Mr. Fisher: —the hon. Member for Essex East if he is not aware that in the automobile trade in both Windsor and Detroit there is a common interest in publications and periodicals. I think this is obvious. As I believe many hon. Members will know, a number of publications are shared jointly by the trade where advertising is very important, and if the Canadian parts manufacturers are going to be entering into the Canadian market, and vice versa, and we are going to get this interplay and interpenetration in this industry, one would assume there would be tremendous advantages in having periodicals, weeklies and monthlies, that relate to the trade, with all the information for the trade including franchises, bids, tenders and all the other things that are of common interest. This is one of the assumptions the Government should consider as naturally following the automotive trade arrangement. Yet here we are setting up in the Customs Tariff a series of blocks to any development of that kind.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Although I have more substantial comments to make on this particular paragraph this seems to me to be an anomaly, the kind of paradox we keep encountering with this particular government and Minister of Finance in office—on the one hand Canadian nationalism, the Canadian Development Corporation, the cry "Let us save our Canadian insurance companies and banks"; and on the other hand the naturalization of Time and Reader's Digest. Let us intermix our automotive industry, but block off any normal kind of trade communications and channels which link them up.

I do not want an explanation of the paradoxes because we know that this is part of the character of the Government. At times we can swallow it a little better. It is like having castor oil with a lot of syrup administered by the hon. Member for Essex East, with his own particular kind of circumlocution, which makes us feel that it is not really as bad as we thought. But we have a situation where the Minister of Finance in one year and in one budget does not want any part of Time or Reader's Digest but passes it over to the Prime Minister; and then this year he changes to this kind of nationalism, at the same time resorting to another kind in connection with life insurance, banks and the Canadian Development Corporation, which makes us a little annoyed and discouraged at the over-all approach which the Government has to these matters.

Paragraph 5 seems to me to have no real planning for the future in terms of certain developments which might take place. I should like the Parliamentary Secretary to note that not too long ago a number of representatives of the churches which put out publications held an annual meeting in Ottawa and lobbied the Government from the point of view that their publications deserved and merited Government advertisements. It is apparent that in the field of religious publications both in Canada and the United States a tremendous effort is being made to put these publications on a commercial basis, so that they have the income to improve their editorial content, to get their circulation up, and so on. There is nothing regrettable about this particular trend, but I would point out that religious publications are specifically exempted under this particular item.

I assume that if the same step is being taken by religious publications in the United States which is developing here, then it is quite conceivable that, for example, a publication which generally appealed to fundamentalists, those in the fundamentalist churches or the Lutheran churches, could reach the stage in terms of circulation drive and editorial content which would be quite considerable. All you need do is look at the "Lutheran Hour" on television to realize the potential. I am not saying that the "Lutheran Hour" is commercial, but when this kind of body produces a publication with a commercial base it is conceivable in this area that you would have something which would attract Canadian advertising revenue and also advertisers of United States corporations with Canadian subsidiaries. This is something both feasible and possible, given the present trends which we have.

One of the other points I want to make with regard to the exemptions made here is this. There is the whole question of catalogues. What about coin magazines which, in effect, are catalogues? What about the number of agencies selling long playing records, or books, on the basis of a catalogue circulated on a regular basis? Quite often, as all hon. Members know, these publications include on the frontispiece or at the back, or occasionally in inserts, general advertising in connection with the trade. If that particular kind of catalogue is exempt, it seems to me it offers an obvious vehicle for circumventing what seems to me the intent of the legislation.

Included in this particular item is the following definition:

> For the purpose of this item,
> (a) "issue" includes a special annual issue, and
> (b) "periodical" means a periodical, the issues of which, other than special annual issues, are published at regular intervals of more than 6 days and less than 15 weeks and are distributed as issues of a distinct publication or as a supplement to more than one newspaper, but does not include
> (i) a catalogue,
> (ii) a newspaper, or
> (iii) a periodical, the principal function of which is the encouragement, promotion or development of the fine arts, letters, scholarship or religion.

One other point in connection with these exceptions relate to special issues of Life magazine which are completely devoted to something like fine arts, or special editions of magazines like Esquire. I interpret from the terms both of the budget resolution which was put through earlier and from this resolution that if a magazine like Esquire or Holiday has a special issue devoted, say, to Canada—

Mr. Moreau: What about Playboy?

Mr. Fisher: The hon. gentleman probably knows more about Playboy than those of us over here; he has that lean and virile look anyway. I would advise the hon. Member to make a visit to Russia, which would cool him off in this regard; and he can get advice in that matter from the gentleman sitting near him.

To return to the question of special issues, it would seem to me that under the provisions to which we agreed yesterday and which we are approving here a special issue devoted, say, to Canada or to a general Canadian interest could come into the country, yet it is the very type of issue that our provincial governments and Canadian travel bureau, and so on, will be advertising in. A tremendous number of United States interests would also be advertising in it to link up with the demand which exists in Canada for facilities and services which are particularly close to the border. I agree that one issue does not mean very much, but recently there have been three national United States magazines which have issued special editions devoted to Canada. The range and gamut of United States magazines both in terms of type and also the variety of form and approach is very wide. You could conceivably have a succession of special issues, not necessarily designed as a split run device which could be a threat to advertising revenue in Canada.

I should like to know from the Minister something a little bit more specific, and I want to give him a couple of examples. Would the New York Book Review or the New York Review of Books, or the Reporter magazine or the Nation, and magazines of that character be considered as being exempted under the last part, the principal function of which is the encouragement, promotion or development of the fine arts, letters, scholarship or religion? I think the Parliamentary Secretary might give us some appraisal of this massive amount of publishing in the periodical and newspaper field which goes on in the United States, using the names of magazines and publications, and give us just what the Government has in mind as to how much would be exempt and how much would not be exempt.

Are we out to simply block The Saturday Evening Post, Life, Look, Esquire, The New Yorker and publications such as that, or are we thinking of the whole range of those hundreds of periodicals which is more than we publish here and perhaps more than we and England publish? This of course raises another point which I wish to touch upon. All the assumptions I have made in my remarks have been based on the Canada vis-à-vis the United States situation, and of course I am still troubled by my anger over the Reader's Digest situation. This particular paragraph will affect more than Canada and more than the United States. We have a sizeable number of publications, although much less than from the United States, coming from Great Britain and from France. In this regard again I would like to know whether the Government has any appreciation as to what kind of magazine is involved. Give us the titles of the magazines that are to be affected by this exempting clause.

Has the Government consulted with libraries which, in the main, are the largest importers of periodicals? I suppose one could make the automatic assumption that if a library bothers to buy a paper or periodical, it is for at least one of the purposes listed here; but it might be quite conceivable, and I can tell the Parliamentary Secretary, as someone who has worked as a librarian, that it is amazing what the customs department can throw at you when you are trying to get books and periodicals in from outside the country, that many of these publications will not be included. I am not referring to the difficulties I have had in the past, trying to smuggle copies of Fanny Hill into the country, or anything like that, I am referring to scientific abstracts. I want to be sure that the Government has canvassed this whole matter and has consulted with these people who bring in periodicals for the purposes that are exempted here and those who are involved in the commercial distribution of periodicals in Canada. I should like to know what American News, for example, has said to the Government about this particular proposal, and how it may affect that company.

There is one last point in relation to this that I want to touch upon, and this really ties in with the complaints that are being made by newspaper publishers. This perhaps has been best exemplified by that editorial which appeared in the Free Press and which has been read so often today, which accuses the Minister of Finance of falsehoods. It would seem to me that if the objections of the newspaper publishers in relation to newspapers are valid, the same arguments should lead them to object to this particular paragraph as it affects the United States periodicals, particularly in view of the fact that it is quite conceivable that under the guise of some kind of culture some Canadian magazine in existence, and it might even be a defunct property like Liberty which probably has a copyright and is entitled to the name, to merge with some United States publications so that we would get a situation where we have in effect a replica of the Time and Reader's Digest situation.

This is one of the things that bothers me about the lack of the information we have had in connection with Time. Time is a representative publication from the publishing empire which includes such very popular and successful magazines which are widely read in Canada as Sports Illustrated, Fortune and Life. It seems to me that once this particular organization with production in Canada has been O.K'd and given Canadian status, we will not have anything specific enough either in this particular Customs Tariff, or in the resolutions to be put into a bill to be presented later on, which will protect us against an imaginative periodical published by Time magazine, using the editorial resources that they can pick up from publications such as Fortune, Sports Illustrated and other parts of the Time, Life, Fortune Luce stable.

I do not think this particular legislation will naturalize Henry Luce, although I am certain it will lead that gentleman to believe that he and his associates have fantastic influence in Canada and have been able to bring this particular resolution about. What we might have done, or may be doing, with this particular paragraph is putting through a protective device, not against the United States influence but against any interference with the leading United States influence in communication, printed and advertising, in respect of Time and Reader's Digest; and it seems to me particularly in respect of Time, because of the other publications which are associated in that stable. It does include Reader's Digest because the digest kind of format can open up so many possibilities that the Government might be worrying less about the protection they are getting from United States magazines, that are overtly American and shipped in from the United States, and much more about the prospect of Time and Reader's Digest.

I have asked a number of questions in relation to this subject, and I expect the usual long and detailed answer that Parliamentary Secretaries are much more given to than Ministers.

The Chairman: Order, please. May I inquire of the committee if at the moment we are considering resolution No. 1. I did not interrupt the hon. Member for Port Arthur, but I felt he was referring more specifically to resolution No. 5.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, did you change the rules since yesterday?

The Chairman: If the hon. Member will compare the two resolutions, he will notice that we had one resolution yesterday and five resolutions today, so the rules have not been changed.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Winkler: If I may be permitted, Mr. Chairman, I should like to address myself to the same item referred to by the hon. Member for Port Arthur. I want to pose a couple of questions to the Parliamentary Secretary for the purpose of clarification. So far as resolution No. 5 is concerned, I think he should give us initially a very clear indication of what the meaning of this provision is. It may be my ignorance more than anything else that is responsible for my not fully understanding the meaning but it seems to me that item 1221 may be confusing. If subsection 1 were a prohibiting subsection I think we might consider being agreeable to it, and as of this moment I do not believe we would be opposed to subsection 2 and the exemptions permitted thereunder as they will affect the people concerned and Canadians generally. I should like to refer to subsection 1 in particular where I find these words:

> Issues of a periodical, one of the four immediately preceding issues of which, if such preceding issue is dated after September 30, 1965, has, under regulations prescribed by the Governor in Council, been found to be an issue of a special edition, including a split run or a regional edition, that contained an advertisement that was primarily directed to a market in Canada and that did not appear in identical form in all editions of that issue of that periodical that were distributed in the country of origin.

If this in fact is not a prohibiting section it could have a very disastrous effect. I do not wish to elaborate on what position I or some of my colleagues may take until we have an absolutely clear explanation and understanding of what the entire section means. I understand that the subsections are quite different and, as I have stated, I am not opposed to the type of exemption which I understand is provided in subsection 2. Before we proceed further with the consideration of the whole item I think the Parliamentary Secretary should give us a very clear explanation and understanding of what this means.

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might reply to the hon. Member for Grey-Bruce before dealing with the questions raised by the hon. Member for Port Arthur. The hon. Member for Grey-Bruce has raised a very pertinent question and a fuller explanation of this item would seem to be in order.

Perhaps I might begin by saying that a significant amount of magazine advertising directed to Canadians is originated by companies which operate outside of Canada or by the foreign affiliates of Canadian firms. Such organizations are, of course, outside the reach of the Canadian Income Tax Act. It is therefore necessary to deal with advertising that is directed to the Canadian market by such organizations in non-Canadian periodicals through the Customs Tariff. I think this is important, Mr. Chairman. It will be recalled that the Royal Commission on Publications recommended that action of this sort be taken.

Mr. Fisher: And that Time and Reader's Digest be blocked off.

Mr. Pennell: Hon. Members are probably aware that in recent years it has become quite common practice for many mass circulation magazines in the United States to produce so-called "split runs" or regional editions which involve the insertion of advertising in a portion of the circulation of a particular issue. That circulation may be directed to one region of the United States or to Canada. This is a result of the fact that many American mass circulation magazines also circulate in Canada on a very large scale.

What is envisaged is that if a particular issue—I emphasize the word "a"—is found to be a split run or regional edition containing advertisements directed to Canada, future issues of the publication will be denied entry. This makes it possible for the proprietors of the publications in question to make any changes necessary in order to avoid the prohibition. The Department of National Revenue will, of course, be getting in touch with all known publishers who might be affected so as to give them every opportunity to make such adjustments in their advertising patterns as may be necessary. That covers the first portion of this item.

The second portion relates to the practice of inserting in advertisements in mass circulation United States magazines which are sold in Canada the address of the Canadian agent or supplier of the products advertised. The O'Leary Commission recommended that no magazines be allowed to enter Canada which contain such advertising. We have come to the conclusion that such a measure would work a hardship in certain cases. There are some products which it is unreasonable to expect would be advertised in Canada in any other way, such as goods which are used only in certain professions or trades, or products which are sold in very limited quantity. Accordingly, it is proposed that all magazines entering Canada be allowed to have a minimum amount of such advertising. It is expected it will be relatively easy for foreign periodicals which circulate in Canada to adjust their advertising arrangements in such a way as to make it unnecessary to invoke this prohibition. I hope that explanation deals with the question of the hon. Member for Grey-Bruce.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Fisher: No.

Mr. Pennell: During the remarks of the hon. Member for Port Arthur he made a rather forceful argument with regard to what he described as the Canadian nationalism policies of this Government. He enumerated a number of them, for which I am thankful, and then he went on to state that the present legislation regarding magazines was an abandonment of such policies. With great respect may I say to the hon. Member that one variation from a policy does not mean that there is abandonment of a policy and, as a matter of fact, I thought he made a rather strong case for the Government in the course of his argument by enumerating all the things we have done to bring in what he calls a policy of Canadian nationalism.

Mr. Grafftey: The exception proves the rule.

Mr. Fisher: Let the Parliamentary Secretary tell us about the automobile trade industry and the consequences that might affect periodicals in this particular area.

Mr. Pennell: The hon. Member is asking me to move into a rather hypothetical area, because we do not know yet what the effects will be.

Mr. Fisher: That is not what the Minister of Industry tells us. He talks in terms of 11,000 jobs, a market of $200 million, in parts, in the United States, and interpenetration of the industry. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, since we are so close to the completion of these resolutions, may I offer the suggestion that the House might be agreeable to sitting for another 30 minutes so that we may complete them?

Mr. Fisher: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: There is opposition. Before the Chair calls it ten o'clock, it would appear that we have been limiting our discussion to resolution No. 5 and it may be that there is a disposition on the part of the Committee to carry resolutions 1, 2, 3 and 4. If that is the case, perhaps I might call them.

Mr. Fisher: You might as well call resolution 6 too.

Resolutions 1 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. Knowles: Ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Resolution (Income Tax Act) reported and concurred in.

Resolution (Customs Act) reported and concurred in.

INCOME TAX ACT

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Gordon moves for leave to present a bill based on the resolution respecting the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Fisher: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is the motion for first reading which, according to Standing Orders, has to be called at this time.

Mr. Fisher: It is after ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker. You can call it tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The understanding of the Chair is that, according to practice, the motion for first reading is made at the same time as the motion is made for concurrence in the report of the committee. There will be no motion made for second reading at this time.

Mr. Fisher: My point is that we do not want the second reading tomorrow, either.

Mr. McIlraith: There is no intention of proceeding with that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is acting according to the practice of the House at this time.

Hon. Walter Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-118, to amend the Income Tax Act and the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CUSTOMS ACT

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-119, to amend the Customs Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will continue with the discussion on the resolution that we were dealing with before ten o'clock. When it is completed we will take Government Order No. 10, resuming debate on the motion of the Minister of Justice to set up a joint committee to consider the state of penitentiaries; then the resolution and the legislation dealing with the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act; then item No. 22 on the order paper, House in Committee of the Whole on the proposed measure to authorize and provide for the construction of a line of railway by the C.N.R.; then the second reading of Bill S-8 to amend the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act; and then item No. 12 on the order paper, the measure to provide for the Indian Claims Commission.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask one question. Is it a fact there has been a change of plans regarding Monday and, if so, could that be put on the record?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I was anxious not to put it on the record. The situation is that there had been a request that there be no Supply motion this coming Monday, and I have not been able to give a firm answer that there will not be a Supply motion on Monday. For that reason I have made no reference to it, but I hope to be able to give a firm answer on that point first thing in the morning.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Provisional Standing Order 39A deemed to have been moved.

REDISTRIBUTION—ONTARIO—PUBLICATION OF MAPS IN WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the time allotted to me tonight to bring before the House a matter regarding the failure of the Government to contact the Weekly Newspapers of Ontario in the publication of the maps and data regarding the Redistribution Act.

My point deals with discrimination against an important part of the Fourth Estate, the most important part of our news media in Ontario, the weekly newspapers.

This Government has again shown its capacity for downright stupidity, and has portrayed its usual ingrained arrogance in what has been allowed to happen this week with respect to advertisements under the Redistribution Act. The placing of approximately $250,000 worth of advertising exclusively in the columns of the big dailies is an indication of a certain complete consideration or, shall I say, Mr. Speaker, "value received", vis-à-vis, the daily papers to keep them quiet and clear of criticism regarding many evident gerrymanderings in the political redistribution. A good, timely cartoon, in this regard, would show the right hon. Prime Minister and the Secretary of State hurrying by the office of a small weekly paper, with furtive glances, on their way to their destination, the office of a large "daily" to which they intend to give all the business.

I submit that the advertising done under the Redistribution Act need not have cost a quarter of a million dollars; it needed to entail, possibly, only paying for the publishing of the maps. As for the other information concerning the boundaries of each constituency, any newspaper, weekly or daily, would be glad to publish this information free of charge as news. One weekly publisher in my riding wanted to publish this information as news and had to telephone Ottawa at his own expense to get the details. Another weekly publisher in Northumberland County had to do the same, while the Government was paying many thousands of dollars and giving full service, plus advance notice, to their favourites, the dailies.

Mr. Speaker, there are at least 215 weekly newspapers in Ontario, with a combined circulation of almost 600,000. The people who read these newspapers, a combined total of at least two million people, or one-third of our population, are people who either cannot afford, or do not choose, to pay the larger subscription rate which a daily naturally, must charge. And so these people look forward to getting their news via the local weekly.

I have no criticism to make of the dailies whatsoever, as to their valuable services. I believe that they have given value for the money which is spent in accordance with their rates, though of course those rates are much higher than the rates of the weekly papers. I submit that the readers of these weekly papers, 600,000 families, or at least two million people, have also been ignored and discriminated against by this Government. Every voter in Canada has the right to know the particulars of the redistribution of his or her constituency, and has the right to be reached. Moreover, every voter has the right to appeal the decisions of the Redistribution Commission if he wishes. This Government is, by its action, or lack of action, discriminating against hundreds of thousands of rural voters who subscribe to weekly papers only.

I have irrefutable proof of this in an example which I will cite in my riding where one rural route which was checked and assessed had 197 drops. Only eight of these drops take a daily newspaper. On that rural route last Tuesday, the day of publication of the Redistribution Commission information, eight families were fully informed regarding the future of their constituency while 189 families were left completely uninformed in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, the Ontario weekly newspaper editors protest the failure of this Government to recognize them as part of our news media. No one had any idea that the whole Province of Ontario would be treated in this way at a high cost per entry in the daily papers. I would give another example: The smallest daily in Ontario received this business, yet its circulation is only one-half that of a weekly paper five miles away.

There is another point, Mr. Speaker. That is the silence of the backbench Ontario Liberal Members, supporters of this Government, which demonstrates their complete agreement with and concurrence in this ludicrous policy which, of course, emanates from their masters, the Cabinet. This is nothing but an insult to the weekly newspapers and a failure to recognize their importance in the printing of public information.

In my question on Wednesday I asked if the Minister could now advise whether the weekly newspapers of Ontario are even yet going to be allowed to participate in publishing this information, and whether or not they will be authorized to do so for next week's publication. The Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) answered this question in a roundabout way when he said that the suggestion made by the hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), who raised this matter last Monday, had been communicated to the Commission. I have since been informed that the Chairman of the Commission has been contacted on behalf of the editors of the Ontario weeklies and says he will take direction from Parliament in this matter.

I note that the Secretary of State, as reported at page 2334 of Hansard of June 14, in answering a question posed by the hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) gave the ridiculous answer that these Commissions are not agencies of the Crown and that they are not accountable to the Crown. These Electoral Commissions certainly are accountable to the Crown through the Crown's faithful servant, this Parliament. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the Government ignores this fact and its duties in this regard, they do so at their peril.

I therefore ask the Government, through the Secretary of State, to instruct the Redistribution Commission for Ontario to publish these matters pertaining to redistribution in the Ontario weeklies next week, and so correct this error and give the uninformed portion of the Ontario population this vital information to which they are entitled.

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate and share the concern of the hon. Member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Alkenbrack). May I say to him in as kindly a spirit as possible that I believe he misapprehends the powers of this Parliament as set out in the Act. I would point out to the hon. Member that under section 10 of the Act the following is provided:

> A commission is not an agent of Her Majesty and the members of a commission as such are not part of the public service of Canada.

Therefore it is my understanding that the Act which set up this Commission, and which if my memory serves me correctly was passed by the House almost unanimously, put the powers of advertising in the hands of the Commission. However, I know the hon. Member will be pleased, as I was, to learn that the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) has communicated with Mr. Justice Richardson, Chairman of the Ontario Commission, asking that notice be taken of his request. I cannot vouch for this, but we are hopeful that there might be a favourable reply.

EDUCATION—STUDENT LOANS—INQUIRY AS TO IMPROVEMENTS IN PLAN

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) tabled in the House a report with reference to the Canada student loan plan. This report dealt mainly with the administrative matters that have occupied the attention of the Federal-Provincial group. Yesterday in reply to a question which I asked concerning the student loan program, the Minister answered:

> It may be that at some appropriate time it will be desirable to bring in amending legislation, but I have no plans to do so at the moment.

This is the part of the Minister's answer with which I was dissatisfied and is the reason I am making a very few comments tonight. I would submit that some legislative provisions are needed and should be provided immediately so that students can make their plans for this fall when they enter university. The student loan plan is deficient in some matters of principle and not just in administrative matters. First, Mr. Speaker, I believe the plan should be expanded so that it is in the nature of a bursary loan plan under which a student who has shown exceptional promise in the school year and who has obtained a student loan would have the right to a write-off of part of the loan. This would recognize ability in the student who ordinarily might not have gone to university because of the financial situation and who might turn out to be a good student who would make a real effort in his studies.

They are people who I think should be encouraged. That is why I suggest there should be a bursary type of loan granted, and it should be granted right away. I would suggest that it take the form of cancellation of part of the debt incurred at the end of the school year, perhaps to the extent of 25 per cent for those people with a clear pass, and perhaps to the extent of a further 25 per cent for those in the top quarter of their class.

[Mr. Pennell.]

Another group who have not been covered by the plan are graduate students, and those students who have taken their full term and are going on to postgraduate work. I think the ceiling should be eliminated in respect of those people when they go into graduate work so that they can continue their studies. It might be said that this will not take place for a few years; but these people should know now whether they are going to run out of money before they have finished their work. I think it is essential that there be a provision made for graduate students who, in the normal course, will go beyond what is allowed under the loan plan. This is something which should also be attended to right away.

Finally, there is the group whose graduation is followed by an apprenticeship. This group comprises medical students, law students and similar persons, some of whom, I understand, have made a presentation to the Minister on this very point. While they may have graduated they are also engaging upon a further year of study. During this year they are paid only subsistence wages, if anything. They should not be required to start repayment of their loan or to commence paying interest on it, at least until their apprenticeship has been completed and another six months has passed.

There are other improvements in the loan plan which have come up in the past year and which have been suggested in various briefs to the Government. It is not sufficient at this time for the Minister merely to say that we are catching up with some of the administrative problems in relation to this plan and that perhaps at some time in the future we will reconsider the basics. I would much prefer to hear him say that the Government will look at this student loan plan seriously and make the amendments which are really necessary.

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in regard to the loan plan let me say at once, whether improvements should or should not be brought in, that the number of students assisted to date, or as of April 1, is 41,284. So in my respectful submission it does provide a very valuable service.

Several Federal-Provincial Conferences of officials have been held to discuss ways and means of improving the operations of the plan. At the last full Federal-Provincial meeting held on March 29, agreement on improvements was reached on those areas where it was felt that experience had demonstrated the lack of harmony in the practices being followed. Full details of these arrangements were included with the statement of the Minister of Finance, which was incorporated as Appendix "A" in Hansard of June 11.

The purpose of these agreed arrangements is to ensure that the plan is available to students on as standard and consistent a basis as possible in all participating provinces. As hon. Members are aware the Canada Student Loans Act makes available to students, by virtue of the federal Government guarantee, a source of financing through the commercial banks and other approved lenders. All questions relating to the eligibility of students for loans and the designation of educational institutions which students may attend with the help of a student loan are administered by experienced provincial authorities who are designated for purposes of the Act by participating provinces. Co-ordination among the provinces concerning their administrative practices is not an explicit requirement of the Act, but of course does much to facilitate its purposes and objectives. No changes in the legislation are required to implement the type of arrangements that have recently been worked out. It may be that as more experience is gained with the plan it will prove desirable to bring in amending legislation.

• (10:20 p.m.)

I will convey the remarks of the hon. Member to the Minister. I must, however, tell him that at the present time there are no plans to make any amendments.

AGRICULTURE—FEED GRAINS—SPEECH BY FORESTRY MINISTER RESPECTING WHEAT BOARD

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I rise to discuss a matter of national importance and urgency. It arises out of the unwarranted and scurrilous attack made on the Canadian Wheat Board on June 11 at Drummondville in the province of Quebec by the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé). This in itself is a serious matter, but when it is coupled with the deliberate result of driving a wedge between farmers in separate parts of this nation, then I say it is encouraging the destruction of Canadian unity and purpose. That is not something new in the Ministry opposite.

Indeed, I recall recently when farmers from Ontario and some parts of Quebec came to the Chateau Laurier at Ottawa. I recall the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) at that time referring to the hon. Member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) by name, indicating that he would not consider representations from that particular quarter because he thought it might challenge the interests of farmers in Eastern Canada. Again, this same kind of practice drove a wedge between the farmers of different parts of this country.

Of course, we all know it was the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) who, during the election campaign of 1963, travelled through other parts of Canada stating that if he was elected he would do for them what John Diefenbaker had done for Western Canada. That tactic was employed by the Prime Minister, that man who was billed by his Party as a man who cares. I ask you, Sir, where the search for unity and purpose of this country is when the men in the ministerial benches opposite go about making statements such as those which have been made.

I have before me the text of the speech delivered by the Minister of Forestry, and I must say that for the most part this is fiction and prejudice, and not much else. These remarks echo the stand taken by the grain brokers of Eastern Canada. This is the old story of these particular interests which have controlled the distribution of feeds and grains in Central and Eastern Canada. This is the old story of these people challenging the efficiency and purpose of the Canadian Wheat Board. This is the old story of these people attacking the orderly method of marketing grain as being the source of their trouble.

I contend that it is a much different matter to have a Minister of the Crown who is one of the three Ministers charged with the responsibility for agriculture taking up this particular cry. The question must be asked, why this alliance of Ministry and grain brokers at this particular time. It seems to me that in respect of this whole matter which reputedly was supposed to deal with feed grain, the Minister is more interested in the brokers and the grain trades than in the farmers.

What does the Minister mean by juggling of the Wheat Board quota; and I should like the Parliamentary Secretary opposite to give an answer, because that is a serious charge and it should be substantiated or withdrawn. What does the Minister mean by adjusting interim payments? Has this situation developed during the period the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) has been charged with the responsibility of the Wheat Board operation? I remember a former Minister of Agriculture in a former Liberal Government, the late James G. Gardiner, and the adjustment he made just prior to an election campaign. Is the Minister of Forestry suggesting that the present Minister of Trade and Commerce is indulging in the same type of tactic at this particular time in directing interim payments from the Canadian Wheat Board?

The Minister has charged that interim payments have been adjusted. This is a serious charge and I contend that it should be withdrawn. The Minister charges that the Board has regulated the allotment of box cars in such a way as to bring about an artificial rationing of feed grain availabilities. This is not only a serious charge but a mischievous one and it should be withdrawn. All of the evidence I can find refutes the Minister's statement in that regard, and the figures of the Canadian Wheat Board show that this is not the case at all.

I know that the Minister, the Parliamentary Secretary and others across the way have boasted about what they did with regard to the feed grain situation last year and the supplies they laid in in Eastern positions. During the period since then the fluctuations in price have been greater than ever before.

The Minister has charged that the Wheat Board operations have resulted in erratic production of feed grains. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that that charge is unworthy of the Minister and the Government opposite. The annual report of the Canadian Wheat Board shows that yields have fluctuated from a high of 46.2 bushels per acre in 1956 to a low of 25.2 bushels per acre in 1961. The fluctuation in barley yields has been equally respondent to weather conditions. In the matter of feed wheat grades I ask the Parliamentary Secretary, what can the Canadian Wheat Board do about rust, frost or moisture content?

The Minister went on to say that in Eastern Canada the acreage sown to feed grains is constantly diminishing. It is natural for that to take place when the demand for improved pasture is as great and as economically sound in eastern Canada as it is today. When you consider the price levels of feed grains from Western Canada over the last 10, 12 or 20 years you cannot help but realize that throughout the period right up to the present time these grains have generally been sold by the Canadian Wheat Board at price levels that cannot be touched by producers in other parts of Canada.

I want to conclude by saying that the Government has been guilty of gross negligence in failing to take action with regard to the provision of feed grains for the farmers of Eastern Canada, and to try to place the blame on the Canadian Wheat Board is an action that is unworthy of any Member of the Government.

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry: Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my appreciation to the hon. Member for having brought this important matter to the attention of the House. I am confident that it was not the intention of the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) to cast any aspersions on the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board.

I think I can speak for the Government and for the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) in particular, who is directly responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, in saying that no one has expressed greater confidence in the Board than have the Government, and especially the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It is a matter of very great pride to all Canadians that the orderly marketing of grain in western Canada is in such competent hands. The Wheat Board is envied by other nations throughout the world, which wish that they had marketing agencies that could do the job the Canadian Wheat Board has done for the West and for Canada generally.

This agency was established, of course, for the purpose of bringing about the orderly marketing of grain. Certain responsibilities were placed on the Board by statute and the Board has discharged those responsibilities to its very great credit and to the credit of the country as a whole. I am confident that when the Minister of Forestry was speaking in Eastern Canada it was not his intention, nor would it be the wish of the Government, to cast any reflection on the excellent operation that has been conducted throughout the years by the Canadian Wheat Board. Grain is a very important commodity in Canadian exports and the orderly handling of this product is of national importance.

So, I can say on behalf of the Government and the Minister of Forestry, it was not his intention in any way to cast any reflections but to express confidence in the Canadian Wheat Board and to hope that their operation would continue to be as successful in the future as it has been in the past.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.32 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMONWEALTH PEACE MISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the announcement from London that a Commonwealth peace mission will seek to end the war in Viet Nam, could the Acting Prime Minister, in his usual terse and informative manner, give the House the benefit of information he undoubtedly has received from London in this regard? Could he also state what is Canada's position with regard to the touring peace mission; and why was the decision made that the Prime Minister of Canada would not be one of the Commonwealth leaders represented on this mission, in view of Canada's great interest in securing stability and peace in the international sphere?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the day before yesterday I told the right hon. Leader of the Opposition that the Government had received a communication from the British Government and that we were aware of a proposal which was going to be made the following day by the British Prime Minister. That proposal was made yesterday and was accepted by the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference. It provides for the Prime Ministers of the countries designated, under the chairmanship of the British Prime Minister, to proceed first to the United Nations Secretary General, then to other interested countries, the United States, South and North Viet Nam, the Chinese People's Republic, and the Soviet Union, with a view to impressing on all governments concerned the desirability of entering into discussions that might bring about an end to hostilities in Viet Nam.

The Prime Minister of Canada was interested and active in suggestions with regard to this proposal. His well known participation in endeavours to provide for conditions of peace in the world, which brought him the Nobel peace prize, was undoubtedly considered when it was proposed that he be a member of this group. The Prime Minister of Canada, rightly in my judgment, took the position that, as it was desirable to have a balanced representation on this delegation of Prime Ministers of the Commonwealth it would be better if this balance were preserved. It is not that the Prime Minister did not want to participate; it is because he thought if the move were to be successful the mission must represent as many sections of the Commonwealth as was possible. This view was finally concurred in by other members of the conference.

I am sure I express the views of this Parliament, Mr. Speaker, when I say that we sincerely hope all governments concerned will receive this delegation, which represents the most important single grouping of nations in the world. The delegation will undoubtedly express, what I think most people would want them to express, namely that the problem of Viet Nam can be resolved better by conciliation and discussion than by the use of force.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question. The Acting Prime Minister said that the reason for the Canadian Prime Minister not being included in this peace mission was to preserve a balance. I wonder whether he could explain to us, because of the doubts I have on this aspect, what he means by "balance"?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I hope my hon. friend will not seek to give the impression—I know he would not wish to because he wants this mission to succeed, as we all do—that the position taken by the Prime Minister is open to question. The Prime Minister of Britain represents the western group of the Commonwealth in this delegation. If the Prime Minister of Canada were also to be included in this delegation of five, this would mean there would be representation from two western countries which are members of NATO. I think the position taken by the Prime Minister of Canada was not only proper but wise.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDIAN AFFAIRS

COURT DECISION RESPECTING PROVISION OF MEDICAL CARE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare regarding a Canadian Press dispatch from Regina which says that the Saskatchewan health department will appeal a magistrate's ruling that all Indians should receive free hospital and medical care from the Federal Government. The dispatch goes on to say that Health Minister D. G. Stewart, in a press release yesterday, said that the appeal decision was made after consultation with Federal Government officials, and that these officials were of the opinion that the ramifications of the judgment are such that the case should be appealed.

I want to ask the Minister whether this statement is correct and, if it is, why the Canadian Government is endeavouring to evade its responsibilities in supplying health services to the Indians of this country.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the statement is quite correct. The Minister of Health and the Attorney General of Saskatchewan have notified us of the result of the case, and consultation has been had with the Immigration Branch and the Department of Justice. The appeal will be taken because of the very far-reaching implications of the decision.

My hon. friend will recall that when he was Premier of the Province which brought in medicare legislation he did not include Indians, who thus became a different class of citizen. It is considered for the native people of the country extraordinarily important that this treaty, which contains health provisions similar to those of other treaties, be construed by a court higher than a magistrate's court so the matter may be settled once and for all.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the health and welfare of the Indian people are directly involved in the decision which may follow from this appeal, and as Indians are wards of the Government of Canada, will the Minister give consideration to the supplying of counsel, or looking after whatever expenses may be involved in procuring counsel, so the Indians' side of this case will be adequately represented when this matter comes before the court?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, perhaps my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is able to throw more light on this question.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if I may I would like to supplement what the Minister of National Health and Welfare has said.

The prime concern of my Department is the welfare of the Indians. When this matter was first raised in this House and reference was made to the article in the newspapers which reported the court's decision, I gave the assurance that my Department would see to it that the Indians were provided with good counsel, if they so desired. I should like that statement to be given as much publicity as possible so that if the Indians feel they need help from my Department, they will know that help will be made available in order that their interests will be safeguarded.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the Minister whether it would not be much simpler and save a good deal of legal expenses on the part of the Department for the Indian Affairs Branch to accept the decision of the magistrate and provide these people with the health services to which they are entitled under the terms of the treaty?

Mr. Nicholson: Having practised law for a few years before I drifted into business I would say that we should not impose counsel on a client, but that it is for the litigant himself to come forward and state that he needs counsel. This individual litigant had counsel, who was successful in the lower court, and he might want that counsel to continue. If financial assistance is needed by that counsel, it will be provided within reasonable limits. If he wants to retain counsel we will see that he is able to do so, but the request must come from the litigant himself.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the Minister misunderstood my question. I did not ask him about counsel. I asked him whether it would not save a good deal of legal expense on the part of the Federal Government if the Indian Affairs Branch merely accepted its responsibility for providing health services to the Indian people.

Mr. Nicholson: That is a matter of Government policy, and the responsibility has been delegated to another branch of Government. In this particular case there is a legal question involved of far-reaching consequences, and it has nothing to do with the point raised by my hon. friend. His question involves Government policy. A decision has been made to leave the health care of the people of Canada, to the extent that it is a Federal responsibility, in the hands of my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

[Later:]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigation which arises out of an answer he gave earlier. In view of the fact that this particular decision in Saskatchewan concerns the interpretation of a treaty in which the Federal Government is involved, and the fact that if the decision is sustained it will impose a liability upon the Government, will the Government give consideration to intervening by counsel and, if such is the case, indicate to the House the Government's view on such intervention?

Mr. Nicholson: I will take the question as notice. I thank my hon. friend for having raised it. I might say I have discussed the matter with the Minister of Justice and with my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Personally I would be sympathetic to such a suggestion, but the responsibility must and does rest with the Minister of Justice.

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAINS—SPEECH BY FORESTRY MINISTER RESPECTING WHEAT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Forestry whether, upon reflection, the speech he made respecting the Canada Wheat Board represents Government policy and, if that is so, whether it is the intention of the Government to substantially change the authority and the activity of the Canadian Wheat Board in keeping with what the Minister said.

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, my address at Drummondville was delivered in French, and it is evident in the translation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sauvé: Wait, please.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sauvé: It is evident from the translation that some words in English have a different meaning than they have in French. In any case—

Mr. Grafftey: That's absolute nonsense.

Mr. Sauvé: In any case, I think—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sauvé: I think if all the hon. Members were bilingual they would realize there is a distinction between the meaning of some words in French and some words in English. Take the words "demande" and "request". They have different meanings.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I should like to suggest to the Minister that he reply to the question asked him.

Mr. Sauvé: I was interrupted by hon. Members, Mr. Speaker. In any case, it was not my intention in my speech at Drummondville to criticize the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board, and if any of my words can be interpreted in this way I wish at this time to correct them. I share with all my colleagues the Government's confidence in the Canadian Wheat Board—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Since when?

Mr. Sauvé: —but I am also very much preoccupied with the well-being of the farmers in eastern Canada and in British Columbia.

Mr. Jorgenson: A supplementary question—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. Member for Medicine Hat rising on a supplementary question?

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister if he will provide Members of the House with his interpretation in English of what he said in Drummondville.

Mr. Sauvé: Copies have already been distributed in French to the French Members and in English to the English Members. What I said is clear. It was not my intention to criticize the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board. This is clear, and I stand on it.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Notwithstanding the very weak excuse given by the Minister of Forestry, now that the Acting Prime Minister has had an opportunity to read the speech does he agree with the statements made by the Minister of Forestry and the charges he made against the Canadian Wheat Board?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Forestry has made a statement which is in accord with Government policy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Government's policy has been repeatedly stated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and it is that the Government has confidence, as the Minister of Forestry has just said, in the Wheat Board. That is the Government's policy and that is what my hon. friend should be content to receive.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Speaker, we simply cannot be content with that reply.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Liberal arrogance.

FEED GRAIN—REQUEST THAT IMPORTATION BE PERMITTED

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his capacity as minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board?

In view of the fact that eastern farmers will probably be unable to get feed grain at a reasonable price from the Canadian Wheat Board and since the board intends to keep on exploiting those eastern farmers, would the Minister of Trade and Commerce allow the importation of feed grain from the United States, Russia or other countries, and also grant a freight subsidy in that respect if farmers in the rest of Canada want to take advantage of this opportunity?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept any part of the preface to the question posed by the hon. Member, so it becomes hypothetical so far as I am concerned.

Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): That is what is taking place and has taken place over the years.

[Mr. Jorgenson.]

POTATOES—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO PRICE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

In view of the fact that the price of Canadian potatoes has recently reached a very high level, namely approximately 9 cents a pound for last year's potatoes and 11 or 12 cents for this year's, does the Minister not agree that it would be timely to look into the matter with a view to ascertaining who controls the price of potatoes, inasmuch as they sell for about ¾ cents a pound in the fall and Quebec and Ontario farmers could easily produce more than 10 per cent of the Canadian demand?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think this is a suitable question for the orders of the day. However, I will take it as notice and see if it is possible to answer it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO PROGRAM FOR MONDAY, JUNE 21

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Government House Leader. Can he tell us now what he expects the program to be on Monday so that we may be able to prepare ourselves accordingly?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last, as appears on page 2480 of Hansard, the Acting Prime Minister indicated that on Monday we would be introducing a supply motion in order to give Members of the House, if they wished to do so, an opportunity to debate the matter of an address to Her Majesty respecting a provincial constitution. Yesterday a request came from the Leader of the Opposition that we not take a supply motion on Monday. We are agreeable to not introducing a supply motion on Monday, and we will be proceeding with the legislation on the order paper.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DELAY IN DISTRIBUTION OF FRENCH "HANSARD"

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State being absent, I shall put my question to the Acting Prime Minister.

Once again this morning I find that, while we have our English copy of Hansard, we are still waiting for the French. Why this difference in the distribution of Hansard to members? This morning we would like to get our French copy at the same time as the other. What is the reason for this time lag between the distribution of English and French Hansard?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I share the feelings of the hon. member entirely. I do not know the exact reason, but I think one of the translators is ill. At any rate, I shall inquire and try to settle the matter.

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REPORTED DISCRIMINATION BY AIR LINES AGAINST MARRIED WOMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister of which I have given notice. It is of urgency and importance to all women in employment. My question is, in view of an arbitration board decision that air lines have the right to dismiss a female employee for having changed her status from a single to a married person, will the Government give immediate consideration to amending the Bill of Rights or any other appropriate act of Parliament to stop this unwarranted, un-Canadian discrimination against married women?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest to the hon. Member that he has made his point at the moment. Perhaps if he wants to pursue it further he may put a question on the order paper.

Mr. Winch: May I say that I presented this question to the Acting Prime Minister two days ago, and I understand he is prepared to give an answer.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): In fairness to the hon. gentleman, it is true that two days ago he did speak to me and sent me notice of this question. I had hoped to be able to deal with it today, but I cannot. I hope to be able to deal with it next week in one way or another.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EARLY INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. F. Kennedy (Colchester-Hants): I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the Prime Minister's statement in the House on Wednesday, June 9, that veterans legislation was to receive priority attention in this session; and in view of the Minister's assurance to the same effect given in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, can the Minister now state when this legislation will appear on the order paper so that Members may have ample time to study it in advance of debate?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The hon. Member may have noticed the two resolutions which appear on today's order paper, and I hope to have two others placed there during the course of next week, I hope early in the week.

EDUCATION

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR INCREASED GRANTS TO UNIVERSITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): In view of the extreme shortage of funds experienced by some Nova Scotia universities, and in view of the fact that Ontario universities received grants in the vicinity of $280 per student as against $180 per student in Nova Scotia, will the Minister of Finance indicate when plans for changes in the grants system to overcome this inequity will be announced, and what they will be?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I have stated in the House in answer to other questions that the Government will have to wait for the Bladen report before deciding exactly what should be done. However, I expect this whole question will be discussed at the Federal-Provincial Conference starting July 19.

Mr. Regan: I should like to speak on this matter on Monday evening at ten o'clock.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance arising out of the reply he gave to the hon. Member for Halifax. The Minister stated that no consideration can be given to the provision of increased grants to our universities until the report of the Bladen Commission has been received. Since his colleague the Secretary of State did not find it necessary to wait for the report of the Fowler Commission before announcing the implementation of colour television at Expo' 67, would the Minister not agree that education in our universities is more important than colour television?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. This is an argument.

INDUSTRY

MANITOBA—GRANTS TO COMPANIES IN DESIGNATED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. No doubt he has read of the chronic unemployment situation in northern Manitoba as reported by the Provincial Government. In view of the fact that upwards of 50,000 people in northern Manitoba are unemployed, would the Minister not review his decision with respect to excluding this area from the areas designated for industrial development?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): The Government regrets very keenly that there are areas of Canada where unemployment is still much too high. I would remind the hon. Member that the over-all rate for May, 1965 was the lowest it has been for eight years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gordon: So I think the Government, and indeed all Members of the House, can take some satisfaction in the success of the policies which have been introduced to deal with this problem.

The particular policy to which the hon. gentleman referred is not in our opinion the kind of policy which should be continued beyond the date set for its termination under legislation approved by this House. We are examining all the kinds of policies which could be used to deal with a particular question of this kind.

Mr. Dinsdale: Of course I am aware of the success of the programs initiated back in 1960, but is the Government not going to initiate some policies of its own?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): My question is supplementary to the one which was directed to the Minister of Finance by the hon. Member for Brandon-Souris. The Minister appeared to imply that the question related to the program which the Government is discontinuing. I am sure the question asked by the hon. Member for Brandon-Souris relates, as does mine, to the newly announced program of grants in certain areas to encourage industrial growth. In view of the fact that northern Manitoba has been completely ignored, does the Minister think the areas in which so many native Indians and Métis live are not worthy of receiving this assistance at the present time?

Mr. Gordon: I answered a similar question from the hon. Member a few days ago.

Mr. Simpson: A supplementary question—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We have had a number of supplementaries on the same question. We have only a few minutes still available.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

VANCOUVER—QUESTIONS ASKED BY COMMISSION REPRESENTATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I desire to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. I regret not having given him notice, but this matter came to my attention only a few moments ago. It is of the most urgent nature.

I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether it has come to his knowledge that a number of people in Vancouver have recently been asked by people who say they represent the Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism to answer a list of 199 questions, two of which are as follows: "Did you vote for Prime Minister Pearson in the last election?" and "Do you intend to vote for Prime Minister Pearson in the next election?" I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether this type of questioning is acceptable and in line with the authority given to the Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I was not aware of this, but I will have to look into it. I may say that if these questions were put to me I would have no difficulty in answering them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winch: I wish to ask a supplementary question. As a rule I do not ask supplementary questions because they hold others back. If the Minister cannot give a non-political answer, would he state whether an investigation will be made to determine whether this type of question should be directed to citizens under the authority of a commission on biculturalism and bilingualism?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I suggest the hon. Member is making an argument now rather than seeking information?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will you permit me, Mr. Speaker? I am sure the hon. Member is quite sincere in asking this supplementary question, as he was in his primary question. I did answer it. I said I would look into the situation at once.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Perhaps the Acting Prime Minister is in a position to answer the question I put to him yesterday concerning the activities of the B and B Commission in Yugoslavia.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I regret that I am not. I will try to be next week.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TORONTO—PRODUCTION AND C.B.C. SHOWING OF SEX EXPLOITATION FILM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Justice. Will the Department of Justice be taking any action against C.B.C. employees Ted Leversuch, John Cavall, Phil Styles, Peter Douett and John Ashley, who have recently aided Independent Film Artists Limited, of Toronto in producing the sex orgy film "Room for a Stranger", at Lakeshore Studios in Toronto? Is not this sex exploitation film, which features Jean Christopher, currently appearing on the C.B.C. program "Nightcap" in violation of section 150 of the Criminal Code?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is a question for order paper.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Last Monday the Minister of Finance indicated in reply to a question that he had not received any request for reconsideration of the decision regarding the pensions of superannuated civil servants. Would the Acting Prime Minister check to ascertain whether the Prime Minister has received any such communications and whether the Government is giving consideration to the request for an improvement in the pensions of retired civil servants?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I will have to take that question as notice and hope to reply to it later.

TRADE

CHEESE—STEPS TO INCREASE EXPORTS TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Doucett (Lanark): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. According to the President of the National Dairy Council of Canada our exports of cheese to the United States are restricted to 600,000 pounds annually while the United States exports to Canada two million pounds a year. What steps are being taken by the Government in order that our exports may be increased?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): As a result of representations made since this Government took office we have had the quota increased once, and I hope we shall achieve another increase when the quota is next revised.

WAYS AND MEANS

The House in Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Resolved, 1. That the Customs Tariff be amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 16 thereof, the following section:

17. (1) The Governor in Council, by order, may from time to time amend

(a) Schedules A to C, and

(b) any lists of articles or goods the duties on which are removed or reduced pursuant to any Act or any order in council under the Customs Act or this Act, by renumbering the items set out in Schedules A to C or in any such list but not so as to affect the status of any of those items with respect to the payment of duty.

(2) On and after the coming into force of an order under subsection (1) a reference by its former number in any Act or in any statutory or other instrument or document to any item renumbered by that order shall, unless the context otherwise requires, be construed to be a reference to that item as renumbered by the order.

(3) The Minister of National Revenue may, from time to time by publication in Part I of the Canada Gazette, give notice of any change required to be made, by virtue of an order under subsection (1), in any reference in any Act or in any statutory or other instrument or document to an item renumbered by the order where the reference thereto is by the former number.

2. That Schedule A to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out tariff items 209 E, 210i, 263e, 384, 440m(1), 440n(1), 445z, 541a(2) and 695(c), and the enumerations of goods and the rates of duty set opposite each of those items, and by inserting therein the following items, enumerations of goods and rates of duty:

3. That Schedule B to the Customs Tariff be amended by inserting therein the following item, enumeration of goods and rate of drawback of duty:

4. That Schedule C to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out item 1,220 and the enumeration of goods set opposite that item, and by inserting therein the following item and enumeration of goods:

5. That Schedule C to the Customs Tariff be amended by inserting therein the following item and enumeration of goods:

6. That any enactment founded upon resolutions 2, 3 and 4 of the foregoing resolutions shall be deemed to have come into force on the 27th day of April, 1965, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the said resolutions imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

7. That any enactment founded upon resolution 5 of the foregoing resolutions shall come into force on the 1st day of January, 1966, and shall apply to all goods mentioned in the said resolution imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day, and shall apply to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

The Chairman: Order. House again in Committee of Ways and Means, Customs Tariff resolutions. When the Committee rose last evening resolution No. 5 was being considered.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, at the adjournment hour last night the hon. Member for Port Arthur had called it ten o'clock, but he is not here today. He had raised a number of points with regard to paragraph 5. I had done the same a few minutes earlier, and I think in view of the rather complex nature of this item we will want a complete explanation from the Parliamentary Secretary.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps the hon. Member would be kind enough to wait a minute until order has been restored in the Committee. Order, please. Would hon. gentlemen resume their seats?

Mr. Lambert: I take it that the Parliamentary Secretary is now prepared to give us the explanation with regard to paragraph 5 and the proposed item 1221.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I believe the only questions remaining unanswered are those raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton West and the hon. Member for Port Arthur. I must say that the questions they did raise appear to me to be of considerable substance. Perhaps I might deal with a question raised by the hon. Member for Port Arthur. As reported at page 2589 of Hansard the hon. Member asked this question:

> —under the guise of some kind of culture some Canadian magazine in existence, and it might even be a defunct property like Liberty which probably has a copyright and is entitled to the name, to merge with some United States publications so that we would get a situation where we have in effect a replica of the Time and Reader's Digest situation.

I must concede at once that this appeared to me to be a very valid question, and I did not see the solution in the Customs Tariff Act. However, the officials have directed my attention to the Income Tax Act and I believe the answer can be found there. In other words, the hon. Member for Port Arthur was inquiring whether it would be possible for a large foreign publishing organization to make use of the title of a defunct Canadian periodical and so have in Canada a periodical which would draw its editorial matter from different periodicals in the United States or elsewhere. I should like to point out that under the income tax resolution such a publication, even though printed in Canada, would not qualify as Canadian by virtue of section 5(a)(ii)(F). Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I may refer to that section, which defines what is meant by "Canadian issue":

> but does not include an issue of a periodical
> (E) that is produced or published under a licence granted by a person who produces or publishes issues of a periodical that are printed, edited or published outside Canada—

Then going to subparagraph (F):

> the contents of which, excluding advertisements, are substantially the same as the contents of an issue of a periodical, or the contents of one or more issues of one or more periodicals, that was or were printed, edited or published outside Canada;

I believe that covers the very fundamental point raised by the hon. Member for Port Arthur. He went on to raise a further question. The hon. Member was concerned about the effect of this legislation on the entry into Canada of publications such as Saturday Evening Post, New Republic, Harper's and other prominent publications which circulate nationally both in the United States and in Canada.

May I say, Mr. Chairman, that it does not seem to me, with respect, that the proposed tariff item will have much effect on the circulation of this type of publication in Canada. None of these periodicals, so far as I am informed, at present publishes split runs or regional editions, and to this extent they will not be affected by the provisions of item 1221 (1). These periodicals, of course, like all foreign periodicals will be required to meet the test of item 1221 (2). In other words they will have to ensure that not more than 5 per cent of the advertising space in any issue consists of space used for advertisements indicating specific sources of availability in Canada. I doubt very much whether this will prove to be a very onerous requirement for these publications, and I believe that most of the foreign periodicals which circulate in Canada are already meeting these requirements.

The hon. Member went on to raise a third question about the scope of the exemptions in the proposed tariff item as they relate to such publications as coin catalogues. I acknowledge that this is a matter that would have to be examined very carefully by the customs officials in each individual case to see whether the publication in question was a genuine catalogue or simply a trade magazine. This is going to require the exercise of judgment, but I think so far as these catalogues are concerned the officials have been on the whole rather generous in their interpretations.

The fourth point raised by the hon. Member for Port Arthur dealt with special issues of publications devoted to Canada. The question here is whether they are special editions for circulation in Canada, in which case they would be prohibited under item 1221 (1) if they contained any advertisement primarily directed to a market in Canada. So that while it may be a special edition devoted to Canada, the test is whether the advertising is primarily directed to a market in Canada. For instance, you could have a special issue devoted to Canada but directed to a market in the United States. You might have a travel magazine publishing a special issue to bring tourists into Canada, so the advertising would be directed to people in the United States although there would be a special issue devoted to Canada.

I should also point out that if a travel magazine published a special issue devoted to news and articles about Canada, and the edition that it was proposed to circulate in Canada was the same as all editions distributed in the country of origin, it would qualify for entry under 1221 (1). It would, of course, still be subject to the test under item 1221 (2). The last few lines of 1221 (2), if I could draw them to the attention of the Committee, provide in effect an exemption from prohibition in such special issues if they are not directed primarly to a market in Canada.

I believe I have touched on the main points raised by the hon. Member for Port Arthur. I must apologize openly, but I misplaced my notes and have not been able to look at the questions raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton West. If he would be kind enough to bring them to my attention again I will endeavour to do my best to answer them.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I was particularly interested in the effect of Schedule C to the Customs Tariff. As the Parliamentary Secretary knows, the Customs Tariff schedules form a monumental book which is not available to Members generally. I did have a copy at one time, but I had to return it to the Department. What is the effect of Schedule C? Is this a category of prohibited goods? Is it a particular level of tariff? I doubt that very much, because there are no rates spelled out in the resolution. Therefore I assume that this may be a prohibitive type of regulation.

I find it rather difficult to understand how we can justify prohibiting the entry of a magazine or periodical into this country, even if it included a split run, with advertising directed primarily to Canadians. What is going to be the effect of the inclusion in Schedule C of this type of periodical? If there is to be a complete exclusion, then of course there is restriction of another kind, a form of censorship; a restriction in the circulation of publications. On the other hand, if this provision means that there shall be some special customs rate applied by way of deterrent to this type of periodical so as to make it not competitive, or the Canadian advertisers are to be denied the income tax expense allowance on the cost of advertising, then we should like this point cleared up.

In addition, the Parliamentary Secretary will note the item 1221 (1) speaks of regulations prescribed by the Governor in Council and refers to an effective date of September 30, 1965. I assume that is when the provision "Thou shalt not enter" will come into force.

Mr. Pennell: The date is January 1, 1966.

Mr. Lambert: Well, there are two dates. Item 1221 (1) says:

> Issues of a periodical, one of the four immediately preceding issues of which, if such preceding issue is dated after September 30, 1965, has, under regulations prescribed by the Governor in Council—

Now, when is it anticipated that the Governor in Council will make these regulations? Would these regulations be specifically tabled in the House? I note they will have to be published in the Canada Gazette, but this is such an important area of activity on the part of, shall we say, Canadianization or the sanitization of Canadians that I think the House must be extremely careful and jealous of just what is going to be done. After all, this House may give conditional approval to this type of provision—although I personally have some doubts about it—which could be completely extended under the regulations prescribed by the Governor in Council. This would be a wonderful opportunity for the committee on delegated legislation which has been proposed by the Committee on Procedure, and which many Members on this side would have included in Standing Order 65. This is the type of regulation we want to look at and examine so it does not go beyond the authority granted by Parliament.

Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary is now prepared to give us give us some explanation in this regard.

Mr. Pennell: I might say that the hon. Member for Edmonton West, with his usual perceptive eye, has correctly diagnosed, I think, the intention of this item. As I understand it there will be a prohibition here, subject to these magazines being brought within the exemption spelled out in paragraph 5.

If I may deal with the last part of his question whether these regulations will be tabled in the House? I can only assume that we would follow the regular course.

Mr. Lambert: They would be published in the Canada Gazette.

Mr. Pennell: That is right; my hon. friend interjects correctly. I also understand that the publishing firms have been in close contact with officials of the Department. They are people who, of course, will be very directly concerned with this legislation. They are aware of all its implications, and when it does come into effect I think they will be in the position to make the necessary adjustments to meet the requirements of the amendment.

I doubt whether there is anyone more informed as to the effect of this legislation than the hon. Member. The point is that there has been a significant amount of magazine advertising directed to Canadians which has originated from companies situated outside of Canada. This legislation is aimed at containing that practice. I think it is recognized that this proposal is fairly well on all fours with the recommendation of the Royal Commission, with one slight exception with regard to the 5 per cent referred to in item 1221(2). So these magazines will be prohibited, as the item says.

There are two parts to item 1221. The first part says there will be a prohibition if it is an issue of a special edition, including a split run or a regional edition, that contains an advertisement that is primarily directed to a market in Canada and that does not appear in identical form in all editions of that issue of that periodical that were distributed in the country of origin. The second exception deals with the regular, ordinary issue, where it is found that more than 5 per cent of the advertising space consists of advertisements that indicate specific sources of availability in Canada, or specific terms or conditions relating to the sale or provision in Canada of any goods or services, except where the indication of such sources of availability or such terms and conditions is primarily directed to persons outside Canada.

I think that last exception covers the point raised regarding travel magazines. They would be directed to a market primarily outside of Canada. Although there could be a split edition relating to Canada, it might still be a regular edition.

On the question of date, the hon. Member asked about the effect of item 1221 (1), which refers to an issue dated after September 30, 1965. The only explanation I can offer—and this is subject to correction—is that it seems to me that if it came into effect on January 1, 1966, then if any one of the four preceding issues of a monthly publication violated the exemption clause, it would be prohibited. I think that is the proper explanation, although as I say it is subject to correction. I see the hon. Member is nodding his head, so it appears to be a reasonable explanation.

Mr. Lambert: Just one further point. With regard to the regulations which will be prescribed by the Governor in Council, I realize that the normal procedure would likely be that they would be published in the Canada Gazette. However, in view of the fact that we are stepping out into a new area, I wonder whether we could have an undertaking from the Parliamentary Secretary that when the regulations are proclaimed the Minister of National Revenue will table a copy in the House of Commons, notice of which would then appear in Votes and Proceedings. If this notice appeared in Votes and Proceedings then hon. Members would be alerted and would know just how far the regulations were intended to go.

• (12:00 noon)

It is true that these are published in the Canada Gazette, but there is not as much attention paid to that publication by Members as there is to Votes and Proceedings. If notice was printed in that public document we would have at least that additional notice and would perhaps then be more careful.

Mr. Pennell: I understand the concern of the hon. Member. It has just been brought to my attention by the officials that the regulations may be tabled in the House if so desired, and in view of the expressed desire of the hon. Member I am confident that they will be tabled.

Mr. Baldwin: I should like to comment briefly and ask one or two questions of the Parliamentary Secretary in respect of the particular issue to which my hon. friend from Edmonton West has referred, and that is the matter of these regulations.

Is the Parliamentary Secretary in a position to say whether these regulations will provide that the finding which is to be made will be a finding contained in an order in council, or will it be a finding to be made by a departmental official? I ask this question in respect of Vote 1 and Vote 2. In other words, will these regulations simply lay down the procedure, indicating the means by which a finding will be made, or will they indicate the rights of those involved to appear and make representations?

I ask these questions because there is a very fundamental issue involved here, and I cannot resist the opportunity to refer to the fact that this issue emphasizes the correct position taken on this side of the House when we attempted to provide that there should be a committee of the House to which cases of delegated authority could be submitted from time to time if the necessity arose. Of course that issue has been decided and I am not in a position to reargue it, but the circumstances here emphasize the fact that when you are breaking new ground, you are getting involved in new issues.

I think the issue regarding these regulations is very important in spite of the fact that certain conditions are laid down in the amendment. There is a very large field left open which will have to be dealt with by regulation, and I am anxious to know at this time whether the Parliamentary Secretary can advise us as to what the procedure will be when the regulations are in fact enacted. Can he also inform us as to the method by which these findings will be made?

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I must apologize to the hon. Member for not being able to give him a firm answer in this regard, but I think he appreciates my position. The regulations have yet to be drafted, and I do not know just what form they will take. However, due to the alertness of his colleague, the hon. Member for Edmonton West, these regulations will be tabled and will be open to scrutiny at that time. I am sorry I cannot give a more complete answer.

Mr. Lambert: It may well be that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance is in the position I find myself in, not having a copy of the Customs Tariff Act before me. Certainly I cannot remember them. What are the provisions for appeal in respect of Schedule C? I realize that the regulations may spell this out, but what are the provisions for appeal; and if there are none of a meaningful nature, then we must consider the situation which developed in 1961 when great objection was taken because there was no appeal provided under this particular act in respect of the determination of goods of a class or kind. If there is to be no appeal now, then I wonder what all the hollering was about in 1961, and whether it was not synthetic.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I understand that there is provision for an appeal to the Tariff Board.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. MacNaught thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-120, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PENITENTIARIES

CONSIDERATION BY JOINT COMMITTEE OF SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS

The House resumed, from Monday, May 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. McIlraith (for the Minister of Justice):

Joint Committee on Penitentiaries

That a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to consider the state of penitentiaries under the control of the Government of Canada and the plans of the Government in relation thereto with powers to report from time to time its observations and opinions thereon; send for persons, papers and records; adjourn from place to place; sit during sittings of the House; and print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by the committee, and that Standing Order 66 be suspended in relation thereto;

That 15 Members of the House of Commons, to be designated at a later date, act on behalf of the House as Members of the said committee; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deem advisable, some of their Members to act on the proposed joint committee.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, this subject was last discussed about a month ago, and at that time I said it seemed to me strange that the Government was proposing to set up a parliamentary committee to study the Canadian penitentiary system at the same time that a committee of experts headed by Mr. Justice Ouimet is studying the whole question of correction. It seems to me completely irresponsible on the part of the Government to be planning a major program of building penitentiaries to house people convicted of crimes before it has established just what the whole correctional program is to be.

I am not alone in this feeling, Mr. Speaker. If one reads the speeches which have been made by people who work in this field, and reads the articles which have appeared not only in technical journals but in newspapers and magazines across Canada, he will come to the same conclusion.

It is not often that I find myself in agreement with the Financial Post, but as long ago as August, 1963 that paper carried an article in relation to the whole question of Canadian prisons. That article pointed out several very interesting things. First of all, it stated that the Canadian prison population rose from 22,747 in 1962 to 23,512 in 1963. In the same period it pointed out that Britain's prison population dropped from 31,700 to 29,000. In view of the fact that Britain has a population approximately three times as large as the population of Canada, it is obvious that their approach is much more successful than the approach taken by Canada in this regard.

This article, as carried by the Winnipeg Free Press of November 14, 1964 stated:

Physical conditions in some of our jails (and penitentiaries) are notoriously disgraceful. Overcrowding and poor discipline lead to riot. In Canada the percentage of released prisoners who return to crime and are again locked up is exceptionally high.

It further states:

We have no accepted official philosophy. We do not know whether we are merely trying to deter crime and protect society by isolating lawbreakers or whether our objective, in accordance with modern thought, is rehabilitation.

● (12:10 p.m.)

In November of 1964 a series of articles appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press dealing with the problem of correction and penal reform, written by Mrs. Ellen Simmons, who has given a great deal of study to the question. I want to quote a couple of paragraphs from one article which appeared on November 16, 1964. She said:

What is needed first therefore—before any innovations in penal reform can hope for measurable, lasting success—is a clear, unflinchingly open-eyed and open-minded look at the system, if indeed it may be called a system, in use in Canada today. Specific reforms that have been proposed are meaningful only in the total context of a coherent purposeful philosophy for the treatment of lawbreakers.

She points out some examples of what is wrong and the differences between provinces. I continue quoting:

For example, the use of probation is almost unknown in Prince Edward Island. It is seldom used in Quebec. But in Ontario probation is used in some 21 per cent of cases involving offences against property. Similarly, suspended sentences are used most sparingly in British Columbia, while in Manitoba they are used with a comparatively free hand.

I give these illustrations because it seems to me it is completely wrong for the Government to propose that a parliamentary committee look at the building program when that program has already been decided upon by the Government. When I spoke on this matter over a month ago I mentioned that a judge familiar with the Government's program in Ontario had made a speech in which he said that well over $100 million would be spent for new prisons by the Canadian Government in the next 10 years. I am not opposed to new buildings or the rebuilding of our institutions. Most of them date back many years. Most of them are a disgrace to any civilized country. But surely before going ahead with a program we ought to know what we are doing, what the requirements are and what kind of people are going to be put in the institutions we intend to build.

There is no better illustration of the fact that we do not know these things and have not arrived at any conclusions than the special detention units which are planned and in fact are already being built. I understand that the one in Quebec is going ahead at a great rate. It is not my intention to read into the record again the whole of the telegram sent to the Minister of Justice by the Canadian Corrections Association, but as it is more than a month since I spoke on the matter I should like to read one paragraph:

> These special detention units are completely unacceptable to the Canadian Corrections Association on the basis of scientific evidence related to the effects of psychological and physical isolation. Among other things we fear the deterioration of inmates who are confined in cells without windows.

I had an opportunity to discuss this matter with a psychiatrist who works in Canadian prisons. I am not going to mention his name because he told me that he intended to discuss the matter directly with the Minister of Justice, whom he knows. However, I think I can quote him almost exactly. He said it was his intention to say to the Minister of Justice that on the basis of his experience in working with prisoners who are emotionally and mentally disturbed, it was his view that if a person was not psychotic before entering one of these institutions which the Government is proposing to build he would almost certainly be psychotic by the time he got out. Despite the unanimous advice of experts in the field, the Government and the Minister stubbornly insist on going ahead with the building program. It seems to me that to ask a parliamentary committee to look into these matters when the Government has already indicated to the people interested that they intend to go ahead is really ridiculous and a waste of time.

I want to make a further point with regard to the prison building program. It seems to me and to other people that if we send people to prison we ought to know why we are sending them there. It seems to me that before sending people to prison we should ask ourselves whether it is best for them to be sent to prison or would it be better to try something else. Ontario and British Columbia have been very successful with their systems of probation. People convicted of crimes are placed under the supervision of probation officers rather than being sent to prison.

Rather than a costly program of building institutions for the confinement of people, it seems to me that we should be expanding our probation system. I know that because of divided jurisdiction the matter of probation comes under the provinces, but I can see no reason why the Federal Government should not co-operate financially in a vast expansion of the probation system so the prison population of Canada would go down instead of going up from year to year. I am satisfied, and the experts are satisfied, that the results then would be much better than they have been.

The Minister has appointed a committee to look at the whole question of corrections, and in the resolution now before us he is proposing to appoint a parliamentary committee to look at our prison institutions. If there is one thing we have done in the field of corrections in this country, it has been to appoint royal commissions and committees of experts to look at the problem. But once they have made their reports, which have been excellent, we have promptly forgotten them; they have been filed away to gather dust.

When the Parliamentary Secretary spoke on this subject he referred to the Archambault report. I do not know why he did so when he could have referred to the more recent Fauteux report. I do not want to go into detail with regard to the Fauteux report, but I should like to quote one recommendation which is found on page 87. The Commission recommended as follows:

> Some means should be found whereby the courts, at all levels, may be made more conscious that the true purpose of punishment is the correction of the offender and not mere retribution by society.

That was true when the Fauteux report was published almost 10 years ago, and it is true today. Professor Angus made a speech in Alberta recently in which he was critical of the kind of people who are appointed as judges.

Mr. Lambert: He had holes in his head.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. Member for Edmonton West says he had holes in his head. I happen to agree with Professor Angus. The Minister of Justice was also quite critical of this professor. I want to put on record some of the sentences that have been pronounced in recent days from one end of Canada to the other. I quote from the Globe and Mail of May 12, 1965. The article is rather short and is headed "Quebec Convict Hangs Himself with His Belt". As the story is not long I will put the whole thing on the record. The article reads as follows:

> Police said Saturday that Jean-Guy Genereux, 28, a prisoner at nearby St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, hanged himself with his belt Friday night. Details were sketchy but police said Genereux, serving a 13 year term for the armed robbery of a suburban Verdun hardware store, was found dead in his cell around 10.30 p.m.
> Genereux was sentenced by Sessions Judge Jacques Trahan Wednesday. He admitted robbing the store February 11. He was captured minutes after the robbery and police recovered $10.77 taken from the store and another $7 from a post office on the premises. Before sentencing Genereux, Judge Trahan said: "Making long speeches to people like you is a waste of time and the only way to deal with animals like you is to lock you up for a considerable length of time."

• (12:20 p.m.)

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether Judge Trahan has ever heard of the Fauteux Commission or its recommendations. What kind of impartial, objective attitude is this for a judge to take? Here was a man who appeared in court before Judge Trahan the day after he was apprehended for the tremendous crime of robbery which netted him some $17. He appeared without counsel. I challenge anybody in this House to question my statement that had he had counsel, in any part of Canada, no judge or magistrate would have spoken the way Judge Trahan spoke. What kind of judge is it, what kind of human is it who would speak in such terms of a person who is in trouble? He called this person an animal. Mr. Speaker, I think Judge Trahan should be in prison for that kind of speech. A person with this approach is a disgrace to Canadian courts. When the Minister of Justice and the Member for Edmonton West defend that kind of judge, I do not believe they realize the situation we are facing.

Well, Mr. Speaker, Judge Trahan is not alone. I have before me a photostatic copy of the Montreal Gazette for September 21, 1963 in which there are two stories side by side. One story has this headline: "Crown Witness in $500,000 Theft Gets One Day, Plus Time in Jail". I quote from the article:

Jacques Lajoie, the 38 year old star witness for the crown in a $500,000 bank vault burglary case of April, 1962, pleaded guilty yesterday to being a participant in the spectacular robbery and had a one day prison term tacked on to the 21 months he has been in jail.

It is interesting to note, incidentally, that he appeared before Mr. Justice Roger Ouimet, who is on the committee which has been appointed by the Minister to look into the whole question of corrections. Right below this article there is another story which carries the headline: "$1.65 Loot—10 years". I quote from the article:

Violent and audacious crimes which today have become common place in Montreal will not be stopped by goodwill and kindness any more effectively than would cancer in the human body.

Then I quote from what Judge Claude Wagner said:

[Mr. Orlikow.]

"The courts must act as surgeons," declared Sessions Judge Claude Wagner yesterday afternoon in a judgment which found Philip Moffat, Tasse St., guilty of an armed robbery of a pair of gloves worth $1.65 from a Verdun store.

Judge Wagner sentenced Moffat to ten years in penitentiary.

Again, I am sure Mr. Philip Moffat had no counsel, so that on very short notice he was tried and sentenced to ten years. Anyone who is involved in something like Windfall or something like Texas Sulphur, where the stakes are much greater than $1.65 and run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, can afford eminent counsel who can spin out the time before justice catches up with him. He can get off with a reprimand or a pat on the wrist, it seems to me. The hon. Member for Timiskaming reminds me that he may even keep his judgeship, but that is a subject we can discuss on another occasion.

It seems to me we have a great deal of work to do, and not just the appointment of a committee. I do not want to be accused of being anti-Quebec because the two illustrations I used were from the Province of Quebec. I should like to put on record a few paragraphs from a case in my own city, my own Province, concerning a husband and wife who happened to live in the constituency of my hon. friend the Member for Winnipeg North Centre, and who happened to be Indians. They were charged with a breach of the Child Welfare Act. They appeared before Magistrate Isaac Rice, Q.C. several months ago. Again, they appeared without counsel. I feel this is one of the most disgraceful cases I have ever read, and I should like to read into the record part of the testimony. I quote:

Magistrate: Hold old are you?

A. Thirty-four.

Magistrate: Thirty-four, and you have already brought in 12 children into the world. She is good for another 15 at the rate she is going. You are young enough to produce a lot more—

Then the Crown Prosecutor, Mr. Montgomery, said:

Your Worship, I can make a respectful submission as to how there might be five less children.

The magistrate asked how, and Mr. Montgomery answered:

Under the particular statute, the legislature has provided for a term of imprisonment of up to five years.

What a travesty of justice. Now, is there a single member of this House who can say that if the people appearing before the magistrate had not been Indians living in a slum area of Winnipeg but had been white Anglo-Saxon Protestants living in the constituency of the hon. Member for Winnipeg South, the magistrate would have spoken so irresponsibly?

Mr. Pugh: You mean the Member appeared before the magistrate?

Mr. Orlikow: No, I said if it had been one of her constituents or a constituent of any Member or former Member of Parliament. What I am trying to say is that in this country, unfortunately, we have one law for the well to do, the people who have money and can be represented by counsel, and another, entirely different and much harsher law for people who do not have the money to obtain counsel who will help to defend them and who will also assure that the kind of sentence they get will be much less.

These are things, Mr. Speaker, which people expert in the field have been discussing for a long period of time. These are the things which this Government seems to be ignoring. We have appointed another committee, headed by Mr. Justice Ouimet and composed of some excellent members. I know some of the members and they will not be the kind of rubber-stamp committee which this Government so often wants. I am hopeful, in fact I am certain, they are going to make some excellent recommendations. It seems to me that unless we do a great deal more about the recommendations they are likely to make than past Parliaments have done about the Archambault report and the Fauteux report, Canada will continue to be among the last half dozen of the western industrialized countries in so far as their records in the field of corrections are concerned.

I am not going to oppose the setting up of this committee, because the Government has indicated clearly it intends to proceed. I hope the work of this committee will not be done in a vacuum; that the Government will realize that they cannot simply build prisons without at the same time looking at the whole field of correction, the whole field of probation, sentencing and bail. My colleague the hon. Member for Danforth raised the serious question of bail the other day and received a miserable, disgraceful answer from the Parliamentary Secretary, one of the worst I have heard since I have been in the House. If that is an indication of the seriousness with which the Department regards legitimate questions about the system of corrections in this country, then we are indeed in for some difficult periods. They will be difficult in this House because I can tell the Parliamentary Secretary that if he continues that line in committee—I presume he will be a member—we will have many long hours of sitting. The Members on this side of the House are not going to take the nonsensical kind of argument he produced the other night.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, the committee will work in co-operation with the special committee which the Minister of Justice has appointed. I hope we will get on with the work, and that it will not be years before we can begin the major task of reorganizing the correctional system of this country so the purpose may become rehabilitation rather than punishment, as has been the case for the last 100 years.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I agree with very much of what has been said by the previous speaker. For years we have talked about the shocking state of our penal institutions in Canada. Reports of various commissions and committees have been debated in the House of Commons. The previous speaker mentioned the Archambault report, the report of the Fauteux commission and reports of committees such as the present Government is now instigating. The recommendations contained in all these reports have been abundantly clear. I will refer to them later, though I make special reference in passing to one of the best commission reports ever published in the Dominion of Canada; that is the Archambault report. I think all hon. Members will agree that the subject we are discussing today can be considered in a bipartisan sense.

Much has been done in this field of penal reform in the past few years, but it is still too little. I know that in 1957 the party which I support did its best. There were many accomplishments to our credit in such fields as the ticket of leave and parole system, getting a realistic building program under way, and properly staffing our penal institutions. While I would be the first to admit that we have only made a beginning and, in a sense, a poor beginning, and that far too little has been accomplished, a start has certainly been made in the field of penal reform.

Along with Members opposite I recognize the difficulties which are involved. Sometimes it is very hard in this day and age to rally public opinion behind modern concepts of penology. I believe all governments have encountered this difficulty, but that is no excuse for failure to bring up this subject time and time again on the floor of the House of Commons so that real advances can be made.

I think it is correct to say that in comparison with other countries we in Canada have an unbelievable number of inmates in our prisons; and not only in prisons but in prisons where the conditions are appalling. I will not belabour the House with statistics, but this seems abundantly clear from the figures which are available. It seems to me incredible that in relation to our population we should have such a large prison population both federal and provincial. For one reason or another we have an astonishingly high prison population in Canada compared with other countries in the western world.

We need to build many new penal institutions based on modern concepts. A beginning was made when we were in power, and the present Government is continuing this program and advancing new programs. But not enough has been done. The casual offender must be separated from the hardened criminal. This is a recommendation which has been made for years and years, but it is one which in the truest sense has not been carried out. In the whole field of penology we lack scores of probation and parole officers. Drug addiction and alcoholism have become major problems. We lack treatment centres for those who suffer from both these types of addiction. Many offenders in these categories should be treated immediately in centres where attention is paid to the modern science of psychiatry instead of being sent as they are now to old fashioned prisons. But what are we doing? Recommendations by one commission after another are listened to respectfully, but somehow or other we continue to send these people to old fashioned prisons after offences have been committed.

The consequences are abundantly clear. These people return to society and immediately repeat the same or similar crimes. We lack modern treatment centres, despite the need to send many people to such centres rather than to prison or other institutions built and staffed on archaic lines. Today these people are invariably sent to prisons, at high cost to the Government and at high cost to individual dignity. They are not cured and the public is not protected. Men or women who could be rehabilitated are not rehabilitated. An offender is released from prison and returns to society to commit the same or similar crimes.

I intend to quote some statistics. What are these statistics in Canada today? In 1964 some 74.2 per cent of those in federal penitentiaries had previously been committed to correctional institutions either federal or provincial. Need I say any more about the success of our system, a system of which no Member of this House of Commons should be proud? I do not say this in a party sense. I am sure Members in all corners of this House wish to co-operate in bettering the present system. That is why, I hope, we are setting up the new committee.

In the case of juvenile offenders there is a woeful lack of social welfare workers, judges, probation officers and parole officers. Young offenders, in addition to being segregrated from older and more hardened criminals, must be able to continue their education while in institutions. Upon their release they must be able to re-enter society with every chance of obtaining employment. This means continuing vocational or academic training within the institution. I am glad that some advances have been made in this regard, but these advances have been minimal both when we were in power and under the administration of members opposite.

What is needed is action, and action now, as the hon. Member who spoke previously said so well. I realize it is difficult in a largely materialistic society to get public opinion behind such a program, but it is my hope the Government will realize the real need for action, and action now, rather than wait for the findings contained in yet another report.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Before I go further I want to discuss something which I feel should be placed on the record immediately. Both inside and outside this House of Commons we often get into conversations relating to various aspects of penology; whether it should be rehabilitative or punitive, and that sort of thing. But I think when we consider the success of our system we should have a more objective test. We should ask ourselves what are we doing to protect society; what are we doing to rehabilitate and upgrade, if you will, the prisoner himself; what are we doing to reduce the level of recidivism in this country? If we apply these standards to measure the success of our whole system of penology in Canada we find that we are doing a very poor job.

I think every Member of the Canadian House of Commons should be aware of the following statistics. What percentage of those committed to penal institutions in Canada had a previous commitment to a penitentiary only, namely an institution under federal jurisdiction? In 1961 the figure was 42 per cent; in 1962, 41.3 per cent; in 1963, 41.1 per cent; in 1964, 41.6 per cent. But the following statistics are even more astounding, Sir. What percentage of those committed had previous commitments to any correctional institution, be it federal or provincial? These, Sir, are most appalling statistics. In 1961, 72.2 per cent; in 1962, 76.7 per cent; in 1963, 76.8 per cent; and in 1964, 77.2 per cent.

What does this mean in hard facts? It means that at this moment, on June 18, 1965, in the case of people released from our institutions, be they federal or provincial there is almost an 80 per cent chance that they will go out into society and commit the same or similar crimes. These figures should be really digested by all Members of the House and by the Canadian public. Surely they show that in this area the main things that are good in modern penology are not being done in Canada. In the light of these statistics we are not protecting the public, our women and children and the population in general. Certainly in the light of these statistics we are not rehabilitating offenders, and we are not bringing down the percentage of recidivism in our prison population.

I understand, and support in a sense, the setting up of a committee such as we are discussing today. But surely it will be a committee that will discuss some modern penology concepts; because the statistics and what I have already said show that we in Canada are decades behind in the field of social reform. They show that we have not even begun to move forward in embracing and implementing the major, modern concepts of penology. I simply want to say, Sir, that I fully realize that in a field such as penology, in view of the advances that have been made in the last two decades in psychiatric research and treatment, we are faced with the application of many new and modern concepts, and certainly we should apply them.

Perhaps the Archambault report as such did not make too much reference to these modern concepts which have come to light in the last two decades. But I want to illustrate right now why many people in Canada become cynical about royal commissions, why many people in Canada become cynical about Parliament setting up committees, why many people in Canada become cynical about meeting after meeting, commission after commission, when what is needed is action.

Surely we haven't the nerve to go out and tell the people that a lot is going to be done by a parliamentary committee when the major recommendations of a 1938 royal commission have not even been touched upon or discussed sensibly in this House of Commons.

The hon. Member who just spoke rightfully talked about a more modern inquiry into our penal system, namely the Fauteux Commission. We are now talking in glowing terms about what this parliamentary committee is going to do, but let me take the time of the House for a few moments to discuss some of the major recommendations of the Archambault report. Let us ask ourselves whether they have been truly implemented, and whether we really need a parliamentary committee to tell us what needs to be done today, not tomorrow, in the field of modern penal reform.

This is why the Canadian people become cynical. When a government should act, when a government should move forward almost without debate in the House of Commons, they set up a parliamentary committee or a royal commission. In this case it is even more serious, because anybody who has read the Archambault report would recognize and understand that it is one of the greatest, most important and best drafted royal commission reports in the whole history of this nation.

I believe that a great deal of importance should be attached to a parliamentary committee if it is going to act. But let us briefly search our consciences and look over some of the basic recommendations of the Archambault Royal Commission report. Then let us ask ourselves honestly whether these recommendations have been carried out. Let us ask ourselves, do we need another parliamentary committee in order to tell us what needs to be done?

I will enter a caveat here, Sir, and say there are some detailed matters which this committee should consider; there are some modern concepts that the committee should deal with. I refer to concepts which have come to light since the Archambault report and its recommendations were drafted. But in the next few minutes I am going to talk about the necessity to act today, not tomorrow, on some of the major recommendations of this report. Surely, Sir, when I read some of the recommendations drafted in the year 1938 by this eminent gentleman and his assistants on that Royal Commission it will be abundantly clear why so many Canadians become cynical about royal commissions and parliamentary committees.

What did the Commissioner say, Sir, about the general approach to penology as such? He said in his recommendations that our whole concept should be based on the protection of society. Surely I have given statistics which show that we are not protecting society very well under our present penal system. He talked about the safe custody of inmates. I have no statistics in this connection, Sir. I am sure we have as many or as few escapes as other countries. Then the commissioner spoke about strict but humane discipline. I do not know how we compare with other countries in this regard. Then he dealt with the reform and rehabilitation of prisoners. I have already said that we have done a woeful job in this regard.

What do these recommendations go on to say regarding the classification of prisoners? With the modern buildings to house inmates being built at the present time under the direction of the Department of Justice, advances are going to be made in this direction. But surely not enough advances are being made; we are moving too slowly. I think primarily of St. Vincent de Paul and Kingston penitentiaries. If more Canadians were made to visit these institutions the Minister and his assistants would surely have a much easier time in geting public opinion behind the important work which I know the Government is trying to do in this regard.

How far have we gone in the last 30 years in carrying out these recommendations, and what will a further committee of this House be able to tell us about classification of prisoners? The Archambault commission reported that a complete revision of classification of prisoners should be made, with provision for a thorough medical and psychiatric examination. Their next recommendation is:

> The necessary legislation should be enacted to provide for sentencing habitual offenders to preventive detention in a separate institution to be provided for that purpose.

Thirty years after this recommendation was made we are barely beginning to scratch the surface, and now all we are doing is setting up another parliamentary committee. They further recommended:

> All incorrigible and intractable prisoners in the penitentiaries should be segregated in one institution.
> Separate institutions, based on the principles of the English Borstal system, should be established to permit of special treatment being given to young offenders between sixteen and twenty-one years of age.

We have made a beginning here, but only a very small beginning. The recommendation continues:

> There should also be a classification centre and three grades in each unit, each grade to be separately located and not contiguous to another. Two units should be established at once, one in the Province of Ontario, and one in the province of Quebec—

The next recommendation is:

> All insane prisoners should be entirely removed from the prison population and treated in hospitals for the insane.

This bears on my recommendation that something be done to fill the great need today for psychiatric units, not only for the insane but also for drug addicts and alcoholics, instead of just throwing them into prison and hoping that after five or six years they will be able to emerge into public life without having had any treatment. Then it is recommended that:

> The mentally deficient should be segregated in the ordinary institutions under the direction of a trained psychiatrist.
> Intractable and recidivist drug addicts should be removed on the order of the prison commission to the prison for habitual offenders.
> A scheme of classification should be established in each prison, having regard to the previous record, social habits, physical condition, educational attainments, aptitudes, and suitable training for future employment, of individual prisoners.
> A grades and merit system for reformable prisoners, modelled on the system in use in England, should be established.

Let us ask ourselves, as we pause for a moment after looking at these recommendations, how far have we gone in even scratching the surface and making headway in this regard?

What does the Archambault Commission have to say about education? Since this report was published I think all hon. Members will admit that we have made some progress in this field, but it is such little progress that we should all be ashamed of it. It was recommended that:

> A complete reorganization of the educational system should be made in accordance with the recommendations contained in chapter VIII of this report, with special consideration for the young offenders, more frequent library privileges, and a simplified system of book distribution.

Then further recommendations were made regarding prison employment, and far reaching recommendations were made regarding amendments to the Criminal Code, rehabilitation and reports to sentencing judges.

Couple these recommendations, Mr. Speaker, with the general consideration I touched upon in my opening remarks, namely the fact that it is patently obvious in Canada today that there is a great lack of social welfare courts, social welfare judges, probation and parole officers. There is a great lack of the machinery needed to tackle the deep problems of juvenile deliquency. This we all know. We all know also about the major recommendations not of the Fauteux report but of the report to which I have referred, which recommendations are almost 30 years old. However, I support the setting up of this committee because I think it can deal usefully with some of the modern concepts which have come to light during the last 5, 10 or 15 years.

However, let this parliamentary committee not be an excuse for delaying action on the recommendations, not of the Fauteux report but of the Archambault report, one of the greatest royal commission reports in the history of this nation. If we do, Mr. Speaker, once more the Canadian public will have ample reason to become increasingly cynical about royal commissions and parliamentary committees. Because while the committee should and can do useful work, I hope I pointed out that what is really needed is action now, not tomorrow. We have no excuse for putting off action in these major areas of social and penal reform. Let us not kid ourselves about that, Mr. Speaker.

What is involved here is not a small amount of money. Millions and millions of dollars are involved. I can assure hon. gentlemen opposite, and I think I speak for Members in all corners of the House, that if they move forward in a real and dynamic way with the major recommendations of the Archambault report they will have the wholehearted support of Members in all corners of the House.

Some members of the Canadian public have the archaic idea that offenders should be thrown into old fashioned prisons and should stay there. On humanitarian and religious grounds alone this is not a very nice thing to say; but surely by talking about the rehabilitation of prisoners and the protection of society, and by the figures and statistics relating to recidivism, we have already shown that the system we have employed with such bad results for a number of decades has not worked at all. This is one instance where those of us who cry out, I think responsibly, for more reform should be listened to. I can assure the Government that if they move forward in this regard they will have our support.

Again I say I am sure this committee will receive widespread support in the House of Commons as it gets down to work on some of the developments which have taken place in later years. But let us all get together and move forward now in areas of reform which for too long have been neglected.

• (1:00 p.m.)

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the notice of motion of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) is most important, because it concerns the setting up of a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons to examine the question of penitentiaries coming under the jurisdiction of the Canadian government.

In 1946, when I was a young member—it does not mean that I am an old member now —in 1946, some members of the opposition and even some members of Mr. Mackenzie King's government spoke about setting up a committee to consider the situation of penitentiaries under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Parliament.

Then came the St. Laurent government, followed by the Conservative government, the Tory government, and every time, every year, every session, notices of motions were introduced to establish a committee to consider the penitentiary situation. We have been planning to consider this matter for 20 or 25 years and no solution has ever been found to settle this problem.

However, some people are considering the matter. We know that the situation existing in penitentiaries is being considered. Studies have already been made by experts in this field who concluded, as mentioned earlier by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey), that penitentiaries must be reformed in order to permit the rehabilitation of prisoners and convicts.

Penitentiaries could be greatly improved, made fit for occupation, or even more appealing, so that prisoners may be treated as human beings and not as animals.

We could, for instance, organize penitentiaries in such a way as to enable convicts to do some productive and useful work and it would be less costly for the government and the Canadian taxpayers to keep them in prison. Thus trade schools could be set up in penitentiaries to enable prisoners to learn a trade so that they would contribute to their rehabilitation after their release. But nothing is done in that regard.

Since prisoners are also human beings, we could also provide penitentiaries with recreation halls, swimming pools, theatres, etc. to help inmates get good training and learn how to live decently in a normal world.

Earlier I heard a member of the N.D.P. say there was a law for the rich and a law for the poor. A great many things need to be reformed in addition to the penitentiaries to allow the rehabilitation of young people.

Not very long ago I had to do with two prisoners who were not convicts but two young men of 19 and 20 caught red-handed in a most reprehensible act. They were arrested in September 1964 and brought before the court, which decided to send them for trial. On account of the law's delays and its lack of organization, the trials may take place in October 1965 or in the spring of 1966. In the meantime, these two young men are in the Ville-Marie jail in Témiscamingue county. Bail has been set at $10,000, but the two men remain in jail because such an amount is not to be found on every doorstep. Those two young men have been jailed without trial; they are still waiting to appear in court because of the slowness of the judicial process in the province of Quebec.

Reforms are needed. There is a young man of 20 kept in jail pending his trial and from whom much too high a bail is requested. Because his parents cannot afford to put up bail, the young man stays in jail for a year, a year and a half, without having been sentenced to jail. And some think that the young man is thus being helped toward rehabilitation in society.

It is a flagrant abuse to treat 20-year olds that way, if we want to rehabilitate them; but if we could not care less, that is a different story; let us continue drifting in the same direction.

There is a great number of young men like those in the country. Once in jail, they are bored to death because practically nothing is organized to take care of them. They are left idle. If there was something for them to do in jail, I think that would greatly help them toward rehabilitation.

It is strange to see to what extent society is concerned about these people when, for instance, we read in the newspapers every day that a murder has been committed here or there, that hooded bandits have struck here or there, that gangsters are operating here or there, just to create sensation. But, when will the newspapers come up with a solution to make the rehabilitation of those young people easier? Wrongdoings are being emphasized but rehabilitation per se is not mentioned.

To a certain extent I blame the newspapers for making so much out of those things, of those murders here and there, of all those infractions, without ever coming up with a constructive answer. Circulation is the sole concern of some newspapers: to collect 7 cents or 10 cents per issue. Our young people are sacrificed in the name of all that publicity given to depravity.

It is time for the government to put an end to its motions for setting up fact-finding committees. The situation has been studied, considered and as the member for Brome-Missisquoi pointed out a while ago, the time has come to take action, to reorganize those penitentiaries, to revise our methods of rehabilitation with regard to our young Canadian prisoners or delinquents. They may be a bad lot, but still there is a little good in each and everyone of them. It is a matter of finding it and helping them toward rehabilitation, toward confidence in themselves. This confidence they can feel only when society makes it possible for them to do so. When that day comes our penal institutions will work constructively, enabling human beings to become once more honourable and reasonable.

We therefore express the wish that the government take action instead of being content with setting up fact-finding committees. We have had enough of committees. Let us act now and give our Canadians that to which they are entitled.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to intervene in this debate, but before saying that which I wish to say I should like to associate myself with the excellent speeches that have been made by the hon. Member for Winnipeg North, the hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi and the hon. Member for Villeneuve, who has just taken his seat. I think these were excellent speeches, and I should like to be associated with them.

• (1:10 p.m.)

The comment I should like to make, however, is that it seems to me the limited terms of reference contained in this resolution are in effect a reflection upon the Members of the House and the members of the other place. I cannot understand why, when this tremendously important subject of penitentiaries and penal reform is to be reviewed by a joint committee, the terms of reference should be limited in the manner they are in this resolution. The resolution says that the subject matter referred to the joint committee is "to consider the state of penitentiaries . . .and the plans of the Government in relation thereto".

What is meant by "the state of penitentiaries"? To begin with, this is a phase which is virtually meaningless. I would assume that the "state of penitentiaries" meant a study of the buildings. Is it reasonable that Members of the House and the other place should form a committee and be asked to go into the sole matter of the buildings, and not into the far wider matters that are of great concern to the Members of this House?

As we well know, the Minister of Justice announced the terms of reference of a special committee on corrections, and in that connection the terms of reference include a study of the broad field of corrections in its widest sense from the initial investigation of an offence to the final discharge of a prisoner from imprisonment or on parole, including such subjects as arrest, bail, representation in court, conviction, probation, sentencing, training, medical and psychiatric attention, parole, pardon and so on. These are the broad, extensive and proper terms of reference that are given to this committee—a distinguished committee, it may be said, of people who are not Members of this House or of the other place.

But when it comes to asking Members of Parliament to look into this subject, the terms of reference are restricted to the state of penitentiaries. I do not suppose there is a single Member of the House who is not fully aware of the fact that the provision of buildings may be of importance, but it is of comparatively small importance compared with the wide number of matters referred to this outside committee.

Mr. Winch: There is the question of staff.

Mr. Brewin: For example, as the hon. Member for Vancouver East points out, questions concerning staff were raised in the House a month ago. Of far greater importance than the objective presumably set out in the resolution is the objective of assisting in the reform and rehabilitation of those who get into trouble, limiting the number of those who become repeaters, and making our whole penal system efficient as well as just in its application to those who have fallen afoul of the law. Yet what do we have here? The House is being asked to set up a joint committee with members of the other place, and the members of this committee are to spend their time looking into the question of buildings and not deal with these broader questions.

It seems to me this is the wrong approach. I am satisfied that in all parts of the House there are Members perfectly capable of receiving information from those who are experienced in this field and then making recommendations to the House for effective action. Reference has been made to the Archambault report. I know a little about the Archambault report because Mr. Justice McRuer, then J. C. McRuer, was my senior partner and he spent about a year and a half with Mr. Justice Archambault as a member of that commission. They travelled all over Canada and Europe and made what has been described as a monumental report. They took a lot of time out of the lives of very busy and very competent men. They produced an excellent report but, as the hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi has told the House, many of the recommendations in that report have not been carried out yet. Why not? Because governments of the day were not ready to spend the money to do the things necessary to carry out the recommendations of that report. The same is true of the report of the royal commission headed by Mr. Justice Fauteux.

We do not need more outside commissions. It seems to me that if we are to get action on these things we need to solicit and arouse the support and the knowledge of Members of all parties in the House and in the other place so they will bring constant pressure to bear upon the Government to carry out some of these things that the experts suggest.

Is the report that eventually will be brought in by Mr. Justice Ouimet and his commission on these very same subjects to be pigeonholed like these other reports, and nothing done about it? I suggest that one of the ways to ensure that it cannot be pigeonholed is to have a committee of the House concerned with the broad range of this subject and determined, when these experts report, to see that what can be carried into legislation will be carried into legislation. It would be very much easier to do so if instead of Members making occasional speeches in the House, there was a continuing committee of those who over the years have qualified themselves particularly to deal with this subject.

Many other matters related to this question have come before the House from time to time. I myself brought in a resolution dealing with legal aid in criminal cases. It seems to me that is the sort of matter that should be dealt with by a committee of the House. We have recently amended our rules of procedure, I think very wisely, to create a larger number of standing committees to try to elicit from Members of the House, be they backbenchers or whoever they may be and no matter to what party they belong, a more continuing attention to the various subjects that face Parliament and the people of Canada.

I have no doubt that this resolution will be passed because we are all in favour of it, but even at this late stage I would urge the Government to give serious consideration to enlarging the terms of reference of this committee so that all these vitally important matters may be looked into. I say "vitally important" not in terms of dollars and cents, although even in those terms our system is obviously wasteful and inadequate, but in terms of human lives that can be aided and assisted.

I think the machinery of the committee that will be created by this resolution ought to be used not just to inquire into something called "the state of penitentiaries", whatever that may be—I have not heard any representative of the Government explain what this drafting means—but to inquire into the same sort of broad field which has been included in the terms of reference of this other expert committee. That expert committee will only sit for the time being. No doubt it will make a particular report on some of the things that come before it. But I say it is the Members of the House of all parties who have a responsibility in this field, and I hope the Parliamentary Secretary and the Solicitor General will convey to the Government and the others concerned our view that the terms of reference here are unduly narrow and restrict the opportunities of those who will be members of this committee to make the real contribution of which they are capable in this field.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Minister himself is not in the House, although I agree he cannot be here all the time. I think the establishment of this committee is very important, and in my opinion the Minister should be prepared to justify why a committee of Members of the House and of the other place is being established to give some direction with regard to the buildings and physical requirements of the penitentiaries service. I suggest that probably the reason for the establishment of the committee is that a number of us had an opportunity to visit some of the prisons, and the reports we gave indicated a complete lack of modernization as well as conditions that would not be supported by the general public.

I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, whether this committee will serve any purpose. I am inclined to believe it will not if it is going to concern itself only with the building of penitentiaries. I believe the parliamentary committee will not be able to make any recommendations that will have any results for many years in the field of penitentiary construction. It is safe to say that the penitentiaries branch is much farther ahead in this field than Members of Parliament or the general public. The prisons we are building now, particularly in the third category, the minimum security category, are model type prisons. I believe also that the medium security institutions are not bad institutions in relation to the design and construction advocated by those who have been interested in penology for a long time.

I believe there is considerable difference of opinion in so far as maximum security institutions are concerned. It is in these institutions that the difficulty arises because, in many cases, men are confined to them for long periods of time. The abuses which took place, and which I presume led to the establishment of this committee, occurred in maximum security institutions. No one who is qualified to discuss this subject would disagree with the statements made by various people who have visited maximum security institutions, pointing out that they were a disgrace and something must be done.

One thing I find difficult to understand is that when we build new institutions, particularly of the maximum security variety, we do not place them in areas conducive to the work of rehabilitation. I believe it is generally agreed by all those interested in this subject that maximum security penitentiaries must be close to psychiatrists, psychoanalysts and others who work in that field. When a person is sent to a pententiary it is not like sending him to take a course or putting him on a farm to enable him to become rehabilitated as part of society. I believe those concerned with maximum security institutions have to keep this in mind.

There is another committee that has been set up, and I think it is a very worth-while committee. I am in agreement with those who say that we in Parliament should not try to satisfy the public outcry that has occurred in recent months merely by establishing another committee. I agree that the Fauteux commission did a very good job, as did the Archambault commission when they investigated the whole penal system. They made recommendations that are probably as modern in terms of penal systems as any in the world today. They are still valid. However, the Government has done nothing about them.

This fact raises the matter of public apathy. I hope some other Members of Parliament have listened, as I have, in the last two days to a radio program in Ottawa called "The Open Line". This program has been discussing the problem of conjugal visits to penitentiaries. I raised this question in Parliament a number of years ago, and it resulted finally in a very good article in Chatelaine magazine. I was pleased that it should be given coverage in that type of magazine, because I feel it is a problem in which women are vitally interested and which affects women perhaps more than men, although women form a small percentage of our prison population.

I was interested in the discussion that arose from the Chatelaine article and which followed my introduction of the subject in Parliament, at which time I was hooted and told I was irresponsible. I have been interested in this radio program which during the last two or three days has been discussing the matter of conjugal visits, because it affects the whole penal reform system in Canada. I have been shocked and disgusted by the attitude of the Canadian people as indicated by this program. Many of them have said "Let us punish the prisoners. We did not send them there for a picnic; we sent them there to be punished". Why do these people not tell the Government that what they want to do is reinstate the beatings and the rat-infested prisons which we have tried to eliminate. These goody-goody people who have been on this program have talked about the Bible in terms of an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth; you steal a loaf of bread and you are put in prison for years.

I am shocked and ashamed of the people in Ottawa who have that attitude. These people have a right to adopt whatever attitude they wish, but I am shocked and ashamed of them. All the reading I have done about prison reform indicates that even a backward country like Mexico goes much further than I would go. I believe that while we should rehabilitate the people in prison, we should not necessarily pamper them. I believe that advancement toward rehabilitation should be a reward, and that these visits of the family to the prison should be a reward.

The Mexican Government are more far-sighted than we are because they view this as a right, not a reward. You do not give this as a reward for good behaviour; every prisoner, no matter how bad or what his crime or what his present condition or present attitude toward reform may be, is entitled to the same consideration. They even bring in prostitutes for the single people. They bring in girl friends if the girl friends want to go into the prison to visit their boy friends. They really repeat, on a limited scale, the type of relationship a person has outside, no matter what that relationship may be. I was interested in one of the questions which the radio announcer put yesterday to the woman who said you certainly could not bring prostitutes into a jail. He asked her whether she was aware of the homosexual problem in the jails and the lady said, yes, of course she was aware of it. He then asked whether, if her son were in jail, and if bringing in prostitutes would prevent her son being involved in a homosexual relationship, she would agree to such a course. She said: "If it was my son, I would certainly agree." I suggest that if it is good in an individual case the principle is good enough to deserve some consideration.

I do not wish to leave the impression that I or those responsible for the operation of our penal institutions would go this far. I think we are a very backward nation, socially, and I do not think we are prepared to take this step. Most of us in this chamber are probably as backward as the average man or woman, and would not support it. The countries which have taken action of this kind have done so without much detriment to themselves or to the institutions, as far as I can find out. I would have expected nothing different.

I am pleased the officials of our own penitentiary branch have begun letting prisoners go home for two or three days. Recently this has been accepted by regulations and the Commissioner can now allow people to go home for as long as 15 days. The warden can grant leave of absence up to three days. These privileges have been granted for funerals and recently they have been extended. I am still old fashioned enough to think we should use a system of this type as a reward to prisoners for accepting some of the benefits of rehabilitation.

I do not want to deal particularly today with the problem of homosexuals or the provision of facilities for conjugal relations in a prison cottage area. But I am sure anyone who is in his right mind would agree there is an advantage in extending privileges to prisoners while they are still under some degree of control by the institution. I can remember, when I was visiting St. Vincent de Paul talking to a young fellow who told me: I am not going to get into any trouble here, nor do I want to go out on parole or anything of that kind, because they have to release me in three months and as soon as I get out I am going to kill three people. I do not want anything to interfere with that plan.

Mr. Woolliams: Did you report that threat to the Department of Justice?

Mr. Peters: The Deputy Warden was there and heard what was said to me. There was nothing unusual about that statement. I believe he would have told the Warden—the man I think he was going to murder after he got out. I was particularly interested in not knowing. But after this man served his full sentence he would be set at complete liberty without the necessity for supervision or for working in co-operation with probation or classification officers. He need have nothing to do with them.

I think Members of Parliament should be concerned about these matters. On the other hand, I think the proposed Committee will be a waste of time if it is only going to design buildings and engage itself in architectural shenanigans in a field its Members know nothing about. It would be safe for me to say, for example, that we should double the size of the cells and instal better conveniences. As for the design of penitentiaries, that is another matter. I do not think the Committee will go to the trouble of finding out a great deal about systems other than those in use in North America. Maybe the Committee will go out to Saskatchewan where some architects have taken the drug LSD to help them design a mental institution—they took this hallucination producing drug so that they could put themselves in the position of the inmates and find out exactly what the inmates might prefer, and what would be most conducive to their rehabilitation. If they were to do that, I think the committee would be "nuts". There is a better way of doing it and possibly we should allow the architects to continue to deal with these matters.

An hon. Member: Does the hon. Member think we need take any drugs?

Mr. Peters: I am sure that Members of Parliament do not tend toward hallucinations, but they have other disadvantages. We are pretty backward in looking forward in terms of penal reform. The Minister himself has indicated that this is the case. In taking this attitude we are probably doing no more than reflect the views of the public generally. When a matter affects them, it is one thing; when it affects someone else, it is something quite different.

I was interested in the similarity between two statements made on the radio program yesterday, one by a prisoner who had been in an institution for six years and another by a guard who had been a guard in a Federal penitentiary for a number of years. Each of these men adopted the archaic attitude that prisons must be tougher, that the food should be inferior and that conditions generally should be worse in order to assure the effectiveness of the deterrent. If this is the attitude of the public, obviously it will be very difficult to get anything done in the way of reforms. But I think Members of Parliament have an obligation to be more far-sighted than the public generally, and offer leadership in these fields. I do not believe the Government is giving any particular leadership, but I appreciate this fact: The more one gets to know the people in the Penitentiaries Branch the more credit must go, I think, to a Government of long ago which in a subtle way must have taken some of the expressions found in the reports of these various commissions and committees and applied them through the personnel in the Penitentiaries Branch. If Members of Parliament really knew some of the things which are going on in the penitentiaries they would be shocked, because I do not think they would be prepared to go as far as some of the officials have gone. I think these men should be congratulated on taking the chances they have taken in putting into effect measures of penal reform with which, I am sure, some Members of Parliament would not agree.

Another of the radio discussions concerned the birth of a child to a woman who had visited her husband in one of the penitentiaries. The public was concerned about this, but its concern appeared to centre on who should be responsible for the support of the infant. Should it be supported by the province, which has responsibility for the maintenance of the family while the husband was in jail, or should it be the responsibility of the Federal Government because the Federal prison authorities had somehow turned their backs during the woman's visit? Surprisingly enough the public did not know that the Federal Government was in any case paying 80 per cent of the cost of caring for that family and for the child, no matter which authority might have to make the particular welfare arrangements. So the question of which authority would assume responsibility was largely hypothetical. This program has thrown a good deal of light on public opinion, a factor which is often difficult to ascertain.

I think the Government should now give consideration to some of the things they have learned in this way. Perhaps it should sample public opinion in some way. If they did this, they would realize the crying need for this committee to have much broader grounds so that Members themselves would get some insight of our whole penal system and its operation. Then Members would have more knowledge of the operation of penal reform. They would be able to examine the results of some of the experiments that have already taken place in the federal penitentiaries system and the experiments that have taken place in countries more enlightened than ours. They would then have the opportunity and responsibility of building up public opinion to accept the changes that the Government is willing to accept and implement as soon as the people are willing to accept them.

This may not happen, Mr. Speaker. This Government is without doubt the most conservative, with a small "C", Government that I have seen for a long time. They want to establish a committee to do these things and they have taken the matter out of Parliament, so that Members of Parliament will only know the results when the report is brought in a number of years from now. I believe the Government has a responsibility to allow Members of Parliament to gain the knowledge that can be obtained from this committee. Members of Parliament would then have a responsibility to help develop public opinion. It is really not good enough to be willing, through the back door, to establish by regulation some of these things. It is important that the public know what they are and are enlightened enough to demand the rehabilitation of prisoners.

I say this, Mr. Speaker, because it is a fact that if the prisoner returning to his community is not accepted by that community and cannot fit into the community again, he is not rehabilitated, no matter what has been done for him in a penitentiary in terms of readjusting his social and psychological outlook in order to solve the problem that put him into the penitentiary in the first place. You may correct this in the penitentiary; you may find that the classification officers indicate that rehabilitation is possible—but if you put this man into a community that will not allow rehabilitation, you really have not accomplished anything at all. I think the Government is being very narrow-minded and they are certainly very conservative in not allowing Members of Parliament to obtain a better insight of our whole penal reform system.

We should also talk about the guards. For many years we had, without doubt, the same type of guards in our institutions as we have had prisoners. You could change the uniform and put the prisoner inside and the guard outside, and as long as he could beat the prisoner or the prisoner could beat him it would not make much difference which one was inside the uniform. Keep the gates shut and keep the whole shooting match inside. One person went there voluntarily and the other was put there, but otherwise there isn't much difference between them. In recent years this has completely changed. This type of guard has not completely disappeared, but my experience is that we have a completely different type of guard today and we also have a completely different type of prisoner in many cases. They have become much smarter. I could name several prisoners who were considered to be almost uneducated but who were not uneducated at all. I am thinking of John Darrell Peters, or whatever his name is, who handled his case with great success all across this nation. His case has been in most of the Provinces; he has appealed and presented a highly documented legal case.

An hon. Member: Is he any relation?

Mr. Peters: He is no relative of mine. I only learned of his case through the publicity we have received in this House on a number of occasions. I should also point out that I do not think he is a relative of the Liberal organizer who became notorious for bringing his friends over from Scotland a few years ago. I only use him as an example. I think the guards have become smarter and the prisoners have become better educated because of the facilities which have been provided in our prisons.

I think the public should be aware of the other problems in this field. The hon. Member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) mentioned something that has always shocked me. I refer to the difference in sentences and the political orientation of the judge rather than a legal orientation. I might say that I have also had experience in court, but not on the same side of the fence as my learned friend from Greenwood. I have heard a magistrate say some of the things that the hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) mentioned. I can remember a magistrate standing up when he had to dismiss a charge against me and saying that there was no evidence to warrant a conviction or to justify the case going any further, but the work that I had been engaged in for the previous two months was, I think it was something like "nefarious and a disgrace to the nation". He used many other adjectives of that nature. I personally didn't think it was so bad; I had been a candidate for the C.C.F. at that time and was defeated two days before the trial by something like 500 votes. I had also been for some time a leader for the Steelworkers in a strike against the mining companies. I didn't think that was too bad, either. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I did not refer to the fact that the magistrate was secretary-treasurer of the mine that was having all the difficulty and really was not too impartial in any way, shape or form, as far as the whole mess was concerned.

Therefore I agree that justice should be dispensed equally and should be impartial and non-political. I have had quite a number of instances brought to my attention of persons being convicted who, if they had had any kind of lawyer to defend themselves, might have got off. These people have received very severe sentences simply because they were not defended. I remember the statement made by my hon. friend from Danforth (Mr. Scott), who said that there is nothing in the whole penal reform system or in the whole judicial system that can protect a person against a bad lawyer. This is perhaps a fairly strong statement, but I believe it is also fairly accurate. Often people involved in very serious crimes have to accept a young lawyer who knows absolutely nothing about the type of law he is going to be presenting and has had absolutely no experience in that type of legal work. He may have articled with a legal firm doing a completely different type of work than that involved in the defence he has to put forward for some young criminal.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Woolliams: It is worse if they have an old lawyer who looks as though he might know something. That is more dangerous.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. Member a question? Is he going to support or oppose the setting up of this parliamentary committee?

• (1:50 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it matters whether it is set up or not. I am not really much in favour of it. I am not opposed to it, if Members of Parliament can learn anything by discussing the blueprints for new prisons and their locations. I would like to ask the hon. Member who has asked the question not to forget what happened when politicians became involved in the new jail that was going to be built in Cornwall. This would probably highlight the situation as far as politicians are concerned and we would lose all the advantages expected from new penitentiaries. But this is only a vehicle to enable us to talk about some matters of penal reform which in my opinion would not even be considered by the committee.

Mr. Winch: Would the hon. Member permit another question. Can I ask the hon. Member for Timiskaming, who sits right behind me, whether he did not learn a lot about our penitentiaries system when as a Member of the House of Commons he visited penitentiaries and saw the conditions in them. Did he not think that if more Members visited these institutions and became interested in recidivism it might be of some value in making recommendations in regard to the subject of penology?

Mr. Peters: Yes; but I would also qualify my answer to the extent of saying that I also learned a lot more when I went around a penitentiary on my own than I did on two conducted tours. The only reason I learned very much about the penitentiary was because I consulted an inmate and he told me where I should go. The same is not true of a conducted tour, such as the one some hon. Members were taken on, a short while after my visit. In fact, the highlight of this tour was the statement made after the tour by the Minister.

Mr. Knowles: If you spent a period there you would learn even more.

Mr. Peters: Someone says you should spend some time in the pen to learn about it, but I have never found it that hospitable an institution to spend more than a day or two there. Personally, I think it would be pretty unnerving, even if you were a newspaperman, or as a Member of Parliament, to listen to all the noises at night in these institutions after the lights are turned off.

My real appeal to the Government is that they reconsider the limits they have placed on the terms of reference of the Committee and to broaden them. Matters such as parole, remissions, bail, supply of legal counsel, that very large and not well known field of the care of youthful offenders and their segregation in the whole judicial process from the time they are arrested until the time they are rehabilitated, the homosexual problem, permitting visits by wives of inmates, should in my opinion be brought before the committee so that immediate attention may be given to them.

I do not see why the Government should be scared of suggestions made by Members of Parliament on the basis of evidence available to them from former reports and the day to day operation of the new Committee which has been set up, unless, of course, the Government is of the opinion that the public is not ready to have the spotlight of public attention directed at these problems. If the Government, through this Committee, had a national program similar to the open line broadcasts over the radio, then in my opinion they would not find it nearly so hard to convince the public that changes do need to be made, rather than keep these matters in the dark.

I would see a Parliamentary Committee consisting of Members of Parliament and Members of the Senate turning the spotlight of public attention on problems which we think should be solved. If we only send Members of Parliament to prisons in order to examine them, each Member of Parliament will come back with an armful of smuggled literature and letters. And if they declare that they will return to the prison later, the supply of this material will increase tenfold. This will put a Member of Parliament into the position of judge and jury, causing him to make a number of decisions which I do not think he is capable of making.

Mr. Winch: That is not true.

Mr. Peters: My hon. friend says that it is not true. I suggest that for the last 20 years or more he has been making such decisions and has become probably the best known friend of prisoners from coast to coast. In my opinion, this course of action has taken up a lot of his time and effort and on many occasions has brought him a lot of grief and heart searching. This has been to his credit, but I am sure it is something which most hon. members would not wish to take on.

In closing I would ask the Government to give consideration to withdrawing this resolution and substituting one in much wider terms which will enable the Committee to look into the whole matter of penal reform. I should like to see a Committee set up to go into this whole question, be prepared to sit between sessions, to visit institutions in other parts of the country, to have meetings with the John Howard Society, the Elizabeth Fry Society, with universities connected with penitentiaries, with people connected with psychiatry, psychoanalysis, psychologists, sociologists, the judiciary, legal branches, Bar Associations, and so on. This committee would have the advantage of visiting these organizations and its Members would have a rounded out attitude toward what to do with any prisoner from the time he is arrested till the time he re-enters society.

It is my opinion that the average Canadian, if he is made aware of the problems in our penitentiaries, will be interested in the process of rehabilitation which must be the aim of our penitentiaries system. If we only lock people up and give expression to the belief of what I hope is a very limited number of people who consider penal institutions merely as a method of punishment, namely an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, and we are not able to convince the Canadian people that there is much more to the problem than this, then we have failed, and failed miserably.

If the Government broaden this Committee's terms of reference they will find great cooperation from Members on both sides of the House toward establishing the rehabilitation of those who have been guilty of offences. It is not good enough to say that those who are rich will receive consideration; those who are poor should also receive justice.

In closing I should like to refer to a letter I received yesterday which has caused me and a lot of other people with whom I have raised the matter a great deal of concern. It is in connection with the Nicholas case, a matter which I raised some time ago. Young Nicholas is quite happy with the fact that the Solicitor

General has, by decree or whatever it is, reduced by half the sentence which was imposed on him. A representative of the John Howard Society went to see him a few weeks ago.

• (2:00 p.m.)

This is a man who, following a riot at St. Vincent de Paul, was almost beaten to death by the guards. When I saw him last he was in a highly nervous state. His mental state was such that he was not even allowed to go out on his own. When he described his experiences he tore off his shirt and threw himself on the floor as though he was experiencing the beating again.

That man has since been transferred to Kingston, he has gained 40 pounds in weight and his mental attitude has completely changed. If you mention the subject of parole to him he invariably asks how he can be paroled when he is innocent of the crime for which he was sentenced.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. gentleman that his time has expired.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in this debate, but as a practising lawyer, like others, I could not help being moved by the speech of the hon. Member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). The consideration and study of penitentiaries as they now exist is one thing which should be considered by a committee, but another committee should consider the whole question of penal reform. I have no doubt that the proposed Committee will consider plans for penitentiary buildings, and the present condition of penitentiaries, and will arrive at some conclusions as to what should be done. I think the hearings of this committee will provide an opportunity for members of the Civil Service in positions of administration to present their views and ideas in respect of improving our correctional system. The opinions of those people are valuable.

The proposed Committee will have the power to travel to see at first hand the conditions of our penitentiaries. I suggest that they should first travel throughout the municipalities and consider such things as day nurseries, the amount of money spent on day nurseries, and the number of working mothers which take advantage of such facilities, and relate that information to the incidence of crime. We should not close our eyes to the number of working mothers who put their children in these day nurseries. This Committee should also consider Juvenile Courts in the various municipalities to determine how efficient they are and how qualified are their staffs. The committee should also go to the various schools in the municipalities and find out how many psychiatrists are assigned to assist in solving the problems of many of these school children. It is my understanding that one psychiatrist is available for about every 10,000 pupils. There is a tremendous shortage of psychiatrists in this field. This Committee should go to the law societies to find out how many lawyers, particularly younger ones, are interested in the problems of children and devote their time to these problems. Most lawyers are concerned about making money, and direct their talents toward corporation law because of the tremendous amount of money that can be made in that field.

This committee has the power to travel to these places and to carry out this kind of investigation, but whether or not they will do so is another question. I personally feel that they should make the kind of investigation I have suggested, rather than just a study of the bricks and mortar, so to speak. If they carry out that kind of investigation, I am sure they will truly understand the reasons behind the state of our penitentiaries and will find solutions to these problems.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I was unable to attend to hear the speech of the hon. Member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), as well as one or two others, but I did listen to several speeches made earlier which I felt were not relevant to the resolution before us. For instance, the speech made by the hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), while it was very interesting and revealed one or two weaknesses in respect of the administration of justice in this nation, had nothing to do with the state of penitentiaries or the plans of the Government in relation to them as disclosed by the resolution now before us.

I enjoyed the speech of the hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) and I thought his points were very relevant, particularly when he suggested that the Government instead of appointing a new committee to carry out an investigation should implement some of the recommendations that have already been made. That is a suggestion that this House should seriously consider. There is no encouragement to Members of a committee, such as is proposed, in contemplation of the action that has not been taken by successive Governments in respect of the very excellent advice and recommendations that have been presented by various Commissions which have studied this whole question.

It seems there is always some reluctance on the part of Governments to push through penal reform in the face of public feeling that criminals are being mollycoddled. That feeling has been expressed in newspapers from time to time by responsible citizens and taxpayers. We have often heard the question asked, why is there this great concern for criminals; and I think that we as legislators have not pressed home the point often enough that we are not trying to make things easy for criminals, but trying to improve our correctional system so that prisoners who are released will not be convicted a second, third or fourth time and returned to the penitentiary. We should impress upon the public that in the long run money spent to modernize correctional institutions represents an investment that will save the taxpayers a great deal of money. We should sell that idea to the taxpayers of this country.

The statistics presented by the hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi clearly show that we have stalled long enough in our approach to this problem. Those statistics indicate that from 40 per cent to 70 per cent of all individuals sentenced to penitentiaries return a second, third or fourth time. If we want to protect the public and save the taxpayers' money, then we should adopt a correctional system which will reform prisoners so that following their release they become good citizens and do not again turn to crime. Surely that is the best protection that can be provided to the public. If that is not a good investment of public dollars, then I do not know what is, or how we could better spend the money on education.

Under the terms of this resolution this committee will be directed to consider only one aspect of the reformation of the administration of justice in this country. It is not directed to investigate the efficiency of our courts, how our provincial jails are run, whether there should be legal aid, and many other facets of this whole picture. I presume the Senators and M.P.s who are appointed to this committee will look at the physical buildings and facilities of our penitentiaries and study them from every point of view, including their capacity, their comforts or lack thereof, their security measures and how effective they are, the state of health generally of the prisoners, how crowded the penitentiaries are, the efficiency of the staffs, the aims of the wardens, and all those things which are associated with correctional reform of those individuals who are incarcerated. We must consider all those things which are designed to make sure that these prisoners can be returned to society as useful citizens. It is the inspection of the facilities which will be of concern to the Members of this proposed committee, and it is only that narrow aspect of the administration of justice with which we are concerned today under the terms of this resolution.

The idea of a Joint Committee of Senators and M.P.s to study this question has much to commend it. We know there are several Members of that other place who have a tremendous amount of legal experience. Some of the members of the other place, not because of their age but because of their experience, are in my opinion very well qualified to assist Members of this House in a survey of this kind, and they have the time to do so.

The provision that 15 Members of this House will be on the Committee gives us a pretty broad selection. I doubt that there are 15 Members of this House who have a great deal of experience in this field and really know much about penitentiaries and the criminal mind, but I am sure that with proper selection from the Senate, and with care taken in this House to select those people who are most interested in the topic, much valuable advice can be given to the Government in a relatively short time, provided the Committee takes the trouble to go and examine one or two penitentiaries very carefully. I think the Committee should do just that.

I think I need do no more than repeat the admonition of the hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey), who pointed out that many independent recommendations have already been made to the Government on which no action has been taken. The making of a careful study and the gathering of valuable information will do no one any good and accomplish nothing unless action is taken, and it rather seems to me that the appointment of this Committee is another way of begging the question. The Government is afraid to take any action, so it puts up a smokescreen. If the resolution is carried and the Committee is established, I submit there will be an obligation on the part of the Government to take action on the part of the Committee's recommendations within a year at most after it reports. I have been a member of too many committees in the last three or four years which have made recommendations to the Government about which nothing has been done. I hope that will not occur in this case, and that the Committee will be able to meet, make a survey of a few penitentiaries and report soon so that quick action can be taken.

[Translation]

Mr. G. C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, since the government has decided to present this motion to set up a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons in order to consider the situation of penitentiaries under the jurisdiction of the federal government, I shall take a few minutes of the house's time to put a few remarks on record, particularly concerning the rehabilitation of prisoners after they leave the penitentiaries.

Like many others, I have noticed and deplored the fact that those who have served time in our penitentiaries are shut out from the federal, provincial and even municipal civil service.

What organization is in a better position to facilitate the complete rehabilitation of those who have served a few years in our penitentiaries? If the federal, provincial and municipal governments do not set an example in this field by accepting in the public service people who came out of penitentiaries, I wonder who will.

The time is past when such people were to be set aside because, in most cases, they did not intend to repeat their mistakes. They all deserve government help. Private concerns are not in a position to do that; neither are agencies, regardless of their good will, in the best position to co-operate in the rehabilitation of those people and in finding work for them so that they may continue to live as human beings. We have seen too many cases of people who have returned to crime simply because they did not find, in civilian life, any opportunity to work and earn an honourable living.

These are the remarks I wanted to put on the record. In that respect, I wanted to introduce a motion for debate. But when I noticed that the government had decided to submit this motion to the house, I felt I should make these few remarks; I also hope to have the opportunity of discussing the matter further in committee. Besides, I intend to work on this personally and do my utmost to arouse interest, so that our governments might offer work to those who leave our penitentiaries after having served their time. Above all, I should like to see the Civil Service Commission and the government take the necessary means to ensure that these people can take courses while in prison, thus enabling them to prepare themselves for Civil Service exams.

I can see no problem here, and I know full well we can then feel, in conscience, that we have accomplished our duty with regard to the rehabilitation of these people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE AMOUNT OF LOAN AND EXTEND REPAYMENT PERIOD

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries) moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act to increase the maximum loan amount to a fisherman from $4,000 to $10,000 and to increase the maximum repayment period from eight years to ten years and also to extend the period during which guaranteed loans may be made for a period of five years from June 30, 1965, to June 30, 1970.

Motion agreed to and the House went into Committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, this resolution concerns proposed amendments to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act which will extend the period during which guaranteed loans may be made to June 30, 1970, raise from $4,000 to $10,000 the maximum guaranteed loan amount which a fisherman may have outstanding, and increase from eight to ten years the maximum period over which loan under this Act may be repaid.

The purpose of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act is to make bank and credit union loans more readily available to fishermen to help them finance a broad range of investment projects including the purchase, construction or improvement of fishing vessels, fishing equipment and shore installations. To this end, the Act authorizes the Minister of Finance to guarantee each lending institution against loss up to 15 per cent of loans made aggregating $500,000. A guarantee of up to 10 per cent of total loans made is applicable in respect of loans made by that lender in excess of $500,000. There is an over-all limit on the total amount of guaranteed loans which may be made by all lending institutions, and this has been set at $20 million.

As the Act stands at present, the maximum loan amount is $4,000 and the maximum repayment period is eight years.

This legislation was enacted by Parliament in 1955 and was made initially effective for a period of three years. The period of operations during which guaranteed loans may be made was extended from time to time and this now expires on June 30, 1965.

The extent to which fishermen have made use of this credit facility has been fairly modest—I could add almost too modest to be really efficient—particularly when compared with the use that farmers have made of credit under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Nevertheless, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act has proven to be a valuable supplement to other loan sources available to fishermen and, in some fishing areas, there has recently been an indication of growth in the use that is made of this facility.

Since inception to March 31 last year, close to 1,400 loans totalling $1.9 million were made. The upturn in lending is indicated by the fact that while annual loans until the fiscal year 1962-63 were in the $200,000 range, this increased to about $370,000 in 1963-64, and preliminary figures indicate that this trend continued into the 1964-65 fiscal year, during which loans may have come close to one half million dollars. Although the annual report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965, is not available, in fact during the period April 1 to December 31, 1964, the total loans made amounted to $340,000. This trend has been possible in large measure because of general improvements in fishing operations. These improvements, along with a trend toward the use of more costly equipment, also make it desirable to increase the maximum loan amount that a fisherman may borrow under the Act.

I should mention also that there have been significant changes in the fishing industry since 1955. These changes are now going on at an accelerated pace, and the most important of these is the expanding size of the individual fishing enterprise. Fishing, like agriculture, is becoming more and more a business operation. Fishermen today must increase the scale of their operations, use larger vessels and more elaborate fishing gear if the fishing industry is to maintain its competitive position with other food producers. Similarly, increased efficiency and higher returns to fishermen must prevail if the industry is to survive in competition with other employment opportunities. My department is encouraging these developments in many ways through broad programs of research and development of new methods, subsidies on vessel construction and so on.

The proposed amendments to this Act fit into the total picture. I fully realize, Mr. Chairman, that this Act, as amended, is not going to meet all the credit requirements of fishermen and the fishing industry. I should like to refer particularly to its application to the Province of Newfoundland. As the annual reports will show, a small number of fishermen in Newfoundland have been able to take advantage of these loans. This is due to the fact that in a large number of settlements or communities there are no chartered banks and the fishermen have had little contact with banking institutions. We are looking into the possibility of finding more practical means of assisting Newfoundland fishermen in so far as making loans available to them.

In so far as fishermen are concerned, particularly in the meeting of their credit needs for larger and modern vessels and improved gear, I am a firm supporter of the provision of such credit through provincial fishermen's loan boards. This would explain, to some extent, why such a limited number of fishermen take advantage of this Act. Personally, I had a good deal of experience with the New Brunswick Fishermen's Loan Board and I can assure the House that a lending agency, which is close to the fishermen and close to the developmental possibilities of the industry, has much to commend it. I know this same conclusion has been reached in all the Atlantic Provinces where such provincial agencies have operated for many years. I am hopeful other Provinces will seriously consider similar action. I must add that following some of the federal-provincial meetings which have taken place with the inland Provinces and British Columbia in recent months, there has been an increasing interest in those Provinces in the possibility of establishment of Fishermen's Loan Boards. I believe there is a real possibility that this Act, as amended, can be made to tie in closely with the operations of Provincial Loan Boards. There may well be many cases where loan boards can direct the fishermen to finance or credit unions, and thus relieve themselves of the necessity of tying up their limited capital resources.

In so far as the fish processing industry is concerned, I believe that the new program announced by the Prime Minister on June 7, whereby a newly established firm or expanding existing firms in designated areas will receive assistance from the Department of Industry, will go a long way toward meeting the needs of the fish processing industry. In this connection I should mention also the useful role of private capital from both domestic and foreign sources. The fishing industry is now enjoying a strong market, both at home and abroad, and is generally in a healthy, expanding condition. Under these circumstances the credit needs tend to increase, but at the same time credit becomes more easily available.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendments are simple and direct. They will extend the period during which guaranteed loans may be made as well as increase the extent to which an individual fisherman can use this credit source. As a result, fishermen will have a more ample opportunity for borrowing, on reasonable terms and conditions, to meet their growing capital needs. This, together with other measures taken by the Government, by the Government in collaboration with the Provinces, and by the Provinces, will in a modest way further contribute to the improvement of efficiency and the expansion of a very important primary industry.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): First, I wish to express to the Minister of Fisheries my appreciation for the concise and objective statement he has made on this matter. As he said, the Act which this bill will amend, introduced and passed in Parliament in 1955, was extended in 1959 for another three years, and amended at that time to expand the definition of those who could borrow under it; and it was again extended in 1962. This is another extension and I agree with the proposal that the Act should be extended for five years, this time, instead of for three. I think it is unnecessary that an Act of this sort should come up for review as frequently as every three years.

I am pleased, also, to note that the ceiling on loans is to be raised from $4,000 to $10,000. This will not, in my judgment, bring about an increased use of this legislation in proportion to the increase in the ceiling, but it is a step in the right direction and it may cover a number of cases which were not covered by the Act previously. If for no other reason, the tremendous increase in the cost of fishing equipment since 1955 is sufficient justification for raising the ceiling to a considerable extent. As a matter of fact, I want to say at once that we in this party will support this amendment. We may have certain suggestions to offer as we go on, but we will support it.

As the Minister has told us—and this was my experience, too, as Minister of Fisheries—this Act has not been used by fishermen to the extent we had hoped. It was introduced as a companion piece of legislation to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. But in some areas at least fishermen have not used it to the extent that farmers have used the corresponding legislation. There are a number of reasons for this, of course. The obvious one is that fishing gear has to be insured because it may very well be lost. There is much less risk of this happening to farm implements. Then again, fishing equipment can wear out rapidly and a condition could develop whereby it would all have to be replaced at one time, whereas farmers can add to their equipment year by year.

However, this does not provide us with a full explanation why the Act has not been used as much as we had hoped. There must be other elements—inaccessibility of lending institutions, for example, or the question of getting into the habit of financing fishing operations by this means. In Prince Edward Island the legislation has been used proportionately a great deal more than in other provinces. The population of that Province is only about one half of 1 per cent of the total population of the country. Nevertheless, the fishermen of Prince Edward Island have taken out 35 per cent of the loans granted under this legislation for the whole country, and the volume of the loans taken out on the island is more than 25 per cent of the whole. Had commensurate use been made of the Act in the rest of the country, total loans would have been several times greater than has in fact been the case.

I suggest to the Minister that he continue to try to find ways of encouraging fishermen to use the benefits available under this Act to a greater extent. We are living in a very competitive age and it is good business for fishermen, if they are in an economically sound situation, to make use of as much credit as they can. As long as their operation is efficient they can make it more efficient by equipping themselves to carry out their work properly.

I do not think there is anything else I wish to say, except that I am pleased to note the Minister holds the view that the provinces also have a large responsibility in this field. I notice that a contrary view was expressed by the Opposition critic on the last occasion this Act was amended. My view is in accord with that of the present Minister. Three years ago, when this Act was last considered, the Opposition critic of that day, now Minister of Transport, said as reported in Hansard of March 6, 1962 at page 1546:

> I am sure the hon. Member for Royal, the Minister of Forestry, would agree with me when I say that the plain fact is that this is not something that ought to be left to provincial governments. Under the constitution fisheries are the exclusive responsibility of this parliament and the Federal Government. Surely if farm credit, when agriculture is a joint responsibility of Parliament and the legislatures, is largely assumed by Parliament, credit for fishermen should be the responsibility of this Parliament.

I do not agree with him and I hold the same view as the present Minister in this connection. I think his conclusion is based on sound reasoning and his experience in the Department.

I have nothing more to say at this moment. We may have some further remarks to make as representatives of this party, and there may be some comments by other hon. Members, but it is not our intention to prolong the debate at this stage.

Mr. Barnett: Like the hon. Member for Queens, I usually find presentations made by the Minister of Fisheries disarming if one does not look beyond the content of the statements he makes in such a pleasant manner to the House. Unfortunately, all too often when the Minister of Fisheries presents a resolution of this kind, a relatively minor amendment to a relatively minor piece of legislation, he is something of an orphan within the Federal Government, carrying far less weight in its councils than the Minister of Finance, who is also directly concerned with the bill we now have before us for consideration.

I must say, Mr. Chairman, that when I thought about the fact that we might be considering this resolution fairly soon, my mind went back to a year ago last January when we had a Federal-Provincial Fisheries Conference in Ottawa, an event which was heralded as being something of major significance to the fishing industry of Canada and was going to usher in a new era of national fisheries policy. When I look back over what has happened in Parliament since that time, this would appear to be the second matter dealing with the fishing industry, as far as my recollection goes, that has come before the House since that time. The other matter that did come before the House had to do with the extension of our territorial fishing zones. Here again, the impact of that piece of legislation has been really of very little consequence to date.

As I pointed out in the House through a question to the Acting Prime Minister the other day, addressing him as Secretary of State for External Affairs, it is now almost a year since the Act was proclaimed in respect of territorial fishing zones which gave to the Governor in Council the power to set base line co-ordinates, and there has been no action as yet to establish those base lines. If I may say so in passing, Mr. Chairman, I think that situation in itself highlights the correctness of the position that some of us in this House took at that time, namely that a matter which affected the national boundaries of Canada should be the subject matter of direct action by this House rather than being put aside into what has obviously become a sort of Never-Never Land for legislation, because of inaction by the Governor in Council. The net result of that piece of legislation has been perhaps to lull the people of Canada who maybe have not much acquaintance with the fishing industry into thinking that the present Government has proposed and accomplished something significant in the fisheries field, when in point of fact they really have not done very much except set up in the House a piece of window dressing legislation.

Now we have a proposal to make a modest revision to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act which will increase the total which can be borrowed, from the great sum of $4,000 to $10,000, which is the maximum for any one loan, which will provide for a small extension of the repayment period and renew this program for another five years. I think we have to consider this resolution in the context of the present picture. The Minister will recall that when the Premier of Newfoundland presented the brief of the Government of that Province to the Federal-Provincial Conference he laid before it, with some emphasis, a letter he had received from the present Prime Minister when he was Leader of the Opposition, in which the Prime Minister assured the Premier of Newfoundland that we would have a national fisheries program which would parallel what had been done and what would yet be done in the field of agriculture. Yet, as I say, this is only the second piece of fisheries legislation which has been put forward. I would also suggest, Mr. Chairman, that surely no one on the opposite side of the House would wish to claim that the proposal advanced in this resolution is any major step toward creating a program for the fisheries that parallels the program in respect of agriculture.

At the beginning of last session we had a Speech from the Throne, as we usually do at the beginning of a session, and then we had a speech from the Prime Minister after the Leader of the Opposition had spoken. In that debate of a year ago last February the Prime Minister, as I recall it, delivered himself of some rather extensive remarks. Having listened to the Prime Minister rather carefully and having just prior to that sat in on some of the sessions of the Federal-Provincial Fisheries Conference, I was awaiting with a good deal of interest some expansion by the Prime Minister on the brief reference in the Speech from the Throne to the development of a fisheries program. The fact was that during the whole of his speech, which went on at some considerable length, as I have said, the Prime Minister never once mentioned fish or the fisheries. On February 21, 1964, as reported at page 91 of Hansard for that session, I asked the Prime Minister the following question:

> Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In his speech yesterday the Prime Minister made reference to broadening and expanding the scale of farm credit. He made no reference to the fishery. I should like to ask him what measures he has in mind to parallel this action as far as the fishery is concerned.

Hansard records that Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) replied:

> Mr. Speaker, I am very conscious of the fact that I did not mention fisheries in my statement yesterday. It was an omission, but I can assure my hon. friend that assistance to agriculture in the form of broadening the basis of farm credit and in other ways will certainly be paralleled by help to the fishery.

As I say, that was on February 21, 1964, and as far as I know from that day until this the Prime Minister has never said anything in this House about a new national fisheries program. The resolution which we have before us is the first definitive action proposed in this Parliament, as far as I can recall, since February 21, 1964, when the Prime Minister gave me that answer, that could even remotely be considered to be creating a parallel program for the fishery. The summary of operations of the last year for which we have a fisheries report—

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Member permit a question?

Mr. Barnett: Yes.

Mr. Robichaud: Has the hon. Member made any attempt at all to make himself aware of or to familiarize himself with the different measures which have been taken in recent months to assist the fishing industry?

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Barnett: I have tried to remain reasonably alert to what has been proposed and is being done by the Department of Fisheries. I freely admit that I am not as familiar with the details of what is going on in the fishery on the Atlantic coast of Canada as I might like to be, and had we had a lengthy recess of the House I might have been able to visit that part of the country. But as far as the west coast of Canada is concerned I know, for example, that the Department of Fisheries is undertaking some developments in the northern part of the province in the region of spawning channels, and that some work is being done in fields of this sort. I know our scientists in the biological station at Nanaimo have been continuing their program of research, and some oceanographic surveys have been conducted in the Pacific. Certainly I am aware that what over a period of many years has been the normal program of the Department of Fisheries has been going on during the last year or so. I know the Minister or his officials have held certain conferences with the provinces on certain aspects of the fishery. I understand there is under consideration some developments in marketing board arrangements for the inland fisheries of the Prairie Provinces, but I have not heard the Minister announce in the House that these arrangements have come to any form of fruition.

I am not trying to deny or downgrade the activities of the small but in my opinion, quite efficient Department of Fisheries which we have in Canada. All I am trying to do is to suggest that its activities are a far cry from the brave words expressed by the present

Prime Minister to the Premier of Newfoundland, which were verified to some extent by the answer he gave to me on February 21, 1964 and any program of action which the Government has placed before this Parliament in this connection. If there are events going on that the Minister feels the House should know about, I would certainly be quite happy to have him spend some time during this present discussion detailing them to us.

I have endeavoured to ask what changes are going to be made to the International Fisheries Conventions relating to the North Pacific which will ensure protection, conservation and development of our Pacific fishery. As far as I know we have not come to any resolution of those problems. I could go on to enumerate other matters, but I do not want to stray too far from the subject matter of the resolution, which after all has to do with the matter of providing credit facilities for the development of the fishery.

The Minister did refer to the situation in Newfoundland and indicated that some special consideration was being given by him to this matter. According to the last official report available to us, that for the year ending March 31, 1964, since the inception of the Act the total amount of loans made to Newfoundland amounted to $19,003. The Minister has said that the report for the fiscal year just ended is not yet officially available, although I thank him for making reference to some of the operations of the past year which appear to bear out that there has not been any radical alteration in the situation.

I note that the Premier of Newfoundland appears to have been concerned about this matter of loans to Newfoundland, because in his brief to the federal-provincial fisheries conference he points out that only 12 loans had been made in Newfoundland up to the time the report was prepared. He points out that under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, by 1962 over $1.2 billion, almost 1,000 times the total of $1.3 million under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, had been lent. I have been wondering whether the Minister could explain a little further this matter of the extension of credit facilities under provincial loan boards. We have not had anything of this kind in British Columbia, in view of the fact that the Premier of Newfoundland, among others, is apparently quite concerned over the fact that this fisheries loans legislation has not been of much value to the fishermen of Newfoundland.

This leads me to observe that we should be aware of just how limited is this present legislation, a limitation which the resolution does nothing to change. It is a situation which, as I see it, would be parallel to the situation concerning financing of housing in this country if the only legislation available was in the realm of providing insurance or loan guarantees, or if under the National Housing Act there were no provisions for direct lending for housing construction.

It seems to me that as this legislation stands there is very good reason for the fact that it has been of such limited value in its application to the fishery. I remember that when this legislation was brought in some of us were successful in arguing that in addition to the use of banks as lending institutions there should be provision for inclusion of credit unions and caisses populaires, which suggestion was agreed to at the time. But the fact of the matter is that in many institutions banking facilities, or for that matter credit unions, are not available to fishermen in a convenient way. I should like to hear more from the Minister about his theory as to how provincial loan boards can meet the situation, and more about how these provincial loan boards can be financed. If we are going to create a financial assistance program to make credit available to fishermen which will in any way parallel the assistance provided to the agricultural industry or the assistance provided in respect of the construction of houses in Canada, we will have to set up better machinery, with provision for direct loans to fishermen, than exists at the present time.

Mr. Robichaud: It already exists.

Mr. Barnett: The Minister suggests that this machinery already exists. I do not know where it is, except in the form of banks and credit unions which will provide loans guaranteed by the Government, in the event of losses sustained as a result of nonrepayment.

It is my feeling that the basic principle of insured loans, such as exists in respect of housing, provides a very useful mechanism, but I wonder why the Minister's Department has not been able to set up the proper machinery by which these loans could be handled and processed to a greater degree of efficiency than at this time. I realize there are officers of his Department who concern themselves with the fishing vessels insurance program; but the resolution we have before us, while it is all right in itself, emphasizes the very limited nature of the program so far put forward by the Government in respect of the provision of added credit facilities for fishermen.

The Minister made reference in his opening remarks to the fact that in certain segments of the industry capital arrangements can readily be made. That may be perfectly true in respect of some of the larger, more integrated operations of the industry in certain parts of Canada, and it is certainly true of certain segments of the industry in British Columbia, but what some of us are concerned about is a program which would assist many individual fishermen who for decades have been in the hands of the so-called private entrepreneurs to the extent that they have never been able to get themselves out of debt. We should like to see a financial program which would enable these individuals to lift themselves up and become independent and self-sufficient.

From my observations of the operation of this Act, it is obvious that while it has been all right as far as it goes, it certainly has not achieved its purpose. From the observations I have been able to make and as a result of the information I have heard given to this House from time to time by Members representing the Atlantic Provinces, I certainly have gained the impression that there is a great deal of room for improvement as far as the positions of the individual fishermen in that area are concerned.

I realize that the total answer to the problems of fishermen on either of our coasts does not lie in the provision of more adequate credit facilities, but that many other factors are involved. This is perhaps not the time or the place to go into them, but I should certainly like the Minister before we proceed with this resolution to give us some indication of what he and the Government have in mind, in addition to this modest proposal he has now put forward on behalf of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon).

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to state very briefly that this party supports not only the five year extension in respect of fishermen's loans under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, but also the increase from $4,000 to $10,000.

We were very interested to hear the Minister state that loans made by credit unions under the provisions of this Act will be guaranteed by the Government, as well as those loans granted by the chartered banks of this country. We believe that this is a good principle and that it should be extended to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I am not critical of the manner in which the chartered banks have handled the Farm Improvement Loans Act in the past.

When the Minister was speaking he said, as did the former Minister of Fisheries, the senior hon. Member for Queens, that he was disappointed to some extent by the amount of use that has been made of the provisions of this Act by fishermen. I suggest that by raising the ceilings the Minister will not find the complete answer to the problem of providing the necessary credit to enable fishermen to carry on their operations in an efficient manner. Inasmuch as the present Minister and the previous Minister have expressed the same disappointment as to the use being made of these provisions, it seems to me that the Minister ought to have a very hard look at the manner in which the chartered banks are dealing with fishermen. We experienced problems in this regard under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, as well as under the old Farm Loan Board, in that there was plenty of authority to make credit available, but the amount and type of security the banks required was such that the purpose of these programs failed. The jobs they were intended to perform were not effectively done. There may be a similar problem in this regard.

The Minister has said that in many areas where fishermen require this credit, there are no banking facilities readily available. If that is the case and the Minister feels that some improvement can be made in the use of these provisions, he ought to consider the situation at the local level to see whether that is the place whether the difficulty is developing.

On behalf of the party to which I belong, I should like to say that we support the extension of five years and the increase in the ceiling, although we do not think these changes will necessarily solve the problem. We hope that this measure can be implemented as quickly as possible.

• (3:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Chairman, I only have a few words to say about a point which has not been raised, that is the markets. First, allow me to point out that it is an appropriate day to speak about fisheries, since it is Friday.

I am convinced that fishermen will be very proud and satisfied with this measure granting them an extension of 8 to 10 years to repay loans and increasing them from $4,000 to $10,000. This is a first step taken by the government.

On the other hand, the true problem would be to find a market to guarantee the sale of their fish. If fishermen must borrow to buy some modern fishing equipment in order to improve their efficiency and if they are not sure that they will sell their entire catch, they will always hesitate to do so. Such is the problem in the Gaspé peninsula at present. Fishermen have signed a contract with the United States who set and control the price of fish. Recently, the Quebec Minister of Fisheries was approached by the government of Haiti in order to enter into a contract for $3 to $5 million worth of fish. They were told there was a shortage of fish and that the small catch along the Gaspé coast was used solely to fill orders from the U.S., since they hold an exclusive contract.

If the government were to guarantee the sale of all the fish, as well as its distribution throughout the country, fishermen would no longer have to sell their surplus abroad.

In addition, several countries would be interested in dealing with us, but our governments do not seem to care. They should look after the marketing of our surplus fish; this would provide the industry with some profit and the fishermen with a certain amount of security; under those conditions they would equip themselves so as to make the largest catches possible; but, without that assurance that they can sell all their production, they will not be interested in obtaining loans and getting further into debt.

[English]

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, like other Members who have preceded me I welcome the resolution in the knowledge that this amendment will benefit some fishermen in some parts of Canada. Having said that, I must point out that I was glad the Minister himself recognized the fact that this legislation will not be of any material benefit to the people of my riding, and I doubt that it will be of very much benefit to the fishermen of Newfoundland generally.

Some Members have attributed this to the lack of banks. It is true that we have very few branches of chartered banks in the smaller fishing communities of Newfoundland. In my own riding there are six. Two of them are quite close together on the Burin peninsula and the others are scattered along a coastline that extends for nearly 1,000 miles. But that is not the main reason. Even in those communities where banks are readily accessible the fishermen cannot make any use of this legislation mainly because the bank managers, for some reason which I have not been able to fathom, are very reluctant to make loans to fishermen even though the loans are guaranteed by the Government.

I think the hon. Member for Comox-Alberni said that up to the time the Dominion-Provincial Conference was held a year ago 12 loans had been made in Newfoundland amounting in total to $19,000. Two of those loans were made in my own riding, and I know about them because I know they would never have been made if I had not personally underwritten them. Therefore this amendment will not improve the situation so far as Newfoundland fishermen are concerned.

The Minister said he was disappointed that fishermen had not made more use of this legislation, but I was glad to hear him say that this is changing and fishermen are gradually making more and more use of it. I presume that is the reason for the extension of the maximum amount of loan. As I listened to the Minister I was struck by the similarity between this legislation and the legislation placed on the statute books several years ago making provision for loans to small businesses. I think the Minister said that the total amount of loans made under this legislation would not exceed $20 million. The same thing has happened in the case of small business loans. So far as my riding and province are concerned, that legislation has not served the purpose for which it was intended.

We in Newfoundland would be quite happy with smaller loans, even less than $4,000, if they were obtainable but, as I said, we have so few banks and no credit unions and the banks are not accessible to fishermen. They are hundreds and hundreds of miles distant. The only way to get to them is by sea, which is expensive and can take a lot of time. So it is just impossible for the fishermen to make any use of the legislation.

I was glad to hear the Minister say that some other provision would have to be made to take care of the problem in Newfoundland. We need small loans to look after special needs. In Newfoundland we have the inshore fishery and the deep sea fishery. The deep sea fishery is taken care of under the shipbuilding program and the measures to which the Minister referred in his interjection in the remarks of the hon. Member for Comox-Alberni. But so far as the inshore fishery is concerned, it is not in the fisherman's interest to saddle himself with a huge amount of debt. The smaller he can keep the capital investment, the better. In my opinion it should not exceed $5,000 per person and the maximum of $10,000 should preferably be divided among two or three persons.

What we need in Newfoundland is a loan fund that will take care of emergencies. A fisherman may need a new boat. He can go into the woods and cut the timber for the frame but he needs some ready cash, $400 or $500 or perhaps $1,000, to buy planking for the hull and deck. If he has a boat, it is probably in his interest to get one of the small diesel engines that are now available on the world market. These little engines range in power from 5 horsepower up to 15 or 20 horsepower, but usually from 5 to 10 horsepower. They cost anywhere from $500 to $800. There should be a fund to which the fishermen can go to secure that amount of money. He is not saddled with a great amount of debt, and he is in a fair position to repay it over a short period.

Last winter one of my fishermen fishing with a longliner suddenly had $1,000 worth of gear destroyed by a foreign trawler. Well, this was a tremendous loss. He could not go to the bank because he had no more security to put up to satisfy the bank. He had to do without this gear until a merchant or a plant operator provided him with it. Only last week I had a letter from a constituent who said he could make a fairly good living if he could get a fleet of nylon gill nets. He has not been able to afford to get them up until now. These nets can be purchased through a Government agency for about $50, and can be put into the water for perhaps $75, fitted with moorings, floats and everything. He needs the cash, and he does not have it. The only other alternative for him is to purchase these nets through a supplier, but instead of paying $50 for the nets he will pay $100 or perhaps $120, exclusive of the moorings. These are examples of the needs which our fishermen want met.

The trouble with this legislation is that it does not help the people who most need help. If a person can go to a bank and get a loan of $10,000 under this legislation, he does not need the legislation. He could likely get the $10,000 loan anyway. It is the poor fisherman who has no security to offer except his good name, his industry and his reputation as a fisherman, who needs the help. Somebody has to take him at his face value and advance money on his character.

[Mr. Carter.]

Now, we have two loan funds in Newfoundland. We have the Fisheries Development Loan Fund, and that fund is used mainly for large loans for fishermen who want to buy Danish seiners. I do not believe that fund has been successful at all. What has happened has been this: A fisherman goes to this loan fund and obtains a loan of $40,000 or $45,000 to build a Danish seiner of about 75 feet. This is a tremendous amount of debt. Along with that, the marine insurance on this ship is very high and the operating expenses are high. By the time this man pays off his loan, he is right back where he started. He catches more fish, but he is no better off. The extra production goes to pay off the loan.

The most successful arrangement we have had in my Province has been a little fund that originated when the Premier of Newfoundland sold the Newfoundland Savings Bank to the Bank of Montreal. About $1 million was produced from that sale and it was split into two funds, half for the farmers and half for the fishermen. The purpose of the fund was to grant small loans to fishermen. There was a limitation as to what they could buy. They could buy only those types of gear and build those types of boats which met Government specifications. However, this fund could not begin to satisfy the demand. The amount of the loan was limited to less than $1,000. I think the average loan would be about $450.

Now, this legislation will not touch that need at all because the person who needs the help is not in a position to take advantage of it. I do want to appeal once more to the Minister. This legislation is all right. It will help somebody, and we will support it. However, so far as my Province is concerned and so far as my riding is concerned, we want a different form of financing. I hope the Minister will see to it that a fishermen's loan fund will be set up. I disagree with the hon. Member for Queens when he says this should be a provincial responsibility. I do not see why it should not be the responsibility of the Federal Government to provide this form of help to the fishermen, just as the Federal Government aids the farmers. We have more or less committed ourselves to do as well for the fishermen as we do for the farmers. I do hope the Minister will tackle this problem without any further delay.

Mr. Crouse: It is not my intention to speak at any great length or delay unnecessarily the passage of this resolution. I listened with great interest to the remarks of the hon.

Member for Burin-Burgeo. I could not help but note, with amazement, the marked similarity between the difficulties which face the inshore fishermen in Newfoundland and those which face our inshore fishermen in Nova Scotia. I dare say this is true of the entire Atlantic Provinces. The senior Member for Queens, and former Minister of Fisheries, stated that the Official Opposition's position is to approve of this resolution, and with that observation I concur.

The resolution before us states:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act to increase the maximum loan amount to a fisherman from four thousand dollars to ten thousand dollars and to increase the maximum repayment period from eight years to ten years and also to extend the period during which guaranteed loans may be made for a period of five years from June 30, 1965 to June 30, 1970.

Obviously, if this Act were going to be used at all the amount of the guaranteed loan had to be increased and the repayment period extended, especially in view of constantly rising costs. This is a very minor piece of legislation. It has not been, since the date of its inception, very beneficial to fishermen. In fact, many fishermen and bankers as well are apparently unaware of the existence of the Act. It is my understanding that the original purpose of this legislation was to facilitate the provision of term loans to fishermen, credit was being made available to finance a broad range of investments including the purchase, construction or improvement of fishing vessels, fishing equipment and shore installations. It was introduced in 1955 for a period of three years. The Government indicated at that time it would undertake to reimburse individual lending institutions for losses up to 15 per cent of loans or an aggregate of $500,000. A guarantee of 10 per cent is applicable in respect of loans, and that is not to exceed $500,000. There is an over-all limit of $20 million on the total amount of guaranteed loans which may be made by all lending institutions.

This Act was amended in 1959 and again in 1962. This resolution therefore represents the third time on which the Act has been amended or extended since its introduction. I simply note that the Minister has decided that the period of the guaranteed loan would be extended for another five years, or until June 30, 1970. I agree with this move. I do not see why this Act should come before Parliament every three years. However, it is evident that since its inception this legislation has met with only modest acceptance among the people it was designed to benefit. The number of loans granted makes this clear. In fact from the time of its inception in 1955 to March 31, 1964, a total of only 1,379 loans have been made, amounting in value to approximately $1,916,727. During this period a total of 281 loans were made in Nova Scotia to an amount of $392,248.

It is interesting to see for what purpose these loans were made. Loans for fishing equipment accounted for 365, to a value of $403,122. There were 1,003 loans in respect of the purchase or repair of vessels and boats, the total being $1,493,883. Eleven were in respect of the building and construction of vessels totalling in value $19,722. It is therefore evident that this Act has not been very beneficial to our fishermen or to the industry. It seems to me that some major improvements should be brought about which would make this legislation more attractive and more adapted to the needs of our fishermen. Last year only 202 loans were made, to a value of $368,229. Of the total number of loans made since the inception of this scheme, 897 amounting in value to $1,284,142 have been repaid. It is interesting to note that only three claims amounting to $615 have been paid by the Government since the inception of this Act.

A study of the small pamphlet put out by the Department of Fisheries covering the terms of this Act may well explain the reason for its lack of popularity. For example, it offers the fisherman no solution to his problem in time of disaster, and if he should lose his boat and fishing gear, which are not always adequately insured, he is not in a position to make the down payment for a new boat which is required by the chartered banks. I believe the amendments proposed, though beneficial, do not go far enough, and I think the government should give more consideration to the needs of our inshore fishermen when introducing amendments to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. After all, our inshore fishermen are still a vital factor in the economy of the Atlantic Provinces. Our lobster fishermen, for example, still top the list in dollar earnings and their catch generally represents 30 per cent of our province's landed value, which in 1964 was in excess of $42 million. The total catch for the Atlantic Provinces was 45 million pounds, worth $20 million.

Lobster fishing is one phase of the fishing industry which remains in the hands of the primary producer, and one can safely say that it is the prime factor in keeping alive the inshore fishing industry along the entire coast line of Nova Scotia. Lobstering is usually a two-man partnership. Sometimes it is a father and son business, with each sharing equally in the profits and the losses. There are also some fishermen who like to go it alone. The lone fisherman is typical of the lobster fishery. Rugged and independent, he represents a way of life where a man is his own boss and where one's reward depends on the sweat and toil put into the job. Certainly this is no nine-to-five job. When I am at home in Lunenburg I am sometimes awakened by the loud exhaust of the lobster fishermen's boats as they put out to sea around four o'clock in the morning to haul in their traps. These sturdy individualists are representive of the fibre and sinew of this nation and they have truly earned the title of primary producers.

When the weatherman is kind and the sea gives up its red treasure, these inshore fishermen seek no help from anyone. But when disaster strikes and their meagre resources are inadequate to enable them to replace their boats and equipment they must turn to someone for help. This happens all too frequently. Last year, 39 fishermen were lost in the Maritimes, the greatest single tragedy being the loss of the trawler Acadia Sea Hawk when Captain Ronald Mosher and his crew of 13 men vanished beneath the shroud of a wintry Atlantic storm. Other than those aboard the Sea Hawk, the death toll involved mostly inshore fishermen. Inshore fishing accidents happen frequently and only a few months ago we read in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald how Keith Dixon and his 17-year-old son narrowly escaped death when a gasoline tank aboard their Cape Island type motorboat exploded at Woods Harbour, Nova Scotia. The boat—only three years old—was badly damaged by fire.

How will this legislation help these people? Oh, the Minister may say, they can get a loan under this Act to replace their boat and equipment. Let us look at the pamphlet and see what security they need. In the section dealing with security for a loan the pamphlet states the requirements to be:

(a) A promissory note signed by the fisherman and endorsed by one or more financially responsible persons, or

(c) If the principal amount of the loan is $1,000 or less, an assignment of moneys to be paid to the fisherman.

Let us suppose no one will sign this note. His boat is destroyed and his earnings without equipment are negative. How does this fisherman get re-established? Would not a personal life insurance policy for the amount of the loan or the equity in a home be acceptable security? The Act is not clear on this point.

In the first part of the pamphlet the Department defines those who make application for a loan. It lists a fisherman as one who has a legal interest in a fishing vessel or a fish trap, and who intends to gain his livelihood from catching fish for sale. Many of today's fishermen find it difficult to qualify under this section of the Act, since they may not own shares in ships. I think a fisherman could also be defined as one who spends three or more months at sea, and whose unemployment insurance book contained sufficient stamps to verify this fact. The only real benefit under this Act at present is the 5 per cent interest rate on any loan that may be secured. However, when all the factors facing our inshore fishermen are taken into consideration, this is truly a very small concession.

If the Department is desirous of really assisting our inshore fishermen I would suggest it give more consideration to their real needs. In order to do this, conferences or consultations should be held in those areas where large numbers of our people are engaged in fisheries. The views of these men should be noted by our departmental experts and conveyed to our naval architects, our ship and boat builders and our engine and equipment suppliers, so that every aspect of improvements in small fishing craft could be studied. This could well bring about a more satisfactory and efficient design of inshore craft which the Department of Fisheries could approve, and which would then be more acceptable as collateral for a loan when any inshore fisherman desired a new boat or a replacement boat.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the amount of any loan approved, and which is guaranteed by the Government, should be supported to a greater extent by the Government than at present, especially when the fisherman suffers a major loss. A Government guarantee of a minimum of 25 per cent repayment on the loan would be a suitable amendment to this Act, especially when a fisherman loses his boat and all his equipment in a storm or major disaster. I hope the Government will give careful consideration to these proposals and implement them in this bill, or in the not-too-distant future.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Mr. Granger: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity of joining those who have spoken on this resolution. I might add that, like the other speakers, I am pleased to see the broadening of this particular Act with a view to making it applicable to a greater number of the needs of fishermen. I am especially interested, however, in the needs of the inshore fishermen in the immediate future. Had I the time, Mr. Chairman, I would talk about some other aspects of the fisheries development program, such as the centralization program, the legislation for the 12-mile limit, and so on; but the fisheries development program of necessity is a complex one and deals with many facets of the fishing industry from the time before the fish is even caught up to the time it is sold. Such a program has to be far reaching; it will take time to get into full effect, and is one which will require the efforts of many officials both federal and provincial.

In the interim, however, the productivity of fishermen must be increased. I cannot think of a better way to get immediate results so that the incomes of fishermen can be improved than making available loans for those fishermen who need to improve their boats and gear, to improve their shore installations, and beyond that, to assist those men who perhaps are not fishermen now or who at one time were fishermen and want to return to the fisheries but do not have the boats, gear or money and must obtain capital assistance in order to become fishermen.

Without doubt, Mr. Chairman, capital assistance can be of immediately help to fishermen who wish to improve their existing equipment. A fisherman may require a new engine; he may want to make repairs to his boat, to his fishing gear, his traps or his trawls. When he is able to borrow the money for these things he is immediately equipped to produce more efficiently and to improve his income. I cannot think of a better way, with the possible exception of a further extension of the bait service, to immediately permit an increase in the income of fishermen than the provision of a means whereby fishermen can obtain capital assistance.

Like other speakers, Mr. Chairman, I wish to register by approval of the resolution and express the hope that fishermen will use this legislation. I also express the hope which has already been expressed by previous speakers, namely that the Minister of Fisheries will determine the necessity of making available to fishermen the capital assistance with which they can immediately become more productive and thereby earn better incomes. I was very glad to hear the Minister say that he had in mind the Province of Newfoundland with respect to the availability of loans under this Act. I have no doubt that the Minister will take whatever steps are necessary in order that there will be greater use made of this Act by the fishermen themselves. I do not wish to unduly delay the passage of this legislation, Mr. Chairman, and will conclude simply by reiterating the fact that there is perhaps no better way in which fishermen can immediately improve their position than taking advantage of capital assistance.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I rise to deal with one specific problem in connection with this matter. I would certainly like to compliment the Minister of Fisheries upon the step he has taken in increasing the scope of the loan and the amount of time given to the borrower to repay that loan. The problem I wish to discuss concerning loans is one that is perhaps bothering the Minister as well. I believe he is very familiar with it, because it is not a new problem. It is the fact that with regard to the inland fisheries and the fishermen I have the honour to represent, although there are grants, subsidies and loans made available at the federal level, for some unexplained reason it seems impossible for these loans to be made available to inland fishermen to the same degree that they are available to the coastal fishermen.

Only yesterday in the lake port of Wheatley there was a meeting of fishermen, the processors and the provincial Department of Lands and Forests which dealt with this very problem, namely the inability of local fishermen to take advantage of federal provisions. I would like to ask the Minister—and I listened with great interest when he discussed the fact that federal-provincial boards were being set up—because of his awareness of this problem, is there some way in which a meeting or an investigation could be held here in the Province of Ontario to see if it is not possible to work out a way in which the local fishermen could be placed on the same basis as coastal fishermen, as far as loans are concerned? It could well be that because there is no Department of Fisheries in Ontario and the fisherman must make representation to the Department of Lands and Forests, the vehicle is not present whereby such action can be taken. If such is the case, I think we should know it and know it now, so that the appropriate steps can be taken to remedy this ill.

I know that when the fishermen of that area speak of not being able to obtain these loans, subsidies and grants, they are stating the fact, because I have been to the previous government and this Government with these fishermen to discuss their problem in detail. I have found the departments here very sympathetic in regard to the problems of the local fishermen and wishing to do all in their power to help these men, but they have been unable to find the mechanics for so doing. I have made representations to the provincial department and found there, too, sympathy for the problems of these fishermen, but they also seem unable to find an avenue of approach.

I would like to ask the Minister if he will give me a specific undertaking that he will look into this matter and see whether it is not possible from now on to put the local fishermen, the inland fishermen, on the same basis as far as loans, grants and subsidies are concerned as the fishermen on either coast. Because there is very little value in increasing the amount of loans or increasing the time to repay them if the local inland fishermen are not in position to take advantage of them.

The Minister has said that the amount lent so far is modest. He said he was disappointed at the use made of them. Perhaps the solution would be a concerted effort on the part of all parties to see why this is so, and whether something can be done at the earliest possible moment to widen the use of these loans. Farmers in my area have derived much benefit from the companion loans under the farm improvement loans legislation; these loans are used to a tremendous degree by local farmers. I would ask the Minister what can be done, either by working through the provincial fishing bodies or directly, to see that the local fishermen, the honest, hard working men who are facing grave problems today, are not placed in a position where they cannot receive the necessary funds to carry on their business, which I am sure they would be glad to do if given every opportunity.

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Chairman, I apologize for delaying the Committee a little; I know the mood of the Committee is to get on with the business this afternoon. Perhaps the only thing of significance which will be said of my speech when I sit down is that it will probably be longer than the Gettysburg address.

[Mr. Danforth.]

May I say first of all that were it not for the inclusion in the remarks of the Minister of an awareness of the lack of application of this Act, then I would find it very difficult to support this resolution. I think this Act is a great illustration of the mentality of many people who perhaps are in charge of rationalizing certain programs to make them acceptable to the standards of a mysterious class of people. This is an orthodox bill because it implies that the fishermen can get assistance by going to a bank. The fact that the legislation does not work is not, I suppose, of very much concern to some of those who have more the mentality perhaps of an accountant rather than that of an economist or sociologist, and it is a neat little package.

In the past two years the Minister has made aware to those of us who realize the inadequacies that he is fighting to do something about them. I am not going to eulogize the accomplishments of the past two years; I have done that on many occasions and I do not deem it necessary to do so at this time. However, I would say that he has probably been the most successful Minister of Fisheries on record. It is a tough job, particularly when dealing with the province of Newfoundland.

A lot has been said about our small boats and our inshore fishermen, who comprise 95 per cent of the Newfoundland fishermen. I think we must admit that the coming thing in fisheries is our off-shore fisheries. When we are talking about our inshore fishermen, we must realize more and more that our fishermen will become involved in our off-shore fishery either on trawlers or in fish plants.

Once again I say there are forces at work in this country which would impede this development. There are already a number of successful operators in Canada who have managed to be successful in fishing enterprises. They are not particularly concerned about attracting new industry or fishing companies to develop the resources of the Atlantic Provinces. It is a great tragedy to witness so much activity by foreign countries off our shores, who send their boats to take the fish. While those few companies which do operate in the Atlantic provinces do well it seems to me that the real answer is to get some of these companies who are operating in Europe to operate off our shores through a Canadian subsidiary, thus developing our fishing industry.

There are those who are quite concerned about Canadian ownership, and I subscribe in many instances to the view they hold. But it does seem to me that any study of the fishing industry makes us aware of the fact that there are a few major companies in Europe who are now sending many of their ships to the Atlantic coast of Canada and also to Greenland, and these companies must be encouraged to affiliate with existing companies in the Atlantic Provinces in order to develop our fishery resources. Or in the alternative we should attempt to get the Canadian-owned companies to expand, although this may be physically impossible because of their limited number.

This particular piece of legislation is supposed to be of some help to the inshore fishermen, but it has failed in the past. I suppose it represents a nibbling at a very major problem. I am not asking, nor I think are any of us, that we look for a handout here or for something for small inshore fishing operators; but if these people are to increase their productivity they must be given more opportunity than they have had in the past to get the necessary funds to purchase the required gear. As I have said, this particular piece of legislation has not proved to be the answer. Perhaps many feel it is a neat little package which can be defended in certain quarters; but unless and until the proposed changes which the Minister suggested in his opening remarks are brought about, many of us will be unhappy with the situation.

Another important thing is that it is necessary to stress, when talking of fishing, the realization that our future lies in the development of our offshore fisheries, which will require bigger ships and modern and efficient plants. Once again this will require more imagination than has been exhibited by successive governments in past years when talking about development of this particular resource.

There is some consolation in the fact that over the past two years a considerable amount has been done in this regard. But just because problems have been attended to is no reason to ignore other problems which have gone unattended to for a long time. Right now across this country there is a greater awareness than ever before of a battle or war on poverty. This will require an imaginative approach. It is not merely a question of coming up with something somewhere which you think you can defend and then sitting on it for five years or so, saying that you have done something about it and that it is not your fault that the fishermen did not take advantage of it. Your attitude should be that if a problem is existing you must find its solution. It is ludicrous and a mockery just to present certain pieces of legislation and then rest upon them, to say that that is what you tried to do, and it is too bad it did not work. Our job is to find something that will work.

In the suggested 14 point program announced a few months ago by the Minister I think he showed this kind of leadership which in coming years will lead to a substantial improvement in incomes of fishermen in Newfoundland, and I congratulate him. But I also know that his task will not be an easy one because there will be those who perhaps will not understand the problems as well as he does. There will also be those who will be pushing him perhaps a little harder than they should, or sometimes a little unrealistically. A combination of those two things is, in my opinion, the best hope for a solution.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): The hon. Member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. Member permit a question.

Mr. Cashin: Yes.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Is the hon. Member indicating that he wishes to ask a question?

Mr. Barnett: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I understood the hon. Member was willing to allow me a question before he concluded his remarks.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Go ahead.

Mr. Barnett: When the hon. Member refers to the fact the scope of this legislation was limited by an accounting mentality, did he have in mind that the Minister defined under the Act is the Minister of Finance?

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Cashin: I do not at all, because I have always regarded the Minister of Finance as much more of an economist and sociologist than an accountant.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few brief remarks about the resolution under consideration. Even though I am taking part in the debate, I am not to be considered as an expert on fisheries, but rather as an amateur who, like the hon.

member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin), goes trout fishing occasionally. As a matter of fact, I would hope officials of the Department of Fisheries could lend both of us a hand so that we might be luckier and, thus, happier.

A few weeks ago I visited a part of the country where fishing is one of the principal means of subsistence. The fishermen I met there made me promise to take the first opportunity I would have in the house to make their views known to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud).

As you are aware, Mr. Chairman, those fishermen are good citizens and they often experience great hardship in plying their trade. Since the Minister of Fisheries knows very well the conditions under which our fishermen live, he will undoubtedly give all his attention to the problems I will submit to him as briefly as possible.

The New Brunswick fishermen I met asked me to make representations to the minister and ask him to fulfil the promise made to them during the last election campaign, to set up a 12-mile zone. They also asked that it be done as soon as possible.

They also convinced me that a great number of fishermen from other countries still come to our shores in order to benefit from our natural resources which, they feel, belong to them.

These fishermen also reminded me that they had been promised, with much fanfare, that as soon as a Liberal government came to power, their problems would be settled, along with those of all other sectors of the Canadian economy.

But they wonder when the government will take action, because however commendable it may be to lend the fishermen more money, what good is it to open the national coffers so that they may go deeper into debt, if they are not allowed to have a territory in which to earn a decent living?

Mr. Chairman, I shall say no more, except to urge the Minister to act and to put into effect, after two years, what he and his associates of the Maritimes have promised, with so much publicity, during the last electoral campaigns.

The time to act has come and, on behalf of New Brunswick fishermen, I ask the minister to deal with their problems, which he fervently promised to do when he was in opposition.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, will the hon. member allow me a question?

[Mr. Ricard.]

Mr. Ricard: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Robichaud: Can the hon. member tell me in what part of New Brunswick he met these fishermen?

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I went to Newcastle and, more specifically, I was in the riding which the Minister of Fisheries represents here. Moreover, I must tell him that the comments I heard with regard to his lack of interest in the fate of fishermen, whom he previously held so dear, were far from complimentary.

[English]

Mr. Coates: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to hold up the passage of this resolution for any length of time, as I understand it is the intention of the House to complete the consideration of both the resolution and the bill today. I should like to mention one or two points, in view of the fact that there are many fishermen in my constituency who will be affected in a very helpful way by the recommendations contained in this resolution.

Obviously this resolution has been designed to make the fishermen aware of what is available to them in the form of credit. The former Minister of Fisheries pointed out that one third of the loans that had been approved under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, involving 25 per cent of the total amount that has been loaned, have been made to fishermen in the Province of Prince Edward Island. That certainly is not the largest province with a fishing industry, nor does it have the biggest fishing fleet in Canada, and the former Minister of Fisheries can take a good deal of credit in this regard. The people of the Atlantic provinces were much impressed by his policies in respect of this industry when he held the ministerial portfolio. I have no axe to grind with the present Minister of Fisheries, but I should like to say that it would indeed be difficult to find a man more interested in the problems of fishermen and the fisheries industry than the senior Member for Queens, the former Minister of Fisheries.

One of the problems I have encountered in speaking with the fishermen of my constituency relates to the fact that many of them are not anxious to go to banks to obtain loans. Over the years some of them have no doubt encountered difficulty in convincing bank managers that their operations are all that they feel they are. I hope the Minister will make certain that all fishermen are aware of the changes that are to be made to the Act and that the Government will guarantee the loans in question. I hope the Minister can convince these fishermen that they should go to their banks to obtain the loans they require.

It might well be that we would be better off if we were to establish a board rather than requiring fishermen to go to banks to secure loans. Quite often fishermen and other people are more willing to make application to a Government board for a loan than they are to approach a bank manager for the same purpose. While I do not necessarily know that this would be the solution to the problem, it is quite evident that there is a problem because the fishermen are not taking advantage of the provisions of the Act in the manner we would like them to. There is not much sense in increasing the amount available to fishermen by way of loans if they are not going to go to the banks to borrow the money.

The Minister of Fisheries represents a riding in the Maritime Provinces as I do and he is aware that a great many of our fishermen, especially lobster fishermen, would rather borrow money from the buyers of their product and operate in that manner than go to a bank to secure a loan. If they could be convinced that they could secure loans from the banks by making application for them, certainly they would have a much greater degree of independence than they have now in obtaining loans from the buyers of their product. Quite probably they would also secure a better price for their product and thus be in a much better financial position at the end of the year.

Something has to be done by the Minister and the Department to make fishermen aware of the availability of these loans and of the fact that they can go to a bank and get the money. In my view action must be taken with regard to these two points. As I have said, we might be wiser to set up a board to which fishermen could apply directly for loans, rather than following the present method. There is no doubt there is much more speed and efficiency associated with the securing of a loan under the present method. I am not one who usually wants to promote Government bureaucracy and red tape, but at the same time there is not much sense in having legislation on the statute books if people are not going to take advantage of it.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word or two on this very important matter. Fishing is of tremendous importance to Prince Edward Island. The Almighty has blessed us in that our soil produces the finest potatoes in the world and our sea produces the best lobsters. Beyond that remark I will not go in the qualitative judgment of our commodities.

I should like to say that I appreciate the boost from the hon. Member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. Quebec and the Maritimes have a good deal in common in that on many issues we are probably not getting our fair share of the economic wherewithal of Confederation and perhaps we should be allied more often than we are in presenting our case to the Dominion entity.

I was, as I always am, impressed with the wisdom of my senior and I may say older colleague—appearances to the contrary that is a factual statement—the former Minister of Fisheries who was a most excellent minister representing a fishing province. What he has said I endorse completely, as I do the general remarks made by my colleagues from the Maritimes.

One is impressed and somewhat disturbed that so little use is made of this opportunity by our fishermen. It certainly is not that they are so well off, because many of them are far from it. I notice that Prince Edward Islanders are doing better in this regard than the fishermen of some other provinces. As the hon. Member for Cumberland has pointed out, I think it is incumbent upon the Government and the Minister actually to do something more to publicize the opportunities available and I hope he will do more. As my colleague here suggests, perhaps he could put his picture in the newspapers like the Minister of Labour did. This might do something in this regard. I will not say what it would do, but the fact is that more publicity is required.

I am impressed too that although this legislation has been on the statute books for some time there is, so far as I can recall, no gesture of financial assistance toward any industry which has cost the Government so little. When one contrasts the amount of loans and the amount of repayments he sees that there has been a very small outlay in terms of the tax dollar. I am not suggesting that there be more and more claims or that there be a lack of payment, but certainly we must all be seized with the idea that here is a measure of assistance with which the people in the industry are obviously not familiar, and that very little is being done that any private financial agency is not doing in the normal course of events.

There is one other aspect that concerns me which I may have a chance to discuss later.

I refer to the occasional drastic need for financial assistance which comes to our fishermen because of the elements and the destruction of gear, traps and so on. With a short season one wonders whether the machinery is sufficiently geared to meet that kind of need. But, like my other colleagues, in general I support the resolution and I suppose as good a way to support it as any is by not prolonging the discussion thereon.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I believe some hon. Members are expecting replies to the questions they have asked. First, I want to express my appreciation for the support which all Members who have spoken have given to the proposed amendments. I agree with the two hon. Members for Queens and the hon. Member for Cumberland that every possible action should be taken in order to advertise this legislation and try to make it more popular, more practical and, if at all possible, more available to the fishermen. I hope I will not have to agree to the suggestion made by the last Member who spoke, and have my picture put in the newspaper. I believe this would be of no assistance in making the legislation more available to fishermen. I know that most fishermen know me well enough that they do not need to see my picture in the newspapers.

The hon. Member for Comox-Alberni referred to the fishing zone legislation passed some 11 months ago. I have no doubt that the hon. Member is very conscious of his responsibility toward the fishing industry of his province and also of his responsibility in regard to our international relations with other countries. I am sure the hon. Member would not suggest that we take immediate, drastic action that could jeopardize our good international relations by adopting measures which could be detrimental to the fishing industry of his province as well as that of other parts of the country. He suggested in his remarks that nothing has been done about the fisheries development program such as we undertook to do following the Federal-Provincial Conference held some 15 months ago.

I am sure that the hon. Member is well aware of the increased assistance which has been granted for the construction of fishing vessels, including vessels built for ground fishing operations in his own Province of British Columbia. I am sure the hon. Member would not suggest we take action now to facilitate the construction of additional fishing vessels for the salmon industry. We would not be logical. According to the statistics advanced by the hon. Member we should exercise some control in an industry which, many of us believe and perhaps rightly, is being over-exploited. We would not be logical, therefore to assist in building more fishing vessels for that particular industry. I could say the same thing about the lobster industry on the Atlantic cost. I do not believe it would be logical for us to provide facilities for the construction of additional lobster fishing boats when we are trying to control this fishery which many of us believe is over-exploited.

The hon. Member knows also of the changes which have been made in the fishermen indemnity plan and the large number of cost-sharing programs which are now under way in the different provinces, along with the centralization program which has been introduced in Newfoundland, as well as the grants assistance program which has been announced by the Prime Minister on June 7 and which would provide in designated areas a subsidy of 33⅓ per cent for new processing industries or the extension of existing industries. These are only some of the measures which have been introduced recently in order to get this national program under way.

Now, most Members of this House are familiar with the operations of the different provincial loan boards. I do not believe it is the responsibility of the Federal Government to induce or force the Province of British Columbia to establish a provincial loan board. These loan boards have been very effective in the Atlantic Provinces and in the Province of Quebec. They have provided direct lending to fishermen. I am personally familiar with many of them and I had the responsibility of initiating such a board in the Province of New Brunswick in 1946. I was the secretary of that board for over six years. Since then, this board has lent millions of dollars to fishermen in the Province of New Brunswick. Similar boards exist in the Province of Nova Scotia, and other Atlantic Provinces and they have been very successful.

The hon. Member for Cumberland suggested that a Federal loan board might be established. I would be afraid that if such a measure were introduced it would lead to overlapping. Provincial loan boards are more familiar with the needs of the fishermen in their respective provinces and, as I have said, they have been very effective. I want to say too, that as suggested by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat, we will try to find ways and means for making this legislation better known and, if at all possible, influence the banks to allow the fishermen to take greater advantage of it. The hon. Member for Queens-Lunenburg referred to a pamphlet which has been published to advertise this legislation. Personally, I thought this pamphlet, which was introduced under the previous administration, was quite effective. In view of the suggestion made by the hon. Member, we will try to improve it and make it still better.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Plourde) mentioned, concerning the sale of fish, that the Haitian government made an offer to purchase $3 million worth of fish.

In the fishing industry the difficulty is not to sell fish but to produce an abundance of high quality fish. We can now market all the fish we can produce.

If the province of Quebec, at the time this offer was made, could not meet the requirements as far as quality of quantity is concerned, it is because it was able to sell its catches on markets offering a better price. In the abovementioned case, of which I was aware, the offer related to the purchase of a certain quantity of dried cod for which the market is rather limited. Fishermen of the province of Quebec, like those of the Atlantic provinces, prefer perhaps a more modern or practical way of preparing fish according to the market demand.

As to the remarks of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard), the government of his province and not the federal government is responsible for trout production.

[English]

The hon. Member for Burin-Burgeo has suggested that we should provide credit for fishermen on the same terms as that available for farmers. I must say, Mr. Chairman, that the credit facilities made available to fishermen are comparable to those made available to farmers. I would say in many ways they are superior because we offer to fishermen certain subsidies for the construction of vessels or equipment which are not available to farmers. We provide subsidies of 25 to 50 per cent for the construction of certain types of vessels and there are many farmers who would like to have the same advantage in the purchase of their equipment.

The hon. Member for Queens-Lunenburg referred to the definition of "fisherman". I believe if he had read clauses 2 and 3 of the regulations, he would have noticed that a fisherman was not only a person who had an equitable or legal interest in a fishing vessel but also in a weir or similar fish catching device. If he has any interest in this fishing equipment or if he is qualified for a licence, then he can qualify for a loan.

Mr. Crouse: Will the Minister permit a question at that point? What would be the status of a fisherman who applied for a loan under this Act if, prior to his application, he was engaged entirely on a deep sea trawler and had no share in the trawler, or in any weir or any other piece of fishing equipment, but decided to leave deep sea fishing and participate in the inshore fishing industry, for which he would need a loan? What would he use to justify his situation as a fisherman?

Mr. Robichaud: According to my interpretation of this Act and the regulations thereunder such a fisherman would be qualified for a loan because he would meet the main requirements of the Act. He would be in a position to place a certain deposit on his gear, which would be an equity in the gear, and I believe that under the Act he would qualify.

Now, the hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay- Labrador has suggested we should find more practical ways of giving capital assistance to the fishermen. I want to assure the hon. Member we are now studying that possibility. The hon. Member for Kent (Ont.), has argued that the inland fisherman cannot benefit to the same degree as the coastal fisherman under the present legislation, which is in fact applicable to inland as well as coastal fisheries. I have already explained to the hon. Member that in recent months the Government had a number of meetings with representatives of the Governments of the inland provinces and of Ontario to study the possibility of extending to those areas the same facilities which are available to the coastal provinces. We note the willingness of the provinces to join in some of these programs, and if this is done I want to assure the hon. Member that the Federal Government will be prepared to co-operate.

In reply to the hon. Member for St. John's West, I may say I agree with him that we must assist the small boat owner during this transition period. I am convinced that some fishermen will easily acquire such boats and we will try to do whatever we can to assist them during this transition period.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope I have answered most of the questions that were addressed to me. If this resolution is accepted by the House, I would hope I would have unanimous consent to proceed to second reading.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Barnett: Perhaps while we are in committee on the resolution I might be permitted to address one or two questions to the Minister which might serve to avoid carrying on an extended discussion at other stages of the bill. I was interested in what the Minister had to say about the credit facilities offered by provincial loan boards in the Atlantic Provinces. He suggested that the funds made available ran into millions of dollars. I can understand that the Minister may not have detailed figures available to him today when we are dealing with Federal legislation, but I should be glad to have further particulars about these loan boards.

I should like to relate this information to remarks I made when I was quoting from a brief by the Government of Newfoundland. The Premier of that Province suggested that loans made to farmers under comparable legislation had been on a scale a thousand times greater than loans to fishermen under fisheries legislation. In order to put this into perspective I should like to refer to a table with which I am sure the Minister is familiar. This table indicates that the net product value of agriculture is some 20 times as great as the net product value of the fisheries. I am trying to get a picture of the total credit facilities available to fishermen as compared with those available to farmers, and the degree to which money available from provincial loan boards closes the gap between 20 to 1 and 1,000 to 1.

Mr. Robichaud: I do not have complete information with me this afternoon, but the Province of New Brunswick has lent close to $10 million since the inception of their Loan Board Act in 1946. This year I believe more than $2 million was included for this purpose in their estimates. The figures for Nova Scotia may be somewhat higher. In proportion to the number of fishermen in the two provinces, the figures for Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island would be about the same.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

Mr. Barnett: I have one other point to raise with reference to the Minister's comment that he was sure I would not want to see more boats and gear go into an already overcrowded salmon industry in British Columbia. Let me make it clear I am one of those who have pointed out that something needs to be done about this situation. On the other hand I have heard many Members of this House representing farming constituencies express concern about what they refer to as vertical integration. My feeling is that vertical integration came to the fishing industry long before the farmers began to talk about it. I am wondering whether or not provision for credit is such as will enable fishermen to extricate themselves from the position in which many of them now find themselves.

Let me make my meaning clear. One of the papers which provides background information for the fisheries conference points out that traditionally many of the borrowing requirements of fishermen have been supplied by the merchants or processors who buy the fish. This source of credit has always been used, though the tendency now is to turn to other sources of credit. I should like the Minister to tell us how far this legislation will go to closing this gap. Are the arrangements adequate to enable a practising fisherman to extricate himself from a state of virtual peonage such as has existed over many years?

Mr. Robichaud: There is no doubt this legislation will constitute an improvement compared with the existing legislation. I would point out particularly that the "ceiling" has been raised from $4,000 to $10,000.

Again, I cannot take responsibility for the provisions made by British Columbia which has not its own loan board. Possibly they do not see any need for a further extension of credit. Possibly they consider that over-fishing is already taking place in some cases, and they do not wish to see fishermen engaged in the salmon fishing operation. We are now providing a 50 per cent subsidy on the construction of fishing vessels for groundfish operations on the West Coast. This will be of some assistance. I know that in the Atlantic Provinces fishermen are taking the best possible advantage of the existing loan boards.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Robichaud thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-121, to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall this bill be read the second time?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, we are willing to have it read the second time now, but we hope that when we get into Committee of the Whole the Minister will be willing to have that discussion put off to another sitting.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): As far as this party is concerned we would be quite agreeable to passing second reading of the bill. It is a very simple bill and there is nothing in the bill except what is contained in the resolution. It involves just a change of three words —the date and the amount, I am informed. If the House agreed, it would seem advisable to us to proceed with second reading and pass all stages of the bill, although in ordinary circumstances it is not a good practice to do this in the case of complicated bills containing a number of provisions.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By unanimous consent.

Mr. Robichaud moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

Mr. Winch: May I at this time raise a question of privilege?

The Chairman: Order, please. We are now in Committee of the Whole and this is not a proper time at which to raise a question of privilege.

On clause 1—

● (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, we will go a step further than I indicated a moment ago. We will agree to putting the bill through the committee stage today, but we think it might be better to hold third reading until another day.

Mr. Robichaud: This is perfectly agreeable, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct one question only to the Minister. Have I an undertaking that the Minister will see if something can be done to remove the block that exists with regard to inland fishermen receiving loans? This is quite a problem. I wonder if I could have an undertaking on that matter.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the hon. Member followed the reply that I gave a few moments ago to the questions he had asked. I said that loans under this legislation are available to inland fishermen as well as they are to coastal fishermen. In so far as Fishermen's Loan Boards are concerned, we have instituted Federal-Provincial Committees which have been meeting quite regularly in recent months to study the possibility of extending to the inland provinces not only loans which are available from provincial loan boards, although this is a decision to be taken by the provinces, but also assistance under the indemnity program. So we are doing everything possible to co-operate and I hope that we are not too far from agreement on this matter.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I just want to point out to the Committee, in passing, that I think great credit should be given to the fishermen of Canada who have taken advantage of this Act for the fact that during the whole of its existence there have been only three cases when claims have had to be paid by the Federal Government, and the total amount of actual expenditure on behalf of the Federal Government because of default in loan repayments is only $615. I think this is an extraordinary record. I want to say again that I think one of the reasons this Act is used in my Province more than in others, proportionately, is that the fishermen there are mostly part time fishermen and most of them are also farmers. They are therefore thoroughly familiar with financing under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, and having formed that habit they turn naturally to this Act. I have nothing more to say at the present time, Mr. Chairman, except that the other hon. Member for Queens, my hon. friend and colleague, made a statement which I think might in certain hon. Members' minds call into question his veracity when he said I was several years younger than him. Incredible as this may seem, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member is perfectly correct and that is the fact.

Mr. Walker: You would never know.

Questions of Privilege

PRIVILEGE

MR. WINCH—DORION INQUIRY—PRESS REPORT OF FINDINGS

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, is this a time when I can rise on a matter of personal and House of Commons privilege of which I have given you notice?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member can state his question of privilege.

Mr. Winch: I would like very much, Sir, to raise a matter of not only personal privilege, but I think House of Commons privilege. It is not my intention to quote to Your Honour Standing Orders, custom or precedent. I approach you, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of one point alone, and that is that in your position and under your office and oath you are, Sir, the embodiment of the protection of the rights and privileges of Members of the House of Commons.

My question of privilege, therefore, Sir, on that basis and that basis alone, is to ask your consideration of what in my experience in the 12 years I have been in the House of Commons is one of the greatest insults given to yourself as Speaker, Sir, the Government and the House of Commons, in that in a newspaper published in Ottawa this afternoon, the Ottawa Citizen, there is a report of a Royal Commission, the Dorion Commission. The evidence, Sir, is there for all to see, because in the first paragraph it says:

> Chief Justice Frederic Dorion's report on his judicial inquiry will be handed to the Government on Monday, June 28, the day Prime Minister Pearson returns to his desk from London.

Mr. Speaker, that is ten days from today. Then four paragraphs later it says:

> Although inquiry staff will not discuss Judge Dorion's findings, a source who claims to be informed—and whose record in situations of this sort in the past has been remarkably accurate—gives this preview of Judge Dorion's conclusions:

Not only do we then have what purports to be, on this authoritative source, the report of Chief Justice Frederic Dorion but we also have, Sir—and this is of the utmost importance—a photograph on the front page of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) bearing the caption "Questions", and the picture of another Minister with the caption "Cleared". Then on page 3 the article is headed "Dorion preview". I say, Sir, that this is an absolute insult to the Commissioner, Chief Justice Dorion, an insult to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), an insult to the Government, an insult to the House of Commons, and should be investigated immediately.

[Mr. Walker.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. Member had given notice approximately an hour ago of his intention to raise a question of privilege. I had at the time very serious doubts as to whether there was a real question of privilege, and I would like to refer the hon. Member to Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, Citation 105(2), which says:

> It is the practice in the House of Commons to bring up a question of privilege after prayers, and before the House has taken up the Orders of the Day. Only in very aggravated cases, requiring the immediate interposition of the House, will any business be suddenly interrupted.

The complaint of the hon. Member may or may not be well founded. But I would suggest to him that if there is a question of privilege, which I doubt, but about which I do not feel at this time I should be called upon to make a ruling, this matter should be raised at the proper time. That would be Monday, before the orders of the day.

Mr. Winch: Of course I always bow to the Speaker's ruling, but may I say that if there was ever an aggravated case of insulting the House of Commons, the Prime Minister and the Government, this surely is it.

HOUSING

ADDITIONAL OFFICERS FOR CROWN CORPORATION

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-8, to amend the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

• (4:50 p.m.)

On clause 1.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps the Minister would make a brief explanation on clause 1.

Mr. Nicholson: This Bill was passed in the other place on May 27 after full and careful consideration by the Committee on Banking and Commerce. A transcript of the proceedings before that Committee is available and some hon. Members have seen it. I understand the hon. Member for Yukon has had an opportunity of perusing it.

Briefly, the bill provides for the appointment of two additional Vice Presidents of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Corporation or agency charged with the administration of the National Housing Act. The work of the Corporation over the 20 years that it has been in existence has expanded to such an extent that the appointment of these two additional officers, both in the opinion of the directors of the Corporation and in my opinion as the responsible Minister, is overdue and I hope that this Committee will give speedy consideration to the legislation which permit the appointment of these two additional Vice Presidents.

I might say that the principal functions of the Corporation today fall into three categories—lending and mortgage operations, urban development and public housing, and administration and finance. Each of these categories demands top level direction. I would hope that this committee, in view of the very careful consideration given this bill in the other place, would see fit to approve of the speedy passage of this legislation.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, certainly this party wishes to expedite passage of this legistion. I have had an opportunity of carefully reading the proceedings in the other place and most of the questions which could have been asked were answered by the Minister before the Committee of the other place. However, he might give the Committee his assurance that Mr. Hignett, the present President of the Corporation, will be continued as President and that there is no intention of disturbing that position. He might also inform us, if he can, what the intended salaries are for the two additional Vice Presidents; and perhaps he would tell us whether or not the Corporation has made any recommendations, to his knowledge, as to the individuals who will be recommended for appointment to these two additional positions.

Mr. Nicholson: It is certainly the intention to continue Mr. Hignett as President. He was appointed last year, on the death of Mr. Stewart Bates for the term of seven years; he has nearly six years to go. At the same time as Mr. Hignett was appointed one of the senior executive directors, Mr. Jean Lupien, was appointed as Vice President—the only Vice President—at that time. His term has still approximately six years to go.

As far as salaries are concerned it would have been infra dig or quite improper for the board to consider salaries until Parliament has acted in this matter. Under the Act and the proposed amendment, the salaries will be fixed by the board of the Corporation, subject to approval by the Government.

I can state that the present salary of the President of the Corporation is $25,000. The salary of the only Vice President is something less than that. As mentioned these two men will continue as the two senior executives of the Corporation. This gives some idea of the ceiling on what might be expected to be the salary of the new Vice Presidents; it will be in the range of $21,000 to $25,000. That is only an estimate; the Board of Directors have to make a recommendation to the Government.

Mr. Nielsen: As indicated in the proceedings the salaries of the two Vice Presidents who are going to be added by this legislation will be somewhat less than the existing Vice President. Could the Minister answer the last part of my series of questions, namely whether or not, to his knowledge, there have been any recommendations made with respect to the personnel who are to fill the two new posts. Perhaps he cannot answer that but he might give the Committee the assurance that the Corporation will select these gentlemen from within the Corporation.

Mr. Nicholson: In answer to the question which has been put, no such recommendations have been made to me. When the President and the other representatives on the Board came to see me they informed me that they do have men of the calibre required within the organization, who would no doubt be considered for these posts.

Mr. Rapp: I take it these two additional Vice Presidents will not be appointed from certain regions but from the Corporation itself?

Mr. Nicholson: They will be working executives of the Corporation chosen for their abilities, not for geographic reasons.

Mr. Pepin: I have two short questions, Mr. Chairman. First, what are to be the functions, in general terms, of the two new Vice Presidents? Second, what are to be the relations between the present Vice President and the new ones?

Mr. Nicholson: Under the amending bill now before the Committee for consideration the present Vice President, who was appointed to the Board of Directors by the Board with the approval of the Government, will continue as the only Vice President on the Board. His salary, as has already been intimated in the Committee of the other place, will be higher than that of the two new Vice Presidents, who I hope will soon be appointed.

We are fortunate in having as the sole Vice President at the present time a man of outstanding ability whose background is in the lending and mortgage field. It is hoped that he will continue to discharge those responsibilities, but at the same time in the absence of the President he would be the chief executive officer and perform the functions of President.

With regard to the other two Vice Presidents it is proposed, subject of course to what the Board may do and they may change their ideas on this—that one of them should be the senior officer and assume executive responsibility for urban development and public housing. Second Vice President who would be appointed would be in charge of the administration and finance branch.

Mr. Herridge: I have one question to ask the Minister. In view of the appointment of two Vice Presidents, does this mean that it will now be possible for senior officials like the President or the Vice Presidents to travel a little more across the country and become acquainted with actual conditions? I represent a district in which tremendous things are going on at the present time which require the particular study of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Would senior officers have an opportunity to see such developments?

Mr. Nicholson: That is one of their probable functions. Another factor which influenced me in making the recommendations to the Government which have been incorporated in this bill is that you now have in these important fields of urban renewal and public housing the necessity for sending a senior executive out across the country to speak for the Corporation. It was hoped that the three Vice Presidents, in whatever field their duties might fall, might be able to act as spokesmen for the Corporation in their respective fields, as suggested by the hon. Member.

Mr. Knowles: Just one question. There are to be three Vice Presidents. From a reading of the Act am I correct in assuming that one of them, the present one, is appointed by the Governor in Council, but that the other two are named by the Board of Directors?

Mr. Nicholson: They are to be appointed by the Board of Directors subject to approval by the Government. The existing Vice President has been designated as Vice President, and if the amending bill passes he will continue as the only Vice President who will be a member of the Board.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: The other two that are to be appointed are not then to be drawn from the other members of the Board of Directors?

Mr. Nicholson: No. I think it likely they will be chosen from among the senior working officials of the corporation.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, while we are discussing the subject of Vice Presidents and their duties, I should like to ask the Minister a question about which I am sure he will be interested in view of some of his other responsibilities. Has any consideration been given to having one of these Vice Presidents appointed from among those individuals who might be willing to take a special interest in the housing problems of the Indian people, and who might be prepared to promote within the Board greater activity and concern in respect of the development of an adequate program for Indian housing?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, wearing two hats as I now am, I should like to be able to give the hon. Member the assurance he is asking for, but housing for Indians is in a different category from housing for other Canadians because of the fact that Indian reserve lands are owned by the Crown and not by individuals. I certainly am interested in improving housing conditions for Indians living on the reserves as band members, as well as for those who live off the reserves. I am afraid that in this particular case the responsibilities to which I have referred are of such a nature that it should be left to the Board of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to make decisions as to the functions of the three Vice Presidents.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I was simply attempting to make the point that a Vice President with those responsibilities could perhaps wrestle with this problem of land ownership and title as it relates to the availability of housing to which the Minister has referred.

Mr. Pepin: I should like to make one point, Mr. Chairman. In the absence of the President would the present Vice President have full authority in respect of grants?

Mr. Nicholson: It is quite clear in the bill before the Committee that in the absence of the President the present Vice President will be the acting President with full authority.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to private Members' business I should like to have the unanimous consent of the House to consider an estimate of the Department of Labour, being in supplementary estimates (A). There is some urgency about this matter. I have spoken to the House Leaders of the various parties and have been informed that there will be no objection. This will only take two or three minutes to consider.

Mr. Knowles: D'accord.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister explain this item?

Mr. MacNaught: I will make an explanation, yes.

SUPPLY

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

8a. Payments in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the Governor in Council under the Winter House Building Incentive Program during the fiscal years 1964-65 and 1965-66 of $500 per dwelling unit substantially built during the period November 15, 1964 to March 31, 1965—To extend to April 15 1965 the termination date of the period referred to in Labour Vote 8b of the Appropriation Act No. 10, 1964; to authorize payments in the current fiscal year of undischarged commitments under Labour Vote 34d of the Appropriation Act No. 5, 1963; and to supplement the said Vote 8b, $2,000,000.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Chairman, on March 23 the Minister of Labour announced in the House that the winter works house building incentive program period for construction was being extended to April 15, 1965. In making that announcement he said it was the Government's intention to place before the House a supplementary estimate for the fiscal year 1965-66 to authorize the extension to the program. On May 18 supplementary estimates (A), the ones now under consideration, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966, were tabled in the House. These estimates consist solely of an item designed to authorize the extension of the program. In order to make payments on claims on hand and claims that are being received daily in respect of houses completed during the period from April 1 to April 15, it is important that this supplementary estimate pass as soon as possible.

Mr. Knowles: Carried.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I should just like to say that this is most necessary and we all agree with the extension and its purpose.

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Chairman, I object to this procedure. I think every Member of this House should have a copy of the supplementary estimates. I think they should be tabled in the House and that every Member should have a copy.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, these supplementary estimates for the Department of Labour were distributed to every Member of the House several days ago.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

The House in Committee of Ways and Means—Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (for the Minister of Finance) moved:

That toward making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1966, the sum of $2,000,000 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. MacNaught (for Mr. Gordon) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-122, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for public service for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1966.

Motion agreed to, bill read first and second times, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: Five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private Members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING APPLICATION TO MENTALLY RETARDED PERSONS

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-7, to amend the Juvenile Delinquents Act (application to mentally retarded).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill which I have introduced is to confer upon the mentally retarded the protection of the Juvenile Delinquents Act. The philosophy of that Act is now expressed in section 3, subsection 2, which states:

> Where a child is adjudged to have committed a delinquency he shall be dealt with, not as an offender, but as one in a condition of deliquency and therefore requiring help and guidance and proper supervision.

This is more fully expressed in section 38 which reads as follows:

> This Act shall be liberally construed to the end that its purpose may be carried out, namely, that the care and custody and discipline of a juvenile delinquent shall approximate as nearly as may be that which should be given by its parents, and that as far as practicable every juvenile delinquent shall be treated, not as a criminal, but as a misdirected and misguided child, and one needing aid, encouragement, help and assistance.

In section 2, subsection 1, "child" is defined as meaning "any boy or girl apparently or actually under the age of 16 years, or such other age as may be directed in any province pursuant to subsection 2". The operative word here is "apparently". Our legal processes rest upon the comprehension of the accused of the nature of his crime and of the court proceedings subsequent to it. Chronological age is of no consequence if an accused is mentally defective and unable to comprehend. Therefore in my amendment chronological age and mental age are taken into account in the definition of the word "child".

Section 12 of the Criminal Code states:

> No person shall be convicted of an offence in respect of an act or omission on his part while he was under the age of seven years.

Section 13 provides as follows:

> No person shall be convicted of an offence in respect of an act or omission on his part while he was seven years of age or more, but under the age of fourteen years, unless he was competent to know the nature and consequences of his conduct and to appreciate that it was wrong.

While mental retardates within these mental age limits cannot be regarded exactly as children of these chronological ages, it is still true that their comprehension is not such that they should be treated as adult criminals. It is within the philosophy of the Juvenile Delinquents Act to accord them the privileges of that Act. They should not, for their own good as well as for the good of the community, be exposed to the usual public and trial processes of the criminal courts. Even if they are adjudged offenders, they can neither comprehend nor benefit from the kind of punishment usually given an adult offender.

Under the Canadian law at present an insane or mentally defective offender may be detained in a place of safekeeping under an order of the Lieutenant Governor of a province and never be brought to trial. This is contained in section 527 of the Criminal Code. I do not believe that such a situation should be allowed to exist, but that is not the point at issue today. The point is that a mentally retarded person can be arrested and charged and be subjected to full publicity. He can be incarcerated for years or for a lifetime with no trial, and he and his family continue to bear the stigma of an unproven crime. This is not permitted to occur in juvenile offences and it should not occur in offences by retardates.

All of us are aware of cases in which the present laws inflict grave hardship. A recent case in Canada involved a man of 25 charged with a criminal offence. His mental age was six years. It was obvious that he did not understand the nature of the crime and certainly did not understand the criminal proceedings brought against him. In addition, he was not even capable of committing the crime. Even so, this case received full publicity at the time, with its attendant hardships upon the family of the accused.

I should like to refer to a statement by Mr. Justice Thompson of the Ontario Supreme Court in which he said that everyone charged with a crime must, as a matter of constitutional right, be capable of understanding the nature of the proceedings and comprehending their course, must be able to plead and properly instruct counsel and be able to make proper and full answer and defence. Children cannot do this. Neither can mental retardates. They should not be charged and prosecuted publicly any more than children should. They are not insane adults; they are retarded adults and they should be given the same legal protection as children. They should enjoy the legal privileges conferred under the Juvenile Delinquents Act, and I urge all hon. Members to give this matter their serious consideration.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill No. C-7 having to do with mentally retarded persons and the application to them of the Juvenile Delinquents Act. The bill introduced by the hon. Member for Hamilton South (Mr. Howe) proposes to include mentally retarded persons who have a mental age of under 16 years or under 18 years according to the discretion of the Governor in Council. The bill also proposes to extend the Act to include the concept of mental age in addition to the factor of chronological age.

In this matter, as in all other matters which involve the social and medical sciences, I think we should take into consideration the whole problem in the light of its historical and present development. The mentally retarded do present difficulties not only in our society endeavouring to obtain social justice for all but, in particular, when trying to apply the laws relating to criminal procedures and rehabilitation practices. While available statistics place the prevalence of clearly established retardation at 3 per cent of the population, a school age population survey showed that there were as high as 10 per cent who if not clinically mentally deficient are at least on the borderline and require special training in school. May I bring to the attention of the hon. Member a statement made by Dr. Henry Dunn, Professor of Pediatrics in the University of British Columbia, who said that this gigantic problem, numerically as well as socially, is the most important chronic disability of children in Canada today.

So far as our country is concerned, 3 per cent is the generally accepted estimate of those who are mentally retarded—that is persons who have an I.Q. or intelligence quotient below 75. This would mean that there are in Canada approximately 570,000 mentally retarded persons. This also presents us with the problem of a possible annual increase of 14,000. Statistically, these mentally retarded persons can be divided into three groups. First, there are the mildly retarded, those with intelligence quotients of 50 to 75, who are placed in the educatable class. Second, there are the mildly retarded, those with I.Q.'s of 29 to 49 who are considered trainable; and third, the severely retarded, those with I.Q.'s of 0 to 24 who are so severely handicapped that they usually spend the major part of their lives in institutions.

It is true that there are slightly different classifications of the mentally retarded, such as the ones set up by the World Health Organization, according to international statistical classifications and standards. Such minor discrepancies, however, and the different views on this subject by eminent psychiatrists, add to the difficulties in dealing with this subject.

Now, I draw to the attention of the hon. Member for Hamilton South (Mr. Howe) that his statement to the effect that science and technology enable us to define the mental age of a person in terms of equivalent chronological age, is rather an over-simplification. I could quote many references which would indicate, first, that mental retardation is not a singular medical or mental entity but is a multi-faceted phenomenon with many presumptive causes and a wide variety of manifestations. Second, the adequate classification of children or adults as mentally retarded persons cannot be simply accomplished by the routine application of standardized intelligence tests, but entails numerous other assessments and evaluations of a social, medical and psychological kind. Third, that notwithstanding the technical validity of measuring intelligence in terms of mental age, the assumption that an adult is like or can be treated like a child of comparable intelligence is, on various physiological and psychological grounds, untenable.

May I quote from Dr. Dunner Dybwad, Director Mental Retardation Project, International Union for Child Welfare, Geneva, Switzerland. He stated recently that as one reads about and sees in various countries the tremendous advances being made in the social and vocational habilitation of the adolescent and adult retardates, one notes the extent to which objective social conditions produce in some of these individuals problems which are clearly within the field of adult psychiatry, but for which most adult clinics are as yet not prepared to offer supporting and therapeutic services. He continued by saying that the great social and educational advances in mental retardation made during the past ten years in North America, in Europe, Australia and Japan, might well be summarized in the statement that we have conclusively disproven the old myth that the mentally retarded are "eternal children". As countries throughout the world are now mobilizing a major interdisciplinary and interagency attack on mental retardation, the contribution of psychiatry, along with pediatrics and other medical specialties and those of education, rehabilitation and social work, must be increasingly clarified and translated into functioning programs.

The purpose, Mr. Speaker, of the existing Juvenile Delinquency Act is primarily to assist delinquent children and adolescents with their social adjustments through the proper program of rehabilitation. This rehabilitation depends a great deal upon guidance and efforts of mental health specialists as well as psychiatrists, psychologists, social workers and also on the joint efforts of educators and criminologists. Assistance to the parental homes, foster homes and the special programs in the reform institutions are included in such efforts. The basic assumption in this field is that the delinquent individuals are amenable to rehabilitation and all such efforts would eventually repay the community for the expenditure of money and professional resources. The mentally ill and mentally defective individuals usually require specialized care different from the typical management of juvenile delinquents. Mentally ill children and adolescents are cared for by psychiatric services on the outpatient basis or in a special institution. Similar programs are developing in Canada in highly specialized care of the mentally defective such as, for instance, at the London, Ontario, Institute for Studies in Mental Deficiencies. Mixing together the three groups of juvenile delinquents, namely mentally ill children, adolescents, and mentally defectives would obviously impair efficient functioning of any of such programs.

Other critics rightly charge that intelligence tests leave untouched many important aspects of personality like interests, motives, attitudes, or social adaptability. One must, however, recall that these tests do not pretend to measure personality. In fact, no one test ever has been devised, and perhaps never will be devised, that measures all aspects of personality. The best procedure, when a complete personality picture is desired, is to make a case study of an individual's background and experience, and to supplement it with a variety of tests, not only those measuring intelligence but also those measuring special aptitudes, achievements, interests, attitudes and other phases of personality.

Many persons were shocked when Terman announced that the average adult intelligence is equal to that of a 16 years old. Even more shocking was the fact that Army Alpha tests placed the level at 14 years. People forget that psychologists define intelligence as capacity to learn, adaptability and mental alertness. In the tests, knowledge, information and experience are kept at a minimum, though these factors are bound to affect performance.

Fortunately, the I.Q. fad which raged during the 1920's and saw the term applied indiscriminately has declined. Intelligence tests are seen today in wiser perspective. What they can tell and what they cannot tell about a person's capacities are well recognized. They do one thing, that is, indicate mental alertness and learning ability. They do not take into account personality, special aptitudes and achievements, social adjustments, or many other factors that make for success or failure in life.

Therefore, it is open to question whether the presently applied technique of measuring mental deficiency by comparing the development of the defectives to normal development of an average child, is a precise scientific procedure. In simple terms, we recognize the steps of gradual development of intelligence of a so-called average child and compare to such a scale the intelligence displayed by mentally defectives in the so-called intelligence tests. Such an achieved level we call therefore mental age. By that token, while the average child with the chronological age of 12 is expected to pass the intelligence tests for the mental age of 12, a defective individual may reach the same mental age level in the tests while his chronological age may be 14, 16 or 20, depending on the degree of his deficiency. The expression of intelligence in terms of intelligence quotient, or I.Q., is obtained simply by dividing mental age by chronological age, and multiplied by 100 for convenience. The use of I.Q. is a convenient way for comparing various degrees of mental deficiency. At the same time, Dr. Victor Szyrynski, Professor of Psychiatry at the University of Ottawa, reminds us that the amount of intelligence as measured by the intelligence tests remains basically unchanged throughout the lifetime of an individual. We may see practically that when for instance an individual demonstrates at the chronological age of 16 the mental age of 11, this mental age would remain more or less constant for the remaining years of his life, and when he is 30, 40 or 60, his mental age will still be that of an 11 year old individual. Should such an individual benefit indefinitely from provisions of Bill C-7? I see no logical reason for treating a 40, 60 or 80 year old individual accused of criminal offence in juvenile court because his mental age is below 16.

The paradox of this logic becomes even more obvious if we consider children with superior intelligence. Would a 12 year old child with an I.Q. of 150, which gives him a mental age of 18, be considered outside the jurisdiction of a juvenile court?

Although the above-described method of measuring intelligence has been of some practical value, it is well known that intelligence tests have serious limitations. Professor Wechsler, one of the most outstanding American authorities on intelligence measurement says:

> Most psychologists are aware of the fact that when an adult of 30 years scores a mental age of 12 and a child of 12 scores a mental age of 12 their intelligence is not identical; yet there does not seem to be any general understanding as to why they are not identical. If what we have said above is correct, the answer is not hard to find. The basic reason a mental age of 12 at 12 years does not mean the same things as mental age of 12 at 30 years is that the measured abilities, and hence the mental age scores, represent different portions of the subjects' respective total intelligence. At age 12, the tests are capable of tapping far more of the individual's capacities than at 30.

In a similar way, Professor Coleman in the recent edition of his book "Abnormal Psychology" published in 1964 states:

> There has been much criticism of the practice of making diagnosis and/or commitments on the basis of I.Q. alone. For one thing, it is extremely difficult in many cases to make an accurate assessment of intellectual level. This is particularly true in the case of brain-damaged children. Often these children possess genuine ability but have difficulty in making adequate responses because of spasticity, athetosis, defective hearing or vision or other impairments. Even more important, the criterion of adaptive behavior is not revealed in an I.Q.—particularly in the case of individuals with only mild or moderate retardation. Some people with I.Q.s in the low 50s or 60s can support themselves and get along creditably in the community. This is particularly true of those who have received the advantages of training in state or private schools. Consequently, even when an individual's I.Q. is as low as 50, he may or may not need custodial care, depending on the level of his emotional, vocational, and social adjustments. Certainly, when an individual's I.Q. is in the 60s and he is making an adequate adjustment in the community there seems little point in labelling him as a mental retardate.

The situation becomes even more complex when we remember that intelligence measurement depends very largely on co-operation of the subject. It is also well known to psychiatrists and psychologists that results of intelligence tests under emotional stress are not very reliable. Still more, the proper results depend on the motivation of the subject to do his very best during testing. Though it is practically impossible to fake a higher intelligence than one actually possesses, there is nothing easier than to meet the tests with an indifferent, negativistic or malingering attitude in order to provide onself with the low range of mental deficiency. When an individual in trouble with the law realizes that he could change the aspect of legal procedures by displaying a dull attitude on testing, there would hardly be any objective way to measure his intelligence without going through his school or clinical files where his intelligence may, or may not, be recorded.

Furthermore, judging intelligence from the general behaviour of the individual and from clinical observations is notoriously subject to gross errors. There are mental defectives with unusually appealing "intelligent" expressions on their faces while not infrequently dull and primitive looking individuals may be endowed with supernormal intellectual brightness.

While in some cases mental deficiency and delinquency appear together, the current views are contrary to linking them in a causative relationship. There is an interesting study in the field, an article by Mr. Shulman in the Journal of Criminal Law and Criminology, 1951. It can be found at page 763—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I must advise the hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. Haidasz: If I might have the indulgence of the House to continue for a few moments I would make one or two further points and then sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the House give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Haidasz: May I add also that the psychological mechanisms operating in juvenile delinquency may be different from those which would bring mentally defectives in conflict with the law. This distinction is well demonstrated by Cyril Burt in his classical work "The Young Delinquent". On the other hand, in rehabilitation of the non-defective delinquents, we should take into account various psychodynamic situations not always applicable to the mentally defective population.

In conclusion I might emphasize that this rapid development of rehabilitation programs of juvenile deliquency merit all necessary attention. Still more, the preventive programs in the field of community mental health should be aimed at diminishing the occurence of delinquency.

Our mentally defective and mentally ill individuals merit all the necessary care and assistance which medical science makes available. Such efforts are in evidence throughout

Canada, and especially in the Province of Ontario where a special study is being made by Barry Swadron, a Toronto lawyer, who has been asked by the Minister of Health to conduct a two-year study of mental health and mental illness legislation in Canada.

Finally, may I add, Mr. Speaker, that Bill No. C-7 is premature and that further studies should be made in this field before we pass a bill such as this.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Hamilton South (Mr. Howe) has brought before the House a problem that is connected with that uneasy no man's land between the profession of law and the profession of medicine. Somebody remarked in the past that what was formerly a co-operative endeavour between the two professions has perhaps in recent years become almost a field of conflict. While the measure the hon. Member has put before the House today is perhaps not the best method of achieving the objective which he has in mind, I do not think anyone can question the soundness of his motives in bringing this particular matter before the House. He has indeed put his finger on an inadequacy in the law, an inadequacy in the sense that the mentally retarded person is not in the same situation medically as others, and even to a layman such as myself he is not in the same situation as those who are commonly treated as mentally incompetents under the Criminal Code. I think the changing attitude of our society and many other societies toward people of retarded mentality may in large measure be due to the very earnest efforts of retarded children's organizations over the past ten or more years, which have done their best to bring about in our society a better understanding of the problem of mental retardation. The efforts of these particular groups are not by any means spent, nor have they ceased to be necessary. They have at least achieved a certain success down the road to the ultimate objective whereby the person of mental retardation, and more particularly the mentally retarded child, will no longer be the object of derision, shame or even in some cases, fear, in our society. They have brought to society a recognition of the problem of mental retardation. They have brought this problem into the daylight and have created a concern generally that it should be recognized and dealt with out in the open. By way of aside, perhaps, I may say that no other family and no other group of individuals can take greater credit for this than the Kennedy family, whose interest in the problem arose from their own experience.

The difficulties of a person with retarded mental faculties are probably no more acute than when he is faced with the law of the land, and more particularly the criminal law; for the law has created a set of standards and procedures which it is assumed an adult person of average intelligence can comprehend in substance and can govern himself accordingly; that is, can comprehend in substance if not in technical detail. However, in the case of a person with retarded mentality, that assumption cannot be made. Problems of procedure, of treatment of the crime, of custody and of ultimate responsibility arise; problems which I may say are analogous to but are not identical with those which arise in dealing with children before the courts. I say they are analogous but not identical, Mr. Speaker, because the fully-grown, chronologically aged person is obviously different from a person of tender years, as has been so well pointed out by my hon. friend and colleague the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Haidasz).

The Juvenile Delinquents Act, which is the measure the hon. Member proposes to amend, was conceived entirely in the context of those of tender years. As the Parliamentary Secretary has already pointed out, it has created a series of measures and a regime of law which, while appropriate to younger persons is, in my submission, inappropriate to the problems, of adults of retarded mentality. I think perhaps the best way to illustrate the problems which I see arising from the shortcomings of the proposed measure would be to make reference to the actual terms of the Act. First there is the question of definitions. Section 2(1)(a) says:

> "child" means any boy or girl apparently or actually under the age of 16 years, or such other age as may be directed in any province pursuant to subsection (2);

Subsection (2) of the same section authorizes the Governor in Council by proclamation to—> —direct that in any province the expression "child" in this Act means any boy or girl apparently or actually under the age of 18 years—

In fact in five provinces in Canada the age for the purposes of this Statute is as follows: In Saskatchewan, Ontario, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island the age has been established to be 16. In the Provinces of British Columbia, Manitoba and Quebec a proclamation has been made under the Statute establishing the age limit at 18. In the Province of Alberta the age limit has been established at the level of 18 for girls and 16 for boys. In the Province of Newfoundland the provincial laws, so I am advised, under the Terms of Union still continue to govern the situation and have set the age at 17, the Juvenile Delinquents Act not having been proclaimed in respect of that Province.

The Statute, therefore, is very obviously intended for those of tender years. I would agree with the hon. Member for Parkdale who has pointed out that, for example, the intelligence test used to determine the mental age of children can be very deceptive and is obviously dependant upon a great many complicated factors. The choice of a chronological age is no more accurate or scientific than the choice of age by means of an intelligence test, but the choice of the chronological age does indicate the difficulties which legislatures have had in the past in providing a criterion and a dividing point which those responsible for the administration of the law may readily apply with some certainty of administering justice. Section 4 of the Statute provides:

> Save as provided in section 9, the Juvenile Court has exclusive jurisdiction in cases of delinquency including cases where, after the committing of the delinquency, the child has passed the age limit——to which I have already referred. This means that the ordinary courts of the land, depending upon the nature of the offence—the Magistrate's Court, the County Court, for example, in the Province of Ontario, or the High Court of Justice—do not have the jurisdiction at all over someone fitting within the criteria of the Statute. That jurisdiction has been removed altogether and has been put into the Juvenile Courts. The effect of these provisions and the difficulty of their application may be further illustrated by referring to section 8(1) which provides as follows:

> When any child is arrested, with or without a warrant, such child shall, instead of being taken before a justice, be taken before the Juvenile Court; and, if a child is taken before a justice, upon a summons or under a warrant or for any other reason, it is the duty of the justice to transfer the case to the Juvenile Court, and of the officer having the child in charge to take the child before that Court, and in any such case the Juvenile Court shall hear and dispose of the case in the same manner as if such child had been brought before it upon information originally laid therein.

What is clear, therefore, is that there is an absolute obligation on the police and the prosecuting authorities to determine the age of the child with reference to this particular Statute, and when the determination is made in the particular Province, whether it be 16, 17 or 18, if the child is below that age there is an obligation upon the authorities to bring the child before the Juvenile Court. As a matter of law, any proceedings taken in the ordinary criminal courts in relation to such child would therefore be null and void.

Therefore there is an obvious importance initially in the fact that the police and the prosecuting authorities should be able to make the determination as to whether or not a child comes within the Statute.

There is also an obvious initial difficulty for an arresting officer in the case proposed by the hon. Member for Hamilton South (Mr. Howe), for what he is requiring the policeman or Crown Prosecutor to do is to make a determination as a layman of a very difficult technical question, a question on which in the case of a particular issue qualified medical practitioners may differ.

As the Parliamentary Secretary has already pointed out, there is no final and obvious criterion for deciding this question of mental age. He also pointed out that he would take issue with the suggestion made in the explanatory note that this is readily determinable. If there is difficulty in determining this question for qualified medical practitioners, then I suggest the difficulty is even greater when the initial determination is made by an arresting officer. Therefore the bill places on the police and the prosecuting authorities the obligation of making a scientific judgment.

The difficulty of such a judgment in relation to matters of law is illustrated, I think, by a passage I would like to refer the House to in a monograph called "Psychiatry and the Law", by Manfred S. Guttmacher, Chief Medical Officer of the Supreme Bench of Baltimore, and Henry Weihofen, Professor of Law at the University of New Mexico. I refer to chapter 8 of this book which deals with congenital intellectual deficiency, which is the definition with which the learned authors choose to describe the situation which I believe the hon. Member has in mind. At page 171 they say:

> The fact that we have instruments for the measurement of intelligence has created the false impression that we now know what it is we are measuring and that we can measure it exactly. Even some workers in the psychological sciences fall into this error. The medical author some years ago observed an extreme example of this when he was guest lecturer in a college course on abnormal psychology. The professor in charge of the course advised the students not to be content with the usual method of computing the I.Q., but to be more exact and make use of decimals!

It is highly desirable that lawyers and judges have a functional and realistic view of intelligence. In deciding whether a person with defective intelligence has sufficient capacity to appreciate the wrongfulness of his act, it is necessary to take into consideration whether the act is perpetrating a fraud or committing a murder. Doubtless many persons with somewhat defective intelligence are incapable of appreciating some of the intricacies of the law of fraud, and yet are fully aware of the enormity of homicide.

In the same work at page 174 the following is found:

Most of the intellectually defective individuals do not have marked physical abnormalities. Many of them have a wholly normal physical appearance. The people who pride themselves on their ability to judge intelligence and character by appearances had better not put their judgment to objective scientific test or they will be greatly disappointed. But many rely heavily on physical appearance in reaching their conclusions.

From the particular text to which I have referred, Mr. Speaker, and from the remarks made by the hon. Member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), it is obvious that the kind of criteria which are necessary for the police authorities and the courts to make this initial determination on these questions are just not present in the case of mental age. One of the shortcomings of this particular proposed piece of legislation is that it provides no standard or basis upon which mental age is to be determined. It provides no procedure whereby initially the opinion of qualified medical practitioners is to be taken to determine whether or not the court has jurisdiction and that the proper proceedings have been taken. Indeed, by treating the person of advanced years but of retarded mentality in the same way as juvenile delinquents without providing the appropriate administration to deal with such a person would only risk upsetting the arrangements which have been made, perhaps not altogether satisfactorily but with some success, with regard to juvenile delinquents.

This may be illustrated by making reference to the Statute itself. There is the fact that under the Juvenile Delinquents Act a delinquent is not to be detained in normal circumstances with other adult persons but is to be kept with persons of tender years. In applying the Juvenile Delinquents Act to the case of a person of advanced years but who is mentally retarded, it has already been pointed out that a grown man is not to be treated in the same way as a small child, because he is not the same type of person. Similarly section 23 of the Statute refers to the responsibilities of the Children's Aid Society and particularly to foster homes into whose custody and under whose control the objects of the Juvenile Delinquents Act are to be kept before and after they attend their trial. I think all hon. Members will agree that it is obviously inappropriate to put under the care of the Children's Aid Society, when dealing with what is a distinct medical problem, the social and practical problem of a grown person who is mentally retarded.

The substance of my objections, therefore, would be that, agreeing as I do with the ultimate objectives of the hon. Member in introducing the measure, agreeing as I do that someone who is shown to be mentally retarded should not be treated in the same way under our law as someone who is entirely mentally defective, I do not feel it is appropriate to treat this type of mentally retarded person under the provisions of the Juvenile Delinquents Act. That statute was, as I have indicated, prepared with a distinct factual situation in mind. It was prepared with organizations such as juvenile institutions, Children's Aid Societies, foster homes and probation officers in mind. It would be altogether inappropriate to add to the provisions of that measure responsibility for dealing with what is an entirely different practical and medical problem, that of the person of advanced years who is mentally retarded.

I believe it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The time for the consideration of private Members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, on Monday the House will be asked to consider the third reading of the Bill to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act; the resolution respecting the Indian Claims Commission; the resolution authorizing the Canadian National Railways to construct a line of railway near Sarnia; item No. 37 on today's order paper, second reading of Bill No. C-119, an Act to amend the Customs Act; and second reading of the Customs Tariff Act. The House will also be asked to consider items 18 and 17 on today's order paper, namely the resolution to amend the Research Council Act and the resolution to establish a Science Council of Canada.

I should also announce that on Tuesday the House will be asked to consider item No.

36 on today's order paper, the Act to amend the Income Tax Act and the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act.

Mr. Churchill: May I just ask one question. Is the Minister not now adding items to the list the Prime Minister gave us? It seems to me he has added three to the list the Prime Minister gave us just the other day.

Mr. MacNaught: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that. I think these were included in the Prime Minister's list.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, in view of the change from a Supply motion on Monday, may I ask whether the Minister can announce what consideration is now being given, as a matter of Government policy, to how the House of Commons will discuss the matter of the constitutional change requested by Quebec, in view of the fact that the Acting Prime Minister said this matter would be brought before the House of Commons before anything is sent to Her Majesty the Queen.

• (6:00 p.m.)

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, I feel reasonably sure that there will be a Supply motion before the House rises for a summer recess.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following item was passed in committee of supply this day:]

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

8a. Payments in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the Governor in Council under the Winter House Building Incentive Program during the fiscal years 1964-65 and 1965-66 of $500 per dwelling unit substantially built during the period November 15, 1964 to March 31, 1965—To extend to April 15, 1965 the termination date of the period referred to in Labour Vote 8b of the Appropriation Act No. 10, 1964; to authorize payments in the current fiscal year of undischarged commitments under Labour Vote 34d of the Appropriation Act No. 5, 1963; and to supplement the said Vote 8b, $2,000,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 21, 1965

The House met at 2.30 p.m.

UNITED NATIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS TO OVERCOME FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Members of the House will be aware that in spite of the efforts of the United Nations special committee on peace keeping operations, no agreement has been reached at the United Nations on methods to discharge the accumulated financial obligations occasioned by the refusal of some member states to pay their assessments for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations operation in the Congo. The total debt is something over $100 million.

In the hope that by constructive action the present deadlock might be broken, a number of governments are today announcing pledges of voluntary and unconditional contributions to help the United Nations out of its present financial difficulties, and they have so informed the Secretary General of the United Nations. The Canadian Government has participated in the consultations which led to this action, and I now wish to associate Canada with it. The Government has decided, subject to approval by Parliament, to make a similar pledge in the amount of $4 million. I have instructed our permanent representative to the United Nations to convey this decision to the Secretary General, and he will be doing so at 3.30 this afternoon. I also hope to see the Secretary General later today or tomorrow to discuss this and other matters.

The Canadian Government's pledge is made without prejudice to our support for the policy of collective financial responsibility for duly authorized peace keeping operations. Our understanding is that this pledge will form part of any formal agreement for contributions to relieve the organization's indebtedness if and when such agreement is reached. I do not exclude the possibility that at a later stage it may become necessary for us to supplement this pledge.

I should like to make it clear that in coming to this decision the governments associated with this initiative have not underestimated the serious differences which have thus far defied solution. But we believe that rather than let the United Nations founder on this issue of principle, the time has come for as many states as possible to make a joint effort to restore the solvency of the United Nations, to create conditions which will make it possible for the assembly to meet normally next September, and to preserve the capacity of the United Nations to continue to perform its essential functioning in the maintenance of international peace and security.

The group of member states which have joined in this initiative today have traditionally been in the forefront of those which have come to the aid of the United Nations in times of stress. Obviously we cannot, of ourselves, solve the problem. But we can give a lead, and this we have done in the hope and expectation that the action of these nations will persuade others to follow suit so that the United Nations will be restored to solvency by the time the next general assembly reconvenes in September.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a regrettable development in international affairs that the United Nations continues to find itself in trouble because of financial obligations which are not being met by some members of that organization. I think everybody concerned with the maintenance of peace—and that comprises most of the people of the world—will view with some alarm the fact that this problem remains unresolved.

We are not unmindful of the circumstances that befell the League of Nations in those days when some of the prominent nations of the world did not play their full part in that organization. The step that is now proposed by the Minister of External Affairs will give a breathing spell to the United Nations over the next three months, and perhaps reason will prevail among those nations which have failed to live up to their obligations.

I regret that the Minister did not give us the names of the nations that are to set this example, in addition to indicating what Canada's contribution would be, because I think it is important that we know what other nations are of the same mind. I take it that Canada's contribution will be in addition to what she is already doing in respect of peace keeping operations abroad.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If I may point out, and I should have given this indication, this pledge is in addition to our present commitments. It represents a contribution which is related to the assessment that annually would be met by Canada and, likewise, by other countries which have joined in this initiative.

Mr. Churchill: Perhaps the Minister will give us the names of the other countries. As I understand it, Canada is already playing more than its full part in the peace keeping operations in Cyprus with no financial assistance from other sources. This contribution on the part of Canada is commendable, and I think it will meet with the support of all parties within this House and in general of the Canadian people. The last thing we want to see is the failure of the United Nations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: It will soon be a generation since the United Nations was started, and it has played a great part over the intervening years in restricting aggression. The obvious difficulties facing the nations of the world are very clear. There are more sensitive areas and trouble spots in the world than there have been for some time, and it is our hope that this continued assistance by Canada will be matched by similar assistance by other nations so that we may maintain the one force in the world, the United Nations, which gives some hope to mankind of peace and security.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we in this party welcome very warmly indeed the announcement that has been made by the Acting Prime Minister. It is very good news that the Assembly of the United Nations may now be enabled to function at its next session in the normal manner. We do not believe the people of Canada will begrudge at all the $4 million that is to be spent. It is one of the best investments we could possibly make; and although it is true, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs has pointed out, that this is only a temporary solution, a temporary solution is vital to the interests of the world as a whole.

It is really ironic that in the year that was set aside as international co-operation year the United Nations assembly ground to a halt and was unable to carry on its vitally required work in this unstable world.

I think statements at this time should be brief, Mr. Speaker, and I will say no more except to repeat that we most heartily and enthusiastically welcome the announcement that has been made.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am sure every Member shares the concern of the Government over the crisis that has been facing the United Nations throughout these past months. The announcement that has been made is, of course, one to which we give our complete support at this time.

I think there are two questions that arise in our minds in considering this issue. The first is that we are inclined to question the sincerity of those nations which are failing to measure up to their responsibilities in regard to the United Nations peace keeping operations. The other question is just how long the United Nations can continue to function and be sustained in this fashion. There is no doubt that the time will come, perhaps very soon, when definite decisions will have to be made and positive steps taken to assure the United Nations of adequate support in carrying out its responsibilities.

As has been pointed out, Mr. Speaker, Canada is already carrying a very heavy responsibility with regard to peace keeping operations, recognizing that this is the one area in which we can make our greatest contribution. Reference has been made to the fact that Canada is already paying the full cost of maintaining its contingent in Cyprus as well as fulfilling its responsibilities in other fields.

As I have said, while we support every effort to maintain peace and security in the world and are prepared to make an adequate contribution for that purpose, we trust the time will come very soon when those other nations which have precipitated this situation will recognize and accept their responsibilities as well.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I was a little surprised to hear the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Martin) tell us that the United Nations Organization is now burdened with a $100 million deficit in its operations and administration. And that in spite of our independent contribution in the case of Cyprus, where Canada should normally have spent $1.5 million instead of almost $6 million. In the case of the Congo the situation is practically the same.

And now the minister informs us that Canada has agreed to contribute another $4 million to the United Nations Organization because it is on the verge of bankruptcy.

We have no objection, far from it, to helping in maintaining peace in the world, in assisting the United Nations Organization. But we object when the Canadian authorities fail to protest strongly and categorically when a country like Russia refuses to pay its contribution to the United Nations Organization although it benefits from it possibly more than any other country in the world. I say the government has a moral obligation to all Canadian citizens who will be called upon to disburse an additional $4 million. It is therefore the government's duty to lodge a direct complaint against those countries which did not fulfil their obligations toward the United Nations Organization.

Mr. Speaker, if there were more willingness to assist those Canadian organizations who experience financial difficulties, we should be much more eager to accept the Acting Prime Minister's announcement. However, we are willing to keep contributing to the United Nations. On the other hand, we would urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the cabinet and the parliament to advise Russia and the other countries refusing to face up to their obligations to live up to them or withdraw from the United Nations.

[English]

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): In his earlier statement to the House with regard to the financing of United Nations operations, the Acting Prime Minister did not make available to the House the names of those nations which, along with Canada, have indicated they are prepared to assume the extra financial responsibility in order to assure the continued operation of the United Nations Assembly. Will the Acting Prime Minister now give the House those names?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Great Britain, Denmark, Sweden, Iceland and Norway have joined with Canada in this support, and it is expected that New Zealand and Finland will announce contributions within the next day or so. I hope this will begin a chain reaction that will have a good effect on all those who are in default in payments pursuant to the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the Acting Prime Minister give us some indication of the amount of money it is expected will be raised under these circumstances?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I could. Great Britain has agreed to contribute $10 million; Denmark, $1 million; Sweden, $2 million; Iceland, $80,000; Norway, $720,000, and I would hope that New Zealand and Finland will be announcing contributions of perhaps $500,000 each. The Canadian contribution, as I said before, is $4 million.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DORION COMMISSION—ALLEGED LEAK OF CONTENTS OF REPORT

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a number of stories have appeared in newspapers over the week end with respect to an alleged leak of the report of the Dorion inquiry. I wish to emphasize, as the Prime Minister said in London, that the Government is in no position to know whether there has been a leak since no member of the Government is aware of the contents of the report.

When these newspaper stories appeared I thought it my duty to get in touch with Chief Justice Dorion, who has full and sole responsibility for the preparation of the report and its transmission to the Government. I instructed the Privy Council office, which is responsible for liaison with Chief Justice Dorion, to get in touch with him yesterday. Mr. Chief Justice Dorion said he wished to reflect about this whole matter, and that he would call me on Monday.

This morning I received a telephone call from the Chief Justice, who has authorized me to inform the House of the following statement which he has given to the press. Since he read it to me in French I would prefer to use the text as given to me by the Chief Justice.

[Translation]

I was extremely surprised to learn that Southam News Services took the liberty of publishing what purports to be parts of my report. For the completion of this report, I had of course to rely on the co-operation of some federal civil servants. When I left Ottawa on June 10, I had completed the writing of the report. I then asked Mr. André Desjardins, a lawyer with the Commission, to look after the final draft, the translation and the printing of the report. Mr. Desjardins had three copies made, one for himself and the two others to be handed over, by sections, to the translators under Mr. M. H. Mayer whom I had met before leaving Ottawa and in whom I have full and complete confidence.

According to the press report, this news agency allegedly obtained its information from a source which is, according to the agency, usually reliable in such matters. If such is the case, I do not believe it should be too difficult to identify that source. The federal government certainly has the means to conduct the investigations required in order to exercise whatever recourse is necessary.

[English]

That is the end of the statement as given to me by the Chief Justice. In our conversation the Chief Justice emphasized what is apparent in the statement I have just quoted. He is not expressing any opinion on whether or not there has been a leak. None of us can have even a preliminary view on this until we know what is in the report.

Nevertheless, given the reports which appeared in the papers I also asked Chief Justice Dorion whether he would undertake an investigation with respect to the security of the arrangements for preparing the report. The Chief Justice did not wish to do so, and expressed the view that any formal inquiry would be inappropriate, at this stage at least.

We agreed, however, that a preliminary examination of the facts relating to the security of the arrangements could be undertaken. I have accordingly asked the R.C.M. Police to carry out a preliminary investigation of this kind in close co-operation with Chief Justice Dorion.

Because of the speculation which now surrounds this report, the Prime Minister has indicated that in his view it should be transmitted to the Government at the earliest possible date. I conveyed this view to Chief Justice Dorion today. He informed me the work is already being done on the tightest practicable schedule, and he doubts whether it would be possible to have the report available for transmission to the Government before the end of the week.

I can, of course, assure the House that as soon as the report is received by the Government it will be tabled in Parliament.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, once again we are faced with some odd things going on within Government circles, and we are not altogether surprised because there seems to be a lack of supervision exercised by the Government.

I wonder whether the Acting Prime Minister is right in saying that the sole responsibility rested on the Chief Justice. It appears to me that the Chief Justice got assistance—surely it would be from the Department of Justice—with regard to arranging for the translation and things of that nature. In view of that, shouldn't the Government accept some responsibility in this regard? The judicial inquiry was authorized by the Government. It should not attempt once again to shift responsibility.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

However, I understand from the Acting Prime Minister that steps are being taken to see what can be done, perhaps rather belatedly, and I am very much interested to learn that the report will be made available to the Government by the end of the week, as I think he said—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Not before the end of the week.

Mr. Churchill: —and will be immediately tabled in the House and made public property. I hope the Government will not sit on this report over a considerable time as it has sometimes done with other matters of importance, but will immediately make it available so there will be no further leaks or speculative information brought out with regard to what may be contained in the report. I think once again this shows a lack of direction and control on the part of the Government.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, if the speculative reports which have appeared regarding the contents of the Dorion report are accurate—and we will not know that until we see the actual report—then certainly there seems to be an indication of a violation of confidence on someone's part.

I think this is a very serious matter. The fact that the Chief Justice himself is disturbed by these speculative stories would seem to indicate that the stories which have appeared do not differ too greatly from the contents of the report.

I think the Government ought to be much more exercised than it appears to be about the report of the Chief Justice having been seen, in whole or in part, by persons other than those who are authorized to have access to it. I trust that we are going to have more than merely a routine check by the R.C.M. Police. The Government may have gone as far as it can at the present moment until we see the actual report; but if the report coincides with the speculative stories which have appeared, then it will be quite apparent that these speculative stories were based on information given to the press by some persons in positions of responsibility and authority, and that ought to be investigated.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: The report ought to be brought down, tabled in the House and made public at the very earliest possible date in order to prevent further speculation. The Acting Prime Minister says it will be available by not later than the end of the week—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I said not before the end of the week.

Mr. Douglas: —not before the end of the week. I trust that it will be tabled as soon as the Government receives it. Our party will want—I hope it is given in the question period today—some assurance from the Acting Prime Minister that before this House adjourns there will be ample opportunity to discuss the contents of that report, and to hear from the Government what action they propose to take in the light of the findings of the Chief Justice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell: Everybody over there has seen it, anyway.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, we too were very disturbed by the so-called leaks of the Dorion Commission report, and we are pleased to see that the Prime Minister, in his message to Chief Justice Dorion from London, and the Acting Prime Minister are taking what they think is appropriate action to first of all investigate whether or not there have been any leaks and, following that, to bring it before Parliament as quickly as possible.

We know very well that there are some delaying problems, if you want to call them that, or at least delaying requirements because of the translation and printing that is necessary for all these Royal Commission reports. But it seems to me that in the circumstances which now surround this whole matter, the Federal Government could obtain the original manuscript, whether it is in English or French, if it is being translated. Certainly they could get hold of it to ascertain whether or not the press speculation is in accordance with the findings and recommendations of the Chief Justice.

It seems to me this would be an appropriate thing to do because of what happened last Friday. The report may not be printed in both languages, and certainly it may be the end of this week or later before it is available in sufficient quantities to be distributed to all Members of this House, but it seems to me it would materially assist the R.C.M.P. in their investigation if they knew what was in the report so they could make comparisons with the press speculations to ascertain whether there is a great deal of similarity. If there is, I do not think it would be wrong for the Government to ask now, today, for the manuscript of Chief Justice Dorion's report so the R.C.M.P. would be assisted in finding the leak and taking the necessary steps to see there is not a recurrence of this kind of thing.

The Chief Justice stated in his conversation with the Acting Prime Minister that a number of Federal civil servants or employees were involved in the translation and preparation for printing of the report. That in itself transfers at least some of the onus and responsibility to the Government to make this investigation as soon as possible. I hope the Acting Prime Minister will bring this report before the House just as quickly as possible, and as far as we are concerned, even if there is not a complete printing in both languages we think it would be useful, under the circumstances, to have this matter ascertained and determined as quickly as possible, even if it must be done from the manuscript.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we were not surprised to hear the other day on television that leaks had occurred concerning the findings of the Dorion commission on scandals alleged to have taken place in Canada.

There must have been a leak also about what the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Martin) just told us, because we heard exactly the same thing on television last night, and this in spite of the fact that the Acting Prime Minister told us that no press release was to be issued before this morning.

Mr. Speaker, if some civil servants talked a little too much and certain steps are taken against them, I am all for it. But there is one thing we must not forget and we heard something about it last week from the official opposition. I am speaking of the freedom of the press in Canada. Indeed, Southam News Service could very well have sent a delegate or a reporter to meet a civil servant last Friday or Saturday. There is not a single member here who is not aware of the way we are sometimes tortured by reporters who try to know about things before they are announced and to pass judgment on them.

Before we know exactly what happened, if the report published by Southam News Service Saturday and yesterday is true, it is obvious that there have been leaks on the part of some civil servants while reporters of the Southam News Service were present.

However, we must take care not to blame anyone who may have been cornered in a friendly way and who may have said: "Well, I read such and such a thing in the Dorion report which was submitted to us for translation".

I submit that had the Southam News Service been responsible, it would have respected Chief Justice Dorion's request that no information be released before the government had been duly informed. This is how a self-respecting news agency would have acted. However, any advance release concerning the contents of the report constitutes an abuse of what we call in Canada the freedom of the press.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

DONAT ST. AMOUR & FILS LTÉE.

Question No. 54—Mr. Douglas:

1. Did the firm of Donat St. Amour & Fils Ltée. of Masson, Quebec, go into bankruptcy?
2. Who were the officers and/or directors of this company?
3. Is the firm of J. M. R. Enterprises, Masson, Quebec, registered with the Companies and Corporation Branch of the Department of the Secretary of State?
4. If so, who are the officers and/or directors of this company?
5. Has the Department of Justice or any other government department received any representations concerning the bankruptcy of Donat St. Amour & Fils, Ltée. of Masson, Quebec?
6. If so, who submitted these representations and what were the nature of such representations?
7. What replies were given to such representations?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Solicitor General and my Department as follows:

1. A receiving order was granted against the firm of Donat St. Amour & Fils Ltée. of Masson, Quebec on July 26, 1963.

2. The officers and/or directors of this company were as follows: Donat St. Amour, Raymond St. Amour and Mrs. Donat St. Amour.

3. No.

4. Not applicable.

5. The Department of Justice has received representations concerning the bankruptcy of Donat St. Amour & Fils Ltée. of Masson, Quebec.

6. These representations were in the form of a letter dated February 18, 1965 from George H. Tremblay of G. T. Electric Service Reg'd addressed to the Minister of Justice, enclosing copy of a letter of the said G. H. Tremblay dated February 17, 1965 to Mr. Claude Wagner, the Minister of Justice of the Province of Quebec. In respect of the nature of these representations, I have to advise that it is not the practice of disclosing it because such disclosure might do injustice to those concerned and that it would be against the public interest to do so.

7. Mr. George H. Tremblay was informed that inquiries would be made to the trustee and this was done.

FEDERAL WORKS, DORCHESTER COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 147—Mr. Boutin:

What works were carried out by the federal government in the county of Dorchester during the years 1960-61-62-63-64, and (a) where were such works carried out (b) what amounts were spent by the federal government on such works?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): It is not feasible to provide aggregate information on expenditure disbursements or revenue collections for constituencies, counties or other comparable units. Government estimates are not prepared on this basis nor are records of expenditures kept in this way.

Information concerning expenditures could be supplied about specific projects or programs which are identified in a question. These, of course, would in some cases relate to a particular constituency or locality.

DISMISSAL OF MAIL CARRIER, GLACE BAY, N.S.

Question No. 374—Mr. Fisher:

1. Was any investigation ever held at the Glace Bay Post Office into the circumstances which led to the dismissal of a mail carrier, Francis G. MacKenzie; if so, when and what were the results?

2. Were charges ever laid under the Criminal Code against Mr. MacKenzie and, if so, were they proceeded with or withdrawn?

3. What representations, from what persons, did the Post Office Department receive asking for the reinstatement of Mr. MacKenzie?

4. In brief, what were the reasons given for Mr. MacKenzie's dismissal?

Hon. René Tremblay (Postmaster General): 1. An investigation was held in 1963 but it did not result in the dismissal of Francis G. MacKenzie.

2. Yes, the charges were withdrawn by the local Crown Attorney after the preliminary hearing.

3. Representations asking for the reinstatement of Mr. MacKenzie were received from the following: Mr. Donald MacInnis, M.P.; Rev. Sister M. Alexandria; Miss Camilla Sutherland; Dr. Guy Marcoux, M.P.; Mr. William Talbot.

4. Mr. MacKenzie has not been dismissed.

APPEARANCE OF MINISTERS IN NEW YORK COURT

Question No. 477—Mr. Coates:

1. Have the Secretary of State, Hon. Maurice Lamontagne and the Postmaster General, Hon. René Tremblay, been requested to appear for either the prosecution or the defence as witnesses in the Bernard Gittelson parking meter perjury trial?

2. Is it the intention of the government to ask the House to authorize these two Ministers to proceed to New York to appear in this case if such a request has been received, or is received, in this regard?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): 1. No.

2. No.

EXPORT OF HORSES FOR SLAUGHTER

Question No. 484—Mr. Mather:

Have representations been received from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals urging legislation to prohibit the export from Canada of horses for slaughter and, if so, is consideration being given to this request?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): No.

TENDERS FOR NATURE CENTRE, POINT PELEE NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 523—Mr. Loney:

1. What are the names and addresses of the tenderers, "Tender for construction of a nature centre, Point Pelee National Park, Leamington, Ontario"?

2. What was the price quoted by each tenderer?

3. Was the lowest tender accepted and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. (a) T. Zanette Construction Limited, 2630 Curry Avenue, Windsor, Ontario. (b) Scofan Contractors Limited, 2867 Turner Road, Windsor, Ontario. (c) W. J. C. Kaufmann Company, 1130 Crawford Avenue, Windsor, Ontario.

2. (a) T. Zanette Construction Limited, $208,300; (b) Scofan Contractors Limited, $217,950; (c) W. J. C. Kaufmann Company, $203,000.

3. No tender has yet been accepted. When a decision is reached, the announcement will be made in the usual way.

FEED GRAIN, MARITIME PROVINCES

Question No. 534—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. What is the estimated amount of feed grain grown in each of the Maritime Provinces, in each of five representative years, over the last twenty-five years?

2. What amounts were paid out in each of these five representative years under the Feed Grain Assistance Act, or by other authority to subsidize the shipment of feed grain to each of the Maritime Provinces?

3. What is the estimated acreage under cultivation, including pasture, in each of the Maritime Provinces for these same representative years?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry):

Maritime Provinces—Estimated Acreage under Cultivation[1, 2]

	Prince Edward Island (acres)	Nova Scotia (acres)	New Brunswick (acres)

[2] The third year of each of the five-year periods in the last 25 year period was selected to be indicative of a representative year.

LETTER CARRIER SERVICE IN COMMUNITIES LESS THAN 2,500

Question No. 541—Mr. Saltsman:

1. Is there a regulation to provide letter carrier delivery service for communities of less than 2,500 points of call when such communities are immediately adjacent to a larger centre where letter carrier delivery is already in operation and, if so, is the letter delivery service in the smaller community considered to be an extension of an existing service rather than the creation of a new one?
2. When was this regulation first passed?
3. Under what authority was it passed?
4. When was this regulation first used?
5. For which community was it first used?
6. How many communities of less than 2,500 points of call have been granted letter carrier delivery service under this regulation?
7. What are the names of these communities?
8. What are the distances between the small community and the larger centre where letter carrier delivery service was already in operation?
9. What use was made of the discontinued post offices in the smaller communities?

Hon. René Tremblay (Postmaster General): 1. There is no regulation governing the provision of letter carrier delivery service to communities of less than 2,500 calls located adjacent to a larger centre where letter carrier service is already in operation.

2, 3 and 4. As far back as our records are available letter carrier extensions from major centres have been authorized provided the area to be served was contiguous to the existing letter carrier limits. In these cases any post offices within the areas to which letter carrier service was extended were closed and replaced by sub post offices of the distributing community.

In 1958 by authority of the then Deputy Postmaster General, a revised policy was developed and introduced which permitted extensions of letter carrier delivery to suburban developments not necessarily contiguous to existing letter carrier delivery, but within the recognized delivery area of the office already served by letter carrier and from which the extension was being made.

In applying this revised policy, any intervening territory which was not built up because of the type of terrain or because it was used for such purposes as public recreation, etc., was bypassed in order to provide service to the suburban developments.

No precise distance was stipulated in traversing this undeveloped territory, but it is required that service to the additional area has to conform to the same cost factors and come within the same recognized delivery area as the service of the delivering office from which the extension is being made.

5. Extensions under the revised policy were made simultaneously but a list was not maintained.

6. and 7. No records are maintained. These are considered part of the regular extensions.

8. See answers to parts 2, 3 and 4.

9. This is determined by the Department of Public Works.

PENSIONS OF JUDGES WIDOWS

Question No. 542—Mr. Groos:

Is any consideration being given to amending the Judges' Act to give a Judges's widow one-half of her husband's pension as is the general pattern with respect to other public servants and, if not, what considerations obtain in maintaining the one-third benefit under section 27(1)(b) of the Judges' Act?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): No. Annuities under the Judges' Act are non-contributory and the amount thereof does not depend upon length of service.

MR. JUSTICE MEUNIER—DATE OF SUSPENSION

Question No. 574—Mr. Coates:

1. Has Mr. Justice Meunier of the Superior Court of Quebec been suspended since his conviction for a criminal offence and, if so, on what date did the suspension become effective?
2. Is he still receiving his salary as a judge?
3. How much has been paid to him as salary or indemnity since his conviction?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): 1. No. The Government has no authority to suspend a judge. However, he was granted leave of absence until the charges that were laid against him were disposed of.

2. Yes.

3. $12,716.66 to May 31, 1965.

JOE BONNANO—LAYING OF PERJURY CHARGES

Question No. 581—Mr. Coates:

1. On what date were the three charges of perjury laid against Joe Bonnano heard and in what city and before what judge?
2. Who represented the Crown during the trials and who represented Mr. Bonnano?
3. On what date was judgment rendered?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): 1. Three charges of perjury were laid against Joe Bonnano on June 10, 1964. The preliminary hearing took place before Judge Emile Trottier at Montreal on June 26 and June 29, 1964.

2. The Crown was represented by Mr. C. Antoine Geoffrion, Q.C. and Mr. P. Lamontagne. Mr. Bonnano was represented by Raymond D'Aoust, Q.C.

3. Judgment dismissing the charges was rendered at the conclusion of the preliminary inquiry on June 29, 1964.

EXPO '67—OPTIONS ON PAVILION SITES

Question No. 601—Mr. Martineau:

1. How many industrial firms have taken options on pavilion sites at Expo '67?
2. How many of such firms have so far taken up their option with Expo '67?
3. How many firms have withdrawn their option in this regard or have indicated their intention to so withdraw?
4. What are the names of these firms?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. 30 exhibitors (some exhibitors include the joint participation of several firms. Total number of firms 700).

2. 15.

3. 10 including 8 which are expected to participate in Theme or joint pavilions.

4. The names of the firms which have withdrawn their option cannot be released without the consent of the firms concerned.

QUEBEC—ARDA—COMPLETION OF DRAINAGE PROJECTS

Question No. 604—Mr. Gauthier:

1. How many drainage projects were completed in the Province of Quebec under ARDA in 1961, 1962, 1963 and 1964 indicating in each case, the location and the amount involved?
2. From the date the ARDA program was initiated until March 31, 1965, what amounts were allocated to the following provinces: British Columbia, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Northwest Territories?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry):

1. The list of projects shown below submitted by the Province of Quebec shows the location, the federal contribution and the date the final claim was received.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): 1. Yes. May 10, 1965.

2. Bachelor of Letters and Bachelor of Civil Law, University of Montreal; graduate of the faculty of Social, Economic and Political Sciences, University of Montreal, 1934; appointed in 1960 assistant Deputy Attorney General of Quebec; in 1962 appointed District Judge and Associate Chief District Judge for the District of Montreal.

3. Approximately 28 years.

CANADIAN DELEGATION TO WORLD POPULATION CONFERENCE

Question No. 625—Mr. Prittie:

1. What are the names of the Canadian delegates to the World Population Conference which will be held under the auspices of the United Nations with the co-operation of the International Labour Organization, the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, to take place in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, from August 30 to September 10, 1965?
2. In which department or agency of the federal government is each of the delegates employed?
3. If any of the delegates are not in the service of the federal government, what is the ordinary occupation of each such delegate?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The Canadian Government has nominated the following experts to attend the second World Population Conference in their individual capacities: Mr. Frank Denton, Research Staff, Economic Council of Canada; Dr. Y. Kasahara, Demographic Consultant, Central Research and Development Staff, Dominion Bureau of Statistics; Dr. K. Krotki, Chief, Demographic Analysis and Research, Census Division, Dominion Bureau of Statistics; Mr. A. H. LeNeveu, Chief, Current Population Estimates and Analysis, Census Division, Dominion Bureau of Statistics; an officer from the Canadian Embassy, Belgrade.

2. See answer to question 1, above.

3. The Secretary of the World Population Conference has informed us that the United Nations has invited approximately 1,250 experts to participate in the Conference in their individual capacities and at their own expense, including 24 Canadians from outside the Canadian Government service. Inquiries concerning the participation in the Conference of these experts should be addressed to: The Secretary of the World Population Conference, c/o United Nations Headquarters, New York City, United States of America.

CHATHAM, ONT.—CLOSING OF ENTOMOLOGICAL LABORATORY

Question No. 631—Mr. Danforth:

1. When does the Department of Agriculture plan to close the Chatham Federal Entomological Laboratory?
2. Where will these facilities be moved to?
3. What is the estimated cost of the establishment and construction of the new facilities to replace the above laboratory?
4. What is the estimated annual saving by replacing the above facilities?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The Department of Agriculture plans to have the investigations presently located at the entomology research laboratory, Chatham, relocated in approximately five years' time, partly at the Research Institute, London, partly at the Research Station, Harrow, and partly at the Experimental Farm, Delhi.

2. Answer in No. 1 above.

3. New facilities are not being established specifically to replace those at Chatham. The Chatham entomologists will be located where they can work side by side with various specialists such as chemists, plant breeders, pedologists, pathologists, and physiologists so that all facets of crop production problems may be studied co-operatively. These lines of work will be fitted into existing facilities or those planned in the future for Harrow, London, and Delhi. No separate cost can be calculated.

4. Answered in No. 3 above.

AGRICULTURE—NEW RESEARCH FACILITIES AND EXPERIMENTAL FARMS

Question No. 632—Mr. Danforth:

1. How many new federal agriculture research facilities, substations, experimental farms, etc., were opened in 1964, indicating the type and location?
2. How many are contemplated for 1965, indicating the type and location?
3. How many are planned for 1966, indicating the type and location?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): 1. None.

2. None.

3. None.

Questions

AGRICULTURE—CLOSING OF EXPERIMENTAL STATIONS AND FARMS

Question No. 633—Mr. Danforth:

1. How many federal agriculture experimental stations, sub-stations, farms or establishments were closed in 1964, and what were their locations?
2. How many will be closed in (a) 1965 and (b) 1966?
3. What is the location of these establishments that are planned to be closed during the next two years?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): 1. No research or experimental establishments of the Department of Agriculture were closed in 1964.

2. (a) 1965, Tower Hill, New Brunswick. (b) 1966, Fort Chimo, Quebec. The station at Smithers, B.C. is to be closed and necessary work in that area done at local Project Farms, but the precise date has not been decided.

3. Answered in 2 (a) and (b).

ALLEGED IMPROPER APPLICATION OF SALES TAX

Question No. 634—Mr. Coates:

1. Is the Minister of National Revenue investigating the charges made by the Maritime Lumber Bureau and the Atlantic Provinces Retail Lumber Dealers Association that the 11 per cent sales tax is being improperly administered by his Department?
2. Is it the intention of the government to bring forward legislation that will embody the recommendations of the Auditor General related to the collection of the sales tax?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): 1. The administration of the 11 per cent sales tax on lumber is being carried out in accordance with the provisions of the Excise Tax Act and regulations, and it is therefore quite incorrect to say that this tax is being improperly administered by the Department. There have been a number of problems, however, resulting from the extremely complex nature of this industry and, on my instructions a few months ago, an exhaustive survey into the industry was initiated. The survey has now been completed and we are confident that the recommendations arising out of it will provide some solutions to the administrative problems encountered in so far as the application of sales tax in that industry is concerned.

2. In so far as this question is concerned, I would draw your attention to that portion of the budget speech of the Minister of Finance dealing with the Excise Tax Act, appearing on page 439 of Hansard for April 26, 1965.

[Mr. Hays.]

GEORGES LEMAY—EXTRADITION PROCEEDINGS

Question No. 638—Mr. Nugent:

1. Have extradition proceedings been taken regarding one Lemay, now in Florida, a much sought after alleged criminal by the police in Montreal?
2. If so, on what date and by whom?
3. Is the Department of Justice taking part in the proceedings?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): 1. To date the Federal Government has not been requested by the Department of Justice for the Province of Quebec, which has the direction and control over the criminal proceedings instituted against Lemay in that Province, to requisition the Government of the United States for his surrender. Deportation proceedings have, however, been instituted against him by the United States authorities.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

HAMILTON, ONT.—POST OFFICE EMPLOYEES

Question No. 642—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. How many people are currently employed by the Post Office Department in Hamilton, Ontario?
2. How many vacancies are there in the Post Office Department in Hamilton?
3. How many employees of the Post Office Department in Hamilton have left their jobs since January 1, 1965, and in each case, what reason was given?

Hon. René Tremblay (Postmaster General): 1. 450 persons in full time positions, 41 in part time positions.

2. 26 vacancies.

3. 35 full time employees and 11 part time employees.

P.E.I.—LOBSTER FISHERY TRAP LIMIT

Question No. 645—Mr. Mullally:

1. Has the government received representations from any organization, company or individual in Prince Edward Island requesting the establishment of a trap limit and/or licence restrictions for the lobster fishery?
2. If so, what has been the reply by the government?
3. Has the Department of Fisheries or any other department of government conducted any studies, surveys or other research efforts to determine the relationship between the number of traps and the quantity of lobsters caught?
4. What is the present attitude of the government with respect to the establishment of trap and licence limitations?
5. Would the government be receptive to a request from the industry for the establishment of such restrictions?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1. Yes.

2. This is not a simple problem and it is under investigation.

3. Yes. Certain aspects of this problem have been investigated by the Fisheries Research Board of Canada and by the economic service of the Department of Fisheries.

4. The investigations carried out so far would suggest that, while the number of traps in use per lobster fishing enterprise or per fisherman is probably unnecessarily large, the main cause of low earnings among lobster fishermen is the excessive number of fishermen or enterprises in relation to the extent of the lobster resource. This indicates the difficulties to be faced in devising a suitable plan of rational management for the lobster fishery.

5. The government is always receptive to a substantial request from industry, and is willing to undertake whatever investigation may be necessary for full assessment.

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN COMMISSION PERSONNEL

Question No. 680—Mr. Rapp:

1. Has the key personnel staff of the Grain Commission been moved from Fort William to Winnipeg and, if so, for what reason?
2. Is it now intended to transfer the weighing staff to Winnipeg and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): 1. No. The headquarters of the Board of Grain Commissioners and its six major divisions have been located in Winnipeg for many years, with the exception of the headquarters of the weighing division which is responsible for the Board's grain weighing operations throughout Canada and which is located at Fort William.

2. The Chief and Assistant Chief Grain Weighmen, and two supporting clerical assistants, are being transferred to Winnipeg to facilitate the Board's operations. No other transfers are contemplated.

*HIGH ARROW DAM CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 681—Mr. Herridge:

1. What is the name of the authority or officials who report to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources with respect to decisions and developments in connection with the construction of the Columbia River Treaty projects?

2. Has the B.C. Hydro and Power authority complied with clause 4 of the International River Improvements Act for a licence to construct High Arrow Dam and, if not, has the government any information dealing with the delay in this regard?

3. Has the Government of Canada been assured that the High Arrow Dam is a safe dam in every respect and that it will be unaffected by any earthquake; that the under seepage is within safe limits; that adequate arrangements have been made for the safe energy dispersal of the large volume of water involved?

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. The Canadian section of the Columbia River Treaty Permanent Engineering Board reports to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources concerning the international aspects of decisions and developments related to the construction of the Columbia River Treaty projects in accordance with the provisions of the treaty and protocol. The Advisory Subcommittee of the Canada—British Columbia—Columbia River liaison committee reports to the Minister in his capacity as chairman of the Canadian section of that committee on Federal-Provincial matters related to the construction of the treaty projects arising from the treaty and protocol and the two Canada—British Columbia agreements related thereto.

2. The British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority complied with the International River Improvements Act by applying under Section 3 of the Act for exception of the Arrow Lakes project from the operation of the Act. It was decided that this project should be licenced under the Act rather than excepted; and a draft licence for it was approved by Order in Council P.C.1965-254 dated February 16, 1965, and was sent to the Chairman of the Authority on March 1. It is expected that the licence will be issued at an early date.

3. Every precaution in the interests of safety against possible damage from earthquakes, seepage, erosion, or other causes, has been taken in the design and in the construction requirements. This subject was considered in detail by the Standing Committee on External Affairs during its consideration of the Columbia River treaty and protocol, and in particular during its sessions on April 24 and April 28, 1964, when expert evidence on these aspects of the safety of the project was given by Dr. Richard L. Hearn, President of CBA Engineering Company Limited, Vancauver; Dr. Hugh Q. Golder, President of Dr. Hugh Q. Golder and Associates Limited, Consulting Civil Engineers, Toronto; and Dr. Arthur Casagrande, Professor of Soil Mechanics and Foundation Engineering, Harvard University. This evidence is contained in issues Nos. 13 and 15 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of this Standing Committee and doubtless is available to the hon. Member posing this question, since he was a member of this Committee and is recorded as being present on both of the dates given above.

*CANADIAN SEAFARERS BUILDING CORPORATION

Question No. 682—Mr. Herridge:

1. Who were the officers or directors of the Canadian Seafarers Building Corporation, Ltd., according to the records of the Companies Incorporations Branch as of June 1, 1965?

2. Is this a private company?

3. When did the Companies Incorporations Branch last receive an annual return from the Canadian Seafarers Building Corporation Ltd.?

4. Who are the present officers of the Canadian Seafarers Building Corporation Ltd.?

5. What number of shares are held by each of the officers?

6. Are any shares in the Corporation held by the Seafarers International Union of North America?

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): 1. The information on record is not up to date. The latest summary filed by this company is as of March 31, 1963 when the officers were: Harold C. Banks, President and Director; Leonard J. McLaughlin, Vice President and Director; Raymond Doucet, Director.

2. Yes, this is a private company.

3. The last annual return was received as of March 31, 1963.

4. This information is not on record; see part one above.

5. This information is not available.

6. This information is not available.

COMMISSION ON ELECTION EXPENSES

Question No. 684—Mr. Nesbitt:

1. How many days has the commission on election expenses been sitting?
2. Who are the members of the committee?
3. What is the total cost of the committee to date?
4. What are the indemnities of committee members?
5. How much has the chairman and each of the members received since the commission was set up (a) in indemnity (b) in expenses?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): 1. 16 days.

2. Alphonse Barbeau, Chairman Montreal; Hon. M. J. Coldwell, Ottawa; G. D. Dryden, Toronto; A. R. Smith, Calgary; Prof. N. M. Smith, Saskatoon.

3. $12,677.54 as of June 15, 1965.

4. $100 per day. (For days worked only)

	(a) Indemnity	(b) Expense
Mr. Barbeau	1,200	720.40
Mr. Coldwell	1,800*	526.08

GIFT OF LAND, KEJIMKUJIK NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 693—Mr. Crouse:

Has the federal government given an indication to the Government of Nova Scotia of its formal acceptance of the gift of land from the Nova Scotia Government which will constitute the new National Park in the area of Kejimkujik Lake, Queens County, and, if not, on what date will the government give formal acceptance of this gift of land?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The Government of Nova Scotia has been informed that Canada is prepared to accept title to the lands for development of a national park in the area of Kejimkujik Lake as soon as conveyance to Canada of title to the said lands free of all encumbrances can be completed. The final legal steps of conveyance are in process and formal acceptance by Canada will follow immediately thereafter.

OIL EXPLORATION, HUDSON BAY

Question No. 700—Mr. Simpson:

1. Has the Department of Fisheries taken note of the extensive exploratory work which is to be carried out in the search for oil in Hudson Bay during the next two or three years and, if so, does the Department consider that the pattern blasting which will be taking place will constitute a hazard to game and food fish as well as to the enormous population of white whales in those waters?
2. Will the Minister of Fisheries give instructions to have such steps taken as may be necessary to protect the fish and whale population of those waters?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1. Yes, both as to oil surveys to be undertaken by oil companies and the geomagnetic surveys to be undertaken by federal government departments. The Department of Fisheries has investigated pattern blasting, and has suggested certain modifications for inshore waters.

2. Companies and departments concerned have already been advised of the conditions applicable, and arrangements have been made to place observers on board survey vessels to see to it that the necessary steps are taken to protect the fish and whale populations.

CONSERVATION OF NORTHWEST ATLANTIC FISHERY

Question No. 709—Mr. Crouse:

1. Is the government considering negotiating with the Soviet Union, or any other foreign country, participating in the Northwest Atlantic Fishery for an exchange of officers aboard fishing vessels and/or fishery patrol vessels to observe on each other's conservation measures?
2. Has the government received from the United States any reports on the results of observations made by representatives of that country aboard Russian fishing vessels in the northwest Atlantic and, if so, of what is the nature of such reports?
3. Is the Minister of Fisheries of the opinion that an "explosive situation" is developing concerning world fishery stocks and, if so, what new measures are planned by the government to protect the fish populations off Canadian coasts?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1. Yes. The exchange of enforcement officers between the United States and Canada this spring to observe procedures followed in enforcing fishery regulations made under the International Convention for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries proved valuable, and consideration is being given to arranging similar exchanges in the future with other member countries.

2. Reports of the exchange of enforcement officers between the U.S.S.R. and the United States, and between Canada and the United States, were submitted to the annual meeting of the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries which was held in Halifax recently. These reports outline the fishing and enforcement practices followed by the respective countries in the Convention, and show that the regulations are being enforced effectively.

3. At the first meeting of the North American Fisheries Conference held recently in Washington, D.C., I stated that an "explosive situation" is developing in world fisheries as a result of the rapid increase in the size and efficiency of the fishing fleets. The government will continue to do everything possible to conserve the fish stocks found off our coasts by means of supporting co-ordinated research programs and international co-operation and regulation in the field of fisheries management.

ANIELLO DE LUCA

Question No. 711—Mr. Lambert:

1. What was the conclusion of the inquiry under the Immigration Act referred to in the answer to Question No. 3,016 under date of March 31, 1965, concerning one Aniello De Luca, of Montreal?
2. Is Aniello De Luca still under detention and, if so, where and under what circumstances and, if not, when was he released?
3. What was the outcome of the proceedings under the Juvenile Delinquents Act as referred to in the answer to Question No. 3,016 above?
4. What further steps, if any, are under consideration with regard to this man and his future stay in Canada?

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1. The inquiry under the Immigration Act revealed that Aniello De Luca had acquired Canadian domicile and was therefore not subject to deportation proceedings under the Immigration Act at that time.

2. No. He was released from detention on April 12, 1965.

3. According to information received by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, Mr. De Luca was not convicted of one charge under the Juvenile Delinquents Act and two other charges were withdrawn.

4. None.

MAIL CONTRACT, ALONSA-AMARANTH-LANGRUTH, MAN.

Question No. 715—Mr. Enns:

1. To whom was the successful tender awarded for the Alonsa, Amaranth and Langruth mail contract?
2. What is the amount of the tender?

Hon. René Tremblay (Postmaster General): 1. The contract for the transportation of mail (highway service) between Portage la Prairie and Alonsa has not yet been awarded. In accordance with the terms of the Post Office Act, an inquiry is now in progress to determine whether the lowest tenderer is able to meet the requirements of the service.

2. Tenders received were as follows: Harvey McKay, Box 18, Amaranth, $6,472.28; Robert Stanley Rodericks, Reedy Creek, $7,200; George Walter Hanke, Box 46, Amaranth, $7,668; Leslie C. Stanley, Amaranth, $8,000; Henry Chesla, Alonsa, $8,000; David George Corfield, Silver Ridge, $8,800; Edward James Maxwell, 622 Dufferin Ave. E., Portage la Prairie, $8,835; William Witt, Amaranth, $9,000; Ronald Oswald Minton, Harcus, $9,000; John Dick, Amaranth, $10,500.

GOLF CLUB HOUSE, CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS PARK

Question No. 718—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. On what date were tenders called for the construction of a new golf club house at the Cape Breton Highlands National Park, Nova Scotia?
2. On what date was it decided to cancel the construction of this golf club house and for what reason?
3. On what date was it decided to notify the low tenderer that construction was not going to be proceeded with?
4. When is it planned to recall tenders for the construction of this golf club house and how soon will construction commence?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. Tenders were called by public advertisement on April 5 and 6, 1963; the closing date was May 7, 1963.

2. July 4, 1963. This project was cancelled owing to the urgent need for funds in other areas which required prior consideration.

3. July 11, 1963.

4. This matter is under consideration and when a decision is reached it will be announced in the usual way.

LAKEHEAD—PLANS FOR BRIDGE OVER KAMINISTIQUIA RIVER

Question No. 724—Mr. Fisher:

Does the agency of the Department of Public Works at the Lakehead have any plans or has it prepared any comments for the ministry on the possibility of a new bridge structure over the Kaministiquia River at or near James Street; if so, what is the gist of such plans or comments?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Public Works): This does not come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works and should be referred to the Department of Transport.

YARMOUTH, N.S.—PAVING OF WHARF

Question No. 733—Mr. Coates:

1. Were tenders called for paving a portion of the Yarmouth public wharf and, if so, what were the names of firms or individuals who submitted tenders and what were the amounts of the tenders in question?

2. Was the low bidder awarded the contract and, if not, who was awarded the contract?

3. What is the Department's experience in regard to the successful tenderer in carrying out work of this type?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes. The tenders received were as follows: Leonard Shaw, $4,998; Aberdeen Paving, $6,720; Killam Noah, $7,590.

2. Contract was awarded to low bidder.

3. Low bidder has not previously done any work of this type for the Department.

OPENING OF EXPERIMENTAL FARM LABORATORY, SWIFT CURRENT, SASK.

Question No. 740—Mr. McIntosh:

1. What date will the laboratory at the Dominion Experimental Farm at Swift Current be officially opened?

2. Who will officially open the building on behalf of the federal government?

3. Has the Member of Parliament for Swift Current-Maple Creek been formally invited to the official opening by the Minister of Public Works, or the Minister of Agriculture?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The opening of the new laboratory building at the experimental farm, Swift Current, is to take place in conjunction with the annual field day and open house on June 16 and 17, 1965.

2. Dr. J. G. Taggart, former Deputy Minister of Agriculture, and Superintendent of the Experimental Farm, Swift Current, from 1921 to 1934, will officially open the building.

3. No formal invitations have been issued.

FEDERAL BUILDING, AMHERST, N.S.

Question No. 752—Mr. Coates:

1. Has a firm decision been reached by the government with regard to the construction of either a new federal building or an addition to the post office building in Amherst, N.S. and if, so, what is that decision?

2. When will tenders be called for this project?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Public Works): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY—FEDERAL EXPENDITURES IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Question No. 755—Mr. Dubé:

What were the amounts spent by the federal government on the trans-Canada highway in each of the four Atlantic provinces in the fiscal years ending March 31, 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964 and 1965?

Inquiries of the Ministry

3. How much money is being made available for the purpose of the agricultural exhibit?

Return tabled.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING NEWSPAPERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. It should properly be addressed to the Minister of Finance, who is not here, but I am sure the Acting Prime Minister, who is present, will be able to answer.

In view of the fact that we will be taking up second reading of the income tax bill tomorrow, or probably today, and because the Minister of External Affairs and the Minister of Finance met on Friday last with the Canada Daily Newspaper Publishers Association, at which meeting this Association requested the Government to put off further action on the newspaper legislation until a better way was found to deal with the problem, can the Acting Prime Minister and Minister of External Affairs say whether the Government is prepared to accede to the request of this Association?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot at the moment say anything further on this subject, but the Minister of Finance will be back later today and I will have an opportunity of discussing the matter further with him, and I think he will likely be dealing with this question tomorrow.

Mr. Starr: Can the Acting Prime Minister say whether he could advise the House as to the decision of the Government on this matter prior to the taking up of second reading of this legislation?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I will be discussing the matter with my colleague.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DORION COMMISSION—OPPORTUNITY TO DEBATE REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made earlier by the Acting Prime Minister to the effect that we may expect the report of Chief Justice Dorion in a matter of days, can we have some assurance that the Government will give to the House before the recess an opportunity to debate this report, giving the Government itself an opportunity to present what action it intends to take with respect to the findings of Chief Justice Dorion?

[Mr. Harkness.]

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker as I indicated, the Chief Justice hopes to be able to present his report soon, but not before the end of the week. The document will be tabled by the Government in Parliament, of course, and the procedures which Parliament has for dealing with this situation will undoubtedly be resorted to.

Mr. Douglas: Then may I ask the Acting Prime Minister more directly whether it is the Government's intention, when it receives this report, to make a statement before Parliament adjourns, setting out what action it proposes to take in the light of the findings of the Chief Justice?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the report contains, and I am sure the Prime Minister will want to examine the report and, as a result, determine the course of action he proposes to take.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the importance of this particular question I wonder whether the Government would give consideration to employing the same technique that was used on another occasion, that of sidetracking everything else and giving this matter top priority in regard to translation and printing.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think that is now being done, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Acting Prime Minister and arises out of the statement made today in connection with the Dorion inquiry. Since the apparent leak of information occurred during the process of translating the report, would the Government give consideration to having inquiries and commissions report to the Government immediately in whatever language their reports have been initially prepared so that the Government can take the responsibility for the translation and publication of the reports with the result that there will be no doubt about the responsibility in this regard in the future?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think it has yet to be proven that in fact there was a leak. As the hon. Member for Burnaby-Coquitlam so rightly said, this cannot be determined until the report has been made public.

Mr. Nugent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. My question was directed to preventing any possibility of leaks in the future and so that if a leak did occur there would be no possibility of any doubt as to responsibility for the leak. Would the Government give consideration to that suggestion?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would doubt, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Inasmuch as this question relates to policy in general, may I suggest it be placed on the order paper or brought up at a later time.

REVIEW OF CRIMINAL CODE PROVISIONS RESPECTING BAIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice prompted by a report that appeared in a Toronto newspaper this morning. Has the Minister considered the report dealing with the alleged inequalities and inconsistencies in the system of granting bail which is said to obtain in Toronto, and which some of us know is in effect in other parts of Canada? Would he give consideration to having a complete study made of this subject and placing the matter before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs so that recommendations may be made with a view to possible changes in the Criminal Code?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

JOHN DARRELL PETERS—ALLEGED UNFAIRNESS IN SENTENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Inasmuch as I have been absent for a few days I wish to thank the Minister for postponing answering the question until I returned. The question has to do with one John Darrell Peters. Can the Minister give the House the information he has at the moment?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have now had an opportunity to consider the Peters case which was referred to by the hon. Member for Skeena on June 3, 1965. In 1961 Hon. E. D. Fulton directed an exhaustive investigation into this matter to determine whether there were grounds which would warrant directing a new trial. After careful consideration he decided there were none, and I am in agreement with that opinion. Furthermore, nothing new has turned up in the meantime which would warrant reversing it.

I might add that several proceedings by way of prerogative writs have been launched by or upon behalf of Peters in the Supreme Courts of British Columbia and Ontario. In addition, an application for leave to appeal was made to the Supreme Court of Canada. This application was heard by five judges of that court and was dismissed on May 17 last.

SEAFARERS BUILDING CORPORATION—NON-COMPLIANCE WITH COMPANIES LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State a question arising out of the reply given by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister to Question No. 682 on the order paper, asked by the hon. Member for Kootenay West. Since it would appear that the Canadian Seafarers Building Corporation Limited has not complied with the provisions of the companies legislation, is it the intention of the Companies Branch or the Government to implement any proceedings to enforce compliance with the provisions of companies legislation and, if not, why not?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire into this matter and reply later when I get the necessary information.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

QUEBEC—EXPRESS FORMS IN ENGLISH ONLY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport who is away on official business, I shall put my question to the Acting Prime Minister.

On many occasions we have asked for French at the Canadian National Railways, in the province of Quebec. Now, I have here a receipt for a shipment from Montreal to St. Tite, Champlain county, and this receipt is in English only.

I was talking about the question of the French fact in Canada last Friday, and this person wrote to me to prove that the express service of the C.N.R. sends English forms to people who do not speak English, in St. Tite of Champlain, where there is not a single English speaking person.

Then I should like to know whether the Acting Prime Minister could inform his colleague, the Minister of Transport, of this situation or have the latter corrected himself?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. That question could be put on the order paper.

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DESIGNATED AREAS—LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the Government to take any action before the recess on the proposed legislation related to assistance to areas of unemployment in view of the continuing high rate of unemployment in the Atlantic area?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what I would do in these difficult circumstances without the help of my colleagues. I should like to call the hon. Member's attention to page 2147 of Hansard where the Prime Minister, in setting out the agenda is reported as stating:

> Another important item which should be given early consideration is the new incentive for industry in certain areas to increase employment and incomes.

I may say, of course, that the employment figure in Canada is comparatively speaking very satisfactory.

An hon. Member: Not in respect of the Atlantic coast area.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No.

Mr. Coates: I have a supplementary question. Will the Acting Prime Minister indicate whether the Government intends to go forward with this legislation before or after the recess?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the program has been outlined by the Government, and it will depend on the kind of assistance we receive from such friendly hon. gentleman as the one who has just put the question to me.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the growing fear in the Maritimes that Halifax and Saint John will be the only parts of these provinces not to be included in this new legislation, will the Minister say whether a decision has been taken in this regard and, if not, whether a direct opportunity will be made available for those two cities to make representations?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, no decision has been taken as yet, and I do not feel that I should go further than the words of the Acting Prime Minister.

Mr. Bell: In that connection, Mr. Speaker, will the Minister give every assurance that Halifax and Saint John will be given an opportunity to protest this unfairness, which seems to be mounting, particularly in view of the fact that such a decision would only transfer the poverty around the Maritimes?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think an affirmative answer on my part to that question would be equivalent to acknowledging the correctness, which I dispute, of the allegation made by the hon. Member.

[Later:]

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): May I ask the Acting Prime Minister if he can inform the House when we can expect to see the legislation promised by the Prime Minister on June 7 to provide grants for industries in designated areas, which legislation was to come into effect on July 1?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend will look at one of the earlier questions, he will see that this has already been answered.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry.

I have been informed lately that the Minister of Industry had determined the criteria to be used for the newly designated areas which might receive assistance.

Is the minister in a position to tell us when he will make an official announcement concerning the newly designated areas and the policy to be applied there?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think this question has been asked earlier this afternoon, and the minister has given an answer.

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

MONTREAL—APPLICATION FOR CHARTER FOR PORT COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the Minister of Labour now in a position to reply to several questions I brought to his attention during the past month concerning the S.I.U. and the maritime trustees, their activities and inactivities?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to clear my outstanding accounts with the hon. Member for Kootenay West.

In connection with the question referring to port councils and the issuance of a charter by the International S.I.U., the Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Maritime Transportation Unions has stated that the charter of the Montreal port council was issued on February 25, 1965 by the maritime trades department of the AFL-CIO, and that the Board of Trustees was not consulted about nor asked to approve the issuing of the charter. The Chairman of the Board of Trustees does not know whether or not the charter was issued with the approval of the Canadian Labour Congress.

Mr. Herridge: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the opinion expressed by Trustee Millard in respect of the irresponsibility of Paul Hall, does the Minister not think the trustees should approve any arrangement regarding charters of port councils which will have such an effect on the future development of our Canadian merchant marine?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have taken the view that the Board of Trustees has been given an independent status by Parliament, and that it would be improper for me to comment either pro or con on the day to day decisions made by the Board. If any other course were followed it would certainly be beyond the intent of Parliament in giving direct responsibility to the board itself.

SHIPPING

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING UNDERMANNING OF SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in respect of a question asked earlier by the hon. Member for Kootenay West which had to do with the alleged undermanning of ships, I wish to advise him that the alleged undermanning of ships on the Great Lakes has been made the subject of an arbitration by the Seafarers' International Union. Judge Anderson, who is a well known conciliator, mediator and arbitrator, is conducting this arbitration. There is no indication that the action of certain shipowners reducing the size of their crews came about as the result of a recently negotiated agreement.

In respect of the third and final question posed by the hon. Member for Kootenay West, the answer to which is still outstanding, it is my understanding that the Minister of Public Works undertook to answer this question this morning. I will assure the hon. Member that if the Minister of Public Works is not available to answer it tomorrow, I will answer it myself.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—DAMAGE BY SPEEDING BOATS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Jean Wadds (Grenville-Dundas): I have a question for the Minister of Transport, but in his absence may I direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. Will the Government now give more serious consideration to the undue speeding of boats on the St. Lawrence as a result of the damage done last Friday at Prescott, which now must be added to the long list of complaints already on file with the Department in this regard?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): The question asked by the honourable and charming lady should be answered forthwith, and I regret that I am not sufficiently gallant or able to do so. We will do so tomorrow.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. On Friday the Minister spoke before the Manitoba Bar Association, and I should like to know who are the Canadians the Minister referred to as "unwashed infidels".

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think this is a very important and urgent question, and if the Minister of Justice does not care to answer it we can only take it that he was referring to Canadians. In view of the fact that the Minister, in travelling around the country making speeches referring to Canadians as "unwashed infidels", is speaking on behalf of the Government, it is time we got some action.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. May I ask him if there has been any transfer of responsibilities from the Minister of Industry in his dual portfolio of Defence Production, in view of the press items appearing over the week end relating to the poor health and overwork of the Minister?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): My colleague, like all of my colleagues, is in excellent health.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

NOTICE TO STAFF RESPECTING ST. JEAN BAPTISTE DAY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister and it arises from a letter sent to the employees by the House of Commons personnel director. It reads as follows:

"If the house is not sitting on June 24, St. Jean Baptiste Day..."

Can the Acting Prime Minister tell us why they use the conditional form, that is

"If the house is not sitting"?

Could the minister tell us whether it was not understood beforehand, according to the rules, that St. Jean Baptiste Day is a holiday for everybody?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for me to answer that question, since it is clear that St. Jean Baptiste Day will fortunately be a holiday for all members according to the statutes.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

COMMISSION REPORT ON ALLEGED FRAUDULENT VOTING IN B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, since this is the season for receiving reports of royal commissions I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the Government has yet received a report from Mr. Justice Nemetz, who is looking into the question of alleged voting irregularities on the Pacific coast? Has the Government received the report and, if so, when will it be made public?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that it has been received, but I will look into the matter.

AGRICULTURE

PROPOSED CONFERENCE ON DROUGHT CONDITIONS IN OTTAWA VALLEY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the continuing drought which is bringing about a desperate situation for farmers situated in widely scattered parts of both Ontario and Quebec, particularly among the farmers of the Ottawa Valley, and which may also bring about higher food prices, will the Minister state whether the Government has considered convening an emergency conference of representatives of the two provincial Governments, the Federal Government and farmers' associations to discuss this important matter?

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): In the absence of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) who is now attending a meeting in Paris, I will take this question as notice and will say tomorrow whether provincial governments or farm organizations have made requests.

Mr. Martineau: The federal government has already stated that it was awaiting requests from the provincial governments, but I would like to know whether, on account of the very serious situation, the government will take action in order to help those who are affected?

Mr. Sauvé: I will consider the matter, Mr. Speaker, and answer tomorrow.

[English]

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Minister received any request in this regard from the Ontario Department of Agriculture, which is a condition precedent to emergency action by the Federal Department of Agriculture?

[Translation]

Mr. Sauvé: I will study the files, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister inform the House whether the Government is considering an emergency acreage payment, similar to the action taken by the former Government in 1959 due to "under the snow" conditions and because of the 1961 drought?

Mr. Sauvé: This is a matter of Government policy which would be announced in due course.

VANCOUVER—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN ARENA CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I gave him notice, but in the Minister's absence today perhaps his Parliamentary Secretary will have the answer. Is the report from Vancouver true that discussions have been held between the Federal Government and directors of the Pacific National Exhibition regarding financial assistance in the construction of a 15,000 seat arena to accommodate agricultural shows and an anticipated entry of Vancouver into the National Hockey League?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps this question might be put on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMONWEALTH PEACE MISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference in London proceeding with the setting up of the Prime Minister's peace mission in view of the reported statement of Premier Chou En-lai in Cairo that this is a hoax designed to help the United States to hang on to Viet Nam, and in the light of statements made by President Nasser and others?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the statement attributed to Premier Chou En-lai of the Chinese People's Republic is not, as I read it, an absolute repudiation of the mission in the sense that the Government of China will refuse to receive the mission. I sincerely hope that the Government of China and the Government of North Viet Nam, along with the government of the Soviet Union, will recognize the desirability of meeting this mission that represents so many constituent elements in the Commonwealth.

The members of the mission will urge on the interested parties the desirability of beginning peace talks without any preconditions. I am happy to say that as a result of almost continuous contact over the week end I am aware of the very constructive position taken by the Prime Minister in discussions with certain Prime Ministers of the Commonwealth who for one reason or another had their doubts about the potential usefulness of the initiative taken by the British Prime Minister.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is Prime Minister Wilson to remain a member of this peace mission, or is he going to withdraw in favour of some other Commonwealth Prime Minister because of the objections stated by Chou En-lai and other government leaders in southeast Asia?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I know of nothing that is before me that would warrant the acceptance of this implication. The Government of Canada recognizes that there is much justification in the presence of the British Prime Minister as Chairman of the peace mission because, as Prime Minister, he is the head of the government that acts as one of the co-chairmen of the Geneva accord powers.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister about the proposed peace mission of Commonwealth Prime Ministers. Newspapers indicate a rather discouraging response by China. Is there a possibility of the Canadian Prime Minister joining that group in view of the withdrawal of the Prime Minister of Ceylon?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would not think that the withdrawal of the Prime Minister of Ceylon would cause the Prime Minister of Canada to change the position he took earlier, when he indicated that it would be better for him not to take part in the mission because of his desire, and the desire of other countries, that the mission should be a balanced representation of the Commonwealth. As I explained to the Member for Ontario the other day, by "balanced representation" he had in mind the fact that if he were to go on the mission it would mean there would be two western countries on the mission who are, at the same time, members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

I may assure the hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre that the Prime Minister has been following this initiative with very great interest and has exercised his well known talents for diplomacy to favourably persuade certain countries which, for reasons best known to themselves, have been somewhat opposed to the British initiative.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a supplementary question. I was not asking for a eulogy of the Prime Minister, of course; let us have a eulogy of the Acting Prime Minister. Perhaps I did not phrase my first question correctly. In view of press reports that China is antagonistic toward the purposes of this mission, has the Acting Prime Minister any word from London on whether the intention is to proceed with the activities of the mission?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sorry I did not answer that part of my hon. friend's question. I hope he will excuse me for saying the obvious in praise of the Prime Minister for what he has been trying to do. The only way I could avoid that would be if the hon. gentleman would undertake the responsibility of praising the Prime Minister for what he has been doing.

I do not expect that the reported attitude of the Chinese People's Republic will deter the decision of the Prime Ministers' Conference to proceed with the mission. On Saturday night a communication was addressed by the peace mission through its Chairman, the Prime Minister of Britain, to the Soviet Union, the United States, North Viet Nam, South Viet Nam, the Chinese People's Republic and the Secretary General of the United Nations. It is the intention of the mission to proceed very shortly to call on all those governments which are willing to receive them, so they can make representations designed to try to bring about talks leading to some stabilization in that section of Indochina.

ALGERIA—RECOGNITION OF NEW REGIME

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of what took place in Algeria over the week end, can the minister tell the house if the government expects to recognize the new regime shortly or if it will wait a while?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it has been decided to postpone our decision until more information is available.

[English]

VIET NAM—TELEGRAM TO PRIME MINISTER FROM UNIVERSITY PROFESSORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Has he been supplied with a copy of the telegram sent to the Prime Minister by 72 Canadian university professors concerning the danger of the war in Viet Nam escalating into a wider conflict? If so, can he give us the text of the telegram and the text of the Prime Minister's reply?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have the text of the telegram and I have a draft of the proposed reply, but whether it is the one the Prime Minister has actually sent I do not know. I will have to verify that.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps the Acting Prime Minister could produce these documents tomorrow?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will endeavour to do that.

EDUCATION

REQUEST FOR INCREASED PER CAPITA GRANTS TO UNIVERSITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I should like to direct a very brief question to his Parliamentary Secretary. With regard to the review being made of the system of university grants, can the distinguished Parliamentary Secretary indicate when this review will be completed and the changes brought into effect?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I suggest this is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Regan: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN FORM OF OATH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Has he received a communication from the Young Liberal Association of Spadina riding in Toronto asking that the words "God" and "the Queen" be deleted from the citizenship oath?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I received such a communication. I must say, however, that I did not give them any encouragement.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does this mean that the Minister has refused this request?

Mr. Nicholson: I said to the spokesman that as long as our constitution remains in the form it is we shall honour the Queen and allegiance will be pledged to her as our Queen. That is my stand, and that is the stand of the Government.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With respect to oaths of citizenship, inasmuch as there are people who do not believe in a god, does the Government not take the position that they should be permitted to make affirmations?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, this question has come before the House on several occasions. The matter is now pending before the Court of Appeal of Ontario and a decision is expected shortly. In view of the fact that the answer is sub judice, I do not think I should answer the question.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR MORTGAGE REBATE ON SINGLE DWELLINGS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration as the minister answerable for the C.M.H.C.

In order to enable all Canadian families to live in wholesome conditions and ensure, at the same time, the economic progress of our country, could the minister tell the house whether the government has already looked into the possibility of allowing a 3 per cent rebate on mortgage loans granted throughout Canada for the construction of one-family dwellings?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that he put his question on the order paper?

BICULTURALISM AND BILINGUALISM

VISIT TO YUGOSLAVIA BY DELEGATION OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I ask the Acting Prime Minister if he is in a position to reply to the question I asked him concerning the B and B Commission?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I regret that I am not, but I will look into the matter. I have been preoccupied lately.

VANCOUVER—QUESTIONS ASKED BY COMMISSION REPRESENTATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. I understood that this afternoon he would answer two questions which I raised last week. I understood he was going to give a report as to whether or not a questionnaire had been issued by the B and B Commission, under contractual arrangement, which had certain political overtones.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have asked for information with regard to the interrogations being made in British Columbia under the auspices of this Commission. I have not yet got all the facts to provide the necessary foundation for an answer.

PUBLIC SERVICE

OTTAWA—LANGUAGE QUALIFICATIONS RESPECTING EMPLOYMENT AND PROMOTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State who is responsible for the Civil Service Commission.

Is it the government's intention to amend the Civil Service Act so that French speaking Canadians would not have to speak English any more than English speaking Canadians are required at present to speak French to get a job or a promotion, here, in Ottawa, so that both groups may get equal treatment?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Since this is a matter of general policy, I suggest that the hon. member put his question on the order paper.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF FAIR WAGES AND HOURS OF LABOUR ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the minister's statement on Wednesday last that it is the intention of the Government to apply the principles of the Canada Labour Code to all its employees, and that this will be done by July 1, can he tell the House what steps are to be taken to implement that undertaking?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it the Treasury Board has already issued a directive to cover all employees with respect to the minimum wage of $1.25 an hour; and it is my expectation, barring some unforeseen situations, that all federal employees will receive the minimum wage by July 1.

The question of applying the hours is in a somewhat different situation, because it may be necessary to observe the pattern of adjustment that would prevail in private industry; but with respect to the wages there is no question as to the commencement date, July 1.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister whether this will also apply to employees working on Federal Government contracts?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker. It has been clear that this statute does not apply to contractors or employees working under federal Government contracts. That is why we have determined to amend the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act in order to bring the wages and hours in line with the principles of the Canada Labour Code.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

Mr. Knowles: Then what has happened to the Government's promise to have the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act amended by July 1?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend raised this question some time ago, and nothing has happened to the promise. It will be exercised as quickly as possible, but in view of the present parliamentary timetable it is quite unlikely that this can be done by July 1.

REPORTED DISCRIMINATION BY AIR LINES AGAINST MARRIED WOMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, last week I asked whether the Government would give consideration to the serious matter of discrimination against married women in employment.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret I have not got the answer to this question as yet, but now that my hon. hon. friend has asked it again perhaps the officials in the gallery will see that he gets an answer as expeditiously as possible.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE USE OF FORMER R.C.A.F. BASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to an inquiry made by the hon. Member for Vancouver East on Thursday last. I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows. Mr. Caple, regional director of the C.B.C. at Vancouver, spoke solely on behalf of the corporation in requesting the Vancouver City Council to extend a 25 year lease to the C.B.C. as part of the former R.C.A.F. base at Kitsilano.

The city council was also advised that if the Kitsilano site were not available, the C.B.C. must necessarily investigate alternative sites. The C.B.C.'s interest in this matter is confined to securing an appropriate site for its Vancouver area operations as soon as possible and on the most attractive economic basis.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago the Secretary of State gave an answer to the first two parts of the question I put to him last Thursday. Is he now prepared to give a reply to the third section, which has to do with the interest of the Government in an urban redevelopment in Vancouver, with the C.B.C. being part of it and all three levels of government participating?

Mr. Lamontagne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not responsible for questions involving urban development, but I am quite sure that if a proposal were developed by those in authority then the C.B.C. would look into it very seriously.

Mr. Winch: May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and ask him whether there was an understanding given by himself that the Government would be interested in urban redevelopment, with the C.B.C. as part of it, and whether he still stands by what I understand to be the position he took only a few months ago?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad this question has been asked. I can say categorically that while I did say that the Federal Government or at least Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, an agency of the Federal Government, would look sympathetically on any proposal for an urban renewal study in downtown Vancouver that might be put forward by the City of Vancouver—because it must originate with the city—any proposal put forward by the city which carried the support and endorsement of the Provincial Government would receive prompt and sympathetic consideration here in Ottawa, I went no further than that.

On that occasion discussion took place as to whether a C.B.C. building could be included in the study. I said I could give no assurance, that this must come out of the urban renewal study itself; that if out of that study, with the C.B.C. participating in the study, there came such a recommendation, it would receive prompt consideration by our officials here in Ottawa. I might say that following this I spoke to one of the members of the Provincial Government and suggested that thought should be given to an urban renewal study, perhaps more than one, in downtown Vancouver. As the hon. Member knows, there are several areas that are worthy of study in this respect. I have also alerted the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing in Vancouver, British Columbia to be on the lookout for any such a proposal that might come forward, and so far as I know nothing has been done since that date. That was several months ago.

REDISTRIBUTION

ONTARIO—PUBLICATION OF MAPS IN WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, last week I addressed a question to the Secretary of State, asking him to inquire whether the Redistribution Commission in the Province of Ontario would publish in the weekly press some of the new maps that have been issued as a result of its work. As the deadline for publication in the weekly papers is tomorrow, can the Minister advise whether a decision has been made to comply with that request?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the views of the hon. Member have been communicated to the commission, but I have not received any indication from the commission as to what would be its decision.

Mr. Starr: Would the Secretary of State be good enough to communicate with it again and ask for a decision?

Mr. Lamontagne: I will.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE AMOUNT OF LOAN AND EXTEND REPAYMENT PERIOD

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (for the Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-121, to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

INDIAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, DUTIES, ETC.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the disposition of Indian claims and in relation thereto,

1. To provide for the establishment of an Indian Claims Commission;

2. To provide for the duties of the Commission, its decisions and awards;

3. To provide for appeals from the decisions and awards of the Commission to an Indian Claims Appeal Court;

4. To provide assistance to Indian bands in preparing and pursuing claims; and

5. To enact such financial provisions as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of the Act.

Motion agreed to and the House went into Committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I am sure that many, and I hope all, hon. Members have carefully considered this resolution. Its purpose, as indicated in the resolution itself, is to establish an Indian Claims Commission to consider fully the claims of Indian bands against the Crown.

The establishment of such a Commission has been advocated for many years, not only by Indians but by many others, in order that a tribunal might be set up which could effectively deal with claims put forward by the Indians of Canada. The claims made may or may not have legitimate bases; some of them undoubtedly have, but it is felt that when so many of these claims are being put forward, whether rightly or wrongly, there should be a tribunal set up to determine them, and settle them once and for all.

I think most people who have studied this problem, and more particularly those with any training in the law, will appreciate that it is impossible to have these claims dealt with in the law courts, where strict rules of evidence must be followed and where other legal technicalities would have to be adhered to. These claims, I might say, have mainly to do with allegations that lands were taken without proper compensation agreed upon by treaty or otherwise; also they involve failure to discharge treaty obligations, improper use of Indian trust funds, and in general include claims based on the alleged failure of Canada to deal in a fair and equitable manner with our native people, the Indians.

Two joint committees of the Senate and House of Commons which examined Indian affairs in the years 1946 to 1948 and again in 1959 to 1961, after hearing the evidence of Indians and others, recommended that a Claims Commission be established to hear and settle in an equitable manner these claims. I might say that from my perusal of Hansard and discussions I have had with officials of my Department, I believe and I am advised that the establishment of such an Indian Claims Commission has received general suport in the past from members of all parties in the Commons, and the Indians generally have come to expect that such a Commission would be established.

In the United States, after many years of advocacy, an Indian Claims Commission was established in 1946. This Commission was given very broad terms of reference to deal with claims of Indian tribes, which are similar in many respects to those raised by the Indian bands and tribes in Canada. Indians in Canada are very well aware of the work of this Commission in the United States and they have continued—not only Indians but others who are interested in the subject—to press for a comparable tribunal in Canada to deal with these claims. I might say, Mr. Chairman—and I have had some experience myself—that some Indians feel such a Commission would be just another device concocted by the whites to whittle away Indian rights. We must do our best not only to establish this Commission as soon as possible, but when it is set up we must do what we can to ensure that everything is done to correct and remove any such impression.

Hon. Members will recall that in December, 1963 Bill No. C-130 was introduced in this House to establish such a Claims Commission. Immediately thereafter copies of the Bill were distributed to Indian organizations, Indian bands and other interested groups and individuals in all parts of Canada for study. The Bill now proposed and covered by the resolution before the Committee is similar in objectives but differs in some major respects, in that it includes several suggestions that were made by the Indian bands and others since the bill of December, 1963 was introduced.

The need to settle the claims of our native people, the Indians, is just as great today as it was when the earlier resolution was approved by a Committee of this House in December, 1963. The mere existence of these claims is an impediment, I believe, to progress. Some of the claims have their roots in the very deep past; they go back well over 100 years. Others are of more recent origin. But whether ancient or new, or whatever the merits of the claims may be, it is apparent that there is a continuing sense of grievance among the Indians concerned; they have felt that action should have been taken long ago, and that it is time for us to take action which will permit their claims to be dealt with in justice and fairness.

I firmly believe, therefore—and here I speak strongly on behalf of the Government—that it is highly desirable at this time to provide a means whereby the Indians can state their claims fully and have them determined. We hope that, once we have done so, these old controversies will be laid at rest, and by so doing will go a long way toward building the kind of confidence in the intentions of Parliament and the intentions of the Canadian people which is so necessary for the future development of the Indian population of this country.

As I have already advised the Committee, it is the Government's intention to recommend that this bill be referred to a Committee for detailed consideration. In view of the great interest taken by Members of the other place and the fact that they have participated in two joint Committees which recommended that such a Commission be appointed, we intend to propose that the bill be studied by a Joint Committee of the two Houses of Parliament. When this bill is before the Joint Committee, and whenever it is considered necessary or desirable for me to do so, I, with the assistance of the officials of my Department in the Indian Affairs Branch, will deal with the various representations which were made to us during the year 1964 and early this year with respect to the former claims bill.

At this stage I will content myself by drawing attention to the objectives of the bill as outlined in the resolution. If all hon. Members have read it I need not take much of their time, but briefly they call for a measure to provide for the establishment of an Indian Claims Commission; to outline the duties of the Commission, its decisions and awards; to provide for appeals from the decisions and awards of the Commission to an Indian Claims appeal court; to provide assistance to Indian bands in preparing and pursuing claims—I might say that was one of the matters recommended in several of the briefs that we received—and finally, to enact such financial provisions as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of the Act.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, we on this side, and I am sure all hon. Members of the Opposition, welcome this very long delayed and much needed resolution which precedes the bill establishing the Indian Claims Commission. This afternoon we heard the Acting Prime Minister indicate that the Government intended to take certain steps with regard to helping make up a deficit on the part of the United Nations.

This, of course, underlines the fact that Canada plays a very considerable part in connection with peace keeping operations around the world, and in addition, of course, through the Colombo Plan and other measures has participated very substantially in assisting underdeveloped nations. But I want to emphasize that for my part I think until we have remedied the problem we have in our own country by legislation of this kind and by other measures, our opportunities to participate in this very worth-while work throughout the world must be somewhat lessened.

I welcome the announcement by the Minister that another joint committee will be set up. I had the privilege of serving on the last joint committee, and our labours extended over a period of three years. A number of witnesses were called and there was an extensive examination—

Mr. Nicholson: If the hon. gentleman will permit an interjection at this point, I hope that the passage of this legislation will not take even three months, let alone three years.

Mr. Baldwin: I hope so too; because it was in 1961 that the report was made, and it is now 1965. So the three years of discussion and the four years intervening between the filing of the report and introduction of the legislation makes a very long period of gestation.

I also wanted to refer to what the Minister said regarding the situation in this country in the past, particularly vis-à-vis the United States. In the United States for a great many years—hon. Members may not be aware of this—such treaties were given the same solemn obligation as were international treaties between sovereign countries. I think that was the case until about 1870 or 1880. This accordingly lent to treaties signed by the national government of the United States and the Indian people a far greater measure of solemnity, and gave them far greater opportunities to implement in different ways the benefits which the treaties purported to give to them.

I think this bill, as the Minister said, has its origin in the requests made over the years by various Indian bands and others who are equally concerned about the welfare and advancement of our Indian people. In particular it was the subject of discussion in the joint committee. At page 13 of the report of the Committee, the very last recommendation, the following appears:

> An Indian Claims Commission should be established to hear the British Columbia and Oka Indian land questions and other matters, and that the cost of counsel to Indians for the two land questions specified above be borne by the federal treasury.

I emphasize the use of the words "and other matters", because in the course of deliberations and during several days in July 1961, when the steering committee wrestled with the question of what should be included in the report for presentation to the main Committee, there had been suggestions by the officials of the Department that the Claims Commission should be limited to the two issues of British Columbia and Oka Indian land questions. However, Members of the Committee, including hon. Members of the other place felt that this was insufficient; that there were other issues that remained to be settled and until these claims were resolved we could not be said to have done justice to the obligations, both legal and moral, which lay on our shoulders with respect to the Indian people of Canada. I want to make that quite plain because in concluding my remarks I want to point out the reason for the inclusion of the words "and other matters", and to emphasize and underline that certain areas of dispute should be included in this legislation or we have not lived up to our obligations.

We can consider the provisions of this bill later, but this discussion in committee gives me an opportunity to urge the inclusion of certain issues and questions which may or may not be in the bill. The Minister has not made it quite plain in this respect, and of course we will not know until we see the bill.

During the course of the last year or so there have been a number of court decisions which have brought up and emphasized the problems which still exist, particularly with regard to the rights of Indian people under the treaties which were entered into between the Federal Government and various Indian peoples. I am not going to go into all of them because this is not the time or the forum, but I should like to refer briefly to three. I will not infringe the rules, Mr. Chairman, and discuss the merits of these issues; I simply refer to them because some of them are still sub judice.

There is the recent decision of the magistrate's court in Saskatchewan declaring that what is known as the medicine chest clause in the treaties was sufficient on which to found a claim by the Indian people to receive certain medical and hospitalization privileges without having to pay for them. This in turn could cast a responsibility upon the Federal Government. Then there was a case in British Columbia involving traditional hunting and trapping rights which I think is still in the process of appeal. There may have been an abandonment of the appeal, but as far as I know it is still being considered. Third, there was the George case in Ontario where an appeal court decided, at least by inference, that the Migratory Birds Convention Act did not apply to Indians, a decision which has subsequently, in effect, been cancelled by a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the "lame duck" or Sikyea case.

These issues involve consideration of a number of treaties, and I am going to refer briefly to the treaties known as Nos. 1 to 11, involving all parts of western Canada save a large area of British Columbia, and parts of the northern areas in the Northwest Territories. They also involve a part of Ontario.

A consideration of these treaties and the decisions of the courts, I submit, introduces a completely new element into the question of how we must fulfil our obligations to the Indian people of Canada. I precede my statement by referring to the Sikyea case, a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada which in effect has declared that the treaties in question can no longer be considered as having any validity when the Parliament of Canada acting within the course of its authority has legislated. In other words these treaties—and there are citations which bear me out in this regard—are not more than promises made from time to time by Government officials, from the year 1870 up to I believe 1922 or 1923, purporting to act on behalf of the Government of Canada, when actually they have no solemnity or validity in view of the fact that the Government has seen fit to legislate in a way which is prejudicial and contrary to these respective agreements.

As a matter of fact I believe I am justified in making this statement. If these treaties were in fact agreements between private individuals, under the laws relating to the interpretation of contracts every one of them would be declared completely invalid in so far as the Indian people are concerned. In the first place, there have been elements of undue influence. The Government was dealing with people who were then its wards. In many cases they were illiterate and unacquainted with the legal phraseology used and completely unaware of the consequences of treaties they signed. These were agreements which were improvident and were signed in exchange for a few thousand dollars in respect of each, plus a few thousand dollars paid each year in respect of all areas except the Northwest Territories, plus a suit of clothes, medals and a flag to the Indians involved, purporting to quiet the title to the Federal Government of that vast area of Canada lying west of the Great Lakes, excluding a large part of the Province of British Columbia.

To illustrate my point that this was improvident, unconscionable and against national justice, I should like to refer to the terms of a later treaty which was signed in 1922 or 1923 by which the Indians, having already transferred to the Federal Government such rights as they had in their lands, gave up their traditional fishing and hunting rights in a comparatively small part of the country, for which they received half a million dollars. Contrast that with the paltry amounts paid to the various Indian bands and the amounts paid on a yearly basis to the Indians under treaties signed during the last half of the nineteenth century.

I think that is ample proof of my proposition that these agreements were improvident, and that if they formed the basis of private agreement between two parties any court would set them aside as being completely contrary to the interests of one of the parties. The treaties were fraudulent, in that they were accompanied by promises and statements by officials made, I believe, in perfectly good faith that the promises would be kept, but made under circumstances which would indicate that there could not be that 100 per cent compliance which should be essential in treating agreements between parties such as the Federal Government on one side and Indians or small groups of Indian people on the other.

I referred for example to Treaty No. 8, which I happen to know, and which covers an area in which I live of some 100,000 square miles. That treaty was accompanied by a report of the Commissioners who were present and saw it signed. In the course of this report the Commissioners in reporting to the Superintendent General or the Minister in charge of Indian Affairs made this statement:

> Our chief difficulty was the apprehension that the hunting and fishing privileges were to be curtailed. The provision in the treaty under which ammunition and twine is to be furnished went far in the direction of quieting the fears of the Indians, for they admitted that it would be unreasonable to furnish the means of hunting and fishing if laws were to be enacted which would make hunting and fishing so restrictive as to render it impossible to make a livelihood by such pursuits. But over and above the provision, we had to solemnly assure them that only such laws as to hunting and fishing as were in the interest of the Indians and were found necessary in order to protect the fish and fur bearing animals would be made, and that they would be as free to hunt and fish after the treaty as they would be if they never entered into it.

Mr. Chairman, statements of that kind, in the light of what has happened since and in the light of the decision in the Sikyea case, by which the highest court of this country has confirmed that the Migratory Birds Convention Act, passed as a matter of fact some years before the last treaties were signed, are as fraudulent as it is possible to be in the case of an agreement of this kind. It is quite obvious that the rights to hunt and fish and trap have been curtailed not only as a result of increased settlement and the coming of civilization to many parts of Canada—this is something with which we cannot quarrel—but actually by Federal legislation, and that these are rights that have been substantially diminished or lost.

I maintain that if these had been agreements between two private parties any court would set them aside as being invalid and improvident, having in mind the relationship of the parties and what actually passed between them.

I have referred to the Sikyea case as a firm illustration of the decision of the Appellate Court of the Northwest Territories, and this has relation to Treaties Nos. 8 and 11, which is in effect a declaration that these treaties cannot be regarded as anything more than undertakings and promises, and not binding legally on the government; and that as such, according to the convention and constitution of practice which prevails, any Parliament is free to alter and change them. It is all very well for various courts to state, as has been stated from time to time, that the Federal Government would not change them; the fact remains that there have been changes and that Indian people have no reason to accept the statements and promises made at this time unless the legislation contains within its four corners stringent and adequate safeguards for these people is respect of those treaties. We must allay their alarm, wipe out their fears and make sure that they approach further negotiations in a far better spirit than has been the case in the past.

I do not wish to take up too much more time, as I know other Members want to participate in this debate, but I want to make this point quite clear. I suggest to the Minister and the committee that this legislation will be inadequate; it will be defective and insufficient unless it contains a provision that will permit the Indian people, either individually or in groups, to use this particular means of seeking recourse and remedy for breaches of treaties, even though these treaties can be legally broken by the Federal Government. The solemn responsibility resting upon the Government under these conditions cannot be discharged unless at this time legislation of this kind contains a provision that Indian people who have suffered in any way through failure to comply with these treaties will have an opportunity to seek recourse.

I understand, of course, that an interdepartmental committee has been established which is considering the effect of one of the decisions. I am not going to anticipate what the final decision may be in connection with the so-called medicine chest case, but there is no doubt that the Sikyea case is going to weigh very heavily upon those who carry the onus of trying to establish the rights of Indian people in that litigation. But when all these things have been decided I should like to see this legislation in such a state—it can only be done by enacting proper provisions now—that Indian people who have suffered injustices will be able to seek recourse through this means and not have to wait for this legislation to be amended later, for the Indian Act to be amended or for other provisions to be introduced.

I recognize that the facts of life are such that it may be difficult and may take a long time to bring this legislation back and secure amendments, and I suggest to the Minister that this should be an open-ended type of act. If the bill does not include such a clause I submit there should be a provision—I am not going to suggest at this time how it should read because we will have to wait until we see the bill—to the effect that people who have suffered prejudice in any way through failure to comply with the treaties will be free to apply, through an interlocutory application to a single member of the commission, for the right to have their case ventilated, considered and a decision made. I also suggest that any such provision should not be construed in a strictly legal sense.

The Minister is a lawyer, and I know he will recognize the difficulties facing the Indian people when they have to undergo the expense involved in the gathering of evidence to prepare a case for trial in the first instance for a subsequent appeal and for the final appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. The length of time that has to be taken in considering a matter of this kind is also something which must be taken into account.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

I suggest this is an admirable vehicle by which with the proper type of wording it will be possible, after final decisions have been reached in the existing cases involving treaty rights and the obligations of the government, either in honour or in law, for the Indian people to have their grievances remedied without the necessity of having to go through the courts. I suggest this is the right vehicle for it, and I hope if such a provision is not now in the bill something will be done to meet my request before the bill is presented to us.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have no hesitation whatever in expressing my own view that the question placed before the House in the resolution now under consideration is the most important matter which this Parliament will consider during its entire period of life. I listened attentively to the remarks just made by the hon. Member for Peace River, and it is evident that he shares my concern that when we see the legislation it will be adequate to do the kind of job that needs to be done. He dwelt at some length on the situation in the part of the country with which he is most familiar, and later in my own remarks I may try to illustrate the need for adequate legislation by some reference to the situation in the part of the country with which I am more familiar.

First of all, however, I should like to mention something on which the hon. Member for Peace River only touched in passing. It is because of my concern about this aspect of the legislation that I make the statement that in my view this legislation is the most significant of any we are likely to have presented to us in this Parliament. I feel that what comes out of the legislation being introduced by this resolution will have an impact upon Canada's stature as a nation in the family of nations for generations to come. In my opinion its effect for good or ill will last long after the current dialogue between the two so-called founding races of this country will have been fogotten; and the effect of the studies and findings of such bodies as the B and B commission will be dwarfed when contrasted with the significance of the bodies that will be established under this legislation. I am referring to the proposal set out in the resolution for an Indian Claims Commission and an Indian Claims Appeal Court.

If the two bodies proposed in the resolution do not do the job that it is quite obvious the hon. Member for Peace River hopes they will do, and that I and I think most other Members of the House hope they will do, then Canada will no longer have any right or justification to hold its head high in the modern world in which we live. I think we have to view this proposal in the light of the realities of the world in which we now live; a world in which the peoples of European stock, who for so long were dominant, are now on the defensive; a world in which we are seeing the emergence of races and peoples so long subservient into a position where their right to freedom and self determination is being achieved and respected.

We have only to think of the discussions that have been going on in London between the Prime Ministers of the various Commonwealth nations to understand how significant it is that if we in Canada are to be a self respecting member of the Commonwealth we have got to take action within our own borders paralleling in statesmanship the action taken in recent years by the United Kingdom in permitting formerly subservient peoples of Asia and Africa to emerge as fully independent and equal partners in the Commonwealth of Nations. For as long as I can remember there has been a great deal of sentiment in Canada in favour of the people of such countries as India obtaining their freedom. This arises in part, of course, out of our own experience in emerging from colonial status. But it does seem to me that over the years we have taken a free and easy attitude of support for the freedom of the people of India and of other countries in Africa which have now become members of the Commonwealth, while at the same time we have been completely blind with regard to what we have been doing in respect of the freedom we won and which gives us our national stature. It seems now that for far too long we Canadians have been more concerned with the removal of the mote from the eye of Britain than we have with the removal of the beam in our own eye.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that our days are numbered; that the world is not much longer going to remain unaware of the situation that exists in this country in respect of the original inhabitants, whom we have so largely replaced. They are no longer going to hold us in the kind of esteem in which we are held in many quarters of the world, and which in reality we do not deserve.

I think we have to consider what this legislation is going to mean in the context of the North American situation, which is not exactly parallel to that which has prevailed in Africa or in Asia. I believe it is probably fair to say that even the Indian people themselves do not expect those of us of European descent to withdraw from this continent in the way Europeans have agreed to withdraw from many of the areas in Africa and Asia. It seems to me that the job that has to be done by this legislation, in effect, is parallel to the job which has been done by Britain in granting India her freedom and independence, and in following through by granting various other one-time colonial groups their freedom and independence.

It should be the function of the body set up by this legislation to do that job in the context of the realities of the situation, and with the objective of achieving for the Canadian people the same restoration of their basic freedoms that is being achieved by some of the other peoples in the world today. I think it is true, Mr. Chairman, to say that in the part of Canada from which I come what has happened is perhaps of more recent memory than it is in some of the eastern parts of this continent. It is possible for those of us who live in British Columbia today to talk to people who at least can tell us the stories they have heard first hand from their grandfathers as to how the European infiltration and occupation took place. For that reason perhaps we may be able to see more vividly the results of this than may be the case in the Atlantic half of the continent, where the process took place a greater number of years ago.

Perhaps I can best put before the Members of the Committee my own feeling and understanding by making some refences to a book written by one Gilbert Malcolm Sproat, whose name has now become associated with a very beautiful lake close to where I live. This book was published in London in 1868 and is entitled "Scenes and Studies of Savage Life". If the Committee will permit me I should like to quote somewhat liberally from this book, because I have not come across anything else in my own reading on the questions that are involved that sets out quite so vividly just how the Europeans went about their business, at least in the coastal areas of British Columbia. In the preface to this book Mr. Sproat says:

> I did not intend, originally, to publish these observations and have made no attempt, now, at literary ornament in producing them. Any value found in these pages will consist, I think, in their freshness and minuteness of detail, as well as in the more special consideration of social feelings, moral and intellectual characteristics and religious notions—matters which travellers among savages, ordinarily, have not full opportunity to do justice to.

This book, which was produced about 100 years ago, indicates to me at least the state of mind of the Europeans of that time, when Britain was at the height of her colonial empire, and perhaps some of the contrasts in the terms we might be prepared to use today in discussing some of these questions. Mr. Sproat indicates, and I am quoting again:

I did not merely pass through the country. The information which I give concerning their language, manners, customs, and ways of life, is not from memory, but from memoranda, written with a pencil on the spot—in the hut, in the canoe, or in the deep forest; and afterwards verified or amended by my own further researches—

Then in the first chapter, Mr. Chairman, he describes his entry into that part of Vancouver Island where I now make my home. He sets out his experiences which led to the establishment of the first export saw mill in British Columbia, in these terms:

In August, 1860, I entered Nitinaht, or Barclay Sound, on the outside, or western, coast of Vancouver Island, with two armed vessels, Woodpecker and Meg Merrilies, manned by about fifty men, who accompanied me for the purpose of taking possession of the district now called Alberni, a name taken from the Spanish navigator who first discovered the inlet at the head of the Sound. Reaching the entrance to this inlet, we sailed for twenty miles up to the end of it—as up a natural canal—three-quarters of a mile wide and very deep, bordered by rocky mountains, which rose high on both sides almost perpendicularly from the water. The view, as we advanced up this inlet from the sea, was shut in behind and before us, making the prospect like that from a mountain lake. At the end of this singular canal, the rocky sides of which appear to have been smoothed by a continued action of moving ice upon their surface, and which itself gives an idea of having been the furrow of a mighty glacier moving downwards toward the sea, the high land on the right receded from the shore, and a large bay or basin, with a river flowing into it through level wooded land, met our view. The range of hills which opened on one side formed an elbow about ten miles distant from the canal, and crossing in a direction almost at right angles to the course of the inlet, met a continuation of the other range, and thus shut in the district known to all the Indians as the famous berry-land of Somass.

Near a pretty point at one side of the bay, where there was a beach shaded by young trees, the summer encampment of a tribe of natives was to be seen. Our arrival caused a stir, and we saw their flambeaux of gumsticks flickering among the trees during the night.

In the morning I sent a boat for the chief, and explained to him that his tribe must move their encampment, as we had bought all the surrounding land from the Queen of England, and wished to occupy the site of the village for a particular purpose. He replied that the land belonged to themselves, but that they were willing to sell it. The price not being excessive, I paid him what was asked—about twenty pounds worth of goods—for the sake of peace, on condition that the whole people and buildings should be removed next day. But no movement was then made, and as an excuse it was stated that the children were sick. On the following day the encampment was in commotion; speeches were made, faces blackened, guns and pikes got out, and barricades formed. Outnumbered as we were, ten to one, by men armed with muskets and our communication with the sea cut off by the impossibility of sailing steadily down the Alberni Canal (the prevalent breeze blowing up it), there was some cause for alarm had the natives been resolute. But being provided, fortunately, in both vessels with cannon—of which the natives at that time were much afraid—they, after a little show of force on our side, saw that resistance would be inexpedient, and began to move from the spot.

● (4:50 p.m.)

Then he goes on:

Two or three days afterwards, when the village had been moved to another place, not far distant, I visited the principal house at the new encampment, with a native interpreter.

"Chiefs of the Seshahts," said I on entering, "are you well; are your women in health; are your children hearty; do your people get plenty of fish and fruits?"

"Yes," answered an old man, "our families are well, our people have plenty of food; but how long this will last we know not. We see your ships, and hear things that make our hearts grow faint. They say that more King-George-men will soon be here, and will take our land, our firewood, our fishing grounds; that we shall be placed on a little spot, and shall have to do everything according to the fancies of the King-George-men."

"Do you believe all this?" I asked.

"We want your information," said the speaker.

"Then," answered I, "it is true that more King-George-men (as they call the English) are coming: they will soon be here; but your land will be bought at a fair price."

"We do not wish to sell our land nor our water; let your friends stay in their own country."

To which I rejoined: "My great chief, the high chief of the King-George-men, seeing that you do not work your land, orders that you shall sell it. It is of no use to you. The trees you do not need; you will fish and hunt as you do now, and collect firewood, planks for your houses, and cedar for your canoes. The white man will give you work, and buy your fish and oil."

"Ah, but we don't care to do as the white men wish."

"Whether or not," said I, "the white men will come. All your people know that they are your superiors; they make the things which you value. You cannot make muskets, blankets, or bread. The white men will teach your children to read printing, and to be like themselves."

"We do not want the white man. He steals what we have. We wish to live as we are."

These words I have quoted, and many others in this book, have brought home to me more forcefully than anything else the real situation, and what is really behind the so-called land question in B.C.; and though I would like to say a good deal more on the subject, I hope they have indicated to the committee in some small way why I feel this is the most significant piece of legislation that we will be asked to discuss in this Parliament.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be very brief, but I do want to commend the Government for bringing this legislation before us. I hope it will be passed as quickly as possible and that the joint committee it proposes will deal with its work expeditiously.

Now that we have reached this stage I hope we shall soon correct some of the errors of the past and enable the Indians to benefit from claims which have been held up for many years.

So far as compensation is concerned I hope it will be generous, because many acts committed in the past need review and correction. I am constrained to ask that the benefit of the doubt be placed on the side of the Indian, because so often we are not too relative in our thinking concerning the spending of money. A few years ago we did not hesitate for one minute to give the Canada Council $100 million, and since that time we have given it many more millions of dollars.

Based on this and other expenditures by the Federal Government, I hope the recommendations made in connection with compensation will be made from the point of view of dollars and cents, and that we will not be niggardly. I hope the main task of the commission will be quickly and effectively undertaken, and that the life of the commission will be short so the Indians can soon have the redress which has been long owed them.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, during the next few minutes I should like to express our satisfaction with this resolution providing for the setting up of an Indian Claims Commission.

I think that this bill, which we will have the opportunity of considering in detail, comes at an opportune time and especially that it will meet the wishes of the Indian bands which have requested for a long time, every time we have met with the chiefs or Indian band authorities, such an agency through which they could plead their case before the federal government.

I think a grave injustice was done to the Indian people when they were confined within a reserve under the supervision of a manager called a reserve administrator.

As far as I know from my own constituency—I am not speaking about Indians in other provinces—Indians are often the victims of dealings which could hardly be called fair on the part of this reserve manager who, of course, is always a white man.

I myself found that Indians had complained in vain on many occasions and they certainly had legitimate grievances against the present administration of Indian reserves.

The worse part of it was that those Indians had no way of making themselves heard by the federal authorities, except through a branch that has so much to look after throughout Canada that it does not matter much when 10 or 15 small Indian families raise their voices in the Roberval area. I myself asked the minister to conduct inquiries. And what happened? The present chief of the Indian reserve himself was asked to do it. Can you imagine? When 10 or 15 families have a legitimate complaint against the chief and finally succeed in having an inquiry set up by the federal Indian Affairs branch, we are told that the chief is conducting the inquiry. Imagine the results.

I am very happy for the people of the Indian reserve of the riding of Roberval that this commission will be established. I hope it will be independent and that a great many of its members will be Indians so that it can provide benefits to the Indian people and that it will not again be influenced somehow by politics. When the survival of a people is at stake, it is not time to play party politics. The Indian people deserve consideration because they have been very patient up to now.

Since I have been sitting here, I have made three or four interventions myself to suggest to the government means of interesting Indians or of giving a little more meaning to their lives, because if you spoke with chiefs, you would find family heads telling you that the worst thing for them is to feel that they are useless.

Some people complain that those Indians are government pensioners. They do not want to be government pensioners, they do not want to be useless in a country like Canada. The government should assist them as it assists any other association, it should help them in matters of tourism. As I said a moment ago, I am only speaking for the Indians in my riding because the only way to help the Indians of Pointe-Bleue is by promoting the tourist industry. You have there the most beautiful tourist attraction in the area but nothing has been done about it, even though fully qualified personnel could be found within the reserve itself. If only the federal government agreed to spend a few thousand dollars to develop the tourist industry in the area. But, unfortunately, nothing is being done.

I have made three or four requests in that respect, but still nothing is being done, except forwarding the meagre pay cheques to the Indians, every month, but that does not help the economy of the area and yet, the Indians themselves would be so proud to participate in the development of Canada.

I have gone to the reserve and all those I have met said they had no way of expressing their views. I think that, through this commission, the Indian reserve will be able to submit its requests and express its views directly to the government agencies; the Indians have marvelous suggestions to make, but nothing can be done about them unless the government is aware of them.

I will no doubt have the opportunity of dealing with this again when this bill is before the house, but I wish to commend the government for introducing this resolution and I hope that the proposed legislation will be wide enough in scope to include any question which is important to the future of the Indian people in Canada.

• (5:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Roxburgh: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with keen interest to the previous speakers and I think we can see that we are all thinking along similar lines and are, at the present at least, in full agreement, which is something new in the House of Commons. I would just like to say, as one who hunted, fished and trapped with the Indians in my younger days, that I am certainly very interested in and extremely pleased to see this resolution being brought in providing for the establishment of an Indian Claims Commission. Such a Claims Commission is very important to Indians in the various parts of Canada, and I believe it will be of significant importance to the Indians of the Six Nations Reserve, who over the years have advanced their claims against the Crown.

The Six Nations Indian Reserve, one of the best known bands of Indians in Canada, is only a short distance from my own home and I have many personal friends there. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring to your attention a few historical facts about the Six Nations Indians and something about their claims. The Six Nations Indians have had a long and historic association with the Crown. In fact, they fought on the side of the Crown in the War of Independence and as a result were invited to come to Canada after the close of the war. The reserve was purchased from the Mississauga Indians. It ran along the banks of the Grand River and extended some six miles on either side. It took in a large area of ground, something like 700,000 acres. The grant of land was made by Sir Frederick Haldimand in 1784 and the reserve was confirmed to the Indians by Governor Simcoe in 1793. It consisted of Haldimand, Brant, Waterloo and Wellington Counties. However, that huge territory has slowly been disposed of and today they have a reservation of some 40,000 acres in the Townships of Tuscarora and Oneida.

I would also like to point out that we have some very outstanding persons from the Six Nations Reserve. As I am a person who has been interested in athletics over the years, as many hon. Members know, the first name that comes to my mind is Tom Longboat, the great long distance runner whose achievements brought not only fame to himself but to his country, his people and the Six Nations Indians in particular. Then, of course, there is that one and only poetess, Pauline Johnson, the poetess whose beautiful and stirring ballads have been learned by generations of Canadian school children, and I sincerely hope always will be learned by Canadian school children. In the field of science there is Dr. G. C. Monture, noted Canadian mineralogist, who is another outstanding Six Nations Indian. Then there is the late Magistrate Martin who dispensed justice for both Indian and non-Indian; he was also from the Six Nations near Brantford. There are others, Mr. Chairman, but I will not enumerate them all. I am certain, from the few examples I have given of outstanding people who have come from this one reserve, that there are many Indians who will be able to contribute to the work of this Commission if given the opportunity. While the appointment of an Indian would have been possible under the previous bill, I am sure hon. Members will agree that requiring the appointment of at least one Indian will meet with the favour of Indians across Canada. I cannot stress this too much. Indeed, there were many briefs from Indians and others which suggested that this be done, and I sincerely hope the Minister will see that it is done.

I also hope that the bill will make provision for the hearing of various kinds of claims. The Six Nations have advanced claims in the past, and I have in front of me an article from the Ottawa Journal for December 6, 1949, describing how members of the reserve were claiming compensation for part of the reserve which, they alleged, had been disposed of by the Governor to the old Grand River Navigation Company in the 1830's. These were just clear grants, by the way, without compensation. Without doubt this bill should provide, and I sincerely hope it will, that the claims may be brought where lands were disposed of by the Crown without payment of compensation, or where the compensation was not just and reasonable. There must be some consideration along these lines of thought; you cannot go exactly to the rule of the law itself.

If such provision were made it would meet the kind of claim that the Six Nations have put forward in the past.

In addition the Six Nations have alleged that about $160,000 of their trust funds were invested in worthless Grand River Navigation Company shares by the Province of Canada, and lost to them. I sincerely hope that this bill will make it possible to bring a claim which alleges that band funds have been improperly used.

It appears to me, Mr. Chairman, that a means is being found by this legislation to deal with the old claims which have been of concern to Indians of the Six Nations reserve, and of course right across Canada, which for one reason or another they were unable to get settled in the ordinary courts. Indians in Canada, and the Six Nations Indians in particular, place great weight upon their treaties and agreements made with the Crown. They regard these agreements as solemn contracts to be honoured by both Indians and Crown, and I should add justly so. It certainly makes one feel good that at this time we have a Minister, the present Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, who truly and sincerely, as I know all hon. Members feel, has the problems of the Indians at heart. With a Minister like this and with this Commission being set up I am sure something is going to be done at least.

As far as the Indians of the Six Nations reserve are concerned, it is interesting to note that the Haldimand grant by which the reserve was granted contained the following phrase:

> —which them and their prosperity are to enjoy forever.

The Simcoe deed which confirmed the land grant contained the following expression:

> —giving and granting, and by these presents confirming to the said Chiefs, warriors, women and people of the Six Nations and their heirs, the full and entire possession, use, benefit and advantage of the said district or territory, to be held and enjoyed by them in the most free and ample manner, and according to the several customs and usages of them the said Chiefs, warriors, women and people of the said Six Nations.

That is pretty plain, is it not? We cannot get around that, and I am sure we are not going to try to. I have quoted this extract to show the nature of some of the undertakings into which the Crown entered.

Some Indians have claimed that their treaties or agreements have been broken, as was stated by some of the previous speakers. Where there are cases of this I sincerely hope that the bill will allow the Indians to bring such matters before the Commission to seek redress. I feel very sure, the way things are going, that this will be done.

There is no doubt in our minds, and we have to face this, that the Commission will have a very complex job to do, as so much of its work will be to try and determine what happened years ago, yes even before Confederation. It will need to become familiar with many of the old documents such as the ones from which I have just quoted. It will need to do research into the history of Indian tribes and their relations with government over the years. Many investigations will be required. I certainly believe the Commission should have some researchers on its staff who will be able to do this and gather information and documents for the use of the Commission. I hope that under the bill the Commission will be able to conduct investigations, and perhaps others will be designated to do this. The Members of the Commission should also visit various places across the country to hear the complaints of Indians and to collect evidence from them, thus saving the Indians travelling long distances.

It is all very fine, of course, for the Commission to do this, and we want them to do it, but what about the Indian himself? Is he in the same position to acquire all this information? Therefore I should like to suggest that the Indians may need help to get necessary documents some of which may be in the Public Archives of Canada, others in the provincial archives, and still others in various departments of Government. Some of the reserves were established long before Confederation, as I have previously stated, and

I hope that the Commission will make some arrangement whereby all these old documents are made available to the Indians. If the Commission is as sincere as we feel it is going to be, then they should make a special effort to see that the Indians have every bit of information possible so that these claims may be judged and dealt with properly.

I feel very sure that this legislation now being brought in will be a sincere attempt by the Parliament of today to make good some of the losses suffered by the Indians in the past. A great many of these losses were mentioned just a few moments ago. Therefore I believe this legislation should be supported and I hope that the Commission will be appointed as soon as possible, so it can get started on its important work. I believe we all recognize that mistakes have been made, but given a Commission which will be guided by the principles of equity and justice some of these old claims, such as those of the Six Nations Indians, can be finally settled.

I would hope that where compensation is received as a result of a claim it will be used to develop the reserves and to build them up to where the people can be fully self-supporting, a state of affairs greatly lacking today. There is some excellent farming land on the Six Nations Indian reserve, and if they put forward a claim which is successful I would hope to see more put into agricultural development, as well as industrial and other development on the reserve, employing local residents, the Indians themselves generally raising the economic well being of people on the reserve, and on reserves right across Canada.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would hope that as a result of this legislation the Indians will feel at last that they have been justly treated and that the mistakes that may have been made in the past have been rectified in a manner which honour and good conscience dictate.

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Chairman, I want to take only a few minutes to comment on the opening statement of the Minister, and to express some of the worries I have outside the provisions which the Minister said would be in the bill.

It seems to me that the provisions as outlined in the resolution and as briefly elaborated on by the Minister are fine, but perhaps I can be forgiven if I say that what we in the Opposition want are assurances. We have not seen the legislation yet and while I espouse the glowing remarks which the previous speaker has made in reference to the Minister, and while from my experience I am reasonably confident in his attitude toward the problems of Indian people in general, I should like this overlaid with some kind of assurance given by the Minister in this House, when he speaks in closing the debate on this resolution, that the outstanding claims of the Indian people are going to be settled in a fair and equitable manner.

The Minister said that the Indian Claims Commission legislation will go a long way toward renewing or re-establishing the trust of the Indian people. This is not going to be an easy task or something that is going to be done by any single piece of legislation. In view of the Indian's experience with the white man in the past, he would be foolish to trust the white man, and I believe it is going to take many years and depend on the first few steps taken by this Commission before the Indian people will trust the white man.

I can think of no better illustration of the situation than by quoting the remarks of Lieutenant Governor Morris in speaking to the Indian people of Qu'Appelle when Treaty No. 4 was signed. He was then the Lieutenant Governor of the Northwest Territories. This is what he told the Indian people, and I hope Members of this House will listen and relate these remarks to what has happened since. He said:

> Therefore, the promises we have to make to you are not for today only but for tomorrow,—not only for you but for your children born and unborn, and the promises we make will be carried out as long as the sun shines above and water flows in the ocean.

If the Minister thinks that one piece of legislation will undo the wrong, keeping that quotation in mind, and I am being slightly facetious, he is entirely wrong. Surely none of us would think that the legislation now before us is going to undo the damage which has been done by statements of that kind made at the time of the signing of these treaties. Those treaties were signed, and the promises were made, only to get the Indians to stop shooting and scalping. In nearly every part of the country the treaties were broken before the ink was dry. The words used by the negotiators were nothing but lies. I suppose the attitude adopted by many in these days, and we have come a long way since then is much the same, that it is quite a thing to put something over on the redskins. Moreover, when Lieutenant Governors made statements of that kind, following which the treaties and promises were broken, then indeed as the hon. Member for Peace River has said, these are fraudulent documents, and at no time did the negotiators in my opinion ever intend to live up to them. The Indian people are conscious of that fact.

A few years ago a Royal Commission was set up to investigate the treaties in respect of the Northwest Territories, which were never fulfilled. I should like to read a few sentences from a report in respect of what some Indian people said:

> At a number of meetings Indians who claimed to have been present at the time when the Treaties were signed stated that they definitely did not recall hearing about the land entitlement in the Treaties. They explained that poor interpreters were used and these interpreters urged the Indians to sign, saying "It will be good for you." It was emphasized that their chiefs and head men signed even though they did not know what the Treaties contained because the Treaty parties included high government and religious officials whom the Indians trusted to look after their interests. When the Chairman pointed out that the chiefs of each band, among others, had received copies of the treaties the Indians replied that they were published in complicated English and they could not understand them.

We now have a basis for suspicion, rather than trust, which goes back many years. I say these things not to deprecate the legislation in any way—quite the contrary—but merely to point out that there is a danger in suggesting that any piece of legislation is a final solution to the Indian problem, because this problem goes back hundreds of years and is rooted in mistrust.

I hope the vehicle provided by this legislation will obviate the necessity of marches such as that which took place on the Alberta Legislature a few months ago. At that time as a result of prompting by several individuals who had a beautiful sense of political timing the Indian people of the Hay Lakes area of Northern Alberta marched on the Provincial Legislature. It is significant that this march took place on a day when a bill to grant the Indian franchise was before the Provincial Legislature. The timing was no accident, and the hurried meetings and the subsequent dispatch of senior officials to the Hay Lakes area generally has resulted, it seems to me, in there being more Government officials in that area than Indian people, with a desire to redress their grievances. As a friend of mine remarked, all this proves is that the price of baubles has gone up. In the old days trinkets were used by the white man to placate the Indians. The price has now gone up, and the articles include saw mills, D-6 caterpillars and so on.

It is to be hoped that such a vehicle as a Claims Commission will provide an opportunity for the redress of grievances, real or imagined, on the part of the Indian people. This legislation may well have another advantage which I think should not be overlooked. In the minds of many non-Indians the Government is pampering the Indian people by giving them more than they are entitled to. I am sure the Minister has been faced with the suggestion that the Indian people are being pampered and that in some way they are getting all sorts of things they should not get. Such a suspicion is detrimental to the Indian people themselves, and interferes with their being able to fill a proper role in the field of employment. There may be a side advantage to the establishment of an Indian Claims Commission in this regard. If that Commission can listen to the evidence and adjudicate in fairness it will do a great service for the cause of Indian welfare, social and economic.

I was pleased to hear the Minister state that a joint committee of the House and Senate is to be set up. Like other speakers, I have a great deal of respect for the work that has been done by Members of the other place in respect of Indian affairs. I have too, a great deal of respect for the kind of knowledge that certain Members of the other place can bring to this kind of work. I was delighted when the Minister hinted during an interjection that the Committee would be faced with a deadline of three months within which it must report. That hint makes the Minister's announcement that there will be a committee established even more interesting and exciting.

It was unfortunate that the Minister could not be more elaborate in his statement regarding the resolution on the order paper. The resolution indicates that the legislation will provide assistance to Indian bands in preparing and pursuing claims. When the Minister closes the debate on the resolution I hope he will be able to answer some of these questions. I hope that the provision of assistance in preparing and pursuing claims will include the hiring of independent legal counsel for the Indian people where necessary, and that departmental officers, even departmental legal officers, will not be advising the Indian people on the forms that are to be filled out or the legal ritual they are to follow. I cannot urge this too strongly on the Minister. In doing so I am in no way deprecating or holding suspect the approach of the officials of the branch; on the contrary, I am quite happy with them and trust them implicitly. But I do feel it is important to make it clear to the Indian people that they may engage legal counsel and that if financial problems arise in the payment of counsel the Government will be prepared to assist them in some way.

I endorse the suggestion of the previous speaker, which is one I intended to make, that the terms of reference of the Commission include the ability to travel and take the Commission to the people. This is particularly important in the more remote areas of Canada because otherwise there will be no real satisfaction of the grievances of the Indian people.

I want to come to my main point now. I am concerned lest the proposed legislation will not include any redress of the basic grievance of the Indian people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories. The hon. Member for Peace River referred to this matter in passing and I want to mention it again. Hon. Members may know that there are two areas of Canada where there are no Indian reserves, the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories. There is a good reason why there are no reserves there. The treaties signed with the northern Indian people were never lived up to, even the basic requirement of giving the Indian people certain parcels of land which they could hold.

I am not urging for one second the setting up of Indian reserves in those areas. On the basis of our experience in the south I do not think this would be a wise move, nor do I believe the Indian people in the north want it. But the fact that there are no reservations there, which in my opinion is a good thing in itself, results from the complete failure of the Crown and succeeding Governments to live up to the provisions of Treaty No. 8 signed on June 21, 1899. That treaty covered parts of northern Alberta and parts of the Northwest Territories immediately south of Great Slave Lake. It involved a total area of some 480,000 square miles. The actual cash payment made to the Indian people was $26,974 or roughly $27,000.

Just in passing may I say it would probably be well for Canadians not to make joking remarks about the Dutch buying Manhattan island for $42, in view of the fact that we purchased almost half a million square miles from the Indians for less than $27,000. The treaty provided that for every five Indian families one square mile of land would be set aside. This was done for those Indian people living in the northern parts of Alberta, but for some strange reason the Indian people living just north of the 60th parallel in the Northwest Territories were never given the land to which they were entitled under the treaty. It may have been an oversight, but I rather suspect they were overlooked because of the move toward self-government from 1903 to 1905 that resulted in Saskatchewan and Alberta being carved out of the Northwest Territories.

Treaty No. 11, the second treaty, was signed on July 17, 1922. In effect it involved the purchase of 600,000 square miles of land in what is now the Mackenzie district of the Northwest Territories for just over $23,000. It too provided that the Indian people there would be given one square mile of land for every five families. This was never done. So the basic reason there are no Indian reservations in the Northwest Territories is not that it was planned that way, but results from the fact that we did not give the Indian people those things we promised them.

There are many Indian people in the north who were present when these treaties were signed. To this day they carry with them a vaguely defined but burning distrust of white officials. This has rendered the job of the Indian Affairs Branch in these parts of the north that much more difficult because the Indian people know they cannot trust the white man. They have not been able to do so since 1922, when the second treaty was signed, and they have no reason to believe they are going to be able to do so in the future. In addition, the Indians were promised that they would be able to hunt, trap and fish on unoccupied Crown land. Those were the two major provisions of the treaties affecting the northern Indians.

I want to quote a pertinent sentence from the report of Commissioner Conroy which is attached to the treaty he signed with the Indians of the Northwest Territories. He said:

> The Indians seemed afraid for one thing that their liberty to hunt, trap and fish would be taken away or curtailed but were assured by me that this would not be the case.

The two main things promised the Indians of the north were the right to hunt, trap and fish at will on unoccupied Crown lands and the setting aside of land for them. Some other things were promised such as 10 axes, five handsaws, a grindstone, the necessary files and whetstones and so on but they are not important. One of the most important provisions was that they would be given land. Today in the Northwest Territories it is practically impossible for an Indian person even to purchase the land on which his house stands. At no time were they given land. They know they were entitled to thousands and thousands of acres of land as a reserve. They know they did not get it. They also know that when they apply for title in fee simple to the land they occupy they have tremendous difficulty getting it. Not only do the Indians have trouble in this regard but everyone else in the Northwest Territories has trouble in getting title to land. However, the injustice is particularly sharp in their case because they know they have thousands of acres coming to them.

The reason I am worried that this legislation will not be a vehicle for the Indians to get redress of this grievance is that this is not the first time the unfulfilled provisions of Treaties Nos. 8 and 11 have been looked into by governments. Indeed in 1959 the former Government set up a Royal Commission to investigate the unfulfilled provisions of Treaties 8 and 11 as they apply to the Indians of the Mackenzie district. This Commission travelled about the Territory, interviewed the Indians and made some recommendations. The difficulty was that the Government did not like the recommendations it received. When I say "Government" I am including all the officials of the various branches of the Government that have to do with the administration of the Northwest Territories.

One can see why they might not be happy with it. The Royal Commission recommended that the Indians be granted title in fee simple to the plots of land on which they now resided and the plots on which they proposed to build their homes; that a cash settlement of $20 per acre be made for each acre to which the Indians of the Mackenzie District were entitled. This would involve a multi-million dollar cash settlement because the Indians were entitled to thousands of acres. In addition to this the Commission recommended an annual payment of one half of 1 per cent of the revenue derived by the Crown from minerals, gas and oil resources in that portion of the Northwest Territories described in treaties Nos. 8 and 11.

If you total up these recommendations in dollars and cents, the Indian people could make a good case for holding up the Federal Government to the tune of $20 million for a lump sum settlement. When the Minister speaks to close this debate, I hope he will indicate whether or not this legislation will provide a vehicle for satisfying these two basic claims of the Indian people of the Northwest Territories, whose treaties were never lived up to at all.

Mr. Howard: I do not doubt for a moment but that every Member of the Committee has a very sincere desire to enact a law covering this general field introduced by the Minister and which will, in fact, bring justice to the native Indian people of Canada. Everyone who has spoken so far has indicated this, and from memory I do not recall anyone in the House every saying he was not favourably disposed to some mechanism whereby the native Indian people could find redress for their grievances. Perhaps we are activated by a sort of national guilt complex because of our knowledge of the unfair dealings with native Indian people in the past. It still remains a fact, however, that everyone sincerely wishes to do what is the just and correct thing.

I for one, however, am not agreeable to buying a pig in a poke, as the expression goes. I cannot bring myself to making any laudatory comments about a bill which I have not yet seen. The Minister's introductory remarks were far too brief in so far as the construction of the bill was concerned to permit the Committee to do anything else but hope that the bill does meet the sincere desires of everyone in the House for justice and consideration in this matter of dealing with the native Indian people. I know that at home some of the organizations of Indian people and some of the tribal councils were not in favour of Bill No. C-130 after it was introduced in December of 1963, I believe it was. After these people had an opportunity to examine Bill No. C-130, they were almost all of the view that if there were no changes in that bill, then they did not want to have any part of it. They did not believe it would bring favourable treatment to them or secure justice for their claims.

One of the major matters with which the native people are concerned is land. There does not seem to be any doubt but that the bill will pass speedily and that the Commission will be established speedily after the passage of the bill. One of the major things with which the Commission will be concerned, certainly with which the Indian people are concerned, will be the question of land. I believe it would be an error if the Commission were to be oriented entirely to the European or non-Indian concept of what is land. It would be most desirable to have, either on the Commission or attached to the Commission, someone who had an appreciation or understanding of land from the Indian point of view. The native Indian people have a concept of land, of nature and the animal world that is vastly different from that which a European has or which Canadian society in general has. I think it would be necessary to have that idea or concept reflected in the processes of the Commission in order that they could make a fair adjudication of whatever claims are presented concerning land.

Undoubtedly Bill No. C-130 is the basis of the particular bill which will be introduced following this resolution. An indication was given two years ago when the bill was introduced, and this we all desired to have, that the bill would be introduced for the purpose of evoking a response to it and suggestions for changes in it. I presume therefore that in the consideration of this resolution it would be proper for us to express ideas about Bill No. C-130, and to express the hope that many things in Bill C-130 which were objectionable to the native people will not be included in the new bill.

Then, if I could make one or two brief references to Bill No. C-130, I would say that the word "band", was somewhat objectionable. I point out that the word "band" is an English or European word which applies to a particular grouping of native Indian people, and that the word "band" was for a time alien to the Indian social structure. If the word "band", therefore, were not contained in the bill this would be helpful, and instead we might use such words as tribes or nations. I believe these words would have application to just ordinary groups of Indian people, including individual Indians. I believe these terms would be more flexible in their relation to groupings of Indian people in so far as determining the proper group to present a claim is concerned.

I believe this idea has been presented to the Minister by the Indian people, but it is felt the Commission Chairman should be someone either from the International Court of Justice or who would be qualified to sit in that court. The reason for this is that we are not dealing with ordinary matters which come before courts in the normal course of litigation, but with law which relates more to the sphere of international law. We feel, therefore, that someone from the International Court of Justice or someone qualified to sit in that court would present to the Commission a different concept, and assure a fair and just decision of any claim. Certainly there should be Indian people represented on the Commission as well, so that someone with an intimate and inherited knowledge of Indian thinking and ideas could reflect those for the benefit of the Commission.

I also think that an anthropologist should be on the Commission, or at least employed among its staff or personnel, in order to bring that necessary profession to bear and to be able to explain, from an anthropological point of view, the historical background of Indian exploitation and ownership of land areas.

Bill No. C-130 had within it a time limit of ten years, and a time limit of two years for the presentation of claims. I am one of those who believe the Commission should expire with the last claim, or we should leave it open to a future parliament to decide when the Commission should cease to exist, because we do not have the prescience and foresight at the moment to be able to predict that ten years, or any other number of years, is sufficient to permit the hearing of all claims. In other words, there should be an open-ended tenure of office for the Commission.

When Bill No. C-130 saw the light of day a couple of years ago, the hon. Member for Comox-Alberni and I prepared a press release based upon an analysis of that bill. Perhaps with respect to what was the most important clause in that bill it might be worth while to read briefly from that press release, relating to clause 7 of Bill C-130. In that press release, which was dated December 17, 1963, the hon. Member for Comox-Alberni, who has always had an interest in Indian affairs, and I, said:

> Section 7 is the worst part of the bill because it is misleading and contradictory and sets up prohibitions which, in fact, defeat the entire purpose of the bill.
> It is misleading for it says that the legal rules of evidence shall not bind the Commission when it hears any claim. So far this is good because the rules of evidence demand proof or corroboration that it is not possible to provide in many of the claims which the Indian people have. But, the bill then goes on to say that there must be evidence in writing or corroborated oral evidence before the Commission can make an award.
> This is a two-faced attempt to mislead the Indian people into thinking that they are going to get a fair deal from the Commission. It is double-dealing of the worst sort to say that the Commission will listen to anything presented to it but will only make an award when the evidence is in writing. It is virtually impossible to get written corroborative evidence of the wrongs which have been thrust upon the Indian people when those wrongs took place many years ago and at a time when the Indian people could not read or write or keep written records of their dealings with non-Indians.

Section 7 further provides that the Cabinet shall have final say over the procedural rules of the Commission. This should be left to the Commission to develop without any political sanction.

Section 7 also contains the provision that the Cabinet can deny the Commission access to documents which are in the possession of the Government. This could lead to the situation where, by withholding material evidence, the Cabinet could force the Commission to decide against the Indians in any claim.

I merely quoted from that because it related to Bill C-130, and I hope the provisions of clause 7 of that bill are now sufficiently altered to remove what we had as objections at that time and which, incidentally, many Indian people at home have confirmed as being their objections also, after they had the opportunity to study the bill.

There is a long history in B.C. relating to the land question because, with one or two exceptions, there were no treaties in our province. I will not bore the Chamber with details of the attempts of the Indian people, dating back to 1913 and periodically revived since that time, except to say that it is a fact that this one question, the so-called B.C. land question, is the one with which the vast majority of native Indian people in B.C. are vitally concerned and which they want to see solved. Perhaps this Commission will be able to assist them in finding the solution.

For years our Indian people have been kept in ignorance and in isolation. As recounted by the hon. Member for Comox-Alberni in his reading of the historical accounts of missionaries and the like, in the early days they were seduced by whiskey, by land grabbers, and on occasion by missionaries, men of the cloth, who assisted the land grabbers, and in some cases assisted the rum runners and the whiskey traders to seduce the Indian people and take from them by deceit and dishonesty that which they had in their possession from time immemorial.

Now with the growing feeling in Canada about Indian affairs, with the growing feeling among Indian people that they want to participate more fully in society and that they want the solutions to their long standing grievances, I think we have a chance to balance the books somewhat, to try to undo the wrongdoing, to try to correct the errors. In fact, however, we cannot do that because we cannot turn back the clock, but under this bill I hope that at least we can get ourselves going partially in that direction.

We can try to treat the native Indian person fairly, justly and honourably. These are terms he understands. Fairness, justice and honourable dealings have been his watchwords from time immemorial. They have not been the guide lines or the watchwords of the non-Indian in his dealings with Indians, but now we have a chance to make some alteration in that.

There is a great awakening taking place. Education, communications and increased transportation facilities are unifying the Indian people and amassing them into a single voice, whether we like it or not. We can hear this voice swell and erupt like a volcano and consume our history and background, our background of prejudice and discrimination, just the same as the voice of the coloured people in the United States is consuming prejudice and bigotry in that nation. Or we can hear the voice of the Indian people swell and become sonorous and confident, making Canada a nation of which we can be more proud than we are at the moment.

We in this Parliament have a responsibility we cannot shirk, a responsibility to be a prod either in one direction or the other. We can assist the Indian people along the lines of honourable activities, or we can by this bill turn them in the other direction so that their voice would be a volatile and disruptive voice, and I am sure none of us want that.

Under this bill we can be helpful or harmful. I, and I am sure the Minister also, hope that whatever we do it will be helpful.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock it is my duty to leave the Chair so that the House may proceed to the consideration of private Members' business.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional Standing Order 39A, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock p.m. this evening are as follows: The hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Royal Canadian Mounted Police—reported statement respecting instructions in wire tapping; the hon.

Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Canada Labour Code—application of minimum wage to federal work under contract; the hon. Member for Halifax (Mr. Regan)—education—Nova Scotia—request for increased grants to universities.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private Members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

TRADE

PROMOTION OF TRADE WITH EASTERN CARIBBEAN FEDERATION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of establishing free trade between Canada and those West Indies islands comprising the proposed Eastern Caribbean Federation.

• (6:00 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to discuss a subject which has been close to my heart for some time. Indeed, as I was thinking of this motion and the debate thereon I looked back through Hansard and saw last session's motion, and I was so impressed by my own arguments there, indeed convinced by them, that I was wondering whether there was anything I could say this year but "ditto".

I am somewhat disturbed by the rapidity with which the hands of the clock are moving before me; I had no idea that I was able to consume time with such vigour. The subject of trade with the West Indies Islands or a portion of them is not a new one in this House—

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarks just made by the hon. Member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie), perhaps we should say that the clock we see shows past ten o'clock, while in fact it is only a few minutes after six o'clock.

Mr. Macquarrie: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Member will think it is later still before I am through. But as long as no one calls it ten o'clock when I am making an impressive peroration, I will not be disturbed by the faulty mechanism above. I was about to say, Mr. Speaker, that when I came here in the twenty third Parliament the President of the Privy Council had a motion on the order paper in the phraseology of mine, except that I have restricted the area geographically. It is appropriate that a Maritimer should be interested in this subject because we have had close relations with the people of the West Indies for a long, long time. Perhaps it is particularly appropriate that one from an island should be discussing the economics of the people who live in other islands. But I am thinking, too, today that there is something appropriate in directing our attention to this part of our hemisphere as we follow with care and concern the deliberations in London of our own Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and his colleagues at the Commonwealth Prime Ministers Conference.

I should say that the Notice of Motion is restricted in the geographic sense. It is not that I have a lack of interest in Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago and trade with those areas, but it is because the fact that the smaller islands were left out when the proposed federation collapsed, or indeed when the federation dissolved, the so-called Outer Eight, strikes me as having both a political and an economic uncertainty that should cause us, I think, as friendly neighbours, a more especial concern. The islands of Barbados, Antigua, St. Kitts, Montserrat, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and Dominica are very small. The largest of all the group, Barbados, has less than a quarter of a million people, and Montserrat has just a little over 13,000. Generally speaking they have great difficulty in maintaining an economic viability. Most of them are obtaining direct assistance in their budgetary revenues from the United Kingdom. As has been said, this is a collection of islands of 13,000 square miles, but while the area is small, the problems are large; poor soil, shortage of water, lack of proper facilities, roads and airports, shortage of skilled labour, the crying need for assistance in their effort to approach something like self-sufficiency, and a pressing problem of overpopulation. All too briefly these are some of the economic facts of life of this part of the world.

Our trade with the region has been important. Figures which I have obtained from the Department of Trade and Commerce are interesting. It is hard to sort these out, but studies have indicated that the trade of the Atlantic region with the West Indies generally, and with this area in particular, is significant. The exports to the islands I have in mind for promotion totalled $6,600,000 in 1963. In 1964 this rose to $7,986,000. This is a substantial increase. The imports, however, dropped from $2,202,000 to $1,025,000 between 1963 and 1964. Naturally this would be of some concern to the people of the islands.

There are reasons why the figures should be going up at a higher rate. I would like to touch upon them briefly. I want to be brief, Mr. Speaker, because I would like to hear the views of other of my colleagues. Certainly these areas are close to us; perhaps they are not as close as they were in the past in the days of water transportation and communication, but we should be overcoming that now by the installation of direct air service. This has been a long time coming, but I rejoice to learn that we are to have direct air service from the Maritime region to the area in question.

We have had a long standing relationship, in the treaty sense, with the West Indies. I would point out to the House that when we had a Maritimer as Prime Minister and another as Minister of Trade and Commerce things got moving in this direction. Our first agreement with the West Indies was signed by Sir George Eulas Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce in Sir Robert Borden's Government. This was updated in 1926 and it is a reasonably generous treaty under which we now operate. There are some difficulties and restrictions in it, but generally speaking there is no great barrier to expansion.

I find that there are complaints—and this is not confined only to the West Indies area —about the lack of initiative of Canadian businessmen. We find that in certain products the competition from the western Europeans and the Americans is taking some of our markets, and vigorous promotions would be helpful. I was delighted to read in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald just today that the potato has become a status symbol down in Barbados. Coming from the land of the finest potatoes I was delighted to hear this. Mr. Frank Doyle, the Executive Editor, who is down in Barbados, says that the people there are turning more and more to the consumption of potatoes; and to give something to New Brunswick he tells us, too, that they are learning to enjoy fiddleheads. Although I am not suggesting it is competitive with rum, they are also drinking more and more apple juice from the Province of Nova Scotia. So I suppose that my concern and the concern of our Maritime colleagues is not 100 per cent altruism in this connection. We have commodities which we know they like, and which could be developed to a greater extent. We should be developing gains from our devalued dollar in this connection. We have good contacts through our universities. I remember many fine students from the West Indies in my classes at university. They were fine, bright people who represent so well this part of the world.

Our businesses have invested in this area over the years. Canada has given a measure of aid. The ships, Federal Maple and Federal Palm—interesting names—are helpful in inter-island traffic. We have built wharf facilities there, but there is much more we could do in this connection. There are great problems in the handling of ships; we need more refrigerated ships, a more regular service from the Maritimes to this area. Also we need—and I think this is quite important and impinges upon domestic policies for us in the Maritimes—greater diversification, because as the standard of living improves in the West Indian area we find that their needs and tastes for some of our primary products, such as salt fish diminishes. Therefore it is essential, it seems to me, that we have greater industrialization; that there be located in the Atlantic Provinces industries which are capable of producing efficiently for a combined Caribbean and Atlantic Provinces market. We have constantly faced the difficulty in the Maritimes and the Atlantic area of having too small a market, too restricted a base of operation. Freer trade with the Eastern Caribbean Federation would improve this condition.

Finally—and here without apology I do come to the altruistic side of the matter—we talk a great deal about our love for the Commonwealth. We are delighted to entertain and meet and talk with visiting parliamentarians. All of these little islands, even the smallest of them, have grown up in the British parliamentary tradition. We are also justly proud of the Canadian role in the international community. We consider ourselves a good member of the international community, and I think we can say that honestly. Here at our doorstep is an area where we could concentrate our attention and not have to spread it so thin, Mr. Speaker, that it would be unnoticed and perhaps ineffective.

Some day I think we Canadians will have to set up a system of priorities. We are not a great country in the sense that the super powers are. We cannot bear the burden in all parts of the world. Therefore I think we might look to an area where we are uniquely qualified because we have a similar tradition, similar language, long standing friendship and practical trade arrangements. I think it would be well if we bestirred ourselves to do something more than the conventional and ask these people in these small communities whether they are interested in something unorthodox—an economic union with Canada. I would not even be reluctant or hesitant in suggesting, if they desired it, even a political union. If they came in as the eleventh province, no doubt their economic standards would be lower than that of the other provinces; but we Maritimers could help them there, because we have had over 90 years experience in that regard.

Here is a challenge, an opportunity. We should not think of the Caribbean only as a pleasure resort or as a place to get worried about, lest a Castro emerge, or someone like him, and threaten to take over, as in the Dominican Republic. I should like to see Canada take a meaningful role here. I should like to offer free trade to these people. Basically our economies are complementary; our ties are close. The need is great. I think this would be one fine move and a practical recognition of Canada's desire to push back the frontiers of the past and to extend the opportunity for a full and wholesome life for people with whom we are in close contact geographically, and with whom we should be closer in many other ways. I recommend this as an initial step in what I would hope would develop into a closer and closer relationship between these peoples and ourselves.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak in support of the motion put forward by the hon. Member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie). As a native Maritimer and a representative of the historic constituency of Westmorland, of which the City of Moncton forms a large portion, I must say that the energetic Board of Trade which we have in Moncton has visited the West Indies on various trade missions, and I am sure has been visited by West Indian delegations in Moncton. So I would wholeheartedly support this motion.

The West Indies are islands of great contrasts. Contrasts in population and language reflect their varied history, while they also differ in physical characteristics and economic development. The proposed eastern federation of the West Indies, which includes Barbados, the Leeward Islands and the Windward Islands, have a total area of 1,043 square miles and a population of 600,000, of whom 245,000 live in Barbados.

The Ministers of the islands of the proposed federation, referred to as the "Little Seven", or the "Little Eight" including Grenada, have held a number of meetings, the last in December, 1964, to draft proposals for the formation of the federation. According to reports—and I refer to the Financial Post of December 5, 1964—there is unanimous agreement that Barbados should be the site of the capital, and that a customs union and free trade area would be established after the beginning of the federation. The economy of the islands has in the past been based on a few agricultural products, but the present aim is to diversify production.

It is very important that we should make a determined effort to help the development of the economy of these islands. We should give every assistance we can in raising the standards of living and providing more sources of employment for the people in this part of the western hemisphere. We should also take a more active part in the efforts to establish new industries in the West Indies and in the area of the proposed federation. The hon. Member for Halifax will be talking about that in a little more detail.

Canada is almost sure to receive formal requests for help in inter-island shipping, and will most probably be asked to open its doors wider to admit skilled West Indians. Free trade, of course, requires the co-operation and consent of both parties. From what I have been able to learn it would appear that some of the leaders of the West Indies have been reluctant to commit themselves to such a trading arrangement. This is easily understood because tariff duties constitute a very important source of revenue for their governments, and free trade with Canada would tend to disturb their present gradual development.

It appears that most West Indians are not very enthusiastic about entering a free trade area or customs union with Canada at this time. They appear more actively engaged in promoting their economic growth and industrial expansion, and more interested in using tariffs as a means for development of new industries under their new legislation. We would have to be sure that, in proposing a free trade area with the West Indies, non-Commonwealth countries must be considered as well. Any arrangements which might be made with the proposed federation would have to take into consideration all arrangements we have at present with other parts of the West Indies. We are preparing and moving toward greater co-operation with these areas. Other speakers will elaborate on the programs of assistance and investment.

The Canada-West Indies trade is traditionally based on the exchange of food and forestry products in exchange for sugar and its by-products. It could be suggested that possibly the entire Eastern Caribbean Federation might be brought into the area of the Canadian dollar and have them eventually leave the sterling bloc.

In all the islands there is a steady upward trend in the tourist trade which is one of the largest revenue-producing activities. This constitutes a drain on our international exchange payments, and if the West Indies were operating on the Canadian dollar this would be of great advantage to Canada. The recent announcement of a direct service by Air Canada from Halifax to Bermuda is just the first step, I would hope, in an effort to improve communications in the Maritime area and the West Indies.

Canada enjoys excellent trade relations and reputation in the Eastern Caribbean, which could be expanded and improved. Prospects for sales of increased varieties and quantities of Canadian products, especially foodstuffs and other consumer goods, are promising, provided we project our image as suppliers more effectively. This can be done by engaging in publicity and by more frequent visits by Canadian missions to the islands and, return visits of trade missions from the islands.

We in the Maritimes have a distinct advantage in that we can take advantage of cheaper water transportation between our Canadian ports and the ports in the Caribbean. There is also a mutual respect for one another which has been promoted over the years, which should be, I feel, of great assistance in expanding our future trade.

I should like to say in closing that I strongly support the hon. Member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) in his motion that the Government should consider the advisability of establishing a free trade area between Canada and those West Indies islands comprising the proposed Eastern Caribbean Federation.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate I should first like to say that I think the promotion of free trade is a very desirable objective, and that the motion before us is quite restrictive and does leave room for remarks to be made relative to trade in a general way. It is in that light that I hope to deal with this motion.

I have been appalled on many occasions to hear people speaking of trade as though it is something which makes people rich. There is nothing further from the truth. Trade never made anyone richer because there are two-way transportation costs involved. The only time trade could make someone rich is when it is designed in such a way that horses are being traded for rabbits, and we are not considering that kind of a trade arrangement with the West Indies, or any other place.

I am sure the time will come when we will have an arrangement whereby an international assessment is made in respect of the values of commodities to be traded internationally. Once we get our attention focused on the fact that when we ship goods from Canada, we must import goods to balance our trade, we will have a clearer understanding of the situation. If we are going to put high prices on our goods for export and low prices on the goods we import, then Canada will benefit, but I do not believe that is the type of benefit we want in the world today. If we are going to ease tension, be better understood and be the good neighbours in the world community that we ought to be, we must make certain that when we trade with other nations, be it the West Indies or any other country, we must give value for value in the goods we trade.

In terms of trade, it is necessary in respect of some of these countries to make certain that proper credit arrangements are made so that production machinery and other things necessary to the production of certain commodities in those countries are available. Many of the primary products of various countries are exported at values that do not reflect the true value of the products, as a result of which there is an aggravation of a situation which should be avoided, and can be avoided by a more generous attitude on our part.

As an example of what I have in mind, let me refer to the rubber trade between Canada and Malaysia. The price of the rubber on the boats is only half what the actual rubber is selling for. The producers of this rubber are concerned because the Polymer Corporation in Canada is getting into competition with the rubber producers.

An hon. Member: There is nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Leboe: There is nothing wrong with the situation, and the problem of the producers in Malaysia is not associated with the Polymer Corporation, but with the fact that the raw material is not bringing a price at the free-shore in Malaysia which compares favourably to the selling price.

The motion we have before us is a good one. We should extend our trade with these countries. I am sure the hon. Member who brought forward the motion was thinking in terms of the Maritimes as an exporting part of Canada. I am sure that the rest of Canada including Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia, would be glad to import more so that the Maritimes could export more of their goods, building up the economy of that part of Canada.

Mr. Winch: What about the Japanese situation and the west coast?

Mr. Leboe: I am not going to argue about what is happening on the west coast as far as Japanese trade is concerned. The west coast part of Canada is a natural trading area, but in the over-all picture we must consider where the imports are to come from, as well as what we are going to export. Trade is a two-way street. It costs money to trade and no one gets rich in this field unless, as I say, he is trading horses for rabbits.

Mr. G. D. Clancy (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to speak on this motion today because I spent a great deal of my life in the West Indies, and my first speech in this House was related to that area. When the hon. Member to my left talks about the importation of rubber from the West Indies, it is my impression that he is confusing that area with the East Indies. There may be some rubber being exported from Brazil, but most of it, if not all, is going to the United States.

I feel very deeply about this subject. When we were in Government we promised the West Indies Federation a gift of two 10,000 ton freighters.

An hon. Member: They got them.

Mr. Clancy: It is true that they got them. These freighters were to be used for trade between the West Indies and Canada. I was in favour of that policy because our agricultural products and the primary products of the West Indies are complementary. We can provide products that cannot be grown in the West Indies and the West Indies can provide products that cannot be grown by us. Trade between us is a complementary complex.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, we have the great waterways and the ports of Halifax and Saint John. The West Indies grow grapefruit which is in season six weeks ahead of Florida grapefruit, but do we receive any of it? We do not receive any at all, because this is a controlled item.

Every Government that has been in office here in Ottawa has been afraid to move in the direction of trade concessions with the West Indies. What have these Governments been afraid of? Has their fear involved a question of immigration? We have the advantage of good will in respect of trade with this area, with its large population. They have bought salted fish for years. The Portuguese used to catch it off Newfoundland, salt it and then take it to the West Indies and sell it. That was slave food.

Times are changing. If we want to keep our trade with these islands, let us buy from them. The Americans are outselling us and outadvertising us. Why not advertise Canadian flour? Why not send somebody there who knows how to advertise? Have you ever seen that big sign—

Mr. Bell: A tiger in the tank.

Mr. Clancy: A tiger in your tank. The Americans put a brand in there and the people will not buy anything else. We produce the best flour there is.

Mr. Walker: May I ask the hon. Member a question? Has he seen the other sign at a rival gas station that says, "Come in and get the tiger fluff out of your carburetor"?

Mr. Clancy: That is fine. You are quite right. I could give you the other side of the story too.

I feel very deeply about this matter. I have had some experience in business, and basically the argument is that we not only have a market there for our goods but we have a market here for their goods. We now have friendly relations, but the day may come when there will be another Cuba. Why let it go that far? We have a market here for their goods and they have a market for our goods and we can set a fair price. So what are we talking about? Some guy growing apples in British Columbia figures it is going to hurt him. There are no apples grown in the West Indies. As a matter of fact, if you know the West Indies you know that whereas in Canada children get an orange in their stockings at Christmas, the fact is that in the West Indies there is an apple in the bottom of the stocking. An apple is a luxury there. Let us give them a break.

We built the seaway, and I was one of those who really believed in the expenditure. I said that it would bring West Indies produce into the heart of our land. I really believed that. I am very disappointed but I think we can always change. So I am going to say: Let us have 100 per cent reciprocity with the West Indies. I do not include Bermuda or one or two of the other islands because they are off shore from Miami and are just as American as the people on the mainland.

Mr. Bell: British.

Mr. Clancy: British? Listen to their accents. I simply say: Why should we not establish proper trading relationships with people whose products do not compete with ours? We do not grow limes in Canada or oranges or grapefruit. We do grow some tea in British Columbia but you cannot drink the stuff. I simply say: Why not go all out for greater trade? The Liberal party is supposed to be the free trade party. They were going to do great things, but every time they propose a bill it is another restriction. That is all I can say. If you want to balance our trade, then all I say is that we can sell to these islands as cheaply as our competitors but let us let them sell something to us. Let us not bring everything into Canada from Florida and California.

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, you will be somewhat surprised to see a member of the province of Quebec take part in such a debate, but my reasons are similar to those which prompted hon. members from the Maritimes to speak; the interests of Canada and satisfactory international trade throughout the world.

Indeed, as Canadians, we should be interested in the improvement of the economy in this part of the West Indies. We are therefore convinced that if our trade (exports-imports) with those islands increased, it would be beneficial for commerce, industry and the economy; in particular, traffic would increase considerably in the harbours of the Maritimes and even those of Quebec.

As stated by the member for Westmorland (Mrs. Rideout), the economy of those islands is based on the agricultural and tourist industries.

With regard to the trade relations between Canada and the West Indies, it should be kept in mind that a definite situation already exists, since our trade relations are still subject to the 1926 agreement between Canada and the West Indies.

Under that agreement the West Indies grant Canada specific preferential tariffs on certain commodities. Under a general provision, tariffs on Canadian goods must not exceed certain percentages of the tariffs applicable to the most favoured nations.

In return, a number of West Indian products are allowed into Canada duty free, except sugar, tobacco and liquor, and preferential tariffs apply to almost all other imports liable to duty, including sugar.

In addition, Canada has generally agreed, with regard to all merchandise not listed in the agreement, that import duties on West Indian products must never exceed 50 per cent of the general tariff of Canada. Therefore, there is a special system.

Canadian exports to the islands of the proposed federation were valued at $10,100,000 in 1962, $12,100,000 in 1963 and reached $14,900,000 in 1964. Canadian imports from the islands during those years amounted to $4,900,000, $6,200,000 and $4,900,000 respectively.

I should like to make a few suggestions here:

Canada has good trade relations with and enjoys an excellent reputation in the Eastern Caribbean and these relations should be extended and improved. Prospects are good for increasing the sale of a greater variety of Canadian products, especially foodstuffs and other consumer products, provided Canada makes itself better known as a supplier. This could be done through publicity and more frequent visits by Canadian exporters to the islands.

In order to explore fully the possibilities of closer and freer trade relations between Canada and the West Indies, all steps envisaged to improve and strengthen existing trade relations between the West Indies and Canada should be jointly examined.

Whether it would be desirable to have a Canada-West Indies free trade agreement should be considered in case the islands constituting the West Indies federation established in 1958 should unite and form a customs union.

Trade relations between Canada and the West Indies should be on the agenda of a Canada-West Indies Conference and should be discussed fully.

Here, I wonder if it would be possible to set up a customs agreement with the West Indies. First, it should be determined with what countries the agreement should be entered into, with the small or the big federation. It could be disadvantageous for Canada as well as for the West Indies. That is why I wonder if it would not be better to increase our assistance to that area, since Canada has always helped it in the past.

For instance, Canada has built and equipped two modern vessels; it has built a residence on the campus of the Port of Spain University, and the assistance program was continued. After the federation was dissolved, we built and furnished four primary schools and put up two warehouses; we provided five of the eight islands with full deep water wharf facilities. Canada spent over $1 million on technical assistance. I think that the best method would be to recommend the setting up of a federal fund to make grants to those islands in order to help them establish basic plants with good prospects and having a direct and indirect impact on the economy of the area. Such a fund would be administered by an economic development board whose objective would be to make a complete survey of our trading potentialities with the West Indies which are close to our year round ports because the economies of Canada and of the West Indies are complementary. The board should also study the possibilities of trade with the West Indies and it should take every possible step to promote it.

I think there are exceptional opportunities that should not be overlooked. Everyone knows that the West Indies are going through a crisis at this time. They need support and now is the time to help them.

Surely, it is our duty to make financial or technical assistance available to those people or to provide for a more generous exchange of Canadian personnel or technicians to assist them. It would be in the interest of Canada to do so. We have done much, but we should do more since our country is a member of the Commonwealth and, as such, that is our responsibility toward less fortunate members.

• (6:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, my intervention in this debate will be as brief as my interest has been long in the general subject of the West Indies. It is a pleasure to take part in a debate which has included the hon. Member for Westmorland (Mrs. Rideout), a constituency adjoining mine, and also the hon. Member for Yorkton (Mr. Clancy) who gave us a philosophical speech that revealed his practical knowledge of the West Indies. I cannot help but comment, Mr. Speaker, on the apparent lack of interest in this subject on the Government benches. I recall a day when the President of the Privy Council (Mr. McIlraith) was a great promoter of this subject. One is forced to conclude that his interest has waned or his influence has become less.

An hon. Member: That would be a wrong conclusion.

Mr. Bell: There is no one present in the House on the Treasury Benches at a time when this subject, which is so important to the Maritimes and, in fact, to the whole country, is being discussed. This subject has always invoked an interest on the part of those who represent the Maritimes. Perhaps this is the reason we have never had any success with it, the only people interested in the subject are Maritime Members. If we could somehow or other get big business to look toward the West Indies, we might be more successful in our trading relations. Visits by parliamentary groups in the last few years have increased the interest in this area. I hope they will continue on an increased basis.

I noticed that some Members from the Province of Quebec have been following the debate. I recall reading somewhere the other day that it was Jean Talon who discovered that the people of the West Indies liked codfish, while the Maritimes liked sugar, molasses and rum. However he was transferred to France before he had an opportunity to do anything about it. This shows that even in those days they recognized this was a good combination, whether the ingredients were taken separately or together.

The time is ripe to do something about this free trade with the West Indies, and for two reasons. There is considerable disorganization in the area after the loss of full federation. Second, we all know that Communism is making strides in the general area of the Caribbean. Naturally, we would be concerned if our best prospects were not put forward. The power of the region itself is growing. This is the reason Canada should not only consider the benefits of a tangible nature that would flow from this proposal but we should realize that here would be a bastion in the battle against Communism. I recall reading somewhere that we spend millions of dollars in aid to some East Asian countries, the East Indies, if you like, whereas our assistance program to the West Indies is very low. Surely, they deserve more assistance.

Another reason for supporting the area, of course, is the interest in tourism. Canadians are investing money there and many have travelled to the West Indies on holidays during the winter season. I believe we should increase our association. Surely a Royal Commission would be in order at this stage to investigate all the possibilities, including free trade, with our partners to the south. The United States, closer and more definitely connected with the area, has moved in there with their goods and their influence. I remember the days in the Maritimes when the C.N.S. boats traded back and forth with the West Indies, and it was a great thing for us to see these vessels arrive in Saint John and Halifax—banana boats, as we called them. This form of communication with the West Indies has never been recovered. Surely now is the time for a full investigation of this problem, this free trade proposal that has been put forward by the hon. Member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie).

In closing, I should like to take advantage of the opportunity of complimenting the hon. Member upon having the energy, the power and the drive necessary to bring this motion forward. I commend him for his eloquence, his delivery and his vocabulary during the course of his presentation to us. I hope the Government will put forward a proposal which was advanced by one of their prominent Cabinet Ministers when he was in Opposition, namely the President of the Privy Council. I feel that he must still have an interest in the West Indies, but I wonder if it has not been whittled down a little bit by the big interest of Central Canada. I commend this proposal to the House and I hope that it will not be talked out.

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): I find it a little difficult to reconcile some of the observations made during this debate with the precise wording of the resolution put forward by the hon. Member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie). It reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of establishing free trade between Canada and those West Indies islands comprising the proposed Eastern Caribbean Federation.

• (6:50 p.m.)

If I recall correctly some of the comments that were made, they ranged from what we would normally understand as a customs alliance with the West Indies, under which there would be no tariffs whatever on the products exchanged back and forth, to the suggestion of the hon. Member for Queens that the area might become the eleventh province. This, of course, has nothing to do with free trade. You just eliminate the necessity for that type of arrangement. He expressed, and I agree with him wholeheartedly, a genuine concern for the social well-being of the people of those islands who suffer from the lacks which he so ably described. Indeed, it is difficult to know whether the primary purpose of the resolution is an appeal to Canada for social assistance to a region with which we have had long historical associations, or whether it is hoped that we in turn might get a reduction in the price of sugar, as suggested by the hon. Member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) who, when he was speaking, referred to Central Canada exploitation, and in this context mentioned an examination of what the sugar trade means to these islands.

So the debate ranged, including tigers in the tank, as referred to by the hon. Member for Yorkton (Mr. Clancy), and we had an observation from the hon. Member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe) about an examination of credit facilities.

Let us look at the facts and see what we have been doing. In the trade mission field, in order to stimulate interest both on the part of the West Indies and Canada, in the opportunities available through the material exchange of trade, a heavy construction equipment trade mission visited the West Indies in 1961. In 1962 a fish products mission, an electric equipment distribution commission and a forest products commission all went to the West Indies.

In the spring of 1963 a large scale export trade promotion drive was conducted by the Department of Trade and Commerce, which somewhat corrects the impression that may have been given earlier that the front benches on this side of the House have lost interest in this area. The facts indicate that this is not the case. On the contrary, if we continue to examine the record and the evidence of performance—not of talk—we will find there has been a great deal of realistic effort extended to promote trade with the islands of the West Indies, and indeed to do so with a great consciousness of the social needs of their people.

At the second export trade promotion conference at Ottawa, one phase of the drive I am referring to, more than 700 interviews were requested by Canadian businessmen with the Canadian Trade Commissioners in Port of Spain and Kingston, and more than 100 West Indian businessmen came to Canada to participate in another phase of the drive, and examined the products of 368

Canadian firms that manufacture consumer goods for export.

In another phase of the program industrialists and engineers from the West Indies came to Canada to visit Canadian machinery manufacturing plants. In October and November 1963 another delegation of Canadian industrialists visited Jamaica, Barbados and Trinidad, and again in October and November 1964.

Therefore it is quite clear from the activities of the Department of Trade and Commerce that interest in the development of a healthy trade relationship between the West Indies and Canada has been ably undertaken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp), and this kind of constructive and productive effort—not talk—is what we can expect from that very able Minister.

Mr. Winch: May I ask the hon. Member a question?

Mr. Lloyd: It is not very often that I speak in this Chamber, Mr. Speaker, and I prefer that I be permitted to carry on with what few remarks I have to make. Canadian investment in the West Indies is very extensive, and recent figures indicate that in the proposed Eastern Caribbean Federation Canadians have an investment of something like $200 million.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; since the hon. Member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd) would not extend the courtesy to the hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) to permit him to ask a question, I would point out that the hon. Member is violating the rules of the House by reading from a prepared text.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. I think the hon. gentleman who has raised the point of order has not noticed that the hon. Member who has the floor was referring to notes. I do not believe he was reading these as a prepared text.

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt, in keeping with established practice of the House, that when you are referring to facts and statistics and quoting figures you are permitted to be accurate about them. Some hon. Members disdain this reliable practice of the House and spend most of their time interjecting during the speeches of people who want to deal with matters factually, to get across some things which please them but which add nothing to the debate.

[Mr. Lloyd.]

Canada's assistance program has also been extensive. Some reference has been made to what the Government has not been doing, but the record is quite contrary to the assertions that have been made. I think the hon. gentleman objects to statistics because he does not want to hear about the contributions which this Government has been making to the promotion of good relations with the West Indies. For example, in 1963 a decision was taken to initiate programs in fields including education, produce storage, transportation and water distribution, and contributions in these fields were continued in 1964 when substantially more funds were made available. In fact, funds allocated to the islands during the last year were almost as high as those spent in any one previous year in the complete aid program for the Caribbean.

Mr. Winch: Author?

Mr. Lloyd: If the hon. gentleman wants to ask a question, I have got a moment or two.

Mr. MacInnis: You have talked it out.

Mr. Lloyd: If the hon. gentleman wants to ask a question he may do so if he wishes.

Mr. Winch: With only 15 seconds to go? You talk it out, not me.

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Speaker, it requires no reference to papers to realize very simply that the kind of relationship sought for with the West Indies in trade and good neighbourliness—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. The hour assigned for the consideration of private Members' business has now expired and the House will resume the business interrupted at six o'clock.

INDIAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, DUTIES, ETC.

The House resumed consideration in Committee of the following resolution—Mr. Nicholson—Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the disposition of Indian claims and in relation thereto,

1. To provide for the establishment of an Indian Claims Commission;
2. To provide for the duties of the Commission, its decisions and awards;
3. To provide for appeals from the decisions and awards of the Commission to an Indian Claims Appeal Court;
4. To provide assistance to Indian bands in preparing and pursuing claims; and
5. To enact such financial provisions as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of the Act.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Chairman, I know all hon. Members are happy that the Government has finally taken this overdue step to create an Indian Claims Commission, which is a necessary step toward removing the distrust that remains an impediment to full participation by all Indians in Canadian life and in our present day economy.

• (7:00 p.m.)

The resolution indicates that in providing assistance to Indian bands to prepare claims, the Government has gone far beyond what was proposed in Bill C-130, which was brought before the House last year, and we all welcome this evidence that the Government will provide this assistance. The 1961 Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons recommended that the costs of counsel in connection with these two actions before the Indian Claims Commission be borne by the Federal Treasury. The Government has now gone considerably beyond the recommendations of this joint committee by making the resolution general enough so that a wide variety of possible expenses of Indians presenting claims will be covered.

I would like to make two or three comments on the type of expenses which I feel should be covered by this proposal. Naturally legal expenses should be covered. Also, research expenses should be covered. Travelling expenses to and from Ottawa, or to wherever the Commission may be sitting, should be covered. I would go even further and say that when Indians have to come to Ottawa to present their claims and spend a week or more away from their jobs—or even if they have to spend only two or three days away from their jobs—they should be reimbursed, if they are in full time employment, their daily wage while they are here acting on behalf of their respective bands. Provision should definitely be made for paying the expenses of legal counsel; lawyers should be adequately and properly paid. There should be combined in the provision of adequate payment for legal counsel a provision which will eliminate the excuse which some counsel may find to approach these matters on a contingency basis. I for one would not be too happy if, for example, a $10 million claim was settled in British Columbia and a lawyer collected a 10 per cent contingency fee. Unless very strict control is worked out by the Commission, this is a very real danger.

I would refer to the suggestion made by the Indian and Eskimo Association in its recommendation to the Minister. They suggested that it might be possible to make grants to the Canadian Bar Association, to be administered by it, to assist the preparation of claims. They suggested also that it might be desirable for the Canadian Bar Association to set forth for its members rules of ethical conduct in connection with Indian claims where the present rules might be thought to lack clear guidance. I think it would be highly desirable for the Commission to work out some sort of arrangement with the Canadian Bar Association to prevent a situation arising whereby a lawyer who collected a $10 million claim, let us say, on behalf of an Indian band would be paid a huge contingency fee. I would not be too happy with a result like that, and I do not think any Member of this House would be.

I hope the Government will grant to every Indian band which has a claim adequate time in which to present that claim. The two-year period in Bill No. C-130 certainly was inadequate, and I hope the proposed bill will contain a provision for a longer claim period. Once the bill is passed I hope the Department of Indian Affairs will contact and recontact every Indian band in this country which has a possible claim, so that these claims will be made within a reasonable period and without too much delay. I believe the administration should work out a system whereby perhaps at three-monthly intervals notice would be sent to every band in the country, because I feel it is most important and it will be easier in the long run for the ministry if we can get all these claims in now, and not be faced two or three years from now with demands for an extension of the period for claims.

I hope that the bill will set forth clearly that the normal rules of evidence shall not be strictly enforced with regard to claims presented to the Commission. If we applied the normal rules of evidence strictly we would find that a host of possible claims would be ineligible. Custom and tradition should be taken into consideration in support of evidence. I believe this Commission must be instructed to be flexible. A lot will depend upon the selection of the Chairman of the Commission, but it is most important that the Chairman should consider his job as being one to assist in satisfying Indian claims if at all possible. He should not approach his job in any sense of acting on behalf of the Government; I believe he should represent as much as possible the Indian attitude.

As far as the two Indian reserves located in my constituency are concerned, the Caughnawaga and St. Regis Reserves, I would urge the councils to submit as soon as possible any possible claims they may have. I am aware that the St. Regis Reserve has claims to certain islands located in the St. Lawrence River. I am also aware that the Caughnawagans have a claim going back to the early 1800's with respect to a portion of the reserve that was sold. Probably the most important Quebec claim is the Oka Reserve claim. I would urge these Quebec bands to forward to Ottawa as quickly as possible their notice of claim, to be followed by research and a fully developed claim. The Federal Government is going to find itself in a position in which I am convinced it will be forced to pay sums of money that are really much more than anyone in this House anticipates at the moment. The Federal Government, and the British Government for it, acted in a fiduciary capacity as far as the Indians of this country were concerned, and bear responsibility for any errors made in the handling of Indian funds or Indian properties.

There are several types of claims which will be made before the Commission, the most important of course being claims for land. I think the only possible method of approach to the settlement of land claims is the payment of cash for any claim recognized by the Commission.

However, if it is at all possible I would hope other lands would be found which would compensate, partly at least, and certainly more easily satisfy the demands of the Indians in question than would strict cash payment. I hope that the Commission, if not able to make other than cash payments, do make recommendations about acquisition of other lands in lieu of cash adjustments. The question of hunting and fishing rights is also an important type of claim which will be presented to the Commission. In British Columbia many early fishing rights have been abrogated by the quota system, and I am sure this will be a very knotty problem for the Commission to handle.

One point which I feel it is extremely important to stress here is what is going to be done with funds awarded by the Commission. I suggest to the Minister that some provision be made where awards are made for fund investment in projects which could be used to the benefit of the entire band or reserve to which the award was made by the Commission. In most cases I would oppose a system of distribution of funds to individual members of the band. Surely in every single reserve in this country there are projects which normally would not be covered by the annual expenditures of the Indian Affairs Branch and which could be financed by the funds contained in an award. I certainly hope that provision will be made to make available these funds to the benefit of the whole band, rather than dividing them up between individual members who happen to be living on the reserve.

I should also like to indicate my support for the contentions of the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia. In their criticism of the original Bill C-130, section 2 (a), they argued that a claim should be permitted on behalf of organizations for an entire province or for groups of Indians not actually living on reserves. I think it is most important that when this bill is voted on it contains provision for a provincial Indian association which can make a claim on behalf of Indians in any one province.

I should also like to refer back for a moment to the type of aid which the Government can provide Indians who wish to obtain evidence to bring before the Commissioner. I should like to refer to a brief by the Union of Ontario Indians in which it was suggested, among other things, that all records in the Public Archives of Canada, Indian affairs record group No. 10, should be put on microfilm; that these documents, memoranda, letters, etc., must be individually numbered; that these microfilm records must be made available, on a known basis, to the Indian band councils; that microfilm viewers must be made available, on a loan basis, to the Indian band councils; that photostatic copies of requested documents must be made available at cost—and I would go further and say that these photostatic copies should be made available free to any Indians requesting them.

Finally, we should not lose sight of what should be paramount for every Indian in Canada, and that is his future and the future of his children. For too long our Indians have been the victims of a demoralizing combination of degrading paternalism on the part of our governments, and also the poisonous rancour of many legitimate and just grievances in the past. An unfortunate side effect of this Claims Commission will be the stirring up of many bitter memories. Attention will be focused on the past when the Indian should be looking forward to a great future within Canada. I am confident, and I am sure it is the hope of every hon. Member here, that the Commission will contribute toward purging from our midst this unfortunate past which continues to impede the progress of our Indian population. I hope that when the Department contacts individual bands requesting that claims be forwarded, this particular point will be stressed and that the emphasis will be on the future. I hope this measure, in comparison with the most important measures of community development and education, will not obscure what is the objective of this Government, and I think of every Member of this House, namely a better life for all our Indians with full participation in our national wealth.

Mr. Willoughby: Mr. Chairman, I can assure you that what I have to say this evening will be very brief, because all I can do is endorse what has been said by the speakers who have preceded me, and also congratulate the Minister for finally bringing in this resolution, the implementation of which will provide for the Indian people that long awaited Indian Claims Commission.

This is not an argumentative subject, Mr. Chairman. Everyone is interested in the welfare of the Indian people. It is my privilege to represent 7,000 of them in my constituency. I have watched these Indian people develop over the years, and this has been an extremely interesting experience. In my opinion these people have a great potential, which has been shown on many occasions. There has been a steady improvement in British Columbia, where we now have 90 per cent of the Indian children going to school. I think that probably this is the greatest step we can undertake to improve the status of the Indian in our country.

Indian claims, of course, date back to the coming of the white man. In British Columbia they would date back at least 160 years, so this is nothing new. Their rights have been abused, there is no argument about that. Some of this has been intentional, some of it unintentional. I feel that when this bill is introduced it should have terms of reference for the Commission which will be extremely broad. This bill should be for the general welfare of the Indian, rather than just establishing a Claims Commission to settle land rights. It can do a great deal to improve the lot of Indians throughout the country. I feel its terms of reference should include the improvement of their educational advantages, I feel they should be allowed economic advice. I feel they should have agricultural assistance and that we should encourage industry among these Indian people. Many could undertake industry on their lands, which at the present time are lying dormant. I am thinking particularly of the fact that some of these areas are rich in timber interests. Something should be done to encourage these Indians to develop their own timber rights. At the present time these areas are undeveloped or are being used by outside private interests.

We must protect the Indians' hunting and fishing rights. These things should all be included in the bill to be brought down. We must assist these Indians to help themselves to become independent citizens in our communities. If we do this, these people will be a great advantage to our general economy.

Their land rights are going to be difficult to define and settle and undoubtedly this Commission will run into many problems. I can foresee that many of these claims to land on the part of Indians will actually not be submitted in writing. Many of these treaties date back to the time when Indians could not read or write. Many of these Indians who have claims to lands today still cannot read or write. Under the circumstances it would be a very serious mistake to insist that the Indians present their claims in writing. That is what happened in respect of the bill that was brought into this House in December of 1963. It stated that the Indians should present their claims in writing and, of course, in most cases that was impossible. We must see that the Indians have good legal advice, and I feel that affidavits should be acceptable to the Commission. If we are to deal fairly with the Indians affidavits should be considered as being adequate proof of claims. These claims should be supported in the form of affidavits rather than by writing in a language which the Indian does not understand.

We must give the benefit of the doubt to the Indian people. Many of them are honest in their claims, and in most cases I know they are justified in claiming rights to lands. They should be protected and given the benefit of the doubt when their claims are being considered. I look forward to this bill being presented. I have every confidence that the Minister will introduce a Bill which will be acceptable to all parties and, what is more important, to the Indian people throughout Canada. I hope we will be able to accept the bill without prolonged dispute. I am sure the Minister will be fair to the Indians and will help them develop their future, as I am confident that with our help the Indian people can be assured a great and happy future.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks because of my interest in this subject.

An hon. Member: Make them short.

Mr. Herridge: The hon. Member across the aisle suggests that I should make them short. I can assure him that my remarks will be short, but because of my interest in this subject I intend to make a few remarks in expression of my support for this legislation, and in support of the remarks made by various Members this afternoon on both sides of the House.

I may say, Mr. Chairman, that I am probably the only Member of this romantic political band who can trace his ancestry back to the Indians on his mother's side. Naturally I have always been interested in this subject. I have been interested in the Kootenay Indians and have written some articles on their history. I am interested in seeing that the wrongs that have been committed by the people of this country in respect of the Indians are remedied as soon as possible. It is for that reason I want to voice my support for the resolution and its intended purpose.

I might say that I was raised and went to school with a few Indians, and I know their attitude toward our way of life. The days when you could buy wood for 75 cents a cord are gone long ago. I remember the day when you could see an old squaw sitting on the ground smoking her pipe and pulling on the end of a crosscut saw for 75 cents a cord. We have now reached a different state of affairs.

My colleague, the hon. Member for Skeena, has mentioned some of the injustices we have done to the Indians throughout history and I should like to supplement his remarks in respect of the wrongs that have been done the Kootenay Indians, and more particularly the Arrow Lakes band. I remember reading about an employee of the Hudson's Bay Company of London who was the factor at Fort Sheppard, which was on this side of the international boundary. He wrote to the Honourable Committee in London suggesting that they sent out a missionary—I think he was supposed to be an Anglican—at a cost of £100 for one year, to serve the Columbia region. The Committee considered his suggestion very carefully and wrote back that they did not think this expense was justified. The factor wrote back and stated that the Committee had completely overlooked the great value of this investment of £100 in respect of a missionary who would bring the gospel to these unfortunate natives, who, as soon as they understood the gospel and appreciated its teachings, would become aware of their primitive nakedness and dress. He suggested that as a result of this missionary work on behalf of the Company, the Honourable Committee should realize, the Company would be able to obtain all the furs of the Columbia region for a few dozen bolts of Manchester cloth. That is a good indication of how the Indian population has been abused, but fortunately those days have gone.

My hon. friend, the hon. Member for Fraser Valley, is making some remarks, but I am afraid I cannot quite hear what he is saying. I imagine they are subtle remarks not intended for Hansard.

Throughout the years there has been an awakening of Canadian consciousness to this question. I have discussed this question with people in my own district and other interested groups. I am one who believes that this Commission will tackle this question promptly and effectively and that a great deal of injustice will be remedied as a result of its inquiries, and recommendations. I like the terms of the resolution, as I think it provides fairly well for all aspects of the investigation which it proposes.

Some members of the Six Nations Iroquois Confederacy visited me some time ago, and informed me of their problem. In this regard I should like to quote two paragraphs of Hansard which were brought to my attention. Naturally these matters will all be brought to the attention of the Commission because all the Indians I understand will have an opportunity to present their views. The two paragraphs I wish to quote are very interesting and relevant to an endeavour to regain Indian rights given by pledges of the Crown, and the fulfilment of the spirit in which the Haldimand Treaty of 1874 was received. These paragraphs are from Hansard, and are contained in a petition which I understand was presented to the Prime Minister in 1963. The first is:

Sir John A. Macdonald, Canada's Prime Minister stated in the House of Commons in 1887 in referring to the Six Nations claim:

It is simply a question of title, and is one of a very considerable magnitude with respect to the pecuniary interests involved in the settlement of this claim. The lands which are claimed by the Six Nations now are not in the possession of the Crown. They belong to other parties, and have belonged for many years, and it comes to this simply, that if this land belongs to the Indians and is improperly disposed of, the Province of Ontario must make compensation to these Indians for the value of these lands. Somebody has got to make a compensation for the lands have been sold or disposed of, they cannot be transferred to these Indians, because they belong to other people, and therefore, if the Indians have been wrongfully dispossessed of these lands, of course, they must be compensated either by the Dominion Parliament or the United Province of Canada or the old Province of Upper Canada. We do not know its extent, nor its value, not what was really conveyed, or promised to be conveyed, to the Indians. I feel that the red man should be protected against the white man and against their intrusions upon his rights.

That is to be found in the House of Commons Debates of 1887, pages 207 and 208. This matter was raised again on May 11, 1914, by the hon. Frank Oliver, and as found on page 3537 of Hansard he said:

But there are bands of the Six Nations Indians located on the Grand River in Ontario who, I maintain, are in a different legal position from any Indian bands who are native to the country. These Indian bands on the Grand River had their original home in the United States. At the close of the war of the revolution they emigrated to Canada and were given lands under a special treaty, not as subjects of Great Britain, but as allies of Great Britain, and I maintain that the holding of these Six Nations Indians on the Grand River is of such a kind that this Parliament has no right to interfere with it. I admit that Parliament has the power to interfere with the rights of Indians under treaty made with this Government, but I say that this Parliament has no right to interfere with a treaty made between the Imperial Government and the Six Nations Indians.

I quote these two statements because they indicate that this problem was before the House in 1887 and was again brought to the attention of the House in 1914. It has taken a long time to consider these claims of the Indians and I am very glad to know that this Commission is being appointed for that very purpose. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, with these few brief remarks I wish the Commission every success in all it undertakes to correct any injustices and in so doing lay the foundation for the further improvement and advancement of the native Indians of Canada.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to comment briefly in support of the establishment of the Indian Claims Commission. I have the honour to represent an area which embraces Walpole Indian Reserve and I might point out that this reserve is quite far advanced in respect of social services, and so on. Indeed, I believe the Indians there are unique in Canada inasmuch as recently they have been granted self-government. They are master of their own destiny; they operate their own ship of state. I sometimes wonder if this is not a mixed blessing because there are many things that will have to be straightened out on this reserve. However, I have great confidence that the people there will master the difficulties which will face them in the next few months. I sometimes wonder whether, so far as the Indian Affairs Branch is concerned, the move was a matter of self-preservation from the point of view of getting rid of quite a problem and just letting the Indians operate on their own, or whether it was actually done for the advancement of the people. I prefer to think that the latter was the reason.

I have no hesitation in supporting the establishment of the Commission because I feel we owe so much to these people, particularly in my part of the country, who were our allies and friends in days gone by in the developing of this great country. Indeed, the death of that great general and ally, Chief Tecumseh, took place in my area and he is buried there somewhere. We are not just sure where, but he is there some place.

In the establishment of this Commission I hope the Government will be sincere and that the Indian people will not be led down the garden path of great political promises. At the same time I would caution the Indian people not to try to embarrass the Government with frivolous claims. I support the principle of the establishment of the Indians Claims Commission because I feel it is something that is long overdue.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about this legislation because within the limits of my constituency, I have an Indian reservation of which I am very proud indeed. I am proud of their accomplishments because they have taken a keen interest not only in their own affairs but also in the affairs of the community as a whole. I am naturally interested in this legislation and more particularly so because I am Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister who is introducing the legislation.

The general principle of the legislation under discussion and the reasons for establishing the Indian Claims Commission are to be commended by all Canadians. This is an important step toward the implementation of the Government's desire to do all it can to give the Indian people every opportunity to secure their just rights. I dare say that the Commission will hear and make recommendations with respect to a broad category of Indian claims. Indian bands or groups will be able to put forward claims, which may very well go back in time, regarding loss of lands that were reserved for Indians and for which no compensation was paid to them, the failure to discharge treaty obligations, or the improper use of band funds and generally any transactions that have taken place that may be said to have caused injury to the Indians because of the failure of the Crown to act fairly or honourably with the Indians.

The Minister's interest in the welfare of the Indian people is reflected by his being the first Minister, to my knowledge to appoint a full blooded Indian to his staff as a special assistant. As pointed out by the Minister, band councils and Indian delegations were consulted after the introduction of Bill C-130 and this has resulted in changes which are going to be incorporated in the new bill. The purpose of the legislation is to hear and determine claims of Indians and it is intended that such a Commission should be independent and have a degree of permanency.

This afternoon and evening we have heard quite a number of worth-while contributions from hon. Members in all parties in the House, and I urge every Member to support the resolution moved by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. This legislation means the acceptance of a legal and moral obligation by the Government of Canada to assure that Indians can have their day in court. Persons interested in the welfare of Indians will be happy to know that a start is being made toward the establishment of impartial hearings form claims, with the object in view that before more of the early Indians pass on to their reward redress for any injustices will be made.

• (7:40 p.m.)

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, may I add just a brief word to this debate. I should like to associate myself with the other Members who have joined in welcoming this legislation to set up an Indian Claims Commission. The Indians of Canada have looked forward for several years now to the establishment of this Commission. As one of those who sat on the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons for several years, I feel that this is possibly the most useful recommendation that resulted from the deliberations of that Committee. I believe from what the Indians told us during the hearings of the Committee they have always felt a considerable degree of disappointment and frustration in the way they have been treated by the Canadian Government and the Canadian people, for better than 100 years. They accepted in good faith these agreements that were made with the various sovereigns of Britain. These agreements were to run as long as the sun shone and the waters flowed. They were accepted in good faith and in simple terms.

The Indians did not understand legal terminology or the finer points of business contracts. I should like to support wholeheartedly the remarks that were made by the hon. Member for Peace River as he described how the Indians may have cause for complaint as a result of their lack of business experience and understanding of the law. I can understand their disappointment and feeling of frustration at the way these contracts have been honoured by the Canadian Government and the Canadian people.

I am glad that the Government has seen fit to put in the notice of a resolution on the order paper, item No. 4, indicating their intention to provide assistance to Indian bands in preparing and presenting claims. I hope that the Government will see fit to be really generous in this regard. I suggest that, in so far as possible, the Indian people themselves should be permitted to choose their own counsel, and the Government should be prepared to pay the cost of such counsel. I feel that this is the only way in which the Indians could really have a feeling of satisfaction and fulfilment in connection with the matters to be considered by the Indian Claims Commission. These matters are very complex, very far reaching. There is the matter of their hunting privileges, which they have always understood would never be taken away from them. However, as the hon. Member for Peace River pointed out, the Government of Canada has seen fit to make agreements and laws, such as the Migratory Birds Convention Act, which transgress the original contracts into which the Indian people entered. There is the matter of the Jay Treaty which the Indians still claim gives them the right to cross the border between the United States and Canada freely, without let or hindrance.

These things should be settled, and if possible a full explanation should be offered to the Indians so they will have a clear understanding, if their claims cannot be met, why they cannot be met. I hope that out of the work of this Indian Claims Commission the Indians will find a feeling of satisfaction. If their claims cannot be met they will have a full understanding of why they cannot be met. I hope some of the claims can be met. I hope that the feeling of frustration the Indians have with regard to the way they have been treated will have disappeared as a result of the work of this Indian Claims Commission, and that the Indians will have their confidence restored in the Canadian Government and the Canadian people.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, it seems as though this is one of those rare occasions upon which unanimity is reached on issues that are brought before the Committee. I appreciate the opportunity of listening to all the representations that have been made in the course of this discussion today. It seems quite a long time ago that I first heard discussions relative to the subject of an Indian Claims Commission. It has been discussed at some length in the House on various occasions. It has even found its way on to the order paper in the form of a private bill, as well as a Government order. Now it seems as though we have reached the point where something is going to be done to implement this recommendation to set up an Indian Claims Commission. Today we are certainly giving our wholehearted support to the resolution that is now before us.

I remember the measure that was introduced last year and the criticism with which it was met. Many suggestions were made and many amendments were proposed. Of course we do not know to what extent the Government has acceded to the requests for amendments or how many of them will find their way into this new measure. I had the opportunity of spending some time at an Indian conference in my own constituency just a short time ago. The question was raised as to whether or not a further opportunity was going to be given to study this bill before it was finally passed in the House. The Indian people at that convention felt it would be advisable, following second reading, for the bill to be given wide publicity and then adequate time elapse so the Indian organizations and the Indian people who are concerned about Indian problems would have an opportunity to make further recommendations and suggestions.

I raised this question some time ago in the House and I was not too sure of the significance of the answer. The Minister seemed to imply that this would not be done, that the amendments were now being considered and the bill would be carried through once we commenced these discussions. I do not know if I misunderstood him, but I just wanted to make it clear the Indian people feel they should have a further opportunity to study this measure before it is finally passed.

I shall not enumerate all the amendments that were suggested, but there are two I want to mention. It seems that the Indian people do not feel there should be a time limit on the registration of claims. In fact they feel the Commission should more or less be a permanent one, qualified to deal with claims that may arise from time to time down through the years. No doubt the Minister has given this careful, detailed study.

Another matter which is of great concern to the Indians is the rules of evidence that will be applied in submitting and processing claims. The Indian people will not be able to follow the customary rules in this respect because in many cases they do not have written documents, and their claims are based on what has been handed down to them through generations by word of mouth.

I agree with the hon. Member for Kamloops who said the Indian people should be given the benefit of the doubt in every circumstance.

The Indian people are desirous of offering suggestions and making recommendations on their own. The question was raised by them, "Are we going to accept just what the Government thinks is good for us, what the non-Indian thinks is good for us, or are we to have the opportunity to present our own views and have them implemented?" They understand their own problems best and can offer solutions for them.

During the debate my mind went back to previous references to charters. There is the workmen's charter and the veterans' charter. Would it not be a good thing to provide an Indian charter that would ensure the rights and prerogatives of the Indian people in this great country of ours?

Just recently it was revealed in Saskatchewan that some Indians had been deprived of certain rights in the health field, and the question was raised that there may be other instances of Indians having lost their rights because old treaties have been forgotten. There is growing concern over the needs of the Indian people in Canada. This is true with respect to Government, with respect to Parliament and with respect to the Canadian people as a whole, and I look forward to the time when Indian people themselves will feel that everything possible has been done to assure them of their rights and privileges as the first citizens of this great country.

Mr. Howard: Before the resolution carries I think it is important at this juncture to see if we can get some formal indication from the Government as to the timetable, if any, it may have in mind with respect to the proposed Committee.

I would like to ask the Minister whether the government has any desire regarding the speed at which the Committee should meet? Does it have any timetable or anticipation of how long it might be before the Committee could conclude its hearings? Does it have any desire to establish a Commission within a certain period of time? Does it have any intention to circulate the bill to all Indian bands and organizations in Canada, as was done with Bill No. C-130, and does it have any intention to allow a period of time to lapse between the introduction of the bill and the commencement of Committee hearings, in order to give native Indian people the opportunity fully to examine the bill and be prepared as best they can to present their ideas about it to the committee?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, since we cannot get second reading of the bill without unanimous consent today, it would be my hope that we could get second reading tomorrow, and following second reading I propose to introduce a resolution proposing the appointment of a Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament to consider the bill. Of course, we can only do our part here in that regard, and then refer it for sympathetic consideration to the other place. Perhaps I may be speaking out of turn but I propose to suggest that the membership of the committee be 14 from the House of Commons and say 10 from the other place.

If the bill gets second reading tomorrow, as I hope it will, then the Whips of the different parties could get together and nominate their respective Members within a matter of a few days.

I do not think the Government should instruct the Joint Committee of both Houses as to how it should function, but I hope it will organize itself fairly quickly. I have advised representatives of the Six Nations Indians that they will be given an opportunity to appear before the Committee, if the Committee itself agrees—as I certainly expect it will. If the Committee wants to send out copies of the bill to others that can be done.

[Mr. Patterson.]

I would point out that we are all hoping we can get away for a break in the not too distant future, and I would expect distribution of copies of the bill could take place before we recess for the summer. There should then be ample time for the Indian people and others concerned to study the bill and put forward or make such representations to the Committee as they see fit.

Mr. Howard: That answers one question, at least from the Government's point of view, but I had rather hoped the Government would delay progress on the Committee until the fall. We do not need the Committee simply to organize itself, think about the distribution of the bill, and then wait until the fall. Distribution of the bill could take place without formal organization of the Committee. The Indian Affairs Branch has all the addresses and names on addressograph plates, and could very easily send the bill out, without leaving it to the doubtful operation of a Committee as to the speed with which it wants to proceed.

I for one say it would be grossly unfair for Parliament, for a committee, for any part of Parliament or of the Senate, to proceed with speed in considering this matter, especially so far as the west coast Indian people are concerned. As the Minister well knows, they are just now embarking on the salmon fishing season, and the people there whose livelihood rests on the fishing industry will not have the time or the opportunity to study the bill carefully until some time in the fall. If there is any speed or any desire to rush this thing through at this juncture, it will simply mean, so far as the B.C. people are concerned, that they will be denied the opportunity to examine the bill fully. It would be my suggestion that the Minister might, as a matter of Government policy, simply say that it is the intention of the Government to distribute this bill to all Indian bands in Canada, all interested organizations and everybody who sent in briefs about Bill No. C-130, with an indication that the Committee will meet some time in the fall. He could make that declaration very simply.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I would hope that the Committee could meet within the next week or ten days. If there is any chance of delay in the Committee meeting because of delay in the nominations to be made in the two Houses, then I can assure hon. Members that steps will be taken along the lines of those taken following the introduction of the bill in December, 1963, to see that suitable publicity is given. There is no intention to rush this bill through without giving all interested parties the opportunity to come here and discuss it in the light of the changes that we have made or put forward.

On second reading, which I hope will be tomorrow, I will deal with the several suggestions that have been put forward today. I cannot do it properly until the bill has been made public. If for any reason this Committee should not be set up and be functioning within the next week or ten days, then the hearings could be fixed for such time in the fall as the Committee sees fit to determine.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, there is a suggestion I am going to throw out to the Minister that he might consider between now and the time the Committee is finally established after the other place has completed its deliberations and has given the bill second reading. We discovered during the course of the joint committee hearings that a considerable amount of delay was occasioned because of the difficulty made by various Indian people throughout the country.

I do not know what the view of the Government is with regard to this, but I know they have had representations made both orally and through letters and briefs. I assume the establishment of a Committee means that they are prepared as well to entertain representations from others appearing before the Committee, particularly of course from the Indian peoples and different bands. The Government might give consideration to including in the terms of reference the right for the Committee to adjourn from place to place. This might well expedite the hearings. I doubt whether the expense involved would be any more than the expense in connection with bringing to Ottawa from a number of areas the different witnesses who were heard before the Committee. I am not necessarily wedded to that idea, Mr. Chairman, but I have put it out for the Minister's consideration.

I was going to bring to the Minister's attention some questions that I and other hon. Members had put forward, but I take it from his answer to the hon. Member for Skeena that it is his intention when introducing the bill and asking for second reading to deal in more detail with the questions and suggestions which have been put forward, so we can relate them to the terms of the bill which will then be available. If this is the case I do not intend to pursue my questions at this time.

I also suggest to the Minister that in order to expedite second reading the Minister might indicate that the Government is not wedded too firmly to the terms of the bill as it is introduced and that they are prepared, within the limits of their responsibility as a Government, to go along with and not oppose views brought forward by the Committee and brought to the attention of the Government following the Committee hearings. It may be that the terms of the legislation as presented tomorrow may be acceptable in toto, but I am inclined to think that there will probably be some suggestions made as to change. I would hope that the Minister when speaking tomorrow on second reading would indicate the Government's view that this is not a case of "take it or leave it" and that there will be a disposition to treat this as an equitable solution of a long, long standing problem, so that the solution will be a valid, binding and generous one in every sense of that word.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. Member for his suggestions. I can assure him that they will receive serious consideration by me and my colleagues in the Government. I would hope that, judging from the comments which have been made today, hon. Members will feel that we have included several of the suggestions referred to in today's debate. I could deal tonight with some of the points raised by the individual Members, but since it would be much more effective to be able to deal with them when the bill is before Members of the House or the Committee, I would prefer to deal with them on second reading of the bill rather than at this stage, unless hon. Members press for answers now.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I think there might be a disposition on the part of the Members of the Committee to agree with the last suggestion made by the Minister. I am sure that what he may have to say will be much more meaningful when we have a copy of the bill before us. While I am on my feet I would like to say that I think the two suggestions made by the hon. Member for Peace River are excellent ones and I am glad the Minister has indicated that he is prepared to give consideration to them.

My colleague from Skeena, who was a Member of the joint committee to which the hon. Member for Peace River made reference, reminded me that at the time this problem about the expense or the facility of meeting in different places was raised, the members of that Committee who are now supporting the Government put forward the same sort of suggestion themselves. I hope the Minister will keep that in mind when he is considering this point.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Nicholson thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-123, to provide for the disposition of Indian claims.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MEASURE TO AUTHORIZE CONSTRUCTION OF SPUR LINE TO CANADIAN INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (for the Minister of Transport) moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize and to provide for the construction of a line of railway in the Province of Ontario by Canadian National Railway Company from a point of the Froomfield Spur near Sarnia in a southerly direction for a distance of approximately twelve miles to the property of Canadian Industries Limited in Sombra Township in the County of Lambton at a total estimated expenditure of $850,000, not to be exceeded by more than fifteen per cent.

Motion agreed to and the House went into Committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this resolution is to authorize the Canadian National Railway Company to construct out of funds within the railway company and out of their present capital budget a line of railway approximately 12 miles long running from a point commencing at mile 32 of the Canadian National Froomfield spur, extending in a southerly direction for a distance of about 12 miles to the property of Canadian Industries Limited in Sombra Township, in the County of Lambton, Province of Ontario. The estimated cost of the rail spur will be $850,000, which is the amount provided for, plus a 15 per cent provision for contingencies.

The Canadian National Railways have carried out an economic study of this particular branch line, which is designed to join the new plant of Canadian Industries Limited with the main line. The company has decided that it is an economically feasible branch line and will pay for itself within a reasonably short period of time.

[Mr. Barnett.]

The purpose of this Canadian Industries plant is the production of fertilizer. It is estimated that 400,000 tons of fertilizer per annum will be produced by this particular plant, and approximately 225,000 will pass over this branch line. The method of financing the construction, as I have mentioned, is out of the existing capital budget of the Canadian National Railways, so that this House will not be asked to vote additional funds for this purpose but merely to allow the Canadian National Railways to proceed with the construction of this new branch line.

Mr. Thomas: Just one question. Could the Minister of National Revenue tell us how long the period is likely to be before this line pays for itself?

Mr. Benson: I would rather not indicate the economic assessment of Canadian National Railways in view of the competition existing in the particular area, but I can assure my hon. friend that there are guarantees from the company involved that the line will amortize itself within a very short period.

I should also indicate there is some urgency in proceeding with this matter in that it is hoped that the new fertilizer plant will go into production on April 1, 1966. It would be very helpful if the Canadian National Railways had authority to proceed with this line in order that the construction materials for this plant could be hauled over the railway, thus providing additional revenues for the railway and also providing facilities for the manufacturers.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Chairman, I am sure we are all interested in the fact that the Canadian National Railways are interested in building this new spur line in western Ontario. To me this pinpoints two factors: First, that the tremendous development that has taken place, which began in 1961 in the Province of Ontario and the whole Dominion of Canada, is continuing. After all, the Canadian National Railways, as the Minister of National Revenue has indicated, made an economic study and found that this branch line was economically feasible.

It also pinpoints the fact that branch lines are important in this tremendous development which we are passing through today. In the first place, Canadian Industries Limited, which is not a new company in Canada, realize that the railroad is important. Regardless of the fact that the plant they are thinking of building is served by some of the best highways in Ontario, and that the plant is not too far away from good lake ports with access to the facilities of the St. Lawrence Seaway, which provides cheap and economic transportation, they also feel that the railroad branch lines are important to their continued development.

The second matter I should like to speak about concerns the importance of branch lines themselves. A tremendous study of transportation was made by the MacPherson Commission, which dealt extensively with the subject of branch lines. Much talk has been heard these days of a reduction in the number of branch lines, but I feel that the resolution before us pinpoints, as I say, the importance of branch lines as well as the importance of maintaining and preserving most of the present branch lines a fact which I feel the Government should stress to Canadian National Railways.

Representing as I do an area in western Ontario where there are many rumours and much talk of discontinuing branch lines, and having read the report of the Economic Council which indicates that our population and gross national product are going to increase, I feel that before there is any discontinuance of branch lines or downgrading of service Canadian National Railways or the Government should give very thorough consideration to the possibility that in this area new industry might like to develop. We are told our population will increase so that additional transportation facilities will be necessary.

As I say, in the area in which I live there is a lot of worry in small communities, towns and villages over the prospect that railways might be taken away and that some of the branch lines might be discontinued. But I feel that this particular resolution now before us indicates the importance of the railways to our economic development. There is not a community in my riding which is not worrying about ways and means of getting additional industry. That the Government is interested in this is indicated by the statement made by the Prime Minister on June 7, one paragraph of which I should like to read, because I think it is very important. As recorded at page 2023 of Hansard the Prime Minister said:

> With this objective we propose to establish new guide lines for the designation of areas where, under the terms of the Department of Industry Act, the industrial incentives will be made available.

We have heard a lot about designated areas and assistance which is going to be given to industry, but I feel that there are other areas in which assistance can be given to industry. In underdeveloped areas and areas where there is a crying need for industry the municipalities should be assisted by means of industrialized assessments to meet the tax rate in order to provide the schools, hospitals and roads and all the things required by a small community, just the same as in a large community. I feel that the Government should carry this proposal regarding the development of industry further afield into the area of assisting the means of transportation through some type of subsidy in order to facilitate the settlement of industry in such areas. After all, industry needs raw materials and components. This would be of great benefit to the smaller communities all throughout Ontario and Canada.

One of the matters which I feel should be discussed in the Dominion-Provincial Conference which is going to take place on July 19 is the ways and means of decentralizing industry. In this connection our railroads are necessary. So many types of industry need railroads to carry their heavy equipment and products to and from the plant. Irrespective of the fact that this involves a branch line costing $850,000 to assist Canadian Industries Limited to get their fertilizer to the markets, this is an indication of the necessity of maintaining branch lines, and probably an indication of the necessity to build more. During our period in office there were quite a number of branch lines of this type built, and this pinpoints the areas in which our railroads are necessary for the development of this great nation.

We in this party are in favour of this resolution, but the Minister did not say in introducing it whether it was to be referred to the Committee on Transport and Communications. If it is to be referred, then it will be subject to that regulation that states that Standing Order No. 99 will be amended.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I hope, because this is a simple line to be financed out of the Canadian National Railways general finances rather than through the expenditure of public funds, it will not be necessary to refer it to a Committee.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): That puts an entirely new light on the situation and pinpoints the importance of the Minister's answering questions regarding the cost of the right of way, the tonnage to be shipped and, as the hon. Member for Middlesex West asked, how many years is it going to take to amortize the principal sum, how much interest is involved, and all those things. These questions will all have to be answered before approval is given to this legislation.

We hope that this legislation will carry, but we also hope that the Government and the Canadian National Railways, as well as those interested in transportation in our nation, realize the importance of our railways in the development of our nation.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, as one of the Members of the House closely connected with this development, being from the east part of Lambton County, of course I am delighted to learn about the development of the western part of the county. This new industrial area which is developing down the St. Clair waterfront is a continuation of that famous chemical valley area of Sarnia. This development has been brought about by a wedding of that industrial area and the richest agricultural area in Canada.

C.I.L. will be, as mentioned by the Minister, making fertilizers, ammonia and nitrates which in large part may find their way into the Essex and Kent areas of Ontario. The question in my mind at this time is this: This area is now served by a railway known as the Chesapeake and Ohio which runs from the city of Sarnia to Chatham. The right of way is in existence and the line is in good shape. Why is there a necessity to duplicate these services in this area? If the great bulk of the shipments from this town are for agricultural usage, it would seem to me to be an expense to backtrack to Sarnia, over to London and down to Chatham, Leamington, etc., where the great percentage of this material will be used.

There is one other consideration in this regard. In the same general area of Ontario the Ontario Government is building an extremely large hydroelectric power generating plant which is to be coal fired. This plant will use fantastic amounts of coal, yet I did not hear the Minister mention that the C.N.R. was going to get any of this haulage business.

There is an incongruous situation developing in Lambton County. In the past few years there has been abandonment of railroads, and one in particular which might have served this general area was abandoned two years ago. As of July 1 the Canadian National is abandoning 12 miles of railroad from Glencoe over to Alvinston.

Another consideration that bothers me at the moment relates to a new proposed parkway. I should like to go on record as not opposing this development, of course, but in Lambton County a committee has been established to study the building of a parkway from Wallaceburg through to Sarnia, a matter of about 40 miles. It is hoped that this parkway will be similar to the system of parkways now in existence in the Niagara area. It is to be located on our international boundary with the United States. It will be and is now, one of the most beautiful scenic drives on this continent.

Mr. Whelan: Next to the Detroit river area.

Mr. Winkler: All the Members from Essex are the same.

Mr. McCutcheon: This is a very beautiful driveway and I can recommend it to anyone.

My point is, will the idea of having a second railroad down the waterfront create any additional problems for that committee on the development of the parkway? The Minister shakes his head and I hope he is correct, but I can hardly see how two sets of tracks will be as easy to maintain as one set. I hope that the Canadian National Railways officials have examined this project carefully and have made overtures in respect of the existing railway to see whether its facilities could be used for part of the freight, particularly the coal to be used by the generation system which I am led to believe will be brought in by water during a good portion of the year. The result is that if this line is to receive any of the coal haulage revenue, it will be in respect of a limited portion of the year.

With that short interjection, let me say that I hope the Canadian National has examined the situation closely to see whether any other alternative which is less expensive, but efficient, could be found. I think I speak for everyone here when I say that the operation of the C.N.R. costs the people of Canada enough money.

Mr. Foy: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a few words in this connection. I listened with interest to my hon. friend, the hon. Member for Lambton-Kent, and I should like to assure him that the railroad's spur line will not interfere or in any way be detrimental to the St. Clair parkway.

• (8:30 p.m.)

The new C.N.R. spur line is a considerable distance from the highway, as the map that has already been published will show. It is my firm belief that this is one spur or branch line that will be a tremendous money maker and asset to the C.N.R. The Canadian Industries Limited plant ships approximately a quarter of a million tons of its product, I understand, not only to the counties of Lambton, Essex and Kent but throughout Ontario and elsewhere.

I believe that the development of the St. Clair River is something of which the people in our area will be proud and there is little doubt that as a part of the St. Lawrence Seaway it is going to play a very important role in industrial Canada. I look forward to the extension of this branch or spur line beyond what is planned at the moment. The chemical valley of Canada, as the Sarnia area is known throughout the country, is a very progressive area. There is further development every year. The expenditures of industry are fantastic. With the additional service new industries will be interested in our area.

One thing in which I am very interested at the moment is the development of the Sarnia Indian Reserve as an industrial parksite. There are approximately 3,000 acres right on the St. Clair River within the city limits of Sarnia and the Indian Affairs Branch is vitally interested in this development. The Indians are also interested. They are active in the creation of this industrial parksite which they hope to lease to industry. The more services we have in the area, the more attractive it will be for new industries to locate there. I feel that the construction of this branch line is a very welcome addition to the C.N.R. services in this area.

Mr. McCutcheon: Will the hon. Member permit a question? Have there been investigations to find out whether it would be economically feasible to use the existing railroad? Why is it necessary to build the spur?

Mr. Foy: I believe the C.N.R. Board of Directors would be businesslike enough to investigate the area to see if the Chesapeake and Ohio would be able to handle the influx of new industry. I am quite convinced they have made a survey, although I cannot tell the hon. Member they have. If he were in a position of authority with the C.N.R. I think that as a businessman he would take the same attitude. I have no doubt that this matter has been thoroughly investigated. I hope this satisfies the hon. Member.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Benson (for Mr. Pickersgill) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-124, respecting the construction of a line of railway in the Province of Ontario by Canadian National Railway Company from a point at or near mileage 3.2 of the Froomfield spur of the Canadian National Railway near Sarnia in a southerly direction for a distance of approximately 12 miles to the property of Canadian Industries Limited in Sombra Township in the County of Lambton.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Mr. MacNaught: By leave, now.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Are copies of the bill available?

Some hon. Members: Next sitting of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Next sitting of the House.

THE CUSTOMS ACT

Hon. E. J. Benson (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill C-119, to amend the Customs Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the time of the resolution covering this particular bill I explained the contents of the legislation very thoroughly, I think, and we had a rather thorough discussion of those contents. However, there are one or two points which arose during the discussion at the resolution stage and I should like to comment very briefly on them. One of them had to do with the proposed amendment introducing a new section 37A of the Customs Act whose purpose is to assist Great Britain and other compact countries in the sale of their products to Canada by adopting a means of alleviating some of the difficulties which arise in determining the cost of their goods for distribution in Canada, compared with goods coming from other countries which have a similar system of distribution to that used in Canada.

One of the points raised during the debate on the resolution by the hon. Member for Edmonton West was the matter of so-called ministerial discretion included in this particular section and which I should like to point out to him is not ministerial discretion but discretion of the Governor in Council. He tried very hard to compare this provision with a situation which arose a few years ago in which ministerial discretion was being introduced into the Customs Tariff Act and legislation brought in by the former government was subsequently refused passage by the Senate.

I should like to point out that there is a great deal of difference between the legislation now being introduced in the House of Commons and the legislation to which my hon. friend alluded. First of all, the amendments which were introduced at that time had to do with the matter of class or kind rulings in Canada. It was proposed that the Minister be given the right to rule whether or not something was of a class or kind in Canada even though such goods had never been produced in this country. In other words, it was proposed at that time that the Minister would be given the right to rule something was of a class or kind made in Canada if production facilities existed, even though the item had never been produced in this country.

Ruling something to be of a class or kind made in Canada has two implications. First of all, if it is within one of the tariff items that has a class or kind condition attached to it a higher customs duty attaches to the item.

The other, and more important part, is that if it is ruled of a class or kind made in Canada, even though class or kind is not mentioned in the particular tariff item, then dumping duties are applicable. For example, there is no reference to class or kind in Section 438(a) covering autos. If the Minister of National Revenue, under legislation to which my hon. friend alluded, if that legislation had been passed, had ruled that these were of a class or kind made in Canada, dumping duties could have been employed even though there is no mention of class or kind in that particular item.

Now, I should like to mention that there are various methods by which the value for duty, already established under Order in Council, may be appealed under the proposed new Section 37A. First, there are the same rights of appeal to the Tariff Board and Exchequer Court as exist with regard to imports as prescribed in the Customs Act under Sections 43, 44 and 45. I will remind my hon. friend that in 1962 they changed Section 43 of the Customs Act by extending the period under which an appeal could be made to the Chief Appraiser. At that time, they did not take the point of view that it did not matter whether or not such an appraisal was made. A Canadian manufacturer who, under this proposed section felt that an importer was securing a value for duty under this provision below the cost of production plus an allowance for gros profit, could appeal under existing appeal provisions. Similarly, an importer could use existing appeal provisions if he felt that the regular valuation of his goods, from which a reduction was being made under this section was too high.

The Canadian manufacturer similarly could appeal that such regular valuation, before the reduction was made, was too low. The Canadian manufacturer, if it were not feasible to use the regular appeal procedures under Sections 43, 44 and 45, could request the Deputy Minister to refer the matter of valuation to the Tariff Board under Section 46 of the Customs Act. The importer has a similar right of appeal. Finally, action by the Governor in Council is subject to appeal to the Exchequer Court on the ground that the discretion to reduce the value for duty has been recognized unreasonably. It is clear, therefore, that under this proposed section there will be the same significant rights of appeal both for the importer and for the Canadian producer to the Tariff Board and to the courts.

However, Mr. Speaker, the point I should like to make to the House is that the whole intention of Section 37A, which is being introduced into the Customs Act is to assist compact countries such as Britain in their exports to this country. While it is true that under Section 22 of the Financial Administration Act, the Governor in Council can alleviate the duties in various situations which might arise, or almost any situation if it were deemed advisable to do so, it was felt by the Government, on the urging of the British Government, that it would be more useful to write into the Customs Act a specific provision such as Section 37A which would allow the Governor in Council to use the Customs Act for alleviating the duty burden, or the unfair burden as the British have often called it, which their goods must bear rather than having to use Section 22 of the Financial Administration Act.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): From the Minister's brief remarks with regard to Bill No. C-72 of 1961 it is rather apparent that the Minister, who was not then in the House, is not seized of the full import of what was being attempted at the time. I think if he consulted the debates of the day he would have found that what was being attempted at that time was precisely what is being done now, to incorporate into the legislation something which had existed by Order in Council. This business of class or kind was not something new. It had existed prior to 1936. In fact, the percentage of Canadian consumption of 10 per cent was something fixed by Order in Council in 1936. These provisions were being substantially incorporated into the Statute in 1961.

However, the point I was after was one which dealt more with the objections that were made by the Opposition of the day. Primarily, what they said was there was a denial of the right of appeal. I maintain that under Section 37A there is no true right of appeal. One can say that there are rights of appeal. However, let us examine them, and then we will see whether there are really the rights of appeal the Minister has indicated. A decision by the Governor in Council on a report by the Minister, as envisaged by Section 37A, is not a decision that the Dominion Customs Appraiser will set aside, nor will the Deputy Minister who, after all, had a great deal to do with the preparation of the report of the Minister. Certainly, we are not going to get a divided House in the Department of National Revenue. Therefore, I fail to see how, in essence, a Deputy Minister could still maintain his decision and grant an appeal to any interested party with regard to a reduction in valuation as envisaged under Section 37A.

Certainly we know that Section 37A has in mind, as its objective, really exercising a form of discrimination in favour of a certain country or countries. Conversely, I suppose we might say there is discrimination against others. Here is a specific valuation that is being set up for the reduction that is recommended by the Governor in Council, and as I indicated I do not believe the appeal to the Dominion Customs Appraiser is a true appeal. Neither is it a true appeal to the Deputy Minister. The Act would allow an appeal to the Tariff Board; that is so. However, when we come to the appeal to the Exchequer Court, the Minister must take cognizance of the wording of Section 45, wherein it is stated clearly that the appeal to the Exchequer Court of Canada relates to any question of law. Certainly, the Minister is not going to argue that the Exchequer Court is going to say that the reduction in value was unreasonable; that is a matter of discretion, not a question of law.

The only point of law, I would submit, would be if the Government moved in some fashion procedurally contrary to the provisions of the Act. But no court will substitute its discretion for that of a Minister acting within the letter of the law, nor of the Governor in Council acting according to the letter of the law. The Minister knows this, and it is my contention that there is very little room for appeal, if any, in this instance.

I can compare what is being done now with the outcry that was raised by some of the Minister's former colleagues, and some of his present colleagues, when they sat on this side of the House. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) and the former Minister of Justice were like the Bobsey Twins on that occasion. The debate lasted for nine days.

Sometimes hon. Members opposite wonder about legislation taking a long time to pass, but on that occasion an amendment, much the same length as this one, was discussed for nine days. Was that filibuster?

Mr. Ricard: Oh, no.

Mr. Lambert: Was that obstruction?

Mr. Ricard: Oh, no.

Mr. Lambert: They were not accused of it. The Government of the day said hon. Members were exercising their right to object and it may be that, except for administrative reasons, there was some right to object. If the Minister reads Bill C-72 I am sure he will agree with me that if the duty were to evolve upon him to determine a classification of a class or kind, it would be much easier to proceed under Bill C-72 as then proposed. The Minister cannot deny this, yet we had that great outcry. Why, it was almost a traducing of Magna Carta, hon. Members were so indignant on that occasion.

Why is there this sudden change? I am not complaining about discretion within the Act, because both under the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff Act the Minister possesses all sorts of discretion. As I indicated the other day, the counting shows there are over 60 areas in which the Minister may exercise his discretion. Introducing a further discretion at this time does not unduly worry me. What concerns me is that we are told this is subject to appeal, which I say is not a true appeal.

I shall not bore the House by reading passages from the previous debate to which I refer, but the hon. Member for Laurier of that day, and the Minister of Transport, figured prominently in it, and I think the Minister should read that debate.

Mr. Benson: I did.

Mr. Lambert: Then I hope he was educated as to how attitudes can change. It depends on what side of the House you may be on. I can only say that a lot of the protestations of that day must have been hollow. In so far as the former hon. Member for Laurier was concerned, there was a little bit of in-fighting. Mr. Deputy Speaker is the hon. Member representing Cornwall and he knows whereof I speak. There was a good deal of confusion and difficulty with regard to the textile industry in Cornwall; but let it be known that today, as a result of action taken by the administration of a few years ago, the level of activity in the textile industry is much healthier than it was in 1957 and 1958, when plants were closing.

I wonder what the textile industry may have to say if the Government is to exercise its discretion under Section 37A with regard to textiles. After all, automobiles are not the only area in which the British government has expressed its concern about Canada's anti-dumping legislation. Anti-dumping legislation is not new in this country, and certainly it was invoked in regard to textiles. Is it going to be invoked again, or is the Minister going to exercise the prerogatives of Government under Section 37A to let in British textiles to the detriment of the Canadian textile industry? This is a question which the Government will have to determine. The provision is not limited to automobiles. It covers all sorts of categories of goods, and we will see the reactions of industry in regard to these provisions.

The methods of marketing in Great Britain are different from what they are here, but the point is that Britain is selling to this country. If I may give a personal anecdote, early in the days when I was a prisoner of war we held one of the first commonwealth trade and economic conferences among a body of very informed people who were officers from various commonwealth countries. It was a highly educative and interesting experience.

I remember one old South African colonel who was a very sage man. He had discussed with British manufacturers the marketing of a simple implement, a hoe, among native farmers in South Africa. They preferred to have a red handle on the hoe, but the manufacturers said, "We don't sell our hoes with red handles in Britain and therefore we are not going to send them out with red handles." This simply meant that they would not sell any hoes to South African native farmers. It is a simple story, but it illustrates what happens in a tightly organized market such as exists in Great Britain and other countries.

If those manufacturers think they are going to sell their goods in this country, where tastes and preferences are different, in the same way as they do in their own country, then of course they will have to take their chances, and if they cannot sell them using their own marketing methods then they will have to change those methods. I do not think the answer lies in a change for valuation purposes There are two sides to this coin.

A lot of the changes proposed are eminently sensible, such as the provision of bond rather than cash. There is the recommendation of the Public Accounts Committee to regularize a practice that was actually in effect, and now this is going to be embodied in the Statute. But I still maintain that section 37A is not as simple as the Government would have us believe.

It can introduce a very dangerous principle into the Act. It does not provide the type of appeal that the Minister would have us believe is there. Therefore I enter this caveat at this time, as I did the other day, and as I shall when we are in Committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

• (9:00 p.m.)

On clause 1—Duties to be paid unless goods are warehoused or entered in prescribed manner.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, with regard to paragraph (2) of clause 1, the regulations will be published in the Canada Gazette. I wonder whether the Minister would undertake that as soon as the necessary regulations have been passed by the Governor in Council, they will be tabled.

Mr. Benson: I will be pleased to do this, Mr. Chairman.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said Bill be read the third time?

Mr. Lambert: Now, by leave.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benson moved the third reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. E. J. Benson (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-120, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, is the Parliamentary Secretary making some explanatory remarks with regard to this Bill?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this Bill provides for the implementation, without any change in substance, of the budget resolutions relating to the Customs Tariff which were considered by the Committee of Ways and Means on June 17 and 18. The clauses of the Bill are in the same order as the resolutions, and since there is no change in substance there is very little that I can add at this time that will be of assistance to the House.

Clause 1 provides for the renumbering of the Customs Tariff by Order in Council. Clause 2 provides for the deletion of certain items from the Customs Tariff and the insertion of the items which appear in Schedule A tc the Bill. Clause 3 establishes the new drawback item shown in Schedule B to the Bill. Clause 4 amends item 1220, which appears in Schedule C. Clause 5 provides for the establishment of the item dealing with periodicals, and Clause 6 relates to the coming into force of the previous clauses.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary has made it appear rather deceptively simple, but I think there is more to this than he would have us believe at the moment. I am dealing primarily with Schedule D referred to in Clause 5 of the Bill. The other day I did say that I felt this was completely exclusive legislation in that a periodical which transgressed the requirements of the item would be excluded from Canada. I was wondering why a magazine with a split run and which contained more than the maximum permitted percentage of advertising directed to Canadians would be excluded from the country as though it were in the class of pornographic material. It is about in the same category. I hope I am not getting the wrong impression of the legislation, but it seems to me that this is a very heavy penalty.

If a publication, whether it be from the United States or from another foreign country, has a split run and contains certain advertising directed to Canadians, why should it be banned from Canada? Is this not a form of censorship? I quite agree with the idea of the Minister, namely to protect Canadian periodicals from the effects of the so-called split run; but surely the remedy is to impose a higher tariff or a fairly punitive customs rate. But at the present time—and I think the Parliamentary Secretary would have to answer this question—why ban the periodical entirely? I cannot quite see that. Certainly the economic impact of a higher customs impost would make it economically impractical to continue to distribute such a magazine in the country. But why ban it?

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary can put me straight, if I am wrong in my estimation of item 1221. I did not think we went quite as far as banning the circulation of such publications—any publications, as a matter of fact—which did not offend morals, were not seditious or did not offend the public interest in a similar way. Why, if there is a split run and there is a non-permitted degree of advertising directed to Canadians, should it be banned? There have been protestations that the Government does not want to impose any form of censorship, but this is censorship; at least in my interpretation of this particular item. With regard to Schedule C, I suppose this would be intended to cover collectors' items. After all, the only change in Item 1220 is in subparagraph (d), which reads:

> antique articles eligible for entry under Tariff Item 693(i) or Tariff Item 693(iii), and bona fide collectors' items, as determined by the Minister;

Mr. Pennell: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, but what particular clause is he now reading?

Mr. Lambert: Item 1220, subparagraph (d). The only change in the whole item is the introduction of the words "bona fide collectors' items", and of course this is a matter for determination by the Minister; it is dealt with by ministerial discretion.

With regard to the rest of the items as enumerated in Schedules A and B, we discussed these at the resolution stage and I will limit my remarks to Item 1221 particularly.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Parliamentary Secretary speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, before the Parliamentary Secretary rises to reply to the hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), and close the debate, I should like to ask, because I am not familiar with this, why there is no specified tariff laid down in schedule D on periodicals, catalogues, newspapers and so on, on which a duty may be imposed. Schedule A and schedule B, for example, contain specific items, and the various rates of duty are also specifically stated.

Bill No. C-120 is asking the House to authorize the Governor in Council to impose by order from time to time amendments and tariffs. I think it is something of a departure to give the Governor in Council the authority, first of all, to impose taxes without the consent of Parliament, and second, a new category of goods is brought in, such as catalogues, newspapers and periodicals. Surely it would be useful to the House, and generally, to know what the Government has in mind by way of tariff rate on these magazines, newspapers and so on.

Another interesting point in this bill is that clause 5 simply says:

> Schedule C to the said Act is further amended by inserting therein the item and enumeration of goods specified in schedule D to this Act.

I would ask if schedule D was some kind of afterthought on the part of the Government. Why do we specifically spell out the amendment to Section 17 and itemize the new schedules A, B and C, and then add a further schedule, schedule D, to schedule C? It seems a strange way to write a bill, yet it is what we find in front of us.

If it is not customary for Parliament to grant the Governor in Council the authority to impose tariffs from time to time, such as clause 1 suggests, then I should like to know why it is being done in this manner. If it has been customary in the past for the Minister or the Governor in Council to have this kind of authority which is being asked for here, then this will certainly add to my information.

I was not in the House at the time of the newspaper reports in 1960 and 1961, when the former Government brought in a bill which was going to give the Minister some discretionary power to impose tariffs from time to time on certain classes of goods, but a tremendous amount of objection was taken by the Liberal Party of the day to the effect that passing the bill would in fact give the Minister or the Governor in Council almost what you might call an executive authority to impose taxes. This is an authority which has been very religiously, if I may use that word, confined to Parliament. First of all, the House of Commons and then the whole parliamentary system are the only bodies with the right to impose taxation. I know of no other instance where a bill has gone through the House transferring this authority to the Governor in Council.

So, Mr. Speaker, when the Parliamentary Secretary replies perhaps he could explain why there is no provision as to the specific rate of tariff which will be imposed, and why the bill is written in such a way that Schedule D is simply added to Schedule C, wherein this power is transferred to the Governor in Council.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Parliamentary Secretary speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I do not believe it has been the practice that a Parliamentary Secretary is empowered to replace the Minister who moved second reading of the bill. At any time the Parliamentary Secretary has spoken in the past it has been with the unanimous consent of the House. I do not think this is a good practice.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is not establishing the practice now; it has been established before. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Pennell) did not make the motion but spoke on behalf of and for the Minister who made the motion. There is precedent to the effect that the Parliamentary Secretary who has made the originating speech in support of the motion, and who speaks later in reply, closes the debate.

I would refer hon. Members to a ruling by Mr. Speaker Michener, reported in the Journals for Tuesday, May 17, 1960. He said:

> I think I should inform the House that if the Parliamentary Secretary speaks now he will close the debate. I do so with a comment, however, because Standing Order 37 refers in express terms only to the honourable Member who has moved a substantive motion. The Parliamentary Secretary did not move this motion. It was moved by a Minister and the Minister spoke as the first speaker but I believe that one of my predecessors has assumed that the Parliamentary Secretary taking part in debate to all intents does so as though he were the mover and would be considered as such for the purpose of closing the debate.
> After further debate, the question being put on the said motion, it was agreed to.

I would suggest that the Chair is bound by the previous ruling of Mr. Speaker Michener.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might deal first of all—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is it understood that the Parliamentary Secretary is now closing the debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert: With respect, Mr. Speaker, you have made a ruling.

Mr. Pennell: Perhaps it might be of interest Mr. Speaker, to hon. Members, dealing first of all with item 1220, the one dealing with offensive weapons, to note that the amendment to this item has been brought in to make the law applying to those importing firearms the same as the law applying to those who obtain firearms within Canada.

The words "form 42" are deleted from the item so that a person now importing a firearm would do so by using form 43 or form 44. Form 42 was the form which permitted a person to carry a firearm in a place elsewhere than the owner's home or place of business. Form 43 is used to apply for a permit to buy firearms for resale; and form 44 is the application form used for the registering of firearms. I do not know whether this legislation is prompted by the experience in the United States, but on form 42 there is very little provision for description of the firearm. Therefore it would be possible for a person, until this legislation is amended, to take form 42 into the United States, purchase a firearm there and bring it back into Canada, and the firearm in question would not be sufficiently identified, because, as I say, form 42 does not require a detailed description of the firearm. By this amendment we are deleting form 42 and leaving the section requiring only form 43 and form 44.

The second amendment will mean that automatic firing military type rifles will be deemed to be a firearm. The other military rifles will continue to come in under subsection (c) as rifles of standard or autoloading type for sporting use only. I think Members should bear in mind the distinction relating to firearms, as I understand it. Under the Criminal Code, firearms include revolvers, pistols, and automatic rifles which continue to fire on a single pressure.

Turning to the somewhat more contentious schedule D, and the suggestion of the hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) that this might be some type of censorship, and that we should consider dealing with this problem under a higher tariff, let me suggest to him with great respect that it seems to me that his suggestion would be a censorship. We are not aiming at the prohibition of magazines from other countries by schedule D, although it does set up a prohibited list. What we are aiming at by this suggestion is the implementation of a recommendation of the Royal Commission which, and I do not say this in an offensive way, was supported by hon. Members opposite. We are attempting to implement almost verbatim a suggestion of that Royal Commission. What we are doing here is to prohibit magazines if they offend so far as their advertising is concerned.

Split or special editions are usually aimed at capturing the Canadian advertising market, and that is the sort of thing we are aiming to guard against. If a split run, so far as advertising is concerned, is directed primarily at the Canadian market then it will be prohibited. A publisher may adjust his advertising and get around this prohibition. If there had been four editions that have not offended then the fifth edition would be permitted entry into the country. It seems to me that perhaps the tariff items will not have a great effect on the circulation of the type of magazine such as Saturday Evening Post, Harper's and other publications which enjoy wide distribution in Canada and the United States.

Dealing with the point raised by the hon. Member for—

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question for clarification? Is schedule D intended to absolutely prohibit the entry into Canada of that type of periodical if it offends under tariff item 1221?

Mr. Pennell: It will be prohibited momentarily, yes, if it offends; but it is open to the publisher to amend the offending advertising and gain readmission. If you read the amendment closely, you will see that any periodical which contains advertising which is primarily directed at the Canadian market but which did not appear in the identical form in all issues of the periodical distributed in the country of origin, then, of course, it would be placed on the prohibited list. I must say, however, that the publishers have been in close contact with the department and are aware of these regulations. We feel they will have no difficulty in meeting the requirement and bringing their publications within the exception as set out, in order that they will not be prohibited.

The first part deals only with special editions. Under the second part, in respect of their regular editions, if there is more than 5 per cent of the total advertising space in the magazine used for the purpose of indicating specific sources of availability in Canada, or specific terms or conditions relating to the sale or provision in Canada, of any goods or services, except for the indication of such source of availability or such terms of conditions primarily directed to persons outside Canada, they are prohibited.

The point I want to make, as I suggested in respect of travel magazines, is that the advertising may be about Canada but directed to persons outside Canada, and therefore they will not be prohibited. These are magazines setting out the advantages of visiting Canada and are directed to people outside Canada in an attempt to induce them to come to this country. They would therefore fall within the exceptions and would not be prohibited.

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) raised a question, if I understood him correctly, about the method of proceeding by Order in Council. My understanding is, and it will be appreciated that my experience is very limited in this matter, that under Section 10 of the Customs Tariff there may be implementation by Order in Council of certain tariff items. The method being adopted here is one which I think is in keeping with the practice, and is quite proper. All we have done here is state that the prohibited list as set out in schedule D will fall in schedule C, to the Customs Tariff and I cannot think of a more expeditious way of doing this. This is an open move with the intent and purpose being apparent on the face of the clause.

Mr. Baldwin: I should like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question. When one reads schedule D, 1221 (2), he will see that the first part deals with four immediate preceding issues of a periodical. Is it the intention that the words "at least" should be considered as having been inserted there? What I am getting at is, this is taxing legislation which is construed as striking against the Government. What would be the situation if of the four immediately preceding issues two were offensive in the way in respect of which the Government is trying to prohibit their entry? I am not trying to suggest that there may be a flaw, but in reading this and after listening to the explanations given by the Parliamentary Secretary, I cannot decide whether a case could be made for the argument that if two, rather than one, were found to be offensive, and this might be reductio ad absurdum, although plausible, it is admissible.

Mr. Pennell: I am satisfied with the wording, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps I should explain that as I understand the clause, if it is found that one publication or issue is offensive then the publisher will have to wait until four consecutive publications are deemed to be inoffensive before the fifth one is admitted. In other words, there have to be four clear publications without any infringement of the item before the fifth is admitted. If there were two publications with infractions, the four issues would be counted from the most recent one, and the fifth would be admitted.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2—Schedule A amended.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, with respect to Schedule A which forms part of clause 2 I note that items 209e, 210i and 263e have an effective date of December 31, 1966 compared with what I presume had been an effective date of December 31, 1965. They are the first three items in Schedule A. What is the significance of the change in the effective date? Has it something to do with production facilities or negotiations or what?

Mr. Pennell: I understand they are merely being renewed for another year and will therefore continue to December 31, 1966.

Mr. Lambert: But these are commercial chemicals. What is the purpose of this particular level of duties in so far as Canada's domestic production is concerned?

Mr. Pennell: Is item 210i one of them?

Mr. Lambert: That is one of them.

Mr. Pennell: I understand that this item covers laundry bleaches. I am not able to give the House any information as to the amount of imports, but I might say that this item was originally introduced for the period July 31, 1961 to December 31, 1963 and in 1963 was extended until December 31, 1965. Item 210i is in the reference on chemicals before the Tariff Board.

Mr. Lambert: That is the answer.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules A to D inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Lambert: By leave, now.

Mr. Hellyer (for Mr. Gordon) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CONSUMER CREDIT

MOTION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General) moved:

That a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to enquire into and report upon the problems of consumer credit, more particularly but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing to enquire into and report upon the operation of Canadian legislation in relation thereto;

That twenty-four members of the House of Commons to be designated by the House at a later date, be members of the joint committee, and that standing order 67(1) of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto;

That the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses; to sit while the House is sitting, and to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable, and that Standing Order 66 be suspended in relation thereto; and to engage the services of counsel, accountants and such other clerical and technical personnel as may be deemed necessary, that the Minutes of Proceedings of and evidence given before the joint committee at the past session be referred to the said committee and be made part of the records thereof; and that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed joint committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this resolution is largely self-explanatory. It is merely to reconstitute a committee that was set up at the previous session of this Parliament. The Committee has done a considerable volume of work but has not yet completed its job. It is proposed that the committee be set up and that the evidence taken during the previous session be referred to it.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few observations at this time concerning the resolution now before the House. In introducing it the Minister said it was self-explanatory, but there is one part he forgot to explain and upon which I should like to enlarge and raise serious objections. I am referring to that part of the resolution reading "and to engage the services of counsel, accountants and such other clerical and technical personnel as may be deemed necessary".

As the Minister said, a Joint Committee on Consumer Credit was set up during the last session and it had its first meeting on June 2, 1964 under the joint chairmanship of Senator Croll and the hon. Member for Renfrew South. It was my pleasure to be a member of the committee and at its first meeting it was indicated that it was the wish of the committee to hire a lawyer and an accountant to assist. This was something altogether new. To my knowledge I do not know of any other standing committee established by Parliament which has proceeded to hire lawyers, accountants or other professional help.

Objection was raised to this proposal. The matter was discussed in the committee and put to a vote and it was decided that counsel and an accountant would be hired. So the Committee proceeded with professional help. At the first meeting I inquired as to what remuneration these people would receive and these are their rates of pay. Mr. Urie, who was hired as counsel to the committee, was to be paid $250 per day.

Mr. Herridge: Shocking.

Mr. Hales: In addition, he was to be paid $25 per hour for preparation time—

Mr. Herridge: Disgraceful.

Mr. Hales: —or for time he spent on the work of the committee over and above attending the committee. The other gentleman, Mr. L'Heureux, was paid on the basis of $100 per day and $20 per hour for preparation time. I think this is outrageous, Mr. Speaker, and I believe the taxpayers of this country are not prepared to pay any such sums.

I object strenuously to the House adopting a resolution with such a provision in it. In my opinion it is outrageous. Let us compare such remuneration with that received by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), for example. If he works 300 days a year he only makes $143 a day compared with this counsel who is being paid $250 a day. If there is any doubt about the outrageousness of these fees, one only needs to ask the hon. Members on the Government side of the House who were members of this committee. I think each and every one of them will object to the outrageous fees that have been paid to these two men.

I think they would also agree that their presence had a deteriorating influence on the operations of the committee. When you have a paid official in a committee the members are inclined to say, "Well, why should I take any active part? He is paid $250 a day to do the work. Why should I do any research?" Therefore members do not take the same interest in the committee. There were occasions when matters arose in the committee and the counsel was doing all the speaking. I must say that the accountant hardly ever spoke.

I did not hear him speak during the time I was there. However, there were times when counsel spoke, and he took an altogether different viewpoint from that of the committee. I do not believe this displayed a true picture of the thinking of the committee.

These are some of the objections I have to this clause in this resolution. Now, just to keep the record straight, the committee held 18 meetings during the last session. Mr. Urie completed 170½ hours of preparation time and Mr. L'Heureux completed 52¾ hours of preparation time. The total for counsel amounted to $6,350.55, up to and including February 22. Mr. L'Heureux received $1,855, up to and including the same date. I have therefore, Mr. Speaker, the strongest objection of having this resolution go through in this form. I request the Minister to withdraw that clause and let this committee operate on its own so that any report would be a true expression of the committee. This move would save the taxpayers of this country in the vicinity of $8,200. This is utterly ridiculous, and I am sure there are other Members in the House who would like to support me in this objection.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I was going to begin by saying that I wanted to commend the Government for bringing forward this resolution. I cannot commend them, however, for bringing forward the resolution at this late date when the House is likely to adjourn within the next couple of weeks and when this House has been meeting now for almost two months. This resolution calls for the reconstitution of the Joint Committee of the House and the Senate to deal with consumer credit. The committee met last year on a number of occasions and was just well into its work when the House adjourned.

[Mr. Hales.]

Over the years, because there have been so many private Members' bills from all parties in this House attempting to amend the laws of Canada to put some control on the outright robbery which is being perpetrated on the consumers of Canada by various business organizations, this committee was suggested. I am not suggesting for a moment that the vast majority of business organizations in Canada are not legitimate operations. However, there are many organizations coming under federal and provincial jurisdiction that have been fleecing the public high, wide and handsome. It was because of this feeling that Members on all sides felt we should do something, so this committee was set up. I think it is regrettable that the committee has lost two months when it could have been working. The committee has a lot of work to do, many people to hear and many organizations to hear. If it is going to do the job it will have to consult with Provincial Governments.

A number of Provinces, such as the Province of Manitoba from which I come, the Provinces of Ontario and Nova Scotia, as well as others which I cannot think of at the moment, have been looking at the question of consumer credit in great detail. The committee of the Ontario Legislature brought in its report last week and made some very sweeping recommendations. If we are going to do something, Mr. Speaker, to protect the public, then we are going to have to dovetail legislation which will be passed by the Parliament of Canada with legislation that will be passed by the Provinces.

Now, I want to take issue with the Member who just spoke on behalf of the Official Opposition concerning the necessity and the virtue of the committee having expert advice. I agree that the rates at which the accountant and legal counsel were paid sound large. However, this is a separate matter. I think the committee ought to have a good, hard look at that. I served on that committee for a good part of its deliberations. The committee is faced at every meeting with a whole group of expert counsel. I am sure they are paid more than the committee paid the one lawyer and the one accountant who were hired by the committee. The retail credit organizations, the department store organizations all these organizations had their legal counsel there, and they were all there for the definite purpose of trying to convince the committee we ought not to have legislation of this type. They tried to impress upon the committee that fact, that it was impossible, and it would be a disaster—while they did not say for them, that is what they meant—for the committee to recommend and for Parliament to pass legislation which would require the disclosure of the true interest rate. We had a whole series of lawyers and accountants before the committee telling the committee why it should not be done, why it could not be done and why you could not disclose an exact figure for the interest rate.

I want to say, as one who served on that committee, that the committee counsel and accountant served a very useful purpose. I should like to give one small illustration. The accountant was able to develop an exact formula for showing people the exact rate of interest in percentage that they would be paying. The representatives of the financial organizations which appeared before the committee were saying it was impossible to do this. This one statement by the accountant, if that is the only statement he makes for the duration of the committee, will be well worth what he is paid.

The same is true of counsel. The last speaker said this cost the taxpayers of Canada some $8,000. If the committee does a job, if the committee reports to the House on the advisability of such legislation and if the House adopts such legislation, then I submit that the taxpayers of Canada, the consumers of Canada, will save millions of dollars. The expenditure of a few thousand dollars, even if it should be two, three or five times the amount which has already been paid, will be well worth while. I want to say again, as I said when I started discussing this matter, that I am expressing no opinion on the actual amount the committee agreed to pay the lawyer and the accountant. I think that should be looked at. Speaking as a layman who has never been able to earn that amount of money, it sounds a little high to me. However, I say that the principle of hiring expert advisers is a good one which I hope other committees will follow in the future. If they do, then Committees of the House will be able to make reports which will be of value to the House and value to the country as a whole. I hope this joint committee will get going. Before we adjourn for the summer recess, if there is to be one, the steering Committee will be able to map out the next series of witnesses to appear. If there is no recess, I hope the committee will proceed very shortly to finish its work and bring in a report so that Parliament can finally enact legislation which is so necessary to protect the buying public.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the re-establishment of the Committee on Consumer Credit. For a long time the public has been concerned about the procedures used in some financial transactions, and is aware of the need for a study into consumer buying. It is unfortunate that so much of the session has gone by before reaching this motion. Valuable time has been lost.

Reference has been made to the committee counsel and accountant, and the suggestion was made that we should not pass the resolution in its present form. However, I do not see anything in it to indicate how much these gentlemen are to be paid. The committee engages its own staff, and therefore I support its re-establishment so that it can get to work immediately.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I too support the resolution and agree with others who have said it is unfortunate that the session is so far advanced before re-appointing the Committee. It is a Committee which has a very heavy task, and its work and findings will be followed with great interest by the consuming public, particularly by those who have to resort to credit in order to buy the things they require.

I support the hon. Member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) about the amount paid to counsel. Are we losing all sense of values in our society, paying $250 a day for counsel for a committee like this, and $25 an hour for preparation? Compare that with what a university professor gets, or a farmer, or a skilled workman. People who charge this sort of fee are sucking the blood of our society, and in my opinion are not making a worthwhile contribution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: I am glad to see I get some support from the Government benches, including from some of my legal friends. Officials from the staff of the Department of Justice could be used for this purpose.

The hon. Member for Wellington South suggested the resolution should not be adopted because of the fees paid to counsel and accountants, but I agree with the hon. Member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) that we should pass the resolution. It is entirely up to the committee, whom they employ and the amount they are willing to pay; but I trust the committee will take note of what has been said in this debate.

Turning to the question of accountants, in my experience accountants are very necessary in the society in which we live. They are the ones who do the exact thinking, who make the precise decision which can be of great interest to all persons, particularly those who have to pay income tax and things like that. Accountants play an important role in our society and, as pointed out by the hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), one of the accountants who appeared before the committee—in passing, they are not paid nearly as much as members of the legal profession—made an important submission which might save a great deal for the Canadian consumer.

Before resuming my seat, once again I protest the exorbitant fees paid to counsel in Canada because I think they are entirely unnecessary in relation to the services they perform in our society.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not think we should rush passage of this resolution, for two good reasons. It has been brought forward as a filler because we completed the list of items the Government had placed before us, which shows our anxiety to cooperate and get on with the business. It would appear as if the Government were not ready to go ahead with something it could announce a day or a week before.

The second reason is that suggestions have been given tonight which would warrant second thoughts by the Government with regard to the resolution. Important as it is to reconstitute the committee, the session is possibly drawing to a close. The other House does not appear to be meeting. I do not hear any faint noises from the other part of the Parliament buildings and it might not be possible to get the committee set up quickly.

Objections have been expressed to the committee appointing its own counsel and accountants. These are valid objections. The competent Civil Service that Canada possesses should be able to provide all the skilled personnel required for this type of work, whether from the Department of Justice, the Department of Trade and Commerce or the Department of Industry. I could name half a dozen members of the Civil Service who would give competent advice and assistance to the committee without the employment of outside assistance.

May I call it ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacNaught: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we will take up the second reading of Bill No. C-123, an act to provide for the disposition of Indian claims, and the second reading of Bill No. C-124, an act respecting the construction of a line of railway by the C.N.R. near Sarnia, Ontario. Then we will consider three resolutions; first, the resolution preceding the introduction of a measure to amend the Children of War Dead Act, the resolution preceding the introduction of a measure to amend the Army Benevolent Fund Act, and the resolution preceding the introduction of a measure to amend the Judges Act, to provide salaries for additional judges of the Supreme Court of Ontario, etc. Then we will take up second reading of Bill No. C-118, an act to amend the Income Tax Act and the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act. Then, if there is any time left over, we will take up the resolution preceding the introduction of a measure to amend the Research Council Act, and the resolution preceding the introduction of a measure to establish a Science Council of Canada.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, once again I draw to the attention of the Acting House Leader that those two items which he mentioned were not included in the list which the Prime Minister gave us on June 9.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, I would draw attention to the first paragraph of the statement of the Prime Minister, wherein he said that the business he was then outlining was "subject of course to the usual reservation that there may be emergencies which will change the order and indeed change the matters brought before the House".

Mr. Churchill: Emergencies, yes.

Mr. MacNaught: There is some necessity to get these resolutions through so that the bills can be introduced and read the first time.

Mr. Winkler: You want us here to September, again.

Mr. Knowles: In this connection, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there seems to be parliamentary time about which the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) was worried this afternoon, why cannot the Government now bring in the amendment to the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act, so that it can be passed before July 1?

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Provisional Standing Order 39A deemed to have been moved.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING INSTRUCTIONS IN WIRE TAPPING

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to discuss the answer which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) gave to a question of mine last week in respect of the use by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police of wire tapping and electronic equipment. The Minister's statement was very clear; when you strip away the legal phraseology, the Minister said in effect that the R.C.M.P. does not carry on wire tapping in this country.

I do not believe that the Minister of Justice would knowingly misinform the House of Commons. I must therefore believe, on the basis of evidence I have, that the R.C.M.P. is not telling the Minister of Justice the real facts of what goes on in this country. I want to deal tonight, because my time is very limited, with only one illustration. On February 13, 1965, the Toronto Globe and Mail carried a story the headline of which was "Wiretap Set Up for Lamontagne-Rouleau Call: R.C.M.P. Officer". The story is dated Ottawa and the first paragraph says:

> An inspector of the R.C.M.P. told the Dorion inquiry yesterday that arrangements were made last August to tap a telephone conversation between Pierre Lamontagne and Guy Rouleau, then Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister Lester Pearson.

I am not here to defend Mr. Rouleau but I think, like an American Supreme Court Justice, that wire tapping is a dirty business and ought to be prohibited. I also think the Minister of Justice should tell the House what really goes on. I asked the question about this after that news story appeared, and the answer I got was that the R.C.M.P. did not and does not tap wires in order to listen in to telephone conversations. So after a great deal of difficulty I got a transcript of the hearings of the Dorion Commission of February 12, 1965, and I want to put on the record in the few minutes available to me the exchange of questions by one of the counsel, Paul Jolin, and the answers given by Inspector J. R. R. Carriere of the R.C.M.P. I will give the page number so that the Parliamentary Secretary can check this later. On page 4808 appears this question by Mr. Jolin:

> —is it accurate that it is you who have suggested or have insisted with Mr. Lamontagne in order to detail somebody to listen to the conversation, or is it not rather Mr. Lamontagne who asked you to send someone?
> A. It is I that called Mr. Lamontagne, having been requested to do so by Inspector Drapeau.
> Q. Is it you who have taken the necessary steps in order to have the conversation taped?
>
> A. No. My instructions were to ex-Sergeant Crevier to listen to the conversation on an extension line.
> Q. Has anyone to your knowledge taken other necessary steps to have the conversation recorded?
> A. The only knowledge that I have of that was that on a previous occasion, on the 11th, I believe, I had sent Sergeant Crevier with specific instructions to record—

It says "record"; I want to underline that.

> —a telephone conversation which was presumed to be—which was believed to be in the offing at eight p.m. that evening. The conversation did not take place. Therefore there was no recording made.

> Q. Mr. Carriere, do you presently have at your disposal, or did you at that time have, that is to say did you have at your disposal the necessary technical means to tape amongst other things telephone conversations?
> A. Yes.
> Q. Were at that time the facilities available to you?
> A. Yes, there were.

Then at page 4816:

> Q. It was possible then. Were the instructions that you received from your superiors to the effect that Mr. Crevier was to listen to the conversation on another line or on another telephone?
> A. No, there was a request from Inspector Drapeau to cover a telephone conversation which was going to take place between Raymond Denis and Lawyer Lamontagne.
> Q. M. Carriere, does the word "cover", in your mind, simply mean that M. Crevier was to sit beside another telephone and listen to the conversation, or could it not also have meant: tape the ongoing conversation?
> A. It could mean either, either to listen or to record it.

At page 4817:

> Q. Would not Mr. Carriere have been in a position to instal your equipment the preceding day or during the night?
> A. No, that would have been impossible because I was not aware of that coming conversation until that morning, possibly nine-thirty, ten o'clock.

And so on, and so forth, Mr. Speaker.

I point out again that this is an official record of answers given by the Inspector of the R.C.M.P. who worked on the Rivard case, who said at the public hearing before

Mr. Justice Dorion that the R.C.M.P. was preparing to record the conversation which they expected to take place between Mr. Lamontagne and Mr. Rouleau, and that they had the equipment to do it.

I would repeat what I said on other occasions. I am opposed to wire tapping. But surely if it is necessary, and the law enforcement agencies of this country believe it is necessary, then they ought not to hide the fact that it is done. They should not lie to the public or to this House but should ask the Minister to bring in the legislation which is required.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, what the hon. Member for Winnipeg North has put on the record this evening is very useful. I would suggest that hon. Members should also consider a statement made by the Hon. R. A. Walker, the former Attorney General of Saskatchewan, of the C.C.F.-N.D.P. Government, and in this respect I am glad to see the hon. Member for Burnaby-Coquitlam here this evening. As hon. Members will recall, what the hon. Member described was not a wire tap but a recording. In fact, it was the same practice used by the Government over which the hon. Member for Burnaby-Coquitlam presided when he was Premier of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Douglas: That is not true.

Mr. Macdonald: Then in that event, if the hon. Member will listen, I should like to read a statement made by the former Attorney General of Saskatchewan, Hon. Robert Walker, as reported in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix for December 17, 1964. This is a brief quotation from the statement by Mr. Walker. He says, first of all:

> The Liberals tried to make an issue of a certain tape recorder on my office telephone when I was Attorney-General.

Then he goes on:

> First of all, it was a recorder, not a wire tap on someone else's telephone, as was inferred. Secondly, it was not illegal, as implied by Mr. Pinder.

In other words, what the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were doing in this case was exactly the same as the action taken by the hon. gentleman's former colleague in Saskatchewan. They were making a recording. It was not a wire tap without the consent of the person owning the telephone, but rather a recording. On that thesis the facts cited by the hon. Member for Winnipeg North are exactly identical with this statement.

Mr. Orlikow: That does not make it right.

Mr. Douglas: No, that is not right.

Mr. Macdonald: The hon. Member for Burnaby-Coquitlam says this is not so. I would remind the hon. gentleman that this statement was made by Mr. Walker, and I read from the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, which says that:

> The following statement by R. A. Walker... was marked "news release—not to be released before 8 p.m."...

This was a direct quotation from Mr. Walker.

Mr. Douglas: On what date?

Mr. Macdonald: December 16, 1964.

CANADA LABOUR CODE—APPLICATION OF MINIMUM WAGE TO FEDERAL WORK UNDER CONTRACT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to discuss the policy of the Minister of Labour in respect to extending the basic provisions of the new Canada Labour Code to all individuals who, in my opinion, come under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government even though not legally, at this time.

The Minister of Labour is very proud of the Labour Code, and so he should be, although I do not think he is right in accepting all the credit for it as suggested in a recent ad which cost the Canadian people tens of thousands of dollars.

There is a large number of people in Canada who work for the Federal Government but who are not today, and will not for the next three months, be receiving the minimum provided under the Code. I should like to summarize my position by reading from that famous ad which some of us thought included a picture of the Minister, but decided on a second look that it is not a picture but a good drawing of him. In any event there is no question that it is the Minister of Labour who was interviewed for the purposes of this ad. This is also clear as a result of the heading which states "Canada's New Labour Code, Hon. Allen MacEachen, Minister of Labour, answers some questions:". The question is: "Let's get down to specifics. What, exactly, does it promise to those employees who are affected by it?" The Minister's answer is:

As we said, it sets minimum standards—and I stress that these are minimum, because, of course, a lot of workers already enjoy higher standards than the Code sets.

First, it sets a standard 8 hour day and a 40 hour week, with overtime limited to 8 hours a week and paid for at time-and-a-half.

Second, it sets the minimum wage rate for all men and women over 17 years of age at $1.25 an hour.

I do not intend to read further because that is all I am concerned with at the present time. Many hundreds and thousands of Canadians, I believe, work on jobs in respect of which tenders have been submitted by private industry and contracts awarded by the Department of Public Works. For example, the company which was doing the cleaning at Gander airport was organized by The International Association of Machinists. That organization held the contract for several years, as a result of which the Machinists Union negotiated and received $1.52½ per hour for its workers. Recently the Department of Transport called for new tenders, as it has a right to do. The bid submitted by the company which had held the contract was circumscribed because of the fact that it had to bid on the basis of paying $1.52½ per hour. The company which received the contract was able to bid on the basis of 10 per cent less because it intended to pay its workers $1.10 per hour, or 42½ cents per hour less.

It is not my intention tonight to blame the Minister because the necessary legislation to include these workers under the Labour Code has not been forthcoming. In spite of the fact that this complementary legislation has not been presented—as the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) suggested—it seems to me that whatever the reasons are that this legislation has not been presented, it is a very simple matter for the Government, if it is honest, sincere and really wants to set a minimum of $1.25 to instruct all Government departments, in respect of any contracts that are to be let, to specify, as they specify in respect of all sorts of other contracts, that no company will receive a contract from the Federal Government unless it agrees to pay the minimum rate of $1.25 per hour.

That is all that the Government has to do. The Minister of Labour, who has such deep sympathy for the working people of this country, knows that the working people of the Martime Provinces in particular are the lowest paid in Canada. The Minister comes from Cape Breton and knows what it means to live on the miserable substandard wages which the workers of the Maritimes and some other areas get. I am sure that the Minister of Labour, in view of this knowledge of these conditions, will impress on his colleagues in the Cabinet the need for putting this kind of regulation into effect right away so that we do not have to wait until September, October or November of 1965 or possibly even later for those who do work for the Federal Government, even though they are not hired by the Federal Government, to get the same minimum wage as all workers hired directly by the Federal Government or who come under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government's Labour Code.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the interest that the hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and earlier the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) have taken in amendments to the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act. The hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre has in previous years introduced a bill with regard to conditions for employees in federal industries. Such a bill was on the order paper at the last session, but as I recall it did not contain any provision for the extension of the principles to employees under federal contract—

Mr. Knowles: The expenditure of money is involved. A private Member could not do it.

Mr. MacEachen: —although it is apparent that the principles of the Canada Labour Code could hardly be applied without taking the other step and amending the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act to cover federal contracts.

In many instances, of course, employees under federal contracts are normally under provincial jurisdiction, certainly with regard to labour relations, and the only reason that the Federal Government can stipulate wages and hours conditions is simply that the Government can stipulate the conditions under which it awards contracts. One of the really difficult problems in considering how to apply the principles of the Canada Labour Code to employees operating under federal contracts arises because federal contractors in most instances are operating under conditions of a more local character and are influenced by market conditions of a more local nature than are industries that are under federal jurisdiction and operate certainly nationally and interprovincially.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Minister's time has expired.

Mr. Knowles: Come back again tomorrow night. It will be on again.

EDUCATION—NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR INCREASED GRANTS TO UNIVERSITIES

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I know it is 20 minutes after ten o'clock but I wish to discuss tonight the problem of the financial emergency facing universities in Canada in general and in particular those in Nova Scotia and the other Maritime Provinces. Under the present federal university grants formula which has been in existence for some years a very great injustice is being done to provinces which, because of the quality of their universities, are able to attract students in great numbers from outside their own provincial borders. I am sure all hon. Members will agree that it is in the interests of Canadian unity and Canadian nationality that our universities should not become strictly provincial in scope and outlook with regard to the area from which they are to draw their students. The present formula, I contend, forces upon universities and Provincial Governments such an attitude because under the present formula federal grants to universities are based on the population of the province rather than the student population. We find a situation wherein, in Nova Scotia, the amount per student is $183 per year, compared to the universities in Ontario which receive $282 per student per year. So, you see there is a difference of just $99 extra being paid to universities for each student in Ontario as compared to Nova Scotia. Of course, you find these figures vary between the various Provinces. British Columbia is the second worst done by province after Nova Scotia, and they receive only $194 per student per year. I suggest that this is an extremely unfair formula and must be revised very quickly.

I am aware that the Bladen Commission is presently investigating the revision of the formula. I am hopeful that they will come forth with some answer that will provide recognition to the provinces which have, through the quality of their universities, been able to attract students from outside their provincial boundaries. I want to say that in the Province of Nova Scotia the problem is twofold. There is not only the question of imported students coming from other areas, but in addition there is the problem of exported graduates. You will find there is a sizeable proportion of the student graduates from universities in Nova Scotia going forth to take prominent positions in other parts of this country. We have seen graduates from our universities, who represent other areas in Canada, who have subsequently become Prime Ministers and Premiers of Provinces. I believe there are recent examples. We have seen graduates who have become Cabinet Ministers in other parts of the country, captains of industry and in general men who have played very prominent parts in the life of other provinces. In effect, therefore, the Province of Nova Scotia has been subsidizing other provinces by educating these people and then sending them forth. These are two factors which I think should be given consideration in considering a new formula.

I want to say that while we must wait for the Bladen Commission report, it is a fact that at the moment the Federal Government is spending about one third of 1 per cent of federal expenditures on direct grants to higher education. I believe that just is not good enough. Our universities today have only one controlled source of revenue, and that is tuition fees. If they do not receive greater grants from the federal and provincial governments the only way they can find the money they must have is to put the squeeze upon hard-pressed students, who I think already pay enough to get an education. We in the Maritime Provinces area feel that before the Bladen report comes out the present grants should be upgraded. As you know, they are based on university costs of operating, and operating expenditures for the year 1962.

The previous Government, in fairness I must say, twice upgraded the amount of the grant. I feel that even while the Bladen Commission is investigating the formula it should be changed. There is no reason why the Government could not now, as an interim measure, base the grants on 1965 costs and thus increase the amount. This is in consideration of the fact, we are told by eminent authorities, that there is a 16 per cent annual increase in operating costs of universities in this country.

We in the Maritimes take education very seriously. We consider universities an industry, and they have been an important industry, an industry which is well suited for an area in which it is sometimes difficult to get other types of industry. If we cannot receive from the Federal Government, through these grants in the future an amount that is equal to the assistance that is desperately needed by these universities, then we must think in terms of asking the Atlantic Development Board for such assistance.

It should not be necessary to do this. Nevertheless we might have to think in terms of turning to the Atlantic Development Board to seek assistance in providing the ability for our universities to continue with the fine work they have been doing across the years.

I suggest it is important and crucial in the Maritimes at present, and in Nova Scotia in particular, and that our universities are in desperate need of new funds. I hope the Government will consider this very serious matter.

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no one is under any illusion that financial assistance to the universities is not a matter of fundamental importance, it is scarcely necessary for me to say that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) has responded to a number of questions over the past few weeks similar in nature to the one posed by the hon. Member for Halifax (Mr. Regan). I should also point out that the hon. Member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather) made a very useful statement on the same subject a few weeks ago.

I would underscore that the Minister of Finance, in a statement to the House last Friday, pointed out that he expects this whole question of financial assistance to universities to be on the agenda of the Federal-Provincial Conference that will commence on July 19. I should also reiterate that the Minister has indicated that upon receipt of the Bladen report the Government will take such action as is deemed necessary in the light of that report.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 22, 1965

The House met at 2.30 p.m.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1965-66

A Message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting Supplementary Estimates (B) for the financial year ending March 31, 1966, was presented by Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Deputy Speaker to the House, and referred to the Committee of Supply.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

FIRST AND SECOND REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance) presented the first and second reports of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and moved that the first report be concurred in.

[Note: Text of foregoing reports appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we object because the house is asked to sit at the same time as the committees and there are always irresponsible members who accuse others of not attending committee meetings when they are actually present in the house. As a matter of fact, the member for Saint Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Chrétien) has charged certain members with not attending certain committee meetings while they were actually in the house. We are, therefore, recording our objection.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I remember that we always objected, while in opposition, to the sitting of the committees when the house was sitting. I objected to it then and I still object to it today. I know that nevertheless the house will pass this motion, but I intend to voice my objection to the committees sitting while the house is in session.

We are a minority government. We need all our votes, and when we send members to the committees we cannot depend on them especially when the house itself is in committee. Therefore, I object to the sitting of the committees when the house itself is sitting.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: On division.

[English]

Motion agreed to, on division.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION ON COMMONWEALTH PEACE MISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of reports that Prime Minister Wilson may withdraw as Chairman of the Commonwealth Peace Mission because of Chinese criticism, and since this would remove the only NATO member from the mission, is the Government giving consideration to having Canada represented by its Prime Minister whose interest in this matter has been evident from the very beginning?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. gentleman that the Prime Minister has demonstrated an interest in this matter from the beginning. However, I cannot make any other comment at this time.

Mr. Starr: As a supplementary question may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the Prime Minister has been approached in the past 24 hours to be a member of this mission?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There were suggestions last week that he should be a member of the mission, and I gave my hon. friend then the reasons that prompted his discouragement of the idea at that time. But I cannot reply at the moment with any certainty in regard to the last aspect of my hon. friend's question, and I must take it as notice.

VIET NAM—TELEGRAM TO PRIME MINISTER FROM UNIVERSITY PROFESSORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Is he in a position today to table the text of the telegram that 72 Canadian professors sent to the Prime Minister with regard to the situation in Viet Nam, together with the text of the Prime Minister's reply?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I said yesterday that I had seen the telegram. The telegram was sent to London. I had not seen the telegram but it was read to me over the phone from London, and just as quickly as I get the text I will send it to my hon. friend.

TRADE

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON EXPORT PROSPECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the report issued yesterday by the Board of Grain Commissioners which shows that at the end of May our exports of wheat were down by 100 million bushels compared with the previous crop year, does the Minister anticipate that exports of wheat for this full crop year will be close to the exports for last year, or does he expect a heavy decline in total exports of Canadian wheat?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions I have reported to the House my expectation that this would be the second largest year on record. I would expect, however, that this second largest year would be considerably short of 1963-64, an extraordinary crop year. In 1963-64 exports were of the order of 600 million bushels, and I expect that if we can reach our second largest year they should be something over 400 million bushels.

Mr. Douglas: Does the Minister mean he expects to have nearly 200 million bushels exported in the months of June and July? May I rephrase the question. The report yesterday showed at the end of May the export of some 311 million bushels. Does the Minister think we can reach the 500 million bushels he is now predicting by the end of July?

Mr. Sharp: The hon. Member misunderstood me. I said 400 million bushels was our objective, which would be the second largest year in history.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DORION REPORT—R.C.M.P. REPORT ON ALLEGED LEAK OF CONTENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): May I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Have the preliminary investigations conducted by the R.C.M.P. indicated whether there has been a leak of the contents of the Dorion Commission report? Perhaps he could also tell the House if now, with the accelerated translation and other activities this report can be printed somewhat sooner than was indicated yesterday.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it will be recalled that the Prime Minister indicated on Sunday at a press conference that he hoped the report could be published as quickly as possible. I mentioned this to the Chief Justice yesterday morning, and he told me everything was being done to issue it as quickly as possible but that this would not be before the end of the week. I need not remind my hon. friend of course, that control of this matter is in the hands of the Royal Commissioner, as it should be.

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN—REQUEST FOR EASTERN MARKETING BOARD

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Forestry.

Can the minister tell us when a feed grain agency will be set up, as was requested by the Fédération canadienne de l'agriculture and the Union catholique des cultivateurs?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): I have already stated, Mr. Speaker, that this policy was announced in the Speech from the Throne. I announced a feed grain policy and said that in due course the government would advise the house of its policy.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister. Can he tell us if this matter is part of the government's emergency measures and if we can expect this agency to be set up during the next session?

Mr. Sauvé: The Prime Minister announced last week the legislative program for the coming weeks; it will depend on what progress is made.

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Forestry?

Can the Minister tell us if it is true that several cabinet members object to the establishment of a feed grains agency for eastern Canada and whether that was the reason for his Drummondville speech?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Later:]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

In order to avoid useless and disastrous controversy between Eastern and Western farmers, which controversy would prevent the report of the Special Committee on Feed Grains from giving rise to legislation, would the Minister tell the house if the Canadian Wheat Board has made serious objections to establishing a feed grain agency for Eastern Canada?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board is not a member of Cabinet. I have no objection to a feed grain agency for eastern Canada.

PROPOSED CONFERENCE ON DROUGHT CONDITIONS IN OTTAWA VALLEY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, in reply to a question that was put yesterday concerning the assistance the government intends to give farmers in trouble, the Minister said he would answer today.

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Responsibility for applications made to the federal government concerning assistance rests with the provincial authorities. There have been some discussions between the provincial authorities of Ontario and the Minister of Agriculture, as reported in Hansard of June 10. The government is prepared to enter discussions with any other provincial government under the same circumstances.

Besides, the hon. member has probably read the following in today's Journal: "The federal government will share the cost of rain making . . . ". There have been no official requests on the part of the provincial authorities of Ontario.

Mr. Martineau: Could the minister tell us whether there were any consultations with the representatives of the Quebec Government?

Mr. Sauvé: Not recently, as far as I know.

Mr. Martineau: Does the federal Government intend to take action on its own initiative with the provincial Governments in this case?

Mr. Sauvé: The Government cannot do that. The request must come from the provincial authorities.

Mr. Speaker: May I point out to the hon. members that there have been already five or six supplementary questions? They will probably have the opportunity to raise the question once more in a few minutes.

[English]

TOBACCO—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO ONTARIO MARKETING BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to direct to the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence perhaps I may direct it to the Minister of Finance. Has the Government as yet reached any decision with respect to the recent request of the Ontario flue-cured tobacco growers marketing board for certain urgent financial assistance?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very flattered to be called upon to answer a question which otherwise might have been directed to my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, and I will be very pleased to look into this matter and do my best to reply in a day or two.

EGGS—PROPOSED IMPORTATION FROM UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Acting Prime Minister?

Inquiries of the Ministry

In a statement made in London by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), he indicated that he wished to allow the export of eggs from Great Britain to Canada. Would the Acting Prime Minister give assurance to the house that there shall not be any import into Canada of eggs from Great Britain since egg producers in Canada are now faced with over-production?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I think the best thing would be for me to examine the statement first. Then I would be in a better position to give a precise answer.

[English]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): A supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister with regard to the question asked by my colleague. I think this matter of the Minister of Agriculture anticipating the import of eggs from Britain is extremely important, because of the black outlook for egg producers in Canada—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please; order.

BICULTURALISM AND BILINGUALISM

VISIT TO YUGOSLAVIA BY DELEGATION OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House whether he is yet in a position to answer the question I put to him several times this week and last week?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I may not be able to answer it completely. There is a conference on cultural problems being held in Yugoslavia. This conference is not in any way under the auspices of the Canadian Commission on Biculturalism. If there is confusion on this point, it may be responsible in some measure for the impression my hon. friend may have had. Consideration is now being given as to whether there will be Canadian representation at that conference. I believe my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is looking into this matter. We hope to be able to confer later in the day and perhaps complete this answer.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, when that conference takes place perhaps the Acting Prime Minister might be able to bring an answer back to the House as to whether any part of the organization of the B and B Commission will be attending this meeting.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is an aspect we are looking into.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SASKATCHEWAN—MATERIAL TAKEN FROM DISMANTLED RADAR SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Associate Minister of National Defence. Is it true that seizures and prosecutions are now taking place in the Beauval area of Saskatchewan with regard to materials that were taken from the Fort Black radar site situated close to Beauval? After demolition of the site had taken place by the destruction crew I understand the settlers were told to help themselves by members of that crew. Is it the intention of the Government now to take proceedings against these settlers who were misinformed?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I suggest this is a question that should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, an investigation by the R.C.M.P. is now going on in that area, and I think the people should know. The question is urgent and should be answered. My last question on the order paper lay there for six weeks, and in view of the fact that action by the R.C.M.P. is now being taken in this area I think the question is urgent.

I would like an answer to my question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. Member would rephrase his question it might be reconsidered by the Chair.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Will the Minister see to it that all proceedings are stopped at this point until his department has had time to investigate the whole matter?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): I should first have to ascertain whether this matter comes under the jurisdiction of National Defence or the Defence Production Department. I will certainly look into it, and if proceedings have been initiated I will see that they are stopped for the time being.

EXPO '67

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF EXPENDITURES BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. I should like to ask him whether the Government is now willing to give consideration to the setting up of a special committee to investigate expenditures in connection with Expo '67 in view of the answer which was tabled for me yesterday, showing that expenditures had risen from a commitment of $20 million to more than $64 million as of today.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I have not had an opportunity to examine the return to which the hon. Member has referred. I am sure we are all confident that Expo '67 is going to be one of the greatest events in Canadian history. I am sure, too, that all Members will want to see that it becomes one of the greatest expositions of all time. I think the hon. Member may be able to satisfy his understandable interest and curiosity by putting questions to the Minister of Trade and Commerce when his estimates are before the Committee of the Whole, and I think he will find that the Minister will ably and responsibly deal with the questions which concern him.

Mr. Coates: I would like to say to the Acting Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

HUMAN RIGHTS

POSSIBLE VIOLATION OF BILL OF RIGHTS BY B.C. POWER BILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. I have not sent him notice, but I am in a bit of a hurry today. I trust I may phrase the question correctly in accordance with the rules.

An hon. Member: Ask it, then.

Mr. Herridge: Has the Minister of Justice obtained advice from the law officers of the Crown as to whether a bill passed by the British Columbia legislature entitled an act to incorporate the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority violates any of the provisions of the Bill of Rights?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I will have to inquire. I will take the question as notice.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION OF WORLD WAR I OVERSEAS REQUIREMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria, B.C.): My question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the Minister received a letter dated June 19 from the Canadian Corps Association asking that the 365 day overseas requirement applying to World War I veterans in respect of war veterans allowance be cancelled; and is the Minister in a position to say whether this is being considered?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Groos: Or would the Minister consider recommending—

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. Perhaps we might allow the hon. Member to complete the question.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member asking the question is perfectly aware that this letter was addressed to all Members of Parliament.

Mr. Groos: The letter was addressed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

An hon. Member: How did you get it, then?

Mr. Groos: I hear a lot of noise from the Opposition. Obviously they do not realize how important this matter is to World War I veterans.

Som hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Groos: Would the Minister consider recommending that the question be referred to the Veterans Affairs Committee for its consideration?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is a question for the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the commitment which the Minister made in this House to the effect that he would introduce veterans legislation before the summer recess, may I ask him whether the two items now standing on the order paper are the extent of that commitment, or is he going to take into consideration the report submitted by the committee on Veterans Affairs handed to him in the fall of 1963, in which the 365 day clause was brought up and which was mentioned previously by the hon. Member for Victoria, B.C. Is the Minister going to consider this before the summer recess?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): In answering a similar question a few days ago I indicated that there were two other bills to be brought forward. I am hoping they will be on the notice paper either today or tomorrow.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—ADDRESS TO HER MAJESTY RESPECTING PROVINCIAL CONSTITUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is addressed to the Acting Prime Minister. It is this. In view of the widespread concern about a constitutional issue of great importance, has the Government reconsidered the question of submitting to Parliament a resolution dealing with the address to the Queen seeking an amendment to the British North America Act limiting the power of the Legislative Council of Quebec? Is the Government reconsidering bringing this measure before Parliament?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I made a comprehensive statement the other day, and I see no reason to make any modification in it.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question. As I understand it, the other day the Minister suggested that the matter might be brought before the House on a supply motion. Suppose the Official Opposition do not choose to carry out this particular procedure, does that mean the rest of the Members of the House are not to have the opportunity of discussing this important constitutional issue?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think what the Prime Minister said was that there would be an opportunity given to the House to discuss this matter if it wished to do so. I suggested in my statement that we had in mind a supply motion for last Monday and Tuesday, and that it would be up to the Opposition to determine whether or not it wished to discuss this matter. Then because the Leader of the Opposition, an important officer of this House, had firm commitments previously made, an effort was made to accommodate him and that was done. I point out to the resourceful and intelligent Member who raised this question that there are procedures which are open to any Member who is ingenious enough to think of them.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Perhaps he might cast his mind back —and I invite him to do so—to the time when he frothed with indignation that the Government should ever dictate to the Opposition the choice of a subject for a supply motion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I always look ahead.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether this means that the Government has decided not to submit this matter to Parliament of its own volition?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I made a statement last Tuesday when I dealt with this question—

Mr. Lambert: Answer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and dealt with it quite thoroughly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF SUMMER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the President of the Privy Council. Several weeks ago the Prime Minister indicated that some time in advance of the summer recess the Government would announce the date they would like to rise. I wonder whether the President of the Privy Council as House Leader thinks this would be a suitable day to announce that Friday would be an appropriate day to adjourn for the summer?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not able to make a firm commitment on that, but it is a wonderful idea.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

APPOINTMENT OF GRADUATE STUDENTS TO DEPARTMENTAL STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. It stems from a press release which arrived on my desk today which states that six graduate students in political science will be taken on the staff under a program of student internship. Reading on a little further it appears that five of the six students were selected from the Province of Quebec. My question is, why are these students not selected on a more geographical basis, especially when the Department of Northern Affairs has interests in other provinces?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I suggest this is perhaps a grievance, but I would not think it is the type of question which should be posed at this time.

Mr. Hales: Your Honour, I think the Minister has an answer to this question and I should like to hear it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

ROYAL VISIT

INVITATION TO QUEEN MOTHER TO VISIT QUEBEC CITY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister.

In view of the visit to Canada of the Queen Mother of England, could the Acting Prime Minister tell the house whether the Premier of the province of Quebec sent her an invitation so that he could welcome her in the City of Quebec?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer immediately, but I will take this question as notice.

[English]

CONSUMER CREDIT

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING OF JOINT COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the consumer credit legislation now being considered by several provinces, can the Minister inform the House when the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons will be convened, so the Federal Government can play its part in this important legislation? I did give the Minister notice of this question.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe this resolution is now being discussed in this House.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE TAX REDUCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Since the Government of the United States is reported yesterday to have repealed $4.7 billion in excise taxes for the purpose of lowering prices, does the Minister or the Government have any plans to keep Canadian industry competitive by taking similar action; and would he consider repeal of the 11 per cent tax on building materials and production machinery as a suitable step in this direction?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might be permitted to congratulate my hon. friend on his perseverance.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Has the Government any other specific considerations under investigation so that a real attack can be made against the high cost of living which exists today?

Mr. Winkler: How dictatorial does the Government want to be?

Mr. Gordon: That question suggests to me that my hon. friend was perhaps thinking of going on a fishing trip with his leader.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the question just asked by the hon. Member, which indicated that excise taxes are being reduced by the United States Government, I should like to point out that this will affect the price of motor cars in the United States and will therefore widen the gap between Canada's price and the United States price. What does the Government intend to do in order to narrow this gap?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friends that this matter is being given very careful consideration.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question in view of the answer of the Minister of Finance. Is he aware of the article appearing in the Winnipeg Free Press for June 19 which pictures him along with five others in whose company he belongs, namely Hitler, Mussolini, Castro, Peron and Stalin—all of them dictators?

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

LOSS OF EMPLOYMENT THROUGH DEMOLITION OF ROXBOROUGH APARTMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, on June 16 the hon. Member for Kootenay West asked a question of my colleague the Minister of Labour concerning the employees of the Roxborough Apartments. This matter has been transferred to me for reply.

The employees of the Roxborough Apartments property have signed employment contracts ending September 30, 1965, with a two or three month bonus. In addition they will be paid 4 per cent holiday pay on leaving.

The National Capital Commission and the Department of Public Works are investigating the possibility of employing any of the persons concerned should vacancies arise on the Commission's staff or in the Department for which they would qualify. The Commission is further trying to help them with other departments of the Federal Government, particularly by advising the National Employment Service of the availability of these persons and seeking the full co-operation of the National Employment Service. The National Capital Commission, the Department of Public Works and the Department of Labour are doing everything possible to assist the employees of the Roxborough Apartments and of La Touraine restaurant to find suitable employment.

A list showing their names, birth dates, years of service, type of employment and present salary has been prepared and circulated to the Departments and agencies mentioned.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the employees directly concerned be advised of Government policy in this respect?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I presume the employees concerned are now aware that the Department of Public Works and the National Capital Commission are trying to find them employment.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING NEWSPAPERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Acting Prime Minister stated in reply to my question that he did not have the answer but would confer with the Minister of Finance. Today I should like to direct the question to the Minister of Finance and ask him whether, in view of the 50 minute conference that was held among himself, the Acting Prime Minister and representatives of the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association, the Government is now prepared to accede to the request made by them that the Government put off further action on the newspaper legislation until a better way is found to deal with this problem.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would prefer, if my hon. friend will bear with me, to deal with this question when the income tax bill is before the House, and I hope that will be before the afternoon is over.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister could give us an answer now I think it would save a great deal of time in the passage of this Bill.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHRÉTIEN—REMARKS IN DEBATE BY MEMBER FOR LAPOINTE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chrétien (St. Maurice-Laflèche): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

A few moments ago the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) said the member for St. Maurice-Laflèche was irresponsible because he happened to have stated that the said member had attended only four of the 21 meetings of the consumer credit committee and only two of the 25 meetings of the committee on banking and commerce. The hon. member for Lapointe said he was absent because the committees had met while the house was sitting. Now, Mr. Speaker, those two committees only met twice while the house was sitting.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, here is an instance of irresponsibility. He is irresponsible.

[English]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In respect of the proceedings now taking place, any question of this nature surely is out of order because it would necessitate some notice being given to the Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It has already been ruled out of order.

INDIAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, DUTIES, ETC.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-123, to provide for the disposition of Indian claims.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister would be happy to make a statement in this regard.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I do not agree that I am so happy about making a statement, but I did make certain commitments to the members of the committee who considered the resolution last night, and in fulfilment of these assurances, I think some remarks are appropriate at this time.

First I wish to thank the hon. Members who participated in the debate yesterday at the resolution stage of this bill. Needless to say I was encouraged by the unanimous expression of support of the resolution which came from all quarters of this House. That augurs well for the early passage and the success of this long overdue legislation.

As I said when I introduced the legislation yesterday, two joint committees of the two Houses of Parliament, one in the period 1946-48 and the other in the period 1959-61, after hearing the evidence of Indians and others concerned, strongly recommended that action be taken to deal with this problem.

It was decided both by the former administration and by this administration that steps should be taken to implement the recommendations of those two joint committees to establish an Indian Claims Commission. As was mentioned more than once yesterday, legislation was drafted and introduced in this House in December, 1963. Following this the proposed legislation was sent to Indian organizations, band councils and other interested groups across Canada for study and for suggestions as to improvements to these provisions. This was done during the year 1964 and during the first month or two of this year. Some 300 briefs and letters concerning the proposed legislation were received. These were reviewed and, as hon. Members, who have had an opportunity to peruse this bill and compare it with the older one will see, certain major changes have been made which I think will commend themselves to all Members of this House.

I should like to refer briefly to the main provisions of this new Bill C-123. First of all, the Commission will comprise five members, the chairman to be trained in the law, with experience on the bench or at the bar. There was a suggestion made that the chairman should be an international jurist selected by the United Nations. In fact the hon. Member for Skeena put forward that suggestion again last night. However, while those of us who have considered the representations feel strongly that the Chairman should be a person with adequate training and experience, we do believe there are persons in Canada who are eminently qualified to perform the duties of chairman of an Indian Claims Commission that is functioning solely in this country.

There were other suggestions made as to the qualifications of the Commissioners. Some thought that such persons should be trained in anthropology, ethnology and sociology—I remember hearing mention of a lot of other "ologies" during that discussion—and history and economics. There were many representations to the effect that an Indian should be appointed to the Commission and, as you will see from a perusal of the bill, we have accepted that suggestion. Provision has been made for one of the Commissioners to be appointed from among persons who are defined as Indians under the Indian Act.

However, it is not considered desirable to specify in the legislation the discipline in which any Commissioner other than the chairman must have been trained. But we are going to have a chairman trained in the law. We are also going to have at least one Indian on this commission of five. In the new bill we have made provision for a vice chairman, who may exercise all the powers and functions of the chairman if he is absent or unable to act for any reason. I think this is also an improvement which came out of suggestions that have been made.

Each Commissioner may be appointed—not "shall be"—but may be for a term not exceeding 10 years. We do not say "shall be" because if you were going to appoint a man in his late sixties or early seventies you might not want to appoint him for such a period as would mean he would serve beyond the age of 75, which is the limit for all judges in the superior courts of this country. However, he can be appointed for a term of 10 years.

It was suggested in some briefs that this Commission should be made permanent, and that no time limit should be put on its life. But we must keep in mind, Mr. Speaker, that the purpose of this Commission is to deal with claims which have arisen in the past, not new claims but claims that have arisen in the past. And while no Commissioner may be appointed for a term exceeding 10 years, if the Commission has not completed its work and if a member has served the full term of 10 years there is no reason why he should not be appointed for another term not exceeding two years, if he is doing a good job. This provision will permit the reappointment of one or more Commissioners when their terms expire. But I can assure this House that the Commission itself will go on until the last claim has been determined, and not until then will the Commission cease to function.

I hope this will not take 10 years, but based on the experience of our neighbouring republic to the south it may well take longer because, as I have learned in the last four months, some of the claims are very complicated. They will take months or longer in preparation, and it will take some time for the Commission to deal with the very complicated and involved claims that have come in from different parts of the country.

A word or two might be in order about the classes of claims. The classes of claims that may be brought are very broad, sufficiently broad, it seems to me, that known claims arising out of any past events can be heard. In 1948 the joint committee recommended that the Commission deal with claims under treaties. The 1961 joint committee recommended that the British Columbia land question and the Oka land dispute be heard by the Commission. Under the bill as drafted the kinds of claims that both joint committees had in mind have been included, and we have gone even further than that.

There are now five general classes of claims, which may be brought. First there are claims that land was taken without Indian aboriginal interest having been extinguished. This is the kind of claim that has been advanced by the Indians of my Province of British Columbia and which is commonly known as the B.C. land question. This was referred to at some length in the report of the 1961 committee on Indian Affairs.

The second class of claims covers claims that lands set apart as reserves for Indians were disposed of without compensation, or compensation so inadequate as to be unconscionable. We heard several references to that type of claim in the debate last night on the resolution. There have been many allegations that reserve lands have been improperly disposed of without compensation being paid, or that the compensation was inequitable. Suggestions were made, which I might say appealed to me at first when I was making a study of the matter, that the use of the word "unconscionable" would make it difficult to prove a claim based on the inadequacy of compensation, because as long as there was some substantial or almost reasonable compensation it might be argued that it was not unconscionable.

I might say that point troubled me at first but when I went into the history of the matter I found that similar language is used in the United States legislation, and that there have been a number of successful claims in the United States involving inadequacy of compensation as the basis of an allegation of unconscionable conduct. It is reasonable to assume that such an interpretation will be placed upon the word by the Commission or other bodies dealing with the matter in this country.

The third class covers claims that the Crown failed to discharge any obligation to Indians arising under any treaty, agreement or undertaking. Last night several hon. Members, including the hon. Member for Peace River and I think the hon. Member for Comox-Alberni, referred to this point. Provision is made in the new bill to consider allegations that the Crown has failed to live up to its obligations to Indians under any treaty, agreement or undertaking. This provision will enable bands that believe treaties have been abrogated in any way to make a claim; or if they feel that any other agreement or undertaking with them has not been fully discharged they may also bring a claim. May we have order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please.

Mr. Nicholson: The fourth class consists of claims that moneys held by the Crown in trust for Indians were improperly used. Some have alleged maladministration of trust funds. Where a band feels that such is the case it may bring a claim. These four classes cover claims involving aboriginal land rights, reserve lands, band funds and treaty obligations. Finally, in order to ensure as far as possible that any other matter which does not fall in the above four categories can be heard, there is a further provision for claims based on the alleged failure of the Crown to act fairly and honourably with Indians in some transactions, thereby causing injury to them.

It will be seen that the classes of claims that may be brought under this bill are very broad and will permit the hearing of claims of alleged wrongs against Indians in the collective sense. The collective interest of the Indian is represented by the Indian band, and this is set out clearly in the bill. Claims of individual Indians are not included, although there have been suggestions that they should be. However, if there is any individual alive today who feels he has such a claim he can seek his remedy in the courts. The same is not true of Indians in their collective capacity with respect to claims arising out of treaties made 150 years ago, 100 years ago, 75 years ago or possibly even 25 years ago. Therefore under the bill such claims must be put forward by Indian bands. There is probably no individual Indian living today who is directly affected, so I think the question of the individual becomes academic. However, by making it possible for an Indian band as an identifiable group to seek redress, their rights as a group are recognized.

There were also suggestions that claims might be permitted against the Crown in right of a province. For constitutional and jurisdictional reasons obviously this has not been included. However, claims arising during the preconfederation period may be heard as well as all claims against Canada since Confederation.

I might say a word or two about claimants with particular reference to clause 6 of the bill.

• (3:30 p.m.)

As I have said, claims may be brought on behalf of Indian bands. Normally the band council, as the duly constituted authority to act on behalf of the band, will put forward the claim. In some cases, however, there are no councils, and accordingly the chief will be in a position to bring the claim on behalf of the band. There may be a few cases where there is no band council nor a chief, and in in such cases any adult member of the band may bring the claim, provided the Commission is satisfied he has been authorized by the band to do so. Provision is also made for bringing claims in cases where the bands, in the past, have either been amalgamated with other bands or have been divided to form two or more bands. These bands, through their authorized responsible councils or their authorized spokesmen, will be able to bring claims.

I might say there were suggestions in some of the briefs and letters that were submitted, as well as in a telegram I received today, that Indian organizations should be able to bring claims on behalf of the Indians of a province. This was also mentioned last night. I may say this suggestion was given very careful consideration, and the conclusion reached was that this would pose insurmountable difficulties because Indian organizations, being purely voluntary organizations, do not necessarily represent a particular band or group of Indians. For instance, you will find in my native Province of New Brunswick, Indians of several different tribes. The same situation applies in Nova Scotia, as well as in practically every province of Canada. Where you have a band having a specific claim with regard to the disposition of some land that has been reserved for its use, you may well have another group with entirely conflicting views. This suggestion, therefore, after most careful consideration has been rejected, or at least has not been incorporated in the Bill now up for second reading.

The membership of Indian organizations, I might say, in the short time I have been Minister—and I have met several of them—fluctuates from day to day, from month to month and certainly from year to year. Conflicts of interest could arise where one or more organizations decided on their own initiative that they were the true representatives of a particular group or band of Indians. On the other hand, the band is well defined. In most cases the Indian bands had lands set apart for their use. They have a well defined membership, a membership that is established and maintained by law.

I might say that while for the reasons I have given we have not seen fit to include Indian organizations in the Bill, or make it possible for them to be claimants, this does not mean that Indian organizations might not take the initiative and advise the band or the chief to bring a claim. They could assist the band council or the chief or the adult, if the Claims Commission directed that an adult could represent a band, in the filing and prosecution of a claim. It may well be, and I think probably will be, that this will be the role that many Indian organizations may wish to play. There is nothing in the provisions of the Bill that prevents them from doing so. They can do all these things, but they cannot be claimants. On the other hand, I reiterate that we certainly do not feel Indian organizations, with their fluctuating membership, should be permitted to present claims to the Commission.

There is another important matter to which attention was drawn in the briefs that were submitted, Mr. Speaker. I refer to the time limit for filing claims. There has been considerable publicity given to the establishment of an Indian Claims Commission during the last few years. For several years it has been the announced policy of successive governments to establish a Commission. The purpose of the Commission, as I stated yesterday and I believe I reiterated today, is to clear grievances from the past. On the whole I believe the great majority of Indians know what their grievances are. They have talked about them enough over all my adult life. Accordingly, in order to bring some finality to this matter that has been in the air for at least 40 or 50 years, we believe that claims should be filed within a reasonable period of time. The previous Bill, No. C-130, provided that claims must be filed within two years after the act comes into force.

There were many suggestions regarding this limitation, ranging from suggestions of two years to no time limit at all. Some people were recommending a permanent Commission. Some arguments were advanced that the time limit for filing claims was too short, particularly since some bands seemed to think they not only must file their claims within the time limit but they must also prepare all the documentation necessary to support the claim. This is not the case. Only a notice of the claim need be filed, setting out what the claim is about with reasonable certainty. The documentation can follow later.

However, to meet the basic objection that the time limit of two years originally contemplated was too short, the time limit established in subclause 2 of clause 6 of the bill has now been extended to three years. It is considered this is a reasonable time within which to file a notice of claim. It may not be heard for five years, but they must give notice within three years. In the light of all the publicity that has been given to the Indian Claims bill, more particularly by the distribution of Bill No. C-130 in 1964 and the publicity we propose to give the establishment of the Commission when the bill becomes law, I would hope Members would agree that three years is a generous time.

One of the most far reaching and most novel provisions in the bill is the one having to do with the nature of the evidence that may be considered by the Commission. An important principle embodied in the bill is the fact that the Commission will not be bound by the ordinary rules of evidence. This is most important, since the Commission in its work will be able to dispense with the rules of evidence which in the past resulted in the rejection of some evidence relating to claims. Having practised law for more than two decades before I went into business I realize that in cases such as we have here, where most of the claims arose in the last century or perhaps even earlier, if we adhered to the strict rules of evidence there would be no possibility for these claimants to get justice. Some of the evidence that may be submitted may not be accepted in ordinary courts of law, yet it may be credible and trustworthy. It was considered necessary, in view of the antiquity of some of the claims, that such evidence be allowed.

Perhaps I might pause to interject that we have all had our own experience of somebody telling us an incident. Our parents may tell us of an incident; when we pass it on to somebody else there is usually a slight variation, and when it is passed on to our children and our grandchildren there will be even more variations. So, while people may repeat in good faith claims and stories they have heard, in some instances these might be so far removed from the truth that they are almost fairy stories.

I am not suggesting that would happen here, but it is important that where oral evidence does not exist, because there is no person alive today who could give the testimony, there must be some evidence to support the claim, something contemporaneous with the origin of the claim. It was thought that it would be unwise if the claim were supported by oral evidence only. It should be corroborated in some material way by other than oral evidence, that is by something to show that the oral evidence was true or was likely to be true. This could be an artifact, a marking, or some other corroborative evidence. The question of what weight should be given to testimony is being left to the Commission to decide.

With respect to the production of papers, I hardly think it is necessary to deal with this question at any length. The Commission will be authorized to make rules respecting its procedures and will be given such powers, rights and privileges as are vested in a superior court of record in respect of the difficult question of the production and inspection of documents, procedures for the bringing of claims and powers as to attendance, summoning and the examination of witnesses.

In some of the briefs, it was suggested that direction be given to the Commission as to the kind of evidence it would entertain and the weight to be attached to such evidence. There were also suggestions that there be detailed provisions with respect to the production of documents. It was considered, however, after full examination that it should be left to the Commission to determine what, in the light of practice, would be necessary to provide the claimants with full and reasonable opportunity to prepare their claims and be heard; and that the Commission should also determine what testimony it would hear and what weight it would give to such testimony.

Because of the nature of the claims, and because the problems that might be encountered in dealing with them cannot be foreseen, it is considered that it would be impractical to try to prescribe in a detailed way what the Commission shall do with respect to evidence, documents and the examination of witnesses. It is expected that the Commission will hold hearings in various parts of the country and, as required, may conduct special investigations into any particular aspects of a claim.

Another significant innovation and great improvement in this bill as compared with the former one is the provision for assistance to Indian bands in bringing claims. Provision is made in the bill for providing assistance to Indian bands that do not have sufficient available resources to enable them to bring a claim before the Commission or to pursue or oppose an appeal. There would be no point in setting up a commission if destitute bands could not get the lawyers, anthropologists and other research experts that they may need.

It so happens that there are a few Indian bands which are very wealthy, either through possessing land which made choice sites for industrial purposes or through the discovery of oil and gas. Such bands will also have claims to put forward and will be in a position to do so, but other adjoining bands in a province could not make claims unless assistance were provided them.

One of the fundamental problems that we had to consider was whether Indian bands would be able to finance the cost of having their claims adequately investigated, documented and presented before the Commission. In many cases this will involve not only legal advisers and counsel but research personnel as well. The real problem is how to assist those bands that may not be able to finance in whole or in part the bringing of their claims.

Having determined that bands unable to finance their own claims should be assisted, the question arose as to how such assistance might best be made available. I may say it did not take long for the officials who were advising me or for me to decide that the administration of such assistance could not be associated with the Department of Indian Affairs, even though I may have a very high opinion of my own integrity; nor should it be associated with the Department of Justice, which will have the responsibility of defending the Crown. It was therefore considered that the most appropriate way in which the assistance might be provided would be to make it the responsibility of the Indian Claims Commission, and to assure the Commission that it would have funds to do this work.

Mr. Speaker, may we have order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Howard: The only disorder is behind you.

Mr. Nicholson: I am not suggesting that there is not some lack of order there.

The Commission will set the terms and conditions of the assistance to be provided, whether in the form of direct assistance, such as by way of research staff, or financial assistance to help pay for research and legal counsel. Provision is made so that a band desiring help will be able to make application for assistance to prepare and bring a claim before the Commission, or for assistance in any of the appeal proceedings or further hearings that may be held as provided in the bill. In special circumstances, the Commission is given power to forgive all or part of the financial assistance so provided. The scheme of assistance as set out in the bill will, I believe, go a long way toward meeting the expressed requests of many band councils and others.

It is not possible to determine in advance how much might need to be provided to meet all the requests for financial assistance that might be made. However, the requirements can be met year by year in such amounts as might be appropriated by Parliament for this purpose. As soon as the bill becomes law, authority will be sought in supplementary estimates for an amount deemed sufficient to cover any requests for assistance that might be made to the Commission during the current fiscal year.

The Commission will be required to render a decision on each claim, setting forth its reasons therefor and awarding money compensation where it is warranted. The Commission can make a money award only. There were suggestions that it be given the power to restore land, or to award both land and money, and also to make declaratory orders in respect of treaty obligations.

It was not intended that the Claims Commission would take the place of ordinary courts in determining points of law such as the validity and effect of an Indian treaty.

• (3:50 p.m.)

The Commission is now being given wide powers, however, to determine whether an obligation under a treaty as determined by the courts has been discharged. The restoration of land may be quite impossible for any number of reasons. Land may have been patented years ago. I know that a project in southwestern Ontario with which I was associated for some years, and which is now the hub of a billion dollar industry, is all established on a former Indian reserve. Even if there has been some flaw in a title of this kind, it will be impossible to return land where patents have been issued. But if there has been an injustice the Commission will be able to give the band or bands concerned adequate compensation. There is no limit to the amount of compensation which can be awarded.

As regards the suggestion that declaratory orders may be made in respect to treaty applications, it is considered that such orders can quite properly be dealt with in the ordinary courts in accordance with the established rules of legal evidence. It would be a case of interpreting a document.

A word as to appeals. The Commission will sit and decide on the merits of these claims. The decisions of the Commission are final and conclusive, subject to appeal to a special Indian Claims Appeal Court which is being constituted under this bill. The Commission being a tribunal which is not bound by legal rules of evidence, and not applying facts to existing law or being guided by established principles, there are no grounds on which an appeal could be taken to the Supreme Court or to the Exchequer Court. It could not possibly be done. But all judges of the Exchequer Court are to be ex officio judges of the Indian Claims Appeal Court and are to be given authority to confirm or vary decisions of the Commission, or they may refer claims back to the Commission for further hearing.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Apart from the appeal to the Indian Claims Appeal Court as to the reasonableness of an award, provision is made for reference to the Exchequer Court on questions of jurisdiction, and for appeals from the Exchequer Court to the Supreme Court in respect of any such decision concerning a question of jurisdiction.

A word on the subject of awards. This is dealt with in clauses 9, 10 and 11. Where the Commission finds that the claim of an Indian band is justified in whole or in part, it may make a money award. In determining the amount of the award the Commission shall take into account the amount of any moneys already paid or the money value of any other compensation given to the band in respect of the matter out of which the claim arose. This is where the question of unconscionable transactions arises. For example, if the Commission were to find that band X was entitled to Y dollars under the provisions of some treaty or agreement but had in fact received only Z dollars, then it would take into account the amount Z already paid when determining the amount of the award.

I turn now to the disposition of funds. Any amount which may be awarded by the Commission or fixed by the Indian Claims Appeal Court will be paid into the capital fund of the Indian band concerned to be used for the purposes to which the capital funds of a band may be devoted. The purposes for which expenditures of capital funds may be made are prescribed under the Indian Act. In general, the funds may be used only for purposes of benefit to all members of the band; a percentage can be used for per capita distribution, but the total amount cannot be dissipated in this way. Of course before payment of an award can be made to a band fund, money must be appropriated by Parliament for that purpose. Once the moneys have been paid over the claim will be deemed to have been discharged. The reasons for placing restrictions on the use of band funds is obvious. The fund is the property of the band as a whole, and not only the present generation but their children and grandchildren have to be considered.

In summary, may I say it is felt that the tribunal which is being established will enable a final determination to be made as to the claims of all Indian bands. We must realize that this Commission has a monumental task ahead of it. And when the last claim has been settled we hope old controversies will be laid at rest, and this should go a long way toward rebuilding the kind of confidence in the intentions of Parliament and of the people of Canada which is absolutely necessary if we are to do our work for the future development and welfare of the Indian people.

I hope that this legislation which is so vital to the settlement of Indian claims will help achieve this end.

As I assured the Committee yesterday, as soon as this bill has been given second reading I intend to ask that it be referred to a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons for examination and report, and I am prepared to move the appropriate resolution at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I think I should commend the Minister for the careful and detailed statement he has given to us on the motion for second reading of this bill in connection with a contentious, difficult and tenacious problem which has existed over a great many years. The measure deals with a problem to which I do not think there will ever be a complete and equitable solution, though by the terms of this legislation the Government intends to move as far as it possibly can in that direction.

I think, too, I must commend the officials of the Minister who undoubtedly participated to a large extent in the preparation of this legislation following the numerous briefs and representations which I am sure were made to them and which, I am convinced, must have raised a great many difficulties.

My own disposition is to give guarded and somewhat reserved approval to this motion, subject to what I shall have to say later in the expectation that a measure of this kind is one which must bristle with legal questions based on varying interpretations of the different clauses to which the hon. gentleman has referred. Some of these will no doubt be passed on the Claims Commission itself. It seems to me that only by means of a joint committee such as has been suggested will it be possible to give this legislation the careful and detailed study which its great importance deserves.

I hope when the Minister closes the debate he will refer to the proposal I made yesterday, that the Government should indicate its good faith in this issue by expressing willingness to comply with the recommendations which may be made by the joint committee concerning changes and alterations. I have this in mind when I indicate my own view that the bill is one to which in principle we may give our qualified acceptance.

Having said that, to indicate the nature of the reservations I have I should like to refer to several of the matters which I think are of very considerable importance and which will require clarification and a more detailed statement by those who will be appearing before the committee during the course of the study of this bill. I am not blaming the Minister for this, but the bill came into my hands only about half an hour or so before the opening of the House. It is a very lengthy bill comprising 32 clauses involving in many cases new departures, and for this reason I feel I must qualify my acceptance of it.

Some of the things I wish to refer to, which I assume will be the subject of study and consideration by the committee, are these. First of all, may I bring to the attention of the Minister that in the interpretation clause "band" means a body of Indians that is a band for the purposes of the Indian Act. I point out that while it is apparent from this interpretation that there is a limitation in this legislation to Indians within the Indian Act, this leaves a very considerable omission in that the bill fails to take into consideration the Eskimos of northern Quebec and the Northwest Territories, in respect of whom there have been no treaties signed and who are now in the position of having in many cases to give up their birthrights in respect of the material assets and real property in the areas in which they reside without any agreement being reached at all. This, of course, is not a matter within the Minister's jurisdiction, but as Minister charged with responsibility under the Indian Act I think this very signal omission should be called to the attention of the Government.

I have no comment to make at this time with respect to the suggestions advanced as to the personnel of the Commission. I think there has been an improvement in this respect, in that there is now to be at least one Indian, within the meaning of the Indian Act, among the commissioners. The qualifications which the Minister mentioned are a condition precedent. I think they have been well put, and I have no inclination to quarrel with him on this score.

When we reach the duties of the Commission as set out in clause 5 of the bill we come to the very heart of the problem. I would be of the opinion that certain clarification might be required in connection with some of the areas which are the subject of the proposed jurisdiction of the Claims Commission. Subclause (a) of clause 5 refers to claims which may be brought in respect of—

—lands in any area that now forms part of Canada—

—which were taken from Indians by the Crown, and so on, without any agreement or undertaking to give compensation. It seems to me at first blush that the word "adequate" should be inserted before the word "compensation"; because any compensation at all, no matter how inadequate, would disqualify an application being made under subclause (a). Subclause (b) says that claims may be advanced in respect of——lands set apart for the use and benefit of Indians in any area—

—I assume that refers to lands set apart as reserves and which subsequently were granted, sold or otherwise disposed of by the Crown. I also assume it includes the natural resources and the mineral rights under the land as well, and I think this is a matter subject to litigation at the present time in the Province of Alberta. The subclause continues:

—and no compensation was given in respect thereof to such Indians or the compensation given was so inadequate as to be unconscionable;

In other words a very heavy onus is thus laid upon the Indians and the band to establish, before any right is vested in the Claims Commission to make an award, that the compensation given was so inadequate as to be unconscionable. I think this is rather anomalous, because it is essential for the band to prove this in order to get into court, if I may use that expression, or, to get before the Claims Commission. But once they have the right to come to the Claims Commission, I would judge that the Commission may make an award which may be reasonable and adequate in their opinion. I think the provision, that they have to establish to the satisfaction of the Claims Commission that the compensation given was so inadequate as to be unconscionable lays a very heavy onus on a band. One must suggest that this is an area where there might be some discussion during the course of the committee's deliberations.

I am very pleased to see subclause (d) of clause 5 in the bill. We had an interesting discussion on this matter yesterday. The hon. Member for Northwest Territories and other hon. Members who spoke brought this subject to the attention of the Minister. The intention is that this subject shall be covered by subclause (d) in any situation where there has been a breach of a treaty; and this despite the fact that by what now appears to be a decision of the highest court of this land there is no legal restriction against a Government legislating, if it sees fit, in any way so as to vary the terms of a treaty, or to legislate in such a way that there is no longer any compliance with the terms of a treaty.

This brings up another problem which I think is serious, and where I now feel there might not be that complete compliance which I would hope would be present. Subclause (d) is to the effect that a claim may be advanced where the Crown failed to discharge any obligations arising under any treaty to Indians living in an area that forms part of Canada. The meaning of the word "obligation" is involved here. If this is construed to mean, as it well could, a legal obligation, then subclause (d) has no value at all. I feel that for a 100 per cent opportunity to be given to Indians and Indian bands to seek and obtain a remedy for breach of a treaty the word "obligation" should be followed by "or promise". I throw out that suggestion to the Minister for his consideration. I do not want to be splitting hairs, but I want to make it quite plain that I am sure from time to time there would be constructions sought of the various parts of this legislation, and to me the words "obligation" connotes a legal obligation.

The question arises, because of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada to which I referred, whether there is any longer, if there was ever at any time, any legal obligation on Canada to fulfil the terms of these treaties. An obligation in honour, in equity, in decency, yes; but there is a question in my mind as to whether there is now a real obligation within the meaning of the word as it appears in subclause (d).

With regard to the length of time within which a claim may be brought, I understand there might be a conflict of views on this. I would be prepared to accept three years provided the Minister might consider adding the words "or such further time as the Commission might recommend". It seems to me there may be very special and unusual circumstances where a band may be unable to gather together the evidence, or where there may be some conflict. I can think of a number of reasons whereby the band might fail to bring proceedings within the term of three years. It would not be unreasonable to grant the Commission the right to extend the time if a proper case was made to it. This is something the Minister might well consider, because it would really not do much violence to the meaning at this time, but it would provide an extra safeguard.

In legislation of this kind there must be the most liberal and generous construction possible. I commend the position that has been taken, that the usual rigid legal rules of evidence shall not apply. However, this position is subject, of course, to subclause 1 in respect of which, as the Minister pointed out, no award shall be made unless there is evidence in writing that is reasonably contemporaneous to the time the subject matter of the claim arose. I understand the reasoning behind this, which relates to the general principle that no one shall be entitled to manufacture evidence in writing to support his own claim, but evidence in writing which was made at a time fairly close to the time when the claim arose could not be considered as being manufactured in respect of proceedings which will not take place until many years later. I think the whole thing depends on an interpretation of the word "reasonably". Certainly there must be some distinction made, but I hope in its decisions the Commission will not construe this word "reasonably" too rigidly against the Indians making the claims.

In clause 13 there is provision for an appeal to the Exchequer Court on the grounds of jurisdiction. This is a very reasonable provision and provides a simple and expeditious method whereby either the Crown or the banks may seek the opinion of the Exchequer Court as to whether any claim made comes within the provisions of clause 5. The appeal from the Exchequer Court to the Supreme Court is also quite reasonable.

Under subclause 2 of clause 14 I suggest there should be the inclusion of the same saving provision I referred to earlier. This subclause states:

> No appeal lies after leave therefor has been obtained under subsection (1) unless it is entered in the Supreme Court within sixty days from the making of the order granting leave to appeal.

Having in mind that many of the Indian bands live in areas which are very considerable distances from the places where these courts are held, I think it would be wise to add after the word "appeal" some saving words to the effect that this time can be extended if in the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada a case has been made to do so. I should not like to see this 60-day period left in its present terms.

The Indian Claims Appeal Court I think is an innovation. It is very desirable and gives an opportunity both for the Crown and the bands to appeal on the ground that an award was unreasonable.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in respect of the question of costs, I think the Minister made it reasonably clear that provided the Commission is satisfied, on application by a band, that it simply does not have these resources, all that is required in forming and preparing its case—engaging counsel, calling witnesses and bringing witnesses to the place of the trial; in other words, everything which in any sense of the word is a condition precedent to the band being able to make an adequate, fair and full presentation of its case—will be made available, in terms of the money required, to the Indian band or bands making the application for an award. Anything less than that would certainly be unreasonable, unfair and restrictive in respect of benefits which might flow from this legislation.

Before I leave this subject there is one other point in clause 32 which deals with the question of assistance to Indians. While there is nothing specifically stated, I would assume, and perhaps the Minister can clarify this, that in the event the Indians making application are unsuccessful, there will be no question that costs will be awarded against them. That is an inference we can possibly take from clause 32, but I am sure the Minister is willing to make this point clear beyond any shadow of doubt; that in the event an application is unsuccessful, no costs under any circumstances can be assessed against the applicant band.

The remarks I have made represent a general indication of some of the problems involved, and I have not touched on them all, which can only be adequately and properly disposed of when the matter is before a joint committee to which officials of the Department are made available for questioning. I assume it will be possible for that committee to have access to the officials of the Department of Justice in order to consider some of the legal problems which could arise in connection with the interpretation and construction of this legislation. We must do this with the understanding that no stone will be left unturned to assure that the blot on our nation, in respect of the claims of Indians which can be brought within the four corners of this legislation, is, as far as it possibly can be, erased forever.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, since the bill was introduced yesterday we have had a brief opportunity to examine it in some detail. The hon. Member for Comox-Alberni, the hon. Member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and I took the opportunity last night of obtaining one of the copies used for introduction purposes. We perused it until late in the evening, so perhaps we have had a better opportunity of examining it and preparing a critique than some other Members.

Before I make any formal comments I should like to state that it is my understanding an appointment with the Minister was made some time ago with a group of Indians representing the Iroquois nation for four o'clock this afternoon in the Minister's office. Obviously the Minister is not in his office to meet with those people, and I understand they are patiently or impatiently awaiting his attendance. In view of the fact that it appears the Minister will not be able to keep that appointment in person, would he be kind enough to issue an invitation to those representatives, of whom there are many, to sit in the gallery this afternoon as his guests to listen to the discussion which is taking place? I know they would like to participate in the debate, but perhaps they could be afforded the opportunity of at least listening to it.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the suggestion of the hon. Member. I might say that last night when I realized that we would have second reading of this bill today, I immediately took steps to try to notify the delegation with whom this appointment was arranged a week ago. There was no thought in fixing that appointment that the bill would be before the House today, and the hour of meeting has been changed to six o'clock. But they do have at least an hour and a half or a little more to wait now, and I am sure my secretary will be glad to arrange for passes to get them into the gallery if they so desire. I would ask one of my officials to communicate such a message to my office.

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. Member for Skeena would end his remarks immediately and allow the bill to be given second reading so the Minister could then keep his appointment with the Indians.

Mr. Howard: I am not that anxious to vote for the bill or to let it pass without comment.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

In the Minister's opening remarks on second reading he indicated that he welcomed what he termed the unanimous support for the bill that was given yesterday at the resolution stage. If the Minister made that comment sincerely I do not think he could have been listening to what was said, because there was not unanimous support for the bill. There was not unanimous support because we had not seen it and did not know just what it would contain and whether it would be worth while supporting. If the Minister will read the comments of the hon. Member for Comox-Alberni, who spoke first for the New Democratic Party, he will see there was no endorsation of the bill, nor did I indicate that we would support the bill. There was no unanimous endorsation of the bill, but rather an expression of the fact that this was perhaps the most important piece of legislation with which we would be dealing at this session.

In my view, yesterday and today are but further sad and sorry days for the native Indian people. When the contents of the bill became public for the first time last night the hopes of a great number of Indian people in Canada that finally they were going to get a fair hearing and justice and equity at the hands of Government were dashed to the ground. I would not be saying this if this were the first time a bill to set up an Indian claims commission had been presented to the House. It is not the first time. As is well known, Bill No. C-130 was presented in December of 1963. That bill was roundly condemned as inadequate by large numbers of Indian people, and with few exceptions the bill now before us is identical with Bill No. C-130 introduced in 1963.

In the intervening period the Indian people, whose views had been sought and whose ideas and proposed amendments had been solicited, had hopes that their proposals and suggestions for amendments to Bill C-130 would be accepted with the result that the new bill would be drafted in such a way as to establish a commission which would be able to deal properly, fairly and adequately with their longstanding grievances. They discovered last night that this was not the case. They discovered last night that the bill before us is just the same as Bill C-130 so far as is substance is concerned and the establishment of a commission which, properly and fairly, will be able to hear and adjudicate upon the claims of the native Indian people.

Last night we issued a press statement about the bill under the names of the leader of the New Democratic Party, myself, the hon. Member for Comox-Alberni, the hon. Member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and the hon. Member for Winnipeg North. I should like to quote one or two paragraphs from that press statement because I think it succinctly sums up our position with respect to the bill and the Government that has introduced it:

> The provisions of the bill introduced tonight by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration which provides for the establishment of an Indian Claims Commission make it obvious that the Government has been speaking with a forked tongue and that it is firmly entrenched in the position of a modern day combination "land-grabber and whiskey-peddler".
> There is no change of substance in Bill C-123 over Bill C-130, which was introduced on December 14, 1963, that would permit the Commission to be fair and equitable in hearing and deciding upon claims presented to it. There are, however, two important changes. One is that an Indian shall be a member of the Commission and the other is that financial assistance shall be given to bands to prepare and present their claims.
> It seems obvious that the Government in Bill C-130 of 1963 deliberately refused to accept these two suggestions in order that it could spend a year and a half listening to submissions by Indian people, then offer them something as a sop. Even some of the early day rum runners were more subtle than this.

The press release goes on to deal in some detail with the bill itself and in fact is an identical reproduction of a similar statement which was made with respect to Bill C-130. The statement can be similar because the bills are identical with the exception of the two points I mentioned and one or two other extremely minor technical changes.

The history of the dealing of governments with the Indian people includes, of course, their dealings with the Indian people of British Columbia, those with whom I am most familiar and who I believe by and large have the greatest single complaint to make about treatment at the hands of Government in that because there were no treaties with the Indians in British Columbia, they are now faced and have been continuously faced with what is commonly called the B.C. Indian land question. There was no war against the Indian people of British Columbia by which territory was won. There were no treaties, no negotiations, nothing except simple encroachment upon lands exploited and owned, in the sense that the Indians understand that word, by the Indian people of British Columbia.

In 1910 Sir Wilfrid Laurier promised the Indian people of British Columbia that the Indian land question would be taken to the Privy Council. Sir Wilfrid Laurier did not do that. In the eyes of the Indian people who were affected Sir Wilfrid Laurier told them a lie. In their eyes the Liberal party of that day was deceitful, and it looks like they are not improving with the passage of time.

In 1913 a group of native Indian people from the Nishga tribe, or what is now the Nishga tribal council, prepared a petition for the presentation of their claim to the Privy Council. Eventually the Federal Government got around to attempting to deal with their petition, and in 1914 they passed an order in council with relation to the matter. The contents of this order in council are important because they indicate what the attitude of the Government of that day was with respect to the legitimate claims of the Indian people. By order in council P.C. 751 of June 20, 1914, the Governor in Council resolved to refer the Indian land claims to the Exchequer Court of Canada. We have not progressed too much, since we are now likely to end up in the hands of the Exchequer Court of Canada.

One of the provisions of the order in council is as follows:

> The Indians of British Columbia shall, by their chiefs or representatives, in a binding way, agree, if the court or on appeal the Privy Council, decides that they have a title to the lands of the Province, to surrender such title, receiving from the Dominion benefits to be granted for extinguishment of title in accordance with past usage of the Crown in satisfying Indian claims in the unsurrendered territories—

In other words, what they meant was that the Dominion Government in 1914 wanted the Indian people to say before they went to court that if they won they would agree to lose; that if they won their case they would agree to accept the provisions contained in the treaties to which the hon. Member for Peace River referred yesterday, and to which the hon. Member for the Northwest Territories also made reference. In other words, in 1914 the Dominion Government was quite prepared to continue extinguishing the Indians' title to lands in the same niggardly dishonourable way that had been the case prior to that time. Naturally the Indian people rejected this suggestion, because it was unfair and because it was not in any sense of the word justice to them.

Subsequent to that we had the McKenna Royal Commission established between the provincial and federal governments without consultation with the Indian people, without their agreement and, at least on the surface, apparently without any concern for representations from the Indian people. The McKenna Royal Commission sat for some three or four years and went all over British Columbia. They made a report which subsequently found its way into the statute books of Canada and of the Province of British Columbia. These statutes, by their very existence, allegedly settled the British Columbia Indian land question. The Parliament of Canada and the legislature of British Columbia passed laws which in effect extinguished the claim of the Indian people of British Columbia to that land. They did not extinguish anything, because the claim is still there and now we have the Government of the day admitting the claim is still there and indicating its desire to give the people an opportunity to present their claims. This was another way for the Government to deal deceitfully and dishonourably with the legitimate claim of the native people of British Columbia.

In 1926 a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons was appointed to inquire into the claims of the allied Indian tribes of British Columbia who had petitioned Parliament in June, 1926 for redress, for justice and fair play. I have read the report of that joint Senate and House of Commons Committee. I have read the questions asked by the members of that Committee, and it is obvious from reading the verbatim report of those proceedings that the members of the committee had made up their collective minds before they even heard the case. They had decided before they heard the claim presented that there was not going to be an acceptance of any claim. They did not recommend that there was no claim, but they stated that the Indians had failed to prove their case.

However, they said, "Even though you have failed to prove your case we will recommend a cash settlement of $100,000 a year in lieu of treaty money." They said in effect, "You have no claim but we recognize you have a claim and we will give you $100,000 per year". This was the origin of the so-called British Columbia special vote in lieu of treaty.

Even though that joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons determined that the Indian people had not proved their claim, they still did not extinguish in the minds of the Indian people the thought that they had a just claim. They presented these ideas to the joint committee in 1946, 1947 and 1948, I believe it was. In 1948, as the Minister stated, that committee reported unanimously that there should be an Indian Claims Commission established. It is interesting to note that there was a Liberal Government in office at that time, and they failed to pay attention to the recommendation of the committee in 1948.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in so far as the British Columbia Indian land question is concerned, the native people of British Columbia do not need an Indian Claims Commission. They do not need an appeal court. They do not need this structure which is now before us. Canada does not need it. All that is required is a simple and honest declaration on the part of the Government that the hereditary or aboriginal title of the native people of British Columbia was never extinguished. This is all that is necessary, the admission of an historical fact. This could be followed by a discussion on a gentleman to gentleman basis, negotiation if you wish, to extinguish the claim of the native people of British Columbia. This is all that is required, a simple, honest acceptance of an historical fact. If the Minister believes implicitly in what he said a few moments ago about fair play and justice, this is precisely what he and his Government will do.

We do not need to put the native people to the trouble, expense, worry and time of preparing and arguing a case before the Commission when the cards are stacked against them by the very construction of the Commission. We do not need to put them to that difficulty. All that is required is the admission of the historical fact that the aboriginal title has never been extinguished, and then follow that up by some gentlemanly negotiations to conclude the matter. This is all that is required so far as the people of British Columbia are concerned.

The Liberal Party prepared a platform in 1962-63 with regard to this Indian Claims Commission. Reference has been made to it before in this chamber, and I should like to take one or two extracts from the pamphlet covering that platform to indicate that there is a vast difference between what the Government is saying now and what was set out in this pamphlet. I quote:

> At Prince Rupert in 1910, Sir Wilfrid promised that the Indian land question would be taken to the Privy Council.

It never got there. It has puzzled me to understand why the Liberal Party would admit such a thing about Sir Wilfrid, that he was dishonest in his dealings with the native people. I quote:

With the objective of achieving a fair and just settlement of all outstanding claims, it is Liberal policy that the Commission will include qualified authorities on British constitutional law as it affects aboriginal, hereditary and usufructory rights.

I should like to hear some declaration from the Minister concerning the personnel of this Commission in order to ascertain whether it is going to meet this particular promise.

I continue quoting:

To assure the objectivity which Indians of Canada have the right to expect after years of procrastination—

That is sort of an admission of self guilt by the Liberal Party.

—Commissioners may be appointed from other parts of the Commonwealth such as New Zealand, where achievements in this field are regarded as outstanding. It is Liberal Policy that the Commission will be unbiased and independent.

It is true that this was a qualified promise, since it states they "may be" appointed. None the less, when Liberal Party spokesmen took this pamphlet in their hands to explain it, this became a solemn pledge that when the Commission was established it would include people from other nations whose success in this field is supposed to have been outstanding. It goes on further to say:

• (4:40 p.m.)

It is Liberal policy to establish the Indian Claims Commission on a continuing basis—

The Minister said a while ago that it is not going to be continuing at all, that it is to have a specified life.

They further promised to refer to that Commission "such contentious questions as the income tax status of Indian fishermen." I would like to know whether the Minister still believes in that promise and intends to carry it out; and will this subject matter be referred to the Commission, because the Indian people themselves will not be able to raise it under the terms of the bill. They are precluded from making a claim of that nature. I would like to ask the Government whether it remembers that solemn pledge to the Indian people, especially those in B.C. This pamphlet goes on and on, and comparing the pamphlet with the bill it is nothing but a lot of hypocrisy, a lot of deceitful promises to the native Indian people.

Yesterday the Minister made a couple of statements which are worth commenting on. As recorded at page 2686 of Hansard he stated:

—some Indians feel such a Commission would be just another device concocted by the whites to whittle away Indian rights. We must do our best not only to establish this Commission as soon as possible, but when it is set up we must do what we can to ensure that everything is done to correct and remove any such impression.

Unfortunately the Minister defeated his own purposes and his own ideals by not making the necessary changes in Bill C-130. The Minister went on to say:

The Bill...includes several suggestions that were made by the Indian bands and others since the Bill of December, 1963 was introduced.

I do not know what the Minister means by "several" but there are only three changes of any substance in the Bill. One is that there will be a native Indian person appointed to the Commission, something which I had spoken about earlier and wondered why it was not contained in the 1963 bill. The other is that the time limit for presentation of claims is extended from two to three years. a rather insignificant change. The third is the new clause 32 which proposes the financial assistance for the presentation of claims.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister also had some interesting comments to make about the bill, and I think they require some examination. As recorded at page 2716 of yesterday's Hansard the Parliamentary Secretary said:

Indian bands or groups will be able to put forward claims—

I made note of that statement when he was speaking last night but wanted to make sure of it, and having checked Hansard I see I heard correctly. That is either misleading or it is merely reflecting the hope and desire of the Parliamentary Secretary, because there is no reference in the bill to people other than bands as groups of people who can present claims. I wish there were. In fact the definition of the word "band" is restrictive in the extreme.

The word "band" is of European extraction. It is a non-Indian word. It is a word developed by the English speaking people to apply to a particular group of Indian people, and it is alien to their thoughts. You cannot arbitrarily establish groups of people and call them bands. Bands, as such, never existed in the Indian social, political or economic structure.

If the Bill had said that bands, or nations, or tribes or other groups, or something broad of that sort, then it would open the door wider and permit the proper groups of native Indian people, by their own designation, to present claims. It is restrictive to limit it to a band. I think the Parliamentary Secretary was just expressing a hopeful desire rather than misleading the House and explaining something that was not the case.

The Parliamentary Secretary further said, and I think this is revealing:

This legislation means the acceptance of a legal and moral obligation by the Government of Canada to assure that Indians can have their day in court.

That to me is extremely revealing, especially when coupled with the statement of the Minister earlier today that there is some desire to see finality brought to these claims. There is a desire to end once and for all the possibility that Indians may raise claims against the Government in its dealings with them. I submit this is one of the major reasons for the presentation of this bill in almost identical form to that which was introduced in December, 1963; namely, so they can say the Indian people can have their day in court; not so their claims can be dealt with fairly and justly, but merely that they can be given the opportunity to plead their case; not so that any determination can be made on the basis of justice, but merely so the opportunity will be given for the Indian people to argue their point of view.

The Indian people of Canada have been arguing their claims against this and preceding Governments for donkeys' years, at least as far back as 1910 so far as the B.C. Indians are concerned. They have had their day in the Minister's office time and time again. They have had their day in the Indian Affairs Branch time and time again. They have argued before parliamentary committees time and time again. But nothing happened. All we have now is another agency of Government in order to provide the native Indian people with another opportunity to have their day in court. There is no desire to solve anything. There is no sincere attempt to meet their claims with fair play. There is just the desire to be able to say "We are giving you this so-called day in court." That is not good enough.

Clause 7 of the bill—and I only make reference to it in passing—is the key part of the bill, because it establishes the power of the Commission at hearings and says what the Commission may or may not do. It is true, as the Minister said, that the bill waives the normal rules of evidence so far as courts are concerned. That is an admirable course to take, but even though the Commission in hearing any claim shall not be bound by the legal rules of evidence, even though it can let native Indian people argue and present their history, which many of them only know by story and which in many cases was never written down or documented so far as the area they owned or used was concerned; even though the Commission will let the Indian people have their day in court, as the Parliamentary Secretary said, the Commission cannot make an award on the basis of evidence which it receives and which is not covered by the legal rules of evidence. It cannot make an award unless there is evidence in writing that is reasonably contemporaneous with the time when the subject matter of the claim arose. The subject matter of some of these claims arose many decades ago. The subject matter of many of these claims predates Confederation itself by many years, as the Minister has admitted. The subject matter of these claims in many instances arose at a time when there was no written evidence, at a time when the Indian people did not keep records. The Indian people of this nation did not have title to their land in their pockets. They did not measure plots of land 60 x 120 in extent and say "Here is our land and we have pieces of paper to prove it". They held their land in common, and they held it in trust for future generations.

Where would one find written evidence which is reasonably contemporaneous with those times? Even in our archives it would be impossible to find it. As a matter of fact, from what little knowledge I have of the archives it would be virtually impossible to find anything else there, either, because there is such a chaotic mess over there.

If they cannot produce evidence in writing to support their claim there is an alternative. They can give oral evidence which is corroborated in a material particular by evidence other than oral evidence. Presumably this would be written or documentary evidence. I presume there are two kinds of evidence, that which is spoken and that which is presented in writing. Perhaps the Commission will be able to travel north of Terrace along the road to the Nass River valley and study some of the Indian petroglyphs which have been cut into the rocks back in the stone age—we do not know precisely when—by our Indian people. Possibly the Commission will be able to take cognizance of them and conclude that someone was there centuries ago.

The fact is that clause 7, as a result of the restrictions it contains, will preclude the Commission from accepting evidence presented by the Indian people unless the conditions laid down elsewhere are met, namely that it be corroborated by written or documentary evidence. I submit this places too great a restriction on the Indian people, and forces them to submit to rules which they may not be able to observe and which stack the cards against them.

There are other provisions in this bill with which I do not agree. They make similar restrictions and will similarly prevent people from presenting their claims and receiving awards on the basis of their evidence and in accordance with fair play and justice. Regardless of the intentions of this Parliament or of the Government or of the Minister, there will be no final and conclusive settlement of Indian claims until the Indian people themselves feel they have been given a fair deal by this Commission. If they do not feel they are getting a square deal they will either boycott the Commission and refuse to present their claims to it, while persisting in their demand for fair play and justice, or they will appear before the Commission without any hope of receiving redress of their grievances, and still persist over the years in trying to get fair play and justice from the Government.

Only if this bill contains the basic elements of equity and justice, and only if the Indian people feel they are being fairly dealt with and can see that these principles are contained in the measure, will a final and conclusive settlement of these claims be achieved.

I for one in this Parliament would not be interested in the least in making a final determination about Indian claims unless I could be satisfied that the Indians themselves would accept it as a final and just settlement. Final settlements of Indian claims are not one sided affairs. We have had too many one sided final settlements of Indian claims. I mention only the British Columbia land question, which as far as the Government is concerned was settled finally and conclusively on five different occasions. Because it was not fair, because it was not just, and because the Indian people did not feel they had any part in the procedures which led to those decisions, there was no final settlement in their minds.

This should be our sole objective; not to make final and conclusive settlements as far as we are concerned; not to carry on the double talk of the past, but to be prepared to make a final and just settlement of Indian claims—final and just in the opinion of the Indian persons themselves. This we must do if, even in part we are to correct the injustices of other years.

At this stage, bearing in mind the reluctance or refusal of the Minister to declare his intention to receive or accept amendments which the committee might offer, I think we would be opposed to this bill. The hon. gentleman was asked last night by the hon. Member for Peace River whether his Government was prepared to accept amendments to the bill which might be suggested by the joint committee after the Indian people had had an opportunity to present their ideas with regard to it, in order that whatever decisions were finally made would be accepted as fair and equitable. If the Minister would make such a commitment to Parliament when he closes the debate, or at some other time should he so desire, I believe there would not be too much opposition to the passage of this bill as it now stands, although we believe we should try through some other procedure to improve the letter and spirit of certain clauses of it. If the Minister would make this commitment perhaps we could proceed on the basis of qualified acceptance. Otherwise I think we must reject it.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, if I rise to say a few words at this time it is because in my constituency of Quebec-Montmorency there is a reservation of Hurons who, I am sure, will want to make representations to the new commission, the composition of which Bill No. C-123 seeks to alter.

Furthermore, I should like to pay homage to a tribe which recently elected a new council composed of dynamic and well-intentioned young Indians who really want to help this Huron tribe to participate in the development of their community.

Moreover, I should like to warn the minister against the provisions of section 7 stating that a claim must be supported by evidence in writing or, at least, by oral evidence which would have the same value. I should also like to point to him that recently a distinguished Indian of the province, Mr. Jean-Paul Nolet, an announcer with the CBC, himself an Abenaki of the Odanac region, said, following the presentation by the National Film Board of the film entitled Le Festin des Morts, that there were so little evidence in writing that it would be very easy for those who want to abide by such evidence, relating facts which are absolutely untrue, to ignore Indian claims.

As a matter of fact, he complained quite seriously that the subject matter of the film Le Festin des Morts was tendencious and based on no written documents, except for a few excerpts from "Relations" published by the Jesuit Fathers.

Consequently and following this evidence, I should like to point out to the minister that he should take for granted that tribes could submit evidence which would not necessarily be evidence in writing, in short, evidence which would not necessarily be taken from a conversation and some evidence in writing, but rather from Indian hereditary background which would really permit them to enjoy the use of a property or properties for which they were responsible many years ago, even more than a century ago.

Mr. Speaker, it should be kept in mind that in certain regions, more particularly in the Lorette reserve, located in my constituency, large tracts of land have been surrendered either by the tribe itself, or by the agent of the department or by others performing duties for both the department and the tribe.

The Lorette Indian reserve is actually confined within a territory which is much too small and which even a financial compensation would add nothing to the land of these Indians who have to live in this reserve which is too small for them. I hope the commission will take those facts into account when it is considering the request of Indian bands and even try to obtain more land for them so that they may continue community living on a reserve if they so desire.

Everybody knows that the way of life, tastes and aspirations of the Indians who live in the various parts of Canada differ from one band or tribe to the other. Consequently, compensation awarded to Indians of British Columbia, for instance, would be totally inadequate as compared compensation given to Indians of a reservation in the province of Quebec or elsewhere, more particularly to the Huron reservation of Lorette.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to provide this information to the minister so that he could give full consideration to the recommendations that will be made not only concerning financial compensation but also with respect to a new allocation of land that would allow Indians to keep their reservation and to increase their numbers.

I am pleased that the minister has announced that this legislation will be referred to a joint committee for the convenience of those who have representations to make to the government. In addition, like the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), I hope that the minister and the government will welcome the recommendations made by the various Indian bands of the country, which, as I stated a moment ago, have different aspirations, according to the place where they live.

I am convinced that the minister will be fair as always, that he will allow the Indians who appear before the committee to make recommendations and that he will try to have those recommendations adopted to facilitate the enforcement of the regulations of the Indian claims commission.

Mr. Speaker, it must be remembered that this legislation is not meant to protect the government against the Indians but rather to enable the latter to enjoy their vested rights, their natural rights, in short to protect them against the government and the rest of the Canadian people.

I hope that the minister will dictate to the Indian Claims Commission the philosophy it must follow, making it clear that it is created to protect the Indians and give them all they are entitled to, even if some rights do not exactly correspond to the provisions of the law. In fact, the commission should take into account the general interest of the Indians and not only that of the government. I am convinced that justice can be done with regard to all Indians, wherever they live in Canada. Moreover, I am convinced that the various Indian tribes will greatly benefit from this if all the factors I have mentioned are taken into account.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to add a few words to the debate on the second reading of Bill C-123, to provide for the disposition of Indian claims. I, like many other Members of the House, am very fortunate to have an Indian band in my riding, and I have always been very interested in their welfare.

In looking over the bill I support its general provisions, with a few exceptions which have been very adequately pointed out by my colleague the hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), who preceded me. I think the bill is quite an improvement over the proposals presented to the House in the fall of 1963. At that time our party and most of the Opposition took a pretty strong stand against the proposals, regarding them as inadequate, but I think due to the representations made by our Indian friends themselves and the advice given by the Opposition at that time, the Government has now incorporated in this bill a lot of good, sound propositions.

In general, the main reasons why it is considered necessary to establish an Indian Claims Commission under special legislation I think I can enumerate briefly. There is a legacy of bad faith in the minds of the Indians which still has to be overcome. Some of their claims are not unreasonable but it is difficult to deal with them in the courts because of technicalities. It is desired to bring an end to some of these claims which have persisted for years and years. It is hoped to deal with all past claims by establishing a cut-off date by which claims must be filed. These principles have been incorporated in this bill.

There are a variety of claims which can be made, and I should like to enumerate one or two of them for the enlightenment of the House. The establishment of an Indian Claims Commission has been advocated for many years by Indians and by others to right the wrongs which the Indians claim they have suffered in their dealings with the white man, dating back to the early days of settlement. The claims range all the way from taking land without proper compensation being agreed upon by treaty or otherwise, the failure to discharge fully treaty obligations, and improper use of Indian trust funds, to general claims based not in law but on an alleged failure by Canada to deal honourably, fairly and in good conscience with the Indians.

The advantages of this new legislation over the 1963 bill are summarized roughly as follows. The term for consideration of the claims has been extended from two years to three years. The Indians will be given legal assistance in establishing their claims, which I think is a very important improvement over the original proposals of 1963. They will be given financial assistance in establishing their claims. This, of course, is also of great importance because of the financial incapacity of our Indian friends in many cases. The clause dealing with the Indian claims court is also a very important step.

I also note that in setting out the duties of the Commission staff other employment is prohibited. I think that is an excellent thing. It is good to know that this Commission will dedicate itself to working directly, intimately and consistently with the problems of the Indians alone. In other words, it will not be dividing its attention between this and other matters, so that the Indians will really feel that we are taking a serious look at the situation.

I do not want to take up the time of this House because I think we have already had a very good discussion. I was a little disturbed by the carping attitude of some of our friends in the N.D.P. about this legislation, because by and large it seems to me to be worthy of support. I feel that the Government is taking a proper stand in placing this resolution before the House and I look forward to its being considered by a joint committee at an early date. I am sure it will expeditiously be transferred into legislative action for the benefit of our first Canadians.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall during the time I have been a Member of this House ever experiencing such a strange mixture of feelings as that which came upon me last night after examining the terms of the bill now before us. My feelings were of sorrow, rage, shame and disappointment. It seems to me quite incomprehensible that a Government of Canada, after having laboured for so long and so mightily in respect of the presentation they intended to make to us, should have produced the mouse they have produced.

The hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) made reference to the fact that the bill we are now discussing is almost identical in its important particulars to the one introduced last December, although he did point out certain minor changes that have been proposed.

When the Minister spoke on second reading, he indicated that he had received some 300 letters and briefs containing suggestions of changes to the draft bill that was circulated particularly among the Indian people across Canada. I was reasonably optimistic when I spoke yesterday at the resolution stage that when we had an opportunity of reading the bill we would find that we could accept it and give it our support with reasonably happy hearts. I am saddened and angered because, as far as I am concerned, that is not the case.

I find it difficult to comprehend how in this day and age, in the kind of world in which we as descendents of Europeans live—and I made some reference to this yesterday—it is possible that such an utter lack of imagination could be exercised in this kind of legislation. When I spoke yesterday I said I had no hesitation in expressing my views that this subject placed before the House in the resolution involved perhaps the most important subject this Parliament would ever consider, and I have not altered my views that this subject placed before the in my view of the question as to whether the legislation itself dealt adequately with the subject matter of the resolution was one which would decide whether or not we as Canadians would be able to hold up our heads with pride in the world. It is my submission that because of the nature of this bill now before us we cannot do that.

Yesterday I made reference to a record which was made of a visit to Vancouver Island by a man named Gilbert Malcolm Sproat, who described the manner in which he had taken occupancy of the particular area of Vancouver Island, in which I live. Gilbert Malcolm Sproat in my view was a very enlightened and far-seeing individual in his day and generation. After his return to Great Britain he wrote a book, and in the concluding chapter he makes some observations on his experiences on the western shores of what is now Canada.

As far as I can determine, if we in this Parliament adopt this proposition today we will be at least 100 years behind the times. We will not have advanced beyond the horizons which were reached by Gilbert Malcolm Sproat 100 years ago. In my view the proposal now presented to us by this Government of Canada does not measure up to those standards which were envisaged by Gilbert Malcolm Sproat.

To illustrate my point in this regard I should again like to refer to and quote from a chapter of that book in which the author makes reference to the duties of government. I should like to read from page 288 where the author has written:

> In granting constitutions to colonies, the Crown should have insisted on provisions as regards the treatment of the natives; it should have reserved to itself a greater authority than it is now able to exercise, through its colonial governors, in directing the policy of colonial legislatures toward the aborigines. The rule of policy which requires that colonies must work their own way by their own energies, without expecting assistance from the parent country—a rule open, I think, from a national point of view, to various objections—is one that cannot, with justice, be strained to comprehend the treatment of the aborigines. The question is not whether colonists shall be assisted to build up their own fortunes, but whether certain conditions of their social state shall, without any mitigation, be allowed to exercise a deadly influence upon their fellow-subjects; whether they shall not be urged or impelled toward some system of counteraction which shall cancel or compensate for injuries so inflicted upon the native population. As already hinted, our best efforts might be futile; but there would be glory in the trial, and there would be some use in it, too, if it only showed clearly to the public, how far beyond any human capacity and the solemn duties and overwhelming responsibilities of an English statesman. May God raise up men among us for such work, and give them sound minds and the spirit of prayer!

> It must further be admitted, as regards Vancouver Island and British Columbia, that, notwithstanding laws for its prevention, a lucrative trade is carried on in many parts by the sale of spirits to the Indians. The destructive effect of this liquor traffic has been described in the last chapter. It is also the case that, wherever any considerable number of white men are congregated, their seduction, debauchery, and disease become the fate of the native females. Other injuries and discouragements, already alluded to—which, to a certain extent, are unavoidable—come upon the aborigines, through the occupation of their country by the settlers. Their hunting and fishing places are intruded upon, their social customs disregarded, and their freedom curtailed, by the unwelcome presence, and often unmannerly bearing, of those who are stronger than themselves. Admitting the lawfulness of the surplus of over-peopled civilized countries seeking homes, and building homesteads in new and thinly inhabited territory—admitting also their right to acquire property in such territory, in spite of the opposition of savages, who do not adequately occupy the land—it is a reasonable claim—a claim, indeed, of simple justice—that the injury done to the native population, as a whole, should be counterbalanced, not according to the Indians' poor ideas of gifts of food or blankets, but by a wise and paternal action of the Crown, in some practical way, on their behalf. It is unlikely, as already stated, that it would be possible entirely to prevent the evils mentioned. But it is surely incumbent upon those with whom the responsibility primarily rests to strive in every way to mitigate these evils; in such case, perhaps, though, in spite of these efforts, many Indian communities would be destroyed, others might be benefited, and perhaps regenerated.

If one compares the bill before us now with the ideas and ideals there set forth by Gilbert Malcolm Sproat, it seems to be it is evident that the bill, even when set against the yardsticks he used 100 years ago, is a pretty poor excuse for doing the kind of job of regeneration of the Indian committees still surviving within the borders of what is now Canada that needs to be done.

The bill proposes to set up two bodies, one of them a commission and the other an appeal court. So far as the provisions with respect to the constitution of the Commission are concerned, I suggest that the horizon of the bill is limited by the concept that the onus is going to be upon the Indian people themselves to establish that they have a claim or claims and that this is a reversal of the situation that should prevail. In this day and age we should really recognize that a broad and basic claim exists and we should not require that the Indian people, through oral or written evidence, establish in the first instance that there is such a claim.

While one may agree or disagree with some of the details and mechanics of the bill, that is something that can be argued in committee. The thing we must consider and assess here is the basic concept and purpose of the Commission as proposed by the bill. In the bill the concept and purpose of the Commission as proposed are completely inadequate to the job that needs to be done. As I read the bill, apart from anything else the operations of the Commission are restricted to dealing only with actions taken by the Crown or by an officer, servant or agent of the Crown acting on behalf of the Crown. This leaves out of the picture the whole field of what may have been done by private citizens over the years since we occupied this country.

The Minister pointed out when he was speaking that the bill does not apply to actions taken by Provincial Governments since Confederation. I would have to agree with him that constitutionally we cannot alter what the provinces may have done, but I would suggest that we do not need to exclude actions which have been taken by provincial governments from the terms of reference of the Commission. We can take into account actions they have taken which have mitigated against the Indian people, actions which have ignored their just rights. We can take them into account, hear claims and accept the responsibility of the nation as a whole to see that compensation is available for actions of that sort taken by provincial authorities.

Goodness knows, when one looks into the record of the actions of the Province of British Columbia since 1871 when we entered Confederation there certainly is a wide area to be explored in detail in respect of what governments of that province have done concerning the rights of the Indians to land and many other matters. It is generally recognized that the whole outlook of the Government of the Province of British Columbia since Confederation toward the question of Indian land rights has been niggardly in the extreme and in many cases has resulted in actually taking away lands which were available to the Indians at the time of Confederation.

Some may try to make much of the fact that in the bill there is a new provision for some assistance to bands in making presentations to the Commission. But I would suggest that here again the horizon is so limited by the niggardly concept of the basic terms of reference of the Commission that once again there is proof of the lack of imagination which I referred to earlier in my remarks. The bill suggests that where the Commission is satisfied that a band does not have sufficient resources it may provide assistance and there is also provision for repayment by the band of part or all of the cost of such assistance. This merely emphasizes the point I was making earlier that the whole concept of the bill is to place the onus on the Indian people to establish in the first place that they have claims, and I suggest that is a principle this House should not accept.

The other body which the bill proposes to establish is the Indian Claims Appeal Court. Here again, the Exchequer Court of Canada is in effect going to be set up as the Indian Claims Appeal Court. Without in any way attempting to derogate from the Exchequer Court and its proper function in the structure of our Canadian society, I submit that by its very nature the Exchequer Court is not the kind of place to which appeals should be taken respecting Indian claims and that the people who comprise the membership of the Exchequer Court are not necessarily, by reason of their whole background and outlook, the most desirable people to discharge this function.

This again proves to me that the Government of the day has not gone beyond the colonial horizon of the Government of the United Kingdom of 100 years ago when Gilbert Malcolm Sproat wrote the book from which I have quoted. In fact, it seems to me they have completely ignored the reality of the desires of people throughout the world, who have been subject, to real emancipation. We have an example of this at the present time in our neighbour to the south, where the people of the southern part of that country, who have been subjected to indignities for centuries, are now working toward, desirous of and in some respects achieving true emancipation.

I know it is difficult for those of us not of the Indian race really to understand what is in the minds and thoughts of our Indian brothers. I have made some effort to do so among the Indian people in my own area whom I have had the opportunity to get to know best. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I am convinced in my own mind that the Indian people are now ready and willing under some proper arrangement to let bygones be bygones, but if they are going to feel that bygones are bygones the method of bringing this about has to be based on a much broader concept and a much broader framework than this bill provides. They have to feel that they have been treated as are the people of Africa and Asia who are being given their freedom. It seems to me that the kind of concept that our Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) was talking about in London in respect of Rhodesia is the kind of concept that should be put into this bill. If it comes to that, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be more fitting if the Prime Minister of Canada were in this House concerning himself with promulgating this concept here as it relates to our own aborigines than in London concerning himself with the people of Rhodesia.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I should like to propose an amendment to the motion for second reading. I move, seconded by the hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch):

That Bill C-123 be not now read a second time, but that in the opinion of this House consideration should be given to the introduction of legislation that will provide for

(a) an Indian Claims Commission enabled by its terms of reference and its composition to assist the Indian peoples of Canada to prepare for disposition of all outstanding claims arising out of the occupation by non-Indians of territories now within Canada; to search out and hear evidence in relation thereto and to make such awards, both general and particular, as are just and fair, and

(b) an Indian Claims Appeal Court, the Presiding Officer of which shall be a jurist, other than a Canadian citizen, of international repute, which shall hear appeals from any decision of the Commission.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has serious reservations as to whether or not this proposed amendment is in order. I should like to hear comments from hon. Members on the point of order.

Mr. Nicholson: I have very few comments to make. I would point out that the adoption of such a provision as the one relating to the appointment of an appeal court constituted of judges other than those of the Exchequer Court would involve an expenditure of funds which could hardly be proposed by a private Member.

Mr. Barnett: In so far as the point raised by the Minister is concerned, apart from any other considerations that may be involved, it does not seem to me to be a valid argument.

[Mr. Barnett.]

The form of the amendment is consistent with the form that is normally used to express the opinion of Members that the Government should agree to give consideration to doing something. In other words, it is in the form of the resolutions usually debated from time to time in this House. I submit the Minister has not advanced any ground for the disallowance of the amendment.

Mr. MacNaught: It would appear to me, Mr. Speaker, that the same purpose could be achieved by voting against the bill as is proposed by the amendment. The amendment says that this bill should not now be read a second time. This purpose could be achieved by voting against the bill. The amendment also refers to consideration being given to the introduction of legislation, but if that legislation were introduced by a private Member it would be out of order. I believe the substantial objection is the fact that the amendment is seeking to achieve something which could be achieved by voting against second reading.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if I may draw the attention of the Chair to Citation 382 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, which has been cited in this House on other occasions in substantiation of what we call reasoned amendments to the second reading of a bill.

It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a Bill, to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principle, policy, or provisions of the bill, or expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction, or prosecution; or otherwise opposed to its progress; or seeking further information in relation to the Bill by Committees, Commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence or the opinion of Judges.

I submit that the hon. Member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) has moved an amendment within the provisions of citation 382 by proposing a resolution which is declaratory of some principle adverse to or differing from the principle, policy or provision of the bill, and also expressing an opinion as to the circumstances connected with its introduction and prosecution. I submit it is a reasoned amendment because it does make that declaration in at least two instances.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The reservation which the Chair had a moment ago had to do with the thought that perhaps this amendment anticipated the committee stage. However, I am in full agreement with the hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and his colleagues who have argued in support of the amendment, that this is a reasoned amendment within the terms of citation 382. There may be a slight difficulty in connection with subparagraph (b) which may perhaps involve an expenditure of money which has not been authorized at this stage. In any event, these difficulties are not too apparent and for these reasons the Chair is disposed to accept the amendment.

Is the House ready for the question?

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Barnett), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. Is the House ready for the question on the main motion?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock p.m. this evening are as follows: The hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre—labour conditions—inquiry as to amendment of Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act; the hon. Member for York-Humber—administration of justice—Toronto—production and C.B.C. showing of sex exploitation film; the hon. Member for Cumberland—Expo '67—request for consideration of expenditures by House Committee.

It being six o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private Members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills.

Private Bills

PRIVATE BILLS

INTERPROVINCIAL PIPE LINE COMPANY

The House resumed from Tuesday, June 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wahn for the second reading of Bill No. S-7, respecting Interprovincial Pipe Line Company.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have only one or two words to say on this bill, which came before the House last year. I notice the mover has not taken the opportunity to refer to that bill, but it is worthy of note that the explanatory notes in the bill this year are more in keeping with the intentions of the company. It is a fact—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May we have order, please. It is extremely difficult to follow the hon. Member with conversations going on in the House at this time.

Mr. Peters: It appears that the explanatory note indicates the intentions of the company, but I think the mover should have explained them. It was explained to me that there is an interest to keep the price range of the stock within the reach of those who purchase stock on the market, namely around $20 to $25. The reason for this, as explained to me by the company, is to allow more people to participate in the stockholding of the company. It would also bring the price within the range of Canadians, thus making it easier for more Canadians to participate in the company.

If this explanation is true, and I believe it is, when the bill returns from committee I would be prepared to move a motion to split the stock still further, because I should like to see an additional split. It is worthy of note that it has already been split ten for one, and it is now being split five for one, which in effect means that the original issue has multiplied 50 times. If the argument that bringing the stock within a reasonable range would allow more Canadians to participate in the stockholding of the company does hold water, at the present market value, which is about $88 a share, the present split would bring the price to about $18. But splitting the stock again ten for one would have the advantage of bringing the stock value down to approximately $1.80 to $2 per share, with the result that this would accomplish the end explained by the company and would be in keeping with the suggestions which have been made, that the lower the price of the stock the more opportunity would be provided Canadians to buy the stock of this company.

About 25 per cent of the total capital of this company is in stock, the remainder being in bonds at very low interest rates. This makes it possible for the company to pay a better than average dividend, better than that which they have regularly been paying for a number of years. I would suggest this explanation is much more honest than the one advanced last year, which was that if we reduced the stock value it would allow workers in the company to buy it. That was a lot of eyewash, as I think everyone who looked at the bill was aware. The company was not issuing half a share of stock every pay day, or anything like that, but was issuing certain stock over periods worked by the employees of the company. It seemed unreasonable to me that an employee would receive one share for $9 or even ten shares for $90, and that this would apply on a monthly or pay day basis. Therefore an agency would buy shares on behalf of the employees, so it really did not make any difference in relation to the cost of the stock.

The argument being used is one which would probably be accepted by most companies in this field who feel that when a share reaches a value of $100 it is in a class the average purchaser cannot afford. This means that for 90 shares a purchaser would have to pay $9,000. This is not considered to be a large block in the investment picture. The smaller blocks are difficult to come by, and therefore are not in keeping with opportunities flowing to individual purchasers with a desire to purchase stock of the $10 to $20 class.

I see nothing wrong with the explanation made and I hope the committee will be able to ascertain the advantages of stock splitting in terms of greater participation by individuals wishing to purchase small amounts. I hope some consideration will be given to more extensive stock splitting so that these companies will not have to return to parliament every two or three years, as they have done in the past, to split the stock five to one, but will be allowed to split them 50 to one.

In order to give an opportunity to other Members to participate in the debate on this matter, I am prepared to allow this to be referred to the committee in the hope that it will give some consideration to the discussions which took place last year. The committee of this year should take advantage of the suggestions and discussions of last year's committee so that these companies will not have to return to parliament in a short period of time for a new stock split.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 105 the said bill is now referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

LAURENTIDE BANK OF CANADA

The House resumed from Thursday, June 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford for the second reading of Bill No. C-95. to incorporate Laurentide Bank of Canada, and on the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Bélanger.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. Member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford) with whom I have discussed this bill, I should like to make a few remarks before its passage.

After the many explanations that have been made in respect of this bill, I am sure that no one in the House will want to deny any longer to the people of British Columbia the opportunity of having a banking institution, with its head office located in that province, or the right to do their banking through a commercial banking institution, the privilege enjoyed daily by people in provinces such as Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia.

So many have spoken about this bill, in argument both for and against, I am sure hon. Members are now ready to vote on the motion. I hope they will vote in favour of this motion so that the people involved may go ahead with the incorporation of this institution, allowing the people of British Columbia to enjoy the advantages of the establishment of a banking institution with head offices in that province.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, before this motion is carried I should just like to say that there are controversial aspects to this bill which have been discussed at some length in the House in recent months. We in this party are perfectly willing to allow this bill to be referred to the committee for discussion, on the understanding that that committee will have the opportunity of hearing from expert witnesses and officials, in order to find the answers to some of the questions that have been raised.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment (Mr. Bélanger) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on the main motion?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 105 the said bill is now referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

BANK OF WESTERN CANADA

The House resumed from Tuesday, June 15, consideration of the motion of Mrs. Konantz for the second reading of Bill No. C-99, to incorporate Bank of Western Canada, and on the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Laprise.

Mr. D. G. Hahn (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, the mover of this bill is not in the House, but I am sure the bill has been before the House for a long enough period of time that most hon. Members are familar with it. It is my hope therefore that the House will pass it today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those against say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment (Mr. Laprise) negatived.

Private Bills

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on the main motion?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, again this bill is controversial, and one in respect of which many questions have been asked over a period of two years as to whether the interest of Canada can be well served by the establishment of an additional bank which has wide international financial complications. This matter is a serious one and I hope the committee will have the means of considering the problems associated with it in arriving at certain answers to questions. For that reason we have no objection to allowing this to go to the committee for a detailed study. I am sure that committee will take into consideration the relationship of this bill to bills in respect of other proposed bank establishments. We in this party hope that the committee will be able to decide whether this bill, as well as the bill with which we just dealt, is designed in such a way as to satisfy the arguments which have been advanced. We hope answers will be forthcoming in respect of those questions regarding the establishment of additional banks in various parts of the country, and that the principles herein meet all the conditions proposed by those questions.

• (6:20 p.m.)

It should be pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that these probably will be the last two banks to come before the House of Commons to seek incorporation by way of private Members' bills because the House has seen fit to pass legislation, recommended by the hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), which from now on will mean that those seeking to incorporate a bank will be able to do so under regulations to be laid down, rather than through a private bill in the House of Commons. In looking at this bill I think the committee will have to keep in mind the regulations that are going to apply with respect to similar incorporations in the future.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 105 the said bill stands referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

BANK OF CANADA ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE FORM OF BANK NOTES

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-9, to amend the Bank of Canada Act (form and material of notes).

[Translation]

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal very briefly with this bill because recently the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) made a very interesting decision resulting in the inclusion in a bill to amend the Bank of Canada Act of a bill which I have introduced in the house for the third time.

When I introduced my bill, I said that in fact our bank notes bear a deceiving reference, which could mislead the public with regard to its true nature. In fact, on our bank notes it is said that they are payable to bearer on demand.

Every member in this house knows that since 1940 our bank notes are not backed by a gold reserve. That is why I introduced this bill; it is useless for our bank notes to bear this reference which is misleading for the public.

I remember very well hearing some people use this as an argument to prove that our currency is still backed by gold. As a matter of fact, that guarantee was removed in 1940, and the Minister of Finance himself stated recently as recorded in Hansard, on page 1282:

> A related amendment is proposed in respect of notes of the Bank of Canada to remove the description "payable to bearer on demand". Since these notes are themselves legal tender and have never, in fact, been convertible into gold, the present wording is unnecessary and in some quarters liable to misinterpretation.

Therefore, I was very happy when the Minister of Finance made that statement, because it confirmed the principle of the bill I introduced in the house for the third time. It was on that occasion that I expressed publicly my satisfaction and said that the minister had actually incorporated my bill in his.

In view of the circumstances, I do not think a lengthy discussion of the subject is necessary at this time. In fact, my bill is being incorporated in the minister's bill and will be passed when the government's legislation itself is enacted by the House of Commons.

Anyhow, I avail myself of this opportunity to thank the Minister of Finance for having kindly incorporated this bill in his, thus proving that my proposals in that respect were sound and factual, in spite of newspaper reports that may have been published from time to time and which seemingly endeavoured to show to the public that the matter was of no great importance. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, it is a very important matter for one has no right to sow the seeds of error.

Finally, I should like to say that it would be proper to replace those words by the expression "legal tender" on our currency, as it is done in several countries. That expression should appear on the Bank of Canada notes because the latter are the legal tender in our country.

That is all I have to say on the matter, Mr. Speaker, and again I commend the government for having accepted my bill by incorporating it in its legislation to amend the Bank of Canada act.

[English]

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-9 introduced by the hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) is in my humble opinion a very excellent bill. The explanatory note is quite interesting. It reads as follows:

> The purpose of this bill as stated therein is to provide that bank notes shall not be inaccurate and misleading. As for example: at present the notes issued by the Bank of Canada are certainly misleading and inaccurate from the fact they contain the following statement or bear the words: "Will pay to the bearer on demand". These notes being legal tender, it is misleading for such words to be printed on Bank of Canada notes.

I cannot quite agree with the hon. Member's explanatory note in all respects, but in some respects I do. I cannot agree with him when he takes objection to the words "will pay to the bearer on demand" because I would think it is much better to have bills payable to the bearer on demand than to have bills that are payable on a due date possibly five years from now. I do not think a one dollar bill or any other bill would be of very much use to the public, financiers or financial institutions if it were not payable to the bearer on demand.

To go back to the origin of money, it seems to me that the original bills that were circulated really evolved from the promissory notes that people used and bills had to be payable to the bearer on demand to be of any utility in trade and commerce and banking circles.

• (6:30 p.m.)

I think to some degree the criticism advanced by the hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) is fair. I have here a dollar bill, and I think that all bills issued by the Bank of Canada can be criticized to some degree. As I said, I have a dollar bill in my hand. On the back it has an interesting picture, apparently of a flat section of prairie. There is shown in the picture, a road and a grain elevator, some telephone poles and what looks like tall grass on one side and short grass on the other side. I do not see any snow blowers or Cadillacs travelling the road. I believe this is a summer scene, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fairweather: Will the hon. Member permit a question?

Mr. Ryan: Yes.

Mr. Fairweather: In the picture on the dollar bill is there any semblance of a Member of Parliament trying to talk out a bill?

Mr. Ryan: Well, there is a very good looking fellow in one corner. This is a green bill, and possibly he is a little Irish. However, it was not that particular feature of the bill with which I was concerned. I was trying to get over to the other side, actually.

Now, on the other side of this dollar bill there is a good picture of Her Majesty the Queen. On the left side, à gauche, it says one dollar, and on the right, à droite, it says un dollar. This bill was made by the British American Bank Note Company Limited; that is a kind of multi-cultural company, I suspect. It is signed by J. R. Beattie, Deputy Governor of the Bank of Canada and by L. Rasminsky, the Governor of the Bank of Canada. Louis' signature is rather hard to make out, Mr. Speaker.

What really disturbs, agitates and excites me about our dollar bill is the fact that it has on it, "will pay to the bearer on demand", or, in French, "paiera au porteur sur demande". Then, it simply says, "one dollar". Apparently the Bank of Canada promises to pay to the bearer on demand one dollar. I take it that if you take your dollar to Mr. Rasminsky and say "Here is a dollar bill; I am the bearer. The bank promised to pay me one dollar," he will give you another dollar which looks almost the same as the first one, except perhaps the serial number. So, you end up much better off than you were before. Now, that is the situation in respect of the one dollar bill.

I have in my hand now a ten dollar bill. You are aware that at one time the banks used to be permitted to print their own currency. They used to pay the bearer on demand in gold. I understand that for every dollar they had on deposit they could print their own bank notes and extend credit to the extent of twenty for one. This was a very good way of making money. If you can get interest at 6 per cent on $20, it is better than getting it on one dollar.

However, if I may get back to this very interesting ten dollar bill. It is a particularly pretty purple colour. On the back of the bill there is a very interesting scene. It is sort of half summer and half winter because apparently it is a picture of part of the Rocky Mountain Range in Western Canada. I cannot tell you whether or not it is in Alberta or British Columbia.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please; I wonder if the hon. Member's remarks are entirely relevant to the bill before us. I suggest that he bear in mind the fact his remarks at this time should be relevant to the bill proposed by the hon. Member for Chicoutimi.

Mr. Ryan: I will bear your admonition very much in mind and I will try to be relevant to the bill at hand. We will get back to the bill so there will be no problem of relevancy. I quote from clause 1:

> Subsection (4) of Section 21 of the Bank of Canada Act is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> (4) the form and material of notes shall be subject to approval by the Minister, but such notes shall not contain any wording which is misleading or which might deceive the public as to the true nature thereof, or of the obligations incurred by the bank in issuing them and all notes shall be printed in both the English and the French language.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this ten dollar bill is certainly printed in both the French language and the English language. It, too, has on it the words, "will pay to the bearer on demand", and the words "paiera au porteur sur demande".

Mr. Patterson: I wonder if the hon. Member will permit a question?

Mr. Ryan: Certainly.

Mr. Patterson: I wonder if the hon. Member would like us to get extra copies of Hansard for today and send them to his constituents?

Mr. Ryan: I do not believe it would trouble them too much. I would not want to pay for the extra copies, but it would not bother me very much if they were supplied with them by the hon. Member for Fraser Valley.

I am sure that by this time there are quite a few other Members who will be anxious to speak on this particular measure. In addition to this ten dollar bill, I have a twenty dollar bill here.

Mr. Gelber: Table it.

Mr. Ryan: I hope the hon. Member will not insist that I table it. This is all I have left to last me for the week. I see there are one or two others who would like to say a few words on this important subject, so I reluctantly take my seat.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Vincent Drouin (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I did not expect to speak on Bill No. C-9 tonight. I did not anticipate that it would be called tonight but I am pleased with this opportunity of commending the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) who took the fine initiative of introducing this bill.

It is quite seldom that I can congratulate a political opponent or hon. members opposite but tonight, I think the hon. member for Chicoutimi deserves congratulations especially in view of the fact that his bill has been fruitful; indeed if it is not passed tonight, we have good reasons to think that the principle behind it will appear in forthcoming government legislation.

The hon. member for Chicoutimi was right in pointing out the meaningless statement found on our banknotes and which reads:

> Will pay to the bearer on demand.

Personally, I have never tried to secure payment of a $1, $10 or $20 note from the governor of the Bank of Canada, but I imagine that if I had called at his office to obtain payment of a banknote, he would have been just as muddled as any of us, because, as others have stated before me, there is no longer any reserve, any gold reserve to back the money in circulation; rather, our money is backed by the country's productive power, and gold is of no more account than any other metal in guaranteeing our money issues.

I do not intend to repeat the words of my colleague who preceded me. He has already spoken about $1, $10 and $20 notes, he failed, however, to speak about $2 bank notes. Now, I do not intend to read what is written on it nor emphasize my admiration for the magnificent scenery on the back of those notes. Rather I will take this opportunity to point out another improvement that could be made on our bank notes.

Our bank notes are in a way the best means of publicity at our disposal in Canada. I wonder if bank notes could not be used to pay tribute to certain Canadian personalities. I am not against monarchy. I would not want to remove systematically the likeness of Her Gracious Majesty Elizabeth II from our bank notes, but I wonder if, the likeness of one or of several great Canadian personalities could not appear on some bank notes as it was done in the case of postage stamps. As for me, I should like to see, for instance, on the bill I am now holding, the face of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who played such a prominent role in the history of our country and who, after a fashion—

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member's remarks are definitely out of order as they have absolutely no bearing on the topic before the house.

Mr. Drouin: If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I shall refer to the first line of the proposed amendment:

> The form and material of notes shall be subject to approval by the Minister.

I feel that the picture to be reproduced on the notes has a bearing on the form of the bank notes, and that I am therefore in order when I speak of the form of the bank note and even when I discuss its details.

The form must not be limited to the physical form of the bank note but extended, in my opinion—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Shefford has raised a very interesting point of order. He pointed out to the Chair that the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes seemed to have gone beyond the rather restrictive limits of the bill under consideration. The hon. member who has the floor is alluding to the first two lines of clause 4 of the Bank of Canada Act now under consideration. I remind him that when we are considering a bill amending enacted legislation, it is permissible to discuss the amendment but not the act which is being amended.

Under the circumstances, although the remarks he is making now are extremely interesting, I would ask the hon. member to keep as much as possible to the bill under consideration.

Mr. Drouin: Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, I will read the new clause (4) as proposed, because the amendment deals essentially with the wording of a new clause (4); I quote:

> Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada enacts as follows:
> Subsection (4) of section 21 of the Bank of Canada Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Now, what is the amendment? This is exactly what is proposed: "That it be substituted at subsection (4)". I read this amendment and not the text of the act, but strictly the amendment—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I remind the hon. member that a ruling has been made by the Chair and that he must comply with it. He is not allowed at this time to discuss the ruling given by the Chair. He has been permitted by the Chair to go on with the remarks he started to make, provided they deal with the subject matter of the bill now before us.

Mr. Drouin: It is not that I do not want to abide by your ruling, Mr. Speaker. On the contrary, I respectfully comply with it. But while deferring to this ruling and strictly adhering to the pertinence of the debate, I would like, for my own guidance and that of other members, to read the text of the amendment.

It reads as follows:

> The form and material of notes are subject to approval by the Minister, but such notes shall not contain any wording which is misleading or which might deceive the public as to the true nature thereof, or of the obligations incurred by the bank in issuing them and all notes shall be printed in both the English and the French language.

It seems to me that in speaking on this amendment, I am not disregarding the ruling you made a moment ago, because it deals with the form and the material of bank notes.

I have nothing to say about the material of notes; it is of the highest quality and the paper compares favourably with that used for bank notes in other countries.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that the hon. member comments once again on your ruling. You have rendered a ruling enjoining him to keep strictly to the principle of the bill. Now, the hon. member disputes the merits of your decision.

Mr. Drouin: Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said following your ruling. I abide by your ruling, but I feel that the debate deals essentially with the amendment, as you rightly pointed out earlier.

Therefore, I strictly confine myself to the amendment, to the new wording proposed in paragraph (4) of section 21 of the Bank Act. Since the amendment deals precisely with the material bank notes are made of, I maintain that I am not out of order when referring to it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I cannot accept the hon. member's interpretation and I remind him of what I said a few minutes ago, namely that the amendment to the resolution under consideration reads as follows. I am quoting now the underlined part of the new act:

—but such notes shall not contain any wording which is misleading or which might deceive the public...etc.

Those are the terms of the amendment and the essence of the bill itself. I therefore ask the hon. member to restrict his comments to this aspect of the matter.

Mr. Drouin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the light of your last words, I will change my subject matter especially since other members wish to speak, I am told, and it is already 6.50 p.m.

Before concluding my comments, I would like to say once more that I entirely agree with the principle of the bill and sincerely hope that this amendment will come into force as soon as possible.

• (6:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. D. G. Hahn (Broadview): There are a few reasons why I am opposed to this bill. I am not raising a point of order at this time but it would seem to me that if this amendment were made it would be necessary to withdraw our currency. It would have to be re-issued, and the process would be expensive.

If we are to do this at all, we must be perfectly sure of the reasons for doing it. I think the proof of the pudding is that the present system works. You can take these notes into a store and buy anything you like as long as you have enough of them. I suggest that if we make a change of the kind now proposed, we should do a complete job; we should not make one specific change without bringing in a great many other changes which might result in improvements. I will give a brief indication what some of these things might be.

At present, for instance, our bills come in a series of colours. We might improve them by changing the colour system. Luminous paint of various colours might end the business of groping in the dark to find the particular unit of currency we are looking for. In the second place we might improve the over-all artistic character of our bills. I happen to have a ten-franc note in my pocket; I have been carrying it around for some time. As a piece of art work it is infinitely superior to our own bills. If we are altering our currency or changing the design we ought surely to try to make it more attractive.

Then we might give serious consideration to changing the denominations. Who can go into a store today and buy anything costing $1 or $2 or $5 or $10? I think we should introduce new denominations of $1.98, $3.98, $4.99, and so on. This would be useful and it would avoid having our pockets full of coppers, which we only lose, anyhow.

There is another suggestion which the House might consider at the same time. Perhaps we could leave blank spaces on parts of the new bills. All of us have had the experience of being in a telephone booth at some time or another. We get a message we need urgently to take down; we scramble for a piece of paper on which to write it. We find nothing. But most people generally have a dollar bill in their pockets. If there were a little blank space left on it, it could serve a dual purpose—not only spending money but a space on which to jot down notes until they can be transferred to a more permanent place.

The hon. Member may have valid reasons to advance in favour of the change he wants to bring about. I think I have valid reasons for mine. So let us hold up passage of this bill until we can bring about a real overhaul of our paper currency.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Hahn: Yes.

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): I would like to ask the hon. member who has just spoken if he will vote against Bill No. C-101 submitted to the house by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and to which we will be asked to give second reading soon. Will he vote against it because he says that it will eliminate the words "will pay to the bearer on demand"?

If he votes against that bill, he will be voting against his own government.

[English]

Mr. Hahn: I am not against this bill because of the specific change suggested by the hon. Member. I just say he does not go far enough.

An hon. Member: Tell Walter that.

Mr. Marvin Gelber (York South): The comments just made by my hon. friend remind me of the story of a man who had his own bank note company. He had a machine printing $20 bills. Perhaps because he did not pay sufficient attention to the operation it began making $19 bills. The man was perturbed but his partner said: "Don't worry, we will get rid of them". On his advice they went to a hardware store in Kalamazoo, approached a cashier with one of the bills and asked her to change it. "Certainly sir" she replied. "Would you like to have a twelve and a seven?"

The hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) read to the House the words he wanted removed—"payable to bearer on demand"—and said they referred to the gold standard. He is right. These words are vestigial remnants. I endorse what the hon. Member said about the gold standard. It is a conception which severely restricted economic development. In 1925, the action of Britain in returning to the gold standard at $4.86⅔ to the pound led to a million men being turned out of work, and subsequently to a general strike. I believe the hon. Member has made an important point in bringing this bill to the attention of the House and to the attention of the public. It emphasizes once more the fact that we are living in a managed economy. Professor Keynes called the gold standard a sacrificial altar, a statement which gives all of us food for thought.

Again I believe we should be grateful to the hon. Member for bringing this important subject to our attention this afternoon.

Mr. Robert Temple (Hastings South): Like other people, I am concerned from time to time with money, or the lack of it. I suppose we are all very much in favour of bank notes—the ones issued by the Bank of Canada rather than the ones certain of us have to sign at the bank from time to time for post-election expenses.

Removal of the words "payable to bearer on demand" would, as my hon. friend from Broadview (Mr. Hahn) has said, necessitate taking them out of circulation and, as I understand it, the party to which the hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) belongs is in favour of putting more money into circulation rather than of taking money out of circulation.

The suggestion has been made that various portraits could be placed on our currency. I understand that a picture of John A. Macdonald—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to have to interrupt the hon. Member but it being seven o'clock the House will now resume the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

INDIAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, DUTIES, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Nicholson for the second reading of Bill No. C-123, to provide for the disposition of Indian claims.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I do not propose to detain the House long on this question of Indian claims. I was struck by the comment of one of the Members of the Official Opposition who expressed surprise at the attacks made on this measure by Members of this party. I would point out that it is no coincidence that those from this party who have attacked this legislation all come from British Columbia. There is a reason for this. We in British Columbia are closer in time to the degrading experiences to which the native population has been subjected. Those of us who have friends among the Indian population know from personal contact with them the sort of treatment they and their fathers have suffered. It is so recent, in British Columbia; memory need go back no further than this.

• (7:00 p.m.)

I am disturbed by the fact that this bill makes no effort whatsoever to deal with what I would call the intangible injuries inflicted on these people—the deep psychological wounds which cannot be measured in the narrow, legalistic terms of the bill before us, now. I have a great many Indian friends. A few years ago when I was in Vancouver I received a message from one of the Indian chiefs off the coast of British Columbia. He was an extremely eminent Indian leader, a man who, I have not the slightest doubt, if fate had placed him in different surroundings, would have been, not chief of the Cape Mudge tribe of the Kwatkiutl Indians, but Prime Minister of this country. He was a man of tremendous capacity, intelligence, shrewdness and perception who, on becoming chief at the age of 18, saw what would happen to his people with the beginnings of the white invasion of his country and forcibly wrenched them out of their primitive surroundings and made them equip themselves to cope with the white man's world.

A few years ago when living in Vancouver I had a message from this old gentleman to ask me if I would take two of his grandsons into my household in Vancouver so that they could go to high school there, because the local high school close to where he lived refused to take Indian children. We took the two boys into our household and one could not find two nicer young men anywhere. Yet this is what they had been subjected to. Those lads knew that they had been sent down there because their white neighbours on that part of Vancouver Island decided that they were not good enough to attend school with their children. Then there have been other specific cases where other intangible injury has been done to them.

I was interested to hear the Minister speak earlier in rather contemptuous terms of all the other "ologies" suggested as the sort of disciplines and vocations members of the Commission should perhaps have been trained in. I would suggest to him that that expression which he used this afternoon indicates that he knows very little, very little indeed, about what has been done to the Indian population of the province which he represents as a Member of the Cabinet. Possibly he does not even know what a disastrous and dislocating effect the banning of the potlatches to the coast Indians entailed. The authorities decided, in their wisdom, that these were just drunken orgies in which chiefs competed with each other in extravagance in the giving of gifts. No one with any training as an anthropologist would have been satisfied with that explanation. The very slightest investigation would have shown him that the role of the potlatch in the lives of the Indians on the Pacific Coast was an extremely important one because it was at these gatherings that all the marriages were arranged.

Marriage among native Indians of British Columbia is quite a complicated and difficult problem, because there must not be marriage between people of the same clans. The clans are widely distributed among many bands and many tribes. But it was only at these potlatches that the old men and women who had the genealogies in their minds could O.K. proposed marriage arrangements between the young men and women. When the potlatches were abandoned it broke one of the vital elements in Kwatkiutl culture, and this was due to the ignorance of the people who conducted the affairs in British Columbia on behalf of the Government of Canada in connection with the Indians.

I would suggest to the Minister that instead of being so contemptuous of the suggestion that—

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. I let a similar remark go by the first time, but the hon. Member has no right to put words into my mouth. I did not use contemptuous language this afternoon. I referred to the fact that suggestions had been made regarding the use of anthropologists, sociologists and I said a number of other "ologists" had been included. I was not being contemptuous; I was using it as a descriptive phrase, and the hon. Member is now repeating his earlier remark. I ask that he withdraw it.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Then if I misunderstood the Minister, I will willingly withdraw; but on the other hand it seemed to me that I distinctly heard a somewhat contemptuous inflection in his voice when he said "and I do not know how many other ologies had been suggested". To me this bore the connotation of a certain contempt for the suggestions. However, as the Minister has said he had no such intention, I am ready to apologize to him for having not put words into his mouth but perhaps put inflections into his voice.

Let me come to a more concrete case of injury to the Indian people, inflicted this time by the Indian affairs officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Among my Indian friends there is a young man who went to school with my children, who is a close personal friend of my son's, a young man who is now a chief in his tribe. He is also a teacher and he was teaching at the time at the school in Hazelton, which is an amalgamated school; that is to say, he described it to me as being attended by approximately 50 per cent white children and approximately 50 per cent Indian children.

In 1960 this young man came to visit me in my home on Vancouver Island. He happened to be down visiting his family and he called on us as old friends. He told me of a horrifying experience he had had at Hazelton when he and his fellow teachers were instructed by officials of the Federal Government in the Department of National Health and Welfare that the Indian children were to attend in rotation a dental clinic which had been set up for three days in Hazelton to deal with Indian dental problems.

They despatched the children as instructed, so many at a time, and he said that it was not until well through the first day that they suddenly realized what was happening to these children. When the children came back to school their mouths were streaming with blood. The staff, including my young Indian friend, made inquiries and found that these dentists who had been sent by the Government of Canada to deal with the dental problems of the native population were not even contemplating saving teeth; they were extracting them, and it seems to me extracting them, in view of the condition that Gordon Reid described to me, in a very clumsy and inefficient way.

My colleague the hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), who then, as now, was a Member of the House—I was not then a Member of the House—asked questions of the then Minister of National Health and Welfare and eventually got the figures regarding these extractions. On the three days on which these teeth were extracted at Hazelton 103 permanent teeth were extracted from those Indian children. I cite this as an example of the sort of treatment our Indian people have had. Many of their wrongs, I would say their most damaging and brutal wrongs, have been of an intangible nature, of the nature that strips human beings of dignity and self-respect because they are looked down on with contempt.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we will not be able to deal with this question, which is the real question, on the basis of strict legality with regard to claims of land and property of various sorts. There is something much more fundamental involved. I should like to see this Commission empowered to take evidence from those who are trained in sociology, anthropology and history, who could tell the Commission of the effects of the white occupation of Canada on the native population, so that the Canadian people—those of us of non-Indian origin—would be aroused and alerted to the appalling crimes which have been committed in our name. I do not see how we can do this if we are not going to allow anybody to appear before that Commission who has not in his hands documentary proof of some material damage inflicted on some Indian or band of Indians. We are not going to be able to arouse the Canadian population to the responsibilities on their shoulders to do something at this time for these people.

I mentioned earlier that there was evidence to support those of us in British Columbia raising the loudest and sharpest protest about this resolution. In British Columbia the native Indians have not yet been driven to the conditions of those I have seen who lived in other provinces, who are now a pitiful remnant, without hope of rehabilitation, with everything gone. In spite of the treatment they have received in British Columbia and the diseases they have acquired from white conquerors of the country, they have by fighting made a comeback. I am proud to say that in my own constituency two Indians very carefully and skilfully forced a case in respect of some of their rights in British Columbia, as I am sure the Minister is well aware. They deliberately broke the game laws of British Columbia and successfully appealed to the higher courts a conviction of a magistrate. I understand there is a possibility that the Province of British Columbia will further appeal this case to the Supreme Court of Canada.

This action was taken by these people to underline the high handed manner in which all their claims to land and property in British Columbia have been swept to one side without, as my colleague for Skeena (Mr. Howard) this afternoon suggested, even a semblance of legality.

I was disturbed to find in the bill that, while there is provision for action against the Crown in the right of the province before Confederation, there is no provision whatsoever to deal with different agreements and undertakings signed by representatives of the Hudson's Bay Company on Vancouver Island, in respect of various Indian tribes, relating to land on that Island. I do not know whether the Minister is aware of this, but there are in existence three copies of a series of undertakings and agreements drafted and signed by James Douglas who, at that time, was the chief factor of the Hudson's Bay Company and who later became the Governor of the Crown Colony of Vancouver Island. These copies, in concise detail, set out the area that the Hudson's Bay Company undertook to leave in Indian hands, and set out in detail the portions of the land that the Indian population was prepared to relinquish to the Hudson's Bay Company.

Since that time these agreements have simply been ignored. I suspect that a lot of people do not even know of their existence. I happen to know of their existence because one of the copies is in the possession of a family living in my constituency, the members of which are descendants of the Hudson's Bay factor at that time. One copy has been preserved and is now in the Archives at Victoria. The third copy is in the possession of another family.

These copies set out quite plainly the agreements made at that time, and indicate quite clearly that the agreements of the day have not been broken, but swept aside. One of these agreements related to Salt Spring Island, which is an island in my constituency inhabited by some 3,000 people, as well as part of the Cowichan River Valley, an adjoining area of Vancouver Island, now thickly settled and populated. This agreement has been swept aside and the Indians in this area are confined to three small reserves, most of which comprise land of little productive value.

My fear is that if we are going to go through this matter in a legalistic way then the Commission will be faced with conclusive evidence that in this area, for instance, which is now extremely valuable property, the land was stolen from the Indians, that they have some legal claim to it, and that resulting astronomical compensatory sums will have to be paid. I am afraid the tendency will be to dismiss these claims altogether, rather than to reach an agreement which might be construed as an admission of the whole claim.

If the Government is determined to go ahead with this legislation, I hope it will also be prepared to do what the Government of the State of New York did regarding the Seneca Indians of that area, when they faced the same problem. There was a large Indian reserve in that area which was required for a reservoir for the supply of water to the City of New York. Had they been compensated for that land at its fair market value at the time an astronomical figure would have been involved. Special legislation was introduced after consultation and discussion with the Indians, and subsequently compensation was paid in recognition of their claims, to the extent of only a small portion of what they might have pressed for, had they decided to fight it through the courts.

My colleague, the hon. Member for Skeena, or the hon. Member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) pointed out this afternoon that the Indians in my part of the country are not asking for anything absurd. They know quite well that although they could make out a very good legal claim to a very large part of Vancouver Island, to start with, such a claim would be preposterous and ridiculous in view of the white man's attitude. They know that such a claim would never be met. They are reasonable, adult Canadian citizens who understand enough of the white man's world to know what is possible and what is not possible. This is all the more reason why they should be treated with generosity far beyond the narrow limits set out in the bill now before us. If that is not the case I am sure the Minister will be confronted with irrefutable evidence as to enormous compensation in respect of lands which the Indian population of British Columbia does not expect to receive.

If we have a Commission that can examine these specific claims in conjunction with a scientific presentation of the appalling social effects of the white oppression of Indian people, I think we might arrive at awards to Indian people that are not measurable in material terms, but rather would be in terms of recognition of our responsibilities to these people, enabling the authorities and the Indians themselves to move forward in the development of these natives, enabling them to take their place in our society.

Sometimes there is a regrettable tendency to imagine paternalistically that all Indians are permanent children and that nothing can be done with them. No one who knows the Indians in my part of the country can subscribe to that idea.

• (7:20 p.m.)

Very often before I come to Ottawa I am summoned by the Council of the Cowichan Indian band to attend a council meeting and to hear from them what they require me to do in Ottawa. I am always very glad to attend and I am always impressed by the ability and the competence of these people in handling the white man's world and their place in it. The last time I was on the coast I was particularly pleased to find that the eminent Indian artist, George Clutesi, of the west coast of Vancouver Island had decided to adopt my party as his political party. We were all extremely proud that a man of his eminence should have chosen our party as the one to belong to.

I am just stating these things to show that in dealing with the Indians at least in my part of the world you are not dealing with primitive savages but you are dealing with people who have suffered severe damage at our hands, people who before our ancestors came to do this damage to them had developed a high culture of their own in the artistic field far ahead of anything produced by white Canada at that time. There is not, I suppose, a people on the face of the earth in whom you will find a greater incidence of oratorical ability than among the Indians of the Coast of British Columbia. In their own language and in English they are capable of speeches that I wish we could hear some times in the House of Commons for their clarity and purity of language, for sensitive choice of words and for effective presentation. Such people, Mr. Speaker, are not primitive savages; they are people who have a tremendous contribution to make to the Canadian culture.

That being so, I think it is the duty of the Government, when it is now very tardily dealing with the position of our native population, to make sure that they are enlisting the support and the aid of all the people of Canada in righting this wrong as far as we can do so; and to have that we must not be tied down to narrow, niggling, legalistic compensation for this bit of theft here and that bit of theft there. How do you estimate the compensation that is due for decades, and in some parts of the country centuries, of deep injury to the whole psychology of native people? How do you measure that in dollars? It cannot be measured in dollars. We can perhaps measure our contrition and our remorse in dollars and try now to undo some of the things that we did. As my colleague, the hon. Member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), said this afternoon, perhaps we should be looking at our native Indians more sharply than some of our people are looking at the depressed peoples in other parts of the world. So long as these people are with us we have work to do at home.

I would hope the Minister would consider what we have said from this corner of the House and widen the scope of reference of the Indian Claims Commission to include, not just material claims, but the moral claims that he and I and all the rest of us here really have to admit and really must meet. So I say again that I am sorry if I offended the Minister by putting inflections and words in his mouth. I hope I have been able to appeal to his heart, which I know is very large. I hope I have also been able to appeal to his intelligence, which I know is very high, and perhaps make him realize that he has not merely a responsibility here but a tremendous opportunity to do something that will bring lustre to the name of Canada that no other action could, by demonstrating that we are a people who for once decided that we were going to do something toward the equality of humanity within our own borders. Nothing less than that should be the goal of this legislation. Otherwise these Indian cases will not be disposed of as the legislation suggests. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure it is right to speak of being able to dispose of injuries. You can perhaps compensate to some degree for injuries, but you will not dispose of them, because after the Indians may have forgotten the injuries we did them, any of us who have any sensitivity at all are bound to remember them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Barnett: Let the record show it was on division.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the second time.

REFERENCE OF BILL TO JOINT COMMITTEE OF SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the course of my remarks earlier today and also on the resolution stage yesterday, I intimated that I would move to have this bill referred to a joint committee rather than to the Committee of the Whole House. I now move, seconded by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson):

> That a Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons be appointed to consider Bill C-123, an act to provide for the disposition of Indian claims, with powers to report from time to time its observations and opinions thereon, send for persons, papers and records, sit during sittings of the House, and print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by the Committee, and that Standing Order 66 be suspended in relation thereto; that 14 Members of the House, to be designated at a later date, act on behalf of the House as Members of the said Committee, and that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this House for the above purpose and to select, if the Senate deem advisable, some of their members to act on the proposed Joint Committee.

I understand I must have unanimous consent of the House to move such a motion at this time and I would ask for that consent.

Joint Committee on Indian Affairs

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the House give unanimous consent to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to move this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I want to make one or two brief comments. Yesterday the hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) very ably suggested that the committee might have authority to adjourn from place to place or meet from place to place or, in other words, have the authority to travel, the idea being that by the committee travelling the native Indian people all across the country would be afforded a better opportunity of access to the committee to present their views.

As was pointed out by the hon. Member for Peace River and as anyone who was a member of the Joint Senate and House of Commons Committee on Indian Affairs in 1959, 1960 and 1961 knows very well, the committee experienced difficulty in trying to schedule particular dates for meetings with particular bands or other groups of Indian people. Members of that committee also know from experience the difficulty that the Indian people had in arranging their affairs in order to travel to Ottawa from wherever their home was to present their views and ideas and then travel back home again.

When the Joint Senate and House of Commons Committee on Indian Affairs met a few years ago there were certain costs involved—I do not know what they were—in paying the transportation cost of the native people from their home to Ottawa, their living expenses while they were here, and their transportation cost back home. It was suggested by the hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that we would not expend any greater amount of money if the Committee had the authority to travel. This would afford the native people in different parts of the country a better opportunity to appear before the Committee because they would have to spend less time away from their work, their family and their own activities. I do not see this authority in the provisions relating to the committee. I should like to make a sort of last ditch appeal to the Minister to ascertain whether or not this suggestion might be given favourable consideration, with the primary concern being to make available to the native Indian people, in so far as we can, a full opportunity to appear before the committee and insure that no matter what we do with the bill the native people have every opportunity to present their views.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. Nicholson: I am sorry, but earlier today I certainly should have informed the House that, pursuant to the assurance I gave the hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) last night, I have given serious thought to his proposal. In fact, I have discussed it with some of my colleagues in the Government. We do not consider it is necessary, in this case, to give the committee the right to travel in the way suggested by the hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). I want to assure the House, however, that, subject to what the committee itself may decide, there is certainly no intention on the part of the Government to rush the committee into bringing in an early report. The committee will have as much time as it considers necessary. The setting up of this joint committee is merely a sincere attempt on the part of the Government to make sure that the bill is in a form that will accomplish the objectives we have in mind. I can assure you that constructive suggestions that may come either from Members of the Committee or from outside will be most carefully considered by the Government.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MEASURE TO AUTHORIZE CONSTRUCTION OF SPUR LINE TO CANADIAN INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Hon. E. J. Benson (for the Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-124, to authorize construction of a spur line to Canadian Industries Limited.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the Chair.

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Maximum expenditure.

Mr. Olson: One brief question on clause 3, Mr. Chairman. How much is the Federal Parliament going to be asked to contribute toward the construction of this railway?

Mr. Benson: The Federal Parliament will be asked to make no contribution toward the construction of this line. It is to be built out of the capital funds of the Canadian National and is being financed from the operating fund.

Mr. Olson: In other words, there will not be a contribution in the usual way toward the construction of a new railway?

Mr. Benson: No.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 4 agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the Bill be read a third time?

Mr. Knowles: By leave, now.

Mr. Benson (for Mr. Pickersgill) moved the third reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CHILDREN OF WAR DEAD (EDUCATION ASSISTANCE) ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE MONTHLY ALLOWANCES

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act to provide for an increase from twenty-five dollars to thirty-four dollars in the amount of the monthly allowance that may be paid to a student, and to provide that, whenever the annual rate of pension payable to an orphan child under the Pension Act is changed, there will be a corresponding change in the additional amount that may be paid to a student after he has attained the age of twenty-one years.

Motion agreed to and the House went into Committee, Mr. Batten in the Chair.

• (7:40 p.m.)

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary for me to go into any lengthy explanation. The resolution speaks for itself and in effect covers the bill. This is intended to bring the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act into line with the adjustments in pensions passed by Parliament earlier this year and to provide that in future, whenever there is an adjustment in the Pension Act, there will be an automatic adjustment to bring this Act into line with it.

Mr. Cantelon: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we all welcome the announcement of the Minister and the short statement he has made on this worth-while change in the terms of the Act. However, I am sure that justice and mercy strongly indicate that more generous treatment should be given.

I am certain that those who have served this country in war, as well as those who did not, would wish that our veterans might have their pensions kept abreast of the times by increases which, in this period of rising costs, would enable them to maintain a decent standard of living. They have earned it; we should see that they get it.

But what does the Minister give us? In this resolution dealing with the Children of War Dead, and in the following one increasing the interest paid on moneys in the Army Benevolent Fund, we have sops to the real need, a swallow when a long drink is needed. Of course there is nothing wrong with increasing the amounts to be paid for the education of each child of the war dead. The economic conditions existing today make it imperative that there should be more money for these children. Consequently we heartily approve of this measure. We wholeheartedly approve of an increase of $9 over the present $25, which is an increase of 36 per cent.

If this percentage is conceded as necessary so that the children of the war dead may be properly treated, why was there a small 10 per cent increase for the general pension of veterans last November? Where is the general increase that should be made? Is the Minister satisfied with the 10 per cent increase he announced on November 10, 1964? If he is, he is the only one who is.

The veterans organizations have made it very clear in their submissions to the Government that they are not pleased. Members of the House are not pleased either. Does not the Minister know that the earnings index in this country is rising rapidly and that pensioners are falling further and further behind the wage earnings of those they matched 45 years ago? If he does not know, then he is too ignorant to be a Minister. If he does know and does nothing, he lacks the sensibilities required for this job.

At that time it was conceded that the pensioner should have a rate equivalent to that of certain civil servants. These same civil servants today are being paid $3,500 while the basic pension rate is only $2,400. I know the Minister argues that the 100 per cent pensioner who is married with two children is the basis on which comparison should be made. However, even if this is done the pension rate has lost its former equality with wages for unskilled labour.

It is difficult to feel that the 10 per cent increase was adequate even when a pensioner, who is at the 100 per cent pension level and has children, draws the whole increase. It was certainly very inadequate for the 60 per cent of the war veterans who are in the 20 per cent or less disabled bracket and only receive an increase of $3.60 a month. Some 500 veterans only get 90 cents per month through the increase.

The Minister now grants a 36 per cent increase for children. To my mind by doing this he admits that 36 per cent should be a proper increase for basic pensions. Surely he does not feel that the pensioner is to be compensated in a two-fold way, once for having served his country and suffered in that service and, second, by raising children as a second obligation to his country. Everyone is not so fortunate as to have children, and those who do not should not in effect be penalized for lack of children. Many may have hesitated to have children because they realized that their disabilities condemned them to a low standard of living. Perhaps many feared that their children had too high a prospect of being fatherless in early childhood.

This great 10 per cent pension increase was the lowest ever allotted to war victims. In the four previous increases since 1920 there was a 33⅓ per cent rise in 1951 and a 20 per cent rise in 1961. Since the wage index has been rising faster in this last period than ever before, it is apparent why we feel that the 10 per cent increase was niggardly and why we hope that the Government will consider another increase this year to bring war pensions more in line with the cost of living.

I wonder what kind of advice the Minister has had from the committee of Ministers which the Prime Minister set up to consider veterans pensions. Are they as insulated from humanitarian instincts as the Minister, and as blind to the obligations which this country owes to the men who served her in battle? It would seem so, unless the two new resolutions he mentioned today are on a different basis.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I did not want to interrupt the hon. Member but may I point out that we are not discussing the Pension Act, but rather the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the point of order raised by the Minister is well taken. It might be well if we were to remain within the confines of this particular resolution.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, since I am a Member of a group that tries so far as possible to live within the rules, I am going to obey your instructions, even though I have a lot of sympathy for what the previous speaker said.

We in this group support the purpose of the resolution wholeheartedly because we feel the increase is necessary, owing to rising costs. This Act has been of great value to the children it was designed to serve, since it was enacted some 11 years ago. Anyone who reads the reports of the department must realize that a good number of children have received university education and other instruction as a result of this legislation.

How was this legislation placed on our statute books? It was placed there as a result of co-operation between the veterans, their organizations and the government of the day, whichever stripe it was, and with the co-operation of the officials of the department. The department in dealing with legislation hears the representations of veterans organizations before the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, considers the arguments presented in the House by Members of all parties who are particularly interested in veterans, and then co-operates with the Government in preparing legislation. In passing I may say there are 4 million people in Canada at present who are veterans or the dependants of veterans, but the point I want to make is that wherever you get co-operation of this type you find democracy functioning at its best.

The department has established precedents in several fields with respect to veterans legislation. It has dealt with hospitals, the Veterans Land Act and measures of that type. I cannot go further in this direction without being out of order.

I do wish to stress that the veterans charter of this country, of which most Canadians are proud, was the result of co-operation between veterans organizations, the Government of the day and the officials of the department. Certain procedures have been established which might well be followed by other departments of government, as far as dealing with human beings on a successful basis is concerned.

The resolution before us is concrete in its terms. Personally, I do not see any reason for sending the bill to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. The measure is designed to do a particular job—to increase the amount of the allowance in respect of these children. Before concluding I want to say how much the veterans organizations appreciate the fact that the Government is continuing the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. I have been a Member of this Committee for 20 years and I must say it has approached the problems of the times in a non-partisan spirit. All its Members, generally speaking, have tried to do their best, regardless of party, for the veterans and their dependants they were seeking to serve.

Mr. Olson: I wish only to say on behalf of our party that we agree with the purpose of the resolution before us and that we intend to support both the resolution and the bill which follows.

Mr. Lambert: I have one or two questions to put to the Minister. Perhaps he can give us an estimate of the number of children now covered by this legislation, together with a forecast for the future on the assumption, of course, that there will be no war in which Canadian servicemen will be killed.

I am assuming this measure covers the children of Canadians who served in the first and second world wars. There would not be any children of World War I combatants involved. There would be, from the Korean conflict.

Can the hon. gentleman tell us whether this legislation is applicable to children of Canadian servicemen who take part in peace keeping activities? Is there any elasticity in the terms of the Act? The title says in general terms: "Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act". Well, the campaign in the Congo was not a war. There are other areas in which Canadian servicemen are involved and I am wondering how strict an interpretation of this Act would be.

The Minister and I have discussed the position under the legislation covering those who served in both the first and the second world wars, of others, who were not involved in any actual war, have found themselves without coverage in terms of our veterans legislation. What steps are now being taken to include the particular category to which I have referred, bearing in mind that they are entitled to equal consideration? The case of a man killed in a training accident during the second world war is not different from that of a man killed in a similar accident on a peace keeping mission, as far as his service to the country and the needs of his family are concerned.

Mr. Teillet: I wish to thank hon. Members for their comments. May I reply to the questions posed by my predecessor in this portfolio. His first question concerned the number of cases dealt with. These cases built up to a peak in 1961-62 when there was a total of 448 cases. I would be glad to send a copy of this list to the hon. Member. In 1962-63 there were 374; in 1963-64 there were 354. For subsequent years our estimates are: 1964-65, 275; 1965-66, 240; 1966-67, 180; 1967-68, 130.

I do not know to what extent recent adjustments in university fees will affect these figures. Our estimates probably do not allow for this factor.

The hon. Member's second question is more difficult to answer. I would have to check the application of the insurance principle as it applies to the Cyprus operation, for instance, and the Congo. If the hon. Member would allow me, I would try to give him a more specific answer to this question when we come to second reading. Later, perhaps, I will be glad to discuss in more general terms the application to this question of principle which he and I discussed on an earlier occasion. I can only say that at the moment no final conclusion has been reached.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Teillet thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-125, to amend the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the bill be read the second time?

Mr. Lambert: Next sitting.

ARMY BENEVOLENT FUND ACT

AMENDMENT INCREASING INTEREST PAYABLE ON MINIMUM BALANCE

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Army Benevolent Fund Act to increase the rate of interest payable on the minimum balance to the credit of the Fund in each month at the rate of four and three quarters per cent per annum for a period of five years from the coming into force of this measure, and thereafter for each successive period of five years at such rate as may be prescribed by the Governor in Council in the year preceding the first year of each such period as the effective interest rate on long term Government of Canada Bonds for the purposes of this measure.

Motion agreed to and the House went into Committee, Mr. Batten in the Chair.

Mr. Teillet: This again is a case where the resolution covers the entire bill. The purpose is to increase the interest rate available to the fund from 3 per cent to 4¾ per cent and also to provide for a periodic adjustment of this interest rate as prescribed by the Governor in Council on the basis of the interest rate on long term Government of Canada bonds. This interest rate can be adjusted periodically every five years in accordance with the interest rates available for Government borrowing on bonds. This is the entire purpose of the bill.

• (8:00 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: What is the practice at the present time?

Mr. Teillet: The practice at the present time, as I understand it, is that the fund is paid 3 per cent interest up to $5 million. I do not know how often this has been amended but I presume that these amendments are made periodically by parliament in order to adjust the interest rate. At the moment it is 3 per cent up to an amount of $5 million; it is now proposed to set the rate at 4¾ per cent on the total fund.

Mr. Lambert: What is the total amount of the fund?

Mr. Teillet: Approximately $5 million, but I can get the figure.

Mr. Lambert: In that neighbourhood?

Mr. Teillet: Yes.

Mr. Herridge: The Members of this group support the principle of this resolution, which we presume is really to adjust the interest rate in accordance with changing circumstances, and in so doing increase the revenue-producing value of the fund. We see no reason why we cannot support the resolution and the bill.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to bringing the interest rate paid to the army benevolent fund up to the prevailing rate of interest, but we should like to know how much it is going to cost. If I understood the Minister correctly, although I did not hear all of the exchange between him and the hon. Member for Edmonton West, he said, I believe, that they were authorized now to pay 3 per cent up to a maximum of $5 million. If this percentage is going to be changed to 4¾ per cent on the whole amount of the fund, we should like to know what is going to be the increased cost to the Government of Canada?

[Mr. Teillet.]

Mr. Teillet: Just to make sure we understand each other here, let me say that at the moment the fund is being paid 3 per cent. It is proposed in this resolution, and in the bill to follow, that this figure be increased to 4¾ per cent. This will mean an increase of 1¾ per cent. The fund is approximately $5 million. Therefore 1¾ per cent on $5 million would be the increased cost.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Teillet thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-126, to amend the Army Benevolent Fund Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-118, to amend the Income Tax Act and the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Winkler: What date will the election be, Sir?

Mr. Gordon: On October 31, 1968. I indicated on the orders of the day that I would say something about clause 4 of the bill, and with the permission of the House I would like to do so now. The proposals relating to periodicals and newspapers have been criticized on a number of counts. I shall not attempt to deal with all the criticisms, some of which tend to cancel each other out, but I should like to say something about the main objections that have been expressed.

Let me begin with the periodicals. Here the main criticism, one that some hon. Members feel very keenly about, is that Time and Reader's Digest are here given resident status. Those who oppose this look upon it as a surrender to the power and influence of Mr. Henry Luce. I expect that this is the view of at least some of the hon. Members in all parts of the House.

However, other hon. Members feel equally strongly that nothing should be done to interfere with these two magazines whose Canadian editions commenced over 20 years ago. It is pointed out that both this Government and the previous Conservative Government gave clear notice in resolutions previously placed on the order paper that Time and Reader's Digest would be allowed to continue their operations in Canada. It is argued that nothing new has happened to justify a reversal of these previous decisions.

When opinion is divided in this way there is a great temptation to defer taking action of any kind. If we were to do that, it is safe to say that the competitive position of Time and Reader's Digest in Canada would become even stronger. It is also quite probable that other foreign periodicals, including a number of trade papers, would establish themselves in Canada. If this were to happen we could kiss goodby to the chances of a Canadian magazine industry.

I do not believe there is any solution to this problem which will please everybody. However, to do nothing—to defer any action—would be the worst course of all. Accordingly the Government has accepted its responsibility and has placed a definite proposal before the House.

In doing this I would remind hon. Members of the reference in the budget speech to the subsidized postal rates now enjoyed by Time and Reader's Digest. I said that these were being studied as part of a general review of all postal rates that is now in progress, but which will not be completed until some time next fall. The legislation that will be proposed following completion of this review will eliminate the discriminatory subsidy now being given to Time and Reader's Digest.

Now let me say something about newspapers. The Government believes that control of Canadian newspapers should remain in the hands of Canadians. Parliament has provided that this must be the case with radio and television. I believe the same principle should apply to all media of communication. The Canadian Daily Newspapers Publishers Association does not take issue with this objective of the Government. However, they do oppose the method chosen to achieve it. The Government is not wedded to the particular method it has proposed for retaining control of Canadian newspapers in Canadian hands, but after 18 months of study we have not found any other method that would work satisfactorily within the powers granted the federal Government under the British North America Act. Perhaps there is another method which we have not been able to find. If so, we would be quite ready to consider it. The Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association has asked for time in which to come up with a method of achieving the objective which would be more acceptable to them. They have requested that the present proposal be deferred for a period of months in order to give them greater opportunity to study the whole matter and, hopefully, to come up with another method that would be effective and would be acceptable to the Government.

The Government has given most careful consideration to this request, but has concluded that it should not withdraw the present proposal pending the proposed study by the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association. If it were to do so, some foreign interest might succeed in acquiring a Canadian newspaper before any effective method of preventing this was enacted into law. However, if the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association finds an alternative method which would be effective and acceptable, the Government would be prepared to recommend its substitution for the present proposal at the appropriate time in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I will be only too pleased to deal with the other matters which are contained in this bill when we are in committee. I think it would probably waste the time of the House if I did so now because we would just be repeating ourselves. I think I have dealt with the matter which has attracted the most attention in recent days.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should perhaps first say that we trust the Minister will soon recover his health and his voice. We can see that he is suffering, and working with some difficulty. I can sympathize with a man in his position in so far as his personal health is concerned, but I do not envy his position because I think it is one of weakness. In any event, we extend to him the wish of hon. Members of this House that he recover soon.

In regard to this bill, the principle of which is to amend the Income Tax Act, there are a number of complicated provisions which we will consider in the Committee of the Whole. The bill itself is much longer and much more complicated than could be anticipated at the resolution stage. Even though it appeared complicated at that time, the resolution did not in all matters indicate the extensive amendments to certain sections of the Act that are contemplated. These are apparently the result of a seemingly simple resolution.

When we discussed these amendments at the resolution stage I made some remarks about the income tax cut of 10 per cent in respect of personal incomes, indicating that I felt this was discriminatory. Nothing has been said since that has swayed me from that opinion. In view of the fact that the Minister has indicated that in the fiscal year 1964-65 there will be an expected growth factor of about $250 million to $275 million, it is apparent that this proposal has been politically motivated. When one assesses the comments that have been made in respect of this tax cut he can only conclude that the responsible politicians had an eye cocked toward an election, having in mind that the budget was prepared some time in March or April. Last night the Minister indicated that he would like to see an election, and I am not sure that he did not strain his voice at that time when he addressed some potential disciples in Toronto, who needed some ministerial assurance.

Perhaps I may be allowed to refer to some comments in respect of the budget which appeared in the column of Ronald Anderson, who states:

> The personal tax cut, in the view of most analysts, will have relatively little impact on the economy: Canada's 10 per cent cut in personal taxes compared with a 20 per cent cut in U.S. personal income taxes.

This makes the point I was referring to the other night in regard to corporation taxes. I will develop this point a little later. The article then states:

> Moreover, while the Canadian corporation tax remains at 21 per cent on the first $35,000 of income and 50 per cent on the remainder, the U.S. corporate tax has been reduced from the 1963 level of 30 per cent on the first $25,000 and 52 per cent on the remainder, to the 1965 level of 22 per cent on the first $25,000 and 48 per cent on income over that amount.

There is an expectation in the United States that the excise tax will be cut by 15 per cent by July 1, but that question has not been resolved.

One could read other editorial comments which have appeared in newspapers including the Montreal Gazette, the Toronto Globe and Mail, the Telegram and the Star, and and many others, and come to the same conclusion that the budget was based on the expectation of an election.

The Montreal Gazette of April 27 states:

> The cut in personal income taxes, fulfilling forecasts, suggests either a planned election, or insurance against the possibility of an election, or a deterrent to an election by raising the government's popularity. The economy could have been stimulated as much, or more, by reducing corporation taxes. Mr. Gordon explained great changes would be premature before the report of the Royal Commission on Taxation (K. LeM. Carter) but that report will be as concerned with personal as with corporation taxes. One cut is as premature as the other and both were regarded as premature by Mr. Gordon last year.

[Mr. Lambert.]

This year we have been told that it is premature to consider corporation income tax cuts, but this year that is not so with regard to personal income tax cuts. Both were in a premature bracket last year.

The Globe and Mail of April 27 states:

> And Now What Day For The Election?...
> Stimulating the economy would have required a cut in corporation tax as well. Mr. Gordon is setting the stage for a fall election. He has remembered the unions, the professional men, the farmers, uncles and aunts, even trademarks, and preserved a mass teaser for future stimulation in proposed removal of sales tax on drugs.

Then we can go west to the Edmonton Journal of April 27 which states:

> These are the concessions traditionally used to sweeten up voters. If the Minister thinks he did all he could be expected to do for business, many businessmen facing keen foreign competition will not agree with him...Canadian finance ministers in recent years have been notoriously bad deficit guessers and Mr. Gordon is no exception. ...The income tax cut will cushion the pension plan and there will be a time lag between incoming contributions and the borrowing and spending of the money by the provinces...In the New Economics the erosion of 2 or 3 per cent in the value of money is not inflationary. Be that as it may, the danger of inflation, balance of payment problems and other evils must be constantly guarded against.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, to quote from an article by Fraser Robertson which appeared in the Globe and Mail of April 28:

> Budget has little to do with economic reality. It ended with a fine challenge to us all to share in Canada's great future. So how do we share? The government intends to dig $7.35 billion out of our pockets in the coming year, $214 million more than last year, and it intends to spend $431 million more than last year.

• (8:20 p.m.)

The point is often missed that there is an increase of $431 million in expenditures.

> He claims citizens can spend $170 million more than last year but what about those extra sales taxes earlier this year? And next year, when he says we shall have $265 million more in take home pay, who will be paying those extra payroll deductions for the pension plan? His tax cut is pure hocus-pocus. If it is true that the $170 million adds to purchasing power, then the extra government spending, which certainly comes out of our pockets, detracts from purchasing power by $431 million. Experience in other countries shows, and the Economic Council recommended, that capital investment does speed economic expansion, as the Canadian housing program has shown. But Mr. Gordon expects industry to hand out more jobs, better machinery for the workers, new plants and extra selling efforts with nary a penny from him.

I have spoken about the problems of the balance of payments deficit and other items which concern us from the point of view of the maintenance of the advancing rhythm of the economy. The tax cut proposed by the Minister was designed to meet this problem. That was his stated purpose, in addition to which, of course, it would be a cushion for the payments under the Canada Pension Plan starting next January. I should like to draw to the attention of the House an article written by John Allan May who is European economic correspondent for the Christian Science Monitor. It is datelined from London under date of June 18, 1965 and reads as follows:

> Now is the time when the wisdom of the world's economists is most strongly challenged—and most urgently needed. The question is: Can they tell how to halt a slide toward recession and how to restart the motors of expansion?
> Too many indicators now point downward. Too few point upward. It is possibly true that only in the United States and West Germany are there any forceful signs of any expansion at all.

Even in the United States we have had men in responsible positions raise a hand of warning and make very cold and calculated speeches with regard to possible danger signs. Some people may object to this and some people may object to the tenor of my remarks tonight, but I must say that at all times we must be careful to see just what is ahead of us. It is toward the value of an income tax cut in regard to the maintenance and stimulation of the economy that I am directing my remarks.

We know that the figures for the first quarter with regard to the balance of international payments show a rather alarming increase. We also see a flattening out of the increase in our commodity export figures. If this year continues as the pace of the earlier months has indicated, we are going to finish up with a deficit on international account of rather monumental proportions, all of which is much to the concern of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It should be to the great concern of the Minister of Finance, because we know what has happened to this country in the past when there has been an overly large deficit on international account. We saw what happened in Britain last year, and at the moment they are facing the very same problem. I refer again to Mr. May's article:

> In Britain the indicators now point to the introduction of direct controls over imports.

This would affect Canada.

> It is thought that further controls on capital outflows also may have to be introduced. This is because the British balance of payments must be brought back into balance, whatever way it is done. Britain cannot take on any further debts.

In so far as Canada is concerned, I suggest that we too face the problems involved in taking on an increased load of debt on international account.

> The effect, however, must be to reduce world trade a little further. It seems likely that the trade of western Europe could be most severely affected...

Here is something that is very troubling.

> The economic background to the Conference of Commonwealth Prime Ministers also shows storm flags flying. Every country represented, including Canada, is today in deficit on its international payments. Two of the most important in a monetary sense, Australia and India, have decided they must, like Britain, cut their spending severely. The commodity prices on which most of the Commonwealth largely depends are tending downward. Outside the Commonwealth, it is noted that Japan also is in some financial difficulties.

I trust the House will forgive me what may seem to some hon. Members to be an undue emphasis on the problems of a deficit in the balance of international payments, but to me this is a key factor with regard to the stimulation and maintenance of our economy. The Minister proposes to deal with the matter by his 10 per cent cut in income tax and there are also some capital cost allowances to industry. I put it to the Minister that the 10 per cent cut in income tax is insignificant in so far as stimulation of the economy is concerned. I think he could have done a lot better by giving an equivalent cut on the corporation tax side, or perhaps even a greater cut than he did in the personal income tax field but, of course, on the corporation side he was not dealing with votes.

My colleague from Okanagan Boundary suggests, as many analysts have also done, that something should have been done about the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and certainly on production machinery. I think this is one area where the Government will really have to re-examine its position.

In so far as much of the bill is concerned we are dealing with the closing of loopholes and there are a number of technical points involved. One has to do with the exploration for gas and oil. In order to understand the amendment a person needs to be very well versed in the corporate set-up of development and production companies with their syndicate or joint venture exploration groups, the purchase of drilling rights and reassignment back to the parent so they can be used for write-off purposes. There was a loophole as a result of an amendment made to the Income Tax Act in 1962, and as these companies in the oil industry are astute operators in the field of corporation finance and taxation they were able to find this loophole. I am not too sure they were doing anything wrong but the Income Tax Department certainly thought it was wrong. I am not too sure that is so. I like to see as much incentive as possible given to the oil and gas industry to go out and develop the resources of the country. We can put too close a bridle on them at times.

There is another amendment with regard to the residence rule for corporations. I think the Minister is fully aware of the implications of this change. Certainly some companies are going to be caught and there is going to be quite a scream from some corporations which have a foreign residence but which will now be deemed to be Canadian resident companies whose world income will now become subject to Canadian tax. This is the opinion of the Canadian Tax Foundation. I hope the Minister, in this particular instance, may give the House an estimate of the effect this may have, by deeming Canadian foreign resident Canadian corporations because of their operations in Canada and attracting to those companies the Canadian tax rate on their world income. I should like the Minister, perhaps, to address his attention to this particular feature and let us know just what he expects will be the effect of plugging this loophole. Perhaps he thought he was plugging a loophole and he may be doing more harm than the situation he was correcting.

We have heard the Minister's proposal with regard to periodicals and newspapers. Dealing with periodicals he says that the previous administration had the same problem. Yes, we had the same problem; but the solution was somewhat different. It was to impose a tax disallowance of 50 per cent on advertising in dealing with Time and Reader's Digest. I am not satisfied, myself, that this was necessarily the best solution. This was a proposal which had not been discussed. The Minister has had the benefit of two years' experience and re-examination of the problem. Now we are enshrining into statute law the privileges enjoyed by Time and Reader's Digest. It was against these two periodicals that the Canadian periodicals complained. They felt they could not survive in the face of the unfair competition put forward by these two periodicals. There have been changes in the past two years. There have been changes since the O'Leary Commission reported in regard to the number of publications which have continued to exist.

Surely, however, there would have been some better solution than enshrining Time and Reader's Digest and giving them that absolute statutory protection against competition from the United States, Britain and France. This is what you are doing. You may say that Canadian periodicals are being protected from some bold, bad wolves from either the United States or abroad, but you are also protecting Time and Reader's Digest from the competition of periodicals from their own country. They have the best of all possible worlds as a result of the Government's proposals. I do not believe this is an adequate solution for our Canadian periodicals. Certainly, I do not believe the two publications that are singled out merit this rather favourable treatment they are receiving.

Now, with regard to newspapers, I need not repeat the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) or the other spokesmen from this side of the House concerning the tax on advertising in newspapers, should they become owned more than 25 per cent by foreign interests. Ever since the budget speech was delivered on April 26, we have seen a spate of editorial criticism from one end of the country to the other, from Victoria to St. John's Newfoundland. There has been the odd exception. Representatives of the Newspapers Publishers Association have seen the Minister, not once but twice. I noticed that their representative was meeting the Government last Friday. Before the Minister spoke tonight, we saw speculative news articles indicating that there might be a pause in the Government's move to impose this penalty. It is not a tax, it is a penalty.

In this regard, I have always wondered why it was deemed to affect ways and means, when there was an amendment proposed the other night. It would not affect ways and means whatever. This is merely a penalty, and something would have to be done to attract the tax. In other words, one had to transgress the rules in order to attract the tax. The Minister, therefore, could not expect, in the normal course of events, one penny of revenue. How this could affect ways and means, I fail to see. In any event, this penalty in the Income Tax Act is to be used to achieve what some people say is a laudable objective. Certainly, we would like to maintain, in so far as possible, control of Canadian newspapers in the hands of Canadians, in the same way as we would like to maintain control of many types of operations in the hands of Canadians. I noticed one editorial comment to the effect that there was as much justification for imposing this penalty on newspapers as there would be in preventing any foreign interest from coming in and buying Clarkson, Gordon & Company and entering into the chartered accountancy field. After all, these companies have many corporate secrets. They know many things about the Canadian economy, and therefore foreign control of these companies could influence the situation in Canada. The thesis is arguable.

Well, we do not see anything of this nature in the bill. I do not know just what motivated the Minister in imposing this penalty to try to maintain the Canadianization of newspaper ownership. Is it that they were in particular danger? I noticed in a column written by Basil Dean, publisher of the Edmonton Journal, that there was a current rumour that certain French interests were going to try to buy into La Presse of Montreal in order to project the point of view of the French Government. Well, of course, one can build speculation upon speculation. I believe one must classify this amongst those really wild rumours, but it is still a rumour. I do not know how much it influenced the Minister or if he heard it. Were there any other newspapers that were under imminent attack by foreign owners? I am sure that foreign owners would take on Canadian newspapers or attempt to buy Canadian newspapers under the following circumstances: First, if a newspaper were in temporary difficulty and could be bought cheap, then built up into something really profitable. Frankly, the motive is economic. It is certainly not to influence thought. The second circumstance would be a successful newspaper that was a going proposition and was very attractive. It would attract a takeover bid.

If the Minister, the Government and Canadian newspapers are so jealous of Canadian ownership there is always one solution, that they shall not sell. As a matter of fact some newspapers have voluntarily adopted measures whereby foreign takeover cannot take place. Therefore I think the Minister would have been far wiser to accede to the request of the Newspaper Publishers Association to defer this tax penalty until some more reasonable solution had been worked out to the satisfaction of the press.

Some people have suggested that the press is crying wolf, that this is an old bugaboo, that this is not really an attempt to introduce censorship. I put it to hon. Members that this is the cornerstone from which other moves could be made with regard to newspapers.

Mr. Moreau: What about magazines?

Mr. Lambert: I am concerned about daily newspapers.

Mr. Moreau: What's the difference?

Mr. Lambert: There is a great deal of difference. The hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Moreau) can engage in a discussion of that when we reach clause by clause examination of the bill.

One can read all sorts of editorials on this subject in chain newspapers from Victoria to St. John's, in privately owned newspapers, in small, medium and metropolitan newspapers, and generally in newspapers that support the Government.

Reference was made during orders of the day today to an article in the Winnipeg Free Press of June 17, headed, "Press Control has a long History", pointing out that it started with King George III who first taxed advertising, Adolph Hitler who jailed editors, Benito Mussolini who built a subservient press, Joseph Stalin who made the press a government mouthpiece, Juan Peron who closed down newspapers, Fidel Castro who exiled editors, and winding up with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) who would tax advertising.

The other day the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) quoted from editorial comment in the same newspaper of June 16, but I will not refer to that again. The Evening Reporter in Galt has some harsh things to say about this proposal, and I think the Minister should read that editorial.

The Guelph Mercury of June 17 said:

> If there is any requirement whatever to limit ownership of Canadian newspapers to Canadians, it is quite possible to effect this control without government interference and through the voluntary action of the owners. In Britain and some other European countries, the line of succession of ownership and the editorial policies of certain newspapers are effected by agreement within the proprietor companies. The governments follow a hands-off policy.
> Apart from this principle, which is readily applicable within Canada, the hard fact is that the profit margin of Canadian newspapers is not so lush as to be attractive to foreign investors. They can secure larger returns on their capital with less risk, by investing in Canadian natural resource corporations.
> There is, indeed, no more urgency for the prohibition fathered by Mr. Gordon than there is for a law forbidding Americans or other outsiders from acquiring control of firms of external chartered accountants, such as Clarkson, Gordon and Company, in which the Finance Minister inherited a considerable interest and in which he was active until joining the cabinet. Accountancy firms of high repute are necessarily privy to the secrets of Canada's major corporations whom they serve, and on occasion must have access to confidential phases of government. Surely the acquisition of such firms by foreigners would raise problems of much delicacy.

The Sarnia Observer of June 18 has this to say:

The free press of Canada is threatened by legislation now making its slow progress through the House of Commons.

It isn't threatened today, or perhaps tomorrow. But some time in the future, the machinery now proposed by the Government can be used to effectively muzzle any newspaper—or all newspapers.

This is a matter of argument but I put it to the Minister and to the hon. Members that he is trying to accomplish something the wrong way. I would have appreciated it if the Minister had not stood up in this House the other day and, in a moment of bravado, said the Government would stand or fall by this measure. Are we again under a threat? Is this some chest thumping on the part of the Minister? I do not know, but I think he in reasonableness would have agreed to the newspaper publishers' request to defer this matter, had he not made that rather unwise and brash statement the other night. He put himself in a box and now we are told we are going to have this proposal on the statute books.

I would not say that the House is being bribed, but it is being asked, "Pass this little bit of legislation and if we find something better in the future, then we will substitute that for it." Is this a proper way to do things? If this measure is bad it should not be put on the statute books, and the Government should recognize that this is not the most satisfactory way to deal with the problem.

Is there any particular rush? What is the rush, that newspaper owners must be protected? Is the Montreal Gazette about to be taken over, or the Toronto Star, or the Vancouver Sun? Is this something that is over the horizon, or is there something in this that involves Lord Thomson? I do not know what the reaction of my hon. friend from Port Arthur is going to be when I mention that eminent gentleman's name. Is he considered by the Canadian government to be a foreigner, now that he has a title, or just what is the situation with regard to him?

[Mr. Lambert.]

Not only has this proposal been criticized in Canada but it has also been criticized in the foreign press. The Canadian Press under dateline of May 29 reports that the London Daily Mail calls it a subtle encroachment on press freedom, not very different from withholding government advertising, a favourite device for bringing newspapers to heel in countries where press revenue is scanty.

The Vancouver Province of May 21 said:

An aura of underhandedness does not sit well with many Canadians...dangerous to freedom of the press...conflicts with the interest of the public and of the newspapers themselves. If there is validity in Ottawa's worry over foreign control it should be made plain to the industry and to the public before steps are taken...then let it be done openly, not through misuse of legislation.

• (8:50 p.m.)

I suggest that the use of a tax penalty is really a misuse of the legislation.

As far as the other end of the country is concerned, this is what the Daily Gleaner of Fredericton said on May 22:

The bill is one the Government should withdraw...It is the beginning of Government control of the press. It establishes the false principle that the decision of a Government department can be allowed to damage some periodicals and benefit others (and determine) what should be published and who should publish it. Democracy and a free press—one cannot exist without the other.

I find that the tax proposal with regard to personal income tax is acceptable, even though it is but crumbs to a small number of people. It is generous to those who, frankly, would not miss it too much, and it penalizes those who are particularly industrious and energetic. It does not do one whit of good to the many scores of thousands who do not pay income tax.

With regard to a number of the proposals which close loopholes, we in the Opposition express our agreement with them. But we are against this punitive provision with regard to newspapers, and we shall oppose it. I wish to be clear on that. As I indicated the other night, I accept many of the changes which the Minister has in mind. But this is a package deal in which we find a combination of two divergent principles. We are dealing here with an attempt to control the press through income tax and we are also dealing with capital cost allowances, incentives to industry, and so on. Nevertheless, the Government is asking the Opposition, and those who would oppose one feature, to approve or disapprove of the whole package. I will make my position very clear, as did the hon. Member for Queens.

What I have to say, now, is not based on anything contained in the bill. It is a request to the Government in connection with the regulations governing the capital cost allowance referred to in the budget speech as reported in Hansard on page 436:

> I am also proposing some changes in capital cost allowances to help farmers who are facing difficulty in marketing corn and other grain crops in areas where there is a shortage of grain storage facilities. I am thinking of many areas, including the area comprised by the constituency of Essex East, a great corn belt. Under this plan, which will be incorporated in a regulation, the cost of all new grain storage facilities constructed in the period May 1, 1965, to December 31, 1966, may be written off for tax purposes over a four-year period.

This matter is now crucial for a large number of farmers and the sooner we can have these regulations the better off we will be. In order to assist hon. Members in advising their farmers I would suggest that instead of having the regulations appear in a regular bulletin from the Minister of National Revenue where it is read by tax authorities and few other people, the Minister should table them. Notice would then appear in Votes and Proceedings and Members would be aware of them. This is a simple request, and compliance with it would assist Members on both sides in advising farmers in their constituencies as to the way in which they may be affected. I know this concerns many of the farmers in Western Canada and I am sure the same applies to Eastern Canada.

I think I have made the position of this party clear as far as the second reading of this bill is concerned.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I wish to address my remarks to that part of the bill which is concerned with the ownership of the press in Canada. I speak as a newspaperman and I support the Government's proposals.

It is estimated that more than 60 per cent of Canada's manufacturing and resource industries is already in foreign hands. Our motion picture screens, our television screens, our magazine stands carry the products and influences of another country. If our press is to be allowed to fall into foreign hands I think we can have very little left to claim as Canadian.

I wish to quote briefly from the O'Leary Commission's report on publications of four years ago:

> The communications of a nation are as vital to its life as its defences and should receive at least as great a measure of national protection. Every nation must provide within itself the means of maintaining stability. In North America today this function is largely directed and exercised through communications media.

The Government, rightly, I think, intends to bar foreign ownership of Canadian chartered banks and of the newspapers of Canada. As the Minister has stated, at the present time there is no law to prevent the purchase by non-residents of any of our newspapers. Some sections of the press, or perhaps I should say some publishers, have been opposing the Government proposal on the ground that it represents an interference with press liberty. This opposition is very much confined to a section of the publishers or owners of the press of Canada. I have yet to hear a member of the working press of Canada, or of the press gallery, or of the other newspaper workers, or of the advertisers in Canada oppose the government's plan to keep ownership of the Canadian press in Canadian hands.

Much as I disagree with that part of the Government's proposals which allow Time and Reader's Digest to continue to undermine and destroy the magazine industry in Canada, I support the proposals which have been put forward with the object of keeping at least Canada's press under Canadian ownership. Heaven knows, in Canada at the present time there is a high ingredient of United States editorial material. Again, it is well known that the press of Canada is biased in its handling of news; the press of Canada is naturally very much prejudiced in favour of big business. I say "naturally" because the press of Canada is big business itself. In recent months it has cost $3 million in Eastern Canada to fail to start a new daily newspaper. In even more recent times it cost a million dollars in Vancouver to almost fail to start a new paper. It has not yet been established. So the press itself is big business and it naturally sympathizes with this section of our community. That is understandable.

However, the legislation before us does nothing to interfere in any way with the freedom of the press in Canada—even the freedom to remain biased. It has nothing to do with editorial content. It simply proposes to keep press ownership in Canadian hands. It is ridiculous for publishers in Canada to say that this in any way impinges upon the freedom of the press. Actually, the press has no special freedom at all. It has only the freedom to report the news quickly, accurately and truthfully to the Canadian people. If we had real freedom of the press in Canada we would not have this continual amalgamation of the newspapers and a concentration in fewer and still fewer hands of the news media of the country.

I have been a newspaperman for about 30 years, and as such I felt it was reasonable for me to say a few words in support of this present legislation. I think in doing so I am speaking out in favour of freedom of the press and against something which is quite different—freedom for the press. Freedom of the press, as I have tried to explain, is the freedom and ability of the press to function on behalf of the people of the country. Freedom for the press descends into some sort of commercial advantage to the owners and publishers of newspapers. I am very much in support of the legislation which the Government has put forward on this point of Canadian control and ownership of Canadian newspapers.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, in his opening remarks I was pleased to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) say that an inquiry is now under way to attempt to do something about the favourable postal rates and subsidies now being granted to Time and Reader's Digest. We in this party do not believe that these two magazines should enjoy any special privilege, particularly when this involves subsidies of public money through the Post Office Department.

I was also interested to hear the Minister of Finance suggest that the method outlined in this bill is the only way the Government could find to impose conditions which would have the objective of keeping Canadian newspapers and periodicals Canadian owned and controlled. He even went so far as to say that if anyone, be it the Publishers Association, Members of the Opposition, or anybody else, came forward with some other method of achieving this objective, the Government would be receptive to it.

I think there is a case to be made for a little more time to consider other methods of achieving this objective. The Minister of Finance suggested that to do nothing would perhaps be a disservice to Canada, because in the meantime there could be some publications purchased by foreign companies and it would be difficult to do anything about it on a retroactive basis. I should like to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to the fact that he did not hesitate when bringing in legislation respecting the ownership of banks in Canada to make a press announcement months ahead disclosing that the Government intended to impose restrictions on the ownership of the chartered banks of this country. Furthermore, if any province bought any shares before that legislation became fully effective, the Government was prepared to remove the voting rights from those common shares.

I think there is probably some disagreement about whether the federal Government now has the constitutional right under the British North America Act to say who shall own shares in any kind of property or company, be it banks or anything else. The Minister of Finance attempted to contend that because banking and the control of currency and coinage, and so on, comes under the umbrella of the federal Government and its statutes, it gave the Government the authority to say who could own these shares. I think there is a very important legal argument to be made here namely that this kind of parallel is not very appropriate because it is difficult to equate monetary control in the country with the ownership of any property, be it banks or otherwise.

If the Government needs more time, or if it is so receptive to other suggestions about how we can control and own Canadian publications, why does not the Minister pursue the same course he pursued with respect to banks? He could announce that it is the Government's stated objective to say that Canadian publications shall remain owned and controlled by Canadians and that it was not particularly satisfied with the ways and means which have been evolved so far to achieve this objective. However, it could stress that when a satisfactory way of doing this is found, any transfers of ownership in the intervening period will be subject to the law. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is equally as possible in this field as in the field of shares of banks.

As far as we in this party are concerned, I think it is fair to say that we believe an instrument as important as the press, and publications, which is one of the most important means of mass communication in the country, should be owned and controlled by Canadians. We do not particularly like the proposal that this shall be achieved through discriminatory tax measures, yet we do agree with the objective. Therefore I think the proper and responsible thing to do at this time is for the Government to make this sort of statement, indicating this is the objective, and perhaps allow some additional time for working out ways and means to achieve it, without interfering with the freedom of the press, or what is claimed to be interference with the freedom of the press.

I do not see anything in the bill which provides for imposing discriminatory tax laws on advertising in those publications which remain Canadian owned. Therefore the contention that there is going to be severe interference with the operations of newspapers is not just quite as valid as some spokesmen would try to make out. Yet I am not satisfied that discriminatory tax laws are the way to see that these newspapers and publications remain under the control of Canadians. That is why I think that a little more time would be useful so as to seek other methods more generally acceptable.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to concentrate most of my remarks on the magazine and newspaper legislation. However, before I get to that I want to make a few comments in line with the personal observations that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) made regarding myself. I am not going to take umbrage when a so-called economist refers to a so-called columnist, but I do not like the word "intemperate" being used, partly because of its connotation of drink. I want to assure the Minister of Finance that if he is going to label me as a boozer he is on the wrong track; this is something I do not get involved in.

He also accused me of making scurrilous comments about the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). I should like to read the definition of scurrilous which is found in the Concise Oxford Dictionary. It is as follows:

> Grossly or obscenely abusive (of person or language), given to or expressed with low buffoonery.

• (9:10 p.m.)

That is almost exactly the mood I should like to be in to express my feeling, not about the Prime Minister but about the Minister of Finance and this particularly oddity—oddity from this point of view—that he has brought forward. During the last few weeks, in looking at the Imperial Oil billboards all across the country, we have seen reference to a "tiger in your tank", and there are tiger tails all over the place. The bill now before us is the Canadian tiger tail, and that tiger tail is certainly in the gas tanks of this Government, snarling all over Canada. The Minister is a tiger in respect of Canadianism, and he is going to protect Canadian newspapers from these foreign encroachers. He is going to see that by this indirect taxation on advertising Canadian newspapers will be maintained as Canadian.

I suppose the Minister's argument really runs like this. This is an indirect measure of taxation on advertising which will keep Canadian newspapers Canadian, because it will inhibit any increase in the equity value of Canadian newspapers and, therefore, it is unlikely that any bidding will develop between the United States and British capital for Canadian newspaper possession, because they are aware that this indirect Government advertising tax is in existence. That is not a bad way of doing it, but it is terribly direct.

The Minister says that no one has come up with any alternative. Surely he should have set out some of the other possible alternatives that were considered. This matter of newspapers shows the Minister, as I am sure many Canadians and some of my colleagues feel, at his best—a real red-blooded Canadian tiger who is going to keep the Americans off our backs. However, at the very same time, what does he do with these two most pervasive of all Canadian cultural items, Time and Reader's Digest? He naturalizes them. That is the irony of this situation.

I thought the Minister was a bit of a desiccated pharisee a few years ago in this House when there was a motion put forward by our friends from the Social Credit, who argue for debt-free money, at which time he got up with a most embarrassed look on his face—he had the fairness to wince a little bit—and gave an indication that the Liberal Party was going to vote for debt-free money. Ever since then he has been twigged about this, and that is an indication that he was influential at that time, as I am sure we are all willing to believe, in getting the Liberal caucus of that day to vote in favour of it. He really did not believe in debt-free money, but he saw this as a device which would fit in with the pattern of harassment to get the Cabinet to vote for it. In other words, he and his colleagues were not consistent in principle with what they were voting for.

Here we have a much greater inconsistency. This is a Minister who last year would not put this bit of legislation regarding Time and Reader's Digest in his name on the order paper, or at least he has not given us any explanation as to why it was in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) rather than in his own name.

What possibly could have happened to the Minister's Canadianism—a tiger in one case and a mouse in another? What happened to his nationalism? I think we must try to construct the picture of that pressure, the lobbying and the influence that came to bear upon the Minister and the Cabinet and, I suppose, upon the Prime Minister. I do not know whether we can ever expect to get the complete picture, but I suggest it is something like this. There have been a great many Cabinet meetings about this particular problem, and I think from the very beginning —certainly well before the budget of 1964— the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) was adamant about this question of Time and Reader's Digest and was for Canadianizing them. Obviously he could not be, and still have any kind of consistency in principle in the general attitude he has taken in election campaigns and in that book Troubled Canada which he or somebody else wrote.

This is the point I want to make about this particular situation. At some time during these various situations he moved away from his earlier position—he moved away partially last year in respect of that resolution which was presented in the Prime Minister's name. He has moved further away this year in that this resolution is in his name. It appears almost that the Minister has made a trade or a deal, in a sense, in the balance of power struggle that goes on within the Cabinet. I believe the Prime Minister was convinced by representations from Time and Reader's Digest, because of that close association a couple of Members of the Liberal Party in the Montreal area have for these magazines, that punitive action could not be taken against these magazines. It seems to me that the Minister of Finance has given up, and in order to salve his once held desire to protect his reputation as a Canadian tiger, in so far as his attitude toward Time and Reader's Digest is concerned, has now said: I may have to take a lot of abuse in that regard but I can sure unfurl the Canadian banner about newspapers.

I am sure this process within the Cabinet took a long time, just as I am sure the process took a long time within the Liberal caucus when some of those minor tigers, and those lower-grade tigers in that caucus, who felt so strongly a few months ago about Time and Reader's Digest, adjusted their views,—with the exception of one who spoke up clearly about this issue, and I refer to the hon. Member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan). Of course that hon. Member, fortunately, I suppose, put his place in the Liberal speaking order away down on the list as a result of last year's flag debate. I suppose none of those other minor tigers who felt so strongly about Time and Reader's Digest, as indicated to us around this place, and their intention to vote against the nationalization or neutralization of Time and Reader's Digest, are now of the same opinion. They have faded away in exactly the same way and with the same excuses as the Minister of Finance. Apparently they have adopted the attitude that although they have to keep on the side of Time and Reader's Digest, we should look around at what they are doing with Canadian newspapers.

[Mr. Fisher.]

This is an odd kind of compromise and it seems to me to be one of the best indications of the fact that the situation which has now developed has developed because this is an omnibus section with which we are dealing. The two things have in a sense been married. At the resolution stage it was impossible for us to vote in a clearcut way in regard to Time and Reader's Digest, as well as in regard to newspapers. We agree in the main with the idea about the newspaper part of it, but we also agree with our Parliamentary colleagues to the right, as their spokesman has said, that we should have the right to express our views clearly and not be confounded by this Time and Reader's Digest naturalization position. We believe that we here in Parliament should have the right to look at these two issues separately. It is rather scurvy, if not scurrilous, on the part of the Minister and his Government to bring this legislation before us, bundling the two things together. I think it is an indication of what happens so often to the kind of ideals that those enthusiasts in the Liberal party are always suggesting we should see symbolized in them.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Last night, as the Minister knows, the Toronto Star also commented on the fact that the federal Liberal Party should accept some of the responsibility for the medicare situation in Canada and went back to 1919 when it was first introduced into the Liberal program. The Parliamentary Secretary who hails from Hamilton has been leaking in Kirkland Lake and has been leaking in the newspapers last week that they are tigers over there for medicare. I would say they were tigers for medicare back in 1919, but that would be far too modern an advertising symbol to use. However, he claims they are tigers for medicare.

This is another example of the inconsistencies. I do not suppose it will hang on the conscience of the Minister of Finance too long, although it seemed to me when I read that rather plaintive quotation from him in the Toronto newspapers in which he talked about how he would love an election soon, let us have an election soon, fight it on the old boundaries—

An hon. Member: Tiger Gordon.

Mr. Fisher: Tiger Gordon—that it might also be an easy way for him to get out of here and forget about the compromise he has had to make with most of his Canadianism principles in this piece of legislation he has brought forward.

Mr. Fairweather: He was seduced by Henry Luce.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I should like to think that too, both figuratively and literally, but it is pretty hard. But, Mr. Speaker, we have a situation in respect of Time and Reader's Digest where we are given another excuse and another crutch in connection with the whole question of mail subsidies. The Minister knows and so does the Government that there has been a tremendous loss on second class mailing matter for a number of years. Five years ago Hon. Bill Hamilton told us that the loss was running around $20 million and only a couple of years ago it had risen to approximately $26 million. The O'Leary Commission really knew the details and we have been told that Time and Reader's Digest bear a considerable responsibility. As a matter of fact, the subsidy figures have been worked out. I know they have been on the Minister's desk, as they have been on mine, but the Minister's are much more official.

What excuse are we given? Well, they are still running a survey. They still do not know. They are certainly going to see that Time and Reader's Digest are Canadianized but they are not going to let them get away with murder in the postal rates. Once they are good Canadians it seems rather mean to come along and catch up with them later, except from the point of view of a bit of salve for this tiger's conscience.

I should like to ask the Minister a question in connection with Time and Reader's Digest and this naturalization process. What happens if either of these organizations launches some kind of subsidiary publication? I should also like to ask him why he did not consider going a bit further than talking about mailing privileges and placing some kind of embargo on plates coming into Canada from the United States in connection with Time and Reader's Digest? Why protect only publishers? Why not go further and protect Canadian printers? This is one aspect of this whole business that has not been touched on at all. You not only want to protect Canadian publishers, who I suppose include Time and Reader's Digest now, but you need to protect Canadian printers.

I have here an advertisement by Admiral that appeared in the Vancouver Sun, a Canadian newspaper. The full advertisement ran in all the big national papers a week or so ago and I understand that the total budget for this advertisement would be roughly $100,000. The interesting thing is that the advertisement was prepared and set up in the United States. It was printed in the United States and then brought to Canada and run here. The Vancouver Sun, like most of the other papers, used the back page of the paper. I suppose it might have been buckshee to them.

This is an example of the kind of thing that should worry this Canadian tiger. I am sure that the Vancouver Times has the kind of plant with colour processes that could produce this type of advertisement. I would assume that a great many of the advertisements we see in this country, particularly in Time and Reader's Digest, are produced from plates shipped into Canada from the United States for that part of Time and Reader's Digest not printed in the United States. Why could we not have had some protection for the printers in this regard?

The fact that the newspaper part of the situation is included in this legislation has unhappily led a great many people to miss the Time and Reader's Digest aspect of the matter and to miss the strength of the recommendations made by the O'Leary Commission. So far as the newspaper part of the matter is concerned, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me and to my colleagues that it will really not have the bad effects that the publishers are talking about, except upon the value of their equity. In this sense I believe there may be a discrimination against them but, as hon. Members have pointed out, it is no different from the discrimination that the Minister has talked about in a lot of his other legislation in the business field.

Even though the Minister insists that the legislation in connection with newspapers go through, he has given an indication that if the newspaper publishers will come up with some kind of solution he will be prepared to listen to them. I have never heard anything that sort of begged the question more than that kind of answer. Why did he not just tell the newspaper publishers that this was it? If the newspaper publishers have not been able to come up with an answer by this time and if the Minister has rejected the only suggestion put forward by them that seemed to me to have any sense, namely that a general resolution be adopted by the whole House, then why diddle and fool around with the possibility of representations on and on and on?

There is a two volume study entitled "A History of Canadian Journalism" written by W. A. Craick. The second volume, which appeared a few years ago really is not a history of Canadian journalism. It is a continuing record of the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association and, even less than that, it is really a record of the kind of representations they have made as a lobby group to protect their special privileges with regard to mail, postage and other such matters. In other words, there may be a tendency among many Members, particularly in the Conservative party, to feel that the Canadian daily newspaper publishers have been knit together in a kind of band of brothers with a tremendous concern about the quality or value of journalism.

Well, basically, that is not what the association has been for over the years. You do not have to take my word for it. You can judge by reading these two volumes. I make this particular point, not to support our Canadian tiger over here, but to suggest to the Members of the Conservative Party who are worried about the newspaper part of it, that this particular association all the way through its record—this is not criminal and I am not suggesting there is anything bad—has been a commercial association. It has been designed, in the main, to protect financial interests. These publishers, and their association, have not been fanatically concerned about the freedom of the press, with the odd exception. They have not been concerned about the whole question of human liberty or the advancement of this nation. This association has been strictly, throughout the years, a down to earth lobby organization that gets together once a year and looks at all the fronts, including taxation, advertising and any legislation that may affect it, good or bad. Of course, its main concern over the years has been to keep mailing costs as low as they possibly can.

Now, in this particular case, I think that the Minister may have already given this publishers association more attention than it deserves. Again, I want to say we are embarrassed about the fact that the two matters are bound together. I know that I have to vote against this particular part of the legislation because of the Time and Reader's Digest aspect of it. I know it is too late. The Minister is sitting there with that sort of granite face. We are not going to get the two of them split. It is funny, you know, that a party which could devise that double-barrelled flag resolution last year cannot come up with something a little bit double-barrelled on this issue.

Mr. Addison: It was the Speaker that split them.

Mr. Fisher: Well, the Speaker might be willing to do so again, if he were given a little prompting. I want it to be very clear, Mr. Speaker, that we are against Time and Reader's Digest becoming naturalized Canadian citizens. We are for the legislation with regard to Canadian newspapers, and we are rather embarrassed at the Minister and the Liberal Party for the kind of promise they put forward over the years. It is corny to make appeals, Mr. Speaker, when you have this tiger calling for an election and standing or falling on something. I should like to forget him and make a request to some of those bold backbenchers who have a feeling of Canadian nationalism. Let us hear from more than the hon. Member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) about how you feel about Time and Reader's Digest. Let us hear from the hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Moreau), and the hon. Member for Carleton (Mr. Francis). I want to ask the hon. Member for Carleton to switch his worries from redistribution and tell us where he stands on Time and Reader's Digest, and why he is going down the line with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon). There is the hon. Member for York North (Mr. Addison), who is prepared to stand up and fight the move of the forestry lab from his constituency to Sault Ste. Marie. Is he not prepared to stand up and fight to keep Time and Reader's Digest from becoming Canadian citizens? I see that all the requests and pleas in the world are not really going to strike many spots. They are tigers, all right; they are in the tank and the lid is on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the House ready for the question?

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Gordon) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Mackasey: I was paired with the hon. Member for Bow River. Had I not been, I would have voted in favour of the motion.

Mr. Pennell: I was paired; had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. Groos: I was paired; had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau). Otherwise I would have voted against the motion.

[English]

Mrs. Wadds: I was paired with the hon. Member for Winnipeg South. If I had voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. A remark was made on the other side to the effect that I did not announce my pair. If I do not choose to do that it is my own business, and I would ask the hon. Member who made the remark to withdraw it.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Knowles: Ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we propose submitting the Income Tax legislation for completion, the Judges Act, the veterans legislation, the motion to appoint the Committee on Consumer Credit, and then proceed to interim supply.

Mr. Starr: On a point of order, I would like to ask the Government House Leader since when has this resolution on consumer credit been injected into the program, because the Prime Minister made no mention of it whatever?

Mr. Walker: It has been debated already.

Mr. McIlraith: I understand it was debated yesterday.

Mr. Churchill: By accident.

Mr. McIlraith: I take it from the hon. Member's remarks that he is raising some objection. I will look into the matter in the morning.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Provisional Standing Order 39A deemed to have been moved.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF FAIR WAGES AND HOURS OF LABOUR ACT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Labour Code, even though we had to wait a long time to get it, is a good piece of legislation. It provides a minimum wage, a maximum work week, two weeks holiday with pay after one year and eight statutory holidays for all the employees who are covered by this legislation.

However, there are certain employees ostensibly in the federal field who are not covered by the code. These are in two categories—direct employees of the Federal Government and persons working on Federal Government contracts. Actually the first person to mention the fact that the Canada Labour Code would not cover these other categories of workers was the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) himself. When he moved the second reading of the Canada Labour Code on October 13, 1964, he pointed this out, as will be seen from a reading on pages 8999 and 9000 of Hansard for that date.

In doing so the Minister made clear the Government's intention later in that same session to cover these other groups of people by bringing forward amendments to the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act. The next day, October 14, 1964, in response to a question of mine as reported at page 9062 of Hansard, the Minister of Labour confirmed that it was the Government's intention to bring in the amendments to the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act that session, which was the second session of this Parliament, the one which ended on April 3, 1965.

While that session was still in progress, in particular on February 26, 1965, as reported at page 11770 of Hansard, I asked the Minister whether it was the Government's intention to make sure that the protection afforded by the Canada Labour Code would be extended to these other people and whether this coverage would apply by the same effective date, namely July 1, 1965. The Minister's reply was clear. He said: "That is the intention, Mr. Speaker."

A month or so later, in the present session, I asked the Minister on May 10, 1965, as reported at pages 1100 and 1101, when this would be done. His reply was: "As quickly as possible". I asked about the previous commitment with respect to July 1. On May 11 I reminded him again of this previous commitment and in reply to my questions on that date he again said the Act would be amended by July 1. This is in keeping with the commitment made throughout that these four minimum standards to which I have referred would be made applicable not only to those who come under the Canada Labour Code but to these other two groups, direct Federal Government Employees and those working on Federal Government contracts.

Time has a way of slipping by. The legislation did not appear on the order paper, so on June 3, 1965, I asked the Minister again when this legislation would be brought in, having in mind the commitment that it would be passed before July 1. The Minister's response to that question, to be found at pages 1932 and 1933, was that the parliamentary timetable was getting in the way. I asked him whether the delay was caused by representations against the legislation. His reply was that the only delay was that which had arisen because of difficulties connected with the parliamentary timetable.

On June 16, as reported at pages 2501 and 2502, I asked the hon. gentleman when this legislation was to be brought forward and again he confirmed it would be done by July 1. Yesterday, however, June 21, when I again asked the Minister about this Fair Wages and Hours of Labour legislation he fell back on the explanation that the parliamentary timetable did not permit this to be done by July 1. When I asked him what had happened to the Government's promise to bring it in by July 1, his answer was that nothing had happened to the promise, that it was still the Government's intention, but that it depended on the parliamentary timetable.

There is no argument about the substance of this matter. The Minister and I are agreed that these minimum standards should be made applicable to all the people whom the federal Government can cover. The whole question is whether or not it will be done by the date the Minister promised, namely the same date the Canada Labour Code comes into effect; and that has been established as July 1, just a week or so away.

The argument about the parliamentary timetable being the problem is now ridiculous. We are running out of Government business these days. Before we know it we shall be adjourning for a summer recess. I suggest that in view of that the Minister ought to keep his promise and bring this legislation in before the House rises for any summer recess. I say to him that if he tries to use the argument that the Prime Minister did not include it in the list of business which he announced on June 9 as the business for this part of the session, the answer is that whenever the Government comes along with something that was not in that list and somebody from the Tory front bench complains about it, some Minister in the Government gets up and says: "Read the second sentence of what the Prime Minister said"—namely that there might be emergencies. I suggest that keeping the Minister's promise is the kind of emergency which is covered in that sentence and that this legislation ought to be brought in before July 1.

There can hardly be an argument about the substance of this legislation. We fought the battle when we had debate on the Canada Labour Code. The point is to extend it to all the employees that federal law can cover. The Minister mentioned the other day that one feature only, namely the minimum wage, will apply to one part of the group, but this is not good enough in view of the fact that it is the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act itself that needs to be amended by July 1. I would ask the Minister to do himself proud, to keep his promise, and to bring in this legislation before July 1.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there are three categories of employees involved in this situation. They are employees in federal industry covered by the Canada Labour Code, which comes into effect on July 1, 1965. The second category is direct employees of the Government of Canada. If I had more time I would deal with the four items covered in the Canada Labour Code respecting direct Government employees. I have searched Hansard very carefully for all the references the hon. Member was good enough to make available to me, as well as other references since we began discussing this matter, and all of the references to July 1, 1965 were directed exclusively to direct employees of the Government of Canada, to federal employees.

Mr. Knowles: They were directed to the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act.

Mr. MacEachen: There was never at any particular time—and an examination will bear this out—a commitment to have this legislation enacted by July 1, 1965. I have always talked in this context about federal employees. Employees working for contractors doing federal jobs are not federal employees by any stretch of the imagination.

We shall have covered employees in federal industries and direct employees of the Government of Canada by July 1, 1965. We will complete this three-fold effort to improve basic working conditions by making the appropriate amendments to the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act. Last session in October I expressed the hope that these amendments would be completed, but we know what kind of session it was. There were times when I did not think we would get the Canada Labour Code through or the pension plan, let alone the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour amendments. The Fair Wages and Hours of Labour amendments were forecast in the speech from the throne for this session and they will be completed at this session. I suggest to my hon. friend that if he carefully examines the Hansard record he will conclude, as I have done, that the only commitment with respect to July 1, 1965 was in connection with federal employees. At no time was there a commitment that the amendments would be completed by July 1, 1965, although I am as eager as my hon. friend to have them completed and would have had them completed last year had we had a different kind of session. However, that is now part of history, and these amendments will be completed this session.

Mr. Knowles: I hope this promise will be kept.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—TORONTO—PRODUCTION AND C.B.C. SHOWING OF SEX EXPLOITATION FILM

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, last Friday morning I thought it advisable to ask this question of the Department of Justice:

Will the Department of Justice be taking any action against C.B.C. employees Ted Leversuch, John Cavall, Phil Styles, Peter Douett and John Ashley, who have recently aided Independent Film Artists Limited of Toronto in producing the sex orgy film "Room for a Stranger", at Lakeshore Studios in Toronto? Is not this sex exploitation film, which features Jean Christopher, currently appearing on the C.B.C. program "Nightcap" in violation of Section 150 of the Criminal Code?

When I asked that question I was invited to place it on the order paper. No reply was vouchsafed by the Department of Justice.

This film, which is known as a "stag film" in the trade, is described in a little publication "CINE World"—I suppose the emphasis is on "CIN"—but the name is "CINE World". This booklet describes the film "Room for a Stranger" as being distributed in the United States by a chap by the name of Sam Lake, "one of the foremost distributors of sex-exploitation pictures in the world". When I saw the pictures in this little magazine, which states that it is "devoted to the art of films and filming", I immediately thought of the Criminal Code and particularly section 150 which states in part:

Everyone commits an offence who
(a) makes, prints, publishes, distributes, circulates or has in his possession for the purpose of publication, distribution or circulation any obscene written matter, picture, model, phonograph record or other thing whatsoever,—

The Code provides for a maximum sentence of two years in jail for anyone who is convicted under this section 150.

I knew there was no use asking a question in this House as to whether or not the C.B.C. had knowledge that it employed people who make these sex films after hours, because the answer would come back in 18 months, from the unsearchable depths in which the C.B.C. hides, that the C.B.C. has no knowledge of the picture in question and is, therefore, unable to give an answer. I thought, however, if it asked the Department of Justice I would get a straight, forthright answer, because that department is willing to express itself and does not shed its authority by stating it cannot answer for the actions of the R.C.M.P., or that it cannot answer for this organization or that organization. That department always gives answers; but no answer is ever forthcoming from the C.B.C.

[Mr. Knowles.]

I asked this question about this film because I could not believe it possible that the C.B.C., which produces these high quality films it is everlastingly advertising and talking about, which are much more high quality than any which can be produced by private T.V. stations, would employ such characters as produced this super picture. It is interesting to find that the characters that appear in this picture are of the very superior C.B.C. type.

After I asked the question on Friday morning, some newspapermen came around wanting to know whether I could tell them where to buy this little booklet. I told them I bought mine at the Book Cellar, located at the corner of Bay and Bloor Streets in Toronto. Someone asked: Are you accusing the C.B.C. of making this film? I said: I am not accusing the C.B.C. or anybody else of anything. I simply asked whether these people who made this sex exploitation film were going to be prosecuted under section 150 of the Criminal Code. I never mentioned the C.B.C. at all. All I did was to give the police, the Department of Justice and any other justice authorities interested in the problem, the addresses at which these people could be picked up if action should be taken. It was no concern of mine whether they were employed by the C.B.C. I just thought I might help the police officials by giving them the addresses at which these people could be found.

The C.B.C. then rushed into the act and started to give answers in reply to questions I have never asked. I am not interested in their replies. In fact, they have even gone to the point of stating that they will issue a formal statement in reply to Mr. Cowan. Since Mr. Cowan did not ask them anything he is not interested in any formal reply.

But it is interesting that when I stated that the film was made by C.B.C. employees who were moonlighting, the C.B.C. issued a statement to the Toronto Globe and Mail denying that this picture was made on moonlighting time but saying that it was made on spare time of its employees. Somebody should take the C.B.C. aside some day and ask them what the difference is between moonlighting and a spare time occupation. The rest of us do not understand, but the C.B.C. draws some kind of distinction. I am not asking the C.B.C. any questions tonight. My question is whether the Department of Justice is going to take any action against these people.

Mr. Phil Styles, a C.B.C. employee, is listed as production manager of this sex exploitation film, "Room for a Stranger". The C.B.C. might answer this question. Does he have authority to declare C.B.C. sets surplus so they can be bought by the producers of private television films at knock-down prices? If he has authority to declare sets surplus and they are bought cheaply by other people, why are they not publicly advertised for sale so that we can get the highest possible price for C.B.C. sets?

But this is not the point on which I am seeking an answer tonight. I know this film is one of sex exploitation from the description in the little paper and the pictures I have seen. Miss Christopher has told the Globe and Mail that there is a definite plot in the picture. If hon. Members could see the pictures I have seen in CINE World and could see the eyes of the actor they would know there is a definite plot all right, but Miss Christopher does not give too much detail in that regard in her newspaper comment. I simply ask the Department of Justice: Is any action being contemplated against these C.B.C. employees who in their spare time—the C.B.C. says they are not moonlighting—are making films which are described in CINE World as sex exploitation?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member has brought before the House a matter of some considerable interest. Just to show the interest of all Members and others, may I say it is not very often that at this late hour we are blessed with the presence of very many members of the Press Gallery and I noticed that as the hon. Member was speaking a member of the press was standing up to look very closely at the material the hon. Member had in his hand.

I think the hon. Member probably realizes, as I am sure all other hon. Members of the House do, that the jurisdiction over these matters is divided between the federal and provincial governments. While it is this Parliament which has enacted the Criminal Code and the section with regard to obscene literature to which the hon. Member has referred, it is the function and jurisdiction of the provincial authorities and more particularly the local police authorities to take the action that may be indicated by any particular occurrence.

In direct answer to the hon. Member's question I must therefore say that the federal Department of Justice will not be taking action, except perhaps to pass on a copy of this very interesting debate to the police authorities of the City of Toronto so that they may carry on an investigation and decide whether or not a charge should be laid under section 150.

EXPO '67—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF EXPENDITURES BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I am not at all satisfied with the answer of the Acting Prime Minister with regard to the financial participation of the federal Government in Expo '67. The Canadian people were informed by the Progressive Conservative Government that they would be committed to a grant of $20 million. We are now informed that this figure has spiralled to $64 million as at the end of this fiscal year and there appears to be every indication that the federal involvement will go well beyond $100 million before it is completed.

Furthermore, there is an estimated deficit of $60 million to be faced after the fair has run its course of which the federal Government's share will be 50 per cent or $30 million. If the deficit is to balloon out of all proportion, as the estimate of the cost of building the plant has, by some 70 per cent, surely the taxpayers of this nation have the right to know that the money which has already been committed and will continue to be committed by this Government is being spent in a proper manner. I believe the Canadian people also have a right to know how many of their tax dollars will be spent on this extravaganza before another day passes. There is only one way for the Government to provide the kind of assurance the Canadian people have a right to expect in this matter, and that is through an all party committee of the House of Commons which can act as a watchdog over the expenditures and make certain the nation does not end up with the biggest unexplained white elephant in our 100 year history.

It is my understanding the C.B.C. has involved itself in a multi-million dollar expenditure without the calling of tenders to determine the best price, or the luxury of even considering alternative bids from companies other than the one they chose to do their work. Surely this cannot be allowed to continue if we are to accept our responsibilities to the taxpayers of this nation. At the same time, this Government accomplishes nothing, in my view, by trying to give the impression that questions should not be asked about this financial colossus, because it is associated with our 100th anniversary and is located in the Province of Quebec. We can look forward to being too poor to attend the World Fair in 1967 if this Las Vegas spirit of the present administration is allowed to continue unchecked. A parliamentary committee is the only protection the Canadian taxpayer has to the multi-million dollar blank cheque we apparently have written.

Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am glad to hear, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) is satisfied with the answer he got to his question No. 397. I understand, however, he is not pleased with the amounts mentioned in that answer. His annoyance may be due in part to his belief that a fixed amount of money had been assigned to Expo by the previous Government. He mentioned that. This is not so, Mr. Speaker. The Minister in charge of Expo at the time said that the necessary amounts of money would be voted by parliament. At the time of the Conservative administration, it was not possible to tell how much Expo would cost.

The first administration of Expo '67 had no idea how much it was going to cost because the necessary inquiries had not been made. It is quite wrong, in my view, to say that a fixed sum of $20 million had been assigned as the cost of Expo '67. The hon. Member for Cumberland asked, I understand, that a special committee be appointed to examine into this question. There is the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and my Minister is eager to present his estimates to that committee. The officers of the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition are very eager to come and answer all questions. When will that be done? I have a feeling that the Members of the House would not be willing to start on this job now, but I am quite sure they will be quite eager to do so in the fall.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 23, 1965

The House met at 2.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Government House, Ottawa
23rd June, 1965

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 23rd June, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DISCOVERY DAY, NEWFOUNDLAND—ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST DAY, QUEBEC

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to note that today is the anniversary of the discovery of Newfoundland by Giovanni Caboto in 1497. While Newfoundland was not then a part of Canada, all of us are very happy in the knowledge that this important anniversary will mean so much to the people of Newfoundland as it certainly does to all the people from one end of Canada to the other. We congratulate in a special way our colleagues in this House from Newfoundland.

[Translation]

As hon. members already know, proceedings of the house will be suspended tomorrow in order that they may celebrate properly St. John the Baptist Day, the national holiday of French speaking Canadians.

On behalf of the government and, I am sure, of every member of this house, I want to extend our best wishes to all French speaking Canadians.

There is no need to recall the unique contribution made by the French element of this country to the planning and development of our institutions. It is also with the greatest interest that we have observed, these last few years, the new upsurge, the new vitality of our French speaking compatriots. I have no doubt that in the years to come they will continue to leave their mark on the life of this country. This will only be possible if the mutual understanding and goodwill that made Canada a country in a class by itself continue to prevail.

I wish, therefore, that this 24th of June will not only be a day of celebration for a group that is proud of its traditions and customs, but an occasion for all Canadians to show those brotherly feelings and common interests which are the basis of our national unity.

[English]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, today is truly an auspicious day, as the Acting Prime Minister has mentioned. We wish to join with him in extending our congratulations and best wishes to the Members from Newfoundland. I can only say that Giovanni Caboto in the year 1497 was indeed lucky that he did not run into the hon. Member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Speaking seriously for a moment, today is also an auspicious occasion in this House since I understand both the Acting Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport are celebrating their birthdays. We also extend to them our heartiest congratulations from this side of the House.

I join, Mr. Speaker, with the Acting Prime Minister in extending to our colleagues of the French language and to all French speaking Canadians our congratulations and best wishes on a day commemorating the existence and survival of their language and culture in America. It is a day significant for all French speaking Canadians, but equally significant for all Canadians.

Without the presence of French Canada there would be no Confederation and no Canada today. Confederation accorded constitutional recognition to the cultural and language rights of French Canada. In producing a new charter for Canada's second 100 years those rights must be recognized and emphasized. I believe, and the Conservative Party believes, in a Canada free, independent and sovereign. The maintenance of that freedom, independence and sovereignty is based on the fundamental association of the Confederation partnership. I do not believe a strong and united Canada can be based on the principle of separation, whether modified, qualified or rendered in legislation. You cannot build unity on separation.

The challenge of our time lies in the adjustment of our national structure so as to provide full and complete participation by all Canadians in the partnership of Confederation. The celebration of St. John the Baptist Day should therefore be regarded as an occasion in which all Canadians can take pride, commemorating as it does the continuing contribution of French Canada within Confederation.

[Translation]

To all French Canadians on the occasion of St. John the Baptist Day, best wishes, greetings and heartiest congratulations.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of St. John the Baptist Day we want to express our best wishes to our French speaking members and fellow citizens throughout Canada.

This feast day is further evidence of the deep desire to see the French language and culture survive in Canada.

May I take this opportunity to remind all French Canadians that equal respect should be shown toward the feast days that various groups like to celebrate, such as St. John the Baptist Day and the Queen's birthday.

[English]

We are also happy about the exploits of Giovanni Caboto, and extend our best wishes to the two ministers on their birthday.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with the various groups in their words about the anniversary of the discovery of Newfoundland and the birthday of two ministers of the crown. I think we must also emphasize the work of the premier of Newfoundland who was instrumental in this province becoming part of Canada. I think we should wish a long life to Josephus Minuslignus, the premier of Newfoundland at this time.

On the occasion of the French Canadian feast day, I do not believe it would be appropriate for a French speaking Canadian to boast about his nation. On the other hand, I do want to point out that French Canadians have always shown great loyalty and a good deal of civic spirit when they discovered the country and maintained in the province of Quebec the French language and culture in Canada.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to offer my best wishes to the two ministers who are to-day celebrating their birthday. They were born under the same star, on the same day, have followed the same path and are still doing so. I trust these two gentlemen, who have won the esteem of all the members, will for a long time to come make available their long experience to those of us who are younger than they here in Parliament for I am convinced all have already benefited from their advice and friendship in the past. We are therefore happy to wish them the best, and we trust they will remain with us for a long time still, because we intend to stay here for a long while.

We also wish to take this opportunity to extend our very best wishes to the citizens of Newfoundland who are to-day celebrating an important anniversary.

It is tomorrow, June 24, that French Canadians will celebrate the feast day of their patron saint, St. John the Baptist. Parliament will take a holiday on the occasion of this feast day, that is, all members of the house, whether they come from Newfoundland or British Columbia, the Prairies, the Maritimes or Ontario.

We are happy to see the French fact in Canada being officially acknowledged by everyone in every Canadian province. We are happy to see that for the first time this year, this feast day will be celebrated by a holiday in the Canadian parliament. This will indicate the official recognition of the French fact and we are very glad about it.

I should like to take this opportunity to extend, on behalf of our leader, the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), and of the members of our group, our best wishes to all our French-Canadian fellow-countrymen on the occasion of this feast day.

As everybody knows, a rather tremendous development is taking place in French Canada and we hope it will go on in a quiet and peaceful atmosphere. We are convinced that even though this national holiday is celebrated in peace and quiet, this development will go on much longer and further for the benefit of all French Canadians in the country.

[English]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I have the indulgence of the House to acknowledge briefly the words addressed by the hon. Member for Ontario and other leaders to the rediscoverer of Newfoundland, Giovanni Pickersgill, and myself. I thank them for the warm congratulations they have extended, and wish to say on behalf of my colleague and myself how very much we appreciate these expressions of good wishes on a day which means so much to us both.

AIR TRANSPORT

TABLING OF STATEMENT RESPECTING DIRECT SERVICE TO GUADELOUPE

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I should like to table for the information of hon. Members a statement I have issued today regarding an agreement with France to permit the establishment of a direct air service between Canada and the Island of Guadeloupe in the West Indies. Perhaps, since we are recalling history today, some hon. Members may recollect that the French gave Canada to the British because Guadeloupe was at that time considered to be more valuable.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) had given us a French copy of his statement. However, since he gave us only an English copy, I will make my comments in English.

[English]

I should like to thank the Minister for his courtesy in providing us with his statement in English, while reminding him that in similar circumstances in the future we would appreciate having such statements in both French and English.

We would have expected the Minister, having been in Paris for a few days, would have taken advantage of his knowledge of the French language by issuing statements in both French and English on his arrival here. We hope his visit will prove beneficial not only to himself but to all manufacturers in Canada and in French Canada, and will lead to greater opportunities for both French and other citizens of the City of Montreal.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I should just like to point out that as a courtesy I sent to the leader of the party opposite a copy of the statement in the language he habitually uses. I apologize for not having sent a copy in French, though I tabled copies, of course, in both languages.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps this will complete the debate on that aspect of the motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, about this motion, I would like to point out that we received from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) a copy in very good French and we wish to thank him for it.

We are happy to see that the Minister of Transport has bound us even more closely to the French government. As a matter of fact, commercial transactions will be made with the French government and an agreement has been reached with France to enable Air Canada to serve the Guadeloupe-Montreal line.

I think that announcement will be welcomed by all, because whoever visits Guadeloupe finds it a wonderful country. It is possible that France preferred Guadeloupe to Canada but, at that time, there was a man called Voltaire who claimed that New France was only a few acres of snow. I am quite sure that the French have long been sorry for that decision. In any event, Canada has developed; it is now a large nation, but all the same Guadeloupe is a delightful place where it is nice to go on holidays.

We are happy to see that an airline service between Canada and the island of Guadeloupe will make it possible for all of us to go and visit this enchanting country.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the house to the fact that we have just witnessed another patent proof of the marriage between the Liberal party and the Ralliement Creditiste, since—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ricard: —since the Conservative party which forms the official opposition in the house was also entitled to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot may or may not have a justified complaint against the government but I do not think his question of privilege is well taken.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a question of privilege which stems from the fact that our intent and decisions have been questioned, in particular by the party sitting on your left, namely the Progressive Conservative party.

I merely acknowledged the courtesy of the government when French and English copies of the statement were sent to us, but I was not trying to support the ideas of the government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a new question of privilege?

Mr. Ricard: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that as a member of the official opposition in the house I am entitled to the same courtesy on the part of the government, that is to receive French and English copies of the statement made before the house. The government has not shown us that courtesy and that is why I take this opportunity to prove to the house once again that the rights of the official opposition have been violated.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am just wondering whether it might be convenient, since there has been some comment about this matter, for all Members if the House would agree to having the statement made an appendix to today's Hansard—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: —in both languages, so we would know what we had been discussing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TABLING OF PAMPHLET RESPECTING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table an information pamphlet entitled in French "La peine capitale—Documentation sur son sujet et sa valeur" and in English "Capital Punishment—Material Relating to Its Purpose and Value". This document was prepared by the Department of Justice under my direction. As I had indicated to the house, I forwarded a draft copy of this document before it was printed to a member of each of the five parties. I was pleased to note that each of those members stated that the information contained in this document had been found objective and non-partisan.

I wish to thank all parties for their co-operation in that respect and I hope that the information made available today to hon. members and senators will help them to form a considered opinion on the various aspects of this disturbing matter, the death penalty, which will be reflected in a truly free vote.

INDIAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

HOUSE OF COMMONS MEMBERS OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre) moved:

That the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, established Tuesday, June 22, 1965, to consider Bill C-123, an act to provide for the disposition of Indian claims, be composed in so far as the House of Commons is concerned, of the following Members: Messrs. Brewin, Basford, Blouin, Brown, Godin, Gundlock, Howard, Mrs. Konantz, Laprise, Legault, Patterson, Rhéaume, Stefanson and Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie).

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think there must be a slight error. We should be glad to have two Members on that committee but I think we are only entitled to one, and our appointee is the hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). The name of the hon. Member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) appears on that list. He would be glad to serve. He might not be an Indian, but he could be a chief.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, if the House is prepared to let the names stand as they are, a substitution will be made later if there is an error.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

IMPROVEMENT OF C.B.C. SERVICES, QUEBEC

Question No. 174—Mr. Laprise:

Does the government intend to increase funds for expansion of Canadian Broadcasting Corporation services, so that the Chapais-Chibougamau and Clova-Parent areas will be adequately served?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): There are already included in the current budget of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation capital sums for the extension of C.B.C. facilities in various areas of the country. Further consideration to this program will only be made by the Government when it has received and studied the report of the committee on broadcasting.

WALSH ADVERTISING COMPANY

Question No. 233—Mr. Aiken:

1. On what date was Walsh Advertising Company Limited awarded the Canadian Army recruiting account?
2. Did Army recruiting officers have authority to charge advertisement to this company?
3. What other government accounts have been awarded to Walsh Advertising Company Limited since April 22, 1963 and on what dates?
4. What was the value of each account awarded by the government to this company since April 22, 1963?
5. What precautions were taken by the government to see that the accounts for advertisements published on behalf of the Government of Canada were paid?
6. Has the government held back any funds to protect the public against bankruptcy of this company?
7. With what officers of the company did the government deal in these matters?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): 1. The R.C.A.F. recruiting advertising account was awarded to the Walsh Advertising Company Ltd. on 2 July 1963.

2. R.C.A.F. recruiting unit personnel were authorized to request specific recruiting advertising services of a local supplier on an R.C.A.F. approved agency order form. The agency issued a confirmation order to the supplier and were responsible for paying suppliers' invoices.

3. None.

4. 1963/64, $161,300; 1964/65, $157,000.

5. Complaints received by the R.C.A.F. with regard to any delay in payment by the agency to suppliers are referred to the agency with a request that prompt payment be made.

6. No.

7. Primarily with Mr. R. Madden although on occasion, other executive, creative and accounting personnel were involved.

*C.B.C. COLOUR TELEVISION AT EXPO '67

Question No. 395—Mr. Mather:

In planning the C.B.C. facilities at EXPO, what is being considered respecting colour television?

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that it is planned to equip the television studios of the broadcast studio at Expo '67 and the mobile units for colour television.

AUTO FERRY SERVICE, PORT HOOD, N.S.—P.E.I.

Question No. 449—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Have representations been received from the Eastern Kings Board of Trade of Souris, P.E.I. in reference to studying the feasibility of establishing an auto ferry service between Port Hood, N.S. and a port in Eastern Prince Edward Island?
2. From what other bodies have similar representations been received?
3. What is the nature of the reply given?
4. Is the Atlantic Development Board, or is any branch or department of the Dominion Government, undertaking such a feasibility study?
5. If not, is such a study contemplated?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. A joint submission by the Port Hood Development Council and the Mabou Development Council.

3. It was pointed out that the Department was already heavily committed in expenditures for additional ferries between Cape Breton and Newfoundland and was building a new ferry for the Prince Edward Island service. Under these circumstances, it was difficult to entertain the possibility of making further immediate commitments for ferry services in this area.

4. No.

5. This question of a study is under consideration.

AUTO FERRY SERVICE, P.E.I.-WESTERN CAPE BRETON ISLAND

Question No. 450—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Has the government, or any member of the government, received a communication from the Port Hood Development Council and the Mabou Development Council in reference to the establishment of an automobile ferry service between Prince Edward Island and western Cape Breton Island?
2. Is it the intention of the government to give support to the expressions contained in this communication?
3. Is the government prepared to work in conjunction with the governments of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island in the making of the necessary survey which is essential to the establishment of the aforementioned automobile ferry service?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. The question of a study is under consideration.

3. The Provincial Governments would be consulted in the event of a survey being undertaken.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—LOURDES, N.S. STATION FACILITIES

Question No. 582—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Is it the intention of the Canadian National Railways to construct new station facilities in the Lourdes area between New Glasgow, N.S. and Stellarton, N.S., during the year 1965-66?
2. If so, when will tenders be called?

Questions

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. No.
2. N/A.

*PORTS OF HALIFAX AND SAINT JOHN—LOSS OF TRAFFIC

Question No. 586—Mr. Bell:

Has the government any program or plan to compensate the ports of Halifax and Saint John for the loss of 200 thousand tons of traffic annually due to winter navigation on the St. Lawrence River, as stated in the Annual Report of the Maritimes Transportation Commission last week?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have the following information from the Atlantic Development Board in answer to this question.

The Board received a report last year from a firm of private consultants in which it was estimated that improved winter navigation on the St. Lawrence River was leading to a loss of roughly 200 thousand tons of traffic annually to the ports of Saint John and Halifax.

As part of its general program to improve the economic conditions of the two ports, the government has initiated a series of studies and has undertaken a number of substantive measures. Thus, the Atlantic Development Board has studies in progress on the possibilities of increasing grain shipments, on the feasibility of establishing a container shipping service; and on the desirability of establishing an industrial park or parks in the Halifax-Dartmouth metropolitan area. The National Harbours Board has commissioned a series of studies on the origin and destination of traffic through the ports of Halifax and Saint John. Concretely, the Federal Government is aiding in the construction of the Saint John harbour bridge and the National Harbours Board is building a new marine leg for the more efficient handling of grain at Halifax.

RESIGNATIONS FROM CENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Question No. 639—Mr. Webb: (Supplementary)

1. Among personnel earning $5,000 per annum or more in the Centennial Commission (a) how many resignations have been received since January, 1965, (b) how many have been accepted, and (c) how many have not been accepted?

2. What are the names and reasons for resigning given by all Centennial Commission employees referred to in part 1?

3. Are Sam Cormier, Les Maiden, William McDonald, C. F. Prevey and Robert Hume employed by the Centennial Commission, giving in each case the salary received, the position occupied and, if required, the date and reason for resignation?

4. What position does R. L. Elliott occupy with the Centennial Commission, giving salary, brief description of duties, date of commencing employment, and previous experience relevant to employment with the Commission?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): 1. (a) Three; (b) three; (c) none.

---

2. Name	Reason given
A. J. Cormier	To accept the position of chief of the liaison division in the Canadian Citizenship Branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.
Robert M. Hume	The fact that the Centennial Commission visual arts program was assuming a considerably smaller role than was previously hoped is one determined by the Commission with careful consideration. The participation of the Commission would henceforth be minor, and the responsibility for programming, something less than could be justified under the duties of an administrative officer 8.
J. Séguin	To accept a higher position (administrative officer 6) in the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, to be reinstated in the Civil Service and to obtain a more diverse experience.

Questions

3. Name	Salary	Position and Reason for Resignation
Sam Cormier—resigned April 22, 1965	$15,300	Chief Cultural Division—see reason given in answer to 2.
Les Maiden—yes	$13,800	Project Officer, Confederation trains and Caravan.
William McDonald—resigned December 14, 1964	$14,050	Chief Ceremonials Division—The position had been accepted because there were certain areas of planning envisaged for which he believed his past training and personal interest rendered him particularly useful. The situation has been changed with the result that the work for which he was responsible no longer required the specific background of knowledge which he possesses. The future program of work forecast for the Chief of the Ceremonials Division did not include those elements upon which he wished to base his final working years.
C. F. Prevey—yes	$15,300	Financial adviser and Director of Administration.
Robert Hume—resigned March 31, 1965	$12,300	Visual Arts Officer—see reason given in answer to 2.

4. Director, Planning Branch, at a salary of $20,150. His duties: To assess and evaluate centennial proposals; to plan a co-ordinated program of national projects; to implement approved projects. He commenced employment June 24, 1963. His application for the position indicated (a) 11 years service in the following departments of the Federal Government: Secretary of State, Reconstruction and Supply, Resources and Development, Public Works.

(b) Experience over 4½ years as executive director, Royal Architectural Institute of Canada.

(c) Three years as a member of the Board of Directors, Canadian Centenary Council and chairman of the Council's program research committee.

AIR CANADA—NASSAU-TORONTO SERVICE

Question No. 648—Mr. Nugent:

1. On Air Canada flights between Nassau and Toronto, are economy passengers required to pay for beer brewed in Canada at 35 cents in Canadian funds, but if paid in U.S.A. currency at 25 cents and, if so, for what reason?

2. Are similar differentials in prices followed on other routes flown by Air Canada?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Air Canada advise as follows:—

1. No. Economy passengers are charged 30 cents Canadian or 25 cents U.S. for beer on flights between Nassau and Toronto. All minimum charges, including the price of tickets and other services, agreed to under International Air Transport Association traffic conference resolutions are based on U.S. currency.

All carriers are required to relate the prices charged in the currency of collection, to not less than the U.S. currency equivalent. Air Canada converts this minimum to the U.S. dollar equivalent rounded to the next higher 5 cents to eliminate the necessity of making change in coppers. The origin of the product sold has no bearing on adherence to this regulation.

2. Yes, if international, and flown under IATA Conference resolution agreement.

SOCIAL SECURITY CARD

Question No. 650—Mr. McIntosh:

1. Is the Social Security Card, now in use, about to be replaced by one which will remove the Coat of Arms and substitute the Maple Leaf?

2. If so, is this being done because of objections to the Canadian Coat of Arms being on the present card and if not, why is the change being made?

3. To produce the new plates are special machines being imported from the United States of America and, if so, at what cost?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): 1. Yes. The card has been redesigned with a maple leaf superimposed by the word

"Canada" in place of the federal coat of arms.

2. No. The change is being made in order to provide a national symbol equally appropriate for programs under either Federal or Provincial jurisdiction.

3. Yes. Machines required for embossing the new plastic social insurance number cards are not available in Canada. They are therefore being imported from the United States on a rental basis. The cost on this basis is estimated at $15,686 per month for six months and $9,479 for a further six months.

NORTH SYDNEY, N.S.—RAILWAY TRACKS ON WHARF

Question No. 660—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Is it the intention of the government to instal railway tracks on the new public wharf at North Sydney, N.S.?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The possibility of bringing a track to this wharf is being investigated.

CLAYTON STRATTON—CONNECTION WITH ASSAULTS

Question No. 672—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1959 did one Clayton Stratton (Statton) enter Canada and, if so, for each such entry what was the date thereof and the length of time that the said gentleman remained in Canada?

2. Was he ever barred from entry to Canada and, if so, what are the details surrounding this?

3. Has he ever been required to post or have posted a bond before he was permitted to enter Canada and, if so, what are the details of this?

4. What was the date upon which one Richard Greaves was allegedly beaten or assaulted, which beating resulted in charges being laid against one Harold Chamberlain Banks?

5. Did the R.C.M. Police conduct an inquiry into the said beating or assault and, if so, in the course of that inquiry did the R.C.M. Police discover the whereabouts of the said Clayton Stratton (Statton) at the time of the beating or assault and where was the said Mr. Stratton (Statton) at that time?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, and by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as follows:

1. There is no record in the Department of Citizenship and Immigration of one Clayton Stratton (Statton) having entered Canada since January 1, 1959. However, this Department's records show that Clayton Thomas Stratton was admitted to Canada as a landed immigrant from the United States at Vancouver Airport on March 25, 1957.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

2. The records of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration contain no indication that this man was ever barred from entry to Canada.

3. There is no record in the Department of Citizenship and Immigration of this man having been required to post a bond.

4. January 30th, 1960.

5. Yes. Yes, Brownsville, Texas.

PROFESSIONAL PERSONNEL LEAVING ARMED SERVICES

Question No. 679—Mr. Rapp:

How many (a) professional (b) other skilled personnel, have left the armed services by request or resignation, month by month, in the last two years?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): In the figures listed below, "professionals" include officers holding medical, dental, engineering, architectural, law, divinity and pharmacist degrees. Skilled workers are group 4 tradesmen or group 3 tradesmen in those trades in which group 3 is the highest.

*R.C.M.P. COMMISSIONER McCLELLAN

Question No. 695—Mr. Fisher:

1. On what date did R.C.M.P. Commissioner G. McClellan join the force?

2. On what dates was he promoted through the various classes of constable, to corporal to sergeant, to inspector?

3. At each of these stages, in what aspect of the force's work did he serve and at what locations?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answers to this three part question are as follows:

1. August 15, 1932.

2. Promoted to 2nd Class Constable, February 15, 1933; 1st Class Constable, February 15, 1934; Corporal, November 1, 1938; Sergeant, January 1, 1939; Sub-Inspector, February 1, 1939; Inspector, February 1, 1941.

3. While 2nd Class Constable: General police and criminal investigation duties at Westlock, Alberta.

While 1st Class Constable: General police and criminal investigation—Westlock, Edson, Red Deer, St. Paul, Sylvan Lake, Edmonton, all in Alberta. At Halifax, Meteghan River, Liverpool and again in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

While Corporal: Criminal Investigation Branch—Halifax, Nova Scotia.

While Sergeant: Criminal investigation and security investigation, Halifax and throughout Nova Scotia.

While Sub-Inspector: Training Instructor, Regina, Saskatchewan. Officer in charge security and intelligence, Vancouver, B.C. Officer in charge wartime security and intelligence for western Ontario stationed at Toronto, Ontario.

While Inspector: Officer in charge security and intelligence duties for western Ontario, stationed at Toronto. Officer in charge Criminal Investigation Branch and 2nd in command "O" Division, Toronto, Ontario. Officer Commanding Saskatoon Sub-Division, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. Director, Special Branch (security and intelligence) for the force, Headquarters, Ottawa, Ontario.

R.C.M.P. RECRUITS TAKEN IN AT RANK OF SERGEANT

Question No. 697—Mr. Fisher:

1. In the past ten years, has the R.C.M.P. taken on any officers at the rank of sergeant or above?

2. If so, who are they and what were their qualifications?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): 1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

SECURITY FOR WORLD FAIR ADVANCES

Question No. 717—Mr. Smith:

1. Has, or does, the government propose to take any security on the physical assets of the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition for the advances, estimated at $105,000,000 which the Corporation is to borrow from the government for the purpose of building and operating Expo '67 at Montreal?

2. Has there been, since the original so-called master plan was made, any revision in the estimate of cost and revenues of Expo '67 and, if so, what are these estimates?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The Government has not made any advances to the Corporation and has not taken any security on the physical assets of the Corporation.

2. The estimates of cost and revenues have been under constant review since December 1963 when the master plan for the Exhibition was submitted to and approved by the three governments. At this date, the revenues are estimated at $184,276,000 and the expenditures are estimated at $244,092,000. The net cost to the three governments sponsoring Expo '67 is placed at $59,816,000. Individual costs are thus estimated at $29,908,000 for the Federal Government, $22,431,000 for the Government of the Province of Quebec and $7,477,000 for the City of Montreal.

RESEARCH INTO WELFARE MANPOWER RESOURCES

Question No. 720—Mr. Enns:

1. Has a research project been undertaken by the Department of National Health and Welfare, in the current fiscal year, to determine how welfare manpower resources can be more effectively classified and used in the field of social welfare?

2. If so, when is the report expected to be completed?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. In 1952 the Department of National Health and Welfare carried out a survey to determine the distribution of welfare manpower resources across Canada and estimates of current and future needs of welfare agencies for welfare workers. In 1963 the commission on education and personnel of the Canadian Welfare Council made strong representations to have the Department conduct another such survey. Early in 1964, after an additional person was added to the staff, the Department agreed to undertake another survey.

2. In 1964-65 the methodology for the survey was developed and the plan for analysing the data to be collected was completed. A series of questionnaires was devised and these were pretested with selected agencies. It was intended that the actual survey would be carried out in the fall of 1965. Most arrangements have already been made, although the participation of certain agencies has not yet been worked out. However, the project has had to be postponed since the research officer primarily responsible for the project has left the Department. It may be revived when staff resources permit.

*HIRING OF LAW STUDENTS FOR STATUTE REVISION

Question No. 730—Mr. Woolliams:

1. Is the Department of Justice, on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice, intending to hire law students to investigate the Combines Investigation Act, or any other federal statute?
2. If so, what are the names of these law students, what will their salary be, and what are their qualifications in years of standing at the university?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no. In each of the past several years, however, the Combines Branch has employed a small number of students from a representative group of Canadian universities as set out in the report of the Director of Investigation and Research, Combines Investigation Act, for the year ended March 31, 1964 at page 68.

In view of the answer to the first part of the question, the second part is not applicable.

PROSECUTIONS FOR ATTEMPTED SUICIDE

Question No. 738—Mr. Fairweather:

1. During the past 20 years how many prosecutions for attempted suicide have been instituted under the provisions of Section 213 of the Criminal Code?
2. How many convictions were obtained?
3. What was the average sentence imposed?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. Information requested is not available.

2. Prior to the revision of the Criminal Code in 1955, attempts to commit suicide were an indictable offence only. With the 1955 revision, attempts to commit suicide were changed to an offence punishable on summary conviction only.

	No. of Convictions Attempted Suicide
October 1, 1942 to March 31, 1955	1,320
April 1, 1955 to December 31, 1962	1,595

3. Information requested is not available.

TAX EXEMPTION, B.C. FREE ENTERPRISE EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

Question No. 745—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the British Columbia Free Enterprise Education Association applied for tax exemption for contributions made to that organization and, if so (a) what reasons were given for this application (b) was the application granted?

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): (a) and (b) The Taxation Division of the Department of National Revenue has no record of any application from the British Columbia Free Enterprise Education Association to be recognized as a charitable organization for income tax purposes.

PERSONNEL CLASSIFICATIONS, POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE

Question No. 747—Mr. MacInnis:

1. Are shipwrights, carpenters and carpenter-joiners classified under the same trade at the Point Edward Naval Base?
2. If so, on what date was reclassification carried out?
3. Did Base Standing Orders show such reclassification and, if so, when?
4. Does classification remain a factor in allocating personnel to positions at the Point Edward Naval Base?
5. Are shipwrights, carpenters and carpenter-joiners classified under the same trade on defence establishments throughout Canada?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence). 1. Yes.

2. April 1, 1959.
3. No.
4. Yes.
5. No.

DISALLOWANCE OF EXPENDITURES BY EXHIBITION CORPORATION

Question No. 749—Mr. Southam:

With reference to expenditures by the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation, have there been instances when the Minister of Trade and Commerce has reduced or disallowed proposed expenditures and, if so, what was the date and the amount of money involved in each case of any such reduction or disallowance?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The Corporation can only make expenditures within its budget as approved by the Treasury Boards of Canada and Quebec and in accordance with the master plan as approved and amended from time to time by the governor in council and the lieutenant governor in council of the Province of Quebec.

In the preparation of the budget and the master plan every effort is made both by the Corporation and the responsible governments to achieve economy consistent with a successful exhibition.

It has been necessary for many projects as originally conceived to be changed from time to time to fit the budget and for some of them to be eliminated entirely. Such changes are made by the Corporation either before or after discussion with the responsible governments.

Various proposals for expenditure have had to be curtailed or eliminated after discussion with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but under the administrative procedure that is followed it has not been necessary for the Minister to disallow expenditures or to direct the Corporation to reduce its expenditures.

FEDERAL EXPENDITURES ON ROADS TO RESOURCES, ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Question No. 753—Mr. Dubé:

What were the amounts spent by the federal government on the Roads-to-Resources Program for each of the four Atlantic Provinces in the fiscal years ending March 31, 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964 and 1965?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

Federal funds spent Fiscal year ending	Newfoundland	P.E.I.	Nova Scotia	New Brunswick
March 31, 1960	$332,712.93	$1,127,191.38	$1,970,638.00	$ 884,846.09
March 31, 1961	797,598.38	1,465,609.74	1,064,184.68	784,142.46

March 31, 1964	750,000.00	1,000,000.00	900,000.00	750,000.00
March 31, 1965	750,000.00	515,140.51	460,920.46	750,000.00

*JOINT SECRETARY, B AND B COMMISSION

Question No. 770—Mr. Ricard:

Is the Montreal lawyer, Paul Lacoste, still joint secretary to the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission and, if so, are his services retained on a part-time or a full-time basis?

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed by the Royal Commission on Biculturalism and Bilingualism as follows:

Yes; Mr. Paul Lacoste, a lawyer, of Montreal, is still co-secretary of the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission, working on a part time basis.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

VALUE OF NATIONAL DEFENCE CONTRACTS

Question No. 157—Mr. Mather:

What was the amount, in dollars, of Department of National Defence contracts let, by provinces, in 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, and 1964?

PRINTING AND DISTRIBUTION OF FEDERAL STATUTES

Question No. 570—Mr. Matheson:

1. How many copies of federal statutes are printed and distributed (a) in English, and (b) in French?
2. What has been the cost to Treasury of printing (a) revised statutes, and (b) the annual statutes in English and French?
3. Is the government examining the article of John D. Honsberger appearing in the Canadian Bar Review of May, 1965, on the subject of bilingualism in Canadian statutes?

Return tabled.

DROUGHT CONDITIONS IN OTTAWA VALLEY—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. G. H. Doucett (Lanark): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move the adjournment of the House in accordance with Standing Order No. 26 in order to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely the distressing situation that has developed in large parts of Quebec and Ontario due to the worst drought in living memory, the resulting great drop in farm production, the forced selling of livestock due to lack of fodder which will seriously depress the entire Canadian livestock market, the extremely grave effect on farm income, and the failure of the Government to take any initiative to determine an immediate course of action to deal with this critical emergency.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. Member going to address the Chair on the question of urgency of debate?

Mr. Doucett: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that by this time many Members of the House of Commons realize the serious situation that exists throughout the Ottawa valley affecting the eastern part of Ontario and the western part of Quebec. Some counties are more seriously affected by the drought than others, but one fact that comes to our minds is that within the last few days farmers have found it necessary to dump a lot of unfinished cattle on the market, with the result that the sales barns in this area have been operating into the early hours of the morning in order to dispose of them at very depressed prices. In four adjacent counties in the Ottawa valley there are 258,600 head of cattle, and the farmers find that their fodder is becoming exhausted and they have to do something in a hurry.

The effect on the cattle population is not the only serious aspect. In the Ottawa valley area and the western part of the Province of Quebec there are some of the finest farmers in Canada. They have spent a lifetime, as their fathers did before them, in building up foundation stock, and now they find they are going to have to market stock which it will take them a lifetime to replace. We also find that the production of fruit and vegetables in this area has been reduced to a trickle, resulting in increased costs to the consumer and leaving the producers with very little income.

I think this matter is very urgent, Mr. Speaker, and that we should take immediate steps to see if we can do something to relieve the situation and help the farmers of this area to lay plans for the future. In today's paper I note that the farmers of this area who have suffered from drought for the last two years have found it necessary to purchase large amounts of fodder and to borrow from banks, which is an added burden on top of the mortgage payments that some of them have to make. According to the press they are asking that a freeze be placed on their mortgage payments so they can re-establish themselves.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that this matter be given serious consideration.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, dealing with the question of urgency of debate of this important matter arising out of the severe losses being incurred in the counties of Renfrew, Lanark, Pontiac and the adjacent territory, I would point out that there will be full opportunity to discuss this subject when we come to interim supply. I hope we will reach interim supply later today or on Friday. There will be a request then for a part of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

In any event, I have no wish to deny in any way the seriousness of the situation. I had occasion to see it at first hand over the last week end, and undoubtedly it is of a very serious nature. But what we are concerned with at the moment is whether we should set aside all of the business of the House at this time in order to debate this question. I respectfully submit that we should follow the regular procedure and debate it when the opportunity arises to discuss agriculture either later today or on Friday.

Mr. Lambert: Nonsense.

Mr. McIlraith: I know the hon. Member for Edmonton West thinks it is nonsense, but I submit the matter can be discussed on the agricultural estimates either later today or on Friday.

An hon. Member: What about the address to the Queen?

Mr. McIlraith: As hon. Members know, assistance in this kind of disaster situation is usually given at the request of a province. Hon. Members will know that there was a request from Ontario for one measure of assistance which has been granted, but I believe I am correct in saying that no request has been made by the Government of the Province of Quebec with regard to this matter.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support the adjournment motion, and make a few remarks on the question of urgency. It is well known that in the Ottawa valley there has been a lack of moisture not only this year but last year, and that the situation is now critical. The fact that it is raining this afternoon means very little, because it will take a great deal of rain to overcome the drought of the last two years.

The Provincial Government has asked the Federal Government for assistance, and I hope the Federal Government will accept this motion today on the basis of doing something about the situation immediately. We have had some indication from Quebec Members in recent weeks with regard to the situation in the Lake St. John area, where rainmakers produced rain steadily for 67 days. If rain is to come in time to help crops in the Ottawa valley this year, 10 days is too long to wait for this operation to start. It should be started tomorrow. The Government can provide this kind of assistance today, and should not wait for any other request from the Province of Ontario.

I am not completely convinced that this rainmaking operation works, but the situation in the Ottawa valley is so desperate that I think it should be tried. It is also very desperate in Timiskaming. While the farmers there were able to produce a great deal of hay in the last two years and supply a large amount to the farmers of the Ottawa valley, there will be no supply of hay available from that source this year. Many farmers in my constituency are going to have to sell their cattle and consider completely changing their way of life.

I think this matter is important enough to warrant the adjournment of the regular business of the House so the Government can take appropriate action this afternoon to help alleviate the desperate situation facing all farmers throughout the Ottawa valley.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, we in this party recognize the critical nature of the drought that has been prevailing for the last several weeks in the Ottawa valley and adjacent territory. We believe this matter is important enough to set aside all other business and take some action to give assistance. However, the problem arises, Mr. Speaker, of what kind of assistance you are going to attempt to give. What would such a debate achieve? I draw Your Honour's attention to citation 100 of Beauchesne, paragraph 1, which says the adjournment must be for a purpose involving the administrative responsibility of the Government.

Now, unless we are going to change the pattern of providing assistance to farmers and others who are caught in disasters of this kind, we would have to wait on the initiative of the Province to set up some kind of emergency assistance program. The Province in turn would ask the Federal Government to pay a portion of the cost. This has always been done in the past. I recall in 1961, for example, when there was a widespread drought covering the three prairie provinces, assistance was given by the Federal Government. However, the program in each of the Provinces was initiated and administered by the local Provincial Government. The Federal Government was asked to pay a portion of the cost.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to citation 100, paragraph 5, which says the adjournment of the House cannot be moved with reference to critical conditions prevailing generally in certain parts of the country. If we should rely on that rule, of course, the motion would be ruled completely out of order. After having seen a large portion of this area, I prefer to think the situation is sufficiently critical and important enough to occupy a day of debate in this House. Then the question comes up, what can we do?

An hon. Member: Let us find out.

Mr. Olson: An hon. Member says "Let us find out". The fact is that at this stage the situation does not involve any administrative responsibility of the Federal Government. If the Province had set up some kind of program and requested the co-operation or assistance of the Federal Government, and the Federal Government came to Parliament asking for funds to participate in the assistance program, then we would have something positive to debate. Unfortunately that is not the case at this moment.

Then citation 100, paragraph 3, defines "urgency" to some extent. It says that urgency within this rule applied under Standing Order 26 means urgency of debate. This, Mr. Speaker, is the aspect to which we have to confine our thinking. What are we going to do with the debate? We could have a general discussion. We could, perhaps, suggest many things the Federal Government could do if it moved into this area of providing this assistance. However, that has not been the practice in the past. Until the Governments of both Provinces come to the Federal Government asking for some assistance, it seems to me it would be rather difficult to formulate the kind of action that could properly be adopted.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): I should like to speak to the matter of urgency in reply to some of the statements that have been made by the President of the Privy Council and the hon. Member for Medicine Hat on the question of what can be done. We in western Canada well remember the serious drought that threatened that part of the country in 1961. Contrary to what the hon. Member for Medicine Hat has said, the initiative was taken by the Federal Minister of Agriculture at that time. On his initiative the various Provincial Ministers of Agriculture were called together to discuss a program of emergency action to be taken. There is no need at all to circumvent the constitution or to deny the right of the Provinces to take the initiative. All we are suggesting in this House is that the Federal Government take the initiative—

Mr. Olson: May I ask a question?

Mr. Jorgenson: —as was done in the past, in discussing a program of action to meet this situation. If nothing else, the debate in this House may produce a Minister of Agriculture.

An hon. Member: Where is the Minister?

Mr. Jorgenson: It is quite obvious from the questions that have been asked in this House during the last few days that there is no plan of action; there is no program intended on the part of this Government.

An hon. Member: There is no Minister.

Mr. Jorgenson: There is a great need for the farmers to have the assurance that a program is available to them if the worst comes to the worst. During the drought year of 1961 a good part of the program developed was never needed, never put into effect, because the situation was alleviated by rainfalls later in the summer. However, there was a program ready to be put into effect if it had been needed. I suggest that this Government can take action, can take the initiative in cooperating with the Provinces in developing a program to meet this critical situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we have before us today a motion to adjourn the business of the House to discuss the emergency caused by drought conditions in eastern Ontario and western Quebec.

When it is a question of helping farmers, I think it behooves the House to take the necessary steps to solve their problems.

In our area of Saguenay-Lake St. John, as in the Abitibi area, the problem is altogether different. We have too much rain; here, there is not enough.

If we adjourn the business of the House, will this afternoon's discussion be useful? We must first determine whether it is a definite matter of urgent public importance and, second, whether the discussion can be useful.

Is there any urgency? Of course, there is. Since the first part of this session is to end today or Friday. But the President of the Privy Council (Mr. McIlraith) replies that we shall have full opportunity to discuss this matter during interim supply which may be called later today or on Friday. Now, I say to the President of the Privy Council that there are already several subjects he suggested we could take up during interim supply. There is the address submitted to the Queen of England by the province of Quebec, the Dorion report itself and the related leaks. Thus, there are several subjects to be discussed on interim supply, which means that there will be very little time left to discuss the serious problem of farmers who suffer from drought. That would seem to confirm the urgency of a debate.

Now, the emergency of such a debate was proved a while ago. Moreover, another important aspect that needs consideration is that this would enable us to see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) in the house. Indeed, we have the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) but not the Minister of Agriculture. If we could only succeed in bringing him to the house, it would be a tremendous help.

Now, what would be the usefulness of such a debate? That question was raised a while ago. It is obvious that requests on this matter must come from provincial governments and that the federal government takes appropriate action afterwards. This was not done but, on the other hand, the federal government has acted accordingly in other fields. The federal government could make decisions of its own as to the steps to be taken. For instance, here in the Ottawa valley, there were complaints about the lack of rain while, in our region, there were complaints for a long period about too much rain. The federal government, through the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), took quite drastic steps so that, after many discussions concerning rainmaking machines, they were taken out of the Saguenay-Lake St. John district which has now enjoyed ten days of fine weather.

Now, that matter could be discussed here and we could suggest to the Minister of Transport to use his influence to have those rainmaking machines brought to Ottawa as fast as possible. The federal government could pass such a measure in order to end the drought and thus the misfortune of some people could bring happiness to others.

For all those reasons, I think it would be useful to discuss the situation. I believe it is an urgent problem and it is urgent to discuss it because we are now in the dying days of this first part of the session. I think you should authorize such a debate. It would give us an opportunity to discuss the situation of farmers who are now facing that serious problem in several regions. It would be useful for the whole country or, at least, for the farming community.

• (3:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, first of all may I say this situation is sufficiently serious that I trust the House will not let it go by the board on the question of semantics or the reading of fine type as to whether or not we should have a debate. The important thing is that these farmers find themselves in a critical condition.

I spent most of yesterday with the provincial Minister of Agriculture—

Mr. Nielsen: Where is your Minister?

Mr. Greene: This is properly a matter for provincial initiative. The provincial Minister of Agriculture saw fit to look into this problem yesterday, and thought it sufficiently important and critical that he has made an announcement stating that in spite of the very hazardous nature of the proceedings he deems it worth while to take a 20 to 1 chance and bring in rainmaking equipment at an expenditure of $200,000. If the province is willing to spend $200,000 on a 20 to 1 shot, surely this indicates the critical nature of the situation.

There has been only .42 inches of rain this past month, and it is the most serious drought in 75 years. The provincial Minister of Agriculture agreed that the county of Renfrew was the worst hit in the Province of Ontario, and if this is not serious then I do not know what is, so far as it affects my people, my county and my province.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. Member, and I see other Members want to take part in the debate, but perhaps they will have an opportunity to do so in a few minutes.

The Chair has listened with great interest to the motion proposed by the hon. Member for Lanark (Mr. Doucett). There is no doubt whatever that he has raised a matter of serious and immediate importance. It is a matter of great urgency, and I suggest to hon. Members that there is also urgency of debate.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. McIlraith) had, I believe, a very serious argument when he suggested that there will be an opportunity to discuss this matter in a short while and said that perhaps later this afternoon, or on Friday, or at the start of next week there will be interim supply. But as has been pointed out, rightly, by the hon. Member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), there are a number of subjects already assigned for debate during interim supply, and in view of the extreme urgency of the matter raised by the hon. Member for Lanark the Chair proposes to submit the motion to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lanark (Mr. Doucett), seconded by the hon. Member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) asks leave——to move the adjournment of this House in accordance with Standing Order 26, in order to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely, the distressing situation that has developed in large parts of Quebec and Ontario due to the worst drought in living memory, the resulting great drop in farm production, the forced selling of livestock due to lack of fodder which will seriously depress the entire Canadian livestock market, the extremely grave effect on farm income, and the failure of the Government to take any initiative to determine an immediate course of action to deal with this critical emergency.

The hon. Member for Lanark, seconded by the hon. Member for Nicolet-Yamaska moves:

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. G. H. Doucett (Lanark): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for this opportunity. As already pointed out, this condition is one of the most serious that has occurred in this community during the last three quarters of a century.

The rainfall during the past crop season has been less than needed. There are grave circumstances facing the farmers. The area affected covers a great many different types of farmers. In Renfrew county it is mostly cattle raising and dairy farming and the dairy industry has certainly suffered.

One farmer told me yesterday that he was about to put in a milk cooler, but in view of present conditions he wondered if it would be necessary for him to instal it. Many of the farmers with dairy cattle in this area have already fed them what surplus feed was left from last year, and now find their pastures are becoming totally depleted. As I mentioned just a few minutes ago, at the time of the 1961 census the cattle population in the four counties adjacent to the Ottawa River totalled some 260,000 to 270,000. Many of them are dairy cattle. Many farmers have young stock coming along and, due to the shortage of pasture fodder, something will have to be done to alleviate their plight.

Farmers are taking unfinished feeders to the sales barns, which are overloaded, and according to one newspaper I notice that at Cobden and in Perth last week they continued selling cattle until the early hours of the morning.

Finished cattle at the present time are selling in the neighbourhood of 25 cents a pound. Considering the farmers' machinery costs and their capital investment, the return is not too much. According to reports, some of the cattle that have been dumped on the market because of lack of feed have been sold at ridiculously low prices, some even as low as 13 cents or 14 cents a pound.

It is hardly necessary to point out that in such circumstances a farmer would certainly find himself in a drastic financial condition. It takes a number of years to lay the foundation for a herd. Cattle which he purchased two years ago most probably cost more than he can get for them at present, and this creates a drastic situation. During the last few years many young farmers have bought farms at reasonable prices and equipped them with stock and machinery. In 1963 and again in 1964 they found it necessary to buy feed for their stock. They had to borrow from the banks, and now they find themselves in a desperate situation, obliged to dispose of their stock at prices far below their value. Their output of dairy products is extremely limited; they are finding it necessary to buy meal, and cannot see their way clear to repay their loans to the bank, plus the interest on those loans. Yet if they fail they face the loss of their mortgages.

I do not think I need emphasize to you, Mr. Speaker, the great plight which the agricultural community is facing. Of course we hope to get rain immediately. That would help to bring on a second crop. It would help the grain. But whether we do or not, a degree of damage has already been done which cannot be repaired. Every one of these farmers will find himself in a difficult financial position this fall; he will find himself obliged to make severe readjustments in order to remain solvent.

This is why I have brought the present motion before the House. I want to see what can be done to establish confidence among these people, who laid the foundation for this great country of ours. I want to let them know that their representatives throughout Canada are thinking of them and are willing to give every assistance so as to tide them over this distressing situation. I believe others will wish to speak on this subject. This is a situation which I am sure we all regret. It is one which can be solved by co-operation and by putting our shoulders to the wheel.

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): Ottawa Valley members on both sides of the House have for some weeks been drawing this situation to the attention of the House. As time went by the problem facing our farmers became more critical.

It is true, as was stated by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. McIlraith), that according to strict constitutional procedure we have to await provincial initiative either from Ontario or from Quebec, which is also affected, before federal action can be undertaken in the normal course. But I do not think that because this has been the practice in the past a pattern need be set for the future. Some hon. Members may agree that in the past two, three or five years there has possibly been too great a tendency to await provincial action in circumstances such as these. From my own limited knowledge of constitutional law it seems that if anything is of sufficient moment to affect the national well-being there is constitutional authority for independent government action at the federal level whether or not it is a provincial matter in its original aspect.

This drought, I suggest, is of such consequence that it will affect the national well-being. It will affect food prices. Already there are cries of complaint from consumers. Food prices affect the nation as a whole and this being the case I suggest, with respect, that we at Federal level should consider action in this regard.

The Federal Department of Agriculture is convinced that the rain making program is a very long shot. I think today's newspapers say it is a 20 to 1 shot. The provincial Department of Agriculture considers the situation so grave that it is willing to spend $200,000 on a 20 to 1 shot. I know the Dominion Meteorologist doubts the validity of claims for rain making equipment. Well, I believe the hon. Member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) and some of his colleagues have been complaining that rain making equipment is only too effective. If there is any chance whatever, be it 20 to 1 or a 100 to 1, I hope the federal Department of Agriculture will see its way clear to participate in the rain making venture, in view of the severity of drought conditions in the Ottawa Valley.

This is one facet of the help we can give at federal level to farmers in their desperate plight at the present time. It is not merely a case of a drought this year only, nor is it a case of drought both this year and last year, as the hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) suggested. As far as the farmers of Renfrew County and the Ottawa Valley generally are concerned, this is the fourth year in which they have suffered severe loss through drought.

It seems to me we could take action at the federal level in connection with matters which are properly within the federal ambit, and that such action would be of considerable help to the farmers in their present need. First, we could bring in moratorium legislation with respect to Farm Credit Corporation mortgages, and farm loans of all types, in any way supported by the federal Government. This would have application to loans under the machinery syndicates legislation, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation loans, and so on. This general area is within the federal ambit of jurisdiction. There should be a moratorium with respect to principal and interest on mortgages pending the alleviation of drought conditions.

Banking and interest are within the ambit of the federal authority. Most of the farmers affected have had to borrow heavily from the banks in order to carry on last year and this year. It is our duty to see to it that our farmers are not strangled out of existence, and we can help do this by relieving them of interest payments and payments on debts. I am sure that in conjunction with the chartered banks we can make some arrangement whereby farmers will not be squeezed out of existence because this year they will not be able to pay interest on bank loans or make repayments of principal.

I also wish to point one other thing. I have suggested that the Federal Government should take the initiative as this is a national crisis. I have suggested that they should participate with the Province of Ontario in the rain making program, which quite properly was initiated by the province; that was the proper venue in which a measure such as this should be initiated. I have suggested that we should gladly, willingly and eagerly participate in this program irrespective of the technical opinion of the Dominion Meteorologist, because if there is any chance it is a chance worth taking. As I pointed out, there has been .42 of an inch of rain in the past month and this is the worse drought in 75 years. Last night some of us had the opportunity to meet with the members of the Farmers Union, who brought these critical difficulties very forcibly to our attention. In particular, Mr. Powers, the Vice President of the Union, pointed out the difficult situation in the Valley, as he comes from Beachburg in the Ottawa Valley, and I think he made a suggestion which it is my responsibility to draw as forcibly as I can to the attention of the House for the solution of this matter. As he pointed out, with which views I agree wholeheartedly, even if our rain making program is successful at this time—which I hope we will participate in—and even if we do take these very proper measures to alleviate the farmer from the pressure of his current debts, as I suggested earlier, there is one further program that is most necessary and that we should initiate here.

As evidence of the situation that the hon. Member for Temiskaming (Mr. Peters) referred to earlier, namely the fact that last year there was a drought of catastrophic proportions in this area, we co-operated with the provincial Department of Agriculture of Ontario and instituted emergency measures by way of freight assistance in transporting cattle to market and by way of subsidy on hay imported into this area. This year there is no point in speaking of a subsidy with respect to the importation of hay, because the drought is so critical in other parts of the Province of Ontario—and I may say that this is not a unique area; in the great State of New York this year they are suffering a drought which I think is as critical and as serious as ours. Generally there just is no hay. Therefore a program of subsidizing the importation of hay into this area just is not feasible, but forage is very badly needed. As has been earlier pointed out, the farmer is in the position right now of having to sell at sacrifice prices cattle that should be sold much later, because he fears that even though he may be able to feed them right today, there will be no feed this fall with which to winter his cattle. Hay is not available. I am not a technical man but I certainly feel for the farmers in their desperate plight as sincerely and as deeply as I could if I had the necessary technical knowledge. There may be a good many solutions that are perfect and absolute here, but I know that with the technical abilities we have in the Department of Agriculture we can suggest a system of subsidized forage whereby we will be able to get the forage into this area on a basis of help and subsidy if need be. It cannot be hay; it must be some other type of forage, as hay is not available.

I think this is a desperate and dark hour in the lives of these people, most of whom have lived in this area of eastern Ontario for many generations. I do not think these are people who come running to Government every time something gets a little tough. I do not think they come to us on their knees, and they never will, because these are proud people. But I do suggest that if we have any function here whatsoever it surely is to see to it that we use every measure and every available facet of governmental action that is available to us in order to alleviate this desperate situation of the farmers of eastern Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I think the House should be appreciative of the fact that the hon. Member for Lanark (Mr. Doucett) brought forward this motion so that this matter could be discussed. Before discussing it I would like to point out something that I think should be apparent to everyone. There is no Minister of Agriculture here. His Parliamentary Secretary is not here. That man who acts as the eastern representative of agriculture and makes so many silly statements, the Minister of Forestry is not here. The Acting Prime Minister is not here. The man that has been left to make this decision is a man who has aspirations for the Ontario leadership of the party and who appears to be given the leadership in this field. I think this is a disgrace.

I think there are solutions to this problem. I was aware that it happened two years ago. The hon. Member representing the riding of Renfrew says it has been a factor for four years. Therefore the federal Department of Agriculture must have known that there was going to be a serious problem and these people should be here this afternoon to accept or reject some of the suggestions made by the Members. If this is not done, I am prepared to move an adjournment motion, because this discussion will serve no purpose at all. I think the farmers in the Renfrew area have the right to expect the federal Government to give some leadership to them, but there is in this House no one who can accept suggestions made by Members. I don't know what the country will think about it, but I am sure they are going to ask, "Is the Minister of Agriculture out selling the cattle that have been forced on to the market in the last few days, causing a surplus of cattle?" But the Minister is not here and is not responsible enough to have somebody here speaking for his department.

I think there is a federal responsibility in this matter and some Minister is going to have to get up and indicate what they are going to do about it. No wonder the Government wanted to oppose this motion this afternoon; they have no intention of even listening to us. The farmers deserve a better deal than that, because these farmers are faced with a serious plight. We will go on and discuss the problem, although it is not going to do a damned bit of good, because there is nobody here to listen and this Government is not interested.

I look at the Renfrew Advance. They have pointed out a number of times in recent days how serious is this problem, and in the last issue of June 10 the headline is, "Drought ... Conditions worst in 25 years". This article goes on to say:

> Area farmers are facing the worst drought to hit the Ottawa Valley in 25 years. Rains predicted for Monday evening turned out to be only scattered showers and many areas did not receive any moisture. Eganville was one area that had more rain than most places but even there the situation remains grave.

The Renfrew Mercury, another Ottawa Valley newspaper, headlines the story, "Shortage of rain may cause extensive losses in county". This article goes on to say:

> Renfrew County farmers could be faced with massive crop failures this year if rain does not come within the next few days, it was learned this week.

This has been known for some time. I wonder whether the Member for Renfrew South (Mr. Greene) and the Member for Renfrew North (Mr. Forgie) have not brought this matter to the attention of the Government, and this is why there is not someone here that can get up and say what the federal Government is prepared to do in this situation.

Mr. Greene: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the hon. Member has seen fit to single out the Member for Renfrew North and myself, may I say—and I think it is my duty to say it—that we have been bringing this matter to the attention of the Minister and the department for the past three weeks at least, and quite properly have been instructed by them that they could take no initiative in this connection until a request came from the Provincial Government; and in spite of urging from this end, the Government of the Province of Ontario, who had the initiative, saw fit to do nothing until yesterday when they suggested bringing in rain making equipment.

Mr. Vincent: What about the Province of Quebec?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I will accept the point of privilege made and will withdraw the inference which the hon. Member took out of my remarks, which inference I did not intend. The inference I intended to make is that they have not been able to persuade the Government to take any action, and that no one here is prepared to take any action.

• (4:00 p.m.)

I note that the Acting Minister of Agriculture for eastern Canada is in the House. Perhaps he is in a position to say what the Federal Government will do. But I am not prepared to accept the remarks of the last speaker, who implied that if the Provincial Government is not willing to do anything, then the Federal Government is not in a position to do anything. That is not correct. We should be in a position to do something.

I do not think the Quebec Government arranged for those rain-makers in the St. Johns area. The Quebec Government had one heck of a time getting rid of them. The Federal Government had the right to continue this experiment by applying to the Government of Ontario to move the rain-makers to the Ottawa Valley, rather than to hire an outside firm from Colorado, not yesterday, as the hon. Member suggested, but three days ago at a cost of $100,000.

It is the responsibility of the Federal Government to take action in fields over which they have jurisdiction. The Federal Government could report to Parliament and ask it to consider the necessary steps. What is the point of our making a plea on behalf of these farmers if the Government Members intend to sit here until five o'clock, at which time the whole matter will drop. I do not think that is a fair attitude to take in relation to the plight of the farmers in this area.

We have also heard the suggestion that loans be made to the farmers in the area. I am not in favour of providing loans to the farmers in the Ottawa Valley, because they are now faced with a situation which, in my opinion, has continued into this year from last year. These farmers have spent all the money they have accumulated over the years as a result of this disastrous situation. These people have had to sell their beef cattle, which usually brings 25 cents a pound on the market, at a sacrifice price of an average of 14 cents a pound. This has also resulted in the loss of their potential breeding stock. These farmers will be in considerable difficulty for a considerable length of time before they build their herds back up to that position they were in before the disaster struck. By giving them loans we are only going to burden them again with payments that they will not be able to make.

We are not asking the Government to give the farmers loans. More drastic steps than that are required to deal with this situation. Many things could be suggested in the way of helping these farmers. A great deal of the hay that was bought by the farmers in the Ottawa Valley last year came from my area, and much of that hay had been stored in barns for four, five and six years. Those supplies have been pretty well depleted. There are many areas in my part of the country which can carry 10,000 or 12,000 head of cattle. We might provide a solution to part of the problem if the Federal Government was prepared to facilitate the moving of the cattle.

The Federal Government now operates a community pasture in the Earlton area, and I am quite sure that the farmers who are not using a great deal of the grazing land in that area would be willing to make reasonable arrangements for the pasturing of a large part of the cattle of this area, provided the Federal Government would assist in moving them in. I do not know whether that would be a good idea or not, but it is a suggestion. Perhaps the agricultural representative in the Renfrew area could get together with the agricultural representative in my area and work out some arrangement. Perhaps some arrangements could be made to allow the farmers of the Ottawa Valley area to go into the area around Earlton to cut hay at a reasonable rate. Much of this hay was not cut last year and would not be cut this year under normal circumstances. I am sure there are several thousand acres of hay which will not be cut this year unless some such arrangements are made.

There are many things this Government could do which would not cost very much money, but if they have no intention of helping the farmers in these disastrous circumstances, then obviously we are wasting our time by continuing this discussion. If the general public in the Ottawa Valley find that this Government is as callous as it appears to be, they will not only look seriously at the grain and hay situation in the Renfrew area, but will look at the cost of fruits and vegetables right here in Ottawa in the Byward market. They will find that strawberries, which are not worth buying, will be selling at 75 cents a basket. They will wonder about this situation, and why the Federal Government did not examine it and do something about it.

This disaster will not only have an effect on the farmers of this area but also on the housewives who buy fruits and vegetables which will not be produced in any quantity this year. One of the members of the protective staff in this building spoke to me this morning and told me that a friend of his has five acres in strawberries but will not get enough this year to put into his freezer for his own home use, yet last year he found it difficult hiring enough help to pick the strawberries from that same five acres.

We have heard a lot of facetious remarks about rain making in Quebec. There was a group of individuals visiting this House yesterday attempting to make rain of a different kind. I am not prepared to say that one can make rain. I am not prepared to argue that you cannot seed clouds and create a certain amount of precipitation. I am certainly not in a position to tell you whether or not this method works on a grandiose scale and can produce rain for 67 consecutive days, just with a couple of machines in the countryside. On the other hand, I am not prepared to say that we should not investigate this and decide whether it does work.

If this situation continues in the Ottawa Valley, I am sure the ARDA program will have to be used in respect of almost all the farms in the Renfrew area. The wealth of these farmers has never been great enough to allow these farmers to survive two or three successive crop failures. If something is not done in respect of this disaster, these people will be moving off these farms into other areas next year. This is a critical situation and the federal Government has an obligation right now to do whatever it can to relieve the plight of these people, even if it is only through a pseudo-hypothetical means.

The hon. Member for Quebec suggested that no matter what is done about this problem, these farmers are not going to have a June hay crop; but as the hon. Member for Lanark (Mr. Doucett) stated, the farmers may be able to harvest a second crop this fall which will at least help solve the problem.

I do not know whether there is anything more I can add to this discussion. I am very sympathetic to the farmer, but I should like to warn both the farmers and the Members of this House not to consider adopting a system of providing loans to these farmers, because all that will do is bankrupt the farm communities in the Ottawa Valley. I am in complete agreement with what the hon. Member for Renfrew South (Mr. Greene) stated, that there should be some kind of a moratorium in respect of federal loans in the area directly affected by this disaster, and that could include all farm loans, veterans farm loans, farm improvement loans and loans made under all federal Government acts. There should be a one or two year moratorium in respect of the payments. I caution the Members of this House again not to adopt a system of loans to these farmers in this disaster area. These farmers paid 65 cents for a bale of hay in the Renfrew area last year. They cannot be expected to pay that price again this year and repay their loans. They have had to sell their cattle at sacrifice prices, but I believe that is even better than paying 65 cents a bale for hay.

[Mr. Peters.]

The Federal Government should consider now the idea of moving equipment from other parts of Ontario to these grazing areas in order to cut this unused hay. That might be part of the solution to the problem. It might also consider assistance in respect of moving cattle to these areas. The effect of this disaster is not being felt only in the disaster area, but in other parts of the province. These people are selling their cattle at reduced prices and this is displacing the market in other areas. Surely some solution can be found to this problem. But I castigate the Government again for their lack of leadership and their lack of fortitude in looking for something they can do. It is all right for the hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) to say that the book does not allow us to do this, but with respect to other things we are able to look for some way to get around the book if we want to do so.

We have had a resolution before us in recent days containing 19 allied items. If the Government had stuck in another one providing for the payment of $10 million to the Renfrew farmers because of the crop failure, I am sure everybody would have said that we could not turn it down and there would have been no argument that we could not do it. It all depends on whether we want to do it.

I suggest it is the Government's role to give leadership. I think the Cabinet will find that Members of the Opposition are very sympathetic with regard to the problem faced by the farmers of the Ottawa valley and will give favourable consideration to any reasonable proposition that the Government will put forward. I think the Government should stand up now and make some suggestions that will be advantageous to the farmers of this area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Medicine Hat spoke against the very purpose of this debate when the question was under consideration as to whether or not a debate would serve a useful purpose in bringing about some assistance with regard to the drought conditions in the eastern part of Ontario. Surely we should not waste our time hearing him now when he was not even in favour of the debate. I think we should hear others who are willing and prepared to make some contribution toward helping to alleviate the drought conditions in the eastern counties of Ontario and the western counties of Quebec.

Mr. Jorgenson: Instead of apologizing for the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The usual practice in a debate on such a motion is to complete one round so that one representative from each party in the House will be heard. The Chair saw the hon. Member for Medicine Hat. If it is the wish of the House that somebody else should speak, there is a procedure open to Members of the House.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Jorgenson: The Government's apologist.

Mr. Olson: —in spite of the obviously ridiculous attempt by the hon. Member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) to raise a point of order, what I said earlier when the Speaker was considering whether the motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 26 should stand was that it seems to me we should have something positive to debate if we are going to spend the day debating the very serious situation in the Ottawa valley.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Drought conditions are positive enough.

Mr. Olson: They are positive enough, but I should like to know what kind of action the Government intends to take with respect to this matter. If we are going to proceed in an orderly and proper way, it seems to me there should have been some suggestions from the Government as to what they intend to do.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The Minister is not even here.

Mr. Olson: In spite of what the hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) said about the Federal Government initiating action to provide emergency assistance in 1961, I know that in Alberta the provincial Government—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): They dragged their feet.

Mr. Olson: —and the Minister primarily concerned initiated and carried out the entire drought assistance program. That does not take anything away from the federal Government of that day because they acted quite properly in coming along and picking up part of the cost of that program. I certainly do not wish to downgrade the actions of the federal Government of that day.

Over the week end I spent a little time in the Arnprior area of Renfrew County and at points between there and Ottawa, and I know that the drought situation is very serious and calls for emergency action by both levels of government. There is no question about that. For the benefit of the hon. Member for Acadia, prior to the Speaker accepting this motion I said that I thought the situation was important and serious enough that it could quite properly occupy the attention of the House for a day or more. I went on to ask what we would be debating. The hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) wanted to know what action is going to result from the debate we are now having. The hon. Member for Renfrew South (Mr. Greene) says he has been making representations to the federal Government for the last three weeks to try to get them to undertake some action to alleviate the situation. We do not have anything before the House yet, but at the same time the hon. Member says that the drought has been gradually building up over the last four years, that it was critical last year and that it is a complete disaster this year. Anyone who has been there and looked at the conditions agrees with him. Yet we find we have nothing before the House of which we can either approve or disapprove. So there is no program.

I wrote down a number of suggestions and I do not claim they are new. They have been tried in other areas where this kind of emergency has arisen. We need to have extensions, postponements, deferments, or whatever you want to call them, of payments under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Farm Credit Corporation, the Veterans Land Act and so on. The hon. Member for Timiskaming mentioned this point. This was done on the prairies when there was a very serious situation in 1961.

I agree with the hon. Member for Timiskaming that loans are not the solution. We also need to have some kind of program of freight assistance, if there is any fodder available to be brought in, and also feed grain assistance. I know there is plenty of feed grain and there could very well be an accelerated or expanded freight assistance program on feed grain. In addition, I think some arrangement could be worked out between the local municipal governments and the provincial governments to defer land taxes, with the Federal Government giving assistance by way of grants to the municipal governments so they can carry on. These are necessary things and represent the kind of program that will be of some positive help to the people of the area.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, in Alberta the Provincial Government assumed a larger share of the cost for emergency relief required to take care of operating costs, the purchase of fuel, seed and feed and so on for those people who had depleted their cash reserves and to some extent had even depleted their credit. These are the kinds of action the Federal Government should have taken particularly in view of the fact they have known about the situation for weeks and months.

Mr. Greene: Will the hon. Member permit a question?

Mr. Olson: Yes.

Mr. Greene: May I say I concur with the hon. Member most wholeheartedly, but does he suggest that the Federal Government under our constitution can embark on this type of program, affecting essentially provincial matters, without the province first suggesting that this kind of program be invoked?

Mr. Olson: Constitutionally the hon. Member is correct and the practice in the past has been for the provincial governments to initiate such programs. But I think it would be proper for Federal Government officials or the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) and the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) to provoke, shall I say, the provincial governments into taking this kind of action and also to indicate to both Provincial Governments that they can expect full and wholehearted support on the part of the Federal Government in sharing the cost. I think this could be done.

Mr. Macquarrie: Will the hon. Member permit a question?

Mr. Olson: Yes.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Macquarrie: In view of the fact that section 95 of the British North America Act declares agriculture to be a subject of concurrent jurisdiction with, in the case of conflict, the Dominion authority prevailing, and considering that administrative competence stems from legislative responsibility, would he not agree that the Federal authority has every right and propriety to move forward and take the initiative?

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: I know that the Federal Government has equal authority constitutionally with the Provincial Governments with respect to matters dealing with agriculture, but when we start to talk about emergency relief matters more things are involved which cannot be strictly confined to agriculture. In any event, there is nothing wrong with the programs that have been used in the past. If the hon. Member for Renfrew South (Mr. Greene) is sure as a result of his representations and his investigation of this matter during the past few months that he is justified in saying the province has not acted as expeditiously as it ought to have, then I should like to ask him this: Have there been any overtures from the Federal Department of Agriculture to see if they could not work out a program to which provincial and federal governments would agree during the past few months? Was the first indication there was going to be positive action taken by the Provincial Government given within the last two or three days? I think, Mr. Speaker, that these things should be worked out or at least discussed ahead of time. This situation has been continuing now for some time and has reached an emergency point where we need a crash program. This thing did not happen yesterday or even last month; it has been building up for a long time.

In addition to the other suggestions other hon. Members have made and one or two new ones I advanced, I should like to say I would support the suggestion made by the hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) that cattle be moved for grazing purposes if there is grazing within a reasonable distance of the Ottawa Valley. Surely if there is such grazing it should be made available and there should be assistance given toward the cost of transportation. There is some very valuable foundation stock and breeding stock in this valley that needs to be saved. There is no other way of doing it. Either you take them out where there is grazing for them or you haul the fodder in. I suggest, at least for the balance of the summer months, the most economical way this can be done, both in the interests of the farmer and the public treasury, is to move these cattle to where there is grass. This was done in Alberta in 1961 on a rather small scale. Some of the very valuable animals were moved and it was certainly worth while.

There is no question about the Members of this party supporting any action the federal Government wants to take to provide assistance under an emergency relief measure. We would like to know what the Government is going to do. We would like them to come before this Parliament and ask for some specific amount of money with some specific program to use it. They will certainly get the wholehearted support and cooperation of the Members of this party.

• (4:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I cannot let this opportunity go by without saying at least a few words. Like other members, especially the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), I am not annoyed but disgusted with the lack of interest shown by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) for the farm problems of eastern Canada. As a matter of fact, he should have been in the house today, to listen to our suggestions and tell us about the decisions the government intends to take concerning this matter.

I see that the Minister of Forestry is back and will probably speak in the name of the Minister of Agriculture.

In my opinion, that is the least the government can offer to us and, at this stage I want to point out to the house that for two years now eastern Canadian farmers, particularly those of Quebec, have been asking for the appointment of a Minister of Agriculture for the east. But when you consider the low value of the present federal Minister of Agriculture and when you see that the Liberal government is not even able to find a good minister for the west, I think it is therefore useless to have another one for eastern Canada.

The Minister of Agriculture being absent from the house, I hope that the Minister of Forestry will take into consideration the recommendations that will be made this afternoon and that he will deal with them.

It was mentioned earlier that, two or three days ago, the Ontario government reached an agreement with some American firms to set up rain making machines, in order to increase precipitation and check the drought now prevailing in this area.

Mr. Speaker, I must say immediately that I do not agree with that decision under the circumstances. In fact, last year, the Abitibi farmers sustained losses on account of those rain-making machines and it seems that when the mechanism of those machines is released, it is quite difficult to stop it. In fact, last autumn, throughout winter and even this spring, we had to fight against those infernal machines which did more harm than good. I know nothing of the experience and ability of the management of this American company but even if their machines can increase precipitation, they could be useful in a certain sector of the economy but harmful in others.

In my opinion, it would be much better to rely on Divine Providence and on nature as created to control the weather and the climate in our area.

It is undeniable, however, that some areas of the lower Ottawa valley are affected by drought, that they have suffered and are still suffering damages. I feel that the government should submit proposals this very day so as to solve this problem, not by offering loans to the farmers affected, but by providing them with grants in proportion to their present losses, because whether it be in the riding of Renfrew, in the Ottawa valley, in Quebec or elsewhere, farming is so uneconomic that the present difficulties resulting from weather conditions will surely cause great losses to the farmers.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to insist on one point. I said a few moments ago that the government should make proposals and take the initiative, if necessary, by inviting the ministers of Ontario and Quebec to meet with its representatives, not to study but to decide what help to give at this time.

Here I would like to recall the problem which arose last fall in the Abitibi, Témiscamingue and Lake Saint John regions which were greatly affected not by drought but by over 67 days of rain in the Lake Saint John area and 69 in Abitibi, with distressing losses. In fact, losses exceeded $2 million in Abitibi only and I have here a newspaper article published in La Terre de Chez Nous, on February 24, 1965 which gives the results of a survey made in that connection. I shall read it for the information of the house and so that the Minister of Forestry may acquaint himself with it, in case he should not have already done so.

Here is what we read in La Terre de Chez Nous with regard to the inquiry conducted by the U.C.C.:

In order to inform the people as to the damages to farming due to excessive rainfall during the crop year 1964, the Amos federation of the U.C.C. has held a Gallup Poll with 1200 farmers scattered in all the Abitibi parishes. All types of farms have been reached.

The Gallup Poll concerned the main sectors of production, hay, oats, potatoes and dairy products. Even if it does not have a scientific value, it still reveals a situation which leads us to the conclusion that farming has incurred heavy losses in that area and that farmers are deeply affected economically.

The survey reveals total losses of $2 million for the area, or an average of $850 per farm. The hay crop was affected in a proportion of 35 per cent, oats, 40 per cent, and potatoes, 60 per cent. The dairy production decreased by 25 per cent and the purchase of feed cost $50,000 more than during a normal season. To that must be added $100,000 for the purchase of feed and hay for the winter feeding of livestock. It is obvious that farmers do not have the means to take on such losses when we know already they can hardly make both ends meet.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is what happened last fall in the Abitibi area. A similar and perhaps more serious situation arose in the Lake St. John area.

But on several occasions since last fall members of the areas concerned and myself have requested assistance from the federal government, we have been told that the province should take the initiative.

The Minister of Agriculture of the province of Quebec was kind enough to send me last week some copies of the letters he exchanged with the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays). But that correspondence is not complete, much to my regret. That is the reason why I placed a notice of motion for the production of papers today on the order paper of the house so as to complete this information.

I notice that the Minister of Agriculture of the province of Quebec made certain general requests in order to assist some farmers of that province. However, it is to be regretted that those requests contained nothing specific as to the damages resulting from the heavy rain last fall in the Abitibi and Lake St. John area. But the Minister of Agriculture none the less made general requests in connection with the damages due to hail and tornadoes. What was the answer of the federal Minister of Agriculture? He replied that he had indeed received these recommendations, and I quote an excerpt from his answer to Mr. Courcy:

You undoubtedly know my opinion on such problems. I believe that the best way to avoid such disasters is crop insurance.

[Mr. Laprise.]

That, Mr. Speaker, was the reply of the federal Minister of Agriculture to his Quebec counterpart. It meant: "Well, participate in the joint crop insurance program, and we will be able to help you out."

Several years ago other provinces, particularly in western Canada, suffered similar disasters. It does not seem that the federal government was so niggardly in helping them out. But as far as assistance to farmers is concerned, it is much more restricted. I do not know whether this is because the government or the Minister of Agriculture of the province of Quebec are not categorical or energetic enough in their claims, or whether they ask for this assistance rather as a favour, but in any event, that request has been submitted, suggestions have been made and the federal Minister of Agriculture has flatly refused to help the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I will not speak any longer on this matter, but I do want to urge the government not to consider the situation—everybody is aware of it and I think it has been outlined clearly enough in this house today—but to decide immediately how it will assist the farmers of the Ottawa valley and those who find it difficult to survive in the Abitibi-Témiscamingue area thus avoiding many farm bankruptcies. We must endeavour to enable all those farmers to continue producing what is necessary for everyone's survival, that of the Minister of Agriculture as well as everyone else's, for if the farmers stop producing for one reason or another, we shall all die from starvation.

Mr. Speaker, we do not want to see farmers in difficult situations due to similar catastrophies, whether these stem from natural causes or not. But, at any rate, we must assist them in order to spare them serious difficulties, and to ensure first of all, that they can continue to grow, to expand and to improve their lot, and through a healthy agricultural economy ensure the welfare of the country as a whole.

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I wish first of all to thank the hon.—

Mr. Vincent Drouin (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) to relieve me from introducing a motion giving the floor to the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé). All those who have spoken up to now have asked what the government has to offer. As the minister appointed to reply in the name of the government is rising, I believe it is urgent and important that he may speak, all the more so since it is already 4.40 and the debate should end at five o'clock. I therefore request the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska to kindly yield the floor to the Minister of Forestry. Otherwise, I shall move a motion to that effect.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I must say first of all that I intended to speak for a few minutes only and so allow the minister to tell us what the government intends to do.

[English]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if this subject is to be aired properly, perhaps we should ask unanimous consent of the House to proceed with the debate until six o'clock rather than have it end at five o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Drouin: This is a very good suggestion.

Mr. Vincent: In fact, this is what I intended to do. I wanted to ask the house or Your Honour whether it would be possible, at five o'clock, to request the unanimous consent of the house to continue this debate until six o'clock, in view of its great importance for all areas in Canada.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I think the proper time to put that motion would be at five o'clock.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, would it not be possible to agree now to an order of the House extending the time until six o'clock, so as not to interrupt the debate, so that the Minister would not be interrupted in his speech, and so that the rest of us would be able to examine any proposals he may make?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The Chair would be very pleased to ask for unanimous consent at this time if it is the wish of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it agreed that we continue this debate until Royal Assent at 5.45 p.m.?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, first of all I must thank the Deputy Speaker as well as hon. members of this house for allowing today a debate on a subject of extreme urgency and even of national importance.

The hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Doucett), the mover of the motion I had the honour to support, has stated his views remarkably well and has described accurately the distressing situation in which the farmers of eastern Ontario and western Quebec find themselves at this time due to severe drought conditions which began nearly four years ago and which have grown worse in the last two years.

A while ago the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Greene) said that he had approached the government three weeks ago to discuss the problem.

It is surprising to note, that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) has been abroad for the past few days and that he is not here this afternoon. Equally disturbing is the fact that only yesterday, when asked in this house by the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau)—who intended to participate in the discussion this afternoon but who could not be here on account of uncontrollable circumstances—if he could say whether there had been any consultations with the representatives of the province of Quebec on this matter of national urgency, the Minister of Forestry replied:

Not recently, as far as I know.

Then the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscaminque (Mr. Martineau) raised the question again, asking whether the federal government intended to take action on its own initiative with the provincial governments. And the Minister of Forestry answered:

The government cannot do that. The request must come from the provincial authorities.

That is why we discussed this question yesterday afternoon and decided to ask for the adjournment of the business of the house today to debate the problems facing farmers of eastern Ontario and western Quebec.

We have raised this question because we all recognize its urgency and importance, not only for the farmers who may be forced to give up their farms fairly soon if the federal and provincial governments do not take adequate steps, but also for the whole country, because it will affect all consumers, all farmers, as well as all regions of the country, more particularly the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

In my opinion, the federal Minister of Agriculture should immediately ask the Ministers of Agriculture of Quebec and Ontario to meet with farm organizations in order to discuss this tragic situation. Indeed, that should have been done several weeks ago.

In my opinion, when a provincial problem takes on a national character, the federal government or the federal minister concerned may ask his provincial counterparts to meet with farm organizations to discuss the situation and take the necessary measures. And that should be done immediately to find solutions and to stop farmers of eastern Ontario and western Quebec from panicking, as seems to be the case now.

It is imperative that, following this meeting which should be held this week, the federal government be in a position to announce immediately an assistance program and thereby, as I said a moment ago, dispel the panic which has apparently spread among farmers.

We have suggestions to make concerning this program of assistance. Some have proposed a moratorium on loans already granted. As for me, I do not believe the solution lies in lending the farmers money to pull them out of a hole or telling them that we are prepared to wait a year or two so they can repay their loans. If, for instance, a farmer has agreed to pay back the Farm Credit Corporation at the rate of $800 a year, and if such a payment is delayed, if the farmer is asked to make it next year or the year after when he is in a position to resume a normal life, when that time comes, he will have to make a double payment to the Farm Credit Corporation.

What we need and what I am asking the government to do, is to consider the possibility of amending the federal farm credit act so that this extension of one or two years, which would be granted to the farmers concerned, be added not after the first year the farmer will have received an income, but at the end of the refunding period of the federal farm credit.

We know that the federal farm credit act allows farmers to borrow money for 29 years and that, in order to change the regulations of the corporation, an amendment to the farm credit act would be needed. The Farm Credit Corporation can say to the farmer: "We are going to grant you a new loan, we will start anew and you will pay all the inspection costs and legal fees. That is what can happen at present. On the other hand, if the government moved an amendment to the farm credit act with respect to disasters, then the Farm Credit Corporation could postpone until after the 29 year period the payments owing to them and which will have to be paid.

The same thing should apply to the farm improvement loans act; payments should be postponed seven or eight years, that is when the farmer is in a position to reimburse.

The government could also help with the interest on money borrowed last year or the year before. We know, for example, that farmers of the Ottawa district and western Quebec have borrowed $3,000 and will not be in a position to reimburse those loans before six years. They pay 6 per cent interest so that after six years, it will cost them 36 per cent more than they received; 36 per cent of the money they received will be paid as interest. It is therefore absolutely impossible for a farmer to make those payments in a time of crisis.

In addition, it was suggested earlier that cattle should be brought to areas where there are pastures. This made sense in western Canada, but I do not think it would be an ideal solution in our area, because if milk cows are transferred to pastures 200, 300 or 400 miles away, farmers would not be willing to travel to those distant places morning and night in order to milk their cows. Therefore I feel it is impossible to provide this form of assistance in the present case.

What the government should do is to tell the farmers under a specific program: We are going to help you, do not worry about hay or fodder for the winter season. The farmers could then change their farms entirely into pasture lands. If some farmers of the area had sown 30, 40 or 50 acres with oats and if they were sure of getting federal or provincial assistance, they would all be in a position to change those acreages into pastures for their cattle, since they would obtain in the fall the required fodder to feed their cattle during the winter.

Therefore, if our farmers in the area could turn whole farms or the acreage already seeded into grazing grounds, if the federal government and the provincial governments gave the guarantee needed for the winter months, we might be able to get to August, with some rain, because the grazing grounds would be better at such a time of the year.

The Minister of Agriculture will have to consider another factor when he meets the provincial ministers. There will certainly be a shortage of hay throughout Ontario and Quebec next winter. That shortage will be acute enough to give rise to prohibitive prices and I cannot see a farmer buying a small bale of hay for 75c, 80c or even $1.

If the government asked at once the farmers of the Ontario and Quebec areas to cut as fodder everything which can be cut instead of letting oats get ripe, letting it come to term for feed grain, we could then avoid a shortage of hay in the provinces concerned. If later, this winter, the government accepted the Opposition's proposal to set up a feed grain agency for eastern Canada, we could compensate the loss of that grain by purchasing western feed grain which would replace the grain farmers have not been able to produce since they cut their oats and fodder acreage. This means that, in a few weeks, the government could assist the farmers from eastern Ontario and western Quebec who would like to feed their cattle on their farm, by subsidizing transportation and purchases. We know that feed grain can easily be harvested in the first week of August or towards the 15th of August and that it is excellent food for dairy and beef cattle, in short, for the whole livestock of those farmers.

We are making suggestions to the government; we are convinced that the situation has become too serious to ignore suggestions which could assist not only Ontario farmers but Quebec farmers as well.

Here are our suggestions: first, a meeting with provincial ministers concerned and farm organizations in order to establish an assistance program. Second, announce this assistance program as soon as possible to check the growing panic among the farmers concerned and the consumers and to show the farmers that they will get assistance from the federal and provincial governments.

Third, examine the question of federal farm credits or loans which farmers have obtained through banks and consider the possibility of extending after the period of 29 years repayment of loans granted by the Farm Credit Corporation and of extending by five, six or seven years the repayment period concerning loans granted under the farm improvements act.

Fourth, ask farmers in affected areas to use extensively their farm and even every bit of land on their farm as emergency grazing ground.

Fifth, ask Quebec and Ontario farmers to cut all the fodder they can in order to avoid a shortage next winter and use this fodder to help the farmers concerned; and say to Quebec and Ontario farmers: "We will have the necessary feed grain for your livestock next winter, because you will have cut the harvest on your fields seeded for pasture. We will not give the feed to you, but we will sell it at a reasonable price."

Those are a few suggestions which I think should be considered by the governments concerned; I have discussed them with several farmers of the area and they found them sound. They may not settle all problems but they will certainly help the farmers concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I may have taken a little more time than I thought I would, but since the house has agreed to discuss this matter until six o'clock, we will thus have the opportunity of hearing the Minister of Forestry tell us what the government intends to do. As regards this emergency, I should like to say that such a drought could have severe effects in the future. For instance, if the farmers sell their dairy cattle, the market will be congested. Those animals are unfinished, they are not good and are not ready to be sold. The price will be lower than the average and a shortage will thus be created in connection with the quality dairy cattle owned by many Ontario farmers. Next year, they will have to buy a complete stock and, on account of that, prices will be higher. That will not be in the interest of the farmers concerned nor in the interest of the other dairy producers in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude my remarks by asking the government once more to do everything possible, not in 15 days, nor in three weeks, but right now, to settle this situation for the benefit of agriculture in Canada and more particularly in the Ottawa region.

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, it is as Acting Minister of Agriculture that I am taking part to this debate.

I believe it is most obvious that the problem referred to at the beginning of this sitting is extremely serious, since the motion for adjournment of the business of the house was supported by all parties, including government members.

Mr. Speaker, we are aware that this is a serious and urgent problem, and before leaving, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) informed me of his concern on this matter. For my part, following the questions that were put to me yesterday afternoon in the house, I got in touch immediately this morning with the authorities of the Department of Agriculture to investigate the situation, and I shall transmit later on to the house the information obtained.

Mr. Speaker, at this stage I would like to make a comment which seems to me of major importance. On two or three occasions this afternoon, reference was made to the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, when it is well known that he is away on an official mission to France and England where he has been attending a meeting of the OECD in Paris, and where he has met British cheese importers for the greatest benefit of agriculture, I am sure.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that more indulgence should be shown regarding the absence from the house of the Minister of Agriculture or other ministers who are away on official business for the good of their own departments or of the country as a whole. In fact, I was highly annoyed this afternoon by the remarks of a certain member who noted my absence from the house for about five minutes while I had gone to secure certain documents for this afternoon's debate. I feel the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) could, in due course, admit that once the debate had started I remained in the house and left only to fetch some documents.

The debates, which are often animated, should at least be courteous. In fact, we are not here to indulge in party politics but to defend the interests, among others, this afternoon, of the farmers of eastern Ontario and western Quebec, who are unfortunately the victims of a rather severe drought.

Several members made interesting suggestions this afternoon. Some spoke of a moratorium of some kind or another on federal government loans. I feel it should be possible to announce that we could grant some form of moratorium in the case of farmers who could prove that they are unable to meet their obligations due to the drought or similar conditions.

Mr. Vincent: Will the Minister of Forestry allow me to ask him a question?

Under the present Farm Credit Act, do farmers not get an extension of six months or one year when such a disaster strikes?

Could the minister consider the possibility, as I have suggested, of adding this extension to 29 years?

Mr. Sauvé: With pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

A proposal was then made for a feed program. There was talk of a special aid program for feed grain; suggestions were made to the effect that the federal government should help needy municipalities; there were proposals of help in transporting livestock, of acreage payments. Many other suggestions were made. I shall gladly refer these suggestions to my colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) who, according to his original schedule, is due to arrive in Ottawa this afternoon.

I should like to comment on acreage payments. It has been said that, in 1962, there were acreage payments following the drought in the prairie provinces. Unless I am mistaken, acreage payments were first initiated in 1958, were made in 1960 and, if my information is correct, the last time they were made was in 1962. It is not clear whether they had been made in 1962 because of the drought or whether it was the continuation of a program initiated in 1958. In any event, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to discuss this problem in particular.

However, everyone is well aware that the initiative in this field of assistance in case of disaster rests with the provincial governments. This was the position taken by the previous government which stated that the responsibility to make a request rests with the provincial governments. I could quote from speeches made by certain members of the previous government in this respect. I shall not do so for it does not seem extremely important to me in the course of this debate. I shall be making a remark shortly which I think will satisfy the members of the house.

The Minister of Agriculture has often spoken here of the importance of crop insurance. Last year, the house passed an act for the reinsurance of provincial crop insurance. It is a pity all the provinces have not yet decided to establish their own crop insurance.

The federal government might consider it necessary to pass legislation on agricultural disaster such as drought and similar disasters. We may some day propose this type of legislation.

Yesterday, the Ontario government announced—

• (5:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question? Is the Minister suggesting that the farmers of Ontario can insure grass? I understand it is only seeded acreage that can be insured. We are talking about forage, and that is almost impossible to insure.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I could not hear the translation, but what I was referring to, was disaster areas. I think the translator also said something about strawberries. I do not remember talking about "les fraises". I will continue to speak in French because then I am sure of the exact meaning of my words. I have an important statement to make in a few minutes and I want to be sure it is understood. I will make the statement very slowly in French so hon. Members will not get the wrong interpretation of my words. I have had that difficulty very often lately, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Yesterday, the Ontario government announced that they had hired rain making companies for the drought-stricken areas. In a telephone conversation, assistance was requested from the federal government. Such request from the provincial government is now under consideration. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) has an appointment with the representatives of British Columbia who will come here next week to discuss with him the problems of the early frost which affected certain fruit crops in British Columbia.

As far as I am concerned—and this is the important point that I should like to deal with this afternoon—I am prepared to suggest to the Minister of Agriculture, and I think he will accept, to call together representatives of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec to consider what assistance those two provinces, namely Ontario and Quebec, could give farmers of those drought stricken areas and what financial facilities the federal government could make available to the provinces for immediate and substantial help.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that there is some delay in the interpretation.

[English]

I think this is probably the thing that is most urgently needed. I hope that when my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), returns from Europe today he will be able to take the necessary steps to call together the representatives of Ontario and Quebec to discuss this situation immediately. It is evident that steps must be taken immediately if we wish to help these farmers who are seriously affected by the drought in eastern Ontario and western Quebec.

[Translation]

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the debate did draw to the attention of the house and, I hope of the Canadian public, not only the serious problem that is being faced—

[English]

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Member permit a question? I should like to ask the Minister of Forestry whether or not it is a fact that in spite of the deluge of statements of an urgent nature in respect of this matter this afternoon by hon. Members on the other side of this House, the Conservative-controlled legislature of Ontario prorogued last night; and does that not give some kind of an indication as to the urgency of this matter?

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Was the Minister of Agriculture for Ontario in Paris, or was he in Renfrew in the drought area?

Mr. Sauvé: I have noticed in the papers that the Legislative Assembly of Ontario prorogued last night, but I would not want to bring any partisanship into this debate. I think this question is extremely serious.

Mr. Jorgenson: May I ask the Minister a question? He is a member of the Cabinet and would know about these things. Does he think it is necessary for the Parliament of Canada to wait for the legislature of the province to take action on this matter?

Mr. Sauvé: I was just completing my remark that I did not feel there was any necessity to bring partisanship into the debate because the situation is serious.

[Translation]

I believe this afternoon's debate will have drawn the attention of the house and of the Canadian people, not only to the serious problem due to drought conditions in certain areas of Ontario and Quebec, but also to the urgency for all provincial governments and the federal government to give greater consideration to the problems of eastern farming.

Eastern agriculture is important, not only for the Canadian economy, but also for a great part of our population which depends on it for its income.

I do not want to resume my seat after this short intervention without thanking the members of the house who, this afternoon, brought forward serious suggestions toward the solution of this problem.

I can give the assurance that my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, and the government of Canada will take immediately the necessary steps to convene representatives of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec in order that we may examine together what means could be taken at once to assist the farmers in need as the result of this drought.

[English]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate may I say I have listened from the beginning and I must say that the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) in speaking in the debate made it known first of all that he was a replacement and, second, he dealt at great length and in an apologetic manner with the Government's failure to take action, and the absence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays). However, he did suggest that in the light of this debate he was certain he could convince the Minister of Agriculture when he returns to Ottawa to have a meeting with the provincial Ministers of Agriculture concerned to discuss how help can be given by all levels of Government to this drought stricken area. I think we in the Opposition are thankful to the Minister of Forestry for taking it upon himself to try to convince the Minister of Agriculture to look at this matter very carefully and in a serious way.

In my view the farmers of the Ottawa Valley should be very thankful to the conscientious Member for Lanark (Mr. Doucett) who rose this afternoon and convinced you, Mr. Speaker, that this debate was urgent and that the matter should be discussed. Through this debate we have now accomplished something. When the Minister of Agriculture comes back to Ottawa he is going to meet with the provincial Ministers. This is a forward step. We can only hope that he will see fit to grant some assistance.

I should like to make a few remarks about the drought stricken area and the proposed rain making operation. There is no question that the whole Ottawa Valley is devastated by drought. There is no question that the federal Government has failed to provide proper leadership and initiative. In today's Ottawa Journal we see that the provincial Government of Ontario is prepared to spend $200,000 to hire rain makers. The province is still waiting for approval of the project by the federal Government, which it hopes will pay part of the cost. In other words, the provincial Government has gone ahead and gambled on a 20 to 1 shot so far as producing rain is concerned, and has gambled on another 20 to 1 shot that the Federal Government may be interested enough to pay half the cost. By this debate I think we have now convinced the Minister of Forestry at least and perhaps some of his colleagues that the Government should show a little interest and concern in this regard and pick up half the cost.

Mr. Francis: Would the hon. Member permit a question?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Yes.

Mr. Francis: I was listening with interest to the hon. Member's remarks concerning a federal grant, but has the hon. Member any idea of the number of ARDA projects submitted by the Province of Ontario dealing with these counties affected by the drought?

Mr. Peters: Are you suggesting they will solve the problem?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am not concerned here about long range projects. We are now in the midst of a drought in the Ottawa valley which will have repercussions all across Canada. I am a firm and ardent supporter of ARDA but it is a long range program. What we are looking for today is immediate assistance to the farmers concerned. As I was saying, the severe drought in eastern Ontario and western Quebec and, in fact, in all of Ontario will have repercussions all across Canada. In yesterday's and today's papers we can read what is happening to the cattle market in eastern Canada. We read reports of farmers keeping their cattle on their trucks as late as two o'clock in the morning at the auction markets at Cobden and Perth in the hope of being able to get them into the hands of somebody who can feed them because these farmers are completely out of grass and feed. If you have ever been a farmer or know anything about farming you will realize the plight of these farmers when they have to keep their cattle on their trucks until two o'clock in the morning, waiting for somebody to buy them who can take them off their hands and feed them. You realize the plight facing these farmers.

What prices did they receive for their cattle? They got as low as 14 cents per pound, while beef on the Toronto market is selling for about 25 cents a pound. This shows the drastically depressed prices at which these farmers are having to sell their cattle in order that the cattle can be fed and looked after. Rather than the Minister of Agriculture being in Paris trying to buy more cattle or improve the strains of Canadian cattle, which is a worthy endeavour, he should be here trying to look after the cattle we already have. He should be here trying to create markets and trying to sustain these farmers who are prepared to sacrifice their basic herds and their entire livelihood because of drought conditions which have lasted now for three or four years, as has been pointed out this afternoon.

It is all well and good for the Minister to be absent and I certainly do not condemn him for travelling, but he has an uncanny knack of being away at the very time when he is needed here. He is away doing something which may have long range benefits for agriculture, but for some weeks now there has been plenty of evidence of drought conditions about which the farmers were concerned and plenty of evidence that action should be taken and leadership shown.

Leadership is what the farmers want. When they are faced with drought conditions beyond their control they want to be able to look to somebody for help and leadership. The federal Minister of Agriculture should be providing that leadership to these farmers caught in the drastic conditions facing them today rather than spending a nice time, shall we say, in Paris—

Mr. Sauvé: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to object to the remarks of the hon. Member. I explained what the Minister was doing in Paris, what he did in London for the cheese producers and so on. I would hope the hon. Member would refrain from making remarks implying that the Minister is not doing his duty. Right through the course of my remarks I tried to keep the debate on a very high level, with no partisanship, and I would not like my hon. friend to behave differently.

It seems essential. The situation is serious and we are not trying to benefit politically from a very serious situation in which some Eastern Canadian farmers find themselves. I would not like my colleague to go on saying things about the Minister of Agriculture which I feel are absolutely unfair in the present circumstances.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This is not a point of order. I do not really know why I relinquished the floor. If I feel the Minister could serve the country better by staying at home at this time, I am within my rights in standing up and saying so. I may say the Minister of Forestry could have spent his time better here in Canada than on the Isle of Capri some time in the past. This has nothing to do with the drought conditions that are now concentrated in this area.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; I would remind the hon. Member that there was a motion submitted to the hon. Member for Lanark (Mr. Doucett) which deals with drought in eastern Canada and the House should deal with that subject.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I intend to deal with that subject. I will refer to the question of rain making and say that the Provincial Government is prepared to risk $200,000 in a 20 to 1 longshot in the hope that the Federal Government will go along with them. We see pictures of the hon. Member for Renfrew South in a summer suit surveying the drought conditions in his Ottawa Valley. It is all well and good to go out in a white shirt, a summer suit and tie to look at dry soil, but it is another thing to see your crops shrivel. Then, and only then, can you really fully appreciate the drought conditions. I have seen acre after acre of crops wither on the stalk. You know then how the farmer feels in this regard. Pictures in the newspapers do not help. Pictures in the newspapers do not provide leadership. This is what the farmers are asking for.

Let us look at this rain making proposal. What does it say in the Globe and Mail? It says that rain makers are to be in Lanark County within the next 10 days and will be set up and ready to operate within the next 20 days. Let us just see where that puts us. We see crops shrivelling on the stalk today. We see that no rainmaking will be in progress for another 20 days. We have reports that the hay crop will be reduced, even now, by 25 per cent, so where will it be 20 days from now?

I have some grave doubts about whether or not this cloud seeding will be successful. It has been carried on for 12 years at least in Alberta and in my own constituency, so I have some grave doubts about it. However, even if it works it is still 20 days away and the crop has been reduced 25 per cent below normal now. How much will the crops be shrivelled by then? Will the hon. Member for Renfrew South get his picture in the newspaper then and say, "I am here; I am with you." Will the Minister of Agriculture be in the country 20 days from now? How will this fit—

Mr. Greene: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Greene: The hon. Member has criticized me for attending on the premises of this farmer with the Minister of Agriculture of the Province. I have never claimed to be a farmer. I have learned all I can about their problems and I am doing the best I can to help. The hon. Member is criticizing my attendance, but he has attended here less than any other Member. I know he attended 13 out of 23 meetings of the Agriculture Committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Greene: If he is as interested as he claims, why was he not there?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please; we are now obviously debating a side issue. I would ask hon. Members again to limit their remarks to the subject matter of the motion.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I have nothing to hide. My attendance in the Agriculture Committee is far better than that of any Member of the Liberal Party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The Committee may have been discussing tobacco, which cannot be grown in my constituency, and I might not have attended some of those meetings. I want those Members who question my attendance to know that I am responsible to the constituents of Acadia, not the agriculture industry of Canada. I question the attendance of the Minister of Agriculture in this regard.

Let us take a look at some of the action that can be taken with regard to this severe drought condition. We all know, and the Minister of Forestry knows, that a great deal of feed grain is shipped from Western Canada to Eastern Canada. He knows, and a great many others on that side of the House know, that many cattle are shipped down to be fed in Eastern Canada. If we have a severe drought condition with no hay, no grain, no corn, what will happen? I say that this severe drought condition will have repercussions which will reach all across Canada and could easily have a drastic effect on the cattle market this fall. We want action. The farmers of the Ottawa Valley and the western side of Quebec want action. Farmers all across Canada want action. It is all well and good for the Minister of Forestry to say, we are going to have a meeting. I think it is the duty of the Minister of Agriculture to say, we want to meet with the Provincial Ministers here and I have in mind the outline of a plan which could be accepted or not accepted by the various Ministers of Agriculture in the Provinces. This is what he should do. It is his duty to provide this leadership. He is the spokesman for the whole agriculture industry in Canada. I maintain this situation will have repercussions throughout the whole agriculture industry in Canada.

What should he do? It is quite easy to say. A number of projects have been suggested already and I intend perhaps to go over a few more. First of all, though, he should provide leadership and he should provide initiative. We are thankful that the Member for Lanark brought this subject up today so we could move the Minister of Agriculture into providing the initiative which I feel he has not provided up to this time for the agriculture industry. He could go along with the rain making idea. It is worth a gamble, they say, of 20 to 1, but I would say it is more like 50 to 1. He may well go along with that. I know, and the Minister of Agriculture knows, that a pasture can be short of grass, but there is a way of bringing feed grain to the grass. Western grain can be shipped in and corn can be shipped in from southern Ontario or the United States. Cattle can be fattened very economically through a system of grain on grass. This can be done and the Minister of Agriculture could provide the initiative and the leadership by announcing immediately to the farmers who are sacrificing their herds at Cobden and Perth markets: Do not sell your herds; do not sell your replacement cattle because help is on the way. This is what he should announce. He should ship in grain and the farmers should feed grain on grass. This is a well established practice in Western Canada, and cattle can be successfully fattened in this manner.

Then, again, freight assistance should be paid on the shipment of hay for dairy cattle. Cows that are producing milk cannot produce milk without good class silage or hay. Freight assistance should be paid on this, and freight assistance should be given to the shipping of machinery up into Timiskaming, or wherever the hay is available. Farmers should be encouraged to go out and put it up. They would be encouraged if they were told: Put your machinery on a flat car and the Government will pay the freight to wherever the hay is. This is a workable program. It has worked in the Prairie Provinces in the past and will work in this area of Eastern Canada.

In so far as beef cattle are concerned which are on grass, they could easily be shipped to community pastures and freight assistance could be offered by the federal Government for cattle shipped to grass rather than to market. Instead of farmers waiting up until two o'clock in the morning to unload their trucks and rid themselves of the burden of feeding these cattle when their pastures are poor, the Minister should provide leadership by telling the farmers to put the stock in a freight car and ship them to a community pasture, even if it is on Manitoulin Island—ship them anywhere there is grass in western Ontario or western Quebec. The Government should pay the freight charges. Let us save the farmers from selling their means of livelihood. It is the prime responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture to maintain and sustain farmers on the land, but sometimes I wonder if he feels that way. Sometimes I think he wants to move them off the land, and the quicker that is done the happier he will be.

Suggestions have been made with regard to forestalling collections due under the Farm Credit Corporation Act and the Veterans Land Act. This can be done easily, and the Minister of Forestry thinks so, but it would only affect farmers who have loans under those acts.

Today the Globe and Mail has a full page devoted to the drought situation in Ontario, reporting that the banks are saying farmers are behind on their loans and that many places are being put up for sale because of this. These loans were not made under either of the acts I have mentioned, but there should be some means whereby the federal Government could move in and take over interest payments on these loans for six or 12 months until the drought situation is relieved.

The Minister of Forestry referred to the ARDA program and is now directing it as a war on poverty. Mr. Kent has been appointed as a $25,000 a year man, and so far as I know is not responsible to Parliament or any department. His main job is to eradicate poverty, and here is one step that could be taken in conjunction with his efforts, a step that would forestall closure on loans in the drought stricken area. Surely the Minister of Forestry can relay these suggestions to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) when he returns from his very busy trip selling cheese and buying cattle which, no doubt, will have a long-range beneficial effect on the agricultural industry in Canada.

I have been heartened to some degree by the Minister's indication that action will be taken. I hope further action will be taken after this debate ends. I close on this note by saying I hope the Minister of Agriculture will take a continuing interest in this question, that leadership and initiative will be shown by the Government in providing assistance to farmers in conditions which are far from normal.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent Drouin (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the urgent situation in which our farmers of eastern Ontario and western Quebec find themselves. That situation is really critical and an immediate solution is needed.

I myself am particularly aware of this, since I own about 200 acres of land under crop and probably 50 acres for grazing. For about a month or a month and a half, while we were short of water, I have been able to see the situation becoming more and more critical. This is nothing new for us, because it was the same thing last year. We did not have any water or hay and we had to get some from remote areas. Fortunately, the government paid part of the transportation costs in the case of the hay supply, which helped the farmers, but I feel there should be other means to deal with this situation and even prevent it.

I am surprised to hear most members, if not nearly all of them, say that it comes within the jurisdiction of provincial governments to initiate such solutions. They seem to forget completely section 95 of the British North America Act which provides that:

> In each province the Legislature may make Laws in relation to Agriculture in the Province, and to Immigration into the Province; and it is hereby declared that the Parliament of Canada may from Time to Time make Laws in relation to Agriculture in all or any of the Provinces, and to Immigration into all or any of the Provinces; and any Law of the Legislature of a Province relative to Agriculture or to Immigration shall have effect in and for the Province as long and as far only as it is not repugnant to any Act of the Parliament of Canada.

This means that not only the federal government has a competing jurisdiction in farm matters, but that this jurisdiction is greater than that given to provincial legislatures. This jurisdiction is similar for immigration. Why always wait for the provinces to act, when the federal government has full and entire jurisdiction. Instead of infringing upon provincial jurisdiction in the matter of social security or any other field, why not assume the responsibilities conferred upon us by the British North America Act? Why not assume our responsibilities in the matter of farming? Why always shift our responsibilities to the provinces, when we not only have the constitutional means but also the material and financial ones to assume those responsibilities?

During the past few years, we have heard about rain making machines to control this element which can be destructive for our farmers: either too much or not enough rain. We see private companies try experiments with those machines, while the government is looking on; whereas, in my opinion, it should take the lead in experimenting with and controlling this element, so as to regulate not only the flow of excessive rain, but also certain variations in the weather in order to prevent, for instance, devastating frosts such as we have experienced in the past few years. The federal government is not only legally empowered but financially able to conduct those experiments so as to control and manage the companies in a position to make a useful contribution in this situation.

This is one of the suggestions I am making to the government, and allow me to refer once again to the matter of constitutionality. As reported on page 2200 of Hansard, in reply to a question of the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau), the Minister of Agriculture stated:

Mr. Speaker, these representations—

He was talking about the representations made by provinces or farming groups to inform the federal government about the drought which prevails in eastern Canada.

—should first be made to the Province. In this regard may I say that on Tuesday afternoon in Toronto I discussed the drought problem with the Ontario Minister of Agriculture. We are all greatly concerned about this matter, but at the moment we have had no representations from the Province.

I commend the Minister of Agriculture for his interest in the matter. But I say to him that he does not have to wait for representations from the Ontario government, because action can be taken. Some means have been suggested earlier and I would not want to go over that ground again, since time is running short.

However, I should like to mention a pledge made by this government to the people of eastern Canada during the last election campaign.

At that time, we have promised—and I am one of those who have promised it on behalf of the Liberal party—that a feed grain agency would be created. We have the support in this regard of the agriculture committee which has made a unanimous recommendation to the house.

[Mr. Drouin.]

What are we waiting for before introducing legislation along those lines? I think such a bill would be just as important as the one we have considered yesterday relating to the freedom of action of publications circulated in Canada. Surely, it is just as important to look after eastern farmers and to fill the promises we have made.

It has been suggested that farm loan payments should be postponed. This suggestion from the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent), which would have the effect of completing existing provisions of the Farm Credit Act, seems to be an excellent one, I think.

Such a step would only be useful to the farmers if payments were postponed until the end of the repayment period. I wholeheartedly support the suggestion of the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska and I urge the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), whose sincerity is well known, to exercise the necessary pressure on the Minister of Agriculture. I can assure him that other hon. members will support any representation he makes to the Minister of Agriculture.

• (5:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): I am glad to have the opportunity to take part in a debate on a subject which so seriously affects farmers in this area. The general situation is one which brings to mind the droughts on the prairies in the thirties. I must say I wish there were more Members from the West here today to show a sympathetic interest in the problems of some of the eastern provinces. I congratulate the hon. Member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) on the measures he was prepared to support.

Without question we are facing a serious emergency. A number of suggestions have been made from all quarters of the House as to what might be done. Measures to deal with the situation, both short-term and long-term, will have to be brought forward. I know that the Minister himself has been much concerned about the situation. But at this point I should like to go on record as saying a few things concerning the lack of action on the part of the Ontario provincial Department of Agriculture. The ARDA program was put on the books while the party opposite was in power. I heard a great deal about what was going to be done for the Ottawa Valley. They were very proud of it. What, in fact, was done before this Government took office? There was not a single ARDA project approved for any one of the counties affected by this drought. Schemes were submitted to Toronto and they died within the provincial Department of Agriculture. The Province of Ontario has taken a narrow and restricted view of ARDA projects. They have related them to watersheds; without a watershed there can be no project. In the counties affected by this drought there are no community pastures. There are no deep wells, no public assistance arrangements for farmers.

In the thirties the drought in the West was followed by measures of great importance in reaching a long term solution of farmers' difficulties—for example, the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act and the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. Under the constitutional arrangements which govern this country, the ARDA program was set up in such a way that grants were to be made by the federal Government. We have put a lot of new life into this program. I am proud of the enthusiasm the Minister has shown and the report he has submitted to this House. His addresses on the subject of rural poverty constitute a memorable series of speeches which I believe should be studied by scientists and sociologists across Canada.

The projects which have to go forward under ARDA arise at local municipal level and go to the provincial level. And it is there we find the dead hand; it is there we find the hand that kills, the hand that shows no initiative and no interest in a long term solution to the problems facing Eastern Ontario agriculture. The province is showing an interest in supporting a rain making project. The hon. Member for Acadia had something to say about projects of this kind. I do not know whether it works or not. Like my hon. friend from Renfrew South (Mr. Greene) I do not claim to be a farmer; but I am very much concerned about the farming communities I have the honour to represent in this House. I do know that unless some imagination is shown by the provincial authorities in the Province of Ontario, unless some interest is taken, unless they quit dragging their heels, we shall continue to suffer, in the absence of long term remedial measures. Those counties will suffer in the future as they are suffering now. The federal authorities are alert. They are concerned. Officials at federal level have made a number of technical suggestions and these are being reviewed at the present time. But we are not in a position where we can simply move on our own in disregard of the constitutional practice of this country. We have to act together, and this can only be done if the provincial authorities take a different view of the projects under ARDA upon which they have to pass.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): First of all, I must compliment you, Mr. Speaker, on your good judgment in accepting this motion for debate this afternoon. In the second place I should like to compliment my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Doucett) for introducing this motion on a matter of such urgency and importance.

When the Minister rose to speak he said all parties supported the motion. But listening to the debate today it was my impression that the party opposite, represented by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. McIlraith), were opposed to it, together with the Social Credit Party, whose views were expressed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson).

I am somewhat surprised by the comments which were made by the hon. Member for Carleton (Mr. Francis). In effect he tried to drag a red herring through this debate by his reference to the ARDA program. As he said, we in this party are proud of ARDA and we hope to see the present Government develop this program further. However, it is not an emergency program intended to deal with an emergency situation. It is a long term program whose effects will be felt in the next 20 years.

I come from the Province of Saskatchewan and I can well remember the emergency situation of 1961, and what was done at that time. The hon. Member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) was Minister of Agriculture, and immediately the gravity of the drought situation became apparent an emergency meeting was called composed of Ministers of Agriculture from the three western provinces, and members of the agriculture caucus. As a result of these meetings an emergency program was devised. We had to move rapidly because the danger signs had appeared; farmers were beginning to dispose of basic herds which had taken a lifetime to build up. Herds of this kind cannot be disposed of without great loss to those concerned. Perhaps I can summarize what was done under that emergency program. First we re-established the emergency freight rate assistance program for moving haying equipment to hayfields, and for shipping the forage back to the farmers. It was also mentioned by my colleague the hon. Member for Acadia that we should move cattle to the hayfields. Second, we accomplished the establishment of forage banks by rural municipalities with a $5 per ton subsidy being provided equally between the provincial and federal governments. This measure also included a price ceiling of $20 per ton so that exploitation in prices would not take effect when this emergency was on. We found that sometimes when you have a situation where a commodity becomes scarce there is exploitation, and so we put a ceiling on it.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as we have just received the summons from the Senate, could I ask if the House would give consideration, after returning from that other business, to continuing to sit, in view of the fact that the Minister will be returning and that this important matter is not concluded? By unanimous consent would the House continue to sit and discuss this matter, so that the Minister would have the opportunity of replying?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the Minister will have the opportunity to reply at some other time. The hon. Member knows that according to the rules there is a motion to adjourn the House, and this discussion terminates at the end of the proceedings for the day.

Mr. Peters: But by unanimous consent anything is possible, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Deputy Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1966.

An Act to amend the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act.

An Act to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

An Act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, on Friday the House will be asked to consider the committee stage of Bill C-188, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act; second reading of an Act to amend the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act; second reading of an Act to amend the Army Benevolent Fund Act; the resolution preceding a bill to amend the Judges Act; the resumed debate on the resolution to set up a joint committee on consumer credit; a motion to consider interim supply, and two supplementary estimates which, I understand, have been discussed with the Leaders of the various parties. Of course this statement is made with the reservation that the order in which the items have been announced is not necessarily the order in which they may be considered.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say in reference to this announcement concerning the resumption of the debate on the establishment of a committee on consumer credit that it was based upon other considerations which were not outlined in the announcement. I want it absolutely understood that that is the situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 1 and section 4 of Standing Order 2, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock in the forenoon of Friday next.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 25, 1965

The House met at 11 a.m.

TRADE

JAPAN—VOLUNTARY RESTRAINTS ON EXPORTS TO CANADA

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House I should like to table a copy of a letter dated June 25 from the Ambassador of Japan, informing me of the voluntary restraints which the Japanese Government is applying on the export of certain products to Canada during 1965.

These decisions were taken by the Japanese Government following consultations which began in December, 1964 between representatives of the Japanese and Canadian Governments. The levels of restraint which Japan is maintaining during 1965 provide generally for orderly increases over the 1964 levels. These increases, with but a few exceptions, are in the order of 3 to 5 per cent, and for virtually all products these increases are not greater than the expected growth in the market for the products in question.

With the approval of the House, I suggest that the Ambassador's letter be printed as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings.

I should like to inform hon. Members that I received representations from textile producers some time ago about the sharp and substantial increase within the cotton fabric quota in Japan's exports of converted broadcloth. The question has been raised with the Japanese Government and discussions on this matter are continuing.

I should also mention that representations were received from the textile industry about the impact of Japanese man-made fibre fabrics on the Canadian market. As a result of these representations we have drawn to the attention of the Japanese Government our concern about the way certain lines of man-made fabrics are being marketed, and we have asked that they examine this situation in order to ensure that a policy of orderly marketing is followed for these products.

As Members of the House may recall, a number of products have been freed from restraint during the last few years. This year, continuing this Government's policy of not asking for restraints when disruption to the Canadian market is no longer threatened, we have agreed that five items should be freed from restraint. These are spun rayon blouses, spun rayon shirts, canvas footwear, waterproof footwear, and dish towels. I have no doubt that the Japanese Government will interpret this as concrete evidence of the willingness of the Canadian Government to work toward the orderly expansion of two way trade between our two countries.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the document tabled by the Minister of Finance be printed as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, of course detailed comment on this matter is impossible until one reads the correspondence and the actual documents tabled by the Minister of Finance. However, it is instructive to see that the procedures which have been in use for some time are being continued, and that the aims of these procedures which were outlined by a former Minister of Finance, Mr. Fleming, are being achieved, notwithstanding that a goodly number of the Minister's colleagues were bitterly critical about such procedures when they were on this side of the House; and in this connection I am looking particularly at the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin). I am very pleased to see that responsibility of office has rather matured the thinking of the present administration, if such a step is possible in certain sectors.

I hope Canadian industry, and generally the country at large, will understand the aims, certainly the impact, of quotas, even though these are not the same in various parts of the country, and one may hear some rather sharper comments from western Canada which, of course, has a different slant with regard to trade with Pacific nations than has the rest of the country.

OTTAWA TERMINAL RAILWAY COMPANY

IMPLEMENTATION OF AGREEMENT FOR RELOCATION OF RAILWAYS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-3 (from the Senate), to incorporate the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING AMOUNTS, EXEMPTIONS, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the House go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the House by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1952, to incorporate into the Act Schedule A as authorized by the Appropriation Act No. 10, 1964; to allow for further exemptions in property and income; also to provide for certain changes in connection with the administration of the Act.

Motion agreed to.

VETERANS' LAND ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING AUTHORITY OF DIRECTOR, HOME CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE, ETC.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the House go into committee later this day to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the House by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Veterans' Land Act:

To establish a revolving fund for certain capital receipts and expenditures to be called the Veterans' Land Act fund;

To provide authority for the Director to pay certain debts incurred by veterans to make improvements to land;

To give the Director greater discretion in varying the payment terms of an agreement between the Director and the veteran entered into under subsection (1) of section 10;

To change the basis for determining the maximum limit of financial assistance that may be given to a veteran under subsection (3) of section 10;

To allow a veteran to lease premises occupied by him under a contract under section 10 after the expiration of a period of ten years;

To authorize the Director, with the consent of the Minister, to enter into a contract with a veteran who is in default in respect of a contract previously entered into under the Act;

To require the Director to accept the amount of a contract debt as the cost to the Director before the expiration of ten years from the effective date of the contract under certain conditions;

To extend the purposes for which the proceeds of sale of land, improvements, livestock or farm equipment may be used;

To extend the purposes for which funds may be advanced by the Director to a veteran under subsection (1) of section 15;

To authorize the Director to grant assistance to veterans who have received assistance under the Veterans Rehabilitation Act or the War Service Grants Act under certain conditions;

To extend the purposes for which a grant may, pursuant to sections 38 or 39, be used;

To increase the maximum home construction assistance from twelve thousand dollars to eighteen thousand dollars;

To increase the maximum loan available under section 64 from twenty thousand dollars to forty thousand dollars and to extend the purposes for which a loan, pursuant to this section, may be used;

To extend the purposes for which a loan may, pursuant to section 64A, be used, to increase the maximum loan available thereunder from twelve thousand dollars to eighteen thousand dollars and to vary its provisions under certain conditions;

To reduce the deposit payable by a veteran under section 65, to extend the purposes for which a loan made thereunder may be used, to increase the maximum loan available under this section from four thousand eight hundred dollars to ten thousand dollars and to provide for adjustment on loans partially advanced at the coming into force of the amendment;

To provide for consolidation of all outstanding farm improvement assistance loans between a veteran and the Director in one agreement and, for the purposes of such consolidation, to authorize appropriate variation of the repayment period specified in each of the outstanding agreements;

And to provide further for certain changes in consequence thereof and also in connection with the administration of the Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that by unanimous consent this motion is to be considered later this day.

Mr. Teillet: On a point of order, my understanding was that both resolutions would be considered later this day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the first motion also be considered later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

ISSUE OF EXPLORATION PERMIT FOR GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. It concerns the issue or grant of an undersea exploration permit by the Federal Government in respect of areas adjacent to the Gaspé and the statement by Mr. Levesque that the grant constitutes a coffin nail for Confederation; also the criticism by the Premier of Quebec that what took place was most improper.

Has the Government given consideration to discontinuing the granting of permits of this kind, in view of the fact that it has submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada the British Columbia claim to such rights? I thought I would address this question to the Acting Prime Minister because this is a matter which covers several departments. I notice he indicates that he wants to hear from the Minister of Northern Affairs, but I am directing my question to him because of his all-pervasive and comprehensive knowledge of these matters. I ask him whether the Government will reconsider the undertaking given by the Prime Minister that this whole question should be considered at the Dominion-Provincial Conference to be convened in July rather than permitting it to become an interprovincial-Federal squabble which could certainly do nothing toward a solution of this problem and which might bring about further disunity within this country.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I am sure that on my right hon. friend's return to the House he would not want his first question to be one which would disturb the happy waters which now exist. I want to congratulate him on the apparent success of his non-political fishing trip.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The political one was even more successful.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think this matter comes within the purview of my hon. friend the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and he might care to make a reply.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, in anticipation of this question being asked today I have reviewed the facts. I would like to advise the House that Canada oil and gas permits have been issued for a period of years, under the Canada Oil and Gas Regulations, since the Convention on the Continental Shelf agreed to at the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1958 confirmed that rights to these submerged resources belong to Canada.

The Minister responsible should not and does not select on the basis of discretion which bona fide applicants are to receive grants of exploratory permits and which applicants are not allowed to obtain permits. Pan American Petroleum Corporation made regular application for exploratory permits in the Gulf of St. Lawrence on June 9, 1965. It is the view of the Federal Government that as the seabed resources of the Gulf of St. Lawrence do not lie within the boundaries of any province, they are subject to the administration of the Federal Government.

The right hon. Leader of the Opposition raised the question of the reference to the Supreme Court of Canada in respect of the Province of British Columbia. The House is aware that this Government has referred the question of the jurisdiction over submerged resources on the Pacific coast to the Supreme Court of Canada. This action was taken because of the position of the Province of British Columbia that it held exclusive jurisdiction to control the exploitation of these off-shore resources, a position which the Federal Government does not accept. It was our hope that the issues raised by this first reference would give a clear indication of the respective rights of the Federal Government and the Provinces in this particular question.

I do not think I need to say any more at this time. We have been issuing these permits, on the basis of the Canada Oil and Gas Regulations, to bona fide applicants in the normal procedure and the normal way.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I come back to the source of all information—I did not say of wisdom—and ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the Federal Government will carry out the promise it made that this question of underwater rights would be discussed at the Federal-Provincial Conference on July 19, rather than following the haphazard, uncertain course that is being followed now, to which the Minister has made reference. Is this dispute going to be settled, rather than through this course, through the instrumentality of that so-called new federalism that has brought about so much division?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, this question is on the agenda.

Mr. Diefenbaker: An agreement can be reached at that meeting on July 19 without regard to any submission to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No. As my right hon. friend knows, Mr. Speaker, a reference has been made to the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of the British Columbia situation. However, this general question is on the agenda for discussion at the Federal-Provincial Conference and I would hope that as a result a solution satisfactory to all parties could be found.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources concerning the permit he issued to Pan-American Oil for the development of underwater natural resources in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Did the minister get the Prime Minister's authorization before granting this permit? The point is that the premier of Quebec told the legislative assembly Wednesday that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources was not supposed to issue a permit without the authorization of the Prime Minister of Canada. Did the minister discuss the matter with the Prime Minister and is the latter aware that a permit has been issued?

[English]

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I know of no undertaking having been given by the Prime Minister that we would desist from the issuance of permits, either for any period or until a decision in respect of the Pacific offshore question was brought down by the Supreme Court.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Northern Affairs. In his statement a few minutes ago he said that as these submerged resources do not lie within the boundaries of any province they therefore belong to the Federal Government. Does that mean the Government now prejudges the coming decision of the Supreme Court of Canada on this matter, the question having been referred to that body?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, the fact that we have referred the matter to the Supreme Court of Canada is an indication of the position taken by the Federal Government; we want a judgment in this regard.

Mr. Martineau: Then what is the basis for the Minister's statement that these resources do not belong to the provinces but to the Federal Government? I am asking the Minister, is this not what the Supreme Court of Canada must now decide?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will of course understand that the regulations under which we issue these permits are based on the convention on the Continental Shelf in respect to which Canada as a nation is party along with a number of other nations. Until such time as a decision is made as to where the responsibility in Canada lies and a judgment brought down by the Supreme Court of Canada, we can take no other stand.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. This matter is on the agenda of the Federal-Provincial Conference. May I ask when it is going to be on the agenda of the House of Commons so that the Members of this House may have the opportunity of discussing this very important question?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO EMPLOYMENT OF BILINGUAL GUIDES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister.

Could the minister tell us why bilingual guides have not been hired to escort visitors through the parliament buildings during the holiday season?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the situation, but I shall look into it without delay in order to have the required changes made.

AGRICULTURE

OTTAWA VALLEY—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO MEET DROUGHT CONDITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Doucett (Lanark): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture or the Acting Minister a question. In view of the drastic drought situation and the need of the farmers to know where they stand, will the Minister of Agriculture immediately announce a policy of federal action to provide hay for the drought stricken farmers of the Ottawa valley in order that they may carry on without being forced to sell cattle at fire sale prices? Will the Minister of Agriculture, without waiting for the provinces, immediately make representations to his colleague the Minister of Public Works so that large areas of hay on property belonging to the National Capital Commission may be cut and made available as quickly as possible?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, following the debate we had Wednesday afternoon I am pleased to announce that the Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, Mr. Stewart, and the Minister of Agriculture for Quebec, Mr. Courcy, and their officials will be here on Monday to discuss this very serious situation. As to the suggestion concerning federal property, I will bring this to the attention of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, based on a news report concerning a recent press conference held by the Minister during what Mr. Arthur Blakely calls his recent visit to Ottawa. In view of the confusion caused by various reports of this Conference and the Minister's philosophical and oral approach to the rainmaking proposal of the Government of Ontario, is the Minister now in a position to inform the House of the policy of the Government with respect to that rainmaking proposal?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, if was the Minister of Agriculture who held the press conference. I understand this matter will be discussed on Monday when Mr. Stewart will be here in Ottawa.

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the limited opportunity to observe the drought stricken areas north and west of Ottawa on the Montreal-Ottawa Air Canada flight, will the Minister of Agriculture, now that he has once more got his feet on the ground, take the occasion to personally visit the affected areas of eastern Ontario and western Quebec so he can view conditions at ground level?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I would point out that on June 10 the Minister of Agriculture announced in the House of Commons that he had taken the occasion of a visit to Toronto to discuss the problem with the Minister of Agriculture of Ontario, and it was not until a few days ago that the Government of Ontario decided to request the help of the Government of Canada for rainmaking purposes.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscaminque): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When will the Minister of Agriculture be present personally in the House to make a statement on this question?

Mr. MacInnis: He was here on June 10. What are you squawking about?

FEED GRAIN—INQUIRY AS TO EASTERN MARKETING BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, because we have to get information from the Minister of Agriculture second hand, possibly the Minister of Forestry will be able to tell the House of Commons whether the new policy with regard to feed grains, to which the Minister of Agriculture made reference yesterday during his stopover in Ottawa, will embrace the eastern livestock feed board proposal that was placed on the order paper by the previous government on February 4, 1963, and recently adopted as suitable by the Minister of Forestry?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of Government policy which will be announced in due course, but I am very pleased to learn that we will have the support of the official opposition for any good policy that we put forward.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there has always been support for the good policies we have advanced, but that is not the question. Why should we in Parliament have to wait for an announcement of policy when outside the House the Minister of Agriculture has announced a policy with regard to feed grains?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I have not read the transcript of the press conference of the Minister of Agriculture, but I am very doubtful that he would have made any announcement of Government policy.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC—MURDER OF CANADIAN PRIEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he tell us whether he has any information as to the identity of the killers or the circumstances surrounding the murder of the Canadian priest, Rev. James McKinnon, and also what precautions are being taken to ensure the safety of other Canadian nationals who may be in the Dominican Republic at this time?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians regret very much, of course, the circumstances of the death of Father McKinnon, just as we regretted a few months ago the murder in the Congo of Canadian missionaries of other denominations. Father McKinnon, a priest with the Scarborough Foreign Mission Society, was shot and killed on a road leading from Monte Plata, a Town near Santo Domingo, on the evening of the 22nd June. An investigation is now being conducted by staff members of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights of the Organization of American States. Our mission, with whom I was in touch by telephone this morning, tells me that they are not yet in a position to determine the full circumstances of the unfortunate death of Father McKinnon. I am sure I express the feelings of all Members of the House when I extend our deepest regrets to the Fathers of the Scarborough Foreign Mission Society and to the members of Father McKinnon's family.

Mr. Thompson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I asked a second question regarding the safety of other Canadian nationals now in the Dominican Republic.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I should have answered that question too; I apologize to my hon. friend. Most of the Canadians who were in Santo Domingo have been evacuated. There are comparatively few left, and these include some Canadians who wish to stay and to discharge their missionary obligations.

RECEPTION OF COMMONWEALTH PEACE MISSION BY RUSSIA AND NORTH VIET NAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Are the reports over the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation this morning correct when they indicate that the Government of North Viet Nam at Hanoi and the Russian Government in Moscow are now prepared to receive the Commonwealth peace mission? I ask this question in view of the fact that reports yesterday indicated that the Russian Government would not receive the peace mission. The reports over the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation this morning were that Moscow had reversed its policy, and that Hanoi had also agreed to receive the peace mission.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding what may be the attitude of certain countries involved in the Viet Nam crisis, it is now possible that the mission will proceed to carry out its purpose some time within the course of the next 10 days or so. The Government of the United States through its Secretary of State has clearly indicated that it will be happy to see the mission and approves of the initiative taken. It is also unclear if the remarks attributed to the Premier of Communist China amount to a flat refusal to receive the mission. It is hoped that the statement made by the Soviet Union indicates that the Government at Hanoi may yet find it desirable to meet the mission. It is not clear whether the Soviet Union will ultimately refuse to receive the mission. I think there are good grounds for believing the Soviet Union may not be opposed to receiving it at some stage.

Mr. Nesbitt: May I ask a supplementary question. I thank the Minister for his lengthy answer. I ask directly, therefore, are the reports over the C.B.C. this morning correct when they say both Hanoi and Moscow will now receive the peace mission; or are these reports incorrect?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have already made my reply.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): May I ask a supplementary question in connection with the attempts made to negotiate a peace in Southeast Asia? Has the Minister any further report or comment to make on the reports of today and yesterday as to the bombing within a very few miles of the border of China by jet planes?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, there has been a change in the direction of the bombing, but there has been no intensification of it.

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO COMMENCEMENT OF DIRECT SERVICE TO GUADELOUPE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

During Wednesday's sitting the minister announced the inauguration of a direct air service between Montreal and Guadeloupe. Since there was no question period on that day, I wonder if he could tell us now on what date that new service will begin.

In my opinion that question is quite urgent since hon. members hope to be on holiday soon and some of them might want to enjoy that island's famous French hospitality.

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the service will not be inaugurated in time for hon.

Members to spend their summer holidays in Guadeloupe, though if that would hasten the adjournment of the House perhaps I might get Air Canada to speed up the matter. It is expected that the service will be inaugurated in the early autumn, and I should like to say how grateful I am to the French Government for the wonderful co-operation they have given us in this matter.

NATIONAL REVENUE

TAX ON POPSICLE STICKS AND ICE CREAM SPOONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Has the Department of National Revenue informed the National Dairy Council of the Government's intention to apply the 11 per cent sales tax to a number of products in the ice cream industry, including popsicle sticks and ice cream spoons?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, there is a question on the order paper dealing with this matter which I will answer at greater length, but I should like to point out to my hon. friend now that it is not the intention of the Department of National Revenue to tax any dairy products produced by the dairy industry.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I asked about two specific items. Would the Minister answer with regard to them and will he give consideration to not taxing these small items, unless the Government is now augmenting its war on poverty with a war on children?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the allegation is ridiculous, of course. The hon. Member has referred to popsicles, which are produced both by the dairy industry and by independent operators. Popsicles consist of sugar, food colouring, flavouring and water which are combined and frozen. In their other form, as soft drinks, they are taxed. The question of their being taxable when frozen into popsicle form by the dairy industry is now under review by my Department.

CANADIAN COAST GUARD

REPORTED HIRING OF OFFICER PERSONNEL FROM U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the high unemployment in the Atlantic Provinces will the Minister advise if the report is correct that the Department at present is hiring deck officer personnel for the Canadian Coast Guard directly from the United Kingdom, without first advertising those positions in the Atlantic Provinces' newspapers?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I did not hear the first few words of the hon. gentleman's question, but from what I heard I would think it most unlikely that any personnel would be hired from anywhere outside Canada without prior consultation with the National Employment Service, because that is the usual policy of the Government. I would not like, in a Department such as mine, to say I am aware of everything that is going on at every hour of the day. I think I would be prudent to inquire before being too categorical.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED SPEECH BY HEALTH MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare which arises out of a speech the hon. lady gave at Fredericton on Tuesday of this week, of which she was kind enough to send copies to all Members. Can the Minister inform the House which region of Canada or which group in Canada she was contemplating when she mentioned that an old age security payment of $75 per month would be too high?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I would be glad to discuss it with my hon. friend at any time.

EXPO '67

INQUIRY AS TO PROVISION FOR AGRICULTURAL EXHIBITS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I received an answer last week from the Minister of Trade and Commerce with regard to what agricultural expenditures were planned for Expo '67. The answer was to the effect that no provision had been made in the capital budget for any expenditure for an agriculture pavilion, since it was envisaged it was possible this would be sponsored by interested parties throughout Canada. According to Wednesday's Gazette the general manager of the exhibition has stated that they will have to scrap three projected pavilions, namely those dealing with better living, food and agriculture unless Canadian business is able to raise a further $30 million for the purpose of these pavilions. Under these circumstances, is it not planned to have any agriculture building if business does not take action; or what action is to be taken?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): It is our hope and our expectation that there will be sufficient sponsorship for exhibits of this kind, because they do provide an opportunity not only for the educational and the entertainment values that are inherent in an exhibition of this kind but also provide an opportunity for Canadian companies to show their contribution to agriculture. However, and I do not think this is at all likely—if sponsorship were not to come forward in the required amount, the situation would be reviewed, and I can assure my hon. friend there will be an adequate representation of the agriculture industry at Expo '67.

UNITED NATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN POSITION REGARDING DEFAULTING NATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the Government of Canada has now reversed the stand it took earlier that defaulting members of the United Nations should, under the charter, be denied the right to vote. Has the Government altered its view in this regard, and does it now intend to support the action to assure that the U.S.S.R., France and other defaulting nations shall not be denied the exercise of their full rights under the charter by reason of their default?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Canadian Government, of course, has not changed its view about the application of Article 19 to a situation where a member is in default for an amount greater than its assessment for the two previous years. Earlier this year the Canadian Government made its stand known when Albania moved for the resumption of the normal business of the Assembly. We said we did not regard our vote on that occasion as in any way prejudicing the position which we felt should legally be taken with regard to Article 19.

But the Canadian Government now thinks, this question having been affected by the vote on that occasion, it would be regrettable for the future integrity and usefulness of the United Nations if we were to have a repetition of the stalemate which attended the deliberations of the United Nations last December and January. The British Government, the Scandinavian Governments, New Zealand, Iceland and Canada have made voluntary payments toward the financial situation facing the United Nations. We hope this will help create a climate in which it will not be necessary for the Assembly to meet next September faced with the frustrating circumstances that attended the last Assembly. I think the wise course would be to seek to proceed with substantive business, and to regard the application of Article 19 as having been resolved for this situation alone along the lines of the statement made by Canada last February.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In this situation it is difficult for me to follow exactly what the situation is, using the words of the hon. gentleman. Does this mean that Canada's position now is that regardless of the default on the part of the U.S.S.R., its puppet nations and France, when the session opens this fall Canada will give support to deliberations being continued and votes taken, regardless of whether contributions have been made by the defaulting nations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Sir.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARREST IN U.S. OF CANADIAN CIVIL RIGHTS WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister, notice of which I gave him this morning. However, there has been a change. I indicated to the Acting Prime Minister this morning that I would ask him if the Canadian Government had made inquiries concerning the imprisonment at Jackson, Mississippi, of a Canadian civil rights worker, Mr. Robertson Wood. I understand that in the meantime Mr. Wood has been released but that Mr. Paul Saltzman, son of C.B.C. weather man Percy Saltzman, has been arrested at Jackson, Mississippi, on a similar charge. Will the Government make inquiries concerning this matter?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I am not aware of the circumstances so far as Mr. Saltzman is concerned, but I will make immediate inquiries. It is reported that Robert Wood, a young Canadian citizen associated with the Student Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee, was recently arrested in Jackson, Mississippi, and detained there because it was not possible to arrange bail. Yesterday I instructed our consul-general in New Orleans, who has jurisdiction in the State of Mississippi, to look into this situation and to see what assistance that would be warranted he could give to this young Canadian national.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I bring to the attention of the hon. Member that we have already gone about two minutes beyond the time, and that he just got in under the wire. Therefore I suggest we call orders of the day.

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Tuesday, June 22, consideration in Committee of Bill No. C-118, to amend the Income Tax Act and the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act —Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee rose on Tuesday last clause 1 of the bill was being considered.

On clause 1.

Mr. Lambert: What is the allocation within the taxation year 1966, or any subsequent taxation year, so far as the residence of any person described in the amendment is concerned, if there is a posting abroad say five months after the beginning of the taxation year? Is it on an aliquot basis by months, or what would be the effect of the amendment? Does living abroad for a portion of the year qualify a person described in the amendment to exemption for the whole year, or is it on an aliquot basis?

Mr. Gordon: He would get it for the whole year.

Mr. Monteith: I take it that people on government assistance programs who are out of the country for a period will be in the same category as ambassadors and others for taxation purposes?

Mr. Gordon: That is correct.

Clause agreed to.

Income Tax Act

On clause 2—Transfer of superannuation benefits and retiring allowances.

Mr. Knowles: With respect to the part that provides income tax deductibility for contributions made to the Canada Pension Plan, is this deductibility over and above any other deductibility that is allowed for pension plans of various kinds?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is quite separate from everything else.

Mr. Monteith: Would the Minister indicate whether there could be any possibility of using this as an additional remuneration for an individual?

Mr. Gordon: The only reason I hesitate to give a categorical answer is that people are ingenious and do find loopholes in the law. I can assure my hon. friend there is no change that would make the situation different from what is was previously. I do not think there is any opportunity here to take advantage of this particular clause. Certainly the amendments would not add to the pension.

Mr. Monteith: The hon. Member for Winnipeg North referred to subsection (2)(x) and I agree with this provision. Then provision is made for certain leasehold payments and landscaping costs. At present it is not possible to qualify for depreciation on these. They are not allowed as an expense, but now I understand the Minister is providing that these be deductible.

Mr. Gordon: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Patterson: As I followed the discussion during resolution stage I understood the bill did not cover land levelling. My colleague from Medicine Hat dealt with this aspect of the matter at some length, because of its importance in irrigation areas. It is important to my province, and I want to express appreciation to the Minister for including this recommendation of my colleague with respect to the levelling of land.

Mr. Gordon: I thank my hon. friend for his kind remarks. As he says, the matter was raised by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat, and it was also brought to my attention by the Minister of Agriculture who, as one would expect, watches these matters closely.

Mr. Herridge: I endorse the remarks made by the hon. Member for Fraser Valley. As the Minister knows, I have urged this course for 15 years, and I can assure him this provision will mean a great deal to many of the farmers in B.C. and other parts of Canada.

Mr. Gordon: I thank my hon. friend for his remarks. It has always seemed to me that in this particular area, while incorporated businesses were entitled to write off their capital investments in machinery, equipment, buildings and that sort of thing, the farmers were at a disadvantage because there was no provision in their case for them to claim any part of these costs. I think Members on all sides are pleased with the solution which has been found.

• (12:00 noon)

Mr. Lambert: Subclause (2) covers a number of so-called "nothing" items, as chartered accountants call them. I made some remarks during a previous stage in reference to paragraphs (y), (aa) and (ab). In particular, I referred to (y) and suggested there was discrimination, inasmuch as the exemption is only granted to the property owner who has to pay an amount of money to cancel a lease held by a person or business at arm's length. I raised the question of the lessee who would have to pay an amount to get rid of a lease because, shall we say, he is moving into larger premises. In addition, I criticized the arm's length provision because it appeared to me there can be definite arm's length relationships even though persons may be related, within the same family.

I cannot see why such a limitation as this should be imposed. Blood relationship or related interests may be involved when we are dealing with a corporate taxpayer, yet this item is being granted only to a very limited class of taxpayers. I suggest to the Minister that arrangements be made to cover any payments made to cancel a lease if they are made within the class of business provided for in paragraph (y).

Mr. Gordon: I am informed that similar payments made by a lessee would be allowed as a deductible expense under the existing law.

Mr. Lambert: That is the law as it exists today?

Mr. Gordon: Yes. As to the second part of the hon. gentleman's comments, without question there are difficulties in administering the law as it applies to transactions between associated groups and family concerns. We were afraid that if this was not limited to transactions made at arm's length there would be abuse.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Lambert: Suppose there is a family relationship of say father and son, between a taxpayer and a lessee. In the event that the father controls the company which is the lease owning company and the son controls the corporate entity which leases the property, would this arrangement attract to it a classification as one which was not at arm's length and not therefore entitled to relief?

Mr. Gordon: Under the law they would not be dealing at arm's length, so any transaction would be examined very closely.

Mr. Lambert: That is pure discrimination.

Mr. Gordon: Maybe.

Mr. More: I am not sure whether this is directly relevant to the item we are now discussing, but I wish to ask whether the Minister has given consideration to the problem I raised concerning mechanics and the tools they have to purchase to carry on their employment. It seems to me there is discrimination here, and I should like to know whether the Minister is considering dealing with the matter.

Mr. Gordon: I can assure the hon. Member that a great deal of consideration has been given to this particular matter he brought to the attention of the committee, as well as to a number of similar or related matters about which arguments can be made one way or the other. We have moved with respect to a number of items here where we felt we could safely move. As to the others, we have decided we should wait for the Carter report.

In this matter of the mechanics tools, there are complications. In some cases the remuneration of a mechanic is based on the fact that he must provide his own tools; he is paid a higher wage or price than he would normally be paid, or would normally be able to negotiate through the market place. These are complications through which we have not seen our way clear as yet, but we are hoping the Carter Commission will be of assistance.

Mr. More: May I point out that the fact a mechanic may receive higher remuneration after providing his own tools makes him eligible to pay higher taxes. The boss can write off costs of tools and machinery, yet we discriminate against his employees.

Mr. Gordon: I do not think I can accept that argument in quite those terms. I do not believe people should object too much to paying higher taxes if they earn more money. That is the whole principle of our income tax structure.

Mr. More: But why the discrimination?

Mr. Gordon: I must say I quite agree. I think this is a difficult case. But it is not black and white; the argument is not all on one side. That is why we decided to defer dealing with it until we have heard from the Carter Commission.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I wish to express my appreciation of the relief afforded to farmers in respect of drainage and land clearance. However, I should like the Minister to clarify certain of these provisions. No mention was made here of any deduction in respect of open drains. In my part of the country tile drainage is not used but ditching is used extensively. I would expect that any expenses in connection with open ditching would be treated in the same way as if the taxpayer were draining by tiles.

Mr. Gordon: Large projects would be covered by the general description "clearing land". If the work were done by an individual farmer it would, I am informed, be allowed as a deduction.

Mr. Lambert: With regard to the proposed paragraph (aa) dealing with expenses, I believe the Minister has a laudable object in mind in dealing with legitimate expenditures, but I am wondering what yardstick of reasonableness is being used with regard to the interpretation of this paragraph. It seems to me a considerable area of discretion is opened in deciding which expenses are to be considered legitimate. Does one come to Ottawa to see the Minister of National Revenue on a tax matter, take the most expensive suite at the Chateau and eat at all the more expensive restaurants in the city? What limit is to be placed on this expense account living? The words of the paragraph are very wide ranging; they practically bring in the kitchen sink.

• (12:10 p.m.)

Mr. Gordon: I suppose the same broad tests of reasonableness will apply to these expenses as to any other business expenses. I think it does raise this question, because the assessor must make up his mind whether any expense is a reasonable one to be charged against the business. In this particular case there is, of course, an added check. If a client retains a lawyer and the lawyer charges excessive fees, or his expenses are unreasonable in the opinion of the client, then perhaps the lawyer might not be retained again. I do not know how you can lay down a hard and fast rule unless you say that lawyers or other professional men are only worth so much a day, and that they shall not be allowed expenses of more than so much. This would be getting down to the kind of detail that would make it impossible for the department to administer the law, I would think.

As my hon. friend knows, before this section was available many people used to include these expenses under some other heading or under some general heading. A lot of people, I presume, claimed them as deductions and probably were allowed them, and others were not. If they were noted separately on a bill, I presume they were excluded. So it is pretty hard to say where the line should be drawn. Many of these representational expenses are just as much a cost of doing business as almost anything else, and that is why the section was included. As to the point raised by the hon. Member, I am afraid I have not a specific answer.

Mr. Lambert: Perhaps I may give this example, Mr. Chairman. It may be a case of persons coming to Ottawa to make representations with regard to a private bill that is going through the other place and this House. Would it be deemed reasonable that all the provisional directors or all the petitioners should come here assisted by a battery of counsel or what have you? This is a hypothetical example, I must say, but I realize it might be a temptation to send everybody down here on a junket of this type. How can the officials of the Department of National Revenue actually establish that in the case of a private bill it was only necessary for one or two of the petitioners to come here accompanied by counsel, when it might have been just as reasonable for say five of the petitioners to come here?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, in the particular example my hon. friend raises, any pre-incorporation costs would not be allowed anyway. That would take care of that problem. If it was an amendment to some existing statute and the company felt that all their directors should be on hand to help, I would expect that this would be allowed because the decision would be made by the company itself. It would be a pretty expensive thing for the company to do and would sound pretty silly in most cases. We get into an area where conceivably there could be abuses, and if there were and they were discovered, the Department would disallow the expense.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, my question is under paragraph (4). There is a new section to Section 11 of the Act and deals with the application of clause 2 (aa) of the amendments. I am just wondering what would be the position of a corporation which by the end of the year had run into part of an expense described under subparagraph (aa) but was not sure how much further expense would be involved in this particular undertaking. If at the end of the year they had not decided whether they would like to have it all charged up in one year or spread over ten years, what would be the situation?

Mr. Gordon: They would have to make up their mind before they filed their return, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Monteith: Let us assume, for the sake of argument, that they had undertaken this expenditure in one year and decided to charge it up as an expense in that year, and then had an additional amount the next year. They could elect to divide that latter part over the next ten years?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, they could.

Mr. More: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister whether he considers the deduction of expenses for lobbying and making representations more urgent than the plight of the mechanic in connection with these matters. If one has to await the report of the Carter Commission, surely the uncertainty of the application of the law in this regard raises some doubts about abuses, and so on. Cannot this provision be extended on a basis that will allow a deduction with regard to the tools with which a mechanic has to carry on his work? What is the Minister's answer in this respect?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate my hon. friend's argument about the mechanic and his tools. I have tried to answer him and there is nothing further I can say. I have sometimes been on the receiving end of lobbying and general representations. I think there is one going on at the moment, if I am not mistaken. I am rather sympathetic to the point of view the hon. Member has just put forward.

Mr. Monteith: The Minister is not by any chance using this as a way out because of not being able to allow the requests of certain lobbyists?

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I am just wondering whether the Minister has given consideration to the representations made tc the Royal Commission on Taxation last year by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool Employees' Association on behalf of the employees of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool engaged in the construction and repair of country grain elevators, annexes and cottages, and made with the full knowledge and support of the employer, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool.

The Minister will recall that I have a private Member's motion on the order paper dealing with this matter. Apparently the complaint is that there is an anomaly in the Act with respect to the repair gangs that during the summer travel across the breadth and width of Saskatchewan to repair country elevators. The anomaly comes in because apparently the foreman of the gang who makes arrangements or contracts with the Wheat Pool, or any elevator company for that matter, for these repair jobs is exempt for income tax purposes with regard to food and other incidental expenses in the matter of travelling about the country, but the people he employs are not.

A foreman and any members of his gang are, in my estimation, in exactly the same capacity. This has been a complaint of long standing. There was a very lengthy submission made to the Royal Commission on Taxation on this matter, and I wonder whether the Minister has any observations to make in this respect.

Mr. Gordon: This is another of those difficult questions, Mr. Chairman. Expenses are allowed in the case of construction workers, and the fact that I think has got the Department into difficulty is that they are not allowed for some other kinds of workers. Not all the people my hon. friend has just mentioned come under the category of construction workers. I am not satisfied with the present divisions. I have not been able to come up with a clearcut answer that will be satisfactory in all cases. Again it is one of those things that I know is being studied by the Carter Commission. I do not know whether they have found a satisfactory answer. I hope their report will be available within a few months.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, might I suggest that the solution to this question would be just to include all members of these work gangs in the same category.

• (12:20 p.m.)

I think the answer is simple, but it is something that has been overlooked. More specifically, it is covered under section 11 (9) of part A of the Income Tax Act. I think this would be the simple answer, if the Department would take the necessary action.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, it appears to me, though I am subject to correction here, that there may be some difficulty in the drafting. Subclause (2) says:

Subsection (1) of section 11 of the said Act is further amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (v) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraphs:

I have an office consolidation for 1964 in my hand, and I find that a new paragraph (w) had been inserted in 1964. I would agree that the word "and" might have to go out, but what happens to "(w)"? Are there not some consequential changes which will have to be introduced in order to bring in the (x) (y) and (z), if (w) is to remain and we are to have continuity? The drafting is complex, but it does appear to me that a small error may have been made in the drafting here.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, my officials assure me that everything is in order and that paragraph (w) does remain. Paragraph (v) remains, and these various other paragraphs are added after (w) which follows after (v).

Mr. Monteith: The "and" follows the (aa).

Mr. Gordon: That is right.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Limitation re advertising expense.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I was absent when the vote took place with reference to this clause, but I want to make clear the stand I took on behalf of this party, which was unanimously accepted. Clause 4 is one of the most serious potential invasions of freedom that this country has ever seen. I also want to emphasize that while the press generally places the responsibility in this regard on the Minister of Finance, this is a Government measure for which the Government must accept responsibility.

On the last occasion I spoke I made a plea for further consideration of this question, and that it be held back by the Government; and I am going to repeat it. Indeed, I will go further and state that apparently the Prime Minister of Canada, according to information I have secured from those who have been strong supporters of this Government, has misled the representatives of the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association and given them an impression which is not borne out by the facts.

It is not the first time that we on this side of the House have seen under this Government deceptive and untrue statements made in the House of Commons, but this particular incident took place outside the House. I am going to refer to a statement made by the president of the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association which reveals a condition of affairs which cannot be condoned. In other words these representatives of the Association have been deceived, and deceived as the result of a statement made to them by the Prime Minister of Canada. I would say more were he present. I am going to refer to this statement because it shows an attitude of mind on the part of this Government that is not in keeping with parliamentary tradition or the ordinary principles that should prevail. On June 23 Mr. Graybiel said:

Last night—

That was the 22nd.

—I was asked to comment on the government's action in proceeding with press control legislation although the CDNPA had requested that such legislation be deferred until possible alternatives had been studied. My reply was "We are disappointed. We asked for time and we didn't get it".

I have been questioned as to why the CDNPA should expect the government to delay its legislative program.

He goes on:

On May 4, executives of the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association met Prime Minister Pearson and Finance Minister Walter Gordon—

The Minister was present, and he will get the opportunity to answer whether or not the statement of Mr. Graybiel represents the facts.

—to protest that the government's proposal was "a fundamental violation of long-established press freedom in Canada".

Following that meeting I wrote to Mr. Pearson: "You indicated to us yesterday your belief that there is some urgency in preventing foreign takeover of newspapers. Any immediate danger has, of course, been met by Mr. Gordon's announcement of the government's intention in his Budget address. No potential foreign investor will proceed with acquisition of a Canadian newspaper in the face of the government's stated intention to make advertising in such a newspaper taxable as of January 1, 1966. Presumably, that intention could be implemented by legislation at any time before the end of the year. Thus a breathing space of some eight months has been gained. That time can be devoted to exploration of alternative methods of achieving the government's objective.

That was a letter written to the Prime Minister setting out what had taken place.

What we are witnessing in the absence of the Prime Minister, who is in the United Kingdom, where he should be at this time, is that this legislation is being pushed through so the Government will be able to say "Well, really, the Prime Minister did not have an opportunity of making himself clear in this regard."

We want to know, Mr. Speaker, which newspapers are in danger of being taken over. The Minister of Finance has stated that the terrible danger of Canadian newspapers being taken over is imminent. While fearing for Canada's national identity, Time and Reader's Digest are placed in a position where they are set apart, given a kind of honorary Canadian citizenship wherein they are absolved from any of the dangers of which the Minister spoke. This legislation is just like bringing in law to prevent speeding on the highways because of the danger, and then restricting the law to those who go over 60 miles an hour. That is in reality what the situation is today, with $4 million of advertising going to these two companies.

• (12:30 p.m.)

So far as Time magazine is concerned, one has only to read the Canadian edition week by week to realize the change in view in the last few months so obviously in favour of the Government. It has been very clear and very definite. No Liberal newspaper dedicated to Liberalism could be so unobjective as Time magazine has been. Apparently this is the pay-off. I want to make it very clear that while it may be that this legislation is going to be put through, this is not going to be the last of the story. I read on:

Neither then nor since then did the Government question that assumption.

That is the assumption that nothing would be finally done for several months so as to enable the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association to make its representations and provide its alternatives.

On May 12 Mr. Pearson wrote me and, in fact, invited the publishers to suggest such alternatives.

The Prime Minister said this in his letter, as quoted by Mr. Graybiel:

"We will be more than glad to give further thought to any alternative which the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association would submit...I will be only too happy to give the fullest and most sympathetic consideration to any alternative method of expressing the same principles which your Association can recommend."

Mr. Graybiel goes on to say:

On May 14 I replied to the Prime Minister, accepting on behalf of the C.D.N.P.A., Mr. Pearson's request for alternative solutions.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

The following is in quotations:

"A meeting of the executive committee...has been called for June 15 to give further consideration to this matter. In the meantime I forwarded copies of your letter to each of the 104 members of the C.D.N.P A. requesting them to send me their comments and suggestions so that the executive committee may consider them."

Thus Mr. Pearson knew that the publishers were studying alternative proposals, knew that they believed they had eight months to achieve an effective alternative solution, knew that the next stage in the study was a meeting of the C.D.N.P.A. executive committee on June 15.

What a travesty of an agreement. The views of the C.D.N.P.A. conformed exactly with the views of the Prime Minister as set out in his letter. Mr. Graybiel went on to say:

In the face of that knowledge, the Government introduced its legislation in the House of Commons on June 14.

What is behind all this? Why this haste? Why not wait until the Prime Minister gets back so we can ask him, if we cannot get any information from the Minister of Finance, whether this is true? Mr. Graybiel goes on:

When I protested this hasty action, the officers of the C.D.N.P.A. were invited by the Acting Prime Minister, Hon. Paul Martin, to meet with him and Mr. Gordon in Ottawa on June 18. We pointed out that if the Government denied us the time to carry out the Prime Minister's invitation to supply alternatives, and proceeded with the legislation, the achievement of any alternative solution would be virtually impossible. The study which the C.D.N.P.A. had undertaken at the Prime Minister's request would be meaningless. Following this meeting the Government went ahead and the bill received second reading in the House last night.

Then he goes on to say:

I think this statement of facts makes it clear why the C.D.N.P.A. asked that action be deferred and why we were disappointed that our request was not granted. We were only trying to do what we had been invited to do by the Prime Minister and only requesting the time for our study which we had been led to believe was available to us.

That is the way the last line appears in the statement, but it has been suggested to my office that the last line should read "which we believed was available to us".

What is the rush? Are these newspaper proprietors parasites? Are they not Canadians entitled to the consideration which it was agreed should be given to them? Why this rush? What is going on? Who is going to benefit? What is behind this? Are certain American magazines forcing action at this session? Is that the reason? Is one of the reasons, if you do this we will do that? It is difficult to understand what is behind this.

I am not going to go over the facts I have dealt with on previous occasions, but over the years I have never seen the Winnipeg Free Press, which has supported this Government, take such a stand. I do not want to see the Minister of Finance pilloried and placed in this disgraceful assortment of people whose pictures appear here. The whole Government should be there.

Mr. Moreau: Yellow journalism.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did someone over there say "yellow journalism"? Where is the person who said "yellow journalism"?

Mr. Moreau: I did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. Member for Scarborough speaks of yellow journalism in regard to the Free Press which has always supported the Government. Is it yellow journalism that would cause the Free Press to take this stand? Does he say that the Toronto Globe and Mail is guilty of yellow journalism? I am asking him, does he say that?

Mr. Moreau: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; he lives in Toronto, where he wants votes.

Mr. Moreau: On question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I referred to the article which the Leader of the Opposition was holding in his hand at the moment, and I suggest that it was an example of yellow journalism. I referred to no other.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman has had to back up. He always runs, sometimes to Hull. If he wants particulars I can give him a little more on that score. He speaks of yellow journalism. I have before me the Free Press which contains an article headed "Press Control Has A Long History". There is a picture of George III with the words underneath "He taxed advertising", a picture of Hitler with the words "He jailed editors", a picture of Benito Mussolini with the words "He built a subservient press", a picture of Joseph Stalin with the words "He made the press a government mouthpiece", a picture of Juan Peron with the words "He closed down newspapers", a picture of Fidel Castro with the words "He exiled editors". The hon. Member says I am looking at a yellow press. I am glad he said that, since it gave me the opportunity to ask whether the Globe and Mail was a yellow press. He would not say so. He would rather get out of Ottawa and go to Hull.

Mr. Byrne: What is wrong with going to Hull?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I refer now to the Globe and Mail, and I would ask the hon. gentleman whether this too is yellow journalism. On June 24 the Globe had an editorial headed "To Serve His Obsession". I do not like this because it identifies the Minister of Finance as being the perpetrator of this scheme. He is not. They sit around him. It is these seven or eight former bureaucrats and civil servants who have thought this through. So far as the newspapers are concerned, nobody asked for it. Nobody has requested it. What is the reason? The Globe and Mail says:

> Finance Minister Walter Gordon, wielding the big stick "pass this legislation or we'll take you to an election" has forced through second reading in Parliament the bill which will introduce censorship of the press through control of its advertising.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman would allow me to raise a question of privilege.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): The Minister of Finance on a point of order.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Mr. Gordon: No, a question of privilege. I am sure the right hon. gentleman would want the statement from which he has been reading to be correct, so perhaps he might be kind enough to table it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, yes.

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps, at the same time—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will not only table it, I will make it an exhibit if the hon. gentleman wishes.

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps at the same time, Mr. Speaker, I may have permission to table a telegram which I have just received from Mr. Richard Graybiel, who asks that a correction be made—

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is going on?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Order. The Leader of the Opposition has the floor, and so far as I know that is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This gives you an idea of the disregard of the hon. gentleman for parliamentary rules. He has asked me if I would table this document. I should like to table it, and I should like to ask that it be appended to Hansard, but I know that would not be proper. I cannot believe that anything would be more beneficial in showing up this Government than that document. If the hon. Member wants it tabled I am going to ask, at the conclusion of my remarks, that his request be granted.

I was reading a moment ago from the Globe and Mail which says that Mr. Gordon has two obsessions which are most dangerous for Canadians. They say he is obsessed with a fear of United States domination of the Canadian economy to the point where he may well, with ill judged, punitive measures, force the United States to assert that dominance and reduce Canada either to a dependency or a depression. The editorial says he is obsessed with the idea that he alone knows what is good for Canadians. I cannot accept that statement on the part of the Globe and Mail. It is not he alone but those who sit around him, those former bureaucrats. They are the ones who know what is good for Canada.

We only have to read what is happening according to the latest financial statements issued by the Government to illustrate this point, and to understand the effect of this tinkering with United States investment in Canada. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports reveal a reduction in investment capital for the first quarter of this year to $188 million as compared with $337 million last year. One has only to realize that as a result of this kind of tinkering, this kind of obsession—not on the part of the Minister because he does not have an obsession, just a brainstorm—they are bringing about a situation dangerous to the Canadian economy. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports the current account deficit for the first quarter is 19 per cent above last year, the highest first quarter deficit in the 1960's. These are things with which the Government should be dealing. Imports are increasing at a fabulous rate and exports at a much lower rate.

Mr. Gordon: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The right hon. gentleman was kind enough to point out that I am not very familiar with the rules. May I point out to him that we are dealing with clause 4 of this particular bill.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman was talking to the Minister of National Revenue and was not following me. I was pointing out that these are the effects of the tinkering this Government is doing; that is what I was pointing out. As a result of the policies of this Government we are placing our trade position in a very serious light.

I am going to ask the Minister whether or not a complaint was received from the United States, directly or indirectly through the External Affairs Department, that if this legislation goes into effect, it discriminates in favour of two United States magazines and constitutes a contravention of GATT. I want to get an answer as to that, because it certainly took place in 1964. The United States treasury secretary, Douglas Dillon, when he attended the Canada-United States ministerial conference in Ottawa on April 30, reportedly suggested that the Canadian magazine protective proposal was discriminatory, that it was discrimination in trade policy in violation of GATT, and that the United States may seek equivalent concessions in other tariffs.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

We have stood against this. We made a very reasonable request that the matter be held up. The Prime Minister gave his undertaking to the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association, and the Minister of Finance was present. They are breaking that undertaking, and we ask why. What is the reason for this, can you tell me? I quote some of the headlines in the daily newspapers: The Winnipeg Free Press, "Freedom of Press Now in Danger in Canada"; the Guelph Mercury, "Press Throttling to Injure Canada"; the Windsor Star of June 17, "Please, Mr. Gordon, Stick to the Facts". Another article in the Windsor Star of June 23, which throughout the years has given such support to the Liberal Party, has a headline "Arrogance and Hypocrisy". Lest anybody misunderstand to whom these words were directed, it was the Government of Canada of today. The article reads, in part:

> In 1957, a Liberal Government in Ottawa fell because it had become too arrogant.

Then the article goes on to deal with the present situation and says:

> That is why the Publishers Association, whose president is Richard Graybiel of the Star, appealed to the Government not to proceed with the Bill. Prime Minister Pearson asked the publishers to suggest an alternative solution to the problem. All they asked in return was time to study possible alternatives. It wasn't much to ask when so vital an issue as freedom of the press is at stake.

I repeat those words, that it was not much to ask when so vital an issue as freedom of the press is at stake. I continue quoting:

> That request has been denied. Disregarding the sincere desire of the publishers to find a method that would achieve the Government's objective without endangering press freedom, Mr. Gordon is forging ahead with his legislation.

It is not Mr. Gordon who is doing it, it is this whole Government.

> That is arrogance.
> The reason advanced by Mr. Gordon for his haste in pursuing the measure is hypocritical. He says that if the Government doesn't act now, some Canadian newspaper may be bought by foreign interests, and then it will be too late to act.

Does he know of any? The Moose Jaw Times-Herald, not a newspaper which gives us support, has a headline which says, "Opposition Leader Right in Opposing Tax Law". The Oshawa Times has a headline which reads "Bureaucratic Bumbling can Jeopardize Freedom". The editorial states:

—Mr. Gordon's latest gimmick must be protested strenuously by all Canadians and opposed most vigorously by our representatives in the House of Commons. Despite his facetious flare for knowing what's best for us, Mr. Gordon has made grave mistakes since assuming the finance portfolio. Canadians can ill afford to permit him to bumble into another which at any time could endanger our freedom of information.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Why not, even now, keep the word that was given to these publishers, so called the yellow press by the hon. Member for Scarborough.

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, I made it perfectly clear on an earlier point of privilege that I referred to the article which was in the Winnipeg Free Press, and which the Leader of the Opposition was waving, as yellow journalism. I think that was an example of yellow journalism. I made no reference to any other editorial comment in any other newspaper, and I want to make that perfectly clear. The hon. gentleman knows that.

As to his references to my personal conduct, when he referred to my going to Hull, as he knows perfectly well my personal conduct was not in question at all. I think that is pretty disgusting on the part of a man who was a former Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, Mr. Chairman, I must say that the hon. gentleman feels most keenly. That was one voyage for discovery that he wants us to forget. I do not know what he is talking about. He apparently knows of something I am not fully aware of which causes him to be so aroused over that visit to Hull.

Mr. Byrne: Cheap.

Miss LaMarsh: You cannot get much lower.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman makes his best contributions in this House while still sitting down.

Mr. Byrne: I certainly make a better contribution than you. That is a cheap interjection on the part of a former Prime Minister.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What was said in the Winnipeg Free Press was described as yellow journalism. That was the article headed "Press Control has a Long History." I have read from various papers that have come to hand in recent days. The Standard-Freeholder of Cornwall says, in an article headed "Threat to Freedom of the Press in Government's Proposed Law":

Thinking Canadians from coast to coast have expressed justifiable concern over finance Minister Gordon's proposed legislation on foreign ownership of Canadian newspapers and magazines. Any suggestion of government control over the freedom of the press is viewed with dismay and alarm. Regress instead of progress.

It ends up by saying:

Freedom of the press is everybody's right, everybody's privilege to enjoy. It is cherished and must be guarded zealously.

The Canadian Government must not disregard its citizens' rights; rights won in long-fought battles. The newspaper ownership proposal could be the first break in the solid freedom front.

I doubt the constitutionality of this legislation. I doubt that the courts would uphold it; for when we brought in the Bill of Rights for the first time in Canada's history freedom of the press, recognized as being within the jurisdiction of the federal Parliament, was provided for as basic. I would certainly consider that this legislation, if passed, would be a contravention of the Bill of Rights, which continues to be in effect not only in respect of legislation passed prior to its enactment but of all legislation that will be passed so long as it is on the statute books.

I have made my appeal for reconsideration of this matter. I have asked the Government to carry out its pledged word, that is all. It did not give the word to me. It gave the word to the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association. No harm will be done because, as was stated in one of the articles, if the matter is allowed to remain in abeyance no U.S. corporation or any other foreign corporation would think of coming in to make purchases during the next eight months, with a matter like this hanging over for further consideration.

I have made my appeal. I can do no more, but I regard what is being done in this case as potentially the grossest invasion of freedom that has ever been before this House since 1867.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): The hon. Member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before the hon. gentleman speaks may I point out that the Minister of Finance asked if I would table this, and I want to do that if I may have consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Actually the formal tabling of the document would have to take place when the Speaker is in the Chair. I think it should be proposed at that time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All right.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal about the freedom of the press in the last half hour. I notice that the freedom of the press has been exercised latterly in reporting the expedition of the right hon. gentleman to the beautiful part of the country from which I come. I believe it was reported that he caught a cod, but no one told us he also brought back a whole bucket full of red herrings.

There seems to be some confusion as to what the meaning of freedom of the press is. I have always taken it for granted that the freedom of the press involves the right of a Canadian citizen to publish news that is not obscene and that is not libelous, to publish opinions on public affairs that are not obscene and not libelous, and that it has nothing whatsoever to do with the question of the ownership of the means by which these views are disseminated.

We have before us a measure which does attempt to curb, shall we say, some of the business freedom of those who own the properties of mass communication. Nowhere that I can see is there any suggestion whatever that powers are being conferred upon the Minister of Finance, or any other dignitary, to dictate the editorial policies of any paper. But the Minister is taking steps to try—I think rather ineffectively—to prevent these organs of public opinion falling into the hands of non-Canadians and thereby being at their disposal to disseminate views, ideas and opinions that may not be in the best interests of Canada but may be in the interests of some other part of the world.

This does not seem to me to be any intrusion into the freedom of the press. It seems to me to be merely a wise precaution to make sure that if we are going to have opinions widely disseminated, they will be disseminated by fellow Canadians.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then what about Time magazine?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I am coming to Time magazine and I am going to give you an opportunity, Mr. Leader of the Opposition, to state your position quite clearly on Time magazine later, to go on record about it at least in this Chamber. I am coming to that in a few minutes but I suggest, Mr. Chairman, if the Leader of the Opposition had really been concerned about freedom of the press he would have criticized the Minister and the Government, not for precisely this measure that is before us but because they have not brought before us some comprehensive legislation to deal with the increasingly important question of mass communications in the modern age.

I myself would criticize this legislation, and have already done so, on the ground that it is too narrow; that while it may prevent Canadian advertisers advertising in U.S. owned newspapers and periodicals, except the two mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition, it makes no provision whatever to prevent advertising of that sort over U.S. television and radio stations, and I suspect one of the results of this legislation will be to cause a great many Canadian advertisers to make even more pronounced use of U.S. television and radio than they do at present. This is one of the points on which the legislation can be criticized.

But we should not confuse the issue by bringing in preposterous nonsense about it being an intrusion on the freedom of the press, because it is not. There is no question of that at all. I have spoken to many working newspapermen—I have not spoken to any publishers, because I do not know any; I do not move in those circles—but the working newspapermen to whom I have spoken snort derisively at the suggestion that the proposals put forward by the Minister of Finance constitute in any way interference with the freedom of the press. On the other hand, they say to me "If you want to do something about the freedom of the press, why don't you do something to prevent these wholesale amalgamations of newspapers? Why don't you use the Combines Investigation Act to halt a process which leads to the same views appearing in newspapers from coast to coast?" Newspapermen who know the side on which their bread is buttered are very careful before writing stories which conflict in any way with the known views of their publisher. It is situations such as these which in reality affect press freedom.

The Leader of the Opposition suggested there was great danger in this legislation, and that we could see the results of this danger in this morning's papers which contained the D.B.S. figures on the increase in the current deficit account. I had intended to ask the Minister of Finance to comment on this matter today, but so much of the time available during the question period was taken up by the Leader of the Opposition that I had no opportunity to ask the question. I thought it was a very serious matter. Apparently the Leader of the Official Opposition did not, because in spite of his numerous opportunities to ask questions, opportunities which those of us in much inferior positions lack, he did not ask the Minister of Finance to comment on this disturbing development, as I consider it to be. But to suggest that this has been brought about by the possibility that a United States publisher who might have wanted to buy a Canadian newspaper now finds he cannot do so, is utter nonsense.

The Leader of the Opposition has asked "What about Time and Reader's Digest?" What, indeed? I have already spoken twice on this matter, suggesting that attempts to free Canada from the dissemination of editorial opinion and slanted news coming from outside this country are utterly useless—and I suppose that is the purpose of the present legislation as a whole—if at the same time we are to make special provision for the two foreign periodicals which have the largest circulation in Canada. I propose to give the Leader of the Opposition the opportunity to record his objection to this policy and his deprecation of this dereliction of duty on the part of the Minister of Finance. In fact I intend to move:

That clause 4 be amended by deleting subparagraph (2) from the proposed new Section 12-A, and by renumbering the succeeding subparagraphs.

Mr. Gordon: A similar motion was moved at the resolution stage and was ruled out of order. I would merely like to submit that if it was out of order then, it is out of order now.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the situation at this moment is not exactly the same as it was at the resolution stage, despite the remarks made by the Minister of Finance. At the resolution stage we were dealing with the budget resolution preceding the Income Tax Act amendments. We had before us at that time a resolution which consisted of 19 paragraphs. Those paragraphs in their entirety covered all the proposed amendments to the Income Tax Act. We were told we had to deal with that resolution at one fell swoop. We tried to amend that resolution to strike out a limited portion of one of these 19 paragraphs. We were told we could not do this because the resolution stood or fell in its entirety.

Now we have before us, not 19 paragraphs but just the one subject set out in clause 4 of the bill. It is the question of the deductibility for income tax purposes of advertising in periodicals and newspapers. We feel we should have the right to deal separately with separate aspects of this one question. The one question—I will identify it again—is advertising in periodicals and newspapers. But this one question is complicated. It has a provision for deductibility for advertising in periodicals. Then it has an exception to that rule. Further, it has a provision for deductibility for advertising in newspapers, and later there are certain qualifications. We feel we should have an opportunity in committee of the whole to register our views on these separate aspects of this one question.

There is a rule, Mr. Chairman, of which I am fully aware, Standing Order 78(1), which says:

In proceedings in Committee of the Whole House upon bills, the preamble is first postponed and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order; the preamble and title to be last considered.

That Standing Order has been slightly amended on a provisional basis, but the point I am making is not altered. I am recognizing the fact that when a clause is put to us we have to vote on the clause as a whole. We do not have the right to ask Your Honour to call a clause in its separate parts.

But though it may be difficult to make an appeal of this kind, I do appeal to common sense. Surely if there is before us a matter which has several aspects, we should have the right to register our opinions on those several aspects. Let me narrow them to two and leave out for the time being the question of advertising in newspapers. Let us deal solely with the question of advertising in periodicals. Subsection (1) of the proposed new section 12A provides for non-deductibility for advertising in foreign owned periodicals. Subsection (2) provides for an exception to that rule so it does not cover Time and Reader's Digest. We feel that in terms of common sense we ought to be able to vote separately on the question of the non-deductibility of advertising and on the question whether or not this special exception should be made in the case of the two magazines I have mentioned.

• (1:10 p.m.)

I said, Mr. Chairman, that I was making an appeal to common sense, but I make one other appeal. I remind you, Sir, of citation 200, paragraph 4, of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, which is to be found on page 168:

> A motion which contains two or more distinct propositions may tbe divided so that the sense of the House may be taken on each separately.

I am sure that to you, Sir, that citation will have a familiar ring. It reminds you, as it reminds all of us, of a rather lengthy debate that we had in the House last session on the question of a national flag. You will remember, Sir, that the Government brought in one resolution in which it proposed at one and the same time a national flag for Canada and the recognition of the Union Jack as our Commonwealth flag. You will recall the point of order that was raised with respect to this matter and that that point of order was based essentially on this very citation. I read it again:

> A motion which contains two or more distinct propositions may be divided so that the sense of the House may be taken on each separately.

Mr. Speaker—we were in the House at the time—after listening to considerable debate, and after showing that he had done considerable homework on the matter himself, was of the opinion that the House had the right to vote separately on those two propositions. Related though they may have been, because they were distinct the House had the right to vote on them separately. Therefore the one resolution that had been placed before the House was, by Mr. Speaker himself, divided into two.

I submit that if it was possible for the House to be given the common sense right to vote separately on those two propositions, we should have the same common sense right to vote separately on the proposition, on the one hand that there should be a general rule regarding the non-deductibility of advertising in foreign owned magazines, and on the other hand on the exception to that rule that is set out for Time and Reader's Digest.

This is what we feel should be done. If it were at all possible for us simply to ask you to call clause 4 in its constituent parts, taking (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), (6) and (7), of course that would be very simple; all we would have to do would be to vote against subclause (2), the one that provides for the exception. But there they are, seven different clauses, each with a distinct and separate idea. Yet we are told by the terms of Standing Order 78(1), and by implication in the position taken by the Minister of Finance, that we have to vote on all these things at once; that we have to vote for the bad because we want the good, or vice-versa. We submit that there should be a way for us to have the right, the common sense right that is set out in citation 200(4), the common sense right that was given to this House by Mr. Speaker in the flag debate, the common sense right to vote separately on these distinct propositions.

It is a complicated question; there is no doubt about that. We have magazines on the one hand, newspapers on the other, and with respect to magazines the general rule and then the exception. To ask grown up men and women in the House of Commons to vote on all of this as one deal, without the right to express our opinion on the separate portions of it, we submit just does not make sense at all. That is why we have submitted this amendment asking that there be the opportunity to vote on the deletion of the portion of clause 4 of which we do not approve. We are not suggesting any change in the taxation rates; we are not suggesting any change in the principle that the Minister of Finance as a Minister of the Crown has brought down. We are just proposing a procedural means of getting the chance to vote separately on this one question, namely shall Time and Reader's Digest be exempted from the general rule that the Minister has brought in? That is the reason for the amendment moved by my colleague the hon. Member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, which simply asks that subparagraph (2) of the proposed new section 12A be deleted and that the succeeding paragraphs be renumbered accordingly.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, unless I misconstrued the position respecting the amendment that was proposed earlier during the debate on this income tax bill, it was my understanding that it was rejected then because it would upset the balance of ways and means. The intent of the amendment proposed today would have the same effect. If the proposed amendment was rejected the other day, when we were dealing with the resolution stage, because it would upset the balance of ways and means, surely the fact that we happen to be in the clause by clause discussion of the bill does not upset that principle. The same principle applies. If it upset the balance of ways and means at the resolution stage, surely it upsets the balance of ways and means when we are now in clause by clause discussion.

The other point which I wish to put very shortly is this, and it has in fact been made by the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre. Under Standing Order 78(1) every clause shall be considered by the committee in its proper order. The hon. Member puts forth the proposition that this clause now contains various aspects and hon. Members should be entitled to consider each aspect by itself. Surely when Standing Order 78(1) was drafted the House was aware of the fact that from time to time clauses might have several aspects in them, but they drafted the order to say that every clause shall be considered as a whole. Therefore in my submission, Mr. Chairman, the amendment is out of order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I may ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question. My question relates to the first part of his argument, namely about upsetting the balance of ways and means. Is it not a fact that if the Committee were to vote against clause 4 as a whole, thereby defeating it, we would be upsetting the balance of ways and means? So what difference is there between upsetting the Government's balance of ways and means by defeating the whole measure and defeating a portion of the measure?

Mr. Orlikow: He wants to get off the hook of voting. That is the real point. It is simple.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, when the amendment was moved at the resolution stage we considered every aspect of this particular clause and in essence considered the identical question being posed today. I suggest that the same principle applies as far as the intent of this amendment is concerned.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, does the Parliamentary Secretary not recognize that at the resolution stage we had a 19-paragraph resolution with all the income tax changes in it, whereas all we have now is one clause dealing only with taxation in respect of advertising in newspapers and periodicals.

Mr. More: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, could we have the business conducted by the Chair and through the Chair, rather than this private dialogue that is going on now?

Mr. Knowles: I object to that, Mr. Chairman. I was addressing the Chair and asking through you, Sir, a question of the Parliamentary Secretary.

The Chairman: This is the way the Chair understands the situation. An objection to the amendment was made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, and the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre tried to find a way out of the rather strong argument posed by the Parliamentary Secretary. If there are no other contributions to the point of order, the Chair believes that it is in a position now to make a ruling.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, if I may I would like to address a question to the Parliamentary Secretary. I was quite alarmed by what I understood to be a remark he made just a moment ago, and I would like to be sure that I understood him correctly. As I understood it he suggested that having dealt with this question at the resolution stage, we could not deal with it when we were in committee of the whole. My question is, is the Parliamentary Secretary trying to suggest that all there should be to the passing of legislation in the House is that we pass a resolution, and that is the end of it; that we abolish second reading, committee of the whole and third reading; that every time the Government puts a proposition before us and we talk about it in a vague way at the resolution stage, we then either accept it or reject it and that is the end of it?

• (1:20 p.m.)

Mr. Pennell: With all respect to the hon. Member, he is putting an extravagant interpretation upon my words. I merely said—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Pennell: —that it was my respectful submission that a certain principle—

The Chairman: Order, please. There is not very much added to the subject matter under discussion by the exchange which has taken place between the hon. Member for Comox-Alberni and the Parliamentary Secretary.

The argument advanced by the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre in support of the amendment proposed by the hon. Member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is very interesting, but I suggest that it does not go to the substance of what is now before us. As the hon. Member knows very well, when a similar amendment was previously introduced during the course of this debate it was ruled out of order by the Chair, as reported in Hansard for June 15 at page 2468. With great respect I suggest that the principles referred to by the Chair at that time apply equally at this time, and perhaps I might be allowed to quote myself at this stage. I said:

I believe it is well known to hon. Members that when an amendment proposes to set aside a measure designed to provide relief, that amendment in effect imposes a tax and should not be accepted by the Chair. Citation 265 (1) of Beauchesne is relevant:

"No Member other than a Minister of the Crown may introduce a Bill for the reduction of duties".

Actually this clause with which we are dealing at the moment provides an exemption from taxation. By adopting the amendment proposed by the hon. Member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands we would indirectly be restoring this tax. I suggest to the hon. Member that this is not allowed by the standing orders and rules of the House.

I would also refer hon. Members to citation 270 (2) of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition:

An amendment to enlarge a class of articles on which duties are levied cannot be moved to the Tariff Act by a private member

For these reasons, with great respect I must rule that the amendment proposed by the hon. Member cannot be accepted by the Chair.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): With the very greatest respect, Mr. Chairman, and under the provisions of Standing Order 59 (4), I beg leave to appeal your ruling to Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker resumed the Chair and put the question as follows:

According to the new standing orders to which the hon. Member has alluded, an appeal now lies from the Chairman to the Deputy Speaker.

While in Committee of the Whole the Committee considered clause 4 of Bill No. C-118, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act.

In amendment thereto the hon. Member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands proposed:

That clause 4 be amended by deleting sub-paragraph (2) from the proposed new section 12A and by renumbering the succeeding sub-paragraphs".

The Chair ruled that the amendment could not be accepted and referred particularly to the ruling of the Chair made on June 15, 1965 as follows:

"I believe it is well known to hon. Members that when an amendment proposes to set aside a measure designed to provide relief, that amendment in effect imposes a tax and should not be accepted by the Chair."

Citation 265 (1) of Beauchesne was referred to by the Chair at the time and it reads as follows:

"No Member other than a Minister of the Crown may introduce a Bill for the reduction of duties".

The decision of the Chair in Committee of the Whole was that clause 5 provides for an exemption from a tax, and that by adopting the amendment proposed by the hon. Member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands we would indirectly be restoring a tax. From this decision an appeal was made to the Speaker.

I am sure the hon. Member will understand that it is very difficult for the Deputy Speaker, under the present circumstances, to rule against the good judgment of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. Therefore he must confirm the decision reached by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Knowles: Does Your Honour not think you should take the matter under advisement?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has declared the ruling confirmed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, Solomon in all his glory never equalled that.

And the House having resumed in Committee:

On clause 4—Limitation re advertising expense.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, before clause 4 is put to the vote I should like to reply very briefly to two points which were made by the Leader of the Opposition in his remarks. I say very briefly, because this matter was fully debated at the appropriate time when the bill was before the House on second reading.

The first point made by the Leader of the Opposition was in regard to Time and Reader's Digest. I sometimes wonder whether the right hon. gentleman's memory is as good as it should be. He was complaining about the exemption and yet, as I recall it, it was his Government which was the first to propose an exemption for Time and Reader's Digest. It was not exactly the same as the present exemption; nevertheless the principle was the same. He is now taking another tack. He is almost standing on his head, if I might put it that way. If I were tempted to ask the kind of rhetorical questions in which he sometimes indulges, I might ask him why this change of tune.

The point I wanted to make seriously—because while the other is serious we have covered it before—is in reply to the statement issued by Mr. Richard Graybiel, the president of the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association. Perhaps I might be permitted to remark that Dick Graybiel is a very old personal friend of mine.

Mr. Orlikow: He was.

Mr. Gordon: We are the kind of friends who remain friends despite honest differences of opinion about this or any other matter. I can say that on my part and I am equally sure I can say it on the part of Mr. Graybiel. It is a friendship which I happen to value very much.

The Leader of the Opposition, to my surprise, said that the Prime Minister had deceived—and he used the word "deceived"—the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association. If I may say this to him, I think he makes these loose charges too frequently. If there is any excuse for him on this particular occasion it may be in the wording of the last sentence of Mr. Graybiel's widely distributed statement, particularly in the last clause in that sentence. The sentence reads:

We were only trying to do what we have been invited to do by the Prime Minister and only requesting the time for our study—

Then there is this phrase: "which we had been led to believe was available to us". I was surprised at that last phrase. I think there is always room for misunderstandings but I thought that the use of those words was perhaps going farther than was justified, and I may say I was present at the meeting. Mr. Graybiel is an honest and very fairminded man. During the course of the right hon. gentleman's remarks I received a telegram from Mr. Graybiel which I tried to get permission to read at the time and in the context of the other statement. The telegram is addressed to me and reads as follows:

Correction. Please alter last line of statement attached to my letter—

He sent the statement to me with a letter.

—to read: "which we believed was available to us".

He requested that these words be substituted for the words I have already mentioned, "which we had been led to believe was available to us". I suggest that there is every difference in the world between those two phrases. I acknowledge that there is always room for misunderstandings in a verbal conversation which takes place over the period of an hour. I regret very much the fact that the representatives of the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association went away with an impression which differed from mine. However, I hope I have cleared up this point or rather that Mr. Graybiel has cleared it up. There was certainly no deception. It was a misunderstanding which I am sure both sides will regret. Apart from that, Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is anything I need to add to what has been said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I want to point out immediately that when I read the Graybiel communication into the record I read it with the change in question. I said it has been altered. But, Mr. Chairman, there is no difference except in verbiage. The fact still remains that the whole body of the statement indicates that there was never a clearer revelation on the part of anyone as to the understanding which the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association had. The only deviation is in the last line and there is not very much difference between the two phrases. But I did use the altered form when I read the statement into the record.

When the hon. gentleman says that I am standing on my head I do not want to enter into competition with him. He has established a record in that regard that makes me quite concerned that he should ever suggest that I would be guilty of the same thing, because from the day he became Minister of Finance he has shown an aptitude in that connection that has never merited comparison in the House of Commons throughout the last 25 years. The only difference between those who do this as a profession is that they are actually on their heads while he is standing on his feet when he utters these views. But that is an aside.

The Minister says he cannot understand the change of front. There has been no change of front. We set up a Royal Commission for the purpose of looking into a cause of complaint, but not from the newspapers of Canada. The newspapers have never asked for this legislation. They do not want it. They are being forced into a strait-jacket by a Minister who along with the Government must have some reason for doing something which has not been requested by the newspapers across Canada with the exception of not more than one or two.

Why is this being done? The Minister says he explained it earlier. I have read every line of his explanation and at no time has he placed the reason before the House or the Canadian people. Strong representations were made by Maclean's magazine and by other Canadian magazines that it was impossible for them to compete against masquerading Canadian magazines whose material was prepared outside the country and then brought into Canada. They asked for some measure of protection against an invasion that could not be justified, an invasion of those from another country who, pretending to be Canadian, are actually placed in a category that denies fair competition.

The O'Leary Commission said that action would have to be taken if we were to maintain a Canadian quality, a Canadian identity. Evidence was heard for a lengthy period of time and finally the recommendation was made that advertising in these magazines should not be credited in determining income tax by Canadian advertisers. That went a long way. We looked into the matter, discussed it from every angle and concluded that the only way to preserve Canadian magazines against this unjust competition would be to make changes in the credit, and I think the credit arrived at was to be 50 per cent.

What is being done now is to place these magazines on an equal basis with all Canadian magazines. Do not tell me that Time magazine looks at the Canadian scene as a Canadian magazine. All you have to do is to take the international edition of Time distributed round the world and see how often Canada is mentioned. I doubt that there has been more than a passing reference to Canada in the last 10 issues of international Time. Canada receives less attention than does a republic with 300,000 population. Yet Time is able to bring in all this material against which Canadian magazines cannot compete. In order to preserve the Canadian identity we took this course to protect Canadian magazines in Canada against an impossible situation.

But what is being done now? Time and Reader's Digest are being placed in the top category. They are being given honorary Canadian citizenship. They are being placed above all other magazines that may come into Canada. In addition, the newspapers of Canada are to be under the domination of a law that says you shall not dispose of your interest in any Canadian newspaper. Nobody asked for it. Why is it being done?

I conclude my remarks by saying that in a period of two years and two months we have had more fancy, socialistic tinkering going on on the part of the Government than any socialist government could ever have thought of, had it been in office.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I rise to say a few words on this matter, partly because of the ruling you made with regard to the amendment proposed by the hon. Member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. I do not want to be critical of the Chair because we on this side have found you, Mr. Chairman, to be eminently fair, and I am sure the ruling you made was made on the basis of your consideration of the rules as you understand them. But I want to say that I think your ruling was a very happy one for Members on the other side. Members like the hon. Member for York-Scarborough, the hon. Member for Carleton and the hon. Member for Northumberland like to consider themselves as being Liberals with a small "l". They will be very happy with the fact there is no need for them to put themselves on record in support of this fantastic and completely irresponsible recommendation made by the Minister of Finance. They are happy about that because nobody will be able to point to Hansard and say that on such and such a date these Members voted for making Time and Reader's Digest honourary Canadian citizens. Your ruling, therefore, was a very fortunate one for them.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

• (1:40 p.m.)

Some of us knew the Minister of Finance before he came to this House. It seems to me that when he was the president of the Canadian Institute for International Affairs and when he wrote that famous book which he probably wishes now he had never written, "Troubled Canada", when he expressed concern about keeping Canada for Canadians, while we may not have agreed with everything he said, he at least showed some concern with some of the major problems, and attempted to come up with some answers. What we have today, Mr. Chairman, I submit is a complete capitulation on the part of the Minister of Finance to the political needs and desires of the Liberal Party. How could anyone who has read the O'Leary Commission report possibly introduce this type of legislation to establish laws whereby Canadian publications will be owned and controlled by Canadians when, in fact, Time and Reader's Digest have taken over a major portion of the magazine industry in Canada? What the Minister is doing is locking the barn door after the horse has been stolen.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this may be fine for the Liberal Party which is great on words but so lacking in action, but it certainly is not going to satisfy anybody else. The Minister gets angry when we discuss this and I suppose he gets angry because he knows he is in such a weak position. The leader of this party tells a story about the sexton of the church who was cleaning up the church when he found some notes left by the minister on the lectern. He saw that in the margin there was a notation: Raise your voice at this point because the argument is weak. This is exactly what the Minister is doing. He has no defence of his action on behalf of Time and Reader's Digest, so he thinks if he ignores the situation it will go away, that people will forget it. Perhaps the people will forget it, but I suggest the Minister will remember it for a long time because he knows what he is doing is wrong and indefensible.

I want to say that I never saw a person more uncomfortable than the Minister was the other night when the hon. Member for Port Arthur was analysing the Minister's position. The Minister knew in his heart that everything the hon. Member for Port Arthur was saying was true and correct.

An hon. Member: Why did you not vote for him?

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. Member asks why we did not vote with him. The Government made sure we could not vote with him—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Orlikow: Hon. Members can say, "Oh, oh" all they wish. I have lots of time. I do not want to go home today or Monday. If hon. Members like the hon. Member for York-Scarborough, who say, "Oh, oh," want to get up and defend Time and Reader's Digest why do they not do so? They sit in the back row and yell, "Oh, oh". I can take all their "Oh, oh's"; I have lots of time. They just do not have the courage to put on the record how they feel about it. We have been sitting here patiently throughout this debate waiting for some of these so-called small "l" Liberals. They like to say to the people in the cities, do not vote for the N.D.P. because, after all, we are going to do all the things they are talking about. Where are these people? Why do they not get up and explain their position on this situation?

Mr. Moreau: Will the hon. Member permit a question?

Mr. Orlikow: I would be glad to permit a question because every time the hon. Member asks a question he puts his foot in it.

Mr. Moreau: I was just wondering if the hon. Member who was asking, where are they, could answer this question: Where is the tiger from Port Arthur?

Mr. Orlikow: The record of the hon. Member for Port Arthur for attendance is as good as 95 per cent of the hon. Members on the other side.

The Chairman: Order; may I remind hon. Members that we are on clause 4, I believe, of Bill No. C-118.

Mr. Orlikow: I do not mind being reminded that we are on clause 4, Mr. Chairman. I wish that when Members like the hon. Member for York-Scarborough get up and ask these inane, useless questions, you would remind them that we are on clause 4. Then, I would not have to try to answer his stupid questions.

Let us just put on the record what the O'Leary Commission said about Time and Reader's Digest. I must admit that I am not in this chamber all the time, but I have looked through Hansard very carefully to see if the Minister ever tried to give an explanation of what the situation is. The O'Leary Commission points out that between the years 1950 and 1959, the gross advertising revenue of Reader's Digest went up from $1.5 million to $4.5 million, an increase of 194.1 per cent. The advertising revenue of Time magazine went up from just over a million dollars to over $3.5 million, an increase of 207.7 per cent. The gross advertising income of Canadian magazines went up just 57 per cent in this period.

An hon. Member: Where is your spirit of competition?

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. Member asks, where is my spirit of competition? It is not competition when a magazine like Maclean's has to pay for the writing and editing of every word which appears in the magazine, while Time magazine is only paying for the editing of four pages of that magazine. I am glad I am not a Liberal because if there ever was a failure to appreciate support which has been given, it is found in the Liberal Party. If there ever was a magazine which was more strongly Liberal than Maclean's, I do not know of it. I like Blair Fraser, but if Maclean's magazine pays him, then they are foolish because the Liberal Federation ought to pay him his whole salary. I have never seen him write anything critical of the Liberal Party.

However, that does not enter into this matter, the policy of the magazine. What concerns us as backbenchers is to find out how a magazine like Time can get to the Minister of Finance. If they cannot, then, as they could not last year, they get to the Prime Minister. Some day, we may find out how this is done.

Let us go to what the O'Leary Commission says about the so-called Canadian editions. I do not know whether or not the Minister has read this, but he can find it on page 39 of the report, and I quote:

> Two "Canadian" editions, Time and Reader's Digest have been getting over 40 per cent of the total spent on magazines in Canada...
> In the case of Time, this consists of its taking the bulk of the Time (U.S.) editorial content and prefacing it with four pages on Canadian affairs.

I should like to interject that one might at least expect that for the privilege of making the millions they do in Canada they would run those four pages, biased as they generally are and pro Liberal as they usually are, in their United States edition so their United States readers might know something about Canada. But that would cost them a little money, so they do not.

• (1:50 p.m.)

Mr. Nesbitt: They would not learn much, reading Time.

Mr. Orlikow: Whether they would learn something or not, I do not know; but the Minister of Finance might learn something, although that is expecting a good deal.

> Reader's Digest draws exclusively from the central editorial pool created by the United States edition, but employs an editorial staff in Canada to provide boxes and footnotes, explaining the Canadian aspects of the editorial material obtained from this central pool.
> The unfairness of this competition may be measured in two ways:
>
> The actual cost of obtaining and preparing the editorial material made available to these 'Canadian' editions is far beyond what they or Canadian magazines could possibly afford—

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, hon. Members can call carried all they want, but this is the first time I have spoken on this subject, and I do not think I have to apologize.

Some hon. Members: Read on.

Mr. Orlikow: I will read exactly as much what will suit me.

> —bearing in mind the size of the Canadian magazine-reading population. An estimate is that Time of Canada pays its parent company less than 2 per cent of the actual cost of the editorial material thus coming to it; while Reader's Digest's total editorial costs, including the editing carried on in Canada, is a fraction of the total amount spent by the parent organization in obtaining and preparing it. Clearly, these publications have the advantage of being able to use high-cost editorials to obtain large circulations.

The argument is clear and so unanswerable that the Minister of Finance and the trained seals behind him, when they spoke, ignored the recommendations in the O'Leary Commission Report. One can only conclude from reading the debate and looking at the legislation that this measure is deliberately designed to let those two publications remain in Canada, and to be classified as Canadian which, I suggest, is completely unprincipled and dishonest.

Some days ago the hon. Member for Burnaby-Richmond asked whether these so-called Canadian organizations are prohibited from buying and operating radio and T.V. stations, and the Minister answered that they are. But for him to say they are is not good enough. We would like to know how they are prohibited from owning radio and T.V. stations. What clause in the legislation prohibits them?

Suppose Mr. Luce or the owners of Reader's Digest decided they would like to buy into a Canadian daily newspaper, what part of this legislation will prohibit them from doing that? Like so much other legislation proclaimed by the Liberal Party before attaining office as designed to help to meet the needs of the Canadian people this, when it is analysed, demonstrates it will do little if anything.

Speaking of the newspapers, I suppose no government has had such unanimous opposition to any proposal at any time as this Government has had with respect to its proposal regarding the newspapers. I usually find myself disagreeing with the editorial positions of Canadian newspapers, and there is not a newspaper which I disagree with as often as the Winnipeg Free Press, in my own city. However, the Minister should have agreed to stand this part of the measure until the newspapers had an opportunity to make proposals to him for alternative means of ensuring that Canadian newspapers will not be owned by foreign interests.

I agree with the principle that Canadian newspapers should not have foreign owners. We have not had difficulty in that respect in Canada as yet, but anyone who has read the history of Europe will remember that before World War II many French newspapers were owned or subsidized by foreign groups from Nazi Germany, and they were very, to say the least, chary of being critical of Hitler.

I have always felt that in Canada the communications industry, comprising radio, T.V., magazines and newspapers, should be operated by Canadian owners. Therefore I am not too critical of that part of the Minister's proposal; but I say, as I said when I began, there can be no justification or excuse for what the Minister proposes to do with regard to Reader's Digest and Time, except that it will be to the political advantage of the Liberal Party. If that is going too far, if that is thought unfair—

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Orlikow: I don't have to explain it. One has only to read Time magazine. If there is any other explanation, then the Minister owes it to the House and the people of Canada to tell us what it is. Otherwise I contend the decision to classify Time and Reader's Digest as Canadian organizations is immoral and completely unjust.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 5 agreed to.

On clause 6—Niece or Nephew.

Mr. Monteith: Apparently the requirement is that the niece or nephew must be resident in Canada. What would happen in the case of a person working on an assistance program outside Canada, who is to be treated in the same category as an ambassador, if he has a niece or nephew covered by this clause? Must they reside in Canada?

Mr. Pennell: The hon. Member for Perth has posed an interesting and unusual problem. I understand his question concerns a person who goes outside Canada and wants to maintain a niece or nephew outside Canada at the same time. It is my understanding that this clause does not provide relief in the circumstances cited.

Mr. Monteith: A niece or nephew is supposed to be in the same category as a dependant child, but in this instance that is not going to be so. Is this not right?

• (2:00 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: I am wondering whether we could not clarify this by reference to clause 6(2) where the wording may be more felicitous. Paragraph (da) says the aunt or uncle of the taxpayer must be resident in Canada. That is the test. Nothing is said about the taxpayer's residence, and this is the point the hon. Member for Perth has in mind. The residence in the case of the nephew or niece need not be that of the taxpayer. The person who is posted abroad is deemed to be a resident of Canada. I think the true intent of the clause is to refer to the niece or nephew rather than to the taxpayer or his spouse, although the language is not as felicitous as that used in paragraph (da)— —was the aunt or uncle of the taxpayer or his spouse and was

(i) resident in Canada, and

(ii) dependant upon the taxpayer for support by reason of mental or physical infirmity.

I would say that in the case of a nephew or niece the test should be that of the nephew or niece being resident in Canada rather than the taxpayer or his spouse. After all, as the hon. Member for Perth indicated, this is to place a nephew or a niece in the same category to all intents and purposes as a dependant child, and surely it is the dependant child who must be resident in Canada, though in the case of ambassadors and so forth the children may be with them and deemed to be fully resident. In this case I suggest the test should be the residence of the nephew or niece as clearly indicated in respect to the aunt or uncle.

Mr. Pennell: I believe my answer to the question asked by the hon. Member for Perth carried that inference. I said I doubted whether a nephew or niece outside Canada could claim. It was my understanding that the hon. Member for Perth was suggesting that the intent of the legislation was to put nephews and nieces in the same category as dependant children. I think it does, except for this one distinction, the distinction raised by the hon. Member in his question.

Mr. Monteith: Does not the Parliamentary Secretary feel that this distinction is one which should be removed?

Mr. Pennell: I would draw the hon. Member's attention to section 139 of the Act where provision is made for persons who have custody and control in law and in fact of persons entirely dependant on them for support. Let us apply this provision to the present situation. Where a nephew and a niece are living with an ambassador, outside this country, let us say, and the ambassador has custody and control over them in law and in fact, then they may be claimed as dependant children rather than in accordance with the provisions dealing with nephews or nieces. The situation would cause no difficulty and this, I suggest, would be the most likely situation to be encountered.

Mr. Monteith: As long as the Parliamentary Secretary can assure me that the exemption would be granted I will not pursue the matter further.

I should like to ask a further question with regard to clause 6 subclause (3). In subclause (3) (f) we find the following amendment:

> $500 in the case of a taxpayer who, before the end of the year, has attained the age of 65 years but has not attained the age of 70 years, if no pension under the Old Age Security Act has been authorized to be paid to him for any month in the year.

I have not worked this out in as much detail as I should, but apparently this means that if a taxpayer has reached the age of 69 in November 1966, and has collected old age security benefit for December only, he cannot claim any part of the extra $500 exemption.

Mr. Pennell: The interpretation placed upon these words by the hon. Member for Perth is correct. May I add this, however. The taxpayer would have an option. He would not be bound to take the one month's benefit and he could then claim the $500. It would be open to him to weigh his tax return to see which would give him the greater advantage.

Mr. Monteith: That does not seem to be altogether fair to the taxpayer. It does not seem equitable to me that because a person has collected benefit for one month he should not be allowed some portion of the $500 exemption.

Mr. Pennell: I have nothing to add to what I have said. I have given the interpretation of the section. The hon. Member for Perth has expressed his opinion. It is one I respect, but the interpretation of the Act is the one I have placed upon it.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: I am returning to the subject matter of the provision dealing with allowances in respect of nephews and nieces and the reference of the Parliamentary Secretary to section 139 (8) which gives an extended meaning to the word "child". If the extended meaning of the word "child" has direct application to a nephew or a niece, then in the circumstances indicated by the hon. Member for Perth what was the purpose of bringing in the amendment to the Act? I can understand that custody and control may not be actually in the taxpayer, although the care and maintenance of the child, the nephew or niece, may be. The child may be at a school and the taxpayer is maintaining the child in that school. I do not think the solution put forward by the Parliamentary Secretary covers all cases. It may cover some of them, but I do not think it is as all-embracing as he might have suggested.

[Mr. Monteith.]

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, may I say that the hon. Member for Edmonton West had correctly stated the intent of the section. As I understand it, the amendment was brought in to cover those situations where a taxpayer is supporting a nephew or niece in Canada but does not have in fact or in law the care and control of that nephew or niece.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words about the part of this clause that takes away the $500 exemption in certain instances for persons between the ages of 65 and 70. The hon. Member for Perth has already pointed out a particular unfairness, namely the case of one who turns 69 in November of next year and therefore gets only one month of the pension and loses the $500 exemption; but I should like to press the point that there is an even more fundamental unfairness in this arrangement. I do so by asking the Minister to anticipate the time when old age security will be generally available at age 65. When that time comes there will be thousands of Canadians drawing old age security—indeed, all Canadians who have the residence qualification and are 65 years of age or over. Those between 65 and 70, if they are single, will be entitled to only $1,000 income tax exemption, whereas those who are 70 and over will be entitled to $1,500 income tax exemption.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I think this is unfair and that the Minister, instead of moving in the direction of taking away this extra $500 exemption from some people, should have moved in the direction of extending it across the board. The minute I say that, Mr. Chairman, there is brought to mind the two arguments that the Minister of Finance used with respect to the amendment that was moved some time ago by my colleague the hon. Member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. He moved, as the Minister will recall, that there be no tax payable by single persons earning less than $1,500 or by married persons earning less than $3,000. At first there was a misinterpretation of that amendment by the Parliamentary Secretary, who thought this was raising the $500 exemption generally and that it would produce huge reductions in taxation in the upper income brackets. When we straightened the Government out on that point, the Minister of Finance then saw the difficulty of people earning just over $1,500 as compared with people earning just under $1,500.

Surely there is another way to do it. Surely one does not solve this problem only by raising the exemption levels to $1,500 and $3,000 for everybody, giving the greatest bonanza to the Gordon Sinclairs and those people who are propagandizing this idea in its simplest form. Surely you do not have just to run into a notch problem. Surely it is possible to start a new schedule of rates, to start at $1,500 for a single person and $3,000 for a married person and change the rates so that those in the lower and middle income brackets save a little, or at least do not pay any more income tax, but those in the upper income brackets do not get any reduction. Surely, Mr. Chairman, that is the kind of thing that ought to be done with the money the Minister has to apply to this purpose.

I realize that in effect I am speaking both to the question of withdrawing the $500 exemption for people between age 65 and 70 and the proposal that comes later to give a 10 per cent reduction in income tax itself. Surely the better way to have solved this problem would have been to raise the income tax exemption levels to figures like $1,500 and $3,000 and then to adjust all the rates right from the first $1,000 of taxable income up, so that the desired objective would be achieved. Surely the desired objective is to lessen the burden on those in the lower and middle income brackets without any necessity of lowering the burden on those in the upper income brackets. I mentioned our mutual friend Gordon Sinclair a minute ago because the Minister of Finance mentioned correspondence he has had with him. I had the experience of meeting this gentleman a few weeks ago on a television program and I found that he was particularly concerned, at least he seemed to be, in raising the income tax exemption level; but when I suggested that along with that there should be an adjustment of rates so that wealthy people—and I thought Mr. Sinclair might be one of them—would not get a terrific advantage at the top, I found that the interest was not quite as keen.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, there are not just one or two ways to do this. There are various ways. The income tax people over the years have been able to change the schedules, to change the rates, to change the progression. Surely the time has come to recognize that $1,000 and $2,000 are not sufficient exemption levels in the light of today's cost of living and today's standard of living. Surely common sense calls for higher exemption levels. We have been saying for a long time that the exemptions should be set at $1,500 and $3,000. If we do not win this point soon, we are going to have to start asking for higher levels, perhaps $2,000 and $4,000. But surely we do not balk at this and do nothing about it because it creates problems at either end of the scale. The job, surely, is to decide what is a proper exemption level and then to adjust the percentage rates so that you collect a fair amount of tax, but not too much, from those in the lower and middle income brackets and collect what they can afford to pay from those in the upper income brackets.

I am glad the Minister is back in the chamber. When I was getting to my feet I was going to say that the Minister had the right to go out and have his lunch and I would have to keep talking until he got back; but he has had his lunch and is back in the chamber. I would like to hear what his thinking is on this question and what led him to take away this $500 exemption from people between age 65 and 70, instead of extending it across the board. Also, could he tell us now that the Government will consider, if not this year then certainly next year, doing this in a better way by raising the income tax exemption levels and changing the rates accordingly.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, the Minister intends no discourtesy to the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre and pays a courtesy to me by suggesting that, inasmuch as I heard the commencement of the arguments on this particular section, perhaps I could reply to it, particularly in view of the fact that the reply is a broad one. The hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out that we will soon reach the stage when all those aged 65 will be drawing old age security. We hope that before this eventuality the Carter Commission will have reported. The Minister stated in the House that he will review the whole taxation structure when that report is handed down. That is the short answer I tender to the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: The only difficulty with that answer is that it is the same kind of answer I have been getting during all the years I have been in the House. We are always waiting for a review. It is not always the Carter Commission, but it is one Commission after another. For the good of the country, the Government could act on a few of these reports from Commissions which are sitting around now. It seems to me that if the Minister had money which he felt he could afford on tax reductions this year, he should have used it more intelligently than he has.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Chairman, I have a very short question for the Minister of Finance. It relates to part (2) of clause 6 under which it is possible to claim $550 for contributions—

... during the taxation year for the support of a person who, during the year, was the aunt or uncle of the taxpayer or his spouse—

I would ask the minister to state whether a taxpayer will be entitled to claim for the support of one person or also for that person's spouse, as may often be the case. Will I be entitled to claim for the support of my spouse's mother and father, or of my father and mother, or will I be able to claim for one person only?

[English]

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, if I caught the translation correctly, the answer is that a taxpayer would be able to claim for an aunt and an uncle if they were brought within the provisions of the clause.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 7.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, clause 7 is a welcome clause. I suppose the Minister is thinking that the Member for Winnipeg North Centre will say it does not go far enough, and the Minister is right. What clause 7 does is to remove trade union dues, as well as dues to professional bodies, and so on, from the $100 general exemption that is available to everybody without the necessity of producing receipts. This is a good idea and, in the case of many trade unionists, it will make real the right to deduct their trade union dues. I am referring to those who in the past did not have sufficient receipts for charitable donations, and others, to get over the $100. As I say, it is good to have trade union dues removed and put on their own feet so far as deductibility is concerned.

However, Mr. Chairman, I regret that the Minister has not gone further with regard to trade union dues. I must remind him that on previous occasions when I raised the question which is now in my mind he has asked me each time to wait until the next year. That was his request during the debate on his first budget, and he repeated it during the debate on his second budget; and I suppose I will now be told to wait for the report of the Carter Commission.

[Mr. Knowles.]

I have in mind that trade union dues and dues to professional organizations and others are granted deductibility by section 11 (10) of the Income Tax Act. But then certain qualifications are applied in subsection (12). Those qualifications among other things provide that the only portion of trade union dues which may be granted deductibility is that portion that is directly related to the ordinary operating expenses of the association or trade union to which they were paid. The fact is that many of these bodies, both trade unions and others, have building funds and other causes into which they put money, and the members of these unions or associations are required to pay the total dues that they are assessed in order to maintain their membership in these organizations. Members have the right to say whether or not these assessments will be made, but they are part of the dues that are necessary to maintain the status or position necessary for their employment.

It has been my feeling right from 1948, I believe it was, when this provision was first introduced, that the Government has been too narrow as to what it allows as trade union dues. I am not trying to suggest something that may be in some people's minds here: I am not trying to suggest that this is a back door for getting in deductibility for political contributions. I think that contributions to political parties ought to be allowed deductibility, but I think that that ought to be a general provision. I am not trying just to slip it into the trade union dues portion. But there are other items which are disallowed, when trade union dues are submitted for deductibility.

As I say, the Minister of Finance both two years ago and last year listened with interest to my plea that something be done about this, and on both occasions he asked me to possess my soul in patience. No, I am wrong—it was his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare who asked me to do that; the Minister just asked me to wait until next year. The next year has now arrived and nothing has been done about it. I should like to ask the Minister now what is his answer.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre referred at the end of his remarks to the portion of any dues that might be for political purposes, and he suggested that he was not thinking of this primarily. Whether he was thinking of it primarily or was not, it is a factor. If the principle of allowing deductions is sound, then presumably it applies to the deductions for the amount of contributions which go to the purposes which are related to the work and working conditions of the people concerned. We are on delicate ground when we talk about the portion, or any portion, that may go for other purposes, because there is this question of the political contributions.

As my hon. friend knows there is a committee, upon which a former member of his party is a very distinguished representative, which is going into this whole question of political contributions, and when they report it could be that they will come up with the suggestion that any contributions for political parties would be deductible for tax purposes. But I fancy that when that is done it will apply to all political parties and not to any particular party. I do not even know, however, whether they are going to recommend this. In the meantime I did suggest last year and the year before that my hon. friend wait. He has now waited and has found out that we have produced something. However, I do not think I would be prepared to recommend to this Committee that we go further than we have at this time.

Mr. Knowles: First of all, Mr. Chairman, may I make it clear—I thought I had before but apparently I had not—that I was not raising this question in order to bring up the matter of political contributions. I mentioned it so that the Government would not say that that was what I was trying to do. But I realize it is there in the picture. As a matter of fact, one particular union that has been in touch with me a number of times about this matter is a union that does not make any contribution to any political party, not even to mine, so that particular union is not thinking of that at all. It is thinking of special funds that are set up for building purposes, strike purposes and various other purposes apart from the so-called office, salary and other expenses. Let me make it very clear that I am quite content that any contributions to political parties should be separated until that question is settled on the broad, general basis, but I do feel that all other expenses that members of unions and professional bodies have to meet in order to maintain their membership should be allowed, and not just a portion as is now the case.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, one must recognize certain limitations. If members of certain professional bodies have to make a contribution by way of special levy to an insurance fund I do not know that this should be necessarily covered under income tax exemptions. In the same way one can recognize that these various slices of union dues may go toward purposes which really have nothing to do with the operational expenses involved in the gaining of income by the members of the union. Sometimes questions have been raised by constituents of mine with regard to why there should not be a deduction of that portion of their union dues which is remitted to places outside the country for the payment of the salaries of corporate officers of some international union. Incidentally, these salaries are far in excess of those of officials in Canada holding public office, and there have also been some rather odd disclosures with regard to the conduct of some of these people. Therefore the situation is not quite so clearcut.

Personally I feel that where, for instance, there has been a deficiency in some insurance fund of a law society because of defalcation on the part of some member of the profession and a special levy has been assessed, such payments should not necessarily be deductible for income tax purposes, and I take the same position with regard to a special levy on the part of a union for the purpose of making a contribution to the strike fund of another union. These are not operating expenses and therefore I think there are definite limitations in this regard.

Mr. Knowles: Was that answer given on behalf of the Minister?

Mr. Lambert: No, that is my opinion.

Mr. Gordon: No, it was not. I think Members on this side of the House, as my hon. friend knows, are very sympathetic to the legitimate aspirations of all trade unions and take their views very seriously.

Mr. Knowles: Sympathy is wonderful.

Mr. Gordon: My friend is an ex-official of a trade union organization. Therefore we naturally take his views very seriously, though perhaps not as sympathetically in his present position as we did in his previous one. But I think this measure has gone a long way. I think it has been very well received and I should like to see how it works out in practice.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 8 agreed to.

On clause 9—Tax deduction.

Mr. Monteith: I should like to ask one question. Does the Minister wish to make a statement?

Mr. Gordon: I did wish to make a brief statement on clause 9. The reduction in personal income tax provided by clause 9 is in a form that will not reduce the base on which the provinces impose their taxes or affect their revenues in any way. There is, however, one technical point which I should mention for the benefit of the few individuals with income from outside Canada who may be affected.

All the provinces that have collection agreements, with the exception of British Columbia, have a provision in their Income Tax Acts to allow a credit against their tax for the appropriate portion of foreign tax imposed on income received from outside Canada. This provision of the provincial acts will have to be amended to change the present reference to "Section 33 of the Federal Act" to have it refer to "Subsection 1 of section 33 of the Federal Act."

This change is necessary in order that the provincial credit for foreign taxes will not exceed what was intended. The provinces will be asked to amend their Income Tax Acts at the earliest convenient time to make this slight change in wording with effect for 1965 and subsequent taxation years.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 10—Payments out of pension fund, deferred profit sharing plan or as retiring allowance.

Mr. Lambert: There is one point I am concerned about with regard to clause 10, subclause 1, whether in attempting to close one door other doors are not actually being opened. I am wondering whether the provision for the transferring of a lump sum into a pension plan or deferred profit sharing plan or registered retirement savings plan will not actually open up another method of setting up a deferred compensation plan for employees. This is something I think the Minister may have to look at in the operations this year because in my view there is an area in which there is uncertainty in this regard. It is a very complicated and technical point. I think the Minister will see the implications.

Mr. Gordon: I thank my hon. friend for this suggestion and we will look into it very carefully. I am sure he apppreciates that within the last year or two section 36 was, I think it is fair to say, being abused or was at least being used very widely throughout the country to provide a means for individuals to get relatively large sums of money out of companies at relatively low rates of tax. The practice really became widespread in 1964 and we thought that the loophole should be closed. I am grateful to my hon. friend for this point and we will look into it.

Mr. Lambert: I want it clearly understood that in saying this I am not trying to penalize anyone. I simply feel that all taxpayers should be treated in much the same way.

Mr. Gordon: Right.

Mr. Lambert: Under certain circumstances peculiar to a corporate body or a type of employment there can be this sort of nice, easy way out for additional low taxed remuneration which is really a deferred salary.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 11 agreed to.

On clause 12—Payment authorized.

Mr. Monteith: This is a new clause which has to do with tax transfer payments. With regard to section 3 of the new subsection 47A I am wondering what the application is of the words used, namely:

> Where, pursuant to an agreement entered into under subsection 1, an amount has been transferred by the Minister to the government of a province with respect to an individual, the amount shall, for all purposes of this act, be deemed to have been received by the individual at the time the amount was transferred.

I do not understand the application of that provision.

Mr. Gordon: It really means that transferring it, say, from the federal Government to a province, which is then responsible for transferring it to the individual, has the same effect as if the transfer was made directly to the individual.

Clause agreed to.

• (2:40 p.m.)

On clause 13.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I might enter a caveat at this point. There is a chorus of "Carried" by people who have no bill before them and who have no interest in the bill. They are creating some difficulty for the Chair, and for Members who have annotated sections of the new Act and are desirous of raising questions. We are getting carried through the bill rather at a gallop. If those people who are interested in the measure are the ones who call "Carried" then perhaps we will get along a little better.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 14 to 19 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 20.

Mr. Lambert: This clause takes into account the change in respect of corporations who have some interest in the business of oil, gas and mining. I do not know whether there has been a practice that has been found to be improper by exploratory and development syndicates and their relationship between parent companies with regard to oil and gas rights, but apparently there is a suggested loophole in the operation of the Act since the amendments back in 1962 or 1963. It seems to me that it is under these amendments that the Minister proposes to close the loophole. I should like to have clearly enunciated by the Minister the type of loophole he is trying to close and why the present provision must come into effect.

Mr. Gordon: Well, the loophole applies in a case where an oil or gas right can be acquired by a joint exploration corporation, but its cost can be divided by its parent corporations. A joint exploration corporation is a special kind of company defined in section 83 (a), (d) and (e), which was passed in 1962. It is a company whose principal business is the production or marketing of petroleum products or natural gas, or exploring or drilling for petroleum or natural gas, or mining or exploring for minerals. Such a company must not have more than ten shareholders and those may be companies that are in the oil, gas or mining business. These shareholder companies provide the joint exploration company with the funds to carry out the exploration. The joint exploration company may then divide these exploration expenses amongst its shareholder companies. The joint exploration company renounces its right to deduct the exploration expenses it has incurred and each of its shareholder companies acquires the right to deduct its share of these expenses.

It has become apparent that the joint exploration rules can be used as a loophole if an oil company wishes to dispose of its oil and gas properties and not bring the proceeds into income as required by section 83(a). The method is that a subsidiary is set up to qualify as a joint exploration corporation, even if the parent is the sole shareholder. The properties or rights are sold to the joint exploration corporation, and the cost which by definition is an exploration expense, is then renounced back to the parent for such amount to be included in its income. It seems that the joint exploration corporation can then be sold by the parent, if a buyer can be found who is not interested in obtaining a deduction for the cost of the property it has acquired.

The same general procedure can be used to divide corporations and maximize the 33⅓ per cent depletion allowance. Production properties can be transferred to the subsidiary and the net operating profits would enjoy full depletion without being reduced by the parent company's exploration expenses, including the cost of the properties transferred.

Mr. Lambert: There is one question that comes to mind as a result of the Minister's explanation. How is it that a joint exploration subsidiary or company is allowed to have only one corporate shareholder? I believe this is where the mistake arises. There is no such thing as a joint exploratory corporation if there is only one shareholder. The definition, by itself, immediately knocks it out.

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps my hon. friend is right, Mr. Chairman, but this is permitted under the law.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 21 to 24 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 25—Pension communication authorized.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): The hon. Member for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. Lambert: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I must again protest against flipping through the sections. We have made notes on this complicated bill and the cries of "Carried, carried", are coming from people who are not participating in the debate. I say the same thing to you, Mr. Chairman, as I said to your predecessor a few moments ago, that we are not out to set a time record.

Mr. Caron: Any Member has the right to say "Carried" as well as the hon. Member for Edmonton West.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): I presumed that hon. Members had studied this bill before, and I was under the impression that when clauses upon which they wish to make remarks came forward they would draw this to the attention of the Chair.

Mr. Monteith: I think the only point at issue is that we seem to be racing through the bill rapidly. It is a complicated bill, and if the pace were slowed down a bit everybody would be satisfied.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): The Chairman has taken note and the pace will be slowed down.

Mr. More: What section are we dealing with now?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Clause 25.

Mr. More: I should like to refer to clause 23, for a moment, if the Committee has no objection.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Does the Committee agree to revert to clause 23?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. More: I may be ruled out of order, but I do not see any other place I can raise this matter with the Minister. If I am out of order, the Chair will guide me.

• (2:50 p.m.)

I want to refer to what appears to be discriminatory double taxation in regard to heavy machinery. This clause provides for appeals. Does it provide an avenue whereby people can make an appeal regarding denial for tax exemption?

The case I have in mind had to do with the construction of the South Saskatchewan dam. The contract was obtained by a company in Rexdale, Ontario. They purchased their machinery in Ontario, moved it out to the dam, and under the terms of the deal the dealership in Saskatchewan was required to provide service and parts for the machinery if it broke down. I understand that the dealership in Ontario, under licence had his parts exempted and as it turned out the Saskatchewan dealership the Tobin Tractor Company, had to supply some $6,000 worth of repairs. The machines were identified as being tax free because of the work they were on, and the broken parts were identified and were shown to the taxation people, but because the company were termed unlicensed they were denied any consideration. This seems to be discriminatory.

Mr. Gordon: Would my hon. friend write to me about this matter. I have a feeling it is not concerned with any clause in the bill but relates to tariffs, excise taxes or sales taxes.

[The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif).]

Mr. More: It may affect income tax because the firm will not get the deduction and so will pay a higher income tax. That is the reason why I raised it on this clause, but I will write to the Minister.

Mr. Barnett: Returning to the discussion of clause 25, the explanatory note simply says this authorizes the Minister of National Health and Welfare to give information to the Minister of National Revenue about the amount of old age security pensions paid to taxpayers, but it does not say why this change is being made or what is the reason for this exemption from section 9(1) of the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Gordon: The Department of National Revenue will need this information, and unless this authority is granted the Minister of National Health and Welfare would be precluded from supplying it.

Mr. Barnett: The Minister has not said why the Minister of National Revenue needs it.

Mr. Gordon: The whole of the income of an individual is taxable, including the amount of his old age security pension. In a relatively short while my hon. friend and I can look forward to receiving old age security pensions and, if we are still Members of the House, or still earning a living in some way or another, we will have to pay tax on our total incomes, including the amounts we receive as old age security pension. I do not suggest my hon. friend will reach that stage as soon as I, but it will happen to everybody eventually.

In order to administer the Income Tax Act properly and fairly the Minister of National Revenue seeks information from various sources, and one of the sources he needs is the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Barnett: Old age security pensions are not something which just came into effect during the current fiscal year. What is the reason for the change at this time?

Mr. Gordon: To tidy up the situation.

Mr. Lambert: The Minister indicated the reason why this was being done; but to repeat what I have said over the years, both on that side of the Chamber and on this side, all too often we find innocuous looking provisions being brought forward to amend taxation statutes for administrative convenience, but which are in many ways a derogation of the rights of individuals. I shall have much more to say about this on clause 26, but under clause 25 there is again a cross reference between Ministers with respect to information which has always been held to be confidential.

One has to take the over-all picture to see just how far the machinery of government in its inter-play, one department with another, and its relationship with the individual citizen, is able to get matters so complicated that there is a complete breach of the relationship between the individual and the Ministry involved.

This is one of the areas on which the Committee on Delegated Legislation undoubtedly would have had something to say with respect to the transfer of information. I do not want to belabour the point, but I must register a caveat against this so-called administrative convenience because it is so easy to slip into the philosophy that the end justifies the means. So long as we have the Bill of Rights and have respect for the rights of the individual in our society, the end does not justify the means; but all too often the administrative means are both the ends and the means.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Monteith: I would ask permission to revert to clause 22 for a moment.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Is it agreed that the hon. Member may revert to clause 22?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Monteith: Under this clause I understand mortgage companies, real estate and trust companies are going to be allowed to double the charge against annual income and set this up as a reserve. What is the justification for this doubling of the charge against income in any one year?

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Gordon: There is no change in the reserve. There is just a change in the rate at which it can be accumulated. One of the reasons was that representations were made that under the old rate of accumulation they could never reach the contemplated ceiling.

Clause 25 agreed to.

On clause 26—Solicitor-client privilege.

Mr. Lambert: With regard to this clause, what the Minister says may be so, but I am not necessarily bound by some of the things the Bar Association may have said. I am not sure that all Members of the Bar Association would share this view. There is a definite privilege attaching to relations between a solicitor and his client and this provision is an intrusion upon that privilege. It may be used in another context, a modern context, as a launching pad from which further intrusions can be made upon the privilege of communications between a solicitor and his client.

We know that all communications between solicitors and their clients are privileged. However, this amendment to the Income Tax Act says that the accounting records of a solicitor shall not be deemed to come within the privilege covered. I should like to know why this amendment is being made. The burden is on the administration to explain to our satisfaction why it is making this derogation from a right which has been long established in law. If the Minister can advise us which bodies he has consulted on this question, and the stand they have taken, it may be satisfactory. But on the face of it I would certainly be opposed to this type of amendment which, again, is all part of the administrative convenience against which I must, as always, protest.

Mr. Gordon: The Act already contains in section 126 a number of provisions designed to protect solicitor-client privileges when tax investigations are carried out. These were introduced in 1956 at the suggestion of representatives of the Bar Association. I must agree with the hon. Member that though this was the source of the representations, the government of the day had to take responsibility for recommending them. In the past year it became evident as a result of a court decision that the definition of solicitor-client privilege was deficient. Representatives of the Bar Association produced this particular amended wording. There is nothing more I can usefully add.

Mr. Lambert: I think it would be a good idea to indicate for the record just what is the present provision contained in the Act. Section 126A(1)(e) now reads:

> "solicitor-client privilege" means the right, if any, that a person has in a superior court in the province where the matter arises to refuse to disclose an oral or documentary communication on the ground that the communication is one passing between him and his lawyer in professional confidence.

The following words are now added:

> except that for the purposes of this section an accounting record of a lawyer, including any supporting voucher or cheque, shall be deemed not to be such a communication.

I am wondering to what extent members of the Bar Association were acquainted with the proposed wording of this amendment. It may have been indicated in discussions with the Association that accounting records would not be deemed to be within the area of solicitor-client privilege. But what about exact wording? This is what the courts will have to interpret. I am afraid this exception will be used as a launching pad for further attacks upon solicitor and client privilege, which is something that exists, I believe, for the benefit of the individual and ought to be protected as far as possible.

Mr. Gordon: I would agree immediately with the general proposition put forward by the hon. gentleman. As he and other members of his profession will appreciate, I approached this particular amendment with considerable timidity as a mere member of the accounting profession.

When this matter first arose I discussed it with the departmental officials concerned and suggested I would be unhappy about proposing any amendment of this kind if it did not have the full support of the representatives of the legal profession. I am not sure when they were consulted; it was some months ago. But the matter was gone into carefully with representatives of the Bar Association and they suggested this particular wording as being wording which would be satisfactory to the Bar as a whole—and they were speaking as representatives—and which would cover the point they agreed should be covered.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 27—Idem.

Mr. Lambert: This again constitutes a change or extension of the means by which prosecutions for offences may be carried out. I would ask the Minister to explain why—

—an affidavit of an officer of the Department of National Revenue, sworn before a commissioner or other persons authorized to take affidavits, setting out that he has charge of the appropriate records and that an examination of the records shows that an amount required under this Act to be remitted to the Receiver General of Canada on account of tax for a year has not been received by the Receiver General of Canada, shall be received as prima facie evidence of the statements contained therein.

There is one point which, in passing, the Minister could clarify. I would suspect there are, within the Department of National Revenue itself, notaries or others capable of taking affidavits, so it would be a case of swearing oneself, almost—a case of an interested party obtaining an affidavit from one who is himself an interested party.

Again this is a change proposed by the Government and I think the burden rests with the Government to explain why this particular step should be taken. Once more this seems to be a move in the interest of administrative convenience.

Mr. Gordon: There are similar provisions in the Act already. There is section 136(5) dealing with the receipt of documents sent by mail, documents served in person, returns and so on.

Mr. Lambert: But this is a horse of a different colour. It goes much further.

Mr. Gordon: The purpose is merely to establish a procedure for proving that certain sums of money had not been received. I am not attaching major importance to this but I think it would assist the general administration.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: Why is it felt that this provision is necessary? Is there a requirement from the courts that there shall be evidence given that payment has not been received? Has the Department of National Revenue been hampered in any way in this regard? No case has been made for this particular change. What is the reason for making the change? Have there been important prosecutions lost because of the inability to show that moneys which should have been received were not received, and have some courts criticized the procedures of the Department? What is the purpose of introducing this amendment?

Mr. Gordon: The Department of National Revenue have had cases—I cannot give the details because I do not have them here—where they have had to start proceedings by stating that certain amounts were received, and this section is designed to make it easier for them to do this.

Mr. Lambert: Have they been hampered in the past by the practice they had to follow? Could they not give a personal statement, like anyone else?

Mr. Gordon: The representatives of the Department have informed me that they have been hampered in the past.

Mr. Lambert: I suppose somebody has had to appear in court. But I do not like it.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 28.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, is the Minister satisfied that the wording of this amendment is actually going to clear those persons who entered into contracts of employment under these international agreements prior to April 26, 1965; in other words, the date of the budget? I assume that they would not be taxed as Canadian residents. Will those persons who entered into a contract of service under these international assistance agreements prior to April 26 be covered by the present agreement, or does it apply only to post-April 26 agreements?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the operation of this clause will not apply until next year and it will not apply to the people who entered into contracts prior to the date of the budget.

Mr. Lambert: The Minister says "next year", Mr. Chairman, but the effective date was April 26, 1965, which was the date of the budget. If my memory serves me correctly, the original provision said "for the taxation year 1965 and subsequent years".

Mr. Gordon: Subclause (5) reads:

Subsections (1), (2) and (3) are applicable to the 1966 and subsequent taxation years—

Mr. Lambert: Yes, it is for the year 1966. But I am concerned about the person who entered into an employment contract prior to April 26, 1965. I take it from the Minister's answer that the date of the employment contract has no bearing.

Mr. Gordon: As I say, Mr. Chairman, this will only apply to individuals beginning next year, 1966. If there is somebody who is now under contract with the external aid office and who entered into the contract prior to the budget date and the contract carries on for a period, the external aid office will have to make a new deal.

Mr. Lambert: In other words, they are not exempt?

Mr. Gordon: Yes.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 29 and 30 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, before the title of this rather omnibus sort of bill carries I would like the Minister to tell me what consideration he is giving to an amendment to section 5 of the Income Tax Act. If I recall correctly, when I raised this matter last year the Minister said he would consider it in the interval, but it is not dealt with in the bill which we have before us.

Mr. Knowles: The same old story.

Mr. Barnett: I raised this matter in the discussion we had at the resolution stage of the bill and did not receive any reply from the Minister at that time. I know we had a rather broad, far-ranging discussion at that time, a good deal of it about newspapers and periodicals; but before the title of this bill carries I would like to know what the Minister is going to do in his next year's budget which he has not done in this year's budget with respect to the allowance of expenses for people whose incomes come from wages and salaries and where those expenses are necessarily incurred in the course of earning a living and are in the nature of what one might consider to be extraordinary. In other words, Mr. Chairman, I am not talking about those of us who may use a little gas driving from our home to the shop, or bus fare or something like that; I am talking about the kind of expenses to which, as the Minister well knows, some consideration is given in respect of a rather restricted group of work people in the country, namely those in the construction trades. I hope the Minister will be able to indicate that his consideration has been lengthy enough so that when his next budget comes before the House an amendment equivalent to that proposed in Bill No. C-42 which is on the order paper, standing in the name of the hon. Member for Skeena, will be included.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, as I said in reply to a similar question put by the hon. Member for Regina City—I will try and amplify it a little—in reviewing the various proposals that had been put to the Department prior to the last budget, we went through all the various suggestions and points that had been raised, certainly all the points that had been raised by hon. Members in last year's debate and all the points that had been put to the Department in the form of submissions subsequent to that debate. We singled out a number of items which we felt could be dealt with in the budget this year, and some of these have been dealt with in this bill. There are a number of others that I think all hon. Members would like to see dealt with in one way or another but which create more difficulties.

I am sure my hon. friend knows that once you start moving in any particular direction it is a good thing, before you stop, to see what other difficult borderline cases there are ahead which will have to be taken into account. We felt that we had gone as far as we could this year. As I said to the hon. Member for Regina City, we should not attempt to go any further until we had the benefit of the report of the Royal Commission on Taxation. I dare say that when the time comes to discuss the budget proposals next year my hon. friend will be able to remind me of these remarks. Also he or I will be able to quote the report of the Carter Commission on one side or other of the discussion. This is a commission which has had a very large and competent research staff, and I cannot believe that they will have overlooked a pretty thorough examination of a point that is as important as the one my hon. friend has just raised.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the Minister for the remarks he has just made, though I would have been happier had he gone a little further than he has. I would simply say that I hope that the implementation or discussion of the pros and cons of the Carter Royal Commission report will not be dragging around as long as has the discussion of the Gill Commission report in relation to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Gordon moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak very briefly on third reading, but also to move an amendment. The purpose of my moving an amendment at this time is to try to get a vote of the House on a specific issue. At least we should like to get as close to that specific issue as we possibly can.

As all hon. Members are aware, we have found it rather preposterous that this assembly of grown men and women has not found a way in which to register its opinion on the proposal of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) to exempt certain publications from a rule which he has brought in, as set out in clause 4 of the bill. There have already been two or three votes which have been interpreted in different ways by different media. It is understandable that there has been this mininterpretation, because when a vote is taken on a rather large package it is hard to say whether a favourable vote is either for or against the items in the package that one may not like.

A good deal of the debate on the budget resolutions and on the Income Tax Act amending bill has centred around the Minister's proposals regarding foreign-owned periodicals and the foreign ownership of newspapers. We in this party agree with the attempt of the Minister to prevent the foreign takeover of newspapers. Perhaps "prevent" is not the word because the legislation does not prevent it but merely discourages it. We also agree with the general rule that he has proposed regarding foreign-owned periodicals. The one point where we think that the Minister is being inconsistent is in the special exemptions that he makes for certain periodicals. Those exemptions are spelled out in subsection (2) of the proposed section 12A of the Income Tax Act, which is to be found in clause 4 of the bill now before us.

At the resolution stage we tried to get a vote on this specific point but were unable to do so. On second reading we had hoped we would get a chance to vote on this specific point but it was not possible. We tried again today when we were in committee of the whole on clause 4 of the bill but again it was not possible. But we think it is now possible, least if we state our case clearly, to have a vote of the House on this specific issue.

One right that is enshrined in the rules is the right on third reading to move that a bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole. In years gone by there used to be amendments that included rather specific instructions as to what should take place in the Committee of the Whole, but the tendency in recent years on the part of the Chair has been to find fault with amendments that included instructions. However, even in recent years, in fact in this Parliament, amendments that merely sought a reference back for the consideration of a particular clause have been allowed.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in order to have an amendment placed before the House which will be in order, we have drafted an amendment in precisely the terms of amendments which have been allowed in this Parliament. Accordingly, I move, seconded by the hon. Member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett):

That Bill No. C-118 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of reconsidering clause 4 thereof.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Knowles: I thought I caught the word "carried", and it sounded as though it came from the Government side of the House. The amendment, as we have placed it before the House, asks, as I say, for the reconsideration of clause 4 of the bill. If it were possible we would have asked for a reconsideration of only subclause (2) of clause 4 of the bill, but that might have produced a procedural argument, so we put it in these more general terms. What we are concerned about in asking for a reconsideration of clause 4 is that the House be given a chance to say that it wants subclause (2) of clause 4, namely the special exemptions for certain publications, removed from clause 4. That is what we will be voting for when we vote on this amendment, and we ask the House as a whole to support it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

• (3:30 p.m.)

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not disputing whether the amendment is in order, but I should like to point out at this time that the House spent three weeks trying to develop a set of rules which would speed up our procedure. All hon. Members participated in that discussion, and so far as I know we all took a great deal of satisfaction in the fact that grown men and women, to use my hon. friend's phrase, managed to come up with a set of rules which we thought would streamline and speed up the procedures of the House.

Mr. Barnett: We did not know the Minister of Finance was going to be so stubborn.

Mr. Gordon: My hon. friend is making some gratuitous remarks which I am sure he will regret on reflection. The House has now dealt with this matter on four separate occasions, the debate on the budget, the debate on the budget resolution dealing with the income tax bill, the debate on second reading of the bill and the debate on clause 4. I wonder how many times grown men and women need to discuss any particular subject in order to arrive at a decision?

There are differences of opinion about this clause. They have been aired by those who wished to air them. They have been repeated. Surely by this time we know how almost every Member of the House feels about this particular clause and its various subclauses. In those circumstances it seems to me that surely we should have arrived at the stage where we can agree to disagree and get on with the business of the country.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, having listened to these rather remarkable words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), I must say I am astounded that he should dare to suggest that it is improper on third reading even to question this action. The hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald) is saying something, Mr. Speaker, but he is one of those impatient juniors who feel that once he has spoken or tapped his desk a couple of times everything is in order and nothing further need be said. He feels that all the wisdom of the Almighty as given to man has now been exposed and that the question really needs no further discussion. This is an attitude, of course, that is more than ever exemplified in the opening paragraph of the editorial in the Windsor Star of last Wednesday which was referred to by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) this afternoon. I would commend the words of that editorial to the hon. Member for Rosedale, because I think they apply to him and the mentality he exhibits.

I am sorry to see that the Minister of Finance has been rather overcome by contagion with this disease. If the Minister had spent time in the Opposition, as he might have and may yet do—

Mr. Walker: He will not live that long.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I will say to the Liberal Whip that the higher you ride the lower and farther you fall, and the bump is that much harder.

Mr. Walker: Are those remarks personal?

Mr. Lambert: I would say to the Minister of Finance that even with the rule changes to which he referred, there is no reason why there should be great silence on third reading on the part of the Opposition. It was at the request of the backbenchers of his own party that an additional gap was opened on third reading. This is the odd part about it. The Minister was blown by the petard of his backbenchers. They brought forward an allocation of time provision, but there is an opening at the end. Even if there is no allocation of time, there can be a debate on third reading for at least a day plus four hours. The Minister attacked the validity of a discussion on third reading.

Mr. Gordon: The sensibility, not the validity.

Mr. Lambert: Well, the rules are there. Certainly there was agreement as to the sensibility of the provision and there are undoubtedly points to be raised. After all, the Minister is quite well aware that in the past the Government's own backbenchers have come to their senses as a result of repeated assertions on the part of the Opposition that something was wrong and the Government has modified its position. This is what we are trying to do now. We are trying to get the Government to modify its position in regard to the provisions in clause 4 of the bill. After all, enough voices have been raised to show that there is fundamental opposition to this idea of the Government. I am not going to traverse the reasons.

Certainly I support the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) as to the reasons and the procedure that has been adopted, and I would say that we will support the amendment so we can have another look at clause 4 and all the implications thereof. While there may be some validity in what the Minister is trying to do with regard to the ownership of Canadian newspapers, I think he has gone down the wrong lane in trying to do it. With regard to the question of nationalization, not in the public ownership sense but in the sense of the Canadianization of Time and Reader's Digest, I think the Minister is all wet.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, certainly an issue as important as the matter of foreign publications is one for which the fullest opportunity for debate and discussion should be provided. I can well understand that there are many Members of the Opposition parties and, if the truth were known, many Members on the Government side of the House as well, who are not satisfied with how this matter has been presented in the omnibus bill before us. I would agree with the mover of the amendment that there has not been an opportunity for Members of the House to express their opinions specifically on this issue and I believe it would be a good idea to refer the bill back to the Committee of the Whole House.

This issue is so vital that it not only strikes at the freedom of the press but at the very heart of private enterprise itself, and it is one on which we certainly ought to be able to have the opportunity of expressing our fullest opinions. I think it would be a good thing for the bill to go back to the committee. I am not sure at this point just what we can hope to accomplish, but certainly we should not allow the legislation to go through without having given it the very fullest consideration.

[Mr. Lambert.]

I would also say that the manner in which the whole question has been presented has not been one which has permitted consideration of the particular issue as it should have been. The inclusion of this provision in a larger bill has prevented us from directly dealing with the matter as we should have. On the other hand, this issue has been before us for five or six years now. The Royal Commission has made its recommendations. In addition, I have listened with interest to some of the remarks made by Conservative Opposition of the House and I find myself continually wondering how they can express such opposition at this point in view of the fact that they did not face up to the issue when they had the opportunity to do so. What we need in this country is not only a free press but a press that is Canadian, and for that reason the issue is very important.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Without prolonging the debate, I would suggest to the Minister that it would be a good gesture on his part if he agreed to the recommendation contained in this amendment and allowed the matter to go back to Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, part of what I was going to say has already been said by the hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), so I will not repeat it. I am not referring to his remarks to the effect that the higher you rise the harder you fall. I should like to express agreement with his view that he was astonished that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) would make the remarks he did when he tried to give us a lecture on the matter of over-extending the debate. Certainly they were the kind of remarks that were calculated, as anyone who has been in this House should know, to precipitate debate. I was astonished that he should make remarks of this sort, particularly since my colleague the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) had made a brief statement when he presented his amendment. He simply made clear the fact we had had an extended debate on the subject, but had no opportunity of testing the views of the House by means of a vote. It was for that reason he was presenting his amendment so that we could vote on this specific issue. So far as we were concerned, we were willing to let the matter go to a vote without any extended debate.

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): I believe the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) made it clear we were not challenging the validity of the amendment proposed by the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The point we were raising was that we felt a reference back to the Committee would only be for the purpose of introducing an amendment. The hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre and others have, with great ingenuity, offered two amendments and both of them have been ruled out of order as affecting the balance of ways and means. It seems to me it is only reasonable to believe that if the matter is referred back, an amendment will be moved and this would once again affect the balance of ways and means.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. Member permit a question?

Mr. Pennell: Yes.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. Member not agree that if the House, by a vote, sent this clause back for reconsideration that would be an indication that in the opinion of the House those who have the responsibility and authority to introduce a change which would alter ways and means would be directed to do so by the House?

Mr. Pennell: I think it might involve more serious consequences than that. If I may continue, the hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) made a point rather effectively. As I understood him, he said he was supporting the amendment but then he stated he could not see what would be accomplished by referring it back. That is exactly the position put forward by the Minister of Finance. For these reasons, I ask that the amendment be reconsidered.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if it would better meet the wishes of the House if I were to move the adjournment of the debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On motion of Mr. McIlraith the debate was adjourned.

CHILDREN OF WAR DEAD (EDUCATION ASSISTANCE) ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE MONTHLY ALLOWANCES

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-125, to amend the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when we were dealing with the resolution the other day I undertook to supply additional information to the House. I have a very brief statement here. It was suggested also to me that some of the purposes of the Act and some of the statistics be placed on Hansard for the benefit of hon. Members and veterans organizations.

First, this Act was assented to on May 14, 1953 and came into force on July 1, 1953. The purpose of the Act is to assist the children of members of the forces who lost their lives while on service during wartime, or afterwards, from a cause deemed to be related to their service in wartime, that is a 50 per cent pensioner or over, or from a cause directly attributable to peacetime service, to gain the advantages of an advanced education. For this purpose, the action in Korea is deemed as "wartime". It was hoped that the Act would provide the advantages of education that the fathers, had they lived, would have tried to give their children. The basic allowance of $25 per month was established in 1953 and has remained unchanged. The proposed increase to $34 will keep the allowance in line with the increased cost of university students. The additional allowance, paid only when pension ceases at age 21, was commenced in 1958 and the proposed change will keep it at a level equal to that paid as pension prior to age 21, at the present time $60 per month.

I have here, Mr. Speaker, a few figures and some tables relating to the number of students that have been approved for assistance. The number of students approved for assistance was 3,559, with 118 students approved for extension. The cost of the program to date has been $2,386,237, and the cost of fees and costs amount to $2,325,977 for a total of $4,712,214.

One bit of information which is not included, in the list with which I will be dealing in a moment, is that there have been 98 children of deceased members of the Canadian forces approved under the Act. I have here three tables, one of which I have partly read into the record, dealing with the applications approved for training, 1953-64 and estimated to 1968. The second table deals with the number of students in training at the year end 1953-54 to 1964-65 and estimates to 1971-72. Table No. 3 deals with expenditures 1953-54 to 1963-64 with estimates to 1971-72. I should like to ask the House for permission to have these tables, along with graphs showing the actual conditions up until now with projected estimates, printed in Hansard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the House agree to have these tables printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of tables referred to above see appendix.]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I rise to speak very briefly on the second reading of this bill. First of all, we were glad the Minister placed some figures on the record concerning the total number of students who have taken advantage of this legislation, and the total cost. I am sure when we have an opportunity of reading the tables put on the record we will have a fairly good picture of what has been accomplished by this legislation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I simply say that I am confident the Parliament of Canada has never extended such a small sum of money with such beneficial results as have been attained under this Act.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): The other day when we were discussing the resolution I had a second series of questions about which the Minister was intending to speak. They concerned the children of men who were on peace keeping operations. There is a whole area of compensation and pension not covered by war service pension, though if a man is killed in the line of duty there are provisions for his dependants.

I raised the question as to whether there was an extended definition of service under this bill to take care of such cases, and what was the Government's intention with regard to that. It may be that the Minister would prefer to go into this at length when the estimates are discussed by the Veterans Affairs Committee.

Mr. Teillet: The hon. Member is quite right and I apologize for not dealing with this matter. At the moment, allowances under this act are governed by the Canadian Pension Commission; and the other matter he raised, and which he and I discussed previously, is now being studied by an interdepartmental committee. The Department of National Defence has a large responsibility in this area. The suggestion about the Committee on Veterans Affairs is useful and I hope we will have conclusions or tentative conclusions to offer to that committee.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): As stated by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) on resolution stage, we support this measure because we all realize that society can do no less than provide in this way for those whose fathers were killed in the service of their country.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): I am in favour of the proposed amendments, but I suggest to the Government that whenever questions of allowances come up it might make an arrangement, as was done under the Canada Pension Plan, for an automatic index increase, provided the correct index is used. The index should be one based on the increase in average earnings and this would obviate amendments to Acts from time to time.

Under the regulations the Minister should also consider the matter of recognizing the institutions which some of these people would be allowed to attend. I know of one case where permission was refused to attend a certain institution in Vancouver. The chap involved was a young artist and this year his work is being displayed in the National Gallery. The question involves the institution he should have been allowed to attend.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, apropos of the remarks made by the hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton) with regard to the use of a cost of living index, student costs are more directly related to university fees and housing at universities. It would be of more assistance to students if these costs were reviewed from time to time.

Mr. Teillet: I just want to point out—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I should advise the House that if the Minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Clause 1 (a) refers to an amount equal to one twelfth of the annual rate of pension. Would the Minister tell us the annual rate?

Mr. Teillet: I assume the annual rate would be 12 times the monthly rate, but if the hon. Member waits until we reach committee stage I will have the full answer for him.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the Chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Chatterton: I think the Minister was going to say something with reference to the remarks made earlier.

Mr. Teillet: Yes, Mr. Chairman, and I can assure the hon. gentleman we are very conscious of the point he has made. I would point out that the allowances for fees were increased last fall from $500 to $800, and these things are continually under review. We are now in the process of having talks with veterans organizations in order to establish a more adequate basis for pensions to disabled veterans, and which would have a result as applied to the children of war dead. The purpose of this amendment is to assure that when a student continues at school after the age of 21 and the pension has ceased, the same amount of money will be made available to him.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): The old act provided $25 and an additional $54. Is this additional amount of money being withdrawn?

Mr. Teillet: In effect it would be $60 with the added amount provided for.

Mr. Chatterton: Under the Canada Pension Plan there is an allowance of $25 per month for each of the first four orphans, and $12.50 per month for each orphan above that. In most cases the people who would qualify under the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act would not qualify for payments under the Canada Pension Plan, and I hope the Minister will keep this in mind when considering the question in future, that income from pension or from any source but earnings does not entitle one to a pension under the Canada Pension Plan. Therefore in relation to the Canada Pension Plan these people are actually worse off than they were previously.

Mr. Teillet: I will certainly undertake to have a close look at that.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2.

Mr. Herridge: I presume this means that the act is retroactive to September 1, 1964?

Mr. Teillet: That is correct, to bring it in line with the adjustment in pension as of that date, and so that students in school during this year would have the benefit of this additional amount.

Clause agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Teillet moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

ARMY BENEVOLENT FUND ACT

AMENDMENT INCREASING INTEREST PAYABLE ON MINIMUM BALANCE

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-126, to amend the Army Benevolent Fund Act.

He said: I must correct certain of the information I gave to the hon. Member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) the other day in answering a question as to rates of interest. Reading the statement I had in front of me, I skipped a line and told him the rate was now 3 per cent. The actual figure will emerge from the brief statement I now wish to make.

The Fund was established by the Army Benevolent Fund Act in 1947. The original net worth of the fund was $9,293,477. The original interest rate was 2½ per cent. The plan for the fund was that there would be prospective beneficiaries for 50 years and that payments for the first 30 years would average $473,000 a year, with much smaller payments during the remaining 20 years. During the last ten years disbursements have averaged approximately $520,000 a year. The net disbursement in the fiscal year 1964-65 was $451,544.

The Act was amended in 1952 to increase the annual interest rate to 3½ per cent on the first $5 million, and 2½ per cent on the excess. In 1961 interest rates were again increased to 4 per cent on the first $5 million and 3 per cent on the excess. These rates are still in effect.

The fund has decreased more rapidly than was originally intended and on March 31, 1965 it amounted to $5,552,078. During the fiscal year 1964-65 the fund assisted in 3,085 cases. Because it is considered important that the fund continue to operate in accordance with the original plan, and because interest rates have tended to increase, the bill proposes a rate of 4¾ per cent per annum for a period of five years, and provides for further quinquennial adjustments in the rate by the Governor in Council. This proposal will result in increased interest payments of approximately $34,000 a year during the first five year period.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to ask the Minister a question. I presume this is one of those adjustments which have to be made in respect to interest rates under the capitalist system, which would not be required under a socialist system.

An hon. Member: They would go up and down like a yo-yo.

Mr. Patterson: May I point out that it was my colleague from Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) who asked the questions to which the Minister has replied.

Mr. Teillet: That is correct. I apologize.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the Chair.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR ADDITIONAL JUDGES

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (for the Minister of Justice) moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to provide salaries for two additional judges of the Supreme Court of Ontario, one additional judge of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick and one additional judge of the County Court of Ontario.

Motion agreed to and the House went into Committee, Mr. Batten in the Chair.

Mr. Macdonald: As hon. Members know, the proposed resolution to amend the Judges Act will provide compensation for two additional High Court judges in Ontario and one additional judge of the County Court of Ontario—in this case a third County Court judge for Middlesex County—and one additional judge for the Supreme Court of New Brunswick.

The appropriate legislation has already been passed by the provincial legislatures. The Ontario Legislature has acted to provide for the expansion of their courts to accommodate the required number of judges by an amendment to the Judicature Act which received Royal Assent on April 14, 1965 and by the County Judges Amendment Act which received Royal Assent on April 2, 1965. The Judicature Act of New Brunswick has been amended by the Legislature of New Brunswick, which amendment received Royal Assent on April 3, 1965.

In all cases the necessity for additional judges has been created by the heavy volume of litigation at the Supreme Court level which is perhaps the product of the affluent society in those two provinces. I have been supplied with some figures which indicate the extent to which litigation has grown in recent years. In Ontario there was a notable increase between 1953 and 1965. In 1953 there were 9,929 writs issued and in 1965 there were 18,546 writs issued, an increase of 87 per cent. Of cases set down for trial, in 1953 there were 4,407. This had increased in 1965 to 7,134, an increase of 52 per cent.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, could the Parliamentary Secretary give the increase year by year?

Mr. Macdonald: I would have to apologize to the right hon. gentleman, Mr. Chairman. These figures were supplied by the Chief Justice of the High Court of Ontario and I do not have them on a detailed, year-to-year basis.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was wondering whether there had been a recent increase.

Mr. Macdonald: I regret that I cannot answer the right hon. gentleman in that respect, Mr. Chairman. A more detailed comparison of the figures might be of some assistance. In regard to litigation in the City of Toronto, in January, 1965, of cases set down for trial in the non-jury, defended category there were 374. By 1965 in this category the number of cases had risen to 1,142, an increase of 205 per cent. Of non-jury, undefended cases, in 1955 there were 512 and in 1965 this had increased to 1,011, an increase of 97 per cent. Of jury cases there were 154 in 1955 and 660 in 1965, an increase of 329 per cent.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, that the present Chief Justice of the High Court of Ontario is actively engaged in trying to reduce the list of cases outstanding, and the Registrar of that court, who has had very considerable experience in litigation, has said that the past eight months have been perhaps the busiest in the history of that particular court. The figures for the period January 1, 1965, to May 31 of this year indicate some improvement in this regard. For example, the number of divorce cases disposed of in this period exceeds by 122 those set down for trial. In the same way, the number of jury cases disposed of in this five-month period from January 1, 1965, show that there were 880 cases set down for trial, and at the present time there are 632 outstanding, indicating a net disposal of 248 cases.

The figures do, however, indicate both a continuous increase in litigation and a considerable number of cases outstanding. In Toronto and Ottawa in the Province of Ontario, for example, there has been an expansion of actual courtroom facilities. In the City of Ottawa there is now room for two High Court judges to be sitting in Assizes at the same time. It is to meet the requirement for additional judges that these amendments are being put before the House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. gentleman give us the figures as to the number of trial judges of the High Court of Ontario in 1955 and today. Would he also let us know whether there is a lag between trials and the actual handing down of judgments. We had an example some years ago in the Exchequer Court where judgments were delayed so long that only the litigants had not forgotten that they had a case. Has the Parliamentary Secretary any record regarding the delays between trial and judgment which have resulted from the fact that judges have been unable to write their reserved judgments because they have been called back to duty to take trials elsewhere? Has he any record of that at all?

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Chairman, I have no record with regard to the second question. I think the general opinion of the profession, which is perhaps the best measure I can give, is that on the whole the High Court of Ontario does have a very good record of disposing of matters, once they are brought to trial. There may be individual instances where judgments have been long delayed, but on the whole I think it has moved along quickly.

With regard to the first question, the right hon. gentleman inquired as to the number of judges as between 1955 and 1965. In 1955 there were the Chief Justice of the High Court and 18 trial judges. At the present time there are the Chief Justice, of course, and 22 High Court judges. If this amendment passes the House there will be 24 judges at the trial level in addition to the Chief Justice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is just one other question I want to ask, Mr. Chairman. Personally I think it is very necessary that the courts be able to carry out their responsibilities expeditiously. There are some parts of our country where judges are not overworked in certain divisions, but in the High Court of Justice, having regard to the great increase in litigation which in large measure I think would be damage litigation arising out of automobile accidents, there has been made necessary a substantial increase in the number of judges.

While normally I thoroughly disagree with the situation whereby a Parliamentary Secretary, however qualified and able the particular hon. gentleman may be, introduces a resolution in the absence of the Minister, in this case on a Friday afternoon and being in a benevolent mood I am not going to raise this objection. But there is one other question that occurs to me. We want to be assured that our judiciary shall continue to be above reproach. They will not always be right, otherwise there would not be courts of appeal. But they have to be men of honesty, integrity and ability. Sir John A. Macdonald once said, when asked what the qualifications of a judge were in his opinion, "A man who is honest and willing to work, and if he knows a little law that would be no particular detriment". This is true. So often outstanding counsel are appointed to the bench and do not make the judges that others with less forensic experience make. However, in the field of honesty and integrity of judges we Canadians have been unusually fortunate. There has been one blot on the record in the last year or so, but that judge's conviction is still before the courts and therefore I will make no reference to it. However, there is a case in the Province of Ontario that I think deserves a full explanation by the Department of Justice. I mentioned the case of the High Court Judge who was convicted and sentenced to two years imprisonment and whose appeal is pending. I say no more about that. The very fact that there are so few of these cases causes wider publicity being given to those that do occur than would otherwise be the case. We not only expect honesty and integrity in the judiciary but we also have the right to expect, and demand, that judges shall not only be honest but shall have the appearance of being honest.

There is a case that has been before the courts. The judge in question was acquitted after preliminary hearing. I refer to Mr. Justice Landreville. I would like to know what is being done in connection with this case. We have tried to get information but it has not been vouchsafed us. I am in no way judging the merits of the case; I am simply pointing out that what was revealed in the press does not contribute to that feeling of certainty with regard to the judiciary that we, in the British tradition, have a right to insist upon. I would like to know whether the judge has been asked to resign and what his reaction has been to any such suggestions that have been made.

• (4:20 p.m.)

If he has refused to do that which I think, in the interests of justice, he ought to do, then what action is going to be taken by way of setting up a Commission to look into the case and make a recommendation to the Minister of Justice? I am being very restrained in the expression of my viewpoint, but certainly with that shadow which is cast over the Justice, litigants appearing before him would not be subject to too great criticism if they were to conclude that they would sooner be tried by another judge.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, could I just put a straight question; I am not making a speech. Could I ask the right hon. gentleman who has just spoken whether he would include in his remarks the situation of Judge Meunier, who was sentenced to two years for perjury and is still drawing a salary from the federal Government?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not mention that he was one of our colleagues in the House of Commons who went to the bench when a vacancy arose to provide an opportunity for Mr. Chevrier to come back to the House of Commons. I did not refer to the Meunier case because it is still before the court; but if what the hon. Member says is correct, that the Justice is still getting his indemnity as a judge, then that is a revealing circumstance. I could scarcely credit that that would be so.

Mr. Winch: It is so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, I appreciate that when the hon. gentleman, as an experienced parliamentarian, says it is so, I know it is so.

Mr. Winch: It was said in answer to a question put down by one of the right hon. gentleman's own Members that this judge was still drawing his salary, having been sentenced to two years.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That, Mr. Chairman, indicates that the Department of Justice, which of course at the moment is not an issue before the House, must assure that justice is done.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

I am referring to the case of a judge of the High Court of Ontario, a court which, according to the Minister, is overworked. I was wondering whether or not in addition to these two judges to the court there should be a third vacancy as well.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, along that same line of principle my point is this. How is it that a Supreme Court judge, who can only be appointed by the Government of Canada can be sentenced to two years for perjury, who appeals, and although he is not serving as a judge is paid his salary by the Government of Canada? To me that is an extraordinary situation. If a man is guilty of perjury, then by all means let him appeal. But why a man who is a judge should be paid by Parliament is, to me, a most ridiculous situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is a shocking thing.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, not being a lawyer I show some reluctance to get into this particular debate. However, I think justice affects not only the lawyers either in Parliament or the country but also those who are considered to be in court the peers of either the jurors or those persons who are accused. I endorse the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition in relation to Mr. Justice Landreville, and may I say I come from northern Ontario, where this judge lives. This matter is a disgrace. It is one which would not be allowed in any other calling, and would not have been allowed here had this man not been a judge. It is all very well to refer the case to the Bar Association, who themselves have said that this man should be removed from the bench; but I think it is a disgrace to ask anybody to go before this judge to obtain justice in view of the indication that his own hands may not be clean and that he may have abused the highest trust given to him by the people of Sudbury, who elected him to serve them in another matter.

I fail to see why this man has not been removed by the Government, and I think this failure raises with the layman a number of questions. The first question flows from the fact, as the Leader of the Opposition has just said, that the appointment of a judge may call for a man who has worked either in the legal field or other fields. It is not absolutely necessary that you have legal training to be a good judge, but—

An hon. Member: What?

Mr. Peters: Well, I hope I have not misinterpreted him, though I may have done.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I never made that suggestion.

Mr. Peters: I assumed that what he was saying was that you do not need legal training. I do not know whether this is true or not, but I think it is.

To make my point quite clear, there was recently appointed to the Supreme Court of Ontario a man I have had the privilege of knowing for many years, a lawyer in the Town of Timmins, Gregg Evans. This gentleman prior to his appointment did not go through the process of being Crown Attorney, nor did he go through any of the lower courts such as the Magistrate's Court or County Court. But I am sure that Gregg Evans will be one of the best Supreme Court judges that we have in Ontario, and I predict that he will have a long and illustrious future in this field. I say that because I know that as an individual he is a very honest, temperate and very fair man. For this reason Gregg Evans will make an excellent judge even though he has not been through some of the other avenues.

As I say, I was of the opinion that people who were not lawyers could be appointed judges, although I may not be correct about that. But let us make no mistake about it—political appointments are the usual type of appointments which are made. They have been made on many occasions. The one just mentioned was, I think, an occasion when a party needed a seat and a man was promoted to the bench to make room for another candidate. I can see the present holder of the seat for that particular riding being reluctant to do something about the situation in the province, for the very simple reason that a contribution was made in the political sense which, to some extent at least, warrants a certain amount of sympathy from those who had the benefit of the change of seat.

I think that the situation involving Judge Landreville is a disgrace of justice in the Province of Ontario. I believe that the Department of Justice must exercise some jurisdiction in this field. Even the Bar Association are now reluctant to have this judge try cases. I know of several other judges in other areas who are not considered acceptable. I know of one magistrate in Timmins who is not acceptable to me because I know of his prejudice; and certainly I would not accept him as a trial judge if I were charged with an offence before him. I think I could legitimately make a very good case as to why he should not sit on my case.

This matter affects a large number of people. It is the Government that really is responsible in this field and I do not think they have discharged their responsibility, although I may not fully understand the division of responsibility between the province and the federal Government with regard to who has supervision of the judges, and some of the other factors involved.

The Parliamentary Secretary referred to the delay in justice. This is something that is very apparent, of course, to everyone. I understood him to say that there is a backlog of 660 cases in Ontario. I wonder who is responsible for directing cases to the different judges? On a number of occasions I have been in lawyers' offices when they have been trying to find a judge to sit and hear a particular case, and have had great difficulty in doing so. This is particularly true in the months of July and August when all the judges want to go on holidays. It is true they are not considered to be the peers of average persons, but it seems odd to me that a judge should take a couple of months off in the summer while he makes up his mind whether he wants to hear a case and when he wants to hear it. It would appear to me that if the Bar Association in the province is going to be the disciplinary body, they are going to have to make a decision with regard to what outside work judges can take, because the taking of such work often results in delaying regular court cases.

I should like to hear the Parliamentary Secretary explain to us what results have flowed from the discussion we had a year or two ago. At that time I believe everyone was of the opinion that while outside work could be very lucrative to judges, it was not going to be necessary for them to do such work because we had increased the salaries of the judges considerably. I know that at that time it was left to the discretion of the judges to decide whether or not they would take outside work and whether or not it would interfere with their regular duties, but from my slight knowledge I know that the judge still controls whether or not he will sit on a case and when he wants to sit. It is the judge who makes this decision. Quite often it is unfair that a person involved in litigation should chastise his lawyer for not making proper arrangements and speeding up the hearing of the case when the fact of the matter is he cannot find a judge to hear it, and is having difficulty in bringing the case before the courts. I think the House should have some explanation of how far we got in asking the judges to co-operate and discipline themselves in return for the large increase in their indemnity provided by Parliament.

The fact that there is a backlog of 660 cases warrants in my opinion not only the appointment of two new judges but action by the House in the very near future to try to get rid of the backlog of cases. If the two new judges are energetic young fellows and do not do anything else, it is quite possible that in one year they could handle the 660 cases. However, some of these cases may very well be very heavy because, as the Leader of the Opposition mentioned, they fall in the field of civil litigation and require the production of a great deal of evidence. This is a very time consuming thing and I would think that these two judges are not really going to solve the problem of the backlog of 660 cases in Ontario. I think it would be much better if we could get all of the other 22 judges to take their fair share of the load.

If the Parliamentary Secretary would indicate to us the case load of each of these 22 judges I predict that we would find a great disparity. Some judges work and some do not do a darn thing. I would be interested in knowing, for instance, how many cases Mr. Justice Landreville has dealt with in the past year. I should like to know how many cases there were in which those involved did not want to go before this judge, who has been morally found guilty of an offence. If it had been anyone else except a judge that person would have found himself paying the penalty that the president of the company involved paid. They were both accused of exactly the same thing, one on one side of the fence and the other on the other, but the man who offered the bribe received a sentence and the one who accepted it did not. To me this is discriminatory.

I like the phrase lawyers use that justice delayed is justice denied. I know of cases involving the unsatisfied judgment fund, which I presume fall largely within the jurisdiction of the County Court judges in Ontario, that have been in process for three to four years. People are screaming blue murder because they have not got a motorcar. There is no way they can get the kind of transportation allowance that would be allowed in other types of cases, and so the penalty being paid by these people is very great. Their situation has been vastly aggravated by the fact they have not been able to get their cases before the courts.

I would have much preferred it if the Minister of Justice had been interested enough to be here this afternoon to pilot this measure through the House. I think the Parliamentary Secretary will agree with most of what I say because he comes from Ontario, but the Minister of Justice may not be aware of some of the factors involved in the administration of justice in that province, although the Province of Quebec may have different problems. I believe the Minister should be prepared to come before us and tell us the recommendations that have been made by the Province of Ontario, who these two judges are going to be and what qualifications they have. This might at least be of interest to us.

I should like the Government to be prepared to come before Parliament before long and indicate that some thinking has been done with regard to the appointment of judges and the loads they carry. Although I am not prepared to document it, I believe there is a great disparity between the work done by some judges and the work done by others. I say this because for some time I had considerable experience with Ontario judges in relation to arbitration and conciliation boards. We found there were certain judges who were always available, and quite often they were the ones we did not want. There were others we wanted and who were much more acceptable to us but they were involved in handling other legal matters. I could name some of them but I will not do so.

I can remember one who had a little English car and who came to Timmins one time. He charged us something over $200 for transportation, but if he put $5 worth of gas in that car to get to Timmins I would be very surprised. We paid the amount under protest, but when he charged the company involved in this particular case the same amount he had charged us they said it was an unreasonable charge, refused to pay and took him to the Bar Association. That is an aside.

The point I want to make is that the Minister of Justice must be aware of the disparity in work loads. I think we should find some way of distributing the loads much more evenly, and we must also find a better way of choosing new judges. The judges are supposed to discipline themselves. So are Members of Parliament. If you look around you can see those who are always here and those who are never here. We are supposed to discipline ourselves too, but this does not always work.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Peters: Well, you can look around and see the empty seats. I say the case loads are not being evenly distributed and that there is no discipline in this regard. I know personally that some judges in the Province of Ontario are greatly overworked. They are handling cases because someone asks them to do so and they know full well that they have more work than they should be undertaking. At the same time there are other judges who are carrying very little of the load.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I am quite pleased that we are adding two new judges but I would be much more pleased if I knew who they were going to be. I would also be much more pleased if there was an obligation on the Chief Justice of Ontario to come before a committee of the Justice Department and indicate which judges he wanted removed because they were not doing any work. I should like the Chief Justice to exercise some authority and report to the Government on this aspect of the matter. The lawyers are going to laugh and say it cannot be done, that it has never been done. I think it is a disgrace, and every person in Ontario will think it is a disgrace that Judge Landreville continues his appointment, and nothing can be done.

We are surprised also that people have to wait four years for settlement of cases under the unsatisfied judgment fund, not because the lawyers have failed to do their job but because there are no judges available to hear the cases. I think much more has to be done in this field than merely having an opportunity every year or so to say something on this subject when we appoint another judge or two. I think the Government has a responsibility, if they really want to see justice done, to find some way of making all the judges work. It might not be by asking the Chief Justice to report, but some way could be found. Those who do not want to do the job could be retired. We would be better off to pay them a good pension because they are only deadwood, and we would be well rid of them.

We have been able to maintain a very high standard of judges in Ontario. I do not believe there is anyone in Ontario who will not say that justice is on a high level. We are prepared to admit also that there are some who do not want to maintain these high standards, and we would like some method of assuring that the standard is maintained. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will pass on to the Minister the desire of some people in this country to have a much more effective way of disciplining judges and maintaining high standards. We probably should have a much better way of appointing judges than for Parliament continually to ask for one or two more. This may not be enough to even meet the backlog, when you take the load off the judges who are sitting now.

Mr. Herridge: I rise briefly to say that I listened to some of the interesting and eloquent remarks made by the hon. Member for Timiskaming. I must also bring to the attention of the House that the circumstances he so graphically described do not apply to the judges of British Columbia.

Mr. Winch: I spoke recently, but there was one point I omitted and which I should like to raise now. A few days ago I was interested in reading that a judge who had been found guilty of perjury and sentenced to two years still holds his appointment, although he has not been sitting as a judge. He is still drawing his money. The point I want to raise is that I read in the newspaper that the Minister of Justice said he cannot discharge this judge who has been found guilty of perjury.

I should like to make it clear that, under the circumstances. I believe there is a responsibility on the Minister of Justice to introduce the required motion in the House of Commons. I understand that only the House of Commons can discharge a judge. For the Minister of Justice to say he has no authority to discharge a judge is a statement which I find—I do not know what words to use—picayune, uncourageous and despicable. In other words, it is completely irresponsible. I say it is the responsibility of the Minister of Justice, when a judge has been found guilty of perjury, to introduce the required motion in the House of Commons to discharge him, so he will not sit in judgment on others.

Mr. Macdonald: Perhaps I may reply to some of the observations that have been made by hon. gentlemen. Perhaps I should hasten to reply, first of all, to the misquotation of the Leader of the Opposition by the hon. Member for Timiskaming. The hon. Member for Timiskaming may have been thinking of a situation in Ontario in which it is not mandatory for magistrates to have legal training. In so far as Superior Court or County Court judges appointed by this Parliament are concerned, it is mandatory that they have legal training. What the Leader of the Opposition was actually saying was that there were circumstances, not infrequently, where a man is appointed to the bench who has not been in active practice in the courts but has conducted the business of a solicitor. Very often the solicitor, who has not been actively practising in the courts, turns out to be a better judge than some of the leading counsel. I think that is the point the right hon. gentleman was making.

The hon. Member also made reference to the distribution of the work load. He observed particularly that during the months of July, August and part of September the court is on vacation. In so far as the question of whether or not there should be such a lengthy vacation, I can only speak for my own Province of Ontario and say that the question has been raised as to whether the vacation is too long, particularly in connection with criminal matters. It has been stated Superior Court judges should be sitting all year round to deal with criminal matters. I believe I am correct in saying that it is not for this Parliament to decree whether the court calendar is run the year round or not; that is a matter of the administration of justice and is for the province. I am sure the hon. gentleman's observations will be noted and given the appropriate consideration.

He made some reference to the statistics I quoted with reference to the case load and referred to the fact that judges at certain levels are entitled to engage in non-judicial activities. I point out to him that High Court judges in Ontario are not entitled to do so, but County Court judges are. County Court judges can take outside work such as to act as arbitrators in labour disputes or as members of local police boards. Supreme Court judges are required to confine themselves to judicial business, except such business as a commissioner under the Inquiries Act to which position they may be appointed by the Governor in Council or the Lieutenant Governor in Council. The case load to which the hon. Member referred has not come about by reason of the fact Supreme Court judges are not attending to their duties. I am sure the Chief Justice would be the first to support me in that remark.

Perhaps the hon. Member does have a valid observation, and it is relevant here because we are considering the position of an additional County Court judge in Ontario, as to whether or not the bench at this level should engage in non-judicial activities. I point out to him that perhaps there is ground for imposing some limitation on the activities of County Court judges. However, there is recognition of the fact County Court judges perform distinct services within particular communities. I think many people within the labour arbitration field would feel that conciliation would be hampered if it were not possible to get County Court judges to act on arbitration boards.

[Mr. Macdonald.]

• (4:50 p.m.)

Perhaps the hon. Member does not agree with that. I certainly know that that view is held by some people both on the side of labour and of management. Under Ontario legislation County Court judges perform duties as members of local police commissions, and a County Court judge is in some respects almost more an administrative officer within a county than acting in another capacity as a judicial officer. The question is not one without merits on both sides.

With respect to the case load of each judge, I am not in a position to tell the hon. Member that, but with respect to High Court judges the calendar which they are to follow is drawn up by the Chief Justice who, merely from the standpoint of personnel relations, will do his best to equalize the load. But inevitably with justices who are trying cases both in a large metropolitan area like Toronto, and who go out on circuit to small urban or rural communities, there is inequality in the load they have to meet.

I also know it is the practice for the Chief Justice to rotate the work of justices so that they take on the heavy and the light alternately. However, here again there is an inherent inequality, due to the factor of experience and being specialized in certain fields of law. Very often you will find in commercial cases it is desirable to appoint a judge to hear them who has had experience in a large commercial practice.

With respect to County Court judges you have a different situation, in the sense that they are appointed for each county, and in this respect and as a basis of comparison I point out that the County of Dufferin has only about 11 members of the bar while the County of York has I believe over 4,000 members of the bar. There is an essential inequality in the case load, but I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to Chief County Court Judge Willmott, who was appointed by the previous government, who has attempted to try to distribute judicial talents on a basis of equality so that in those counties where there is a heavy volume of work judges may be brought in from other areas to assist in coping with the volume.

Mr. Churchill: In conclusion—

Mr. Macdonald: As prompted by the hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre, in conclusion I would like to make reference to the remarks of the hon. Member for Vancouver East who appeared to suggest that in the case of a Superior Court Justice in the Province of Quebec the Minister of Justice should have suspended his salary. In the answer which I gave to the House on behalf of the Minister, as recorded at page 2667 of Hansard, I pointed out that in the opinion of the Department of Justice, under the existing provisions of the law it is not possible to suspend remuneration. I suggest to the hon. Member that this may not be by accident in the existing status of the law.

This is also related to the provision in section 99 of the B.N.A. Act which states that judges shall not be removed from office except on an address from both the Senate and the House of Commons, and this I add in my own words, in order to ensure the independence of the judiciary. Again, there are merits on the other side of the question. We should always be sure that the judiciary under any Government will have its independence maintained, save with the exception of the House of Commons and the Senate acting together on a joint address for the right of removal.

May I suggest to the hon. Member that to suggest in this case that a judge should be removed before the appeal of his conviction is determined is, in essence, prejudging that appeal. Whatever may be the ultimate consequences of the case it would not be judicious—and I think the hon. Member would agree with me under the circumstances —to remove him before the Court of Appeal in the Province of Quebec had the opportunity of declaring itself on the validity of the conviction.

Mr. Winch: I agree with the Parliamentary Secretary that when a judge is found guilty of perjury and sentenced to two years he should not sit on the bench during the period his appeal is pending. But, Sir, when a judge has been found guilty and sentenced to two years I do not believe that he should be paid his salary by the Federal Government during the time his appeal is pending. I'm darned if I can understand why the taxpayers of Canada have to pay a judge who is not sitting as a judge, who is appealing a two-year sentence for perjury.

While I am on my feet may I ask the Parliamentary Secretary, in what way does the House of Commons operate to discharge a judge? Recently the Minister of Justice said he had no power to remove a judge.

Mr. Diefenbaker: To suspend him.

Mr. Winch: I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary, does he not think it is the responsibility of the Minister of Justice to move in the House of Commons to discharge any judge whose name, reputation and honour come into question?

Mr. Macdonald: Did the Minister not say he had no power to suspend the judge without salary rather than in reference to outright removal?

Mr. Winch: That is right, but I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether it is his view that a private Member of the House should have to move such a motion and, if so, would it be in order? I think that more than one judge should have been removed from office for being incomptent.

Mr. Macdonald: The hon. Member has been a Member of the House for very much longer than I, and I do not know that I should be advising him on questions of order. I think he would find there has been no precedent in the House for removal.

Mr. Winch: I am grateful to the Parliamentary Secretary for this statement, because it confirms my belief that no private Member can move a motion to this effect, because it must be a joint motion of the House and the Senate. It has to come from the Government side of the House and it must come from the Minister of Justice. In other words, to sit as a judge you can be infantile, you can be senile and you can be a criminal. Unless the Minister of Justice moves a joint motion, then you can have senility, imbecility and criminality on the bench, and the House of Commons cannot do anything about it unless the Minister of Justice moves a motion. Would the Parliamentary Secretary like to deny that statement?

• (5:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary. If the circumstances we have heard described are true, then I think it is the duty of the Minister of Justice to make this motion at the earliest possible opportunity. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman—

The Chairman: Order. The discussion has been allowed to continue to some extent but I am wondering whether we are not going beyond the terms of the resolution before the Committee at the moment. The hon. Member refers to the possibility of the Minister of Justice making a motion. It seems to me this has nothing to do with the resolution at issue.

I should also like to caution hon. Members about the language they use when referring to judges and the courts of justice. In particular I would draw their attention to the Fourth Edition of Beauchesne, citation 152(4):

> All references to judges and courts of justice and to personages of high official station, of the nature of personal attack and censure, have always been considered unparliamentary and the Speakers of the British and Canadian Houses have always treated them as breaches of order.

I am making this reference for the general guidance of Members during the course of the discussion.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I submit I made no direct reference to the judges personally. I ask the Parliamentary Secretary by comparison whether or not a Member of Parliament can continue to draw his salary after being convicted of an indictable offence. Would he still be permitted to serve his constituency here in the House? The Government and the Department is carrying out a shocking policy and I think there is something political running through it. It is a sad commentary on the nation's affairs. Members opposite talk about the independence of the judiciary. I think that in the present case his independence is certainly preserved far beyond anything which needs be related to justice in this country.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am interested in the degree to which the hon. gentleman failed to answer the question as to the judicial situation in the Province of Ontario. I am interested in this as one who has been made an honorary bencher and I am interested, naturally, as a member of the Bar of Ontario, in finding out why it is that the number of judges has to be increased.

This immediately brings before us the question of Mr. Justice Landreville. While it is perfectly true, as Your Honour has pointed out, that attacks on the bench are not made in the House of Commons, this is not an attack on the bench. It is a reference to a matter which is public property, and the benchers of Ontario have asked the Government to act. Surely the Government will give us an answer and tell us why a judge who was condemned in the report of a commission should continue to sit and dispense justice?

This leads one in turn to the case of a former Liberal Member of this House, whose name I did not mention but which has now been mentioned. What manner of administration of justice is this, when a judge is convicted of perjury; he appeals immediately—and sometimes appeals take a long time to be heard. He cannot be suspended, under the law, but he can be given leave of absence? Would this not have been a case for granting leave of absence without pay? Just imagine. This is the man who made way for the entry of Mr. Chevrier into Parliament. He went to the bench. And he draws $12,700 as a justice after his conviction. And the only answer we get from the Government is silence. We want to know what is happening, here. This is not a criticism of the bench; it is a criticism of a Government which allows things like this to happen.

I should like to know what would have happened if the Secretary of State for External Affairs, now removed from politics, was sitting over here and we were in office. Suppose this kind of thing happened. The ferocity of his verbosity would have been justified. We want to know all about this. We are anxious to keep the bench at a high level. But $12,700 is too much to be paid to a convicted justice to act the part of judge while he awaits his turn to go into jail.

I am amazed at this. I saw a question on the order paper. I could not believe it could be possible. Yet somebody told me it was so.

Mr. McIlraith: That is what the law provides. Do you want the law broken?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Ah, "what the law provides," what political considerations determine.

I recall a case in Manitoba in the days when Mr. Bennett was Prime Minister. A District Court judge was involved. I think the course followed at that time was to set up a commission to look into the matter. I know the judge subsequently ran for Parliament and was almost successful. But I wonder where the administration of justice is going in this country when you have one judge sitting in judgment, with a record such as was determined against him, without successful answer, by a Royal Commission and another who, merely as a coincidence, happens to have been a member of this House of Commons for a long time and who today receives—what is it?—$1500 a month? He will not worry about when the appeal is called. It will not disturb him. He is getting $50 a day for waiting.

Mr. McIlraith: Would the right hon. gentleman permit a question? Is he arguing that it is legal to withhold the pay of this man as long as he is on the bench? I am talking about the latter case?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sure the hon. gentleman did not choose those words very carefully. If he is on the bench the Government should be on the penitents' bench in this regard. If ever there was a case for giving leave of absence without pay, this is one.

Mr. McIlraith: The law does not permit the withholding of his pay.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the hon. gentleman this. Does he say in his capacity as President of the Privy Council that no such limitation can be made when granting leave of absence?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I seem to recall a judge asking for leave of absence for some personal purpose. He asked to be relieved of his responsibilities as a judge in order to fill a certain public position and he was granted that leave of absence without pay.

Mr. McIlraith: Because he asked for it. But it is a statutory right which cannot be taken away arbitrarily by a government. That is the point.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the hon. gentleman's memory on this question is no better than it was a moment ago, I am not going to accept that.

Mr. McIlraith: I would pit my memory against the imperfection of the right hon. gentleman's memory at any time.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know it hurts. Instead of getting up like this, the hon. gentleman should be doing something to uphold justice in this country, rather than having a man paid as a judge while he waits for the opening of the prison gates. I want to see the correspondence to find out why leave of absence was given. I am going to have that correspondence asked for.

Mr. McIlraith: Good.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I shall do this to ascertain whether, when he applied for leave of absence, there was any suggestion that while he was on that leave of absence he should not be receiving his pay. It should be interesting to see. I will be very surprised if he is sitting—

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the Leader of the Opposition a question? With his experience as Prime Minister, Leader of the Opposition, and as an honourable member of the Bar, can the right hon. gentleman inform this House whether he has ever known of a judge who has been convicted, with an appeal pending, obtaining leave of absence with pay provided by the taxpayers of Canada? Does the right hon. gentleman have any record or knowledge of such a thing happening before?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I would hope under heaven that it never happened before.

Mr. Winch: You mean it has happened now?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know of no such incident. All I do know is this. I am waiting for the facts—the hon. gentleman was quick to interrupt—to ascertain whether the fact is that this justice asked for leave of absence so that he might wait around for the airing of his appeal and receive his pay during the interim. I would like to see the documents in that connection, because it is a terrible commentary on justice and one that naturally arouses one's feelings. After all, the bench is something set apart. I have appeared on hundreds of trials before judges who people sometimes said were appointed because they were politically fit, and I never knew a case in which that justice did not discharge his responsibility free of any suggestion of partisan bias.

We are not going to disqualify people from the bench because they are politically inclined, because they are going to give part of their lives to the public service. But once a judge, having been an outstanding politician, is convicted of an offence surely we should not anoint him by making payment to him of his salary, if there is any way in which it can be got around; and if there was not any way, when he asked for leave of absence it should have been subject to qualifications, one of those qualifications being, "You are not going to get your indemnity". Why give him leave of absence? Why not have him sit on the bench? The leave of absence is simply because he asked to be freed of the responsibility to dispense justice to others. This matter has to be subject to fuller examination than it has been given.

In so far as Ontario is concerned, I come back to this. What about Mr. Justice Landreville? Is he carrying on as a judge now; and is it in keeping with our traditions of justice that a judge against whom allegations were made should be dispensing justice? What do you think of litigants appearing before a justice under those circumstances?

What about Mr. Justice Meunier? Can you imagine appearing before him? Yet if you accept the principle that he can get the pay, why should not he also carry out his responsibility? It is so utterly preposterous that it is shocking. We will have more to say about that, Mr. Chairman, but I would like to hear about the Mr. Justice Landreville case, because as a Member of the Bar of Ontario the President of the Privy Council must know that the Benchers want to know why this extraordinary consideration was given a member of the court of justice in allowing him to sit after the condemnation that was levelled at him. And they have given a great deal of study to it; it is not a question of the Benchers coming to a determination on the basis of hearsay. All experienced lawyers are desirous of upholding the bench and the bar, and all have asked for action in Mr. Justice Landreville's case. Yet in the face of that he sits and dispenses justice. What about that? Is he doing his job well? Is he carrying out his responsibilities? Will there be an early retirement in his case so that there will be another appointment to the High Court of Justice of Ontario?

The Chairman: Order, please. We have passed five o'clock without reporting progress on the resolution. Perhaps that should be done at this time and then the House may decide, with the Speaker in the Chair, whether it wants to further consider this resolution in Committee.

Progress reported.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, I think it is the desire of all hon. Members' that the private Members' hour be waived for this day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed to waive the private Members hour at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR ADDITIONAL JUDGES

The House resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Favreau—Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair:

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to provide salaries for two additional judges of the Supreme Court of Ontario, one additional judge of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick and one additional judge of the County Court of Ontario.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice if he would be kind enough to give the Members of the Committee a little more detailed information. The motion we now have before us has to do with providing salaries for additional judges in certain courts. When we are considering the appointment of additional judges I think we have the right to ask the kind of questions that we have been asking for a little while now. I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice if he will kindly tell us, in view of the fact that we have a motion before us to appoint additional judges, what is the basis in legality and morality whereby, not one judge in Ontario, not one in Quebec, but any judge who has been found guilty under the law may still draw his pay. May I also ask, because we are now asked to appoint additional judges, whether those judges who have been found guilty under the law are going to be entitled, as criminals, to receive their pension under the Judges Act.

• (5:20 p.m.)

These are some of the things which are important when you consider the question of asking the authority of the House of Commons to appoint additional judges. I am still awaiting the answer to my question, Mr. Chairman. I asked a little while ago whether or not the Department of Justice will introduce measures to remove judges because of imbecility, lunacy, or criminality, or does the Government expect the private Member to do this? I should like an answer to these three questions.

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member has inquired about the statutory authority for continuing these payments. I would point out that the receipt of a salary is a statutory right conferred by the Judges Act. I have referred to the fact—

Mr. Winch: You mean, he has that right even though he has been found guilty of perjury?

Mr. Macdonald: May I point out to the hon. gentleman that under our concept of law, while he has been found guilty at the trial level, he has the right of appeal against his conviction. I would suggest that before the judge is condemned by the hon. Member and by other hon. Members as being a criminal he should at least have had the final judgment of the court in that regard.

Mr. Winch: I do not want to be misunderstood. He has a right of appeal; but my question is this—and it is also directed in this regard to the President of the Privy Council: Is it the policy of the Government that anybody, whether judge or civil servant, who is found guilty of a criminal offence shall, on appeal, be suspended with salary? If that is the case with a judge, I would ask the President of the Privy Council whether it applies to others in the civil service. I will say right now, Sir, that I know of some civil servants in the Post Office Department to whom it has not applied, and I should like to know why. If it is the policy of the Government that a judge, who has been found guilty of perjury, sentenced to two years and who has appealed, shall not work as a judge but be paid as a judge, I want to know why it is that someone not a judge, but a civil servant who is charged before the courts, is immediately fired and does not receive salary pending appeal. Is there one policy for a judge and another for a member of the working classes?

Mr. Macdonald: Perhaps I should point out again to the hon. gentleman that this policy is enshrined, first, in the British North America Act, which indicates the circumstances under which a judge can be removed from office, and second in an Act of this Parliament, the Judges Act, which defines the remuneration which judges receive and the circumstances under which a judge may retire from the bench. I think the Chair would probably rule me out of order if I attempted to give the hon. gentleman a legal opinion on the circumstances which might exist in the hypothetical case the hon. gentleman has put.

Mr. Winch: It is not hypothetical at all.

Mr. Macdonald: Then in that case may I point out that the hon. gentleman is commenting adversely on the conduct of a judge.

Mr. Orlikow: May I ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question. If we are dealing not with a hypothetical case but an actual case, then the Parliamentary Secretary is, of course, correct when he says that this judge is appealing his case, and that it is possible that he will win his appeal. Therefore he should not be judged guilty until his appeal has been decided by the court. If the appeal court upholds the decision made by the court in Montreal, would the Government be returned the money which this judge has received from the time of his conviction? The point made by the hon. Member for Vancouver East is a good one. I, and I am sure along with other hon. Members, have had representations made to me—I am glad to see the former Postmaster General is here—regarding cases which are in the process of being fought on appeal. They concern postal employees who, in the opinion of their superiors, have done things they were not supposed to do. They have been suspended or dismissed, their pay stopping at that very minute.

The Chairman: Order, please. It seems to me that this discussion is getting more and more away from the resolution before the Committee. There should be some respect for the rule of relevancy. The rule of relevancy provides that discussion should be limited, particularly in committee, to the very strict matter under consideration. The Chair has allowed a discussion which, to some considerable extent, goes beyond the terms of the resolution. However, when the hon. Member for Winnipeg North and the hon. Member for Vancouver East begin a line of questioning which has reference to the general policy of the Government regarding civil servants other than judges, I would respectfully submit that this line of questioning and argumentation is beyond the terms of the resolution before the Committee. I would ask hon. Members to try to limit their contributions to the resolution.

I should like to refer again to citation 152 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, particularly to paragraph (4), which reads in part as follows:

> The proper course for persons who feel called upon to attack the conduct of a judge is to proceed by way of a petition in which all the allegations are specifically stated so that the person accused may have full opportunity to answer the charges presented against him.

The understanding of the Chair is that much of the discussion that has gone on during the last half hour or so with reference to the conduct of judges is rather irregular. I would again suggest that hon. Members bear that in mind.

Mr. Orlikow: I defer, of course, Mr. Chairman, to your ruling. I do not think I was questioning the particular case involved; I was asking questions about the payment which has been made to the judge and was making the observation that, in my opinion, judges are really no different from anybody else and should be treated in the same way as anybody else. I think the hon. Member for Vancouver East has raised a very good point.

I should like to return for a moment to the question raised by the Leader of the Opposition in regard to Mr. Justice Landreville a matter which has been raised a number of times. It seems to me that the hon. Member for Greenwood raised it when the former Minister of Justice, who is now High Commissioner to the United Kingdom, was still in the House. He raised it several other times as well. Some weeks ago he raised it when reports appeared in the press that the Benchers of the Bar Association of Ontario had made a submission to the Minister of Justice. Speaking from memory it seems to me that the Minister of Justice replied that he had received a communication from the Bar Association of the Province of Ontario and that he was considering the matter. I cannot think of a better time to get a report from the Minister on this matter than now, when we are considering the question of new appointments to the Supreme Court Bench of the Province of Ontario. I hope we will get some reply from the Parliamentary Secretary, or failing that that we will leave this matter over until a day when the Minister of Justice could answer some questions in this regard.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I just want to refer back to the topic under discussion, before we leave it, if you will give me permission to do so. Did I understand the Parliamentary Secretary to say that certain judges of the court who have had charges made against them and who are still receiving remuneration, are doing so because of certain existing statutory regulations? Do I take it this is apart from any Government policy, and that it is a regulation which permits this to happen?

Mr. Macdonald: I must apologize to the hon. Member. I was momentarily diverted.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Thompson: Is the Parliamentary Secretary stating to the House that statutory regulations are the reason for this situation existing whereby these judges now before the courts are receiving their salaries and that it is not a matter of Government policy?

Mr. Winch: May I ask a more direct question? Will the Parliamentary Secretary give the Committee the statutory authority whereby judges under sentences which have been appealed are paid their full remuneration? Where is that authority?

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Chairman, I would point out that section 9 of the Judges Act, which sets out the judicial structure, or rather the salaries of the judges of the Province of Quebec, provides a statutory right in the judge to receive a payment. The opinion which I have advanced, and which was advanced in answer to the question on the basis of the Department's advice, is that there are no provisions now in the Judges Act which would entitle the Government to suspend payment to that particular judge while his appeal is pending. The status of the matter is that there is an absolute right in the judge under these circumstances to receive a salary. There is no right in the Crown—I am tendering a legal opinion here—to withhold payment of all or any part of that salary until the matter is determined.

Mr. Winch: Does this apply in Ontario?

Mr. Macdonald: I would say that the general provisions of the Judges Act would apply equally to all the provinces of Canada, and to the territories.

Mr. Winch: Does that mean then that when a judge has been found guilty of a charge and has appealed but is not now sitting as a judge, the law of Canada is that he has the right to draw his full salary as though he were sitting? In other words, under these circumstances there is no provision in the law of Canada to grant leave without pay? Is the Parliamentary Secretary saying that the law of Canada says that if a judge is in the position that two judges are, one in Ontario and one in Quebec, he can be granted leave but he cannot be granted leave without pay? Is that the situation?

Mr. Macdonald: The opinion of the law officers, which I have advanced several times today and in answer to the question the other day, is that there is no right to suspend payment under these circumstances.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, it is not surprising that this is so because, speaking from memory, this is the first case of this kind that we have had in Canada. However, having had one case it seems to me there is the possibility that we may have another similar case at some time in the future. Therefore I suggest that when the Government was bringing in this resolution it should have brought in another, or at least included a provision in this resolution to provide for holding the salary payment in trust until the case is finally disposed of.

In my view the Government and the people of Canada are going to be in an extremely difficult and somewhat ridiculous situation because, as we all know, it can take six months, a year or two years before the case is ruled on by the highest court of appeal, and if that court rules in the same way as the initial trial court, where will we be? This person will have drawn a pretty healthy salary for all these months and years and so far as I can see there will be no way of recovering the money. I do not think we can fault the Government for not foreseeing something that has never happened before, but now that it has happened it seems to me the Government should have taken steps to protect the people of Canada in the future.

Mr. Winch: I have one more question, and it is not hypothetical but direct. If a judge is found guilty of perjury and the verdict is confirmed, will the Parliamentary Secretary tell me whether that judge, be he from Quebec, Ontario or anywhere else, will then be entitled to a pension as though he were not a criminal?

Mr. Macdonald: I think the hypothesis that the hon. Member has stated has just disabled his question. In any event, he has asked me for a legal opinion which I do not think it would be appropriate to give in general terms at this time.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I have a suggestion to make. We have been dealing with a problem which has far reaching consequences. The Minister of Justice really should be here to answer questions, although the Parliamentary Secretary has been dealing with them very ably. Perhaps the Acting Prime Minister will agree that in view of the time element the Committee should rise and report progress on this matter and let it stand until the Minister of Justice is here. We could then resume in committee to deal with the two resolutions on veterans affairs, and endeavour to pass those so we will have the bills to study over the week end. If this is agreeable to the Acting Prime Minister I think the Committee generally will agree to rise and report progress.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I think we all agree that the Parliamentary Secretary has handled the matter very well. However, I agree to the suggestion.

Mr. Churchill: I therefore move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The Chairman: Is the motion going to be submitted formally or is there agreement that we should rise?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, there is agreement.

The Chairman: I am sorry; I did not realize that and I apologize.

Progress reported.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING AMOUNTS, EXEMPTIONS, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1952, to incorporate into the Act Schedule A as authorized by the Appropriation Act No. 10, 1964; to allow for further exemptions in property and income; also to provide for certain changes in connection with the administration of the Act.

Motion agreed to and the House went into Committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, in accordance with requests from some hon. Members and of the veterans organizations and their officials I propose to take a moment or two to place on the record a brief history and some facts pertaining to the proposed bill.

The War Veterans Allowance Act, now in its 35th year of operation, has been amended 12 times since it was first passed in 1930. These amendments from time to time have broadened the scope of the Act which has become one of the most rewarding Acts contained in the Veterans Charter. Originally known as the "burnt-out" pension, it has been designed to help qualified veterans who, by reason of age or infirmity, are no longer able to make their way in earning their living, and to provide maintenance to widows and orphans of recipients of the allowance. The importance of this Act and the expansion of its benefits since 1930 have been substantial, so that at the end of this last fiscal year 84,213 veterans, widows and orphans were recipients under the War Veterans Allowance Act at a cost of approximately $91,500,000.

Due to the passage of time, only one veteran of the Northwestern Field Force Campaign of 1885 remains on the War Veterans Allowance rolls. For the second year in succession, also due to the ravages of time, the number of approved applications from the veterans of World War I has been less than the number of approved applications from veterans of World War II. However, the number of recipients has steadily increased. I feel you will agree it is a source of pleasure to know that our aging veteran population has this security provided for them as they reach the end of the road, either by reason of failing health or age.

In the bill which the Government proposes to bring before you, you will be asked to increase the maximum equity in real property which is allowed a recipient. At the present time, when a recipient enters hospital, a small deduction from his allowance is mandatory under the Act. You will be asked to consider an amendment to abolish any reduction of the allowance when a recipient is hospitalized. This I know will be a welcome amendment for many of our veterans who from time to time enter hospital.

The bill will ask also for amendments granting certain additional discretionary powers to the War Veterans Allowance Board and to improve the administration of the Act.

The substance of the amendments that will be presented in the bill will in effect be a corollary to the increases in the rates and the substantial increases in the ceilings, that were passed by the House last December, these increases being retroactive to September 1, 1964. At that time, I would remind you, the single rate was increased from $84 to $94 per month with the single ceiling being raised, on a monthly basis, from $108 to $133; the married rate at that time was raised from $144 to $161 per month and the married ceiling, on a monthly basis, was raised from $174 to $222; orphans rates were also increased proportionately. Veterans organizations and veterans at large have expressed their satisfaction with those increases which are now enjoyed by approximately 90,000 recipients of the allowances.

It has been the history of this House that improvements in veterans legislation have always received wholehearted support and I am sure that the bill, which stems from this resolution, coupled with the very recent retroactive increases in the rates and ceilings granted last December, will improve the War Veterans Allowance Act which is designed to benefit that portion of our veteran population now advanced in years.

[Mr. Teillet.]

Mr. Churchill: With this explanatory statement on the record, I think it is agreeable to the Members of our party to postpone discussion until we have the bill in front of us. Therefore we, without debate, would pass the resolution and first reading.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, this group agrees to take the same course of action. I am glad the Minister made the explanation in respect of the bill. If we can get first reading of the bill this evening, we will have an opportunity to read it over the week end, and then I presume deal with second reading early in the week. If we have any comments to make, they can be made at that time.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Teillet thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-127, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

VETERANS' LAND ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING AUTHORITY OF DIRECTORS, HOME CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE, ETC.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Veterans' Land Act:

To establish a revolving fund for certain capital receipts and expenditures to be called the Veterans' Land Act Fund;

To provide authority for the Director to pay certain debts incurred by veterans to make improvements to land;

To give the Director greater discretion in varying the payment terms of an agreement between the Director and the veteran entered into under subsection (1) of section 10;

To change the basis for determining the maximum limit of financial assistance that may be given to a veteran under subsection (3) of section 10;

To allow a veteran to lease premises occupied by him under a contract under section 10 after the expiration of a period of ten years;

To authorize the Director, with the consent of the Minister, to enter into a contract with a veteran who is in default in respect of a contract previously entered into under the Act;

To require the Director to accept the amount of a contract debt as the cost to the Director before the expiration of ten years from the effective date of the contract under certain conditions;

To extend the purposes for which the proceeds of sale of land, improvements, livestock or farm equipment may be used;

To extend the purposes for which funds may be advanced by the Director to a veteran under subsection (1) of section 15;

To authorize the Director to grant assistance to veterans who have received assistance under the

Veterans Rehabilitation Act or the War Service Grants Act under certain conditions;

To extend the purposes for which a grant may, pursuant to sections 38 or 39, be used;

To increase the maximum home construction assistance from twelve thousand dollars to eighteen thousand dollars;

To increase the maximum loan available under section 64 from twenty thousand dollars to forty thousand dollars and to extend the purposes for which a loan, pursuant to this section, may be used;

To extend the purposes for which a loan may, pursuant to section 64A, be used, to increase the maximum loan available thereunder from twelve thousand dollars to eighteen thousand dollars and to vary its provisions under certain conditions;

To reduce the deposit payable by a veteran under section 65, to extend the purposes for which a loan made thereunder may be used, to increase the maximum loan available under this section from four thousand eight hundred dollars to ten thousand dollars and to provide for adjustment on loans partially advanced at the coming into force of the amendment;

To provide for consolidation of all outstanding farm improvement assistance loans between a veteran and the Director in one agreement and, for the purposes of such consolidation, to authorize appropriate variation of the repayment period specified in each of the outstanding agreements;

And to provide further for certain changes in consequence thereof and also in connection with the administration of the Act.

Motion agreed to and the House went into Committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendments to the Veterans Land Act will update its provisions to serve the needs of veterans already settled on farms, small holdings and other properties across Canada. They will also make available increased loan amounts for those veterans who wish to be established under the provisions of the Act. Some new concepts leading to improved administration are incorporated as well.

Land settlement legislation for veterans has been a feature of Canadian agriculture for 47 continuous years. Experience under the Soldier Settlement Act after World War I and the Veterans Land Act, after World War II has led to the development of policies, particularly in the field of farm credit, that have had a major impact on Canadian agriculture. Once again, the proposals outlined in the resolution will encompass the application of new techniques which may serve as a pattern for a fast changing Canadian picture.

Realizing the great desire of most veterans to remain under the Veterans Land Act, the farm financial amendments will be brought in line with those of the federal Farm credit Act. Not only is it proposed to increase the maximum loan ceiling for farms to $40,000, but the purposes for advancing assistance will be broadened. Consistent with the pattern of a changing farm community, where new sources of income are developing largely from the tourist and summer recreation trade and other non-farm sources, financial assistance will be provided to assist a small farmer to develop a small business which may not be related to farming. He may utilize an appropriate part of his farm for tourist or recreational purposes or he may engage in some activity connected with agriculture and forestry development. Evidence indicates that the small farmer must supplement his income from sources other than farming. Admittedly, the land belonging to some small farmers will be absorbed by others, but for the majority of that group who will remain on their farms there is merit in providing an opportunity to take advantage of this new source of off-farm income.

It is anticipated that when the qualifying period is ended as of October 31, 1968, there will exist about 20,000 veterans who will be eligible to take advantage of the Act. Nearly all of this number will apply as small holders, officially classified as part-time farmers. The maximum loan ceiling for this group and for commercial fishermen will be increased to an amount comparable to that available from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It will be possible to have $18,000 to buy a property and repay re-establishment credit for a $2,600 down payment. Veterans who wish to be established after the cut-off date of October 31, 1968, must have been issued a V.L.A. qualification certificate. Those who are qualified in this manner need not have repaid re-establishment credits at that date since it will be possible, if desired, to have this amount incorporated in the subsequent agreement of sale with the Director of the Veterans Land Act.

Among the changes which might be classed as administrative, greater flexibility will result and I would like to mention a few of these proposals. They are, the establishment of a Veterans Land Act revolving fund of $380 million for supplying capital loan expenditures, which will facilitate the lending functions; arrangements to permit the payment by a veteran of interest only during adverse crop periods or sudden periods of long illness; arrangements to reduce the minimum amount of group life insurance to 50 per cent of the debt and to permit the veteran's spouse to be covered. Then, proposals will be made which will make the veteran responsible for maintaining insurance on his buildings. A further change will widen the purposes for a grant on Dominion, Provincial and Indian land settlements, and ensure all veterans are treated in a like manner when their property is taken for public purposes.

• (5:50 p.m.)

In order to motivate qualified veterans to ultilize the provisions of the Act without undue delay after 1968, applications for financial assistance must be made by March 31, 1974. Applications for additional loans from any established veteran will not be accepted after March 31, 1977. By this late date the average age of veterans will be approximately 62 years. As a consequence of inserting these dates in the Act the Director can retain and utilize his trained staff to the best possible advantage.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, so far as our party is concerned we propose to follow the same course on this resolution as on the other one—pass it now and get first reading, and then make our comments on second reading when it comes before the House again, and in Committee of the Whole. We have the Minister's statement, and if we have time to study the bill over the week end, this will be satisfactory.

Mr. Herridge: This is a very important amending bill and has been necessitated by changing circumstances. We in this party are quite willing, having heard the Minister's statement, to support the passing of the resolution and have first reading, so that we can have his statement and the bill to examine over the week end, and make our contributions on second reading and in Committee of the Whole.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Teillet thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-128, to amend the Veterans Land Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, in indicating the business for Monday I may say it had been the intention of the Government to move to go into Committee of Supply on Monday, to give hon. Members an opportunity to express their views on the course which the Government has followed with respect to the Address to the Queen concerning the Legislative Council of Quebec. The representatives of the parties opposite have indicated that they do not wish to use that opportunity for that purpose. Since the interim supply debate will give an opportunity for any hon. Member who wishes to express his views on that question, the Government has decided to call interim supply on Monday, as soon as we have disposed of the third reading of the Income Tax bill.

With regard to the passage of other legislation yet to be disposed of, perhaps it would be better if I were not too rigid at the moment as to the sequence in which it will be presented.

Mr. Churchill: May I first say with regard to the early part of the Minister's statement that we never accept the situation, here, where the Government suggests to us what we will do in the time at our disposal. If we want to move amendments on interim supply they will be amendments of our choice.

Mr. McIlraith: That is what I sought to make clear.

Mr. Chatterton: Will the bill respecting veterans legislation be available?

Mr. Teillet: It is available now.

Mr. Peters: Is it the intention of the House Leader to have Wednesday as a target date for adjournment for summer recess?

Mr. McIlraith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to be very dogmatic about these things because I find I get into trouble if I indicate a specific date for adjournment; but it was the hope that we could come to adjournment for the recess possibly late on Tuesday night. There are just the veterans legislation, interim supply, supplementaries, and the bill indicated in the Prime Minister's statement having to do with incentives to designated areas, to be dealt with.

Mr. Peters: With respect to the new incentives to designated areas, is it the intention of the Government to proceed only with the resolution stage? This is a fairly extensive measure.

Mr. McIlraith: No; it is the intention to proceed with the bill. I think when hon. Members see it they will find that that is the desirable course, and will commend itself to them.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF U.K. CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER

Mr. Speaker: With the kind permission of all hon. Members, may I say that having just returned from the United Kingdom myself it gives me the greatest pleasure indeed to welcome here this afternoon Right Hon. James Callaghan, Chancellor of the Exchequer of the United Kingdom, who is sitting in the Speaker's Gallery. We hope, Sir, that your stay here in Ottawa and in Canada will be most interesting and profitable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1965-66

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates "C" for the financial year ending March 31, 1966, was presented by Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the House, and referred to the Committee of Supply.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO WORKERS AND INDUSTRIES AFFECTED BY AUTOMOBILE AGREEMENT

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief statement which I am sure will be of interest to the Members of the House. As the House is aware, the automotive plan is designed to achieve a substantial expansion in production and employment in Canada and to promote improved efficiency in the automotive industries. Under the plan production in Canada will increase by several hundred million dollars annually and employment in the industry will grow accordingly. In this regard, during the year in which the previous automotive plan was in effect employment in the automotive industries increased by nearly 10,000 workers. Under the current plan the motor vehicle manufacturers and many parts manufacturers have already announced major expansion plans.

Organized labour and the automobile and automobile parts industries have welcomed the plan as a bold and constructive measure which is in the national interest. A major economic expansion of this nature, however, is bound to result in certain transitional adjustments for some workers and firms. In such cases there may be a temporary lay-off of workers while the company re-equips. There will be instances where firms will find it necessary to expand or re-equip their facilities to produce in greater volume and in the most efficient manner.

While such adjustments will take place in the context of very substantial growth in the industry, the Government believes that assistance should be provided to those who may be affected by the adjustment process in order to ease possible interim adverse effects. As a result the Government proposes to implement a program of transitional adjustment assistance for workers and firms in the automotive products industries. My colleague the Minister of Labour immediately following will be outlining the measures which the Government proposes to implement for workers in this industry. I would like to outline the program of adjustment assistance for firms.

The automotive plan offers new opportunities to Canadian automotive parts manufacturers for expanded production, rationalization of output and reduced costs. If Canadian parts makers are to take advantage of the plan, they must be increasingly competitive and flexible in their operations. In some instances they will be asked by their customers to make new products or to manufacture existing components on an expanded scale and more efficiently. As a result many Canadian parts makers will have to engage in substantial re-equipment and expansion programs to take advantage of the opportunities provided by the plan. In addition, increased working capital will be required in order to operate at expanded levels.

The Government wishes to ensure that every automotive products manufacturer who is energetic and shows initiative will have the opportunity to participate in the plan and is not prevented from doing so by an inability to acquire sufficient capital to accomplish these objectives. As a result the Government is proposing to make loans available to those automotive products producers who have a reasonable prospect of profitable operation but who otherwise would be prevented from doing so through lack of financing. These loans will be made for the purpose of acquisition, construction, installation, modernization, development, conversion, or expansion of land, building, equipment, facilities or machinery and for use as working capital. They will carry an interest rate of 6 per cent and would be repayable over not more than 20 years for land and buildings and 10 years for other purposes.

A special fund will be set up for the purpose of making these loans, and the administration of this program will be the responsibility of an adjustment assistance board which is being set up specifically for this purpose. The Industrial Development Bank will be cooperating with the board and will be responsible for the day to day administration of the loans which are made under the program. Firms manufacturing the automotive products covered by the automotive plan will be eligible for the loans, except for companies which manufacture automobiles or firms affiliated with automobile manufactures.

The Government feels that this transitional assistance program for firms in the automotive products industry will make a real contribution to assisting firms, especially the smaller ones, to adjust to and take advantage of the many opportunities for expansion and efficiency provided by the automotive plan.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, it would save the time of the House if my colleague the Minister of Labour could be heard on the complementary labour aspects of this program before general comments are offered.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I think we should follow the order of procedure whereby one Minister makes an announcement regarding one phase of a policy and we comment on that at once, rather than having two statements and amalgamating our comments in respect of both phases of the policy.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, the House has heard an interesting announcement from the Minister of Industry, but it is just another case of this Government having been prodded by the Canadian car and car parts manufacturers to the point that they have had to do something. The Canadian car parts manufacturers were put in such a terrible position that something had to be done to help them survive. This is another case where this Government proposed legislation in a matter dealing with the United States Government but forgot about the industries and people who would be displaced until this fact was brought to their attention. They now come forward with recommendations regarding steps to bail these people out. If, Mr. Speaker, they had first of all removed the 11 per cent sales tax, the Government would have bailed these people out of their difficulties.

The Minister speaks of adjustments, more loans, and an adjustment assistance board. We are getting such a conglomeration of loan boards and assistance boards from this Government today that we hardly know where we are. We have an Industrial Development Bank which was set up to take care of industry and to assist them in manufacturing; but no, the Government have to get mixed up with another board. They leave the Industrial Development Bank out of the picture, although the Minister did say that they were being brought into it to some extent.

The Minister mentioned an interest rate of 6 per cent on these loans. This is altogether too high an interest rate, in that people in this type of business do not make a sufficient return to be able to pay it. So I say, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that this is another hodgepodge, another means by which to bail these people out.

Mr. Nielsen: Fumbling and bumbling.

Mr. Hales: We hope this effort, such as it is, is not too late. I am sure the Minister of Labour will say something about displaced persons, because in Windsor today another 500 workers are being laid off, and 1,500 will be laid off by the end of July. This is the situation confronting us as a result of the Canada-U.S. car treaty in which this Government involved the country.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to the Minister of Industry that this is such an important and complicated statement that really we should also hear the Minister of Labour, since the two announcements are complementary to each other. I wonder whether I could have your indulgence to withhold my comments until we have heard from the Minister of Labour.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. Member for Danforth and the House Leader for the Conservative Opposition that these two announcements should have been made together because they are interrelated.

The announcement which has just been made concerns a most important issue and is a statement of the policy of the Government as far as the automotive industry and the recent arrangements made with the United States are concerned. If in the first place the Government had been concerned with the consumers of automobiles instead of passing the benefits of this agreement over to the manufacturers of automobiles, we would have had a far different situation today.

Because the benefit of this agreement has gone to the manufacturers of automobiles the Government is now forced to come to the assistance of the automotive parts manufacturers to provide the capital they need to be able to expand. It seems to me that it is a principle of enterprise that if you have a market for the product you are intending to manufacture there should not be any trouble in raising the money required in order to build your factory. But the approach of this Government has been a backward one from the very beginning, and they are now going backward again by way of taking Government money to provide for development of a parts manufacturing program.

What is wrong with our own Canadian investment dollar? Why cannot this money be found on the private market from people with savings and through the credit facilities of the tremendous corporations who are concerned in each case? In this way they could get the money from the investment and savings of Canadian people without requiring the Government to provide this capital.

It seems to me that the mistake made in policy in the first instance is now being repeated in order to give the manufacturers of automotive spare parts the same advantage that was given to automobile manufacturers. This is a complete mistake of policy, and is the kind of thing that is pushing us further and further into the situation where Government capital has to be provided to facilitate the expansion of our own industries. We are not just assisting the slide of the country into Government or state control; we are galloping headlong into it.

For those reasons I think this is a complete mistake of policy, and a case of one wrong perpetuating another. I regret that the Government has put itself into the position where it has to adopt this policy in order to protect the automotive parts manufacturers.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we are witnessing a rather strange paradox in this country: the Canadian government borrows more and more, and thereby lends more and more. It is a strange paradox to see a government find ways to lend money while it is deep in debt. Why? Because laws have been passed to foster the growth of the Canadian automobile industry and it has become obvious that such laws were passed hastily and without sufficient study; new laws now have to be passed in an attempt to rescue certain related sectors which were affected by the previous legislation.

In a word, what we have are specialists and experts in certain fields who suggest the government pass laws which can be good for some areas, but which can create difficulties for other areas of the Canadian economy.

That is exactly what we have today. There has been too great a desire to help big companies. Perhaps debts had been incurred with the big automobile corporations. They were assisted and we are now faced with a deplorable situation, which arises from the fact that the government, with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) in the lead, has not yet understood the real problem facing our present economic system.

In my opinion there is too great a tendency to finance production and too little desire to put at the disposal of the consumer the necessary purchasing power to absorb production. As a result, people on both sides of the fence, whether producer or consumer, are forced to borrow. Now, as the government has already borrowed considerably there is hardly any capital available and, today, the government is obliged to lend once more to private enterprise. This means that on both sides, producer as well as consumer, the situation is once more deplorable. In fact, the producer has to borrow from the government to finance his production, while the consumer, that is the buyer, has to go to finance companies to borrow again and again, in order to pay for production that has already been financed by means of loans.

Are we not heading for a vicious circle? Producers are borrowing in order to produce and consumers are borrowing to buy products which borrowing helped to produce. This is obviously a vicious circle and we do not know how to get out of it.

I am saying to the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury), who seems determined to take all kinds of steps to assist the various sectors of the economy, that there is but one solution to get the economy out of the crisis, to end unemployment and to help designated areas; that can only be done if the consumer has the money he needs to buy what is produced.

When the consumer buys the production without borrowing, he finances production itself without the government constantly having to make loans to the producer.

Let us see to it that the consumer has the necessary purchasing power because he will then be able to finance production without everybody getting into debt, that is the government, the producer and the consumer who needs the products.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Industry has stated, the major expansion that will result from the Canada-United States automotive agreement will greatly increase employment in Canada. This expansion will involve a considerable reorganization of production with some consequent lay-offs of workers. These workers should not be asked to bear the entire financial burden of their unemployment. Because the economy as a whole will benefit from the agreement, it is reasonable that the people of Canada and the automotive companies assist the workers in meeting their adjustment problems.

I wish to announce the details of the Government's transitional assistance benefit program, developed for such workers. This program will provide assistance benefits ranging from 62 per cent to 75 per cent of the worker's weekly pay depending on the number of his dependants, provided this benefit does not exceed 65 per cent of average weekly wages and salaries in the motor vehicle and motor vehicle parts industries, which currently amounts to close to $75.

The duration of benefit is based on the length of employment in the automotive and parts industries. It can be a maximum of a year and a half for workers completing training programs. To be eligible, a worker must have at least 30 weeks of employment in the last 52 weeks prior to lay-off, which will entitle him to four weeks of benefit, with an additional week of benefit for every week of employment in excess of 30 weeks up to 26 weeks of benefit. For workers with more than 52 weeks of employment, a week of benefit will be received for every two weeks of employment up to a maximum of 52 weeks of benefit. To qualify for transitional assistance benefit or TAB payments, a worker must also be qualified to receive unemployment insurance benefits.

Some of the workers laid off in these industries would normally be eligible for supplementary unemployment benefits. SUB is a scheme of unemployment benefits provided for in the labour-management agreements of the major motor vehicle companies and in a few of the motor vehicle parts companies. Under the terms of SUB plans, SUB payments would not be made if the transitional benefit together with unemployment insurance equalled or exceeded 62 per cent of the worker's pay plus a maximum of $6 for dependants. In these instances, under the TAB plan, the companies would be relieved from paying SUB benefits to their workers. It is the Government's view, however, that the companies, which will be receiving direct financial benefits under the automotive agreement, should meet part of the financial burden of the lay-offs. Accordingly companies with SUB plans will be asked to contribute to the TAB fund an amount equivalent to what they would have been required to pay to workers eligible for SUB benefits.

The payment of TAB benefits to workers eligible for SUB is conditional on such payments into the TAB fund by those companies having SUB plans. This provision would not affect workers who are employed in companies with SUB plans, but who themselves are not eligible for SUB. I am glad to educate hon. Members in trade union terminology. These workers would receive transitional assistance benefits according to their entitlement.

The determination of whether workers laid off in the industry are eligible for TAB will be made by the adjustment assistance board. Workers will be eligible if the board finds that a significant number or proportion of the workers of a firm or plant will be laid off for a period of at least 30 days and that the lay-off was caused by a termination or significant decrease of production or activity arising from the operation of the Canada-United States automotive agreement.

Parliamentary approval will be sought for this program through an item in the amount of $5 million included in the supplementary estimates of the Department of Labour.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): If the Minister of Labour went to Washington to bring in this plan, he should have stayed at home. I recall that on May 11, when he spoke in this House, he said that whatever programs are available for displaced workers in this country, they are equivalent to what is provided in the United States under similar circumstances. Evidently the Minister has swallowed himself, or tried to swallow himself, by making this trip to the United States. What does he come back with, or at least what does he propose for us? In the United States I understand the workers in this industry who are displaced as a result of this United States-Canada agreement will receive up to $102 per week during the period of time they are laid off. We are told now the workers here will receive 65 per cent of their average weekly wage and the benefit will not exceed that amount.

The SUB plans, Mr. Speaker, have been in existence throughout Canada in this industry, and far exceed 65 per cent of the total take home pay while workers are employed. This program is certainly going to bring down the benefits to workers who are laid off in comparison with what they would have received under the SUB plan. The Minister says that in some instances the industry must contribute the same amount to this new TAB plan, as he calls it, as they contribute to the SUB plan, yet benefits to the workers are going to be a great deal less.

I think this program is far from satisfactory for the workers who are to be laid off as a direct result of an agreement this Government has signed with the United States, and which is being continued at the expense of the Canadian workers.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for us to realize, first of all, that we are establishing an important principle here, one which we have requested for a number of months; namely, that where workers suffer dislocation as a result of conditions beyond their control they should not be asked to bear the burden of it. I think we are accepting that principle in this proposal. It is important also to note that those of us on this side of the House who foresaw many of these difficulties some months ago were laughed at and somewhat downgraded by the Government. Time has proven that these dislocations do take place and some assistance is necessary.

Evidently this program will become known as the TAB plan. I think it is important for us to try to establish at some stage just who is going to pick up the tab for the TAB plan. An analysis of the statement made today makes it rather obvious that it is the Canadian worker who is going to pick up the major portion of the tab. The first joker in the plan is that the payments are subject to a ceiling of 65 per cent of the average wage of workers in the trade as a whole, so the worker is automatically placed at a disadvantage in that regard. There are supplementary benefits, Mr. Speaker, but with the joker of a 65 per cent upper limit the worker is already at a disadvantage, more particularly as it affects these benefits.

It is for this reason I think the Minister will have difficulty with the various labour unions. Benefits are only going to be paid to the workers in those industries who agree to contribute into the TAB plan the payments they would have made into the SUB plan. Having given over $50 million in tax benefits, we now want to go back to the industry and say "You must take part of your social responsibility for this, and we would like you to agree to make this payment into the fund."

It seems to me there is a danger here that this is going to be the joker in the plan which will enable some of these companies to escape their responsibility. Really, on analysis, it is nothing but a substitution of the supplementary unemployment benefits for the benefits under the Government plan, with a slightly larger benefit for those who are eligible.

There are some advantages to the plan, but there are grave disadvantages. The United States workers are still eligible for benefits up to 85 per cent, so we are still considerably below what they are receiving in the United States. I had hoped there would have been some mention of a mobility clause which would enable these people to move around, but the statement is absolutely devoid of any such reference.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, it seems that while we have accepted a principle, there are grave deficiencies in it which I think will make it unacceptable to most of the organized trade unions in this field. As I have said, having given $50 million to the companies we are now going to ask them to come back in and make these payments and assume some of the responsibility. Finally, we are still leaving the Canadian workers considerably behind in benefits received as compared with United States workers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, no.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard), on behalf of this group I would like to comment briefly on the announcement made by the Minister of Labour. First of all, I must say that the announcement sounded something like a soap ad with its reference to SUB's and TAB's, and possibly this is about the extent to which it is going to be acceptable.

I do not see why we do not devise a policy that will take care of these dislocations, that will have something concrete in it so that when these dislocations occur, whether it be in the railway industry or other industries across the country, we shall have some legislation that is comprehensive and intelligently put together in order that matters like this can be handled when the need arises, without coming to Parliament with a little bit of this, a little bit of that and a little bit of something else. The time has come when we should have some comprehensive legislation in this regard.

With respect to the limitations, I notice in the minister's statement there is discrimination against those individuals who have not been long employed by a company. I do not know what would make anybody believe that a person who has been employed by a company for a short time is richer than one who has been employed for a good many years, but according to the specifications laid out in the Minister's statement we do find this discrimination.

I fail to see why one should want to discriminate against an individual who has been only a short time with a company. He will be just as much out of work as the fellow who has been with the company a long time, and likely he will have more debt and more bills to meet.

In connection with the 65 per cent benefit figure, I believe this will encourage individuals who get only that amount to go out and moonlight. They will take employment in other sections of our economy, such as in the supermarkets and so on after ten o'clock, or they will become salesmen. In effect they will be taking jobs away from other people; therefore we will not be helping the economy to the extent that the Minister forecasts. It is a hoax, so far as I can see.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, one can easily realize, in reading the second statement, that there is something wrong in this whole thing, as there is a glaring inconsistency between both.

In the first statement, on the first page, the Minister of Industry and Defence Production (Mr. Drury) says:

[Mr. Leboe.]

> In such cases there may be a temporary lay-off of workers while the company re-equips. There will be instances where firms will find it necessary to expand or re-equip their facilities to produce in greater volume and in the most efficient manner.

In his statement the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) said the opposite. He said that the worker will benefit from those advantages on one condition, namely that he will be laid off for a period of at least 30 days and that the lay-off will cause a termination or a significant decrease of production or other activity arising from the operation of the agreement.

In one case it is a question of equipment conversion to increase production, but the Minister of Labour said the exact opposite when he stated:

> When such layoffs are due to a stoppage or an important decrease in production.

The Minister of Labour had more vision than the Minister of Industry and Defence Production. He realized that the trade agreement on the automobile industry would not only fail to favour the production of automobile parts, but would cause a decrease in the production of such automobile parts in Canada. That is why he stated:

> Provided such layoffs are due to a stoppage or an important decrease in production. In such cases only, will workers be helped by the Minister of Labour's new plan.

Now, if employees are laid-off under the circumstances mentioned by the Minister of Industry and Defence Production, in other words, if they are laid-off temporarily during equipment conversion they will not participate in the plan suggested by the Minister of Labour, because the latter refers "to layoffs caused by abandonment of, or a great decrease in, production".

There is contradiction, or else the intention is that neither of the plans will have any effect and that the workers will not be able to profit by them.

It is high time, nevertheless, that members of the Cabinet fall in agreement and take the same decisions instead of contradictory decisions such as we have seen today, in less than one hour, by two members of the same government and of the same Cabinet, two ministers who are supposed to co-operate and who make contradictory statements.

One thing remains: according to the first statement, it is intended to allow the government to lend money to automobile producers, so that the latter may produce certain things which the consumers will have to borrow to buy. Since a loan has already been obtained to manufacture those things another loan will have to be obtained to buy them.

On the other hand, the Minister of Labour intends to set up a benefit system for workers who are laid off because there is no more work for them since foreign producers have been allowed to invade and take over the domestic market.

Who will profit? The consumer? No, he pays the very same price for his car. Then who? Large automobile producers who are subsidiaries of American corporations while small Canadian producers of automotive parts will have their production cut off because of the agreements passed.

I think it is high time for this government to revise its position and instead of taking off tariff and taxes for large corporations only, they should take them off for all Canadian consumers and see to it that Canadian consumers have a sufficient and necessary purchasing power to buy Canadian automobiles and then our problems will be settled.

Let us stop administering and governing in terms of large foreign capital interests in most cases, or in terms of large finance corporations who will happily finance automobiles; let us legislate for the Canadian people by placing in their hands the purchasing power they need to buy automobiles without always going into debt. That is the only solution to the problem now facing us and we hope that the government will take it into consideration.

INDUSTRY

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF DEVELOPMENT GRANTS IN DESIGNATED AREAS

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry) moved that the House go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the House by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the payment of development grants to assist the establishment of new manufacturing or processing facilities and the expansion of existing manufacturing or processing facilities in order to improve industrial employment opportunities in designated areas in Canada; for this purpose to establish in the Consolidated Revenue Fund an area development account to which shall be credited an initial amount of fifty million dollars; and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act concerning the definition of a manufacturing or processing business and the application of section 71A of that Act in any case where a development grant has been authorized to be paid under the said measure.

Motion agreed to.

AERONAUTICS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING INQUIRIES INTO ACCIDENTS, MEMBERSHIP OF AIR TRANSPORT BOARD, ETC.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport) moved that the House go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the House by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Aeronautics Act to authorize the Minister of Transport to establish boards of inquiry to investigate aircraft accidents and provide for the payment of the expenses of witnesses appearing before these boards; to provide that the Air Transport Board shall consist of not less than three and not more than five members; to provide that members of the Board shall be appointed for a term not exceeding ten years and to provide for retirement of members of the Board appointed after the coming into force of the proposed measure at seventy years of age; and to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the Act.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

USE OF U.S. NAVY LAND AT ARGENTIA, NFLD.

Question No. 51—Mr. Douglas:

1. Have any representations been made to the federal government concerning the possible use for industrial purposes of land which is now under the control of the United States navy at Argentia, Newfoundland?
2. If so, who submitted these representations and what were their nature?
3. What reply did the federal government give to any such representations?
4. Has any approach been made to the United States government concerning the future use of the land in question?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am informed by the Atlantic Development Board as follows:

1. No direct representations.

2. Mr. E. E. Thoms, President, Victory Lodge 1188 of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees, submitted a brief to Premier Smallwood and sent a copy to the Prime Minister. This brief recommended that the Federal Government consult with the United States Government and request that a portion of Argentia harbour be passed over to civilian industry in order to increase local employment.

3. The representations were made directly to Premier Smallwood; a copy was forwarded to the Prime Minister's office apparently for information only and no reply was necessary.

4. The Federal Government maintains close contact with the United States Government regarding the future of its bases in Newfoundland. The U.S. Government has a treaty right to the use of the land in question at Argentia and moreover, U.S. officials advise us that their government still requires this land. While there has been some reduction in the number of the American personnel at Argentia, a substantial number will remain and there should be little decrease in the employment of Canadians. It must also be remembered that the North Sydney-Argentia ferry is due to come into operation in the spring of 1967 and that employment in the construction of the docks and a connecting road to the trans-Canada highway is already a significant factor in the economy of this area.

In addition to the information supplied by the Atlantic Development Board noted above, Mr. Richard Cashin, Member of Parliament for Saint John's West has discussed this matter with the Minister of Transport on several occasions.

*CONSTRUCTION OF HIGH ENERGY NUCLEAR PHYSICS LABORATORY

Question No. 264—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government now giving consideration to the proposal of the Canadian Association of Physicists made in 1956 and 1957, that Canada construct a high energy nuclear physics laboratory centred on a high energy particle accelerator, in Canada and, if not, what were the reasons for refusing this proposal of the Canadian Association of Physicists?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Subsequent to the brief submitted by the Canadian Association of Physicists to the chairman of the Committee of the Privy Council on Scientific and Industrial Research in October 1958, the National Research Council has not been aware of any specific proposal for the construction of a high energy nuclear physics laboratory. In so far as the National Research Council is concerned, there is no present plan to implement the brief of the Canadian Association of Physicists. Although the desirability of giving maximum possible support to physics is recognized, obligations to support other branches of science must also be taken into account. With the rapid expansion of universities and a plan for corresponding rapid expansion in the Council's program for scholarships and grants in aid of research in the next few years, it is not considered possible at the present time to embark on a project of such magnitude. General support of physics in various fields in universities across the country including support for several medium energy laboratories is considered to be the most desirable way of utilizing available resources.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

C.N.R. EXPENDITURES ON NEWS AGENT SERVICES

Question No. 305—Mr. Laprise:

What sum has Canadian National spent annually over the last ten years on the news agents service (a) for the whole network, and (b) for the section from Quebec to Cochrane?

Mr. Jean Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

News agent service on Canadian National trains has been provided by a concessionaire known as Canada Railway News Company under a contract with the railway.

U.S. FUNDS OBTAINED BY CANADIAN BANKS

Question No. 316—Mr. Matheson:

1. Does Canada exercise any control over American funds which are obtained on the market by New York agencies of Canadian banks, and, if so, by what means?

2. Does either the Dominion Bureau of Statistics or the Bank of Canada maintain records relating to such transactions?

3. Has any study been undertaken to ascertain the effects of these transactions upon Canada or upon international money markets?

4. Has any study been undertaken to determine Canada's role in the Euro-dollar market?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. Canada does not exercise specific control over the operation of Canadian banks' New York agencies, but these agencies like any other branches of Canadian banks must comply with the provisions of the Bank Act. Under section 63 of the Bank Act, the Inspector General of Banks is required to satisfy himself that the financial condition of each bank is sound, and under the provisions of section 71(4) each bank is required to maintain adequate reserves against liabilities payable in foreign currencies.

In February this year guidelines were issued to all U.S. banks by the U.S. government as part of its program to improve the U.S. balance of payments position. In order to provide assurance that the foreign currency operations of our banks would not be inconsistent with these objectives, the Canadian government has requested all chartered banks to conduct their foreign currency operations in such a way that the net position of their head offices and Canadian branches vis-à-vis residents of the United States is not reduced below the position which existed on December 31, 1964.

2. Separate statistics on New York agencies are not maintained by the government or the Bank of Canada. However, over-all statistics of the operations of Canadian banks in foreign currencies have been maintained over many years. More detail statistics have been collected over the last two years.

3. Changes in the statistics of our banks' position in foreign currencies are continually under review by the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada.

4. The statistics mentioned in 3 above include information on the Euro-dollar market. No formal study has been prepared by Canada but Canadian representatives have participated in international discussions concerning the Euro-dollar market.

SATURDAY NIGHT HOCKEY BROADCASTS

Question No. 446—Mr. Dubé:

1. Has the C.B.C. at any time attempted to obtain television rights for the complete Saturday night games during the N.H.L.'s regular season?

2. If so, what is the name of the advertising agency holding television rights with respect to these games?

3. What reasons did this agency put forward to explain its refusal to allow broadcasting of these games in their entirety, if such was the case?

4. How popular are these television hockey game broadcasts, according to "Nielsen's Television Index"?

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Two years ago an agreement was reached which resulted in the Corporation carrying an additional half hour of television time of the regular N.H.L. Saturday night games. This allows the showing of the highlights of the play of the first period prior to air time. The Corporation feels that Saturday evening "prime time" viewing should contain more variety of program subject material than just hockey. Hockey fans receive over an hour and a half of their favourite sport. Other viewers who may not appreciate hockey as much, have other fare presented for their interest and enjoyment. This practice of sharing Saturday evening television programming among viewers of different tastes and interests has been working very well. Naturally, keen hockey fans would like the whole game; but there are many other viewers to consider and the C.B.C. feels it has struck a fair balance in its Saturday evening programming having the total audience in mind.

2. In Canada, the MacLaren Advertising Agency holds the television rights to N.H.L. games.

3. Not applicable.

4. During the season, Saturday night Hockey Telecasts are the most popular programs on the air according to the Nielsen ratings.

LEASING OF MOTOR VEHICLES, KEJIMKUJIK NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 540—Mr. Coates:

1. What were the results of the tender call by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources for the leasing of eleven motor vehicles in connection with the new national park at Kejimkujik?

2. How many tenders were received, what were the names of the tenderers and the prices submitted by each?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. While the original estimation of needs for motor vehicles at the proposed national park at Kejimkujik asked for 11 motor vehicles, the subsequent revaluation allowed the decease of the expenditures involved by eliminating one of these vehicles. The Department therefore issued a tender call for the leasing of ten motor vehicles and as a result of this call contracts are in the process of being issued to the two following successful tenderers:

(a) Rafuse Leasing Limited, Bridgewater, N.S., 5 vehicles: 1, four door car; 1, station wagon; 2, 4x4's, one with winch; and 1, stake body truck.

(b) Silver's Garage Limited, Bridgewater, N.S., 5 vehicles: 5, one-half ton trucks.

2. Eight tenders were received:

	4-door Sedan	Station Wagon	5 Half Ton Truck	4×4 Half Ton With Winch	4×4 Half Ton Without Winch	Stake Body Truck	12 mos. Unit Rate	24 mos. Unit Rate	24 mos. Fleet Rate
Rafuse Leasing Limited, Bridgewater, N.S.	2,712	3,048	12,960	3,240	3,600	4,536	16,524	30,096	29.136
Milfords Garage Limited, Liverpool, N.S.	2,976	3,072	14,280	3,552	3,936	5,400	19,320	33,216	32,480
*Gibbord Leasing Limited, Halifax, N.S.	2,688	3,000	16,200	3,600	3,840	5,400	20,580(1)	34,728(1)	34,728
Fundy Leasing Limited, Truro, N.S.	2,351.76	2,543.52	10,796.40	3,479.52	3,258	5,483.78	(2)	27,919.96	27,912.96
Glasgow Motors Limited, New Glasgow, N.S.	2,399.52	2,550.00	10,798	3,479.76	3,263.76	5,519.76	16,820.16	28,011.60	28,011.60
*Hillcrest Auto Lease Limited, Halifax, N.S.	2,520	2,760	13,200	3,840	3,360	4,920	18,540(1)	30,600	30,600
*Trainor Truck Rentals, Halifax, N.S.	1,530	1,590	7,140	2,112	2,580	2,928	17,880(1)	35,760	35,760
Silver's Garage Limited, Bridgewater, N.S.	—	—	12,000	3,600	3,600	—	(2)	19,200(3)	19,200(3)
Tilden Rent-A-Car Company, Halifax, N.S.	Did not wish to tender.

* Additional charge made for mileage over 20,000 miles in each year.

(1)Plus additional charges for mileage over 20,000 miles in each 12-month period.

(3)Incomplete tender on 7 units only.

Since one of the requirements of the tender was that service, maintenance and repairs for these vehicles must be carried out by a local garage or service centre located within 15 miles of the Park, the two lowest tenderers—Fundy Leasing Limited and Glasgow Motors Limited—were not accepted because they required these vehicles to be taken to Truro, N.S., a distance of 165 miles, for warranty service and major repairs.

FEDERAL GRANTS TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 562—Mr. Mather:

What, by name and in dollars, are the federal grants and/or other payments made to British Columbia?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): The latest Public Accounts of Canada show payments to the Government of the Province of British Columbia of amounts which are listed below. These payments are in respect of conditional and unconditional grant programs and miscellaneous special projects and relate to the fiscal year 1963-64.

	(in thousands of dollars)

CLANDEBOYE INDIAN AGENCY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 640—Mr. Slogan:

1. What are the final figures of expenditures for each band in the Clandeboye Indian Agency for 1964-65 and what are the estimated expenditures for the year 1965-66?

2. What is the breakdown for these expenditures?

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Treasury records of expenditures are not maintained separately by band or reserve. However, the attached tables show expenditures as compiled from agency records.

*COMPENSATING ADJUSTMENT IN PENSIONS

Question No. 641—Mr. Forbes:

Is it the intention of the Government of Canada to make an upward adjustment in pensions to federal superannuated persons, in the near future, commensurate with the increased cost of living?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): The intention of the Government was set forth in the statement by the right hon. Prime Minister on May 3, 1965 as recorded in Hansard at pages 837 and 838.

C.B.C.—MATINÉE HIGHLIGHTS PROGRAM

Question No. 647—Mr. Marcoux:

1. Did one or more C.B.C. radio stations offer to their audience on the "Matinée Highlights" program of May 29, 1965, an interview during which a medical doctor or other person discussed a contraceptive device made of plastic material?

2. Has the C.B.C. regulations based on the Criminal Code governing the content of such programs and, if so, what are the terms of such regulations?

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Yes, this was an interview with Dr. Jack Lippus, who is Associate Professor of Obstetrics and Gynaecology at the Medical School of the State University of New York.

2. The C.B.C. observes the Radio (AM) Broadcasting Regulations of the Board of Broadcast Governors. The program item referred to is covered under Section 5, subsection 1(e) which reads as follows: "No station or network operator shall broadcast any program on the subject of birth control unless that program is presented in a manner appropriate to the medium of broadcasting".

C.N.R.—TICKET QUOTATIONS IN U.S. FUNDS

Question No. 662—Mr. Coates:

1. Did the C.N.R. place an advertisement in the May 29 edition of the Windsor Star advertising a special summer excursion to Niagara Falls with ticket prices payable in United States funds and available for purchase at offices in Windsor, Ontario?

2. Is it the usual practice of the C.N.R. to sell tickets and set out fares for journeys in Canada based on the currency of another country?

3. What great advantage accrues to the C.N.R. to set out its fares in United States funds.

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Yes.

2. No. The advertisement was prepared for use in United States newspapers. A similar ad was scheduled to appear in the Windsor Star quoting Canadian funds. However, the ad that appeared inadvertently quoted United States dollars.

3. None.

PLAN FOR INTEGRATION OF ARMED FORCES

Question No. 665—Mr. MacRae:

1. Is there in existence an overall plan for the integration of the Armed Forces?

2. If so, when was such plan completed and when will it be published?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): 1. The over-all concepts of integration can be found on pages 18 and 19 of the White Paper on Defence issued in March 1964.

2. The first stage, integration of the Armed Forces of Canada under a single Chief of Defence Staff and a single Defence Staff, has been completed. Certain aspects of unification, e.g. recruiting, construction engineering, etc., have been completed and others are close to completion. The new command system has been announced and each field commander is being given a planning staff to assist him in creating the specialized structure of his particular command. The end objective of a single service is firm.

GORDON DEWAR—C.B.C. COMMENTATOR

Question No. 671—Mr. Nugent:

Was Gordon Dewar of Ottawa, who from time to time, acted as a commentator on the C.B.C. removed from the C.B.C.'s (acceptable commentators list) and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the question assumes a list which does not exist. Mr. Dewar's occasional employment by the C.B.C. remains on the same basis as other freelance commentators.

AIRPORT RUNWAYS

Question No. 675—Mr. Irvine:

1. What length of runways are required to accommodate the following aircraft (a) D.C. 8 (b) D.C. 9 (c) Boeing 707?

2. What airports in Canada (civil or military) are capable of accommodating the above listed aircraft?

3. What airports in Canada are under current consideration to be altered to accommodate these aircraft?

4. What work would be necessary in order to make the London, Ontario airport a satisfactory alternate airport for planes destined to Malton airport?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The length of runways required for any of these aircraft is dependent on a number of factors involving stage lengths, operating weights, altitude of the airport and meteorological conditions. In general terms, however, the minimum runway lengths for D.C. 8 and 707 aircraft on domestic services varies from 7000'-8000' and up to 13000' for aircraft on international service. The minimum acceptable for a D.C. 9 is expected to vary between 5000'-6000' and up to 9000' on a long stage length.

2. Based on the runway length point of view the following airports in Canada are capable of accommodating these three types of aircraft in varying degrees of load factors and frequency of service. In some cases, however, bearing capacities may be in question since a requirement to operate aircraft of these types has not yet developed at all locations.

Civil	Military
Abbotsford	Comox
Vancouver	Cold Lake
Calgary	Chatham
Edmonton	Bagotville
Saskatoon	Portage
Winnipeg	Summerside
Toronto	Gimli
Ottawa	Moose Jaw
Windsor	Trenton
Montreal	Namao
Halifax	Shearwater
Gander	Greenwood
Torbay	St. Hubert
Goose Bay	Cartierville
Frobisher	Downsview
North Bay	Argentia (USN)
Whitehorse	Stephenville (USAF)
Churchill

On the same basis as above the following airports in Canada are capable of accommodating the D.C. 9 in varying degrees of load factors and frequency of service.

Victoria	Prince Rupert
Brandon	Quesnel
Fort McMurray	Earlton
Fort Nelson	Forestville
Fort Smith	Fort Chimo
Fort St. John	Fredericton
Grande Prairie	Hamilton
Kamloops	Lakehead
Kelowna	London
Lethbridge	Moncton
Penticton	Mont Joli
Prince George	Muskoka

Questions

Quebec	Sudbury
La Tuque	Killaloe
Regina	Charlottetown
Rivers (Military)	Riviere du Loup
Sandspit	Saint John, N.B.
Terrace	Sault Ste. Marie
The Pas	Sept Iles
Thompson	Sherbrooke
Watson Lake	Sydney
Williams Lake	Timmins
Yellowknife	Trois Rivieres
Val d'Or (Military)	Wiarton
Rouyn	Yarmouth

3. Windsor (Ontario) airport is currently under consideration for alteration to accommodate D.C. 8 aircraft.

The ultimate operational requirements of the D.C. 9 have not yet been firmly established and it is too early to state what alterations will be required, although it is expected that such operational requirements will not involve significant changes in the airports they will serve.

4. No work is required at London, Ontario airport to accommodate aircraft on an alternate basis on the basis on which the flights destined for Toronto are now planned and operated.

PENSIONS TO FORMER ARMED FORCES MEMBERS

Question No. 698—Mr. Winch:

1. How many ex-Armed Service and ex-civilian Armed Service employees were granted pensions in the period 1960 to 1964 inclusive?

2. How many applications for a pension were refused?

3. Were any deserters from the Armed Forces granted pensions and, if so, how many?

4. How many applicants for pension, with honourable discharge, were turned down in the aforementioned period?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): 1. During the period of 1960 to 1964, 7,254 pensions and annuities became payable to former members of the regular forces and 3,303 annuities were authorized for former civilian employees of the Department of National Defence.

2. Pensions under the Defence Services Pension Contribution Act and annuities under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act were not subject to application by the individual. Payment is mandatory to a member of the forces who qualifies for pension or annuity in accordance with the provisions of the act applicable in his case.

3. No deserters from the armed forces were granted pensions or annuities.

4. This question is answered at 2.

[Mr. Cantin.]

*RESEARCH INTO AUTOMOBILE SAFETY

Question No. 703—Mr. Grafftey:

Is the National Research Council conducting any kind of research regarding automobile safety and is it recommending safety devices to be adopted by the automobile industry and, if so, is the Council establishing car and tire construction standards and specifications for safety purposes?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The National Research Council is investigating factors which may cause deterioration of the textile components of automobile and truck seat belts.

The National Research Council does not recommend or approve devices to be adopted by industry nor is it establishing car and tire construction standards and specifications for safety purposes.

*CONSUMER PRICE INDEX

Question No. 704—Mr. Martineau:

1. At what point did the consumer price index stand at mid-May 1965?

2. Has this point been exceeded in the past and, if so, when?

3. At what point did the consumer price index stand at the following dates (a) mid-May 1964 (b) mid-May 1963 (c) mid-May 1962?

4. Has the government been advised by its economists and/or economic forecasters or other experts to expect further rises in the cost of living within the next 12 months and, if so, does the government intend to take any measures to stabilize the cost of living and, what are these measures?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. The consumer price index at mid-May 1965 stood at 138.0 (1949=100).

2. No.

3. (a) 135.0 (b) 132.3 (c) 130.1

4. The government at all times follows closely developments in the economy, including price developments. It is the view of the government that the price situation at the present time remains reasonably stable, and in keeping with the general expectations indicated in the budget speech of April 26, 1965 (Hansard, page 433). The price movements shown in the answer to part 3 of this question compare favourably with those observed in all other advanced countries of the free world, the increase being less than all major countries, with the exception of the United States.

ASSINIBOINE RIVER EROSION

Question No. 721—Mr. Enns:

1. Has the Department of Agriculture received any complaints from farmers along the Assiniboine River, or from municipal councils regarding the severe erosion due to high spring river levels?

2. Has the government any plans to straighten the river channel at specific points so as to reduce and/or eliminate the threat to entire farm yards?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): 1. No official complaints have been received by the Department. Officials of one rural municipality have discussed the problem with officials of P.F.R.A. at the time of dike overtopping during the spring breakup in 1965.

2. The government is continuing its program of dike and channel maintenance on the Assiniboine River. No program of channel straightening is being considered at present in view of the construction of the Portage diversion and the Shellmouth Reservoir projects, which will provide much greater control of the Assiniboine River.

MAIL TRANSPORT, HAMILTON-TORONTO

Question No. 726—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. What vehicles are presently used to transport mail from Hamilton to Toronto?

2. Has consideration been given to transporting mail by autobus between the daytime despatches now scheduled?

Hon. René Tremblay (Postmaster General): 1. The vehicles presently used to transport mail from Hamilton to Toronto are trucks under exclusive contract to carry mail only. They leave Hamilton on the following schedule—12:50 A.M., 7:00 A.M., 6:45 P.M., 9:10 P.M. and 10:50 P.M.

2. Mail service between Hamilton and Toronto is under constant review. We are considering a number of proposals to improve the service between these two cities including the possibility of transporting mail by autobus.

*C.P.R. RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE

Question No. 728—Mr. Fisher:

1. What representations, if any, have been received by the Board of Transport Commissioners regarding the future of rail passenger service provided by the C.P.R.?

2. Has the Board under consideration any moves of any kind or any studies regarding this problem?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): 1. The Board has received representations against reductions in Canadian Pacific's trains Numbers 307-308 Lethbridge-Medicine Hat, trains Numbers 309-310-311-312 Calgary-Lethbridge, trains Numbers 202-203 Montreal-Mégantic, trains Numbers 31-32 Montreal-International Boundary, trains 132-133 and 137-138 Montreal-Ottawa, following the filing of notices thereof; it has also received representations respecting proposed changes and rumors of future changes in Canadian Pacific's train called "The Dominion" and requesting continuation of that train; and representations asking the Board to hold a public inquiry into Canadian Pacific's passenger service.

2. The Board has ordered Canadian Pacific to operate the trains numbered in paragraph 1 and intends to hold public hearings in respect of them. It has also directed inquiries to Canadian Pacific and Canadian National respecting their passenger reservations systems and has that subject under consideration. Advance notice of discontinuance of passenger trains is required by the Board and Canadian Pacific has not filed any such notice respecting "The Dominion" but has informed the Board of changes in head-end traffic and sleeping car and meal service on that train. As the decision as to what trains to run lies with railway management in the first instance, with regulatory power in the Board to intervene and order trains to run where sufficient reason to do so appears, the Board has no plans to institute a public inquiry at this time into the future of Canadian Pacific's passenger service as a whole but will continue to deal with individual trains and take such action as it deems warranted if Canadian Pacific files notice of discontinuance of "The Dominion" or other current passenger services.

INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE ON CAPE BRETON COAL SITUATION

Question No. 731—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. How many members comprise the interdepartmental committee on the Cape Breton coal situation and what are their names, addresses and backgrounds?

2. Who has been retained by the government to advise the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the interdepartmental committee on the Cape Breton coal situation?

3. What are his terms of reference and what are his qualifications and background?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. A committee composed of senior officials from several departments and agencies having a special interest in coal and energy matters, has been engaging itself for some time with the Cape Breton coal situation. More recently a smaller working group of these officials has been looking into particular aspects of the subject. It is not customary to name the members comprising an inter-departmental committee, but the government departments and agencies represented on these committees are as follows:

Dominion Coal Board; Atlantic Development Board; Department of Finance; Department of Labour; National Energy Board; Department of Mines and Technical Surveys; Department of Industry; Department of Trade and Commerce; Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources; Department of External Affairs; Privy Council Office.

2. A reply to this question has already been given and will be found in Hansard of June 8—Dr. J. R. Donald, chairman of the board of J. T. Donald and Company Limited of Montreal has been retained to advise the government on the Cape Breton coal situation.

3. (a) Dr. Donald will make a general study of the Cape Breton coal problem and submit any proposals for the solution thereof and of related social problems. He will draw on the services of various federal agencies concerned with coal and has been directed to hold discussions with provincial authorities, industry officials and such other organizations as may contribute to the solution of the problem.

(b) Dr. Donald is a chemical engineer whose services to the Canadian chemical industry have been recognized by the awarding of the Society of Chemical Industry (Canadian section) Medal in 1952 and the Montreal Medal, CIC, in 1962. In addition to being chairman of the board of J. T. Donald and Company Limited, chemical and research consultants, he is chairman of the board of Donald Inspection Ltd., inspecting and testing engineers, Montreal and Toronto. From 1939 to 1945 Dr. Donald was Director General of Chemicals and Explosives of the Department of Munitions and Supply, and from 1951 to 1952 he was Director of Chemicals and Explosives of the Department of Defence Production.

SUSSEX, N.B.—VISIT BY B. AND B. COMMISSION STAFF

Question No. 735—Mr. Fairweather:

Did members of the staff of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism visit the Town of Sussex, N.B. recently and, if so, (a) what was the purpose of the visit (b) who made the visit (c) how many interviews were held with (i) children (ii) adults (d) did the staff members carry any identification or authorization from the Royal Commission explaining the purpose of their visit (e) did the staff members call on the Mayor of Sussex or any other town officers or officials (f) did the staff members seek permission from the Board of School Trustees before conducting interviews in the school (g) did the interviews include such questions as "How did you vote in the last federal and provincial elections" (h) what relevancy does the answer to these questions have to the terms of reference of the Royal Commission?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): I am informed by the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism as follows:

(a) and (b) Two persons carrying out research on behalf of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism visited the town of Sussex, New Brunswick, to conduct interviews with students and adults. These interviews were part of a survey on language and cultural aspects of education among children and parents of different ethnic and regional backgrounds. Sussex was one of the communities selected for this study.

(c) 55 interviews with children and 53 interviews with parents.

(d) The senior associate carried written authorization.

(e) and (f) No; this study is being conducted after consultation with officials in the provincial Department of Education and the local school, and with their co-operation.

(g) One question was included in the questionnaire for the parents.

(h) This question is included for the purpose of checking the representativeness of the group of persons interviewed by a comparison with voting results in the community.

NEW LIGHTING FACILITIES, PICTOU ISLAND, N.S.

Question No. 737—Mr. MacEwan:

Is it the intention of the Department of Transport to instal new lighting facilities at the west end of Pictou Island, N.S., in place of the present facilities and, if so, what type of new equipment will be placed there and when will this work be carried out?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Department is now installing a new steel tower at Pictou Island west end to replace the former lighthouse and a 350 mm lantern with triple acetylene burner will be fitted and should be in operation within a week or ten days. A substantial increase in light intensity will result.

ADDRESS OF WORLD EXHIBITION CORPORATION

Question No. 739—Mr. Coates:

Is it necessary for the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition in its Expo Digest to carry the following address "Montreal (Quebec) Canada" and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The address "Montreal (Quebec) Canada" is used on the Expo Digest because Article No. 66, of the Canadian Postal Guide requires that: "The full title, place, date of publication and the distinguishing number of the issue must be prominently printed on every issue."

HARBOUR IMPROVEMENTS, MCBETH POINT, MAN.

Question No. 759—Mr. Stefanson:

Has the government any plans for improving the break water and harbour facilities at McBeth Point on Lake Winnipeg, Manitoba, and if so, what is the (a) nature of this work (b) estimated cost (c) when will it be carried out?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Public Works): The situation at McBeth Point has not changed since the answer given to Question No. 1535 which appeared on page 5809 of Hansard for July 22, 1964.

INVESTIGATION OF HISTORIC MOUNDS, RAINY RIVER, ONT.

Question No. 764—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources received representations from Northwestern Ontario, and particularly from Rainy River asking for a well-organized and large-scale campaign by agencies under the Minister's responsibility to investigate, succour and display great numbers of historic mounds erected by an ancient people in the area?

2. If so, what are the mounds, where exactly are they located and in what numbers; what investigations have been carried on so far by any persons or agencies to the Department's knowledge; what provisions have been made or are under consideration by the department with regard to these sites?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. Yes, my Parliamentary Secretary and myself have both received several representations during the past year requesting government assistance in the preservation of these mounds. The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, the Member for Kenora-Rainy River, and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, the hon. Member for Fort William, have taken a particular interest in this matter.

2. Eleven mounds are known to exist near Barwick, Ontario, on the north bank of the Rainy River. The Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada has advised me that these mounds may be of great historical importance and has recommended archaeological investigation to determine whether or not such evaluation is correct. My Department proposes to enter into a contract with the Royal Ontario Museum for undertaking an archaeological excavation of several of these mounds. I have approached the officials of the Museum in this regard and I am awaiting their reply.

Questions

COMMERCIAL ENTERPRISES IN NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 766—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. What is the government's policy with respect to Canadian ownership and non-Canadian ownership of commercial enterprises in Canada's National Parks?

2. How would this policy apply in the case of the offer by Greyhound Corporation of the United States to purchase Brewster Transport Co. Ltd. and the Brewster Rocky Mountain Gray Line Ltd., of Banff, Alberta?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. The Government's policy with respect to Canadian ownership and non-Canadian ownership of commercial concessions in Canada's national parks is the same as its policy toward such ownership elsewhere in Canada.

2. Our information is that negotiations have been conducted by Brewster Transport Co. Ltd. and the Brewster Rocky Mountain Gray Line Ltd., of Banff, Alberta, with a Canadian company.

DREDGING, MACDONALD POND, N.S.

Question No. 767—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Is it the intention of the Department of Public Works to carry out dredging at Macdonald's Pond, Indian Brook, Victoria County, Nova Scotia and, if so, when?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Public Works): Yes. The work is now under way and is expected to be completed by the end of June.

SILVER JUBILEE, CANADIAN PROVOST CORPS

Question No. 769—Mr. Caouette:

1. On what date did the Canadian Provost Corps celebrate its silver Jubilee?

2. What language was used in the lettering of the medallions and transfers commemorating this occasion and what were the reasons thereof?

3. To whom were these medallions and transfers distributed?

4. Have any Franch Canadians belonged to this military unit?

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. 15 June, 1965.

2. English. The title on the Canadian Provost Corps badge and the Corps motto are in English only.

3. To Canadian Provost Corps Regular and Militia units.

4. Yes.

[English]

AIDS TO NAVIGATION, LAKE WINNIPEG, MAN.

Question No. 771—Mr. Stefanson:

Has any money been allocated for the aids to navigation program for Lake Winnipeg, Manitoba and adjoining rivers for the 1965-66 fiscal year and, if so, (a) how much, and (b) what are the locations and types of projects planned under the program for the 1965-66 fiscal year?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Yes, (a) $17,000. (b) New range lights at Red River, Winnipeg Beach, Berens River, Refuge Harbour, Warrens Landing lower and upper, and Winnipegosis Lake.

New towers and lights at Willow Point, Lunch Point and Easterville Range.

Lighted buoys at Five Mile Reef, Weasel Island and Dog Point, Lake Winnipegosis.

Installation of commercial power at Hecla Island Wharf, Pine Dock and Matheson Island Lights.

Minor repairs, painting and brushing at Full Harbour, Red Rock Island, Warrens Landing, Red River Floodway, Mission Point, Papoose Channel, Red River buoys, Big Black River, Fisher River, Dauphin River, Gimli Harbour, Winnipeg Beach and Red River Range.

IMPORTS OF AUTOMOBILE PARTS

Question No. 775—Mr. Simpson:

LABOUR CODE COVERAGE OF C.B.C. PERSONNEL

Question No. 830—Mr. McCutcheon:

Will employees of the C.B.C. come under the provisions of the Canada Labour Standards Code Act, and, if so, will personnel under contract to the C.B.C. for 52 weeks or less in any given year and who work in excess of 40 hours during a five day week receive overtime at 1½ times their basic hourly rate or its equivalent?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that its employees come under the provisions of the Canada Labour Standards Code Act.

Employees who work in excess of 40 hours in a five day week will receive overtime at the 1½ rate except those who may be excluded from the application of the Act as identified in a submission the Corporation is presently putting forward for suspension on application of Part 1 of the Act for certain categories of employees who fall under the Act but who must be exempted from the application of Part 1 because of the nature of their work.

The application of the Act to personnel under contract for less than 52 weeks is under review and an interpretation of its application here will be called for.

All other employees, i.e. on 52 weeks of employment in a year classified as employees, within the meaning of the Act, will be governed by its provisions except as specified as above.

MONORAIL AND MOVING SIDEWALK FOR EXPO '67

Question No. 851—Mr. Coates:

1. Has the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition requested the federal government to approve the purchases of a miniature monorail and a moving sidewalk?

2. What is the estimated cost of the monorail and moving sidewalk?

3. Has a decision been reached by the government and what is the federal participation if such a decision has been reached?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1. Yes.

2. Estimated cost, which includes capital and operating costs, is $10,000,000; estimated revenue including salvage value is $10,240,000; estimated profit $240,000.

3. The purchase of a secondary transit system was approved by Order in Council P.C. 1965-660.

Federal participation is expected to be nil since revenues and salvage exceed cost.

FEDERAL COMMITMENT RESPECTING DEFICIT, EXPO '67

Question No. 852—Mr. Coates:

1. What is the federal government's commitment with regard to any deficit that might result from Expo '67?

2. Has an estimate of the deficit been made by officials of Expo '67 and, if so, what is this estimate?

3. What is the breakdown of participation between the federal government and the government of the Province of Quebec and the City of Montreal?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. The Federal Government's commitment is 50 per cent of the deficit.

2. The estimates of cost and revenues have been under constant review since December 1963 when the master plan for the Exhibition was submitted to and approved by the three governments. At this date, the revenues are estimated at $184,276,000 and the expenditures are estimated at $244,092,000. The net cost to the three governments sponsoring Expo '67 is placed at $59,816,000.

Individual costs are thus estimated at $29,908,000 for the Federal Government, $22,431,000 for the Government of the Province of Quebec and $7,477,000 for the City of Montreal.

3. See answer to Part 2.

TOTAL COST OF EXPO '67

Question No. 853—Mr. Coates:

1. Has the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition prepared an estimate of the total cost of Expo '67?

2. If such an estimate has been made, what is the amount and what was the original amount established in 1963?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. Yes.

2. The total cost at today's estimate is $59,816,000, as compared to the estimate in 1963 of $47,534,000.

EXPO '67—EMPLOYEES, WAGES, ETC.

Question No. 854—Mr. Coates:

2. What is the estimated total employment by the Corporation in 1967?

3. What is the total amount of wages, salaries and expenses of individuals employed by the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition for 1964?

4. What is the total amount of wages, salaries and expenses of individuals employed by the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition for the first five months of 1965?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. The number of administrative and operating employees of the Corporation at the present time is 650.

2. The estimated total employment of administrative and operating employees of the Corporation in 1967 is 1,500.

Questions

3. The total amount of wages, salaries and expenses of individuals employed by the Corporation for the full year 1964 was $3,375,379.

4. The total amount of wages, salaries and expenses of individuals employed by the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition for the first five months of 1965 is $2,148,446.

COST OF HABITAT '67

Question No. 855—Mr. Coates:

1. What is the estimated cost of Habitat '67?
2. What is the estimate of the resale value of Habitat 1967 and who will bear the loss if one should occur?
3. Is it correct that a swimming pool will be constructed with each unit of Habitat 1967 and what is the estimated cost of the swimming pools which will be constructed?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. The estimated cost of Habitat '67 is $13,200,000.

2. The resale value of Habitat '67 is presently estimated at $8,000,000. If a deficit does in fact occur it will be shared by the Federal Government 50 per cent, the Provincial Government 37½ per cent and the City of Montreal 12½ per cent. Provision for a deficit is already included in the Corporation's estimates.

3. No.

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO TUNNEL CONSTRUCTION, EXPO '67

Question No. 856—Mr. Coates:

Is the Government of Canada assisting either the Government of the Province of Quebec, or the City of Montreal, in the construction of a subway tunnel to St. Helen's Island, the site of Expo '67 and, if so, what is the estimated contribution of the federal government in this regard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The Government of Canada is not assisting the Province of Quebec or the City of Montreal in the construction of a subway tunnel to St. Helen's Island.

PROVINCIAL SALES TAX ON PURCHASES, EXPO '67

Question No. 857—Mr. Coates:

Is it the intention of the Government of the Province of Quebec to collect a sales tax on purchases made at Expo '67?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Provincial sales taxes are not paid by the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition, the Federal and Provincial Governments or foreign exhibitors.

17. If so, to what other sections at H.M.C.S. Shearwater does this ruling apply?

Return tabled.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I rise on a point of order. I wish to bring to the attention of the Government, and in particular of the Acting Prime Minister who is in charge of the Government these days, the fact that despite the answers which have been forthcoming to the questions, written and oral, which appear on the order paper, there are still approximately 167 questions which remain to be answered. Of these 24 are two months old, 51 are approximately one month old, and some 89 are between three days and two weeks old.

I submit that in return for co-operation in cutting down the length of the oral question period we expected that this Government and its ministers would show some improvement in answering promptly the questions which are placed on the order paper. But gentlemen opposite have evidently not mended their ways. The presence on the order paper of so many questions still to be answered is a sign of negligence on the part of ministers. It is far too large a number of questions to have remained unanswered for such long periods. I appeal to the Acting Prime Minister, if he has any influence with his colleagues, and within his own department, to try to rectify this situation.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I did not rise to point out that the hon. gentleman's statement was, of course, out of order. I did not raise a point of order because I knew the hon. gentleman was trying to help the Government. I would simply ask him to recall that we now have more questions than we ever had before. This was a constant source of complaint when we sat on the other side of the House. In any event, since the hon. gentleman has approached this problem in a constructive way I will reply in an equally constructive manner by undertaking to look into it at once.

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a question of privilege at this point.

On May 20 last, I put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) asking him if lawyer Paul Lacoste, of Montreal, was still co-secretary of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. At that time, the Prime Minister replied that he would find out and give me a reply shortly.

Having had no reply, I had a starred question put on the order paper on June 16, 1965. That question has remained unanswered, and I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Martin) might be willing to wake up a few sleepy heads in order that I might obtain a reply to my question.

[English]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think you will agree that under the new rules this question requires notice to be served.

Mr. Aiken: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is no doubt about that. I will take the question as notice.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, surely—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Surely we can make faster progress. We have heard the complaint, which is what it amounts to.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, that starred question was answered last week.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ricard: If this is the case, Mr. Speaker, I apologize; but I do not think it was answered —not in my presence, anyway.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMMIGRATION

TORONTO—CONSIDERATION OF STATUS OF DUANE DOYLE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre very courteously reminded me today of an answer I had promised some weeks ago would be given, but which I have not yet given. On May 7 he asked me to check into the case of one Duane Doyle. I have looked into the case, and would inform the hon. Member and others interested that Mr. Doyle and his family left Canada, actually they returned to the United States on June 13. It is quite possible that they will return to Canada this fall. They say they like this country and want to settle here as landed immigrants. If they return their case will start de novo.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DORION INQUIRY—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the first question I direct to the Acting Prime Minister, and ask him whether the report of the inquiry held by Mr. Justice Dorion is now available. Has the Government this report in its possession, and were the press references correct to the effect that this report would be made available today?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that the Government has not yet received the report of the Royal Commission.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is there any foundation for what is stated in the press, that it is to be made available at four o'clock tomorrow—I think that is the Canadian Press report—or does the Government not intend to have this report produced before the adjournment of this particular portion of the session?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There would be no basis for the last observation, Mr. Speaker. The report has not yet been received.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of the question period today I asked the Acting Prime Minister whether the Dorion Commission report had been made available for the Government, and he said no. I now direct the question to the Minister of Justice, and ask him whether he has had a copy of the report, as a Member of the Government, or a summary of the findings; and if so when?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the only summary or alleged summary I have ever seen was the alleged leak drawn to our attention by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I never drew it to the attention of the House; I read it in the newspaper, and I was a long way off at the time. I asked the Minister, has he seen a summary or precis of the recommendations or findings; that was the question?

Mr. Favreau: I never saw any summary or part or preview of the report.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question concerning the Dorion report. What did he mean by a statement that is reported in the Winnipeg Tribune of June 19, 1965, and I quote:

> I cannot comment even slightly about it, but the earlier it is tabled, the better. You can gather from that what I think its conclusions will be.

May I ask the Minister of Justice if that does not indicate that he has some prior knowledge with regard to the conclusions of the report?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is real McCarthyism.

Mr. MacEwan: You are an expert; you ought to know.

Mr. Favreau: It only indicates, Mr. Speaker, a restful state of mind in relation to what I know are the actions I have taken.

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY AS TO ACTIVITIES OF AREA DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Industry which is of interest to quite a number of organizations in western Canada. How many representatives of the Area Development Agency of the Department of Industry are employed in promoting industrial development in Canada? What particular form of organization is being recommended by these officials to municipal councils, Chambers of Commerce and other organizations interested in this question?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Surely this is a good type of question for the order paper. However, in view of the fact that there may be a short delay, if the Minister is prepared to answer perhaps it might be useful to clear the question.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I will clear the question. There are six representatives of the Area Development Agency employed in the manner outlined in the hon. gentleman's question. The type of organization recommended varies with the size of the town or city, but generally it is suggested that each community form an independent industrial commission composed of representatives from the city or town council and the local Board of Trade or Chamber of Commerce, as the case may be, for the purpose of fostering the development of industry within the community.

If warranted, a recommendation may be made that the community consider hiring of a part time or full time industrial commissioner who can take the lead in carrying out industrial development work. In addition, in co-operation with provincial authorities the officers of the Area Development Agency have also indicated guide lines which interested communities might follow in outlining to industry the basic facilities and services which are available within an area.

In the case of the Province from which the hon. Member comes, in particular, the area development officer has been taking an extended tour through the main centres in the Province with the purpose of familiarizing himself with business and economic activities and also to advise these communities how they might best attract industries to their area. The tour has been arranged with the full knowledge and co-operation of the British Columbia Department of Industry and Commerce.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

THEFT OF COBALT CONCENTRATE AT DELORO, ONT.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, may I first take this somewhat belated opportunity of welcoming you back today from the functions in connection with the 700th anniversary of the first parliament, and the business meetings you had in Paris and Geneva, which we hope reached profitable conclusions.

My question today is to the Minister of Industry and possibly to the Minister of Justice. On four different occasions, the first being on May 11, I have requested information regarding the theft of 150 tons of cobalt contained in some 245 barrels or drums. I think it was on June 15, the day of my last question that the Minister of Industry said he would have a statement the following day. We are still waiting for some information about this preposterous situation, where strategic material was taken in such quantity and we cannot get any information about it.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think, as the House will be aware, that the cobalt in question was ordered at a time when cobalt was considered a strategic material to be stockpiled. Since then, however, the production of cobalt throughout the world has reached a point where it is no longer considered a strategic material—

Mr. Starr: It is stealable now, is it?

Mr. Drury: —any more than would be nickel, chromium, tungsten or molybdenum. The 150 tons in question was in the custody of the producer and refiner of cobalt. It has disappeared from their premises. The Ontario Provincial Police have been assiduously undertaking an investigation of this theft. The Government has indicated to the company that it holds it responsible for the return of the cobalt, and we are now awaiting the results of the investigation by the Ontario Provincial Police.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, it is an intriguing question and I cannot interpret from the Minister's answer whether, strategic or not, this loss can be excused. On June 15 I asked who are the users of cobalt, locally or internationally, in so far as wanting such material in large quantity is concerned.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, without going into a lecture I might say that any industrialized nation is a substantial user of cobalt. This metal is used principally as an alloying element in many types of high speed steels, heat-resisting alloys and permanent magnet alloys. Dealing with the consumption of cobalt, I am told it is approximately 12,000 tons annually, and that this loss represents, as the hon. Member will understand, a very small fraction of the annual consumption of cobalt by industrialized nations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is its value?

Mr. Thompson: It involves some $100,000 of taxpayers' money.

Inquiries of the Ministry

URANIUM

PROGRESS OF DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING SALE TO FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Martin).

It seems to me that it is in the interest of the house to know what is the present standing of the negotiations with France respecting this famous Canadian uranium sale contract. Are those negotiations definitely broken off or are they still going on?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall ask my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce to answer that question.

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, discussions are proceeding between some of the Canadian uranium mines and the French Government, I am informed, on the basis of the declaration of policy made by the Canadian Government which I have reported to this House.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has not the French government notified Canada that it will not accept the principle of inspection; and is it not a fact that at this very time EURATOM is giving consideration to this matter so that an arrangement might possibly be made through the instrumentality of that body?

Mr. Sharp: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not quite understand the purport of the right hon. gentleman's question. Would he mind repeating it?

Mr. Diefenbaker: What I am saying is this. Is it not a fact that every indication has been given by the Government of France that it will not accept the principle of inspection by Canada to assure that uranium sold to that country shall be used for civil purposes? Second, with a view to resolving that difficulty, is it not the case that EURATOM has entered the equation, and that through that organization it may be possible to work out a plan which will be satisfactory to the Republic of France?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm what the right hon. gentleman has said. During the discussions with the French Government which I had in Paris we discussed various forms of control, but did not at that time reach any agreement as to what would be a suitable method of control. The French Government did express its objection to one particular form, but no agreement has yet been reached as to which of the remaining forms might be suitable.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One further question on that. What was the specific plan of inspection to which the French Government objected?

Mr. Sharp: The French Government indicated to us that it was not prepared to accept the international Atomic energy agency.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Could the Minister of Trade and Commerce tell us whether this control and inspection policy regarding uranium to be sold to France has been requested, suggested or dictated to the Canadian government by the American government?

Are the United States demanding this control on the sale of Canadian uranium to France?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. There were C.T.V. news reports over the week end which indicated that France had rejected Canadian control but that she would accept EURATOM inspection for the purposes mentioned. I should like to know whether this has been conveyed to the Canadian Government, also whether the Canadian Government accepted the principle of EURATOM carrying out the inspection.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, so far as I am aware we have had no such message from the French Government. However, perhaps I ought to say that the Canadian Government has not insisted upon a bilateral arrangement whereby Canadians would do the inspection. We would be prepared to consider alternative forms of control. I am not certain, of course, whether the controls under EURATOM would be satisfactory, but they are certainly open for discussion.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REPORTED DISCRIMINATION BY AIR LINES AGAINST MARRIED WOMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, a week ago last Monday the Acting

Prime Minister informed me that the question I had asked some week and a half ago relative to the Government's attitude on discrimination against married women in employment, or against women in employment who were intending to get married, would be answered by the Minister of Labour not later than today. Could I ask the Minister of Labour for his reply?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Secretary of State for External Affairs would expect me to be more qualified than he on a subject dealing with the employment status of married women, but I have examined the arbitration award which has been the basis for this decision and there are, as I understand it, arguments on both sides of the question. In this case the arbitrator, or the board, quoted extensively from a finding that had been made in a similar case indicating the reasons, from the point of view of health and safety on the part of the personnel and on the part of passengers, that in the view of the arbitrator justified this award. In this case I have received representations, and I have suggested that in this particular context an effort ought to be made to settle the matter within the collective agreement. But I agree, as has been pointed out in another award in France, that this matter does raise questions of policy with respect to human rights that I cannot possibly deal with on the orders of the day.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. That was not my basic question. My question was this. In view of the arbitration decision would the Government take under consideration amending the Bill of Rights or the appropriate bill so as to remove discrimination against women in employment because of their single or married status? That was my question. Would the Minister answer that question, or take it under consideration?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider whether there is any violation under existing statutes and whether any steps can be taken to meet the point made by my hon. friend.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

APPLICATION TO C.N.R. HOTEL, ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph P. O'Keefe (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Labour. Can the Minister assure the House and the employees of the Canadian National's Newfoundland hotel in St. John's that they will be included under the provisions of the minimum wage legislation in the new Canada Labour Code?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it the hotel in question is a C.N.R. hotel and for that reason will come under the application of the Canada Labour Code.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

COMMUNICATIONS WITH QUEBEC RESPECTING OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister.

Could he tell the house whether or not he has received a communication from the Quebec government or the premier of that province, Mr. Lesage, concerning offshore resources? Could he tell us if the Quebec government has indicated that it had exclusive jurisdiction over those resources?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this question as notice.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Since he is now the head of the government in the absence of the right hon. Prime Minister, does the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Martin) intend to settle that matter privately with the province of Quebec and to try to convince the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) to leave to the province its long standing jurisdiction over its offshore as well as its underground resources?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As my friend is well aware, Mr. Speaker, my colleague is a minister and a very conscientious man—

Mr. Grégoire: It does not show.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He knows his obligations and he tries to do all he can in the interests of the country and of all Canadians.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Has the Acting Prime Minister had the opportunity to consider the rather astonishing statement made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in the house, last Friday, when he declared that those rights belonged to the federal government?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I find the question interesting but, to my regret, I did not hear that statement.

[English]

SPORTS

CANADIAN APPLICATION TO HOLD 1968 WINTER OLYMPICS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister, and its great urgency is based on the forthcoming meeting of the International Olympic Committee. I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether Canada still has a chance to act as host to the 1968 winter Olympic games?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend gave me notice of this question and I thought I had indicated that I was looking into the matter.

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question. While the Minister is looking into the matter would he try to ascertain for the House whether France cannot act as host to the winter Olympic games in 1968 because of problems relating to the recognition of East Germany?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I would doubt that conclusion, but I will include that in my researches.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister answer the question before the House adjourns, either tomorrow or the next day?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would hope so, Mr. Speaker.

AIR TRANSPORT

CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES SERVICE TO THE NETHERLANDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of an article written by Gerald Waring which appears in the current issue of Maclean's magazine. When the Minister announced the Government's new air transport policy, as he did on June 1, indicating that Air Canada would have complete control of air services from Canada to northern, western and eastern Europe with the single exception that Canadian Pacific Airlines would serve the Netherlands, did he refer only to such service as the C.P.A. already is flying over the Pole to the Netherlands, or did he mean something more than he said on that occasion?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is a bilateral arrangement with the Netherlands, and it is intended that any service there may be between Canada and the Netherlands will be provided by Canadian Pacific Airlines, just as it is intended that any service between the United Kingdom and Canada and between Canada and France will be provided by Air Canada. Any expansion of any of these services will be provided by the air line in question.

Mr. Knowles: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister not realize that if Canadian Pacific Airlines is permitted to fly from Montreal to Amsterdam this is a violation of the principle that the Government has laid down with respect to the right of Air Canada to serve northern, western and central Europe?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do not have any such realization. I said quite clearly in my statement that this was an exception to the principle, and it is an exception.

Mr. Knowles: I have a further supplementary question. In view of the Minister's suggestion that he made a clear statement, does he not realize that by that statement he misled the House?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I do not, Sir. I do not think my words bear any such interpretation. If the hon. gentleman drew a wrong inference from my words, I cannot be blamed for that.

Mr. Knowles: I drew the inference from what the Minister said.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO STUDY RESPECTING ATLANTIC PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question, but first of all I would like to point out to the house that for the first time in history a group of students from 20 secondary schools in Gaspesia are here this afternoon and are listening to the debates of the house. I wish to welcome these students most cordially in Ottawa.

Now I wish to put my question to the Minister of Transport.

Will the studies on transportation in the Atlantic provinces which were announced by the Minister on June 8 include the areas south of the St. Lawrence river and east of Lévis, in the province of Quebec?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the course of the studies on the problems and needs in the field of transportation in the Atlantic provinces account will have to be taken of the Maritime Freight Rates Act and also of possible amendments of this act.

As the Maritime Freight Rates Act applies in the Quebec areas located south of the St. Lawrence river and east of Lévis, account will also have to be taken of the requirements of these areas as concerns railway transportation, as well as of some other related factors.

I have discussed this problem with the Premier of Quebec and he shares my point of view.

[English]

CHAMPLAIN WATERWAY—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Is the minister in a position to tell us whether the report of the International Bureau of Studies of the Champlain waterway which was supposed to be submitted by the Joint International Commission at the end of June will be made public shortly?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. After inquiring from the Joint International Commission, I can say that the latter will not be in a position, of course, to make any decision with regard to the report before receiving it.

When it has received and studied the report it will be able to decide what attitude to take.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

Considering the importance of that project for members representing eastern ridings as well as for the development of the country, I wonder whether the report could be distributed to all members of the House as soon as it is submitted to the Commission so that we could read it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

SASKATCHEWAN—REPORTED SHORTAGE OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a very urgent question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce based on a telegram which was forwarded to me this morning, to the effect that the problem of the availability of box cars to move grain from eastern Saskatchewan has become very acute. Wheat pool committees from Creelman, Osage, Fillmore, Heward and Tyvan have wired to say that at least 570 cars will be required to move the grain out of that area alone before the end of the crop year. Will the Minister, working in conjunction with the Minister of Transport, give this serious matter immediate attention?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received by telephone the telegram referred to by my hon. friend, and the matter is already in hand.

REPORTED DROP IN GRAIN DELIVERIES TO WEST COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the situation regarding grain deliveries through the west coast deteriorated during the past week or so, and could the Minister indicate what steps or action the Government is contemplating to meet this situation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in fact the movement of cars to the west coast has been improving recently. As hon. gentlemen may know, the railway companies and the elevator companies had been anticipating a strike for some time and had held up the movement of cars because they did not want them piling up in Vancouver. But in recent days and weeks the movement has increased so, however paradoxical it may seem, the situation has improved.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SHIPPING

INQUIRY AS TO RESUMPTION OF SHIPBUILDING SUBSIDIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the busy Minister of Transport. In view of the reported statement by the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repair Association that unless the commercial shipbuilding subsidy is restored by 1966 orders will be placed in the United Kingdom, is it the Government's intention to end the suspension of this subsidy in order to encourage the placing of orders with Canadian shipyards, as was the intention when these subsidies were introduced?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Government is giving most urgent consideration to the question of the form and nature of federal assistance to Canadian shipbuilding and is quite aware of the statement which the hon. Member has repeated today. I should like to remind the House again, as I have done on several occasions, that the provisions of the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act are available to shipbuilders at the present time.

Mr. MacEwan: I have a supplementary question. Can the Minister give the House any idea as to when the interdepartmental committee on this matter will be reporting to the Minister and to the Government?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I know from personal experience and from observation of the experiences of some other Ministers of this and other Governments that it is very hazardous to give these target dates. All I can say is that I hope it will be soon.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

WHITEHORSE—ACTION TO BE TAKEN FOLLOWING ACQUITTAL OF OFFICIAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration which is also of interest to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that the trial of Mr. William Grant has now been concluded in Whitehorse, does the Minister intend to make any amendments for what the Edmonton Journal has termed an outrageous prosecution?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I cannot of course accept a conclusion reached by a newspaper, no matter how worthy that newspaper might be. I may say I have asked for a transcript of part of the proceedings and the matter, will then be considered. When a decision has been made it will be announced, I hope at an early date.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister during his consideration of this matter also seriously consider the reinstatement of Mr. Grant in his former position?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I have said that the matter would be given consideration and study at an early date. An announcement will be made very quickly in respect of the position we will take.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO NAMING OF AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Government House Leader or the Liberal Whip when the standing committee on agriculture is to be set up. The members of all the other committees with the exception of this one were named recently, and perhaps we could now have some indication as to when nominations and the motion are to be made to set up this committee.

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I understand there have been some inconclusive discussions regarding the number of members of different parties to be represented on this committee on the basis of a larger committee than was originally suggested. I have a resolution which I am prepared to move at any time.

REDISTRIBUTION

ONTARIO—PUBLICATION OF MAPS IN WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Secretary of State whether he has heard anything more about the decision of the Redistribution Commission of Ontario regarding the publishing of certain new maps in weekly newspapers of this province.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as I promised I have communicated with Hon. Mr. Justice Richardson, Chairman of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, and he has told me that representations by the weekly press were received too late to be considered when the new maps were published in the daily press. The Commission has now reconsidered the matter and has decided not to advertise in the weekly press because it would involve setting a new date for public hearings, which would cause undesirable confusion in view of the date already indicated in the daily press.

Mr. Starr: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I believe the excuse that has been given for not publishing these maps in the weekly press in ridings where no other newspaper serves the area is a very lame excuse.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Justice Richardson has said he will take direction from the Government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LABOUR RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON RAILWAY RUNTHROUGHS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): May I ask the Minister of Labour when he expects to have the report from Mr. Justice Freedman on the railway runthroughs, and whether the promise he made to amend the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act depends on the recommendations in that report?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The latest information I have is that Justice Freedman expects to bring down his report by October 1. The comments I made in connection with the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act were made before the railway unions, and in those comments I raised questions which were obviously under discussion by the Commission, and have been under discussion.

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE WIDENING OF STRIKE OF GRAIN HANDLERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of some urgency that I should like to address to the Minister of Labour. It has to do with the shipment of Prairie grain from the port of Vancouver. The question is, has the Minister received, as some Members have, a complaint from the union involved in connection with grain shipments at Vancouver, to the effect that tactics are being used by the elevator concerned which may lead to the widening of the strike? What is the situation there with regard to an early settlement?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): There has been a communication that might bear the interpretation mentioned by my hon. friend, and because it dealt with matters largely within the jurisdiction of his Department an answer has been sent to the union on this matter by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

In connection with the settlement of the dispute, the mediator is still conducting negotiations on the West Coast with a view to a settlement.

Mr. Mather: I wonder if we could have the substance of the reply sent by the Minister of Trade and Commerce with regard to the first question.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I do not like to answer an unspecified question. I would be happy to answer if one is put to me.

Mr. Mather: The question was, has the Minister received a complaint from the grain handlers union involved to the effect that the elevator company is using tactics which may widen the dispute and further delay the shipment of grain from Vancouver? I understood the Minister of Labour to say that the Minister of Trade and Commerce had replied to this complaint and I wondered what his reply was.

Mr. Sharp: My hon. friend quite rightly said the telegram could bear that interpretation. The particular point, I think, that was in the mind of the hon. Member in asking this question was the suggestion in the telegram that cars were being diverted from the Alberta Wheat Pool elevator to other elevators. In my reply I said I was aware of the one case that they had mentioned in their telegram, and if there were any others I would have them investigated.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO U.S. REACTION TO BANK ACT AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has received any official or unofficial representations from the Government of the United States with regard to the retroactive provisions of the new Bank Act regarding the Mercantile Bank. If so, what has been the representation and what has been his reply?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert: Has the Minister received any information that there may be action taken by the United States Government in retaliation against Canadian agencies?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PRESENTATION OF FILM ON SAFER AUTOMOBILE CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State? Does the English network of the C.B.C. intend to show once again the National Film Board's film entitled "Every second car" designed to promote safe automobile designs?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that this film will be shown once again today.

Mr. Marcoux: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Is the intention of the government to ask the National Film Board to translate this documentary film, for the C.B.C. would have great interest in showing that film on its French network?

Mr. Lamontagne: I will be pleased to convey this request to the government film commissioner.

NATIONAL ANTHEM

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSALS FOR ADOPTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister.

We were promised a national flag and a national anthem within two years after the Liberal party's taking office and that delay expired over two months ago. Moreover, there is not on the order paper any measure indicating the government's desire to propose the adoption of a national anthem by both houses this year. Therefore, can the Acting Prime Minister tell us when the national anthem will be adopted by Parliament and also if that will be before the summer recess?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this proposal is contained in the speech from the throne and, if I am not mistaken, that matter was discussed recently on the orders of the day.

However, if this answer is not satisfactory to my hon. friend maybe I could add to it tomorrow.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question.

Since the two year delay the government had set for action expired over two months ago, does the government intend to respect as much as possible that promise at least, and give our country a national anthem before the summer recess?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, this project has been announced in the speech from the throne.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SEAFARERS BUILDING CORPORATION—NON-COMPLIANCE WITH COMPANIES LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State concerning the inquiry I made of him last week with respect to possible action, under the provisions of the Companies Act, against the S.I.U. Building Corporation.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the hon. Member that summaries for the periods ending March 31, 1964 and March 31, 1965 were received in the Department on June 21 last. The company is now in good standing.

Mr. Nielsen: May I direct a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If these summaries were received on the 21st, this was prior to the answer given in the House to the question put on the order paper by the hon. Member for Kootenay West. Why was this information not provided to the House on that occasion?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I wish to add to my first reply and say that the Department of the Secretary of State has never prosecuted any company or any director or any officer for default in filing annual summaries. This was mainly due to the difficulty in enforcement of the penalty provisions under the old Companies Act. The new Corporations Act, which comes into force July 1, 1965, provides new and more easily enforceable sanctions in this respect.

Mr. Nielsen: As a last supplementary, now that the Government is in possession of this information will it tell the House whether Hal Banks is on the directorship of the corporation?

Mr. Lamontagne: I will take notice of this question, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN FLAG

REQUEST FOR INSTRUCTIONS IN PROPER USAGE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State, but before doing so I wish to call to the house's attention the presence of an important delegation of students from the Gaspé peninsula and to wish them a most pleasant stay in the national capital.

Will the government follow up the numerous requests and suggestions made by various Canadian associations, namely the district Chamber of Commerce of the Gaspé peninsula, for the establishment of regulations concerning the use of the Canadian flag with a view to surrounding our national emblem with all due respect?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice and give an answer to the hon. member as soon as I have the information.

AGRICULTURE

VANCOUVER ISLAND—COMPENSATION FOR LOSS OF NURSERY STOCK THROUGH INFESTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture—

Mr. Hales: Where is he?

Mr. Chatterton: —or in his absence to his Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Hales: And where is he?

Mr. Chatterton: No doubt the Minister has been informed of the serious situation on Vancouver Island with the identification of the golden nematode. Can the Minister say what action is being taken to compensate those farmers and nursery growers who might be totally ruined by the discovery of this infestation?

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Parliamentary Secretary I will take notice of this question.

AVAILABILITY TO FARMERS OF HAY ON NATIONAL DEFENCE PROPERTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Madill (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the extreme drought that exists in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, could the Minister make the hay and pasture, that is available on properties owned by the Department of National Defence, available to farmers where practical?

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Was the Minister's failure to answer the question from the hon. Member for Dufferin-Simcoe another example of Government arrogance toward the very serious problem facing farmers in Eastern Ontario?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am afraid that was a statement, not a question.

OTTAWA VALLEY—DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS RESPECTING DROUGHT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Acting Minister of Agriculture.

Can the minister inform the house of the results of the meeting which is supposed to have been held this afternoon between the Minister of Agriculture and the representatives of the Ontario and Quebec governments concerning the situation of eastern farmers, especially those in the Ottawa valley?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the meeting started at 1.30 p.m. between the Minister of Agriculture and myself, on one hand, and Messrs. Stewart and Courcy and their officials, on the other hand. It is still going on in the office of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, can the hon. Minister tell us when he will be in a position to give us a report on that meeting?

Mr. Sauvé: I believe that the Minister of Agriculture will be able to report tomorrow.

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question.

Can the Minister of Forestry tell us if the federal government, in the course of last week, consulted the organizations of the districts concerned prior to meeting with the provincial governments?

Mr. Sauvé: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, although I have received a telegram from "l'Union catholique des cultivateurs" containing the following pertinent message:

We are very happy to note action taken by government authorities to help farmers.

Mr. Vincent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the Minister of Forestry tell us if, following this telegram, the government will say that it is because the official opposition has raised the question of a special debate on that matter that it dealt with that problem?

Mr. Sauvé: It is obvious, I think, Mr. Speaker, that this meeting has been called on the initiative of the government.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. It is based on a certain feeling for aging members of the Press Gallery and the opportunities provided by the coming recess under the vocational retraining legislation. Would the Minister inform the House whether consideration is being given to the establishment of a course in journalism, in a suitable school, that will provide an opportunity for the re-education of the so-called old guard members of the Press Gallery to the academic standards suggested as necessary in this scientific age by the hon. Member for Port Arthur?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. There seems to have been a lack of publicity with regard to the arrival of our distinguished visitor from England, the Chancellor of the Exchequer. I was wondering at what time and on what day the Secretary of State for External Affairs met him at the airport, and why wasn't it publicized in the press?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to answer the question. Right Hon. James Callaghan is, of course, a most distinguished and most welcome visitor to Canada. His visit is of the same friendly and business-like character as the many informal visits which Canadian and British ministers have made back and forth from time to time in the past for exchanges of views with our opposite numbers.

Mr. Fairweather: Don't drown in that verbose reply.

Mr. Gordon: I am very grateful to my hon. friend for his interjection. On this particular occasion Right Hon. Mr. Callaghan decided to come early so he might pay a private visit to a friend of his, the British High Commissioner. Today he held a meeting with the Acting Prime Minister, and later he and I and our respective officials had a very helpful and useful exchange of views.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a supplementary question of the Acting Prime Minister. In view of his experience at Orly airport in Paris, wouldn't it have been rather nice to have had the Chancellor of the Exchequer met by some representative of the Government?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe firmly that there would be no one I would want to meet more warmly than the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why didn't you do it?

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO DOMINION COAL COMPANY IN OPENING NEW MINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the remarks of Mr. Club with respect to the financial status of Dominion Coal Company, can the Minister indicate any steps the Government is prepared to take to provide assistance to that company regarding the opening of a new mine at Lingan?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of policy that could not be answered on orders of the day.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARREST IN U.S. OF CANADIAN CIVIL RIGHTS WORKER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. On Friday last I asked him a question concerning the reported arrest in Jackson, Mississippi, of Mr. Paul Saltzman, son of C.B.C. weatherman Percy Saltzman. The Minister's officials were good enough over the week end to inform me of what was happening. Can the Acting Prime Minister give us an up to date report concerning this young Canadian civil rights worker?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter was brought to my attention Friday around noontime, and we gave instructions at once to our Consul General who has jurisdiction in that particular state. He has been in touch with the police and has been told that Mr. Saltzman, if he would agree to return to Canada, would be allowed to do so. However, Mr. Saltzman refused the offer because he wanted to stay with his group and did not want any preferred treatment. I have given our Consul General instructions to keep us fully informed, and I shall let my hon. friend know the course of events.

FISHERIES

RUSSIAN PARTICIPATION IN NORTH PACIFIC TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): A number of Members seem more interested in bothering the Minister of Agriculture, who is not here, than in questioning the Minister of Fisheries, who is here. I never like the Minister of Fisheries to feel neglected, so I will ask him whether in view of the recent activity of Soviet mother ships and trawlers some 50 miles off the west coast of Vancouver Island the Government has under active consideration new proposals to bring the U.S.S.R. into the North Pacific Fisheries Convention.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Some months ago I explained the situation concerning U.S.S.R. participation in the North Pacific treaty, and I have nothing to add at this time.

BICULTURALISM AND BILINGUALISM

VISIT TO YUGOSLAVIA BY DELEGATION OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister with regard to a matter I referred to him last week. Has he yet concluded his diplomatic interdepartmental discussion with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration so as to be in a position to tell the House whether representatives of the Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism will be attending the Yugoslav Conference?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The convention in Yugoslavia is over. It has been over for several days.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: This information was provided by the Acting Prime Minister, not by me. Perhaps, so I can understand his remarks, he will tell us whether personnel from the B and B Commission will be attending this meeting in Yugoslavia.

Mr. Nicholson: They cannot be attending it if the convention is over.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question. The Acting Prime Minister gave me the information that representatives of the B and B Commission may be attending in Yugoslavia.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I think I have unwittingly caused the hon. Member to be placed in this difficult position. It is very rarely that I do that sort of thing.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the Minister now answer the question and say whether any personnel of the B and B Commission were in Yugoslavia?

Mr. Nicholson: I can answer that and I hope put an end to the matter. The hon. Member asked me whether they were going to attend. I said they could not attend because the convention is over, but two representatives of the said Commission did attend as alternate delegates.

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Friday, June 25 consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for the third reading of Bill No. C-118, to amend the Income Tax Act, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Knowles.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Could the Minister of Finance tell us whether he reacts at all to the proposals which were put forward by Mr. Sifton at the very end of last week with regard to the newspaper part of this legislation? I assume there is some distinction to be drawn between those proposals and the earlier ones which were put forward editorially by the newspaper in the hands of this gentleman. I should like to know whether the Minister had considered Mr. Sifton's most recent proposal.

Another question I wish to ask came to my mind on reading Friday's debate. It is this. What studies have the Government made to be sure that effective control of Canadian newspapers can really be maintained by this proposed legislation in the light of experience? It seems obvious to me from the editorial policy of the Fredericton Gleaner over the years, for example, and from the interest which Lord Thomson takes in the fact that ownership of his papers may be vested in Thomson of Canada Limited, or with such people as Brigadier Wardell in the case of the Fredericton Gleaner, this is not something to which too much importance should be attached. The fact remains that Thomson newspapers have continued to be an expression in many ways of the ideas of Lord Thomson, the British citizen operating in Britain—and I am not being terribly critical of this. I would just like to hear from the Minister how sure he feels that this will be a really effective way of controlling ownership and keeping it in Canadian hands; apart, that is, from the theory attaching to corporations.

In other words I am arguing that Lord Thomson still retains effective control of the Thomson newspaper chain in Canada as Lord Beaverbrook retained effective control of the Fredericton Gleaner throughout the years even though legal ownership may have been Canadian. I am not talking now about advertising policy. I am thinking much more about editorial and news policy, and wondering whether the Minister feels the particular legislation proposed will meet this problem.

The other question I wish to ask relates to an argument I put forward here last week concerning the quid pro quo or the balance which was achieved by the Minister accepting the nationalization of Time and Reader's Digest in exchange for the protection of Canadian newspapers. I realize there is no way in which we can dragoon the Minister into telling us whether any kind of swap took place. What takes place inside the Cabinet and within the party caucus is not for us who are outside to know, although we may guess. But I should like to put a bald question directly to the Minister right now with regard to this Time and Reader's Digest situation. Is the Minister pleased with what is in effect the nationalization of Time and Reader's Digest? My hon. friends say "naturalization". I say "nationalization" in the sense of a reference to nationality, not to public ownership.

I hope the Minister will remember this question. It is a very simple one. I should like to know whether he is pleased with the nationalization or naturalization of Time and Reader's Digest.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The other bit of information I wanted to give the Minister in connection with this matter, or the suggestion I make to him, is that he look at the Financial Post for last Thursday, where he will find on the rear page, I think it is, of the first or second part a full length ad taken by Reader's Digest setting out the various things it offers the Canadian advertiser. This is a very much itemized account giving all the advantages that advertisers have and the special services that advertisers can get through Reader's Digest in terms of specialization in markets, saturation of markets and all the rest.

I would like to ask the Minister how he can read an advertisement like that and not realize that Canadian magazines which do not have the resources of a parent company in the United States cannot possibly match that kind of appeal and that kind of advertising approach. It seems to me it is just impossible. That is one of the reasons I think the Minister might reconsider this particular clause of the Bill and the amendment that is now before the House.

I would assume that since the hon. Member for Red Deer has given notice of his intention to express by his vote how he feels about this whole question of Time and Reader's Digest, and since spokesmen of other parties in the House on the Opposition side have also given an indication that they support this particular amendment, we are in the position, problematically at least—this has worked out in the past but it may not work out this time—that the Government may be defeated on this particular motion. I am still unclear from what was said by the Parliamentary Secretary and by the Minister on Friday whether they are absolute in their interpretation that a defeat on the amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre is in substance, as far as they are concerned, a defeat of the Government that will lead to the dissolution of this House in the face of this lack of confidence in the Government. I feel that we deserve to hear this very clearly. It is certainly not going to affect my vote or, as far as I know, the votes of my colleagues, and I hope it will not affect the votes of any people in this House; but I think we should be completely clear on this point.

I feel that the recommendation both as it applies to Time and Reader's Digest and to newspapers is a reasonable one and should be accepted. It seems to me it is the kind of proposition, particularly in view of the feelings and arguments in the country relating to newspaper legislation, that should be considered by the Government. But if the Government is not prepared to consider an amendment like this and we are going to have the opportunity to vote on it, I think we need to know the answer to this question with complete clarity so we can vote, the Government Members can vote—and particularly those Government Members who are substantially critical of this part of the budget—in all honesty and we can have a real decision on this question. Then we can realize that we are voting on something more than a procedural motion and are voting on the life of this Government itself.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned about what the Government's attitude is respecting the amendment before the House moved by the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre. As a matter of fact, in looking over what took place in the debate here last Friday I am also concerned about the several points of order raised concerning this particular amendment. However, Your Honour has seen fit to accept the motion as being in order; therefore I suppose there is no useful purpose to be served by going back over this matter and challenging or debating whether it is in order. But taking the situation that we have before us now and the amendment which calls for Bill No. C-118 to be referred back to the committee, and then trying to anticipate what the committee will do with it when it gets the bill referred back to it is a real problem, because on two occasions the House has in fact supported this particular provision.

I know there are members of the Opposition in our party, in the New Democratic Party and other parties who are disturbed because this particular clause 4 was included with the budget resolutions and they had no opportunity to vote separately on it. Furthermore, it was established when we were on second reading that a private member is not competent to move an amendment either changing or deleting this provision. Therefore it is somewhat of a puzzle as to what the committee will do with this Bill if we support the amendment moved by the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre. It has been pretty well established, I think, by Speakers' rulings over the years, and in fact in the debate on the resolution stage, second reading and Committee of the Whole House that a member of the opposition does not have the right to move an amendment that will upset the balance of Ways and Means. Citation 243 of Beauchesne's fourth edition says:

> All Bills providing for...any expenditure whatever...must be first considered as resolutions in Committee of the Whole.

Then it goes on to say at the bottom of the paragraph:

> The rule also applies to releasing or compounding any sum of money due to the Crown and to the imposition of any state tax—

Therefore it seems to me that even if we support the amendment moved by the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, unless the Minister of Finance is prepared to move an amendment that will achieve what the Member for Winnipeg North Centre wants, then there is no purpose in sending this provision back to the committee. So I think we should have some indication from the Minister of Finance as to whether he is prepared to move an amendment to clause 4 that will do that for which the Member for Winnipeg North Centre is asking. The hon. Member said, as reported at page 2879 of Hansard for last Friday:

> What we are concerned about in asking for a reconsideration of clause 4 is that the House be given a chance to say that it wants subclause (2) of clause 4, namely the special exemptions for certain publications, removed from clause 4.

Even if this amendment is supported and we do send Bill No. C-118 back to the committee, the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre cannot move that amendment, and I think he acknowledged that fact in the statement he made last Friday before he moved the amendment.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. Member permit a question?

Mr. Olson: Certainly.

Mr. Knowles: In asking the question I agree with what the hon. Member has just said, but is it not appropriate for the House to express its opinion as to what the Government ought to do with the bill when we get back into Committee?

Mr. Olson: I am not arguing that point at the moment. I think it is appropriate for members of the Opposition to make representations to the Minister of Finance, to plead with him, or whatever else you call it, to move this kind of amendment to his bill. He could have decided to do this between the resolution stage and second reading of the bill. He could also have moved this kind of motion when clause 4 was before the Committee of the Whole. But he did not do so. He did not do so despite the pleadings of certain members of the Opposition. If he is not going to do so now, then it is a pure waste of time for the House to send this bill back to committee.

Mr. Fisher: Could I just ask a question? Does the hon. Member not think the Minister of Finance and the Government will get some kind of message out of a successful vote on an amendment such as this?

Mr. Olson: There are places in our rule book, although I do not have the citation right before me, which indicate that for any motion to be in order there must be some logical conclusion which can be reached. If we have not been able to convince the Minister of Finance of the validity of this point and that there is something wrong with clause 4, then unless he or some other Minister of the Crown intends to move an amendment to clause 4 in line with what is asked for by the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre we are simply wasting the time of the House, in the first instance, and second we are probably attempting to reverse a decision made earlier by the House. That, Mr. Speaker, is also a violation to some extent of the rules of this House.

Mr. Knowles: Oh? Where?

Mr. Olson: Therefore it seems to me that we ought to hear from the Minister of Finance, before we take a vote on this motion, whether he is going to take the kind of action that the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre hopes he is going to take. Because if he does not give that indication, Mr. Speaker, we move back into the committee stage and can do nothing. All the clauses have been passed.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. Member permit another question. Is the hon. Member saying that if the Minister will not do what we want him to do, therefore we should not ask him to do it?

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not saying that at all. The hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre knows very well that if his amendment is carried, as we are now on third reading we will go back to the committee stage, where he will then sit helpless and unable to take further action.

Mr. Knowles: The Minister will have to take the action.

Mr. Olson: He now admits that the Minister will have to move the motion. Therefore it seems to me that the Minister ought to indicate to the House whether he is prepared to move such a motion. Surely it would not make a great deal of difference if we went through all these motions, because we would then arrive at a point where there was complete stalemate, where no further action could be taken.

Mr. Barnett: Could I ask the hon. Member a question?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, this seems to be developing into a sort of quiz contest.

Mr. Barnett: I am wondering whether the hon. Member is not concerned that if the Minister did what he is suggesting he would not be exercising undue influence on the vote of Members of the House?

Mr. Olson: I suggest that each Member who rises in his place ought to be attempting to influence other Members; that is not an unusual thing for him to do. The hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out in his speech on Friday that he is trying to do indirectly what he cannot do directly.

Mr. Knowles: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Olson: I suggest that it attempts to circumvent the rules which have been laid down in this House over the years.

Another argument which has been advanced a number of times is that the Government should not have brought in this particular measure along with the other measures which were in the budget resolutions and the bill following upon those resolutions. I do not think there is any Member of this House who can find any past year where there has been more than one budget resolution dealing with income tax amendments. Nor could he find more then one bill implementing amendments to the Income Tax Act which were first introduced during the budget speech.

Mr. Fisher: Could I ask the hon. Member a question? Does he not remember last year when the Government introduced this very matter in a separate resolution in the name of the Prime Minister? Does he not remember that we assumed that this was because the Minister of Finance could not swallow it last year?

Mr. Olson: Perhaps the interpretation of the hon. Member for Port Arthur is a valid one. However, I am now concerned with the positive action that this House ought to be taking. We should now have an indication from the Minister of Finance, as I said before, as to whether he or another Minister of the Crown is prepared to move the kind of motion which will produce the result asked for by the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre. If this is not the intention of the Minister of Finance or of any other Minister of the Crown, then sending the bill back to committee is an exercise in futility because nothing can be done. It will then come back for third reading, and will pass.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, without being skilled in procedure, I wish to point out very briefly that it seems that the motion now before us is degenerating into a battle of procedural experts, and this I am not. However, it is my opinion that the procedure adopted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) in linking his proposal to other measures is nothing but a move liable to mix up members of the house by having them pass two things at once, while perhaps they would have liked to pass one and reject the other. I know that some members on the government side have already objected publicly in this house to the favoured treatment shown Time and Reader's Digest. If these members changed their minds today, which I do not know, it may be that the Minister himself gave additional explanations. He may even, in caucus or elsewhere, have managed to convince the members on the government side; but he has not convinced all the members, at least not some of the opposition, and that is why I believe some of us shall have to vote against the government, that is for the amendment proposed by the New Democratic Party.

If magazines are not able, on their own, to find readers in Canada, it is because they do not have the required qualities. Why then favour them through special legislation, and that to the detriment of Canadian newspapers?

On the other hand, if the publishers of these magazines have further arguments to bring forward, let them do so before the committee. However, as things stand now, we are totally unable to vote in favour of one measure and against another. As the two proposals cannot be separated, we shall support the proposed amendment of the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

As regards the amendment being out of order, the decision rests with Mr. Speaker. If he so decides, we must submit to his ruling. If he decides that the amendment is in order, we must then vote and possibly indicate to the Minister of Finance that the house wishes him to change his stand. As a matter of fact, I believe that the statements against clause 4 have been so numerous that the Minister should have at least changed his mind or indicated to the house his willingness to re-examine the problem.

On the contrary the minister has always behaved in the house as if he were connected with the owners of those magazines, and even so, but I am not sure, he could always unburden his heart by telling those companies: "I had made a proposal to you, but the house has decided otherwise. Since we are in a democratic country, we must therefore bow to the house's decision."

This is what we are hoping on the part of the minister and even if it were only to express our views concerning this amendment, I think that part of the members of our group will support the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether you would consider asking the House to give the Minister of Finance unanimous permission to answer a few of the questions which have been asked, particularly those in respect of the matter of confidence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In point of fact, Mr. Speaker, the Minister does not require any leave. This is an amendment, and he would not be closing the debate in the event he spoke.

Mr. Knowles: He spoke on Friday about three minutes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, apparently he has already spoken on the amendment and I was unaware of that fact.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps he will ask the Leader of the Opposition some questions during his speech.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, certainly the position is a most interesting one. When I listened to the hon. Member for Medicine Hat I was touched by the depth and sincerity of his appeal, as I am sure the Government must have been. Often in the past whenever the Government found itself in difficulty one could be assured that that hon. gentleman would do everything he could to preserve it.

His solicitation over the rules at the moment causes me to wonder whether this is a personal solicitation. He finds himself in a very desperate position, because his Leader spoke on Friday and made very clear the attitude his Party would take. I wish to read a portion of the remarks of the hon. Member for Red Deer, as follows:

> —certainly an issue as important as the matter of foreign publications is one for which the fullest opportunity for debate and discussion should be provided. I can well understand that there are many Members of the Opposition parties and, if the truth were known, many Members on the Government side of the House as well, who are not satisfied with how this matter has been presented in the omnibus bill before us. I would agree with the mover of the amendment that there has not been an opportunity for Members of the House to express their opinions specifically on this issue and I believe it would be a good idea to refer the bill back to the Committee of the Whole House.

You will have noticed, Sir, that he had none of the fears that fill the heart of the hon. Member for Medicine Hat. I must say that in the years I have been here I have never heard a more touching appeal than that uttered by the hon. gentleman. It has not been very effective. The Government and the Minister are adamant. Oh, what hardness of the soul is apparent here on the part of the Government. So often in the past Members of the Government have been moved to compassion as they listened to the hon. Member doing his part to keep the Government out of difficulty. While the Minister cannot speak, there must be others who, with a lifeline like this thrown out by the hon. Member, could speak. Imagine his position; think of the solicitude of the hon. Member for Medicine Hat in his appeal for something to save the Government.

[Mr. Knowles.]

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat has given us an unequalled example of self-swallowing. I have never seen such an example in all the years I have been here. We know there is a position in any circus for a sword swallower, but the hon. Member is swallowing himself in his desire to help the Government. There are going to be vacancies in the Senate shortly, and there exists one now in respect of Alberta. I would hope that the Government, with that vacancy available, will not allow the day to pass without providing at least some recompense for such an attitude which, as I say, was so deeply touching.

The hon. Member's leader expressed a different view, but this is not the first time this has happened. I recall very well the circumstances of February, 1963, when the hon. Member for Red Deer spoke with such eloquence from about 20 minutes to 6 until six o'clock indicating that he was going to support the Government of that day.

Mr. Nielsen: He got indigestion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Whatever happened between six and eight, suddenly at eight o'clock the logic of the pre-luncheon hour entirely changed. We will never know the reason for that.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. Member has a point of order.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the leader of the official opposition should read the new book which was published today, "Commonsense for Canadians", by McClelland and Stewart, which gives a full and complete answer as to exactly what happened in February, 1963.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if there be any book on common sense for Canadians I am sure the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has never read it, keeping in mind that utter nonsense that was indulged in—duplicity, I call it—in February, 1963.

Apparently we are to have a repeat performance today, or one would imagine so having listened to the hon. Member for Medicine Hat attempt to twist around so he will be able to support the Government to which he has given such undying support throughout the past two years and two months. This is going to be an awful thing for that hon. Member, Mr. Speaker. Just imagine him having to vote with the Opposition, after counting heads and beginning to wonder what the result will be. He has been doing some counting.

An hon. Member: Where are your Members?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, Members opposite apparently have been doing some counting as well, but I prefer the ability of the hon. Member for Medicine Hat to count, because he has some experience. He has done this before.

This afternoon that hon. Member has come along with the argument, which I tried to follow but found very difficult, that we should help the Government. He has asked "Can I not help you? You need help. Will you not follow the course I suggest? Will you tell us what you will do if you do not do that?" I have never heard an argument like that.

• (5:00 p.m.)

However, I am glad to note the solicitude of the hon. gentleman because it will be interesting now for all of us to see him rise in his place and, after that illogical argument, have to support the amendment that is before the House, provided he is consistent and provided he is prepared to follow the leadership of his leader in this most important matter. The speech on Friday by the hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) certainly was an illustration of common sense. I hope that the hon. Members sitting about him will be moved by his argument rather than by the pseudo-argument of the hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson).

Returning to this subject, I must say I was interested in the viewpoint of the hon. Member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). He has advocated freedom today. He spoke in Vancouver a day or so ago and, Mr. Speaker, this is one for the book. I think it ought to be placed on the record because it indicates his idea of freedom. He is afraid of some of those leftists in the ranks of the N.D.P. This is what the newspaper article says:

> Douglas Fisher, national deputy leader of the New Democratic Party, says left-wing members of the party should keep quiet and the party gain power in Canada instead of worrying about what line is to be taken.

I do not know which one of you are going to identify yourself as belonging to this group that ought to keep quiet. Let me read on, because this is a concept of freedom that is scarcely in keeping with the views expressed by the hon. gentleman from time to time:

> The former school teacher, now M.P. from Port Arthur, told a meeting of N.D.P. youth that a lot of party members are "so sure they're saved that they don't realize we've got to save a lot more people if we're going to get to run the country."

Well, salvation is free, if you people sitting around the hon. gentleman will keep your mouths shut. I read on, because I have never read a dissertation on the subject of freedom to equal this. He said:

> "We have to be a lot more broadminded, and much better organized."

Then, he said that his party is socialist by definition.

Mr. Herridge: Socialist without any qualification.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there is a rebel in their midst. It is very fortunate for him he has already given notice he is not going to run next time because he is no longer in good standing. Let me read on:

> —but this did not mean it would nationalize the means of production.

Well, I do not quite understand that. It is socialist, but it would not socialize the means of production. But he warns, Lord help the C.P.R. and The Bell Telephone. This is freedom. All of this appears in the speech of the hon. gentleman. Then, finally, he dealt with the necessity for centralization. Today he is most anxious to have the Minister speak to let the country know what is going to happen if the House dares to support the amendment. Well, so far as we are concerned, we are going to support that amendment. We are going to be consistent with our stand throughout. We are not going to indulge in any Pythagorian philosophy to determine our course. We think this bill is bad. We have taken our stand and we are supported in that stand by the influential press of Canada.

The Montreal Star of June 23, which has certainly been a continuing supporter of the Government, says:

> Representatives of Time and Reader's Digest have spent the past eight years ceaselessly pressuring Canadian MPs and Cabinet Ministers.

I can say so far as I am concerned, that did not take place.

> They have used every kind of persuasion, including the weight of the presidential office, to try and maintain a position which, on the grounds of justice and logic, is untenable.
> The Government thought, rightly it turned out, that by coupling a good policy with a bad one it could push the bad policy through Parliament.

Finally the article, after quoting from a reporter's view that action should be taken in this regard ends up that it will have to be done even if Mr. Luce has, as he is widely reported in Ottawa to have, about 40 United States Senators and at least as many Congressmen in his pocket. Now, I am going to say this in regard to Reader's Digest. They have not endeavoured to impose on Canadians their thinking. They have not tried, at any time, to direct or channel the thinking of Canadians. On the other hand, Time magazine, and I repeat this, has devoted itself to interpreting the news and rewriting it so as to direct Canadian thinking. It is not a Canadian magazine. It has three or four pages of Canadian news in each issue which makes it a counterfeit issue when it pretends to be Canadian. It uses these four pages to give its viewpoint, which is not the Canadian viewpoint, to Canadians week after week. To what purpose? It is to tell Canadians what they should do, as viewed through the eyes of a periodical that scarcely ever contains a mention of Canada in any of its international news.

This is what has to be guarded against, and that is the reason we accepted, in part, the recommendations of the O'Leary Commission, to the end that Canadians would not finally, as a result of unjust competition, be denied Canadian magazines with a Canadian viewpoint and have to substitute therefor, as a result of competition that cannot be met, the views of those who edit those four pages of Time for Canadians.

We have no reason to alter our viewpoint that this thing is wrong. What has the Government done? The Minister dug himself in. He has done more digging of himself into difficulties than any other Minister in history. He wants an election before redistribution. He spoke the other day in Toronto and stated that there would be an election this fall. I thought prime ministers determined that, but in the absence of the Prime Minister the Minister of Finance said there would be an election this fall, before redistribution.

Is that the reason that he dug himself in on this? He laughs, he smiles, but he has revealed that he is the determinant as to when elections take place in Canada. The Prime Minister said he had no idea of an election, but the Minister of Finance says, "Get ready for this fall, because it is going to take place before redistribution." I can understand his feelings in that regard.

Mr. Knowles: That is what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said at the coast.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: On the basis of what had been said opposite.

Mr. Knowles: Which came first, the hen or the egg?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman has been the water boy for the Government for so long. He always reminds me of the water boy that Claudius used to have walking ahead of him with the water. Every time I see the hon. gentleman rising I think of the water boy of Roman days.

What I said was that everything pointed to an election this fall on the basis of what was being said. This is what is coming from Liberal headquarters. The Prime Minister does not have anything to say about it because the chief organizer announces what is going to take place, and this time he has the assistance of the Minister of Finance. The Minister took a strong, stubborn stand that "we stand or fall on what we place before the House."

In conclusion I quote a couple of paragraphs from the Winnipeg Free Press of June 25:

> The Canadian Parliament's first legal interference with the press is being rushed into the statute books as if the Government, ashamed of its policy, were anxious to finish a disagreeable job as soon as possible and forget it.

Finally it ends up:

> The resistance to the advertising tax by almost every important newspaper in the country should have told Mr. Gordon that not only his tax but his whole program of narrow nationalism and state meddling in all aspects of society goes against the grain of Canada's life. Perhaps from the distant, clarifying perspective of London Mr. Pearson began to suspect, very late, that his Minister of Finance and his close friend is also his heaviest political liability.

I think this legislation is bad. I believe it contravenes the Bill of Rights in that it permits an interference with freedom of the press. Freedom of the press comes exclusively within the jurisdiction of the federal Parliament, if my reading of the Social Credit cases in the Supreme Court in 1938 is correct. That being so, why bulldoze through the House legislation that has been condemned out of hand in every part of our nation?

The other day I asked why is this introduced? Who asked for it? What newspaper in Canada has asked for it? The Minister cannot answer that question for no newspaper asked for this kind of action to be taken and every one, with the exception of two, state that it is retrograde and dangerous.

To me it indicates that bureaucratic attitude that eight former members of the civil service developed while holding those positions. They think they know what is good for Canadians, but as I have watched the faces of Members opposite, not of the Cabinet, I have seen in their faces and I have even heard it rumoured that they have said they cannot understand why this is being pressured. I can only conclude that the Minister of Finance, having suffered so many hurtful wounds in two years and two months as Minister, wants to be able to say, "At last I got something through the House."

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Knowles) which was negatived on the following division:

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Gordon moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $1,651,292,282.42, being the aggregate of:

(a) four twelfths of the total of all the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of Parliament, except external affairs item 15, mines and technical surveys item 70; and external affairs item 20 for which the proportioan is three twelfths, $1,456,-413,323;

(b) an additional four twelfths of the amounts of agriculture items 25 and 45, legislation item 15, and loans, investments and advances item L30 (Schedule A) of the said main estimates, $4,664,625;

(c) an additional two twelfths of the amount of northern affairs and national resources item 15, (Schedule B) of the said main estimates, $2,258,500;

(d) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of agriculture items 5 and 60, fisheries item 10, mines and technical surveys items 10, 15, 25, 45 and 60, national film board item 1, northern affairs and national resources item 45, (Schedule C) of the said main estimates, $9,566,025;

(e) seven twelfths of all the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (b) laid before the House of Commons at the present session of Parliament, $162,394,142.75;

(f) an additional four twelfths of the amounts of agriculture items 17b, 25b and 35b, mines and technical surveys item 70b, and loans, investments and advances item L78b, (Schedule D) of the said supplementary estimates, $7,245,666.67;

(g) an additional three twelfths of the amount of finance item 15b, (Schedule E) of the said supplementary estimates, $8,750,000, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966.

● (5:50 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Chairman, this resolution covers the items which you have just read. It will have been noted by Members of the committee that there was no reference to the amounts covered in Supplementary Estimates (C) that were tabled earlier today. They will have to be dealt with separately.

I should also point out that the resolution covers additional borrowing authority for $750 million for authorized payments out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund through the issue of treasury bills, Canada Savings Bonds, marketable securities and so on.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The portions requested in this bill are intended to provide for all necessary requirements of the public service up to October 31, 1965, apart from the amounts covered by Supplementary Estimates (C).

In no instance is the total amount of an item being released by this bill. The form of the bill is the usual one for interim supply.

The passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of Members to criticize or discuss any item in the estimates when they come up for consideration in Committee of Supply, and the usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

Mr. Chairman, when we are in the committee stage of our proceedings, I will be glad to answer in detail any questions hon. Members may wish to ask in respect of these items.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, the Minister is asking the House to grant supply for four months, to the end of October, yet we have had no indication of the usual type, from the ministry. There are a number of matters in view of the fact that we are being asked to grant interim supply for four months, which I certainly feel should be drawn to the attention of the Government before we even begin our consideration of this request.

First of all I should like to deal with a matter that comes under the purview of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. Perhaps some explanation can be given as to why certain steps were taken, and why it took so long to take them. I hope the Minister will be in a position to reply.

During the last session I placed question No. 3,016 on the order paper, addressed to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, concerning one Aniello De Luca of Montreal. The Minister replied through his Parliamentary Secretary on March 31, 1965. If hon. Members will consult page 12993 of Hansard for March 31, 1965, they will see in detail both the question and the answer. The answer indicates that this individual was taken into custody under the authority of a warrant for arrest issued under section 15(1) of the Immigration Act, signed by the Director of Special Services of the Immigration Branch on March 17, 1965 on the basis of a report received pursuant to section 19(1)(e)(ii) and (iii) of the Immigration Act, which stated that Mr. De Luca had been convicted of an offence under the Criminal Code and had become an inmate of a jail. The report also indicated that bail had been refused. I understand also that this man was being detained under a charge laid under the Immigration Act and under charges under the Juvenile Delinquents Act.

Subsequently I made a further inquiry of the Minister as to what had happened to De Luca, by way of question No. 711 which appeared in Votes and Proceedings of June 10, 1965. I should like to read this question and answer in detail. The question is:

1. What was the conclusion of the inquiry under the Immigration Act referred to in the answer to Question No. 3,016 under date of March 31, 1965, concerning one Aniello De Luca, of Montreal?
2. Is Aniello De Luca still under detention and, if so, where and under what circumstances and, if not, when was he released?
3. What was the outcome of the proceedings under the Juvenile Delinquents Act as referred to in the answer to Question No. 3,016 above?
4. What further steps, if any, are under consideration with regard to this man and his future stay in Canada?

And the reply is as follows:

1. The inquiry under the Immigration Act revealed that Aniello De Luca had acquired Canadian domicile and was therefore not subject to deportation proceedings under the Immigration Act at that time.
2. No. He was released from detention on April 12, 1965.
3. According to information received by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, Mr. De Luca was not convicted of one charge under the Juvenile Delinquents Act and two other charges were withdrawn.
4. None.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock it is my duty to leave the Chair so that the House may proceed to the consideration of private Members' business.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Provisional Standing Order 39A, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock p.m. this day are as follows: The hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Howard)—John Darrell Peters—alleged unfairness in sentence; the hon. Member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau)—proposed conference on drought conditions in Ottawa Valley; the hon. Member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Groos)—Veterans affairs—request for cancellation of World War I overseas requirement.

It being six o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private Members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

EXPROPRIATION ACT

SUGGESTED PROTECTION AGAINST INTERFERENCE WITH PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to amending the provisions of the Expropriation Act (R.S.C. 1952, c. 106) with a view to giving greater protection to citizens against arbitrary interference with their property rights by departments of the federal government, and to the establishment of more suitable procedures for the transfer of title and possession of land expropriated under the authority of this Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this motion is to suggest to the House that it is urgent that consideration be given to amending the Act respecting the expropriation of lands. This year the free world celebrates the 750th anniversary of the signing of Magna Carta and the 700th anniversary of parliamentary government. Both of these historic occasions are reminders that freedom is indivisible, the freedom of one group must ultimately become the freedom of all. Recently the Archbishop of Canterbury said that Magna Carta was the act of one group, one order of the realm, asserting its own right; it was a cold, businesslike document, agreeing that certain political abuses must cease. I am convinced that the lesson of Magna Carta is as relevant today as it was in 1215 or at any time since.

The history of Parliament is the record of the resistance of the representatives of the people to the usurpation of powers by the Crown. I believe it would be foolish indeed to believe that, because we have a constitutional parliamentary government, we as the representatives of the people are not faced with the duty of keeping the powers of the Crown under control. In this spirit it has been brought forcibly to my attention to take a close look at the remarkable powers the Crown is at present given by statutes, in so far as the laws of expropriation are concerned.

It might be reasonable, Mr. Speaker, that in time of war and imminent danger to this country, the Federal Government should have such powers; but today such powers belong in the War Measures Act, and not in any peacetime legislation. We already have far too much punitive federal law on our statute books. I am thinking particularly here of some of the provisions of the Income Tax Act and the Excise Tax Act, which may be justifiable during the time of national emergency but which are an open threat to the liberty and property of the citizen, now that war has been over for nearly 20 years. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the laws of this land, as they concern expropriation of private property were designed for a time of emergency, and certainly not for a time of peace such as we are living in at the moment.

As I interpret the Expropriation Act parliament has given officers of the civil service, down to the junior level, the right to deprive a citizen of the land which he owns merely by filing a plan in the registry office, leaving the citizen with nothing but the right to go to court to receive just payment for his land. There is no need to follow the usual provincial laws for the transfer of title. There is no need for a public hearing to ascertain whether or not any particular parcel of land is needed for public purposes. Powers like these contained in the Act relating to the expropriation of lands belong in a War Measures Act and certainly not in peacetime legislation.

Here in Ottawa many a home owner has awakened in the morning to read in the newspaper that his home has been included in expropriation plans of the day or the week before. I think, Mr. Speaker, that such should not be the case. I have in my files a number of letters and a number of briefs and submissions that have been made concerning the powers of expropriation which have been passed on by federal law to the National Capital Commission. Many of the citizens of this city feel there has been a flagrant abuse of the powers of expropriation. I should like to refer to the brief submitted to the National Capital Commission by the residents of the Rothwell Heights section, in the eastern section of the city. We read this:

> We can understand that the Government should allow homes to be seized for a road, bridge, a school or some other essential purpose. We are totally unable to understand that the Government should allow homes to be wantonly destroyed to provide landscaped grounds for a suburban driveway.
> Under present legislation, no citizen of Ottawa has firm title to his own land. Any day he may read in the newspaper, as we did, that following a secret decision of all-powerful officials, his home has been seized for some trivial reason without right of appeal.

[Mr. Thompson.]

I could go on to cite any number of cases which justify my contention that this Act should be rewritten. I do not have the time at my disposal this afternoon to give too many further illustrations that the powers of expropriation that are presently in the hands of the National Capital Commission are too broad. I could refer to the Silver Springs Farm, just west of town. From the records of the expropriation of this property, I do not see how anyone can believe that the rights of property ownership, which are basic in a democracy, are properly respected. These cases cover not only such property as Rothwell Heights and Silver Springs Farm but include any number of other properties here in the city.

Amongst the letters that have come to me in protest of these actions is one written by Mrs. Pilon, a woman in this city who does not have the power in her own hands to look after her rights. She says in a letter that she would like to tell me of her experience with the Federal District Commission, and I quote:

> I know it is too late now for me to get any help but my experience might benefit someone else who is under expropriation.
> A little over ten years ago my property which was approximately four acres was expropriated by the then F.D.C. It was situated on lot 27 Hare Avenue where the Putman Public School is now situated.

Then she goes on to tell of the ridiculously low price which was offered to her for the property; how she turned it down. Later, they offered her $7,500, and then they came back in further bargaining to offer $8,700. Finally, under protest at the continual pressure she was under she had to sell the property at an extremely low price without any attempt on the part of the National Capital Commission to protect her right to the property.

This goes much further than the National Capital Commission here, in Ottawa. The files of the courts, and I am sure many of the files of the departments, are filled with examples of how the Government, in peacetime and without warning, without having to say that this property was necessary for expropriation without returning to the rightful owner land that was expropriated once its use was no longer required, has expropriated lands. One particularly important case is the case of August Fontanna, a man living in Virden, Manitoba, who had his land expropriated for use as a federal airport during the war emergency.

Later, when the war was over and this airport was no longer necessary, this land was supposed to have been turned back to the owner from whom it was expropriated. Instead, oil was discovered on the property and the federal Government, ignoring its responsibilities to the individual concerned, refused to return the property and thus deprived this man of what would have been his private rights. As a result, a very heavy protest was built up, and an appeal was even made to the Exchequer Court, but nothing was done because nothing could be done under present expropriation laws. That is why it is high time, in my opinion, the Government took some action to correct this deplorable situation.

I am reminded of a statement made by Mr. Justice J. T. Thorson, former President of the Exchequer Court of Canada, who stated that Canada's expropriation laws are the most arbitrary in the whole civilized world. This statement was made by Mr. Justice Thorson in case No. 143946, 1959, between Ethel Grayson and Her Majesty the Queen, before the Exchequer Court. Mr. Justice Thorson stated:

> Under these provisions a man's land can be lawfully taken from him without his consent, and even without his knowledge or any notice to him, merely by the deposit of record in the proper land titles or land registry office of a duly signed plan and description of the land. This may be done whenever the Minister of the Department charged with the construction and maintenance of the public work for which the land is to be taken deems it advisable to do so. On such deposit the expropriation of the land is complete without any further act by anyone. Whatever right, title or interest the former owner, or any other person, had in or to the land is immediately extinguished and the land is automatically vested in Her Majesty the Queen free and clear of any claims to or encumbrances upon it. All that is left to the former owner of the land, or a person having had a claim to or an encumbrance upon it, is a claim to compensation, which by section 23 of the act is made to stand in the stead of the land. And I might add here that the settlement of claims to compensation is frequently unconscionably delayed.
> I have frequently called attention to these provisions of the law and stated that Canada has the most arbitrary system of expropriation of land in the whole of the civilized world. I am not aware of any other country in the civilized world that exercises its right of eminent domain in the arbitrary manner that Canada does. And unfortunately, the example set by Canada has infected several of the Canadian provinces in which a similar system of expropriation has been adopted.

Time does not permit me this evening to go into further detail to elaborate many of the points that justify such a statement as Mr. Justice Thorson made in 1959, but I might just briefly summarize some of the points that are important. First of all, under present expropriation laws a person's property can be taken from him without his leave or even without notice to him. Second, from the moment that a plan or description of a property is filed, the Crown becomes the owner of that land, and from that moment on all the rights of the owner are completely extinguished. Third, an owner whose property has been expropriated by the Crown may be left dangling for years before he actually gets his money.

Should a customer buy a pound of sugar off the shelf in a store he has to pay cash for it before he can carry it home. Therefore why should the Crown be considered any different, particularly if we value the rights of property ownership which, to me, are one of the prerequisites of a strong democracy?

In a nation which has placed the legislative fields of property and civil rights within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures, the powers granted by this act seem to border on the unconstitutional, and on this point alone the Government has a responsibility to see that the expropriation laws are repealed.

Government expropriation of private property is an unfortunate necessity—I am quite willing to admit—in the planned development of our cities and towns; but the rules which govern expropriation should require that the needs of the property owner be weighed against the needs of the state. Not only must there be the assurance of fair compensation, and adequate forewarning to property owners that their land is to be expropriated, but public hearings must be held before a judge to determine whether the action is necessary and is in the public interest.

Justice demands that no citizen should be deprived of his property without such hearing. Expropriation powers which permit the filing of a plan to take away the ownership of a man's land when his certificate of title tells him he is still the owner, are the reason I have placed this resolution before the House urging that the Government amend the Expropriation Act.

In this notice of motion I am not suggesting specific legislation because really I am not qualified to do so. There are, however, several ways in which I believe the federal Act could be improved, and there are several less important ones which I shall outline briefly.

First of all I believe it would be very easy and proper to provide that before any land is taken for a public purpose by expropriation, except in time of war, a public hearing should be held before a judge so that everyone can be satisfied that it is in the public interest for the land to be taken. No citizen, I believe, should ever be deprived of his property without at least having the privilege of his "day in court".

Likewise the exact method of expropriation should be spelled out in the act, such as the number of days notice to be given, with a safeguard that land would not be expropriated unnecessarily or by mistake, as has been done in past years.

I would suggest a clause be inserted elsewhere in the statutes of Canada guaranteeing a Canadian citizen the right to own property, and that this should be specifically quoted in the expropriation laws. We need that assurance.

I have looked over other sections of the Act which are important also. I believe far more trouble should be taken to assimilate federal expropriation procedure with the normal land title procedures of the respective provincial governments. Much confusion results from the fact that the filing of a plan can deprive a man of ownership of his land.

I notice that in section 7 of the Act there is no provision requiring the Government to expropriate the areas taken up by survey markers and national monuments that might be on or adjacent to such land, and such a provision should be inserted.

All one has to do is to ride around this city and the green belt area to see how many of these survey markers and monuments are left out of expropriated land, and which are now being defaced and destroyed. This is something that is not in the best interests of the public.

Another point which shows the complete inadequacy and foolishness of the act is concerned with section 16. This section deals with "any tenant in tail or for life, seigneur, guardian, tutor"—and a number of other people like lunatics, idiots, and married women—and I submit that the expression "married women" must be removed from that section. In a civilized society like we have in Canada we must assume married women are sane unless, like other human beings, they are declared otherwise.

• (6:20 p.m.)

Section 22 deals with warrants for possession, and this section should include a paragraph which would outline all ethical, humane and honest legal steps that should be taken before force is used. In my home community I have a neighbour, a man born on a certain area of land. It belonged to his father before him. It had been passed on by his father to this man, his brother and mother. The land was required by the Department of National Defence and it was expropriated by the method I have outlined. It was taken from him, even though the title in Edmonton said he owned the land. The Government built communications towers on the land. I was astonished when, in January, 1964, I was called—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time alloted to the hon. Member has expired, and unless there is unanimous consent—

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thompson: Thank you, I shall be brief. I thank all Members of the House. Anyway, I was called because this man needed help. When I reached this parcel of land I found that the Canadian Army had moved in. A whole truckload of soldiers were running across the fields in snow up to their waists, trying to catch the hogs, chickens and cattle which they were about to remove forcibly from the land, because this man had refused to submit to the expropriation order which, in this particular case, had come directly from Ottawa. I never dreamt that such a situation could arise in Canada. There are many complications attached to this case but I mention it as an example of the way in which a government or a department can use the tremendous power provided by the present legislation respecting expropriation.

I will close with a quotation from the Globe and Mail of June 14, 1965. The heading of this editorial is "Expropriation and injustice go hand in glove".

> Government expropriation of private property is an unfortunate necessity in the planned development of municipalities, metropolitan areas and provincial districts. But the rules which govern expropriation should require that the needs of the property owner be weighed against the needs of the state. They should assure the property owner meticulously fair compensation and every assistance in making a convenient move. Government planners should tell property owners when their land is to be expropriated and they should tell them as soon as a decision is made. If an unconscionable time is to elapse between decision on expropriation and the actual takeover of the land, the owner should be repaid the losses he might suffer if the district stagnates while his property is in limbo. If he wishes to move at once the expropriating body should be required to accommodate him.

I think this article sums up most adequately what I have said. I believe it is not good enough to expect a property owner, a man who may often not have much of this world's goods, to take up his case in the Exchequer Court, the only court of appeal open to him at this time. I know of only one case in Ottawa, despite the volume of N.C.C. proceedings, where this has been done, and in this case, having committed himself to costs of $28,000, the appellant had to withdraw.

This is not the kind of security that owners of property in this country should receive. I wish the Government, in its zeal to make Canada a better country to live in, would take up this matter and bring in the necessary amendments to give us a proper expropriation authority, and I hope this can be done before the present session concludes.

Mr. J. T. Richard (Ottawa East): I wish to congratulate the hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) upon bringing this matter before the House. Those who have been around this chamber as long as I have—and I do not see any at the present time—will recall that this particular grievance has been mine since 1947 or 1948. I continued year after year, to call on the government of the day to give us a new Expropriation Act which would deal more fairly with the rights of citizens.

Perhaps I may be allowed to refer to a few previous speeches so that Members may know that on many occasions I have objected to the present method of expropriation. For example, in 1955 as recorded in Hansard at page 6910, I urged the Government to consider doing something about the method of acquiring land used by the Federal District Commission—it was the Federal District Commission in those days. At that time I said:

> The use of the Expropriation Act in its present form is really not called for. I have always contended that the Expropriation Act was not meant to be used to acquire land of this type or under the circumstances in which the Federal District Commission is acquiring land at the present time. I realize it is a long time since I went to law school but I have always looked upon the Expropriation Act as being a violation of civil rights. I submit that it should be used sparingly by the Crown only in cases of great public interest, such as the acquisition of land for post offices, wharves, national defence buildings and so on. It should not be used too readily. If it is to be used as in the present case all advantages should devolve upon the party whose property is being expropriated. On behalf of those hundreds of people whose properties have been expropriated in the district here and who are voicing discontent over this procedure, may I say that I hope the government will see that this parliamentary committee to be set up next session will make a complete study of the use of the Expropriation Act in acquiring land.
> The time that elapses in the settlement of these cases is far too long.

It may surprise hon. Members to know that in some cases it takes as long as five years to reach a settlement.

In the following year, 1956, I said:

> I shall only repeat what I have said on previous occasions, that I consider that the Expropriation Act, being an impingement upon the civil rights of a citizen, should be used lightly, sparingly but generously. Many of our people are not very happy. Hundreds of homes in this area have been expropriated by the Federal District Commission. There was no question of going to court. A private citizen cannot go to court against the government when an amount of $10,000 or $12,000 is involved, though big corporations or religious institutions can afford to do so because the amount involved is substantial. I have had very many complaints.

This is only to show that on many occasions in the past I was impelled to urge the government and the House to do something about the Expropriation Act. My sentiments go deeper. They are like those of the hon. Member for Red Deer, because I am one who is greatly in favour of the rights of private citizens, and particularly of the right to hold private property. I take special objection to that section of the Act which defines public work as being any work which the Minister decides is so. This is a relic of feudal days. There is no court or other body which has the power to decide whether or not the Minister has used his discretionary power correctly. As I said to my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Francis) a while ago, if the Minister were to decide that my chimney was a public work, it would be a public work and that is the end of it. All he has to do is to file a plan, serve notice, and the property belongs to the Government.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Therefore I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the first section which should be amended in the Expropriation Act is that which defines under what circumstances the property of a citizen of Canada may be expropriated. I believe that this section should be clearly defined. The Crown, in the year 1965 in any event, should not have the right to decide that it can expropriate anything at the whim of a Minister who has been advised by an official of a department of government.

Furthermore, when dealing with real property one must keep in mind that real property is a civil right which really is under the jurisdiction of the province. My contention has been for all these years that in expropriating property for works which were not exactly or really for the use of the Crown in the right of Canada, the Government was impinging upon provincial rights. There are many circumstances, I claim, where if the Crown wants to expropriate property it should do so through the agency of the province or of the municipality.

There are now some cases, which I will not mention, before the Exchequer Court which deal with that particular angle. I feel, as I have always felt, that the right to expropriate by the Crown in the right of Canada should be limited to those public works which properly can be defined as works of the Dominion of Canada. I do not need to recall that some years ago this very argument was raised by a former Premier of Quebec, Mr. Maurice Duplessis, and I never heard that this contention was denied. There is, therefore, an area to be cleared up in the Expropriation Act, namely the definition of what is a public work.

I want it understood at this time, Mr. Speaker, that when I am speaking about the Expropriation Act I am not trying to attack the methods of expropriation taken by the N.C.C. or the Federal District Commission. After all, those bodies only carried on their duties with the assistance of an Act which was antiquated, and was the only means which the Government put at their disposal. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I do not want it to be taken that they could have done otherwise. They had to use the Expropriation Act as it stood. I blame successive governments for not having done anything about amending the Expropriation Act. Of course, there are real grievances with regard to the Expropriation Act besides the definition of what is a public work. There is the question of the method of settlement, the tender of an offer, the interest to be paid until settlement, and also the distribution of court costs.

Only a few years ago a former Minister of Justice, Hon. Donald Fleming, brought before the House an Act respecting the expropriation of land. That Act received first reading on October 3, 1962. There are very good suggested amendments to the present Expropriation Act contained in that bill. Certainly they should be incorporated in any bill which is to be brought before this House for consideration. Furthermore, I think the Government should take cognizance of the work done by the Ontario Commission which sat for about two years investigating the methods of expropriation of land in Ontario. I do not know what has been done about this study. I hope the Government at the next session in the fall, or next year, will have produced a bill to be presented to this House which will incorporate some of the suggestions which have been made by the hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) and myself; but I would hope that at the same time such a bill would be sent to a committee for examination and discussion. Mr. Speaker, I want to give the opportunity to some other hon. Members to speak on this matter. I hope once again that this is the last time we will have to appeal to any government to produce a new Expropriation Act.

[Mr. Richard.]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. Member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) I wish to congratulate the mover of this motion, which represents a principle that has concerned Members on all sides of this House. Looking back on the record I note that on October 3, 1962, the Minister of Justice at that time, Hon. Donald Fleming, introduced a bill which was then given the number C-50. It was described in his words as a "comprehensive measure relating to government expropriation. It will replace the present Expropriation Act. It is more than a mere codification or consolidation; it will introduce new provisions as well". That bill received first reading in this House, but unfortunately did not receive second or third readings; it did not become enacted into law.

The hon. Member for Essex East, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), also in 1962 introduced a private Member's bill dealing with this subject. I think it is quite clear that interest in the rectification of the present legislation extends to many quarters of this House, and indeed the views which have been so clearly and so well expounded by the mover of this motion are shared by many hon. Members.

The problem is not only one, as my colleague from Ottawa East pointed out, of the Federal Government; it is a problem which faces the provincial authorities and the municipal authorities. It is a power which is frequently given to many public bodies by their charter. I noted from the press, for example, and was a little shocked by this, the charges raised against my alma mater, the University of Toronto, in connection with an expropriation proceeding, where it was alleged that there was a conflict of interest in taking certain lands which were occupied, in contrast to certain lands which were unoccupied.

I do not quite know what the facts are, but when a question is raised it is quite clear that there is the possibility of injustice, and measures which would set out appropriate appeal procedures in connection with the decision, in the first instance, as to whether the property should or should not be taken should be spelled out in legislation.

In the particular constituency I have the honour to represent in this House a very large portion of the lands have been subject to expropriation procedures for green belt purposes. I am not quite sure what the order is, but it is of the order of 15 per cent of the entire land surplus of the riding I represent. It is a fairly substantial amount, and in dollar terms it is even more substantial. There have been many problems in this connection. I listened with a great deal of interest to some of the case histories which have been read into the record by the hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson). The first name he mentioned is the name of a widow well known to myself. I was an alderman of the city council at the time of the events to which reference was made. I just want to say, Mr. Speaker, that in my own history of dealings with the National Capital Commission I think there is an effort to be fair. There is the procedure of a land committee. The land committee is a matter of public record. Any annual report of the National Capital Commission can be presented. They review every purchase, and have a procedure through which they use outside evaluators. These outside evaluators make records. The individual concerned can, if he wishes, hire an independent evaluator-appraiser and the results can be put together.

• (6:40 p.m.)

In tendering for land, in the 1962 period there was a serious problem in Ottawa resulting from the rapid inflation of land prices. In the early 50's prices of the order of $1,200 per acre were a well substantiated figure in the area in which expropriation took place. Land prices rose very rapidly during this period and it was very difficult to be fair to the public and the individuals concerned. All I can say is that in my own experience the National Capital Commission has attempted, especially where a widow of modest means is involved in a situation like this, to be more than fair in dealing with such situation. Perfect justice is not meted out in this world in our courts or by the National Capital Commission or other bodies, but on balance I have had very few instances where the difficulties have been such that I would be tempted to condemn public expropriation proceedings.

However, there have been some cases. The type of problem which I think should be given a good deal more attention than it presently receives in the development of expropriation policies under the green belt is that which involves a number of small businesses. I think in particular of the motel type of operation. A motel operation in the late 1950's could frequently be carried on the basis of cabins with a fairly small number of units and with a small dining room. This was a successful enterprise at that time. There are instances where expropriation has taken lands adjacent to and surrounding such a motel. This puts the motel in a situation where it cannot expand and the owner lives under a cloud of uncertainty as to whether or not he will be permitted to continue. There is no incentive to modernize and keep up with the times.

Frequently a small owner caught in this type of situation suffers a great deal. There are at least two or three instances of this nature which have been brought to my attention where I think there is the possibility that an injustice is being done. I say a possibility; I am not making any allegations in clear terms because the rights and wrongs and the full adding up of all the equities involved is a complicated business. But I think we should consider a procedure somewhat similar to that adopted in tax appeal cases.

I think that the legislation which was introduced in 1962 had a very desirable feature. It spelled out an interest rate of 5 per cent and then went on to provide that a tender must be made at the time of expropriation, interest running until the tender is submitted at double the rate. Therefore until the tender for the property was made interest would be payable at 10 per cent, which was a very strong incentive to the Crown agency involved to make a prompt tender in specific terms—which is surely the starting point for the rights of the party whose land has been expropriated. Another desirable feature which was very important was what I had in mind suggesting something like an income tax appeal board to which recourse by way of appeal could be had promptly and inexpensively. The problem in such cases is the expense involved. The party concerned may have substantial equities, but the equities are not in the form of liquid assets; they are in the form of property. A fairly valuable piece of property is involved amounting to a sizeable sum of money, but the owner of the property does not have cash in the bank to hire the solicitors, the outside experts and the large number of technically trained persons necessary in this day and age to carry a fight on up to the Exchequer Court of Canada; and this imposes a strain on the resources of the party concerned which may constitute, in some instances, a denial of justice.

Surely a procedure should be evolved by which the cost could be more readily assumed, if we are to use courts as the test of these matters by the Crown. In this way the Crown could then say to the parties that this was the procedure by which their rights would be determined and the cost of such procedure would not be a deterrent to them in the exercise of this remedy. I think the procedure involved in income tax appeals is an eminently sound one. The costs are there, it is true, but the kind of decision which is made is usually a clear decision on the merits and it is arrived at reasonably promptly. This procedure has been evolved to deal with even more complex situations than are involved in expropriation of properties, and on the whole I think it has worked fairly successfully.

I should like to think that we could develop this principle in our legislation, spelling it out in more detail, such legislation, I would hope, being introduced by a Member representing the Government party in this House at some later date. I know that evidence of concern about property is clearly on the record, just as the concern expressed by my colleague from Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) a few minutes ago, a concern extending over some time, is one genuinely and sincerely held by him. It is also shared by many hon. Members on this side, including Members of the Government. But the development of legislation is not a simple matter. We on this side of the House have attempted to do many things in a relatively short period. This is one of the items, Mr. Speaker, on which I hope there will be further action at a later period.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we have heard a number of observations respecting the procedures followed under the Expropriation Act by the federal Government, and in particular there has been a reference to the fact that a bill to amend the Expropriation Act, in effect to repeal the existing statute and replace it with new provisions, was introduced in this House in October, 1962. That bill was the product of considerable study by officials of the Department of Justice, and while it was introduced by the Minister of that day it was not called forth for further discussion by the Government of that day after its introduction.

Subsequent to the introduction of the bill the Department has received some comment on the terms of the proposed changes in the law. These have been and are being taken into consideration. Also since the introduction of the bill there have been a number of significant court decisions bearing on the existing law, and one decision in particular in the Supreme Court of Canada which has involved to a degree a new departure in the existing law, which has given law officers of the Crown reason to re-examine the bill introduced at that time to see whether through amendment the bill might be brought more into conformity with the law.

The hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) posed the proposition that essentially expropriation legislation should be emergency legislation only. I am afraid that I will have to disagree with that statement. I think on reflection that the hon. Member would agree that there are circumstances, even in peacetime, when governments, be they federal, provincial or municipal, must take land. On the other hand, I think it is agreed everywhere that governments must act reasonably and fairly and without any evidence of arbitrariness in the taking of land.

Mr. Thompson: Could I ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question. I may not have heard him clearly, but did he say my proposal was that this should be emergency legislation only? Is that what the hon. Member said?

Mr. Macdonald: Yes. I noted down the observation of the hon. Member that the laws of expropriation are designed for emergencies, not for peacetime. I understood the hon. gentleman to go on to say that he did not feel expropriation was appropriate action for the Government to take in time of peace.

Mr. Thompson: I must correct the hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, because I did not say that at all. I said that we must have a law geared to peacetime needs and any emergency could fall under the terms of the War Measures Act or some such appropriate legislation. I am sure the hon. Member has misunderstood me and if he examines Hansard he will see what I said.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, I did not want to misconstrue what the hon. Member said; if I did misunderstand him let me hasten to correct it. However, I think the correction made by the hon. Member illustrates the proposition: that all hon. Members will agree on the absolutes of this problem. On the one hand there is the necessity for governments from time to time having to take, pursuant to the power of eminent domain, the use and occupation of land; and on the other hand, under the obligation of democratic governments, to act reasonably and fairly with regard to those citizens who may be adversely affected by such action.

The problem is really that of finding the appropriate procedure of administrative action to be taken in between. To some hon. Members who are familiar with some of the great issues in administrative law in past years, the famous English case of Crichel Down will be recalled, in which I believe the Minister of Agriculture had taken a certain portion of the farm for wartime purposes and had adamantly refused to reconvey it to the owner, even though the Crown no longer required it.

Essentially there are two problems here which hon. Members have touched upon but which, however, are distinct. First, several Members have touched upon the question of the reasonableness of a decision taken by an expropriating authority in taking the land itself. The policy of taking land must in essence have been decided by the Government itself, when it decided to carry forward a general plan of action. Presumably hon. Members will agree that this should be worked out by the Government itself as an incident of the general proposals which it is proposing to carry out. This question relates to the extent that the policy should be carried out, and whether or not two acres is enough or whether it should be five or seven; or whether the road, if it is to be a road, should be run through here or there, and to the question as to the extent that members of the public should be able to intervene and, by administrative action, try to show that the Government decision is unreasonable. That was the situation in the Crichel Down case and involves perhaps one of the most difficult questions in administrative law.

The bill introduced in this House in 1962 did not deal with that particular area of the question. It assumed the discretion on the part of any Minister of the Crown, acting in his proper sphere, to take land. The bill dealt with the second problem, namely the procedures and manner of the action to be followed when land is actually to be taken over, and it is in this connection that I think we can identify several objections which have been made by Members on various sides of the House as to the procedure which now exists in the law.

If I may, I perhaps can place them in this order. The requirement of notice; not only the putting of notice on the land title register, but also the requirement that some actual notice other than registration be given to the owner whose land is in fact being taken. You can imagine the number of people in a lifetime who would normally have their titles checked, or how many people in a lifetime would bother to go and see them personally, to look for an expropriation notice. The answer to that suggestion is, very few. I think this is not an unreasonable suggestion, that actual notice in writing should be given so that people will know that an issue has been raised in regard to the particular land and will thereby know exactly what the issue is. I would be glad to pass that suggestion on for consideration by the Government.

In this connection not only will the actual owners of the land be affected but also those who have some outstanding interest in the land, such as those who might benefit from right of way. They may have only the right to pass over the land. Perhaps notice should also be given to those individuals.

Second, there has also been a question raised as to the delay of compensation. As the hon. Member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) pointed out, an attempt has been made in the bill to impose punitive interest rates for any delay which takes place in respect of the land.

Third, there has been a question raised in respect of what happens after the initial use is exhausted, and whether, the Government having divested itself of the land, it should be returned to the former owner at cost. The suggestion here is that among those who should be entitled to compete for the land is the original owner, if he is still in the neighbourhood and still owns contiguous lands, and that he should have the privilege of bidding pre-emptively for the land, with the value of the resale price to be decided by arbitration.

The fourth problem is that which relates to the cost of proceedings. There is a certain level of interest in respect of a $100,000 piece of property, and presumably the owner of the property will have no alternative but to litigate. However, in respect of a $5,000 or $7,000 piece of property—perhaps not very valuable by some individuals' standards but very valuable to a particular owner—this poses a very serious question relating to the possibility of incurring legal costs in excess of the actual return he will get from the property. The hon. Member for Carleton referred to the previous bill and the specific reference to the costs of these proceedings being paid by the Crown. Perhaps that might be the answer and that counsel acting on behalf of the Crown in appropriate cases should be allowed to pay costs of expropriation arbitrations.

The one thing I should like to make clear before taking my seat, however, has regard to a suggestion put forward by several hon. Members in relation to the ultimate right of the federal Government under expropriation law. This was referred to particularly by hon. Members in relation to the provisions of section 92(13) of the British North America Act, covering property and civil rights in the province. I think it is useful to mention to the House that under the provisions of section 92(10), while local works and undertakings—this is a phrase to be taken to include most real estate that might be expropriated—come under the jurisdiction of the provinces, by subsection (c) of that provision the federal Government is given power over such works, although as a whole situate within the province, as are declared to be in the interest of Canada as a whole. It is under that authority that the federal Government not only has the power to take the rights of a private citizen in land, but the rights of provincial governments themselves.

Mr. Speaker, hon. Members have made a number of valuable suggestions which I will take the opportunity to bring to the attention of the law officers of the Crown in their consideration of the Expropriation Bill.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask the hon. Member a question? In the opinion of the Parliamentary Secretary, does the Government anticipate bringing forward legislation of this kind before the end of this session?

Mr. Macdonald: I must confess to the hon. Member that I do not have the authority to commit the Government in that regard. I do know this question has been receiving intensive consideration and I am hopeful that a bill in this regard will not be delayed. I cannot commit the Government any more definitely than that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The hour for consideration of private Members' business has expired. It being seven o'clock the House will resume the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

INTERIM SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration in Committee of the following resolution—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $1,651,292,282.42, being the aggregate of:

(a) four twelfths of the total of all the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of Parliament, except external affairs item 15, mines and technical surveys item 70; and external affairs item 20 for which the proportion is three twelfths, $1,456,413,323;

(b) an additional four twelfths of the amounts of agriculture items 25 and 45, legislation item 15, and loans, investments and advances item L30 (Schedule A) of the said main estimates, $4,664,625;

(c) an additional two twelfths of the amount of northern affairs and national resources item 15, (Schedule B) of the said main estimates, $2,258,500;

(d) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of agriculture items 5 and 60, fisheries item 10, mines and technical surveys items 10, 15, 25, 45 and 60, national film board item 1, northern affairs and national resources item 45, (Schedule C) of the said main estimates, $9,566,025;

(e) seven twelfths of all the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (b) laid before the House of Commons at the present session of Parliament, $162,394,142.75;

(f) an additional four twelfths of the amounts of agriculture items 17b, 25b and 35b, mines and technical surveys item 70b, and loans, investments and advances item L78b, (Schedule D) of the said supplementary estimates, $7,245,666.67;

(g) an additional three twelfths of the amount of finance item 15b, (Schedule E) of the said supplementary estimates, $8,750,000, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, before six o'clock I had placed on the record the answers I received on behalf of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in respect of the De Luca matter, but there are certain questions which arise from those replies.

If De Luca, whose records were readily available to the Department of Immigration, was apprehended on March 17, why was it that it took until April 12 to determine that he had sufficient domicile in the country so as not to be subject to deportation proceedings? How is it that it took 25 days to make this determination, during which time he was confined to Bordeaux jail when, and this is patently clear to me, the officials of that Department had this man's records before them, knew when he entered the country and knew the date on which he was apprehended? Domicile in this case is a statutory period of time; if a man has five years domicile he cannot be deported. However, he was detained for 25 days in order to ascertain this. Now, it is odd, too, that there were certain charges laid under the Juvenile Delinquents Act, but those charges were not founded so the man was not convicted. The other charges were withdrawn.

• (7:00 p.m.)

I think the Minister must answer as to why this was done. I am not trying to judge the man's character when I pose these questions. However, this man is a fairly recent arrival in this country, and has been here for five years. Under what right do we take him off the street, out of his job and incarcerate him for 25 days to establish that he has been in the country five years and therefore could not be the subject of deportation proceedings? I think we require a full explanation. The explanation so far is quite unacceptable under the circumstances. We do not think this should happen, because under the Criminal Code every man who is arrested has to appear in court and his case dealt with within a fixed period. A man cannot be detained indefinitely. When this does happen, certainly a rebuke is administered to the officials responsible. This is a travesty of justice when a man is detained improperly, whether under the Criminal Code or under the Immigration Act. It is still a violation of his rights and I must protest against this type of action. Certainly, the Minister must come forward with a better explanation than has appeared so far in this particular case.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton West, but for some minutes, we have not had a quorum in the House.

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I shall ask the Clerk to count the House.

Mr. Lambert: I believe that, under these circumstances, House counting is not proper. So far as I am concerned, whether we have 15 or whatever, we carry on with the business. I do not care, but I suppose this is an opportunity to say certain people are present.

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I ask the Clerk to count the House.

Mr. Lambert: I hope this will not intrude on my time.

The Deputy Chairman: There are 22 Members present, the House is in order.

Mr. Lambert: I have finished with that matter.

The other day the hon. Member for Ontario asked the Minister of National Revenue about certain administrative rulings that were being followed concerning certain products of the ice cream industry which hitherto had been free of federal sales tax. We have protests, naturally, from the Dairy Council of Canada and inquiries as to why this has happened. The other day the Minister did not give an answer, and I invite him to give us an answer now. This administrative ruling was made in 1950, and if it was made at that time certainly there was a justification for the ruling. However, 15 years later, we find a change. I know this has been done in the past in connection with various taxation matters, but there must be justification for the change. It is not merely a case of a quest for revenue. Therefore, I invite the Minister of National Revenue or his representative to tell us precisely why this is being done. Certainly it is not a case of idle speculation, because the Dairy Council has put out a number of inquiries in regard to it; so obviously it must be well founded.

This afternoon I asked the Minister of Finance a question as to whether or not there had been any protests, official or otherwise, from the United States Government with regard to the bank controls that were being imposed on the Mercantile Bank of Canada as a result of its ownership by the First National City Bank of New York. I do not know why this action was taken. We will be discussing the subject again in committee when the Bank Act is before the committee. I must confess I cannot understand why there should be an element of retroactivity. After all, the Mercantile Bank of Canada was never owned by Canadians. When it was incorporated in 1952, it was definitely all Dutch capital. Control by the First National City Bank of New York came into the picture when it first of all acquired a 50 per cent interest in this foreign owned bank. Subsequently it acquired the remaining 50 per cent. Now, for some reason a bank which has been operating in Canada for 13 years is told, you cannot expand because of this nationalism the Minister is trying to impose upon our banks.

I have before me an article written by that great pundit of Liberalism, Bruce Hutchison, who writes periodically from great heights in the Christian Science Monitor.

Mr. Nielsen: The editor of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Lambert: Whatever he may be, here is the article. It is within this article that I find a suggestion which I have found elsewhere as well, that our Canadian banks or agencies in the United States may come in for retaliatory action. I made this suggestion on the second reading of Bill No. C-102. Certainly, we would resent anything that would curb their activities and cause them some retrenchment. On the other hand, we have here a proposal—you may check me, Mr. Chairman, if you think I am slightly out of order.

Mr. Gordon: I was just going to say that I would be glad to deal with this at the proper time.

Mr. Lambert: I am dealing with the reply to the question this afternoon. I am sure the Minister has seen this type of comment. He may not have received official information from the United States Government, but I feel I must make this comment because the question is there. The Minister says he is going to deal with it at the appropriate time, perhaps in committee in October, November or perhaps in December when the committee has reported the legislation back to the House.

• (7:10 p.m.)

However, this is not really the main burden of what I want to say tonight. This afternoon the hon. Member for Yukon raised the case of William Grant, a former Yukon Indian Agent at Whitehorse. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration indicated he had asked for a transcript of the judgment of Mr. Justice Parker. I trust he will read it because he will then see what I consider to be, not a prosecution but a persecution of a man whose record, according to the testimony of the trial and the editorials written since the verdict was handed down, was exemplary. This man was charged under six different counts with contraventions of the Financial Administration Act by making a false return to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

William Grant was suspended on May 15, 1963 after he had been transferred from the Yukon, according to what had been the undertaking given to him when he initially went there. He was a man of rather frail health who went up there in 1960. On account of his devotion to duty he decided against his own wishes and those of his wife to take on the job in the Yukon, but only for a limited time because his health would not stand it.

[Mr. Lambert.]

He was transferred south to Vernon in late 1962 or early 1963. Then his administration came under investigation and he was suspended in May 1963. But, Mr. Chairman, charges were not laid against him until November 5, 1964, after approval by the Minister of Justice. The charges were not laid by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration nor at his instance, because I think all will agree it is the decision of the Department of Justice and the Minister of Justice alone whether charges will be proceeded with or not.

This man went through his trial last week, and on Thursday Mr. Justice John Parker, even though over $70,000 was involved, fined him $10 on each charge, with one day in jail in the alternative. For the edification of hon. Members I will put on the record some of the things which were said by Mr. Justice Parker, and I hope that these words will sear the soul and brain of those people who were responsible for the charges in this case.

Mr. Justice Parker said:

> It would be quite inappropriate to send Mr. Grant to jail. Suspended sentence doesn't really apply. It would be an insult to this man to say, "You will go free if you stay out of trouble"... ridiculous. Mr. Grant is an exceptional man.
> When it comes to a penalty, Grant's career was shattered.

In parenthesis I may say he has been operating a small grocery store and his wife is a matron of nursing in a neighbouring hospital in B.C.

> He took certain risks, has said he was glad he did what he admits doing. He may still be glad, but he has suffered for it. There is no deterrent required ... how many public servants are going to take the risks Grant took to satisfy their conscience?
> Mr. Grant could have sat and watched the people in his agency die...could have said I have only so much money to spend, this has to be, I've done what I can. He did not do this. He risked his career to do what he as a conscientious person on the spot thought he could do without bringing the Government down on him. It is largely a matter of luck whether or not a government official can achieve these things. My final comment on the morality of this case...I like to think that had I been in Grant's position I would have had the courage to do as he did.

What was the offence? For housing some 2,500 people in the Yukon the department's allocation was $40,000, $16 per head on the average, and with respect to the conditions existing there one has only to read the evidence of the testimonials on behalf of Mr. Grant and the articles which appeared in the Western papers dealing with conditions among the native population in the Yukon.

What did Grant do? As appeared in the evidence, like many another agent he had an almost open end cash relief account. He drew a cheque on it in favour of someone in the agency, as the need arose, and when the cheque was cashed the money was used to pay the accounts due. Some 70 houses were built and power lines installed. From the evidence it is clear that not one penny of this $70,000 found its way into Grant's pocket. As a matter of fact the evidence showed he paid money of his own in order to assist the native population.

Yet because of ambition, because of somebody's political decision, this man and an associate were brought before the courts. I shall read further from Justice Parker's judgment:

I doubt whether Indian Affairs ever got better value for expenditure than in those Mr. Grant made. Even the subsidizing of an Indian candidate for Sourdough Rendezvous Queen was a morale booster for the native people. Grant knew he could have got no authority to do what he felt was desirable there. He cleared the right of way, got poles for electrical power to Upper Liard. I believe him when he says he pointed this out to Commissioner Boys.

There is a real possibility of misunderstanding here. Commissioner Boys may have interpreted Mr. Grant's explanation as being a way of getting work out of Indians on relief payments.

Here is another interesting comment from the judgment:

It is interesting to note the Government of Canada has made no effort to recover any of the funds expended in this unauthorized way...the reason is perfectly clear. The Government is saying, in effect, "You had absolutely no right to do the things you did, but we quite agree with what you've done.

I read further from the judgment:

He had access to the parliamentary vote for Indian housing in the Yukon and Northern B.C.... a total of only about $40,000 per year. The cost of housing units was five or six thousand each.

So he knew he could do something to assist them to get better housing, though official funds were limited, there was no particular limit on the amount for relief funds at his disposal in Vote 519, designated for food, clothing, fuel and other relief objects.

I am satisfied Mr. Grant was aware of the practice in other agencies where cheques written on Vote 519 were used for other purposes as the Superintendent thought best. The number of needs here was higher than encountered elsewhere. So what he did was to write relief cheques payable to someone in the agency, have them endorsed and use the funds for housing and certain other purposes.

The pressures of conscience must have been very great...to anyone in the Yukon this makes very good sense...they would say, "Well, as a taxpayer, I'm in favour of this." However, it was in absolute and direct violation of his instruction. He risked his career as a civil servant to do what his conscience told him should be done.

I now wish to quote from an editorial in the Edmonton Journal of Friday June 25:

Bureaucracy has seldom appeared more foolish or the law been made into a greater ass than in the outrageous prosecution of Mr. William Grant, the former Yukon Indian Agent.

In a trial before Mr. Justice Parker at Whitehorse Thursday, Mr. Grant was convicted of making false returns to the federal Indian Affairs Branch...

Mr. Justice Parker is to be highly commended on the sensible view he took of the case and for mitigating, so far as possible, the effects of the folly of the Indian Affairs Branch in prosecuting Mr. Grant.

• (7:20 p.m.)

I would interpolate here that I do not think it is the folly of the Indian Affairs Branch. The prosecution was the direct decision of the Minister of Justice, and in passing I note that Mr. Grant has not been drawing any salary since May 15, 1963, and his associate has not been drawing any salary since September 1963. Yet we heard the Minister of Justice say the other day that a certain justice in Quebec who has been convicted of perjury who has appealed this conviction is continuing to draw his salary.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Lambert: Is this a case of there being one law for those high in office and another for those who are not so high? We are all equal, but I suppose some people are more equal than others, if I may poorly paraphrase George Orwell.

An hon. Member: What did the hon. Member for Lapointe say?

Mr. Grégoire: It is because he gave his place to the Minister of Justice, to run in his constituency.

Mr. Lambert: Well, the hon. Member will make his own contribution. Those are his words.

This matter was suspended. Perhaps there was to be a cover-up. But why wait until November 5, 1964, to lay charges—18 months later? This is what we cannot understand.

Mr. Benson: I could tell you why.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Lambert: The Minister of National Revenue should listen to what this editorial has to say.

The judge said: "I should like to think that had I been in Grant's position I would have had the courage to do as he did." But he added that Mr. Grant's actions had "shattered his career."

Why should his career be shattered? The Federal Government must make amends to a good and faithful servant—and very handsomely. Every Canadian with a sense of justice and fair play will demand nothing less.

Now I turn to an editorial in the Whitehorse Star of June 24, 1965:

When Mr. Justice John Parker delivered his masterful summation in Territorial Court Wednesday afternoon, only a handful of spectators was present. None of them remained unmoved by the tribute paid to Bill Grant, a little guy who broke the rules to do what he felt had to be done. There is general rejoicing throughout the Yukon today that justice was done in that courtroom.

Now that the long strain is over, and Bill Grant relaxes for the first time in two years (it has been that long since he was suspended by Indian Affairs) there are a few afterthoughts for the record.

No one can assess what it cost Grant and Armishaw to face trial on charges which were brought by some unknown person to the Crown... how can anguish and heartbreak be weighed? How can a child's sorrow and torment at the hands of others be measured? How is a value placed on a beloved mother who suffers a stroke because of a court case?

There is one economic yardstick which can be measured however...in dollars and cents, Bill Grant has lost at least $20,000 because of his actions on behalf of the Indians in the Yukon. He has lost two years' salary as Superintendent of Indian Agency, plus transportation and other incidental expenses to go back and forth to Whitehorse from his home in Vanderhoof, B.C. for arrainging, for preliminary hearing, for trial. Legal counsel is another expense item.

Bill Grant and Joe Armishaw were brought back under police escort, housed in the R.C.M.P. detachment jail like common criminals. They have been unable to find employment for the past two years with serious charges hanging over their heads.

As Judge Parker commented, no deterrent is required... how many civil servants would be willing to risk their careers as Grant did?

Is there no compensation aside from moral justification?

I have before me testimonials from a number of citizens of Whitehorse as to the manner in which this man worked for the Indians. They speak eloquently of his position in Whitehorse. I do not know Grant. I have had no contact with him. But the mere appearance of these things in black and white cries out for justice. We all know that in every department certain things are done—the rules are bent slightly; a way is found to do justice, to do the right thing. Parliament provides certain sums of money for use in the Indian Affairs Branch. Many a superintendent of Indian Affairs believes he should be developing a community of people who will not simply be waiting for cash handouts. Here, this money was used for housing. One only has to read the reports of the medical officer to visualize the state of housing for the native people in Whitehorse—how unsanitary it was. But this was taken care of in part at least. And what was this man's recompense? A bureaucratic decision that he should be prosecuted. I say that this decision by the Department of Justice was a shabby decision, a shocking decision.

Now comes the question: What will happen to William Grant? Is he to bear the stigma of dismissal from Her Majesty's service because he was convicted on six charges under the Financial Administration Act, after he had put in 14 years of exemplary service? His service was valued service—

Mr. Moreau: Would the hon. Member permit a question? Would he tell us who it was who provided the niggardly sums for housing to meet this situation?

Mr. Lambert: This is the history all through. The situation is no better today than it was before. I am glad the hon. Member for York-Scarborough raised this point. It shows that all he can think of in this matter is partisan, political considerations. Nothing more is embodied in his question.

An hon. Member: As always.

Mr. Lambert: I am not excusing the previous administration. I am saying that this situation is a blot on the conscience of us all. I am not excusing myself for only $40,000 being provided for the housing in that area. It was wrong. Let us admit it was wrong. But what I am talking about now is the man who tried to get away from that position, Parliament having voted other funds. No one has said we must recover the money. The cash relief provision could have been cut by 60 per cent and the money applied to housing. It was there. One hundred thousand dollars could have been available.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. Lambert: In view of the fact that there were some interruptions, may I have a few more minutes? I am reaching my peroration.

I feel we should have a full explanation why this man was prosecuted. Why was there this persistence in the prosecution? After all, the evidence is that many other agents had done similar things in the past—they, too, out of humanity. I am not suggesting that the end always justifies the means. But money has been provided and the department obviously knew what was happening. How could they possibly have been unaware, after two or three years, that something was going on in this area?

• (7:30 p.m.)

Also, the houses were going up; there were field inspections. This would be apparent. But somehow or other after Grant left the Yukon there was a complaint; and by whom? It would be interesting to know who made the complaint, and why. I wish to thank the Committee for the extended time, Mr. Chairman. There may be some further remarks I may wish to make as the debate develops.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might reply briefly to one of the points raised by the hon. Member who has just spoken. I refer to the De Luca case. I think I might suggest, having regard to the wording of the two answers to which my hon. friend referred, that it might be suspected that there was good reason for this. If a man has been tried in the courts and acquitted, one does not like to go into too much detail in answering a question.

I might, for the information of the hon. Member and others interested, state that in this particular case De Luca, within five years of his landing in Canada and before he had acquired domicile, was convicted of assaulting his wife and sentenced to a short term in jail; I believe it was some three days. He might have been deported at that time, technically, because he had committed a crime which warranted action under the Immigration Act; he had been convicted of an indictable offence before he had acquired domicile in this country.

Before he had acquired domicile, while he was in Italy on a visit, leaving his wife behind him with the young children referred to, the Immigration Department received information of a very disturbing nature from the wife. That information was referred to the police authorities promptly and an investigation was made. This was within a matter of days before the five years would have elapsed permitting this man to gain the status of a domiciled Canadian. He was picked up on an immigration warrant and charges were laid against him in the courts; serious charges were laid in the Family Court. The immigration authorities did not release him on bail because of the serious nature of the charges, and the Judge of the Family Court also refused bail in that particular case.

Before the immigration authorities had an opportunity to proceed with the hearing, which would have justified his deportation because he had been convicted, a prerogative writ was issued. Because of the prerogative writ they could not proceed with the immigration hearing, and he acquired the five years domicile while the prerogative writ was pending in the courts. I think he had been picked up during the third week of March and by early April he had acquired the five years domicile and the Immigration Department could take no further action.

But, Mr. Chairman, if my hon. friend had wanted to see the file and the nature of the information, he had only to come to my office and he would have seen it. If he had done this I am quite sure he would not have been as critical of the Department as he has been today. The file is there and he can see it any time he wants to do so.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, why would the Minister tell me it takes 25 days to determine the fact that a man has acquired domicile? It is a simple case of mathematics. Whilst the Minister is considering his answer to that question perhaps he would address his mind to this point. Is it the practice of the Department to dredge out from maybe two years back a minor assault charge? I think one would have to really scrape the bottom of the barrel to justify deportation on that count and suggest that they are sufficient grounds.

This is the point that worries me. As I say, Mr. Chairman, I hold no brief for De Luca, but I am concerned with the time that was taken before he was released. If the release of April 12 was under the Family Court proceedings, then the Minister need only tell us that. I am concerned with how long the immigration authorities had him under detention.

Mr. Nicholson: He was released on April 12, Mr. Chairman. He was picked up on March 17. There were three charges laid under the Family Court Act, but in the meantime a prerogative writ was issued. My hon. friend knows that the hearing of a prerogative writ is within the jurisdiction of the court and not the Immigration Department, and we cannot proceed with an immigration hearing unless the ruling of the court permits us so to do. But before that prerogative writ issue had been disposed of he had acquired five years domicile in this country and we could take no further action. I wish my hon. friend would just take the time to come into my office and see the material that prompted the action in this case.

Interim Supply

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, there are two matters I would like to raise in this interim supply debate. I regret having to raise the first one but I do so because the matter has been raised time after time by other Members as well as myself and no action has been taken. So far as I am concerned, I am going to get up on every available opportunity until an injustice is corrected. The injustice is that the federal Government, quite legally but actually, is stealing some $1,500 a year from certain skilled tradesmen in their employ. I have never been able to understand why there is one policy in one department and an entirely different policy in another.

In the case of a skilled tradesman such as an electrician employed by the Department of Public Works in this building, he receives what is known as the prevailing rate. An electrician employed by the Department of Public Works has to have the same knowledge and does the same work as the electrician who works for a private contractor outside the public service. This is an accepted principle, and has been for years and years, in the Department of Public Works. But when we come to an electrician employed by the Department of National Defence in the dockyard at Esquimalt, then the prevailing rate structure does not apply.

I have raised this matter before and, as I say, I am raising it now and am going to keep on raising it until the situation is corrected. I will admit that I have a particular interest in this question because by trade I am an electrician myself and I know what these men are up against. There is only one difference between the electricians in the dockyard and myself, and that is that although I am trained to give light the same as they are, I also try to give light in a different way in this House of Commons.

An electrician in the dockyard at Esquimalt never goes on board ship—that is, the inside wireman—and therefore never does any work on board ship. Therefore he is not a marine electrician. Yet the Government insists on classifying the electricians in the dockyard at Esquimalt who never go on board ship, who have to do all the work that any other electrician has to do and have to have all the qualifications, as marine electricians and not as inside wiremen. This is the way they are classified by the department. A marine electrician receives $3.05 an hour; that is the prevailing rate. But an inside wireman in Victoria receives $3.85 an hour as the prevailing rate.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Year after year this department refuses to recognize that they are inside wiremen and they are not marine electricians, and because of this outright discrimination they are stealing $1,500 a year from the electricians employed by the Department of National Defence in the dockyard at Esquimalt. These inside wiremen not only do maintenance work but they have to do construction work. They have to handle pumps and other electric motors with ratings as high as 2,300 volts which marine electricians are not qualified or allowed to handle. Yet we have a continuation of this situation.

The situation is even worse for the linemen working in the dockyard. These linemen handle hot, as it is called. They handle up to 60,000 volts. They handle hot anything, from 110 volts, 220-240 volts, 2,300-2,400 right up to 60,000 volts. The B.C. hydro men outside the camps are paid $3.42 an hour. The linemen inside the fence working for the Government are paid $2.95 an hour, instead of $3.42. I say this is absolutely unfair and is against what has always been the policy in most Government departments, namely that skilled workmen, be they electricians, carpenters, painters, plumbers or steamfitters are paid the prevailing rate; and the prevailing rate is the union rate. In Victoria the Department of National Defence furthers this injustice by stealing from qualified workmen $1,500 a year by way of salary. I hope that this will be the last time that I, the hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich and others have to draw this discrimination to the attention of the Government. Before the House meets following the recess, which I understand is going to come about, I hope that corrective action will be taken in the payment of union wages to federal employees who are entitled to them, and that some consideration will be given to making this payment retroactive for at least a reasonable period of time.

There is one other matter I want to raise on interim supply, which provides the only occasion on which I can raise it. The City of Vancouver is not only a major port of Canada, but it is one of the major exporting ports of the world. There is a labour dispute taking place in the City of Vancouver. One of the elevators has been closed for a period of time. The union workers in Vancouver have, however, played fair with the farmers of this country and with the port of Vancouver and the Government in that, outside of this one elevator, all other elevators have been kept in operation and these men are prepared to move the wheat from the elevators to the ships just as fast as the ships come into port and the wheat becomes available.

However, Mr. Chairman, what is happening is this. The other elevator companies are by their actions blacklisting the port of Vancouver. They are by their actions being unfair to the farmers and laying the foundation for antagonism of the unions so that the strike will spread. Only yesterday I believe the Minister of Labour received a telegram from the United Brewery, Flour, Cereal, Soft Drink and Distillery Workers of America. This is the union concerned in the present dispute in Vancouver. I think that this matter is of such importance that the only way that we can assure a sense of decency on the part of these firms to their employees, the farmers of Canada and the Government is to place on record the complaint which has been officially brought to the attention of the Minister of Labour. Therefore having received a copy from the employees of the union concerned I should like to read this telegram. It reads as follows:

> Having promised the government to try and keep the export grain flowing through port of Vancouver by not spreading the strike to other elevators, while current industrial commission attempting settlement, unless provoked into doing so, the union urgently requests you to cause an investigation as to: (a) why are so many ships lying in the stream during the past six weeks, waiting to receive grain cargoes;
> (b) why the operating elevators do not and have not had the proper grades, e.g. Durum wheat, etc. on hand in sufficient quantity and why they have large vacant storage space at present;
>
> (c) why railroad cars from the prairie were reduced to a trickle on one or more occasions during last two months;
> (d) why many grain berths and loading spout facilities at operating elevators have been vacant and out of use during the past several weeks;
>
> (e) why one large elevator is cutting off receiving cars from three to five days so it can conduct a weighover, i.e. a Government inspection of grain on hand, when ships are waiting for wheat and prairie farmers are waiting to ship. Surely an extension could have been given this elevator by the board to protect its licence, if this is the problem;
>
> (f) why in light of above, farmers at east-west shipping point in Saskatchewan have not been able to have their storage grain shipped so as to clean out their bins for new crop;
>
> (g) why board developed new camouflage twist of placing on outside of cars cards designating other elevators as consignee yet when opened such cars have Alberta Wheat Pool grain tags inside.

This is the elevator that is being struck, Sir.

> This causes a struck company's grain to go into an unstruck elevator. It is a provocative move to possibly expand strike. Although unsavoury the union is urging its members to handle this wheat in order not to fall victim of companies provocations to expand strike, at least during incumbency of Commission.
> Copy of this wire sent to house leaders—

Etcetera. That telegram is signed by Mr. E. C. Sims on behalf of the grain workers union.

I do not apologize, Mr. Chairman, for taking up the time of this Committee in reading the telegram or raising this issue on interim supply. The farmers want to ship the wheat they have in stock, so as to clean their bins and be prepared for the new crop. The port of Vancouver wants to ship the grain. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is proud of the contracts he has been able to sign in connection with the export of Canadian wheat. The City of Vancouver wants the port kept open. The employees want to reach an amicable understanding with their employers. They do not want to close the port. They have shut down one elevator only as a demonstration of their demands and have left the others in operation. Yet the evidence from the union in Vancouver that the elevator companies are being provocative and are trying to provoke by their action the unions into expanding the strike, a strike which the Vancouver workers do not want, is conclusive. They are very definitely trying to provoke an expansion of the strike by placing labels on the outside of railway freight cars designating them for elevators which have not been struck. However, when the union men open the doors of those freight cars they find that they were originally intended for the Alberta wheat pool elevators which have been struck.

• (7:50 p.m.)

I know that all Members of this House want to see wheat flowing through the port of Vancouver, and the way to ensure this is to refuse to be part or parcel of mislabelling of freight cars, and to make sure that every bit of storage in elevators in Vancouver which have not been struck is fully utilized.

According to the telegram to which I referred there were not less than six ships in mid-stream Vancouver harbour waiting to be loaded with wheat, which apparently the other elevators were not prepared to supply because of their attempt to create the impression that elevator employees and unions are the ones who are responsible for the expansion of any tie-up in the City of Vancouver.

I think I have said enough to emphasize not only the importance of this matter but to draw this situation to the attention of the Minister of Labour. I have done so with the hope that he will not receive this telegram without doing something about it. He has very capable employees in Vancouver and I feel that he should give them explicit instructions to see that elevators which have not been struck are operating at full capacity to the benefit of the workers, the City of Vancouver, the farmers and this country as a whole. I want to reiterate my hope that the Member for Esquimalt-Saanich and myself will not have to get up again to ask for decency and fair play for the employees in the dockyards at Esquimalt in order that they may obtain their rights to receive prevailing rates, because they are qualified and they have to do the work.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take up a few minutes to raise a question of interest to all C.N.R. station masters, from Vancouver to Newfoundland.

Some time ago, I received representations from C.N.R. station masters and got in touch immediately with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill). I should like to read a few paragraphs from my letter, so that all the members, and more particularly the government members, might know the injustice which is being done by C.N.R. officials to station masters who have worked for that company for 15, 20 and even 30 years. Now, this is what I wrote to the Minister of Transport on April 14, 1965:

Honourable Sir:

I am informed that the Canadian National Railways intend to take away from station agents the express commissions on the line from Vancouver to Newfoundland. It seems that this amount paid in addition to the station masters' salaries amounted to over one million dollars. As a compensation, the C.N.R. has offered approximately $300,000 to be distributed in lieu of commissions.

And there I mentioned to the Minister of Transport that a few station agents had asked me to intervene on their behalf to correct, if possible, the new policy which C.N.R. officials intended to adopt.

In addition, I pointed out in my letter that those persons told me that this compensation would represent approximately one fourth of the amount they received previously as commissions. This means that a station master who received $500 in commissions to do this work would only receive about $125 under this new policy.

[Mr. Winch.]

On April 15, the minister acknowledged receipt of my letter and on June 10, he replied that he had received from the C.N.R. a report on my remarks about the proposed removal of the commissions. The authorities of the company also advised the Minister that the matter had been discussed with the Order of Railway Telegraphers for several years and that negotiations were under way with that organization.

The minister also suggested that those concerned be asked to submit the usual representations to their unions.

I want to point out this evening that station masters employed by the C.N.R. for many years got from $100 to $5,000 in commissions for their work. Those commissions cost a little over $1 million every year to the C.N.R. and now the company offers its station masters a compensation of $375,000, or approximately 25 per cent of the amount paid previously. In short, instead of getting a salary increase, as in every other segment of society, and in every other trade or profession, those C.N.R. employees must accept a rather substantial reduction.

I even met a station master who told me that this new policy would cost him over a thousand dollars a year in salary.

The company told the station masters to make their representations to their union, but the employees told us that the latter had informed them that they had to accept the company's offer because it seemed final.

At a meeting last May 13, the company offered station masters the sum of $250,000. According to a press release company officials stated:

[English]

—Company is desirous of withdrawing Express Commissions either through negotiations with us or by other means.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, that means that the station masters concerned had no other choice than to accept the company's offer, in order to obtain the largest amount possible, because the company would take other steps to withdraw express commissions.

• (8:00 p.m.)

After drawn-out negotiations, the union concerned was forced to accept an amount of $375,000 which was distributed as follows: 6 per cent in the Atlantic provinces, 25 per cent in the St. Lawrence region, 24 per cent in the Great Lakes area, 24 per cent in the Prairies and 11 per cent among the station agents of the Mountain region. The station agents will be forced to accept this amount and will have no other recourse. As a consequence, agents in my region as in others, will see their salaries reduced by $500, $800, $1,200 or $1,500 a year.

At present station agents are wondering if the C.P.R. has acted the same way. They would also like to know if this crown company, which receives federal grants, can actually reduce their earnings by eliminating the payment of commissions, and whether, in the next few months, the company will announce a salary revision so that they may receive as much money as they did prior to this agreement, to provide for their family's needs.

I take this opportunity to thank the minister, first for having answered my letter, and second, for having asked the C.N.R. for a report. I also wish to ask the minister to give this matter further study and to see if there has not been any discrimination against those C.N.R. station agents. It should also be determined whether those agents who, as I said earlier, received up to $4,000 in commissions but will henceforth be receiving only $1,000 to $1,500, will have their loss offset by an increase in salary of $2,000 to $2,500 a year.

I am sure that if the minister takes the trouble to study the question—and I know that he will do so—he will find that the people concerned have good grounds to fear the worst. Indeed, if members of all professions are getting salary raises at this time, it is inconceivable that this group of citizens, in all Canadian provinces, should suffer a salary decrease.

The second point I wish to make on interim supply arises from a certain statement by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays). We know that, at the present time, one must be very cautious in Canada as to the words one uses and the action one takes to achieve greater unity and understanding between western and eastern farmers. Sometimes, certain statements shock us and rightly so.

As far as I am concerned, as a citizen of eastern Canada and as a practising farmer, I do not want to criticize in any way western farmers or the present or the past governments for passing legislation in favour of farmers in the western provinces. What I want is that, instead of destroying the action taken in favour of western farmers by the governments, farmers from eastern Canada should find a way to profit by the advantages offered by the federal government. Too often in the past, there seemed to be attempts to rouse one group against the other, and in fact, we, in eastern Canada, have noticed, that such was, in a way, the policy of those who govern the affairs of this country.

Thus, during the last electoral campaigns, candidates in eastern cities, such as Toronto and Montreal, said that the Conservative party, when in office, favoured western Canada much too much. A feeling of distrust was created here against the Conservative party and western farmers who, it was said, were always asking the federal government for money under the crop insurance act and other legislation. It was even claimed that those statutes protected only western farmers. In my opinion, that campaign was disastrous for national unity and for eastern farmers.

I should like to make this appeal: Let us put an end to those suggestions and remarks which tend to divide rather than unite.

If every time a group, either from the east or the west, wants some legislation to be passed, another group objects thereto on the grounds that the government is doing too much for one part of the population, we are really going to divide Canada.

I should like to refer to what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) said last December—I was then recuperating from a car accident—before the Canadian federation of farmers at the Empress Hotel in British Columbia. I have read his remarks again and again, but it is the first time that I have the opportunity to quote them in the house for the information of all hon. Members and also for the edification of eastern farmers, so that they know exactly that the good old policy of the Liberal party of going into one part of the country to arouse its people against those of another area still prevails.

I will simply read without any comment what the Minister of Agriculture said. I am sure that everybody will be able to analyse his words and their purport.

I quote in English the minister's statement:

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

Achievements such as these have been due in large part to the capacity and ability of your farm people and leaders.

They have been due also, I would think, to the fact that there is still a pioneering spirit here, a willingness to try new approaches and break new ground.

[Translation]

This happened in British Columbia, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

As a matter of fact I sometimes wish we could transport some of this vigorous pioneering spirit, this eager open-mindedness and willingness to try new ideas which is so typical of the whole west —including the west I come from—to other parts of our country.

I know I'm prejudiced, but I think it would tone up some of our eastern provinces to have a little more of this healthy western pioneering spirit down there.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I know that westerners are broadminded and willing to accept new ideas, new ways of dealing with problems, but it does not follow, as the Minister of Agriculture seemed to insinuate, that farmers of eastern Canada, Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes, are narrowminded and unwilling to consider new ideas. If the minister created that impression in western Canada about the Ontario, Quebec and Maritime farmers, I would invite my hon. friends from the western provinces and British Columbia to come to the east, to Ontario, to my own province of Quebec, or to the Maritimes where they will meet farmers who are not narrowminded but willing to accept new ideas to improve their lot and help their profession.

However, none of those new ideas should be along the lines once suggested by the Minister of Agriculture, namely that the Quebec farmer could live with the proceeds from six cows and two sows and that the Quebec members who spoke in the house of a recession in agriculture were talking through their hats. That is no way of introducing new ideas or of dealing with a segment of the population which wants to live on Canadian soil and participate in the achievements of our national economy.

Frequently, organizations or people draw our attention to statements made by the Minister of Agriculture. At first we hoped that the minister would check his bursts of temper, stop making wanton statements or think twice before making great statements.

Some time ago Ontario farmers organized by the Ontario farmers' union marched on the federal capital. They came to ask the federal government to consider their problems and find a solution so that farmers could get a decent income, which is only right. In fact, if, according to statistics, the average income of the whole family is $7,200 this year, the average income of the eastern farmers family is much lower than that. If the government wants farmer income to increase proportionately, it should cease to make improper remarks against farm organizations and farmers.

The Minister of Agriculture had this to say about this march:

[Mr. Vincent.]

[English]

The brief presented by the marchers contained "serious factual errors in statistics and glaring contradictions in its own policy statements." No government can be impressed by this sort of presentation, he added.

[Translation]

And the minister continued further on:

[English]

Before agitating for action, surely it should know exactly what action it is agitating for. It seems to me that any other approach is purely irresponsible. And I don't just think Canada can afford this kind of irresponsibility inside or outside our politics.

[Translation]

This means, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of Agriculture was simply saying to these people that their brief concerning a certain policy was nonsense, irresponsible, and that the figures quoted were wrong; that these men who had taken the trouble to study data from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and the Department of Agriculture, these men who had come here to the federal capital to submit a true picture of farming in Ontario, were all wrong. They came here to ask that a specific policy be adopted, and they were told once more, and this to the Chamber of Commerce of Alberta, they had not considered the matter, in short, that they did not know what they were talking about. I suggest that such an answer tends to divide rather than unite the country or the classes of society, or the eastern and western farmers.

If the Minister of Agriculture has something to say to Ontario farmers, instead of doing so before the Chamber of Commerce of Alberta, he should have the courage to tell them face to face, or else in the course of a meeting in his office. If the Minister of Agriculture has something to say against the eastern farmers, let him not go to the Empress hotel, in British Columbia, and tell western farmers what is going on in eastern Canada; instead he should at least have the decency to reply to farmers of eastern Canada, to discuss with them the problems the East has to face and not go and discredit these people before their fellow citizens, counterparts or friends in western Canada. As far as we are concerned, we want others to succeed in their own region, but we also wish to succeed at home.

I shall conclude my remarks on these two points which I think, are significant; first, I hope the Minister of Transport will give immediate attention to the station agents of the Canadian National Railways in my province and in the eastern provinces; second, I hope the Minister of Agriculture will once and for all put an end to those unpleasant remarks about eastern farmers when he speaks to western farmers.

For my part and as far as we on this side of the house are concerned, we shall never agree to criticize or campaign against the present government if it helps western farmers, but I want the same attitude to be adopted by the government when its ministers come and make political speeches in my province and in all eastern Canada.

• (8:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if it would be agreeable, in order to get some legislation forward to the other place, if the committee were to rise, report progress and ask leave to sit later this day, or tomorrow? Then we could go on to deal with certain items of legislation—the veterans legislation, the Judges Act and possibly, though this is not yet certain, the resolution preceding the measure concerning incentives for designated areas.

Mr. Starr: Agreed.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING AMOUNTS, EXEMPTIONS, ADMINISTRATIONS, ETC.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-127, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I ask whether it is the intention of the Government to refer this amendment to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs?

Mr. Teillet: While I would have no objection to such a course, I think it would be of value if these bills were disposed of by the House. I will undertake to ensure that when the standing committee meets later this year these matters will be before them, along with others, and the veterans organizations will have ample opportunity to make any representations they may care to make.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to say that the Members of this party support the principle and purpose of this bill, which contains amendments which have been urged by various veterans organizations during the past two years to my knowledge. We might call this a tidying-up bill with respect to definitions and certain details which have been overlooked to date.

I know that hon. Members wish to get on with the legislation and I suggest we should pass through the second reading stage and ask any question we may wish to raise on the clauses, when we are in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Chatterton: Perhaps I might make a few observations—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would remind the hon. Member that we are not yet in Committee and that he has already taken part in the debate. If there is unanimous agreement that the hon. Member may take part in the debate again, it could be done. Otherwise, his contribution should be made in committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

On clause 1—"Child".

Mr. Chatterton: I wish to make a few remarks on clause 1 with regard to the proposed amendments to this Act. Generally speaking we are in favour of the proposals. We think they are good, though they do not in all respects conform to the recommendations of the veterans organizations. I admit these organizations have approved the schedule of payments and income limits.

• (8:30 p.m.)

The first point at which I suggest the present amendments are amiss is the provision for maximum income allowable to a married couple. The maximum income allowed under the terms of the present bill has been increased to $220, and the allowance has been increased to $161 a month. I wish to take up the case of the married veteran who has dependants—veterans who were granted war veterans allowance under section 3(1)(c). That is the provision which allows a veteran to obtain war veterans allowance because of unemployability. I have on my records an example which I referred to the Minister, and under the existing legislation the Minister of course had no alternative but to deny the application. This was a young veteran of 35 years of age who under section 3(1)(c) of the War Veterans Allowance Act was declared to be unemployable because of a serious heart condition. He had five children. Under the existing legislation and under the proposed legislation the maximum that can be granted to him out of the assistance fund is the maximum income allowable under the War Veterans Allowance Act, which is now $221 a month.

I admit, of course, and recognize that any allowance this couple would receive under the Family Allowance Act and under provincial social legislation is not considered as income—that is, any other such income—for the purpose of the ceiling of the War Veterans Allowance Act. But the fact of the matter is that in certain provinces, and certainly in British Columbia, the ceiling established by the War Veterans Allowance Act is greater than the ceiling allowed by the provincial government for social assistance. The result is that we get a married couple, without any children, receiving $221 a month. We also have another married couple where the husband is also in receipt of war veterans allowance, with five children, who are allowed exactly the same amount and the same ceiling. What I am suggesting is that the Minister consider merely raising the ceiling of allowable income to those war veterans allowance recipients who have dependant children. It will not cost any more money under the War Veterans Allowance Act. I am suggesting that the Minister merely raise the ceiling by say $25 per month for each dependant child. Then under the assistance fund they could receive an additional allowance, and if they do not receive the additional allowance because the board will not grant it to them, at least the wife could go out and work. The husband himself is unemployable, he has been declared so by medical certificate. The wife could go out and earn more money to support the five children, or however many there may be.

I suggest to the Minister that the situation is so obviously inequitable that it warrants his serious consideration. I have suggested that the maximum allowable income be increased by say $25 a month for each dependant child. I would appeal to the Minister to do this. I know he is interested in this matter and I ask that he consider this proposal very seriously under the present bill.

We are anxious to get this legislation through. Mind you, Mr. Chairman, there is not the same anxiety to get the war veterans allowance amendments through tonight or tomorrow because the increases are already in effect. But there are other ways in which this legislation could be improved. I could go on for some time describing some of the other inequities that exist under the War Veterans Allowance Act and which are not remedied by the proposed amendments. I would suggest to the Minister that perhaps this bill might be referred to the standing committee; but if it is not, let me mention another problem that has been brought to my attention on many, many occasions.

I realize this is somewhat of a departure from the original principle of war veterans allowance. One of the greatest difficulties I have seen with recipients of war veterans allowance concerns medical expenses incurred by the wife. I would suggest to the Minister that he seriously consider that the wife and also, of course, dependant children of a recipient be taken care of as far as treatment is concerned. Without going into any other anomalies that I have noticed, may I suggest to the Minister that if it cannot be done now, in the future the war veterans allowance be tied to an index, I would not say to the cost of living index but to the average standard of wages. It seems that veterans organizations are reasonably satisfied with the rate set under the proposed amendment and as established by the House last September. If this is a reasonable standard, let us tie it to the increase in wages of the people of the country. I think this would be very beneficial in the future, provided you use the right index, not the index used in the Canada Pension Plan, and escalate the war veterans allowance as the standard of wages across the country goes up.

May I again refer to the question of the increase in the allowable income to those recipients who have children. Remember, Mr. Chairman, that under the Canada Pension Plan an orphan is defined as being a child of a breadwinner who has died, and is given an allowance of $25 a month. This applies to each child up to four, and the allowance is $12.50 a month for each child thereafter. These people in receipt of war veterans allowance because of unemployability are not able to qualify their future orphans for this allowance.

Sometimes there is lack of consultation between one department and another. In this case I believe the Minister and his staff should consider the difference between the allowance in respect of an orphan where a recipient of war veterans allowance has died and should put the widow in the same category as a married veteran. But the children of the deceased war veterans allowance recipient cannot qualify for the orphan's benefit which is given under the Canada Pension Plan. Therefore there is all the more reason, I suggest to the Minister in all sincerity, for his considering at the very least raising the maximum income allowable to a married couple with dependant children.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I support the remarks of the hon. Member who has just spoken, although personally I think we would be well advised to pass the bill this evening. But I do think the questions the hon. Member has raised could be brought to the attention of the standing committee when the bill is before it for consideration and review, and I hope that in the meantime the Minister will give serious consideration to the points raised by the hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich. I may say before I sit down that I am very glad to see in this bill the provision whereby "widow" is defined as a widow of a veteran who, having been in receipt of an allowance under this Act, marries and whose husband dies within five years of the date of the marriage.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I have one point to put before the Minister. It is one that I have raised on previous occasions and I have spoken to the Minister privately about this. It concerns Canadian servicemen who are abroad and have not come back to Canada since either the end of World War I or World War II. They would in all respects qualify for pension except with regard to the residence requirement of one year in Canada. If I remember rightly, this is one of the basic factors, namely that there has to be one year's residence in Canada before a man may qualify for war veterans allowance.

However, there are now a number of cases of servicemen who have stayed abroad, particularly in the United Kingdom. I know some administrative difficulty may be caused in respect of the Canadian servicemen who have lived entirely in the United States, and this has perhaps posed most of the problem on the negative side of this question.

• (8:40 p.m.)

With regard to those who live in the United Kingdom, frankly I fail to see why, having amended our war veterans allowance provisions in the past few years, first of all the allowance should be payable to a recipient anywhere in the world, and second, that allied servicemen who have completed, either themselves or through their widows in appropriate cases, ten years residence in Canada can qualify for war veterans allowance or whatever consequential allowances are payable under the Act, yet Canadian servicemen, and there are a large number of them, who have remained in the United Kingdom and married there, not having come back to Canada, are just as much servicemen as those who live in Canada. We have accepted the principle of paying benefits offshore. Therefore in those circumstances I am wondering why we disqualify so many by insisting on one year's residence in Canada.

A man who otherwise qualifies for war veterans allowance is obviously precluded for economic reasons from coming back to Canada and establishing one year's residence and then returning to the United Kingdom. You might as well ask him to walk to the moon. Yet why cannot this be done in these cases? I put this before the Minister so that he and the senior officials of the War Veterans Allowance Board can consider this point, which I think should be discussed the next time the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs meets.

I have a very urgent plea on behalf of these veterans, particularly those who live in the United Kingdom and Europe. Those who are closer on the continent of North America I have less sympathy for, although there may be some cases of hardship involving health. Nevertheless I have less sympathy for men on the North American continent who cannot establish a year's residence in Canada. But I do not think we can fault the man who is overseas. If we accept the principle of payments offshore, why cannot we remove this disqualifying bar from these veterans?

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Chairman, there is just one more anomaly I should like to bring to the attention of the Minister. It relates to the widows of allied veterans. The present Act states that, provided the allied veteran has lived in Canada for ten years, or that the time the allied veteran has lived in Canada coupled with the time his widow subsequently lives in Canada amounts to a combined total of ten years, that veteran or his widow, as the case may be, is eligible for war veterans allowance. However, there is one anomaly under the Act, and this is where the veteran happens to die in a country other than Canada. In that event his widow, no matter how long she lives in Canada, cannot qualify.

I think this is an anomaly which should be brought to the attention of the Minister. I say this because his Department in Victoria actually had a case of this sort submitted to it. This sort of thing will not occur very often, but it is just as well that these anomalies are eliminated whenever this legislation comes up for amendent.

Therefore I would ask the Minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, to consider this particular anomaly, which perhaps will occur only once in a hundred times. But once is enough. I realize the officials of the Department, in my experience at any rate, have always done the most they can under the terms of this legislation, but I would ask the Minister to have his staff look into this anomaly and see whether it can be eliminated.

Bill reported.

Mr. Teillet moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, before we pass third reading I should like to ask a question. Is it distinctly understood that when the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs meets after the recess it will have the opportunity to discuss this bill and the war veterans allowance bill and to question the officials with respect to their operations, and so on?

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, I can certainly give that assurance because the estimates will be before the Committee. We will certainly do everything we can to ensure that there are no restrictions placed on discussions which take place in the Committee, so that we can cover all the aspects of the bill and other matters affecting veterans.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we have not insisted that this bill to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act be sent to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, will the Minister give his assurance that when his estimates come before the Standing Committee he will consider the suggestions made tonight relating to the modifications and amendments which hon. Members think might be considered at that time, and that the Government will consider further amending the Act? Some of these suggestions might involve changes in the regulations, but would the Minister consider this at that time?

[Mr. Chatterton.]

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, I have listened this evening with a great deal of interest to the comments made by hon. Members, and I can give the assurance that very serious consideration and study will be given to the suggestions which have been made. I am sure that hon. Members will have an opportunity to discuss these suggestions again before the Standing Committee at the appropriate time.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

VETERANS' LAND ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING AUTHORITY OF DIRECTOR, HOME CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE, ETC.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-128, to amend the Veterans' Land Act.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my first words will be those of commendation of the staff responsible for the administration of the Veterans' Land Act. We receive complaints from time to time from all kinds of people, but I remember the words of a former Minister of Veterans Affairs who said that a mistake of the mind will not be forgiven, but that he would forgive a mistake of the heart. This has been the principle under which the members of the staff administering the act have operated, and I want to commend them.

I gave this bill some study over the week end and I commend the director of the Veterans' Land Act and his staff for accomplishing in this bill many of the things for which both the veterans and the staff had asked for.

• (8:50 p.m.)

In general terms we are in accord with the proposals of Bill C-128 although there are one or two shortcomings that we feel we should deal with in detail later. These amendments are generally speaking those sought by veterans and hon. Members of this place. The improvements by raising the maximum loans under Parts I and III for small holdings to $18,000 in the case of Part I and to $14,000 in the case of full time farmers are generally acceptable. Some may say that the requirement of $2,600 as the maximum advance on $18,000 is a little high, but I do not think too many people would object to it. We are encouraged by the proposal and will make certain suggestions to the Government when we come to a detailed consideration.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the Members of this party support the principle and purpose of this bill and realize that a number of the suggested amendments have been suggested to the Cabinet by veterans organizations and to Members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, and that other amendments are the result of experience gained by officials administering the Act to date.

There has been a great amount of improvement in this type of legislation since the Soldier Settlement Act adopted after the first world war and the Canadian Farm Loans Act which followed that. I remember being a member of the Great War Veterans Association committee, which made recommendations for the amendment of the Soldier Settlement Act years ago, and later as a member of the Legion committee which made proposals which led to the adoption of what we now call the Veterans' Land Act.

I was also a member of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs in 1945 when this legislation was first presented and know that it was drawn largely on the basis of experience of officials of the Soldier Settlement Board and the Canadian Farm Loans Act, as well as on the basis of the experience of the veterans themselves as represented by resolutions and briefs presented by veterans organizations.

It is quite true to say that this Veterans' Land Act legislation has been successful throughout the years, and I think it has been successful because of the fact that there has been co-operation between governments of the day, veterans organizations and officials, and veterans directly concerned. A great deal of credit is due Brigadier Rutherford, who was the former head of that Board, and who laid the foundation for supervision of farm credit in Canada. This principle was later adopted by the Farm Credit Corporation.

In that connection I should like to quote briefly from the Family Herald. This is not a magazine that is read by intellectuals, but generally by the farming population of Canada. Its editor, Mr. Cram, is interested in this legislation and generally in all aspects of farm legislation. This is what he had to say recently:

> There are no statistics to show how many farmers there are in Canada today whose hopes of land ownership had been blighted by the depression of the thirties, then sidetracked by their service in World War II, finally to see those hopes come to fruition under VLA loans. Their numbers are undoubtedly legion.
>
> Apart from the provision of those individual opportunities the legacy which VLA leaves to Canadian agriculture will be a quarter century of practical, pragmatic administration of farm credit problems. Guided by some of the mistakes and misfortunes of its post-World War I predecessor, the Soldier Settlement Board, VLA was able to develop a program of assistance better tailored to the individual veterans capabilities and requirements.
>
> On at least three major counts, VLA deserves special commendation. First, its program possessed the needed flexibility to develop with the changing tempo of Canadian farming. The somewhat modest loan limits established in the immediate post-war years were gradually extended as modern agricultural techniques began to demand larger and larger amounts of capital.

That is what this bill recognizes.

> Second, from its very inception to the present time, VLA gave recognition to the needs of those veterans whose needs were so difficult to categorize: the smallholder, the part time farmer.

I am very glad to see that this is recognized because I have always maintained that there is a great place for smallholders and part-time farmers in this country. Many of these people supplement their income in this way. Very often they operate recreational facilities, such as small hotels or tourist accommodation resorts. For that reason I am pleased by this provision.

> At no time in its history was VLA unduly swayed by economic planning which overlooked individual hopes or ambitions. Indeed, roughly half of the loans approved were for smallholders. In so doing, VLA recognized part-time farming as an economic fact and as a way of life which many veterans wanted and were capable of achieving.

There is no doubt about it. The annual reports of the Department show that they have been most successful in this respect.

> Finally, years before anyone dreamed up the term, "supervised credit" VLA fieldmen were offering guidance and management advice to farming veterans. It was an approach which reflected the philosophy of VLA director Tom Rutherford and fortunately it followed him to the more liberally endowed Farm Credit Corporation.

He goes on and makes some further complimentary remarks about the work of the officials involved in the administration of this legislation.

I could not resist the opportunity of placing that quotation on the record because I believe it is only right to give credit where we think credit is due.

I take this opportunity to refer to the work of the officials of the VLA in relation to projects which are being undertaken under the Columbia River Treaty and I am glad to see the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Martin) in the House this evening to hear my plea on behalf of some of the veterans I have the honour to represent.

Since the passing of this treaty, one of the co-chairmen of that hydraheaded monster, known as the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority, has been tramping around to every organization in British Columbia which would listen to him stating how generously everybody was going to be treated. I may say that that has not been the case as far as a number of persons I have the honour to represent, including veterans.

Today I received a letter in this vein from a man affected by this proposal. Inevitably these people who write me have been on the land for 50 or 60 years and are usually over 70 years of age. Inevitably I write back and tell them to stand firm and to turn down every offer they get until they feel they have received justice. I do so because I know the hydro people are very sensitive to public opinion, and know that veterans stand a good chance of getting a reasonable offer if they stand firm.

Quite recently I was very pleased to learn that one veteran, whose case I brought to the attention of the Minister, received a very satisfactory settlement. This case involved some very minor matters, but I give the Minister full credit in this regard.

I was very pleased to hear that another veteran who wrote me had accepted my advice to stand firm, had the courage to do so and received recently an offer of $4,000 more than the original offer, with the right to retain two thirds of the property which was originally intended to be taken over.

Another chap wrote me from Renata, British Columbia, whom I have known for 40 years and who, by the way, is over 70 years of age, stating that he had received an offer from the British Columbia Hydro Evaluation Committee. I wrote him giving him the same advice, to stand firm.

Mr. Fairweather: You sound like Ann Landers.

Mr. Herridge: I was pleased to give him that advice, and have since learned that his first offer of $14,000 was increased by some $4,500.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Now, I want to mention that under this Act the advisers only have the right to deal with veterans officially who have purchased under the Veterans' Land Act. They can give advice to them. I appreciate, however, that the Minister has been kind enough to tell them to call on other veterans who are not under the Veterans' Land Act and advise and assist them. The officials have gone around advising them as to their circumstances, and so on. I want to say I appreciate the fact the Minister takes that stand, and the veterans I have the honour to represent appreciate the work that has been done by the officials in this respect, so far as Veterans' Land Act holders and veterans in general are concerned. I hope the Minister keeps up the good work and when he visits the Kootenays, as I understand he will on July 7, I hope he will tell them he is right behind them and willing to do all he can to see that they get justice.

I have another matter to bring to the attention of the House before I continue my remarks. Some of these former soldiers do not swallow everything that is told to them. One of them wrote me recently asking how income tax applied if he accepted an offer for his property from the B.C. Hydro Power Authority. I wrote to the Minister of National Revenue asking him to give me some information on this subject and the Minister replied at considerable length. I want to quote his letter because putting it on Hansard is the easiest way of putting it in the hands of some 500 people who are interested in this subject.

Mr. Fairweather: I knew there was some motive in all this letter writing.

Mr. Herridge: The hon. Member says I have a motive here. I am standing up for the rights of the people I have the honour to represent, and I have already made a public announcement as to what I intend to do in the near future. I quote the Minister's reply:

Dear Mr. Herridge:

I am pleased to answer your letter of the 10th June addressed to Mr. H. H. Milburn of the Taxation Division. You attached a copy of the letter addressed to you by Mr. Chris Spicer of Nakusp, B.C.

Mr. Spicer is concerned that the compensation received by persons who will be displaced by the construction of the High Arrow Dam from the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority may be subject to income tax.

In the usual course, it is quite certain that the assessors from the Taxation Division will have regard to these compensation payments to ensure that any resulting tax is paid as required by the statute. The statute is complex and its application may vary depending on the particular circumstances of the taxpayer, the nature of the property and of its use by such taxpayer, and the basis on which the actual compensation has been determined. For instance, it will make a difference whether the property was held to produce income from a business, to produce rental income, as stock-in-trade, or solely for personal use.

In such circumstances, it is risky to generalize but it may be helpful to have the following general comments which would be applicable when a person receives compensation for property taken by expropriation:

1. the compensation will be regarded as being for the physical assets expropriated even though consideration was given to intangibles, loss of income, etc., in arriving at the final compensation figure;

2. where the physical assets include depreciable property a reasonable portion of the compensation will be considered as proceeds of disposition of such depreciable property and, in some cases, will result in recapture of all or part of the capital cost allowance previously claimed on such depreciable property;

3. where the physical assets include stock-in-trade (such as land of a dealer in real estate) a reasonable part of the compensation that would relate to such stock in trade would be included in income, and

4. in some cases an amount will be paid in addition to the compensation to cover interest from the date the compensation is determined to the payment date. Such interest, when received, would be income subject to tax.

I am sorry that I cannot be more explicit but the provisions of the Income Tax Act cover such a variety of circumstances that almost every case must be considered on its own merit.

Yours truly,

E. J. Benson,
Minister of National Revenue.

I was glad the Minister went to such pains to write me at this length. I have read the letter into the record so it will be a matter of record. I urge the Minister to advise his officials to warn every veteran who has settled under the Veterans' Land Act, or any other veteran, to inquire of the Income Tax Department what income tax they may be liable to pay before they accept any final offer from the B.C. Power Authority. I am sure they would be willing to do this. I have mentioned these facts because I am interested in doing what I can on behalf of the veterans I have the honour to represent. I want to mention that other Members in the House should realize that when you get justice for a veteran who has settled under the Veterans' Land Act or when you get justice for any veteran as a result of co-operation with the Department of Veterans Affairs, you are also laying the foundation for justice for all the people who will be subject to dispossession as a result of the projects under the Columbia River Treaty.

I want to thank the Minister again for what has been done in this respect and I trust his officials will continue to do all they can to help these men. All they are asking is fair and reasonable compensation for the purchase or expropriation of land which they have spent the greater part of their lives in clearing, for planting trees or general farming. With these few remarks, I will resume my seat and I apologize for taking a little longer than is usual in these rather exhausting circumstances.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I just want to be sure that the hon. Member who has just spoken wants to be reported in a way which he would not perhaps wish to have stand on the record. I understood him to say that the Family Herald was not read by intellectuals but it was read by farmers, implying that in many cases these are not the same people. I think he would agree with me that some of the great intellects in the country belong to farmers. Perhaps he used it in the sense the word is beginning to acquire now, namely that an intellectual is one who is rather a self-appointed, opinionated person who tells other people what they should do. If that is his intention, then I would agree with him.

Mr. Herridge: I am glad the hon. gentleman raised the question. In case I would be misunderstood, I should have said, usually not read by the so-called intellectual elite.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): We in this party generally support the many amendments that are provided in Bill No. C-128 concerning the Veterans' Land Act. We know that there are provisions in the bill before us to increase the limits of the loans available to veterans under one section from $12,000 to $18,000 and another section from $12,000 to $20,000. So far as we are concerned this just gives those people who are financing under the Veterans' Land Act the same kind of justice as has been provided now under the Farm Credit Corporation and Farm Improvement Loans Acts. We know also, Mr. Speaker, that there is a provision for varying the terms of repayment and that the director of the Veterans' Land Act shall have authority, at his discretion, to vary the terms of repayment from time to time.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I think, Mr. Speaker, that this is a provision that should be in the Veterans' Land Act. It should be included also in several other measures that are on the federal statute books. I say that because during the 30 year period for which these loans were originally advanced there could be years when a veteran is unable to meet his payments on principal and interest, or generally to amortize his loan. Certainly if there is some way to defer or postpone these repayments during a particularly hard year it will save the farm unit, save the veteran from disaster, and maintain the value of the farm unit because an experienced man will be continuing its operation. It is far more satisfactory to the department, to the veteran and to all involved if there is provision to get over these difficult years without loading the veteran up with substantially increased payments the following year, and we note with pleasure that there is this kind of provision in the bill.

There is also provision for extending the use which can be made of loans, something which will be generally useful. But we expect the Minister and the department to be careful in extending their use for purposes other than farm units because we do not want the intent of the act to be abused. However, there are many cases in which some supplementary enterprise could help a veteran meet the cost of living.

The bill also provides that the director may sell for something other than cash property that comes to him. This is a tremendous improvement, because in many cases when sold for cash the price is substantially less than could be obtained otherwise, and the veteran who has equity in the unit will get more from the proceeds of the resale if a prospective purchaser can work out a financing arrangement, rather than paying fully in cash.

There is also provision for consolidation of debt owed to the director into one contract, if a number of contracts are involved. This is also an improvement. We in this party generally support these provisions in the bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to say a word on Bill No. C-128, but since we have only the English text, I shall do so the next time around, when it comes up for third reading.

Until then, I hope the minister will try to provide a French translation of the bill for the benefit of the committee which will sit at eleven o'clock to-morrow morning, in order that I may be able to study it in advance.

That is all I have to say this evening on the matter.

[English]

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, ordinarily we in this party would ask that the bill be studied by the Veterans Affairs Committee, but since many veterans are anxiously awaiting its passage we in Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition wish to see it passed as quickly as possible. The Minister promised last September that this legislation would be introduced by Christmas. His promise has been of absolutely no use to the veterans of Canada and to the vital work to be done under the Veterans' Land Act.

On behalf of more than one of my constituents I wish to say they complain that under the Act, if they own, shall we say, a small house and lot in a suburban location, and if they wish to buy a little more land in order to raise garden produce, poultry, or engage in a limited form of animal husbandry, they are impeded from getting credit under the Act. I do not think it is against the law for a veteran to borrow money to buy a small lot for this purpose across the road from his residence, but at present it is against the rules, since it is not contiguous to his holding.

I have already requested that one veteran in my home town be allowed to do so, but credit has been refused. I have spoken to the departmental field official, and now I bring this matter to the Minister's attention in the hope that he will give it the consideration it merits.

I wish to raise another matter regarding the pensioning of the widows of veterans but I am afraid if I do so you, Mr. Speaker, will rule me out of order at this time. Therefore I shall raise it at the next convenient occasion.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

On clause 1.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, before proceeding with clause 1, I should like to point out that we did not receive the French copy of the bill and that this is most inconvenient. On the other hand, we realize that the minister wants to have this bill passed as soon as possible and we have no objection to that. However, could the minister assure us that we will have the French copy of the bill before third reading? If not, we will not agree blindly to all the provisions of this bill if we do not have the French version to consider them. Is the minister prepared to guarantee that the bill will not be read for the third time before we receive the French version?

Mr. Teillet: Under the circumstances, I have to accede to the request of the hon. member and postpone third reading of the bill. I was told that the French version was not ready but that we would get it tomorrow. If we could agree on third reading tomorrow afternoon, it would be satisfactory.

Mr. Grégoire: Could I ask the minister to take this opportunity to find out why this bill has not yet been translated? He would thus perhaps find out why French copies are always late. Perhaps the minister could obtain this information and tell us the reason for such delays.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I certainly intend to.

[English]

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2.

Mr. Nesbitt: Could the Minister tell us whether this covers the situation which arises frequently where a veteran obtains a loan for the purpose of building a home. Before final approval is given by the director the building contractor finds he has to have some of the material approved by the appropriate authorities, by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and approval is obtained from them before it is obtained from the director. In the meantime, debts are incurred and in a number of cases this causes a problem as a result of misunderstanding on the part of the veteran and the contractor. This clause seems likely to rectify such a situation and I am wondering whether the Minister can assure us that this is the case.

Mr. Teillet: I am informed that this is one of the purposes of the clause, among others.

Mr. Harkness: As I read this clause I take it that should a veteran vacate his interest completely the director would be empowered when determining the amount of money which will be paid to the veteran on account of his interest in the land to take into consideration the value of the improvements which the veteran may have made during the term of his occupancy. Who will determine the value of these improvements for the purpose of arriving at the final payment to be made to the veteran?

Mr. Teillet: The decision as to the value will be based on outstanding bills and the assessment by the director and his staff. Perhaps I could cite an example of what is intended here. A veteran may suddenly run short of water for his livestock and have to dig a well costing $1,000. Previously this cost could not have been incorporated into the debt because prior approval had not been given. The director now purchases the improvement by paying off the debt. The debt is then re-amortized in keeping with the veteran's ability to meet the payments.

Mr. Harkness: Is it not the purpose of this clause to look after the case where a veteran decides to turn back the land to the director, in which case the value the veteran has acquired in this land will be refunded him, taking into account any improvements which may have been made?

Mr. Teillet: In the majority of such cases this land would be posted and public tenders would be called. So the value of the property would be decided by the purchase price which could be obtained.

Mr. Harkness: But this clause says: "Where the director acquires land and improvements thereon from a veteran—". Surely this must take into consideration the case of a veteran who gives up his land to the director and is paid off taking into account whatever equity he has in the land plus the improvements.

Mr. Teillet: The clause is intended to convey that the director when acquiring land, that is, for the purpose of establishing a veteran on land—

Mr. Harkness: Yes, but the language of the bill is "Where the director acquires land and improvements thereon from a veteran—" it does not say "for a veteran". Therefore the only meaning I can get from it is that this is intended to cover the case where a veteran liquidates his contract with the director. Provision is being made so that his equity can be paid to him.

Mr. Teillet: It might clear up this difficulty if I restate what I said a few moments ago. The position technically is that the director purchases the improvement from the veteran by paying off the debt. It then becomes the property of the director. But it is still for the benefit of the established veteran.

Mr. Harkness: Then this has nothing to do with a veteran who terminates his contract with the department or with the director. It is intended to cover cases in which a veteran acquires more land or buys improvements. The necessary payments could then be consolidated into the debt.

Mr. Teillet: That is right.

Mr. MacInnis: I should like to ask the Minister whether he means that the resale value of the property less the amount of the equity that the department has acquired would be the price which a veteran selling the property or giving it up would expect to receive from the transaction.

Mr. Teillet: The best way of answering that question would be to say that on the disposal of a property to the public a veteran would receive the difference between the indebtedness to the director and the amount of the purchase price, and the amount of the sale price, if any.

Mr. Nesbitt: Another brief question to the Minister. When will these amendments come into effect, and are they to be retroactive in nature? Will these provisions go back six months or a year?

Mr. Teillet: These provisions will come into effect on Royal Assent being given, without any retroactive feature.

Mr. Nesbitt: So the director will not be in a position to help out with respect to any difficulties which may presently exist.

Mr. Teillet: I did not mean they would not be retroactive in that sense. Improvements which have been acquired by the veteran and which are presently part of his indebtedness can now be acquired by the director.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Chairman, I have just one question arising from the Minister's reply. I knew that he did not mean it would not be retroactive. But let us say that the veteran who has now been established under the V.L.A. has incurred debts. He cannot of course encumber the title because the title lies with the director; but let us say he has incurred debts for certain improvements to his property. Will he be entitled to apply for an additional loan to pay off those debts, provided of course they add an equivalent value to the property?

Mr. Teillet: Yes, Mr. Chairman. That was in essence the answer I was attempting to give to the hon. Member a moment ago. That will be possible.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, is the purpose of this clause to enable a veteran who has, say, had a small holding, a housing unit or a full time farm for at least ten years, to lease it under any terms that he finds advantageous to him without having to secure the permission of the director? Is he empowered to do that under this clause?

Mr. Teillet: The veteran can make the arrangements, but he must have the permission of the director.

Mr. Harkness: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I did not hear that answer.

Mr. Teillet: The veteran can make his own arrangements with regard to leasing, but he must have the permission of the director as long as the title is vested in the director of the V.L.A.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I have a further question along the lines of the question asked by the hon. Member for Calgary South. That is only applicable if the veteran is holding an agreement with the V.L.A. in excess of ten years. If he is working under a 20-year agreement, that would apply; but if he is only under a ten-year agreement he is free to do what he wishes.

Mr. Teillet: After the ten years, provided he has repaid his indebtedness to his director, he is of course absolutely free to do as he wishes, because he is in the same position as any other man who owns his land outright.

Mr. Harkness: What I want to get at particularly is whether this permission would apply to a leasing of the property. The original provisions under the Veterans' Land Act were, particularly as far as a regular farm was concerned, that the veteran had to continue operating that farm and continue in residence on it. I take it that this amendment is designed to relax that provision and permit the veteran who has lived on and operated his farm for ten years to lease it to somebody if he finds it advantageous to do so. Does this also apply to a small holding and a housing unit which he has secured under the Veterans' Land Act?

Mr. Teillet: I am given to understand that this would apply after the ten-year period. When a veteran has gone absent for any purpose in the past, the V.L.A. has been responsible for all leasing arrangements of the property. Now this will be the responsibility of the veteran after he has earned his grant; that is, after the ten years or after he has acquired title.

Mr. Harkness: This applies no matter what type of land the veteran secured, whether it was just a housing unit, a small holding or a full time farm?

Mr. Teillet: That is right.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, on clause 4, subclause (4), the purpose of this amendment is to extend the purposes for which the proceeds of sale of livestock or farm equipment may be used; but it does not really, if you read the subclause, indicate what those extensions are. I wonder whether the Minister could give us some explanation of what is the intended use of these extensions for the proceeds of sale of livestock or farm equipment.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this clause is to permit a veteran to use moneys from proceeds of sales of this kind to retire debts for which the director himself has no responsibility—that is outside debts—where it is deemed wise and proper.

Mr. Olson: One other question, Mr. Chairman. Would the veteran, for this purpose, have to obtain permission from the director to use the funds for retiring these debts, or would passing this particular amendment to the Act give him the power to make this decision without the permission of the director?

Mr. Teillet: No, Mr. Chairman; he would require the permission of the director in any event.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 5 and 6 agreed to.

On clause 7.

Mr. MacRae: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the Minister about clause 7, section 16A of the Act. My question is motivated by a case which occurred within the last two or three days. A young veteran who served in World War II died suddenly owing the director $2,600. His widow was under the impression that he was insured by the director under section 16A as it stood before this bill was brought in. I would like to ask the Minister if he could advise us whether this widow is covered in this particular case; that is, whether she actually owes $2,600. She is a widow with two small children and it would be practically impossible for her to make the payments without the father and breadwinner. I know that the Minister would perhaps have to consult his officials here because this is fairly technical, but can he see any recourse for this particular widow under the new section 16A? Will she be covered for this amount? It is a very distressing case, I would point out to the Minister. The period of retroactivity which he mentioned a moment ago might cover this case; I do not know. But this is fairly technical language and perhaps the officials might advise the Minister and he could give an answer.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this clause is as follows. Because of age and increased loan amounts, the cost of insurance would be substantial if coverage of the entire amount of the loan was mandatory. There is merit in covering the breadwinner if the veteran is a woman. Premiums on the arrears will now be paid from the Veterans' Land Act fund and, as before, recovered from the veteran. I could not at this moment give the hon. Member any satisfactory answer. I have serious doubts that there is any satisfactory answer, but if he would bring the case to the attention of the director of the Veterans' Land Act I am sure he will look into and do whatever is possible for him to do.

Mr. MacRae: Up to this point there has been no compulsion on the part of the veteran who is holding land under the Veterans' Land Act to have insurance which would cover him in the event of his death. There was nothing there to this point that made it mandatory, in other words.

Mr. Teillet: No, Mr. Chairman, this was voluntary.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 8.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, with regard to clause 8, if I am not completely mistaken, when a veteran was in default as far as taxes were concerned, the director paid the taxes. This amount would then be part of the amount owed by the veteran to the director.

• (9:40 p.m.)

As far as I can see, the only change made here is that provision is made for the director to enter into an agreement with the veteran, which agreement presumably fixes the rate of interest on the amount the director has paid on the taxes in default, or if no such agreement is entered into the veteran will then automatically be charged the rate of 5 per cent. Under the situation presently prevailing, when the veteran is in default of taxes the director of the Veterans' Land Act pays the taxes owing, which then become part of the debt of the veteran concerned to the director, he being liable for interest at only 3 per cent, which was the rate at which most of these Veterans' Land Act contracts were entered into. In other words, this is a provision by which the veteran can be charged 2 per cent or more beyond that which he is charged at the present time.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I am informed that most of these charges are now 5 per cent. However, up until now it was not possible for the director to pay taxes or assessments until the arrears reached the stage where they became a matter of sale because of taxes owing. This is to enable the director to enter into an arrangement with a veteran at any time in order to look after payment of his taxes.

Mr. Harkness: But is my basic contention nevertheless not the fact, namely that up until the time the veteran became in default of taxes the director paid the taxes and the amount so paid became part of the veteran's debt to the director, and he paid interest at the rate of 3 per cent, which was the normal rate prevailing when most of these contracts were entered into? Whereas now the veteran pays 5 per cent or more.

Mr. Teillet: This is correct. The amount was 3½ per cent, but in a number of these cases the rate is now 5 per cent after the initial amount of $6,000.

Mr. Harkness: The point I should like to make is this. Would it not be more equitable to continue the rate of interest at the rate which the veteran paid when he entered into the agreement when, owing to unfortunate circumstances, he fell into default in his taxes, instead of increasing the burden upon him, which in most cases I think the veteran would find extremely difficult to discharge in any event?

Mr. Teillet: I am informed there was an amendment in 1959 to enable the director to charge 5 per cent on overdue balances of unpaid taxes; so really there is no change in the rate effected by this clause.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 9—Disposal of property.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, this clause provides authority for the director to sell property of a veteran on terms other than cash. I would ask the Minister whether under this provision the director will be able to acquire property given to him by reason of default, refinancing it under the provisions of the Veterans' Land Act to another veteran. Or is it necessary that all these pieces of property go to public tender first, so that the veteran in default may be able to regain his full equity?

The other point is that, even if the property did go to public tender, would it be possible for some other veteran to acquire the property by public tender and have the financing done under the provisions of the V.L.A.?

Mr. Teillet: First of all, I must say that the director has been disposing of property in this way by Order in Council. He will now be permitted to do this under the Act. It is always permissible at any time for the director, when he comes into possession of the property of a veteran in default, to establish another veteran on the property. There is no requirement that he must dispose of the property otherwise. It is then the duty of the director to do whatever he can to protect the interests of both veterans involved—the one who has failed in his establishment and the one being re-established. But the interest of the veteran is the primary concern in all these cases on either side.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 10—Terminal dates of sale, advance, loan or grant.

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Chairman, this is one occasion on which I want to criticize the Minister and his staff for an omission in not making any amendment to section 25A of the existing Act, which says, in effect, that any veteran may receive assistance if he has not qualified by October 31, 1968. I find no fault with the time limitation for application for assistance by new veterans up to March 31, 1974, but the Minister will find himself in the position, come 1968, that veterans will have had their qualification certificates cancelled unilaterally by the Government without consultation, even without the veterans themselves knowing about it. Therefore I warn the Minister now that when 1968 comes along the Government will have to be aware of the many cases where veterans are not qualified, in spite of the fact that they have no knowledge of their disqualification. I know there will be another five years to run but, come 1968, the Minister will run into trouble, so he might as well be forewarned about it.

Mr. Teillet: I will make a note of that, Mr. Chairman.

Clauses 11 to 13 inclusive agreed to.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 14.

Mr. Harkness: Could the Minister explain how this clause will improve the position of the Indian veteran in securing a loan under the Veterans' Land Act?

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, up until now it has not been possible for the director to purchase these lands with buildings on them. This clause will enable the director to purchase buildings which are situate on these lands. That is, he will be able to purchase the buildings without purchasing the lands, in the case of provincial lands or lands belonging to the reservation. The director would own only the buildings, not the lands themselves.

Mr. Harkness: Has not the situation always been, and does it not continue to be, that as far as the Indian veteran is concerned, in order for him to secure any advantage under the Veterans' Land Act he would have to secure an allocation of lands on his reserve? I do not think there has ever been any question about the right to secure a loan to purchase whatever houses or buildings were on the lands—in other words, improvements to the land. However, the land itself could not be purchased because it was part of the reserve.

Mr. Teillet: I am informed that this is tidying up. The hon. Member is perfectly correct that this was being done, but the legality of it has been questioned. Therefore this clause will tidy up the section of the Act and permit the director to operate with a clearer conscience

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 15, 16 and 17 agreed to.

On clause 18.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, just one question on this clause. Is any age limit laid down as far as veterans are concerned to enable them to get these various loans? There was always an age limit to this bill. Does that age limit still apply or does this relaxation with regard to the amount of the loan not take into consideration the age limit?

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Teillet: No, there is no age limit, Mr. Chairman. Apparently there was an age limit, but this is a matter which is left largely in the hands of the director and his staff to judge, in view of the circumstances of the veteran. There is no age limit provided for in the Act.

Mr. Harkness: There was an age limit, and it is my belief that there still is an age limit, at least in some way, in respect of a veteran obtaining settlement under the Veterans' Land Act. I am wondering whether a veteran aged 70 could be able to take advantage of this increased credit available, or whether there is some age limit.

Mr. Teillet: This is a matter which is the subject of decision by the director and his staff. They must exercise their own judgment in a case such as that illustrated by the hon. Member. There is no age limit in the Act, and these things must be a matter of judgment.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 19, 20 and 21 agreed to.

On clause 22—Interest rates.

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up much time, but it is in respect of clause 22 that I should like to make my most serious criticism of these amendments to the Veterans' Land Act.

This clause states that the interest rates on loans made under Part III up to $20,000 shall remain as they are now, but on loans above $20,000 to $40,000 they shall be set by the Governor in Council. Under the Farm Credit Act at the present time the Governor in Council sets the interest rates on loans at 6⅜ per cent. In view of the fact that we are dealing with veterans, with whom we have always been generous, we should provide a maximum interest rate in respect of these loans. I do not suggest that the Government should subsidize veterans by way of a low interest rate on loans above $20,000, but I do suggest that the Minister should seriously consider, before we give third reading to this proposal which I understand will be postponed until the French version of the bill is made available, to setting the maximum interest rate on loans above $20,000 as the cost of long term money to the Government, plus one eighth of 1 per cent to cover handling costs. This would mean that the Government would not be financing these loans out of its revenue. While it is true that the Farm Credit Corporation is a Crown corporation which must pay its own expenses out of revenue, that is not the case with the Veterans' Land Act. There is ample justification for the Minister setting the maximum interest rate on these increased loans at the cost of long term money plus one eighth of 1 per cent to cover the cost of handling the money.

Mr. Teillet: Perhaps I can assure the hon. Member by stating that the rate contemplated herein is almost exactly that suggested by the hon. Member. The hon. Member suggested the cost of long term money plus one eighth of 1 per cent. The actual figure is closer to one quarter of 1 per cent, so in effect I think we are carrying out the suggestion made by the hon. Member.

Mr. Chatterton: I am afraid I cannot agree with that suggestion. The Governor in Council under the provisions of the Farm Credit Act sets the rate at 6⅜ per cent in spite of the fact that during the last five years the cost of long term money to the Government has only been 5⅛ per cent. Perhaps the Minister would undertake that the interest rate to be set by the Governor in Council will not be more than one quarter of 1 per cent, or one eighth of 1 per cent over and above the cost of long term money to the Government. Even that small obligation on the part of the Government in respect of this interest rate would be helpful.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Next sitting.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the House would consider sitting a few minutes past ten o'clock in order to deal with the Judges Act legislation and the resolution preceding the bill to provide for the payment of development grants for the establishment of facilities in respect of designated areas. In that way hon. Members would have an opportunity to peruse the bill and be in a position to debate it tomorrow on second reading.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, that suggestion is agreeable to the Members of this party and I suggest that we sit until eleven o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I do not see how we can do that, in view of the fact that it is now past ten o'clock.

[Mr. Chatterton.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we proceed as suggested by the President of the Privy Council?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the Members now opposing this suggestion have just come into the Chamber.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, is there any part of the suggestion I made that is not agreeable to hon. Members? I should like to know the feeling of the House in this regard. It seems to me that it is in the common interest of all hon. Members that we proceed with at least some of these matters so that hon. Members will be in a position to debate the proposals tomorrow.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if the Minister wanted to proceed in this way, this should have been discussed among the House Leaders of the various parties. The Members of this party feel that we have had a fairly long day and that there is no reason we should not call it ten o'clock, unless some previous arrangement or agreement has been made in respect of certain legislation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member has made a good point. There has been virtually a continuous discussion among House Leaders in this regard in an effort to bring this part of our business to a conclusion so that a recess can be taken shortly. Many adjustments have been made throughout today and this evening, and had the House Leaders found themselves in a position to make firm commitments I am sure that I could have made a much more tidy announcement. However, I hesitate to make any announcement which is in the nature of a request to arbitrarily impose an order on the House. For that reason I thought I should make this request in the presence of all hon. Members in order that they could reach an appropriate decision.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: What the Minister has now said is a perfectly fair statement. There have been discussions between the Minister and various Members regarding the two resolutions that appeared today as Government notices of motion and also regarding the resolution respecting the Judges Act. There are Members of this party who do not wish to proceed after ten o'clock with any one of the three.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Apparently there is not unanimous consent to sit after ten o'clock. Would the House Leader care to make a statement about the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Starr: Make a motion.

Mr. McIlraith: I cannot make a motion under the new rules because there is no business before the House.

The difficulty about announcing the sequence of business for tomorrow is precisely the difficulty with which we have been faced in the last few minutes. I should like to consult with the House Leaders as to what items they want to call first, so we can get on with the program tomorrow. Perhaps if I may be a bit optimistic I would say we might conclude tomorrow night. I prefer, in the light of that, not to give the sequence of business for tomorrow.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—JOHN DARRELL PETERS—ALLEGED UNFAIRNESS IN SENTENCE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): After all those moans and groans, I merely want to take up the case of a poor individual who is spending 20 years of his life in the penitentiary, and I think unjustly so. The other day I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) to look into the case of one John Darrell Peters, an inmate of a B.C. penitentiary, with respect to seeing whether or not he could order a new trial. The answer I got from the Minister was that a former Minister, Hon. Mr. Fulton, had reviewed the case quite thoroughly and come to the conclusion that there was no chance of a retrial and that the present Minister agreed with that decision, a sort of Fulton-Favreau formula in miniature.

Now, Mr. Peters has not been a model inmate in a penitentiary, I will admit that, from the outset. By "model" I mean he has not been docile or malleable to the rules inside the penitentiary. I submit that part of the reason for his attitude toward officialdom within the prison has been the treatment he received at the hands of the court and at the hands of the lawyer he retained. He was tried by one Magistrate Thoburn and sentenced to 20 years for a variety of offences. Mr. Peters has sworn a number of affidavits, which I hope I will have time to read into the record in order to put his case from his point of view. In one of those sworn on June 17, 1965 he says, and I quote:

> That I, in fact, asked Magistrate Thoburn for a remand to "obtain and instruct counsel", and was refused,
>
> That the hearing before Magistrate Thoburn was, to my knowledge, a session of "closed court",
>
> That I was in a state of shock, and did not understand the import of the proceedings before Magistrate Thoburn,
>
> That Magistrate Thoburn did not in any manner instruct me as to my right to obtain counsel, nor the seriousness of the said charges; and never advised me in any manner whatsoever,
>
> That I was held without the benefit of help or assistance in the entire time of the proceedings before Magistrate Thoburn; and was in fact denied the one phone call, as prescribed by law; and was hindered and restrained from contacting help or assistance in all respects.

● (10:10 p.m.)

I do not want to take the time to read all the affidavit but just the salient parts from it. He says in another affidavit:

> That in a letter, to C. B. Saunders, Esq. (Assistant Registrar, Supreme Court of Ontario, Osgoode Hall, Toronto, Ontario), dated the 25th day of April; and signed C. A. Thoburn, Magistrate; in respect to the said application for appeal, he delivered, or caused to be delivered, the following information, which was false, and caused the informant to suffer a denial of justice, namely—
> Both accused were asked if they had counsel, to which they replied, "... no...". They were then asked if they wished to proceed today or did they want to obtain counsel. Both said that they wanted to plead guilty "today"—to use their own expression, "...we'll go on today, we want to get it over with..."
> That upon examination of the Official Court Transcripts, on page 7; the only question that had been put thus far was: Clerk of the Court: How do you elect to be tried, John Darrell Peters? The Accused Peters: By the Magistrate. Clerk of the Court: Peters, how do you plead to all charges? The Accused Peters: Guilty.

There is another matter, in that there was an arrangement between himself and the police officers to plead guilty to certain charges, wipe them off the books and get a light sentence. The affidavit further reads:

> That in a letter dated October 23, 1963; To: Frank Howard, Esq., M.P. (House of Commons, Ottawa, Ontario). And signed by C. A. Thoburn, Q.C. Magistrate, said the following in part, namely—I always ask the following questions when a person is charged with a serious offence:
> 1. Are you prepared to proceed with your trial?
> 2. Do you wish an opportunity to retain counsel?
> If they say "yes" to the first and "no" to the second, I then have the man arraigned.

Then further Peters swears:

> That upon examination of the Official Court Transcripts, not one word, as set out in (3) and (5) as stated above, appears anywhere in the transcripts.

Mr. John Darrell Peters in another affidavit claims and states:

> That having filed the said form, he duly hired and paid a Toronto Barrister, and Attorney at Law, one Gary K. C. Braund, and paid the said Mr. Braund the sum of $200 to appear and argue the appeal, and to purchase the transcripts.
> That in a letter dated the 15th of January, 1964, directed to Professor Stuart Ryan, from the Office of the Registrar of the Court of Appeal of the Province of Ontario; and signed by Mr. J. A. Preston (Assistant Registrar) he stated in part as follows,
> There was no counsel on the argument of the matter; however, the application together with a report of His Worship Magistrate Thoburn, was before the members of the Court of Appeal and was considered by them before this order was made on May 26th, 1960.
>
> That after numerous complaints to Mr. Braund, on August 15th, 1960, a letter was received addressed to the Governor of the Kingston Penitentiary, that said in part the following:
> I am enclosing in your safe-keeping a money order in the amount of $50 to be given to John Peters... and was signed by Gary Braund.

Then, after a lot of other correspondence he finally got the remaining $150 from this lawyer, Gary Braund. I merely place these small parts of the whole case on the record to plead with the Minister to look more thoroughly into this case and give John Darrell Peters the benefit of the doubt, and give him another trial because he obviously did not receive justice at the hands of Magistrate Thoburn. He obviously was led astray by this lawyer, Gary Braund, who said he would represent him in court and in fact did not, and he had to go to great lengths in order to get his money back.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the document the hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) read from sounds very much like, although it may not have been identical to, an affidavit dated March 22, 1965 sworn by John Darrell Peters, and forwarded by himself to myself on that date for forwarding in due course to the Minister, so that the particular facts referred to by Mr. Peters in that affidavit would have been before the Minister most recently in his consideration of the case.

No one, Mr. Speaker, would claim that the proceedings in the courts of justice are infallible. They are like any other human endeavour; they are subject to great fallibility both as to errors of judgment and errors of fact. But I think it should be borne in mind that in so far as any case can be, the facts concerning the conviction of John Darrell Peters have been very thoroughly examined at various levels. There has been a series of applications by way of prerogative writ in this province and in British Columbia. There was the application before the Ontario Court of Appeal and there was an application for leave to appeal heard before five justices of the Supreme Court, an application which was dismissed. In addition, the former Minister of Justice, as I know personally from the volume of the files, had extensively examined the situation surrounding this case. The material referred to by the hon. Member was also received by me and was entered for consideration.

Subject to the fallibility which these proceedings inevitably risk, this particular situation has been given as full a hearing as possible. Reasonable men acting fairly have decided that no injustice was done and I therefore conclude that the suggestion that the Minister might act under section 596 either in respect of the direction of a new trial or of a hearing before the court of appeal would not be justified in the circumstances.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.14 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 29, 1965

The House met at 2.30 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS—FIRST AND SECOND REPORTS—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

[Translation]

Mr. J. T. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table the first and second reports of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

With the consent of the house, I intend to move that the first report only be concurred in.

[Editor's note: The text of the said report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[Later:]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I cannot support the motion for concurrence in the first report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, because I object to the fact that the committees sit at the same time as the house, as I did when I was in opposition.

I therefore ask that the vote be taken on division.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, it does not often happen that I agree with the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron), but under the circumstances I fully agree with him. We do not want this report to be concurred in because we have already been blamed by the member for Saint-Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Chrétien), who is not in the house at the present time—

Mr. Grégoire: He is never here.

Mr. Caouette: —for not attending sittings of the committee, when the committee was sitting at the same time as the house.

That is why we object to the report being now concurred in.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent I cannot at this time permit the motion.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds) presented the second report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[Note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

VETERANS AFFAIRS—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. James Forgie (Renfrew North) presented the first report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, and asked for unanimous consent to move that the report be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the House gives the hon. Member consent to present his report. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, is the house prepared to concur in this report?

I should like to say once again that the committee should not be allowed to sit at the same time as the house. I was against that when I was in the opposition and I am against it now; the report will be concurred in on division, because I am against it.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: There is no motion before the House at the moment.

Mr. Forgie: Mr. Speaker, if the House gives consent I move, seconded by—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no motion before the House due to the lack of unanimous consent.

[Note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TABLING OF REPORT OF DORION COMMISSION

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I wish to table two copies in English and two copies in French of the report of the Commissioner, Hon. Frederic Dorion, Chief Justice of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I received this report on my return from London last evening. I have been examining it with my colleagues. With the consent of the House I would like to make a short statement in connection with it, if the House would give me permission, at the end of private Members' hour at seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the request of the Prime Minister. Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

TABLING OF COMMUNIQUÉ—STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table two copies in English—I regret that it has not been possible yet to translate it into French—of a communiqué of the meeting of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers which has just concluded in London. This is a long communiqué covering a variety of subjects, because there were a variety of subjects on the agenda. I could, of course, make quite a lengthy statement on the communiqué. Perhaps it would be the wish of the Members of the House that this report appear as an appendix to Hansard so that all hon. Members would have an opportunity to study it. There might be an opportunity later for a discussion of the communiqué in the Committee on External Affairs or in the House.

Perhaps at this moment I could say only this, Mr. Speaker. There were two subjects which dominated the discussions. One was the proposal made by the Chairman of the Conference, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, on the opening day of the Conference, that the Commonwealth should choose certain of its members to initiate, if they could, by visits to the countries and the interests concerned, negotiations for a peace settlement in Viet Nam. That caused a good deal of discussion. Eventually there was agreement with regard to the personnel of the mission and the terms of reference of the mission.

I do not know whether this mission will be able to accomplish what it has in mind. It was an initiative taken by the Commonwealth, I think a valuable one and a timely one, particularly in view of the fact that it is not possible, at this time at least, for the Secretary General of the United Nations to take an initiative, or indeed any other international organization. Even if the mission itself is not able to accomplish what it hopes to accomplish, I do believe that the effort was well worth making.

The other major matter, major only in the sense that it caused a great deal of discussion and indeed some controversy, was that part of the communiqué which deals with Rhodesia. After long and very vigorous discussion the paragraphs on Rhodesia included in the communiqué were agreed to by all the members of the Commonwealth except one, who made reservation in connection with this particular section.

The importance of the Rhodesian paragraphs is that the Commonwealth members themselves, all of them without exception, came to the conclusion that there could be no final solution of this very difficult problem except on the basis of majority rule. The difference was over the timing of the processes which would lead to that final settlement. The United Kingdom Government, which have the responsibility of leading the people of Rhodesia to independence and majority rule, have accepted these principles in theory, and they have agreed—and this represents, I think, a pretty courageous advance on the part of the United Kingdom Government—if direct negotiations break down, to consider a constitutional conference, which is what the African members of the Commonwealth have been advocating.

I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that this was not only the largest of the Commonwealth Conferences, there being 21 members, but we learned at this Conference that at the next meeting, whenever it will be held, there will be four or five new Commonwealth members. It was a very difficult Conference, and in view of the difficulties and importance of the subject matters which were discussed we can take some satisfaction from the fact that this meeting was able to agree on a communiqué of this kind and, more important, was able to discuss such difficult and controversial matters in that spirit which characterizes Commonwealth meetings, even in respect to subjects on which it is not always easy and indeed is sometimes impossible to find unanimous agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent to the printing of the communiqué as an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of communiqué referred to above, see appendix.]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had an opportunity of reading the communiqué; the excerpts which were in the press were not complete. However, there are one or two references that I should like to make.

The first is to welcome the Prime Minister back to the House after a long and arduous meeting. No one who has participated in Prime Ministers' Commonwealth Conferences can forget that they are periods of very strenuous effort and work; and the fact that a communiqué was able to be determined upon is a further compliment to the Commonwealth and its representatives. The Prime Minister has said it was the largest Commonwealth meeting that has ever taken place. In 1957, as I recall it, there were nine members. Today there are 21, the large majority of whom are of another race, colour and religion to those ordinarily associated with the white continents.

I say at once that while the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom has spoken of the success of this Conference in rather eulogistic terms, my own feeling is that this Conference indicates once more the tremendous power of the Commonwealth and its membership in being able to achieve agreement in those larger things of life, while at the same time maintaining a sense of independence on the part of each of those who belong thereto. That it is a flexible institution is again revealed in the fact that the communiqué which has been issued illustrates that out of disagreement they have been able to arrive at a reasonable consensus.

While I did feel that in the intervening years between 1957 and 1962 there was among certain sections of the United Kingdom a diminishing belief in the mission of Commonwealth, recent events of the last session do indicate that much has been achieved. One has only to compare the meeting of the Prime Ministers with the collapse of the Algerian conference on the tenth anniversary of Bandung to realize that something of first importance to peace and the world brotherhood has been achieved by this Conference, a continuation of the results that were achieved at the previous Conferences. On the other hand, when you realize that after the war there were five white Christian nations and that today the membership of this unexplainable institution consists overwhelmingly of those of other religious faiths, the ability to bring them together under the Crown, whether as monarchies or in the capacity of heads of the Commonwealth, is a triumph of statesmanship in the British tradition.

It is hard to explain that institution and I suppose no one will ever be able to do so; that is, how to bring together people with so many dissimilar views who are able to achieve something in the nature of a communiqué. Indeed, I was of those who felt that the day of communiqués on the part of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference was over. I thought the general attitude of the various nations making up the Commonwealth would lead to a condition of affairs that would at best be exemplified by discussion rather than by agreement.

The Prime Minister did not go into very much detail today. He told us in a sketchy way something about the peace mission. I do not want to be critical in that connection but, if my information is correct, I think the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, before having launched this plan, should have discussed it in advance through diplomatic communications with the various nations of the Commonwealth. I am told that until the opening of the Conference or shortly before the commencement of the first session the only Prime Minister who had information thereon was Sir Robert Menzies, Prime Minister of Australia. That is not the way to make effective, strong and positive Commonwealth initiatives.

In its composition I think the mission failed in advance because of the refusal of the various capitals to accept the suggestion that an Asian representative should be invited. Without an Asian representative the potential authority of any such mission was materially reduced. It is apparent that during the course of discussion the original concept, which was that of a mission of inquiry, was changed, and that substituted therefor was the proposal for certain guidelines to solve the ever more serious situation that is developing in Viet Nam. The guidelines included, first, cessation of military action by both sides and, second, recognition of the Viet Cong as one of the parties to be considered and recognized as an entity.

I would be interested to know what the reaction of the United States President was to this proposal. Apparently it was discussed by him and the Prime Minister of Australia prior to the conference opening. Does the Government of the United States agree now that any conference that may be called for the purpose of discussing the matters in issue shall include the Viet Cong?

I think too that the mission was weakened in advance by having chosen as its Chairman the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom who, while entitled to every eulogy for having brought about something in the nature of a plan, in my opinion ought not to have been chosen as Chairman of such a mission. Indeed, I doubt very much that he should have been a member of the mission, in view of the strong stand he had taken in the Parliament of the United Kingdom in favour and in support of the stand taken by the United States in Viet Nam. There was a realization on his part that those who glibly criticize what the United States is doing have no alternative to offer, and that the withdrawal of the United States from South Viet Nam would mean danger to all of us who believe in freedom everywhere in the world. That has been the view of the socialist Government of the United Kingdom, and it is a view that is generally shared, I think, throughout the world.

Where do we go from here? I had hoped that the Prime Minister would give the House some lead in this connection. Is this peace mission dead or is it merely in a state of suspended animation? What further course is contemplated to meet the ever worsening situation? In the last few days the United States has added to the number of its men in the force there and yesterday, apparently for the first time, went on its own initiative against the Viet Cong. That can only lead to more serious developments, and I would have hoped the Prime Minister would not have been so careful in the number of words he used so that we might have had some idea of the viewpoint of the Prime Ministers of the Commonwealth regarding a situation that shows no sign of improvement. Indeed, in the last few days it has revealed potentially dangerous steps which can only lead to an escalation in the face of which the world stands in awe and fear.

So far as Rhodesia is concerned, we are not very clear as to what was the viewpoint advanced by the Government of Canada. The Prime Minister said there was general agreement that a conference should be convened, apparently on the basis of universal suffrage. Was that Canada's viewpoint? What are the hopes that this problem will be capable of solution before it brings about in its wake frightening possibilities in all of Africa? What of last year's grandiloquent words in the communiqué regarding Rhodesia?

Everything seemed to have been reasonably and basically solved by last year's communiqué, but now we are in a position where the British government is back in the picture as fully as it always was. But there is nothing in this year's communiqué to make most clear and definite that the Rhodesian problem will be solved in a way that is fair and reasonable to white and black alike.

There are other matters to which reference could have been made, but I say with the greatest frankness to the Prime Minister that those two matters, Rhodesia and the peace mission, lack on his part the information that should have been given to Parliament so that we in this House may not have to depend entirely on press releases or communiqués.

Because of other events of this day, such as the bringing down of the Royal Commission report, I can only hope that so important a matter as the position of the Commonwealth in the world of today should not receive the scant consideration which it did on this occasion on the part of the Prime Minister.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we all welcome the Prime Minister back from what I am sure must have been a very strenuous and difficult conference of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers.

I must say I am disappointed that he did not give us more information in tabling this communiqué, but it may be his intention on interim supply, or some time during the next few days, to elaborate further on what took place at the Conference. I certainly wish he had been less casual and less uncommunicative on a number of matters which are of great interest to this House and to the people of Canada, such as the matter of Commonwealth trade, the matter of the Commonwealth secretariat, and further elaboration about Rhodesia.

We certainly ought to have some statement from the Government before the House recesses, with respect to the situation in Viet Nam. The mission set up by the Prime Ministers' Conference was, in my opinion, a bold and imaginative step. It is to be regretted that the Prime Minister of Ceylon, because of ill health, was not able to be a member of that mission, and I trust it is the intention of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers to invite one of the Asiatic Commonwealth Prime Ministers to act on the mission.

Mr. Speaker, I had hoped the Prime Minister would not only elaborate on the role of this mission to deal with the Viet Nam situation, but that he would make some ringing affirmation regarding Canada's position in this very difficult and dangerous situation. The guidelines which have been set down in the communiqué are a great step forward, and certainly go much further than anything the Prime Minister has said here in the House or that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has expressed before the House or before the Committee on External Affairs. This communiqué recognizes something which the Government of Canada has constantly failed to recognize, namely that President Johnson's reiteration of the fact that he is in favour of unconditional peace negotiations has always been qualified, first by the fact that he was not prepared to sit down and negotiate with the Viet Cong, and second that he was not prepared to accept the basic tenet of the Geneva agreement which said that the boundary between North and South Viet Nam is provisional and that if the people want to express their opinions in free vote there is to be the opportunity to unify Viet Nam.

This communiqué at least recognizes those two important provisos which the President of the United States has always interposed when talking about unconditional peace negotiations. I would have like to see the Prime Minister say today that the Government of Canada espouses and supports the guidelines that have been established at the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference.

As hon. Members well know, the Prime Ministers suggested that the ultimate objective of this mission on the Viet Nam situation was threefold; first, a suspension of all United States air attacks on Viet Nam; second, to get North Viet Nam to undertake to prevent all movement of military forces and assistance to South Viet Nam; and third, a cease fire on the part of all parties pending a conference.

They also set forth four objectives for such a conference; first, the end of the war in Viet Nam; second, the withdrawal of all foreign troops in Viet Nam and the neutralization of the area; third, an international peace force set up under the Geneva accord powers to safeguard the peace in Viet Nam; and fourth, the eventual unification of Viet Nam through free and internationally supervised elections. These, Mr. Speaker, are the kind of guidelines and objectives which are realistic. They are the kind of guidelines that ought to appeal to both sides in this conflict.

I think before this recess the Government of Canada and if possible the Parliament of Canada ought to endorse these proposals. I think the Government of Canada should make a special appeal, either on its own behalf or by a resolution of this Parliament, asking the United States to take the first step which is a prelude to all the other steps, namely to suspend all bombing of North Viet Nam. There cannot be any hope for discussions or negotiations with a country which day after day is watching its towns, cities and installations being bombed and its people being killed. The other night over the C.B.C. someone who had been in Viet Nam gave it as his opinion that three out of every four persons being killed in North Viet Nam as a result of the bombing were women and children; civilians. If this is true, the resentment which must be building up in that country will in my opinion make it impossible to get any peaceful negotiations. If as a precedent to the rest of the objectives set down by the Prime Ministers' Conference the suspension of the bombing of North Viet Nam is placed first, I think the Government ought to say so and this Parliament ought to say so.

I am sure we all wish the Prime Ministers' mission on Viet Nam every success. I think we should recognize that the chance of their succeeding is very small unless they receive co-operation from both sides. It seems to me that the first step in this co-operation must come from our good friends and neighbours in the United States; it must be to discontinue the bombing as suggested by this communiqué.

I hope before we recess there will be further opportunities to refer to this subject so the Prime Minister can tell us something more about the Conference and, above all, so he can state categorically his own position in support of this communiqué, to the end that the world, and particularly the United States, may know that the Canadian Government and the Canadian Parliament are in support of these objectives, without which there seems to be little prospect of a solution being found. The fact that the Prime Ministers' Conference recognized the danger of escalation; the fact that it stated there seems to be no hope for a military solution; the fact that it concluded there must be a cease fire and a conference, all constitute a recognition that some breakthrough must be made. And the first step, it seems to me, is to get a cessation of the bombing as a prelude to a cessation of hostilities.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): We join in welcoming the Prime Minister back in our midst. We have followed with great interest the reports which have come to us of the proceedings at the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference. We are pleased that Canada is continuing to play a distinguished role as senior member of the Commonwealth and continuing to hold the respect of the newer members of the Commonwealth, as has been the case through recent years.

We are glad to have this copy of the communiqué. We wish a more detailed report could have been made with regard to what was accomplished and what went on during the deliberations of this Conference. I was disturbed to read in the press, and to hear over radio and television, speculation by some of our Commonwealth leaders about whether the Commonwealth could be held together. Indeed, there was a program broadcast by the C.B.C. on Sunday night, I believe, in the course of which the Prime Minister was interviewed, and the right hon. gentleman was reported to have said it would be a difficult task to prevent the Commonwealth from disintegrating. Remarks such as these characterize the situation which is prevalent in the world today.

I think there is something we should all realize when we try to define and understand just what the Commonwealth is; that is, when we think of the basic ingredients which brought the Commonwealth into existence and which account for the influence it exercises among its members and in a wider field. I am convinced that the reason the Commonwealth came into existence, and the reason it will continue to play a vital role, is simply that it is founded on the greatest heritage that we in the Commonwealth enjoy, namely the concepts of parliamentary government, British justice and freedom.

Mr. Herridge: That is true.

Mr. Thompson: These characteristics of responsible, representative Government are the very warp and woof that go to make up the Commonwealth. While in the present world situation we may well be concerned about the problems we face, we should take courage from the fact that these principles will apply, on our part, to the solution of these problems.

We have listened with interest to the statements made by hon. Members who have spoken, particularly as they relate to the decision to form a Commonwealth Viet Nam peace mission. I think the Commonwealth has been courageous in moving forward on this issue. I join the hon. Member for Burnaby-Coquitlam in doubting whether much will be accomplished by this mission. Certainly not very much can be achieved until there is a willingness on both sides to come together around the negotiation table. I do not know to what extent the prospects of the mission will be improved by lengthy expressions of opinions in this House, but I am sure it is the desire of all of us that it should achieve great success even though the prospects at the present time are not promising. Whether or not the peace mission succeeds, I am sure the effort itself will prove worth while. As such it will be one of the most important results of this recent Conference.

I think I should also refer briefly to the Rhodesian problem. It is encouraging to see that the communiqué again endorses without hesitation those basic principles which guarantee the rights of human dignity and respect to every person regardless of the colour of his skin or the creed in which he believes. This is a good thing. We recognize that the problem in Rhodesia is not a simple one. We recognize that its solution will not depend upon the wishes of the Commonwealth members alone, because the Government of Rhodesia is obviously determined to carry through the policies it has so definitely announced.

It is important to note that the Conference spent some time discussing economic affairs. One of our greatest responsibilities in the Commonwealth today is to exercise leadership in assisting the emerging nations to raise the living standards of their people. Certainly this is one of the great challenges which we face, and it is in this field of economic development that the Commonwealth has a tremendous, positive responsibility.

There is something in this communiqué that we have not had time to discuss in detail which I think is worthy of mention. Neither the Prime Minister nor any of those who have spoken have mentioned it. I refer to the agreed memorandum regarding the Commonwealth Foundation. I think each one of us ought to take this part of the communiqué and study it carefully, because here is one of the very positive programs with which the Commonwealth Prime Ministers dealt. I think it represents one of the most vital programs as far as the Commonwealth is concerned and certainly is of tremendous importance as we seek to raise the standard of economic development and of living in general for those people who live in what we tend to define as underprivileged areas.

This leads me to raise the question of the Commonwealth Secretariat. I think Canada should be commended for understanding that the Commonwealth of the future may have a different form than the Commonwealth of the past, and for having taken the lead in offering one of our most distinguished diplomats to serve as Secretary General of that Secretariat. I commend the Government and the Prime Minister for being willing to part with the services of such an important man as Mr. Arnold Smith has been in our own area of external affairs—I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs understands this as well as anybody—in seconding him to an even greater service, one that will serve not only Canada but every part of the Commonwealth. We wish him all the success possible in this very difficult assignment as he plows forward into new ground, developing new policies and laying out a new foundation that I am sure is going to be the heart throb of the Commonwealth in the future. I think we have something to be proud of in this regard, and when I say that I wish Mr. Smith well I am sure all hon. Members of this House heartily ascribe to those good wishes.

So, Mr. Speaker, while we would like to have had a more detailed report from the Prime Minister, and I think it is important that such a report be given, we are grateful for what has been done and for receiving this communiqué, and we look with confidence to a future that is not all clouds and problems and does hold hope for something better.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we have not had too much time to review the press release just distributed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). However, I want to express to him my greatest and best wishes on his return from London.

He has stated Canada's views over there and those views were highly appreciated by all the prime ministers attending that meeting of Commonwealth leaders.

When the Canadian Prime Minister took a stand on the Viet Nam conflict, for instance, he was appreciated not only in his own country, but by other Commonwealth prime ministers as well, because the logical position to take was to request a cease-fire in Viet Nam.

Now, according to the communiqué we have just received, we see the Prime Ministers discussed several matters: Malaysia, the Cyprus situation, Africa, Guinea, the West Indies, disarmament, Rhodesia, the territories belonging to the British Empire or the commonwealth. The economic situation not only within the commonwealth but throughout the world was also dealt with.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the United States err, as we of the British Commonwealth also do, when giving assistance to underdeveloped nations, in that while providing help we try to impose our way of life, our habits and customs upon them. And that is a gross error. I have often said that you cannot make white out of black or black out of white, but it is easy to respect both. Here, in Canada, there is talk about biculturalism, bilingualism, two cultures, etc. I often had the opportunity of saying across Canada that you cannot make a French Canadian out of an English Canadian or an English Canadian out of a French Canadian, but that you can make two good Canadians out of those two elements forming our country.

Now, when helping underdeveloped countries, a monumental error is committed in trying to have those people live according to our own way of life. If we give them technical assistance, technical knowledge, education, means to live their own lives, they will then have become our friends. I sincerely believe that the present Prime Minister shares that opinion, for he has made many statements in Canada along those lines in western as well as in eastern Canada, and I believe he shares the view that we must give those people, while letting them be themselves, the means to live decently, to rely on themselves as much as they are able to and to develop according to their own aspirations.

Then, the individual, the human person is respected from the economic standpoint. And while helping those countries we shall help ourselves.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE

TABLING OF INSTRUMENTS ADOPTED AT GENEVA MEETING

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with article 19 of the constitution of the International Labour Organization, I wish to table the texts in English and French of the instruments adopted at the 48th International Labour Conference held in Geneva, Switzerland, in June and July, 1964. The instruments consist of three international labour conventions and three recommendations.

The constitution of the I.L.O. requires a member state to bring conventions and recommendations "before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies for the enactment of legislation or other action". In the case of a federal state there is the further obligation to refer instruments which are wholly or partially provincial in legislative jurisdiction to appropriate provincial authorities "for the enactment of legislation or other action", and to arrange for periodic consultations with a view to promoting co-ordinated action to give effect to the provisions of the instruments.

The opinion of the Minister of Justice, a copy of which I am tabling, is that each of the six instruments adopted last July is partially within federal legislative jurisdiction and partially within provincial jurisdiction.

The instruments include a convention and a recommendation on hygiene in commerce and offices, designed to protect the health of workers in commercial establishments and offices, and a convention and a recommendation on benefits in the case of employment injury. Although these matters are well covered in Canadian legislation and practice, there is not complete compliance at present in all jurisdictions with every article in the two conventions. Steps are being taken to explore with the provinces what action might be taken to ensure that all Canadian legislation and practice comply with the conventions, in the hope that they may then be ratified.

The remaining instruments are a convention and a recommendation on employment policy. On the basis of policies followed within the federal and provincial jurisdictions, we believe it is both possible and desirable for Canada to ratify the Employment Policy Convention. We are consulting with the provinces with a view to taking action on this convention at an early date.

As regards the three recommendations adopted by the conference, the question of ratification does not arise, since the I.L.O. constitution does not provide for ratification of recommendations. These instruments set forth standards as a guide for member countries. They will be referred to the appropriate authorities, and I am sure will be studied and found useful at both the federal and provincial levels.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORTED STATEMENTS RESPECTING FALL ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, now that the Prime Minister is back in the House and we are approaching the last day or days before adjournment, in view of statements which have been made by the Minister of Finance and other lesser luminaries to the effect that an election is to be called this fall, will the Prime Minister now let the House and the country know, as did the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom in the last couple of days, exactly what the position of affairs is going to be in this relationship?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope the situation is such that we will be able to embark upon a very well earned recess very shortly. I hope the situation remains such, and that we will be able to come back in September and finish the work we have on the agenda for this session.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, is it the intention of the Prime Minister, as apparently implied by the Minister of Finance, that an election is to be called before redistribution is put into effect?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman knows that it would not be proper or normal for me to give expression to my intentions in reply to questions on orders of the day, and I do not think that I can add anything to elucidate this answer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would ask the Prime Minister, are these lesser luminaries, in the statements they are making, justified in so doing, bearing in mind the fact that various presidents of Liberal associations across Canada have been advised to get ready for an election early in October?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I should have thought that my right hon. friend, who has been a Prime Minister, would understand that Cabinet Ministers do make interesting statements and at times even take interesting actions. But I should have also thought that my right hon. friend, who has been claiming that the time has come for an appeal to the people, would be very pleased at emanations of opinion of that kind. I would point out to my right hon. friend that it is not entirely within our control because yesterday, according to information which I received in London, there was an indication that all the Opposition groups were going to defeat the Government, in which case we might have been into an election campaign today.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not unmindful of the fact that the right hon. gentleman referred to a statement made by the Minister of Finance as an emanation. I like that expression. But is it the Prime Minister's intention during the summer recess to call an election so as to prevent the operation of redistribution?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I said I hoped that conditions would be such that we could come back in September and complete our work.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the work we will complete when we do come back in September include the Canada Assistance Plan and medicare?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we already have a lot of matters on the program. My hon. friend knows that the particular question he has asked and the particular subjects about which he has asked many questions are extremely important, and we want to make progress in respect of both of them. The extent and the timing of the progress, at least with respect to one of them, will have something to do with the forthcoming federal-provincial conference which opens in a couple of weeks.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that one of the items I mentioned, the Canada Assistance Plan, was specified in the speech from the throne, will this matter be put on the order paper for action at this session?

Mr. Pearson: I certainly hope we will have completed parliamentary action on this very important matter before the end of the session.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

The Prime Minister held some sort of referendum among the Liberal members not long ago in order to know whether or not an election would be advisable before redistribution. We learned earlier that the redistribution would probably take place before the election if parliamentary business were resumed in September. But I feel the Canadian people would be interested in knowing whether the government intends to call an election before or after the electoral redistribution.

[English]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can add anything to what I have already said on this very important subject. I am grateful to my hon. friend for taking soundings among the Liberal party. Perhaps he would let me take a poll among the Creditistes.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have had an extended discussion on this very interesting and important subject. Perhaps we should allow one or two more supplementary questions and then terminate it.

Mr. Lambert: How about some of the answers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Starr: I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Member for Lapointe.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question about redistribution.

Can the Prime Minister tell us if it is true that the members of his party are so displeased with the redistribution that they want an election before it becomes effective?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that, but I can tell my hon. friend that some of my Commonwealth Prime Ministerial colleagues were very surprised that the Prime Minister of Canada would go off to such an important conference and then find that his seat had been taken from underneath him.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether we may now assume that the guidelines and the objectives with reference to a solution to the situation in Viet Nam have been fully endorsed by the Government of Canada and now constitute the foreign policy of the Canadian Government.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend probably has not had a chance to examine the communiqué in the press form in which it was circulated this afternoon, but if he looks at page 3 he will see at the bottom of that page in respect of this particular matter that the meeting, which included Canada, approved the statement from which he quoted a few moments ago. We do approve it.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question. I congratulate the Prime Minister for this position the Canadian Government has taken, but to be sure that I am perfectly clear about it, does this mean that the Canadian Government is now asking the United States to discontinue bombing North Viet Nam, and that we are in favour of the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Viet Nam and the eventual unification of Viet Nam by free election, under the supervision of a peace keeping force established under the Geneva accord powers?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. Let me read exactly what the communiqué says. This is the statement in respect of guidance, and it includes the guidelines for Commonwealth action:

> Bearing in mind these considerations and also the purpose of the Mission, it should be guided by the following ultimate objectives during its consultations with the parties principally concerned:

The first two of these should be taken together. Indeed, they were discussed together, and it was agreed that they were very definitely related to each other.

> (a) a suspension of all United States air attacks on North Viet Nam;
> (b) a North Vietnamese undertaking to prevent the movement of any military forces or assistance or material to South Viet Nam.

It was hoped that both these objectives could be achieved simultaneously.

MALAYSIA—REPORTED REQUEST FOR CANADIAN ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that he must have had consultations with the Prime Ministers of other Commonwealth countries such as Malaysia, Australia and New Zealand, can he inform the House whether the reports are true that Canada has been requested to give arms or other forms of material assistance in the struggle of Malaysia with its neighbouring country of Indonesia?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no request was made to the Canadian Government through me at this Conference by the Prime Minister of Malaysia. He did, however, express gratitude to me, and at the Conference itself, for the aid Canada has given his country.

[Mr. Pearson.]

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister—

[English]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. You have recognized the Leader of the Official Opposition for one question, and you are now recognizing, for the purposes of asking a question, the seventh member of an opposition party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: In view of the fact that we are limited to half an hour, I feel that we are entitled to our fair share of that time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Anyone who has followed the order will realize that as usual we have proceeded down the opposition ranks, starting with the right hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, if I am not mistaken, followed by the leader of the N.D.P., the leader of the Social Credit Party and now the leader of the Creditiste Party.

Mr. Starr: Sheer nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: The leader of the Creditiste Party did rise on a supplementary question, which I believe was his right. It is my belief that the order has been strictly followed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not wish to become involved in a controversy with Your Honour under any circumstances, but this attitude is not in keeping with Parliament. This is a recognition that these various opposition parties have an equality with Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, and that is not in accordance with parliamentary procedure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should like to settle this matter at this time. It is the understanding of the Chair that at the beginning of the question period the leaders of each party, beginning of course with the Leader of the Official Opposition, then proceeding to the leaders of the other groups in this House, should be recognized. That has always been my understanding, and if I am in error I should like to be so informed.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winkler: That's the stuff; shout him down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. Member for Cape Breton South.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, drawing your attention to the fact that the hon. Member for Ontario was on his feet, was recognized and had started to ask a supplementary question before the hon. Member for Lapointe was recognized. The hon. Member for Ontario was recognized before surrendering the floor for the purposes of a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I recognize the hon. Member for Villeneuve.

VIET NAM—LEADERSHIP OF COMMONWEALTH PEACE MISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Having been unable to confirm press rumours that the Prime Minister was asked to lead the Prime Ministers' mission with regard to the Viet Nam crisis, I would ask the Prime Minister if such an invitation was made, in what form it was made, and by whom.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the conference agreed on the personnel of the mission as established. The Prime Minister of the United Kingdom was put forward as Chairman on the first day, and when the mission was agreed to on the last day I had the pleasure of supporting his chairmanship.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I take it from the Prime Minister's answer that the rumours we have read in Canadian newspapers to the effect that he was invited to lead this mission were false?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I was approached in this connection.

Mr. MacInnis: That brings me back to my original question. In what form was the Prime Minister approached and by whom?

Inquiries of the Ministry

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PRESENTATION OF DORION COMMISSION IN BOTH LANGUAGES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, it is a great thing to hear the leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition always—

[English]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. Member ask his question.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: —complain that he is ill-treated in this house, while his party has all the advantages over everyone.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Has Hon. Frédéric Dorion been commended for submitting his report to us, in both English and French, the same day?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity of communicating with the Chief Justice, but I agree that it was a very happy situation that this report was presented in both languages at the same time.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, now that the Dorion report has been tabled, is it not true that the information contained in the alleged Southam News Publishing Company leak is true? It was a leak, but is it not a fact that what it stated is in fact true?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is in as good a position as I to compare the leak with reality. I have not been able to do that.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. Member for Ontario.

Mr. Starr: No, pass me by.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

RAYMOND DENIS—INQUIRY AS TO PROSECUTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question with reference to the Dorion report. As my reading of that report indicates that the bribe of $20,000 offered by Raymond Denis to Mr.

Lamontagne for the purpose of obstructing justice has been established, is the Government going to proceed with a prosecution in this connection?

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I shall take that question as notice.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, surely this question should not be taken as notice, on a matter affecting the administration of justice in Canada that has been played around with for so long by the Minister.

AGRICULTURE

OTTAWA VALLEY—DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS RESPECTING DROUGHT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Forestry in his capacity as Acting Minister of Agriculture. He promised yesterday that the Minister of Agriculture would report on the discussions held between the federal Minister of Agriculture and the provincial Ministers of Agriculture of Ontario and Quebec, with regard to the special assistance for Ottawa valley farmers.

Can the minister make this report right now?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture will now make this report to the house on behalf of the minister.

[English]

I think the Parliamentary Secretary is going to answer.

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. Member for bringing this important matter to the attention of the House. The Minister of Agriculture for Canada met with the Ministers of Agriculture for Ontario and Quebec for two and one half hours yesterday, and I understand that those discussions were very fruitful.

Preliminary estimates indicate that some 14 countries are affected in Ontario and about 10 in Quebec. Agreement was reached as to the seriousness of the situation, and as to the need for assistance to farmers who have suffered losses as a result of the dry weather.

In view of the fact that there are several possible approaches that can be taken to meet this problem, it was not possible to work out all the details of an assistance program at this first meeting. As a result it was agreed that a committee headed by the Deputy Ministers of Agriculture of the three Governments should meet within the next few days to iron out a detailed approach.

Among the possibilities they will be considering is a suggestion that the program when it has been fully developed should be administered by a special drought agency with membership from the three governments concerned. Once the proposals have been presented by the committee of Deputy Ministers they must then be submitted to the respective governments for approval.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Forestry, in his capacity as Acting Minister of Agriculture, a supplementary question following the report made just now by the Parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture.

Is the minister in a position to tell us whether or not, during the discussions that took place yesterday on this subject, here in Ottawa, there was any discussion with Mr. Courcy about the assistance to be given to the farmers of the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area who submitted a brief on March 19, which seems to have remained unanswered?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I attended only the first part of the meeting before coming into the house.

[English]

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the critical situation at the present time, can the Parliamentary Secretary give us any indication when some final decision will be made by the Federal Cabinet in this regard? Can he also give us some indication of the extent of the program, the amount of money involved in the program of aid?

Mr. Beer: I am unable, of course, to provide the detailed information requested by the hon. Member. I know the study is proceeding with all due haste, and an adequate program will be presented to the House in the very near future.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to that asked by the hon. Member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue. I have received information by mail this morning that hay for shipment to the United States is being purchased in certain areas of Ontario where there is at least some crop, will the Minister consider taking steps to restrict and prevent the export of hay from Canada to other countries during this period of emergency and scarcity?

Mr. Beer: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to bring this matter to the attention of the Minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: One more supplementary.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. During yesterday's talks between the various Ministers of Agriculture, was there any mention of crop insurance between the Federal Minister of Agriculture and the Quebec Minister of Agriculture?

[English]

Mr. Beer: Mr. Speaker, in the two and a half hours that the meeting lasted it did range over a wide area of subjects, and crop insurance may have been mentioned.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—LOSSES SUFFERED BY FRUIT GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I should like to reply to the hon. Member for Okanagan Boundary, who expressed some interest in the serious losses to fruit growers in British Columbia. I should like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the Minister of Agriculture today met with the Minister of Agriculture for British Columbia regarding assistance to the B.C. fruit industry for crop losses and damage to trees from frost and other weather conditions. It was agreed that some B.C. fruit producers are faced with serious problems and that they must have some help.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXPO '67

INVITATION TO RED CHINA TO PARTICIPATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs which is a follow-up to a question I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce a week or two ago.

In view of the Prime Minister's anxiety to get China to attend disarmament talks, and in view of the fact that both the Commissioner General and the Deputy Commissioner of the World Fair are on record as favouring Chinese participation in the Fair, would the Minister now consider extending an invitation to the government of mainland China to participate in our World Fair regardless of any opposition to such an invitation that may be expressed by the United States or Formosan governments?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the Prime Minister's declaration indicated that Canada did support the summoning of a conference of all the nations, including China, on the matter of disarmament. However, these are unrelated subjects and the question of substance has already been dealt with by my colleague.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I take this to mean that the government of mainland China is not going to receive an invitation to participate in the World Fair?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, for the reasons given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that is the situation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EMPLOYMENT OF SECRETARIAL STAFF DURING RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the President of the Privy Council as spokesman for the Commissioners of Internal Economy. In view of the prospect of a lengthy summer adjournment, has a decision been taken as to the employment of Members' secretarial staff during the adjournment and, if so, what is the decision?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe this is the type of question which, under citation 438,

I think it is, should be asked of Your Honour in writing. In any event, I will try to get the information and make it available to hon. Members later in the day.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN FAMILY ALLOWANCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that family allowances began in July 1945, that we will be celebrating their 20th anniversary in July 1965 and that all other sectors of the economy have experienced eightfold, tenfold or even twelvefold increases since that time, can the Prime Minister state whether or not he intends to increase family allowances to make them truly representative, recognizing the family as the basis of society?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say it is nice to be back home, but I am afraid I cannot answer that question.

SPORTS

CANADIAN APPLICATION TO HOLD 1968 WINTER OLYMPICS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is related to the question I asked yesterday, with regard to which he said he would make an investigation. Has Canada still got a chance to act as host for the 1968 Olympic games?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member will recall that France was selected as the site for the Olympic games. I have made inquiries, and I know of no reason to warrant any belief that there might be a change in the decision to have the games in France.

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is there no possibility of France not being able to act as host because of the problem of recognition of East Germany; and would this consideration apply to Canada also?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It would apply to any country that did not recognize East Germany.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO WORKERS AND INDUSTRIES AFFECTED BY AUTOMOBILE AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of yesterday's action by the United Automobile Workers in completely opposing the auto parts agreement because of the lack of proper safeguards for the workers displaced as a result of the agreement, is the Minister prepared to reconsider the legislation to provide adequate safeguards and at least bring it up to parity with the provision made in the United States?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member refers to parity with the United States. The fact is that no final determination has yet been made of the level of benefit that will prevail in the United States, and it may be some months before any level of benefit is determined as the result of a decision of an arbitrator who will make a determination under the SUB plan in the United States. But supposing that the present level of benefit proposed in the United States is accepted, I am prepared to argue that the proposal made yesterday by this Government is at least as good as the proposal under consideration in the United States and, in at least one or two instances, is definitely superior and gives greater protection to the Canadian auto worker.

I am hopeful that when Canadian auto workers are fully informed as to the level of benefits they will conclude that in the circumstances adequate benefit has been provided, in view of the fact that the maximum level of benefit provided is approximately $75 in comparison with the maximum level of benefit provided under the unemployment insurance fund, namely $36.

Mr. Scott: I wish to pose a supplementary question related to the first part of my previous question. In view of the fact that all the locals in Canada of the United Automobile Workers have now come out in flat opposition to the plan, in order to provide adequate examination of the plan and perhaps launch it with the support of the trade union movement instead of its opposition, would the Minister be prepared to refer this whole agreement to a committee of the House where it could be fully studied and witnesses called?

Mr. MacEachen: In the circumstances no, Mr. Speaker. There is a lay-off at present in Windsor. We expect there will be a further lay-off in August, and the purpose of this plan is to provide immediate benefit to the auto workers. I do not believe that a committee set up for this purpose would be able to do a better job than the committee of the whole which will examine this proposal when the supplementary item comes before the House.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, following his announcement yesterday with regard to assistance to the automotive industry. Has the adjustment board been established and, if so, what are the names of the members of the board? If the board has not yet been appointed, from what field will its members be selected?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the board has not been selected as yet, and if the hon. Member wants further details perhaps he will wait until the supplementary estimate is under discussion later this day.

Mr. Hales: As a supplementary question, would the Minister give consideration to providing a better interest rate to the manufacturers in the automotive industry than the 6 per cent he announced yesterday, in view of the fact that they can obtain a 6 per cent interest rate from any lending institution? The Government is not providing them with any great assistance in a 6 per cent rate.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to argue this point now. I think the hon. gentleman's question is a little argumentative, but the fact of the matter is that my information from the industry shows that the problem is not the interest payable or chargeable, but the general difficulty in getting a loan at a reasonable interest rate.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—ADDRESS TO HER MAJESTY RESPECTING PROVINCIAL CONSTITUTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether he can give the House any information on the question of the resolution passed by the Legislative Council of the Province of Quebec relative to the amendment of the British North America Act respecting the powers of the Legislative Council. Has such a resolution been received? At the same time, when he replies would he say whether the Government will hold up any approval of the address from the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec being sent to Her Majesty the Queen until the House of Commons has had an opportunity to discuss this matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first part of my right hon. friend's question, no communication has been received from the Government of Quebec. In reply to the second part of the question, there may be an opportunity on interim supply later today to deal with this matter.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister give an assurance that the Assembly address will not be forwarded until that opportunity has been provided?

Mr. Pearson: Any request from the Legislative Council, before it could be forwarded, has to come from the government of Quebec, but it has not come yet.

VETERANS' LAND ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING AUTHORITY OF DIRECTOR, HOME CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE, ETC.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-128, to amend the Veterans' Land Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

INDUSTRY

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF DEVELOPMENT GRANTS IN DESIGNATED AREAS

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry) moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the payment of development grants to assist the establishment of new manufacturing or processing facilities and the expansion of existing manufacturing or processing facilities in order to improve industrial employment opportunities in designated areas in Canada; for this purpose to establish in the Consolidated Revenue Fund an Area Development Account to which shall be credited an initial amount of fifty million dollars; and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act concerning the definition of a manufacturing or processing business and the application of section 71A of that Act in any case where a development grant has been authorized to be paid under the said measure.

Motion agreed to and the House went into Committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the House will recall that on June 7 the Prime Minister proposed certain major changes in the program of incentives for area development designed to broaden it and make it more effective.

The present measures for area development were introduced almost two years ago in recognition of the fact that certain areas of Canada had not achieved the measure of economic progress obtaining in the country as a whole. In these areas employment opportunities and levels of income are well below those enjoyed by most other Canadians. It is the policy of the Government in its campaign against poverty and inadequate opportunities to bring the benefits of industrial development to such areas in so far as it is possbile to achieve this.

As hon. Members know, the incentives provided under the present area development program take the form of accelerated capital cost allowances and a remission of income taxes. This program has had a substantial measure of success, and I would hope to have an opportunity during the discussion of the new legislation to describe some of its positive results.

Experience has shown us that a tax holiday is of benefit mainly to those firms which were able to reach a profit position at an early date in their operations. Other firms have to provide for market development and other settling-in costs during their first years of operation. Accordingly their profit position in the early years is such that tax benefits provide only a limited incentive. Moreover, we found that smaller firms in particular of a type well adapted to these areas experienced difficulties in initial financing.

For these reasons the Government is proposing to offer cash grants to new manufacturing and processing firms establishing in designated areas, as well as to firms expanding their existing facilities. The amounts of these grants are to be directly related to the total investment in fixed assets made by these enterprises. A firm which qualifies for a grant may elect to take it in the form of a credit against its income tax liabilities.

• (4:10 p.m.)

The legislation will provide funds for the payment of development grants. It will establish a formula to determine the amount of grant to be provided to individual enterprises. It will provide that such grants will not be taxable income and will not be deducted from capital costs for tax purposes. It will amend certain provisions of the Income Tax Act concerning the definition of a manufacturing or processing enterprise, and the application of that act to development assistance. There is also provision for close liaison between the firms receiving development grants and the National Employment Service to ensure that the new employment opportunities are fully exploited and the appropriate training facilities established.

Finally, the Act will provide for regulations which will define in more detail the conditions and procedures for the payment of development grants.

Mr. Chairman, I hope to have a further opportunity to speak on this subject when the bill is before the House. My brief remarks at this time on the resolution will, I hope, indicate our firm belief that it is through positive measures of this kind that we will help to ensure that the employment and income opportunities generated by our expanding economy will be shared by all Canadians.

Mr. Hales: We listened with interest to the Minister's introductory remarks concerning this resolution preceding a bill to be introduced asking that this house approve the setting up of a fund amounting to some $50 million in the consolidated revenue account from which the Department of Industry will be able to pay various amounts to industries which agree to establish themselves in designated or depressed areas.

As the Minister told us, it is only a little over a year ago that he introduced legislation designed to entice industry to locate in such areas. I think we all recall the problems which this legislation created in various areas of this country. I have no difficulty in recalling the problems created in my area. We were only 20 or 30 miles from a designated area, and the designated area began stealing our industries. In other words it became a matter of moving jobs from one area to another. I think the hon. Member for Renfrew had a similar experience; he had a designated area just across the border. The hon. Member for Brant-Haldimand also had a similar experience.

As a result this legislation did not meet with any large degree of approval. The Minister told these industries, we will give you certain concessions; we will not collect taxes for three years. Fifty per cent of the capital cost of machinery and equipment was to be forgiven, along with 20 per cent of the cumulative capital cost of all buildings. These arrangements did not work out satisfactorily. Now the Minister wants to put another patch on this patchwork quilt he began in December, 1963, but this time he is ready to hand out cash; this time a giveaway program, by means of outright grants.

I do not think that we as guardians of the Queen's purse have any right to give money in grants in this way. I would be in favour of making loans with interest. Making outright grants is a most unusual way of inducing industries to settle in depressed areas. We support the resolution in principle. We realize there are areas in Canada where economic growth is slow and that some assistance has to be provided. Nevertheless, I think we should ask ourselves whether this is constitutionally sound. Is it the business of the Federal Government to be in this particular field, or should this be an area in which the provincial authorities or the municipalities should operate? In connection with the former legislation there was often serious confusion and overlapping. There was uncertainty about who had the constitutional right to work in this particular sphere.

I could give many examples of the way in which provinces have gone all out to attract new industry. A heading in this week's Financial Post reads "Manitoba tosses more dollars into its pot to lure industries". The first paragraph says:

> A five year plan to lure new industries, backed by government guarantee of an additional $100 million for the Manitoba Development Funds has been announced by Premier Roblin.

Ontario has embarked upon an extensive program to attract industry. And so it goes. I think this proposal before us is just another case of overlapping, another case of duplication. It is a means of spending the taxpayers' money in a way in which it should not be spent. I sometimes think it is a means of finding work for the 300-odd people who have been hired to staff the Department of Industry, one of the policies which have been dreamed up by the Department for that purpose.

This area development program is not original. It is nothing more than another program which has been copied from the United States. The Liberal Government has come out with a war on poverty, copied from the United States. The Minister of Labour went down to see U.S. Secretary Wirtz to discuss with him how the problem of the displaced auto workers could best be handled. He came back with the program announced in this House yesterday. It seems to me Members opposite have copied one idea after another from the United States. Let us have Canadian policies for Canada; let us have policies for Canadians and draft them here, instead of going south of the border to get ideas. I am convinced that this legislation will come back to haunt the Minister in the years to come.

One of the things we can do as an opposition is to call the Minister's attention to some of the pitfalls which have been revealed in this program as it was instituted in the United States four years ago. As a matter of fact it was one of the first policies to which the late President John Kennedy put his signature in his war against poverty when he signed the legislation known as ARA; the letters stand for "area redevelopment administration". Today the Minister has introduced similar legislation, only he calls it "area development". The ARA as it was instituted in the United States four years ago contained some deep pitfalls into which the Americans have fallen. We in Canada under our program will find ourselves in the same situation. I have in my hand an article which appeared in the Reader's Digest of May, 1964.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The heading is "Is this the way to fight the war against poverty?" Then it says:

> The Area Redevelopment Administration was set up for a highly worthy purpose. But look at the way this U.S. agency is squandering taxpayer dollars—and callously ignoring the rights of individual citizens.

The article goes on to say:

> For the ARA has, in the name of helping the poor, become the spearhead of one of the most outrageous government encroachments on private enterprise in United States history.

All we need to do is substitute "ARA" by "area development" here in Canada, and five years from now I am quite sure this article will fit the situation in this country. This article continues:

> —ARA has uncoiled into a monstrous complex of co-operating bureaucracies. These agencies have dragooned or enticed a third of the nation's counties and 42 million of its citizens into accepting the label of poverty—

The article goes on:

> —ARA is riddled with bungling, political pressures and untold finagling.

I can just see it happening here, Mr. Minister. Then the article says:

New installations are being financed by ARA in industries already beset by overcapacity, thus jeopardizing existing jobs.

It goes on to say that ARA is financing by means of a loan the expansion of the Howard Johnson chain of restaurants, and is thereby putting a great many private individuals out of business. It has loaned money for the building of new hotels, motels and so on. Another passage in this article is:

Areas that are far from "depressed" are getting help.

So through political finagling we find areas getting help when they are really not depressed. This article goes on to say:

Jobs constitute the only excuse for ARA's existence, but the agency provides brazenly inaccurate figures about the employment it generates.

I think we could apply these words to some of the figures and statements that have been made in this House as to the improvement that has taken place in the so-called designated areas here in Canada. To conclude these quotations, Mr. Chairman, I will quote what was said by two Senators of the United States, in which country they have had a plan similar to the one introduced by the Minister in respect of which he is now asking us to provide $50 million to support this program. Senator A. Willis Robertson of Virginia said this:

ARA is an unsound spending scheme through which bureaucrats may make or break cities and towns all over the country by granting or withholding federal money.

Senator Frank J. Lausche said this:

This program is not economically sound. It is not fair to the taxpayers. It is a vote-buying device.

Oh, Mr. Chairman, I can see it happening here in Canada as I read those words. I can just see these depressed areas in which industries have moved in, and a big sign put up by the member of that riding saying "I brought this industry here. Vote for me in the next election". I can see the political implications of this program in respect of which the Minister is asking us to put up $50 million; and the next time he comes to Parliament with the program he will be asking for $100 million, not $50 million.

I mention this, Mr. Chairman, because it is bound to happen here. It happened there. This designated area program as it is set up is based on the N.E.S. office areas, and as hon. Members know these areas have certain boundaries. They are rather small, and the adjoining N.E.S. area may not be designated. There is still nothing in the legislation to change this overlapping and this proximity of one area to another, or to take care of the great problem that we experienced before in this regard. I think the Minister should give consideration to using the Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures instead of N.E.S. areas as the basis of designation.

As I said before, this matter of grants is a bad principle. I am the first to admit that when we were in power as the Government we gave an outright grant to the Britannia Copper Mine in British Columbia. A very, very sincere plea was put forward at that time by the former Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Sinclair. I can see him yet, as I sat over there and he stood up with an envelope in his hand on which were written a few notes. He made a tremendous plea for a grant to the Britannia Copper Mine. Our Government gave this outright grant to the Britannia Copper Mine, and the result is that today the mine is closed. The outright grant proved to be not the proper thing to do.

I say again, Mr. Chairman, that I am not in favour of outright grants. We are in favour of loans with interest, and a personal stake by industry with regard to assistance. This resolution provides for the expansion of existing plants. It does not say whether the expansion of existing plants means that they can relocate in another area. This might be one method of expansion. They could exist in town A and expand by moving over to town B. If this were the case it would be just a transfer of jobs from one area to another.

Another thing I think should be mentioned here is that only in cases where private financing is not available should these grants be made. Then there is the matter of a community accepting the label of "poverty" or "depressed". I do not think any community wants to be labelled a poverty area. In my opinion this is bad terminology. I am one of those who believe that when you create the proper environment industry will move in and expand. I would say to this Government that they could go a long way toward creating a proper environment if they would remove the 11 per cent sales tax on production machinery.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hales: This is the first step they should take. This would create a better environment for industries in these areas. I think you could give industry pie in the sky yet they will not locate in a depressed area, because industries do not operate in that way. Industries that are going to locate in given areas call in experts and say to them "We are interested in locating in Canada. Will you make a survey and give us the whole story as to whether we should locate there". They study such things as transportation costs, closeness of raw materials and many other factors. In other words, Mr. Chairman, if you can prove to industry that they can make a dollar they will be there before you can catch them; but you have to create that environment. If they can make a dollar, they will be in there.

Take any industry for example. Take, for instance, Canada Dry. Suppose you wanted Canada Dry to come into a depressed area. You could give them all these things the Minister wants to give in the way of grants, and so on; but unless the water in that locality is of the kind they need to make their product, they will not go to the area. The policy which the Minister put before us earlier has not been working properly, and I see little improvement.

An hon. Member: It is a case of putting the cart before the horse.

Mr. Hales: It is another example of poorly thought out legislation. This Government are working in reverse; they back up, take a step forward and then two steps back. This was a patchwork quilt program that was introduced and the Minister is putting another patch on the quilt and is asking us to vote $50 million for outright grants to be given to industry to move into these designated or depressed areas.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I conclude, Mr. Chairman, by drawing to the Minister's attention once more the facts and conditions that existed in the United States when they introduced such a program in their war against poverty. We should pay particular attention to the results of that program in the United States. I hope when he produces the bill and the regulations accompanying the bill this will be spelled out in much greater detail, but I sincerely hope the Minister will give this matter second thoughts and the consideration it should have so that he will not have to ask the House to change legislation again in the short period of a little over a year, as is the case today.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, until the bill comes before the House it will not be possible for us to take a definitive stand on the proposed legislation. But unless the bill offers something a little more worth while than what we have seen so far, I for one, and I think many in this party, would be opposed to it.

Two years ago the Department of Industry made provision for area development, and with disastrous results. I think there is something to be learned from this legislation, which is still in existence. It shows that the isolation of one community, it being declared a designated area, simply does not work. I hope when the bill is brought in it will indicate that the Government has taken another look at the experience of the past and that entire areas, perhaps entire provinces, will be declared designated areas so the faults that exist, or which existed in the previous legislation, will not reappear in the new legislation.

South Waterloo was very badly hurt by the old legislation, despite the Minister's assurance to the people of South Waterloo that he was hopeful that the program would be more beneficial to places like Galt than if there were no program. That hope did not materialize. As the Minister knows, industries moved out of Galt into an adjacent area. All those in the area from which I come feel that the designation of an area of that type was a grave error. It accomplished nothing. I think the basis on which the designation was made was wrong, and I am afraid the Minister is considering this criterion in the new legislation.

Galt had gone to a great deal of trouble and made many plans to develop an industrial section. It prepared municipal services in anticipation that its industries would stay and would grow and develop, only to find that some of them moved out, and moved out with impunity. The important thing to new industry in a municipal area is the pool of labour available, the skilled and necessary labour needed by industry for its operations. In this particular circumstance industry was able to move out and draw its labour, while the municipality which had lost the industry had to pay for the cost of the services and of looking after the schools.

The Minister is fully aware that residential assessments do not cover the cost of municipal services, and that the municipalities require industrial assessments as well. To operate the legislation as the Minister did in the past, when he encouraged industry to move from a municipality, with the Minister telling the municipality that the people were still going to live in the municipality, is no help at all, because municipalities need industrial assessments to underwrite the residential assessments.

One change which is going to be made will be of some help, and it is an acknowledgment that the previous legislation was not particularly effective. The Minister says these measures were of great benefit to companies in a profit position but were less helpful to new and smaller firms. These new proposals hope to obviate that difficulty. Nevertheless the same basic fault exists in this new legislation which existed in the old. The grants are still being made on the basis of capital investment.

If it is the Minister's and the Government's intention that this legislation be part of a campaign against poverty and inadequate opportunity, and if it is the purpose of the legislation to help cure unemployment, then I cannot see how giving grants based on capital investment relates to the problem of curing unemployment. I think there are instances where this may be the case but there are other instances where it will not be the case. If a grant is based on capital expenditure only it will encourage industries of the automated type, industries which do not require much labour, to take advantage of this situation.

In our opinion if incentives are to be offered they should be on the basis of increasing employment opportunities, and grants should be made on the basis of how much employment will be offered. Grants should be given to industries of a labour-intensive nature rather than to industries which are going to use them to write off large capital investments. If these large capital investments involve labour-intensive employment, fine; but if they do not, then I hope the Minister has an answer to that particular problem.

In this regard, on the second page of his statement I see the Minister has a slightly different criterion for existing plants. He speaks of the help which will be given to existing plants in designated areas provided the expansion contributes appreciably to improving incomes and employment opportunities in such areas. This makes a great deal more sense than his first statement that the grant will be based on the size of capital investment. I hope he will follow this through and make it a uniform provision in the bill.

There is also the acknowledgement that this type of legislation is not going to be enough, that other programs will have to be devised in conjunction with this legislation. We hope a sincere effort will be made to do this. Educational facilities must be provided. Industry will not go where there is not a pool of skilled labour. Industry needs this pool of skilled labour. Industry needs assurances that there are schools and training projects in the area so as to ensure that its requirements for skilled labour will be met. I certainly hope that such a program will be brought in with this suggested legislation.

The Government proposes to establish four guidelines for the designation of areas, and again I think the Government is making a mistake in relying on statistical evidence only. This mistake was made in the area surrounding my riding.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I think part of the error arises because of the statistical method of determining what should be a designated area. The Minister referred to areas where unemployment is severe, and no one will argue with that idea. I hope the Minister will also look into the reason for that situation. If the severity of unemployment is related to a statistical fact, in that there are seasonal workers in the area, then his statistics will be completely wrong and his assumption that an industry will locate in that area will be incorrect.

The Minister speaks about areas where there has been a large and persistent decline in the number of people employed. We must do something more than simply say that if that is so we should designate this area. If there are root causes there for unemployment, such as that the area in question has no natural attractions and never will have for industry, by forcing industry into such an area we will only be inviting bankruptcy. The Minister will have to take a very close and careful look at this type of situation.

In respect of areas where unemployment is substantially above the national average, and the rate of increase in employment is substantially lower than the national average, here again this cannot be judged by statistics. A close look must be taken in respect of this area with some common sense exercised to determine whether the area has a future for industry and can sustain industry. We will not be doing anyone any favour by moving industry into such an area simply as a good short term solution, because we may wind up being shortsighted, playing a hoax on the people in this area, and leading them to believe that theirs is an area that can sustain and support an industry over a long period of time, particularly if that area has no natural advantages to offer an industry which must compete with other industries. If the Minister insists on doing this sort of thing in a situation of this kind, then he and his Government must be prepared to continuously subsidize industry located in areas improperly prepared for them.

I am disappointed that in all these indications regarding designated areas the Minister has left out what to me is probably the most vital thing to be examined. Can industry prosper and sustain itself? These programs are fine and the kind that most people will not argue against in principle. I am sure every Member of this House wants to do something about chronic unemployment, but we must be careful that in our attempt to cure chronic unemployment, which could perhaps be cured much better and more adequately by other measures, we do not force industry into a position where it cannot compete so that in the long run this nation will not advance and prosper in all areas.

In order that all areas of this country can prosper we must assure ourselves that our competitive and productive position is good. We must not do anything which puts chains on industry. We must be very careful that this kind of legislation, even with the best of intentions, will not create a monster which will require permanent subsidization and will result in lower productivity and, in the long run, a lower standard of living for Canada.

When the bill following this resolution is presented to this House we must consider it to see whether the long run problems have been considered, whether it will do something to increase our productivity, and something to foster a higher standard of living in Canada. We must look to see whether this legislation fits into some kind of national plan, or whether it is only a sop for those who are making loud noises in certain areas. We must look to see whether it is going to be political or based on a carefully considered objective. We must look to see whether it embodies ideas which will really assist municipalities, or whether it will impose difficulties upon municipalities which become designated areas. Let us not forget that by forcing industry into these areas we could create a series of problems for the municipalities which they never dreamed they would have to face, as the result of an increased demand for services. In that event, instead of helping the municipalities or areas we might effectively destroy them by raising their tax rates as a result of forcing them into the position of having to supply services which were not required in the past and may not be required in the future, except in anticipation of growth that may never develop. All we will have done then is to have supplied a sop rather than a long range solution to this kind of problem.

Some excellent reports have been made available recently in respect of this subject. I have had the opportunity of reading the report prepared by the Atlantic Finance Research Board, under the direction of Professor T. Wilson of the University of Glasgow, about the Atlantic provinces. I was greatly impressed with what that report had to say about this situation, and particularly impressed with the argument advanced for regional designation as opposed to local designations accompanied by the location of small factories in this town, that own and another town.

The report suggests that that is the worst possible thing that could happen. It points out that what should be done is designation on a regional basis, so that people of the same background and historical attitude, without having to move far from their families, could become employed in the central area. Surely that is the way to improve and increase the total performance and standards of areas of high unemployment.

In this regard I am sure my colleagues will be a little more specific, and will relate their remarks to particular areas. We all look forward to the bill itself in order that we may ascertain those things included in the bill which will be of real help to Canada instead of just words without meaning.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to say categorically that I am not greatly impressed by the legislation anticipated by this resolution. If there ever was a situation where we were mistaken I think this is it, because even a novice taking one glance at the legislation can see that we are not being consistent and are not achieving anything so far as policy is concerned. In other words we are not doing anything really constructive.

I was interested in hearing the Minister state that these grants could apply against income tax liabilities. When the Minister gets up to reply I should like him to tell us why we should be interested in granting money to people who are in an income tax bracket. It does not make sense to me. Why should we be in the position of giving a grant to somebody who is in an income tax bracket? If they are going to pay a large amount of income tax they do not need these grants. People have their own methods of seeking out places to locate sound and good businesses.

In this connection I might put in a plug for the City of Prince George. In the next few years $400 million is going to be spent within a radius of five miles of Prince George. Business people know a good place to go to establish and build up a business. We do not need this type of provision at all. For instance, I think we might look into the action taken by the Town of Arnprior some years ago. I remember being in the railway committee room when an official from Arnprior explained what they had done. There are Members of the House of Commons who come from that area. The municipality itself established certain incentives to induce business firms to establish there on a permanent basis and thus provide the type of employment and expansion of business needed by the Town of Arnprior. When we were given this information in the railway committee room I was very much impressed with the way the municipality had undertaken to overcome the difficulties facing it. I say to the Minister that if there is any place where the Government should start giving assistance across Canada it is to the municipalities. This is where the Government should be giving assistance.

I was much impressed by most of the remarks of the last speaker. I think he showed he had a very good grasp of the whole situation with regard to this legislation. The purpose of industry in Canada or anywhere else is to produce goods and services, not to provide jobs. If the purpose of industry is to provide jobs then we had better revert to the situation that obtains in undeveloped countries. This morning I was talking to a newspaperman on the street and he said that in a country he had visited not long ago there would be perhaps 50,000 men working on a project that would be handled by five or six dozen men in Canada or the United States. If we want to reverse the trend and start to provide people with work for work's sake, then I say there should be an over-all policy in the Department of Forestry and other departments to clean up our forests and provide access roads for fire protection and so on. There are many places where people can be put to work.

The fact remains that if an industry is induced to move into a certain area there is no guarantee that the people of that area are going to get the jobs. I have a very clear recollection of a fairly large highway operation where the local people in the area were not hired to work on the highway at all. There were many good catskinners and gradermen available who could have been used, but the unions had unemployed members in Vancouver, Winnipeg and other places. Because the contract specifically stated that union members would be used, these people were shipped in from other provinces and given first chance at the available jobs.

I am not complaining about that. These are the facts. But what guarantee has the Minister that if an industry is established in a particular area the people of that area will get the jobs? There is no guarantee whatsoever that the people of the area will benefit in that regard.

In addition, while we have not a very large population in Canada and while I maintain we should have a much larger population, the fact is that our population is large enough that there is great flexibility in the movement of the labour force. This has been proven to be so in the Province of British Columbia. In that province the labour force is growing and growing but so is unemployment. Why? Because people are moving there to get jobs. They know there are jobs available, but if two people go out there for every job available there is still going to be plenty of unemployment. It is a fact of life that people move to places where jobs are available. All people are not tied by their apron strings to one place. Certainly an emotional factor enters the picture when a family wants to stay together in the area where they are now living, but I say there is enough flexibility in the labour force that tremendous movement can take place.

The last point I should like to mention is the economic factor, which I believe is paramount. I do not think we should induce industries to locate in places where it will not be economically sound for them to operate and survive. If an industry is artificially stimulated to locate in a particular area, it is obvious that the death knell of that industry is a foregone conclusion. It will fail eventually.

Although I have not consulted other members of my party, I am sure they will agree with me when I say that this legislation is a piecemeal, patchwork approach to overcoming unemployment in depressed areas. Because of automation and the changes that are taking place the need arises for workers to move and, as was mentioned yesterday, we must have an over-all policy that will take care of any contingencies that may arise in the case of individuals. We must do this and forget about the business of trying to stimulate industry to locate in a place where economically it does not belong.

• (5:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I feel I must enter the debate on the motion before us because it concerns industry. Canada experiences major problems in this field.

I wonder if the proposal to distribute $50 million in loans will increase industry in Canada to the extent of providing work for all people in designated areas. Is the distribution of money in designated areas intended to displace industries?

If we take industries out of Montreal and relocate them in a designated area, while people are already out of work in Montreal, this will not solve the unemployment problem. If the Montreal industries relocate in designated areas of the province, will there be work for present employees of such industries? Can the minister tell us whether, at this time, there is plenty of production in Canada, or whether there is a lack of it? If there is a lack of it, why do industries not produce?

You will reply that perhaps it is because they do not have the money. Why does the Canadian industry lack money? Well, I will tell you right now, Mr. Chairman, it is that instead of financing consumption, we finance production. I am sure that the fault is not with production, but with consumption, because at this time, in 1965, our total gross production will top $50 billion. Now, in 1964, we barely disposed of $35 billion worth of products. This means that the balance is in warehouses.

We have lots of needs in Canada. We have an abundance of needs and they are flagrant. But consumers do not have the money to buy the production. If production is increased, what problem will that solve? Will that production be held in storage or will it be used to serve the needs of Canadians?

Well, if the needs of the Canadian people are to be served, let us organize the Canadian economy.

Our economy is not balanced. There is a lack of equilibrium between production and distribution. So long as we fail to solve the problem of equilibrium between the two, it is useless to put amounts of money at the disposal of manufacturers and to pay excessive rates of interest on those amounts.

Who are we going to protect in doing so? Those who manipulate high finance, to the detriment of the consumer.

At this time we already have excess products in storage, and such consumers as might buy them do not have the money to do so; they would have to borrow.

Therefore, we borrow to manufacture products and we also borrow to consume them. Where are we going with this sort of unbalanced economy? If we are unable to find a way to balance this system which is beyond the reach of the Canadian people, it is useless to try to administer the country.

If war were declared tomorrow, all kinds of means would be found to balance the budget; necessary steps would be taken so as to put the production on the market, because we would know that everything that is destroyed would have to be replaced.

But, at present, if you want to replace production by other products, you have to work in order to sell products for the welfare of human beings. Canadian families have needs. There are still, in many constituencies of Canada, families that do not have bathroom in the house. This does not mean they do not need them. The needs exist, but the people are unable to obtain the goods they need.

It is essential to find a way to stabilize this economic factor which has been lagging for years, in fact, ever since confederation. In the past we could say that we had production problems. But those problems have been eliminated; today we have no production problem, nor any transport problem, but we have some tremendous financial problems.

If we wish to finance production and try to give a new impetus to the economy in designated areas, this can not be done with loans, because they would only be another burden on the taxpayers' shoulders who would have to pay more interest. This would contribute to increase the cost of goods to such an extent that individuals would no longer be in a position to buy them.

What is the use of producing in that case? If we want to be logical, let us set up our economy on a balanced, scientific and businesslike basis. This will not be done through loans. Loans have been known for a long time; they are as old as the world. They should never have come into existence, yet they do exist. Some people insist that money should yield profits, whereas money does not bear returns. This explains the imbalance, and this problem must be solved.

Several areas of the country are going through a recession. Finance is to blame rather than producers, consumers or workers.

Let us solve the problem of finance and we shall then settle practically all problems. But the matter is being overlooked.

I asked earlier for an increase in family allowances in order to provide taxpayers with purchasing power. Some Liberal members laughed. You will laugh, you Liberals, in the face of families, in the face of those who are starving, at the next election.

You can go and laugh at them in their own countries. You have already done so. I do not know who did, but I heard about it. That is what goes on, Mr. Chairman. Some are satisfied with their salaries, are content to eat their fill, while others starve in Canada, starve in the Province of Quebec. To prevent them from starving, we need reforms, monetary reforms.

We shall get such reforms if you are willing to open your eyes and ears, to put your fingers on the evil that festers in our shaky economy, on the business failures that occur throughout the land. There are bankruptcies everywhere. Why are there so many? Because there is not enough money in circulation. People are unable to buy and industries cannot sell.

I am the owner of a small industry myself. The problem is not one of manufacturing but of sales. The problem in this country, as far as sales are concerned, is one of getting paid; that is the trouble and you refuse to settle the problem. The problem cannot be settled by loans.

If you want to settle the problem of the Canadian economy there is overstocking of real products on shelves—then why not give an adjusted discount on these products. This will result in products being sold at reasonable prices.

It is not interest on money that is needed. The sole purpose of the administration is to arrange for loans. The government has become a lending institution, it endorses loans, it endorses financiers, so that the latter may obtain 6, 7 and 8 per cent. That the people be taken unfair advantage of, that they be throttled, is not important, but interest on money must be maintained at any cost; governments must be endorsers and take their responsibilities toward the whole of Canada, they must endorse all those loans in order to organize the Canadian economy a little.

Some small industries are head over heels in debt even before they start operating. They cannot even go on operating because production is overtaxed—there are direct, indirect, provincial, municipal and school taxes, so that production is taxed up to 50 per cent of its value. When you buy a piece of equipment or a piece of furniture, if the latter costs $100, taxes account for $50.

That is the kind of economy we would like to reform. It is not with the system advocated by the government that the present system will be corrected. A solution can be found. I said so a moment ago, it is by means of a compensated discount on products that this problem can be solved and, of course, with money from the Bank of Canada. There is surplus of production which the people need, which they should have and which they should be able to purchase.

In industries automation has now replaced the worker to a great extent. Where 100 men were employed before, only 10 are required now with automation. Industries are modernizing as never before.

Who is going to buy the production? I am asking you? Who is going to solve the problem of consumption in Canada? Production is financed, but nobody thinks about financing consumption. Consumption is a necessity of life and, consequently, first consideration should be given to financing the consumer not by indirect but by direct means, not by letting him be exploited by financiers but by helping him by direct means, so that the individual consumer can satisfy his own needs, for there is an abundance of production.

But production should be controlled by the consumer and not only by producers, because what is the use of producing if you cannot sell.

I would have a lot more to say, Mr. Chairman, but I will confine my remarks to what I have said. I am asking all those who are controlling the economy, ministers of the government, for instance, to introduce the necessary remedy in order to improve the lot of the Canadian people.

If Canadians do not get that, communism will spread in Canada. In fact, it is already permeating everywhere in Canada. Why? Because there is hardship in the country and the people have lost all hope of a better lot. The only thing which our citizens have are new troubles and new taxes. They are discouraged, they are no longer even interested in politics. At the last election, only 30 per cent of Montreal's electors voted, which shows how disenchanted citizens are with politics.

There are also urgent economic factors. The problem will not be solved only by setting up new industries to create more jobs. I am for new industries indeed, but I want us to keep those we already have. The existing industries fight in a mess of problems. Only big industries and large capital get excessive profits. They suit large finance interests by borrowing money, but they have to charge prohibitive prices for their goods in order to pay the interest demanded by financing interests.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman. Once more I want to assure you of my appreciation. I would like to see the government take a positive step from an economic standpoint, from the standpoint of industry in Canada and from the standpoint of consumption in this country. Something needs to be done. We are not after power, because we are not here for that. We are for improvement. If those who preside over the destinies of this country make the improvements asked by the people, we will be the first to congratulate them. If they do not, we will continue to tell the people that there is no improvement and that the present government protects only a small group of society to the disadvantage of all the others.

Mr. Otto: Let me say at the outset that I support the principle of this legislation. Some hon. Members have criticized the advisability of proceeding by means of grants as against tax incentives or tax reductions. Let me point out, having been in business, that there is a difference between the two: Before you get tax credits you must make a profit. The purpose of this legislation is in part to share the risk. It has been said on many occasions that the Government is a partner in the profits—why not in the risk?

Having said this, may I add that I find the resolution something of a paradox. I understand from the definition the Minister gave that these provisions only apply to manufacturing or processing facilities. I put it to the Minister that most of the areas designated are four-square with the tourist industry. Nevertheless, the tourist industry is not included in the definition. I am afraid we regard the tourist industry as not being an industry at all. Mr. Deutsch of the Economic Council has indicated that new jobs will have to be found in the service industries rather than in the manufacturing industries. I put it to the Minister that there is some help already available for manufacturing industries, while no help is available to the tourist industry of this country, to bring it up to date.

We should consider the fact that Canadians and Americans will have more time and more money to spend. Despite the many natural attractions of this country they will be reluctant to spend more of these dollars here until our facilities have been improved and brought up to date. Our operators do not have the money to make the necessary improvements. Consider the facilities which are available in New York State where the tourist industry has now become an important full time industry. To cater efficiently to the needs of tourists, local help is necessary, and this is a field which can probably be developed to even more profitable advantage than the relocation of manufacturing and processing.

I have no criticism to make of this measure. I think it will help the general economic situation. But I should like to call attention to the fact that the Government has neglected to include the tourist industry in its definition, and with great respect I suggest the Department of Industry should take another look at this industry, bearing in mind that it may be comparable in employment opportunities to the manufacturing and processing industries in the areas concerned.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, the resolution under study gives me the opportunity to express my opinion and that of two so-called independent bodies, with regard to this measure. I hope the information I shall provide to the minister will help him correct, if possible, the inadequacies of this legislation. But before starting my remarks, I must say that I sympathize with the minister, because it must certainly be most distressing to be criticized by one's own political colleagues. I commend the previous speaker for his objectivity and I trust that the minister, contrary to what he has always done up to now, will take heed of his advice and act accordingly.

Mr. Chairman, I entirely support the opinion expressed a few moments ago by my colleague, the hon. Member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales). I think that, because of other similar measures taken by various governments, the present measure is only a duplication of what has been done by other governments; in fact, it is not entirely lacking in poiltical sense and shows some understanding of what patronage can do for a government. In any case, I submit that this initial amount of $50 million seems very impressive and I am of the opinion that the minister would be well advised to take note of any advice given him, particularly from this side of the house.

If you take a quick look at the various designated areas, you are bound to come to the conclusion that the Liberal ridings, especially those represented by cabinet ministers, are particularly well treated, and in that regard I will bring evidence only from people with nothing at stake in this matter, namely the mayor of St. Hyacinthe and the provincial Minister of Industry and Commerce, Mr. Gérard Lévesque.

I cannot help notice that, to a similar extent, the government gives quite a special treatment to big companies and does not give the necessary consideration to small ones.

In my province, handicraft, small industry, family industry play a very important part and I believe that the minister should give particular consideration to that sector of industry. Small industry has played a very important role in the past and, because of the lack of consideration and support by the government, and because of competition on the part of big industries, those small local family companies find themselves in a very precarious position. Therefore, I beg the minister to grant this situation a special consideration in order to rectify, if necessary, the deficiencies of this resolution.

I was saying a moment ago that I would like to convey to hon. members the appreciation of the mayor of St. Hyacinthe and of the Quebec Minister of Industry and Commerce. I should like to quote part of an article published in Le Courrier on February 4, 1965:

> If the city of St. Hyacinthe is in such a bad state as far as industrial development is concerned, even though it is financially and administratively sound and in a position to provide many services to individuals as well as to institutions, the federal government at Ottawa is indirectly to blame because of the various areas it has considered as designated areas.

It goes on to say:

> In short, that is the opinion expressed by His Honour Mayor Jacques Lafontaine, on Monday, to city council in connection with the annual brief presented by the central council of national unions and following his trip to Quebec City where he met, last Thursday, Mr. Gérard-D. Lévesque, Minister of Industry and Commerce, to discuss the impossible situation of a city such as ours.
>
> Everybody knows that our city lost several new industries to other municipalities, such as St. John and Shawinigan, to mention only those two.
>
> Now, those cities are in so-called designated areas because of their high rate of unemployment, and their administrators are now able to give extraordinary advantages to industries wishing to settle within their limits—

[Mr. Ricard.]

That is the opinion of the mayor of the City of St. Hyacinthe. But what is the opinion of the provincial minister of Industry and Commerce? Here it is:

> The Quebec Minister of Industry and Commerce stated that normal cities are getting a poor deal but that the provincial government is not responsible, because it was not consulted in any way by the federal authorities which, on their own initiative, decided which were the designated areas in our province.

And the minister concluded:

> As long as this deplorable state of affairs is maintained, the chances for industrial development in the province will be small, and the federal state is the only one to blame.

Mr. Chairman, in quoting the Quebec Minister of Industry and Commerce, I feel that I am repeating the remarks of a person who is not a political enemy of the federal Minister of Industry and I find it odd that a provincial Liberal minister should speak in such strong language about this federal Liberal government. It is surely because the Quebec Minister of Industry and Commerce felt justified in doing so when he visited St. Hyacinthe and also when the mayor of St. Hyacinthe went to Quebec City, and made the statement I have just quoted.

I wish the minister would devote a little more attention to the development of trade and commerce in our province and a little less attention to political patronage, which is beneficial only to his party.

I do hope that these words will give the minister food for thought and allow the municipalities in the province of Quebec, and more particularly the city of St. Hyacinthe, to obtain their fair share.

• (5:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, representing a large area of northern Ontario where this type of legislation was considered to be very advantageous because of particular factors, I am very unhappy with the operation of this Act and with the whole operation of the Department of Industry which has administered the Act. It is a fact that there are areas of Canada that are in need beyond all others of government assistance in developing industry. You will remember, Mr. Chairman, the hue and cry that went up when the Prime Minister's area was hard hit with unemployment a year or two ago when they closed down the uranium industry as such. You will remember, also, that at that time the Government had spent millions and millions of dollars in regard to that particular affair, for which the Liberal Party can take absolutely no credit but have to bear a great deal of blame, in the development of that industry.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Remember the community of Nickel Belt which supplied uranium to the United States. The town almost disintegrated overnight when this industry was no longer needed and Parliament was asked to designate it a distressed area. I think everyone in Canada agreed with this action because a large number of people were displaced and a terrific amount of capital wasted and squandered on the expectation that this mining community would continue for a number of years.

A number of people objected this afternoon to things which had happened in the past. I am aware that this type of incentive does produce anomalies in areas it is meant to help. We are all familiar with the situation in Brantford. Some of us are aware of the situation in the Waterloo area. We are aware of the fact that this legislation has caused many unpleasantries and much unhappiness between communities which have taken advantage of this legislation, and others which have not. Kirkland Lake is a good example of the type of area not considered. Renfrew is in no different position, as are a number of other locations in every province in Canada. These are communities which died slowly over a long period of time.

The industrial commission in Kirkland Lake went to see some government officials in Ottawa on two occasions on the question of assistance to develop secondary industry. The first time they were surprised that the Department of Labour did not have sole jurisdiction over deciding what should be the criterion, what the incentive program would be and how the designated areas were decided. They were surprised that the Department of Labour considered Kirkland Lake to be fairly well off because of two factors. One was that there was no unemployment, which is fairly easily understood. The other was that the total wealth per person in the area is not very great. I am wondering whether the township I live in is one of the most wealthy townships in the country, if that is the kind of statistic used. I may be one of the few taxpayers in my area, but because of the income I receive these statistics may indicate that this is a wealthy taxpaying area. Certainly the farmers in my area do not pay much tax, so if this sort of criterion is used the situation becomes ridiculous. This may be happening with regard to Kirkland Lake.

With regard to the question of unemployment, we have an unemployment insurance office which several years ago was divided into branches, owing to the diversity of industry in the area covered. I thought this was fair and reasonable and worked to the advantage of the people it served. But it meant that the bush working population, which is a seasonally employed population, joined with the agricultural population and was transferred to the new unemployment insurance office at New Liskeard. The office at Kirkland Lake has been left with a stable work force, and therefore there is no unemployment.

You may be surprised to know that no young people register for employment at Kirkland Lake. This is because there are no jobs in Kirkland Lake available. These people know when they graduate from the institute in the area or from the vocational school or high school that if they are going to work, then they have to go to Toronto. Therefore they move to Toronto and get a job. They never register at Kirkland Lake. Perhaps we should have had everyone unemployed at Kirkland Lake register, and if this were done the unemployment figure would certainly triple immediately. These people are not stupid. They are well aware which jobs are available and they do not apply for jobs which do not exist. They do not want to become part of this statistic in which I see no sense.

Less than a year ago there was a bad accident in one of the mines in my area. These mines are over a mile in depth and have reached the economic limit of their productive capability. As soon as two men were killed last fall at one of the mines, it was closed. Two weeks ago there was a very bad bump at the Lakeshore mine and it was closed, except for salvage operations. This means that 600 people have been laid off. I have not been able to check the figures because I do not know where the figures will be found, but I bet that these 600 employees are probably one third of the total number of unemployed which Kirkland Lake had during the worst period over the last two or three years. I will bet that these 600 people do not register anywhere for employment, because the average age of the miners working in the gold mines at Kirkland Lake is 54. So where would they get a job? They have worked for 35 to 40 years underground in gold mines. Are they going to work on a farm or pick up a chain saw and go into the bush? Are they going to become truck drivers or work on the railways? What kind of jobs can they apply for? So they do not register and become part of the statistics. Yet this Government is not smart enough to find some way to accommodate the people in that area who are not able to take advantage of employment in manufacturing industries and join the numbers who go to make up these statistics.

If any of these officials are in the galleries, there may be among them some of the smart young people who travel around, and I have met many of them. The Minister of Industry should be quite proud of the number of people he has been able to assemble, but they have not done a damned thing for places like Kirkland Lake. One official became quite interested in Kirkland Lake and I should like to read part of a letter which he wrote to the Kirkland Lake Industrial Commission after he returned to the Department. This young fellow was lent to the Prime Minister to help in the war on poverty. I do not know what that will mean, but there are many people in my area who would not consider Kirkland Lake to be a rapid growth area. They are well aware of the fact that Kirkland Lake, since its peak period between 1937 and 1942, has gone steadily downhill. This is what this official says:

> Upon my return from Kirkland Lake, I conducted an inquiry into the possibility of designating the territory administered by the National Employment Service Office of Kirkland Lake for the financial incentives program of the Area Development Agency and, as we had foreseen during our discussions last September, I found that there was no possibility of obtaining designation at that time. Moreover you will no doubt recall that I had indicated to you, during the same discussions, that the Area Development Agency Program for Designated Areas had been under review and that we would have to await the results of this review before further discussions along these lines could be entertained. This situation still exists. I do hope, however, that within a relatively short time we shall know whether or not the program, as it now exists, is to be modified.

At a further meeting we have had with them we were informed that it is not, and that this situation will not be corrected.

I believe that we should be more interested in people than in property. This is a capital incentive program. This program assists capital investment. It helps give to capital; but it really does not give to people. This is one of the most advantageous capital bolsters we have had for a long time, but it does not help the people to become employed in industry. We are merely adding incentive to capital; it is not given to people.

[Mr. Peters.]

I am well aware there are other programs which do assist people, but this one does not. This program is a bolster to capitalists, something to which I have never dedicated myself, and I have never felt strongly about the capitalist system. Yet this Government gives $50 million to aid capital, having no regard for people or for communities which have been built up at terrific expense.

We have hospitals, schools, technical institutions, vocational schools, a dozen or more primary schools, a fire and police department equivalent to that employed by a community of 50,000 people, all paid for by 800 miners who are employed in that community. What is to be done about this situation? All the Minister suggests is that industry be located elsewhere, and we know that once industry is located in the suggested areas there will follow these increased demands for social capital. As one Member suggested, we are going to build these communities on the golden horseshoe basis.

Let us remember that we must keep industry close to the area of consumption. We all know, including the officials of the department, that there is not going to be a mill established to process the iron ore of northern Ontario because it is uneconomical. I do not think many people have complained about that fact, or about the fact that Jones and Laughlin is exporting the product to the United States, yet unable to build a steel mill in the Timiskaming area. Let us not forget, however, that we are not getting one red cent in royalties in this regard, but rather wages for 200 people. Has the Department of Industry given us any consideration because 300 people have been laid off this month? We have not been designated as a distressed area—hell, no. Instead of that, other areas where wages are 30 or 40 cents per hour higher have been so designated.

Timmins has been designated as a distressed area and the situation there is no different from that of Kirkland Lake, in spite of the fact that the situation in Timmins has changed considerably since the stock market took a jump. There are those who say we are not going to have a smelter in Timmins, but let me assure you that the people in the Timmins area will not continue to mine or sell their Texas-Gulf for export to the United States. We are interested in getting benefits equal to those received by other areas, and Kirkland Lake is not receiving equal benefits.

There is no justification for anyone who has half an eye, driven through that area and observed the situation there, wanting to create another Cobalt there.

Throughout northern Ontario and northern Quebec communities the people are having to provide increased capital services such as roads, sewers, sidewalks, police and fire protection. The people of those areas have provided the capital which has built and maintained the services to this time, and they deserve some assistance in the maintenance of those social capital expenditures, particularly when industry no longer exists. Other countries like Sweden have been able to develop initiatives in this field in deciding where industry should be located. They have been able to sit down and plan their economy.

You know yourself, Mr. Chairman, as a result of driving in the Toronto area that the many factories there this month which were not there last month require greatly expanded social capital services, and that this expansion of industry will require an equivalent expansion in transportation. These problems are always magnified by increases in industrial locations in an area.

Who was it provided the capital for the development of Elliot Lake? The federal Government provided $90 million for that area in the form of cash and tax exemptions for mining companies over a three-year period. Some of these companies did not spend one red cent in the development of this area. The Canadian Government supplied the money to build these plants. The situation has not proved economical so far as the miners are concerned. They spent their savings, worked there for a period of a few years and then had to move out, losing everything they had invested. Has the Department of Labour or the Department of Industry taken this into account?

The Minister of Industry and the Minister of Labour are well aware of the circumstances surrounding these mining areas, and every official of those departments knows of the situation that now exists. I refer to areas in the proximity of Renfrew, the head of the Lakes, particularly around Port Arthur, as well as other areas developed in the north because of an abundance of primary products, whether utilized by the forestry or mining industries.

If we are going to check this developing problem, it must be done now rather than wait for 150 years as was the case in the Maritime Provinces. Let me warn this House now that if there is any intention to pass this legislation by July 1 without some consideration being given to the areas I have mentioned, if I can find any way to stop it, there will not be an adjournment for the summer recess for at least a month. The people of northern Ontario are worried about the situation and feel that steps should be taken to make their conditions at least equal to those of other similar areas.

Within the next two years there will be no gold mines left in northern Ontario. Surely the Minister cannot say that he is not interested in that fact. The Government of Canada has paid $10 million per year toward assisting the gold mining industry in these northern communities. Are they now to be abandoned? If that is the attitude taken by this Government, then what they are doing is honouring only the financial interests of the gold mining industry, the shareholders and others connected with this development, and disregarding the interests of the people who work in the industry. Is the Government prepared to say that? If it is not prepared to do so, then I suggest some change be made so that these areas of northern Ontario can be designated as depressed areas, small growth areas, distressed areas or designated areas. Let them be called by any name, but let them receive some assistance instead of being penalized by the attitude of this Government. They should receive treatment at least equal to that afforded other communities which have more advantages.

If the Government took the attitude I suggest it might not cost one red cent because, while I know of no industry which has gone into the designated areas of Timmins or Rouyn, I do know of several industries that will locate in the Timiskaming area when it becomes a designated area so that they can take advantage of that situation. Surely the Minister is fair enough to give the people of Timiskaming the opportunity of having a pulp mill or some other enterprise locate in that area. He can do so by treating them on an equal basis with those people of the areas to be designated.

The program as outlined by the Minister is not fair because the criteria set down by the Department of Labour are not adequate to take into consideration slow growth areas which, a few years ago, grew rather rapidly but then began to deteriorate. I am not suggesting for one minute that this Government should not consider those small towns which exist as a result of the agricultural industry, but I do feel that there has been a trend to ignore the rural communities in favour of the urban centres. This has in part led to the urbanization which has taken place in Canada.

• (5:50 p.m.)

But we are talking about communities with a population of 20,000 which have all the necessary facilities already paid for. In many of these towns that have been built on the mining industry the municipal debt was paid off 10 or 20 years ago. We have the facilities but we do not have the growth and development that other communities have experienced.

We do not want to wait until the situation gets as bad as in the Maritimes. I do not want to represent an area that has died and for which we are trying to bring about some kind of rebirth. I want our area to be given assistance now, so it can continue to participate in the same way as the rest of Ontario. In that regard I would refer to this statement by one Ontario Government department:

The Department of Economics and Development stands ready at all times to help in this development—

The development of northern Ontario.

—confident that by the proper utilization of our natural and human resources, by faith in the unity of our people, northeastern Ontario can play a most vital role in the fulfilling of Ontario's destiny.

We have helped to maintain Canada in the past. When citizens from every riding in Canada came to the gold mining areas of northern Ontario looking for work they received work and thus were able to maintain their families and help to maintain communities throughout Ontario, Quebec and many other parts of Canada. Now we are asking for equality of opportunity so that we can take advantage of the assistance given to other areas. If we are given this opportunity we will continue to play our part. I can assure hon. Members that there will be no cost to Canada in the end because the contribution we will make will be much greater than any assistance that may be extended to us through this legislation. If this is done we are prepared to support the legislation. If this kind of concession is not made I am prepared to fight the legislation in any way I can until it is made.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, in listening to the hon. Member for Timiskaming I was reminded of how often, in listening to economic questions being debated at provincial political conventions over the years, I have heard northern Ontario representatives threaten to secede from the Province of Ontario and of how often I have heard eastern Ontario representatives say: If you are leaving, for God's sake take us too.

[Mr. Peters.]

I think the tragedy of the Province of Ontario lies in the fact that development has been centralized in the metropolitan area and in western Ontario and that generally speaking eastern Ontario and northern Ontario have been left as "the poor South" of this great and rich province. In his criticism of the results of the legislation I think there was inherent in the remarks of the hon. Member for Timiskaming the fact that the approach to the economic problems of the nation embodied in this type of legislation is a sound one. What he was complaining about was the fact that the interpretation of the legislation did not suit the particular needs of his people and, in line with his duty as a Member representing these people, he objected in the strongest possible terms to the application of the rules of the legislation. But in principle I think that he and the people of eastern Ontario would agree that the approach of providing a Federal incentive to areas of slow growth, high unemployment and a low rate of growth of employment is a sound one.

This is the first time in the history of this Dominion that this approach has been taken. As we are in many other areas, we in this country have been behind countries such as Italy, the United Kingdom and Sweden with regard to the decentralization of industry.

The hon. Member for Waterloo South said that the emphasis on decentralization should not be negative. In other words, it should not render the economy of the country inefficient in its application. I certainly think that none of us would wish to make Canada's economy inefficient. I take exception and disagree most violently with those ivory tower university economics professors who sit there in their shelter and say that the only way we can be efficient in this nation is to build two or three little Japans from one end of the country to the other, and that this is the only way we can compete in world markets. I say that economists who argue in this fashion negate the entire Canadian challenge. We have a great land mass and a small population and the challenge is: Can we in fact derive the social benefits of that great land mass and still be efficient economically? I think we can do so and I believe that for the first time the Government has recognized that principle by bringing in area development legislation under the Department of Industry.

We have not hidden our heads in the sand and said: Let the Japans grow and leave the rest of the land to lie fallow, because in that way we will be efficient. As I said, for the first time the Government of this country has said that this nation should be permitted to grow with some equitable distribution of the sources of production and the sources of employment so that there will not be first and second rate citizens as there are today, and so that we will at least try to minimize the gap between the mountains and the valleys in our economic picture.

I am one of those who disagree with the application of the program in its first stage. I think that the Government deserves credit for bringing in the program and for accepting this philosophy which will lead to the equalization of opportunity across this land, but I do think that we need to become more sophisticated in our approach to the problem. We need to approach it from a proper base and above all we need the courage to approach the problem, if need be, from a basis of common sense, on an ad hoc basis, if you like, on the basis of economic principles, yes, but not on the basis of political patronage at all.

I do not think any set of statistics, no matter how comprehensive they may be, can possibly determine whether a certain area (a) can usefully and economically assimilate industrial growth and (b) whether incentives will contribute to that useful economic growth. I do not think any set of figures, no matter how sophisticated and complex they may be, can provide the perfect answer. In the Ottawa valley there is a saying which I believe has spread throughout a considerable part of the country. It is that "figures don't lie but liars can figure". It may be we need to do a little more figuring in this particular area.

I think the problems of eastern and northern Ontario are similar and unique. I believe we must admit that the statistics and the criteria as they were evolved do injustice to those areas of slow growth in eastern Ontario and northern Ontario. In all fairness I must say that our unemployment picture and our lack of growth of employment are not as critical as in areas such as the Gaspé, part of the eastern townships and a great part of the Maritime Provinces.

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock, pursuant to the provisions of subsection 3 of Standing Order 15 it is my duty to leave the Chair so that the House may proceed to the consideration of private Members' business.

Mr. Greene: May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, the House will now proceed with the consideration of private Members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications has referred two bills back to the House for consideration, Bill S-4 and Bill S-5. Could we have unanimous consent to deal with the committee stages of these two bills?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill S-4, respecting Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company—Mr. Nixon.

Bill S-5, respecting Great Northern Railway Company and Great Northern Pacific and Burlington Lines, Inc.—Mr. Wahn.

PRINCIPAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The House in Committee on Bill S-9, to incorporate Principal Life Insurance Company of Canada—Mr. Lambert—Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to make a brief statement. A week ago three of the petitioners, Messrs. Forster, Stewart, and Patrick, accompanied by its counsel and parliamentary agent, appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. They were examined at length. The Superintendent of Insurance, Mr. Humphrys, appeared and was questioned in some detail by members of the committee. The committee accepted the bill in its entirety without amendment. The Chairman of the Committee has reported back and I would now ask hon. Members to approve the bill clause by clause.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

THE TRUSTEE BOARD OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN CANADA

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park) moved the second reading of Bill S-10, respecting the Trustee Board of the Presbyterian Church in Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words before the motion for second reading is adopted, in order to explain the purposes of the bill to the Members of the House.

The Trustee Board of the Presbyterian Church in Canada was incorporated by chapter 64 of the Statutes of Canada 1939, for the purpose of acquiring, taking and holding and dealing with real and personal property of the church. There was only one amendment, and that was by chapter 23 of the Statutes of Canada 1962-63, which widened the field of investments to include investments in which a Canadian insurance company might invest, and granting power to establish plans for gratuities, pensions, superannuation, etc., for ministers or former ministers of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, and section 23 was added clarifying the references in the Act to the board of administration or the administrative council.

With respect to the purpose of the proposed legislation, at the present time the board consists of seven members established by act of incorporation. It is now desired to make provision for enlarging the number to a maximum of 15, and to provide that until otherwise determined by the general assembly of the church, the board shall consist of eight members.

It has been the practice to appoint the chairman of the administrative council and treasurer of the church to the board. It is desired to make these appointments mandatory, but if the treasurer of the church might at some future time become a permanent paid position, or alternatively might cease to exist under that name, then in either of these two events it is desired to appoint the person holding the position of chairman of the finance committee of the administrative council to the board in place of the treasurer, if that position were not a paid position.

• (6:10 p.m.)

The proposed legislation deals, first, with the membership of the board. In the second place it grants power to combine and consolidate in the hands of the board—to receive the income therefrom and to apportion the net income therefrom pro rata according to the respective interests therein among such trusts, institutions, organizations, schemes and funds, provided that no such moneys or investments shall be consolidated, if by the terms of the instrument under which they are held they are specifically directed to be administered separately. It also gives power to employ investment counsel or other professional advisers.

In the third place it provides for the enactment and repeal of bylaws, regulations, etc., the power of the general assembly to delegate power and revoke such delegation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 105 the said bill is now referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

EVANGELISTIC TABERNACLE INCORPORATED

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-11, to incorporate Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated.

He said: This bill is in standard form and is similar to many others which have been passed incorporating other religious bodies. The petitioners are five residents of the City of Winnipeg. This religious organization has congregations in Ontario, Saskatchewan and British Columbia as well as Manitoba. It also maintains a missionary in the Philippines. It carries on certain charitable and educational work.

The Evangelistic Tabernacle was established first in Canada in 1956. It has affiliations with a similar religious organization in the United States. The scope of its activities has now developed to the point where this body must become incorporated if it is to continue to be effective in the spreading of the Christian gospel. I understand that this bill will be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills. A representative of the organization will, of course, appear before the committee if the bill is referred there, and be in a position to provide detailed information to hon. Members.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I have one comment to make at this point. The hon. Member has told us that this bill, if passed, will be referred to the Standing Committee. I suggest the committee might give some consideration to a problem which to my knowledge has arisen in a case of certain of the non-charitable organizations established by statute. It concerns the liability incurred by the main body in relation to acts by one of its subsidiaries.

The Order of Elks was recently involved in a difficulty of this kind. The charter we granted took away certain responsibilities from individuals without giving a right of redress to the corporate body. When representatives come before the committee in future perhaps they would be prepared to indicate what provision should be made in this respect. It is a matter which might be considered in the light of the clause under which the organization in this case is seeking to hold property and community wealth.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 105, the said bill is now referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

CANADIAN INSTITUTE OF MINING AND METALLURGY

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-12, respecting the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy.

He said: This is a very simple bill dealing with the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy which was incorporated in 1898. The purpose is to change the constitution so as to enable the Institute to change the location of its head office more easily. At the present time this can only be done by a favourable vote of two thirds of the entire membership. Membership of the society is very far flung and it has proved to be virtually impossible to get a vote of two thirds of the membership at any one casting. The present bill asks that the incorporation be changed so as to permit a change in the situation of the head office by a two thirds majority of the votes cast, rather than by two thirds of the entire membership.

If the purpose of the bill is agreeable to the House I would ask for unanimous consent to move third reading at this sitting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We need the unanimous consent of the House to suspend Standing Order 102 so as to allow this bill to go to the Committee of the Whole rather than to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills. Is this agreed?

Mr. Peters: Was it the intention that this bill should be referred under the Standing Order to a committee? The effect of the amendment proposed would be to disfranchise all those who do not have an opportunity to participate in a vote on any proposal to change the address of the head office. The obvious question to ask is whether this proposal has ever been opposed in the past.

Mr. Moreau: No. It has not been opposed. Members vote by mail, but the ballots returned never amount to two thirds of the membership. They have an opportunity to vote but do not exercise it. I think this is understandable in the light of the far-flung membership that this would happen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. Member have the unanimous consent of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The house in Committee on Bill No. S-12 respecting the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy—Mr. Moreau—Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

On clause 1—Repeal.

Mr. Scott: I gather the purpose of the amendment is to change the method by which the head office can be moved around.

Mr. Moreau: Basically, that is the purpose of the bill. We are asking for a change in the incorporation so that the head office of the Institute can be moved by a two thirds majority of the votes returned rather than by a majority of the entire membership. The Institute has a large membership; I am sorry I am not able to inform the Committee as to the precise number but it is probably in the thousands, and some of the members are outside the country. It has proven practically impossible to get a two thirds vote returned when any vote is taken.

Mr. Ormiston: Will the hon. Member tell us where the headquarters is at present? If this bill should pass is it intended to move it to some other area?

• (6:20 p.m.)

Mr. Moreau: The head office is now in Montreal. I think it may be desirable to move it elsewhere depending on the residence of the president and head officers in any given year. It may be something that could be considered by the membership, at least in the future, as to moving the office rather than having it fixed in one spot.

Clause agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time; now?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Moreau moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

THE PACIFIC COAST FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Grant Deachman (for Mr. Basford) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-14, respecting the Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill No. S-14 is to change the name of The Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company to the Century Insurance Company of Canada in English, and in French to La Compagnie d'Assurance Century du Canada; and to provide for an increase in the capitalization of the company from $1 million to $2 million. The Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company is well known on the Pacific Coast in the Vancouver, B.C., area. It was initially incorporated as a provincial company, under the laws of British Columbia, in 1890. In 1908 the company applied to Parliament and received a statutory charter. Since 1920 the Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company has belonged to "The Century Group" of insurance companies which has its head office in England.

The head office of The Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company is in Vancouver, B.C. The company at the present time carries on business in every province of Canada except Prince Edward Island, and also writes contracts of insurance in the United Kingdom and the United States. In addition to its offices in Vancouver it has branch offices in Calgary, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Toronto and Montreal. The company has a staff of 93 employees in its Canadian offices.

In 1964 the company, which writes all classes of insurance except life insurance, earned net premiums totalling $3,096,300, of which $1,486,000 were earned in the United Kingdom and $392,000 were earned in the United States. The balance of $1,218,300 was earned upon the company's Canadian business. The aggregate of sums insured in Canada in 1964 was $140,548,600.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

[Mr. Moreau.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 105 the said bill stands referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the unanimous consent of the House to consider in Committee of the Whole, Bill No. S-7, relating to Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, which bill was reported from the Transport and Communications Committee, without amendment, earlier today.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that it was reported. In any case the hon. Member has not unanimous consent.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT

MEASURE TO PREVENT FOREIGN INTERVENTION IN INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-12, to amend the Immigration Act (Foreign Intervention in Industrial Disputes).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I hope that bringing this bill before the House will accomplish some of the things which previous bills have done in bringing matters of interest before the House for discussion. It seems, Sir, that from time to time facts are brought to our attention which indicate that there is an ever-increasing American influence on the Canadian way of life. This has been pointed out on several occasions by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), who has endeavoured by legislation and other means to rectify this situation and who has stressed the need to give Canadians the opportunity to buy back their own heritage and their own resources. That is only one aspect of this question; the other concerns the influence of American culture on the Canadian way of life.

We know that by legislation the programming of our national television and radio is restricted to a certain American content in order that Canadian producers and artists are able to make their mark in their own chosen professions. However, Mr. Speaker, there is one aspect of Canadian life which seems to ignore the American influence, and that is in the field of labour and management relations. That is the reason the bill is before the House at this time.

Specifically, the purpose of this bill is to keep Canadian the disputes, negotiations and settlements that occur in Canada between employer and employee, and to prevent foreign fomentation and fermentation of these disputes into test-tube experiments for the benefit of foreign power groups without regard to Canadian employer-employee interests. We have had many instances of foreign participation in our labour relations. As a matter of fact it has been so marked that not so long ago the C.B.C. or some of those who participate in presenting the programs found it advisable to present to the Canadian public a documentary on what happens when there is undue influence brought to bear in a strike in which labour and management are concerned. I refer to the C.B.C. program which caused a great deal of interest several months ago, namely "This Hour has Seven Days", which related to the strike between the Toronto newspapers and the printers.

Here was a situation where we had almost reached agreement between labour and management. However, because of the participation of American strike promoters, who fomented some discord, the strike was kept going; in fact, I believe it is going at the present time. In Canada we have had newspaper strikes where theoretically some of the staff have been on strike for 17 or 20 years. But it takes on a very dangerous aspect when we find that the relations between labour and management are adversely affected by the participation of people from outside this country.

We realize, of course, that there is a very close relationship between Canadian trade unions and those in the United States.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Many of the unions in this country are of the international type with headquarters in the United States. This, of course, is advantageous to Canadian unions in the event of a prolonged strike because they have the benefit of the finances which are enjoyed by unions across the line, making it possible to finance strikes when they go for long periods.

The situation also arises wherein Canadian unions enjoy the support of the international unions when negotiations are carried on and the pension funds are all disbursed from the United States. However, this did not prevent some of the C.B.C. staff from bringing to the attention of the public some of the injustices in this dispute. If we review the script we are caused to wonder why the Canadian public stand idly by and see this type of intervention continuing. It is interesting to examine the research done by the C.B.C. staff and realize that much of the material which they produced was in fact very factual. The strike in question drew comment from people all across Canada, for the simple reason that it was a strike which neither the publishers nor the union really wanted. But it was a strike which neither the publishers nor the union could afford to lose.

Some classic statements have been made in connection with this strike because it seemed on the verge of settlement so many times. It is interesting to note that those who had done so much research on the topic discovered that three times the officials of the local union No. 91 of the I.T.U. had reached agreement with the newspapers on the issue. However, three times the agreements were rejected by the headquarters of the printers union in Colorado Springs. This, Mr. Speaker, is a sad commentary, because it shows that while we have Canadian labour and management agreed on a settlement, there was this interference and participation by an international union across the line which deprived the newspapers and the others involved of the privilege of reaching a satisfactory settlement.

It is unfortunate that this situation should take place in light of the fact that those involved on this side of the border were quite in agreement as to what should take place. However, the commentary by the C.B.C. investigators went on to say that local 91 struck because its international headquarters in Colorado Springs could not afford to give way to automation, or so it believed.

Again the question could be asked: Why did the Toronto printers strike? Why did they accept the dictation of their U.S. headquarters, turning down three pretty genuine offers from the publishers? One reason, of course, is that the I.T.U. in Colorado Springs controls the pension fund. This is unfortunate because it is the financial aspects of the situation which seem to be the key to the whole problem. This is a challenge, I imagine, to Canadian unions to produce some type of pension plan which will be satisfactory to the membership and make them independent of forces across the border.

It is not only the C.B.C. which was interested in bringing this aspect of Canadian labour and management relations to the attention of the Canadian public. It is more than interesting and timely to note what the Premier of Quebec said about this arrangement between international unions with headquarters across the line and local unions in Canada. He had some difficulty with legislation regarding pension plans which were controlled on the other side of the border. According to the Ottawa Citizen for July 16, 1964 he said:

> We cannot touch the international unions. There would be a risk of a general strike of all the locals of the international unions in the province until we gave way...
>
> The great misfortune in Quebec province is that strikes by international union locals can never be settled unless the little local pawns received permission by telephone from their bosses in the United States...
> This is the truth. Why bury your head in the sand and refuse to recognize the truth for the truth?

Many of us, Mr. Speaker, have been independent of labour unions and of management, but we feel that the time has come to give some serious study to this whole problem. I do not suppose there is any other country in the world which has its local union with headquarters in a foreign country to the same extent that Canada has. It seems to me that if Canada is going to be able to control its own destiny, promote its own ideas and enjoy its own culture, then something should be done in the not too distant future to make certain that we do achieve a certain amount of independence from our neighbour, friendly though they are. It is for this reason that this bill is brought before this House, simply, as it says in the explanatory note, to keep Canadian those disputes which concern only Canadians.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this bill would amend section 7 of the Immigration Act, which reads as follows:

> The following persons may be allowed to enter and remain in Canada as non-immigrants, namely, persons engaged in a legitimate profession or occupation, or who, having entered are in Canada for the temporary exercise of their respective callings.

The hon. Member would add the following:

> —no person so engaged shall be allowed to enter Canada or to remain in Canada as a non-immigrant where there is a dispute, collective bargaining, lockout or strike, as defined in the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, in the profession, trade or occupation of that person anywhere in Canada.

It seems to me that this is an attempt to use immigration legislation to solve what is essentially a labour problem. From the hon. Member's explanation it seems quite clear that this bill was inspired by the strike against the three Toronto newspapers which began a year ago, and is still unsettled.

[Mr. Ormiston.]

In the course of this strike we allowed the temporary admission or organizers of the International Typographical Union from the United States. Unfortunately this brought about criticism against the three Toronto newspapers involved in the strike as well as some unfavourable comment, on the ground that the American union officials, by their activities and presence in Canada, were prolonging the dispute and preventing a settlement between the publishers and the local union. This is precisely what the hon. Member is trying to convey to the House. At the same time we allowed the admission of a handful of American printers to take on work for the publishers, and this generated more criticism from the union involved.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Our position in respect of the union organizers is clear enough. The Act provides for the temporary admission of such persons and we would no more be justified in refusing their admission than we would be in refusing the admission of consultants to management or key supervisory personnel coming for a specific purpose and period of time.

Moreover, the Act does not provide us with the authority to refuse the admission of these advisers. This bill is apparently designed to overcome that, although in a statement attributed to the hon. Member, as reported in the Toronto Telegram of April 9, 1965, the bill is intended only to "keep out United States union officials seeking to make trouble in Canadian labour disputes".

Our position in respect of the printers is less clear. They applied for permanent admission to take work with the Toronto publishers and were, in all respects, considered eligible for admission under the terms of the Act and the Regulations. The law makes no provision for the exclusion of an immigrant solely on the ground that his prospective place of employment is not to the liking of government, management or labour.

It may be desirable to have such a provision in immigration law, but it is not there now and as a result we are forced to rely on such grounds as lack of visa or other instruments of admission, if we want to refuse a would-be immigrant who is acceptable on all counts except that he is going to work at some job where a strike is in progress. The Immigration Act provides for refusal on these grounds, but their validity has never been tested in the courts; in any event, they are difficult to justify in the public's eye and are themselves a focal point of criticism.

In all these questions the Department of Citizenship and Immigration has tried to maintain a neutral position. We do not hinder the temporary admission of anyone coming in a purely advisory or consultative capacity to labour or management.

Aside from the question of its application to Canadian immigration legislation, the bill has a serious technical defect. It would exclude from Canada any person coming temporarily for any purpose relating to his profession, trade or occupation as long as a labour dispute of any kind existed anywhere in Canada in that person's profession, trade or occupation. This would include technicians coming to repair or service foreign machinery or equipment, administrative personnel, business consultants and professional advisers, whether or not a labour dispute was in progress at the plant or in the area to which they were destined.

There is much to be said on the surface for the proposition that labour-management disputes occurring in Canada, or in the United States for that matter, should be settled in each country without foreign intervention, but a close examination of the facts of industrial life as they have developed over the past 100 years or more does not reveal that this bill can make any contribution to support such a proposition.

There are a large number of transportation operations that run between Canada and the United States, and periodically seniority arrangements compel employees and trade union officials to change their country of residence. In certain circumstances, this bill could prevent such interchange even though there was no connection with a dispute, or collective bargaining, or a strike. There are U.S. rail lines running through southwestern Ontario on which Canadians are employed.

A U.S. railway official could not run into Canada on these lines or on any other rail line running into Canada while a Canadian dispute was in progress, if this bill became law. We would need to station immigration officers in every airport in Canada to turn back air lines personnel, if the international unions they were members of were merely engaged in collective bargaining in Canada.

The hon. Member is mistaken also in supposing that all labour relations advice and guidance that goes both ways across the Canadian and U.S. border through the medium of travelling representatives in "foreign fomentation", would be stopped, as stated in the words of the explanatory note to the bill:

—to prevent foreign fomentation and fermentation of these disputes into test-tube experiments for the benefit of foreign power groups without regard to Canadian employer-employee interests.

Most of this interchange across the border is helpful and constructive and is sought after by employers and trade unions alike, even though for publicity purposes some employers and trade unions in Canada decry the intervention of U.S. unions and companies during disputes. At other times each accepts the fact without question.

Most of the provinces of Canada have somewhat different labour relations and disputes legislation and have mediation services that are designed to deal with disputes. The provisions of this bill would merely add one more complication where enough already exists.

In short, this bill will not achieve its apparent purpose of keeping out of Canada all foreign intervention in Canadian labour troubles. If it is intended to interrupt communication between Canadian and foreign interests during a dispute, a prohibition against the entry of foreign representatives would only be an unfair attitude, since nothing can be done to prevent the exchange of ideas between Canadian and foreign industrial interests and Canadian and foreign labour organizations.

In so far as the actual functions carried out by these representatives are concerned, no doubt persons already in Canada are available, if needed, to perform these functions with the advice and guidance of the foreign interests concerned in the outcome.

I may also add that the immigration White Paper, when presented to Parliament, could result in a complete overhaul of immigration legislation at which time these and all other questions relating to the application of the law would receive the most intensive review to eliminate any deficiencies and inconsistencies which may now exist, and for that reason I would suggest that action on Bill C-12 be not taken at this time.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Mr. M. L. Klein (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I am ready to admit that every sovereign nation wants to emphasize its own independence, but with respect to the question of labour unions we have to consider the whole matter on balance, and on balance there is a definite advantage in having international unions. I think I can best illustrate that by this fact. I am not suggesting that the hon. Member for Melville (Mr. Ormiston) is opposed to labour unions, but the basis of a healthy democracy is a strong and independent labour movement. I do not mean by that that an independent labour union must not have its headquarters in the United States or be open to outside influence.

The hon. Member said that he knows of no other country whose labour unions have their headquarters outside the country. We all know that, in Argentina, Peron used the labour movement for the purpose of suppressing the people. I am of the belief that if there had been international labour unions in Argentina which could have influenced the labour movement of that country, or if there had been international labour unions in the Dominican Republic or even in Cuba, we might not have had the spectacle of Peron, Trujillo and Castro because the international unions would have exerted influence on the labour movements in those countries, which would have kept those countries democratic and would not have allowed dictatorships to rise. This is my viewpoint.

Mr. Ormiston: May I ask the hon. Member a question? Were there democratic labour unions in the European countries when they were taken over by dictators?

Mr. Klein: I do not know which countries the hon. Member is referring to. They had labour unions, but they did not have international labour unions which would have given the local unions the strength to oppose dictatorships. This is the point. It was the international labour unions that carried the fight in democratic countries to see to it that dictators did not take over those countries. It is only in countries where the labour movement is strong that democracy is strong.

Labour unions are the foundation and roots of democracy. If a labour union in our country can be given added strength by having the support of a labour union in the United States where international unions were born, then I am all for it, because I am in favour of a strong labour movement in Canada and in every other democratic country in the world.

Let us examine for a moment the facts of industrial life as they exist in Canada and the United States and as they have developed over the last 100 years. I am sure our findings would not reveal any need for such a bill. Let me give another example of why I think it is important to have these connections with international labour unions. Canada and the United States have probably the highest standard of living in the world but it is becoming increasingly more difficult for us to compete in foreign markets with those nations that do not have strong labour movements controlled internationally, because in those countries slave labour can be engaged with the result that they are able to produce more cheaply the same kind of articles that we produce. In addition, the cost of living is much less in those countries. The result is that it is becoming increasingly more difficult for us to compete in foreign markets with countries where labour unions are not strong.

One can only come to the conclusion that the purpose of the bill runs counter to our economic history and geography and that its provisions are unworkable and indeed unenforceable. In essence it may deprive certain individuals of their basic civil liberties even in excess of the rights denied in the famous Sibley immigration case. For example, it is conceivable that disputes, grievance procedures and collective bargaining could be taking place constantly in such a widespread resource as the forest industry. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should like to repeat what I said at the outset, that international unions have a place in strengthening democracy and they have a place in maintaining the competitive market that Canada and the United States are so sorely in need of throughout the world.

May I call it seven o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private Members' business has now expired. Pursuant to agreement reached earlier this day the House will now revert to motions.

• (7:00 p.m.)

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON REPORT OF DORION COMMISSION

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the House for reverting to motions so I can make a short statement on the matter which I mentioned this afternoon in tabling what is now known as the Dorion report. Normally, Mr. Speaker, after receipt of a report of a royal commission which has been examining matters involving questions of policy or controversy, a government may take some days or even weeks to examine the recommendations or conclusions before having the report publicly released, so that the government at the time of release may give an indication of its own policy in respect of these recommendations or conclusions when that policy has been decided. In the case of the present report, however, it was not submitted to the Government until my return from the Conference of Commonwealth Prime Ministers at 7.40 last night. It was placed before the Cabinet for its information at a meeting at eleven o'clock this morning.

Because of the very great interest in this matter and the degree to which Parliament very properly feels concerned over the conclusions that the Commissioner has reached, the Government felt that the report should be released immediately, and it was for that reason I tabled the report this afternoon. Because of the speed with which action has been taken, the House will understand that the Government has not had an opportunity fully to consider what action it should take with regard to all the conclusions that have been reached by the Commissioner.

Pending this further consideration, after which an announcement will be made, I should like to remind the House at once that the Commissioner in his report has given the opinion that there is prima facie evidence of an offence under the Criminal Code in one case; and conspiracy to obstruct the course of justice in certain others.

The Government has today referred these conclusions to the Deputy Minister of Justice with instructions to examine them at once and advise what action with respect to criminal proceedings should be taken.

There is one other matter arising out of these developments which I wish to announce to the House. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) this morning submitted his resignation to me. After discussing the matter twice with him, I have no course but to advise His Excellency to accept it. I do so with very deep regret.

My hon. friend remains a man and a Minister of unimpeachable integrity—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —and unsullied honour. He is a devoted and unselfish servant of Canada and of his own province. He entered political life only because he was persuaded—and I had something to do with the persuasion—that he could make a contribution to his country's unity and welfare.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: I have, therefore, asked him to continue that contribution by considering the acceptance of another post in the administration which would be offered to him. He has written me on this point as follows, and perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I may conclude by reading his letter which I received just a few moments ago:

My Dear Prime Minister:

Since our talk this morning when my offer of resignation was discussed, I have given very serious consideration to your request, supported by our colleagues, that I continue in the Government.

As I have already stated to you, it is my view that the conclusions of the report, as far as I am concerned, are tantamount to no more than a statement on the part of the Commissioner that, had he been in my place, he would have exercised his discretion in a different fashion.

I wish to repeat that my resignation was tendered, not out of a feeling that I had done anything wrong, but because of the feeling that my usefulness as Minister of Justice had been impaired by the situation which has developed.

I need not say how deeply moved I am at the confidence which you, Mr. Prime Minister, and my colleagues have shown me in suggesting that I carry on.

Therefore, while I must insist that my resignation be accepted as Minister of Justice, I would be willing to continue to serve in some other capacity.

May I take this occasion to say how very grateful I am for your kindness and consideration and for your unfailing support during difficult and, at times, even cruel days.

Yours faithfully
Guy Favreau.

Mr. Speaker, that is the statement which I wish to make to the House at this time on motions, and after further consideration has been given to the conclusions of the report, as I have said there will be further statements to be made by the Government.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, we have listened to the announcement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) with interest, and I with a degree of personal regret.

One of the concomitants of political life, particularly in the case of Ministers of the Crown, is that those Ministers who are by selection entrusted with the high degree of responsibility which they have to discharge, must discharge that responsibility with an accuracy of judgment and an unimpeachability which can never be questioned.

The administration of departments such as those of—and I select these at random—Fisheries, Industry, Agriculture, perhaps Northern Affairs, do not carry that same high degree of responsibility that the portfolio of Justice does. The government of the day, whichever government it is, cannot expect the continued absolute confidence of the people of this country unless there is that absoluteness of confidence in the administration of justice in Canada.

One only has to place oneself in the shoes of an ordinary citizen when reading the report of Mr. Justice Dorion to come to the conclusion that serious doubts exist as to the ability of the present Minister to carry on in that portfolio. I find this personally regrettable because I find myself in agreement with the words of the Prime Minister, where he has made reference to the honour and integrity of the Minister concerned. But having said that, the portfolio of Justice is no place for any individual occupying that portfolio to have any lack of judgment such as that which would cast doubt on the administration of justice in Canada.

I think the course the Minister has followed is the only honourable one he could follow, and the course of the Prime Minister in accepting that resignation and making the recommendation to the Governor General that he intends to make, is the only course which he could follow.

The Minister has my commiseration in that I believe his own Prime Minister let him down seriously in the conduct of his responsibilities in the portfolio he occupied.

• (7:10 p.m.)

The report of Mr. Justice Dorion is nothing less than a serious blot on public life in Canada because it not only affects the Minister of Justice in the manner in which the Prime Minister has expressed, but it affects others in public office. It affects the hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau), about whom the Commissioner had some very pertinent observations to make, observations which if made in terms of broader terms of reference might have carried more serious consequences indeed in terms of his findings. I imagine this is one of the considerations the Government will have in mind when giving further thought to what should be done.

I take no particular relish—indeed, I take none—in the product of the report of Mr. Justice Dorion. When on November 23, I first raised this matter in the House I did so because I thought it was my responsibility to do so. Members will forgive me if I recall to their minds the comments, not too kindly, from the other side of the House accusing me of a smear, innuendo and MacCarthyism when I was placing these serious matters before hon. Members—matters which have now been given the official sanction of finding by an honoured and able Justice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: It is an emotional moment for me, and it makes me rather sad to think of the image the administration of justice in this country must have because of the events which have transpired. I cannot refrain from mentioning here the conclusions of Mr. Justice Dorion with respect to Mr. Letendre, who has continued in office throughout the investigation and who, I understand, still continues in office, and whose conduct was described by Mr. Justice Dorion as reprehensible. It seems to me that the least decision the Government could reach, and forthwith, is that Mr. Letendre should be suspended from any further connection with the Department of Justice. He is a gentleman who now has access to secret, top secret and confidential files. Having regard to the conclusions made in regard to him by Mr. Justice Dorion it seems the Government should have made an announcement tonight that the services of this gentleman are terminated forthwith.

I might also express at this moment my personal satisfaction with respect to the findings of Mr. Justice Dorion regarding the conduct of Mr. Lord, conduct which I described on November 23 as that of an innocent dupe. This is borne out by the findings of the Commissioner. I believe the immediate course of the Government in referring the recommendations of the Commissioner with respect to the finding of a prima facie case against certain involved individuals and of the recommendation for the laying of information under the conspiracy sections of the Criminal Code—the reference of these matters to the Deputy Minister of Justice—is one which should have been taken in the first instance. No doubt now that the able and talented officers of the department, have been given the green light to bring their talents to bear on these matters, the appropriate conclusions will be arrived at.

As the Prime Minister has said, between the production of the report at 2.30 and the present moment, very little time has elapsed in which to study these findings. The Official Opposition has had even less time than the Government to consider its ramifications. It is therefore not possible to make recommendations in full as to all the conclusions which have been reached by Mr. Justice Dorion. But no doubt we shall have further observations to make when announcements are made by the Prime Minister on this subject in due course.

My last remaining comment on this whole matter has to do with a question which was introduced into the inquiry by the side door, as it were. It affects one individual who had given 14 years of devoted service to the Government and another who was his assistant in the Indian Affairs branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. I speak of Mr. William Grant and Mr. Joseph Armishaw. Mr. Grant and his trial have been the subject of editorials in the western press. Mr. Armishaw, I am informed, was acquitted last week of charges of forgery laid against him. I think I can find no better comment to recommend the services of these two devoted civil servants to the administration than that uttered by the Supreme Court Justice who tried both these cases when he said, in the case of Grant: "If I were in Grant's shoes I only wish I had the courage to do as he did."

I urge the Government to reconsider both these cases, since they seem to have been involved with the raising of the matters which gave rise to this inquiry in the first place. I am not attributing any motives whatsoever in this respect, but I suggest to the Government that amends must be made to these civil servants in order that justice may be done.

Mr. Munro: Would the hon. Member permit a question?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Munro: I just wonder whether the hon. Member would permit a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There are no questions permitted at this time.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): The report of Chief Justice Dorion which we have just read, or seen, reveals in our opinion a very grave situation, and the Prime Minister has failed so far to discuss in any way the serious implications of the report. I hope that before this part of the session is over we shall be given a detailed account of just what is to be done about this situation.

The fundamental fact is that the Commissioner has accepted the evidence of Mr. Lamontagne that he was offered a bribe of $20,000 by the executive assistant to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in order to influence him to consent to bail for one Rivard, whose extradition was sought by the Government of the United States on narcotics charges. The key sentence of the report is to be found at page 11:

> He (Mr. Lamontagne) there met Mr. Denis who offered him a sum of $20,000.00 if he would agree to have Rivard released on bail, pointing out that the Liberal Party would receive a substantial amount should such bail be granted.

In other words, to put it plainly, organized international crime was able in Canada, as it has done in so many other parts of the world, to reach into the circles of Government in order to pervert justice with bribery and corruption.

Perhaps the most serious question of all which faces this House is the adequacy of the reaction of those primarily responsible for the administration of justice. The report of the Commission has freed the Minister of Justice from any imputation of personal impropriety. As far as I know, no one has ever suggested there was any personal impropriety on his part. I want to say that many Members of this House, including some on this side, will have heard of his resignation with a great deal of personal regret. We have admired both his courtesy and his integrity.

• (7:20 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: But, Mr. Speaker, in our opinion it would have been quite impossible for the Minister to have taken any other course than that which he has taken, and quite impossible for the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to have taken any other course than to accept the resignation presented to him. I do not think this would be a proper occasion to go into the points that we might have chosen to make if we had not heard of this resignation tonight. I do not intend to do that. I think one thing has to be pointed out, though, that is not part of this report and which is one of the most extraordinary things, in my view. It is the fact that the hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau), Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister of Canada, was known by the Minister of Justice to be implicated. Indeed, at one stage the officers of the R.C.M.P. reported that they believed the Member for Dollard to be the kingpin in the whole sorry mess. Although this view was not supported by the evidence, and I notice that it was not found by the Commissioner to be so, the Commissioner has nevertheless found that the hon. Member for Dollard attempted to influence Mr. Lamontagne with a view to securing Rivard's release on bail and this, the Commissioner said, constituted a reprehensible act. The Minister of Justice was fully informed of the details of the involvement of the Member for Dollard, and it appears that not a word was said to the Prime Minister, whose Parliamentary Secretary the Member for Dollard was. We find this failure to be quite incredible. Surely the Minister of Justice owed it to his senior colleague to tell him of the implication in a matter of this sort of the Prime Minister's own Parliamentary Secretary, and to tell him promptly and fully.

I do not choose to go into other aspects of the matter at this time, because they are in the report which we have here, and it is not our intention to castigate the Minister in any way—that is out of place at this time. But, Mr. Speaker, it must be remembered that this was no ordinary matter of routine dealing with the criminal law. The allegations involved persons intimately associated with the process of government. An executive assistant such as Mr. Denis was clearly in a position, as confidential adviser and close associate of his Minister, to make important decisions. He appears to have been a young man with many important political connections. Mr. Denis was able to introduce another political associate, one Mr. Masson, to other executive assistants. This associate of Mr. Denis is described by the Commissioner on page 64 of his report as coming into the game perfectly willingly, surmising in all probability that he stood to gain a very substantial reward, and decided to exploit his relationship with Mr. Denis to the full. In these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada and this House are entitled to expect that the Prime Minister will take vigorous and determined action.

The evidence indicates the view of the Commissioner that there was a prima facie case against Mr. Denis of a criminal act, namely the offering of a bribe to obstruct the course of justice. What action is to be taken on that? We would like to hear the answer. The Commissioner's report indicates that the Member for Dollard while a Member of this House was guilty of a reprehensible act which was in conflict with the normal course of justice. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to page 109 of the Commissioner's report, where he is dealing with the memorandum of Inspector Reed of the R.C.M.P. which said:

> It would appear Letendre, Lord and Denis were all approached by Mr. Guy Rouleau, M.P., to make representation on behalf of Rivard so the latter could be released on bail. It appears Rouleau's brother may have approached him to see if he (the M.P.) could influence any persons in the Government with respect to the release of Rivard on bail. On the basis of our enquiries to date, we can only show this, and such an approach is not unusual in political circles.

Those words "and such an approach is not unusual in political circles" are underlined in the report of the Commissioner, quoting Inspector Reed. The Commissioner goes on to make this comment:

> If it is true that representations such as those made to Mr. Lamontagne are not exceptional in political circles, it is impossible to admit that when such representations are made with a view to obstruct the course of justice, they should be either permitted or tolerated.

If I may add a comment, Mr. Speaker, I would say that politics is indeed in a sorry state when senior police officers accept as a matter of course that improper political interference may be made in the affairs of the administration of justice.

What action is to be taken, then, in respect of the Member for Dollard? I think we will want to know the answer to this question. The evidence, again, indicates that in the view of the Commissioner a group of witnesses, namely Mrs. Rivard, Eddy Lechasseur, Robert Gignac and Guy Masson, conspired to obstruct the course of justice. What action is to be taken against these people? I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this report will have to be studied very carefully to see whether all is well in the higher levels of the R.C.M.P. It would appear that the Commissioner had serious doubts as to whether the advice apparently given to the Minister of Justice by the Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of the R.C.M.P. was adequate, or the inquiries as vigorous and effective as they ought to have been.

All in all, Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada will not be satisfied, and this Parliament should not be satisfied, with anything less than full and vigorous action by the Prime Minister in respect of every aspect of this report. The people of Canada will not be satisfied to have the resignation of the Minister of Justice treated as a sort of sacrificial offering which makes it unnecessary to deal further with these matters. The system which produced this unhappy mess requires radical revision.

• (7:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, the members of our party regret that the Dorion report has brought about the resignation of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) who, by his noble gesture, has recognized that politics does not allow any margin for error. We hope, however, that other members who, in my opinion, are a lot more guilty, will do likewise and I will not hesitate to mention, among others, the chief commissioner of the R.C.M.P. who has made gross mistakes during the inquiry which has produced the report on this scandal. I will not name all the officers under his supervision who would deserve the same fate, but it is easy to suspect all the others who are condemned by the Dorion report.

It seems, when reading this report, that everyone made mistakes in this matter, beginning with the Minister of Justice, including the chief commissioner of the R.C.M.P., down to the guard at the Bordeaux jail.

One can hardly require that human beings never make mistakes and I think that in politics it must be recognized that, in similar circumstances, a mistake results in such disastrous consequences. We are satisfied that charges will be laid against the culprits, against those who committed perjury, against those who performed their duties improperly or exerted undue influence, and we shall wait anxiously for the outcome of those charges.

However, we must point out that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who started all this, does not seem very honest by failing to pay tribute to hon. René Tremblay who was entirely exonerated from blame. The Dorion report states textually:

> Evidence shows that the conduct of Mr. Tremblay is absolutely beyond reproach.

And yet, if I remember rightly, the first attacks were made expressly against that minister who also had the courage to resign when he felt that his reputation was in danger. The hon. Member for Yukon would have been well advised to quote the good words Mr. Justice Dorion had about the people mentioned in this report. Allow me to mention among other things the following conclusion:

> The Minister of Justice was justified, at that time, in believing that a charge laid against a person or persons involved would have been difficult to prove before the courts.

I mention this fact because the hon. Member for Yukon himself, when he made those charges, made insinuations; yet he had the same information as the Minister of Justice because he had the same file, and he dared not make charges himself, he simply made innuendos.

I say that because in his conclusions, Justice Dorion complains that his powers were not broad enough. I have personally asked in the house for broader terms of reference for the Dorion royal commission so that it could find out the sources of the hon. Member for Yukon. In my opinion, the administration of justice is quite an important matter and it must be above suspicion at all levels. If we cannot be assured that secret investigations made by the R.C.M.P. will not fall into the hands of anyone at any time I believe that it is of the utmost importance to hold an inquiry as soon as possible to determine where the hon. Member for Yukon got that information.

If such information can cause a minister, a member of parliament or a senior official to resign, then I think the people are entitled to know how the said information, causing such serious damage, leaked. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out since the Dorion inquiry started, newspapers have always had information which the Members of the house did not have and which, today, are found to be true, because they coincide with the conclusions of the Dorion inquiry report.

I think the government should make an investigation in order to find out how such information could be divulged before we knew about it.

In conclusion, I wish to say that we are satisfied with the steps which the government proposes to take in order to correct what has to be corrected.

Following this report I should like to draw to the attention of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the cabinet that the French language is treated in a most revolting way within the R.C.M.P. and that reforms should be undertaken within that organization, considering the attitude taken by its officers toward the French language.

• (7:40 p.m.)

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to congratulate Mr. Justice Dorion for his report drafted in an intelligent, impartial, brief and precise manner. I believe Mr. Justice Dorion deserves the congratulations of the house for the manner in which he discharged his duties and prepared the report which is being tabled today.

Then, I would also like to quote an extract from Mr. Justice Dorion's report, on page 137, concerning the Postmaster General (Mr. Tremblay) which states:

> Evidence shows that the conduct of Mr. Tremblay is absolutely beyond reproach.

I believe that this deserves to be mentioned, and especially after the numerous innuendoes made in the past in this connection. I should like particularly to refer to the last sentence on this page:

Dorion Commission

If Hon. R. Tremblay has suffered consequences from statements or certain published comments, it is to be hoped that the persons responsible will now recognize his honesty and integrity.

Mr. Speaker, I still remember, because it struck me, the question directed to him by the hon. member for Yukon, namely:

"Where were you on the 14th of August, at 8.30"?

That was a bit strong.

Mr. Robichaud: It was dirty.

Mr. Grégoire: I expected that the member for Yukon would be the first to mention the following words:

—it is to be hoped that the persons responsible—

This being said, let us deal with another matter. The most striking thing in this report is that the international underworld has succeeded in worming its way even within the federal government. That is most disturbing for those who uphold justice and legality.

How could members of the underworld manage to find their way into the very waiting rooms of our ministers, without the latter knowing about it? The matter is serious indeed, and I feel that upon reading the Dorion report the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) should order a complete inquiry, to straighten things out.

It is easy to see—it is obvious right through the evidence—that the electoral funds of the Liberal Party, which on two occasions was able to pay high amounts for advertisement on television or through other media, has been fed too long a time by members of the international underworld. Today we have proof of this. And what is serious is that upon perusal of the findings of the Dorion inquiry, we find that too many members of the underworld have infiltrated the party through the electoral funds, and I am wondering whether the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) is not entirely right when he condemns this attitude and whether his colleagues of the Liberal party should not listen to him a little more than they do at present, and that for the benefit of the Liberal party and of all Canadians.

The former Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Rouleau), perhaps out of näivety, maybe without full knowledge of the facts or simply in order to do a service to his constituents, did certain things but I am of the opinion that in matters of this kind, one has to be cautious.

I now come to the case of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau). He made a tour of my constituency over the week end to organize the Liberal party, but that did not bother me too much. However, I was very affected when I learned he had tendered his resignation and that it had been accepted.

Like many of my colleagues in this house, I am of the opinion that the Minister of Justice was one of the most sympathetic members, and as I have already stated on television, on the French network of the C.B.C., I would not hesitate to grant him a certificate of integrity and honesty. In fact, I still have no hesitation to do so.

He may have acted in this way because he had too many occupations. It has been mentioned that he was the parliamentary leader of his party and party organizer for the province of Quebec. This gave him too much work and he lacked the time to look after everything. Anyway, through an unhappy turn of events, he has handed in his resignation and it has been accepted.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am immensely sorry, as I had a deep liking for the Minister of Justice. I should like to be considered as one of his friends and I deeply regret his resignation.

Mr. Speaker, I would say that he is not necessarily the one who is responsible. Eight or nine months ago—and the Minister of Justice is witness to what I am now saying—indeed, before all this happened, I told him that the R.C.M.P. wanted his head and that they would have it. They have been successful, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, in reading the findings of this report, one notes everywhere that if the Minister of Justice has acted the way he did, it is because he was ill-advised and ill-directed by the R.C.M.P. We can find evidence of that everywhere in the report. It is stated on page 127 of the English version that when the R.C.M.P. presented the file on September 18, it was not even complete. We can also read the following:

On the other hand, he had not read Mrs. Pierre Lamontagne's statement. Neither had he read the highly important reports of Inspector Drapeau on his interviews with Mr. Denis. He had not seen the reports on the interrogations of Masson, Gignac, Mr. Raymond Rouleau, lawyers Daoust and Cohen. Nor had he read another most important report, dated September 3, prepared by Inspector Reed.

Consequently, on September 18, the minister did not have sufficient knowledge of the file to reach the proper decision and he was under the impression that the R.C.M.P. officers had explained to him all the facts that were relevant to the case.

And on September 18, the Minister of Justice was asked to take a decision. But the R.C.M.P. had not even provided him with all the facts.

The Minister of Justice is the victim of the R.C.M.P.'s doings. That is why I repeat what I told him, eight or nine months ago: They wanted his head and they got it.

How many times did we not note the R.C.M.P.'s doings during the whole course of the inquiry? In my opinion, this fact has to be noted in connection with the report.

For instance, many of you will be taken aback by what appears on page 103 of the report:

> Superintendent Fraser was asked whether, at the the time he decided to appoint sergeant McLeod to conduct the investigation and later to assist inspector Drapeau, he would not have thought it wiser to have appointed a bilingual officer since most of the persons to be interrogated were French speaking. His reply is worth noting: "I never gave it a thought".

We then read the judge's comment:

> Not only the reply itself, but the manner in which it was given shows an offhand attitude which is certainly not to be expected from a senior officer of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. He certainly gave the impression that he was a man to whom the French speaking population of Canada are a negligible factor.

The judge goes on commenting the appointment of inspector Drapeau:

> This was an excellent choice, for it has been shown that inspector Drapeau had all the qualifications needed for the post he holds and there is no doubt that had he had complete freedom of action, as we shall see later, the results would have been quite different.

It is clear that the Minister of Justice could have taken another decision and that today, he would not be in serious trouble as he is now.

On page 104 of the report, it is said:

> The subsequent decision to appoint sergeant McLeod as assistant to inspector Drapeau was not a fortunate decision either. How could sergeant McLeod have corroborated statements, made by French speaking persons to inspector Drapeau in the course of an interrogation if he did not understand French? The fact he is unilingual does not in any way affect sergeant McLeod's efficiency, but since a decision was being taken to appoint an assistant to the inspector, obviously the person appointed had to be able to understand what was stated in the course of the interrogations. Moreover, commissioner McClellan frankly admitted that sergeant McLeod could not give evidence in a court because he does not speak French.

I will read a little further to show that throughout that investigation, which took place during August and September, before the R.C.M.P. submitted its report to the Minister of Justice, the report prepared was not clear enough to enable the minister to take a decision. I quote another paragraph from page 105 of the report:

> Inspector Drapeau told our commission that under ordinary circumstances, when an officer is charged with the conduct of an investigation, he plans his interviews and his interrogations on his own initiative. But in this case, he said (translation) "I went nowhere without first requesting permission from Ottawa because this was not an ordinary case—

This is what happened, Mr. Speaker. And here is what Mr. Justice Dorion says of some conclusions of the report submitted by Inspector Reed, in which the latter seems to say that there was no way to establish proper evidence:

> Inspector Reed seems to have forgotten a rule of evidence which we are obliged to apply daily in the courts; where the version given by one witness is contradicted by the version given by another witness, obviously, we must have recourse to circumstantial evidence to determine where the truth lies and frequently that circumstantial evidence constitutes a much more convincing proof of what actually occurred than are testimonies given by witnesses, particularly where the witnesses have an interest at stake in the litigation.

But there is no mention of that in Inspector Reed's report.

Mr. Speaker, I say and I repeat that the conduct of the R.C.M.P. in all that was the first element which prompted the Minister of Justice to make a false or erroneous decision.

On page 111 of the English version of the report, Judge Dorion says:

> The R.C.M.P. investigation might have been conducted with a great deal more celerity. More than a month elapsed—between August 14 and September 18—in completing the interrogation of several of the parties involved. It is obvious that all of these interviews could have been conducted much more swiftly and with a higher degree of security. Obviously, this delay enabled some parties involved to get in touch with one another before they were interrogated.

And we read on page 112 what Judge Dorion says when the R.C.M.P. report was handed to the Minister of Justice on September 18:

> On that occasion, the complete R.C.M.P. file was handed to the minister. The only missing element in the file at that time was the report on the interview with Mr. Guy Rouleau, which had taken place on the previous day, but the commissioner gave the minister a substantial summary of it.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, we can say that the R.C.M.P. has a large share of responsibility in everything that is happening today.

In closing, the Prime Minister says the report will be studied by the deputy minister of justice in order to assess the responsibilities. Well, I maintain that one of the main responsibilities must rest with the R.C.M.P. and Commissioner McClellan. Because they have made this investigation without due consideration and they have handed to the Minister of Justice a report that was not complete and did not permit him to make a wise decision in the circumstances.

I will now read an excerpt from page 119 of the Dorion report:

During the course of our inquiry, we also took note of a method used in their work by the R.C.M.P. which leaves much to be desired. French speaking inspectors question people in French and then have to draft their reports, for the attention of their senior officers, in the English language. This method may have very serious consequences. First of all, as we found during the course of the inquiry, the method leads to errors from which the person interrogated suffers; this method enables anyone who has been questioned in French by the R.C.M.P. to claim, when an attempt is made to point out contradictions when he is again interrogated, that what he said to the R.C.M.P. was not properly translated.

On page 120, one can also read:

It is only fair, in this regard, to point out a statement made by commissioner McClellan at the end of his testimony:

"A. There is no directive that I know of but—and I want to be quite clear on this so that there will be no misunderstanding—the working language of the force is English."

. . . evidence of commissioner McClellan, quoted by the commissioner, Mr. Justice Dorion.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Grégoire: There are fanatics in that corner, in the Conservative corner, to be more accurate, those who say "Right", but I believe that the house as a whole does not accept that.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I was saying at the outset: For eight or nine months now—and we are aware of that because we heard about it, and I feel this is very serious—the R.C.M.P. has been after the head of the Minister of Justice. Today, it is the duty of the Prime Minister, if the feelings he expressed a moment ago with regard to the Minister of Justice are really sincere, to look into the doings of the R.C.M.P. in that case. I think also that it is his duty to inquire into the activities of some of his members—the Dorion report named one but there are others—who are too closely related to big financiers who subscribe to the electoral funds, members who are more interested in obtaining funds than in serving their riding. An investigation within the Liberal party is imperative in that respect because, there are many of them.

To conclude, and I believe it is a proper way to do so, I want to express once again my sympathy, my respect and my admiration for the Minister of Justice, saying once again that I do not believe he is so much responsible; it is rather the R.C.M.P. with which he was not firm enough while there was still time.

• (7:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The House will now revert to the business that was being considered at six o'clock.

INDUSTRY

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF DEVELOPMENT GRANTS IN DESIGNATED AREAS

The House resumed consideration in Committee of the following resolution—Mr. Drury—Mr. Batten in the Chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the payment of development grants to assist the establishment of new manufacturing or processing facilities and the expansion of existing manufacturing or processing facilities in order to improve industrial employment opportunities in designated areas in Canada; for this purpose to establish in the Consolidated Revenue Fund an Area Development Account to which shall be credited an intial amount of fifty million dollars; and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act concerning the definition of a manufacturing or processing business and the application of section 71A of that Act in any case where a development grant has been authorized to be paid under the said measure.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, at six o'clock I had reached the point in the presentation I wish to make to the House where I had commended the Minister and the Government by virtue of the fact that for the first time in the legislative history of this country they have taken pervasive methods to encourage the decentralization of industry or, more specifically in economic terms, to encourage industry to locate in areas of high unemployment and a low rate of growth of employment. At the same time I suggested that it was impossible in one fell swoop to determine criteria which would effectually and perfectly determine which areas (a) could sustain industrial growth usefully and economically and (b) which areas would acquire that industrial growth by virtue of the use of incentives.

In saying this, Mr. Chairman, I do not think I am being in any way critical of the Government's policy in this regard. I think they took a giant step in the first instance. It was not perfection in one fell swoop but certainly it was a giant step in the right direction. It is my hope, as I am sure it is that of all Members who support wholeheartedly this legislation and the motivations behind it, that as time evolves we will devise a more perfect method of finding the proper areas which should receive incentives and thus contribute not only to the growth of those areas but to the general health of the Canadian economy.

I would point out that the hon. Member for Wellington South, who spoke for the Official Opposition on this matter, spoke with a forked tongue as the Official Opposition so often does. I wrote down his words verbatim, I believe. I understand he is the official spokesman for the Official Opposition on matters of industry. At one stage he said, "We are in favour of the principle of this legislation", but with the other side of his tongue he said, "We are against grants". He also said they are against the federal Government entering this field and that it should be left to the municipalities and provinces.

• (8:00 p.m.)

I do not know whether he is for or against. He is walking up both sides of the road at once, but I think the position of the Official Opposition in this regard should be made crystal clear. Unless it is refuted by some higher authority than the alleged official spokesman, the hon. Member for Wellington South, then the people of Canada, and of Ontario in particular, can take it that the Official Opposition is against this type of legislation which will lead to the decentralization of industry.

I take it that the hon. Member for Wellington South has put his party on record as being for the continuation of centralization of industry in Ontario and in the Dominion generally. Such being the case, we see here a very distinct division between the Government and the Official Opposition, because through these policies we are clearly on record as favouring the decentralization of industry and the location of industry in designated depressed areas.

Another spokesman for the Official Opposition, the hon. Member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot mumbled something about patronage and political motivation behind this legislation. Mr. Chairman, this is another area where the Official Opposition, in their ill-fated days in office, timidly dunked their toes into the waters of potential decentralization of industry, but apart from a lot of political jargon and big talk, accomplished very little.

I would point out that the very limited incentives they provided, which incidentally proved just as ineffective as their administration generally, were by way of double depreciation or speeded up depreciation, and were entirely inadequate. The ill-founded plan which they adopted just did not work. But as is customary with that party, they made sure that whatever they were doing was politically well founded and that the pork barrel principle would be foremost in this legislation, even through it did not work. The legislation was so ill-conceived that not even the pork barrel would work.

Mr. Starr: Keep that up and you will be here until July the 10th.

Mr. Greene: There were no specific criteria that the government of that day used in propounding the depressed area formula. It was purely and simply a Cabinet decision. I can think of no more effective pork barrel than that, that the Cabinet in its great wisdom—and Lord knows it had little in those days—could decide what areas qualified. If the government of that day decided that a particular community or a particular application merited designation, then for any reason it pleased it could designate that area for double depreciation. If that is not good, practical, pragmatic politics I do not know what is, because obviously it could make the designation purely and simply by reason of the fact that some good Tories had applied for designation. There were no rules, so let us not have the hon. Member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot get up on his high horse and talk about political motivation and political practices in this legislation. The legislation his government passed was pragmatically political, but unfortunately so ill-conceived that it was of no earthly use.

I commend the present Government for using economic motivations in the legislation it has presented. The hon. Member for Wellington South takes umbrage at the fact that this legislation in some fashion resembles legislation passed south of the border. Well, Mr. Chairman, if it is in the best interests of the people of Canada, and specifically in the best interests of my constituents, I do not care whether it resembles legislation passed in Mozambique. I am very pleased to have it on the legislative record of this Government.

Maybe the hon. Member for Wellington South has not heard, but if I listened correctly to the views of the Leader of the Opposition on the Viet Nam crisis, he is now solidly pro-American. Maybe the hon. Member has not kept up with the gyrations of his leader on this issue. It seems communications over there are not too good, and the hon. Member for Wellington South is still anti-American in his economic views, even though his leader is now strongly pro-American in his views on foreign affairs. I reiterate that so far as I am concerned I do not think it matters who thought of it first. The only question should be, is it in the best interests of our people?

Again the hon. Member for Wellington South raises the old bogey of encroachment upon private enterprise. What a sacred Tory song this has been over the years. It is the same song the traditional Tories raised when children were taken out of the coal mines. They said it was an encroachment upon private enterprise, and it seems to me when they abolished capital punishment for stealing a loaf of bread or a shilling, the good old Tories said, "My goodness, what an encroachment on private enterprise." It is nice to see that the hon. Member for Wellington South, their official spokesman in the sophisticated area of industry, is still singing that same old Tory song, that it is an encroachment on private enterprise.

If this legislation will contribute to the equalization of economic opportunities across this land, if it will mean there will be far less of second class citizens economically across this land, whereby second class citizens have less social and educational opportunity, then if it is an encroachment upon private enterprise it is a proper encroachment upon it.

It has been the history of this party that we have been able to choose and to discriminate between improper encroachments and encroachments which were in the public interest. For that reason, over the years since the industrial revolution, this party has had the support not only of the people generally but of those who believe in the private system of economic production.

I would like to speak for a moment on the question of the selection of the areas to be chosen for these incentives. I have said as forcibly as I can that the general aim and purpose of the legislation are admirable. Surely anyone who has been in these unfortunate areas, which have not shared in the growth of this land, cannot doubt that legislation of this type was badly needed. I have seen areas in this land, some in my own constituency, where wages were as low as 85 cents an hour within the last two years. This may be inconceivable to those who live in the great golden horseshoe of the metropolitan area in this province, but it is a fact.

[Mr. Greene.]

I have seen many areas where, because of lack of assessment, children up to the age of entering high school were in one room, from kindergarten right up, and under one teacher. Surely to goodness, in a land that last year had the second highest per capita income in the world, this is not good enough. I have seen areas where there is no high school and no possibility of children going to high school because the assessment would not support a high school.

• (8:10 p.m.)

I should not have to say more.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Greene: Members who have studied these problems are in general support of this legislation. I can see a number across the way. There are Tory members who are apparently not riding the ancient horse of free enterprise at any price but who support the principle of this legislation. The question is the definition whereby these areas will be designated. I think no one disagrees with the hon. Member for Waterloo South who urged that this legislation should be made on economic principles. It would be the height of folly to locate industry by offering financial incentives in a place where it would perish after the incentives had been withdrawn. There is no point in locating industry in the middle of a wilderness. But in these days of rapid communications people in my part of the country would be happy to travel 20 or 30 miles a day to work, if they could find work within that distance. There are obvious growth centres, and growth must be accentuated within those growth centres. Whatever formula is involved it must take account of these centres, which will bring in the people from areas of high unemployment, low income and slow rates of growth.

The Chairman: I have to interrupt the hon. Member. His time has expired.

Mr. Starr: He is making a very good speech, even though we don't agree with it. I think he should continue.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that the hon. Member may continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Starr: Go ahead. Take as long as you like.

Mr. Greene: I thank the hon. Member for Ontario for his courtesy. I will not be too long.

The original criteria certainly did the job to some extent, and the legislation marked a bold first step. It is my hope, with the experience the officials of the department have had, that a more meaningful set of criteria can be developed, criteria which will make it possible for smaller pockets which are currently lagging behind the general economic development of a province, to make economic progress.

A new theory with respect to these incentives may be brought into being at this time. I agree it is almost impossible to find a set of criteria to provide a perfect answer. But I do believe there should be some distinction, and I will make my point in this way: In the area I have the honour to represent and, in particular, in the great part of the constituency of South Renfrew there used to be a prosperous and economically sound lumbering industry. It has now been largely cleared. The people living there are able. They are self-sufficient, or they would not have survived for as long as they have. They do not have the highly sophisticated skills which are required in the metropolitan centres today, but there is no question about their ability to support useful economic growth. Industries which located there in the past have proved to be among the most efficient, the most productive and the most lasting in our entire economy. The productivity of these people has been proved.

While the over-all problem is the problem applicable to great areas such as the Maritime Provinces, the difficulty is to find a set of standards in a generally rich province such as Ontario which will be applicable to those small pockets where help is so badly needed. I do not look upon this as a handout. Consider the hundreds of millions we are pouring into urban redevelopment in the great metropolitan cities to remedy the problems created by growth over the years. Communications in these centres cost a great deal—subways, highways, throughways on top of all this. And soon we will need parachutes to ride on the top layer of the highways. A lot of public money is being spent in these areas.

In the area I speak of, our natural resources have been exploited; not manufactured on the spot but removed for use and manufacture in the metropolitan centres. Water resources, the natural asset of these people, have been taken away for use in the large metropolitan cities, and hydro rates are far higher near the sources of power than they are in the metropolis itself. I do not think these people are looking for handouts; they are looking for economic justice. I grant that the brigands—I am talking about the removal of hydro and natural resources—were not federal brigands but provincial brigands. More enlightened provinces provided for processing at the source, but in this case it was the province which took away from these people the natural assets which the good Lord had given them. I think it is a fine thing that the federal Government has seen fit to take steps which would give some measure of economic justice to these areas and, as I have said before, it may be that as a result of their experience the departmental officials will be able to work out a formula whereby designation might be made of these large areas which obviously need assistance, while at the same time being flexible enough to provide assistance in areas of the Ottawa Valley and similar areas which, possibly, are in no need of the long term aid which is required in the case of the Maritimes.

Many of us have worked for years to encourage industry to take root in the area of which I speak. Competition for industrial development is keen, today. The difference between an area getting an industry and not getting one can be very slight. A nudge will decide the issue one way or another. These capital grants are likely to prove an effective incentive. And, of course, of what use are incentives unless they are effective? There is little point in providing incentives, such as double depreciation allowances, if industry is not interested in them. But even when incentives were far less effective than they are now likely to be, areas such as those I have in mind found it difficult to attract new industries in competition with those to which some assistance was provided. If they are placed further behind, because other industries will get grants while they cannot, they will be condemned for all times to be second class citizens, and I am sure the Government would not wish this to happen.

• (8:20 p.m.)

In the Ottawa Valley and in the west end of the riding of South Renfrew, of which I speak in particular, I think the natural growth centre is the Town of Renfrew. This is within 30 miles of most of the highly depressed area. Industry locating there will bring people from this area of unemployment and slow growth into that town for employment. Three or four industries in this area would solve all the problems. Therefore it may be that these programs can be approached differently and made more flexible in areas such as the Maritimes as compared with these smaller pockets of slow growth in provinces such as Ontario.

It is my hope and purpose in speaking on this measure at this time to urge the departmental officials to see if they cannot work out criteria that will be effective in the broad sense in areas where there are large land masses which need progress, but which will also be applicable in a different sense, if you like, in areas such as the generally wealthy Province of Ontario where small pockets have fallen behind in the general growth prosperity which is to be found across most parts of this land.

May I again commend the Minister, his officials and this Government for this far-seeing and I think highly progressive measure, and may I on behalf of the constituents who sent me here plead that they find methods and criteria whereby these plans may be made applicable to smaller areas of slow growth such as exist in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to follow the hon. Member for Renfew South. He sounded this evening as though he were preaching for a call. I do not know whether there will be something available for him, but he has preached for that call before and has not been very successful. It may be that he has been accepted on a greater and wider basis by the Government than I would think to be the case. I am also very pleased that he was able to take advantage of the request of the Opposition to continue his speech beyond the time allotted, because I believe it was the Government who wanted to streamline the business of the House by eliminating or reducing speeches on different stages of measures brought before the House. However, Mr. Chairman, that being the case we will carry on with some of the arguments the hon. Member put forth and I will then advance some thoughts of my own.

I must admit that I found some of the points made by the hon. Member acceptable, and I have some area of agreement with them. But when he castigates the Conservative Party when in power for their failure to deal with the situation on the tax incentive basis in regard to write-offs, I must say that he was castigating us on the basis of our considering the whole matter from the point of view of slow growth. Then later on in his address he pointed out vehemently that this is the way it must be considered and one of the points in the criteria that must be taken into account is the growth rate of the different communities particularly, as he pointed out, in the Province of Ontario. So we have, again, the hon. Member for Renfrew South creating quite a paradox in the course of his speech. It seems that he is putting his argument across quite sensibly until you examine his words.

I also listened to him as he developed his argument with regard to the failure of the Conservative Government in this connection. I can recall very well, not too many years ago, in the light of what has happened in this House this evening, the present Prime Minister demanding that the Government resign and pass the reins of government over to his party. Unless the Government is prepared to meet some of the requests made by the hon. Member for Renfrew South and some other Members in this House, who know what this legislation will mean if properly applied, I think the day is here when the Liberal Party should consider passing the reins of office back over here where they properly belong.

Mr. Greene: Poor Canada.

Mr. Winkler: Reference was also made to the words spoken by the hon. Member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot in his concern regarding patronage, and so on. I must remind the Committee of the previous method the Government established in this respect, because of which we recognize that this practice exists. The hon. Member also spoke very vehemently, and I must admit in a disparaging way, about the hon. Member for Wellington South and the way he presented the case with regard to our legislation. The hon. Member for Wellington South knows better than anybody that when the Government created Brantford as a designated area—and I have nothing against that—and gave them that advantage, cities such as Guelph and others in the immediate vicinity did not have that advantage. I wonder whether the hon. Member would call that patronage. Is that a bit unfair? Is that a bit of the pork-barrel stuff? We know very well where these Members get their financial support from. In view of this, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member should look at his words this evening. I think it is high time that he recognized who is responsible for this situation. He was speaking out of both sides of his mouth; he was congratulating the Minister for having come forward with this measure, and he was stating what in his opinion should be the criteria applied to it. What is he going to say if the criteria applied are not what he wants? He will stand up, like every other Grit on that side of the House, and vote for the measure. That is exactly what will happen. This is the course of events that his party has followed, and he will act no differently in this particular case. We do not criticize this legislation too severely if it is carried out in these terms in the bill, and the Government acts with common sense, because then this program will be implemented effectively and fairly across this country.

No reference has been made with regard to the position of the more wealthy provinces in this country in relation to those who want a more equitable share of the growth that has taken place and is about to take place. I have no argument on that particular point, because I think everyone in this House knows that the Maritime Provinces are one area of this country that need support and should receive special consideration. I also think that because of the past history of the Province of Saskatchewan this is another area which should be considered, because we know the growth rate of the population and the trends, and so on, which have taken place there in the past. This province, too, should be eligible for a considerable degree of consideration when the criteria are set up and the designations are being made.

If we read all the words contained in the resolution that is under discussion at the present time I do not think anyone in this House would wish to argue about the points that are promoted in it. With regard to the actual implementation of the legislation, we believe that this is the area in which the Government should move to bring about the fulfilment of the ideas that are our interpretation of what is required, and what in actual fact should be done. I would refer at this moment, Mr. Chairman, to the words of the Prime Minister on June 7, as reported on page 2023 of Hansard, when he referred to this matter. These words are to be found in the left-hand column, and the Prime Minister put it this way:

> The purpose of this program is to provide a broad improvement in the incentives to industrial development—

He also uses the word "underemployment" in another context, although I believe these purposes may be associated. Then he went on to say this:

> There are many more specific measures that can assist industrial development, and provincial governments are developing such measures in regional development plans within their provinces.

● (8:30 p.m.)

I believe that the thoughts expressed by the Prime Minister at that time are good ones. This is one way in which the Government can satisfy the needs of the provinces, even the needs of the Province of Ontario.

Long have I felt that there should be some method of redistributing the industrial wealth of this nation in such a way that, where practicable, some measure of growth and development can sensibly take place. We know the Government has been very effective at redistribution in another sense and, although as I have said on other occasions, this does not particularly bother me, I do want to make my point before it is too late. An area such as the one from which I come, for example, could use such support, and the Minister knows full well the importance of my words and what is meant by them, though I will elaborate in a moment.

Nevertheless, we find ourselves being redistributed politically so that our voice will become considerably less in this House. Yet we have found in the past that there has been no activity on the part of the Government to redistribute some of the wealth of the people who have seen fit to stay in that part of the country, wealth which has increased at the rate which has been established, particularly since World War II. I believe that as the natural resources of North America are depleted, particularly in the area south of us, then unquestionably the trend economically and industrially will, I believe, in due course be to the north, and thus of great advantage to Canada.

In order to make a proper plan I believe that the terms of such a resolution as this and the legislation to follow can effectively be used to this end. I believe that as we sit here representing this great country of Canada from one sea to the other sea, tremendous opportunities for development will appear if the benefits and incentives which will be created from this legislation are properly and sensibly applied.

Let me return again, Mr. Chairman, to my own constituency. In this regard I should like to refer to the Ontario Statistical Review, which is available to anyone who wishes to consult it. The figures found therein are rather important. They would indicate that the Minister and his officials would find the report useful in considering the criteria for the designation of the areas he intends to establish. I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that the County of Bruce, which is an area into which I have presently been moved rather forcibly, is one of these areas. The County of Grey, in which I actually live, is also one of these areas. You will find generally, Mr. Chairman, that all the counties in the vicinity of Georgian Bay made strong representations to the Minister, before this legislation was introduced, to be considered under the terms of this new legislation. I mentioned the county council of the County of Bruce. I must also mention the county council of the County of Grey. I must mention too some of the municipalities therein and the Georgian Bay Development Association, which also has made representations to the Minister. I did not intend to speak in any manner prejudicial to any one of these counties, or indeed to the entire economic area, but I do hope the Minister will pay attention to the figures in this review, in relationship to the resolution before the Committee, and to the interpretation which I and others are inclined to place upon them.

I will have to read a few words from this resolution to make my point clear. The resolution is:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the payment of development grants to assist the establishment of new manufacturing or processing facilities and the expansion of existing manufacturing or processing facilities in order to improve industrial employment opportunities in designated areas in Canada;—

Then it goes on to mention the amount of money to be credited to the area development account in the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

I would take it that in using the words "to improve industrial employment opportunities" the Minister is referring to those areas which need these opportunities and which would benefit the most from them. Inasmuch as the counties to which I have made reference are usually considered rural counties, and on the basis of the facts and figures placed before the Minister and the representations made to him some time ago, I believe that my county is one deserving consideration.

I have before me the percentage figures of change in the County of Bruce from 1951 to 1961. For the County of Bruce it is 4.2 per cent, and it rates 51st out of the 53 areas selected in the Province of Ontario. The figures for Grey County in this same regard are 5.2 per cent, rating 50th in the province out of 53 such areas. The next set of figures indicate, as the hon. Member for Renfrew South was obviously aware, that young people seeking the advantages which exist in the larger and more prosperous areas in the Province of Ontario to the south of us leave their homes and communities in order to participate in the economic advantages open to them. The figures indicate that 31.5 per cent of persons between 20 and 49 years of age, living in the County of Bruce in 1961, expressed as a percentage of the population, fell into the above category, the county ranking 51st out of the 53 areas. The figure for Grey County is 33.6 per cent, ranking 44th.

There are also other figures in this review, for example relating to incomes, which are important to the Minister in considering the areas to be designated and which back up my request, and the request of the people who have been in touch with him, to consider the entire Georgian Bay development area as a designated area.

Although this is not contained in the report, I became aware early this spring, when the income picture of the farmers in these areas became critical, that the agricultural office in the Village of Markdale had conducted a survey to find out what was the net return of a selected group of ten farmers. I was absolutely amazed to find that six out of the ten showed a minus net return. Therefore it is easy to see why the young people in the families occupying these farms will not be able to continue on in occupation very long, unless the Government extends the provisions of such legislation as this to the areas I have mentioned.

I do not want my words to prejudice to any degree the communities to which I have referred. I ask the Minister to do nothing more than give further consideration to the areas, and to any area in the entire Dominion of Canada which finds itself in this situation. We certainly do not hold this particular case in abhorrence, but we are afraid that in the final analysis the Government will return to the old form, under which certain areas will receive a thumbs-down treatment, for various reasons. I should not want the Government generally or the hon. Member for Renfrew South specifically to think for one moment that anyone on this side of the House is in support, to any degree, of centralization as opposed to the benefits which may flow from this legislation. The hon. Member for Renfrew South again used his ability to twist the words to suit his own purposes and, I might add, that is characteristic of his attitude and the attitude of his colleagues.

• (8:40 p.m.)

We have no argument against benefits which might flow from this legislation to those areas where an economic advantage exists. However, the hon. Member does not have to deride the educational system now in existence in Ontario because, as he is well aware, it is a very excellent system and is improving rapidly in excellence in our rural areas. I might add that this is the direct result of many of the policies adopted and forwarded by the hon. Member for Ontario when he was the Minister of Labour.

If we use the advantages inherent in this legislation and direct industries, which we know would be of benefit to certain communities, to establish in a location, a great deal of benefit will be gained, and I am sure this is true of the two counties to which I have referred. The hon. Member for Grey North will agree with me in this regard. With the advent of the St. Lawrence Seaway, tremendous economic advantages were lost to the people of the surrounding areas, and particularly the area in the neighbourhood of Owen Sound.

Mr. Chairman, we are particularly anxious to support this legislation, provided we are given some assurance that it will be administered properly and in a way advantageous to the people of the areas affected, and to the people of Canada as a whole. There are certain economic advantages which can be gained as a result of the adoption of this measure, but there are inherent dangers which must be avoided. Having regard to certain market areas of southern Ontario and the incentive provided industry to locate there, let me assure the House and the Minister that we will take advantage of any benefits provided by this legislation in order that the sorely needed industry will locate there. I am sure the people of the area will work endlessly toward this goal.

I urge the Government and the Minister once again to give serious consideration to the terms of this legislation and the economic effects inherent in it. I hope that due consideration will be given to a review of the circumstances which exist in those areas which may well benefit from a proper administration of this plan.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I was very interested this afternoon, as I am sure all hon. Members were, to hear the very unusual and interesting speech of the hon. Member for Renfrew South. Of the 35 minutes during which he spoke on this subject, and I was pleased that he was given an extra 15 minutes over and above the allocated time for speeches at this stage of the legislation, he spent 20 minutes pointing out that the problems of this country have arisen during the last 97 years of Liberal and Conservative Governments. It is true that he jumped back and forth from one subject to another, but he placed special emphasis on that fact. He spoke extensively about the difficulties which now face the people who live in the valley which he represents, that valley which 100 years ago was one of the most beautiful places the people of the world have ever seen. Unfortunately that area does not look so beautiful today. The hon. Member spoke of water pollution, and other associated problems, and the possible solution to those difficulties.

To make a long story short, I am pleased that a Member on the Government side has finally realized and recognized the problems this country is faced with today. He devoted his first 20 minutes to a discussion of these problems, and possible solutions. However, in the final 15 minutes he attempted to defend this measure as a complete solution to these problems. I am afraid that this measure will provide no more of a solution to these problems than the measure adopted by this Government not too long ago. Incidentally, the Conservative Government also adopted a program which, to all intents and purposes, was to solve these problems but, like the Liberal Government, it had to be dropped as a failure. It is our feeling that this measure will likewise prove to be completely insufficient as a solution to our present day difficulties.

The hon. Member mentioned also that this measure would work toward decentralization of industry and help solve some of our growth problems of today. In view of the fact that the trend today is for young people to leave small communities and farming areas to go to the more populous areas of Canada to seek employment, I am wondering whether this measure will help to decentralize industry, or will in turn attract the young people from our rural areas to these designated areas and in effect worsen the situation. That seems to be one of the fundamental weaknesses of this measure. That was also a fundamental weakness of a similar proposal which was presented to this House some years ago.

In view of past experiences of governments in efforts to designate areas and decentralize industry, I believe the Minister and his Government should now take a long look at this proposal. I am sure if they do so they will realize that this is the wrong approach. They should take a thorough look at the problems which now face thousands of people in this country, before adopting any policy of this kind. The employment situation in this country is becoming worse and worse every day, and sooner or later the Government will have to adopt sound policy.

At this time I should like to take the opportunity of pointing out some of the dangers inherent in the presently proposed scheme. I feel that I am in a position to talk about these dangers because of my experience, coming from a designated area. The area from which I come was designated two years ago. Immediately prior to its designation a meeting was held, at which a great deal of enthusiasm was developed for the then proposed plan.

But when all the interested people who were gathered there started to examine the matter a little more closely there was not one single application made under that scheme. So it just did not fit the bill.

There is another reason I feel qualified to speak on this particular subject and to point out the dangers inherent in it. Ever since the big mineral strike in the Timmins area last year, ugly rumours have been floating about that certain other areas of Ontario are out to try to steal the Timmins smelter. One area mentioned in this regard is the constituency of the Prime Minister. Having this in mind, it is no wonder that we look at this particular scheme with a great deal of apprehension and suspicion.

We have not seen the bill, but judging from what I have heard so far all of the present designated areas will become undesignated as of the 1st of July—I hope the Minister will correct me if I am wrong—and effective immediately on that date we will have a whole new group of designated areas. Some of them may be the same, some may be new and some of the old ones will be dropped. In view of the rumour that has been raising its ugly head from time to time in the Timmins area, how easy it would be for the Government under this scheme to arrange to remove the Timmins area from the designated list and to designate the Elliot Lake area. It is true that someone could go ahead and build a smelter in Timmins, but they would be faced with competition from a smelter built in the other area, with regard to which federal taxpayers would be paying 22½ per cent of the cost. This is one of the reasons we are looking at this matter very closely. The people of the Timmins area are fully aware that if things are decided on a purely economic basis the only sane and sensible place for the smelter to be built is in the Timmins area and that if it is built anywhere else it will be because of either political or financial pressure.

Some hon. Members may think that the hon. Member for Timiskaming was rather brash this afternoon when he spoke about the temper of the people of the north, but I should like to assure the House that he was not. Feelings are running very deeply in that area. The people of northeastern Ontario are sick and tired of being the milk cow not only for the Province of Ontario but for the whole North American continent.

Mr. Fairweather: You are copying a phrase of Maritimers when you refer to milk cows.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Our milk cows are much fresher than the ones in the Maritimes. The people of northeastern Ontario are sick and tired of seeing our resources shipped south to the golden horseshoe, while we watch the situation in that area becoming critical because of low water levels and pollution. We will soon be faced with a situation where we will have to send fresh water down there to process the materials we have sent there. The people of the north are getting sick and tired of the situation. There are people there who are saying openly that if this scheme is tried again they will use whatever physical force is necessary to put a stop to it, and I cannot say that I blame them.

It is bad enough to see that area bumbling and stumbling along because of mistakes that governments have made over the last 97 years, from which they have learned nothing, but on top of that the resources of the region are shipped right out from the area. With regard to finding solutions for these problems, if the Government were to announce today that its policy was that the resources of the country should be developed, where possible and feasible, in the areas where they are found, this would do far more good for the particular designated area that I represent at the present time than the scheme being introduced today or the one introduced two years ago, or the one brought in by the previous government prior to that. This is the type of thinking that the Government is going to have to adopt if they do not want to have to bring in a new scheme two years from now and scrap this one, just as they have scrapped the one they brought in two years ago. If a new approach is not taken to these problems we may find that we are once again dipping into the taxpayers' pockets to subsidize a scheme that is going to increase the problem and not help alleviate it one single bit.

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Chairman, at this point in the debate I should like to bring to the attention of hon. Members that much of the principle reflected in the resolution is also contained in recommendations made in a report by Professor T. Wilson of the University of Glasgow to the Atlantic Provinces Research Board. Indeed, reference was made today to this report by the hon. Member for Waterloo South. He expressed, and I believe quite properly so, interest in this very excellent presentation which was the result of an agreement between four Atlantic Provinces to secure the services of a competent authority in this field to guide their footsteps with regard to the expansion of industrial development in the Atlantic region. It is interesting to note that on page 71 of the report there is this recommendation:

> It is therefore recommended that the Federal Government should provide grants toward the cost of fixed capital in the Atlantic Provinces in preference to the remission of corporation tax.

We learned today from the Minister's explanation in support of the resolution that the Government is proposing to offer cash grants to new manufacturing and processing firms, etc. Also on page 71 of Professor Wilson's report we find the following:

> The value of the grants should not be reduced by a corresponding deduction from the amount a firm can claim in subsequent years against depreciation.

By way of contrast, the Minister's statement pointed out that the legislation will establish a formula to determine the amount of grant to be provided to individual enterprises and it will provide that such grants will not be taxable income and will not be deducted from capital costs for tax purposes. So there we have two parallel recommendations. The Minister's resolution reflects an objective analysis made at the instigation of four Atlantic Premiers, and certainly under these circumstances I am sure nobody will quarrel with the claim I make, that this legislation is an objective and certainly non-partisan attempt to resolve a rather serious problem.

We also find that in the Wilson report reference is made to the subject of employment in these words:

> It is therefore recommended that, for a limited period of, say, three years, a direct grant should be made in respect of every worker employed in a firm new to the area.

The legislation does not contain exactly the same thing, but it has been suggested in the Minister's statement that there is also provision for close liaison between the firms receiving development grants and the National Employment Service, to ensure that the new employment opportunities are fully exploited and the appropriate training facilities established.

It is my submission, Mr. Chairman, that what we have really been talking about this evening is a resolution which reflects a very comprehensive, independent study made on behalf of and reported to four Atlantic Province Premiers. Actually I am in agreement with the previous speakers. The hon. Member for Timiskaming wants to be assured that the Kirkland Lake area is given a fair opportunity. I too want to see that Sheet Harbour in Nova Scotia gets a fair opportunity.

The hon. Member for Timmins wants to be assured that the formula will not unnecessarily subtract from existing established industries and cause unemployment in one area in order to achieve employment somewhere else.

It is my submission that no intelligent analysis can be made without an immediate reference to the bill itself, and therefore I hope we shall move on to first reading, because the bill will enlighten us on the details which we require in order to make an intelligent appraisal of the measure.

As a Member from the Atlantic Provinces I am anxious to see the bill, to see if it contains what I suspect it does, namely the kind of measures recommended for the Atlantic Provinces. The sooner we reach the bill, the more enlightenment we will achieve on the subject.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the Minister advanced some interesting arguments as to why this kind of program would be more effective to deal with areas of unemployment than the plan initiated last year respecting designated areas. I agree with his contention that it will be easier to expand employment opportunities in an area when direct cash grants can be made available for the establishment of new industry. I also agree with him that there is a problem in achieving industrial expansion on the basis of income tax or corporation tax holidays, or accelerated depreciation, when it is necessary for industries to earn an income, shortly after their establishment, which would be taxable. Many types of industry require several years to become established and reach the point of substantial income that can be used for accelerated write-off or tax holidays.

Notwithstanding that those arguments are valid, I want it to be abundantly clear I am generally opposed to the kind of program envisaged in this resolution, and for that matter to the kind of government action taken under the old designated area type of assistance. I say so because I am reasonably sure that under the old program some industrial establishments were misplaced so far as economic soundness is concerned, particularly after the expiration of the incentive period, and I feel this program of direct cash grants from the federal treasury will have the same effect. When industries established under it come face to face with the economic realities of competing without incentives, they will find themselves unable to carry on because of location.

This is more detrimental to the communities involved than if no industries had been established in the first place. In other words, what I am saying is that if a new industry establishes in an area and employs X number of employees, it places a great load on the municipality concerned, to provide for those people when the industry can no longer compete without incentives. This is something which will have to be carefully considered, else there will be many groups of people who will find their jobs in jeopardy at the expiration of the incentive period.

We shall then be faced with two alternatives, having to continue to subsidize these industries where it is uneconomically feasible for them to compete, or else having the municipalities support the unemployed workers, should they close down. I do not believe that we can assist the weak by pulling down the strong. If we take the tax dollars we collect from the strong economic sectors of our country, and use them to set up industries in competition with the industries providing those tax dollars, it will be a very serious matter and one we need to consider carefully.

At present there is a redistribution taking place of the corporation and income taxes coming into the federal Government and going out to the provinces by way of grants and the equalization formula. This provides a distribution of tax income to those areas lagging behind the more buoyant sectors of the country. Further, provision is made by certain provinces to attract industry to them through tax concessions and other incentives. The provincial governments are using the additional funds made available to them by the federal Government to provide these incentives, but I do not think anyone objects particularly to that.

We are a nation of many regions, and we are our brother's keeper to a point—to the point that we should provide some inducement to areas that are lagging behind, enabling them to catch up and maintain a decent standard of living. But you reach a point of diminishing returns in this matter of establishing industries in areas where they cannot compete without subsidization. The Government ought to be very careful in penalizing the prosperous areas through additional taxation in order to establish uneconomically feasible misplaced industrial establishments in other areas.

If the Government is going to go ahead with this kind of program it should be very careful to take into account the criteria that will be used to designate a development area. We are informed that there will be such things in the formula as the level of income, and factors respecting low employment opportunities, low growth opportunities, and things like that. I do not disagree with these factors being introduced, but I notice there is an addition to what were the criteria when designated areas were first established.

• (9:10 p.m.)

But the income levels should be considered together with the cost of living in the local national employment service area. To reach the same standard of living in different areas may require a different level of income. Compare the cost of living in Toronto with the cost of living in some areas in Saskatchewan or the Maritimes or even in certain parts of Alberta. We would find that the cost of living in Toronto is substantially higher. What we should be concerned with is the standard of living. These two factors are closely related.

Perhaps by way of experiment we could vote $50 million to see what effect it has. But we should not go too far. If this goes further and further, the Government will get into the business of attracting industry by way of offering incentives, as some of the provinces have already done. We are going to get into the rat-race where every province tries to outbid the other in attracting industry. We have already had experience of this—municipal governments outbidding their neighbours in offering tax concessions and the like. The point will be reached where some of the richer provinces will be forced in self-defence to set up incentive and concession programs. Then where does the balance go? The Province of Alberta has made its position very clear. It has been trying to resist this kind of Government intervention, this method of attracting industry by offering subsidies. If Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and, now, the federal Government, insist on using public funds to attract industries into areas other than Alberta, then I think Alberta will find it necessary in self-defence to use the vast resources and reserves of that province to set up its own incentive program. Then we would find ourselves in a position where one offer of incentives balanced out the other. At this point, I suggest, some of the richer provinces, which are in a far stronger position to offer incentives, would be forced to do so. I hope the Minister will be careful to see that a program of this kind does not discourage the natural location of industries, which because of sound economic reasons place themselves in proximity to markets and raw materials, natural advantages enabling them to build up enterprises capable of continuing in the face of competition, without need for incentives. If we go too far in the direction now proposed we shall weaken the whole economic structure of the nation and I am sure the Minister would agree that this is not desirable.

Mr. MacEwan: I have a few remarks to make on the resolution stage of the bill which the Minister will be presenting in due course. I hope the hon. gentleman will present the bill at an early date so that we may study its contents carefully and be in a position to go into full detail.

I listened with interest to what the hon. gentleman had to say. If I understood him correctly he told us that the benefits so far, tax concessions and accelerated depreciation allowances, have been limited benefits only.

I do not intend to repeat what I said during the budget debate. It is on record in Hansard. Some hon. Members like to go back to these things, but I would prefer to let the record speak for itself. At that time I said I did not believe the tax concessions, or the accelerated depreciation allowances, were sufficient incentive to induce industry to go to the designated areas. It has been suggested that two new plants in my own area, the Scott Paper Company and the Clairtone Company were put there as a result of the incentives offered by the Government. It has been maintained that the Scott Company will perhaps gain some $14 million as a result of these income tax concessions. This was suggested in the press. Clairtone, it was said, would benefit by a couple of million dollars. However, I think these figures can only be an approximation as both companies must make a profit in the first three years. These firms have not yet set up their plants; they are just getting into operation. We are happy to have them with us, but the amounts which have been mentioned can only be approximations, even though apparently, they were given to the press. I think they are on the optimistic side, because these plants must make a profit in the first three years in order to gain any benefit.

I am glad the Minister is bringing forward this bill which will provide for assistance to the designated areas. While speaking in the budget debate I mentioned a submission by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council to the Atlantic Development Board setting out what the council felt should be brought forward. I know the Minister has studied these submissions before submitting the resolution and the bill which is to come, because the resolution has some of the features which were recommended by APEC to the Atlantic Development Board. I hope these proposals will be of benefit to the designated areas.

It has been suggested that existing industries can benefit by this legislation. The criterion seems to be that they should contribute appreciably to employment in the area—that is, their extension. I hope the Minister will spell this out clearly in the legislation because a clear definition would be appreciated. I think especially of one industry in my area, the Trenton plants, the biggest employer in the constituency, where formerly as was pointed out to me the existing industry could derive no benefit from the former legislation. I hope the provision now proposed is not a meaningless one and that the criteria set out in the Prime Minister's original statement will not be so narrow as to prevent assistance being given to established industries such as I have mentioned.

• (9:20 p.m.)

When the hon. Member for Wellington South spoke earlier today he urged that some safeguard should be attached to these grants. I agree with him. The Department of Industry should look into this matter and when making these grants it should satisfy itself that the industry which is to benefit is not likely to be a fly-by-night concern. An industry which set up in an area, took advantage of all the benefits it could receive from federal, provincial and municipal levels and then took off suddenly, would do an area more harm than good. I think there should definitely be very strong safeguards in the matter of grants before they are given to any industry.

Mention was also made by the Prime Minister, on page 3 of the statement which he originally gave, of the following:

> The purpose of this program is to provide a broad improvement in the incentives to industrial development in those parts of the country where underemployment is most serious. There are many more specific measures that can assist industrial development and provincial governments are developing such measures in regional development plans within their provinces.

Then he said:

> As those plans are elaborated it will be the Government's policy to seek the fullest harmonization between its action and provincial programs.

I would hope that the Prime Minister means that this program will go along, as he stated, in seeking the fullest harmonization between the action of the Government and provincial programs. I am thinking especially of the Province of Nova Scotia and Industrial Estates, a Crown corporation set up by the present provincial government to get industry into the area. Suggestions have been made through the years that the Atlantic Development Board, which was set up by the former government and continued by this one, should give funds to Industrial Estates to help them in their work. I know, going back a few years to when Industrial Estates was but an infant, that there were difficulties in the work of this organization. I spoke to an official and one of the businessmen of Industrial Estates, who is still in that capacity, and he said, "We have so much money to induce industry to come to Nova Scotia, but there are certain things which are just a little beyond our ability because they are just too costly for us to look after. We believe there should be federal help in this regard".

Suggestions were made that the Atlantic Development Board should funnel some of their funds into bodies such as Industrial Estates. I hope the announcement of the Prime Minister means that in this bill the Government will come forward with some method of achieving the fullest harmonization with Industrial Estates of Nova Scotia. I think this measure could do a great deal for that Province and indeed for the whole Atlantic area. I believe that New Brunswick has set up a Crown corporation, something along the lines of the corporation set up by the Province of Nova Scotia, and I hope New Brunswick will be successful in this regard. But I do hope that the bill brought forward by the Minister will point out in detail how this harmonization can be achieved.

Other Members have spoken on this measure. We will have to get the bill before us, of course, to understand its details in full. However, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could point out briefly that suggestions have been made, one of which is that subsidies should not be provided to industry and should not be given for an indefinite period. I agree with that argument. I believe that subsidies should be on a temporary, interim basis to give a chance to an industry to get on its feet, and from there on it should be able to handle its affairs. The grants should be going to industries which, as I said originally, are set up by substantial companies and which will remain in the area and make a home in which they can settle.

The hon. Member for Renfrew South spoke this evening. I am always glad to hear him. I do not intend to enter into a debate on what government did what, that the former Government did nothing, and so on. Before he was here a few things were done by the former Government for the Atlantic area in particular, and certainly for the whole of Canada. Among them was the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, which has been a godsend to an area such as mine, especially where we have a thermal power plant where subsidies are paid to these consumers of electricity in the Atlantic area who take electricity which comes from a thermal power plant which uses coal. This has helped us a great deal. There were other ways in which the Atlantic Provinces were helped. There was the decentralization of industry, and providing naval work for the Atlantic area. This sort of help was given to a great extent.

The Minister perhaps has some knowledge of these things. He was not concerned with the particular industry I had in mind at the time, but in the days of the former Government there was projected the move—and the former Government went along with and encouraged this proposal—whereby at the time Canada Car was closed in Montreal, the machinery and facilities were moved from there to the Trenton plants. This was a godsend to the constituency I represent. The former Government was under much pressure not to move this plant and to let it carry on where it was. But the move was made and it has helped a great deal in that area, it being the biggest industry there.

I hope that the bill the Minister will bring forward will spell out in detail what these grants will mean so far as co-operation with Industrial Estates and other provincial bodies throughout Canada are concerned. At that time we will be able better to tell just what this measure will mean. But, Mr. Chairman, I do hope that these grants will go further than the original legislation, which was to give a tax free holiday for three years and the accelerated depreciation, and will assist getting industry into designated areas.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I have just a few words I would like to say before the resolution carries. I must say that I am as curious as other hon. Members to see the bill, in order to ascertain whether the Government has learned anything from its experience in the past. We in the Province of Saskatchewan have failed to benefit from any of the legislation the Government has brought forward along this line in the past. In view of recent representations made by our Premier and his Minister of Natural Resources, I am very hopeful that when the bill is introduced it will reflect that measure of co-operation and understanding on the part of the Government and the Minister concerned that will give a truly national outlook to this legislation and its application to industry.

I would be remiss in my duty if I did not go back to the period of the Second World War and point out what took place at that time with regard to the centralization of industry. I do not want to criticize the Government of that day for what it did then; but if this legislation is to reinforce the mistakes that were made at that time and perpetuate a situation in which industry was centralized in certain areas of this country, to the detriment of other areas where perhaps some natural resources were more readily available than in the area that was affected, then I would think the legislation would be lacking in the respect that we in western Canada would like to see corrected.

I cannot help but think of my own Province of Saskatchewan and the loss of population there; perhaps I should not say the loss of population altogether, but the limitation of growth that has resulted from what happened during the last Great War and the period immediately following. We have failed to achieve an increase in population of approximately half a million people, in a period when other parts of the country have been growing, largely because of the centralization of industry that was encouraged during that particular period. I hope that the bill will be broad enough to take into consideration the truly national needs of our country in this regard, and will restore to the prairie region in western Canada some of the incentives that have been lacking during the past many years. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, without saying anything further in this regard at this particular time I will await the introduction of the bill.

• (9:30 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I report the resolution?

Mr. Peters: On division.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-129, to provide incentives for the development of industrial employment opportunities in designated areas in Canada, and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

INTERIM SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration in Committee of the following resolution—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Batten in the Chair.

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $1,651,292,282.42, being the aggregate of:

(a) four twelfths of the total of all the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of Parliament, except external affairs item 15, mines and technical surveys item 70; and external affairs item 20 for which the proportion is three twelfths, $1,456,413,323;

(b) an additional four twelfths of the amounts of agriculture items 25 and 45, legislation item 15, and loans, investments and advances item L30 (Schedule A) of the said main estimates, $4,664,625;

(c) an additional two twelfths of the amount of northern affairs and national resources item 15, (Schedule B) of the said main estimates, $2,258,500;

(d) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of agriculture items 5 and 60, fisheries item 10, mines and technical surveys items 10, 15, 25, 45 and 60, national film board item 1, northern affairs and national resources item 45, (Schedule C) of the said main estimates, $9,566,025;

(e) seven twelfths of all the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (b) laid before the House of Commons at the present session of Parliament, $162,394,142.75;

(f) an additional four twelfths of the amounts of agriculture items 17b, 25b and 35b, mines and technical surveys item 70b, and loans, investments and advances item L78b, (Schedule D) of the said supplementary estimates, $7,245,666.67;

(g) an additional three twelfths of the amount of finance item 15b, (Schedule E) of the said supplementary estimates, $8,750,000, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, there are one or two points which I think should be covered before the House proceeds to take an adjournment, and I can think of no better time than at 25 minutes to ten on a warm summer evening, after other dramatic events have taken place, to share with the Committee my views on such matters. One portfolio which any New Brunswick Member would be proud to discuss at this time of night is that of public works.

There are two points I wish to make here. One is that the Government has failed to complete roads to resources projects which have been started during the last few years. This is a co-operative scheme between the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces. Yet the location of the various roads and whether or not they are to be completed is decided at the whim of the provincial administrations. I should like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Public Works two projects which, by a strange coincidence, happen to be located in my constituency. One of them is popularly known as the Kingston peninsula trail. This road has been under way for the past six years. In answer to an inquiry of mine directed to the Ministry I find that no steps are being taken this year to finish the remaining 12 miles of this tourist attraction.

Then there is a very important road to resource between the communities of Chipman in the County of Queens, in the constituency of Royal, and the community of Doaktown. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works would have just as much interest as I in the completion of this road, which is very much needed by the lumbering community.

The second point with regard to public works which I should like to make concerns the absence of any announced Government policy of assistance to marinas and other boating facilities along navigable waters. The Minister of Northern Affairs on the radio last night spoke of water as being the most important of our resources. I am one who believes that this is the fact, and in this regard I am saddened to think of the great Saint John water system. Some years ago, in the thirties, we had a program of construction of public wharves. In those days it used to be thought that these wharves should have a commercial use, in the narrow sense of the word. I regret to say that I have been unable to persuade the Government, in these days when so many people have the use of motorboats and other pleasure craft, that this type of use should also be regarded as commercial use.

The Saint John River system has some 60 public wharves owned by the Queen in the right of Canada, and I think that it is tragic that a vigorous policy of exploitation has not been embarked upon by the Government to enable people with leisure, among whom I should like to think Members of Parliament may soon fall if events take their proper course, to enjoy the unmatched beauties, if I may be chauvinistic, of the Saint John River system.

These two matters are very close to the constituency of Royal, Mr. Chairman, but I should like to move to another area to which I think the Government should pay more than lip service, namely the subject of university education. This subject has been the pet of a great many Members and I should like to say that the interest is not restricted to Members of this party. As a matter of fact, I think it has been almost a backbench crusade, with one exception, and that exception was the late hon. Member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, who made many important speeches on the subject of the negligence, which is what it was really, of the Government in failing to provide any increase in assistance to Canadian universities.

The Minister and his Parliamentary Secretary have replied to questions of mine and of other hon. Members by saying that the Government is awaiting the results of the Bladen Commission before announcing policy.

This of course is the typical answer of a Government which does not wish to take any responsibility; it finds some commission and hides behind it, not announcing any policy. This Government, which came into office on votes gained by promises of bold and daring acts for all our people, has really shown a curious lack of policy in connection with higher education in this country. Those of us who like not only to fight politics at the constituency level but also like to stand back once in a while and philosophize about politics, find it curious that here we have a party which prides itself on its appeal to the intellectual levels of the country and which tosses about fancy phrases, yet when the issue is joined no government in recent Canadian history has done less—in fact this Government has done nothing—for higher education in Canada than this one. At least there has been no increase in assistance. Yet the Government has received briefs from the Canadian Universities Foundation, one as early as May, 1963 and another as of December, 1963. During the intervening period of time other submissions have been made.

• (9:40 p.m.)

It is also a curiosity in this country that there is no one on the staff anywhere in the ministry of Canada, at the federal level—I want to be fair, but I think this is a fair statement—who really has the responsibility for enunciating or recommending policy to the Government of Canada about higher education. For a short while the Government had the benefit of the services of Mr. Kenneth Taylor but, if my memory serves me correctly, this individual has not been part of the public service for at least a year.

So here we have a Government that spends I think not quite four tenths of 1 per cent of the national budget on higher education, and coupled with this shocking figure is the absence of any spokesman for higher education in the public service.

The university students of my province staged a wonderful democratic protest, in the best traditions of a public protest, in front of the legislature in our province following the announcement that the fees of the provincial University of New Brunswick were to be raised because of the lack of action on the part of the federal Government. I am also aware of the complaints of the undergraduates at Mount Allison University, and at many of the universities of Nova Scotia.

There are several persons adorning the Government benches, some of whom are in the Ministry, who have had a role to play as teachers and professors in our Maritime universities. Yet, to use a well worn cliché, they sit idly by with a smile on their faces while this problem is allowed to deteriorate. Maritimers should be glad to know that the Prime Minister of Canada intends to travel to one of our Maritime universities, in mid-July I think, to receive an honorary degree. I hope in his statement, comments or speech, if he is to make one—or at least in his dialogue which is another well-worn current cliché—he will bring about a change of heart in university circles, which has existed for the last few years, which will make them believe that this Government is the able and daring Government which publicity emanators promised it would be.

The serious thing is that undergraduates are getting ready now—this is the time of year—to enter our universities; yet this Government has done nothing upon which university administrators or the young people of this country can pattern themselves or plan for the forthcoming academic year. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has received any protests from student university groups about the increases of fees that have been announced, not only in my own part of Canada but also in western Canada, where there has been general objection taken. Has the Minister received any representations from university presidents or representatives of university administrators, respecting the policy of the Government, to upgrade the per capita grant to the very minimum of the often suggested three dollar figure in time for the next academic year? This would be a dramatic gesture that could take place and which would receive the general approval, I am sure, of all Members, before we go home to our constituencies.

Mr. Chairman, if the Minister is about to make such an announcement, I will be glad to yield the floor so that he can capture some of the drama of this day, by doing something that he should do for Canada.

An hon. Member: He is not even listening.

Mr. Fairweather: Of course he is not listening, but I know that tomorrow he will have a précis of this compelling speech placed on his desk, so that he will be able to formulate a reply to appease the people of this country, so in turn they will know that the Government has not been negligent in respect of higher education.

Now that the universities have had a comment or two from me, I have one last comment to make on interim supply which has to do with the truly extraordinary things that are going on in the City of Montreal in relation to Expo '67. I am astounded by the concept of Expo '67, and I think that many of the events that are planned for that great exposition will be really wonderful evidence of the progress that Canada has made. I must confess, however, that I am one of those who derive neither aesthetic nor any other thrill from the strange projection the Mayor of Montreal is going to erect into the skyline of that city, provided President de Gaulle still wants to co-operate in this strange misuse of public funds. I hope the funds of the Government of Canada are not going to be spent in this attempt to reach for the stars, that is being planned for that city. Surely there are many other things that we can plan which may be useful, on a permanent basis, to the general population of Canada.

Someone suggested that perhaps the facilities could be used for a university campus. I am not able to make any judgment as to whether or not that is a sensible suggestion, but I think I am as competent as anybody else to judge whether or not this strange thing that is going to be projected into the sky is a waste of money. I suppose I will receive a slick comment from the Expo officials telling me exactly what this projection—I cannot use the word I intended to use—has to do with Man and his World in 1967.

I was somewhat upset by the appeal made by Mr. Kniewasser—I hope I have pronounced his name correctly, but it does not matter because it will be transcribed in Hansard correctly—for $30 million from private industry, as was announced in the Montreal Gazette of June 23. Apparently he wants this amount of money from private industry so that Expo '67 can carry on its plan. Mr. Kniewasser in his appeal said that this amount was necessary because of the reluctance of some major industries to come forward with donations. I am sure the reluctance on the part of industry is the result of the unusual nature of this clause.

• (9:50 p.m.)

I do not, of course, expect that it will be possible to do so before we adjourn for the summer but certainly when we return after the summer recess a great many people will want to have the opportunity to look at a very detailed report of costs, to date. I had hoped that this would be possible earlier so that the upset industry is experiencing about Expo '67 could be somewhat allayed by this information. If Expo '67 is not to become a white elephant it should have the very diligent and vigilant scrutiny of Treasury Board, for instance, and all the other manifestations of good government accounting practices.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Fairweather: I would be delighted to have a question.

Mr. Sharp: I know the hon. Member would not want to misrepresent the situation or do any harm to the cause of Expo. Is he aware that what Mr. Kniewasser was talking about was not the rising costs of Expo in the sense in which the hon. Member was speaking, but the rising costs of construction?

Mr. Fairweather: One of my colleagues suggests that if we did not have the 11 per cent tax on construction material and equipment—

An hon. Member: Imposed by the Government.

Mr. Fairweather: I am getting lots of advice at this late hour of the night from my colleagues—construction costs might not be as great. I do not think it really matters, to my argument, whether it is construction costs that are rising or what is rising. All I know is that the Montreal Gazette of June 23 last had this headline: "Expo Searches For $30 Million To Keep Three Projected Pavilions". Over one story there is a subheading, "M.P. Renews Demand For Probe" and over another story by Bill Bantey there is the subheading "Kniewasser Appeals to Canadian Business". The story follows and hon. Members can read it to their own satisfaction.

But I think there is some public concern about Expo, and just because we stand here and ask questions we should not be considered to be against the project. I for one think it is a most imaginative project but, like any other project, I think we should be able to know roughly, within say $20 million or $30 million, what the eventual cost of Expo '67 will be. I do not think this is an unrealistic or unparliamentary request for one to make.

I have covered various facets of interim supply and I hope that tomorrow afternoon there will be some answers from the ministry with regard to some of the problems I have posed. Most important to Canada as a whole, of course, is the problem facing our universities. Because I have a great interest in my own constituency I should also like to think that the Minister of Public Works will answer my questions about the roads to resources program and also an imaginative program for the use of the Saint John River. Because I should like to think that Expo '67 has the wholehearted approval, understanding and sympathy of the business community as well as all Members of Parliament, I am sure the Minister of Trade and Commerce will want to calm the fears of a good many people about this project. We will leave it to the President of France to decide whether a tower will be constructed to spoil what is otherwise the rather lovely skyline of the great City of Montreal.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I wish to add a postscript to the remarks I made yesterday on interim supply when I raised the question of William Grant, former Yukon agent of the Indian Affairs Department. I received the news today that his colleague, Joseph Armishaw, who was also charged, has been found not guilty on all charges. This man was suspended as of September, 1963. The charges were only laid on November 4, 1964. He too has been without salary and has had to fall back on whatever resources he could scrape up. One can readily understand how difficult it would be for a civil servant to obtain interim employment when he is under suspension.

Some people seem to think that undue influence was used in regard to these cases. I want to say again that I am amazed at the humanity expressed in certain cases but which did not apply in regard to these two cases. Therefore I trust that before we conclude interim supply we will get an answer with regard to Grant and Armishaw.

I received today a news item from Edmonton stating that Jean Dastous, director of administration in the Department of Indian Affairs, has said in reply to an inquiry that William Grant cannot be returned to his previous job because there was a separation. Does this mean that the man has been fired? To me the word "separation" means only one thing, that he has been dismissed from the service or has been pressured into resigning.

We want to know precisely what is happening in this regard, in the light of the comments by the judge and in the light of the comments by the people of the community. We are not content with just being given the decision of some man here in Ottawa far removed from the scene. We know there have been very strong comments by the Justices of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory with regard to the bureaucratic machine that has to do with northern administration, and certainly I should not like to be in the shoes of those people who are the butt, shall we say, of the criticism of these two Justices, both of whom know the north country and both of whom are eminent lawyers. One was appointed by a former Liberal administration. I refer to Mr. Justice Sissons who used to be a Member of this House. Mr. Justice Parker had a long career in the Northwest Territories before appointment. Surely these men know what they are talking about. Yet it seems that the words of these men and the words of other people in that area fall on deaf ears when they strike Ottawa.

It had also been my understanding that the Minister of Justice was going to reply to remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition concerning a Justice of the Province of Ontario and one in the Province of Quebec whose positions are under review. A statement was promised. Are we going to have it before supply is granted?

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Lambert: I trust that the Minister of National Revenue is making note of all these things and that replies will be given tomorrow.

I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Progress reported.

At ten o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS, 1965—FINAL COMMUNIQUÉ

At the Meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers, which ended today, Pakistan, Ghana, Tanzania and Zambia were represented by their Presidents. Britain, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, India, Malaysia, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, Malawi, Malta and The Gambia were represented by their Prime Ministers. Jamaica was represented by the Acting Prime Minister; Ceylon by the Minister of Justice; Cyprus and Kenya by the Ministers of External Affairs.

This was the first Meeting at which Malta, Zambia and The Gambia were represented as Members of the Commonwealth; and the other Commonwealth Heads of Government were pleased to welcome them. The Prime Minister of The Gambia informed the Meeting that it was his country's desire to continue her membership of the Commonwealth after introducing a republican form of Constitution and to accept The Queen as the symbol of the free association of the independent member nations and, as such, the Head of the Commonwealth. The Heads of Delegations of the other Member countries of the Commonwealth assured the Prime Minister of The Gambia that they would be happy to recognise The Gambia's continued membership of the Commonwealth.

The Prime Ministers took note that their Meeting was being held during the International Co-operation Year which itself stemmed from a proposal by the former Prime Minister of India, the late Mr. Nehru. They recorded their sympathy with its objectives and their desire to assist in its success.

The twentieth anniversary of the foundation of the United Nations fell on the last day of the Meeting. The Prime Ministers sent a message of greetings and of good wishes to the Organisation to mark this occasion.

The Prime Ministers recognised that the Commonwealth, as a multi-racial association, is opposed to discrimination on grounds of race or colour; and they took the opportunity of their Meeting to re-affirm the declaration in their Communique of 1964 that, "for all Commonwealth Governments, it should be an objective of policy to build in each country a structure of society which offers equal opportunity and non-discrimination for all its people, irrespective of race, colour or creed. The Commonwealth should be able to exercise constructive leadership in the application of democratic principles in a manner which will enable the people of each country of different racial and cultural groups to exist and develop as free and equal citizens."

In the course of a comprehensive review of the major current international issues, the Prime Ministers noted with concern that, despite the efforts of many countries to promote peace and stability throughout the world, dangerous conflict, or the threat of conflict, persists in several areas. They expressed their conviction that in these circumstances all possible steps should be taken to reinforce the authority of the United Nations Organisation; and they discussed in this context the question of China's representation in the Organisation. They also reaffirmed their belief in the importance of the peace-keeping operations of the United Nations; and they renewed their support for the efforts now being made by a Committee of the United Nations to establish just and equitable principles for authorising, organising and financing peace-keeping operations. They considered it essential that the General Assembly, when it reconvened, should be able to function normally. They welcomed the voluntary and unconditional contributions which had been made to the United Nations in order to help towards relieving it of its financial difficulties; and they expressed the hope that, as a result of these and other actions, the United Nations would be able to discharge its functions. The Prime Ministers pledged their loyalty to the United Nations, the success of which they considered to be essential to the maintenance of world peace.

The Prime Ministers expressed serious concern over the grave situation in Vietnam and the danger of its developing into a major international conflict. They reviewed the various efforts which had been made to achieve a peaceful solution to the problem; and, bearing in mind that the Commonwealth, by virtue of its wide membership, represented a very broad spectrum of opinion in the world and that their Meeting was taking place at a time when the peril to world peace was rapidly increasing, they considered, on the first day of the Meeting, a proposal for a new attempt to move forward to a peaceful solution. To this end a Mission was established to make contact with the parties principally concerned with the problem of Vietnam.

The Mission is composed of the Prime Minister of Britain, the President of Ghana and the Prime Ministers of Nigeria and of Trinidad and Tobago. The Prime Minister of Britain, as Chairman of the Meeting, was appointed Chairman of the Mission. Its object is to explore with the parties principally concerned how far there may be common ground about the circumstances in which a conference might be held leading to a just and lasting peace in Vietnam and, having ascertained such common ground, to seek agreement on a time, place and composition of a conference. The Mission will report progress from time to time to the Prime Ministers by whom they were appointed. The Meeting approved a statement of guidance to the Mission, a copy of which is attached to this Communique, together with copies of two statements issued by the Mission.

Malaysia

The Prime Ministers reviewed other developments in South-East Asia. They noted, with concern, that tension still persisted between Malaysia and Indonesia, thus disturbing the peace and security of the area, despite the interval since they had last collectively considered the matter and had stated in the Communique issued at the end of their Meeting in 1964, that "they assured the Prime Minister of Malaysia of their sympathy and support in his efforts to preserve the sovereign independence and integrity of his country and to promote a peaceful and honourable settlement of current differences between Malaysia and neighbouring countries". They recognised and supported the right of the Government and people of Malaysia to defend their sovereign independence and territorial integrity, and expressed their sympathy to the Prime Minister of Malaysia in his country's efforts to this end. They looked forward to the establishment of peaceful, friendly and mutually advantageous relations between Malaysia and Indonesia on a just and honourable basis.

Cyprus

The Prime Ministers expressed concern about the situation regarding Cyprus. They reaffirmed their full support for the U.N. Security Council resolutions on the subject. The Prime Ministers asserted that the Cyprus problem should be solved within the framework of the U.N. and its Charter and in accordance with the principles of democracy and justice and in conformity with the wishes of the people of Cyprus.

They appealed to all countries concerned to act in accordance with the Security Council Resolution of the 4th March, 1964, and to refrain from any action which might undermine the task of the United Nations Peace-Keeping Force to which a number of Commonwealth countries are contributing. They also expressed their appreciation of the work and persistent efforts of the United Nations Mediator.

Africa

The Meeting took note of the widely expressed regret at the failure of the Portuguese Government to give due recognition to the legitimate political aspirations of the peoples of the Portuguese territories in Africa. The Meeting expressed support for the application of the principle of self-determination to the inhabitants of Angola, Mozambique and Portuguese Guinea. The Prime Ministers reaffirmed their condemnation of the policy of apartheid practised by the Government of the Republic of South Africa and unanimously called upon South Africa to bring the practice to an end.

Caribbean

In discussion of Caribbean problems the Prime Ministers took note of the situation in the Dominican Republic. They expressed the hope that peace would be restored there and a final settlement reached within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations on the basis of self-determination and in accordance with the wishes of the people of the Republic.

Disarmament

The Prime Ministers reaffirmed the aim which they had expressed in their Statement on Disarmament on 17th March, 1961, namely to achieve total and worldwide disarmament, subject to effective inspection and control. They commended the thorough and useful work which had been done in furtherance of that aim by the 18-Nation Disarmament Conference since it first met in March, 1962, both on general and complete disarmament and on preliminary measures to build international confidence. They recognized that the non-aligned members of the Conference, by playing a constructive and intermediary role, had contributed to the progress already achieved and had increased world understanding of the importance of disarmament.

The Prime Ministers believed that there was an urgent need for further progress in the disarmament field, both in the interests of world peace and in order to enable the nations of the world to devote their resources to more fruitful purposes. They considered that the problems involved in the elaboration of an agreement for general and complete disarmament should be re-examined, in the light of their Statement on Disarmament of March 1961, by the 18-Nation Disarmament Committee at Geneva. They considered that, in order to create the optimum conditions for the success of their efforts to achieve general and complete disarmament, the 18-Nation Disarmament Committee should resume its detailed negotiations at Geneva with a view to reaching agreement on the next steps to disarmament which could be submitted to an eventual World Disarmament Conference which should be open to participation by all States.

They welcomed the various proposals which had been put forward for measures to reduce tension and build up international confidence. They hoped that early progress would be made towards an acceptable agreement on some of these measures, including the limitation and reduction of stocks of nuclear weapons and delivery vehicles and a phased reduction in conventional armaments, as steps towards a world agreement for general and complete disarmament. They emphasized the urgency of arms control and, recognized that in appropriate areas agreement on nuclear-free zones could assist such control. In this connection the hope was expressed that in the preparation of the appropriate Treaties the declarations by the Organisation of African Unity and certain Latin American States regarding the establishment of nuclear-free zones in their own geographical areas would be respected.

The Prime Ministers emphasized that ways and means should be found for associating the People's Republic of China with future discussion on disarmament. Indeed they felt that the importance of a solution of the disarmament problem had been underlined by the fact that, since their last Meeting, the Government of the People's Republic of China had exploded two nuclear devices and had clearly demonstrated their intention to develop nuclear weapons.

The Prime Ministers wished to record their firm conviction that the continuing spread of nuclear weapons had created a serious danger to mankind. They believed that the development of new national nuclear weapon capabilities might jeopardise further efforts to bring about general and complete disarmament. Moreover, the prospects for achieving a fair settlement of disputes would suffer as international tension increased and there would be a growing risk that nuclear proliferation might cause a local conflict to escalate to a nuclear exchange into which the major nuclear powers might be drawn.

Accordingly, the Prime Ministers, fully aware of the gravity of the situation and of their responsibility to each other and to other members of the international community, expressed their determination to give urgent and wholehearted support to measures to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons. To this end they reaffirmed their willingness to join with other countries in signing as soon as possible any appropriate international agreement which would halt the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

They expressed the hope that efforts to extend the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapons Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and Under Water should be extended to cover underground tests as well. They called on all nations to abstain from actions which might make agreement on general and complete disarmament or preliminary measures more difficult.

Dependent Territories

Britain made the following statement to the Meeting about the progress of British Colonial dependencies towards independence. The independent Members of the Commonwealth now amounted to no less than 21, including a population of more than 750 million: Britain had 31 remaining dependencies with only 10 million inhabitants, of whom over half were in Hong Kong and the South Arabian Federation. Nineteen of these dependencies contained less than 100,000 people and 6 less than 10,000. It was hoped that many of these remaining dependencies would reach independence in the next three years, including Basutoland, Bechuanaland, British Guiana, Swaziland and the South Arabian Federation; and also some or all of the territories in the East Caribbean, wither in a federation or separately.

The Prime Ministers of the other Commonwealth countries noted with approval the further progress of British territories to independent membership of the Commonwealth since their last Meeting. They welcomed the assurance of the Prime Minister of Britain that it remained the objective of his Government to lead to independence, on the basis of democratic government and the principle of universal adult suffrage, such of the remaining territories as desired it and could sustain it; and that the British Government would continue to seek to devise the most appropriate alternative arrangements for such smaller territories as were unable, or unwilling, to proceed to full independence.

In relation to Basutoland, Bechuanaland and Swaziland the view was expressed that such economic assistance and guarantees of territorial integrity as were necessary to maintain the territories as independence states should be given.

As regards British Guiana, while differing views are held on the constitutional arrangements best suited for the country, the Prime Ministers welcomed the British Government's intention to hold a conference later this year, one of the tasks of which would be to devise a constitution, and to fix a date, for independence. The Prime Ministers noted the British Government's recognition of the need for adequate machinery to ensure human rights and due judicial processes.

As regards the countries of the Eastern Caribbean the Meeting expressed the hope that the assistance urgently required to strengthen their economies and ensure their viability so as to enable them to sustain the obligations of independence would not be delayed by the discussions on political arrangements.

Rhodesia

The Commonwealth Secretary informed the Meeting of the attempts which the British Government had made in recent months to resolve the problem of the further constitutional development of Rhodesia. He explained the considerations by which they were and would continue to be guided in their approach to the question of Rhodesian independence and emphasised that central to these was the necessity to provide guarantees that future constitutional development should conform to the principle of unimpeded progress to majority rule, together with an immediate improvement in the political status of the African population and the progressive elimination of racial discrimination. As they had repeatedly made clear, the British Government would only recommend to Parliament the grant of independence to Rhodesia if they were satisfied that this was on a basis acceptable to the people of the country taken as a whole. He emphasized the dangers of the use of force or unconstitutional methods by any party; and he reaffirmed in this connection the policies of the British Government as indicated in their statements of 27th October, 1964, and 29th April, 1965.

The Heads of Government of the Commonwealth took note of the Commonwealth Secretary's statement. They reaffirmed their previous statement that they were irrevocably opposed to any unilateral declaration of independence by the Government of Rhodesia, and further reaffirmed their insistence on the principle of majority rule.

While the Prime Ministers reaffirmed that the authority and responsibility for leading her remaining Colonies, including Rhodesia, to independence must continue to rest with Britain, they also reaffirmed that the question of membership of the Commonwealth by an independent Rhodesia, or by any other newly independent territory, would be a matter for collective Commonwealth decision.

The British Prime Minister was urged by other Prime Ministers to convene a constitutional conference at an early date, say within three months, which all the political leaders in Rhodesia should be free to attend. They reaffirmed that the object of such a conference should be to seek agreement on the steps by which Rhodesia might proceed to independence within the Commonwealth at the earliest practicable date on a basis of majority rule. In this connection they welcomed the statement of the British Government that the principle of "one man one vote" was regarded as the very basis of democracy and this should be applied to Rhodesia.

An appeal was made for the immediate release of all the detained or restricted African Leaders as a first step to diminishing tensions and preparing the way for a constitutional conference. A further appeal was made that the death sentences passed on persons now awaiting execution for offences under the Law and Order (Maintenance) Act should be respited.

It was further urged that, should the Rhodesian Government refuse to attend such a conference and to release the detainees, the British Government should introduce legislation to suspend the 1961 Constitution and appoint an interim Government, which should repeal oppressive and discriminatory laws and prepare the way for free elections.

The British Government said that they were actively engaged in discussions with the Government of Rhodesia; and they undertook to take full account, in relation to these discussions, of all the views which had been expressed during the Meeting. In this process of seeking to reach agreement on Rhodesia's advance to independence a constitutional conference would, at the appropriate time, be a natural step. If the discussions did not develop satisfactorily in this direction in a reasonably speedy time, the British Government having regard to the principle enunciated by the Commonwealth Secretary of unimpeded progress towards majority rule would be ready to consider promoting such a conference in order to ensure Rhodesia's progress to independence on a basis acceptable to the people of Rhodesia as a whole.

The Prime Ministers renewed their call to all leaders and their supporters in Rhodesia to abstain from violence and to co-operate in the work of fostering tolerance and justice, as the basis of a society in which all the inhabitants would be assured that their interests would be protected.

Economic Affairs

The Prime Ministers then turned to consider problems of aid and development. They recognised that economic and social development constitute a long-term co-operative enterprise in which all countries can work together. The importance of economic planning in relation to development would call for an increased supply of experts; and concerted measures would therefore be required in order to enlarge and mobilise resources of this kind by means of adequate facilities for education and training.

The Prime Ministers appreciated the importance of programmes of economic aid to the developing Commonwealth countries. They took note of the contributions made to such programmes by Commonwealth countries both collectively and individually; and they agreed that these programmes should be maintained and expanded as far as possible. They endorsed the concept of co-operative forward planning of development aid which would apply not only to matching the assistance provided by the developed countries with the needs of the developing countries but also to the supply of personnel for schemes of technical assistance, to which they agreed that high priority should be given. They welcomed the establishment of the British Ministry of Overseas Development together with the decision of the British Government to provide loans free of interest in appropriate cases; they also expressed their appreciation of the similar loans already provided by the Government of Canada and of the fact that the Government of Australia makes its aid available wholly on the basis of grants. It was suggested that, in those cases where financial assistance would remain unused, or give rise to serious internal problems, because of the inability of some recipient countries to finance local costs, donor countries should consider making financial contributions to cover a proportion of such costs. The Prime Ministers recognised the importance of the flow of direct investment to developing countries and expressed the hope that, insofar as economic circumstances permit, the minimum restriction would be placed in its way.

The Prime Ministers recorded their satisfaction at the constructive outcome of the Third Commonwealth Education Conference in Ottawa last August; they looked forward to an equally successful result for the Commonwealth Medical Conference which is to be held in Edinburgh in October 1965.

The Prime Ministers agreed that effective development is promoted not only by aid but even more by trade. Moreover, they were convinced that an expanding exchange of goods and services, by emphasising the interdependence of the countries of the world, was one of the most effective ways of promoting the growth of international understanding and the elimination of the causes of friction.

In further discussion of economic development in the Commonwealth, emphasis was laid on the importance to the economies both of Britain and of certain other Commonwealth countries of emigration to Britain from those countries. The Prime Ministers recognised that the extent of immigration into Britain was entirely a matter for the British Government to determine. The hope was expressed that in operating such immigration controls as they might think necessary, the British Government would continue to give preferential treatment to Commonwealth citizens; and they welcomed the assurance of the British Prime Minister that there would be no differentation in any restrictions on account of colour or creed.

The Prime Ministers welcomed the work which had been done since their last Meeting in carrying forward the initial impetus to the expansion of trade which was provided by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development; and they pledged themselves afresh to press for more outlets for the trade of developing countries.

They stressed the importance to the development of the economies of member countries of the Commonwealth of the prices obtained for their primary commodities, particularly where the prices of primary produce fell in relation to prices of manufactured goods. The low levels to which the prices of cocoa and some other commodities have fallen are a matter of serious concern to producers. The problem of commodity prices extended beyond the Commonwealth and the Prime Ministers endorsed the need for consideration of the strengthening of existing international commodity agreements, where appropriate, and stressed the urgent need of negotiating further agreements of this kind.

The Prime Ministers agreed on the desirability of exploring means by which Commonwealth trade might be encouraged and expanded. One possibility would be to enable Commonwealth Governments, in planning their economic development, to take into account each others' plans. An exchange of information of this kind might enable production to be more effectively matched to requirements in the Commonwealth and thus increase trade between Commonwealth countries.

The Prime Ministers accordingly agreed on the following measures designed to further these objectives, while at the same time reaffirming their support for the Kennedy Round of tariff negotiations now proceeding at Geneva, which these measures will not affect. They agreed to arrange discussions between officials of Commonwealth Governments in the first instance, with the help of the Commonwealth Secretariat, in order to examine these issues further and to prepare for an early meeting of Commonwealth Trade Ministers. These official discussions could also pay special attention to problems of individual commodities of particular interest to Commonwealth countries, in order to see how far policies could be co-ordinated within the Commonwealth with a view to appropriate further action, whether on a Commonwealth or international scale.

They also agreed that subsequently the appropriate Ministers or officials in Commonwealth countries should meet to consider the extent to which each country's production and plans, as foreseen, could meet requirements in other Member countries.

Ministers decided to consider through the medium of the Commonwealth Air Transport Council means of promoting a closer understanding of the basic civil air transport requirements of Member countries.

In addition the Commonwealth Secretariat will examine the possibility of arranging for the results of research to be shared more widely among Commonwealth countries.

Commonwealth Foundation

At their previous Meeting in 1964 the Prime Ministers considered that it might be desirable to establish a Commonwealth Foundation to administer a fund for increasing interchanges between Commonwealth organizations in professional fields; officials were instructed to consider this proposal in greater detail. At their present Meeting the Prime Ministers approved a report by officials and an Agreed Memorandum on the establishment and functions of the Foundation which is attached to this Communiqué.

Commonwealth Secretariat

At their 1964 Meeting Prime Ministers saw a Commonwealth Secretariat as being a visible symbol of the spirit of co-operation which animates the Commonwealth and instructed officials to consider the best basis for establishing a Commonwealth Secretariat. At their present Meeting the Prime Ministers had before them a report by officials which they approved and an Agreed Memorandum on the establishment and functions of the Secretariat is attached. As already announced, they have unanimously approved the appointment of Mr. Arnold Smith as the first Secretary-General.

COMMONWEALTH MISSION ON VIETNAM

Statement of Guidance

1. To enable the Mission to approach its assignment meaningfully, there should be certain broad areas of agreement regarding the requirements for ending the conflict in Vietnam peacefully.

2. There is already general agreement on certain basic considerations:

(a) there is an inherent risk of the conflict in Vietnam escalating into a wider war.

(b) for this reason there are grave doubts as to an early or final solution by military means.

(c) a comprehensive cease-fire and a conference of all the parties directly involved in the situation seem to provide the essential precondition to the solution of the problem.

3. Bearing in mind these considerations and also the purpose of the Mission, it should be guided by the following ultimate objectives during its consultations with the parties principally concerned:

(a) a suspension of all United States air attacks on North Vietnam;

(b) a North Vietnamese undertaking to prevent the movement of any military forces or assistance or material to South Vietnam.

(c) a total cease-fire on all sides to enable a conference to be convened to seek a peaceful solution.

(d) the objectives of such a conference might be to:

(i) end the war in Vietnam;

(ii) secure the withdrawal of all foreign military presence from Vietnam and the neutralisation of the area;

(iii) establish, for a period, an international peace force, under the auspices of the Geneva Agreement, to safeguard peace in Vietnam;

(iv) establish principles for the eventual unification of the country through free and internationally supervised elections.

Commonwealth Mission on Vietnam

The following statement was issued by the Mission on 19th June, 1965:—

'The mission appointed by the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Meeting is to explore the circumstances in which a conference might be held to end the fighting in Vietnam.

Meanwhile, in order to create the conditions in which the mission can carry through its work, the mission is appealing to all parties concerned to show the utmost restraint in military operations as a step towards the total cease-fire which the mission hopes will be established at the earliest possible opportunity. The mission would wish to meet all the parties concerned.'

Commonwealth Mission on Vietnam

The following statement was issued by the Mission on 24th June, 1965:—

Because of certain misunderstandings which have gained currency during the last few days, the Heads of Government of Britain, of Ghana, of Nigeria and of Trinidad and Tobago wish to clarify the basis on which they agreed to form a Mission in connection with the problem of Vietnam.

The Mission was appointed by the London meeting of the Heads of Government of the Commonwealth and on behalf of the Commonwealth as a whole.

The Commonwealth as such is in no way committed to either side of the conflict in Vietnam and has formed no collective view except on the urgency of re-establishing conditions in which the people of Vietnam may be able to live in peace. Although within the Commonwealth there is diversity of opinion on the Vietnam problem, there is complete unanimity as to the need to find a peaceful solution.

In the discharge of the task entrusted to it the Mission will be guided by the views of the Commonwealth as a whole and not by the views of any individual member of the Commonwealth.

It is in this context that the Commonwealth is satisfied that its Mission must make direct contact with all the Vietnamese parties. It is re-iterated that positive steps should be taken by all outside parties to exercise restraint in military operations while the Mission is carrying out its task.

AGREED MEMORANDUM ON THE COMMONWEALTH FOUNDATION

A Commonwealth Foundation will be established to administer a fund for increasing interchanges between Commonwealth organizations in professional fields throughout the Commonwealth. It will be the purpose of the Foundation to provide assistance where it is needed in order to foster such interchanges.

2. The Foundation will be an autonomous body, although it will develop and maintain a close liaison with the Commonwealth Secretariat. Like the Secretariat, the Foundation will be accommodated at Marlborough House.

3. Within the broad purpose indicated above, the Foundation will include among its aims the following objects:

(a) To encourage and support fuller representation at conferences of professional bodies within the Commonwealth.

(b) To assist professional bodies within the Commonwealth to hold more conferences between themselves.

(c) To facilitate the exchange of visits among professional people, especially the younger element.

(d) To stimulate and increase the flow of professional information exchanged between the organisations concerned.

(e) On request to assist with the setting up of national institutions or associations in countries where these do not at present exist.

(f) To promote the growth of Commonwealth-wide associations or regional Commonwealth associations in order to reduce the present centralisation in Britain.

(g) To consider exceptional requests for help from associations and individuals whose activities lie outside the strictly professional field but fall within the general ambit of the Foundation's operations as outlined above.

4. The Foundation could usefully develop informal contacts with the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. To avoid the risk of duplication with the activities of existing organisations concerned with cultural activities and the Press, the Foundation should not initially seek to assume any functions in these fields.

5. The policy of the Foundation will be directed by a Chairman, who will be a distinguished private citizen of a Commonwealth country appointed with the approval of all member Governments, and a Board of Trustees who should be expected to meet at least once a year. The Board of Trustees will consist of independent persons, each subscribing Government having the right to nominate one member of the Board. These nominees, even if officials, will be appointed in a personal capacity. The Commonwealth Secretariat will be represented on the Board of Trustees by the Secretary-General or an officer appointed by him.

6. There will be a full-time, salaried Director who will be appointed, initially for a period of not more than two years, by Commonwealth Heads of Government collectively acting through their representatives in London. He will be responsible to the Board of Trustees.

7. The Director will require a small personal staff: general office services will be provided by the Commonwealth Secretariat.

8. It is hoped that Commonwealth Governments will subscribe to the cost of the Foundation on an agreed scale. Payment of the first annual subscriptions will be made as soon as the Director has indicated that a bank account for the Foundation has been opened. It is hoped that, in addition, private sources may be willing to contribute to the funds of the Foundation.

9. The accounts of the Foundation will be audited annually by the British Comptroller and Auditor-General, whose report will be submitted to the Board of Trustees. The financial year of the Foundation will be from 1st July to 30th June.

10. The budget of the Foundation will be subject to the approval of the Board of Trustees.

22620—194½

11. The British Government will draw up the necessary documents to set up the Trust and take any further steps needed to constitute the Foundation as a legal charity.

AGREED MEMORANDUM ON THE COMMONWEALTH SECRETARIAT

I. Establishment of the Secretariat

Pursuant to their decision announced after the conclusion of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Meeting in July 1964 the Commonwealth Prime Ministers have decided to establish forthwith a Commonwealth Secretariat. As envisaged in the communiqué issued at the close of the 1964 Meeting, the Commonwealth Prime Ministers see the Secretariat as being at the service of all Commonwealth Governments and as a visible symbol of the spirit of co-operation which animates the Commonwealth.

II. Site of the Secretariat

2. The British Government will arrange for the Secretariat to be accommodated in Marlborough House.

III. Functions of the Secretariat

3. The Commonwealth Prime Ministers have given further consideration to the role of the Commonwealth Secretariat, and the following paragraphs record the functions which they have agreed it should perform.

4. The Secretary-General and his staff should approach their task bearing in mind that the Commonwealth is an association which enables countries in different regions of the world, consisting of a variety of races and representing a number of interests and points of view, to exchange opinions in a friendly, informal and intimate atmosphere. The organisation and functions of the Commonwealth Secretariat should be so designed as to assist in supporting and building on these fundamental elements in the Commonwealth association. At the same time the Commonwealth is not a formal organisation. It does not encroach on the sovereignty of individual members. Nor does it require its members to seek to reach collective decisions or to take united action. Experience has proved that there are advantages in such informality. It enables its members to adapt their procedures to meet changing circumstances; conversely there would be disadvantages in establishing too formal procedures and institutions in the association.

General considerations

5. Both the Secretary-General and his staff should be seen to be the servants of Commonwealth countries collectively. They derive their functions from the authority of Commonwealth Heads of Government; and in the discharge of his responsibilities in this connection the Secretary-General should have access to Heads of Government, who will indicate the appropriate channels of communication to them.

6. The Secretariat should not arrogate to itself executive functions. At the same time it should have, and develop, a relationship with other intra-Commonwealth bodies.

7. The Secretariat should have a constructive role to play. At the same time it should operate initially on a modest footing; and its staff and functions should be left to expand pragmatically in the light of experience, subject always to the approval of Governments.

8. Against this background and in the expectation that, as its contacts spread, the Secretariat could expect to receive increasing calls on its resources, the various functions which it will exercise fall under the following broad headings: international affairs, economic affairs and general and administrative functions.

International affairs

9. Consultation is the life blood of the Commonwealth association. At their Meeting in July 1964, the Commonwealth Prime Ministers expressed the view that on matters of major international importance a fuller exchange of views could very appropriately be promoted on an increasingly multilateral basis through the agency of the Secretariat. They were particularly anxious to ensure that there should be opportunity for fuller participation by all member countries in the normal processes of Commonwealth consultation. At the same time they showed themselves conscious of the importance of maintaining the unwritten conventions which have always determined those processes. The Secretary-General will observe the same conventions and act in the same spirit.

10. In so far as Commonwealth Governments agree that the Secretariat should discharge any specific task, it will be fully at their disposal. In general, however, its purpose will be to serve them by facilitating and promoting consultation on matters of common concern. To this end, subject to the general principles set out in paragraphs 12 and 13 below, the Secretary-General will arrange to prepare and circulate papers on international questions of common concern to all Commonwealth Governments where he considers it useful to do so. It may also prove helpful if, in consultation with the Governments concerned, he arranges occasional meetings of officials of member Governments for the exchange of information and views on agreed subjects. Such meetings might on occasion, if member Governments agreed, take place in various Commonwealth capitals or elsewhere.

11. The general principles which the Secretary-General will observe are set out in the following paragraphs.

12. The functions of the Secretariat are envisaged as being inter alia the dissemination of factual information to member countries on matters of common concern. "Factual" information cannot be precisely defined; but, provided that the Secretary-General proceeds with circumspection in the exercise of this function, he is authorised, where he thinks it useful to do so, to prepare and circulate, either on his own initiative or at the request of a member Government, papers on international questions of common concern, provided that these papers do not propagate any particular sectional or partisan points of view, contain no policy judgments or recommendations by the Secretariat and do not touch upon the internal affairs of a member country or disputes or serious differences between two or more member countries. In addition, the Secretary-General will, on the request of a member Government, circulate papers submitted by that Government on international questions of common concern, provided that, if these touch upon the internal affairs of member countries or disputes between two or more member countries, they will not be circulated without prior concurrence of the country or countries concerned. The Secretary-General has discretion to refuse to prepare or circulate any paper, whatever its origin, which in his view propagates any sectional or partisan point of view or would for any other reason be liable to be offensive to any member country or countries.

13. The position of the remaining dependent territories within the Commonwealth is one matter which continues to command lively interest among member countries. The Secretariat could play a role in this field; and it might circulate to member Governments balanced papers on the constitutional advance of the remaining territories or on their progress towards independence, on the understanding that the responsible member Governments would always be closely consulted in the preparation of the papers.

14. The Secretariat will be guided by the principles outlined in the preceding paragraphs because it is important that it should develop as a unifying element within the Commonwealth. But, provided that it begins modestly and remains careful not to trespass on the independence and sovereignty of the member Governments whose servant it will be, it will be possible for it to grow in the spirit of the Commonwealth association itself. All Commonwealth Governments wish to contribute to this process and will be ready to assist the Secretary-General in every possible way. In particular the Secretary-General will from the outset establish close relations with Commonwealth Governments and with their representatives in London; and Governments will arrange to keep the development of the Secretariat's functions under regular review, by means of an annual report on its work. By these means the Secretariat will gradually accumulate, with the passage of time, a body of knowledge and experience which will contribute to an even closer understanding among member Governments on those major international issues which are of common and continuing concern to all the members of the Commonwealth.

Economic Affairs

15. The Secretariat will discharge several valuable roles in the economic field, the more important of which are outlined in the following paragraphs. Several intra-Commonwealth bodies are already actively at work in this field, and their relationship to the Secretariat is to be examined in accordance with the arrangements set out in paragraphs 23 to 26.

16. The Secretary-General will initiate, collate and distribute to member Governments material bearing not only on economic problems, but also on social and cultural issues in respect of which the potential value of his work could be considerable. He is authorised to follow up the specialised factual reports of the various agencies already at work in these fields by promoting wider ranging studies on, e.g., the inter-relationship of agricultural and industrial growth in the new Commonwealth. In this connection the Secretary-General may implement such tasks by commissioning, within the limits prescribed by his approved budget, specialist studies from outside expert sources rather than by engaging additional permanent staff.

17. Apart from servicing meetings of the various Commonwealth economic bodies, the Secretariat may, as appropriate, be represented at meetings of these specialised agencies in order to keep in close touch with their activities; and it will also keep in touch with the various United Nations agencies whose work in Commonwealth countries will on occasion be of direct concern to it.

18. In connection with the general economic aspects of the Secretariat's work, the proposals advanced at the last meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers for the initiation of joint Commonwealth Development Projects in individual Commonwealth countries are relevant. The passage from the 1964 communiqué read:

"In particular they considered a proposal that development projects might be launched in individual Commonwealth countries, which would be implemented by various members acting in close collaboration and contributing whatever resources—in men, money, materials and technical expertise—they could most appropriately provide. Such projects, which would be additional to the support which Commonwealth countries already provide to the United Nations Special Fund and Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance, could be directed to a number of different purposes—the improvement of agricultural production and the development of natural resources through extension services, training and research; the enlargement of professional and technical training; the development of new industries; and so forth. But they would all be inspired by the common purpose of promoting the development of the Commonwealth by a co-ordinated programme of joint or bilateral projects. The British Government said that they would be prepared to make a substantial contribution to projects of this kind within their expanding programme of development aid. The other member Governments expressed support for the objective of the proposal and agreed that further consideration should be given to the basis on which such a programme might be established."

19. As regards the Secretariat's general functions and, in particular, its activities in the economic field, it is important that nothing should be done which might disturb the existing channels of economic and technical assistance to member countries or duplicate the present bilateral and multilateral links.

The functions of the Secretariat in connection with the Commonwealth Development Projects are therefore expert and advisory and will not detract from the right of member countries to determine their own aid and development programmes.

20. Subject to these basic considerations the Secretariat will be able to play a valuable part in assisting member Governments, at their request, in advancing, and obtaining support for, development projects and technical assistance in a variety of fields on a multilateral Commonwealth basis, as appropriate. It will also help in the expeditious processing of requests for such assistance made by one Commonwealth country to another. In this connection, it will prepare and make available to Commonwealth Governments up-to-date information on the possibility of securing aid and technical assistance in various fields from individual countries of the Commonwealth.

21. Thus the Secretariat, by accumulating a reliable body of knowledge on the aid potential of the Commonwealth to which member countries can usefully have recourse for the purpose of promoting their own development, will enable Commonwealth countries generally to co-operate to the maximum extent possible in promoting the economic development of all.

22. In general, the Secretary-General, in discharging his functions in this field of economic and related affairs, will be guided by the principles set down in paragraphs 12 and 13.

Proposed Review of Intra-Commonwealth Organisations

23. A comprehensive review of existing intra-Commonwealth organisations concerned with economic and related affairs will be carried out, in view of the changing nature of the Commonwealth and of the fact that the multiplicity of organizations working in these fields has created problems of staff and finance.

24. The main purpose of this review will be to examine whether existing work on economic and related affairs is being unnecessarily duplicated; how far the activities of the Specialised Agencies of the United Nations now supersede those of existing intra-Commonwealth bodies; what Commonwealth bodies might usefully be absorbed within the Secretariat; which have functions so specialised that they cannot profitably be so absorbed; and how close co-operation between these latter and the Secretariat, particularly in the light of the needs of the changing Commonwealth, can most effectively be achieved.

25. In order to secure an impartial appraisal and to protect the future relationship between the Secretariat and other Commonwealth organisations this review will be carried out by a small committee, appointed by Commonwealth Governments, under an independent Chairman. In order to safeguard the Secretary-General's position he will not be a member of the Committee. Nevertheless, he will have the right to be present or to be represented throughout the proceedings of the Committee and to participate in its discussions. The Commonwealth organisations concerned will, of course, have the right to submit evidence to the Committee.

26. Pending the outcome of the review the Secretariat and the Commonwealth Economic Committee will work in the closest consultation. Again without prejudice to the review, the Secretariat will take over from the Commonwealth Relations Office as soon as convenient the secretarial functions which that Department at present carries out on behalf of the Commonwealth Liaison Committee.

Servicing of Commonwealth Meetings

27. The Secretariat, operating as the visible servant of the Commonwealth association, will carry out the task of servicing future meetings of Commonwealth Heads of Government and, where appropriate, other Ministerial and official meetings open to all members of the Commonwealth. The Secretariat will be able to rely on the host country for such secretarial help as it cannot itself provide and for assistance in matters of accommodation, hospitality, transport and the like.

28. The Secretariat will service the annual conferences of the Commonwealth Economic Consultative Council and meetings of the Commonwealth Liaison Committee. The more technical or specialised organisations, e.g., the Commonwealth Education Conference, the Commonwealth Education Liaison Committee or the Commonwealth Telecommunications Board will, pending the proposed review of Commonwealth organisations, continue to organise their own meetings.

29. As regards Meetings of Prime Ministers the Secretary-General will henceforth serve as Secretary-General to each Meeting. Subject to the principles set out in paragraphs

12 and 13 above, his duties will include the preparation, collation and circulation of papers on agenda items, together with such background papers as appear appropriate; the production of minutes; and, with the assistance of the host Government, the general organisation of the Meeting.

30. As to the preparation of the agenda itself, the Secretary-General will be responsible for co-ordinating this process in the light of such direct discussions as Commonwealth Heads of Government may find convenient. Heads of Government will maintain the practice whereby the provisional agenda is drawn up, after consultation among themselves, in the form of a list of broad headings for discussion and they also reserve to themselves decisions on the timing and location of their Meetings.

IV. Administrative Arrangements

31. In consonance with the above functions of the Secretariat, its administrative organisation will be as follows.

32. The Chief Officer of the Secretariat will be the Secretary-General, and all members of the staff of the Secretariat will be responsible only to him.

33. The Secretary-General will be appointed by Commonwealth Heads of Government collectively. He will be a man of high standing, equivalent in rank to a Senior High Commissioner. A significant part of his duties will be visiting member countries of the Commonwealth.

34. The Deputy Secretaries-General will be appointed by Commonwealth Heads of Government acting through their representatives in London. One Deputy Secretary-General will have the necessary qualifications and special responsibilities for economic matters and should deal, on request, with development projects. As the work of the Secretariat expands, it may become necessary to appoint a second Deputy Secretary-General who will be primarily concerned with the other functions of the Secretariat.

35. The paramount consideration in the selection of staff and in the determination of conditions of service will be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, due regard being paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible within the Commonwealth. The Secretary-General will have discretion, in the light of the above considerations, to appoint senior staff to the service of the Secretariat from among panels of names submitted by the Commonwealth Governments, who need not feel themselves limited to Government servants in submitting nominations.

36. The Secretary-General has authority to make appointments of junior staff, subject to the approved budgetary limitations.

37. All persons appointed to the staff of the Secretariat must be subject to clearance to the extent that their own Governments raise no objection to their suitability for employment. All members of the Secretariat, whatever their origin, must be strictly impartial in the discharge of their functions and place loyalty to the Commonwealth as a whole above all other considerations.

38. Senior officers, including the Secretary-General and Deputy Secretaries-General, will be appointed in the first instance for not more than five years and preferably not less than three in order to ensure continuity of administration. In determining the period of tenure of other individual officers, the Secretary-General will no doubt wish to have regard to the need to stagger appointments in order to avoid a complete change of senior staff at any one time.

39. The British Government will introduce legislation in order to give the Secretariat a legal personality under United Kingdom law and to accord to the Secretariat and its staff the immunities and privileges which are set out in Annex A.

40. Other Commonwealth Governments will take steps to accord corresponding immunities and privileges to the staff of the Secretariat when visiting their territories, subject to whatever constitutional processes are required.

41. The cost of the Secretariat will be borne in agreed shares by Commonwealth Governments; the scale of contributions is set out in Annex B.

42. The annual budget will be considered by the Commonwealth High Commissioners in London or their representatives, together with a United Kingdom representative, meeting as a Finance Committee. The budget will then be submitted to Commonwealth Governments for their approval. The Senior Commonwealth High Commissioner in London or a representative of the British Government will be responsible for convening the Finance Committee as necessary.

ANNEX A

COMMONWEALTH SECRETARIAT

Proposed Scale of Immunities and Privileges

1. Secretariat

(i) To have a legal personality and immunity from suit and legal process except—

(a) when expressly waived:

(b) in respect of motor accidents and motor traffic offences;

(c) when arbitration proceedings are taken in relation to written contracts (this implies the insertion of a compulsory arbitration clause in all contracts entered into by the Secretariat).

(ii) To have inviolability of premises, archives and communications.

(iii) To have relief from non-beneficial rates out of the United Kingdom Treasury Vote.

(iv) Goods imported for official purposes to be exempt from all Customs dues.

(v) To have immunity from direct taxes.

(vi) Indirect taxes on substantial purchases for official purposes to be reimbursed, out of the Commonwealth Relations Office Vote, e.g., on furniture and furnishings, office supplies, and British motor cars and road fuel duty on petrol used for official purposes. It is intended that the same treatment should be accorded to the Secretariat as is accorded to the Office of a High Commissioner.

2. Staff

(i) High officers

The Secretary-General, the Deputy Secretaries-General and other senior staff, to enjoy (provided they are not citizens of, or permanently resident in, the United Kingdom) the privileges and immunities appropriate to a diplomatic agent of comparable rank, appropriate arrangements being made in respect to British income tax.

This implies full personal immunities extending to the family of the High Officer, inviolability of private residence, continuing Customs privileges, relief from non-beneficial rates (out of the United Kingdom Treasury Vote), and reimbursement of purchase tax on British motor cars, and of excise duty on reasonable quantities of British spirits (both out of the Commonwealth Relations Office Vote).

In accordance with Article 38 of the Vienna Convention, diplomatic agents who are either citizens of the receiving State or permanently resident there enjoy only immunity from jurisdiction and inviolability in respect of official acts performed in the exercise of their functions. High Officers of the Secretariat who fall within the ambit of this Article would be treated accordingly; but they would not have their immunities and privileges restriced in this way solely and account of dual citizenship.

(ii) Other staff

(a) Any other staff recruited from Commonwealth countries other than the United Kingdom to enjoy first arrival Customs privileges—i.e., the right to import duty-free their furniture and personal effects, including a motor car (or refund of purchase tax from the Commonwealth Relations Office Vote if a British car is purchased), at the time of first taking up their post.

(b) All staff, including United Kingdom citizens, to enjoy immunity from suit and legal process only in relation to their official acts and inviolability only in relation to their official papers and documents. This official immunity will not extend to motor car accidents or motor traffic offences.

3. Income tax

The United Kingdom Government to repay to the Secretariat an amount broadly equivalent to the amount of income tax levied on the salaries and emoluments of Secretariat staff.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENTATION OF OIL PAINTING DEPICTING FATHERS OF CONFEDERATION

Mr. Speaker: Order. On the eve of the 98th anniversary of Canada's Confederation I ask leave to make an announcement of interest and importance to all hon. Members, which should be of significance to all Canadians.

In the tragic fire of 1916 that destroyed the old Centre Block we lost one of the finest historical treasures, the monumental oil painting by Robert Harris of the Fathers of Confederation. That famous painting, which only exists now in copy, depicts the Quebec Conference of 1864. I know all hon. Members will be delighted to learn that an exact restoration of the Robert Harris painting is to be presented to the nation by Confederation Life Association. It will be hung in the Parliament Buildings, hopefully well before July 1, 1967. The artist commissioned for this challenging task is Mr. Rex Woods, of Toronto, who is noted for his portrayal of persons and events from Canada's past.

The success of our forthcoming centennial hinges on the imagination and leadership of government at all levels, voluntary and other organizations, business and individuals. I am sure this gift to the nation from Confederation Life will help to make Canadian history come alive, both for our own people and for those of other lands.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CONVICTIONS AND EXECUTIONS FOR MURDER

Question No. 42—Mr. Matheson:

1. In the period from 1920 to 1964 inclusive, how many persons convicted of murder and sentenced to death (a) were executed (b) had their sentences commuted?

2. Of those persons whose sentences were commuted, categorized by years served, how many convicts (a) died in custody (b) are still in custody (c) were released?

3. Of those persons who were released by parole or ticket-of-leave how many had to be returned to prison?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): 1. (a) 387 executed; (b) 257 sentences commuted.

Note: With respect to part (a), it should be noted, if comparing this figure with statistics previously given by years, that the total yields one more than the addition of the individual years because of the omission of one case in 1954 which has now been corrected.

2. (a) 33 inmates: 4, 1 year; 1, 4 years; 2, 5 years; 3, 6 years; 1, 7 years; 3, 9 years; 3, 10 years; 1, 11 years; 1, 12 years; 1, 14 years; 1, 15 years; 1, 16 years; 5, 18 years; 1, 19 years; 1, 28 years; 1, 30 years; 1, 40 years; 1, 41 years; 1, 46 years; total 33.

(b) 94 inmates: 9, 1 year; 6, 2 years; 7, 3 years; 8, 4 years; 9, 5 years; 9, 6 years; 6, 7 years; 7, 8 years; 3, 9 years; 3, 10 years; 4, 11 years; 3, 12 years; 2, 14 years;

2, 15 years; 2, 18 years; 1, 19 years; 1, 24 years; 1, 26 years; 1, 29 years; 1, 30 years; 1, 33 years; 2, 34 years; 1, 37 years; 2, 40 years; 1, 41 years; 2, 43 years.

(c) 108 released: 1 between 2 and 3 years; 1 between 3 and 4 years; 3 between 5 and 6 years; 3 between 6 and 7 years; 4 between 7 and 8 years; 6 between 8 and 9 years; 5 between 9 and 10 years; 6 between 10 and 11 years; 9 between 11 and 12 years; 11 between 12 and 13 years; 2 between 13 and 14 years; 15 between 14 and 15 years; 20 between 15 and 16 years; 6 between 16 and 17 years; 6 between 17 and 18 years; 4 between 18 and 19 years; 2 between 19 and 20 years; 4 over 20 years.

3. Nine of those persons who were released by parole or ticket of leave had to be returned to prison.

Note: In comparing the number of commuted sentences with the total of those who died in custody, are still in custody and those released, it should be noted that the latter figures do not include those who were commuted and were committed to mental institutions. In addition, records were destroyed in the fire of June 1962, at St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, so that the documentation is not complete. The National Parole Board also reports that no assurance can be given that its records are complete for the earlier years.

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO PROVINCIAL DISASTERS

Question No. 187—Mr. Basford:

In what year, in what amount, and how designated, has the federal government contributed to alleviating national disasters beyond the financial ability of the provinces?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): The information requested is given, for the years 1949-59 to 1961-62 on pages 4075 and 4076 of Hansard for October 28, 1963. The information for subsequent years is as follows: 1962-63, Nil; 1963-64, Nil; 1964-65, British Columbia, Port Alberni Flood, $250,000.

In addition to the foregoing, sums of $1.5 million in 1963-64 and $400,000 in 1964-65 were provided with respect to flood relief in the Mackenzie district of the Northwest Territories.

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO MAINTENANCE OF MEMORIAL BUILDING, CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.

Question No. 198—Mr. Macquarrie:

Is it the intention of the Government of Canada to contribute to the maintenance of the Fathers of Confederation Memorial Building in Charlottetown and, if so, what amount is to contributed annually?

[Mr. Macdonald.]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Yes; $100,000.

*FEDERAL IMPLEMENTATION OF PROVINCIAL AGREEMENTS WITH FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Question No. 269—Mr. Fairweather:

1. On what occasions since July 1, 1867 has the Government of Canada been requested by any of the provincial governments for an intergovernmental exchange to implement an entente, or an accord or an agreement entered into by a province and a foreign power respecting matters within provincial jurisdiction?

2. Briefly, what was the subject-matter in each case?

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part is as follows: Until approximately 40 years ago the occasion for a request of the nature specified in the question would not have arisen under the Canadian constitution. Any interest which a province might have had in participating in arrangements with other governmental entities was a matter falling within the sphere of responsibility of Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom. All arrangements concerning matters falling within provincial legislative jurisdiction and purporting to have effect beyond the boundaries of the province were either embodied in Empire treaties or were in the nature of internal arrangements between the various parts of the Empire. The constitutional position prevailing until then, coupled with the fact that in the meantime the provinces have only infrequently seen the need in practice for formal arrangements to be entered into with foreign countries on matters within their legislative jurisdiction, has meant that there have been few occasions in practice when the provinces have found it necessary to seek the assistance of the federal Government in this respect.

The answer to the second part is as follows. In 1958 the federal Government was asked by the Government of New Brunswick to facilitate the conclusion of an agreement by that province and the state of Maine for the construction of the Campobello-Lubec bridge. A similar request was received from the province of Ontario in 1959 in connection with an agreement to be entered into between that province and the state of Minnesota for the construction of a bridge over the Pigeon River. Details of the two occasions since April 1963 on which the Government of Canada facilitated the arrangements between the province of Quebec and France have already been given to the House in answer to question No. 2,768 asked by the hon. Member for Edmonton West on February 23, 1965. The text of this answer can be found on page 11818 of Hansard for March 1, 1965. Since then the federal Government has been requested by the province of New Brunswick to facilitate the conclusion of an agreement between that province and the state of Maine for the construction of a bridge across the St. Croix River at Milltown.

LOANS TO STUDENTS

Question No. 280—Mr. Caouette:

1. Under the Canada Student Loans Act (a) how many loans have been granted to students in each province since the proclamation of the Act (b) what is the total amount of such loans (c) are all Quebec students excluded from the application of the Act (d) if so, for what reason (e) if not, under what conditions may they qualify?

2. What qualifications are required in order to obtain such a loan?

3. Does a university student coming from Quebec, whose residence has been established for more than 12 months in another province, become eligible for such loans?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. Under the Canada Student Loans Plan, loans may be made by banks and designated credit unions only on the basis of certificates of eligibility issued by the provinces participating in the Plan. These certificates are issued only to students considered by one of these provinces to be residents for the purposes of the Canada Student Loans Plan. The provinces have recently established criteria for determining which participating province is the appropriate one to handle a student's application for a certificate of eligibility. These criteria are contained in the approved report of the Federal-Provincial committee on residence which appears in Appendix "A" of Hansard of June 11, 1965.

(a) and (b) As of April 1, 1965, the number of students assisted and the amounts of certificates of eligibility issued by the participating provinces, were as follows:

Province	Number of Students Assisted	Amount of Certificates Issued
Newfoundland	732	$ 456,512
Prince Edward Island	431	288,609
Nova Scotia	2,450	1,729,008
New Brunswick	2,008	1,347,188
Ontario	21,287	14,004,565
Manitoba	2,259	1,371,520
Saskatchewan	2,965	1,867,420
Alberta	4,481	2,083,488
British Columbia	4,650	3,100,031
Yukon	12	8,600
Northwest Territories	9	9,000
	41,284	$26,265,941

Data on the number and amount of loans made by the banks and designated credit unions on the basis of certificates of eligibility issued are not yet available.

(c) No. (e) A student from the Province of Quebec may apply for a certificate of eligibility in a participating province if he has become eligible to apply there according to the criteria established in the approved report of the Federal-Provincial committee on residence referred to above. If he is single and financially dependant on his parents, he will be eligible to apply for a certificate in a participating province if his parents move to that province, and he will be eligible as of the date of that move. If he is married or can establish to the satisfaction of a participating province that he is fully self supporting financially, he will become eligible to apply for a certificate in a participating province 12 months after having moved to that province.

2. A student must apply for and obtain a certificate of eligibility issued by the appropriate authority of a participating province. To qualify, a student must (a) be a Canadian citizen or have landed immigrant status with 12 months residence in Canada, (b) be enrolled or plan to enrol as a full time student in a post-secondary course of study at an educational institution specified for the purposes of the Canada Student Loans Plan by a participating province, (c) have attained satisfactory scholastic standard, (d) actually need a loan to pursue his studies; and (e) meet the residence requirements in a participating province on the basis of the criteria contained in the approved report of the Federal-Provincial committee on residence referred to above.

3. A university student coming from Quebec will become eligible to apply for a loan in a participating province 12 months after he has moved to that province if he is married or has established to the satisfaction of the province to which he applies that he is financially fully self supporting.

PAROLE OFFICERS IN JUSTICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 353—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many parole officers are employed by the Department of Justice and what is their jurisdiction?
2. How many of these are trained social workers?
3. How many are university graduates in the social sciences?
4. Does the Department make provisions for bursaries for the training of more parole officers and, if so, how many bursaries and for how much?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): 1. Forty five parole officers are employed by the Department of Justice. The jurisdiction of those employed in the field offices is geographically limited to specified areas and the duties include the direct interviewing of applicants for parole; the direct or indirect supervision of persons on parole and the maintenance of liaison with crown authorities.

Generally speaking, the jurisdiction of parole officers employed at headquarters is geographically limited to a specified area and their duties include the assembly of data necessary to the study of parole cases; the preparation of summaries, based on the data assembled, for consideration by the National Parole Board and the performance of incidental duties.

In addition to parole officers in the direct employment of the Department of Justice, parole supervision is also performed on behalf of the Federal Government by employees of qualified agencies in the corrections field.

[Mr. Pennell.]

2. Eighteen.
3. Twelve.
4. No.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Question No. 427—Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron):

1. How many of the original Members of the Centennial Commission are still with the Commission?
2. How many Members of the Centennial Commission have resigned within the past six months?
3. Of the amount of money allocated to this project, how much has been spent to date?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): The Commission understands parts 1 and 2 to refer to members of the Board of Directors of the Centennial Commission. Therefore:

1. 8.
2. 2.
3. $6,509,043 to March 31, 1965.

PUBLIC WORKS EXPENDITURES, CHARLEVOIX COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 430—Mr. Bélanger:

1. How much money did the Department of Public Works allocate for the County of Charlevoix from March, 1958, to June, 1962?
2. How much was actually spent?
3. How much money did the Department of Public Works allocate for the County of Charlevoix from June, 1962, to January, 1965?
4. How much was actually spent?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): It is not feasible to provide aggregate information on expenditure disbursements or revenue collections for constituencies, counties or other comparable units. Government estimates are not prepared on this basis nor are records of expenditures kept in this way.

Information concerning expenditures could be supplied about specific projects or programs which are identified in a question. These, of course, would in some cases relate to a particular constituency or locality.

HEALTH AND WELFARE EXPENDITURES, CHARLEVOIX COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 431—Mr. Bélanger:

1. How much money did the Department of National Health and Welfare allocate for the County of Charlevoix from March, 1958, to June, 1962?
2. How much was actually spent?
3. How much money did the Department of National Health and Welfare allocate for the County of Charlevoix from June, 1962, to January, 1965?
4. How much was actually spent?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): It is not feasible to provide aggregate information on expenditure disbursements or revenue collections for constituencies, counties or other comparable units. Government estimates are not prepared on this basis nor are records of expenditures kept in this way.

Information concerning expenditures could be supplied about specific projects or programs which are identified in a question. These, of course, would in some cases relate to a particular constituency or locality.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT EXPENDITURES, CHARLEVOIX COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 432—Mr. Bélanger:

1. How much money did the Post Office Department allocate for the County of Charlevoix from March, 1958, to June, 1962?
2. How much was actually spent?
3. How much money did the Post Office Department allocate for the County of Charlevoix from June, 1962, to January, 1965?
4. How much was actually spent?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): It is not feasible to provide aggregate information on expenditure disbursements or revenue collections for constituencies, counties or other comparable units. Government estimates are not prepared on this basis nor are records of expenditures kept in this way.

Information concerning expenditures could be supplied about specific projects or programs which are identified in a question. These, of course, would in some cases relate to a particular constituency or locality.

TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT EXPENDITURES, CHARLEVOIX COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 433—Mr. Bélanger:

1. What amount was allocated by the Department of Transport from March, 1958, to June, 1962, for the County of Charlevoix?
2. What amount was actually spent in that County?
3. What amount was allocated by the Department of Transport from June, 1962, to January, 1965, for the County of Charlevoix?
4. What amount was actually spent in that County?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): It is not feasible to provide aggregate information on expenditure disbursements or revenue collections for constituencies, counties or other comparable units. Government estimates are not prepared on this basis nor are records of expenditures kept in this way.

Information concerning expenditures could be supplied about specific projects or programs which are identified in a question. These, of course, would in some cases relate to a particular constituency or locality.

4. What amount was actually spent in that County?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): It is not feasible to provide aggregate information on expenditure disbursements or revenue collections for constituencies, counties or other comparable units. Government estimates are not prepared on this basis nor are records of expenditures kept in this way.

Information concerning expenditures could be supplied about specific projects or programs which are identified in a question. These, of course, would in some cases relate to a particular constituency or locality.

REQUEST BY SUPERANNUATES FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

Question No. 656—Mr. Southam:

1. Did the Minister of Finance recently receive either a written or personal representation from officials of the National Association of Federal Superannuates requesting an upward adjustment in pensions to meet the ever increasing cost of living and, if so, has a meeting between his departmental officials and those of the Federal Superannuates been arranged to discuss this important matter?

2. Will Federal Superannuates receive the same escalation benefits as those planned for active civil servants when the Canada Pension Plan goes into effect January 1, 1966?

3. What was the balance of the Public Service Superannuation Fund as of December 31, 1964?

4. By what amount during the last fiscal year did the interest accumulations on the Public Service Superannuation Fund exceed the payments made to Superannuates in the same period?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. The Minister of Finance has received such representations from time to time. He and his officers participated in meetings with representatives of that association during the past year.

2. The escalation of benefits under the Canada Pension Plan will be applied in accordance with that plan to all who contribute under it in respect of their benefits under it and not in respect of any benefits payable under the Public Service Superannuation Act.

3. Approximately $2,136,046,470.

4. Approximately $26,129,200.

PRICES OF C.M.H.C. HOMES

Question No. 702—Mr. Stenson:

1. What was the average price of homes built in Canada under Central Mortgage and Housing for the years 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963 and 1964?

2. What was the average land costs for these years?

3. What are the land costs for Central Mortgage and Housing homes in the cities of Hamilton, Kitchener, Metropolitan Toronto, Oshawa, Ottawa, Kingston, London and Peterborough in 1962-63?

4. What is the cost per lot, including land costs, all utilities and curbs, gutters, paved streets and storm drains in the following cities: Hamilton, Kitchener, Metropolitan Toronto, Oshawa, Ottawa, Kingston, London and Peterborough?

5. Do any municipalities ask for assistance toward trunk services for a Central Mortgage project and, if so, which municipalities?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1. 1958, $14,479; 1959, $14,729; 1960, $14,639; 1961, $14,888; 1962, $15,233; 1963, $15,682; 1964, $16,478.

Note: Data relate to estimated average costs of single detached dwellings financed under the National Housing Act. The mortgage insurance fee is excluded.

2. No series is available on the costs of undeveloped land. Data are available on the costs (estimated by loan applicants) of lots on which NHA financed houses are constructed. These costs vary with variations in the services provided, and with the extent to which such services are financed by municipal taxes. Of the two series below, (a) shows estimated costs for all lots, whatever the degree of servicing or method of payment. Series (b) shows estimated costs only for lots serviced with piped water and sanitary sewer, and for which the cost of all services is included in the price of the lot.

Questions

	(a)	(b)
1958	$ 2,471	$ *
1959	2,533	*
1960	2,473	3,087

1963	2,973	3,503
1964	3,082	3,553

* not available

3 and 4. As indicated in 2 above, data on the costs of undeveloped land are not available.

The two sets of data, (a) and (b) referred to in 2 above are provided below for the centres indicated. Series (a) however, relates to the areas serviced by CMHC field offices in the centres indicated. In most cases, these areas are larger than the metropolitan and major urban areas specified. Series (b) relates only to the metropolitan or major urban areas specified.

	(a)		(b)
	1962	1963	1962	1963
Hamilton	$ 3,818	$ 4,054	$ 4,396	$ 4,458

* not available

5. Originally it was the requirement that trunk services to the edge of a Federal-Provincial land assembly or public housing project area were to be provided by a municipality at its own expense. Early in 1964, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation agreed that the cost of extending trunk services to a Federal-Provincial project could be allowed as a project development charge, provided the financial arrangements for these trunk services and the installation of services within the project area were the same as those applicable to privately-developed subdivisions. Since that time, the Townships of Etobicoke and Sandwich East have requested financial assistance to instal trunk services and the Federal-Provincial Partnership has agreed in each case to participate.

CAUSEWAY CONSTRUCTION, PICTOU HARBOUR, N.S.

Question No. 706—Mr. Douglas:

1. Has the government received any representations asking them to participate in the construction of a causeway-dam across Pictou harbour, Nova Scotia, at the mouth of the Middle and West Rivers?

2. If so (a) who made these representations and what were the dates of such representations (b) what answer did the government give to these representations?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Public Works): 1 and 2. In a letter dated February 2, 1965, Hon. Stephen Pyke requested approval to route the trans-Canada highway across Pictou Harbour at the mouth of the Middle and West Rivers. The route was approved as requested on the basis that under the Trans-Canada Highway Agreement the federal government would participate only in the actual or equivalent cost of the most economical crossing for a two lane highway. The type of crossing to be used has not yet been established.

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING ALASKA HIGHWAY AND ROUTE THROUGH MAINE

Question No. 707—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

Are any discussions going on at the present time between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States, initiated either by the Government of Canada or on behalf of any of the provinces, with regard to the improvement of the Alaska Highway through Canada and the possible construction of a direct route from the Maritime Provinces through the State of Maine to the Montreal area?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No.

CORRIDOR ROAD THROUGH MAINE

Question No. 708—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. Are any discussions in progress between any of the provincial governments and the Government of Canada, relating to the construction of a so-called corridor road running from the Montreal area through Maine to the McAdam area of New Brunswick?

2. Has the government received any proposals regarding such a road from the International Atlantic Corridor Road Committee?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. No.

2. No.

*LEGALIZATION OF LOTTERIES

Question No. 713—Mr. Pigeon:

1. Is it the intention of the government to amend the penal code in order to legalize lotteries in Canada?

2. If so, when will such action be taken?

3. If not, for what reasons will the code not be amended?

[Translation]

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): The most recent expression of Government intention on this subject was contained in the press release following the federal-provincial conference held in November, 1963, as follows:

"Some provincial governments explained the difficulties they have in enforcing the provisions of the Criminal Code in respect of lotteries and gambling. Suggestions were made that the institution of provincial lotteries would alleviate the situation. Other provinces, however, opposed this suggestion. The Federal Government indicated that it had no interest in instituting a Federal lottery but undertook to consider the amendment of the Criminal Code in the light of the views put forward."

The government has not come to any decision as to what amendments, if any, should be proposed for the lottery sections of the Criminal Code.

LAKEHEAD—BRIDGE OVER KAMINISTIQUIA RIVER

Question No. 723—Mr. Fisher:

1. Does the Department of Transport have under consideration proposals made by the Northwestern Ontario Development Association that a new bridge structure be erected over the Kaministiquia River at James Street?

2. Has the Department exchanged any correspondence and expressed any views or received any views from the Lakehead Harbour Commission on the need for such a structure and the relative responsibilities of the Department and this agency in such a project?

3. What statutory authority or regulations in the hands of the Minister relate to the construction of a bridge over navigable waters?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Several weeks ago Mr. Hubert Badanai, M.P., for Fort William accompanied by Senator Paterson gave the Minister of Transport a copy of a brief submitted by the Northwestern Ontario Development Association to the government of Ontario, but this brief does not contain any specific proposal of recommendation from the association regarding a new bridge structure though strong representations in favour of a new bridge were made by Mr. Badanai and Senator Paterson. The Department is, however, considering, in consultation with the Department of Public Works and the Canadian National Railways, the nature and scope of federal responsibility for a new crossing of the Kaministiquia River.

2. The Department has deferred communicating with the Lakehead Harbour Commission on this subject until the completion of the examination referred to in answer to No. 1.

3. In respect of railway bridges, the Railway Act and in respect of bridges in public harbours or over canals, the Department of Transport Act, Harbours Commissions Act, 1964, the National Harbours Board Act and other Harbour Commissioners Acts.

LAKEHEAD—C.N.R. PARTICIPATION IN BRIDGE OVER KAMINISTIQUIA RIVER

Question No. 725—Mr. Fisher:

Has the Canadian National Railways given any consideration to any part it may play in determining whether a new bridge structure is advisable over the Kaministiquia River at or near James Street?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows: Yes, a representative of the Railways is a member of the committee formed to study the current problem.

MEDICAL INVESTIGATION OF WAR PRISONERS OF JAPANESE

Question No. 742—Mr. MacRae:

1. In connection with the medical investigation now being conducted concerning those veterans who were prisoners of the Japanese in World War II, what are the specific problems which require further study?
2. Which problems are being studied by the Department of National Defence and why is the Department of National Defence being used for this purpose?
3. When is this investigation expected to be completed?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. The problems which require further study have to do with the validation of certain observations and evaluation of the significance of others.

2. The Department of National Defence is involved to the extent that professional assistance is being given by specially qualified staff of that Department, as stated in the House on May 7, 1965.

3. Some parts of the investigation have been completed and appropriate action taken. Attention is drawn to the statement of May 7, 1965, regarding dental treatment. The study of other matters will be completed in phases, probably during the current year, but it is possible that some of the problems associated with the increasing age of the veterans will require continued study over a period of years.

BANK CURRENCY AND ASSETS

Question No. 744—Mr. Caouette:

1. At the end of the last fiscal year, what was the total currency in the banks and held outside of the banks?
2. What was the total amount of the money supply in Canada at the end of the last fiscal year?
3. At the end of the last fiscal year, what were the total assets of the eight chartered banks?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. At March 31, 1965 the chartered banks held $36 million of coin in Canada and $351 million of Bank of Canada notes. At the same date as shown by the Bank of Canada Statistical Summary the amount of coin outside banks was $232 million and the amount of Bank of Canada notes outside banks was $1,938 million.

2. A commonly used calculation of the money supply is total Canadian deposits of the chartered banks less items in transit plus notes and coin outside banks. This figure was $18,440 million at March 31, 1965.

3. The total assets of the eight chartered banks at March 31, 1965 were:

	million
Bank of Montreal	$ 4,787
The Bank of Nova Scotia	3,149
The Toronto-Dominion Bank	2,650
The Provincial Bank of Canada	522
Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce	5,750
The Royal Bank of Canada	5,911
Banque Canadienne Nationale	975
The Mercantile Bank of Canada	161
Total	$23,905

FISH CONSERVATION, NEWFOUNDLAND-LABRADOR

Question No. 748—Mr. Tucker:

Has the Department of Fisheries given consideration to (a) the installation of fish hatcheries in Newfoundland-Labrador and the carrying out of a restocking program (b) changing regulations to more adequately suit all coasts and waters in Newfoundland-Labrador (c) rescinding fishing leases to individuals and private groups in inland waters in Newfoundland-Labrador?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): (a) Yes, and it has concluded that there would be no justification for such action. Other fish culture techniques are applied and are proving beneficial in the conservation program. (b) Regulations in Newfoundland-Labrador are constantly under review and are frequently amended to meet requirements of the fisheries in coastal waters. (c) Any matters pertaining to fishing leases to individuals and private groups in inland waters are entirely under the jurisdiction of the government of the province concerned.

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Question No. 751—Mr. Dubé:

What were the amounts paid by Canada under the fiscal arrangements plan to each of the four Atlantic Provinces in the fiscal years ending March 31, 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964 and 1965?

Questions

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): The payments under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act, 1956, and the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1961, to each of the four Atlantic Provinces for the fiscal years ending in 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964 and 1965 are as follows:

Fiscal Year Ending in	Newfoundland	Prince Edward Island	Nova Scotia	New Brunswick
1960	$27,516,519	$6,889,963	$39,444,809	$33,798,238
1961	27,959,535	7,302,159	39,742,439	34,249,122
1962	27,578,048	7,280,665	39,816,660	33,733,171
1963	32,418,624	6,726,837	33,794,565	27,338,284
1964	33,760,800	7,392,600	31,842,120	27,915,730
1965 (prelim.)	37,349,230	9,122,750	40,270,880	35,865,060

CHANGE OF NAME OF HAMILTON RIVER, NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 760—Mr. Simpson:

1. Did the government change the name of the Hamilton River in Newfoundland, to Churchill?
2. If not, was the government consulted before the change was made and did it approve the change of names?

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): 1. No. The name of the Hamilton River was changed by Act 45-1965 of the Newfoundland legislature.

2. No. The provinces are recognized to have jurisdiction over geographical names within their boundaries. On the passage of the provincial Act, the name change was approved by and recorded in the files of the Canadian Permanent Committee on Geographical Names.

EMPLOYMENT DIFFICULTIES OF INDIANS AND HALF BREEDS

Question No. 772—Mr. Fisher:

1. Does the N.E.S. or any other agency or branch of the Department of Labour have an estimate of the unemployment difficulties of treaty Indians, non-treaty Indians, Métis or half-breeds, in Canada, and particularly in northern Ontario?
2. If so, what is the estimate, in summary?
3. Does N.E.S. encounter any particular problem in finding consistently gainful employment in northern Ontario for treaty Indians, non-treaty Indians, Métis or half-breeds?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): 1 and 2. The National Employment Service of the Department of Labour co-operates with the Indian Affairs Branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration in the placement of Indian workers. It is estimated that last year, under this arrangement, some 2,500 Indian workers were placed in employment across Canada. N.E.S. does not maintain separate records of Indian applicants for employment so that a precise breakdown of Indian placements by geographical location is not known.

3. Problems are encountered by N.E.S. in finding gainful employment for Indians in this area, problems similar to those encountered in many areas. In general terms these are related to lack of skills, low education, language problems, and remoteness from job opportunities.

EXTENSION OF C.B.C. TELEVISION FACILITIES

Question No. 781—Mr. Simpson:

Has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation announced or developed a definite plan to provide for an early extension of television network facilities to those populated areas not now served by the C.B.C. and, if so, does the government intend to recommend to Parliament that a special grant be provided for such purpose?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I am informed that the Corporation maintains a television planning list consisting of locations in Canada which do not receive C.B.C. service. I am informed also that the question of television coverage extension by Corporation stations has been discussed with the advisory committee on broadcasting. The current budget of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation includes capital sums for the extension of C.B.C. facilities in various regions. The question of a recommendation to Parliament of a special grant will be considered by the Government when it has received and studied the report of the committee on broadcasting.

CENTENNIAL GRANT APPLICATION, SAUGEEN TOWNSHIP, ONT.

Question No. 784—Mr. Loney:

Has an application been received for a Centennial Project Grant from the Municipality of Saugeen Township, Bruce County, Ontario?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): The Centennial Commission does not receive applications made by towns and municipalities until they are approved by the provincial government concerned and therefore has no way of knowing how many applications were submitted by towns and municipalities in any constituency. No application relating to a project or projects has been received from the Ontario Centennial Advisory Committee referring to the municipality of Saugeen Township, Bruce County, Ontario, as at June 17, 1965.

SURVEYS ON LAKE OF TWO MOUNTAINS INDIAN RESERVE

Question No. 786—Mr. MacInnis:

1. Have engineers and surveyors under federal authority been conducting surveys on the Lake of Two Mountains Indian Reserve since January 1, 1965?

2. If so, for what purpose and under what authority are these surveys being conducted?

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): 1. Yes, assuming the reference to Lake of Two Mountains Indian Reserve means Oka Lands No. 16.

2. Legal survey of Indian land holdings under the authority of the Canada Lands Surveys Act, at the request of the Indian Affairs Branch, Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

SALE OF ROAD, ST. SYLVESTRE DE LOTBINIÈRE, QUE.

Question No. 798—Mr. Boutin:

1. Did the Department of National Defence put up for sale the road joining the Village of St. Sylvestre de Lotbinière to the radar installations nearby?

2. If so (a) on what date was it sold (b) what was the amount of each tender (c) what are the names of the tenderers (d) who purchased it and what was the purchase price?

[Translation]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): In so far as Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is concerned, the answer is as follows:
1. Those sections or strips of land that were acquired by the Crown in the right of Canada as improvements in, or substitutes for the old road known in part as the Ste-Catherine Range Road, and in part as old Ste. Marie Road were part of the radar site at St. Sylvestre offered for sale by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

Offers on these sections were not invited separately from the entire property.

2. The site has not yet been sold.

CORRESPONDENCE FROM GARTER KING OF ARMS RESPECTING FLAG

Motion No. 41—Mr. Coates:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of any letter or correspondence received by the government from the Garter King of Arms prior to the adoption of the new Canadian flag, January 28,

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I had a word with the hon. gentleman and explained to him that there was actually no correspondence relating to the flag of Canada, but there had been certain correspondence of a confidential character at an earlier time with the Garter King of Arms. The Garter King of Arms is regarded as a member of the Royal household, and to the best of my knowledge I do not believe there is any precedent for producing correspondence with any member of the Royal household. I believe the hon. Member feels that under the circumstances it would be appropriate to withdraw this Notice of Motion.

Mr. Coates: Withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO WORKERS AND INDUSTRIES AFFECTED BY AUTOMOBILE AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the strong protest launched by the U.A.W. against the newly announced TAB plan, and the recent strong protest from the Ford Motor Company, both of whom are directly affected, can the Minister of Labour say whether he is prepared to withdraw this plan and put forward a better plan which would be acceptable to both parties concerned?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, it is not intended to withdraw the plan. The plan is a good plan. It provides a very high level of benefits. It compares very favourably with the plan proposed in the United States, and in the circumstances I think it is quite proper to expect the Ford Motor Company to contribute to a fund to assist in the adjustment problems of these workers. Because of the care that has been taken in developing this plan; because it provides a high level of benefits for the workers; because it holds intact their SUB funds and benefits for the future, and because it places an obligation on the companies to contribute, I think it ought to be acceptable generally after this is fully understood.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How does the Minister justify his statement that this is a good plan when both parties who are subject to the plan are protesting against it?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I understand the attitude of the Ford Motor Company. It is an attitude that would be fully understood, but from the point of view of the public it is important in our view that the companies be given an opportunity to bear a part of this financial burden.

Mr. Starr: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How does the Minister justify this plan when the employees, in whom he has professed such great interest, are also protesting against it?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it would be unusual for the leadership of a trade union to accept fully any plan without suggesting that the benefits be higher and the reaction in this instance is fully understood and expected.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry. Consequent upon Canada signing the automotive agreement with the United States, the outright gift of $50 million to the car manufacturers, and the supplementary benefits now being provided for displaced Ford workers, can the Minister tell the House and all Canadians when we may expect to buy Canadian made cars at cheaper prices or in line with the prices of American made cars?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think the situation has been made clear. Over the period of the operation of the agreement in the next three years we can expect, as the President of the Ford Motor Company announced the other day, that there will be a significant narrowing of the price differential between Canadian and United States prices for cars.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister assure the House that the Ford Motor Company of Canada will be required to make these contributions, or is there any truth in the suggestion that it has the opportunity to opt out of this particular scheme?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, there is no compulsion in this plan at all with respect to the contributions from automobile companies with SUB plans. We fully expect that in the circumstances the companies will come forward and make contributions to the fund.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it a fact that the companies, which will get $50 million a year from the Canadian taxpayers, are not going to be required to make contributions under the plan; that any contributions will be purely voluntary and gratuitous if they decide to make them?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as long as it comes in the form of hard cash the description is quite unimportant.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): A supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Mr. Speaker. Are we to understand that the companies will get $150 million or $1 million a week before we can expect any lowering in the prices of cars?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GUY LORD—EMPLOYMENT IN OFFICE OF HIGH COMMISSIONER TO U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the Minister tell us whether Mr. Guy Lord, who figures prominently in the Dorion report, is still in the employ of the Canadian High Commissioner in Great Britain?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Oh, no, Mr. Speaker. He is a student at Oxford, the second best university in England.

ANDRÉ LETENDRE—INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUED EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I have a question for the Acting Minister of Justice. I wonder whether Mr. André Letendre remains in the Government service.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker. By virtue of the provisions of the Civil Service Act—I think it is section 71—he is no longer in the employ of the Government.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DORION REPORT—REPORTED SHORTAGE OF FRENCH COPIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell the house why it was not possible, as early as 7:15 o'clock last night, to get a French copy of the Dorion report?

Can he also tell the house if he intends to take steps to order a second edition to meet the public demand?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I cannot answer that question, but I will take steps to get the information for my hon. friend.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he can give assurance to the House that there will be sufficient copies of the Dorion report published to meet the public demand. I understand that the Queen's Printer has already run out.

Mr. Pearson: We are always anxious to meet the public demand. We certainly hope it will be met in this case.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EMPLOYMENT OF SECRETARIAL STAFF DURING RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): May I ask the President of the Privy Council if he is now able to make a statement with regard to the question I asked yesterday about the employment of the secretarial staff during the adjournment.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I understand that arrangements have been made to have that staff kept on during the recess. The arrangement is that they will be asked to take whatever holidays are coming to them early in the recess. Then they will be asked to do work to assist with the Inter-Parliamentary Union meeting which will be taking place here in September and to perform certain other work of that nature during any time they have left over after taking care of hon. Members' business.

INQUIRY AS TO SEATING ARRANGEMENTS AND APPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he has any announcement to make concerning the appointment of Parliamentary Secretaries, or a Parliamentary Secretary.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Winkler: May I ask a supplementary question. I should like to ask the House Leader if he can inform the House whether there have been any changes in the backbench seating plan for his supporters, and what those changes are.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps I can answer that. There has been a change. The hon. Member for York-Scarborough, who has been put in charge of the organization of committee work on this side, has moved up a little closer to the Whip.

[Later:]

Mr. Winkler: May I ask another question of the Prime Minister? Since, as I gather, only one move was made in the seating arrangements of supporters of the Government, can the right hon. gentleman tell the House what has happened to the hon. Member for Dollard? Did he move to another place, or, maybe, to the other place?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: I think his seat has been changed. I am not quite sure where it is.

INQUIRY AS TO APPLICATION OF CANADA LABOUR CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of his proud sponsorship of the legislation providing for a minimum wage of $1.25 an hour, and in view of the fact that tomorrow is July 1, can I ask the Minister whether all those in the employ of this House of Commons who are now receiving less than $1.25 an hour will find tomorrow that the change has been made and they will be earning not less than $1.25 an hour?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that as of July 1 every person in the employ of the Federal Government will receive the $1.25 per hour as a minimum. The statutory holidays and the vacations with pay will also be applied to all Government employees following July 1. With respect to the hours of work, this will require, as is provided in the bill, certain adjustment periods, and the same or similar procedures will be followed so that the objective of the hours of work will have been fully met over a period of time for those in the service of the Government.

With respect to the House of Commons, my information is that as of July 1 all employees will be in receipt of $1.25 an hour. If there are any individuals who are not then receiving this wage I would like to have their cases brought to our attention so the matter may be corrected at once. But my understanding is that everybody is covered.

Mr. Winch: I presume that covers employees of the House of Commons who may be called temporary employees, shall I say, such as student guides? I presume it covers all temporary employees as well?

Mr. MacEachen: I understand that the salary of student guides is far in excess of the minimum.

Mr. Winch: So it covers all temporary employees as well as guides?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Winkler.]

AGRICULTURE

VANCOUVER ISLAND—COMPENSATION FOR LOSS OF NURSERY STOCK THROUGH INFESTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture which is of concern to some agricultural producers in British Columbia. Can the Minister inform the House what his Department has done to meet the problem of the golden nematode, which has been bothering some farmers in British Columbia?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as hon. Members are aware, the department announced on June 22 that the golden nematode, a serious pest of potato and tomato crops, had been found in a commercial field of potatoes in the Saanich peninsula of Vancouver Island.

This is a serious pest, not only because of its effect on potato crops but because if it became widespread it could result in restrictions on exports of plants with soil and seed potatoes, particularly to the United States.

The nematode was identified on the Vancouver Island farm on June 17. The farm has been placed under quarantine, and the export out of Canada of plants or crops with soil from Vancouver Island has been prohibited. Departmental officials have conducted an intensive survey of crops on the peninsula and to date have found no further indications of infestation except on this one farm. Investigations, however, are being continued to ensure that the infestation is confined to this one farm.

With regard to the question raised by the hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich, I may say that in cases where it is warranted appropriate compensation is provided for under the Destructive Insect and Pest Act.

Mr. Chatterton: The Minister said the export of crops with soil will be prohibited. Will the movement of such crops to other parts of Canada outside the Island be prohibited?

Mr. Hays: Yes, I think this is the case.

Mr. Chatterton: In that case would the farmers who are indirectly affected, those on whose property there is no infestation, be eligible for compensation also?

Mr. Hays: I will have to take the latter question as notice.

QUEBEC—ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

I noticed a while ago that he answered with great interest a question directed to him by a member from the province of British Columbia. I should like to know whether he has given as much attention to the consideration of the brief submitted to him during the last few days by the Saguenay U.C.C., in connection with a request for $5 million assistance in favour of the farmers in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area.

[English]

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): I have not had an opportunity to sit down with this group as yet.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—LOSSES SUFFERED BY FRUIT GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Minister of Agriculture and ask whether he could indicate when a decision will be reached or when an announcement will be made concerning a decision following the representations made to him yesterday by the Minister of Agriculture of British Columbia and representatives of the B.C. tree fruit industry for Federal Government assistance for the industry as a consequence of the disastrous losses suffered earlier this year.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): As soon as all the details are worked out, Mr. Speaker.

SOUR CHERRIES—INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE TO GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It arises from the fact that cherries will soon be ripe in Prince Edward County. Last year an estimated $30,000 worth rotted on the trees because of unfair import-export advantage given to the State of Michigan. Last week the Minister informed the hon. Member for Wellington South that he would make a decision in regard to assistance being provided to the growers of cherries in Ontario. What is that decision?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there were 1,300 tons of sour cherries abandoned on trees in Ontario last year, mainly on account of poor colour. The total production in Ontario last year amounted to something like 15,112 tons. The Government supported the price to producers by supplementary payments totalling $300,000 last year, for the first time. And it might be pointed out that in the United States bordering the Great Lakes area 55,000 tons of sour cherries were abandoned on the trees last year for the same reason.

Mr. Alkenbrack: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister, together with the Minister of Finance, do something to correct the disparity between duties on cherries in the present unfair deal to Canadian fruit growers, whereby the American duty against Canadian cherries is 10½ cents a pound and the Canadian duty against American cherries is 3 cents a pound?

FISHERIES

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF SUBSIDIES ON DEEP SEA DRAGGERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Since authority to pay subsidies on deep sea fishing draggers was transferred from the Maritime Commission to the Department of Fisheries there has been a lengthy delay in the payment of federal subsidies to provincial loan boards. Will the Minister of Fisheries investigate the cause of this delay so that no undue hardship may be imposed upon shipyards and shipbuilders in the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): I wish to advise the hon. Member that one of the main reasons for delay, if there has been delay, was the need to draft new regulations in order to make subsidies applicable under the policy changes which took place some months ago. I wish to assure the hon. Member that everything is being done to take care of all applications as received.

COAL

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON STUDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): My question is addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the Minister in a position today to provide a progress report on the activities of Dr. Ritchie Donald, who has been retained to make a study of the problems affecting the coal industry in Nova Scotia and can the Minister suggest an approximate time when some action can be taken by the Government to assist the industry?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): By way of an interim report I may say that Dr. Donald has been very active since his appointment. He has been in touch with all the interests involved in the Cape Breton coal problem. He is now making an on the spot study. I have given him instructions to undertake a thorough study but to waste no time. The report will be along in due course.

BROADCASTING

REPORTED CONFLICT IN STATEMENTS RESPECTING COLOUR TELEVISION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State in connection with his recent statement that Canada would have colour television in 1967 at an estimated cost of something more than $15 million. How does the Minister reconcile this statement with that of Mr. Alphonse Ouimet, President of the C.B.C., who was quoted by the Toronto Daily Star as saying recently in an address to the Canadian Public Relations Society that it would take 10 to 15 years to convert to colour television at a cost of up to $40 million?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): The figure I gave to the House represented mainly the cost of adapting and adjusting the network facilities throughout the country.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—ADDRESS TO HER MAJESTY RESPECTING PROVINCIAL CONSTITUTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister in a position to state the intention of the Government with regard to the address received from the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec?

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria).]

Right Hon. L. P. Pearson (Prime Minister): It is the intention of the Government in due course to refer to the Governor General, with advice, the communication from the government of Quebec, together with the resolution adopted by the Legislative Assembly for transmission to London.

Mr. Martineau: Will this be done prior to a debate on the question in the House of Commons?

Mr. Pearson: There has been an opportunity, and there will be an opportunity, to bring up this matter during the next session before the recess.

Mr. Martineau: One supplementary question, if I may. Will the advice to be given by the Government on this address be favourable or unfavourable, or neither one way nor the other?

Mr. Pearson: I think that question has already been answered.

PENITENTIARIES

POSSIBLE SITTING OF JOINT COMMITTEE DURING RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I wish to address a question to the Acting Minister of Justice. In view of the announcement made by Mr. Speaker today that the other place has named its membership on the Special Joint Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate on Penitentiaries, may I ask the Acting Minister of Justice whether it is the intention to proceed with the work of the committee during the recess, or after reconvening on September 20?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Justice): I will have to take that question as notice.

DOMINION DAY

ARRANGEMENTS FOR FLYING OF ROYAL UNION JACK FLAG

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the fact that tomorrow Canada, a senior member of the Commonwealth of Nations, will be celebrating her 98th birthday, has the Minister made arrangements to supply the Royal Union Jack to all Federal buildings so that it may be flown tomorrow?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Public Works): No arrangement of this sort has been made. However, I will look into the matter.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

KIWANIS INTERNATIONAL—REQUEST FOR COMMEMORATIVE STAMP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to address a question to the Postmaster General. Kiwanis Clubs all over Canada will be writing to the hon. gentleman, and no doubt he is already in receipt of some correspondence requesting that he give consideration to the issuance of a special commemorative stamp to mark the golden anniversary of Kiwanis International. Would the Minister give this request from this very worth-while organization favourable consideration?

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have not as yet received any such requests, but I can assure the hon. member than when I do I shall give them the utmost consideration.

[English]

DRUGS

TRIFLUOPERAZINE—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Charles J. M. Willoughby (Kamloops): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. In view of the fact that we hope the House may be adjourning in the near future, can the right hon. gentleman tell us whether the special committee set up to investigate the issue of a patent to a company seeking to manufacture the drug trifluoperazine has made any report to the Government?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to look into this matter. If the hon. Member would allow me I might be able to communicate some information to him later in the afternoon.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Would the right hon. gentleman agree to bring this report before Parliament before it is acted upon?

Mr. Pearson: That seems to be a reasonable request, and I will be glad to look into it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION RESPECTING SAFETY IN EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the Minister's statement on October 14 last that the Government's legislation regarding safety in employment was then being drafted and would be proceeded with as soon as possible, and in view of the fact that this was also forecast in the Speech from the Throne at the start of this session, can he say when this legislation will be on the order paper?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Not before the summer adjournment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will it be on the order paper when we come back after the summer adjournment?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, after the summer adjournment.

Mr. Knowles: So will Christmas be after the summer adjournment.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF DESIGNATED AREA LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister concerning the business of the House. It has to do with Bill No. C-129. I know I can speak for the members of this party, and I believe our views are shared by members of other parties. While we agree with the intent of the legislation there is a good deal of dissatisfaction with the procedures set out in it. Without any desire whatsoever to hold up the legislation, I think most hon. Members will want to discuss it and suggest fairly far reaching changes.

I should like to suggest to the Prime Minister that in the interests of getting on with the work of the House he might give consideration to sending this legislation to a committee of the House so it can be studied and the regulations examined, and the formula for designating areas gone into more thoroughly than could possibly be the case in the House in the next couple of days.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We intend to proceed with this bill, especially as the program begins, I believe, July 1; that is, tomorrow.

[Later:]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask whether he would not reconsider the answer he gave to the hon. Member for Burnaby-Coquitlam a few moments ago regarding Bill No. C-129. There are strong feelings about this bill, and in that spirit of co-operation for a summer recess I was wondering whether the Prime Minister would not consider sending the bill to the committee, or giving a reasonable explanation that would satisfy hon. Members, particularly the hon. Member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, no payments can be made under this legislation until the bill is passed; but I believe I am right in saying that the actual designation of particular areas under the bill has to be carried out, after the bill is passed, by order in council. Therefore there is nothing final in the passing of this bill in so far as the actual designation of areas is concerned; and there will be an opportunity later to discuss that. But I would hope that the bill itself can be passed this afternoon, to enable payments to be made when the areas are designated.

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Is it not a fact that the bill is going to be discussed at the conference with the provinces, and that finality in some of the aspects of the bill will be determined at this conference?

Mr. Pearson: Yes. We have already discussed this matter with the provinces.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it not true that when the Prime Minister made his statement on this matter on June 7, and outlined three things that this bill should do, he had in mind the criteria that would be proposed following the conference; and is he not aware that these are not contained in the bill, nor is there any indication that the desired effects that he hoped would flow from the bill are in the bill?

Mr. Pearson: It is my impression, Mr. Speaker, that the bill will carry out these desired effects.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question on the same subject to the Minister of Industry and Minister of Defence Production?

May we conclude that the designated areas will not be named prior to the federal-provincial conference to be held on July 19?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that finality as far as the Provinces are concerned has not been reached, and this bill will have to be discussed; and since there is no guarantee that all the Provinces may agree to it—there may be some modifications—would not the Prime Minister reconsider this matter and hold off the bill until that finality with the Provinces has been reached?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the distinction should be made between the actual areas to be designated and the general terms and conditions appropriate to parliamentary assistance to the areas that are designated. There have been informal discussions with the Provinces and agreement has been secured on the general scope and nature of parliamentary assistance. That is what is incorporated in the bill. There still remains for final determination the precise delineation of the areas, and it is this it is proposed to discuss with the Provinces at the forthcoming Federal-Provincial meeting. But in so far as the bill is concerned, the scope and nature of the benefits to be provided have been the subject of agreement.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, what my hon. friends have suggested is that we alter the procedure that has been recommended to the House for today, and start with some other measure. Perhaps we can discuss the one we are talking about and how we should proceed with it. I do not want to be too rigid in the matter; if the House prefers to go ahead with the two supplementary estimates first, and then perhaps after that go on with interim supply, we should have the opportunity to discuss this subject later.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I think that is an excellent suggestion. I would toss out a proposal to the Prime Minister or the Minister of Industry and ask whether they would consider—in the event that it is not possible to hold off the legislation, because it comes into effect on July 1—giving some undertaking later when the bill is before the House to have the regulations held off until Parliament reassembles, when they would be submitted to a committee of the House. It seems to me this is the point which is disturbing the Members, they have not received that type of information nor have they seen the regulations. I would ask the Minister whether it is possible to hold up the actual order in council implementing these regulations until fall.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour could proceed with his supplementary estimate when the orders of the day are called, and then we could discuss this other matter while the House is proceeding with that business.

SUPPLY

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

5c. To extend the purposes of Labour vote 5, main estimates, 1965-66 to include authority for payments of transitional assistance, in accordance with regulations approved by the Government in Council, to workers in automotive manufacturing and parts industries who become unemployed as a result of the operation of the Canada-United States agreement on automotive products, $5,000,000.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of Supply, supplementary estimates (C), Department of Labour, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966, vote 5c. Shall the item carry?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I do not see the Minister of Labour here.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He will be right down, Mr. Chairman; he has gone for his files.

Mr. Starr: In view of the fact that this item amounts to $5 million I was wondering whether the Minister of Labour might want to make a short statement to elaborate on this plan more fully than he did when announcing it.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether you would consider calling item L27c, under the Department of Industry in the meantime, while the Minister of Labour is on his way down to the Chamber.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that vote 5c shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

L27c. Loans, in the current and subsequent fiscal years and in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the Governor in Council, to assist manufacturers of automotive products in Canada affected by the Canada-United States agreement on automotive products to adjust and expand their production; such loans to be made for the purpose of acquisition, construction, installation, modernization, development, conversion or expansion of land, buildings, equipment, facilities or machinery and for working capital; and to authorize, notwithstanding Section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, total commitments of $20,000,000 for the foregoing purposes during the current and subsequent fiscal years, $10,000,000.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the Minister of Industry, who is here, will give the committee an outline of the terms under which loans may be made under this particular item L27c. These loans are to be made to industry, and I think we should know in precise terms what is the intention regarding these loans so we can see in what proportion they will be allocated, and learn other details. I do not think we should be asked to approve an item for $10 million out of a $20 million commitment on a rather carte blanche basis.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, if I could refer the hon. Member to my initial statement in Hansard, an outline was given there of the terms and conditions under which the loans would be made.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it the Minister of Industry is asking this committee to pass a supplementary estimate for $10 million which is to be used to assist Canadian automotive car parts manufacturers —not the car manufacturers but the parts manufacturers—who have found themselves in a position where they are called upon to enlarge their operations and become more efficient, and in so doing to acquire extra capital. This supplementary estimate is to provide funds for this purpose.

In the initial announcement of the Minister the other day I think he said these loans would be made at an interest rate of 6 per cent. I should like to say that the Government are certainly not going out of their way to help the car parts manufacturers by giving them a loan at 6 per cent. I think any of them could go to other landing institutions and get money at 6 per cent. If the Government are sincere in their efforts to help these manufacturers they should at least grant them an interest rate lower than that which they can get from other lending institutions.

This assistance is better late than never but the Government have certainly left it pretty late, because at this point many of these manufacturers find themselves in a tight position. In any event I think they are going to think twice before they ask for a loan in order to increase their production and build up their plant, because they themselves are not too sure of the future of this industry. Is the Government going to continue meddling in the car and car parts industry? At the end of the three year term will the whole business fold up and will they then return to where they were before? These are questions which the manufacturers are asking themselves in considering taking this risk of further expansion.

The Minister has not told us just what representation has been made by the people in the industry and whether or not they are satisfied with the suggestion behind this supplementary estimate and the Minister's introductory remarks. The whole industry is in a state of flux at the moment, and I think if the Minister himself were in the car parts manufacturing business he would not know which way to move until this whole matter was settled, or at least until the United States Congress had passed their legislation.

Another question which comes to mind is this. What assurance have the car parts manufacturers of Canada that the Government does not intend to extend its provisions into the replacement car parts business? If this move were to be made the situation for the people in the car parts business would become very serious, because I understand that their bread and butter lies in replacement parts. I sincerely hope the Government is not intending to interfere with this phase of the car parts manufacturing business.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I just want to ask the Minister some questions. This vote is for $10 million for the current year, and authorization for a total of $20 million for the current and subsequent years. Has any estimate been made of the small parts manufacturer's needs? Do they approximate $20 million, or is this a figure that the Ministers' Department has pulled out of the air? Does the Minister think $20 million will meet the situation or is this figure based on any survey that has been carried out?

The other thing I want to ask the Minister about is apropos his statement yesterday that the interest was not a serious factor, but that the real problem involved is getting capital. It seems to me that 6 per cent is a fairly high rate of interest. If the Minister is really interested in helping the small auto parts manufacturers in this process of economic dislocation, the Government can certainly borrow money for less than that, and I wonder why the Minister does not consider 5 per cent as an appropriate rate. I think the only advantage that can be gained under the present terms is the one mentioned by the Minister yesterday, that they can borrow from this fund, assuming it is not all used up in the first six months, whereas they might have greater difficulty borrowing from financial institutions. I would think that most of the companies, with the security they have, would not have much difficulty in borrowing money at 6 per cent. The way the Minister could really help them would be by making this money available at a lower interest rate.

I have asked the Minister two questions; one, what is the estimate based on and, second, will he consider making this money available to these small parts manufacturers at a lower rate of interest?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, dealing with the questions asked, first as to the interest rate, let me say that the object of this legislation is not to put the Government into competition with normal commercial credit granting facilities, but merely to provide those motorcar parts manufacturers, who find that they are for one reason or another not satisfactory commercial risks, with an alternative source of capital for financing their changes and expansions. It is not intended that this legislation should be a special form of subsidy to parts manufacturers in the sense of giving them—those who avail themselves of these loans—a lower rate of interest, or cheaper money than their competitors can get elsewhere. This legislation is not intended to put the Government into competition with normal commercial credit facilities.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the Minister a question on that point. Have the Minister's investigations shown that 6 per cent is about the average interest rate which manufacturers of this type would pay if they borrowed money on the commercial market? I thought they could borrow money at 5¼ or 5½ per cent.

Mr. Drury: I am not in the borrowing business myself, Mr. Chairman, but I only wish that motorcar manufacturers in Canada could borrow money at 5¼ per cent on short term. Unfortunately that is not the case. The 6 per cent interest on relatively short-term borrowings is an attractive rate of interest.

Mr. Douglas: You refer to short-term borrowing. What term has the Minister in mind?

Mr. Drury: I have in mind relatively short or medium-term borrowing. Obviously long-term money tends to be cheaper than medium or short-term money.

In so far as the estimate is concerned, it is quite frankly just that, an estimate obtained after canvassing, to the extent possible, the not fully formulated plans of the motor-car parts manufacturers. It is hoped that this will be more than enough. As the hon. Member for Burnaby-Coquitlam suggests, the attractiveness of the expansion plans of most of the parts manufacturers—and it is apparent to the bankers and other money lenders in this country that they are in a substantially expanding market—is such that they are good risks, and it is expected there will be relatively little recourse to this fund.

The hon. Member for Wellington South asked what representations have been made by the parts manufacturing industry involved in the announcement of two days ago. In reply to that question, let me say that the first reaction is highly satisfactory. The Parts Manufacturers Association has indicated that this will meet their immediate needs and, of course, they are happy about it.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I may be allowed to ask a couple of questions I forgot to ask earlier. Why did the Minister set this up as a separate organization, and why is this not being handled through the Industrial Development Bank? Who is going to say who gets a loan; how are these loans going to be processed and what are the mechanics by which they will be processed?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, as was pointed out in the announcement, the determiners who will say who shall get a loan, and who shall not get a loan, will be the members of the board set up for this purpose. The mechanics of analysing loan applications and the servicing of the loans themselves will be carried out through the Industrial Development Bank machinery, rather than through duplicate machinery established for this purpose. However, the determination or the decision as to which loans will be granted will be made by a special board established for this particular purpose.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, may I ask two brief questions, one in respect of the board and one other? Who will be on this board—I am not asking for names, as the Minister has probably not selected the personnel? Will these be persons inside the Department, or persons in industry who will serve on a part-time basis? What is the type of person the Minister has in mind to place on this board, and will their decision be final or will there be an appeal to the Minister from the board? Will the Minister have the final discretion?

The other question I want to ask is in reference to medium-range loans. What does the Minister mean by that term? Does medium-term mean five to eight years, will there be a uniform agreement, or will the agreements vary from borrower to borrower?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, in respect of the composition of the board, the Chairman will likely be a distinguished gentleman from outside the civil service. The remainder of the board will be made up of senior civil servants from the government department interested in this aspect of the operations, for example, representatives of the Department of Labour, the Department of Finance, the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Industry.

The hon. gentleman also asked whether there will be an appeal from this board. That has not yet been determined, but I hope that it will not be found necessary to provide machinery for appeals.

In so far as the terms and conditions of the loans are concerned, it would be advantageous to the borrower generally not to establish a standard inflexible term, but to tailor the loan to suit the borrower's particular circumstance and to allow repayment of these loans earlier than the contractual date without the payment of a penalty premium.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, if the terms of the agreement are to be flexible, what is the maximum length of the repayment period the Minister has in mind?

Mr. Drury: This was pointed out in the announcement I made. In respect of loans secured by moveables, to use Quebec terminology, the maximum period will be of the order of 10 years and in respect of loans secured by immoveable, 20 years.

The Chairman: Order, please. May I suggest that we allow the hon. Member for Villeneuve to make a contribution to the debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I just wish to ask the Minister of Industry a few questions.

It seems to me that there is a duplication in administration by this new estimate and the way the minister is explaining to Parliament the application of this act dealing with loans, investments and advances to the automobile parts manufacturers. Will people who need such funds be able to borrow from the Industrial Development Bank which exists already? Will they be able also to borrow from another credit or banking institution with the government underwriting those loans?

It is important to know how the department intends to go about administering those loans granted to industrialists and new industries.

The creation of a special commission has been announced to deal with that matter. Special commissions are already operating within the Industrial Development Bank. I believe that some people there are already used to dealing with the industrial and economic development of Canada. We just have to give them more leeway and increase their present responsibilities. Then, there will not be any administrative duplication and the Industrial Development Bank could very well loan funds on a standard basis provided they get the authorization from the department.

I should like to know exactly how the people in need of that money will proceed: will they go to the Industrial Development Bank or to other banking institutions? How will the funds then be provided by the government? Will it not give a guarantee to a banking institution or to the Industrial Development Bank, or will the funds granted by the government be loaned to those new industries which we shall help keep in operation?

[English]

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the choice will lie in the first instance with the borrower. For reasons of his own he may prefer to use his customary means of securing additional capital, and there are a variety of choices open to him. If he is already a client of the Industrial Development Bank he may wish to avail himself of the facilities of that institution. There is of course a somewhat higher rate of interest payable and a somewhat shorter term normally required by the Industrial Development Bank than the rate of interest prescribed and the length of the term of the loan provided for in this particular arrangement.

When consideration was given to the establishment of a separate loan fund and a separate board as an alternative to employing entirely the facilities of the Industrial Development Bank it was felt that for a short term operation, as was made clear in the announcement that this form of assistance both on the side of industrial capital and on the side of labour would extend only to 1968, it would be preferable to set up a separate authorizing body to take care of the short term arrangement rather than endeavouring to change the practices and policies of the Industrial Development Bank.

Mr. More: Mr. Chairman, how many members—

The Chairman: Order, please, The hon. Member for Villeneuve.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, does the minister not admit, then, that there is duplication in the administration? Would it not have been simpler to authorize the Industrial Development Bank to deal with such cases, thus materially reducing the total cash expense or operating costs which this new administration will cost the Canadian people? Why not, instead, amend the act that now governs the Industrial Development Bank to allow it to make such transactions?

[English]

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, there will be no duplication of administration. As I pointed out, the administration and servicing of the loans will be carried out by the staff of the Industrial Development Bank and the only additional body that will be created will be this particular board consisting of a chairman and a number of senior civil servants who will be taking on this task in addition to their present functions. The reason for doing it this way rather than changing the statute of the Industrial Development Bank for a short period was that it was felt we should not disorganize for a short-term project the practices of the Industrial Development Bank which have been evolved over a long period.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few comments to make. I must say I take some exception to the method by which this matter is brought before the House. It may be that time is of the essence and that the exigencies of the situation are such that this action is required. If that is the case, then this action is to some extent understandable. I took exception to the way in which the original measure was introduced by Order in Council; I take exception to the way moneys are made available for the purpose of assisting those who will be displaced in connection with the labour situation, and I take the same stand with regard to the way in which these loans are going to be made.

My view is that matters of this kind where we are breaking new ground should all have been brought forward in legislative form. With regard to the organizations which have been mentioned, the Industrial Development Bank, the Farm Credit Corporation, the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, and so on, legislation was brought before the House and conditions were laid down categorically. The House had ample opportunity to discuss those measures and to make such changes and recommend such alterations as they saw fit.

This particular vote is in the most general terms. The vote as such is a resolution of the House and when incorporated in an appropriation bill it becomes a statute. It seems to me that matters of this kind should be embodied in a vehicle dealing with the issues, particularly where there is a radical departure from the practice of the past.

I notice it is suggested that despite the Financial Administration Act there may be total commitments of $20 million, but my experience is that once such votes creep into the estimates they are continued year in and year out. We may be establishing a precedent here which will make it difficult in the future for us to take objection with regard to issues of this kind. I am not going to argue about the desirability of or necessity for this action, but the method used in this instance and in connection with the vote of $5 million for the original program is one in respect of which I must register my strong protest.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. More: As I understood the Minister, the Commission will be composed of top level civil servants. Will the Chairman also come from the civil service or will the Minister be the Chairman?

Mr. Drury: It will not be the Minister. I hope he will be someone from outside the civil service, but of comparable rank with senior civil servants.

Mr. More: The appointment will be for what term of years? I understand this plan is to deal with an emergency resulting from the adoption of the policy by the Government. What period of years does the Minister foresee for this?

Mr. Drury: As the announcement pointed out, these arrangements are only contemplated for a period ending in 1968.

Mr. Scott: I wanted to ask the Minister if the salaries of these various people have been set as yet, and could he tell us what they will be?

Mr. Drury: As is customary, servants of the Crown do not draw extra remuneration for additional work done on behalf of the Crown.

Mr. Douglas: The Chairman will not be a civil servant, as the Minister indicated he would come from outside. What salary does the Minister intend to pay him?

Mr. Drury: No final determination has been made of that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Douglas: Has any determination been made of the person to be appointed?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Scott: I just wanted to say a word in support of the position taken by the hon. Member for Peace River and to register our objection as well to the manner in which this particular type of legislation has been brought before the House. After all, $20 million is a great deal of money, yet we are handed an executive decision by way of an announcement on orders of the day. It seems to us no adequate way is provided for dealing with the matter in this particular fashion. I should like to endorse his views and place this party on record in this matter.

We know the Minister of Industry is very able and knows everything about matters of this kind. Perhaps we should not be questioning his judgment. At the same time, however, we have a good example in the bills which we were discussing on orders of the day again, and about which it seems the views of the Opposition are not really very important and are not going to be given very much consideration. I should like to make our position clear, as well. We object to this way of bringing in very important matters of this kind having them decided by executive decision and then being confronted with the results.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

5c. To extend the purposes of Labour Vote 5, Main Estimates, 1965-66 to include authority for payments of transitional assistance, in accordance with regulations approved by the Governor in Council, to workers in automotive manufacturing and parts industries who become unemployed as a result of the operation of the Canada-United States Agreement on Automotive Products, $5,000,000.

Mr. Starr: We were holding this item until the Minister of Labour arrived, in case he wanted to make a statement further to the announcement he made earlier.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take much of the time of the committee in introducing this item. I will be prepared to answer any questions that may arise in connection with the item that is being put forward to provide transitional assistance for auto workers. We believe that the automotive agreement will increase production and employment in the automotive industry. The automotive agreement involves considerable reorganization of production, and for that reason there will be temporary unemployment and displacement of workers in the automobile manufacturing industry and in the parts industry. We do not believe that the workers should bear the full burden, the full financial burden, of their unemployment. The economy as a whole will benefit, the country as a whole will benefit, the automobile companies will benefit, and for that reason we believe it is reasonable that the taxpayers and the companies jointly should assist the workers over this temporary period of unemployment.

We are providing a level of benefits for eligible workers ranging from 62 per cent to 75 per cent of the workers' weekly pay, depending upon the number of their dependants and provided these benefits do not exceed 65 per cent of the average weekly wages and salaries in the motor vehicle and motor vehicle parts industries. The present average is just about $75 per week. The maximum benefit available under this proposed plan is $75 per week. I think the generosity, which is the wrong word in the circumstances, in increasing the level of benefit provided under this plan can be more readily appreciated if it is compared with the maximum level of benefit available to unemployed workers under unemployment insurance, which is $36 per week. The maximum under this plan is $75 per week. The maximum hitherto accepted in this country, accepted by Parliament under a bill introduced by my predecessor is $36 per week. We have made, therefore, very successful strides in increasing the level of benefits which will be not only of importance in this case but which will be a point of comparison for any future changes in unemployment insurance, and any further extension of this principle to other cases.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the Minister a question while he is on that point? How would this maximum of $75 compare with the maximum which would be available to unemployed auto workers who have SUB, because that is the only fair comparison—not with the general unemployment insurance figure?

Mr. MacEachen: This plan will provide a level of benefit slightly higher than SUB—$2 or $3 higher. Now, bear in mind that this plan will apply to all auto workers, many of whom presently are not covered by SUB plans. The taxpayer will have to bear the additional burden of this transitional payment because many are not eligible for SUB plans.

Mr. Scott: In the event you are making payments to workers who are not eligible for SUB benefit, is it not a fact that they will not be eligible for TAB unless the employer agrees to pay into the fund what he would have paid if they had been eligible for SUB payments?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Chairman; we are not in this plan worsening or bettering the position of any company. We asked companies with SUB plans that an amount equivalent will be put into the treasury or into the TAB fund equivalent to what the company would have paid to it if the SUB plan had been used. In plants where no SUB plan exists—the smaller parts companies, in many cases—there will be no contribution forthcoming from companies. Contributions will come only from companies with SUB plans.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Scott: Take for example the case of the lay-offs in Windsor last week end. Some 500 workers were laid off by a company which has a SUB plan. Because these men had been employed for less than a year they were not eligible for SUB payments in any event. Are they eligible for TAB even though the employer does not contribute?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, they will be eligible if they meet the requirements. No doubt we shall be discussing these later.

I think it is important to say a word about our attitude toward the SUB funds. Representations were made to the Government by the auto workers to the effect that these funds, which are built up by company contributions, had at a certain stage in the evolution of collective bargaining been gained in lieu of wage increases. The argument was put forward: Why should these SUB funds be used during a lay-off induced by public action? We accepted that argument. The proposal of the United States was different. They intend to use the SUB funds. The reason we accepted the argument is simple. If the SUB funds were used to pay benefits during this lay-off the duration and level of benefits would be affected in subsequent lay-offs. In other words, less would be available for use by the workers in non-Government-induced lay-offs. We are therefore asking the companies which have SUB funds to pay into the TAB fund an amount equivalent to what they would have paid had the SUB fund been in operation. The credit of the workers will remain intact for the future, and for workers under any SUB plan the level of benefit will be the difference between what they would receive under unemployment insurance and the maximum of $75.

This is a very important feature of the proposal we are making. In the United States a determination of the benefits to the workers to be affected has not yet been made. A Congressional Committee has studied this question very carefully and a proposal is made in the Committee report indicating Congressional intent as to how public benefits ought to be related to the SUB plans. It may be that the level of benefits, immediately, may be higher than the maximum in Canada if Congressional intent is reflected in a decision of the arbitrator in the SUB plans. We limit our level of benefits to 65 per cent of the average weekly wages and salaries in the motor vehicle and motor vehicle parts industries. The limitation in the United States is, of course, the average of manufacture. The feature of this plan which is definitely superior is that the companies are being asked to pay up, to meet the cost of benefits during this transitional period and the workers will have the SUB plans intact, fully protected for subsequent lay-offs.

Mr. Lambert: What if the companies do not pay up?

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. gentleman asks what would happen should the companies not participate. The Minister of Industry may have something to say about the company contributions, because discussions have taken place between his department and the Ford Motor Company. We fully expect that the motor companies will come forward and contribute. And why not? They are receiving very handsome benefits from this plan.

I may say I am getting a lot of advice from hon. Members around me. This is a group speech.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are a lot of us here who are interested in Windsor.

Mr. MacEachen: The companies are receiving these benefits and we are not asking them to contribute more than they would be contributing had the SUB funds been in operation. The hon. Member for Burnaby-Coquitlam says there is no compulsion. There is no compulsion legally, but surely there is a very strong social compulsion for the companies to come forward and contribute. I feel sure the companies will come forward.

Mr. Douglas: What if they do not? What will happen to the workers in that case? Will TAB continue to pay the full amount?

Mr. MacEachen: I do not want to be flippant and say that this is a hypothetical question, but I do not expect to meet that situation at all. I am not thinking of the possibility of the companies not coming forward.

Mr. Starr: On that very point, a few minutes ago the Minister of Labour said there were a great many people who were not covered under SUB. The reason they are not covered in most instances is the attitude taken by the companies that they were not prepared to enter into a collective agreement in this sphere. It was not for lack of bargaining by the U.A.W.A. designed to incorporate this into a collective agreement. If these companies were not prepared to enter into a collective agreement, how will the Minister persuade them to contribute a similar sum toward TAB? If they do refuse, where is the money coming from to pay those who may be affected?

Mr. MacEachen: Workers for companies under agreements not including SUB will be fully compensated out of the TAB fund.

Mr. Starr: That is, by the Government.

Mr. MacEachen: They will be fully compensated out of the TAB fund provided by this estimate. Only companies with SUB funds will be asked to provide an equivalent amount.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the minister has just told us in his own way the process that will be used with respect to adjustments made for workers who will have to change jobs.

In the first place, who will decide the eligibility of workers? Will it be the National Employment Service or the Unemployment Insurance Commission? Which organization will decide the eligibility of a candidate or claimant who puts in an application to obtain such a sum of money?

The minister says that the management of automobile companies do not object to taking part in these payments. In this connection, I agree with him and even if some members have expressed their concern, we are not afraid of that. The companies will lose absolutely nothing, even if they contribute. Indeed, if the directors of a firm are contributing $100 for instance, do not suppose that this amount will be taken out of their profits. The price of the car will be increased not by $100, which was the amount provided, but by $100 plus the normal profit rate, namely 10, 12, 15 or 20 per cent, which means that the prices are going to be increased and that the Canadian taxpayer, the Canadian worker is again the one who will have to pay.

Mr. Gauthier: It could be the dealer.

Mr. Caouette: Not even the dealer, Mr. Chairman. Those who are wondering whether the companies will share in this plan need not worry, for the directors of those companies agree right off with the minister or ministers concerned to contribute to those funds, since those contributions will be added to the cost price of the products they will be selling.

Consequently, I feel that the minister is perfectly right in saying that he is not worried, that he does not even think that those company officials could refuse to participate in his scheme. Anyone would contribute in the same way when it is profitable to him and does not cost a cent to the company.

Mr. Chairman, what will happen to the man, to the worker who will be displaced? Who will decide whether or not he is eligible to the benefits he is claiming because he is displaced or transferred from one plant to another?

• (4:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Villeneuve asked how the eligibility of workers would be determined. An application for assistance could be submitted by a firm on behalf of its employees, by a group of workers, by their union or by an authorized representative, to the Adjustment Assistance Board, and the Board would conduct an investigation and determine whether a significant number or proportion of workers of the firm or subdivision thereof have been or will be laid off for a period of at least 30 days, and whether the lay-off was caused by the termination of or significant decrease of production or activity arising from the operation of the Canada-United States automotive agreement. If the Board accepts the application it will then certify that this group of workers is eligible and the workers would then apply to the Department of Labour for the transitional assistance.

Mr. Douglas: Is there any length of time involved?

Mr. MacEachen: The determination must be made within 30 days of receipt of the application by the Board.

Mr. Douglas: Is there any length of service by the worker required in order for him to be eligible?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The worker must first of all be eligible to receive unemployment insurance benefit. To be eligible a worker must have had at least 30 weeks of employment in the 52 weeks prior to the lay-off; the idea being that there must be some attachment to the industry on the part of a worker in order to receive benefit. This is well understood in unemployment insurance and other benefits, and 30 weeks is the period of employment that is required.

Mr. Starr: With regard to the 30 days in which approval must be obtained from the Adjustment Assistance Board, is this period after the actual lay-off takes place?

Mr. MacEachen: It is actually after the application has been received by the Board. Presumably an application could be made to the Board in anticipation of a lay-off, but more logically it would probably occur at the time of the lay-off. Then the application would be made, and the determination made within 30 days.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Labour has outlined to us in brief detail some of the aspects of this so-called new plan, the TAB plan. It is no different, in my opinion, from what has been negotiated with the employers by most of these people who will be affected. That is called the Supplementary Unemployment Benefits plan. The Minister said a moment ago that application must be made to the Adjustment Assistance Board in respect of workers who have been laid off, and a decision must be made within 30 days. This is not good enough. This is not as good as the SUB plan, under which a person laid off can receive full benefit after the first seven days and does not have to wait. He can send his application directly to Ottawa in order to have it considered carefully, and does not have to wait 30 days without receiving any benefits whatever.

What does this new TAB plan really do? It gives each and every worker $2 or $3 a week more than he would receive under the SUB plan; but because of the limit of $75 a week many employees who have negotiated for a higher percentage under the SUB plan would receive less. Not only the automobile industry but subsidiary industries, parts manufacturers, operating under the SUB plan give anywhere up to 80 per cent or 85 per cent of the take-home pay of the worker. Consequently the worker is not going to receive as much under this plan as is the case under the regular SUB plan. No wonder the U.A.W. which negotiates most of these contracts, and all the automobile industry and its subsidiaries, are claiming that this plan is not the solution to their problem. It does not go far enough; in many cases it does not go as far as SUB.

What is the Government's contribution? It is $2 or $3 a week per worker. This is the entire contribution the Government is willing to make. You cannot count the unemployment insurance benefits because they are there now; the workers are entitled to them now, provided they have made sufficient contributions. What the Government is offering them is $2 or $3 a week more, in some instances, than they would get under the SUB. This measure, this supposedly great help to the laid-off workers, has been brought in as the direct result of an agreement this Government signed almost six months ago. Here is a Government which came into office on the basis of 60 days of decision. It has now become a Government of deadlines. I doubt very much whether even this token assistance would have been brought in if we were not approaching the end of the session and a recess for the summer months, if pressures had not built up to the extent that the Government was forced to do something about this very important matter.

The Ford Company of Canada points out the facts. I have not heard the Minister dispute these facts, which are contained in the Globe and Mail of today's date. In despair, at the last minute and because of impending lay-offs in the Ford motorcar industry, the Minister of Labour rushes to Washington—and this is all he comes back with. I am sure he did not copy the American plan at all; he could have stayed at home and figured this out. All he had to do was to add $2 or $3 more to some of the existing SUB plans.

• (4:20 p.m.)

This is a last minute rush. We had the same situation with the Minister of Industry, who all of a sudden found out, after the Prime Minister had made an announcement on June 7, that he needed a bill to put into effect the principle enunciated by the Prime Minister. Here we are today faced with a problem which we have to unravel. This matter could have been decided two weeks ago. There has been negligence all down the line in the treasury benches on most of the matters affecting the country as a whole and its people.

George Burt of the United Automobile Workers, who is spokesman for the U.A.W.A. members, says that this step does not go far enough, and in view of this he is prepared to criticize the whole plan. I do not think that he would make a statement of that kind without some very serious consideration of the effects of the plan.

A few moments ago the hon. Member for Villeneuve asked who would be in charge of the fund and who would make the payments. I do not think that the Minister advised us as to the instrument he will use to make these payments, whether it would be the Unemployment Insurance Commission or some other agency. These are questions which the Minister of Labour should answer before we pass $5 million, which is a substitute for what should have been an effective plan for workers who are laid off as a direct result of this Government's agreement with the United States.

We should also consider the fact that because of the trade policies of the Government there may be lay-offs in other industries as a result. How does this affect other industries outside the automobile industry? What about lay-offs in the furniture industry, the aluminum industry or the textile industry? Is this plan going to be extended to these industries or is it exclusive to the automobile industry? I would ask the Minister of Labour to answer these questions also.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, I have a few general observations to make to the Minister, and then perhaps we can get into the detailed questioning of the plan. First of all, it has been said before in this House that this party is in broad general agreement with the intent of this scheme. All parties in the House have been worried about the imbalance in the automotive industry between Canada and the United States, and the general intent of this legislation to try and correct this is a good one, one with which no one would take serious issue. But it seems to us that this agreement and the proposal of the Minister raises a far more serious question.

What we really have here is one of the first occasions where the actual trade policies of the Government have resulted or will result in fairly severe dislocation of the workers in the industries involved. These workers had nothing to do with the decisions which brought about their unemployment. The agreement was negotiated between the two Governments concerned and the employers. These workers had no influence or sway over our trade policies. As I said, I am not particularly quarrelling with them—

Mr. Douglas: Neither did Parliament.

Mr. Scott: As my leader says, neither did Parliament—but be that as it may, the Government has initiated a very serious problem for the labour movement.

What we would suggest to the Minister is that we take this occasion to establish a new principle in our relations with the trade union movement, namely that where dislocation takes place in the labour force as a result of Government action the workers in the industries concerned should not be expected to bear any economic loss. It is not fair to equate the position with SUB benefits because, as the Minister knows, SUB benefits were never intended to meet this type of situation. Workers in the automotive industry know that there are likely to be lay-offs when they take jobs. This is a hazard of their occupation, and to protect them the union has built up these funds under the agreements. But there is no relationship at all between the principle of SUB plans and the principle as stated in this proposal.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we are suggesting it is important to establish this principle now because of its implications for the future, namely that economic dislocation caused by Government activity in the trade field should not result in any economic loss to workers engaged in particular industries. This is not a particularly new idea; there are other areas where this principle has been accepted. But if the Government is not prepared seriously to consider this proposal I suggest there is a real danger that it will succeed in mobilizing the entire labour movement of Canada against any sort of long range and substantial trade policy dislocation.

Already Mr. Burt, the leader of the Auto Workers Union, has spoken out. The Minister said he was not surprised that the union did not feel the benefits were high enough, but because the benefits are so small they have now decided to go out and launch a national campaign to try and turn public opinion against this agreement. Why are they doing this? They are doing it because this Government will not accept the idea that if the community brings about dislocation for the general good then the community should pay the economic cost of such dislocation. We are asking these workers to pick up approximately 35 per cent of the TAB plan, because we have placed an upper limit of 65 per cent on their possible earnings. In effect, the Minister is saying to these workers that they must pay at least 35 per cent, or in other words take a 35 per cent slash in pay and, in addition, forfeit many of their fringe benefits if they are not compensated for them. So we think there is an extremely important principle involved at this time.

In other parts of the world this principle has been accepted. For example, in the European Coal and Steel Community there are provided tide-over allowances for workers, which run up to 100 per cent of their wages plus other forms of assistance, including supplementation or reduced wages. They may receive these benefits for up to two years. Because that guarantee has been given under the Treaty of Rome, the unions involved welcome any kind of automation dislocation or economic change that the Government may want to bring in. But unless you are prepared to accept this principle in Canada, every time the Government wants to bring about a major trade change it will have the labour movement involved mobilized against it, because of what I say is the very niggardly way the Government have adopted in dealing with the dislocation which will take place.

In the United States Secretary McNamara gave a flat undertaking, when the Government closed down 95 military bases, that the workers affected would receive their salaries, would be retrained if necessary, and that the Government would pay the expenses of moving them, so that in effect they would suffer no economic dislocation at all. We would suggest to the Minister in all seriousness that if he is not prepared to accept this principle, then he is opening the door to a great deal of unrest between organized labour and the Government. I hope I am wrong in this contention, but the indications we have received from the trade union movement are that this will be the ultimate consequences of enacting this legislation unless some very substantial changes are made.

• (4:30 p.m.)

This was certainly borne out, Mr. Chairman, at the hearings in Washington when one of the senior officials of the U.A.W., Mr. Leonard Woodcock, Vice-President, testifying before the Committee said, as recorded at page 12 of his brief:

> —it will be impossible to mobilize future labour movement support for trade liberalization unless and until it is demonstrated that meaningful assistance can and will be provided.

The United States Vice President of that union was laying down a warning to Government that unless almost complete protection is given, the labour force will rise up and resist the very changes and trade policies that many of us are convinced are going to be necessary if we are to adjust in the modern world.

We should look at the actual proposals themselves in order to back this up. As I have said, the first and most obvious one is the limitation. How do you justify telling a working man that because you are going to put him out of work, through no fault of his own, he is only going to get 65 per cent of his normal salary?

Mr. MacEachen: Seventy five per cent.

Mr. Scott: It could go as high as 75 per cent, provided that is not above the 65 per cent general average. However, even taking that figure, what is the working man going to do to get the balance? Why should he be required, because you have done something over which he has no control, to accept this slash in income? Most of these people, like all of us, have their incomes pretty well committed and cannot accept a 25 or 35 per cent slash in income.

The Minister was good enough to admit that even these benefits might appear generous over and above those paid under the Unemployment Insurance Fund, which have always been an impossible disgrace in any event; but merely because 36 per cent is low does not make 62 or 65 per cent an adequate figure. I want to suggest as strongly as I can to the Minister that he should really seriously consider whether this is not the appropriate time to enunciate these same strong trade adjustment principles that have been accepted and enacted in many other parts of the world. I suppose the Government has made up its mind, and nothing that anyone on this side of the House can say will change it, but I do feel that it is embarking on a very serious trend which will result in a lot of needless quarrelling and tension between organized labour and Government in the future.

The automotive workers union I thought made some very reasonable proposals to the Government when they met, and I want to place them on the record. They have six points which, if accepted, would have assured their complete co-operation, instead of what is now their outright opposition. First of all they wanted preferential hiring of displaced workers to ensure that those who lost their jobs as a result of the program would be given every possible assistance to remain in the industry, and not lose seniority, pension, vacation and other credits, as well as the level of wages they had achieved in the industry. What is unreasonable about that? It seems to be a perfectly proper submission to make.

Second, they wanted an earnings-related adjustment benefit payable during the period of transfer from one job to another, or during the period of retraining. What is unreasonable about that?

Mr. MacEachen: We have met that.

Mr. Scott: Yes, but very niggardly, and in a way in which everybody but the Government is convinced is hopelessly unfair.

Third, they wanted transfer allowances covering the cost of transportation of the displaced worker and his family, as well as his furnishings, to a new location after he is reemployed, or to a training centre away from home. What is unfair about that? What is unfair about asking, if you are going to be moved as a result of Government action, to be compensated for the cost entailed? Why should the worker bear that cost?

Fourth, they asked for federal Government action to end discrimination in hiring practices in the industry, so that older workers who may be displaced will not be refused employment. Again, what is unreasonable about that? I should like to hear from the Minister as to why the Government could not accept that proposal.

Fifth, they asked for Federal Government initiative to obtain management co-operation in having advance notice of major changes in the levels of employment in the auto and auto parts industry, in order to minimize the effects of dislocation. Again, what is unreasonable about that? Why should they be told on a week end that 500 men are going to be laid off?

Finally, they asked for supplementary pension benefits payable to older displaced workers who may be retired early. Again, that is a reasonable proposal which, if it had been accepted, would have assured the co-operation of the trade union movement.

As I have said, many of these proposals have been accepted in other parts of the world and in other jurisdictions. Had they been accepted here, this scheme could be launched with the support of the trade union movement instead of in the face of what appears at the moment to be its bitter opposition.

Our second objection, aside from the inadequacy of the allowances, is the veto power that is given to the companies. Today on orders of the day we asked the Minister whether or not the companies would be required to make contributions to the TAB fund and the Minister quite candidly, as is the case, admitted that there was no requirement for other than voluntary payments on behalf of the companies. It is not good enough for the Minister,—and we are not going to pass this item until we get an answer—to get up and tell us that he does not anticipate having such a problem placed before him. We all know that the Minister never anticipated having to bring in this program, because when we first began to ask questions months ago we were told there would be lots of employment, no dislocation and that no one had to worry. It was not until the United States union representatives appeared before a Congressional Committee and urged it to put pressure on Canada to bring in an adjustment assistance scheme, that any action was really obtained, and I have the transcript of the statements that were made at that time.

It is not enough for the Minister to get up and tell us that he does not think there is any problem and that the companies will pay. We want to know what is going to happen, what your plans, proposal and programs are going to be in the event that the motor companies decline to make these payments. As the hon. Member for Ontario has said, they are pretty tough cookies. It is very hard to get even the SUB plans put into agreements. I do not think they are necessarily going to run down here with $700,000 or $800,000 and hand it over to the federal treasury. We want to know what will happen in the event this takes place.

Finally, we should like to obtain some information from the Government as to why nothing has been done to ensure that the price cuts or savings to the companies are passed on to the consumer in the form of some kind of lower prices. I know the companies have stated that they intend to use this money for expansion, but all the indications we can see in the press from statements that have been made that there is going to be no price reduction, and no benefit to be passed on to the consumer at least for the foreseeable future. I could quote, although we do not want to hold this item up, many of the articles that have appeared in such papers as the Financial Post, the Globe and Mail, the Windsor Star, Time and other periodicals which all indicate there is going to be no price cut passed on to the consumer.

This is a completely indefensible position, because of the very substantial profits that are amassed by these Canadian companies. According to one estimate, the annual average profit of the automobile manufacturers has often run to about 30 per cent of their net worth; that is the total amount of their investment capital, compared with the normal 10 to 15 per cent. One Federal official has estimated that in a good year the profit earned by one of the leading Canadian auto producers might run as high as 80 to 90 per cent of its investment capital.

These companies have money coming out their ears, and do not require the $50 million bonanza in order to finance their expansions. They have lots of money, and there is no reason in the world why some action cannot be taken toward lowering the price of cars. We have made a rough estimate and feel that it would be possible to have an immediate price cut of about 4 per cent in the wholesale price, and that this could be followed by other cuts at a later date.

This would eventually result in a 17 per cent reduction in the price of cars to Canadians. If the companies refuse to pass this on, the Government has the simple expedient of lowering the tariff payable by individuals who buy cars in the United States; and this, of course, would immediately force the companies into price reductions.

In summary, Mr. Chairman, we again want to emphasize the general desirability of the objectives, and we again want to urge the Minister that he reconsider the level of benefits, because this action will likely set a pattern for almost all of our trade adjustment figures in the years ahead. Unless the level is substantially increased you will engender hostility and lack of co-operation among the trade movement generally in Canada.

We would like to see some form of requirement placed in the legislation so that the companies will be obligated and required to make these contributions. We simply do not feel it is good enough to leave it on a purely voluntary basis and to trust in the social conscience of Ford, General Motors and Chrysler, because to my knowledge they have never displayed any great sense of social responsibility except at the urging of the trade union movement. Finally, we would hope that the Government would take some action to pass on the price savings that the companies are enjoying to the Canadian public.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Ricard: Before the resolution carries, Mr. Chairman, the Minister was asked a direct question by the hon. Member for Ontario with regard to whether there was any possibility in the Minister's mind that this measure would apply at some time in the future to the textile industry and the steel industry. I wish to add to the industries mentioned by the hon. Member the rubber industry, the clothing industry and the shoe industry. I have been sent here by my people to look after their interests, and since there are quite a few companies in my riding of the types I have mentioned I should like to ask the Minister if he contemplates the possibility of extending the privileges of this measure to these other industries?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, may I make a few comments in reply to remarks made by hon. Members. First of all, there is no class of workers whose benefits under the TAB plan will be lower than under a SUB plan. The TAB benefits will generally be greater. In the case of workers in automobile parts plants who are not covered by SUB plans the total TAB benefit payment will be paid out of this fund to a maximum amount of close to $75 per week at present. This is not a copy of the American plan. The purpose of my visit to Washington was to find out in fact what the American plan was and to exchange views with the Secretary of Labour of the United States on our respective approaches to these plans.

We expect that the benefits will be paid by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. The TAB benefits will be retroactive to the beginning of any lay-off and there will not be a 30 day waiting period as suggested by the hon. Member for Ontario, but a waiting period of one week which he suggested is provided under SUB plans.

With respect to the points made by the hon. Member for Danforth, it is a fact that we are breaking new ground in establishing this plan in Canada. It is a very important new step. We are taking the lead in this direction. This is the first time it has ever been done. Our plan is as good as the United States plan and compares favourably with any such plan anywhere in the world. We have accepted the proposal of the United Automobile Workers that we develop an earnings related transitional benefit program. In addition, the duration of benefits will extend up to a year, and for workers in training an additional six months of TAB benefits will be provided so that the maximum will be a year and a half. We are also making available to the workers grants for relocation, as was announced in our mobility program. Any workers dislocated under this agreement will be eligible for the grants under our new mobility program.

We have accepted in great measure the proposals put forward by the United Automobile Workers and I venture to suggest that once this plan is fully understood by the automobile workers there will be much less resistance than was suggested by the hon. Member for Danforth, because we are putting forward in Canada a plan at least as good as that put forward in the United States and there is no indication that in that country the automobile workers or unions will oppose the plan. At least, they have not done so to this point. I venture to suggest that when this plan is fully understood and the built-in benefits for the workers are fully understood, support for the plan will increase.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, as the Minister knows the American plan is not settled yet and is still before various committees. I do not want to go into the figures because of that fact, but if it should turn out that the American plan provides higher benefits once their scheme is completed and the final figures are drawn, would the Minister be prepared to amend the Canadian legislation then, so they would conform?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Chairman. We could not accept the view that our policy should be determined by the final outcome of the policy in the United States. We could not do that in the Department of Labour or elsewhere. At the moment, however, as we see their plan developing our plan is as good, and I think definitely superior in certain aspects with respect to protections for workers, because under our proposal the SUB fund and the SUB credits for workers will be fully protected and not used up, and thus will be available for subsequent lay-offs. This is a very important point that is not covered in the United States. The companies are also requested to come forward to assist in the transition, which is not being done in the United States, although it has been asked by leading members of the Congressional Committee.

The hon. Member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot has asked about the application of this new lead to other situations in the country. That is a matter of Government policy which is under consideration and any decision in this regard will be announced in the usual way.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the Minister a question about the estimate on unemployment. I want to say that this supplementary vote and the other one brought in by the Minister of Industry, which has just been dealt with, ought to be called two items for the repair of the damage done by the Minister of Industry who in his haste concocted an agreement without looking fully into what the effects of the agreement would be. When this agreement, which was signed by the Minister of Industry on behalf of the Government and never referred to Parliament, was first made public we drew attention to the fact that there were three groups of people to whom some attention would have to be paid.

The first were the workers who would be unemployed and would suffer economic dislocation; second, the small parts manufacturers who would have to retool their plants or relocate them, and third, the consumers of Canada who are losing some $50 million a year because of the access given United States cars and parts into Canada, and who have a right to expect cheaper cars.

Now, the first two calamities have come about, the unemployment and dislocation of the small parts manufacturers. Unfortunately, we have not seen the third effect, which is an improvement in the price of Canadian cars. I think it will be quite a while until we see any improvement in that direction. I regret that both the previous item, with which we dealt, and this one have been brought into the House merely as supplementary estimates. It seems to me we ought to have had legislation so that there would be spelled out on the statute books the precise terms and conditions under which these various plans will operate. Both of them are going to operate on an ad hoc basis, with very little detailed information except what we can collect in this short period when these two items are before the Committee of Supply.

I want to protest most vigorously this method of dealing with such an important question as the dislocation of hundreds of workers in the automobile industry, without any legislation and without any real information as to the kind of plans which the Government has devised in the hope of providing some amelioration during this dislocation period. I wanted to ask the Minister something about the $5 million estimate. Has the Department of Labour or the Department of Industry made any estimate of the total number of workers in the automobile industry who are likely to be unemployed as a result of this agreement? Has the Minister any information as to the average length of time this unemployment is likely to continue? Has the Minister's department made any estimate as to the total amount of money that will be required? Is this $5 million simply a figure pulled out of the air, just as the Minister of Industry did in providing an estimate of assistance to the small parts manufacturers, or is it based on any figure as to how many persons are likely to be unemployed? I should like the Minister to give us some idea of the research that has been done in this field. We want to know whether or not this $5 million is adequate and over what period of time it is likely to be needed.

Mr. MacEachen: I will be frank with the hon. Member and say it is difficult to make any precise estimate because of the pattern of the lay-offs, which is difficult to determine. As an illustration, I may say that the projection of lay-offs by the Ford Motor Company changed at times from week to week. We have attempted to make estimates of the cost, for example, of the Ford lay-off, but they are just as good as the assumptions about the length or duration of the lay-off and the number involved, and these change very quickly.

We have thought that for this year we are likely to be taking care of the situation more than adequately by providing $5 million. It certainly will meet any situation that may arise in this year. A yardstick for a precise forecast as to the pattern of lay-offs is something that cannot be provided, because the automobile companies have not fully determined their plans and the parts companies have not yet fully felt the effects of the automotive agreement.

We are now meeting, through this, the temporary dislocation but we are keeping in mind, of course, as the hon. Member will appreciate the additional benefits to the in-industry and to the economy through this increased production and employment. It is for this reason we thought it reasonable that public funds ought to be spent to assist the workers. I cannot give a more precise estimate than that, for the reasons I have given.

Mr. Douglas: I agree fully with the Minister that public funds ought to be spent to help workers, if this rationalization of the automotive industry is going to benefit the economy as a whole, as we hope it will. Certainly, in that case, the economy as a whole has to make a financial contribution to any of those who are going to suffer economic loss as a result of this rationalization process.

I should like to know to what extent the automobile industry is going to contribute to this. All I have been able to gather from the Minister's remarks is that the automobile industry will only contribute if it chooses to do so, by making payments into the Government fund on the same basis as it would have paid into SUB, which it would be required to do under the collective bargaining agreement. What I have not had clearly explained yet by the Minister is what the Government does in the event the Ford Motor Company decides not to participate. As I understand it, any company which does not have a collective bargaining agreement containing a provision for SUB, then a payment under TAB will be made to those employees. Where a company has a SUB provision in its collective bargaining agreement but does not make payments into the Government fund, what is the position of the workers then? I know the Minister said a short time ago he did not want to be flippant and say this was a hypothetical case, but we have to deal with hypothetical cases. The Government is asking us to approve a sum of money to be spent under certain terms and conditions. We want to know what is going to happen to these workers. It is not really a hypothetical case.

If one may judge by this morning's press, the Ford Motor Company is making somewhat hostile noises about this plan. We are not sure whether or not they are going to co-operate with the Government. I have not been able to understand from what the Minister has said why this plan should not be compulsory. The automobile companies are getting $50 million a year in benefits. The taxpayers of Canada were not asked about this and Parliament was not asked about it. It has been compulsory so far as we are concerned. The workers who are laid off find that it is compulsory for them. Nobody asked them if they wanted to be laid off or wanted this plan approved. I see no reason why the companies should not be required to co-operate by making their SUB payments to the Government fund. I want to ask the Minister, if a company decides to exercise its option and not co-operate, what position will the Government take? What is the position of the workers, because it is the workers about whom I am concerned in this matter?

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: Perhaps I might be permitted to reassure the hon. gentleman that in spite of the newspaper report to which he has referred, I do not believe one needs to contemplate that the Ford Company will not co-operate in this plan. Even in the worst case, an individual worker would qualify either for TAB, as outlined here, or SUB if that is available. If there is no SUB plan then he gets TAB. If he qualifies for and the company does not want to co-operate, then the worker will be able to draw SUB—

Mr. Roxburgh: Five o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the Chair so that the House may proceed to the consideration of private Members' business.

Mr. Roxburgh: I just want to say this, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please.

Progress reported.

Mr. McIlraith: I understand that when the legislation comes before the House later today, I hope, the Minister of Industry will be giving an undertaking that the Order in Council designating "designated areas" under clause 2C of the bill will be tabled on the resumption of the session after the summer recess and be referred to the Standing Committee on Industry, Research and Energy Development. This will present an opportunity to discuss the criteria applicable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIlraith: This being so, I would ask unanimous consent to forego private Members' hour today and to continue to sit after six o'clock with a view to completing the business of the House—the bill which we have been discussing, Bill C-129—and interim supply, and the supplementary estimates which were under consideration. Then I think there is a question of concurrence in a report of the Internal Economy Commission made some weeks ago. But we would finish the whole thing tonight and then adjourn until Monday, September 27. The form of the motion would be the same as the one used at Christmas.

Mr. Starr: I have only one question to ask of the Leader of the House. It is this. Is he asking for unanimous consent to Bill No. C-129 being given third reading, also?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Douglas: I wonder whether the President of the Privy Council would agree to setting some limit on the hour to which we might sit? It could always be extended later. It seems to me there should be some limit, say ten o'clock or eleven o'clock. If we find by that time we have not made satisfactory progress it would be necessary to come back on Friday. I am afraid that under the arrangement the hon. gentleman has suggested we might find ourselves sitting until five o'clock or six o'clock in the morning and it seems to me this would be an absurd way of carrying on Government business.

Mr. McIlraith: No. I would hope we need not set any precise hour. I have been trying to canvass hon. Members generally. If at eleven o'clock we find ourselves in difficulty, I am sure the good sense of the House will prevail. This will be a better way of doing things than to set a definite hour at this moment.

Mr. Roxburgh: As the Member responsible for the motion to be discussed during the private Members' hour, I should like to say that I have no intention whatsoever of delaying the recess—none whatsoever. But unless we can reach a unanimous decision to finish tonight I do not intend to give up the private Members' hour. Every time a minor occurrence of some kind or other arises, a move is made to do away with the private Members' hour. Just last week the same thing happened; it was very important for a lot of people to blow off steam, but it did no good as far as the agricultural picture was concerned because the necessary arrangements were set up by the provincial ministers of agriculture and by the federal Minister.

I will say this, and then I will sit down. If we can receive unanimous consent to finishing tonight, I am all for it; and I really mean it. But if not, I reserve my right to speak in the private Members' hour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed we proceed on the basis suggested by the President of the Privy Council?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

5c. To extend the purposes of Labour vote 5, main estimates, 1965-66 to include authority for payments of transitional assistance, in accordance with regulations approved by the Governor in Council, to workers in automotive manufacturing and parts industries who become unemployed as a result of the operation of the Canada-United States agreement on automotive products, $5,000,000.

Mr. Douglas: One question following the reply which the Minister of Industry was giving. If I understood him correctly in the case of a firm which does not co-operate and has a contract which includes SUB provisions, the workers it employs will receive only the SUB benefits and not the TAB benefits. It seems to me it is most unfair that workers in one plant will get TAB benefits while those in another will get SUB benefits because employers may refuse to co-operate. I realize the Minister has said this is not likely to happen. Has he had any assurance from the Ford Motor Company of Canada that it will participate in this plan and contribute to TAB along the lines suggested?

Mr. Drury: We are having discussions with the Ford Motor Company and as I said earlier I am satisfied they will have a satisfactory outcome.

Mr. Scott: The Minister of Industry told us that where companies have these SUB benefits in their agreements and a company does not participate, the workers will take these benefits in place of the other scheme.

• (5:10 p.m.)

My question is: What happens in a case such as I understand exists in Windsor, where of the 500 workers who were laid off a large percentage are not eligible for the SUB benefits because they have not been employed long enough by the company. Therefore you have a situation where, if the Ford Motor Company did not co-operate, they would not be eligible for benefits under the collective agreement. In that case, what provision is made so that these workers will receive the 65 per cent, or whatever the figure works out at, in their particular case?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I think the Minister of Labour has made it quite clear that any worker in any company who is not eligible under the collective labour agreement will receive the TAB payments. This is quite regardless of the position taken by the company. If he is not eligible for SUB payments, he will get, as an individual worker, the TAB payments.

Mr. Scott: That will apply even in the case of a company which has a SUB plan and which declines to co-operate?

Mr. Drury: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Shall this item carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Resolutions reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

The House in Committee of Ways and Means—Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

The Chairman: Order. House again in Committee of Ways and Means on the following resolution:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1966, the sum of $15,000,000 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I intend to participate in this discussion on interim supply, with reference chiefly—

Mr. Knowles: This isn't interim supply.

Mr. Churchill: I beg your pardon, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Gordon thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-130, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending March 31, 1966.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

INTERIM SUPPLY

The House resumed, from Tuesday, June 29, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $1,651,292,282.42, being the aggregate of:

(a) four twelfths of the total of all the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of Parliament, except external affairs item 15, mines and technical surveys item 70; and external affairs item 20 for which the proportion is three twelfths, $1,456,413,323;

(b) an additional four twelfths of the amounts of agriculture items 25 and 45, legislation item 15, and loans, investments and advances item L30 (Schedule A) of the said main estimates, $4,664,625;

(c) an additional two twelfths of the amount of northern affairs and national resources item 15, (Schedule B) of the said main estimates, $2,258,500;

(d) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of agriculture items 5 and 60, fisheries item 10, mines and technical surveys items 10, 15, 25, 45 and 60, national film board item 1, northern affairs and national resources item 45, (Schedule C) of the said main estimates, $9,566,025;

(e) seven twelfths of all the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (b) laid before the House of Commons at the present session of Parliament, $162,394,142.75;

(f) an additional four twelfths of the amounts of agriculture items 17b, 25b and 35b, mines and technical surveys item 70b, and loans, investments and advances item L78b, (Schedule D) of the said supplementary estimates, $7,245,666.67;

(g) an additional three twelfths of the amount of finance item 15b, (Schedule E) of the said supplementary estimates, $8,750,000, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, when I rose a few minutes ago I was not paying close enough attention to what you had been saying; I was listening to my advisers. But I will correct that for the future.

On the subject of interim supply I propose dealing with the situation which has come to a head in Canada recently, based on the findings of the Dorion inquiry.

I think this is one of the most serious problems that has faced our country; it is perhaps the most serious in the history of our country. There may have been other instances in the past when Parliament was disturbed and the country upset over problems within Government circles, but I believe this is the first instance in our history when there appears to have been a creeping encroachment of international crime into high circles in government; and this is cause for alarm among all Canadians. As far as I am concerned, it is the major point of the whole trouble. It was mentioned by the Prime Minister himself last night, rather belatedly, recognizing the fact that, as he put it, we must deal with the sinister and growing involvement of crime in politics.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Before dealing with some of the factors I should like to express my appreciation of the action taken throughout this very difficult and trying period by a man whom I have not met, but whose name has been mentioned here, at the inquiry and in the papers, Mr. Pierre Lamontagne, the lawyer in Montreal. I think he has shown, under extraordinarily difficult circumstances, a devotion to duty and to the cause of justice that is highly creditable. The pressure that he was subjected to, as appears from a reading of the report of Mr. Justice Dorion, is an indication that only a man of sterling qualities could have resisted that pressure. He is a credit to his profession and a credit to Canada.

I quote from page 99 of the report, just to indicate the pressure he was under in the opinion of Mr. Justice Dorion:

> It none the less becomes perfectly clear that this intervention by Mr. Letendre—

Who occupied a very prominent position as Executive Assistant—

> —greatly contributed to heighten the impression on Mr. Lamontagne's mind that influential persons responsible for the government of this country were concerting their efforts to lead him to agree to the release of Lucien Rivard on bail.

You could not gain any other impression if you read the record of the constant telephone calls, interviews and suggestions—suggestions that people high up in the Government were concerned with Mr. Lucien Rivard. And Mr. Lamontagne resisted those pressures.

I want to pay my compliment to the hon. Member for Yukon who brought this matter to the attention of the House of Commons and to the public of Canada. I was present in the House on November 23, 24 and 25 last year when the hon. Member raised the issue, and I recall very well how he asked the Minister of Justice of that day to take certain appropriate action. As reported at page 10386 of Hansard for November 23, the hon. Member for Yukon, in summing up his presentation, said this, and these words, I think, deserve quoting again:

[Mr. Churchill.]

> This is the extent of the message that I am trying to get across to committee members, and I say that it is an indictment of the actions of the minister that he has not referred this matter to the proper law officers of the crown, to whom it should have been referred, to obtain their opinion. It is an indictment of the minister to have acted with the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. in a judicial capacity, which is not his function. This is what we have courts for, and I say that it is an indictment of the activity of the minister in making the decision that he did, shelving the matter.

At page 135 of the report of Mr. Justice Dorion are to be found these words:

> Considering that he was called upon to hand down a quasi-judicial decision;
> The Honourable the Minister of Justice, before reaching a decision, should have submitted the case to the legal advisers within his Department with instructions to complete the search for facts if necessary and secured their views upon the possible perpetration of a criminal offence by one or several of the persons involved.

The vindication of the hon. Member for Yukon is complete. He did on that occasion what I hope any hon. Member would do under similar circumstances—he disclosed a situation that required cleaning up. He took his chance in this House, as many people have to do when they deal with topics which are unpopular at the time, but he had the courage of his convictions, laid the case before the House of Commons, endured the cries from the other side of "Smear", "Innuendo" and "McCarthyism", and endured for the last seven months a type of persecution which has been carried on with people connected with Government circles. But now his actions have been completely vindicated.

This is the type of service for one's country that deserves commendation, because, Mr. Chairman, in the background of all this is a narcotics case. There is nobody in this country who has not a horror of the dope peddling which goes on. We are aware of the ruination of young lives that results from this terrible traffic. This is the shadow which was cast over the whole investigation and over the whole problem—the shadow of drug peddling, of narcotics, that carries with it the destruction of human lives. That destruction starts, as we have read so many times in newspapers and in magazine articles, with our younger people.

In the course of the debate yesterday, Mr. Chairman, some Members who participated were critical of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and no defence of that magnificent body has come from Government circles. We asked for it at different times during the last several months. The former Minister of Justice did not defend that force in this House. The Prime Minister at some time or other must express his opinion of that body because this is a body in which Canada has justly taken pride for generations. I do not know of any police force in the world that is held in higher regard generally than the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. During the course of my lifetime I have had occasion, as have thousands of Canadians, to rejoice in the fact that we have such a superior body of people devoting their lives to law enforcement. The Government of this country should stand behind the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and deal with the critics who from time to time attempt to downgrade that body of devoted servants of Canada.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my remarks this afternoon will be made with or without the presence of the Prime Minister. I regret that he is unable perhaps to be in the Chamber today but I cannot choose the time when I speak to fit in with his presence here. The Prime Minister, in my opinion, is the central figure on whose shoulders rests the responsibility for the problem that has faced us for several months, and which has yet in some parts to be resolved. I am not implicating him in any charge of smuggling narcotics, but I place squarely on the Prime Minister's shoulders the responsibility for not taking adequate steps earlier to deal with the circumstances in Government circles and within his party which have caused disturbances in the minds of Canadians regarding Parliament as a whole. This lack of action has caused a loss in confidence in the Government of this country and has created a lack of confidence in the Department of Justice and in law enforcement in Canada. No one who pauses to think for a moment about this sordid affair can be anything but distressed by the fact that the Prime Minister did not take some earlier action.

Last evening I heard the Prime Minister on television, or perhaps it was on radio this morning, make the following statement, and I know the first few words are accurate but I am not sure about the concluding words: "When it appeared last fall that an inquiry should be held", we arranged for that to be done. This situation did not just appear on the horizon. The matter was discussed in the House of Commons and the Prime Minister woke up to the fact that he and his Ministers had not been active during the weeks and months that preceded that disclosure.

Had it not been for this disclosure in November, what might have happened? Would all of this sordid business have been swept under the rug, hushed up and kept quiet? Would the Canadian people never have heard about the activities of the then Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister, the activities of an executive assistant and the activities of a special assistant—people who were close to the Ministers of the Crown? Would all of this have been concealed?

The Prime Minister, speaking outside the House, said that last fall when it appeared that an inquiry was necessary he took action. He tried to create the impression that he was vigorous in seizing this matter when it was brought to his attention. It was brought to his attention much earlier than November 23. The hon. Member for Calgary North on November 24 asked two or three questions of the Prime Minister as to when he had been informed of this particular problem, to which some rather evasive answers were given. At page 10429 of Hansard one will find the following recorded:

> Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's answer touched upon the ambiguity I mentioned, which was the reason for my question. When the Prime Minister said he was informed before the minister's estimates were put before the house, does he mean he was informed yesterday or a week ago? When was he informed?
> Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think I was informed on the day before his estimates were brought before the house.

We have heard quite a lot about the selective amnesia of the Prime Minister, but we know now from the record, as a result of his sudden recollection of events and his letter to Mr. Justice Dorion, that he had been informed as far back as September 2. When it appeared to the Prime Minister, if I may use his words, on September 2 that there was trouble within high circles of Government, why did he not take immediate action? Why did he postpone taking action? Was he a party to the covering-up job? This is a serious question.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Churchill: Go ahead.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know the hon. Member is talking about a judicial matter and wants to be exceedingly fair. Would the hon. gentleman tell us what it is he understands the Prime Minister was informed of on September 2? Was it not merely that Mr. Denis, an executive assistant to one of his colleagues, was accused of offering a bribe and that this matter was under investigation?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I will read from the report at page 122, and I might say that I have read the entire report. Perhaps the Minister of Transport has not read it. At page 122 of the Dorion report the following is stated:

> It was only on September 2, during the plane trip from Charlottetown to Ottawa, that the Minister of Justice informed the Prime Minister that his Parliamentary Secretary was involved in the Rivard case and supposed to have brought pressures on to the Counsel for the United States Government to incite him to agree to bail being granted to Lucien Rivard.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the hon. gentleman one more question. The hon. gentleman has said that he has read the report. Did the hon. gentleman read the evidence, because I think if he had he would recall that no evidence to that effect was given at the hearing, but that evidence to the contrary was given by the Minister of Justice. I am sure he will recall that evidence to the contrary was given in this House by the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: That is a most remarkable intervention on the part of the Minister of Transport. I read from the report of Mr. Justice Dorion. Is the Minister of Transport now finding fault with that report?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege and it is this. I am not quarrelling at all with the report, as the hon. gentleman has suggested, and I do not want to get into a quarrel with him. I am sure both of us want to be fair. All I am saying is that even the Chief Justice might conceivably have been mistaken as to a statement of fact, and all of us in this House do know that the evidence on this point was all in the opposite direction. We all know there was not one tittle of evidence produced anywhere to support that statement.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I hope you will make allowances for the time taken up by these interruptions.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

The Minister of Transport now wishes us to refer to the evidence. That is what Mr. Justice Dorion has done. He heard the evidence and he has re-read it, and now through this report he has given us his findings and conclusions. This document has been tabled in the House of Commons for the information of the people of Canada, and are we not now to place any reliance on it? I certainly place reliance on this document, which I think is a fine piece of work. I have confidence in this judge, who I am sure during this long inquiry used the greatest possible care, as he did in reporting his findings.

Mr. Starr: He knows more about it than any of you fellows.

Mr. Churchill: I am sure the judge used great care in preparing his findings for presentation to this House and to the people of Canada. This is a fine summation of the case.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask one more question.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Churchill: I do not mind answering a question.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman agree with Mr. Justice Dorion's conclusions about the R.C.M.P.?

Mr. Starr: That certainly is a smart question.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Churchill: I will answer the question, but perhaps the Minister will rise in a minute and apologize to the House for shouting "smear" last November when the hon. Member for Yukon raised this matter.

Mr. Starr: He has not got enough backbone to do that.

Mr. Churchill: With regard to the question asked me by the Minister of Transport, the master of red herrings, of course I accept Mr. Justice Dorion's criticisms and conclusions with respect to certain actions of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. But I would say to the Minister of Transport that no police force was more restricted in its operations than that force was when it started and continued its inquiries. Mr. Justice Dorion's report indicates that the police started their inquiries, were then pulled back and restricted, then allowed to proceed and then pulled back again. If we had the full story of what transpired between members of that force and the Ministers of the Crown we might have another scandal to disclose to the people of Canada, because that force certainly had imposed on it the making of a restricted inquiry.

In order to satisfy my diversionary friend across the way, my friend on some occasions but not always, I would refer to page 10388 of Hansard for November 23, 1964 where the following interjection while the hon. Member for Yukon was speaking is recorded:

Mr. Pickersgill: More smears.

That is what I said the Minister said. He shouted it and he should now apologize to the House.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman read the context, because surely it is a little unfair to read that phrase without knowing to what it was applied?

Mr. Churchill: The Minister of Transport can make his own speech. When he does I will give him the assistance he has been giving me. Let me go on. I want to deal with what the Prime Minister has been saying. The Prime Minister now says "We must deal with the sinister and growing involvement of crime in politics".

Mr. Starr: He means Liberal politics.

Mr. Churchill: As found on page 10429 of Hansard for November 24, 1963 the hon. Member for Yukon asked that that be done, and here I quote the hon. Member:

—will he perhaps appoint some other body, such as a royal commission, to investigate not only the matters referred to by the Minister of Justice but other matters specifically related to the possibility of international crime organizations having infiltrated other offices of cabinet ministers of the government?

Here is the reply of the Prime Minister:

Mr. Speaker, that is a very different matter which is far reaching and would involve a great deal of consideration and discussion. If there is any evidence to support the very serious statement made by my hon. friend perhaps he will produce that evidence, and the necessary steps will be taken.

The evidence has been produced by Mr. Justice Dorion's Commission. Is the Prime Minister now prepared to take the necessary steps? Seven and a half months have gone by. He said that much consideration was required.

On April 13 the hon. Member for Cumberland raised the same issue and asked for a Royal Commission to investigate the infiltration of international crime into high circles within government. The Prime Minister now says, "We must deal with the sinister and growing involvement of crime in politics". He has certainly got to deal with it and he has to deal with it soon. There is no question that he has to clean house and not just play musical chairs. I think he will also have to have some second thoughts with regard to his party. Throughout the Dorion Commission report there are at least 20 statements with regard to contributions to party election funds.

Mr. Nielsen: Liberal party funds.

Mr. Churchill: You will find mention of the secretary-treasurer, I think it is, of the Liberal organization whose name was on a file and who apparently asked that he be kept informed about the Stonehill case. Throughout the report, page after page, you will find references to party funds, Rivard, the good friend of the party, help in election campaigns, contributions, $60,000 reported to have been available if Rivard had got bail.

These things put the Liberal party once again in the valley of humiliation where they were after the scandals of the late 1920's. What has happened to this great party that it can count narcotic peddlers among its friends? What goes on in the higher circles of the Liberal party? When the name of Rivard was mentioned by executive assistants and Parliamentary Secretaries to the Prime Minister himself and to the former Minister of Justice, did that name of Rivard mean nothing to these gentlemen? Of course it did. They knew who he was, a peddler of narcotics and reputed to be the friend of the Liberal party.

We have reached a sad state of affairs. There is lack of action by the Prime Minister. Where was he in November and December when the Royal Commission was set up and we were discussing this matter in the House? Away on an electioneering campaign instead of doing his duty here. The Prime Minister promises now to take action. He depicts himself on the television screen as a man of action. What action has he taken? All he gave us yesterday was a very short statement with regard to the resignation of the Minister of Justice. But then he says to the general public on television, "We must deal with the sinister and growing involvement of crime in politics".

Why did he not deal with it in September of 1964 when the name of Rivard came up and when he discovered later, after his memory had assisted him, that some of the people very close to him were involved with this man? We have had a whole galaxy of people of the underworld mixed up in this case. This, Sir, is one of the most critical situations that has faced any government of this country. It is a very critical situation for Canada. I think it is deplorable that we have reached the stage in this country that we have to have a judicial inquiry which comes up with findings that international crime has infiltrated into high circles of the Government.

The man who can take action is the Prime Minister, but he is not a man of action. He will just shift and sway and, as I have said on more than one occasion, make statements in the House on which I am not able to place complete reliance. Why did the Prime Minister not indicate immediate action today with regard to some of these incidents? Why did he not say that he was going to clean house in so far as his party is concerned? Why did he not say there will be no more mixing with peddlers of dope, no more connection between the great Liberal party of this country and these international gangsters? One draws the conclusion from reading page after page of this report that something is being done for Lucien Rivard because he is a party supporter, and there may be some money available to assist the party in the next election.

Surely, the Prime Minister and his Ministers were not unaware of these undercurrents within the ranks of their assistants. I hope they are aware now that they must take precautions. I call upon the Prime Minister to announce a plan to cure this sore which is besetting the Government of this country and which is damaging the political life of this country, which is damaging this institution of Parliament. Unless there can be confidence in the Government of the country, what hope is there for Canada?

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I, as well as all other Members in the House, am extremely interested in the subject raised by the hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre. It may be that some of our party will have something to say about it later. I had the opportunity to mention the subject last night when I was probably in a more charitable mood. I do not propose to take any more time on that subject and I shall leave it to other Members to discuss the subject of the Dorion Commission report.

I want to intervene to move the matters under discussion to something that may appear to many Members of the House far less interesting and dramatic, and I am inclined to think it is less interesting and dramatic a subject. However, I believe it is a subject that has to be mentioned in this debate because it is a matter of considerable constitutional importance and a matter which the Government ought to have brought before this House by way of resolution. I refer to the proposed amendment of the British North America Act to add a new Section 71A, reducing the powers of the Legislative Council of Quebec.

Members of this Committee will not need to be reminded that under the terms of the British North America Act, Section 92, the right to amend the constitution of a province is clearly given to the provincial legislature. If the Quebec legislature had acted, therefore, the matter would not be one which concerned this Parliament in any way at all. However, the Quebec legislature has not acted. Section 71 of the British North America Act clearly sets out that the Legislature of Quebec consists of two houses, one styled the Legislative Assembly and the other styled the Legislative Council. The Legislative Assembly recently passed an Act called the Quebec Parliament Act, which provided in effect that any money bill passed by the Legislative Assembly may go into effect one month after its passing, even if the Legislative Council has not accepted it. Bills, other than money bills, can go into effect after a longer period of delay if passed by the Legislative Assembly, without any regard whatever to the Legislative Council. In this matter, the council was willing to accept the restriction of its power, the clipping of its wings, except in two cases, one relating to the rights of minorities and the other where the constitution of either Canada or of the provinces was being dealt with.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these suggested compromises were not accepted by the Legislative Assembly of Quebec. The Lieutenant Governor of Quebec, therefore, at the instance no doubt of the cabinet of that province has transmitted to the Governor General an address seeking an amendment to the British North America Act, and asked that it be forwarded to the Queen for eventual passage by the Parliament of the United Kingdom. This takes the form of an amendment to the British North America Act, and the then Acting Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, told us on June 16 that this was being forwarded with the advice that action be taken on it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in our view there are very serious and erroneous precedents being established by this course of action. It is very clearly set forth in the White Paper that was filed by the Government itself just a few weeks ago relating to the amendment of the Constitution of Canada. This is a survey of the whole matter and was made under the direction of Hon. Guy Favreau, Minister of Justice, and dated February, 1965. At page 15 two principles were stated. I quote:

> The first general principle that emerges in the foregoing résumé is that although an enactment by the United Kingdom is necessary to amend the British North America Act, such action is taken only upon formal request from Canada. No act of the United Kingdom parliament affecting Canada is therefore passed unless it is requested and consented to by Canada. Conversely, every amendment requested by Canada in the past has been enacted.

I ask the House to note the second general principle which is stated here, and I quote:

> The second general principle is that the sanction of Parliament is required for a request to the British Parliament for an amendment to the British North America Act. This principle—

This is referring to the sanction of Parliament.

> —was established early in the history of Canada's constitutional amendments, and has not been violated since 1895. The procedure invariably is to seek amendments by a joint address of the Canadian House of Commons and Senate to the Crown.

There you have it, Mr. Chairman. In a statement put out by the Minister of Justice just a matter of three or four months ago reviewing this whole matter, it is stated with the utmost clarity that the principle that you only do this with the consent of Parliament has not been violated since 1895. Now, without any reference to this House whatever, it is proposed that we violate a principle that has been established and set out in this clear way.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask my hon. friend a question? Will he not agree that that resolution, which I think was passed in 1871, was passed in respect of a situation altogether different from the situation now before us? It had to do with the provinces and the Parliament of Canada. This is a situation that was not envisaged by that resolution.

Mr. Brewin: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I was just going to answer that very point, which has been made by the Minister, because he made it before. Before I come to what I was going to say, however, may I give this by way of answer? According to page 15 of the Government's statement, from which I have just read, they were referring to general principles, and those general principles were that the sanction of Parliament was required in requesting these amendments. There is no limitation whatever suggested in that statement. A principle had been established, and had not been violated since 1895. The procedure was invariably to seek amendments by a joint address of the Canadian House of Commons and Senate to the Crown.

I admit, of course, that there are differences in different cases; but this is a general principle, and I suggest a sound principle, that there be no amendment to the Constitution of Canada passed without submission to and approval of this Parliament. I know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs took the view before, as he suggested in his question, that this statement of principle is not applicable. He says that the matter only affects the Province of Quebec. But, Mr. Chairman, on the face of it that is not a correct statement. When an amendment is sought to the British North America Act it requires the intervention and advice of the federal executive, and the Parliament of Canada is involved. A very dangerous precedent is set when amendments to the Constitution of Canada are made on the request of the executive alone.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as most Members of the House will be aware, we in this party have no brief at all for second, non-elected chambers. We indeed, have made our views clear a number of times, even in this session when we were discussing the other place and what we thought of its position in the constitutional set-up. However, I want to suggest to this House that constitutions are of fundamental importance and should not be changed by methods of dubious legality and dubious constitutionality. Constitutions are not the possession of an elected assembly alone, subject to immediate change at the request of an executive. In our view the constitution primarily belongs to the people, and we believe the people of Quebec have the right to be consulted.

• (6:00 p.m.)

Nor can it be overlooked that the apparent reason for the rushing through of this amendment by reason of arrangements privately negotiated between the right hon. Prime Minister and the Premier of Quebec is, no doubt, that the Legislative Council stands as a barrier to the early enactment of the constitutional amending formula now known as the Fulton-Favreau formula.

I do not intend to repeat here the arguments for the view that the enactment of this formula would impose a serious and perhaps fatal barrier to any changes in the Constitution of Canada, which the present dynamic needs of Canada require. It may well be that the people of Quebec will desire to have the powers of the Legislative Council emasculated or the Council totally abolished. It is quite a different thing, however, when the necessary constitutional amendments are to be rushed through without consultation with the people, without adequate discussion in Parliament, and for the purpose of fixing on the people of Canada a disastrous constitutional strait-jacket. It seems to me that for the sake of expediency, and political expediency at that, the course of constitutionality and legality—and indeed of Parliamentary control—is being abandoned in indecent haste. I think this Parliament should resent the way in which something as important as an amendment to our Constitution has been rushed through without even asking Parliament's approval.

In stating my view I should like it to be noted that I am repeating what has already been said by the provincial council of the New Democratic Party of Quebec. Although it made clear its opposition to non-elected legislative bodies, including the Senate of Canada and the Legislative Council of Quebec, it expressed profound disquiet as to the method adopted by the Lesage Government in the absence of consultation with the people of that province. I should like to express our profound disquiet with regard to this proposed amendment—it is true it comes from the Province of Quebec—which is to be forwarded to the Queen, presumably to be placed before her advisers in the United Kingdom. We regret, too, that instead of bringing this matter forward in the first instance so that it could be debated on a proper resolution, the Government should have chosen another course, making it necessary for us to deal with this important subject on a supply motion in the dying days of a session.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the hon. Member not agree that the matter in question involves an amendment to the constitution; the advice which the executive will give to Her Majesty will be to the effect that the matter in question involves an amendment to the constitution of Quebec and is of concern to that province only—not to this Parliament, not to the laws of Canada but only to the Province of Quebec? Would the hon. gentleman not agree that, to use the language of Hodges v. The Queen, this is "purely a local matter"?

[Mr. Brewin.]

Mr. Brewin: No, I certainly do not agree with the interpretation placed on this matter by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It could have concerned the Province of Quebec solely if the legislature of that province had been able to act. I would say that had the people of Quebec been consulted, I, for one, would have been ready to put the stamp of approval on it within this Parliament. But I do not think there is any constitutional correctness in the course which has been adopted by the Cabinet or the executive of this Parliament in sending this thing forward. After all, the Cabinet did receive a petition from a current legislative body, the Legislative Council, not to send it forward. I say Members opposite have interfered in the affairs of Quebec by the course they have taken, and I regret they have done so.

Mr. Patterson: Had the circumstances been different I would have dealt at greater length with the subjects I am now about to raise. I will now refer to them briefly in the hope that during the recess the Government will give these matters consideration and come forward with a solution to them.

I wish to speak of one or two matters concerning veterans affairs. The first concerns disability pensions. We all know that some time ago representations were made to the department regarding the necessity for substantial increases in disability pensions. Veterans look forward to something definite in this regard. The organizations speaking on their behalf expected that the Minister would bring in recommendations resulting in substantial upward revision of these pensions. However, some time ago the hon. gentleman rose to say there would be 10 per cent increase in these pensions.

Reactions on the part of veterans generally and the organizations representing them were critical of this announcement, and the reason is easy to recognize. It is disgraceful that some of these men should have to get by on the very small pensions they are receiving. Since this subject has been raised on a number of occasions, and representations have been made to the Minister of Veterans Affairs concerning it, I trust that during the next few months the whole matter will be considered most carefully—that the whole scheme of disability pensions will be thoroughly analysed and that the Department will come forward at an early date with recommendations which will substantially improve the financial condition of those who are now receiving disability benefits.

There is one other matter I wish to deal with. It is the situation existing in the Shaughnessy Hospital, Vancouver, with respect to the rates of pay of nursing orderlies. I will not go into detail; the Minister is familiar with the situation. A short time ago, after I had asked a question in the House, the Minister appeared to have found a solution to this problem. He repeated a statement he had made earlier to the effect that the matter was under consideration. I believe the time has come for a definite solution to be found. I believe those working in the Shaughnessy Hospital should receive incomes comparable with those received by people working in other similar institutions in the City of Vancouver. At the present time I understand there is a wide differential in these rates of pay received by nursing orderlies in the Shaughnessy Hospital as compared with their counterparts in other institutions in the city. The problem is so acute, now, that there is a real danger of deterioration in the standard of care which is given to the veterans in this institution. Not long ago I received a clipping—I do not have it here at this moment —outlining the danger which veterans are facing in this institution because the staff is shorthanded, orderlies are leaving, and new ones are being brought in constantly. All this is jeopardizing the care which our veterans are justified in expecting at this hospital.

• (6:10 p.m.)

I am not saying anything about the type of care that is being given to the full limits of the capacity of those who are engaged there; but because of these situations they are not able to cope with the problem and continue the high standard of care that is expected and desired. I notice that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs is here, and I hope he will convey to the Minister these particular problems and bring them to his attention once again with a view to having this situation rectified.

The other matter to which I want to call attention once again concerns superannuated civil servants. Here again is a matter that has been referred to many times and the Minister of Justice knows all about the problem.

Mr. Knowles: He ought to.

Mr. Patterson: The hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre said, "He ought to know", and I appreciate the fact that this hon. Member has made representations on this matter on many occasions, and others of us have done likewise. I think it is pathetic that some of the superannuated civil servants are expected to get by on the pittance they are now receiving. I know that many excuses are given. One excuse that is given, for instance, is that many of them are benefiting by other general legislation that has been passed, and so on. But I do not believe this should affect the pension that should be received by superannuated civil servants.

Many of these people have given long years of public service; they have served admirably in the public service of this country. Now they are eking out a bare existence, and I feel that the Government, if it would, could find some way of providing more adequate pensions to those who have been on pension for some time and are still receiving such a pitiful amount in this respect. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Minister of Finance once again to consider this whole matter. I suppose he would say it is constantly under review. Perhaps that is the trouble; it is constantly under review but very little is being done about it. I would ask, in the closing hours of this session, that once again the Minister give attention to this particular problem and try to do something to assist those who are suffering because of the inadequate pension they have received throughout the years.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, at this time when we are considering the granting of four months supply to the Government, rather than considering the annual appropriation of funds, there are two points I would like to raise in the closing moments of this session. It is three years ago this month that I was first elected to the Parliament of Canada, and this is the third time I have been placed in the position of speaking on matters of national importance on the day Parliament is going to adjourn. The timing of the debates and the timing of discussions on national expenditures could, believe me, be better arranged than I have witnessed during these three years.

I believe that every Member of the House is aware of the fact that I could not support the legislation with regard to the printing of bogus Canadian editions in this country. I stated publicly that I could not support the legislation because it granted exemptions to

Time and Reader's Digest. I not only made that statement a week ago today, but I have held that stand since the O'Leary report came down in 1961. In speaking on this point I would like to congratulate the Minister of Finance because he listened to my arguments that there should not be any exemptions in that publications legislation, and when introducing amendments to the Bank Act—

The Chairman: Order, please. I should remind the hon. Member—if he will resume his seat—that he cannot revive a matter on which there has been a decision of the House. I assume that the words he has just spoken were by way of introduction of another subject. But certainly the rules of the House do not allow an hon. Member to discuss a matter upon which there has been a resolution of this House.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, my remarks were certainly by way of introduction, because I intend to refer to the proposed amendments to the Bank Act, which have been referred for committee study and I understand will receive consideration by the committee even before this House resumes the session in the fall. I was referring to the introduction of the amendments to the Bank Act. On May 18 the Minister stated:

> Before leaving the matter of ownership and control of banking, I should like to point out that there would be very serious implications for Canada if foreign owned banks or their agencies were free to do any substantial volume of banking in this country.

I want to congratulate the Minister of Finance, and I do it now, for not allowing any exemptions in the amendments to the Bank Act to allow foreigners to get into our banking world. I will not refer to the other field, Mr. Chairman, because I understand it has been closed to me for discussion; but if do not know the name of the other field to which I am referring, I will tell you out in the corridor later on.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Cowan: Why there should be no exemption in some industries, and a wide-open exemption in another industry of which I know a bit and of which industry I am very fond, I do not know. But I extend congratulations to the Minister on not giving exemptions in the Bank Act even to a bank which has been established for 13 years in this country and is under foreign ownership. I have always worked on the basis that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, but obviously this principle does not hold water in some sections of Canada, even though I believe it is true, true, true.

The other matter I wish to refer to has to do with the pensions of certain R.C.M.P. officers. I was born in the City of Ottawa; I am a Canadian through and through, and I never thought I would live to see the day when the Royal Canadian Mounted Police would be publicly criticized in the Parliament of this nation by Members of the House of Commons, as was done yesterday evening.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cowan: I make no comment on the Dorion report in any manner, shape or form. That Commission was appointed by the Liberal Government of which I am a supporter—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cowan: —and I have no comment on Mr. Justice Dorion. But when I find Members of Parliament standing up and criticizing the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, it provokes me no end. I believe that if the Royal Canadian Mounted Police had less political interference there would be higher morale in the entire force, from the Commissioner down.

I specifically wish to refer to two former members of the force, Chief Superintendent René Jean Bélec and Sub-Inspector Joseph Hosanna Maurice Poitras. I have in my hands the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Continuation Act, which I have studied at length and in some detail previously. In examining the operation of the Pension Act of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police you will find in section 27 these words, that any pension "shall be granted only in consideration of good and faithful service during the period in respect of which it is calculated". I draw that to your attention, Mr. Chairman. I will make further reference to it later. Then in Section 44 of the R.C.M.P. Pension Act you read this:

> An officer who is retired compulsorily for any cause other than misconduct or inefficiency after ten years' service, is entitled to a pension for life—

And so on. Notice the phrase, "An officer who is retired compulsorily for any cause other than misconduct or inefficiency". If he is retired for misconduct or inefficiency, he can worry about his future; there will be no pension for him. But it says, "An officer who is retired compulsorily for any cause other than misconduct or inefficiency". So what happens to Chief Superintendent René Jean Bélec and Sub-Inspector Joseph Hosanna Maurice Poitras? We have never been given the facts about these two former officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, both of whom were stationed in Montreal. I am told that René Jean Bélec was the highest ranking officer in the Quebec division of the R.C.M. Police. I am told that Sub-Inspector Joseph Hosanna Maurice Poitras was in charge of drug investigations and rode herd over all the drug investigators of the R.C.M.P. during the last few months of his service with the R.C.M.P. But for causes never made known to the people of Canada the two of them were placed on the shelf for a while last fall. Interestingly enough it was during the fall that these accusations about drug peddling came to the fore. But they were not retired, they were just placed on the shelf, early in September, I believe.

• (6:20 p.m.)

I have in my hand what is certified to be a true copy of a minute of a meeting of the Committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General on December 8, 1964. It says:

The Committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice, advise that Chief Superintendent René John Bélec of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, promoted to that rank effective October 1, 1963 by Order in Council P.C. 1963 31/1477 of 10th October, 1963, be compulsorily retired from the Force to promote efficiency.

"To promote efficiency" is not a phrase used in the R.C.M.P. Superannuation Act. The Superannuation Act refers to "an officer who is retired compulsorily for any cause other than misconduct or inefficiency". So here is a cause other than misconduct or inefficiency, the cause being "to promote efficiency."

We are told that there were defalcations of public moneys, or the false administration of public moneys, by these two men while officers of the R.C.M.P. We are not told this officially, we have to pick it up. But we are not given any open reason why these two men were retired.

The second order in council is the same date, and is certified to be a true copy of a minute of a meeting of the Committee of the Privy Council. It says:

The Committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice, advise that Sub-Inspector Joseph Hosanna Maurice Poitras of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, promoted to that rank effective October 15th, 1963 by Order in Council P.C. 1963-28-1547 of 24th October, 1963, be compulsorily retired from the Force to promote efficiency.

I say there is something very peculiar when the words of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act are not followed to the letter. We are asked to observe the letter of the law. We appoint judges to the bench and employ police forces to get people to observe the letter of the law. Why not observe the letter of the law here instead of passing orders in council that give reasons for retiring people so that they can enjoy pensions which, if they were retired compulsorily for misconduct or inefficiency, would be withheld from them?

I also have a document which indicates why they were struck off strength, shall I say. The hon. Member for Fraser Valley talked of poor pensions for certain classes of people. This does not include former Chief Superintendent Bélec, because I have here an order in council relating to him. This is certified to be a true copy of a minute of a meeting of the Treasury Board, approved by His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on February 11, 1965. I point out this is the first opportunity I have had to speak on this matter. This Order in Council states:

Royal Canadian Mounted Police

The Board recommends as follows:

Chief Superintendent René John Bélec, who was compulsorily retired from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Force to promote efficiency on December 8, 1964, be granted, pursuant to sections 27(1) and 44 of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Continuation Act, a pension of $6,624.00 per annum, based on his good and faithful service in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Force from June 27, 1933 to December 1957 and effective December 9, 1964.

With regard to Mr. Poitras, this gentleman really has a pension which strikes me as a "beaut". I hold in my hand an Order in Council dated February 11, 1965 which reads as follows:

Sub-Inspector Joseph Hosanna Maurice Poitras, who was compulsorily retired from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Force to promote efficiency—

You see how they get around the words of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act.

—on December 8, 1964, be paid, under the provisions of Section 10(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, an immediate annuity at the rate of $1,562.80 per annum from December 9, 1964, until such date as he attains the age of 65 years and thereafter at the rate of $1,953.50 per annum.

So he gets an increase of almost $400 a year when he turns 65 through this pension which was forced on him to promote the efficiency of the force, effective December 8, 1964. I say to you that in private industry and in other Departments of Government former employees are not treated in this manner or anything like it.

Last February there was brought down a return in reply to a question asked by the hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). The number of the question was 2,603 and the heading in Hansard is "Criminal charges, Indian Affairs employees". The hon. Member asked:

> Since January 1, 1952 has any employee, or former employee, of the Indian affairs branch been charged with contravening any of the provisions of the Criminal Code or any other federal statute and, if so, with respect to each such person by name what was (a) his position with the branch at the time the alleged offence took place (b) the nature of the alleged offence and, if any money was involved, the amount thereof and the details about it (c) the amount of restitution of any stolen or misappropriated money—

The answer takes up the entire page 11684 of Hansard for February 24 and shows eight cases in which people had misappropriated funds in the Indian Affairs Branch, and what their fate was. They are not identified by name, I am happy to say, because I do not wish to use their names. The former superintendent of an Indian agency, Ontario, misappropriated government funds in the amount of $5,894, paid it all back, and he resigned. A former clerk at an Indian agency, Ontario, misappropriated government funds in the amount of $1,330, paid it all back and he resigned. The former superintendent, Indian agency, Quebec, misappropriated property to the value of $1,355 and he was dismissed on October 15, 1958. Why could he not have been compulsorily retired so that he could promote efficiency in the Indian Affairs Branch of the Department?

A former clerk, Indian agency, Saskatchewan, for being short in departmental receipts to the extent of $173.62, was dismissed on August 28, 1957. I think that he too should have been compulsorily retired so that he could promote the efficiency of the Indian Affairs Branch of the Department of the Government, and given a pension. The former superintendent of an Indian agency, Manitoba, misappropriated Government funds in the amount of $3,250.25, which he paid back, being dismissed on August 28, 1957. A former clerk, Indian agency, New Brunswick, misappropriated building materials and committed cheque forgeries in the amount of $897.46, paid it all back, and was dismissed on April 1, 1963. A former superintendent, Indian Agency, British Columbia and Yukon, misappropriated $3,473, building materials and cheque forgeries, paid the entire amount back and was dismissed on January 1, 1963. A former clerk, Indian agency, British Columbia, misappropriated $1,325 in forged cheques, was brought to court on 22 charges of forgery, found guilty, is presently serving a one year sentence and was dismissed on April 1, 1964.

Mr. Alkenbrack: No pension?

Mr. Cowan: No pension at all. These fellows were not compulsorily retired to promote efficiency in the Indian Affairs Branch but were dismissed just because they had done something they should not have done.

According to the way pensions are calculated in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, any pension shall be granted only in consideration of good and faithful service during the period in respect of which it is calculated. The businessmen in the House know very well that the longer a person is employed by a firm which operates a pension plan, the larger will be his pension. Not only does the pension become increased in value as continuity of office continues, but more and more the responsibility increases because more and more trust is placed in him, because people expect him to be a fit and proper person in whom to place responsibility.

But what happens in the R.C.M.P.? The longer a man is with the R.C.M.P. and the more senior his position becomes, the more responsibility he has. When he defaults, then the politicians do not calculate the last week or so of his service when he defaulted but go back over a long period of time and calculate the wonderful service he has given them. As his responsibility became bigger and bigger and his pay became larger and larger, so his pension became greater. But as his responsibility reached its zenith, the period when the greatest trust is placed in him, he then defaults. What happens? You do not consider that last week; you consider the 30 years prior to that when he was a good guy and had not defaulted. You calculate his pension on his 30 years service and forget the last week when he should have been dismissed for inefficiency.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Mr. More: I wonder whether I may ask the hon. Member a question. His statement seems to leave the inference that these pensions were granted on the recommendation of the governing officers of the R.C.M.P. It is my impression and understanding that those officers recommended their dismissal and that the pensions were granted by the Government on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Cowan: My answer to that question is this. I read from an Order in Council which indicates that the Committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice, dismissed one René John Bélec. A minute of a meeting of the Treasury Board states that the Board recommends the following:

Sub-Inspector Joseph Hosanna Maurice Poitras, who was compulsorily retired from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Force to promote efficiency on December 8, 1964, be paid, under the provisions of Section 10(3)—

That would indicate that the Treasury Board made the recommendation. Does that answer your point? I am reading from Government documents which were produced in this House as a result of questions I asked some months ago.

I pointed out, Mr. Chairman, that the final week was not counted in respect of his pension. The 30 years service is used to calculate his pension in order to give him as big a pension as possible. They get around the Act in respect of the final week by retiring this man compulsorily to promote efficiency in the R.C.M.P. rather than for misconduct or inefficiency.

The hon. Member for Skeena in February drew attention to certain cases in respect of employees of the Indian Affairs Department. His questions were answered by the hon. Member for Fort William, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, in this way:

Where a person is suspected of the misappropriation of public funds or Crown owned property, and this is confirmed by investigation, it is the policy of the department to recommend dismissal.

I should like to know why that cannot be the policy of all departments of government. That is a good policy and I am glad to know it is the one followed by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. Where a person is suspected of misappropriation of public funds or Crown owned property, and this is confirmed by investigation, it is the policy of the department to recommend dismissal, and that is a good policy.

The second sentence of this answer is:

After consultation between this department and the law officers of the crown, the Department of Justice decides whether the evidence warrants prosecution.

Why should these poor devils working for the Indian Affairs Branch receive the full treatment when it comes to dismissal from their employment for defalcation, yet some members of the R.C.M.P. are treated otherwise?

I stated before that I cannot make any comment on the Dorion report, and I will not, but I certainly can refer to the remarks of the hon. Member for Greenwood who said, when speaking yesterday:

I would say that politics is indeed in a sorry state when senior police officers accept as a matter of course that improper political interference may be made in the affairs of the administration of justice.

On Monday the hon. Member for Edmonton West related the pitiful cases of men by the names of Grant and Armishaw of the Indian Affairs division. Grant was charged that he overspent $70,000 of Indian Affairs money to aid the Indians of the Yukon Territory. I do not intend to repeat what the hon. Member for Edmonton West said, as he covered the subject thoroughly and adequately and asked for answers to his questions before the House recessed. He emphasized the fact that although over $70,000 was involved, this gentleman, Mr. Grant—I say "gentleman" and I mean "gentleman", and when I first meet him I will shake him by the hand because he is a gentleman—was fined $10 on each of six charges, with one day in jail as the alternative. I hope to God that the good people of Vernon, British Columbia, do not allow that gentleman to pay out that $60 fine. If they do not raise the $60, I should like to make a contribution to a fund so that Mr. Grant will not be put to that extra expense.

What happened to Mr. Grant? He has not been on the Government payroll for something like two years. Why do they not treat him in the same way as they treated the officers of the R.C.M.P.? If they did that, this poor fellow would not have to run a small grocery store in his advancing years, nor would his wife have to work as a nurse's aide in a nursing home in British Columbia. The interesting thing is that his co-conspirator, according to the charge read against him, was acquitted of all charges in the courts the day before yesterday, or at least that is the latest information I have read in the Edmonton newspapers.

I say to you, as a Member of the Liberal Party, that I will vote for this interim supply with a mighty heavy heart because I realize that some of the taxpayers' money is being diverted to pay pensions to the likes of former Inspector René John Bélec, the first commissioned officer in the 97-year history of the R.C.M.P. to ever be convicted of defalcation while holding down his office. We are paying him $6,600 just to show what a good guy he is. I will vote with a heavy heart for interim supply, part of which will also pay the pension of Sub-Inspector Joseph Hosanna Maurice Poitras.

While I will support the motion because Government must go on, I certainly would like to see less interference with the operations of the R.C.M.P. If R.C.M.P. officers were allowed to operate that division of the Government as they can operate it, and as they are able to operate it,—and they are the ones who built up its reputation over this 97 year period,—there would be higher morale in that arm of the Government than there is today, because of political interference from time to time. I am proud to stand here and say that I have the utmost confidence in Commissioner McClellan of the R.C.M.P., and I hope that there are other Members of Parliament who will say as much for the R.C.M.P. in spite of the attacks made on that force by two Members of this House yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, it is now apparent that before very long this House of Commons will be taking a recess. This is a rather unusual experience in the parliamentary lives of the newer Members. They probably do not know what a recess is, in view of the way in which we have been sitting more or less continuously since the 1963 election. I am sure that we all agree that a recess is desirable. It is desirable for the Members themselves in order that they can have a break from their duties here in Ottawa and meet with their constituents a little more than has been possible these past few years. It is also desirable for the Government, so that it will have an opportunity to give a little more attention to the legislation it intends to bring to Parliament.

Nevertheless I regret, Mr. Chairman, that we are leaving at this point so much unfinished business. I know that at this stage of the session any pleas I might make to the Government that certain things be done before we rise will probably fall on deaf ears, but I should like to state some of these important items, with the hope that they will be given consideration during the recess and that we will see action on them soon after we resume the business of the House in September.

The first item I should like to mention is the amount of the old age security pension. We had a good deal of discussion about this at the meetings of the Committee on the Canada Pension Plan which met during the Christmas recess some months ago. Those who were Members of that Committee will recall that we tried to get motions passed to recommend that the old age security pension be increased to a $100 a month. We were not successful but there was expressed, particularly by Liberal members of the committee, the opinion that something needed to be done to improve the position of those now on pension and those who would not qualify for pensions under the Canada Pension Plan, and they also expressed the view that something would be done.

• (6:40 p.m.)

One improvement was effected when the qualifying age for old age security was lowered from age 70 to age 65. However, this is coming down only on a year by year basis. The qualifying age will be 69 in 1966 and so on, until it becomes age 65 in 1970. This is a good move but, Mr. Chairman, it is no help to those who are now on the old age security pension. It is my very strong view that this Government and this Parliament will not get away with what they have failed to do in the old age pension field, and that action is going to have to be taken with regard to the amount of the old age security pension. I earnestly plead that the Government during the recess, if it does not find it possible to do it tonight, reconsider its position with regard to the amount of the old age security pension.

I have a resolution on the order paper, now fourth on the list of private Members' notices of motions, which seeks this very thing. It asks that the Government give consideration to the advisability of introducing a measure to increase the amount of the pension provided under the Old Age Security Act to $100 per month. I feel this is a matter of the utmost importance and I regret that, despite the wide support there is among Members of Parliament for doing something in this direction, we are going on recess without having increased the old age security pension from its present level of $75 a month. This is not good enough.

I move immediately, Mr. Chairman, to another subject which is related and indeed is a subject that the Government has related to the question about which I have just been talking. I refer to the Government's proposal to bring in what is to be known as the Canada Assistance Plan. This was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne at the start of the session, and it was outlined in some detail by the Prime Minister when he spoke in the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. It was a piece of legislation that seemed to be an implementation of the statements made in the committee on the Canada Pension Plan to the effect that something would be done for people who would not qualify for benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. I say at once, as I said at the time, that the ideas involved in the Canada Assistance Plan are good, but once again we are having to get these things on a Liberal timetable, which seems to take an ever longer and longer period of time.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has been making a good many speeches throughout the country in the last few months. She has been in the far east and she is now in the far west. In some of these speeches she has talked about the Canada Assistance Plan and has pointed out that under that Plan it will be possible for some persons who are on old age security and are drawing only $75 a month under that legislation to get an additional amount. The reason they will be able to get an additional amount is that the Canada Assistance Plan, so we understand, is to bring into legislation of this kind the concept of the needs test rather than the concept of the means test. This is good. Perhaps it may depend on how it is administered. You can administer the two concepts in such a way that despite the difference in name there may not be much difference in the result. However, I take the Government's proposals at their face value. I believe that the Government does intend that we should get away from means tests provisions in so far as our social legislation is concerned, and instead apply a needs test. But I suggest that it is unfair to our older people for the Minister of National Health and Welfare to go around talking about what is going to be done for them when we cannot get the legislation on the order paper. I know that someone on the other side may say to me that I am unreasonable in pressing this matter in view of the fact I have been told so often that it will come before the forthcoming Federal-Provincial Conference. The difficulty is that I have been listening to promises that matters will be discussed at Federal-Provincial Conferences during all the years I have had the privilege of being a Member of the House of Commons. I regret that after all the fanfare about the Canada Assistance Plan, which I think has the prospect of being a good piece of legislation, it is not yet on the order paper. I hope it will be on the order paper when the House resumes, which I understand is to be in September.

Another piece of unfinished business is medicare. Again we will be told that this is an item that is going to be discussed at the Federal-Provincial Conference. Well, it was the subject of discussions at the Federal-Provincial Conference of 1945 and was placed before the provincial governments then in the Green Book proposals. We have had it promised time and time again. In the meantime we have had other documents including the very excellent recommendations in the Hall report. In the meantime some of the provinces have brought down legislation in this field which may actually get in the way of the proper, adequate kind of medicare legislation that we need in the federal field. I regret that all we have had is talk about this matter and that there is nothing on the order paper as it now stands. I earnestly hope that when we come back for the remaining part of the session medicare will be on the order paper and that we will get action on this subject this year.

I was glad to hear the hon. Member for Fraser Valley raise again a few minutes ago the question of the position of retired federal civil servants. I congratulate those Members of all parties in the House who have raised this issue from time to time during the course of this session. I should like to suggest that it is not only the plight of those whose pensions are low because they may not have served very long about which we should be concerned, because I think that even those who served for many years and retired a few years ago are on pensions that have not kept pace with the rising cost of living or with the rising standard of living.

In 1959 Parliament recognized the validity of the principle that pensions of civil servants already retired should be increased, and this Parliament in the Canada Pension Plan has recognized the principle that after pensions are put in pay people on pension should get an increase, as costs go up and as standards go up, to enable them to meet rising costs and to enable them to enjoy the rising standard of living. The case of superannuated civil servants has been presented time and time again. The Government has heard representations from these people and has led them to believe that their representations would be considered, only to turn them down pretty flatly as has been the case in recent months.

This is an issue on which I think Parliament must act. It is not good enough just to say that these people have to wait for what is done by way of general legislation for all older people. The Government has a responsibility to all people of the country, as citizens, but it also has its particular responsibility to be a good employer. I do not think the Government is being a good employer when it keeps turning a deaf ear to the plight and the needs of our retired civil servants. I regret that nothing was done last session and that in this session that has lasted 53 sitting days so far we have got no action on this important question.

I couple with the plight of retired civil servants the plight of some retired Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers. I am not referring to the two about whom the hon. Member for York-Humber spoke a moment ago, but rather to those who were retired on pensions provided under legislation, not pensions provided by Order in Council. It is also a fact that there are persons on defence service pensions who retired some years ago to whom some consideration should be given. With increasing costs and increasing standards, these people have a right to increases in their pensions which will enable them to meet these increasing costs and to enjoy our rising standards.

• (6:50 p.m.)

The same situation applies to the pensioners of the Canadian National Railways. It seems very difficult to get anything out of the present Minister of Transport, other than a promise to send a communication to the President of Canadian National Railways. All we ever get back from him is the same kind of communication, which suggests this is something for the Government to act upon only when it deals with all old people generally. As I say, I think this Government and the Canadian National Railways have a responsibility not only to citizens generally, they also have a special responsibility as employers. I regret very much that 53 days of this session of the twenty sixth Parliament have gone by without any action for these people.

Another item of unfinished business concerns something I have raised with the Minister of Labour on several occasions recently, namely the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act. Tomorrow is July 1, a significant day in the history of Canada. It will be the 98th anniversary of Confederation and also the day on which the Canada Labour Code comes into effect. This is a good piece of legislation. We waited a long while for it, but it is a good thing we have it. It is going to apply certain standards to a good many employees. But the Code will not affect people who are working directly for the federal Government, nor will it affect people who are working on federal Government contracts. They can get the same standards that are set up in the Canada Labour Code only by other action. The Government has apparently acted by a Treasury Board minute to provide to direct Government employees one standard in the Canada Labour Code, namely the wage of $1.25 per hour.

However, the other three standards, the maximum work week, the eight general holidays with pay and the two weeks holiday with pay do not apply by law to direct employees of the Government, unless they have that protection under something like the Civil Service Act. So far as people working on Government contracts are concerned, they do not have this coverage at all. The Minister of Labour has promised repeatedly that this matter would be looked after. Last year when he introduced the Canada Labour Code he took the initiative himself in admitting the Canada Labour Code would not cover these two groups of employees. He said they would be covered by amendments to the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act. He said that the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act would be amended so its provisions would parallel those of the Canada Labour Code, and would come into effect at the same time the Canada Labour Code came into effect.

We had discussion about this the other night in which the Minister quibbled about certain words he had used. He tried to say that his promise to have this come into effect by July 1, 1965, applied only to the minimum wage for direct Government employees. My reading of his answers to my questions over the months makes it very clear that it was his intention that these things would be in effect on the same date, namely July 1. I regret very much, Mr. Chairman, that tomorrow, when the Canada Labour Code is going into effect, it will not be paralleled by amendments to the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act, so that Government employees and persons working on Government contracts might have the same four minimum standards that are set out in the Canada Labour Code. I repeat those four minimum standards: a minimum wage; eight statutory holidays with pay; two weeks holiday with pay each year and a maximum work week of five days or 40 hours. As I say, Mr. Chairman, these things ought to be in effect and it is not good enough for Parliament to be recessing, leaving behind so much unfinished business.

There are many other items not yet attended to, but at this moment I will list just one more, the one about which I asked the Minister of Labour a question on the orders of the day this afternoon, namely the proposed legislation regarding safety in employment. This, too, is something that the Government promised at the second session of Parliament. It was promised again by putting it in the Speech from the Throne at the start of this session. As a matter of fact, this is something that was before us even during the last Parliament under the previous Government but it never got passed. It is a serious situation which arises because of our division of responsibilities between the provinces and the federal government. There are plants in this country which come under federal labour jurisdiction. When accidents take place, even if someone is hurt or killed, the provincial safety people cannot go in to make an investigation because the plant comes under federal labour jurisdiction. I know of some cases where this has actually happened. As long as we have this division between provincial and federal jurisdiction in the labour field, we will need federal legislation in the safety field comparable to that which exists in the provinces.

As I say, the Minister of Labour promised us last session that this measure would be introduced. He made the same promise this session, and we have been told from time to time that the legislation was ready and would be brought before us soon. We were told that last fall. We went through that long session last year without ever seeing the measure on the order paper. We have been 53 days in this session and it still is not on the order paper. As hon. Members are aware, I asked the Minister of Labour about this on the orders of the day this afternoon and he said it would not be on the order paper before the session recessed. I then asked him if it would be on the order paper after we came back. I fear I did not word that supplementary question very well because it enabled him to say, yes, it would be on afterwards but afterwards might be two or three months or two or three years afterwards. We need this legislation on the order paper at the time we come back in September.

There are other matters, but I did want to list these seven or eight which I think are very important. I regret that we have gone 53 days without dealing with them. I hope when we come back in the fall this Government will realize the people of Canada expect action to increase the old age security pension to $100 per month and action to bring in the Canada Assistance Plan. They expect action on medicare. They expect something to be done for our superannuated civil servants, for retired members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, defence service personnel and retired employees of the Canadian National Railways. They expect action on the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act. They expect action on the proposed legislation regarding safety in employment. I regret that there is so much unfinished business. If we give the Government two or two and a half months in which to attend to things, I hope it will use that time to get these various matters into legislative shape. I urge that they will be on the order paper without fail when we return in September.

Mr. Southam: I can assure hon. Members of the committee I am not going to take up very much of their time, Mr. Chairman, knowing that we are all anxious to wrap up this session. However, I would be remiss in my duty if I did not at this time rise in my place and register a very strong complaint about the emergency situation that is developing in western Canada. I am sorry that the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Transport are not in their seats. The emergency to which I am referring concerns the pile-up of grain on farms in Western Canada.

As hon. Members know, western Canada reaped a very bountiful harvest last year. With the quota system we have this has moved out gradually. For some unknown reason, during the past few weeks we have found box cars have not been available for this grain to move off western farms. The emergency is aggravated by the fact we have prospects of another large crop in the West this year, and we are very thankful for that. As I have said, we work on a quota system and at the end of the crop year, which is July 31, most of this grain should be moved off the farmers' hands and into the elevators in the process of being moved to market. The farmers would then have space in which to house the new crop. Members from western Canada have been bringing this problem to the attention of Ministers for the last six weeks. My hon. friend from Swift Current-

Maple Creek has brought it to the attention of the House. The hon. Member for Rosthern and the hon. Member for Assiniboia have done the same thing. Only yesterday I referred to a telegram sent to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and questioned him about this matter. In reply he said the situation was under control. However, we do not see evidence of the necessary action being taken.

• (7:00 p.m.)

The Wheat Board is involved, but the Board, as an agency of the Government, has to get some direction and assistance from the Government. So I make an urgent plea to the Government at the present time to give this matter serious attention. I hope that some of the Ministers who are now present will bring it to the attention of their colleagues who are directly concerned because it is most important that the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. should rush cars into these areas.

There is one other matter. A number of farmers in western Canada have been receiving registered letters from the Wheat Board with respect to the balance of payments of their cash advances. Understandably this is a source of great annoyance to these farmers, who cannot pay the balances, due to the difficulty they find in getting their grain to market. They should not be receiving these dunning notes. There need be no concern about the collection of these advances because, under the Act, the permit books of the farmers concerned are held by the elevators and when they are allowed to bring their grain to market the advances will automatically be collected. I think the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board should discuss this matter with the Board to see whether the issuance of such letters cannot be held in abeyance until cars have been placed at the disposal of the elevators in western Canada to get the grain off the farms.

This is a serious problem in western Canada, particularly in southeastern Saskatchewan and the western side of Manitoba, and the Government should give it urgent consideration.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

The house in Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

Mr. Gordon moved:

Resolved, that toward making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public services for the fiscal year ending 31 March 1966, the sum of $1,651,292,282.42 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

[Mr. Southam.]

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs just one question? Does he intend to reply to the remarks made earlier this afternoon by the hon. Member for Greenwood with respect to the current proposal for the amending of the British North America Act?

Let me put my question this way: Is this all there is to it? Is the fact that there has been an opportunity to discuss the matter—whether there has been very much discussion or not—all that is necessary? The Government sends the amendment over and the constitution is amended—is it as simple as that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, it is as simple as that. The Government, as the adviser to Her Majesty the Queen, has a responsibility which it will exercise as we have already indicated. This advice will be that the matter forwarded to us by the Lieutenant Governor, for the Government of the Province of Quebec is in respect of a matter which the Government of Canada believes to be a matter of a local character within the terms of the constitution.

I made a statement the other day as to the course we propose to follow. The Prime Minister had indicated that notwithstanding the responsibility of the executive, within the limitations I have indicated, the Government would not finally give this favourable advice to Her Majesty until such time as this House had been given the opportunity to express individual opinions. This opportunity has been given.

The Government takes the position that this is not a matter for the Parliament of Canada. This is a matter which does not concern the laws of Canada, the Parliament of Canada, or the provinces. This is a matter which affects the province concerned alone. For that reason the course I have already outlined will be followed.

Mr. Knowles: I have no intention of extending this discussion, but I think it should be on record that some of us do not feel this is the proper course. If the Government proposes to go ahead and do it just because there has been this little bit of discussion, there is nothing we can do to stop it. But it does not accord with the views which some of us hold about the importance of our constitution and the whole question of how it should be amended.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Gordon thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-131 for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1966.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time? Now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Gordon moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, —Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Knowles: Are copies of this bill available?

INDUSTRY

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF DEVELOPMENT GRANTS IN DESIGNATED AREAS

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-129, to provide incentives for the development of industrial employment opportunities in designated areas in Canada, and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister consider making a statement, in the light of some of the discussion we have had on this matter and in view of the understanding of the House Leaders?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the resolution yesterday I said that the area development program had achieved a substantial measure of success during its period of operation. Members may be interested in a few facts and figures covering the period from the beginning of the program until the close of the last fiscal year.

It will be recalled that when the program was announced in September, 1963, a total of 35 National Employment Service areas were designated, within which tax incentives to new manufacturing and processing industries would apply. Three of these areas were removed from the list following a review of conditions in all areas in December, 1964. Economic conditions in these areas had improved to a degree where special development incentives were no longer required.

During the period mentioned, no fewer than 150 firms indicated to us that they intended to take advantage of the tax incentives and establish in designated areas. These new establishments will employ some 14,500 workers in their own plants and indirectly will create an equal number of additional jobs in the construction, supply and service industries. The total investment made in these new facilities will amount to more than $470 million, an average investment of about $32,500 for each worker employed in the new plants. The number of new jobs created in these new establishments represents almost 3 per cent of the labour force in the 35 designated areas.

I should explain that 27 of the original 35 areas attracted new industries under the program. An analysis of the new businesses established in the 27 areas indicates that six of these areas accounted for 72 per cent of all the new direct jobs and for 55 per cent of total new investment. Some 60 per cent of the the new firms are located in these six areas. The new jobs created amount to some 5.6 per cent of the labour force, and this has resulted in a substantial reduction in the unemployment rate in the areas.

These 150 new firms embrace a wide range of industries. The papermaking industry accounts for about one quarter of the new investment. Firms producing transportation equipment account for about 14 per cent of the new employment and the same proportion of new investment. The chemical industry accounts for about 13 per cent of the new employment, but for over one third of all the new investment, reflecting the very high ratio of capital to labour in this industry. The textile group also accounts for about 13 per cent of the new employment but only about 9 per cent of the new investment, reflecting the labour intensity of the textile industry. Machinery manufacturers account for about 7 per cent of the employment and about 2 per cent of the new investment. A few large firms account for the major increases in new employment and investment. Of the 150 new firms, ten with investments of over $20 million account for over two thirds of the new investment and something less than one half of the new employment.

Drawing on the experience obtained in the first year of operation, the Government several months ago undertook a thorough review of the whole area development program. From the beginning our main concern was to deal quickly and effectively with situations of serious unemployment. In order to proceed we first needed to devise objective criteria which could be applied in a uniform and consistent manner to all areas across the country, in order to determine those areas in which unemployment conditions were most serious. Members will recall that designation was on the basis of National Employment Service areas and depended upon whether an area had been in a labour surplus category during the summer months of the previous eight years and where employment growth was well below the national average. Consideration was also given to short-run serious unemployment, and several areas were added for this reason.

Our early experience and study indicated that the unemployment situation in the summer months shows up markedly in certain areas where retooling and other production changes are normal in those months. Therefore we now propose to consider unemployment in terms of the ratio between the number of registered unemployed and the number of paid workers in the area for the year as a whole. When this ratio is calculated for each National Employment Service area, it provides a basis for comparing the unemployment situation among all areas in the country and of showing each area relative to the general situation for Canada as a whole. We believe that this is a better technique for identifying the areas where the incidence of chronic unemployment is heaviest.

The second criterion for designation is the rate of employment growth experienced over the most recent five years rather than over an eight-year period. Five years are enough, we believe, to establish a trend and identify a chronic situation. when this factor is calculated for each area, we have an additional basis for comparing areas with one another and with the average for the country as a whole.

Mr. Nugent: The hon. Member only asked one question.

[Mr. Drury.]

Mr. Drury: The interjector's deskmate is very interested in these employment statistics, Mr. Speaker.

We are proposing a third criterion which provides for the designation of areas in which employment has declined persistently over a period of years. Our concern with unemployment and lack of employment opportunities goes well beyond a simple enumeration of people who might be registered as unemployed with the National Employment Service. To begin with it is well known that not all unemployed are registered with NES as seeking work. This situation may be associated with underemployment, which in general means employment for less than normal full time, or employment in an unproductive and low-paying job. But whatever the circumstances, perhaps the most reliable indicator of unregistered unemployment, and of underemployment, is low income. Accordingly, we are proposing to include as a fourth criterion for designation average non-farm family income as obtained from the national census. As the Canada Pension Plan gets under way we will benefit from more complete and more up-to-date information on family income in all parts of the country. What we will achieve through the application of these criteria is the designation of areas containing a total of about 15 per cent of the labour force in Canada. This is considered to be a reasonable and an acceptable scope for the new program and compares with 10 per cent of the Canadian labour force included in the 35 areas originally designated under the present program.

I have a final comment on this matter of determining which areas are to be designated for special assistance. Hon. Members are aware that industrial development assistance for select areas is relatively new to Canada and to other countries. We are in an early and experimental stage. The United States is in the process of enacting important changes in their program. In Europe, both Great Britain and France have made changes in recent years in their programs for area development.

• (7:20 p.m.)

We must keep in mind that countries with unitary systems of government find it easier to implement regional programs than does Canada. In our system, the provinces have very definite interests in economic development, and these interests inevitably take on a regional character. In developing our program we have been most conscious of provincial interests, and have had both formal and informal consultations with regard to our new proposals. I think we have to recognize that as the provinces devise and implement development programs of their own, there will have to be close and continuing consultations to ensure that we move to our common objectives in a co-ordinated manner.

The Prime Minister said in his announcement of June 7 that final details with regard to criteria for designation of areas under this new program will have to await the completion of consultations with the provinces. I expect that these criteria, together with a description of the designated areas, will be announced immediately after the Prime Minister's conference with the Premiers to be held in July. Following this announcement and subsequent to the conference, I have assured a number of Members, and I am glad to assure the House, that the Government will table at the opening of the next part of the session the Order in Council designating the areas and will endeavour at an early date thereafter to refer the Order in Council to the House Committee on Industry, Research and Energy Development for discussion.

Because of the critical importance of the considerations affecting the designation of areas to which this bill will apply, I have given this rather detailed statement concerning both matters of mechanics and principle which have been taken into account.

I now wish to deal more specifically with the incentives for encouraging industry to locate in the designated areas, which is the subject matter of the bill now under consideration. The Government's purpose in this legislation is to provide improved employment opportunities for people in areas where these are inadequate in comparison with Canada as a whole. It is our intention to have better employment opportunities and sound economic growth at the same time.

We are convinced of the importance to the country of a broadening and strengthening of our industrial sector and we wish to make it possible for some of this expansion to take place in the areas where industrial employment opportunities are needed most. To this end, the bill before you will provide for development grants to assist new manufacturing and processing industries to establish in designated areas. It will also provide grants to existing manufacturing and processing industries to assist them in expanding their facilities. We recognize that there are obstacles, and at times additional costs, to locating in designated areas as compared with well-established industrial centres. It is the purpose of this bill to help overcome such obstacles and to provide an offset to higher initial costs. We propose that these grants should be based upon the fixed capital outlays incurred by the enterprise in establishing or expanding a business in designated areas, in accordance with formulas defined in the bill.

I should like to stress that it is not the Government's intention to encourage industries to establish in areas where their long-term prospects for success would be in doubt. While the Government will be providing financial assistance, the firms themselves will provide the bulk of the investment capital. Management will decide whether this initial capital assistance will offset the costs and other impediments to locating in designated areas as compared to alternatives. There is therefore a strong built-in safeguard to ensure that new enterprises in these areas will be viable on a long-term basis.

The development grant will amount to 33⅓ per cent of the first quarter of a million dollars of fixed capital outlay. This proportion is higher than the allowance for larger investments, because it is the Government's view that the smaller firm is often well adapted to conditions in designated areas. Furthermore, the smaller firm is often more labour-intensive. We are also aware that smaller firms usually have difficulties in their initial financing, so that a cash grant is the more effective way of meeting their needs.

On capital costs between $250,000 and $1 million, the development grant will amount to 25 per cent of the fixed investment and on outlays over $1 million the proportion will be 20 per cent, with a maximum of $5 million for any single facility. For expansion of an existing facility, the amount of the grant will be determined by the same formula, except that the expansion must be larger than a specified minimum in order to qualify. Again the $5 million maximum grant for any single facility will apply.

Some firms may, for one reason or another, prefer to have a remission of tax rather than a cash grant. These tax incentives have proven highly attractive to many firms in the present program, and they will be retained as an option under the new program until the relevant provisions in the Income Tax Act expire on March 31, 1967. Furthermore, firms which qualify for assistance under the new program may elect to take a tax credit in lieu of a cash grant.

In addition to providing funds and establishing formulae for making development grants, the bill before you proposes amendments to the Income Tax Act relating to definitions of "manufacturing" and "processing". The main effect of these amendments is to ensure that the basis of eligibility for the tax benefits which will remain in effect until March 31, 1967, will be the same as the basis on which eligibility of assets for development grants will be determined.

Hon. Members should note that the bill establishes an expiry date of March 31, 1971, for grants under this program.

As I said earlier, we are in a new and dynamic field when we undertake to influence industrial location in particular areas. We will no doubt learn a great deal as our program proceeds, as indeed other countries have done in the past. As we gain new experience, and learn from the experience of others, it would be my hope and intention, Mr. Speaker, to come before the House again with further proposals, which would be designed like the present ones, to make more effective the Government's efforts to ensure the growth of our industrial sector and the better employment opportunities that this expansion will provide to our people in all parts of Canada.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a question of the Minister before he sits down. He said that he would endeavour to have these regulations tabled in the House soon after the House resumed its sittings, and that he would endeavour to have them referred to the Committee on Industry, Research and Energy Development. He said he would "endeavour". I was wondering whether that was a slip of the tongue. Do I take it that the Minister is undertaking to have them referred to this Committee?

Mr. Drury: I did undertake unequivocally to table the estimates because this is within my control. I have learned in a very short parliamentary experience not to give undertakings as to what the House may or may not do. I will use my best endeavours to see that these are referred as early as possible after tabling—and I do undertake to table them immediately—to the House Committee. Specifically, I think it has been understood, Mr. Speaker, with respect to this question of tabling and referral, that the Government undertakes that the Order in Council designating the designated areas in clause 2(c) will be tabled on the resumption after the summer recess and referred to the Standing Committee on Industry, Research and Energy Development. This will include an opportunity to discuss the criteria.

[Mr. Drury.]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take very much time but I am interested in the fact that overnight the Minister has learned a considerable amount about this matter, and I congratulate his officials in the gallery for having written this very interesting statement that the Minister has just read. I hope that during the summer recess he will take some opportunity to learn something about the department, so that he will keep familiar with the many points which were raised by hon. Members yesterday. Some of the staff of the department, perhaps not known to the Minister, have already learned some lessons, and this resulted in the discussion which took place on the changing of the criteria for deciding the designated areas. I should like to draw the Minister's attention to one sentence of the Prime Minister's statement made on June 7 and recorded at page 2023 of Hansard for that date. The Prime Minister said:

• (7:30 p.m.)

The third major change we propose in the policy is an extensive revision and broadening of the areas to which it applies. With this objective we propose to establish new guide lines for the designation of areas where, under the terms of the Department of Industry Act, the industrial incentives will be made available. These guide lines will be the basis for objective standards which will be put in statistical terms by the Governor General in Council.

Then he goes on to say:

The importance of the present proposals is that Canadians living in areas where jobs are most needed will have a better chance to improve their lives, because of the scope that this program provides for constructive industrial development and improved skills.

Mr. Speaker, I will not take the time of the House to go over some of the changes which have been discussed by Members in all parts of the House, but I should like to say that the Prime Minister clearly indicated in his statement that he was prepared to move this program along the road of progress. This program really has been in effect for a number of years and has been modified more than once. A change is already needed again as indicated by the fact that out of 35 areas originally designated, 27 have new industry while four have been removed from designation, yet the areas which have been assisted have faced a very heavy increased capital cost because of the additional number of people employed. The figures in this regard as I wrote them down are 14,002 employees at a capital expenditure of $32,000 for each employee with an increase in earnings as a result of the assistance of 3 per cent.

The Minister I think really read an interpretation of the Act now before us giving some elaboration in respect of the section which relates to the Department of Industry Act. This in very broad terms sets forth the criteria to be established, not by that Act or any other Act, but by Order in Council. For that reason I suggest to the Minister that Members of Parliament who make suggestions in this regard, and I do not think the Minister has grasped this fact, are not going to suggest that industry be developed in areas or communities which will be harmed by such development. One might by subsidy entice industry to develop in communities, but if these industries are not capable of supporting themselves after the subsidy is cut off, then this measure will in fact bankrupt these communities. If the members of the communities, their industrial commissions and municipal councils cannot envisage an industry carrying its own weight after the initial incentive disappears, I am sure no responsible representative will ask that these industries be persuaded to locate in their areas.

No doubt there are many people who would be glad to lend money for the establishment of industry in certain areas because under this proposal they would receive a large proportion of their investment back in the form of subsidies. For instance, if a small factory is involved, the return could be as high as 33 per cent of the capital expenditure for such things as machinery and initial construction. I sincerely hope that the Minister will have a change of heart and will urge the committee to do something to make this plan much more successful than it has been.

In my opinion there has been a tremendous lack of leadership on the part of provincial departments of economics, or whatever the name is of those departments which are the counterpart of the federal Department of Industry. That leadership has not been forthcoming. In the Province of Ontario, while there are some very good people working in the Department of Economics who have been responsible for some of the success that has been achieved, the Government and the Minister in particular have not shown the needed leadership. A former Minister who did a great deal to develop this Department failed after its development to give leadership in the area of the development field.

I do not believe our Minister is going to come back with a cut and dried program which will provide equity of treatment to all participating provinces, because some of the provinces are not in the same position as others. I sincerely urge the Minister to keep in mind the promise made by the Government to the House that these criteria and regulations will be considered in respect of any Orders in Council, and reconsidered by the Industrial Committee. It is my belief that many valuable and worthy suggestions will be made by Members of that Committee which the Government will have to act upon, or fail in its commitment. I hope the Minister will be sincere in his consultations with the Members of that Committee and will look seriously at the problems that will be raised regarding areas where assistance has not been provided.

I am perfectly in accord with the Prime Minister's statement. He may not have read this bill thoroughly, but as a result of reading it I am convinced that there is no great change in the criteria for designating areas. All there has been is a change in the system of incentives by the inclusion of outright grants. I do not believe the Prime Minister was talking about money, but rather about the inclusion of areas where there has been slow growth in the expansion of industrial development. What is needed is some leadership on the part of the Government for the development of equity of opportunity to communities throughout Canada.

I am as positive as I am standing here, Mr. Speaker, that this bill will not meet the requirements as suggested by the Prime Minister. The Minister is sometimes reluctant to pay much attention to the suggestions of Parliamentarians, perhaps even most of the time, but I hope in regard to this whole program he will give some consideration to the suggestions which I am sure will be made by the Committee. I have sympathy for the fact that the Minister has had a great deal of administrative responsibility, but I think before we will be able to arrive at a mutually acceptable conclusion the co-operation of each and every Member of this House will be absolutely essential, as will be the co-operation of each of the provisional departments interested in this scheme.

The Minister has said that this is a new kind of program. I agree that it has been changed three or four times and I hope that on the occasion of every future change, the change will be for the better. I think we will be taking a great step along the road to co-operation in helping these areas of slow industrial growth if each and every Member consults with his local industrial commission and municipal council in order that at this level of Government there will be greater understanding in this field. If that is the case, I am sure that when we come back to discuss the criteria and regulations in the Committee we will truly be able to do what the Prime Minister has said is needed.

• (7:40 p.m.)

He has said that the importance of the present proposals lies in the fact that Canadians living in areas where jobs are most needed will have a better chance to improve their lives because of the scope of this program providing for constructive industrial development and improved skills. I hope we can make this come to pass and bring about a redistribution of industry that will provide an equal opportunity to areas in all parts of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few words to say about section 1 of the bill on designated areas. I would call the Minister's special attention to the condition governing grants for the development of industry in designated areas, because we know from past experience in my county that, in recent years, certain areas have not been designated. What I find strange is that our area was designated for winter works, we have received winter works grants as a designated area, yet when it comes to setting up new industries or allowing grants for new industries, we find that our area is no longer designated. It is on this specific point that I wish to draw the Minister's special attention, because he told us that these new areas would be designated at the time of the federal-provincial conference of provincial prime ministers. Therefore, I want to inform him of one thing: there are, in constituencies such as mine, factors which will completely change the report of the national unemployment service.

From what I see, statistics provided by the national unemployment service constitute the main basis for the designation of areas. In my constituency, there are two offices of the national unemployment service. The statistical data of the office in the north are very exact, and this area is designated both for winter works and for assistance to industries. On the other hand, in the south, the designated area, Roberval and St. Félicien, the unemployment office, which is located in Roberval, cannot give a true picture of the region for the good reason that the big towns of Chibougamau and Chapais are not part of the economy of the area, but come under the national unemployment office in Roberval. This results in a very large labour surplus registering at the Roberval office. The statistics of the Roberval office show that this region seems more prosperous than it really is, because Chibougamau and Chapais are industrial centres where unemployment is extremely low. If the minister will only take my remarks into consideration, I suggest that these two towns be withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the Roberval office and that another unemployment office be set up for the towns of Chapais and Chibougamau, with a view to finding out exactly what the labour and unemployment situation is in each region.

I am told that, as a result of redistribution, the towns of Chapais and Chibougamau will be incorporated in the Roberval constituency. If so, three unemployment offices should be set up, at all costs, in order to have three separate regions and to do justice to each one of them, because when the statistics of the Roberval office are sent to Ottawa, they include the towns of Chapais and Chibougamau. Then you are under the impression that those towns are located two or three miles from the Roberval office, but the fact is that they are 155 miles away from the Roberval office and are separated by more than 135 miles of virgin forest. That is why I maintain it is impossible logically to include those two urban centres in the Roberval and St. Felicien district. The minister is aware of that situation, because in recent years we have been in touch with him in order to get grants for the winter work performed in those two towns. We are proud of having them in our constituency, but we are not so proud to see people in our area deprived of grants that would normally be paid to them.

A few industries will most likely settle in St. Felicien; a pulp and paper mill, for instance, could have taken advantage of those grants, but the problem was there. I met the municipal authorities of St. Felicien who explained the problem to me. "We cannot get the grants because this is not a designated area", they said. I am sure this can be discussed at the federal-provincial conference and that the Quebec Minister of Industry could be approached in this regard, because we are sometimes overlooked even by the Quebec government; as a matter of fact, the Quebec Minister of Agriculture did forget, for a whole year, to mention to the federal Minister of Agriculture that we were in economic difficulties and that we needed assistance.

I am convinced that the minister will take my remarks into serious consideration, because this matter has to be settled once and for all, and the southern part of Roberval county, from St. Felicien, Chambord and Roberval, should be considered as a separate region and the two communities of Chapais and Chibougamau should have their own national unemployment office, in order to better judge the situation in those communities.

I will not elaborate, because I am quite satisfied with the grants offered designated areas; however, I hope that justice will be done. If justice is done, I am sure those two regions will be among the first to become designated areas, since they need assistance.

[English]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief, but I do want to say I am one who appreciates the Minister's willingness to co-operate in accepting the suggestion so forcefully presented by the hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and agreeing to recommend that the Order in Council covering this legislation be referred to the appropriate committee when we return after the holidays. I also want to congratulate the hon. Member for Timiskaming, who I admit could be considered by the Minister as a rather prickly political pear in opposition, for his persistence and determination to stand up for what he believes is the right course of action. I think the hon. Member's persistence in standing up for the things in which he believes and the Minister's willingness to co-operate have brought us to this rather, shall I say—

Mr. Drury: Felicitous.

Mr. Herridge: —mellow mood in respect of this legislation.

• (7:50 p.m.)

Now, I do want to say that in my opinion this is experimental legislation. This type of legislation is only recent in history. I believe Members of the House will be entitled to periodic reports on the operation of the Act, more than just an annual report. If this measure is to be a success, it must have the co-operation of the Members of the House. I suggest also that Members will have an opportunity, as a result of these periodic reports on the administration and operation of the Act, to make suggestions with respect to improvements that are required, or amendments based on their personal knowledge of their local circumstances and their experience in seeing the Act in operation.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Just a few comments, Mr. Speaker, because I do not want to delay the proceedings of the house, especially as everybody is in a hurry to reach the 1st of July. I know that the Minister of Industry and Minister Defence Production (Mr. Drury) is anxious to reach the 1st of July as much as we are.

We are now considering Bill No. C-129 to provide incentives for the development of industrial employment opportunities in designated areas in Canada and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker, I will deal briefly with the proposal effecting certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act.

However, as a representative of a riding forming part of or included in a so-called designated area, more especially Rouyn-Noranda, Malartic, Val d'Or, etc., I wish to point out to the minister that, in our part of the country, for instance, it is unthinkable to set up industries other than the forest or mining industries. That is practically all the development opportunities we have.

Now, our area has dozens of mining prospects, in short a tremendous mining potential, and the government has never taken the trouble to look into the possibility of fully developing this mining area. As a matter of fact, there is no question of setting up a factory of automotive parts, for the good reason that transportation costs are prohibitive. We cannot hope to establish any other industry, or almost, because production costs are also prohibitive. The transportation costs are prohibitive because we are far from large centres.

However, our mining potential is almost unlimited and it is liable to be developed.

We are in favour of tax cuts, but we want the government to take positive steps to encourage new industries or companies to settle there and work the extensive ore bodies in northwestern Quebec. But the government will not listen.

Mr. Speaker, as pointed out a little earlier by the hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), who represents the riding next to mine where almost the same problems exist, I feel that the only way to help northwestern Quebec and northeastern Ontario it to promote the settlement of new mining companies. However, when we make this suggestion, it falls on deaf ears, people do not want to hear, people do not believe that there are, in those areas, almost unrestricted opportunities for mining development.

Mr. Speaker, it must be realized that there are other things besides gold in that part of the country. In fact, copper, zinc, nickel, ores of all kinds can be found there, provided we want to assist in the development of our mining industry. I am convinced that if the government spent one thousandth of its energy to promote the establishment of new mining industries in our area, it would not have to introduce bills and measures like the one we are now considering, and the Minister of Industry and Defence Production would be perfectly free to say: We have promoted the establishment of those industries which, in turn, have created employment, economic stability, in short we have given confidence to the Canadian pepole who live in that area.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot hope for any industry other than the mining and forestry industries, and even then, the mining industry is well ahead of the other in our area.

Mr. Speaker, I want to call the minister's attention to the provisions of Bill No. C-129 and ask him to consider carefully the existing conditions and situation at this time in northwestern Quebec and northeastern Ontario. I am sure he would then offer himself the luxury of a trip from Montreal to Rouyn, to Kirkland Lake or to Timmins, in order to find out exactly what is happening in those areas.

The city of Montreal does not experience problems of this kind, because there are no mines in Montreal. There may be a ministers' mine, but there is no gold mine of any kind.

I sincerely believe that, when the time comes to examine Bill No. C-129, as well as the proposed amendments, the minister should consider what could be done as regards the areas which are already designated areas, underdeveloped areas, whereas we have, as I said a while ago, almost unlimited possibilities as regards development, but nobody dares to think about them, because the exact situation is not known.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Those possibilities are ours and all the minister has to do is to take the required decisions, not decisions that would cost something to the government, but decisions which will eventually be profitable to Canada as a whole and more particularly to the citizens now living in the designated areas of northwestern Quebec or northeastern Ontario.

I say and I repeat that the minister will then have taken into account and respected the feelings and aspirations of the people living in regions which are recognized as designated areas.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, —Mr. Richard in the Chair.

Clauses 2 to 11 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 12.

Mr. Douglas: I wish to say a word on clause 12. I think this is the clause under which most of the trouble arises. I think hon. Members generally are strongly in favour of the purpose and intent of the legislation. The thing which has worried everyone is the question of the regulations under which areas are declared to be designated areas, and the other regulations which will flow from this clause.

I must say I have a great deal of sympathy with the Minister. This is not a simple problem. The task of trying to forge an economic technique for coping with regional unemployment takes a great deal of sophistication and experience. I have had an opportunity to look at the programs carried out by a number of countries, Sweden, West Germany, and Britain in particular. They vary from country to country. West Germany which is a federation, uses a totally different technique from Sweden which has a complex and sophisticated series of enactments. Great Britain, where legislation of this kind is more recent, has not yet reached the stage of advancement which has been reached by Sweden.

We have to be patient and feel our way. I think there is no doubt that the criteria we used last year were not adequate. They produced a great many anomalies and some glaring inequities. I think the formula the Minister is presenting now constitutes an improvement. I believe there will have to be further improvements. The Minister, in one of the formulae, said he will take into consideration non-farm income. I think the time is coming when in some regions we shall have to take farm income into consideration.

I was in Norfolk county some months ago. I sent the Minister a brief which had been prepared by the County Council with the help of some sociologists from the university. It showed that 25.2 per cent of the farmers there had a cash income amounting to less than $1,000 in 1964. This means that those farmers had to depend upon some type of part-time employment. Some types of industry might well produce employment of this kind. If it is necessary to move these people from uneconomic farms to industry, there will be a need to attract industry to areas such as Norfolk County, though applications from Norfolk County to be designated have been consistently refused. I use this example as an illustration. This legislation will become more complex and sophisticated as we go along. I do not blame the Minister. He is breaking new ground. We must get the benefit of the experience of as many people as we can, in the municipal field, in industry and in this House.

I am glad the Minister has agreed to table the regulations in the House when we reassemble and refer them to the Committee on Industry, Research and Energy Development. If this measure were reviewed periodically by that committee a great many useful suggestions could be worked out. I have a number in mind myself, as I am sure have Members in all parts of the House. This is not the time to belabour the Minister with them; an opportunity will be presented for doing this after we have re-assembled. We congratulate the Minister on his willingness to have this matter discussed in the committee. We feel certain that the committee and Members of the House generally can be useful to him in reviewing these regulations from time to time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the report of the Commissioners of Internal Economy relating to classification changes affecting a number of the personnel in the House of Commons laid before the House on June 14, 1965, and printed in Votes and Proceedings of that day be now concurred in.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, there is only one comment I have to make about the report, now that I have had an opportunity of reading it. I find in the report that one Member of the staff of this House receives a very large increase in salary. I think this matter should be reconsidered, in light of the fact that his services, in the opinion of the Committee, were no longer required and a recommendation to that effect was made almost a year ago. I believe this is really an abuse of the committee of the House, namely to give a large salary increase to this particular individual, in light of the fact that not only the recent committee but several previous committees censured, without success, this man.

It seems to me that it takes away all the effectiveness and value of the committee if one of the largest increases given to any employee of this House goes to an individual with regard to whom a joint committee of this House and the other place recommended discharge some months ago. I suggest that the committee look at this particular matter, because it seems to me to be completely contrary to the efficient operation of the House.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I sought to catch your eye merely in an attempt to get in before the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to ask for an assurance from the President of the Privy Council (Mr. McIlraith) that the increases will ensure that all these employees will receive at least the $1.25 an hour minimum wage.

Mr. Knowles: Starting tomorrow.

Mr. Barnett: Yes, starting tomorrow.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that all of them get more than $1.25 an hour now. In any event, a check is being made to make sure that there is no case where an employee is getting less than the amount required by the provisions of the Canada Labour Standards Code. I believe that there are no persons receiving less than that amount now, but it is being checked.

Mr. Barnett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to be sure that the hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre would be able to enjoy a happy July 1 celebration.

Mr. Knowles: Merci beaucoup.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to what the hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) had to say. The hon. Member tells me he was referring to the manager of the Parliamentary Restaurant, whose services have been examined by the joint committee of this House and the other place. The hon. Member also informs me that the committee recommended that this gentleman be discharged. I do not know anything about the details of the matter, but it does seem odd to me that after a committee which is recognized and appointed by this House and the other place has made a certain recommendation, the Internal Economy Commission should go against that recommendation and give a very large increase in salary to this person. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I believe there are other persons employed around this building who are more deserving to receive this type of consideration than the person I have mentioned.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUMMER ADJOURNMENT

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That when this House adjourns this day, it stands adjourned until Monday, September 27, 1965, at 2.30 o'clock p.m., provided always that if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with Her Majesty's Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time.

In the event of Mr. Speaker being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker shall act in his stead for the purpose of this order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I willingly give my consent to the presentation made by the President of the Privy Council. However, I would like to know, before we adjourn, if the President of the Privy Council and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as well as all the members of the cabinet, will have enough time during those three months to study the proposals of the Social Credit party which aim at giving Canada a sound administration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[English]

Mr. Monteith: Debt free money. The Minister of Finance will go for it.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to assure my hon. friend that we do not need any time for that.

Motion agreed to.

AETNA CASUALTY AND SURETY COMPANY OF CANADA—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF BILL

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, may I crave the indulgence of the House. This morning there was referred to the House from the Senate, Bill No. S-18, an Act to incorporate Aetna Casualty and Surety Company of Canada. If I have the unanimous consent of the House I would move that we revert to private Members' business, and if I could also obtain unanimous consent I would move that the petition for an Act to incorporate Aetna Casualty and Surety Company of Canada—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There is obviously not unanimous consent in respect of the motion proposed by the hon. Member.

Mr. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to receive unanimous consent, because otherwise this bill will be delayed for three months and it is a very important matter. I am sorry that unanimous consent has not been given.

Mr. Grégoire: We will see you in three months time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we suspend the sitting of the House to the call of the Chair?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, will that be by a ringing of the bells?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, hon. Members will be called by the ringing of the bells.

At 8.20 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 10.03 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, June 30, 1965.

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, June 30, at ten o'clock p.m., for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

A Message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (10:20 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1966.

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1966.

An Act to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1952.

An Act to amend the Veterans' Land Act.

An Act to amend the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act.

An Act to amend the Army Benevolent Fund Act.

An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act.

An Act respecting the construction of a line of railway in the Province of Ontario by Canadian National Railway Company from a point at or near mileage 3.2 of the Froomfield Spur of the Canadian National Railway near Sarnia in a southerly direction for a distance of approximately 12 miles to the property of Canadian Industries Limited in Sombra Township in the County of Lambton.

An Act to amend the Customs Tariff.

An Act to amend the Customs Act.

An Act respecting The Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company.

Royal Assent

An Act respecting Great Northern Railway Company and Great Northern Pacific & Burlington Lines, Inc.

An Act to incorporate Principal Life Insurance Company of Canada.

An Act respecting The Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy.

An Act to provide incentives for the development of industrial employment opportunities in designated areas in Canada, and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take advantage of this moment, before moving that the House adjourn, for the purpose of doing something that is particularly delightful for me, that is, to wish all hon. Members of the House a very pleasant summer recess which has been well earned and is, if I may be permitted the licence, much needed. I should like each Member of the House, no matter where he may sit, to return to the pleasant surroundings of his home and his constituency and, in spite of whatever the work ahead of him may be, to have in the meantime a well earned holiday and recess so that he may refresh himself. I hope that Members of the Opposition will do so in a way that will not give them too much energy upon their return to this place, but will at least make them feel very pleased about their return. In the case of Members on this side of the House I hope, of course, that they will be refreshed in a way that will give them much energy for the fray that may lie ahead after the 27th of September.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, may I take a moment to thank the President of the Privy Council and House Leader for his good wishes. We on this side of the House wish him and all his colleagues in the Government a good rest. I hope they will not be called to Cabinet meetings too soon, and that they will all be given an opportunity to get the cobwebs out of their heads, because the presence of cobwebs has been noticeable in the last few weeks. We promise that when we come back we will endeavour to guide the Government along a path different from that which they have been following in the past few years, a path which will bring prosperity to this country.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we too should like to thank the Government House Leader for his good wishes. We too would like to reciprocate by extending our best wishes to Your Honour and to all Members of the House and to the staff, whom we have perhaps overworked during the past year or two. We welcome the suggestion that we might find refreshment during the weeks of recess that lie ahead. We will come back ready for the fray and we hope the Government will give us, on the 27th of September, an order paper that is full of things that will be good for this country.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, this is an occasion on which we all share the same sentiments. It is not too often that this happens, but this is one of the occasions. We appreciate the kind expression of good wishes from the House Leader and we express to the House Leader and the Members of the Government as well as other Members of this House our sincere wishes for an enjoyable, refreshing holiday. Looking back, I think we can say we have accomplished many things in the past few weeks, and of course will be looking forward to resuming business in the fall.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my voice and that of my group, which is not very large this evening to that of other members who spoke before me, to wish everyone, and especially to you, Mr. Speaker, a happy and restful recess, because you had a thankless and difficult task in maintaining order between the various groups of the house.

Mr. Speaker, you fulfilled your job so admirably that I think we should not refer to political matters or partisanship, but that we must altogether admire the faultless and admirable way in which you presided over the business of the house.

Mr. Speaker, I was listening a moment ago while the President of the Privy Council wished us a happy recess, and I thank him. Indeed, we will have a happy recess, and I know that several members will attend conventions or travel to other countries during the holidays. We will re-assemble on September 27, 1965, that is in three months.

Now, as I said this afternoon, I make the wish that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. McIlraith) and the various ministers—particularly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon)—will take time out during those three months to study the proposals of the Social Credit party, in order to give Canada, when the session resumes, an administration that is sound, logical and financially—

Mr. Béchard: Achievable.

Mr. Caouette: —achievable.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I should like to render one more little service to the House, to assist hon. Members in soothing their weary frames and weary voices. If they are so inclined, it would be an honour to receive them in the Speaker's Chambers immediately following the adjournment.

Mr. McIlraith: I move that the House do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.33 p.m. until Monday, September 27, at 2.30 p.m.

[The following items were passed this day in Committee of Supply:]

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

Loans, Investments and Advances—

L27c. Loans, in the current and subsequent fiscal years and in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the Governor in Council, to assist manufacturers of automotive products in Canada affected by the Canada-United States Agreement on Automotive Products to adjust and expand their production, such loans to be made for the purpose of acquisition, construction, installation, modernization, development, conversion or expansion of land, buildings, equipment, facilities or machinery and for working capital; and to authorize, notwithstanding Section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, total commitments of $20,000,000 for the foregoing purposes during the current and subsequent fiscal years, $10,000,000.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

5c. To extend the purposes of Labour Vote 5 Main Estimates, 1965-66 to include authority for payments of transitional assistance, in accordance with regulations approved by the Governor in Council, to workers in automotive manufacturing and parts industries who become unemployed as a result of the operation of the Canada-United States Agreement on Automotive Products, $5,000,000.
