The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is there consent regarding this motion put forward by the hon. member for Saint-Laurent—Cartierville?

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I wish to indicate that the government is happy to support the motion.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Thus, there is consent and the motion is adopted.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

GOOD AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty to table before the House a petition certified correct pursuant to Standing Order 36, stating that a tax on books, newspapers and magazines is positively regressive. These petitioners from my riding of Carleton—Gloucester and the Ottawa and Montreal area maintain that the uninhibited dissemination of the printed word is a cornerstone of our democracy, education, culture and leisure activities. They suggest that a productive society can only be negatively affected by such a provision aimed at taxing reading.

The undersigned humbly pray that Parliament to reaffirm the historic principles embodied in the tax-free status of the printed word by retaining the zero rate in the GST to be implemented January 1st, 1991, so that this government does not go down in history as the government that taxed reading.

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the honour to table a petition signed by a number of Canadians citizens who are against the imposition of the GST on books, newspapers and magazines. This measure is really a tax on reading.

[English]

These people ask Parliament to reject the GST on learning and reading and that it do so as soon as possible.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise today, as I have risen many times before, to present a petition from people of my riding concerned with the goods and services tax.

In this petition, they state that the Minister of Finance's proposed goods and services tax is an unfair form of taxation because of its lack of regard for a taxpayer's ability to pay. They also state that the government has not addressed the unfair taxation system currently in place which permits wealthy individuals and corporations to pay little or no federal tax, while forcing lower and middle-income taxpayers to bear more of the national tax burden.

The petitioners call upon the government to reject the goods and services tax and to reform the taxation system so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present a petition signed by hundreds of Canadians from coast to coast with regard to the goods and service tax, and most particularly with regard to the goods and services tax upon books.

The petitioners call upon Parliament, as do Canadians across the country, to reaffirm the historic principles embodied in the tax-free status for the printed word by retaining the zero rate in the GST legislation.

If we are going to have this pernicious tax, at least let us make sure that books and newspapers remain free of it.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I also have the duty to table a petition.

Governments in Canada have seen fit over the years to apply a zero rate tax on magazines, books, and publications such as newspapers. This Tory government now proposes to include them in the general tax of the GST.

These petitioners pray that the government will see fit not to tax books, not to tax learning and to reaffirm the historic principles embodied in the tax-free status for the printed word by retaining the zero rate in the GST legislation and regulations as they apply to books, newspapers and publications which are culturally oriented.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today to present on behalf of numerous Canadians a petition which has been certified and which calls upon the government not to proceed with its pernicious and foolish goods and services tax which virtually all Canadians oppose.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a series of petitions from people right across the country who complain and, indeed, criticize the government for the GST application to books.

The petitioners state that since Confederation, without hiatus, the practice of the government has been to apply a zero rate of tax to magazines, books and newspapers. The government now proposes to include it in the GST. The petitioners want the government to reaffirm the historic principles embodied in the tax-free status for the printed word by retaining the zero rate in the GST legislation and regulations.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of many Canadians with regard to their opposition to the GST.

A virtual litany of frustration and despair among our Canadian people continues as day after day we seem to be knocking on a door that will go unanswered for some time with regard to this taxation.

The people of Canada are indeed frustrated. I would only hope that some place along the line the government will come to its senses and rescind the GST which was passed here in the House.

• (1550)

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I stand with the rest of my colleagues, pursuant to Standing Order 36, and bring to your attention that 86 per cent of Canadians do not agree with the imposition of the regressive and poorly-conceived goods and services tax, in particular as it applies to books, magazines, and newspapers.

These printed words are the corner-stone of democracy, education and culture. A literate and productive society cannot afford a tax on that kind of thinking which is food for the mind as it is food for the soul.

These people say it is hard to believe that the government has spread its net so wide as to trap the Bible and the Koran. The Prime Minister agrees that books should not be taxed and the Minister of Communications agrees that books should not be taxed. It is too bad that they cannot convince the Minister of Finance not to tax books, and believe and listen to the people of Canada.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by many people in several communities in the province of Ontario. They note that never since Confederation have we had tax on books, newspapers and magazines but this government is going to apply the GST to newspapers, magazines and books. It talks a lot about literacy, but obviously it has no commitment to it.

As a former educator, I think it is ridiculous that we cannot educate the front benches of the government because they are not listening. When students are not listening, they cannot be taught.

I hope there will be success in the days ahead to get this message through from the people who want uninhibited dissemination of the printed word as a corner-stone of democracy, culture, education and a literate and productive society. We do not want the 7 per cent GST applied to it or to education in any way.

RADIO LICENCE FEES

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, I rise today, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present a petition signed by many individuals from Colchester County, Nova Scotia.

The petitioners are concerned about the huge increases in telecommunications fees for radio equipment that have been levied by the federal government. The fire departments are primarily non-profit organizations and this will cause many volunteer fire departments to have to defer, delay, or cancel the purchase of equipment that they use to protect both individual safety and that of property. They ask the government, in this particular instance, to exempt volunteer fire departments from this excessive fee structure.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in presenting today to the House, pursuant to Standing Order 36, a petition coming from Alberta and from western and eastern Ontario.

Again, we call on the Government of Canada to drop its plan to impose the GST on books. The petitioners submit that imposing a tax on books, newspapers and weeklies would be tremendously regressive.

[English]

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour to rise and submit before the House hundreds of names signed to petitions in the province of Ontario pleading with the government not to impose the GST on reading materials.

It should also be noted by the government that in the other place, there will be an amendment moved today to remove reading materials from the GST attack. The petitioners are asking that the government finally listen to Canadians from coast to coast.

If there is one area that should be tax-free, it should be educational and reading materials so that our youth and seniors across the land can at least be able to read and further themselves educationally.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition on behalf of the great citizens of Kamloops who are still filled with despair that the government continues to proceed with this very cruel and punitive goods and services tax.

The petitioners point out a whole set of reasons why this is unfair. It discriminates against western Canadians, small businesses, and working people generally, and will cause an increased interest rate. They ask the government to pull the legislation and go back and attempt real tax reform.

On another matter, Mr. Speaker, like some of my other colleagues, I have petitions signed by individuals again from a variety of places in Canada who are distressed that the government sees fit to tax children's story books. I think we are the only country in the world that will actually do that, if the goods and services tax becomes a reality, taxing children's reading.

I think we all appreciate that, particularly at this time of year when we want to buy books and encourage young people to read, we do not want the government imposing a special tax on literature.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to table a petition of over 2,000 signatures from across Ontario.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to develop and adopt a comprehensive agricultural policy for Canada that will ensure the preservation of the Canadian farm family and will guarantee the future of a viable and self-sustaining agricultural industry in Canada.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have here a petition signed by a good many constituents of the electoral riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, especially residents of Hawkesbury, a locality which you and all other parliamentarians know well. The people of Hawkesbury in my riding ask the House to urge the government to drop the tax on goods and services, this harmful tax which will hamper the Canadian economy and which will apply to books.

As their spokesman I congratulate the people of Hawkesbury, Alexandria, L'Orignal, Lancaster, and other Glengarry—Prescott—Russell communities for signing this petition.

[English]

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I too, rise to present a petition. I know the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader is a little concerned about the time this is taking today, but I am sure that a lot of his constituents have been sending him petitions signed against the goods and services tax. He does not rise to table those, and neither does the Minister of Transport. I am sorry they do not, because I am sure their constituents would be delighted to have petitions of this kind filed.

For their benefit, I will tell the hon. parliamentary secretary that these petitioners are opposed to the goods and services tax, because it imposes a tax on the printed word. As the hon. member for Kamloops says, it is going to be applied to children's books. It is going to be applied to Bibles and religious works. It is going to be applied to every kind of publication.

These Canadians, like so many millions of others, are opposed to this tax and call upon Parliament to reject it.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Boudria: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The parliamentary secretary will know that I have raised with him, both privately and in the House, on a number of occasions the fact that one question which has been on the Order Paper for approximately six months has not been answered.

I know that the parliamentary secretary has sent the question back because the staff who were dealing with the question were apparently not able to provide a satisfactory answer to him and therefore it would not have been satisfactory to me either.

Has the parliamentary secretary succeeded in convincing those who prepare the answer for that question that they should provide an adequate answer forthwith so that he can table it in the House, the way I am sure he would want to do?

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I will check on it and get back to the hon. member.

POINT OF ORDER

CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader is in attendance. We are anxious, of course, to begin discussion on Bill C-81, an act to implement the United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods at the second reading stage.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, I think we have a near crisis occurring in the country and I want to raise it with my hon. friend as a point of order. We are well aware that in September notices went out to an excess of 60,000 low-income families that child tax credits would be in the mail by mid-November.

Bill C-86 was that legislation and was tabled on October 11—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I am sorry, but I do not think that this is a proper matter for a point of order according to our Standing Orders. So, we revert to the Orders of the Day.

Before beginning debate, I must inform you, pursuant to Standing Order 38, that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre (Mr. Laporte)—Agriculture; the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Wappel)—Monetary Policy; the hon. member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins)—Trade.

INTERNATIONAL SALES OF GOODS CONTRACTS CONVENTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-81, an act to implement the United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to begin second reading debate on the International Sale of Goods Contracts Convention Act.

The purpose of this bill is to implement the United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods thus allowing departments, departmental corporations, and agent Crown corporations to benefit from its provisions. It does so by resorting to the usual practice of giving force of law to the convention which is reproduced in a schedule to the act.

A convention on contracts for the international sale of goods applies to transactions involving the sale of goods for business use between parties whose place of businesses are located in different contracting states.

It establishes a uniform system of rules for the international sale of goods and gives access to legal rules that are compatible with Canadian law.

Implementation of this convention by the International Sale of Goods Contracts Convention Act will permit federal entities to enjoy the three principal benefits of the convention, facilitation of trade, a greater degree of legal certainty in international sales contracts, and greater equity between the parties to an international sales contract.

Federal implementing legislation ensures that all federal entities will be uniformly covered by the regime of the convention.

There are now 28 contracting states to the convention, some of which like the United States, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, China, are among our largest trading partners. Thus, the adoption of federal implementing legislation will enable federal entities to avail themselves of the benefits of the regime established under the convention in a large number of transactions.

The convention facilitates trade by providing parties to a contract for the international sale of goods with a uniform system of rights, but it also preserves their freedom to contract by allowing them to derogate from the convention by means of an express clause.

Legal certainty. Contracts for the international sale of goods naturally give rise to many problems in private international law, for example, determining which law governs the contracts, or which court has jurisdiction. These issues must often be resolved by the courts and the resulting litigation can involve considerable expense in lawyers fees and other legal costs, not to mention needless delays.

Trade is particularly sensitive to any uncertainty, especially legal uncertainty. The rights of the parties must be clearly defined to foster an equitable transaction. It is difficult to define these rights if there is any uncertainty as to which law will apply. With the increase of international commercial transactions, the convention on contracts for the international sale of goods is an indispensable benefit to international trade because it creates a system of legal rules which clearly set out the rights of the parties involved. The system of rules is compatible with Canadian law and replaces the application of the law of other contracting states whose rules may be unfamiliar or even unfavourable to us.

The equity between trading partners. In an international sales transaction, each party to the contract often prefers to have the transaction governed by the law of its own country, something the weaker trading partner may find difficult to obtain. Usually the party with the stronger negotiating position can ensure that the contract is governed by the law of its country. The convention offers a more acceptable option because it allows the parties to have the contract governed by a uniform and neutral system of legal rules. Thus, the convention provides a means of reducing the inequality between the parties.

The convention on contracts for the international sale of goods was submitted to the provinces and their reaction has been very positive. Eight provinces, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia, as well as the Northwest Territories have already passed implementing legislation.

The Department of Justice has consulted members of Canada's business community and the Canadian Bar Association with regard to the convention and their reaction as well has been very positive. The businesses and corporations consulted pointed to the greater legal certainty associated with international sales of goods under the convention, the advantages of a uniform neutral system that preserves their freedom of contract and the compatibility of the convention with Canadian law.

The convention's underlying principles of law are similar to and compatible with those of Canadian law. Several Canadian experts have examined the questions and have made a comparative analysis of the convention and Canadian trade law under both civil and common law. They conclude that the convention is compatible with our law.

I am pleased to support this bill and would ask the support of the House.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to support this bill on second reading. I think that the aim of this bill is very good, in fact very much needed.

As the member for Niagara Falls has stated, it is an act to implement the United Nations Convention of Contracts for the International Sale of Goods. It is something that has been needed for a long time. I think that the aims of this bill are not only important for Canada but important world-wide. The member for Niagara Falls said that it is going to give greater equity to the smaller nations in trading with larger nations. That is something that we as Canadians have to look to and have to be very cognizant of.

If we are going to be trading on a world-wide market, we are going to have to not only be cognizant of the needs of Canadians, but also the smaller countries as well. There is a great tendency today by the larger countries to ignore the smaller trading partners. That is going to do a tremendous amount of damage to international trade in the not too distant future, because what is happening is that the smaller countries are being absolutely, completely covered by the sheer bulk of red tape and financial power of the larger countries.

If we are not taking this into consideration, then we are going to make it very difficult for the smaller countries to trade at all. If we do not have trading partners, then we of course cannot trade. That is sort of self-explanatory, I would think. I do not think that even this government would question that.

I see that the Minister of Transport even understands it, which I think is very important. I know I have got through and that it is going to be generally understood at that point.

I want to say that we have to look at this on a world-wide basis. If we become too greedy and too possessive of the points of international trade, then we are going to very well kill the whole concept with respect to a great many of our would-be trading partners.

We, of course, as the member has said, are very interested in having the legal security and framework because this convention is quite in line with Canadian legal principles, which I think is very important.

I have one concern I would like to address before I recommend that this bill be accepted on second reading. I would caution the government on the cavalier way in which it is treating this bill. This bill, as the member for Niagara Falls has said, is tremendously important. It seems to be axiomatic, that is it is in the interest of Canada and its trading partners that this convention pass. The member said that 28 countries have ratified this bill.

If Canada is to maintain a leadership role in international trade, if we are to personify the trust that smaller countries want to have in their trading partners, then we have to be a little faster off the mark than we have been with regard to ratifying this convention.

We are going to be presumably number 29, if not farther down the list of countries ratifying this convention. That does not speak well for Canada. That does not speak well for a country that has always expressed an interest in the welfare of the Third World, of the poorer countries. We have gone out of our way to trade and offer funding through CIDA and other agencies to help these smaller countries. We were able to trade with them in the interest of Canada and, of course, in the interest of these other countries as well.

We have been reluctant, it seems, to push this bill through. We have been reluctant to adopt the concept. We very well might have been laudatory of the concept in the United Nations, but after the music dies down, Canada seems to sort of sneak out the side door and cannot be found to pick up the tab or to endorse what it is that needs to be endorsed.

If this continually happens—and unfortunately we find that this is becoming something that is happening all too often—then Canada is going to lose its status, even more than it has in the international community. We will have no one to blame but ourselves. We are bringing this on ourselves. At the very best we are going to be number 29 in ratifying this contract. We are, one of the most highly industrialized nations in the world; one of the proponents of international trade, far above most of the other members of the United Nations. We have been a complete and utter leader in the bolstering of international trade and in safeguarding the interests of the Third World nations, and here we are lucky to be even 30th in endorsing this convention.

Eight provinces have already endorsed this convention. One territory has endorsed it, and we are now here in Parliament today being faced with this after a long, long delay. It is frankly embarrassing that this is only coming to the attention of the House at this particular time.

I do not want to take a great deal of time in debating this further. We in this party are most interested in having this bill sent to committee stage. I would hereby endorse second reading so that we can get on with this bill and discuss it in committee as quickly as possible. I ask the government to push it through, as quickly as it possibly can, its remaining stages.

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, in the government's opening remarks on this bill there were three points that it wished to make in putting the bill forward. Two of them are ones that I will address my comments to.

One of course is the facilitation of trade, and the other one is greater equity in trade, that is equity between different levels of partners, some more powerful than others, in a sense the administrative structure to facilitate that greater trade. I want to put it in the context, from the abstract to the reality in practice, of this particular bill in relationship, first, to the European Community and, second, to our own relationships internationally that have changed dramatically because of the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

I want to focus first on the changing impact relative to this uniform system that will be altered in 1992 by the culmination of the European Community. It is commonly suggested by the government and other spokespersons for the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement that we will be in a position, accompanying this particular legislation, to be equal partners and facilitate greater trade on an equal basis so that "a stronger nation will not overcome a weaker nation", to quote the words of the hon. member.

The government likes to refer to the European Community as the model where this facilitating can take place. What the government neglects to mention is that in 1989 the European Commissioners of Social Affairs and Employment published a Charter of Fundamental Social Rights. My colleague spoke of the uniform system of rights related to this bill. This charter was intended to protect 322 million European Community citizens from any potential negative effects of the European Community becoming a single, internal market by December 31, 1992.

Mr. Speaker, you may well ask: What does this particular charter on rights, related to the government's opening statement, has to do with the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement? It certainly has in the context of the opening statement by the member about facilitating greater trade between partners of not equal strength. One of the ways of overcoming the disparity of not having equal strength is a charter accompanying the bureaucratic process that guarantees the following: first, equal treatment for men and women, a principle designed to avoid the distortions which could interfere with free competition; second, social security of migrants which facilitates the free movement of workers; and, third, vocational training, with general principles serving as guidelines for national policies.

It goes on through this document, which has been prepared by the Library of Parliament and its research department, in an excellent, detailed manner showing how important it is that this kind of parallel agreement be made available when new trading blocs come together under this legislation.

As my colleague in the Liberal Party so correctly pointed out, it was long in coming forth in this House as a priority. As a matter of fact it is almost a shame that it has crowded out an even more important piece of legislation, that is the one dealing with the 60,000 Canadian families who were informed that they would be receiving their child tax credit this month. The government has not yet brought forward that piece of legislation.

That is by the by, but I wanted to comment on the valid and important point made by my Liberal colleague. In terms of describing the timing and the fact that the provinces had already caught up to this legislation before the government had, the fact is that the people out there are waiting for the tax credits. They are still being left behind, but the provinces, are leading again. That is by the by, as I say.

Turning to the main subject, this document that was produced by the Library of Parliament is a non–partisan document available to every member. Its application to this particular debate is all the more interesting, particularly when the government was forthcoming today in describing part of this bill, through the member who spoke, as a uniform system of rights.

We were told, on this process of a uniform system of rights in which this legislation embodies essentially legislative structures, that in further dealings by this government, particularly with the free trade agreement with the United States, that there would be some uniformity in terms of rights with that agreement.

We find that that is not the case. Indeed, the existing legislation signed by this government and the United States, and the forthcoming negotiations between the United States and Mexico in which this government wants to get involved, may be a violation of the very legislation that we have in front of us.

How can that be the case, Mr. Speaker? I submit that the case can be made on this basis.

Mr. Belsher: Hey, you're reaching.

Mr. Barrett: I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I am perfectly relating my comments to what the member said. He gave the three principles, and I am dealing with those principles particularly in relation to the greater equity of trade.

On the basis of the greater equity of trade, if we look forward to this kind of charter in the European Community, there was an impression left, perhaps falsely or unwisely by this government, that the same kind of protections would be available in a Canada–U.S. agreement and perhaps would even be the subject of further discussion under the UN charter of the trade deal among Mexico, Canada and the United States.

I ask these questions: Is there any protection in the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement that compares at all with the social dimension in the EC? Not one whit. Yet, some spokespersons for the government—too long a list for me to name—go around in public exposing themselves to the default in the agreement that indeed there is no social charter, and the promises made by the Prime Minister for the kind of equality in terms of the best social programs were never entrenched in legislation.

I know that that comes as a shock to you, Mr. Speaker. We even had the de Grandpré commission give a report. That commission was required to give a report by this government, with the aura that out of its report greater dimensions of services would be available for anyone who was displaced in this new trading bloc.

What happened to the de Grandpré report? Do you know what happened, Mr. Speaker? We in this House were all told, as we debated this bill, that the de Grandpré report would establish for Canada and the United States all of the mechanism necessary as the best international program in dealing with people who suffer because of new trading blocs. We are debating this dimension of the trading blocs, yet every one of the suggestions in the de Grandpré report, every demand for some equality based on the argument that went on, has been left out.

We have this pious statement by the government that we are now moving, as the government spokesperson said, to a uniform system of rights. I took notes of what he said. He read his speech. He also said facilitation of trade and greater equity in trade. Reading the bill is one thing, but hearing the words of that speaker is another. When I heard what he was saying, I knew very well that the government was hoping for a quiet afternoon to allow this bill to go through, without looking exactly at its own obligation under this bill.

I would like to pose this question to you, Mr. Speaker, because you understand this more clearly than anyone else in this Chamber. I have your rapt attention in this regard. Should another member wish to listen to what our conversation is, I hope these pearls of wisdom do not fall on empty ground. Having said that, as we move toward a trilateral discussion between Mexico, Canada and the United States, the whole motive behind the move is for a low wage partner. The Government of Canada is pandering to the large corporations that want us Canadians to lose jobs to low-paying wages in Mexico.

If the government were serious about this matter, it would not in any way threaten any Canadian jobs with unfair competition with low cost Mexican labour. It would say under this bill that it intends to facilitate and guarantee that we will play on a level playing field, but not at all. Even under this bill there is no attempt to protect Canadian jobs, working standards, the environment, or health.

Mr. Belsher: Have you read the bill, Davey?

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, the member asks if I have read the bill. I have studied this bill in depth. I was shocked and disappointed that there was not even a response or a nod from the fact that the Liberal Party spokesman was right on the ball in terms of the time delay.

I am extending the Liberal Party's argument by saying not only is there a time delay, but there is a work delay by this government as it continues to sell our Canadian working men and women in free trade agreements and trilateral talks it may take with Mexico. It is a denial of the existence of this bill to have some equity that that member spoke about.

How can you have equity if you have agreed, on the one hand, to a free trade agreement that destroys Canadian jobs? How can you have equity, on the other hand, if you agree to trilateral talks with Mexico and try to compete with the Maquiladora program where Mexican workers are paid $3.61 a day for jobs that are available in Canada, which we are losing, at $10 and $12 an hour.

While this bill is a bureaucratic movement toward greater facilitation of exchange of regulations and rules between international countries on the UN agenda, it denies the existence in Canada of any standards whatsoever that are comparable to the European Common Market.

If the government were serious about this bill, it would bring in a social charter and a job guarantee charter like the European Community has. I do not think it is fair. I think it is unfortunate. Frankly it borders on false that this government puts forward the argument that there are the same kind of components in the free trade agreement that exists in the European Community and that this bill will be dealing with the facilitation of trade—

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There is a requirement in this House that the speaker address the bill and address the matter before the House. There is nothing in this bill dealing with labour or anything of that nature. This is a bill that facilitates a convention of the United Nations and creates an International Sales of Goods Act.

This member completely misunderstands the total concept of the bill and is leading the House on a great goose chase. He must be ruled out of order or be required at least to address the bill.

• (1630)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I recognize the hon. member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca, inviting him again to stick to the subject matter of the bill before the House.

[English]

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, far be it for me to be embarrassed by the interjection of that member. He obviously has not read the bill. He has not studied exactly what the government's position is on this bill, and for his edification, I would like to repeat exactly the words out of the mouth of the government's spokesperson. I have been precise in confining myself to those specific areas because I took the notes from his speech.

I repeat, for the edification of that unfortunate member who found it necessary to reveal that he did not know what he was talking about by interjecting—I repeat, for his information, should he care to listen. The speaker who introduced the government's position on this bill gave three specific areas, two of which I am dealing with in precise detail. Time does not permit me to deal with the third one because to analyse that would take another day and a half.

Mr. Nicholson: With unanimous consent.

Mr. Barrett: Plus the time available to me is limited. But I have to educate the government again on what it said. I repeat three areas which the member mentioned, the first being the facilitation of trade.

Mr. Barrett: Did you hear that, Mr. Speaker? I wish he would convey that through the Chair to the member who so rudely interrupted. Number three was the greater equity in trade. Right on, right on in parliamentary terms.

If I can continue with my elucidation related to those particular two points, then we will— No, Mr. Speaker, the interjection was hallucination. This is elucidation, and that is the difference.

This government has hallucinated on trade agreements. That is correct.

An hon. member: It hallucinates on everything.

Mr. Barrett: It is because of that that we are now faced with the horrendous loss of 160,000 jobs under the free trade agreement, and the government thinks that it will clean it up with this kind of bureaucratic nonsense.

Time permits me only a brief moment to elucidate. Again I come to the question of the Mexico-Canada-U.S. agreement on facilitating greater trade. I use the words of the very member himself, who said it was the weaker nations against the strong. Does the member suggest in any way that he will protect Canadian workers from a Maquiladora program where Mexicans are being paid $3.61 for a full day's work while the rate here in Canada would be $10 to $12 an hour? Is there any way through the bureaucratic structure that he wishes to put up that workers in this country who have lost their jobs in the face of the kind of appeal that the Maquiladora program has to Canadian manufacturers by saying come to Mexico and we will save you $25,000 per year per worker? Where is the equity in that? To quote the member's own words: "How does that facilitate fair trade?"

This government has embarked upon a bureaucratic appeal through this legislation by appearing to be wonderfully universal, caring to be part of the marching system, moving forward to protect workers all over the world, and at the same time selling out Canadian jobs in the U.S.-Mexico-Canada free trade agreement of which it wants to be part. Now, explain that to me, Mr. Speaker, and I do not need to go over the de Grandpré commission again. We all know that the government ignored that.

The de Grandpré commission, my friend, was the commission promised during the heat of an election campaign. It was not called a forum in those days, it was called a commission. It was to bring together the best possible alternatives for the damage done by the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. The de Grandpré report was filed in this House.

Mr. Stupich: It was a farce.

Mr. Barrett: It was a farce my colleague said, and my colleague has a background of deep commitment to public service as a community religious spokesperson. As a religious spokesperson, he finds it very difficult to use stronger language than a farce, but, when he is moved to call it a farce, you know it is a damn mess.

If the European Community is to be used as the model by this government, and if we have the minister of trade who I find interestingly—well, I cannot comment that way, I will leave those remarks—

An hon. member: Go on.

Mr. Barrett: No, no, I will not do that.

An hon. member: Ambiguous.

Mr. Barrett: Ambiguous. That is a good word. The government talks about its commitment to facilitating greater trade, and it talks about its argument, as it did in the opening statement, about uniform system of rights. It also bragged when it signed the free trade agreement that it would have the best possible social structures going, but they do not compare to the European market.

Every time the government says the free trade agreement is the same as the European Community, it is not telling the truth. That is the government not telling the truth. Some spokespersons who have the government line are confined to that description.

There is nothing in there for full and better employment. There is nothing in there for improved living and working conditions, and nothing in there for the participation of workers and social partners. The whole social fund remodel in 1972 and 1984 is available to provide private and public bodies with the aid of recruiting or employing young people for vocational training.

That is part of the model, Mr. Speaker. It is not addressed by this government in accepting the UN convention. It is not what took place, and yet the European Community has entrenched this in legislation for the protection of working people whether they come from low wage-countries into the partnership or not.

They do not remain low wage-partners. Unlike bringing Mexico into competition with Canada, what we should be doing is following the European model and insisting that we do not go down to Mexican wages, but that Mexican wages come up to Canadian standards so that we can compete fairly.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Barrett: My colleague from the Liberal Party was quite precise in his criticism—and validly taken—when he said the government had delayed bringing in this bill. What is the motivation for the delay? I am glad that my colleague from the Liberal Party made this point. The more the government delayed in bringing this debate forward, the more time that passed before there would be the awareness of the fact that there are no standards like the member suggested there are, in hope that it would lull the Canadian people into believing that the kind of trade practices it has are the same as elsewhere in the world.

They are not. I am indebted to my Liberal colleague for pointing that out because this government has rolled over and played dead to the corporate sector. It has sold out Canadian working men and women and—indeed, Mr. Speaker, a shock for you I know—small Canadian businessmen in this country who have either gone bankrupt or been forced to close down in face of the unwarranted competition, first from the free trade agreement, and now from the Maquiladora program in Mexico.

To refresh your memory, Mr. Speaker, the Maquiladora program is the free trade zone in Mexico that will be covered by this bill which allows workers to work at jobs for $3.61 for a whole day.

Mr. Nicholson: Nonsense.

Mr. Barrett: Nonsense? Is my dear friend denying that the whole direction of the continuation of Canada's desire to participate in the U.S.–Mexico talks is an attempt to give Canadian branch plant economies with U.S. dominated corporations capital greater access into the Maquiladora program and limit jobs here in Canada?

Is the member not aware of the fact that 160,000 jobs have been lost because of the cupidity or the stupidity of this government in not demanding the same kind of standards that exist in the European Community?

Mr. Lewis: Cupidity?

Ms. Copps: They may be a lot of things, but cupids ain't one of them.

Mr. Barrett: You are right. Cupid ain't one of them. Cupids are hard for a lot of us at our age to appeal to, Mr. Speaker, but Cupid certainly was not at the table when these guys were taken for a little love walk by the Americans, and now by the Mexican talk.

Mr. Dionne: They're stupid.

Mr. Barrett: I do not want to call them stupid. That is an interjection. That is unfair. I deny that I would endorse their approach as being stupid. However, there are some people in this House who could make a stronger argument than I can on this very point and define it as stupid. Far be it for me to inhibit their definition. If they feel strongly that it is stupid, I can understand the passion in their definition.

• (1640)

Can you give me a better word, Mr. Speaker, that permits me to explain to the Canadian people why we must lose jobs in Canada to the Maquiladora program, why plants like Gillette, like Toro and others must close in face of an agreement that has sold out Canadian businesses and Canadian working men and women and is competing with low cost in the horizon wages from Mexico? Why? Who are they serving? What masters are dictating the sinister proposals behind this almost innocent afternoon of debate around this bill that has been stalled before it was brought forward, as the point made by my colleague.

Mr. Dionne: U.S. administration and big business.

Mr. Barrett: U.S. administration and big business, even they are not responsible for interrupting the potential call in this House of tax credit legislation for the 60,000 people who are waiting for the government to fulfil that promise, but that is an aside, Mr. Speaker, because I was rudely interrupted. Perhaps I was not rudely interrupted, but wisely interrupted.

Here is the point that I make, Mr. Speaker. This government has made no effort whatsoever to protect working men and women, as the European Community has, on a level playing field based on the words of that member, to fit with a uniform system of rights. On the contrary, the government's introductory remarks deny the existence of uniform rights. All that this government is concerned about is allowing labour to be used as a commodity at a low price level to compete with Mexican workers who will be exploited by American capital.

This is the continentalist's dream and they are trying to hide it in this legislation. The continentalist's dream is having U.S. capital, Canadian resources and cheap Mexican labour. Is this the way for us to go? It has simply nothing to do with the European Community because the European Community has specifically entrenched rights in legislation that will be passed in the year 1992.

If this government were serious about the definition given by my colleague and using his words again, the uniform system of rights, let us have an assurance from the government that it will, as an addendum to the existing Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement, pass an exact replica of the rights that are enjoyed by low wage areas in Europe. They should be covered by this bill on the same basis.

It is not fair to Canadians to have this government allow itself to be propelled by some bureaucratic myth that somehow by us passing this bill in the House, that all of the shortcomings of this government in its trade negotiations will be corrected. They will not be. As a consequence, in my very brief time, I am making an appeal to understand exactly that this government is trying to give the impression, while it is late in catching up with the modern bureaucratic strictures needed to deal with international trade under the United Nations, that they in no way compare to what exists in trading blocs anywhere else.

What brought us to this situation? I do not want to go through a lamentable history of the sell-out of this country by this government in the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. It is important to note that because of that sell-out, in spite of the valiant efforts of both the Liberal and New Democratic Parties in the last election, and I must say with the loss now of the former leader of the Liberal Party, we do not know where the Liberals stand on Canada-U.S.-Mexico talks. We do not know—

Ms. Copps: Where does Ed Broadbent stand?

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, now that they have a new trade critic in the House, I would love to hear that trade critic say: "I support John Turner's position, and I too am opposed to Canada-U.S.-Mexico talks". We have not heard that yet.

An hon. member: No.

Mr. Barrett: No, we have not heard that yet. We finally got a half answer on the GST, but we do not have an answer yet on the Mexico deal. They are already committed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The honorable member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca is an experienced parlementarian and a colourful speaker, but I wish to remind him that Bill C-81 is entitled An Act to implement the United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods. I would therefore appreciate if he would get back to the subject matter of the debate. I thank him in advance for his co-operation.

[English]

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for redirecting my focus to the specific comments made by the member. I did stray a bit and I thank you for that.

Now that I have dealt with number one, the facilitation of trade, I want to deal with number three because I will not have the time to deal with point number two that the member made.

Point number three that the member made was with regard to greater equity in trade, equity between large countries and small countries. This is a very important point because, as we are on the brink of the government desperately trying to get into a new trading bloc, we are also dealing with legislation to bring about greater equity in dealing with the bureaucracy of those kinds of trading blocs. What does that mean for us? It means, before the House committee's work has even been completed on examining whether or not we should participate in that new trading bloc, that the government has already said: "We are going to go in anyway."

How can the hon. member come into the House and say, with passion and with conviction, that the purpose of the bill and the federal government's support is for greater equity in trade? It does not make sense. As I said earlier and I am compelled to repeat, the third point is a continuation of the sellout of Canadian jobs.

I put this question to the member who I assume will close the debate. Is it the normal procedure that government members will get up and answer the questions?

Mr. Nicholson: At third reading.

Mr. Barrett: Okay. I want to thank the hon. member for his help.

There are a number of questions that I put to the government. In the definition of greater equity and trade, would the government be prepared to tell us whether or not it intends to ensure that models such as the European Community will be used in the same manner in any future trade dealings, in following through with the UN commitments under this particular bill? Is the government prepared to recognize that the European Community, which it holds out as an example in terms of establishing a trading bloc, has basic standards about workers sharing in equal rights?

In this debate, is the government prepared to lay out to us, in its movement to become governed under the United Nations regulations, whether or not it will argue for the position of complete access by Mexican labour into the United States and Canada? Freedom of movement is the key. We need to know, under the UN agreements that we will be signing after this legislation passes, whether or not the government will be excluding freedom of movement. Is it indeed the case that they are just exploiting working people and competing with those low-paid working people against Canadian jobs? That is a question that is valid here and valid for the Canadian people who are watching this debate who with the time, energy, love, and care in raising children in the country and with the hope of better education, better economic opportunity. They want to know that those jobs that are promised out there will be made available. There may be bureaucratic coverage under this legislation, but government policy will deny that there is any real equality.

Why does the member come into the House and say "a uniform system of rights, equity between trading partners, and greater equity in trade" when the government has already displayed that it does not give a fig about equity for Canadian workers? That is confusing to me and the 160,000 Canadians who have lost their jobs because the government's policies are also confused by the definition given by that member. It is small comfort to say that the government is now catching up with the UN Conventions, when the workers in the country have lost their jobs, their security and, in many cases, their homes.

I do not think this bill should go by quickly. It is important that we have detailed debate. It is important that we have in-depth answers and explanations for a government that seems—if I may use the expression—hell bent for leather to sell the country out in trilateral discussions with Mexico and the United States.

I refer particularly to a learned argument written in a document called International Comparative Law Quarterly. The first article in International Comparative Law Quarterly in January 1989, Part I, Volume 38, deals exclusively with this bill. It is entitled: "The Vienna Sales Convention 1980 in The Hague, Uniform Laws on International Sale of Goods—A Comparative Analysis". This analysis was prepared by a graduate of Harvard Business School. If anybody wants a copy of this learned article, I will make it available to them.

Again, I am being precise and reflecting my comments on this bill in a clearly defined way. I refer to page 7, (d), the application of the Convention to International Contracts of Sale of Goods. Nothing could more clearly be related to the bill.

The opening paragraph states: "The UN sales convention as stated in article 1(1) applies to contracts for the sale of goods between parties whose places are in different states". Related to that in the different states is the question of equality raised by my colleague. Again, the government does not address equality. It does not address the imbalance of trade. It does not address within this structure how it intends to accomplish what he says the government wants to do in support of this bill.

The problem has been that the government has been really out of order in debating this bill and its opening remarks. All it has done is make general comments about sales contracts, without any definition of how it intends to protect Canadians in those specific sales contracts, for example, the free trade agreement between the United States and Canada, and the continuation of the policy announced by the government that it wishes to participate in Mexico-Canada talks.

What is the position on those sales contracts in competing interests of Canadian and Mexican oil in the U.S. market? What will be the position of Hibernia, for example, under this? There will be $2.7 billion dollars of Canadian taxpayers' money going to the Mobil Oil Corporation in the biggest corporate welfare bum rip-off in the history of the country and, under this bill or contract, not a drop of that oil will be refined in Canada. That is a shocker. The people of Newfoundland think they are going to get thousands of jobs. The people of Canada are putting up the billions of dollars and the government says that it is concerned about those people. I say this: Give the $2.7 billion to the Government of Newfoundland and let it determine what is best under this bill for the working men and women of that province.

Do you think it is going to do that, Mr. Speaker? Don't nod your head, Mr. Speaker, because you are neutral. I will tell you this. I am not surprised that not a word has come out of the government's mouth on this bill on that particular hand-out.

It is a cheeky-mannered government that we are dealing with. For any large corporation that wants money we will guarantee its sales contracts. If ordinary working people want a hand or anything such as that, nothing doing.

Why is there not a section in here when referring to the protection of rights similar to the further research done in our own Library? There is the question of improved living and working conditions. Why was the government not able to define in this particular discussion of the bill why there is no statement, even in writing?

Two minutes, Mr. Speaker? Regrettably so much of my time was taken up by interjections and the interference by the government. Nonetheless, I will press on.

Improving living and working conditions for the workers, participation of workers and social partners, proposed social charter, the right of freedom of movement, employment remuneration—all this means is that, if communities are going to be competing fairly, they should be paying the same basic wages, no matter where one lives or how one makes one's living. That is not going to happen when we compete with Mexico, and it is not going to be covered in this kind of bureaucratic nonsense.

I may go on and point out the specific section of this document prepared by the researchers in our library who refer to the improvement of living and working conditions, the right to social production, the right of freedom of association and collective bargaining. Trade union organizers in Mexico are subject to massive human rights violations. This was raised in the committee and there was not one objection from the government.

I thank you for your admonition that I have one more minute to go, Mr. Speaker. I have a great deal more to say and I look forward to the discussion in committee.

Let me conclude in my last minute of this very important debate. Even though this is a sleepy Monday afternoon and, indeed, the first chance we have to debate this bill, I was disappointed in the government for not saying that, in terms of the defining the equality of rights for people, it would define for Canadian workers the equality of rights that are absolutely necessary and that are being destroyed by the free trade agreement with the United States, and that are being further eroded by the mindless commitment of the government to have us competing with cheap Mexican labour with no protection of standards, access to health care, or environmental conditions.

I am disappointed in the government. I am not disappointed in the bill. Only if the government would commit itself to the philosophy of the bill would I feel much better.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons we are debating this bill this afternoon has to do with what we, on this side of the House, feel we ought to be debating instead of this bill. That is the bill which would facilitate the sending out the early payment of the child tax credit.

If I remember the figures correctly, some 66,000 Canadian families, who have been told by the government that they will receive this payment, are now having some anxiety as to whether or not they will, thanks to the uncertainty which seems to exist on the other side of the House with respect to bringing forward the bill. The government should not let events which are happening in the other Chamber stand in the way of having the bill expedited quickly through this Chamber. Commitments have been made by both opposition parties, as far as I know, and—

Mr. Lewis: Yes, but you never keep your commitments.

Mr. Blaikie: I hear from the hon. member, formerly the government House leader, that we do not keep our commitments. It is a strange comment to be coming from a government that has brought nothing but chaos to opposition–government relations. Nevertheless, if he is so sure of that, I say to the hon. member, try us, bring forward the bill and we will make a liar out of him.

An hon. member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blaikie: What we would like to see is that particular legislation brought forward, but the government has chosen not to do that. It has brought forward this particular bill.

We see here an opportunity to debate the nature of international regulation of trade. The bill only deals with one aspect of it. It is an act to implement the United Nations Convention on Contracts on the International Sale of Goods. Basically, it is a bill which deals with the protection of buyers and sellers.

The point that the member before me was making, which I presume others may well want to make as well, is that too much of the international regulations which exist now for the regulation of international trade have only to do with the protection of buyers and sellers. They have only to do with the protection of people who are owners and there is very little protection, if any, at the international or global level, having to do with the protection of workers.

Where we have seen such international agreements, particularly those into which Canada has entered such as the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement, we have seen very little protection for workers as opposed to protection for buyers and sellers. the government is now contemplating entering into a further free trade agreement, in this case a three–way free trade agreement with Mexico which we believe would put Canadian workers at even more risk than they are at now as a result of the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement. It is not often that we get a chance to debate trade in this House. Unfortunately, the debate about the government's position on the Canada–U.S.–Mexico free trade talks has been happening only in committee and in the media and wherever else concerned members have been able to raise the profile of that issue.

We have not had a chance to debate it here in the House. I think that this bill provides us with an opportunity to talk about the international regulation of trade and the unfortunate trend in the world today of moving toward regional trading blocs, perhaps even hemispheric trading blocs.

I had the opportunity to attend an external affairs committee meeting recently at which we had one of the key academic supporters present. That is, academic supporters of a Canada–U.S.–Mexico free trade agreement. He told the committee that he saw this as the precursor of one more step toward a hemispheric free trade agreement, in which Canada would not only be in a free trade arrangement with Mexico, but with all the countries of Central and South America.

Mr. Lewis: That would be awful.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I hear someone across the way saying that would be awful. What is awful about it is that we have no indication from this government or from the United States Government or for that matter, as far as I know, from the Mexican Government, that they see the competition which would be brought in by any free trade agreement, as competition that needs to exist in the context of some social base.

The member who spoke before me referred to this social charter that is to come into effect with the full integration of the European communities' economy in 1992. What we see is an acknowledgement of the fact that if one is going to have a truly level playing field, along with economic integration and unfettered competition, then one must have an agreement between countries as to what the floor is with respect to social standards.

As Europe moves toward the single market of 1992, they are coming to an agreement. Having already broken through the conceptual barrier of saying there should be a social charter, they are coming to an agreement on what the basic income standards should be, basic pension legislation, basic labour legislation and beyond the social charter of what their common environmental standards will be. This is the sort of thing which we do not have in the context of the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement. It is the kind of thing which we certainly will not have in any Canada–U.S.–Mexico Free Trade Agreement. It is the kind of thing we do not have in any form of any multilateral trading context now through the GATT or anything else.

What we are saying and have constantly been saying since the beginning of the NDP Party comes out of a conviction that the marketplace itself, without these kinds of agreements about social standards, delivers only misery, if it is allowed to work itself out without these kinds of checks by government on what the private sector is allowed to pay people and the various other regulations that I have talked about.

There is a curious irony in the argument. In a way, we are saying that if there is going to be economic integration, there has to be a harmonization of sorts. Yet, harmonization is the very thing that we worried about in the debate on the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement. We worried about it then and we worry about it still in the context of the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement. If there were to be harmonization of social or environmental or whatever standards in the context of a Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement, given the asymmetry of the relationship between Canada and the United States and the size of America compared to the size of Canada, we think the likelihood would be a harmonization down toward American social standards. In the context of a Canada–U.S.–Mexico agreement, it would be harmonization even further downward. This is quite different from what is happening in Europe where you see harmonization happening upward because the most powerful countries in Europe economically are countries with strong social democratic traditions, Germany, Denmark, The Netherlands, et cetera.

That is happening there because the stronger countries economically are also the most progressive. Then you have this harmonization upward. In the context of the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement, the stronger nation economically happens to be the least progressive of the two countries involved and so the harmonization can be expected to go the other way.

We have not even got to that point here in our relationship with the United States. We have not got to the point of talking about harmonization as obviously it is a dilemma for those of us who are against the free trade agreement. We maintain especially, as we look to Europe, that you cannot have free and unfettered competition without a socially just basis for that competition, and yet at the same time we see that if such an attempt were made in the context of the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement that harmonization might actually lead to less social justice rather than more social justice. Even if it represented some sort of conceptual victory, the real nuts and bolts of the thing would be that Canadian men and women would be worse off rather than better off if they were led into a process by which the labour laws and the income legislation of Georgia became the model for Canadian social standards.

One other thing I would like to speak about this afternoon in the context of this Bill C–81, where we are talking about the international regulation of trade, in this case having to do with the protection of buyers and sellers in international contracts, is whether or not in the mind of our neighbour to the south trade is to be regulated by the international community at all.

One thing we found out in the last week or so was that they are fully prepared to contemplate saying to companies which are located in Canada that they cannot trade with Cuba. If they are American in origin and their headquarters is in the United States of America, Washington would like to apply this sort of extraterritorial power over them and forbid them from trading with Cuba, which has been designated by the United States as a country that American companies should not trade with.

There is nothing terribly new in this, Mr. Speaker, but what is new about it is that in this day and age one would think they would have more sense than to try and impose that kind of regulation on American companies, and particularly those that are operating out of Canada.

That obviously affects a lot of companies in Canada, given the high percentage of foreign ownership, particularly American ownership here in Canada. That affects a lot of Canadian companies.

I am glad the Secretary of State for External Affairs has indicated that he regards this as an unwarranted intrusion into Canadian sovereignty. I encourage the government to use as strong language as possible to send as strong a message as possible to Washington and to President Bush that this kind of interference in Canadian trade and sovereignty will simply not be tolerated.

I have done two things so far. I have talked about the social charter in Europe and the way in which what is being done there is so different from the kind of new trading arrangements that this government has already entered into with the United States and seems to be on the verge of entering into with Mexico. Second, I talked about the whole question of trade with Cuba and the way in which our neighbour to the south has tried to exert its will over international trade in this case rather than respecting the role of the international community.

Third, I would like to talk about the way in which all international trade is distorted at the present time by the whole question of the debt crisis and the way in which countries are not truly free to trade as they would and to trade in what they would because of the debt crisis. Many countries are forced by the current international financial system which has existed for a long time, basically since the Second World War, to devote all their energies and indeed much of their land to the growing of cash crops to produce hard currency, to buy things in the international marketplace. The problem now is that they are not even able to buy things in the international marketplace. They have to devote all that money that they earn through these cash crops, which were destructive enough in themselves, simply to pay the interest on their debts, so they are not going anywhere. They are having all the disadvantages of having turned over their local economies to the growing of cash crops without the advantages of having the hard currency to buy the things that they are not able to make in their own country. They are getting it both ways at this time.

I think if the government was serious about really creating a healthy, multilateral global trading context, it would get serious about the debt crisis and serious about the recommendations of the subcommittee of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, which made a number of very good recommendations in this regard to which the government has not responded.

Mr. Nicholson: I see you haven't read the bill either.

Mr. Blaikie: I have looked through the bill. There is not much to talk about. It is a Geneva convention with respect to the protection of buyers and sellers. What is really at issue here politically is whether we should be debating this at all or whether we should be debating the legislation that would facilitate the payment of those child tax credits.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to step into the discussion here for a moment by way of a point of order to indicate to the House that there have been discussions among the parties and the party leadership last week that today we would deal with Bills C-81, C-82 and C-73, which was the intention that I was operating on.

I want to indicate to the House, Mr. Speaker, that we are quite happy if the members want to proceed with Bills C-81, C-82 and C-73. We are happy to bring in Bill C-86, the child tax credits, immediately after that. We are prepared to co-operate in every way that we can to push it through as expeditiously and as favourably as we can.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, this is interesting. The Parliamentary Secretary to the government House leader is correct. He says there was an intention of proceeding with Bills C-81, C-82 and C-73 for today. That was the government's intention and we said, that is fine, but we just realized over the weekend that 60,000-plus low-income families were promised a child tax credit by mid-November.

I have looked ahead on what the government has informed us in terms of the business of the next few days and it is not on that list. I want to ask my friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader, if he is saying that an act to implement the United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods, an act regarding port wardens, and an act dissolving and privatizing Crown corporations are more important than the child tax credit legislation? I want to say that I do not think it is more important.

I want to say to the parliamentary secretary, to facilitate the passage of Bills C-81, C-82 and C-73, I will on behalf of my party say yes, we will facilitate the passage of that legislation if the government now, this moment this afternoon—we have plenty of time left—introduces Bill C-86 so we can say to the low income families of this country yes, we are concerned that in the pre-Christmas period when people are putting aside money for snow outfits and snow clothing for the children, making pre-Christmas plans, that we might—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I hesitate to recognize the parliamentary secretary because the House is not the place for House leaders to negotiate. I would be inclined to urge the House leaders to meet outside the House so we might go on with the debate. However the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader may have something more to say.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, indeed Bill C-86 is very important. I am sure all of us in this House agree. What is important is I gave my word, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader, to the other members in this House that we would proceed with Bills C-81, C-82 and C-73 today.

Mr. Speaker, I am prepared at this moment to ask you if there is unanimous consent of the House to proceed with Bill C-81, Bill C-82, and Bill C-73 and immediately thereafter to deal with Bill C-86 in all stages. I can assure you that we on this side are prepared to give that unanimous consent at this moment.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I heard your comments a moment ago, when you said that House leaders should negotiate outside this House. Traditionally, House leaders meet regularly, especially on Tuesday, to decide on the business of the House for the following days.

I must point out that we were not told last week that the government intended to call Bill C-86, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act (child tax credit), for discussion this week. However, we noticed some interest in the general public and, as the Official Opposition, we say that if the governement wishes to give some good news and to do its job seriously, we agree to consider Bill C-86 and pass it as quickly as possible.

We have members who wish to speak on Bills C-81, C-82 and C-73, but, Mr. Speaker, if the government commit itself without prejudice to starting debate on second reading of Bill C-86 later today, we have no objection.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the comments of the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier, because I had assumed that we would agree. I intend to seek unanimous consent now, without any further interruption, to go directly to Bill C-86, the child tax credit, because we feel this—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order! Order, please. I feel compelled to ask the House leaders, if they so wish, to meet outside the House. As far as I am concerned, I have no choice but to recognize again the hon. member for Winnipeg Transcona on current business, that is Bill C-81.

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that my words this afternoon have moved the leaders of the House to action and that they will be meeting. Perhaps, after having listened to my admonitions, they will come to some kind of arrangement.

I note, on the main point, that we should this afternoon be dealing with Bill C-86. My House leader sought unanimous consent to do right away and that was denied. A very curious argument was offered by the Liberal House leader, that he had Liberals who wanted to speak on this particular bill. We have had two NDP speakers in a row and no Liberals rose.

An hon. member: That's right.

Mr. Blaikie: I find it very curious indeed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I am asking for the co-operation of the hon. member for Winnipeg Transcona. Would he, please, be relevant, that is deal with Bill C-81.

[English]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order or disorder, because the member is looking for disorder here; he is imputing motives.

Debate started on Bill C-81 this afternoon. We participated in it. We have given our undertaking that we would look at Bill C-81 today and, if possible, Bill C-82 and, if possible, Bill C-73.

I am saying that by unanimous consent we can do anything in this House, but the member for Kamloops cannot move a bill that does not belong to him. It belongs to the government, and I am asking the government, if it feels so disposed to bring in Bill C-86, to do so. We will give it our unanimous consent to bring it in; but I am saying that the member for Kamloops cannot bring in that bill. He is politicizing or he is participating in something which we never do in this House, that is partisan politics.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Riis: I rise on a point of order. Heaven forbid, Mr. Speaker, that we might have some politics in the House of Commons of Canada.

I want to make it perfectly clear—and perhaps there has been some misunderstanding—I am well aware, unfortunately, that the New Democratic Party is unable to bring forward this legislation on this child tax credit.

Just to make the point very clear, I would like to seek, through you, Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent to revert now to the consideration of Bill C-86 in an effort to move this legislation forward expeditiously.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

• (1720)

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I have no trouble with anybody asking for unanimous consent. However, as you will recall, I asked for unanimous consent to proceed with the bills we had agreed to, with the full understanding of the members of the House—they were put on the Order Paper today: Bill C–81, Bill C–82, and Bill C–73—and then proceeding with Bill C–86.

Mr. Speaker, if you would like to put that consent motion to the House, we are happy to offer our consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): If I understand correctly, the parliamentary secretary is seeking the unanimous consent of the House to proceed to consideration of Bills C–82 and C–73.

However, the Chair cannot ask for consent until the House has disposed of Bill C–81. This means I must recognize again the hon. member for Winnipeg Transcona so that the House, if it so desires, can dispose of Bill C–81. The hon. member has a few minutes left.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps we are making progress. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader wants us to move expeditiously on Bill C–81, Bill C–82, and Bill C–73. Then we will discuss Bill C–86 and pass it, presumably.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make a proposal through you to the House, particularly to my hon. friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader, and the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier that we seek unanimous consent to deal today with the stage before us of Bill C–81, the stage before us of Bill C–82, the stage before us of Bill C–73, and all stages of Bill C–86.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Does the House agree with the proposal by the hon. member for Kamloops to dispose today of the second reading stages of Bills C–81, C–82, C–73?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I think all this negotiating is rather amusing, Mr. Speaker! I don't know what kind of arrangement the NDP has with the government, so that I can anticipate decisions which have yet to be made. We are nobody's fool, Mr. Speaker! Bill C–81 is still being debated by the NDP which is trying to use it as a play to make the House proceed with something else. I am quite willing for us to adopt Bill C–81, C–82 and C–73, and even C–86, if necessary, but we have only one and a half hours left, Mr. Speaker! If the New Democrats keep talking the way they usually do, we won't be able to finish before 7 p.m., Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order, please. I hope hon. members will be co-operative. If I may make a suggestion, I would advise the three parliamentary House leaders to meet as soon as possible. Meanwhile, the Chair has no choice but to recognize again the hon. member for Winnipeg Transcona.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I noticed with interest that you sought unanimous consent to the proposal put forward by my hon. friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader. I am asking that you do the same now for my suggestion, and that the unanimous consent be that today, before the end of the parliamentary sitting, we deal with Bill C–81 at second reading, Bill C–82 at second reading, Bill C–73 at second reading, and all stages of Bill C–86. That is what I am seeking unanimous consent and agreement to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I want to make this quite clear, because the proposal seems rather broad and somewhat vague. We have before the House a motion asking the House to agree to adopt four bills during today's sitting, if I am not mistaken.

Does the House agree?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Lapierre: I don't agree!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): In that case, I again recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg Transcona.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The hon. member for Shefford.

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to you that you have not requested unanimous consent yet and that I have the privilege of denying it. However, as a sign of our willingness to contribute to the good cause of helping Canadian families, especially in Quebec, and in a spirit of co-operation that I wish were a two-way street for the leaders of the other parties—I would like them to remember this gesture of support in other circumstances—I will also give consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): So, to make sure it is clear to everyone, is there unanimous consent for the approval at all stages of bills C-81, C-82, C-73 and C-86?

Some hon. members: No.

An hon. member: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Attention, please! I believe I worded the question incorrectly. Is there unanimous consent for adopting today bills C-81, C-82 and C-73 at second reading and bill C-86 at all stages?

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The hon. opposition House leader has the floor.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on the proposal of the government, that motion will not be debated. It will be agreed unanimously if the government is willing to put it and to adopt the motion in order to pass Bills C-81, C-82, C-73 and C-86 today.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, maybe a bit of clarity might help.

First, this is my understanding of what we are agreeing to: that before seven o'clock this evening when the House rises we would complete the second reading of Bill C-81; we would complete second reading of Bill C-82; we would complete second reading of Bill C-73; and then we would deal with Bill C-86 in all stages.

That is very clear to all the members, and that is certainly what we all agree to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): So, is the House giving its unanimous consent to the proposal put forward by the House leader for the government?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): That motion is agreed to and becomes and order of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The hon. member for Winnipeg Transcona has the floor again on Bill C-81.

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, my goal, having been accomplished, I have nothing more to say.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Are there other hon. members wishing to speak on Bill C-81?

Some hon. members: No.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

An hon. member: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

APPOINTMENT OF A PORT WARDEN FOR THE HARBOUR OF QUEBEC

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-82, an act to amend an act to provide for the appointment of a Port Warden for the Harbour of Quebec and an act to amend and consolidate the acts relating to the office of Port Warden for the Harbour of Montreal, and to validate certain fees and charges established pursuant thereto, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

• (1730)

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise in this House and to speak to the bill presently before us, that is an act governing the port warden of the port of Montreal and the act governing the port warden of the port of Quebec.

The goal of the bill is to increase the efficiency of the administration of the port wardens by the Board of Trade of Montreal and la Chambre de Commerce de Quebec. It will also remove archaic features of the legislation, which date back to 1882 for the port of Montreal and 1871 for the port of Quebec.

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that the port wardens at the port of Montreal and the port of Quebec are unique in Canada. Their individual legislation and responsibilities which link them to the Board of Trade of Montreal and la Chambre de Commerce de Quebec, pre-date Confederation.

The port wardens fulfil an important role. Their duties include inspecting all cargoes of grain, mineral concentrates, timber stored on deck and explosives. They also ensure that a ship meets the necessary safety requirements and is loaded in accordance with Canadian safety regulations.

The Board of Trade of Montreal and la Chambre de Commerce de Quebec are empowered under their respective legislations of 1881 and 1871 to establish tariffs of fees for these services.

The legislation requires that the tariffs of fees cover the costs of the port wardens' offices and that the moneys collected may only be used for the purposes of these offices. These tariffs of fees currently require approval by the Governor in Council before coming into force, and in past years have remained in force for long periods of time.

However, in today's fast-moving maritime commercial world and with rapidly fluctuating costs, the Board of Trade and la Chambre de Commerce now find it necessary to adjust the tariffs of fees, often at short notice, in order to meet the costs of the port wardens' offices for providing their services to the shipping industry.

Forecasting ship demands, and hence forecasting the revenues necessary to cover the costs of the port wardens' services is difficult. Recognizing the longer timeframe required for government approvals, it is the government's intention to remove from the legislation the requirement for Governor in Council approval. Safeguards for government and the shipping industry to ensure the high level of service at appropriate costs will be maintained.

The primary objective of the bill, therefore, is to provide the Board of Trade and la Chambre de Commerce with the authority to approve tariffs of fees and put these into effect. We are confident that greater efficiency will be achieved in the administration of the offices of the port wardens at Montreal and Quebec and continued excellent service to the shipping industry will be assured.

The federal government will retain its over-all responsibility for appointing the port wardens, and auditing the financial management of their offices. The shipping industry and the Canadian Coast Guard will continue to have representation on technical committees of the Board of Trade and Chambre de Commerce responsible for the duties of the port wardens, and recommending tariffs of fees. Users will be consulted and informed of tariffs of fees changes by the Board of Trade and la Chambre de Commerce through the process of pre-publication in the Canada Gazette and local newspapers.

Before establishing tariffs of fees, la Chambre de Commerce and the Board of Trade presently undertake consultations with users of the ports on the fairness of these fees in relation to the value of the service and the responsibility vested in the port wardens for safety of the ships, cargo and crew. There is general satisfaction among users regarding the quality and nature of the service provided by the port wardens at these harbours. This same effective and harmonious relationship will continue.

Mr. Speaker, the second objective of this bill is essentially a housekeeping amendment. It will remove archaic features of the original legislation that fixed payments and charges for services of the ports wardens in the legislation itself. These charges were appropriate many years ago but are no longer valid in meeting present day costs of doing business. For example, the legislation required the payment of one-quarter of a cent per head of livestock and even a fee not exceeding two cents per barrel on all ashes shipped from the port.

I might also add that on all sheep and pigs shipped from the port there was a fee not exceeding one-quarter of one cent per head.

These housekeeping amendments will also validate tariffs of fees and charges fixed in later years which could not conform to these archaic provisions.

The over-all results of these amendments will be to make the operations of the port wardens more effective and responsive to modern day shipping at the local level, while maintaining the government's responsibility for the safety of commercial navigation.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that you will find that this bill can receive timely approval in order to modernize this small but important part of the daily business of these two ports.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in my place on behalf of my Liberal colleagues to speak on Bill C-82, which as the parliamentary secretary to the minister just enunciated, is a housekeeping bill that essentially permits the port wardens at the ports of Montreal and Quebec City to establish the tariffs of fees charged to shipping companies for services rendered.

It used to be that the government, through an Order in Council, allotted these fees. As well, the legislation before us removes the ceiling from the fees that were charged the various shipping companies for a variety of services.

For instance, section 10 of the act is to provide for the appointment of a port warden for the harbour of Quebec. It says that the person assisting the port warden and the survey of damaged vessels shall be paid a maximum fee of $5 for services rendered.

Obviously a good case and a good argument can be made that it is time those fees enter the 20th century.

The concept of the port warden, however, is one that goes back to an old adage of the British system. In fact, I believe that the only port wardens in the country are those currently in Quebec City and Montreal.

Essentially, the wardens at the present moment and as contemplated in this bill, are employees of the local boards of trade. The boards of trade are made up of representatives from the various shipping entities.

As I see it there are three responsibilities for the port warden: first, his role to survey the port authority; second, to act as an ombudsman in dealing with dispute and hopefully tendering resolutions to those disputes; and third, to collect all fees and charges for those services.

In 1989, for example, the board of trade in the metropolitan city of Quebec City collected some $65,000 in that fiscal year for the various services rendered. From that amount, the salary of the port warden and for the chairman of the board of trade are paid.

It is important to suggest that the port wardens will still continue to be appointed by the federal government, and that in fact, while the port warden will respond and report directly to the board of trade, these port wardens have to make an annual submission of the audit independently of those services during that year.

I believe that it would be fair to say that the fees have to be modernized. Judging from the antiquated levels of these fees, we can expect tremendous increases of anywhere up to 500 to 1,000 per cent. While we are speaking of relatively small amounts when it come to the various shipping entities, I think there is no doubt that this will add a further cost to the shipping entities who use the port facilities.

I believe it would be fair to say that if the fees were in isolation I do not believe it would be a big, serious problem for most shipping companies. I think it is going to be compounded possibly by the fees that may be charged in connection with the Coast Guard, for instance. Some shipping companies now get services from the Coast Guard. They may be asked in the coming year, depending on the consultations of my good friend, the minister, to pay additional fees for the use of the Coast Guard services.

It is part of the government's cost recovery program. It may anticipate revenues of upwards of $25 million. Over half of those revenues, namely $14 million, could possibly be raised in the province of Quebec at the two ports of which we speak today.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, you can see the added burden on shipping companies. As well, the report submitted to the minister concerning preventive medicine and shipping spills obviously will add another investment layer to the shipping entities themselves with respect to having the ultimate respect for the environment. There are going to be a series of possible increases to the various shipping entities. The government should be accountable as protector of that industry, and be able to intervene somehow and somewhere if in fact those fees that now will not have a ceiling under this legislation and will be provided for by an independent body, namely the board of trade, that there needs to be some kind of accountability.

The shipping industry is going through some very rough waters indeed. Shipping is down in many parts of the country. Ports Canada includes basically the administration of seven autonomous ports: Halifax, Montreal, Quebec Prince Rupert, Saint John, St. John's and Vancouver. Under the Ports Canada Corporation, there is an additional seven regional divisional ports. Ports Canada reports shipping activity declined nearly 7 per cent in 1989 from the year earlier, representing some 174 million tonnes of cargo less being shipped this year than last year. Eighty-three per cent was handled by the seven port corporations and 17 per cent by the Canada Ports Corporation, i.e., the seven divisional ports. The total tonnage in the berths of the seven port corporations was down again by 8 per cent. In the seven smaller Canada Ports Corporation berths, the total tonnage was down by 9 per cent. Coal shipments were down 2.5 per cent; grain was down 26 per cent to 19.2 million tonnes; containerized traffic was down from 12.5 to slightly over 12.3 million tonnes from the previous year.

In Montreal, one of the ports being debated this afternoon, the 1989 total volume was 20.4 million tonnes, down from 22 million tonnes in 1988. Similar percentage decreases were also experienced by the port of Quebec City, where it was down to 15.7 million tonnes from 18 million tonnes.

These statistics are tabled with Your Honour to show that the shipping industry is not going through good times. We have seen the situation on land in terms of transportation. We know what has happened to our rail infrastructure. We know what is happening in the airline industry. We know about the 3,000 Canadians laid off by Air Canada and Worldways and other companies. We know about the open skies concept. What we should not do is also undermine the shipping industry, an industry that has shown health and diversity. In fact, it has scared away the Americans from competing with us head to head because they have too much respect for us.

The Americans were very quick to try to compete with us in the trucking industry. They did and they hurt us. Now they wish to compete with us head to head in the air. That is why we are entering the open skies arrangement favoured by this government.

When we talk about increasing and modernizing fees for the shipping industry, we should keep in mind the delicate nature of the business. We should not try to put people out of business, but try to give them an infrastructure to facilitate growth and dynamism so they will not only flourish, but the jobs in the industry will increase so that Canadian families across the country, particularly in the cities surrounding these seven major ports may continue to have a vibrant livelihood.

We look forward to moving this bill into committee stage where we can pursue a number of areas where we can, while modernizing these fees, also continue to have a responsibility and an accountability so that those fees being charged are clearly going to be in the interest of the shipping entities in the shipping companies so that they may continue to work.

The other points I would like to raise are, perhaps in committee, in terms of if a shipping company feels that the fees are too exorbitant, what is the appeal mechanism? Now that we are giving more autonomy to the boards of trade and the various wardens, what is the role of the Canadian government vis-à-vis a complaint coming from a shipping company in terms of the fees charged.

We may also contemplate—and I say this to the minister and his parliamentary secretary—we know now that the ports must submit a yearly audit. We may now be suggesting that we are giving more autonomy to have a more comprehensive report. Rather than getting a simple audit with numbers on a piece of paper that sometimes do not mean very much, we may want to expand the comprehensiveness of that type of report.

We also may engage the boards of trade. Now that they will be directing the shots, we may also have the boards of trade enter into a closer working relationship with the Government of Canada. Once again, while we appoint the wardens, I think we ought to be responsible in terms of the fees discharged to the shipping industry.

With those brief words, because I know the House has much work to be completed before 7 p.m., we give this bill its blessing at this stage. We look forward to crossing the t's and dotting the i's at committee where, on behalf of the Liberal Party, I will raise a number of thoughts to be further amplified at that time.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take this opportunity to make a few brief remarks with respect to this bill. Bill C–82 is a bill which touches on a topic that should be a matter of thorough public scrutiny, and that is the accountability of our ports.

Canada is, after all, a trading nation and, with so much of our economic health riding on trade, our country's ports assume a special importance. Too often, their operations are shrouded in secrecy. Some pretty questionable activities are carried on under that shroud. Lifting that veil, ensuring the fullest transparency that can be practically attained in a competitive environment, should be a key goal of any administration genuinely committed to open government.

The legislation is acceptable to my New Democratic colleagues and, as far as it goes, it is a good bill. There are aspects of it that we find particularly worthy of support. It allows for public input through notification in the Canada Gazette. It keeps ultimate authority in the hands of the government and port wardens who must still submit annual independent audits to the government.

In a narrow sense the legislation is aimed at accountability, accountability to market forces and the shipping industry. That is good, because there are other areas where accountability is sorely needed.

Canada's ports are exempt from access to information requirements. Supposedly, this is to protect the competitive position of the ports. Perhaps it is also to save the government and its pals from embarrassment.

Earlier this year we had a glimpse of the kind of excess, exorbitance and extravagance that hides behind this mask, revealed by the Leader of my party, the member for Yukon, along with The Globe and Mail.

The manager of the Port of Montreal earns some $130,000 a year. Perhaps that is not entirely out of line, but look at last year's perks as reported in The Globe and Mail earlier this year: the use of two drivers and two cars; an annual allowance of $6,600 for his own car; a $15,000 membership at the Mount Royal Golf Club; two season's tickets to the Montreal Canadiens games, plus play–off tickets; and four season's tickets to the Expos, at a cost of $6,857. Also, he had 10 tickets at $500 each to a gala concert of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra.

In 1988, the corporation's entertainment budget was over $327,000, twice the amount of 1985. There was almost $11,000 for a party at the Westin and over $42,000 for liquor, flowers, cigars and a category called "other". The port spent over $63,000 in gourmet catering for parties on board the Maisonneuve, officially a port tugboat but whose real use is entertaining. That's entertainment, Mr. Speaker. That is also unquestionable waste.

What was the explanation for this? It was indicated that those galas and baseball games are hard work. It has been explained by the manager of the port corporation that reports of lavish expenditures come from envious blue–collar workers.

Let me recite his exact words from The Globe and Mail article:

> The clerks are mad because they haven't been invited on the boat. If it bugs people, let them be bugged.

After having said that the port has to entertain if it is to compete, he concludes by saying:

> And those turkeys have the gall to complain.

That attitude, Mr. Speaker, provides new insight into the poisoned labour relations atmosphere at the port. No wonder.

Those turkeys are working people. Like Canadians everywhere, they have not seen their entertainment budget double in the past four years. They have seen services from the government slashed. They have seen post offices closed, the CBC savaged, VIA Rail gutted, and the GST looming on the horizon.

No, Mr. Speaker, workers have not been invited on the boat. They are right to be mad, because the government's belief in restraint and cutbacks ends when it comes to the life–styles to which their cronies have become accustomed.

We need answers. We need accountability, and we need openness. We need to be able to unravel situations like the one that rose in 1984 when the port hired

Senator Guy Charbonneau's company to advise them on where to buy new insurance policies. Two months later, most of the port's insurance business went to Pratte–Morrissette Inc., whose board is headed by Senator Guy Charbonneau. Surprise of surprises! It kept the business for the next five years. Canadians only found out about this cosy relationship six years later, in June of this year.

Here is another case that members will be interested in. Maurice Mayer received a commission of at least $225,000 for buying land for the Montreal Ports Corporation. Mr. Mayer is a real estate broker, a senior Tory fund–raiser, and a friend of the Prime Minister's.

An hon. member: Shame.

Mr. Laporte: His name was proposed by another well known Conservative, and a director of the port corporation, Andre Gingras. What makes things interesting here, Mr. Speaker, is that Gingras and Mayer were business partners at the time, negotiating a $10.4 million federal government lease for an office building they owned with three other partners. Those other partners were all Tories.

Incidentally, the public works minister at the time, Roch LaSalle, overrode the objections of senior public servants and directed bureaucrats to help the partners win the lease. But that is another barrel and another bunch of pork.

Mayer's contract with the Port of Montreal came in December, 1986. We found out about this in June.

If we are to understand what is happening and if we are to satisfy ourselves that nothing is wrong, then we must have that openness. There is a need for some kind of glasnost through the entire port regime.

There is a perfect example in the case of Canada Ports Corporation. At last year's annual general meeting, most of the board members spent around $4,000 mainly in the dining room and lounge. There are meals and entertainment at exclusive private clubs. Board members get paid for participating in conference calls. Four calls equals one day's work or $300.

Students of the government's record will probably not be surprised to learn that most of the board members are quite well connected to a particular party, the Conservative Party. We had to find this information out through the Canadian Press.

Pork–barrelling is not unique to Canada Ports Corporation, of course. The vice–chairman of Montreal Ports Corporation is a former Tory candidate in Westmount and board member, Peter Ohrt, is a former staffer in the Prime Minister's office.

That is all well and good. Perhaps these people are the best qualified and their party affiliation is a mere accident. But it does raise questions, and those questions can only be satisfied in the full light of an accountable and open system.

The recent controversy surrounding Peter Lush and the Hamilton Harbour Commission is also instructive, and not just for the question of whether there was any wrong–doing. The government did nothing to facilitate the flow of information. It stonewalled on questions of conflict of interest. Later, by boycotting a transport committee meeting, it blocked the inquiry into the affair.

And if, as the hon. transport minister has maintained, Mr. Lush has done nothing wrong and was an innocent victim of half truths and innuendo, then the government has only itself to blame for allowing the closed door nature of the commission to make complete information an impossibility.

Secrecy and unaccountability are the parents of waste and extravagance. They tempt people to cut corners, skirt the rules, and carve off a little bit more than perhaps they should be carving off. Now, more than ever, government has not only to be open and honest, but must appear to be open and honest.

It is no coincidence that Canadians are cynical about elected politicians and appointed officials. There is an increasing feeling out there that the government of the country is not run for the benefit of its citizens, but for the enrichment of a privileged few. That belief is reinforced every time Canadians see tax reform that benefit the wealthy, instead of working people. It is driven home every time the government knuckles under to its big business friends and waters down badly needed environmental policies. And it is confirmed in an era of cut–backs and belt–tightening, an era of sacrifice, an era of hardship and every time we find out about appointed officials living high on the hog.

There are now more food banks in the country than there are McDonald's restaurants. Child poverty is a shameful, widespread reality in every part of the country. Yet, the government cannot understand why people are hungry and are being left off that boat in the Montreal harbour. The fact is that that boat in the Montreal harbour is our boat. It is our port. It is our government. It is our country, whether the members opposite want to listen or not.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order! I would ask the hon. member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre for his co-operation so that we can get back to the matter under consideration.

[English]

Mr. Laporte: Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by saying that Liberals and Conservatives, when in power, have forgotten about the price we pay in this country for many of the items that their friends seem to enjoy. It is Canadians who pay for this. It is time to take the boat back and it is time to take our country back.

With that in mind, the New Democrats will examine this bill in committee to see whether or not it enhances accountability and whether or not it can be improved to make the operations of these two ports more transparent, while keeping in mind the needs of any competitive corporation. Bill C-82 is not the beginning of open, democratic society, but there are issues which it raises which must be raised and must be pursued. We welcome the opportunity to deal with those issues and we look forward to sending this bill to committee.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I will try to apply the test of relevance, but I must say that, having just heard the protestations of my hon. colleague from the New Democratic Party while he was throwing all politicians into the same bad hamper vis-à-vis the public trust, I have to say that a lot of us were shaking our heads on the weekend when we read about an NDP member who is using his immunity as a member of Parliament to avoid paying leadership debts. Frankly, for a party which prides itself in being so open with the public trust, I have to shake my head and ask myself why it is proceeding in that fashion. That does not meet the test of relevance, but I thought it bore speaking about because, frankly, I did agree with some of the points that were made by my hon. colleague in the NDP.

In examining the issue of Bill C-82, one can look at it in its narrow form.

[Translation]

As a microcosm, we can say that we should have made some changes ages ago precisely to up-date the system now in place, particularly in the St. Lawrence river and the St. Lawrence Seaway. But at the same time, it gives the government the opportunity to review the policies on all the ports, including the Port of Hamilton.

[English]

I could not see Bill C-82 pass second reading without asking the government, in its wisdom, in looking at the very specific amendments dealing with the issues of fees and the composition of the ports of Montreal and Quebec, why it was not taking the wider vision of restructuring and revamping the system of regulation over all our federal harbours. If you look at the fiasco of the Hamilton Harbour over the last couple of months, it is clear that the current system is wanting.

• (1800)

The Minister of Transport is no doubt aware, in a non-partisan way, because I know how non-partisan he wants to be on this issue, of the fact that several weeks ago the city of Hamilton passed a unanimous resolution, supported by so-called members of the Liberal Party, the Conservative Party, the NDP, and, I suspect, some other political affiliations. That particular resolution which followed a resolution, which was sent to the Hon. Minister of Transport as of March 20 of this year, from the city of Hamilton went directly to the Prime Minister's office. It called upon the Prime Minister to hold a full public inquiry, among other things, into the issue of the Lush affair. That letter went out to the Hon. Prime Minister of Canada in early October and for the record—

An hon. member: That is not related to the bill.

Ms. Copps: It relates to the bill because the bill deals with the provision of a port warden for the Harbour of Quebec and an act to amend and consolidate the acts arising out of the office of port warden for the Harbour of Montreal. I am suggesting that instead of coming in with the small step to clean up a particular situation in Montreal and Quebec, what the government should do is issue comprehensive legislation to restructure the way we do business in the harbours of this country.

Clearly, when we heard the previous speaker speak about allegations of conflict of interest, we are at an all-time low ebb in terms of public trust. It is not simply a Tory problem. It is a problem that faces all politicians. One of the reasons for that is because there is a public perception, buttressed by situations such as the Lush affair, that certain friends of the government have an undue opportunity to profit from their inside activities or insider information in, among other things, the workings of our ports and harbours.

You heard the previous speaker speak about real estate transactions in the city of Montreal that dealt with the previous Minister of Public Works and how that impacted on the ports in Montreal and in other places. I suggest that that problem is not unique to that particular port but, rather, is a potential problem in harbour commissions across this country.

If you read the letter that went to the Prime Minister on October 10, it is not a Liberal plot to raise the issue. It is an all-party unanimous resolution of the Council of the Corporation of the City of Hamilton unanimously adopting the following resolution:

> That, consistent with the resolution adopted by Hamilton City Council at its meeting held 1990 March 13—

The details of which went to the Minister of Transport in March, 1990.

> —the following resolution be forwarded to the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney, Prime Minister of Canada:
> (a) That City Council call upon the Federal Government to revisit the recommendations made by the City's "Task Force to Review the Mandate and Structure of the Hamilton Harbour Commissioners dated January 1989" with—.

Mr. Lewis: Not a chance.

Ms. Copps: Not a chance? Not a chance, the Minister of Transport said. He has not even had the courtesy, via the Prime Minister, to reply to a unanimous resolution of the Corporation of the City of Hamilton. Yet, we hear the minister from his seat saying "not a chance".

Mr. Lewis: I already reviewed that last year. You should catch up.

Ms. Copps: I have been in touch with the mayor's office as late as five o'clock this afternoon. The Prime Minister has not responded to their letter.

Clearly, the resolution's call for the review of the mandate and structure of the Hamilton Harbour Commission dated January, 1989:

> That the Federal Government undertake to immediately fill the vacancy on the Hamilton Harbour Commission—.

And, I might add with a Hamiltonian, or somebody who represents the interests of Hamilton. He will remember that when his colleague, the former Associate Minister of Transport, was pushing so hard for the nomination of Peter Lush that she went against all political advice from all sources in the city of Hamilton. The situation has created a bad taste in the mouths of a lot of Hamiltonians when our interests are not being represented on a commission that is supposed to speak, in part, for the people of Hamilton.

Furthermore, they ask that a consultation occur with the city of Hamilton before the new position is filled on that particular commission. Third, and most important:

> That an open public inquiry be undertaken to ensure that any sale of land with specific reference to the 1987 sale by J.I. Case Canada to the Hamilton Harbour Commission in which Mr. P. Lush declared a conflict of interest complied in all respects with the Hamilton Harbour Commissioners Act—which reads in part:
> "The Corporation shall not have any transaction of any pecuniary nature, either in buying or selling, with any member thereof, directly or indirectly."
> and further, that Hamilton City Council request an immediate meeting with the Prime Minister of Canada to discuss and review harbour issues and concerns, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to all local MPs, and that all local MP's including Shirley Martin, Geoff Scott and Bill Kempling—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order! I noted that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East had promised to keep her remarks relevant and I urge her to return to the issue under discussion, namely the Montreal and Quebec harbours.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that while we are dealing with a particular harbour, nothing prevents the government from taking action on other harbours at the same time. If the government had had the courage to follow the recommendations as unanimously tabled by all political parties on the Hamilton City Council, they would have introduced an omnibus bill to correct the outstanding problems in the Montreal and Quebec harbours while demonstrating at the same time that Parliament is in the process of cleaning up the Department of Transport.

[English]

Mr. Belsher: Speak to what it is.

Mr. Lewis: It has no relevance whatsoever.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking about a bill which deals with ports and harbours of Canada. I am sorry if it hurts the hon. members that a unanimous resolution of the city of Hamilton does not seek relevance in the record, but clearly, Mr. Speaker, it is part of the over-all government policy of ports and harbours.

I have every right as a member from the Hamilton area to raise in the House relevant issues, asking the Minister of Transport why he has not broadened the horizons of the port bill, C-82, which is currently before the House. It has much relevance and I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if you examine all of the—

Mr. Lewis: It has no relevance.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Transport does not have the guts to stand up in the House and make the comments that he is making from his seat, I would ask him to stand up and speak to the issue. I want to know why—

Mr. Lewis: The member wants it on the record. The member's debate is completely irrelevant. Therefore, it is on the record.

Ms. Copps: The member continues to shout from his seat that he has no intention of changing the mandate of the Harbour Commission as requested by Hamilton City Council unanimously. He refuses to answer why the Prime Minister has not even bothered to reply to a city council unanimous resolution, and he further refuses to answer to the people of Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member for Hamilton and appreciate the efforts she is making to refer to her riding of Hamilton East, but I must emphasize the fact that her remarks must be relevant and deal with the Quebec and Montreal harbours. She could also mention the possibility that this bill may apply to other harbours everywhere in Canada.

Therefore, I seek the co-operation of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that as we are dealing with harbours, all those speaking in the debate may refer to harbours in general. This bill affects a number of harbours such as those in Montreal and Quebec City, but I see no reason why I should limit my comments to these two harbours. All harbours have problems. My hon. friend of the New Democratic Party referred earlier to the conflict of interest problems involving the Montreal harbour. I suggest that this is not only a problem which affects Montreal, but is at the heart of the National Harbour Board system as demonstrated very clearly here in this House over the past month and about which the municipal council of Hamilton is demanding a reply for the government. Therefore, should the Minister of Transport introduce other bills dealing with harbours, I should be most anxious to participate in their discussion.

I read the agenda but did not see any other instrument aimed at broadening the policy of the Minister of Transports concerning ports. I do not see why I would not be entitled to deal with problems which are not peculiar to the port of Hamilton but which relate as well to potential conflicts of interest in Montreal, Quebec City, Toronto and in a number of other sectors where a commision is established to extend certain privileges to certain individuals who can normally or generally be considered to be friends of the government. I would therefore suggest that evidence of relevancy is there for anyone to see.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that following the resolution adopted by the Hamilton municipal council I wrote a letter dated October 19 in which I asked for a response from the Prime Minister at the earliest time.

[English]

I asked for a follow-up to the unanimous resolution of the Hamilton city council. I wrote a letter to the Prime Minister on October 19 in which I asked him for a very speedy answer to the legitimate concerns of the people of Hamilton as they concern the disposition of lands, and in particular authority relating to harbours, ports and harbour commissions.

Clearly, the Prime Minister has chosen to ignore the legitimate request of the city council of Hamilton, and the Minister of Transport shouting from his seat basically indicated to the House that he had no intention of acting on the legitimate requests of the city of Hamilton.

All we are asking for is a fair public hearing so that we can restore public faith in the process. If we cannot get the fair hearing outside the House of Commons—surely this place is a relevant place to get that kind of hearing—once again,—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order, please. Again I regret to interrupt the hon. member but parliamentary tradition is that we should refrain from referring to the presence or absence of a colleague. Again I would urge the hon. member to co-operate with the Chair and stick to the subject matter of the bill.

Ms. Copps: You may have misunderstood what I said. I did not refer to the presence or absence of anyone. I said he was not prepared to deal with this issue. He was in the House, he was shouting insults all the time, but he was not prepared to talk about the issue. That is the point I was trying to make.

Still, Mr. Speaker, I think I got my message across and I hope the Minister of Transport will show a bit of leadership with respect to this bill, precisely to show Canadian taxpayers that he is careful when he spends their tax dollars.

[English]

All I want—my colleague the member for Hamilton West intends to pursue this issue with me as well as the member for Hamilton Mountain—is some simple taxpayers' justice. We want the taxpayers' money to be respected, and we want to make sure that when the government is moving with a new bill, it puts in place the guidelines, and in particular the audit and the instruments that are necessary to protect the taxpayers of Canada, and protect the integrity of the system.

We would like to see that done through this bill, and in expanded form. In particular, we would like to see an omnibus bill to clean up the mess that currently is characterized by, among other things, the Peter Lush affair and the Hamilton Harbour Commission.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

CROWN CORPORATIONS DISSOLUTION OR TRANSFER AUTHORIZATION ACT

The House resumed from Friday, October 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis that Bill C-73, an act to provide for the dissolution or transfer of certain Crown corporations and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take very much time, but I want to be on record in support of the excellent statements that have been made against the privatization of a number of the corporations on the minister's list and included in this bill.

We have made the case from our point of view that as Toronto members—and I am referring here to speeches made by Toronto members—it does no service to the citizens of Toronto to dissolve the Toronto Harbourfront Corporation. Harbourfront has proven its value, and that goes without saying, but, more than that, it is an important window for the Government of Canada into the city of Toronto.

I know the argument: Why is the federal government taking care of parks? Why isn't that done by the provinces? Why isn't that done by the municipalities? In other words: "Why", the Tories ask, "should the federal government be doing something that other levels of government can do?"

In a minute or two I want to explore that argument because I think it explains why this country is going down the drain. It explains why Canadian people are losing the sense that this country stands for anything. The federal government is searching through its inventory, looking on every shelf and in every cupboard, for things it can get rid of. Whether by deregulation, whether by turning them over to the provinces, whether by shutting them down, whether by giving them to the Americans, one way or another the federal government seems to be determined to go out of business.

Canadians notice that. In various parts of our country people are starting to see their region as being much more important and much more meaningful than the national government. To a point, regional governments are important and regional issues or regional values mean something. However, if the federal government is going to take the attitude that it should turn over and get out of everything that it can based on some ideology, that philosophy taken to its end is going to cost us our country.

The minister responsible for privatization is in the House. I certainly appreciate that, because very often ministers of this government are not here when their bills are being considered in the House. I want to thank him for coming to listen to this debate. I want him also to reconsider the kind of wholesale approach that the government is taking to operations that can be disposed of.

I want to remind him, for example, that university education could be described as a provincial matter. Research and development could be described as something that the federal government should get out of because other levels of government, when we read the BNA Act, may be able to make a larger claim to do it. Medicare is another example of a program that would never have been implemented if a Conservative government with the philosophy of this government had been around. Why should they take it on, they would say, when provincial governments are doing it already?

Mr. McDermid: Who brought in hospitalization?

Mr. Kaplan: I want to give one final example, an example that I have had considerable experience with, and that is the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Here is a national institution, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, not provided for in the BNA Act. Policing is not listed under one of the federal powers. I am worried that, with the approach that this government is taking toward getting out of everything and getting rid of everything, we can see an institution like the Royal Canadian Mounted Police privatized and turned over—

Mr. McDermid: Who tried to take the "Royal" out of it? Pierre Trudeau.

Mr. Kaplan: There is no evidence of that at all. We would be out of business.

What we need is a government that will recognize that if this country is to be held together it has to be held together by human will, by people wanting to do certain things together, by developing an agenda, and by developing shared values. If those shared values and that shared agenda are just cutting up and disposing, turning over to the Americans or the provinces or the private sector or deregulating, if that is the agenda, then this country is going to evaporate. I would like to warn the government that it is set on that course. While I rise to talk about Harbourfront, one small example, it is part of a pattern that is very disturbing and the fulfilment of which can lead to the end of this country.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I want to answer because there were some accusations made in the House last Friday and again today on what is happening at Harbourfront in Toronto.

I want to make it very clear that back in the early seventies, when the federal government got involved in cleaning up the Toronto Harbourfront, it made a commitment at that time that it was going to do that and then return the Harbourfront to the citizens of Toronto. That was the commitment that was made at that time.

The Crombie commission has come forward with a very good report. It was very well received by the city and citizens of Toronto. He is also working on a much broader waterfront review on behalf of the provincial government of province of Ontario.

The Harbourfront claims that have been going around of hon. members of the Liberal Party are factually and totally incorrect. The Harbourfront Corporation provides excellent programming for the city of Toronto and will continue to provide that excellent programming. The parks will be returned to the city of Toronto, a commitment that was not made by our government but was made by the Liberal government in the early seventies. That is exactly what it said it was going to do. That is exactly what this government is doing: assuring that programming is going to continue there, assuring that the parks are going to be for the people of Toronto and attempting to get the buildings that were scheduled to go on the waterfront, off the waterfront.

That is what this is all about. It has absolutely nothing to do with getting rid of Harbourfront, as was mentioned by a number of metro Toronto members on the Liberal side who did not know what they were talking about at the time. They obviously have not read the David Crombie report and its recommendations. They have not seen the subsequent report that came from the provincial government, referred to as the Allen report.

The hon. member, who I know has not read either one, should have taken time to understand exactly what the Government of Canada was doing with Harbourfront. In fact, it is ensuring its longevity in providing excellent programming for the citizens of Toronto. That is what this is all about. He should not be standing here spouting off this nonsense about the privatization of Harbourfront. He should get his facts right before he stands up in this House and makes statements that are totally inaccurate.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the minister has said one thing that I have to tell him I agree with. I have not read the Ontario government's report on the Crombie report, but I have read the Crombie report. I would like to give the minister some news. I do not agree with it. That is why we are standing up opposing a recommendation that the federal government abandon Harbourfront.

I would like to challenge the minister on the commitment which he says he has given to see that programming is maintained at Harbourfront. Where is that commitment given? It is certainly not in the bill. How do we know—

Mr. McDermid: It was just given.

Mr. Kaplan: The minister may feel that statements by ministers are the same thing as appropriations and commitments. I will tell him that they are not. If he were prepared to stand, give that kind of commitment, put it in writing and put it as a legally binding undertaking, I would at least concede to him that he was assuring that the Harbourfront, although it would lose the federal contact that I think is so important, programming itself would continue.

I want to tell the minister something else. When he says that the citizens are so happy to get it back, it happens that I was at city hall in the city of Toronto when it was debated about whether they wanted it back, whether they could afford to take it back. It is a very controversial question. They do not look on this as a gift from the federal government. They look at it as a commitment to come up themselves with $150 million to try to maintain programming to which the minister says he is prepared to make a commitment.

The minister will never persuade me that somehow or other Canada benefits from turning this project over to the city, but he could persuade me that Harbourfront will survive by bringing forward an amendment which only the government can do, because it involves an appropriation of funds, to assure that the new Harbourfront in the hands of the city of Toronto will continue to be supported.

That is a commitment I would be ready to recognize as a real commitment from the Government of Canada. But I can see the minister in ten, five or three years' time when he is back in the private sector, as he surely will be. Let us say it is a commitment of the government. A commitment from a junior minister in the House of Commons is not good enough.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Other questions and comments? The hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, first I congratulate my hon. colleague from York Centre on his excellent speech. I am sure all hon. members will agree that seldom has such wisdom been heard in this House. I want to ask my hon. colleague if he is as worried as I am about this government's attempts and attacks on the instruments of national unity that we have in this country.

I read this bill and I see various institutions being dismantled, the Livestock Feed Board being one of them, and of course we have talked about Harbourfront. I am worried about the privatization of rural post offices in Canada. I am worried about the post office buildings in this country. There used to be the flag of Canada on a government building in rural communities right across the country, and now we see those buildings being sold to the private sector and the flag of Canada being removed. On the logo of Canada Post Corporation the word "Canada" no longer appears. We see "mail", the logo, and "poste".

I am very much worried about that because yes, this country was built with private sector initiative, but with government encouragement as well. We have seen these instruments of national unity that have been dismantled by this government, some of them described in this bill, and the post offices and several others that have been privatized by other bills brought to the attention of this House by the member for Brampton, the minister of selling everything off.

Would my colleague agree that indeed this is very much cause for concern, that this government needs to be reminded that it is a custodian of the property of the taxpayers of Canada and that the property of the taxpayers is not just there for it to sell off as quickly as it can just because it has an ideological bent to do so?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, as you might have expected, I agree with everything that my hon. colleague has said, except the very generous phrase that he awarded to me for my very modest intervention. I feel that he has been very accurately describing the implications of this bill.

I think it is significant and worth noting, because it is always characteristic of this member for Prescott—Glengarry—Russell, that he touched on concerns not only of the city of Toronto and other parts of the country but particularly those, as he always does, that affect so closely his own constituency, an interest that he has tended and taken to heart with such sincerity and such dedication for so long.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-86, an act to amend the Income Tax Act (child tax credit), be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Dave Worthy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs) and Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to speak briefly to the second reading of Bill C-86, which implements important changes to the child tax credit bill.

It is intended to provide further assistance to families with low and modest incomes who have three or more children. The change was announced first by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech in February and is part of our government's continuing effort to ease the situation of those most in need. This important principle is one of the bases of our economic policies. Since the beginning of our term of office, we have acted to assist those Canadians whose situation called for action.

Our reform of the income tax system, for example, was intended, in part, to assist lower-income families. As well, I would point to the important role of the GST tax credit in the reform of the sales tax system. That credit also was to ensure that families with incomes below $30,000 would be better off than before. So under sales tax reform, three-quarters of all families headed by seniors or single parents will have more after-tax income than before. Unfortunately, I have to point out that that is still being held up in the Senate and it may be some time before those children actually receive those dollars. The proposal in Bill C-86 will raise the income ceiling with respect to prepayment of the refundable child tax credit.

In 1988, the law was amended to produce the present arrangement. Under this arrangement, there is prepayment of up to two-thirds of the estimated refundable child tax credit, if the family's income does not exceed two-thirds of the family income ceiling for the credit itself. This situation, however, does not make adequate allowance for those families with three or more children whose incomes fall in a zone between two-thirds of the limit and the income ceiling. The budget proposal made in February and the current bill rectifies that situation. By raising the income ceiling for prepayment to 100 per cent of the family income ceiling for those families with three or more children, the government is recognizing the special needs of such families. This is particularly helpful at the normal time the prepayment is received, for this always comes in the winter season, when families have real need for those dollars.

It is estimated that 70,000 families with an estimated 236,000 children will benefit from this change. After the change is made, some 730,000 families in total will qualify for the prepayment. I should also point out that does not involve an increase in government expenditure, rather it is an increase of approximately $30 million by paying the families earlier than they would otherwise have received the money.

I should also point out that subsequent to the process in the House today, where we expect it will go through all stages and then, of course, it has to receive, and I hope it will receive, speedy assent in the Senate. Then it will require Royal Assent. Subsequent to that the government will make all efforts to get these cheques out as expeditiously as possible. It may require up to two weeks.

I think it is appropriate at this time when there has been such a focus on the children of Canada, especially the children from lower income families, that this House deal with this bill as quickly as possible.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few comments in support of Bill C-86, and I want to first pay tribute to my colleague, the member for Ottawa South who brought this matter today to the government's attention.

Over this past weekend I was in my riding and I received many phone calls from single parents across my riding who were really frightened when they heard that these cheques were not coming up. One young woman, quoted in the Halifax Chronicle Herald said: "Had I known that this was going to happen, I would have made some arrangements over my bills because I had to have some money left for Christmas. Without this child tax credit, I will have no money to give my children any Christmas".

So, Mr. Speaker, it think it particularly relevant—

An hon. member: The GST—

Ms. Clancy: In the unlikely event that the GST will pass—that my colleague from Ottawa South when bringing this forward this afternoon, I think did a great service to those people across the country who are in desperate need of these cheques. To see this coming through today is something that has been long overdue. It should have gone through before, but I guess we can say thank God, it is happening today.

Mrs. Finestone: Better late than never.

Ms. Clancy: Better late than never, as my colleague, the hon. member for Mount Royal has stated.

Mr. Speaker, this will be a great relief—provided we get this through with all possible speed—to parents across Canada, and in particular, single parents, the vast majority of whom are women. So, Mr. Speaker, we certainly support this. We support it going through with all due haste and going through this afternoon.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today in the House to support Bill C-86 and to offer the support of my caucus on this bill.

This bill will allow an estimated 66,000 additional families with a total of 230,000 children to benefit from the advanced payment of the child tax credit. The measure does not involve any increased cost to the government. It simply is a matter of when these families are paid this credit.

The bill must be passed as quickly as possible for several reasons. This was a measure that was promised in the 1990 budget. It was a promise that was affirmed in a letter to thousands of Canadians in September, telling those families to expect prepayment this month and it was reaffirmed by a press release issued by the finance minister on October 11 of this year. The promised date was November. I am pleased that the government listened today. I am pleased that the government listened to my House leader, the hon. member for Kamloops, who made representations to the House leader of the Tory caucus. I am pleased that the government listened to my statement today in members' statements and have moved to expedite Bill C-86.

The purpose of prepayment is to allow poor families to receive money when it is most needed, not only to celebrate the holidays but also to buy very necessary warm clothing and footwear for their children.

Many of those who received word in September that they would be getting this prepayment in November have already made plans for this money. Newspapers and television programs across the country have been documenting stories over the weekend of families that were very, very concerned when it appeared that the government was not moving forward on this issue. We have heard through the media from a number of Canadians just how this impacted on them personally.

There was the story of a mother of five in Ontario who earns a paltry $19,000 a year. Her quote was that she wants "the politicians to get off their butts and do something". Well, I am really pleased that we are doing that here today.

There is a woman in Lower Sackville, Nova Scotia. She claimed that the credit was meant to be Christmas for her kids. As a single mother of three she was very angry when it appeared that it was not going to be moved on. Again, I would like to pay credit to my House leader, the hon. member for Kamloops who urged the government to act. I am pleased the government listened today and we were able to force the government to move on this bill.

We hope that these families will receive their cheques this month, otherwise these families that I speak of and countless other families across Canada will be forced to spend their Christmas season in desolation and also will be unable to supply their children with the very necessary warm winter clothing that children in our country need.

I sincerely hope that Canadians will receive this in the next month. This bill is a small step in alleviating the poverty of children in our country. It simply means that payment of the child tax credit will be paid before Christmas instead of in the spring.

We know that child poverty is the national shame of Canada. Statistics talk about the poverty of children in this country. Nine hundred and thirteen thousand children under the age of 16, one in six Canadian children, live below the poverty line. Of these children, 55 per cent are from two-parent families, 39 per cent are children in one-parent families headed by a woman. Sixty-four point five per cent of children who are being raised by a single mother are poor. Also, 28.4 per cent of children in families headed by a single father are living in poverty. Half of all of the poor children in Canada live in families where the head of the family works full-time or part-time. Fifty-one per cent of native children live below the poverty line in this country. That is a shocking statistic.

In 1986, 49,000 children were in the care of the child welfare systems in Canada. According to agencies in various communities between 54 per cent and 75 per cent of these children come from low-income families. About 40 per cent of children and youth in the care of the child welfare system have experienced abuse or neglect. Numerous studies have established that link, that correlation, between adverse economic conditions and child abuse.

According to a 1980 report, native children accounted for more than 20 per cent of the children in substitute care in Canada, although they represent only 2 per cent of Canada's children. Forty per cent of the users of the food banks are children. Twenty per cent of those food bank recipients are under the age of five years.

Although there are 625 McDonald's restaurants in Canada, there are 1,100 food banks and soup kitchens in this country. In my province of British Columbia, over 20 per cent of the children in that province are living below the poverty line.

I will just conclude with a couple of comments. There is a difference in the threshold that was announced in the budget, the cut-off for the families that will receive this aid. In the budget it was set at one level, but now, when it comes before the House in Bill C-86, the threshold is at a lower level, and I wonder why that happened.

For the first time I believe the government is recognizing the needs of larger families with low incomes and has developed a policy to assist them with the tax system. As I said earlier, it will not cost the government any money. It just means that these families will get the money during the season when it is most needed by them.

I want to thank the government and the Official Opposition for moving together. I think this is an example of how the House can co-operate on very needed legislation and I am pleased to take part in that today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. DeBlois in the chair.

On Clause 1

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I only have one question, of course, providing that the answer will be to the satisfaction of the opposition.

Perhaps the parliamentary secretary can consult with the officials and confirm that under no situation, with the passage of this bill, and in the unlikely event that the GST is adopted, will anyone making this salary or less be the loser under the GST? In other words, can the parliamentary secretary tell us if the amount of the child tax credit will suffice so that no one loses money after the GST within the tax bracket mentioned in the bill?

Mr. Worthy: Mr. Chairman, I may need to get some clarification, but my understanding of what the hon. member is asking is two separate things. We have the goods and services tax with the rebates that come from that and now we have the child tax credit. This bill deals strictly with families with three or more children and whose income is equal to or less than the amount of $24,000 and some.

These are two separate issues. One is the goods and services tax which we could go into, but I think it would be inappropriate.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I am aware that the rebate of one is included in the other legislation. It is clearly insufficient. The Canadian National Council on Welfare and many others have already indicated to us that the rebate available under the GST is insufficient to cover the losses that poor families will suffer.

I am asking the parliamentary secretary about the losses that families will incur—and we all know they are there—as various groups, including the National Council on Welfare, have indicated there will be. Now we have this additional tax credit. Even with the combination of these two things, the tax credit plus the rebate under the GST, there will still be large numbers of people who will be financial losers under the GST, particularly at the lower tax bracket. Will he confirm to us that this is so?

Mr. Worthy: Mr. Chairman, obviously I cannot confirm that. In fact, I would very much like it if we had time to go into a very healthy debate about just exactly the opposite premise.

All indications that the government has had is that people, especially in the income area of $24,000 and under, will benefit from the GST. There are some families, depending on their spending patterns, who could be exceptions. No one can tell exactly how people will spend their money, but all the studies to which I or the government have had access would indicate it is actually the opposite and contrary to what the hon. member has indicated. The families with children in the situation which we are discussing in this bill will, in fact, be better off under GST than they are.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Any further comments?

Some hon. members: No.

Hon. Doug Lewis (for Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-86, an act to amend the Income Tax Act (Child Tax Credit) be concurred in.

Mr. Boudria: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We do want to co-operate, but I do hope that perhaps the person seconding the bill at report stage would be present in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-86, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act (child tax credit), be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

[English]

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly delighted to speak during third reading of this bill, an act to amend the Income Tax Act (child tax credit).

It is most appropriate that I speak because only yesterday in my constituency I heard of a family that was definitely in need of this type of credit.

I was worried why it took such a long time, since it was first announced in February, to table the motion on October 11. Be that as it may, I am still pleased that the amendment has come. Now we can see the passage of this bill.

I certainly support the amendment applicable to 1990 and subsequent years which, for families having three or more children eligible for the prepayment of the credit, will increase the pre-limit income ceiling from two-thirds of the family income ceiling for the credit itself to 100 per cent of that amount.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, I thank you, and I think a lot of poor families will thank the House of Commons.

Mr. Dave Worthy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs) and Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a few words.

I think all the children in Canada who are going to benefit from this bill would wish me to thank all members of the House who have made it possible to put this through in such quick order today. I do hope that it will see speedy passage through the Senate and that the children and their families who will benefit will do so well before Christmas when they can, in fact, see the benefits of these dollars.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, in light of the very substantial progress that has been made today—three government bills have received second reading and another has been passed through all stages—could the government House leader perhaps advise us what the business will be tomorrow? We have completed almost everything he announced for tomorrow. Could he inform us what it is we are going to debate in the House tomorrow?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to call tomorrow the bill dealing with Trust and Loan Companies Act. It is Bill C-83. That will be for tomorrow morning.

Tomorrow afternoon, perhaps we could deal with Bill C-85 or Bill C-40.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in November, 1985 the Conservative government promised farmers across the country and people in all rural communities that we would have a permanent agricultural policy. That was some five years ago. It is now 1990, almost 1991, and we are still waiting for that permanent program.

Last December, the present Minister of Agriculture established a number of task forces to review the agricultural situation that would suggest directions in policy. Those task forces have been meeting. There have been reports that have been filed, and the minister had promised that legislation would be in place for the 1991–1992 crop year. As of today, however, there has not been a bill presented or placed before this House. There are all sorts of housekeeping bills that have been coming before the House. This very important legislation, which requires strong debate and an in-depth view, has not been presented before this House.

The government has in the past bragged that it has spent billions and billions on agriculture, and that is true. Those billions that it has spent over the last few years have not been an investment that has been in the best interest of farmers. This money has not been in the best interest of urban dwellers and of taxpayers. We still have, despite the money that has been put into agriculture, people who are leaving the farm every year. Bankruptcies have increased considerably. We have a problem in rural Canada. In Saskatchewan, in 1985, when the government first promised to introduce legislation, we had over 65,000 farmers. We are now below 60,000. We are losing over 1,000 farmers a year in Saskatchewan alone.

The problem is serious and the situation is desperate. Throughout rural Canada, communities are suffering, jobs are being lost and businesses are closing because the agricultural economic base is disappearing. For a long time communities have been shrinking. Now they are starting to collapse. Since World War II, successive Liberal and Conservative federal governments have failed to pay attention to this most important issue, an issue which affects the largest portion of this country. It is the future and welfare of rural Canadians.

The question I am asking is very simple and straightforward. When is this government going to introduce legislation to deal with the agricultural crisis in this country? It has promised legislation but it has not introduced it. In western Canada, we have had one of the best crops in decades. Some farmers tell me it is the best crop they have ever had. They have grain on the ground but they cannot sell it. The prices are extremely low if they do sell it.

The government has promised legislation. When bills are introduced in this House, it is going to require that they be analysed and debated. I hope the government is not planning to introduce legislation next spring and then tell the opposition to pass it right away. That would certainly be unfair. That happened with the cash advance payments. It was introduced in September and the government said it was the New Democrats who were holding up the legislation and if this bill could pass, farmers could get payment. That is extremely unfair and undemocratic. This issue is too important for that sort of attitude.

I ask the government this: When will we be receiving some legislation in front of this House and what will be the objectives of this legislation? Is it to help farming families survive? Is it to help agri-business? Is it to help the Cargills of this world? When will we get legislation and what will be the objective of this legislation when we get it?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly true that the farmers are faced with an ironic situation because of the near record crop that has been produced in all parts of Canada. Prices have plunged as world supplies have been there, distorting the export subsidy and distorting our prices very much.

There is one thing I have to say. When farmers called on this government to help, the government was there to help them. It did answer that call.

Earlier this year, on October 13, the Minister of Agriculture announced a one year program of the reintroduction of the interest free cash advances on undelivered grain. That is going to help many producers.

That provides $50,000 interest free, plus, if they require further dollars than that and qualify for it, they are able to get additional dollars to help their cash flow.

Even that amount is going to greatly enhance the cash flow of many of our farmers. It is going to provide for this program upwards of $1.4 billion to be advanced interest free, which is a total cost of about $95 million. Of course, we all know how those programs are going to be administered through the various groups, whether they be in western Canada or in other parts of the provinces where we do not have the Western Grain Stabilization Board and so on.

Mr. Speaker, the programs that we are working on are co-operative programs worked out by the federal government, provincial governments and the producers of those commodities. Many of those commodities are having a desperate time surviving today.

That is the only way that we can provide the long term solutions that are required. We cannot come in with ad hoc programs. We have tried that. We know that the 1980s have been very different from other years because of the situation changing throughout the world with the United States and European Community paying massive export subsidies that have damaged our markets. It lowered the world grain price and it has made it very difficult for us to compete against the treasuries of those other countries, as well as for our farmers competing against other farmers who are producing food for the world.

The first program that we hope to have in place is the grains and oilseeds safety nets. We have a committee of farmers and various officials working on a program. We know the ministers of agriculture are meeting later this month. We know it is going to take the co-operation of the provincial governments, along with the federal government, and the producers to come up with the long term solution to what we have today. Governments do not have the answer to all of these things, but by working together we know that will happen. We believe that will give us a long term viability and the security that is necessary.

I want to say again that the practices of the United States and the European Community have hurt our farmers tremendously because of the drastic fall in international grain prices. The only way we can combat this is to work through GATT for a reduction of those world subsidies where we can compete fairly.

Our farmers are the best in the world. They have a quality product and it will compete for quality, but you just cannot compete with the treasuries of these countries.

We believe that by working through GATT, along with the safety net and various other programs that we hope to have in place for the 1991 crop, will be the answer to a lot of our problems.

MONETARY POLICY

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today in connection with a question I asked the Minister of National Revenue on September 26 of this year concerning the proposed goods and services tax. In fact, it had to do with asking the minister whether he had instructed businesses to begin advance collection of the GST.

I am delighted to have the opportunity to expand on the question and perhaps hear the parliamentary secretary's response.

First, may I say that in answer to my question, the hon. minister began with what he thought was a put-down, when he said and I quote:

> If the hon. member would welcome the invitation that I gave him for a briefing, I would be very happy to let him know the rules of C-62.

I would like to begin by saying that virtually at the moment that I was appointed the official opposition critic for revenue by our leader, I contacted the department and asked for an opportunity to have a briefing.

The members of the department took some time in order to get themselves together so that they could all be present at the briefing they intended to give me. I was ready, willing and able to attend at any time. It was due to the inability of the departments to get all the department heads together quickly that we were unable to have a briefing at the time that I put this question forward.

I want to make it quite clear that I at all times was very happy to accept the invitation of the minister, and that he knew, or should have known, that the delay in the briefing was due to the fact that his departmental officials could not get together. May I say in passing that the briefing was excellent and that I thanked his officials for the briefing.

To the specific question, what prompted the question was a call from a constituent, Charles Angus, who lives on Clapperton Avenue in my riding. He had received an invoice from the T. Eaton Co. The invoice is dated July 31 of this year. Enclosed in it is the following statement and I quote: "Dear Customer: The federal government has defined extended warranty policies as a taxable GST service". Here is the important part: "As of September 1, 1990, regulations require that we collect this 7 per cent tax on that portion of your policy that is in effect in 1991". There is an invoice and on the invoice, which is dated July 31, there is a charge of $3.26 for the GST.

This legislation has not even passed the Senate. In July of this year, there was no possibility that the GST was law. There were no regulations which indicated that Eaton's would have to collect this money. Yet the customer was billed and requested to pay the GST.

I did have the opportunity to review Hansard for October 30 when the hon. parliamentary secretary answered a question from my colleague, the member for Dartmouth, and purported to answer my question at the same time. He brought to light that on August 9 of this year the minister had sent out a press release advising businesses of certain things. It is very interesting what was advised. The release stated that businesses supplying goods and services to be delivered after 1990 will be accountable effective January 1, 1991, for the proposed 7 per cent GST on advance payments made between September 1, 1990, and January 1, 1991. What the heck does that mean?

Obviously to Eaton's it meant that they had better start charging and collecting the GST effective September 1. Was Eaton's alone? Of course it was not alone because on August 14 the Canadian Bar Association, of which I am proud to be a member, sent me an invoice. That was five days after this marvellous press release sent out by the department. That invoice, August 14 mind you, asks me to pay $13.65 in GST.

Of course, I have not paid it. I have paid my dues but not the GST because, as we know from the minister, there is absolutely no legal requirement for me to pay the GST. Does that help the consumer? Does that help the Canadian populace? I do not know.

I am also a member of the Canadian Automobile Association. We have heard how frequently it has been stated that the GST is such a visible tax, so I looked up the definition of "visible" in the Oxford English Dictionary. It says: 'that can be seen by the eye; within the range of wave lengths to which the eye is sensitive; that can be perceived or ascertained; apparent or open". I am looking at my invoice from the Canadian Automobile Association. They want $81.25 for my membership dues which includes the GST, but there is nothing on this invoice that tells me how much of that $81.25 is GST, although they clearly say that part of it is. So much for visible.

What are businesses doing? They are caught between a rock and a hard place. If they do not collect the tax, they are going to be liable for it anyway. If they do collect the tax, they are doing something that is in effect illegal because there is nothing upon which to base the collection. This was vividly demonstrated last Friday when some elderly constituents of mine called to say that they had attempted to make funeral arrangements for themselves. The funeral home had stated that they would have to prepay the GST. When the constituent refused, the funeral home said: "Very well, no contract. We will not sell you the prepaid services unless you pay the GST". He said: "Fine, I will pay the GST but if it does not pass, give me a refund". They said: "We will give you a refund". He said: "Of course, you will give us interest" and they said: "Not necessarily". We were not talking about a small amount of money because the prepaid GST on that amount was $1,300.

The point of my remarks is that this government, through that ambiguous press release of August 9, 1990 and through its policy of washing its hands of disputes between consumers and business, has set business against consumers because the consumer cannot win against the T. Eaton Company or cannot win against the business that will not give services if the GST is not prepaid.

The question simply was: Why has the government washed its hands and set the consumer adrift?

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I realize that, as the hon. member said at the beginning of his question, he read what I said on October 30, when I was answering another question. At the time, I mentioned that my detailed response would interest both the hon. member for Dartmouth and the hon. member for Scarborough. I think the hon. member for Dartmouth, considering his gesture at the end of my speech, seemed quite satisfied with my explanation.

The problems the hon. member mentioned are ones that I have experienced personally, and I did not relish the experience!

However, I would like to say to the hon. member that even if his party is against the GST, the real problem today, and he knows this as well as I do, is the other place. We hope all these problems will be dealt with, otherwise we will have our own problems with respect to our own spending in our day-to-day lives. As my wife told me not long ago, we just paid for our alarm system. The cost is spread over a period from September 1990 to September 1991, and not only were we charged the tax before 1991, but we were charged for 12 months, although the tax will not be in effect until January 1991, if then.

The problem we have today, although we tried not to get involved in any more of that unfortunately with everthing that is happening, there is a real problem.

[English]

I would like to say to my hon. colleague that he can always read what I said. I will repeat it for the people who are listening. I would like to have on record again that the collection of GST for transactions straddling the transition date is strictly voluntary. Both have to agree, the consumer and the business involved.

This is what I did with all my people. We came to an agreement. Sometimes I got myself mad at my friend who charged me for 12 months of alarm service when he should charge me for 8 months. It is eight-twelfths of the invoice.

At the beginning it is a problem, but I think with the good faith of two persons an arrangement can always be negotiated. They must know that this is only on a voluntary basis. No one should charge. It is very clear.

I want my hon. colleague to read exactly what I said, as reported at pages 14918 and 14919 of Hansard for October 30. I presume that he and his colleague were asking for the same answers.

Even, to go through it briefly, I know that sometimes the consumer and the person in business were not present at the meetings. I know they did not always understand, but I do not blame them. It is new. I said to my people that it was new and that they would get used to it.

In the meantime, let us hope that the other chamber will make it easy for everyone.

TRADE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, on October 19, I asked two questions in the House with regard to the economy of eastern Ontario.

One of the questions dealt squarely with the plight of the town of Renfrew which has lost a total of 1,667 jobs, a total of eight industries, and a reduction in others in the last couple of years. One of them goes back even beyond that, but it has been a constant ever since Mitel closed. The Government of Canada allowed the sale of Mitel to a British firm. It allowed that business to buy 51 per cent of the Canadian company, and it closed down the firm with 550 employees. Since then others have followed.

I was particularly concerned with the answer that the Minister for Science gave me that day; he was standing in for the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology. He as much as said that I should be out looking for industry instead of asking questions in the House.

Over the past year or longer I have been working with the mayor of Renfrew, with the council, and with the industrial commission. I have had meetings with government departments in Ottawa, with many people, and with industries that we invited in to join us. I have been to Queen's Park in Toronto and met there. I have been south of the border to meet with people and I have travelled around this country.

I want to say to the minister for science that he had better give a more intelligent answer than that. He had better do his homework before he insults a member of this House who is doing his homework. I sometimes wonder why he was a president of a university when he stands in the House and acts the way he does.

Last summer, the hon. member for Stormont—Dundas, the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, and myself raised these issues of eastern Ontario. We held a news conference in which we provided accurate figures. However, for some strange reason the Minister of Supply and Services, who is supposed to be the fighter for eastern Ontario, stood and said afterward: "Well, the Liberal members have blown the economic situation in eastern Ontario out of proportion". Then he accused the Liberals of manufacturing figures.

I have the figures right here that we used in that press conference last summer. Do you know where they come from, Mr. Speaker? They come from his own government's Department of Employment and Immigration.

The minister went on to say: "They are not adding up the pluses". You bet we are. Down in the right-hand column of this report from the employment office in our area are the minuses of jobs that were lost and the pluses of those that were created. The bottom line adds up to 1,667 in the town of Renfrew alone. Surely that deserves more than a smart aleck answer from a minister on the benches opposite.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, I am not one to be up in the House shouting and screaming about things all the time. Things have to be pretty bad before I do. I do my homework before I get up, and I expect others to do theirs.

The other question I raised was on the forest industry, particularly in Ontario. It is really being hurt by the 15 per cent export tax, high interest rates, and the artificially high Canadian dollar.

I have talked to people all summer long, last spring, and this fall. It is sad what is happening out there. The bank realizes that the forest industry is weak, so what does it do? The banks and the trust companies throw their demand for the repayment of their loans on the desks. People are selling $80,000 pieces of equipment for $40,000 in order to get the bank off their back. They are selling $40,000 worth of equipment for $20,000.

If this keeps up the forest industry in this country is going to be absolutely devastated. It is time the government considered some kind of moratorium to protect our small business and sectors of industry in this country if we are ever to have anything left after this recession is over.

The Minister for International Trade promised us he was going to introduce an adjustment assistance program in this House in order to help those who were hurt by free trade.

The government will argue that the forest industry was not hurt by free trade, that it was not mentioned in there. However, the forest industry in this country knows that they were the scapegoats of the free trade signing between the United States and Canada. It was Pat Carney, then Minister for International Trade, who signed to allow the Americans to charge a 15 per cent duty or tax on Canadian softwood lumber going into the United States.

Eventually the government decided to collect it itself, against our own softwood lumber people. Then the American banks lent money to their own industries, and along the northern part of the United States they built up their mills. They have a better product now than they had before and can compete better with us. Our own people are hurting badly as a result of this policy.

The lumber industry in this country feels that it was the scapegoat in order for this government to get its free trade agreement. Pat Carney, the Minister for International Trade at the time, has since been rewarded with an appointment to the Senate. Mr. Speaker, you can understand why I was really angry about this whole matter.

I am just going to put one more quote on record and then I will be finished. It is from Sinclair Stevens and deals with the negotiations which went on with regard to Mitel plant in Renfrew when it was about to be sold to a British firm. He had this to say as a reply in this House:

> I pointed out, and will point out once again for the Hon. Member, that Mitel was in difficult financial straits. The Hon. Member cannot have it both ways. This company has offered to put into Mitel over $300 million of fresh equity, which will at least ensure that 2,500 Canadian jobs, and 5,000, including international jobs will be preserved. I am on the side of the workers of Mitel, and I think it is time that the Hon. Member got on the side of the workers of Mitel as well.

That came from the benches of this government. Today we do not have a single employee left out of 550 in that plant. In fact, Archives Canada has taken it over for a storage place, a brand new plant that cost $30 million.

I am calling on the government to bring forward an economic plan for eastern Ontario. We are absolutely serious about this matter. We are absolutely honest about doing it, because something has to be done to protect those people out there whose lives are really being destroyed economically.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend will not mind my doing this, but I would like to acknowledge first three very important visitors from Alberta who are visiting Ottawa this week: Mr. Al Bray, Superintendent of the Alberta Treasury branches, Mr. Chip Collins, Special Adviser to the Alberta Treasurer and Special Adviser to the Superintendent of the Alberta Treasury branches, and Mr. Vic Neufeld, Chief Inspector of the Alberta Treasury branches, who are down here visiting our fair city from our fair province of Alberta.

I would like to reply to my hon. friend. I recognize—and he should also recognize it—that with the free trade agreement restructuring of the Canadian economy is taking place. There are going to be some disruptions because of this restructuring. He should know also that we cannot continue, as we tried to do in the past, to surround Canada with an artificial border, because we are going global in trade and there is going to be some restructuring. He should understand that.

The other thing I would like to remind him about is that above all I and members of Parliament particularly from western Canada would understand very clearly the kind of thing he is talking about in terms of unemployment. The National Energy Program was brought in and the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax imposed on the province of Alberta and the other western provinces by that government allowed interest rates to go up to over 22 per cent or 24 per cent. Believe me, I understand, as do members of Parliament and the people of western Canada, what can happen, not because of a restructuring and allowing a free economy to go but when we saw the kinds of things that happened with the National Energy Program which wreaked havoc on the provinces and put a lot of people out of work. We remember this very clearly.

I want to get into the memorandum of understanding on softwood lumber. This was done, with the support of the vast majority of producing provinces, to avoid the imposition by the United States of a countervailing duty and keep funds that may have been transferred to the U.S. and Canada. When the government negotiated the memorandum of understanding, this government never intended it to be a permanent measures and the Americans were so notified of this fact.

Since signing the memorandum of understanding in December, 1986, we have negotiated an exemption from the export charged for the Atlantic provinces. As a result of negotiations following the implementation of replacement measures by British Columbia, that province is no longer subject to the charge. British Columbia accounts for over 60 per cent of production and over 70 per cent of exports of softwood lumber to the U.S.

I am also pleased to note that as a result of negotiations completed last week between the Government of Canada and the United States, in which the province of Quebec participated, we were successful in lowering the rate payable on exports of softwood lumber from Quebec to 6.2 per cent as of November 1, 1990. The rate before November 1 had been 8 per cent as a result of earlier negotiations that had lowered the rate from 15 per cent. The current 6.2 per cent export charge will be further reduced to 3.1 per cent on November 1, 1991 and from November 1, 1992 to October 31, 1994 the export charge will be 3 per cent.

Accordingly, less than 25 per cent of softwood lumber exports from Canada are currently subject to an export charge.

We are, however, aware of the difficult times facing the Canadian forest industry as a result of a number of factors including: the availability of quality timber, changed economic conditions such as the slowing housing market and the increased value of the Canadian dollar, as well as the export charge on softwood lumber. As a result of the changing economic circumstances, federal officials have been working with their provincial counterparts and industry representatives in developing and examining our options with regard to the MOU.

The importance of provincial consultations cannot be over-stated. While there is no question that the federal government is responsible for trade policy, the management of the forest is a provincial responsibility. Any actions that Canada takes with regard to the MOU must be developed in full consultation with the provinces and with industry.

The Minister for International Trade has discussed this issue with provincial trade ministers and our options and strategy will continue to be discussed. The views of all provinces will be considered before any action is taken. Achieving a strong federal-provincial-industry consensus on the issue is critical.

In summary, we are examining our options, doing our homework, and consulting with industry and the provinces. The government is committed to seeking a permanent solution to this long standing trade irritant and will do so when a consensus for action is reached between all stake holders.

PRIVILEGE

DISTURBANCE IN GALLERY—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: During Question Period on Wednesday, October 17, there was a demonstration in the gallery which occasioned a number of heated exchanges. The Chair undertook to consider carefully what had been said and to come back to the House and report if it were appropriate to do so.

On the following day, Thursday, October 18, the hon. member for Peace River, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Leader of the Government in the House of Commons, rose on a question of privilege, in his own words:

> —specifically to argue that certain members of the New Democratic Party participated in an action which demonstrated a clear contempt against yourself personally and this House generally.

The hon. parliamentary secretary then proceeded to charge that since the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair knew of the demonstration, and did nothing to stop it, he was in fact an accessory to the contempt. He laid several items before the House and indicated that should the Chair conclude that this matter should be accorded privilege treatment, he was prepared to move the following motion:

> That the entire matter of the demonstration held in the public gallery on Wednesday, October 17, 1990, during Question Period, and the prima facie evidence that the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair had prior knowledge of this demonstration be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

[Translation]

The Chair has had the opportunity to reflect at some length on this matter and has found it convenient to organize its thoughts about three aspects of the matter. First, the disturbance itself is a prime concern and it is one which the Chair should like to pursue a little later on in these remarks, in order to focus initially on the more immediate concerns of whether there was involvement by a member or members of this House in the perpetration of this unacceptable demonstration and if so whether the conduct of an honourable member may be brought into question by means of a question privilege.

[English]

At the outset the Chair would like to make it very clear what is to be decided here. In ruling on a question of privilege the Chair does not ultimately decide upon the matter. The Chair can only decide whether, on the basis of the material presented to the House, it appears likely that there has been a breach of privilege, which is so grievous that we set aside all other business before this House to consider the alleged breach. To be more specific, in this particular instance, the Chair must be satisfied that from the evidence presented it is reasonable to conclude that the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair had in some way participated in or aided in some manner the offensive demonstration.

The hon. parliamentary secretary has presented to this House what he described as prima facie evidence. There were, I believe, five pieces of such evidence. Perhaps it would be advantageous to consider what prima facie evidence is. Black's Law Dictionary, Fifth Edition, at page 1071 defines prima facie evidence as "evidence which suffices for the proof of a particular fact until contradicted and overcome by other evidence". Although the sufficiency of the evidence put forward was the subject of some comment during our discussion of the question of privilege, it does not appear necessary to delve further into that aspect because in any event it has been denied or explained or challenged and the Chair is of the opinion that those denials and explanations outweigh the evidence submitted which is largely circumstantial.

Speaker's Ruling

There is a time honoured tradition in this place that we accept an hon. member's word.

• (1110)

The hon. member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte in his intervention in this discussion described that tradition of accepting an hon. member's word "as primary and essential to the functioning of this place" and cautioned that "if we depart from that we will be in very great difficulty in this place". The Chair is indebted to the hon. member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte for that turn of phrase and for the reasoning developed in his intervention.

In response to the parliamentary secretary's accusation that he had prior knowledge of the demonstration, the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair categorically denied that he or any member of his caucus was informed or was aware of it. He was supported in this by several members of his caucus. Even were he not, even were he to have stood alone, we in the House are bound to accept the hon. member's word—such is the nature of our institution that a member's word is paramount—and we lose sight of that at our peril.

To my mind, this aspect of the affair was concluded with the denial of the accusation by the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair. Accordingly, I cannot find that there is any question of privilege which should be put to the House in respect of that matter.

Accordingly, it would not be appropriate to allow the parliamentary secretary to put to the House, as a privileged motion, that portion of his proposed motion that relates to the prior knowledge of the demonstration.

[Translation]

I should like now to turn to the demonstration itself and to a consideration of the propriety of raising that matter as a question of privilege. As I said last Thursday I listened with some comfort to representations from some members regarding the respect which we need to have for this place and which other people ought to have for it. I am pleased to accede to the suggestion of the hon. member for Saint-Denis that the Chair, at an appropriate time, remind us of what this House is all about and reinforce the seriousness of the disturbance which took place in our galleries. The hon. member for Saint-Denis, a devotee of parliamentary tradition, has a well-developed sense of the House and its changing moods and tenors and I sincerely welcome his well-considered advice.

[English]

I also understand and share the fear expressed by the hon. Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House that the disturbance in our galleries might be seen as a legitimate form of political dissent and is an indication of the disrespect in which the perpetrators held this institution. Those who would safeguard their rights must be ever vigilant to insidious encroachments thereupon.

In the past, the House has usually chosen to ignore those who offended its dignity by interrupting proceedings because it was reluctant to inadvertently advertise their causes. Maingot, in Parliamentary Privilege in Canada notes at page 203:

> All kinds of misconduct in the presence of the House or of a committee may be treated as contempts on the ground that they part-take of an affront of the dignity of the House—
> Misconduct or misbehaviour in the traditional sense would include acts that disrupt or have a tendency to disrupt or interrupt the House or committees by such acts as shouting, throwing objects, waving placards—Many instances have occurred where disorderly conduct has taken place, even to the extent of temporarily suspending the House, but the general position of the House is that the dignity of the House would be best served by taking no action in such cases—The House is reluctant to take action against those attempting to disrupt the proceedings in this way because of the attendant publicity it would provide them.

Perhaps the time has come to re-examine our practice in this regard. If so, that is for the House to decide. What the Chair must decide at this point is whether the motion put forward by the hon. parliamentary secretary, now stripped as it is of any reference to prior knowledge of the demonstration, is to be accorded privileged treatment.

Were I to decide that the question should be put to the House immediately, then the hon. parliamentary secretary would be invited to put his revised motion referring the matter of the demonstration in the galleries to the privileges and elections committee. The motion could then be debated, amended, and voted upon. Depending on the outcome of that process, it might then be considered by a committee and reappear before the House if and when the committee reported.

If the Chair appears to belabour the point, it is simply to insist upon the potential complexity and length of the process initiated by the characterization of a question of privilege as prima facie.

[English]

The Chair states clearly that it would have very little difficulty in characterizing the revised motion as privileged, yet the Chair is reluctant to unleash the consequences of that decision. At this stage I wonder if I could prevail upon the hon. parliamentary secretary to consider, in view of the deletion of part of the proposed motion, whether he wishes to proceed with this matter as a privileged item at this time.

I would ask the hon. parliamentary secretary if he would help the Chair in that regard.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I have no problem at all in accepting the ruling that you have made today or the word of the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair. It also would be my intention, as I understand it, to go ahead with the amended motion. I do not have a problem with that, if I am sure I have the right words.

Mr. Speaker: I take it the hon. parliamentary secretary has accepted completely the words of the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair, and that is the hon. parliamentary secretary's declaration to this House. The hon. parliamentary secretary wishes to move the motion.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons) moved:

> That the entire matter of the demonstration held in the public gallery on Wednesday, October 17, 1990, during Question Period be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is there agreement?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that at last a judgment has been rendered by the Chair on this matter which has, according to your opinion, dissolved itself into a question of the behaviour of students, the appropriateness or otherwise of student demonstration, and a peculiar motion to send the question of student demonstrations to the committee on privileges.

This is a matter that will require considerable reflection on my part to understand, in view of the statements and actions which precipitated it.

What we have with respect to this member is a decision that says that a member is to be taken at his word in the context of an allegation of contempt against this House that is based upon the unretracted deliberate statements of a member which brought forth contrived evidence to this House, and yet the only judgment is whether or not I am to have my word accepted.

It seems to me in the circumstances that we should review the nature of such charges in the mother Parliament where, if a member brings a charge of contempt against another member and which charge fails, that member is open to charges of contempt of the House himself. I would suggest to you, Sir, that the member who brought the charges to the House in the first place was far more in contempt of the House than were the students or his confreres who behaved in an atrocious way subsequent to that student demonstration.

Mr. Thacker: Nonsense.

Mr. McCurdy: The member brought a charge that was completely unsubstantiated; charges that were unsubstantiated according to his own—

An hon. member: He should retract them.

Ms. Mitchell: He hasn't apologized.

Mr. Speaker: Just a moment. The hon. member may well have another occasion to continue this debate, but just so that all hon. members understand it and so that the public that is watching understands it, the hon. parliamentary secretary made certain accusations on a question of privilege. I have found, on the basis of the absolute denial of those charges by the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair, that there is no prima facie case to put to the House.

If the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair wishes to debate this further at some other place, he of course can find his appropriate forum to do so. Perhaps he will want to discuss it at the committee.

The hon. parliamentary secretary has said that he accepts completely the word of the hon. member. He has accepted completely, as he has said, my ruling.

The hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair seems to indicate that what took place with these students is not as important as an argument that he may be having with the hon. parliamentary secretary. He can have the argument with the parliamentary secretary, but I have to tell you as your Speaker that I take very seriously these demonstrations in this place. Apart from anything else, I am in charge of the security of this entire place. While that has not been raised in the argument, I am intensely conscious of it.

The other thing I am intensely conscious of is this. It is all very well for members of the public these days to say that they have no respect for politicians. They may not have respect for some politicians, but if this country loses respect for this institution, I would like to know what it wants to substitute it with.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may want to raise this matter in another way, but for now the matter is concluded. The motion stripped of the allegation against the hon. member—and properly stripped of the allegation against the hon. member—has now been accepted by the House. If the hon. member wants to raise it at another time of course we will hear him.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, we have all listened to your thoughtful words and of course accept your decision, but I think there is something else that we have to deal with before we proceed. We are most anxious to examine the whole matter of demonstrations and what that does to the reputation of this House. That has been dealt with appropriately, Mr. Speaker, upon your recommendation.

I look now, through you, Mr. Speaker, to my hon. friend, the parliamentary secretary who made some very serious charges against the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair. When you, Sir, indicated that you found no prima facie case of privilege, the parliamentary secretary said that he had no problem with your decision. Those were his words. He had no problem with your decision. I assume that that means he accepts the decision.

However, I appeal to my hon. friend in the best interest of this institution. In that a member's word is paramount and having made those very serious charges against my colleague, I would ask my friend, the parliamentary secretary, to stand now and do what would be expected of the hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I am in a bit of a difficult spot. I am in this spot simply—

Ms. Mitchell: You've got yourself into this.

Mr. Cooper: Perhaps members would hear me out and let me explain what I mean by being in a difficult spot. I have said very clearly that I do accept the Speaker's ruling. I think it is a wise ruling.

Second, I do accept the word of the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair. Now I have a difficulty. I listened very carefully to the Speaker's ruling. I do not have the "blues" of that ruling so I am going from memory. The Speaker spoke of what prima facie evidence is. Prima facie evidence is evidence that is put forward which is believed to be true until circumstances prove it otherwise.

When I rose in the House, I rose on a case of privilege based on evidence which I believed to be prima facie. Since that time events have taken place that have been reflected in the Speaker's ruling which I accept totally and completely, including the words of the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair. It is difficult for me to apologize for a statement I made in the House when I believed those statements to be true and then to deny them. That is the problem I have, and I cannot deny those statements that I made at the time.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this matter. We have important work to get to, but I regret that my hon. friend has chosen this particular course of action. He knows now, upon reflection and the very learned decision you have brought to the Chamber, that his charges and accusations were false. He acknowledges that fact.

I certainly think that this would be an appropriate place for the hon. member to withdraw those remarks and apologize to my hon. colleague from Windsor—St. Clair, in the best interests of this institution. After all, we have to work together. We want to work together. However, when those charges still lie in the air in spite of your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I think it is most unfortunate for the future operations of this great institution.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, you chose to take my comparison between the behaviour of the students and the hon. member as if it were a defence of an abuse of the House of Commons. In reviewing the history of this whole terrible incident, this is not a singular departure from the pattern of this whole debate on an issue that was not raised by me but was raised by the hon. member opposite.

I put it to you, Sir, that even while I reject absolutely that anyone should come into this Chamber and abuse you, Sir, or this House, it seems to me that there is from your very own words a higher responsibility upon members elected to this place.

It is quite a different thing to have a rabble in the gallery and then have someone, who is in this House by virtue of what is supposed to be a respect for the integrity of this place, behave in ways that are unacceptable. I would put it to you, Sir, that an elected member in that member's seat should be held far more responsible than a rabble. It is because he brought unsubstantiated, self-created, gratuitous charges that I had to defend myself and then have it measured in terms of my word. The man stood in this House and lied—

Mr. Speaker: Now, just a moment. The hon. member has heard the judgment of the Chair which, as far as I am concerned, completely absolves the hon. member from any of the accusations, whatever they may have been, that were made. There can be no doubt about that. The hon. member and other hon. members have a chance to reflect on the exact wording of my judgment. The hon. parliamentary secretary has said he accepts that completely.

If the hon. member wishes to have the hon. parliamentary secretary say something more, there may be a procedure in which he can raise it, but the Chair cannot order the hon. parliamentary secretary to do more at the moment than he has done.

The parliamentary secretary has said that when he made those accusations, however unfounded they may have turned out to be, he did not do it dishonestly. The hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair now says that he lied. That is a very serious allegation and, if the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair wants to pursue it, he will have to pursue it according to the rules and at another time.

The essence of this was that there was a demonstration, which in my view, prima facie, is a contempt of this House. It was an argument about who might have known about it and who might have prevented it. That argument, while of course serious, and especially serious to the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair, and I understand that, is important and I am not diminishing the importance of it. I do not think the argument at the moment should take precedence over the fact that these kinds of demonstrations which some people in this country think are perfectly legitimate, are absolutely not legitimate. That is the fundamental point that has to be made.

Perhaps the hon. member and the parliamentary secretary would discuss their differences. If they wish to rise later on today I would be pleased to hear them. That might well be a more satisfactory solution than the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair says has evolved so far. I fully understand the position of the hon. member for Windsor—St. Clair.

I would ask hon. members not to confuse the two issues. There is a paramount issue here and that is whether this place is going to be invaded by people, no matter how sincere their beliefs or otherwise who are going to act in contempt of it and disrupt it. I do not have to remind members who have a sense of history of what that did to a country that we now consider our friend and ally.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present to the House a petition signed by 25 Canadian citizens who wish to express their objections to the goods and services tax, especially as it applies to books and magazines.

Mr. Speaker, your petitioners maintain that free distribution of printed matter constitutes the cornerstone of our democracy, our culture and our educational system. Your petitioners claim that an educated and productive society will suffer as a result of this tax.

Your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to re-emphasize the underlying principles of exempting printed matter and to provide for such exemption in the GST bill and regulations.

Mr. Speaker, these people are right. The government should listen and realize that taxing publications means putting a tax on reading.

[English]

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present the first of a number of petitions that were signed by people at the Norfolk County Fair.

These petitioners are asking and calling upon this government to reject the goods and services tax.

This petition has been certified by the clerk of petitions.

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present a petition to Parliament from hundreds of petitioners from across the country, including Montreal, Mississauga, and Ottawa, pleading with this government to reaffirm the historic principles embodied in the tax-free status of the printed word by retaining the zero rate in the GST legislation and regulations.

In other words, do not tax books and do not tax education, so that our young people can, in fact, learn to read and contribute to our society. Imposing the GST on books and reading material will not do that.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition, pursuant to Standing Order 36, on behalf of a number of constituents from Kamloops.

The petitioners point out that the government plans to tax religious reading materials, that is, periodicals and books of a religious nature. This would make Canada the only country in the world that taxes religious books. These petitioners are asking that the government stop taxing religious literature of all kinds, by repealing the goods and services tax.

Mr. Speaker, I have a more general petition, on another matter, again from petitioners from Kamloops, British Columbia, who are concerned in regard to the government's continued decision to go ahead with the goods and services tax.

The petitioners point out that with winter coming on, the additional tax on home heating fuels will add a serious burden to northerners, which means Canadians, generally, with the exception I suppose, of the greater Vancouver area. The fact that we all have to buy more heating fuel will mean more money being paid out through the GST and this is an unfair burden. These petitioners ask the government to simply drop the GST.

REQUEST FOR MINIMUM TAX

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 36, to present a number of petitions regarding taxes.

The first petition is from workers in the area of Mission—Coquitlam who have found that the tax burden on average families is roughly $1,000 greater now than it was in 1984. They call on the government to establish a minimum tax on profitable corporations and to ensure that the burden of tax is more fairly spread among individual and corporate taxpayers.

POVERTY

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the other petitions concern women and seniors in poverty.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, 50 per cent of Canadian women who file tax returns have incomes of $10,000 or less, compared to only 23 per cent of Canadian men.

The petitioners, in this instance, call upon the government to provide and introduce a tax system that is simpler and fairer for average Canadians, particularly for those who are poor and particularly for senior women. Mr. Speaker, I have another petition with regard to seniors in poverty. Based on the fact that 60 per cent of women age 65 and older live below the poverty line, the petitioners call upon this government to introduce reforms to our public pension system which will ensure that all women, whether or not they are in the paid labour force, receive pensions which allow them to live with dignity and allow them to participate fully in society.

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 36, with a petition from those who are very much opposed to the taxing of reading materials. Taxing reading materials causes a great problem for Canadian publishers who are in competition with others. We well know that that type of competition is not positive for Canada, nor is it positive for those who wish to receive printed material. It seems to me to be a burden which we have always tried to bring a tax-free relationship to.

In this case, the goods and services tax, I believe, will be very, very negative to education, to programs that we have in this country, and to the dissemination of information.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I also want to rise under Standing Order 36 to present an important petition from quite a number of smaller towns in southern Ontario such as Brantford, Hamilton, Simcoe, Thorold, et cetera. These Canadian citizens state that the government must remove the goods and services tax. They say that we need an effective tax system with a minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations, and that we need broad consensus on a sales tax measure that would be effective to replace the manufacturers' sales tax but we do not need or do not want the goods and services tax. The petitioners call on the government to remove this plan for the goods and services tax and institute a progressive form of taxation.

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and duty to rise today to present two petitions certified correct as to form and content, both of which are signed by citizens living in the Ottawa area.

Both petitions deal with the goods and services tax. They zero in on a specific problem, and I use the word "zero" advisedly, because they zero in on the fact that books have never been taxed. They have always been taxed at what is called a zero rate for magazines, books and newspapers. Now under the proposed GST, for the first time, the government is proposing to tax these otherwise never before taxed items.

Therefore, these Canadian citizens ask Parliament to ensure that we respect the historic principle of never having taxed books, magazines and literature before and ensure that the GST legislation does not do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by several voters here in Ottawa who are opposed to the GST. These Canadians are particularly concerned about the government's proposal to apply this tax to printed matter and to books which are so important in a democratic society.

[English]

These petitioners, like so many others, are appalled at the government proceeding with this tax when so many millions of Canadians have indicated their opposition to it, and they have signed this petition joining those other Canadians.

AGRICULTURAL SUPPLY MANAGEMENT

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): The second petition is on another subject matter. It was signed by a number of electors in Kingston and the Islands, and in the surrounding area represented in this House by the hon. member for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington. He is supporting a government which is proposing to sell out Canada's system for distribution and provision for poultry and dairy farmers in this country.

This petition calls upon Parliament to instruct the Government of Canada to keep the Canadian supply management system intact and to protect it in its entirety at all costs in the current GATT negotiations and not to sell this country down the drain, as it has been doing for the last six years to the great detriment of Canadians in a way that has hurt our economy. It has sold out our country to our neighbours, which is a deliberate attempt to attack our supply management systems which have been so effective for the benefit of Canadian farmers.

These people have signed this petition hoping that the government will listen to their concerns and protect the Canadian farmers instead of selling them down the drain as they have been doing for the last six years.

STARRED QUESTIONS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Starred Question No. 342.

Mr. Speaker, due to the length of this response, I ask that it be printed in Hansard as if read.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to accept the parliamentary secretary's suggestion?

SUPERMAILBOXES

*Question No. 342—Mr. Saint-Julien:

Has the Canada Post Corporation installed any supermailboxes more than 600 feet away from the customer who lives the furthest distance from the supermailbox in the area served and, if so (a) in which provinces (b) in which cities and towns (c) how much further away than the standard 600 feet are these supermailboxes located?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): In 1985, Canada Post Corporation developed and announced its delivery policy including the use of community mail boxes (super mailboxes) as the equipment and mode of delivery that would be used in situations that would previously have gone to door to door delivery. The distance between customers served by the community mailbox and the equipment was established at 600 feet or 180 meters. Generally, this practice has been implemented for the largest majority of the 600,000 customers who are on the service as of 1990/91.

There are, however, circumstances where the Corporation cannot stay within the criteria due to the layout of the subdivision or municipality. In these cases, if Canada Post stayed with the criteria it would result in the boxes being placed where they were in full frontal view of several homes on the same side of the street. In these circumstances Canada Post has moved the boxes to the ends of crescents or some distance away to a place where it could find a piece of property that would accommodate the box on easement without imposing on the homeowners adjacent to the equipment. There have been other circumstance where Canada Post has been petitioned by customers to move the boxes to another location and who agreed that they didn't mind walking the extra distance.

In other circumstances Canada Post has taken the initiative and surveyed its customers. In still other circumstances municipalities have asked the Corporation to place the boxes in certain situations which exceeded the 600 foot criteria and Canada Post has solicited and received the support of the customers involved. In urban centers where the Corporation has put such exceptions into service, generally, the customers don't have to walk any more than an additional 300 feet to their community mailbox. In all cases, the Corporation has entered into discussions with the municipal representatives of those serviced by the community mailboxes.

Where Canada Post has placed community mailboxes in cluster sites in suburban and rural settings, in most cases, a portion of the customers reside more than 600 feet from the equipment and therefore have to travel greater distance.

These exceptions have occurred in a number of cities and towns from coast to coast, in most provinces. Canada Post has endeavored to consistently apply the criteria. However, the Corporation has had to remain flexible in situations where it served the municipality, its customers or its approach to installation in a more practical fashion than sticking rigidly to the standard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

TRUST AND LOAN COMPANIES ACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, October 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Loiselle that Bill C–83, an act to revise and amend the law governing federal trust and loan companies and to provide for related and consequential matters, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively as the minister presented his bill for second reading and then I read over many of his documents and his speech again to be convinced, if I could, on behalf of all Canadians that the initiative was a good one. I must confess that, upon such reflection, I remain as unconvinced as earlier regarding both the intent of Bill C–83, whom it shall benefit, as well as how it should benefit those and the objectives. In fact there are more questions that remain unanswered than those that are answered with this bill.

For example, for whom is this bill designed? Who is going to benefit? Is it going to be the customers through an equality of service, availability of service, accessibility of service, consistency and variety of service, security of deposits, or security of services? None of these questions are addressed.

Are we, in fact, designing Bill C–83 to assist depositors and investors, the clients? Are deposits going to be guaranteed, not only by the law under regulations, but by the practices of the financial sector? In fact, are we going to provide the appropriate protection against excessive leveraging that will occur as a result of cross-pillar affairs?

Are there going to be the appropriate defences against self-dealing, for example, investment decisions based on what is required by a partner or an affiliate in what currently would be another pillar or segment of the investment market?

The minister, in fairness, has given us all kinds of assurances. But those assurances last not a whit longer than the failure to put into the legislation a monitoring and an enforcement mechanism that would ensure that the claims of the minister are actually going to be carried out. Prior to this legislation, regulation was sometimes seen to be difficult when the four pillars of the investment industry were regulated on an individual basis. We would have some sense of certainty about both security of investments for depositors, the type of investments that were going to be engaged in, and, as well, the question of competition in each compartment of the financial sectors. Those kinds of rather weak defences are even blurred further.

The third question one might ask is: are we putting into effect Bill C-83 because we want to enhance the viability and competitiveness of the financial organizations? Does Bill C-83, in fact, make them more competitive? Does it provide an opportunity for each of the 3,000 such financial organizations in the country to emerge as a much more viable, competitive, aggressive institution, available for the service growth of consumers and investors?

I am not sure it is there, Mr. Speaker. There has been much to do and much said in debate about enlarging the abilities of all elements of the financial sector to address the marketplace of today, on both a global and domestic scale.

But that ignores the fact that in 1981 the Royal Bank of Canada, which is the largest of Canadian banks, ranked 16th in the world in terms of its import and size. Today, a mere nine years later, it is reduced down to 57th place. With the kind of resources available to the Royal Bank a mere nine years ago, what has changed? I have not heard an answer from the minister or from debaters in the House. What has changed to diminish the ability of the Royal Bank to compete when it already assumed a position of pre-eminence on the world market?

Mr. Volpe: We'll get down to that in a minute.

Are we trying to enhance the abilities of services offered by the banking institutions, by the trust companies, insurance and loan companies, and by the securities industries? Through their parliamentarians, Canadians are asking if, through this bill, we are making domestic interests subservient to international interests, those that the minister says are absolutely dominant with respect to the investment industry in Canada.

I caution all members to consider what happens when there is cross fertilization and when there is a merging of sectors of a particular industry. There is consolidation and rationalization and a new structure for priorities planning that immediately falls into place. The end result invariably, if we take a look at the trends over the course of the last six years, is that there is a cut in jobs. There are fewer employment opportunities for people in the sector. What does that do for us?

If we do not look at the consequences with respect to employment opportunities for Canadians, or the kinds of enhancement of the investment in financial sectors that we hope for, obviously they must give us the immediate benefit that we would require if we are going to be defending the interests of all Canadians.

As well, in looking at Bill C-83 we see the business about competition between foreign banks and lending institutions that are not governed by Canadian legislation operating in a Canadian market. The Canadian competitors are competing on a domestic basis, one with the other. They are at a legislative disadvantage because Bill C-83 does not address that.

In short, the last question is a generic question that Canadians ask themselves. Is Bill C-83 and the reorganization of financial institutions going to impact positively and seriously on Canadian economic interests? One can say that the presence of international institutions in Canada would enhance our opportunities for exposure or trade in the international marketplace. That would be all well and good, provided that we could see some of those results today.

I do not need to point out that our balance of trade has been steadily declining. While it is true that we can get more foreign investors into the country, it is not always certain that the profits of that investment stay in the country.

There are some problems that need to be addressed with Bill C–83. I hope that these problems will be addressed diligently and thoroughly in committee. The Canadian public wants to know exactly the direction in which we are going.

One of the items that needs to be addressed, for example, despite political philosophy, is the question of concentration of wealth and economic control in the country. It is a serious problem. We have noted, and the minister has acknowledged in the House, the 3,000 financial institutions which he says have an asset base of some $900 billion. A mere 25 of those 3,000 control some 84 per cent of all those assets. That is $760 billion. That kind of concentration of economic and investment control cannot help Canadians. It cannot possibly be working to the advantage of all Canadians, both at the consumer level and the investment level.

Let us take that one step further. Aside from having this $900 billion asset base concentrated in the hands of some 25 companies, we note as well the assets of banking institutions in Canada relative to the GNP have jumped some 50 per cent over the last three decades. For example, in the middle of the 1980s the banking institutions had effectively 90 per cent of assets relative to GNP. In the 1970s, that ratio was only at 60 per cent. In the early 1960s, it was only at 41 per cent. We can see a trend that is only going to be accelerated further by a bill such as Bill C–83, unless the appropriate safeguards are put in place.

The concentration that is coming from within the industry is not going to assist the little guy, so to speak. It is not going to do a heck of a lot of good for the balance of those 3,000 financial institutions that operate in the domestic market. In fact, it is admitted by the minister, as well as critics and observers—those who are for the bill and those who speak vehemently against it—that, as a result of Bill C–83, we are likely to see situations that result directly from the proposed financial restructuring. Banks will buy into insurance companies. Trust companies will evolve into full–fledged banks. Insurance companies will expand into trust company activities and, possibly, domestic banks will also buy into trust companies. Everybody has acknowledged this, but not everybody sees an inherent danger.

We are slowly eroding the possibility of the small banking institution, the private and small entrepreneur, from not only conducting a worth–while enterprise but from flourishing and developing. In fact, one of the things we ought to appreciate in the course of the debate is that the federally chartered banks are already by far the major sources of Canadian financial capital. These banks, as a result of Bill C–83, could eventually expand their domination through diversification within the Canadian financial sector.

The likelihood of Canadian domestic banks buying into insurance companies is reinforced by the experience that we have seen elsewhere, most particularly in Europe. There, they acquire insurance companies because, quite frankly, they want to pool the information data about clients. They want to expand their product range and protect themselves against hostile bids. But, in all cases, all of this is going to the detriment of and at the expense of bank deposits and depositors.

We are not addressing the question of concentration of financial and economic clout as a result of Bill C–83. This raises a series of doubts. I see some of the members who have participated in the debate so far and who have spoken very fervently about some of these doubts. In fact, the discussion should be about whether we are focusing on the right international market, whether or not we are talking about the appropriate assumptions for restructuring that will make us more competitive internationally, and whether or not we are focusing on an international market correctly.

The so–called Chinese walls have existed, in the opinion of some, essentially to limit the potential of the economies of scale. The removal of these Chinese walls would allow the conglomerates that emerge—because they are going to be conglomerates that emerge—to continue to benefit from an increased market with better power and greater risk and diversification.

Again, in the opinion of some—for example, Guy Glorieux, the Director of Financial Services Research Program of the Conference Board of Canada—this could prove to be a decisive factor in strengthening the competitive positions over time, with the focus on over time. There is an element of expectation, hope and optimism in that. But, it would be of great interest to those involved in financial sectors to note that there is a counter position. It states that perhaps the international environment is not, in fact, truly market driven, and there should be concern for the restructuring for the wrong reasons. One estimate, in fact, points to only 20 per cent of foreign exchange related transactions linked to any real exchange of goods or services. The balance of 80 per cent relates to speculation and arbitration.

Under those circumstances, we should be very concerned about the belief that deregulation of financial markets will enhance the efficiency in the real economy, because these appear to be based more on pointing to the fact that others are doing the same thing, than on hard facts or demonstrable evidence, both of which may be lacking.

The international environment is vulnerable and, in the opinion of many, dangerously unstable. That condition has forced the IMF in a report dated 1989 to state that "the speed with which the disturbance has spread and the breakdown of geographic and functional barriers that potentially insulates markets are now leading to supervisory authorities in a number of countries to reassess the adequacy of prudential arrangements, both nationally and internationally."

• (1200)

In fact, one example of reassessment and re-evaluation of the direction for the financial industry is the risk involved in international environment. It is to be seen in the international security's business.

America's Citicorp spent, as an example, $1 billion building up its world-wide equity trading operation. Yet earlier this year it closed down the last part of this operation.

Another example: Normura Securities, Shearson Lehaman Hutton and Merrill Lynch all have scaled back their world-wide equities operations and that is as of this year.

What are we doing? With this bill, we are essentially acknowledging that we should be entering into a sphere that others are in rather warily. In my view, it is inappropriate to think in terms of an American market when we are talking, or at least giving an argumentation for the validity of a bill in an international scene.

In fact, more than one-third of Royal Bank's total loans are to American borrowers. One-quarter for the Bank of Montreal's total loans are again to American borrowers. So the propensity of Canadian lending institutions to be involved in an American market is there by virtue of the tradition of their business.

The international competition is a focus of the Canadian financial institutions and is more likely to be directed toward the United States, and not to Europe or Japan—that is to say the international scope—particularly given the Canadian banks' reluctance to invest in and a lack of activity in Europe over the last several years.

The financial restructuring that we are trying to accomplish with Bill C-83 is going to be more sensitive to the events that develop in the United States than on the international scene. The irony of all of this, Mr. Speaker, is that while we are moving into deregulation at a very quick pace, we are doing so at a pace that is much more accelerated than the one in the United States.

The present laws in the United States, as you will know, and other members as well, do apply to foreign financial institutions operating in the United States. The current laws are that banks cannot own securities firms and banks cannot own more than 10 per cent of commercial businesses, even though, of course, those banks are working their way around both of those regulations. The fact of the matter is that the regulations still do exist.

Canadian institutions wanting to operate in the United States are governed by such legislation. The irony here is that while we are taking the risk of initiating financial reforms to expand into the United States, it is not going to produce great fruit for us in the short run.

The financial changes to the institutions that we are proposing are going to make this market much more ripe for American involvement. The concern about the problem that the securities industry is having in competing in the United States is due to the fact that Canadian banks now own the major Canadian securities firms.

The vulnerability that I mentioned earlier is further enhanced by the understanding that Canadian reliance on foreign market borrowing, which was $24 billion in 1986 in American dollars, is relatively higher than all other major industrialized countries.

For example, ours stood at 4 per cent of GDP, as compared to 3 per cent in the United States and even less for others. Canadian issuers raised about $25 billion in Euro markets between 1987 and 1989, double that raised in the United States during the same period. But there is a recent shift to the United States as a result of the FTA and widening of the interest rates.

We have a serious problem in terms of the context in which we are creating legislation that we hope will take us into global competition, but which in fact is drawing us further and further into the American marketplace. The long term implications for the implementation of a universal banking strategy do cause some great concerns with respect not only to our position vis-à-vis the United States and other nations in the global market, but also with respect to who in this country is going to take the lead in terms of financial restructure. We have seen some initiatives by provinces like Ontario and Quebec that call into question the whole business of federal-provincial relations and federal jurisdiction.

The European examples where we have bank ownership of industries might be common in many countries such as Germany, but there is a significant cultural and historical factor which is not accepted and is not verified here in Canada. I know the clock cannot be turned back but I do not think that we should act precipitously in this regard. What we want to do with Bill C-83 is ensure that it receives the appropriate study and the appropriate public scrutiny required in order to safeguard the interests of Canadians, that is depositors and investors.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my hon. colleague's comments. I must say that I share a number of the concerns that he has raised. I would like to add for myself, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, some of our concerns and then make some specific references to the legislation before us this morning.

Let me begin by saying that when Bill C-83 is discussed, and we are talking primarily about the trust and loan companies act, it must be seen in the context of deregulation of all financial institutions. After all, this is simply one of the packages that will be considered by the Parliament of Canada as the government moves into deregulating the financial institutions of the country.

There is a certain ring to that word, deregulation. The ring it usually implies is getting rid of red tape, laws, regulations, guidelines and so on. It is more of a turning over to the free market the whole matter of financial institutions and their operations. The implication is that that will encourage competition between financial institutions and the banks will get into the trust business and the savings organizations will get into some of the banking functions and some of the investment operations, insurance companies and brokerage activities. This sounds as though additional competition will mean a decrease, if you like, in the charges and the premiums paid, and a better deal for consumers generally. That is the theory.

Let us look at the theory in a double context, the first being the airline industry. Those were the same arguments presented to us with the deregulation of the airline industry and, as a matter of fact, the entire transportation sector. When the government brought in this initiative, first started by the Liberals, I believe, and then with the end of their administration and the beginning of the Conservative government, deregulation of the entire transportation sector began. The argument is that we were the same and this would result in benefits to the consumer, increased and improved services and benefits of all kinds. Costs would also come down and the consumers would benefit. Woefully, that has not occurred. As a matter of fact, the opposite is unfolding. We are seeing a concentration of power and a concentration of influence in the transportation sector.

We had a number of airlines, such as Pacific Western, Wardair, Canadian, Air Canada and a whole collection of regional carriers. Now, in the airline industry, we are down primarily to Canadian and Air Canada. I suspect if one reads all of the air transportation literature, almost everyone is agreeing that this will continue and eventually we will have one airline in the country. It need not be Air Canada or Canadian. It might be Delta or United Airlines that will have taken over the existing Canadian structure.

In places like Kamloops, that I have the honour to represent in the House of Commons, we were told that there would be all kinds of additional services.

If we felt we had good service with Pacific Western providing that service, just wait until deregulation. Then we will have all sorts of additional services.

We have now what we call riding on a lawn dart, these little tiny airplanes, where the pilot gets in and welcomes you on board, Mr. Speaker. You sit in there and you bump your way over the Rockies to Calgary. This is improvement over the jet service we used to have to Calgary.

We had a whole set of times that we could choose in the old days. Now, Mr. Speaker, you have to really plan your itinerary to get to Kamloops in a day. In other words, the service is worse.

We were told that the price would come down, that additional competition results in price savings for the consumer. For a few weeks, it actually occurred. You actually had a good deal in terms of air transportation.

Now, to fly from Kamloops to Calgary and return is not much more than flying Kamloops to London, England and return. People say: "Maybe we should do our Christmas shopping in Europe." The whole promise that was held out to the consumers has just evaporated. That whole matter of the people of Canada benefiting obviously from deregulation in the transportation sector, of course as we know, has just been appalling.

I could talk about rail transportation. Of course, whole communities have simply been abandoned in terms of the traditional service by rail. I think we all recognize now that it was a serious mistake. I think at least some of the government is acknowledging that fact. Not everybody. That is the transportation industry.

When we talk about deregulation and look at transportation as an example of what deregulation does for the people of Canada, we see it does virtually nothing. As a matter of fact, it makes things worse. Some people benefit. The large players in the transportation field, particularly the multinationals, will benefit.

The American trucking lines have benefited. My guess is in the future the American airlines will benefit by the open skies policy of having access to Canada, and on and on. In other words, there are beneficiaries, and they tend to be the very largest players in that particular sector.

Let us look at another example, what deregulation may do. We do not have to look very far. We can look down to the S and Ls in the United States, savings and loans, where the American government and the Reagan administration as part of the Reaganomics decided for perhaps not even questionable reasons to apply to the country to deregulate its financial institutions.

The S and Ls are an absolute disaster. People have lost their entire savings, and they are just going down like flies, one after the other. I do not think I have to explain to the members of the House who read even marginally in the area of finance that the S and Ls in the United States have been an absolute and total disaster for the people involved.

Some people have made fortunes. They make their fortunes and then get out before the savings and loans institution collapses. The average person, the ordinary American citizen, who puts his or her life savings into those institutions loses virtually everything.

Maybe we do not even have to look further in our own country to recognize that we are under pressure these days. We have seen a number of trust companies fold. We saw the total disaster of the banks folding in western Canada and the losses that accrued there to so many people and the bail-out, of course, that certain sectors received in terms of the depositors.

We have to see that while we discuss Bill C-83. Bill C-83 was first introduced in the House in September by the Minister of State for Finance. At that time, he provided us with the purpose of the bill. That is the point, at first reading.

I want to read this into the record because I am convinced without any doubt at all that eventually the government will pass Bill C-83. It will deregulate the industry. It will fold up the four pillars on which the Canadian financial community has been built.

I would like to say with some pride that Canada has been recognized around the world as having sound financial institutions that are reasonably well regulated. It is a system that is the envy of many countries.

Now the government is in this sort of pell-mell ideological move to dismantle the four strong pillars of our system to make it easier for them to operate. We have to recognize that when we say "them", we mean the large players. Surely we will see the erosion of the small financial players that are in the system now and a welcoming of foreign players into Canada more than we have now to take over, using their financial muscle to displace Canadian firms in the financial institution market.

I think that is unfair. It is unfortunate. I know from going around and talking to some of the small insurance operations in Kamloops that they just shake their heads in disbelief that this government would be so callous in abandoning their efforts over the years to build up small, regionally or in some cases community sensitive insurance operations, to turn over in a sense now the operation to large financial multinationals, probably banks or trust companies, to get into the insurance area. I just use that as an example of where we are moving.

The minister back in September had this to say about the purpose of the bill. It was to consolidate the current trust and loan companies acts and to revise extensively the way in which federally incorporated trust and loan companies are regulated. That is laudable. The Trust Companies Act and the Loan Companies Act were enacted in 1914 and that Bill C-83 was the first attempt to modernize them. Because of the essential similarity of trust and loan companies, at least in that area of their business, their financial intermediary activities, Bill C-83 consolidates them.

We have been in favour of this updating of the legislation for years. I remember 10 years ago making a case to the Minister of Finance at that time, saying that it was time we brought this legislation up to speed. After all, the world has changed so much since 1914, particularly in the area of financial institutions, but for years and years the government dragged its feet.

One of the reasons I think it dragged its feet was because of the heavy lobbying that it received by some of the larger institutions saying: "We want to deregulate. We want to expand our operations". If I remember, the banks wanted to get into car leasing operations. They want to just get their tentacles out, as widely spread as possible. This was going against a lot of the ideas that the government had at that time.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is what they want.

Mr. Sobeski: The banks didn't get into car leasing yet.

Mr. Rodriguez: They got other things.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my friend across the way said: "The banks didn't get into leasing yet". You wait; it is a bit like Sunday shopping, Mr. Speaker. They just keep grinding away until eventually they wear them down and Sunday shopping becomes a reality.

Eventually the banks will be into the leasing operation, Mr. Speaker; just wait and see. It might take a year or two. After all, we have not started the revisions to the Bank Act yet. They will be coming shortly as part of the comprehensive package. Then we will see.

Mr. Rodriguez: Twenty tonnes and over they lease.

Mr. Riis: That is right. After all, right now they are into partial leasing, 20 tonnes and over.

Mr. Rodriguez: So it is coming down.

Mr. Riis: It is coming down. It will get down to 19 tonnes, 18 tonnes, and eventually down to the Toyotas and so on.

Let me move on with some of this important information. Another purpose of the bill as articulated was: "In the role of financial institutions, trust and loan companies are virtually indistinguishable". I think we appreciate that. It is obvious that when we study these two institutions and the way they have evolved into modern times, they in fact are indistinguishable.

They both operate in the retail deposit and lending markets by raising the bulk of their funds through customer deposits or through the sale of various debt instruments to the public and investing in residential mortgages. We have had some concerns about this point. I know my hon. friend has indicated time and time again that while these two types of firms are indistinguishable now, the question is: Ought they be? What does this mean in terms of their movement into the deposit taking market as they compete with the other financial institutions?

Again, because of the lack of any updated legislation, little has been done even in terms of talking about this publicly. I must say that the may difference between the trust and loan companies is that the former, in addition to their financial intermediary role, act as administrators of estates and trusts and as agents on behalf of customers in the management of their financial affairs. The estate, trust and agency business of trust companies however being a matter of property and civil rights is regulated by the provinces.

Bill C-83 is the first of a series of proposed statutes designed to reform the regulation of federally incorporated financial institutions. Perhaps it is worth making a note here, as this debate begins on this most important piece of legislation, that the regulation of financial institutions is a shared federal-provincial responsibility in the country. The federal government has exclusive jurisdiction over banks, while the provinces have exclusive jurisdiction to regulate security firms. Trust, mortgage, loan and insurance companies are regulated by both provincial and federal regulators.

It has been somewhat embarrassing to the government. While it has been dilly-dallying and not proceeding to deal with the changing world of financial institutions, its provincial counterparts have in fact been moving. Some of them, particularly the province of Quebec, have moved very expeditiously to loosen up the four pillars, in a sense undermining any leadership the federal government might have provided, because they have waited so long. Now it is really a catch-up business to bring federal regulators, federal legislation and so on up to speed with what has already happened in many of the provinces.

There are a number of purposes in Bill C-83. One is to benefit consumers by increasing competition and the variety of services offered by financial institutions. I think we have an obvious mixed purpose here benefiting consumers by increased competition. It is fair to say that in reality, when we look at how this has been operating in the United States and in other sectors, this increased competition just does not occur. It will occur momentarily, perhaps for a short period of time in certain sectors of the financial community, but by and large the large operators, particularly those that are multinationally based, will eventually take precedence.

The variety of services offered will be a reality. Now trust and loan companies will be able to offer more services. Banks will offer more services. Brokerage houses will be offering more services. Insurance companies will broaden their base. Indeed there will be a broadening of services.

However, this raises a whole set of other concerns. Mr. Speaker, you probably remember the debates and the discussions when this was first being studied by the finance committee some years ago, the whole matter of arm's length operations and the need to have almost increased regulation when the various pillars are allowed to diversify their operations. After all, it is going to be very tempting to a bank operation to sort of be a one-stop shopping centre and, rather than encourage competition, to lay out a whole package—the mortgage, the insurance, and so on down the line—all in this one set of offices along a corridor.

Whether that increases competition is open to some question. As a matter of fact, if one were to be cynical I suppose one could even make the case that that would allow for manipulation against competition to take advantage of the naive customer or the customer who fails to understand the complexities of the financial community. However, we will wait and see and discuss more of this in committee.

This will also enhance protection for depositors and policy holders. The whole matter of policy holders is open to some question now in terms of protection for policy holders, but we will be raising this matter in committee in terms of some of the concerns we have and how this can be regulated to provide that additional protection.

The legislation will strengthen the ability of Canadian financial institutions to compete at home and abroad. It will lay the groundwork for discussion with the provinces on harmonization. Of course this harmonization aspect has to occur. I indicated earlier that the provinces got a bit of a jump on the federal government in this case by moving to take advantage, I suppose from their perspective, of changing financial times and by looking around the world. It is a bit embarrassing now for the federal government to be playing catch-up ball in this aspect, but obviously harmonization has to be a goal.

Mr. Speaker, you signal that my speech is coming to an end unfortunately, as there is so much more to say.

Mr. Rodriguez: Tell us about the American banks coming in.

Mr. Riis: In the last moments I have, I will mention the involvement of United States banks in Canada and the old Schedule IIs that we welcomed some time back with very strict regulations. The understanding was that as a quid pro quo for our banks operating in their country and part of the changes going on, we would allow American banks to come into Canada and play a certain role in the banking business. That is all gone now. It is in a sense holus-bolus. The landscape is open to American financial institutions, and the American banking institutions in Canada will become more of a reality than ever. That is one thing.

I could talk about the capital structure, particularly those reflected in clauses 62 to 138. I think that is important. Of course other speakers will be referring to it. The whole matter of corporate governance is something we have spent a lot of time discussing. We have to spend a lot of time establishing the roles of governing the composition and the election of the board of directors as set out in terms of its rights and responsibilities.

There is ownership; the matter of self-dealing, which I referred to rather implicitly earlier; the use of cease and desist orders; and assuming control of the institution. Basically I can just summarize by saying that the 1986 blue paper announced that a financial institutions restructuring program was to be launched. This provision allowed that where a regulated financial institution was threatened with insolvency, the government would have the authority to vest all the capital of the institution with the CDIC. In such case, CDIC would have full powers to manage the affairs of the institution and to effect a merger or sale of assets if deemed appropriate.

Naturally, in conclusion, that whole area was a major concern to us in the New Democratic Party and continues to be, I might add. It is something that we would want to pursue once the matter moves to committee.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed listening to the speech of the hon. member for Kamloops. I know that he is one of the principal spokesmen on many issues and knows quite a lot about the Bank Act and the structure of banking and finance in Canada. That was obvious from his remarks.

One of the things I did not hear in his speech, which I expected to hear, was an enunciation of NDP policy on the nationalization of banks. I understand this has been a cornerstone of NDP policies since the thirties. I had hoped he would illumine the House on his party's current position in respect of the banks.

I am surprised that he talks of this legislation in reasonably favourable terms when I understood—and perhaps I am mistaken—that the aim of the NDP was not to regulate. It was to take over Canada's banks and run them as instruments of the state.

I did not hear that today. Perhaps, like their policy on the Senate, they have had a change of heart. If that is so, I wonder if the hon. member could illumine the House, tell us the latest policy resolution in respect of nationalization of banks, and tell us if it has been excised from the NDP policy manual. Perhaps he was there, if it was so excised, at the convention where this happened and he could tell us a little about the reasoning for the change in position.

I would be most interested in hearing his views on this very important subject and perhaps in comment he could tell the House that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend from Kingston and the Islands. I was hoping that someone would ask that question, because it opens up a whole set of areas that I think need to be articulated, particularly in times of the increasing recessionary conditions in which we find ourselves. Let me begin by saying that when it comes to banking I want first of all to refer to the operation and provincial jurisdiction.

As my hon. friend knows, within provincial jurisdictions a number of provinces have already taken initiatives to structure their own financial institutions. This enables them to direct a certain amount of economic policy through these institutions. The province of Quebec, for example, probably has done this most effectively using an arm's length relationship; but also provinces such as Ontario and Alberta are examples where that has been used relatively effectively and we like to think an awful lot more as an arm of government policy.

I also want to take this opportunity to say something about the Federal Business Development Bank. This was a bank structured to assist primarily small businesses which would have a difficult time obtaining loans from the traditional lending institutions. I must say that I am most discouraged by this particular initiative. The mandate of the Federal Business Development Bank has changed. I think all members of Parliament who operate with the Federal Business Development Bank in an effort to help small businesses particularly, know now that its mandate has been changed so that it has now become, perhaps, one of the most conservative banks in Canada. The bank has been instructed to make money, to make a profit, and to take no risks. Consequently, I think we all know of instances where collateral of 400 per cent or 500 per cent of the value of the loan is required.

If there is a bank of last resort, it is not the Federal Business Development Bank; it is probably the bank of first resort. If you really do not need any money, the Federal Business Development Bank is more than interested in working with you. If you need money, it is probably one of the last places to go, with some exceptions. I want to say that there are some branches that, in their own way, are able to use the existing policy and still assist some small businesses. I do not want to cast it aside totally, but I do wish the federal government would revise the mandate of the Federal Business Development Bank, particularly at this very critical economic time.

My hon. friend also asks about the whole matter of nationalization of banks. I think that the policy of our party has been to recognize that effective regulation of banking is preferable to nationalizing. Effective regulation recognizes that all of the banks operate on charters that the Bank Act and the charters come through the Parliament of Canada and that the Parliament of Canada is the place to introduce appropriate regulation of banking as well as other aspects of the financial world. I want to say to my hon. friend that rather than simple nationalization, other countries have proven without question that adequate and structured regulation is preferable and that adequate and structured regulation is all that is actually required to direct banking policy in the best interest of what the government policy of the day happens to be. I hope that helps my hon. friend because it is an interesting question and one which comes up frequently. I hope my response has clarified this, not only in the mind of my hon. friend but in the minds of others as well.

Let me not miss this opportunity to say something about the central bank. The Bank of Canada is, of course, the national bank, owned by the people of Canada. I would say that it is now being used against the people of Canada and that the fundamental policy of the central bank is wrong. I think and, with some exceptions, even my hon. friends who sit on the Conservative benches would have to acknowledge that with a now stabilizing inflation rate, knowing where we are in terms of the economy and the direction in which it is moving, and anticipating the likely introduction of the goods and services tax as of January 1, to continue on with our bank policy of high interest rates and high dollar is tantamount to disaster. I believe that if my friends opposite would reflect their personal views, they would have to agree with that.

Let us not lose sight of the fact that if we had a different government, and a different governor with a different set of priorities in terms of fiscal and monetary policy and part of it channelled through the policies of the central bank, that conditions in this country would be somewhat different, perhaps even spectacularly different. I say, let us not lose this opportunity to reflect on that very important instrument.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I must admit, right away, that I have not been following the changes in NDP policies very carefully. Since the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands has underlined the fact that there seems to have been a change in the NDP policy on nationalizing banks, and if I understood the hon. House leader of the NDP correctly, he acknowledged that, yes, the position of the NDP has changed. Perhaps he could let this House know when, exactly, the NDP made that change.

Mr. Riis: One of the strengths of the New Democratic Party is that we do have policies—agriculture, rural Canada, fishing industry, soil conservation, social policy, housing policy. We actually have policies, unlike the Conservatives whose policies are very liquid and the Liberals, well, they just play it day by day, depending on how the wind is blowing. That is their policy. That is one approach. I do not think it is a good one. The Tories have another one which is mysterious, but we are honest, Mr. Speaker. We are forthright, upfront and open.

I do not recall exactly—I do not memorize these dates—but as times change, the policies change and so our policy on banking is to use regulations provided by the House of Commons, the duly elected government of the country, to regulate the banks to serve Canadians. That is where I think our thinking as a political party would be somewhat different than my friends in the Liberal Party and my friends in the Conservative Party. Where their priorities are legislation to serve the banks, we would have legislation and regulation to serve the people of Canada.

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise today to speak on Bill C-83 and to listen to the exciting debate which has been ongoing. I must say that it was delightful to hear the NDP adopting a policy that has been in existence with the Liberal Party for a great many years. As they try to move closer to our position on policy matters, it is interesting to watch them turn themselves inside out in the process. I think the last speaker clearly was inside out.

I would say, as well, Mr. Speaker, that we are supportive of the bill being sent for consideration and clause-by-clause study. We also are very cognizant of the necessity for witnesses to come forward and give us their opinion on the four pillars of financial institutions.

This legislation has been long overdue. It has been legislation that has supposedly been coming for the last five years and quite frankly on a preliminary assessment, subject to comments from others, we seem to be getting 1980s legislation to deal with the circumstances of the world in the year 2000. We think that the legislation, while nice, deserves a little more attention, a closer examination and a lot more work either by the finance committee or some other legislative committee.

The Liberal Party has concerns about the bill. We recognize that we are in a global economy and that it is necessary for our financial institutions to be responsive to the global economy and to be in that marketplace. We also recognize that a proper balance has to be established so that the Canadian consumers can be protected.

Does this bill do all of those very important things? It is going to take the advice of the different financial institutions and consumer groups to give us the proper instruction, but our concerns are that the legislation, as it is presently drafted, does not go far enough in certain areas.

We in the Liberal Party have been consulting with a number of people in order to get the proper advice. I know the member for London East has been most diligent in liaising with insurance companies in his riding. He has a close association with them and has been getting their advice. I know that my colleague, the critic for financial institutions has, as well, been meeting with a number of banking institutions, trust companies and the Superintendent, to get the background with respect to this legislation. We are very anxious to see it brought before the committee.

Quite frankly, we are concerned with the rumours we hear, that the House is going to prorogue, and this is going to result in another delay. We are also concerned about the fact that the legislation was brought in piecemeal. Everyone acknowledges that there are four pillars to this area. What seems to be happening is that the government is bringing in one piece of legislation now and another piece a little later and another piece after that. That is not the right approach. Rather than ending up with four pillars, we may end up with a milking stool before we are done. We are very concerned about that. The government's commitment not to enact legislation until all pieces have been placed before the House is not sufficient. We have to be absolutely sure that the different pieces of legislation work. If they do not, then the results could be very disastrous to the financial community and to consumers in general.

We have to acknowledge as well that in the global world, financial services are offered in the marketplace 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Our institutions have been steadily losing their market share. The share of Canadian banks and security firms as managers of issues in the Eurobond market, for instance, has declined from a high of 6 per cent in 1976 to a low of 2 per cent in 1988.

In the management of international loans, their over-all share has dropped from 8 per cent in 1983 to 3 per cent in 1988. These very substantial drops are a clear indication that something is not working properly.

I had the fortune or the misfortune, depending on your perspective, of working for one of the chartered banks back in the sixties. The Royal Bank at that time was one of the leading banks in the world. I believe it was fifth or sixth on the list. Now it does not even make the top 50. Thus we see there is a very sharp decline in how our financial institutions are competing globally. We have to do something to deal with that situation.

Mr. Sobeski: How many U.S. banks in the top 10?

Mr. Rideout: It does not make any difference. We had Canadian banks in the top 10 for years. With this government's mismanagement, they do not even make the top 50. We must talk about the problems that we will be facing.

This government has put forward the free trade legislation and in effect, invited into Canada the American Express organization and made a deal with them, signed, sealed and delivered on election day. We now have American banks in our marketplace. Their subsidiaries are competing with our banks and providing different types of services that our banks are presently excluded from providing. Again, we have kowtowed to the American financial institutions and put our financial institutions in jeopardy. Now we face a situation where we will slip even further behind in the global situation because of the American Express decision. It has changed the playing field to the detriment of our institutions.

As well, we are facing a situation in which 1992 is coming. It used to be when 1984 was going to happen, but now it is 1992 and the European situation. There is going to be an integrated financial situation unless another Conservative has her way. Margaret Thatcher is trying to tilt at windmills and those sorts of things. If her type of attitude prevails, it may not take place. The European Common Market will have a strong central banking institution. If we are going to compete in that area, then we will have to make concessions. If we are going to gain in the European market, then we will have to extend similar treatment to the European and Japanese banks.

We have to make sure that our financial institutions are strong viable and able to compete in the world market. Coupled with all of these problems is the fact that the provinces are now moving into the vacuum that has been left by the lack of federal legislation over the last number of years. There is new legislation in Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia, and my own province of New Brunswick. They have updated their legislation dealing with trust and loan companies. Quebec has the Caisse des Depôts, and they are an example of one-stop shopping as far as financial institutions are concerned. The consumer can go into any one of their branches and buy insurance, take out a loan, or make a deposit. Those are the areas that we have to explore and try to balance in making our financial institutions viable and able to compete on the global market, as well as on the national market. Also, we have to come up with the necessary protections for our consumers.

There are really four important areas in this legislation. They are the powers of the financial institutions, the ownership, the regulatory framework and the supervisory system. Those are very important and controversial areas, quite frankly.

The issue of whether a financial institution can be widely held or closely held is important. We see that Canadian banks must be widely held and that there are severe restrictions on exactly how the ownership of shares is to be held. No one can own more than 10 per cent of any bank. At the same time, trust companies with assets over $750 million must be in such a situation that only one person or one organization can own 35 per cent. This allows that trust companies can be closely held. Banks are at a disadvantage in that they must be widely held.

The supporters of widely held ownership feel that this is a safeguard against self-dealing and the misuse of depositors funds. Therefore, banking institutions are less likely to have some hot-shot come in and convince them to invest large sums of money into a high risk venture.

I am not certain whether that will actually work. I was reading an article today in the newspaper about the government in New Zealand being forced to bail out its whole banking institution and its major bank because it had been induced into some rather odd projects by a financier from Australia. There are some risks even in the widely held situation.

Another area of concern is the linkage between different financial institutions and whether banks ought to be able to sell insurance, whether non-institutions can own banks, and all those types of circumstances.

The American Express situation is one that comes immediately to mind which puts all of our financial institutions at a decided disadvantage. It competes directly with Canadian firms which are not allowed those same rights. Schedule A banks are not allowed to have commercial financial links. For trust, life insurance, and securities firms, the rules are somewhat different. There is some flexibility in those particular areas.

The issue then becomes: Do we want to give our financial institutions broader powers in these areas? Should banks be able to sell insurance? Will the network system with insurance companies make for such a concentration of wealth and power in the banks that the consumer will subsequently come under jeopardy?

Banks will submit, of course, that premiums will fall because they will have the concentration of power and will be able to deal with that. There is also the fear that, with the concentration of power, in actual fact premiums will rise and consumers will be in jeopardy.

In a similar vein, will banks such as the Bank of Nova Scotia still be able to market Canada Life casualty insurance through brochures and phone lines within their branches? Those are some of the issues that have to be dealt with and require the finance committee or any committee input to go through the legislation and entertain points of view, from banks and other financial institutions as well as from consumers.

Also, we see areas where auto leasing could be made available. Our concern is whether banks should be allowed to move into that particular area. I know that all members in the House have been receiving correspondence from different financial institutions urging us not to allow car leasing to be financed through banks.

Mr. Sobeski: It is not in the bill.

Mr. Rideout: I acknowledge that it is not in the bill.

It is a matter of looking at our financial institutions and trying to do what is right for the over-all industry. The interesting thing is that most of the car leasing is done by American companies—GMAC, Ford Credit, and Chrysler Credit. Granted, they employ Canadians and create jobs in that sense, but the major money and the profits are leaving this country and fleeing to the United States. It is just another arrangement to assist in that area.

We have to decide whether financial institutions are going to be able to promote goods and services through the use of their credit cards. Again, it is going to be interesting to see if the different consumer groups and financial institutions come forward with some thoughts as to what is the appropriate way to set up our banking system.

Our banking system needs a full and complete overhaul. All our financial institutions have to be looked at and perhaps with the start of this legislation we can move to a more active review of institutions. This could create a situation in which the banks, trust companies and insurance companies are better able to compete globally.

I would also mention the areas dealing with regulation and dealing with self-dealing, conflict of interest, and corporate concentration. We have to be very mindful of what happened in the United States with the savings and loan fiasco and the fact that if it has not bankrupted the United States it is very close to doing so with $500 billion being taken out of the economy in order to bail out the savings and loan institutions in the United States. We have to be very clear that our regulations and the powers that are contained with the superintendent are strong and can avoid those types of disasters.

We have seen a touch of it here in Canada with the problems which occurred in Alberta and those financial institutions that went down because of mismanagement or perhaps a whole host of things. The net result is that a lot of people lost a lot of money. That was just one institution. If that spreads throughout all of our institutions and we continue to lose confidence in these institutions, then they will become less effective and not able to deal with the economic development policies of our country and of individual provinces.

In addition, we face the problem of federally regulated organizations as they compare with provincially regulated organizations. Our experience so far is that the federal government has allowed a void or a vacuum to develop and the provinces have moved in and taken over or filled this void. We now have to decide whether we are going to be competing on a federal basis or on a provincial basis with a lot of these institutions. Again we have to try to ensure that all of these institutions are going to be subject to some regulatory control so that the confidence is maintained in our financial institutions.

With respect to self-dealing, again, we have to ensure that there are no non-arm's length transactions. The argument is that widely held corporations move that institution closer to a situation where there cannot be self-dealing and it cannot have conflict of interests. I am not sure whether that is really the case when you look at it. We have to ensure that the superintendent's powers are as broad as possible and that he is given authority to go in, conduct audits, and move in a positive vein. The impression I am left with is that the superintendent utilizes moral suasion in most cases, rather than adopting an approach whereby he has actual powers to force the different financial institutions to carry out his wishes. This becomes very critical because, again, if we have a run on our financial institutions, we are going to face problems. We must maintain confidence.

I know that my time is running out and I would say in conclusion that we are supportive of the bill in its general thrust. We are supportive of it going to the finance committee for review. We are looking forward to the opportunity of hearing from a wide variety of people who have a vested interest, from consumers to financial institutions, in the hope that we can take what is mediocre legislation and turn it into something that is a lot better.

Mr. Pat Sobeski (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I am also looking forward to getting the bill to the finance committee to have a look at it. I am sure the hon. member, and the member for Nickel Belt, will have constructive things to add to this particular bill.

The one thing I have heard today is that there are already things in the bill to protect the consumers. There are things that are not in the bill that members want to bring on to the floor, such as banks getting into car leasing, which will not be allowed. There are many things to discuss and I am looking forward to those meetings.

One thing I would like to clarify and get the hon. member's opinion on is that the legislation will permit institutions without insurance underwriting powers, such as banks and trust and loan companies, to own companies, but the rules will restrict the retailing of the insurance by the deposit-taking institutions. The illusion that is being left is that it is all going to be banking under one roof.

The member for Kamloops, when he spoke earlier, talked about the concerns that the small insurance broker on Main Street would be impacted by this. I do not know where the concerns are coming from. The retailing of insurance will not be allowed.

For example, right now one of the concerns that people have is that branches through telephone or computer links can sell insurance. That will not be allowed. Banks will be restricted from servicing insurance policies. There is also a concern about the flow of information, that indeed that information will be passed along. That is a concern, but again the legislation attempts to eliminate that amount of disclosure.

The banks will still be allowed to sell their particular services, but that small broker on Main Street, who is the professional in providing property, casualty, and home insurance, will still be the expert whom the consumer will go to.

If the member has any concerns about that, I would like to know about it because indeed the legislation is a fine balance between ensuring that the large banks continue to grow, but indeed the consumers have a wide diversification of people to go to. For example, professionals who have been selling home insurance for years will still be able to do that. They will not sell home insurance in a financial institution, but rather they will sell it on Main Street.

I hope the member will agree with me that that part of the legislation is good and I would like him to comment on that. Again, I look forward to his comments when we do get to committee with this bill.

Mr. Rideout: Mr. Speaker, I should say that I appreciate the question that has been put forward. I acknowledge that, in a general sense, there are some protections within the legislation designed to protect the small insurance agent. My concern, and I think it is the concern of others, is that as we have this potential for a concentration of power within financial institutions, particularly in the insurance area, there is by a process of influence, suasion, or whatever means, a taking away of the independence of the small broker and putting it into the hands of the large financial institutions.

Our concern mainly is what happened with American Express and the services that it now offers with its subsidiaries. That is going to be taking place in our financial institutions because the banks are going to have to be allowed to do the same thing.

My time is up and I will try to answer that later.

DAVID IRVING

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, while freedom of expression is one of the values we cherish most in Canada, it also permits us to challenge the views of those with whom we disagree.

I therefore express deep concern about British author David Irving's tour of Canada. His claims that the Holocaust has been exaggerated only distorts history, minimizes the atrocities of the Nazi regime, and sows the seeds of hatred. We know only too well that the promotion of hatred against identifiable minorities leads to acts of violence, as we witness daily around the world.

Irving reportedly said in Ottawa last night that Hitler never knew what was going on, that no gas chambers were used to kill Jews, and that gas chambers seen today at Auschwitz were built after the war. Such words of course confound those who lost their dearly beloved family and friends at one of the lowest points in human history.

I know Mr. Irving's views are rejected by the majority of Canadians, including members from all sides of this House, and that Canadians will rally around the truth, reject prejudiced views like Mr. Irving's, and stand up for the peaceful, tolerant and respectful society that we all are.

TRIBUTE TO BOMBARDIER INC.

Mr. Yvon Côté (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to draw the attention of the House to the fact that a company in my riding, Bombardier Inc. in Valcourt, received two major awards last week. Bombardier's marine products division was awarded the "Palme d'or" in the industrial design category, for designing and developing the Sea-doo, a water sports vehicle that has won 15 per cent of the North American market in only three years.

On the same occasion, another division of Valcourt received the "Palme d'argent" for excellence in the industrial design of ski lift equipment.

Mr. Speaker, these awards were given in recognition of the exceptional design qualities of a product manufactured in Canada. I take great pride in the fact that a Quebec company from Valcourt, in my own riding of Richmond—Wolfe, was able to compete and indeed win recognition on a national level.

Congratulations to all engineers and staff at Bombardier in Valcourt!

COMMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, last weekend the Prime Minister threatened Quebecers with the loss of their pensions in the event of separation. While I share the Prime Minister's belief in national unity, his comments again show that, given the choice, he will choose his macho, bullying approach over consultation and compromise.

He has used this aggressive and unproductive style to claw back pensions, force his GST down the throats of Canadians, impose his high interest rate policy, and bring our country to the verge of collapse.

When is the Prime Minister going to realize that Canadians will not accept being bullied and that his style is a thing of the past? Canada's future cannot stand many more macho outbursts from the Prime Minister.

HMCS PROTECTEUR

Mr. John E. Cole (York—Simcoe): I would like to advise you, Mr. Speaker, and members of the House of Commons of the initiative taken by the council and residents of the town of Newmarket, my home town.

The town has decided to "adopt" the HMCS Protecteur serving in the Middle East and will be sending letters, magazines and newspapers to the ship to show concern for those on board.

The sailors enjoy reading letters from home in their spare time and it is important for their morale to know that individual Canadians have taken the time to show they care.

I know the residents of Newmarket will support this project and I challenge other communities and all Canadians to take a moment to write to these young men and women and let them know our thoughts are with them and they are not forgotten.

In these uncertain times, the certain support of the citizens of Newmarket and all Canadians is appreciated and is very important to those serving overseas.

CP WESTIN SHOPS

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, recently a member of the House of Commons raised the issue of occupational health safety at the CN shops in Transcona. He was referring to the presence of asbestos in the powerhouse.

I would like to raise another such issue. The conditions which the employees at CP's Westin shops are exposed to are dangerous and potentially harmful, to say the very least.

Recently, employees were asked to dismantle a boiler insulated with asbestos strips. Employees were exposed to asbestos dust for a three-week period in April of this year. In both situations, management was irresponsible.

Further, on October 16, 1990, a safety officer inspected the Westin site under subsection 145(1) of the Canada Labour Code and found that there were contraventions. I summarize. No warning signs to inform employees of asbestos insulation in the preheater; asbestos containing materials in boilers were not identified; employees had not been provided with the information, instruction, training and supervision necessary to ensure their safety and health at work. There has been no hazard assessment of asbestos in the workplace. The government must take responsibility to ensure that the workplace of all employees is safe and free of health hazards.

The government must ensure that the health and safety of all employees, in the place of work and elsewhere, remain a priority and a matter of constant concern.

TRADE

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, Canada's Minister for International Trade announced that export duties levied on certain lumber products sold by Quebec on the American market will be reduced from 8 per cent to 6.2 per cent as of now, to 3.1 per cent by November 1, 1991, and to 3 per cent a year later, until October 31, 1994.

This decision, made on October 31, 1990, by senior officials of the government of Quebec, External Affairs and International Trade Canada and the United States, arises from a memorandum of agreement signed in December 1986 by Canada and the United States. The reductions in question reflect the value of substitute measures adopted by Quebec.

The Quebec Lumber Manufacturers Association has reacted favourably to an announcement that is very good news, Mr. Speaker, for Abitibi—Témiscamingue.

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, Jimmy Swaggart must feel proud. His public penitence, a modern form of self-flagellation and public humiliation minus the sackcloth and ashes, of course, in the hope of expiating one's sins is now a model for political leaders, ones who are unwilling and unable to correct wrongs they visit upon an unsuspecting citizenry.

"Oh, we could have done more to cut the deficit," said the Prime Minister to viewers and listeners in southern Ontario last night. "Had we done more earlier, our problems today would be less. No doubt about it," conceded our Prime Minister to an irate audience. "Yes," he admitted to those waiting relief, "the goods and services tax is coming at a difficult time as the country heads into a recession". But, will he do anything about it? Well, no time is a good time for a new tax, we are told. Besides, our valiant leader does what he thinks is right and not what the overwhelming majority of Canadians knows to be right. How similar is this to a wolf's confession? One can almost hear in the distance the penitent predator in the confessional addressing the confessor with an absolution: "If you will, quickly, Padre, I think I hear sheep coming over the dell".

REVENUE CANADA

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue wields a policy that discriminates against taxpayers.

Mr. Réjean Perron of La Tuque failed to file a return for 1985-86.

Mrs. Joncas at the Identification and Compliance Section sent him a letter on October 6, 1989, ordering Mr. Perron to file his tax returns as soon as possible.

After he did so, it turned out Revenue Canada owed him money for the two years in question. However, the minister refused to refund the money, stating he had only three years to claim his refund and that he was too late.

How could Mr. Perron meet this deadline when he received the letter four years after the year 1985?

Mr. Minister, your department insults Canadians by this abuse of its administrative authority. Since all citizens have to pay taxes, the same should apply when the government owes money.

In the case of Mr. Perron, despite the fact that you were aware of the case, you did nothing except pass the buck to the Minister of Finance.

I suppose that is what you mean when you say you act responsibly.

TANKER TRAFFIC

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, it has been almost two years since the Nestucca oil spill off the British Columbia coast confirmed our worst fears about oil shipments. That incident led to an emergency debate in this Chamber, demands for a full public inquiry and for an environmental assessment of the Westridge loading facility in Vancouver Harbour.

Since that time, tanker traffic in Vancouver Harbour and the Strait of Juan de Fuca has increased fourfold. The size of the tankers has expanded and the volume of crude exports has gone up 2,000 per cent. Despite repeated warnings and recommendations contained in no less than three high profile reports, and an acknowledgement by the Coast Guard that it is not equipped to handle a major spill, the government has refused to take action.

Last week, the government received the final report of the Brander-Smith Panel on Tanker Safety. The government's response was predictable. The inevitability of a large spill in the Strait of Juan de Fuca affecting the Gulf Islands has once again been ignored by this government.

• (1410 )

The evidence is clear and the potential for disaster obvious. When will this government act in the interests of the British Columbia people and implement the Brander-Smith recommendations?

FAMILY VIOLENCE

Mrs. Pierrette Venne (Saint-Hubert): Mr. Speaker, across the country, one woman out of 10 suffers verbal, sexual or physical violence inflicted by her spouse. Most victims of family violence do not call in the police until after the 34th instance of assault. This figure does not include the thousands of women who never lay charges at all.

Mr. Speaker, on Monday, November 12, the women of Châteauguay will have a new shelter to escape family violence. The new shelter, the Re-Source, will open its doors thanks to an interest-free mortgage loan of

A solution to the problem of family violence will not be found overnight, but meanwhile, operation shelter, an initiative of the Conservative Government, will help women from Châteauguay and 14 other municipalities in Quebec escape family violence.

MERCHANT NAVY

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, we must recognize the contribution made by merchant seamen to Canada's struggle during the two world wars and the Korean War.

While merchant seamen were not members of the Armed Forces, they played a crucial role in the allied victories. Without the merchant navy, our forces would have been deprived of vital supplies of food, weapons, ammunition, vehicles, fuel and other essential items. Merchant seamen ran the same risks as members of our army, navy and air force. Too often, they paid the same price.

The United Kingdom and the United States have legally recognized their merchant seamen as having served on active military service, and they are entitled to equal benefits. Do members of the Canadian merchant navy not deserve the same treatment?

Yes, Mr. Speaker, they do deserve our honour and support for their sacrifices. This should be clearly demonstrated by giving them full status under veterans legislation, with no discrimination whatsoever.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, this week Canadians and others around the world will observe Remembrance Day. Since this annual observance began, following the war to end all wars, there has not been even a moment in history when there has not been a war or armed struggle going on somewhere.

Remembrance Day is marked lest we should forget those who fell, or those who served.

Canada has an enviable reputation around the world for the tangible programs and benefits we provide to our veterans. It is important that we continue to remember and to serve the 600,000 Canadians who are veterans.

The consequences of wartime service are just now catching up with many of our veterans, whose average age is 70 years. For some, the normal ailments of aging are compounded by the weeks of youth spent fighting in the flooded Dutch fields or standing watch on the frigid decks of a corvette on the North Atlantic run.

I compliment the Minister of Veterans Affairs for bringing forth Bill C–87, illustrative of Canada's continuing commitment to our veterans, and urge all members to give it their full support.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, many Canadian members of Parliament have been approached by the families of those Canadians who are currently in Iraq and Kuwait and unable to leave.

I have urged the Secretary of State for External Affairs to agree to permit a Conservative member of Parliament to take part in an all party parliamentary mission on a humanitarian basis to Iraq and to Kuwait in order to assist the families who are feeling such a sense of pain and loss at this very difficult time.

There are some 27 men in Baghdad and 13 in Kuwait. These families are deeply concerned. I have spoken personally with a number of them. There have been delegations from many other countries, but our government so far has refused to take this important humanitarian step.

Indeed, the Prime Minister has referred to those Canadian citizens who are trapped there as being few in number and not in dire straits.

Mr. Speaker, this silence is particularly ominous, considering the Conservative government's recent threats that, with the United States, it would use force against Iraq, without the consent of the United Nations and even without a mandate from Parliament.

On behalf of the families and on behalf of all Canadians who condemn this government's silence and failure to act, I ask the government to allow a multiparty delegation to take part in this humanitarian mission.

COMMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, last night on CFTO TV, the citizens of southern Ontario had their question period with the Prime Minister of Canada.

They asked numerous questions of genuine concern on a broad range of subjects, to all of which our Prime Minister responded honestly and directly.

Real Canadians are not interested in sleaze questions. Ordinary Canadians are not interested in character assassination.

Congratulations to Tom Clark. He would make a great Speaker of this House. Congratulations to the Canadians who posed the questions to the Prime Minister. They would make the opposition in this House look shameful, tasteless, and ineffective. Congratulations to the Prime Minister for making tough decisions and showing real leadership.

Mr. Speaker: Any time Mr. Clark would like to take over I am quite prepared to vacate the chair.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, we all remember the Minister of Finance, in introducing the dastardly GST, indicating that it was a fair tax that would lead to much increased prosperity in every part of Canada. He also said the GST would have a one time inflationary impact of 1.2 per cent.

According to recent polls, we know that the people of Canada do not believe him and in Atlantic Canada only 3 per cent support his goods and services tax. Now the Tory Minister of Finance for the province of Nova Scotia, Greg Kerr, has said he does not believe the minister's prediction either. He has predicted that the GST will drive the inflation rate up over 7 per cent next year in Atlantic Canada, twice as high as the projections of the federal government.

Canadians, but in particular Atlantic Canadians, have suffered enough because of this government's economic policies. There have been billions in cutbacks for regional development, health care, education, and equalization payments. Enough is enough.

If this government does not want to hear the bad news from Canadians, then it should listen to it, Tory buddies like the Minister of Finance for the province of Nova Scotia, realize the folly of its ways and withdraw the 7 per cent GST, and do it today.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE ECONOMY

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

Today the shower of bad economic news raining on Canadians from this government is continuing. Statistics Canada has reported that the composite leading indicator, a measure of how this economy is expected to perform, is down for the seventh month in a row, which its economists say mean that this recession is going to last longer than six months.

There is more bad news. Domestic auto sales are down 19 per cent compared to a year ago, which means a lot of suffering for thousands of Canadian workers and their families from plant closings and lay-offs in this key industry.

Why does the minister want to create such a grim holiday season for thousands of Canadians and their families? Why won't he bring in new economic policies, including lowering interests rates right now, that will roll back this recession instead of making it much, much worse?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is one element in the drop in auto sales which I think is significant, and that is that the fleet buyers who are going to be major beneficiaries of the GST are holding back from purchasing because—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peterson: Wonderful proposal!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Members opposite are laughing. What will happen with the GST is that the cost to the fleet manufacturer will drop by 13.5 per cent. It is an important part in their competitiveness for them to hold off.

They are going to be major buyers by January 1, 1991. That is going to provide a boost to the production of the automobile companies. It will result in a savings for those people who lease cars and for those people who are going to rent cars. That is one of the things that I think is helpful to understand, rather than have these distorted statements made by the Leader of the Opposition about the economy.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what the minister calls distorted statements are coming from his own statistical agency, Statistics Canada.

Canadians do not believe the minister when he talks about the GST. The auto companies are offering rebates right now which they say are equivalent to any savings from the GST, and still cars are not being sold due to this government's economic policy.

In fact, John Winter, a leading retail consultant, said: "The grinch," and I guess he must mean the Minister of Finance, "has already stolen Christmas and probably has his eye on Labour Day next year".

Deloitte & Touche, a major accounting firm, says that 43 per cent of retailers expect to have lower sales this Christmas than last year. In fact a senior partner in this firm said: "There's a lot of walking wounded out there".

When is the minister going to do something for the walking wounded he has created, the small business people, small retailers, in fact almost all Canadians who are suffering from this minister's made-in-Canada recession? When is he going to do something to help these walking wounded?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the many deals now being offered to the fleet buyers by the car manufacturers. They are going to be buying those cars with a major saving after January 1. I think we will see quite an increase in purchases by the fleet manufacturers.

The hon. member refers—and I have the article right here—to the problems in the retailing sector. What my hon. friend could do with the retail sector is encourage his friends down the hall in the Senate to pass the GST so we could get on with the payment of some $600 million to low income Canadians to help them purchase things during the pre-Christmas period.

What I am hearing from the other side is that it is the weakness of Jean Chrétien as the leader of the party, the weakness of Jean Chrétien who is not capable of controlling the Senate, who is not—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, John Winter, a leading retail consultant, and Deloitte & Touche, are not blaming what they predict to be a disastrous Christmas season for retailers on anything to do with the GST. They are talking about this minister's economic policies. He ought to face that, accept it, and do something about them.

Mr. Speaker, the recession created by this minister is genuine and it affects all sectors of our economy.

Last week, Pratt & Whitney announced that 850 employees would lose their jobs, and today, Marine Industries in Quebec has announced 700 layoffs.

I therefore want to ask the Minister of Finance what he is waiting for to introduce job creation initiatives. Why does he insist on making life miserable for all Canadians?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, doesn't the hon. member think that it would be helpful if Jean Chrétien, Leader of the Liberal Party, showed a little backbone and stood up to Allan MacEachen and said: "Senator MacEachen, there are 7.5 million or 8 million Canadians expecting $600 million from the passage of the GST. It is important for the retail sector of the country". But, with the flip-flops of Jean Chrétien where one day he says: "We are going to do one thing about the GST" and another day says: "We are going to do something else," who knows?

The hon. member referred to Mr. John Winter. I want to point out something in this article. Some 32 per cent of retailers predicted businesses at their stores would rise faster than inflation. Another 21 per cent expected sales gains of 3 per cent to 5 per cent. That is 53 per cent. Some 47 per cent feel that sales will drop.

The message that I draw from this, and it is said by Ron Corbett in The Ottawa Sun today, "Some days I can't help but wonder if what we are doing is right, if we aren't somehow creating a self-fulfilling prophecy in our coverage of the recession".

It is the statements by the Leader of the Opposition who turns everything into a negative because—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is making a last ditch attempt to go up in the polls by pretending to listen to Canadians.

However, the message was and remains quite clear: 76 per cent of Canadians don't want the GST. Furthermore, the government's policies have generated excessively high interest rates, leading to falling profits, bankruptcies, and successive layoffs.

Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister or, in his absence, to the Minister of Finance. Now that the Prime Minister has decided to lend an ear, is he prepared to lend Canadians a hand and change his disastrous policies?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I say to my hon. colleague opposite that if she is concerned about the people who need some help now, there are 7.5 million or 8 million Canadians who are looking to receive some $600 million in total of GST credit cheques before Christmas.

That is important for the retailing sector in this country. It is important for those Canadians whom she is concerned about. If she feels strongly about that, she should speak to her leader, Jean Chrétien, and ask him to stand up once and for all to Senator MacEachen, who is pulling the strings of the marionette, Jean Chrétien.

Mrs. Marleau: Mr. Speaker, if this government wants Jean Chrétien to run this place, perhaps it should resign and—

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister stated:

> Well, the hell with it. The structural changes have to be made. This economy will not survive without those kind of changes.

The economy has been seriously wounded and is failing fast.

My question is for the Minister of Finance. Will he take action, help us survive, and ease his monetary policy before the only structure left in this country is the flat line and we are dead? Will the minister help us?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that just underscores my point about the exaggerations that are made.

Certainly the economy is in trouble. We must be doing what we can to get the economy pulled back together again. That means getting inflation down. That means getting interest rates down, but it also means allowing some of the changes that we are trying to bring in to help the performance of the economy, such as the goods and services tax which will help low income Canadians and which will reduce the cost of production for companies to help them compete better internationally.

I say to my hon. friend that she should speak to her leader, Jean Chrétien. We are not asking Jean Chrétien to run the country. We are just asking him to take on a smaller job of trying to run the Liberal Party of Canada.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

When the House finally reconvened after the summer of native discontent, the Prime Minister made three specific promises in this Chamber to native people: improvements to the specific lands claims process, fulfilling treaty land obligations which had been outstanding for over 100 years, and the acceleration of modern treaty negotiations based on comprehensive land claims.

On another occasion, the Prime Minister also proposed a royal commission into aboriginal issues. But last Saturday, Senator Lowell Murray indicated that the royal commission and other proposed reforms would have to wait until after the Spicer committee reported on July 1. "Frankly, he said, "we don't want to distract from the more fundamental issues".

Given that Meech Lake collapsed in part because aboriginal people were locked out of the process, is the government now prepared to repeat that failure with the Spicer commission, or will the Deputy Prime Minister repudiate Senator Murray's comments now and keep his government's promises to native Canadians?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. member has been somewhat misinformed because there has been substantial progress made in the areas of land claims, treaty rights, and the over-all improvement of conditions for our aboriginal peoples which has been conducted under the very capable leadership of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I think what the Senator was saying is that until such time as there is some consensus built in the nation as to how we best deal with the issues of the aboriginal peoples, it would be counterproductive to attempt to engage in any constitutional dialogue per se.

There have been a number of attempts made at that, and that does not take away from our resolve to deal with it, but I think this process will have to be allowed to take its course so that we can build a better consensus and a better understanding between aboriginal peoples and all Canadians across the country.

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Deputy Prime Minister. On Sunday the Prime Minister promised he will shortly make a formal apology in the House of Commons to all ethnic groups mistreated by the Canadian government and consider compensation.

However, if you have your land stolen, your water poisoned, your children forcibly removed and adopted to foreign countries, or subjected to sexual abuse in residential schools, if you are the first citizens of this country you get nothing until the Spicer committee reports. Is this not the government saying, first come last served?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think it is most inappropriate that the hon. member tries to oversimplify a situation by suggesting that no positive initiatives will be taken on behalf of the aboriginal people of Canada.

The Deputy Prime Minister has clearly pointed out that the words of the Prime Minister, as stated in this House, are being fulfilled by specific and concrete actions. The historic meeting of the Prime Minister with B.C. aboriginal leaders for the first time since 1910 is an example of that commitment. The meetings that have taken place with the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians on treaty land entitlement, which I will continue this week, are evidence of that commitment.

The Prime Minister's appointment of a prominent aboriginal leader, Miss Carol Corcoran, to the Citizens' Forum on the Future of Canada are all clear evidence of this government's commitment to make very positive progress on behalf of our aboriginal people.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what planet this government is on. I want to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice.

As I put the question now, in our own province of British Columbia we are seeing a repeat of Oka, a mini-Oka where the RCMP are called in once again to remove a barricade.

What has the minister done? What initiative has her department taken to prevent these mini-Okas? What does she propose to do concerning the present situation at Duffey Lake near Pemberton? Has she taken any initiatives or is she going to just stay asleep at the switch and perhaps allow violence in our own province of British Columbia?

An hon. member: As she did last summer.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the rhetoric of the hon. member is extremely irresponsible. The events of the summer months have been very tragic for all Canadians. This government has made it quite clear that we are prepared to negotiate the settlement of comprehensive and specific claims and to improve the means of conducting those negotiations.

We made that undertaking in British Columbia some weeks ago and the people of the Lillooet Nation and Mount Currie Band are entitled to access that process. I will be meeting the Chief of the Mount Currie Band tomorrow morning to discuss these issues further.

The courts of British Columbia had deemed that all British Columbians and all Canadians must abide by the law and not use road blocks to achieve their ends.

HEALTH

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last night Canadians learned that national defence allowed Canadians to serve as volunteers in the clinical trial of HI-6, a drug which is being tested as an antidote against nerve gas poison, without them being fully informed that the drug could cause cancer in addition to birth defects.

Since the Health Protection Branch apparently insisted to researchers that the consent form should indicate the drug is carcinogenic, could the minister now explain why the study went ahead despite non-compliance with our Canadian ethical and safety standards? Was he surprised? And would he now issue a directive to halt continuation of this study unless it reveals all known side effects to volunteers and thereby ensure informed consent?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Health and Welfare is very determined in any case where testing of drugs takes place to ensure the safety of all the volunteers. That was why in the consent form, considerable detail was gone into to ensure that volunteers were informed of potential side effects.

Included among the warnings on the consent form—I do not know if my hon. friend has seen it or not—is the following statement: "As with any drug, unexpected and potentially serious effects, including fatality are always a possibility". We went into specific details. We also said that other unanticipated side effects, including fatality, could be a possibility. We have asked that in subsequent trials during Phase 2 that this be elaborated on even further, to make reference to the fact that we should be cautious to ensure that there are cancerous side effects, notwithstanding the fact that we have no evidence to date to suggest that such side effects could occur.

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, once again the minister has shown that his own department has regulatory impotence. Less than 1,000 American dollars will buy a Canadian human guinea pig in Tory Canada. Mr. Trottier, one of the Canadian human guinea pigs the minister referred to was not aware of the tests being conducted on him. The minister should reread the contract.

My supplementary is directed to the same minister. It is a recognized fact that the American government offers grants in Canada for research on chemical and biological warfare.

I want to ask the minister to inform the House today when he will demand that the Minister of National Defence stop overruling his own department's regulations and when he will prevent Canadians, who are either needy or misinformed, from being bribed to serve as guinea pigs for purely military ends.

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member says I should again read the contract. Indeed, I will. As with any drug, unexpected and potentially serious effects including fatality are always a possibility.

The hon. member makes false allegations again, as is often the case. She should recognize the fact that Canadian troops are today in an area of the world where potentially they could be exposed to nerve gas. They are up against a regime which has used nerve gas against its own civilian population.

The goal of the Department of National Health and Welfare is to ensure that informed consent is given and to ensure that all possible information is made available. Not only was specific information given here, but there were warnings that unanticipated side effects could be found. We have gone beyond that and said that in Phase 2 there has to be specific reference made as well to the possibility of carcinogenicity, notwithstanding the fact that we have no direct evidence showing that HI-6 can cause cancer.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs and concerns Remembrance Day.

The minister will know that the Dominion President of the Royal Canadian Legion has specifically written the Prime Minister protesting the Prime Minister requesting the Governor General to go abroad on November 11.

Will the government reverse this request and immediately urge the Governor General to remain in Canada, fulfil his obligation as a Commander in Chief of the Canadian Armed Forces and participate in Remembrance Day services here in Canada.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Governor General will be attending the enthronement of Prince Akihito, along with members of the Royal Family, heads of state, heads of governments from around the world, Governors General from all the Commonwealth countries, representing the people of Canada at that event.

It is extremely important to note that on November 11, His Excellency will be attending a Memorial Service at Yokohama Cemetery, along with members of the military, two recipients of the Victoria Cross for Canada, and with other members of Parliament from this particular House. I know his thoughts will be with us.

He will be attending on this particular occasion, a very important ceremonial event on behalf of the people of Canada.

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): That is a very disappointing answer for veterans who have given so much.

My supplementary question is for the minister responsible for Canada Post and also concerns Remembrance Day. We as a nation face a unity crisis. It is imperative that we hold tradition, unity and history in high regard. Remembrance Day is an institution which unifies all Canadians.

This concept is being threatened by management contract negotiations at Canada Post, where postal workers may lose their right and ability to participate in Remembrance Day services.

Will the minister maintain the Canadian Remembrance Day tradition by demanding that Canada Post respect this custom now and in the future.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I do not think anyone on this side of the House needs to apologize concerning the reverence we pay to Remembrance Day and all it represents.

Labour negotiations are currently under way at the post office. The union has decided to take the public route on one particular item, giving one side of the story. Apparently, the hon. member has taken it as 100 per cent accurate and I do not choose to do that. We will let the responsible parties at the negotiating table complete their negotiations.

HEALTH

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence on the HI-6 issue which has already been raised during Question Period. It was his department, according to my understanding, that was responsible over all for the tests on these four individuals. Two of the four said last night on television that they were simply not aware of the risks involved.

I have a letter from the Minister of National Defence to my colleague the hon. member for Skeena, dated July 30, 1990 which states: "You are correct in stating that the drug HI-6 is a known carcinogen". That directly contradicts the statement just made in the House by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Which minister is correct?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to a letter I sent to his colleague dated September 4, I will read that letter.

Some hon. members: No, no.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, if I could read the letter. If the NDP would allow me, Sir, I would like to read the letter.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. minister could tell the House what is in the letter.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I would like to read a letter I signed dated September 4:

> Details on the component chemicals used in the synthesis of HI-6 were included in our Investigational New Drug submission made to the Health Protection Branch, Department of National Health and Welfare. Even though one of the chemicals, bis-chloromethyl ether (BCME), is a known carcinogen, this compound and its toxic properties are completely changed when it is combined to make HI-6. In this respect, the toxicity of BCME is not relevant to the toxicity of HI-6—

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, the minister will be aware that Doctor Mendoza, who is one of the pioneers of research in this area, has directly contradicted the statements made in that letter by the minister. Furthermore, the drug is banned in the United States and Doctor Mendoza has said that testing in the new year will be premature.

I would ask the minister if he will order that the tests proposed for the new year not take place.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is a defence critic for the New Democratic Party, I would suggest to him that with the members of the Canadian Armed Forces presently serving in an area where chemical weapons have been used and have the potential to be used, he should be supporting the development so that we have in Canada a secure national source of an antidote for chemical warfare.

The member should also understand, Mr. Speaker, and I do not know whether the New Democrats really want to have the question answered, that this chemical HI-6 is available for sale in Sweden and in Yugoslavia. The reason we are developing new drugs in a new drug format in Canada is so that we can have a secure national source for the Canadian men and women who serve this country.

GUN CONTROL

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Earlier this fall the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police asked the justice minister to grant a Canada-wide gun amnesty to help reduce and control the number of illegal and unwanted guns on Canadian streets. The 1978 amnesty brought in about 47,000 such unwanted and unregistered weapons just like the kinds of guns that were used in Scarborough in September to kill two 15-year-old youths in separate incidents.

What is preventing the Minister of Justice from proceeding immediately to a general amnesty to help Canadian police forces in their fight against violent crime?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the main impediment to my doing what the hon. member suggests is a lack of legislative authority.

Contrary to articles in journals such as The Toronto Star, I do not have the legislative authority to declare a national amnesty on firearms.

I have been in communication with the provincial attorneys general and the provincial firearms officers to discuss the possibility of an amnesty, particularly in concert with our own firearms legislation. That would provide an opportunity for a public education campaign.

I should point out to the hon. member that it is within the authority of any chief of police to engage in an amnesty at his or her local level. I think that it is something that requires the ability of the local forces to carry it out. In other words, it is something that is very important to be done in co-operation with local forces because they have to have the personnel and the storage facilities to receive the firearms. There is nothing to prevent chiefs of police from doing this. In fact, I believe that the Ottawa Chief of Police has done this unilaterally. I would encourage all chiefs of police to use their authority to do so.

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like the minister to try to firm up her government's intentions in this regard.

In early October, a spokesman in the minister's office suggested in a published report that nothing would be done on an official gun amnesty until after passage of the GST. I do not really understand that attitude. Maybe the minister wants to tax the guns when they are turned in.

Will the minister proceed now by statute or by Order in Council? What else is preventing her from moving right now to get these unwanted and dangerous guns off the street?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect I would suggest that the hon. member is incorrect when he quotes a member of my staff or anyone speaking on my behalf in saying that. He is quite wrong. The two things are quite unrelated.

I point out again that I have the legislative jurisdiction to amend the Criminal Code. I do not have the jurisdiction to enforce the Criminal Code. Because I lack the legislative jurisdiction to create a country-wide amnesty, I cannot do so. I am not going to introduce a special statute to do so.

As I said, I am in consultation with my provincial counterparts to determine whether it would be appropriate to have a national amnesty. I look to the hon. member's support of that effort.

CITIZENS' FORUM ON CANADA'S FUTURE

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Despite the fact that northern Canada covers one-third of Canada's land mass and has a constitutional, political, and legal status which is unique in the country, the northern territories do not have a representative on the Citizens' Forum on Canada's Future.

I would like to quote, in part, a letter written by the government leader of the Northwest Territories to the Prime Minister on November 2. It states in part:

> I sincerely believe that a prominent Territorial resident would bring a unique perspective to the Forum's deliberations,—and provide some comfort to the Territorial governments and residents that they have a voice and a part to play at the national level.

Since the chairperson of the Forum recognizes all of the above by going to Tuktoyaktuk and Inuvik this weekend, and since the Prime Minister on the weekend said he is open to additional appointments, will the Deputy Prime Minister ask the Prime Minister to name a northern Canadian to the forum?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, what the forum will be interested in—I am sure what all Canadians will be interested in—are the views of northerners on this very important subject.

As I said to the House yesterday, the members of the panel are not intended to act as representatives of any one group, any one region, or any one occupation. What they are there to do is to facilitate the dialogue and to encourage Canadians to talk to each other and to present their views to the panel. In that way we can hope to develop a consensus as to the values and what we want in terms of constitutional and institutional change, and how we might plot a course for a stronger, united Canada.

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The answer that was given is totally unacceptable.

Perhaps there is no substitute for the kind of positive contribution that a real northern Canadian person could make to that particular forum. It does not substitute to have a few forays made into the north.

• (1450)

Along the same lines, why did the Senate government leader state this past weekend that questions regarding aboriginal issues are futile to look at in that it would distract from the more fundamental exercise? The rights of first citizens must have been considered pretty fundamental when the Prime Minister made promises on September 25.

What are the government's plans to resolve the constitutional matters facing Canada's aboriginal people outside the citizens' forum, especially since this forum is not an acceptable substitute for direct action by the government?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I cannot think of a better contribution that could be made by anyone than that of the two hon. members who represent the northern part of Canada. I think they are very—

Ms. Blondin: It's not good enough.

Mr. Mazankowski: The hon. member says that is not good enough. The hon. members are very eloquent and knowledgeable about the issues and I would think that the forum and all Canadians—

Ms. Blondin: Don't be so condescending.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, she suggests that I am being condescending, but far from it. I am trying to be complimentary as I have no difficulty in being complimentary to the tremendous contributions the hon. member makes to the House on behalf of the people she represents.

I can also say to her that one of the members of the forum, Carol Corcoran, is from northeastern British Columbia, Fort Nelson, and has, I understand, extensive links to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, news reports over the weekend are quoting officials from the U.S. government saying that they have no intention of changing the softwood lumber tariff that is wreaking havoc in the forest industry, especially in British Columbia and northern Ontario. Thousands of jobs are being lost.

My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since 1986 when the tariff came in, the U.S. government has issued some 64 directives to the Canadian government regarding this tariff. Will the minister table those documents in the House so that we can establish once and for all the extent of U.S. domination of our forest policy since this government signed away our right to manage our forests ourselves?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that this arrangement arose from problems that had their root in stumpage practices in his province and others across the country. He should not try to confuse people about the history of the problem or the way in which it was resolved.

He is asking a question about a technical matter of tabling documents. He has been in the House long enough to know that if he wants an answer to a question of that kind which requires some notice, he should indicate his interest rather than raising it here.

I will look into the matter and, if the practices of the House would make it appropriate for those documents to be tabled, then we will proceed that way.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, in fact, I did that back on October 16 and this minister's own department has received some 64 directives from the U.S. government on the softwood lumber tariff. I take it from the minister that he will in fact provide those documents to the House.

My supplementary question, then, is this. Given the high interest rate policy of the government and its destructive policies as they relate to the forest industry, and given that the United States is clearly not listening to this government when it comes to its half-hearted attempts to change this tariff will the minister use Section 9 of the memorandum of understanding and terminate this agreement immediately?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the NDP are the great terminators, except when it comes to having to stand up on any kind of— Now I am being lectured by the House Leader of the New Democratic Party. Maybe he wants to cross the floor again.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): As I understand what the hon. member was saying, he was asking me if I would table a list of documents. When I told him he would be more likely to have a response to that question if he gave notice to me, he indicated that what he in fact had done before on the Order Paper was ask for a list of submissions that might have been made by the Government of the United States to the Government of Canada. It is one thing to ask for a list and another thing to ask for a document to be tabled.

I repeat my undertaking to him. I will see what the practices are. If the practices lead to the tabling of that document, then we will naturally follow those.

If his House leader intends to cross the floor again, or to offer that, I hope that—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Moncton.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The GST leaves retail co-operatives at a decided disadvantage. All contributions to share equity of co-operatives will be taxed; not so with their competitors. Services provided to local co-operatives by parent co-operatives will be taxed; not so with similar retail businesses.

The minister recognized these errors with respect to banks and credit unions and corrected them. Why will the minister not correct the flaws and inequities in the GST as they relate to retail co-operatives?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member understands that it is very, very late in the legislative process. This is a matter, if he had raised it earlier, we might have been able to have a look at.

I think the hon. member must realize—

Mr. Manley: They would not change anything.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The member from Ottawa says that we would not change anything. We have changed a number of things during the course of the legislative process. There are a number of changes that were proposed by the committee of which he is a member, the finance committee of the House of Commons. On December 19 of this year I announced a number of changes in relation to the tax.

It is important for the hon. member to get up and speak in his caucus and tell his leader, the Hon. Jean Chrétien, that it is important now that he should be giving the orders and that Allan MacEachen should not be giving the orders.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, this party supports our leader in instructing the Senate to fight the GST and seeing that it is killed.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rideout: Co-op Atlantic, the largest co-operative in Atlantic Canada has determined that the effects of this flawed GST will give its competition a $1.3 million a year advantage. For six months, the co-operatives have been attempting to meet with the government and remedy these inequities, all to no avail. Co-op Atlantic has now publicly supported the Senate in its fight to kill the GST. Retail co-operatives have been shuffled from one government department to the other.

When is the government going to address their concerns and remove the flawed GST?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member said that his party supported the leader, I noticed that there was only scattered applause.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, was that for Jean Chrétien or Allan MacEachen?

An hon. member: They used to do that for John Turner.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Jonquière.

COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications. Hon. members are aware how important it is to Francophone members to have a French news channel that will serve all Francophones in this country.

One amendment to Bill C-40, the proposed broadcasting legislation, would oblige the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to offer this service to Francophones and Anglophones alike.

My question is this: is our government favourable to this idea and does it support establishing a news channel for Francophones?

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the government is aware and conscious of the fact that the establishment of 24-hour French news service is of great interest to the French-speaking population of Canada.

Since last year when the CRTC rejected their request for a 24-hour French news service, Radio-Canada management have been working on a new application which will take into consideration the objections raised by the CRTC.

I believe that Radio-Canada is about to file a revised application, but no decison has been made about the date when the new request is to be submitted.

The task force looking into the economic situation of Canadian broadcasting will examine the capacity of Canada's broadcasting network to accommodate new services, including specialized services.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead, only one question, please.

QUEBEC'S RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead): In the absence of the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

We all know that in Quebec City today the Bélanger-Campeau Commission began its hearings on the constitutional future of the province. We also know the answer given by the Deputy Prime Minister to a question I raised in this House on June 28 concerning Quebec's right to self-determination, and we know the answers given yesterday to the same question. Does the Government of Canada recognize that Quebecers are free to decide their future, to determine their political status, and to plan for their economic, social and cultural development?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology indicated in the House yesterday, this is a resolution that was brought forth by the Quebec wing of the Conservative Party of Canada.

Resolutions come forth in this manner from time to time from various regions of the country. As a matter of fact, there are regional policy conferences going on throughout the country and there will be a national policy conference that will take place in 1991. At that time, any policy initiatives or resolutions will be considered to the fullest extent. That is the normal process for a political party to function. If the hon. member wants an invitation as an observer to come to that conference, I will see that it is arranged for him.

AGRICULTURE

Mrs. Louise Feltham (Wild Rose): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Last February 26 the minister and the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture reached an agreement which will experiment with a harmonized systems of standards for meat and poultry inspection.

Can the minister apprise the House of what progress has been made with respect to this matter?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is true; there was an undertaking by the Secretary of Agriculture for the United States and myself to try to work toward a harmonized system of border inspection based upon the equivalency of two inspection systems. There is obviously a process it has to go through. We were able to initiate that change through regulation.

In the case of the United States, it has to go through a public hearing process. There are a number of interested groups that wanted to appear to make comment on this proposal. That is still being undertaken, but I can assure the hon. member that the resolve to move toward this kind of an arrangement is very strong and the commitment is fully there, on both sides of the border. I hope that, after the success of going through the process, we will be able to implement a temporary measure which hopefully will become a permanent measure.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Loiselle that Bill C-83, an Act to revise and amend the law governing federal trust and loan companies and to provide for related and consequential matters, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): When the House took recess at 1 p.m, there were five minutes left for questions and comments following the speech by the hon. member for Moncton. I will now recognize hon. members who wish to continue the period for questions and comments. The hon. member for Etobicoke North.

[English]

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today embodies a subject which has long been of concern, both to the government in office during the early 1980s and the one in office through the latter part of this decade. More generally, it is a bill that should be of interest to all because of its central importance to our future economic growth. Our ability to muster and to direct our savings into productive uses depends directly on our ability to structure our financial institutions in such a way as to ensure both efficiency and probity. The key words in financial institution legislation which we have before us today must be solvency—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order, please! I would ask all hon. members to co-operate with the Chair and carry on their private conversations outside the House.

I may also remind the hon. member for Etobicoke North that we are still in the period for questions and comments, since we have not yet resumed debate.

[English]

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, I had not noticed that there were any questions or comments. I was responding to the introduction of the subject again. If there are any questions, I should of course be prepared to cede the floor and to continue whenever you are ready.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Resuming debate. The hon. member for Etobicoke North.

Mr. MacLaren: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the question of financial institutions raises basically the problems of solvency, the concerns about probity, the question of competition and, finally, the need for national control and ownership.

The way that Canada orders its financial institutions and markets to a surprisingly large extent influences the way that we order our national objectives. "By following the money flows in the market economy", one observer has noted, "and dissecting the institutions that structure that flow, we can learn a great deal about the uses to which the society's resources are put, by whom, and how control is obtained and exerted." That is, in a sense, what we are doing today. We are discussing a fundamental question concerning the future of our country. It is that question that I wish to address today.

Allow me to begin with a question. How can our financial institutions best respond to the growing internationalization of markets and, more specifically, to the likely takeovers that will threaten Canadian control of its technology as well as its commercial and financial resources?

Over the years we have seen a variety of pressures for change arise in the Canadian economy that have led to the development of the legislation that is before us today. One of the principal forces that has made for change in financial institutions is inflation. The volatility of interest rates has led to shortening of the terms of both assets and liabilities in Canada, so as to reduce thereby the risks of borrowing at short term and lending at long term.

Over a period of time, with the shortening of terms of lending in Canada, institutions formerly active in long-term instruments have sought out increasingly short-term funds. They have sought a better matching of their obligations and of their assets. That has led to a crowding in the short-term intermediation of financial dealings. It has contributed directly to the blurring of the four institutions that we have traditionally recognized in Canada; the brokerage houses, the banks, the insurance companies and the trust companies. That blurring of institutions has in turn led to increasing problems of regulation. Obviously, if institutions become blurred, more indistinct than they traditionally have been, problems of regulation arise.

Equally, when we recognized in Canada some years ago the necessity of increasing deposit insurance, one result was that trust companies had their way opened to participate yet more actively in the total area of financial intermediation. The Bank Act revisions of 1954 and 1967 only increased the blurring of distinctions among the so-called four pillars of the financial world by allowing the banks first into consumer loans and subsequently into mortgages.

The result of this has been that the banks have become increasingly active in areas that had hitherto been the preserve of trust companies. Equally, as I mentioned, as a result of increased deposit insurance, the trust companies have become more and more active in deposit taking, an area that had traditionally been the preserve of our chartered banks.

Yet more recently, we have seen the entry of banks into the brokerage business. A few years ago the government, partly in response to an initiative taken by a chartered bank, enabled the banks not only to enter into the brokerage business, but to acquire the assets of brokerage companies. The consequence is that today there are, in effect, no major independent brokerage houses. That fourth pillar of our traditional financial community has now disappeared, in the sense of being an independent or stand alone entity.

Also, Mr. Speaker, over the years we have seen regulatory change leading to pressures for further regulatory change. You begin to change one regulation and you find soon that you must respond to other changes that are demanded as a result of the first change you made. So we have pressures from the mere fact that over a period of decades Canada changed its regulation of financial institutions, but that has led in turn to yet more demands for change.

The parallel to that has been that the provinces' increased activity in financial regulation. The provinces have been more active in their imaginative approaches to financial intermediation, both with regard to deposit-taking institutions, that is trust companies, banks and co-operatives, and in the regulation of insurance and other financial activities which were traditionally the preserve of the federal government.

Another factor that has made for increased blurring of distinctions among financial institutions and, hence, increased the pressures for a re-examination of the regulation of financial institutions has been the globalization of financial companies.

We have seen the changes that have been introduced in other countries leading to pressures for change in Canada. I speak not merely of the United States, although the implications of the free trade agreement for financial institutions are many, but also of recent initiatives in Europe which have had the effect of reducing the distinctions among financial institutions. This in turn has contributed to similar pressures in Canada so that Canadian financial institutions can compete internationally on what has been called a level playing field.

I spoke of solvency being one of the primary concerns. Today it remains a concern that all our financial institutions serving the public can guarantee their solvency through good business practices but this leads to the yet more basic question of whether banks should be regulated. The essence of that question is: Do you regulate institutions when institutions are becoming increasingly indistinct, or do you regulate the activity itself? The legislation we have before us today chooses to go mainly along that second route.

We have also seen the standards of competition and efficiency being applied to our financial institutions in terms of whether they are internationally competitive. We have seen questions arise of whether there are more possibilities of conflict of interest in the growing combination of financial institutions. We have seen concern expressed increasingly and, most recently, in the case of the entry of Amex into Canadian banking, about the role of foreign corporations in what hitherto has been largely a Canadian dominated industry.

There is yet a more fundamental question. The relative importance of direct financing through equity markets has declined over the years. There has been greater reliance on financial intermediation through credit from financial institutions such as banks and trust companies. That trend has been increasing. We also saw in Canada a rapid growth in demand in the 1980s for consumer and mortgage loans and a shift by non-financial corporations away from bond and equity financing to bank loans. As I have already noted, the increased level and volatility of inflation and interest rate uncertainty led both borrowers and lenders to turn to shorter term liabilities and assets, providing trust and loan companies with a new competitive niche in the total lending market.

Legislative changes have led to increased competition across traditional institutional lines. The lowering of reserve requirements on banks' term deposits and the removal of ceilings on bank loan rates improved their ability to compete for term deposits. The increased competition in deposit markets forced financial institutions to extend and diversify their range of services.

As I noted a moment ago, all these and other factors, have led to the situation today where Canadians must ask themselves—and the government has raised the question directly by tabling its legislation—which route, and they are not necessarily exclusive, Canada wants to follow with regard to our financial institutions. If the goal is indeed deregulation of financial institutions, we can move toward commercial links. That is to say, through legislation, the government can permit companies to hold upstream financial institutions. You can then have in Canada, as we have seen developing in the last years, a commercial company holding upstream the ownership of a financial institution. That is a relatively new feature of the Canadian financial scene and one which this legislation, to a degree, attempts to address.

The alternative, and again I say it is not necessarily mutually exclusive, is the financial link approach. That is to say, the government can permit downstream holdings of commercial entities by financial institutions, principally the banks. As a result, if the banks were permitted to engage in activities and hold equity in commercial corporations, as they so frequently do in Europe and Japan, then Canada would obviously emerge with institutions not unlike the so-called "universal banks" of Europe.

The merit of such an approach, in the eyes of some, is that it would help guarantee Canadian ownership, not only of our principal financial institutions but also of manufacturing or service industries generally. On the other hand, the price that concerns others is the lack of competition to which that could give rise. The result could be larger and larger Canadian conglomerates, bringing with them misgivings about the limited degree of competition within our economy.

The creation of financial links, that is Canadian banks or trust companies holding equity in commercial corporations, could be argued to be in Canada's basic national interest. The government would then presumably need to consider a type of financial regulation whereby widely held financial institutions, which are at present only the chartered banks, limited as they are to 10 per cent ownership by any one entity, could enter the commercial sector.

Financial links along such lines would undoubtedly ease the evolution toward a credit based rather than a market based financial system. That is to say, commercial entities within our country would seek their financing more from financial institutions than they would from the equity marketplace. Not only would such a trend be compatible with the general thrust of the evolution of money markets world-wide, but it could also give Canada a more long-range and stable element in industrial planning.

Most important, by permitting financial links the government could be instituting one means of keeping Canadian assets in Canadian hands. If the concern among Canadians is that many Canadian assets have for past decades been moving gradually out of Canadian control, then banks, which are by definition widely held, could be a vehicle whereby Canadians could retain a controlling interest in a Canadian commercial institution, rendering it virtually takeover-proof by foreign interests.

Against that speculative background, I want to speak for a moment more about the legislation before us today, recognizing that its emphasis is to take Canada's financial institutions in a direction rather different from that which I have just touched upon. The bill empowers trust companies to a point where in many respects they will be able to compete yet more effectively and pervasively with banks. Well capitalized trust companies will have full consumer and commercial lending powers for the first time, putting them on virtually the same level as our banks.

I believe that it is clause 400 in the legislation that removes the present quality tests and substitutes instead a requirement that a company's investment adhere to a prudent portfolio standard. There is, however, no limit on consumer loans under $250,000 made to individuals. Similarly, subject to the approval of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, companies with more than $25 million in capital will be free of any restrictions on commercial lending.

The bill permits trust and loan companies to engage in a limited range of non-financial services for the first time or extends their ability to engage in such services: real property management, promotion of goods and services to credit card holders, selling lottery and even urban transit tickets. The principal extension in this bill is opening the way for deposit taking institutions to enter the life insurance business. Here of course is a major change, a major erosion of the four pillars that we have traditionally known in Canadian financial institutions. For the first time, the possibility is that Canadian deposit taking institutions will be able to participate directly in the insurance business.

The question that I would raise here is: What studies has the government prepared? What has it done in the way of examining the results of insurance companies being in the hands of the deposit taking institutions?

I hope the government would table whatever work it has done in this area, because I have an uneasy feeling that it is not very much. All Canadians would benefit if we could see more information about what work the government has done to determine the public interest in insurance companies being opened to ownership by financial institutions.

I realize that my time is running out. I only want to say in conclusion that the trust companies bill which we have before us also raises the question of limitations of ownership. The banks are subjected to a 10 per cent ownership limit. This bill, however, confirms that commercial entities can own trust companies up to a level of 65 per cent; 35 per cent must be held more widely.

Whether in the view of the Canadian public this is an adequate guarantee of their interests in ensuring probity and good business practices in financial institutions remains a question for further debate in committee. It is a question which will arise again when the next Bank Act revision comes before the House, and indeed when the revisions to the Life Insurance Act come before this House, two further occasions that will give rise to the sort of discussions we are having today. Indeed, until then the present legislation, even if adopted at an early date, will not become effective. I look forward to further discussions on those occasions.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the member would comment on this particular question. In this bill we have a situation where, as a result of the free trade agreement, Schedule II banks from the United States can come into Canada and do all the things that Schedule A banks can do, that our banks can do. Yet they are not bound by the 10 per cent ownership rule.

Does the member feel that this is an acceptable treatment of a foreigner, treating them one way, which is different from the way the Canadian would be treated?

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member does indeed put his finger on a major policy flaw in the government's approach to financial institutions. The tip of the iceberg was the approval of the Amex Bank entry into Canada. Here we have a foreign institution, which is not primarily a bank in its domestic jurisdiction, being permitted to act as a bank in Canada when Canadians are denied a similar opportunity.

Whether you think that the commercial entities in Canada should be permitted to own banks is another question, but it remains a remarkable anomaly, not to say a bizarre anomaly, that you permit a foreign non-bank to be a bank in Canada.

I agree with the hon. member that the free trade agreement provisions, whereby Canada has opened the way for American financial activity in Canada to a degree which Canadians do not have in the United States, is patently unfair.

What the government did in the free trade agreement was to offer American financial institutions so-called national treatment in return for the United States offering Canadian financial institutions national treatment in the United States. However, the difference is that in the United States the banks are state regulated, whereas in Canada banks are federally regulated. The result is that American financial institutions are able to participate on a national level in Canada, whereas a Canadian financial institution is restricted, with some qualification, to one state.

I would have thought—and I am sure that the hon. member would agree—that the government, in the free trade agreement, should not have sought national treatment but rather sought greater reciprocity so that Canadian financial institutions operating in the United States could have comparable opportunities to those that American financial institutions do in Canada.

I think the point is quite well taken, but it should be directed to the government.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, because the hon. member is so knowledgeable in this field, I thought I should follow up with a supplementary question.

Since I know he has read this bill and is familiar with it, is it not possible under this bill—here is where the thing gets even more ludicrous—that a Canadian with lots of bucks can actually go into the United States, buy a bank and then bring that bank into Canada as a Schedule II bank and do all the things that our banks do here, and yet avoid the ownership rule? Is it not possible?

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether there are any regulations that would prevent a Canadian citizen from doing that. It is one more anomaly that we have gotten ourselves into not only through our own legislation but also through the free trade agreement with the United States.

The opportunity for the hon. member, myself or for anyone interested in this question—all Canadians should be—to raise it again will occur when the decennial Bank Act is brought before this House.

Recently the government acted to extend for one year the Bank Act beyond its normal decennial period. Whether we shall have that opportunity for further debate before the government changes, I do not know. It is yet another example of the inconsistency of our approach to foreign ownership of Canadian financial institutions.

The hon. member is probably quite right. I suppose on the face of it, there is no reason why, if a well-financed Canadian could buy a U.S. bank, he or she could not come back into Canada as a foreign bank operating in Canada, and do things that he or she, as a Canadian, could not do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Saint-Laurent—Cartierville—Visible Minorities; the hon. member for Timmins—Chapleau—Unemployment Insurance; and finally the hon. member for Saint-Léonard—The Economy.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, we have the first piece of legislation in front of us with Bill C-83 which makes up the government's package of financial deregulation measures.

This is a package which will include action not just with respect to trust and loan institutions, but also with respect to banks, insurance companies, extension of the Bank Act and a number of other financial institutions which have been of concern to business people. It is not just the business people but communities across this country that have been looking for this package of reforms to our financial institutions for some time.

My own suspicion is that this first piece of legislation is, in fact, put before us in a form which will not in the final analysis represent what the government wishes to have considered for reform in terms of trust and loan companies.

I suspect myself that this has been brought forward in a sense as a promise to financial circles within the country that the government is acting in this area where it has not seemed to be taking action very quickly. We will, in fact, see a package which will include a similar approach to the different financial institutions which will probably include a revised piece of legislation with respect to trust and loan companies.

However, I think that the broad direction which the government is taking with respect to financial institutional reform is fairly clear to see. It is a direction which was set out by the junior finance minister in his comments when this bill was introduced. It is an approach which we have discussed in the finance committee of the House in somewhat more detail in the context of briefings which have been given to us by representatives from the Department of Finance.

The key thrusts of the government's new approach, as the minister laid them out and as they seem to be reflected in the briefings that we have received are, first, that we shall see some quite different ownership rules for financial institutions. There will be a good deal of loosening up of the constraints which have existed in the past, as far as ownership constraints are concerned. We will see, for instance, a loosening up with respect to the involvement of foreigners within our country. We will see, as a consequence of the free trade deal which my colleague mentioned earlier, that United States financial institutions are treated virtually as if they were Canadian financial institutions. That is going to be one set of new directions.

The second set of new directions is to reduce the barriers which have existed in the past among the various financial institutions in this country. It has not been possible, for instance, for insurance companies to have investments in banks in the past. It has not been possible for banks to have investments in insurance companies. Similarly, trust and loan companies have been given certain specific tasks which they could undertake and they have been told that they could not extend their ownership to other forms of financial institutions, such as securities houses, such as insurance companies and banks. So that is going to change.

Third, there is going to be a set of what the government calls improved prudential rules. What, in fact, are improved prudential rules? They are, essentially, an approach which, as I read it, puts much more self-policing power in the hands of financial institutions themselves. Financial institutions are given the authority and the responsibility to make certain that there is no internal self-dealing. They are given the responsibility to see to it that, for instance, if there is cross-ownership, that that cross-ownership of other financial institutions does not lead to special, competitive advantages as a consequence. I have to say that this self-policing approach is something which we look at with considerable scepticism. Frankly, we are not prepared to condemn it outright at this point, but we will ask some very tough questions as this reform of financial institutions goes forward, because we think it represents an area of serious risk for this country and for the people who put their investments in the various financial institutions.

Finally, the government says that this is an attempt to modernize the company rules which exist for the various financial institutions. By and large, that is not something that provides special difficulties for us. This particular legislation has not been changed since the beginning of the First World War. There are all sorts of potential areas for modernization of company legislation which should be applied to this financial area of jurisdiction within our economy.

That is the government's approach. What about the Liberal Party's approach? You might have thought from listening to the last speaker, who is the trade critic for the Liberal Party that, in fact, the Liberal Party had considerable doubts and was raising considerable questions about this piece of legislation. In fact, the critic responsible for financial institutions for the Liberal Party made it very clear in her comments, when she started debate on behalf of the Liberals, that the Liberal Party favours this piece of legislation.

It is especially interesting to see why this deregulation was favoured by the Liberal Party.

Mr. Fontana: Tell us about your program of nationalizing banks.

Mr. Langdon: We are coming to my program. Do not worry about that. Do not be sensitive. You should be proud of the position which your critic took. The Liberal Party's critic said they favour this bill because globalization is taking place, that world globalization was a new reality, and because of globalization, it is necessary to help Canadian financial institutions to meet tougher competition. That is precisely the sort of message which the government itself sent. So in the crucial area of economic management, as in so many important areas, one finds that the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party stand for essentially the same thing. They both support the deregulation of financial institutions. They both support it for essentially the same reason; because there is globalization taking place and our financial institutions have to become tougher and stronger and have to be better able to fight the rest of the world.

Let me make some points about this approach from both the Conservatives and the Liberals. We should not be prepared to permit the two business-oriented parties in the House of Commons simply to rewrite legislation without a quarrel, without being challenged when that legislation is, in fact, going to be so detrimental, in our view, to many consumers across this country.

Let me suggest, that it is important, for instance, to look very carefully at the fact that since 1980, in less than 10 years, 23 trust and loan companies in the country have been federally chartered. In addition, since 1980, a great number of trust companies have collapsed.

I could go through the list of some of the larger ones just to demonstrate it. The Crown Trust Company collapsed with an estimated loss of $930 million; Fidelity Trust, $791 million; Greymac Trust Company, $240 million; Seaway Trust, $300 million; Pioneer Trust, $201 million; the Columbia Trust, $99 million; the Northwest Trust Company, which collapsed just in 1987, $275 million; and finally, perhaps the most scandalous case of all, the Principal Savings and Trust Company, which collapsed in 1987 with losses of $116 million.

With these kinds of disasters which our trust and loan companies have suffered in recent years, it is not good enough to stand up and say: "We support this legislation", as the Liberals have done. It is not good enough, as the Conservatives have done, to bring forth legislation which leaves it to self-policing to see to it that things will work out well in the future for those who invest in our trust companies.

We also see within this bill absolutely nothing with respect to disclosure of the various service charges of trust and loan companies. In the case of banks, the government says it is going to enforce such disclosure of service payments. But in the case of trust and loan companies, despite quite ambiguous legal advice, the government is not prepared to take the chance, despite the fact that trust and loan companies compete directly against chartered banks in the country. Again, it is not good enough on the part of the Liberals and the Conservatives to say this is an answer, when there is nothing in here about disclosure of service charges.

It seems to us quite clear that this legislation is set up in such a way as to assist financial institutions to take each other over, but to prevent those financial institutions from all-out competition with each other. In other words, this is a bill designed to see to it that the financial institutions involved in this bill have their cake and get to eat it too.

In short, this legislation is going to establish, without question, greater financial monopoly throughout the country. It will not be with this piece of legislation alone, but it will be with the whole package of financial deregulation which the Conservatives are putting into effect and which, so far, the Liberals are supporting. We are going to see greater monopoly control.

We are also going to see a situation established in which all-out competition is not possible. It will not be possible in this approach by the Conservatives and Liberals for financial institutions to compete with each other. In their support for this legislation, we are getting from the Liberals and Conservatives the worst of all possible worlds. Therefore, we intend to oppose this piece of legislation. We intend to raise very tough questions in committee and we intend to see to it that this legislation is given the kind of scrutiny which eventually gives Canadian consumers across the country a sense of real competition amongst their financial institutions.

We also intend to see to it that there is real security given to those people who invest in our banks and our trust and loan companies so that we do not have, as we have had since 1980, a total of almost $5 billion in losses on the part of our banks and our trust and loan companies. Consumers deserve competition to give them protection and investors deserve serious regulation to give them protection as well.

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I was quite impressed by the ability of our debator to wait until the last 30 seconds to give us an opportunity to understand the issues that he wanted to address in the debate. I am impressed that he was able to repeat what members from my caucus, over the course of the debate on Bill C-83, have indicated are very essential elements of rectifying the legislation before us. That is, ensuring that there is security of deposits for depositors, that there is better service available to those who are going to be dependent on the financial service sector, and that there will be an opportunity to enhance the ability of all those pillars to compete on the domestic front and on the international front.

One of the questions I would ask the hon. member for Essex—Windsor this. Does he not think that it diminishes the import of those very basic and solid principles by distracting not only the House, but all those who would want to understand better the flow of debate on this very important legislation? He has trivialized the discussion and made references to incomplete statements that he picks and chooses from debate of members on both sides of the House.

His major concern with respect to this legislation is not that we can bring it forward to committee, analyse it, dissect it, critique it, and bring forward the appropriate amendments to make it something that Canadians can feel comfortable with. In fact, his big concern is that the Liberal Party has made the kind of recommendations that cause him some consternation and, in fact, that the Liberal Party might be in a position to present the kinds of amendments that he would so dearly love to support.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, the Liberals get themselves into this problem so often. Their official position before they start debate is that they support the bill. They think it is a good thing, and it is because of international competition. Their critic gets up and says so. We get up and make our criticisms and comments, as my colleague who is responsible for financial institutions made in his original speech. Then the Liberals start to back-track and say: "Gee, we forgot about some key elements here. We had better flip through this bill really carefully and see if Rodriguez was right." In fact of course, as usual, my colleague from Nickel Belt was right, because he and I have been at the finance committee. We have been working quite hard trying, right from the ground up, to improve the approach that the government has taken.

I certainly hope very much that the Liberals will come forward and make some amendments. Frankly, they have put themselves in a difficult position through the fact that their critic got up and said that they favoured this bill. In favouring this bill, they make it quite clear that, as I suggested in my comments, the parties that are oriented to big business in the country both feel supportive of this legislation.

Well, we make no apologies for not being supportive of this bill. Our critic said that when he got up to speak and it has been the position of our caucus right from our analysis of the bill itself.

If it is possible to improve the bill in committee, of course that is useful. As I suggested and as the trade critic of the Liberal Party agreed, this piece of legislation before us is in all probability just a stalking horse. It is just a preliminary piece of legislation to tell the financial community: "Don't worry, guys. There is something coming that will cover the whole range of institutions."

Let us talk about the whole range of institutions. Let us see to it that we get it right. Let us not accept a faulty approach which is going to leave consumers unprotected and those who invest in these institutions without the security which good solid regulation would give them. That is why we are against this bill and we will fight it at this stage of second reading.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, after listening to my colleague present such an excellent expose of the bill and, of course, clearly repeating the line that the New Democratic Party has taken about its concerns on Bill C-83, I want to ask him this particular question.

In this bill the government is finally going to put into effect regulations, rules, a law concerning bank service charges. Lo and behold, trust and loan companies are going to be allowed to act and perform like banks. Yet, Bill C-83 is unable to impose on trust and loan companies such a pussy-cat proposal as envisaged in Bill C-9 on the trust and loan companies. The government is using weasel words like: "Well, we can't impose these bank service charge rules on trust and loan companies because they are in another jurisdiction."

What confidence does that inspire in consumers? In fact, trust companies and loan companies can draw on the CDIC, which is the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. Most of those who have drawn from that have been trust companies because those are the ones that have gone belly up. Yet, we cannot say to trust companies: "You jolly well will be subject to the bank service charges legislation if you want to continue to participate in the CDIC." Where is the logic?

• (1600)

An hon. member: There is none.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I think that my colleague has picked up an important point which both he and I made earlier in our speeches.

That is both the Conservatives and the Liberals are supporting legislation which does not follow any logic. There is a complete lack of logic to say that banks and trust and loan companies on the one hand should be able to compete better against each other and they should be able to buy each other out to a certain degree.

Yet, on the other hand, to say we will have disclosure rules with respect to service charges or banks, but we will not have disclosure rules with respect to trust and loan companies, is illogical.

It is even more illogical than that because the government has seen fit to say that it will enforce disclosure rules with respect to interest rates on the trust and loan companies. It will not enforce those disclosure rules on what are often substitutes for interest levies, that is the service charges which trust and loan companies levy just as banks levy.

There has to be a logic to this legislation if it is to be accepted by this House and by this country. Otherwise, we will see more and more bank, loan and trust company collapses of the kind that this government across the aisle has seen take place under its jurisdiction and which the Liberals saw take place under their jurisdiction prior to 1984.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. members across the way for this tremendous vote of confidence which they just gave me, all two of them.

It is interesting that we should be talking partly about bank service charges because I just said to the hon. member for Nickel Belt that the way the banks are going, you can hardly walk by the outside of a bank these days without having a service charge debited to your account.

I grew up at a time when we still believed, at least the popular mythology was, that the banks were there to serve the public. There were these respectable dour institutions that Stephen Leacock made famous and which was later turned into an animated film of people going into the bank and being very respectful.

Now, of course, those of us who still go in and try to have some genuine human relationship instead of going to a machine are forced to pay for every time that we do this. Of course, they will set up a chequing account and then you are not charged for writing cheques, but you are charged for the cheques.

In the end, what it amounts to is that somehow they get you. Somehow you are paying for everything that allegedly the bank is doing for you. You are in fact paying for it.

In my riding, there was a branch of the Toronto–Dominion Bank at the Kern Park Shopping Centre which served the entire east end of Transcona. It was there for years, since the houses started to go up in that end of town. It not only shut that down, but the main branch in the town of Transcona lost the commercial banking which was shoved miles down the highway around to Kildonán Place shopping centre.

Now all the merchants in that place, used to dealing with that bank for years and years, are being forced to travel a great distance in order to serve the convenience of the bank. I am told it is not working out that well, which is good, and it may be that they might move back. Hopefully they will reopen the branch at Kern Park but they have not done that so far. All they have set up is some kind of remote teller, I am told, which is really handy for senior citizens to have to stand at some remote teller out in 40 below temperatures in the winter trying to figure out which buttons to push.

This is the kind of service we have been getting from the banks lately. It does not surprise me, therefore, that Canadians are not as disturbed as they should be when they hear that perhaps the government will be allowing others to enter more and more into the kind of services that banks provide.

There is a concern there, as members from Nickel Belt and Essex—Windsor have pointed out. If you are going to have institutions like trust and loan companies behaving like banks, they ought to be regulated like banks, which is a point that the banks make as well and something that certainly has a certain amount of internal coherence to it as an argument.

I think one of the things that we should be concerned about here as we enter into this first in a series, as I understand it, of bills having to do with the deregulation of the financial institutional sector is that this government has learned absolutely nothing about the effects of deregulation. It is embarrassing as a Canadian to have this sort of mimicking of what goes on in the United States happening all the time in Canada. You know, whatever was the fad 10 years ago in the United States, give it enough time and it becomes the fad here.

That would be bad enough, except that generally just as the fad is catching on here, the Americans are catching on that what we are about to imitate is not working. This is true of airline deregulation, and it is also true of financial deregulation, not to mention a few other sectors that have been deregulated. I will resist the temptation to go on about rail deregulation.

The fact of the matter is that in the United States where this kind of deregulation has already taken place, we have seen the result. The savings and loans scandal has robbed hundreds of thousands of ordinary American citizens of their savings, of their life's work so to speak, as a result of the government eliminating by legislation their responsibility to ensure that companies into which ordinary Americans, in our case Canadians, entrust their savings, that the companies act in a way that does not put at risk those savings. Yet that is just the kind of thing through deregulation that the government is now contemplating in its own way.

The same thing has happened with airline deregulation. Airline deregulation has not been what it was touted to be. It has resulted in less public safety. It has resulted in worse service for a great many cities and regions of the United States. Yet we are imitating that in Canada. Soon we are going to find that airline deregulation did not result in increased competition and all of the things that have been said for it. We are going to end up with one airline with a monopoly over everything. They have learned nothing.

They have learned nothing from airline deregulation, they have learned nothing about the extent to which deregulation is not the panacea that so many people make it out to be, that it does not lead to this sort of orgy of competition that benefits the consumers. What it does lead to is an orgy of shenanigans between one institution and another, between various kinds of corporate monkeys who find various ways to screw the public and line their own pockets. That is what deregulation amounts to. It is an abdication of the government's responsibility to ensure that if we are going to have a marketplace society, that market operates in certain ways and operates in ways which protect Canadians who would trust their savings to those particular institutions. We do not want to be right about this, just as we did not want to be right about airlines deregulation and about rail deregulation, that it would mean a decrease rather than an increase in rail traffic. But it has meant a decrease in rail traffic because deregulation has lead to the increased use of trucks and this has environmental and public safety consequences.

Right now, near my riding, at Symington yard, you could fire a cannon through those marshalling yards and not be worried about hitting a boxcar because of the continuous erosion, policy-driven by this government, of the use of rail to move products in this country.

We see this result; it was predictable. We are predicting here today that deregulation of financial institutions will lead to some comparable disaster down the road for the public. It is not predictable in its detail but predictable in its certainty that someday we will rue the fact that the government has embarked on this abdication of responsibility. It is not complete abdication; there are rules and regulations and there are new rules and regulations but it is part of a process, part of an over-all philosophy on the part of this government, which says: "We trust the private sector. Those nice fellows out there would never put at risk the savings of senior citizens. They would never put at risk the financial well-being of ordinary Canadian families. They are a good bunch of guys; we do not have to watch them; they will police themselves".

This kind of naivety, and one is never sure whether it is naivety or deliberate, contrived stupidity, is the kind of thing that gets a lot of Canadians into trouble because they still trust that the government feels some residual responsibility for their financial well-being and that it would not allow banks, trust companies, and loan companies to really rip them off or to really put at risk their savings.

That trust is misplaced. It was trust that was misplaced to the extent that there were Canadians who trusted this government not to cut a bad deal with the United States over the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. Trust was misplaced in a variety of other ways where Canadians could not really bring themselves to believe that any, duly elected, Canadian government would actually sell them down the river. And yet, that is exactly what happened with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. That is what has happened with airline deregulation and, in particular, in smaller towns and cities which now have less service and inferior service to what they had before. And it is certainly true with respect to transportation deregulation as a whole and the way in which our highways are now being clogged by more and more trucks. Just the other day, Mr. Speaker, I was on my way to the airport and a truck went by which was almost as long as a train. It had two units.

I see the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in the House. He was the Minister of Transport who started this awful trend back when the Liberals were in power in 1984. They began, with great fanfare and great hope, the era of transport deregulation. What do we see now when we read the Auditor General's report? The Auditor General says that the government was not ready for deregulation and that it has led to all kinds of problems in airports and in other places.

The same thing is true here. We are going to have deregulation because of an ideological fixation about deregulation and we are not going to be ready for it. The government is not willing to anticipate all the problems that deregulation will bring, because to anticipate those problems would be to have a critical consciousness about what it was actually doing. That is something of which this government has so far been incapable, particularly with respect to anything that fits its ideological obsessions.

Mr. Speaker, as you can see, we have a great many concerns about this particular piece of legislation. I am sure that hon. members of my party will have a heyday in committee, exposing all the ways in which this bill inadequately addresses the possibilities for putting at risk the savings and the financial benefits that many Canadians now have locked up in these various financial institutions. I hope that the government, for once, will listen. I hope that the government will listen to the concerns of the public. I have noticed that it listened to the concerns of some of the public, that it has not permitted the banks actually to sell insurance on the premises.

I remember when the insurance agencies were very concerned about this. It was the only time in my life I ever heard from the insurance agencies. Normally they are not a great pool of NDP supporters, although there are a few I know who actually do support me, but generally speaking they are not exactly what one would call an NDP constituency. They certainly came a-knocking when it looked like the banks were going to be given the opportunity to sell insurance over the counter.

The banks are going to be entitled to own insurance companies; the same with the car dealers. Again, there is not a great pool of socialists out there on the used and new car lots of the country, but they also came a-knocking when it looked like the banks were going to be able to lease cars directly, which this bill does not permit. But it does permit a certain kind of leasing.

In both cases the foot is in the door. In both cases the banks have received what they wanted and are well on their way to the one-stop shopping for various financial services that they wanted to get. I think that is regrettable because, if we are going to have a competitive financial sector, we should not have departed from the traditional four pillars of the financial sector in this country and allowed them all to collapse into each other, and particularly allowed them to collapse into each other in a way that will permit more foreign ownership.

I was interested in the question that the hon. member for Nickel Belt posed to the Liberal member of Parliament who was speaking.

Mr. Rodriguez: Liberal banker.

Mr. Blaikie: The Liberal banker who was speaking, that great Liberal who is actually—

Mr. Rodriguez: A Tory.

Mr. Blaikie: A Tory who is more at home in terms of financial policy with the government. This is not a secret. This is well known to all, except perhaps the hon. member who continues to be a Liberal in spite of himself. That is not unusual, is it, for Liberals? They are able to swallow not just any sort of twist or manipulation.

Mr. Rodriguez: Themselves.

Mr. Blaikie: They are also able to swallow themselves entirely on occasion, as the leader of the Liberal Party recently did on the GST.

The question, though, that was asked was: Could Canadians, who would not be permitted to do something as Canadians, do something if they were able to disguise themselves as Americans? By buying an American financial institution they would be able to do things in Canada, because it was American, that they would not be allowed to do if that same kind of institution was Canadian owned. What was the answer? Yes.

This is a very strange form of national treatment. National treatment generally means that you will treat someone from another country the same way that you would treat your own nations. What we find in this anomaly is not national treatment, but discrimination in favour of non-nationals so that people can do things in Canada, if somehow they cannot be Canadian, which they could not do if they were Canadian.

This takes the special relationship that the Prime Minister promised that he would establish with the United States of America when he was elected in 1984 to new heights or depths, depending on your interpretation. What is not possible for Canadians will be possible for Canadians if somehow they have enough money to buy an American company to do in Canada what they would not be able to do if they had a Canadian company which was the very same.

Obviously there are a lot of problems with this deregulation initiative at the philosophical level. The fact is that the government seems to have learned nothing from the empty promises of deregulation which we have seen unfulfilled in other areas. I am sure some very real problems of detail, policy and regulations will be uncovered and, I hope, addressed adequately in committee.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has just spoken did his usual rant and rave routine about this particular piece of legislation.

I was amused to hear him because, after all, if he had been here to hear the hon. member for Kamloops in his very reasoned exposé on this particular piece, I think he would have been surprised to see the number of points of disagreement. I will not go into the details of that, but I will put to him the question I put to the hon. member for Kamloops. Perhaps he is more familiar with his party's policy book than his party's House leader. The hon. member for Kamloops was unable to be specific on this point, and I am hoping the hon. member will be. I understood that as opposed to the idea of regulating banks, it had been the policy of the New Democratic Party to wish to nationalize banks.

Mr. Epp: I thought it was to abolish them.

Mr. Milliken: No, no, they did not want to abolish them. The minister says he thinks it was to abolish them. No, they do not want to abolish banks; they want to nationalize banks. They want to take them over and make them instruments of state policy. This has been their policy for many years. I remember reading about it when I was a school boy. I understand that it has been their policy for wellnigh 50 or 60 years. I do not know how long. Perhaps the hon. member could illumine us on that too.

The hon. member for Kamloops told us this morning that this policy had been ditched. Like their policy on the Senate they had seen the light and, instead of getting rid of the Senate, they now want to save the Senate. Instead of seizing the banks and nationalizing them, they now want to regulate them.

I was told by the hon. member for Kamloops this morning that in fact the NDP policy did change in this regard. It now favours regulation of banks, not nationalization. I wonder if the hon. member could tell us when this policy was changed. At which convention and on which date? I have not seen the evidence of the change. I do not recall reading it.

My recollection is that the policy has simply been suppressed in order to make the New Democratic Party more palatable to more voters. While I am delighted to see that happen, given the party depends so heavily on its claim that it is a very democratic institution responding to the will of its members, I would like to know when the members in a convention changed this policy of nationalization, scrapped it, and came up with this policy of regulation, which incidentally has been Liberal policy consistently for over 50 years.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, it is curious to hear a Liberal get up and talk about Liberal policy, because I have never been able to determine that there is any such thing. Unlike the New Democratic Party, the Liberals never have policy conventions. Every 10 years they have a policy convention whether or not they want to because it seems like a good idea in terms of public relations. The policy debates and conclusions, if they manage to come to any conclusions, are never binding on the caucus. They are not binding on the leader. They are just sort of like stimulating little events that Liberal members of Parliament go to once a decade whether or not they want to. I do not think we have to take anything from the Liberal Party in terms of how our party works.

Mr. Simmons: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. One of the clear rules that the member must observe is that he cannot mislead the House. He has just misled the House.

His leader is going around the country telling the people of Canada she is against Hibernia and she goes to Newfoundland and says she is really for it. They have no policy. They are on both sides of every policy.

He should not mislead the House.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order, please. I do not think this is a point of order. The hon. member for Winnipeg Transcona.

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: For the life of me, Mr. Speaker, I cannot remember saying a word about Hibernia.

Mr. Simmons: You said you had policies.

Mr. Blaikie: I guess the hon. member must have been watching an entirely different program when he was out in the lobby.

Mr. Rodriguez: He woke up.

Mr. Blaikie: He came rushing in here thinking that I had said something that I had not said at all. I recommend to him that if he wants to come down here and make spurious points of order, he should at least be on the right channel when he comes in here.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg Transcona is absolutely right. I abjectly apologize to him. He did not say they had a new policy. On that he is absolutely right. They have no policy. They have two contradictory policies on everything including Hibernia.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, we do not have two policies on Hibernia. We voted against Hibernia. When the Leader of the New Democratic Party was in Newfoundland, she said the same thing about Hibernia that we have said in this House, that it is not a good deal for the people of Newfoundland. That is why we did not vote for it. We make no apologies for not voting for it. The people of Newfoundland will come to see in short order that it does not contain the benefits for the people of Newfoundland that the hon. member has been sucked into believing by the people on the other side.

Somehow the hon. member for Burin—St. George's has been taken in by the hon. member for Provencher, the two of them now make a pair defending Hibernia. This only goes to prove my point that there really is no difference between the government and the Official Opposition. When it comes to major economic decisions like Hibernia, they all believe in the same sort of thing: giving hundreds of millions of dollars to the corporations to develop the country, to make sure the only true benefactors of these megaprojects continue to be the oil corporations and others who are always involved somewhere at the trough when it comes to these kinds of megaprojects.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not think we were discussing Hibernia this afternoon. I want to tell the hon. member that in the place they now support, namely the other place, Hibernia will be approved at five minutes to this hour. I invite the hon. member not only to support the Senate at that time but also to support Hibernia.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, it may indeed be approved in the Senate. It certainly has not been improved in the Senate. This does not change our position with respect to Hibernia. What happens in the other place has not, for that matter, changed our position with respect to the current Senate. We believe that it should be abolished.

Mr. Blaikie: I just wish it was a position that Conservatives had held over the years. All of a sudden everybody over there is for abolishing the Senate. It is too bad that they did not join with the NDP, and before that the CCF, when we were calling for the abolition of the Senate over the years. Before it was a place for retired Tory hacks and flacks in the majority it was a place for retired Liberal hacks and flacks. If anything comes out of this current crisis in the Senate, perhaps it will be new momentum toward Senate abolition or reform.

Perhaps I could answer the question which was put before I was so rudely interrupted by a colleague of the very person who asked me the question. I am interested that the member for Kingston and the Islands finds the whole idea of public ownership so reprehensible. Perhaps that would explain why his party has been so wimpish on the idea of privatizing Petro-Canada.

Is that why they hardly raised a stink at all about the privatization of Petro-Canada? In their heart of hearts those things which have come under public ownership in this country, like Petro-Canada, have come under public ownership against the real wishes of members of the Liberal Party of Canada. We see them now using the opportunity to get up and denigrate the idea of Canadians owning something like a major oil corporation or a major bank.

We already own the Bank of Canada. Is the member saying that we should privatize the Bank of Canada? Is that what he is saying?

Mr. Worthy: Mr. Speaker, would you check to see if there is unanimous consent in the House to have this bill referred to the finance committee rather than to the legislative committee?

• (1630)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is there unanimous consent for the bill to be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the other parties and there is a clear indication to call it five o'clock at this point. However, I think it may take us a few minutes to get everything cranked up for Private Members' Business and so maybe we can suspend to the call of the Chair. As soon as we have the members available for Private Members' Business we can continue at that time.

SITTING SUSPENDED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is there unanimous consent to suspend the sitting of the House during pleasure?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

At 4.33 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

CHARLOTTETOWN CONFERENCE

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

The House resumed, from October 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Proud:

That in the opinion of this House, the city of Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island should be designated as the "Birthplace of Canada" to mark the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the 1864 Charlottetown Conference of the Fathers of Confederation.

And on the amendment of Mr. MacAulay:

That the motion be amended by deleting the words "Birthplace of Canada" and substituting the following therefor:

"Birthplace of Confederation".

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia—Matane): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to support the motion by the hon. member for Hillsborough, as amended to emphasize that Charlottetown should be recognized as the birthplace of Confederation and not of Canada.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, this initiative is intended to mark the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the 1864 Charlottetown Conference.

I have no quarrel with providing an official designation to mark the events that took place in this city in September 1864. The importance of the decisions that were made and their impact on our common destiny should be recognized by all Canadians.

However, we must not forget that Upper and Lower Canada were founded in 1791, nearly a century before the Charlottetown Conference. In fact, well before that date, the word "Canada" had been used by Jacques Cartier when on August 13, 1535, two young Indians in his company told him how to get to "Canada"; they were referring to the village of Stadacona, on the present site of Quebec City.

In fact, if we read official correspondence at the time, we find that the name Canada was synonymous with New France. However, in 1763, Great Britain dropped the name New France, using the designation Province of Quebec instead. The fact remains, however, that Canada designated, first of all, a geographic area washed by the waters of the St. Lawrence.

Canada was designated as such by the Constitutional Act, 1791. A considerably larger Quebec was divided into the provinces of Lower Canada and Upper Canada. In 1841, the two provinces were united as the Province of Canada. You will agree this was well before 1864.

Mr. Speaker, I add these few details because I want to give Quebec the place it deserves—its true status as the birthplace of Canada.

The Charlottetown Conference was indeed a crucial moment in our history. It acted as a catalyst, uniting strong forces that until then had been active, but in isolation, in the colonies of British North America.

It was a first step toward building a modern nation and ultimately, led to its gradual expansion from coast to coast.

When on September 1, 1864, Charlottetown welcomed representatives of the United Province to the conference, it opened the way to union with the other colonies of British North America. A month later, this new spirit of co-operation was further expressed at the Quebec Conference, where those who would henceforth be called the Fathers of Confederation continued the work begun in Charlottetown.

They agreed on 72 resolutions, the so-called Quebec resolutions, which would form the basis for a union that would be officially recognized on July 1, 1867, by the British North America Act.

However, Mr. Speaker, without those initial steps in Charlottetown, subsequent developments would never have been possible. I am therefore pleased to support a proposal to designate Charlottetown as the birthplace of Confederation. Thanks to the federative pact that came out of this conference, Canada, after having been first a French and then a British colony, was able to become the vast country that has aroused the admiration of so many people throughout the world.

Perhaps I may quote a comment by U.S. historian S.E. Morrison, who said that never since the Roman Empire had local designations expanded so far beyond their original territory as did Canada and the St. Lawrence.

In 1989, we celebrated the anniversary of the conference where the foundation of Confederation was laid. Charlottetown has every reason to be proud of giving birth to a political and administrative superstructure, to which each member freely agreed to belong.

As the birthplace of Confederation, Charlottetown will remind us of the seeds of unity it sowed in our common history.

Although the capital of Prince Edward Island belongs above all to its inhabitants, in a broader sense it also belongs to all Canadians. That is why, Mr. Speaker, we want to stress its historical value, and I also think it would be a good opportunity to recall the principles that formed and continue to form the basis of our evolution as a nation.

Briefly, they can be identified as follows: liberty, diversity and solidarity.

Liberty first of all, because, as I said earlier, today's Canada was born of a union that was entered into by free agents. In 1864 as in 1867, every member of that union believed, and history has borne this out, that they were right to do what they did and that united they would be strong.

Diversity—and I think it is appropriate to remember this, Mr. Speaker—because the British North America Act recognized the distinct identity of Quebec society by creating its own territory and recognizing its Civil Code, its language and its religion.

Finally, solidarity, because it and it alone has ensured that liberty and diversity have become a fact of life in Canada. Without the spirit of solidarity that inspired our ancestors, Canada would not have been able to deal as effectively with the problems it faced at the time. Although today's challenges may be different, I am sure that a belief in the principles established by the Fathers of Confederation will help us meet these challenges as well.

We Canadians, as human beings and with our legacy of diversity, have forged common traits and common values that today form the very essence of our national identity. Liberty, diversity and solidarity—sharing good times and bad, glory and despair, joy and sorrow.

I think this permanent commemoration of the 125th anniversary of the Charlottetown Conference of the Fathers of Confederation would be a good way to remember its guiding principles. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to reiterate my support for this proposal to designate Charlottetown as the birthplace of Confederation, because this city has played an important role, both tangible and symbolic, in this great adventure we call Canada.

[English]

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton—York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I take very great pleasure in the opportunity to speak on this private members' motion of the hon. member from Prince Edward Island. Coming from New Brunswick, a sister province of Prince Edward Island and one of those provinces which joined with Prince Edward Island and the rest of Canada in 1864 to talk about the idea of Confederation, I am particularly honoured tonight to participate in the debate on this resolution to pay tribute to Charlottetown as the birthplace of Confederation. It is with great pride that I stand before my colleagues to say a few words about the events that led to the birth of our nation.

Coincidentally, I am told that it was on this date, November 6, 1867, that Canada's Parliament was convened in session for the very first time. It is a particularly significant afternoon.

To remember our past is no mere exercise in nostalgia. It is a way of understanding who we are as a people and where we are going. I am reminded of the words of Canon Lionel Groulx, the prominent historian from Montreal, who wrote: "A nation cannot separate itself from its past any more than a river can separate itself from its source. No generation is self-sufficient."

It is good and it is important to take a long-range view of Canada. We should realize that the constitutional discussions of 1990 arise from the vibrant passages from our history books. Their origins lie in those very first exercises in consensus building conducted by the Fathers of Confederation almost 125 years ago.

What happened in those early days of Confederation and what is happening now are part of a continuum in all parts of an ongoing effort to work through our differences and to find mutually acceptable systems of federalism for all communities of Canada. It is part of the process of defining ourselves and of developing a national identity for this dynamic young country of ours.

Let us hope and pray that the Citizens' Forum on Canada's Future, created by the Prime Minister last week, will be truly successful in its mission to rekindle the vision of a strongly united Canada in the minds of all Canadians as we proceed on our historic constitutional journey in the months that lie ahead.

As others have said, the Fathers of Confederation had to establish the basis for a national identity that would encompass divergent interests and needs. They were successful, but they could only begin the task. It was up to future generations such as ours to continue to build on the past and to shape the nation of their dreams and the nation of our dreams. That process is far from over.

As we have known in recent years and months, there has been pain and discord, and there remains much healing to do because of the often painful emotions which have been stirred in the heat of debate. Nevertheless, I believe that we will come out of this process much stronger and much more committed in all ways than ever to staying together as a united Canada.

Yes, we Canadians do have our differences from coast to coast, from region to region, from culture to culture, and from language to language. And, yes, we sometimes argue and we debate vigorously about those differences. And, yes, sometimes we find the ties that bind are either too tight or too loose. But the longer we stay together, the more, I believe, we appreciate what we can gain through this great Canadian experiment; this marriage of provinces, territories and regions; and this embracing of two official languages and so many cultures.

The motion before us today to honour the role of Charlottetown in the Canadian nation has great merit. Such recognition is important, not only to Charlottetown, and not just to Prince Edward Island, but to all of Canada. To pass this motion will help us to celebrate the great achievement of nationhood which we enjoy, and it will help to guide us toward a better understanding of our origins.

I agree with my colleagues who have said that we must take care to be correct about the wording. If we were merely to say that Charlottetown is the birthplace of Canada, we would be losing sight of some very important historical facts. The term "Canada" was long in use before 1864 when the the Charlottetown Conference brought colonial representatives together to discuss the idea of a federation of British North America which has become Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in the 16th century the word "Canada" was used as a synonym to describe France's colonies in New France. Explorer Jacques Cartier even referred to the St. Lawrence River as the river of Canada. The first Canada therefore was a French Canada, and the foundations of this nation were laid mostly by French-speaking settlers.

[English]

Our Canadian nation actually took root in the soil of Quebec. Later, the Constitutional Act of 1791 created two political entities bearing the name Canada. These entities, Upper and Lower Canada, were the origins of the modern provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

In 1841, as you know, Mr. Speaker, the two entities were joined for a few decades into one province of Canada. It was a delegation from that province which met with the maritime representatives in Charlottetown in 1864 to propose the idea of a federation. In fact, originally the Charlottetown Conference was only to consider a union between Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, my own home province. The government of the Province of Canada at that time asked permission to send representatives to that meeting. It then put forward its proposal for a larger union.

The practical details of the union were hammered out a month later at a conference in Quebec City. This meeting agreed to 72 resolutions, known as the Quebec Resolutions, which became the basis of the statute that would unite some of the British North American provinces into the confederation called Canada.

The vision presented was of a new nation from sea to sea, one of great national wealth and potential. It would offer both the security of a federal parliamentary system and the autonomy over provincial affairs. It would give the people of Quebec more control over language and education, and would recognize Quebec's separate legal system, the civil code, which remains in practice in that province today.

At the very time that our U.S. neighbours were engaged in a bloody civil war, our founding communities were seeking the peaceful road to union. They were reaching out to one another in a spirit of compromise, generosity and trust. Can we do less today?

Embedded in our first constitutional document was recognition of the distinct nature of Quebec. We continue to respect the original pact with Quebecers in Canada and we seek to strengthen its meaning in today's circumstances.

Being precise about the details of history helps to remind us how much we really are a blend of different cultures and traditions and how much we owe to both the French and the English-speaking elements of our roots.

I want to support the amended motion that Charlottetown be designated the birthplace of Confederation. Not only was Charlottetown the host city for the Fathers of Confederation in 1864, but it also contains the original building in which the leaders met. Its restored sector beautifully preserves the atmosphere of those times.

Just last year, Prince Edward Islanders celebrated the 125th anniversary of the 1864 Conference with festivals, exhibitions, and theatre productions. Although that anniversary year is over, it is still important to keep the memory of 1864 alive. We must ensure that Canadians do remember those first crucial steps toward the formation of our country, particularly as we draw closer to 1992 which will be the 125th anniversary of our Confederation. It will certainly be a great occasion for celebration all across Canada.

We have much to celebrate. We have created something great here on this continent. Our different cultures and communities have maintained their distinct identities while enriching one another.

[Translation]

The union of French and English Canada was the basis of the vision of a tolerant, humane, generous, forward-looking and open Canada. Of course we did not quite achieve all these goals. Indeed we have covered a lot of ground since that first pathetic debate at Charlottetown, but we still have a long way to go.

[English]

In closing, it is up to all Canadians to continue the work of reaching out to one another and building a new climate of trust and understanding that can only come from faith and goodwill of every citizen of the country. A nation is based on much more than a constitution. It is based on a sense of community. We, in the House, have a special responsibility. We must all work in our respective constituencies to heal the wounds, to spread the message of hope, to strengthen the trust, and to ensure the future unity of this great country, Canada.

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, I am most pleased to stand in the House today and speak to Private Members' Motion No. 498, as put forward by my honourable colleague, the hon. member for Hillsborough, and amended by another hon. colleague, the hon. member for Cardigan.

The motion reads, and I quote:

> That in the opinion of this House, the city of Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island should be designated as the "Birthplace of Canada" to mark the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the 1864 Charlottetown Conference of the Fathers of Confederation.

One might ask why I, the member of Parliament for Nepean, Ontario would be speaking on this motion today. Prince Edward Island is my birthplace. As a native islander—I was born in Summerside, Prince Edward Island—as the daughter of a North Bedeque potato farmer, as the descendant of ancestors who arrived on the island in the year 1779, as a former student of Prince of Wales College in Charlottetown, and as an expatriate sister of two brothers and a sister still residing on the island, I feel more than qualified, and especially honoured, to speak to this motion.

P.E.I. is probably one of the most unique provinces of Canada. It has never lost its sense of history. There is tremendous pride in its heritage and its residents have gone to great lengths to preserve this heritage. However, there is one stone that has been left unturned and that is the purpose of the motion before us here this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I will make note here that my research material has been taken largely from historical documents written by Reverend Francis W. P. Bolger, PhD., St. Dunstan's University, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

In the Legislative Council Chamber in the Provincial Building in Charlottetown on September 8, 1864, the guest speaker concluded his speech to conference delegates by saying:

> I believe, from all that I can learn that the Provinces will, ere long, be one great country or nation, from the Pacific to the Atlantic. Never before was there such an important meeting as this held in the history of British America; and it may yet be said that here, in little Prince Edward Island, was that union formed which has produced one of the greatest nations on the face of God's earth.

Fifty years later, the government of the day erected a bronze tablet in commemoration of Confederation, on which was engraved:

> Unity is strength. In the hearts and minds of the delegates who assembled in this room on September 1, 1864, was born the Dominion of Canada. Providence being their guide, they built better than they knew.

Listen to the words and think of those words that were used: "Provinces will be one great nation".

This was said way back in those years, Mr. Speaker.

They said: "The Union has produced one of the greatest nations on earth". They also said: "Unity is strength". We need to reflect on those words today.

At a time in our history when some are questioning Canada as a federation, I believe it is time to renew our vows, so to say, as a nation; Motion M–498 will do just that.

In April 1864, the three maritime provinces met with the idea that a union of the three would be beneficial to all.

Interestingly enough it was P.E.I. which opposed such a union as it was feared they might lose their independence.

However, they did take the initiative to explore whether the "Canadian" delegation—and the Canadian delegation was referred to by the member for Fredericton—Upper Canada and Lower Canada, would meet with the maritime premiers to determine if a union of the whole of the British North American provinces was feasible. It was agreed that there would be a meeting and Charlottetown was chosen as the location.

The Charlottetown Conference opened on September 1, 1884. John A. Macdonald made a long speech in favour of the union.

The "Canadians" were indifferent as to whether the maritimes entered individually or as a unit.

The shelving of the maritime union actually happened during the conference and this in turn helped the cause of Confederation.

A very important result of the conference was that it was unanimously agreed that a federal union of all of the British North American provinces would be advantageous if it could be based upon principles that were just and equitable to the several provinces. I think that holds true today, Mr. Speaker.

The delegates went so far as to agree provisionally on certain principles which should be incorporated into the larger plan. On the consummation of the union, all debts would be assumed by the federal government.

It is abundantly clear that the Charlottetown Conference did accomplish a great deal with respect to the future constitution of Canada. The agreement that a federal union was feasible and the broad outline of a constitution for such a union was indeed a major accomplishment.

The adjustment of the details was destined to be a painful task, but an important step had already been taken.

The most important effect of the conference was that the deliberations at Charlottetown had revealed that there was sufficient agreement on the principle of a federal union to justify the continuance of the discussion in a subsequent formal meeting at Quebec.

The conference provided an opportunity for the leading statesmen of the several provinces to become acquainted with each other and to cement the personal relationships that are intangible necessities in any formal negotiation. Moreover, the broad agreements reached facilitated the completion of a federal scheme at the Quebec Conference. John A. Macdonald, who may be regarded as the architect of the Canadian federal union, made references to the Charlottetown Conference in the Canadian Confederation debates in 1865, which can be regarded as very adequate analyses of the results of the conference.

John A. Macdonald asserted in his first debate on February 6, 1865, that "the broad agreements reached at the Charlottetown conference greatly facilitated the acceptance of the federal union at Quebec".

Later, in the same debate, he claimed that if the Charlottetown Conference had not been held, federal union could well have been delayed for many years. Macdonald's tributes to this conference placed its importance as a prerequisite to federal union beyond question.

From these considerations, I trust that you will agree that the Charlottetown Conference was a very important step in the formation of our Canadian nation.

I regret, however, that few accounts of Canadian history recognize its importance. Too often references to the Charlottetown conference limit their focus to the following type of remarks: "The Fathers of Confederation met in Charlottetown in September 1864, and there it was decided to have a formal conference in Quebec in October".

The author I referred to earlier in my opening comments, Reverend Francis W. P. Bolger, believes that such a cursory treatment of the conference leaves a tremendous gap in our knowledge of the story of Confederation.

Although the political baby, "Confederation", was not born at the Charlottetown Conference, Dr. Bolger felt that the provision of the "cradle" was of great significance and should be recognized as such in Canadian history.

I have related the historical events surrounding the conference as related by Reverend Dr. Bolger and I am most grateful for his writings. He has been widely recognized as the pre-eminent scholar for the island's history. It is only right that his writings be used by myself and written into the House of Commons Hansard in perpetuity for all to see.

The 125th anniversary of Confederation will be celebrated in 1992 and it is hoped that this narrative will help Canadians better understand and be more aware of their history.

Today we see a fractured Canada. We see tensions between provinces. We hear of provinces talking of their independence and separating from the federal union. We need to find unifying symbols that will again continue to tie us together.

The recognition of Charlottetown as the birthplace of Confederation will have a profound economic benefit to the island, but it will also reaffirm Prince Edward Island's commitment to Canada and Canada's commitment to the island and its capital, Charlottetown.

It has been a real privilege for me to speak here today in the House on this motion. As referred to by the member for Fredericton, I think that this is one of the glues that can help tie this nation together. I think we should reflect very seriously on the intent of the motion and what it is intended to do.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, just a brief word in support of the motion which is before the House. Other hon. members have done a good job of recounting the history of pre-Confederation, Confederation itself and post-Confederation. They have given us a lot of welcome advice on the things we ought to keep in mind at this particular juncture in Canadian history.

I might say that at least in my history lessons that I received at school, Charlottetown did receive full credit. I had not heard about the subsequent conference in Quebec. I think that Charlottetown certainly has received a good deal of the credit for being the birthplace of Confederation.

I think it is a time for us to remember that what Sir John A. Macdonald called the happy opportunity of founding a great nation still is an opportunity, an opportunity that always has to be worked on, that is a continuing opportunity that no country, no nation can take for granted. I think there is an element in the Canadian consciousness whereby we assume that our country is different from other countries, that it is not exposed to all the tensions and travail of human history. I think we found out, I hope early enough, that we are not and that it takes a lot of work to keep the country together, particularly one as large and as diverse as Canada.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to bring to the attention of the House the remarks made by the now retired Secretary General of the Commonwealth, Sonny Ramphal. He appeared before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade in what was sort of a parting testimony, if you like, at the time when we did not yet know the fate of the Meech Lake Accord.

Whatever our individual or our collective opinion might be about the Meech Lake Accord, I think that what he had to say to the committee at that time is still instructive, even in the post-Meech Lake failure period. What he said was this, and it was very much like something I had to say in earlier debates on the Constitution in the early 1980s: if Canada, a country with so much going for it, with a strong democratic tradition, with a history of solving problems co-operatively and peacefully, cannot reconcile within ourselves the problems that come from having a country with more than one linguistic community and a variety of peoples from all around the world, if we who, if you like, are the prototype of the world, if we, with everything going for us, cannot determine how to live together and somehow fragment and break apart, then this will be a terrible signal indeed for the rest of the world.

I think it is something that we do not keep in mind often enough, and that is that a lot rides in terms of moral and political example on how Canadians deal with each other. For a long time, the nations of the world have looked to Canada and its experience as an example of where people of different cultures, different languages and different traditions, have been able to come together and form one country.

If we now, at a time when the world more than ever needs to learn that lesson, unlearn ours, then we will not only be doing a disservice to ourselves, to the heritage which so many people have pointed out this afternoon and to the future, as it pertains to our own children and grandchildren, but we will be doing a disservice to the world because we will be saying: "Even here in Canada with everything going for us, we were not able to manage it; you guys should forget it". I think that is a terrible message to send out to the rest of the planet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. MacAulay) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): On a point of order, the hon. member for Hillsborough.

Mr. Proud: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I want to thank all those who spoke today and on October 11.

I want to thank the three parties for supporting my motion. Certainly, as has been said here this afternoon and as was said the day on which this motion was introduced, now is the time that we should look at the things that happened in Charlottetown in 1864 and consequently went on in Quebec to become this great country.

I thank all of those who participated very much. It is a great day for Charlottetown. It is a great day for Canada.

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If Your Honour would seek the consent of the House, we could now call it six o'clock.

Also we should bear in mind the previous notice that you had from the other place. I am expecting that Black Rod could be interrupting our Adjournment Debate. If so, then we could continue the Adjournment Debate following our return from the Senate. If perchance we should complete our Adjournment Debate before the Black Rod arrives, could we recess our sitting until he does arrive so that we could fulfil our obligation to the other House?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Does the House agree with the suggestion of the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Last May, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship to explain to us why he was unable to hire representatives of visible minorities, particularly women. I also asked him to tell us when he thought he would remedy such a deplorable situation.

The minister being absent, the Acting Prime Minister answered that objectives for 1991 would indicate an increase of 3.8 per cent in the number of visible minority representatives in the public service.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that this reply does not really provide us with any guarantee as to the number of women from visible minorities who will have jobs in the Public Service.

[English]

I would like to quote an answer that the Minister of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship gave during a talk show on multicultural policy in Alberta on May 14 of this year.

To the question "You're trying to create equal opportunity, aren't you", the minister responded:

> Equal opportunity. Equal access. You have to have the ability, of course. When I look around, and when we see there is absolutely no opportunity and no (way) for any of the visible minorities to be included, of course we have difficult police-racial-minority relations.
> We ask that (an) institution examine not only its own program of cross-cultural understanding but find a way to include some of them within (for example) the police department, so that there will be a better relationship and there will be an ability of the police and collegiality to understand how minority and community cultures think.
> Let me turn it around. You've got a visible minority population in Toronto of 20 per cent. Go to any institution. Do you find them in relative numbers? Not at all—So we need a little catching up to do."

I would like to know how the minister hopes to have a better participation from the institutions in the integration of visible minorities, and women in particular, when his own department does not lead the way.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if there is a Department which should have a large proportion of visible minority people, it is that of Multiculturalism and Citizenship. If this agency wants to get results, it should set an example.

• (1720)

How could it ask institutions to hire at least the minimal percentage required by the government when this very government does not meet its own standards?

If it is important for this agency to show leadership with regard to visible minorities, Mr. Speaker, it is also vital that it should open the way for women. This does not mean doubling the clerical staff establishment. It is important for women to assume more and more decision-making positions. There are many competent women. The government should have the political will to seek them out, accept to pay the price and stop being afraid of them. If the minister is really sincere, he will find the way to hire in his own department women from visible minorities in executive positions. Only then will he be in a position to require others to meet the standards.

[English]

If multiculturalism is the reality of this nation, as the minister said, how does he intend to reflect this reality in his own department?

The minister affirmed the following:

> I guess my obligation is, in addition to helping people in their awareness—to reach out and seek the partnerships; it is to challenge every institution of the community so that it examines itself and makes sure that it provides opportunity for the full Canadian diversity to participate.

Is he asking others to do what he is incapable of doing?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I realize that departmental staff cannot be changed overnight, but the Minister was given responsibility for Multiculturalism and Citizenship some time ago. How much longer do we have to wait to see visible minorities and women in senior management?

Mr. Speaker, I believe that if we want things to happen, we must clearly identify what objectives should be reached and when. It is too easy to say that things have improved and that we are making headway. Going along at a snail's pace is not exactly what I would call progress, but perhaps that is why this issue is still on the agenda.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Minister responsible for Multiculturalism and Citizenship will soon be able to tell us that a number of management positions, in his own department, for instance, are held by representatives of visible minorities. Meanwhile, we in the Liberal Party will continue to put pressure on the government to achieve balanced representation.

[English]

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to address the question put by the hon. member opposite on May 14 regarding the employment opportunities for visible minorities within the public sector.

The federal government is strongly committed to the principle of equality in the work place and to fair employment practices over all. Awareness, dedication and a solid, concrete plan of action have been the essence of the government's approach. We have sought to ensure that all employees are free from discriminatory attitudes that stifle individual productivity and limit personal growth.

There has been a comprehensive program of employment equity in place since 1983. It clearly requires that all government departments and agencies develop action plans, including specific numerical targets for improving the representation of designated groups.

Over the years, significant progress has been made in promoting the employment of members of visible minority groups in the Public Service. As of 1989 the number of visible minorities within the Public Service had risen to 6,829, compared to 4,159 in 1985. Over the four-year period the percentage rate has nearly doubled from 1.7 per cent to 3 per cent of the total work force.

Treasury Board has also established the Visible Minority Employment Program to recruit members of visible minorities actively. It has allocated more than $15 million and 400 person-years for the period 1988 through 1993. In addition, an advisory committee on the employment of visible minorities is in place to address issues of concern to visible minorities.

The present government clearly recognizes the unfortunate reality that certain segments of Canada's population are still confronted with serious disadvantages in the job market. That is why the government has determined to take a pro-active role by seeking to create a workforce in the Public Service inclusive of aboriginal peoples, members of visible minority groups, persons with disabilities, and women. They are a part of this nation's work force and deserve to be optimistic about their future.

The President of the Treasury Board indicated that considerable progress has been made in recent years on this front. At present, an increase of 3.8 per cent in minority representation within the Public Service is being projected for 1991.

With respect to the representation of women in the Public Service, we have redoubled our efforts. All major categories within the Public Service have experienced steady increases in the number of women participating since 1984 when the government was first elected. In keeping with this, it is equally vital that women be represented in the upper levels of the Public Service and in positions of authority. The representation of women in the management category has increased from 7 per cent in 1984 to 14.1 per cent in 1989.

The government stands firmly by its commitment to promote the increased representation of visible minorities and women within the Public Service. More than ever it is determined to ensure that the equality of opportunity and access guaranteed by our Employment Equity Act, our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and our Canadian Multiculturalism Act is reflected within the Public Service.

Yes, there is still room for improvement, and we in the government are the first ones to admit it. We are determined to spare no effort in ensuring that the Public Service of the 1990s and beyond reflect the rich diversity and broad experience of all Canadians.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber, the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bill:

> Bill C-44, an Act respecting the Hibernia Development Project and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto.—Chapter 41.

[English]

The hon. member for Timmins—Chapleau has the floor.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Cid Samson (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, when I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration last week if she would consider granting retroactive parental benefits to January, 1990, she gave me a very curt and blunt answer. She simply said "no".

Since then we have seen in the press many articles referring to the current confusion with regard to which new parents may qualify or not for these benefits. I understand the problems involved in putting together a new program, but I must again point out to the minister something she might have forgotten; pregnant women cannot put off giving birth until everyone has been properly briefed on the issue.

Not only is the minister creating tension at what should be a joyous occasion, but she is also hiding behind overworked government employees to avoid doing something.

In committee on October 25, the Deputy Minister and Chairman of the Department of Employment and Immigration said there would be newspaper ads on November 12 and brochures mailed to people currently on claim to inform them.

Meanwhile, it appears that employees of Employment Centres in Canada are being kept in the dark, as well as the Canadian public. The minister's office is saying on the one hand that in some cases parents of babies born before November 18 could still receive the parental benefits, providing they do not start a claim before the implementation date or even in some cases, if there had been a claim but the woman had gone back to work for 20 weeks, she could then apply for the benefits.

Other scenarios have also been outlined by the minister's office, but it seems that her office has not been able to make their wishes known across the country.

One must wonder, Mr. Speaker, what it will take for those in the front line, when you consider the massive lay-offs due to the recession. Clearly under the present conditions, there will be longer delays for people before they can receive payment.

When this is added to a complex, and I want to point out, mostly unfair reform of the unemployment insurance system, things can only get worse. Given the fact that the minister has not specified what could happen to people who are not fully informed prior to the implementation of these benefits, she is preparing another bureaucratic nightmare.

She should reconsider her previous decision and make parental benefits retroactive, if not all the way back to January 1, at least to when Royal Assent was given, to allow more people to qualify and also to simplify the process.

Given the current situation, she should also consider hiring more staff to expedite the process. The union representing employees at the Employment Centre, PSAC, has asked for an increase in staff for the past two years. What kind of a nightmare are these employees, who now have shortfalls, going to be facing with even more problems with these new applicants?

To make matters more difficult, she added some small benefits such as the parental benefit. I want to add that no one can argue that granting parental benefits is a bad thing, but in introducing this it should not be done on the backs and at the expense of other unemployed workers.

[Translation]

Last week, the National Anti-Poverty Organization, the Mouvement action-chômage de Montréal and the Ontario Coalition Against Poverty denounced the changes to the Unemployment Insurance scheme as one of the worst attacks against wage-earners.

We may well wonder if the figures quoted by Deputy Minister Kroeger in committee were a figment of his imagination.

The Deputy Minister claimed that, according to some studies, only 30,000 people would be affected by the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Yet, according to the figures provided by the Quebec Department of Employment, nearly 60,000 people will be affected by this reform.

[English]

Welfare cases in metro Toronto are expected to almost double from last year. The tightening of federal unemployment insurance rules is being labelled as one of the causes.

We also read in the minutes of the committee that the training aspect of the bill will not be in effect until January 1, 1991. The government has been collecting higher premiums since January of 1990, yet the programs are not in place. The government is making money on the backs of those who can least afford it. The government had an alternative but they clearly refused to look at one; the same way they refused to look at all other alternatives to the GST.

In Australia the government has decided to legislate a national training tax system, known as the training guarantee. This scheme will ensure that all Australian firms with an annual payroll of over $200,000 will spend a minimum of 1 per cent of payroll on approved training in 1990-91 and then the minimum will rise to 1.5 per cent of payroll after two years. There is an alternative that would have achieved the goal of maintaining and upgrading a highly skilled labour force.

The minister thought she would be better off with the easy way out, by taking away funding from a much needed program, particularly in these difficult times. She took the easy way out and working families must deal with the consequences.

We are looking for a favourable solution to this problem and I hope that the Minister of State for Employment and Immigration will rise and offer us a solution.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address some of the points made by the hon. member opposite. The government, and I am sure, most Canadians are happy that the Senate has finally seen fit to pass Bill C-21. Indeed, some of the comments that the hon. member makes today are directly related to the measures in that bill that are seen as improvements by many people in this country.

In respect of the member's comment that they implementation of Bill C-21 is a nightmare in some cases, I would appreciate some details rather than general allegations. My information is that the implementation of the bill is proceeding on schedule and that the local offices are well able to cope with the problems they face.

In so far as the provision of parental benefits is concerned, I would be remiss if I did not point out, for information purposes at least, that it is this government that saw fit to introduce them. We do not need any lessons from the opposition as to their appropriateness. The parental provisions of Bill C-21 represent a significant advance over the existing legislation, and have been introduced to recognize the legitimate concerns of Canadians who find themselves in the position of starting families and wishing to maintain an active attachment to the labour force at the same time.

The hon. member seems to think that Canadian families have paid for parental benefits since January, 1990. Nothing could be further from the truth. He did not correctly understand the minister's first press conference on Bill C-21 in April, 1989 and subsequent explanations on many occasions.

She has explained clearly and repeatedly that the economies realized from the new provisions respecting entrance, duration, and voluntary leaving employment without just cause would be poured back into the program in order to finance the significant improvements being made in the areas of training, parental benefits, benefits to persons over the age of 65, and so on. The increased premiums are not paying for the program enrichment.

The setting of the premium rate was announced by the Minister of Finance in his budget of April, 1989. It is in no way tied to the more generous benefits contained in Bill C-21. In fact, as the minister and her officials testified before the committees in the House of Commons and in the Senate, the freezing of the premium rates for 1990, 1991, and 1992 is designed to soften the impact on a yearly basis of the introduction of the Labour Force Development Strategy as a whole.

We also clearly said that if there were any deficits in the UI account were to accrue, the Government of Canada would—as it has done in the past—advance the necessary funds to ensure that the account is able to continue to pay the UI benefits that Canadians need.

I would also like to comment on the issue of retroactivity. The hon. member wants to know why the parental benefits are not made retroactive to January, 1990. No one would be happier than this government if this could have been the case. Indeed, the Labour Force Development Strategy was developed so that the parental benefits would come into effect on January 1, 1990.

However, the Senate of Canada, for reasons still best known to itself, chose to delay the legislation for almost a year. Thus, instead of coming into force on January 1, 1990 as we had planned, the parental benefits provisions will only have effect as of November 18, 1990.

People such as the hon. member who want to know why this took so long are best advised to pose their question elsewhere as the intent of the government in this respect has been clear and consistent. I regret that the passage of the bill was delayed so long and I believe that the hon. member will, upon reflection, feel the same way.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to you for this opportunity to take part in this debate on the adjournment motion about the issue which I raised with the Minister of Finance on October 11, as reported on page 141 of Hansard. My question had to do with the great many jobs being lost every day, including 3,000 at Air Canada, 1,500 at CN and 3,000 at Esso. To date, I should like to add the 700 lost at Marine Industries and approximately 1,000 at Kratt & Whitney in Longueuil. Also, the number of banruptcies is on the rise. A short while ago, as a result of several questions from the opposition, the Minister of Finance finally recognized that we are now in a recession.

What I found astonishing, Mr. Speaker, in the Minister's response to my question was this, and I quote:

> [—] Surely he acknowledges that the biggest problem that Air Canada has today is the increase in oil prices, which in turn has been caused by the international problem in the Middle East right now.

There is indeed a crisis in the Persian Gulf, Mr. Speaker, but that is not why Air Canada laid-off 3,000 people. I think the lay-offs are due to a much deeper crisis. It has to do, first of all, with the Minister of Finance's high dollar monetary policy. Tourism, for example, had a disastrous season. Suffice it to quote Claude Picher who was saying the following, just a few days ago, in an article published in La Presse on October 23. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read part of that interesting article:

> A harsh and inescapable reality is emerging from behind the official optimism of the travel promotion industry: Canada is headed for its worst deficit ever, and by far in The Tourism industry! The most recent statistics indicate that the peak season—July and August—is a disaster. If past trends are any indication we can already forecast that Canada's 1990 tourism deficit will be around $4.4 billion—an increase of 26 per cent over 1989 and 62 per cent over 1988. Even accounting for inflation the deterioration is spectacular. You will have a good idea of the damage if I point out that, at the time, 1988 had been labelled a disaster year!
> Of course, you can always say that Canada is used to that. Year in and year out our tourism deficit is rather significant. Particularly troubling this year—never mind the huge deficit—are the summer figures.

• (1750)

And there is more in the same article, Mr. Speaker. Here are specific figures:

> In July, foreign visitors—Americans mostly—made 5.6 million trips to Canada. This may look good, but it indicates a decline of 4.7 per cent over the same month last year.

So, Mr. Speaker, clearly Air Canada's problems have nothing to do with the oil crisis, but they can indeed be traced right back to the economic crisis created by the Minister of Finance, a made-in-Canada crisis. Should he stubbornly maintain his high-dollar monetary policy you can be sure that tourist—particularly Americans who usually come up to Canada in droves—will find our costs prohibitive and travel elsewhere. We are already beginning to see the economic impact on that industry.

Mr. Speaker, to prove that these economic policies are a disaster for Canada, we had the same day—I don't know whether it was a day for bad news—the 23rd of October, another article in the same La Presse, intitled "Competitivity decreasing in Canada". In the 1980s, Mr. Speaker, we were ranked second, but we are now sixth.

This is unacceptable! How can we stay competitive, now that we are in the 1990s and that the 21st century is fast approaching? If the minister sticks to its policies, we are sure to have a "made in Canada" economic disaster. He often refers back to the years 1981-82, but we were going through an international crisis then. What we are facing now is a made in Canada crisis resulting from the monetary policy of the Minister of Finance, the high Canadian dollar policy which is hurting the tourism industry terribly as we have said earlier. The high interest rates policy, which results in a much stronger Canadian dollar, is most harmful to Canadian manufacturers who are unable to keep up with the competition because of high financing costs. They must incorporate those additionnal costs into their operations and that is why prices are increasing.

That is all there is to it, Mr. Speaker! And when the Minister asked me if I had any suggestions, I said to him that he should first lower the interest rates. He should do it as soon as possible so as to restore confidence within the industry, create employment and have people working again. This would in turn bring about a viable economy and we could consider the future with some hope.

Mr. Speaker, you are signalling that my time is up now. I hope that the Parliamantary Secretary, who will be answering on behalf of the Finance Minister, will give us some indication that a considerable reduction is to be anticipated when the Bank of Canada announces the prime rate this week, as it does every Thursday, so that Canadians can continue hoping for a better future.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, this government recognizes that the Canadian economy is now going through an adjustment period that is a source of difficulties for many Canadians.

However, given the excessively rapid growth of these last years, the present economic slowdown should surprise nobody nor create a feeling of crisis.

This is normal in a period of strong growth when the demand for goods and services outpaces the productive capacity of the economy.

The vigorous expansion of our economy during the last seven years made for a tight supply on the labour and goods markets, resulting in destructive inflationary pressures. Had we not reacted immediately to dampen inflation, pressures could have built up in our economy and it would have been much more difficult and costly to eliminate them later on.

That is why this government developed and implemented wise fiscal and economic policies in order to better balance demand and supply while alleviating inflationary pressures. This will lead to a drop in interest rates and a return to a balanced and sustained growth.

We are in the middle of the adjustment period. We are aware that these adjustment periods always bring some real difficulties. However, it is important that Canadians recognize that these changing economic conditions ease the inflationary pressures that push up prices and business costs, erode competitiveness and jeopardize the jobs of Canadian workers.

[English]

I want to assure the hon. member that we are fully sensitive to how important the course of monetary conditions will be for the operations of business and our economy as a whole. Many voices have called on the government to lower interest rates in order to revive economic activity and avoid further job losses. However, attempts to create employment through an inflationary monetary policy would be self-defeating. It is critical that all participants in our economy recognize that the government's scope to alter monetary conditions depends directly on the continued reduction of inflationary pressures.

I wish to assure the hon. member that the government remains committed to the economic agenda followed since 1984. It is also creating the conditions for sustainably lower interest rates and balanced sustained growth.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

BILL C-86

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Conservative senators put off consideration of Bill C-86, a bill to provide over 66,000 Canadian families with pre-payment of the child tax credit before Christmas. The Liberal Senators offered to speed up passage of Bill C-86. The Senate Committee on Social Affairs was standing by ready to receive it, with the intention of passing it by the end of the day. Instead, the Conservative senators said they did not have their notes. They did not know enough about a bill that is only one page in length.

Why did the government not provide notes to its colleagues in the other place? Why did it not explain to the Tory majority that Bill C-86 requires urgent attention, that it was promised by the Minister of Finance back in February? Could it be that Bill C-86 is just another broken promise typical of this government?

Or, is it possible that the newly invigorated "Gang of Eight", enthused by their recent victory in inflicting the clawback and UI cuts on Canadians, want nothing to do with a progressive piece of legislation that could authorize the pre-payment of child tax credits to some of Canada's poorest families just before Christmas?

CO-OPERATIVE EDUCATION PROJECT

Mr. Jacques Vien (Laurentides): Mr. Speaker, on October 26, I had the honour of announcing, on behalf of the Hon. Marcel Danis, that a co-operative education project will start at the Saint-Jérôme CEGEP.

The co-operative education option offers students a chance to combine studies with job experience, thus making them better prepared to enter the labour market. Thanks to a federal contribution of $200,000, the Saint-Jérôme CEGEP will be able to add a co-operative education component in its curriculum. The CEGEP, in co-operation with business, will then be able to give students the tools they need to enter the labour market successfully.

The Saint-Jérôme CEGEP is to be commended for its involvement in the community, and I wish those students who take advantage of the co-operative education option every success.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, when it comes to backing its rhetoric on the environment with solid action, this government's record is sorely lacking.

A case in point is the decision by Canadian National to transport more than 2,000 tonnes of potentially contaminated soil from an industrial site in Halifax, 300 kilometres to River Denys in Cape Breton, rather than carry out the tests necessary to verify its acceptability at a local landfill site.

No, it seems CN could not be bothered to take the time. Nor could it be bothered to consult with the municipality of Inverness, not to mention with the local residents of River Denys. It was easier to find some private landfill operator who would not ask too many questions and then sneak the stuff in, hoping no one would notice. Out of sight, out of mind.

Well, it is not out of the minds of the residents of River Denys who are furious at the prospect of their drinking water being contaminated by the run-off from these materials. Nor to the municipality of Inverness which has had enough problems already with controversial landfill sites, and has had to serve an injunction to stop CN.

Mr. Speaker, all Canadians know how sensitive the disposal of hazardous wastes has become. No community wants to be a dumping ground for some corporation's garbage imported from somewhere else. Certainly, it should not have to be without prior consultation and not by a national Crown corporation on the tacit approval of federal and provincial governments.

CN's behaviour in this case tarnishes its public image and, worse still, erodes the credibility of all governments in the difficult dialogue with citizens over the appropriate disposal of industrial waste.

GOVERNOR-ELECT ANN RICHARDS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, it is not often that a Canadian member of Parliament has a chance to congratulate a United States governor—she will probably never hear it anyway—but I want to salute Texas Democrat Ann Richards on becoming the first woman governor in the history of the Lone Star State last night.

Now, I would probably disagree with Governor-elect Richards on some issues. But in one respect, her triumph over her Republican opponent, Clayton Williams, is a victory for women everywhere.

Not only did she have her share of discouragements in life; she persevered and came through in the face of Mr. Williams' rudeness, and particularly his unfortunate and shameful gaffe about women and rape.

My wife, Priscilla, and I were cheering on Ann Richards last night. While I know that men are not allowed to wear hats in this Chamber, if I could I would give a tip of my stetson to the first woman governor of the Lone Star State of Texas. Ya-hoo.

TAXATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): It is time once again for our corporate welfare bum of the week award. Today, we would like to present a special effects award to the Liberal Party of Canada for its illusory contribution to the tax system. Its latest concept is a Working Group on Fair Taxation.

The Liberal Party deserves special consideration because it has come up with such an impressive lineup for its committee. Its smoke and mirrors panel consists of such enlightened corporations as Peat Marwick which in 1988 contributed over $54,000 to both the Liberal and Conservative parties, and Coopers Lybrand which in 1988 donated over $62,000 to the Tories and $52,000 to the Liberals.

These corporate tax experts will no doubt help the Liberal Party keep in place the tax loopholes it put in place while it was in office.

We congratulate the Liberal Party for its portrayal of concern in trying to appear sincere about keeping the average Canadian in mind with its tax committee. There is no doubt in my mind that this group deserves our special effects award for the corporate welfare bum of the week.

CITIZENS' FORUM ON THE FUTURE OF CANADA

Mr. Clément Couture (Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and its 170,000 business members have publicly stated their support for the Citizens Forum on the Future of Canada, as announced by our Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker, the president of the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Tim Reid, also mentioned his satisfaction with the Prime Minister's comments regarding the need for putting our financial house in order, if we are to ensure Canada's prosperity during the 90s, and with his awareness of the need to reassess the roles to be played by governments and the private sector in the next few decades, if Canada is to succeed in the international arena.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Reid concluded his press release with a show of support, on behalf of the 500 local chambers of commerce and boards of trade, for the commission and its task to find out what Canadians think about the future of Canada.

HISTORIC SITES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, Fort Petrie as well as Fire Command Post and South Bar Battery are abandoned Second World War fortification sites that have been the subject of great debate in my constituency. I had hoped that government funding for the restoration of these sites would have been made available. However, there does not appear to be any financial assistance forthcoming. Because of the danger and possible safety risks for residents in this area, I must concur with the Municipality of the County of Cape Breton to have demolition commence as soon as possible.

I am certain the historical societies that have worked very hard at trying to secure funding for a restoration project will be very disappointed at this decision.

We must keep in mind, however, that the safety of residents must always take priority. We must secure a safe and secure community, especially for our children who live near these sights.

With this in mind, I urge the Minister of National Defence to commence with the necessary arrangements. I have toured these sights. I have met with the residents and, because there is no financial assistance, I urge the ministry to proceed with demolition expeditiously.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (St. Albert): Mr. Speaker, as we approach Remembrance Day, Canadians are facing a challenge of forging a truer understanding of and a greater love for one another and our country. It is most appropriate at this time that we remember those who fought and died so that we would have the freedom to take up this challenge.

While in many parts of the world there is conflict and oppression, in Canada we have the freedom to express our hopes and dreams as well as our concerns. This is a precious gift that we must appreciate and treasure.

On November 11, as we remember the men and women who fought and died in the service of our country, let us also permit the day to be a reminder of the need to show tolerance and understanding to all the peoples of the world.

Let us work together to find greater peace and harmony at home and throughout the world.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Minister of Indian Affairs, the hon. Tom Siddon, agreed to start discussions with the negotiating team in Kanesatake, which will consist largely of representatives of a coalition of factions supported by over 400 adult members of the band at Kanesatake. The minister also asked for the band council to be represented on the team.

Around the negotiating table will also sit representatives of the federal and provincial governments and of the municipality, parish and village of Oka.

Mr. Speaker, these arrangements are a good start towards dealing with the thorny question of transferring the 97 acres purchased during the crisis and negotiating a single, undivided territory for the people of Kanesatake. I hope the process will be open to the entire Indian and White population in my region, and I trust these negotiations will result in a final treaty between the two communities. I therefore urge all those who wish to take part in this exercise to do so in a spirit of bringing peace and prosperity back to this magnificent and unique area, Oka—Kanesatake.

Finally, I wish Mr. Bernard Roy, who will preside over the negotiations, every success.

THE CONSTITUTION

Miss Deborah Grey (Beaver River): Mr. Speaker, the Reform Party is wary and skeptical as to whether the Prime Minister has learned his lesson on constitutional affairs as far as his penchant for top–down, backroom manipulation is concerned.

Reformers are advocating a bottom–up, people–directed approach to constitution making, rather than the elitist or public relations approaches traditionally employed.

Reformers would prefer a series of constitutional conventions in each region, as well as by aboriginal people, at which delegates directly elected by the Canadian people and assisted by technical experts would debate and vote upon proposals for constitutional changes. The output of these conventions would then go to the traditional parliamentary and legislative processes for review and implementation.

Canadian citizens are concerned about and capable of ensuring that Canada enter the 21st century on sound constitutional footings. All Reformers ask is that Parliament trust the common sense of the common people and let Parliament get on with getting Canada's fiscal house in order.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I ask all my colleagues today to join me in saying:

Hey hey!

Ho ho!

The GST has got to go!

Tory bagmen are worried
They're running out of dough
Business cannot stand
Mr. Wilson or John Crow.

They decided on a dinner
At a Toronto harbour hotel
So Brian could leave by frigate
If it didn't go too well.

Protesters out-numbered patrons
They came from miles around
One broke through the cordon
And dressed the PM down.

But the PM would not listen
He threw the poor man out
First closure, now eviction
Are how Tories use their clout.

But the truth cannot be silenced
Three chefs were on the loose
To supplement the menu
They cooked Mulroney's goose.

And so the meal was ended
Brian got his just desserts
Together chefs and diners
Joined in the following words.

Hey hey!

Ho ho!

LEADER OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Cid Samson (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's first snowfall did not cool the electoral ardour of Jean Chrétien. Mr. Chrétien's recent statements indicate that he is prepared to fight, and I quote, "against the Mulroney government's right wing corporate agenda."

Will the road to Beauséjour be Jean Chrétien's road to Damascus?

Canadians, and especially voters in Beauséjour, may have their doubts about this miraculous conversion.

I must challenge the sincerity of statements made by someone who is so absent-minded he even forgets he was trained as a lawyer.

Obviously, if Mr. Chrétien, according to his statements, has decided to espouse the cause of the New Demcorats, he will have to take official steps to become a member of that party.

I may add, however, that my party reserves the right to cancel Jean Chrétien's membership as soon as he changes his tune, which should not be long.

LOW INCOME CANADIANS

Mr. Dave Worthy (Cariboo—Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, two nights ago co-operation among all members in this House allowed for the passage of the child tax credit bill. This bill will provide additional assistance for some 70,000 families, representing over 230,000 children.

On behalf of those recipients I commend the members of all parties in the House for recognizing the need for this bill.

However, right now there is another rebate for the same families awaiting passage in the Senate. The goods and services tax is designed to recognize not only children but includes 9 million Canadians living on low incomes. It could provide all of them with money that they need and deserve before Christmas but to do so it must receive immediate passage in the Senate.

I commend those senators who are attempting to do so.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE ECONOMY

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

Today, Statistics Canada reported that between September and October its help wanted index, a measure of the jobs available across Canada, fell by 3.5 per cent in Quebec, 8.9 per cent in the prairies, 13.7 per cent in Ontario, 16.8 per cent in British Columbia, and 17.1 per cent in Atlantic Canada. That means there are fewer and fewer job openings for the thousands of people losing their jobs now due to the recession induced by this government's policies.

Will the Prime Minister look at his help wanted index and start doing something meaningful right now for the thousands of Canadians who desperately want help to get out of the recession his policies have created?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no one is denying the significance of those figures; they are of concern.

I also say to my hon. friend that we have had a significant increase in employment over the past six years, which has led to a very high level in that particular index. I would caution him about reading too much into that particular index.

Having said that, we recognize the problems in the economy. We have been working to get interest rates down. These, as I pointed out to the House, have come down 1.5 percentage points since the early part of the summer. If the same conditions that brought that about continue, then we can see some further progress in that regard.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, economic experts have said that what the minister is talking about on interest rates is something that is too little and too late.

Yesterday, the government finally admitted that it has spent more than $400,000 of taxpayers' money on polls to find out something it should already know, and that is, Canadians do not want its GST. Surely the government is not going to spend another $400,000 on still more polls to confirm that we are in a recession and that thousands of Canadians and their families are being severely damaged by this government's policies.

Will the government stop wasting money on polls that simply confirm how unpopular and wrong its economic policies are and start doing something meaningful for real people, workers, farmers, and small business people who are being hit hard by this government's misguided economic policies?

• (1420)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no surprise at what the poll results are showing. This has been quite apparent for some while now.

I ask my hon. friend, if five royal commissions and task forces of experts that have looked at the existing sales tax say it must be changed, are we as a government supposed to ignore that?

Are we supposed to ignore what Jean Chrétien said in 1977 when he pointed out that the existing sales tax was causing our exports to have an additional burden on their backs when they go into the export markets?

Are we supposed to ignore what Allan MacEachen did in 1981, when he was sitting right here in this House of Commons and brought forward a budget which proposed a change in the existing sales tax system?

Are we supposed to ignore the Senate finance committee, dominated by the likes of Allan MacEachen, Michael Kirby, and Sid Buchwold?

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Jean Chrétien and the Liberals are speaking for Canadians when they say the GST has to be stopped. If the minister is interested in listening to Canadians, he will listen to Jean Chrétien and the Liberals who are saying in this House, across the country and in the Senate that the GST must be stopped.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Liberal senators, in accordance with policies announced by Jean Chrétien and the Liberals, voted in favour of an amendment that would exempt books and periodicals from the goods and services tax. However, the Conservative senators rejected this amendment. My question to the Prime Minister is this: why does he claim to be listening to the country when he refuses to withdraw his GST and has the nerve to tax books? Why does he want to impose his GST? Why does he want to impose ignorance on this country?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Jean Chrétien is not leading; he is following Allan MacEachen. I only take that from the media where I see Allan MacEachen saying that he advises Mr. Chrétien after he has taken the decision.

The difference is that this government is leading. This government is recognizing the problems of the existing federal sales tax and is moving to remove it.

This government is leading when it recognizes the problem of inflation and takes decisions in advance of the inflation problem getting out of control. This government is leading when it takes decisions to deal with the deficit about which the hon. member opposite, when he was a finance critic for the Liberal Party, asked: "Why are the Conservatives preoccupied with the deficit?"

I will tell him why we are preoccupied with the deficit. It is because of the mess the Liberal Party left this country in. Because it was not preoccupied with the deficit, it is causing the problems that we are having to deal with today.

HEALTH

Mrs. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Yesterday, the minister said that his department ensured that all available information was disclosed to volunteers for clinical testing.

However, the minister is aware that Daniel Trottier, one of the guinea pigs, was never informed that HI–6 could cause birth defects and cancer.

I therefore want to ask the minister to explain how he can say his government's decision to warn future volunteers is a prudent one, when he knows perfectly well that the people who already participated in the tests, like Mr. Trottier, who is watching you today, did not have access to all available information.

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, not only was the gentleman in question entitled to all the information available, but he signed a form indicating that it had been made available to him and indicating as well the following:

> I have read and understood the information about the study and about HI–6 provided in the following pages. I have been informed about the nature and the purpose of the procedures, the benefits and risks that are involved in their performance, and the risks and potential side–effects associated with taking HI–6. I understand that it is my responsibility to ask questions to clarify any points which I do not clearly understand. I have asked all such questions of the doctor and have received answers to my satisfaction and I understand that I may withdraw my consent and cease participation at any time, without affecting my right to medical care—

The hon. member, if she has bothered to read the consent form as well, will be aware of the fact that the consent form speaks of potential side–effects of the drug. In addition to that it says that as with any drug unexpected and potentially serious effects, including fatality, are always a possibility.

Ms. Copps: No mention of cancer.

Mr. Beatty: Hon. members opposite shout across from their seats: "All you did was mention that this could kill you or have other unexpected serious side–effects; you didn't specifically mention cancer".

In addition to all of this, including our warning of possible fatalities, for phase two of the study we have asked that the consent form specifically make mention of the unlikely possibility that it could be a carcinogen as well.

Every effort is being made and has been made to ensure that all volunteers are fully and completely informed.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, to pursue the answer of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, let me say that apparently manufacturing of the HI–6 drug is prohibited in the United States because of danger to employees and to the community.

Could the minister assure Canadians today that HI–6 is safe for testing in humans, or will he admit that the necessary tests for cancer in animals have not yet been done?

If the drug is not safe for Americans, why should it be safe for Canadians?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as is often the case with Liberal members, the hon. member does not present the facts squarely and openly.

HI-6 is not available for sale in the United States, nor is it available for sale or manufacture in Canada. It is precisely for that reason the drug manufacturers are required to go to the Government of Canada to seek approval.

Hon. members opposite say that it is a test on humans. Of course, before a drug is approved for sale in Canada, it must be tested on human beings as well.

Based on all of the information that we have to date, which includes tests that are done in other jurisdictions, we believe that such tests are safe. We also believe that the important criterion of ensuring informed consent was met, notwithstanding the fact that the hon. member's colleague obviously has not bothered to read the form and was not aware of the fact that the individual in question signed a consent form stating that he was fully aware of all of the side-effects, and had asked any questions which needed to be asked and was satisfied with the results.

This was the individual who is quoted in today's Sun as saying that notwithstanding the fact that he was advised not to drink after taking this, he went out and had a beer immediately afterward and found he was sick. It specifically said on the form that that should not be done.

GARMENT INDUSTRY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Yesterday I was in Montreal, where I visited a garment workshop. Mr. Speaker, even before the Free Trade Agreement with the United States was signed, people said this was a vulnerable sector. They were right. It is true this industry is at risk.

One thing is clear and, that is that this government's economic policies: the high level of the Canadian dollar, interest rates, the GST, and free trade with the United States are making the situation worse. Free trade with Mexico would further aggravate the situation.

Will the Prime Minister say no to free trade with Mexico, protect jobs in the garment industry in Canada and train people who are out of work?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister for International Trade has already commented on the possibility of free trade negotiations with Mexico, but I would like to respond to what the Leader of the New Demcoratic Party said at the beginning, about the garment industry.

I think it is inaccurate to attribute the problems being experienced in the sector to the agreement with the United States, because the prevailing situation in the garment industry, Mr. Speaker, is an international one, and it is affected far more by international trade than by our trading relations with the Americans, in which case we have mechanisms for finding a solution.

I believe it is far too early and in fact totally erroneous to claim there is a connection, especially in the Montreal area, between workers in the garment industry and the free trade agreement, Mr. Speaker.

• (1430)

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. While this government continues to say that it is too early to tell about the results of the trade deal, it is not too early for the workers who are laid off every day in every sector across this country.

I would like to raise this issue with the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance has said that the GST will be good for Canada because industries suffer from the manufacturers' sales tax. The garment industry did not have a manufacturers' sales tax and yet they will be subject to the GST.

On what grounds did the Minister of Finance decide that the GST should be on this industry which did not have a manufacturers' sales tax in the first place?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is indirect federal sales tax on everything that we buy today. Whether it is food, whether it is clothes, whether it is shoes, whether it is books, whether it is desks, everything has an element of sales tax in it.

An hon. member: Heating oil.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Yes, there is tax on heating fuels as well.

An hon. member: Haircuts.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Yes, there is tax on haircuts. There is tax on everything that we buy today.

What the hon. member is neglecting is that indirect tax. The royal commissions, the task forces, the industry people who have been coming to successive governments since the middle 1950s, have been telling us to get rid of this tax, to get us on a level playing field so we can compete with the opposition internationally.

Clothing which is imported comes in without any sales tax on it. Clothing that is manufactured here has sales tax on it. It is more difficult for clothing companies which manufacture in Canada to compete with international companies.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Today Statistics Canada issued the help wanted index, and we find that there were 12 per cent fewer jobs available in October than there were in September. That figure varies across the country and is much higher in some parts of the country.

During the last election the Prime Minister promised jobs, jobs, jobs. The economic policies of this government have lost jobs from free trade, to the high dollar, to the high interest rate. What is the Prime Minister prepared to do about the increasing job loss? What is his government prepared to do to get us out of this recession and put Canadians back to work?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend says that I promised jobs, jobs, jobs. Indeed, I did that in the campaign of 1984 and we delivered 1.6 million new jobs, the largest number ever in Canadian history. Since the free trade agreement there has been another 300,000 new jobs created in Canada. Because of new jobs, unemployment has declined from 11.6 per cent in 1984 down to the neighbourhood of 8 per cent today.

My hon. friend is well known as an opponent of any attempt to modernize the economy, including free trade and sales tax changes. My hon. friend has been captured and is transfixed by the protectionists, as discussed in a recent article by a leading financial columnist, "Free trade's enemies are predictably overpaid labour unionists or fat-cat monopolists. While protectionism gets headlines and votes, Canadians must realize that ranting against free trade is a non-starter. Free trade is a profound historical trend which is as immutable as gravity."

PERSIAN GULF

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As the minister is aware, there are efforts under way to organize an unofficial all-party delegation to go to Baghdad to make a case for the release of hostages.

I would like to ask the minister if he could confirm comments he made outside the House yesterday where he indicated that the government would be prepared to provide information on the Canadians presently being detained in Kuwait and Iraq, and also provide assistance and services to the embassy and other agencies of the government.

Could the minister tell us exactly what kind of support and co-operation the government would provide to this effort?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the member has been quite precise in his question. This government will not authorize a delegation by representatives of Canada to Baghdad. Individual members of Parliament are free to act as they choose.

When individual members of Parliament travel abroad, they are naturally eligible to have the help of Canadian embassy officials. That would be the case with any Canadian members of Parliament who are in Baghdad.

If members of Parliament require a briefing in their private, unofficial capacities, that briefing will be available, whether they undertake a trip there or anywhere.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): The minister will also be aware that many of the families of Canadian nationals presently being held in Iraq and Kuwait have been cut off from any form of financial support or any form of livelihood.

I wonder if the minister would tell us if the government is considering providing some kind of temporary support by way of income or certainly making available things like telephone services to these families until such time as their spouses or their other relatives are released?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): This is, of course, an extraordinary circumstance and the government is looking at it in that context. There are no existing provisions that would allow the government to work in that way and naturally we would want, as the House would understand, to be very careful not to establish precedents with regard to any actions that we might take.

Having said that, my colleagues and I are looking to see if there is some way in which we can offer help to those Canadians whose families are unable to leave Iraq or Kuwait. We would do that on an extraordinary basis, if it is possible. I cannot give an undertaking to the House at this moment as to whether or not that is possible.

HOUSING

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Housing. As you know, CMHC has recently completed an evaluation of the co-operative housing program. This evaluation was supposed to be completed in August, but this government extended its own deadline and stifled input in the consultation process.

These delaying tactics have left thousands of families on waiting lists and hundreds of resource groups hanging, putting co-op projects on hold until this government gets its act together.

I want to ask the minister this question. Will there be a co-op housing program in 1991 to combat the affordability crisis in this country?

[Translation]

Will there be a co-op housing program, yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member and all hon. members of the House are aware, the present co-operative housing program is a five-year program. It was necessary to wait until closer to the end of that five years in order to carry out the evaluation. The evaluation has now been completed. It is out for discussion and consultation with all interested people, including members and people in the co-op housing field.

I will be making recommendations to cabinet toward the end of this month or the beginning of this month with respect to where we go from here on a new co-op housing program.

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, that is what worries us, because every time this minister of housing has gone to cabinet he has come back empty-handed. Worse still, there is nothing for housing.

The evaluation by CMHC is not only misleading and incomplete, but it does not examine viable options which would make the program more economical, such as the refinancing of the pre-1985 co-ops using the indexed mortgage mechanism.

Since co-op groups need about six months to prepare for a project, and since this government has delayed this new program, will the minister at least extend the current program for another year and help those people who need housing in this country?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, the current program continues until the end of the year. A good many co-operative housing resource groups have projects which they have been developing and are ongoing. There are a great many projects which are in the mill right at the moment and are ready to go ahead next year.

Once I make recommendations to cabinet at the end of the year, we will see where the program goes from there. But I am very optimistic that there will be a co-op housing program and that the hon. member will be quite happy with it.

PERSIAN GULF

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I want to preface my question by expressing my appreciation, that of my colleagues, and the families of those Canadians who are unable to leave Iraq and

Kuwait, for his agreement to permit a member of the government caucus to join an all-party delegation to that troubled region.

I listened with care to the comments of the minister with respect to his undertaking, which offered support in respect of briefings in Canada and support from the embassy staff in Baghdad.

I want to ask the minister, specifically, in the fortunate event that Canadians who are now unable to leave are in a position to leave following the return of that mission, whether he is prepared to give serious consideration to providing logistical assistance possibly including chartered aircraft to assist those Canadians in those circumstances?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one has to learn to listen to the questions of the hon. member with particular care. It is not a question of permission to private members of the House of Commons. My colleagues in this caucus are free to act on their own. As I have particular cause to know, many of them regularly exercise that freedom. It is not a question of permission. It would be unfortunate to leave on the record any suggestion that there had been an action taken by me as minister, or by any member of the government, that constitutes any kind of official sanction to a trip that might or might not be undertaken.

The second part of the question, as the hon. member well knows, is hypothetical. If a situation arises that requires my response I will respond.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the same minister. The minister is well aware of the fact that earlier this week he indicated that it would not be acceptable to his government for a member of the government caucus to attend, and I welcome the change in that position. That is an important change in position.

I want to ask the minister whether he also recognizes the serious concern, not just of the families of those Canadians who are presently in Iraq and Kuwait, but indeed of many Canadians about the importance of giving sanctions time to work. I want to ask the minister whether he is prepared to undertake to this House, as he has been asked before by many Canadians, to only act in a military context in terms of any kind of a unilateral military action with the full sanction of the United Nations and only after full parliamentary debate and approval of that action?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has a little identity crisis. He is going to have to ask himself the question whether he wants to take the high ground and stay on it, or try to wring partisan advantage out of a gesture that he intends to have interpreted as a humanitarian gesture.

With regard to the second part of the question, this government is working very actively to try to ensure that action which might have to be taken in the Gulf proceeds under UN auspices. We have played a leading, constructive role. Indeed, through our diplomats in the United Nations, we have been responsible for some of the breakthroughs that have allowed United Nations auspices to cover and to authorize the actions so far. We intend to continue to do that. But we also intend that the actions of Canada and the rest of the nations, the 25 nations, rich and poor, north and south, Muslim and non-Muslim, who are arrayed in a coalition against the invasion of Kuwait, be taken seriously by Saddam Hussein. We do not want signals to be sent that would cause him to believe that there is some easy way for him to stay in Kuwait. We do not want him in Kuwait. We want him out and we want there to be no doubt about our position.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture. Yesterday the Minister for International Trade met with the 13 countries of the Cairns Group in Geneva. His press release states that he discussed how to unblock the negotiations on agricultural trade.

The Cairns Group, of course, is very opposed to Canada's system of marketing boards for the dairy and poultry industries. Did the Minister for International Trade make any concessions to the Cairns Group yesterday in order to, in his words, unblock the agriculture trade negotiations with regard to Canada's position on the marketing boards for poultry and dairy?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is well aware of Canada's stated position at GATT. It has been well presented across the country and internationally. Notwithstanding the fact that the hon. member is trying to find fault with it— and he has not been able to find any such weakness— it has been made pretty clear by Canada, within and without the Cairns group, of what our position is with respect to supply management.

We are reassuring that the supply management systems will be able to operate in Canada. We are strengthening Article XI as we committed ourselves to do. We are clarifying it, strengthening it, and ensuring that the supply management industries in Canada will remain intact and will be able to grow and become stronger than they are today.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In spite of what the minister says, Canadian farmers are very concerned about the concessions the Government has already made in its opening position for the GATT negotiations.

For instance, the government has cut agriculture programs during the last two years by 40 per cent. Its outlook forecasts a further reduction of 28 per cent in the coming year.

What assurance can the government give Canadian farmers that other support programs will not be sacrificed in the GATT negotiations?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, whatever reductions the Government of Canada has made with regard to support for agriculture will be taken into consideration in the overall approach we have made at the GATT. We have called for the full elimination of export subsidies and the reduction by 50 per cent of internal support programs provided they are in the amber range.

The figures that we put on the table, as all countries were asked to do, were based on 1986 to 1988 figures at a time when the support was higher than it is today. Any reduction will be taken into account as a part of what we are proposing to liberalize trade in the world and to bring about a more equitable and orderly trading regime for all agriculture throughout the world.

ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Atlantic provinces have suffered a great deal under this Conservative government. Post office closings and VIA Rail cuts have seriously undermined the well-being of this region. And now the same is happening to air and marine transport.

What will the minister do to ensure that his cost recovery program will not further sap this region's strength by affecting local airlines and the marine transportation industry?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, once again, I should inform the House and my hon. friend that I have met with officials of the marine industry and the airlines industry. In fact I have a further meeting tonight. I have made it very clear to them that this is a cost-recovery policy which we have put out for consultation and that we welcome the consultation from the industry. In fact, the original date for consultation was November 1. We have extended that to February 1, 1991, in order to get the best possible consultation.

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. The minister has announced that he will consult before making a decision. There is nothing wrong with that. But, while the government has consulted on the GST and on unemployment insurance, it did not listen and we know the result.

Why should Canadians believe that the minister will heed the advice of small airlines and marine industry representatives when they tell him that his proposed cost recovery will seriously harm them? Why should they believe you?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend had checked with the transportation critic for the Liberal Party, he would have been able to assure him that the government does listen.

When I table the response to the government's committee report on substance abuse, my hon. friend will agree that we listen.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members welcome the Prime Minister back from his adventures into the reality of public opinion.

We note with particular admiration the way in which he ended that adventure by courageously commiserating with the poor and the disadvantaged at that $500-a-plate dinner last night.

Given all the time and energy that the Prime Minister has put into gathering the opinions of Canadians about his government and about the GST, and given that we just learned that it spent $400,000 or more on learning what anyone could have told them—that Canadians are against the GST—is the Prime Minister finally going to make sure that his time and energy and the money of Canadian taxpayers is not put to waste, that they are listened to, and that the GST is finally killed?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I have commented on that question on a number of occasions in the House today.

Let me just quote from this article by Diane Francis again:

> Canadians, like King Canute, the medieval monarch who tried unsuccessfully to order the tides to stop coming in, cannot stop the tides of free trade or reject concomitant reforms like the GST. Ostrich economics will bury Canada if voters opt for politicians who would rip up the free trade deal despite the reality that there is no turning back.

Those same politicians oppose the GST, which has been recommended by task force, royal commission, parliamentary committee, Senate committee and successive ministers of finance. The time has come when politicians have to stop being politicians, be statesmen, and do the things that are right for this country.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister was a statesmen, he would answer questions when they are asked of him in the House of Commons.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. members: Order.

Mr. Blaikie: Does the Prime Minister think that it is an appropriate way of spending Canadian taxpayers' money to spend $400,000 to find out what every single Canadian knows, that Canadians do not want the GST? Is that a way to spend Canadian taxpayers' money? How thick-headed can you be? Did he not already know that people are against the GST?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we have tried to do in a range of ways, whether it is consulting with groups through the offices of members of Parliament, meetings that ministers have with different groups across the country, groups that the Prime Minister meets, or through the open-line shows where he can talk directly to Canadians.

These are ways that we have followed open government since 1984 and we are committed to continue to follow government in that way.

CITIZENS' FORUM ON CANADA'S FUTURE

Ms. Beth Phinney (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it concerns the Citizens' Forum on Canada's Future.

Would the Prime Minister clarify for the House and all Canadians who is invited to make the presentations before the commission led by Keith Spicer?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, everybody who is interested in Canada's welfare. I suppose particularly those who feel that they have something to offer and may have felt left out in the past will probably want to avail themselves of the quite unique opportunity in citizens defining and perhaps redefining the future of their country.

I hope it is a helpful initiative and that all members of Parliament and their constituents will participate.

Ms. Beth Phinney (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference document from the Privy Council states that "no person shall be precluded from participating" and the Prime Minister has just reiterated that. Yet, Keith Spicer, the chairman of the commission, stated on CBC radio last Sunday that politicians from the three major federal parties would not be welcome, but those from fringe parties would be. There seems to be some confusion between the Prime Minister and the commissioner.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Ms. Phinney: Am I, as a Canadian who happens to hold elected office, denied the right to appear? Is Keith Spicer going to deny the people of Hamilton Mountain the basic right to be heard through their elected member?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am sure, given the representations that my hon. friend has made, that she will have no trouble at all being heard before that forum.

I did not hear the program. Mr. Spicer is well known. He has not only an innovative mind and a gift for articulation, but he also has a great love of Canada. He is interested in, I am sure, provoking a great and productive national debate. The hon. member will have to ask him, but I know that he wants to hear from all Canadians. If my hon. friend wishes to appear, I am sure that the commission and the commissioners would be delighted to hear from her.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys. A single question, please.

CRIME PREVENTION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The recent international crime prevention conference in Ottawa has shown once again that Canada is falling even further behind European countries in the area of crime prevention. The Netherlands, for example, with a population of 15 million and a crime rate one-third less than Canada's, is contributing over $17 million to crime prevention.

Why is the government ignoring this question when other countries are confronting it and contributing much needed funds toward crime prevention?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I find that an extraordinary question and I am sorry that I do not have in my book a card with specific statistics of our financial contributions. In fact, Canada is extraordinarily active in all of the international crime prevention activities. In addition to that, we have projects and programs against family violence and violence against women. We are undertaking a complete and thorough review of the Criminal Code of Canada.

There are numerous avenues and ventures in which the Government of Canada is expressing its commitment, not simply to the prevention of crime, but also to tapping our ability to deal with crime when it happens and ensuring that those who commit crimes do not become recidivists in the system. There is the consultation process on our sentencing and parole reforms.

I would be very happy to correspond with the hon. member or to arrange for a briefing with him. I think he would find the Government of Canada is deeply committed to the prevention of crime in all the forms that that can be done successfully.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saanich—Gulf Islands on a single question.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, at the Second World Climate Conference in Geneva over 700 scientists from 120 countries concluded in their final statement that immediate action is required to reduce carbon dioxide emissions if we are to avoid destructive impacts of global warming. They said also that it was technically feasible to achieve the required goal of at least a 20 per cent reduction in CO2 emissions. The United States, the Soviet Union, and Saudi Arabia have all made it quite clear that they are unwilling to take any action.

I ask the Prime Minister: Why has Canada sided with the United States on this issue, instead of working with progressive countries for a declaration that heeds the calls of the scientists?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear to the House and to all interested parties that Canada has not sided with the United States, or the Soviet Union, or Saudi Arabia or any other nation which is seeking to retard progress at this particular convention.

In fact, if I may, I would like to read from the final communique, which states: "Taking into account that the developed world is responsible for about three-quarters of all emissions of greenhouse gases, we welcome the decisions and commitments undertaken by the European Community with its member states, Australia, Austria, Canada, Finland, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, and other developed countries to take actions aimed at stabilizing emissions of CO2 or CO2 and other greenhouse gases not controlled by the Montreal protocol by the year 2000 in general at 1990 levels."

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology. Considering the economic situation in Quebec's resource regions, including Abitibi-Témiscamingue, and the 1988 Canada-Quebec Agreement aimed at reinforcing the economic infrastructure of regional development, is the minister prepared to announce, as soon as possible, that the federal government will sponsor three new programs with Quebec, namely, support for infrastructures for business development, support for tourism attractions and infrastructure projects and support for major regional facilities?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, since 1988, three federal programs have been developed under the regional development agreement with Quebec, and the hon. member is right, I am about to announce, with the Quebec Minister of Regional Development, three new components of the program which may very well be those mentioned by the hon. member for Abitibi.

QUEBEC'S RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. On a number of occasions the Prime Minister has publicly acknowledged the legitimacy and legality of the Bélanger-Campeau Commission. I therefore want to ask the Prime Minister whether he also agrees with the preamble to the legislation establishing this commission, which says, and I quote: "Whereas Quebec men and women are free to assume their own destiny, to determine their political status and to ensure their economic, social and cultural development"?

Could the Prime Minister tell the House once and for all whether he agrees with the right to self-determination of the people of Quebec?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have never analysed the preamble to which the hon. member referred. I have read large fragments, but I have not analysed it in detail. I would therefore have to reread the preamble carefully before responding to his question.

I think the hon. member knows perfectly well that the involvement of the Prime Minister, the opposition leaders and almost all the premiers of the other provinces, and in fact the hon. member himself, who was a federal member, in the 1980 referendum, was a clear indication that the results of a democratic and free vote taken in circumstances and according to standards that are normal and acceptable, were accepted by all Canadians in this country.

Therefore, without wishing to get involved in this particular area for the reason I just mentioned, I believe that the experience of Mr. Trudeau and the Secretary of State for External Affairs in 1980 and indeed of practically all members of this House and of the provincial premiers, is an indication of the democratic will of all Canadians.

HOUSEHOLDER OF MEMBER FOR EDMONTON—STRATHCONA

Miss Deborah Grey (Beaver River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to the actions of the member of Parliament for Edmonton—Strathcona.

It is my contention that this hon. member has brought this House into disrepute by blatantly ignoring the members' allowances and services manual and the guidelines therein.

The hon. member in a recent householder launched an attack on me personally and on the Reform Party of Canada, ignoring the guidelines. The members' services manual states clearly that free household mailings are "intended to provided members with a means for keeping their constituents informed of the workings of Parliament".

Is it considered "the workings of Parliament" when an hon. member states in a householder on page 5, and I quote:

> Perhaps she should spend less of her time running around the countryside with Mr. Manning, practising politics at the taxpayers' expense?

For the record, I would just like to say that out of the 87 weekends and weeks since my election to Parliament, I have spent 66 of those weekends in my riding. I would hardly consider that running around the countryside with Mr. Manning.

Is it non-partisan, Mr. Speaker, as the guideline states, that the householder be for an hon. member to use the taxpayers dollars on whole pages of vicious, personal attacks on another hon. member? Is it not a blatant disregard for the rights of an hon. member when another member spends taxpayers' dollars in personal and malicious attacks on the character of the former, or to rant rabidly against the policies of another party?

I know that the Canadian people are fed up with what they perceive to be a waste of money that they send to Ottawa. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, and the House, to consider whether this is not a good example of a waste of taxpayers' money, a violation of my rights as a member of Parliament and the privileges that I have of this House in such a blatant disregard for the guidelines and the members' allowances.

Finally, I will just draw to your attention the note on section F(3) of the members' manual. That note states, and I quote: "Householders which are distributed or otherwise used during an election period and which directly promote or oppose in whole or in part a particular registered party or the election of a particular candidate, come within the definition of election expenses under the Elections Act. The cost of printing and mailing these householders or a portion thereof, depending on what portion directly promotes or opposes, should be reported as election expenses".

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the member for Edmonton—Strathcona has begun his campaigning for the next election, considering he used five entire pages of his householder to attack the Reform Party, Senator Waters and myself.

Mr. Speaker, the note says such partisan material does come within the definition of election expenses under the Elections Act. The cost of printing and mailing should be reported as election expenses. As we all know, an election could be a considerable length of time away. Therefore, because this householder has been sent out long before an election writ, I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the member for Edmonton—Strathcona be ordered by this House to have the amount of this householder billed to his next election campaign, if he chooses to run. Taxpayers may be more appreciative, Mr. Speaker, if the member be ordered by this House to pay for the cost of printing and mailing this householder, and to pay that personally.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may or may not have a question of privilege, but I do not think the House can get into the question of ordering the hon. member to make payments.

I will hear the hon. member for Edmonton—Strathcona.

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Beaver River talked about informing constituents, and that is precisely what I was doing. Every day in this House of Commons we have a public debate about issues and policies. I took five pages of my householder to publicly debate those policies and issues. They put forward certain positions on issues, and I have countered with my critique of those issues.

We do that every day here in Question Period. That is a normal part of a member's duty. I do not feel I was breaching any rule. In fact, I have discussed other parties' issues, as all members have in the course of our duties. I also discussed the member's voting record, which is on the public record. I merely shared that with my constituents.

I think the Reform Party, which the member represents, is raising this is it is afraid of criticism. The party's position does not stand up to public scrutiny. In other words, people who live in glass houses should not throw stones. I discussed these issues in a rational and reasonable way, as we do every day in the House of Commons.

Miss Grey: Mr. Speaker, I am not referring to the substance of what the hon. member is talking about in this. All is fair game, certainly in politics, and I understand that.

If the hon. member is talking about what should be forwarded in his householder, surely he is proud enough of his government's efforts to talk about the positive things that it is instituting in this country. I do not know how many pages he would come up with.

Finally, I would like to say that we are not talking about the substance of it, we are talking about the abuse of a privileged members' finances being wasted. In section F(3), and I am talking about the specific letter (f), it states that unacceptable requests are material prepared by party research offices. It would appear to me that this is something that has come forward and is definitely a breach of our privileges as members. I would like to submit that to you, Mr. Speaker, and say that I believe many taxpayers in Canada would be absolutely disgusted with this. I think it is a dangerous precedent to set.

Mr. Thorkelson: Mr. Speaker, in response to that, my householder was a 20-page householder. The rest of my householder was devoted to the wonderful things that this government is doing. One has to contrast public policy with the criticisms of what others feel about it. This householder was dedicated to a discussion of public policy in a rational and reasonable manner, in a very public forum. They can dish it out but they cannot take it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South—Weston is seeking the floor and I will hear him in a minute. I hope that he can assist the Chair as to whether this is a question of privilege or not.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Beaver River raises an important point. I have not had the opportunity to review the householder by the member for Edmonton—Strathcona. Mr. Speaker, you are being called upon today to review the issue of householders. Some members seem to be suggesting by their interventions and their heckling that there are no restrictions when it comes to the use of householders other than some vague restrictions that might appear in the members' manual.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it essential that you take this matter under advisement, that you carefully review the householder of the hon. member for Edmonton—Strathcona, and render your opinion, as the Speaker of the House, in terms of the limitations and the restrictions which should apply in the issuing of householders.

Mr. Speaker, while I do not comment on the specific issue of this specific householder, since the member for Beaver River has raised this issue, I believe it incumbent upon you to render a ruling as to the issue of householders, generally.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the hon. member for York South—Weston. I know hon. members will feel that the matter has been fully discussed, and I will consider it.

The question that is raised, of course, is what is appropriate to be put into a householder? It may or may not be a question of privilege; I will consider that. It may be a matter of some interest to all hon. members, but I do not need to hear any further argument on the matter.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT RETIRING ALLOWANCES ACT

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-343, an act to amend the Members of Parliament Retirement Allowances Act (government employment).

He said: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, this bill would amend the MP pension legislation in a significant respect. It would prevent double-dipping by former MPs by ensuring that any of them under the age of 60 who are receiving paycheques from the Government of Canada or an agency of the Government of Canada may not simultaneously also receive their MP pensions.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT RETIRING ALLOWANCES ACT

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-344, an act to amend the Members of Parliament Retirement Allowances Act (age of entitlement).

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill relates to the age of eligibility for an MP pension. It would bar a former MP from receiving an MP pension before he or she reaches the age of 60, on the premise that most other Canadians have to wait until 60 or 65 before they can obtain pensions.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present on behalf of Canadian dairy farmers who feel that the Canadian system of marketing and supply for domestic and export demand have not contributed to world surpluses.

They fear that the government is going to allow changes at the GATT. They humbly call upon this Parliament to instruct the government to hold up our Canadian system as an example to the rest of the world and to protect it in its entirety, at all costs, in the current round of GATT negotiations.

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, it gives me great pleasure to present to the House a petition signed by people in the Ottawa-Carleton region.

They are calling upon this government to reaffirm the historic principles embodied in the tax-free status for the printed word by retaining the zero rate in the GST legislation and regulations. In other words they want education to be untaxed by the government.

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, today I am presenting a petition from people from southern Ontario who are extremely distressed at the coming of the goods and services tax.

The petitioners ask that the government withdraw this bill because they feel that it will be partially invisible, that it will be extremely harsh on middle and low income Canadians, that it comes at an extremely difficult time when we are in the midst of a recession, that it will cause increases in interest rates and prices to rise, and that it will cause a great deal of hardship.

The petitioners wish that this government would not only listen but lend a hand and help the Canadians through this recession by not imposing this tax.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition signed mainly by western Canadians but by people from right across Canada.

They humbly indicate that they expect the government to act immediately upon its authority and responsibility and deal in a just manner with the struggle of all aboriginal peoples in Canada to have their land claims and rights properly addressed.

The petitioners warn that inaction on the part of the federal authorities will continue to antagonize race relations in Canada and provoke dangerous and ignorant acts of racism.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, if the persons who signed this petition had been here yesterday to witness the spectacle of the Tory hacks in the Senate voting down the very reasonable amendment of the Liberal minority in that body to exempt books and printed material from the ravages of the goods and services tax, I am sure they would have been violently ill.

They have signed a petition calling on Parliament to reject the goods and services tax in so far as it is applied to books and not to agree with the hard-hearted grasping and greedy attitude of the Conservative majority in this House, and now apparently in the other place, which will tax unfairly and uniquely publications and books in Canada that are not taxed anywhere else on the face of the globe in a civilized country.

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I present a number of petitions from a large number of Canadians who oppose the GST.

This new tax will cause higher inflation, higher interest rates, higher unemployment, and of course will deepen the recession.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject this goods and services tax.

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, I stand today pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present to the House yet another petition from people of Canada who are fed up with this government's goods and services tax.

The members across might find it funny, but I challenge those members to unplug their ears and start listening to their constituents. If they unplugged their ears and started listening to their constituents very carefully, they would find out that 85 per cent of the people hate this tax.

The minister should do something about it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I see that the hon. member for Willowdale is rising again. I am afraid he has only one chance to put his petitions forward. He can try again tomorrow.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I note that the Minister of Finance is in the House. Perhaps he is listening to opposition members presenting these petitions.

We are simply reiterating and indicating to the House the desire of the overwhelming majority of Canadians, that is, for this Minister of Finance who sits here smirking in his seat today—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish the hon. member would get to his petition, please.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the comment about the smirking. It wasn't smirking. I think it was a deep felt laugh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Calgary Northeast.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will not recognize the hon. member on a point of order until I finish with petitions. I may come back to the hon. member.

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, I have a series of petitions that asks the Government of Canada to withdraw the goods and services tax, especially since it is so unfair as far as reading materials are concerned.

I have other petitions from across Canada that ask the government to withdraw the goods and services tax. I hope the Minister of Finance who is here is going to listen.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition to the House today on behalf of numerous Canadians.

They petition the House to have the government withdraw this awful, terrible tax, the GST which this group of money hungry Tories is trying to impose upon the Canadian public.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by many Canadians from the Dartmouth–Halifax area of Nova Scotia.

They call upon the government to withdraw the GST, and they say that this tax is simply part of the right wing agenda to shift the tax burden of Canada on to ordinary Canadians and away from the wealthy and corporations.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I too rise under the appropriate Standing Order to present a petition signed by many people from Coquitlam, Port Moody, Port Coquitlam in my riding and by people from the greater Vancouver area.

They say that the cable industry should be regulated like the telephone industry because it too is really a monopoly. The cable companies made an average 32 per cent profit on their assets in 1988, more than twice the level of the telephone company. Cable bills have been increasing at the time when telephone prices have actually been dropping.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the hon. member get to his petition.

Mr. Waddell: Yes. The undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to adopt Bill C-284, which is a bill to apply rate of return regulations to the cable industry.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 and once again present a petition against the goods and services tax on behalf of people in Canada.

These people have stated that the government has not addressed the unfair taxation system currently in place which permits wealthy individuals and corporations to pay little or no federal tax, while forcing lower and middle income taxpayers to bear more and more of the national tax burden.

They are calling upon Parliament and this government to cease with the proposal that would bring in a goods and services tax against the people of Canada and to bring in a fair taxation system for all Canadians.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to present to the House another one of many petitions calling upon the Minister of Finance and the Conservative government to withdraw immediately the regressive and unfair goods and services tax.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 344, 346, 352, and 356.

[Text]

APPLICATION OF THE GST

Question No. 344—Mr. Harvard:

In the event of the GST not being passed by Parliament, will the government return the tax, with interest, to the Canadians who have been required to pay it?

Hon. Otto John Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Until Bill C-62 receives Royal Assent there is no legal liability for the payment, collection and remittance of any applicable GST. One of the transitional rules contained in Bill C-62 does provide, in part, that Canadian businesses which supply goods to be provided or services to be performed after 1990 are required to account for the proposed seven per cent Goods and Services Tax on January 1, 1991, on prepayments made between September 1, 1990, and January 1, 1991. The Department has encouraged businesses to comply with this transitional rule but has emphasized that there is no obligation or authority for them to actually collect the GST.

If certain businesses are collecting GST on transactions straddling the implementation date, they are doing so on a voluntary basis in preparation for the GST. Under the proposed legislation, vendors will not be required to remit any GST collected until their first GST return for 1991 is due. Consumers are, therefore, under no legal obligation to pay the GST prior to the legislation being passed. If they do, it would be up to the business concerned to compensate them for the GST paid, in the event that the proposed legislation is not passed.

CANADIAN FORCES SUPERANNUATION ACT (SUPPLEMENTARY DEATH BENEFIT)

Question No. 346—Mr. Harvard:

When will the Armed Forces Pensionners and Annuitants be informed that the supplementary Death Benefit under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, will be increased to at least $3,000?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (President of the Treasury Board and Minister of State (Finance)): A review of the Supplementary Death Benefit portion of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act is included as part of the Public Service pension reform initiative currently in progress. This and other pension reform matters will be given careful consideration and an announcement regarding the timing and content of amending legislation will be made at an appropriate time.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Yes. A Case Management Conference was held from September 11 to 14, 1990 in Honey Harbour, Ontario for 138 delegates from the Correctional Service of Canada and 4 from the National Parole Board.

(a) The amount of money spent was $71,395.80.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

AIRPORT TRANSFER (MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS) ACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-85, an act to provide for certain matters respecting official languages, employees' pensions and labour relations in connection with the transfer of certain airports, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to move second reading of this bill which refers to miscellaneous matters related to the transfer of airports to local airport authorities.

This bill will permit negotiations to proceed to effect those transfers and to fulfil the objectives of the government's policy in this matter.

The federal government's airport transfer policy dates back to 1987 when discussions began on the basis of certain broad principles of the terms and conditions for the transfer of federal airports to local interested parties. Supplementary principles to guide the negotiations were approved in May of 1989.

Our objectives from the beginning were to allow the airports to better serve the local community interests; to enhance regional economic development potential; and to permit the national airport system to operate in a more cost-effective and commercial manner.

Our aim with this policy is to enhance the efficient, commercial operation of federal airports through a more locally responsive management structure.

I should point out at this time that all of the aviation matters, the public safety, the airport fire and emergency response mechanisms will remain with Transport Canada.

But with local authorities at the controls, airports will be quickly able to respond to changing needs and market forces with innovative ideas.

The flexibility that will be afforded to the local airport authorities will enable them to take advantage of the entrepreneurial opportunities that present themselves, and will help them to directly contribute to regional development initiatives.

In the 1987 policy statement and the supplementary principles of 1989, the government prescribed conditions under which airports would be transferred to local authorities. Two of those conditions are of particular importance, and I would like to emphasize them here today.

First, permanent employees must be offered work by the local airport authorities with pay and benefits comparable to what they received in Transport Canada. It is a fundamental principle of the airport transfer process that the employees be fairly treated by the local airport authorities.

Second, on the financial side, current and forecast net revenue generated by the airport must be guaranteed to the government along with a share of the increased revenue produced by the local airport authority.

Intrinsic to this whole process, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that the government has recognized that airport employees must be properly looked after. Airport staff are dedicated and skilled professionals and this bill, along with the principles of the transfer process, will ensure that they are treated fairly and equitably.

Early passage of this bill will greatly contribute to allaying the fears of affected airport site employees by dealing with their major concerns. For example, the proposed legislation would give affected employees a year to decide whether to transfer their federal pension benefits to the new local airport authority pension plan.

Employees' collective agreements would be continued by the legislation until they expire or are replaced. The Canada Labour Code and the mandate of the Canada Labour Relations Board would be applied to deal with labour relations issues at and after the time of transfer.

The airport transfer legislation would also ensure that the local airport authorities continue to provide bilingual services to the public at federal airports.

In all of this, I want to assure the House and emphasize that airports are not being privatized. They are being transferred—and my hon. friend from New Brunswick would do well to talk to the people of Moncton who want a local airport authority, so I think before my hon. friend gets too far down the tangent of being opposed, he ought to check with the people back in the region of Moncton and New Brunswick.

Mr. Lewis: Go home once in a while. Check with the people back home. If they recognize you, they will tell you that they want want a local airport authority in Moncton, and here my hon. friend is opposing it. I want the people of Moncton—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

An hon. member: Quiet down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. Minister of Transport has the floor on debate. The hon. Minister of Transport.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, before I was rudely interrupted by the member from New Brunswick who objects to Moncton getting a local airport authority—

Mr. Dionne: My riding is Miramichi.

Mr. Lewis: Miramichi. I will check that. Maybe we can do one there too.

Individuals or private companies will not directly own or lease the airports. The federal government is committed to this policy and the transfer of these airports to local airport authorities has been among my top priorities since I took this portfolio.

We want to see this bill become law because there has been so much interest shown it. I have met with a number of community groups who are extremely enthusiastic about seeing their airports transferred to local airport authorities. The process is now well-established and the pace of progress is gathering momentum.

I can report to the House that substantive negotiations are well under way with local airport authorities in Montreal, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver. These four local airport authorities have received the federal lease rental formula and financial negotiations have been initiated with each of the authorities. Formal transfer to these local airport authorities in the interested communities could take place as early as mid-1991.

I should point out to the House that there has been a learning curve on this and in the negotiations with the first four interested parties we have learned some things, things not only that we would do differently to improve the process but things that we can tell the local airport authorities they can do, so that we can come to a decision more quickly.

As I said to my hon. friend, there is substantial interest in communities such as Thunder Bay, represented in the House by a Liberal member and New Democratic member, and the city of Moncton represented by a Liberal member, Quebec City which naturally has all the Progressive Conservatives representing it, Windsor which is represented by the Leader of the Opposition, and Winnipeg which unfortunately has substantial representation from the Liberal Party.

This is an important piece of legislation. It is consistent and complementary to our government's desire to bring the national air transportation environment some rationality and some efficiency. We believe that this can best be accomplished by the application of the spirit of competition that resides in the public sector. This is the reasoning behind our proposal at Pearson, to select a competitive contractor to modernize and operate Terminals 1 and 2, the non-air process of the airports in the interest of that particular region.

As I said earlier this month, we see no need for the Government of Canada to be involved in the commercial aspects of running an airport. We are looking at leasing because we want the hammer of the lease rather than selling and that is why we are doing it this way.

Also, this fits in with our impetus to initiate negotiations with the United States to establish a bilateral air agreement which will provide better and more frequent air service and foster economic growth.

My hon. friend, being a citizen of New Brunswick, will know the interests of Moncton in achieving greater operation and greater air routes into the United States from Moncton. My hon. friend from Toronto will know that the members from Winnipeg want better access to Winnipeg and from Winnipeg for Canadian airlines and for the people of Winnipeg. That goes for Edmonton and all of the major cities that want better access. That is why this fits in with our local airport authority initiative.

These changes are all in an effort to stay ahead of the rapid growth in aviation in this country. I would say to the House that none of this diminishes in any way the dedication of Transport Canada to providing a safe and secure transportation system. This is a very strong theme, as I learned when I took over this portfolio and it continues. What we want from the local airport authority is this. We want them to be in an even better position to transfer to the local airport authority the energy of the community, to expand the operations at the airport, the non-air operations, the aircraft maintenance, and the aircraft sales, and the parts.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that is possible with this bill. It turns it over to the local authorities to manage the airport. We feel that with the flexibility they would have vis-à-vis some of the restrictions that we naturally face in government that we will have a better airport system and we will have more growth at the regional airports.

These are a very few brief remarks to introduce the bill. We think it is good legislation which will benefit the communities of Canada that have the major airports and I would urge the House to adopt it.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased on behalf of my colleagues in the Liberal Party to respond to Bill C-85 which, as the minister has just said, provides the legal framework for the transfer of the management of airports to local authorities. Since the concept of the transfer of airport management to local authorities is new, it obviously requires some new legislation.

This bill cannot be looked at in isolation. Bill C-85 cannot be considered without taking other over-all policies of this government as they relate to all modes of transport, particularly in the air, into consideration. Philosophically speaking, I and my colleagues are quite concerned and opposed to the general transfer of authority that has flowed from this government to provincial governments, and now to municipal governments, and to private industry.

What the minister has to recognize, and what the government must recognize is that there is a transportation network in all modes in this country that is absolutely immense, that touches all parts of the country, all Canadians and therefore requires a national set of standards regarding the implementation of our transportation system.

That is not to suggest that we on this side of the House are opposed to having local municipal councils and local community organizations co-operating more fully with the federal government in promoting their local airports. We are not opposed to that. In fact, we have suggested to the minister, concerning the noise of aircraft at Pearson, which affects my riding, that an ombudsman be appointed. The ombudsman could establish a working committee with the local communities so that their concerns would be heard, and when aircraft are flying overhead at three in the morning, and they call the local complaint number, they would not just get a recording. What kind of rapport is that?

We are not opposed to a greater working relationship with the local communities and the local councils. In fact, we have been on record as suggesting and requesting more of that.

But that does not mean that the only way to strengthen relations is by transferring authority away from the federal government to those communities. The fact of the matter is that working side by side with the federal government is also a possibility, and that the two streams are not incompatible.

Therefore, when looking at Bill C-85 you have to take into account the over-all deregulation policy of this government. What does this government say to Canadians when it comes to the question of deregulation in the transport industry, particularly in the air? The first thing is: "Don't worry. It is good for the consumer. It is going to mean lower air fares". The reality of today is that not only have those air fares gone up, but they have gone up higher and quicker than the rate of inflation.

Mr. Speaker, if you wanted to go to Vancouver today and were going to go to the travel agency, you would find that the increase on those tickets was higher than the cost of inflation. Not only have they stayed the same, but in terms of proportional increases, deregulation has not been the messiah for reduction of air prices that the government has promised.

The only reductions are for booking well in advance, three, four, five, or six months. We had that too before deregulation, so that is simply a non-starter.

It also said that deregulation is going to bring greater competition and greater diversification. Again, a fallacy. What is the reality today? The reality is that we have a concentration and monopolization in terms of the air industry. Under deregulation, 14 regional carriers have been gobbled up by Air Canada and Canadian. Why? Because those air carriers in the economies of scale have moved into the communities, adopted the squeeze play, lowered their fares, and through economies of scale have been able to sustain themselves. In the meantime, the regional air carriers either have gone belly up, been gobbled up, are on the verge of bankruptcy, or are operating with a terrible bottom line.

That is the reality of the messiah that was supposed to be deregulation in terms of diversifying the industry.

It also said that we are going to provide better service for the regions. Once again, look at the facts. Look in your own backyard of western Canada, Mr. Speaker. Look at what my colleagues have been saying in the House from Atlantic Canada. Look at what my colleague, the hon. member for Western Arctic, has said from northern Canada in terms of jet service.

Jet service has been abandoned in many regional centres across Canada. We have had regional jet service removed and put onto the more popular runs. Not only has there been a reduction in service, but the quality has suffered. The quality of service is a bottom line of government. It may not be a bottom line of private enterprise, but it is a bottom line of governments and this institution.

What about safety of aircraft and safety at our airports? Both in the United States and here at home, since the dawning of deregulation the experience has been that safety on both fronts has suffered because some of those companies in the airline industry have cut corners and have been allowed to cut corners. That is of concern not only, of course, to this side of the House, but to Canadians in general.

What about job security under the advent of deregulation? I remember when the minister announced the movement to privatize Terminals 1 and 2. He said this in the context of a larger quote, I admit. One of the things he said is: "I am not in the business of saving jobs." I have news for this minister. Every minister is in the business of saving jobs. They are in the business of promoting, increasing, and developing new jobs to be sure, but he is, and they are also, as part of the government, in the business of trying to save those jobs that we have today.

We know the miserable state of affairs generically speaking, particularly in the transport sector. We have seen the situation in Air Canada, almost 3,000 employees. We have seen it in Worldways. We have seen it in CN Route. We have seen it in the train industry with the VIA cuts.

There is also a quote of July 16, 1985 of the hon. Deputy Prime Minister, the member from Alberta, who suggested: "The government will monitor the effects of change on employees and will try to respond to any adverse consequences as humanely as possible." This was a quote in response to the privatization of Air Canada.

Where is the humane response to the first 3,000 people who have been unemployed as a result of Air Canada tightening its own seat-belts? This may be the first shoe to drop. Where is the humane response? There is none. Therefore, we have one thing being said before its deregulation policy and privatization, and we have a very different reality today.

What about the privatization of Air Canada, not only in terms of the job benefits, but of the investments that people have made? People have lost money on their investment. Air Canada has not been as adamant in protecting those jobs as it was when it responded to the government.

We cannot only look at Bill C-85 in isolation. We need to take into account deregulation. We need to take into account the privatization concept that has fuelled the privatization of Air Canada? And what about the privatization of airport terminals?

We have in my own city at Pearson Airport a private terminal, Terminal 3. The government has never answered the fundamental question of how does the privatization of Terminal 3 benefit the average taxpayer and the travelling public in the country who are going to be using Terminal 3? More questions have been raised than answers forthcoming from the government.

What about the bidding process for Terminal 3? That is under a dark cloud of many allegations. What about the costs of goods and services in Terminal 3 for the so-called travelling public?

Even the Auditor General had questions in terms of his last report to Parliament about the privatization of Terminal 3. He stated in his report on page 736, under section 30.84:

> The Department should conduct a post-project analysis to identify lessons learned from the Terminal 3 project. As a minimum, this analysis should address methods for analysing options and safeguards to protect the interests of the Crown.

To protect the interests of the Crown. He goes on to state:

> It should form the basis of an improved methodology for handling such private sector developments in future.

I believe that the Auditor General was being very diplomatic and couching his language in terms of some of the things that I am sure will be unearthed in the coming days, weeks and months with regard to the operation of Terminal 3 at Pearson International airport.

Also, what about the moves to greater privatization of Terminals 1 and 2 at Pearson which is the flagship airport. It is the principal airport of our country and basically the hub of all aircraft activity.

What about the 14,000 jobs that are currently at Terminals 1 and 2? Given the general economic outlook of the land, do you not think that these employees are also worried for their security at their job site? Has the minister given any forms of guarantee that those jobs will be protected? Will they be the same guarantees that the government talked about in terms of providing job security for Air Canada employees?

There are many questions that have been raised and many questions that have gone unanswered. The other question with regard to Terminals 1 and 2 is how the government proceeded by putting the cart before the horse? It accepted a number of untendered bids from private firms to privatize Terminals 1 and 2 and then, months after, responded to those bids in a positive way.

Normally, the way governments operate is not do it piece-meal, one airport at a time. They do it on a comprehensive basis if they believe in it. Second, they set the incentives and the parameters for those policies. They do not generally respond to private firms and private interests, allowing them to dictate the policies of the day. Rather, the government, as a national institution, should speak up on behalf of the entire transport industry and the country.

What about the regional services? Does it mean that the less popular runs will be abandoned in terms of jet service to the regions, as I mentioned earlier?

What about the fact that open skies will now be coming? That is another issue which has to be taken into account when we talk about the greater tendency to privatize and to delete the authority from the central government? What about the open skies concept?

We know that the Minister of Transport and the government is prepared to deregulate the 1974 air agreement that exists at the moment between Canada and the United States. Essentially, this amounts to free trade in the sky. We know what the advent of the free trade agreement has brought, in terms of job losses and plant closings. Although Canadians may favour modifying any existing agreement, I do not see the political green light there, as yet, to suggest a complete deregulation of that agreement.

Can we compete under an open skies concept with the United States of America? Does the government recognize that, in terms of air carriers, the Americans have perhaps a dozen major airlines that could compete and we have only two major airlines? Does the government take into account that American Airlines alone has over 500 aircraft, while Air Canada has 104 and Canadian has 90? Our two major airlines combined do not have even one-third of the air carriers of just one major American airline company.

Reduced air fares are promised if we open up the skies between the United States and Canada. I recall the government also promising that with the advent of deregulation. It has not happened under deregulation and many people would be skeptical, at the very best, if it were to happen under an open skies arrangement.

The government also promises greater diversification and greater competition, allowing a greater number of Canadian air carriers to be established with the advent of open skies. I believe there will be a greater monopolization—a great centralization, if you will—so that airlines can reduce the operating fat so they can go head-to-head with the American competition. Possibly, rather than diversification, there will be either a merger between Air Canada and Canadian Airlines that will confirm the monopoly state of our airline business or, if this government allows a wide open open skies arrangement, we will probably see our airline industry under American ownership in the very, very, near future. The question is, are Canadians prepared to see that happen? I believe they are not.

What about regional service under an open skies concept? Is it not logical to think that the American air carriers will be more interested in reaching a number of our major centres, rather than the regional centres of our country in the outlying parts of Canada? I do not believe that the bottom line for American Airlines is to be necessarily servicing Goose Bay, Moncton, northern Ontario, northern Canada, or western Canada for that matter, outside of the cities of Vancouver, Edmonton, Calgary, Toronto, Montreal, Halifax.

This country is larger than just those centres, particularly for Canadians who have seen rail travel abandoned in Atlantic Canada. Their jet service has been reduced. Now, with the advent of greater American competition, there is going to be a big question: "Will they have the kind of quality service?" If we do not have quality service on the rails and if those parts of the country do not even have proper highways, and now we are not going to have proper air service, then how do we expect those Canadians to travel? What kind of quality are we talking about in terms of the transport sector? Is it going to mean that it depends where you live in the country? Is that what we are reduced to when we speak of our transportation sector?

What about national symbols? Quite frankly, I believe Canadians do give a damn, when they get into an airplane, what the symbol is on the tail of the airplane. I believe that they would rather see the maple leaf on the tail of many aircraft, rather than the red stars and stripes of the United States, as great as they are and as big as they are in travel, and God bless them all.

Why should we not have some sense of national pride in who moves us across this beautiful, vast country called Canada? There have been a lot of industry analysts who have suggested that unless we provide the safeguards, and the minister is very keen on quoting Air Canada and Canadian as being supporting of the open skies concept, but every quote by every spokesperson for both Air Canada and Canadian that I have read has always said that they require negotiated safeguards as a bare minimum.

That is not open skies. That is not on a level playing field. That is a re-regulation of the current agreement, a modification upon conditions, and not a deregulation of the 1974 agreement completely. Industry observers say that Canada's two major airlines may not survive in the face of the United States competition, or at least not in their current form.

Steve Garmaise in the Financial Post, which this government loves to quote day in and day out, an analyst for First Marathon Securities Ltd., has predicted that Air Canada and Canadian Airlines may have to merge international routes within five years if U.S. carriers compete head to head with Canadian air carriers.

Tony Hine, an analyst for ScotiaMcLeod Inc. said that two airlines might have to become feeder services to larger U.S. air carriers. That is on another front called the open skies.

We also have a move to once again privatize user fees on the altar of cost recovery on the basis that the government does not have the necessary capital or perhaps does not attach the necessary priority on having the necessary capital with respect to cost recovery programs.

In the shipping industry the government may in fact, upon consultations that will be completed on February 1, try to raise $25 million through imposing new fees that have never been imposed before on shipping companies which use the services of our national Coast Guard.

Does this government recognize that our shipping industry is one of the greatest success stories in the Canadian transport industry, so much so that the Americans were not willing to compete with us in the shipping industry, and is on a troubled course as it is right now, that shipping has gone down 10 per cent, that jobs have been lost in the shipping industry as well and that any increase in additional fees will only serve to destabilize shipping industries?

When we speak of the interests of Quebec, the Port of Montreal and the Port of Quebec City and the large shipping infrastructure in that province, we are going to impose on the province of Quebec—and I see some colleagues from that province on the opposite side—over half of the $25 million to be raised from the province of Quebec's shipping industry, namely $14 million out of the $25 million in terms of increased costs. Does the Quebec shipping industry want that? Is that going to make it more competitive along the seaway in terms of competing internationally? I think not.

What about the cost recovery program in terms of landing rights at our airports across Canada? My colleague from the province of New Brunswick stood in his place today. My colleague from northern Canada, the hon. member for Western Arctic, stood last week. People in our caucus in western Canada suggested that the cost recovery basis in terms of landing fees is simply unfair, inequitable and unworkable. Up to now the landing fees have taken into account that smaller aircraft travel shorter distances, carry fewer passengers and charge less in terms of ticket fares and therefore generate less revenue. Therefore, the landing fees for smaller aircraft take into account those variables.

Now the government is contemplating abandoning those variables and suggesting that the landing fees should be based on only a proportional weight of the incoming aircraft. What will that mean? It will mean two things. First, smaller aircraft will pay proportionately greater amounts to land in the airports than larger aircraft. Second, the regional airports in the regional hinterlands of Canada will have to pay greater amounts of money because they have the greatest amount of smaller commuter feeder airlines, which means that those costs will be passed on to the travelling public.

It has been estimated that in regions such as Atlantic and western Canada the travelling public will pay upward of 25 per cent more for their tickets of airlines' smaller Dash-8 service as a result of those airlines having to pay greater amounts of dollars to land at the respective airports. For instance, in St. John's the Dash-8 increase will be 32 per cent. In Gander, it will be 12.7 per cent and in Deer Lake, a 57.2 per cent increase in landing fees. In Goose Bay, there will be a 67 per cent increase in smaller aircraft services compared to larger jumbo jets with increases of upward of 10 per cent in metropolitan Toronto through Pearson airport.

Is this the government's idea of equity across the country? Is this the way it will balance the needs and aspirations of Canadians who do not happen to live in the large urban centres? Is that what the government means when it talks of a policy of regionalism? I would suggest that it is an absurd view of this country that not only will not work, but will not be acceptable to and tolerated by Canadian citizens across the country.

It is for those reasons that I am opposed to the general benchmark of decentralization, deregulation and privatization policies of this government. The dreaded DDP, decentralization, deregulation and privatization. They are linked. You cannot look at one without isolating and looking at the others. Therefore, in terms of the specific concerns on Bill C-85, we have a two-track approach; we have to link them with the other policies that have been enunciated and also begin to cross the t,s and dot the i,s in terms of what it means to local authority transferships.

Number one, what about the responsibility of safety and security? We have had the experience under deregulation. Does this mean now that in a transfership to local authorities that the security and safety aspects of all types of transport modes will be sacrificed? If it is, is it worth the price of transferring holus-bolus authority to local communities and local cities? I think not.

No. two. What about the guarantee of job security? We have seen the results in terms of deregulation and privatization. Does this mean now that in the transfership of local authority, we are also transferring the guarantee that has normally been there in terms of job security, particularly now that this government has finally admitted that we are currently in a recession?

Bill C-85 does not satisfy the conditions in terms of job security for airport employees. New managers will have full control over the work force. If they were to decide, for instance, that 20 employees are going to be laid off, a simple six-month notice is all that is required. Because Transport Canada is inclined to focus on maximizing service to the public, a higher number of employees are often required and the fact of protecting those jobs is certainly a higher priority under a national government control. Although the collective bargaining process and agreement will remain in place, the bargaining power of individual members affected by the transfer will be greatly reduced.

The Union of Canadian Transport Employees, for instance, which represents most of the airport employees, presently numbers a membership of 12,000 strong.

This represents, Mr. Speaker, logically—and you are a man of logic, unlike many of your colleagues—a strong bargaining case. For example, if Edmonton was to transfer the authority from the federal government to the local authority, the membership there would be reduced to 125 people, therefore greatly reducing their bargaining power.

If you are an employee and part of a membership of 125 or if you are an employee and part of a membership of 12,000, and someone has to speak for you, which one would you as an employee choose? Obviously, you would choose the larger one because they are interested, unlike members who yell.

I look forward to the members having the courage to get up in their place and speak. Maybe they are not concerned with employees protecting their jobs, but the Canadian people are certainly interested because they have to make ends meet at the end of the month.

In terms of the third issue—I will be going into this in some detail a bit later on—what about the provisions of the Official Languages Act that do not all apply in Bill C-85?

Fourth, what is the bottom line of local authorities? The bottom line of governments is a bottom line that suggests there is something greater than simply the financial bottom line. There is a bottom line in quality of service, in equity of service, in protection of jobs and in the protection of safety in travelling across this vast country.

The bottom line of local authorities may in fact be very different than the bottom line of governments. Therefore, we will have a clash between what is in the interest of the private as opposed to what is interest of the public good.

Fifth, what about the expertise and experience of Transport Canada in running our airports across this country? Will the experience of those who have worked long and hard in the transport field across the airports and their expert knowledge be lost? What kind of variable will that have in terms of the safety evaluation and safety equasion?

Sixth, will local authorities be allowed at one time or another to impose local increased taxes on their municipalities to make up the shortfall for their airports? Has this government thought that out? If we were to transfer the authority to Edmonton or Vancouver, in a few years time they will increase the municipal tax base in order to make up for some shortfalls at the airports. Is that right?

I suggest it is not right because those airports are part of a national service. If there is an airport in Edmonton, it is not only Canadians from that city who use that airport. It is Canadians from all over the country. Therefore, that burden must be equally shared.

What about number seven, local authorities having a double standard. That is to say, local authorities would be lining up to get the authority for the very popular often used airports.

What about the less used airports in the north, in the east and in the west? Will authorities rush to try to obtain the authority and power over those airports? If they do not, we are going to have two tiers. We are going to have local authorities at the popular airports, and the Government of Canada in the other airports.

What is that going to mean in terms of the service for Canadians at all those airports? We obviously are getting into a different bottom line arrangement with this government. Canadians and Liberal members on this side do not like it.

I mention this briefly because I believe I only have about five minutes left in this discourse. I would love to continue. I might if members on the opposite side are so disposed, but I and members in my party are concerned about the application of the official languages component to Bill C-85.

There is a strong concern whether the federal principle of bilingualism is going to be safeguarded and protected.

The minister will know that the Official Languages Act is divided into 12 parts. In fact, a number of those parts are not entirely interested in terms of local authority. That is why it is obvious that parts I, II, III, VI and VII 7 are not included in Bill C-85. They are not legitimately relevant.

However, it is not so obvious why Part V–Language of Work, Part VI–Participation of English Speaking and French Speaking Canadians, and Part VII–Advancement of English and French are not included in Bill C-85.

The operative clause in Part V states:

> English and French are the languages of work in all federal institutions, and officers and employers of all federal institutions have the right to use either official language in accordance with this Part.

> It would seem anomalous to have a Part of Bill C-85 which reports to protect the use of both the French and English languages in relation to the public, if the employee's use of either language is not protected.

Why is Part V of our Official Languages Act not applicable in Bill C-85?

Part VI states:

> This Part states that the Government of Canada is committed to ensuring that English and French Speaking Canadians without regard to ethnic origin or first language have equal opportunities to gain employment or advancement in federal institutions. The workforce in particular federal institutions should also reflect the presence of both official language groups.

> Again, this is a Part of the Official Languages Act which is designed to protect workers of both groups.

It is not part of Bill C–85. It is difficult for my party and I to understand the rationale behind that glaring omission.

Part VII reads:

> This Part states the commitment of the Government of Canada to enhancing the vitality of English and French linguistic minorities in Canada and fostering the full recognition and use of both English and French in Canada.
> The task of doing the above is given to the Department of Secretary of State. This department is given the right to encourage and co–operate with the provinces and the public in general to accomplish the mandate given to it by this statute.

We are asking on this side of the House why Part VII is omitted from Bill C–85 and thus the Department of Secretary of State is not permitted by legislation to carry out its mandate under this very important part.

I urge the minister who is present in the Chamber to reconsider the words he spoke earlier. In fact the Official Languages Act is absolutely not protected in three crucial parts of its 12–part mandate. That is not in keeping with the Prime Minister's so–called goals of national reconciliation, of somehow having peace between our linguistic duality, and of increasing the opportunities for all Canadians regardless of their ethnocultural extraction.

In this bill is an abandonment of those principles by virtue that it does not permit three of the twelve parts in our Official Languages Act to govern equality among our linguistic groups, and that is a shame.

In conclusion, we are very distressed on this side of the House that this government has allowed its perverse sense of decentralization as contained in this bill. Deregulation is the messiah of the Tory government for Canadians. Privatization is hurting the transportation industry and is hurting Canadians. It has not improved the transportation industry. It is sinking our shipping industry. It is derailing our trains. It is stopping and stifling our aircraft on the ground.

I have much respect for this minister. I hope that he still has time enough to turn things around. This government is going through some turbulent times. This bill will not improve it. This bill will aggravate it.

• (1620)

We will fight decentralization, deregulation, and privatization with every Canadian fibre that we have.

Government Orders

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise first to make it very clear to the hon. minister that members from this side of the House are unalterably opposed to privatization and deregulation in the method in which the minister and his government are introducing them.

However, when I listened to the minister and when I listened to my colleague from the Liberal side of the House, I was kind of concerned at the beginning because I had the feeling that we were indeed talking today about privatization and deregulation.

It is my understanding that the privatization and deregulation of airports are being done by regulation and not by this piece of legislation. This piece of legislation is talking about the workers and how the benefits, support and collective agreements of the workers will be protected.

This bill is entitled: "an act to provide for certain matters respecting official languages, employees' pensions and labour relations in connection with the transfer of certain airports." Having looked through the bill, having listened to the minister, and having listened to my colleague from the Liberal side of the House, it becomes more and more clear that the minister has cherry–picked his way through a number of pieces of legislation: the Official Languages Act, the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, the Canada Labour Code, Part I, and the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

I am very pleased that the minister has consulted those acts, but by naming these acts in this bill he has left workers feeling pretty high and dry in many areas.

The minister said that he is concerned and wants to provide for community input into Canada's airports through the local airport authority. I wonder if the minister also considers the representatives of the workers and the workers at airports part of the community. If indeed he does, I would like to ask the minister why he has consistently refused to discuss this legislation with representatives of the union. They tell me they have been trying to speak to him for two years on this legislation.

Mr. Lewis: I only brought it in a month ago.

Ms. Langan: The minister has said that he only brought it in a month ago, so how could he have had time to consult with the unions. It would seem reasonable and logical that if one is to introduce legislation one might even consider in a moment of weakness talking to the unions in advance of drafting the legislation.

Mr. Lewis: It is called second reading.

Ms. Langan: Oh, it is called second reading: "We will bring the unions in during second reading because we know what is best for people". This government has a reputation of never, ever paying attention to anything that has happened in committee between second reading and third reading, but the government says it knows what is good for people.

An hon. member: They certainly do pay attention.

Ms. Langan: They are paying attention now, are they not? They run it through and bring in closure. We have certainly seen that kind of attention. Canadians know. I do not have to convince you guys over there. Canadians know how much you pay attention.

Mr. Lewis: Us people.

Ms. Langan: Oh, I am sorry, you people over there. All right, if that makes you happy. Guys is a unisex word, I say through you, Mr. Speaker, to the minister.

At any rate let me address this bill. The bill provides for transfer of certain matters affecting current employees of the airports who are to be transferred to local airport authorities. It ensures that for the period of transition from federal to local control the employees retain all of the collective bargaining rights and pension benefits enjoyed as public servants. At least that is what the bill purports, but there are many areas about which the union is concerned because the minister has not seen fit to explain them to the union or to the workers at the airport other than in this House.

It also ensures, it says, that bilingual services remain a part of our airports. However, we have just heard the speaker prior to me indicate his concerns about what this really means vis-à-vis the use of the Official Languages Act.

This bill does not address the whole question of the transfer of control for the management of airports from Transport Canada to the LAAs, the local airport authorities. It is this omission that is most problematic in this bill.

While we are on the one hand attempting to safeguard the rights of employees, we are on the other hand ignoring any discussion of who the new employer is going to be and what responsibilities and services that employer will be taking on.

Mr. Soetens: Maybe it will be the low bidder.

Ms. Langan: It could be the low bidder. That could also mean that we could get rid of unions and we can do it on the cheap. The hon. member on the other side of the House said: "Maybe it will be the low bidder". We have often seen what happens when that happens. The low bidder saves money on the income that he does not have to pay to workers because they are not unionized. Often that is the case. If the hon. member is offended by what I have to say, I think I was equally offended by what he had to say.

There are several problems with the substance of this bill that in my view need to be addressed. Not the least of these problems is the complete lack of consultation—and I have already referred to it to some extent—with representatives of the employees affected in the design of this bill. It is those men and women who have a very real vested interest in the continuation of services and of their collective rights as employees.

However, the minister has already told this House, in response to my comment, that he has only had this bill in the works for a month and that he did not think of asking the workers before he drafted it. He also did not think to tell the workers just what the bill means.

The bill gives the minister the power to designate which employees, who are currently public servants, are to be subject to the provisions of this bill but does not spell out what criteria are to be used to determine those employees. There is no provision for the employees affected or their bargaining agent to be involved in the determination process.

We all like and trust the hon. minister on the other side of the House, but unfortunately all the airport workers do not know him as well as we do and may have some concern about trusting him.

What does the term designated employee mean within the context of the Public Service Employment Act? Is it an employee once designated and then laid off pursuant to section 29 of the Public Service Employment Act? What is the status of the employee who is incorrectly designated at the time of the transfer, which is not discovered until after the time of the transfer?

These may seem to be questions that can worked out at a later time but, given the complete lack of parliamentary review of the whole privatization process as it affects the airports, this is our only real opportunity to ensure that the government acts responsibly toward its employees and in the public interest.

For the benefit of the minister, we are talking about workers who are terribly concerned and uneasy because they do not know what this means to them. Obviously, as far as the minister is concerned, they must wait until the bill receives second reading and is sent to committee to hear discussion. I ask the hon. minister to assure us that he will not wait that long to talk to the unions and to talk to the workers to allay their concerns.

This bill allows for the minister to designate not only direct employees of an airport but also those employees in connection with an airport. We are not just talking about 12,000 employees from the government ranks to whom the hon. member for York West referred. We are talking about employees who are connected to the airport. Could the minister tell us just how far this connection to the airport extends and what are the rights of employees who now work at arm's length from Transport Canada? Again, we are faced with a lack of clarity and a considerable measure of uncertainty.

There are other problems with the bill. Uncertainty exists over the status of employees who may be on a legal strike at the time of transfer of the airport to a local airport authority. The minister is sort of acknowledging that one. Given that lack of clarity and the determination of designated employees, striking employees may well see their right to withdraw their services denied. At least that is the concern, because of the lack of clarity in the bill.

The bill also creates confusion over the status of grievances and other outstanding matters between the present employer and employees during the transition period and prior to certification of the new bargaining unit. Speaking of the new bargaining unit, I would like to make reference to section 7 of the bill which refers to an application by a "designated airport authority" or bargaining agent to which subsection (1) applies, made within 30 days after the transfer date. The Canada Labour Relations Board shall make an order determining whether the designated employees of the authority represented by the bargaining agent constitute one or more units appropriate for the collective bargaining and (b) which trade union shall be the bargaining agent for the designated employees in each unit.

I would like to raise the question with the minister. Does this mean—I know he cannot respond to me immediately, but I am sure he will get back to me on this—that the minister is opening the door to decertify the Union of Transport Employees and, in fact, create a situation and an invitation for raiding within the organized workplace at the airport? I would really like to have a clear answer to that question because there are many workers who are concerned about this.

This bill also provides some hint of protection for workers affected by the transfer of authority over airports from Transport Canada to the local airport authorities, but does not provide precise language. Workers do not need vague assurances and promises of the future actions of the minister, they need to know prior to any change in their employer and work setting what their rights are and how those rights are to be protected. The government needs to rethink this bill. It needs to be specific. It needs to clear up the language in this bill and to put the rights of workers ahead of the maniacal rush toward privatization that we are faced with in this country.

This legislation also needs to be rewritten and drafted in consultation with the workers affected by this drive to privatize our airports. We cannot simply allow, by government fiat, an alteration of the collective bargaining rights of airport employees without providing for protection—and one of those protections includes the right to be the bargaining agent as well as the right to be within a bargaining unit.

The transfer of authority over the management of our airports is subject to a series of requirements, assessments and reviews before the Memorandum of Understanding is reached. Even then, further negotiations and consultations obviously will take place before the transfer is completed.

Is it not time that the employees affected were accorded the same kind of consideration as the developers and managers who are in control of the airport, that is negotiations, consultation and discussions?

The local airport authorities welcome the highly skilled employees presently working in the Public Service. They will benefit from their experience and training. They will, however, benefit even further if those employees can be assured that they will not see their skills and years of service under-valued. Mr. Speaker, workers need to be made part of the process now to ensure their rights are protected by both their present and future employers. I think that the minister is generally a man of principle and a man who—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, oh!

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, I will just stop now, and let the minister go on and tell us about his principles.

Mr. Speaker, the point I am trying to make is that the minister, I believe, is a person who would be concerned about the workers at the airports and, to some extent, is showing that concern by the introduction of this bill. Our criticism is that he did not talk to the workers in advance of having this introduced to maybe pick up some of the major concerns that they might have and, indeed, some parts of this bill are so unclear as to make it impossible for those workers, without a very, very detailed briefing from the minister, to even understand what this legislation means in their lives. My colleague, the hon. member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan will be rising to speak at great length about the whole question of deregulation and privatization because the minister, in his opening remarks, made it absolutely clear that he considers that whole discussion part of the debate around this proposed legislation.

I want to raise a couple of things, from the point of view of my own community. I live in my constituency of Mission—Coquitlam. I tell the minister that this is a little bootlegged. I have written him two letters about the needs of the Pitt Meadows airport. I am sure that, just as he wishes to consult with the workers on this and just as he is in the House inviting the participation of the opposition on this bill, and given his busy schedule, it will only be a matter of days before I have a response to my letters.

With regard to the open skies—

Ms. Langan: Oh, he is taking them on his next flight. Well that is another point, because I discovered from the hon. minister, in discussion across the floor, when there was a question about airport safety at the Toronto airport, that this minister drives to and from his constituency. I am very pleased for him because with the deregulation and privatization, those of us who cross this country on the weekend, going home to our ridings, are really feeling very comforted to know that the Minister of Transport is driving to his riding.

I am sounding facetious here but it is very important that we talk about airline safety in this country. I think that we must assure Canadians that the workers at our airports are good workers, are safe workers, and care about the safety of Canadians. But I often wonder, when we are talking about privatizing airports and deregulation, if we are talking about selling off the rich airports and leaving the poor airports to continue to be serviced by the federal government. What does that do? Does that mean that, because of profit, we will just slip a little here and cut back a little there on safety procedures? Is that what the privatization of our airports is going to mean?

The other point I would like to make is that recently, on one of my trips back from Vancouver, I sat next to an American Airlines pilot. He told me that every opportunity he gets, when he has to cross the country, he uses Canadian carriers. He also told me that he uses Canadian carriers because he feels much safer in Canadian carriers. Now, that is a sad testimony to what we might have before us in Canada if, in fact, we get gobbled up and overcome by our partners from the States. The hon. member who spoke before me said God bless them. Well I say, God bless them, too. I have nothing against American carriers and I have nothing against American workers, as a matter of fact, I very much respect them but, I happen to think that the Canadian workers are the best in the world. I happen to think that our airlines have the best records in the world and I, sure as heck, hope that we manage to maintain that. Part of that maintenance is what happens on the ground at our airports.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be important to close my remarks in this debate by, once again, addressing the Minister of Transport, through you. If, as he says, he is concerned about the workers that are affected by this legislation, I would appeal to him to please spend some time with those workers clarifying the clauses we have raised in this legislation, making it abundantly clear to those workers what is going to happen in their future and their livelihood. Would he please assure this House that he will make those contacts.

• (1640)

I want to thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the minister for staying to listen, and I want to thank the hon. members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Under Standing Order 74 the speeches are 20 minutes, plus 10 minutes questions and comments. The hon. member for Burin—St. George's on debate.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this debate. My colleague, our spokesman on matters concerning transport, my friend from York West, has already laid out much of the ground and stated to the minister and to the House some of our concerns about the legislation.

I want to add to what he said and, in particular, I want to introduce into debate a regional perspective. This perspective affects my part of the country, not only my riding of Burin—St. George's, but I have in mind the generally less populated, more sparsely populated parts of the country as a whole.

Bill C-85 is dubbed an act to provide for certain matters respecting official languages, employee pensions, and labour relations in connection with the transfer of certain airports. It is that latter phrase, Mr. Speaker, to which I want to direct your attention for a moment, "the transfer of certain airports".

All by itself it is a fairly innocuous little phrase but it carries with it, if one knows the habits, the philosophy, the ideology, the mindset of this government, the phrase "the transfer of certain airports" suggests a lot more than if one did not know something of the mindset of this particular government.

When thinking of this administration, words that come to mind include—

An hon. member: Corruption.

Mr. Simmons: —privatization, include deregulation, include globalization, include cost recovery, include profit. These are just five terms or sets of words that by themselves do not get me terribly excited. I could have rhymed off the names of five animals, five birds, or five people for that matter, or five places in Canada. There is nothing wrong with privatization, deregulation, globalization, cost recovery, profits. There is nothing wrong with that at all in their place—in their place, Mr. Speaker.

But we are talking now about the linkage between privatization, and globalization, and deregulation, and cost recovery, and profits. We are talking about the linkage between those terms and the way this country is being run. When a government of whatever political stripe takes as its obsession, as its raison d'être, as its very reason for existing, those words and makes them into its principles. It says that we must deregulate everything, we must privatize everything, we must have cost recovery on everything, we must have profit whatever-the-cost in human terms. We must globalize. We must become part of the larger community.

These are all laudable ideas until put into the context of a government whose first mandate is to provide for the people of Canada a government worthy of the name.

What about people? Do people matter with the government at all? Does it know that people even exist out there any more?

An hon. member: They don't care.

Mr. Simmons: If you look at its callous reaction to people's concerns over the goods and services tax, and even if you suppose for the moment that all the people are wrong and this crowd is brilliantly right, you would at least expect a more empathetic or sympathetic response or an explanation of why there is such a great divide between what the government wants to do and what 85 per cent of people think it should do. At least you would expect the crumbs from the table approach. At least you would expect, even disdainfully, some effort to bridge the gap between the table top and the floor.

Whether talking GST or that infamous Bill C-21, with its 2 per cent goodness as it relates to maternity and so on, and its 98 per cent evil because it will destroy the unemployment insurance system—but that is another issue—what about people in all of this? Whether it is this Bill C-85, or any other piece of legislation, does it matter at all with the government any more?

It seems to me that the crux of this entire issue can be addressed if one realizes for one moment that government is not a business. I would be the first to concede, to agree, to advocate, and to urge that many of the things that government does ought to be done in a fairly business-like, efficient and cost-effective manner. No taxpayer out there, however much he or she contributes to the public purse, subscribes to the notion that the public purse ought to be dissipated or spent in a way that is wasteful.

If by business-like, one is suggesting it ought to be done, having due regard for cost-effectiveness, there is nobody in this party who has any objection to that. Indeed, I doubt anybody in the country has objection to that notion.

By business-like, does the government mean the bottom line, that the government must make a profit, that the government must deregulate no matter what the consequences are to people, and that the government must privatize no matter what the consequences are to people? If that is what it means by business-like, then I submit to you, Sir, that government is not a business and was never intended to be a business. Beyond that, the tragedy is not a matter of sheer semantics as to whether government is called a business or something else. It is a tragedy that we have a government that insists on being a business at a time when the country is asking for a number of solutions that a business approach cannot provide and was never intended to provide.

To allay the fears of my friends in the corporate sector—

Mr. Nunziata: You have friends in the corporate sector?

Mr. Simmons: Both of them.

Mr. Nunziata: They must be related.

Mr. Simmons: Let me say, first, to my good friend from York South-Weston that the surprise that he expresses that I may have some friends in the corporate sector is not completely without foundation. I assure him that two or three—a few out there—have been seen talking to me, not when there are a lot of witnesses around, but in general terms they will condescend to speak to me on occasion—Christmas, Easter—

Mr. Nunziata: Cap in hand.

Mr. Simmons: —Sunday morning after church, that kind of thing. Lord forbid, after I have finished speaking, that some good Tory in the House might get up and talk about how anti-business this member is. I will assure my couple of friends out there in the business sector who are hanging onto every word I am saying now out there somewhere, and all my Tory friends on the other side—and long may they stay on the other side, not necessarily on the right of the Speaker. One day, if I get on the right of the Speaker, the deal has got to be that they are left of the Speaker. I hope they are always on the other side, because they have a very different view of reality than I do.

• (1650)

Lest they get up and rave on about how anti-business the Liberals are because of some things I am saying, let me rush and hasten to assure them that I happen to believe that there is a place for business in this wonderful country. I am a private entrepreneur by belief. I used to be one in practice until this job got the better of me. I am a private enterpriser from way back, and I am a liberal from way back.

One of the things that liberalism believes in, espouses and practices is that free enterprise can drive the economy, fuel the economy, but government can also have a bit of compassion and a bit of common sense that says that finally government is not about bottom lines at all. Government is about people, the needs of people and how they can be fostered and furthered by the decisions and the initiatives of government.

First, government is not a business and was never intended to be. Second, if there is one reason more than any other why federal government is failing abysmally and not working in the country, I do not believe there are many people out there across the country who do not recognize that federal government has come to a halt and that the government has lost the moral mandate to govern.

The reasons we have such great divisions in the country now, whether they have to do with Constitution, the future of the country itself, or what ought to be the fiscal and economic solutions to our problems, is because the government has ground to a halt. The government has lost its very mandate to govern. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that government is not working in this country for a simple reason with very complex and disastrous consequences. The gentleman from Baie Comeau and his team are trying to have the vehicle of government do something it was never intended to do in the first place.

I will give an analogy. I drive a car, badly at times. I drive a ski-doo, even worse at times. But I drive the ski-doo in the worst possible fashion like when I try to drive it like a car, when I try to have it do something it was never designed to do— when I put it over gravel instead of snow, when I put it at speeds that only a car should ever go, when I ask of it to do for me things that that vehicle was never intended to do. One of the basic understandings of rural life, whether in northern Canada or on the south coast of Newfoundland which I represent or wherever, which any 12 year old who has ever been aboard a ski-doo—let alone an adult— is that he or she will understand very quickly that a car and a ski-doo are two very different vehicles intended for two very different purposes.

The problem with this government is that it is driving the car of government as though it were the ski-doo of business. It is trying do things that it was never ever designed to do. This mad experiment is costing misery from coast to coast, from François to Petites, to Grand Bruit in my riding, to places like Port Alberni on Vancouver Island, to the far north, to Iqaluit, to Point Roberts in the south, and to the Niagara Peninsula. The government is inflicting so much human misery through its policies. I could go through the litany again. There is the GST, unemployment insurance wrecking, lack of regard for the pain being felt these days by fishermen and plant workers in Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada, and the very point of this bill, the disruption, the lack of convenience, and the robbing of services to people who live in the less populated parts of the country. Yes, there are a dozen or 20 planes to Toronto any day of the week from Ottawa, any day of the week, because the market provides that that will be the case. Come with me some day to Stephenville in my riding and watch the rush of planes go out. There are two or three of them every single day. One of these days, if the government has its way, when it finishes privatizing and deregulating, it will put the final nail in the coffin.

My one fear in electoral and political terms is not that after the next election we will not be on the government side. That is not my fear at all. Whatever the odds in that respect, let me give another issue to think about. Whoever becomes the government after the next election—and it will not be that clique, I will tell you that—should have one fear. That is whether or not there will be enough left to govern, whether or not there will be enough of the country left to put back together, in political and constitutional terms or in social terms, human terms, people terms. That is my concern. The country is being changed so quickly and in such a devastating manner that there may not be enough left to govern when the time comes.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, my time is running out. Let me then come directly to the point under discussion.

This bill talks about the transfer of certain airports. As I said a moment ago, do not be confused by the slick wording. One thing the gentleman from Baie Comeau knows well is how to choose, how to practice, and how to articulate slick wording. God knows. If one was not sure of that, one should have watched the television a couple of nights ago.

An hon. member: Mr. Slick himself.

Mr. Simmons: He gives the word "slick" a bad name.

An hon. member: Oh, oh.

An hon. member: What about the word "crook"?

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I ask my friend from Toronto to restrain himself. There is certain language that even we Newfoundlanders will not use.

The transfer of certain airports, the bill says euphemistically, the transfer—what could be more harmless than transferring airports? We do it all the time, transferring airports. What could be more harmless than that? Look behind the phraseology. Look behind the slick phrase and ask what it is really up to. What it is really up to is marketplace again. If it works in Toronto where there are millions of people, it must be great for Burgeo on the south coast of Newfoundland. If it works in Montreal, it must be a miracle up in Gimli, Manitoba. It euphemistically talks about the transfer of second airports. What is said in this bill is one more nail in the coffin, folks, this is one more step in the Tory process to make this country an economic colony of the United States, whether through deregulation, privatization, globalization, or cost recovery.

One of the latest nails in the coffin was the insult last week from the minister sponsoring this bill when he released something that has been circulating for a long time, a new program. Transport Canada will implement a cost recovery program in April of next year. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, it will not be just any little old–fashioned share cost recovery program. Oh, no. Have a look at the figures, as I have, and you will very quickly decide.

If you live in Edmonton, as you do, Sir, or if you live in Newfoundland, as I do, the impact will be much greater on you and me than it will be on those in Toronto, Montreal or Vancouver. This is another package which is skewed toward the more urban parts of Canada, to the detriment of people who happen to have committed the sin of being born in a part of the country that did not have a million people a few miles from their front door. What a crime.

Whether in respect of Bill C–85, or any other government initiative, once government forgets that it is put into office by people, and as soon as it stops responding to people, and I never said knee jerk reactions and I never said jumping every time the public demands something, but, in broad brush, once the government stops listening to the basic concerns of people, it is time for that government to go.

We have a lot of concerns. These concerns were put very well by my colleague from York West, our transport critic, and a very good transport critic he is. He is doing a marvellous job. He has put the case very well. I hope I have added something to the case, particularly as it relates to the regional concern, the concern of people who happen to believe that living in Newfoundland, P.E.I., Nova Scotia, Manitoba and New Brunswick is not in itself a sin. As a matter of fact, it is not a bad way of life. It used to be a very good way of life, but it is being constantly eroded by a government that dances to the tune of business, dances to the tune of another country and should be dancing to the tune of the ordinary people of this country, and I only wish it would.

Mr. Karpoff: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member who has just finished speaking would not like to leave misinformation on the record. He talked about the devastation in this country from one end to the other, and talked about Point Roberts. I would like to inform him that Point Roberts is in the United States. I am willing to concede that the devastation caused by this government may even extend beyond our national boundaries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not think that is a point of order. It is a point of debate.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I salute and congratulate my colleague from the opposition for his far–reaching, but relevant speech. If I could, I would like to get him on a tarmac somewhere in northern Canada, and if possible, in a hangar in Sault Ste. Marie, Timmins, Windsor or London, Ontario.

My colleague from Mission—Coquitlam talked about the minister who introduced this bill, but had not spoken to the workers at the airport. Anyone in this country who has a category five airport, and I am not familiar with the regulations for category five, four, or three, but I do know that the arbitrary difference is perhaps two–thirds of a metre or a couple of feet in the old measurement. For want of another couple of feet in an airport, your classification of airport can be downgraded. That has happened in Timmins, Windsor, London and Sault Ste. Marie and countless other airports across this country. Perhaps the people in Canada are not aware that they do not have adequate fire–fighting services. It is told to me that on three or four occasions per month at our local airport, if you fly in after 10 o'clock, there is not one fire–fighter on the job. Transport Canada officials tell the fire–fighters to go home because it cannot afford to pay them overtime.

It is suggested that it is the airlines' responsibility to inform the fire–fighters. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, this is not appropriate. Should someone book off sick in the daytime at some of these airports, there may be two very valuable, expensive rescue vehicles in which there are only two fire–fighters to man them or person them, if you will. It is possible that one fire–fighter may have to drive to the scene of the crash, reel out 300 or 400 feet of hose, run back to the vehicle, release the valve for water pressure, and enter the aeroplane by himself or herself. I understand that they are told that they should never, ever do that, "never enter an airline crash by yourself".

I am coming to my question, Mr. Speaker. Does my colleague believe that this is happening at the airports in this country and what does he think the government should do about it if people in Canada do not have adequate fire protection on many days during the year? It is unheard of, unbelievable.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, first of all, let me say to my good friend from Surrey North that I thank him for adding to my limited education today. I did not know where Point Roberts was; I have never been to Point Roberts; I had an idea that it was on a border somewhere. I thank him for telling me exactly where it is. Some day I will tell him where Jean de Baie and Lamaline is, because they are about the same distance from my house as Point Roberts is from his.

The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie talks about airports like Timmins and others. He could have thrown in one called Stephenville because the same thing is happening there with respect to fire-fighters. He asked me if I agreed. The answer is yes, I agree. But the other answer is, had he heard the point I was making in my speech that government should not be run like this, he would have understood how much I agree with him. Once you get a government that says: "We will provide fire-fighting on a cost-recovery basis rather than because there is a need", you have a very dangerous situation on your hands.

The government decided in the past few weeks that as of next April, in St. John's, Newfoundland, in the bailiwick of my buddy over there, the Minister for International Trade, after midnight there will be no air traffic controller at all, not one, between midnight and, I believe, 6 a.m. For six hours in the tower at St. John's airport, the most easterly international airport in Canada with responsibility for a large segment of the North Atlantic, this government has said that there is no need for air traffic controllers. They are taking them off all together. Why are they doing it? They are doing it to save a few bucks. To save six hours' salary, they are going to jeopardize the safety of potentially thousands of people. But, Mr. Speaker, it is all worth it because they are going to save a few bucks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

On a point of order, the hon. parliamentary secretary.

• (1710)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for the confusion but, as usual, there was a need for last minute communications.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will find consent for the following motion:

That, on Thursday, November 8, 1990:

1) The Order of the Day following Routine Proceedings be Government Business No. 21, the motion respecting the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, with debate to continue until no later than two o'clock, at which time—or at an earlier time, if no member rises to speak—debate on the said motion or any amendment thereto shall be deemed adjourned;

2) In the said debate on the said motion, there be, as the first three speakers, one representative from each of the three recognized parties in the House, each to speak for up to 20 minutes, with no question and comment period to follow; and, following such three speakers, speeches be limited to 10 minutes for each speaker, with no question and comment periods to follow:

3) Following the deemed adjournment of the said debate as set out in (1) above, the House, as the case may be, shall either suspend to two o'clock or, if it be two o'clock at the time of such deemed adjournment the House shall enter upon Statements by Members in the usual manner, followed by Oral Questions in the usual manner;

4) The Order of the Day following Oral Questions shall be second reading and reference to Committee of the Whole on Bill C-87, An Act to amend the Statute Law in relation to War Veterans; and that no later than five o'clock the Speaker shall, if required, interrupt any proceeding then under way and put forthwith and successively, without further amendment or debate, every question necessary to dispose of the second reading or third reading stage of the said Bill; provided that (a) any speech at third reading stage of debate be limited to 10 minutes, and (b) if the Committee of the Whole be considering the said Bill at the said time of interruption, the Chairman shall interrupt forthwith, pursuant to this Order, to put every question necessary to report the said Bill, following which report the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of all stages of the said Bill pursuant to this Order; and

5) Following disposition of the said Bill as specified in this Order, and without at any point in proceedings on the said Bill deferring any demanded recorded division on the said Bill pursuant to any Standing Order, the House shall enter upon Private Members' Business for no more than one hour, followed by up to 30 minutes for Proceedings on the Adjournment Motion, at the conclusion of which time the House shall adjourn until one o'clock on Monday, November 19, 1990.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe there has been consultations. The hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations and certainly we are in agreement with the motion as presented by the parliamentary secretary.

As a matter of clarification, I want to put something on the record. Assuming that there are no recorded votes, and it is my understanding that there would be no recorded votes later in the day, that if there were necessity, we would have an understanding that we would not see the clock to allow one or two members to complete their remarks if it had to go beyond five with the understanding, very clearly, that there be no recorded motion.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, if I have the assurance that there would be no requirement for recorded votes, in other words everything would pass either on division or by agreement, then I do not see a problem from our side and we would be happy to co-operate with members to make sure that everybody had their due say.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we have no difficulty with this proposal. We give the undertaking that every member who wants to speak will at least be given a chance to speak, that nobody will hog the floor for the regular 40 minutes that are normally allowed at second reading. I think that people will be reasonable and will try to get this bill passed tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I think this is an excellent point that my hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier raises, that in the spirit of passing this important legislation prior to Remembrance Day, there will be an understanding that while speeches could be longer, we would attempt to hold them to about 20 minutes at second reading stage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Members have heard the terms of the motion. Is it agreed?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Agreed and so ordered.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-85, An Act to provide for certain matters respecting official languages, employees' pension and labour relations in connection with the transfer of certain airports.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate on Bill C-85, although I would have preferred to hear my friend and colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, who today is celebrating 25th anniversary as a member of this House. As you know, Mr. Speaker, today the Hon. Warren Allmand is being honoured in his riding and is therefore unable to be in the House. He asked me to make a few comments on this bill, reserving the right to add further comments later on and perhaps expand on, and further explain, our objections to certain clauses in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-85 is to provide for certain matters respecting official languages, pension plans and labour relations.

[English]

I shall leave my colleagues and friends on the Liberal side of the House to handle questions dealing with the protection of employee benefits, as to whether the government will ensure that employees do not lose their pensions and pension benefits once the local authorities have taken over airport management.

We have to remember that when CN decided to privatize Route Canada all employee benefits and pensions were lost due to mismanagement. I will leave that to some of my colleagues who are much more familiar with the issues.

We have an issue here dealing with the protection of jobs. The government must again ensure that all jobs at local airports are retained once they are under local management. We have in our minds the privatization of Air Canada. We all remember the Deputy Prime Minister in this House assuring us that the jobs would be protected. In October 1990, 2,900 people lost their jobs and had no federal protection. I will also leave to some of my colleagues in the Liberal caucus the obligation to oppose this bill based on what kind of guarantee local taxpayers will have so that they will not be obligated to pick up any deficit that is incurred by the administration of these local airports. Other items or rules such as the six-month protection of employees' jobs, which members will recall is a right of Public Service employees, should in our view apply to the transfer of the airports to regional authorities.

I want to address one very important item in this bill that deals with the official languages. Having spent 10 years as critic for my party on this matter and having been a member of the standing committee since its creation in 1979, I have a special obligation to make sure that we scrutinize legislation so that it conforms with existing laws and that the government is taken to task if it does not. I want to remind my members that the clause to which I will be addressing my comments is clause 4 of the bill that reads as follows:

> Where the Minister has sold, leased or otherwise transferred an airport to a designated airport authority, on and after the transfer date Parts IV, VIII, IX and X of the Official Languages Act apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to the authority relation to the airport as if
> (a) the authority were a federal institution; and
> (b) the airport were an office or facility of that institution, other than its head or central office.

I know it is complicated, Mr. Speaker. That is why I will take a few minutes, with your indulgence, to explain the impact of this clause, how we feel it should be strengthened, and possibly where the principle is not exactly in keeping with the spirit of the Official Languages Act.

Let me read first of all what the act says. We adopted Bill C-72. It was passed by the House of Commons on July 7, 1988. Section 23 of the act says: "For greater certainty, every federal institution that provides services or makes them available to the travelling public has the duty to ensure that any member of the travelling public can communicate with and obtain those services in either official language from any office or facility of the institution in Canada or elsewhere where there is significant demand for those services in that language."

• (1720)

Mr. Speaker, the government has included a vital clause in Bill C-85. Following the privatization of a number of federal agencies, the government was ordered to make the Official Languages Act binding on the authorities of these newly privatized institutions so that the Canadian public will be able to obtain services in French or English, as the case may be and as the customer, in other words, as Canadian men and women prefer.

Mr. Speaker, under Part IV of the Act the new regional or municipal authority—God only knows what this new commission will be—has a duty to provide services in the language of the customer's choices. Although the language of service is included in the present legislation, we note that the working language—the language used daily by employees—and the principle of equitable participation—in other words-equitable representation of both official language groups in the organization—have been totally ignored. This means that employees at these so-called privatized or restructured airports will no longer have the assurance that they can work in the official language of their choice. It will depend on the good will of local management.

The government has made no provision for ensuring that these new institutions provide for equitable participation of both official language groups. Mr. Speaker, official language minorities will bear the brunt of all this. In Quebec, an airport like Dorval, for instances might be transferred to the private sector. What would happen if the so-called management of this new air terminal commission decided that French was the language of work at headquarters? How can management ensure that employees use both official languages, when management uses only one? We've got a problem, Mr. Speaker!

[English]

The central administrative office will be operating in one language because it is excluded by the act. It is not the same; it is not subjected in the same manner to the Official Languages Act. How will that central office which will be using one language—it could be English in Edmonton or français à Dorval—encourage its employees to use both official languages when only one language is used at the head office? That is a problem we have addressed for many years in this House. The employee will be obliged to use the language of the administration. If it is French in Dorval, it will be to his or her detriment. If it is anglais à Edmonton, he will have to use the language of the administration. That will be the way the system will operate.

Using that same example, what happens if the travelling public, which by law is entitled to receive services in either language from the new commission, is not satisfied and wants to complain to the administration directly? It cannot do that.

If the language of work of the central administration is other than the travelling person's language, that is if it is French in Dorval or English in Edmonton and the travelling person happens to be from the other language group, he has a heck of a problem because the administration does not speak his language. That again presents us with a certain problem because, as is the case with the employees, the travelling public will be obligated to use the language of the administration. That is a problem which will have to be resolved.

One could say that we will wait before making any decisions on this subject. It has been two and half years since we have adopted this new Official Languages Act, and we have no regulations. We have no definition of what is an institution.

Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to remind the House of some definitions that are essential to our understanding of the regulations arising from legislation as important as the Official Languages Act.

We have waited two and half years for the government to table these regulations. We still do not have a definition of "significant demand", for instance. We do not have a definition of "office".

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, as you well know, but we are still waiting. And how are we going to tell canadians that an office is defined as— It could even be a horse, Mr. Speaker! It could be a horse ridden by a policeman who provides a service here at the House of Commons and is obliged to answer Canadian visitors in the language of their choice. In English or en français. If a policeman is not capable of answering Canadians who visit Parliament Hill during the summer— Because that is his office, and he just happens to sit on a horse.

People ask him: sir, what is that statue? where's the washroom? what's that building? Well, if the policeman cannot answer, Mr. Speaker, his office, as I defined it—the definition may be a little farfetched, but it is there just the same—the office is incapable of providing the service.

I am sure hon. members will say: sure, but let us not exaggerate. I want a definition of an office. What constitutes an office? I want a definition of "significant demand".

[English]

What is significant demand? How do you define significant demand? These are the things we addressed in committee and in the House two and a half years ago, and the government has yet to give a definition. Yet we have a law before us today that says the Official Languages Act applies in regard to significant demand. Who will determine that?

I will quote the same article which states that the law applies with such modifications as the circumstances require. That is discretionary to the local commissions or boards, whoever it might be and however it be intended to apply the law of the land. If we do not tell the commissions what the laws are, and if we do not tell them what the federal government and this Parliament meant when it passed that law, how the heck are they supposed to do it?

I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that we have a serious problem here with interpretation and that we will want to question the minister on that article in particular at committee stage. I do not want to take any more time, but I would be more than pleased to answer any questions.

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, I just have one very short question for my colleague. How does he see this bill affecting safety in airports? Two days ago there was a minor accident in the Pearson International Airport. How does he see the bill as it pertains to the safety of airports?

Mr. Gauthier: I thank my colleague for that question. I think it is a rather important question. These commissions or these new boards will operate at arm's length from the government. We must make sure that there are national standards that apply in regard to safety. We have to make sure that national safety standards are in place and that those boards will follow those safety requirements, otherwise we are in for a very difficult time.

I am sure that my friend from Agincourt will want to address that issue when he makes his remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon—Dundurn, I notice that the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier paid respects to the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce for his 25 years as a member of Parliament. I would like to bring to the attention of the House that the hon. member for Victoria—Haliburton, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley—Hants and the hon. member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke, have served here for 25 years as of tomorrow, so I think that is worth recognition.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There is another question or comment. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier on an excellent speech, and always, short and sweet.

Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. member. I realize that the Committee on Official Languages, established pursuant to certain legislative provisions recommended that the government report to the committee on the procedure adopted by the government to implement the Official Languages Act. I wonder what the committee will do in the absence of a report that has yet to be presented to the committee.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Orders of the House require the government to respond to any report tabled by a standing or special committee. I am referring to Standing Order 109: Within 150 days of the presentation of a report from a standing or special committee, the government shall table a comprehensive report.

Mr. Speaker, this week, the 150 days provided under the Standing Orders expired. I hope that this week, the government will respond to the Committee on Official Languages and inform the House of its position on regulations arising from the Official Languages Act, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for the information concerning the four members of the House who are celebrating their anniversary. That is very interesting and very commendable news. These are very interesting and commendable people with whom I have had some dealings since I came here two years ago, two years short two weeks since the election. They have certainly been a great help to us. However, it is not as good as the 1992 election will be.

An hon. member: Two more years to go.

Mr. Fisher: That is right, two more years.

Getting back to Bill C-85, it is described as an act to provide for certain matters respecting official languages, employees' pensions and labour relations in connection with the transfer of certain airports.

I listened to the minister and I congratulate him for having stayed around for the two subsequent speeches, but I really am at somewhat of a loss to understand where in his speech he made any relevant reference, any meaningful reference to the specifics of what is in the bill. I am rather glad that he did not because it gives me an opportunity to make reference to some of the things he talked about although he may have been speaking in a rather oblique way.

The minister talked about efficiency, better service, cost efficiency, entrepreneurship. I see those things relating to privatization, as one of the previous members mentioned.

I see it being referred to as well as deregulation, to which one of the previous speakers referred. He had a third, and I guess it could be referred to as the "pillar", as we have been talking a lot about pillars in connection with the banking industry. I think they could also be referred to as the three pillars of Progressive Conservative philosophy of the last two years since I came into the House, namely, deregulation, privatization and free trade, which is not what the member for York West referred to as a third reference.

When the minister takes a bill such as I read out, and refers to how much better service we are going to have, how cost efficient it is going to be, how it is going to have effective commercial operations and entrepreneurial benefits, he can only be referring to deregulation and privatization. I would suggest these have shown no efficiencies and no great entrepreneurial potential either. Certainly they have not shown better service.

If we refer to deregulation, whether it be of the trucking industry or the airline industry, or even the shipping industry, which is coming about, it certainly is proof that there have not been any of these efficiencies. The potential, which is supposed to be so inherent in what the government is doing with the airports, is not there.

As far as free trade is concerned, the promise of wealth and plenty for this country of ours certainly has not materialized in any way. As a matter of fact, we hear on a daily basis how much of a tragedy the free trade deal with the United States has been for this country. We also hear the fears expressed on a daily basis on how much more tragic this government's policies are going to be for this country when it gets into the free trade agreement with the United States and Mexico as well.

The minister stands up and speaks in such glowing terms of the potential of turning these airports over to local airport authorities. There is no reason why anyone on this side of the House should gain any comfort from what the minister says is going to occur.

There are many other examples of the government bringing forward, in glowing terms, bills it has introduced and saying how the country is supposed to become prosperous because all these wonderful things are going to occur.

One of the things which the bill talks about about is employees' pensions. These are so vital to the federal government employees and must be protected after the employees are transferred to the local airport authorities.

If we look at Bill C-21, the Unemployment Insurance Act, the evidence is certainly there that this government's legislation, proposed in glowing terms, is going to turn out to be an absolute disaster for the working people of Canada. There is no protection for them within that legislation at all.

As I have already pointed out, there is certainly no protection for the Canadian people within the concept of privatization, deregulation and free trade. Reference was made earlier on how the government is divesting itself of these presumably profitable airports. I suppose you could read along with that, Mr. Speaker, efficient and possibly even cost-effective, and perhaps, even better service in these larger profitable airports.

On the other hand, the smaller ones and I suppose also by implication from what the minister said, perhaps less efficient, where there is not quite as good service, and maybe not quite so much potential for the entrepreneurial potentialities, although what is supposed to be referred to within that I am not entirely sure. Perhaps it is all these little kiosks we see springing up in the airports where entrepreneurs have started up. I suppose, at least theoretically, they are making a tremendous amount of money on these little businesses they have set up.

The logic of it still escapes me. Why the government would not get rid of the inefficient ones which presumably are costing them money and let the real entrepreneurial spirit of this country take over and turn these smaller, less efficient, perhaps even implied because they are government run. Although we certainly have a great deal of experience in Saskatchewan which would prove that government run—particularly New Democratic government run operations—can be tremendously efficient—

An hon. member: Hogwash.

Mr. Fisher: —and tremendously profitable. It does escape me why the government would not turn these small airports over to the entrepreneurs and really prove to this country how wonderful the entrepreneurs of this country are.

Instead of that, of course, and I am really begging the question because we know the answer anyway, the government is turning over to their friends in the larger centres the operation of the airports where there is a tremendous amount of potential for making profit.

I am not entirely sure what is going to be done with the profit because the act does say that the "leased, sold or otherwise disposed of" airports. It does not say there could be no private companies, but it does not say it cannot create some kind of a corporation and, presumably, set up directorships and so on. I would suspect there is a lot of potential within that for being able to pay themselves rather handsomely as airport managers and chief executive officers, vice-presidents, and so on of the local airport authority.

I would suspect that as much as anything is what is behind most of this. Otherwise the government would be testing the Canadian entrepreneurial spirit in turning the small airports over.

The small airports will be staying in the hands of the Canadian public who are going to have to shoulder the burden of them running inefficiently, certainly as this government has proved it is able to do.

The minister has referred to the assurance that the aviation safety aspect which we now enjoy and as has been pointed out by one of the previous speakers, is pre-eminent in Canada. One of my colleagues was referring to a pilot from an airline in the United States who said that he would much rather fly on a Canadian carrier across the country than anything else whenever they had the opportunity.

I would suggest that that is something of which we are tremendously proud but I would also suggest that there is a tremendous amount of potential there for us to be losing that safety factor within the Canadian aviation industry.

I would also suggest that the whole matter of safety within the airports themselves, has been alluded to already, is going to suffer enormously. It is bad enough at the present time. There are many times when the Canadian public, if they really knew what was happening on the ground, would probably do the very best they could to avoid flying on those later flights. The evidence is certainly there that there is not a lot of protection when it comes to flying later in the day. Once these airports become privatized, there is every likelihood that that will increase much more.

As far as the workers themselves are concerned, the question again is begged because, as has been pointed out, the unions involved were not consulted. While the government seems to pride itself in saying that it very seldom does anything such as this, bringing in legislation or making changes within the legislation without consulting the people involved, we know, of course, time after time, that is not the case. It is quite possible that it may have consulted with some of the people who will potentially be the heads of the local airport authorities. I would suspect it has. This bill is supposed to be about the protection of workers. Those who represent the workers now are not protected.

I would like to conclude by making reference again to the workers, and particularly to their probability maintaining the standard of living and the level of wages and benefit which they now do as employees of the federal government under these local airport authorities. While some of them may possibly be successful, some are not going to be successful. It begs the question: What are we going to do with these once well-paid, well-trained civil servants who will undoubtedly find themselves out of jobs because of the failure of some of the local airport authorities to be able to function in the manner in which the government so erroneously assumes they are going to be able to do?

There has to be some changes made to this legislation for the protection of the workers not just for the short term, but for the long term, over their whole working lives. We have to make sure of the remuneration for these people, and not just the permanent people, as the minister pointed out and as the legislation supposedly points out, although permanent may be the operative word. Possibly, the minister knows something that the rest of the committee does not know yet. It may be that, within the whole context of what is about to occur, we are going to find a tremendously larger number of temporary employees in these airports. That means that the standard of living of these people will be lower than ever before. This is a tragedy, but something which has to be addressed and certainly will be addressed before this legislation comes to a conclusion.

Speaking of conclusion, I would consider that to be the conclusion of my remarks at this stage of debate on this legislation.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with an element of surprise as the hon. member described what he sees in this bill. I would wonder whether or not he has even read the bill.

Also, I am appalled that he would suggest that the sky would fall because the airports are being transferred for their operation into a local airport authority. He treats it as if it has been privatized and sold to an agency. That is not the case.

He also questions the number of airport authorities that are possibly on the horizon. The member has failed to realize that, when this was announced many months ago by the former Minister of Transport, it was seeking those communities that would show interest in operation of the airports. To date, four such groups have come through: Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, and Montreal.

As to question of the number of possible transfers for operations, that is why there is such a small number.

He refers to the kiosks in airports. It just so happens that these kiosks happen to pay commissions to whatever airport they are in as a form of rent. I realize the NDP is not too concerned about whether it costs the taxpayers money to operate things and that, but this is one way of helping to recover some of the money.

• (1750)

Why does the member portray it as privatization, when it is not privatization? It is the transfer of the operation of the airport and the safety aspects of the comptrollers, the operation of the things from the tower, et cetera, still are completely under the auspices of Transport Canada and will not be under the airport authority.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I was only responding to comments made by the minister. I have read the bill. My surprise is whether or not the minister has read it, judging by his remarks on it. If the member opposite is worried about whether or not I have read it, I certainly have.

The minister is the one who referred to the better service, to the cost effeciency, to the more effective commercial operation of the airports, and the entrepreneurial potentialities of it. If those relate in any specific way to, as the bill is entitled, "an act to provide for certain matters respecting official languages, employees' pensions and labour relations in connection with the transfer of certain airports", I am at somewhat of a loss to explain how it does.

As I said, it certainly gave me an opportunity to be able to make reference to what I consider to be the four pillars of the Conservative philosophy: deregulation, privatization, and free trade, and another free trade.

With all due respect to the member who asked me the question, and with all due respect to my desire to stand up here and keep on talking, we could go on about deregulation, privatization and so on. There are members who wish to speak. On that basis, I would be only too pleased to sit down to let them have some time.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate this opportunity to speak to Bill C–85, even though I have but eight minutes today, unless you are prepared to be friendly and extend the—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member has seven minutes.

Mr. Nunziata: Seven minutes? Aren't you kind, Mr. Speaker. I will speak for seven minutes and resume my comments next day.

We on this side of the House are concerned about this piece of legislation. It is one small step in the long journey that the Prime Minister and the Conservative Party embarked upon in 1984 to sell out the country. The Conservative Party and the Prime Minister, starting in 1984 decided to put Canada out of business. In other words, they decided to privatize different federal institutions and different federal Crown corporations in order to satisfy the right wing element of the Conservative Party.

Is it any wonder that Mr. Spicer and others have to travel from one end of the country to the other to deal with national unity when this government six years ago started to pull apart the country? It started to divide the country because of its policies and, in particular, its policy with respect to privatization.

The federal government has a role to play in order to keep this great nation together because, without the federal government and without federal government policies, the only thing that binds Canadians and the only thing that we would have in common is the fact that we share the northern half of North America. It is the only thing we would have in common. What else would a potato farmer in Prince Edward Island and a forest worker in British Columbia have in common?

The government set out in 1985 to dismantle Canada and dismantle the very infrastructure that has kept the country together.

The Prime Minister started by going to New York City to visit with his American friends to indicate to them that the Foreign Investment Review Agency would be eliminated. Canada, in effect, was up for sale and no longer would the Canadian government have the authority to determine what was in the best interests of Canada insofar as foreign investment was concerned.

The message started back then. The message was loud and clear. Since that time we have seen many small steps and many large steps that have led to the disintegration of Canada. Let me just name a few. Air Canada. The government decided to privatize Air Canada. Why? I do not know. Air Canada belonged to the people of Canada. It was one of those crown corporations that kept the country together because through that crown corporation, in a very direct way, the government was able to provide for air transportation to many communities in Canada that today do not have the jet service that existed when Air Canada was a crown corporation.

Petro-Canada. The government now wants to privatize Petro-Canada in order to line the pockets of their rich friends on Bay Street.

Harbourfront in Toronto. Canada Place in Vancouver. Canada Post is on the privatization block now. The unemployment insurance system in Canada is being privatized. Is it any wonder that Canadians are asking themselves today, what does it mean to be a Canadian? Why should we continue to be together when the government is hell bent on destroying the country?

This bill, as innocuous as it may seem to some, as innocuous as it may seem to members on the government side, is another small step. The Government of Canada has decided it does not want to be in the airport business. Why?

Mr. Sobeski: Why should it?

Mr. Nunziata: The hon. member asks, in his smug, arrogant way, why should it? Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker. I will tell you why the government should be in the airport business. Toronto International Airport last year netted some $60 million profit, net profit. Where did that money go? It belonged to the people of Canada. That money could have been used to upgrade and subsidize airports in smaller centres across the country. What did the government decide to do? Give it to the private sector.

Is it any wonder that, the construction and management of Terminal 3 was given to the private sector and Huang Danczkay. They are not there to provide a service to the people of Toronto, to ensure Torontonians and others in southern Ontario that they have the opportunity to be part of an efficient transportation system. Huang Danczkay and all the other Tory flaks and businessmen were lining up to run Terminal 3 because there was a significant profit to be made.

The government decided in Bill C-85 to provide for certain matters respecting official languages, blah, blah, blah. We know what all this means. It means the government is privatizing and giving to local authorities the operation of certain airports across the country. Why are we not dealing with that bill first? Canadians do not know at this point. Who are these local authorities in Vancouver, Edmonton, Calgary or Montreal? We do not know who these people are. The government is putting the cart before the horse. We should first deal with the issue of privatization.

I see you are on the edge of your seat. You are about to cut me off, but before you do, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I look forward to the opportunity when we meet again on Bill C-85 to continue my comments and to criticize the government for destroying the country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Like the song, We'll meet again.

The hon. member will have 13 minutes remaining in his speech, plus ten minutes for questions and comments.

HUMAN RIGHTS AND THE STATUS OF DISABLED PERSONS

SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased today to table, in both official languages, as well as on audio cassette—I believe this is the first time this has ever been done in the House—the government's response to A Consensus for Action, the second report of the Standing Committee on Human Rights and the Status of Disabled Persons.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Point of order, the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I can understand the Secretary of State wanting to create a precedent in tabling a cassette. Does that mean that that document officially becomes part of the official report of the government in response to that committee? Does it mean that that cassette is available to all Canadians, if they require to see it? Does it mean also that it is available to members of Parliament if they would like to hear this cassette?

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for raising the point of order because it does allow us to flag what we are doing here.

What we are dealing with is a report in response to the committee of the disabled, and so this particular vehicle we are using opens up that report to some of our disabled Canadians and gives them an opportunity to hear for themselves the report that was tabled in the House, something that is a little unusual and something that I think all members of the House would be happy to hear.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we are trying to deal with a particular problem here, that of a visual handicap. I take it also that the audio is available, but is it available in Braille for those who cannot see, for example? Have we made sure that we have not excluded any group?

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his intervention and can confirm to him that, yes, it is available in Braille and that we will be providing the other vehicles whereby we make sure that all of those people who suffer from different handicaps have the opportunity to see or hear the government response to this particular report.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the minister that this is indeed a very thoughtful and a very encouraging initiative. To seek clarification, when reports are tabled in response to committee reports, that would mean, then, that multiple copies are available for people who are interested. I take it that if a large number of Canadians want to seek access to the video, then multiple copies will be available for people.

Mr. Cooper: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that, and, of course, within reason. We do not want to produce more than is necessary, but we certainly want to meet the needs.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that my colleague did raise this point of order. I think it is a good time to draw to all members' attention that when sending out parliamentary reports to our constituents, we forget the blind who cannot read our reports.

In my last householder, I put a little sentence in there asking constituents who know of people who cannot see, to send those names, addresses and telephone numbers to me—with their permission, of course—so that we can send these people a cassette of the parliamentary report. I think with the tabling of this document, we are setting a new precedent so that we will not forget any of the handicapped across Canada.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

TABLING OF REGULATIONS

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (President of the Treasury Board and Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 32(1), I am pleased to table, in both official languages, the draft of the proposed regulations respecting communications with and services to the public in either official language. This is tabled in accordance with section 85 of the Official Languages Act.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (President of the Treasury Board and Minister of State (Finance)): Pursuant to Standing Order 109, Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of tabling, in both official languages, the government's response to the Second Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages.

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, while we are pleased to receive these regulations to implement the Official Languages Act of 1988, I must point out to the House that this is two and a half years after the passing—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member could raise that at another time. That is debate. The hon. Minister of State.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS AND GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. ## COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the seventh report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. In doing so, I have some comments that I wish to make.

The seventh report of the public accounts committee on the reform of the Public Service, which I have the honour to table today, deals with Public Service 2000 and the need for major changes in several important areas of personnel management.

While the committee supports and recognizes the need for the broad based reform launched under Public Service 2000, there is a major concern that the process is being rushed without adequate consultation with the Public Service unions and other interested parties.

The committee has therefore recommended that the government table a discussion paper in relation to the findings of Public Service 2000 and refer it to a new special committee on reform of the Public Service before introducing key legislative changes in the House.

Another matter upon which the committee has placed great emphasis is the serious problem of deteriorating morale in the Public Service. The committee identified four important areas where specific improvements can be made to raise morale, the process of contracting out the system of pay and benefits, the difficulties dealing with the poor performance, and the need for purposeful training.

For example, the committee recommended that the Auditor General examine the cost effectiveness of contracting out by government agencies, including its impact on the morale of public servants. The committee also revisited several important areas that have been the subject of earlier reports in the House, notably staffing, job classification, and the need to clarify the role, responsibility and accountability of the central agencies responsible for the management of people in the Public Service.

A key recommendation addressed to the Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission called upon these agencies to ensure that every authority relating to personnel matters that is delegated to departments and agencies is accompanied by appropriate and effective accountability mechanisms to see that things are going right.

The committee has requested the government to reply by November 30, 1990 with regard to changes in the process followed by Public Service 2000 and within 150 days with respect to all other recommendations.

NATIONAL DEFENCE AND VETERANS AFFAIRS—THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the third report of the Standing Committee on National Defence and Veterans Affairs on maritime sovereignty.

Pursuant to Standing Order 109, the committee requests that the government table a comprehensive response to this report within 150 days.

The committee has had an opportunity to ascertain the surveillance, chase and apprehending capacities of our maritime forces, particularly in respect of the protection of Canada's laws. In the search for evidence the committee has undertaken, we became overwhelmingly and unanimously impressed with the professional conduct of our Canadian forces. We also have heightened our realization of the extraordinary work that they do in the preservation of Canadian law.

It is fair to say that all members salute the fact that on a day-to-day basis it is the Canadian forces that are, often in unknown and unreported ways, protecting against international polluters and terrorist attacks, looking after and protecting our ocean resources, guarding against illegal immigrants coming into our country and, in particular, conducting search and rescue efforts on behalf of Canadians.

This quasi-military effort on behalf of our forces is an important and encouraging element of our sovereignty. It is on this basis that the committee has put 18 recommendations before the House of Commons.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the hon. member did not intend to imply that there was unanimous support within the committee for the recommendations. While our party respects and supports many of the recommendations in the report, the report was not unanimous.

PETITIONS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition to the House signed by people in many communities in Ontario and Quebec. The petitioners ask the government not to impose the GST on magazines, books, and newspapers.

Never since Confederation has a tax been placed on these items. This government is planning to tax reading by taxing books and newspapers. These people want the system left tax-free so that it will not inhibit reading and the dissemination of knowledge in any way.

RADIO LICENCE FEES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a great many concerned citizens in my riding wherein they say that the fire departments provide a very vital service in protecting the lives and property of citizens.

The federal Department of Communications has imposed huge increases in licence fees for radio-telecommunications, including all emergency service radio equipment. This will make it very difficult for these fire departments because a great many of them deal in voluntary service. They are not paid. They risk their lives on a regular basis.

The communities have to fund these departments and to pay the costs. The communities are strapped now and will perhaps be more so if the economy keeps going into recession.

I think it is very unfair for the government to request increased fees and thereby jeopardize the services that fire departments provide.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from people in Victoria and Montreal. They call upon Parliament to reaffirm the historic principles embodied in the tax-free status for the printed word by retaining the zero rate in the GST legislation and regulations.

Again this government will not listen to the many Canadians who have signed petitions. They are forced to call upon the government to recognize the fact that the printed word should not be taxed and should retain the favoured position it has held in the past.

They ask that their petition be heard.

CANADA POST

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to table several petitions containing almost 400 names of persons from the villages of Watford and Alvinston in my riding of Lambton—Middlesex.

The petitioners are availing themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present their grievance to the House, urging the government to ensure long-term operation of the post offices in their respective communities. The petitioners are upset that the government is closing them down in towns and villages across rural Canada. They do not want their mail to be dispensed through Becker's or 7 Eleven stores.

I just want to say a special thank you to the village council in Watford for leading this fight and a special thank you to Stella Ferguson for leading this fight on behalf of the constituents in her area.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, under the government's proposed goods and services tax reading materials such as magazines, books, and newspapers will be taxed. Such a tax will jeopardize literacy and learning and will undermine the important role of education.

These hundreds of petitioners from across Ontario call upon Parliament to reaffirm the historic principles embodied in the tax-free status for the printed word by retaining the zero rate in the GST legislation and regulations.

I received a response from the government to previous petitions on the GST, and the government admits in its own words that it will tax reading materials.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition today. I note that just the other evening the new Tory majority in the Senate gouged Canadians again by refusing an amendment to the goods and services tax bill that would have saved Canadians from excessive heating fuel charges this winter. This greedy, grasping government is proceeding with this bill in the face of all kinds of objections from Canadians.

The petitioners who have signed this petition are objecting to the government proceeding with the goods and services tax. Admittedly their objections are based on the desire to stop the tax on books and magazines which they oppose. It is the first time in Canadian history that we have had a tax imposed on books and magazines, and they are objecting to it.

However, had they been here to watch the proceedings in the Senate, they would have been outraged at the approach of the Conservative majority in that place.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have a petition to table in the House today. This petition supports many others I have tabled previously, to the effect that taxing books means promoting ignorance and that the government is making a mistake when it proposes to tax publications. Your petitioners maintain that newspapers, books and magazines should be completely exempt from this tax. After all, we are in a democratic society.

Your petitioners, dozens of whom state here that free distribution of printed matter is one of the cornerstones of our democracy, culture and education, claim that an educated and productive society will suffer as a result of a tax that would restrict reading in this country, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I think this petition speaks for itself and that we should act on its recommendations.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have a large number of petitions to present today from constituents of Blue River, Vavenby, Birch Island, Clearwater, Black Pool, Little Fort, Darfield, Lewis Creek, Barriere, Chu Chua, Heffley Creek, Knouff Lake, Aspen Grove, Red Lake, Pass Lake, Pinantan Lake and Pritchard, British Columbia.

All these petitioners, and there are hundreds of them, point out a whole set of concerns for the government's decision to proceed with the cruel and punitive goods and services tax. They point out how it is going to cost average families hundreds of dollars in additional taxes every year, coming at a time when the policies of the government have also driven us into a recession. They simply ask the government to come to its senses and stop proceeding with this GST.

I have another petition to present, mainly from constituents of Kamloops. They point out that the government is now going to place a tax on books, including religious books, so that when people buy bibles, religious pamphlets or religious story books for their children they will have to pay an extra government tax on this literature.

They just cannot believe that this is proper, appropriate, decent or sensible. They ask the government to stop taxing reading material.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and indeed honour to present two petitions under Standing Order 36. The first one is signed by people from many parts of Canada, including Winnipeg, Manitoba; Waterloo, Ontario; Dundas, Ontario; Greenwald, Manitoba; Parkside, Saskatchewan; and many other communities in Canada.

These people are calling for an end to low-level flight training over aboriginal lands, certainly until at least the aboriginal claims have been dealt with.

These people recognize that the proposed training centre is not going ahead. Nevertheless the flights continue.

I think the petitioners would like me to point out that the Innu walk to Ottawa is culminating this weekend with a rally on Parliament Hill at two o'clock on Saturday.

• (1130)

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition under Standing Order 36. It is signed by several persons living in the London, Ontario area and it calls upon the government to get rid of the goods and services tax.

The petitioners ask the government to reform the taxation system so that there is an effective, minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations. They also ask that if and when there is broad public consensus on a sales tax measure to replace the manufacturers' sales tax, this reform not be an opportunity for the government to impose a massive tax grab.

The petitioners want Parliament to cause the government to cease with a proposal which will shift the tax burden on to ordinary Canadians, through a regressive consumption tax, instead of through real tax reform.

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 36, I have a petition signed by Canadian citizens from various communities, adding further to the number of dissenters. The petitioners are expressing the outrage of the Canadian public in general to the tax on reading materials. This is a cruel and brutal tax, it is unprecedented in this country, and, it is unprecedented, I think, in any other civilized society in the world.

1987 PROTOCOL TO THE GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY AGREEMENT

Question No. 348—Mr. Caccia:

1. With regards to the 1987 Protocol to the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, (a) what new data must be provided (b) when will programs be in place to compile such data (c) has such data been compiled and, if so, for which years (d) will the data be released to the public and, if so (i) in what form (ii) when?

2. With regards to the same Agreement (a) by what date was the priority list of toxic substances to be prepared (i) when will it be prepared (ii) released to the public?

Right Hon. Charles Joseph Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) The 1987 Protocol to the GLWQA calls for the collection of data as part of programs to:

—remedy longstanding severely polluted areas ("Areas of Concern")

—develop lakewide management plans;

—address contaminated sediments and groundwater;

—quantify toxic substances in the air and in land run-off;

—assess human health effects;

develop ecosystem objectives and water quality objectives that can be agreed upon by jurisdictions in the Great Lakes basin.

b) Programs are now in place to collect such data.

c) Canada's first report under the 1987 Protocol, based on data collected, was made public in February, 1989. It covered the period 1987-88.

d) December 31st, 1990 marks the end of the second reporting period under the 1987 Protocol. Canada's report for this period will be made public in the form of a progress report to the International Joint Commission. We anticipate the report will be released early in 1991.

2. Through consultation and cooperation, the Parties to the 1987 Portocol to the Canada-United States Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement have drafted Standard Methods and developed the required Lists of Substances. The Standard Methods determine those substances believed to have acute or chronic effects on aquatic or terrestrial biota and are believed to be present in, or have the potential of being discharged to, the Great Lakes system. They take into consideration acute or chronic toxic effects, carcinogenicity, teratogenicity, mutagenicity, bioaccumulation and environmental persistence.

The Agreement calls for the compilation and maintenance of three Lists of Substances, to be used to guide the Parties, State and Provincial Governments and the International Joint Commission in proposing substances for new Specific Objectives. These Lists, Present and Toxic, Present and Potentially Toxic, Potentially Present and Toxic, were developed in 1989.

A Protocol for adopting chemical objectives is also being developed for federal, provincial and state review.

In March of 1990, the Standard Methods and Lists of Substances were released to the public for review. Comments have been received and are being reviewed by the Binational Objectives Development Committee. Annual updates will be published every spring for public comment.

ADVICE BY THE MILITARY TO THE GOVERNMENT ON THE POSSIBILITY OF ARMED CONFLICT IN THE PERSIAN GULF

Question No. 368—Mr. Duhamel:

1. Was the government advised by the military and or other advisors on the probability of armed conflict in the Persian Gulf crisis, prior to Canadian troops being sent and if so, (a) what did they indicate on this probability (b) what did the briefings indicate might be the possible loss of life?

2. Have these estimates changed subsequent to the initial briefings?

Hon. William Hunter McKnight (Minister of National Defence): The information requested is considered a Privy Council confidence and therefore cannot be released or provided under the terms of the Access to Information Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Starred Questions Nos. 353 and 354.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I ask that these two answers be printed in Hansard, as if read.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

SECTION 26 OF THE UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

*Question No. 353—Ms. Langan (Mission—Coquitlam):

Have any Canadians applied for and been denied training under Section 26 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and if so, how many (a) in each province of Canada (b) in each month of 1990?

Hon. Barbara Jean McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Employment and Immigration Canada does not keep records of the number of Canadians who have applied for and been denied training under Section 26 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. The department only keeps information on the number of Canadians who have received training under Section 26.

REVENUES RECEIVED BY THE GOVERNMENT UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF BILL C-21

*Question No. 354—Ms. Langan (Mission—Coquitlam):

Since January 1, 1990, has the government received any revenues under the provisions of Bill C-21, An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Employment and Immigration Department and Commission Act. (The Minister of Employment and Immigration) and if so, how much was received, (a) in total (b) for each month of 1990?

Hon. Barbara Jean McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): For 1990, employers were encouraged to remit U.I. premiums on a voluntary basis at the rate of $2.25 per $100 of insurable earnings as proposed in Bill C-21, instead of remitting at the rate of $1.95 under the unamended legislation, in order to avoid the hardship associated with lump sum retroactive payments to be made by employers and employees after Bill C-21 is passed.

a) and b) Accurate data with respect to incremental premiums remitted voluntarily will not be available until employers complete their T4 summaries during 1991.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

CONFERENCE ON SECURITY AND CO-OPERATION

SUMMIT OF HEADS OF STATE AND HEADS OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Pierre Blais (for the Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved:

That, in view of the upcoming Summit of Heads of State and Heads of Government of the Participating Parties of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE) in Paris, on November 19, 1990 this House express its support for the CSCE as a key pan-European and trans-Atlantic forum within which a new co-operative security framework can be built through the maintenance and development of its comprehensive approach to security, political, economic, environmental and human dimension issues, and strengthened by the development of the structure of the CSCE process, including by the creation of a CSCE parliamentary assembly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to order made on Wednesday, November 7, the debate may continue until two o'clock p.m., without interruption.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this debate is an important opportunity for the House once again to consider Canada's foreign policy.

I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in moving this resolution, has given us an important opportunity because in our country foreign policy is not a luxury issue. It is something that is fundamental to the definition of who we are as Canadians, and what our future might be.

On the eve of this forthcoming meeting which will take place on November 19 in Paris, I think it is important for members of Parliament to have the opportunity to speak out about the changes in Europe in light of the end of the cold war, and the emergence of new alignments and new possibilities there.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has already addressed, in a rather significant statement of government policy on May 26, 1990, Canada's view of CSCE, the Conference on Co-operation and Security in Europe, in a speech at Humber College in the Etobicoke—Lakeshore constituency. This speech has since been referred to as the Lakeshore declaration.

I am sure a number of members will pick up some of the ideas from that in the course of our debate this morning.

Just as North American history would be vastly different without Europe, as any of our native peoples in this country could very clearly describe for us, so too European history would be vastly different without North America. It was to these shores that Europeans came to escape religious persecution, famine, hunger, political strife, to make a new home and new economic opportunity.

It was from these shores that, as colonies, a great amount of wealth and resource was shipped to Europe, which enabled European countries to build up their wealth and power.

In this century, Canadian men and women wearing the uniform of this country and using the resources of our country as an arsenal for democracy have more than once proven that Canadian history and European history are inexplicably linked.

As we debate this morning, on the eve of Remembrance Day across our country, many of us wear the symbolic poppy to remember the many thousands of Canadians who gave their lives or who returned to our shores carrying lifetime wounds because they had participated as Canadians in European-made wars. Therefore, we are not outsiders to what happens in Europe.

We want peace and security in Europe, because history teaches us that this governs how much peace and security we can have here. We want peace and security in Europe because the defence expenditures which we incur are no longer due to any North American threat but because of instability or the threat of conflict elsewhere.

This concept of Europe across the Atlantic is perhaps a concept more important to us as Canadians than it is to the Americans, simply because of our continued need as a smaller country that is actively engaged on a global basis to maintain balance.

I see our country in the state of transition, from the model, the institutions and the ideas of a 19th century nation-state into a 21st century international country. Certainly one aspect of this role of being an international country is participation within regional organizations and associations that stress not national boundaries, but rather stresses common security and shared interests.

That is why in the European theatre, Canada has been active and continues with NATO, including the political clause that Prime Minister Pearson ensured was included in the North Atlantic Treaty, in the European Common Market and the possibility soon for us to have a more formal link with the European Community. The third element that is evolving, CSCE, is an amazing arrangement of conferences and meetings and agreements that represent a collective effort at the highest political levels to pursue a common interest.

Canada has participated fully in the CSCE process from the outset, and we are committed to it because of a basic objective, as I have already said, to enhance security and the confidence that we have a peaceful future.

We want to see barriers broken down that have divided people. We want to facilitate the freer flow of information, freer flow of ideas, the freer flow of people.

[Translation]

Our interest and involvement in Europe go beyond the major sacrifices Canadians have made in the past. They are not based on any vague reminiscences of our European roots. They reflect a very concrete estimate of the importance of Europe to Canada and Canada to Europe, and the importance of the European—North Atlantic community as a whole within the global context.

Europe is more than a geographical concept. It contains the vast majority of democratic countries on this planet. It contains the vast majority of countries with market economies. It contains the vast majority of countries in this world that recognize that a pluralistic democracy and the rule of law are essential to safeguard all human rights and all fundamental freedoms.

That is the context in which we should see the CSCE. The CSCE, a series of conferences and agreements involving 32 European nations as well as Canada and the United States, was one of the main catalysts of the changes that have taken place in Europe. The CSCE should be the instrument of choice for building the future order of a new and strong Europe. It is the drawing board where Europe's new architecture will be designed.

[English]

To design with this architecture a new Europe, it is essential to build a CSCE which is both flexible and capable of growth and adaptation. We want to see from the Canadian perspective a CSCE that is both pan-European and trans-Atlantic, as well as a forum within which a new co-operative security framework can be built.

This morning I want to touch on two aspects of this, Mr. Speaker. The first will deal with CSCE institutions. In this respect I will mention briefly that the member of Parliament for London—Middlesex, who is chairman of the Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association, was recently invited to attend the meeting organized by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe. That meeting was held in Strasbourg. Its purpose was to discuss a parliamentary dimension of the CSCE. The resolution before us refers to the creation of a CSCE parliamentary assembly.

The member of Parliament for Halifax West, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board, will be speaking shortly in greater detail about this dimension. I am sure other members will as well.

Just to note, Mr. Speaker, the unavoidable absence of the member for London—Middlesex. The hon. member wanted to participate in this debate but is representing the Prime Minister elsewhere at this very moment.

When he participated in that meeting in Strasburg, he expressed concern in the course of the discussions that Canada, as a full member of the CSCE, should not be left on the margins of any type of parliamentary assembly, nor should there be any indication of a weakening of the Europe-North America relationship.

The resolution that was adopted at the conclusion of their debate supported a formula for an assembly of Europe. The hon. member, in fact, abstained from voting on that resolution because he had had no opportunity to discuss this here in the Canadian Parliament. He was concerned to ensure that any new assembly would be a legally distinctive entity from the Assembly of the Council of Europe. Therefore, this opportuntiy we have this morning to discuss this will be very helpful in outlining a form for Canadian policy in this direction.

As I said, the member for Halifax West will shortly give further thoughts from his considerable experience on this subject as to what future directions might be.

The second area that I will speak on and conclude with, Mr. Speaker, relates to the security aspects of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe and particularly the confidence-building measures.

Toward the end of this month, as the parties meet in Paris, there will be another stage reached in the creation of a more secure future for Europeans and North Americans. Canadians have played a big role in getting to this stage. The stage will be marked by the development of a further framework through a treaty to reduce and limit conventional forces in Europe.

These are the so-called CFE negotiations, conventional forces in Europe. They are drawing to a close. In parallel with those negotiations, there have been other meetings by the CSCE participants on a range of measures to build confidence—what are often called security-building measures. These have been under discussion. The goals of these confidence and security-building measures, unlike the negotiations for armament reductions, are not to reduce military capabilities, but rather to expose what exists to public scrutiny and the scrutiny of other sides.

I want to say at this juncture that this is actually one of the most revolutionary concepts, when you think about it. It came through in the open skies concept which Canada has been doing a lot to support. We held a conference here in Ottawa earlier this year.

Anyone who has read anything about military strategy knows that one of the key elements always is the element of surprise. What we are talking about here, this openness or transparency, is to remove totally the element of surprise by permitting rivals, or thought to be rivals, the opportunity to see and to know clearly and concisely what the other side has available, where its troops, armed forces personnel, carriers, tanks, and aircraft are located, and the strength and deployment of those forces.

The intent of this approach is to create an atmosphere of openness and trust, trust about the military intentions of other countries. The end result is quite significant because national security measures taken by countries are very much based on the anticipated threat of what the other side may be intending to do. Military planners through the ages, and certainly in this century, have had to plan and develop strategies, and commit significant expenditures of government money by anticipating the worst possible threat, what they call the worst case scenario. Often in an atmosphere of mistrust, and the cold war certainly gave us sample doses of that, fear is the common denominator on all sides, the fear of being caught less prepared than the enemy. In that context, a significant arms buildup took place.

We all know of the billions and billions of dollars that have been spent on the arms race in this century. It is a deplorable miscalculation and misallocation of resources that could have been spent so much better on the underlying causes of instability. It would have made a better world rather than an arms buildup.

That is why these measures are of a revolutionary nature. Fostering trust and having openness is a way to create an entirely new atmosphere in which peace can prevail, military expenditures can be reduced, and the risk of war can be minimized.

In the final act at Helsinki, which was concluded in 1975, there were a number of relatively modest confidence-building measures. For examples, nations were encouraged voluntarily to notify each other of their plans to conduct certain large military exercises so that others would not think that there was some planned invasion afoot.

The CSCE is a continuing series of meetings and discussions as these ideas take hold and are reflected in governmental policy of all the participating European and North American countries. At the Madrid meetings which were held between 1981 and 1983, new security-building measures were developed.

The hon. member for Parkdale—High Park, who will be speaking in just a moment, was a participant at the Madrid conference. I am sure he will take the opportunity to elaborate somewhat on that aspect of this.

We are getting down to the present time, and I do not have time to go on to outline in detail what these subsequent measures specifically have been, but they are significant and include great arms reductions. For example, the U.S.S.R. will have no more than 13,300 battle tanks in Europe. This is compared to more than 41,000 which were present just in the middle of 1988. It is a reduction from 41,000 to 13,300. With artillery, there will be a reduction from over 42,000 to fewer than 14,000 artillery pieces. In terms of armoured personnel carriers, there will be a reduction from nearly 58,000 to 20,000, a reduction of 38,000.

Those numbers go right over most people's heads. Those 38,000 armoured personnel carriers lined up would stretch from Montreal to Toronto along the Macdonald–Cartier freeway. That would demonstrate graphically the size of the armed camp that Europe has and the size of the reductions that are taking place because of the new atmosphere being engendered through the CSCE.

The meeting that will take place in Paris on the 19th of this month will be another significant step. Canadians can take a great deal of pride in the role which our country has played in seeing that our common security and our future in the global and regional relationship with European powers will be secure because of this new order. The House will hear in the coming hours from other MPs. This is a chance to really speak as Canadians, particularly on the eve of Remembrance Day. We are mindful of past sacrifices that men and women of the country have paid in made–in–Europe wars and that a new future is ahead of us. The direction of Canadian foreign policy in this area, developed over a number of years now with different governments all speaking for a common Canadian interest, can continue to be strong and supportive.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to debate Canada's foreign policy with my good neighbour from Etobicoke—Lakeshore. I say good neighbour because our ridings are neighbouring ridings and our constituents come from similar roots. We both have Canadians who come from all countries that belong to the CSCE, including a non–European country such as the United States.

I was pleased that the parliamentary secretary placed such importance on this aspect of foreign policy, but I was very disappointed that there was not even a minister on the government side to move the motion. Does the government really take foreign policy seriously? I did not expect the Secretary of State to be here because I know he is in Toronto to make a major speech this afternoon which I hope to get to. Surely, the government would have had a couple of ministers in place to move and second the motion. That is no reflection on the part of the parliamentary secretary. I know he does his work very conscientiously.

My first encounter with the CSCE process was in the Madrid conference of 1980 to 1983. I was there with a group of parliamentarians from the House and we witnessed the corridor negotiations that were going on in resolving human rights issues. We witnessed the violent public demonstrations with representatives from Canada, the U.S., Ukraine, Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Hungary, all asking the CSCE delegates to address the human rights issue. This is where Canada always took a lead. While the Soviet Union and other countries wanted to address disarmament, and rightly so, Canada made sure that the issue of human rights violations was always addressed at these conferences since it is one of the items in basket one.

In January of 1989, at the conclusion of the Conference on Security and Co–operation in the Europe follow–up meeting, I remember the somewhat cautious, but at the same time elated, atmosphere that resulted from the series of successful meetings. Even the harshest critics could not deny that the CSCE was indeed alive and well and becoming a very real expansion of east–west relations.

When the Helsinki Accords were negotiated in the early days of détente, some called it a new era of pan–European co–operation. Others called it a Soviet victory in ensuring post World War II borders. Even this year we saw how German unification made the Poles and Lithuanians very nervous. Was this a threat to their present borders? Whatever the interpretation was, however, the Helsinki final act provided specific principles to guide the behaviour and relationship of countries with economic, political, and social discussions.

The Helsinki process was not easy. It could not be. There was a need to believe in the process, to persevere, to cross cultural and ideological lines, and to arrive at some common ground. Even then, people called for an abandoning of the process because of the violations by the Soviet Union and eastern Europe. At the end of day, at the end of the Vienna follow–up conference that took place from November 1986 to January 1989, there was a blueprint for the future, signed by all 35 participants. Vienna began, as Gorbachev introduced his glasnost and perestroika reforms. Although the United States and the Soviet Union have no more voting power than any other country, the influence of the two superpowers on the determination and success of the process cannot and should not be under-estimated.

• (1200)

As the optimist would have it, glasnost and perestroika made their way into the Vienna conference and with the change in attitude on behalf of the Soviet Union, subsequent conferences became a reality. We have seen some of the 11 conferences agreed upon take place, including those demanded by the Soviet Union on the human dimension in France in May 1989, in Copenhagen in June of this year, and we are now gearing up for the Paris summit of the heads of states and heads of governments of the participating countries on November 19, less than a week away.

The scope of the areas covered by the conference is truly astonishing. Therein lies the need for clear direction and clarification, not only of the future of the CSCE but of the future of other international bodies that have mandates to address specific areas that may either overlap or run parallel to the role that the conference has played in the past.

Historically, the conference was made up of three baskets. Basket one was made up of sovereignty, both territorial and internal affairs, the need for peaceful resolutions of disputes, the respect for human rights that include economic, cultural, social rights, fundamental principles of freedom, self-determination of peoples, and the integrity of frontiers and territory.

This expanded further with the co-operation of the members to include terrorism, religious freedom and capital punishment. This basket is also closely watched because it deals with confidence and security building measures. Disarmament, conventional and nuclear, will have to be dealt with within the framework of CSCE, although the hesitation is still real.

I would like to draw to the public's attention how other countries are now pointing fingers at Canada whether we ourselves are not violating basic human rights. Just Monday of this week I received a suicide note from Mr. Biedrzycki of Montreal, not my constituent but he was so frustrated that he sent me the suicide note. He wanted to jump off Jacques Cartier Bridge in Montreal. Why? He came from Poland as a refugee five years ago, he and his wife. His uncle in Montreal is providing them with a home to live in. His uncle is providing him with employment.

Here is a couple, five years in Canada, ready to work and ready to provide jobs for other Canadians. What was he caught in? He was caught in the refugee backlog. Five years, Mr. Speaker. I ask, were not the rights of Mr. and Mrs. Biedrzycki violated in their own country? Is this what the CSCE would promote, that it takes five years to determine whether a person should stay in our country? The ironic part of this whole case is had he come to Ontario, he could have applied as a self-exiled refugee class and would have had his landed immigrant status at least three years ago.

Because he went through the refugee backlog, he is not allowed to stay in our country. He will be sent back to Poland in handcuffs, escorted by two security guards. This is the way we treat new Canadians coming to our country.

Where we Canadians always set an example for other countries in the human rights area, we now have this black mark because of that government bungling of the whole immigration refugee policy.

Let me take you on to basket two, Mr. Speaker, of economics, science, technology and the environment. This would seem to be the easier in terms of negotiating toward consensus.

It can be argued however, especially today, that as our very security is threatened by global economics and the state of the environment, were one to want to make real progress, that consensus will, as in the past, not come that easily.

The transfer and exchange of science and technology makes up a fundamental facet in the improvement of standards and conditions of living, and therefore are closely linked to economics and to the environment. I suspect a strong commitment, followed by substantive action, will be the minimum required to tackle this basket and to be taken seriously in doing it.

Basket three deals with human contacts: information, co-operation and cultural, educational exchanges. Canada has traditionally been very vocal in these areas, taking a special interest in unification of families and humanitarian gestures.

The Vienna meeting obliged conference members to publish by law all laws and regulations dealing specifically with the movement of peoples within and between states. I think we need some laws and regulations to handle cases like the Biedrycki case that I mentioned earlier.

You see, Mr. Speaker, the list is exhaustive, the scope entirely flexible and unlimited. Now, even more than ever, the opportunity is here to expand the role and increase the effectiveness of the CSCE. I am very pleased—in fact, I am somewhat surprised by the seeming seriousness of this government to take that opportunity and to play a leading role in the future of the conference by way of this motion in front of the House today. My colleagues and I have no argument with the principle of this motion.

In fact, when Mr. Shevardnadze visited Canada in May of this year and spoke to the Standing Committee on External Affairs, he expressed hope that the CSCE would play a larger role and would, in fact, become the forum for expanded east-west relations.

My colleagues and I then endorsed the concept as an ideal balance for those countries affected by the changing global climate, to play a more significant role as will be expected, the closer together superpowers become ideologically.

For once, we will be able to turn our attention to other problems, other security threats, as was referred to by the Secretary of State in his speech in May that the parliamentary secretary alluded to when he launched the government's new policy in Europe.

I cannot help but wonder, however, how this new initiative will fit in with the Europe of 1992, as we have already heard the desire of some of the countries to take more charge of their affairs and not involve North America as much in the decision-making process.

How are we going to retain the trans-Atlantic nature of the CSCE? I must say here that when the Standing Committee on External Affairs visited the Soviet Union and then visited the two Germanys on May 1, we heard both from the East Germans and the West Germans that they want the participation and involvement of Canada and the United States as full members. This was very reassuring to hear.

I would still like some clarification though on the nature of the role of the Parliamentary Assembly that is referred to in the motion, the Crisis Resolution Centre and the Permanent Secretariat. I would like to know how all this changes the role of NATO.

Does the minister see the conference replacing NATO, or working alongside to it? If this is the case, what does he envision as the future of the Warsaw Pact, which is now defunct? How can the evolving CSCE guarantee peace and security to the countries that once belonged to the Warsaw Pact? What will be the criteria for new members? How will the Baltic States that desire membership be treated?

Here I must say, Mr. Speaker, I know how you fought for protecting the non-recognition policy for the three Baltic States, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania.

Because of the Persian Gulf crisis, because of our own Oka situation, somehow the world has forgotten these three countries when the west, Canada and the United States included, said all along: "We do not recognize the Soviet occupation of these countries."

If we did not for 50 years, why are we doing it now?

• (1210)

Should this issue not be addressed by the evolving CSCE? These people want an answer.

I do not think I am letting anything out of the bag here, but I understand that the leader of Lithuania and the leader of Latvia are negotiating to come and visit us in Canada. Rumour has it that the Prime Minister is prepared to meet with them officially.

And this, I want through you, Mr. Parliamentary Secretary, to pass on to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and to the Prime Minister, a sincere thank you on behalf of Canadians of Baltic origin. I think that is a very important and significant move. You have the full support from this side of the House.

Another question is, what will be the criteria for countries admitted as observers if some countries cannot belong as members, but would like to come as observers? How should we treat these countries? Who will make those decisions? Or, will these types of decisions require unanimity amongst all 35 participants?

This was something new for me when I attended the Madrid Conference. I learned how everything had to be agreed to by consensus. When the conference could not even agree on the agenda, they stopped the clock. Here we were into the next day, but the clock said no, we were still back in the day preceding. These are all techniques that they have at their disposal.

CSCE has been, and should continue to be a vital venue for Canada's international activities. We must expand our activities within the framework. At the same time, we must let it be known to Canadians that this venue is available to us to use for the benefit of global and domestic security. Unfortunately, little has been known about the whole process and how we fit into it. Even less has been known about how we as Canadians are bound by those same principles and codes of conduct that we expect other countries to abide by.

It could only enhance our lives were we to appreciate that, right down to the fundamental freedoms and the right to equality, each and every one of us is protected, and each and every one of us is a beneficiary.

In closing, I would like to offer, again through the parliamentary secretary, that this motion be expanded, or at least be understood that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will open this process to public dialogue among all Canadians who want input, whether it be through the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade or through a subcommittee.

For the Madrid Conference, Canada played a very vital and leading role because prior to the conference, we did strike a subcommittee, getting input from all the various interest groups; from Canadians who come from these countries, and a report was written and submitted. This report is still referred to today.

I think it is time again that we heard from Canadians who have immediate relatives or friends in the Soviet Union, in eastern Europe. I think this is what Parliament is all about, to listen to the grassroots Canadians. Based on their input, let us then develop a meaningful, responsive and responsible foreign policy. Maybe this is an initiative that the parliamentary secretary could take on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Kamloops on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: There have been discussions, and I think you are aware of the discussions that the first round of speeches of 20 minutes was agreed to. Unfortunately, our spokesperson has joined his colleagues from the government and the official opposition at a press conference and will be here momentarily.

I wonder if it would be acceptable to everyone if our next speaker would speak for only 10 minutes and when the round comes around again to the New Democratic Party, we would have 20 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly agree. Perhaps the hon. member for Kamloops could get tapes of the previous two speeches so that the critic could see them before he gives his speech.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure and a delight for me to speak briefly on this motion in the name of the Secretary of State for External Affairs with respect to CSCE, the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, where Canada belongs in that organization and where we see that organization going in the future.

Just to repeat very briefly what has already been said, while Canada is a North American nation it has always had very strong ties to Europe. Most Canadians who are knowledgeable on the subject of that aspect of international relations would classify themselves as Atlanticists.

I think we realize and truly appreciate that the cultural and ethnic background of an overwhelming majority of Canadians is European and that in that regard we have extremely close ties on a personal and social basis with Europe. We also have very strong ties politically and economically, particularly in matters of international trade and commerce. Also in the field of investment there have been very active transactions across the Atlantic for many, many years.

I suppose our first baptism of fire, literally speaking, in terms of European involvement, came with World War I, in which we acquitted ourselves with great distinction, honour, bravery, and courage. In a couple of days' time once again we will be recognizing those eventful years and the great effort and great sacrifice made by so many Canadians.

In the inter-war years we were not nearly as active in Europe, perhaps not as active as we should have been, and I think Europe suffered for it as a result. When I say that we were not that active or as active as we should have been, neither was the United States. We have learned a lot since then, that we do have a place in Europe and European security and that we are wanted in Europe in terms of maintaining stability and helping Europeans in their inter-European affairs.

During World War II we made another very substantial contribution in that dreadful war, and through NATO for the past 40 years we have had an active role as well.

In all these interventions or in all these relationships Canada has acted with considerable distinction, a lot of courage, and a great deal of imagination. In fact it was Lester Pearson who insisted on the so-called Canada clause of NATO, in which he argued that NATO should be much more than just a military alliance, and of course my party and I very much agree. It should also be a social, economic and cultural relationship.

Having said that, we are now confronted with a happy problem in terms of what should be our role now in the CSCE. We have been active in it since its beginnings back in the 1970s. I am happy to see that we intend to remain a part of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

There are many reasons I would argue that this is of fundamental importance to Canada. Not only will it continue the tradition of Canada's close ties with Europe, but it will allow us to make a meaningful contribution to a continent that really is very much in upheaval at this time.

We have very happily accepted the events in eastern Europe in the past year or year and a half. We have seen eastern Europe transform itself with virtually no bloodshed, except for Romania, from Marxist totalitarianism toward a more liberal, democratic society. We have seen it first in Poland, then of course more recently in Czechoslovakia and Hungary, and in the unification of east Germany and west Germany.

This process has brought great happiness to Canadians, to Americans, and to Europeans. It has also brought many problems, primarily of an economic nature but also of an ethnic nature.

There is a lot of unrest in countries like Yugoslavia, Romania, even parts of Czechoslovakia, and certainly in the Soviet Union. Of course the Soviet Union is a special case in itself. We welcome the changes that glasnost has brought to the Soviet Union: the more open society, the more liberal society, and the more tolerant society. Certainly the citizens of the Soviet Union are happy with that turn of events.

• (1220)

Quite frankly—and I was there very briefly this past summer for about 10 days—the people in the Soviet Union are extremely unhappy. They are extremely upset. The mood is very volatile. They see all around them the great poverty and great deprivation that are accompanying glasnost. In other words perestroika, the other part of the equation, is simply not working and that country is on the brink of social upheaval day by day.

For example, the very people whom I hope perestroika will benefit in the long run, ordinary working Soviet men and women, are those who are most opposed to perestroika because to date perestroika has brought nothing but deprivation and hardship. The food stores are empty. There is little or no fuel available in many of the great cities of the Soviet Union.

It is not for us to condemn the Soviet Union or to condemn Mr. Gorbachev for what has happened. One cannot go from darkness into light overnight. One cannot go from an authoritarian, highly centralized economy to a free society or a free economy overnight, without these attendant, deeply rooted problems.

The point I am getting at—and this relates to the CSCE—is that I am very fearful that before the Soviet Union can fully adjust itself to a market economy and a liberal, democratic, political regime, the country itself will come apart, as it is doing now.

The old Soviet empire is in a shambles. The old Soviet empire, effectively speaking, no longer exists except for the military and except for what is left of the centralized government in Moscow. However, the Russian Federated Republic, the Ukraine, the Baltic States, and the southern Asiatic republics by and large are bent on one course. One can understand why and sympathize with them. They want independence.

I flew into Tashkent in July. I went to a dinner that evening, hosted by the President of the Supreme Soviet. The very first thing he said after he welcomed us was: "I want you people to know that our first goal is independence and our second goal is to seek membership in the European Community". Talk about leaping over years, in fact one might even say a decade, all in a matter of a few words. That was his intention. Those were his opening remarks. Having heard that firsthand, one can understand and appreciate that there are going to be very serious problems, unless somehow they all stumble through day by day and eventually end up where they want to go, without any explosiveness and without any kind of civil war.

However, history teaches us that that part of the world is extremely volatile and has resorted more often, in fact one might say exclusively, in moments of crises, to arms and armed rebellion rather than through a democratic process that has been non-existent in the past. It is pretty difficult at this point to assume for a moment that the democratic process is going to prevail. We all hope it will.

In that context, then, it is extremely important that the CSCE begin to assume functions that will enable it to contribute to the maintenance of peace and security not only in central Europe, which is where traditionally, certainly for the last 40 years, we have directed our thought, our energy and our military deployments, but in eastern European and in the Soviet Union. That is a very deep and thick shadow that is casting itself across European security and stability today. If the balloon goes up in the Soviet Union, if the military should feel that it has to seize power in order to establish security and stability, or if the arch-conservatives within the Communist Party decide to seize power and get rid of Gorbachev, then they have only one course of action. They cannot go forward with Liberal reform. They have to go into a period of political retrenchment. They have to re-establish the old order. They have to establish authoritarianism once again. That of course will present very serious problems with respect to stability in eastern and western Europe.

I know my brief time is up. I congratulate the government for bringing forward this motion today. I look forward to Canada's continued participation in the growth of the CSCE in Europe.

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to discuss the over-all CSCE process, a process in which I know we all are very interested, a process to which we all are very dedicated and a process of which we all are very supportive.

When we pause to reflect on security and co-operation in Europe, there are naturally a number of various approaches that one could discuss.

What I would like to emphasize, however, is the importance of the political approach and the entrenchment of strong pan-European and trans-Atlantic political ties.

Those who know of my involvement with the North Atlantic Assembly will already have guessed I will recommend that organization for greatly increased participation in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, known as the CSCE.

The North Atlantic Assembly is the political wing of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. It has as its members parliamentarians from 16 NATO countries. NATO, unlike the Warsaw Pact, was formed not only as a defensive military pact but also as a political organization. Canada, I might add, is very active and our Canadian delegates are very highly respected by our NATO colleagues when we attend these various meetings.

What we have traditionally referred to as the Old World in the past has been transformed now into a new world. The Europeans are building an integrated economic and political structure that was unimaginable just a decade ago. The concepts of Europe 1992, a common currency under a European central bank, the opening of borders, and more closely aligned foreign policy constitute hard evidence that the days of chauvinistic and often bloody rivalry in western Europe have passed.

Europe is already wealthy, and closer economic co-operation will increase that wealth. As a nation dependent on trade for one-third of its Gross National Product, Canada cannot ignore the huge and prosperous European market, a market of 320 million people in the European Community alone.

At the same time, the communities of western Europe are faced with a spectre of economic chaos in the east, the prospect of massive movements of economic refugees and migrants, and the possibility that ethnic rivalries or economic collapse could lead to conflict.

It is evident that the end of the cold war has not brought a new era of peace and stability into Europe but, rather, it has created great opportunities and great risks for Europeans, their cousins, their friends, and their allies.

For the millions of Canadians who have roots, family members or friends in western and eastern Europe, the ties are very close. They want desperately to see the whole of Europe at peace, unified and economically strong. We all do.

However, rebuilding or, rather, reinventing the strangled political institutions and economies of eastern Europe will be an enormous but essential task if the potential for conflict is to be curtailed.

I know other members of this House and in the other place have taken a very active interest in the CSCE over the years and in recent months. They have been discussing and promoting an expanded role for the CSCE and for parliamentarians within that CSCE process.

In particular, I commend the hon. member for Labrador, the hon. member for Brant, and Senator Duff Roblin, all of whom have played a key role and have been dedicated along these lines.

I think there has been a consensus for some time that parliamentarians must expand their contacts with our new colleagues from eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. We must come together to share our knowledge, experience and impressions of the promise and dangers inherent in the changes that are transforming Europe.

• (1230)

Within the North Atlantic Assembly, Canadian and other NATO parliamentarians have been keeping a close watch on the evolving security situation in Europe and maintaining regular contact with representatives of the new democracies in Europe, who are as concerned as we are that co-operation and collaboration be institutionalized, that it be effective and forward-looking and that Canadians and Americans be as actively involved as possible.

For Canada, the CSCE process and the role it will play in developing new methods of confidence-building and co-operation between former adversaries are very crucial.

With an effective parliamentary assembly, Europeans and North Americans will be able to share their ideas and expertise on military issues, on arms control issues, on economic and technical co-operation, on the environment, human rights, the development of political pluralism, and in fact, the whole range of issues that can divide or bring together peoples or countries.

I would also like to express the hope that all members of this House will continue to look for creative and effective ways to continue to make Canadian viewpoints and concerns known to our European and American colleagues.

If we fail in this endeavour, we risk losing influence and valuable friends. We also risk missing an opportunity to help shape a safer and more peaceful world.

Canada is renowned for its role as an international peacekeeper. With this in mind, we can help perform the tasks of mediator in the European community.

The CSCE can, in turn, play a pivotal role in securing political, economic and environmental confidence. We must all strive toward this worthy end. I know all members of this House will want to join.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak on this motion. It is certainly broad, but it encompasses many things that are of great issue in international affairs today.

I would like to compliment the Secretary of State for External Affairs for putting this on the Order Paper for discussion in this House. International affairs are not much different than one's own domestic affairs or indeed, one's own family affairs. Those members of the family who talk together and discuss matters tend to get along very well. The more we talk about issues in our own country on a co-operative basis, the better we get along. It becomes very important in international affairs where many crucial decisions have to be made that nations talk to each other on a family basis as well.

That has taken place over the many years since the founding of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. There have been over 40 years of peace in the world. Sometimes there was the cold war, with the Warsaw Pact in eastern Europe. Over those years, there was very little conversation between the two sides. As long as that situation exists, there is not going to be much of a breakthrough.

The Conference on Security and Co-operation was held in Helsinki in 1975. It was a great breakthrough in international affairs and set the tone for the years to come. To a certain degree, it started a conversation which was absolutely necessary and one that was not taking place as a result of the cold war attitudes between the east and west military blocs. I want to point out that NATO is not just a military bloc. That is the feeling that many Canadians have had over the years.

Lester B. Pearson, who spent all his life in the diplomatic field—I do not know what he was like as a diplomat on the baseball field in his earlier days, but certainly throughout his years in the Public Service, whether as a civil servant or as an elected public servant who served in this House—had a major hand in the formation of that North Atlantic Treaty Organization. He built into it the ability for NATO to discuss economic issues among those 16 nations that eventually ended up as members. There were fewer of course to begin with, but others joined along the way over the 40 years of its history.

Economic issues could be discussed. Social issues could be discussed even down to the levels of unemployment which, of course, we realize is a great source of unrest within nations and among nations.

With social affairs, there is the mixing of individuals and the exchange of knowledge of a scientific and technical nature. I would like to point out that while we think that is important in this modern day, during the Dark Ages of world history, the only people who really communicated with each other were the scientists at the scientific and technological level.

There must be bridges built. The Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe must be enlarged. Yes, NATO will be more flexible, and must be more flexible. It must lend itself to the co-operative field of work, supplementing and working with, and indeed to some degree, becoming a real part of the CSCE.

Canada and the United States must be part of any new organization that comes out of the present Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe. We cannot just sit in North America as the fifth wheel on the wagon. Canada has been a great diplomat among the nations of the world over the years, and we have a role to play. We cannot hesitate from doing this for one minute.

Among the things that we must project, of course, which is most prominent among the CSCE, are the confidence building measures, the verification ideas that came out of any arms control agreements. We must make sure that both sides are, in fact, living up to the conditions which they signed for disarmament.

The Conference on Conventional Arms went on for years in Vienna with no move, no success. Of course, conventional armaments in Europe were just as great a problem as the nuclear problem itself.

They never really came to an agreement because there was no political will to do it. Again, Mr. Speaker, you must have that bridging of the gap and co-operation among nations.

When the Warsaw Pact started collapsing because of internal, economic and social conditions and because there was a desire among those people to have their freedom, there was the immediate political will at the Vienna Conference to have a downsizing of conventional arms in Europe.

All these agreements on the downsizing of conventional and nuclear arms must be an ongoing process. There must be additional meetings and talks to break down and get rid of all barriers so that we have co-operation and tranquillity in the world.

This can only be done if we have an effective forum in which to do it. We in this party certainly support a revamped CSCE. We support the fact that NATO will change. It will become more flexible and its attitude will change from supporting the arms against arms movement in Europe to getting rid of all arms so that there is no major threat to the peace and safety of mankind.

I think that over the years it will be proven that the NATO alliance was one of the most successful alliances in the world, when it came to holding off aggression between east and west long enough for the Warsaw Pact to collapse and fall apart. It was almost like waiting them out, for the day to come when the Warsaw Pact was no longer willing, able or had the desire to continue with the same old system that had for years been denying people their freedom and, indeed, their human rights. This is where the Conference on Security and Co–operation in Europe has really shone, in fighting the battle for human rights throughout its jurisdiction. As time goes on, it will become very necessary to have a worth–while organization. We are now talking in terms of the Conference on Security and Co–operation in Europe forming an assembly where we will have delegations from the various member countries discussing the issues that are very prominent before them that are important and must be tackled.

I want to say from personal experience what a great thing it is to have parliamentarians from different countries getting together to discuss issues because they become the bridge. They go home and inform their governments in their individual countries what discussions went on. I have had many years of experience in the North Atlantic Assembly where we had delegations of parliamentarians from all members of that organization. I was vice–president of that organization for two years.

In closing, I want to say that the most solid foundation upon which any international organization can be built to last through the years is the fact that nations must be willing to sit down as a family and talk business, mean what they say, do what they decide and have the political will to solve the problems of the day.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by proclaiming our full support for the Conference on Security and Co–operation in Europe. Members of this House of Commons can unite in supporting the Paris summit of heads of states and governments involved in the CSCE. My personal hope is that the Paris summit will breathe new life into the CSCE process and that this renewal will be the base for security and co–operation across Europe, North America and the north Atlantic over the next decade and beyond into the next century.

The motion supporting the CSCE contains an important and even vital parliamentary dimension. It is this dimension that I would like to explore in discussing the motion today. I believe that the involvement of parliamentarians as an adjunct to the CSCE is vital to its success in maintaining democracy into the next decade and for the future.

Let me begin by explaining the involvement of parliamentarians with international organizations. I should start by saying that when we look back over the almost 50 years since the end of World War II, we realize that the much–maligned international organizations from the United Nations, but including many other pan–European, Asian, Pacific organizations, have in fact succeeded in maintaining world peace over those very troubled years, through the cold war and in other times.

While the international organizations, and particularly the United Nations, at times had their credibility questioned, the fact of the matter is there has been peace in our time, so we can look at it from the perspective of 1990 and say the system has worked, even though we might have doubted its workings at times in the past.

The same can be said of the parliamentary organizations that are adjuncts to many international organizations. I have attended many of them, and at times you wonder whether you are making any progress, whether you are accomplishing anything of a positive nature. When you realize that peace has been maintained and you see the dramatic changes across Europe and throughout the world, you realize that the spirit is there among the people represented by their parliamentarians and brought to international organizations. We now must make sure that we continue to support those international organizations so that they can continue to fulfil their role in maintaining peace and security throughout the world.

Let me talk for a moment, Mr. Speaker, about some of the parliamentary organizations as they relate to our country and to North America, but especially to our relationship with the European Community.

There are in existence a number of organizations. Of course, everybody is familiar with the European Community and the European Parliament which plays a vital role among the 12 nations that are involved in that particular organization. But on a more general basis, as has already been mentioned, there is the Council of Europe and the Parliamentary Assembly connected with the Council of Europe. That is a much more co–operative organization, based on mutual understanding and not based upon any legislated text. It is that kind of organization with which we in Canada can participate because we are not held to any specific law–making functions or binding decisions. We maintain our sovereignty and within the spirit of the CSCE is the maintenance of national sovereignty throughout the process.

As I have said, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe involves a broader group of European Nations. The question becomes, how do we create a parliamentary assembly that can join in a more direct way with CSCE and participate in that broader process, especially in the light of the developing democracies and the emergence of parliaments and parliamentarians from those developing democracies in eastern Europe.

This brings me specifically to the words in the text of the motion before us because that motion encourages the establishment of a parliamentary assembly as an adjunct to the CSCE.

I had occasion very recently to attend the Interparliamentary Union meeting in Uruguay. This very matter was discussed among the European group to which Canada and the United States of America are also parties because we follow the tradition of the CSCE in making that Pan-European connection with North America. Some of the European parliamentarians felt that there should be an expansion of the Parliamentary Assembly and of the Council of Europe to include the new democracies and make it a Pan-European organization. That would not really be in the interests of Canada and Canadian parliamentarians because we would not be in any way directly involved in that kind of organization.

The CSCE from its very origin has involved Canada and the United States of America and has taken a broader outlook on the coverage of the organization. We are already very much involved in this organization, so I think the development of a parliamentary assembly as an adjunct to the CSCE is very much in Canadian interests. It ought to be encouraged and fostered by Canadian parliamentarians.

There is already in process a number of elements that will lead to the consideration of parliamentary assemblies in connection with the developing democracies in Europe and their linkage with their established democracies already involved in the European Community and the Council of Europe.

In July, 1991 in Vienna, there will be the Seventh Interparliamentary Conference on European Co-operation and Security. This is a conference that emanates from the member groups within the interparliamentary union which is the broad based international organization for parliaments. As part of its deliberations, this conference will consider the very matter of a new European Assembly of Parliaments with a European base. It will also consider if this Assembly of Parliaments should be extended to North America, particularly to Canada and the United States of America. It will be essential that Canada participates in that conference and makes the case, which we have already made through our representatives of the House of Commons at the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, that Canada has a place and a role, and ought to be included in the parliamentary assembly.

Why do we participate in these kinds of organizations? It is simply to foster the thought and considerations that are very much a part of the CSCE and very much a part of the Helsinki final act which is the basis of the CSCE. We believe, as the member nations in the CSCE process believe, that sovereign equality has to be respected; that territorial boundaries have to be inviolable; that there can be no intervention in the internal affairs of other states; that we must have peaceful settlement of international disputes; and, above all, that there must be respect for human rights in all nations of the world.

These are the principles that bind together the nations that participate in the CSCE process. These are the principles that bind democratic parliamentarians together, and these are the principles that we want to foster, not in this country, but around the world. As every nation of the world observes these principles, we can be assured that that will be the basis for peace and security.

I do not for one minute believe that we can abandon our obligations to NATO and the North Atlantic Assembly. I think that those activities should continue and be enhanced. We have demonstrated through the peace efforts of the past half century that deterrents are necessary. There will always be somebody—and we see this in the Middle East today— who will take advantage of those who cannot defend themselves in a physical way. It is true of people. It is true of nations. We will not, and we cannot, abandon that aspect in our search for peace and security.

What we can do, at the same time and on another track, is to create better relations with all nations, encourage and foster the establishment of democratic principles, and at the same time bring about a total observance of these principles that will assure peace and security in the future.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre–Dame–de–Grâce): Mr. Speaker, we, of course, support the thrust of this motion in that we support the CSCE as the basis of a new security system for Europe. Having said that, we believe that more detail and more work is necessary. We support the principle of having the CSCE act as the basis of a new security system in Europe because the old security systems are in the process of coming apart, and for good reason.

The two traditional organizations for security in Europe, NATO and the Warsaw Pact, were both confrontational and both set up in the late forties to defend one against the other. But, with détente in Europe, with the growing number of disarmament treaties, and even with the recent announcement that it is likely the Warsaw Pact will dissolve next year, we must look to a new type of security system for Europe. The logical place to start is with the Conference on Security and Co–operation for Europe, known as the CSCE.

It is the logical place to look because it not only includes the European countries from the east and the west, the Warsaw Pact countries and NATO, but it also includes Canada and the United States. These countries, we believe, are essential if there is to be economic and political stability in Europe and if there is going to be a real security for Europe.

I referred to the movement to détente in Europe. Of course it is not complete, but there has already been the signing a few years ago of the intermediate nuclear forces treaty. In October of this year a draft treaty for the reduction of conventional forces in Europe was agreed to. We are well advanced on a START agreement. The strategic arms limitation treaty is well advanced. We have had the open skies conference here to deal with security–building measures and other measures to disarm. Of course another element that has entered into this which is very significant is the unification of Germany and a united Germany which will be a principal force in Europe.

With all this happening, one might ask why a new security system is necessary at all. On the one hand, some of those eastern European countries are moving to conservative or liberal type governments, and on the other hand some are moving to reform type of communism or a reform type of socialism involving a lot more democracy than was present in the past. Despite the changes at the top, the bureaucracies in these countries, especially the eastern European countries, still remain entrenched with the old communists of the past so there is still a lot of work to be done.

That having been said, Mr. Speaker, there are risks of conflict in the new Europe that is developing. There is the risk of conflict from increased nationalism. There is the possibility of breakdown of central authorities, whether in Yugoslavia, the Soviet Union, or elsewhere. There is the emergence of minority groups within various countries which pose certain threats. There are old border questions that might arise. There is a whole threat that comes about as a result of economic disparity in Europe and the potential massive flow of economic and political refugees moving across borders from east to west and causing, perhaps, dislocation.

There is also the threat from outside Europe of small border attacks but also international terrorism. Through the CSCE, Europe, as a whole, may wish to set up co–operative measures to protect itself against such terrorist attacks. There are also the threats that come from environmental questions, such as the flow of waters and air. There was the whole business of Chernobyl a few years ago. How does the new Europe deal with this?

These are all questions that could be dealt with in a newly structured CSCE.

When I say we would support the use of the CSCE as the basis of a new security system in Europe, we suggest as well that it needs restructuring with perhaps more permanent institutional structures and more institutional forms, and it must be given a new and a clear mandate.

My time is coming to an end, but let me say that there are other organizations in Europe as well that might be looked at. There are the European Community, the Council of Europe, the European Parliament, and the Western European Union. None of those has the same potential as the CSCE. The CSCE is more broadly based and does include the North American countries, Canada and the United States.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, we encourage our government to go to the conference in Europe on November 19 and put forward proposals which will assist in the development of the CSCE as a more effective and new security institution for all of Europe to deal with the threats I referred to and to take the place in due course of both NATO and the Warsaw Pact.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues in the House for their indulgence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Take the full 20 minutes.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I understand the qualification that you are not saying I have to, because we are now beginning to work through lunch period. On the other hand, I am sure you will find even a full 20 minutes for me is more than fascinating.

On behalf of our party, I would like to confirm our support for this important resolution and motion before the House. The motion calls for the support of the House for the CSCE, the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, as a key Pan-European and trans-Atlantic forum within which a new co-operative security framework can be built. This can be done so through the maintenance and development of its comprehensive approach to security, political, economic, environmental and human dimension issues, and strengthened by the development of the structure of the CSCE process, including the creation of a CSCE parliamentary assembly.

The CSCE grew out of the Helsinki Accord and was a process of discussion involving not just the members of NATO or the Warsaw Pact, but also other countries in Europe. It began its life when the cold war was at one of its low spots and when tension between the superpowers was at a height. It continued through the Reagan years. The early Reagan years were also years in which the Americans were building up arms and rattling their sabres and missiles. The prospect for peace seemed dim.

Now, CSCE begins to reach into its full power at a time of momentous changes in Europe, changes that are brought about by the disintegration of the Warsaw Pact and the whole communist regime in eastern Europe and the arrangements that had prevailed since the end of the Second World War. Those arrangements, depending a bit on one's point of view of history, could be said to have been in response to a perceived threat from the west or, as evidence of the threatening intentions, particularly of the Soviet Union, against the west. Whichever view of history one maintains, both in my view have something to be said for them.

Walter Lippmann, for example, a noted American commentator, has argued very forcefully for the proposition that the Soviet Union never had adventurous intentions toward western Europe and that in fact, NATO was developed in large part to provide a vehicle for the military industrial establishment, particularly in the United States, as an outlet for its energies and resources. Whichever view is taken, the fact remains that today that whole structure is now falling apart. No longer can it be said that NATO has any military purposes because it no longer faces any military threat from the Warsaw Pact countries, including the Soviet Union.

One of the key countries in the Warsaw Pact, East Germany, is now no longer. It has been absorbed within West Germany as part of, in effect, a new country. Other countries such as Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and Poland are, for all practical purposes, allies. They certainly have no forces aimed in our direction. The Warsaw Pact, it may be said, is under liquidation. The Soviet Union is facing internal turmoil, terrible economic problems and clearly has no capacity or will to launch any kind of invasion against the west. The prospect of a war in Europe that was the fundamental basis for the spending of billions of dollars by the western economies in maintaining troops in Europe is now gone. The threat is now gone. This is a view that is shared by virtually everyone from all political persuasions.

Now we are left with the question of where next in Europe, and particularly what will Canada's relationship be with Europe? There are perhaps four options. The options can be considered under four headings, to be slightly more precise. One option is the CSCE. There is a very real prospect, as has been noted already in this debate and has been referred to in the resolution.

The CSCE itself will become the framework for organizing security in Europe, for dealing in a military way with whatever remaining threats are perceived to the security of Europe.

The great advantage of the CSCE, as has already been stated, is that it includes countries on both sides of the now defunct Iron Curtain. It also includes the neutral countries such as Sweden and Switzerland, and includes Canada and the United States. So it has a trans-Atlantic component as well as strictly a European component.

That means that all of the countries on both sides of the Atlantic that conceivably have a particular interest in issues of regional security in Europe would have a place at the table. It may well be that the CSCE then becomes the forum for sorting out what will be the future arrangements, and arguably may establish within its own system a sum system of collective security in Europe.

Another option is the Council of Europe. Another option is NATO. Another option may be something that nobody has yet put on the table. We have at least four headings under which we can look at the issues of the future security arrangements in Europe. The CSCE, of course, deals with many other issues in Europe, and that is referred to in the resolution.

Let me focus my remarks in my capacity as defence critic for our party on the issues of military security, and how they may be organized and dealt with. One question we have to ask is what is Canada's interest in these arrangements? A subsidiary question to that is what will be the role of the United States in a future Europe?

I think Canada's interests are clearly, certainly in the minds of government supporters and of the Liberals, entirely linked with that of the United States. There seems to be a strong position still emanating from government circles and from the Liberal Party that NATO is to be taken for granted as continuing to have a role and that every effort must be made to maintain NATO's continued existence even if it means finding roles for NATO which it does not presently have.

Furthermore, it is in our interest to encourage the Americans to maintain troops in Europe and concomitantly that we also therefore must maintain troops in Europe, must maintain an air force that can support those troops, must maintain a navy that also is in support of the troops that we have in Europe.

Yet, the military role for American and Canadian troops is now no longer there. It has disappeared. The front lines cannot even be found. One of the officers in the CF-18 squadron there said to the defence committee that what was the town in Czechoslovakia that was his target for exercise purposes and in the event of war, is a town that he now drives his family to on a Sunday afternoon outing.

The target has gone. There is no military requirement for Canadian and American troops in Europe. The only remaining argument is a political one, that is that somehow American and Canadian troops are needed to counter balance some development in Germany. There is an argument sometimes raised that it is essential as part of the nuclear deterrent strategy that if the Americans leave and whoever is left in the Soviet Union threatens a nuclear assault on western Europe, western Europe could no longer in those circumstances count on the American use of deterrent.

Let me deal with these arguments one by one. The real truth of the matter is that there are those in the United States, and reflected and echoed to some extent in Europe, who want the Americans to stay in Europe to exercise American influence in Europe. That is a view which we must dissociate ourselves with. It is not in Canada's interest that the Americans still remain in Europe. It is in Canada's interest that the Americans withdraw their troops from Europe in part so that there is no longer any argument that we should be maintaining troops in Europe.

We spend $1.2 billion a year on maintaining a contingent in Europe. Everyone in this House can consider other more valuable and useful expenditures. Some would argue simply reducing the deficit. Others would call for a child care program, for restoring the cuts in social programs in this country, for finally dealing with the crisis on native reserves and among native people in Canada, for dealing with poverty in the Third World. We are spending $1.2 billion directly to maintain this contingent in Europe which no longer has any military significance.

I suggest in the circumstances that is frankly immoral. When you add to that the costs involved of maintaining in Canada the support for the troops in Europe, as much as 40 to 50 per cent of our defence budget goes to maintain this so-called commitment to NATO. It is in Canada's interests, I submit, that we end Canadian and American military participation in Europe and that we leave to Europeans the responsibility of specific security concerns and dealing with the remaining security concerns in Europe.

We should participate in the discussions as to the framework and we should continue to have a place at the table in view of our long historic relationship with Europe, but we do not need NATO to do that. There are other forums under which that input can be had.

Let me deal if I can with the nuclear deterrent issue. It is argued, as I suggested, that somehow if American troops are left in Europe that will be some form of protection for Europe in retaining the efficacy of the American nuclear deterrent.

Let me suggest that the time has come for us to squarely address the immorality and impracticality of the whole nuclear deterrent strategy. Impracticality. The Soviet Union and any other countries that are equipped to deliver some form of nuclear assault on Europe or anywhere else in the world have already discovered more than once that that is an idle threat. It is not a threat which can be used. It is an expensive threat. It is a danger to the environment of their own country. It is a threat which will in fact not be exercised.

Even if that argument is not bought, we are left with the issue of the remaining American deterrent. Clearly, if whatever is left in the Soviet Union, when it all shakes down, there will be no will in the Soviet Union to deploy any nuclear weapons against western Europe or Europe as a whole. The Soviet Union is part of Europe.

When the CSIS committee was in Washington earlier this year, we met with senior CIA officials and some ex-officials from the CIA who had kept themselves well informed of events. Their view was that the Soviet Union would become part of Europe economically and politically within the next 10 years. That was March. Today that 10-year period seems too long.

It seems to be very clear that with economic investment in Europe, with the political changes in Europe, with the investment in the Soviet Union, with the political changes in the Soviet Union, with the co-operation that has been shown now as part of the response to the gulf crisis by the Soviet Union, France, the United States and Great Britain, that the Soviet Union is now responding in precisely the same way to these international events and with the same interests. They take different positions on specific aspects, but it is entirely co-ordinated and the interests are viewed the same. There is even no argument left for maintaining the nuclear deterrent.

This leaves us, then, with how we are going to get to where we want to go in Europe. The CSCE provides a framework for those discussions, and this motion encourages that direction. It is important that the government go a step further than it has been prepared to go so far and say within the councils of the CSCE that Canada views as one objective of the discussions now under way and continuing that NATO be wound down. The Warsaw Pact has been wound down. The time has come to develop as a matter of policy that NATO should be wound down.

Canada should serve notice that it will no longer participate in NATO, that NATO is obsolete and has no place in international and regional discussions, and that Canada will withdraw its troops from Europe because we have better things to do with the money that is being spent in maintaining the contingent in Europe. This is an important policy and one which, if the government does not accept it today, it will be obliged to accept tomorrow. It would be helpful if the government would move more quickly rather than wait until events overtake it again.

It would be helpful if Canada would show some leadership in continuing the momentum toward a world that is a safer place, a world in which disarmament has finally come to pass, and a world that no longer relies on huge armies for security but understands that security is a matter of fundamental acceptance that we are a family and that our security depends upon our family's security. We must begin to understand that we can no longer rely, at least in European terms, on the military for providing our security. It is in Canada's interest to further this process, and I would urge the House to endorse the motion.

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham—Whitchurch—Stouffville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on the upcoming summit in Paris on the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

In 1975, when the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, CSCE, came into agreement on its first set of principles and undertakings, we were in the midst of an era dominated by fear and filled with tension. The CSCE was born out of the desire to move beyond fear and tension, to agree on common principles and rights, and to begin the process of moving toward a new Europe.

Now, 15 years later, we emerge from the year of revolution and begin upon an era of reconstruction. Change was so sudden and sweeping it has become easy to get caught up in the celebration of change rather than to stop and reflect upon the enormity of the change.

I think Vaclav Havel, President of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic, best described the enormous changes in Europe when he stated:

> Obviously they had no idea what they were setting in motion or how rapidly events would unfold. We knew a lot about the enormous number of growing problems that slumbered beneath the honeyed, unchanging mask of socialism. But I do not think that any of us knew how little it would take for those problems to manifest themselves in all their enormity and for the longing of these nations to emerge with all their strength. The mask fell away so rapidly that, in the flood of work, we have literally no time to be astonished.

A primary catalyst of the changes of which Mr. Havel speaks was the CSCE process that achieved and enlarged commitments to rights by nations that previously had not acknowledged them, then provided constant and inescapable pressure to respect those commitments, and finally created a habit and example of nations working together to advance basic common values.

A new Europe has emerged and, in step with this new world, the CSCE must expand upon its initial principles to ensure the new order strengthens.

• (1320)

Canada's commitment to Europe is both pragmatic and profound. We are tied to Europe in spirit and in substance. NATO, the CSCE, and the European Community form three essential pillars of our vision of the new Europe.

We in Canada applaud the new Europe and see the role of the CSCE as helping to build a Europe which is engaged in the wide world and not apart from it. The new Europe must be an example for others, an example of common purpose which will then allow the world to turn seriously to other pressing problems this planet is facing.

In order to complement the new Europe, a new CSCE must emerge. The CSCE must be a flexible organization capable of growth and adaptation, and a structure which change strengthens and does not weaken.

The CSCE summit in Paris on November 19, 1990 will provide an opportunity to build upon the shared ideals, values, interests, and aspirations of the new Europe. The CSCE process must be institutionalized, regularized, and politicized. The CSCE must be responsive to the changing needs of its membership, change which was no more evident than during this past year of European revolution.

There are five specific areas which are vital parts of this new, adaptive CSCE.

The first is the requirement for the CSCE structure to have a strong element of political direction and leadership. The peoples of our countries must see their leaders controlling and guiding the CSCE process if that process is to retain and build legitimacy.

The second is to give the CSCE a truly democratic and representative face. The principles of the CSCE are principles of democracy. Canada considers it important that the Paris summit move toward an Assembly of Europe with appropriate parliamentary representation from all states, which would gather to discuss and exchange views on those issues that fall under the CSCE mandate.

Thirdis the formation of a CSCE Centre for the Prevention and Resolution of Conflict. Such a multilateral centre can play a crucial role in assisting verification and data exchange arising from the negotiations on confidence and security building measures. This centre can be used as a mechanism for the prevention and resolution of conflict, an enhanced instrument related to fact finding, conciliation, mediation, and the arbitration of conflicts.

Fourth, within the new CSCE is the question of force reduction talks. The summit in Paris requires a Conventional Forces in Europe agreement or CFE. This agreement, already several years in the making, once signed will dramatically reduce conventional arms. A new Europe cannot be constructed when the symptoms of the old are allowed to persist and we cannot agree on the means to remove those symptoms.

Fifth, the trans-Atlantic and pan-European role of the CSCE must be reinforced: a Europe which bridges the Atlantic, a Europe which is a concept rather than just a continent, a Europe which encompasses the outward reaching spirit in which the CSCE was founded.

Summarized, the CSCE provides for the essential element of an open Europe. It involves both the Soviet Union and North America. The new Europe must be a strong Europe, a hemispheric fabric of common achievement, common principles, and shared engagement. The CSCE can be an instrument of this wider Europe, a Europe whose very breadth will enhance prosperity and strengthen our peace.

As the nature of European security grows beyond military balances to political stability and economic prosperity, CSCE must in turn expand on its initial mandate so that the new Europe can reach its full potential. We must contribute constructively to the growth of the new Europe and CSCE and in turn we will contribute to the growth of a new world order. I believe the five initiatives outlined earlier will do just that.

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, in view of the upcoming summit of heads of state and heads of government of the participating parties in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe to be held in Paris, France on November 19, 1990, I am delighted to be able to stand here this afternoon and speak on this topic.

The face of Europe has been irreversibly changed. In the last five years there has been a monumental transformation. Mikhail Gorbachev's perestroika and glasnost have given Soviets the confidence to demand still further changes.

The status of eastern Europe has undergone an even more dramatic and momentous metamorphosis in the last year. It is difficult to overstate the effect of this change not only on Europe but the entire international milieu.

As the world order has been driven by east-west conflict for the last 40 years, this order will necessarily change as a result. Canada, as a stakeholder, must be aware of the nature and extent of the changes and be prepared at least to react and at best anticipate accordingly.

The Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe gives Canada an effective forum to participate in the forging of a new, sustainable, and peaceful Europe.

Let me first speak to the enormity of changes that have taken place in Europe, changes that have resulted in the CSCE process taking on added historical significance: the ratification of the reunification of Germany and, by extension, the symbolic reunification of Europe and virtual declaration that the cold war is officially over. We have all marvelled at the speed and extent of change. The dominance of totalitarian communist governments in eastern Europe has been virtually wiped out.

The pace, severity, and consequence of the upheavals have varied, but the theme has been the same throughout most of eastern Europe: democratization and a basic disavowal of Marxism-Leninism as the controlling principle of economics and government. The role of the world's newest Nobel Peace Prize winner, Mikhail Gorbachev, cannot be overlooked as impetus for these revolutionary changes.

New policies and several seminal speeches that he gave, starting in 1985, made it increasingly clear that there had been a fundamental change in philosophy at the very top in the Kremlin.

One long-time analyst said that Mr. Gorbachev had lit a burning fuse that would set off a rapid series of political explosions throughout eastern Europe.

The Soviet reforms meant that, first, citizens in the other countries would expect or seek similar changes because of the historical Soviet leadership in policy in the East Bloc and, second, that the U.S.S.R. no longer had the legitimacy to stop reforms from occurring outside its borders.

The Soviets, by not doing anything to stop the dramatic democratic reforms in eastern Europe, had tacitly given their endorsement.

The beginning of that process was the legalization and subsequent shift of political power to Solidarity in Poland. This was the demonstration that the rest of eastern Europeans had been waiting for since the end of the Second World War.

Since then we have watched with interest events in Czechoslovakia, Romania, Hungary, and of course the reunification of Germany.

These changes are fundamental and irreversible. The tide has been irreversibly altered. The genies have been let out of the bottles all over the region.

This conference comes at the perfect time in history for a serious pan-European and trans-Atlantic dialogue. The Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe is a structure in such a way that it will act as a framework for future joint discussion and action.

I whole-heartedly support efforts to create an effective CSCE parliamentary assembly. The CSCE itself encompasses conferences and agreements between 33 European states, plus Canada and the United States.

The Helsinki Final Act, signed in 1975, provides the framework for a fundamental political commitment. The act incorporates three distinct sections or baskets. The first basket is of particular interest to me, as the human rights critic of the Official Opposition. It includes principles designed to guide relations between participating states, as well as security questions including military confidence building. Within this framework, the first basket deals with the whole realm of human rights issues.

It is essential to ensure in the process that is to take place in Paris later this month that respect for fundamental human rights and dignity is at the base of discussions.

More recently, the Vienna Concluding Document took an important step in elaborating extensive normative commitments in all areas covered by the CSCE process, particularly in human rights. It established a four stage mechanism for monitoring and encouraging compliance with human rights commitments, and a three part conference on the human dimension within Europe. Furthermore, it called meetings on, among other things, peaceful settlement of disputes and culture.

Canada is an important participant, taking part in all aspects of the process since its inception. We must remain committed to the goals stated: to enhance security and confidence, to break down barriers wherever they exist and to help facilitate the freer flow of information, ideas and people throughout Europe.

This conference is an example of the type of role Canada can play and should continue to play in the international community.

Again, I am most pleased to speak to the subject of this very important conference. I know that all parties on all sides of the House will be endorsing this.

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on this particular item. It is a very important item because when we talk about human rights violations, security and peace in the world, one part of the world seems to be forgotten.

There is this little island in the Mediterranean, the island of Cyprus. For those of my colleagues in the House who do not know exactly where the island of Cyprus is—my colleague says she knows, but for the rest of my colleagues—it is located in the eastern part of the Mediterranean just below Turkey.

For many years that island was invaded time after time. If we go back in history about 2,000 years, the island was first settled by the Greeks. This was followed by wave after wave after wave of people invading the island, settling it and leaving some history behind. The Turks owned the island for parts of the 16th, 17th, 18th centuries and then they sold it to the British.

There was an uprising against the British in 1950s. The people of Cyprus wanted to be free. They gained that independence.

Cyprus is divided between the Greek Cypriots who make up about 80 per cent of the population, and Turkish Cypriots who make up 18 to 20 per cent of the population. They were living together in peace until 1963. In Nicosia, Cyprus, violence broke out with the one side wanting to take over the other side.

In 1974, saying they were protecting the Turkish minority, Turkey invaded the island. Since that time, the island has been divided. There is a green line or a wall across the island to separate the Greeks from the Turks.

For almost 26 years, Canadians have been on the island as part of the United Nations forces to help keep the peace. Canada has had 29 of its soldiers killed in that time. It is costing Canadian taxpayers about $30 million a year to have that force on the island.

When we are discussing the motion put forward today by my hon. friend, it is very important that we look at that particular part of the world, for the particular reason that, as the European and North American nations are getting together to discuss peace, that island is part of Europe and yet nobody gets up to speak about it.

We have one country which is involved in Cyprus which wants to be part of the European Economic Community. Turkey wants to join the EEC, and yet, they are saying that they are on that island to protect the Turkish Cypriots from their aggressor. I am asking, Mr. Speaker, who is the aggressor? Certainly not the Greek Cypriots.

Yet this particular part of the world has been forgotten. Why is it forgotten? Is it because of its role within the Middle East? Is it because it is the last foothold of the western nations overlooking all of the Middle East, right up to Pakistan, because, Mr. Speaker, besides Israel, that is the only place the western world has a foothold overlooking its activities in the Moslem world.

In Nicosia there are two embassies built right across the street from each other. They are the United States embassy and the Russian embassy. I had the opportunity to visit there and these are the biggest embassies that these two countries have all over the world. How many citizens of the United States are on the island of Cyprus, 1,000, 2,000, 3,000? Do they need one of their biggest embassies to serve them?

How many Russians are living in Cyprus? I could count the number on the fingers of my hands, and yet these two embassies are right across the street from each other. Why? Is it because of espionage in this day and age, when we talk about detente or when we talk about peace in the world? I wonder why those two countries are spending millions on that small island?

Do the superpowers want that island to remain divided? Do they want the status quo? One wonders, Mr. Speaker, why it is that in the past 25 years no solution has been found for that particular part of the world.

When members of the government go to this conference, they should bring these facts forward. Then all of the European nations can sit and discuss that little island of Cyprus. It is the last part of Europe that still faces some form of aggression and instability.

The walls of Berlin have come down. We have witnessed over the past year and a half how eastern Europe is starting to become more of a democracy. We witnessed in 1989 the Tiananmen Square massacre, how the people stood up and said no more to the regimes of the east.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, we have a beautiful island right in the middle of the Mediterranean with one side saying, "I want to have demilitarization", while the other side is saying, "I am here protecting my people". I wonder who those people are? We have seen successive members of parliament, successive governments of the island try to settle this particular matter.

Mr. Speaker, I know that my time is running out but it is such an important issue. I hope when our leaders go to this conference, they will take this to heart. When our leaders sit there, they will actually discuss the problem of Cyprus because the people of Canada and the people all over the world cannot see this beautiful island divided and invaded by 30,000 soldiers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In view of the fact that there are no more speakers, shall I suspend the sitting until two o'clock?

There being no further members rising on debate, pursuant to an order made on Wednesday, November 7, the debate is deemed to have adjourned and sitting is suspended until two o'clock.

At 1.40 the House took recess.

DISABLED PERSONS

Mr. Harry Chadwick (Bramalea—Gore—Malton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that the government's response to the standing committee report on the economic integration of disabled persons was tabled this morning.

It is yet another step taken by the Government of Canada in ensuring that persons with disabilities are full and equal participants in Canadian social and economic life.

The government has illustrated its commitment to this goal through the establishment of the Status of Disabled Persons Secretariat, a $3.2 million yearly provision to the disabled persons participation program, the inauguration of National Access Awareness Week, and the enactment of the first ever National Employment Equity Act which protects persons with disabilities.

We call on communities across Canada to help us continue to meet these objectives by eliminating the barriers to full access for disabled persons.

Join us in pursuing this pre-eminent goal of Canadian citizenship.

THE LATE HUGH MACLENNAN

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I was deeply saddened, as I know all hon. members were, to learn last evening that Hugh MacLennan had passed away.

Mr. MacLennan, one of Canada's foremost authors, was born in Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, in 1907. He grew up in Halifax and studied at Dalhousie University before attending Oxford and Princeton Universities.

His best remembered works include: Barometer Rising, The Watch That Ends the Night, Voices in Time, and of course, his most famous work, Two Solitudes, which showed the author's understanding, appreciation and hopes for his country.

Mr. MacLennan's writing about Canada, its people and its places, brought him both honour and distinction. He received five Governor-General Awards, he was a Companion of the Order of Canada, and he held 18 honorary degrees.

We pay our tributes to his memory today and express our sincere sympathy to those who mourn his untimely passing.

DISABLED PERSONS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, it was with consternation and disappointment that I read the government's so-called action plan on disability tabled earlier today. Given the Prime Minister's lofty words of encouragement for disabled Canadians, I expected much more.

The few initiatives taken are not nearly enough. Three and a half million disabled Canadians have waited patiently for a comprehensive plan of action from this government. Piece-meal activity and rhetoric are just more smoke and mirrors. Federal leadership and commitment are needed now, not at some politically convenient date further down the road.

Is the Prime Minister really interested in the well-being and equality of Canadians with a disability? Does the minister responsible for disabled Canadians really care about their full participation in community affairs?

Talk is cheap and that is what we have seen in today's report on disability—talk, talk and more talk. Cheap, cheap, and more cheap.

Mr. Speaker, I very much regret having to say that, and I say it more in sadness than in anger.

THE DISABLED

Mr. Allan Koury (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, the report tabled this morning by the minister responsible for the Status of the Disabled, the Secretary of State, in response to the committee's report, contains some important measures, including an exhaustive analysis of federal legislation affecting the disabled.

The federal government has shown it is firmly resolved to remove the barriers facing the disabled in various key areas and thus ensure equal participation by all Canadians in our society.

There is also a proposal for establishing a committee of deputy ministers with a mandate to improve co-ordination of federal activities designed for people with a disability. Departments and federally regulated agencies will thus be able to continue the excellent work they have done so far.

Personally, I feel that this legislative review is an important step in our joint effort to promote equality in every respect for Canadians with a disability.

THE LATE FATHER GÉRARD DION

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, a prominent figure died this week, Father Gérard Dion, a former professor at Laval University in Quebec City. I would like to pay tribute to Father Dion who instigated a review of electoral behaviour and electoral policies in Quebec during the 1950s. At the time he heralded the changes of the Quiet Revolution which started in 1960.

Father Dion was a hard worker, endowed with unusual frankness and courage. His death is a great loss to Quebec society, and the social or political role played by Father Dion proved decisive for Quebec.

EDUCATION

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, in his speech before Parliament on November 1, 1990, our Prime Minister reaffirmed our government's commitment to educational reform. He called for a new approach to education which respects all Canadians' fundamental rights and sets national standards which will allow our children to keep up with their counterparts abroad.

Education is recognized as a vital contributor to personal, societal and national development. We need a system that works and one attuned to the future demands of the country and the economy. Canadians need a system whose results are beyond question. Our children must be put on equal footing and they must have at the minimum basic literacy and numeracy skills.

All members should join me in applauding the fact that, through the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children, our government is committed to a reduction of illiteracy and the provision of educational opportunities for our children which prepares them for productive employment and life-long learning opportunities.

SOCIALIST AWARDS OF EXCELLENCE

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of Canadians the first of many socialist awards of excellence. The nominees are: number one, the member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca whose self-righteous indignation on the plight of the underprivileged seems to pale in light of his personal abuse of poor printers; number two, the member for Trinity—Spadina—

Mr. Speaker: I have to remind hon. members that the Order under which we are making statements is very specific. It is not to be used in an attack on an hon. member. I am sure the hon. member would not want to abuse the rule.

TRANSPORT

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Transport tabled his response to the transport committee report on a substance abuse strategy for the Canadian transport industry.

His policy is wrong and it is not "Made in Canada".

We had hoped that the government, which recently rediscovered a little backbone in its rejection of American attempts to impose U.S. trade laws on Canada, would have found enough courage to tell the United States that Canada will not submit to their "or else" demand that we impose American drug testing laws on Canadians.

A U.S. perception of a risk to American safety when most concerned Canadians, including the minister and the transport committee, have stated repeatedly that "no significant risk" exists in Canada is not an acceptable reason to violate the basic rights and privacy of a quarter million Canadians.

Also, the U.S. is now learning that its testing regime is both extremely costly and unproductive and is turning to alternate strategies like performance testing and increased supervision.

Why adopt a failing strategy? Is it a smoke-screen to cover his failure to deal with the real dangers to transport safety in Canada, such as overworked and inadequate air traffic control and the consequent closure of airport towers across Canada?

New Democrats would support a genuine safety strategy that concentrated on education, counselling and employee assistance programs. Safe performance, not exposure, should be the goal and the test of a sensible program.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

NATIONAL UNITY

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval West): Mr. Speaker, these are sad times in Canada when Quebecers and Canadians are seering their identity in a union that will make us a nation of various ethnic groups. So far, we had acknowledged, accepted and learned to live with our cultural differences, but today we are faced with a kind of confrontation that may lead to the break up of our society.

We must not let ourselves be overcome by hostile feelings, Mr. Speaker. Together we must work towards national reconciliation. We must forget our patriotic struggles. We must live for the future. We must build for the future.

I want to ask all members of this House to work together so that we can all build a country where people will want to live and where there will be a future for our children.

Let us not be self-centred or masochistic, Mr. Speaker. Live and let live, and let us all work together and leave our descendants a properous legacy.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the government keeps its commitments to official languages. In addition to tabling its draft regulations for the 1988 Official Languages Act, our government signed on November 3 a general agreement with Manitoba to promote official languages. The agreement will, among other things, make it possible to review, translate and publish the Statutes and Regulations of the Province of Manitoba in both official languages; to implement French services at Manitoba Hydro, the St. Boniface General Hospital and public libraries in Francophone regions; and to renovate and expand the Centre culturel franco-manitobain.

Mr. Speaker, these are concrete examples of the kind of leadership this government has shown with respect to official languages.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, we all know that in spite of their rhetoric, the Liberal senators in the Liberal caucus could have defeated the GST on many occasions.

They could have defeated the GST when leave was sought to introduce the legislation into the Senate. They could have defeated the GST at first reading. They could have defeated the GST at second reading. They could have defeated the GST while the Liberals had the majority during GST committee work in April, May and June.

At all stages, the Liberal senators supported the GST. However, if there is still any question where the Liberals really stand on the GST, I have before me the 20th report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking chaired by Liberal Ian Sinclair and including Liberals MacEachen, Perrault, Kirby and Buckwold.

They unanimously recommend that as soon as possible the federal government should introduce legislation to implement a broad based multi-stage sales tax. In other words, the Liberal senators in the Liberal caucus urged the Mulroney government to implement a GST. Shame on the Liberals for speaking against the GST while working quietly behind the scenes to have it implemented.

FORESTRY

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, on August 24, the federal Forestry Minister submitted a proposal for renewal of the forestry agreement to his Quebec counterpart.

Despite what was said by Ministers Rémillard and Côté, Forestry Canada is prepared to proceed immediately with negotiations on the agreement, and they need not worry about the availability of federal funding.

As far as our government is concerned, forests, and especially privately-owned forests in Quebec, are among our priorities.

We cannot afford to keep those who might benefit from this agreement waiting any longer. That is why I urge Ministers Rémillard and Côté to sit down and start negotiating. Everybody's time is precious.

Mr. Saint-Julien: Wake up, Quebec!

THE BROCKVILLE INCIDENT

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, Canadians who viewed the program entitled "The Brockville Incident" on The Journal this past week are finally in a position to judge fairly Brockville's flag burning episode that took place a year ago last September.

Until now, the event has been slanted and distorted, and generally misunderstood in many parts of Canada.

The entire incident illustrates how easy it is for a small group to get attention through the power of the media merely by using an unorthodox and unacceptable means to protest.

It also illustrates just how easy it is to pit one part of Canada against another, one Canadian against another. A country is much like many other things, Mr. Speaker. If you want it to work, it will but if you do not want it to work, you can usually find a cause that will promote its failure.

Let us hope that this program allowed Canadian viewers to finally judge what was to some Canadians a major cause of rift in international relations and internal relations, but was to most merely an isolated incident by a misguided few.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Government of Quebec for amending its goods and services legislation to exempt books and publications from this tax. The Government of Quebec has acknowledged that culture is not taxable and confirmed its emphasis on developing our culture.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the federal government, once its bill has been ratified by the Senate and has received royal assent, will immediately table an amendment to exempt books and publications from this tax, thus following the lead of the Government of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, when will we be able to congratulate the federal government on having done so?

FOCIQ 90

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, from November 15 to 18, 1990, the Olympic Stadium in Montreal will be the site of the first super trade and industry fair in Quebec. This event, called "FOCIQ 90" is being organized by the Quebec Chamber of Commerce together with its 230 affiliated chambers, in co-operation with Promexpo and with the collaboration of the federal and provincial governments.

Taking its inspiration from international trade fairs in Germany and Japan, FOCIQ 90 is intended to be the most impressive showcase for industry and trade in Quebec to date. Six different fairs will be set up under the same roof, to offer trade delegates from more than 40 foreign countries, 75,000 business men and women and 1,000 exhibitors endless opportunities for exchanging ideas. This event will include more than 180 lectures by ministers and prominent business people on subjects related to the the themes of the fair.

On behalf of Mr. Jean Lambert, president of the Quebec Chamber of Commerce, I invite you all to attend this unique event.

CONSUMERS GAS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, surprise, surprise, Ontario's newly elected premier has taken up gymnastics. It seems that back-flip Bob has done a flip-flop on the sale of Consumers Gas.

Is it not strange how, after going to New York on bended knee to entice American businessmen to invest in Ontario, our silk stocking socialist premier announces that he will allow the sale of Consumers Gas to foreign interests?

Only last March, then opposition leader Big Dreams Bob said that Consumers Gas should be a public utility. He promised that if he were elected premier, he would stop the sale.

Someone should inform federal NDP members that while they have been waging war on the Tories who are trying to sell off Canada, their provincial cousins at Queen's Park are selling out Ontario. The self-righteous New Democrats have started to break their promises. They are back-pedalling, back-tracking, and flip-flopping left and right.

Truly this is the height of hypocrisy. Why is back-flip Bob cosying up to big business? This leaves all of Ontario wondering what type of government has been elected. Are they Tories in NDP clothing? What other surprises does broker Bob have in store for—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE ECONOMY

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Plant closures in western Canada, Ontario, Quebec, and Atlantic Canada have become a daily occurrence across our country. The government's policies of high interest rates and a high Canadian dollar are making us uncompetitive internationally. This is what is causing unemployment throughout our country.

When is this government going to give some substance to its oft repeated but empty promises of assistance to those put out of work by its impossible policy of combining its free trade agreement with high interest rates and a high Canadian dollar? When is this government going to replace its tight money policy with a policy of full employment?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (President of the Treasury Board and Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the hon. gentleman will realize first of all that the bank rate today went down considerably, 12 basis points.

This is a clear sign that our policy is working. We do want interest rates to come down, but we want them to come down and stay down so that we can profit fully from the free trade agreement and other policies of this government.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, this government knows and the Minister of State for Finance knows perfectly well that tinkering with interest rates is no solution. He knows too that plant closures and unemployment are a direct result of the government's failure to put its own house in order.

To finance its growing deficit, the government not only absorbs a major part of domestic savings, but it goes abroad to borrow more at yet high rates. The result is that Canada, piece by piece, is being mortgaged to foreigners. The result is that Canada has become less competitive, plants are closing, and unemployment is increasing.

How does the government propose to correct its foreign exchange imbalance when its own policies of a high interest rate and a high Canadian dollar are crippling our export industries?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (President of the Treasury Board and Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I will take the job creation policies of this government any time over the policies of the Liberal Party.

I would ask the hon. gentleman, if he really cares about job creation, to talk to his colleagues in the Senate and tell them to get on with the GST, which is a tax that will precisely improve the over-all capacity of Canada to create jobs and to compete. This is what he should be doing instead of talking, if he really means what he says.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the minister is going to have to talk a long time to convince Canadians that the GST is a job creation program. The government has only two policies: higher interest rates and higher taxes. However, every time this government raises taxes it fuels inflation and every time this government raises interest rates the cost of borrowing goes up, further fuelling inflation.

• (1420)

The government's policies are pricing Canada out of world markets. The Conference Board of Canada stated this week: "Interest rates have increased significantly since the beginning of 1988 which has had a major adverse impact on Canada's trade performance", and the Conference Board concluded: "such a strategy will likely retard the recovery and dampen the degree of the upturn".

When will this government bring in a policy of full employment and a new budget in place of its policy of unemployment and recession?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (President of the Treasury Board and Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will certainly realize that inflationary pressures are the reason we have high interest rates. There is no running away from it, as the Liberal Party did in 1980 and caused a very deep recession.

After seven years of record growth, it is normal the excess capacity is there and has to be taken out of our economy. This is what is happening now. We are trying to prevent runaway inflation.

It is happening. Interest rates are coming down, as the hon. gentleman was able to realize from the Bank of Canada rate today.

PERSIAN GULF

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

While the U.S. is announcing a major increase in the number of troops being sent to the gulf and Secretary Baker is now seeking support for a resolution that would authorize the use of force against Iraq, non-aligned members of the Security Council have put forward a resolution that attempts to broaden the peacekeeping role of the Secretary General, the establishment of an air peacekeeping force, and measures to seek a regional settlement of the dispute.

Can the minister tell us what is the position of the Government of Canada on these different initiatives? Will the government be supporting the peacekeeping proposal which is now being considered by the Security Council?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question.

As he knows, the Security Council has found the remarkable success of the last three months because there has been extensive discussion of texts within the council itself. That has been the case with regard to some of the matters relating to the invasion of Kuwait by Iraq. It has been the case with some of the matters relating to other events in the Middle East where there has been an ability for the Security Council to act.

That kind of discussion is now going on, and I frankly do not think it would contribute to the process of consensus in the Security Council were I to stake out a position on elements of those proposals here on the floor of the House.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

The minister will probably know that following the recent hearings of the Standing Committees on External Affairs most of the testimony has been of a nature of counselling a course of patience for this country and for all countries involved in the crisis and, in particular, suggesting that we give the sanctions time to work.

Has there yet been at the United Nations or within the Department of External Affairs a clear assessment of the effectiveness of the present economic embargo? Will the Government of Canada as a member of the Security Council be putting forward measures at that council which would broaden and strengthen the application of economic sanctions as a way of giving a clear message to Iraq without continuing to talk about an escalation of military hostilities?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is a continuing assessment of the effectiveness of sanctions. I think that question has to be answered in two ways. Are they effective in their breadth and in the degree of support by the outside world? Are they effective in changing behaviour in Iraq?

The answer to the first question, are they effective in their breadth and in the degree to which they are respected, is very much yes. That has to do in part with the existence of a very effective naval blockade in which Canada is playing, I may say, a commendable role. It also indicates the degree to which there is firm international support. We are monitoring that. We are the vice–chair of the Security Council subcommittee on sanctions.

As to the other question, the impact on Iraq itself, there is some impact. It is not an impact, I have to tell the House, that looks like it will change Iraqi behaviour in the short term. Nonetheless I agree with the hon. member in his observation that we want to continue to press on sanctions and other peaceful means to make Saddam Hussein understand that the world is resolute in requiring him to leave Kuwait.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

As has just been discussed, we hear increasing escalation of war rhetoric, indeed an increase in troops and tanks by the United States, the United States seeking Soviet support of a U.S. led attack, and many declarations by Margaret Thatcher from Britain and others talking about escalating war. I want to ask the minister whether he is talking at all about escalating peace.

Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs send a strong common sense message to the whole world that he will not commit Canada to being involved in an offensive war, without the full approval of the United Nations and the full approval of this Parliament once it is assured that all peaceful attempts have been made to resolve this situation?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the leader of the New Democratic Party is given to long prefaces which include lists of statements that are not always accurate. Consequently I do not want to be seen as agreeing with any or all of the several statements in her preface.

The position of the government is very clear. We are working to ensure that there is a peaceful resolution. We are working to ensure that if force needs to be used it would be under the umbrella of the United Nations. We are working very hard to achieve that.

We certainly want Saddam Hussein to be in no doubt about the resolution of the rest of the world, including Canada, that if he does not respond to peaceful pressures force will be used.

The hon. member is suggesting that we should build in some delays that would allow, I think she said, the full satisfaction of Parliament as to an action that we might undertake. I presume that means the satisfaction of every member of this House of Commons. She knows that would mean that Canada could then be rendered in a position where we have offered to support international action but when the time comes to act we are unable, because of the delays of our parliamentary system, to support that effective international action. I think on consideration she would not want Canada to do that.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I and all Canadians would feel that in a democratic country a full and open debate on whether this country goes to war is not a delay but an essential part of what this country's foreign policy should be.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, many countries support the economic blockade of Iraq because they all want to find a peaceful solution to the crisis in the gulf. Today, when he appeared before the External Affairs Committee, Gwynne Dyer said we should give economic sanctions a chance to work.

My question for the minister is this: What kind of information has he received from the United States and the United Nations on the current effectiveness of the blockade? Is he prepared to give sanctions a chance to work?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I jsut answered an identical question by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

[English]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister.

The minister is saying that a debate in Parliament on whether Canada goes to war would be a delay. The minister is not prepared to give us any details on whether the economic sanctions are working, which is the reason we went to the Middle East in the first place.

Why will the Secretary of State for External Affairs not give this House some indication of the information that he has on whether or not economic sanctions are working?

Surely the people of Canada have the right to know why we are talking about going to war without having shown to the Canadian people whether or not the sanctions are working.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member was in her seat when I answered precisely that question from the member from Winnipeg. I do not know if she was in the House when she was in her seat, but I gave the answer. I will give it again. The answer is that the question about the effective sanctions has two elements. One is whether there is evidence that sanctions are changing the behaviour of Saddam Hussein. So far there is no evidence that sanctions are changing the behaviour of Saddam Hussein.

• (1430)

The other aspect is whether sanctions are being broadly supported by the international community. All the evidence is that they are. In part that is due to the existence of the naval blockade, and in part, the success of that blockade is due to the exemplary action of Canadians who are serving in that region. Of course, it is the position of the Government of Canada to give those sanctions time to work. Of course that is our position. Perhaps the hon. member would like to go back—I see you rising, Mr. Speaker, so I shall not continue.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology.

Once again I bring to the attention of the government that industrial plant closures and cutbacks, along with major lay-offs in the forest industry have created very serious economic and human problems across the upper Ottawa Valley and eastern Ontario in general. Far more than 3,000 jobs have been lost after the gains and the losses have been balanced.

Will the minister give us a commitment today that his department will come forth with economic measures to assist eastern Ontario in a useful and practical way?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister for Science): Mr. Speaker, as we have said before, no one in this House is pleased when plants go down and when there is economic disruption. The hon. member knows what we need to do is to work with the various industry sectors to see what can be done with each of these industry sectors in terms of future development and to try and prepare a kind of business plan, if you like, for the future. We are doing this now.

I do not think there is much more that we can do as a government except pour more money in and that is not possible.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the same minister.

Since January 1989, Cornwall has lost 1,100 jobs; Renfrew, 1,600; Hawkesbury, 250; and Alexandria, 325, including 100 layoffs at the Consoltex textile plant in the last two weeks. When will the government face up to its responsibilities? When will it give us a development program for Eastern Ontario? Do we all have to lose our jobs before we get anything?

[English]

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister for Science): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance has said to this hon. gentleman many times, no one likes plant closures.

If the hon. member is going to talk about plant closures, then I think it is important to talk about those that have closed in recent months. If he strings off a list of plant closures over the last three or four years, that is not fair in terms of this economic problem.

We acknowledge we have a problem and we are going to try to resolve it.

An hon. member: We'll be happy to.

LAND CLAIMS

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Yesterday the minister of Indian and northern affairs announced that the 20-year old massive Dene-Métis comprehensive land claim is dead. Under the new cabinet endorsed regional land claim strategy, some of the western Arctic Dene and Métis are in, and some are out.

We applaud those that are in, however, the balance of the Dene-Métis population who are alienated, essentially sidelined, and casualties of a regressive, divisive outdated land claims policy and brutal negotiating tactics of the federal government want to know what noble and honourable plans this government has in store to deal with their land claims.

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed unfortunate the agreement that was initialled and signed could not be completed for all members of the Dene-Métis nation.

I do not think that the member with all her concern for the people in the north would want us to step back and not continue with settling land claims. We are moving ahead with the groups that do want to continue in that area. We will also continue to move with all other groups who want to sit down and talk about land claims.

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

In a speech on September 25, the Prime Minister referred to the success of recent case law in recognizing aboriginal rights. Now that the government has walked away from and replaced the Dene-Métis comprehensive land claims, I would like to know if the Prime Minister will let the courts decide whether the rights of the aboriginal people in Western Arctic are legitimate, or is he afraid he will be faced with a judgment like the decision with Sparrow and Sioui?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we did not walk away from the agreement with the Dene-Métis.

The Prime Minister made a commitment in this House that we would continue to work on land claims. We are doing that. There are groups that are meeting. There are groups that are having discussions with the native community. We have brought them into the discussion. They will stay in the discussion, and we will act on the outcome.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, since Parliament was recalled in September, we have been asking the government to tell us what really happened during this summer's Mohawk crisis on the grounds that a smart country can learn from its mistakes.

The RCMP has just investigated themselves over one incident on one night. Claude Ryan is investigating his own Quebec police forces, and the Conservatives on the aboriginal affairs committee of this House are trying to shut down the parliamentary inquiry.

My question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Does she agree with me that nothing is really being investigated in a comprehensive and an independent way? Will she, on behalf of the government, announce a full, public, independent, comprehensive inquiry into the Oka crisis?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, that is an extraordinary question, and it raises a whole lot of issues that have to do with a whole lot of different departments of this government, including the Ministry of the Solicitor General and the Department of National Defence.

I would be remiss if I did not point out to the hon. member that there is an opportunity for this issue to be discussed in a parliamentary committee. I understand the terms of reference have not been set, and certainly there has been no concern expressed on my part as to the scope of that inquiry. I believe that is probably the best form to do it.

The short answer to his question is that I have no plans to introduce such an inquiry.

THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Deputy Prime Minister recalls that last spring the federal government made many promises to the aboriginal people about dealing very soon with their constitutional concerns.

What I want to know from the Deputy Prime Minister today is whether or not action will be taken immediately to deal with those constitutional concerns now instead of waiting until after Spicer reports on July 1.

While he is on his feet, can he now give a commitment that there will be some representative appointed to the Spicer commission from the northern territories, because they are now unrepresented on that commission. It is a very important part of Canada.

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the minister responsible for the aboriginal constitutional dossier, the House will have heard me say before that no one is more disappointed than I am that the Meech Lake Accord failed to be ratified, because that accord and its companion resolution put into place a process which would have guaranteed meetings on a regular basis and an established process for addressing aboriginal constitutional concerns.

With the failure of the Meech Lake Accord and with the lack of a disposition among the provinces to engage in constitutional discussions, it is not possible to proceed with that. As the hon. member will know, the federal government cannot unilaterally institute constitutional discussions.

However, that being said, I believe that the Spicer commission will in and of itself involve Canadians in discussing some of the very vexing questions in front of us, including the questions of collective rights in Canadian society. Those that are asserted both by particular linguistic groups and by our aboriginal community.

At the same time, we are proceeding with a great deal of determination in those areas that do not require constitutional change and where we can show our bona fides and our very strong intention to better the lot of aboriginal people in this country.

I refer, in particular, to the land claims area where there is a considerable amount of effort being spent, particularly in my own province of British Columbia, in the area of aboriginal justice. I believe in that area we can make progress without constitutional change.

CANADA POST

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for Canada Post.

The government continues its destruction of rural postal services in Canada. Closures, privatization and even removal of the Canadian flag and the corporation's emblem. Furthermore, the minister gave preferential treatment to the Minister of Public Works when the corporation cancelled its project for a commercial outlet in Central Nova. Why the double standard, one for Canadians and one for ministers?

• (1440 )

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post continues to open up new postal outlets in conjunction with commercial outlets, which are frequently open longer hours than the corporate-run postal outlets. The service has been improving. Everywhere these changes are made, whether rural Canada or urban Canada, when they go back with a post-change survey, they find that customer satisfaction is 70 per cent to 80 per cent.

Every time we can make changes that save money and improve efficiency and satisfy 80 per cent of your customers, I think it is a good idea.

If the hon. member wants to represent the 20 per cent who are unsatisfied, I will represent the 80 per cent who are satisfied.

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, in my area there have been many closings and I have never, in all the time I have been a member, seen the protests by people, and rural Canadians across Canada. They are the strongest of protests.

In light of the fact that in some cases if it is good for one minister it is good for that area, if it is not in other areas of Canada.

Is it the minister's opinion that all these Canadians should stop their protests, stop their petitions, because it means absolutely nothing to him that the postal services across Canada are going down, that many thousands will be without postal services in the next few years, that this minister wants no more protests? Is it not worth protesting if you are not a minister?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems to be suggesting that the postal structure that was in place and appropriate to the society of Canada 40 or 50 years ago should remain in place today and no changes should occur.

Changes are occurring which customers by way of independent surveys are saying they approve of. They approve the service. We have an independent auditor so that every quarter we measure the effectiveness of the postal system operations and the efficiency has been increasing.

What is going on now, of course, is labour negotiations for a new contract and some of the leadership are finding it profitable to go out and try to make a political issue out of some of their concerns in the hope that they can achieve through political pressure that which they cannot achieve at the negotiating table.

I do not think the hon. member is serving her constituents or the taxpayers of Canada well by continuing to reflect just that point of view.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question deals with veterans and other Canadians who have been told that a beeper which summons emergency health services does not fall under "medical devices" in the goods and services tax schedule. This would make them tax exempt.

The Department of Veterans Affairs must consider this to be an essential service since it pays for the beeper under Blue Cross.

My question is to the President of the Treasury Board or the revenue minister. How can they justify taxing this device which can mean the difference between life and death?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the Canadian Legion is considered a non-profit organization in the area of GST and therefore would not be obligated to pay or collect the GST.

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, officials within the revenue department tell us that this is not so.

I would ask the minister, if this beeper is exempt, would he tell me where in the schedule of the proposed goods and services tax it says that the device is tax exempt?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. speaker, the hon. member knows that questions of this sort should be put on the Order Paper.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, the hon. members laugh but one of the problems with all of these members—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

An hon. member: I guess they do not want to hear the answer, Otto. Why don't you just sit down?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Regina—Lumsden.

MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Twelve thousand Canadian merchant seamen served their country during World War II. Approximately 3,500 are still surviving. Twelve hundred and fifty-nine of them died in combat, one of the highest casualty rates of any allied service during the war.

Both the United States and United Kingdom recognize their merchant seamen as veterans. Canadian merchant seamen who served in dangerous waters during the last great war seek today what they have sought since the end of the war, equal recognition, entitlement, and benefits now received by their fellow World War II veterans. This year, for the first time, the Royal Canadian Legion supports that position. These men were awarded all the World War II decorations. If that does not make them veterans, I do not know what does.

Will the minister today give his assurance that he will either amend Bill C–87 today, or bring in additional legislation immediately that will give these merchant seamen, who served in Canada's merchant navy during World War II, veteran status?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this government and governments for the last 45 years have dealt with this particular problem. We recognize with great sincerity the contribution that was made by the merchant marine during the time of war. It is for that very reason we have put in place all the programs we have for the merchant marine.

Essentially, they do get the military decorations, but they do not get the CVSM, the Canadian Volunteer Service Medal, for example and they do not get the Defence Medal.

Second, we do give them disability pensions and we do give them prisoner–of–war compensation. They do not get War Veterans Allowance, but they do get civilian war allowance. There are lots of things that they do get. We have treated them very, very well, it seems to me. The problem is they were not part of the Canadian Active Service Force in time of war.

However, I want to tell the hon. member that we have the matter under consideration. It will be discussed at a meeting of all the veterans' groups, not just with the Royal Canadian Legion. There others as well. We set that up as a topic for discussion on October 24. It will be discussed over the period of the next few months.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, who I understand is away on business, I will direct my question to the Minister for International Trade. The minister, I understand, has been notified of the question which concerns the Fraser River Estuary Management Program funded by both the federal government and the B.C. government.

Over the past five years that program has been mandated to monitor and assess the environmental health of the lower Fraser River. The five–year funding is now essentially grinding to a halt and the management committee of the program has applied to the government for a three–year extension.

The Department of Fisheries and Oceans is the only one of three federal agencies not yet committed to the continuation of the program funding. Is the Department prepared to commit at this time the funding needed to continue the program? Alternatively, would the minister be prepared to bring these matters before the next cabinet meeting and encourage his cabinet colleagues to consider this important environmental initiative?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the interest of the government and the success of its programs with reference to salmon enhancement is well illustrated by the fact that this was one of the greatest years for the salmon fishery in British Columbia this century.

An hon. member: Are you taking the credit for the salmon run?

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, we are taking the credit for that. It is time, Mr. Speaker, that the government cast aside its modesty and started taking credit for a great many of the things that it has done.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Crosbie: With respect to the clean–up and sustainable development of the Fraser River Estuary, that is a high priority with the government. The Minister of the Environment will be outlining the details of his Green Plan in the next few weeks. The hon. member can be assured that the Fraser River will have a central part in this great environmental Green Plan which acts. While all the opposition does is talk, this government acts, Mr. Speaker.

CRIME PREVENTION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice.

The Netherlands, as I said yesterday, have allocated $17 million to crime prevention and that amount is going to be doubled by 1994. The minister has given $195,000 to the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, but this program cannot come into place because she needs the approval of five other departments which are reluctant to make their commitments.

When European countries are giving millions of dollars to the cities to fight crime, why can this government not even put into place a program for $300,000 to fight the increasing crime rate in Canada?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, aside from obvious factors such as the fact that The Netherlands, for example, is a unitary state and Canada is federal and, therefore, we share jurisdiction for crime prevention with the provinces, there is an enormous investment in crime prevention by the requisite jurisdictions across the country. I think comparing national figures is misleading, to say the very least.

My own department puts just under $1 million a year into crime prevention with respect to the support of research, but this is a commitment that involves a number of government departments. I would suggest to the hon. member that I repeat the offer that I made to him yesterday. I will correspond with him or invite him to a briefing where I will lay out before him all the things that the Government of Canada does in the area of crime prevention.

The hon. member must know that we are among the most active and effective participants in the UN conferences on crime prevention and that our international involvement is extremely important particularly because, as a country which shares an undefended border with the United States, we have a significant stake in international co-operation in crime prevention. We have brought in an enormous range of changes in legislation and I am very happy to advise the hon. member. I hope he will, in the future, compare comparable statistics and not ones that have no relevance to what we are doing.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, not only is the government not putting the money in place, it is not even agreeing to set up a crime-prevention council, as have European countries and Australia. The Canadian government seems to want to hide its head and hope the problem goes away.

Why will the government not set up a crime-prevention council so we could co-ordinate what effort there is here in Canada to fight the increasing crime rate in the country?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it may or may not be appropriate to set up a crime-prevention council, but there exists at the moment a very sophisticated and functional series of networks between three levels of government in the country in order to co-ordinate and consolidate crime prevention activities.

If it is appropriate to set up a council, then that is something we could certainly look at. But it is, in fact, a kind of knee-jerk response, if I may say so, of the Liberal Party that when it sees a problem, it wants to set up a new organization.

We have principals who are working in crime prevention and who conduct police forces in this country. They are working in a co-ordinated effort on behalf of all Canadians and I have no reason to believe that that is not functioning well.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

HEALTH

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

We all want to protect the defenders of humanity and we want peace. However, we cannot allow volunteers for research to take health risks in order to solve their financial problems. Reportedly, Mr. Trottier volunteered mainly because he was broke and stayed because he needed the money.

Will the minister agree that enticing with extra dollars Canadians who are poor or broke to serve as subjects for human experimentation is unethical? If the answer is yes, why did the government permit it to happen? Will the Minister now put a stop to it?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we believe that it is appropriate, before drugs are put on the market in Canada, that they be tested on volunteers. If the hon. member disagrees with that, he is certainly free to indicate that he is.

Does the hon. member believe, for example, it should be tested on people who are not volunteers? Second, does he not believe that people who are asked to give of their time and inconvenienced should be compensated for that? Is the hon. member aware of the fact that, in the case of the test for HI–6, it involves some five separate stays of up to 60 hours in order to have the tests conducted and have follow–up tests done? Does he not believe that it is appropriate, where people put faith in such studies, they should be compensated for their inconvenience?

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, this side of the House believes that the drug must first be tested in human beings in a clinically–controlled fashion before it is placed on the market. We equally believe that compensation should be given, but given only for loss of time from work and to help with their meals, not as a bribe to poor Canadians.

Doctor Agnes Klein of the Health Protection Branch is quoted in today's issue of The Calgary Sun: "This is normal practice" referring to the fact that no animal testing for cancer with HI–6—

Mr. Speaker: I ask the hon. member to put his question.

Mr. Pagtakhan: Mr. Speaker, no testing had been done on animals before it was tested in humans.

Will the minister agree that the sequence of testing should be first on animals before human volunteers? Why has the minister got it backwards? Is he not concerned that even low doses of a carcinogen could produce irreversible damage in human beings?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the hon. member is suggesting that the compensation these individuals received for up to five stays of some 60 hours apiece, 300 hours of participation, was too high. If he believes that, he should say so.

The hon. member says that no studies have been done with regard to animals. There have been a succession of tests done by DND over the years since 1981. The program involved efficacy testing in seven animal species and one avian species: mouse, rat, guinea pig, dog, monkey, swine, and chickens. It also involved rats. It involved just about every species but rat packs.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Beatty: It is based on all of the information. In addition to that, around the world over 120 persons in Sweden and Yugoslavia have had exposure to the drug. We are not aware of any danger to human beings as a result and we have reviewed all of the medical literature relating to it. We believe it was a safe test and we believe it was ethically conducted.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. David Bjornson (Selkirk—Red River): Mr. Speaker, I too like many others have asked some questions about GST and I would like to direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I am a small–businessman and I am actually looking forward to moving the federal taxation system from the MST to the GST. But, like many others, I come from a province that will have more than one taxation system. I would like to put this question to the minister. Is he and the Minister of Finance doing anything to harmonize the two taxation systems?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (President of the Treasury Board and Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for a very valid question.

For two years we have worked closely with the provinces to get them to agree to a national sales tax. Unfortunately, they were not very forthcoming. Now that the GST is virtually adopted, they are coming onstream. As you very well know, Mr. Speaker, the province of Quebec has announced a two–stage harmonization of its sales tax with the federal GST. Saskatchewan is currently negotiating with the federal government on the possibility of harmonizing, so we are heading in the right direction. I thank the hon. gentleman for his question.

PARCEL DELIVERY IN NORTHERN CANADA

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

For several months, a task force has been carrying out consultations and studies on the impact of unfair cuts in federal subsidies for air parcels in northern Abitibi and northern Canada.

My question is this: can the minister confirm that the study has been ready for two weeks and that several public servants and special assistants at Canada Post and Indian Affairs already have a copy? When does the minister intend to table this report publicly, in the House of Commons, for the benefit of hon. members?

[English]

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. Indeed, I would like to point out the fact that it is through his representations, both in the House and to my colleague, the hon. member for Vaudreuil, that this study did take place. It is being studied by the officials of my department and, as soon as we receive a copy of the report to table, you will receive a copy.

ENERGY

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Yesterday, gas prices increased by 10 cents a litre in Saskatoon and 17 cents a litre in Regina overnight. Also, yesterday in committee, the chairman of Petro-Canada said: "recent increases in gasoline prices have been due to speculation and not the fundamentals of supply and demand."

Can the minister of energy commit himself today to initiate an investigation into these dramatic price increases and make big oil companies justify this attack on Canadian consumers? Is he on the side of Canadian consumers or on the side of oil companies?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, with respect to energy prices, I have said in the House before that the government will monitor and continue to monitor them. In fact, I made an offer to the NDP for a full briefing on the pricing policy. I also suggest that the hon. member take a look, for example, at the Ontario government with respect to increasing taxes. I guess they think that gasoline prices are not high enough. That is a new first policy they have expressed on energy.

Second, when I take a look at their position on consumer gas, they say one thing in opposition, but they are sure open to pricing once they get into government.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, it is Crime Prevention Week, but Canadian women still live in fear.

The tiny town of Iqaluit has experienced three sexual assaults in 10 days. On Canadian campuses, young women have to be escorted between buildings because of the alarming increase in sexual assaults. This government has spent millions publicizing and justifying the GST.

Will the Minister of Justice promise to spend some dollars on a campaign to educate Canadians and to de-escalate violence against women?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, this government has a $40 million program on family violence that includes the problem of violence against women.

I think the hon. member would agree that this is not a partisan issue. It is one that deeply concerns all of us and requires us to examine fundamental attitudes that have a way of being perpetuated in one of our institutional settings.

One of the things the Department of Justice has been doing is giving strong support to the Canadian Judicial Centre, which has been a pioneer in trying to raise the awareness of those who sit in judgment in our courts on the question of gender bias.

If the hon. member has not seen a copy of the video on gender bias that the Canadian Judicial Centre has put out, I would be happy to provide her with one. She indicates that she has seen it. I think those are the kinds of things that we can do through the Department of Justice.

There is a federal-provincial task force on women and the law that wants to look more deeply into questions of this substantive law as it affects women. The hon. member will know that the question of sexual assault is a serious one. It is a reflection of attitudes and a reflection of law enforcement. We are determined to try and attack the attitudes that lead to this social blight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I beg your indulgence for us to be reminded today of the 25th anniversary of an election that took place in 1965. At present, there are four members of that class of '65 who are still members of this House.

They are the member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke, the member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, the member for Victoria—Haliburton, and the member for Annapolis Valley—Hants.

Mr. Speaker, these gentlemen have served their constituencies well. I know everyone wants to join me in wishing them the very warmest congratulations on achieving their 25th anniversary.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition is very happy to join in congratulating those four members of Parliament.

We all recognize their outstanding contributions to Canada and to the people they represent. We think strongly that they are good examples of public commitment, and we encourage them to continue—maybe not 25 years—but somewhat into the next century.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I too want to associate my party with the comments made by the two previous speakers, and to say that in their own special way they are great Canadians.

MEMORIAL TO FATHER SEAN O'SULLIVAN

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion.

There have been discussions with the opposition parties. I think that you will find that there is unanimous consent to put the motion and to adopt it.

I do so on behalf of the Prime Minister. I know that this motion has the support of the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

In their absence, I understand that the member for Hamilton Mountain and the member for Brant will be prepared to second the motion that I propose. It speaks for itself.

The motion reads as follows:

> That, in recognizing that the late Sean O'Sullivan was a member of this House of Commons, left political life to continue his service to Canadians as a priest, devoted much of his time as a priest being a friend to and caring for members on both sides of this House, and was taken from us by the ravages of cancer at the age of 37, with his life and faith serving as an ideal and an example for all Canadians, this House hereby sets aside the sitting room at the Wellington Street entrance to the East Block as a meditation room open to all people of all faiths, and we hereby declare our hope that this room, dedicated to the memory and ideals of Father Sean O'Sullivan, and those like him, will serve to remind all members of Parliament and all Canadians to reach out to one another in a spirit of friendship and caring.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there agreement?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: So ordered.

POINT OF ORDER

STATEMENT PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to ask for clarification regarding the ruling on my statement under Standing Order 31.

I want to point out that on November 1, 1990, the Chair allowed the member for Abitibi to engage in an attack on the member for Burin—St. George's to take place in the House—

Mr. Speaker: Just a moment. I am not sure where the hon. member is going. If the hon. member is challenging the ruling of the Chair, that is not appropriate.

If the hon. member is having difficulty in—

Mr. Karygiannis: Clarification.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for clarification. I can give the hon. member clarification, and I shall.

On January 17, 1983, Madam Sauvé, then Speaker, touched on the question of what is appropriate comment in statements by members.

The hon. member who has risen was stopped by me earlier today after I listened for a few minutes, or at least some seconds, and it became clear, at least I thought it was clear, that the hon. member was making a personal attack on another hon. member.

As a consequence, I had to stand and interrupt him.

On January 17, 1983, Madam Sauvé said this: "The time set aside for members' statements should not be used to make personal attacks." She went on and said: "It is clear that personal attacks are not considered to be matters that should be raised."

That is the rule that we have tried to follow in this House. It may well be that that rule has been transgressed, and I might have missed it.

I assure the hon. member that I do listen carefully. If I erred in letting that rule be transgressed at some other time, then I very much regret it. I think that we must bear with the rule and I think that that is the general feeling of the House.

• (1510)

I thank the hon. member for raising it. If he would like to discuss it further with me, of course he can see me in my chambers.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, this being Thursday, I would like to ask the government House leader if he could tell the House what business we are to deal with when we come back here on November 19, and possibly that week.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to an order made today, we will adjourn at the end of this day's business and the House will not be sitting tomorrow, sad as that makes me. I am going to have to find something else to do tomorrow. I do not know what. Next week is the scheduled parliamentary break.

We return on Monday, November 19, at which time I propose to call for a continuation of second reading, hopefully to completion, of Bill C-85, having to do with airports devolution; followed by Bill C-90 which has to do with the extension of the charters of the chartered banks of Canada.

On Tuesday, I would again carry on with Bill C-90 if it has not been completed on Monday; and commence second reading on Bill C-88, which is the establishment of Canada's participation in the European Bank for Reconstruction. Wednesday, again these are subject to changes, but the proposal would be Bill C-76, the Aeronautics Act, and Bill C-92, financial administration, both of which are technical in nature.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I just thought that if it would make the minister feel better, as government House leader, if tomorrow he wants to come into the House and maybe answer some questions for a change, we would be more than pleased to ask him those questions.

PRIVILEGE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I was attempting to gain the floor in order to extend my thanks and those of the other members named on the occasion of their 25 years in this House. I want to thank those who spoke on our behalf.

It is very true that the motion just put by the Deputy Prime Minister and adopted by this House shows that there is a great deal of the human factor left in this institution. I want to say how proud I am to serve with the members who are in the House. We have some great talent here. I think they will have a very successful future in Canadian politics.

Mr. Speaker, I would be very remiss if I did not thank my constituents up the Ottawa Valley in Renfrew, Nipissing, Pembroke and the other boundary divisions prior to that for their loyalty over the years and for giving me the opportunity to sit in this House and represent them. I consider that a great privilege and a great honour. It is indeed an honour for all of us here in this House to try to represent Canadians and to represent Canada on the international scene.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there are people in this business who are sometimes left out and seldom get recognition. I am talking about my wife and family. I want to extend a very sincere thank you to Lois, to Sherri and to Doug for their tremendous loyalty and patience over the years, to all my personal friends, to those people in our individual parties at home who support us and stick with us and do some of the dredging in the trenches for us from time to time. We all owe them a great debt.

In thanking all those people, I want to once again say to all members of the House that there is nothing that we cannot overcome by way of challenges facing Canada today, be it national unity or whatever, if we all have the sincere will and the desire to overcome it together. Let us work together. We have a great nation. Yes, we have challenges, but we must have the will and the desire to do it. We must continue to build this great nation of Canada into what the Fathers of Confederation and others who sat in this place before us wished us to do, so that we will be leaving a great past for others to build on in the future.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member rose on a question of privilege. If ever there were a prima facie case made, I am sure that was the one.

While I am on my feet, I have three different motions that I need to bring before the House. On the first one there have been consultations and there is unanimous consent for this motion:

> That, the report sur les circonstances ayant entrainé la réquisition des forces armées canadiennes pour venir en aide au pouvoir civil, which I am now tabling, be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of co–operation that is prevailing at the moment, we are delighted to consent to this motion.

However, I would like to have the parliamentary secretary clarify for the House the fact—and perhaps he can speak to this briefly—that there are two Notices of Motions for Production of Papers on the Order Paper, one in the name of the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier which asks for copies of all papers and correspondence exchanged between the governments of Canada and Quebec concerning the deployment of Canadian forces in Kahnawake and Kanesatake. I believe that is what this report is about.

There is another one in my name requesting copies of records and the tabling of the total cost of deployment of Canadian forces at Oka, Quebec, which are required under the National Defence Act to be filed with the government in any event.

I also note that my other Notice of Motion calls for a copy of the report by the Quebec attorney general to the Secretary of State of Canada setting out the circumstances behind the calling of the Canadian forces to Oka, which I assume this report is.

It appears that the parliamentary secretary has inadvertently answered by this tabling one of my Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers, which again leads me to wonder why we did not agree to it on Wednesday.

In any event I wonder where the document is. Has it been tabled in this House? If so, when? It appears to be referring a document that has been tabled and I have not seen it tabled. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could enlighten us on that point.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I apologize profusely to the member for accidentally answering one of his questions. It certainly was not my intention.

Seriously, I would be happy to have a look at the motions and his request for papers, as I have done in the past, and attempt to get complete answers.

I should say that by way of tabling I did that just now. If the House would request that I do it by reverting to Tabling of Documents, we could do that. However I did not think that with consent for the motion that it was necessary.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, before we give our consent, I have a question for my hon. friend.

Based on the unanimous motion of this House the matter of the crisis was referred to the aboriginal affairs committee for study. Yet, if I heard correctly when my hon. friend introduced his motion, the matter was referred to the justice and solicitor general committee.

It seems that it would be more appropriate to have it referred to the aboriginal affairs committee. After all, it has been given the responsibility of examining the whole issue.

I would like to seek clarification from my hon. friend on that issue.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, it is true that there has been consent to refer the issue of the Oka crisis over the summer to the Indian and aboriginal affairs committee. However, in this particular case we are dealing with a report from I believe the solicitor general of the province of Quebec. It was decided, in conversations with the other parties and with the members of the justice committee, that we would table this document with reference to them.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I think we are being asked for unanimous consent. Before we give unanimous consent, I want to make it perfectly clear that while it was discussed in the justice committee to do just that we in the New Democratic Party felt that since the Oka issue had been sent to the aboriginal affairs committee for examination it would be the appropriate place to send this report. After all, if they are studying this issue in detail, this report will be an integral component of that evaluation.

Simply, I want to say that we will give our consent—

An hon. member: No.

Mr. Riis: Okay, Mr. Speaker, I guess we will not give our consent, then.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am really sorry to hear that. I certainly gave the New Democratic Party the motion at the beginning of Question Period. It was my understanding that this came from discussions within the justice committee of which their party is a member.

I am disappointed that we now find ourselves in a position where we have asked for the consent of the House, with the understanding that I had it before I did it. As hon. members know, it is not my practice to ask for consent on motions unless I am fairly certain that there is an agreement on it.

The other unanimous consent motion that I seek to put before the House—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Did the hon. member have consent to table the document?

Some hon. members: Yes.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps I could help a bit. I am the New Democratic Party member on the justice committee. We have not agreed that the justice committee, from our point of view, examine this matter. As our House leader said, we think it is part and parcel of the general examination by the other committee.

I gather this is the report of the attorney general of Quebec as to why the army was called in. It is under the National Defence Act of Canada. The government actually does not have to table anything under the act, but it is attempting to table something.

I personally would like to see the government table a report. However I wonder if it might be possible for us to give our consent. I certainly would consent to the government tabling the report, but not necessarily with reference to the justice committee.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but the hon. member will have to understand that before I move with consent motions in the House, it takes a great deal of discussion involving a great number of people.

I cannot, on my own, stand in this House and do one-half or one-quarter of something I thought we had agreed to. At this point I have no choice but to withdraw the unanimous consent request.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): So ordered.

On a point of order, the hon. parliamentary secretary to the government House leader.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I think you will find unanimous consent for the following request to revert for a few moments to Statements by Ministers so that we can allow the Minister of Veterans Affairs to make a brief statement regarding Remembrance Day.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it is important that we seek clarification that not only will the Minister of Veterans Affairs have an opportunity to make a statement—and we are most anxious to hear his statement—but that the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party spokespersons will also have an opportunity to make statements. That was my understanding of the agreement. In other words, we will just follow the usual traditions of the House.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, Statements by Ministers usually mean Statements by Ministers followed by statements from the other two parties, and that is what I intended.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canadians will know that Sunday, November 11, is Remembrance Day in Canada. In fact most of the civilized world honours this particular day.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege, as the Minister of Veterans Affairs, to remind the House and all Canadians that next Sunday, November 11, is Remembrance Day.

[English]

It has been very heartening in recent years to learn that attendance continues to rise at Remembrance Day ceremonies across the country. On November 11, let us hope that once again Canadians of all generations will join members of our 600,000-strong veteran population in paying tribute to those who served their country in time of war.

The year 1990 has given us many reasons to be especially thankful for those who went to war on our behalf. This year we celebrate the Battle of Britain. Canadian pilots were in the Hurricanes and in the Spitfires which 50 years ago won this great battle, giving the allies time to regroup. This was a major psychological victory for the allies who, up to this point in the war, had little to be happy about.

This spring the people in The Netherlands turned out in the hundreds of thousands in ceremonies all across the country to hail the return of those young Canadian soldiers who had liberated their land 45 years before. Every Canadian can reflect in the glory of the adulation showered on our veterans. The streets of cities and villages alike were adorned with maple leaves and signs emblazoned with "Welcome back, Canadian liberators" were everywhere. The Dutch people sang O Canada with great gusto. They have never forgotten the sacrifices and the achievements of the youngsters from across the Atlantic 45 years before. It was a pilgrimage of considerable pride.

This summer, as Canadian forces moved toward the gulf, it was something like a rerun from 40 years ago when Canadians volunteered to go to Korea in support of the United Nations.

Later this month, members of this House will be in Asia in the company of our Hong Kong veterans, the first of our troops to see action and the last to see freedom.

The anniversary of these campaigns tell us that the reputation won for Canada in the mud of France and Flanders in the First War was well and truly maintained.

On Sunday, we will be saluting all those who risked their lives for strangers in other lands. In particular, we will be thinking of the more than 110,000 Canadians who did not return home to their loved homes.

Let us also remember the many others who did not serve in uniform but whose lives were changed vastly by what happened in some far away land. I am thinking of the spouses, the parents, the sisters, the brothers and the relatives—in fact all those who took part in the war effort—who looked after those who came home disabled in body or mind. Their service has been unending; their love is timeless and unbroken. Through the Veterans Independence Program and other initiatives we have been able to make life easier for veterans and those who cared for them.

As we stand in silence on Remembrance Day and reflect on the sacrifices that war brought throughout our history, let us in 1990 ponder the words written by Lord Byng after the battle at Vimy Ridge in 1917, when he said:

> There they stood on Vimy Ridge that 9th day of April, 1917, men from Quebec stood shoulder to shoulder with men from Ontario, men from the Maritimes with men from British Columbia, and there was forged a nation tempered by the fires of sacrifice and hammered on the anvil of high adventure.

Those are powerful words, marking the point in time when Canadians came of age and became a full partner in the family of nations dedicated to promoting and preserving democracy and world peace, and we have not looked back since.

• (1530)

[Translation]

As Canadians, we have so much to remember and so much to be thankful for.

[English]

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, as the Official Opposition critic for veterans affairs, it is an honour for me to rise today and pay tribute to those Canadians who fought for their country and for freedom. We honour today not only those who died in two world wars and Korea, but those who continue to deal today with the aftermath of their struggle.

When Canadians think of what Remembrance Day means in their daily lives, they think of the poppy. In the weeks preceding November 11, they see the Royal Canadian Legion's familiar poppy boxes in stores and church halls. In return for a donation of spare change, they get a small flower, modest in spite of its blood red colour which they pin on their lapel. This has become such a common rite of late fall that perhaps people do not think of the significance of their actions.

Canadians wear the poppy as a symbol of respect and honour for those who fought for our country. I do not think that there is anyone who, if asked if they remember our war dead, would deny that they do. I do fear, however, that not enough Canadians would do so without a reminder, even with their blood red flower on their coats. I regret that not enough people think of our ongoing responsibilities to war veterans.

On Remembrance Day, all across the country, people take time from work and from school to gather around war memorials, to lay wreaths and to bow their heads for a moment of silence at 11 a.m. We try at that time to visualize the 114,000 Canadians who gave their lives so that we can live in freedom. Moment of silence is a small gesture of respect to those men and women. But after we raise our heads, after we return to work and to school, our responsibility does not end. We have not done enough no matter how sincere our tribute.

We have an ongoing responsibility to today's war veterans, spouses and widows and dependants, those who were willing to make the same ultimate sacrifice for freedom and who live among us today. These aging Canadians face special problems. The war did not end for these people in 1918, 1945 or 1953. It is manifest in their daily lives by disabling physical conditions and by the personal conflict and grief felt by all who experienced war.

Remembrance Day gives us the opportunity to express our gratitude and respect for the living and the dead in a personal way by wearing a poppy, by laying that wreath, by bowing our heads in silence.

Our ongoing expression of gratitude and support is expressed every day in a collective sense through the benefits administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Remembrance Day is more than bowing our heads and listening to our community leaders utter fine words in honour of the dead, although that is a sacred aspect of the day.

That part is relatively easy, as any school child released from class to stand beside the cenotaph can tell you. The hard part is manifesting those sentiments in our daily lives. The hard part is remembering as we grumble daily about our problems and our complaints, that we live in the greatest democracy on earth, and that we owe this to our war veterans and to our fallen comrades.

This year, we have an even greater motivation to give thanks for what we have, to honour those who sacrificed so much for our country. Since last Remembrance Day, the Berlin wall has fallen. Czechoslovakia has elected a poet as its president, and the Germanys have united.

The world has marvelled for a year at the human capacity for understanding, for unity and for peaceful change. The lesson of Remembrance Day lies not only in horrific images, memories of bloody trenches and the bomb at Hiroshima. It also lies in the images we watch on our televisions this year of East and West Berliners destroying the wall together, of the people of Prague bringing down a dictatorship not with guns, but with burning candles.

I hope, as we all do, that these images are evidence that we are beginning to understand what John McRae was trying to tell us in his poem In Flanders Fields. We have an opportunity to use such hard won wisdom in the Persian Gulf situation. All Canadians hope that this war will not break out, that we will not have a new group of war veterans. But if it should happen, and I pray that it will not, I hope that we will continue to show our honour and our respect for these war veterans, both on Remembrance Days to come and on a daily basis, through veterans' benefits and programs.

Mr. Speaker, as we approach November 11 when Canadians will attend services of remembrance, let us continue to honour those who served Canada in her hour of need.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, I want to acknowledge the fine remarks of the minister and my colleague.

I am honoured to rise, on behalf of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party, to share with the House some thoughts and feelings about Remembrance Day. The motto for this important day is "Lest We Forget". That phrase expresses the whole purpose of Remembrance Day, to remember those members of our shared human family who lost their lives in war. Our Canadian sons and daughters who died while serving their country in the wars they have fought are honoured again, as well they should be.

It is important that we do set aside a special day each year to honour, not only those who have fallen and not only those who served Canada in that way, but we should take the day and the hour of the armistice to remember the needless horror and futility of war. The motto, "Lest We Forget", is engraved on our hearts, but have we always kept the pledge implied in this phrase? It is with profound sadness, Mr. Speaker, that I suggest that we have not.

There are many Canadians who served in our forces and many who have died in that service who have not been adequately remembered or recognized. We have long treated with contempt the memory of those Canadians who served with the Republican forces during the Spanish Civil War. These heroes counted in their number Dr. Norman Bethune. These were the first Canadians to enlist in the war against fascism and dictatorship. It is the eternal shame of all democratic governments which refused to come to the aid of a democratically-elected government when invaded by Franco, with the support and assistance of Hitler and Mussolini.

Many Canadians joined the Mackenzie-Papineau Battalion and fought honourably, in the same war which the governments of Canada and Britain did not join until 1939. Many of those who fought with the "Mac-Paps" were taken prisoner and tortured. Canada said nothing. We have never officially honoured these brave ones nor has any Canadian government extended to them the recognition they deserve as war veterans.

I want to say that the Canadians who served in the Republican forces were in no way comparable to the Canadians who joined the U.S. military to fight the war in Vietnam. Those who helped the U.S. in Vietnam were not defending a democratically elected government, instead, they were helping a superpower invade a small nation.

Mr. Speaker, no Canadian government has granted war veterans' status to merchant seamen. I will have more to say about that when we get to the bill at second reading stage. But I want to say of the sailors in Canada's merchant marine who sailed in dangerous waters for the allied cause during World War II, that without the supplies and ordinances merchant seamen brought from Canada to Europe, Canadian and other allied forces would have been helpless to defeat fascism.

There were more combat fatalities among the merchant seamen during World War II than there were in the Royal Canadian Navy, and many merchant seamen were captured and held as prisoners of war, in some cases for up to five years. Yet when World War II ended, the merchant seamen who had risked so much and had contributed so greatly to the war effort did not receive the benefits received by regular sailors, soldiers and airmen.

I am sure very few Canadians know today about another piece of our history that I must mention, and that is what our First Nations did in Canada's first overseas military expedition, which was the Nile expedition of 1884–85. It was Canada's first overseas military campaign. It was also the first time that Canadian Indians volunteered for an overseas war. General Wolseley, who put down the Red River Rebellion, was so impressed with the expertise of the Indians as voyageurs, he recruited some of them to help the relief expedition up the Nile.

Fifty-six Mohawks and 30 Ojibwas were given a non-combative role as voyageurs to transport a British expedition up the Nile River to rescue General C.G. Gordon at Khartoum.

Sixteen members of the contingent of First Nations died in the expedition from drowning, disease or combat engagement. All the voyageurs were decorated for their service in Egypt, but we owe it to their memory to specifically praise their service on this occasion.

A memorial cross at Fort William Mission testifies to their contribution to our history. And of course we owe it to the memory of those who were first here and first to serve to see to it that their descendants, Canada's First Nations of today, are at last allowed the dignity which comes with control of their own affairs, which is surely their right.

Finally, Sir, I want to remind the House of something I said last year on this occasion. At that time I suggested the best way for Canada to remember her war dead was to do its best to make and keep the peace. This is a point I would want to make again.

We could be at war again soon. It is my hope that we as a nation will do all that we can to keep the peace. If we must go to war to stop aggression, it must only be done under the auspices of the United Nations. In the war which may come there will be no victors. And if the human species is to survive, we must learn never again to make war.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): As a symbolic gesture I would appreciate if hon. members would rise with me for a one minute silence.

[Editor's Note: The House stood in silence.]

It is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 38 to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Gatineau—La Lièvre—Government Information Systems; the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier—The Citizens' Forum on the Future of Canada; the hon. member for Nunatsiaq—Indian Affairs.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS ACT

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that Bill C-87, an Act to amend the statute law in relation to war veterans, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to address the House at second reading of Bill C-87, an Act to amend the statute law in relation to war veterans.

[English]

I am also delighted that the long-standing tradition of non-partisan, all-party support for veterans legislation is being continued today with the passage of this bill, hopefully at all stages. My critics, the member for Hillsborough and the member for Regina—Lumsden, have my thanks for their co-operation.

In a number of speeches this summer, but most particularly in June at the Dominion Convention of the Royal Canadian Legion in Vancouver, I gave veterans a preview of the direction I was heading with this legislation. The reaction to the types of changes envisaged was extremely favourable and this feeling was reinforced when veterans and their organizations had an opportunity to review the bill following first reading.

The preview I provided centred on three key areas. First, we are sweeping away decades of out-dated paternalistic and just plain clumsy approaches to the administered accounts. I think a word of explanation here is in order.

When veterans or their dependants are unable to manage their finances and have no one to assist them, Veterans Affairs will step in and provide the assistance. We are currently helping approximately 1,000 veterans and their dependants with administration of their veterans benefits. Efforts have been made to improve our system of administered accounts. Less than 20 years ago, some 10,000 individuals had their accounts administered by Veterans Affairs. Today, as I mentioned, we have only about 1,000 veterans and dependants in this category.

The changes reflect a significant turnaround in thinking, both at Veterans Affairs and in society at large. Simply put, our heart was in the right place, but nothing beats the help that can be provided by a caring relative or friend. They can give the added dimension that we just cannot. That is why we have made such a large effort to encourage veterans or their dependants to voice their own preferences for a third party administrator.

Nonetheless, we can only go so far with the current state of our laws and regulations on administered accounts. They are, as I have said, archaic. Bill C-87, which we are dealing with now, will enable us to give veterans and their dependants, in the 1990s, 1990 service and that is a development all of us can applaud.

Let me provide just one example which is the second key element of this bill. For decades Veterans Affairs has followed ordinary banking practices with regard to administered accounts. The assumption has been that the accounts were like chequing accounts. A service was received and the cost of the service was provided through waiving interest on the account.

Well, times have changed. Financial institutions pay interest on virtually every type of account and Bill C-87 will permit Veterans Affairs to fall into line with modern practice. With the passage of this legislation, Veterans Affairs will pay interest on administered accounts effective January 1, 1990. The interest this year will amount to approximately $3.5 million. That, Mr. Speaker, is the type of change I had in mind when I said that we want veterans and their dependants to receive 1990s service and treatment.

The third area I wish to highlight is related to the reform of the administered account system. The Royal Canadian Legion has proposed that, when a veteran whose account is administered by Veterans Affairs dies without a will or an heir, that veteran's administered funds should go into a special trust fund for the benefit of other veterans.

This is a proposal whose time has come. Bill C-87 will allow us to establish the special trust fund and help those veterans and dependants who are most in need. I can think of no better way for these unclaimed benefits to be used. The fund will truly exemplify the special bond that exists between those who fought side by side in Korea and the two world wars.

The amendment related to the trust fund and to administered accounts are the most significant measures in the bill. They are important, necessary, and good news items for veterans and their dependants, but there are other measures worthy of mention.

• (1550 )

First, we are proposing to remove an anomaly which denies benefits to widows or widowers. These are the surviving spouses of what is known as the Class 21 pensioners, those whose disability is assessed at under 5 per cent. These particular pensioners receive a lump sum rather than monthly payments, but nonetheless are entitled to receive a monthly attendance allowance if their health problems make it necessary to have attendant care in the home. However, with the death of the veteran, the surviving spouse lost this monthly allowance at an already difficult time. The amendment will treat these individuals in the same manner as the widow or widowers of other disability pensioners who continue to receive the allowance for up to one year after the death of the veteran.

In this regard, I want to mention that the government has acted to help recently bereaved spouses of disability pensioners through the one year continuation of pension benefits. We believe this is a compassionate practice and we have extended our help to other areas as well.

This summer, I was able to announce that surviving spouses of veterans who had been receiving VIP, or Veterans Independence Program benefits, would be able to retain groundskeeping and housekeeping assistance for up to one year after the death of the veteran. The change took place, effective September 1 of this year, and it again represents further progress in our desire to help recently bereaved spouses get through a most difficult time.

Bill C–87 also includes dozens of amendments designed to provide policy consistency, to improve wording, and to streamline procedures. They are non–controversial housekeeping measures. In fact, this is a comment I wish to underline.

Following first reading, the major veterans organizations—the Royal Canadian Legion, the National Council of Veterans Association and the Army, Navy, Air Force Veterans Association—poured over every word in this bill. They discussed virtually every clause with my staff and officials and, in fact, with me personally. Then, we met to talk about the items where any questions remained.

My approach was quite simple and straightforward. If there is anything in Bill C–87 that raises any doubt or uncertainty about it being of either a benefit or housekeeping nature, let me know and I will resolve it here and now, or we will put it to one side for further discussion. I might add that we have done that in several cases.

The amendments I will be moving in Committee of the Whole reflect the consensus that all of the veterans organizations have reached. They have been studied and broached by both the Liberal Party critic and the New Democratic Party critic. It was consultation at its best. I want to thank the veterans' organizations for their invaluable comments and their insight. This bill is a better one because of their contribution and I am the first to acknowledge that.

Before I conclude my remarks, I would like this opportunity to speak to a point all Canadians feel, particularly at this time of year. While we can never repay the men and women who did so much for Canada in wartime, nor can we ever stop trying to pay the debt we owe, Bill C–87 is intended to benefit further veterans and their dependents, but there is more we all want to do in the future.

The veterans organizations, through their appearances before parliamentary committees, in their meetings and their conventions, and in their day–to–day representations, bring forward dozens of good suggestions and recommendations. Parliamentarians and interested Canadians also raisèd positive and constructive ideas for improvements. We have been able to do quite a bit. In fact, I have announced eight new improvements this summer alone.

I would like to thank my colleagues on all sides of the House who are making possible debate on Bill C–87 today. The spirit of co–operation is appreciated. Hopefully, we will get through second reading, referral to Committee of the Whole, and clause–by–clause study of the amendments and bill today.

[Translation]

I again want to thank my colleagues on all sides of the House who are making possible today's debate on Bill C–87. The spirit of cooperation is appreciated by veterans and their dependants.

[English]

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to address second reading of Bill C–87.

I would like to begin by again paying tribute to the men and women whom the Department of Veterans Affairs and the associated agencies are there to serve. Over 100,000 said men and women sacrificed their lives in three wars to keep this great country of ours free. Of course, we also honour and cherish the veterans who came home, but who continue to struggle with the disabilities, the memories of the war, and the companions they lost. We bear a great responsibility and concern as well for the spouses, widows and dependents of these veterans.

As I took the time to examine this bill with the various veterans associations, such as the Royal Canadian Legion and the National Council of Veterans Associations, which includes among others the War Amputations of Canada, I came to the conclusion that there were many changes that were needed in this legislation.

It is the bill's intention to pay interest on funds held in trust accounts for veterans and administered by the department. I regret that it took so long to see this come about. The Auditor General recommended in his report that Parliament for the year ending 1986 said that interest should be paid on such accounts. This initiative, of course, is one ray of hope in a bill which in many other cases is in need of further improvement.

There are several aspects of this bill which cause concern to the veterans organizations and to myself. I would like to discuss for a moment those concerns. Many veterans' issues have yet to be addressed by the government, issues which cannot wait for resolution much longer. Veterans, of course, make up a small segment of our population and they may not be considered to be a high priority by many Canadians. In view of the sacrifices made by these men and women, this is an attitude which we must fight every step of the way. We owe our freedom and our democracy to these outstanding Canadians, and the concerns and the needs of them and of their dependents must be addressed on an ongoing basis. Veterans are fortunate to have such organizations as the Royal Canadian Legion and the National Council of Veterans Associations to talk to the Department of Veterans Affairs and other areas of government on their behalf.

Of great concern to veterans and their associations is the effect of the clawback. The passage of Bill C-28 by the other place means that Canadian veterans will be forced to subsidize the deficit which this government has failed to reduce effectively.

Also, there are many veterans who do not require chronic care in a hospital setting, but who do need a support system at home. Therefore, the department offers The veterans Independence Program. However, some veterans, such as those who did not serve outside of Canada, are not eligible for certain benefits under the program. I feel this discrimination between veterans is unfair and must be corrected to ensure that all veterans receive equal treatment.

I believe that the passage of this bill without the positive changes in the following areas would be a terrible development on our system of veterans benefits. I just want to quote some of the sections.

Clause 4, paragraph 14(3)(b) states that "any of the commission's duties" should be changed to specify "non-adjudicative duties". This would leave no doubt that while duties may be delegated, the power of adjudication cannot be delegated.

There are many clauses which I feel need correction and as we go through the clause-by-clause examination, I will speak to them. There are some apparent drafting errors as well that must be corrected. One is that appeals to entitlement boards, amending subsection 81(1) of the Pension Act in clause 28 to restore the words "or whose award has been cancelled or reduced". These words are necessary to allow a pensioner to appeal a decision to cancel or reduce an award on grounds other than a change on the basis of entitlement, in particular, when a pension is stopped under new subsection 106(22).

Second, in dealing with the stoppage of pensions for the refusal to be medically examined, the new subsection 106.22 of the Pension Act in clause 31 of the bill should be changed by replacing the word "minister" with "commission". This would leave in place the avenues of appeal which now exist and would ensure that adjudication is performed by the independent commission, rather than by the minister.

• (1600 )

Of understandable concern to veterans organizations is the apparent change of mood on the part of government with regard to benefits. The implementation of the clawback, as I stated earlier, the charges for board and lodging, the restrictive policy in regard to hearing loss assessment, the placing of restrictions on the number of days a year that treatment allowance for pensionable disability can be paid and the restrictions regarding the effective dates of retroactive payment of treatment benefits are just a few concerns.

I am worried by the apparent tendency toward delegating responsibilities from the Canadian Pension Commission and the Veterans' Appeal Board to departmental ministers. This is a dangerous precedent, because if adjudication duties come under the auspices of the bureaucrats, responsibility and accountability are in danger.

I am also concerned with the response of government resolutions arising from veterans conventions, which is either too slow or lacking altogether. Some areas of urgent priority to veterans are the elimination of delays in addressing pension applications. I know it has come a long way, and it has a lot farther to go, of course.

The ineligibility of widows to benefit from pension increases assessed after their spouse's death, the payment of proportionate rather than full pensions to widows, payments to serving members of the forces through sustained disabilities which restrict promotion, transfer and review of the basis of disability pension rates, inequity of the War Veterans' Allowance Act which must be corrected is a requirement that veterans or their widows must be a resident in Canada when applying. Before the allowance can be paid outside of Canada, the recipient must have a continuous total of 12 months residency in Canada.

This may seem quite all right at the outset. Many people, some of them who did not return home from overseas after the war, live in the United States or other places. They would benefit greatly because these people are not the people who are buying shares in Air Canada or Petro–Canada. These people are living far below the poverty line, and it would seem only fair that the veterans or their widows who cannot return to Canada be eligible for this allowance.

The War Veterans' Allowance Program is intended to meet the basic needs of veterans. In order to maintain a reasonable quality of life, some additional income from casual earnings, interest on savings and rentals are exempted from calculating income. However, the last increase in the casual earnings exemption was in 1985 when it went from $100 to $140.

Veterans' associations believe that an exemption of at least $500 per year is more realistic and that increases should be at least equal to the Consumer Price Index gain since 1985.

I cannot stress enough how important and how urgent these matters are for our veterans and their dependents. They must be addressed now, not in a matter of years.

Another matter which has been raised by the veterans and others across the country is recognition of the contribution made by merchant seamen during Canada's war effort during the two world wars and Korea.

While merchant seamen were not members of the Armed Forces, they played a crucial role in the war effort. Without the merchant navy, our forces would have been deprived of vital supplies of food, weapons, ammunition, vehicles, fuel and other essential items which were necessary to ensure our victory.

We have the cold statistics of men killed and ships lost to remind us that although the merchant seamen were not members of the Royal Canadian Navy, they ran the same risks and too often paid the same price.

They did it for the same reason. They did it to defend their country and its values. They deserve the same recognition and the same support that we give veterans of the forces.

Since 1941, the Government of Canada has recognized the equality of service and sacrifice of the merchant navy by awarding the Silver Cross to the widows and the mothers of those merchant seamen who gave their lives in war.

It seems strange to me that we recognize the equality of service and sacrifice with this medal, but we do not recognize the equality of service when it comes to granting equal benefits to those merchant seamen who returned. To put it bluntly, if a merchant seaman was killed, he was a hero. If he returned, he was a forgotten civilian.

In 1962, in response to pressure from the Canadian Legion and the Merchant Navy Association, the Canadian government made an effort to recognize the service of these people by passing Part X1 of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, which granted them the equivalent of war veterans allowance. In view of this, it was not too much to expect that when the government extended what is now called the veterans independence program, or VIP, to the recipients of the war veterans allowance, the merchant seamen would be eligible for VIP, but they are not.

Basically, for the purposes of the VIP, service on the high seas during these wars in the merchant navy is not considered equal to non-voluntary service even when such service was performed only on Canadian soil. Merchant seamen are instead categorized with all other non-service personnel under the title of civilians. The United Kingdom and the United States have legally recognized their merchant seamen as having served in active military service and they are entitled to equal benefits.

Do members of the Canadian merchant navy not deserve the same? I agree with the veterans organizations in saying yes, they do deserve our honour and our support for their sacrifices, and this should be clearly demonstrated by giving them full status under veterans' legislation.

Another group who served Canada, and for technical reasons do not receive the benefits they deserve, are those who at the end of World War II were absent without leave and never returned to their units. In 1946 an Order in Council categorized these veterans as deemed never to have served, which meant that while they would not suffer any consequences for the service offence, they were also deprived of any benefits provided for members of the Forces. This, in spite of the fact that many had good front line service records, and in some instances many were wounded in action.

We believe that a system should be established which would review the cases on an individual basis as requested by appellants. Individual cases could be investigated and when appropriate, honourable discharges could be granted. Veterans just want these cases to be judged on the individual merit by an easily understood and accessible system, such as a special committee. If a favourable decision is made, then such veterans or their dependants would be eligible for benefits.

Like the merchant seamen and others, there is another group of veterans whose experiences and special needs too often go unnoticed. I tell you that they receive full benefits, that they go unnoticed and yet they made a great sacrifice to the nation, and I am talking about the prisoners of war. We tend to forget what these people went through.

During the years which we like to consider as carefree in our teens and our twenties, Canada's service men and women experienced hell on earth. Because of this sacrifice, we live as free men and women in the greatest country in the world, and we are deeply in their debt. Veterans serve, not just as a living reminder of the wars fought for Canada, they remind us that we must do everything within our power to ensure that no Canadians ever again have to make such sacrifices if at all possible.

I would like to quote the Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald, a former Minister of Veterans Affairs, as he spoke to Bill C-40 in July, 1980. He said, and I quote: "In this modern age, society is often accused of neglecting both the contributions of our forebears in building this great country called Canada and their needs as they age and experience infirmity. It is often stated that the measure of the social conscience of a nation lies in its treatment of its aging and dependant population".

While veterans remind us of so many valuable and painfully learned lessons, they must never be regarded as relics. We must ensure that they receive every benefit that Canadian society can provide to them. We must also be willing and able to provide support to a new generation of Canadian veterans should conflict arise in the Persian Gulf.

All Canadians hope fervently that the crisis will be resolved peacefully. We cannot let our hopes blind us. We must be prepared for any development and we must be ready to support all of our veterans, both present and future. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I am very pleased that the Minister of Veterans Affairs has agreed to establish the study group to deal with various issues, some of which I have discussed.

As the official opposition critic for veterans affairs, I would hope to participate in this group. I look forward to working with the government and veterans to try to resolve the urgent matters before us.

I know that our goal should be a common one, to make the lives of Canadian veterans as healthy and as comfortable and as dignified as we possibly can. It is the least we can give to those who have given so much. We live as a free people, not by chance but because when that freedom was threatened, the men and the women of the army, the navy, the air force, and the merchant marine and many others were willing to put their lives on the line. Many paid the supreme sacrifice. Many were wounded and the result is that we are free today.

Mr. Speaker, as we approach this November 11 when members of Parliament will attend Remembrance Day services across the country, let us make certain that we have indeed kept the faith with those who served Canada in her hour of need.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in this debate. This bill amends several pieces of legislation that we support.

We in the New Democratic Party find much to support in the bill. For example, we are pleased to note the bill would require government to use proceeds from the estates of veterans who die without heirs to be placed in a trust fund and used for the benefit of other veterans, rather than going into general revenue of the government, which has been the practice for years, and which I submit is long overdue to be corrected.

We are glad to see the extension of the attendance allowance to class 2 widows. We are glad to see that a means test for disabled children of deceased veterans is removed. Of course, we have always opposed means testing for social programs.

In the main, this is a progressive piece of legislation. It extends some benefits to veterans and their dependants and puts into statute law some of the more generous practices of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Specifically, there is now legal provision for clothing allowances for veterans whose disability cause wear and tear on their clothing. Again, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the minister on a positive move.

However, this government has not shown itself either willing or able to listen to the electorate, nor even to take constructive criticism. It was with some delight and surprise I was able to note that the Minister of Veterans Affairs has listened to veterans organizations like the Royal Canadian Legion, Army, Navy, and Air Force Vets, and I am a member of both, and the National Council of Veterans Organizations, and drafted amendments to C–87 to meet the concerns of those groups.

Again I congratulate the minister. He has shown some sensitivity that we all appreciate.

Part of Bill C–87 is concerned with the operations of the Veterans Appeal Board. One of the provisions lengthens the terms of members from five and three to seven and five years. We also see this as a positive measure to allow members of the board to become more expert in their work before they must leave the board.

I would like to take this opportunity again to congratulate the government on the quality of appointments it has made to the Veterans Appeal Board. It is fair to say that many of the present government's appointments to boards and commissions have been something less than judicious and appropriate. Thankfully, appointments to the Veterans Appeal Board, not only from this government but previous governments, have remained to bob the pork barrel.

In fact, I would like publicly and in the House to congratulate the Veterans Appeal Board for the fine work it has done over the years. I humbly submit that I would like to see this government, or the next government—which could be my party—take appropriate measures to ensure that appointments to the Veterans Appeal Board will remain relatively non–partisan.

While I am on the subject of the Veterans Appeal Board, I would like to suggest to the minister that he might want to consider introducing legislation in the near future that would allow the board to hold hearings from time to time across the country. We could run into a situation where a veteran who has an appeal is not satisfied with the pensions advocate who appeared on his behalf when he made application and he wants to appear himself or have a lawyer represent him. This means that one or both of them have to go to Charlottetown.

In those instances I would think that once or twice a year the board should meet in different places in Canada to make sure that the veteran is satisfied with the representation that he can.

It is with mixed feelings I say that the minister's department is responsible for meeting the needs of fewer and fewer war veterans. I cannot say how glad I am that this has been the case, but more needs to be done.

In future there will have to be further improvements and increases.

This summer that we might end up with more war veterans. We hope that is not the case but, even as we speak, we are drifting closer and closer to a war. We must be fully aware of what this means.

I do not want to see the Department of Veterans Affairs lose any of its importance. That is why I encourage the minister, and I will support him, in his fight for veterans, even if it is with his own cabinet colleagues. I just hope he would fight harder sometimes.

In any case, the government must do all it can to help bring a peaceful resolution to the Arabian gulf crisis, and for many reasons Canada cannot afford any more wars.

I have what I believe to be and what my legal advice indicates is a reasoned amendment which I will move at the end of my remarks. The bill is intending to help veterans and their dependent survivors. I have congratulated the minister on that. The reasoned amendment I will move calls for this House to proceed no further with Bill C-87. My party and I want to give the government an opportunity to change the statutes or amend this bill before us now to extend war veterans benefits to Canadian merchant seamen who made at least one trip through dangerous waters during World War II.

I should say at this point that we are anxious to have this bill pass through all stages by the end of the day, even if it means, Sir, that we will have not to see the clock. It is shameful that this and previous governments have for 45 years refused to recognize adequately the contributions of these courageous Canadians made during those terrible years.

In response to the minister's answer to my question during Question Period today, I had the feeling that he was trying to leave the impression that the merchant seamen are getting really great benefits even though they are not recognized as veterans. I want to remind the House and the minister of some of the benefits the merchant seamen do not get, that Armed Forces veterans, firefighters, and civilian supervisors get.

For example, a clothing allowance on discharge, they all got it but the merchant seamen got zero. The other three groups got rehabilitation grants, but the merchant seaman did not. The Armed Forces veterans got medical and dental care free for one year, but the merchant seamen only get it if they have a pensionable disability. Surely that is not equal treatment. The others got out of work benefits, but the merchant seamen, perhaps, maybe. The Armed Forces veterans got temporary incapacity allowance, but the merchant seamen did not. The others got vocational training. For the seamen it had to be marine related and they had to be under 30 years of age. Many of those seamen were in their fifties and early sixties, sailing during the Second World War. When they came out, they could not get those benefits.

The others got benefits while they are waiting for returns, but the merchant seamen did not. The Armed Forces veterans got university treatment, but the merchant seamen did not. Federal Public Service preference, yes for the Armed Forces veterans, but no for the merchant seaman. For disability preference, yes for the Armed Forces veterans and the civilian supervisors, but the merchant seamen had to have a handicap. The Veterans Land Act, only if seamen were war disabled. If they are disabled, they are not going to be able to farm any land. Veterans insurance, yes for the other groups, but conditional for the merchant seamen. Veterans business and professional loans, yes for the Armed Forces, but no for the merchant seamen. Reduced rail transportation when they were on leave during the war, Armed Forces veterans got it but no for the merchant seamen.

That is a list of benefits the merchant seamen did not get as compared to the war veterans.

I would like to move a reasoned amendment before I sit down. There is much to praise in Bill C-87. It is clearly intended to help war veterans and their dependent survivors. I look forward to helping pass this bill at all stages today.

I congratulate the minister for taking the initiative in this regard, but I take this opportunity to remind the minister and the House that as a nation Canada has still failed to repay its debt to some veterans of the war against fascism. That is why the reasoned amendment I will move today if it is ruled in order calls this House to proceed no further with Bill C–87. My party and I would like to give the government an opportunity to change the statutes or, by an amendment to this bill which we can do in 20 minutes, extend all war veterans benefits to Canadian merchant seamen who made at least one trip through dangerous waters in World War II.

It is shameful that in 45 years the government has not recognized the contribution those merchant seamen made. There were 12,000 of them—that is the equivalent of a full Canadian army division—who served in our merchant fleet during the Second World War. There are only about 3,500 of them left. We lost 1,259 of them, which is greater than 10 per cent, to death. Nearly 200 were imprisoned, some of them for up to five years, having been captured in 1940–41 by the Germans. There were those who died in the run to Murmansk and in the Battle of the Atlantic. This was the highest casualty rate, proportionately, of any allied force during the last great conflict. This is puzzling, since merchant seamen have been awarded many of the same medals given to Canadian Armed Forces veterans. The United States and the United Kingdom have recognized their merchant seamen as veterans. Since January 1988, U.S. merchant seamen have become eligible for full benefits from their veterans administration.

Of course the Royal Canadian Legion has passed a resolution calling for the Parliament of Canada to recognize our merchant seamen as full war veterans.

On this issue, the ball is in the government's court. I hope the minister or someone from the government side will tell us why this minister and previous ones have so far failed to act, for 45 years, to give merchant seamen full war veterans benefits, status, and recognition.

Therefore I wish to move:

> That this House decline to proceed further with second reading of Bill C–87, an act to amend statute law in relation to war veterans, because it fails to provide for the extension of veterans benefits as outlined in the bill to certain groups heretofore excluded from designation as war veterans, said groups including > 1) Canadian Merchant Seamen, registered with the Canadian government between 1939 and 1945 end of hostilities in the Pacific, who made at least one trip through dangerous waters.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Minister of Veterans Affairs while I am looking at the amendment.

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Speaker, my comments were to be on the amendment. I do not know whether or not you have ruled that it is in the right form. Perhaps you could make that decision.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe it is in the right form. I have no problem with that.

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Speaker, in that case, I just wanted to make a few comments on it.

This government and all previous governments since the war have dealt with the issue of the merchant seamen. We fully recognize that they served under some very dangerous conditions and that they paid the supreme sacrifice in many cases. However, no previous government decided to take the additional step which would term them as being veterans and give them all the benefits of other veterans.

I think what I have done is a good step. I indicated it in Question Period today. Naturally we will not vote for this amendment. The Royal Canadian Legion, the Army, Navy, Air Force Association, and the National Council of Veterans Associations, along with members of our department and members of the portfolio which would include the Canadian Pension Commission, Bureau of Pension Advocates and the Veterans Appeal Board, would like to put this thing to a major study with all groups present to see if there is anything that can be done and if we can reach a meeting of the minds on this particularly thorny issue.

It is my position and the position of the government that at this time the referral of the matter to that particular veterans study group would be far more profitable than to pass this particular amendment. Therefore, the government will be voting against it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will propose the motion to the House now, and then I will recognize the hon. member for Kootenay West—Revelstoke.

• (1630)

Mr. Benjamin, seconded by Mr. Blackburn (Brant) moved:

> That this House decline to proceed further with the second reading of Bill C–87, an act to amend statute law in relation to war veterans, because it fails to provide for the extension of veterans benefits as outlined in the bill to certain groups heretofore excluded from designation as war veterans, said groups which include the Canadian Merchant Seamen, registered with the Canadian government between 1939 and 1945 end of hostilities in the Pacific, who made at least one trip through dangerous waters.

The hon. member for Kootenay East—Revelstoke on debate.

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, in rising to address briefly Bill C–87, an act to amend the statute law in relation to war veterans, I would just like to add to the words of my colleague from Regina—Lumsden that there is no better way for us in this House to pay tribute to the Canadian men and women who served in the two world wars and the many other conflicts in which Canada has been engaged than to act in support of the bill before us to improve the benefits and pensions of those who have served in Canada's forces in all of those conflicts.

Concerning my colleague's amendment to define those who served in Canada's merchant marine as veterans entitled to full veterans benefits, I can recall well the father of a good friend of mine—in fact the friend was the best man at my wedding—who three times was torpedoed and dumped into the North Atlantic while on the Murmansk run. He survived all three times. I can think of very few others, no matter which branch of the services, who perhaps earned full benefits and full pensions more than that gentleman and others who, like him, put their lives on the line in the most dangerous theatre of operations.

There is another group in addition to those in the merchant marine who I and my colleagues believe should also be recognized. These other Canadians who have never been given the recognition due to them as war veterans are those who went to Spain to fight fascism during the Spanish Civil War.

There cannot be more than 200 or so surviving Mac–Paps who were of course the first from our land to fight fascism. They were not paid well in Spain. They were given weapons and basic provisions as their reward for helping to try and stop Franco, Hitler, and Mussolini. For their courage and self–sacrifice, their own government declared them outlaws because they violated the Foreign Enlistment Act.

Imagine in the years just before World War II that it was against the law to fight against the most vicious tyranny the world had ever seen, but the Mac–Paps, the Mackenzie–Papineau Battalion and others risked imprisonment to stand up for democracy and made their way to Spain on their own where they served with honour.

Many were decorated by the Spanish Republican Government. Many were wounded, captured, tortured, or killed in the fight to stop the fascists and the Nazis.

I have often said that if the democracies had listened to the Mac–Paps and others, we might have headed Hitler off and perhaps stopped the sequence of escalating aggression that resulted in World War II. Many of the members of the Mackenzie–Papineau Battalion came back to Canada, joined the Canadian forces and continued in the war against fascism.

Now all they want is recognition as veterans. They are not even asking for benefits, though they certainly deserve them. Most importantly, they deserve to know that their country no longer regards them as outlaws for being among the first Canadians to try to stop the spread of fascism.

I hope that the minister will act soon to include as veterans, members of the Mackenzie–Papineau Battalion and other Canadians who helped the democratically elected government of Spain defend itself against a fascist invasion during the Spanish Civil War.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the remainder of these gallant freedom fighters may finally be allowed to take their rightful place of honour and stand as a unit before Canadian cenotaphs on Remembrance Day. It is well past time.

I would move:

That the following words be added to the previous amendment:

and members of the Mackenzie Papineau battalion and other Canadians who fought with Spanish Republican forces during the Spanish Civil War.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

All those in favour of the amendment to the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

An hon. member: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Negatived on division.

Amendment to the amendment negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on the amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

Some hon. members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Negatived on division.

Amendment negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on the motion.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

On clause 1—

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Chairman, I have a series of amendments I would like to table for the committee's consideration. I would ask at this time for unanimous consent that they be deemed moved by myself and seconded by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. They will be considered disposed of later as we proceed in the clause by clause consideration of the bill.

In order to be of assistance, I made sure the opposition parties received copies of these amendments earlier.

I think it is only fair I ask that if any other members have amendments, they be tabled now or in the next few minutes so all of us in the committee have an opportunity to peruse them, to consider them and to make a decision on them.

Hopefully, I will be able to get this legislation which is so very important for our veterans through very shortly.

I have some of these amendments to move.

The Deputy Chairman: There are two motions in the package which would be out of order at the committee stage. They are the amendments to delete clauses 16 and 24. The way to accomplish this at the committee stage would be to vote against clauses 16 and 24. I will, therefore, deem the other 10 amendments to be moved by Mr. Merrithew, seconded by Mr. Beatty.

• (1640)

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Chairman, my question is for the minister. It deals with the cut-off date for the Korean war, July 27, 1953. I wonder why that date was never extended and why the bill before us is not extended to cover those veterans who left Canada after that date.

I know one constituent who is offended by the cut-off date. I wonder if the minister could perhaps tell me how many veterans are affected? I realize there are fewer veterans still around who receive the veterans allowance. I am specifically dealing with the veterans allowance under this cut-off date because all other veterans have had all the other benefits except the veterans allowance from that date.

I would like to know how many veterans would have left after that date to go to Korea. I think it is well worth knowing in light of the crisis in the Gulf. We can pass an order retroactively but there is no order that the troops presently in the Gulf are in a theatre of war or in an aggressive theatre at this present time.

My first question really deals with that date and how many people have been affected. They were sent to Korea as of that date and therefore disallowed from war veterans allowance after they came back.

My second question is, in light of the declining number of Canadian veterans, could there not be a clause to include these people that would have at least gone to the end of the Korean war? In a letter to me from the minister it says: "The courage of the Merchant Marine is well documented. The service they rendered to the war effort is undeniable and all Canadians are grateful for their work. However, many veterans who served with the Armed Forces during wartime are still not eligible for the VIP program. I refer to the people who went to Korea as such".

I would like to know if the minister is aware of the numbers of the merchant marine who might today still be around to be able to take advantage of the VIP program but, more important, how many Koreans veterans were denied the benefits of the War Veterans Allowance Program?

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Chairman, questions on legislation such as this quite often refer to items which are not in the bill.

I might add that the questions do not even pertain to clause 1, but I will undertake to get those figures. There are some very good reasons why that date was chosen or else it would not have been chosen. I will undertake to get that. Naturally I would not have those kinds of figures at my fingertips at this time.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): I think clause 1 allows us to question all parts of the bill. All I am asking the minister is why these people were excluded in these amendments in the bill before the House. I was just wondering if he had some explanation, besides just no explanation, as to why we had a cut-off date. It is very important at this time in Canada's history as we send troops over to the Persian Gulf who go not knowing what their rights or benefits are. I know it can be passed by Parliament retroactively as it was done in the Korean war and the date was selected. I know that there are veterans who were hurt by that cut-off date.

It just seems to me as we have this omnibus bill helping veterans—and I have nothing to say against the bill—why we could not include the few veterans who are not included for those benefits?

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Chairman, I fully realize that one can discuss many items under Clause 1. The important thing is the date that was chosen. I suspect, it was the date of the signing of the truce. There were quite a few veterans of course who served in the Third Battalion that went over after that signing of the truce. I would know many of them personally.

Again, I cannot get the numbers the hon. members has asked for and I would suggest that we could discuss that at a future time. If she wishes, I will put it in writing. I will be glad to find those numbers, but I do not have those at my fingertips at this time.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps the Chair can help the House. The clauses can be divided into blocks as follows. Clauses 1 to 3 can be approved in one block, and so on. We will approve clauses 1 to 3 as one block right now.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I believe that once we leave clause 1, one cannot talk in generalities on the bill. Is that not correct? One has to then speak on the clause.

The Deputy Chairman: This is true, but the Chair was just trying to be helpful. We will continue with clause 1, the hon. member for Beaches—Woodbine.

Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, while on clause 1, I want to make reference to the war veterans allowance.

As the minister knows, funds are fairly tight at the present time in the federal government and any further drain on benefits available under legislation affecting veterans is of concern to all of us.

Is the minister aware that, three days before Remembrance Day, there are some 40 commissionaires, who are all veterans and who work at the Toronto Pearson International Airport, who have been given termination of employment notices? I understand that these notices have been given to more commissionaires across the country. Is the minister aware of what the drain will be on the war veterans allowance for these elderly veterans who will no longer be employed by the federal government because of cutbacks?

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member did give me notice of this. Unfortunately, it was well into the middle of Question Period and I was preoccupied by many other problems during that time, as he might well imagine. I did try to find out more about it by sending out for information.

I am told that the Corps of Commissionaires have a contract with the RCMP and the RCMP has indicated that, due to budget problems, it is not going to renew the contracts for a certain part of that. While it is regrettable, I will undertake to pursue the matter with the Solicitor General to see if we can get more details about it.

Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine): I appreciate the minister's response, Mr. Chairman, which is in the tradition of veterans affairs ministers around here. I would simply encourage him to do that, to lessen the anxiety that these veterans have at the present time.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a quick point that the minister may want to examine. The Corps of Commissionaires and all security services are the responsibility of the Department of Transport. The Department of Transport has delegated the handling of the Corps of Commissionaires to the RCMP, but it is still the responsibility of the Department of Transport and I do not think they should get that kind of treatment.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I would like to advise the House that the Minister of Veterans Affairs did tell me that the matter was going to be raised. We certainly appreciated the notice, because it gave us an opportunity to do a quick investigation into the situation.

I should tell my hon. friend at this moment it is my personal opinion, and I will get to it one of these days, that a lot more work could be done around airports by commissionaires than the RCMP. That happens to be a view I hold. However, from the security aspect of it, the RCMP in its wisdom uses commissionaires, which I fully encourage. I do not know anything more than the specifics which the hon. minister gave to the House. As has been indicated, we will certainly look into it further.

• (1650)

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

On Clause 4

The Deputy Chairman: We have an amendment to clause 4.

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Chairman, I believe you will receive the unanimous consent of the Committee of the Whole to include all of those ten amendments to be read automatically into the motion amending clauses as we come to them. So, we would assume Clause 4 would read "Clause 4 as amended".

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 4, as amended, carry?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Clause 4, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 5 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: There are two amendments to Clause 8. Shall the clause, as amended, carry?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Clause 8, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 9 to 14 inclusive agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: There is an amendment to Clause 15. Shall the clause, as amended, carry?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Clause 15, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 16

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Chairman, we have had discussions, of course, with the veterans groups as we indicated prior to the introduction of this bill. This was meant to cover all aspects of retroactivity. The veterans groups indicated some concern with that. We think that, because of their concern, it would be better at this time that we delete Clauses 16 and 24. The government will vote against Clauses 16 and 24 since amendments are not in order.

The Deputy Chairman: Are Clauses 16 and 24 negatived on division?

Mr. Benjamin: Let us get unanimous consent first. If it is withdrawn, we have to have a vote.

The Deputy Chairman: Let us do it this way. Is Clauses 16, first, negatived on division?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Clause 16 negatived.

Clauses 17 to 23 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 24 negatived.

Clauses 25 to 27 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 28

The Deputy Chairman: On Clause 28, there is an amendment. Is the amendment agreed to?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 28, as amended, carry?

Clause 28, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 29

The Deputy Chairman: Clause 29 has an amendment. Is the amendment agreed to?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 29, as amended, carry?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Merrithew moved that the bill, as amended, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that we did a good stroke of business today. I want to assure the minister that the matters we raised earlier this day will not be dropped and he will be hearing about them some more.

I also want to thank the minister. He was kind enough to send me some notes to use for a response to his statement today. He does not know me well enough because no one has ever found me at a loss for words on any subject. It was a nice gesture for him to make. I did not use them, but maybe I will save them for next year.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the critics, particularly, and members of the House. I agree with the hon. member from Regina—Lumsden and with my critic from the Liberal Party, the member for Hillsborough, in whose riding my department resides. I thank them personally for their co–operation.

The veterans groups across Canada have watched very closely what has happened. I think we have shown them an exercise in consultation and listening. What we have done is good for them and good for their colleagues. I fully agree that, while we have not done everything we can do as yet, the eight new improvements we have announced since June and what is included in Bill C–87 will bode well for the welfare of Veterans.

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Regina—Lumsden said, we have done a lot of work in a short period of time. I believe we have a lot of good things here for the veterans. We have a lot more things that have to be worked on.

I am pleased that a study group has been established. I look forward to many of the meetings that this group will be having in the upcoming months and years to participate in this.

My feeling is that the number of veterans are decreasing. Therefore, the amounts of money should increase and more people should be receiving the benefits as time goes on for many of the problems they have had since the Korean War, particularly, the latest group of them. We have to look to the people who will be coming back from whatever takes place in the gulf and other areas that may continue. I just want to say that I appreciate having the opportunity to participate in this debate and in the Committee of the Whole today. We have accomplished much, but we have much, much further to go.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business, as listed on today's Order Paper.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, October 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine) that Bill C-225, an act to amend the Public Service Employment Act (staff of members of the House of Commons), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to rise and speak briefly on Bill C-225, which was brought to this House through the private members' system by the hon. member for Beaches—Woodbine.

This bill has a long and honourable history in that it goes back to 1984, when it was first introduced by the then member for Lachine, Rod Blaker. At that time, it came out of an all-committee discussion and was backed by members of all parties in that committee because there was a feeling that something had to be done with respect to the staff of members of Parliament, the people who work for MPs.

The motion was brought forward by the hon. member for Beaches—Woodbine to the committee. Again there was a recognition that certainly the situation had changed over the years in respect of the employment status of people who work for members of Parliament.

In years past, when there was a much smaller staff, there was a revolving pool of staff members here on the Hill and it operated like the Public Service does, except that they worked continuously in members' offices, worked for members from different parties and served as a pool of experienced people. A lot of their work was much less political, perhaps, than what it is today. It was basic research, secretarial, and so on.

With the increase in members' staffs, obviously there was a need to do something. The all-party committee recognized this and the hon. member for Beaches—Woodbine brought forward this motion. I think it has reached its intended objectives. It has forced members to focus on the whole question of staff relations here on the Hill, to look at how they are handling their own staff relations, how their caucus handles staff relations, and I think some very useful debate, inside and outside of the House, has occurred as a result of this bill having been put forward.

I think there is still broad support for the principles that motivated this bill. In other words, there needs to be some protection for workers who are employees of members of Parliament. In other words, they cannot simply be there, subject to the political whims and so on that are so much a part of this business and not even be able to avail themselves of the basic employment rights that members in any other sector, doing the same kind of work, would have with respect to working conditions and so on.

In consultation with the member for Beaches—Woodbine, it seemed to us that there had been some misunderstanding of the intent of this bill as shown by some of the references made by other members in the debate and other comment on this bill, that somehow or other its effect would be to entrench another level of privilege into the House of Commons system and that it might create some unfair advantages. In other words, the technical aspects of this bill had not been really solidly addressed.

I think the hon. member for Beaches—Woodbine drew attention to that in his remarks on October 16 when he said that there are some flaws in this bill and that he recognized that they can be corrected in committee. He said too that he recognized that there are some weaknesses in the language of the original bill as it was drafted in 1984. He said he would be prepared to work with the committee to strengthen the language in the bill. He said:

> I would hope that we could perhaps have some witnesses from the Public Service unions, even some members of the staff of members of the House of Commons, and any others who may be interested in having some input into making the bill say what it is we mean it to say.

My own perspective on the question with reference to the member for Beaches—Woodbine is that we are making it possible for the staff members of members of Parliament to be able to bargain collectively and to have recognition of their rights to do so.

We have attempted to do that within the New Democratic Party caucus. We like to think that we take that kind of thing seriously and we have tried hard to make it work. On balance, it surely can be said that our experience has been that the pluses have far outweighed the minuses. We are very happy with our experiment with collective bargaining for our staff members. We feel that it would certainly be useful to members of other caucuses to examine this concept as well.

In this day and age where there are all a lot of sophisticated bargaining techniques and contracts, the special circumstances which pertain to the people who work for members of Parliament can certainly be addressed in the collective bargaining context. What it needs is some legitimization through legislation.

There I would like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamloops:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:
> Bill C-22, an act to amend the Public Service Employment Act (staff of Members of the House of Commons) be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations.

I would ask all members to support this amendment.

Mr. David Bjornson (Selkirk—Red River): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise today to speak on the bill now before the House in this Private Members' hour. I am somewhat concerned about what the amendment actually will entail, and how far I should really go in my comments.

This is a bill to extend to the staff members of the House of Commons priority to be appointed to the Public Service. This priority will take effect when their employment is lost as a result of members of Parliament ceasing to be members of Parliament.

Unlike a number of bills which come forth during Private Members' hour, this is one which touches all of us directly in our roles as members of Parliament. Actually, it touches us in several ways and for this reason I would like to add a few remarks to the discussion today.

This particular piece of proposed legislation is designed to provide equitable treatment to all staff members of the House of Commons, that very noble and honourable staff that serves us both in our constituencies and here in Ottawa. That staff on many occasions serves as the hands on link between ourselves and those people we represent for this honourable House.

Before rising to make these remarks today, I thought very carefully about the stated principle underlying this bill, that of equity or equality of treatment. Indeed, the bill manifests to provide equitable treatment for the staffs of members of the House of Commons in relation to the treatment afforded to some parliamentary officers.

I asked myself if the reason such a priority was not afforded to the staff of the members of the House of Commons was that at the time of the legislation was put in place in 1966 and 1967, it was not foreseen that members of the House would have their own staffs.

While on the surface this may be appear to be the case, I cannot think of any point in Canadian history where a member of the House did not need staff back in the constituency, particularly at a time when transportation was not at the stage that it is today.

What may be different is that they were not formally recognized as staff. There is no question in my mind that the staff in my office, and indeed in the offices of other members of this House, are extremely competent people and would be an asset to the Public Service of Canada.

The question of equality of treatment again is one which is very prominent and prevalent in the minds of Canadians these days, as it has been for quite a while. We in this House are sometimes likened to those living in a fishbowl, subject to scrutiny from all sides and from top to bottom. One must ask how the public would perceive this proposal, and whether it would be seen not as an issue of providing equitable treatment but rather as a form of preferential treatment for a select group.

The issue of equality is an important one. However, I must note that I would be gravely concerned if, in an attempt to provide what one might call equity of treatment, the public were to view this as an attempt to provide preferential treatment under a different guise. The proposal would provide a priority for appointment to the Public Service without competition and in priority to almost every other person in Canada.

There is no question that we, as members of the House of Commons, owe the fact that we are where we are because of those who have served us so well and who continue to service us often times through successive elections and through successive sittings of the House. Indeed, there are some members of the House who have been in such roles for the last 20 to 25 years. As was noted today, there were four members honoured by the fact that they have had 25 consistent years here in the House.

To them, we have an ongoing debt of gratitude. What perplexes me, however, is the concern that, in attempting to provide this group with a provision that may be only a token of their worth, we might unwittingly expose them to unfair criticism for being privy to what some might call a "back door route" to the Public Service.

Is the provision of a priority for appointment to the Public Service the proper course, or is it that some changes to the provisions in the House of Commons staff rules might be more appropriate?

In the research that I have been able to do on this topic, I have not been able to determine with any certainty whether in the minds of the members of the House at the time the Public Service Employment Act was enacted, the reason that this priority was not extended to the staff of members of the House was because such staff was not officially recognized at that time.

I would note that when the legislation was enacted, there was an accompanying clause introduced in the legislation stating quite clearly—at least this appeared to be the statement at the time: "no employee shall (a) engage in work for, on behalf of or against a candidate for election as a member of the House of Commons,—or engage in work for, on behalf of or against a political party;".

I do not want to dwell on this point because I understand that this particular section of the Public Service Employment Act is currently under review in the Supreme Court. I only wish to indicate that over the past few years, Public Service unions have put considerable pressure on the government to loosen the restrictions on the political activities of public servants.

Indeed, our government is on record as supporting the view that any restrictions on the political activities of public servants should be no greater than are necessary to maintain a politically neutral Public Service. The challenge to date has been to determine just where that boundary lies.

The section of the Public Service Employment Act enacted in 1967, that the bill before us today proposes to amend, represented a major step forward in opening the way for federal public servants to participate in the political process.

This legislation was based on the recommendations of a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate on employer-employee relations in the federal public service. While retaining the restrictions on working for, on behalf of, or against a political party or candidate for election, the legislation specified that an employee did not contravene the prohibition by attending a political meeting or by contributing money to the fund of a political party or of a candidate.

I would like to draw my remarks to a close with the observation that over time in Canada, restrictions were placed on the ability of public servants to participate in the political process. The restrictions imposed today are fewer than they were in the earlier days of the Civil Service Act, although even these have been the subject of challenge.

The rationale for restrictions has also evolved from being an attempt to remove a form of patronage to addressing the concern that involvement in political activity by public servants would call into question by the public and by political and administrative superiors the confidence in the integrity and impartiality of of the Public Service from the development end through to delivery.

We in Canada have come a long way in this area. There is absolutely no doubt in my mind that the loyal staff who have served me so well and continue to do so would and could, if they determined to pursue a career in the Public Service, do so in a manner which will bring credit upon the service and upon themselves.

It would trouble me greatly if the credit that these people so deservedly merit were to be denied them on the grounds, however unsubstantiated, that they gained entry to the Public Service of Canada through what some people have called the back door route.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have just reviewed the amendment to the Public Service Employment Act. The debate is on the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to a bill which I think is absolutely gross, and that is the amendment to the Public Service Employment Act proposed by my colleague from the New Democratic Party.

Bill C-225 proposes to amend the Public Service Employment Act and give to members' staff certain rights and privileges which Public Service employees do not enjoy.

I think this is positively intriguing, to say the least, and it makes me wonder about the principles of the New Democratic Party which is always talking about defending the rights of workers, and then all of a sudden they blatantly ignore this principle.

We are managers and, in fact, the most senior public servants, since we make decisions concerning the Public Service. And here we are, giving our own staff preferential treatment!

Mr. Speaker, I think this is an aberration!

[English]

Like those of my colleagues who have spoken before me, I have the greatest regard for the staff of members of Parliament, especially my own. We are not easy to work with. Our schedules are very demanding. There are the many added stresses brought on by rushed deadlines and the need to serve a large number of constituents with a great variety of problems.

Having said this, I must also recognize the tremendous effort of Canada's public servants, many of whom live in my riding of Carleton—Gloucester.

The act governing appointments to the Public Service is presently known as the Public Service Employment Act. It was enacted almost 22 years ago and may not be entirely relevant today. However, it has proven to be an act which has guaranteed that the Public Service remains neutral and free from political intervention. I believe that Canada is a tremendous role model in this regard. As governments change and new ministers head different departments, it is reassuring that they are given unbiased and politically unblemished information about the affairs of state.

There are three conditions mentioned in the bill for former employees of members to obtain priority without competition.

[Translation]

Without competition, I think that is totally unacceptable. This is even more surprising, coming from a party that is constantly bragging about defending the rights of workers. And now they turn around and deny their own Public Service fair treatment. I think this is grossly unfair.

The conditions for eligibility would be as follows:

[English]

The person must have been an employee of the Public Service immediately before becoming an employee of a member of Parliament. While being employed in the office of a member of Parliament, the employee must have qualified for appointment under the Public Service Employment Act. The employee must have been employed by a member of Parliament for at least three years. I say, so what? What is this all about?

• (1720)

This is preferential treatment! This is not right, and it is unfair, as far as I am concerned.

[English]

It is my contention that, even if all these preconditions are fulfilled, giving these very dedicated employees such preferential treatment goes completely against the idea that an employee of the Public Service will be given his or her due reward because of merit.

As well, there is something that I believe some other members who have spoken to the bill have missed. Those of our employees who seek entry into the Public Service of Canada, following being employed by us, would be insulted to think that they would need preferential treatment. I have asked employees of members of Parliament, including my own, and they tell me that they can take the heat, that they can take the competition, that they are qualified. They have said that they would go to the race track in terms of the competition and stand in line with everyone else. They were absolutely insulted with the suggestion that they would need help, preferential treatment, political push to get into another job.

There is also a problem here with public perception. This is a difficult time for all politicians. The public would and should not stand for this. Opening the door to parliamentary assistants without competition—can you imagine that, Mr. Speaker—would be seen as an extension of the powers of members of Parliament. We must not be seen as just looking after our own——the New Democratic Party seems to want to do. They are trying to protect their people. But what are they doing to protect the workers who got jobs through competitions? I think this attitude is entirely wrong.

[English]

These are tough economic times. Many Canadians are looking for work. One of the ways in which the Public Service Commission has dealt with this government downsizing policy and the disastrous effect which it has had on employees is the work force adjustment policy. How will it seem to Public Service employees made redundant by the present Conservative government when our own employees are allowed to have jobs before those who have been let go because of bad government policy?

Some of my colleagues may make the argument that these conditions addressed in this bill already exist in ministers' offices, as well as in the office of the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons and the Senate. I submit that two wrongs do not make a right. This government patronage policy is wrong. Let us not extend it further by letting the NDP have this odd way of proceeding—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the hon. member has another minute or so, I will recognize him after we return from Royal Assent.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (1730 )

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine) that Bill C-225, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act (staff of Members of the House of Commons), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and on the amendment of Mr. Funk (p. 15352).

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for allowing me to continue my remarks as I object to this NDP bill suggesting a double standard with regard to the hiring of Public Service employees.

[English]

The Public Service of Canada is presently embarking on an initiative called Public Service 2000. It has been criticized for not having taken into account the ideas of employees' representatives. Let us not make another mistake by allowing the Public Service Employment Act to be amended and benefits such as these extended without a thorough investigation of all the ramifications included in the bill by parliamentary committee.

In closing, I would like to add that in no way do I wish to downplay the importance of our own employees at work on the Hill or in our ridings. But let it not be at the expense of a dedicated professional and non-partisan Public Service. Surely there must be more fair and creative ways of dealing with the future of those who work so diligently for members of Parliament. The normal route to a position in the Public Service is a competition based on merit. We must not impose any impediments to this process by attempting to do something for one group. I feel we are neglecting the rights of others and at the same time insinuating that our former employees are not educated, professional and motivated enough to obtain employment in a fair competition.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricardo Lopez (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate which I feel is very important because it deals with our own staff, the staff of Members of the House of Commons. I wish first of all to congratulate the Hon. Member for Beaches—Woodbine for introducing Bill C-225.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the staff of the Members of the House of Commons are de facto public servants. The fact is that, more often than not, they are already hired and considered as such, except that they do not enjoy the same security as Public Service employees.

Mr. Speaker, we must be prompted by a sense of fairness and justice. Not so long ago, as members of the House, we granted ourselves some benefits, unquestionably well-deserved—and unquestionably also far from what we should get, when we compare our duties as parliamentarians with those of businessmen and professionals. It seems to me, therefore, that we deserve a better pay equity, and probably better job security and a better pension scheme as well.

Now, since we must decide that what is not good for us is not good either for our neighbour, and what is good for us is also good for our neighbour, we must realize that very often, if not always, the performance level of an hon. member depends to a large extent on the performance level of his or her personnel. Mr. Speaker, there is not a single member in this House who although well-intentioned could do a very good job, unless he or she has the dedicated support of a qualified and competent staff.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute to my staff who so far have provided me with invaluable service. Very often, no mention is made of their contribution. As members of this House, we get all the benefits and honours, while our staff are really doing the job.

Consequently, if we really want to be fair and if we want to obtain the same treatment and security for our staff that we want for ourselves, it seems to me that Bill C-225 goes a long way toward correcting this inequity. If we think that our staff are already doing the same job as Public Service employees, it seems to me that they should be granted certain privileges or benefits.

After three years, an employee in the Public Service of Canada is automatically granted permanent status. So why should the same treatment not be given to the staff of parliamentarians? It seems to me this would make it easier for us to hire better qualified people who would feel more secure and work harder still. In short, that would enhance the quality of our own work as members.

Keep in mind that our employees have family responsibilities just like we do. They have to earn a living and pay monthly bills as we do. Before deciding to work for a member or seek employment elsewhere they have to take a number of factors into account, such as how much they will be paid, how secure their job will be and what happen if they can no longer work for this or that member as a result of an electoral defeat or some other event. Let us be frank about it, these employees are at our mercy. It is very easy for any member to sack an employee, for he or she can be laid off practically overnight with little or no recourse.

In the name of fairness and equity, Mr. Speaker, I support Bill C-25.

I am sure that if all members of the House were to consider the matter very carefully they would have to reach the same conclusion.

If we expect our employees to be dedicated, industrious and fully supportive, and when the time comes to hire new staff and we want to get the best available, Mr. Speaker, we will have to offer them a minimum of security. The money they earn is not all that much! They certainly cannot expect to become rich after a few years, let alone retire without a worry in the world.

But at least, Mr. Speaker, if I may put it that way, we should have the decency and compassion to make sure that they can look further than the next electoral campaign. The employee should at least know for sure that if his boss is defeated or fires him—again that is another possibility—he will not be left pounding the pavement, he will have something else to do. He should be safe in the knowledge that he can find employment in a related field, because the work they do for members is similar to yet different from the duties of public servants.

A moment ago I heard one of my colleagues say that it is unfair because our employees do not have to go through competitions or screenings and write exams. Of course they do. Mr. Speaker! The screening is done by the member. Before hiring a prospective employee, the member examines his work credentials and his background. Otherwise would it not be like saying the member lacks judgment? That is what it boils down to! The hon. member said that he could not see that because these employees were not administered exams like the others to evaluate their skills. That is to say that he cannot be the judge of that because he is the one who did the hiring.

It seems a little contradictory to me, Mr. Speaker. Why disagree if we consider ourselves as intelligent—I think we are—and fair employers! So, the test already took place, at the time the member decided to hire the employee. Therefore, the employee who passed the test successfully then will not be less intelligent the day he or she is laid-off.

There is another point to consider, Mr. Speaker, and it is that these employees, our employees, share our emotions. Sometimes, they work 40 or 45 hours a week, although they are paid for 30. I know for a fact that my employees are still at work as we speak, Mr. Speaker, while civil servants went home an hour or two ago. Why not recognize the contribution they are making to our country?

Mr. Speaker, the fact that a bill was introduced by the government or by an opposition member should be irrelevant. We should set aside partisanship and consider this bill on its merits instead of rejecting it on the sole ground that it was introduced by an opposition member. That would be the equitable way of dealing with it, Mr. Speaker.

I wish therefore to propose a small amendment, if I may. I know that perfection is impossible and that this bill is not perfect, but I believe the following amendment—and it will be the only one—is relevant. I am against increasing government expenditures when a number of civil servants are already being paid to do nothing. These resources should be used before hiring people from our offices. With this small amendment, the bill would be perfectly satisfactory to me. In closing, I invite my collegues to support this bill in the name of fairness.

[English]

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton—York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon to participate in this debate.

I would like to commence by paying tribute to my own staff. This bill is about providing some measure of protection or priority for the future careers of staff who support members of Parliament. I would have to say, knowing the insecurity of political life from my own point of view and as all hon. members will acknowledge, we do not always look to the future with a great sense of security.

That same position and that same concern is obviously one which is in the minds of our staff much of the time. Yet, to their credit, certainly in the case of my own staff, it is a subject that has been discussed at the time of their employment. They know in the beginning that there is a sense of insecurity to political life and they have accepted that risk as they have accepted the job.

Having said that, I would say that both here in Ottawa and in my constituency, in Fredericton, I feel blessed with the services of four people who serve me well, but more particularly, who serve my constituency and my constituents extremely well.

The subject of employment in the Public Service and the establishment of any kind of priority for any person in terms of seeking a Public Service job must be underlined with the fact that there is no activity in a constituency office—certainly in my constituency office—that is so numerous and takes more time than attempting to serve those requests from citizens who are seeking employment. The days when politicians could point people in the direction of jobs or could engineer employment are properly gone. Employment in the Public Service today is an open and competitive process where merit counts above all other circumstances. In my view, that is the way it should be.

It is with some sense of apprehension and concern that I would stand and address this bill. I am concerned, on the one hand, that I would offend my own employees and all who serve members of Parliament so well by being reluctant to support a position of priority for them in their circumstances. On the other hand, this is balanced by the responsibility I have to so many citizens who desire to work in government services and who do not have the opportunity and to whom I have to say daily that I cannot provide that opportunity directly. The best I can do is to serve as a reference or help process their application to ensure that they are instructed in the right way to approach government service.

My apprehension about this bill comes from the general principle underlying the proposal and, more particularly, the details of the bill. I have no quarrel with the basic original intent, but I have considerable misgivings about the way in which the bill has now been expanded.

What was the original intent of the bill? The original intent of the bill has merit. We all feel a sense of responsibility to our employees and the fact that they are in a very insecure position. When we compare that sense of responsibility and that desire to provide some direction for their future, it must be compared with what has currently been drafted. As I read that intent in the explanatory note of this bill, the amendment seems to target a very specific group.

The original intent targeted those with long service on the Hill on behalf of members. Those people, when their member ceases to be a member by virtue of resignation, death, or defeat at the polls, are no longer in a position to be employable. For people who have such long service, there is a very special case. The original proposal, as I understood it, was to afford a measure of protection to those long service staffers. They would then have some facilitation for their possible entry into the Public Service, providing they were appropriately qualified.

If the intent of this bill is to continue to afford such a measure to protection to such people, then I would continue to support that intent. However, I feel that this bill has become far more sweeping in its content and has gone far beyond what was originally intended.

The concept of a person employed in the office of a member of the House of Commons is not defined. I think we would all presume that reference is to members, staff here in Ottawa. It could just as easily be employees who are in the constituency office. This does not appear to be clearly specified and there is a need for clarity there.

I believe that to see persons who have served members and constituents for only three years as necessarily deserving a fast track into the Public Service seems like a very short time.

• (1750 )

Worded as the bill is at present, the member's employee with only three years and one month of service to that member would automatically get priority for appointment to the Public Service. That would be not only over other public servants and other Canadians, but even over career public servants of perhaps 20 or 25 years who had suffered the unfortunate circumstance of a lay-off.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the government in the past five or six years has deliberately at the request of Canadians, cut the size of the Public Service, cut the cost of government, and in the process eliminated well over 12,000 permanent jobs. There are many public servants who today are in that lay-off position with supposed priority for re-entry into the Public Service. It does not seem fair that a staffer in the office of a member of Parliament would automatically have priority over those long service employees who have been caught in the unfortunate vagaries of the downsizing of the Public Service.

Again, what does the bill mean when it talks of an employee? Lacking a better definition one must do what the courts of this land do and revert to the dictionary. There, Webster states that it is a person who is employed by another, usually for wages or salary, and in a position below the executive level.

Reverting to the bill's original intent, I have little doubt that the concept was intended for members who have been full-time, permanent, 40 hours a week, in the service of a member here on the Hill. As it reads at the moment, however, a person who has only been working one day a week, or for that matter, perhaps even a few hours a week in a member's office, would be eligible for this priority. Once again, that does not seem fair and certainly requires clarity and elaboration.

What does the word "entitlement" mean?

Mr. Funk: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I hesitate to interrupt the member mid-flight, but I would like to point out to him, as I am sure he might have forgotten, that we are debating an amendment at this point which in fact withdraws this bill and refers it to a committee where the principles can be discussed, but where the objectionable aspect—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sure the hon. member realizes that. I am also sure that he will speak to that.

Mr. Bird: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am moving my case in that direction, and I appreciate the intervention of the hon. member.

The very fact that there are so many areas of clarification required brings me to the point that I do not think merely referring it to a committee and then bringing it back is adequate. I believe this bill needs a lot more attention, philosophically and in all kinds of detail.

In closing, I would like to recap some of the serious flaws that I have identified—and I hope you will give me time for the interruption that has occurred in my otherwise quite well organized remarks.

First, I feel that the original intent behind this proposal has become muddied and widened far beyond what was originally conceived, and I do not think an amendment to review it in committee would be a sound approach.

Second, I would like it clarified that this priority only becomes operative when the member by whom the affected individual is employed ceases, for whatever reason, to be a member. It should not be accessible by someone who has simply resigned or, in the extreme case, by someone who has been discharged for laziness, incompetence, or other misconduct.

Third, I believe this bill would only be applicable if it referred specifically to the Ottawa-based staff of members and, yet, as I think about that, I am not so sure that those who give their long service in the constituency should not also be considered. Again, I believe that perhaps it is more than just mere amendment and review that is required. The entire philosophy deserves some rethinking.

Fourth, I believe the concept of long service needs greater emphasis. Not only is the three-year qualification far too short, but under section 4.1(a) and 4.1(b), even this does not seem to be required.

Fifth, and I am coming to the end, I believe the concept of who is and who is not an employee requires clarification. To afford such protection to a person who has maintained only the most casual connection albeit for a three-year basis, would, in my opinion be intolerable.

Sixth, I have serious problems with the level of priority and the place of the proposed priority within the current priorities. In this regard I have two specific points to make. First, I would like to see this new priority given the lowest of the statutory priority considerations if the bill is passed, and, second, I would want the entitlement to be entitlement for consideration and not an entitlement for appointment.

To strike the balance between the intent and the bill, as it is presented, would be very difficult. There are employees representing us in the House of Commons who do deserve protection, priority, and understanding, but their experience should count in the final analysis and that should serve them well. Last, Mr. Speaker, we have to think of the other citizens of Canada, many of whom are in search of careers in the Public Service. For them the process is difficult, open, and competitive and that is the way it should be.

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in the debate. I am a member of the privileges and elections committee, the same committee that made this bill votable. I would like for a brief moment or two to go over the process of choosing a private members' bill and in fact what private members' hour is all about, including what we are trying to achieve and what McGrath suggested we try to achieve through the reforms to the House of Commons.

As you know, we draw by putting members' names into a draw bin. If they have a bill or a motion we put their name into two separate draw bins. We draw one for bills and one for motions. We draw ten for each and we make three votable.

We made this one votable because we felt that it was correcting an oversight in 1967 when members did not have any staff. Many members were concerned about this. It was done on a non-partisan basis, basically to bring forward the issue for debate and discussion. It has been the subject of healthy debate.

As you know this bill was originally introduced by a Liberal member in 1984, debated, the election came and it died on the Order Paper. It now has been reintroduced by a New Democratic member of Parliament.

It is ironic that the New Democrats wanted this bill to come forward for a vote at the committee and now they are backing off a little bit saying, "let us refer it to committee to discuss the over-all principle". I would assume they are facing pressure from the unions.

One other thing I would like to comment on is that when private members' bills and motions reach the House of Commons they are not perfect. They are meant to come to a vote on the principle and then be repaired or fixed up in a committee. Of course this one, as the hon. member just enumerated, has many flaws, including putting members' staff at the top of the priority list. I accept his recommendation that maybe they should be put at the bottom of the priority list. Perhaps what we are seeking is that they not be given priority but consideration in the draw or consideration for jobs when they come up.

For example, we have a computer bank in the Public Service and for each job opportunity five or eight names are drawn. Perhaps we could put members' staff in among those five or eight names so they would have to go through the competition process. But they would at least get to the competition. I think that is what we want to see.

All bills that have previously come before this House and previously gone to a legislative committee have had extensive amendments. In fact some would argue that some of the bills have not been very recognizable when they came back to the House.

That is the process of private members' hour and it is a healthy process. The Hon. James McGrath in presenting the McGrath committee reforms, of which this government accepted many, wanted private members to have more input, which they do.

The second point I would like to make is that members' staff make a tremendous contribution to the House of Commons and to the Parliament of Canada in the service of public policy. Most members' staff would be an asset in the Public Service and the way this bill is worded it would be upon death or defeat. So very few would get that far. So we are not talking about crowding out civil servants. In fact I would submit that we do not want to crowd out any civil servants.

Mr. Speaker, I know the time of adjournment is approaching and I would like to continue on at the next hour for private members' bills.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member will have seven minutes remaining in the debate when the bill comes up again.

The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 96(3), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

• (1800 )

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

GOVERNMENT INFORMATION SYSTEMS

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I asked a question of the Minister of Supply and Services concerning the Auditor General's report and the 14 points that he put forth touching on the security of our computers, the information that we have in the memory bank of all our computers. The answer that the minister gave me obviously did not suit me, which is why I am here today. I could not let this go by without bringing to his attention some very important facts about the whole matter.

I do not pretend in any way to be an expert in this field; far from it. It is highly complex and I know it is a very expensive system to operate. You do not need a college degree to realize the way the computer systems are set up with the memory banks that we have, the data base, and all the rest of it is highly complex and very expensive.

However, I have to draw to the attention of the government some points that are very important. After I heard the minister, I was in touch with a gentleman who is a recognized expert in the field. Of course, we looked at this very objectively and as you will see, Mr. Speaker, from the points I am bringing out, it is standard procedure in a way.

To begin with, I must say that after looking at the Auditor General's report, there is an element of neglect here, negligence if I may say so; negligence because it has been over five years that the Auditor General has been bringing attention to the fact that with all the data banks we have, it could literally cripple the operation of the government overnight if some kind of accident was to occur. Not necessarily all services could be affected, but a great number could be very much affected. It could cripple our whole system and it could be extremely expensive to get it back on track.

The reason why there is this negligence is the fact that there has been such a low priority given to the security aspect of our data banks. We have to remember today that more and more of our computer whizzes are out there and we are dealing with a lot of anonymous people who are becoming more and more capable with this computer age.

One term that the expert gave me was what he called the logical entrance whereby some people can actually get into a government data base, change the information that is in the data base on a particular individual, add information that is not there and should not be there obviously, or else simply take all the information in the data base and put it in their own memory bank. Needless to say, there is a question of confidentiality at play here and there is reason to be concerned. Those are the things that can happen, and it is a fact. I did not invent all this. This is a fact.

The expert said to me basically as it stands right now, it is as if we gave the keys to anybody passing by who knows how to operate a door. Therefore, with the lack of security we have, it would not be difficult to break into a lot of our data base information. That is factual. You would have to admit that if that is the case, it is not a very good management principle.

Look at our financial institutions. They manipulate a tremendous amount of information, highly confidential and they have taken upon themselves to have the best security possible. Still they manage to make money.

Obviously, there is a set standard that could be set up to protect the data bases that we have in the government; very important.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, after demonstrating the negligence in this area, and I am not saying the government is fully responsible, because the problem may go back ten years, but for the past five years the Auditor General has said the situation cannot go on like this.

I spoke to an expert, and I told him: I don't want a complex answer, I want to keep it very simple, but according to you—he had read the Auditor General's report and he was aware there was some lack of security— he made the following suggestions:

[English]

To begin with, he said we should have set standards of security. This could be done over a period of five years. Set standards, followed by a workable plan not too far in the future but within a reasonable amount of time. A work plan.

That should be approached, and it should be looked into immediately by our senior management in the government, especially Treasury Board because it holds the strings.

There is no doubt that it could be expensive business. Nevertheless, there is a work plan that could be out. We could do it over a period of time because security is the cost of doing business.

Finally, we have to remember that all this information is an asset. All the information is government asset. There is the old saying in French:

[Translation]

"Celui qui possède l'information possède le pouvoir".

Finally, Mr. Speaker, and very briefly, I do not think we should criticize without offering alternatives, but we must have a plan and deal with the problem before mistakes are made that may cost us very dearly and cause Canadians to have some very serious doubts about the security of our information.

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to respond to the question put by the hon. member for Gatineau—La Lièvre about government information systems.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, in response to the concern raised by the Auditor General in the past year, the department has taken the issue very seriously and moved to create the information management sector within the department.

This sector oversees the secure handling and storage of the government's data banks. We have moved to create a secure regime. This is not mentioned in the report.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the security of our computer systems is extremely important to the Department of Supply and Services and to all government departments and agencies. I can assure the House and Canadians that very strict security measures have been taken to keep any risk or damage to our systems to an absolute minimum.

Increasingly, detailed emergency plans have been provided to ensure maintenance of the government's daily operations, in case of computer failure.

Mr. Speaker, I fully understand the hon. member's concerns. Computers now play an important role in our daily lives, and we are increasingly aware of the potential damage that could be caused by pirates and viruses.

However, although I understand his concerns, I think the hon. member should realize that security measures are in place to prevent any violation of the confidentiality and integrity of the full range of information processed by the government.

Mr. Speaker, as was previously mentioned in this House by the Minister of Supply and Services, there are regular security checks, not only of computers in government offices but also in the offices of businesses that deal with the government. Furthermore, as the minister also pointed out, only very low level intelligence or information that represents a very low security risk may be processed outside government offices.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in stating before this House and before all Canadians that both government facilities and those of our suppliers are checked regularly and that security levels are maintained. Mr. Speaker, perhaps the fact that there has never been any serious damage to our systems reflects the effectiveness of our security policy and its successful implementation throughout our government services.

THE CITIZENS' FORUM ON THE FUTURE OF CANADA

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me on a current issue of great concern to Canadians. I am referring of course to the new commission, the Citizens' Forum, chaired by Mr. Keith Spicer. Made up of twelve members, this commission will be listening to the comments of Canadians on the future of our country.

In the House last Tuesday, November 5, I put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister to find out whether or not additional people would be appointed to the commission, the better to represent all Canadians who, like me for instance, felt somewhat left out in the make-up of the famous commission.

As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, in one of my questions to the government I enquired if there was room for people north of the 60th parallel, Canadian men and women who we all know are very ably represented here by my colleagues from Nunatsiaq and Western Arctic. I also asked: Is there room for francophones outside Quebec? Is there room on that commission to listen to the million Canadians who live outside Quebec and whose mother tongue happens to be French, an official language of this country? I also asked the Deputy Prime Minister if we could expect to see a wider spectrum of representatives of ethnic groups, because I think that is important when close to one third of our country is made up of new immigrants, Canadians who represent a rather large variety of world cultures and languages, so as I said I think it is important that these people as well be consulted about the future of this country. I was told that no one else could be added to the membership of the Citizens' Forum.

Well, the very next Sunday, before the National Convention of Italian Canadians in Toronto, the Prime Minister said that there might be room for additional appointments. I was rather surprised because of what I had been told a few days before. Yet, the Prime Minister had said: "Yes, there is room for additional appointments."

Later on, we learned that Chairman Spicer himself had been reported as confirming the statement made by the Deputy Prime Minister and the Secretary of State the previous day that there would be no new members. So, my question tonight to the Parliamentary Secretary is this: Are there going to be additional appointments to the Citizens' Forum? Could we have a clear, straightforward and precise answer to this question?

Second, how come the commission will not report to Parliament? It was a very specific question. Does the appointment of this commission means also that the government has abandonned its plans for reform? The House will remember that following the Oka incidents last Summer, the government had made the firm commitment to set up a commission to look into and possibly settle the land claims of our native citizens. Now we hear that the government has decided to put these concerns on the backburner while the Spicer Commission is sitting. My question to the Parliamentary Secretary is this: Is it true that the government is going to set aside these concerns which he feels are justified, for an indefinite period.

Third question: Is this new Spicer Commission a substitute for the commission this Tory government has promised on native affairs? We want to hear a straightforward yes or no. This way, the Natives and I will know where we stand.

Also, could the parliamentary secretary indicate if, with the setting up of this commission, we can expect in this country a reform of our institutions? For instance, would it be possible for the Senate, a major concern for a number of Canadians, to become a better Senate, the elected one we want, or will we still have to wait until the commission has completed its study?

Mr. Speaker, these questions stem from the appointement of this commission. I would not want the parliamentary secretary to answer all my questions tonight, but I should be quite satisfied if he could answer at least a couple of them.

[English]

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the address by the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier.

A suggestion is being made that the advisory group be expanded by the addition of members from the north, from ethnic communities and from francophone minorities outside of Quebec. Perhaps from other groups as well.

I am sorry to have to say that the question betrays a failure to understand the innovative process the government has launched. The hon. member seems to have missed the point.

The key is that it is a citizens' forum in fact as well as in name. The word "citizen", and I will repeat "citizen", cannot be stressed too strongly. The forum is not intended to be an arena where elite representatives can debate once again among themselves. It is something quite different, a place where individual Canadians can speak out and engage in a dialogue among themselves. It is a place where individual Canadians can contribute their insight and their dreams in mapping a new national consensus.

As the Prime Minister pointed out when he announced in this House on November 1, the forum is an initiative for the people and of the people. I repeat, as the Prime Minister said, for the people and of the people.

This means that the 11 members of the advisory group are not there to represent a particular group. That is not the basis on which it is formed. They were chosen as distinguished Canadians who are committed to helping their fellow citizens to chart the path of Canada's future. This is why they are members of the advisory group. I would add that it is interesting that members selected on their basis of many ways do reflect, individually and collectively, Canada's diversity.

Their job is to listen and to facilitate a productive dialogue, not to defend the barricades on behalf of linguistic, ethnic, regional or other blocs. When they speak, they speak as Canadians sensitive to our unity as much as to our diversity.

The Prime Minister did indicate over the weekend that he was prepared to consider expanding the advisory group. He would listen carefully to any recommendations from Mr. Spicer that additional members be appointed. Surely, that is a normal procedure. If Mr. Spicer came back and said "We need more people", the Prime Minister would be duty bound to give that very serious consideration.

Canadians would expect that the Prime Minister do whatever was necessary to make the citizens' forum work. Mr. Spicer has now said publicly that he does not foresee a need for additional members. He points out, as I have tried to do, that the advisers do not hear as specific representatives of their community, but more as good listeners and communicators. I want to emphasize as good listeners. It was quoted in The Citizen November 7, so the question is now purely academic.

It should be clear for all that I have said—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the hon. member's time has expired.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to return to the issues I raised with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on September 24. One of those issues was the land question of Oka—Kanesatake.

• (1820)

I had asked the minister that day about the status of the land which the government had acquired over the summer which was supposed to be transferred to the Mohawk people of Kanesatake. At the time I asked the question the land which had been bought was still in the hands of the government. My point, then, was that it has not yet been turned over to the Mohawk people. My point is still valid. The land still has not been turned over to the Mohawk people of Kanesatake.

Only two days ago, the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs announced he was prepared to begin negotiations with the Kanesatake Mohawk negotiating committee. We, on this side of the House, welcome that announcement. It has been a long time coming.

As I have said on earlier occasions in this House, we wish the land issue at Kanesatake could have been settled without the violence we witnessed this summer. We wish the government would have made such an announcement in the spring of this year. Had it done so, the whole ugly episode of arms and soldiers in Oka and Kahnawake could have been avoided.

Nevertheless, at least some kind of process is beginning now; and I stress beginning. There is a long way to go with these negotiations. Land, housing, economic development, community infrastructure and self-government are among the agenda items.

We want these negotiations to start soon. We want them to go well. We hope that the government will conduct itself in these negotiations with fairness and justice. We want a just and fair resolution of this issue for the Mohawk people of Kanesetake. We want a just and fair settlement of the entire land claim of the Mohawk people of Kanesatake, which, as the government knows, encompasses much more than the 97 acres the government acquired this summer.

My question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on September 24 dealt as well with the government's general approach and attitude to aboriginal issues and aboriginal rights. I asked how we could be assured that the government would follow through on its promised aboriginal agenda, given its record of broken promises and unfulfilled obligations.

In recent days, doubt and confusion have surrounded the government's commitment to aboriginal issues. On September 25, the Prime Minister announced his government's new aboriginal agenda. That agenda, in his words, has four main pillars: land claims, the economic and social conditions on reserves, the relationship between aboriginal peoples and governments, and concerns of Canada's aboriginal peoples in contemporary Canadian life.

On November 1, the Prime Minister announced the establishment of the Citizens' Forum on Canada's Future, headed by Keith Spicer. There were no representatives from the northern territories appointed to the commission. Is it because, as the hon. member pointed out earlier, that this was a forum of distinguished Canadians? Is it because they could not find distinguished Canadians in the north? That is basically what he is saying.

The government has not listened to the appeals from this side of the House and from the north to appoint a northern resident to this commission. Once again, the north has been ignored. As I pointed out, the Prime Minister was quite prepared to consider it because he was under pressure from a certain ethnic group after apologising about past wrongs.

This past weekend, the government's federal–provincial relations minister said there will be no royal commission on aboriginal issues while the Citizen's Forum is at work. This royal commission had been promised to aboriginal people last June by the Prime Minister to try and entice their support for the Meech Lake Accord. When the accord died, so did the promised royal commission. Now it is clear that it will not happen, at least while the Citizen's Forum is at work.

Despite the government's promise to accelerate the settlement of land claims, yesterday it closed the door on most of the Dene and Métis in the Northwest Territories. They then got into pressure tactics because the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs says that a freeze on development of land in the north Slave region will be lifted at the end of January. The development freeze was made to avoid jeopardizing the final land selection process. As soon as he announced that there would be not be any more negotiations, that land freeze was lifted. If that is not pressure tactics, then what is?

The government refuses to change its claims policy so that aboriginal people would no longer have to extinguish their aboriginal rights to achieve a settlement.

The government must recognize that there are serious problems with its comprehensive claims policy. These problems are not going to go away just because the government has agreed to negotiate more claims at a time, or because more resources will be devoted to these negotiations.

On this side of the House, we welcomed the Prime Minister's commitment to accelerate claim negotiations and devote more effort and resources to their settlement. But we were, and remain, skeptical about the extent of the commitment. We have heard such promises before. We have seen them broken. Not all the obstacles toward fair and just settlements have been removed.

The aspirations of aboriginal people in this country will continue to be frustrated unless the government shows, through real and positive action, that it is prepared to relinquish its control over the lives of aboriginal people.

Just to show the attitude of some of the members on the government side, two days ago the hon. member for Châteauguay announced that he was disappointed that the government paid $5.2 million to buy 39 hectares to give to the 750 Mohawks of the Kanesatake settlement. I agree that they should not have paid $5.2 million to the town. They should have given the land to the Mohawks, as well as pay $5.2 million for the use of that land over the last number of years.

This same hon. member also said: "The Indians are asking for three–quarters of Canada". I think that is being pretty generous.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member's words this evening, events of the past summer in Kanesatake have forced all Canadians to think deeply about their country and its future and about the values that we share as Canadians. We need to understand why things went wrong, and why desperate measures were taken to draw attention to issues that should have been settled through negotiations.

We have in our country a tradition of discussion, negotiation and compromise, a process that respects the views of others and recognizes that no one side has a monopoly on justice and virtue.

I want to remind members of the action that the government has taken recently. On Tuesday, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development announced that he has agreed to commence negotiations with the committee, composed of the coalition of Kanesatake community groups and, additionally, had invited the band council to name a representative to the community negotiating committee. This is a fulfilment of a commitment made during the crisis at Oka this summer. The minister met with the Honourable Christos Sirros, his Quebec counterpart, on November 2. Mr. Sirros indicated that Quebec is prepared to commence negotiations with the Kanesatake representatives and to express his willingness to allow representatives of the parish and municipality of Oka to be a part of the provincial negotiating contingent.

The federal government believes strongly that the community of Kanesatake, as a whole, must be a part of the decision-making and therefore a priority of the negotiators will be to develop a ratification process. Clearly, any agreement reached by the negotiators will be taken to the community for approval.

Items on the agenda will likely include the development of a unified land base for the Kanesatake community, including final disposition of the recently acquired 97 acres; the provision of housing, necessary community infrastructure and economic development at Kanesatake; the grievance of the Kanesatake Mohawks related to the former lands of the seigneury of the Lake of Two Mountains at Oka and, in particular, to the so-called "common lands"; and the development of self-government agreement with the Mohawks of Kanesatake.

The minister has introduced the chief federal negotiator, Bernard Roy, to convene the first meeting of the negotiators at the earliest possible date.

We are hopeful that the negotiations will lead to the agreements leading to peace and prosperity for the community of Kanesatake.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned, pursuant to order made on Wednesday, November 7, 1990, until Monday, November 19, 1990, at one o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

EDUCATION

POST-SECONDARY CREDITS

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider creating a regulating body, through Canadian post-secondary institutions or other national organization(s), and create a standard for the transfer of credits in post-secondary education in so far as:

(a) the credentials of foreign students to Canadian colleges and universities;

(b) students changing from one Canadian university to another and one college to another, as well as transferring from a college to a university program, and vice-versa;

(c) degree students enrolling in a graduate or second undergraduate program; and

(d) work experience, as it relates to the obtaining of a diploma or degree program in a Canadian college or university.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make as certain as I can that we understand this motion. It is really an attempt to get people to look at the transfer of credits from one institution to another, from one level to the other, as well as look at the work experience one acquires that may be utilized to obtain a diploma or degree.

It also attempts to address the whole question of having people from other countries come into this country with their diplomas and their degrees and making sure that they are treated in a rational way.

[Translation]

My main concern is to simplify, if at all possible, the process we have at this time, and there is more than one, there are several.

I want to be sure the substance of the motion is properly understood, and I will read it again:

[English]

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider creating a regulating body, through Canadian post-secondary institutions or other national organization(s), and create a standard for the transfer of credits in post-secondary education in so far as:

Let me deal with this first paragraph: "should consider creating a regulating body". What is intended is that the government assist in the setting up of a body that might look at issues such as:

(a) the credentials of foreign students to Canadian colleges and universities;

(b) students changing from one Canadian university to another and one college to another, as well as transferring from a college to a university program, and vice-versa;

(c) degree students enrolling in a graduate or a second undergraduate program; and

(d) work experience, as it relates to the obtaining of a diploma or degree program in a Canadian college or university.

After having discussed the motion with a number of people and after having reflected, if I had to rewrite it I would do two things: I would focus or accentuate even more than I have on the idea of acting as a catalyst, the idea of attempting to bring people together to see whether or not we can bring greater rationality and simplification to what exists now in order to reduce certain confusion and frustration being felt by those who are affected.

The second point I would look at is to broaden the whole notion of transfer to colleges and universities, as well to professional organizations and to trade organizations and associations.

The motion's intent is to act as a catalyst to bring about discussion or dialogue; to ensure a greater co-ordination and harmonization of efforts that are currently occurring; and to codify, if possible, the process or processes which we now have serving us. It is to clarify and to ensure greater fairness and equity in transfers of credits in all the areas I have mentioned and hopefully to define a process that people could follow so that they would know whether or not they have been treated as fairly and equitably as they feel they should have been.

What are the objectives?

• (1310 )

[Translation]

I really want to reduce, if at all possible, the confusion that exists outside educational institutions and try to introduce a rational element that would help us eliminate this confusion and simplify the process. I also want to reduce the frustration felt by the people involved who often don't understand why some provinces or institutions give certain credits, while others may or may not do so.

If at all possible, I also want to refine the existing process and reduce duplication. I want to make sure that courses are not repeated unnecessarily. I also would like to increase the credibility of the process itself and of all the people involved in these decisions and activities.

[English]

I recognize—and I want to stress it—the importance of accepting provincial constitutional responsibility in education. This motion in no way denies that or sets it aside.

I also want to recognize the importance of institutional autonomy, colleges and universities, as well as professional and trade organizations.

[Translation]

I do not question the autonomy or the responsibilities of the provinces and institutions that would be involved. However, I believe they could meet and collaborate more than they are doing now.

[English]

Let me talk about confusion, because basically that is the key here. I will give some examples.

As a former deputy minister, a former professor, a former business person, in fact, even now as a member of Parliament, I have often talked to students from other countries who felt that they had not been treated fairly. I did not obviously have a chance to look at every case, but I must confess that in a number of instances there were serious problems. From the information I had at my disposal I could easily conclude there were people who attempted to transfer their diplomas to other colleges and others, their university degrees to our universities. As well, others wanted to have their credentials assessed by professional and trade organizations. They had many stories of people who came from the same countries with basically the same qualifications who were in fact treated differently.

I am not naive enough to suggest that sometimes those situations might have been embellished somewhat. I understand that. One tends to see one's case in the best possible light. However, I am also convinced that there were real serious situations that were not treated as equitably as they might have been, not because people had bad intentions but rather because the rules were not set out; they were not clear. Perhaps they had not been discussed sufficiently.

I have examples in the fields of medicine and law and in technological courses in so far as community colleges are concerned.

Let us look at the whole notion of transfer of credits from one province to another, whether it be at the university or college level. Even within the country there are serious problems. One starts a program, goes to another college or university in another province, and that which has been accomplished successfully is not always accepted, at least in total. Very often a partial credit is given, but the student who has worked very hard to obtain those credits clearly does not see it as fair.

Even within provinces there are serious difficulties. I was approached not long ago by a young woman who had completed two years of an arts degree in a university in a particular province. This young woman wanted to transfer her credits to another university in the same province in the same program. Lo and behold, the receiving university would only accept one of two years. I had to talk to the university authorities who were really quite open about the problem. After some discussion, we were able to come to some agreement that the two years should be credited. The point that I want to make is that I am not sure this should have occurred in the first place. In fact, I am quite convinced that it should not have happened.

I am somewhat disappointed that initially the student would have had those difficulties and had someone not been able to intervene on her behalf, those difficulties in all probability would have continued.

[Translation]

As for community colleges, there are problems there as well. I know many cases where, for instance, a student had completed a number of credits which he had to transfer to another institution, another community college, where he would be in the same program, and it turned out that not all his credits were accepted by the college where he was going.

There is a community college that offers a three-year program in technology. A student who goes on to university in that field and wants to become an engineer is credited two years at the university level for his three years at community college. In some cases they are credited nothing. They have to go back and start from the very beginning, as though they had done nothing at all. I think that is very unfair.

[English]

As well there is the whole question of independent religious degree-granting institutions. They offer arts degrees as one example and in one province this is the situation. One university will not accord any credits at all because supposedly this degree is not from a recognized institution. I understand why they do that. However, at another university, in the same province a substantial number of credits are given. At a third university, under certain conditions, all credits are accepted. This is happening within the same province where one case is treated differently by three parties and which has a significant impact on the student that is involved.

Let me tell you a personal anecdote. An individual who was an outstanding graduate from one of the Bible colleges that I know received a degree with outstanding marks. This person wanted to obtain a masters degree at one of the universities in the province. They looked at his credentials and said, "No. It is not possible because you do not have an undergraduate degree from a recognized university". The student was not to be put off. He decided to go to the United States and register in a prestigious university there, was admitted to a masters program, completed the masters program with outstanding marks, came back to Canada, and wanted to register in a doctoral program. Everything was going well until the receiving university noted that he did not have a recognized undergraduate degree. At this point he was not admitted to the program until a significant amount of discussion took place. Even then there was great reluctance in admitting this particular student.

Clearly, situations like that are inappropriate. They cause a lot of confusion, a lot of frustration, a lot of anger. Surely we can come up with something that is more rational, that is simpler, that is better, that is more easily understood.

There is the whole notion of work experience as well. Some of you will know that at both the university and college level, work experience that is related or relevant is accepted as part of the degree or diploma that one is following. However, it is not always the case. Surely if work experience is relevant in certain situations, why is not relevant in others? If it can count in one particular college or university, why should it not count in another?

Let me give you the example. A gentleman had worked over 20 years in developing nations. Obviously during the 20 years he had acquired a lot of expertise, was a recognized expert in the field with developing nations, was a keynote speaker at a great number of conferences and was also a prolific writer, published in journals and in other publications. Yet when that person wanted to undertake an undergraduate degree, he was told that he had to start at the very same place as everyone else. I find this unacceptable. Surely the person, in those 20 years of dedicated and successful service, had accomplished a great deal. The truth of the matter is he was able to find a university that was willing to give him some credit towards his degree.

It would be unfortunate if I were to give the impression that there has not been a start in this area because there has been an important one. There has been established the Canadian Information Centre for International Credentials. Some of you will know that Canada has formally accepted the UNESCO Convention on recognition of studies, degrees and diplomas concerning higher education in the states belonging to the Europe region. This organization focuses on the co-ordination and facilitation of the flow of information regarding international credentials. It is a good beginning and it is one that is to be applauded.

Let me share with you the terms of reference or the mandate of the Canadian International Information Centre for International Credentials organization. I quote:

> (a) Co-ordinate the collection and dissemination of information on academic and professional recognition of foreign qualifications from Canadian and foreign sources.
> (b) To identify and document existing resources and establish an information network.
> (c) To provide information services on qualification held by persons educated abroad, as required.
> (d) Promote international mobility of students by providing them with pertinent information or referring their requests to appropriate agencies; and
> (e) To make available to foreign countries, international organizations, and individuals, information on Canadian education systems and to take steps, in conjunction with the Department of External Affairs, to promote recognition of Canadian credentials abroad.

Quite apart from this organization, in the province of Quebec there is an established system for the evaluation of foreign credentials and this, from all sources from which I have heard, is working extremely well. So there is a model in place already from which we can borrow. I am also informed that the province of Ontario has recently completed a study that looks at the whole idea of credentials from other countries and that it is in the process of making some decisions to respond to that. I have also been told that the provinces of Alberta and Manitoba are in the process of trying to bring some decisions forth in that particular area.

Let me address the final point: what is needed?

[Translation]

Exactly what is needed to deal with these requirements? Of course, we already have the Canadian Information Centre for International Credentials. If we wanted to, we could expand its mandate or give it a different mandate or even create a different organization. That is not the option I prefer, but it is something we could suggest to the people involved when we ask them to meet and try and come up with a solution that would respond to a number of needs I identified today.

[English]

Yes, we could expand the mandate of the centre. We could set up another organization. I hesitate to recommend that. We could ask the relevant parties such as the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, the Association of Community Colleges of Canada, the Association of Registrars of the universities and colleges of Canada, which are three parties that are really significantly involved, to meet and try to push this notion forward. We need to make progress in this area. Not to do so will continue the alienation people feel, the sense of being treated unfairly and inequitably, which leads to frustration and confusion. If we were to move forward we could bring about greater equity.

[Translation]

What I want to do is ensure that the people involved, those who have a direct interest in this area, will meet to discuss solutions. It must be possible to simplify, to identify a process and come up with a solution that will reduce the amount of confusion and frustration that exists today.

[English]

What we need is not so much a mechanism but a willingness to recognize that there are problems. We should not feel defensive about it, but accept that there is a lot of talent out there and if we get together and accept these difficulties, these problems, as challenges, we could bring about solutions that would help many, many Canadians.

[Translation]

That is what I want to do: help the people who are involved.

[English]

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to address the motion put forward by the member for St. Boniface today and to thank him for his interest and, indeed, his work in education in this country. I know of his work in Manitoba before he came to this place. It preceded him, and I congratulate him.

We cannot stress enough the importance of promoting advanced education in this country, nor should we underestimate the valuable, indeed vital, contributions that international students can make to the Canadian university system, the national economy and the multinational character of the country.

The government recognizes that Canada must excel in education. It is critical to our social and economic health not just today but particularly to ensure prosperity in the next century. It is for precisely this reason that Canada ratified the UNESCO Convention on recognition of studies, diplomas and degrees concerning higher education in March of this year.

Our motivation for adopting this accord was not simply materialistic or altruistic. It is because we realize that despite the diversity of languages or the differences in economic and social systems from our world neighbours, we have a common responsibility to strengthen our educational ties in the interest of world peace and co-operation.

The intention of the UNESCO Convention is to enable each country to exploit its educational means as effectively as possible, to constantly improve curricula, to ensure that teachers, students, research and professional workers have greater international mobility and to alleviate the difficulties encountered by individuals when they return from abroad after studying, or from training.

In the short time since Canada ratified the UNESCO agreement, it has moved to establish the Canadian Information Centre for International Credentials, the centre to which the hon. member for St. Boniface alluded. This centre will oversee implementation of the convention, and it is expected to be operational by the end of this fiscal year.

At this point, I would like to address the motion and the initiatives that are ongoing through the centre. A great deal of discussion and consultation have already taken place. Representatives from the provinces and the federal government have arrived at a number of recommendations which have been adopted by the ministers to become the foundation of the centre's mandate.

I think it is important that we reiterate once again those responsibilities of the centre: to co-ordinate the collection and dissemination of information of academic and professional recognition of foreign qualifications from Canada in international sources; to identify and document existing resources and establish an international network; to provide informational services on qualifications held by individuals educated abroad; to promote international mobility of students by providing them with pertinent information or referring their request to appropriate agencies; and to make available to foreign countries, international organizations and individuals information on the Canadian education system and to take steps in conjunction with the Department of External Affairs to promote recognition of Canada's credentials abroad.

I want to stress that it is a two-way street. Canadian students wishing to study abroad stand to gain as much from the signing of this convention as international students wishing to come here.

This new centre will act as a central clearing house smoothing out the wrinkles that hampered both our domestic and foreign students in the past. It will not, however, presume to assume authority or control over areas outside its jurisdiction.

Education remains a provincial responsibility. That is why the Canadian Information Centre for International Credentials will be jointly operated by Canada and the provinces. Let me also make it clear that the centre will not have any regulatory powers. It will act strictly in an advisory capacity. Colleges, universities, provincial and professional regulatory bodies will continue to be autonomous.

• (1330)

In addition to the government officials, the information centre will have representation from the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada and the Canadian Commission for UNESCO, and observer status has been granted to the Association of Registrars of the universities and colleges of Canada. It will also receive support from the technical working groups with expertise in areas essential to the centre's success. It is these professionals and specialists who are best equipped to decide what needs to be done and how to go about doing it.

In many ways, the centre's tasks will be daunting. The diversity and complexity of various political, social and educational systems around the world will prove to be a real challenge.

At the same time, though, it offers an exceptionally rich, cultural asset. The centre's raison d'être may be to streamline and simplify information flow, but the ultimate bonus may be a fresh perspective on the operation of educational and training systems in other parts of the world.

There is no doubt that Canada can only benefit from the improved flow of information the centre will generate to assist Canadian students and from the influx of international scholars it will draw.

The Canadian Information Centre for International Credentials will also complement several other recent initiatives undertaken by the federal government to support educational endeavours. In particular, I want to mention the Prime Minister's proposal for a task force on human resource development for Canada's international competitiveness in the 21st century, and the Economic Council's study of education and the economy.

Additional federal programs and policies are helping foreign students to better use the time they spend in our country. Employment and Immigration Canada's recent decision to modify the conditions for employment of international students has made it easier for many of them to work on and off campus in their areas of specialty for up to one year after graduation.

For its part, Statistics Canada is now publishing an annual compendium of statistics on international students. As well, the Departments of External Affairs, and Industry, Science and Technology are examining ways to promote Canadian education services and facilities more effectively overseas. All of these measures are aimed at raising the profile of the Canadian education system, both at home and abroad.

There can be no doubt that education is the key to the future. As we leave the industrial era behind us, academics, businesses, and governments will need greater access to ever more data and know-how in the new information age. Any efforts which propel that process must be encouraged and supported.

That is why I believe that the creation of the Canadian Information Centre for International Credentials has gone a long way toward satisfying many of the aims of the motion under consideration today. Aside from the constitutional question, it would be a duplication of services, I believe, to establish the sort of national body suggested.

With all due respect to my hon. friend from St. Boniface and his intentions, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that much of the work is already being done, and being done very well indeed.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to make some comments on Motion No. 688 which has been introduced by the member for St. Boniface. The motion draws attention to a problem that has been a burden to students and educational institutions in Canada for quite some time.

I find it most unfortunate that the member of the government chose substantially not to address herself at all to the substance of the motion, although it certainly is true that the UNESCO Convention and the creation of the Canadian Information Centre for International Credentials are useful first steps. She did, however, indicate one of the significant problems with the motion before us which would propose some kind of regulatory body in the face of the fact that education is a provincial matter.

As I am sure you know, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. member for St. Boniface knows, these jurisdictional properties, as it were, can heat up the debate to white heat without solving any problems whenever these jurisdictional responsibilities are confronted in an attempt to bring about change. However, we should recognize too that, although burdensomely inconvenient at times, the fact that education is a provincial matter is useful from the point of view of giving diversity to education in Canada in that it reflects the diversity of the regions of Canada. Quite specifically, of course, there is the extreme case of Quebec which has a different language and different culture. Obviously, it has to have an educational system that reflects those differences, but similar differences apply right across the country.

When one is talking about post-secondary education, even within provinces, the problem encountered is a reflection of the diversity within provinces of post-secondary education and not only diversity in terms of classes of institutions, universities as opposed to the colleges. As well, I suppose I should say parenthetically, when we talk about parallel systems of colleges, in Ontario we are talking about quite a different system than the CÉGEPs in Quebec and the community colleges in B.C. There is a great deal of diversity within provinces, classes of institutions that are recognized as post-secondary, and a great deal of diversity between provinces in that respect.

Even in looking at universities, one of the problems of any over-arcing regulatory anything is that it tends to suppress the kind of diversity that is very useful in terms of the development of different approaches to different kinds of curricula and courses, and new thrusts that in the long run can be of benefit to making our educational system more appropriate to the need: the needs of our students, the needs of our society, and the needs of our economy.

It is true that this huge diversity, with each university and each college finding its own way, for example with each professor often teaching a course at the basic introductory level in economics, being different from one institution to the other. Obviously, this creates problems for students who are transferring from one university to another within a province, from a college to a university, from a college or university from one province to another, and certainly a very difficult problem in respect to recognizing the credentials of international students who come to this country to study.

The hon. parliamentary secretary pointed out that this is a two-way street and that very often Canadian students have difficulty having their credentials recognized elsewhere. It is a problem, but it certainly is not a problem that is going to be solved by means of any over-arcing regulatory body, as has been suggested here.

In fact, I doubt whether it is conceivable in the terms that have been suggested by the hon. member that the problem can be solved at all. That does not mean that we should not take seriously the question of transferability. How can it be brought about? It certainly is not going to be brought about by an action by this Parliament. It is a matter of provincial jurisdiction and an area in which we have no power to act.

It seems to me that we could use this opportunity to suggest to the university and college community, and to the ministers of education at the provincial level, that they should attempt to find some way to facilitate the transfer of students from one institution to another; to recognize, as the hon. member mentioned, life experience, as it is called, as a basis for admission; to make it possible for international students to gain reasonable admission to institutions here; and, by the way, to gain appropriate recognition of whatever professional credentials they have.

The problem is that we place too much emphasis on credits. We place too much emphasis on course descriptions and not enough emphasis on what students actually know. It seems to me that we can either go to a different system altogether or use some combination of systems of evaluations to address the problem. I would recommend to the AUCC and other groups involved in the colleges and universities, to have some kind of objective evaluation, not of what courses students have taken, or of what credits they have, but of what knowledge they have earned. Knowledge gained in formal class or knowledge that has been gained by virtue of work experience is knowledge that in some fashion can be measured. We have to confront this problem.

I have confronted this problem as chairman of the board of St. Clair College and as a professor at the University of Windsor. We have wracked ourselves trying to figure out how to resolve this problem. It seems to me that the only ultimate solution is to get around this tyranny of credits and course descriptions to try to find a means of evaluating what students actually know, what those with work experience actually know, and what international students are capable of demonstrating they know as a basis for placing them appropriately in a post-secondary institution of their choice.

It may very well be that some evaluation of credits would be included in the equation. An objective examination and an appropriate interview with those who seek to have their past experience evaluated would seem to me to be one way of approaching it. So, I would suggest that.

If there is any means at all by which the federal government can exercise some leverage, perhaps it would be in respect to EPF transfer payments which right now are not specifically directed at post-secondary education. There are no strings attached. Maybe one of the strings attached could be for each province to submit a reasonable proposal or basis upon which transferability could occur fairly.

I have recommended to the House one process that could be used and I have suggested a slight lever that might be employed. I hope that the administrators of colleges and universities and those concerned about fairness in colleges and universities will know about this debate and engage seriously in solving a problem addressed today after some 30 years of repeated attempts to bring about a resolution.

Quite frankly, I would have to admit, in favour of the hon. member for St. Boniface's motion, that up until now the effort has not been serious and, because it has not been serious, it has caused serious difficulties for many Astudents and those who are attempting to become students in our country.

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak in support of the motion of the hon. member for St. Boniface.

For the sake of the record, I would say that the hon. member did not necessarily ask for a regulatory body, but for a discussion or dialogue in order to simplify the process and make it more understandable. He clearly understood the complexity of the issue and all he is calling for is some sort of discussion to take place.

I was quite disappointed in the statement of the hon. member representing the government when she stated that education falls under the jurisdiction of the provincial government and, as a result of that, we have no business in talking about the issue or dealing with the issue.

Using this rationale, perhaps we might apply and say the same thing about health care. We might say the same thing about the environment, taxation of all types, economic development and job creation.

The truth of the matter is that we can no longer afford to say: "Well, this is your baby. I am not going to get involved in it". The issue of education now, more than ever before, will have to become everyone's business, at the provincial, municipal and federal levels.

To back up my statement, I want to state to the hon. member that here in Canada one out of every three youths who enter the high school level do not finish their high school. If we look at the latest statistics from Employment and Immigration, on an annual basis, approximately 100,000 students drop out before they get to Grade XIII.

Between now and the year 2000 we are going to see at least one million Canadian youths out on the street looking for low paying jobs, or having no jobs at all.

If we compare this with what has happened around the world, for example, in Japan, 94 per cent of 17-year olds in Japan are still in formal education or are still learning in schools.

In Germany, 89 per cent of their children are still in schools at the age of 17. In Sweden, it is 78 per cent. Here in Canada, the figures are a lot less. We have only about 72 per cent of our students remaining in school after the age of 17.

This should be an alarming signal to the government to take note of and to realize that the issue of education can no longer be a provincial or municipal issue alone. It has to become a federal issue as well.

Over the years a good proportion of jobs in our society were in the low paying scales and did not demand high skilled employees. Everything is changing as we move into the 21st century. We are going more and more into the areas of high tech and information systems. As a result of that, there is a bigger demand on our labour force to be highly skilled and highly trained. That is why the government has to put a lot more emphasis on educational retraining today than ever before.

If we look at the latest statistics from Employment and Immigration, going back to 1986, they show that the unemployment rate for Canadians aged 15 to 24 with a post-secondary education was 9.8 per cent. This is significantly lower than the 17.7 per cent unemployment rate for the same age group with only high school education. That says that we can no longer afford to shy away from the issue. We have to address it with vigour and interest. We cannot carry on passing the ball to the other levels of government.

In terms of giving an equivalent for a university student moving to another university, I believe it is only fair that a first year math student who takes calculus, for instance, at the University of Ottawa should be eligible to get the credit from the University of York if he is studying the same type of course. Unfortunately, over the years a lot of complication has been created as a result of students moving from one university to the next, putting a tremendous load on their back which they have to deal with.

The suggestion by my colleague to create some sort of a mechanism whereby we cannot simplify the process is only fair.

• (1350)

The former provincial government, a Liberal government, released a report last year called The People and Skills in the New Global Economy. I suggest that many sound recommendations came out of the report, one of which calls for uniformity in our post-secondary education.

I would like to quote from that report. The report concluded that:

> —it is time to rethink the rigidities still built into the post-secondary education system. Each step along the educational path should open doors rather than close them. Thus, individuals should be able to transfer smoothly from one institution to another without having to go back to 'square one'. Ideally, the competencies an individual has achieved in one environment should be recognized in others if learning is to be acknowledged as cumulative. And finally, no educational choice should be a dead end.

This is an excellent point that has been raised by the provincial government in Ontario. I might suggest it is high time for other provinces to take the lead and to move forward in this direction.

We need a catalyst, and that catalyst has to be the federal government. We can no longer point our finger stating that it is a provincial responsibility and that as a result of that, we are not going to deal with it, while we are giving, in terms of transfer payments to the provinces, billions of dollars on an annual basis.

If this is the same argument we are going to be using, we should look at the health care system. While the health care system falls within the jurisdiction of the provincial government, we still have a federal government involvement in the health care system, and we still, from time to time, tell the provinces how we would like to see the health care system run.

To say that it is within the constitutional right of the provinces, I do not think I will buy that. I do not think the people of Canada will buy that because while we are contributing financially to the educational system, we should have a say on how the money is spent, especially when it comes to the issue of educating our children, our youth, the leaders of tomorrow.

I commend the hon. member on his excellent initiative. He spoke about people with university degrees who are coming from outside Canada. I have many constituents who have called me on several occasions to tell me horror stories.

A dentist in the Ottawa-Carleton region who obtained his university degree in England called me. He practised for over 25 years as a dentist. This dentist right now is working as a real estate agent because he could not get the equivalent to his university degree which he obtained in England.

Other students who completed PhDs in electrical engineering or civil engineering are driving cabs. When it comes to students who graduate from other universities around the world and who move to Canada, certainly we are not doing enough to recognize their university education.

The system is not perfect. I hope the government is taking note of this and that it will take the recommendation of my Liberal colleague to heart. Hopefully, it will deal with it.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The hon. member for Saint-Maurice.

Mr. Denis Pronovost (Saint-Maurice): First, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague from St. Boniface for bringing this important issue before the House. However let me make it clear that the Canadian government is also showing great concern over post-secondary education because we know that the people of this country can only stand to gain if they are prepared to face up to the challenges of the coming century.

The Canadian government gives priority to education and does not spare any effort to improve conditions in that field. It earmarks a fair share of its annual budget to that end, in keeping with its powers under the Canadian Constitution, yet it shows great respect for provincial and territorial educational jurisdictions and is intent on refraining from expanding or going beyond its jurisdiction in that field. It readily acknowledges the expertise of the various governments with respect to education.

Being a former Manitoba education minister, my colleague from St. Boniface is aware of that fact and fully conversant with the post-secondary education issue. Keeping in mind his experience in education, I am somewhat surprised that he chose to introduce this motion.

The better to appreciate the import of the motion before the House, Mr. Speaker, allow me to shed light on the situation by explaining how the present system works, for this will enable you to agree with me that the federal government has rather limited leeway.

The provinces were given jurisdiction over education in the 1867 Canadian Constitution. Pursuant to section 93, the provincial education departments hold direct control over primary and secondary schools as well as colleges in Canada. It follows that these departments are responsible for rating academic credits and diplomas awarded outside their respective provincial boundaries at all levels except for university studies.

Indeed universities are an exception to the rule. They are empowered to award diplomas to their students under their provincial charters which also authorize them to set entrance requirements and related procedures. Thus each institution can rate the academic standards of other universities, provinces or countries before enrolling a student. Universities are responsible for establishing equivalence scales governing interprovincial standards or those of other Canadian universities.

The problem raised by the hon. member for St. Boniface is not a major one. Furthermore, most universities recognize job experience and give students points accordingly. Mechanisms already exist at the university level.

In fact, the present system works quite well, which is borne out by the figures. Last year, more than 70,900 foreign students were studying here in Canada. Degree and credit equivalencies were evaluated under the existing system and did not seem to be a major problem. In addition to the impressive number of foreign students, large numbers of Canadians changed schools, colleges or universities and were admitted, on the basis of the credits they had acquired, to another educational institution.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Boniface has a solid reputation in the field of education, and of course, when he was a deputy minister with the Government of Manitoba, his great expertise was recognized, and rightly so. However, like other members of the Liberal Party in this House, he has become obsessed with taking all the powers that belong to the provinces and transferring them to the central government, the Government of Canada. Members of the New Democratic Party have the same desire to abolish the powers of the provinces by transferring them to a strong central government. The Liberal leader has exactly the same tendency to claim that the provinces are not capable of acting responsibly and should be denied certain powers that should be transferred to the central government.

Mr. Speaker, you are signalling that my time has expired, and I must say I had some more interesting points to make. Unfortunately, the proposal made by the hon. member for St. Boniface cannot be accepted by this side of the House because we on this side fully respect the jurisdiction of all the provinces of this country over education.

[English]

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that in this matter of great importance, we too on this side of the House respect the provinces. We also see the need for immediate action on the suggestion of my hon. colleague from St. Boniface, who did not ask for a regulatory body. He asked for the beginning of dialogue and discussion in this matter.

Those of us involved in so-called real politics know that the politics of universities is sometimes even more arcane and difficult to deal with. If we are going to solve this problem in our universities, both nationally and internationally, we must begin as soon as humanly possible, and not let it bog down in discussion in this Chamber or between the provinces. The job needs to be done. We have seen what the problem is. Let's attack it and seek a solution.

Mr. Speaker: The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(1), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

[Translation]

It being two o'clock, the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 31.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

AIR SAFETY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, no Canadian traveller can feel anything but concerned and uneasy over safety in this country's skies.

This government promised that the brave new world of deregulation would not harm safety in the slightest. Last Thursday that promise was shown to be hollow. A senior Transport Canada safety inspector, Henry Dick, told the inquiry into last year's Air Ontario disaster at Dryden that air passenger safety has been compromised since deregulation. He told the inquiry that deregulation has increased his department's workload by as much as 50 per cent, yet there has been no increase in the number of inspectors. That staff shortage, plus the transition period at Air Ontario, made a thorough safety check-up of the company's planes very difficult.

Where is this government's commitment to safety? When will this government make good on its promises and hire the inspectors that are so desperately needed? The Canadian travelling public needs to know now.

CONFERENCE ON SECURITY AND CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, the Conference on Security and Co-Operation in Europe held in Paris this week is breaking ground few of us could have imagined, even months ago.

The CSCE is opening doors to a new relationship between eastern and western Europe and between Europe and North America. Europe is at last liberated from the threat of opposing military alliances and united in its commitment to democracy, human rights, and economic co-operation. Canada has joined 33 other nations to promote greater prospects of booming pan-European and trans-Atlantic trade.

The CSCE should complement the work already done by NATO to enhance peace and security in Europe. The CSCE should have a permanent secretariat with a clear mandate to keep communication open and honest throughout the European community.

For the common good it appears that the cold war is truly and finally over.

CANADA POST

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on August 18, 1989 I wrote to both the president and the minister responsible for Canada Post asking that a stamp be struck in honour of the 125th anniversary of the birth of Marie Sklodowska-Curie. As members of this House are aware, Marie Curie's accomplishments in the study of radioactivity won her the Nobel prize in physics in 1903.

In response to my letter, I was advised by the chairman of Canada Post that decisions of this sort are made in accordance with Article 3 of Canada Post's corporate policy which states that the stamp advisory committee gives preference to subjects that are primarily related to Canada.

I am sure that executives at McDonald's, having paid $250,000 to have their label printed on the salvage of a series of our stamps, were ecstatic to learn that their hamburgers were considered more in keeping with Canada's interests than a woman who discovered a cure for cancer, benefiting thousands of people all over the world including Canadians.

Maybe it is high time for a rude reminder to Canada Post of our priorities as a country.

GRAIN AND OILSEEDS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, last week in Winnipeg, federal and provincial agriculture ministers met to discuss the cost sharing of proposals made by the producer and federal and provincial government representatives who make up the grain and oilseed safety net committee.

The guaranteed revenue insurance plan and the net income stabilization account together will provide comprehensive income stabilization for grain and oilseed farmers. These programs will be production neutral and will be tailored to the situation of the individual producer by using individual yield information and individual stabilization accounts.

Farmers will be able to calculate in early spring their guaranteed total returns for each crop. This guarantee will introduce an element of certainty and predictability so that farmers can better plan their business.

Canadian grain and oilseed farmers urge the federal and provincial governments to expedite the introduction of this new generation of farm safety nets.

SECOND WORLD CLIMATE CONFERENCE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, "notwithstanding scientific and economic uncertainties, nations should now take steps toward reducing sources and increasing sinks of greenhouse gases through national and regional actions". So concluded over 700 scientists from 120 countries at the second World Climate Conference, recently concluded in Geneva. They went on to call for a 1 per cent to 2 per cent per year cut in carbon dioxide emissions, starting now.

After the scientists, the ministers met, including the Canadian Minister of the Environment. Unfortunately Canada failed to heed the urgent call for action so that the final ministerial declaration does not contain targets and timetables on $CO_2$ reductions.

As a result, Canada is no longer a leader in global environmental action. We are instead falling in line with a White House agenda, and that is most unfortunate.

CANADIAN COALITION ON ACID RAIN

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, President Bush's signing into law last Thursday of the new U.S. clean air legislation means that the future health of Canada's lakes, rivers and trees is a little more certain. The United States is now firmly committed to reducing its acid rain causing emissions by 50 per cent by the year 2000, and the new law lays a solid foundation for the finalization of a transboundary treaty between our two countries.

No group is more deserving of our thanks in this long battle than the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain. Of particular note are the coalition's two dynamic co-ordinators, Adele Hurley and Michael Perley, whose intensive and tireless lobbying of the economic and political decision makers on both sides of the border contributed greatly to last week's historic signing.

Tonight, Mr. Speaker, at a victory party at Casa Loma in Toronto, to which you and I are both invited, the coalition will celebrate. I say celebrate long and hard for it has earned the gratitude of a nation and that of future generations.

A few moments ago I had the privilege of speaking to our ambassador in Washington, the hon. Derek Burney, and commended him for the great work that he has done in bringing this to a very successful conclusion.

NOVA SCOTIA ARCHIVES

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, the Nova Scotia Archives in Halifax has had a proud tradition of providing materials to students, scholars, writers, and interested amateurs for scores of years. It is accessible both in the physical and the intellectual sense for all who wish to use it. Consequently, the discovery some days ago that all reference cards relating to blacks and to women had been removed by some vandal is a double tragedy. Dr. Frances Early, historian and past chair of women's studies at Mount St. Vincent University, said that the removal of this material and its resulting blow to women's and blacks' research is an assault on the dignity of both groups, as a denial of one's history is a denial of one's importance and one's contribution.

Black history in Nova Scotia includes the Black United Empire Loyalists, as well as being the terminal of the underground railroad in pre-United States Civil War days.

The role of women in Nova Scotia has been documented from the early days of New France at Port Royal to the development of Canada's only women's university.

This particularly horrible manifestation of sexism and racism is all too common in Canada today. It is time for all Canadians to stand and say: "No more of this; not here, not now, not ever".

SOLICITING BY TELEPHONE

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, there are days when one wonders what is happening to society and whether anyone is responsible anymore. Numbered companies, unscrupulous people, invite young people and others to call them by dialing a telephone number starting with 976. And what do they hear? An answering machine that delivers a pornographic and obscene message.

Unfortunately, there is a charge for each call, and parents end up with the bill at the end of the month, dumb founded and powerless to fight the system.

Mr. Speaker, where are Bell Canada's sense of morality and professional ethics, when it allows its telephone lines to be used for pornographic and obscene purposes? How can the CRTC remain oblivious to this situation? While people in a position of authority abuse the trust of our young people, other authorities at Bell Canada and the CRTC continue to wash their hands like Pontius Pilate.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal senators are at it again, promoting their distorted view of the GST. Their latest drivel which was released to every weekly newspaper in Canada last week indicates their total lack of understanding of the GST or their total disregard of the facts. It is one or the other; probably both.

They should exercise some sensibility but they do not. They continue to run rings of confusion around the Canadian people. They are on the losing end of the GST debate and they cannot accept their fate.

• (1410 )

CHILD ABUSE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge the government once again to commission an independent inquiry into the shocking abuses which took place in Canada's residential schools for native children.

Countless numbers of Canada's first peoples faced abuses in schools that were funded by the federal government. Through an inquiry the government will assist the healing process for the victims of this abuse. More and more native children and adults are coming forward to tell their tales of personal abuse while in residential schools and how it still affects their lives.

Why is the government afraid of this inquiry? These victims require this measure of justice.

Therefore I again want to urge the government to commission an independent inquiry into these residential schools. Until we start listening to the victims of abuses that occurred in these schools, the resulting problems will not go away.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, Raymond Garneau, former Quebec Finance Minister and former Liberal Member of Parliament and Finance critic, thinks that the goods and services tax proposed by our government is probably the fairest one that could be found in the present context of global markets.

According to Mr. Garneau, at a time when we have free trade and global markets, we have to get rid of the old tax and replace it with the GST. Mr. Garneau went on to say that the 13.5 per cent tax had become impossible to administer and that it was as full of holes as a sieve. No government had yet been able to find a way to make it watertight. It was too easy to get around by legal means, with the help of expert lawyers. It had to go.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time Liberal senators respected the agenda of a responsible government.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, today I am wearing my very special suit. I call it my NDP suit, my socialist sackcloth, my comrade-in-arms tunic, if you like.

The NDP knows what it is against. It is against the break-up of Canada, as the leader has so often said. It is against dirty, rotten patronage. It is against Hibernia. It voted against it here in this House.

But this suit has a second pocket. The NDP knows exactly what it is for. It is for—and these are the words of the member for Chambly—the break-up of Canada. It is now still against patronage, except of course in the cases of Ed Broadbent, Bob White and Ian Deans.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not always easy to draw the distinction between what is fair comment in members' statements and what is personal criticism.

It seems to me the hon. member has referred to another hon. member as being in favour of the break-up of Canada. I think that is a pretty personal attack, and I would want the hon. member to keep that in mind.

Mr. Simmons: As I was saying, the NDP is not really against Hibernia. The leader said in St. John's: "Just because we voted against it—doesn't mean we oppose it".

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Simmons: You see, Mr. Speaker, any NDP suit worthy of the name must have two pockets: one to tell you what you are for and one to tell you what you are against. The problem is you might get the two pockets all mixed up one day.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, once again the Conservative government has come out strongly in favour of rhetoric and bluster and decidedly short on substance with respect to the environment.

This month in Geneva, at the second World Climate Conference, the Minister of the Environment disregarded the unanimous recommendations of the environment committee and gave short shrift to the dangers of $CO_2$ emissions, the greatest single contributor to global warming.

Rather than support international moves to reduce $CO_2$ emissions by 20 per cent or more by the year 2005, the government opted for a vague promise to stabilize emissions at current levels by the year 2000.

The government has refused to conduct a full environmental assessment of the proposed coal fired generating station at Point Aconi, Nova Scotia. The Point Aconi project will produce 1.5 million tonnes of carbon dioxide annually.

Instead of taking action on global warming, the government plans to turn a blind eye to a project which will substantially increase Canada's $CO_2$ emissions.

Point Aconi must be subject to a full environmental assessment.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

Mr. Bob Wood (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express the concerns of the dairy farmers in northern Ontario, in the riding of Nipissing, over the recent proposal made by this government to the GATT concerning our dairy industry. Once again it appears that this government has fallen prey to the illusion that the U.S. is a free trader, particularly when it comes to agriculture. Why else would the government jeopardize our dairy markets by proposing to open up an even greater segment to unfair competition?

The U.S. and the Europeans dump dairy surpluses on the world market, forcing prices well below the actual cost of production. They protect their own markets vigorously with trade barriers significantly higher than ours, whereas Canada has the highest level of market access.

The premise of our supply management programs is to supply our own market so we do not create huge surpluses to dump on world markets. Unlike the U.S., surpluses in Canada are paid for by the producer and not the taxpayer.

The purpose of the GATT is to provide fair rules for global trade, not to create a forum for international price subsidy wars. Indeed, this proposal makes Canada the casualty in the agricultural crossfire between the United States and the Europeans.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE ECONOMY

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

Last week, the Conference Board of Canada reported that the confidence of Canadian families in their financial situation is at a record low. What a vote of non-confidence in the policies of this government. Only 7.8 per cent of Canadian families felt that the job situation in their communities would improve in the next six months.

Why does the minister and his government persist with policies likes the high dollar, high interest rates and the GST, that are seriously damaging the confidence of Canadians in their economic future? Why will he not bring in new policies that will create jobs, create economic growth and re-establish the confidence of Canadians in the economy of this country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I have responded to that form of question on a number of occasions from the Leader of the Opposition.

We have an economy that is going through a transition stage, from a period of very high growth to a period where we have to get the levels of inflation under control. I am sure that my hon. friend remembers back in the late seventies and early eighties when the government that he supported did not take these problems seriously and that left us with the very serious recession in 1981-82. If he were to be honest with those Canadians that he believes he is speaking for today, he would not be saying the same things that he is saying right now.

I am not happy when I see the confidence at these levels. I can understand why people are feeling the way they do. What we have been trying to do is get interest rates down to reflect the slowness in the economy. That has been happening over the past four months and will continue as the performance in the economy warrants.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last week Statistics Canada reported that more than half of the jobs lost in the first six months of this year were lost in small businesses.

It is no wonder that Catherine Swift, chief economist and vice-president of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business said: "We haven't seen intelligent government policies to deal with the problems." She pointed to "increasing taxes and artificially high interest rates as poor government management".

Is the minister going to attack Catherine Swift as not being honest? What is he going to say to her and the tens of thousands of small business people she represents?

Why will the minister not bring in some intelligent government policies, get away from his poor management and do things to help Canadian business, especially small business, get out of the economic mess he and his policies have created for this country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I would say to Catherine Swift is that she is looking at a very narrow timeframe.

If she would cast her mind back to September 1984, when we had an unemployment rate of 11.7 per cent, the unemployment rate is down considerably from that.

The other point is that there has been over 1.5 million jobs created during that period. I believe about 80 per cent of those have been created by small business. It is very easy to draw these negative conclusions. In the broad timeframe of the last six years, the policies of this government have worked. The policies of this government have resulted in a substantial creation of jobs and a substantial improvement in the standard of living for Canadians. As people have seen, after tax and after inflation, their ability to purchase has gone up by $8,000 for every family in Canada.

• (1420 )

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister has not explained. If things are so wonderful, according to him, why is the confidence of Canadians in their economic future so low?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, everyone condemns this government's policies. According to Statistics Canada, small businesses in Quebec are those most severely affected by the recession caused by this government. My question to the minister is this: How long will the government let this recession go on and when will it introduce policies to help small businesses create more jobs in Quebec and across the country?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not saying that things are wonderful in the economy, as my friend has just said that I did. I am saying that we are going through a difficult period now.

It is important to look at the broad timeframe. The economy has improved considerably since 1984 when we came into office. We have seen 1.5 million jobs created since that time.

I think it is also important for us to look at the position of Canada in relation to the rest of the world. Just the other day, we saw where Montreal and Toronto are right at the top of the statistics of cities in which it is good to live in the world.

We have seen where Canada has one of the highest standards of living when you take into account medical care, life expectancy, and standard of living in terms of income. These are things that are good about Canada. We are committed to improving these. But we also know that we cannot just snap our fingers and wish them to happen. We do know that we have to go through this period to get inflation under control so we can get interest rates down and see a return to strong non-inflationary growth in the future.

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and deals with Rafferty-Alameda.

On January 26, the government signed an agreement with Saskatchewan, but forgot to have cabinet endorse it. On September 5 the minister met with Grant Devine, but forgot what they talked about. On October 12, the review panel resigned. The government sought an injunction. It was refused because the government forgot to appoint a new panel. This morning the minister met with his officials trying to figure out what comes next.

What brilliant moves does the minister have to lay before the House now, or can he remember?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first of all, before all this history happened, I would like to tell my hon. colleague that there was an environmental process conducted. It was challenged in court. The court at that point requested the federal government to appoint a public panel to have public reviews, which we did.

We followed the judicial process. We appointed the panel. We began a full environmental review of the project and we have attempted to date to protect that process. The process is very important. I can tell my hon. colleague that we intend to appeal the decision of last Thursday, to clarify the situation and to make sure that the due process of environmental assessment is conducted on this project as it should be on any major Crown project.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, the minister seems to be guessing his way along on the environment.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, we are not dealing with a failure of law, we are dealing with a failure of political will.

As Mr. Justice Muldoon said in talking about this particular government, it should stop seeking ways to evade the guidelines. It should warmly embrace them. It should not try to circumvent the law.

The minister has said that he cannot revoke the licence. Well, he can suspend it. If he has any doubt about it, there is not a law student in this country who is not prepared to show him how.

Mr. Speaker, this government is the laughing stock of the environmental community. Will the minister suspend the licence and will he suspend the licence now? He has the power to do so and, if not, will he submit himself and his government's actions to a parliamentary inquiry so we can get to the truth of this matter?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the opposition speaks in very simplistic terms about the licence. A licence, whether it be this licence or any other licence granted by this government, can be suspended or quashed but only under one very fundamental rule of law; there has to be some kind of breach or some kind of violation of the terms and conditions of the licence. I have been discussing this with our legal advisers. There has been no breach or no violation of this particular licence.

We are pursuing in the courts the avenues that are open to us to allow the process to be completed and that is by appealing the judgment that was handed down last Thursday. We are doing that this week. We will continue in that pursuit.

I would like to tell my hon. colleague that the best way to avoid these kinds of circumstances in the future is for him and his party to strongly support Bill C-78, which would finally put some order in environmental assessment.

PERSIAN GULF

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Associate Minister of National Defence. As the House will know, three members of the House from the defence committee, including myself, were in the Persian Gulf last week. May I say we were all very impressed with the professionalism, the competence and the innovativeness of our troops who are there.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: However, we are not quite so impressed with the performance of the government on this issue, Mr. Speaker. On September 26 the Minister of National Defence made a solemn commitment to this House:

> —before any changes are made to the mission that Canadian forces are involved in at this time in support of the United Nations sanctions, resolution 665, that of deterring aggression, they will have to be consulted and we will have to make that change in Canada.

This weekend there were reports, apparently clear and documented, that Canadian forces in the gulf were going far beyond the enforcement of the UN sanctions and were in fact involved, albeit in a defensive say, in the support of so-called Operation Imminent Thunder, an offensive exercise near the Kuwaiti border.

Will the minister explain why the Minister of National Defence did not keep his commitment to this House?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to thank the hon. member for his very kind and accurate words about the work that our men and women are doing in the Persian Gulf, as I am sure he is aware, having been there, in a very difficult situation. I know those words will be appreciated by them.

I would like to assure my colleague that our role in the Persian Gulf has not changed. Our role is to enforce the UN sanctions against Iraq and to deter aggression. That will continue to be our role. Any change in that mandate would have to be considered by the government and, we would hope, by Parliament.

Yes, we did participate in the exercise over the weekend, albeit, as the member indicated, in a minor role. We assisted in the patrols; we assisted in escorting the U.S. hospital ships; and we participated, as the member has indicated, in a defensive capacity in an air operation to test out command and control capabilities of the multinational forces which are operating in the area.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, the minister has just confirmed a clear escalation of Canadian policy without consulting Parliament.

I would like to ask a supplementary question. Last week the Prime Minister indicated that there were going to be substantial cutbacks. Reports have stated that as much as half a billion dollars in government programs, presumably further affecting social programs in this country, will be cut to pay for the cost of the Canadian contingent. While we were there it was made clear to us, and this was confidential information, that the incremental costs were nowhere close to that. I would like to ask the minister if she will make it clear publicly in this House the incremental costs of the Canadian contingent in the gulf.

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, first of all I am surprised. I would think my hon. colleague would want to ensure that our men and women are prepared to deal with any kind of contingency. As we do here in Canada, as we do in Europe, we participate in exercises all the time to ensure our command and control capability, and that we are prepared to deal with any exigency.

• (1430)

With respect to the cost, yes, I know. I have seen the various figures which have been around in the media. I would just like to assure my colleague that work is being finalized on the costs of these operations. We expect that to be completed in the next few days. That information will be made available to the House and to the Canadian public.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Finally, Mr. Speaker, will the minister assure the House that, if there are to be any cutbacks to pay for the cost of the Canadian contingent in the gulf, they will come from the vast over-expenditure that is now taking place in maintaining Canadian forces in Europe now that the cold war is over?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I think that raises another issue, as I am sure my hon. colleague is aware.

The signing of the first CFE treaty is a historic event which we hope ultimately will lead to reduction in military troops in Europe of all nations. Canada has already indicated that we are planning to reduce our forces by about 1,400 and will be following the progress of future CFE talks with great interest.

Certainly, at this time, it would be premature to indicate to the hon. member and to the House just what sources may be looked for to ensure that we do have the financial resources available to continue to operate in the gulf effectively and to fulfil our mission there.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment.

For weeks in the House the question has been whether the minister did or did not reach an agreement with Premier Grant Devine concerning Rafferty-Alameda. In his affidavit to the court, the minister said: "Not only did I not make any such amending agreement I could not have as any agreement to amend the January 26, 1990 agreement would have required the approval of cabinet."

Now we have the court decision revealing that the original agreement had never been approved by cabinet. Therefore, no amendment to it would have required a cabinet approval.

In light of that, does the minister stand by his statement to the court, will he repeat it in the House or correct it?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I have said to the House time and time again.

There was no agreement reached on September 5. There were a number of discussions held. There was a document left for me to study and to have my officials review. It is exactly what I said in the affidavit. I stand by it, and I stand by everything I have said in the House.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the minister said repeatedly in the House on November 2 that he wants the January 22, 1990 agreement to be respected. We now find out through the court that that agreement was never approved by cabinet and therefore, according to the court, it is unenforceable.

When did the minister learn that this agreement had not been approved by cabinet? When did he know it might not be enforceable? Why did he continue to depend on this agreement for his whole case against Rafferty-Alameda?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we have attempted to follow the process here, and have done so quite judiciously, according to the dictates of the court.

We did appoint the panel. We got the panel up and going. We have always insisted that the Government of Saskatchewan live up to the January 1990 agreement. We believe that that agreement was a binding agreement. It is an agreement signed by both parties that indicated quite clearly that work would continue up to the level where safety was guaranteed and thereafter stop until the panel had completed its review.

When the panel finally resigned because work was ongoing beyond what it believed to be the safety level, we immediately sought an injunction. It was refused, and I have announced today in the House that we will seek leave to appeal the decision to clarify that situation.

CITIZENS' FORUM ON CANADA'S FUTURE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

A few days ago, the Ottawa Citizen reported that a group of public servants was preparing a series of major constitutional amendments to change the division of powers between the federal government and the provinces. Would the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that information today? If that is the case, when will these proposals be submitted to the Spicer Commission?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the Citizens' Forum has been established to obtain the views of all Canadians from all parts of the country. It is expected that that process should take place to get a clear sense of what Canadians want and what they believe are important elements in furthering the development of a stronger Canadian federation. It is in that context that we want this process to move ahead.

I think the hon. member would understand that it has not been charged with the responsibility of bringing forth a constitutional amendment. That can only be done by the government of the day in collaboration with the provinces. Of course, I think it would be prudent, and I am sure the hon. member would agree, that we get some expression of feeling from the Citizens' Forum before we embark upon any kind of exercise in proposing further constitutional amendments. That is the position of the government.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, my question is very simple and I ask the Minister to say yes or no.

Is there a group of public servants working behind closed doors to prepare constitutional amendments while Mr. Spicer goes to the public and pretends that he is listening to them? Is the government doing a parallel exercise behind closed doors? Has it learned anything from Meech Lake?

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. members: What the answer?

Mr. Ouellet: An article in The Ottawa Citizen states that there are public servants preparing constitutional amendments.

My question was very simple, Mr. Speaker. Are these people working behind closed doors and, if they are, when are they going to produce their document? Will the Spicer Commission be appraised of what the government is preparing?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I realize the hon. member wants a simple yes or no. I think I gave him a very simple answer. It would be, in our view, totally imprudent to embark upon a parallel process at this time which would advance suggestions for constitutional amendment before hearing from Canadians from coast to coast.

I agree with the hon. member. Quite simply, the Meech Lake process may very well have failed because of the lack of broad-based public input.

Some hon. members: What is the answer?

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, the answer is clearly no. The fact of the matter is that we have a process in place. We want that process to work and, if it is necessary to develop recommendations for constitutional amendment, the government will act in a responsible fashion, as it would be expected to do.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment.

The Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench rejected the sworn evidence of Environment Canada that irreparable harm to the environment will result from the continued construction of the Raffety-Alameda project. There are grounds for the appeal, as the Minister has pointed out, but, like the Oldman dam in Alberta, the project may well be completed before the court finally rules, making the assessment no more than a coroner's inquest.

Has the Minister asked the Prime Minister to call the Premier of Saskatchewan to ask for a delay, to use the political process instead of the courts, and delay the project to allow for irreparable harm to be assessed? Or, is irreparable harm as acceptable to the Prime Minister as it apparently is to Premier Devine?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as I have answered to some of my colleagues across the way earlier today, we are taking every legal step necessary to ensure that the full review process be conducted.

I fully understand that there are elements in this case which suggest that we can launch a successful appeal and allow the process of full environmental review to be completed. That is what we are engaged in and we hope to be able to succeed in that effort.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the Rafferty–Alameda project is being constructed under a second federal licence under the International Rivers Improvement Act.

Does the Minister really expect the Canadian public to believe that the federal government has no power to amend, to suspend, or to rescind the federal licence, keeping in mind that this is the second one that has been issued by the federal government, in order to allow for an assessment of irreparable harm to the Canadian environment? Does the Minister expect anyone in Canada to believe that irreparable harm means anything and then the government does nothing?

• (1440)

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the facts in this matter are very clear with respect to the licence. I mentioned them earlier and I will mention them again.

The licence was issued. The licence contains a number of conditions. In fact, I believe there are some 22 conditions to the licence. All of them, to date, have been respected and it is totally illegal for the Government of Canada to move unilaterally to revoke the licence at this point.

ENERGY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology, and it concerns Canada's sovereignty in matters relating to our energy policy.

[English]

For the second time in as many weeks, Premier Bob Rae has sold out Canada by giving provincial approval for the takeover of Consumers Gas by British Gas.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Ms. Copps: I would like to ask the federal Minister of Industry if he is prepared to step in where Bob Rae fears to tread? Is he prepared to use his considerable powers, under Investment Canada, to block the takeover of Consumers Gas by British Gas?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to say to the hon. member for Hamilton East that I will step in, not only with Premier Rae, but with former Premier Peterson who accepted the deal before he was defeated.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I can only anticipate that the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology will follow my advice of last week and instruct Investment Canada to block the sale. If he does intend to block the sale, can he give us his instructions to Investment Canada?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, of course not, because we consider, as did the Government of Ontario twice, that foreign investors are not a sin for Canada because they can provide a lot of benefits. It was considered as such by both governments in Ontario and we think that they were right. That is why we accepted the deal.

My colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton East, should know that investments are good for Canada and we would hope that she will support that kind of deal.

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and it concerns the continuing conflict of interest by the resigned Hamilton Harbour Commissioner, Peter Lush.

The legal opinion of a Toronto law firm, commissioned by the Minister of Transport, confirms that Hamilton Harbour Commission Chairman Peter Lush was in a continuing conflict of interest from day one.

How could the minister, a lawyer and the former Attorney General of Canada, have stood in his place and repeatedly denied the obvious? Will the minister admit that by ignoring the facts he was, in fact, part of the problem?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when the allegations were first brought to my attention last March, we dealt with the situation to the satisfaction of all involved, including my hon. friend who first raised the matter.

When further allegations were brought to my attention, I engaged a lawyer from a reputable Toronto firm who rendered a decision which indicated that, in his opinion, there was a breach of conflict of interest.

I am in the process of writing to all the Crown agencies which have conflict of interest guidelines to apprise them of the report by the lawyer whom we commissioned.

Mr. Lush has resigned from the commission. The report has been made available to the RCMP and an investigation is ongoing. We consider the matter closed.

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, in fact, what the minister said in a most recent exchange with me was, and I quote: "I looked into the allegations of last March", when I raised the issue nine months ago, "and found them to be untrue". Then he says he will look into this one, and I will bet the same answer stands. And yet, by the transport minister's own hand commissioning a law firm in Toronto to look into this—

An hon. member: A Tory firm.

Mr. Keyes: —the breach is there.

My supplementary is to the Deputy Prime Minister. Peter Lush has said that he would not have become a harbour commissioner if it meant giving up his listings, but the government made the appointment anyway. Since 1987, Mr. Lush has received over half a million dollars in commission fees while in a continuing conflict of interest. Will the Deputy Prime Minister seek to reclaim those moneys and then dismiss his Minister of Transport?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the report has been made available to the Hamilton Harbour Commission. Any further action of a civil nature would be up to the commission. I am sure that they will review this matter with their counsel.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. This government claims that the GST is going to help manufacturing companies in this country. Yet manufacturers which process and re-export U.S. goods, like Dart Machinery and ARD Industries which told me last week that on the contrary, the GST will hurt them badly. Why has the government forced these firms to pay GST when at this stage they do not pay the manufacturers' sales tax? Does the minister not realize that there is going to be serious damage to them in their competition with U.S. counterparts as a result?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it really does surprise me that the hon. member would ask this type of question. He is a member of the finance committee. He has participated in the studies of the GST. I am sure he knows that the GST will lower the cost of capital for all manufacturing companies, and for those manufacturing companies they are selling to.

I should also point out to him that there is indirect federal tax that these companies do not get credit for that they will get a credit for under the GST. This will result in substantial savings for them, a reduction in their cost of doing business and an improvement of their competitive position internationally.

If my hon. friend does not believe what I have to say, maybe he should speak to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association which since the middle fifties have been after successive governments to remove the existing sales tax and, most recently, bring in a tax like the GST for the very simple reason that it will improve the position of manufacturing companies in Canada.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Perhaps, if the hon. minister does not believe me, he should talk to the dozens of firms across this country which are going to be hit hard as inward processors by this change in taxation. We are talking about thousands of auto parts and machinery jobs. The government has known about this problem since last May. Why has it refused to listen? Why did it introduce regulations on October 29 that make these manufacturing firms pay GST when he knows that this is going to damage these companies, their employees and their communities right across this country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a distortion of the impact of the goods and services tax on manufacturing companies. It is true that manufacturing companies do get credit for the direct manufactured sales tax that they pay on their cost of doing business, but it is also true that the manufacturing companies get no credit for the indirect federal sales tax that they are already paying today.

Mr. Langdon: You missed the point.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): He says I miss the point. With respect, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member misses the point.

• (1450)

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The mayors and other authorities of Makivik and Kativik, communities in the Nunavut region in Northern Quebec, are concerned about the implementation of the GST in Northern Quebec. Could the Minister of Finance inform the House today how the GST will affect the people of Nunavut in Northern Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the GST will be replacing an existing sales tax which already causes costs and prices in northern parts of the country to be increased. There will be credits against the payments made on transportation, transportation costs that are inflated today by the federal sales tax on fuels such as gasoline and diesel fuels.

I should also say to the hon. member that the changes the government has brought forward in relation to the northern benefits allowance for people living in northern parts of the country is also a benefit to a number of people who previously did not receive that particular benefit.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same minister. Canadians from the Northwest Territories, Yukon, Labrador and northern Quebec are in Ottawa today because they do not agree with the minister's concept of what this tax will do to them.

In Canada's northern communities, the cost of living can be up to twice what it is in the rest of Canada.

Given that the GST for northerners is going to be piled on top of their much higher cost of living expenses, will the minister at least be honest enough to admit that the GST is one more discriminatory blow against northern Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I repeat some of the same points I made in answer to my colleague just this minute. There is tax that is already in the cost to people who live in the north. The cost of food as an example includes tax today. That tax will be removed as a result of the GST so my hon. friend is wrong when he only focuses on certain elements of the sales tax system in the country.

I would also tell my friend that because the GST will benefit resource industries, which are important employers in the northern parts of the country, it will improve the economy of northern parts of the country because of the benefits it will have for resource sectors.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, when is this minister going to realize that his responsibilities extend to all Canadians, not just his few remaining friends on Bay Street? When is he going to listen to these people who have come to us from the north and who know what the impact of the GST is going to be on them? Will the minister, please, at least listen to Canadians, especially to northern Canadians who are going to suffer most under his tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member completely neglects the impact of the GST credit on people who are living in the north. Many people in the north will receive the benefits of the GST credit, which will put them in a better position after the GST is in place than is the case now.

I say to the hon. member that if he is interested in helping those people, he will go down the hall and speak to the senators because the senators are clearly not listening to Jean Chrétien. They are ignoring Jean Chrétien. The senators down the hall are holding up the introduction of the GST with the GST credit.

CONVENTIONAL FORCES IN EUROPE AGREEMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister.

Today, the countries of NATO and the Warsaw Pact have concluded an historic agreement to significantly cut military forces in Europe and have virtually ended the cold war.

As a result of this treaty, I would like to ask the minister what will be the impact on Canada's military and foreign policy. In particular, what are the government's plans to redeploy Canadian forces in Europe, either to bring them home or to give them a new role as a result of these significant changes?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to my hon. colleague's question. Again, it is recognized that the signing of the CFE treaty is indeed an historic event. I was there when they started this discussion a year and a half ago. We were all delighted at the outcome.

I think the hon. member also realizes that the reductions provided for in the first CFE are primarily on the eastern European side. On the NATO side, they are not as considerable at this point in time. Although all the details are not known, we do not expect that it will actually affect our Canadian troops in Europe.

Nevertheless, we have already decided that we are going to be reducing our forces by about 1,400. We will be looking, as we proceed, with CFE-IA as to what the potential impacts on Canadian military participation in Europe might be. I would also like to advise my hon. colleague that one role that Canada will be playing as a result of the CFE agreement is in the area of verification. We have taken an active part and we look forward to participating in what we think can be very important long-term benefits for the security of Europe through that participation.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, in 1987 the government produced a white paper on defence policy which was based on a cold war scenario.

As a result of today's treaty and other changes in Europe, when will the government officially withdraw this white paper and put in place a process to develop a new defence policy consistent with today's agreement and other emerging threats to world security? When are we going to have some changes in this defence policy consistent with today's world?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, we all know that the world has changed dramatically in the past year. These are changes that I do not think anyone could anticipate. That obviously has impacts on our military strategy for the future.

That is why we have been undertaking a very intensive defence policy review and will be continuing that work and, hopefully, bringing it to a conclusion in early 1991.

My colleague will recognize that events in the Persian Gulf have an impact on this. We have to consider our military strategy with respect to Canada and its relationships in the total world, not just in Europe. That work is proceeding and we look forward to discussions with the defence committee and other colleagues, hopefully in the new year.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, section 281 of the National Defence Act calls for a provincial inquiry in a report to the Secretary of State whenever Canadian forces are requisitioned by a province to deal with riot or civil disturbance.

Is the minister satisfied with the Quebec government's two page typewritten report, in the absence of an inquiry, as meeting the requirements of the National Defence Act, and justifying the expense of 22 million tax dollars, the embarrassment of Canada internationally, and a legacy of bitterness between Canada and its native peoples?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, the National Defence Act does not actually say what kind of a report. The report has been provided. I would not want to comment on that further.

What I want to say is that, as the hon. member knows, our Armed Forces personnel were used to assist in aid to civil order at the requisition of the province of Quebec. They carried out their task efficiently and very effectively so that the very difficult issue at Oka was able to be resolved without further bloodshed.

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, compared to the $22 million spent on the military solution at Oka, negotiations in good faith would have resulted in the land claims settlement costing approximately $4 million.

Would the minister not admit that the government's failure to negotiate in good faith, and to fulfil commitments it made to the Mohawks many years ago, has resulted in military costs five times in excess of the costs of the land claims solution, in addition to the unquantifiable costs to Canadian society that will be borne for years to come?

• (1500 )

The hon. member certainly knows that we are engaged in a process of negotiation with the people of the Mohawk community, the Mohawk Negotiating Coalition at Kanesatake, and the government. As it was doing before the unfortunate events which commenced on July 15, the government will resolve those matters in an honourable fashion on behalf of the Mohawk people at Kanesatake.

CANADA POST

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for Canada Post.

Last week in my riding I met with the residents of Fredericton Junction, a small village in New Brunswick. My question revolves around the four-tenths of a kilometre policy in relation to rural mail delivery. The post office has arbitrarily decided that the residents of Fredericton Junction who live four-tenths of a kilometre outside the village will now have to have rural mail delivery.

This creates some problems. It is a village that has mostly senior citizens. The physical construction of that town will make it virtually impossible for those residents to erect mail boxes. There is plenty of room in the existing post offices for them to continue to walk to the village post office to receive their mail.

Will the minister send one of his officials, a senior official, to Fredericton Junction to look at the circumstances of that town personally? Also, will he examine the flexibility of that system?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post offers every Canadian one mode of delivery free of charge, be it door to door, community mailbox, rural route or general delivery. From time to time changes are made, people move and so on, but the general policy is to provide that which has been provided historically.

If the hon. member is suggesting that the policy is not being offered here in an even-handed manner, I will certainly get in touch with Canada Post and ask it to look into the matter. It is a Crown corporation. I cannot order it to do so, but I am sure it will respond to my request.

PRIVILEGE

STANDING COMMITTEE ON ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On October 22, 1990 the member for Western Arctic presented a motion to the House which was adopted by unanimous consent. The motion called for the subject matter of the events at Kanesatake and Kahnawake during the summer of 1990 to be referred to the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs.

My concern arises from statements made by the chairman of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs to the media following the last meeting. He said in part, and I am quoting from The Hill Times: "I am not saying that somebody shouldn't look into this. I am saying at this stage the committee has a full agenda".

In the reporter's words, the member for Macleod said to the committee that the committee had a heavy agenda and could not deal with every issue. "He has suggested in the past that some issues could be handled by the justice committee".

The statements by the member for Macleod to The Hill Times lead me to the conclusion that he is not interested in having the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs act on the terms of reference presented to his committee by unanimous resolution of the House, or else he feels that someone else should deal with the issue.

I am concerned that the chairman of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs is interfering with the corporate right of this House to require committees to undertake reviews. Such interference can only be contemptuous of the authority of this House.

I would therefore ask you, Mr. Speaker, to rule on the following questions. Can a committee refuse terms of reference referred to it by unanimous resolution of the House? Can a committee only examine a narrow aspect of the terms of reference assigned by the House rather than the subject matter in broad terms, as stated by the resolution in the House? Third, can a committee give low priority to the terms of reference assigned by the House in unanimous motion?

This is a matter of urgent concern for members. If we were to pass legislation with respect to the health and safety of airline passengers, and the airline or government agency decided not to accept the legislation, or to delay implementation, or to assign the legislation a low priority, members would be clamouring to the Speaker demanding action and respect for Parliament's decision. We should expect no less from our own standing committees and their officers.

Mr. Ken Hughes (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak very briefly on this question as chairman of the standing committee. Of course I await your guidance on this, in response to the hon. member's questions and points.

It is important to note in your consideration, Mr. Speaker, that the committees are masters of their own fate in making up their agenda. In fact, the committee had an open public meeting the week before last, in which the topics to be determined or the terms of reference for the committee activity were discussed in public. We agreed at that point to come back at an early opportunity to discuss further the terms of reference of this particular study.

It is important, Mr. Speaker, for you to know that the committee is currently in the process of discussing the terms of reference of this committee in this particular study and other issues on its agenda.

It is also important to note that the most recent meeting was held in public, which meeting was reported on by the media, and that subsequently comments were made by members from all sides of the House. I just wanted to bring those matters to your attention, Sir.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I have heard enough. First of all, it is not a question of privilege, but I have listened carefully because I did not know quite where it might finally end up. It is not a question of privilege and, as hon. members know, it is not the place for the Speaker to interfere with committees.

Having said that, I listened very carefully to the hon. member for Macleod. The reason that I listened very carefully was that it is clear to me that the committee is still considering the matter.

I have said before that while the rule is that generally speaking, and certainly in most circumstances, it is not for a Speaker to interfere with the workings of the committee, I of course assume, having said that, that the committee is working. The hon. member for Macleod has made it clear that the matter is under consideration.

I am not saying today that if what was brought before me was an absolute defiance of an order of this House I might not have a different view of the matter.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought I should rise to inform the House that the city of Vancouver this weekend had a referendum on the GST, and it was 15 per cent in favour and—

Mr. Speaker: I certainly appreciate the interest of the hon. member to advise the House of what is going on in the city from whence I come, but I do not think that that is a point of order.

COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege arising out of Question Period, of which I have given you notice. I have also notified the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology.

In fact, during the course of Question Period the minister of industry made a statement which was false. He stated falsely in the House that the previous Liberal government had in fact approved the takeover of Consumers Gas by British Gas. We have been in touch with not only the former premier himself but also the treasurer. That is a false statement.

I am sure that the minister of industry would not want a false statement to remain on the record. I would like to invite him to use this opportunity to correct the record and to put the facts on the table, that his statement during Question Period was patently false.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period I said that the Premier— I did not say the government or the Ontario Cabinet— I said that Premier Peterson agreed with the Consumers Gas proposal, and he confirmed this during the election campaign.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that what I said was true. I will make further inquiries, but I repeat, I maintain what I said during Question Period.

• (1510)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I have listened to the hon. member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: It is a false statement.

Mr. Speaker: Just a moment.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if hon. members would help the Chair.

I have listened carefully to what the hon. member for Hamilton East has said. I have now listened to the hon. minister. I am going to examine the "blues" carefully and, if it is necessary, I will come back to the Chamber. I may even hear further argument.

I do not need to hear further argument this afternoon. I am going to look at the "blues" and, if necessary, I will hear further argument.

This was an international meeting of indigenous members of Parliament which provided an opportunity for parliamentarians to meet on matters of common interest.

Four major topics were discussed this year, including the desire of indigenous peoples to become more involved in environmental matters, in particular the UN conference scheduled for Brazil in 1992.

Other resolutions concerned the ILO Convention 169, human rights violations and the fifth centenary commemoration for 1492.

I am also pleased to report that Canada will be host to the fifth meeting of this parliament.

HUMAN RIGHTS AND THE STATUS OF DISABLED PERSONS

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches—Woodbine): I move that the second report of the Standing Committee on Human Rights and the Status of Disabled Persons, presented to the House on Monday, June 18, 1990 be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The hon. member for Beaches—Woodbine has the floor.

Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we all agree that this report should be adopted. Why do we have to debate such a motion if we all agree that it should be adopted?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is in a sense correct. We all agree with this report. My hon. colleague from Beaches—Woodbine wants to indicate a few concerns that go beyond the report, but we are quite prepared to vote on concurrence later today.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, my only point is that since we all agree, I hardly see the use of having a debate. However, if we are going to have a debate, I want to make sure that the member for Hamilton-Mountain will have a chance to make the remarks she wants to put to this motion. I understand that the government wants to put a speaker up also. If we all agree to having the motion now put to a vote, we will adopt it without debate, but if it has to be debated, let us make an agreement that we all have a chance to speak to this motion.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I am sorry to interrupt, but until it receives further notice, the Chair feels it has sufficient grounds to recall that even if the motion has been adopted, a member may speak to it if he so wishes.

I therefore recognize the hon. member for Beaches—Woodbine. First, however, the Government Whip has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make it clear that from the government point of view, the cabinet has reviewed the document and is quite in favour of all the recommendations. All members on our side would adopt the report and we could move on to other business of importance to the nation. When we are all in agreement like this, it does seem to be a bit of a bad use of the $2 million a day, or whatever it is it costs this place to debate something that we are all agreed to in the first place.

• (1520)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, when we are dealing with a whole set of recommendations regarding the disabled people of Canada, I do not think we need to feel we have to act quickly. A lot of thought went into this.

I have listened to the Liberal and Conservative spokespersons. May I suggest that we have one round of speakers each if they wish.

As a matter of fact we have offered that for many days. This does not come as a surprise. We have clearly indicated that this is our inclination, to allow us to get on with business, and yet have an important discussion by hearing from each of the political parties about the concerns of the disabled of Canada. I do not think that is expecting too much.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I appreciate the comments of hon. members, but once again, the Chair has no choice but to apply the Standing Orders, and I recognize the hon. member for Beaches—Woodbine.

First, however, the Opposition House Leader has the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Chair is in a delicate position, but nevertheless, the NDP House Leader did suggest that we hear one speaker from each party. I think you would find that this proposal would meet with the unanimous consent of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Does the House agree with this proposal?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I therefore recognize the mover of the motion, the hon. member for Beaches—Woodbine.

[English]

Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised that even the motion itself caused some controversy. We happen to be talking about over three million Canadians who have a disability of one form or another. I would have thought the House would have welcomed an opportunity to say a few words not only about the report of the committee itself, but also of the response from the government to that report.

The committee report I referred to is the second report of the Standing Committee on Human Rights and the Status of Disabled Persons. It is entitled The Consensus for Action for the Economic Integration of Disabled Persons.

This report in a very clear, concise, unambiguous way reflects the frustration, impatience and even the anger of the disabled population in this country. I have been on this committee for some 10 years, since its inception, and it is the first time that I have sensed that deep sense of frustration among that important segment of Canada's population.

What this support does, Mr. Speaker, is not only offer an analysis of what the problems are in terms of government policy, or the lack of it, but it offers very concrete ways in which we can get at these problems. In that respect, this report has a very short list of six recommendations. It is not a wish list. It is not a shopping list. It is six very clear, concrete recommendations on what should happen between now and next June, National Access Awareness Week. It is as simple as that. It is not a very complicated report. It is very blunt. It is very clear, and it deserves a much more full response from the government than what we got a week or so ago on November 6.

Mr. Speaker, after reading the government's response I really wonder whether the people who wrote that response had even read the report. If they had read it, they certainly did not understand what that report was saying, or what the disabled community in Canada have been saying to this committee, this government, provincial governments, municipal governments and regional governments over the years. This report was not by way of giving advice to the government. It was a report to urge the government to take action over inequities that have existed within this community for at least the last 10 or 11 years since the Obstacles report first identified these problems. That was the purpose of that report.

We have had advice coming out of our ears over the last 10 or so years and this report did not have to give any other further advice. The advice is there for anyone to see. The advice is contained in the Obstacles report, in the Obstacles progress report, in the report Surmounting Obstacles, it is in the National Policy on Transportation of the Disabled, which by the way was adopted by this Parliament in 1983. It was the Abella report, Mr. Speaker, which you will recall dealt with employment opportunities. It was dealt with in the all-party report again, Equality for All. I could on and on about the countless reports and documentation that has been presented to this House.

I would be the last one to argue that there have not been some changes made in the last 10 or 11 years since the Obstacles report came out. However, I would make the argument that an awful lot of these changes have been marginal at best and very many have been cosmetic. There have been cosmetic changes and very marginal. That, again, is unfortunate and indeed sad.

In the government's response to this latest report, and especially to the six recommendations, they made a positive response on one and that is welcomed; that is to fund a post-census survey of issues affecting Canada's disabled in the next census. That report is welcomed and it is extremely important because it will finally give us information so that we can talk to government departments and, indeed, cabinet ministers can use that very important information to formulate needed policies and to bring forward programs after they have had that information.

However, on balance the rest of the government's response was, to say the least, disappointing and extremely sad. The government response followed every cliché and argument that has been followed by every other previous minister in every other previous government. I would say it was a lack of response. They used exactly the same language that the previous government used to appease not only the committee but the people who were addressing the committee, who were coming to us with the problems, as they saw it, looking for some kind of redress.

One of the major problems in the government's response has been one that we recognized when we were dealing with the Obstacles report. We initially made those 130 recommendations on what we felt should be done to address the problems that society has, let alone the disabled community, because those problems affect us all. The one central problem is the lack of accountability. It is the lack of action, even if there is an expressed political will among cabinet ministers individually or collectively to do something concrete about these concerns. That is the key problem.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, if you go back to the original Obstacles report, you will find that the committee addressed that concern. Based on experiences gathered in other jurisdictions, particularly in Europe, where governments who had been a bit ahead of ourselves in many of these respects had told us that nothing would happen in a very positive way unless first of all a minister of the Crown was given sole responsibility, a policeman if you will, to make sure that not only other cabinet members but people in cabinet offices and in various government departments did what they were asked to do by the politicians. Based on their own experiences over the last 10 or 11 years, I suspect that is the one element that has been missing.

I am not saying it is being done in a bad way, but I am saying that the pressure has not been there. There has not been a process of accountability set up to make sure that people are doing what they are supposed to be doing. That is why we are still having problems with integration, both economic and social integration. That is the key problem and that is why we took the time to address those concerns in this particular report. The whole accountability question dominates this report. That is why we chose to title this report A Consensus for Action.

In the last year or so, we have heard not only from people in the disability community, but we heard from government bureaucrats, ministers, and a whole range of people in the public sector. We are convinced that there is a public political will to support change. There is no question about that. The problem comes from those people who are supposed to develop policy and make sure that policy is being enacted so that the political will that we have observed is actually carried out.

I have some examples of where the political will exists, at least on paper. The Throne Speech of November 5, 1984, insofar as it affects disabled Canadians, stated:

> It is time to recognize also the responsibility we all share to bring those amongst us who suffer from physical and mental disabilities into the productive mainstream of Canadian life.

That is a clear-stated government policy on November 5, 1984.

Now I will come to October 1, 1986. In another Speech from the Throne, the government stated that "Canadians recognize the courage and talent of our disabled citizens. Inspired by the example of Rick Hansen, we are made more aware of the potential for new directions and initiatives to aid the disabled."

On the next page it goes on to state: "Honourable members, you will be asked to consider amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act which will represent further progress in the long march of this nation towards full equality."

That was in 1986. The government again, a week and a half ago, said exactly the same thing. What is the problem? Why are we not seeing these amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act? It is a relatively simple demand. It is clearly understood. It is accepted by government. Why not do it? That is the second Speech from the Throne.

Now we come to 1988. If one recalls, it was a very short speech because the government had only one item on its agenda at that time. Again, in only two lines it said:

> My government is determined to secure the benefits of economic opportunity for this and future generations of Canadians.

That was in 1988. I would assume that that also included disabled Canadians.

Again, on April 3, 1989, it was mentioned. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, it was reduced to one-and-three-quarters lines by this time. It stated:

> It must make full participants of disabled persons and visible minorities. It is imperative that literacy initiatives, education, training and retraining of Canada's work force, especially our youth, reflect the requirements of a modern economy.

The Liberals before them made the same kind of statements that they wanted to do the same kind of good work for disabled Canadians. Mr. Speaker, we are still waiting. The problem is not just words.

If we wanted words, there are all kinds of nice words floating around. Everybody says nice things about the disabled community. What is absent is action. The words are very nice and they are very welcome, but it would be a hell of a lot better if we had some action tied to these words.

I want to give some examples about what happened and has happened successively since the tabling of the Obstacles report, and the government of the day's response to that report. Here is what the committee report says in reference to that.

Two years after the report was released, a gap showed up between the expectations of those committed to the findings in the report and the will of those responsible for the implementation of the recommendations. Initially, in December 1981, the government responded enthusiastically and made commitments to act on over 80 recommendations of the Obstacles report. In Surmounting Obstacles—that was the government's response—which was released in 1983, the government indicated action or active consideration of all recommendations in the original report, except those that were withdrawn or were outside federal jurisdiction. Where no direct implementation of the recommendations was undertaken, Surmounting Obstacles repeatedly stated that reviews were being undertaken, that data was being gathered, or that discussions were under way.

That is exactly what the minister's response was a week and a half ago. Exactly the same.

What the committee said in respect to the previous government's response was that this was a polite way of saying that many of the recommendations in Obstacles were quietly being shelved.

The gap between these expectations and the actions has widened ever since. It does not have to be that way.

I want to give a perfect example about what we are talking about here. In the government's response of a week and a half ago, an awful lot of emphasis was placed on how government agencies and departments, et cetera, were working together and what a really great job they were doing.

I want to read a letter that I received from the British Columbia Coalition of the Disabled, dated September 6, 1990. This letter was originally sent to Max Yalden, the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. It states:

> Dear Mr. Yalden:
> Re: Access to Crab Park for persons with disabilities—
> We are extremely displeased with the Vancouver Port Authority's proposed plan to address the lack of access for persons with disabilities to Crab Park.

The Vancouver Port Authority is a federal agency. The letter continues:

> The access design they are recommending is totally inappropriate and has been rejected by the community and professional engineers for some considerable time.

You may not be aware of the thousands of volunteer hours that have gone into seeking an appropriate solution to this problem. Since December, 1986, community groups have organized public meetings, written briefs, lobbied all levels of government, canvassed the surrounding district and held demonstration picnics—

Three years ago, when Ms Joan Meister filed her complaint under the Canadian Human Rights Act we endorsed her position and have remained active in the ongoing community and municipal meetings.

According to the professional advice we have received and the consultations we have conducted, the Columbia Street overpass is the only viable solution to the access problem. For this plan to be operational it is essential that the Vancouver Port Authority co-operate fully with the City of Vancouver.

In our opinion, the Vancouver Port Authority has been stonewalling the whole consultative process. Indeed, their latest proposal to you is merely another example of their unwillingness to act in good faith.

We are talking about an access to a public park controlled by a federal authority for disabled Canadians. They want to do this because there is an international congress and exposition for persons with disabilities to be held in that location in the spring of 1992. Among many of the dignitaries who will be at that congress, if we can refer to them in that way, will be the Prime Minister. What kind of message are these people sending to the disabled community?

• (1540)

I see it is indicated that my time is up, but I want to end with just one other brief policy area and that is with respect to the refunds under the GST that is proposed.

Many people will remember that the last time we made amendments to the Canada Pension Plan to improve pensions for people with disabilities, the federal Parliament authorized a substantial increase. By the time it got to the provincial level, provincial governments were grabbing the money. They were saying simply that this was a payment that had to be calculated when determining provincial benefits, whether it be welfare or disability pensions, and so they deducted an equivalent amount from the payments the province was paying to these people. It ended up a boondoggle to provincial governments, rather than going to help people who had disabilities.

There is a real fear the same thing will happen with the refunds under the GST if it passes. I asked the Minister of National Revenue a month or so ago what he was going to do about this. He said, and I quote:

> —the hon. member will know that the federal government cannot control the actions and activities of the provincial government.

Well, that is true and we all know that, but he can certainly sit down and talk to provincial governments and say to them that we do not want them to do this. At the very least, the Minister of National Revenue should be doing that. But he is unwilling to do even that.

I would ask every member of the House, not only to support this report in principle, but to sit down, read it, and lobby within our own caucuses to finally get the policy makers to do something in a concrete way about these very serious issues.

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I think there is a lot of merit in the motion of the hon. member for Beaches—Woodbine, but what I fail to understand is this. He made the motion asking for six recommendations for the government's consideration, I believe on November 7, and on November 8 he received a reply indicating a very positive response. I think that is only in keeping with the government's record.

I take as one example the co-operation with Rick Hansen and the Man in Motion Society to develop a school package for kindergarten to Grade 8, the Discover Together Program. Our government has done all kinds of things for the disabled people of Canada. I think they have come to know this and, in fact, a school is named after Rick Hansen in my riding of London—Middlesex.

Canadians can see the government is committed to those less fortunate and our record speaks for that. In light of that, when the member got those six positive responses, I wonder why he is taking time up today to debate this motion. He knows that we are in agreement for people who find themselves in this situation and, indeed, are doing everything we can to make Canada's society more fulfilling for all Canadians.

Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Well, if the hon. member had listened to what I said, he would know I said that I think political will existed. That is what I said.

I perhaps should have said at the beginning, and I mean this sincerely, that committee on disabled issues is probably the most non-partisan committee the House has ever seen. There was nothing partisan in me putting forward this motion. In fact, I do not think I used a partisan term or word in the course of my whole 20-minute discourse.

What I do say is that pointing a finger at this little item, or that little item, or another little item, is largely cosmetic. We want to see it become an integral part of government thinking—and I am not talking about just the cabinet, but the government thinking policy-makers—to consider the disabled community when they are making decisions.

I wonder if the hon. member knows that, in the recent initiative on developing employment opportunities in Canada by Employment and Immigration, the disabled community was not even mentioned and was not even thought of. It was not until they mounted an argument and a lobby that they began to be even included. That is the kind of thing we want changed, not only in the federal government, but in provincial and municipal governments.

If the hon. member sincerely feels that we should not be using the time of the House to debate such an important matter, that is fine with me, he does not have to participate in the debate. But I would urge him to do so because this matter is of so much importance to the way we, the able-bodied, see Canada, that unless we come to terms with these very key arguments, I do not think we will come to recognize the problem let alone the solutions.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I speak on behalf of the government today to join in the concurrence in the motion that is before us and to acknowledge the valuable work of the Standing Committee on Human Rights and the Status of Disabled Persons in their report A Consensus for Action—The Economic Integration of Disabled Persons. I want to underline the government's commitment to the objectives of the economic integration for Canadians with disabilities.

On November 8 the Secretary of State for Canada tabled with the House of Commons the government's positive response to the second report of the Standing Committee on Human Rights and The Status of Disabled Persons. It was tabled in written form, as is the usual way, but it was also tabled in video form so that those persons who are unable to read the written word are able to appreciate the report also.

Every member of the House recognizes that 13 per cent of our population with disabilities, some 3.2 million Canadians, have a long way yet to go before they can achieve the same rights to access and participation in the life of our society and country that most of us take for granted. Nowhere is that more evident than when it comes to the question of economic integration. Persons with disabilities are among the poorest members of our society. Sixty per cent of the disabled in the 1986 census reported incomes under $10,000, and their participation rate in the paid labour force is only slightly above half of that of adult Canadians without a disability.

Without economic integration, very few Canadians with disabilities will ever know economic independence, and without that independence, participation in society will seldom be realized.

We know that within the disabled community of Canada there is a resource of talent and ability which, given the opportunity, can not only improve the lives of persons with disabilities themselves, but also contribute significantly to our society's growth and prosperity.

These are the beliefs reflected in the recommendations of the standing committee's report. When the government tabled its response to the standing committee's report on November 8, my colleague, the Secretary of State, clearly signalled its commitment to the chairperson of the standing committee, the hon. member for Oxford. I am so pleased that he is in the House today. He has shown nearly 20 years of commitment to the disabled community and he is to be commended for that tremendous work.

The government also shared in that letter to the chairman of the committee that we would build on the beliefs of those recommendations addressing the needs of persons with disabilities.

Let us look at the standing committee's recommendation and the government's positive response to them.

• (1550)

Recommendation one of the standing committee called for the Government of Canada to work with the committee, the voluntary sector, the private sector, labour and with the disabled community itself to bring forward a national strategy to achieve the economic integration of persons with disabilities.

What was the government response? In no uncertain terms the government pledged itself to the objective of economic integration. It pledged that not only would the minister responsible for the disabled work in partnership toward this goal, but that the Ministers of Health and Welfare, Employment and Immigration, and Finance, would be partners in that work as well.

The obligation is given in the same sense of partnership through which the government supported the establishment of the standing committee itself.

One might also remember that it was this government which established National Access Awareness Week. That week is yet another model of the partnership called for in the standing committee report and has already, since its inception, led to new initiatives across our society to create better access for Canadians with disabilities.

Let us turn to recommendation two of the committee report. The recommendation calls for an effective cross-government mechanism to ensure constant monitoring, advocacy and co-ordination of policy, legislation and regulations on behalf of persons with disabilities.

Mr. Speaker, we believe that the only way to deliver such a mechanism and ensure its effectiveness is to engage the permanent members of the Public Service in the process. That is why we have already responded to this recommendation by establishing a committee of deputy ministers charged with this responsibility.

This committee will review regulations and policy and legislation before they become cast in iron. They will catch errors and discriminatory practices before they are put into effect. The idea is to create a mechanism which is proactive, not reactive. I believe this committee of deputy ministers will forge ahead in this regard.

Recommendation two and the government's response is to reflect the concerns of government, this House and the disabled community to establish a proactive mechanism as the heart of government, in particular for the future.

But what about existing legislation which may not reflect the needs of persons with disabilities; which may even support and sustain barriers between Canadians with disabilities and further integration?

This is the concern of recommendation three of the committee's report, which is addressed by calling for a comprehensive review of legislation and regulations and changes where necessary.

This is a truly mammoth undertaking, and I am sure that the committee, the chairman and former chairman of the committee realize how big a job this really is. It cannot be reasonably accomplished overnight, but it will be accomplished because if it is not, the whole process and purpose of monitoring and co-ordinating policy and regulations on behalf of persons with disabilities is indeed meaningless.

Our objective is to change, and it will happen. The government has already indicated in its response to recommendation three the scope of this review and its objectives. It has also stated that areas of legislation identified by the disabled community itself will receive priority consideration.

Recommendation four of the standing committee report concerns employment equity. I can well understand the frustration of some at what they may see as the slow pace of change within the federal government under employment equity.

I think it is important for all of us not to lose sight of the fact that even though the Employment Equity Act was passed in 1985, it is still only now coming into effect. But after the three-year waiting period and the first annual returns, we are beginning to come to a full evaluation and assessment of the policy and how it is working.

I believe it is working. Two years ago when the first annual report was tabled, only one employer within the jurisdiction of employment equity failed to report. Today, that company faces a $50,000 fine.

On the other side of the coin, however, more than 1,200 government suppliers have now signed certificates of commitment to employment equity.

In the federal Public Service itself, there are also advances. Between December 1988 and December 1989, the representation of people with disabilities in the management category rose some 1.8 per cent and 3.4 per cent in the administrative support category. In the same period full and part-time public servants with disabilities in indeterminate positions rose by 2.8 per cent and 2.7 per cent respectively.

On the committee's fifth recommendation, this government is the first to recognize that if we are to be serious in the objective of achieving economic integration or any integration for persons with disabilities, we cannot afford to ignore the role other levels of government can and must play in this work.

Integration happens on the local level. It happens in towns and communities and in our neighbourhoods. Access and participation are not abstracts, they concern the services, the localities of every-day life: transport, housing, recreation facilities, commerce, and the workplace.

It is the responsibility of all levels of government to work together within their jurisdictions to make integration happen. We cannot proceed to make changes and amendments in one area or at one level if we ignore the need for changes at others.

Again, this is precisely the approach the federal government has pursued in the past and will continue to pursue in the future.

As our response to the committee points out, federal, provincial and territorial ministers responsible for social services are at this time conducting a co-ordinated review of those services as they affect Canadians with disabilities. The ministers responsible for human rights have commissioned a report on employment equity initiatives for persons with disabilities. Our government has established the same co-operative partnership at the municipal level through the Federation of Canadian Municipalities in the promotion of national Access Awareness Week.

These are all solid initiatives. They are forging new awareness to the needs of Canadians with disabilities. They are also making progress in breaking down the barriers of ignorance and discrimination which have so often in the past prevented persons with disabilities from participating and proving their contribution to our society.

In 1986, the government undertook the first in-depth, post-censal survey to better understand the reality of life for those with disabilities. We learned much from that survey. But with that knowledge, we realize how many questions and issues remain unanswered. It is for this reason the government has responded immediately to the call in the standing committee's report for a 1991 post-censal survey as well. This second post-censal survey is very vital indeed. It is an expensive initiative in itself, $8.2 million, but it will be truly money well spent. It will be an invaluable tool in developing the policies to make integration for the disabled community a reality.

I believe that the government has responded to the recommendations of the standing committee in a forthright and positive manner. I am proud of what we have been able to accomplish, on behalf of Canadians with disabilities, over the last six years.

• (1600 )

I have mentioned many of those initiatives, but there are others such as the disability tax credit, which provided Canadian with disabilities over $100 million worth of tax credits last year alone; funding of independent living centres; research into transport systems and to promote accessible transportation under federal jurisdiction; the establishment of the status of disabled persons secretariat; the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program; the endowment of a prototype national fellow program at the University of British Columbia; the Discover Together Program developed in partnership with Rick Hansen and the Man in Motion Society to change attitudes about the disabled among children and teachers in our school system; the job accommodation network which provides over 24,000 ideas to help employers make their places of employment accessible to persons with disabilities; and DISC, the Disability Information System of Canada which links disabled persons from coast to coast with a computerized network of information and services as well as with other Canadians concerned with disability issues. And there is much more.

We know that these initiatives are not by themselves going to achieve the integration, the access, and the participation of our society which is the right of all of our citizens, each of us, those with disabilities no less than those without. It is our determination to work together until these objectives are indeed attained. They are solid achievements on the road to that attainment.

The standing committee was determined to set the government an agenda it could not ignore. The government is determined to meet that agenda at every step.

In my closing remarks I would like to applaud the view expressed in the unanimity of the standing committee that the rights of the disabled and the need to integrate these Canadians into the economic and social mainstream of our country are too important to trivialize by making them the subject of partisan debate.

It is in this manner that the government has responded to the standing committee report A Consensus for Action, not on behalf of some Canadians, but on behalf of all Canadians and not least the disabled themselves.

Ms. Beth Phinney (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by thanking the hon. member for Beaches—Woodbine for moving concurrence in the second report of the Standing Committee on Human Rights and the Status of Disabled Persons. This is an issue which should be non-partisan. By this I mean that all members should support the idea of a better way of life for those Canadians who are physically challenged.

I would like to preface my remarks with a brief history of our committee and how we come to this debate today.

In 1981 the report Obstacles was issued by the Special Committee on the Status of the Disabled, the first study of its kind in Canada. It was considered to be the most comprehensive study of this issue ever conducted by a parliamentary body. Obstacles made 130 recommendations dealing with a wide range of issues from legal, to social, to economic.

The government of the day took action on or gave active consideration to virtually all of the 130 recommendations.

In 1985 a subcommittee on equal rights of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs conducted a study which led to the recommendations on access to federal buildings and employment in the Public Service and federally regulated corporations. In the government's response Towards Equity, the government cited that it had recently established the Disabled Persons Secretariat under Secretary of State and passed a piece of legislation now know as the Employment Equity Act as initiatives which would better the community.

Finally, in 1987 the government was persuaded to establish a standing committee to deal exclusively with the issue of the status of the disabled. At that time the hon. Deputy Prime Minister committed that his government would increase employment of persons who were disabled in the Public Service to 3.3 per cent and allot $15 million and 400 person-hours to achieve this goal, an initiative which unfortunately Canadians are still awaiting.

In 1988 the new standing committee issued its first report known as No News is Bad News. The committee stated that persons with disabilities were finding it difficult to access information. It recommended that the government act to make publications available in other than print media and to amend the Broadcasting Act.

The second report of this committee is what we hope to concur in today. Each member of this House has some area of responsibility, whether they be a minister of the Crown, a parliamentary secretary to a minister or a critic of a certain portfolio. Unlike most portfolios, however, the Status of the Disabled deals with several ministries and overlaps many departments including Communications, Transport, Employment and Immigration, Health and Welfare, and the Human Rights Commission. I could go on to argue that all ministries touch this issue in some way.

The point is that with all these areas to consider, one would think that consensus would be next to impossible to achieve. Through the political will of committee members, consensus was achieved through the very report which we now debate.

Before committee members reached this consensus they had to ask themselves how parliamentarians could best serve the disabled community. The first and most important step is economic integration. It has often been said that the best social program is a job. With it come pride of achievement, a sense of purpose, and the ability to provide for oneself and family. No individual wants to be dependent on the state, so why implement programs that create disincentives to work?

Given the great number of barriers to the disabled, the Employment Equity Act was a step in the right direction. Although in theory it is a responsible initiative, in practice the current act needs tightening. As this act is scheduled for mandatory review in 1991, I would take this opportunity to urge the Minister of Employment and Immigration to establish this review as soon as possible after the new year.

How can we best achieve economic integration? The committee report sets out the basic steps to begin this long overdue process. While we should recognize that this report does not provide the ultimate solution, we must also consider that the road before us is long. A journey of a thousand miles begins with just one step.

In its first recommendation, the committee urges the government to make economic integration a priority. There seems to be little point in discussing support services until action is taken on economic integration. The government must recognize that people with disabilities can be as productive as those of us without physical limitations.

Given the ever shrinking labour pool to draw from, employers would be well served to start drawing from this community, and this takes government encouragement.

As I have already indicated, this issue crosses many ministerial borders and in fact is affected by almost every act of this Parliament.

In the committee's second and third recommendations we suggest that all existing acts be reviewed in order to facilitate the 3.3 million Canadians with disabilities. We further recommend that all future legislation and regulatory instruments be drafted with these Canadians in mind.

Employment equity provides an opportunity for employers to see just how productive persons with physical limitations can be. By setting the example through the federal Public Service, it is hoped that private industry will follow suit. We must be careful in this area, however, as recently we have seen federally regulated employers double and even triple counting to meet target numbers.

In the committee's fourth recommendation we urge that an internal audit be conducted to determine exactly how effective this program has been.

Not only does the issue of the disabled and their economic integration cross ministerial borders and responsibilities, but it encompasses federal and provincial jurisdictions as well. For this reason the committee recommends that the issue be placed on the agenda of the next First Ministers' Conference to establish what kind of co-operative efforts and programs may be entered into.

As important as the recommendations I have already covered are, the most important and most fundamental is that of funding for research.

How can we set employment equity targets or tailor specific government initiatives and programs if we do not know what the disabled community needs or wants. This data is crucial to laying the foundation for effective economic integration.

In 1986 the government conducted a post census survey of the disabled. In this study Statistics Canada conducted interviews with over 112,000 Canadians with disabilities. This research generated the data that parliamentarians, departments, and national consumer groups co-operatively work with today.

• (1610)

In February I asked the minister responsible for Statistics Canada if such a study would be conducted after the 1991 census, and at that time he offered no satisfactory answer.

In early October I again asked the minister, who responded that the government still did not have an answer. Several days later I wrote to the minister and was informed that a post census survey would be conducted after the 1991 general census.

It is difficult to believe that so much consideration had to be given to a survey so fundamental to the employment picture across Canada.

All the individuals from the disabled community to whom I have spoken, as well as the national consumer groups, were very pleased to learn that the government intends to act on this survey; that is, until we learned the details. We understand that the budget for the 1991 study will be only 40 per cent of the 1986 budget.

If this government intends to make this issue a priority one would think that this study, which will provide the information necessary for the next 10 years to design government programs effectively, should be more comprehensive than the one conducted four years ago.

The time for talk is over. As the title of the report indicates, we need action, concrete action. Token initiatives such as Action Awareness Week will no longer suffice. Even the corporations, once great advocates and contributors, realize this point.

Recently McDonald's, IBM, and Esso have discontinued their funding for Action Awareness Week, indicating that research, not television and radio commercials, better serves Canadians who are physically challenged.

I am glad that we are having this debate now rather than last June, when the report was tabled. Now that the government has tabled its response, it gives us a chance to compare and contrast the report with the response.

After reading the government's response and discussing in depth its contents with the many disabled groups it directly affects, I must tell hon. members that it is vague, patronizing and complacent. These are not my words but the words of the national consumer groups.

The response from the government advocates not action but more study and rhetoric. Members of the Official Opposition support action, and action is what the committee report advocates.

We will concur in the committee's report entitled A Consensus for Action and encourage all hon. members to follow our example.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty to table a petition which has been certified correct as to form and content.

This petition is signed by several dozens of Canadians who object strongly to the fact that the CBC has always provided a balance of Canadian programming of information, enlightenment and entertainment for people of different ages, interests and taste while offering Canadians the best of foreign radio and television programming.

The petitioners maintain that the CBC provides programming predominantly Canadian in content and character in English and French, serving the special needs of the geographic regions and contributing to the exchange of information and expression among Canadians.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure, as a matter of priority, that the CBC be further strengthened to serve as a primary instrument of Canadian cultural sovereignty providing high quality service to all Canadians of all expressions.

PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I wish to table a petition from residents of Val-D'Or, Hull and Orleans who demand that the Government of Canada scrap the Hill project under which $68 million would be spent to build an underground parking and shopping centre under the federal Parliament Buildings. Your petitioners recognize the need to preserve the environment and the historic character of the Parliament Buildings and Parliament Hill in Ottawa.

Your petitioners also state that members should keep their outside parking spaces behind the Parliament Buildings, just like factory workers across Canada, and that the Government of Canada has more important priorities than providing underground parking and a shopping centre on Parliament Hill for members of Parliament.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 345, 350, 357, 358, 370, 377 and 402.

[Text]

COST OF OPERATIONS IN AID OF THE CIVIL POWER IN OKA AND CHÂTEAUGUAY, QUÉBEC TO SEPTEMBER 24TH, 1990.

Question No. 345—Mr. Harvard:

To date, what are the costs of the Army operations in (a) Oka, Quebec (b) Châteauguay, Quebec?

Hon. William Hunter McKnight (Minister of National Defence): The total cost estimate for the Canadian Armed Forces Aid of the Civil Power at Oka and Châteauguay, Québec to September 26th, 1990, was $60.6 million. Army deployment in Oka and Châteauguay was part of the same operation, and the effect of military movement between Oka and Châteauguay makes it impossible to provide separate costs.

COST OF OPERATIONS IN AID OF THE CIVIL POWER IN OKA AND CHÂTEAUGUAY,QUÉBEC TO SEPTEMBER 26TH, 1990.

Question No. 350—Mr. Waddell:

What was the cost up to September 26, 1990 assumed by the Consolidated Revenue Fund under s. 285 of the National Defence Act for the intervention by the Canadian Armed Forces in Oka and Châteauguay, Quebec?

Hon. William Hunter McKnight (Minister of National Defence): The total cost estimate for the Canadian Armed Forces Aid of the Civil Power at Oka and Châteauguay, Québec, to September 26th, 1990, was $60.6 million.

OIL SPILLS OR ACCIDENTS INVOLVING HAZARDOUS MATERIAL

Question No. 357—Mr. Simmons:

Has the Department of Transport (Canadian Coast Guard) taken any action to develop and put to the test the capability to deal with oil spills or accidents involving hazardous material, as raised by the Auditor General in his Annual Report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1989 and, if so, what action?

Hon. Douglas Lewis (Minister of Transport): The Auditor General's report "focussed on the Coast Guard's contingency planning and its capability to deal with marine emergencies arising from the transportation of dangerous goods through Canadian waters. (He) did not examine the roles and capabilities of other participants in the joint response network."

The Canadian Coast Guard has had a limited capability to respond to spills of "oil and other noxious substances" since the early 1970's. The problem, as the Auditor General suggested, is not the absence of the capability, but rather defining and implementing an adequate level of capability. As the Auditor General's staff were conducting their initial interviews, the Canadian Coast Guard were developing a proposal for an improved capability to respond to chemical spills at sea. This enhanced level of capability should be operating by the end of this calendar year on a pilot project basis, jointly with the federal Department of Environment in the Maritimes Region.

With regard to whether the Coast Guard has taken any action to test the capability to deal with oil spills, the Canadian Coast Guard tests the five area annexes to the joint Canada–U.S. Plan at least once every two years, and domestic plans every year or more often. These tests include establishing and operating a command post and often involve the deployment of actual equipment at the exercise site. The purposes of these exercises are to test the plan for workability and to provide on–the–job training to responders.

The Coast Guard has placed a renewed emphasis on environmental response and emergency planning. The Public Review Panel Report on Tanker Safety and Marine Spills Response Capability, released on November 2, 1990, contains 107 recommendations for improvements to Canada's spill prevention and spill response systems. These recommendations will be analyzed carefully during the development of a detailed response to the Panel's recommendations. The review, which will include consultations with affected groups, is under way.

OVERALL RISK ASSESSMENT FOR PASSENGER FERRIES

Question No. 358—Mr. Simmons:

Has any action been taken (a) on the recommendation made by the Auditor General in his 1989 Annual Report, to do an overall risk assessment for passenger ferries (b) to set out the Coast Guard's objectives, jurisdiction and safety priorities and initiatives in this area and, if so, what action?

Hon. Douglas Grinslade Lewis (Minister of Transport): (a) The Ship Safety Branch, Canadian Coast Guard (CCG), has contracted with Management Consulting for a study of its discretionary, non–discretionary activities to determine priorities for the utilization of its resources based on risk assessment criteria.

The study is ongoing and is expected to terminate in the Winter or early Spring of 1991.

Also, in the wake of the "HERALD OF FREE ENTERPRISE" disaster in Europe, a team of Steamship Inspectors from CCG Headquarters and regions conducted comprehensive safety audits of representative ferries on the East and West Coasts. A joint government/industry operational safety working group was established (25 members) comprising representatives of ship and shore management from the five major ferry operators in Canada.

This working group played an active role in the development of Canada's contribution to the International Maritime Organization (IMO) Guidelines on Management for Safety Ship Operation and Pollution Prevention. The purpose of these IMO Guidelines is to provide those responsible for the operation of ships with a framework for the proper development, management in accordance with good practice. The objective is to ensure safety, to prevent human injury or loss of life, and to avoid damage to the environment—the marine environment in particular—and to property. It was found for the most part, that ferry operators already had management practices in place which complied with the published guidelines. During the work of the study group, all major ferry operators in Canada not already complying with the recommended guidelines, agreed to comply.

(b) This subject will be addressed in the Discretionary, Non-discretionary Study presently under way. Also, a Marine Occurence Programs Division has been established within the Ship Safety Branch, CCG, which has as part of its mandate the conduct of independent safety research and analyses, to identify risks and potential safety deficiencies of vessels, including passenger ferries.

In addition, the working group mentioned under part (a) had, as its mandate to: 1) make recommendations on ro-ro ferry safety to the Canadian delegation to the Marine Safety Committee, 56th session; 2) consider the impact of ferry crew practices; 3) review shipborne management practices; and 4) review emergency plans for Canadian ferries.

The working group reviewed the safety audit team's report which indicated that many of the recommendations and some of the criticisms evolving from the "HERALD OF FREE ENTERPRISE" have already been addressed in Canada. Areas which will require further attention were identified, however, e.g. stability calculations and draught marks to be recorded. It was noted that the list of items requiring attention by the Canadian Coast Guard is not necessarily an indication of serious deficiency in ferry safety in Canada—several of the considerations are not even mentioned by the IMO documents and all of them are now being addressed. Positive comments were also noted such as the good communication between ship/shore management and crews.

CANADIAN FORCES SUPERANNUATION ACT

Question No. 370—Mr. LeBlanc:

Will the Armed Forces Pensioners and Annuitants be receiving an increase in their Survivors' Benefit to 60 percent in accordance with the Pension Benefit Standards Act and if so, when?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (President of the Treasury Board and Minister of State (Finance)): A review of the survivor benefits payable under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act is included as part of the Public Service pension reform initiative currently in progress. This and other pension reform matters will be given careful consideration and an announcement regarding the timing and content of amending legislation will be made at an appropriate time.

FISCAL YEAR 1990-1991—DEFICIT

Question No. 377—Mr. Bosley:

For the fiscal year 1990-91 (a) what is the government's present projection for the deficit (b) is the government considering reducing spending for the balance of the year in order to bring the deficit down to the original projection?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): As indicated in the speech to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in Edmonton on September 17, 1990, the Minister of Finance now expects that the deficit for 1990-91 will still be held under the $30 billion mark, but could run $1 billion and $1 1/2 billion higher than indicated in the February 1990 budget.

The government will closely monitor the situation and will continue to manage expenditures tightly to bring the final outcome for the year as close as possible to the original budget projections.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Question No. 402—Mr. Althouse:

Do Canadian Grade 11 students receive a complementary agenda calendar/time management booklet from the Office of the Commissioner of Official Languages and if so (a) what is the cost of producing and distributing this material on a per unit basis (b) what is the cost of producing and distributing this material on a Canada-wide basis?

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): The Commissioner of Official Languages reports directly to Parliament and not through a minister. Questions can be made directly to him.

STARRED QUESTIONS

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 367?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Starred question No. 367.

Mr. Champagne: Considering the length of this reply, I would ask that it be printed in Hansard without being read.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is the House agreed?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

DEFICIT/NATIONAL DEBT

*Question No. 367—Mr. Duhamel:

1. What are the expected figures for the (*ita*ro) deficit (*itb*ro) national debt at the end of the present fiscal year and do these figures include unfunded pension liability for current or former government employees?

2. For the fiscal years 1982–83 and 1983–84, what were the figures for the (a) deficit (b) national debt?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): 1. The budgetary deficit for 1990–91 could run between $1 billion and $1 1/2 billion higher than the February 1990 Budget forecast, but is still expected to be held under the $30 billion mark. The national debt at the end of the present fiscal year is expected to be under $388 billion. These figures include unfunded pension liabilities for current and former government employees.

2. For the fiscal years 1982–83 and 1983–84, the deficit figures were $28,734 million and $32,723 million respectively. The corresponding figures for the national debt at the end of these years were $135,262 million and $167,985 million. These are revised figures and include the accounting changes introduced in the 1989–90 Public Accounts of Canada wich responded to the concerns of the government, the Auditor General, the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants regarding the recording of liablilities for employee pensions.

Mr. Champagne: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

ENVIRONMENTAL POLICIES

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, according to Standing Order 52, I ask for an emergency debate to discuss the consequences arising from the failure of the government's environmental policies.

[Translation]

Our common future demands environmental policies and actions that are clear and, above all, consistent. It is obvious this government has no idea of what is required to protect the environment. It is also obvious that the inherent risks of such a situation are so great that there is an urgent need to debate this question here in the House.

[English]

Specifically the House must deal with the government's complete and abject incompetence surrounding Rafferty–Alameda, the failure of the government to exercise its jurisdiction in the case of Point Aconi, in the case of Kemano in British Columbia and the general failure of the government to exercise environmental jurisdiction in terms of native rights and health.

What is particularly worrisome is the fact that day after day the minister has stood up and said that Bill C–78 is this government's basic answer to the tremendous problems facing the environment in this country.

Bill C–78 is a bill designed to give tremendous comfort to polluters across this country. The bill is a weakening of the general guidelines which will apply as a result of the Oldman and Rafferty–Alameda decisions. If Bill C–78 is this government's response to the problems that we face in providing environmental protection, then indeed we are going to be in a sorry state.

On that basis and given the government's failure to respond to the problems and opportunities before it—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order please. I may remind the hon. member that it is incumbent on him to explain to the Chair why urgent consideration of this motion is required, instead of immediately addressing the substance of the debate.

[English]

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the urgency arises from the fact that there is a series of major projects which are in the process of going ahead.

As was very clear in the Rafferty–Alameda decision, the court said that the reason it would not grant the injunction was that so many of these projects had gone ahead that it made no sense to the court not to proceed. It gave as its second reason the government's incompetence in allowing these projects to go ahead.

That is the reason for the urgency. This applies at Rafferty. It is now about to apply in the case of Alameda. It applies in the case of Kemano and it applies in the case of Point Aconi. Ultimately it will apply in the case of James Bay where the Government of Quebec is threatening to go ahead and build the roads.

This is a matter of extreme urgency. If the debate is not held now, one must fear for the environment.

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The question raised by the hon. member for LaSalle—Émard is a very important one, but it does not at this time meet all the criteria provided in the Standing Orders for an emergency debate. Consequently, I cannot accept this request for the time being.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

AIRPORT TRANSFER (MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS) ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, November 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis that Bill C–85, an act to provide for certain matters respecting official languages, employees' pensions and labour relations in connection with the transfer of certain airports be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

• (1620 )

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on Bill C–85 which is of great importance to a lot of Canadians, especially to those in big cities such as Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver and across this country.

The government is moving into a state where it wants to sell all our country's resources. This is very important when we talk about privatizing the airports. Terminal 3 in Toronto has been privatized and Huang Danczkay has a cash for life lottery. He is raking in the money every single day. The government said that we were not making any money at the airports, yet last year the Toronto airport made $72 million. Who are we to believe?

Therefore the question is, should we go ahead and let this thing proceed or should we alter it? We of the Liberal Party have certain propositions that we would like to put forward and we have certain concerns.

One concern is safety. If what the government wants to do under Bill C–85 does proceed, would the safety of our passengers at major airports still be very vital?

An hon. member: There he goes again.

Mr. Karygiannis: My colleague from across the floor says, "there he goes again". Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind my colleague that in 1988 we had close misses at the Toronto airport. The government stepped in and said, "From 140 flights an hour, we are going to take it down to 70 flights an hour". Now they are ready to proceed to boost it up again. Also they are ready to build more runways.

The people around the area of the airport are fed up with the noise and say that we do not need any more runways. Yet the government says they are going to build a couple of more runways and that we will see about the safety. Do they care about the safety? One begins to wonder.

Only a couple of weeks ago there was a near miss at Toronto airport. I see my hon. colleague across the way shaking his head. I say to him that my constituents of Scarborough—Agincourt are very concerned when they go to the biggest airport in Canada.

Mr. McDermid: They don't fly as much as I do.

Mr. Karygiannis: He says they do not fly as much as he does. Perhaps it is because some of them them might not be at the trough as some of our friends happen to be.

Mr. McDermid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member made an accusation by inference. I am sure he would want to reconsider exactly what he said. He is suggesting that because a member of Parliament flies often that he is at the trough. I am sure that is not what he meant because he probably flies just as much as I do.

Mr. Karygiannis: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. colleague thought that I said that he is at the trough, absolutely not.

However, Mr. Speaker, I remind the minister of the En Route-CN Express deal. I wonder when I called the minister's office about En Route-CN Express why his staff would not bring forward the papers. What were they hiding? When CN Express was sold to En Route were the people from CN Express not supposed to have a three year guarantee? Bring forward the papers.

Mr. McDermid: What are you talking about?

Mr. Karygiannis: What am I talking about? Mr. Speaker, we have seen privatization. We have seen how this government moves into privatization. Yet when it moves to privatize anything it is selling it away.

Mr. McDermid: Poppycock.

Mr. Karygiannis: Mr. Speaker, another thing which is very important is job security. This government wants to privatize our airports. Yet we are not sure if the people at the airports who are working for the government will continue to have job security. When the government privatized Air Canada, 2,900 jobs were lost. My hon. colleague shakes his head. If I am wrong on the figures, then correct me, but 2,900 jobs were lost.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Karygiannis: Thank you. If there were a little bit more, thank you.

The government states that the quality of service provided to the public will continue to be at the same degree of excellence that it is right now. I fear that, if this goes through, we will find that the quality of service is diminished.

It is very important, when we talk about privatization, that we look at this government's record. We have a number of examples such as the En Route-CN Express deal and Air Canada. The government is talking about privatizing the Harbourfront and Petro-Canada. The government's record has to be put forward.

We should look at the books when we want to privatize something, especially something as vital as our airports. The safety of our airports, in the 20th century, is very vital and very important, for the simple reason that by the year 2000 the Toronto airport will be one of the biggest airports in the world. I cannot, for the life of me, understand and comprehend this government's move on this particular issue because I cannot see it as being a safe move and I see that the public will be hurt. Lo and behold, we may wake up one morning and find out that, because of the carelessness of this government's action, we have a major accident. That will have to be taken into consideration.

The other thing that we have to look at is that, right across our country, we have services at major airports that have been diminished. The government is saying that we are not going to have firefighters at airports after 10 o'clock. In Newfoundland after 12 o'clock there is nobody in the tower to make sure that the planes that are coming across are safe.

Some hon. members: Get it right.

Mr. Karygiannis: Members opposite will have a chance to get their glory but I would like to say that this proposal which the government is putting forward is a very dangerous one and we should look at it very carefully.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The hon. member for St. John's West.

An hon. member: St. John's East.

Mr. Ross Reid (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have always followed the member for St. John's West.

I plan to be fairly brief in my comments on Bill C-85. I wanted, however, to put a couple of things on the record. Our colleagues across the way keep falling back to the U.S.-Canada bilateral and also to the question of deregulation. I think it is important to comment on those and a couple of other items.

On the question of the Canada-U.S. bilateral air agreement, I think it is important to recognize that this agreement which was signed in 1974 is obsolete. We recognize that air traffic and air transportation are absolutely critical in economic development and in regional development. I think most of the members of this House will recognize—and certainly those who know something about Atlantic Canada do—that we depend quite heavily on air transportation for passengers and for freight but they also directly relate to economic development and to our ability to expand our economic opportunities in the regions. This agreement was signed in 1974 and does not take into account the numerous changes in the economy, and the numerous geographical changes in the country, that is economic geography obviously, not the physical geography of the country, and the need that new industries have for transportation back and forth across the border with the United States.

Americans already have access to most of our major cities. Meanwhile Canadian carries have access to a considerably smaller percentage of American cities. American carriers handle over 60 per cent of transborder traffic than do Canadians and earn $500 million more annually from this market than do Canadian carriers. That is an important consideration as we look at the renegotiation of this agreement.

We need to ensure that the Canadian carriers can effectively compete in the liberalized regime, and that the ongoing viability of the Canadian industry is protected and encouraged because it is the employment of the thousands of people who work for those airlines and the airports that they service, and the people who depend on those airlines, that we are talking about.

In terms of the bilateral agreement, it is important to recognize that we phasing in a number of the aspects of this and providing safeguards.

A number of my friends across the way have talked about sovereignty. It is important that we recognize right from the start that Canadian carriers will operate as Canadians and U.S. carriers will operate as Americans. National rules of ownership and control will remain in place and the right of establishment in the other's country will not be permitted.

We have had comments about safety. I want to talk briefly about safety. Whatever airline of whatever nationality that flies in this country, flies under Canadian safety regulations, not the regulation of their own country and not the regulation of another country. Any air carrier that flies in this country flies under the safety regulations of Canada. Our safety record is among the best in the world.

I would just comment on this little remark about the tower in St. John's, Newfoundland, what we know colloquially as Tor Bay. From 12 midnight to 7 in the morning, that tower would not normally have air traffic controllers in it. It is a situation that I do not like and a situation that I have spoken out against, but a situation that I understand and a situation that for now, I accept.

But I think it is absolutely critical to recognize two or three things. TransAtlantic traffic and traffic in the region is not handled out of St. John's and therefore will not be affected. Traffic in and out of St. John's will continue to be handled by radio operators who work 24 hours a day in St. John's, Newfoundland.

A great number of airports in the country, including a number in Newfoundland and Labrador do not have air traffic controllers in their towers. Some have no towers, but they continue to operate with flight service support. However, should the category two instrument landing system in St. John's, Newfoundland be needed to bring in the later commercial flights, personnel will be maintained in the tower.

It is important that we not make gratuitous and irresponsible statements in the House pertaining to air safety. I just wanted to set the record straight on that.

Let us go back, if we may, to the bilateral agreement with Canada and the United States. The government since 1985 has been trying to reopen that agreement, primarily because the existing agreement does nothing to support job creation, does not allow us to be flexible to support tourist development, constricts us in our ability to attract investment, and makes it much more difficult for Canadians to participate in and grow in international markets.

The bilateral agreement is excellent news for a number of cities in the country. It is in those cities that the airport managers and the airport officials, the chambers of commerce, and a variety of individual industry groups and collective industry groups have encouraged the government to open up. Thus, Canadian carriers can develop through this agreement new markets in the United States and carry Canadians to new cities in the United States. Our options can be developed, as opposed to single carriers. Some examples are Halifax, Moncton, Ottawa, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Regina, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Calgary, and Vancouver, just to name a few.

It is very important to these cities and the cities around them. These are cities where we have seen the development of hubs and that form a central core for regional air traffic.

Halifax, for instance, has become a regional hub for Atlantic Canada. Any of my colleagues who come from Atlantic Canada know every inch of the airport in Halifax intimately and have spent hours and days in the airport in Halifax. Anybody who travels in the region knows it only too well. Some of us even enjoy going there on occasion.

Mr. Angus: Where's VIA when we need it?

Mr. Reid: Believe me, VIA is not the answer. Maybe moving the capital of Canada to the Atlantic would be an approach that would address some of our problems.

Because we are operating under a 1974 agreement, our ability to develop the U.S. markets for our products and services is severely limited. In Moncton, we have a tremendous opportunity for air freight development, but is severely limited. In Ottawa, the business community has to go through Toronto to get almost anywhere in the United States. It is time-consuming and frustrating and does not serve the need of Canada's fourth largest metropolitan area with a booming high-tech industry, with other industries that have grown up in the neighbouring regions, and where access to the United States is particularly important. This is not to mention the growing tourism business and the attractions that the nation's capital of Ottawa-Hull provide to people in the United States.

In the great city of Hamilton, which is 45 minutes from Pearson Airport in Toronto, there is Mount Hope Airport. I recognize that it is quite flat and wide open and on top of the historical escarpment. Unfortunately, there is very little activity at the airport. It provides an opportunity, if we can develop options into the United States, for what we all know and were taught to believe in Newfoundland, is that the heartland of Canada is the industrial centre of Canada. There are options to Toronto and the Niagara Peninsula, the area to southwestern Ontario. It could be using Hamilton to develop freight and business travel and surely to develop convention travel in and out of Toronto. The options are wonderful. But under the 1974 agreement, an agreement that is 16 years old, that opportunity is not there. Hamilton is a marvellous example of why we need to change this agreement and broaden its parameters.

The economy in western Canada has changed dramatically in the last number of years. In the last six or seven years, we have seen substantial changes in the oil and gas business and substantial changes in the world of agriculture. In cities such as Saskatoon there is a growing high-tech industry. There are cities such as Calgary where there has been a development of a real service industry and where the opportunity to export these capabilities that Canadians have, particularly in the area of services. Manufacturing has grown in the west substantially.

I need not talk again about Vancouver which has this huge tourist potential that was seen with the success of Expo and as more and more Americans recognize that Canada really is the destination of choice and the place that they want to be.

We must be able to address those cities which have so long had a connection with the United States and which have understood the American economy and participated in it in a way that has been very difficult and constrained by the 1974 bilateral agreement. It is those cities and the areas around them that can really benefit economically, that can really grow with access to the American markets, and where we really can see some opportunities develop, strictly because we have been able to improve our direct air transportation with cities in the United States. Of course, that is not to mention the opportunity to go to Las Vegas. I mean just to go south and gamble it. Life is a gamble enough, but with opportunities like that we must be prepared.

I want to talk a little bit, if I may, about the carriers and their employees. Let us look at the real wrecker of the Canadian airline industry. This is the industry that has encouraged us to open up the bilateral agreement and that has said to us we want to be able to go and compete, we need to be able to expand, and we do have the ability to compete. This is the same industry that we heard such terrible things about deregulation.

I recognize that the regional carriers, particularly, have had problems. Some of them are facing some tough times right now with the increase in the price of fuel. But it was with deregulation, we were told, that we would see a constriction of air travel, particularly in the regions. I need not remind hon. members about my own part of the country where everybody preached doom and gloom and that all the airports would be closed down.

I just want to put a few facts on the record. Among the top 146 domestic city pairs, which account for almost 90 per cent of air traffic in Canada, the proportion serviced by two or more competing carriers rose from 44 per cent in 1983 up to 77 per cent. That is with deregulation. The number of people flying from Cambridge to Waterloo is up from 44 per cent to 77 per cent in that they have two airlines. Among the top 42 communities in the network where about 95 per cent of domestic passengers originate or terminate their travel, all had at least two scheduled carriers in 1989 and half of them were served by five or more airlines.

We have seen the development of hubs and spokes. We have seen the development of competition. Passengers have options in terms of airlines, types of service, cost, frequency, and that sort of thing. It is important. The number of domestic city pairs with direct, meaning non-stop, or indirect, meaning same plane, service increased from 1,088 in 1983 up to 1,729 in 1989. That is up by about 60 per cent by my calculations.

In the top 25 domestic city pairs, the number of direct and indirect flights doubled between 1983 and 1989. This trend was applicable similarly in all regions of the country.

We are talking about the increased level of competition. If there is competition, the consumer benefits. The increased level of competition in the domestic airline industry has seen a broader selection of prices and services.

I have talked so much about central Canada and the cities of Hamilton and Cambridge, but it is important to talk a little about the Atlantic provinces. In Atlantic Canada, for 24 city pairs both jet and non-jet traffic has increased by over 30 per cent just since 1988.

That is two years. Even by my calculations, that is two years. Up 30 per cent. Direct flights in that region are up 25 per cent while indirect flights are up 61 per cent. The total seats available in the sample city pairs increased by 22 per cent. So not only are we seeing an increase in choices, an increase in options and increase in exposure, but we are also seeing an increase in the availability of spaces through all of this process as well. This was after we were told time and time again they are going to close down Deer Lake, they are going to close down Stephenville, they are going to close down Gander, it will not exist any more.

Just to give one example of a regional airline. In St. John's when you go out for a flight at six-twenty in the morning, twenty minutes after six, which is ten to five here and in your home, Mr. Speaker, it is ten minutes to five which means that we get up at half past three in the morning to get here by nine o'clock. Now, that keeps the Whip happy. It keeps our staff working. It gets us in the office on time to get some work, but our options are much greater. I used to have basically one choice, you came up in the morning or you came up at night.

If I have the opportunity to sleep in once a year or twice a year, I can come up at noon. I have two choices at three o'clock. This is the old schedule. I could come at two-thirty or I could come at three-fifteen and I got here by six o'clock. If I got a good taxi driver, I could be here for the vote and the Whip would never know I was gone. Or I can leave at five-twenty-five. Now granted I have to spend one hour and fifty minutes in the airport in Halifax, but I used to see my friend from Gander—Grand Falls. He would be coming through. I do not know where he would be going and I do not know where he was coming from, but neither did he so it did not matter much. But we have that range of options.

I know I have been showing a blue timetable. Naturally I show a blue one. The other airline has very much the same kind of options. I can fly from St. John's to Deer Lake on one airline alone four times a day. I can do it to Gander as well and back again. Gander to Deer Lake is about 400 miles by road. In a straight line it is about 90 miles—in a straight line, I could not tell you. It is about 180 miles or something like that.

I think the important thing, Mr. Speaker, as we deal with this—

Mr. Rideout: You guys have never flown in a straight line.

Mr. Reid: —and I could talk about the increase, 16 per cent since 1988 in Quebec and Ontario, in 16 cities. I could talk about the 24 per cent in non-weekly flights. I could talk about the prairies and British Columbia, 20 per cent and 28 per cent as well, but I will not, Mr. Speaker, because you are telling me to carry on and my time is up.

I think it is important that we look at these things in perspective, that we look at the bilateral agreement as an opportunity, as a positive thing that our regional cities and our cities outside the great cities, the metropolitan areas of Montreal and Toronto, want the opportunity to trade and expand with the United States in tourism and in industry and the change in the bilateral agreement supported by what has happened in deregulation gives them exactly that.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Questions or comments? The hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I want to—

Mr. McDermid: Congratulate.

Mr. Keyes: Sure, I will congratulate the hon. member for St. John's East for speaking so highly of Mount Hope Airport in Hamilton. We all know that Mount Hope Airport in Hamilton, according to Transport Canada, is in fact the first alternate designate for Pearson International Airport for the future, but we, of course, on this side of the House believe that we have reached the future. The future is now because of the overcrowding at Pearson International.

The hon. member for St. John's East spoke of the hub and spoke system. We all know that the hub of course is Toronto's Pearson International, but the spokes are the 401, the 403, the 400—these are highways—all of them dangerous, all of them overcrowded, all trying to get to Toronto's Pearson International. That is the idea of the government's hub and spoke system.

• (1650)

Time and time again we tried to tell this government that the way we get around the issue of the hub and spoke in the Toronto–Hamilton scenario is quite simple.

The government should have the vision to see that there is a possibility of addressing the situation on a multi-modal aspect. That is when we think about Pearson instead of thinking about building a Pickering airport from scratch, as we have heard this government whispering about.

Take Hamilton airport. That is three quarters there to provide the alternative for Pearson International. We also consider the roads, the rail link so that we can have an efficient system, a hub and spoke system between them that would be completely efficient instead of spending the millions upon billions of dollars for new airports. We have the system in place. Hamilton, London, Kitchener: They are all there. They are ready.

The hon. member addressed the aspect of safety and then proceeded to say that some airports do not have overnight ATCers, air traffic controllers, in the tower. Some do not have a tower at all.

In Hamilton, the situation is this. The tower at Mount Hope does not have an overnight ATCer. It never has.

The hon. member for St. John's East is speaking of safety. Time and time again, when we tour Pearson International we walk through there, and I ask them the question. I say: "Time and time again, we have airlines that are diverted from Pearson that arrive too late to land and are diverted to Hamilton airport because there is no ATCer and are allowed to land."

Mr. McDermid: Yes.

Mr. Keyes: "Yes" says the hon. member for Brampton. Good. I am glad he is following me along very closely because the next point, contrary to the point of safety mentioned by the member for St. John's East, is that there is no way to ensure—the ATCers in Toronto confirm this—that a Cessna, a Piper or some small aircraft that decides it wants to take off or land overnight blows a tire, goes over on its wings, the pilot is unconscious and no one knows that that plane is laying there and in comes the big jet from Toronto to land at Hamilton. That is the ultimate.

I wonder if the member could explain the conflict between safety and the lack of it when we do not have the ATCers in the towers to confirm this type of scenario.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I guess we could draw any number of scenarios of "what could" and "what if". My friend from Brampton, the home of Pearson, is close by, 10 miles away in the region of Peel. I think it is important to recognize that the systems provide for the inevitability and situations that my hon. friend talks about.

We have a controlled system throughout which ensures that airplanes can fly in a safe and in an efficient manner. The hon. member talks about St. John's. I will come back to Hamilton. I preface this first of all by saying I am obviously no expert in air travel except that I have flown in more planes, obviously.

The air traffic controller in St. John's plays a function in the use of the category 2 instrument landing system. Category 1 instrument landing system, the plane lands with the system and the air traffic controller is not needed, remembering that what the air traffic controller adds is visibility from the ground that is not there in a system.

Use of category 1, ILS in St. John's, that is not needed. Obviously, with VFR it is not needed either because for visual flight rules it is necessary to see before landing.

In St. John's, we have said: "If the late flight gets in at 12.40 o'clock it is perhaps not going to be able to land because of weather. The category 2 system is essential. The person will be kept in place."

As for a Cessna that has flipped over at Mount Hope, I obviously cannot account for how we specifically deal with that.

Mr. Keyes: You put an ATCer in.

Mr. Reid: No, that is not the answer.

An airplane that is flying around at Mount Hope has obviously got to have contact with a central tower in Toronto. Where the central facility is, I do not know. In our part of the world, they are in Gander and Moncton. The great city of Moncton controls the air traffic in the Atlantic region and also partly over the Atlantic. The same situation will exist.

An airplane is not going to move around a runway in Hamilton without making contact, as my friend for Brampton tells me, with Toronto. If something happens they are going to have to know where this plane is, and they are going to have to be able to make contact.

We can all come up with great, wild and wonderful examples. Our history in our airports and airlines is virtually unparalleled around the world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The hon. member for York West. Very briefly.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have two points. First, the hon. member for St. John's East talks about the unwillingness to reopen the 1974 agreement, which is I do not think quite accurate. The question that we on this side of the House have is not in revisiting and modifying old agreements, but in questioning the wisdom of the minister to go holus-bolus to the extreme and deregulating completely the 1974 agreement.

He also made reference to the fact that the Canadian industry agrees with the government's initiatives. The minister was very quick to point out Air Canada and Canadian Airlines being in agreement. If the hon. member checked a number of the media reports in the last week alone, he would find that both the chairman of Air Canada and the chairman of Canadian Airlines, who are the chairmen of our flagship air carriers No. 1 and No. 2, are getting cold wings about entering into a wide open skies concept.

Would the member for St. John's East who says that the Canadian industry is in agreement—and we have our two major air carriers now asking for the very minimum in terms of negotiated safeguards—tell us how the Canadian industry is in favour when our two major airline carriers as of last week are against a wide open concept of open skies?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The hon. member for St. John's East. You have one minute.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate that restriction.

An hon. member: Being set up.

Mr. Reid: There is so much to say and so little time to say it. I appreciate what my friend opposite says. I think it is important that we recognize this. I said in my remarks that it is important for us to phase in some of these changes, that we take this in a slow and deliberate manner.

Obviously to totally open the doors and say: "Anybody can fly anywhere they like" is not a solution for our carriers. I would suspect and suggest it is not a solution for American carriers, and we are not about to see that. This is a process of negotiation, a process that takes some time and depends on the local management of the airports. As you know, in the United States, in some cases they manage their airports differently than we do, and there are airports in this country that want to be managed the same way.

I would answer the question more completely, but the Speaker is telling me my time is gone.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Before resuming debate, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Scarborough—Rouge River—Member of the Senate; the hon. member for Cardigan—Goods and Services tax; the hon. member for Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt—Goods and Services Tax.

Resuming debate. The hon. member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, just before I do, on a point of order, if I may? During the last question and comment round, you, Sir, chose to go to two members of the Official Opposition. I realize that you are still in an on-the-job training, if you like—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. members: Boo. Boo.

Mr. Angus: It has been a practice in this House to try to attempt to distribute those questions.

I am pleased to contribute to the debate on Bill C-85. I must say that I listened with great interest to the comments from the member for St. John's East. I would have wished to have asked him to perhaps revisit his statistics. He talked about the increase in flights serving the various communities.

• (1700 )

I would like to point out that if you trade in a jet with 90 seats or 120 seats, or whatever the big ones carry, for a couple of little jobs that carry 12, you are going to have a lot more frequency of landings and take-offs, but you are not going to have much in the way of difference, if not a loss, in terms of the number of actual seats available from community to community. I wish I would have had the opportunity to hear the member's response to that.

I did not hear much of the debate about the specifics of the bill during the last member's comments, nor even did I hear much of it or read much of it in the minister's comments or those of the Liberal opposition member who tended to talk about deregulation and open skies and privatization.

This bill is a bill to provide some protection for those employees who will be affected by the government's policy to turn over the operations of components of our airports. I wish we were debating a piece of legislation that establishes the policy for the devolution of those airports so that we in this House and the people across Canada could participate in the whole question of who should be running airports; not on the air side—and I think that is clear; even the government is saying it will continue to operate them—but the buildings and the land. Should they be a component of the Government of Canada, directly owned and operated on behalf of the taxpayers? The government is saying that it is not going to give up ownership. It is going to regain the ownership of the land and the buildings, but it wants someone else to manage them.

This started, not in 1987 as the minister indicated in his comments, but back in May of 1985 with the Nielsen report, the program review task force, which was the first to propose under the Conservative regime that the federal government consider changing its airport policy "to one of non-federal ownership and operation". Obviously it has gone away from the non-ownership to just operation.

In May 1985 the federal budget announced the government would pursue "the development of a new management structure for the federal airport system in Canada".

Two months later the "Freedom to Move" transport deregulation position paper, with which all of us are so very familiar, declared "options for a new self-sustaining system for managing federal airports are being developed".

By October of that year the then Minister of Transport had appointed an airports task force to consider new management structures for the federal airport system. The task force's report, released a year later, recommended the establishment of local airport authorities wherever possible.

On April 9, 1987 the then transport minister, now Minister for International Trade, announced a new policy allowing "provincial, regional or local authorities to assume direct management of airports". The minister cited cost efficiency and better service of local interest as the key goals of the policy.

If we read the words of the current Minister of Transport when he spoke at the commencement of second reading of this bill, we see that he said two things:

> Our objectives from the beginning were to allow the airports to better serve the local community interests; to enhance regional economic development potential; and to permit the national airport system to operate in a more cost effective and commercial manner.

Later, as reported on page 15263, he went on to say:

> But with local authorities at the controls, airports will be quickly able to respond to changing needs and market forces with innovative ideas.

It sounds like an ad for the junior chamber of commerce. I suspect the minister was once one of those folks before he turned grey.

Let me reiterate the key words: "airports will be quickly able to respond to changing needs and market forces with innovative ideas". Nothing could condemn the policies and the actions of this government more than the minister's admission that this government does not know how to be innovative when it comes to managing its airports in a commercial sense and that it does not have the ability to quickly respond. I do not say that personally in terms of the minister but in terms of the philosophy of the Conservative Government of Canada.

The policies of the transport department are such that it does not understand that public enterprise can be efficient and can be innovative and can return revenues, i.e. profits to the taxpayers.

Yet we have examples such as Pearson Airport. I do not have the figures here today, but it returns money to the taxpayers of Canada. Other major airports as well. Vancouver contributes back to the taxpayers of Canada. Other airports like my own and I suspect the one in Hamilton do not return a profit. It is not to say that they cannot, but under the current situation they have not been able to match their revenue with their expenditures.

The question I lay before us today is: Is the government just copping out of saying that it does not know as a government how to run an airport and therefore wants to turn it over to a community group so it can do it?

There are a number of dangers in this pursuit. We will have a situation where there will be two different groups operating at one facility. I assume we will have a manager of the air side of the airport: someone who is the senior person responsible for air traffic control where it exists, someone who is also responsible for crash fire rescue, someone who is responsible for the air traffic control and all the other systems that are outside the parameters of the building and the rental lands.

Then this community group or a provincial authority, because that option is there too, will be on site. It will be managing the building, managing the lands and deciding on who should rent what spaces.

I do not think it is clear, because we have not had the full paper debated in the House, as to who decides which planes get to park where. Is that part of the revenue base that is controlled by the community group? Is that part of the debate that has been ensuing within the Ministry of Transport for a number of years now about the removal of general aviation from our airports, to shuffle them off? This is not just from Pearson, where I recognize there is a different kind of problem, but even in my community of Thunder Bay. There is an attempt to price out of existence or to frustrate general aviation small plane owners and force them off to some pasture elsewhere in the region to keep them away from the commercial airport. It is a very serious question. Is that part of the goal of this policy?

I am straying from my original plan. We are concerned about the impact on the operation of a national airport system. We are concerned about losing the ability to do the kind of cross-subsidization that occurs today, where larger airports are helping to pay for the operation of the smaller ones. We are concerned about hubbing. The hon. member who spoke before me talked at great length about how great hubbing was. He made reference with regard to the open skies to stop having to go Ottawa to Toronto to the U.S.A. I do not know where he has been, because about three of four weeks ago I went from Ottawa right into the States on U.S. Air. That service is there.

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I am sick and tired—and this is no offence to the city of Toronto or Pearson Airport—of going Ottawa-Toronto-Thunder Bay and Thunder Bay-Toronto-Ottawa. We no longer have direct services which we had before deregulation.

One of the problems in this country—and it is part of the congestion problem at Pearson—is that so much is focusing through Toronto it is adding congestion upon congestion. It is creating the pressures that the Liberal member was talking about to expand the airport, to add additional runways to deal with the ever increasing growth of air traffic through there, as opposed to this government taking its responsibility and saying: "Yes, we need to have some controls".

We have to put some controls back into air. It was done in the United States. They started to re-control entry and exit in terms of landing rights and when one could fly. It was not through a monetary system, but it was basically saying: "Here is when you should fly" so that the burden could be spread across the full day rather than have the situation where you have some peak times.

We are also seeing the situation where in spite of the rhetoric of this government, rhetoric it has used time and time again when it says that safety shall not be compromised, there is no guarantee that a local airport authority is not going to put a building in such a place that it not directly jeopardizes safety but in the long term prevents the kind of modifications needed for the tower area and for fire-fighting areas and creates a situation where safety may be compromised.

It promised us that safety would not be compromised. All one has to do is read the transcript of the Dryden inquiry to see what really has happened. All one has to do is look at what has happened in Dryden. The Government of Canada, because jets no longer fly into Dryden, is going to eliminate fire-fighting services on a full-time basis.

There are situations where we still do not have the de-icing procedures at Pearson airport that were recommended. It was pointed out under the current situation that by the time the airplanes get to the take-off point they have been de-iced too long ago, that they should be going back to be de-iced again, but that they are taking off instead. It is an accident waiting to happen.

There are situations where Transport Canada officials are saying in testimony before the Dryden inquiry that they had no one on staff who could tell whether or not a particular plane was safe, that no one in Transport Canada had the expertise to make that determination.

We have had other reports which have indicated very clearly that the government knew it was not prepared for deregulation but went ahead with it anyway. I can appreciate a desire of the government to move forward with a political philosophy. I can understand in terms of its background in trying to ensure an unfettered marketplace. It does not seem to have worked in Canada. The reality of the situation is that it is getting worse and not better.

Let me deal briefly with the question of the employees. That is what this bill is about: how we treat the employees. It is appropriate to have legislation setting that out very clearly in the event that the government moves ahead with this policy as to how Crown employees should be treated.

In his statement on November 7 the minister said: "Permanent employees must be offered work by the local airport authorities with pay and benefit comparable to what they received in Transport Canada. It is a fundamental principle of the airport transfer process that the employees be fairly treated by the local airport authorities."

Does this mean that they are guaranteed whatever the federal Public Service union gets until the time they retire? No. It just means until their current contract is up. That current contract, depending on when the agreement is signed, could be up a week later, the agreement being the one by the local authority to take over the operation of the airport. That is not much protection.

I also question the loss of the human resources. We have literally hundreds, if not thousands, of men and women working for Transport Canada at airports across this country. They are people who have made a commitment to the services of Canada. They are people with expertise. They are people who have been moving up the system. Do we all of a sudden cut them off and say: "We no longer want you; you are stuck at that airport for the rest of your life"? Or, do we cut them off from our federal system and they end up applying as external applicants, should something come up? This would mean that someone who has been in a number two position at an airport cannot move up to number one in another airport. We are losing a lot of talent and I think that is a real shame because the human resources of Transport Canada, by and large, are extremely well qualified and an asset not just to the ministry, but to this country. I think the government has overlooked that in its desire to carve out these operations and turn them over to the local community.

The other area that I am concerned about is the actual impact on the local economy. I have seen press reports. I have seen briefs from community-based organizations which say, yes, let us run the airport because we are going to set up basically a whole new mall in the airport to sell things, goods and services. Well that may work in a city like Toronto, it may even work in a city like Ottawa where your urban centre is at a distance from the airport.

However, let me ask you about the city of Thunder Bay which is one of the communities which has a group interested in becoming the local authority for operating the Thunder Bay airport. The airport is basically surrounded by the city now. There is no question about that. So if additional retail space is developed, designed not just to provide services to the normal clientele of that building, i.e. passengers going into and out of Thunder Bay and, in some cases, going through the airport as part of the regional hub that Thunder Bay has become, we are going into the community and drawing customers to a new facility on federally owned land, paying money to the federal government at the expense of existing small businesses and not so small businesses in the community. So there is that concern about that aspect as well. I think it is one that the government has not really considered nor, quite frankly, has the communities which have been so eager to wrap their arms around the concept.

The final point is that these communities, not all, but certainly mine—and I believe I have talked directly to the minister about this—is that they believe that becoming a local authority means megabucks following for the Minister of Transport's pockets, that they believe that that is the way that they will get their terminal rebuilt or their terminal expanded. I want to say today, because I have not said it publicly in Thunder Bay, but I want to thank the Minister of Transport for the decision not only to improve the existing terminal in Thunder Bay, but to accelerate the process so that we will have a new facility in time for the 1995 World Nordic Games which Thunder Bay is hosting.

Having said that, the community group that is interested in acquiring control of the Thunder Bay airport does so, at least in the public sense of believing that that will accelerate capital moneys, and I say they are wrong and the minister, I think, would agree with me that that is not part of the package so people should not be misled.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is up. I look forward to seeing this legislation in committee to make sure that we can beef up the components that deal with labour, with the workers, and pensions although, quite frankly, I wish the government would reconsider the policy of devolution to local and provincial authorities because I think the time is here that we maintain airports as a fully operated, fully controlled, fully financed federal authority.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan to discuss a bit more about a couple of the concerns that we have with regards to this bill.

We have seen the situation where the federal government privatized CN Route and the absolute fiasco of what happened there where the assets were stripped, the employees lost all their benefits and their employment and where this federal government refused to have an adequate inquiry to protect those employees. The federal government was responsible for the action. The federal government was responsible for the completely inadequate supervision when it privatized CN Route and left the workers out to burn, in some cases to lose their jobs, in many cases to face bankruptcy with the absolutely devastating effect on the families of those workers.

• (1720)

One of my concerns with this legislation is the fact that there are really no long-term guarantees that the same things will not happen with workers in various airports across this country.

We already have a situation where many local authorities are trying to privatize the work within their own communities. At the present time they have garbage collection done by employees of the city or the municipality or the local district. They are turning that over to private operators and as a result losing good paying work for that community.

What guarantee would employees at the various airports across this nation have that this would not happen to them, that as these new local owner-operators, these new municipal authorities take over, they will not in turn privatize these jobs, have them go out of the community in many cases, have them turned over to private operators, contract them out in such a manner that many of those jobs will become minimum wage jobs, with no benefits, no job security. If people try to unionize what will happen immediately is that the company will break up, form another company which will bid for the same job, have new employees and again pay minimum wage.

What guarantee do these workers have, what guarantee do these families have, that we will not have just another CN Route fiasco which has been perpetrated by the federal government, the Minister of Transport and all those uncaring people in the cabinet?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for the question. If we look at the past practices of the Department of Transport on the aviation side, we have a situation where in spite of our urging, the security of airlines is something that is left to the airlines to look after. They in turn contract it out to private security firms. We have urged the government to change that so that security becomes a direct function of the Government of Canada. They have consistently said no.

I think that in the way that my colleague has laid it out, and because of the way of the bill is worded, that once the existing collective agreement has run its course, and the employees are no longer covered by that collective agreement and the provisions therein, unless we can make changes to the legislation, then I would say that there is no guarantee whatsoever of any permanency for those employees. That is not to say there is permanency within the federal Public Service, but all of a sudden we are into a non-union situation, a situation where a local authority is trying to find ways to reduce costs. Yes, they will look to contracting out. They will look to buying services from other agencies, perhaps one of the new management companies specializing in airport management.

Instead of the Government of Canada being the central agency running the airports at Toronto, Montreal, Thunder Bay, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver, it will be company x or company y that will put in place its own bureaucracy. There are two differences. One is the employees at one end will not receive the same kind of treatment that they have been able to get under the auspices of the Government of Canada. Second, there will be a slice of the income obtained from you and I as passengers, and you and I as customers that will go not to the taxpayer, not the Minister of Finance to help run things, but as profit to those agencies and those companies who are providing services.

In summation, there is no guarantee, and we need the legislation changed.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my hon. friend's comments. I understand where he is coming from.

I have just two points. I think we should not confuse privatization and turning airports over to local airport authorities. The whole idea behind it is to enable a local authority, made up of people from the region of Thunder Bay, for instance, to participate in the growth of the airport and the airport infrastructure.

By giving the local people an opportunity to do this kind of thing on a lease basis—not a sale or a purchase by somebody, where the hammer is still held by the federal government—they have to comply with the terms of the lease. They will be able to do that.

What I wanted to refer my hon. friend to is the bogey man of deregulation, and what it does for remote communities. I do not have the Thunder Bay figures but let us use another northern community.

Before deregulation, Sudbury had 17 flights a week. After deregulation, Sudbury has 105 flights a week. This is to Toronto.

The hon. member for Sudbury is here. I ask the hon. member, does she suggest that the people of Sudbury would like to go back to 17 flights a week? The hon. member is nodding her head, therefore I assume she is suggesting that the community of Sudbury would like to cut down all these darn flights that mean you can go any time of the day or night. Let us get rid of all that choice. Let us go back to 17 flights a week. That is just a little over two a day. Why have all that choice?

Talk to the business people in Sudbury. Talk to the business people flying to Sudbury. My hon. friend knows there has been a big increase in the economic outlook of Sudbury under the Progressive Conservative government. These 105 flights a week are part of the reason for that success.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I found the minister's comments interesting because I am sure that Sudbury would really like to have jet service back. I am sure it would like to have the prices that it used to pay back. I do not know what the prices are there, but I can tell you that it now costs upwards of $700 to fly from Thunder Bay to Ottawa. Pre-deregulation it was $300.

There is still jet service part of the time Thunder Bay to Winnipeg. Other times, Mr. Speaker, you are down to as little as 12-seaters. The community of Dryden has lost its jet service. It has also lost its role as a hub for that part of northwestern Ontario. It has also lost a lot of economic clout because having jet service into that community was an impetus for them and assisted in its development.

When the minister says that deregulation is great, I can give him chapter and verse as to why it really has not met the theories that were espoused by his predecessor and are currently espoused by himself.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the minister is in the House. I am sure that my colleague from Sudbury who is standing behind me would certainly like to respond to those comments he made. Obviously that will have to wait for another day. I can assure you that those comments will be made.

While the minister is with us, I would like to publicly thank him on behalf of the people of Thunder Bay for his announcement on his last visit that he will be replacing the present air passenger terminal in that community with a much larger and a much needed new facility. Further to his commitment that this facility will be in place in time to meet the increased demands that all people of northwestern Ontario anticipate with the great influx of tourists that will come as a result of the Nordic Games, I thank the minister very much for seeing the wisdom of that need and obliging the people of the community with that very important transportation mode.

In 1987, the government introduced its policy of transferring the management of Transport Canada airports to incorporated business entities called local airport authorities. I am a bit disturbed, in listening to the debate the other day and as it progresses today, with the confusion seems to lie in what we are really talking about when discussing local airport authorities. That confusion seems to be between what is called the privatization of airports in Canada and the administering the local airport authorities under local airport groups.

I will take just a moment to explain my concept. With Terminal 3, which will be opened in the first part of February with the opening of the new airport, all privatization means is that a group of people have come in and invested $400 million to $500 million and built Terminal 3. They will be able to operate that entity on its own with the rental of space and the recovery of its $400 million to $500 million worth of expenditure over a period of years.

There is some confusion in the marketplace inasmuch as Terminal 3 certainly will be the result and will be paid back by the eventual payer in all business entities and that is the consumer. I have toured Terminal 3 and it is a beautiful looking airport. Given what we have been told that Terminal 3's rental structure is about four, five or six times that of the highest rental structure in Toronto now, which is the Eaton Centre, I wonder whether or not the consumer, that is the Canadian traveller, will be able to afford to use this facility.

In contrast to the privatization mode is the local airport authority. In simple terms, it will be an authority that is established to meet and respond to the needs of the community and can be analogous to a local municipal government. We all know that a local municipal government is very good in conducting its affairs because it is on the local scene. It responds daily to the needs of the community. It replies and gets on with the business of responding to the needs of that community. I would say this local airport authority is analogous to the municipal governments in our communities and will be responsive on a daily basis to meeting the needs of the travelling public.

The policy's objective was to build our airports to better serve local community interests, enhance regional economic development potential, and allow our national airport system to operate in a more cost efficient and commercial manner. Unlike the government's ill-conceived policy of deregulation, or its ludicrous intent to privatize Pearson International Airport, the concept of establishing local airport authorities merits qualified support. I will address those qualifications very shortly. It seems that if the three broad objectives of this policy can be realized then this policy has several inherent values and benefits.

Recognizing that a local airport authority could better represent needs and interests. In my community, the district of Thunder Bay, I have supported and assisted a group of very capable individuals who are waiting final approval to proceed and take over the management of our local airport. Let me assure the people of Thunder Bay that the running of the local airport will not be another cost that is given over to municipal authorities rather than being paid for by higher authorities. Let me assure that the cost or any deficiency in cost will not have to be borne by municipal governments. That is a question that permeates many small communities in the country today when they seem to think, because certain governments are giving over responsibility to them, that the costs that go with those responsibilities devolve to the municipality. As I am told and as I read this legislation, any costs that are incurred with the development of a local airport authority will certainly not arrive at the footsteps of a local municipal authority.

There is no question in my mind that the local airport authority is good for the economic future of our community. It will be of immense value to two areas that are not being presently serviced. The areas of cargo and jet service cannot be handled because of the deficiencies in our system. Let me assure the people of Thunder Bay that this local airport authority, if it should come to pass, will be good for the economic future of our community. If it is under local authority by local people, I doubt very much that we will ever see a demise of a very necessary transportation mode in our community such as we saw in the demise of VIA Rail within the last year. There was no local input into the affairs of running that area. Many small communities would have qualified support for the local airport authority, so that, in this immense country of ours, they can at least administer some of the transportation requirements that are conducive and that can respond quickly to the local climate and the local economy.

If given the opportunity, the group will be able to manage the airport and take action based on their invaluable experience as members of this community. Unlike some of those who make decisions here in Ottawa for northwestern Ontario, this proposed local group in Thunder Bay has an appreciation of what can and what should be done at our airport and other airports in the country to improve service and efficiency.

I am certain that this concept could also be applicable and should be applicable to Pearson Airport, the largest and most lucrative airport in Canada. Instead, the government, having privatized Terminal 3, is now moving to privatize Terminals 1 and 2. It would be a terrible mistake if we allowed Terminals 1 and 2 to be privatized at least before we have an opportunity to view the causes and consequences of how Terminal 3 is operating.

These private interests will operate the terminal based solely on the profit motive. There is big profit when one considers the investments at Terminal 3 of $400 million in the recovery process and big profits in what is proposed in Terminals 1 and 2. The numbers being heard are $800 in the recovery process on Terminals 1 and 2.

Unfortunately, in all business ventures, there is only one person who pays and that is the consumer. The consumer, in this instance, would be the Canadian traveller and I wonder whether the Canadian traveller will be able to travel into this vital transportation link in the country, Pearson Airport, given the costs that will have to be absorbed. It would be fine for government people to travel on expense accounts and it is fine for business people who have expense accounts. But I wonder how many Canadians will be able to travel and afford to see Canada with their families, given the cost of air transportation in Canada as it is today.

It means that the consumer will not be able to afford to fly to Pearson because he will be burdened by these exorbitant costs and be deprived of one of the fundamental principles of what we try to achieve in the country, that is, unity. Unity is achieved by seeing what all other parts of the country is all about and living with these people. I am concerned that this will be deprived.

We are already aware of the projected higher costs of going through Terminal 3. Does the government believe that there will exist healthy competition between the terminal operators or is this a delusion? Terminal 3 will set the price standards and the other two will follow. It will probably be slightly lower but still very much unaffordable.

I also question, if an airport can operate effectively and efficiently with competing interests, where is the central co-ordination in all of our airports? On many occasions I have said that what Canada lacks is a transportation policy. An airport, irrespective of its size, capacity, or number of terminals, still has to operate as a very single, very unitary, and very co-ordinated unit in all aspects, on the air side, the ground side, and the security side. We have been told that, in these privatization movements, security will not longer be a factor governed by one integral unit. We are told that, in these privatization modes, there is no thought being given to how we move people to and from an airport. When one travels in any other country in the world, one of the prime considerations is how the people get to and away from the airport?

In Terminal 3, if privatization takes over in Terminals 1 and 2, we have spent over $1 billion and yet we have not enhanced the ability of the people who live in Toronto to get to and from the airport. There is no transportation mode to look after this facility and that is one of the areas in which privatization, in my view, is not operative.

One might argue that this is a strong case for privatizing Terminals 1 and 2 to the owners of Terminal 3. However, while there may be central co-ordination in this case, the cost of allowing one private interest to hold a monopoly at Pearson is unthinkable, in terms of price implications and the protection of the travelling public. It also remains to be seen whether Pearson will operate with even less efficiency, once Terminal 3 opens for business, without any co-ordination between the operation of Terminals 1 and 2 with the private interests of Terminal 3.

I can see but one solution to correct the problems which plague Pearson today and which will be exacerbated in the near future. The solution is simple: local airport authority for the city of Toronto. Scrap the idea of privatization and let us get Terminal 3 back into the fold. Let us allow local interest groups with a vested interest in the local community to decide what is best, not only for Toronto, but best for the air needs of all of Canada. It would be environmentally sound for people and look after the concerns about those sensitive areas that so many people have expressed to us such as the noise and the problems caused by increasing traffic in that vital area surrounding Pearson.

At the outset, I said that the policy of establishing local airport authorities has received my support. But, as I mentioned, it is a qualified support. If we recall the objectives of this policy, it is to serve local community interests, enhance economic development in those areas, and to become cost-efficient in those areas. I question if these objectives can be achieved, with the restrictions which will be placed on airport authorities, if we allow this bill to pass in its present form.

In 1987, the Minister of Transport announced supplementary principles to those established. Among those principles was that local airport authorities must offer affected Transport Canada airport staff employment in the same occupations, with the same salary they had before the transfer. The local airport authority will formally agree to adhere to provisions of the Official Languages Act with respect to service to the public and Transport Canada will continue to ensure compliance with federal safety and security standards. The local airport authority must ensure the provision of crash, fire, and rescue services to Transport Canada services.

The bill before us today would legislate the requirements of the local airport authority regarding the Official Languages Act and labour relations. It is imperative that we establish, when a local airport authority takes over the operation of an airport, that Transport Canada remains responsible in all aspects for all air side operations and for the safety of that airport. On this there can be no equivocation. The safety aspects on the air side of transportation must remain in the hands of the federal government. Air traffic controllers, the climatic people, and the environmental people must all be under its control.

Local authority assumes, in full, the responsibility of the terminal or ground side facility only. The local airport authority should be afforded the flexibility to operate that facility in the manner in which it determines is most conducive to meeting the three main objectives of the group, that is: what changes can be implemented to better the service to the community; what can be implemented to attract more customers to the community; and what is needed to meet the needs of the region while operating on a more effective cost basis.

In its present form, this bill will restrict local airport authorities from acting in the communities' best interest. This is the qualification to which I spoke to earlier.

It is essential that the current employees at an airport which is to be transferred to a local authority must receive fair and equitable treatment, that all statutory obligations are met and that the present union agreements are adhered to.

All current employees must be given job security. Of that there is no question.

However, Mr. Speaker, it would be a serious setback for local authorities if they were not permitted to subsequently hire employees who are in the local community and who are deemed to provide better or more appropriate services based on cost-effectiveness.

To hire more employees who are more attuned and more reflective of the community needs. That is, once all obligations are met, the local group should have the freedom of employing the services of whatever individual or whatever company they will establish, in keeping with the norms established in that community.

There should be no obligation that employees of the airport be part of the federal Public Service and that the local airport authority be bound in any acts of the Public Service. Without this provision, we are in effect hamstringing the local groups from meeting the objectives that we had set earlier.

What we are doing with the act as it is presently set is a facade; the granting of authority to local groups without granting the responsibility for its operation. What we are creating in this present legislation, as I see it, is a local airport advisory group and I can assure you that the group that I meet with in Thunder Bay is not interested in becoming an advisory group unless it has some degree of control over the operation and the community interests; that it can respond to the community interest. I do not think they are interested in being an advisory group, and I am sure that there will be many groups in this country that would not want those restrictions placed on their role.

The current employees must receive—and let me emphasize that again—fair, equitable treatment in any local airport authority, but eventually the local airport authority should be given the freedom to make its own rules, set the criteria by which they consider that airport is going to operate in the future.

I see my time is running short. Let me emphasize, Mr. Speaker, by again repeating critical points: One, it is our understanding of this legislation that there will not be any direct costs to any municipality or provincial government that says that it does not want a local airport authority in place. The municipalities will be held free and blameless and will not be looked upon to contribute toward the courts' cost of administering what the airport will do.

The end result will be that the airport authority will eventually be responsible to the Ministry of Transport. More important, the Minister of Transport and his department will still be responsible for safety on the air side.

Let me close by saying that it can be nothing but responsive to the needs of our communities throughout this country. I made reference to Thunder Bay, but I am sure it is all communities in this country which can take control over that vital need of transportation that we all need in a country as large as Canada.

Mr. Ray Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised at the hon. member's presentation. I can certainly appreciate the need for local control, but I would think the government's motivation, if its track record is any indication, is one of cost-cutting and abandoning of responsibility.

I would like to use a parallel in the marine sector. I am hoping the minister can clarify the situation today. In the government's area of wharves and harbours, it looks to be that the harbours on the coast of British Columbia are approaching 75 to 80 years. In the past, it has been the responsibility of the government. What we get is an indication that it intends to abandon that responsibility as those facilities wear out and that anybody who wants it can rebuild it on their own.

I would ask the minister if he might through a comment on the member's presentation indicate to this House that that is not the case.

• (1750)

In a place like Zeballos, local control is important. Their wharf burns down and the Minister refuses to respond. They offered to try and come up with half of the cost of doing it and, again, failure to respond. Local organization and local initiative attempts to work with the department, and nothing. An example like Gibsons during the last election. They slap a blue sign up, a serious malfunction in the breakwater that causes a hazard in the harbour and it really needs repair, but again no response. Lots of local initiative and willingness to work, but nothing happens.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Who is the Minister of Transport?

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Again, I share with the hon. member concerns that places like Klemtu and Bella Bella for years have attempted to get roll-on roll-off service where the cost of living is directly related to that facility and yet the Minister again—and I am not pointing out this Minister, I am speaking in general terms—but the Conservative Government is more interested in abandoning its responsibilities and forcing those costs on the community. Port Hardy in zoning and I would also use Coal Harbour where they were saying cost recovery is more important than working within the planning of the community. They disregard the advice of local people in the marine areas. They have fish plants tied up near tourist resorts on their harbour because the Department of Transport felt that getting a cost recovery or a return on their facility was more important than working within the zoning and planning initiatives of the local municipalities.

I think these kinds of things are really in danger with this airport idea. Places like Fair Harbour and Kyuguot where you cannot get garbage picked up and the federal wharves are absolutely inundated with garbage. There are local people trying to work on recycling solutions, trying to assist the department and it says: "We cannot do it".

I see we are drawing to a close. I would hope that the Minister would take an opportunity to respond. Does he intend to do the same thing with airports, abandon the community, allow them to take over the costs and essentially use it as a privatization and an abandoning of responsibility? I am hoping that the hon. member will comment on it and possibly the minister as well.

Mr. Comuzzi: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for that question. He has mentioned some places which, I apologize, I have not heard of. I am sure they are not airports in this country.

What we are talking about here is a simple concept. What we are talking about is decentralizing the authority of the federal government from Ottawa to other communities in this country. As I see Bill C-85, it is a decentralization process that we have all come—those of us who do not live in and around this community—to grips with the fact that we are becoming just too big to operate out of one centre in the country and that there is a process in place to decentralize the decision-making powers in allowing smaller communities to participate.

Hopefully my friend and all of us are involved in this government. Whatever side of the House you sit on, we are all involved and we are all very interested in cutting costs. The only way we are going to cure the deficit and help in the debt is if we all put our collective minds to how we can administer this country, how we can keep offering the services that we and all Canadians have come to enjoy and still do it in a more frugal, cost-efficient method.

I suspect that the decentralization is one small aspect in this total operation of this country. But in one small aspect we have come to grips with one of those areas and saying that perhaps we can cut this huge expense in running the transportation requirements in this country by turning it over to those people who are most responsive in this country and from the community level to say that we can operate this perhaps more efficiently, more cost effectively and provide the same degree of service that we heretofore have had. So I hope that I have been able to answer the gentleman's concerns.

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I have to rise today on questions and comments in answer to the Minister of Transport and his quotes on my municipality in my riding of Sudbury.

This is the second time that the name of Sudbury was used. The last time the quote said something about only having two flights a day. Today he is saying 17 flights a week. I have lived in Sudbury for a very long time, 28 years to be exact. The Viscount used to fly I think twice a day in the early sixties.

In 1980 I was elected to municipal council. We had very good jet service in those days. That is 10 years ago, by the way. We had seven jet flights a day in and out of Toronto, Sudbury to Toronto and back, seven. I do not know how you count your 17 but 7 a day. Then we had two jet flights a day east-west. We did not have to fly through Toronto to get to Ottawa or to get to Montreal. I am talking jet flights, two a day.

Mr. Lewis: That's without the propellers.

Mrs. Marleau: They were not propellers, they were jets. I will tell you that in the early 'eighties Air Canada was not interested in serving Sudbury with jets and tried to get out of it. We as a council commissioned a study and proved to ourselves as well as to Air Canada that we knew they made money on our route. That was back in 1980. That is not mentioning any of the other flights that came in and out. I am talking about jets only. Nowadays, today, we may have somewhat more frequent flights but we have 19 seater planes and 11 seater planes, and two of those seats are bumper seats. I tell you, it is not pleasant. We were far better served before than we are being served now.

We talk about privatizing airports, and government getting out of running airports. Do you know what they have done with the airport now in Sudbury? They have now said that after eleven o'clock or 10.30 at night, we will no longer have any fire or safety people on hand, so flights can no longer land at that airport. If they do, they do at their own risk.

Last week there was an Air Ontario plane that landed at the airport after eleven o'clock, no safety, no fire, nobody on hand. The Canadian Partners flights, and perhaps I should not be naming names but I am, chose not to land in Sudbury because there was no safety and landed in Toronto and put their people up in Toronto. They were coming in from Ottawa. This was last week alone.

I ask, what improvement in service are we talking about here? What improvement are we talking about? Yes, the people of Sudbury would far rather have jet service like we had in the early eighties than what we have today. I ask my colleague where is this whole business leading us? Are we dismantling the transportation system? Have I forgotten to mention that we are paying three times the price for a flight between Sudbury and Toronto?

I can recall when I sat on council being told what a boon it was going to be to travellers in Sudbury. We were going to get all this terrific service and it was going to be cheaper also. When you are a captive audience, they can charge what they want. You have no choice and you have to take it.

Could the member tell me what is going to happen to the sick people if they have to land at the airport in Sudbury? We are a northern referral centre for medical care.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order, please! The period set aside for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Opposition House leader.

[English]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. After that great intervention by the member for Sudbury, I do believe the House would like to hear the answer and by House consent would allow him a few minutes to answer, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): With unanimous consent, I am prepared to recognize again the hon. member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon.

[English]

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Comuzzi: Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for the unanimous consent. My colleague from Sudbury asked some very pertinent questions. All of them have developed since 1984. I am sure the problems have increased since deregulation has come upon us in Canada.

• (1800)

However let me say that most of those problems are accurate. I have been to Sudbury many times and there is an absence of jet service from Sudbury and other communities. There was a time when we could fly directly from Thunder Bay to Sudbury to Ottawa. It was a magnificent flight, but it was closed down because of deregulation. We now have to go to Toronto through all the hub and spoke concept.

There is a need in the Sudbury airport. If there is any airport in northern Ontario that really and truly requires upgrading, especially to handle the disabled people in our communities, it is Sudbury and Thunder Bay. My colleague certainly has vital concerns about air transport through the airport in Sudbury and the services provided to the people in her community.

I can only say that a local airport authority with the proper terms, not the terms as outlined in Bill C–85, that are responsive to the needs of the people in Sudbury and to the economic community or Sudbury and surrounding areas, because Sudbury is the hub, can administer to the airport in her community. I wish that she would support me in changing the terms and helping me to impress upon the government that it should change the terms of Bill C–85 to allow local authorities truly to operate independently of the restrictions in this legislation.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure after that interesting exchange to get up and speak on the bill.

I believe a great deal of the debate today has shown the mistrust that certainly this side of the House of Commons has toward the Government of Canada and toward whatever it is bringing forward.

The Liberal Party of Canada opposes the privatization of Canadian airports. We support the transfer of the administration and management of airports to local authorities under certain conditions, which unfortunately are not met in this bill.

The criteria that we feel must be met before the bill is adopted by the House include continued federal government guarantees of safety, security and accessibility, including accessibility for the handicapped, and full application of the Official Languages Act to the local authority. Continuation of service to the public is the paramount criteria in the operation of airports, as well as the availability of transport Canada expertise and experience to the local authority.

We think the bill has to include guarantees that local taxes will not be called upon at any time in the future to finance the debt load of a local authority in carrying out what is a federal responsibility. Finally we have the guarantee to employees of job security as employees of Transport Canada.

Since becoming the Official Opposition critic for Public Service employment and staff relations, the government's policies have given me, employees of the Government of Canada, and large segments of the public serious cause for concern.

The government's somewhat indiscriminate five–year downsizing strategy has dramatically increased the workload of Public Service employees. At the same time those who are left have been living in fear of being the next on the downsizing hit list. One result of downsizing has been a dramatic increase in contracting out. The global budget for federal contracting out has increased from $2 billion to $3.2 billion.

While the government divests itself of employees and of responsibility for standards of service to the public, it is unable to account for whether indeed it is saving Canadians money or not and whether indeed it is giving them better value for money.

The public accounts committee was told this spring in hearings it held that the government does not know whether or not contracting out is saving money. It does not keep a record of contracting out expenditures. It does not require a cost comparison of contracting out as a way of doing things, compared to doing it in house with its own employees.

The result has been an increase in other costs aside from direct contract costs, including dramatic increases in the use of overtime and term employment.

I want to come to some specific examples in a few minutes, but we see that the government has become a prisoner of the dogma of privatizing, downsizing, and contracting out. This seems a little contrary to a stated principle I heard just a couple of elections ago of creating jobs, jobs, jobs. It is truly unfortunate when we hear the government bragging about cutting 13,000 jobs in the Public Service, but with no ability to report to the public whether or not that is saving it money.

Clearly with this government privatization, downsizing, and contracting out is a question of religion, not a question of practical solutions to practical problems.

Service to the public has suffered under downsizing. When it comes to the transportation sector, the removal of resources has been clearly demonstrated to have had a serious impact on safety.

The strain to do more with less is affecting almost every aspect of the Public Service. Transport Canada has been understaffed despite an enormous increase in the demand for supervision of airlines since deregulation. In fact we have increasingly seen airlines self-regulating or self-enforcing the safety standards of this nation with respect to passenger travel.

In July, as just one small example, a study reported that the accident rate of Canada's major commercial airlines is more than twice the rate of their American counterparts. The government should ask itself whether or not deregulation and privatization will improve or worsen such statistics. I suggest that the government's policies will do nothing to help the situation.

I want to refer to a couple of specific incidents which I believe give us concrete cause for concern about how the government manages divesting itself of its responsibilities and passing them on to other people.

First, we have not seen a good history of financial responsibility in divesting and passing over national responsibilities to the private sector. We need only to remember the transfer of Boeing.

Second, when it comes to privatization, I will refer to the privatization of Air Canada. I wish we could replay in the House a tape of Claude Taylor a year ago as he spoke on Cross Canada Check-Up about the wonderful things we could do with Air Canada if only he was not hampered by the problems of being a government corporation. The service would be better. The prices would be better. There would be more profit. Everything would be wonderful with Air Canada, if only it were privatized and if only he were left to manage it free from the fetters that the federal government imposed on him.

Here we are just a little over a year later, and where is Air Canada? I can tell of my own personal experiences as a traveller. Prices are up far beyond the rate of inflation. Service has deteriorated. The number of flights available is fewer and fewer. Now we see 3,000 people losing their jobs in a corporation that was supposed to become more profitable, more business oriented, providing better and more service and employing more people if only it got rid of the federal government and its national obligations.

I want to go back to another classic case of privatization. CN Express was privatized a few years ago. We now know that the promises made by the government at that time about protecting people's jobs, protecting people's benefits, and protecting people's rights as employees were nothing but blowing in the wind. It was the government's intention from day one to divest itself of CN Express, to turn it over completely to the private sector, and to absolve itself of any responsibility for the employees who had served CN Express so well. We now have reason to know that there were certainly some questionable practices in the process by which CN Express was privatized and the people to whom it was privatized.

Now, just a few years later, the company is bankrupt. People have lost their benefits. I am dealing with one constituent who had contributed for many years as an employee to a pension plan and now cannot even be told what agreement was made between CN and the purchaser of the company that affects his pension plan and his contributions over many years of his working life. For two years he has been trying to get the information on his own assets and has not been provided with it by this government.

We know that once the government washes its hands of something, it washes its hands of any sense of responsibility for the well-being of the employees who have served it admirably over many years. I do not think the employees of airports can expect much better from this government if this bill passes as it stands.

We also have to be concerned about the transfer of enforcement of safety regulations and security at airports. All those matters need to be taken care of within this bill so that the government's responsibility for the national interest and the interest of the public remains clear and paramount.

We have to be concerned as well about a national approach to services that have linked this country together for many years. We have to be concerned not only about those wealthy airports where there is a profit to be made and where there is an interest in local authorities in taking them over to achieve that profit. We have to be concerned as well, though, about the whole network of airport services in this country; about those small airports that serve smaller communities that are not viable or not profitable but nonetheless are an important service to people who live in the many corners of this country.

We have accepted a principle that we share the responsibilities for making certain that people in all parts of Canada have an appropriate level of services such as transportation and communications services. We have always recognized that there are some parts of that network of service and links in communication that are profitable and some that are not. Where it is possible by the massive population and services to generate a profit, that goes back into the total system, the network helps to pay for those parts of the country which are less profitable and cannot pay their own way simply because of the sparsity of population, distance, and so on.

I am deeply concerned about what happens to those far-flung communities of our country when they are no longer part of a national network in which there is an opportunity to balance expenditures and revenues and to make sure that everybody gets the service they deserve.

I want to speak briefly about the impact on employees because it is an important part of our approach as the Official Opposition to dealing with this bill. We have said that it is incumbent upon this government to ensure that the employees of the airport affected by the transfer decision are not caught in the crossfire of the government's policy. We are concerned about preserving the collective bargaining rights of individual members affected by the transfer. Frankly, the provision in the bill that the collective bargaining rights end with the end of the next contract is not really very satisfactory. Many of the contracts of Public Service employees with their employer are under negotiation right now.

We are concerned about the loss in bargaining power by employees or their right to stand up for hard won benefits which they have gained over many years. It is a right that they have now as members of the Union of Canadian Transport Employees, a union of 12,000 members. If, for instance, the Edmonton airport were to be transferred to a local authority, the membership would be reduced to roughly 125 employees, clearly drastically reducing bargaining power.

Bill C-85 does not satisfy the conditions that we feel are necessary to protect the well-being of employees. Such things as job security and service to the public are things which public servants are interested in providing. Pension benefits are of great concern to the employees as well.

We have all seen how uncertain things are if we rely on the goodwill of the government. Certainly the CN Express employees have seen how the pension benefits they have contributed to throughout a working life can disintegrate if they rely on this government to protect their interests.

We are concerned—this Chamber has heard this before—about the applicability of the Official Languages Act and the number of ways in which this act would not apply to local airport authorities if this bill remains unchanged.

This is part of a general concern about the government's commitment to implementing national policies on a national basis. We have some concern about how the government will ensure that Canadians, wherever they live and wherever they travel, are entitled to a standard of service determined by their national government.

We are concerned about travellers coming to this country and gaining a good impression of Canada no matter at what airport in the country they happen to land. Yet it seems to me that under Bill C-85 local authorities would be free to adopt whatever criteria, strategy, priority or labour practices they see fit to manage and administer transferred airports.

There is no guarantee that service at Edmonton, Calgary, Montreal or Vancouver would be maintained or enhanced as a result of the transfer. There is no provision in the bill for the sharing of expertise, knowledge and experience between Transport Canada employees who have that expertise and the local authorities to ensure the retention of those standards.

Finally, I want to say that certainly the opportunity for local authorities opens up some possibilities for better, more locally sensitive service. It also opens up or the risk that local communities will end up carrying a financial burden that this government no longer wants to assume to provide what is in essence a portion of a national service.

The legislation must protect local property taxpayers from a regressive tax, one not based on people's ability to pay from assuming down the line a financial burden that should be shared equally by taxpayers, the private sector and the Government of Canada as a national service.

I want to just quote from some statements that were made by Gordon Sinclair, president of Canadian Air Transport Association of Canada before the Royal Commission on Transportation and Passenger Travel Services. He was speaking about the privatization of Terminals 1, 2 and 3 at Toronto.

What he said was that developers are skimming the cream of profit off the top of airport operations, that the air carriers in this country do not want a repeat of Terminal 3 elsewhere in Canada. This is a contract that was decided on who derives the greatest revenue to Transport Canada and not what was best for the transportation industry or the travelling public.

This bill has a lot of flaws in it. I hope that the government is amenable to improving the bill so that hopefully, if it proceeds with this, it can be done in a way that will be most helpful to air transportation in Canada.

Mr. Ray Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the minister has been overwhelmed by the presentation and asks, "not more harbours". I was going to give him a bit of relief here.

An hon. member: Comic relief.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): No, it is not comic relief. I was going to say that the minister is not known far and wide as an ogre and a heartless individual. I have known him for 10 years. He is a gentleman and a scholar, a man in whom great trust can be put.

• (1820)

There is one thing that surprises me. I wonder if the member for Ottawa West might care to explain to the House how one can shift and change. The project before us today was really conjured up by the member for Winnipeg South Centre. This was debated in the House when your party was government. It is ironic that today, when this could have been nipped in the bud years ago, if it is such an unsavoury and unwholesome activity, why the devil would your party have been the proponents of the idea? Perhaps she could explain why the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre stood in this same House, making the same arguments that the hon. Minister of Transport is making. I know my colleague is not an ogre and a heartless individual. As the perpetrator, he is simply carrying out the wishes of the Liberal member for Winnipeg South Centre. Could she elucidate on that?

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, I recognize that there are some people who have been around here longer than I have and who are growing perhaps a little long in the tooth. I can only assume that when they persist on harking back nostalgically to what happened 8, 10 or 15 years ago. I understand that is what happens when one lives on the sunshine coast, the ability to focus and concentrate on what is happening in the House is a bit difficult. I go there myself when I want to escape.

I also find it slightly anomalous that it is the New Democratic Party which is taking us back in history and refusing to recognize that this is many years later, and perhaps issues need to be dealt with in a different way than they were back in those days.

The bill before us clearly has many flaws and faults in it. We would like to see those flaws and faults corrected.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I certainly will not take offence at the remarks about new and old. My compatriot, being a contemporary, seems as well preserved as I am.

The thing that disturbs me about the government's measure and certainly not the minister, is the example not just of airports but also of small craft harbours. The Conservative government recruited an organization, a consulting firm, to try and find a mechanism so that it can abandon all the small craft harbours on the coast of British Columbia. How could it get these into the private sector? How could it get rid of its responsibilities for operating costs and capital funds? I point out to the hon. member how serious this is. Those are the highways for all those communities along the coast, whether we are talking about the sunshine coast, Sechelt, Gibsons, Powell River, and areas that are extremely concerned that the cost of running the transportation system is being abandoned by the federal government and being placed on the local community which cannot afford them. The local economies will simply wither and die. Ultimately, we will see the greater concentration of people moving out of those areas and irreparably harmed.

The minister is certainly not responsible for small craft harbours but he is for the harbours and for the airports. I would point out that the government is not the author of this proposal. It was the hon. member's party, not six or seven years ago, that was standing in this House proposing the same thing. The government just happens, fortuitously or unfortuitously, to find itself bringing this into play.

Perhaps the hon. member could comment on the role of the Liberal Party in initiating these activities, and your co–operation and partnership with the Conservative Party who actually bring them to fruition. It is a strange conundrum that I do not quite understand.

Mrs. Catterall: I should point out to the member, first of all, that he forgot Roberts Creek. I know some people on the B.C. coast who would be quite insulted by that.

I think the member is truly testing me if he expects me to have a crystal ball to remember things that happened when I was not here. Either that or he has, as my House leader is telling me, a very vivid imagination and is creating something that never happened at all. I certainly do not intend to personally, or on behalf of my party, take responsibility for the bill that is before us today, tabled by the Minister of Transport in a government that Canadians simply are not going to trust to privatize anything because they know the results of its privatization policy.

Mr. Raymond Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege and an honour to rise today to respond to the bill before the House.

This proposal to privatize airports, especially the profitable ones, is a matter of serious concern for taxpayers in Canada. I think the old concepts of the Reagan and Thatcher era are starting to wear very thin. It is ironic that this government, as this concept is falling into disrepute, is just coming to fruition with so many of these projects.

I would use the example of the Social Credit government in British Columbia. We are waiting for an election there to finally put this anachronism away. That government privatized the highway system. It is amazing. I do not know of a single British Columbian who now approves this idea.

We watched the Princess Marguerite, hailed as a tremendous goal in privatization, go down the drain last week. Certainly it is a strange situation when the government moves into airport privatization.

I know that there are many people who want greater participation and it would be in the government's interest to develop a mechanism to get that local participation. Certainly bureaucrats in Vancouver have no feel for what is happening on the coast or in other areas of British Columbia. They certainly do not have adequate resources to meet the needs of those communities. They have been starved on one hand and they have had a great deal of difficulty in working with a regulatory framework to co–operate with communities.

I hope the government could find a mechanism other than privatization. I use the example of the harbours question because we seem to be much further along with that area of privatization. There are rumours rampant on the coast of British Columbia. I would like to deal in detail with these and hope that the minister might have an opportunity to rise and clarify the situation.

In every community along the coast of British Columbia the harbour is the transportation system. I would use as examples places like Klemtu and Bella Bella. The rate for food coming into those communities is enormous as compared to the cost of food in the urban areas. It is shipped there by marine transport or air freight. For years they have asked for a roll-on, roll-off facility for trucks and trailers. It would have cut the cost of living in those communities enormously. It was completely ignored by the Department of Transport.

The failure to develop those harbours on a continuing basis means that they were given a 75-year life span. The rumour is that under this government the ministry intends to abandon these harbours after they wear out completely. In abandoning them, it hopes the private sector or the communities that depend on them will pick up the capital costs and operating cost. If they want a harbour they can simply put it in themselves. Well that is not going to happen. It is going to create an enormous problem on the coast because the cost of living is too high. The ability to maintain the local economy when the infrastructure is removed just is impossible. In the more inhabited area, we find large government injections of cash into airports and highway systems. In the smaller communities, that injection of cash is not there and, simply, it says that they cannot continue to exist.

It is my hope that the minister will stand up and comment that this abandonment within the next 15 to 20 years will not occur, that in fact the government has a harbour renovation program, and that they will continue to own and maintain those.

I would point to a couple of examples where people want to become locally involved but there is no mechanism by which it is permitted. Zeballos recently had their harbour burn down and it totally removed that area from their local economy. What is needed is a sharing. The community wants to get involved with the Government of Canada and the Department of Transport to help build a wharf. The original projection was about $1 million and it looked as if that were an impossible task for the government to deal with. The community came forward to say let it develop a wharf in which it could pay half the cost by pouring in rock and preparing the site and have the government simply build a wharf head.

It has been hoping for an early response to a citizen-community initiative to save the taxpayers of Canada money, but that has not been forthcoming. Here is an opportunity for the minister to become involved with community planning and to cut in half, literally, the cost to Canadians.

Kyuquot is an interesting example of the same type of thing. In Kyuquot the harbours are littered with garbage. The federal government has basically said that it is not interested in those wharves. Certainly it owns the capital facility, but it is not going to put in enough money to operate it. Places such as Kyuquot and Fair Harbour are littered with garbage. It is ironic that in Fair Harbour this year the garbage heaps were so incredible that bears became a threat to people using the wharves.

We really need some assistance here, and I hope the minister tonight has not abandoned those wharves and main elements to the community facility, but will indeed get involved with the people of Zeballos, Kyuquot and Fair Harbour.

In Alert Bay, the Nimpkish band needs that transportation for its fishing fleet which is the main core of the community. The government seemed interested in building harbours, renovating harbours and upgrading harbours anywhere but in Alert Bay for the Nimpkish Indian band. There was some token spending there that basically placed capital facilities in place, but it was not adequate to protect them. They have worn and deteriorated substantially.

I hope the minister is prepared to go there or to send officials to Alert Bay to say that the government is willing to work with them to bring the facilities up to standard. It has not happened for years, and it is extremely important that it does.

In Gibsons, British Columbia, again, there is the move toward privatization, the move toward abandoning government responsibility for public infrastructure, and essentially trying to throw off the responsibility for these very important public utilities to the local community and to the private sector.

There was a great furore during the last election. The breakwater at Gibsons was in a situation where there could at times be substantial wind damage occurring to the fleet tied up there. There was a need for a breakwater. A great big blue sign appeared and the government said it would fix this facility up for the people if they would just vote for it in the next election. Ultimately, nothing happened. It just simply carried on.

We are afraid that the minister, the government and the officials of the Department of Transport are working on a plan that will, as these wharves deteriorate over the next 15 years, abandon them and hope that the community picks them up or does without.

It is an ironic case where the government makes a great deal today about privatizing the airports, turning it over to a local community, turning the costs over and watching a general deterioration, if any of the other items are an example of this.

In the community of Pender Harbour in Madeira Park, it was interesting. The Seattle Yacht Club arrived in this community and simply purchased an area. It was a private sector initiative for harbour development. It turned around and encroached on the water leases of other folks in the area. Their neighbours were absolutely outraged at what appeared to be almost the co-operation of the government in permitting this kind of encroachment.

Here is a private sector group which came in, purchased an area, and then simply expanded the thing without permission or permit and we have a situation where the neighbours are hung out to dry by Transport Canada. The ratepayers group are outraged by it. The neighbours are outraged by it. The local regional board is outraged by it. Yet, the Government of Canada has moved along with the province of B.C. and facilitated literally a foreign outfit coming in and taking over against the planning initiatives and against the wishes of the local residents, a harbour project by a private sector group, the Seattle Yacht Club.

It is amazing the reaction of that community. Certainly in privatization, there is no willingness to play ball with local residents. If we are looking at trying to sell this concept with airports to local communities, I would say that the minister and the government has got a long way to go to regain the confidence of people along the coast of B.C. If it is talking about harbour projects, garbage, and numerous—

Mr. Charles A. Langlois (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, I simply would like to point out that today's debate on Bill C-85 concerns the transfer of certain airports and also provides for certain matters respecting the benefits of employees at the airports in this country that would be affected by these transfers.

I listened to the hon. member since the beginning of his speech. He never addressed the subject or made the slightest reference in his speech to the subject before the House today. I simply would like to ask the House to consider the relevance of this debate and address the questions before the House that are relevant to Bill C-85.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I again recognize the hon. member for North Island—Powell River, who, I am sure, will have benefited from the comments made by his colleague across the way.

[English]

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I do indeed appreciate the insight of my colleague from the Conservative Party, but I can understand why he is so sensitive.

In the last Parliament there were certainly a number of members of his party who came to the House in 1984 to 1988, preaching the privatization that they are now preaching with airports today, and the benefits of turning this over to local privateers. I am just trying to make the connection and show him how faulty the logic is here. They have done this with the harbours and now they are proposing to do it with the airports, but the population is up in the air about it. I am simply hoping that the minister will recognize that he has some work to do with the harbour issue, and his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans with the small craft harbour issues. We certainly do not want the same kind of thing—we already have experienced this disaster in that area—that has happened to the airports.

If my colleague can follow through a little more closely, he will learn how basically unpopular this has been, and how there is a real serious necessity for a change. If it were not unpopular, possibly there would be some of the former members from the coast of B.C. sitting in the House, but certainly their constituents no longer have any confidence in them.

So, the wrong-headed approach in the marine transportation sector certainly is carrying over into the other side.

I do not want to carry on any longer with this. I am hoping I have made my point and I am hoping that the minister will take an opportunity to comment on a very serious matter. There is a feeling on that coast that the government intends to abandon the federal government wharves as these harbours come on to their seventh-fifth year.

It is a matter of fact that in the small craft harbours sector there is a private consulting firm preparing a report to abandon small craft harbours. Of course, there have been numerous concerns about upgrading facilities that are a hazard, be it garbage, breakwaters, and what not. I am wondering if the minister might stand up and dispel some of those fears and see if we can indeed not be, I would say, pushed away from the concept of locally governing some of these airports. Maybe the minister could in fact stand up in the House and dispel some of those fears of British Columbians.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, on October 24 I put a question to the Minister of State for Seniors concerning the effects of the goods and services tax on Canadian senior citizens. I now appreciate this opportunity to rise and bring this issue again to the House and truly hope that the response I will receive will be better understood by myself and the seniors of this nation.

The basis of my question was that the GST will place an added burden on Canadian seniors. The government may give some song and dance on the issue of credits and say that tax credits will control the impact on the goods and services tax, but in fact the GST will have a very negative effect on the seniors of this nation.

In a response to my question, the minister talked about social justice and said that essential goods will not be taxed. However, the minister's response fell far from the mark. There are many items that may or may not be taxed. It depends on how they are purchased.

The GST Consumer Information Office states clearly that if a medical device is bought with a doctor's prescription, the GST will not be added. If this device is purchased without a prescription, the tax will be charged. This discrepancy is quite alarming and will lead to confusion among seniors and, of course, Canadian citizens at large.

One example of that I would like to use to explain the problems associated is the able walker that was advertised on TV. This device provides walking and balance assistance to seniors. It acts as a seat if they are waiting for a bus and can be converted into a shopping cart when they arrive at the mall.

Sales of these items are booming, especially for the seniors who need just a little assistance to get around.

The problem is if you send for the able walker through the mail, are you supposed to send a doctor's prescription along with the cheque? That is considering that they went to the doctor. Nobody seems to know the answer.

The GST consumer information office feeds the same line. If the medical device is prescribed by a doctor, it is tax free. If it is not, the tax must be paid.

These people are supposed to protect the consumer's interest. Can a simple answer to a simple question like the GST and how it will be applied to a device of this nature not be explained to the seniors? For example, if they order through the mail or over the telephone, how are they going to send the prescription? These are answers that Canadian seniors deserve to have.

The way the GST will affect non-prescription drugs is costly. The GST will be applied to non-prescription drugs such as Aspirin, Ben-Gay and Sudafed, all of which many seniors take to care for common ailments.

The case of Aspirin is much more dramatic than others. Many senior citizens are on what is called Aspirin therapy to help prevent the reoccurrence of heart attack. With the GST, the cost of Aspirin, according to the information office, is expected to rise by 2.3 per cent. In order to avoid paying the tax, many people, including seniors, will go to the doctor to get a prescription.

What this will do will be to add to our medicare costs. It will also add to our provincial drug plans. It will add costs to both which, in the end, will be more of a cost to the seniors, and all Canadians.

What the government should be doing is exempting all medication, both prescription and non-prescription drugs, from the GST. Something that this government should also be doing is helping seniors on fixed incomes escape poverty. Almost 40 per cent of all single senior Canadians live below the poverty line, and this government is doing very little to help them.

The last time Old Age Security and GIS were increased above inflation was over six years ago. Now, for single senior citizens, the gap between poverty and the maximum income available from OAS and GIS is over $2,000.

The goods and services tax is nothing but a burden to the Canadian senior citizen. The difference in when the goods and services tax is applied and when it is not applied will cause a major confusion.

Requiring a prescription to avoid the tax will lead to increased costs to the health care system and to the provincial drug plans, which I explained before will in the end cause more cost to the senior citizen. The senior citizens are the people who made this nation what it is today, and this is unfair.

In response to my question, the minister spoke of seniors and said: "We are listening to them and trying to help them fill their needs." If the minister were listening and trying to fill the needs of the senior citizen, she would contact her colleague, the Minister of Finance, explain the great difficulties that this is going to place on the senior citizen and ask the Minister of Finance to axe the GST.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very unfortunate that the hon. member has discussed this subject in the way that he has. I listen to him and I hear there is a core of concern that he obviously feels for low-income Canadians and a concern for senior citizens in this country. In that, I think he is no different than any other member of the House. He is mischievous to an unnecessary degree in analysing and making the statements the way that he has.

The whole effort here is to take an existing tax of 13.5 per cent, lower it to 7 per cent and do in the process a spreading out to everything else so that it is fair for all Canadians, and that includes seniors. Within that, the government has decided no, there must something further done. There are two responses that it has taken that show exactly that it has been listening and has designed a very fair system.

The first thing the government did was make some exemptions. Basic groceries were exempted as well as services like Meals on Wheels. Those that are served in nursing homes will be tax free. No tax will be charged on most health and dental care, hospital and nursing home care. There will be no tax on prescription drugs and medical devices. Eye glasses, contact lenses and hearing aids will also be tax free. No tax will be charged on residential rents, municipal transit, ferry services, legal aid services, loans and other financial services. I mention those because all of those are the types of things that senior citizens in particular are buying. This is one of the very special things that our government has done to be fair. It is a total difference from this black and bleak picture that the member has presented to the House.

The second thing the government did was to introduce a tax credit. This makes it a fair system for Canadians who are on low incomes, the very people he is speaking about. Under this new system, households with families with incomes of $30,000 or less are going to be better off than they are under the existing manufacturers' sales tax. As a result of this reform coming through right now, some 84 per cent of seniors will receive the GST credit. That is 84 per cent who will be receiving that cheque every three months to help them offset the cost of paying it. About 75 per cent of households that are headed by seniors or single parents are going to be better off. One cannot make those exemptions without drawing a line.

If everything was going to be taxed, there would be no differentiation between what is on one side of the line and what is on the other. Once it is said that these core things such as prescription medicines, basic groceries, residential rents and exempt them, then clearly there has to be a line of division. This is common sense and this is the way the law works.

For the hon. member to stand up and parade the case of Aspirin or a few other things that may be on the other side of the line and in so doing try to engender fear among the senior citizens of this country, is an outrage to the common sense of those good people. It reminds me of the same kind of fear-mongering that was heard from them in the last election campaign when they told the seniors of this country that under free trade trade, they were going to be losing their medicare. Medicare is still here. Also, that they were going to be losing all kinds of other goods services. Those services are still here.

MEMBER OF THE SENATE

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in the adjournment debate this evening on a subject that was before the House approximately one year ago. I think that Hansard shows it as November 6. That is almost so long ago, I can hardly remember. Having to look back that far, it is hard to conjure up the adrenalin that perhaps I had at that time in addressing the issue in Question Period.

The question has to do with whether or not the government had conveyed to parties interested in reviewing a matter, the matter of whether or not a senator had breached either a statute, the Parliament of Canada Act, or conflict of interest guidelines. I had asked whether or not the government was able to provide to those who would investigate, and here I was thinking of the RCMP or any other agency that would have looked at the matter, a list of law firms that had been doing business with the Federal Business Development Bank. I would have expected the government to respond in good faith and say yes, we have or no, we did not or we cannot, but the government did not. The government's response was that my question should have been made part of the Order Paper, as a Question on the Order Paper. Needless to say, I was not very happy with that because I did not ask for the list. I was not fishing for the list. I wanted to know that the government was co-operating, in good faith, with those whose jobs required them to investigate that particular issue. That is why I rise in the House now to raise the issue again and place it on the public record here in Parliament.

The matter involved a public record that showed the amount of $104,000 had been paid to a law firm in which the senator involved was a partner or associate. It seemed pretty reasonable to me to ask whether or not that law firm was on a list and what types of business that law firm had transacted, in retainer, for the Federal Business Development Bank.

I was curious as to how a party who was a lawyer—and although the hon. senator is one with whom I work on a committee, I have not asked him personally but I think the question was certainly addressed here in the House—could have been unaware, as a lawyer, of some of the particulars of the statutes that were being spoken of at the time. At the time, I wanted members of the government to stand up and acknowledge the facts, as they were on the public record, and say that it would take a look at them.

A whole year has passed. I did not bother to ask for the list after the reply was given to my question, but I know there is a list because I and individuals with whom I worked back in the early 1980s were on the list. I was on a list of lawyers who did work for the Federal Business Development Bank in rotation. I will say that I did not have a conflict of interest at that time and the issue before Parliament, a year ago, was whether or not the particular senator did. That issue has still not been answered.

I can suggest that the government is stonewalling when a whole year passes and the issue has not been dealt with. I think the voters of Canada are entitled to look for more, an improved response over that which was given to the electorate and to Parliament that day, a year ago. I think they deserve more than that and I want to point out that my role in opposition is one that requires all of us, on this side of the House, to ask questions like this and ask them fairly.

We do not want to convict anyone in absentia but we are certainly entitled to ask fair questions. It is our job. A lot of us actually do not like the job. It is not easy to stir the pot. It is not easy to have to stand up and point the finger and pretend someone else is a bad guy and maybe worse than other people in this world, but we have to do that in opposition. That is our job to ensure that the duly elected government follows a path that the electorate thinks is fair.

When the government strays, as it does from time to time, it is our job to keep the government honest. I often wonder what if I or my colleagues in the opposition were on that side of the House in government? Perhaps that is a possibility over the next few years. It may occur and perhaps it may not. I like to think that it would.

How would I like those questions to be addressed? I know that when I answer a question outside of the House, I like to answer it straight. If I have made a mistake or I am not sure, I would like to think that I would admit that.

• (1900 )

On November 6, a year ago, this particular government began stonewalling on a minor issue but an issue involving conflict of parliamentarians. The issue has still not been answered. It has still not been properly addressed in this House or in the Senate, which has its own life, the other place.

I would like to think that some day, some time, some place there will be a minister who will stand in the House and deal with the issue in a very straightforward, honest manner, clear the decks, place the blame where it should lie, and get on with the more positive business of the country.

Mr. Barry Moore (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, his question is related to the dealings of Senator Cogger with the government and a Crown corporation, namely the Federal Business Development Bank, the FBDB.

The questions that were asked of the minister were answered at that time. He knows full well that there is an RCMP investigation into this case and, if he is a member of the bar, he would know that we cannot comment on this matter. It is under active investigation by the RCMP, an investigation that has repeatedly been reported by the news media over the past year. It is clear that the RCMP is conducting a thorough investigation to ensure that the Canadian public is informed of whether or not there is indeed a conflict of interest in the senator's dealings with the government.

In May, as I am sure the hon. member also knows, the special committee of the Senate created to look into this matter, and which I may add is made up of a majority of Liberal senators, suspended its hearings to await the findings of the RCMP investigation. This is normal.

In June a series of reports in newspapers across the country indicated that the RCMP had filed documents in the Quebec court describing in some detail the results of its investigation to that date. Since then there have been numerous other reports in the media related to the Senator Cogger investigation.

In light of what is obviously a very active, ongoing RCMP investigation, it would be improper for me or any other member to comment any further on the topic until such time as the RCMP has completed its work.

The member's colleague, the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, has already requested an incredible amount of information from the FBDB and, far from stonewalling, we have given him all the information he needs on this question of dealings between Senator Cogger and the law firm of Lapointe and Rosenstein. This information has been provided as requested.

In addition, both the bank and the Government of Canada have co-operated as fully as possible in making available not only documents but resource people as well to the RCMP while it carries out its work.

I have no doubt that the answer to the hon. member's question will be clear once the RCMP has completed its investigation.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, on October 30, 1990 I asked the Minister of National Revenue a question with respect to the potential for companies under the GST to inflate their inventories in goods and services tax rebate claims.

This question arose out of the 1989 Auditor General's report wherein he pointed out that unless the government tightened up its ship in Revenue Canada it would be having difficulty in meeting the problems arising from the goods and services tax.

He pointed out that there were approximately 75,000 registrants under the present manufacturers' sales tax and that it would be going up to well over a million under the goods and services tax.

He questioned the ability of Revenue Canada employees, with the present system, to be able to do anything about that effectively. He raised the question of fraud, not only as it related to the manufacturers' sales tax, but he extended it to that of the goods and services tax.

Under some questioning this year, it appeared that the Auditor General was not yet satisfied that those loopholes had been closed. Let me revert to the 1989 report in setting out the problem in the Auditor General's words. In that report under section 18.46 he stated as follows:

> In principle, all businesses with inventories held for resale could come forward and claim a rebate. The Department is anticipating a significant volume of claims which will be filed within a relatively short period of time. The Department will have to assemble the machinery to verify and process these claims.

He goes on to state:

> This major task of converting tax-paid inventories to pre-tax levels will pose threats of revenue leakage. The Department will have to provide proper controls over the conversion process to ensure a fair assessment of the rebates and minimize revenue loss.

When questioned this year as to whether he had been satisfied that those had been looked after, he stated that it appeared to him that Revenue Canada was in a state of crisis management in trying to implement the GST. He said further that they were in a difficult sense of uncertainty when they do not even know what the rules are.

It appears that this was a major problem in his mind, that there were in fact going to be many difficulties in the implementation of the goods and services tax. However, the potential for fraud points out only one of the problems inherent in this tax system under the goods and services tax. It appears that the department is ill prepared to collect or enforce the legislation.

I would like to point out just a few of the problems that I am aware of. The list is endless when you look at the problems involved. Keeping in mind that the Auditor General has warned that Revenue Canada is in a state of crisis management, we look at what is happening at the present time. They are bringing in regulations on a daily basis. The original budget speech talked about 150 separate regulations. About 30 have been brought in so far. There is a problem here for the legislators in the Standing Committee on Scrutiny of Regulations, the joint committee between this House and the Senate, and there is a problem for accountants and the tax people themselves.

Revenue Canada employees do not even know what the rules are, as the Auditor General has pointed out. Further the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and others pointed to the problem of a massive backlog of registrations. We do not know how many have registered yet, but we do know that the backlog could be as long as three months.

A further problem has been pointed out in advertisements by the Consumer Information Office of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. This again was pointed out to the Minister of State for Tourism and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs by Mr. Bulloch who said that through these advertisements they were hurting small business.

In a reply to Mr. Bulloch, the Minister of State for Small Business and Tourism said: "I share your genuine concern that the advertisements in question do a disservice to small business and the tourism industry by unfairly singling out certain sectors with respect to the impact of the GST". This shows a problem within the system itself.

• (1910)

In my riding, it is the mayors of the communities who pointed out that they want this tax stopped. They have done that through personal calls to me over the weekend and they have done it through their councils passing referendums. In the elections just held, the city of Vancouver had a referendum where it showed 85 per cent of the people voted against the goods and services tax. The city of Kitimat showed 88 per cent of the people were against the goods and services tax.

I would like to end by stating that a constituent of mine, Malcolm McPherson, owner of the Richter Pass Motel, pointed out on the weekend that there had to be some way of stopping this goods and services tax. He asked me: "Does this government know what this tax is going to do to the tourist industry?" These comments point out a small part of the fraud aspect, but it is much broader. This tax must be stopped.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am replying tonight in the absence of the Minister of Revenue who is still recovering from the soapsuds in his mouth.

[Translation]

I simply want to say that Revenue Canada is aware that in GST, as in any tax, there is the potential for fraud.

A number of steps have been taken to ensure the detection and prevention of fraud. Audit staff are being trained in the detection and prevention of fraud. Also, Revenue Canada is developing and implementing audit programs designed to uncover fraudulent practices.

Revenue Canada's automated claim processing system has built-in edit checks which reflect the knowledge gained from its own experience as well as that of other countries. Rebate claims which fail the tests will be subjected to audit at the local office level.

Some aspects of the rebate program itself have been designed to encourage factual and accurate claims. For example, inventories, for F.S.T. rebates, will be valued on the same basis as that used for income tax purposes. As inflated inventory values are a disadvantage from an income tax perspective, there is a built-in inducement to realistic and accurate valuation of inventories.

Officials from Revenue Canada have reached an agreement with representatives of the professional accounting community respecting their attestation to the inventory values being claimed. F.S.T. rebate claims accompanied by a report of a licensed accountant will be expedited in our process. Those claimants who opt for this independent third party review will receive their refunds quicker and the integrety of the rebate system will be enhanced by these certifications.

Mr. Speaker, Revenue Canada will have the programs to ensure the detection and prevention of fraud.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 7.15 p.m.

REVIEW OF THE PARLIAMENT OF CANADA ACT

PRESENTATION OF FIFTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fifth report of the Special Committee on the Review of the Parliament of Canada Act concerning Bill C-79, and the bill is presented with amendments.

[English]

I would also like to thank the researchers and the lawyers who have done an excellent job for the committee and, in particular, the clerks of the committee, Mr. Birch and especially Mr. Kirby who has been with us now for many months and doing excellent work.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to extend our appreciation to the chair of that committee. It was a difficult committee. There were some challenging moments. However, because of the excellent leadership provided by the chair, we are able now to file this report and hopefully deal with it expeditiously.

I simply want to say that I appreciate the efforts the chairman made during those difficult moments.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, if you requested unanimous consent to jump from motions to the presenting of petitions, I think members on both sides of the House would concur with moving to petitions at this time and then reverting to motions?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I will now call Petitions. The hon. member for Kamloops.

PETITIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present today. One is on behalf of a number of people from the province of British Columbia who point out that with the goods and services tax it will mean that Canada is one of the very few countries of the world that will levy taxes on literature, reading material, religious tracts, children's story books, and the like. In a world where we are attempting to use every means at our disposal to reduce the high levels of illiteracy, it seems to me and certainly to the petitioners that this is a very regressive step.

I wish to present a petition on another matter, although it is related, on behalf of a number of petitioners from Kamloops, British Columbia, They indicate their opposition to the goods and services tax and that a recent referendum in the city of Vancouver pointed out that 80 per cent of the people opposed the goods and services tax and that only 15 per cent supported it, about the same relationship I suppose in terms of the support for the government generally.

The petitioners say that surely, if 85 per cent of the people oppose the goods and services tax, the government ought to listen and back off from proceeding with the tax and consider real tax reform as an alternative.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I present a petition on behalf of the people of Snowdrift in the Northwest Territories with regard to the native people of Canada, specifically the Mohawk Nation.

They indicate that they expect the Government of Canada will immediately act upon its authority and responsibility and deal in a just manner with the struggle of all aboriginal people in Canada to have their land claims and rights properly addressed. Inaction on the part of the federal authorities will only continue to antagonize race relations in Canada and to provoke dangerous and ignorant acts of racism.

I present this on behalf of the people of Snowdrift who feel very strongly, as do other native Canadians.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions that I would like to place on the table, pursuant to Standing Order 36. They are signed by residents from the great province of British Columbia who are opposed to the goods and services tax.

Whereas there has been the imposition of some 31 taxes since the Conservatives have come to power, these petitioners are opposed to this new general goods and services tax because it will cause serious and unfair hardship to low and middle income Canadians and will provide an onerous burden on small business.

Each of the petitions requests the Government of Canada, both in the House of Commons as well as the Senate, to withdraw the goods and services tax as soon as humanly possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a large number of petitions to table today and they are about the fact that the government wants to tax books.

Mr. Speaker, we know that taxing reading or books is tantamount to promoting ignorance and that the government's proposed tax on books, newspapers and magazines is regressive in the extreme.

Your petitioners—hundreds of them—maintain that the free distribution of printed matter is a cornerstone of our democracy, our culture and our education. They claim that an educated and productive society will be adversely affected by a provision that would put a tax on books, something unheard of in Canada so far. Mr. Speaker, these people strenuously object to the GST being applied to books or to anything else.

[English]

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present, on behalf of a number of persons from Port Coquitlam, Coquitlam, Vancouver, Burnaby, and New Westminster in the province of British Columbia, and a number of other towns and cities in the lower mainland of British Columbia, a petition calling upon the government to withdraw the goods and services tax.

The petitioners point out, in particular, that the imposition of this tax will create an onerous burden on small business. They also point out the unfair hardship it will mean to low and middle-income Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, it makes one wonder, with all of the petitions from all parts of this country, why the government and members supporting the government are not giving more attention to the concerns of that 85 per cent or 90 per cent of Canadians out there who want this tax dumped and want some real honest to goodness tax reform brought in. When are you going to do it?

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition with regard to the goods and services tax.

Even the modest amendments which are being put forth by the Senate, such as not putting the GST on books and certainly not on funerals, the government is again refusing to even consider these things. I think the petitioners are getting more and more incensed because of the insensitivity of the government.

I would humbly ask the government, through you Mr. Speaker, that it consider rescinding this abhorrent goods and services tax.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, like my colleagues, I would appreciate the opportunity to present to you and to other members of the House a petition with respect to the goods and services tax.

The petitioners in a series of recitals indicate the reasons why they believe this particular tax ought to be withdrawn immediately. They point out, first, that since 1984 the Conservative government has imposed 31 new taxes or tax increases on Canadians and, since 1984, the present federal manufacturers' sales tax has been increased by the federal government from 9 per cent to 13 per cent.

The petitioners go on to say that this new tax, which will be hidden from Canadians, will be applied to virtually everything they buy, with very few exceptions. They also point out in their recitals that the imposition of the GST will cause serious and unfair hardship to low and middle-income Canadians and will create an onerous burden on Canadians.

They conclude by asking this government and, in particular, the Minister of Finance to come to his senses, to understand and realize the very serious harm that this tax will do to Canadians and withdraw it immediately.

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 36 to present a number of petitions that were gathered at both the Caledonia and Simcoe fairs regarding the goods and services tax.

These constituents of mine from Hagersville, Caledonia, Delhi and Fisherville, all call upon this government to reject the tax.

• (1120 )

The petitioners say that the imposition of this tax will create an onerous burden on small businesses and are concerned about its effect on small businesses. They call upon this government to reject the proposed goods and services tax.

ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I move:

> That the third report of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs, presented to the House on Tuesday, June 19, 1990, be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your interest in putting this motion to a vote, because I think it should be voted on by this House. It is an extremely important motion, and I think that once I explain the reasons for presenting it today, the House will want to submit it to a vote prior to the recessing of the session at the lunch hour.

As members will know, the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs submitted its report in June of this year on the exiles of Grise Fiord in the Northwest Territories, after hearing direct evidence from the Inuit people involved in that incident.

The evidence dealt with the suffering that 15 Inuit families experienced when they were uprooted from their home in northern Quebec and moved to the high Arctic outposts of Grise Fiord and Resolute between 1953 and 1957.

The committee heard evidence from these Inuit families and people who had spent time at Grise Fiord over a period of months. We heard direct evidence from the people involved. We also heard evidence from the Canadian authorities and from others who were involved in the experiment.

The committee heard evidence from the people who were misled by Canadian authorities as to the reasons for their move up to Grise Fiord in the Northwest Territories. We heard evidence that they had suffered grievously from disease, hunger, medical neglect and social problems as a result of that move.

We heard that even though they had been promised the opportunity to return to northern Quebec if they were not satisfied with the experiment, they were not moved back to their homes within a space of two or three years. Most actually were not moved back to their community in northern Quebec until the 1980s, some 30 years after they were moved up to the high Arctic in the first place.

While the government would lead us to believe that the relocation of these Inuit families was voluntary, in fact witnesses told the committee that the move was led by the RCMP. They said that in those days when the RCMP came to your door and made a suggestion to you, because of the intimidation of the RCMP and because of the tendency of the people to believe and to follow orders from the RCMP, you did what you were told, Mr. Speaker.

Even though it is suggested by the government that this move was a voluntary move, in fact the Inuit families who were ultimately moved from northern Quebec up into the high Arctic at Resolute and Grise Fiord felt that they had no other option, that they were being ordered to move. Therefore they did move.

They also felt that they had been misled because the federal government bureaucrats had told them that there was more wildlife and other materials up there that would make their life better and make them less dependent on welfare. In fact, this was not the case.

Witnesses also told the committee that their treatment by Canadian authorities and by the RCMP included sexual assault, exchanging the right of work or food for sexual favours and the outright use of slave labour by Canadian authorities in the northern communities of Grise Fiord and Resolute. At this point we are told that there is an internal RCMP investigation, though not a public inquiry, into the criminal aspects of the charges laid against Canadian authorities at Grise Fiord and Resolute Bay, but that according to the documents submitted yesterday that came from the bureaucracy, but were submitted by the minister in this House, the RCMP are having difficulty arranging interviews with the key complainants.

I am sure that since the key complainants are making accusations of sexual assault against RCMP members, it is going to be difficult to reach the complainants.

As the House will know, the committee after hearing Inuit witnesses and in the absence of any credible evidence to the contrary made the following recommendations.

It recommended that the government acknowledge the role played by the Inuit relocated to the high Arctic in protection of Canadian sovereignty in the north. It asked the government to apologize for the wrongdoing which the government inflicted on the people of Grise Fiord and Resolute Bay at that time, a result of these concerns about northern sovereignty. The committee also asked that an apology be carried out with due solemnity and it asked that the apology be accompanied with some form of recognition of the contribution to Canadian sovereignty made by the Inuit people of Grise Fiord and Resolute Bay. The government was asked to consider compensation for the people of Grise Fiord and Resolute Bay for their service to Canada and for the wrongdoings inflicted upon them.

Those were the recommendations made by the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and unanimously agreed to by all parties in that committee, the Conservative members, the Liberal members and the New Democratic members. It was unanimously recommended to the House of Commons, based on the direct evidence from the people who were involved in the incident and who had suffered from the incident and who have direct knowledge of the incident.

In addition the committee called on the government within the customary time period of 150 days to respond to the committee's report. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the government's response was tabled yesterday by the minister, and it denied all of the evidence submitted by the Inuit witnesses who appeared before the committee or who were involved in the Grise Fiord–Resolute Bay relocations.

It denied that the motives for the relocation was to defend the sovereignty of the Canadian north. It refused an apology and the government based its report on what it called an independent outside consultant, mutually acceptable to the Makivik Corporation and to the department.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that the so–called independent report done by the government in consultation with the Makivik Corporation is completely false in its conclusions. It is selective in its use of the evidence, and its intent was to whitewash the bureaucrats living and dead, retired and still working, who were involved in that incident where a small group of 15 Inuit families were uprooted from their homes in northern Quebec, transferred up to the hostile climate of the high Arctic, and left basically to their own devices.

The issue is that this House now has an opportunity either to accept the report and the recommendations made by a select standing committee of the House, an all-party committee of the House, which came to different conclusions than the bureaucrats, or they can vote non-confidence in their committee and accept the word of the bureaucrats and the internal examination that the bureaucrats had done of themselves by what they call an outside report.

I think this is a very important question for members to deal with. This House, if it makes a decision to vote concurrence with the recommendations of the committee, then supports the select standing committee and the direct evidence that the committee heard. If it decides either not to vote and to talk out this motion or to vote against this motion then what it is doing is expressing non-confidence in the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs, non-confidence in the witnesses that it heard, and non-confidence in the committee process. That is a very dangerous precedent to be established in the House.

As I said, the committee heard direct evidence from people who were directly involved, as opposed to the report tabled by the minister in the House yesterday which was an internal examination by a consultant selected by the Department of Indian Affairs to examine its own actions. As a result, the House has a very difficult decision to make. It must either vote non-confidence against the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs, with whatever ramifications that might have, or vote non-confidence against a report which whitewashes the bureaucracy, both current and past, with whatever ramifications that that has.

The report that was submitted yesterday, as I said, is extremely selective. It was designed to whitewash the bureaucracy and to absolve it of all wrongdoing. The report, in many cases, directly lies to the members of this House of Parliament and those lies must be corrected because they are complete falsehoods. The House should express its opinion about this report by voting in favour of the concurrence motion. To do so is going to have some serious consequences to the future credibility of standing committees of the House and certainly to the credibility of members who serve on those standing committees.

First, it should be noted that this report says it is a report that was jointly done or that it was done by an independent consultant who was acceptable to the Department of Indian Affairs and to the Makivik Corporation. That statement, Mr. Speaker, is a lie.

What happened was that the Department of Indian Affairs approached the Makivik Corporation which represents the Inuit people in this case. It said: "We have three consultants whom we are going to present to you. You are allowed to select one of them." But they were the three consultants selected by the Department of Indian Affairs. The Makivik Corporation and the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada said: "We cannot accept the first two because they have done negative reports against natives in the past, so we will accept the only one you are offering to us that we do not know." That is the one that was accepted and the one that did this report.

I am sure that if the Makivik Corporation or the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada looked at this report today, they would not have accepted any of them, but they had no choice. They were offered three choices by the Department of Indian Affairs.

So, this is not a joint study as the minister and as the bureaucrats in his department would like us to believe. This is a study that was imposed upon the Makivik Corporation and a consultant was imposed upon the Makivik Corporation by the Department of Indian Affairs. Makivik had absolutely no choice in which consultant did the report. They were all three Department of Indian Affairs consultants.

From the very first paragraph of this report, it is misleading. It is an attempt to deceive the House into believing that this is a joint study, which it is not.

The then study goes on to say that the sovereignty of the north was not an issue in Canada's decision to move those 15 Inuit families from northern Quebec up onto Ellesmere Island, up to Grise Fiord and Resolute Bay. In fact, the minutes of meetings held to discuss this issue are very clear on the subject that Canada's sovereignty was a very important concern of the Canadian government.

I want to quote the minutes of a meeting held at 10 a.m., August 10, 1953, in Room 304 of the Langevin Block, to discuss the transfer of certain Eskimo families from northern Quebec to Cornwallis and Ellesmere Island. The date it was received in the northern administration was August 12, 1953. I would like to have the opportunity to table this document in the House because it directly refutes the lies that were included in the report made by the consultant to the Department of Indian Affairs that was tabled in this House yesterday.

Mr. Sivertz, who later became the director of the northern operations, pointed out that the Canadian government was anxious to have Canadians occupying as much of the north as possible and it appeared that in many cases the Eskimos were the only people capable of doing this. It was a primary concern of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs at that time to transfer Eskimos, to uproot them from their homes, and to transplant them into the far north in order to establish Canadian occupancy in the far north and in order to establish Canadian sovereignty in that region.

For any bureaucrat or any bureaucrat's report to say that that is not true is utterly false. It is corroborated by its own minutes and by evidence available from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which its bureaucrats know about and which its so-called independent consultants know about. This report that was given to us by the minister is an attempt to mislead the minister and an attempt to mislead the House. It is also an attempt to mislead Canadians about the wrong-doing done against those Inuit families between 1953 and 1957.

I call on the House to support this motion, to vote in favour of it and to tell the bureaucrats and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in no uncertain terms that we do not like to be misled and lied to.

The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in its report also says that it was sending the Inuit families up to the High Arctic for their own good. It said that game resources were running in short supply in northern Quebec where these families lived prior to their transplantation. Game was running short and, as a result, it was said that game was in abundance in the northern area of the country. Therefore, it was worth-while to move these families to the northern area of the country in order that they would have more game and not be obliged to rely on the welfare system provided by the province of Quebec or the Canadian government.

In fact, that same meeting that I referred to that took place in the Langevin Block on August 10, 1953, even questioned the availability of resources and the ability of those 15 families to survive in the High Arctic, based on the resources that were available.

Mr. O'Neil, a representative of the Royal Canadian Air Force stated that he was afraid that there was not sufficient wildlife in the Resolute area to provide for the proposed Eskimo population, which amounted to 15 families. Mr. Cantley, who was also in attendance at the meeting, replied that he had reason to believe that there was sufficient marine life to support the Eskimo families concerned. No one could say for sure that this was the case and, consequently, the experiment was being staged.

When the Canadian government and the report of the minister and the bureaucrats from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development tells us that it was moving these Inuit families up to the High Arctic for their own good because there was more wildlife and fisheries resources there, even the evidence presented to the minutes dealing with this issue in 1953 indicated that members of the committee were concerned that, in fact, this was false. There was insufficient wildlife resources and insufficient country food resources available for those Inuit when they did arrive in the High Arctic and, as a result, they would be faced with starvation or a lack of country food. They may be even further forced to depend on the RCMP or the military for their food.

As a consequence, many of these families suffered hunger, privation and starvation as a result of the lack of food and the lack of success in hunting food in an area that was completely different from the one they came from.

Anyone who makes a comparison between the documents publicly available, the documents available in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and the report done by the department's so-called independent consultant can see that the so-called independent consultant selected information, dismissed other information, and, as a result, presented a report to the House that is false, that is full of lies, and that misleads the House.

I call on the House to take a very careful look at the documents that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development submitted to us yesterday. I also call on the House to look at the record of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in these kinds of issues. This is the same department that has forcibly moved native people off the land. In Nova Scotia, for example, it has forcibly combined and concentrated the Micmac Indians into two communities as another experiment. This country and this Department of Indian Affairs has done experiments on native people that would be the envy of Joseph Stalin's collectivization program or the envy of Josef Mengele.

It is time that the House recognizes the wrong-doings it has done to native people in the country, systematic wrong-doings it continues to do and will continue to do if it accepts the report issued by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on behalf of his bureaucrats in the House.

The one thing we have to do, and the one choice we have to make here today, is to accept either the minister's report, which is a complete and utter fabrication, a collection of lies of the worst order, or we can accept the report of the select standing committee of the House which was based on direct evidence of the people affected. It is a question of confidence, Mr. Speaker. I hope this issue comes to a vote and I hope that all members on all sides of the House support this motion.

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to report to the House on a matter of great importance to Canada's future.

The relationship between Canada and the aboriginal people has certainly had a difficult history. So difficult, in fact, that some are prepared to believe the worst of any situation concerning how we dealt with each other in years gone by. That, I think, is the attitude which has led many to accept the charges that in the early 1950s, the government of the day callously and cruelly uprooted a number of Inuit families from their communities and deposited them without food or resources in a hostile environment, all in the name of sinister and incomprehensible political interests.

We have heard a very passionate presentation by the member opposite telling us that the reports that have been made to the House are fabrications of lies of the worst order. I would like to take an opportunity now in the House to present another view of the issue and to tell the members of the House the government's position on the relocation of the Inuit residents to Grise Fiord and Resolute Bay in the 1950s. Much of this was based on an independent report, not an in-house report, but one of an independent nature.

First, I would like to remind the House that nearly four decades ago the far north was still pristine with plentiful wildlife and the high Arctic held hope and promise for the Inuit, who at the time were facing great hardships further south, and the plan was to improve their social and economic prospects.

In the period 1953 to 1957, the federal government relocated a number of Inuit families from Inukjuak in the northern Arctic of the Northwest Territories. It was only years later that some of the Inuit wished to return to Inukjuak at government expense.

In June of this year, the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs made five recommendations about that relocation. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development responded to those recommendations yesterday.

To understand the relocation, one must put the events which occurred in 1953 into historical perspective. In the 1950s the Government of Canada tried to assist northern native people in their pursuit of traditional livelihood. For those Inuit who wished it, the government was also willing to help them integrate at their own pace into the economic development that was occurring in the north.

Occasionally, hunting was poor in particular areas of the north and many people experienced hardship. At the time of the move the Inukjuak game had been depleted. The Inuit population was growing. The Inuit living there were facing difficult times.

The government's aim was to relocate the people to areas in which wildlife was more plentiful. The move to the Northwest Territories was based upon the abundance of game in the hopes of providing the Inuit with a better life. There was no hidden agenda in this project. It was undertaken with the best intentions and evidence clearly shows that the people concerned benefited materially from the move in a very short period of time. The facts clearly show that the relocation of the citizens was not done in the hope of protecting Canadian sovereignty.

Historical documents go back to 1930 when an exchange of notes between Norway and Canada occurred to support Canadian sovereignty. This exchange formally and officially recognized Canada's ownership of the Sverdrup Islands which are more northerly than Grise Fiord and Resolute Bay.

The Soviet Union had no designs on our Arctic and the United States agreed that it would use the Arctic islands only with Canadian consent. The only territorial threat, and I use the word "threat" in quotations, was from a few Greenland Inuit who occasionally, hunted illegally in Canada's territory in the late forties and the early fifties.

By 1952, the RCMP was on site and quite ready to deal with such problems. In fact, it was only in the sixties, when the American ship Manhattan went through the Northwest Passage, that the notion that Canadian sovereignty was an issue in the Inuit relocation of the 1950s developed. In response to the Manhattan, the Canadian government at the time started talking about things that were done to protect Arctic sovereignty, and history was rewritten. And the relocation of the Inuit was added to the list of things done by the government to support its control of the north.

The sovereignty issue was again raised in the 1980s by the Makivik Corporation, an organization set up under the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement of 1975. This represented the interests of all Inuit in northern Quebec, where Inukjuak is located. It is important, therefore, that research into the sovereignty issue, conducted by the Makivik Corporation in 1982, concluded that the move did not occur for reasons of sovereignty.

In 1990, Makivik, in its paper to the standing committee, turned its back on its own research in 1982 and declared its belief that sovereignty was the main motivation for the move.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge that, although sovereignty was not the reason for the move, the Inuit families who did move did assist indirectly in the promotion of Canadian sovereignty. By being part of the north, they were able to help the RCMP. They occasionally assisted the Mounties, who had concerns about the poaching of wildlife on Ellesmere Island. The Inuit from Inukjuak were able to help the RCMP administer the territorial game legislation and, indirectly, aided in upholding Canadian sovereignty.

The standing committee suggested that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was at fault for both the planning and the implementation of this project, which resulted in hardship for the Inuit.

In 1953, the means of transportation in the north left something to be desired. The main form of mass movement, perhaps one of the only means, was by ship. There were evidently problems that occurred because of this. One of the problems of Arctic travel, in fact any travel, is the transportation of goods.

Equipment and supplies which the people would need in their first year were carefully planned, purchased and shipped to selected sites. Unfortunately, some of the equipment was not off-loaded at the appropriate places. Consequently, that first winter in the high Arctic was, for many Inuit, very difficult.

The difficulties that were encountered in 1953, however, in large part were simply because it was 1953. Transportation and communications were relatively primitive. Since that time, there have been tremendous technological changes that have improved conditions in the north. They must also be set against conditions in the bush camps surrounding Port Harrison, from which the Inuit had come. Conditions were very poor and, in contrast to the high Arctic, there was almost no game. Hardships in the south easily matched that in the north and there was no chance for improvement.

I would also like to point out that the oral statements made to the standing committee about extreme hardships and starvation were not substantiated by letters from the people concerned. In the research, for example, an article entitled "Salluviniq's Story" published in 1977 recounts a very different experience. In the article this gentleman, one of the original people moved in 1953, states:

> Since I moved to Resolute I have never wanted to move back—If I wanted to move back to Inoucdjouac (Inukjuak), I think the government might agree to help me.

He also recounts in his story his life in Inukjuak prior to his move and he clearly indicates that there was no coercion involved in his decision to move to Resolute Bay.

• (1150)

There are many other letters in existence written by Inuit at Resolute Bay to relatives and to social workers in the department. They testify to the satisfaction of hunting conditions that were found in the high Arctic. Oral evidence also alludes to some misunderstandings at the time of the move. I can assure the House that there is no question that the best motivations dictated the relocation of the Inukjuak Inuit to the high Arctic. I suggest, however, that many of the misunderstandings may well have occurred because of language difficulties.

Perhaps the major contention of the Inukjuak Inuit was that the federal government had promised them that they could return to their homes at government expense if, after two or three years, they were not happy with their new location. After careful investigation, I am satisfied that some promises were made. As I mentioned, however, many of the letters written by the Inuit did not express a desire to leave and letters written by residents in the late fifties and early sixties in fact spoke of the desire to have family members join them at Resolute Bay.

Residents of the Inukjuak area continued to move north until the late fifties at which time entry to these communities was closed because they became overcrowded.

The earliest request to return on record came in 1960 when a request was made to go back to Inukjuak for a visit. There were virtually no Inuit who expressed a desire to leave the high Arctic for good at that time and there are a number of reasons why people requested to return. Many were not dealt with until 20 to 30 years after the original move. The lack of adequate transportation, which I mentioned, was one of the reasons. Travel arrangements at that time were not easily made. The only means available was by the annual supply ship which arrived and left in late summer.

As well, time lapses between the expression of the desire to leave and the finalization of those arrangements were lengthy. It is not to say that the government was not willing to try, but rather the problems encountered were cumbersome and restrictive. Indeed, in the early 1970s the RCMP used their own aircraft to arrange visits to the Northwest Territories, reimbursed by Canada, and was returning a few Inuit to Inukjuak. Still one fact is clear—at no time did the Canadian government refuse outright any Inuit request for return.

Another problem with moves back to Inukjuak was the lack of housing. If people went back, there was no housing available to them at that time. In 1988, however, DIAND did contribute $700,000 to assist the Government of Quebec in building 10 new homes to accommodate those wishing to return.

It is also likely that requests from the Inuit to return occurred long after the two or three years that the departmental officials had assumed would be the timeframe within which people would want to return home. Nonetheless, returns did continue.

Speaking now for the present, let me make it clear that the government believes it has a moral obligation to fulfil the promise to return those who wish to go back. The department has already spent in excess of some $250,000 on direct relocation costs to date. It stands ready to complete the relocation of those Inuit who wish it.

In light of this information, I feel that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has nothing to apologize for in the manner in which the relocation project was conceived, planned and carried out.

In fact, I would like to quote from the findings of the independent consultant who was acceptable at the time to the Makivik Corporation on this particular question.

The offer was made of three names. It was not a case of picking one person and saying: "You have to accept it." There was an offer made of three different groups and they accepted one of the three.

I quote from this report:

> The evidence that we examined does not support the allegation that the government committed wrongdoing in the planning and conduct of this project.

> The material we examined leads us to a different conclusion, namely that the project which was conscientiously planned, was carried out in a reasonable effective manner and that the Inuit participated in it voluntarily, in their own search for a better life, and benefited from the experience.
> We do not see the grounds for an apology by the government for the manner in which the relocation project was conceived, planned and carried out.
> In our view, to apologize for a wrongdoing it did not commit would constitute a deception on the part of the government.

That is not a government quote. It is the report of an independent firm that looked into the facts of the situation.

I sincerely sympathize with any family or family member still wishing to move back to Inukjuak and I hope that they will be able to do so promptly.

We will assist them to do so.

The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will continue to work with natives and northerners in attempting to reach mutually acceptable and desirable changes in programs and policies.

Before closing, I would like to balance these unhappy recollections of the past with the happier reality of the present.

The people of Canada's north, both native and non-native, are making great strides in achieving their aspirations, and the government is helping them to do so.

Foremost among our efforts is our commitment to enter into fair and reasonable land claims settlements. Recent milestones in land claims settlements in the Yukon and Northwest Territories are pointing Canada's north in a new and promising directing.

Over the course of the past year, major agreements have been reached in the north which will enhance economic, social and political development for first citizens and the northerners who came after.

The most notable, for its sheer size, was the agreement in principle of the Tungavik Federation of Nunavut Land Claim in the Eastern Arctic, the area where Resolute Bay and Grise Fiord are located.

The riches of the north will be enjoyed in greater measure than ever before by the 17,500 Inuit whose home territory covers the 350,000 square kilometres of land covered by the TFN land claim.

In addition to a land mass about half the size of Saskatchewan, Inuit will receive some $612 million in financial compensation, a share of resource royalties, guaranteed harvesting rights and participation in decision-making processes which deal with the land and environmental management.

This is a fair and just agreement.

In signing it, the Government of Canada has clearly said that we respect the historic rights of Inuit who have inhabited these territories for countless centuries.

It recognizes and supports their desire to sustain their traditions and shape their own future. It is that future that we and they must now concentrate on.

It is that future which will see the building of a new relationship between native and non-native Canadians, the relationship which the Prime Minister of Canada promised to work toward when he announced the federal government's new native agenda on September 25.

That is where our efforts should now be focused, and I count on the members of this House to let us get on with the building process.

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak to the motion that was put forward for concurrence.

I would like to say that the motion that we put forward has much merit. I cannot understand how the government can come back with a counterproposal refuting the essence of what these people have stated to the committee when they appeared before the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs on March 19. At that particular meeting we had a number of representatives from ITC and from the group termed as the High Arctic exiles, people who were actually involved in this relocation.

• (1200)

I believe that fancy reports and fancy documents from politicians and from governments do not speak as well as people from Canada who experience their own problems and who recognize the truth of their own lives better than we do.

One such individual was Mr. Allie Salluviniq, a Resolute Bay representative from the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada. He said: "I am Allie E9-1860. I am identified as such although I am Allie Salluviniq. All these other people also have numbers, E9 numbers. I was very small when we moved from Inukjuak to the High Arctic, but I do remember vividly when we were landed a large boulder I can relate to and how very cold we were. Some had to be warmed by dogs.

I do want to say that when we were being prepared to be moved out of Inukjuak we were told that we would all be located in one place. Then when we had just about arrived our people were told that they were to be separated. This was devastating. My mother died as a young woman, never having seen her relatives again. I myself am not hurting. It is these people who lived that particular experience that are hurting. We have been woefully hurt by all this. We deserve to be given a further chance to tell our story. We were separated and parted although we were promised that we would stay together. My mother was away in hospital for six years with tuberculosis. I grew up without a mother as a result. These other people will make it more clear", and he goes on.

Then we had further testimony from other people. This one in particular was from John Amagoalik, president of ITC, who said: "You must understand the big change we experienced when we moved from northern Quebec to the High Arctic. There was a big change in diet. In northern Quebec we grew up on fish and game birds and things that grew out of the ground, berries and such. Up there none existed. We had to travel hundreds of miles for any fish. There were no caribou. The only birds were around for only a couple of weeks of the year. We had to change from that diet to walrus, polar bear and seal, and that was about it. It was a big change".

He went on to say: "The environment was very different. It was much, much colder. The winter was much colder and we discovered that there were three months of total darkness. We had never been told that. One of the most devastating experiences we ever had was when we discovered that there was no sun from November until February. The annexes referred many times to the experiment. We were used like laboratory animals, as has been stated by some of the witnesses. Our dignity as human beings has been violated. We need a longer time to tell our story because we are just touching its surface. This story needs to be told. It is a Canadian story. It needs to be explained in Canadian history".

These are the people who spoke for themselves. These are the people who had the experiences that are most unfortunate within the context of our Canadian history.

What is wrong with the motion we presented? What is wrong with what we suggested as a motion, that the Government of Canada acknowledge the role played by the Inuit who were relocated to Grise Fiord and Resolute Bay in the protection of Canadian sovereignty in the north, that the government issue an apology for the wrongdoings carried out against the people of Grise Fiord and Resolute Bay, that the said apology be carried out in an official ceremony of due solemnity and respect, that the said apology be accompanied by some form of official recognition of the contribution of Inuit of Grise Fiord and Resolute Bay to Canadian sovereignty, for example, by the erection of an historic monument or marker and by the issuing of certificates recognizing this important valuable contribution to those relocatees still living or, if deceased, their surviving families?

What is wrong with taking people like Martin Frobisher and naming a community after that individual? What is wrong with taking people like Sir Alexander Mackenzie and naming a river after that person? Why can we not recognize the contribution made by these people under the harshest of circumstances? Why can we not recognize that northern occupancy, as was stated in one of the reports I have was a great preoccupation?

In 1983 the former minister of DIAND, John Munro presented a discussion paper prepared by Environment Canada entitled Environment Canada and the North at the Third General Assembly of the Inuit Circumpolar Conference held at Frobisher Bay in July 1983. This federal paper, in discussing the evolution of resource use policy in Canada's north states on page 59 as follows:

> It is worth noting that before World War II priority was given to traditional forms of northern occupancy in large areas of the north. However, the prime reasons for this were not entirely due to concerns for native welfare and northern environmental quality. Issues of Canadian sovereignty were the principal concerns. Both the native people and the environment were used as important elements in formulating strategies to advance Canada's jurisdictional claims in the Arctic. For example, at the turn of the century, Otto Servitude discovered Axle Heiberg and Elvis Ringis Island and claimed them for Norway. In response, Canada reasserted her claim to the islands of the High Arctic. To confirm this claim Canada created a game reserve in the Arctic Islands in 1926 and stated that the hunting grounds of the Arctic should be preserved by the native Eskimos, Inuit. Various additions were made to the preserve up until 1945 at which time over 1.3 million square miles were set aside covering all the Arctic Islands and a large part of the rest of the Northwest Territories. To further entrench the sovereignty claim, the government relocated Inuit people from northern Quebec to the Arctic Islands in the mid-1950s.

These were the statements made in this paper by a federal minister who had the same kind of resources to examine the issues. These claims are being made also by the aboriginal people who appeared before us in March 1990.

These people would like a public apology. The independent consultant that was provided for the Makivik Corporation was one of three consultants. The other two were not acceptable. I do not feel that the Inuit people had much choice about who the independent consultant was.

During the years 1953, 1955, and 1957 approximately 17 families were moved from Inukjuak and Port Harrison, Quebec and were relocated by the federal government to Resolute Bay and Grise Fiord in the High Arctic. The primary stated purpose by the Government of Canada for this relocation was to reduce the hunting pressure on the resource base Inukjuak. I cannot understand why it is that for political expediency and for their own selfish means the government always uses the aboriginal people, either by relocating them or by capitalizing on the fact that they occupy a certain territory and can be induced to do that or can be used to profile a certain issue.

Let us take, for instance, the Spicer commission. Just recently it said that it would make a meagre foray into the Arctic to go where it all started. I think that is real political opportunism. If we want to make a statement about the issue and the essence of aboriginal people and their first nation status, we should entrench that in the Constitution. We should recognize the contribution these people have made to Canada and support the $10 million the Makivik Corporation has recommended for a heritage fund. That would be the best $10 million investment the government could make for the Inuit. Under the harshest of circumstances and under an extension of the federal government, because the territories is not yet a province, out of 53 language groups the Inuit people have managed to be one of the three languages that have been able to survive. Aside from Cree and Ojibway, the Inuktitut language is still strong and thriving.

• (1210)

Why is this? Is it because the government has poured millions into maintaining the strength of these languages? Not really. It is because the perseverance and the survival skills of these people are the essence of who they are. They have survived under the harshest of circumstances. They have been economically marginalized in an attempt to alleviate the pressure on resources, the hunting and traditional trapping resources in that area. These people have been through the downfall of their sealing industry and they still survive.

What are they saying to Canada? "Canada, listen to us. We have suffered. We want compensation. We want $10 million to help us survive. We want $10 million to profile who we are and what we are about, what our essence, what our language and what our heritage are about".

They are the ones who have allowed their languages to survive. They are the ones who have stayed in the territories in the north, actually in Nunavut, for all practical purposes, in the High Arctic regions. They have made a place for themselves within Canada that no other Canadian would dare to experience. They have been very brave and generous in the kind of hospitality they have extended to people coming into that area.

People ask why they waited that long, why they waited 37 year. Why come back now asking for compensation? When you live in a colonialized mentality, when one lives with cession by law, when you live with imposing governments coming forward and telling you that this is the way it should be, you would have to wait 37 years to engender the leadership you need and to have the growth in community spirit you need to come forward and be able to put forth your case.

Makivit Corporation has put forward a very substantive case. With regard to the pressure that is present to assist Inuit people, the case the Makivik Corporation has put forward is very convincing.

I for one could not understand three or four nights ago when I watched the Assistant Deputy Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development debate the relocation issue for the purposes of protecting Arctic sovereignty or Canadian sovereignty in the High Arctic. That Mr. Van Loon, Assistant Deputy Minister, would refute, deny and virtually call the Inuit people deceptive and liars about their own life and what they are about, I was very insulted. I watched the leader of the Inuit people of Canada being insulted by this bureaucrat who should be advocating, not serving in an adversarial role.

I find this to be extremely alarming. What are these people doing? We supposedly have an independent report. I hope that the results of the motion being debated will be favourable and will be independent of bureaucrats who continue to cripple on all fronts the process of social justice for the aboriginal people across Canada.

There are no better words to explain how the people who appeared that day felt, such as Markoosie Patsauq and Sarah Amagoalik, the mother of the president of the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada. Those people came forward with a most convincing case.

I cannot believe that we recognize outsiders, build monuments to them, and name rivers and islands like Baffin Island after them, yet there is no room in our hearts as Canadians to recognize the people who were here first, who built the country and who maintained and protected Canada's sovereignty. How can we not have the decency and respect in our hearts to do this?

This requires one fundamental thing. It requires the political will of the government. This report should have never existed. This report refuting an apology, refuting recognition of the Inuit's contribution for the protection of Arctic sovereignty, should have never existed. There should have been a unanimous motion which was consented to in the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs. That should have been upheld. The government should be proud to say to the Inuit people, "We are proud of your contribution. We are happy that you were there to protect our Arctic sovereignty when no one else dared to go". The Inuit people were essentially forced to take on that role and did so under the harshest of circumstances.

We must find in our hearts the respect and dignity that these people deserve and we should give due recognition. I totally support the idea of a $10 million heritage fund because I believe that the Inuit have much about them that is worth preserving and carrying on with in terms of the over-all Canadian context of who we are and what our country is all about.

Mr. Ray Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, much has been made in this House of the question of whether or not the issue of Canadian sovereignty was paramount in moving the Inuit to the high Arctic. It is ironic that the minister of Indian affairs would stand in this House and submit a report that is obvious fabrication and lies and then the Minister of State—

Some hon. members: Order.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I am quoting from a previous speaker in the House. Those comments were I think justified and quite correct. I was not alluding to the minister but certainly to the consultant.

It is interesting that a previous minister of Indian affairs of this government, the Minister of National Defence said in a letter dated February 5, 1988:

> My colleague, the Honourable Tom McMillan, has already written to the president of the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada (ITC) on October 16, 1987 suggesting two options for recognition of the Inuit contribution to Arctic sovereignty. Either Resolute Bay or Grise Fiord could be designated a national historic site and/or the Inuit relocation to the High Arctic could be recognized as an event of national historic significance by an article in "Recognizing Canadian History". By copy of this letter I am adding my support to ITC's resolution and suggest—(the) follow up on Mr. McMillan's suggestions.

There is no question in the mind of the Minister of National Defence, the previous minister of Indian affairs, that this government was at one point prepared to recognize that. Then, all of a sudden, there is a complete reversal, a denial of all the facts. We now have the minister of Indian affairs and the Minister of State creating a tremendously embarrassing situation in this House, calling confidence in the committee, and their own members on the committee, who voted unanimously to submit this recommendation to the House of Commons asking the House to vote on its concurrence.

I would ask the previous speaker this. Does the member not agree that this House is now morally bound to let a vote occur on this motion; that the honour of the committee, the honour of the committee members is at stake; that upon hearing direct testimony and investigating this matter, the integrity of the committee system and of the committee is at stake? I would ask the opinion of the previous speaker on this. Should we not allow, as a moral point, this vote to now come to fruition in this House and not simply permit the government to talk it out?

Mrs. Blondin: Mr. Speaker, I absolutely agree that it would be morally indefensible not to have a vote. It would be morally indefensible to put forward this kind of a report that totally refutes everything that those people testified to. It shows that it is totally insensitive that the government would not consider the concerns of those individuals, who I believe came forward with a very compelling and very sensitive case. I believe that we should not talk out the motion but that we should put it to a vote. I feel strongly about that.

• (1220 )

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to clarify one fact that the member from Vancouver Island mentioned. He said that this was a unanimous decision in the committee. I should point out that two government members voted against this motion in committee, so it was not a unanimous decision of the committee.

The other thing I would like to mention is in regard to the speech of the hon. member for Western Arctic. The hon. member made quite an issue of the fact that the Inuit were issued with numbers and this was a depersonalization, degradation, dehumanization, whatever you want to call it.

However, if we look at our system, anyone who served in the armed forces during the war or in peacetime was given a number. When we went to university we were all assigned numbers. That does not mean that our names were not valid, that people recognized us just as an object. It was for particular reasons we were given numbers. As a registered physician, I have a number given to me by the College of Physicians and Surgeons which is used for particular purposes. I do not feel that by being issued a number that I am in any way depersonalized and a lesser person for that.

I would just like to hear the hon. member's comments on that. I understand that it could be taken as an insult, but this happens all the time in our society and I feel it was perhaps misconstrued by some people.

Ms. Blondin: Mr. Speaker, I beg your indulgence. I was busy conferring with one of my colleagues from the party opposite and did not get the last part of my hon. colleague's question. So if you would not mind repeating that last part, I would be very happy to answer it.

Mr. Wilbee: Mr. Speaker, I had just pointed out that many times in our society we are given numbers for identification purposes, or for other reasons, and it does not mean that we are depersonalized or dehumanized. It is not a sign of contempt in any way. I used the examples that every soldier has a regimental number and university students have student numbers. As a physician, I have a number submitted by the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

These numbers are valuable assets that can be used in certain circumstances to identify me as different from other people. It could be taken as an insult perhaps, but our society demands these types of things. I feel that this has been overrated and that many people have felt unnecessarily that they were being looked down on or looked at with contempt because they were assigned numbers. I would just like to hear the hon. member's comment on that.

Ms. Blondin: I would be very happy. I have a close colleague by the name of Mr. Abe Ookpik from Frobisher Bay or Iqaluit who worked for years on this whole issue.

I must say that by getting a number at university you do not forfeit your name. By getting a social insurance number, you do not forfeit your name. By going into the military, you are given a number, but people still refer to you by name, Private such-and-such, Private Smith or Private Jones.

Mr. Dingwall: Dingwall.

Ms. Blondin: Or Dingwall. Or Wilbee, Private Wilbee. But when you have been given a number under the numbered process with regard to the Inuit people, it was very degrading. The reason for that is because the people who came to their land did not have enough respect to find a way to learn their names. The Inuit people have very beautiful names. I can think of a number of names. I lived in an Inuit community. I am of Indian extraction and I learned these names. Mangalaluk, Nasagaluak. Those are names that anyone could learn. So, I am saying that yes, there is a stigma attached to it and, yes, those people were treated under certain conditions as less than human.

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to ask my colleague a question. I will try to make it as short as I can in order for the hon. member to have a little time to answer it. This particular question relates to the fact that the government does not seem to be too interested in acknowledging the fact that the people were moved, specifically, for sovereignty reasons.

One of the reasons I would like to ask the member this question is because I come from a region very similar to the northern Quebec region from where these 15 families were moved. Lo and behold, these particular 15 families were moved to a region that is absolutely different from the region they came from.

They could have moved these 15 families, for example, to northern Ontario, where I come from, which has the same type of terrain, the same type of vegetation, the same types of animals, and the same types of berries to collect, and this would not have been devastating to their way of life. Could the hon. member try to explain why they chose the far Arctic versus northern Ontario, which would have given them the same kind of lifestyle?

Ms. Blondin: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for bringing up that very good point. There is no way to explain why these people were not taken to a more favourable climate. There is only one explanation and that is one thing that the government will not recognize. These people were sent to the high Arctic for the express purpose of protecting Canadian high Arctic sovereignty, and that is it.

Mrs. Dorothy Dobbie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise today to try to reveal the facts about the relocation of the Inuit families from Inukjuak to Grise Fiord and Resolute in 1953.

I would like to share the findings of the Hickling report with the Canadian people and see if, somehow, we can find the truth that exists somewhere between the memory and the cold written records of the past. It was in looking for this truth that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development commissioned an independent study by an outside consultant. The consultant was asked to assess the factual basis of all of those allegations that were made in the third report to Parliament by the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs. It was felt that it was imperative that a detailed and impartial assessment of all of the facts be undertaken so that the department could prepare an objective and unbiased response, a full response, to these allegations and which had been requested by the standing committee.

Therefore the independent commission began its study. First it consulted with the Makivik Corporation, the organization that was set up under the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement in 1975 to represent the interests of all of the Inuit of northern Quebec. That, of course, is where Inukjuak is located. With Makivik's agreement, the Hickling Corporation was contracted to conduct the study.

The Hickling project manager felt that, first of all, he must meet with departmental officials to review the history of the claim. This included various previous approaches that had been made by the Inuit Taparasit of Canada and by the Makivik Corporation, requesting settlement of the claim and the responses by the department on those occasions.

The events leading up to the appearance of the Inuit before the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs, on March 19, 1990, the published proceedings of the committee meeting of that date, and the ensuing interim response by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, were also examined in this investigation.

In addition, the Hickling team sought the assistance of the Government of the Northwest Territories in searching the files for all the possible references to the relocation project. These files had been sent to the Government of the Northwest Territories in the transfer of federal responsibilities from the federal government to the Government of the Northwest Territories in the years from 1966 to 1970.

From all of these sources and after careful and detailed study, a report was developed. I would now like to share relevant sections of that report, from the executive summary of the report, with this House. I should remind hon. members that complete copies of the report are available from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development should any member wish to obtain one. The Hickling report states, and I quote:

Our assessment of the factual basis of the allegations included in our study is based on an extensive survey of official government files, documents, and published and unpublished reports, and learned papers in the possession of the National Archives of Canada, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, various libraries in other government departments, public libraries and sources within the Makivik Corporation.

We found that the decision by the government to actively encourage the relocation of Inuit families to the high Arctic in 1953, and in the two or three years subsequent to that, was not motivated by a concern to strengthen Canadian sovereignty over the Arctic islands at that time.

Canada felt secure in her claim of ownership of the islands at that time, as a result of an exchange of notes between Canada and Norway in 1930, because the Canadian government had consistently displayed its sovereignty in that area for so long and in so many ways as to firmly establish its title to all of the Arctic islands in a manner consistent with international law.

The RCMP participated in the exercise of Canadian sovereignty in the north by their very presence in those areas, and in the various roles they were called upon to carry out their own and on behalf of other federal departments.

They were required from time to time to deal with the illegal hunting of polar bear and musk-oxen by Greenlanders, which was prohibited under the Northwest Territories game ordinance. In carrying out this function, they did indeed assist in asserting Canadian sovereignty.

• (1230)

The study continues:

The Inuit families in question were not relocated to the high Arctic to assist the RCMP in the administration of the Northwest Territories game ordinance, although, in fact, they did so on occasion.

They asserted Canadian Arctic sovereignty by the very fact of living there—

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the rules of the House do prohibit reading a speech directly into the record, a speech that has been written by the Department of Indian Affairs and previously written into the record by the Minister of State for Indian Affairs.

If it is the intent of the government to simply regurgitate this crap or pap, why do we not just unanimously seek consent to call it one o'clock and get out of here, if that is the attitude of the government toward this very serious matter?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I believe there is a certain amount of latitude in this House, and that, since previous speakers on both sides of the House have quoted documents or reports, I should show the same indulgence to both sides of the House.

[English]

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, would you be prepared to give the House some direction as to whether or not an individual is able to read the same speech into the House twice?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The hon. member may wish to consider the fact that every member may use notes or other written material, so that, strictly speaking, this is not a point of order. On the same subject, the parliamentary secretary.

[English]

Mrs. Dobbie: Mr. Speaker, it is very important that the members opposite hear the details of the executive summary of the report because, in listening to the speeches and interventions made earlier this morning, it is clear to me that many of the members are not familiar with the report by this independent group. I think it would be very useful to them to understand the details and the finding of the Hickling team.

The study goes on to state:

They asserted Canadian Arctic sovereignty by the very fact of living there, but that was not the purpose of their relocation.

—(The Hickling) report reveals that the main reason for the decision by the government to encourage some Inuit families to relocate to the high Arctic at that time was the concern to improve the living conditions of Inuit, particularly in the Hudson Bay region.

Relocation from those depressed areas was seen, by both government officials and the Inuit themselves, as a way of breaking out of a growing pattern of welfare dependency, and as a means of providing the Inuit with new and better economic opportunities through improving hunting, trapping and wage employment.

The report states:

Reasonable steps were taken by the government officials to establish and apply suitable criteria for the selection of families, so as to ensure that the best success of the project and the security of the participants. These criteria were developed over a period of several years, with input from a number of sources.

Those who were transported to the new location by the C.D. Howe Institute were x-rayed before their departure and appear to have been found free of serious infectious diseases. Some of the participants who were included were quite aged, and at least one was physically disabled, but their participation in the relocation project was not out of line with Inuit culture values nor with the realities of life in the Arctic in those years.

The difficulties of life in the high Arctic were recognized and explored beforehand by the officials, and a reasonable plan was articulated to ensure that those who were relocated were well supported by experienced RCMP officers who knew the family personally and who were knowledgeable in Inuit ways and language.

Experienced Inuit families from the most northern settlements at this time were approached to assist with the project. They agreed to do so and transfer their hunting and trapping skills to the Inuit participants from Quebec.

The first group of Inuit relocated were not as well equipped as they might have been, but apparently this was dealt with after their arrival.

Reasonable efforts seem to have been made to explain the project to both of the Inuit groups involved before their departure, and to communicate the fact that participation in it was voluntary.

It is more than likely that some of the Inuit could not completely envisage what conditions in the high Arctic would be like because these were things that were outside the range of personal experience at the time. While this is truly regrettable, it should not imply a deliberate attempt by government officials to deceive or to mislead the Inuit participants.

A number of the Inuit families in the project stated in letters written to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the period of 1956 to 1963 that game and fur were plentiful in the vicinity of both Resolute and Grise Fiord, and that hunger was not a problem. The frequency of letter-writing from Inuit at Resolute Bay dropped off considerably after 1963, and nearly completely after 1966 with the transfer of responsibility for most aspects of Inuit affairs to the Government of the Northwest Territories. It is not possible, therefore, to say whether game and fur continued to be plentiful after the letters stopped coming, but on the other hand there is no reason to believe otherwise.

The report goes on to state:

We believe the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development gave the Inuit an understanding that they would be returned to their original communities after one, two, or three years, if this was requested. There is no evidence to suggest that the department intended this undertaking to remain in force indefinitely.

The files show that some of the Inuit families living in Resolute Bay wrote to Ottawa, asking to return to Port Harrison (Inukjuak) for a visit. The earliest example of such request that we——could find, occurred around 1960.

—the Hickling team—

The determination of the length of the proposed visits quite often required several exchanges of letters. On one occasion, in 1961, Ottawa responded to such proposals by seeming to suggest that those wishing to visit Port Harrison (Inukjuak) should collaborate in charting an aircraft for this purpose, at their own expense. The files would indicate that one group did this in 1962, but no further details are provided.

It is uncertain if there was an official policy on the matter at the time. Our speculation is that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development took this position because it considered the individuals involved to be economically self-sufficient. This was the practice followed with respect to Fort Chimo Inuit working at Churchill and wishing to visit their home community.

Early in the 1970s, however, the Government of the Northwest Territories arranged and paid for the transportation of several groups of Inuit from Grise Fiord and Resolute Bay to Port Harrison to visit relatives and to assess whether they wish to be returned to that community on a permanent basis.

Several families subsequently requested relocation and this was done. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development reimbursed the territorial government for the costs of both the visits and the relocation.

On one occasion the RCMP used their own aircraft to permit several families living at Grise Fiord to visit relatives in Fort Harrison (Inukjuak), and subsequently relocated them. The RCMP apparently absorbed these costs.

An additional number of Inuit families living at Resolute Bay were relocated to Port Harrison (Inukjuak) in 1988, initially at their own expense or with assistance from the Makivik Corporation of Quebec. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development agreed to reimburse the transportation costs for those families who had already moved back to Inukjuak. This offer was subsequently extended to include the cost of transporting a number of other families who had not yet moved but who had indicated that they intended to do so.

These reimbursements, totalling approximately $250,000, were paid out of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development's 1988-89 appropriations. In 1988, the department also undertook to provide the government of Quebec with funds, amounting to approximately $700,000, to permit Quebec to add ten houses to the pool of housing identified for Port Harrison (Inukjuak), in recognition of the impact that this inflow of people would have on the 1989 housing plans for that community.

The evidence that we examined does not support the allegation that the government committed wrongdoing in the planning and conduct of this project. The material we examined leads us to a different conclusion, namely that the project was conscientiously planned, that it was carried out in as reasonably effective manner and that the Inuit participated in it voluntarily, in their own search for a better life, and that they benefited from the experience.

• (1240)

The findings of the Hickling report were not completely positive. The executive summary does include the following statement:

> In our opinion, the delay in settling the matter of the return of the remaining original families still at Resolute Bay and Grise Fiord is the only real basis for criticism of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, as far as this project is concerned.

This was the finding of the independent Hickling team. Having said that, however, the report's authors continued by pointing out:

> The circumstances that caused this delay have already been explained by several deputy ministers since the claim was first formally raised with the department in 1982.

The Hickling report did suggest that:

> —a concrete and definitive statement on what action the department now intends to take on this matter would be most meaningful.

Such a statement has now been provided by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in its response to the third report of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs which was tabled yesterday.

In that response, the government has stated that it is prepared to make funding available in the fiscal year 1991-92 to allow any of the Inuit families who were originally relocated, or their descendants remaining in Grise Fiord or Resolute Bay, to return to Inukjuak.

At the same time, the government is prepared to return certain possessions that had to be left behind in Resolute Bay and Grise Fiord when families were returning to Inukjuak in the past, or, if the actual possessions cannot be provided, will provide reimbursement to the people concerned. This will apply whether those people returned on their own or whether they returned under government auspices.

All the independent evidence shows that this project was conceived and implemented with the best of intentions on the part of both government and the Inuit families originally relocated. The evidence shows that the government has since responded honourably to those Inuit who subsequently decided that they wished to return to Inukjuak by financing transportation and housing and now by agreeing to replace lost possessions.

I would like to close by using the words of the team of that wrote the Hickling report which concluded:

> We do not see the grounds for an apology by the government for the manner in which the relocation project was conceived, planned and carried out—In our view, to apologize for a wrongdoing it did not commit would constitute deception on the part of the government—It would also imply that the project had not been reasonably successful, whereas this is not the case.

We have listened this morning to a great deal of rhetoric in the House and some of it does not serve the cause of either the Inuit people or the people of the country. I have heard the use of the word "exile", for example, which implies forced compulsion and wrongdoing. This simply was not the case. The government did not force the people to move. They did not compel people to stay. There is no evidence whatsoever of wrongdoing, as indicated by the Hickling report.

Finally, the hon. member for Comox—Alberni used some pretty strong language in his intervention this morning when he accused the government actions as being comparable to those of Stalin. It is not unusual from time to time for members of this House to get a little carried away by their rhetoric, but there is a limit. It seems to me that the hon. member has gone far beyond the limit of what is reasonable and what is logical and what is rational in terms of a rational debate.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his ill-advised remarks and to apologize to this House.

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the member was seriously indicating that I had made any unparliamentary statements with respect to this report. I think when you compare this report with the actual documents available from the Department of Indian Affairs and that are in the hands of the Makivik Corporation, anything I have said in the way of characterizing this report as a fabric of lies is accurate. I was not accusing the minister of lying, but I was suggesting that the minister had been lied to by his own consultants.

I would also suggest that the member herself by characterizing this report as an independent report is misleading the House herself because these consultants were hired by the Department of Indian Affairs. Makivik Corporation was given a choice of selecting one of the department's consultants. They rejected the two that they knew were anti-native and only selected the one that they did not know. It was not much of a choice.

Yet the government characterizes this as a study acceptable to the Makivik Corporation. I suggest the hon. member pick up the phone to the Makivik Corporation and the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada and find out if they accept this as a joint report and she will get the truth loud, clear and simple that it is not a joint report. It is not an independent study. It is simply the bureaucrats circling the wagons again and shooting out at the Indians, as they always do.

What surprises me is that Conservative members in the House who do not have any direct experience, who have not heard any direct evidence, who have simply received the material from the Department of Indian Affairs, to protect the back-sides of themselves who are currently in the department, their retired members and members now dead in defending the actions and the attitudes of the bureaucracy at that time, are telling us today that the bureaucracy today has those attitudes and today is capable of carrying out those kinds of actions and in fact in carrying out those kinds of actions, based on that attitude, are being supported by Conservative members in this House. That is shameful.

I would like to see the parliamentary secretary dissociate herself from that kind of action on the part of this government. You do not have to get up and defend every civil servant alive or dead or retired who has committed these kinds of wrongdoings and admitted them in minutes of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development back to 1953. You do not have to do that. You can take your own position.

What I am saying to and asking the parliamentary secretary is whether she is prepared to stand up and support the standing committee of the House which heard direct evidence or is she again defending a bureaucracy that has a whole history of these kinds of actions against native people in Canada?

Mrs. Dobbie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member again uses inflammatory language, makes statements that are designed and geared to upset people who have a sense of insecurity already. The hon. member seems to have a very difficult time in dealing with what is reasonable, logical and with the attempt that everybody is making here to try to get at the absolute truth, to find an objective answer to the removal of the people from Inukjuak to Grise Fiord.

The member called the report a fabric of lies. I think that the hon. member should think very carefully before he makes such statements.

• (1250 )

If he were not in this House, he would certainly be called to account for his actions.

If he is going to make such statements in this House, the hon. member should be prepared to provide some evidence to back up those statements. There is no evidence at all for such statements.

In fact, the independent report attempted with full honour and full understanding of the seriousness of this issue to dig through the mystery of memory and hard facts as I mentioned earlier in my opening statements and try to come up with what exactly happened.

The world has changed since 1953. Actions that were taken then that were considered reasonable, benign and in the interests of the people who they were dealing with at the time would not perhaps be considered in the same light today. We must remember that we are dealing with the context of 1953.

The study found that within that context, the actions of the department were reasonable and were motivated only by honourable motives and honourable intents.

I also want to respond very briefly to another comment that was made earlier, that people were left to their own devices when they went to the north. This simply is not true.

The movement of people from Pond Inlet, for example, from the high Arctic was a clear sign that the government was concerned that every effort be made to ensure that the relocation of the people from Inukjuak was smooth and that they would fit into the environment as quickly and as readily as possible in order to realize the benefits of the additional hunting and fishing that were available at the time.

I want to correct that for the record.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the member who just spoke in response to my question accused me of making statements that were emotional or based on no evidence whatsoever.

I do have evidence to back up the statements I made. I would like to ask—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but that is a matter of opinion. There are other members who are waiting for a chance to speak, and I will now recognize the hon. member for Scarborough—Agincourt.

[English]

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, in 1984 when this government came to power, it said that it would redress and apologize to a number of communities: the Chinese community, the Japanese, the Italians.

We followed the Prime Minister in 1988 when he apologized to the Japanese, in 1990 to the Italians. There is the Sikh community, the Ukrainians and the Chinese waiting.

I am wondering. There is a very short, precise question that I have for the minister. We said about rhetoric and truth—

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): You're talking to backbenchers. Way back.

Mr. Karygiannis: Well, to the hon. member.

What will it take for this government to realize the mistakes of the past, come forward and say: "Look, we were wrong. Successive governments have not done it. We apologize." It will not cost a darn penny, so why can we not get on with the dealings and actually realize that what we did in 1953 was a tragic and a big mistake, and apologize to our native people?

Mrs. Dobbie: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has a lot of nerve suggesting that this particular government should apologize for things that have gone wrong in the past when most of those incidents occurred during the time when the hon. member's party was in power.

In fact in this particular instance, as I have just said and as we have heard spoken this morning by the Minister of State, the independent study found that there was no wrongdoing by the government of the day. It would be a contradiction to apologize in an instance where it was found by an independent study that there was no wrongdoing.

As I said before, and far be it from me to apologize for anything the government of that day did, it appears that the evidence says that the government of the day was acting on what it considered to be the best interests of the people at Inukjuak.

Mr. Ray Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, a surprising situation occurred in this committee when a number of adults presented testimony to the committee. They were in tears, reliving the emotional experience that they had been put through in the area. They talked about exchanging sexual favours for food and necessities. They talked about rape, forcible confinement, slave labour and their mail being rifled. They gave an enormous amount of direct evidence to that committee. It is interesting that members of the RCMP were accused of wrongdoing. I would like to use a short parallel.

Some time ago in the community of Gibsons, an individual was beaten in the cells. He was beaten to the point where the individual almost died. The RCMP were accused of assaulting the individual and failing to provide medical evidence. The RCMP investigated and found no wrongdoing. They found that the individual had somehow come to a very bad end by his own desserts. That was the RCMP internal investigation and it took some time.

When it was turned over to the RCMP public complaints department, a completely separate organization, they investigated it thoroughly and found out that yes, indeed, the RCMP had assaulted the individual. They had failed to provide medical evidence and in fact, found them guilty of a grievous wrongdoing. Once an independent body is involved, where an internal job is not being done for the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or the RCMP or the government, then there is hope to get at some justice.

This committee, on a point of almost honour in this House, has submitted a report in which the facts are laid out and recommendations are made. A previous Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs is prepared to go along with this idea. The government is now compelled to support some old-time Liberal government of years ago. The documents from the Indian Affairs department absolutely admit that this was an experiment. It is a sad commentary that for some reason there is a reversal of policy on the part of government that absolutely denies reality.

I am absolutely disgusted. I cannot think of terms strong enough to express the contempt for what is happening here today. I will sit down. If the government has a second thought on allowing this to reach a vote, this House should be permitted to comment on the kind of activity that has been seen here in the last days.

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, this is one of those very interesting times in politics when we are asked to use our retrospectoscope and look back 37 years to see what actually happened at that time.

It is very difficult for anyone to do this, even if they are members of this House. As I was sitting here, I was trying to think of anyone who may have been present at that time when this exchange was made. It is very important that we recognize that as things are written down, some things are missed or forgotten. To try to come to a conclusion at this stage is extremely difficult. There are perhaps two wrongs being done. Perhaps there was some mistreatment of our Inuit people from northern Quebec and Resolute. I think there is also a wrong being done to our civil servants who have been maligned and who have been accused of many different things to date.

I am probably the last person to in any way support a bureaucrat. I do believe that there is also a time when they should have their opportunity to express their opinions, to defend their position and defend the decisions that were made at that time. All we can do is try to go back to those days and consider what may have happened. These people who were responsible for making intelligent decisions would use whatever information they had at that time, to try to do the best for the Inuit who were the subject of this discussion.

They sincerely believed they should take these people from the area where they were obviously starving, where there was no game, where there was no hope for the future, to try to develop for them a better life further north in the high Arctic. This was the basis for the decision that was made at that time. It was made to try to better the plight of those people. Perhaps at that time, there were things—I see my time is up. I am sorry. Perhaps another time, thank you.

HARDING CARPETS

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, Harding Carpets survived the great depression. It survived the last recession, but it could not survive this government's economic policies.

After 65 years of manufacturing carpets in Ontario, Harding Carpets has gone into receivership. Last month it closed its plant in Collingwood, and this month it shut down its plant in Brantford. Six hundred people have been laid off, and unless a new buyer is found soon they will not be going back. Many of the people who work in Harding Carpets live in my riding. I would like to tell them that the federal government will help them to adjust, but I cannot because this government refuses to implement the adjustment programs promised in the last election.

I would like to tell these Canadians not to worry, that there are other jobs out there for them, but I cannot because the free trade agreement and this government's obsession with high interest rates have driven thousands of jobs away forever.

I would like to tell these laid-off workers that they will at least receive their due from unemployment insurance, but I cannot because this government has gutted UI, leaving workers needing additional weeks to qualify and getting fewer weeks to collect.

I will tell this government that Canadians are asking for a change of heart, a change of policy, and indeed a change of government.

S. O. 31

CANADA POST

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post officials are so afraid of farmers and rural townspeople that they are bringing security guards with them to town meetings.

Canada Post recently asked for a closed door meeting with the town council of Arborfield, Saskatchewan. Four aggressive Canada Post officials showed up with one beefy security guard. There may have been plainclothes guards outside because Canada Post officials did not take any chances. They asked the nearest RCMP detachment in Carrot River to be available.

This show of force by Canada Post is most regrettable. Surely, if their case for closure made any sense, they could be selling it on its merits instead of having to resort to intimidation.

Loyal Canadians are being hurt by the closure or franchising of rural post offices.

I call on this government to reverse its orders to Canada Post and stop the intimidation and the closures. Please let Canada Post function in the interest of all Canadians, including rural people.

MUNICIPAL COUNCIL OF VAL D'OR

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on November 5, 1990, the municipal council of Val d'Or, with four aldermen absent, adopted the contents and preamble of a brief to be submitted to the Bélanger-Campeau Commission. This brief was prepared exclusively by members of the municipal council, while the population of Val d'Or seems to have been neither consulted nor informed about the proceedings.

On November 14 I wrote to the municipal council of Val d'Or, as follows: "As the member for Abitibi, I want to see an economically strong Quebec in a strong Canada. The real problem today is not the Constitution but the economy in Abitibi—Témiscamingue. Anyone who analyses the economic situation in Quebec, in Canada, and in our businesses is ultimately confronted with the problem of our national debt."

Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware of the concerns of the people of Val d'Or, and since 1984 I have been active, both in Val d'Or and in the Abitibi area in general, to help speed up the area's economic and social development, for the benefit of our children, women and men.

HEALTH

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, it is becoming obvious that MMT, the octane additive used in Canadian gasoline, is a serious health risk.

In fact, one of Canada's leading neuro-toxic scientists describes the manganese component of MMT as an insidious neuro-toxic substance that is taken in through the respiratory system and destroys brain cells.

Canadian children are particularly susceptible because their immune systems have not developed a blood brain barrier and they do not have an excretory mechanism to remove this vicious substance.

The neuro-toxic effects of manganese may lead to increased incidents of Parkinson's disease and other mental disorders. It is a national disgrace that this government sits idly by and allows the continued use of MMT in Canada when it has been banned in the United States since 1978.

I ask the government to act now and ban MMT and replace it with a renewable additive that is environmentally friendly, ethanol.

NATIONAL DRUG AWARENESS WEEK

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, today marks the start of National Drug Awareness Week. This event began some 12 years ago as a spontaneous expression of community concern over the devastation caused by alcohol and other drugs, especially among our young people.

National Drug Awareness Week is an example of grassroots, community based action at its best. It involves schools, businesses, police, the health care community, and thousands of ordinary concerned citizens devoted to the promotion of a responsible lifestyle.

I call on members of this House today to continue to support and promote this worthwhile community initiative.

FORESTRY

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, the announcement last week that the federal government is only contributing $100 million to a new forest agreement in British Columbia is bad news for our forests, our environment, and employment in the industry. The president of Western Silvicultural Contractors says 100,000 jobs could be lost.

This government and its Socred friends in Victoria have both failed to deliver for our forests.

The question to ask now is: What about agreements in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario that expired in March, 1989? Are they threatened as well?

The government says budgets are being cut to pay for our effort in the gulf? When will this government make an effort for our forests?

Get on with it. Let us sign those agreements.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, perhaps when the Minister of Finance and his bureaucrats speak about the GST they should look at a map. There is a Canada north of the 60th parallel.

Northern Canadians are in Ottawa this week in support of the amendment before the Senate to make special provisions for Yukon, Northwest Territories, northern Quebec and Labrador to zero rate the goods and services tax for northern regions.

The economies of northern Canada have unique characteristics that will influence a differential impact of the goods and services tax on residents of these regions.

The effects of the tax will be negative because our economy is very much a developing economy and our non-resource industry base is fragile and will not sustain any negative impacts.

One does not have to be a northerner to understand that the very location of the north poses some severe economic constraints, including the remoteness of prime North American markets, longer winters, and higher utility, transportation, communication and other costs. Added to these are small scattered populations, as well as low education levels for a large part of the population.

The GST is definitely another onerous and crippling blow to the northern economy.

FORESTRY DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia—Matane): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join the lumber producers of the lower St. Lawrence in demanding that the new Canada-Quebec agreement on forestry development be signed as soon as possible. My government made a proposal worth $100 million to the government of Quebec on August 24 this year, and I think it is most unfortunate that as yet there has been no response to that proposal.

Although I must acknowledge that forestry is a matter that comes under provincial jurisdiction, the fact remains that as a federal government, we wish to help owners of private woodlots. They represent a major contribution to the economy of my region, and that is why they deserve our attention.

I say to the federal and provincial forestry ministers that these talks have gone on long enough. Let's have some action. Sign an agreement that will give my region and all lumber producing regions in Quebec what they need to develop and maintain a resource that is essential to our economic survival.

QUEBEC'S RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, it has been proven that under the present system it is impossible to co-ordinate federal and provincial economic policies in the best interests of all Canadians. The Canadian Manufacturer's Association has condemned this situation. The problem is a very serious one. Ontario's expansionist policies, which had a free rein as a result of lack of federal control, are responsible for rising inflation in Ontario, and Quebec is paying the price.

Today, even if Meech Lake was rejected, Quebec still has every interest in limiting the federal government's spending power. That is why independence is the only formula that will safeguard Quebec's economic stability and ensure its economic growth.

PARKS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we must begin to question legislation and regulations that take land and its resources away from residents of rural Canada.

A case in point was made in a letter from Judy Skidmore of Northcare, who explains what occurred in a recent meeting on access of local residents to the Polar Bear Provincial Park in northern Ontario. She writes:

> At our meeting I listened in embarrassment and frustration as a young trapper, wearing the Ontario Trappers cap, pleaded with the environmentalists to allow him to build overnight shelter from the rain on his trap line.
> The Federation of Ontario Naturalists representative could not agree with him. Several other Peawanuck people explained how their ATVs worked and how they would like to use the four of them in part of the huge park.
> I stated our despair and rejection of this meeting, where people of a northern community pleaded with four individuals from Toronto for shelter from the rain and for permission to use ATVs in their own region.

I submit that it is time to listen to the residents of the regions. These are the people who are living off the land, working with our country's rich resources.

REVENUE CANADA

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue continues to condone the poor judgment of its employees in handling the case of Réjean Perron, a taxpayer from La Tuque.

After I informed the minister that his employees waited until the four-year deadline was past to require Mr. Perron to file his tax return for 1985-86, I would have thought a sensible minister would have taken corrective action to deal with the discriminatory treatment suffered by my constituent. However, the minister insists on closing his eyes to the situation and knowingly allows this serious injustice to continue.

Instead of spending millions of dollars on advertising to convince people that Revenue Canada is fair and equitable in its dealings with taxpayers, I think the minister should do more to ensure that people whose interests have been adversely affected are compensated. That should be your first priority.

Mr. Perron is still waiting for the money Revenue Canada owes him. He did not steal this money. He paid too much on his deductions. He has proven he is a good citizen by paying his taxes, and why should the minister prove himself to be the opposite by denying him the refund to which he is entitled?

Mr. Saint-Julien: Shame!

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, Canadian consumers such as my constituents in Nepean will be hard hit by this government's proposal to expose electricity costs to the GST. I have received more than 2,000 response cards from customers of Nepean Hydro protesting in the strongest terms against the application of the GST to their monthly electric bill.

Some of their comments are:

> Like food, water, and medical services, electricity is not a luxury, but an essential and vital commodity that should not be subject to the GST.
> It should be considered a service, not a source of revenue.
> Pensioners, like ourselves are alarmed and tired of this taxation invasion.

Successive federal governments have exempted electricity from taxation since the manufacturers' sales tax was introduced early this century.

The GST would cost hydro users an extra $300 million a year in the province of Ontario alone.

In summation, the sale of electricity should not be subject to a federal GST.

CANADA POST

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post often comes under criticism in this House by various members including myself, but I would like to relate to members an incident in my riding where Canada Post bent over backward to accommodate the wishes of my constituents.

The residents at a co-op housing unit located at 143 Ryland Avenue, Truro, Nova Scotia, requested that door-to-door delivery be supplied to their complex. Although Canada Post found it not possible to comply with these wishes, it did put forth every reasonable effort to meet the needs of the residents. It did offer alternatives and left the decision to the people. On at least five occasions the officials visited the site and met with the residents and myself.

I would like to compliment and thank regional divisional manager, Mr. Gerry Roy, and his staff members, Mr. Barry Bennett and Wendall Skier, for their personal involvement and their efforts to bring this issue to a satisfactory conclusion.

EDUCATION

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, as Canada proceeds into the 1990s, our youth will need to be both well educated and well trained.

Almost two-thirds of all new jobs will require more than 12 years of education and training, yet we could see one million of our youth abandon high school over the next decade.

In this scenario, all segments of our society must work to encourage our youth to appreciate the merits of education.

For our part the federal government launched a $296 million stay in school initiative to reduce the 30 per cent drop-out rate in high schools.

Other segments are also taking up the cause. For example, two Lambton county school boards have entered into articulation agreements with Lambton College. The purpose of these agreements is to allow students to make the transition to college as easily as possible.

For the students, they provide a better understanding of what is expected of them in high school and college, as well as a clearer picture of career paths.

Important initiatives such as these must be applauded. I encourage more to make the investment in the stock of our country, our youth. I am confident that we will not be disappointed with the rate of return.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, Canada's environment can breathe a little easier with the final passage of the U.S. Clean Air Act. The legislation has been hailed as a victory for the environment by placing a cap and targeted reductions on emissions of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxides, as well as tough new standards for vehicle emissions.

Canadian and American officials are currently discussing a bilateral treaty which would further protect Canadian lakes and forests from the adverse effects of acid rain causing emissions. However, we in Canada have far to go to match the progress of our American cousins. In 1985 the federal government concluded negotiations with only seven of the ten provinces, which called for reductions in emissions, but failed to set the targets, timetables and a national cap, as the U.S. bill does. The current negotiations for a comprehensive air quality agreement will be worthless without clear national standards on the Canadian side of the border.

The exclusion of the three most western provinces and the two territories leaves over half of Canada's environment unprotected by the existing agreements. National leadership is required if we are to seize the opportunity presented by the United States clean air law.

I call on the government to negotiate and implement national standards and a cap on emissions in the pending green plan at least as strong as the U.S. law.

WOMEN

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a special word of congratulations to the women who have just been elected to school boards in Quebec. Forty-five per cent! These women will represent the people of Quebec when major decisions are made regarding the future of our schools and our children. This is a major step towards equality. The task will be difficult, but I know women have never been afraid of a challenge.

To the whole team, and especially to all women: congratulations!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE SENATE

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Today the New Brunswick Court of Queen's Bench ruled that, when the Prime Minister packed the Senate in order to force through the GST, and the Prime Minister appointed additional senators, including one from New Brunswick, the Prime Minister was in error because he did not, at the same time, create an additional seat in the House of Commons for that province.

Also today the government leader in the Senate admitted that the ruling contradicted another ruling of the Supreme Court in Ontario on the same subject and the matter would have to be resolved by a higher court.

In view of that fact and because these are only two of a number of cases pending in courts around this country, I ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will suspend all further debate on the GST in the Senate and not resume that debate until this whole matter has been resolved by the Supreme Court of Canada? Will he take that step today?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition has a very novel way of reading the judgments from our courts. Quite contrary to the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition that the court found the Prime Minister was not entitled to appoint a senator because of the requirement of Constitution Section 51A, he made the following comment: "Some people have distorted Section 51(1) in recent weeks. Its meaning is clear. It does not say a province cannot have more senators than MPs. It says a province is entitled to no fewer MPs than it has senators". The distinction is one with a difference.

Unlike the decision of the court in Ontario, the court in New Brunswick has suggested that following from the use of Section 26 and the appointment of the additional senators, an additional seat in Parliament should be created for New Brunswick. As the hon. member will know, when I addressed this issue before in this House, I said that the issue is arguable.

The court in New Brunswick is taking a different view from the court in Ontario. We will be appealing the decision of the court in New Brunswick because we, with respect, do not agree on the implications of Section 26. However, I think the most important thing about this is that we now have had two court decisions that reinforce the legality and propriety of using Section 26, which make it very clear that the rightness of propriety of legislation passed in this House and in the Senate is not compromised by the use of that power. I think the Liberal senators in the other chamber ought to get on with it and pass our legislation now.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice has not explained why, if she is so sure that the government is right, the government is appealing the case. It does not add up.

Yesterday the Minister of National Revenue said that the government has a secret mechanism to force the GST through the Senate and, speaking in British Columbia, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism admitted that the government may have to, and I quote, "slip a few months" and delay the implementation of the GST. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister, what is the government's policy? Is it to pursue the stalling tactics of the Minister of State for Small Businesses or the Rambo tactics of the Minister of National Revenue?

• (1420 )

Why does the government not end the confusion, refer the whole matter of the GST and the Senate itself directly to the Supreme Court of Canada and get a ruling on this matter before proceeding with the GST?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I think is more appropriate here is the Leader of the Opposition asking himself why they are following these petty partisan tactics of delay in the Senate when he knows there is no justification for the delays that are going on in the Senate right now. The GST is going to pass. Everybody in this country believes the GST is going to pass.

What the delaying tactics in the Senate are causing is uncertainty with the small business community. If he would listen to the members of 17 different organizations who met with Mr. Chrétien and others, the delays are costing the business community of this country.

There is also a very real problem that the delays will result in low-income people not receiving a total of $600 million in low-income credits. Is that what members of the Liberal Party want, to see the low-income people in the country not receiving the GST credits? That is the question they should ask the senators.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what the Liberals want is what Canadians want, and that is that the GST be scrapped, so that Canadians will not have to get only a part of the GST back through the credits while still lining the coffers of the government with the rest. That is what Canadians want.

The Minister of State for Small Businesses has also been quoted as saying about the GST: "I do not think we should pass it Christmas Eve and bring it in the next week. I think that would be wrong".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, why does the Minister of Finance insist on introducing this tax on January 1, when he knows perfectly well that his Minister of State is right? Why does he not suspend debate until the whole matter of the GST in the Senate is settled by the Supreme Court of Canada?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Leader of the Opposition why he is supporting the petty politicking of the senators in the other place in delaying the GST when he knows that the Liberals have no alternative, when Jean Chrétien has said that there is no alternative, as he has?

His only response to that is: "Oh, I am going to form a little committee to see if we can find an alternative." The Leader of the Opposition knows that there is no better alternative.

The Leader of the Opposition knows that any alternative that the Liberals propose would be worse than the GST. It is playing political games with Canadians to hold out the possibility that there could be something better than the GST.

The GST will help our exporters compete internationally. It will help Canadian producers, whereas now importers pay one-third less tax. The GST will help reduce the cost of new investment.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Yesterday, the Executive Chairman of the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Office said in a letter, and I quote:

"We recognize the Great Whale project as a project that comes under provincial jurisdiction, and we believe that federal environmental assessment procedures do not apply".

Mr. Speaker, this is a flagrant contradiction of all the government statements made here in the House. Does the government intend to keep its word to environmental supporters in Quebec? Is it prepared to confirm that the project will not be split? Will the minister immediately issue a disclaimer on the contents of the letter sent by his official?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked the hon. member opposite to read a few more paragraphs from the letter, because at the beginning of this letter, Mr. Robinson explained very clearly, and I quote:

"The federal environmental assessment and review process, a federal resource for environmental assessment and review, applies to the Great Whale complex since it is expected to have an impact in areas that fall under federal jurisdiction such as fish, marine mammals, migratory birds and the ecology of Hudson Bay".

Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear from the letter that the federal government maintains all its prerogatives in terms of environmental assessment, and this is repeated throughout the document the hon. member just quoted.

[English]

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, this morning Mr. Allan Penn of the James Bay Advisory Committee, who was there when the letter was put out, said it was very clear that the problem is not lack of jurisdiction. He made it very clear "that the current government has retreated significantly from its previously expressed concern" for James Bay. In other words, the problem is not the law, it is the lack of political will on the part of this minister and this government.

I would ask the minister not to fudge and I would ask him not for his usual pre-recorded announcement. If he fudges, then it is good-bye to his green plan and it is good-bye to Bill C-78.

Will the minister agree to exercise full federal jurisdiction in the case of James Bay? Will he agree not to split James Bay II up? Will he agree not to allow a shovel to hit the ground in terms of the airport or the road in the case of James Bay, until such time as there is a full, federal, complete public hearing on the project? Or again, are we dealing with Rafferty II in different skin?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have repeatedly said that the purpose of this government was to have a full environmental review process conducted on projects of this kind throughout the country and that all these projects should be reviewed before construction starts. That is exactly what we intend to do in this case.

THE SENATE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

The House will recall that not so long ago the government was warned by the leader of my party about the constitutional uncertainty that the appointment of the eight senators would create. The judgment in New Brunswick today validates that concern expressed by my leader.

Does the government not realize the constitutional quicksand that it is drawing the country into? Will it not do the right thing, the thing that would solve the problem and ask the eight senators that they appointed to resign?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think that the government would follow the spirit of the two judgments that we have from the courts, that, in fact, the appointments have not invalidated the activities of this House or the other House; and that the business of the Government of Canada should continue. I hope that the hon. member and his colleagues will urge the members of the other place to continue with the business of the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice should realize that any court judgment which calls into question the way in which the House of Commons is now constituted, that is to say, without the one extra member of Parliament from New Brunswick that the judge said would be necessary, is a very serious matter and not something that should be treated in the flippant way that she has just treated it.

Surely the minister realizes how difficult it will be to solve that problem without delay. The resignation of the eight senators would solve that problem without delay.

The Minister of Finance said he is concerned about the uncertainty that events in the Senate have created with respect to the business community. Is he not concerned about this most recent judgment, that is the one we have today, about the uncertainty that that will create? Would the government not move to resolve that uncertainty? If it is not willing to ask the Senators to resign, will it refer the matter to the Supreme Court immediately so that the matter can be dealt with?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Justice has just said that this decision, together with the Ontario decision, reduces significantly the degree of uncertainty that exists.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Why aren't you appealing it?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): My friend asks why not appeal it. The Minister of Justice has said that the only basis for appeal is one narrow part of the judgment, not the basic substance of the judgment, which says that the Prime Minister was perfectly in order in using the Constitution to appoint the eight senators.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, we are not talking about one narrow part. We are talking about the judge having said that we must do without delay what is almost impossible to do, and that is to add another seat to the House of Commons. That is not something that should be taken lightly by the Minister of Finance.

• (1430 )

He talks about uncertainty. We read in the paper today that the Manitoba government may well refuse to collect the tax for the federal government in certain sectors of the Manitoba economy. More uncertainty.

Why should any businessperson, consumer, or provincial government, for that matter, plan to collect or pay this tax, when the government refuses to deal with the uncertainty itself by referring this matter to the Supreme Court?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would repeat again that there is no uncertainty about the validity of what the government has done. I can quote from the judgment of the Court of Ontario: "Finally, if New Brunswick is entitled to an additional member in the Commons, that is a matter for Parliament. The court has no jurisdiction to declare the House of Commons improperly constituted".

This House of Commons is properly constituted. The Senate is properly constituted. They should get on with their business.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

BILL C–78

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment who probably knows that this morning the National Coalition of Environmental Groups held a press conference to urge the minister either to strengthen or to scrap his proposed environmental assessment legislation.

The minister would alleviate public concerns about his bill by amending it to give the Minister of the Environment, rather than the minister proposing a project, the power to reject projects which would cause significant environmental impact.

Will the minister assure the House today that he would bring forward appropriate amendments to the committee before it starts its clause–by–clause study of the bill?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to commend my hon. colleague for expressing his concern and, obviously, his interest in Bill C–78.

As we all know in the House, we do not have the kind of environmental assessment legislation that we need in this country. Bill C–78 is a very important step in that direction to establish the kind of legislation we need.

As I have said throughout this process, I am more than happy to hear the recommendations of colleagues on potential amendments to the bill. Certainly, I will undertake to bring appropriate amendments, should they be presented to me, before the committee before we get to clause–by–clause.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his reply, but he knows very well that it is better to have a bill with clout, than legislation that has no public support.

Therefore, again, will he undertake to support amendments in committee, whether they are proposed by us or by members of his party, that will give the Minister of the Environment the final say on the approval or disapproval of specific projects?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as I have just said, I have indicated to all my colleagues opposite that I was more than happy to receive their suggestions for potential amendments to the bill and I have done the same thing with the provinces.

I have a short list of proposed amendments that we are studying very carefully. Yes, I will undertake to propose to the committee some amendments before we get to clause–by–clause, those amendments that we feel are in the same spirit as that of the bill and that will effectively strengthen that piece of legislation. We need it and we need it soon.

AIRLINE INDUSTRY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The minister will know that the Canadian airline industry is in a bad tailspin and, to make matters worse, yesterday the minister outlined in Toronto that the airlines will be forced to pay higher user fees, estimated to be upward of $300 million by the chairman of the Air Transport Association of Canada.

How can the government think of imposing such onerous user fees on an industry that is already badly destabilized and when the blow will hit hardest those who can least afford it, namely the far regions and smaller communities of our country?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the House should know the full story. Yesterday, in my remarks to the association, I referred to the consultation paper that had been put out to the industry in July of this year. I referred to the fact that we were open to consultation and that, in fact, we had extended that consultation period, at their request among others, from November 1 to February 1.

What is not in the article is that after I spoke my officials participated in a full morning session on the very issue of cost recovery. There are lots of consultations going on. That is what the whole process is all about. The consultation period is by no means finished.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I agree that on the one hand the minister agreed to extend the consultation, but on the other hand, yesterday, at a major airline conference in the country, he said very clearly that the airlines will be paying higher user fees and that there will be a new regime of those higher fees. One cannot have consultations and then directives in the same breath.

Again, why does the minister continue to threaten the airline industry with higher user fees? Those higher fees will break the backs of the smaller airlines, pass on increased costs to a travelling public that can hardly afford to travel this vast country as it is, and, thirdly, exacerbate the regional inequities between the larger airports and those in the regions where, despite where one lives, all Canadians deserve quality air service.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what the session was about. I suggested that there would be higher user fees and cost recovery. I said I was open to a consultation. That is what I was there for. That is what I was there the day before to do. That is what I did the evening before. That is what I did during the day. That is what my officials did yesterday. That is consultation.

Now, with my hon. friend's background, and the party he represents, obviously he would not know anything about that kind of consultation.

THE SENATE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. I want to return to the New Brunswick lawsuit.

The minister will recall that four times in the House the leader of my party suggested to the government that it refer this matter to the Supreme Court of Canada because of the constitutional chaos it could cause. She will recall that she once said that that was arguable. Then she went to Vancouver and had a press conference and said: "Well, I have been advised by the Department of Justice that the these senators represent all the regions in Canada and, if you do not agree with me, go to court". Well, we did and we won exactly on that point.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Waddell: How does the minister propose to get the eleventh MP from New Brunswick? Is she aware that that will likely include a constitutional amendment? Therefore, could she please tell the House which seven provinces does she have on her side to bring forward an amendment to agree to the GST?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the hon. member's opinion that it would require an amendment to the Constitution to add that seat.

The decisions that have come down on this subject confirm the position that I have taken in the House that the appointments are valid. I have stated that in the House and nothing that has been decided by the courts have stated otherwise. Clearly, the existing House of Commons is validly constituted.

The judgment from New Brunswick indicates that the Government of Canada should now find a way to add an additional seat to the House of Commons to represent New Brunswick. On this point, the judgment is in conflict with the decision of the Court of Ontario. It is on this point that I want to appeal the judgment. The difference demonstrates the difficulty in interpreting these provisions.

I believe that the issues are in front of the courts. No court has suggested that the government is not legally well founded in doing what it is doing with respect to the senator appointments and I am quite content that the legal process have its way in determining what else the government should do.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The judge says that if Parliament fails to promptly devise a method of creating and filling 11 seats, the court could be asked to do so.

Does the minister not realize that she is putting all the laws of this Parliament in jeopardy if we do not have a legally constituted Parliament?

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Waddell: The minister was wrong before. She could be wrong again.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

Mr. Waddell: My supplementary question is directed to the same minister. The government is suggesting that adding a member of Parliament for New Brunswick is nothing but a detail. This is no detail. It is a major constitutional amendment!

Here is my question. How does the government intend to implement the decision rendered by the Appeal Court of New Brunswick? Will the government delay implementing the GST?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this is a fundamental question. It deals with the legitimacy of the decisions made by this House and by the Senate. There is no doubt about that.

• (1440)

[English]

There is no doubt whatever about the legitimacy of bills passed in the House or legislation passed in the Senate. Neither of these decisions makes any reference to that, the legitimate way in which these houses are constituted, given the fact that those eight senators were appointed.

The question is, and I have said it in the House before that it is an interesting one based on the very difficult and arcane language of the Constitution, what flows from the valid use of that power. There is a difference now between two courts, the court of Ontario and the court of New Brunswick as to what flows.

Because we respectfully disagree with that aspect of the judgment of New Brunswick, we will appeal it, but at no time will the result of that decision impugn the validity of decisions made in this House or in the Senate. That is the technical detail.

If the courts confirm that another seat is required, then we will act to fulfil the judgment of the courts. But, respectfully, we disagree with the interpretation of the court of New Brunswick on that point.

SCOTIA SYNFUELS PROJECT

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology.

The people of Nova Scotia cannot believe his decision to turn down the Scotia Synfuels Project. This project would create 2,000 jobs for more than 36 years. That is more than three times the number for Hibernia and at a fraction of the public sector cost. It would produce four million barrels of high quality, clean fuels for Canadians and a clean use for Cape Breton coal. This project for tailor-made for the Cape Breton economy.

Why is the minister turning his back on this important project? Why has he abandoned his mandate for industrial development in Atlantic Canada?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, first, that we have just announced within the tax credit two projects for Cape Breton for $24.5 million which means that we are not overlooking the economy of Nova Scotia.

Because it is in my hon. friend's riding, he knows very well that the Synfuels project has been running for 10 years now. What was requested by the promoters of the project was, first, that they wanted to have a $200 million Cape Breton tax credit. They wanted to have more. They also wanted to have a loan guarantee and an interest buy-down. That was not possible because of the fact that there was no private sector money guaranteed. Mr. Gillespie himself said that in The Globe and Mail yesterday.

The technology was good. We agree with that, but there was no money. It would be a very high cost for the Government of Canada and this point in time. This is the reason why we decided not to accept the deal.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same minister. The minister will know that the premier of the Province of Nova Scotia, the entire provincial assembly in that province, labour unions, as well as all of the municipal representatives in Cape Breton Island, are supportive of this particular project.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Dingwall: In the name of fairness and human decency, would the minister not agree to meet with the principals of this particular project and to sit down to work out a plan which is suitable to the Government of Canada, as well as the principals, in order to see that this project is realized for Canadians who live in that particular region of the country?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the member knows very well that in any part of the country we need money to make a deal. We can have the support of all the provinces if you want, but you could not have the $500 million from the private sector to guarantee your project. You ask for a $200 million tax credit at the same time that you ask for a loan guarantee and the interest buy-down. It could not be a good deal. At the moment, you are not able to put even $1 and you want us to give a credit.

There is no way that we will support any project where the money which has to come from the private sector will not come. That is as simple as it is.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

TRADE

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Revenue. I do not see him in his seat, so perhaps his parliamentary secretary would answer.

Cross-border shopping in the United States continues to have devastating effects on retailers in Canada's border towns, including a serious loss of jobs in the retail industry.

Has the government any plans to at least acknowledge the mounting problems its economic policies are causing and offer some relief for Canadian retailers who are facing very bleak pre-Christmas sales in the border towns?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I think the problem raised by my friend—not from London, unfortunately, but my other friend—has been the subject of discussion for the last two weeks with the municipalities along the border with the Canadian Retail Association.

We believe that we can find an answer, but I understand for those retailers at the border it is not easy. However, it has been a fact of life for those retailers for a long time, dealing with the United States and Canada.

Once again, the officers of my department are working with those people, and we believe we can find an answer in a little while.

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Is the federal government familiar with the plan announced recently by the Ontario government which would make funds available to retailers in specified border towns in Ontario, designed to help them in their business promotion plans to offset that trend to shop in the United States?

Has the federal government any plan to participate in this initiative now, or will it be offering a similar plan before Christmas?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, obviously, we are not as rich as the Government of Ontario, and we prefer to see if there are any other options that we can consider with those whom we are dealing with at the present time.

We are not considering—if I want to be very upfront—any possibility of putting money in any plan before Christmas. The fact of the matter is that we are working in different ways to face the problem, but in those ways, I do not have any package or subsidies at the present time.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of the Environment.

No one is fooled by what is going on with the $24 billion James Bay II or the $8 billion Great Whale projects.

Quebec wants to proceed with an assessment of the roads and airports now, and then construct the $6 million worth of roads and airports while the environmental assessment of the flooding of the reservoirs and the dams is undertaken and then cry economic ruin should any part of the second phase be found unacceptable.

Does the minister not finally agree that the assessment must include the entire project in one piece? Otherwise, it is a process that will lead to roads to nowhere and irreparable environmental harm.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as I have mentioned on quite a few occasions in this House, the government believes that there has to be a full environmental assessment done on the project before work begins.

That is the position we have had. That is the position we have been discussing with the province of Quebec, and that is the position we will stand by.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, Quebec has decided to split the Great Whale project into two parts.

Discussions about a joint environmental assessment have been going nowhere now for 18 months. Will the minister, for once, do what is right rather than what Quebec Hydro wants and today implement the only choice that there is to protect the environment and proceed alone if necessary to assess the Great Whale project and its infrastructure as one piece, not as two?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make two points very clearly to my hon. colleague, one that I mentioned earlier on.

Under various acts and regulations, the federal government has all the power and opportunity to conduct a full EARP review. On the other hand, we are also dealing with the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement that was signed by the federal government, the Quebec government and by native people under the auspices, by the way, of the former Liberal government back in 1975. That is a legally binding agreement. We are trying, with the agreement on the one hand and with our power to have a full EARP review unilaterally declared by the federal government, to reach an agreement with the province so that the process can be done in a way that we will have the results before construction starts.

CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. On many occasions, my constituents have complained of the fact that young people under sixteen years of age can buy small arms ammunition. Can the Minister tell us today whether the purchase or sale of ammunition is illegal when the buyer is less than sixteen years old, because it seems to me that, in Quebec, merchants do not follow the regulations?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, while the control of firearms is governed by the Criminal Code, ammunition is normally controlled under the Explosives Act.

Pursuant to section 120(1) of the regulations implementing the Explosives Act, ammunition shall not be sold to a person under the age of sixteen, unless the person can produce a valid permit issued in accordance with the Criminal Code. It is then the responsibility of the merchant to establish the age of the buyer. The regulations came into force on January 18, 1990, and impose restrictions regarding the age of the buyers for other types of explosives as well, including pyrotechnic devices. As a general rule, you must be at least eighteen years old to buy other types of explosives and the related material.

TRANSFER PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Experts from our national bank say that transfer payments largely benefited the richest provinces and fueled inflation in these provinces during the past few years. We also know that the minister's high interest rate policy is aimed at reducing inflation in these same provinces. Not only is Quebec at a disadvantage but it is paying for the mistakes made by these provinces and the federal government. Does the Minister of Finance intend to do something about that and to compensate the damages caused to Quebec's economy?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the transfer payments benefit all provinces as regards some programs. The Established Programs Financing, the payment that is most important to the province of Quebec equalization, the province of Quebec is the largest beneficiary of that program by a substantial margin. We do have the normal review of equalization coming up, I believe, in a year or a year and a half's time. Those discussions are under way. There are representations that have been made by a number of provinces in the course of this review, Quebec being one of them. We want to allow those discussions to proceed before making any decisions on equalization.

[Translation]

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): I was not referring to equalization, Mr. Speaker. I am talking about transfer payments to provinces under bilateral agreement concerning programs. What I mean is that Quebec is losing billions of dollars because of that policy. Will the federal government compensate Quebec for the billions of dollars the province and the people of Quebec have lost because that monetary policy penalized Quebec during many years?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are the Established Programs Financing transfer payments which are on an equal per capita basis, regardless of the province, so that Quebec has equal access to that program in the same way as Ontario or British Columbia or Nova Scotia.

As far as the payments for equalization are concerned, Quebec has a major benefit in that program as the largest beneficiary of that payment. All the other programs of transfer payments are a good deal lower than those two payments, the next one being the Canada Assistance Program. Again, that is on a 50–50 cost-sharing basis. For every dollar that Quebec spends, the federal government spends an equal amount of money. So, Quebec is not being disadvantaged by any of these programs.

CANADA POST

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the minister responsible for Canada Post. Canada Post has removed postal services from hundreds of small Canadian communities, forcing many Canadian citizens to drive as far as 22 kilometres just to mail a letter or receive mail. The $149 million Canada Post had in profits is at the personal expense of many rural citizens. Will the minister, in fairness to all Canadians, guarantee equal postal services to everyone?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I suggest the hon. member get somebody else to write his questions for him because they are distorting the facts entirely.

There have not been hundreds of closures. There have been several hundred new post offices opened. There have not been any of the closures the gentleman is talking about. We have independent auditors who say that the service is getting better and that there has never been a time, in the 150 years of postal history, when everybody received the same postal service because everybody does not live in the same circumstances. I know the hon. member will want to re-check his facts before putting any further questions.

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my facts are quite accurate. Here are a couple more facts for this minister and this government: Not only is the government taxing funerals with the GST and taxing the stamps that letters of condolence are being sent with, but the government is now depriving those on unemployment insurance and welfare by taking their cheques away, because they are unable to get them quickly, because the government is closing rural post offices.

The minister very well knows that citizens must have access to postal services. Will he take the responsibility required in his job and give fairness to all Canadians?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is really stretching on that one. Those welfare recipients the hon. member is talking about will get a cheque on December 13, if the Liberal senators can be moved to take a decision.

Moreover, we have independent auditors to see that as soon as we mail the cheque, it will be delivered on time everywhere in the country, no matter where they live.

Third, Canada's postal service is second to none in the world, and we have independent experts to verify that as well.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. David Berger (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. There are about 500 furniture retailers in Quebec who stand to lose a full year's operating profits because they will not be adequately compensated for the federal sales tax included in their inventory. Yesterday, the Quebec Furniture Retailers Corporation claimed that this injustice would put a number of furniture retailers out of business.

Mr. Speaker, will the minister agree to withdraw the GST so as not to harm Quebec's furniture industry and the 21,000 people who earn a living in this sector?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member refers to furniture dealers as a whole. There are some furniture dealers who get a rebate that is equivalent to the amount of existing federal sales tax in their inventories. Other people will not get a full rebate and that, unfortunately, is what happens when there is an average rebate. Some people are below the average, some people are above the average.

But I would say to the hon. member, if he is really concerned about these furniture dealers, he will go down the hall and speak to Senator MacEachen and say: "We want to get this tax passed because the GST will result in putting the Canadian manufacturers of furniture on a level playing field with the international manufacturers of furniture".

Today, the international manufacturers are paying one-third less sales tax. That is why we want to get this sales tax through, to help those furniture manufacturers. But, if Senator MacEachen is still going to run the show, if Senator MacEachen is going to ignore Jean Chrétien, then there is—

Mr. David Berger (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, this is not theoretical. It is the truth. This morning, I spoke to the Vice-President, Finance, of Groupe Rona-Dismat, who said that implementation of the GST would have a very adverse impact on members of his group. He told me that some would not survive. Why is the minister asking the private sector to take such losses in the middle of a full-scale economic recession? Why put companies, jobs and the families that depend on them at risk?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member was talking to the representative of the furniture industry, did he say to that man what the Liberal alternative to the GST would be? Did he say that no alternative has been suggested? Did he say that there is an alternative, that it is going to be another form of sales tax? Did he say that there is going to be an alternative of increased income taxes for companies and for individuals?

The Leader of the Liberal Party, Jean Chrétien, has said that it would be irresponsible for the Liberal opposition to stop the GST without having any alternatives. What are the alternatives?

I think the hon. member knows that there is no alternative and that if there is an alternative it is worst than the GST.

PRIVILEGE

COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back to the question asked by the member for Hamilton East yesterday.

I answered a question dealing with Consumers Gas Corporation acceptance by my department, Investment Canada. I said at page 15388 of Hansard:

> —I will step in, not only with Premier Rae, but with former Premier Peterson who accepted the deal before he was defeated.

I would like to withdraw the section: "Premier Peterson who accepted the deal before he was defeated".

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to discuss an alleged contempt of the House of Commons.

With reference to the question of privilege I rely on Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, the twenty-first edition, at page 115. I draw Your Honour's attention to the recent decision of Elizabeth Weir against the Attorney General of Canada, specifically on page 17 which concerns me. I will make sure you have a copy of it, Mr. Speaker. I just want to read a short paragraph on page 17: "The judge says the situation calls for the exercise of political imagination and ingenuity to devise a method of giving New Brunswick an eleventh member without delay and without disrupting the continued representation of the province in the House of Commons. If Parliament fails to promptly devise a method of creating and filling an eleventh seat, the court could be asked to do so. While the court cannot tell Parliament what to do, it is the guardian of the constitutional rights of citizens and will if necessary find a way to ensure that these rights are observed".

What the judge in the case is asking is that there be an additional seat for the province of New Brunswick. I almost said the province of British Columbia; you know, Mr. Speaker, how I was involved in trying to retain a seat from that province.

You will be aware, Mr. Speaker, that under our Constitution, specifically sections 41 and 42, provinces are represented proportionally in the House, that is the number of members in effect is proportionately weighed among the provinces. So if we give New Brunswick another seat, B.C. may want another seat or Quebec may want another seat. It is very difficult to do so without a constitutional amendment.

What concerns me is that pending a constitutional amendment in order to implement the judgment which the judge said should be implemented forthwith, the acts of the House of Commons that we have passed since the GST senators were appointed or that we are passing now in fact may not be legal. Let me put it this way: there may be a cloud on them.

My point is that the government has lowered the authority of the House. It has been in contempt of the House, specifically, by casting a shadow over all legislation passed by the House through the government's refusal to ensure that Parliament was constituted in conformity with section 51A. That is with the new appointments to the Senate.

Second is its refusal to refer the legitimate questions raised about the composition of Parliament—Parliament is the House of Commons and the Senate—to the Supreme Court of Canada for a speedy decision. There is a real question now, as a result of this judgment and as a result of the existing sections of the Constitution, that this House may be improperly constituted. That is a serious matter, and the government is in contempt in my view for not pursuing this matter right away. Government members should have pursued it before. We warned them and they would not pursue it. Now they have a judgment of a court. They should be pursuing it. Not to do so is to be in contempt of Parliament.

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with respect, I would suggest that the hon. member's comments about the possibility of Parliament being improperly constituted are incorrect. The court in New Brunswick has just issued its judgment today where it takes a different view of what flows from section 51A of the Constitution as a result of the use of the appointment powers of section 26. With respect, the government takes the view that on that point, on the point of whether New Brunswick is or is not entitled to another seat, the court in New Brunswick is in error. For that reason we wish to appeal that decision.

I think it would be highly inappropriate for Parliament to act on a statement of the law until all of the recourses for appeal have been proceeded with.

The judgment has just come down today. The Government of Canada has not made a decision as to exactly what route for appeal will be sought. It may be that it would be appropriate to refer to the Supreme Court of Canada. It may be appropriate simply to appeal to the New Brunswick Court of Appeal. I would like to have that decision made based on a judicious and thoughtful review of the circumstances.

I am not aware of this issue being raised in any of the other provinces. There is litigation pending with respect to the use of section 26 in the province of British Columbia, and there is ongoing litigation in Ontario on a different point. Whether those who had judgment in Ontario will wish to appeal the decision based on 51A is something I am uncertain of. They did indicate some wish to do so but appear to have withdrawn that.

I have never suggested that there was not an arguable issue here. It was the view of the government— and we acted on the view—that the use of section 26 did not require the election of another member of Parliament in New Brunswick. I think we should seek a clarification of this in the courts, but I would underline again that at no time has any court, either in Ontario or New Brunswick, indicated that as a result of the use of those appointment powers or any of the implications flowing from section 51A this House is improperly constituted.

It is the tradition in our law that we do not execute judgments until we have exhausted all of the avenues of appeal. I would respectfully suggest that the hon. member's comments about the need to act on that judgment are premature until all of the avenues of appeal and a definitive clarification of the law has been obtained.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, there is some reason in procedure for what the minister is saying. I understand the minister has just got the decision today. The minister would indeed want to look at it, as she said. She would want to consider what she is going to do with it. I understand and appreciate that. That seems to me to be sensible.

What is concerning me—and I say this to the minister—is that just about anybody in the country may now want to challenge one of the laws that we have passed as saying that the House was improperly constituted. That presents some difficulty.

I would be prepared to put this off until tomorrow, to bring the point back after the minister has had a little time, as she asked for, to consider what position the government will take. I understand it is reasonable for the government to have at least a bit of time, but time is of the essence here and I would be prepared to have this matter recalled tomorrow.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. The minister seems to be dealing with this matter in a very summary fashion. I do not think the minister and the government appreciate the gravity and the consequences of the decision of the court.

This Parliament, in my respectful submission, was properly constituted at the time of the last general election in 1988. There was a certain action that was taken recently by the Prime Minister and the government to appoint senators. The whole question of the Senate situation in the province of New Brunswick has caused the court to render an opinion and call into question the appointments made by the Prime Minister.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to consider the consequences of a future court with perhaps this case on appeal, such as the Supreme Court of Canada, deciding that yes, in fact from the moment the Prime Minister appointed the eight additional senators this Parliament was improperly constituted. I would ask you to consider in your deliberations the consequences of that happening. Any Canadian bringing forward an action in the future challenging any law of this particular Parliament could throw the entire country into chaos.

While this Parliament may be supreme, it is incumbent upon the minister and the Conservative government to show respect for the rule of law. The courts have put into question or into dispute the appointment of these eight additional senators.

It seems to me that this government and this minister have a responsibility to ask immediately the Supreme Court of Canada to render an opinion on this matter as quickly as possible to avoid the very real potential of chaos in this country.

The possibility exists, for example, that a law could be passed by this Parliament and only carry by a single vote. The consequences could very well be different if an additional member of Parliament were sitting in this House from the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Speaker, I too would ask you to rule that our privileges would in fact be severely affected by the inaction of this government or by this government not acting quickly to refer the matter to the Supreme Court of Canada.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Moody—Coquitlam has raised a very interesting issue which has been commented on by the hon. member for York South—Weston, and of course we have heard from the Minister of Justice.

According to what I have heard there are two judgments, one in conflict with the other. The minister has said that the most recent judgment which came down yesterday or today is going to be appealed.

If I were to accept the argument that this is potentially a question of privilege, I would then be faced with having to decide whether on what I have heard there is a prima facie case of privilege. It would be very difficult to do so on the basis of two conflicting court judgments as of today, even if it were appropriate for the Speaker of the House to be sitting in judgment on the interpretation of two different judgments.

Both hon. members have suggested that the government ought to take the matter immediately to the Supreme Court of Canada. That is a matter of policy and a matter of argument, but I do not think it is a question in which the Speaker of the House of Commons can order the government to do that.

Certainly today, as the situation stands, I do not feel that there is a sufficient case made for the Speaker to say that there is a prima facie case of contempt against the House, which of course would then go to the House for a vote and then, if the vote passed, it would go to a committee.

There are some obvious interesting procedural aspects to all of this to contemplate in the event that the situation did lead to a prima facie case of contempt. At least today, I do not think the Chair has to get into that.

I thank hon. members for their intervention. I thank the hon. minister. These are interesting and intriguing arguments that have been put forward. I do not think it would be appropriate for the Chair to intervene at this time.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to belabour the point, but the previous question of privilege suggested that there was a contempt of Parliament by the actions of the government. I would like to approach it from a different perspective.

The ruling of the Superior Court of New Brunswick is no ordinary matter. It is not an ordinary matter dealing with a law of this Parliament. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that our privileges are affected because the very work, the very authority of this House has been put into question, not by an inferior court appointed by a provincial government, but a Superior Court appointed by this Parliament. It is a federally appointed court in the province of New Brunswick.

The minister suggests that because there are conflicting opinions, somehow the decision of the court in New Brunswick has been neutralized. What if the court decision in New Brunswick was the only decision we were dealing with? Would the position of this House be any different?

Mr. Speaker, my respectful submission to you is that because a single Superior Court has called into question the issue of the eight senators appointed by the government, it also calls into question the legitimacy and the authority of the House of Commons. As we speak today, this judgment, this ruling, which is significant, suggests that we may be improperly constituted. Surely if there was ever a breach of privilege, it is the suggestion by a court that we are illegitimately deliberating here in the House of Commons because that court has called into question the legitimacy and the authority of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you take this matter under advisement, seek legal opinion from somewhere—wherever you seek your legal opinions—to determine whether in fact a breach of privilege does exist, not on the question of contempt but on the general question of a Superior Court in this country calling into question the authority and legitimacy of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the hon. member's argument. It is very much a repetition of the argument that was given before on the question of privilege upon which I have ruled. I know that the hon. member would not be asking me to contradict a ruling that I just made a few minutes ago, but let us take for a moment the hon. member for York South—Weston's question of privilege as a completely separate matter and relating to the hon. member's own privileges.

The Chair is still faced with the same situation, even if it is accepted that it is a question of privilege. I am not saying it is but even if it was, the Chair would still be faced with the question of whether or not there is a prima facie case to put to the House.

The hon. member says that the New Brunswick judgment is of great importance because it is a Superior Court. So I understand is the judgment in the province of Ontario. We have two conflicting judgments and it is not for the Chair to either decide which of those courts is correct, although I am terribly tempted to do so, having given opinions on such matters for many years before I came to the House of Commons, but I am not really permitted to do that.

Second, I do not think that I am helped particularly by seeking a legal opinion, as the hon. member for York South—Weston said, from somewhere.

As I say, the issue is fascinating. It is fascinating to me and I think it is fascinating to hon. members, but I have to be very careful that I stay within the bounds of what I am permitted to do and I am afraid it is not appropriate for me to intervene.

The hon. Minister of Justice.

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to prolong this discussion but a number of comments have been left on the record that I think ought to be clarified.

The hon. member for York South—Weston and the hon. member for Port Moody—Coquitlam have both suggested that judgments of the courts of Canada have indicated that the appointment of the eight senators was improper. I think that is a very unfortunate impression to leave in this House because neither of the courts have found the appointments improper.

• (1520)

The judgment of Mr. Justice McRae of the Ontario Court of Justice, General Division says: "I have concluded that with respect to this question the appointment of the eight new senators does not violate the Constitution Act of 1867". In view of this finding, it follows that the House of Commons is validly constituted. It goes on to say that the court has no jurisdiction to declare the House of Commons improperly constituted.

The court in New Brunswick took a different view of the implications of the use of that appointing power for the right of New Brunswick to have a certain number of senators, although the court there very clearly makes the point that, as Mr. Justice Stevenson says, some people have distorted Section 51A in recent weeks. His meaning is clear. It does not say a province cannot have more senators than MPs. It says that a province is entitled to no fewer MPs than it has senators, the implication being that Parliament should remedy that.

Once again, the New Brunswick decision is a declaration. It provides no remedy. The suggestion is that Parliament should provide the remedy. I think the appropriate course is for a final legal judgment to be obtained. With respect, I would suggest that it is no more proper for this House to follow a judgment of the court of New Brunswick than of the court of Ontario. But I think it is very unfortunate if the impression is left on the record of this House that either court found the appointments improper, because that was not the case. I think the issue was a very different one from what the hon. member suggests.

Mr. Speaker: I was trying to make it very clear that there are conflicting opinions. It is not for the Chair to delve into them under the present circumstances. The hon. Minister of Justice rises, I suppose, on a point of order, but the ruling is made and that concludes the matter.

We have a question of privilege from the hon. member for Ottawa West.

PRIVILEGE

STANDING COMMITTEE ON THE ENVIRONMENT

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege relating to the proceedings of the Standing Committee on the Environment this morning.

I had a motion properly before the committee, of which I had given due and proper notice, having first notified the chair and all members of the committee some time ago that I intended to move the motion. Having given notice of the motion three weeks ago, I properly moved the motion this morning.

Before the motion could be voted on, one of the three government members indicated his intention to leave, specifically to break quorum and to prevent the motion being put. He urged his colleagues to leave with him, which they did.

The committee is desperately short of time to address the large number of urgent problems confronting the environment. The action at committee this morning further cut into that time by cutting the meeting short and preventing the committee from dealing with any other issue, until the government members of the committee choose to return, presumably with a large enough majority to beat my motion and carry on with the rest of the very lengthy agenda of the committee.

Canadians wish to have the House of Commons address these issues. To disrupt the proceedings in this way and squander the time of the committee is deplorable. This is the kind of negative partisanship that undermines the collegial atmosphere which the committee has developed over many months in light of the urgency and the universality of the problems with which we are dealing.

This morning's action by government members has prevented me, and through me, my constituents from being represented in debate on these important issues, both at committee and ultimately in this House, given that the motion requested the committee to take certain actions and report to Parliament on certain matters.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I think the Chair and other hon. members know with what concern the hon. member brings these environmental matters to the committee. The hon. member has commented upon the collegial attitude that has existed for a long time in the committee and one would hope, of course, that that would continue.

The difficulty that the Chair is in again is a difficulty which I have referred to a number of times. The committee is there and the committee is the master of its own work, unless something happens in that committee which is so extraordinary that the Chair has to view it as a breach of privilege or a contempt. It may well be that a day or two from now the committee will re-engage in harmonious discussion, the Chair does not know. While the hon. member certainly has a grievance which she has expressed, I cannot find any means by which it would be appropriate for the Chair to interfere in the committee's deliberations.

I would hope that hon. members could come to some kind of working agreement and get on with a job that we all wish they would do.

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, may I ask for clarification?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa West is asking for clarification?

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, my concern is that committees are in a very real way an extension of this House.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to in any way keep the hon. member from raising a matter of importance, but I listened to the hon. member give a full and complete presentation. Perhaps I erred in letting it go on as long as I did, but it is not something that I can interfere with.

I think the hon. member will have to take her arguments across the floor of the House in debate, Question Period or privately, but I do not think we can continue this here. We are getting into debate as to what is or is not going on in the committee. I think that before long there would be other members rising to ask whether it was in order to continue.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BANK ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Alan Redway (for the Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C–90, an act to amend the Bank Act (extension), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Dave Worthy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs) and Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, in my introductory remarks today to Bill C–90, an act to extend the Bank Act, I will be dealing lightly with the bill itself and concentrate more on the reasons why we are seeking an extension.

Bill C–90 is basically a straightforward bill. It seeks extension without modification of the Bank Act. As we all know, the Bank Act expires on March 31, 1991. Bill C–90 would extend the existing act until April 1, 1992. This will allow the government the time to get on with the reform of financial institutions legislation, including substantive amendments of the Bank Act as announced on September 27.

It is important that we have this extra time, this additional year, although changes in financial institution legislation may appear to be mere technical adjustments. They are in fact very significant, in part because they represent adjustments to an industry that is itself of major importance.

All Canadians will be affected by this legislation, and I think for the better.

The manner in which the federally incorporated financial institutions serve the needs of Canadians will be directly affected by the legislative and regulatory reforms that we have announced. I believe these institutions will operate more effectively and competitively and that they will be more accessible to meet the demands of Canadians.

Let us recall that the money handled by Canadian financial institutions funds the mortgages of Canadians. It finances our automotive purchases, shelters and invests our savings. It makes available the investment needed for new and expanded industries and businesses.

The success of these institutions is key to our economic success as well as our security as savers and investors.

Because of the particular importance of financial institutions in channelling savings to finance economic growth, it is essential that they be sound, innovative, dynamic and internationally competitive. The challenge was to develop a regulatory approach that protects the public while it encourages innovation and efficiency in our financial sector. We will meet that demand.

• (1530)

The objectives the reform of financial sector legislation will achieve are that, first, they will enhance protection for depositors as well as policyholders. Second, they will benefit consumers by increasing competition and by widening the spectrum of services offered by the financial institutions. Third, they will strengthen the ability of Canadian financial institutions to compete at home and abroad. Fourth, they will lay the groundwork for harmonization discussions with the provinces.

Hon. members will recognize that in order to protect consumers the government tightened up on prudential rules in 1987. These will now be further strengthened, including additional enhancements to the supervisory system. For example, tougher self–dealing rules will be implemented. The self–policing role of directors and auditors will be made more effective through mandated roles and responsibilities, and the superintendent of financial institutions will have increased powers to require information that will enable problems to be anticipated.

Consumers will find shopping for financial services more convenient and will benefit from a wider choice of financial products since banks, trust and loan companies, and insurance companies will be allowed to compete more directly with each other. The interests of consumers will continue to be protected. For example, the new Bank Act would also include the service charge disclosure provisions now contained in Bill C–9 which is before Parliament.

By opening new avenues of growth for Canada's financial institutions, the new regulations will strengthen the ability of these institutions to meet the new challenges that have evolved in the global marketplace.

However, we are all aware that there are competing interests within the financial institution community which cannot all be completely reconciled. In those cases we have sought a reasonable balance. For example, banks and trust and loan companies will be restricted from offering most insurance services and retailing of most insurance products in branches of deposit-taking institutions will be prohibited. This ensures that insurance will continue to be sold by qualified, licensed insurance brokers and agents working independently of any deposit-taking institution. At the same time, however, banks and trust and loan companies will be given the power to promote goods and services, including insurance, to their credit card holders.

The government has spent considerable time consulting on its proposals with financial institutions and their associations. It has integrated these views with its own continuing analysis on the needs of an evolving and dynamic market, both nationally as well as internationally. The process has led to firm, pragmatic policy decisions that are being put forward by this Parliament.

This exercise in reregulation represents a balancing of individual, national, international, and federal-provincial, as well as commercial and prudential, concerns that, as a package, will serve the public interest well and permit our financial institutions to get on with the job.

The measures set out a framework for strong national institutions to serve the national interest.

The reforms also respect provincial rights of supervision and authority in the financial sector. There is a need for a greater consistency among federal and provincial rules in order to avoid balkanization of regulatory regimes and permit our institutions to compete more effectively at home and abroad. The new legislation and proposals take into account a number of concerns that had been expressed by the provinces regarding matters such as commercial links, the in-house trust powers of banks, and provisions allowing for improved sharing of information among federal and provincial supervisors of financial institutions. This opens the door to in-depth discussions with the provinces to clarify responsibilities for the supervision of financial institutions.

Co-operation between federal and provincial authorities is the most responsible way of ensuring the stability and growth of our national and regional financial institutions. This would reduce the possibility of regulatory and supervisory duplication. The goal is to avoid, in practical terms and to the degree possible, the multiple regulation of federal and other institutions operating in several different jurisdictions. This approach could be designed to have institutions regulated as much as possible by their jurisdiction of incorporation.

I believe that the reforms of which I have spoken are important, are in the interests of consumers, and strongly support the need for increased competitiveness. Canada's financial institutions need all of those things today. But to deliver these benefits, we need time to prepare and get parliamentary approval of substantive amendments to the Bank Act that we will be bringing forward. The Bank Act extension before us today will give us that time.

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak briefly in favour of the motion for passage of Bill C-90, the Bank Act extension legislation.

I speak in favour of this bill, not because I agree with the government's financial sector policy, but because of the dire consequences if this bill is not passed. Bill C-90 extends the expiry date of the Bank Act and that, in turn, extends the licences of Canada's 10 domestic banks and the 57 foreign banks operating in Canada. Without this extension, these banks would lose their licences to operate on March 31, 1991 when the current Bank Act expires. This would cause a total collapse in our entire financial system and throw our entire economy into chaos, so that is why I am speaking in favour of the motion.

There are more than 3,000 Canadian financial institutions, operating today in Canada and throughout the world. Together, they have close to $1 trillion in assets. Through some 1,400 branches across the country, with close to 500,000 employees, Canada's financial institutions serve practically every individual and business in the country. Clearly, a collapse would not be allowed to happen, but this is the serious kind of problem that the government is tempting by waiting until the last minute to introduce an extension of the Bank Act.

A much more responsible approach would have been to introduce a new Bank Act this past September when the government introduced the new trust and loan legislation. The banks are central to Canada's financial system and it is important that Canadians are able to see the whole picture, that they can see the legislation that this government intends to bring in in connection with the four pillars, and not just see the legislation, piece by piece. Today, we have the last-minute introduction of Bill C-90 which is the latest example of government's unorganized approach.

I would very quickly like to go through the government's performance or record in the past five years in bringing in modern, new, financial legislation. In 1985, the government introduced a green paper on financial sector reform. That was followed by a blue paper in 1986. That was followed by four years of waiting by the Canadian financial institutions as they watched their global market share tumble.

Time is of the essence in the financial sector because of the rapid change occurring world-wide. Certainly a very important question in this whole area is: What has the government done for consumers and depositors of financial institutions?

• (1540)

Modern, new financial legislation should provide consumers with a better choice of financial services at more competitive prices. Consumers of financial services in many parts of the world are enjoying the benefits of modern legislative framework. There is no reason at all that Canadian consumers should not enjoy the kind of benefits as others enjoy in other parts of the world, but the government has denied Canadian consumers these benefits simply because it has delayed and delayed the legislation with regard to financial institutions.

We are also concerned that depositors at Canadian financial institutions continue to enjoy a high level of confidence that those deposits are safe and they are being wisely managed. This kind of continued security would be achieved through new financial legislation which emphasizes improved self-regulation, as well as a strong role for the Superintendent of Financial Institutions. As we all know, the government has denied Canadian depositors those benefits as well.

Contrary to what the government may think, there are consequences to the years of delay in bringing in meaningful financial sector reform. In fact, between the time the government released its first policy paper on financial institutions and the time when the new Bank Act is passed, close to seven years will have elapsed. That is seven years during which the government knew and acknowledged that the current act is outdated and is hindering our banks' ability to compete. That is seven years during which it failed to introduce new legislation to do something about it.

Here we are today debating an extension of the existing Bank Act when we really should be debating a new Bank Act. Instead of telling the banks what legislative tools they can use to operate and compete in a tremendously competitive world market, the government again is asking for more time. Reluctantly, we have to agree to give it more time, not because we agree with the government's approach, but because of the dire consequences we would face if Bill C-90 is not passed.

The soundness of the Canadian financial system and, indeed, the entire economy depends on it.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I am not so quick as the previous speaker was to give agreement to this bill. This is a bill to extend the charter of the banks until 1992.

Last spring the government promised us a new Bank Act and it did not deliver. Last spring we were promised Bank Act changes and we have not got them. What have we got now? Bill C-83. The government says: "We are going to start reforming the financial institutions and Bill C-83 is going to be the first in a series of amendments to the financial institution operations of this country". So, we have got Bill C-83 and it has had second reading and it is in committee. Sometime in the next two years we are going to get the Bank Act, and then we are going to get the Insurance Act changes.

Why are we going through this strip-tease? Why are we going through this whole performance? First, it drops Bill C-83, and then we are going to get another dropped in a few months or so, and then we are going to get the Bank Act. Why? Is it not better that we see all the cards on the table so that we can see how the amendments to the Trust and Loans Act meshes with the Bank Act and meshes with the Insurance Act? Why are we going through this? What is the gain? That is the question to be asked. We should see all the cards on the table so we can see the total picture. That is my first criticism.

It is not as if 1991 came upon this government suddenly. After all, it went into the free trade agreement and that is what is motivating the changes to the way the financial institutions operate. That is the real rationale, to follow what big brother in the United States is doing. God knows the problems they have with their savings and loans and their banks. If one looks carefully at what is portending for us in Bill C-83, one will see that we are following exactly what is being done in the United States. I will deal with the specifics later.

The other question I would like to touch on is what does the future hold for us? Look at what Bill C-83 has done and that is the trend, brothers and sisters. That is the trend. If one looks at how C-83 handles power, the concentration of power in Bill C-83 is in the minister's hands. Look at what is happening. Bill C-83 gives the minister special powers. Is this the trend for the Bank Act and other acts amending financial institutions in this country? The power is going to be centred in a political minister. We have had an example of how a political minister can make and use special powers.

We had the example of Amex. Amex does not qualify by the description of what a bank is in Canada. Yet the minister used special powers to give American Express things that Canadian banks cannot do. A Canadian bank cannot do the things that Amex was given. This is the special power used by the minister. This is the kind of example of what special powers can bring about. He used the special powers and gave Amex all sorts of powers and rights that Canadian financial institutions do not have. In other words, he changed the rules to suit the players, after the fact. It seems to me that the question is a legitimate one. Is this the way in which we want financial institutions in this country to be regulated and controlled? How are the consumers of financial services treated in that kind of scenario?

Ms. Hunter: Badly.

Mr. Rodriguez: Absolutely. Very badly.

In 1985 the finance committee brought out the green paper. They gave a blueprint for the way in which financial institutions ought to be regulated. It does not talk about giving special powers to ministers who have political connections. That is not what they talk about.

I would like to put on the record what the finance committee recommended on page 30 of that 1985 report. Consequently, the committee proposes the creation of a national financial administration agency, NFAA. This would be an autonomous Crown corporation involving representatives of the provinces, the financial industries and the federal government on its board of directors.

The committee suggested there be four provincially-appointed directors from the Atlantic provinces, Quebec, Ontario and the western provinces. There would be eight industry-appointed directors, two from the chartered banks, and one each representing the trust companies, the life insurance companies, the property and casualty insurance companies, the financial co-operatives, pension funds and security firms, if provincial ownership rules were changed to allow them to be closely held by federally-incorporated financial institutions. There would be five federal government directors, one appointed by each of the Bank of Canada, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and three by the Department of Finance. In addition, the board would hire an inspector general of financial institutions as chief executive officer of NFAA and who would also sit on the board to give a total board membership of 18. The chairman of the board of directors will be appointed by the Minister of Finance. This agency would act as the regulatory and supervisory agency for all federally incorporated financial institutions and for any provincially incorporated institutions if the provinces so desire.

It would establish conditions for memberships of institutions in the various consumer protection plans of this administration. Provincial institutions would have to comply with these conditions in order to obtain coverage under these plans. The agency would administer separate funds for each type of financial activity that would act either as direct providers of consumer protection plans or as backup resources to industry-operated protection plans.

It goes on. It outlines the supervisory role that this agency would have. It does not propose that power be put in the hands of the minister. It involves the provinces because you have to harmonize the rules that govern trust companies that are incorporated provincially. They have to be harmonized.

This provides an opportunity and a vehicle to involve the provinces and to bring them within the ambit of the federal law. This does not allow the minister to exercise any special powers. We have a serious problem with that whole direction which we have seen in Bill C-83. It is pointing in the direction for the Bank Act, if that is the pattern, and it is pointing in the direction for insurance companies as well. We do not cotton to that idea very much. That is one strip-tease the minister can forget.

The minister talks about deregulating the financial institutions and reregulating them. That was the boast of the minister when he introduced Bill C-83. He is deregulating and reregulating them. Where is the power for the reregulation? The power for the reregulation is going to reside in a political minister, not in an agency as was recommended by the green paper in 1985.

Why was this proposal not incorporated into the changes affecting financial institutions? Why was it not? We are very concerned about the fact that we are getting into another recession. We remember the last recession and we remember the loosey-goosiness that resulted in the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank. We remember them very well.

We also remember that in the last dozen years 10 trust and loan companies have had to fall back on using deposit insurance. Now we have another trust company that is on the death watch. We want to put this kind of power in the hands of a minister?

I may as well touch on the other issue that concerns us very much. Here is a minister and a Conservative government that represents special interests in this country. Then we look at the recent appointments into the Senate. All they have appointed are members of the same club. That raises for me another important question as to whether this Parliament should be looking at any regulation with respect to financial institutions until we have had some conflict of interest rules that binds members of Parliament and in particular binds the Senate.

An hon. member: Castonguay.

Mr. Rodriguez: I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians should quiver in their boots when we think about the potential for conflict of interest.

Who have we got over there? We have some of the most vitally interested people in the way financial institutions are regulated in this country.

We have this fellow Trevor Eyton. He is hooked in very directly to Royal Trustco and Edper Enterprises. We have Mr. Castonguay hooked into the Laurentian Group. We have Mr. Denino hooked into Cabot Trust. We have a whole host of them.

You can bet your bottom bitty that these are the people who are going to end up on the Senate finance and banking committee. That is the special interest.

We expect Canadians to believe that the rules governing financial institutions are going to be done in a most impartial manner. It is like thinking that Colonel Sanders is looking out for the social interests of the chickens. It never happens.

This is a serious concern. They are going to get plucked and tucked—I will stop right there. Initial consonants have never been my strong suit.

There should be no progress on any of this kind of this legislation until we have had a set of conflict of interest rules, which this government introduced. It has been sitting on the shelf. We should not be proceeding.

Another area that concerns me, and I heard the minister repeat it many times: The word is "globalization". That is the new word.

We have to get participants that are lean and mean, and also bigger at the same time.

Ms. Hunter: They look like they are fat and mean to me.

Mr. Rodriguez: The member says they look fat and mean.

That is what is going to happen.

I got the impression as I listened to the minister and watched the trend on Bill C-83 that the move to globalization of financial institutions is becoming more important than the interests of Canadians.

Why else when time and again on the whole question of bank service charges and trust company service charges when we cried out to have some ombudsman appointed who could look out for the interest of consumers, that idea was never followed through by the government? It was not interested in it.

It said: "Oh well, the superintendent of financial institutions would look out for that". The superintendent of financial institutions is more interested in the solvency of the institutions, not in ordinary consumers being very concerned about the way they are gouged in the marketplace with bank service charges.

It seems to me that as they move toward building these giant financial institutions that they want to build, in fact the interests of Canadians fall farther and farther behind.

These institutions began with us. Now they want to look to other interests, not the interests of Canadians. Pure profit is all that motivates their decisions.

It seems to me that they are destroying national markets to restore global markets. On that question, I have to ask: Where is the social responsibility of the financial institutions in this country? Where is their sense of social responsibility?

I saw one of the big banks in this country. We are all hearing horror stories of banks moving in on farmers, closing in on small businesses and demanding repayment in tough times. How did they treat Campeau Corporation? They forgave. They wrote off $80 million. The National Bank wrote off $80 million. How do they treat the small business person?

• (1600)

An hon. member: Student loans.

Mr. Rodriguez: Student loans. They are tough, real tough. Here are the banks. What contribution do they make to affordable housing in this country? They can make profits on affordable housing, but they can make bigger profits by lending to those risky things that Campeau Corporation got itself into. Pure profit.

I ask the question: What is the social responsibility? Here is a banking system that could find a $1 million bonus for a horse that wins the Triple Crown of Canadian racing, the Bank of Montreal. Isvestia won the three prime races in this country, and for doing that the owners of that horse get $1 million from the Bank of Montreal.

Where is the social responsibility? Where do we see it reflected? Do we see it in affordable housing? Do we see it in the training of Canadians in post-secondary education? Do we see the banks participating in any kind of training programs? Do we see them investing any of the hundreds of millions of dollars, the fantastic profits that they have been garnering in the last year or two? Have we seen any of this?

An hon. member: The clerks pay more in taxes than they do.

Mr. Rodriguez: The member says that the clerks pay more in taxes than some of these banks do, which is probably correct, but do we see any sense of community responsibility or social responsibility? No.

I cannot be so sanguine as to run in and say: "This is fine; you can do this". I have to start ringing the warning bells that this government is headed in the wrong direction. It should stop and reflect somewhat on where it is headed.

I want to ask another question. Government members have made a great big thing about the ownership of banks. They said that no individual or group can own more than 10 per cent of the shares of a bank. Does that cover a father with 10 per cent of a bank and a son with 10 per cent? Is that permitted? I ask that question. Can a father own 10 per cent of a bank and the son own 10 per cent of the same bank? I mean one family would have 20 per cent of the ownership of a bank.

What is the direction toward ownership of banks? We have seen the move with respect to schedule B banks coming in from the United States. They are going to be able to do all the things that schedule A banks do, yet they are not covered by the same rules that apply to schedule A banks. Canadians are covered by one set of rules. Americans are covered by a looser set of rules. The whole question of ownership needs to be looked at. We ought to look at the way ownership rules apply.

I get the distinct impression that as the pillars of the financial institution or the financial world in this country collapse the power is being shifted into the ministry, into the minister's lap. This causes grave concerns.

Look at all the smoke and mirrors being played with so-called Chinese walls which after they get through with them are more like Swiss cheese. There are no walls at all. They are just picket fences.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): You are very impressive.

Mr. Rodriguez: The minister says I am impressive. It is easy to be impressive when dealing with a subject so vast, a subject that I feel so strongly about, that is the question of economic power in this country. Is it being wielded for the benefit of all Canadians?

The answer I come up with, as I read Bill C-83 and about where the government is headed with respect to the way in which financial institutions are going to be regulated, gives me grave cause for concern. However, look at the smoke and mirrors. It says that we will have these walls because insurance companies will continue to market insurance and banks will not be able to market insurance through their branches, but banks can own an insurance company.

Why are we playing this charade? Insurance companies right now are taking deposits. They lend money and they are marketing insurance. They are operating like a bank. When one takes out a life insurance policy and pays the premiums, one is in effect making a deposit. When one accumulates value in the policy, one can borrow money from the insurance company. In fact insurance companies are much like banks. They take deposits in a way and they lend money, yet they are going to be marketing insurance.

What charade is that being played? We have to set out what those pillars are going to be in the financial institutions, if we are going to have pillars, and then we should set rules that apply to everybody. Either everybody is covered by the rules or no one is covered. We cannot have different rules for different organizations in the financial world. We certainly cannot have the power vested in a minister because we have been down that route before. Most definitely Parliament ought not to be dealing with changes to the Financial Institutions Act until Parliament has a proper conflict of interest law that covers both Senate and the House of Commons.

Grudgingly we are going to let this bill go which extends the charter of the banks until 1992, but I am serving notice that this party in this corner of the House has very serious questions.

We are not buying a pig in a poke. If it means that Bill C-83 does not get passed until we see the Bank Act and the changes to the Insurance Companies Act, then we are going to wait. We need to take a look at the total picture. We are not going to pass one and then find out that something does not fit or something does not gibe or the philosophy is not maintained throughout.

I serve notice to the minister that in fact we are going to be asking serious questions. We are going to question the direction in which this government is moving toward deregulation and reregulation of financial institutions.

Mr. Worthy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If you check with the House you will find unanimous consent to proceed through all stages of Bill C-90 today, which would include reference to Committee of the Whole instead to a legislative committee.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is there unanimous consent for the motion of the parliamentary secretary that the House proceed forthwith to adopt all stages of this bill?

The Deputy Government Whip—

Mr. Boudria: The Deputy Opposition Whip.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Opposition, of course.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I hope that will indeed be the case in the very near future, and my colleagues as well. Thank you for your encouragement.

Seriously, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to point out that one of our members would like to take a few minutes to add a few words, and after that, we are prepared to accept this proposal. If the House is willing to accommodate us, we will be ready to proceed immediately afterwards.

• (1610)

[English]

Mr. Worthy: I have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make some very brief remarks on this bill.

I have met with many people from the insurance industry and many people from the bank industry. I have formulated the personal opinion that maybe it is time that the insurance business and the bank business try to bring in for the average person a straightforward solution regarding insurance.

Right now the average person can spend up to $4,000 or $5,000 on insurance costs if he has one or two cars, a home, and a small business. I believe it would be more feasible to amend the Bank Act so that banks can get into the sale of insurance. This would drive the cost of premiums down and make insurance accessible to the public. Members of the public at large would receive better service and greater accessibility to insurance if they only had to take a few minutes to go to the bank and purchase the insurance they need.

Insurance today is a complicated procedure. One has to hunt from insurance agent to insurance agent, which is costly. Right now an individual who has to spend an average of $4,000 on insurance might find a difference of 25 per cent to 30 per cent if that individual could go to the bank and talk to the bank manager or other professional who deals with insurance. He would be provided with a better, more accessible package, at a lower cost.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington—Correctional Service Canada; the hon. member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley—Forestry; the hon. member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception—National Defence.

[Translation]

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to. Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. DeBlois in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole for consideration of Bill C-90, an Act to amend the Bank Act (extension).

Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a question with respect to why there is a need to further delay the introduction of the Bank Act review. This was promised last spring. It is not as if this thing suddenly came up and slapped the government in the face. The government knows that every 10 years the Bank Act is reviewed, and the government knew that 1991 was coming. Why is the government going through this process? Why do we have to put it off and why do we not have it when we were promised it last spring?

Mr. Worthy: Mr. Chairman, I think the answer is that, in trying to deal as responsibly as we possibly can as a Parliament, not just as a government, we are taking the proper steps and going through the proper process. We have initiated Bill C-83, pertaining to trusts and loans, which is now before the finance committee. It will receive full and open debate and discussion.

At the same time as Bill C-83 was tabled, we also tabled the policy paper indicating the similarities and differences of the way the rules would apply to other institutions. We will be proceeding as quickly as we can with the other required legislation. The government has indicated that all pieces of legislation will be introduced at the same time. It will not be a staggered impact; it is going to be done and it is being done, I think, as quickly as we can do it, if we are going to be acting in a responsible manner.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, the answer of the parliamentary secretary is not satisfactory. We have Bill C-83 before us and it is the basis of my next question. It seems to me that if we are going to have a series of acts that amend the way financial institutions operate, then as a responsible parliamentarian, I should have the proposals before me. I think it is very important to see how the one hinges on the other. These things are not going to be done in isolation.

In fact, in Bill C-83, as the parliamentary secretary well knows, there are many crossovers. The Bank Act will be applied, in certain instances, to other financial institutions. Certain aspects of the Bank Act, for example, disclosure on service charges, will not be enforced against trust and loan companies because there is some argument, which I have not accepted, about provincial jurisdiction.

But I think that we are entitled to see the whole package. Since the hon. member raised it, why don't we have all of these bills before us? Is he suggesting we could hold Bill C–83 in committee and not deal with it until we get the other bills amending the legislation pertaining to the financial institutions of this country, so we can have the total picture? We do not want this strip–tease approach. I think we have a right to see the whole package and so do Canadians.

The parliamentary secretary says that they will all be implemented at the same time. Oh sure, they will all be implemented at the same time. We wanted them all introduced and discussed at the same time. We are going through this exercise with Bill C–83 and I think that it is not acceptable, because the government knew well in advance that the Bank Act had to be reviewed in 1991. I want the parliamentary secretary to deal with those questions.

Mr. Worthy: Mr. Chairman, I value the comments of the hon. member and I know that he has had long experience with the subject matter which we are discussing. However, the subject matter of the proposed legislation we are dealing with today is a very simple and basic housekeeping position of extending the Bank Act for a year, so that we can go through the process of dealing properly and responsibly with all parts of the bill.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, no, no, no. The parliamentary secretary cannot get away with reading the scribbles from his bureaucrat. There is no way that I can accept that.

• (1620 )

This bill is to extend the Bank Act. The question I am asking is why are we extending this? It will go to 1992, and hopefully we will get a Bank Act review before then.

At the same time we will present Bill C–83, amending and changing the way in which financial institutions operate. So it is a very straightforward question. Why has the government not brought before Parliament the various bills that will amend the way in which financial institutions will operate. We do not want this kind of piecemeal approach where if the House passes one bill, it will give us the next bill. Pass that, then we will get the next one, and then they will all be implemented at the same time and all proclaimed at the same time.

It seems to me that for the government to argue that it needs an extension, it must justify why an extension is really needed. I am suggesting that this government has been derelict in its duty and that it has had enough time to know that 1991 was coming and that it had the responsibility to review the Bank Act.

Even the Financial Institutions Act, C–83, has been promised to the financial institutions for years now and finally they have got it. The Trust and Loans Act that Bill C–83 amends has not been amended since 1917 and God knows how long it has been since the Insurance Act of this country has been amended. It is not as if suddenly these things all rose up out off the ground and slapped us in the face. These things have been around.

Now government comes to Parliament and says: "We don't want the banks to lose their charters when the House prorogues. We want to make sure that the banks can continue". Well, that is not good enough. I ask for a logical explanation.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I think I know what my colleague from the NDP is trying to get at. I am sorry that we cannot hear a definite answer from the government. Perhaps we could try and get an explanation.

The government obviously knew a number of years ahead of time that the Financial Institutions Act had to be reformed. There is now such a bill before the House. Presumably it knew at the same time, at least when it came into power in 1984, that it had to revise the Bank Act, or at least it must have discovered from reading the legislation that it expired in 1991.

Given that it knew both of those things, why is it that we only have a bill for one and nothing for the other? I think that is what our colleague is after. What we are hearing is that one bill does impact on the other. We are presenting completely new legislation in one area and in the other one we are just saying: "Okay, let us extend the old rules for one year". That is really what I think our colleague is trying to find out. I also think that the whole House would like to know the answer to that question.

In other words, can we get a commitment that there will not be a further extension after this one which our colleagues have indicated they are willing to grant, that no further extension will be necessary, that there will be a bill proposed, and that the other bill, which is presently before the House for consideration, will be delayed so that we can examine both pieces of legislation concurrently. That, I think, is the question that the House would like to ask and the House would like to get an answer for it at the present time.

Mr. Worthy: Mr. Chairman, I was not trying to dodge the question earlier. There were two other people seeking the floor and I did not want to hog their mikes.

An hon. member: You were planning to give an answer?

Mr. Worthy: Why yes, I am prepared to. I know we are not in Question Period, we are in Committee of the Whole. Normally you let people have their say on things.

I like your analogy this afternoon of the strip-tease and obviously you want nothing but the naked truth. I wish I could provide it for you.

Mr. Rodriguez: No, no, no.

An hon. member: Bear with us.

An hon. member: It's a cover-up.

Mr. Worthy: As my colleague over here says: "Bear with us", and the other one yells out, "It's a cover-up." I do not know which one it is.

I cannot, of course, answer for all of the events that have taken place leading up to the financial institution reform and I sure as heck cannot answer for all the things that will or may be coming up in the next one or two years. I feel we would be terribly irresponsible if we did not proceed as a government in a proper and staged way. Possibly the way we are proceeding is not the best. The hon. member obviously feels that it would be better to dump everything at one time. I feel that anything that I have seen from the government side of the process is that it is a sincere effort to try to pragmatically and properly address the financial legislation. It is proceeding in an ordered fashion.

The bill being discussed today is the Bank Act extension. Most of the criticism and comments we have been hearing from the committee concern the financial institution reform as a whole.

Mr. Rodriguez: No, no, no.

Mr. Worthy: Yes I did. I think financial institution reform is a good thing for Canada. I think the comments of the hon. member are that it is overdue and that we should be proceeding more quickly with it.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of quick questions for the member. We are dealing with Bill C-90, which consists of two sections. We are being told by the government that this bill must pass and if it does not pass, there will be chaos in the financial communities.

Can the member indicate to me exactly what would happen in practical terms if this bill is not passed? This bill would allow banks to carry on business until 1992. What would happen if, for whatever reason, this Parliament does not pass this bill over the next several months? Is he telling Canadians that the banks would lock their doors and tell their consumers that they cannot come in and deposit or withdraw funds? Will the banks have to liquidate? Let us get serious about the consequences of this bill not passing. I am not involved, as I am not one of the financial critics for this party, but as an ordinary Canadian listening in on the debate, I would like to know in a very sincere way, what the practical consequences would be.

My friend and colleague from Nickel Belt, the member of the New Democratic Party, seems to have worked himself into a frenzy over this bill. Just a few moments ago I thought he was going to take off. If there wasn't a ceiling in this place, he would be flying high. I was worried about his blood pressure for a few moments. We know that the New Democratic Party and particularly that member is anti-bank. They do not like banks. I am not sure whether it is because their mortgage rates or their business loan rates are so high. We know the New Democratic Party would like to nationalize banks. That, in fact, is a policy of the New Democratic Party.

The purpose of my intervention is not to criticize the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Boudria: Why not?

Mr. Nunziata: Why not, the member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell asks. The reason why not is that our friends in the New Democratic Party are wallowing in hypocrisy. As they say in Latin res ipsa loquitur, which means the thing speaks for itself.

If I may return to the subject matter of the day, Bill C-90, can the member answer my simple question. What would the consequences, in practical terms be, of this Parliament not passing this bill?

Mr. Worthy: Mr. Chairman, first of all, I think it was the hon. member from your party, the critic for this ministry, who went into a fair amount of detail and was going through what she thought a lot of the ramifications might be. She was painting the disaster scenario. I did not mention it.

• (1630 )

I would be concerned because obviously the Bank Act is the act that enables the process of banking transactions to take place. Without the Bank Act extension, banks would cease to be able to function, as I see it, in their process. Beyond that, it is beyond my capabilities to answer. It would be very serious if it was not passed.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I might say that I am enjoying, as much as is possible in these serious matters, hearing the parliamentary secretary from the Cariboo, British Columbia, and the hon. member for Nickel Belt. They do share an interest, a little secret, I suppose. They do share an interest in horses and it is nice to know that they know something about banks, too.

First, I want to say that we should be careful about this strip show stuff. This is a family program out there now and we do not want to hear this, especially when it comes to banks—strip bonds or whatever, maybe, but not strip shows.

I want to raise two points with the hon. parliamentary secretary. One is what my friend from Nickel Belt raised, and that is the notion of conflicts and why the legislation does not deal with potential conflicts. We have now, as the hon. member for Nickel Belt mentioned, a Senate that is stacked with financial people, bankers and big businessmen. The other day in the Senate one of those senators abstained from one of the GST votes. I hope I am not wrong on this and I stand to be corrected, but one would have thought that the senator abstained because he had a conflict of interest. It was over an insurance amendment. My initial reaction was that it is quite honourable of the hon. gentleman. I am told he abstained because he did not like the bill being against the insurance industry, and he did not want to vote for the bill. He was a Tory senator, one of the recently appointed senators.

Why are we not getting some conflict of interest matters with respect to banks and with respect to politicians in representing banks, and so on, on these bills that we vote on? It is easier in the House of Commons. One might have a connection with the bank, but it is such a big House with so many members, it is diffused. When the Senate is so packed with bankers and financial people, there is a real conflict of interest that arises. I ask the parliamentary secretary why there is not anything on conflict of interest in this particular legislation or at least a statement from the government that it is prepared to bring in good conflict of interest legislation and, particularly, prepared to bring in Senate reform legislation?

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Rodriguez: Of course, Allan MacEachen is a big consultant for the banks.

Mr. Waddell: The Liberals, particularly the member for York South—Weston, are heckling me. They are a little worried about the NDP in York South—Weston and some of those areas. They may need our votes to get back to the House, so they had better take it easy on us.

The second question I want to ask is the issue of checks and balances that was raised. We are getting letters about this. I have a letter from Shirley Potter. Mrs. Potter is from Port Coquitlam, British Columbia, and her letter is very typical. She writes to me and says: "I am writing to express my serious concern over a situation of a government which allows a Prime Minister to function unchecked in a manner which expresses his total contempt for the electorate, as well as the majority of the elected representatives. It is time for a serious look at the absence of checks and balances which exist and for action to be taken to correct the situation so it can never happen again".

Mrs. Potter goes on to talk about the fact that power is concentrated. In this country we have power concentrated in banks that decide to whom they will lend money and we have power concentrated in the hands of virtually one man, the Prime Minister.

The government comes to the House, after using closure 15 times in other acts to push things through and, when it comes to its friends in the banks, it wants to extend this legislation. It is not just housekeeping, it is a whole extension of the Bank Act.

Why do we not have conflict of interest legislation along with this or some statements? Why did the government not bring in changes in the Bank Act? Does the government expect, even if we give this extension to it, that it might come back to the House with a new or revised Bank Act? Is it possible that it would come back with a new or revised Bank Act to deal with some of the things that we have to do?

I just want to end with this. A Liberal member has said that we in the NDP are against banks. That is not true. We just want to hold the banks accountable.

I have a copy of a speech by Mr. G. F. Gaffney, the senior vice-president of the Royal Bank of the B.C. district. He was speaking on October 15 at the Empress Hotel in Victoria. He gave a very good speech on the banks and the environment. This man is starting to bring the banks up to date, making them responsible. Therefore, I ask the parliamentary secretary: Will the government not bring its legislation up to date, rather than postpone it? If we agree to this postponement today, is there a possibility that the government might bring in some legislation, sooner than the extension period that we will give to the Bank Act, to revise the Bank Act in terms of conflict of interest, in terms of checks and balances, and to look at the situation of the conflict of politicians in the Senate who are voting on these vital bank matters?

Mr. Worthy: Mr. Chairman, there were a lot of points brought up. To start with the hon. member's first point, I am not sure which end of this horse that I am, but I will leave that to his imagination.

The hon. member made two different points on conflict of interest. One is within the financial institutions themselves. I think the hon. member recognizes that there have been improvements made in the legislation that has been tabled and the policy paper that has also been tabled. I fully expect that reform of the potential conflicts within the boards of directors of financial institutions is being adequately addressed there.

He also got into Senate reform, checks and balances, and I believe the member is bringing up many comments and many points of view that are recognized across the country. It is just because of this that our Prime Minister initiated the citizens' forum that is now in the process of talking to Canadians, not only to Canadians in the Cariboo, to Canadians in Nickel Belt, and to Canadians in Newfoundland, but also to Canadians in Ontario and Quebec who also have opinions on this. Hopefully, coming out of all of that, there will be a reform that all of us will welcome.

Mr. Karygiannis: Mr. Chairman, I come from a small business. In any sense of the business, whether it happens to be small or large, one has to have a playing-field and a certain game plan of what one is going to do over the next couple of years.

Coming at the 11th hour, the government saying: "We need this legislation passed immediately or tomorrow we are not going to have any financial institutions. They are going to collapse". I feel that it is somehow irresponsible.

The member across talked about responsibility, sincerity, and everything else, and we are here today to address financial legislation. I am wondering if somewhere down the line we are going to sit down and look at the Bank Act and say: "Okay, we are going to bring in a Bank Act that is going to be for the long run". We should not, every so often, change it around and every so often come at the 11th hour to ask the House to give an extension for one or two years. The banks will not have to see what we can do tomorrow, and then a year from now tune in again to see where we are going.

Is it not time that the banks of this country of ours, for once and for all, got a permanent Bank Act so that they can look forward, trouble-shoot, and put things together. They should not have to come at the 11th hour to ask us for an extension. It is irresponsible that, at the 11th hour, a businessman must hang on to the television screen watching the Canadian Parliament to see if he is going to be in business tomorrow.

If we are going to talk about responsibility and if we are going to talk about fair government and all these things, I think that this should have been dealt with a long time ago.

Mr. Worthy: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member's point is well taken.

• (1640 )

The government has indicated that it will be bringing in the new Bank Act just as soon as it possibly can. It will be early in the new year. If it is not a permanent act—in other words, if it has a sunset clause in it—I think it would be at that point that the hon. member should make his recommendation that we look at a more permanent timeframe for it.

Ms. Callbeck: Mr. Chairman, I have been listening to this discussion and what I would like to know is why the government has not taken its responsibilities seriously and introduced a Bank Act, rather than an extension?

In 1985, there was a green paper on financial institution reform. In 1986, there was a blue paper. It is now 1990, four years later. What has the government been doing for four years? Why has the government not introduced the Bank Act, rather than the extension of the existing one? Second, I would like to know exactly when we can expect a new Bank Act?

Mr. Worthy: Mr. Chairman, if we introduced a new Bank Act today and tried to put it through in time to satisfy the date, the first thing that would happen would be that we would be accused of moving far too quickly and being dictators in the House.

I cannot account to the House why it has taken as long as it has. I know there have been many stages and the stages have probably been fruitful. We will probably end up with a better bill because we have taken that time.

But I cannot, and I really do not want to, go back and try to answer for the last three or four years. I would say that, if we are going to be dealing responsibly today, then we should be proceeding to give this extension to the Bank Act which that hon. member and the hon. member for Nickel Belt have indicated we should do. We could then make sure that next year, when the Bank Act does come in—and it has been indicated that it will come in as early as possible in the new year—that we then proceed with it as responsibly as we possibly can.

Mr. Assistant Deputy Chairman: We are still on clause 1. The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary referred to Bill C-83. In fact, he signalled that Bill C-83 was a flagship of the other legislation that will come and it points the way for the Bank Act.

I have already disagreed with him that in fact we should see all of the minor ships in this flotilla and not just the flagship. I am prepared to suggest seriously to the finance committee that we hold Bill C-83 until we see the other cards in the hand.

Look where Bill C-83 heads us. The parliamentary secretary raised this and I want to raise it, too, and that is with respect to the special powers that will be vested in the Minister of Finance, if C-83 is the flagship and it points the way. That is the problem. On page 32 of the report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Trade and Economic and Affairs in 1985 there was a proposal with respect to the supervision of financial institutions and the regulating and overseeing of financial institutions. It is all outlined in recommendations Nos. 1 to 6, the establishment of a national financial administration agency.

That agency will have a board of directors. That board of directors will represent the provinces and financial institutions. It will represent the Department of Finance and the Ministry of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and, therefore, consumers will get their representation.

Here is what has been happening and it is the point I raised with the parliamentary secretary. If that is the path, then the government is closing off any potential for the implementation of this kind of recommendation in a subsequent Bank Act amendment.

I am saying that ought not to be dealt with in Bill C-83, so that when we come to the Bank Act it cannot be said: "We have already decided that in Bill C-83, so we cannot raise this matter with the Bank Act revision".

I have, Mr. Chairman, a serious concern about vesting that kind of power in a minister. I think that this was the better route. I want to know why this recommendation of the finance committee was ignored.

It also gives the provinces opportunities to harmonize their legislation governing their financial institutions with federal legislation.

I want to know: What is the justification for ignoring this recommendation?

Mr. Worthy: Mr. Chairman, I think the points you are making indicate the wisdom and also the need, obviously, for this bank extension that we are dealing with this afternoon.

I do not have a perception that the legislation that has been put in in Bill C–83 is either fixed or unchangeable. The process that you have indicated, the recommendations that you are making and the questions you are raising in the finance committee and on the floor today are not only proper, but it is the way legislation should be processed.

In fact, as this process proceeds as it should, we will end up with the financial reform legislation properly constituted, properly reviewed, properly debated and flown through the committee precisely so that we can deal with it in the manner that we require the extension of the Bank Act that we are asking for today.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask, since we have people from the department for whom I have a great deal of respect with regard to their knowledge of these matters, about the matters I raised in my speech.

Does the 10 per cent ownership, a rule of banks, apply to the same family? Can a father own 10 per cent under the present Bank Act and can a son own 10 per cent of the shares of a bank?

Mr. Worthy: Mr. Chairman, I will do my best to respond.

Under the present act, if a father and a son were to act independently, there is not something that would preclude it. If they started to vote their shares together or were shown to be in concert, then the interpretation right now would be that that would not be allowed.

I would like to point out as my comment though under the new powers that you have been critical of where the minister does have more discretion in the future under the new acts regarding trusts and loans where the minister has more discretion, he would probably be able to make decisions on some of those stock transactions that you are concerned about.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I am very critical of the special powers that ministers have. We saw the special powers of the minister that allowed American Express to be declared a bank in this country when it is not even a bank in its own country by its own rules.

Yet, it comes here and is considered a bank. There was a great deal of suspicion at the time. The reason why it got special treatment from the Minister of Finance was because the head of American Express supported vigorously the free trade agreement.

I am not a cynical person, so I would not dare suggest that. There was this common rumour around that that is what it was. I do not believe in special powers for ministers. That is why I support the recommendation of the finance committee which said these things ought to be regulated by this national financial association with a board of directors which sets those ground rules and supervises that. Then the consumer is protected.

• (1650)

I have no confidence in this system where somehow or other every time the father and son vote together it is a potential conflict. Are there rules that say they cannot vote together at all? Surely that is ridiculous. Either the 10 per cent rule applies or it does not apply. To think that families do not have a vested interest is ludicrous.

I want to ask about dormant accounts in banks which, after 10 years, are deposited with the Bank of Canada, I believe. What happens after that? Do another 10 years go by? What is the procedure? Who gets the money from these dormant accounts? How much money was in the dormant accounts last year, for example? How much money are we talking about in dormant accounts?

Mr. Worthy: Mr. Chairman, the officials have indicated that they would be quite prepared to answer any of these questions, but they do not have the information with them right now to do so.

Mr. Rodriguez: I would appreciate receiving that information.

Since we have the opportunity, I also want to find out—and I would like the information sent to me in writing as well—how much banks make on Canada's national debt. In other words, how much of the banks' collective profits come from the use of depositors' money in purchasing Treasury Bills? Is it possible to get that information because they certainly have a vested interest in the national debt of this country?

Mr. Worthy: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I am a little confused but I would have thought that is something that could have been asked on the Order Paper or through the normal process.

I have some concern with how it affects the passage of Bill C-90. I am sure that if the question were written out for the officials, they would be quite happy to try to get the information.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I think these questions have to be asked when the people who are knowledgeable in the whole process of financial institutions are present. That is why I put them on the record. If we could get the information., I would appreciate receiving it.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Loiselle moved that the bill be concurred in.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): When shall the bill be read the third time? With leave of the House, now?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

M. Andre (for Mr. Loiselle) moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, just before this gets passed, on division, at third reading and goes to the other place, I want to once again—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): On a point of order, the hon. government House leader.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt the hon. member for very long. I just would like to indicate that it is my intention to declare tomorrow an allotted day, a supply day.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the government House leader could stay for a moment. It was my understanding that we had passed, with unanimous consent, a motion to adopt this bill at third reading this day and there are only two minutes left. I notice we are still debating, so perhaps we could get some clarification as to whether or not the unanimous consent that was achieved earlier this day will be adhered to. We did not put up a speaker, not for lack of interest in the bill, but we wanted to indicate that it was our understanding to live with the consent we had engaged in earlier this day.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, we have been hearing considerable rhetoric from the NDP over the last hour or so, notwithstanding the fact that earlier this day they gave their undertaking and commitment that they would pass this bill, unanimously, by five o'clock, so stop the hypocrisy and get this bill passed.

Mr. Rodriguez: The only hypocrisy comes from the member who just spoke. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to conclude by flagging the concerns we had. We heard the parliamentary secretary attempt to answer. He did not answer the question as to the rationale for having this postponement and so at report stage, on division, we let the bill go and we will let it go on third reading, on division.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed, on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): It being 5 p.m, the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—BILLS

NATIONAL HERITAGE DAY

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley) moved that Bill C-288, an act respecting National Heritage Day, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure and an honour to speak in the House this afternoon on my private member's Bill C-288, an act respecting National Heritage Day.

• (1700)

I want to place before the House today a bit of the brief history of National Heritage Day. I also want to talk about some of the recognition that already exists for this bill. As well I want to call upon this House—and I hope the government in particular will endorse it—to support this very important historic legislation.

Bill C-288, an act respecting National Heritage Day, really looks at two or three fundamental areas. The first is a way to recognize the cultural history that we all share from coast to coast to coast or to look at the heritage that we have been raised with. In doing that we would emphasize that in Canada as we have come to know it we do not wish to have a monolithic view of our role in history, our role as citizens of this country. I think this bill will recognize those views and attitudes. It will actually create a National Heritage Day, which would be the third Monday of each February. It would also be a welcome break in the long haul in this northern country from the Christmas break and the festivities for many through to the Easter-time period on the calendar.

There is no question about it. It is a chance for all of us to catch our breath. Perhaps a few rays at that time of the year would probably go a long way toward helping cheer all Canadians, thus giving them a chance to strive to do more work at their workplace, to enjoy their families more, and to continue to participate as full citizens.

Let us take a brief look at how I would argue that National Heritage Day is already recognized but in name. Of course that it what this bill would do. It would officially sanction many different events across the country. We are starting to group together and starting to know our National Heritage Day.

In 1973 the Heritage Foundation Association of Canada really started it all by declaring that the third Monday in February would be an opportunity to reflect back on our cultural heritage and our role as Canadians, our cultural heritage as it relates to many things: our environment, our buildings, and our lives.

It has gone on from there to Alberta, which now recognizes National Heritage Day in its own unique Alberta way as Alberta Family Day. As well, there have been representations in the past to have National Heritage Day, the third Monday in February, recognized as International Peace and Goodwill Day.

Around that time of the year, as we listen to editorials and commentaries on the radio, watch them on television and read them in the newspapers, we realize that many newspapers and media outlets have endorsed the concept of National Heritage Day: The Toronto Sun, The Evening Telegram and The Gazette, to name a few, have all gone on the public record as endorsing and supporting National Heritage Day.

Generally on National Heritage Day we get a message from one of the ministers of the Crown. It is usually the Secretary of State who will make some wonderful comments about his concerns for the country and our multicultural diversity and will give an endorsement to National Heritage Day.

Mr. Speaker, I know you have one of these books as well, but even in the official House of Commons date book which all members of Parliament receive Heritage Day is recognized. I would argue that in essence we are already starting to recognize National Heritage Day. It is my view that my particular private member's bill is going to legislate and put into law what we are already practising.

Parliament was dealing with this bill as early as, according to some references I was able to find, 1980 when the member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce and Ms. Pauline Jewett, a former member of Parliament from my caucus, made a number of motions and representations to have National Heritage Day recognized.

In 1981, the Hon. Stanley Knowles really started the ball rolling in bringing forward motions on a regular basis, trying to recognize and get the concurrence of this House for National Heritage Day.

Perhaps it is a small honour to try to carry on that tradition. If we are unable to have this bill passed by this Parliament today, I will be making every effort in subsequent Parliaments to bring forward this legislation so that at some point in time we can actually legislate it.

There is some rumour, perhaps behind the curtains, about this session of Parliament. Are we going to continue sitting until Christmas? When might we rise?

Are we to expect to prorogue soon and come back some time in the new year?

Mr. Speaker, I know you will know about a break when we know. Perhaps Parliament will not be sitting and we will not have an opportunity to recognize National Heritage Day in this House. If this Parliament prorogues and comes back with a new session of Parliament, certainly one of my colleagues or I will make every effort to see that this bill is brought forward again so that we can eventually consider it.

There is a good reason to support the bill today. It is not a very long one. Anyone who is interested can certainly contact my office to obtain a copy of it. It is a five-section bill. We also have coming up in 1992 Canada's 125th birthday, which was recognized in the Throne Speech back in 1989. The government made a commitment at that time that it would be developing considerable activity around what to expect in 1992, Canada's 125th birthday. Throughout the country Canadians in various communities and areas will be celebrating Canada's 125th birthday.

Montreal will be 350 years old. Closer to my home, the Alaska Highway, a very important transportation link between Canada and Alaska, will be celebrating its 50th. If it is not done for 1991, I suggest that this would be perfect legislation to bring forward—and we will even let the government bring it forward—to help all of us celebrate Canada's 125th birthday in 1992. There are opportunities today and in the future to go forward and support this legislation.

In debating the bill it is important to outline a few of the points in the legislation. There has been some debate and discussion. I did appear before the relevant committee to make a submission about why I thought this bill should be deemed votable. I made the submission based on some comments about the cultural history of this country in response to one of the questions asked of me.

Does Canada really need another holiday? What about the lack of productivity that we will suffer in Canada? That is one of the arguments used against this legislation or this proposal. I responded to it this way. I said that it was to the benefit of employers, organizations and Parliament, for the better you are, the more happy a soul you are, the better a person and the more productive you are going to be.

• (1710)

I took the argument and turned it around. I made the argument that through declaring a National Heritage Day we would actually increase the productivity of the nation, largely by giving people at that time of the year when it is a little dark and a little cold a chance to catch their breath. They will feel all that much better about themselves, about perhaps who they work for, about their communities, about their provinces and about their country. In fact we will gain a great deal from any of the so-called productivity losses that have often been mentioned by critics of this particular proposal.

I would like to read into the record a couple of definitions which I think will be important for people who have been following this debate. It is from clause 4 and I quote the definition of a general holiday. I think is important, given that we are talking about national policy. It reads:

> The definition "general holiday" in section 166 of the Canada Labour Code is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> "general holiday" means New Year's Day—Good Friday, Victoria Day, Canada Day, Labour Day, Thanksgiving Day, Remembrance Day, Christmas Day and Boxing Day and includes any day substituted for any such holiday pursuant to section 195;

I did not read the amendment which this bill would make to the Canada Labour Code. That of course would make National Heritage Day a general holiday in Canada, subject to some of the usual rules that we have come to know. I suppose some of them have been bent a little from time to time by employers, employees and others, but the general recognition would be that the third Monday in February would become a general holiday as it is known in the Canada Labour Code.

There are a couple of other sections as well that I should mention. One in particular is a consequential amendment to other legislation. It is always important to give a little background as to how we obtain a day like this and what are the results of that. Often we are at home debating and wondering about our participation in some of these holidays, where they came from, and what is the background to them.

I will read into the record clause 2 of Bill C-288 which deals with the whole question of the consequential amendments:

> All that portion of the definition "holiday" in section 35 of the Interpretation Act preceding paragraph (a) thereof is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> "holiday" means any of the following days, namely, Sunday; New Year's Day; National Heritage Day; Good Friday; Easter Monday; Christmas Day; the birthday or the day fixed by proclamation for the celebration of the birthday of the reigning Sovereign; Victoria Day; Canada Day; the first Monday in September, designated Labour Day; Remembrance Day; any day appointed by proclamation to be observed as a day of general prayer or mourning, or day of public rejoicing or thanksgiving; and any of the following additional days, namely—

And it outlines a couple of the additional days. As we can see from my brief reading of this bill—if I had read a couple more sections I would have read the entire legislation into the record today—that very simply this Parliament could implement a measure to which, to be frank, we have given lip service over time. If Parliament were to act, I think we would be sending a clear message to all Canadians about how we view and see our cultural heritage. I am sure the offer of a general holiday in its basic sense would be well received by most Canadians.

What would be a better way to celebrate this country's cultural heritage? What would be a better way to celebrate in 1992 Canada's 125th birthday. I have received support from a number of organizations, such as the Canada Heritage Association, as well as a number of letters from people across the country, in Nova Scotia, British Columbia, and elsewhere who have written to offer their support for this bill. I am certainly gratified by their response and want them to know that we will be continuing the discussion and the debate. Perhaps we could start a petition campaign to ensure that Canadians from all across the country will urge this Parliament to develop as soon as possible a National Heritage Day.

In conclusion, I want to just call upon members for their support of this bill. I certainly hope for and urge the support of the government for this legislation. I would ask it to consider, if it does not see fit to support the bill at this time, that legislation be brought forward in a new session of Parliament, if that is what it is going to be, next year, and that it be a part of the celebrations in 1992 of Canada's 125th birthday. I think that way we have the opportunity obviously to do something good for Canadians, to show our respect for our cultural heritage and as well to be a part of the celebrations that we see coming up.

With that, I appreciate the opportunity here today to present this bill and, as I mentioned earlier in my speech, to let you know, Mr. Speaker, that in subsequent sessions of Parliament we will be bringing forward this legislation and we hope it will receive positive support from all members.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, to speak on this bill before us provides a welcome opportunity to comment on the meaning and the celebration of our heritage.

I first want to record my appreciation to our hon. friend and colleague, the member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley. The substance of Bill C-288, which he has introduced, is by no means new to the House of Commons, which he indicated in his remarks a few moments ago, but the concept reflects and helps to serve to represent an important and continuing effort to give Canadians the best kind of opportunity to celebrate our heritage.

It is more than 17 years since the idea was proposed by Heritage Canada. Since that time it has gained increasing recognition from parliamentarians, from agencies of the federal government, from provincial and local governments, voluntary societies and individuals in the community. Three years ago the then Secretary of State, the hon. David Crombie, called Heritage Day and I quote, "a uniquely Canadian occasion to celebrate both unity and diversity". In a 1987 booklet entitled "Proud to be Canadian" he observed and I quote again, "Canadians in fact have relatively few occasions when we can come together to celebrate our heritage. We certainly do so on Canada Day and with the recent proclamations of Environment Week and Citizenship Week by the federal government, there will be growing opportunities to understand the shared aspects of being Canadian".

We can acknowledge our heritage even without a holiday, much as we observe Mother's Day, and I keep encouraging my children to observe Mother's Day or Father's Day. My husband encourages Father's Day celebrations and my children want to know when it is kid's day. Every day is kid's day.

For 17 years Heritage Day has been observed in this manner, as Mother's Day and Father's Day. Historical societies and architectural conservationists, many among the volunteer societies hold special ceremonies and celebrations each February to mark Heritage Day. Some municipalities have proclaimed a day of celebration and teachers in schools have special projects for their classes to help their students to be more aware of their heritage especially in the community around them. These are all very laudable activities and we appreciate them, but still they only touch a small fraction of the population of Canada.

• (1720)

Our heritage must have a special place, a priority in our thoughts, words and activities. At no other time before now have we had an understanding and respect for our heritage that has been so important as we try in the 1990s and beyond to shape the future of Canada.

I know that respect for our diverse heritage does not simply depend on a heritage day holiday. Of course our great July 1 holiday celebrates our achievements of the nation. But a heritage day could also be very special. It could celebrate what we have achieved as people living and working together in this multicultural society. We could celebrate our potential as a people to build a better Canada for the future.

There is another simpler distinction between Canada Day and heritage day. I think this is important, having been a teacher, that Canada Day falls at a time when usually the schools are out, when there is a holiday. So the celebration for Canada Day has to be done within the school before Canada Day even takes place. That has been a difficulty for us, to have that renewed spirit of the actual day of celebration. It falls outside the traditional school year. It is important that we celebrate a heritage day that would be within the school year.

Our heritage is indeed important to us all and the schools can play a very important part in encouraging, understanding and having enthusiasm for our cultural heritage. A heritage day during the winter could really receive great momentum from the classrooms across the country. With school resources, such an excellent shared objective would be shared by our younger generation. They would understand our heritage as no generation before has done.

Those who believe that it is reasonable for Canada to celebrate national holidays comparable in number to other countries have suggested individuals who might be honoured on a heritage day. Of course this has been suggested, and notable among those persons, would be Sir John A. Macdonald. I am sure that all of us would be pleased to toast Sir John for his foresight and fortitude in bringing together the provinces to form our great Confederation of Canada.

His birth date is January 11. Perhaps not the day of the year that would be the most agreeable to have as a holiday, but indeed that would be an option also. It has been a long tradition to celebrate the birthday of the monarch in May, and that is celebrated in May no matter when the birthday of the monarch is.

Sir John A. Macdonald's birthday could then be celebrated annually at a date to be chosen. Why not roll this into a celebration of a heritage day of itself? Heritage day could permit great flexibility to the communities, to organizations or to individual citizens in what they may celebrate. The birthday of our first Prime Minister, I believe, is a great and excellent subject for celebration.

Many valuable suggestions have been made on what we should celebrate as a national heritage day. Heritage Canada has leaned to the celebration of our fine old buildings, our great accomplishments in architecture. One cannot really quarrel with such an objective for our built-in environment, as we now call it, is a major factor in the quality of life that we lead.

Celebrating surviving achievements of the past is a step to protecting the best of the past and to give future generations a better future.

As I noted before, there is nothing exclusive about celebrating a heritage day. We could give specific time to achieving a greater understanding of the contributions of aboriginal peoples. A heritage day could also cast new light on the need for national unity.

One intriguing suggestion would have a central theme proposed annually for each year of celebration. That theme would naturally attract a great deal of special attention from the media but would also exclude other kinds of community or individual celebrations as well. Let us not overlook the opportunity that a heritage day could give for special local events in our own constituencies.

I have underlined many opportunities for celebrating our heritage. As Canadians we truly have many reasons to celebrate in this beautiful and bountiful land.

Therefore I close by again thanking the hon. member for presenting to us this renewed opportunity to consider the best manner in which to set aside a time for celebrating our national heritage and I salute him for having this opportunity for us to discuss it.

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, first let me commend the hon. member on his excellent initiative in introducing his Private Members' Bill, C-288, concerning heritage day.

Also I would like to take this opportunity to thank the speaker before me, the member on the government side for her wonderful words of appreciation of Canada and her appreciation for a day when Canadians can celebrate their heritage.

Mr. Speaker, if you were to ask me where I would like most to live in all the countries around the world, I would answer very quickly "Canada". Why? As someone who has a heritage other than those who have founded this nation, I have come to the conclusion that this is the land of opportunity.

Canada is where I was given everything that I have: my education, my first job, and the opportunity to bring members of my family together. As well, we have freedom of speech and expression, the freedom to say whatever I would like as an individual without fear of someone watching me from behind, or undermining everything I say.

In a way, Canada to me is a heaven on earth. I am sure it is the same for a lot of people who live in this country, especially those who come from a background other than the founding people. They knew it then and that is why they chose it as a land to settle in.

Mr. Speaker, I have yet to see a bill that has been introduced in the House where there has been so much consensus around it. As the member who introduced this bill has indicated, there has been discussion on this issue as far back as 1974 when it was discussed on October 15.

Also, on March 18, 1975, the then member for Winnipeg North brought up the issue. On April 10, 1975, there was a report from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs where this issue was also discussed. Discussions took place on April 22, 1975, February 13, 1976, and October 31, 1977.

On March 17, 1978, the then Liberal member for Windsor—Walkerville, Mr. MacGuigan, the member for Hillsborough, as well as the member for Winnipeg North Centre, representatives of the three political parties in this House, spoke in favour of a heritage day.

As the hon. member has indicated, on May, 1980, the member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce spoke on the issue. On September 4, 1983, November 2, 1983, May 15, 1984, February 16, 1987, April 7, 1987 and December 18. Throughout these many years, there has been a discussion back and forth on the issue of Heritage Day.

We already recognize one day in February as Heritage Day. On that day, as the member who spoke before me indicated, the minister of the government who is responsible for multiculturalism makes a statement. There are other celebrations in other parts of the country.

Only in the province of Alberta do they actually celebrate a heritage day and look at it as a holiday. That is every first Monday in August.

I truly believe that recognizing this Heritage Day is a step forward. There is no question about it, but there are those who are opposed to declaring Heritage Day as a holiday because of the fact that we might lose one day of activity. I suggest that it is the opposite. I think productivity would improve if we had a day of rest in February, when we can reflect on what we have here in Canada as a country, when we can celebrate our differences as a people and when we can appreciate what has been given to us by this land and by this society as a whole.

I have done a little bit of research in order to discover productivity what happens around the world and if we are alone in trying to celebrate a heritage day in February.

In February, Mr. Speaker, for your information and for the information of the House, several nations celebrate their independence, constitution, or their founding. For instance, Sri Lanka celebrates Independence Day in February. Mexico has what it calls Constitution Day. Tanzania celebrates its founding. In Iran, they have a national day. Japan also celebrates its founding, and the United States of America celebrates George Washington's birthday. Cyprus, Bolivia, Burma, Guyana, and the Dominican Republic all celebrate a day in February, either in recognition of their independence, as a way to celebrate the founding of those countries, or as a way to celebrate their heritage.

In my view, we are not alone in trying to set aside a day in February in order to celebrate our heritage and in order to appreciate what we have around us.

I stand before this House to say that we, in the Liberal Party, in the 1988 election pledged that, if we formed the government, we would make sure a day in February was set aside as a national holiday. We are on the record in support of Canadians taking a day of rest in order to reflect on what Canada is all about and the fact that here in Canada you can be anything you want to be, Mr. Speaker, providing you appreciate the fact that we live in one of the best countries in the land. That is what Canada is all about.

I am not going to spend a lot of time trying to talk about the pros of it, because, as I indicated, there is an agreement on this issue from all sides of the House. It is my hope that the legislation will be adopted by the government, that we can move forward to enact this legislation into law, and that we can get on with it.

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia—Matane): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate today on second reading of Bill C-288, an Act respecting National Heritage Day, and especially, Mr. Speaker, because this proposal may have a major impact on Canadians as a whole.

As citizens of this country, we have a right to be proud of our historical and cultural heritage and the major contribution made by men and women who, over the years, helped to make this country what it is today. We also have a right to be proud of our origins, our language and our family and religious traditions. Together, these values reflect not only our ties with the past but also our admiration for those who made that past.

Considering the profound changes taking place within our society, I believe it is imperative that governments and, in fact, each and everyone of us, make a conscious effort to preserve our history and our cultural identity. In fact, many of the problems confronting our country today are caused by ignorance, carelessness and a lack of tolerance for the cultures of others.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think the question is whether Canadians should emphasize the wealth of their heritage but how we should go about it. For instance, if we support the underlying objectives of this bill, I think we must ask some very serious questions about the economic and social impact.

Adding another holiday at the national level would have a considerable impact on productivity. The ensuing loss of productivity would be about 0.4 per cent of our Gross National Product or about $2.56 billion. Considering the present state of the economy, it is something we should think twice about.

This amount does not, of course, include the additional funds required to promote this day across the country and any other funds the government will have to commit to related support activities. Briefly, creating a National Heritage Day, in addition to having a very serious economic impact, might seriously undermine the credibility of a government that, in a recession, is encouraging Canadian businesses to be more productive.

But there is more, Mr. Speaker. I must point out that the passage of Bill C-288 would not in any way commit the provincial governments any more than it commits employers whose businesses are not subject to the Canada Labour Code. This means that a meagre 8 per cent of the Canadian workforce would be able to take advantage of this measure and take the day off on this national heritage day.

In other words, initially, the measure would be unfair to the majority of the workforce. We must therefore consider whether this type of measure is reasonable.

The bill before the House today may create some confusion, because a number of provinces like Alberta and Quebec already have holidays whose themes are very similiar to that of a heritage day. I am referring here to Heritage Day, celebrated on the first Monday of August, and Family Day, celebrated on the third Monday of February in Alberta. Although Quebec does not have its own heritage holiday, the fact remains that "La Saint-Jean" is steeped in the love of our heritage.

• (1740)

Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will agree with me that a day set aside to celebrate our national heritage ought not to conflict with existing provincial holidays, let alone create confusion in the minds of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I admit it has become imperative for all Canadians, particularly younger generations, to identify more readily with their country and to stand proud. But the real question is to know how we should go about it. For example, is a national heritage day the ideal solution? To what extent would this kind of celebration make people more aware of the wealth of their history and heritage values generally?

I for one do not believe it is the best solution if we take into consideration the economic, social and political repercussions of such a measure. Nor do I believe it is the appropriate means to pull Canadians out of their lethargy.

I think we are deluding ourselves if we think that this kind of celebration would change the public's mentality and radically alter the perception Canadians have of their country and its institutions. As well, we ought not to entertain the suggestion that at the rate of a day a year we will manage to make our leaders, our corporate elite and our educators feel that they are closer to their country and its institutions.

Finally, let us be realistic and reject the notion that we can select a symbol—important though it may be—to rally our youths and all our fellow Canadians around history and teach them to appreciate the values and traditions they have inherited.

Because of their complexity and the high stakes involved, all problems in a society call for long-term solutions. In a nutshell, an illness which affects a whole generation commands a cure which is effective only on a similar scale, but that does not translate into outright rejection of necessary short-term measures if we are to avoid stagnation. That is to say that, in this case as in many others, there is no miracle solution.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the solution is to be found in a collective effort toward educating the upcoming generation. It is through the youths that we will be able to instill into the Canadians a greater pride for our traditions and heritage. It may be true that the population as a whole will only be too happy to have a day off in the middle of winter, but I doubt very much that the Canadians, who are notoriously practical-minded, will spend that day reflecting on the meaning of their heritage. The hon. member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley may wish it were not so, but you will agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that there is often a long way from dream to reality.

If Canada were to have its National Heritage Day, this decision would have to result from a consensus among the federal government, the provincial governments, the business leaders, the trade unions, the organizations devoted to the preservation of our heritage and the population. To accomplish that, we must endeavour to develop a true sense of heritage in the population and work together to build a social, economic and political climate conducive to the successful transmission of this message.

A National Heritage Day must result from the broad consultation of all concerned and its mechanics must be unequivocal. A National Heritage Day that would apply only to a minute part of the labour force would not deserve to be called national. To unilaterally pass Bill C-288 could jeopardize needlessly the achievement of this objective, by disregarding the concerns of other interested parties.

Mr. Speaker, while we support the general thrust of Bill C-288, we have serious reservations regarding the method contemplated and its possible consequences.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, this government is determined to do its best to give the preservation of our heritage priority status. The important steps that were taken earlier on this issue reflect clearly its willingness to act.

[English]

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add my comments to the discussion on Bill C-288. I commend the previous speaker and all other hon. members who have spoken on this bill.

As I see it, the bill touches and really raises two questions. One is the importance of our heritage and our desire to recognize, appreciate and study what it is that makes Canada the great nation that we all know it to be. Second, it raises the question about the value of a statutory holiday, the impact that designating a day to celebrate our heritage would or could have on the feelings of Canadians toward our country. It requires us to balance the positive impact that it could have with the very real impact on productivity and the cost to Canadian employers.

Previous speakers have alluded to the specific problems that exist in my province of Alberta. We celebrate Heritage Day in August and last year the provincial government designated a new holiday, ironically on the same day that this bill proposes for Heritage Day. It is called Family Day. Perhaps it is not too ironic because Canadians have long recognized that the period between Christmas and Easter coming, as it does, during the coldest, darkest and least productive period of the year, could be enhanced with a designated holiday.

While we are looking at what Heritage Day might mean in the life of Canada, we cannot ignore the economic aspect. A new holiday will cost every employer, including the government, every municipality, every hospital, and every business, not only overtime costs for essential services, but lost work time as well. We have to balance this with the value of the holiday, the value of it for morale and potential improvements in productivity that I am going to concede will be there. With the possible exception of, perhaps winter sports enthusiasts, most Canadians do suffer the winter doldrums and would probably like to have a February holiday, like Albertans.

The date aside, I have talked to people in my constituency about a new national holiday to mark Heritage Day. Most people, in fact almost all, agree with the need to recognize and celebrate our Canadian heritage. Most people like the idea of having another holiday but there are many who raised the fundamental concern that I mentioned earlier, and that is the cost of such a holiday. Some even equate it to a national self-indulgence and question whether we have to provide Canadians with a paid day off in order to have them appreciate being Canadian.

It is my strong personal feeling that this country cannot afford at this time to impose, and I use that word deliberately, Mr. Speaker, because even though Canadians say they would like a holiday, I am not aware of any great, ground swell of support or public demand for this proposed holiday. It is not the right time for us to impose on Canadians a new paid, national holiday.

Having said that, I want to add that there is merit in this bill. I think the hon. member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley has done the House a service in introducing Bill C-288. This is an important time in the life of Canada to be considering our heritage and to be discussing ways in which all Canadians can most productively consider it.

Heritage Canada first proposed Heritage Day some 17 years ago. I understand it consulted representatives of the Canadian tourist industry before suggesting a date for the holiday. The overwhelming response was in favour of the third Monday in February. They felt that that would encourage Canadian domestic travel at a normally low season; they felt that it would establish a market among people who lacked the time and money to travel abroad; they said it would also attract Americans to Canada for winter recreation and national celebrations. I question their conclusion in this case because my preference, when travelling, is to avoid holidays whenever possible.

Their conclusions also raise a question as to our ultimate objective. Are we trying to recognize heritage or encourage recreation? I think this is very basic to our debate. We all agree that it is a worthy thing to respect our heritage, but why do we need a holiday to do it? Could we not merely proclaim a special day?

• (1750)

As mentioned by previous speakers, we have done that now for about 16 years. There have been strenuous efforts by voluntary associations that have led to municipal proclamations honouring Heritage Day. There have been special events staged by groups of citizens and by government agencies here in the national capital. Environment Canada honours Heritage Day by, among other things, announcing the winners of its prestigious annual heritage awards. Some schools have even made Heritage Day a special event, with maximum student participation. Museums have special displays and concert halls stage special presentations.

This is good as far as it goes, but only a fraction of Canadians are touched by our unofficial Heritage Day. I believe that we could gain something very substantial for Canada with a Heritage Day for all Canadians.

We in this House are particularly aware of the trauma that Canadians have suffered in recent months with the hopes and disappointments of the Meech Lake Accord. We have seen too often a very emotional reaction to the news of the day. Now with the heartfelt wishes of this House behind them, a citizens' forum will soon be touring this country to elicit views on our constitutional options. This direct involvement of the Canadian people was a sound course of action by our Prime Minister and a very wise course for the times. Yet, is not the real need of this country what I like to call a defence of Confederation? That does not imply an unchanged constitutional framework. We must change and adapt.

We must show our genius for compromise where and when it most matters, but we must enter discussion of change with a real perspective. It would be fatal if our national dialogue consisted only in scoring debating points or indulging in put downs. Instead we should be examining what we have really accomplished together and how we did it.

What are our strengths that made this one of the most envied countries in the world? This is a defence in depth. This is the real preparation for a sound change in the future. How do we accomplish this? We invite our fellow Canadians by one means and another to use the past as a learning tool for the future, and the past does not mean dry history lessons. It means understanding our roots, the contributions of the many cultures who enriched our mosaic, the contributions of our native peoples, the differences that we can see between the way we run our country and our community and the way that others run theirs, all in a spirit of active and responsible citizenship. When we do this, we shall find mistakes that we have made, but the more we examine our common heritage the more likely we are to be impressed by the positive side of our story.

We shall better understand our accomplishments in creating unity, excellence and human satisfaction out of our cherished diversity. Are we asking too much of Heritage Day to do all this? A Heritage Day could be an ideal occasion to focus our thoughts in this way, but it must be for all Canadians. I have no doubt that all the people of Canada would respond and that the media would give great help by their attention to whatever theme or themes of heritage were to be uppermost in a given year.

A Heritage Day for all Canadians would be an ideal occasion because unlike Canada Day, it would come at a time when most of our young people are in school. They would be a very big part of the process of discovering and evaluating our heritage. Their teachers and we, as parents, would be anxious to help them, but I suspect it would be the young people who would be helping us by turning our minds down channels too long neglected.

I do not know exactly what these young people and the rest of us would do. Consciously or otherwise, we would be searching together for the meaning of heritage. We would be looking more at our roots and perhaps digging up unanswered questions about how we came to be what we are. I think we would get to know one another better and therefore become even more tolerant of those whose legacies and perhaps language are different. That too would be a healthy process.

Is it too late to begin the defence of Confederation? Anyone who believes it is too late portrays a tragic lack of confidence in our future. I have got confidence in the long-term survival of Canada and I believe that the time is always opportune for new means to build its future soundly. The time of national re-examination makes consideration of our heritage especially urgent now.

Perhaps what we are asking is nothing less than a change in the Canadian character. We seem to rejoice in our widespread reputation for modesty, caution and self-effacement. It is a false reputation. For modesty and caution did not build this country. But we and our forbears seem to think that it was rudely boastful to talk about the positive things we have done and are doing. That sort of modesty is a luxury we can ill afford today. We Canadians are still on a voyage of discovery together. We must understand better how we got here before we plot any future course. A heritage day for all Canadians could become one of the single simplest most effective means we could imagine to give our thoughts dimension and perspective.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. colleague for presenting this bill. It is important for all Canadians to celebrate our heritage, but I cannot support the concept that designating another paid holiday is the best way to do so.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I note that there is but five minutes left today in this debate, which is unfortunate, because I would have liked to have spoken for a long period of time on this bill. There is a lot to say about the issue of promoting our national heritage and, of course, there is the whole debate that we should entertain as well of whether or not the best way of achieving that is indeed to establish an additional day of holiday.

[Translation]

As you would know, Mr. Speaker, we already have a fair number of rather special holidays. Of course I have in mind those we celebrate on July 1 and June 24. The latter might be designated as well, for it would be an important day for a good many of us, particularly in the electoral riding I represent.

But what matters today is that members be allowed to show where they stand. The House ought not to let this bill drop to the bottom of the list. I think that if the bill is struck from the Order Paper, that is if members keep going until 6 o'clock and thus manage to talk it out, as we say, it makes it that much easier for the government to avoid a vote on an issue which many members consider important.

[English]

I will now ask the House to vote immediately and if no Conservative member rises, that means the government has the courage to vote on this issue, either for or against it. If the bill is talked out, Canadians can conclude just what kind of courage this particular government has. We will find out in a few seconds.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to stand up and talk to this bill in spite of what my friend and colleague from across the way from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell has said to challenge me.

In the course of my comments, I was intending to say a number of things relating to the very fine speech given by the member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley, but I would like to refer to one comment he made before I deal with the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

I have a great deal of sympathy for the proposal that the hon. member has made, as have many of our colleagues over a number of years in the past made a similar proposal. The one thing that makes me want to hesitate has been alluded to by my friend from Red Deer. The one thing that makes me hesitate is this problem of productivity to which my hon. colleague opposite referred. If I could really be convinced in a day and age such as now when the last figures I saw indicated that our labour unit production costs are going up and we are now somewhat beyond the United States of America in that area and losing our competitive edge with them, this would not be an appropriate time to bring in such a new holiday.

If the hon. member can study the concept of the law of diminishing returns, I would be interested to know what a study would be on this. I would think that we must have enough enterprising management people in this country who, over the last number of years, decided that they should give their employees more and more holidays in order to make them more and more productive. If that is not the case, maybe we should know what the figures are in that regard.

Finally, Mr. Speaker—and I probably have half a minute left—my friend from Glengarry, Prescott—Russell made a reference to the importance of this bill and the concepts of heritage. I want to remind him that when I first came in here about 15 years or so ago, it was a member from the Liberal Party who chose to help deny some of our heritage when they brought in a bill to do away with Dominion Day. I have never forgotten that. I was in the House. It was a Friday afternoon. I was very disappointed because that, to me, represents a great deal of our heritage—

• (1800)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has expired.

Pursuant to Standing Order 96(1), this item is dropped from the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE CANADA

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, recently I rose in the House to ask the President of the Treasury Board what steps will be taken to facilitate an early retirement and retraining package for front line correctional service employees.

These correctional service employees are responsible for the custody and control of offenders, who, in many cases, have become Canada's most hardened and dangerous citizens. My concern stems from the fact that these CSC staff work in an environment that is continually both stressful and perilous. It is urgent that the issue of early retirement and retraining be addressed.

In response to the question I asked the minister, he was good enough to indicate "soon". However, in fairness to these employees, they have been waiting for almost two decades.

I hope that the government will introduce this legislation now, or at least indicate that in the next session of Parliament and in the Speech from the Throne reforms will be made in addressing, once and for all, this long-awaited change.

In 1967, the Correctional Service of Canada was included under Part I of Schedule I of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. This acknowledges the Treasury Board as the employer with responsibility of all aspects of personnel administration.

Since 1971, the Union of the Solicitor General Employees, which represents the interests of the major portion of the CSC employees, has been attempting to secure some form of early retirement provisions for correctional employees.

The role of these employees is unique. As I mentioned before, the environment of corrections is dangerous and stressful, not only for the CSC staff but their families as well.

During the late seventies and early eighties, 11 staff members have been murdered in the line of duty. There have been numerous staff taken hostage as a means of negotiating various deals and countless physical assaults by violent inmates who have nothing to lose.

While there has not been a continuation of staff murder, this cannot be interpreted to mean that violence or the potential for violence is no longer present.

According to the report of the Solicitor General of Canada 1988–89, there were a total of 678 assaults on staff and 26 hostage takings for the period of 1984 to April 1989. The threat of violence is always present and requires staff to be constantly on their guard.

There were also 195 incidents involving the use of gas and 743 incidents involving the use of firearms during the same five year period. As well the murders, suicides and assaults which occur among the inmate population, though they do not physically harm the staff, produce severe psychological effects. No one can remain immune to the effects of seeing violent death.

Being constantly alert to possible violence and outthinking, the offender is wearing upon the correctional officer. Many employees spend a longer time in a penitentiary than the inmates they control.

In its report on penitentiaries in 1976, the parliamentary subcommittee said at section 258:

> The debilitating effects of penitentiary work is reflected in the low percentage of individuals who remain in the service until retirement. This may also reflect the lack of career opportunities and job diversification. Employees are concerned about the fact that once they are burnt-out, it is very difficult for them to start a second career in another field. The subcommittee is of the opinion that provision be made for them to find alternative employment if they are no longer able to function in the penitentiary environment but are not yet eligible for retirement. But early retirement itself is essential.

• (1805)

It is necessary to recognize the unique nature of corrections work. Changes should include two important areas. First, early retirement would permit those employees who have worked in direct contact with offenders for a significant part of their careers, 25 years or age 50, to retire and to receive an immediate earned pension at an earlier age and shorter service than is now possible.

The second necessary change concerns retraining provisions for employees who are unable to continue their work in the operational correction service. This proposal would assist employees in acquiring marketable skills which can be applied in a second career.

This change would allow for employees who are removed from their position and could not be placed in another position in the Public Service to be entitled to retraining for a period of up to two years.

The staff of the Correctional Service of Canada have had early retirement provisions foremost in their minds since 1971. They have seen their fellow Public Service employees who work as air traffic controllers successfully acquire the same provisions that they are seeking. All they ask is that their occupation be declared a unique one, therefore requiring unique retirement provisions.

Implementation of these proposals will require amendment to the regulations of the Public Service Superannuation Act. It is urgent that the question of an early retirement and retraining program be addressed for these employees and it is imperative that the suggested proposals be implemented.

Correctional Service employees play an integral role in the safeguarding of Canadian citizens. The federal riding of Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington which hosts institutions such as Joyceville and Millhaven, as well as Kingston institutions, have a high number of people with serious conviction. Thus I am hopeful that the government will facilitate this request for such a package and repay the CSC staff's vital role to society.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by acknowledging on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board the important contribution made by the member for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington on behalf of correctional service workers, not only in his own constituency but across Canada.

The government recognizes and appreciates the stressful work performed by operational employees of the Correctional Service of Canada. This stressful work carried out under very difficult and sometimes dangerous circumstances can result in serious burn-out as a result of the stress and burn-out factor. This results in the conclusion that it is essential to disregard the normal age of retirement for public servants.

This issue was studied by a parliamentary subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which recommended that special early retirement arrangements would be appropriate as one means of dealing with the job related stress engendered by corrections work.

The government agrees in principle that an early retirement program would be an important tool in the prudent management of its valuable human resources engaged in correction work.

Similar conditions of job related stress and burn-out led to the introduction in 1981 of early retirement provisions for air traffic controllers. The primary thrust of the amendments that were made to the Public Service Superannuation Act at that time was to permit air traffic controllers engaged in operational service to retire with full earned pensions at reduced age and service thresholds without incurring the reductions which normally are applied under the Superannuation Act.

An air traffic controller who has 25 years of operational service and is at least 50 years of age may retire voluntarily with his or her full earned pension, a 50 per cent pension based on 2 per cent per year service, and will not be subject to the normal retirement reductions which would be applied to other public servants retiring under similar circumstances.

In addition, with as little as 20 years of operational service, an air traffic controller who is at least 45 years of age may retire with an immediate annuity but in such case would suffer reduction in his or her earned pension of up to 25 per cent. This is a major difference in comparison to other public servants.

In further recognition of the stress factor, the rules are even less restrictive for voluntary retirements requiring only 20 years of operational service with no minimum age requirement. I should add that in return for all of these more generous retirement arrangements, controllers engaged in operational services are required to contribute an additional 2 per cent of salary to the pension plan.

I have gone into some detail regarding the early retirement benefits presently available to air traffic controllers because it has been proposed by the representatives of correctional employees that an identical program be made available to those correctional workers who are engaged in operational services. It may well be that early retirement arrangements for correctional employees will be similar, although there may be variations to reflect the particular characteristics of this group.

Finally, I should add on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board that in view of the government's overall legislative agenda the preferred approach to Public Service pension reform is to proceed with it as a package. I do wish to assure members of this House that the hon. President of the Treasury Board has indicated to me that work is proceeding well on pension reform. It is probable that the legislative proposals will be ready for introduction early in the new year. I assume that is good news to my colleague, the hon. member, and to those whom he represents.

Included in those proposals will be appropriate enabling provisions to put in place a program which will address the particular retirement concerns of correctional employees. I know that they will welcome that news.

FORESTRY

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, on November 2, I rose in this House to ask a very important question about the state of our forest agreements that have gone unsigned, particularly in British Columbia, my home province, and in the other three western provinces.

Last week, when Parliament was not sitting, we learned that the federal government had reneged on promises to guarantee adequate funding for a forest agreement. We also learned last week that this government was only going to be able to contribute some $100 million to a forest agreement, which is less than the agreement that expired on March 31 of this year. We have yet to hear what are the results of those forest agreements in the other provinces where they have expired.

I am angry. I do not want to understate it because I think it represents some of the attitudes and views of people in British Columbia who frankly are furious over this government's refusal to get on with the job of signing any of these forest agreements.

These agreements are the foundation of the federal effort in forestry, which gives us the vehicle to talk to the provinces and to work with our forests. One just has to take a look at some of the recommendations from an earlier forest committee report which we tabled that are now rendered useless because of this government's failure to renew and deal with these agreements. I am referring to the recommendation which I strongly support about the protection of 12 per cent of Canada's forest lands. How can we do that without support from the federal government?

That is now a rejection. We now have to reject that report, because we have to send a strong message to this government about how serious we are about the needs of our forests.

What can we do, with some of the recommendations about forest management on National Defence lands and those forest lands administered by and with the Indian people of this country? Without those forest agreements and those abilities to use those funds and resources, the ability of the federal government to participate and share is gone.

Those recommendations, as I said, will also have to be rejected because they will not be doing the job. I am emphasizing this because I have put my soul into talking about these forest agreements since being elected. I have reason to.

In my part of British Columbia, 40 per cent of the NSR land that has been left from harvesting has to be addressed by these agreements. If we had these agreements, they would make a contribution toward adding to our annual cut. They are not in the plans, projections and recommendations of the forest committee report.

I now feel that we have been let down by this government and by members on the opposite side, to the point that when we want to send a strong message to this government we now have to do that. We have to reject these recommendations.

• (1815)

They will not work, especially in the case that I have presented. We have relied on these forest agreements to see that we have Indian lands available to Indian people to harvest and to manage properly.

Forestry Canada has to work with some of the other departments like Parks Canada and others to efficiently manage our forests. We must reject those ideas now, because we cannot implement them in an adequate manner because of the lack of these agreements.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, just how important those have become. I said in the House earlier today that some 100,000 jobs in British Columbia are likely to be lost due to the lack of these forest agreements being signed. Forestry Canada cannot operate because of the lack of these agreements to properly deal with any international forestry concerns and other areas.

I say with great respect to you, Mr. Speaker, that in discussing this with my constituents, with others, that we have to send a strong and determined message to the government and to this House about how we feel, about how useless those recommendations have become in light of the lack of any forest agreements. I want to send a strong message that we must withdraw our support of those recommendations in that report because we cannot implement them.

We cannot do proper forestry work with those recommendations without any forest agreement signed. I hope the government hears that message clearly, about how important I feel and believe those agreements are, and how strongly I feel the need to withdraw my support for that forest committee report.

We cannot get the job done if this is the way we are going to continue. I say to the government, get on with it. Let us sign those forest agreements.

I hope the government is listening and that we will not have to come back to any more of these late shows in the future and hear more and more words with no action.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the hon. member's comments with a great deal of amazement, and now he is leaving us, which goes to show how important this is to him.

I was in Kamloops last weekend, where I met members of the British Columbia association of wood producers. People told me, at least those I spoke to, that the Minister of Forestry, Mr. Oberle, was doing an excellent job at the forestry level.

These people know what amounts are on the table, but they also realize that forests, contrary to what the hon. member for the New Democratic Party says—they know that forests, being a natural resource, are a provincial responsibility. They also know, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government does not intend to act unilaterally, which might further harm relations between the federal government and the provinces.

We recognize the jurisdictions of each administrative body, but what we want to do through these agreements is, first and foremost, to give the forestry community in British Columbia, the western provinces, Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes a chance to benefit under a forest resources development program that is adapted to their needs and also, Mr. Speaker, in line with sustainable development as proposed and maintained since 1984 by our various Forestry ministers.

I also may remind the hon. member, since he seems to be saying that the federal government and its minister have done nothing, that from 1984 to 1990, we increased the forestry budget by over 300 per cent. In 1988, Mr. Speaker, we again started to sign agreements with various provinces. I am thinking, for instance, of the agreements with New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. We made proposals to all Canadian provinces. There is a concrete proposal on the table for each province, and it was put there by Forestry Canada.

Contrary to what my colleague from the New Democratic Party is claiming, I believe the Minister of Forestry Canada has done an exceptional job by above all respecting the jurisdictions of each province. Furthermore, as the minister in charge of the Department of Forestry, he is trying to find ways to give our resource a durable future, and with the means at his disposal, to give our forest producers, our businesses and in fact all Canadians, the means to develop viable forestry operations in Quebec and Canada.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address myself this evening to the cost of operations in the Persian Gulf by the Canadian forces.

At the outset, I would like to remark on what I see as a great opportunity and a challenge in the building of a new world order in this operation, made possible by the remarkable and unique unanimity of the United Nations and, indeed, by the unanimity of the Security Council. It is safe to say that is made possible by the demise of the cold war seen at the beginning of this week.

What we are seeing is a bunch of like-minded countries making peace by quarantining the source of the infection and, in this case, by imposing an embargo against one country that invaded, pillaged, and claimed ownership of another country. In our world today, that is considered unacceptable.

Before I get into the cost issue, I would like to recognize the tremendous contributions made by the Canadian forces. It is not a token effort. It is a very strong effort. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, there are almost a half a million troops in the Middle East. There are over 100 ships and a countless number of different types of aircraft: fighter aircraft, ground attack aircraft, carrier aircraft, land based aircraft, you name it.

Canada has sent three ships, a handful of airplanes, and 1,700 young men and women. To this date, we are responsible for 25 per cent of the interceptions of surface ships going through the Persian Gulf. That is the crux of the embargo—25 per cent. We are dealing with well over 500 interceptions at this point in time, but I do not know the exact number. So, I want to presage any comments that I have on cost, which is a concern of mine, with the overview of my feeling on what is happening there with respect to the Canadian forces.

I bring up the subject of cost because I think it is having somewhat of a negative effect. We committed the Canadian Forces three months ago. Now, three months later, we are having a great discussion on how we are going to pay for this operation. This all stemmed, of course, from a question I asked the Minister of National Defence on October 22, and I just want to relate some of the chronology.

I asked the minister how he was going to pay for this operation and he suggested to me that, at that point in time, it was going to come out of DND's hide. They would pay for it themselves. I was somewhat distraught to hear that because, as I will say later, I am aware that after severe cuts Canadian Forces is on the verge of rust-out. They do not have much fat left in the system. In fact, they have no fat.

On November 11, three weeks later, I was delighted, and I am sure the Canadian forces planners were delighted, to hear the Prime Minister say that he was going to damn the torpedoes and go full speed ahead, because money was no problem. He said the deficit had nothing to do with freedom.

The relief of senior DND planners must have been great when he said that there was going to be substantial additional funding. My heart rose. I felt happy. Alas, three days later, somebody must have got to the Prime Minister, and said: "Prime Minister, you cannot go around saying that. Money doesn't grow on trees". Then the Prime Minister drew back, and he said: "No, no. We are now going to pay for it from existing expenditures and that the hat would be passed around to other government departments and they would finance the defence of freedom".

My point here is that when the government commits Canadian forces to an operation such as this one in the Gulf, there goes with it other corresponding commitments. For example, how many, how long, how much, what sort of command and control, what is the bottom line for withdrawal, follow on long-term commitments, and so on.

I am not convinced, with the perturbations and the confusions we have had with funding, that it augurs well for the future with respect to some of these questions.

Will the embargoes work? Well, we do not know. It could take up to a year from now to find out if it is going to work.

There is no question about it, it is going to be costly for all the countries involved. But if we do not achieve it peacefully, it is going to be even more costly. We are looking at both sides, 300,000 casualties and anywhere from $50 billion to $150 billion. That is horrendous. I am concerned about the cost and the follow-up in this particular presentation.

• (1825)

With the state of affairs now, no matter what happens or how it happens, it has to end with Saddam Hussein getting out of Kuwait. What happens when he gets out? Do we fold our tents and go home? I think not. We have got to think through this thing, very systematically and very logically.

These are parts of the questions that I have and, specifically, I have a number of concerns. First, when the parliamentary secretary addresses my presentation on behalf of the Minister of National Defence, I want assurances that the Canadian forces gulf operation will not suffer from this fuzzy funding formula.

I am relatively assured that that will not happen, but, moreover, I want further assurance that the remainder of the Canadian forces, already on the verge of rust-out, will not be stretched beyond reasonable limits in the maintenance of combat readiness. That is more important now than it has been any time in 37 years, in my opinion. In particular, I would like to hear guarantees that the Canadian forces capital acquisition budget will not be tapped to help finance this operation, because there is a tomorrow and we have to be ready then, too.

More than anything else—and this is the underlying theme of my presentation this evening—this side of the House does not want to learn that the government is unwittingly laying more responsibility on the Canadian forces but giving them fewer resources over all to do the job. That would be a prescription for disaster. The Canadian forces will always have a can-do attitude, but I hope that they do not have to have that kind of can-do attitude until they just cannot do.

Finally, in the face of this discussion matter and, indeed, in view of the awesome defence cuts in conventional arms on both sides earlier this week, it is not unreasonable for Canadians now to expect to have some public input into what surely must be at least some defence policy strawman in preparation for a badly needed defence white paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to thank and congratulate my colleague from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception for the good words he had to say about the great job our Armed Forces are doing in the Gulf. I am just back from the Gulf. I was there last week and I had the opportunity to meet the Army, Navy and Air Force people who were sent there.

About the figures he quoted, he said that 25 per cent of intercepts were made by Canadians. I had 23 per cent, but we could always arrive to a compromise. What is more interesting to know, though, is that that much is done with less than 3 per cent of all the equipment presently deployed in the Gulf area. With only 3 per cent of the equipment, the Canadian Forces make 23 to 25 per cent of all intercepts. They are really doing a great job.

[English]

To come back to the question of my hon. colleague, I would like to reiterate the response given him when he asked this question in the House on October 22. At that time he was given an assurance that the men and women serving on behalf of Canada in the Persian Gulf are being provided with the resources they require to fulfil their mission. This situation has not changed.

I am sure all members will appreciate that the Persian Gulf crisis was not anticipated and, therefore, we had not made provision for such an operation in our defence budget for the current year. Therefore, the costs of the operation were being covered from the existing budget.

The Prime Minister has announced that Supplementary Estimates will be tabled in the House shortly by the President of the Treasury Board in light of our commitment to support our contingent in the Persian Gulf and as a result of additional unanticipated expenses related to the army being called out in aid of the civil power in Oka. Cost information for the Persian Gulf and Oka will be provided once the estimates have been made public.

There has been a considerable amount of speculation in the media on the cost of the Canadian forces participation both in aid of the civil power at Oka and in the Persian Gulf operation. Until such time as the Supplementary Estimates are tabled, it would be inappropriate to comment further on this issue. I am sure that the hon. member would not wish to fuel further speculation.

The forces in the Persian Gulf have had priority in terms of funding from different allocations. That means that, as far as current defence spending programs go, some effects were felt, even before additional funding was sought.

For example, in the operations and maintenance portion of the defence budget, activities not directly related to the gulf operation have been given a lower priority. Certain exercises have been cancelled. Allotted flying hours and ship days have been transferred from other activities to the Canadian forces in the gulf and some new defence contracts may have been delayed.

However, I would like to assure the House that no existing capital equipment contracts have been cancelled or changed as a result of the gulf operation.

THE BEAUCE

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, it seems that more and more Canadians are concerned about their future. I want to say to them that our best assurance of a prosperous future is to have confidence in ourselves and in our ability to build a better world. Optimism is the best policy, Mr. Speaker. Conversely, fear and dread attract disaster. In the Beauce region, there are many examples that bear out that all problems can be overcome with hope and self-confidence.

Although the Beauce region is far removed from our large urban centres and major highways, from airports and sea ports, its residents have astounded more than one pessimist by making the Beauce one of the most dynamic regions in this country, all because we believe in our potential and our ability to do better.

Mr. Speaker, I wish Canadians would ignore these prophets of gloom and doom. With a positive outlook on the future we can create a healthy, dynamic environment.

GOVERNMENT OF ONTARIO

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, yesterday Ontarians listened with anticipation to the throne speech by the newly elected New Democratic Party government in Ontario. They waited to hear if Premier Rae would keep all those election promises that he made. The public has not forgotten those NDP negative campaign ads filled with false information, which ended with a big x on the TV screen.

Now, Premier Rae, it is time to move to the next letter of the alphabet, the letter i. Why didn't you deal with your campaign promise to fund 60 per cent of elementary education costs? Why didn't you deal with your promise about the 10.5 per cent mortgage financing you were offering for home purchases? Why didn't you follow up on your promise to protect Ontario's agricultural land base from indiscriminate development? Why didn't you follow up on your rhetoric on waste management and the plan to put a garbage dump in the Rouge Valley?

Now, the last letter of the alphabet, z. That is the mark I give to the NDP in Ontario for a vacuous and disappointing throne speech.

BILL C-45

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, for four and a half years this Conservative government and the Ministry of Labour have demonstrated their contempt for the health and safety of our parliamentary employees and contempt for Parliament itself.

In June 1986 Parliament passed Bill C-45, the Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations Act, which applied the key provisions of the Canada Labour Code to Parliament Hill workers. Part I of the act was proclaimed that same year, but Part II, Labour Standards, and Part III, Occupational Health and Safety, have never been proclaimed.

Because of the government's failure to act on this expressed wish of Parliament, our workers on the Hill, unlike all other private and public sector workers in the federal domain, do not have the right to refuse work which may be dangerous to their health; do not have the right to require a government inspector to investigate the many health and safety problems in our work place; and do not have the right to have work place health and safety committees monitor their working environment.

This morning a number of these employees and their unions demonstrated before the Peace Tower to express their grievances regarding widespread asbestos contamination and air quality hazards.

I plead with the government to provide for due process, to end the double standard and end its contempt for Parliament and its employees. Proclaim Parts II and III now.

BILL C-210

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-210, a private member's bill to shorten the extradition process, is coming up for its second hour of debate on December 6. It will die on the Order Paper, unless it is referred to a committee and brought back before the House rises at Christmas.

Members of the NDP are blocking this bill because they are concerned more with the welfare of criminals than with the rights of Canadians. The NDP wants the taxpayers of Canada to continue to pay millions of dollars to help people like Charles Ng, people who abuse our criminal justice system. The NDP is inviting criminals to take refuge in Canada. This must stop.

We can pass this bill. The minister and the Department of Justice want this bill made into law. I condemn members of the NDP for stalling and call upon them to help pass this legislation.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the NDP member for Chambly appeared before the Belanger-Campeau commission, but we still do not know the NDP position on Quebec.

The member for Chambly says different things at different times. At one time he said that Quebec was a viable nation state; another time that he was a sovereignist. Another time he said that sovereignty association was a strict minimum.

What is the NDP policy with respect to Quebec? Is it the policy of Louise O'Niell, its candidate in the Sainte Marie by-election who also declared herself a sovereignist? Or, is it the policy of the present leader from the Yukon who opposed at the same time the Meech Accord, her former leader from Oshawa and the present premier of Ontario, all of whom supported it?

It seems that the NDP has three policies on Quebec: one for the west, one for Ontario, and one for Quebec. When will the NDP tell us the truth? What is its real policy on Quebec?

GOVERNOR GENERAL

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, the Governor General has received a lot of unjustified criticism for not being in Ottawa for Remembrance Day.

I had the privilege of being with him in Japan where he officiated at three ceremonies on that day.

The first honoured those men of the Winnipeg Grenadiers and the Royal Rifles of Montreal who died in Japan after being captured at Hong Kong.

The second honoured those Canadian servicemen who gave their lives in the Korean conflict.

The third ceremony honoured all the Commonwealth veterans who gave their lives in the Pacific theatre. This was attended by Prince Charles and Princess Diana and many other heads of state. Canada was responsible for this ceremony. Two Canadian Victoria Cross winners accompanied the Governor General.

Rather than insulting Canadian veterans, I believe he truly honoured them.

HOUSING

Mr. Mike Breaugh (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Co-op Housing Federation of Canada has issued its assessment of this government's performance on co-op housing. It seems the government knows how to talk about co-op housing but is having some difficulty in delivering.

In its mid-term report card the Co-op Housing Federation noted that no new units were sponsored in Saskatchewan in 1989, only 43 were sponsored in Nova Scotia and that amount will drop to 6 this year.

So far not a single new co-op housing project has been developed on federally owned land, even though the Prime Minister himself made that a priority in the last election campaign.

In the meantime, other Toronto area sites, including parts of Malvern and Vaughan, have been sold off to private developers at market prices. Land on two federally owned sites in Vancouver has been promised but not yet delivered.

It seems that this government is doing all right in terms of verbal skills. It is having trouble in the sandbox. It cannot seem to get anything built.

GOVERNMENT OF ONTARIO

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, more on NDP hypocrisy. Back-flip Bob Rae scored a perfect 10 yesterday by performing a number of flawless flip-flop moves during Ontario's throne speech.

Believable Bob made myriad campaign promises to Ontario residents during the election campaign, promises such as 10,000 non-profit day care spaces along with subsidies for 10,000 families. He promised to expand community based health care and improve conditions for health care workers. He also campaigned on promises to increase the province's share of education.

What did Ontario get after voting for Reversal Rae and his promises? Nothing, except a lesson on the techniques of avoidance and flip flopping on important issues.

Whatever happened to the NDP promise of a tax for non-recyclable packaging? Where is the fund for low interest loans to home buyers, farmers, and small businesses, or the promise of strict rent controls?

For that matter, whatever happened to the self-proclaimed saviour of the little guy? The NDP abandoned all principles in its rush for power.

NATIONAL DAY OF ACTION AGAINST RACISM

Mr. Jacques Vien (Laurentides): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to an initiative taken by college and university students.

S. O. 31

The Canadian Federation of Students has designated November 21 as a National Day of Action against Racism. This initiative reflects a firm resolve to counter the devastating effects of racism at all levels.

The students' action will continue beyond November 21, as students are encouraged to make the fight against racism a cause to support and defend, both within and outside the academic community.

I may also point out that this initiative is an admirable adjunct to the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination held on March 21 this year.

I therefore ask all members to support the students and show that they stand behind this initiative to eliminate the problem of racism in our society.

ITALIAN CANADIANS

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the recent apology for the internment of hundreds of Italian Canadians during World War II was long overdue.

During the war, many Canadians of Italian origin fought and died for Canada. Ironically, some Italian Canadians were fighting for Canada even when their loved ones were interned as enemy aliens.

To add insult to injury, no internee was ever proven to have done anything to undermine this country. They were Canadians. They came to Canada because they knew this country offered freedom and hope.

The Liberal Party welcomes the recent apology to Canadians of Italian origin because it is a step toward easing the pain our fellow countrymen felt.

The Canada of today truly regrets having inflicted so much pain and suffering on innocent Canadians. As a country, we must learn from our mistakes and ensure that this will never, ever happen again.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval West): Mr. Speaker, on the weekend it was reported that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation had announced a budget cut of $900,000 in the news department of the French network. The English network's budget remains intact. Why are Francophones once again being deprived in this respect? Hon.

members will recall that some time ago, the CRTC postponed until February its decision on a 24-hour news channel in French, while the English news channel is broadcasting, even in Quebec.

Why are Francophones obliged to pay cable tv companies for a service they cannot receive in their own language? Are there two classes of Canadians? Does the minister intend to clean up the mess at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the CRTC?

NATIONAL DRUG AWARENESS WEEK

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, drug prevention agencies have designated the week of November 18 to November 24 as National Drug Awareness Week. Its purpose is to focus attention on the need to deal with the devastating problem of addiction to dangerous substances. Drug Awareness Week and the themes it uses generally focus on alcohol as the drug most often abused in this country.

Using the theme "Keep the circle strong", and with the co-operation of Amerindian and Inuit leaders and band chiefs from across Canada, about 750 native communities and groups will take part in various activities co-ordinated this year by the Nechi Institute of Alcohol and Drug Education in Edmonton.

Canada's anti-drug strategy is based on the premise that all Canadians have a role to play in the struggle to reduce and prevent the disastrous impact of alcohol and other drugs.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare wishes to congratulate native and non-native communities on their enthusiastic support for this event.

MARITAL VIOLENCE

Mrs. Pierrette Venne (Saint-Hubert): Recently, Mr. Speaker, Quebec's Fédération des ressources d'hébergement, supported by the Chambre des notaires du Québec, launched a $240,000 publicity campaign to make the people of Quebec aware of the marital violence problem. The theme of the campaign is "Violence breeds violence, let's act now!", and the whole exercise is aimed at today's children who might turn out to be tomorrow's aggressors.

Mr. Speaker, this publicity campaign is designed to encourage friends and neighbours to intervene in cases of marital violence so that the woman will no longer suffer alone, and it would have been an uncertain undertaking had Quebec notaries not pledged their financial support.

As a member of that profession I want to commend the Chambre des notaires and the Fédération for this joint initiative. I hope that other interest groups will take similar action to help eradicate this scourge from our society.

NORTH AMERICAN DAY OF ACTION AGAINST RACISM

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, sadly, today is the North American Day of Action against Racism, which is sponsored by the Canadian Federation of Students and Young New Democrats in collaboration with some United States student organizations.

I say this is sad because this day should not be necessary. But it is because racism continues.

At the University of Western Ontario, Philippe Rushton teaches his students that human beings are unequal; skinheads and Nazis have held rallies in Ontario and Quebec; a black student was beaten by white students at a Nova Scotia community college.

New right policies have not helped. They have stoked the fires of insecurity from which racism flares. When people are set at each other's throats by dog-eat-dog economics, the blame is too often directed not at the truly culpable who seem oblivious to their cries, but at convenient scapegoats who are equally their victims.

Take action today against the new right policies that, by dividing Canadians, exacerbate intolerance. Defeat the present government when the non-confidence vote is held this afternoon. Put Canada back on the path to social democracy.

GREAT WHALE PROJECT

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and concerns the Great Whale project.

Yesterday the minister told the House that work on the infrastructures will not begin before a complete environmental assessment of the whole project has been made. On his way out of the House, however, he flipped and flopped and made an about-turn when he stated that the road could be built before the completion of environmental studies on the entire project. So my question is: Who is telling the truth? The Minister of the Environment inside the House or the Minister of the Environment outside the House. Who is telling the truth? The Minister of the Environment last week or the Minister of the Environment today? Who, Mr. Speaker, is telling the truth? The Minister of the Environment this morning or the Minister of the Environment this afternoon?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I should like to respond to my colleague by quoting from yesterday's Hansard, for that might refresh his memory concerning what I said. This is what I said yesterday, as recorded in Hansard on page 15467:

> Mr. Speaker, I would have liked the hon. member opposite to read a few more paragraphs from the letter, because at the beginning of this letter, Mr. Robinson explained very clearly, and I quote:
> "The federal environmental assessment and review process, a federal resource for environmental assessment and review, applies to the Great Whale complex since it is expected to have an impact in areas that fall under federal jurisdiction such as fish, marine mammals, migratory birds and the ecology of Hudson Bay."
> Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear from the letter that the federal government maintains all its prerogatives in terms of environmental assessment, and this is repeated throughout the document the hon. member just quoted.

Mr. Speaker, we intend to have a full environmental assessment process on the infrastructures and the project.

[English]

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, I must say after listening to that, I am beginning to have a lot of sympathy and I certainly understand the problems Grant Devine has with this minister.

• (1420)

[Translation]

My question is for the Minister of Justice. On October 3, 1989 the member for Lac-Saint-Jean, on November 23 the same year the Chairman of the Review Office, and on October 29, 1990 the Acting Minister of the Environment all confirmed federal jurisdiction over the Great Whale infrastructures. Only when this minister came on the scene did the federal government begin to backtrack.

Will the Minister of Justice impart some resolve to her colleague? Will she confirm that the James Bay Agreement does not reduce the federal jurisdiction over roads and airports? Will she finally explain the mysteries of life to him?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think that the member opposite may rely too heavily on the media as a source of information. It is interesting that one of the largest media in English Canada ran this morning the headline: "Quebec permitted to start Hydro Project", with about three columns of text under it, while Mr. Francoeur's article, in Le Devoir was titled: "Ottawa conceeds nothing to Quebec on Grande-Baleine." He even quoted the Quebec Minister of the Environment. Here is what he said:

> In Quebec, the Minister of the Environment did not look like a minister who just got the go-ahead from Ottawa. Brushing aside the hasty conclusions of the reporters, the minister pointed out that the president of the FEARO did not give Quebec a free hand in his letter. Instead, he reaffirmed Ottawa's jurisdiction in this matter.

Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what we did. We reaffirmed our jurisdiction in this matter.

[English]

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, this is beyond belief. I was outside. I heard what the minister said in the lobby. I know and the Cree know what the minister's representative said at the meetings and I heard a direct contradiction of what the minister has just said.

Let us be very clear. This government does not lack jurisdiction. It lacks competence and it lacks courage. This government does not understand that the Rafferty precedent establishes very clearly that $600 million cannot be spent on roads and airports without compromising the environmental process. Does the government understand that a road cannot be built without asking what it is for?

My question is very clear. Will this minister simply give us a yes or a no? Will the minister ensure that no work will begin on any aspect, roads or airports, without a full evaluation process being completed?

One more thing, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister undertake that whatever his answer is in this House, it will stand at least until the scrum outside is completed?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the position of this government is that any major project of this nature over which the federal government has jurisdiction—and that is certainly the case here—will have to undergo an environmental process under the EARP legislation or under a process that is agreed upon to be equivalent to the EARP guidelines. That is the case we have before us. I have said in this House, time and time again, that there will be a full environmental assessment done and no decisions made before then.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, in September the minister said: "We don't have two projects here. We have one and it should be looked at in its entirety". In October he changed his mind and said he did not object if Hydro Quebec went ahead with $600 million worth of work on roads and airports before the full environmental review was done.

Which is it, Mr. Minister? Is it one project, or is it two? Are we going to have a full environmental review before any work starts or are we going down the same rocky road where two years from now two or three ministers will have put us in a situation where a dam is done before a review is done?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, let me make the point once again very clearly so that maybe people opposite will fully understand.

We want this project to be assessed from an environmental point of view.

We want it to be assessed fully. We want participation from the provincial government. We would certainly like participation from native people who, as the hon. member opposite well knows, have a very great interest in this matter.

We are trying to work this evaluation process through the James Bay and northern Quebec convention that was signed in 1975 by the then Liberal government. Under that convention, there will be one joint panel appointed by the province and by the federal government to review all aspects.

They will have two mandates; one to review the infrastructure and one to review the project. After that we will see what decisions the federal government will take and what the decisions the Quebec government will take.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the minister said yesterday in the House that the government believes there has to be a full environmental assessment before work is done. This is not what he has said in other forums, where he is prepared to let $600 million worth of work go ahead. He has also said he does not object to those works going ahead.

If the minister is so unclear about what his responsibilities are, despite three court decisions telling him, will he join the Crees in court to find out what his responsibilities are? Will he take this matter to court so we can have a full environmental review?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I wish that the member opposite had listened to my answer before reading her prepared second question.

I said very clearly that no work will be undertaken on the project before an environmental assessment is done. That is very clear. The roads, infrastructure and airport will be evaluated. The project will be evaluated. Then you get to the stage where licenses are issued. I have maintained that throughout.

It is totally false to say that I ever suggested in any forum anywhere that work could begin before an environmental assessment was undertaken and completed.

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, two years ago today Canadians re-elected this Conservative government.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Langdon: In its first full throne speech, we were promised, and I quote: "Continuation of the nation's prosperity". Two years later bankruptcies are up a massive 61 per cent, manufacturing output is falling. The Mexican ambassador is talking about jobs shifting to his country from Canada.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister admit that rather than giving Canadians prosperity, his deliberate high interest rate, high dollar, free trade, GST policies have engineered a recession, an economic decline right across this country?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance has reiterated many times in this House that in his budgets of 1989 and 1990 the economy would be experiencing a slowdown. We are experiencing that slowdown at the present time.

The hon. member talks about the number of bankruptcies using percentages and yet he does not relate it to the number of businesses that we have in this country, approximately 1.7 million. He does not relate it to the 350,000 new businesses that were created in 1989. He does not talk about that.

When the hon. member talks about bankruptcies, he does not talk about the personal bankruptcies. Those personal bankruptcies are about 80 per cent of the bankruptcies, exactly what the Minister of Finance has been talking about. The demand for credit was far too high. People were over-extending themselves and that caused an increase in inflation. That is what he said then. That is what is causing these bankruptcies.

• (1430)

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe this minister when he stands up in this House and somehow tries to blame people who have gone bankrupt, the victims, instead of the people who sit beside him on the benches.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, 43,000 bankruptcies is the highest ever in this country. It is the highest whether one takes it absolutely or as a percentage of companies operating. Yet, the minister stands up and tries to excuse it.

Why is the government doing nothing to deal with these bankruptcies? Why is it doing nothing to deal with this recession? Surely the government sees that we are into a serious deep and desperate situation for many people.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, neither I nor the government take any solace in people going bankrupt, but there are many reasons for people going bankrupt. A lot of it has been credit over-extension. There is no question about that.

The hon. member should remember something. The incidence of bankruptcy is 50 per cent less today than it was in 1982. He fails to mention that there are thousands and thousands more businesses operating today than there were back in 1982. He is comparing apples and oranges and it does not make sense.

What is the government doing to help with these businesses and so on? It is bringing in a fair tax system—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McDermid: —which will place our businesses on a fairly competitive basis with our competitors from offshore. That is what the government is doing.

You should be encouraging your friends up in the Senate, if you have any, to pass the GST as soon as possible.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in fact, the data shows that there has been an increase in bankruptcies of over 26 per cent compared to 1984. That is significantly greater than any increase in the number of companies that has occurred since then, according to figures which we had.

[Translation]

I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, the Ontario NDP government announced that a fund had been created to protect the salaries of the workers when businesses go bankrupt. Will this government plan something similar for the country as a whole?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, my officials are having discussions with the provinces and we are presently considering the various options we could put forward to meet this expressed need.

I applaude to and take interest in the announcement the Ontario government made yesterday. It is of course only one of the measures announced as part of the Throne Speech, but we will have the chance, in the next few weeks, to discuss with the Ontario government how he intends to do this. I can assure you that my department should have something for Canadians in the near future to deal with this situation.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment, or should I say this Monty Hall of the environment, who insists on playing Let's Make a Deal with the environment?

With James Bay II, the federal government has chosen to pit the right of the U.S. to import cheap power over the aboriginal and treaty rights of the Cree and Inuit of James Bay. In light of what has happened with Rafferty–Alameda and Oldman River, I would like to ask the minister about the government's legal obligation under the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement.

Will he commit to recognizing the government's legal responsibility with regard to the effect the project will have on aboriginal and treaty rights under the 1975 James Bay Agreement and ensure that the Cree and Inuit will trust him on his word?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in terms of the environmental assessment of James Bay, the government can work under the James Bay convention in northern Quebec and establish a joint panel to make sure that a proper and full environmental assessment is made of all the aspects of the project.

What we mentioned in Mr. Robinson's letter, which was published earlier this week, followed advice given by the Department of Justice back in April, saying that under the terms and conditions of the convention per se the federal government could not participate under Chapters 22 and 23. However, the letter stated very clearly that the full federal process can be applied. At the moment, we are trying to finalize negotiations whereby, rather than having a provincial evaluation on one side and a federal evaluation on the other side, we could have a joint panel that would also include the native people of the region, the Inuit and the Cree. We very much would like to see that happen.

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, James Bay II, as everyone knows, is a massive hydro–electric project which will cause irreversible environmental and social damage. It may be constructed without a full public forum because of the sheer negligence of this minister.

If the minister has the confidence to state that there is the possibility of having one, will he state here and now that in fact there will be a full environmental assessment review and engender some kind of trust with the aboriginal people of that area, the Cree and Inuit? Here and now, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. I have said that time and time again. There will be an environmental—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: They can't take yes for an answer.

Mr. de Cotret: There will be an environmental assessment of the project, the roads, and the airport. It will be a public process.

It is a process that we would prefer to carry out jointly with the other interested parties. That is still under negotiation. But I can assure the hon. member that we have the power to have that kind of assessment and we will have an open and public review of the project and the infrastructure.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Bankruptcies in Canada have increased by 60 per cent this October over last October. Unemployment in Canada has increased for the fourth consecutive month in a row. The Conference Board of Canada reports that a 30-year record of 79 per cent of business expects conditions to worsen in the next six months.

Despite all this documented evidence of a deepening recession and the possibility of a depression in the country, does the government plan to continue with its high interest rate policy and continue with the introduction of the goods and services tax? Does the government still forecast, brazenly and arrogantly, economic recovery this spring?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I will draw to the hon. member's attention that interest rates have dropped some 1.75 points in the last number of months. They have shown a downward trend since May and are continuing to go down. As inflationary pressures fall, those interest rates will continue to fall. So, I think the record on that is very good.

If we compare the interest rates today with the interest rates back in 1981 and 1982, when people were paying 23 per cent and 24 per cent interest rate instead of the 13 per cent and 14 per cent today, the comparison of the definition of high interest rates between a Liberal and a Conservative leaves something to be desired, I can tell you.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the minister, who obviously has not a clue what he is doing standing in for the Minister of Finance, that there is still a five-point spread in interest rates between Canada and the United States. Interest rates in this country are still too high.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Tobin: The government, in its vain and egotistical attempt to defend its failed policy, is playing Russian roulette with the jobs of Canadians. There have been 7,600 more laid off at GM, 6,000 in the forest industry, and fishermen and farmers devastated all across this land.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, on behalf of thousands of Canadians who have lost their jobs, will the government abandon its high interest rate policy? Will it abandon the goods and services tax that we can no longer afford? Give up this Thatcher-like stubbornness and face reality.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think we should put things into perspective. When the government came into office, in his own home province of Newfoundland, for example, the unemployment rate was 23.5 per cent. Today it is down around 16 per cent. It is still too high, but it is certainly going in the right direction.

• (1440)

Nationally, the unemployment rate was 11.7 per cent or 11.8 per cent. Today it is 8.8 per cent. It is still too high. That is right.

What is necessary is to ensure that we make the proper structural changes and adjustments. The GST is an important tax measure that will improve the competitiveness of Canadian industry. It should be passed. It should be brought into law.

If the hon. member wants to provide some confidence to the Canadian economy, he would prevail upon his Liberal friends in the Senate and urge them to co-operate and pass this piece of legislation, because all Canadians need it.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

PERSIAN GULF

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Last night, we were regaled with film of the minister, Rambo-like, swinging onto the deck of HMCS Terra Nova, proclaiming his support for the Canadian participation in Operation Imminent Thunder.

Did the minister personally authorize Canadian participation in Operation Imminent Thunder? How does he square that with the UN resolutions and with his personal commitment to the House to consult the House before a Canadian role in the Persian Gulf was extended?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that my colleague, who also had the opportunity to visit Canadian forces, did not have the advantage to use some of the equipment that was available and visit all the troops who were there.

The hon. member is obviously saying that he does not understand what exercises are for. There is an important necessity that the hon. member is not recognizing. Forces around the world—Canadian forces, also—have to practise and exercise in order to do their job.

One really only has one opportunity. If one is not capable of fulfilling one's responsibility by exercising and being capable, then one is not able to protect the ships. If the ships are not able to exercise and fulfil their responsibility, they are not able to protect the hospital ships which happen to be there.

Canadian forces exercise daily. The squadrons exercise and the vessels exercise. I believe it is important so that the men and women who serve are able to do the job that they are assigned by the Government of Canada.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, the minister and the government clearly failed to grasp the vital necessity of keeping Canadian involvement within the limits of the UN mandate, but Let me turn to another point, Mr. Speaker, in my supplementary question.

In January, External Affairs asked CSIS to investigate whether or not Canadians or Canadian companies had assisted Iraq in developing long-range missiles, which today are aimed at our contingent in the gulf.

In view of the public interest in this issue, will the government make this complete CSIS report public? Can the government assure the House that no Canadian government agency in any way, direct or indirect, has assisted Canadians or Canadian companies in the development of Iraqi missiles?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the specific question about CSIS, my hon. colleague knows that it is government policy neither to deny or to admit any allegations with respect to CSIS's specific operations.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance but, in his absence, to the Acting Prime Minister.

Yesterday, the Quebec Minister of Finance stated that he had asked his federal counterpart to exempt books from the GST. Does the minister intend to listen and act accordingly, or will he once again turn a deaf ear?

[English]

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance made it very clear that the GST would be implemented as is. I believe the Senate votes on its last amendment tomorrow and, hopefully, it will come to its senses and take the final vote on the goods and services tax and get on with it.

The Minister of Finance made a commitment that he would review certain aspects of the goods and services tax once it is implemented and operating, but to make exceptions now would be very foolish. It must be implemented and we must get on with the timetable. I would encourage the hon. member to talk to her friends in the Senate to encourage them to take the final vote on the goods and services tax.

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister well knows that this is not going to be passed in a hurry.

[Translation]

My supplementary is directed to the same minister. Since Quebec would have to follow Ottawa's lead in this matter, books would be taxed twice. If the minister is reluctant to accept the logic of this proposal and decides to apply the tax across the board, could he give us a guarantee in this House today that he will grant tax credits to prevent the disastrous impact his policy would otherwise have on Quebec's written culture?

[English]

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I want to caution

the hon. member in making those kinds of statements because they are entirely inaccurate. First of all, books for education, libraries, and so on, are not taxable. She makes it sound as if books are being taxed out of existence; that is just not true.

The Minister of Finance has made a specific commitment regarding books and the minister will keep that commitment, but he is not going to change the GST at this time. It is to be passed and implemented on January 1. Again, I encourage the hon. member to speak to her friends up in the Senate, to bring them to their senses, to pass this bill as quickly as possible, so that businesses throughout Canada which have adjusted to the tax will not be losing hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars by the delay.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. The minister is well aware, of course, that the low-level air defence capability for the Armed Forces is in some jeopardy with regard to the absence of a firing range near the base at Chatham. I want to ask the minister if he will assure the people of New Brunswick today that the firing range will remain in New Brunswick.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have had communications with the premier of the province of New Brunswick, expressing to him the concern we have had over the apparent reluctance of the citizens in the area which he is referring to, around Chatham, in accepting the range. He knows full well, Mr. Speaker, that at this time there is an environmental assessment being done.

He also knows full well that the discussions we have had with the province of New Brunswick called for more than just a firing range. The province of New Brunswick is asking for some $25 million-plus to be provided, and to acquire a firing range and to retain low-level air defence. He also knows that the Department of National Defence has had a reduction in its budget. We are trying to make every effort we can to make sure we use those dollars efficiently. I cannot give the member the assurance he asks for.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I could take 15 minutes, which you would now allow me, to answer some of the allegations the minister has made. In any case, I want to ask him if he is aware that the economy of New Brunswick is very much wrapped up in this situation. Will the minister give us a commitment now that the firing range at Gagetown, which is being used by Americans, could be considered as a firing range for the low-level air defence operation at Chatham?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member that the contribution made by the Department of National Defence to the province of New Brunswick is indeed substantial.

I draw to his attention the construction of six Canadian patrol frigates that are taking place in that province today. I draw to his attention additional construction that will take place with the Canadian patrol frigates in his province, plus billions of dollars involved in these contracts. I can also assure the hon. member that the area that he is referring to is not of a sufficient size to test the low-level air defence weaponry that he is talking about. I can assure the hon. member that that range is being used as it is now to its fullest. Unless he wishes to jeopardize the operation of CFB Gagetown, I suggest he not talk about this any further.

CAMECO

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy. This morning in Saskatoon, Cameco, a company for which the minister is responsible, changed its plea from not guilty to guilty to provincial charges arising from the spill of 2 million litres of radioactive waste into Wollaston Lake last November. Since Cameco also pleaded guilty to federal charges last December, this means there is no mechanism left for the public to get answers to questions like: what was the role of the regulators in this fiasco? What impact is this industry having on northern people and their environment? Does the 1946 legislation, which governs this industry, have any relevance in today's world?

Therefore, I would like to ask the minister if he is now prepared to reconsider his own decision and request a public inquiry into this whole matter so that the public can finally get at all the facts.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker.

FRASER RIVER

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. The minister is in receipt of a proposal from his Department of Fisheries and Oceans, Pacific Region, which calls for the development of a long-term water management strategy for the clean-up of the Fraser. The report, which I have with me, stresses co-operation between all levels of government to define limits to human activity and implement strategies to ensure the concept of sustainable development is achieved.

I want to ask the minister whether he will commit his ministry to a co-ordinated clean-up of the Fraser River. Will he acknowledge the need to develop a local management plan on a watershed-by-watershed basis? Will he empower these agencies with the legislative teeth needed to ensure that our environmental legislation is adhered to?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, all I can tell the hon. member is that very seldom do we hear the members of the socialist team congratulate this government on any steps taken to protect our environment. If he cares to look at what is taking place in the province of British Columbia, the hon. member, seeing what we have done in the last five years, should have no doubt whatsoever that we shall do more in the future.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works in connection with his government's physical responsibility for these buildings on Parliament Hill. While we have been aware of reports of asbestos which may be contaminating the air of the Centre Block, West Block and Wellington Building, apparently more asbestos has been uncovered during recent renovations of the cafeteria area on the upper floors of the Confederation Building.

As one of the many hundreds of worried inhabitants of the Confederation Building, I am wondering if the minister can confirm the presence of asbestos in that fourth Parliament Hill structure, how serious is the problem and can he advise us how and when his department is going to get it out of there?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is true that I am an inhabitant of the Confederation Building. I can tell the House and my colleague that I have had recent conversations with the Speaker on this important issue. There is fibreglass and asbestos in these premises. It is not the same in each building. Most of the substances I think have been removed from the eighth floor of the Confederation Building when that part of the premises was being renovated for different purposes. Work is proceeding in the Wellington Building as well.

I have asked my department to increase the vigilance that it has for inspection and to bring me a more detailed plan for the orderly disposition of this substance which, in its inert form, I am told, does not present a very serious threat to health.

ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, two days ago the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development tabled in this House the government's response to a report of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs about the relocation of several Inuit families from northern Quebec to the high Arctic in the 1950s.

The government's response flies in the face of the committee's report. Why has the minister ignored the committee's report which was based on the testimony of Inuit who were part of that relocation experiment?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the government indeed responded to the report of the standing committee on Monday of this week, after having a consultant do an extensive evaluation of the circumstances relating to the voluntary relocation of a number of Inuit families from northern Quebec to the high Arctic in the period of 1953 and shortly thereafter.

The consultant's report says in summary, and I would like to read this briefly, Mr. Speaker:

> We found that the decision by the government to actively encourage the relocation of Inuit families to the high Arctic in 1953, and in the two or three years subsequent to that, was not motivated by a concern to strengthen Canadian sovereignty over the Arctic Islands at that time, but was indeed motivated by a concern to improve the social and economic living conditions of those Inuit people.

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, the minister just pointed out that it was an extensive consultant's report. Let me point out that from the information we have, this consultant's contract was issued on August 8, 1990, and the final report was due on September 14, 1990. Five weeks is not a very extensive consultant's report.

Mr. Speaker, I will now ask the supplementary. Will the minister agree that the timeframe allowed was far too short for a definitive and conclusive analysis of these events, and will he assure the Inuit people who were so adversely affected by the relocation that this study is not the final word on the subject, and that he is open to further discussions and negotiations with them?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the report goes on:

> The evidence that we examined does not support the allegations that the government committed wrongdoing in the planning and conduct of this project. The material we examined leads to a different conclusion, namely, that the project was consciously planned and was carried out in a reasonably effective manner, and that the Inuit participated in it voluntarily in their own search for a better life and benefited from that experience.

In conclusion, I find this report, as does the government, completely acceptable.

TOBACCO

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, there was some good news on the front page of the Globe and Mail yesterday. It pointed out in the news story that the consumption of tobacco in Canada is dropping rapidly: a 7.4 per cent drop in cigarette sales and a 23 per cent drop in fine cut tobacco sales, meaning that Canadians are smoking 10 per cent less this year than last. Clearly the government's strategy to reduce tobacco use in Canada is working.

My question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could he inform the House today of the government's plans to ensure that this excellent trend in public health continues in the years to come.

An hon. member: Excellent.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, all members of Parliament should be tremendously heartened by the results showing the 10 per cent drop in the consumption of cigarettes and cigarette tobacco in Canada in the first 10 months of this year.

It is an indication that the legislation passed by this Parliament, the tax measures which have been taken by the Minister of Finance, and the public education measures taken by the government and by a whole range of social agencies across Canada are having a dramatic effect in improving the health of Canadians.

However, as long as 35,000 Canadians continue to lose their lives each year in diseases related to tobacco use, we must continue to keep up the pressure and do everything that we can to reduce this tragic loss of lives.

DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Agriculture. Yesterday, a research group at Laval University concluded that the Tory government's proposal to GATT with respect to the dairy industry would reduce the incomes of dairy farmers by 21 per cent.

What does the Minister of State for Agriculture intend to do to protect Canadian farmers from the disastrous situation created by his colleague, the Minister for International Trade?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think we should put the findings of this study into perspective. I may remind the hon. member that the vast majority, if not all, of Canadian farm producers support Canada's position at GATT.

Mr. Speaker, the study published yesterday is based on the present situation and does not consider the various changes that will take place over the next 10 years, including improved productivity, increased domestic consumption, the development of new products, and so forth. And I may add, as I said only a month ago in this House, that dairy farmers do not accept the status quo. The status quo is unacceptable, and on that basis, the Minister for International Trade tabled an offer last March to clarify and strengthen article XI, which means, Mr. Speaker, that our Canadian dairy producers will be protected, all thanks to this government.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance.

Now we know that at least five provinces are considering robbing social assistance recipients of the GST tax credit. These poorest of Canadians deserve a clear commitment from this government that they will not have both their pockets picked: one by the federal government with the GST itself and the other by provincial governments robbing them of the tax credit.

Will the government undertake to obtain from the provinces an ironclad guarantee that they will not rob poor Canadians of the GST tax credit?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the Minister of Finance and I and others have dealt with this question.

We have said in the past that although we do not have any direct control as to provincial taxation policies, we will take every possible step to encourage provinces not to pursue that objective.

I understand that my hon. friend has received his information from the poll taken by The Globe and Mail that five provinces are considering such a move, which of course is wrong because one of the major provinces, the province of British Columbia, has stated quite categorically that there is no such consideration.

If a province—and that is a hypothetical situation—would move in that direction we would take every step to discourage it because we find it to be immoral, improper, if not illegal.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of members the presence in the gallery of the hon. Lloyd Roseville Crouse, Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Annapolis Valley—Hants on a point of personal privilege.

PRIVILEGE

ANNAPOLIS VALLEY—HANTS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I have given you notice of the question of privilege that I intend to raise today. I must say I did not realize I was going to bring the Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia up here to help sort things out.

Mr. Speaker: I know the hon. member would not want to draw the representative of the Queen into these very serious matters which he has to raise, but I think hon. members will notice that this is the first time we have ever known what His Honour's middle name really was.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise on this point of privilege. We all know that points of privilege are a little spurious, but it gives me an opportunity to say a few things to help clarify my status as a member in this honourable House.

Mr. Speaker: I have difficulty with points of privilege, but not often does an hon. member start off with suggesting that it may be spurious.

However, given the hon. member's many years in this place, I recognized the hon. member on a point of personal privilege. There is no legal authority, procedural or otherwise, historic or precedential, that allows this. It is just done every once in a while.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I knew it was difficult enough to do, but I did not know it was going to be this difficult to finally get it on.

In a serious vein—and this is a serious moment—there is obviously some sadness in this, if for no other reason than after 25 years I have come full circle. I find myself in the high rises of the backbench of the opposition, which is about two seats from where I started a quarter of a century ago. I don't know, but that is some type of reverse progress. That is the sadness.

Obviously I shared many arguments with colleagues across the way, many debates, and many fine associations, which in part I hope will keep up. Especially what I intend to do and the dilemma it puts on loyal supporters who have supported me and my predecessor, my father, for years are not taken lightly.

On the other hand, I could not recite all the events that have led to today. I wrote a letter to my colleagues in caucus, which has been pretty well circulated and sets out some of my thoughts. There is the sadness, but I think I am honourably doing the right thing in the sense that over a period of time the yoke of caucus and blind loyalty to the leader have been very difficult for me to follow.

I am very serious. I am glad we are on television. We can always debate whether the televising of these proceedings is good or bad for this country, and I was for it. If there is anything that helps smother the respect of this institution, it is that Canadian men and women of good faith, intelligence and character have come here to try to do the job and, as soon as they get here, they find out that they play by the rules of the John A. Macdonald era of one flag, one party, one leader, and vote accordingly. We have all been through it.

That begins the scepticism of a member as to what he is doing here, let alone through the technology of television is given the boil of cynicism in the public domain as to what goes on here as we politically posture, do not really debate the issues, and often divide on the issues because it all has to be the party line. That is something that is fundamental in this institution and inherent in its defect.

I seriously suggest that at this particular time in this Parliament and with the polls—and I think they will continue to show it—no party is certain of victory with a majority in another election. That is the time when everyone may think they are in charge. That is what we used the last time to have another attempt to reform the rules of this Parliament to try to get it into the 20th century before we get into the 21st century.

I do not want to trespass too long in the House, but I have come to this decision over a period of time, with regret. Other than what I have mentioned in terms of the inherent defect in Parliament, where we have to play the game according to rules from 126 years ago, we have the rhetorical cancer of double-speak. When in opposition, and I spent a lot of time in opposition, we say one thing. Then we get in government and we just say the opposite.

In the days of parchment when few people could read—I know you couldn't see it—you could get away with that, but with television it shows the falseness of this place. Unfortunately the present government is reflecting that in the polls in effect when in opposition, for example, we champion the cause of the Auditor General.

I have been here 25 years. I am not going to take one minute for each of the 25 years, but I am going to try to take a few minutes on something that I think is very serious. I am going to recite a few things because I think it is necessary, along with all the other rhetorical garbage that we have in this House from time to time.

The mandate of trust and change started to erode when the government took office in 1984. We had championed the cause of the Auditor General in the Petro-Canada takeover of Petrofina. As soon as we got in government we took them to court the same as the Grits did. That is the type of double-speak I am talking about. One can go right down the list.

Our opposition critic, who is now the Minister of Finance, said things about the high interest rates in opposition. Then he—

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: My difficulty is this. I have allowed the hon. member to rise on a point of personal privilege. This is done as a matter of courtesy of the House. As I said in a more jocular tone a few minutes ago, it is not part of the rules and it is not part of the precedents, but it is done as a matter of courtesy.

I would ask the hon. member to come to the point that he wishes to make. It is an unusual indulgence given by the courtesy of the House. It is not given to any member just to give a speech about many things which may be of great importance but which should be properly the subject of debate, and not given to one member to make without the opportunity of other members to respond.

I would ask the hon. member to come to the point of his point of personal privilege. I think I know what it is. His reasons for wanting to make that point are of interest to all of us, but it is not appropriate for me to allow the hon. member to engage in a unilateral exposition of his own views, unless of course other members were allowed to join in. Then we would be in a debate which is completely outside the rules, and I would be much at fault for allowing that to happen. I would ask the hon. member to come to his point.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, you of all people are a person I respect as not only an equal among equals but as a Speaker that really has lent dignity to this Chamber. I will follow your admonition and therefore not say some of the things I wanted to say. Perhaps there will be other opportunities to say them. I was just trying to illustrate by example so that we could perhaps be educated by it, with respect and after being 25 years in this place, so that we would try to correct ourselves and/or perhaps members would not get into the dilemma.

I will come to my point of privilege. Quite frankly I have been placed in the seats of the independents. I guess I am the dean of the independents since the row seems to start here and goes to my left. I have been treated as an independent. I guess in many ways I am an independent, as my colleagues know, from time to time. I might as well face facts. If it is a rose, a rose is a rose or whatever else you call it. I want to be known officially because the records have had trouble with it and other people have had trouble with it, in this state of suspension and hibernation in which I place myself.

I want to be known, with misgivings but also perhaps with the joy of freedom, to be an independent Conservative and sit in this House as an independent Conservative. I am speaking out and taking the position because I fundamentally believe in it.

I cannot end without reflection on one item, which I know some members of the press will reflect on it, because they have already reflected on it, in terms of my roots. I know in people's minds—and especially the Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia who served with him—they most likely are wondering in an understandable way: "What would his father have done?" Who knows? Times are different, and he was a loyal party man.

I think there comes a time, if a member honestly believes that loyalty to leader is always fundamental, when there are some topics of some situations where loyalty to leader is transcended by loyalty to a party. I have left the government caucus. I have now officially declared that I am an independent Conservative. I have been a Conservative longer than three-quarters of my caucus and I intend to be.

I am standing here in the open forum of this the highest court of the land to have perhaps by example other Canadians, let alone Conservatives, speak out. I do honestly believe, unless there is a change in direction, that the party to which I belong is going to be in very serious straits. With a change in direction this could be corrected, but as far as today is concerned I want to be known as an independent Conservative and have me so registered in the records. I really do not know if you have to change my seat or not since I am already over here.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has risen on a personal point of privilege. I am going to close off any further debate on that and call for Tabling of Documents.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would just like a little clarification. In the back of the Wednesday edition of Hansard we have the alphabetical list of members of the House of Commons for the second session of the 34th Parliament.

There was a point of personal privilege, and I believe our precedents would indicate that members are listed by affiliation related to the Canada Elections Act or as independents with no other possibilities in terms of that listing. I make the point that I believe all Conservatives have an independent bent of mind and certainly inside our caucus on many occasions we have very spirited debates. However, in terms of the listing for official purposes in terms of the House of Commons, I think it would be appropriate if the member was listed as an independent and that the matter ended there.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the hon. member for Calgary West and of course I have heard the hon. member for Annapolis Valley—Hants. I will consider this. I think that it is a matter that has already been raised before the Chair. It is a matter which is being discussed between some other members in the House and the other parties, and I hope that it can be satisfactorily resolved.

BILL C-72

REVISED REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week I had the honour to table the report of the legislative committee on Bill C-72. It has been necessary to table the report again because an amendment which had been defeated in committee was inadvertently included in the report.

Therefore, at this time, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the revised report of the legislative committee on Bill C-72, an Act to establish the Canadian Polar Commission and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof, with amendments.

Mr. Speaker, once again I wish to compliment members on all sides who participated in the deliberations of that committee and thank them for their consideration and their expeditious handling of the deliberations of the legislative committee.

POINT OF ORDER

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON BILL C-79

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday the House at the stage of tabling reports from committees was given a report from the special committee on Bill C-79, which studied the amendments to the Parliament of Canada Act. Those amendments were in seriatim form. They were not in the bill and the bill has only been available to members since noon today. I have a copy in my hands right now.

We all know that according to our Standing Orders, if the government called this bill tomorrow, we only have until about six o'clock tonight to table amendments. I wonder if we could get unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend Standing Order 76(2) to 72 hours instead of 48 hours to give all members a chance to read this bill and to possibly bring amendments before the government calls the bill.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Certainly I agree with that suggestion and would be willing to give the opposition House leader my commitment. I will not call it until there is agreement of all three party House leaders.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I want to say I appreciate those comments by the government House leader. I think it is important that we negotiate a satisfactory conclusion of that legislation. I think the proposal put forward by my hon. friend is a good one.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The Chair takes note of the consensus among the three House leaders.

PETITIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to once again have an opportunity to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents from Kamloops, Clearwater, Barriere, Logan Lake and Chase in British Columbia who are concerned that the government is going to tax literature. I know most of us are distressed at this fact. It will make Canada the only country in the world to place a special tax on reading material. The petitioners feel that this is regressive and I suspect we feel that as well. They ask the government to reconsider taxing literature.

• (1520)

On another topic, Mr. Speaker, and on behalf of a number of constituents from the city of Kamloops who are almost at the point of depression that the government, in spite of 80 per cent of Canadians indicating opposition to the goods and services tax, is continuing to ram this brutal, cruel, mean-spirited tax through. They are asking the government to come to its senses, back off, listen to the people of Canada and introduce real, thorough, fair tax reform instead.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the honour to present four petitions signed by residents from various parts of the country, including the province of British Columbia.

The petitioners are adamantly opposed to the imposition of the goods and services tax. They believe it is very punitive in that it will affect low and middle income Canadians. It will affect a variety of the goods which they consume and will cause great difficulty to small and medium sized business. They call upon the Government of Canada to withdraw immediately the provisions of the goods and services tax.

SPORTS

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have the good fortune to present a petition from many citizens in Ottawa indicating their feelings towards NHL expansion and the fact that Canada should be very much part of this expansion. The teams from Ottawa and Hamilton very much have to be considered. Canada has to stay on the front page of the foremost league in North America.

These citizens have brought this petition forward. The deadline is December 7. That is when the world will know whether Canada is going to be part of the future of the National Hockey League. Indeed, we cannot afford to lose our market share. Canada has to be part of it. I urge all members to take these petitions home to let Canadians show their support for Canada's greatest game.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Mr. Speaker, the petitions do keep coming in because of this dastardly GST.

Once again I have a petition to present from the people of Toronto and from my riding in St. Catharines who are very much opposed to the imposition of this tax. I have yet to have anyone in my riding approach me to say that this tax is acceptable to them. Once again I bring this before the government and ask them to reconsider the imposition of this tax on people who can least afford to pay.

ABORIGINAL LAND CLAIMS

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to rise today under Standing Order 36 and present a petition, which speaks for itself. It states: "We the undersigned respectfully request the federal government to negotiate in good faith and in the spirit of justice with the people of Oka to resolve the present crisis. We expect that the Government of Canada will immediately act upon its authority and responsibility and deal in a just manner with the struggle of all aboriginal peoples in Canada to have their land claims and rights properly addressed. Inaction on the part of the federal authorities will only continue to antagonize race relations in Canada and provoke dangerous and ignorant acts of racism".

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, my second petition is from the people of Oliver, Osoyoos, Okanagan Falls and Penticton in their effort to block the goods and services tax. These people are opposed to this tax and have asked the government to stop the proposal and bring in real tax reform that is fair to all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the duty to table today a petition signed by Canadians who are vigorously opposed to a tax on reading, books and all printed materials.

These petitioners, who are very angry at the proposal put forth by the Conservative government, state that the uninhibited dissemination of the printed word is a cornerstone of democracy, culture and education. They argue that a literate and productive society can only be negatively affected by such a plan to tax books. Mr. Speaker, these people, like me, strongly believe that to tax books is to promote illiteracy.

[English]

FOOD AND DRUGS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of presenting a petition signed by a number of Canadians from the Brantford area, as well as from Nova Scotia, who are concerned about the recent death this year of a young girl, due to a food allergy.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to enact appropriate legislation and regulations that would require proper labelling of prepared foods as well as the availability in restaurants of lists of ingredients of foods that are prepared to be served there.

CANADA POST

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to rise under Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by citizens of Freetown, Prince Edward Island. They are concerned about the future of their rural post office.

The petition states that Canada Post Corporation has a mandate to improve services to Canadians. Whereas Canada Post has made $149 million in profit in the year 1989 to 1990, and whereas 180 families are served by the Freetown post office, and whereas the post office is the only federal institution in our community, the petitioners ask Parliament to instruct Canada Post to maintain and improve the post office in their community.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present today, one of which is signed by a large number of people from Saskatchewan communities like Laird, Waldheim, Saskatoon and Regina. It is also signed by people from Courtenay, Comox, Abbotsford and Vancouver, British Columbia, as well as Winnipeg and many other places in Canada.

The petitioners call on Parliament to support the Assembly of First Nations, the Inuit of Labrador's call for an end to low-level flight training in Canada. They are asking Canada to redirect its NATO-NORAD funding towards enabling Canada's aboriginal people to regain control of their lands and livelihood as well as promoting sustainable development for all Canadians.

NORTHERN TAX BENEFITS

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): The second petition I have is signed by the residents from La Ronge and Pine House in the northern part of my own constituency.

The petitioners call on Parliament to reinstate the northern tax benefit. It is vitally needed to compensate people in northern communities for the very high cost of living, which will be made even higher by the imposition of the goods and services tax.

FOODS AND DRUGS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition signed by people of the lower mainland of B.C. on behalf of those people in our society who are suffering from life-threatening allergies.

They ask Parliament to introduce legislation that would empower or require food manufacturers and packagers to label their products in such a way that those suffering from life-threatening allergies would be forewarned and prevent sickness or possible death.

HERITAGE LANGUAGE TRAINING

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the honour to table a petition from residents of south-shore cities located in the ridings of members of this government. The petitioners, considering that thousands of students and teachers in heritage language schools depend on government support and that the heritage language training program is the best way to foster national harmony and to provide language abilities and communication, ask me to humbly pray the government to maintain the heritage language training programs.

[English]

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, I have five other petitions coming from all parts of Canada which state that the Government of Canada has seen fit since Confederation and without hiatus to apply a zero rate of tax to magazines, books and newspapers, and now proposes to include them in the GST.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reaffirm the historic principles embodied in tax-free status for the printed word by retaining the zero rate in the GST legislation and regulations.

• (1530)

FOOD AND DRUGS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I am pleased to present this petition. The petitioners who have signed it are from Scarborough, Pickering, and Oshawa in the province of Ontario, as well as from Halifax and Dartmouth in the province of Nova Scotia.

Earlier this year, a 15-year-old girl from Scarborough, Robyn Allen, passed away as a result of a very severe allergic reaction. The petitioners join with the Allergy Information Association in support of this petition. They call upon the Government of Canada to enact legislation amending the food and drug regulations, in order to require manufacturers to list specific ingredients and additives used in pre-packaged foods so that people who use restaurants will know what is in the foods that they are eating.

I am very pleased to present this petition today.

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I wish to present a petition concerning the GST, signed by residents of Quebec and Ontario. Your petitioners object to taxing books and magazines.

VANIER CUP

Mr. Brian O'Kurley (Elk Island): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a privilege to rise today to present a petition on behalf of a number of people in the Edmonton area, including some who live in my riding of Elk Island.

Whereas one of the most significant aspects of Canadian culture is amateur sports and the Vanier Cup, named in honour of a former Governor General, is one of the truly national championship sporting events in the country; whereas Canadian Broadcasting Corporation radio has annually broadcast most Vanier Cup football games since the first game in November of 1965; and whereas the CBC has decided that play-by-play coverage of the 1990 Vanier Cup will not be broadcast; the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to urge Canadian Broadcasting Corporation radio to reconsider its decision regarding its traditional live broadcast of the Vanier Cup from Toronto on November 24, 1990 and fulfil the mandate of the corporation to serve, maintain, and augment Canadian culture from sea to sea.

[Translation]

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of electors in the great city of Toronto.

[English]

Like the electors of Kamloops, whose member spoke for them a moment ago, they are opposed to the goods and services tax and particularly this new tax to be imposed on books and magazines in Canada.

The petitioners wish, as do I, that the hon. member for Kamloops would take a place in the Senate, since he has spoken against the goods and services tax, and help the Liberal senators in that body who are fighting so valiantly against this tax. I know that he has charts and tables that would be of assistance to the hon. senators and I am sure his electors would be delighted to see him in the Senate doing good works there. Perhaps his usefulness on this particular tax would be a little greater than in this House, where the government's apparent inability to hear the pleas of the thousands of Canadians who have signed these petitions, is notorious. Indeed, our pleas in this case seem to be falling on deaf ears.

I urge the government to listen to the millions of Canadians who have signed these petitions and withdraw this iniquitous tax, at once.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, question No. 340 will be answered today.

[Text]

GUIDELINES REGARDING THE POLITICAL RIGHTS OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 340—Mr. Bellemare:

Further to the Federal Court of Canada decision relating to section 32(1)(a) of the Public Service Employment Act, has the government established any guidelines regarding the political rights of public servants and, if so (a) can public servants (i) contribute financially to a party (ii) be a member of a party (iii) participate in a federal leadership campaign (iv) work for a party or candidate during an election (v) be a scrutineer (vi) work in an election office (vii) display a lawn sign (viii) canvass (b) are there specific activities in which a public servant is prohibited from participating in?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission:

Under sections 32 to 34 of the Public Service Employment Act, the Public Service Commission is responsible for matters having to do with the political rights of public servants. Following on the judgement of the Federal Court in the Osborne/Millar appeals in 1988, the PSC issued a bulletin to all public servants indicating that the court had struck down paragraph 32(1) (a) of the Act [now numbered 33(1) (a) and (b)[, and that on the other hand the Court recognized the existence of the constitutional convention of political neutrality on the part of the public service.

At the present time, the legal situation of each public servant is such that it is not possible to provide a blanket rule regarding permissible political activities for all. Each situation must be resolved in light of two principles: that the public's interest requires the actual as well as the perceived impartiality and neutrality of the public service; and that the duty of loyalty of each public servant to the government calls for restraint in political expression and political action on the part of that public servant.

It is not possible to state a rule of general application regarding the rights of all public servants because in applying these principles in a given case, a number of things must be taken into consideration such as the nature and level of the duties of the person, whether that person has contact with the public or not, whether he or she works in a small locality or a large one, and so on.

It should be added that the Conflict of Interest and Post-employment Code indicates that public servants must avoid becoming involved in any outside activity that might place demands on them which are inconsistent with their duties or call into question their ability to perform their duties objectively.

The Public Service Commission appealed the judgment in the Osborne/Millar case to the Supreme Court of Canada. The appeal was heard on October 11, 1990, and judgment is due sometime in 1991. Directly or indirectly, this judgment is expected to lead to the clarification of the rights and obligations of public servants, departments and the Public Service Commission in this regard.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 366 could be made an order for return, that return would be tabled immediately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 366 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

MARINE ATLANTIC

Question No. 366—Ms. Callbeck:

For each of Marine Atlantic's car ferries from Borden, P.E.I. to Cape Tormentine, N.B. (a) what is the present monthly capacity utilization (b) what was the capacity 5 years ago (c) what is the forecast for capacity (i) in 1 year (ii) in 5 years?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notice of motion P-30 for the production of papers, in the name of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands?

That a Humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before the House copies of the report to be submitted by the Attorney General of Quebec to the Secretary of State of Canada, pursuant to Section 281 of the National Defence Act, which sets out the circumstances that occasioned the calling out of the Canadian Forces at Oka, Quebec.

Mr. Champagne: Mr. Speaker, this notice of motion for the production of papers is acceptable to the government, and the papers are being tabled immediately.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Champagne: Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Shall all notices of motions stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I thank the parliamentary secretary for agreeing to Motion No. 30.

Motion No. 31 asks for details of costs of the deployment of the Canadian forces at Oka.

I noticed that in Hansard in my absence earlier this week, an answer appeared—I believe it was this week—detailing the costs for a certain period of time already. In other words, the government has got those figures for part of the time, if not all of it.

I wonder if the parliamentary secretary would speak with his colleague, the Minister of National Defence, to see if that additional information could not be provided. It has already been given in a response. I am simply asking that it be produced in the House in documentary form via by Motion No. 31.

[Translation]

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is of course aware that we are working on it, and as soon as we are able to, we will be glad to answer his question.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops) moved:

That this House express its loss of confidence in the Prime Minister and call upon him to resign and immediately call an election.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before I begin my remarks I want to say simply that there have been discussions between the parties and there is an understanding that if the members wish to split their usual 20 minutes and 10-minute question and comment period, that is their decision to make. The individual should comment on that at the beginning of their presentation so it is perfectly clear for the person in the chair.

I want to say at the outset that I plan to split my 20 and 10 would be with the hon. member for New Westminster—Burnaby.

To begin, I say that it was not an easy day for the New Democratic Party caucus to look about the state of the nation on this second anniversary of the election of the Conservative government and notice the way the entire country has deteriorated. Because of what almost appears to be a government inspired scorched-earth policy which has resulted in unbelievable levels of human carnage and suffering, we have had to bring forward this motion on behalf of the people of Canada which states that this House expresses its loss of confidence in the Prime Minister and calls upon him to resign and immediately call an election.

This is a very serious motion. The Prime Minister has lost the confidence of the people of Canada and the ability of the Prime Minister and his government to govern no longer exists.

I want to refer to some of the headlines in the papers that I noticed in the Reading Room today. One of the headlines stated: "Polls say the Tories could do with a better leader". Another stated: "Nine-tenths believe that there should be an immediate review of the new tax, with most people wanting to abolish the tax." Another headline stated: "If the Prime Minister remains, most say the economy will get worse."

Another headline stated that under this Prime Minister the economy has been transformed and so too has our reputation abroad. Another headline stated that this Prime Minister has sharply cut back both at the environmental department spending and at defence spending. Another one stated that this Prime Minister is not fit to rule. Another one stated that the country is effectively leaderless. Another one stated that the lack of leadership affects the foreign exchange market.

All of these headlines were referring to Margaret Thatcher in the United Kingdom and the fact that the situation there has similarly deteriorated. These headlines simply represent the contempt in which the people of the United Kingdom now hold their Prime Minister. It is a sad day for our country to say that the same now has occurred in Canada.

In the United Kingdom, many of her own back-benchers and members of her cabinet are calling on her to resign. In a few hours from now, the British House of Commons will be holding a similar debate to this one, challenging the Prime Minister's right to continue at a time when the country appears leaderless and at a time when the entire economy is being threatened. The people of the United Kingdom have indicated clearly how they feel about their Prime Minister. I suggest that the people of Canada have indicated that we have similarly lost faith in our Prime Minister and the government of the Prime Minister.

• (1540)

Let us continue for a moment and simply reflect from today's newspaper. A massive poll conducted by Angus-Reid and Southam News points out that our Prime Minister is the most unpopular Prime Minister in Canadian history. As a matter of fact, in the last number of hours, at the major meetings in Europe, we have noticed that no one wanted to meet with the Prime Minister. He had asked to meet with many heads of state and virtually no one wanted to meet with him. Most cancelled any plans that had been set up. Even overseas, he appears to have lost the confidence of world leadership.

The polls also tell us that this is the most unpopular government in Canadian history. No government has been so low in public esteem in the entire history of our land. According to today's poll results, seven out of ten Canadians could not think of a single thing that this government has done since the last federal elections, not a single positive thing.

Mr. Fulton: Can you think of anything?

Mr. Riis: My colleague from Skeena asks if I can think of anything. Unfortunately, I say with a heavy heart, that I cannot. I cannot think of a single, positive thing that this government has done to help the people of Canada.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Riis: The Tories say that the free trade deal was a great accomplishment. When the people of Canada were asked if they agreed, 92 per cent disagreed with that comment. Only 8 per cent of Canadians felt that the free trade agreement was good for the country and 92 per cent disagreed.

The Conservatives sometimes say that tax reform was a good idea. Ninety-five per cent of Canadians disagreed with that position. Only 5 per cent of Canadians think that tax reform has been a positive gesture.

In terms of deficit reduction, our Prime Minister goes on at some length about the great successes in reducing the deficit. Ninety-five per cent of Canadians disagree with him. They say that the debt of the country has never been greater and that deficit simply does not come down in any significant real way.

Then there is the environment. All of a sudden the entire cabinet is turning green before us. They are saying we are going to take major steps in terms of environmental issues. Ninety-eight per cent of Canadians disagree. Only 2 per cent of Canadians feel that the government is serious in terms of the environmental issues confronting the country.

Jobs, jobs, jobs. Oh, how we remember that slogan in the last federal campaign. How many Canadians feel that the government has actually performed in creating real jobs? Two per cent. Ninety-eight per cent of Canadians feel that the government's record is abysmal and that it is woefully inadequate. It has, if you like, ignored the reality. Even the free trade agreement has resulted in 165,000 jobs being abandoned in this country on a permanent basis.

Then there is leadership, and that is what it is all about. The Prime Minister of Canada is attempting to present leadership to our country at a difficult time. When one looks at how people feel about the leadership that this Prime Minister provides, when one looks to see what the vision is of this particular Prime Minister, and when one considers the people's trust and confidence in this Prime Minister, I am afraid to say that the poll results this morning state that 99 per cent of Canadians have lost faith in this Prime Minister. Only 1 per cent of Canadians had the courage to say that they thought the Prime Minister was doing a good job when it came to leadership. That 1 per cent is probably a statistical error. I would suspect, in reality, that 100 per cent would say that this Prime Minister has no vision of the future and, as a result, he has been conducting a process of dismantling our country.

We have heard the Prime Minister say as he travels about the country in an attempt to carry on a propaganda message that, indeed, he is trying to make good, tough decisions. He claims that his government has made tough and hard decisions. Tough and hard decisions do not necessarily mean good decisions. They are wrong-headed decisions. As a result, winds of despair, disillusionment, and discontent are blowing across the land.

I believe that if we ask Canadians how they really feel, they would feel that our Prime Minister is destroying our country. He certainly is discrediting our country in terms of the traditional international reputation we have had as peacekeepers, certainly dismantling those critical institutions that made Canada different. We have seen it as a result of the privatization rampage, the deregulation paranoia that the Prime Minister and his government has imposed upon the people of Canada in an effort to dismantle what makes Canada great.

I want to simply say that those pessimistic about the future which now the newspapers tell us on a daily basis include investors, industrialists, large and small business people, consumers, right across the country. It does not matter where you look now—east and west, north and south, men and women, young people, old people—they all have lost confidence in this government.

In closing, I want to say that we could go on with a long, long list, unfortunately, pointing out how the Prime Minister and this government have failed Canada at this very critical point in our history.

I will leave that to others because it is so woefully evident. It is so obvious. It is so well known. I simply want to say that I think that it is appropriate now that the Conservative backbenchers particularly listen to their constituents, do what their constituents want them to do and ask the Prime Minister to resign, call an election and go to the people.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to reflect upon some comments that my colleague and my friend from Kamloops has made. He has made some very good points in terms of the loss of faith and a loss of trust that Canadians across this land from Victoria to St. John's have demonstrated in this government.

I want to tell you a little bit of a story because when my colleague for Kamloops and I were busy way back just prior to two years ago today, during the heat of the election campaign, we were working together during part of that campaign. We tried as candidates at that time to raise the issue with our constituents in the Okanagan—Shuswap and throughout Kamloops that this government was intending to bring down one of the most massive tax grabs in the history of this country. We spent quite a bit of time trying to raise this as a major issue in that election.

When the government replied to those accusations, it said: "What tax? I don't see a tax. Do you see a tax?" Lea and behold after the election was done and over with, and after the free trade debacle was finished, along comes the GST.

My colleague for Kamloops has reiterated the point precisely. It is this duplicity that this government has with respect to its hidden agenda and the duplicitous nature with which it treats Canadians. No wonder he Prime Minister's popularity is lower than that of Mr. Ceaucescu's, and look at what happened to him.

An hon. member: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacWilliam: The comment has often been made in this House that there are no alternatives to the goods and services tax. I want to ask my colleague for Kamloops, with his knowledge of finance and matters financial, whether or not there have been alternatives proposed to this government over the past year with respect to alternatives to the goods and services tax.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to thank my parliamentary colleague for his thoughtful question and simply say that I do remember during the election campaign asking my Conservative colleague in that election, Russ Cundari, in meeting after meeting if he wanted to say anything about the government's plan to introduce a consumption tax. Don Blenkarn, the chairman of the finance committee, at least had the courage in Toronto to say that that was what the government's plans were. Immediately the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance jumped on him and said that he did not know what he was talking about and that that was wrong.

I do not remember this being a major issue during the campaign. That is why when the government says it has a mandate from the people of Canada to impose this mean, cruel, brutal tax, that is absolutely false.

Let me, however, respond to the question. The question was: Are there alternatives? I think to be fair, that is where we differ from our friends in the Liberal Party. They are going to set up a committee to examine alternatives to the goods and services tax and to various aspects of tax reform. I think that is their position. We do have an alternative. We have presented it publicly. We have it as a public document. We have laid out a whole set of elements.

• (1550)

Let me indicate simply one of the critical ones. That is we have torn a page out of President Reagan's book when he introduced in the United States a minimum corporate tax. He noticed, as we do in Canada, that thousands—as a matter of fact the last count in Canada was 69,000 probable corporations—do not pay a single cent in income tax. The American administration said that this was wrong. We are saying this is wrong, and we are saying that we should introduce a minimum corporate tax in this country so that those 69,000 profitable companies pay their fair share.

I think it is wrong, as do all Canadians, when the teller in the Royal Bank pays more income tax in some years than the entire Royal Bank of Canada. We say that is a wrong tax system.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order, please. Just a few words to explain exactly what is going on. The NDP leader asked that the 20-minute period be shared by two speakers, and I was under the impression that the period of questions and comments would follow the two speeches. I apologize, for I should have recognized a member on the other side, but I will make up for it after the next speech. The hon. member for New Westminster—Burnaby now has the floor for ten minutes.

[English]

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, today it is two years since I was first elected, and it is the second anniversary of the re-election of this government on the other side. The motion that we have before us today only confirms what the Canadian people are saying: that it is time that this government stepped down. It is time that this Prime Minister stepped down and that we had an election in this country. That is what Canadians from coast to coast are asking.

On the second anniversary of the re-election of this government, I would like to take a look at its record for women in this country. This government has been an absolute disaster for the women of Canada. After making countless promises during the last election campaign on where it stood on equality for women in Canada, it has done nothing. It has done worse than nothing, Mr. Speaker. It has taken the women of Canada backward.

This government has been an absolute disaster for the women of Canada. Never mind the fact that, as the House leader for the New Democrats said, it cares nothing about public opinion; as evidenced by its introduction of a criminal abortion law which violates the values of the majority of the Canadian people.

After three years with no criminal law on abortion, this government puts it back in the Criminal Code. After three years in which there has been no evidence of an increase in the number of abortions in this country; after three years in which Canadian women have proven themselves to be people of integrity and have proven themselves to be people who can be trusted, this government puts abortion back in the Criminal Code.

Never mind the big promises of the Prime Minister, one of which I will quote from the election campaign. The Prime Minister said that a "Conservative government will not be inhibited by dollar amounts" when it comes to supporting equality-seeking endeavours. This government has not only broken that promise, Mr. Speaker, it shattered the "sacred trust"—words of the Prime Minister—of 52 per cent of the Canadian electorate: the women of Canada.

In the last budget alone, the finance minister proclaimed cuts to women's programs and to women's groups, a $1.6 million cut from the Secretary of State Women's Program; cuts to child care, a $1.75 million cut from Health and Welfare's Child Care Initiative Fund.

By the way, where is that national child care program we keep hearing about? Where is that national child care program we heard about in the 1984 election campaign, the national child care program which we heard about again in the 1988 election campaign? Where is that for the children of this country? Where is the $6.4 billion that was promised over and over again?

Not only that money has disappeared, so has the Prime Minister's credibility disappeared. Salt is being rubbed into the wounds of women through additional cuts to the Canada Assistance Program in Ontario, in Alberta, and in my province of British Columbia. It is important to understand that the Canada Assistance Plan is the current federal-provincial funding mechanism for shelters for battered women. It is also the current funding formula for child care spaces in our country, and this government has pulled back on that funding in those three provinces. I want to say that children in B.C., Ontario, and Alberta need child care just as much as any child in this country, and that the women in those provinces who are battered and abused need shelters just as badly as the women in other parts of this country.

Then there are cuts in transfer payments to the provinces, and cuts to health and education, all of which spell disaster for women since they are more likely to be poor and in need of services like health care. To make matters worse, the majority of health care workers are women. They are the first to be laid off. They are the most vulnerable salary cutbacks.

We can't forget either—as if we could forget—the misnamed goods and services tax and its impact on women. It is a tax that is no good and does no service for the women of this country. The GST will work against women, who earn on average 64 per cent of what men in this country earn. Women will spend more of their disposable income on the GST than will men because they have a lower disposable income and because the GST is regressive, taxing consumption rather than income.

A single mom with two kids will consequently fork over the same amount of money at the cash register when she buys shoes for her child as the Prime Minister or any of the ministers on that side of the House will. What more could this government do, I wonder, to continue trying to keep women in their place? Well, how about letting unemployment among women jump dramatically in the last month. With one wave of the Tory wand, we have seen 41,000 full-time jobs once held by women vanish into thin air. But the cabinet magicians have been crying since last spring that Canadian women understand the cuts when put "in the context of government-wide expenditure restraints". Why does this government feel that it can impose cutbacks on the people in Canada who are least able to take them? Why are they always on the backs of the poor and of the women of this country?

Canadian women want to know why this restraint, this cost-cutting magic, was not evident in the $17 million loan to strip clubs in Canada, in the $33 million increase in the budget of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, in the $1.5 million spent on Senate committee room renovations, in the $14 million squandered to advertise a tax that no one in this country wants, in the $2 million thrown into Canada Day romp and pomp festivities, or in the uncalculated amount of money now being spent to prepare Canadians for war and death in the Persian Gulf.

On top of all that, I have been receiving angry calls and letters detailing the government's ignorance and incompetence when it comes to dealing with women. Individual women from Toronto, Ottawa and Vancouver, and groups from Nova Scotia and Winnipeg, have taken great pains to outline the inherent contradictions in eligibility requirements for programs, services and grants.

All of these women and organizations have reached the same conclusion, that this government takes credit for changes which serve only to improve its public profile, and that this government has avoided fulfilling promises by making its proposals too expensive for its principles. This is a sad thing, since its principles for women were never worth much to begin with. Clearly, the women of Canada have lost confidence in this Prime Minister's rag-tag team. Those members of the House with female constituents should therefore support the motion and withdraw their confidence in this government and Prime Minister.

[Translation]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very proud this afternoon to speak about the leadership of our government and, particularly, of our Prime Minister.

• (1600 )

[English]

I wanted to comment particularly and then ask a question of the hon. member from New Westminster on her comments about Canadian women, which are clearly and totally NDP philosophically based and have no resemblance to any reality whatsoever.

Since this government came to office we have made considerable progress on behalf of the women of this country. Our Prime Minister would be the first to say that there is a lot more left to do, because he is so committed to the future of women in Canada. Let me just point, first of all, to the number of women that he has put into leadership positions all across Canada and in every aspect, including in this House, including in this cabinet, including on the bench, including in diplomatic posts.

Let me talk about the $40 million commitment that this government has made to family violence, at the instigation of of the government but particularly under the leadership of the Prime Minister. Let me speak briefly about the commitment to that child care initiative that she was talking about, which was initiated by this government, women who are in minorities, aboriginal women, people who do not fit the moulds, because we have a sensitivity to that.

Let me talk about the Settlement Language Training Program, the first time that a government has come forward to help immigrant women, who are isolated in the home, learn the language and orient themselves to their new country. Let me talk about job training for social assistance recipients, many of whom are women. It was initiated by this government under the Canadian Jobs Strategy and did not exist before. Let me talk about the expansion of job training under the new labour force development strategy, something that never happened for women before in this country.

I think the hon. member should be ashamed of herself when she is talking about the kinds of things that are so important to all Canadian women. Let me point out to her as well that this government would not be doing Canadian women any favours if we allowed the deficit to go through the roof yet again, the way the former government did. Who got hurt first during the recession the last time when interest rates were well up into the 20 per cent range? It was women who got hurt. It is this government and this Prime Minister who have taken leadership in trying to ensure that we do not get into that kind of fiasco in this country again.

It is this government that has ensured, in trying to correct the manufacturers' sales tax the silent killer of jobs in the manufacturing sector that the NDP declares as its constituency that the new system will be sensitive to the poor in this country, who will have the tax, rebated to them.

The hon. member talks on and on. She talks up a good storm, but she does not pay any attention to the facts. I am very proud—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order, please. The hon. member for New Westminster—Burnaby has one minute.

Ms. Black: I am disappointed that the minister was not able to ask a question, Mr. Speaker. She went on to talk about how the Prime Minister has appointed women to positions. It is true that he has appointed more women to high positions in Canada, but let us talk about the promises that have been made, the hollow promises. What about violence against women? Women are still being abused.

Mrs. McDougall: Forty million dollars, is that a joke?

Ms. Black: What about the promises to bring in gun control legislation that this government is now dithering about? Women have gone backward under this government. The wage gap has actually broadened in the last year. Promises on employment equity are unfulfilled; promises on child care are unfulfilled. The promises on tax reform have resulted in tax deform for the women of this country.

The Prime Minister and this government have failed the women of Canada. They have failed them miserably. The minister knows that full well. In her own ministry, there is still discrimination in language training for immigrant women. There have been countless jobs for women lost because of this government's free trade agreement.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The time for questions and comments has expired. Resuming debate. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would say to the parliamentary leader that he can do like most of his colleagues who are not in the House—go for a walk.

Mr. Speaker, what I just heard was rather pathetic. Can you imagine, an opposition party whose leader claims to be the most popular leader in Canada. Twenty-four Sussex is not very far, here comes Audrey! And here they are with this kind of motion when Canadians have so many problems and poor people are really feeling the pinch. But the socialists—what with their nice ties, beautiful dresses and pretty necklaces—choose to introduce a motion to the effect that the Prime Minister, having lost the confidence of the House, should resign and immediately call an election.

[English]

The cry among political jackals of course is for an election. I see this motion as a tribute to the Prime Minister because these people behave sometimes as if they do not have much in there; they are not that stupid.

Mr. Gustafson: Don't give them too much credit.

Mr. Valcourt: We must give them credit because today, they have been out in the country terrorizing people, lying to people again like they did during the free trade debate, to which the hon. member for Kamloops referred. They did that on the GST. The people out there are frightened. They think, the socialistes en cravates, the NDPers, that this time, with this perceived misfortune of the Prime Minister, maybe they can bank on it and maybe the people will vote against him this time.

Today is the second anniversary of the election of this government. Those socialistes en cravates, the NDPers who are so fond of the taxpayer's money which we have to save, want to call an election. Do you know why? Because if we have it right now, the perceived unpopularity of the Prime Minister would maybe give them a chance.

I have news for them. They count on the ignorance of people. They exploit the ignorance of people. They go out and lie to the people. They do that day after day after day, and they never learn. There is something about Canadians that these people do not seem to realize. It is that there is a profound wisdom in Canada. Canadians have a profound wisdom. It is a wisdom that always seems—

Mr. Samson: Call an election. You will find out how smart they are.

[Translation]

Mr. Valcourt: Shut up and let me talk.

[English]

There is a profound wisdom, as I was saying, about Canadians. It seems they always settle down when the time comes to choose their leader. Canadians do that.

The NDPers have nothing better to do than to ask for an election and for the Prime Minister to resign. The Prime Minister will not resign, I am sure, because he is not a weakling socialist. He is a man with a vision for Canada. He is a man with courage, and he is a man who believes in Canadians. The Prime Minister believes in Canada. The Prime Minister believes in Canadian people, contrary to those people.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, those people have absolutely no confidence in Canadians.

Mr. Samson: That's your government they don't trust.

Mr. Valcourt: They are the same people who, during the election campaign of 1988 on free trade, were travelling around Canada trying to convince people that our poor senior citizens would lose their pensions because of free trade.

An hon. member: That's terrible!

Mr. Valcourt: They went all around Canada saying that and today, they use the same kind of strategy on the Goods and Services Tax, the GST.

[English]

Isn't that terrible? I think we made a mistake, and I will admit to it. We should have done it the Liberal and the NDP way. We should have gone out and told Canadians to listen. For Canadians to understand the GST, we should have first gone out and told the people that Allan MacEachen was wrong when he was the Minister of Finance. They would say: "What? Mr. MacEachen was wrong? It is impossible, Senator MacEachen being wrong." After all, this is the Minister of Finance who came into this House and said that Canada would have a deficit of $11 billion. Some 12 months later that deficit was at $23 billion. At that time Allan MacEachen was standing in the House and commenting on the manufacturers' sales tax. He said it was awful, that it was bad, that it was bad for Canadian industry. Mr. MacEachen said it. I did not. We would say to people that Allan was wrong. "The manufacturers' sales tax is great", say those socialistes en cravate, those socialists in neckties. Do you know what they are protecting? It is the manufacturers' sales tax. Canadians must know this. Do you know what they are defending? It is a tax regime that has and is killing many jobs in this country.

Mrs. Maheu: Spit it out, Bernie.

Mr. Valcourt: Whenever the lady who is yelling over there buys a tube of lipstick, if she wears lipstick, there is no federal sales tax on it. Is there? Is there a federal sales tax on lipstick? Tell me. I don't wear any. I am going to tell her one thing, that when she and all ladies of Canada buy lipstick they pay 22 cents for the hidden manufacturers' sales tax. It goes right to the federal government to pay great members of Parliament on both sides of the House and to finance Canada. This tax is hidden.

There are 22,000 exceptions to this tax. This tax is confusing and stupid. Do you know what members of the Liberal Party are protecting? It is protecting des bananes vertes. Under that system a green banana is not taxable, but if it turns yellow it is. That is what they are protecting, and they laugh. It is not funny. It is the truth. That is why we want to change the tax system we have today:

[Translation]

Green bananas, yellow bananas.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think these people will be able to go on assuming Canadians are as stupid as they would like them to be and believe them to be, because these people are not stupid. You know, Prime Minister Mulroney is someone, and I said this before, who had a vision of this country. He had firm convictions. And today—

An hon. member: He has guts.

Mr. Valcourt: Yes, he has guts, and many Canadians are like him, because you see, I don't think Canada was built thanks to 20 years under their government. They talk about polls. They like talking about polls. The Liberals and the tie-wearing socialists keep mentioning the polls. If we wanted to govern by polls, we would probably be very high in the ratings, up there next to Audrey, but the country would be bankrupt, because for 20 years, we were governed— I am not that old, but I belong to a generation of Canadians who learned something from the previous Liberal government. It doesn't matter what you earn during your life. It doesn't matter what you earn in a week. What matters is that you can go and borrow money and don't have to worry about paying it back. Your children will do that for you.

An hon. member: That's true.

Mr. Valcourt: It was demonstrated by our Liberal predecessors.

[English]

Today the hon. member for Kamloops rose on this motion, and I made a few notes on what he said. It was horrible, but he said those things. He talked about the most unpopular. He talked about losing faith. He talked about free trade. He talked about debt and deficits.

This new breed of politicians, those socialistes en cravate, the great NDPers, those sanctimonious about everything, how can they stand in this House and talk to Canadians as did the member for Kamloops who blamed the government for not cutting the deficit? Then the member from Westminster stood and told Canadians that it was awful we had cut transfer payments to provinces, we had cut Canadians plans and that we had cut this and that. What the hell do they take Canadians for? Stupid? I do not think they are. That is why they would like an election tomorrow morning because——they spread a climate of fear in this country.

[English]

But again they miss it. Canadians are not stupid and they will see it when the election comes.

I remember two years ago to this very day the socialistes en cravate and the Grits had been out for two months telling all sorts of lies to Canadians. They said that the hospitals were going to close, the kids were going to be drafted by the U.S. Army, it was going to be terrible. Nothing like that happened because it was straight lies.

In the next election, the one that you will wish today that you never called for, you will get it. And when you get it, the people, Canadians, men and women, working people, will look at the record. They will look at the GST. They talk about the GST as if it was to harm Canadians. They want Canadians from coast to coast to believe that.

My colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, my caucus colleagues and the cabinet, sit for hours every day trying to find out how we can harm Canadians. According to these people, that is the goal of the government. How can we harm Canadians? This is what we want, obviously, according to them. But I do not think that Canadians believe that. They have seen tough times.

I have learned something in my short years in politics and in Parliament, Mr. Speaker. There is a fundamental rule in government. If the solution is easy, usually it is the wrong one. If it is a difficult decision, then you need courage, and that is probably the right one. Most of the time it works. These people on the other side, they like the easy stuff.

An hon. member: No courage.

Mr. Valcourt: Of course, because they do not have any courage. We have just experienced 20 years of that. They took a country without a debt and in 15 years drove the debt to $200 billion. Now, they have the gall—and the NDP too, the member from Kamloops—to say that we have not reduced the deficit since 1984. What they do not tell Canadians, however, is that 80 per cent of the increase in the debt was money we had to borrow to pay the interest on the debt that we inherited from Allan MacEachen and company.

Some hon. members: Shame.

Mr. Valcourt: That is the exact truth. They talk about the deficit. They have the gall to stand up in this House and talk about not reducing the deficit. Canadians would want to understand this. People pay too much tax. I agree with that. We all pay too much tax. But, then, that money that we receive—

Mr. Fisher: Stop treating them like that.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, I am sure they will have a chance. But that is part of the Liberal strategy too. They do not want the people to know. So when you speak in the House they try to interrupt you. Is that not terrible? Well, if what I am saying is not true, then let me speak, let me have my few minutes and then take your time when you have a chance.

Now, what was I saying about the deficit? Yes, the revenue. The taxes the people send here. All the taxes that Canadians pay, and they pay a lot, that money comes here. Before we came here all the money that Canadians paid would come in and then the government, the great Liberal government, would spend all that money of Canadian men and women, of working people, and they would borrow $16 billion more to do all the things that these people, the socialistes en cravate forced them to do. You see, to be popular, you have to throw money at all the problems. To be popular, you have to do what the Liberals did for 16 years. You have a problem. I have no solution. But, I will throw money at it. That is how they governed Canada.

It took us six years to take that $16 billion deficit in our ordinary account and turn it into a $9 billion surplus. That is a $25 billion turnaround. That is not in the polls to which the member for Kamloops referred. The polls and the media in their grandeur would not report these facts. These are real facts. Canadians have saved money in terms of the way it is being administered.

Now it is fair for those people to say, "Well, you say now, Valcourt, that you have a $9 billion surplus in the ordinary account, a $9 billion surplus, and you cut the poor, the women's programs. You cut this and you cut that". What they do not say to Canadians, the men and women who work and their children who are coming behind, is that we need $30 billion a year just to pay the interest on the debt that we have, the debt that the great Allan MacEachen gave us.

An hon. member: Jean Chrétien.

Mr. Valcourt: The Jean Chrétien's of this world—you know the guy who is running in Beauséjour? The leader of the Liberal Party.

[Translation]

The little guy from Shawinigan is running in New Brunswick, in Acadian country.

Mr. Samson: He isn't here yet!

Mr. Valcourt: No, he isn't. But he is on his way. We want him here. He should be here.

An hon. member: Maybe.

Mr. Valcourt: And that is what people are complaining about.

I remember, when Prime Minister Mulroney won the last election, I don't think he—

Mr. Gauthier: He bought that election.

Mr. Valcourt: They say he bought it. Listen to that, Canadians! That is what the Liberal Party thinks Canadians are like—and I want that to be on the record—Canadians are people whose votes can be bought! Well I don't think so, because I believe that Canadians are intelligent people. When faced with an easy solution, taunted by the tie-wearing socialists and the Liberals, they may be inclined— but when they really think about it, they will always come down on the side of common sense.

[English]

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am really optimistic about the future of this government.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Valcourt: And I am optimistic about the future of this country.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Valcourt: The member who referred to the Prime Minister of Canada in terms of being a Ceausescu, that was a new high at being low.

An hon. member: That was the member for Okanagan-Shuswap.

Mr. Valcourt: But that is the kind of politicians they are, les socialistes en cravate.

The Prime Minister is the man determined to make Canada a great country. He is determined to provide the youth of Canada with a bright future. With the support of Canadians from coast to coast, and with members here today who will vote down that motion of the socialistes en cravate—

[Translation]

— we are going to win and we will give Canadians the kind of country they need!

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Questions and comments, for 10 minutes. The hon. member for Ottawa South.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I have a very simple question for the fisheries minister.

[English]

He is obviously quite a supporter of the goods and services tax. I would like him, if he could just imagine with me, the scene that will ensue after this tax is implemented. He has noted that Canadians are intelligent enough to have pointed out that there are some real problems with the implementation of this proposed tax.

He can imagine this scene with me. He can choose any province in Canada but Alberta where there is no existing retail sales tax at the provincial level. We will go into a little corner store, maybe it is a 7-Eleven or a Mac's Milk or something, and we will choose some items off the shelves. We will take them to the checkout counter. You know what those stores are like. In my constituency, the check-out person is usually about 16 years old, first job, could be male or female, having a tough time with mathematics in high school. This is the job.

An hon. member: Oh, oh.

An hon. member: That is a put-down.

Mr. Manley: Here is the test. This person brings in this product and says to the check-out person, "Here is what I want to buy." The check-out clerk has to figure out which of four categories this item is in. Is it taxable under the GST and taxable under the retail sales tax? Or is it exempt under the GST or zero rated but taxable under the retail sales tax? Or is it taxable under both the GST and the retail sales tax? Or is it exempt under both the GST and the retail sales tax? Which of those four categories does this item fit in?

That being figured out, the next job is to calculate the total price to be paid for the item. One takes the price, adds 7 per cent GST, then adds the retail sales tax, which in Ontario, for example, is 8 per cent, in order to come up with the total price. But the customer happens to have in his pocket a discount coupon that he collected out of his local newspaper. Now he has a problem. In some of the provinces the retail sales tax is calculated before the discount is taken off. In others it is calculated after the discount is taken off. With the GST it is after the discount is taken off. The clerk now has to calculate the price, minus the discount, plus the GST, then add the discount back because then the retail sales tax has to be calculated. Then the discount is taken off again at the end.

With our 16-year old high school student clerk in the store doing his or her first job, I would like to know what the minister advises that person to do. Does he advise the clerk to get a different job, perhaps in a bank? While he is answering that, perhaps he could explain why, if the manufacturers' sales tax is so bad, the government wanted to bring in this complicated system of tax. Why did the government raise the manufacturer's sales tax from 9 per cent, which it was when the government came into office, to 13.5 per cent? Was it that it really was not that bad after all?

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, let me tell the hon. member something.

First, it is abundantly clear to me why this member would not be in business earning a living. If he pictures the real world as he just did, I could answer with the same rhetoric. If I thought that Canadians were as stupid as he does—

Mr. Gauthier: You're too stupid. You can't answer the question.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Valcourt: That is the Liberal way. Shut them up. Don't let them speak. It is the Liberal way.

I could answer back. The member says the first step is which category, one, two, three or four? Today it is much harder because one has to figure out at the cash counter which of the 22,000 exemptions may be applicable.

Mr. Gauthier: That's nonsense.

Mr. Valcourt: It is as much nonsense as the nonsense that he is spouting today. Why would the chambers of commerce—are these people—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, they remind me —

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): I would appreciate the co-operation of both sides of the House, and I would ask the minister to finish answering the question. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, some people just don't understand, and that's a fact. Some people don't and won't understand. It's easy to try and fool people. The Liberals are past masters at that, and you are going to pay for it, because the kind of rhetoric Canadians are hearing today is the same as they heard in 1988, before the election campaign. During the campaign on free trade, they said this was going to be a terrible thing and that the sun would no longer rise! All I can say is that on January 1, people will realize that the poor—people with an income of less than $30,000—will go to the store and have a little more money in their pockets to pay for their groceries. It won't cost them as much. That is the answer to his question, Mr. Speaker.

• (1630)

[English]

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, I had not imagined that our motion would precipitate such evident panic and hysteria.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McCurdy: But there you have it. In panic he flees the room, the hon. minister of fisheries.

I just want to say this. Nobody on this side ever accused Canadians of being stupid or assumed that they were, not even the 15 per cent who support the government.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, you will recognize me as one of those tie-wearing New Democrats. We do not take the same position as leather-jacket-wearing motor cycle macho Conservatives who would drive over Canadians no matter what they may want.

I think the minister suffers a crude and uncomprehending understanding of the nature of this country. The Canadian people are angry. The Prime Minister said, and I come close to quoting him, that Canadians no longer trust politicians. He said the people believe that politicians no longer listen. It is clear that the politician about whom he was talking was himself. That was the politician who has refused to listen to the people.

My question to the minister of fisheries—which I suspect he will not answer because I do not see him there to answer the question—is why is it not possible for the government party to listen to Canadians and to make no assumptions about who is stupid and who is not. Even those whom he thinks are really stupid nevertheless have particular aspirations and wishes for their country and for themselves. I think that the thing that the government can do, and I would ask why his government does not do it, is to resign and allow the people of Canada, none of them stupid, to have a voice in their future. If that happens, I suspect that future will be in the hands of those of us on this side of the House who wear ties.

Mr. Fulton: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to hear from you, Mr. Speaker, about the propriety of a minister who stood in the House and dished out filthy insults for 30 minutes and then left during the designated period for questions and answers.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order, please. Once more, this is a matter of opinion and not a point of order.

Before recognizing the hon. member for Cape Breton—Richmond East, I would appreciate it if he would tell me whether his party has opted for one 20-minute speech or two 10-minute speeches.

[English]

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I think you might find unanimous consent by all members of Parliament that I would be given the privilege of speaking perhaps for 60 minutes, as opposed to 20. I know the ministers opposite would like to hear my remarks.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I will be speaking for the full allotment of 20 minutes and will then entertain questions thereafter.

I know the point of order raised by my colleague from the New Democratic Party was an opinion that was voiced by him singly, but I can assure him that members on this side of the House share the pith and substance of that comment as it relates to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who has now departed the Chamber.

The 1990s and the century beyond are taking shape and Canada is falling behind. Today, more than ever, Canadians need a vision of what their country can become. Today Canadians expect of their political leaders, not only policies and programs, but an enabling vision that places issues and interest in a greater scheme of things and binds together the lives of individual citizens. They are demanding honest, ethical and law abiding leadership. To that end, the Prime Minister and his Conservative government have failed.

This government has broken faith with the Canadian people and it has gambled recklessly with the country's fate and its future.

The policies and practices of this government are policies that punish provinces and working people, deny education, destroy jobs, and diminish opportunities.

It is a government that presides over people who live on the edge of economic fear or who are experiencing the full and painful realization of those fears. Homeless families with young children are pulling heart strings in every town and city across this land. Men and women who have good jobs today are not sure they will be working tomorrow. Young couples are losing hope that they will ever have a home of their own in the foreseeable future.

The unemployed parent, the hungry child, the native Canadian living in poverty, a closed factory, the local food bank—these are all symbols of the cold heart of conservatism.

Rarely has a government in Canada been given such an historic opportunity to demonstrate vision and rarely has the government failed so badly.

Canadians are being penalized by high interest rates and punished by higher and higher taxes. The Prime Minister of this country and his government are Canada's worst dream come true.

Two years ago we debated at great length the contents of a free trade agreement. My colleagues on this side of the House, as well as Canadians across the country, have shared with one another the facts of the consummation of that agreement.

It was said in that agreement that free trade will help to improve Canada's trade performance. The evidence is contrary. Canada's merchandise trade deficit in October 1989 was the first since 1976. In 1989 Canada posted record deficits in trade, services, and investment income in the current account.

Do you remember, Mr. Speaker, the promise of jobs, jobs, jobs? While 250,000 jobs were created in 1989, this is 100,000 jobs fewer than what was created in 1988.

It was said the free trade agreement will secure access for Canadian exports to the U.S. market. U.S. harassment of Canadian exports continues with various actions taken against Canadian exports of pork, fish, lobster, softwood lumber, yoghurt and ice cream, wheat, poultry, steel, sugar, limousines, raspberries, and heavy equipment.

The free trade agreement will allow, they said, the maintenance and enhancement of social programs and regional development programs for Canada and for Canadians. The evidence is the following.

Deep spending cuts were inflicted on the following budgets: the unemployment insurance program, $1.9 billion; regional development offices, a 25 per cent cut; child care, a promised $5.4 billion program was dropped; transfers to the provinces for health care and post-secondary education were further deindexed, $3 billion over five years; the clawback of old age pensions and family allowances began, a $500 million tax increase annually; and VIA Rail was gutted, $500 million over five years. It goes on.

The government, it said, in the free trade agreement will provide massive adjustment programs for Canadians who lose their jobs due to the free trade agreement. That was one of its corner-stones. Here is the evidence. Despite the de Grandpré Commission report which called for the government to commit another $200 million to training through the UI program, an additional $300 million to the skills shortage training program, and a special $3 billion retraining tax on business to fund job training, the Government of Canada cut its UI contribution by $1.9 billion, cut unemployment benefits for the unemployed, raised UI premiums for employees and employers, and no adjustment programs have been established to deal with the thousands of lay-offs occurring due to plant closures. That was the free trade agreement and that is the clear unequivocal evidence.

The Prime Minister, when it came to children in poverty, said the following in 1983 in his book. I think it should be on the record. The Prime Minister stated:

• (1640)

> And then there is what I call the dimension of tenderness. It is that vital responsibility of government to demonstrate compassion for the needy and assistance for the disadvantaged, the equalization of opportunity for all, and elevated sense of social responsibility that must continue to find favour with every thoughtful Canadian. Of all the challenges of government, no cause is more noble, no obligation more sacred."

That was in 1983. We saw that statement again and again in subsequent throne speeches and in subsequent budgets of the Minister of Finance, but what of the evidence? The evidence is clear, unequivocal and accepted by all except members opposite. More than 1 million Canadian children live in poverty, up 120,000 since 1980, and over 60 per cent of children in single parent families are poor. The relative poverty rate of children in Canada is about 13.4 per cent. That is nearly twice as high as the 7.1 per cent rate in the United Kingdom and more than four times that in Sweden and west Germany.

Just the other day, there was an article in The Toronto Star about the poverty in the city of Montreal. It stated:

> Statistics Canada calculates that one in four people on the Island of Montreal is living in poverty. In Metro Toronto, by comparison, the figures is about one in eight. The face of poverty is not hard to find. It's virtually impossible to walk downtown without being asked repeatedly for money from panhandlers.

It is a very reputable report, Mr. Speaker, and it goes on:

> An estimated 15,000 people are homeless, 4,000 of whom sleep on the street each night while the rest find temporary shelter with friends or relatives.

Yes, we heard, we saw, and we listened to the commitment in terms of the Prime Minister and children on poverty. The evidence is clear. There is no national child care program.

What has it done with regard to old age security in terms of the clawback, the cutting of VIA Rail, and of course the unemployment rate which has ravished high in many regions of the country, including my own constituency.

Perhaps the most telling example of the hypocrisy and the lack of actions by the government opposite comes from a lady who wrote a book called Women and Children Last. I want to quote it for you, Mr. Speaker:

> A social worker at the Izaak Walton Killam Children's Hospital has seen single mothers bringing their babies into the emergency room with diarrhea and vomiting. They tell the doctors who examine their babies they they have been feeding them diluted whole milk or Similac diluted at twice the normal amount. Their welfare cheques were insufficient to permit them to buy Similac, which is much more costly than milk, or to buy enough of it. A month's supply of Similac costs around $60. These mothers are not aware that their efforts to stretch an inadequate income have led to their babies' illnesses. "They just blanch at the thought of having to give the proper amount of Similac because of the cost."

Is there any clear evidence that the foregoing words opposite mean absolutely nothing to millions of Canadians across the country when the evidence is before us all, documented and known by the agencies that service these people?

What better evidence do we have today than the Canadian economy? Interest rates at an alarming rate are causing havoc among small and medium-sized businesses. The dollar is very high, affecting our exports to countries abroad. Inflation is creeping up at a quickened pace and, yes, there is high unemployment in the poorer regions of the country.

This is only to find that a government committed to an agenda of the Prime Minister will turn around and attempt to implement the provisions of the GST, the goods and services tax.

After two years since the last election and the four before that for a total of six, there is much to be said, but the unity of our country is in real danger. There are reasons for that, clear unequivocal reasons. The Prime Minister, in his macho way, has driven Canadians to the brink. I refer to the free trade debate. We were told one thing and now the opposite has occurred. We saw clear evidence where big business in co-operation with government of the day bought the election in 1988. There is clear evidence of that.

We had Meech Lake. I am not commenting on the substance of Meech Lake, but I am commenting on the process. Canadians were disgusted with the Prime Minister who rolled the dice, and Canada as a sovereign nation has felt the effects of that blow ever since.

An hon. member: We're the losers.

Mr. Dingwall: What about the Oka situation, when a Prime Minister of this country neglects, because of lack of caring, sends in the army without having a full and complete debate on the floor of the House of Commons?

Of course, another example which was so vivid for many of us was the Persian Gulf situation. On November 11, I had a rare opportunity to visit with one of the Legions in my constituency. The guest speaker was a gentleman who lost two brothers in the Second World War and another in the Korean War. He said: "I was only a child when that occurred and I could not understand or appreciate the anguish of my parents. But as of August this year, I now know what that anguish was all about, because my eldest son has now gone to the Persian Gulf". We were denied by the Prime Minister and the Conservative majority opposite of debating that decision on the floor of the House of Commons.

Some hon. members: Shame.

Mr. Dingwall: Parliament was not recalled. If that is not Rambo, macho tactics by a Conservative government, I do not know what is. The answers to the unity questions of this country, and I say this sincerely, I regret to say will now not be found in the appointment of a bumbling, eccentric bureaucrat and his citizens' forum. It will not be. We have clear evidence which would lead any reasonable individual to concur with my conclusion.

When historians come to look at the tail end of the century that Laurier said would belong to Canada, they are likely to be struck by the extent of the damage done to the social fabric and political institutions of the country by this government.

The Prime Minister has broken faith with the Canadian people and Canadians have lost hope and faith in themselves. It is a government that fudged the truth about free trade, trains, taxes, family allowances and old age pensions. It is a government that rolled the dice; a government that gambled recklessly on the country's political future.

My leader, the Hon. Jean Chrétien, and the Liberal Party are committed to a better government with a vision of a fair, just and a compassionate nation.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Dingwall: Our goals include the breaking of the poverty barrier for one million Canadian families; putting a decent child care system in place; providing every young Canadian with adequate training for a job; developing a fairer immigration policy; ensuring our farmers and our fishermen stay in business; building new homes for medium and low income families; transforming our industries to make them competitive in the new age of technology; guaranteeing our growing senior citizens population decent, healthful lives; and keeping Canada and Canadians together.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans said that Canadians are not stupid. I concur with that. Canadians are not stupid. That is why, today, they are at 15 per cent in the polls in some regions of this country and that is why in some regions of the country, they are much lower because they know that when it comes to children and poverty, free trade, the Canadian economy and the unity of this country, they may mouth the rhetorical expressions of individuals who believe in a strong and united Canada, but their actions are completely opposite. They have failed the Canadian people. They have failed this institution. They lack the moral authority to govern.

• (1650)

I concur on behalf of my party and its members with the motion put forward by the House leader of the New Democratic Party today in this Chamber. We would invite at the first possible opportunity an election in this country to debate the record of this government. If they are so confident of their case, allow them to take their case to the highest court in the land, and the highest court in the land is the people of this country.

I say to this Prime Minister and to those Conservative members opposite, put your money where your mouth is, let's go to the polls and let the people decide.

Mr. Murray W. Dorin (Edmonton Northwest): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who just spoke talked about hypocrisy and lack of action. Frankly, I have rarely heard such a speech that was laden with so much of it.

I would like to ask him a question and I would like to focus this way, because he is suggesting there should be an election. I would say to him that at a proper time there will be and perhaps at that time his party would be willing to unveil just what their alternative would be if they were so fortunate as to win the election, which I doubt will happen.

In 1937 the Liberals appointed a royal commission, the Rowell–Sirois commission. It reported in 1940, criticizing the pyramiding resulting from the imposition of the existing manufacturers' sales tax and called for change.

In 1955, the Liberal government of the day appointed a sales tax committee to study the commodity taxes. In 1956, again it appointed another committee. A later government in 1962 appointed a royal commission to inquire into and report upon the incidents and effects of taxation and to recommend improvements. In 1966, it reported, and said that there should be an alternative to the existing federal sales tax. I quote from Hansard of 1974 as follows:

> Also, the reduction of sales tax on building materials should remind us that when the legislation covering reform of the personal and corporate income tax became law two years ago, it was stated that the next stage of tax reform would deal with federal sales and excise taxes. Nothing has been heard about the status of that review since then, and I suggest it is time we had a report on what is happening with it. The fact is, however, that a major change was made on what is essentially an ad hoc basis, in our sales tax system in the current budget. This is a strong argument for the completion of this review and the publication by the government of proposals for public discussion.

That was the hon. member for Windsor West in 1974. Finally, in 1975, as part of the federal budget, the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Turner at the time, introduced a discussion paper. That discussion paper had a good deal to say about value added taxes. I will not read it all here now. It talked about value added taxes and what should be done with the existing federal sales tax.

In June 1977 the federal government directed that further study was in order. It appointed the commodity tax review group, an assortment of selected bureaucrats in the Departments of National Revenue and Finance.

The Liberals have paid for royal commissions, bureaucratic reports and public study into the flaws of the tax for 50 years. These studies repeatedly recommended changes, but no action. Finally, in 1982, the government was going to do something. Price–Waterhouse excitedly reported that the long awaited changes to the federal tax system as well as some changes in excise taxes were announced by then Finance Minister Allan MacEachen in his budget. Then Finance Minister MacEachen, of course, we know where he is now.

My question to the member is when will he and his party tell us just what exactly they would suggest if there was an election?

An hon. member: Gas at 18 cents a gallon.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier, on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The Standing Orders provide for 10 minutes of questions and comments. Today, I noticed that the Conservative members in particular are taking up the entire 10-minute period, so there is no time to answer questions. Could we ask the hon. member what his question is so that we can answer it?

An hon. member: Exactly!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): The question was just asked. The Opposition Whip.

[English]

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to respond to that tirade of information as put forward by the hon. member, but no amount of rhetorical comments or references to documentations about previous committees, standing committees, or previous governments which may have looked at tax reform will be able to convince members on this side of the House, but more important, Canadians, that the GST is a good tax. We believe it is a bad tax and we should not proceed with it. That is why the Liberal Party of Canada in the Senate and in the House of Commons is opposed to the goods and services tax.

Specifically with regard to the hon. member's question, it was he and the Prime Minister who talked about the great reconciliation of federal and provincial governments. They cannot even get their Tory cousins to support the GST, Mr. Speaker. What nonsense, what hypocrisy by the hon. member opposite. He should know better than to stand in his place and ask such a ridiculous, ill-founded, illogical, stupid question.

Mrs. Catterall: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a very simple short question.

I wonder if the hon. member would also include in his comment the former Liberal finance committee critic. Would he also consider him a bumbling eccentric?

Also, would the hon. member advise the House if, in his view and in his own words, Mr. Keith Spicer was in fact a bumbling, eccentric bureaucrat when the Liberal government appointed him language commissioner?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the last question which was raised by the hon. member I think the answer, I regret to say, will now not be found in the appointment of a bumbling eccentric bureaucrat in his citizens' forum. I stand by that, Mr. Speaker.

We have had all sorts of evidence. We do not know where the citizens' forum is going. We hear one day they are not going to go into Quebec, then they may go into Quebec. We may have northerners. We may not have northerners. We do not know the terms of reference, the terms of reference are changed. That is what I have said, Mr. Speaker, and I stand by that statement.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to my friend's comments. I would ask him to comment on the problems facing a community like mine in Surrey where in the last several weeks the unemployment rate has gone up so that we have a thousand new claimants a week, where the number of people using the food bank has gone up by 200 families a month since August. There are now 5,000 families in Surrey dependent on the food bank—2,000 children dependent on the food bank—where the school board is being forced to look at feeding hungry children. People came to me over the weekend and said: "I have been laid off. I have worked at the same wood industry company for 15 years and I am going to lose my home".

Mr. MacDougall: That's the environmentalists, my friend.

Mr. Karpoff: Why say environmentalists? You can depend on this: It is your free trade deal, your high interest rates, and your high dollar that is driving the lumber industry out of business in British Columbia. The lumber industry is being driven out of business because of the Tory economic policies.

Mothers came and said to me: "My rent has gone from $600 a month to $900 a month and I do not have enough money left to feed my children". Their only comment was: "What are we going to do? How are we going to survive this Tory recession?"

It feels the same as the recession brought on by the Liberals in 1981-1982.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I concur with the former part of the hon. member's question. I thought he was going to go on and talk about the various job losses which have resulted from the free trade agreement. For his information and that of members of the House, I thought he was going to talk about Gillette in Montreal which closed and there were 590 jobs lost. There was Germain, in Lachine, Quebec, where 50 jobs were lost; Pittsburgh Paint in Toronto, 139 jobs were lost; Weston Foods in Longueuil, Quebec, 360 jobs were lost; and Northern Telecom, in Aylmer, Quebec, 680 jobs were lost.

• (1700)

I am sure the hon. member has not checked with his colleague from the province of Quebec. We do not know where he stands on any of the issues. Let the hon. member be very clear in his own mind that the free trade agreement has not only caused great problems for the people of British Columbia, but it has caused great problems for all Canadians, including parts of Atlantic Canada, Ontario, as well as the province of Quebec.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Resuming debate. It is now the New Democratic Party's turn. Its members have agreed to split their 20 minutes in two 10-minute speeches.

[English]

I recognize the hon. member for Skeena for 10 minutes.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate. The non-confidence motion in the Prime Minister and the government says:

> That this House express its loss of confidence in the Prime Minister—

It is quite clear from what we heard in terms of the lead speech on the government side by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, if he is the heaviest hitter out of the largest cabinet in Canadian history and if that was the speech that Canadians are to read and listen to as to why that Prime Minister and that party should be supported and stay in government, it is just not possible. The buffoonery and the insults that were tossed around this House by the minister of fisheries indicates that even in cabinet there is no longer any confidence in the Prime Minister. I am sure that when the Prime Minister reads that speech he will be somewhat less than amused to see that is what the cabinet decided to do and to put up in terms of support for him.

This is the same Prime Minister whose entire legacy from his years in the private sector, particularly with Iron Ore, was to leave Schefferville a ghost town. That seems to be the growing legacy that my colleagues have touched on here today: growing unemployment, growing bankruptcies, growing losses in the manufacturing sector, and growing losses in the fisheries sector. A thousand farmers who lost their farms in the first six months of this year in Saskatchewan alone. Whether it is the free trade agreement, how he and his cabinet have handled GATT matters, the high dollar, the rising interest rates or the real concerns of the people of this country, the Prime Minister is pursuing a pathetic policy and vision.

I would like to spend sometime on the environment. This is a government, clearly from its record, that puts economic considerations ahead of the environment. It puts political considerations ahead of the environment and always puts profit considerations ahead of the environment. This is leading to the accelerated destruction of Canada's nature and well-being and the hope and vision of young people about this marvellous part of the globe.

Despite the Prime Minister's endorsation of the Brundtland report at the United Nations itself and his own back-patting and back-patting of his colleagues under the pretence of implementing sustainable development, I think one will find from my remarks that I can put all of that to a lie, to use the minister of fisheries, language.

The Prime Minister and the Tory party have proven to be true believers in the philosophy that the environment is free and that resource exploitation is unlimited. They have failed to understand that it is no longer the limits to growth; it is now the growth of limits world-wide. Tragically Canada's environment has been substantially damaged by decisions which pay only lip service to the true cost accounting of projects large and small.

In the Atlantic part of Canada the fisheries resource has been overexploited, not by the inshore fishermen, not by those from Newfoundland, New Brunswick or Nova Scotia, or even those few from Prince Edward Island and the province of Quebec. What has happened is that irresponsible political and management decisions have tossed thousands of fishermen and shore workers out of work.

On the B.C. coast—it is too bad the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans chose to leave before Question Period was over—there have been forced closures in terms of prawn, shrimp, crab, abalone, clams, and now several species of not only ground fish but anadromous species due to both pollution and mismanagement.

Hibernia has been approved without any serious environmental assessment, a project that poses a severe risk to the existing Atlantic fishery, a project with $2.7 billion in federal support to subsidize the delivery of oil not to Canadians but solely to the United States. Not a drop of that oil will go to Newfoundland. Not a drop of that oil will ever see the inside of a consumer's home or vehicle in this country.

The forests of every maritime province and in fact of every province in this country are in crisis from overcutting, inadequate replanting, and inadequate protection. The government and the Minister of State for Forestry produced the document that they love to hand around in British Columbia, across the prairies, throughout Ontario and in maritime Canada called Green Ghetto, attacking the Liberals for spending less than 10 cents out of every dollar in revenue from Canada's largest industry and largest employer and putting it back into the forests. The Minister of State for Forestry should be ashamed. They are now spending less than the Liberals did. They are spending less than 10 cents out of every dollar raised.

This is the government that is now spending more capital on forest projects outside Canada than inside Canada. That is an interesting form of largesse for the largest wood exporter in the world, the country that has 10 per cent of the world's forests. It is an interesting figure to keep in mind.

In the province of Quebec with only 1 per cent protected lands, the lowest percentage of protected lands of any zone, region, province, or territory in Canada, this government is indirectly supporting the James Bay II project without a full environmental assessment, a $24 billion project. They have waited for two years while an assessment could have been going on, bickering back and forth with the province of Quebec about terms of reference for environmental assessment. Now we see there is only going to be an initial environmental evaluation of the infrastructure, of the roads and the airports.

As I said in the House yesterday, these could be roads which go nowhere or they could be airports in the wrong place. Any intelligent government would have an environmental assessment of the dams, the reservoirs, the areas to be flooded and the impact on the Cree, the Inuit, wild fowl, marine mammals, fish, as well as the atmospheric impacts of this project which will divert and dam five river systems.

The government hopes to claim balance of convenience in the courts somewhere down the road, have $600 million or $700 million spent on roads, airports, and infrastructure, and then say: "Like in the Rafferty–Alameda case by the Court of Queen's Bench economic considerations have to come ahead of the environment". This is completely contrary to Brundtland and completely contrary to the personal promises of the Prime Minister.

This massive project, the largest industrial project ever conceived in the history of North America, will proceed without Canadians knowing what kinds of incredibly horrific impacts there will be, not only on the wildlife populations, not only on the fish, not only on the aboriginal people who have lived there for 10,000 years or more, but on the atmosphere and on the climate of all of eastern North America, and this without even looking at the alternatives.

As Dr. Lovins pointed out to the committee that I sit on, simply by going to energy efficiency and conservation on the island of Montreal alone we could save more power than is produced by James Bay I.

Who is kidding whom about who the worshipees of these megaprojects are? They are the Prime Minister and the premier of Quebec. It is not the people of Quebec. It is not Canadians who will benefit from this kind of megaproject. No one will benefit from not having a proper environmental assessment of a project of this magnitude. It is a not so cunning approach.

Let us spend a moment on the Rafferty–Alameda. This was a colossal bungle. Three ministers in a row sold out of the environment: Tom McMillan, the hon. member for Lac–Saint–Jean and now the present minister. They plead before the courts in sworn affidavits that there will be irreparable harm to the environment and then they do nothing about it. On the Oldman, in Alberta, it is almost exactly the same thing: once again a deal cut with a few Tory friends, exclude the public from any serious process, and never carry out the minister's own statutory responsibilities. The same thing happened with Rafferty.

There are $13 billion worth of pulp mill proposals on the drawing boards, proposals to cut one–third of the entire land mass of the province of Alberta. Where is the government showing leadership in its clear constitutional sector of responsibility for water and the atmosphere?

• (1710 )

Where are the cumulative impact studies for Alberta, for British Columbia, and for the other provinces? With 40 per cent of the marine pollution in Canada coming from that one sector, and the government continues to promise clean–up, continues to promise all kinds of things, but never bothers to talk about the fact that there is already a closed loop technology for the pulping industry. Where is some leadership on that, some kind of support for those who have to draw their water from those areas?

In British Columbia the Kemano II project was exempted by Order in Council. Five ministers of fisheries in a row, including the present Speaker, promised that there would be a full public inquiry and a complete environmental assessment and review. In writing the present Prime Minister promised the people of British Columbia there would be a full public inquiry and environmental assessment.

Was there one? No. This government's word, this Prime Minister's word is not worth the paper that it is written on. It is not worth the amount of time it takes for Canadians to listen to the promises made by this Conservative Party and this Prime Minister.

I rest my case, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the member has talked about job loss in British Columbia. His riding is one that has a lot of rain forest in it. I think all members knows that. The Western Canada Wilderness Committee has said that its stated goal is to stop all logging activity in the rain forest.

Does the member support that goal of the Western Canada Wilderness Committee?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, as is often the case with that particular member, he misstates not only the positions of other groups and other parties; he quite often misstates his own position.

Mr. Friesen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, first of all that statement is out of order and, second, I quoted accurately the statement of the Western Canada Wilderness Committee.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, it is worth taking a look at the forest sector in British Columbia, because here is a member on the government side who condemned previous federal governments for spending less than 10 cents out of a dollar taken in revenue from the workers and the industry and putting it back into replanting. This is the government that is offering only $100 million for a five–year forest renewal agreement, when the provincial government wanted to go for a $1 billion five–year agreement and then a $700 million agreement.

By cutting back on the amount of funds available to a province such as British Columbia, where about half of the forest related activity in this country takes place, means that there is going to have to be reduction in the cut in the province of British Columbia. Even people like Dr. Pearce from the University of British Columbia now admit that to be the case.

What has happened is that as the cutting of the old growth forest in British Columbia has gone from 50 million cubic metres a year to more than 100 million cubic metres a year and the profits of the large integrated forest companies have almost doubled, we have seen a reduction of almost a third of the organized labour working in that sector.

It is quite clear, if the member would like to read the vote that was taken in his own majority Conservative forestry committee of this Parliament, it endorses the setting aside of 12 per cent of all of the forests and all of the watersheds on Vancouver Island and throughout this country. He might want to read his own government supported policy on forestry as it relates to British Columbia.

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint–Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, during his presentation the hon. member for Skeena said: "Who is kidding whom". I would like to ask the hon. member for Skeena about who is kidding whom.

You talk a very good story You talk about many things, but you do not talk about this country. You like to blame the premier. Mind you, I agree they have almost destroyed this country but, for your sake and from your side, what about members of your party who are also working for the destruction of Canada and the separation of a province that I represent?

Let us hear the NDP philosophy on that. Let us not only talk about environment. Let us talk about this country.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the question is that the hon. member has put. What I will say is that the history of this party, of the leaders and the members of this party, is a long and honourable one in attempting to keep this country as one united country.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, from the tone of the member's remarks that somehow or other this party is in some way encouraging the break-up of this country. That is quite far from the truth. Anyone who wants to read what this party has had to say both in this House and across this nation about steps we should be taking to try to encourage the province of Quebec to feel it has a real, long-term, unifying part to play in this marvellous nation of ours has not listened to what members on this side and in this party have had to say.

I have not heard anything particularly productive or useful said by the recent leaders of the Liberal Party in relation to the problems that Quebec faces, problems that we have seen while the majority of that party have found their support from the province of Quebec. The present government also finds the majority of its seats to stay in power in the province of Quebec. To try and blame the problems of this country and problems that Quebec is having with the nation as a whole on the NDP is a wee bit hypocritical.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Resuming debate. The hon. parliamentary secretary on a point of order.

Mr. MacDougall: Mr. Speaker, I would ask consent of the House to allow us to continue with some questions to our hon. friend. I am sure that those of us who come from regions of the country that rely heavily on the resource sector would love to be able to find out really what is the policy of the NDP member concerning whether he wants a resource to be there, or whether he does not.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Is there unanimous consent for continuing questions and comments?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[English]

An hon. member: No.

An hon. member: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDougall: Mr. Speaker, when we listened to the hon. member—

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I may have misunderstood what you meant, but I understand that we were running a rotation and that the New Democrats were splitting up their section, so my hon. colleague would be next, Sir.

Mr. Butland: On debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): There is no consent. Resuming debate. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie has 10 minutes for his speech.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, before I start my speech I would like to congratulate my hon. colleague. I am sure he is going to make an excellent minister of the environment after the next election.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Butland: Having said that, I want to get to the resolution:

> That this House express its loss of confidence in the Prime Minister and call upon him to resign and immediately call an election.

It does not take an election. If we had a vote in this country right now, overwhelmingly, 85 per cent at least, would say, "Resign, get out." We don't need an election to get that result. What is the greatest accomplishment of this government? Seventy-one per cent could not cite anything, according to a poll in the paper today. They could not cite any kind of accomplishment, let alone a great accomplishment.

Mr. Speaker, we are talking about leadership. I went to a book and tried to find a quotation that fits this Prime Minister. It was impossible, but I would like to cite a few. "A leader is a dealer in hope". Napoleon Bonaparte said that. Certainly this leader does not deal in hope. He has dealt in despair.

An hon. member: Yeah, ruined the country.

Mr. Butland: Mao Tse Lung says, "For the best leaders, the people do not notice their existence". Well, this summer we did not notice this leader, but much of the rest of the time we do recognize him.

The next best quotation: The people honour and praise. Of course we know that that is not true. We are going down the list. Next: The people fear. And then, the people hate. I am not happy to say that the people in my community not only say that the Prime Minister is not a good leader, but they dislike him. Some people say, "We hate him". I think that is a sad statement for anybody to make, even an opposition member.

The former leader of the Liberal Party took us in the wrong direction, but at least he would give the country direction. It was the wrong direction but the country respected that person as a leader. This country is wandering without any direction.

• (1720 )

When the best leader's work is done, the people say: "We did it ourselves. We did it." With the operations of this government, there is no "we". It is a royal "we" or "I".

A chief is a man who assumes responsibility. He says: "I was beaten." He does not say: "My men and women were beaten." I think the Prime Minister should say: "I am a beaten person, but the rest of you do not have to come down with me. It is not necessary."

This is the second anniversary, and all MPs are happy about that I am sure. An anniversary is a happy event. We as MPs get to go to many anniversaries and celebrate with people on special occasions, on 50th and 60th anniversaries, as I did last week, and it makes us happy. This anniversary does not make Canadian people happy. They despair. It is a dirge. There is a pall over the country. There is gloom and doom everywhere. It is a sad state of affairs.

An hon. member: Only in your riding.

Mr. Butland: Only in my riding, and I will get to that. Only in my riding, caused by this government's policies. That is why there is a pall in my community. The government shut down the steel industry. It is impossible to sell any steel in the United States. It is impossible because of high interest rates and the free trade agreement, which this government said: "Without free trade, these shipments could be subject to quotas, increased tariffs, embargoes or freezes."

Where will the extra production go? I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, it will not go anywhere because the United States has precluded us from selling any kind of steel in the U.S. market.

I know the hon. member for Burlington is a very sincere man. He is an expert in steel, but surely he must agree that this free trade agreement has been an abomination for the steel industry in this country.

Going along with high interest rates and the inflated Canadian dollar is a good reason for the dirge and pall in my community, as the minister has cited. It is at their doorstep that 6,000 people were out of work for 15 weeks. As of today, there will be 600 or 800 people called back. This situation is most unfortunate.

The sad part of it is the labour dispute may not be deemed to have ended. I hesitate to say this, Mr. Speaker, but the workers may not receive unemployment insurance unless there is an immediate change of policy, some compassion shown by the minister and the department so that these people will have some hope of at least a reasonable Christmas.

Don't say that it is only my constituency where there is a pall. It can cite any number of constituencies, including those of government members which must be suffering as well. It is a litany of lost jobs and closures right across this country.

The policies play no favourites. It is not only Sault Ste. Marie. It is right across the country. I am sure constituents are telling government members this each and every day that they go into their constituencies. If I were on the government side, I certainly would not want to go into my constituency. It is a government without a leader and I think the crew is ready to mutiny.

I understand that it is difficult to get members to go to committee.

Mr. Boudria: What committees?

Mr. Dingwall: "What committees?", they say. When they do go, I understand they are very silent because if they speak, that will give away everything. They do not want to be there to defend any of the government policies.

An hon. member: Indefensible policies.

Mr. Butland: They are indefensible policies. Oka, the Persian Gulf, PetroCan, Open Skies policies, the GST, the clawback and the free trade agreement, are impossible to defend. I would not go to committee either. I would not want to go to committee.

Mr. Richardson: You've got the heavyweights out today.

Mr. Butland: Indeed. Well said.

I want to get back to the steel industry that this government has truly decimated. When our own people who work in trade suggest that we are fair traders, why do the Americans not treat us fairly? Why do they not?

Even our own Canadian Trade Tribunal has removed dumping tariffs against 11, 12 or 13 other countries. We say: "Let their steel come in. There is no evidence that they might dump. There is no evidence." Yet the Americans harass us on a regular basis and the dispute panel mechanism has been a total flop.

Even the Algoma Steel Corporation has suggested we have lost faith. I do not blame them because we cannot win. I have read the rulings. I am not a lawyer, but the language tells a layperson that we cannot win a ruling. It is impossible. So what has this bought? What does the government say? Well, our people say we are fair traders and why are we treated this way? The Americans jump all over us and we do not even say ouch. We do not say anything. We are silent.

I think it is time that this government played a little bit of hard ball with the Americans. I know the hon. member for Burlington would agree with me, that we have not been aggressive enough. We have been too quiet. We are silent. I have written letters but obviously that does not mean anything. Someone says we have the heavyweights out today. Well, maybe that is it. They do not pay attention to anybody. They would never pay attention to an MP from lowly Sault Ste. Marie. Well it is time they listened.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Butland: The Canadian people will demand that the government listens. I think the people in Sault Ste. Marie will demand that it listens.

The Prime Minister should do the honourable thing, not only for everybody here in the House, but for the good of the Canadian people, even for his own members. I think he should do them a favour. Get a new leader and we might get some new direction. We look upon that favourably.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, earlier, as you know, I tried to extend the question period of the hon. member for Skeena, but knowing the manner in which the NDP like to hit and run, I felt that probably I could not get that.

Mr. Fulton: You know the rules.

Mr. MacDougall: What I would like to say is that for many years the NDP always had the feeling of the working people, that they were there to support them in the regions of the country. They were there to support the miners, the loggers, the individuals working in industries, the resources, the fishermen, the agricultural communities. The NDP was always there to stand up for and believe in the fact that this country was built from its resources.

I have been here nine years now and the last number of years it is unbelievable the way they have flip-flopped. The party that was built to form and strengthen Canada for the working people has thrown that out the window. They are too interested in supporting the interest groups, those that are willing to put our miners out of work, put our bush workers out of work, put our fishermen out of work because it is popular and because it is the urban centres of this country from which they get their votes. They have more interest in the power of being in power, which will never happen, rather than representing the regions of this country.

I ask this question of the hon. member from Sault Ste. Marie, someone who comes from northern Ontario. Someone should be standing up and fighting for northern Ontario rather than sitting back taking this gunk that is coming from the hon. member for Skeena.

I ask the hon. member, does he not think that Fednor, which was developed for northern Ontario, has benefited regions of northern Ontario? Does he not believe in the Sudbury neutrino centre? It is the only one in the world. Does he not support that? Does he not support the fact that the Nordic Games are coming to northern Ontario? Does he not support Community Futures?

These are policies that have been developed by the Prime Minister and this government. Northern Ontario is something that the previous government forgot about. I say to the hon. member, if he is really sincere about northern Ontario, if he is really sincere about what is happening, would he fight the hon. member for Skeena and fight for those people who live in the regions of this country?

• (1730)

Mr. Butland: Mr. Speaker, that was a meandering question which I suppose is someway related to the environment. Since the government is polluting just about everything, there is some analogy there. I do not think our party needs to apologize to anyone, especially the people across the way.

They cite interest groups. We have no problem paying attention to interest groups. We have no problem at all. If somebody does not, then who makes up the interest groups? Who are in the interest groups? They are Canadian people. And what is the problem with that?

Where I thought it humorous was when the hon. member mentioned specific programs such as Community Futures which was initiated by my predecessor. I am sorry but that program does not work. The people in it are doing a great job, but their hands are tied, totally tied.

If an application is approved in my community, it will then go to Sudbury. If it is approved in Sudbury, it will then go to Toronto. If it is approved in Toronto, it will then go to Ottawa. If it is approved in Ottawa, it still may go to the minister's office and they say: "Oh, no, that is not a good application."

Do not tell me how wonderful these government programs are. The people do the best they can with the programs, but they are of no great benefit to northern Ontario. The money could be better spent.

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in the debate this afternoon and I hope that the House will not be overly disturbed if I actually address the subject of the motion.

It is an extraordinary motion. It states:

> That this House express its loss of confidence in the Prime Minister and call upon him to resign and immediately call an election.

What a preposterous comment.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): There are the appropriate gestures from the trained seals on the other side of the House, Mr. Speaker, and probably a similar quality of noise, but not much insight. It is a ridiculous comment.

Today is the second anniversary of the second electoral victory of our Prime Minister, the right hon. Brian Mulroney.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): The current Prime Minister has led the Government of Canada for approximately six years. I think the record of the Prime Minister speaks for itself, but I would like to have the pleasure of addressing it this afternoon because I think what we have seen is a great leader, not just of a government, but a great leader of a party and a great leader of a great nation.

I come from a part of the country that does not take its position in the House for granted because for many years people in my part of the country felt disenfranchised from what went on in Ottawa. For much of my adult life, the voice of British Columbia has been a voice crying in the wilderness. I seem to recall the Salmon Arm salute and other gestures of congeniality from governments of Canada and leaders of Canada toward my part of the country.

Since 1984, the voice of the west and the voice of British Columbia in particular has been heard more strongly in the Government of Canada than at any other time in my adult lifetime. In fact, in my whole life, with the exception of a vague memory I have of Mr. Diefenbaker's government back in the late 1950s and early 1960s, this is the only time I can remember truly feeling enfranchised in Ottawa on the government side of the House.

The party that forms the government is a party with truly national roots and the leader of this party is a leader who has been capable of creating a party with truly national roots. I would argue that that is in and of itself a sign of remarkable leadership.

When the Prime Minister of Canada sits at his cabinet table and looks at his ministers, he sees a profile of the country. That profile is only enhanced and enlarged when he sits in his national caucus, which he does faithfully every week, to listen to all his members, to listen to their concerns.

Mr. Fulton: He wasn't there today. Every week, my foot!

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): I did not realize that the hon. member from the NDP was visiting our national caucus. I regret he is not the one we would welcome most across the floor. We kind of like that cute blond-haired guy that sits in the front row, but if you are keen, I am sure we can work something out.

Given the diversity of regional outlooks in the country and given the extraordinary variety of concerns that preoccupy Canadians—because, notwithstanding that we are a small country of 26 million people, we inhabit the second largest land mass of a country in the world—it is a sign of the extraordinary leadership capability that the Prime Minister has forged a great national governing party that is able to do the work of governing Canada for all Canadians and where all Canadians know their voices are well heard.

The Prime Minister has the loyalty of those who serve him and serve with him. He has the loyalty because he returns that loyalty. One of the aspects of leadership that is very often ignored is one of the things that is most important and that is the ability to create a team. When that is missing, it is very obvious, but it is a strength that often goes unnoticed when it is present because it simply creates the foundation for effective action.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Order, please. I would ask all hon. members to be co-operative so that we will be able to hear what the next speaker has to say. I would appreciate the co-operation of both sides of the House.

The Minister of Justice.

[English]

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, out of this extraordinary national organization, a national political force led by an extraordinary national leader, we have an opportunity for the people of my part of the country to have their voices heard as they never have been heard before, or certainly not for much of this century.

The west has in a sense been re-enfranchised, thanks to this Prime Minister. There are 10 western ministers in the Government of Canada. They hold very important portfolios, portfolios that are important to the people of the west: agriculture, grains and oilseeds, energy, defence, and many other portfolios. That western voice in the Government of Canada has been reflected in the policy of the Government of Canada where western interests have been responded to and the aspirations of western Canadians have finally had an opportunity to be realized.

That is not just because the Prime Minister believes that he is the Prime Minister for all Canadians. In addition to being a leader deeply committed to all the country, he is also a leader with the courage to take the difficult structural decisions that for so long were left untaken by governments in the country which resulted, not just in the economic disadvantage of the country, but in the strains between the regions of the country.

I will give you as a prime example the issue that brought me into federal politics, the free trade agreement. In 1975 the four western premiers met at an economic development conference. They published a manifesto in which they urged the Government of Canada to focus on opening up markets with the United States. For western Canada that was the natural base upon which they could develop their economies, diversify them and get them away from the terrible boom-and-bust dependence on resource economies.

For much of our country's history, it has seemed to those of us in the west that our economy was regarded as a source of raw materials for the industrialization of central Canada and we had a tariff policy that was designed to protect industries in central Canada, whether or not they were efficient.

Those were of great concern to leaders in western Canada. In 1975 the western premiers published a document calling on the Government of Canada to reduce tariffs with the United States and open up opportunities. It is interesting that the document was signed by four western premiers, only one of whom was a Conservative, Peter Lougheed from Alberta. The other three were members of the New Democratic Party—Ed Schreyer, Allan Blakeney, and Dave Barrett from British Columbia.

There is nothing partisan about the concern of western Canadians for the destructive effect of the traditional Canadian tariff policy on our economy.

Mr. Fisher: That was 1972.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): It was 1975 and in fact it was a very accurate outlook.

The Prime Minister, like many people in this part of the country, had originally taken the view that free trade would be a disaster. Like most people in central Canada, his first instinct was to protect the central Canadian economic base. But part of the greatness of the Prime Minister is reflected in his ability to rethink and re-evaluate his own views.

When the Macdonald Royal Commission came down with its report and strongly recommended that the Government of Canada negotiate a free trade agreement with the United States, the Prime Minister had the kind of integrity to re-examine his own views and to recognize that in fact his previous views of hostility toward a free trade agreement may in fact have been wrong. Perhaps there was a broader national interest that could better be served by liberalizing trade with the United States.

People who opposed the free trade agreement used to like to say: "Well, 80 per cent of our trade with the United States is already tariff-free." That is a very misleading statistic, because that was 80 per cent of existing trade. How much trade could there have been? How would the volume of trade be affected by reducing tariff barriers?

In my own province, the reason British Columbia governments of all partisan stripe have been opposed to the national tariff policy is because, as a country with resource industries, we found that we could sell our unprocessed raw materials into the United States without a problem, but, as soon as we began to add value to them, the tariff barriers went up.

It is very hard to carry, for example, a 19 per cent tariff barrier on processed zinc and still remain competitive. Therefore, there was no trade in processed zinc between the United States and British Columbia. Therefore, the potential of a trade in processed zinc never entered into the calculations when people talked said: "Well, 80 per cent of our trade is already tariff-free." That 20 per cent that was not contained within it has the potential for enormous growth and development.

It is very interesting that since the implementation of the free trade agreement and since this government has come to power, British Columbia is one of the economies that has taken off. With those barriers beginning to disappear, people want to invest in British Columbia and bring in value-added production. My part of the country owes a great deal of gratitude to the courage of Brian Mulroney.

Not only is it the free trade agreement, but it is the approach of this government to regional economic development. The western diversification program is one of the most effective programs for economic development that the country has ever seen. It is a program that suits the sense of fiscal conservatism in western Canada. We are very close to our pioneer roots in western Canada. We do not like a lot of waste in government spending and I will come back to this in a moment.

Grants from the Western Diversification Fund are almost all repayable. About 75 per cent of them will be repaid to the Government of Canada. The leverage of western diversification funding to private sector funding is one to fifteen. I challenge any government in the world to find that kind of productivity. That means that, for every dollar of public funds that goes into a project, $15 of private sector funding comes along with it.

The western diversification program is non-partisan and non-political. I meet many recipients of western diversification funding. They are enormously creative and able people who just need a leg-up in developing new markets and building prototypes to begin to get sales. They tell me that when they take a western diversification approval to a financial institution it is enough for the financial institution to grant them funding, so valued and so admired is the vetting process of western diversification.

It is a program designed to meet the specific needs of western Canada which, for so long, has struggled as hewers of wood and drawers of water, reapers of grain, and diggers of minerals, but without the opportunity to diversify that potential and without the ability to insure itself against the vagaries of the fluctuations in prices of international commodities. This is a luxury which people in central Canada have enjoyed for a very long time, but something which is not part of the western experience.

Perhaps westerners are closer to their roots. They have a real concern about fiscal responsibility. Perhaps they are closer to their prairie or pioneer roots—

Mr. Nault: Us northerners are as close as you get.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Northerners may be even closer, but westerners are very close to their pioneer roots. They have a great concern for fiscal responsibility.

It is interesting that the finance minister in British Columbia, Mr. Mel Couvelier, has stated that Michael Wilson has done a better job than any finance minister in Canada in restraining government spending.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the business of Supply, pursuant to Standing Order 81(14).

The question is on the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. DeBlois): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:
