Now the Prices you've been waiting for are here

The old year took away, for ever, we hope, the old burden of war prices. For months conditions have been working toward the great climax that brought the remarkable merchandise that is here assembled for this our greatest January Carnival of Economy.

The results came in two ways: 1st. The drastic lowering of prices on our own stocks, down to the new low basis, and 2nd. Men far below it—to double your interest in January buying in our store.

2nd. We have combed the markets—taking utmost advantage of the opportunities created by far sighted manufacturers who were ready to co-operate with us in presenting to you now the lowest prices that will be possible, for the next six months, at least.

We can just see the delight of our Customers when they see the splendid assortment of goods, in every department of our store, and then realize that prices are away down to the bottom, where it is a pleasure to buy things.

Many Manufacturers have ACCEPTED LARGE LOSSES.

We shall forgo a large part of our profits on the new goods and accept large losses on our own mark-downs—to inaugurate this first New Year under the New Management and

THE MOST STIRRING PRICE-UPSET THAT THIS COMMUNITY HAS EVER KNOWN.

No matter what you need or desire, now is the best time for months to come to buy it. Some of the reasons are told on this page; but scores of others are here that can get no mention today, even in this broad space.

Liturgical Colors

The various liturgical colors are not merely beautiful, but expressive as well, writes Monsignor Henry. The Church is the bride of Christ. The Violet robes of penitence become her, says a modern writer, as do the White of joy; while no less fitting is the Red of sacrifice and the Green of hope. Even the Black of sympathy with the sorrows of her bereaved children—beginning from the mourning of the Mother of the Crucified—can be variously in taste.

All the colors used in the Roman Rite, as we perceive them at Mass and Vespers, are mentioned here and their symbolisms illustrated, except the colors of gold, old rose, azure, silver. Gold may replace white, red, green; silver may replace white; old rose may be used on the third Sunday of Advent, called Gaudete, (from the first word of the Introit, meaning Rejoice) Sunday, and on the fourth Sunday of Lent, called Laetare (from the opening word of the Introit, also meaning Rejoice) Sunday. On Laetare Sunday, by the way, the Pope blesses the famous Golden Rose. As for azure, it is used by papal authorization in certain parts of Spain on the Feast of the Immaculate Conception and its octave days also in votive Masses of the Immaculate Conception.

The rubrics governing the use of these colors are complicated and need not be rehearsed here. It is sufficient for us to recognize the symbolism of the colors when we see them. White is appropriate for Christmas, Epiphany, Easter, Ascension, Corpus Christi, feasts of Our Lady, the Angels, such saints as are not martyrs, and the like. Violet suits such seasons as Advent and Lent, the ember days, vigils, rogation days. Red belongs to the Passion, feasts of martyrs, and also to Pentecost (because of the "tongues of fire.") Black is appropriate for Good Friday and for Requiem Masses.

Varied colors were prescribed by God, in the Old Testament, for the priestly vestments—gold and violet and purple and scarlet twice dyed, and fine linen. (Exodus 28, 4-6) The Church, however, adopted and regularized her present colors only gradually. Only white was used at the beginning of the fourth century perhaps by a suggestion caught from St. John's vision (Apoc. 7: 12, 15.) By the seventh century the white vestments had red borders. By the close of the twelfth white, red, black, green were generally used, while purple was assigned to the feast of the Holy Innocents and to Laetare Sunday. Shortly after this violet was introduced, while rose was used for Gaudete and Laetare Sundays. Greek and other oriental churches use the colors indifferently. In France yellow and ash colors are occasionally used.

In the Roman Rite, as has already been pointed out, the colors are prescribed and defined by many rubrics. They have their appropriate symbolic meanings for us by tradition and usage. These meanings do not, perhaps, always shine out for us naturally and instinctively, and it is proper for us to have had the symbolism clearly stated. Green, for instance, may not immediately suggest to us peace and refreshment. While the symbolism of colors employed in civic and secular and social ways, the interpretation is not always clear. Thus it is told of a certain minister that was explaining once to a class of Sunday school children the symbolism of white. It expresses joy and happiness, he said, and a bride at a wedding is thus clothed because her wedding day is the happiest of her life. 'Why,' asked a small boy, 'do all the men at a wedding wear black?'

Fabian J. McDonald

Died at Castle Hill East, on November 29th, Fabian J. McDonald, son of Captain John and Mrs. McDonald, in the 26th year of his age.

Deceased who was one of the 105th Battalion, being transferred to the 12th Battalion, R. H. C., fought through two years of the great war, was wounded on August 8th, 1918, but returned to the front before the signing of the Armistice.

After the Armistice he was with the army of occupation in Germany. He returned home, was discharged, and shortly afterwards contracted tuberculosis, from the effects of gas and exposure at the front.

He spent fourteen months in Kentville Sanatorium, but medical aid could not stay the ravages of disease. He returned home about two months ago, and the end came peacefully on Nov. 29.

A wreath from St. Peter's Sporting Club, of which he was a member since its start, rested on the casket. The funeral to St. Peter's Church on December 1st was largely attended, testifying to the esteem and respect in which deceased was held. Requiem Mass was celebrated by Rev. A. McAnally, the funeral service being conducted by Very Rev. J.C. McLean, after which the body was laid to rest in St. Peter's Cemetery, to await a glorious resurrection.

Deceased leaves to mourn a sorrowing father and mother, one brother and one sister, to whom the sympathy of the community goes out in their sad bereavement.

The pall-bearers were E. Rossiter, G. McInnis, H. McIsaac, H. Lewis, J. D. Walsh, and R. McInnis. R. I. P.

The Irish Question

Intelligence from London, under date of December 6th, brought the pleasing declaration that an agreement had been reached between the Government of Great Britain and the Irish representatives on the Irish question. Negotiations had been long continued, and it is certainly a source of the greatest satisfaction to know that a mutually acceptable settlement has been reached.

The negotiations were carried on in the Prime Minister's official residence on Downing street, and Lloyd George, Prime Minister was the head of the British Government representatives, while the Irish representation was headed by Mr. Arthur Griffith. The agreement reached has to be ratified by the British Parliament on the one hand and by a full meeting of Irish representatives on the other. With this object in view, a Royal Proclamation was issued summoning Parliament in extra session to open on December 14. The Irish representatives also had their meeting on the same date.

From the outline of the terms of the agreement, published in the press, Ireland is offered terms practically similar to those on which Canada entered Confederation, as well as those enjoyed by Australia and New Zealand, and is to be known among the nations of the British Commonwealth, as the "Irish Free State."

Later intelligence on the question shows the information that DeValera, leader of the Irish agitators, will not agree to the terms of the agreement, and that he will have some followers in this regard. It is, however, regarded as quite probable, indeed as almost certain, that the majority of the Irish representatives will back up Arthur Griffith and accept the terms. Let it be earnestly hoped that counsels of wisdom and moderation will prevail, that the agreement will be ratified, and that Ireland may enter upon an era of peace and prosperity.

Friends.

In every heart, young and old is a desire for friends. God put it there, and then gave us Himself to satisfy it. A certain writer has defined 'friend' as one who knows all our faults and loves us in spite of them. But who knows our faults better and who, despite them, loves us more than the Saviour who lived and died for us? He, indeed, is our best Friend.

Being God, however, His generosity is as boundless as the sea and, beyond Himself, He has given us other friends, most dear and most precious, too; a mother whom all the gold and gems that sparkle on the earth could not buy; a father whose daily toil tenderly makes it possible for us to live and enjoy so many advantages; sisters and brothers with whom to share our souls, to divide our sorrows, to double our joys, and the companions whose kindness and considerateness bring them as near to us as blood relationship, and make the day a thing of sunbeams.

Lloyd George; Master Of Men

When Mr. Andrew Bonar Law reappeared in the Commons to give his benediction to Irish freedom and Lord Birkenhead replied to Lord Carson in the Lords, there must have been many a Die-hard who thought that Old England had gone and.

And now, eight years later, what a change! Mr. Law, older in years and experience, rises in the Commons to give his sanction to an Irish Bill ten times more drastic than that which he formerly opposed; and Lord Birkenhead, in the Lords, repudiates his old Ulster chief.

Nor is that all. Ten years ago names to conjure with in the resistance of Ulster were those of George Carson and Austen Chamberlain. Today Mr. Chamberlain, now leading the party which his father founded—a party reared upon resistance to Home Rule—defends an Irish settlement in the Commons; and Lord Carson brilliantly champions it in the Lords.

What is the explanation of the change? First of all, perhaps, the war, which tore many old beliefs and prejudices from their moorings, and to some extent the patriotism which at all times and in all countries has caused statesmen to put country before party; but largely too, and perhaps the greatest factor of all, the power and the persuasive personality of David Lloyd George. Mr. George accomplished what most observers thought impossible; he took the Irish question out of politics, which had been its Nemesis since the days of Gladstone, and won all parties to its support. It was a task for a superman, a task for one gifted with consummate genius in the management of men and affairs, a task perhaps which no one man in the British Empire outside of Lloyd George himself could have achieved.

And tomorrow, should Ireland ratify the Treaty of Peace, the Empire and the world will hail Lloyd George as the mightiest figure of his time. The war was the sepulchre of great reputations. Clemenceau, Orlando, Wilson, Asquith—all have crossed the stage and disappeared. But while other leaders have vanished the "Little Napoleon" of Wales bestrides his time as a political Colossus, marching from triumph to triumph, riding the tempest, confuting his foes, and now crowning a dazzling career by the finest victory of all.

Well may the Empire doff its hat to David Lloyd George as the man who "weathered the storm."

Another Cheering Sign.

The rise of the pound sterling in New York to $1.23 3/4 is a very significant thing. To clearly realize what it means, one must look back to February, 1920, and recall that the market price in the United States was then $3.18. The gain has, therefore, been a little better than 88.6 per cent. since that date. Put in another way, the decline from par value had been nearly 35 per cent. while now it stands at slightly over 13 per cent. In the concrete, the pound sterling has gained precisely $1.07 in value since February, 1920.

As British currency fell in value on the American exchanges, the Canadian dollar went with it in degree. We shall now find beyond doubt that our money will share in the British advance. It will mean a difference of many millions to us. In 1920 we imported $802,107,000 worth of commodities from the United States, and, as we had to make payment in American dollars at an average premium of say 15 per cent., it will be seen that the extra cost to us was something like $120,000,000. The premium at the present time is around 8 per cent.; so that a difference of $58,000,000 in our favor has been brought about by the change, assuming the volume of our imports this year to be the same as for 1920.

The return to par can scarcely happen in the near future. There are real obstacles in the way; but the approach to that basis should be persistent, although perhaps slow, from now onward. Our neighbors are earnestly praying that the process may take on speed; for they have very definitely learned that getting possession of nearly half of the world's supply of gold has been like a millstone around their neck. It is paralyzed their trade with Europe and South America. It has reduced it materially with Canada. There is not a shadow of doubt that during the latter part of 1919 and the early part of 1920 there was a good deal of straight profiteering in the matter of foreign exchange in New York. There is nothing of that kind now. What was done in that way hurt the United States more than it did her victims, and today a very earnest effort is being made across the border to get exchange lowered as rapidly as conditions will permit.

In the painful experience of the past three or four years we have been taught two things: First, that currency is not money, but credit; and second, that nothing but an actual and unqualified gold standard will protect a nation's paper money during a prolonged period of financial stress and general inflation. Canada has a sound currency system, but she has not an absolute gold standard. Therefore our money is certain to suffer a discount in any market which demands gold. In other words, such a market will demand payment in money terms on a parity with its own standard. And no exception can be taken to that prudent precaution while the storm is on.

That Pacific Treaty

Coming after the news from Ireland and the decision on disarmament, Washington's announcement of a four-power treaty to keep the peace in the Pacific must cheer all men of good will. Incidentally, and this should be especially pleasing to all Canadians, irrespective of party; it is a splendid vindication of the stand of Mr. Meighen at last summer's London Conference. From the very beginning Mr. Meighen discerned the cardinal weakness of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance. He perceived that this alliance, no matter how modified or interpreted, engendered fear and suspicion in the United States; that it stood as an impregnable barrier to greater friendship among English-speaking peoples; that, in short, promotion of better understanding prohibited its remaining in force. But Mr. Meighen, despite much that has been said to the contrary, never advocated throwing Japan to the wolves. What he proposed, and what he fought for all through the London Conference, was precisely the scheme that has now been adopted on the initiative of the United States; the scrapping of the Alliance and the substitution of a four-power understanding involving the partnership and the support of the United States.

Let all of us hope that the project succeeds. But let us as Canadians remember, too, that the proposal was the thought of a fellow-countryman who, had he nothing else to his credit, has in this one achievement given evidence of fine wisdom and statesmanship.—Ottawa Journal.

Dominion Status

Addressing the British House of Commons on the 14th in support of the treaty with Ireland, Premier Lloyd George said in reference to Dominion status that it was difficult and dangerous to give a definition.

"When I read a statement of the request of the Imperial Conference to this House concerning what passed at our gatherings, I pointed out the anxiety of the Dominion Premiers not to have any rigid definition," continued the Premier. "We realized the dangers of rigidity, and many of the Premiers delivered notable speeches then emphasizing the importance of not defining too precisely what the relations of the Dominions were to ourselves, what their powers were, and what were the limits of the crown powers. It is something that has never been limited by act of Parliament, even in this country. All we can say is that whatever measures of freedom Dominion status gives Canada, Australia, and South Africa are extended also to Ireland. There will be a guarantee in the mere fact that the status is the same, and that wherever there is an attempt to encroach on the rights of Ireland, every other Dominion will feel that its own position is being put in jeopardy.

"The Dominion status means in practice, complete control over their own internal affairs without any interference from any other part of the Empire. They are the rulers of their own hearths, and the representative of the sovereign will act on the advice of the Dominion Ministers."

"The position of the Dominions regarding external affairs has been completely revolutionized in the last four years. The machinery of the Dominions is the machinery of the British Government with its Foreign Office and its Ambassadors. The machinery must remain here. It is impossible that it could be otherwise. That has been accepted by all the Dominions. They claim a voice in determining the lines of policy, and at the last Imperial Conference they discussed our policy over the world, and we are acting upon decisions arrived at with the common consent of the whole Empire. Joint action means joint responsibility, and when the burden of Empire comes so vast it is well that it should have the shoulders of the young giants under the banner to help us along. It widens the prospect of discussion at the Imperial Conference. It broadens the outlook into a world survey. The Dominions bring their problems into the common stock. Ireland will share the right and responsibility of the Empire. Responsibilities, I have no doubt, her people will honor."

Dealing with the references to the alleged surrender of the Government to rebellion in Ireland, Premier Lloyd George said the best answer to that was the effect the agreement had throughout the whole civilized world, notably in the Dominions.

Proceeding, he said the prestige of the Empire had been enormously expanded and given fresh strength by the Dominions taking equal rights with Great Britain in control.

"It was won by the aid the Dominions gave us in the great war," he added. "We think of the millions of young, strong, and brave men who came to the help of the Empire to carry out a policy they had no share in shaping. They felt that in future it would be an unfair dilemma to put them into. They said: 'You are putting us into this position, either we have to support you in a policy which we might or might not approve, or we would have to desert the Old Country in her trouble. That is a dilemma, you ought never to put us in, and, therefore, you must consult us in future before the event.'"

Bank of Montreal Absorbs Merchants Bank

Sir Henry Drayton, Minister of Finance, has given preliminary consent to the taking over of the Merchants' Bank of Canada by the Bank of Montreal.

"The situation was such that in the public interest it was deemed necessary to give the preliminary consent required by the Bank Act," was the only comment of Sir Henry Friday night.

Further consent, it is understood, will have to be secured following a meeting of the shareholders of the Merchants' Bank. This is the first merger to which Sir Henry, since he took over the portfolio of Finance has given his assent.

While Sir Henry Drayton was able to give preliminary consent, arrangements, in their final stages, will no doubt have to be dealt with by the incoming Liberal Minister of Finance, and by the Liberal Cabinet as a whole.

In official circles emphasis is laid on the point that whatever the impairment of the Merchants' Bank reserve may have been, both holders of notes issued by the Merchants' Bank had its deposits now being protected by the resources of the Bank of Montreal.

There need be no apprehension among depositors in the Merchants' Bank, nor among holders of the notes, it was stated Friday night. The Bank of Montreal is in a strong financial position, and will be fully able to handle the situation.

Following is a copy of a letter from the president of the Merchants' Bank to the chairman of the Montreal Stock Exchange:

In view of this, the governing committee of the Montreal Stock Exchange decided that there will be no further trading in Merchants' Bank of Canada stock,

Now the Prices you've been waiting for are here

The old year took away, for ever, the old burden of war prices. For months opportunities have been working toward the great climax that brought the remarkable merchandise that is here assembled for this our greatest January Carnival of Economy.

The results came in two ways: 1st. The drastic lowering of prices on our own stocks, down to the new low basis, and often far below it—to double your interest in January buying in our store.

2nd. We have combed the markets—taking utmost advantage of the opportunities created by far sighted manufacturers who were ready to cooperate with us in presenting to you now the lowest prices that will be possible, for the next six months, at least.

We can just see the delight of our Customers when they see the splendid assortment of goods, in every department of our store, and then realize that prices are away down to the bottom, where it is a pleasure to buy things.

Many Manufacturers have ACCEPTED LARGE LOSSES. We shall forgo a large part of our profits on the new goods and accept large losses on our own mark-downs to inaugurate this first New Year under the New Management and

THE MOST STIRRING PRICE-UPSET THAT THIS COMMUNITY HAS EVER KNOWN.

No matter what you need or desire, now is the best time for months to come to buy it. Some of the reasons are told on this page; but scores of others are here that can get no mention today, even in this broad space.

Look. Read. Realize.

We cater to the men's trade, and no other. If you were sick you wouldn't call to see a Tailor, or a Blacksmith, about the condition of your health. Of course not; you would call to see a Doctor.

If you wanted a Suit or an Overcoat, would you go to see a Doctor or a Sheepmaker? Not at all. You would go to see a First Class Tailor.

WELL, there's where we shine! We study the business. We know what suits a young man, we know what suits a middle-aged man, and we know what suits the old gentleman—both in goods and in style. It does not make any difference whether you want your clothes Ready-to-Wear, or Made-to-Order. We are equally in a position to suit you. We do not let a suit or overcoat leave our establishment until it suits and fits the man who is buying. Our prices are always right when you take the quality into consideration.

Do not forget that we are sole agents for the famous W H Leishman & Co., Wholesale Custom Tailors. We have an elegant stock of Overcoats to show you at the present time.

Once In The Angelus

Once in the Angelus
Ere I was dead,
Angels all glorious,
Came to my bed,
Angels in blue and white, Crown'd on the head,
One was the friend I left Stark in the snow;
One was the wife that died Long, long ago;
One was the love I lost How could she know?
One had my mother's eyes, Wistful and mild;
One had my father's face,
One was a child;
All of them bent to me, Bent down and smiled.
—The Late Austin Dobson.

A Fairy Child.

Oh, a little green fairy was thirsty,
So they filled his acorn cup
With the shiniest, silvery drops, of dew,
And called him in to sup.
Oh, a little green fairy was hungry,
So they heaped his petal plate With some slices of strawberry ripe and red—
My, how that fairy ate.
Oh, a little green fairy was sleepy,
So what do you suppose?
They cuddled him softly and swung him to rest
In the heart of a big red rose.

Gourage O'adar Fire

(Concluded)
One moment, said the Colonel, told me who was the young fellow who took him from me so bravely under fire?
I do not know, sir, answered the soldier, but it was a brave thing, sir; he was mortally wounded, but we fellows heard him say that he would hold it if he was dying—he is still there, sir.
The Colonel smiled. It was, indeed, a brave thing; take me to him, he said.
The form of the young boy lay resting on the ground close to the big gray horse, the bridle reins bound firmly around his hand, Randall, who had come to him as soon as the firing ceased, had made a pillow of his coat, and placing it carefully under the boy's head, raised him slightly from the ground. The Colonel approached and gazed sadly for a moment upon the almost lifeless form. Suddenly an expression of terror came into his eyes.
What did he see? Was it a phantom? He stooped over the boy's body and peered into the still young face—the color left his own. 'O God!' he cried, falling on his knee beside him, 'my son, my Robert, was it you?' he moaned. But the boy lay still as death. 'Robert!' he called again. A faint expression of pain spread over the pale features.
'Speak to me, Robert, my son!' The dying boy opened his eyes; this last cry seemed to awaken him.
'Father he whispered. The Colonel bent lower to catch the dying words. 'For our country —in life and death.' The broken words came faintly, but the suffering had ceased. A smile of love lit the dying eyes. 'And for you, he gasped. His head sank back—the boy was dead.
Great sobs of anguish shook the Colonel's frame. Randall gently unwound the rein from the firm grasp of the dead boy's hand, and placing it tenderly across his breast, walked silently away.
The setting sun lit the battlefield with its last rays, when the Colonel rested the boy softly on the fallen leaves.
The story had gone the rounds of the men, and when taps sounded that autumn evening through the Southern camp, every head was bared and bowed in token of respect for the brave boy who had served his father and his country in life and in death.

Aching Joints

In the fingers, toes, arms, and other parts of the body, are joints that are inflamed and swollen by rheumatism—but a condition of the blood which affects the muscles also.
Sufferers dread to move, especially after sitting or lying long, and their condition is commonly worse in wet weather.
I suffered dreadfully from rheumatism, it has been completely cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, for which I am deeply grateful." Miss Frances Smith, Prescott, Ont.
"I had an attack of the grip which left me weak and helpless and suffering from rheumatism. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and this medicine has entirely cured me. I have no hesitation in saying it saved my life." M. J. McDonald, Trenton, Ont.

Mr. Kinsella's Failure.

Mr. Kinsella closed and locked both big windows, picked from the floor some scraps of paper and a bit of string and went toward the door absentmindedly fumbling in one pocket after another for an old brass key.
He found it at length; but, instead of locking the door, turned back to look for the last time at the long, shabby, empty room; its walls streaked and scarred where rows of shelves had stood against them for many years; the floor worn in pathways which had once been aisles, and comparatively smooth and glistening where counters and showcases had protected it. White-faced and weary to the point of numbness he looked over the room for the last time before he opened the door, passed out, and having turned the key in the lock, went slowly down the street.
Thirty-five years before, when West Yorkton was but a straggling settlement, he had opened a general store in that room, new then, and considered very fine.
Month after month the little business had prospered as the settlement became a wide awake village and very quickly a flourishing town. When it began to give promise of developing into a city, keen, alert young men from the east had come with money in their pockets and startling new ideas in their heads. Mr. Kinsella's capital still had been comparatively small, and he, too old or too conservative to initiate the sensational methods of a new era; so, as was inevitable, his trade had slipped from him, almost imperceptibly at first, but afterward by leaps and bounds. And now the end had come.
He had gone but a few paces down the street when Mrs. Doane spoke to him; and, because he neither saw nor heard her, she touched him lightly on the arm.
So the stock was sold at auction, and you're giving up the store!" she began. "Why, Mr. Kinsella, Spruce street won't seem like Spruce street without it, as I said to my husband only this morning. And Mr. Hobson tells me that you are going to Cincinnati to live. He thinks you're making a big mistake to leave here; but I said to him—and I spoke emphatically—I said: 'You may be sure, Mr.
Kinsella knows his own business best.' That's what I told him." Having murmured something by way of vague reply to all this, Mr. Kinsella managed to escape from Mrs. Doane. He had no wish to talk to anyone. But at the corner he was waylaid by the gentle, kindly old man who had been his family doctor—when he had had a family.
" So you are leaving us, Mr.
Kinsella?" he said, with a little traveller in his habitually cheery voice. "I hope you will soon feel at home in Cincinnati, although I can't help wishing that you were not going." Mr. Kinsella gave him his hand.
"Thank you, Doctor!" he said.
"—you are very kind. I wish that I could stay, but I—I'm going to live with my daughter, you know." And he passed on before the old doctor could say another word.
Mr. Kinsella turned down Center street, and as he approached the parish school, Father O'Boyle came down the steps and went to meet him, both hands extended and a wealth of affectionate concern on his rugged face. This time Mr. Kinsella had no desire to escape. He took the proffered hands and held them close for a minute.

'It's a good-bye, Father!' he said in a choked voice, and his lips trembled and his eyes filled.
Instantly Father O'Boyle remembered how, in the old days, Mr. Kinsella's face had been the most genial in all West Yorkton, and his laugh the most infectious.
'I shall miss you sorely, and many another will,' he said. 'But I hope you are going to be very happy, Mr. Kinsella. You will soon feel at home and find new interests in Cincinnati. But don't forget your old friends.' Mr. Kinsella had no reserves from Father O'Boyle. 'I haven't said so before and I won't again Father, but I—I hate to go. I love West Yorkton; I'm used to it; and in Cincinnati I'll be a stranger, and—my son-in-law is so rich and fashionable. But I did my best, and I failed, and now have no chance but to go.' Father O'Boyle laid a sympathetic hand on Mr. Kinsella's shoulder, but what could he say?
The kindly priest alone was at the station to bid Mr. Kinsella good-bye; and it was with the heaviest heart he had ever known that he heard the engine whistle, and, putting his face to the window of the sleeper, stared into the semi-darkness, as the train moved slowly through West Yorkton, and sped past the little cemetery. Only after the street lights had grown dim and indistinct, and at last were blotted out by distance, did he try to read his paper.

HAD WHOOPING COUGH

WOULD GO BLACK IN FACE

Mothers should never neglect whooping cough, and on the first sign of this disease we would advise the use of Dr.
Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. This famous remedy will clear the bronchial tubes of the collected mucus and phlegm, and in this way ease the wracking cough and in a short time make it disappear entirely.

Mrs. J. W. Mortimer, 25-6th Ave.
East, Vancouver, B.C., writes:—"When my little girl was born she was not very strong, and when she was three months old we moved into a damp house. A few days after we were settled she became very ill. I called in a doctor and he said she had whooping cough and bronchitis.
He gave me medicine for her, but still I saw no change, in fact she seemed to get worse and several times I thought she was dead as she used to go black in the face and stiffen right out, and I was nearly crazy for fear she would die. A friend of mine asked me to try a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, as she had three children of her own. I took her advice, and after giving my little girl half a bottle she was quite a lot better, and when the bottle was finished she was well again."
