the hospital and placed under care and treated. The vessel goes into Arichat and one of the seamen becomes disabled, and has to go on shore. They say: We will not take care of you because there is no marine hospital here, and you did not become sick until you arrived at Arichat. That is not the intention of this section. This section says: If you go into a port where there is no hospital, but the vessel has paid a fee which the law requires and which the law says she shall not be obliged to pay more than once, then the collector of that port may take charge of him and take the seaman to the nearest public hospital and pay his fees. My hon. friend points out that he must pay his fee in starting. If a foreign vessel goes into a port it must pay the fees when it makes its entry. That is clear enough under the fourth section. But another vessel, a coasting vessel, when she starts off in the spring of the year, if she wishes to enjoy the benefit of the sick mariners' fund, must pay the fee at the port where she leaves. If she does that, under the construction which I am sure that the Department wish to be put upon the Act, the mariners would be entitled, whether they were in a port where there was a hospital or not, to the benefit of the mariners' sick fund and the seamen must be taken care of. I frankly admit that the section is very unfortunately worded, and that by one construction of it a man cannot be taken care of until the vessel pays all the fees over again. But I cannot see anything in the Act to justify or sanction the compelling of a man to pay the fees twice, when, in the second sub-section of section one, it is stated that he has to pay the fees once, but not oftener. If the Minister does not amend the section, he would not offend against any kind of construction if he were to place a broad and reasonable view upon the sixth section, and carry out what was, no doubt, the spirit and intention of Parliament, namely: that a seaman on board of a vessel which has once paid into the sick mariners' fund should be entitled to the benefits of the fund, whether there was a hospital or not at the port where he was landed; and if there was a hospital, he should be taken there, and if there was not a hospital, he should be taken to the nearest public hospital at the public charge. It seems unreasonable that a man should receive medical attendance if he happens to be disabled at a port where there is a hospital, but if at a port where there is not a hospital, that he should be thrown on the charity of the world. That was not the intention of Parliament, although it may not have been expressed very clearly, and the hon. gentleman will be doing natural and common justice, and carrying out the wishes of Parliament and the spirit of the statute, if he should strain the language a little so that a sick mariner on board a vessel which had paid the fees should be entitled to the benefit at whatever port he might be landed.

Mr. TUPPER. I did not catch the point until it was brought out by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), and I never had the question before me. I would be the last man to construe this or any other section against seamen, if I could possibly avoid it. While I will consider the views of the hon. and learned gentlemen opposite, I must say that, on the first blush of the argument, I cannot agree altogether with the argument of those hon. members. They have drawn my attention to sub-sections two and three of section four, and a great deal of argument has been founded on the words "but not oftener." All I understand those words to mean is this: that no vessel should be compelled to pay more than that amount of dues once.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The words are "shall be liable."

Mr. TUPPER. We can compel the vessel to pay that amount once, but not oftener. Another section comes in and says that, although we cannot compel you to pay more than once in the case of one voyage and three times in the case of other voyages, yet, on the other hand, you shall not have any gratuitous assistance for your sick mariners at a certain class of port, unless you again pay that amount; we will not compel you, for the Act says you can provide for your own sick seamen and make provision for them, but if you come to a port where there is no marine hospital, and you have not paid the dues at that port, Parliament has said distinctly, not by the words quoted by the member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), but by the rest of the section, that there shall be no gratuitous assistance. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the balance of the clause, which he omitted to read, and especially to the words "Captain or person in command, paying such rate or dues at such port." I think those words enable us to meet the otherwise unanswerable argument of the hon. gentleman for St. John.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Suppose a sailor goes to a port where there is a marine hospital; he has a right to be taken to that hospital and cared for and all expenses paid. The anomaly is that if a sick seaman is left at a port where there is no hospital, this is not done.

Mr. TUPPER. Not unless he pays the dues. It is an arbitrary way of raising the funds.

Mr. MITCHELL. There has been a good deal of hair-splitting indulged in as to the meaning of the terms of the Act. The Act was passed, I believe, under my administration of the affairs of the Department, and the fact that it was a consolidation may possibly have led to some indefiniteness about it. I am not prepared to offer an opinion as to whether the Minister is right in his contention or not; but I am prepared to say this, that in the preparation of that Act there was no intention to exclude mariners who met with misfortune at a port where there was no marine hospital. The Act was based upon this fact: that we desired that the institution should be self-supporting, or comparatively so, and where a ship had paid the sick dues at any one port, the mariners were entitled to be taken care of, if accident or misfortune overtook them. That was the spirit of the Act. If the Act was so drawn as not to clearly express the intention of its framer, it was my misfortune. But I think when one takes up the Act and examines the spirit of it, and reads the different sections, as has been done by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), and by the Minister, it is hair-splitting to raise the question that, because the vessel entered a port where there was no hospital and did not pay the dues, the expenses of a sick mariner should not be met out of the general fund, to which the ship had contributed. I take that to be the spirit of the Act, and during my administration of the Department for seven and a half years such a question was never raised, and I think the Minister, in considering the matter, will probably conclude, whether he is legally and strictly right in his contention or not, that the spirit of the Act is clear, and that when a ship contributes to the fund for the support of sick mariners, seamen should get the benefit of the fund when misfortune overtook them. I think the Minister, after consideration, will see that it is well to give a liberal construction to the Act which the hon. gentleman has presented. That is the view I take of it, and I think the Minister will see the propriety of adopting that course.

Motion agreed to.

TIDAL OBSERVATIONS.

Mr. CURRAN moved for:

Return showing the annual losses of ships since 1868 in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and on the Atlantic coast, owing to tides, currents and fogs, with the name and tonnage of each vessel, and such particulars in each case as to the causes and extent of damage, as may be in the possession of the Government.

He said: I desire to make a very few remarks at present, in connection with this subject, which I wish to impress, not merely on the hon. Minister in charge of the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the members of the Government, but also the other members of this House. I trust that the Government and Parliament will see the necessity for making tidal observations and observations in regard to the currents in Canadian waters. The members of the various scientific associations, combined with those who are engaged in navigation, have been impressing this matter upon the Government for very many years past, and I believe that a petition signed by not less than 399 masters and officers of ships frequenting those waters has been laid before Parliament. Such was the importance and force of this representation, that promises have been made by the Minister that some steps would be taken in order to arrive at the desired results. The petition to which I refer states that a practical knowledge of the currents for the purpose of navigation does not now exist; that it is attainable by a properly conducted system of observations, and that the petitioners can make a practical use in navigation of the results of the observations. Some time ago a series of questions were issued to the leading shipmasters of the country by a committee of gentlemen formed in 1885, and the answers of these leading shipmasters were sent to the Department in connection with this matter. It is, no doubt, generally known that in England tide tables are published for the British and Irish waters. I hold in my hand the report for 1885, in which all the observations are given for British waters; and in the United States we have also those tide tables published; and although they do not give so much information as the British tide tables, yet they give the results of the observations on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts. The rules of the Imperial Board of Trade require that masters of ships should take a certificate of competency; and to obtain the certificate they pass an examination which, in the case of those desiring a certificate for the coasting trade, includes a knowledge of the tides and tidal currents which are reported upon in the volume I have just referred to. The testimony as to the value of such surveys may be judged from the high authorities which have pronounced upon it, a work on practical navigation, which has received the approbation of the naval authorities of Great Britain and the United States, being supplied to the fleets of both countries. That work is entitled "Wrinkles on Practical Navigation," by S. T. S. Lecky, Master Mariner, R.N. That gentleman puts two books, namely, the Admiralty Tide Tables, and Galbraith & Houghton's Manual of the Tides and Tidal Currents in a list of sixteen books, which he says:

"May be considered absolutely essential to safe navigation in the present day when the question of speed enters so largely into the calculation."

The testimony of Staff Commander Maxwell, R.N., quoted in the previous letters which were sent into the Department, may be also referred to. The petitions of the shipowners, of agents, and of boards of trade presented during the last five years, have asked that those tidal observations should be made, and the shipowners and agents, from their close connections with shipmasters, may be regarded as representing the views of the latter on the matter. The whole subject is one which deserves the most serious consideration of the Government. I believe it has been so far only a question of lack of funds to proceed with the work, as well as the opinion expressed in certain quarters that any moneys that may be available would be better employed in perfecting the lighthouse system. At all events, the gentlemen who have given this subject such earnest attention, men of high scientific qualification, men who are deeply interested in the navigation of our waters, who have experienced so much difficulty in the past, and who have been claiming the attention of the Government for so long a time, will, I trust, now meet with some encouragement from the hon. Minister at the head of the Department. Whilst I have quoted here a number of authorities showing how important this matter is, I believe that there will be no evidence so convincing to the public mind as the information contained in the annual wreck list since Confederation. If the hon. Minister will consent that a return shall be brought down showing the returns during the past twenty-one years it will convince all those who take an interest in the matter that the subject is one well worthy of consideration.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I quite appreciate the object my hon. friend has in asking for that return, and, in fact, I thought of making a similar motion myself. I would ask my hon. friend to amend his motion by making provision for the Bay of Fundy as well as the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Mr. TUPPER. The words "and Atlantic coast" can be added to the motion. I have no objection to bring down the return.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). That will be satisfactory.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

BERTHIER COUNTY MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL moved for :

Copies of all petitions from the inhabitants of St. Gabriel and St. Damien, praying that their mails be sent them by railway; also, of all letters forwarding these petitions, of all reports from the Post Office Inspector, and of all orders issued by the Postmaster General respecting the aforesaid petitions.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no objection to bringing down all the returns asked for by the hon. gentleman. The only reason the prayer of the petition was not granted was that it would entail an expenditure of over $1,200, and the Department did not feel justified in making that expenditure in view of the small receipts from that neighborhood.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL moved for :

Copies of all petitions praying for the closing of the Post Office at Fernetville, in the County of Berthier, and the erection of a Post Office at the Berthier Junction Station, on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway; also, of all petitions opposed to this proceeding; also, of the letters forwarding these petitions; also, of the report of the Post Office Inspector in this matter; and, speaking generally, of all documents bearing on this subject.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no objection to bringing down these papers, except the report of the inspector, which is always considered a confidential report. The motion should be amended by striking that out.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

LAND DAMAGES IN COUNTY OF YAMASKA.

Mr. LAURIER moved for :

Copies of all correspondence between the Government, or any of its Departments, and the Corporation known as the "Président et syndics de la commune de la seigneurie d'Yamaska," respecting damages occasioned to their lands by the dam erected in the Yamaska River.

He said : I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to this question. The Government some years ago erected a dam across the Yamaska river for the purpose, I suppose, of improving the navigation of that river, although their intention has not proved to be very clear. It so happens, however, I am informed, that if their intention was to do good in one direction, they have been unfortunate enough to do a great deal of wrong in another direction. The banks of the Yamaska river for some distance above its junction with the St. Lawrence, are very flat, and constitute, as we say in French, une commune, and are held by a corporation. These banks are very fertile, and I understand that in consequence of the erection of the dam, the lands have been flooded, to the great loss of the owners. I understand further that the corporation have put in a claim to the Government for compensation for the injury they have suffered. The object I have in making this motion is to ascertain whether the Government have received these communications, and whether they intend to take any steps to meet the petition or to further its object.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A claim was received, I think, in November last. The matter has been referred to the chief engineer of the Department, Mr. Perley, who, unfortunately, has been very ill and is still incapable of taking it up; but as soon as possible it will be investigated.

Motion agreed to.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Return of amount of wharfage dues collected at the Government pier or wharf at Digby, N.S., during the year 1889, specifying the several amounts paid by passenger steamers landing passengers and freight at the said wharf, and the names of such steamers.—(Mr. Weldon, St. John.)

Return showing: 1. The total amount of money expended in dredging McGregor's Creek, in the town of Chatham, Ont. 2. The amount expended for piling and planking the same. The name of each contractor, and amount of their several contracts. 3. The amount of money paid property owners for damage done to their property in consequence of such dredging, with the name and amount paid each property owner. 4. The name and amount of all claimants whose claims have been rejected or which are still under the consideration of the Government.—(Mr. Campbell.)

Copies of late reports made by the Engineer of the Public Works Department respecting works to be carried out at Rivière du Sud, in the County of Montmagny.—(Mr. Choquette.)

Return showing the number of reports of the Geological Survey published respectively for each year of the last ten years, the number sold each year, the number distributed gratuitously, and the number still on hand.—(Mr. Ferguson, Welland.)

Copies of all petitions and correspondence respecting the request for the construction of a siding, on the line of the Intercolonial Railway, at the station of St. Jean Chrysostôme, in the County of Lévis.—(Mr. Guay.)

Statement showing the names of all persons who sold to the Dominion Government since 1st January, 1886, property located in St. Laurent and Lauzon Wards in the town of Lévis, with a view to widening the roadway of the Intercolonial Railway, and an extension of the station at Lévis; the amount paid to each proprietor, the amounts paid for commissions, the rate of percentage, and the persons to whom such amounts were paid.—(Mr. Guay.)

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THE RAINY RIVER BOOM COMPANY.

Mr. DAWSON moved second reading of the Bill (No. 60) to incorporate the Rainy River Boom Company.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This Bill is nearly similar to the Rainy River Improvement Company's Bill introduced in 1883, which was referred to the Railway Committee, and there recommended to be withdrawn. This Bill should also be referred to the Railway Committee.

CYPRESS HILLS TIMBER LIMIT.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would ask the First Minister if it would be convenient, as I think it lies with the Department over which he presided before, to order a copy of the Order in Council in reference to the Adams or Cypress Hills limit to be laid on the Table to-morrow.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

THE MODUS VIVENDI WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to call the attention of the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government to a statement which I observed in some American papers in relation to an interview alleged to have been held with the British Ambassador in Washington in reference to the modus vivendi being about to expire, in which it is stated that the British Ambassador said he had received no instructions, and nothing had been done, as far as he knew, to continue the modus vivendi or to substitute anything for it. I think this is a matter of some importance, and, therefore, I call the attention of the right hon. gentleman to it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is correct. There have been no instructions conveyed to the British Ambassador at Washington that the modus vivendi is continued.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. McCARTHY moved second reading of Bill (No. 10) to further amend the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 50, respecting the North-West Territories.

Mr. DAVIN moved in amendment:

That this Bill be not now read the second time, but that it be Resolved, That it is expedient that the Legislative Assembly of the North-West Territories be authorised to deal with the subject of this Bill by Ordinance or enactment, after the next general election for the said Territories.

He said: This, Sir, is, after all, a North-West question, but I need hardly say that I am quite aware that it is the privilege, and even the duty, of every member of this House to concern himself with any public question whatsoever; and I congratulate the North-West that my hon. and learned friend (Mr. McCarthy) has taken a tardy interest in our welfare. I am not aware that he ever took a very great interest in our welfare until very lately. He himself tells us that he sat in this House time and again when this measure was before it, and that he actually did not know that the 110th clause existed until the spring of last year. Well, in an ordinary member that would be an extraordinary thing, but in a distinguished advocate it is a very marvellous thing indeed. But I think I understand why it is that he has taken this interest in us in the North-West. We had here a question last year which I do not intend to go into at present, but which has been agitated throughout the country in a manner that I do not think was either edifying or statesmanlike; and I rather think that my hon. and learned friend discovered that, on that question, he had taken an illogical stand, that he found, after defending his position for a considerable time, that the position was indefensible, and, in order to let himself down easy, he took up questions that would have been settled in the Territories without his aid or the aid of anybody else outside of those Territories. Now, this speech, to which I had not the honor of listening—

Mr. McCARTHY. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. I happened to be in Hamilton at the time, under more auspicious circumstances, but I have read that speech carefully, and the remarkable thing about it is that it is one of a series illustrating the law of evolution; because they go on bit by bit; they repeat themselves considerably, but still, at each step, my hon. and learned friend shows that the doctrine of Darwin is applicable even to great politicians, and he illustrates the law of evolution. I said a moment ago that I had not the honor of hearing that speech, but, Sir, I had the honor of reading his speech that had been delivered in Ottawa, a speech going over the same ground. It was, after all, the same old stuff, but with a little evolution. So that, although I did not hear the speech I am tolerably familiar with my hon. friend's opinions on these subjects, and I may say that in the course of a pretty long political life, in the sense that I have been studying politics all my life, and have had an opportunity of hearing most politicians in England and Canada, and prominent politicians in France, I have never met with speeches so wanting in logic from so distinguished a man. Those speeches have two peculiar characteristics. The one is that my hon. and learned friend has taken to dilating on questions that, from his busy life, he was evidently not conversant with, and I am sorry to say that from a somewhat cold manner he has lapsed into violent appeals to passions that can do nothing but harm. Now, Sir, this question is a local one, and for that reason I consider that it should be dealt with by the Local Legislature. Some French gentlemen have gone in there, because we have had a small French immigration. Some of our most useful citizens are French gentlemen. They have come there with much wealth, and one of them is a coffee grower, M. de Roffignac Von Brabant who has started south of Whitewood the cultivation of chicory. This House will probably be surprised to hear that Canada has become a coffee-growing country. We have in the North-West coffee plantations at the present minute, and when my hon. and learned friend next goes there we shall be able to regale him with a cup of coffee, if with nothing better, before he dilates on his favorite topics.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. French coffee?

Mr. DAVIN. Oh, I forgot, that would not agree with my hon. friend. Well, Sir, the view that I take is this, and it is a view that I have taken here twice in regard to the second homestead. I say that if that law is on the Statute-book, a French gentleman who has gone into the North-West under that 110th clause has a right to complain if it is repealed without his having something to say. We have a certain quantum of French population along the Saskatchewan; we have a small French speaking population to the south, and although they are greatly outnumbered, the bare fact of their being outnumbered is a reason why, without giving them a hearing, we should not repeal this clause. Now, as I said, this speech is a part of a series. I will say that on some subjects in which I am conversant my hon. and learned friend has laid down most extraordinary propositions, and, among others which I will deal with presently, that the North-West has been a losing game to us. Here is a proposition that he states:—

“There is no such thing as a Celtic skull.”

I must not say Keltic, although I have been trained at the university to say Keltic; still, I remember that the last time that I spoke and used the word Keltic, an hon. gentleman, who is a Scotchman, and a friend of mine, asked me, “What on earth were you talking about kilts the whole time?” So I must not use the word with a k, but with a soft c, and say Celtic.

“There is no such thing as a Celtic skull any more than a Saxon skull; no such thing as Celtic hair any more than Saxon hair; it is only—”

Mark the proposition he lays down.

“It is only by language and by the community of language that men are formed into nations.”

Now, let me make this remark. He says there is no such thing as a Celtic skull or a Saxon skull. I suppose there is no such thing as a Jewish skull or an Aztec skull; and yet I have read some very scientific treatises in which I have seen the differences in skulls pointed out. Again he says:

“It is plain that what makes a nation is language, and therefore when one speaks of a race, as these distinguished writers have done, one means a community speaking the same language.”

Now, I will explain how my hon. friend has fallen into such a proposition as this. He has read treatises on language, especially as it affects modern thought; and it is rather—I do not like to say it, I do not like to say that he did not understand it, because it would be impolite, and I could not be impolite—but I will say this, that he is so busy a man that he has not time to inform himself properly, and perhaps he is too much of a nisi prius advocate to be accurate, and too much of a mere lawyer to be a statesman. But remember the two propositions that he lays down. The first proposition is, that language makes the race and the nation; and as you may have seen in his speech delivered at Ottawa, he lays down the proposition that with diversity of language to make a nation is impossible. Now, the important thing about that proposition is this: It is sent broadcast into ignorant ears, and if that last proposition is true we may despair of Canada. That is the important thing about these hurried deductions from superficial studies. My hon. friend, in his Ottawa speech and in the speech delivered in this House also, talks about making this a British colony. Sir, is not this a British colony? Let us be just. Why is it a British colony? It is so because of that very Lower Canadian French race that seems to act like a red rag on a bull on the mind of my hon. friend; for we know this very well, that there was a time in the history of Canada when that race had just passed over to the British flag, when temptations were held out to them to join the thirteen colonies, and if they had not been true to their new-found allegiance, if their loyalty had not been impregnable against the seductions of Franklin and others, we should have had no British colony here to-day. Let us be just, if my hon. friend cannot be generous. I will say this, because I want to help my hon. friend. My hon. friend does not profess, he says, to be a very devout man, but still he complains bitterly that the Roman Catholic Church is tolerated in a manner in this country that our laws hardly permit. That is his language, addressed to ignorant and passionate ears. I have the documents here if it is dared to be questioned. That, I say, is the language addressed by the hon. gentleman to ignorant and passionate ears. It is stated in these speeches. The history of Canada is reviewed; it is mourned over that certain things were not done in the past, and it is mourned that certain things were not done when the French Canadians numbered only 60,000. But does any man in his senses suppose that, if they had not been dealt with with that wisdom, moderation and generosity that England has practised in regard to all races with which she has come in contact in building up her colonial Empire, we should have a British colony here to-day? I want to help my hon. friend. In the intervals of a busy life he is undertaking a crusade against a million and a-half of people; because it is a crusade, and he is undertaking a crusade against the Catholic Church. Nobody supposes that I have any leaning to that church. I am a Radical on religious subjects—that is to say, I am a very low English Churchman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh! Oh!

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I am addressing a lawyer mainly, and I am addressing a legislative assembly, and everybody knows that, according to the old Roman law, I can become an English churchman by adoption; so I have become one by adoption. I want to help my hon. friend, because I have devoted some time to the study of history. I tell him that no assault from outside, no matter how great, no catapults that have been brought against that church from outside have ever done it the least harm. The only harm that ever came to that church has been from volcanic eruptions from within, and then the overflowings have carried away some of her fairest possessions. So that I help my hon. friend. I tell him this: the way to strengthen the Catholic Church is to assail it, and the way to solidify and make French Canadians united—and I do not think the French Canadian is a very objectionable person, for some of the most charming men and most intelligent men I ever met were French Canadians—but still, as my hon. friend, with his superior culture, does not like them, I may tell him that if he wants to make the French Canadian permanent and the French language enduring, the way to do it is to put the backs of the people up by such assaults as he is making throughout the country. To show that I am speaking by the book, let me read some passages here. I forgot, when dealing with the race question, to read a sentence in which my hon. friend says:

“They will gradually or rapidly, as he hoped, adopt English methods and English ways of thought, and this country will be, as it ought to be, an Anglo-Saxon community.”

Fancy speaking to a popular audience like this:

“We came together; we assembled in a common Parliament; but by the skillful direction of the French-Canadian vote, and the desire for power among the English, and consequent division among them, the French Canadians were ultimately able to place their feet on our necks and impose laws on us contrary to our will.”

I think myself it is not too much to say that, for a man of my learned friend's experience as a statesman, it is really a monstrous thing, in view of his high position in Canada, to have addressed language like that to any audience. How did he tell them he intended to move this Bill? I confess the eloquence surprised me; because, although I had often heard my hon. friend in this House and elsewhere, I did not think that lyric rapture was his forte. This is the way he described it:

“And I have undertaken the task—and a more glorious task I never undertook—(loud cheers)—that I shall be the mover of that Bill.”

To be the mover of a Bill of one clause, when there was no danger, no guns pointed at my hon. friend, and to describe that as the most glorious task in his life leads me to wonder what was the character of the other glorious tasks he performed. The only comparison I can think of is this: I once called on a college friend of mine who had married for money a wife who was somewhat old, and he said to me when I was leaving at night, “What do you think of her, Davin?” “Well, Jack,” I said, “I wish I had known your taste, for I think I could have got you something older than that.” Well, Sir, if I had known the hon. gentleman's taste was in that direction I think I could have got him at least as glorious a task. Why, Sir, when I read that, I remembered a joke of my hon. friend the Premier the other day. That right hon. gentleman, speaking of the member for Victoria (Mr. Earle), said, with his usual ready wit, that we were better off in this House than the House of Commons in England, for we had an “earl” amongst us. When I read that glorious statement of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), I thought we were better off still, for we have a hero in this House—a hero who chants his own epic, and there he sits. I say, Sir, that there is no foundation whatever for these propositions laid down by my hon. friend (Mr. McCarthy), and I will prove that these propositions are false and misleading, and that, therefore, for a statesman as my friend is, and for a man of great influence and popular power to disseminate those fallacies throughout the country, is a very great crime and a very great misdemeanor at the bar of history. I would not care in the least what he proposed to do if he did not fall into such fallacies, misleading as they are and calculated to beget ideas which may indeed tend to the disruption of this country. Now, Sir, I will prove that there is not a tittle of foundation for his arguments. My hon. friend, when he was making his speech on this subject in the House, resorted to authority. It was a very natural thing for a lawyer to do, yet I may say this, that what I should expect from a statesman would be “reasoning” on this question. I should expect from him that he would reason this question from historical facts; and the historical facts bearing on it are numerous enough. I should expect reasoning from him from the existing political phenomena in Europe, and then I should expect that he would draw deductions. But what does my hon. and learned friend do? He comes to us with authorities like a lawyer going before a court of appeal, and what, let me ask, are his authorities? Magazine articles, and some of them written by trumpery writers whose names will not even go down the gutter of time. Now, the hon. gentleman might have gone to many existing countries for a parallel. He might have gone especially to Switzerland. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) suggested Switzerland, and then my hon. and learned friend (Mr. McCarthy) interjected the remark, “The French language is an exception in Switzerland.” What the meaning of that observation is I do not know. How is it an exception in Switzerland? The only meaning of that utterance of my hon. friend could be that the language was exceptionally used in the federal state. Why, Sir, there are only three federal states that I know of: Canada, the United States and Switzerland, and in two of these the French is an official language. Let me say that Canada need not be ashamed to go to Switzerland for a comparison. There is scarcely a country which my reading makes me acquainted with so calculated to inspire interest and so full of historical incidents that are imperishable. The development of that country has been extraordinary. The differences in its formation, its elevations, its soil and its climate are great and varied; and although Canada stretches across an entire continent, and Switzerland is in the heart of Europe, hemmed in by mighty empires, sometimes in great danger, often menaced, fought with by more powerful nations, yet like the milk-white Hind of Dryden.—

“Oft doomed to death, but fated not to die.”

The commerce of that country at present exceeds per capita the commerce of any country in Europe. Her imports are about $150,000,000, and her exports, I think, $140,000,000. Notwithstanding the difference I have spoken of, we know, Sir, that there is an analogy between Canada and Switzerland in the produce of our dairies, in the produce of our cornfields, in our mighty forests, and even in our Alpinescenery, which if any of you have visited, you know that its sublimity need not blush even in the face of Mont Blanc. There is a remarkable physical analogy between the countries, and when you come to compare the systems of government there is a more remarkable analogy still. The very same questions that are relegated to the Provinces in Canada are relegated to the Cantons in Switzerland; and the very same questions that are given to the Federal Government in Canada are given to the Federal Government in Switzerland which meets at Berne. How many languages have you in the Parliament at Berne? Why, Sir, five languages can be spoken there, and three of these are official. I am not saying that I approve of this. I am only stating facts from which deductions can be drawn. But here is my hon. friend, a statesman that might be a Gamaliel to me, at whose feet I ought to sit; here is my hon. and learned friend dilating on this question and telling us, in the face of the fact that Switzerland has endured since the 12th century, that it is the oldest republic that ever existed, that its people are contented and prosperous, that with two languages a nation is impossible! And does not every one of us know what admirable articles they manufacture there? Who does not know something about the interest that attaches to that country? Yet, in face of the fact that that prosperous nation has three official languages, my hon. and learned friend goes abroad and tells the people that, if there are two official languages in the country we can never hope to make a nation—that we may throw up the sponge and write “Ichabod” over our country! A mere statement of the fact without any argument to support it is a reductio ad absurdum. My hon. and learned friend tells us, that you cannot have a nation unless you have only one official language. Well, thereby hangs a tale; and I think the tale I am about to unfold will be a political caudal appendage that will cling to my hon. friend for a long time. You know, Sir, that when the hon. gentleman spoke in this House a short time ago, he gave us the authority of Professor Freeman, who he said was a great man. Now I will give you the same authority, which the hon. gentleman read, and if you excuse me I will read it out of the book which bears the sacred mark of my hon. and learned friend. It reads:

“And now, having ruled that races and nations, though largely formed by the working of an artificial law, are still real and living things, groups in which the idea of kindred is the idea around which everything has grown, how are we to define our races and our nations? How are we to mark them off one from the other? Bearing in mind the cautions and qualifications which have been already given, bearing in mind large classes of exceptions which will presently be spoken of, I say unhesitatingly that for practical purposes there is one test, and one only, and that test is language. We may at least apply the test negatively. It might be unsafe to rule that all speakers of the same language have a common nationality, but we may safely say that, where there is not community of language, there is no common nationality in the highest sense. As in the teeth of community of language there may be what for all political purposes are separate nations, so without community of language there may be an artificial nationality, a nationality which may be good for all political purposes, and which may engender a common national feeling; still, this is not quite the same thing as that fuller national unity which is felt where there is community of language. In fact, mankind instinctively takes language as the badge of nationality. We so far take it as the badge that we instinctively assume community of language as a nation as the rule, and we set down anything that departs from that rule as an exception. The first idea suggested by the word Frenchman, or German, or any other national name, is that he is a man who speaks French or German as his mother tongue. We take for granted, in the absence of anything to make us think otherwise, that a Frenchman is a speaker of French, and that a speaker of French is a Frenchman.”

My hon. friend comments on that:

“I think that will not be denied as a correct doctrine.” And, of course, what he seeks to make out is this: that the teaching of that article is the teaching he had laid down in his proposition, that it was necessary to have community of language in order to have a nation. I cannot believe that my hon. friend meant to deceive this House, and therefore I am thrown back on the alternative, that he did not understand Freeman. That article, Sir, does not deal with the question my hon. friend tried to make the House think it dealt with. Freeman takes for his text the extraordinary circumstance of a lot of Magyars going to Constantinople to congratulate an Ottoman general on a victory on the ground of their kinship; because, as you know, the Magyar is a form of the same Semitic speech, if it be Semitic, that is spoken by the Turks. He does the same thing as Max Müller who deals with an extraordinary phenomenon in modern life, brought about by a strong bent to philological studies; for people are giving in this late day an importance to language that was not given before; and when you read the article, you will find that Freeman uses the word “exceptions” in an extraordinary way. He actually uses the word for the majority, and why does he do it? Because he lays down this proposition: that there are now certain nations which are formed on this language idea, but he says the exceptions all over Europe are very large. Now, if the House will bear with me I will give them an idea of this article; but, first, let me ask why did not my hon. friend read on? You will see in a minute. If he had gone on, he would have read that all the larger countries of Europe provide us with exceptions—England, France, Germany, Italy, even Austria. Freeman points out that there are islands which both speech and geographical position seem to mark out as French, but which are English—as truly English, as truly devoted to England, as truly a part of the British Empire in feeling as the people of London. I allude to the people of the Channel Isles, of the same blood precisely and coming from the same district of France as the French Canadians. They are, I will say, as true to England, I believe, as the French Canadians are to Confederation. Why? Freeman asks. Because circumstances led them to cleave to England though their kindred in Normandy became French; and one again and again sees in the article—which I hope my hon. and learned friend did not read—that circumstances control more than language. The insular Norman, though speaking French, did not become a Frenchman, and he is to-day a loyal part of the British nation speaking French.

“These instances,” says Freeman, “and countless others, bear out the position, that while community of language is the most obvious sign of common nationality, while it is the main element, or something more than an element, in the formation of a nationality, the rule is open to exceptions of all kinds, and the influence of language is at all times liable to be overruled by other influences.”

Now, Sir, take Quebec: will any man suppose for one moment that, notwithstanding the mount-bank utterances of the present Prime Minister of Quebec, notwithstanding this stuff about the tricolor, and hustings nonsense of that sort, to which nobody pays any attention, and notwithstanding those articles in the press, which my hon. friend thinks decisive—he knows very well that there have been articles in the English press of Canada which if a man were to take as an exponent of the sentiment of the Canadian people he would be regarded as demented—will any man suppose that if Quebec could to-day do what she pleased, she would cut the painter with this country and England, and go over to France? You know very well, from the character of the people, from their political and religious convictions, that they cling to the British flag. Now, Freeman points out that political and other reasons forbade the annexation by Germany of quite a number of countries; and then he comes to those parts of the world where people who are confessedly of different races and language, inhabit a continuous territory and live under the same flag. He instances—and, of course, my hon. friend, when quoting Freeman, fought shy of this, which would be all right, you know, before a jury, but it is not right before the jury of the people of Canada—the Swiss Confederation, which he says has what my friend quoted him to prove that it could not have, namely, a full right to be called a nation in a political sense:

“It has been formed on a principle directly opposite to the identity of race and language. That Confederation is formed by the union of certain detached fragments of German, Italian and Burgundian nations. German is undoubtedly the language of the great majority of the nation. But the two recognised Romance languages are each the speech of a large minority forming a visible element in the general body. * * * While German, French and Italian are all recognised as national languages by the Swiss Confederation, the independent Romance language which is still used in some parts of the Canton of Graubunden, that which is known specially as Romansch, is not recognised.”

Mr. DAVIN.

Mark his words in that article:

“It is left in the same position in which Welsh and Gaelic are left in Great Britain, in which Basque, Breton, Provençal, Walloon and Flemish are left in the borders of that French kingdom, which has grown so as to take them all in.”

Now, what does Mr. Freeman say of this Swiss Confederation, which has five languages and three official languages?

“Yet surely,” he says, “the Swiss Confederation is a nation. For all political purposes the Swiss Confederation is a nation, one capable of as strong and true national feeling as any other nation.”

Yet this man has been quoted to prove that Canada, with two languages, could not be a nation! May I not apply his language to Canada, and say that surely Canada with her two official languages, even if they continue to prevail, can surely become a nation. Then my hon. friend quotes this writer again to prove that identity of speech is necessary to make a nation, and that diversity of language is fatal to the existence of a nation—that two or more official languages are fatal to a nation, and that identity of language and race will alone make one. What does Mr. Freeman say? He says:

“We now come to the other countries in which nationality and language keep the connection which they have elsewhere, but in which nations do not, even in the roughest way, answer to Governments.”

Can you have a greater repudiation than that of my hon. friend's theory? Here is a language and it in no way answers to the Government that exists.

“In eastern Europe,” Mr. Freeman tells us, “a nation's nationality, as marked out by national feeling, has altogether parted company from political government.”

And he instances Turkey, Austro-Hungary, Greece, Bulgaria and Servia:

“In all these lands,” says he, “there is no difficulty in marking off the several nations—that is by speech only—in no case do the nations answer to any existing political power. In these lands, moreover, religion takes the place of nationality. The Christian renegade who embraces Islam becomes a Turk, even though he keep his Greek or Slavonian language. Even the Greek or Armenian who embraces the Latin goes far towards parting with his nationality.”

Can anything be plainer than that Mr. Freeman teaches the very contrary of what my hon. friend quoted him to prove. Therefore, I have concluded, because I know my hon. friend is an honorable man, that he did not read the article, or he read it in such a cursory manner that he did not grasp the ideas that inspired and infused it. Well, all I can say is, that if he takes up his knowledge as certain birds take their food, on the wing, it is no wonder his conclusions should be so flighty. My hon. friend comes from the country whence I myself come. Ireland can boast of him amongst her distinguished lawyers. Does identity of language make community of sentiment, community of race, and community of nation there? Why, do we not know that for hundreds of years the Saxon has been denounced in the Saxon tongue? So that there were at my hon. friend's door facts that might have prevented him, if he had the time for reflection, from falling into the errors he has fallen into. Now, I hardly think it worth while to deal with his allusions to Mr. Mercier, his allusions to French newspapers, his quotations from The Month. The Month he cited as an authority. Why did he quote The Month as an authority? “Why,” he said, “it was an authority last year, and it ought to be an authority now;” but, if I remember rightly, my hon. and learned friend the Minister of Justice quoted it last year to prove that certain views, which had been quoted from a review by my hon. friend, had not been acknowledged or accepted as the views of a certain section of the Christian Church. That, as I remember, was the way it was used; but if it was made an authority last year improperly, that would be no reason for repeating the error. Then my hon. friend quoted from the Catholic World—to prove what? To prove that the French Canadian is hostile to and is parting company with the English. Well, my hon. friend knows very well a large class—a class for which I have the greatest possible respect; my own blood, I suppose, flows in their veins—exists which have not the same regard for England that I have. He knows very well that the people for whom the Catholic World is written are people who would like to hear that certain sections of the British Empire were hostile to its flag; and to quote that as an authority seems to me an extraordinary thing. But, as the hon. gentleman was looking for reviews, there is a review—I do not know whether it came into his hands—which is one of the first reviews of the world. I refer to the Andover Review, in which there is an article ad rem on this question, an article dealing actually with the question of race in politics, and written by one of the most distinguished of living men. As we are treating the House to articles from reviews, and as I have the precedent of my hon. and learned friend to guide me, I will tell the House what is stated in this article, written by Horatio Hale, and headed, "Language as a Political Force." On page 175, Mr. Hale says:

"Two or more communities speaking different languages may live in harmony under one Government when this Government is a federation and each of these communities is allowed to manage freely its own local affairs."

Then, on page 176, he says:

"This result will be delayed to some extent by the wisdom which has been shown by the British Government, in not merely granting the utmost possible freedom to its colonies, but in stimulating the exercise by them of the powers of such self-government to the utmost possible extent. This remarkable political sagacity—"

Mark the way he regards the policy of the British Government:

"This remarkable political sagacity, unprecedented heretofore in history, is naturally rewarded by an attachment of the colonies to the mother country, which has been hitherto strong enough to overcome the attraction of a population almost conterminous, speaking the same language and enjoying equally free institutions. If Canada had been governed from England in the manner in which Cuba is governed from Spain, it certainly would now not be a British possession."

Then this same weighty writer says:

"The Swiss Republic is a notable instance of the manner in which communities speaking several different languages can be enabled, by the large application of the method of local self-government, to live in harmony under one general authority, for which, under such a system, all the members of the Confederacy may come to feel an equal and intense attachment."

Then, on page 178, he says:

"The danger to freedom and the constant liability to disturbance which result from the inclusion, in a large population, of a small community speaking a distinct language, can be removed in only two ways. The one is by the extinction of the separate language, and the complete assimilation of the people who speak it. But this is a slow process, requiring usually several generations, and perhaps some severities hostile to good government. The other, and far prompter and surer mode, is by the application of the method of local self-government in some form."

On page 182 he says:

"France alone, in her domestic policy, seems to have solved the problem and dispelled the peril. Universal suffrage, departmental councils, and equal laws of inheritance, have transformed Germans, Bretons, Basques and Italians into Frenchmen as loyal and devoted to their country as any of their French-speaking compatriots. This is a practical lesson which statesmen of all countries would do well to lay to heart. The strongest and most enduring of bonds is found, not in kindred or in force, but in free institutions and"—

In what?

—"in equal rights."

Now, I say that that article was worth quoting, and much better worth quoting than The Month or some obscure French paper. Now I come to a very delicate subject. My hon. and learned friend is taking a deep interest in the North-West, and it is a proverb that we must not look a gift horse in the mouth. He tells us here:

"As a matter of dollars and cents, as a matter of mere money, the acquisition of the North-West has been a losing speculation, and, except for the purpose of building up a great nation, which we are willing to do"—

And so on. I tell the hon. member that he has had plenty of evidence on this subject. It has been shown again and again, in this House and elsewhere, that the acquisition of the North-West was not a losing speculation. Is there a man in the country who feels the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway? Is there a man in the country who objects to the cost of that railway.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. Except some dreaming pessimists? Look at the increased wealth, in the last seven years, of Montreal; look at the increased wealth of Toronto; look at the increased wealth of the manufacturing towns in Ontario; look at the extension of manufactures in Ontario; look at the fact that merchants and manufacturers tell me that the North-West is a magnificent customer to Ontario. The hon. gentleman goes on to say something about the depreciation in the value of farms. I have looked into the reports of Mr. Blue, and I know he generally takes a gloomy view of things, but he does not say that the farms of Ontario have depreciated in value. We know that, as farms grow old—and they are not always cultivated as they should be here—they cannot be expected to be kept up to their original value; but I do not think the utterances of the hon. gentleman on this subject were the utterances of a statesman. Look at the fact that the North-West has been opened up, that we have a vast railway there; that we have farms there to which our children can be sent; that we raise wheat in the North-West, of which I have a specimen here, the like of which cannot be produced in any other part of Canada. I have specimens of wheat which have been grown near Regina, Moose Jaw and other parts of the district which I have the honor to represent, and nine-tenths of all that wheat have been graded No. 1 Hard from year to year. Is not that an acquisition of wealth to this country? If the hon. gentleman were right, we might apply to his statement Horace's illustration where he speaks of plucking one hair after another out of a horse's tail. If this North-West country is of no value, of course the more you diminish the size of Canada itself, by a parity of reasoning, the richer it will become. This is one of those utterances which, I think, are inexcusable in a man of the hon. gentleman's experience. I have already shown that my hon. friend has been guilty of the most glaring inaccuracy in other points; but he also told the House, in his carefully considered speech, that a newspaper published in the North-West, called, I think—let me see—the Regina Leader, never said a word about the dual language; that it had been silent upon that subject while other papers had spoken about it. I might refer the hon. gentleman to the issue of that paper of September 10, 1889, and here I find a whole column headed "The Dual Language," from which I will read a few passages to the House:

"It is palpable in a country such as ours, moderation is absolutely necessary in order that it shall develop, progress and culminate. If in any province or territory two languages are unnecessary in official work, then the proper thing is to discuss in a calm and collected manner the question whether their use shall be continued or terminated. Mr. Dalton McCarthy in one of his speeches said he did not know that the French language was required by law in these Territories. Yet he was in Parliament in 1877, when Mr. Mills brought in his Bill to amend this Act and, not to be more particular, he was in Parliament, in 1886, when the Revised Statutes were passed, yet he did not know until the early part of last session that such was the law. This throws a remarkable light on the ignorance of eastern politicians regarding the North-West, and might indeed give rise generally to curious reflections. He is evidently not aware that the subject has been discussed among politicians in the North-West, or that had he never raised the question it would be raised here. Everybody acquainted with our leading men knew how the matter stood. Let it be raised, but when raised let us discuss it as statesmen should discuss it, without violent or offensive language. We need hardly say that Mr. McCarthy having sat in Parliament since 1876, having voted on the Revised Statutes, is one of the persons who passed the law in its present state. He is responsible for it. Like every political and administrative question its expediency or the reverse may be properly discussed. If it should be decided that in any part of the Dominion the dual language is not necessary, let it be abolished without exciting cries or dithyrambs, and vice versa."

I hear one of my hon. friends laughing at the word "dithyrambs," but if he will get a dictionary and look up the word, he will find that it bears a strong application to that speech at Ottawa to which I have referred.—

"In regard to race questions we say this: in the Dominion of Canada every man is equal before the law, and whatever be his mother tongue, whether he be Celt or Saxon, Celt-Latin or Saxon-Celt, whether he be Scotch-Indian or Franco-Indian (Métis), he stands on the same footing under our constitution before the law, and try to give the Saxon or the Celt or the Celto-Latin any predominance or to seek to suppress or unjustly repress one or the other would be to take a course contrary to civil liberty and to the constitution which secures equal rights to all. We are in a new country in the North-West, let us make a new start and discuss any question that may arise, not in the deceiving glare of prejudice, but in the clear cold light of reason; nay, in the broad illumination of the Gospel of our Lord, who taught us that all men are brethren. If the continuance of the dual language is to be discussed it should be discussed in the same practical temper, the same absence of excitement, as we would discuss the building of a bridge over Boggy Creek. It is not necessary to be violent or offensive or to rail at this or the other section of the community, but to take up a question of practical action in a practical manner and looking at it on all sides come to what will have, under such quiet and balanced conditions, a chance of proving a wise conclusion."

The Swiss question is then dealt with. But the fact that my hon. friend, in a carefully prepared speech, could state that that paper had made no reference whatever to this question, shows the glaring inaccuracy that characterised the wild effort. Now, the federal system to which I referred, requires two things. You must first have a body of communities such as we have in Canada, such as they have in the United States, such as they have in Switzerland, and these communities must have a common bond of sentiment. They must desire union but not unity; they must have a loyalty to their State or Province, and at the same time a loyalty to the Federal Government. If, of course, they desired union, the proper thing would be a central government; but where they desire to come together and get something that will give them the impress of a nation and yet keep autonomous their own State or Province, the proper solution is a Federal Government, and that Federal Government is called to deal with different races, with different languages, with men of different religions, as we see in Switzerland and as we see in Canada. Sir, I consider that here in Canada we have all the conditions that are necessary to produce a strong federal people. In peace, the loyalty to the State or Province will be high. In war, the loyalty to the Federal Government will be high. If Canada were assailed from without to-day you would find that every feeling that is provincial in the breasts of Quebeckers, in the breasts of New Brunswickers, in the breasts of Nova Scotians, in the breasts of the people of the North-West Territories and British Columbia, would all disappear in the grand federal feeling that they should fight for their common country. Why, Sir, how little language has to do with preventing people from becoming citizens of a country. I have travelled in Alsace-Lorraine where the people speak German. They are now under the German flag, but gladly would they go back. They fought gallantly under the French banner. A more loyal part of France than Alsace-Lorraine did not exist. Then take the Bretons. I saw in the summer of 1870, Gen. Trochu review 300,000 Breton Mobiles in the streets of Paris, and there was not a man under the rank of officer who could speak French; yet these men, when the hour of peril came, went into battle and fought just as gallantly and just as eagerly as the men who spoke French. Now, Sir, harangues like these, whose dangers I have exposed to-night, I hope will cease. They can reflect no honor on my hon. and learned friend, and I speak with truth when I say that I would be jealous for his honor. There is no position that he could attain, there is no reputation, however bright, that he could make, which would not give me great pleasure. But such harangues as these can reflect no credit on him as a statesman, and they are capable of doing incalculable damage to his country. I, for one, whether we have a dual language or not, have no fear whatever for Canada. I am perfectly certain of Canada's future. History teaches me lessons that history, if he studies it, will teach my hon. and learned friend. Why, Sir, does he know anything of the genesis of nations? Does he know how one country after another has risen, and how they have spoken different languages, and how they have come together, and fought under different banners, and lived under different governments, and gradually become assimilated until the difference of language disappeared, and sometimes a new language was evolved? History will teach my hon. friend that he can dispel those fears that have tortured his imagination, and with which he has sought to inflame the passions of the people of this country. The main propositions that are behind his speech, I have shown to be absolutely without foundation; I have shown that the deductions he has drawn from those propositions are fallacious; I have shown that the authorities that my hon. friend has quoted, and has paraded before this House, actually teach something else; and I do hope that there is that grandeur of soul in my hon. and learned friend that he can come to the conclusion that he has been in error, and will determine to mend his ways.

Mr. O'BRIEN. In the very few words that I shall address the House on this occasion, I shall be conscious that, perhaps, I may have as little sympathy from the great body of this assembly as I had upon a certain occasion during last Session; but if what is said in this debate upon the side which I propose to advocate, has as much weight in the country as the agitation which was set on foot last winter, then I for one will be perfectly content. Not because it has had, as alleged, the effect of stirring up strife and setting race against race and creed against creed, but because it has had the wholesome effect of leading the people distinctly to understand the position in which they are placed, and to understand the tendency and necessary consequences of the policy which has been pursued for so many years past. I say, if we accomplish that result, we are doing a good thing, even if we may irritate the feelings of people less sensitive to the facts of history than to declamation, and such language as we have heard from the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I neither propose to emulate his declamation, nor to wander over as many subjects as he has touched upon, and in the end to say nothing whatever on the subject at issue. The hon. gentleman has said a good deal about his reading and learning. If all the effect of his reading has been to enable him to speak for one hour and say nothing, then I for one do not care to have that sort of learning. With respect to the remarks made by the hon. gentleman in regard to the hon. gentleman for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), I can well leave them to my hon. friend, in whose hands the hon. gentleman has very foolishly placed himself. I shall endeavor, after one or two observations on the historical references made by the hon. gentleman, to go to the question at issue in this matter. He has talked about Switzerland, and has endeavored to draw the inference that different languages may be spoken and officially used in one country, and yet it be one nation. I meet that statement by the simple declaration that Switzerland, or Austro-Hungary which he might have cited, is a federation of different races and different nations. Now, I say there is no analogy whatever between that and Canada. I say we have not, we cannot have, and never will have in this country two nationalities. I deny that there are two nationalities in the sense in which the term is applicable either to Austro-Hungary or to Switzerland, and, therefore, the analogy does not hold good. Coming to the question really before us, there are two methods by which it is proposed to deal with it. It is admitted by the hon. gentleman who has moved the amendment that a change is required. If a change is not required there is no object in moving his resolution. The hon. gentleman proposes to deal with it from a local point of view, the point of view from which the hon. gentleman says it should be dealt with. The other method is to deal with it from the point of view which was put forward by the hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill, and that is the national point of view. I will first deal with the local point of view. We have before us evidence which clearly shows the opinion of the people in the North-West. If we take the press of that country we find, from a little examination of it, that of all the newspapers published in the North-West there is not a single one which advocates, the retention of the dual language. I may remark that, in speaking of the newspapers, I do not include the illustrious journal to which reference was just made, for either one of two reasons—and of these two the hon. gentleman can take his choice—either that journal is so well represented in this House that it is unnecessary that the editor should read his own articles for our benefit, or else, if he chooses to take the other alternative, a newspaper so largely subsidised by public money as is the Regina Leader is hardly to be considered as an independent organ of public opinion. The hon. gentleman did not tell us what the opinion in the North-West is; he did not venture to do that, because if so, he would have been obliged to admit that public opinion there demands such a Bill as that introduced and advocated by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). I will read opinions from those newspapers, published since my hon. friend gave notice of his intention to introduce this Bill. The Calgary Herald, 1st February, 1890, said:

"There is no denying the fact that the citizens of our town, and, indeed, of the North-West generally, are in favor of abolishing the dual language system."

The Lethbridge News, 29th January, 1890, said:

"The great voice of the people of the Territories is certainly against it (i. e. the dual language) and those who uphold the system are in a small minority."

The Saskatchewan, 16th January, said:

"There must be but one official language if there is to be a united nation * * * and to the condition of this coalescence, the abolition of the dual language is absolutely essential."

The Moosomin Courier said:

"We are pleased to be able to state that the two North-West Senators, Messrs. Perley and Loughhead, are determined to support Dalton McCarthy's Bill to abolish the official use of the French language in the North-West. They will, by such action, truly represent the sentiments of the vast majority of the people of the North-West."

The Qu'Appelle Progress uses language similar to the above, as does the Qu'Appelle Vidette. The remaining papers either do not refer to the subject or express no opinion in regard to it. If the hon. member (Mr. Davin) is not in favor of adopting this course, he does not represent the opinion of the people of the North-West whose cause he is sent here to advocate. The hon. gentleman says it is a North-West measure. I take issue with him upon that point, for two or three reasons. In the first place, it is a North-West question, but it is also a Dominion question. And it is a Dominion question, because this Dominion Parliament legislates for the North-West, and has declared that the North-West is not in a condition to have the full powers of constitutional government and the management of its own affairs, and it is a mere piece of opportunism, an attempt to avoid our own responsibilities, to throw on the Legislative Assembly of the North-West the power of dealing with this question. What is more; they do not ask that it should be left to them, nor do any of their newspapers do so. They all support the Bill introduced by my hon. friend and oppose that provision in the existing act, which was incorporated in it without the knowledge of the father of it, the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills); and the people of North-West declare that the dual language should be struck out as a provision which they do not require, which is not in their interest, and which should not be imposed on them contrary to their wishes. Another reason is, that this should not be made a local question. This reason is one which may not be acceptable to many hon. gentlemen, but it is one which will have great weight in the country, that it is not desirable to throw into the Local Legislature of the North-West a bone of contention which may cause trouble there in two or three years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I am glad to find the hon. gentleman express his approval of my sentiments, because if we do what this resolution proposes we would enable a minority in the North-West Provinces to exercise the same power and control over the destinies of that country that a minority has exercised over the destinies of this country, an influence and power which has not been for the best interests of the Dominion. That is another reason, because it can be very well understood that if this power of continuing two languages is made a subject of local legislation, that minority may, by taking advantage of party conflicts, do what in our history has been done frequently, and what was done in old Canada, exercise a controlling power to which neither their number nor their influence entitled them. That is a very important reason why the power should not be placed in the hands of the Local Legislature of the North-West. Those are two very decided reasons why we should not deal with it as a local question and give away the power which belongs to us and to no one else. Another reason why hon. gentlemen should object to the amendment is, and it is a reason which is a very important and practical one, that, if the amendment were carried, it would not be worth the paper on which it is written. It does nothing—it does not repeal the statute. What assurance have we that the people of the North-West would ever get the power to do what the resolution asks? Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that by a resolution of this House we can repeal a clause of an Act of Parliament?

Mr. DAVIN. It could be done.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It will be done when Parliament chooses to do it, but we have no assurance that the majority of this House will do it. The hon. gentleman's amendment, if carried, leaves the matter exactly as it was before, and it does not meet the wishes of the people which the hon. gentleman professes to represent here, nor does it meet the expressions of public opinion made in the newspapers published in that country. Therefore, I say that this amendment, if carried, is a perfect nonentity. It will not produce even that system of evolution which the hon. gentleman referred to. I cannot even pay him the left handed compliment which he paid to my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) that his speech was a system of evolution, for evolution means something to be evolved. That cannot be said of the speech of my hon. friend for ex nihilo nihil fit.

Mr. DAVIN. You should say nihil.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Upon the grounds which I have stated I say that this House cannot recognise the deduction which the hon. gentleman endeavored to draw from his historical reference to the incidents of other nationalities. Let me disclaim entirely (although very likely the disclaimer on account of the very great representations already made may not amount to much) any intention to demand the total abolition of the French language, we demand the abolition of the French language as an official language in the North-West, where only five-sixths of the people know the language, and this has been treated as an attack on the French language per se. Those who make that statement know that it is absolutely without foundation. They must know that nobody desires to interfere with the French language in any way where it is useful or necessary. Hereafter I venture to say that there will be but one language in this Dominion and that will be the language which should be used in all the new Provinces of this country; the language which must be the official language of the Dominion if this is ever to be a great or prosperous country. If the member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) had carried his historical references as far as Austro-Hungary, to which the analogy would more closely apply, he would find that the people of that country, where there are more than five languages spoken, have to come to precisely the same conclusion as the hon. member who introduced this Bill, and he would find that in Hungary, where there are the Magyar, the Saxon and Roumanian languages, all used in the ordinary pursuits of life, the Hungarian language is imposed as an absolute necessity, because it was discovered that the use of all these different languages led to discord and rendered government impossible. On the other hand, in Austria, where there are several languages of a similar character, the attempt made by the recent Government to allow the use of all these languages in official documents has led to endless confusion, has fomented discord, and brought about endless trouble in the community. Even here, the analogy does not hold good no more than in the case of Switzerland, because there we have distinct nationalities federated for special purposes. And everyone knows that the Emperor of Austria is also King of Hungary. I do not intend to occupy the time of this House any longer, and I will merely recapitulate the grounds upon which I object to this amendment. It means nothing, it does nothing, and it produces no effect. It is no answer to the petitions which have been sent here asking that a change should be made in the law. I further say that this is not a local question, and for the reasons I have given that it cannot be properly dealt with as a local question. The duty and responsibility connected with the matter belongs to this House, and they should not, and ought not, delegate it to any one. The question should be dealt with as the Bill of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) proposes to deal with it. Those who do not like the Bill can vote against it and say that the French language shall continue in the North-West Territories. Those who think there ought to be but one language, in accordance with the well-understood wishes of the people, should express that opinion by voting for the Bill, but if they vote for this resolution they are wasting time and doing absolutely nothing except giving those who do not care to face this question, and vote in a manly way, an opportunity of getting out of it without compromising themselves in a way in which they are unwilling to do. With these few remarks I again declare my intention to vote for the Bill, and against the amendment, for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I cannot hope to entertain the House with the splendid eloquence and vivacity of my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), but with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few observations on the Bill now under discussion. What I have to complain of in the speech of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), is that from beginning to end it had a tendency to offend our French Canadian fellow-citizens and was not at all addressed to the question which he presented to the House. That question in itself, it seems to me, is a very simple one. It is, whether looking to the character of the population of the North-West, it is expedient to continue the use of the French language in official documents. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), instead of confining himself to the question of the expediency of the use of the French language in the North-West, went back to the treaty of 1763, and he made it appear by every word that he uttered that nothing in the legislation of Canada, nothing in the legislation of Great Britain affecting Canada was so distasteful to him as the recognition of French as an official language with us. I dissent entirely from the conclusions he has drawn from his premises. He said that the treaty of 1763 made no mention of the use of French as an official language, that the treaty of 1774 made no mention of the use of French as an official language, that the Constitutional Act of 1791 omitted any recognition of it, and that after Lord Durham had made his report upon his visit to Canada in 1839 it was declared that only one language should be officially recognised. The hon. gentleman stated also that it was not until 1848 when the British Parliament repealed the statute of 1841, that French obtained an official recognition in Canada. Now, the recital of the facts is perfectly accurate, but the inference drawn seems to me to be wholly misleading. Surely when we know that from 1774 down to 1841 French was actually in use as an official language, the whole argument of the hon. member for Simcoe falls to the ground. It was true, as he says, that there was nothing in the treaties and nothing in the Acts of Parliament in reference to it, but, in spite of treaties and in spite of Acts of Parliament, French was the language principally used in official documents in the Legislature. I have here, for instance, the Journals of the Legislative Assembly of 1844-45 containing a report made by a select Committee, of which Hon. Mr. Papineau was chairman, on the subject of the use of the French language, and although it is a little lengthy, I think it is of sufficient importance to justify my reading it to the House. This is the address reported by that committee, which was unanimously adopted by both chambers of the Legislature:

"To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty :

" MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN :

" We, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled, must humbly beg leave to approach Your Majesty, for the purpose of renewing the expression of our faithful attachment to Your Majesty's person and Government, and of representing—

" That, sensible of the advantages we enjoy from Your Majesty's care and protection, and which, we trust, may long be continued to us under Your Majesty's parental sway, it is, at all times, our duty to submit for Your Majesty's most gracious consideration, such matters as may have a tendency, with any class of Your Majesty's subjects, to diminish that contentment which we are well assured Your Majesty desires should exist in every portion of Your dominions.

" That the French is the native language of a very large class of Your Majesty's subjects in this Province; of this class the great mass indeed speak no other language; in it the largest portion of their laws and the books of their system of jurisprudence are written; their daily intercourse with each other is conducted; it is the language in which alone they can invoke the blessings of Heaven on themselves and all that is dear to them. A language indispensable to so many of Your Majesty's faithful people, cannot, they will believe, be viewed by their Sovereign as foreign, when used by them.

" That Your Majesty's Royal Predecessors placed the language spoken by the two great classes of Your Majesty's subjects in this Province on the same footing, affording, in this respect, equal justice and facility to all.

" That this principle was never departed from until the Act reuniting these Provinces was passed."

The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) would have the House believe that no official recognition was given to the French language until after 1848, although in this address of 1844 it is stated that the predecessors of the then Governor General placed the French language on the same footing as the English. It goes on to say:

" That in the very first Session of the Legislature, under that Act, it was indispensable to translate into French every public record and document. That the debates were not, and could not, unless a portion of the representatives of the people were silenced, be carried on without its use. That in courts and judicial proceedings it was found equally necessary as before the Union, and for every other practical purpose, it is as much used as it ever has been."

When that report was taken up in the House, the following proceedings took place;—

" Mr. Papineau, in speaking to the motion, was understood to say that 'he could not suppose the home Government would have any objection to this amendment in the Union Bill'; and in proof of this he read from a despatch from the Colonial Secretary, addressed to Lord Gosford, which stated that the home Government conceived that no interference should be made with the language of the French Canadians. He likewise stated that it was satisfactory to notice that the English part of the community and of that House had no objection to this amendment. This was the best proof of their good-will towards his, Mr. Papineau's, compatriots.

" Mr. Attorney-General Smith was sure that the motion would be received with the greatest satisfaction by the whole House; and that in this instance there could be no difference between members on either side of the House.

" Dr. Dunlop said that the motion was so reasonable and just, he hoped it would be carried by acclamation.

" The motion was then put and carried by acclamation, every member rising, and with a good deal of clapping and cheering."

And that was in a legislature composed of an equal number of representatives from each Province of Canada, by the unanimous voice of that legislature, after an experience of three years during which the French language, so far as that legislature could do it, was abolished. In view of that fact, and in view of the fact that since then the French population has multiplied four or five times over, why an effort should now be made to repeal the French language, and regret should be expressed that that language is still in use in this country, I cannot conceive. It is as impossible, by an Act of Parliament, to prevent the use of the French language in this Canada as it is by any similar act to root out the prejudices that are latent in some men's minds. Now, Sir, the amendment before the House recognises the federal system under which we live, and it is a somewhat curious fact that in the Province of Quebec, in respect of municipal matters, the right is conceded to each local municipality to declare whether its proceedings shall be published in both languages or in one language only. Article 243 of the Municipal Code of Quebec enacts:—

"In any municipality, for which there is no Order in Council, in virtue of the 10th section of the Consolidated Municipal Act of Lower Canada, the publication of every notice, by-law, resolution or order of the council, by posting, reading aloud, or insertion in the newspapers, must be made in the French and English languages.

"In every local municipality, for which there is such an Order in Council, the publication of every notice, by-law, resolution, or order of a county council, and of every notice from the secretary-treasurer of the county council, by poster, by reading, or in the newspapers, may be made only in the language prescribed in such Order in Council, in place of being made in English and French."

And if hon. gentlemen will turn to the Quebec Official Gazette of the 4th of January of this very year, they will find there this notice:

"QUEBEC, 23rd Dec., 1889.

"Notice is hereby given that a petition has been presented to the Lieut. Governor by the Municipal Council of the township of Eardley, in the County of Ottawa, to obtain the authorisation to publish in English only all notices, by-laws, or resolutions made or passed by said council."

So that in the Province of Quebec, where the French people are in such an immense majority, the Local Legislature has been liberal enough to provide that in exclusively English or almost exclusively English communities the use of the French language may be abandoned altogether. Sir, the amendment, as I understand it, proposes that the same principle shall be extended to the North-West—that the people of the Territories shall have the opportunity of declaring their will through their representatives as to whether the French language shall be continued in use there or not. Now, the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) is a good deal disturbed by the fear that the amendment, if adopted, will fail of effect; but he must know that it is a distinct instruction of the House to the Government, and if the Government fail to act on this instruction they must resign office. The hon. member tells us also that it is not desirable to throw a bone of contention among the people of the North-West, but he has no objection to a bone of contention being thrown among the people of the whole Dominion. Is it not a very much greater source of objection and irritation for the Parliament of Canada to impose a language upon a people of any Province than it is to allow that people to say what language or how many languages shall be used in their legislature? Those people pay the taxes and they have the right to say what expenses shall be placed upon them. Up to this time the people of the North-West have not had much to complain of in this respect. In fact, were it not for the lamentable agitation that was started in Ontario and Quebec principally, last summer, I doubt whether the subject now under discussion would ever have been alluded to at all either in the North-West or elsewhere. Certain it is that from the time the amendment was made in the Senate to the North-West Territory Act of 1877 down to the summer of 1889, when these unhappy religious differences were brought into the political arena in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, not one complaint was made, so far as I am aware, by any newspaper or anybody in the North-West Territory that it was a hardship upon them and inimical to their well-being as a national community that the French should be recognised as an official language. It is only since it occurred to some gentlemen that political capital might be made out of it that this question has been agitated at all. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) answered in every particular, I think, the speech made by the hon. member for North Simcoe in introducing his Bill the other day, but I will trouble the House with one quotation bearing upon the case, and it is from the author selected by the hon. member himself. I refer to Professor Freeman. He says in one of his lectures, speaking of the Swiss Confederacy—and I may say that Professor Freeman maintains that in many important particulars the federal system of Switzerland is superior to that of Great Britain or that of the United States:

"An artificial nation was thus formed, a nation not marked out by the usual signs of blood or language, but still a nation by adoption. But it is adoption without assimilation. The Lombard of Ticino, the Burgundian of Vaud, has been raised to the level of his former German master, but he has not adopted their tongue, neither have they adopted his. In your union you adopt citizens from all parts, but what you adopt you assimilate, wherever the physical laws of nature allow assimilation. All, sooner or later, are merged in a one body; all become members of what I venture still to call the English people. To you the sight must seem strange to see two states of the same Union side by side, speaking wholly distinct languages; it must seem yet more strange to you to find one state all but wholly Catholic, another all but wholly Protestant, and to learn that the laws which in either case secure civil equality to the minority are in most cantons of recent date. Yet, with all this diversity, the Swiss people, Teutonic and Romance, Catholic and Protestant, undoubtedly form a nation, though a nation artificially put together out of fragments of three elder nations."

Showing that in the case of Switzerland according to the authority selected by the hon. member for North Simcoe, in spite of diversities of language and religion, a nation vigorous and prosperous has been formed under a system of Government in many respects superior to that of Great Britain and the United States. There is not an hon. gentleman in this House who will take exception to the view that if it were possible to have one language it would be an advantage, but it is useless to-day to lay down that view as an argument. If we could all be by a process of reasoning made English, it might be to the general advantage, but the day has gone by, when anything can be gained by insisting on the suppression of a language spoken by a large minority in this country. We have to deal with facts as they exist. Without doubt under our present system the assimilation of the people is being gradually brought about. From personal knowledge I may say that in the Province of Quebec, throughout the Eastern Townships and the Montreal districts, there are more French people speaking English than English people speaking French. In fact it is worthy of remark that in that Province ten Frenchmen learn English to one Englishman who learns French. But as L'Etendard said the other day, if efforts are made to antagonise our fellow-citizens, the French Canadians, if they are to be deprived of what they consider their rights, they will become more exclusive than they have ever been in the past. What has been the teaching of the past? We know that down to the rebellion of 1837 the French held themselves completely aloof from their English speaking fellow-subjects, whom they regarded as an alien and hostile race; but after the rebellion and after the union of the two Canadas in 1841, a different feeling began to set in, and a different state of affairs began to prevail. The French speaking people obtained the measure of self-government they desired, and according to the testimony of Earl Grey in one of his letters to Lord John Russell:

"The consequence of this was that the French Canadians and the Liberal party in the western division of the Province, seeing that their leaders and friends were admitted to their just share of power and influence, that no distrust of them was evinced by the Government and that the Government really was to be carried on strictly in the spirit of the constitution without any preference being shown to men of any one party or any one religion, became on their side reconciled to the Imperial authority which was exercised, and proved themselves worthy of the confidence which had been placed in them by the loyalty and attachment they manifested to the Crown. So soon and so decidedly were the healing effects of this policy experienced, that when the news of the French revolution of February, 1848, reached the Province, it occasioned no disturbance or alarm. In the state of public feeling and opinion which Lord Elgin found prevailing on his arrival in Canada little more than a year before, there can be no doubt that the intelligence of this startling event would have produced most formidable excitement, if not actual disturbance. Instead of this there was a most perfect tranquility and security. All efforts to create opposition to the Government amongst the French Canadians utterly failed; they heartily and steadily supported the Government, and took every opportunity to manifest, by addresses and resolutions, the strongest spirit of loyalty to the British Crown."

That was the effect fifty years ago of a policy of conciliation and fair play, and every chapter in the history of Canada shows that where efforts have been made to antagonise the sentiment of French-Canadians, or to compel them to speak a foreign tongue, they have become only the more exclusive and refused the more obstinately to assimilate with their fellow-citizens of British origin, but that when, on the contrary, a policy of fair play, conciliation and justice is pursued, they have manifested the most unswerving loyalty to the British Crown and Canada. Sir George Cartier called himself an Englishman speaking French, and I believe there are to-day more French Canadians who are proud to call themselves English-speaking Frenchmen than ever before, and that the number will steadily increase if a policy of fair play and equal justice be continued. The events of the past year, however, have not tended to encourage this assimilation, and every fair-minded man must regret the agitation which has been made in this House and out of it on this race and language question. I believe in the policy of provincial rights in a matter of this kind. The question of a dual language is to be dealt with by this Parliament of Canada so far as federal affairs are concerned, but I believe that, so far as provincial affairs are concerned, it should be dealt with by the Provinces, and to the Provinces I am prepared to relegate it. I trust our French Canadian friends will take the same view, and that they will not allow the source from which this proposition emanates to warp or bias their judgment in the matter. Of course they believe that, but for the agitation which swept over this country last summer, this proposition would not have come here, but they must also be aware that nine-tenths of the people in the Territories belong to other races than French, and that, judging from the tendency of colonisation in that territory, that population is likely to be larger in proportion in the future. The tendency to colonisation on the part of the French population is practically confined to the eastern part of Ontario, and our French Canadian friends must be aware that their interests, not only as French Canadians, but in every sense, are not jeopardised, and cannot be jeopardised, by the abolition of the use of their language in the proceedings and the documents of the North-West Assembly.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation.) I cannot, Mr. Speaker, allow this debate to be concluded without expressing the opinions I hold on this matter, as being a French Canadian. This question is certainly one of the most important which can be brought before this House. It concerns not only the limited French population in the North-West, but looking at the terms in which it is couched, it influences the peace and prosperity of the country, and, more especially, the entire French Canadian race. The Bill brought in by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is, on the face of it, directed against the use of the French language in the North-West. But if we read the speech which accompanied its introduction, and if we read the preamble of the Bill itself, we shall there find set out the principle that there should exist throughout the whole of the Dominion but one and only one official language to be employed in the legislatures and in the courts, namely, the English language. This is a principle, Mr. Speaker, which for my part I can in no way accept. I am of the opinion of those who assert that this is not a mere local question; but that it is a question of the gravest moment and which concerns the whole Dominion. I am also opposed to the amendment made by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), because I see in it only an attempt to obtain by an oblique course what they do not dare to ask for directly. The Bill of the hon. member for North Simcoe is supposed to be based upon a resolution passed by the Council of the North-West Territories, asking that the use of the French language, before that body and before the courts, be prohibited. If there is any justification in this House taking up the question it is evidently the fact that the Council of the North-West should represent the opinion of the people of the North-West, and that, consequently, there would be a moral obligation for this Parliament to carry out the wishes so expressed by that Council. Now, Mr. Speaker, if, relying on this fact, this House is of the opinion that the French language ought to be abolished,—if we decree its use to be forfeited because we believe these resolutions to represent the views of the people, it is evident that by surrendering to this same Legislature the right to decree the abolition of the French language, we act exactly as if we had decreed it ourselves. If they wish to abolish the French language, let them say so plainly. If they believe that it is in the interest of the peace of the country that a single language should be spoken in the Territories, let them have the courage to say so. If, on the other hand, they desire to avoid exciting the passions of the people, if they wish to avoid rousing their prejudices, if they wish to avoid cause of disappointment, if they desire to maintain peace, tranquility and the excellent harmony which now exists among the various races, let them declare that the retention of the French language in the North-West is a measure in the interest of the country and let them reject this Bill. At the time of the organisation of the Territories, it was thought of importance to the erection and the peopling of the Territories that the use of the two languages before the courts and before the Legislature should be authorised. Nothing has occurred since to modify this position. The principle which the amendment lays down is a dangerous principle; if it is good to leave to a Local Legislature the right to decide questions of this importance, touching the privileges granted to a whole race; if it is good to grant this to the North-West Territories, how can you refuse it to the Manitoba Legislature, which desires, in her turn, to enact the abolition of the French language? If it is pretended that the wish of the legislatures should be acceded to at Ottawa; if it is admitted that a legislature can decree the abolition of a right established and recognised, how will you be able to refuse the exercise of this right when the House of Commons is in question; how shall we be able to go to the foot of the throne and represent to the Queen and to Her Government that the use of the French language was guaranteed us by the Constitution which was given to us by an Act of the Imperial Parliament? They will reply to us: You have thought it right to leave to the majority in the Provincial Legislatures the right of decreeing the forfeiture of the French language in one Province; to-day, the House of Commons by a majority decrees the cancelling of this right at Ottawa, by virtue of what principle do you oppose this decision? It is plain, Mr. Speaker, that if we wish, with success, to defend the rights of our race and of our language; if we wish to maintain our institutions, we should not allow him to lay down this principle, because if we admit the principle, we shall be obliged to submit to the consequences, whatever they may be. This is why, for my own part—and I trust that I represent the opinions of no small number—I cannot support more strongly the amendment made by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin)—although he has backed it in terms of great sympathy with the French language—than I can support the Bill itself. I do not wish to give to a legislature, which has declared itself hostile, the right of decreeing, when it shall see fit, that the French language shall cease to be spoken officially in the North-West Territories. I have heard the reasons given in support of the Bill and of the amendment. One of the reasons given is that the French population in the North-West is small in number. The French population of the North-West is about one to six, which is at least as great as the proportion of the English population of the Province of Quebec. And yet with what indignation would that person be received who would say: The population of English descent is small in numbers in the Province of Quebec; it costs several thousands of dollars to translate the public papers into the two languages, let us abolish the English tongue. Let us suppose,

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL.

(what is an impossibility) that a majority should adopt a similar resolution, how could this House refuse to the French majority of Quebec the right to abolish the English language, when it is desired to grant to the English majority in the North-West the right to abolish the French language. It is also stated that this population is poor. This is a good reason why we should come forward in its defence. If the population is poor; if it is but poorly able to defend itself, it remains for us, the representatives of Provinces richer and more at liberty, it is for us the representatives of a people capable of taking care of themselves, to assume charge of their interests before this House. It is also said that it is not represented. Why is it not represented? It is because the counties have been so divided that they cannot choose their own representatives. In order to establish that the Government divided up the Territories in such a manner that this population cannot secure a representation, I will cite the words of that illustrious man who has passed forty years of his life in the North-West Territories, Monseigneur Grandin, who says that, looking at the division of the counties, it is impossible for the French population to be represented. It has been stated, and I believe the statement to be correct, that each and every one of the members from the North-West was entreated to adopt the paternity of the Bill by seconding the motion of the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and that they had one and all refused. I trust that they will continue to represent with impartiality all the elements which form the population of the North-West, and that they will prevent by their vote and voice the injustice which it is attempted to commit. Now, Mr. Speaker, complaint is made of the evils caused by the existence of two official languages in Canada. It is strange that the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) should be the first one to find out these great inconveniences. All the statesmen who have come from England, being without prejudices and having official duties to perform; those who have been entrusted with the charge of representing the Crown of England in Canada; all those who have taken the pains to study the question, have declared that the French language was not an evil but a benefit; that it was one of the most effectual guarantees for the loyalty of the French population to the Crown of Britain; that as matters stood there was a friendly contention between the two races to do most for the progress and advancement of the country. The hon. the Secretary of State cited the other day the opinion of Lord Elgin. Who does not remember the speech of Lord Dufferin, wherein His Excellency affirmed that the existence of the English and French races in Canada, was one of the greatest means of promoting the progress of the country by the emulation which of necessity existed between them. If the hon. the member for Simcoe had read a little of the history of Canada, or at least if he had desired to understand the lessons derived from it, he would have discovered that every time that an attempt had been made to deprive one portion of the population of its rights and privileges guaranteed by the constitution or by treaties, he would have seen I say, that such attempts have been followed by discontent, disorders and even by revolutions. It is only when the country has been governed according to its wishes; when all its rights have been respected, and when each one has felt that he could exercise in peace and without constraint his religion and speak his own language, that peace has entered into their souls, that contentment has possessed every one, and that prosperity has come again in a solid and permanent manner. The same causes will produce the same effects. They will produce the same effects not only in the North-West, but throughout the whole of the Dominion, for the simple and very natural reason that if no respect is shown for the rights of our race in the North-West, we have no longer any guarantee that they will be respected elsewhere; and the French population will come to find out that they must place themselves in a position of defence against the aggression with which they will be constantly threatened. This is a condition of affairs which should not be tolerated. It appears to me that all the statesmen in this House should hold out the hand to one another, and come to an understanding to discourage the schemes of fanatics like the member for Simcoe, who labour to inflame the population, and to stir up the prejudices of race, in order to hoist themselves into power, even on the ruins of their country. With these remarks, Mr. Speaker, I have the honor to move the following amendment to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin):—

That all the words after the word "Resolved" in the amendment be struck out and the following inserted instead thereof:—"That the official use of the French and English languages in the Legislature and the Courts of the North-West Territories was established by this Parliament in the well understood interests of the people of the said Territories, in order to promote the good understanding and the harmony that should exist between the different races, and with a view, by a liberal policy, to promote the colonisation and settlement of those vast domains; that nothing has happened since to excuse or justify the withdrawal of the privileges granted only a few years ago; that the result of the proposed legislation would be to create uneasiness and discontent throughout the Dominion and to put in doubt the stability of our institutions, and thereby to hinder and delay for a long time the development of the immense resources of the Canadian North-West."

Mr. DENISON. As the seconder of this Bill, it is only right that I should place on record my reasons for the course I intend to take. In approaching this subject, I wish to say I have no feeling against my loyal fellow-subjects of French origin, or against the French language, and I would be only too glad if I could speak the French language well; but I think it is not in the interests of the North-West Territories, or in the interests of Canada as a whole, that we should adopt the French language or continue it in the North-West Territories. If it is decided by this House that it is wise to have two languages in the North-West, the question which presents itself is, what other language shall we choose in addition to English? Shall we choose French, German, Cree, Icelandic, or Russian, or any other language. If we take the population numerically, and adopt the language of the strongest in that sense, we would have to adopt, as was suggested by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), the Cree language. In the early days up there, the English half-breeds spoke English and Cree, and the French half-breeds spoke French and Cree, and the Cree language was the common language between them all. But, if we rule that language out, shall we adopt French or German? I understand that now the Germans in the North-West equal, if they do not exceed the French there, and, if that is not the case now, I fancy it will not be very many years before the Germans will far exceed the French in the North-West. I was in the North-West twenty years ago, in the year 1870. It was then a Crown colony, or had been shortly before that. It was a British Crown colony, governed by the Hudson Bay Company, by means of a Governor and a Council. The Hudson Bay Company held that country from the time when they got their charter in 1670, until it was bought from them by the Dominion Government. It has been claimed by some that that is a French land; in fact Bishop Grandin, in his letter which we have on the Votes and Proceedings of the House, has claimed that it is French land, he speaks of it as "our land." I cannot see how he can claim anything of the kind because, as you all know, it has always been held by the Hudson Bay Company as a Crown colony under the direct authority of the British Government from the time of their charter. I would like to read a few lines from Hargrave's Red River. On page 87 he says:

"With regard to the administration of justice, the laws of England of the date of Her Majesty's accession, so far as they are applicable to the condition of the colony, are understood to regulate the judicial proceedings. The regulations passed by the Council of Assiniboia are of the nature of by-laws."

And to show further, the interest that was taken in that colony by the British Government on more than one occasion, they found it necessary to send up troops to Red River colony, through a vast wilderness, by the Hudson Bay route up the Nelson River, and by a very long, harassing and tedious journey. On page 93 the same author says:

"For a space of time extending over 15 years a regular military force was quartered at Red River. In 1846 a wing of the 6th regiment of foot, a detachment of royal engineers, and detachment of artillery, under command of Colonel Crofton, were ordered to the settlement, where they arrived in the autumn of the same year. The entire party consisted of 18 officers and 339 men. They reached their destination by way of York Factory on Hudson Bay, over the route between which point and the settlement they conveyed their guns and stores by the usual means of inland transport used in the country. They were sent out under secret instructions from the war office. Colonel Crofton himself remained for only one year, at the close of which he was succeeded by Major Griffith, who, along with the troops under his command, returned home in 1848."

On the next page we find:

"From 1855 till 1857 there were no troops resident in the colony, but in the latter year a company of Royal Canadian Riflemen came out. This corps formed part of a regiment of seven or eight hundred men which were peculiarly a Canadian force, being recruited for service in Canada, though supported by the Imperial Government. After the first two years of its residence had expired the entire body of officers was relieved by gentlemen from other companies of the regiment, and in the year 1861, after having been stationed in the country for four years, the company returned to Canada by ship from York Factory."

You will see, Mr. Speaker, by that, the interest that was taken in the North-West country, by the Imperial Government. You will see that there was no pretence then, that it was in any sense a French colony, or retained at any time by the French. In 1870, the population was very small, some ten or eleven thousand, mostly half-breeds. As we know there is not one representative in the present North-West Council who speaks the French tongue. I went over the Canadian Pacific Railway line this summer, and from the time that I entered the Territories to the day I left, it so happened I did not hear one word of French spoken. I cannot see that there is any great cry on the part of the French in the North-West for a dual language. If it is a good thing for the French race to have the French language used in the North-West Territories, it must also be a good thing for the German race that their language be spoken there also, because they are growing and increasing very rapidly. On my return I came back by the Northern Pacific road, and I am glad to say that our road is in every respect superior to it, and is indeed a most magnificent road, and it passes through a far better country in every respect. In fact the whole of the Northern Pacific country seems to be altogether barren, except on the Pacific slope, where there is some good land. I could see that the land was all occupied; I could see that our neighbors have settled pretty nearly all that country except, perhaps, a small portion on the Pacific slope. They have occupied all the mountain lands for pasture, they have occupied all the valleys good for tillage. As you will remember, not very long ago when the Oklahoma district was opened for settlement, it was surrounded on all sides by people who rushed in so as to be able to get land. That is conclusive proof, to my mind, that our neighbors to the south have pretty well overrun all the land they have, and I think that they are not likely to have any new territory to throw open unless they seize more Indian reserves and open them for settlement. That being the case I have every ground for saying that there will be a very large immigration into our own North-West Territories within the next few years. We have there a great lone land, a land, I suppose, as big as Europe, without any inhabitants to speak of. There are very few or no inhabitants in a vast extent of territory which will be opened for future settlement. When we think of the large immigration that is increasing every year, when we know that immigration has been pouring into the United States for years, when we know that that country is already about filled up, we must become convinced that the tide of population is sure to turn towards our own Territories. Now, is this House to say that we are going to allow these foreign settlers who come in there, to say what language they shall speak? I hope not. I think that we should let all these foreigners who reach our shores understand that when they set their foot in the North-West Territories they have got to become Canadians and speak the language of this continent. It has been said that Switzerland is a parallel case to this Canada of ours. Now, mark you, I am not referring to Quebec, it is out of the question to speak about Quebec; I have devoted myself entirely to the North-West Territories and it has been suggested that Switzerland is a parallel case. It is not a parallel case for this reason: In Switzerland they had a dual language from the very beginning, whereas we have a great lone land empty now and waiting for settlement. As you know, Switzerland was peopled from the south by Italians, from the east by French, from the north by Germans. They were living in secluded valleys where they were left undisturbed for a long time, and when they found they were attacked by a foreign enemy they combined for common defence. When I read the history of Switzerland for the first time, I was surprised to learn what great dissensions they have had in that country during several generations, and it has only been when attacked by a common enemy that they combined and made a common defence. I would like, with your permission, to read something from Bishop Grandin's letter. He says:

"After the annexation the immigrants came in great numbers, and I can tell you that out of every hundred there were but ten Catholics; the English and Protestant population thereupon increased rapidly, and in a few years we must be content to find ourselves in the minority."

And further on:

"You are also acquainted with what is going on this very day at Regina. In spite of the efforts of the Hon. J. Royal, Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West, and the Hon. Judge Rouleau, all our representatives, not one of whom is a Catholic, demand, with two exceptions, the abolition of our language and the amendment of our school laws in order to impose upon us the so-called secular schools which are nothing else but anti-Catholic schools, even admitting that they are not Godless schools."

Further on he says:

"If even one-fourth of those who emigrated from your Province during the past ten years had come to us, we would still constitute the majority, or would at all events be a powerful minority which would have to be taken into account and against which none would think of enacting extraordinary laws. To people this territory, to people our land, as the aborigines call it—and the Half-breeds and French Canadians have some right to use that expression: for French Canadians discovered this vast country; French Canadians and Half-breeds opened it up to religion and colonisation—to settle our lands there are sent men from every nation, men without faith and without religion; Mennonites are brought from a great distance, even Mormons are admitted and are seemingly held up as examples to the Blackfeet."

I have read these extracts to show that even Bishop Grandin admits that the immigration of English and other people has enormously increased there. I desire to make one more quotation before I resume my seat; it is from the Mail of 15th November, 1889. In an interview between Premier Mercier and a reporter of that paper, the reporter asked:

"When you said in your address before the Club National last week: 'Let us hope that these principles may never be misunderstood, and that we may not be called upon in any of our Provinces to have recourse to reprisals, and to remind the majority who may be unjust that there is a minority which stands in need of protection,' did you mean that as a threat to the Protestant majorities of other Provinces and to the Protestant minority here?"

"Not as a threat," replied Mr. Mercier; "but surely as a warning to the majorities in the other Provinces. To be frank, I must say that I intended and I do intend to-day to state that equal rights must apply to the minorities in every Province, and if the Federal Act is to be applied in some other Province against the rights of the minorities and to the abolition of their Separate schools where they exist by law, I do not see why the same rule should not apply to the minority of the Province of Quebec. I stated that the minorities had no rights because they were French or English, Catholic or Protestant, but that they had rights because they were the minorities entitled to be protected and to enjoy the same rights as the majorities. This being the principle, I do not see why the minority of the Province of Quebec should have more rights than the minorities in the other Provinces when the same law applies, when these rights are consecrated by the same constitution, and when the same interest exists. So, to be clear, my intention was to say that if the Catholics or the French of the other Provinces are not treated as they ought to be, I do not see why the Protestants and English in the Province of Quebec should be treated otherwise. I understand perfectly well the responsibility that I take, and I do take it with intention. It is not a threat, as I said, but a warning, which I hope will be sufficient to prevent the majorities of other Provinces from being unjust."

Now, are we to be deterred from doing our duty, from doing what we consider to be in the interests of our country, by any threats or warnings from

Mr. Mercier? I hope not. I, for one, have no idea of being influenced by the threats of Mr. Mercier or his friends. I will take any course in this House I choose, ignoring Mr. Mercier and anything he may do or say. I wish it to be understood that when he speaks his remarks have no influence or effect over me. I believe the course I am taking is the correct one, that it is the one in the interests of the land of my birth, and the land that contains everything that I hold dear.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 13th February, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 78) to incorporate the Portage la Prairie and Duck Mountain Railway Company.—(Mr. Hesson.)

WHARFAGE AT BEDIQUE, P.E.I.

Mr. PERRY asked, What is the amount of wharfage collected at Hurd's Point wharf, Bedique, P.E.I., during the year 1889?

Mr. TUPPER. $443 was derived in revenue for the year ending 30th June last. The entire receipts for the calendar year ending on the 31st December last, were $68.36.

WHARFINGER AT TIGNISH, P.E.I.

Mr. PERRY asked, Whether the wharfinger at Tignish, P.E.I., has made a return to the Department of Marine of the money collected for wharfage during the year 1889? If so, what amount has been collected?

Mr. TUPPER. Nothing was collected by the wharfinger, but a suit has been brought for dues not paid.

STE. ANGÈLE DE MÉRICI MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. Fiset asked, Whether the hon. the Postmaster General has received the petition which I forwarded him on behalf of the freeholders of the Parish of Ste. Angèle de Mérici, asking for a daily mail service? If he has, whether he intends to acknowledge the receipt of the said petition and to grant the prayer thereof?

Mr. HAGGART. There is no trace in the Department of any such petition.

MATANE BRANCH LINE.

Mr. Fiset asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government, this year, to take into their serious consideration the petitions which have been forwarded to them respecting the railway called the Matane Branch line? Whether they propose, this Session, to grant any subsidy whatever to the company regularly formed, and which has obtained a charter from the Legislature of the Province of Quebec for the construction of this branch line?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government will take this application and these petitions applying for subsidies, into their serious consideration during the present Session.

COLONEL WALKER POWELL.

Mr. LISTER asked, Whether Colonel Walker Powell, Adjutant General of Militia, has tendered his resignation to the Minister of Militia or the Government at any time during the past five years? If so, for what cause; and on what conditions did he agree to remain in his present official position?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In answer to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say that the Adjutant General presented me with a letter, which, upon opening, I found to be a proposal to resign his office. I returned it to him, not wishing to accept it, and he withdrew it without any conditions.

IMPORTATION OF MINING MACHINERY.

Mr. LISTER asked, Whether the Government has allowed any machinery used in the copper or nickel mines at Sudbury to be imported free of duty, or to be used in bond? Has the importation into Canada of any mining machinery been permitted without the payment of duty during the past five years?

Mr. BOWELL. Application was made for the admission, free of duty, of some machinery that had been used in the mines of the United States, for use in the copper and nickel mines at Sudbury, Ontario, which was conceded by Order in Council. The British Columbia Government appropriated a sum of money to purchase machinery for the purpose of erecting reducing works in the Cariboo district, British Columbia, upon which duty was paid, and application was made to the Dominion Government for a refund of said duty as such machinery was not manufactured in Canada. That application was granted. No refund has been made, for the reason that it has not yet been shown to the Department what portion of the machinery imported is not manufactured in Canada. When that is done, a refund will be made.

RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS.

Mr. BRIEN asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to place mail clerks on the Detroit, Lake Erie and Essex Railroad; and also on the Leamington and St. Croix Railroad, this Session?

Mr. HAGGART. Mails are not yet carried on the Detroit, Lake Erie and Essex Railway. Whether they will be carried or not is at present under consideration. In answer to the second question, I beg to say that the mails are carried by the railway company, and there is no necessity for a railway mail clerk.

POSTAL FACILITIES IN ESSEX COUNTY.

Mr. BRIEN asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to establish a post office at New Canaan, County of Essex, during the present Session of Parliament?

Mr. HAGGART. An application has been received for a post office at a place called New Canaan. Upon the application being referred to the Inspector, he reported that there is a station named by the railway company "New Canaan." There are two or three houses in sight, but no appearance of any village starting up. Mr. Weldon, the person who seeks the office of postmaster, proposes that one Walter Boyle, who lives at about a quarter of a mile from the Corners, shall act as his assistant for the time being, and that next fall, he will put up a building for a store at the Corners, and take the post office into it. Mr. Weldon now resides at Gesto, which is about two and a-half miles east of New Canaan. An office at the Malden road is, under present circumstances, not required, and until Mr. Weldon or some one else erects a store and the place shows some signs of improvement, the question of opening a post office there might be left in abeyance. The application is, in my opinion, premature. On account of there being no settled site as to where the post office is proposed to be established, I am unable to state just what a semi-daily mail service would cost from the Lake Erie, Essex and Detroit River Railway, in case that railway be used for mail purposes.

JUNIOR JUDGE FOR ESSEX COUNTY.

Mr. BRIEN asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to appoint a junior judge for the County of Essex during the present Session? If not, when?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We have had no application on the subject recently, and the matter has not been considered during the last few months.

PRIVILEGE—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. RYKERT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to make a personal explanation in regard to certain matters which have appeared in the public press during the last few days. In the Globe of last Saturday there appeared a large number of letters purporting to be written by myself in regard to a timber limit in the North West Territories. And in the Globe of Tuesday last a reference is made to this correspondence, and the charge is also made that I, as a member of this House, have been guilty of a breach of the Independence of Parliament Act, and that I have used my position as a member of Parliament for my own personal and private gain. It is also alleged that connected with that transaction are certain Ministers of the Crown, who, it is alleged, took an active part in respect to this matter. So far as I myself am concerned, I care not what the public press may say about me. I have been in Parliament a great many years, and the result of all attacks has been that I am still here a member of this House, and I have occupied the position as representative of my own constituency for upwards of a quarter of a century. This whole correspondence was published during the last election; it was talked about throughout the country, and as a result, my majority was increased from the normal one of about 100 to about 500. So you will see, Mr. Speaker, that so far as my constituents were concerned they took no stock whatever in this correspondence or in matters published throughout my constituency in regard to this matter. I would not, Sir, upon this occasion take any objection to what has been said were it not that something has been said reflecting on members of the Government. I am able to defend myself on any public platform in this country, and I am prepared to do so on all occasions, but when it is said that Ministers of the Crown are connected with me in a matter which is alleged to be not of a proper character, it is my duty at the very outset to satisfy this House that they have nothing whatever to do with it. I entirely exonerate the Government from anything improper. It must have struck hon. gentlemen, on reading this correspondence, that there is something very peculiar about it. In the first place it is a private and confidential correspondence. It also appears that those letters were written in answer to other letters addressed to myself, and that some of the letters which have been suppressed are of a very important character. It must also have suggested itself to persons reading it that all this correspondence took place after these limits in the North-West Territories were granted to Mr. Adams, and that this has nothing whatever to do with my position as a member of Parliament. I propose today to supply to the House and the country some letters which have not been published, which will go a long way to explain the reason why some of the correspondence was written by myself, and also give several explanations regarding that correspondence, without which it might appear somewhat strange. Let me say in the first place, as regards my being guilty of a breach of the Independence of Parliament Act, and as having prostituted my position as a member of Parliament, that, according to the law of the land, a law placed upon the statute book by the late Government, the Government of Mr. Mackenzie, that any person had the right to make application to the Government for a timber limit in the North-West Territories without tenders being asked. The old law had been repealed by the late Government, so that any person could apply to the Government for the purpose of obtaining a limit in the North-West Territories. It is well known that this was taken advantage of, but I will not enter upon this question on this occasion. But in accordance with the law as it then stood, and the law is on the statute book, any company, composed of members of Parliament or other persons, had a perfect right to go to the Government and ask for a timber limit in the North-West Territories. I will state the facts briefly. On behalf of Mr. John Adams I was applied to to get a timber limit in the North-West Territories. The correspondence leading up to that has not been published, and I propose to supply that, although I will not trouble the House with reading the letters in full, but I will place them in the hands of the official reporters of the House. I submit them in order to set myself right before the country and the House, and also to explain several observations made in the letters, which have been published in the Globe. Mr. Adams, knowing that he had a perfect right to apply for a timber limit, wrote to me on 15th December, 1881, asking me to procure for him a limit in the North-West Territories, and asking me what proceeding he should adopt in order that he could get that limit. I replied, on 22nd December, that I received his letter, that I did not know when I would go to Ottawa, and if I could be any aid to him when I got there I would be pleased to assist him. I asked him in reference to different matters up there which will appear in the correspondence. On 28th December, Mr. Adams wrote to me. He said :

Mr. HAGGART.

"I think I have a good thing up here, and I am told by a timber agent that if I only apply to the Government I can get hold of it. Now, I do not know how to apply and want you to help me, as I know you can if you like. Perhaps you can better yourself by helping me, as I will pay you well for all you do for me. Can I get up a company up here and apply for limits? I can get good men to help me. I have made a good deal of money up here and hope to make more.

On 11th January I wrote to him :

"I know nothing of the prospects of getting limits, nor do I know what are the rules of the Department about applying. If you send me particulars of what you want, I will see the Department or send to my agent at Ottawa and enquire."

Then, on the 25th January, I wrote again :

"I am delighted to hear you are making money. Nothing would please me better than to see you here again with a fortune. As regards the matter you speak of I shall be pleased to assist you and the company in any way I can, and, of course, I would be glad to better myself in any way which is fair and honorable. It seems to me you ought to organise a company with good men as you suggest, and then apply to the Government. I expect to be in Ottawa in two weeks, when I can perhaps do you service. Keep me posted as to what you want."

I may state here that when the application was sent to me, there was no location defined, and knowing that the Government would not allow a person to roam all over the North-West Territories, I asked that some specific description be given, in order that the Department would know what territory would be looked over by Mr. Adams to get the limit. On 10th February, 1882, I wrote to Mr. Adams :

"I cannot make out from the memo. sent me where the timber limit is, or the boundaries of the same. I have made enquiries in the Department, and they tell me it is necessary to state, as nearly as possible, the boundaries, in the application, within which you wish to select fifty square miles—you cannot have any more,—but they will not permit you to wander all over the country. Think they will let you select the limit out of a defined area of 400 square miles. I am afraid you are going into a very uncertain speculation, and better make more enquiries."

Again, on 19th February, I wrote as follows :—

"After talking the matter over with you yesterday, I put in your application, but I am afraid you will have to be more definite in your description. They tell me in the office there is no timber within the area fixed by you. I will try to have application allowed soon as possible."

On 20th March I wrote him again :

"Your application has been granted, but the Minister tells me that he thinks it will be worthless to you, as the limit is a good many hundred miles from any railway, and there is not likely to be any for years. They tell me you will have to take timber 1,300 miles by water to Winnipeg, and then compete with timber from the disputed territory. This is your own business, and you must be contented with the right to select within an area of 400 square miles. The Government will not let you play Cook & Sutherland upon it."

On the 25th March Mr. Adams wrote to me :

"Why cannot you get a bigger piece to select from, as I do not know anything about the territory. It will cost a large amount for the survey. Don't you think you can take a share in it or get up a company in St. Catharines? I will be liberal to them."

On 27th March I wrote :

"I cannot see any use in telling you a dozen times about the extent of territory that you can select from. You have now more than is usually granted. I am getting full instructions ready for the surveyor, and you can send him just as soon as I get the order. I would not invest any money in any such speculation, nor can I advise any of my friends to put money in a place of which I know nothing."

On 8th April he writes :

"What keeps the instructions back; can't you hurry them up? I am sorry you did not get 800 square miles to pick from. I think the delay will make it very costly to have the survey made. I think I can get up a company in Winnipeg to pay $40,000 or $50,000; then you can apply for another for me."

This, Mr. Speaker, you will see, will explain all the observations made in the letter which is published under my own hand on 8th April. I used the same expressions as Mr. Adams made in his letter to me. On 10th April reference is made to the same transaction, and on 11th April the Globe also refers to the same. On 16th April Mr. Adams says :

"What is keeping back the order for the surveyor? I am getting very uneasy. Just as soon as this is settled, I can get up a company for $30,000 or $40,000, or put in the whole for $70,000 cash. If I succeed, I wish to go for something else I have on hand."

After the order was sent up to Mr. Adams, and he sent a survey party to look over the timber and to locate his limits, word came to Ottawa that the Canadian Pacific Railway were cutting down this timber, and I told him to notify the manager of the company not to trespass further on this limit. On 2nd July I received a letter from Mr. Adams, as follows :—

"I sent you word to-day that the Canadian Pacific Railway was cutting my timber; and after getting answer, notified the company. They have cut a good deal of the timber; and I think they will have to pay for it. Muckle thinks I can get the Canadian Pacific Railway to purchase at $60,000 or $70,000, and I am trying to get them to bite at it anyway."

This expression is explained in one of my letters. The letter continues :

"Can they not get the balance of the timber in the 400 miles? I will tell them to see you in Ottawa. I would like to work the limit if the Canadian Pacific Railway will not buy. It will pay better than all the cash we can get."

What appears in my letter of the 24th is already explained. Adams writes to me from Winnipeg on 18th July :

"Mercer is back from the limit, and he will write you fully to-day. It is a great limit; and I am now satisfied the limit is well worth $150,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and they must have the timber, as there is none nearer than Winnipeg. But they are a hard people to satisfy about the value, unless Muckle will tell them all about it. I will try to get them to feel the men in the office here. I will go to Ottawa as soon as you are ready."

The letter of 25th July says that the surveyor has arrived and was preparing the documents to send down to Ottawa. On 3rd August, after the papers were sent Mr. Adams, he writes :

"I am so anxious about the affair that I will leave for Ottawa next week, and will meet you in Toronto on my way. I have got a regular bonanza. Don't let them beat me out of it after all my hard work and expense in paying thousands for surveys. I was talking to McCarthy about getting up a company; but Peter has not much faith in it. (That is Mr. McCarthy of Winnipeg.) I think I can sell for $80,000 or $90,000 cash, or I might get up a company and double that amount and take half in stock."

Then I telegraphed to him that the field notes had arrived, but that the oath of the surveyor had not been attached to it, and he ought to have a new application sworn to. Later on an application was made to have this license issued, but in consequence of some opposition made to it in the Department which is not necessary for me to refer to, it was delayed for some length of time. I mention that fact, because, in one of the letters of 14th Sept. it is stated that Mr. Bowell was helping. Now, the facts are briefly this, in explanation of what the hon. the Minister of Customs did. The application was sent here for a license, and the Minister being away at Rivière du Loup, I was compelled to ask some person in the Government to assist to have that put through as early as possible. I applied to Mr. Bowell and asked him if he would watch it, and when the opportunity arrived to speak of it. In no way did I ask his influence, for, on the contrary, the whole matter had gone beyond the range of influence altogether. The matter had passed out of the hands of the Department, and it was only necessary to have an order issued for the final issuing of the license. Therefore, I simply asked the Minister of Customs if he would look after the matter and see that the thing was satisfactorily arranged for me. That is all the correspondence which leads up to this matter. All the other correspondence referred to has reference entirely to what took place after the license had been issued, and after the Government had refused to renew the license in consequence of the application made by the Canadian Pacific Railway for the alternate sections. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me here state to the House that when this application was made for this timber license, there was no railway within 400 or 500 miles of it. At that time the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were expected to carry their line up to the Yellowhead Pass. During the Session of Parliament after this license was granted the Canadian Pacific Railway Company made application to this Parliament to change their location, and the result was that the location of the railway came within twenty or thirty miles of this limit, so that it was by pure accident that it became valuable. You will see by the correspondence that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company set to work cutting down timber on the limit, in consequence of Mr. Muckle, their timber agent, who was interested in this very limit with Mr. Adams, having induced them to cut down the timber in order to compel the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to buy it. I make that statement, because it was referred to in the correspondence. But when I applied to Mr. Van Horne in Winnipeg, at the instance of Mr. Adams, who telegraphed instructing me to go there, Mr. Van Horne stated to me that if the timber was cut down he would make it good. Up to that time the Canadian Pacific Railway Company made no claim; but in January, 1883, after the limit was sold, then for the first time it was discovered that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had made up their mind to secure the limit if at all possible. They claimed the alternate sections. It then became my duty, as representing Mr. Adams, to see the sale of the property carried out. Mr. Sands, who had secured the limit, insisted that I should see that the transaction was completed. I came to the Government, went before the Department, and asked them to renew the license. They said that it could not be done, because the Canadian Pacific Railway claimed the property. I urged as strongly as I could that it was the duty of the Government, having given the license long before the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had located their line, to see that the licensee was protected. I was urged to do so by Mr. Sands, whose correspondence I have here, and who insisted on it being done by myself. He said, on 21st February, 1883:

"I trust you will be able to protect my interest in this land transaction, for which services I will be happy to pay on demand."

On 10th April, 1883, he wrote:

"Should anyone interfere with my limit, I shall telegraph you to advise how to proceed."

Again on 4th May, 1883, he wrote:

"I trust you will continue to uphold and defend my rights and title to the whole limit on Cyprus Hills, and that you will soon be able to obtain for me the necessary limit."

On 5th June, 1883, he wrote:

"Hence, I trust, and am in hopes still that you will succeed in getting me a license for the whole limit, in which event I will have lost nothing. If, however, you fail to induce your Government to do this act of justice, you will undoubtedly get me a license for the even-sections as soon as possible."

On 23rd Sept., 1883, he wrote:

"Trusting you will look after my interest and not let any opportunity slip that may tend to increase my claim or strengthen our side of the case."

In consequence of this, I urged very strongly on the Government that it was their duty to protect this licensee, and not to allow the railway company to go into the unsurveyed territory and take that property. I fortified myself with an opinion from a distinguished member of the firm of Blake, Kerr, Lash & Cassels, of Toronto, which confirmed my own opinion that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had no right, in consequence of the deflection of their line, to take away the license given to another party in the unsurveyed territory. The title was passed by the firm of McArthur & Tupper, of Winnipeg, a firm composed of Mr. McArthur, Mr. Dexter, Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Tupper. The moment it was found that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were endeavoring to take this timber limit, or to destroy it, I telegraphed to Mr. Sands to send Mr. McArthur to Ottawa in order to show what they had done, and in order to have the matter set right. That is the reference I made to Mr. Tupper and Mr. Macdonald coming here. Those young gentlemen came here and did their duty in the matter, and asked nothing for their services and got nothing for them. They did what they were bound to do, according to the law, as the solicitors of Mr. Sands. I wish to refer here to one of the letters, a portion of which is printed as follows:—

"I have to go to Ottawa to-morrow night to fight the matter out, which I do not like. I mean to have all the hardest part of it to do. I have Bowell working for me, and if we succeed in beating the railway, we will have to pay the amount we agreed to pay, as you recollect, when we two were at the Queen's Hotel."

This letter is not printed properly; there should be a full stop after, "Bowell working for me." I put the matter before the Government, and they thought that it was fair that the license should be renewed if at all possible. I thought that the agreement made between Mr. Adams and myself at the Queen's Hotel in Toronto should be carried out, that if any person would cause the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to abandon their claim, they should be paid for it. There were several persons in this city—Mr. Muckle, Mr. Kirby and others—who offered their services, and claimed that they could have this difficulty removed by the payment of $5,000 or $6,000 each, and these are the persons referred to in my letter. After consideration, it was decided that it was better to buy out the Canadian Pacific Railway claim and pay these gentlemen the money they asked, but no member of the Government, directly or indirectly, ever insinuated that any money was to be paid for their services, or anything of the kind. It was the duty of the Government to see that the license was properly and satisfactorily carried out. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no use of my enlarging much longer on this question. I have explained the correspondence leading up to this transaction. The limit was applied for when any person could apply for it, and what took place, took place in consequence of the action of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who finally sold out their rights to Mr. Sands for $2.25 per acre, after working the limit for upwards of a year. So that you will see, so far as I was personally concerned, all I did was done in my capacity as Mr. Sands' friend and entirely in his behalf. In my position as a member of Parliament, I acted in good faith, and in obtaining that license I did what any other member of Parliament had a right to do. I had no faith myself in the enterprise, not knowing where the property was and not thinking it worth anything, and the whole thing was carried out by me in good faith, and did not affect my position as a member of Parliament. Of course, I am not responsible for the publication of this correspondence, which I had hoped we had heard the end of after the trouble we had in the County of Lincoln, and after all this correspondence had been hawked about the country, and after the attempts that were made to induce me to buy it, which I refused to do. I will read to the House a telegram which I received to-day, voluntarily, from Mr. Patterson, of St. Catharines, who was my opponent in the last election, a gentleman distinguished in that city, and who acted as the solicitor of Mr. Adams in the suit between that gentleman and me, which suit, I may say, was settled amicably out of court. The correspondence had nothing whatever to do with that settlement, but it was in consequence simply of a suggestion coming from Mr. Samuel Blake, who acted for one party, and Mr. Osler who acted for the other, and it was agreed that the correspondence should be destroyed, and Mr. Patterson's letter was telegraphed to me to-day, referring to the correspondence published in the Globe of Saturday last, as follows:—

"I beg to say I am more surprised than yourself at the publication of this correspondence. The suit was settled agreeably to my client, and one of the terms of the agreement was that the correspondence should be copied and no use made of the copies, and this, speaking for myself and to the best of my belief, for my clients, has been faithfully adhered to. If the correspondence has been given publication by me or my client, it must certainly be a gross breach of faith and in violation of the signed agreement entered into."

I hold the original agreement signed by the counsel for the parties in which the whole matter was discussed. Now it has been dragged to the light of day, and I care not for myself personally, so long as I entirely exonerate the Government from any blame in the matter. I am prepared to defend myself, and have done so successfully in the County of Lincoln, where I was returned by a majority of five hundred at the last elections.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the right hon. the First Minister brought down, as he said he would, copies of the Orders in Council referred to in this agreement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman asked me for it, and I consented to bring down the papers, but I did not know he wanted them for this discussion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman will leave it on the Table, that will do.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to make a motion. I do not propose to go into a discussion and lose time by so doing, but merely beg to move:

That whereas certain matters and documents reading as follows:—

I presume the House will permit me to consider these as read.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand from the right hon. the First Minister, that the House will consider them as read.

—certain matters and documents reading as follows: * * as published in the Globe newspaper of 8th February, containing divers statements affecting certain members of this House, and it is expedient that the House should have an opportunity of examining the same, it is ordered that the said letters above cited be printed in the Votes and Proceedings for the use of members.

The House is now in possession of the hon. member for Lincoln's explanations. I desire that the House should have the other documents which piece out the documents the hon. gentleman has referred to; and when the House is fully seized of them, we will be in a position to deal with this matter. I should be very glad, therefore, if the House will permit me, to include in that motion:

"And any other papers or correspondence that the hon. member for Lincoln desires to have included."

My wish being that the House should be seized of everything.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have asked the hon. gentleman, as it is a matter which affects him so considerably, if he requires a notice, and he only brings the condition, which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is willing to grant, that besides the papers that hon. gentleman has moved for, the hon. member for Lincoln will be at liberty to put in the Votes and Proceedings any other papers in connection with the matter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose all the hon. gentleman's papers are dated?

Mr. RYKERT. They are all in regular order. I have never put anything irregular before the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would make it more convenient for the use of hon. gentlemen if the letters the hon. gentleman wishes to interpolate were placed in order, as some of them are letters in reply to those contained in the document I have handed in.

Mr. RYKERT. I have a hundred more if the hon. gentleman would like to have them.

Mr. SPEAKER. As this motion must go into the Votes and Proceedings, what papers are required should be described.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. member for Lincoln will put in within twenty-four hours all the papers, and we will have the whole story.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no objection in the world to that.

Mr. SPEAKER. The correspondence should be defined, so that we may know what papers are to be printed in the Votes and Proceedings.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would suggest that, in order that the hon. member for Lincoln may put in all his papers, the hon. member will postpone his motion until to-morrow, and all the papers can be put in to-morrow.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no objection to that. It is perfectly fair that the hon. member for Lincoln should put his side of the question as fully as he pleases.

Motion withdrawn.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. member for Lincoln, I suppose, will send me within a reasonable time a list of the papers he wants inserted, so that I can add them to this motion, as suggested by the First Minister.

Mr. RYKERT. I will hand them to Hansard, but will not copy them for the hon. gentleman.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not require the hon. gentleman to copy them. No doubt the Hansard will copy them, and he can get them back from Hansard. All I want is to be enabled to make this motion in the form suggested by the First Minister.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understand the hon. member for Lincoln to say that he has handed in to Hansard all the papers he purposes to include. If that be the case, is there any object in delaying the motion, or does the hon. gentleman wish to hand the papers to the hon. member for South Oxford so that they may be included?

Mr. RYKERT. I propose that they shall go to Hansard at once, and they can be got back from Hansard and handed to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BOWELL. Before this question is closed, I desire to say one or two words in connection with the use of my name in this correspondence. The explanation given by the hon. gentleman of the conversation he had with me while the right hon. the First Minister, who was then Minister of the Interior, was absent at Rivière du Loup, is substantially correct; but he might have added that he had represented to me that the Canadian Pacific Railway had diverted their line some distance to the south in order to enable them to take possession of this timber limit for which he or his friends had obtained a license. If my recollection serves me right, I replied that in such case I thought his interests ought to be protected, and that I should bring the matter before my colleagues at the earliest possible moment. If that be a crime, I am sure it is one I have committed a great many times since I have been a member of the Government. There is scarcely a member of the House, who has had any business with the Customs Department—and they are not a few—to whom I have not given precisely the same answer. To that portion of the correspondence I have no objection, but when I find the letter of 28th January, 1888, couched in the language in which it is, I am of opinion it must either be a misprint or that the hon. gentleman was singularly unfortunate in selecting language to convey his ideas of what he was doing in Ottawa in connection with the extension of the lease or the re-issue of the lease to him, and, therefore, must enter my solemn protest. I find in the letter of 28th January the following language:—

“I have to go to Ottawa to-morrow night to fight the matter out, which I do not like. I mean to have all the hardest part of it to do. I have Bowell working for me. And if we succeed in beating the railway, we will have to pay the amount we agreed to pay, as you recollect, when we two were at the Queen's Hotel. I have not slept any for a week on account of this. We must keep perfectly quiet.”

A little further on he says:

“I am engaging all I can to assist me at Ottawa, and we will have to pay them well for it, as we cannot afford to lose this.”

This language has to be taken in connection with the language of 12th February, in which he says, writing to Mr. Adams:

“I have not yet succeeded in doing anything, but I am pulling wires in every direction. John A.'s son from Winnipeg, McArthur's partner, is here, and I intend employing him to go for his father. I think if you had young Tupper here and paid him pretty well he would help us materially. The Canadian Pacific Railway has a great hold on the Government, and we must counteract this in some way.”

I may say, to avoid any charge of misquotation, that I am omitting certain portions of these letters. He goes on:

“I am completely sick of it, as it is something I had no right to expect, and which I should not be called upon to undertake. If it costs all we spoke of, we had better do it than let it go.”

In another letter, dated 5th March, 1883, he says:

“I have not yet succeeded in getting anything done in the limit matter. I have brought Macdonald and Tupper from Winnipeg, and hope they will be able to induce their fathers to act properly in the matter.”

Mr. RYKERT. It should be “promptly.”

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is evident that what the hon. gentleman intended was that what was done promptly was done properly.

Mr. BOWELL. I think, if the dates are looked at, the hon. gentleman will find that it was not done promptly. The writer goes on:

“I am almost discouraged at the delay. Sands is writing me daily about it. He knows all about it. Some persons sent him the papers containing the statements. Will make any effort this week, and must do something, if we have to let a note apiece go.”—

Whatever that may mean. Then, on the 8th March, he writes:

“I find difficulties surrounding us in every way in reference to the limit, and I find that the Canadian Pacific Railway have certain Ministers working for them. I am afraid it will cost us each six or seven thousand dollars to get this made all right. I have five or six at work for me, and have agreed to pay them well if they succeed. Muckle was here and told me the limit was all within the belt, I am afraid they will do their very utmost to defeat me. I want to be satisfied that you are sure I am doing what is right, and also that you will back me out in all that I do in the way of payment.”

On 28th March, 1883, I find the following:—

“I am having a hard time with the limit matter. It will cost us each at least $5,500 to get this through. I have laid my ropes so that I expect to have it settled in a few days. I have a dozen at work for us. You must be prepared to pay the amount of your share at any time, as it will have to be all cash. * * * I had Tupper and Macdonald brought from Winnipeg, and they have been working hard for me.”

In regard to this correspondence, I have simply to say, that while I admit the interview to which the hon. gentleman refers—and every Minister has to grant interviews to any and every gentleman who has business with the Government—I cannot reconcile the language in the subsequent letters which I have read with the explanation which the hon. gentleman has made. If the statements in those letters mean anything, they mean that the Canadian Pacific Railway had certain members of the Government working for them, in order to deprive the hon. gentleman of a right which he had obtained for his client in these limits; that the balance of the members of the Cabinet were working for him, and that, if they succeeded in obtaining what he wanted, they were to be well paid. The hon. gentleman denies that. I cannot possibly imagine that he intended to convey that meaning, but I repeat what I have already said, that, either he has been singularly unfortunate in his use of the English language to convey his meaning and his ideas, or he meant to convey to the men for whom he was working, that he had purchased the balance of the Cabinet for the sum of some $5,500. I should be glad to have from the hon. gentleman before this discussion closes an explanation of this point. I do not think it is necessary for any member of the Cabinet to make a distinct and positive, or even an indirect, denial of the statements made in those letters even, if my interpretation of the language used be correct; but I must again repeat, and with a good deal of emphasis, that I can put no other construction upon that language. I hope to hear from the hon. gentleman that he did not intend to convey that construction. If he did, I desire to give it, in the most emphatic language, the most positive denial.

An hon. MEMBER. A lie.

Mr. BOWELL. I might in such a case, as suggested by an hon. gentleman opposite, designate it by stronger language. In justice to Mr. Hugh John Macdonald and Mr. Tupper, I am bound to read a telegram from the former gentleman. In these letters it is stated that Messrs. Macdonald and Tupper were brought to Ottawa in order to operate upon, or compel, or induce their fathers to do what the hon. gentleman thought was right. In the last letter I read, he says:

"I had Tupper and Macdonald brought from Winnipeg, and they have been working hard for me."

On the 11th February, Mr. Macdonald telegraphs as follows:—

"Our firm acted as solicitors for purchasers of Rykert limit and charged ordinary fees. Neither Stewart—

That is Mr. Tupper—

"nor I had any interest in the limit or acted for or received any money from Rykert, and never went to Ottawa about the matter. Am writing.

"HUGH J. MACDONALD."

It is only justice to these gentlemen that I should read this to the House in reply to the statement that they were brought here to operate upon their fathers in this matter. That is a question which I leave the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) to settle with Messrs. Macdonald and Tupper. I deem it justice to myself and to this firm to have made the statement, and having done so, I leave the matter with the House to form their own opinion as to the character of this correspondence and those who are assailed in it.

Mr. RYKERT. The hon. gentleman certainly could not have understood my explanations with reference to the payment of moneys. I distinctly stated that it was agreed at the Queen's Hotel, in Toronto, that certain moneys should be paid to parties who had volunteered their services to get the Canadian Pacific Railway claim removed, and these are the persons referred to in my published letter. One of those gentlemen said he could get it removed for $5,000, another said he could get it removed for $3,000, and they made certain propositions. I stated distinctly that no member of the Government, either directly or indirectly, ever took anything or asked for anything. I put that as strong as I could. As regards the telegram received, all I can say is this: that I wrote to Mr. McArthur, the senior member of the firm, asking him to send those gentlemen to Ottawa. Mr. Sands also either saw or wrote Mr. McArthur, other persons saw him, Mr. Adams saw him, as he informed me, asking him to send those gentlemen down to explain the matter, and explain in what position the limit was. I saw these gentlemen in Ottawa and spoke in reference to that matter. I urged them to see that the facts in connection with the matter were fully explained to Ministers. That is as clear as noonday, I am quite satisfied that these gentlemen, when they come here, will recollect distinctly the conversation, for I asked them to go and see what could be done. Sir Charles Tupper distinctly stated to me that the line having been deflected by the railway company, they were bound to protect the licensee. He said he would take the bull by the horns and see that the matter was properly attended to, if at all possible.

Mr. McCARTHY. I find that my name is mentioned in this correspondence, and certainly, under other circumstances, I should not have thought it of sufficient importance to bring it before the House; but as the matter is now mentioned here upon the floor of the House, I think it well to state what my connection with the transaction was. In the month of January, 1882, at the request of two constituents of mine, of the name of Shortreed & Laidlaw, a lumbering firm, I forwarded to the Minister an application for a certain limit which they described, and of which, I think, they sent a plan. In response to that I received a reply that the limit would not be sold at that time, which reply I communicated to my constituents, Messrs. Shortreed & Laidlaw. I have not any recollection, though at this time I would not say it was impossible, that I ever interfered in the matter further until the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), as is stated in this letter, told me that the Government had arranged, or the Department had arranged, that this limit should be sold, but that as Messrs. Shortreed & Laidlaw's application was first, some arrangement would have to be made with them. A brother of Mr. Laidlaw, Mr. William Laidlaw, was acting, as I had learned, as solicitor for the firm of Messrs. Shortreed & Laidlaw. I communicated with him, and from that time out the arrangement was made by Mr. William Laidlaw and the hon. member for Lincoln. The arrangement was, as I remember it, that the limit that had been applied for by Messrs. Shortreed & Laidlaw should be granted to them if it turned out that the timber was upon that part; and if there was any timber to be found there; at their joint expense a surveyor should be sent up; and if timber was not upon the portion for which they applied, then the limit was to go to the gentleman for whom the member for Lincoln was acting. I heard nothing more of the matter until some time, I think late in August, when I was again appealed to by these gentlemen, who said that they had learned that something was being done which they did not think was fair or right by their claim. They begged of me to come down to Ottawa and see about it. I put them off; I said it was useless to go, the Ministers were away, but I promised to write, and I did write to the Department, claiming that nothing should be done until I had an opportunity of coming to the Capital. When I came here afterwards, in the month of September, I found the limit was granted to the applicant, Mr. Adams, for whom the member for Lincoln was acting. I reported that to my constituents, or rather to their solicitor, Mr. William Laidlaw, and my connection in the matter practically then ceased. They were very much dissatisfied. I need not go into that now, because I had no connection with that. They were very much dissatisfied indeed, and I think they appealed subsequently to the Department with reference to it; but, practically, from that time out, I had nothing more to do with it. I had no interest, direct or indirect, with Messrs. Shortreed & Laidlaw; my whole concern was in forwarding the application of my constituents, this lumbering firm that I have spoken of.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think, before we depart from this very interesting subject, it is desirable to say something more about it. I feel it to be due to the Minister of Customs to say that, whatever other people may think of his conduct in this matter, his explanation entirely removes any doubt that might have existed in the minds of any person in relation to that correspondence. I am sure that there is no gentleman in this House who read that correspondence but will pronounce it an infamous correspondence so far as it relates to the Minister of Customs. Therefore I think the House should feel that he has given a full and ample explanation, and has quite removed from himself and his reputation any suspicion that he ever received any money, or acted in any way improperly. There are other members of the Cabinet here who were in that Cabinet at that time. I must say that having been myself a member of a Cabinet for a long time, and having sat with some of those gentlemen, particularly my right hon. friend, I feel sure that not one of those gentlemen ever received, or would receive, any such means to promote an object such as referred to in that correspondence. I think it is due to those hon. gentlemen themselves, it is due to their position, it is due to the honor and the credit of Canada, that they should severally disavow, as the Minister of Customs has done, any connection with that transaction, and repudiate the idea that men occupying the high position of advisers of Her Majesty would sully their position, or tamper with their reputation and character, by being guilty of anything such as imputed in that correspondence. I do not believe that one of them would do it, and I should be happy to hear a statement of that kind from them.

Mr. MCCARTHY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not the slightest objection to make such a statement. I thought that I had done so, the other day, when the matter was first brought up. In the beginning of this transaction I was Minister of the Interior, but before it was all finished, I think, Sir David Macpherson was Minister of the Interior. I am sure neither myself nor my successor in any way received any consideration of any kind, pecuniary or otherwise, for any of the transactions concerning this license. I almost think that the House would not even require this statement from me. The hon. member himself (Mr. Rykert) disavows any such intention, although I quite agree with the Minister of Customs that the language is singularly unfortunate—it is singularly unfortunate. As regards the solicitors who were employed by Mr. Adams, I think they were my son and the son of Sir Charles Tupper. Those are both young men, fighting their way as solicitors. I cannot speak about the wealth of my son's partner, but as far as my son is concerned, he had to fight his own battle. I gave him his education, and that is all. He is fighting his own way, and I believe he is doing it honestly and uprightly. Whatever may be his faults, I am quite sure that want of honor or honesty is not one of them. There is a remarkable discrepancy between a statement in the telegram that the Minister of Customs has read from my son, and the statement of the hon. member for Lincoln. He says that these two gentlemen were here; this telegram says they were not here; the letter which will be here, I suppose, this week, will most likely throw some light upon this discrepancy. As for myself, I can throw no light upon it, because I do not remember the persons of either of these two gentlemen. I dare say that most probably they have written—at least Mr. McArthur, who was then their partner, was looking after this matter. And whether he carried on the correspondence on behalf of the clients of those two gentlemen, I cannot say. The correspondence in the Department will, however, show who carried on the correspondence on behalf of Mr. Sands, who bought from Mr. Adams. It will be shown whether Mr. McArthur or Mr. Tupper, or the firm as a whole, carried on the correspondence. I will lay this correspondence before the House.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE IN THE NORTH-WEST.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. McCarthy for second reading of Bill (No. 10) to further amend the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter fifty, respecting the North-West Territories; the motion of Mr. Davin in amendment thereto, and the motion of Mr. Beausoleil in amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MULOCK. Mr. Speaker, in considering the proposition embraced in the Bill of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), I feel that it is impossible to limit the discussion to the mere matter involved in that Bill. If the proposition before the House was, from beginning to end, the question whether or not the French language should be discontinued as an official language in the North-West, the discussion would be reduced to narrow limits, and I fancy a rather satisfactory conclusion would be arrived at. But when we consider the utterances of the hon. mover of this Bill, both without the House and within it, I feel it is impossible to consider the question in that narrow light, but we must bear in mind the object the hon. gentleman has in view and all its consequences, far-reaching as they may be, and consider whether or not it would be wise to meet his view as presented in this Bill. I find that in a speech delivered by the hon. gentleman in the village of Stayner on 12th of July last, that the hon. gentleman, before an admiring and appreciative audience, dealt with the general question of the French language in Canada; and quoting from the Empire of 15th July, I find the following words attributed to him:

"To-day thousands of dollars worth of French literature has been printed for which there is no use; but the Lower French Canadian has got what he wants. He has got it in the law that there shall be two languages, and he has made a blow at the new Province. When the dual language is abolished in the North-West, there is plenty more to be done by-and-bye. Let us deal with the question of the dual language in the North-West, and let the people deal with French in the schools of the English Provinces; and when these two questions have been dealt with, we will have accomplished something, and paved the way for the future."

And further, in his closing peroration, in order to convince his admiring friends that he meant business on that occasion, he used this closing expression:

"Now is the time when the ballot box will decide this great question before the people; and if that does not supply the remedy in this generation, bayonets will supply it in the next."

Again we were favored with an expression of the views of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) on 12th December last. He, on that occasion, delivered an address in Ottawa, and a printed copy of that speech has been distributed pretty generally, and I have been favored with a copy. In that address I find the hon. gentleman referred to the report of Lord Durham in 1840, and quoted from it with appreciation. Referring to Lord Durham's report, he quoted:

"First, and above all things, then, he held that the French language must be stamped out."

Then the hon. gentleman goes on to declare what the vested rights of the French Canadians are in respect to their language, and returning again to Lord Durham's report, he quotes from it, substantially as follows:—

"Lord Durham realised that so long as they were permitted to be educated in their schools in the French language, to be instructed in the literature of France instead of in the literature of England, they would remain French in feeling, and no matter what they might call themselves, they would be French to all intents and purposes."

Those words I have read are, I presume, quotations by the hon. gentleman from the report of Lord Durham, and then he goes on to comment on them himself:

"Is there any shadow of doubt that Lord Durham was right?"

He appears to take the position that the French Canadian should not be permitted to be educated in French, or indulge in French literature, or in French at all. Such was the report of Lord Durham, such was the utterance of the hon. gentleman. He proceeded to say:

"Is there any shadow of doubt that between these two races, of all races in the world, if they are ever to be united, it must be by the obliteration of one of these languages, and by the teaching in one of these tongues?"

There we have the hon. gentleman for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) taking the ground, clearly and unmistakably, that there must be an obliteration of the language, either of the French Canadians or the English-speaking people of Canada. He took that ground on the 12th of December, he took it on the 12th of July, and he took it in this House in introducing this measure, comparatively harmless in itself, to deal with the question of the French language in the North-West Territories. In view, therefore, of his utterances I feel we cannot discuss this question in the limited sense of its having reference to the North-West Territories only, but in regard to the broad proposition taken by my hon. friend that, in order to secure the unity of a country and the development of a proper national spirit in our land, we must obliterate the French language and literature and all that is dear to the French Canadian people of Canada. That I understand to be the hon. gentleman's proposition; and giving him credit for honesty of purpose, which I am willing to do, the hon. gentleman endeavors to justify his position by laying down a proposition. In his address to this House, in introducing this Bill, the proposition he submitted was substantially this: that there must be unity in language in order to have unity in a nation, and that in order that a nation may realise all its possibilities there must be but one language. Let me say that the hon. gentleman rested that proposition entirely on a misapprehension, as was pointed out last night by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), of the meaning of Professor Freeman's article from which he quoted. Professor Freeman on that occasion stated most distinctly and positively that for all political purposes unity of language was not necessary. He was the only respectable authority the hon. gentleman gave; the others were anonymous, with the exception of Professor Max Müller, who cannot be considered as having dealt with this subject politically. Professor Freeman, the only authority on whom the hon. gentleman depends, proves nothing at all in support of his proposition. But even if Professor Freeman did take that view, I will offer to the House some facts of history as against the opinions either of Professor Freeman or of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). I will lay down a proposition and endeavor to prove it by facts, not opinions. I think the facts of history will justify one in making this assertion—that, as a rule, every nation of any note has at its earlier or later periods been composed of races speaking two or more languages. I think I can further assert with confidence that history does not disclose the case of any great nation, which has acquired enduring greatness, and in which there is but one language spoken. I will address myself to arguments in support of that first part of my proposition. Suppose we unfold before the mind's eye a map of Europe, and see what is the condition of affairs in the great nations of Europe to-day. If the object of the hon. member (Mr. McCarthy) is the development of this country, if his object is for the good of this country, if it can be made manifest that countries have been great, and can be great, and that the greatest countries on the earth to-day are those in which more than one tongue is spoken, surely there is no necessity for the advanced views of the hon. member of North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). During the debate yesterday, there seemed to be some reference made and some distinction drawn as to whether certain languages in different countries were used officially or by toleration. Whilst there is quite a difference, yet, so far as the attitude of the member for North Simcoe is concerned, that distinction does not enter into the question, because he proposes to obliterate a language, not to have it tolerated, and his efforts seem to be directed to prevent us from even thinking in a foreign tongue. Although I think there is little difference in treating the question as a matter of philology or politics, I will mention a few of the great nations in Europe in which, as a matter of permission, various languages are freely tolerated and exist according to law. First of all, we have Spain. In Spain there are two languages tolerated, the Spanish and the Basque. In Sweden there are four languages, the Swedish, the German, the Finnick and the Latin. In Switzerland there are four languages, French, German, Italian and Roumansche. In France, the French, Italian, Breton and Basque; and in the Netherlands, Flemish, Dutch, French; and in Great Britain, although the different languages have largely disappeared, yet still there are traces of those that have been tolerated there. We have in the Channel Islands the French language, and in the Island of Man the Manx language. The remains of the Erse language, I am glad to see, is being revived in Old Ireland; and the Gaelic, in Scotland, was until recently the only language spoken in some parts of the north and north-west. We have these languages in addition to the dominant Anglo-Saxon in Great Britain. For the purposes of this illustration I think we can fairly draw on the history of our own land, and prove from our own experience that a common language is not absolutely necessary to a nation's greatness.

Mr. TROW. Do not forget the Welsh.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Trow) reminds me not to forget the Welsh. I am glad he reminded me, for the Welsh is a language which is not only tolerated, but which is also the official language of Wales up to the present day. Then, we come to Austria. While German is the dominant tongue in Austria, she tolerates a vast number of languages other than the dominant one—for instance, the Hungarian, the Bohemian, the Czech, and others. In fact, next to Russia, there are a greater number of different languages and dialects spoken and tolerated according to law, in Austria, than in any other country in Europe. Let us take Germany, which has undergone many changes philologically. Although the dominant tongue to-day is German, there are many dialects of the old Slavonic, the Polish and other languages. Russia permits, according to law, about 100 languages—among others, the Finnish, the Caucasian and the Slavonic. So, we therefore see that those nations of Europe which I have mentioned are nations in which at no time has there been a common language as a matter of law or custom. If my hon. friend's proposition is right, and if he is correct in his contention, then these nations have all been failures and not one of them is working out its own destiny properly. I will now state to the House those nations of Europe which may be said to have a homogeneous language. They are but four—Italy, Portugal,

Mr. MULOCK.

Denmark and Greece. These are the only nations in Europe to-day in which we may say there is but one language. I am giving part of my case away when I admit that these four countries are homogeneous in regard to language. Whilst I may say that Italy has been homogeneous in language for 1,200 years, many tongues have come and gone, but the Italian is a sort of a compromise which has come to be the dominant tongue. But there was no Italian unity because of the uniformity of the Italian language. Italian unity is but yet in its infancy, and if the unity of language is destined to develop a nation, as my hon. friend says, how comes it that for 1,200 years unity of language in Italy entirely failed to develop such a result. I have given these facts from a philological standpoint, and now I will address myself to the subject from a political point of view. More than one official language is tolerated in the following countries: Switzerland has the French and German, and Spain the Spanish and Basque. The latter is spoken in several provinces in the north of Spain and the south of the Pyrenees. The Basques are a hardy race, and even in Spain, which is so far behind us in political advancement, they allow the Basques to maintain their own separate Parliament, and conduct their own deliberations in the Basque tongue, which is unintelligible to the ordinary Spaniard. In Austria the official language is German. In Hungary, Magyar, Bohemian and others. In Great Britain the official languages are French in the Channel Islands, and Manx in the Isle of Man,—not forgetting, of course, the dominant tongue. In the Isle of Man, to this very day, it is the law that all the official proceedings of their small Parliament, the Tynwald, shall be published in the English and Manx languages; and at the close of the Parliament, in order that the people shall know the decrees of Parliament, it is the duty of the Governor, accompanied by the high dignitaries and the people, to go out to a neighboring hill, to read the decrees in the two languages, that all men may know the laws that are to bind them. Further, in Great Britain, if we presume to be official languages those which are tolerated in the schools, we have the Welsh language recognised in the Government schools in Wales, and, recently, the Irish language taught in certain of the public schools of Ireland. So much for the history of language so far as Europe is concerned, which I think sufficiently sustains the proposition I have laid down, that unity of language is not essential to national greatness. I go a step further, and I say that unity of language does not necessarily produce national unity or national greatness. In support of that proposition I will call attention to the state of Greece. Greece is a country which, I think, will specially illustrate the proposition of my hon. friend (Mr. McCarthy), if such a proposition as his can be established at all. Greece is composed of many little provinces, but at all times the people spoke the Greek dialect, and Greek was substantially the language of Greece for all time. But yet, Sir, there was no unity of national spirit in Greece at any time. Greece from time to time was welded together by outside influences; but there was no cohesion in Greece itself by reason of language or anything else; and whenever some strong influence from without was withdrawn, the Greeks fell to destroying each other. Did you ever hear of a Greek boasting that he was a Greek? The boast of a Greek was that he was a Thessalonian, a Spartan, or an Athenian; not a Greek; but if they had been influenced only by community of language, we should never come across the phrase in Grecian literature, I am a Greek, in preference to, I am an Athenian. Take another prominent instance: take the case of Germany at a period when she may be considered to have been homogeneous in language. Germany has undergone many philological changes; I speak of the old Roman Empire, founded by Charlemagne in the eighth century. That empire became practically German in the thirteenth century, in consequence of the influence of the Teutonic knights. For a short period they succeeded, by great force of character, in establishing the German language and displacing the Slavonic. Thereafter, from the fourteenth century to the Peace of Westphalia, three hundred years afterwards, Germany was considered as illustrating that which my hon. friend depends on: it was a country homogeneous in language, and should have been a united and powerful land, bound together by that strong national spirit, to be developed, according to my hon. friend, only by community of language; but what does history tell us? Can my hon. friend point to a nation in ancient or modern times that, for three hundred years, was more torn by internal dissensions—by wars, rebellions and fratricidal disturbances—than that empire. Why, Sir, government became an absolute impossibility in that country. If community of language would accomplish anything, it had its community of language. But what did it accomplish? It accomplished the Treaty of Westphalia. The Germans, speaking German as they did, could not live together, and they dissolved the partnership, Prussia taking one section of the empire, and Austria taking the southern portion. If national unity of spirit or greatness were to be secured, and placed on an enduring basis by community of language, there of all cases was one, even in modern times, that should have had the result boasted of by the hon. member for North Simcoe. They have not since been able to agree, though speaking the same language, and in our own time we have found those two German-speaking peoples falling upon each other, until at last Prussia expelled Austria, her sister country, from the German Confederacy as the result of the war which ended with the battle of Sadowa, in the last third of a century. Now, suppose we adopt the policy of the hon. gentleman, and go in for an obliteration of the French language. That is the proposition we are face to face with. The hon. gentleman has thrown down the gage of battle to the French Canadian people. This Bill is but a commencement, a skirmish before the great battle that is to go on all along the line later on. But suppose that attempt, absurd as it is, should succeed, do you not think that before making it, we might well turn up the pages of history again, and see with what results such attempts have been followed? In the consideration of this question it might probably be instructive to remind the House that when the French and Anglo-Saxons first came together, and an attempt was made to make one language prevail over the other—I refer to the period succeeding the Norman Conquest—for 300 years French was the language of the royal family, the courts, the schools, and, as much as possible, the churches.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And the nobility.

Mr. MULOCK. And the nobility. Every effort was made to impose the French language on the Anglo-Saxon people. The result at the end of 300 years, at the time of Edward the Third, was that the French and the Anglo-Saxons had become strangers to each other. The lawyers in the courts were not understood by the witnesses, the jurors drawn from the Anglo-Saxons could not understand the witnesses. At last, it became absolutely impossible to carry on business. The Anglo-Saxon language at that time was in a far greater danger of extinction than it is to-day, because at that time the subjection of the Anglo-Saxons in Great Britain was most complete. The Normans were a strong and powerful race, and, of course, the times were more barbarous than the times in which we live, although my hon. friend would have us go back to those times. The relative position of the dominant and the subject classes was far more dangerous to the predominance of Anglo-Saxon institutions than can possibly be said to be the case to-day; but under the most discouraging circumstances one force prevented the extinction of the Anglo-Saxon language. The people had that vitality in themselves that enabled them to resist the threatened danger, and at last the French language had to be withdrawn as an official language, and in less than half a century it almost ceased to be spoken—

Mr. McCARTHY. Hear, hear.

Mr. MULOCK—and to-day we have nothing left from that invasion except some advantages to our literature and our vocabulary. My hon. friend says “hear, hear,” and I suppose he would draw the conclusion that that ought to take place here if we ceased to permit the French language to be official. But that conclusion cannot be drawn, because there was no compulsion put upon the people to abandon the use of French; the matter was left to the voluntary action of the people. The only legislation on the subject was that the law was changed to the extent of making the Anglo-Saxon language the language of the courts, and shortly afterwards it was taught in the schools; and not by coercion, but by toleration, the Anglo-Saxon assumed its pre-eminent position and has maintained it ever since. Well, Mr. Speaker, let me remind the hon. gentleman of another case, namely, the case of Poland. Russia made every possible attempt to persecute the language of the Poles out of existence; and, without being tedious, I may say that the pages of history disclose that the persecution to which the Polish language was subjected made that language more dear to the Polish people and more studied, and has added more to its dissemination and permanence than anything else could have done. And the same can be said of the Bohemian language; and as a singularity of the tenacity of language under coercion, I may point to the case of a small race or tribe called the Wenders who live in the vicinity of Elbe, who are Prussians politically, surrounded on all sides by Germans. An attempt was made to obliterate their language. Their population consists of but a few villages, surrounded on all sides by people speaking the German language, and yet the result of the attempts to destroy their language—I am speaking now of comparatively modern times—was, as set forth in a letter from their pastor to the mayor, that the pastor could no longer understand his flock, nor the flock the pastor. They did not give up their language; they simply ceased to attend the schools; they ceased to learn in German, which was an unknown tongue to them; and nothing was accomplished except to keep them in ignorance and to develop a bad feeling. Now, does the hon. gentleman suppose that by the methods he is advocating, methods of force and coercion, he can accomplish what he has in view? Let me remind him of the consequences, politically, of such attempts. Schleswig-Holstein at one time constituted two duchies of Denmark. The people spoke German. King Christian IX attempted to force upon them a change of language. What was the result? They became disaffected. They got encouragement from a foreign power, Prussia; they rose in rebellion; they were lost to Denmark and became Prussian. Such was the natural consequence of interfering with one of the institutions of the people. Let me refer to another historical case of modern times, within the political life almost of the hon. gentleman—the case of Lombardo Venetia. That was once a part of Austria, and their language Italian. Austria, not profiting by the experience of Denmark and other experiences, endeavored to destroy the Italian language of Lombardo Venetia, and to impose upon the people the German language. What was the result? The people, just as in Schleswig-Holstein, rebelled, and they found sympathisers, as all disaffected countries can, from without. Italy and France came to the rescue, and the result was, instead of Austria accomplishing what she was aiming at, destroying the Italian language, she lost both those two great Provinces, which became, in 1859, and still are, part of the empire of Italy. Now, what has happened in the case of these two great countries which, under coercion, transferred their allegiance to another flag, will happen wherever the same attempt is prosecuted. Does not the hon. gentleman see that he is proceeding in the most direct way possible, in the light of the past—which is the only guide to us to-day in these matters—to destroy this Confederation by causing our French Canadian subjects to become disaffected and to seek sympathisers outside, and to, perhaps, ultimately part company with the Canadian Confederacy. Does he desire that result? There can be nothing accomplished by force. Acts of Parliament and Orders in Council will not make men love one another. We cannot change men's nature by Acts of Parliament or Orders in Council. If we could, I should be the first to vote for an Act of Parliament to change many things in the constitution of my hon. friend, the mover of this Bill. I would with both hands go in for making him a man of different opinions. Suppose, as a matter of experiment, we were to do to him what he is seeking to do to the French Canadians, only the converse—suppose we were to pass an Act of Parliament to make him a French Canadian Catholic, would we succeed in making him one? He has gone back on his Celtic origin, and I am sure that no attempt by force would accomplish such result; and if he would be tenacious then of his own views, can he not picture to himself the effect of repression and coercion upon those to whom he seeks to have applied that treatment? Let me refer to a case briefly touched upon by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) last night, the case of Alsace. Alsace, at one time, was a part of Germany, but became French, Alsace and Lorraine having been transferred to France by the Treaty of Westphalia. Alsace was German in language and race, but by being treated with kindness by the French people and not persecuted, came to love France which had conquered her; and during the Franco-Prussian war, when attempts were made to recover Alsace, as was stated eloquently last night, she was one of the most loyal supporters of France which had conquered her two centuries before; and to-day the Germans, in endeavoring to do what my hon. friend is seeking to accomplish—to repress the use of the French language in Alsace—have eliminated the sympathies of the Alsacians, many of whom have left the country, while those who remain are so disaffected that they can be only kept in subjection by the presence of a large standing army. Such is the effect of endeavors to change the language of a people by coercion. History shows that where attempts are made to destroy a language, the people often construe those attempts as assaults upon their religion. For example, a movement is going on at present by which Canada is profiting. We have coming to Canada the Mennonites and Lutherans from the Baltic. Why are they coming here? Because Russia has been endeavoring to cause them to give up their own language, the German, and to adopt the Russian, and these Mennonites and Lutherans have conceived the idea that this is an attempt to coerce them into joining the Greek Church. They construe it as an assault upon their religion; and there are many instances in history where similar attempts have been similarly construed. We cannot, therefore, blame the French Canadians if they, too, should come to the conclusion that this movement is an assault on their religion. However much men may protest to the contrary, if the French Canadians get this idea into their heads, we cannot blame them, in the light of precedents which justified such conclusions in the past. I wonder that hon. gentleman has not discovered that he cannot rule the hearts of the people by force. If you desire them to abandon any of their institutions, you must leave it to them to do so voluntarily. Does not Æsop's fable of the traveller and his coat assist us in this question? The more violently the wind blew upon him, the more closely he wrapped his coat about him, and only threw it off under the benign, loving and beneficent rays of the sun. What are the duties of a parental Government with regard to its subjects? Is it not the duty of the Government to publish its decrees in a language known to all who may be bound by them? Clearly, there can be no more self-evident proposition than that, and this is a proposition which ought not to be required to be made good by argument in the present day. Even the barbarians admitted the soundness of it; and we have numerous instances in history where the barbarians, up to the time of the Christian era, and since, published their decrees, their laws, and their history, in the languages of all the people, in order that all the people might know them. It might assist my hon. friend if I gave him a still higher authority. Even if the authority of the barbarian does not bind him, let me quote from Holy Writ one verse in reference to the history of King Ahasuerus. We find that :

"He sent letters into all the King's provinces, into every Province according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language, that every man should bear rule in his own house, and that it should be published according to the language of every people."

I am only quoting those authorities of which there is actual evidence to-day. I am sure my hon. friend will not question the tradition of this book, but I will not quote the ordinary historians, though I may refer him to the reign of King Ptolemy V, of Egypt, who, though a powerful Greek ruler, distributed his laws amongst his people in different languages, and had them inscribed upon stone; and these laws, which were inscribed upon stone, are in existence to-day in the various languages of the people. Tracing the practice of nations, barbarian nations and those of later date, you find an invariable practice to make known to the people in their own language the laws which were to be binding upon them. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) has been born too late. He should have been born long prior to the barbarian people.

An hon. MEMBER. Before the Flood.

Mr. MULOCK. Before the Flood. What does he ask us to do now? He asks us to dispose of this question without any knowledge of the conditions of the people of the North-West. We do not know whether they will understand English or not. It may be that nine-tenths of them do understand English; but suppose there is a proportion who do not understand English, what then? The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Denison) said last night that a great number of them speak Cree, and therefore the laws of the North-West should be printed in Cree; and the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) said it was only a local question which should be settled in the North-West. I ask if it ought not be settled after hearing the facts of the case, and settled by those who are most competent to judge? Should we be called upon in this court to deliver judgment before we hear the evidence? The hon. gentleman would not ask such a decision from an ordinary court of the land. Then, why should he ask it from this, the highest court and tribunal in the land? If this is to be settled according to the views of the people, the proper tribunal must be the North-West representatives or some other tribunal, after learning the facts of the case. But the hon. gentleman went further. He intimated that no man could be a loyal citizen practically unless he spoke the dominant tongue of the country. In making that statement he has, no doubt, inadvertently cast a slur upon many of the loyal citizens of the British Empire. Would he accuse of disloyalty the Highlanders of Scotland, the Welsh, the people of the Channel Islands, and here in this country the Scotch population of Cape Breton, Cornwall and Gleggarry, and other parts, and the Germans? We have found that even the Indians were to be trusted in the hour of need, that they were true to our institutions, and we can point with pride to the pages of Canadian history to obtain facts to disprove the assertion of the hon. gentleman.

We have records in our history which are dear to the Canadian people. Who does not recollect Tecumseh and Tyendinaga, whose remains lie in a chapel in the constituency represented by my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Paterson). Those men represented the loyalty even of the savage tribes of Canada in our early troubles, and though not speaking our tongue, were loyal to Great Britain. If all the other citizens of the Empire who do not speak the Anglo-Saxon language have been true as they have been, what is there to be found in the pages of history since the French Canadian people became citizens of Canada to make my hon. friend doubt their loyalty to British institutions? Their loyalty was sorely tried. Shortly after 1759, the date so frequently referred to by my hon. friend as that of the conquest of the French Canadian people, within twenty years from that every effort was made to cause them to change their allegiance from Canada, and with what result? I cannot conceive the loyalty of a people being subjected to greater strains than that to which the French Canadian people were subjected to during the events which immediately succeeded the Treaty of Paris. What were the events which were going on across the border at that time? The thirteen colonies were in revolt, and were anxious to destroy British rule in America, and they were anxious to get the French Canadians to throw in their lot with them. At that time, General Washington issued a proclamation appealing to all the passions, the fears, the cupidity and the prejudices of the French Canadian people, to throw off their allegiance to Great Britain and to join the Union. That appeal was made accompanied by threats of invasion; the invasion followed, and the war continued for a length of time; and who were the strongest to help to sustain the British arms and British institutions during that period? Where did the French Canadians make default or prove themselves unworthy citizens of Great Britain during that time? The records of the attitude of the French Canadian people under those trials, ought to be sufficient to save them from the insults which are now heaped upon them. Let me read some of the appeals which were made by General Washington to the fears, the passions and the prejudices of the French Canadians at that time, to induce them to throw off their allegiance to Great Britain:

"We rejoice," said General Washington, "that our enemies have been deceived with regard to you; they have persuaded themselves—they have even dared to say—that the Canadians were not capable of distinguishing between the blessings of liberty and the wretchedness of slavery; that gratifying the vanity of a little circle of nobility would blind the people of Canada. By such artifices they hoped to bend you to their views, but they have been deceived. * * * Come, then, my brethren, unite with us in an indissoluble union; let us run together to the same goal. * * * Incited by these motives, and encouraged by the advice of many friends of liberty among you, the grand American Congress have sent an army into your Province, under the command of General Schuyler—not to plunder, but to protect you—to animate and bring forth into action those sentiments of freedom you have disclosed, and which the tools of despotism would extinguish through the whole creation. To co-operate with this design, and to frustrate those cruel and perfidious schemes, which would deluge our frontiers with the blood of women and children, I have despatched Colonel Arnold into your country, with a part of the army under my command. I have enjoined upon him, and I am certain that he will consider himself and act as in the country of his patrons and best friends. Necessaries and accommodations of every kind which you may furnish he will thankfully receive and render the full value. I invite you, therefore, as friends and brethren to provide him with such supplies as your country affords, and I pledge myself not only for your safety and security but for ample compensation. Let no man desert his habitation—let no one flee as before an enemy. The cause of America and of liberty is the cause of every virtuous American citizen, whatever may be his religion or descent. The united colonies know no distinction but such as slavery, corruption and arbitrary domination may create. Come, then, ye generous citizens, range yourselves under the standard of general liberty—against which all the force of artifice and tyranny will never be able to prevail."

This proclamation was circulated broadcast among the people of the Province. In every household, in every hamlet, this insidious document found its way, to induce them to throw off their allegiance. But they resisted—they resisted at the point of the bayonet, which is to be their fate in the next generation, according to the threat of the hon. member for Simcoe. As though that was not trial enough to their loyalty, we find old France itself sending out an emissary to beseech them in the name of France, in the name of the land they came from, in the name of the literature which, he says, makes them unworthy citizens, in the name of all that is dear to them; the King of France beseeches the people to throw in their allegiance to the American colonies. They did not do so, but they drove the invaders from the country, with the help of the English people. For some twenty years, until 1812, they continued quietly to enjoy the blessings of peace under the British flag; and if ever their loyalty was tested it was in 1812. On that occasion the peculiarities of the situation were marked. England was engaged in a European war and a war upon the Continent, in each case one of her opponents being France itself. There was England on the one side, and France and the United States upon the other. On which side did the Lower Canadian people range themselves at that time? Did they then prove themselves unworthy subjects of Great Britain? No, Sir; but they arrayed themselves by the side of Great Britain, and by the side of Canada, against the institutions of France itself, against their mother land; they arrayed themselves in support of British institutions in Canada. Therefore, I say it is the duty of all who are true to history, who propose to give credit where it is due; it is the duty of all who are not of French Canadian origin; it is our duty, in the name of our loyalty, to repudiate these slurs upon the nationality of French Canadians, and to say, that in their hands, as I believe, our institutions are as safe as in the hands of the hon. member for North Simcoe, or of the whole nation, if it were of his way of thinking. I find nothing in French Canadian history, since their union with Canada, to justify the charge that they cannot be considered loyal and worthy citizens of our country. On the contrary, I think their whole record is the most complete refutation that could be produced of a large part of the argument of my hon. friend. Now, Sir, languages will come and go, languages will die, and perhaps it may be, in the flight of time, that the French Canadian language will disappear from this country. But, if it is to disappear, let it disappear in a way that will be a source of strength and not a source of weakness, not as the outcome of force and violence, but as other languages in the past have disappeared. If time permitted I could read from the pages of history to show how nations, in the great struggles for supremacy, according to the spirit of their times, have extended their sway, and their language has, for the time being, accompanied their influence. We remember how the Greek States extended their sway from the Mediterranean to the confines of India, and carried with them the supremacy of the Greek language. We read how Rome extended her sway throughout western Europe, and the Latin language, for the time being, became the language of the people. But as their influence decayed, so their language decayed. Sir, the fact that the growth of language, the development of language, appears to be an incident to a nation's supremacy, to a nation's energy, proves to my mind, that its existence depends upon the people themselves, it does not depend upon coercive measures. Sir, I think the very fact that there is a diversity of language is not a danger, but it is a circumstance that must give value to the language itself, as an institution prized by a people. They must consider it a prize calculated to induce them to redouble their energies and their resources in all those directions that will make their country great, and with the decline of their greatness their language must also decline. Therefore if languages have to go down, let them go down as they have done in the past—go down as nations have gone down. But let them remain as incentives to people and to races to develop their energies, and, in this light, I conceive that diversity of language, instead of being a source of weakness, may be made an occasion of great national strength, developing, to make an application of the theory, a spirit of emulation amongst our French Canadian people, amongst all our people of different nationalities, so to promote their influence that their language may maintain its permanency. Entertaining these views I am not prepared to consent, as far as my voice goes, to any violence towards any of the institutions of this country that are dear to our people, and that are not contrary to the best interests of Canada. If the hon. gentleman, in introducing this measure had limited the whole case to the question involved in the enacting clause of the Bill, I think he would have done his cause infinitely more good than by the manner he has adopted, and to a great extent he would have avoided much of the bitterness that has been imported into this country. If I may venture, even at this late hour, to read him a bit of advice, it would be that, if his motive is, as I am bound to assume that it is, the welfare of Canada, then, before this debate is closed, and before it is too late, let him make clear exactly where he stands upon this question, let him make clear any ambiguity as to his ulterior object, and deny that this is the commencement only of a war upon a race that is not entitled to be so treated; or admit that it is, as he declares, and seems to say, an attempt to obliterate the French language and the French literature from Canada? If so, Mr. Speaker, there should be but one answer from the people's representatives here. We are sent here to save the Union, not to destroy it. The hon. gentleman says—and I wish to give him credit for good faith—that he is in favor of making this a British colony. But he is adopting a course little calculated to make British institutions permanent in Canada. Such being my conclusion, I feel unable to agree with the hon. gentleman in the legislation he asks, and I shall, therefore, cast my vote in the direction I have indicated—to have this matter settled by the people's representatives in the North-West, who are best able to settle it, or by such other tribunal as may be suggested after they shall have the fullest opportunity of enquiring into all the conditions of the country; believing, as I do, that neither the North-West Council nor any other tribunal to which it might be relegated by this House, will betray the trust reposed in it, but will act justly towards all the people without fear, favor or affection.

Mr. GIGAULT. Harmony prevailed in this country. French and English-speaking subjects were working hand in hand for the prosperity of this country, by that means endeavoring to strengthen and secure the safety of the British Empire. Thanks to the wisdom and prudence of Canadian and British statesmen, burning questions which had created animosity in the past, had been removed from the arena of politics. The French language and the Separate School questions had been settled by the Constitution of 1867. Every one hoped that those questions would not be agitated any longer. But a cloud, threatening our tranquility, has appeared on the horizon. The Bill presented by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), is objectionable chiefly on account of its preamble which shows the intention of the hon. gentleman. Moreover, we have his speeches outside of and inside this House, and we know what is his aim and what is the chief aim of the school of which he is the head. I believe that all persons who wish well to Canada should seek to stop the crusade which has been organised, and which is being made by the hon. member for North Simcoe. By the preamble of the Bill, that hon. gentleman says that unity of languages is absolutely necessary for national unity. Mr. Speaker, the British legislators have not been of that opinion. At the very doors of the English metropolis the French language is spoken, namely, in the Channel Islands. What do we see in India? There the English Government, so far from compelling the inhabitants of that colony to speak the English language, compels the Government officials to learn Sanscrit and the vernacular languages of India. What do we see in the Cape Colony? The Dutch language was not spoken there before 1882, but in that year a law was passed in the British Parliament allowing the debates to be made in that colony either in English or Dutch. In the Mauritius Islands the debates are conducted either in French or in English, and last year an ordinance was enacted by which the French language may be used before the courts of law in the Seychelles Islands. So, the policy which the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is following here, is contrary to all the legislation which has been passed, and which is now being passed by the British Empire. The policy followed by the hon. gentleman is not a British but an American policy. He was not formerly an admirer of American institutions, but to-day he seems to abandon the British spirit in order to imitate American institutions. The hon. gentleman has been kind enough to remind us that the French Canadians are a conquered people, and he stated, at the same time, that the Treaty of Paris did not secure to us the use of our language. The hon.

gentleman should not forget that, if the Treaty of Paris does not secure to us the use of the French language, there is the international law, a law common to all nations, which secures to us some rights and gives us some privileges, and it is such that it secures justice to the conquered as well as to the conqueror. I am not propounding a new idea. The Quebec Act was framed upon the report of the then Solicitor-General of England (Wedderburn). He made a report to King George III; and what principle does he lay down at the beginning of his report? He says:

"Canada is a conquered country. The capitulation secured the temporary enjoyment of certain rights, and the treaty of peace contained no reservation in favor of the inhabitants except a very vague one as to the exercise of their religion. Can it, therefore, be said that by right of conquest the conqueror may impose such laws as he pleases? This proposition has been maintained by some lawyers who have not distinguished between force and right."

The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) will please note these words, that "the proposition that the conqueror may impose such laws as he pleases has been maintained by lawyers who have not distinguished between force and right." Does the hon. gentleman wish only the law of force to prevail here? Further, the Solicitor General adds:

"It is certainly in the power of a conqueror to dispossess those he has subdued at discretion, and when the captivity of the vanquished was the consequence of victory, the proposition might be true; but in more civilised times, when the object of war is dominion, when subjects and not slaves are fruits of victory, I hope men are not going to be treated as slaves. No other right can be found in conquest but that of regulating the political and civil government of the country, leaving the individuals to the enjoyment of their property and all the privileges not inconsistent with the security of the conquest."

These are the principles laid down by the then Solicitor General of England, principles which have guided the British Parliament in legislating for her colonies. What has been the effect of that legislation? It has been such that England has preserved a strong hold upon her possessions, which to-day are more than 8,000,000 square miles in extent, and the population of which numbers more than 200,000,000 of loyal and devoted British subjects. Such has not been the success of other European countries in the government of their foreign possessions, for they have acquired possessions and colonies and lost them, because they were not faithful to the principles laid down by Solicitor General Wedderburn. These ideas are not only those of that English legislator, for we have some other eminent authorities which are accepted all over the world, and which endorse the proposition I uphold. Montesquieu, in his work entitled the "Spirit of the Laws," says:

"One of the great principles of the spirit of conquest ought to be to render the condition of the conquered as much better as possible: this is to fulfil at once the law of nature, and a maxim of state."

"It may sometimes be necessary to change the laws of the conquered people; it can never be so to deprive them of their manners, or even of their customs, which are often all they have for manners. But the surest way of preserving a conquest is to put, if it is possible, the conquered on a level with the conquerors, to grant them the same rights and the same principles."

So we find that the author of the "Spirit of Laws" clearly says that we ought to put the conquered on the same level as the conquerors, and grant them the same rights and the same privileges. That is the way we in this Dominion wish to be treated.

The French Canadians do not want favors; they want only the rights which are proper to every man. In the discussion of this matter we should not yield to prejudices, we should demand only the triumph of fair play, of justice, and of the principles which should guide the rulers of nations. The member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) says that he does not wish to interfere with the rights granted to the French people under the British North America Act. Can we hope that he will be faithful to this promise? That gentleman has twice approved of the North-West Territories Act, and yet to-day he disapproves of what he approved of yesterday. If he changes so often, must we not suppose that he will forget the promises he made in his speech, and that, faithful to those different speeches he has made in Ontario and elsewhere, he will continue on with his crusade against the French language, and against the Separate Schools. There is another strange accusation which has been made by the member for North Simcoe. He goes so far as to say that we should not read French literature. Does he not know that we have always had here Governors and representatives of the British Empire, who are not ashamed to read French literature? If we judge them by the manner in which they speak French, we must come to the conclusion that they have read a good deal of that French literature; and yet these gentlemen have remained loyal to the Crown, have remained true friends of the British Empire, and have always been found ready to protect the best interests of Great Britain. The member for North Simcoe has alluded chiefly to the report of Lord Durham, and he states that Lord Durham was an eminent statesman. But eminent statesmen generally make laws which remain a long time on the Statute-book. What do we see with respect to the law founded upon the report of Lord Durham on the French language? A few years after that constitution was adopted, it was found necessary to abrogate the clause which permitted only the use of the English language, and that abrogation showed that Lord Durham, far from being an eminent statesman, was a short-sighted legislator, whose views could not be accepted. I have heard, with a good deal of pleasure, the speech made by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). The remarks which he has made are certainly such as we should all take pride in, but I cannot approve of the conclusion to which he has come. It is this Parliament which has the right to frame laws and a constitution for the North-West Territories, and so long as that right rests with this Parliament we should not shrink from the duty and the responsibility which devolves upon us. We ought to frame laws which we think just and fair. We ought not to forget that the inhabitants of these Territories have their eyes upon us, and wish us to do justice to them. Some members say that the majority in this case must decide. I do not agree with that, Mr. Speaker. Justice and right are and will be justice and right, whatever may be the decision of the minority or of the majority, and there are certain rights and certain principles which cannot be set aside for the sake of the majority or for the sake of any decision which can be made by them. The legislation I advocate has already been sanctioned by our constitution. In order to protect the English minority in the Province of Quebec, we have made special provisions in the constitution to respect their feelings, and to hinder agitators from interfering with their rights. There are similar provisions in our constitution to protect the Catholic minority of Ontario, and the Fathers of our Confederation have acted wisely in putting the questions which affect these minorities in such a way that they are protected from the passions of the people which may be inflamed by agitators for sordid motives. A member of this House has rightly said that, if there had been no agitation on the Jesuit question, the dual language question would never have been agitated in the North-West. In fact, in the North-West the people were quiet until the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) thought fit to pay a visit to the inhabitants of that portion of the country. Another hon. gentleman said that if we allow foreigners to come to this country, we are not going to make laws for the purpose of rendering official the languages spoken by those foreigners. Does that hon. gentleman contend that the French Canadians are foreigners and aliens to this country? Does he forget that we are the members of a race which discovered and civilised this country? Surely that hon. member, when he made that assertion, did not reflect and did not consider the position we have occupied in Canada. Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks. The hon. member for North Simcoe says that the Treaty of Paris does not secure to us the use of our language; but there is one thing to which I can appeal for the preservation of that language: It is British fair play. We have appealed before to it, we have before laid our complaints at the foot of the Throne, and we have been successful enough to obtain justice. I hope that the same fair play will continue to be extended to us. We have not to deal with this question as the members of a certain race or class; we must consider and deal with it in a manner to promote the best interests of this country; and, according to British legislators, the best policy to be followed with respect to different creeds and races is to respect their feelings, and I hope that policy will continue to prevail.

Mr. CURRAN. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I ask your indulgence on this occasion when a question of so much importance is engaging our attention if I make the few observations I am about to address to the House in the language attacked by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), the proposer of the Bill now under consideration. I seize this opportunity to speak in the French language as one of the representatives of the Irish Catholics of the Dominion, who have also been attacked, in an unjustifiable manner, by the member for North Simcoe. That gentleman sought to establish by some authority that the Irish Catholics in Canada are not the friends of the French Canadians, and not only are we not their friends, but that we are their bitterest enemies. I think I speak with a knowledge of the subject, when I state that if in a distant past, when our immigrants reached this country poverty-stricken, totally ignorant of the French language, unable to understand those with whom they were thrown in contact or to make themselves understood by them, certain difficulties did arise, that to-day not only as between the Irish Catholics and the Protestants, who have never had any difficulty as to language, but as between the whole Canadian people whatever their origin or creed, with the exception of those who make a trade of appealing to prejudices, to the detriment of Canada's future, there never did exist in our country a stronger sentiment of unity or a stronger desire for the moral and material progress of our people, than that which exists to-day. Were a stranger to enter into our deliberative assembly now and find us occupied in the discussion of this question, what opinion must he form of us? We are here in a new country; we need to develop our immense resources, agricultural, industrial, mineral, and all the exhaustless wealth that Providence has placed at our disposal; we have a country extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and sparse as is our population, we have made such progress as to challenge the admiration of the world; and here we have this prosperity placed in peril by the discussion of questions in the Parliament of Canada utterly devoid of interest to all with the exception of the fanatics who have provoked the debate. What can be the object of these agitators? Can any patriotic motive inspire them? The march of events within the past few years is not unknown to us. We know how the question was raised and precipitated into the arena of public discussion, and I may ask, is there one worthy citizen, whatever his race may be, who will be found to state that the authors of this agitation are animated by honorable motives? The question now before us has been represented, on the one hand, as purely local, and, on the other, as one of general interest; to me it appears that had this question been raised opportunely it should have been dealt with from a purely local point of view; but when we consider not only the preamble of the Bill now before us, in which the hon. member for North Simcoe attacks all the French Canadians hold most dear, but the violent and outrageous speech in which he introduced it, it is difficult not to comprehend the motives that inspired this legislation. As has been well stated already, the people of the North-West, without distinction, the earliest settlers, and those who at the cost of great sacrifices went in there for the purpose of colonising those vast regions, were living in peace and security, building up the country by their united efforts and extending to each other a helping hand and not one word was heard concerning the abolition of the French as an official language. But for reasons best known to himself, a man who proclaims himself an apostle of equal rights for all, arouses an agitation for the purpose of depriving those who have made so many sacrifices of the right to speak their own language, or to have it officially recognised in that section of the country. Is there any justification for the hon. gentleman's conduct? Not a single individual in the region referred to has raised the question, but we have this self-constituted patriot, who declares his desire to form here one British nation by a single dash of his pen, and who appears to be an admirer of all that was odious in the penal legislation of days gone by, laws that bring a blush of shame to every Englishman's face, going into that country to arouse their passion and prejudice, and not only to disturb those who were living there in peace and harmony, but seeking to disjoint all friendly relations between the people of the older Provinces. Mr. Speaker, we cannot discuss this question in ignorance of the state of affairs that exists around us. We have to deal with things as they are. It is all very well to say, here is a local question that concerns the progress of the North-West Territories solely. That cannot hold, the position has been complicated in such a manner by its mover that we cannot avoid its determination in the broader sense, nor the inevitable conclusions to which the presentation of the question leads us. Some have said this is merely a monetary question involving the expenditure of public moneys, whilst nearly all have urged that not only are the people of the North-West interested but all Canada is involved. One thing is certain, on a subject of this kind a proud race will never allow their noblest aspirations to be interfered with by mere monetary considerations. Therefore, when we discuss this question, which, if it does not interest all Canada, at all events involves the sympathies of a million and a-half of French Canadians, we cannot do otherwise, in view of the onslaught made by the member for North Simcoe, than to respect and uphold the sentiments of a chivalrous people who have done so much for the development of our country, and we must above all be careful not to trample upon their sacred rights. What is the history of this legislation? I have no desire to prolong the discussion by reiterating what has been so eloquently said by those who have traced in glowing terms the history of our French Canadian compatriots. I shall confine myself to the amendment introduced by the Hon. Senator Girard when the Bill for the North-West Territories was discussed before the Senate. The hon. Senator caused the insertion of the French language amendment and there was not one dissentient voice. That amendment was unanimously confirmed by the House of Commons. I have carefully noted the attitude of the press on the subject in Ontario and Quebec as well, at that time. Not a single newspaper, either English or French, not a single organ of either political party published a syllable of condemnation of that legislation. On the contrary, it was everywhere conceded that not only was an act of justice being done to the French inhabitants of the North-West, but that the best means was being adopted to induce French Canadian immigration to the Territories and prevent their exodus to the United States. No doubt the strongest inducement for them to go there was to say to them: "You will enjoy there all the privileges you possess in the Province of Quebec," and that, Sir, was the motive that prompted the Girard amendment. Well, Sir, from that date until last summer no complaint was heard either in the press or on the platform or elsewhere, nothing was ever hinted that the progress of the Territories was being retarded by the official use of the French and English languages. The hon. member from Simcoe, in all his speeches, has held himself responsible for that legislation, and that he had made no move for years until he commenced his agitation in Ontario and then proceeded to disturb the minds of the people of the North-West Territories. Until the hon. gentleman's crusade, nothing was heard against the legislation that he now seeks to have repealed. Under such circumstances, we naturally ask ourselves: What is the object of this agitation? What interest can it promote? The hon. gentleman tells us in one of his speeches that the French Canadians desire to establish another Province of Quebec in the Territories. Have they ever sought, either in Parliament or in the press, to discourage immigration to that region, either of British, German, Swedish, or any other worthy settlers? Have they not always sought to encourage such immigration? Have they sought, in any manner, to disturb the harmony existing heretofore in the Territories? We shall have to wait a long time for any proof of such assertions. In concluding these few observations which I make in French, so as to show that we, the Irish Catholics and the French Canadians and the Protestants of this country likewise understand each other, I beseech those hon. members who seek to agitate the people to let us wage our political warfare on the legitimate ground of politics; to let us make our endeavors so that harmony may prevail among all races; to allow us to work together for the maintenance of the bonds that unite us. Under those conditions we shall see the country neither agitated nor threatened, but united; we shall have a country where every French Canadian, every Irish Canadian or any other Canadian may live in peace. It is a fortunate thing that we should have, as leaders of the French Canadian members of this House, statesmen who shall lead their compatriots by way of a wise and conciliatory policy and establish the reign of harmony and peace, and in that path I shall always follow them.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. ROBILLARD. Mr. Speaker, if this Bill had been moved by an ordinary member, I would have sat in my chair and given a silent vote; but as the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is the mover of it, I beg to address a few words to the House as a Canadian from Ontario, speaking French, if you like; for I call myself a Canadian, and it is the only name by which I call myself. The hon. member has been going through the country, and has very seldom lost an occasion to throw mud at us. Sir, the very preamble of his Bill I look upon as an insult to any French Canadian in this country. The idea that the fact of my speaking French is a barrier between me and my English-speaking neighbor I deny. It is true, Sir, we speak French, but we are learning English as fast as we can, and we are proud of it. Why should we not be? I say that every sensible French Canadian would wish to have his children learn English as well as French. I would not be doing my duty to my child if I did not allow him to learn English, because if he did not he would not have a fair start in the world with the children of my English-speaking neighbors. But when I hear men like the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) say that they are not attacking our language, I may say to him that people do not feel the insult that is given to others. That hon. member is not so sensitive as the hon. member for North Simcoe, because he has taken up the cause of people who have never asked him, people who do not suffer; for I challenge the hon. gentleman to show that there was ever a complaint in the North-West on this subject before he went up there himself to sow the seed of dissension. As the hon. gentleman knows, the people of the North-West do not pay that paltry sum of $400 or $500 which the use of the language there costs. I do not know the amount for which the hon. gentleman is on the assessment roll, but I venture to say that his share of that cost does not amount to a mill. I say that the preamble of this Bill itself is a false pretension and a false proposition. Although I speak French and am a Roman Catholic, I can live at peace with my English and Protestant neighbor. I do not care whether he is an Orangeman, a black Presbyterian or a Methodist, I can go and walk with him arm-in-arm on Sunday morning, and he drops into his church and I into mine, and we can escort each other back to our homes afterwards in a friendly and neighborly way. The time is past when people may hate each other for God's sake. My hon. friend from North Simcoe professes to do all this for love of the poor French Canadians; he wants to get us out of the crushing power of the clergy in Lower Canada; he is sorry to see us going to the States, and he invites us to go to Ontario; but what does he say? If you come into Ontario, you must shut your mouth; you are not allowed to speak your language. I know something of what I am speaking about, for I had the honor to represent a county in eastern Ontario, where people often come from Lower Canada, and I have always been proud and glad to see them, because they have been peaceable and respectable and moral citizens, though they could not speak a word of English. According to the idea of the hon. member for North Simcoe, these people may send their children to school, but the school must be taught by an English teacher. The hon. member, with his great love for the French Canadians, would not allow one to teach a school in Ontario, no matter how efficient he might be. The hon. gentleman will not deny that fact, for I have his own words for it in a speech he made in December last in the city of Ottawa. You know, Sir, he is one of the fathers of this Imperial Federation scheme. I will not say much about Imperial Federation, because it has not yet assumed a practical shape, and I think it will be a long time before it does; but, Sir, he is the father of another party—a party that made a great racket in Ontario and in the capital of this Dominion—what they call the Equal Rights party, but what I call the Unequal Rights party, from the way they put it in practice. Under the wing of that Equal Rights agitation, under the pretence of British fair play to the French Canadians, he said he would not allow a French Canadian to teach in a French county, were he ever so clever a man, because, there being French blood in his veins, the tendency of this teaching would be to Frenchify and not to Anglicise the people. That is the way he shows his great liberality. I would like the hon. gentleman to show his affection and love to his wife in that way. I would like to see him come to her with sweet and warm words in contradiction with his acts. Acts are stronger than words. Let him act towards his wife as he does towards us; let him lose no opportunity to trample on her feet, to hurt her feelings, and to deprive her of her rights, and he will soon come to the conclusion, to which I and the rest of my countrymen have come, that, although his words may be sweet and warm, his heart is cold. I might give him the advice which I gave my wife when I took her. I said to her: Here I am; I wish you to try and make yourself happy with me, with all my faults, as you find them out, and you will stand a better chance of correcting me, and will be happier, than if you used the broomstick. I say to the hon. gentleman that I acknowledge we have faults, but no more than other nationalities, and if he had more intercourse with us, if he would show himself more liberal and to have more heart and more love for us, and use his energy and great talents to seeing if he could not make himself happy, even if we did sometimes hurt the drum of his ears with a French word. I am not going over arguments that have been used before, and used better than I could hope to apply them. As far as community of language is concerned, that question has been discussed by men who have better command of the English than I, but I may say, en passant, that no later than last summer, when I was in Switzerland, I attended the great feast of the vine-growers, which takes place only once in every twenty-five years; and at that feast, which was held in a little town on Geneva Lake, there attended about seventy-five thousand people, speaking French, Italian and German. One would say "Good day" in German and the other would answer in French or Italian, or vice versa, and they seemed the most happy and contented people I ever met. Therefore, it seemed to me not necessary that there should be unity of language in order that a people might be happy and contented. I do not know what the hon. gentleman is driving at. He has gone through the different Provinces exciting sectional feelings; and I am sorry to see such a course taken in a new country composed as this is of different nationalities, who have been put here to work shoulder to shoulder in the chariot of progress, instead of working against each other. It is not by raising sectional or racial feelings that we can progress and prosper; and, therefore, I look upon such proceedings, whether conducted by the hon. member for Simcoe or anybody else, as fraught with danger in a community like this. I am not a pessimist. I have faith in the future of my country. And why? Because I believe there are enough men of good, sound sense, and broad, Christian, patriotic views, to crush out the fanatics, no matter where they come from. Were it not for that belief I would despair for my country. We can tolerate the fanaticism of ignorant people, for they know not what they do, but when we find men of education raising these issues, I cannot explain their motives. I ask myself, what does the hon. gentleman mean? Does he expect to govern by coercion? and if he could do so, would it be desirable? If he meant civil war, I could understand him; but he must remember that in that case we are 1,500,000 of French Canadians whom he will have to exterminate, for we will not run away. We are here to stay, and stay we will. Therefore he will have to exterminate us, and that will be a very big undertaking. We have stood a great deal of pressure, and I am certain we will survive the McCarthy pressure. A good deal that I had to say has been better said before, and, therefore, I intend to be short; but, before taking my seat I wish to say that the hon. gentleman's mode of showing his love to the French Canadians is a very singular one, and Mademoiselle la Canadienne will look for another beau besides the hon. gentleman. I must protest, in the name of peace, in the name of harmony, and in the name of my country, against the proposition of the hon. gentleman, and intend giving my support to the amendment of the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil). The amendment of the hon. member for Assiniboia advances a principle which I cannot admit, that because a majority ought to govern they can alter our constitution as well; and if this amendment of the hon. member for Assiniboia were adopted, there would be nothing to prevent a majority in this House going to the foot of the Throne and saying: We have admitted the principle that the majority ought to rule, by leaving to the majority of the North-West to decide as to the abolition of the French language, and, therefore, as we are the majority in the Confederation, we can decide to abolish it in the Province of Quebec or in any other Province. I do not want the Federal Government to relinquish this power which it has. I think it was the well-considered view of the Fathers of Confederation, when they left that power to the Federal Government, and that is the only safety which the minority in any Province possesses. Therefore, I will support the amendment of the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil), and will vote against the two other amendments. If another amendment were to be moved, leaving this matter over until after the election, but without divesting ourselves of the power which this Parliament possesses, I would support that, but otherwise I will support the amendment of the hon. member for Berthier.

Mr. CURRAN.

Mr. DAWSON. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), in the preamble to his Bill, declares that:

"It is expedient in the interest of the national community of the Dominion, that there should be community of language among the people of Canada, and that the enactment in the North-West Territories' Act allowing the use of the French language should be expunged therefrom."

The hon. gentleman has made a very able speech, but I do not think he has made good his proposition. He has failed to establish that community of language is essential to the prosperity of any country. In the British Empire there are three hundred millions of people, speaking many different languages, and, certainly, not one-fifth of that number speak the English language. Yet, the British Empire on which the sun never sets,—this great empire with all its diversity of languages and of peoples is prospering. Judging from this, a community of language is not essential to the prosperity of a nation. With regard to this particular matter, I may be pardoned if I give a brief history of the settlement of the French in the North-West. It is well known that the French of Lower Canada spread themselves over the North-West Territories long before the English had come even to Hudson's Bay, that they were at Lake Winnipeg, that they were on the Red River, where Manitoba now is, and that they were on the plains of the Saskatchewan a hundred years and more before the English had even come as far west as Lake Winnipeg. In regard to the rights of those French people, who were there at that time, those rights were secured to them in the same way, by the Treaty of Paris and the capitulation of Montreal, as they were secured to the people of Lower Canada. It is expressly stated in the capitulation itself that it extended to the "countries above," meaning the settlements on the Saskatchewan and the other portions of the western country.

The French Canadians inhabiting what was then known as Canada, including that territory, were all put in the same position by the Treaty of Paris. I believe that that will not be called in question. What the French did in that country, rendered the subsequent settlement of it possible. Verandrye, who was then celebrated as much as the great African explorer, Stanley, is to-day, had as great difficulties to encounter as Stanley has had in Africa, in a country which was unknown, which was peopled by savage tribes, where his followers were on one or two occasions nearly exterminated by the natives; but he showed great fortitude and made his way through that unknown country until he planted the colors of France at the Rocky Mountains. It must be acknowledged that the French have done a great deal for the settlement of the North-West. It has been stated by an hon. member that that country was for a long time treated as a Crown colony. This was not precisely the case. It was a colony, but not a Crown colony. It was a colony under a proprietary government, the government of the Hudson's Bay Company, something like the proprietary governments that were formed at one time in the States to the south of us, in Pennsylvania for example, and in Maryland, in which latter proprietary rights were given to Lord Baltimore. That was the sort of colony it was, and that colony flourished and grew. At the time that the North-West Territories fell to Canada there was a large population of French there. In fact, I may say that the population was almost entirely French and Indian. There were a certain number of English and Scotch settlers, but the majority of the people were French, descendants of those who were engaged in the fur trade, some being descendants of the Scotch who, in the year 1780 or earlier, went in very large numbers to the North-West and spread their establishments, not only along the Saskatchewan, but to the Arctic seas and to the shores of the Pacific ocean. By whose aid did they go there? By the aid of the French. By whose assistance was British Columbia—that Province of which we are so proud—secured to England, if not by that of the French voyageurs? I think enough has been said to show that the prosperity of nations does not depend altogether on the community of language. That has been shown in the very able speech of my hon. friend the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), and also in that of my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock). They have entered into that question and I think their arguments are quite enough to upset those of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), so I shall not delay the House upon that subject, except to say that, even in England itself, there were differences of language, and indeed many different languages were spoken within a comparatively short period. There were the French, the Welsh and the Gaelic besides other languages, and I think it was not much over a century ago that a number of Highlanders who could hardly speak a word of English leagued themselves together in several regiments under the name of the "Black Watch." Very little English was spoken amongst them, and yet that Black Watch fighting for England became as celebrated in European warfare in modern times as ever the Macedonian legions were in ancient history. As to the loyalty of the French, I do not think much requires to be said. They have shown their attachment to British institutions on many occasions and have been ready to shed their blood in defence of the British flag. Let me mention one case that we know, of the battle of Chateauguay: I am proud to say that the son of the hero of that battle was on my staff for many years in the North-West, De Salaberry. Sir, that De Salaberry was French essentially, and he won a great battle under the British flag. I think, Mr. Speaker, that this matter had better be left for time to settle. What necessity is there for bringing it up now? What have the people of the North-West to complain of? A few documents will be published in French in order that the French people may understand them. There is still a considerable French population there, and I think that the matter might be left to settle itself. No doubt English will largely preponderate, as English settlement flows in. Those who cannot speak English now will, in the course of time, learn to speak it, and the whole country will become English. We hear much about an exodus of French who are said to be leaving Lower Canada, and I would be very glad indeed to see them going up to the Saskatchewan and settling in that country. The French make excellent settlers; they are our best pioneers in a new country, and they get on in harmony with all people. There is no more peaceable people, no better settlers, no more admirable people for settling a new country than the French Canadians. They are a moral people, a good people, and good workers. I say that time will cure all this, and, in my opinion, the matter had better be left to the people of the North-West Territories themselves. Let them work out their own destiny. Throw the country open to the French and English, but do not throw disabilities on any class of the community. Allow the French to grow and prosper. Let them use their language for a few years. It is only for a few years; in the North-West Territories it will die naturally of itself, and the whole French population will be engulfed by the larger English element. Of course, the French language will endure permanently in Lower Canada, but in that western country which is now filling up with another population, the French language cannot be expected to last a great while. In the meantime, I think it had better be left to its own course.

Mr. Dawson.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not wish this debate to close without saying a few words, especially in answer to the speech of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). The hon. gentleman has taken upon himself the task of legislating by himself, alone, without being asked to interfere in any way. He wants to legislate for half the continent. There was no petition from the people of that country to interfere in their favor. They had their own representatives here, and those representatives, coming fresh from the people, were certainly the natural defenders of that population. However, the hon. gentleman being a member of Parliament, thought he had a right, and I suppose he had, to interfere and introduce the Bill now under consideration. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the reason that the hon. gentleman brings that Bill before Parliament? It is for the purpose of preventing a portion of the population of the North-West from using what God has given them, the French language. It is their mother tongue; they know no other language than that. But the

hon. gentleman, with his Equal Rights principles, says: "You shall not say a word, unless you utter it in a language which you do not know. Equal Rights! my good friends." If those are the Equal Rights of the hon. gentleman, I do not think that his political career will last very long. Fanaticism has never lasted, and this is fanaticism in all its vigor, in all its force. What has that population in the North-West, that speaks French, whether they are a thousand or whether they are one hundred—what have they done to the hon. gentleman that he seeks to prevent them from using their language—more than that, knowing in their own tongue the laws that are enacted for their protection, or which they have to obey? The only thing that they have done to the hon. gentleman is this, that their blood is not his blood. It is not their fault if they have not the blue blood of the hon. gentleman. Their blood is the blood that their good mothers gave them, and that blood is French. They were born so; they had nothing to say when they were born. When Providence brought them into the world they came with French blood, and when they could speak, they spoke French. They came from different parts of this continent, especially from Quebec. They went up there knowing that the subjects of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen had the right, under the laws of the Kingdom, to speak in French, provided they did not speak treason. These men have not spoken treason. The hon. gentleman has never stated that in his Bill, or in his speech. He dare not say so; because these men, I may tell the hon. gentleman, from first to last, up there, and in all the Provinces of the Dominion, are as loyal subjects of the Queen as the hon. gentleman is, or his children, or his ancestors. We do not boast of our loyalty as French Canadians; because it is in our hearts; it is in our veins. It is a duty on our part; because we are well governed and well protected by the laws of England, and by our Most Gracious Queen. It is a question of love with us, and we love our Queen, and we love our country; we are loyal to our Queen and loyal to our country. Why should we be treated differently from you, Englishmen; from you, Scotchmen; from you, Irishmen; from you, Scandinavians; from you, Germans? Is your blood better than ours? Is your birth better than ours? Were your ancestors better than ours? Mr. Speaker, I hope that the hon. gentleman will excuse me if I say, no. They are as good as ours; but ours are as good as theirs. Sir, I feel keenly on this question; because my race is a sensitive race; it is a proud race. I do not speak of the others. I have no doubt that they are as proud and as sensitive as mine. But we do not like to be attacked; we do not like to be sneered at and to be humiliated, especially by the hon. gentleman, who has no right to speak in that way, or to sneer at us. The hon. gentleman tries to find standing ground, and the position he takes is this: that the use of the two languages is expensive. That is one of the reasons he offers for his action. Expensive in what manner? At this time there is no French Canadian who speaks his language in the North-West Assembly, but a French Canadian spoke it in the last Legislative Assembly, and others will speak it in the Assembly after the next election, because there must be some, the hon. gentleman may depend on that; for although he may choke some French Canadians, he cannot choke enough to have the race disappear. French Canadians are quite able to defend their rights, and they will defend them; and to think that he will succeed in having a race numbering a million and a half or a million and three-quarters, with as many on the other side of the line, disappear and wiped from the land of their ancestors is a delusion on the part of that hon. gentleman. He had better learn a little French, which he does not know, and study our history, and he will learn from it that no attempts of that character have ever succeeded. But the hon. gentleman spoke of the expense; and what is the expense? The translation and publication of the journals and ordinances of the North-West have cost since that institution existed there $22,000.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In thirteen years.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of that amount, the French translation and publication have cost $4,000 in thirteen years, which is equal to less than $400 a year. If that is what is on the hon. gentleman's conscience, if that is what is troubling his patriotism, let him understand this, that henceforth I will pay $400 a year out of my own pocket for the translation of the laws and journals; so that this country which the hon. gentleman loves so well, and which he is convulsing for the sake of $400 a year, need not be called upon to pay this amount, and, if the hon. gentleman is afraid it will not be paid, I am ready to enter into a contract with him or with the North-West Council that the $400 will be paid on the first of January each year. But that is all a sham. It is not for that purpose the hon. gentleman has taken action—he has another purpose in view. He wants to tyrannise over the French Canadians of this country, he does not like them, he hates them—he hated them from the moment he came into Parliament. He showed it once—he must remember it—in a certain place where we were all congregated, and from that moment he saw that having shown his hatred to our race he could never recover the good graces of that race, unless he made the amende honorable. He did not wish to do that, he would not apologise; but he said: "I will be an enemy to that race so long as I sit in this House." But others have adopted the same course, and they have not succeeded any more than the hon. gentleman will succeed on this occasion. The object, however, of the hon. gentleman is disclosed in the preamble of his Bill. He seeks to introduce the thin end of the wedge, and, if he succeeds in that, then he will go a little further and seek to destroy the race from the North-West to the Atlantic. I defy the hon. gentleman to do it; that is more than his strength can accomplish, and he will not succeed. He may destroy a few French Canadians in the far-away North-West, but he may be sure of this, that, if he closes the mouths of our people in the Legislative Assembly of the North-West, if he prevents French Canadians having the rules of the House, and the journals of the House, and the laws of the country in their own language, they will do as they have done elsewhere—they will do without them. One day they will be twenty times more numerous than they are to-day. They will be growing quietly, and one day justice will be done to them by the force of circumstances. That is what we have seen from one end of the country to the other. We have seen it from the time this country came under a British régime. After the cession of this country by the French to the English, our people had no right to use the French language in courts of justice. The position was exactly that which the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) wishes to establish in the North-West. He has gone back a century. Who would have thought that a young legislator, such as he is, would have gone backward instead of going forward and endeavoring to do some good for his country and assisting its prosperity? The hon. gentleman has, however, gone back to that ancient time. What was the position then? The people were prevented using their language in the courts of justice, English alone being used. But French Canadians or Frenchmen at that time who had passed under the sceptre of the King of England could neither understand nor use the English language; and what did they do? They had law-suits and difficulties, as neighbors must sometimes have, and they had debts to collect. They said to themselves: "We cannot go before the judicial tribunals; we are not understood, we do not speak English but French, these judges are English and do not understand our language." What did they do? They did this: When two neighbors had a difficulty they went to their priest and asked him to hear the case and decide between them. The case would then be argued before the priest, and he would give judgment, and they submitted to that judgment. And the judicial tribunal did not see them. A little later the American revolution took place. England remembered that the French Canadians were the large majority of the people of Canada, that they were not properly treated, that it was an injustice to them to treat them as they had been treated under the English régime, and that they had shown no disposition to act disloyally, and, therefore, the British Government restored them to their rights, they gave them their liberties and all the rights they could expect until responsible government was brought about, sometime later on. That was the result. In England they did not say, that because those 60,000 or 70,000 French Canadians have not our blood and do not speak our language we will treat them as if they were pariahs, worse than the Chinese who come into the United States are treated. No. They said: We will treat them as British subjects, and restore to them their liberties, franchises and rights to which they are entitled. The hon. gentleman in order to strengthen his case, which he saw was very weak, tried to show that from the beginning we had not the legal right to use the French language in our Legislative Assembly. The hon. gentleman went as far back as the capitulation of the country to show this, but he ought to have remembered that when the capitulation took place, we had no Parliament and no Legislature, and, therefore, the question of language in the Legislature could not come to the minds of the French Generals who made these capitulations with the British Generals. It was out of the question at the time and nobody thought of it. But, let us consider what is granted in these capitulations. Among other things the French people, who had to submit to the fate of war, are guaranteed that the privileges of their race in Canada shall be preserved. Among these privileges surely their language must be one of the most sacred. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) says, however, that those men should have gone to school immediately and learned that beautiful English language which he speaks so well. Well, the people themselves did not think so, and they do not think so now. They think that the French language, which is the language of their mothers and their fathers, should be preserved intact by them, and that is what they have done, from the beginning of Canada as a British colony. That is what they have done up to this very day and that is what they intend to do for the future. We intend to keep our language sacred, and we intend speaking the French language notwithstanding all the attempts of the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). I may tell him that we would speak that language even if this Parliament refused us the use of the French language in our courts or in the Legislature. We would speak it as we spoke it notwithstanding the prohibitory law which the hon. gentleman invoked in showing that up to 1841 there was no legislation on that question. He told us that in 1841 when the Union of the Canadas took place the French language was prohibited, and when he told us this he was smiling and rejoicing and would have laughed had he dared. He rejoiced to see that the Parliament of England, after the rebellion in Upper and Lower Canada, declared that English should be the only language. The hon. gentleman passed very lightly on the rebellion in Upper Canada, and he spoke only of the rebellion of the French Canadians in the Province of Quebec. I will deal with that later on. He points out to us that in the Act passed at that time we find the language mentioned, and that the Act provided that the English language only should be used in Parliament. Well, the Union of the Canadas took place. The first Parliament was called together and it met under that law which said that the English language was the only language to be used. What was the first Act of that Parliament? It was to elect a French Canadian, the Hon. Mr. Cuvillier, as Speaker of that House, and why did they elect a French Canadian to be the Speaker? It was because they saw on the benches all around a large number of French Canadians returned as their representatives by the people of Lower Canada—French Canadians, some of them not speaking a word of English, elected by the people, although the people knew that that law was on the statute book stating that not a word of French should be spoken in the Parliament under the Union. Mr. Cuvillier was elected, the members began to speak, and strange to say (to the horror of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), no doubt) French speeches were delivered in that Parliament. The French Canadians used their own language as was their birthright. There was a law of the Imperial Parliament telling them that the English language only was to be used, but there was a law above all that, the law of nature, which told them that the French language should be used, and they used it. In a very short while after the Parliament of the United Provinces of Canada met, it passed a law on the 18th September, 1841 (5 Victoria, chapter 11, which was entitled "An Act to provide for the translation into the French language of the laws of this Province, and for other objects relative to them." We, therefore, see that although the Parliament of England said that English alone should be used, the then Parliament of Canada passed a law to say that everything connected with the laws of the country would be translated into French. We see, therefore, that notwithstanding the English law, the French language was used in Parliament by the members, was used in the translation of the laws of the country, and in 1844, or a few years afterwards, a petition was sent to the Queen in England, praying that that portion of the Union Act, which prevented the French language being used legally in Parliament, should be abrogated. That petition was granted, and the men of that day were patriotic enough, were just enough, and were liberal enough to pass a law unanimously giving that right to their fellow-subjects, the French Canadians. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) goes on and says that the only time when the Parliament of England permitted or allowed the use of both languages was in the Confederation Act of 1867. I am proud, Mr. Speaker, to think and to know that I was one of the Fathers of that Confederation Act, and that I used the little influence I had with my colleagues and with the Government of England, when we were sent there as the representatives of Canada, to secure that that clause should be inserted in the Act of Confederation. It was inserted so that we, the French Canadians of this country, should have the same rights in that respect as our friends and fellow-countrymen, and that we could use the French language in Parliament, as you, the English speaking members, can use your own language. Does not the hon. gentleman now see that I, a French Canadian, having every drop of blood in my veins French, am, notwithstanding, trying to speak his language, and trying to be understood by members of this House. I could make my speech in French, but I know that I would not be understood by all members of this House, and I wish to be understood by them all. I wish them to understand that I am speaking this evening on behalf of my countrymen of French origin. These are not the only countrymen I have, for I consider that all the members of this House, whether they belong to one race or to another, are my countrymen as well. If we wish to be one people, if we wish to be a nation, we should do what has been done in the three kingdoms. You find a number of languages, a number of dialects in the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; but how many languages are spoken under the shadow of the great and noble flag of England? It is the glory and the joy of the British Empire that all nationalities are welcome under that glorious flag, and that it covers and protects them all. I remember reading in the history of my family of one of my ancestors who fought in Canada for the French while they were the possessors and rulers of this country, and who afterwards fought for the Kingdom of France in Virginia. He had been sent there with others, and was made a prisoner by Colonel (afterwards General) Washington, and was kept there chained within his cell. But he escaped and came back to Canada. The war in this country having resulted in bringing down the flag of France and bringing up the flag of England, what did he do? Did he conspire against the flag and the King of England? No; he had loyal blood and a loyal heart; he had principles, and his principles and convictions told him that now that this country was under a new flag he should fight for his new Sovereign as he had fought for his old Sovereign the King of France; and, as my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) said, he fought against the thirteen colonies which rose in revolt against England. Although a Frenchman, speaking French, and having only French blood in his veins, he fought against the French army on the frontier commanded by Lafayette, and in the face of proclamations from the King of France, and appeals from Bishop Carroll to the religion of the French Canadians. The French Canadians had hardly seen the French flag depart across the frontier or taken down from the Quebec fortress, when they recognised their duty to fight for their new Sovereign. They did not love their new Sovereign then; they had not time to know him or to love him; but they fought like good and loyal men, and they carried the day, and this country has remained to this day one of the brightest gems of the Crown of England through the arms and the blood of my ancestors and the French Canadians generally. If those French Canadians, so much despised by the hon. member for North Simcoe, had not been there to defend this country and to keep it as a portion of the British Empire, where would the hon. gentleman be to-day? He would not be here to fight us and despise us and try to put us under his feet. No. I do not know where he would be; but at all events he would not be here to fight that battle that will end in his defeat, he may be sure of that. I cannot imagine that the hon. gentleman has not some other idea than fanaticism in a movement of this kind. He would have us believe that his object is to make this country a happy country, a country where the people from one ocean to the other, and from the North Pole to the American frontier, will speak English. Well, the hon. gentleman will have gone to his grave, and all his children, and all his grandchildren, and all his great grandchildren will have gone there too, and even after that there will be three or four million French Canadians speaking French. He need not try that; he will not succeed. It was tried before when we were a great deal fewer in number than we are now, and it did not succeed. The hon. gentleman spoke of the report of Lord Durham. Well, Lord Durham was a very able man, but we know how he went out of this country. He had not finished his work of examining the state of the country, and he left it in a huff because he was not sustained in England in the disposition he had made of certain political prisoners whom he had exiled to Bermuda against all law, the same thing as the hon. gentleman is trying to do. The hon. gentleman says that in that report the reasons given by Lord Durham were these;

"I expected to find a contest between a Government and a people; I found two nations warring in the bosom of a single State; I found a struggle, not of principle, but of race; and I perceived that it would be idle to attempt any amelioration of laws or institutions until we could first succeed in terminating the deadly animosity that now separates the inhabitants of Lower Canada into the hostile divisions of French and English."

The hon. gentleman read that, but he took great care not to speak at all of the struggle that was going on at the same time in the Province of Upper Canada, now the Province of Ontario. He knew perfectly well that the cause of the struggle in Upper Canada was that the people were not allowed to govern themselves, but that there were a certain few called the Family Compact, who had all the places, all the power, and who ruled the country as they pleased, and the people had no voice or power. That was the cause of the trouble in Upper Canada, and the hon. gentleman did not say a word about it. But the state of affairs was exactly the same in Lower Canada. There was no fight between the races. The immense majority of the people were French, but men were sent from England to govern us, and our people had no right to have a voice in their own government. They had to submit to having all their judges and executive councillors and legislative councillors of one stripe; and in the Legislative Assembly, they could not even do what they thought proper with their own money. That brought about a struggle. The cause of that struggle was a good one; but, according to the authorities on matters of that kind, a people has no right to rise in rebellion unless they have the strength and the means to enforce a recognition of their rights. Our people had not that strength. In Upper Canada as well as in Lower Canada they rose and fought, and were defeated; and they should have expected defeat, because they had neither the money, the ammunition, nor the guns. Well, in England our people were not heard. The constitution of Lower Canada was suspended, but not that of Upper Canada. The Upper Canadians were treated better than we, because, I suppose, we were nearer the sea and could be got at better; but that would have been a strong reason to have done the contrary, and have left us our constitution and taken it from those who were further away from the reach of England. But that was not done. We did not complain: we are a race which has suffered a long time, and we have been in the habit of suffering, but we never lose heart. We always cling to our principles and our ideas, we know what are our rights, and when the time comes to assert them, we assert them. To-day is the time when we must assert them against the hon. gentleman who seeks to have the majority of the House set them aside. I hope this House will not consent to that, but will show the hon. gentleman that his ideas of persecution and fanaticism are not those of the majority of the people, and will show that the majority speaking the English language are not disposed to do us—who are in the minority, but a large minority—an injustice. We have confidence in the majority; we are not beggars here, we are not asking favors, but what we ask is the continued enjoyment of the right we possess by nature and as British subjects. We have the right to speak our own language. What harm would it do the North-West for the thousand or so—I do not know how many French Canadians there are in the North-West—to be allowed to speak their own language. How much would the North-West be depreciated, how much would it lose, by allowing those French Canadians who have gone there confiding in the law of Parliament, confiding in the protection given them by the British laws, to speak their own language. Supposing two or three of them should be elected at the next elections to sit in the Legislative Assembly there, these men will not speak in both languages. After I have spoken in English, I do not intend repeating my remarks in French, though I have the right to do so. I would never think of doing that, because I know that the great majority of members understand the broken English I am speaking now. These two or three men will not prolong the sittings of that House, and if they have anything to say, they will say it in their own language, and that is all. Then, what harm can be done to that country? In what way will that country suffer by allowing that right? But the hon. gentleman says: "There will be so many French Canadians there, and I do not like that. I do not want French Canadians to be there." But he cannot help himself. The law may be passed, but the French Canadians will go there. They are in the habit of going everywhere. They went there long before the English people did, and when that country was purchased by us from the Hudson Bay Company, we found a large majority of French Canadians there. But nobody complained of that and we took them in. Now the majority is English speaking. Why, then, should you maltreat the French Canadians? Why should you not treat them as friends and brothers? I think you should treat them as you would wish to be treated if you were in the minority. Supposing the majority here were French and that instead of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), a French member would get up and say that in the North-West there were only a thousand or five hundred English speaking men, and that the others were all French, and ask that these Englishmen be forbidden to speak their own language, would you find that just? Would you agree to that? Would you say that was proper treatment? No. You would say it was oppression, you would speak of rebellion and of the rising of thousands of men from other Provinces to protect these five hundred.

Mr. BERGERON. Bayonets.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. And I would say that you were right, in claiming justice for your compatriots as we do for ours. The people in the North-West, never thought of this question until the hon. gentleman, after his fiasco here last Session, thought that as he had had very little success then, he would try something bigger, in order that his name should continue to be before the public, and that he might have the chance of doing something. Well, the hon. gentleman went up there as a missionary. He said to the people of Manitoba, that they were oppressed, that the French language should disappear, that those Frenchmen were a nuisance, and that they should abolish the French language. More than that, he said that the separate schools should disappear. Then he went on to the North-West, and tried to impress the same views upon the people there, and I have no doubt that if the two languages had been used in British Columbia, the hon. gentleman would have exercised his efforts on these people too. But he was saved of the trouble, as the two languages do not exist there. The Province was settled, and had its constitution before it entered Confederation. But the hon. gentleman, nevertheless, wishes to impress upon this Parliament the necessity of interfering in this matter. Well, that is a most dangerous proceeding on his part. The weapons he uses can be used by two and not only by one, and if injustice is done anywhere, that is generally followed by injustice elsewhere. I hope there will be no such injustice done. I would be the last man to retaliate; and if injustice should be done to my countrymen in the North-West, I would prefer to suffer a thousand years, than to retaliate by doing injustice to others. I want to be well understood. The minority in the Province of Quebec speak the English language. The minority speaking the English language are divided into two sections, the Roman Catholics and the Protestants. The French are there in a large majority. Well, for nothing in the world would I consent, with any influence I might have on my French Canadian countrymen, that they would do the smallest injustice to the other races in my Province. I know that, though there may be one or two men who, at the moment when they are excited and are in all their glory or in all their glorification, may make threats of that kind, hon. gentlemen need not attend to these threats or these amplifications, but may be assured that the people of the Province of Quebec, as a whole, the masses of the people, would never consent to anything of that kind. If there were any chance of that being done, I would, even during the Session of Parliament, leave my seat here and go down into the Province and call meetings, and say: Do not commit an injustice, though injustices were committed towards you at the beginning of the colony, that has gone by; we are treated properly, our institutions are protected, our language is protected, and notwithstanding what the hon. gentleman wishes, it will be protected and will continue to be used, our religion is safe, and we may pray and adore God as we please; but we wish our neighbors to have the same freedom to speak their own language, the English language; we wish to have their institutions protected as ours are; we wish them to have their own temples and to adore God as they please, and they must be protected accordingly in doing so. If occasional exceptions to that occur, they occur not only in our Province but in other Provinces. They are momentary ebullitions which are to be deplored not only in our Province but in the other Provinces; but the sense of justice always takes the lead, and soon the remedy comes and the protection is extended as it was before. I do not wish to delay the House too long, but, as I do not intend to make several speeches on this question, no matter what the number of amendments may be, I wish to say a few words further. The hon. gentleman in order to show how kind he is to our race, how kind he is to his neighbors, what good-will he has towards us, what a great heart he has towards his French Canadian friends, subjects of the same power, says:

"Let hon. gentlemen remember that when this country was ceded to the British Crown there were not more than 60,000 or 65,000 French Canadians"—

He is sorry to see that we are now a million and a half.—

"I think that number includes, though I am not quite certain, those who dwell on the banks of the Illinois, and who did not become a part of the Dominion of Canada."

Here comes the beauty of his speech:

"However that may be, instead of encouraging them in the use of their language, had a policy being pursued of inducing them—not by any harsh means at all, not by any aggravating measures—to speak the English tongue, I want to know whether to-day, instead of the difference, the cleavage of race which we see going on, and which is becoming more and more pronounced, and which is calculated to rend this Dominion in twain, if some stop is not put to it—I would like to know whether we would see the spectacle that we see to-day? I think it is perfectly plain that we would not see it. I think no injustice would have been done"—

Of course not.—

—"and that in one generation, or in two at most, my hon. friends that now represent the Province of Quebec, or their ancestors, would have been speaking English"—

What do I speak to-day?
