Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below.

L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

Law Library
York University
Toronto

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol \rightarrow (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ∇ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

Law Library
York University

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole \rightarrow signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ∇ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT

BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE PROVINCES OF ONTARIO AND MANITOBA IN REGARD TO THE TERRITORY IN DISPUTE BETWEEN THEM, 18th DECEMBER, 1883.

JOINT
APPENDIX.
Sec. I.
Reference to the Privy Council.

In order to have the question of the title to the disputed territory set at rest at the earliest possible day, as between the two Provinces, so far as the same is possible by the action of the said Provinces, Agreement between Ontario and Manitoba, 18th December, 1883.

And in order to avoid unnecessary conflicts or collisions in the meantime between the courts or officers of the two Governments, and to make the best practicable arrangement on which the two Governments can now unite as to matters within Provincial jurisdiction, for the administration of justice and the preservation of peace and order, the said Governments of Ontario and Manitoba agree as follows:

1. Neither Government is to be understood by this Agreement as abandoning any claim such Government has heretofore made, or had, to, or in, the disputed territory, or any part thereof.

30. The Joint Case hereto annexed is hereby mutually agreed to by the said Governments provisionally, and subject to the following understanding, viz:

If Mr. Christopher Robinson, counsel for Manitoba, or Mr. Mowat, on behalf of Ontario, should hereafter be of opinion that there ought to be some variation of the said Case, as to the forms of the 20 questions submitted, or otherwise, and notifies in writing such opinion to the other on behalf of Ontario or Manitoba, as the case may be, on or before the fifteenth of February next, the said Case is to be varied in any way that they may agree, or, if they differ, the said variation may be decided in manner hereinafter provided with respect to documentary evidence as to which the parties may differ; but no variation is to be made after the 15th April next.*

31. Either Government may apply, ex parte, to Her Majesty, or to the Judicial Committee, to have the said Case set down for argument in the month of June or July, 1884. If the said Joint Case is not set down to be argued in June or July next, or is not argued then, either party may apply at any time, ex parte, to have the said Case set down or argued at such other time as the Judicial Committee aforesaid may appoint.

30 32. For the purpose of considering the question of the true boundary the following evidence is to be submitted to the Privy Council, quantum valeat:

(1) The Book of Arbitration Documents; the Cases submitted to the Arbitrators on behalf of the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Ontario respectively; and all maps referred to in the said Book or said Cases.

(2) The Acts of the Legislature of Ontario on the subject of the boundaries.

(3) All other documents which were produced before the Select Committee of the House of Commons, or which have come into the possession of either Government.

40 (4) The notes of Chief Justice Sewell on the trial of the De Reinhard case, on their authenticity being established to the satisfaction of the Judge, or Judge, hereinafter referred to, or of the Attorney-General of Ontario.

* Variations were afterwards agreed to by Mr. Robinson and Mr. Mowat, and the "Special Case" printed post is the "Joint Case" as so varied.

JOINT APPENDIX.
Sec. I.
Reference to the Privy Council.
Agreement between Ontario and Manitoba, 18th December, 1883.

(5) In case of any question arising with respect to any documentary evidence, as to whether it should be included in the Joint Case, the question is to be referred, at the instance of either party, to the Chief Judges of the Appeal Courts of Toronto, viz, the Honourable Messieurs Spragge, Hagarty, Wilson, and Boyd, or a majority of them; or the Attorneys-General of the two Provinces, or their Agents in this behalf, are to have power to jointly refer any such questions to one or two of the said Chief Judges, or to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada. The decision in any of such cases, if certified by the Judges, or Judge, before the 15th April next, shall be final as regards the submission of such evidence to the Privy Council, quantum valeat, and the evidence, with the certificate of the Judges, or Judge, shall be forthwith printed. No evidence not certified before the 15th April next shall be submitted.

(6) The papers set forth in Ontario Sessional Paper, 1882, numbered 69, and the subsequent correspondence between the Province of Ontario and the Dominion, in Ontario Sessional Papers, 1883, and numbered 23, and any other correspondence between the said two Governments which either party may desire may also be submitted, quantum valeat.

(7) The Province of Ontario undertakes the printing, for the Privy Council, of the Book of Arbitration Documents, the Cases submitted to the Arbitrators, the Orders of Reference, the Award, the said Acts of the Legislature of the Province, the papers referred to in the preceding paragraph, and any other documents which may be put in on the part of that Province under this Agreement.

(8) The Province of Manitoba undertakes the printing, for the Privy Council, of the documents reported by the Select Committee, Chief Justice Sewell's notes on the De Reinhard case, and any other documents which may be put in on the part of that Province.

(9) Either Government may, at its own discretion, print any of the papers and documents to be submitted, in addition to those which the said Government undertakes to print.

(10) Any such documents or papers printed, or purporting to be printed, by the Queen's Printer (at Toronto, Winnipeg, or Ottawa) shall be deemed sufficiently authenticated, prima facie, for the purposes of the said Case.

(11) All papers for the Privy Council shall be printed as aforesaid, in due form, and shall be delivered, on or before the 15th of May next, to the proper officer for the use of the Privy Council, and to the Solicitors in London for the opposite party.

(12) Any maps that either Government deems useful for the argument before the Privy Council shall be prepared and lithographed on the part of such Government; and, having been duly authenticated, either by mutual agreement or by reference to the Judges, or Judge, aforesaid, copies shall be delivered with the printed papers and documents aforesaid.

(13) Each and every of the said papers and documents is to be submitted to the Privy Council quantum valeat, and not otherwise.

(14) Nothing herein contained is to be construed as an admission that a Court, in order to ascertain its own jurisdiction in the disputed territory, or some part thereof, might not take judicial notice of the said particulars, or some of them, and it is hereby agreed that in the discussion of the Case, before the Privy Council, reference may be made to any evidence of which such judicial notice may be taken, whether the same is or is not contained in the printed papers.

33. The printing or not printing of any of the documents or other evidence is not to postpone the setting down of the Joint Case, or the application therefor, or the argument, or the decision of the case, unless the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council shall, on special application and after notice (so that counsel for both Governments may be heard thereon), see fit to direct such postponement.

34. Any Order to set down, and any other paper necessary to be served on either of the said Governments, may be served on the London Solicitors of such Governments, such Solicitors of the said Province of Manitoba being Messrs. Bishoff, Boumpas & Dodgson, 4 Westminster Buildings, London, E.C.; and of the said Province of Ontario being Messrs. Freshfields & Williams, 5 Bank Buildings, London, E.C.

35. The decision of the Privy Council shall be carried into full effect by such (if any) future legislation as may be necessary, or as may be recommended by the said Judicial Committee.

36. If, in any suit or proceeding within Provincial jurisdiction, the boundary between Ontario and Manitoba do in the meantime come in question, the court or other judicial authority before which the question arises is, in dealing therewith, to take judicial notice of all the documents and facts which it is above agreed to submit to the Privy Council on the same question, and without the said documents and facts being put in evidence before such Court or other judicial authority, and is to have power to draw such inferences from the said documents and facts as may be necessary.

37. To give legal effect to the present Agreement, the Government of each Province will introduce at the next session of the Legislature thereof, and procure to be passed, a Bill in the terms of the Bill in that behalf hereunto annexed.

38. The costs of the Reference shall be in the discretion of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which is to have power to award or withhold costs.

39. The said Agreement is understood to be entered into on the part of the Ontario Government, without prejudice to any question which there has been, or may be, between the Dominion and Ontario Governments in relation to the territory in dispute between them, or in relation to any matters which have been the subject of negotiation or correspondence between the Dominion and Ontario Governments; and the rights or claims of the Province of Ontario as to the same, are hereby expressly reserved.

IN THE MATTER OF THE BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE PROVINCES OF ONTARIO AND MANITOBA, IN THE DOMINION OF CANADA.

BETWEEN THE PROVINCE OF ONTARIO, OF THE ONE PART,

AND

THE PROVINCE OF MANITOBA, OF THE OTHER PART.

SPECIAL CASE.

The Province of Ontario claims that the westerly boundary of that Province is either (1) the meridian of the most north-westerly angle of the Lake of the Woods, as described in a certain Award made on the 3rd August, 1878, by the Honourable Chief Justice Harrison, Sir Edward Thornton and Sir Francis Hincks, or (2) is a line west of that point.

The Province of Manitoba claims that the boundary between that Province and the Province of Ontario is (1) the meridian of the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, or (2) is that portion of the height of land, dividing the waters which flow into Hudson's Bay from those which empty into the valley of the great lakes, and lying to the west of the said meridian line.

It has been agreed to refer the matter to the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council, and an Appendix has been prepared containing the materials agreed to be submitted with this case for the adjudication of the dispute. Each and every of the particulars in the said Appendix is submitted quantum valuit and not otherwise.

In addition to the particulars set forth in the Appendix, any historical or other matter may be adduced which in the opinion of either party may be of importance to the contention of such party; and (subject to any rule or direction of the Judicial Committee in that behalf) such additional matter is to be printed as a separate Appendix by the party adducing the same; and copies are to be furnished at least ten days before the argument.

The book known as the Book of Arbitration Documents may be referred to in the argument for the purpose of shewing, in part, what materials were before the arbitrators.

It is agreed that in the discussion before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council reference may be made to any evidence of which Judicial notice may be taken, or which (having regard to the nature of the case and the parties to it) the Privy Council may think material and proper to be considered, whether the same is or is not contained in the printed papers.

The questions submitted to the Privy Council are the following:

- (1) Whether the Award is or is not, under all the circumstances, binding. 10
- (2) In case the Award is held not to settle the boundary in question, then what, on the evidence, is the true boundary between the said Provinces.
- (3) Whether in case legislation is needed to make the decision on this case binding or effectual, Acts passed by the Parliament of Canada and the Provincial Legislatures of Ontario and Manitoba, in connection with the Imperial Act, 34-5 Vict., cap. 28, or otherwise, will be sufficient, or whether a new Imperial Act for the purpose will be necessary.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OF THE PROVINCE OF MANITOBA, APPROVED BY HIS HONOUR THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL, ON THE 31ST DECEMBER, 1883.

The Committee of the Executive Council have had before them a report dated 31st December, 1883, from the Honourable the Attorney-General with respect to the Boundary Question.

The Committee on the recommendation of the Attorney-General advise that such action should be taken by the Government of Manitoba as may be necessary to secure the consent of the Federal Government as speedily as possible to pass such an Order in Council as would be necessary to move Her Majesty the Queen to submit the case as agreed to between the Attorneys-General for the Provinces of Ontario and Manitoba on behalf of their respective Governments, for the opinion of the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council and a recommendation that Her Majesty should ask for that opinion: Also, that the Federal Government shall be bound by the opinion so to be given, so far as the Western Boundary of Ontario is concerned, and would request that the Colonial Minister, if necessary, should procure an Act of the Imperial Parliament to be passed to legalize that opinion, so that the Act when passed should be binding not only on Ontario and Manitoba but also on the Federal Government.

SIR,—I have the honour to request that agreeably to the information given to the Honourable James Miller, and communicated through him to my Government, your Government will be pleased, on the earliest possible day, to advise His Excellency the Governor-General to recommend Her Majesty to request the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to decide the case which has been agreed to between the two Governments of Ontario and Manitoba with respect to the Western Boundary of this Province. A copy of a Minute in Council of my Government on the subject is herewith transmitted.

I presume that by the time this despatch reaches you, you will have received a despatch from His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba to the same effect.

To avoid any possible occasion for delay of action in regard to the reference to which the two Provincial Governments have agreed, I reserve for a separate despatch all other matters connected with the Boundary Dispute, or its settlement.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

JOHN BEVERLEY ROBINSON,
Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario.

Honourable J. A. Chapleau,
Secretary of State, Ottawa.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE OF THE HONOURABLE THE PRIVY COUNCIL (CANADA), APPROVED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL IN COUNCIL, ON THE 6TH MAY, 1884.

Order in Council, Canada, 6th May,
1884.

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them two despatches from the Lieutenant-Governors of Manitoba and Ontario, dated 5th and 12th January, 1884, respectively, enclosing Minutes of Council of their respective Governments on the subject of the case agreed to by the Attorneys-General of the two Provinces with respect to the western boundary of Ontario, and a copy of the case and of the joint agreement relating thereto.

The Minister of Justice, to whom the despatches in question were referred, reports that the Government of Ontario request that Your Excellency may be advised to transmit the case agreed upon to Her Majesty, with a prayer that Her Majesty may be pleased to refer the same to the Judicial Committee of the Most Honourable the Privy Council, in order that their opinion may be had thereon. A despatch to the same effect is sent by the Government of Manitoba, with the additional request that Your Excellency's Government be bound by the opinion so to be given, and that, if necessary, an Act of the Imperial Parliament should be asked for to make the decision obligatory upon the Dominion as well as on the Provinces concerned.

The Minister recommends that copies of the despatches referred to, with the enclosures, be transmitted to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, with the request that he will lay the same before Her Majesty with the humble prayer that Her Majesty may be pleased, under 3 and 4 William IV. chapter 41, section 4 (Imperial Acts), to refer the case agreed upon on behalf of the Governments of Ontario and Manitoba respectively, for the hearing and consideration of the Judicial Committee of Her Most Honourable Privy Council.

That as regards the boundary line, so far as it affects the limits of the two Provinces, the Minister advises that Your Excellency's Government should express their readiness to be bound by the decision of the Judicial Committee.

The Committee concur in the recommendations of the Minister of Justice, and they respectfully advise that Your Excellency be moved to transmit the despatches referred to, to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, in accordance with the recommendation of the Minister of Justice.

The Arbitration.

REPORT OF THE HON. ADAM CROOKS, TREASURER AND MEMBER OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL, (ONTARIO), TO THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR, 10TH NOVEMBER, 1874.*

JOINT
APPENDIX.
Sec. 11.
The Arbitration.

May it please Your Excellency:

The undersigned has the honour to report the following on the subject of the western and northern boundaries of the Province of Ontario:

By Chapter 28 of the Acts of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the Session held in the thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth years of Her Majesty's reign, and intituled "An Act respecting the establishment of Provinces in the Dominion of Canada," it was enacted that the Parliament of Canada might from time to time, with the consent of the Legislature of any Province of the said Dominion, increase, diminish or otherwise alter the limits of such Province, upon such terms and conditions as might be agreed to by the said Legislature, and might, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any Province affected thereby. By a Rescution of the Legislative Assembly, passed on the 3rd day of March last, the House approved of the reference of the question of the western boundary of this Province to arbitration, or to the Privy Council, according as the Lieutenant-Governor in Council should see fit. It is considered by Your Excellency's Council to be expedient that the question of the northern boundary of this Province should be determined at the same time as the western boundary, though the determination of the northern boundary is not of so pressing importance as the other. In view of these objects, the undersigned, before his late visit to Ottawa on other public business, was authorized by the other members of Your Excellency's Council to propose (subject to Your Excellency's approval) to the Government of the Dominion that the question concerning the northern and western boundaries of the Province of Ontario should be determined by a reference to arbitrators to be mutually agreed upon, and whose standing and ability might readily be expected to secure for their decision the confidence alike of the people of Ontario and the people of the Dominion.

Ontario Order of Reference,
1874.

Your Excellency's Council were of opinion that a decision by such arbitrators is likely to be more prompt and perhaps more satisfactory than any other mode of decision which is attainable.

The undersigned was also authorized to suggest the name of the Hon. William Buell Richards, Chief Justice of Ontario, as one of the arbitrators, subject to Your Excellency's approval.

Accordingly, the undersigned, while at Ottawa, conferred with the Premier and other members of the Dominion Government on the subject of the said matters, and made the above suggestions to them.

The Government of the Dominion concurred in the views expressed on the part of the Government of Ontario, and proposed on behalf of the Dominion the name of the Hon. Lemuel Allan Wilmot, late Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, to act in conjunction with the said Chief Justice, and that authority be given to the said the Hon. William Buell Richards and the Hon. Lemuel Allan Wilmot, to agree upon a third person to be associated with them, such third person not being a resident of Canada, and that the determination of a majority of such referees should be final and conclusive upon the limits to be taken as and for such boundaries as aforesaid respectively.

The undersigned recommends that the Province agree to concurrent action with the Dominion in obtaining such legislation as may be necessary for giving binding effect to the conclusion which may be arrived at, and for establishing the northern and western boundaries of the Province of Ontario in accordance therewith.

10th November, 1874.

ON THE 12TH NOVEMBER, 1874.*Dominion Order of Reference,
1874.

On a memorandum dated 12th November, 1874, from the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, stating that he recommends concurrence in the proposition of the Government of Ontario to determine by means of a reference the northern and western boundaries of that Province relatively to the rest of the Dominion. That the Ontario Government having named the Hon. William Buell Richards, Chief Justice of Ontario, as one of the referees, he submits the name of the Hon. Lemuel Allan Wilmot, formerly Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of New Brunswick, to act in conjunction with him, and advises that authority be given them to agree upon a third person, not being a resident of Canada, and that the determination of a majority of such three referees be final and conclusive upon the limits to be taken as and for such boundaries respectively.

He further recommends that the Dominion agree to concurrent action with the Province of Ontario in obtaining such legislation as may be necessary for giving binding effect to the conclusions arrived at, and for establishing the northern and western limits of the Province of Ontario in accordance therewith.

The Committee submit the above recommendations for Your Excellency's approval.

Appointment of Dominion Arbitrator,
1874.

I am further directed to state that His Excellency desires to avail himself of your services as a referee on behalf of the Dominion for the above purpose, to act in conjunction with the Honourable William Buell Richards, Chief Justice of Ontario, the referee named by the Government of that Province.

10 I am to add that the Dominion Government agree to concurrent action with the Province of Ontario in obtaining such legislation as may be necessary for giving effect to the conclusions arrived at, and for establishing the northern and western limits of the Province of Ontario in accordance therewith.

May I request that you will have the goodness to acquaint me, for His Excellency the Governor-General's information, whether you are prepared to accept the office of referee for the Dominion, and that, if so, you will place yourself in communication with the Honourable Mr. Chief Justice Richards.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,

ONTARIO ACT, 38 VICT., CAP. VI. (1874).

AN ACT RESPECTING THE NORTHERLY AND WESTERLY BOUNDARIES OF THE PROVINCE OF ONTARIO.

40 Whereas by chapter twenty-eight of the Acts of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the session held in the thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth year of Her Majesty's Reign, and intitled "An Act respecting the establishment of Provinces in the Dominion of Canada," it is enacted "that the Parliament of Canada may, from time to time, with the consent of the Legislature of any Province of the said Dominion, increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the limits of such Province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said Legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any Province affected thereby;" And whereas the northerly and westerly boundaries of the Province of Ontario have never been determined; And whereas, subject to the approval of the Parliament of Canada and the Legislature of Ontario, it has been agreed by the Governments of the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Ontario that the questions which have arisen concerning the said boundaries should be determined by reference to arbitration; And whereas the Governor-General of Canada in Council has, subject as aforesaid, named the Honourable Lemuel Allan Wilmot, formerly Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of New Brunswick, and the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of the Province of Ontario has, subject as aforesaid, named the Honourable William Buell Richards, Chief Justice of Ontario, as arbitrators in respect to the said matters, and the two Governments have also agreed, that the said Honourable Lemuel Allan Wilmot and the Honourable 10 William Buell Richards shall choose a third person, not being a resident of Canada, to act in conjunction with them upon the said arbitration, and that the determination of a majority of the said arbitrators shall be final and conclusive as to the limits to be taken as and for such boundaries as aforesaid respectively:

Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Ontario, enacts as follows:

1. The Legislature of the Province of Ontario consents that the Parliament of Canada may declare that the boundaries which by the award of the arbitrators aforesaid, or of any two of the arbitrators aforesaid, may be decided to be the northerly and westerly boundaries respectively of this Province, shall be declared to be the northerly and westerly boundaries thereof; or in case the award shall be as 20 to the westerly boundary alone, the same may be in like manner declared by the Parliament of Canada as aforesaid, and that the Parliament of Canada may thereby increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the northerly or westerly limits of the Province of Ontario, so that the same may be in accordance with the award.

2. In case the arbitrator appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor should die or resign, or become incapable of exercising his said office, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may appoint another in his place, and in case either of the said other arbitrators should die or resign, or become incapable as aforesaid, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may concur in any appointment which may be made in his place.

3. This Act shall not go into effect until the Lieutenant-Governor in Council shall issue his Procla- 30 mation in that behalf.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL (CANADA), APPROVED BY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL ON THE 31ST JULY, 1878.*

The Committee of Council have had under consideration the subject of the northern and western boundaries of the Province of Ontario, which under previous Orders in Council had been referred to the Honourable W. B. Richards, then Chief Justice of Ontario, named as referee on behalf of that Province, but who was subsequently replaced by the present Chief Justice, the Honourable R. A. Harrison, and the Honourable Sir Francis Hincks, who has been named on behalf of the Dominion; and whereas subsequently to the action taken under Order of Council of 12th November, 1874, it was mutually agreed between the Governments of the Dominion and Ontario, that the Right Honourable Sir Edward Thornton should be selected as third referee, the Committee recommend that such selection be confirmed by Minute of Council, and that the determination of such three referees be final and conclusive upon the limits to be taken as and for each boundary respectively.

A STATEMENT OF THE CASE OF THE PROVINCE OF ONTARIO RESPECTING THE WESTERLY AND NORTHERLY BOUNDARIES OF THE PROVINCE.

PREPARED FOR THE ARBITRATION BETWEEN THE DOMINION AND THE PROVINCE, 1878,

BY THE HONOURABLE OLIVER MOWAT, ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF ONTARIO.†

Ontario has the same limits as Upper Canada had; and the same limits as, west of the division line between Upper and Lower Canada, the Province of Canada had, and the Dominion of Canada had before its purchase of the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company.

In the present dispute the claim of Ontario is to the boundaries which were officially insisted upon by the Province of Canada before Confederation, and by the Dominion afterwards. It is submitted that the demand so made was just and well-founded.

Thus, the Hon. Mr. Cauchon, Commissioner of Crown Lands, in an Official Paper, in the year 1857, claimed that the westerly boundary of the Province extended "as far as British territory, not otherwise organized, would carry it, which would be to the Pacific; or, if limited at all, it would be by the first waters of the Mississippi which [a due west line from the Lake of the Woods] intersected, which would be the White Earth River; and this [he showed] would in fact correspond with the extent of Canada previously known to the French. . . . The southerly boundary of the British dominions, west of Lake Superior, being therefore demonstrated as identical with the southerly boundary of Canada, to some point due west of the Lake of the Woods, the only question is as to where that point is to be found. Is it the White Earth River, the first waters of the Mississippi which the due west line intersects? or is it the summit of the Rocky Mountains, on the same principle that the co-terminous boundary of Louisiana was ultimately so construed?"

With respect to the northerly boundary, the Commissioner pointed out that "the only possible conclusion is that Canada is either bounded in that direction by a few isolated posts on the shore of Hudson's Bay, or else that the Company's territory is . . . a myth, and consequently that Canada has no particular limit in that direction."

Case of Ontario, as submitted to
tors, 1878.

So also, after Confederation, in an official letter of the Canadian Ministers, Sir George E. Cartier and the Honourable William McDougall, to Sir Frederic Rogers, Bart., Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated 16th January, 1869, they pointed out that "the boundaries of Canada on the north and west were declared, under the authority of the Constitutional Act of 1791, to include 'all the territory to the westward and southward' of the 'boundary line of Hudson's Bay to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada.' Whatever doubt may exist as to the 'utmost extent' of Old or French Canada, no impartial investigator of the evidence in the case can doubt that it extended to, and included, the country between Lake of the Woods and Red River. The Government of Canada therefore does not admit, but on the contrary denies, and has always denied, the pretensions of the Hudson's Bay Company to any right of soil beyond that of 10 squatters in the territory"—between the Lake of the Woods and Red River (that being the territory to which the matter which called forth the letter referred).

In another letter, dated 8th February, 1869, also addressed to Sir Frederic Rogers, the same Ministers mentioned among other facts and inferences "which cannot, [they] believe, be disputed," the following:—

"1. The Charter of Charles II. (and for the present we raise no question as to its validity) could not and did not, grant to the Hudson's Bay Company any territory in America which was not then (1670) subject to the Crown of England.

"2. The Charter expressly excluded all lands, etc, then 'possessed by the subjects of any other Christian Prince or State.' 20

"3. By the Treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye (1632), the King of England resigned to the King of France the sovereignty of Acadia, New France, and Canada generally, and without limits.

"4. 'La Nouvelle France' was then understood to include the whole region of Hudson's Bay, as the maps and histories of the time, English and French, abundantly prove.

"5. At the Treaty of Ryswick (1697), twenty-seven years after the date of the Charter, the right of the French to 'places situated in the Hudson's Bay' was distinctly admitted; and although commissioners were appointed (but never came to an agreement) to 'examine and determine the pretensions which either of the said Kings hath to the places situate in the Hudson's Bay,' and with 'authority for settling the limits and confines of the lands to be restored on either side;' the places taken from the English, i.e., from the Hudson's Bay Company), by the French previous to the war, and 'retaken by 30 the English during this war, shall be left to the French by virtue of the foregoing [the 7th] Article.' In other words, the forts and factories of the Hudson's Bay Company, established in Hudson's Bay under pretence of their Charter, and taken possession of by the French in time of peace, on the ground that they were an invasion of French territory, were restored, by the Treaty of Ryswick, to the French, and not to the Company.

"6. By the Treaty of Utrecht, 1713, 'the Bay and Straits of Hudson, together with all lands, seas, sea coasts, rivers, and places situate in the Bay and Straits, and which belong thereto,' were finally ceded to Great Britain.

"7. As no definite boundary was ever established between the possessions of the French in the interior and the English at Hudson's Bay, down to the Treaty of Paris, 1763, when the whole of Canada 40 was ceded to Great Britain, the extent of the actual possession by the two nations for some period, say from the Treaty of Utrecht to the Treaty of Paris, affords the only rational and true basis for ascertaining that boundary.

"8. The evidence is abundant and conclusive to prove that the French traded over and possessed the whole of the country known as the Winnipeg Basin and 'Fertile Belt,' from its discovery by Europeans down to the Treaty of Paris, and that the Hudson's Bay Company neither traded nor established posts to the south or west of Lake Winnipeg, until many years after the cession of Canada to England.

"9. No other or subsequent grant to the Company was ever made which could possibly extend 50 their territorial rights under their Charter. The license to trade in the Indian territories, which they obtained in 1821, was revoked in 1858, and has not been renewed.

"10. The country which, in view of these facts, must be excluded from the operation of the Charter, includes all the lands fit for cultivation and settlement in that part of British America."

Ontario claims that the official views of the Government of the Dominion, as thus expressed, should, prima facie, be carried out as between the Dominion and the Province, unless the Dominion proves that the assertions so made by its Ministers were false or mistaken, and that the claim to which they led was unfounded. The onus of proof is on the Dominion.

The opinion of Chief Justice Draper, as communicated to the Government of the Province of Canada, 12th June, 1857, was that the decision of the Privy Council would give "to Canada a clear right west to the line of the Mississippi and some considerable distance north of what the Hudson's Bay Company claim;" though not any territory "west of the westernmost head of the Mississippi River."

But the claim of the Dominion as made in 1872, after having acquired the Company's right, and as made now, proposes to limit the Province on the west to the meridian of the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi, variously stated as 88° 50', 88° 58', and 89° 0' 27"; and to limit the Province on the north (as the Company claimed in 1857) by the height of land which divides the waters that fall into Hudson's Bay from those that fall into the St. Lawrence and its lakes.

In support of the claim which Ontario represents, the Province relies on the arguments of the Ministers of the Province of Canada before Confederation, the arguments of the Ministers of the Dominion, the legal opinion of the learned Chief Justice, and the arguments set forth in Mr. Mills' Report, and in the other papers, on the same side, which have been collected and printed for the purpose of the present arbitration. The evidence obtained during the present year affords some fresh arguments in favour of the same views.

The present statement is a summary of some only of the facts and reasons which support Ontario's claim.

In 1763, France ceded to England, Canada with all "its dependencies," reserving so much of what had theretofore been known as Canada as lay west of the Mississippi River; and the Treaty provided that the confines between "France and England in that part of the world shall be fixed irrevocably by a line drawn along the middle of the River Mississippi from its source . . . to the sea."

Shortly after the Treaty, His Majesty, by Royal Proclamation dated the 7th October, 1763, erected the Province of Quebec, with certain boundaries therein set forth. Afterwards, in 1774, the Quebec Act was passed, which recited that "by the arrangements made by the said Royal Proclamation, a very large extent of territory, within which were several colonies and settlements of the subjects of France, who claimed to remain therein under the faith of the said Treaty, was left without any provision being made for the administration of civil government therein." The Act therefore provided, "that all the territories, islands, and countries in North America, belonging to the Crown of Great Britain, bounded on the south by" a line, therein described, from the Bay of Chaleurs to "the River Ohio, and along the bank of the said river westward to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, . . . be and they are hereby, during His Majesty's pleasure, annexed to and made part and parcel of the Province of Quebec, as created and established by the said Royal Proclamation of the 7th October, 1763."

Ontario contends that a true construction of this language requires that the line northerly from the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi should follow the Mississippi River to its source.

That this is not only the just construction of the language employed, but was also the real intention of Parliament, is shown further by the history and the known objects of the Bill, by the proceedings thereon in the House of Commons, and by the letter of the Right Honourable Edmund Burke, dated 2nd August, 1774, to his constituents of the Province of New York, whose agent he was at the time.

So, the Royal Commission which was issued immediately afterwards (viz., 27th December, 1774) to Sir Guy Carleton, as Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of the Province, expressly describes the line from the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi as "northward along the eastern bank of the said river [Mississippi] to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company.

Sir Frederiek Haldimand succeeded Sir Guy Carleton. His Commission is dated 18th September, 1777, and assigned to the Province the same boundary lines as the previous Commission had done.

These two Commissioners remove all reasonable doubt as to the line northward being along the banks of the Mississippi to its source, on two grounds:—

(1.) On the ground that these Commissions show the contemporaneous exposition of the intention of the Act, by the Ministers of the day and by their distinguished law advisers. Lord Camden was Lord Chancellor; Mr. Thurlow was Attorney-General, and Mr. Wedderburn was Solicitor-General—each of whom afterwards became Lord Chancellor.

(2.) On the ground that the Crown had an undoubted right to add to the boundaries of the Province; and that if the boundaries given to it by the Commissions are not the identical boundaries which the Statute provided for, and which were thereby to continue during His Majesty's pleasure, and if the Commissions assigned to the Province a larger area than the Statute had described, the Crown had the right to make and did make the addition.

By the Treaty of Paris between Great Britain and the United States, in 1783, it was agreed that the boundary between the two countries should be a line, therein particularly described, from the north-western angle of Nova Scotia, through Lakes Ontario, Erie, Huron, Superior, Long Lake, etc., to the Lake of the Woods, "thence through the said Lake [of the Woods] to the most north-western point thereof, and from thence on a due west course to the River Mississippi," etc.

The Commission to Sir Guy Carleton after this Treaty (dated 22nd April, 1786), followed this description in giving the boundaries of the Province, and assigned as its southerly boundary a line "to the said Lake of the Woods, thence through the said Lake to the most north-western point thereof, and from thence on a due west course to the River Mississippi; and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company.

A due west line from the point indicated would not intersect what is now known as the Mississippi, and therefore what was then known as the Mississippi, or the first tributary so intersected, the waters of which flow into the Mississippi, may be taken as intended. This question is very fully discussed in Mr. Dawson's paper. If that view should not be sustained, the alternative is the course taken under the Treaties with the United States of 1794, 1814, 1818, and 1842.

The Constitutional Act, 1791, the Act providing for the division of the Province of Quebec, recited that "His Majesty had been pleased to signify, by his message to both Houses of Parliament, his Royal intention to divide his Province of Quebec into two separate Provinces, to be called the Province of Upper Canada and the Province of Lower Canada;" and the Act made provision for the government of each Province after the division should take place. A Paper had been presented to Parliament previous to the passing of this Act, describing the line proposed to be drawn for dividing the Province of Quebec into two Provinces. This paper traced the line of division into Lake Temiscaming, "and from the head of the said Lake by a line drawn due north until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay; including all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line, to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada."

On the 24th August, 1791, an Order in Council was passed, reciting among other things that this Paper had been presented to Parliament previous to the passing of the Act; and dividing the Province into two, according to the line of division mentioned in the paper.

On 18th November, 1791, General Alured Clarke, Lieutenant-Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Province of Quebec, issued a Proclamation, in His Majesty's name, in pursuance of his instruction and of a provision for this purpose in the Statute, declaring when the division should take effect (26th December, 1791). This Proclamation recited as follows:

into two distinct Provinces, to be called the Province of Upper Canada and the Province of Lower Canada, by separating the said two Provinces according to the following line of division, viz.:—'To commence at a stone boundary, [etc.] running north twenty-five degrees east until it strikes the Ottawas River, to ascend the said river into the Lake Temiscaming, and from the head of the said lake by a line drawn due north until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay, including all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada.'"

That the country then commonly called or known by the name of Canada comprised the whole of the territory formerly claimed against the Hudson's Bay Company, and now claimed by Ontario, is established by abundant testimony.

On the 12th September, 1791, a Commission issued to Lord Dorchester, this being the second Commission issued after the Treaty of 1783. It recited the Commission of 22nd April, 1786, to the Governor-General (as Sir Guy Carleton), the Order in Council of 19th August, 1791, dividing "said Province of Quebec" into separate Provinces, by a line therein specified: "the Province of Upper Canada to comprehend all such lands, territories and islands lying to the westward of the said line of division as were part of our said Province of Quebec." This form of expression shows that Quebec was supposed and intended to include all the territory belonging to England, and formerly known as Canada; for it is not to be supposed that there was an intention so soon to give to the Province narrower bounds than were indicated by the Paper presented to Parliament, adopted afterwards by the King in Council, and declared by the Proclamation of Governor Clarke. The change of expression was probably suggested by taking note of the language of the Treaty of 1763, by which, while France ceded to England "Canada and all its dependencies," the cession was subject to a limitation. The watershed of the Mississippi and Missouri had been the boundary line between Canada and Louisiana, and that part of Canada which was west of the Mississippi was reserved to France. So, by the Treaty of 1783, a further part of Canada was ceded by England to the United States. A description, therefore, in 1791, of the Province of Quebec, or of Upper Canada, which would purport to give to the Province all "the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada" would not have been correct. A form of expression was therefore substituted which was free from this difficulty.

The subsequent Commissions to the Governors-General of Canada, up to and including that of Lord Gosford in 1835, and the Imperial Commission to Mr. Caldwell as Receiver-General of Lower-Canada, assigned the same line of division between Upper and Lower Canada.

In the seven subsequent Commissions, from the Commission to the Earl of Durham, 30th March, 1838, to the Commission to Lord Elgin, 1st October, 1846, inclusive, and also in the two Commissions to Sir John Colborne and the Right Honourable Charles Poulett Thomson, as Captains-General and Governors-in-Chief of Upper Canada, dated the 13th December, 1838, and 6th September, 1839, respectively, the line of division between Upper and Lower Canada is stated to reach the shore of Hudson's Bay "by a line drawn due north from the head of said lake [Temiscaming], until it strikes the shore of Hudson's Bay." The expression "shore of Hudson's Bay" obviously has the same signification, as "boundary line of Hudson's Bay," but if the latter expression could be supposed to refer to some line south of the shore, the subsequent Commissions must be taken as having extended the boundary to the shore. These two Commissions trace the western boundary into Lake Superior, and no further, saying nothing of the line thence westerly or northerly; but of course nobody has ever supposed that the southerly boundary of the Province terminated as soon as Lake Superior was reached.

[The Commissions subsequent to Lord Elgin's contain no boundary line descriptions. The other Commissions to the Lieutenant-Governors of Upper Canada which have been examined, either do not give the boundaries of Upper Canada, or give them partially only, and in such a manner as throws no light on the present question. So also the Commissions after the union do not give the western boundary of the Province of Canada. The Act of Union, 1840, does not specify the boundaries of the Province of Canada thereby created, but describes the now Province of Canada as constituted of the former Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada.]

Now the Province of Upper Canada, from a period long antecedent to its union with Lower Canada, and the Province of Canada afterwards, acted, whenever there was occasion, on the assumption that the boundaries of the Province were those assigned by the Royal Commissions. Thus:

(1.) The Province of Upper Canada is known to have been in the habit, since, at all events, 1818, of issuing writs into the territory west of the line of $89^{\circ} 9\frac{1}{2}'$.

(2.) In 1850, the Province of Canada, with the sanction of the Imperial authorities, entered into a treaty with the Indians, and procured from them the surrender of the rights of the Indians in the territory as far west as Pigeon River. This territory, it may be observed, is south of the height of land, and was never claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company, though it is now claimed on behalf of the Dominion.

(3.) From the year 1853, the Province of Canada, continuously, and without objection from any quarter, made grants of lands, in the Queen's name, in this territory, and west of the proposed line of the Dominion. Between 1853 and Confederation, no less a quantity than 35,039 acres had thus been granted west of that line. Numerous mining licenses in the same territory were granted in like manner, commencing with the year 1854, the territory embraced in them extending to Pigeon River.

(4.) In 1868 the Government of the Dominion appropriated $20,000 towards the construction of a road from the Lake of the Woods to Fort Garry, on Red River; and the money was spent accordingly.

So far as relates to Ontario's western boundary, it is unnecessary to consider for the present purpose the argument as to the Hudson's Bay Company owning this territory; because the extension of the southerly boundary to the west is not, either by the Statute, or by the subsequent acts of the Crown made to depend on the Company's having or not having the territory to which the western extension of the southerly boundary would bring us; and the Crown of course had the power to include part of the territory of the Company, if such was the Royal will. But the fact that this western territory had been discovered, explored, traded with, occupied and taken possession of by the French before the Treaty of Cession, adds strength to Ontario's claim, even in respect of the western boundary.

The decisions of a Lower Canadian Court, in 1818, in the cases of De Reinhard and McLellan, have been cited in favour of the line drawn due north from the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi, and stated in the evidence in that case to be $88^{\circ} 50'$ or $88^{\circ} 58'$. The principal evidence, however, on which a different conclusion is based, was not before the Court, or referred to, in those cases; and it is said also that the prisoner De Reinhard was pardoned (though clearly guilty of murder), and that the reason of his pardon was, that (notwithstanding the supposed decision of the Court to the contrary) the place of committing the murder was within Upper Canada, and, therefore, not within the jurisdiction of the Court under the Statute 43 Geo. III., c. 138, on the authority of which the Court was acting.

In view of all these considerations, it is apparent that if there is any difficulty, on the westerly side of the Province, it is as respects the territory west of Lake of the Woods. Is the western line further west than this Lake? Is the point of commencement the point on the first tributary of the Mississippi which a line due west from the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods strikes? Or does the western limit extend to the Rocky Mountains?

Then as to the Northern boundary:

It has been already stated that the Quebec Act, and such of the Royal Commissions to the Governors, previous to 1838, as mention the Northern boundary, specify for that purpose the southerly boundary of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company; and the principal difficulty here is, that the southerly boundary of this territory has always been an unascertained line.

The claim of the Dominion is that the boundary is the Height of Land already described. It is submitted, for the following among other reasons, that the Height of Land is not our northern boundary:

(1.) Because the easterly and westerly lines assigned to the Province by the Royal Commissions cut through and go north of the Height of Land; and the Commission issued in 1791, and such of the subsequent Commissions as mentioned the northerly boundary, thereby declared in effect that the southerly boundary of the Company's territory was not south of these points, viz.: the south shore of Hudson's Bay (there called James' Bay), and the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods; and was north of the Height of Land.

(2.) Because the Height of Land was not claimed or suggested by the Company as being the intention of the Charter, or as being the measure of the Company's just rights, until nearly a century and a half after the date of the Charter. This fact is a practical contemporaneous exposition of the statute by the Company themselves against their recent claim, and, having been continued for 150 years, is, without other evidence, conclusive.

(3.) Because the alleged rule, that the discovery and possession of the shore of a new country give a right to the rivers and the land adjoining the same, if a recognized rule now, was not such at the time of this Charter being granted, and ought not to govern its interpretation. The rule is said to be founded on reason and necessity; but there is no just reason or necessity for applying such a rule in the case of a river nearly 3,000 miles long.

(4.) Because the French, from the beginning of the seventeenth century, were in possession of the territory to the south of the lands watered by the rivers flowing into Hudson's Bay, and were extending their explorations and settlements to the head waters of the rivers flowing into Hudson's Bay, and to the interior of the country. There is no sound reason to sustain a rule for giving to the discoverers of the Bay, into which these rivers flow, a right to stop such explorations and settlements, in favour of discoverers (if the English were such) who did not choose to occupy the interior of the country. The rule as to rights to unoccupied contiguous territory is in such case more than sufficient to outweigh the supposed rule as to the Height of Land.

(5.) Because the ground of the recent claim is that the English were the first discoverers, and that their discoveries were followed by such possession of the territory in question as the laws of nations recognize as giving a title to the territory up to the Height of Land; while the fact is, that it is impossible to say with certainty who were the first discoverers, nor was the alleged discovery by the English followed by possession. The voyage of Cabot, when he entered the Bay, is said to have been in 1517; and no sort of possession of any part of the Bay by the English before 1667 is pretended being an interval of 150 years. Gilham is said to have built, in 1667, Fort Charles (Rupert), which was on the east side of the Bay. In the meantime the Bay had become known to the world; persons acting under the authority of the French Government had repeatedly visited it: had taken possession in the French King's name, and set up the Royal Arms there; the French had established posts at convenient points for trade with the Indians, and had secured and were enjoying the whole trade with the Indians around the Bay. In 1627, the King gave to the Company of New France the right of trade to an extensive territory—including Hudson's Bay—being the coasts and into the interior. Under such circumstances, the rule invoked by the Dominion has no application.

What then is to be regarded as the southerly boundary of the territory of the Company?

The language of the Charter, by reason of its ambiguity, affords no assistance in this enquiry. The validity of the Charter has always been questioned on the ground of its ambiguity, as well as for other reasons. Some legal opinions have indeed been given in favour of the validity of the charter as respects the whole territory to the Height of Land claimed in recent times by the Company; but these opinions were based upon the Company's statement that they had "always claimed and exercised dominion, as absolute proprietors of the soil, in the territory understood to be embraced by the terms of the grant."

(1.) Assuming, however, that the northern boundary is, on one side, the shore of Hudson's Bay, say between 51° and 52° of latitude, and on the other at least as far north as the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods, say latitude 49° 23' 55"; if these points were in the Hudson's Bay territory, the northern boundary would be a line drawn from one of these points to the other. We claim that our boundary is farther north than this, but it cannot be south of it.

Are these points in what was the territory of the Company? And is the Provincial boundary therefore no further north?

(2.) If by reason of the Charter being so old, and having been acted upon in some sort, and of its validity to some extent being implied in certain statutory references to the Company, the instrument cannot be treated as absolutely void, it must, as regards its construction and operation, on well-known and well-settled principles, be interpreted most strongly against the Company, and in favour of the Crown. The object of giving the Charter was to encourage discoveries by the Company; and the validity or operation of the instrument is to the extent only of giving to the Company whatever of the unknown territory the Company, within a moderate and reasonable time, should occupy; and all that the Company could be entitled to was what the Company had, in this manner acquired for them- 10 selves and for the Crown, previous to the cession of Canada in 1763 by France to England; or whatever, previous to that time, the Company had been in possession or enjoyment of as their own with the concurrence of the Crown,

(3.) The Company were certainly not entitled to any of the territory which France owned at the time of the cession, and ceded to England; for it is preposterous to suppose that the Charter intended to grant, and did effectually grant, to the Company, as against the world, all the territory southerly and westerly of the Bay to the then unknown Height of Land (unknown to the Crown and to the Company), though such territory should be, as it was, to the extent of unknown hundreds of thousands of square miles—a third of the continent; that the Charter was intended to give, and did give, to the Company, the right to shut up this enormous territory from the Crown and from all British subjects 20 —and from other nations also—for all time; that if the Company should do nothing to discover, settle or acquire it for a hundred years or more, nobody else could; and that any portion of it which England should, a hundred years afterwards, acquire by war with another nation, and by employment of the resources of the whole Empire, in Europe as well as in America,—accrued, when so acquired, and was intended to accrue, to the Company, for their own private benefit.

(4.) It is clear, and indeed has been repeatedly admitted by the Company themselves, that until long after the date of the cession the Company had no possession of any part of the interior of the country, and that their possession was confined to certain forts on the Bay and two factories not very distant.

(5.) On the other hand, the Dominion Ministers truly affirmed in 1869, that “the evidence is 30 abundant and conclusive to prove that the French traded over and possessed the whole of the country known as the Winnipeg basin and ‘Fertile Belt’ from its discovery by Europeans down to the Treaty of Paris, and that the Hudson’s Bay Company neither traded nor established posts to the south or west of Lake Winnipeg until many years after the cession of Canada to England.” In fact, the Company’s first post—viz., Cumberland House, on Sturgeon Lake—in the vicinity of the region in question was not built until 1774, and they did not establish any post within this tract of country before 1790.

(6.) The following facts (amongst others) were judicially found by Judge Monk, in Connelly vs. Woolrich, with respect to the proceedings of the French, before the Hudson’s Bay Company’s charter was granted. He showed that as early as 1605 Quebec had been established, and had become an important settlement; that before 1630 the Beaver and several other companies had been organized at 49
Quebec for carrying on the fur trade in the west, near and around the Great Lakes and in the North-West Territory; that the enterprise and trading operations of these French companies, and of the French colonists generally, extended over vast regions of the northern and north-western portions of the continent; that they entered into treaties with the Indian tribes and nations, and carried on a lucrative and extensive fur trade with the natives; that in the prosecution of their trade and other enterprises these adventurers evinced great energy, courage and perseverance; that they had extended their hunting and trading operations to the Athabasca country (say 58° north latitude and 111° west longitude); that some portions of the Athabasca country had before 1640 been visited and traded in, and to some extent occupied by the French traders in Canada and their Beaver Company (which had been founded in 1629); that from 1640 to 1670 these discoveries and trading settlements 50 had considerably increased in number and importance; that Athabasca and other regions bordering upon it belonged to the Crown of France at that time, to the same extent and by the same means as the countries around Hudson's Bay belonged to England, viz., by discovery and by trading and hunting.

(7.) It may be added, that if the Athabasca country thus belonged to France at so early a period, so would the whole intermediate country between Athabasca and Hudson's Bay on the west, and between the Athabasca country and the St. Lawrence on the south.

(8.) Between 1670 (the last date named by Judge Monk) and 1763 the French established posts or forts in that North-West Territory which they had previously explored, and hunted over and traded with; namely, on Rainy Lake, the Lake of the Woods, Lake Winnipeg, Lake Manitoba, on the Winnipeg River, the Red River, the Assiniboine River, the River aux Biches, and the Saskatchewan, and so west to the Rocky Mountains, where Fort La Jonquière was established by St. Pierre in 1752. All the Lakes and Rivers mentioned are connected by the Nelson River with Hudson's Bay, and are in the territory which, in the following century, the Hudson's Bay Company claimed under their Charter, but confessedly they had constructed in it no post or settlement of any kind until long after 1763—their first post away from the Bay (other than the two factories already mentioned) having been established in 1774. It was not until 1790 that they had any post in the Winnipeg Basin; and they did not enter the valley of the Red River until long afterwards.

(9.) France had also, on the northerly side of the dividing line, Fort Abbitibi, which was north of the Height of Land, and was built in 1686. It was situate at a considerable distance north of the Height of Land, and upon the lake of the same name, from which the River Mississippi flows into Hudson's Bay. The French had also Fort St. Germain, on the Albany, which was built in 1684; and still higher up on the same river Fort La Maune, established about the same period; and, to the east, Fort Nemiseau, on the lake of that name, situate on the River Rupert, midway between Lake Mistassin and the Bay; this fort was built before 1695. Of none of these did the English Government or the Company ever complain. The French had also another fort on the Albany, being that mentioned in one of the memorials of the Company as having been built in 1715.

(10.) The Company furnished certain maps for the purpose of the present arbitration, two of which only seem of importance on either side. One of these two bears the Royal Arms and those of the Company, is of the date of 1748, and seems to have been prepared by the Company in view of the Parliamentary enquiry of that year, and for the purpose of showing the limits which the Company then claimed. The line which this map gives as the Company's southern boundary is considerably north of the Height of Land, even as shown on this map; for the line is therein made to cut Frenchman's River—a river not named on this map, but corresponding with the Abbitibi River—and several other rivers shown on the map as flowing into the Hudson's Bay. The line runs to Lake Winnipeg (which is misplaced, being represented as due north of Nepigon, its southern point in the latitude of Fort Nelson), thence northerly along the easterly shore of Winnipeg, and thence northerly to Sir Thomas Smith's Sound in Baffin's Bay. The map thus demonstrates that the Company, at the time of its preparation, did not claim to the Height of Land, even as the same was then supposed to be situated, and did not claim Lake Winnipeg.

The other of the two maps is Mitchell's engraved map, described as published by the authors, February, 1755. This copy appears to have been much used and worn. There is on it an irregular line marked "Bounds of Hudson's Bay by the Treaty of Utrecht;" and this line may therefore be taken as showing the extent of the Company's claim in 1755, and long after. The line is about one-third of a degree north of the Lake of the Woods, and extends to the limit of the map in that direction, being about 98° of longitude. The territory south of this line is differently coloured from the territory north of it.

It is evident that the Company have in their possession no maps which purport to give to them a larger territory than these maps do. Their claim to the height of land as the true intention of the Charter, and the true measure of their rights, so far from having been always made, was not thought of by the Company until more than half a century later, and was in effect negated by the Crown in numerous Commissions to the Governors of the country.

The maps produced show the extent of territory which the Company claimed prior to the cession of 1763.

It may be observed that on the occasions of the Treaties of Ryswick and Utrecht, the Company's claims were expressed either in the terms of the Charter, or were simply to "the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson, and to the sole trade thereof." It sufficiently appears, from the early documents which emanated from the Company, that this general claim to the whole Bay and Straits was a claim to the waters and shores only, and to the exclusion of the French therefrom—the French having been in possession of forts on the Bay until after the Treaty of Utrecht, and the Treaty of Ryswick having in effect given them possession of all places on the Bay, except, it may be, Fort Bourbon; and that the Company's object was the trade of the Bay, and not the occupation or settlement of the country, 10 away from the shores of the Bay.

Indeed, in 1700, the Company, notwithstanding this claim, were willing to accept the Albany River as their southern boundary on the west side, and Rupert River as their southern boundary on the east side of the Bay. In 1701-2 they were content even with East Main River, and proposed it as a boundary. But both proposals were rejected by the French as being far more than the Company had any right to demand.

In 1711-12 the Company proposed a line to run from the Island of Grimington, or Cape Perdrix, on the Labrador coast, south-westerly to and through Lake Mistassin. This line did not extend beyond the south-west shore of the lake; and though the Company made a demand for the surrender of the forts on the shores of the Bay, yet they do not appear to have made at that time any proposal as to a 20 line on the west or south side of the Bay.

Thus the only claims and contests of the Company at this period were about the margin of the Bay.

After the Treaty of Utrecht (1713), which gave to the British all lands, etc., "on the Bay and Straits, and which belong thereto," the Company, on the 4th August, 1714, proposed for the first time, that the Mistassin line should go south-westerly to 49° "north latitude, . . . and that that latitude be the limit;" but as to how far to the west this line of 49° was to be followed nothing is said.

In 1719 and 1750 the Company proposed the line of 49°, but both times the proposition was rejected by the French. This line would have given to the Company a boundary greatly more limited 30 than the boundary of the Height of Land, which began to be claimed three-quarters of a century later.

It has already been said that the Company could not take advantage of their Charter for the purpose of making any addition to their territory by exploration or settlement after the cession of 1763; but the practical result would be nearly the same if this right should be deemed to have ceased at a somewhat later date, viz., the date of the passing of the Quebec Act, 1774, or even the date of the Treaty of 1783. The Company made no further settlement between 1763 and 1783, except Cumberland House; and it is doubtful whether its locality belongs to the Winnipeg or the Churchill system. Both the Act and the Treaty obviously require that the southern boundary should be deemed a fixed line, not liable to variation by the mere act of the Company.

These considerations are submitted as showing that the strict legal rights of the Company did not 40 extend beyond their forts on the shores or in the neighbourhood of the Bay, and such adjacent territory as these forts may have commanded; and that Ontario is entitled to have its northerly boundary line drawn accordingly.

Or, if the Company's territory is to be considered as extending beyond the forts on the Bay and the immediately adjacent territory, their territory is not to be deemed south of the northern extremity of the dividing line between Upper and Lower Canada; or to exceed otherwise what England herself was entitled to under the Treaty of Utrecht, viz., the middle line between the forts and settlements of the English and French; and further, is not to include a greater area than is shown on the maps furnished by the Company, in case the middle line would give them a larger territory than these maps claimed for the Company; for the reference in the Statute of 1774 to the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company, cannot in any view be construed as referring to a more southerly line than the Company had theretofore claimed for themselves.

Or, if there is too much doubt as to the southern boundary of the Company's Territory to determine with precision where such boundary was, a northern boundary should be assigned to the Province which would give to the Province the full territory which the Commissions to the Governors definitely provided for, and, in addition, such further territory to the north as may be just and reasonable.

10 STATEMENT OF THE CASE OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THE DOMINION OF CANADA REGARDING THE BOUNDARIES OF THE PROVINCE OF ONTARIO.

PREPARED FOR THE ARBITRATORS, 1878, BY HUGH MACMAHON, Q.C., COUNSEL FOR THE DOMINION.*

"ONT. DOCTS."—Statutes, Documents and Papers respecting the Northern and Western Boundaries of Ontario, compiled by direction of the Government of Ontario [otherwise known as the Book of Arbitration Documents].

"PAPERS RELATING TO H. B. CO. PRESENTED TO HOUSE OF COMMONS."—Papers presented by command of Her Majesty to the House of Commons, in pursuance of an address respecting the territory, trade, taxation and government claimed or exercised by the Hudson's Bay Company. (Ordered by House of Commons to be printed, 12th July, 1856.)

The limits assigned to the Province of Ontario by the British North America Act, 1837, sec. 6, are such part of the Province of Canada, as, at the passage of the Act, formerly constituted the Province of Upper Canada.

Case of the Dominion, as submitted to
tors, 1878.

The claim of the Dominion of Canada is, that the meridional line drawn due north from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi River (ascertained to be 89° 9' 27" west) forms the western boundary of Ontario, and that the land's height of the northern water-shed of the St. Lawrence is the northern boundary.

The Government of Ontario contend that the western limit of that Province is the Rocky Mountains; that the north-western limitary line lies north of the Saskatchewan; and that the north-eastern line lies in the vicinity of Hudson's Bay. (Mills, p. 1.)

The claim of Ontario to extend the western limit of the Province to the Rocky Mountains rests, it is assumed, upon the supposed title of France to that country, as having been the first discoverers thereof. It was stated by M. de Callières, when writing to M. de Seignelay in 1685 (N. Y. His. Doc., Vol. IX., p. 265), that the French were the first to discover Hudson's Bay, and that nation was therefore entitled to the whole country to the base of the Rocky Mountains; and the rule of international law on which this is claimed is thus stated by M. de Callières: "It is a custom established and a right recognized by all Christian nations, that the first who discovers an unknown country, not inhabited by Europeans, and who plant in it the arms of their prince, secure the property thereof to that prince in whose name they have taken possession of it."

L'Escarbot, in 1617, stated that "New France has for its limits, on the western side, the lands as far as the sea called the Pacific; on this side, the Tropic of Cancer; on the south, the islands of the Atlantic Sea, in the direction of Cuba and the Island of Hispaniola; on the east, by the Northern Sea, which bathes New France; and on the north, that land called 'Unknown,' towards the Icy Sea as far as the Arctic Pole." (Ont. Docts., p. 53.†) So that the whole of the north-western portion of the continent was claimed as belonging to France.

JOINT
APPENDIX.Sec. II.
The Arbitration.Case of the Dominion, as submitted to
tors, 1878.

It will be necessary briefly to show upon what these claims are founded, and then to consider if they have any value as bearing on the question to be decided by the arbitrators.

In 1626, Louis XIII. granted to the Company of New France a charter which, it is asserted, included the whole of the country about Hudson's Bay, and west of it.

The Indians from the vicinity of Hudson's Bay came to Montreal to trade; hence it is said there was no necessity for erecting forts and trading posts. (Mills, p. 127.)

It is stated that Jean Bourdon, the Attorney-General, in 1656, explored the entire coast of Labrador, and entered Hudson's Bay.

It appears that in the year 1656 there was an order of the Sovereign Council of Quebec authorizing Sieur Bourdon, its Attorney-General, to make a discovery thereof. 10

There is no record whatever of his having attempted to make the discovery in the same year in which the order was passed by the Council. There is a record, however, of his having made the attempt in the year following (1657), and he may then have designed carrying out the order. He sailed on the 2nd day of May, and returned on 11th August, 1657; and it is not pretended that he could have made a voyage to Hudson's Bay and return between these dates. (Journal des Jésuites, pp. 209-218.) As to the extent of this voyage there can be no doubt, as in the Rel. des Jésuites, Vol. III., Rel. 1658 p. 9, it is thus reported:

"Le 11 (Août) parut la barque de Monsieur Bourdon lequel estant descendu sur le grand fleuve du Costé du Nord voyagea jusques au 55 degré où il recontra un grand banc de glace qui le fit remonter, aiant perdu deux Hurons quil avait pris pour guides. Les Esquimaux sauvages du Nord les massa- 20 crèrent et blessèrent un François de trois coups de flèches et d'un coup de couteau."

The Jesuits would have known if Jean Bourdon had entered the Straits of Hudson, and would have mentioned it in their Relations. On the contrary, they never mention it, and it is to be taken from that that the assertion that he ever entered Hudson's Bay is a myth, because he was of the Province of Quebec, and was a man well known and trusted by the Jesuits, and went with Father Jogues on an embassy to Governor Dongan, of New York.

It is asserted that Father Dablon and Sieur de Vallière were, in 1661, ordered by Sieur d'Argenson, Governor of Canada, to proceed to the country about Hudson's Bay, and they went thither accordingly, and the Indians who then came back with them to Quebec declared that they had never seen any 30 Europeans there before.

In Shea's Charlevoix, Vol. III., pp. 39 and 40, it is stated that he (Father Dablon) attempted to penetrate to the Northern Ocean by ascending the Saguenay. Early in July, two months after they set out, they found themselves at the head of the Nekauba River, 300 miles from Lake St. John. They could not proceed any further, being warned by the approach of the Iroquois.

Rev. Claude Dablon arrived in Canada in 1655, and was immediately sent missionary to Onondaga, where he continued, with a brief interval, until 1658. In 1661 he set out overland for Hudson's Bay, but succeeded in reaching only the head waters of the Nekauba, 300 miles from Lake St. John. (N.Y. His. Doc. Vol. IX., p. 97, note 2.—Ed.)

In the Rel. des Jésuites, Vol. III. (1661), p. 13, there is an account of this voyage, which is called "Journal du premier voyage fait vers la mer du Nord. (12 Août, 1661.)" The account is dated from 40 the highest point they reached, Nekauba, 100 lieues de Tadousac, 2 Juillet, 1661:

"1661, Juillet le 27, retournèrent ceux qui estoient allés, ou pretendoient aller à la mer du Nord au Kiristinons, P. Dablon, etc." (Journal des Jésuites, p. 300.)

An assertion is made that some Indians came from about Hudson's Bay to Quebec, in 1663, and that Sieur la Couture with five men proceeded overland to the Bay, possession whereof they took in the King's name.

There is no record of this voyage. No mention is made in Charlevoix or in the Relations of the Jesuits respecting Couture or his expedition.

Sieur Duquet, King's Attorney for Quebec, and Jean L'Anglois, a Canadian colonist, are said to have gone to Hudson's Bay in 1663 by order of Sieur D'Argenson, and renewed the act of taking possession, by setting up the King's arms there a second time.

Viscount D'Argenson, who is stated by Mr. Mills, at p. 129 of his Revised Report, to have given the order to Duquet to proceed to Hudson's Bay, left Canada on 16th Sept., 1661, two years prior to the giving of the order, which it is stated Sieur Duquet received. (Shea's Charlevoix, Vol. III., p. 65 note 3, and p. 17; N. Y. His. Docts., Vol. IX., p. 17.)

In 1666 or 1667, Radisson and des Grosellières were roaming among the Assiniboines in the region of Lake Winnipeg, and were conducted by members of that tribe to the shores of Hudson's Bay, (Mills, p. 8.)

Father Albanel and Sieur St. Simon were, in November, 1671, sent by M. Talon to Hudson's Bay, which they reached in 1672.

In the Relations of the Jesuits, Albanel gives an account of his trip, and shows that the English Company were already in possession of Hudson's Bay, having entered there under their Charter.

It is quite apparent from the Relation that no one had, on behalf of France, visited Hudson's Bay prior to his visit in 1672. Father Albanel says:

"Jusques icy on avoit estimé ce voyage impossible aux François, qui après l'avoir enterpris déjà par trois fois, et n'en ayant pu vainere les obstacles, s'estoient veu obligez de l'abandonner dans le desespoir du suceez. Ce qui paroist impossible, se trouve aisé quand il plaist à Dieu. La conduite m'en estoit deué, apres dix-huit ans de poursuites que j'en avois faite, et j'avois des preuves assez sensibles que Dieu m'en reservoit l'exécution, après la faveur insigne d'une guerison soudaine et merveilleuse, pour ne point dire miraculeuse, que je receus dès que je me fus devoté à cette mission, à la sollicitation de mon superieur." (Rel. des Jésuites, 1672, p. 56.)

Up to this time (1672) the Jesuits do not appear to have heard of any prior expedition having reached Hudson's Bay.

What is relied upon by the Province of Ontario, as furnishing evidence of Father Dablon and Sieur Couture having visited Hudson's Bay, is a memoir of M. de Callières sent to the Marquis de Seignelay in 1684 (N. Y. His. Doc., Vol. IX., p. 268); and M. de Denonville, on 8th November, 1686, by a memoir sent to M. de Seignelay, appears to have copied the statement made by M. de Callières. (See Ibid., p. 304.) But in his letter which accompanied the memoir, M. de Denonville says: "I annex to this letter a memoir of our rights to the entire of that country, of which our registers ought to be full, but no memorials of them are to be found." (N. Y. His. Doc., Vol. IX., p. 297.) M. de Denonville thereby admits that documentary evidence could not even at that time be adduced in support of these visits having been made to Hudson's Bay.

At the time that M. de Callières and M. de Denonville wrote (in 1684 and 1686), it was most important to show, if possible, that Dablon and Couture had been at Hudson's Bay. The French, before that time, had driven the English from a number of their forts; and in March, 1686, Canadian troops were sent by Denonville, who surprised and captured Forts Albany, Hayes and Rupert, belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company; and it therefore became necessary to show a colour of right for these proceedings, and these memoirs were prepared with that view.

ENGLISH DISCOVERY.

Sebastian Cabot, who sailed to Hudson's Bay and Straits under a commission from Henry VII. of England, entered the Bay, which, in 1610, took the name of Hudson. This is admitted by Mr. Mills pp. 122 and 123. (See Bacon's History of Henry VII., Hakluyt, Vol. III., pp. 25, 26 and 27.)

1576, 1577 and 1578.

Sir Martin Frobisher, it is said, made three voyages to Hudson's Bay. He entered Hudson's Bay in 1576, and gave the name to Frobisher's Straits. (Mills, p. 123; Hakluyt, Vol. III, pp. 55 to 95; Pinkerton's Collection, Vol. XII., pp. 490-521.)

1608-1610.

According to the narrative of Prickett (who was with Hudson during the voyage), to be found in Harris's Voyages, Vol. II., pp. 243-4, Hudson sailed on 17th of April, 1610, reached the Bay now known as "Hudson's" in July of that year and wintered in the Bay, and remained there until late in the summer of 1611.

1611.

It was desired to prosecute the discoveries made by Hudson, and, in 1611, His Royal Highness Henry Prince of Wales was applied to by persons concerned in the project, and he resolved to send Captain Button, who penetrated to the Hudson's Bay and sailed 200 leagues to the north-west. He wintered there at Nelson River. (Harris, Vol. II., pp. 245-404.)

1631.

It appears that the English nation had been trading with Greenland, and those trading finding that "other nations were interfering with this trade" found themselves under a necessity of having recourse to the Crown for protection and assistance, as well for defending their fisheries as for prosecuting their discoveries, and they accordingly addressed themselves to King Charles I., who furnished them a frigate called "The Charles," under command of Captain Luke Fox, who sailed in the spring of 1631, in order to make discoveries towards the north-west. Captain Fox and Captain James met at Port Nelson in August, 1631.

Captain Thomas James undertook his voyage in 1631 for the satisfaction of Charles I., at the expense of the merchants of Bristol. The account of the voyage was written by himself, and published in 1633. Captain James left England in May, and met Captain Luke Fox on 29th August, near Port Nelson. He wintered in Hudson's Bay. (Harris's Travels, Vol. II., pp. 407, 409 and 413.)

1667 and 1668.

Des Grosellières and Radisson (who it is supposed were Coureurs des bois) were roaming among the Assiniboines and were conducted by them to Hudson's Bay.

Des Grosellières and Radisson went to Quebec for the purpose of inducing the merchants there to conduct trading vessels to Hudson's Bay. The proposal was rejected, as the project was looked upon as chimerical by the Quebec merchants. (Ont. Doets. p. 280.) (This does not accord with the pretensions of the French that Jean Bourdon had made a voyage there in 1656 or 1657.)

Des Grosellières was in London in 1667, and before going there had been in Boston and Paris in search of persons willing to fit out an expedition to explore Hudson's Bay. He met with a favourable reception, and the London merchants employed Z. Gillam, a person long used to the New England trade, to perfect this discovery. Gillam sailed in the "Nonsuch" in 1667, and on his arrival built Fort Charles, said to have been the first fort erected in the Bay, and upon his return those engaged in the enterprise applied to Charles II. for a patent, which was issued on 2nd May, 1670, to Prince Rupert and others. (Harris's Voyages, Vol. II., p. 286.)

Captain Newland was sent out, in 1669, by the same parties who in 1667 sent out Z. Gillam.

As far as the Hudson's Bay territory is concerned, the English were first, both as to discovery and occupation. So long as the English were not there, the Indians came to Montreal and Quebec, and the French derived the benefit of the trade, which was all that was required, and they could then afford to treat as chimerical the statements of Radisson and Des Grosellières that Hudson's Bay could be reached with ships. But once the English occupied the territory, erected forts and created settlements, where by the French fur trade was cut off from the west and north, then it became necessary for them to claim title by discovery. Hence the memoir of M. de Callières to M. Seignelay, which is shown cannot be relied upon, and which De Denonville says there are no memorials to support.

If possession is to form a claim to the country, the evidence that the English first made a settlement and thus took possession is, of the clearest character, for it is not seriously pretended that any actual possession was taken nor any settlement made until Gillam went to Hudson's Bay and built Fort Charles, in 1667.

What, then, did England obtain, by taking possession and making a settlement for the purpose of occupancy, by building the numerous forts on Hudson's Bay, in the year 1667, and during subsequent years? According to Vattel, Book I, Chap. 18, Sect. 207, "Navigators going on voyages of discovery, furnished with a commission from their Sovereign, and meeting with islands or other lands in a desert state, have taken possession of them in the name of their nation; and this title has been usually respected, provided it was soon after followed by real possession."

"When a nation takes possession of a country, with a view to settle there, it takes possession of everything included in it, as lauds, lakes, rivers, etc." (Ibid., Chap. 22, Sect. 226.)

"In the negotiations between Spain and the United States respecting the western boundary of Louisiana, the latter country laid down, with accuracy and clearness, certain propositions of law upon this subject, and which fortify the opinion advanced in the foregoing paragraphs. 'The principles (America said on this occasion) which are applicable to the case are such as are dictated by reason, and have been adopted in practice by European Powers in the discoveries and acquisitions which they have respectively made in the New World. They are few, simple, intelligible, and, at the same time, founded in strict justice.' The first of these is that when any European nation takes possession of any extent of sea coast, that possession is understood as extending into the interior country to the sources of the rivers, emptying within that coast, to all their branches, and the country they cover, and to give it a right, in exclusion of all other nations, to the same. (See Memoire de l'Amérique, p. 116.) It is evident that some rule or principle must govern the rights of European Powers in regard to each other in all such cases; and it is certain that none can be adopted, in those to which it applies, more reasonable or just than the present one. Many weighty considerations show the propriety of it. Nature seems to have destined a range of territory, so described, for the same society; to have connected its several parts together by the ties of a common interest; and to have detached them from others. If this principle is departed from, it must be by attaching to such discovery and possession a more enlarged or contracted scope of acquisition; but a slight attention to the subject will demonstrate the absurdity of either. The latter would be to restrict the rights of an European Power who discovered and took possession of a new country to the spot on which its troops or settlement rested—a doctrine which has been totally disclaimed by all the Powers who made discoveries and acquired possessions in America.'" (Phillimore's Internat. Law, 2nd ed., Vol. I., pp. 277-8-9.)

Sir Travers Twiss, in his discussion on the Oregon question, at page 300, states that "Great Britain never considered her right of occupancy up to the Rocky Mountains to rest upon the fact of her having established factories on the shores of the Bay of Hudson, i.e. upon her title by mere settlement, but upon her title by discovery, confirmed by settlements, in which the French nation, her only civilized neighbour, acquiesced, and which they subsequently recognized by treaty."

The British nation, therefore, acquired, by discovery and by settlements made on Hudson's Bay, the possession of the country extending into the interior to the sources of the rivers emptying within that coast, which would include the Saskatchewan and English Rivers to the west, having their sources at the foot of the Rocky Mountains, and extending south and east to the sources of all the rivers flowing into James' Bay.

The law entitling England to this has been stated not only by Vattel, but has been adopted as correct by the United States, and is recognized by the highest authorities on International Law in England—Dr. Twiss and Dr. Phillimore—as being the correct principle to apply in such cases.

If England acquired the territory claimed within the limits stated, it may for some purposes be necessary to consider what the Hudson's Bay Company took under their Charter. The Charter will be found in Ont. Docts., pp. 29-37, and at p. 33 will be found what the King grants to the Hudson's Bay Co. under the name of "Rupert's Land." First is granted the sole trade and comerece of all those seas, bays, lakes, rivers, creeks, etc. Then the Company are created the absolute lords and proprietors of the same territory, limits and places, etc., etc., in free and common socage, with power to erect colonies and plantations, etc.

The Charter is very wide; and although it appears to have been conceded by the leading counsel in England (Ont. Docts., pp. 193 to 202) whose opinions were obtained, that the charter granting a monopoly to the Company to trade may have been void because not sanctioned by Parliament, yet that 10 the territorial grant is valid, and the only difference in the opinions appears to be to the extent of territory covered by the grant.

In 1849, on an address of the House of Commons praying that Her Majesty would be graciously pleased to direct that means be taken to ascertain the legality of the powers in respect to TERRITORY, TRADE, TAXATION and GOVERNMENT, which are, or have been, claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company, the Directors of the Company were requested to render their assistance in complying with the address of the House of Commons, which they did on the 13th of September, 1849, by enclosing to Earl Grey a statement as to their RIGHTS as to TERRITORY, TRADE, ETC., which will be found in full in Ont. Docts., pp. 288-9 and 290.

Annexed to this statement was a map showing the territory claimed by the Company as included 20 within their Charter; and a copy of this map was likewise produced, in 1857, to the Select Committee of the House of Commons, and is attached to the Report of that Committee. This map shows that on the south the Company claimed to the land's height, and on the west to the foot of the Rocky Mountains

On 30th Oct., 1849, Earl Grey enclosed to the then law officers of the Crown, the statement and map furnished by the Company, requesting an opinion as to the rights of the Company.

The opinion furnished is as follows:—

TEMPLE, January, 1850.

MY LORD,—We were honoured with your Lordship's commands, contained in Mr. Hawes's letter of the 30th October last, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us 30 the copy of a Rescution of the House of Commons, that an Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that measures may be taken for ascertaining the legality of the powers which are claimed or exercised by the Hudson's Bay Company on the continent of North America.

Mr. Hawes then stated that he was to enclose the copy of a letter from the Chairman of the Hudson's Bay Company, together with a statement and map, prepared under his direction, of the territories claimed by the Company in virtue of the Charter granted to them by King Charles the Second,

Mr. Hawes also sent the copy of a letter, dated the 30th September last, from Mr. A. K. Isbister inquiring in what mode Her Majesty's Government intend to give effect to the Resolution of the House of Commons, and whether, in the event of any reference to a judicial tribunal, it will be necessary for the parties interested to appear by counsel or otherwise, or to furnish evidence, and, if so, of what 40 nature.

Mr. Hawes concluded by stating that your Lordship requested that we would take these papers into our early consideration, and inform you whether we are of opinion that the rights claimed by the Company do properly belong to them. In the event of our entertaining a doubt on any point raised in these papers, Mr. Hawes was to request that we would advise your Lordship in what manner the opinion of a competent tribunal can be obtained on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's command, we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report that, having regard to the powers in respect to territory, trade, taxation, and government, claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company in the statements furnished to your Lordship by the Chairman of that Company, we are of opinion that the rights so claimed by the Company do properly belong to them.

Upon this subject we entertain no doubt; but as it will be more satisfactory to the complainants against the Company, to the promoters of the discussion in the House of Commons, and possibly to the Company themselves, if the questions are publicly argued and solemnly decided, we humbly advise your Lordship to refer these questions to a competent tribunal for consideration and decision, and to inform Mr. Isbister that he may appear as complainant, and the Company that they may be heard as respondents upon the argument. The proper mode of raising the question for discussion will, we presume, be for Mr. Isbister, or some other person, to embody in a Petition to Her Majesty the complaints urged against the Hudson's Bay Company; and such a Petition may be referred by Her Majesty, either to the Judiciary Committee, under the 4th section of the Statute 3 and 4 William IV., c. 41, or to the Committee of Trade, as involving questions within their jurisdiction. The Judicial Committee, from its constitution, is the best fitted for the discussion of a case of this description, and we recommend that to that tribunal the proposed Petition should be referred."

On 6th June, 1850, Earl Grey caused to be sent to Sir John Pelly a letter, from which the following extracts are taken:—

(Extract of a Letter from B. Hawes, Esq., to Sir John Pelly, Bart., dated Downing Street, 6th June, 1850.)

"With reference to your observation, that 'it would be of the utmost importance if the decision of the Privy Council on the rights and privileges of the Company were sent to Hudson's Bay by one of the ships appointed to sail on the 8th instant, I am to remind you that the proceedings for the purpose of giving effect to the Resolution of the House of Commons of 5th July, 1849, have not led to any reference to the Privy Council, and that the question raised in that Resolution stands in the following position:—

"Steps having been taken, as you are aware, to obtain from the Hudson's Bay Company a statement of its claims, that statement was duly submitted to Her Majesty's law advisers, and Her Majesty's Government received from them a report that the claims of the Company were well founded. It was observed in that report that, with a view to the fuller satisfaction of the House of Commons, and the parties interested, it would be advisable to refer the inquiry to a competent tribunal, and that the proper method of raising a discussion upon it would be for some person to address a Petition to Her Majesty, which petition might then be referred either to the Judicial Committee or the Committee of Privy Council for Trade and Plantations.

"Such a Petition was, therefore, essential to the complete prosecution of the inquiry. Lord Grey accordingly gave to certain parties in this country, who had taken an interest in the condition of the inhabitants of the Hudson's Bay Company's territories, and had questioned the validity of the Company's Charter, an opportunity to prefer the necessary Petition if they were so disposed; but, for reasons which it is unnecessary to repeat, they respectively declined to do so. Lord Grey having, therefore, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, adopted the most effectual means open to him for answering the requirements of the address, has been obliged, in the absence of any parties prepared to contest the rights claimed by the Company, to assume the opinion of the law officers of the Crown in their favour to be well founded."

(Papers relating to H. B. Co., presented to House of Commons, p. 15.)

The law officers of the Crown—Sir Richard Bethell, Attorney-General, and Sir Henry S. Keating, Solicitor-General—gave an opinion in 1857 (Ont. Docts., pp. 200 1). "that the validity and construction of the Hudson's Bay Company's Charter cannot be considered apart from the enjoyment which has been had under it during nearly two centuries, and the recognition made of the rights of the Company in various Acts both of the Government and the Legislature.

" We beg leave to state, in answer to the questions submitted to us, that in our opinion the Crown could not now with justice raise the question of the general validity of the Charter; but, that on every legal principle, the Company's territorial ownership of the lands, and the rights necessarily incidental thereto, (as, for example, the right of excluding from their territory persons acting in violation of their regulations) ought to be deemed to be valid.

" The remaining subject for consideration is the question of the geographical extent of the territory granted by the Charter, and whether its boundaries can in any, and what manner, be ascertained. In the case of grants of considerable age, such as this Charter, when the words, as is often the case, are indefinite and ambiguous, the rule is that they are construed by usage and enjoyment, including in these latter terms the assertion of ownership by the Company on important public occasions, such as the 10 Treaties of Ryswick and Utrecht, and again in 1750."

Now, what were the Hudson's Bay Company claiming as their territorial rights at the time of the Treaty of Ryswick (1697) and after the Treaty of Utrecht (1713), and also in 1750?

By the 7th and 8th Articles of the Treaty of Ryswick, certain things were to be done—(1) the Treaty was to be ratified, and (2) after the ratification, Commissioners were to be appointed, who were "to examine and determine the rights and pretensions which either of the said Kings had to the places situate in Hudson's Bay." (Ont. Docts., pp. 15 and 16.) And although Commissioners were appointed, and although claims were at different times advanced by the Hudson's Bay Company (as will presently be stated), nothing was done by the Commissioners to determine such rights and pretensions.

"After the Commissioners have determined those differences and disputes, the Articles the said 20 Commissioners shall agree shall be ratified by both Kings, and shall have the same force and vigour as if they were inserted word for word in the present Treaty." (Treaty of Ryswick, Art. 8, Chalmers's Treaties, Vol. I., p. 335.)

The English and French Governments went on negotiating, under the Treaty, until 1702, when the War of Succession broke out and all negotiations were at an end.

It has been stated, and urged as a ground against the later pretensions of the Hudson's Bay Company, that in July, 1709, they were willing to contract their limits. While willing to do this for the purpose of effecting a settlement, and only on condition of their not being able to obtain "the whole Straits and Bay which of right belongs to them." (Ont. Docts., p. 123.)

Nothing was done under this, and the Hudson's Bay Company were again addressed by the Lords 30 of Trade and Plantations, in January, 1701, when they again insist on their rights to the whole Bay and Straits, but are willing to forego their rights to a certain extent if by that means they can secure a settlement. "But should the French refuse the limits now proposed by the Company, the Company think themselves not bound by this, or any former concessions of the like nature, but must, as they have always done, insist upon their prior and undoubted right to the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson which the French never yet would strictly dispute, or suffer to be examined into (as knowing the weakness of their claim), though the first step in the said Article of Ryswick directs the doing of it." (Ont. Docts., pp. 124-5.)

In May, 1709, the Company were requested by the Lords of Trade and Plantations to send an account of the encroachments of the French on Her Majesty's dominion in America, within the limits 40 of the Company's Charter; to which the Company replied, setting forth their right and title, and praying restitution. (Mills, pp. 152-3.)

A further petition was sent by the Hudson's Bay Company to the Queen, in 1711. (Ont. Docts. pp. 126-7.)

Nothing was done by the Commissioners towards the determination of the differences and disputes up to the time when Count de Torey, on behalf of France, made a proposition, in April, 1711, with a view of bringing about a general peace between England and France; and while these negotiations were in progress, and on 7th February, 1712, the Hudson's Bay Company set forth what they desired should be stipulated for them at the ensuing treaty of peace. (Ont. Docts., pp. 128-9.)

For reasons thought very cogent, it is not supposed the question of post liminy will require much if any consideration; but as no point should be overlooked which ought, or even might, be considered in the case, the subject is therefore shortly considered.

Vattel, Book III, cap. 14, sec. 20, defines the right of post liminy to be "that in virtue of which persons and things taken by the enemy are restored to their former estate on coming again into the power of the nation to which they belonged."

"The Sovereign is bound to protect the persons and property of his subjects, and to defend them against the enemy. When, therefore, a subject, or any part of his property, has fallen into the enemy's possession, should any fortunate event bring them back again into the Sovereign's power, it is undoubtedly his duty to restore them to their former condition—to re-establish the persons in all their rights and obligations—to give back the effects to the owners—in a word, to replace everything on the same footing on which it stood previous to the enemy's capture. (Ibid., sec. 205.)

"Provinces, towns and lands, which the enemy restores by the treaty of peace, are certainly entitled to the right of post liminium; for the Sovereign, in whatever manner he recovers them, is bound to restore them to their former condition as soon as he gains possession of them. (Ibid., sec. 205.) The enemy, in giving back a town at the peace, renounces the right he had acquired by arms. It is just the same as if he had never taken it; and the transaction furnishes no reason which can justify the Sovereign in refusing to reinstate such town in the possession of all her rights, and restore her to her former condition." (Ibid., sec. 214.)

It is submitted, however, that as between the Dominion and Province of Ontario, the question whether the Hudson's Bay Company were entitled to demand the right of post liminium is of no consequence whatever.

The late Chief Justice Draper, when acting as agent for the Province of Canada, delivered to the House of Commons' Committee, on the 28th of May, 1857, a paper relative to the boundaries, wherein it is stated:

"The 8th Article of the Treaty of Ryswick shows that the French at that time set up a claim of right to Hudson's Bay, though that claim was abandoned at the peace of Utrecht, and was never set up afterwards." (Ont. Docts., p. 240.)

Lord Dartmouth's letter of the 27th May, 1713 (Ont. Docts., p. 129), enclosing the petition of the Hudson's Bay Company, shows what was the design in not accepting an "Act of Cession" from the French King; and Her Majesty the Queen "insisted only upon an order from the French Court for delivering possession; by this means the title of the Company is acknowledged, and they will come into the immediate enjoyment of their property without further trouble."

The sections of the Treaty of Utrecht having any bearing upon the question are the 10th and 15th to be found in Ont. Docts., pp. 16 and 17.

Under sec. 10 the King of France was "to restore to the Queen of Great Britain, to be possessed in full right forever, the Bay and Straits of Hudson, together with all lands, seas, coasts, rivers, and places situate in the said Bay and Straits, and which belong thereunto; no tracts of land or of sea being excepted which are at present possessed by the subjects of France." * * * "The same Commissaries shall also have orders to describe and settle in like manner the boundaries between the other British and French colonies in those parts."

In the wording of the 10th article a great deal of discussion arose as to whether the word "restore" or the word "cede" should be used. Count de Torey, in January, 1713, says: "The plenipotentiaries now make no difference between places 'ceded' and places 'restored.'" (Bolingbroke's Correspondence, Vol. III, p. 601.) But in March, 1713, he says that the truth is so evident that the plenipotentiaries of Great Britain at Utrecht always make a distinction between places that should be "ceded" and those that should be "restored." (Bolingbroke's Correspondence, Vol. III, p. 605.)

Great Britain was contending that as France had dispossessed her of Hudson's Bay territories, the French should "restore" them, while the French desired to use the word "cede," as if the territories had belonged to the French, and they were for the first time ceding them to Great Britain. The word "restore" was used, and it is important to examine the original text of the treaty, which is in Latin. The words used in that article, "spectantibus ad eudem," show clearly that France was to restore to England all the lands looking towards the Hudson's Bay; in other words, the whole watershed of the waters running into the Hudson's Bay.

The first part of the 10th section does away with any exception, and left nothing for the French to hold possession of in Hudson's Bay.

Mr. Mills, at p. 159 of his report, after quoting the portion of the 10th section above referred to says: "The words of the Treaty just quoted, and the attendant circumstances show that what was claimed by England, and yielded by France, was the Bay and the country upon its margin. Nevertheless, the language of the Treaty did not make it impossible for England, if she were so disposed, to insist upon the possession of the whole country to the land's height. France, too, consented with reluctance to the use of the word 'restoration' instead of 'cession.'"

The Treaty not only made it possible for England to insist upon the possession of the whole country to the land's height, but from the very moment Commissaries were appointed as provided by the Treaty, she always insisted that she was entitled to the whole country, and it will be apparent that France assented to this contention as being the correct interpretation of the Treaty.

Although Commissaries were appointed as provided by the Treaty, and notwithstanding the Commissaries failed to define the boundaries between the territories of each of the Governments, it was in some manner assumed that the boundary had been settled by the 49th parallel; and this was looked upon by the Americans and by the English themselves as being the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's Territory. And we find that in the discussions, which took place in regard to the boundary line from the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods to the Rocky Mountains, the United States asserting on the one hand, and Great Britain not denying on the other, that the 49th parallel was the boundary between their respective countries, because it was the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay.

"From the coast of Labrador to a certain point north of Lake Superior, those limits were fixed according to certain metes and bounds, and from that point the line of demarcation was agreed to extend indefinitely due west along the 49th parallel of north latitude. It was in conformity with that arrangement that the United States did claim that parallel as the northern boundary of Louisiana." 30 (Greenhow's Oregon, 2nd ed., p. 460.)

Whether a boundary was ever agreed upon, or whether it was merely assumed that the boundary above stated had been assented to, cannot now be of much importance, as in 1760 the Marquis de Vaudreuil did not pretend that the Canada of the French extended in a north-westerly direction beyond the Red Lake.

On the 4th August, 1714, the Hudson's Bay Company sent a memorandum to the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations, accompanied by a map, in which they claimed that the eastern boundary should be a line running from Grimington's Island through Lake Misoosinke or Mistassinic, and from the said lake by a line run south-westward into 49 degrees north latitude, as by the red line may more particularly appear, and that that latitude be the limit; that the French do not come to the north 40 of it, nor the English to the south of it. (Ont. Docts., pp. 131-2.)

When, in 1719, Commissaries were appointed, the instructions given to Mr. Paltency and Col. Bladen, the British Commissaries, were explicit to claim to the 49th of north latitude, where another line was to begin and extend westward upon the 49th of north latitude, over which said lines the French were to be prohibited from passing. (Ont. Docts., p. 362.)

In order that there might be no mistaking the full extent of the demand of the British Government, and to show that, under the Treaty, England was claiming the whole territory southward to the height of land and westward to the Rocky Mountains, the English Commissaries in 1719 sent to the French Commissaries a memoir on the subject of the boundary, in which they set forth that "the French

Dominion, as

tors, 1878.

10 Sir Travers Twiss says:—

"The object of the 10th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht was, to secure to the Hudson's Bay Company the restoration of the forts and other possessions of which they had been deprived at various times by French expeditions from Canada, and of which some had been yielded to France by the 7th Article of the Treaty of Ryswick. By this latter Treaty, Louis XIV. had at last recognized William III. as King of Great Britain and Ireland; and William, in return, had consented that the principle of uti possidetis should be the basis of the negotiations between the two Crowns. By the 10th Article however, of the Treaty of Utrecht, the French King agreed to restore to the Queen (Anne) of Great Britain, 'to be possessed in full right forever, the Bay and Straits of Hudson, together with all lands seas, sea coasts, rivers and places situate in the said Bay and Straits, and which belong thereto; no 20 tracts of land or sea being excepted which are at present possessed by the subjects of France.' The only question, therefore, for Commissaries to settle were the limits of the Bay and Straits of Hudson, *coast-*wards, on the side of the French Province of Canada, as all the country drained by streams entering into the Bay and Straits of Hudson were, by the terms of the Treaty, recognized to be part of the possessions of Great Britain.

"If the coast boundary, therefore, was once understood by the parties, the head waters of the streams that empty themselves into the Bay and Straits of Hudson indicate the line which at once satisfied the other conditions of the treaty. Such a line, if commenced at the eastern extremity of the Straits of Hudson, would have swept along through the sources of the streams flowing into the Lakes Mistassinnie and Abbitibis, the Rainy Lake, in 48° 30', which empties itself by the Rainy River into 30 the Lake of the Woods, the Red Lake, and Lake Traverse.

"This last lake would have been the extreme southern limit in about 45° 40', whence the line would have wound upward to the north-west, pursuing a serpentine course, and resting with its extremity upon the Rocky Mountains, in about the 48th parallel of latitude. Such would have been the boundary line between the French possessions and the Hudson's Bay district; and so we find that in the limits of Canada, assigned by the Marquis de Vaudreuil himself, when he surrendered the Province to Sir J. Amherst, the Red Lake is the apex of the Province of Canada, or the point of departure from which, on the one side, the line is drawn to Lake Superior; on the other, 'follows a serpentine course southward to the River Oubache, or Wabash, and along it to the junction with the Ohio.' This fact was insisted upon by the British Government in their answer to the ultimatum of France, sent in on the 1st 40 of September, 1761, and the map which was presented on that occasion by Mr. Stanley, the British Minister, embodying those limits, was assented to in the French memorial of the 9th of September." (Historical Memorial of the Negotiations of France and England from March 26th to Sept. 20th, 1761. Published at Paris by authority.) (Twiss' Oregon Boundary, pp. 209-211.)

"By the Treaty of Utrecht, the British possessions to the north-west of Canada were acknowledged to extend to the head waters of the rivers emptying themselves into the Bay of Hudson; by the Treaty of Paris they were united to the British possessions on the Atlantic, by the cession of Canada and all her dependencies; and France contracted her dominions within the right bank of the Mississippi. That France did not retain any territory after the Treaty to the north-west of the sources of the Mississippi, will be obvious when it is kept in mind that the sources of the Mississippi are in 47° 35', 40 whilst the sources of the Red River, which flows through Lake Winnipeg, and ultimately finds its way by the Nelson River into the Bay of Hudson, are in Lake Traverse, in about 45° 40'." The Arbitration.
Case of the Dominion, as submitted to
tors, 1878.

It has not been thought necessary to refer to the numerous maps described in the Ontario Documents, as, unless a map has been made use of in connection with a Treaty, or a boundary has been defined thereon, but little reliance can be placed upon it. Sir Travers Twiss says:—"The claim however, to the westwardly extension of New France to the Pacific Ocean requires some better evidence than the maps of French geographers. A map can furnish no proof of territorial title: it may illustrate a claim, but it cannot prove it. The proof must be derived from facts which the law of nations recognizes as founding a title to territory. Maps, as such, that is, when they have not had a special character attached to them by treaties, merely represent the opinions of the geographers who have constructed them, which opinions are frequently founded on fictitious or erroneous statements: e.g., the map of the discoveries of North America by Ph. Buache and J. N. DeLisle in 1750, in which portions of the west coast of America were delineated in accordance with De Fonte's story, and the maps of North-west America, at the end of the seventeenth and beginning of the eighteenth centuries, which represent California as lately ascertained to be an island." (Twiss' Oregon, pp. 305-6.)

When new Commissaries were appointed in 1750, the Lords of Trade and Plantations requested the Hudson's Bay Company to furnish a memorandum showing the limits claimed, which was done on the 3rd of October in that year, and is substantially as claimed by them in 1719. (Mills, pp. 176-7.)

It were well to consider what territory was comprised within the limits of Louisiana, as this will prove a help to arriving at a proper conclusion as to what England claimed as being comprised in "Canada," or "New France."

According to extracts (Ont. Docts., pp. 41-2) copied from the Charter of Louis XIV. to M. Crozat 20 Sept., 1712, it will be seen that Louisiana "was the country watered by the Mississippi and its tributary streams from the sea-shore to the Illinois," i. e., the Illinois River was the northern boundary of Louisiana according to this "authoritative document of the French Crown." By the same public document all the rest of the French possessions were united under the Government of New France (Twiss' Oregon, pp. 219-220.)

In the course of the negotiations respecting the limits of the Provinces of Canada and Louisiana the Marquis de Vaudreuil, who signed the surrender, published his own account of what passed between Sir J. Amherst and himself, of which he considered the English account to be incorrect. "On the officer showing me a map which he had in his hand, I told him the limits were not just, and verbally mentioned others extending Louisiana on one side to the carrying-place of the Miamis, which is the height of the lands whose rivers run into the Ouabache; and on the other to the head of the river of the Illinois." (Annual Register, 1761, p. 268.) Even thus, then, all to the north of the Illinois was admitted to be Canada. (Twiss' Oregon, pp. 220-221.)

What took place at the various conferences respecting the limits of Canada has been procured from the records of the Foreign Office.

On the 18th August, 1761, M. de Bussy, the French Minister at London, furnished to Mr. Pitt a memorandum upon the limits of Louisiana, which bore upon the limits of Canada, and ran thus:

"Sur les limites de la Louisiane.

"Pour fixer les limites de la Louisiane du côté des colonies Angloises et du Canada, on tirera une ligne qui s'étendra depuis Rio Perdido entre la Baye de la Mobile et celle de Pensacola, en passant par le Fort Toulouse chez les Alibamons, et qui, se prolongeant par la pointe occidentale du Lac Erié enfermera la Rivière des Miamis, et par l'extrémité orientale du lac Huron, ira aboutir à la hauteur des terres du côté de la Baye d'Hudson vers le Lac de l'Abitibis, d'où la ligne sera continuée de l'Est à l'Ouest jusques et compris le Lac Supérieur." (Pub. Rec., Off. Vol. 483.)

Instructions, however, accompanied by an ultimatum, were transmitted under date of the 27th August, 1761, to Mr. Stanley, in which it was laid down that these limits could not be acceded to; and Mr. Pitt, in alluding to the conduct of France, stated that among the reasons whereby British confidence had been shaken was the "claiming, as Louisiana, with an effrontery unparalleled, vast regions, which the Marquis de Vaudreuil had surrendered to General Amherst as Canada, and defined himself, with his own hand, as comprehended in the government of that Province, where he commanded;" and 50 Mr. Pitt gave the following definition of the boundaries of Canada, as set forth by M. de Vaudreuil:

"Le Canada, selon la ligne de ses limites tracée par le Marquis de Vaudreuil lui-même, quand ce Gouverneur-Général a rendu, par capitulation, la dite Province au Général Britannique le Chevalier Amherst, comprend d'un côté, les Lacs Huron, Michigan et Supérieur, et la dite ligne, tirée depuis Lac Rouge embrassé, par un cours tortueux, la Rivière Ouabache (Wabash) jusqu'à sa jonction avec l'Ohio, et de là se prolonge le long de cette dernière rivière inclusivement, jusques à son confluent dans le Mississippi;" and on this definition of the limits of Canada its cession was claimed—a copy of M. de Vaudreuil's map being sent to Mr. Stanley for reference, together with an extract of a letter from General Amherst dated 4th October, 1760, bearing upon that subject. Annexed will be found a copy of that map of M. de Vaudreuil to which Mr. Pitt referred, which has been made from the original enclosed by General Amherst in his despatch of 4th October, 1760 from which document also the following extracts have been taken:

"The Government of Canada includes Lakes Huron, Michigan and Superior, as you will see by the enclosed sketch, the red line being marked by the Marquis de Vaudreuil."

"The Government of Quebec begins with Trondines on the north-west, and de Chaillon on the south-east, and takes in all the parishes from them down the River St. Lawrence." (Pub. Rec., Off. Vol. 94, Anna. and W. Indies.)

It is further recorded on the 2nd September, 1761, the Marquis de Vaudreuil's map was shown to the Duc de Choiseul by Mr. Stanley, and that the bounds of Canada were agreed upon as therein stated. This fact is further substantiated by a passage in Mr. Stanley's despatch of the 4th of that month, which runs as follows:

"The Duc de Choiseul complained that the bounds of Canada were laid down very unfavourably to France in the description which your memorial contains, alleging (sic) that there had been disputes between the Marquis de Vaudreuil and the Governor of Louisiana with regard to the limits of their two Provinces, wherein the former, being the more able and the more active, had greatly enlarged his jurisdiction; he added, however, that though many such objections might be made, it had been the intention of the King his master to make the most full and complete cession of Canada, and that he consented in his name to those limits. I then produced the map you sent me, and it was agreed that this Province should remain to Great Britain as it is there delineated." (Minutes of a Conference at Paris, Sept. 2nd, 1761. Pub. Rec., Off. Vol. 483, France.)

The last Mémoire of France to England in these negotiations is dated Sept. 9th, 1761, and was delivered by M. de Bussy to Mr. Pitt on the 14th.

The first Article fully confirms the acceptance by France of the de Vaudreuil map, and states as follows:

"Le Roi, a dit dans son premier mémoire de propositions et dans son ultimatum, qu'il céderoit et garantirait à l'Angleterre la possession du Canada dans la forme la plus étendue: Sa Majesté persiste dans cette offre: et sans dissenter sur la ligne des limites, tracée dans une carte présentée par M. Stanley, comme cette ligne demandée par l'Angleterre, est sans doute la forme la plus étendue que l'on puisse donner à la cession, le Roi veut bien l'accorder." (Mémoire Historique sur la Négotiation de la France et de l'Angleterre, 1761, p. 52. F. O. Lib. 4to, No. 434.)

Then came the Treaty of Paris, concluded on 10th February, 1763, by which the Canada of the French was ceded to Great Britain.

By the 7th section of this Treaty, "It is agreed that for the future the confines between the dominions of his Britannic Majesty and those of His Most Christian Majesty in that part of the world, shall be fixed irrevocably by a line drawn along the middle of the River Mississippi, from its source to the River Iberville, and from thence by a line drawn along the middle of this river and the lake Maurepas and Pouchchartrain to the sea." (Ont. Doets., pp. 18-19.)

As the source of the River Mississippi was Red Lake, and as it was from that point that the Marquis de Vaudreuil directed the red line to be drawn, there can be no difficulty in coming to a conclusion as to what was included within the bounds of the "Canada" of the French.

Now, the proclamation of the King on the 7th October, 1763, created four separate Governments, viz.: Quebec, East Florida, West Florida and Grenada.

All the lands not within the limits of the said Governments, and not within the limits of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company, were for the present reserved for the protection and dominion of the Indians. (Ont. Docts., p. 26.)

QUEBEC ACT, 1774.

When the Quebec Act of 1774 was introduced, it was designed to extend the bounds of the Province of Quebec far beyond those created by the Proclamation of the King, issued in October, 1763. By the Act, as originally introduced, it was evidently intended to include in the Province of Quebec "all the territories, islands and countries heretofore a part of the territory of Canada, in North America extending southward to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchant Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay, and which said territories islands and countries are not within the limits of the other British colonies as allowed and confirmed by the Crown, or which have since the 10th February, 1763, been made a part and parcel of the Province of Newfoundland." (Mills, pp. 77-8.)

Now, in the Act as passed, the words "heretofore a part of the territory of Canada," are left out and the Act included "all the territories, islands and countries in North America belonging to the Crown of Great Britain," between certain defined limits along the western boundary of the then Province of Pennsylvania until it strike the River Ohio; and along the bank of the said river, westward, to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading in Hudson's Bay; and all the territories, islands and countries which have since the 10th February, 1763, been made part of the Government of Newfoundland, be and they are hereby, during His Majesty's pleasure, annexed to and made part and parcel of the Province of Quebec, as created and established by the said Royal Proclamation of 7th day of October, 1763." (Ont. Docts., p. 3.)

On reading this description it will be seen that the east bank of the Mississippi could not have been intended as the western limit.

Whenever the bank of a river or lake is created a boundary, the Act expressly states such to be the case, as "the eastern bank of the River Connecticut," "the eastern bank of the River St. Lawrence," "thence along the eastern and south-eastern bank of Lake Erie," and "along the bank of the said river (Ohio) until it strikes the Mississippi." Now, when the River Mississippi is reached, the description does not proceed "along the bank of the said river," as in the other descriptions, but describes the remaining limit as "northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England."

It is said that the word "northward" in the Act cannot mean "north," and that, therefore, a line drawn north from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers to the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's lands would not conform to the description in the Act.

The meaning of the expression "northward," as used in this Act, received judicial interpretation in the year 1818, on the occasion of the trial of Charles de Reinhard for murder committed at the Dalles; and also during the trial of Archibald McLellan, in the same year, for a like offence.

The Judges of the Court of Queen's Bench in Lower Canada, in giving judgment in these cases (Ont. Docts., pp. 226-7-8), were clearly of opinion that the western limit of Upper Canada was a line drawn due north from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers.

In the Treaty between Great Britain and the United States, in 1846, the term "westward" was used, and it was interpreted to mean "due west." (U. S. Treaties and Conventions, p. 375.)

Because the Commission which issued to Sir Guy Carleton in 1774 extended the boundary of the Province "along the eastern bank of the Mississippi river to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company," it is asserted that the Commission should govern.

The fact of a Commission having been issued with this extension, not authorized, cannot be made to extend the boundaries created by the Act. These Commissions, being mere instructions to the Governor-General, can have no effect in altering territorial boundaries.

The Commission to Governor Andros, of Connecticut, gave him authority to the South Sea.

Lord Elgin's Commission as Governor-General, issued in 1846, apparently gave him jurisdiction to the shore of Hudson's Bay; but it never was claimed or pretended that the Commission extended the boundaries of Canada to the shore of that Bay. (For Commission, vide Ont. Docts., pp. 51-52.)

1791.—THE CONSTITUTIONAL ACT.

What is known as the Constitutional Act of 1791 (31 Geo. III., cap. 31) was passed to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the fourteenth year of His Majesty's reign, entitled "An Act for making more effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec, in North America," and to make further provision for the government of the said Province.

"Whereas an Act was passed in the fourteenth year of the reign of his present Majesty, entitled 'An Act for making more effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec, in North America;' and whereas the said Act is in many respects inapplicable to the present condition and circumstances of the said Province: and whereas it is expedient and necessary that further provision should now be made for the good government and prosperity thereof; may it therefore please your most excellent Majesty that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that so much of the said Act as in any manner relates to the appointment of a Council for the affairs of the said Province of Quebec, or to the power given by the said Act to the said Council, or to the major part of them, to make ordinances for the peace, welfare, and good government of the said Province, with the consent of His Majesty's Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Commander-in-Chief, for the time being, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

"And whereas His Majesty has been pleased to signify, by his message to both Houses of Parliament, his royal intention to divide his Province of Quebec into two separate Provinces, to be called the Province of Upper Canada and the Province of Lower Canada, etc." (Ont. Docts., p. 4.)

The Proclamation of November, 1791 (Ont. Docts., p. 27), declares that by an Order in Council of 30 August it was ordered that the Province of Quebec should be divided into two distinct Provinces. But it is argued that this Proclamation annexed to Upper Canada territories not included in the Province of Quebec. This argument is based upon the use of the word "Canada" at the end of the first paragraph of the Proclamation.

It is stated the 14th Geo. III. "is in many respects inapplicable to the present condition and circumstances of the said Province." To what Province is it applicable? Why, to the Province of Quebec. The Act says the intention of the King was "to divide his Province of Quebec into two separate Provinces."

His Majesty, on the 24th day of August, 1791, "was pleased, by and with the advice and consent of his Privy Council, to order that the Province of Quebec be divided into two distinct Provinces, to be called the Province of Upper Canada and the Province of Lower Canada, by separating the said two Provinces according to the line of division inserted in the said order." (Ont. Docts., p. 389.)

The Act of Parliament was that alone upon which the Order in Council could be based or the Proclamation issued; and it is quite evident that neither the Order in Council nor the Proclamation intended to do more than the Act made provision for, i. e., to divide the Province of Quebec.

The construction put upon this Act by the Court of Queen's Bench in Lower Canada, in De Reinhard's case and in McLellan's case (Ont. Docts., pp. 226-7-8), was that "Upper Canada could include only that part of the Province so divided as was not contained in Lower Canada, but it could not extend beyond those limits which constituted the Province of Quebec."

In the Commission issued to Lord Dorchester, Sept. 12, 1791, as Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of the Provinces of Upper Canada and Lower Canada (wherein the Order in Council of 19th August, 1791, is recited), it states the intention to divide the Province of Quebec into two separate Provinces, "the Province of Upper Canada to comprehend all said lands, territories and islands lying westward of the said line of division as were part of our said Province of Quebec." (Ont. Docts. p. 48.)

The Commission issued in 1794 to Henry Caldwell, Esquire, Receiver-General of the Province of Lower Canada, contains a boundary description of Upper Canada similar to that in the Commission of Lord Dorchester. (Ont. Documents, pp. 389-390.)

The ten Commissions issued to the Governors-General of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada 10 between December, 1796, and 1st July, 1835, contain boundary-line descriptions similar to that of Lord Dorchester, in September, 1791.

On the 13th December, 1838, a Commission was issued to Sir John Colborne as Governor-in-Chief of the Province of Upper Canada, in which, after describing the other boundaries of the Province, it proceeds: "On the west by the Channel of Detroit, Lake St. Clair, up the River St. Clair, Lake Huron, the west shore of Drummond Island, that of St. Joseph and Sugar Island, thence into Lake Superior. (Ont. Docts., p. 390.)

The Commission to the Right Hon. Charles Poulett Thomson, dated 6th September, 1839, contains boundary descriptions similar to above. (Ibid., p. 390.)

29TH AUGUST, 1840.

The Act of Union (Impl. Act 3, 4 Vic., cap. 35) was passed to make "provision for the good government of the Provinces of Upper Canada and Lower Canada..... which, after the passing of this Act, shall form and be one Province under the name of the Province of Canada." (Ont. Docts., p. 10.)

After the passing of the Union Act, and on the 29th August, 1840, a Commission was issued to Lord Sydenham as Governor-in-Chief of the Province of Canada. The Commission gives the western boundary of the United Provinces, as in the Commission to Sir John Colborne. (Ont. Docts., p. 51.)

The Commission to Lord Metcalf, in February, 1843, and that to Earl Cathcart, in March, 1846, and the one issued to Lord Elgin, on 1st October, 1846, contain boundary-line descriptions of Upper Canada similar to that issued to Lord Sydenham in 1840.

It will be seen that, between December, 1838, when Sir John Colborne was appointed Governor-General, until 1852 or 1853, when Lord Elgin's term as representative of Her Majesty expired, the British Government understood and treated the western boundary of Upper Canada as being on the shore of Lake Superior; and it is fair to infer that the Imperial authorities were not ignorant that a line drawn north from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi would strike the shore of Lake Superior, and they no doubt intended that where the line so struck should be the limit of the jurisdiction of the Governors-General, and consequently the westerly limit of the Province of Upper Canada.

Then, in order to reach offenders for crimes committed in the Indian Territory (reserved for the Indians by the proclamation of October, 1763), the Act of 43 Geo. III., cap. 138 (11th August, 1803) was passed. (Ont. Docts., pp. 4-5.)

As doubts existed as to whether the provisions of 43 Geo. III., cap. 138, extended to the Hudson's Bay Territory, the Act 1 and 2 Geo. IV., cap. 66 (2nd July, 1821), was passed, including the Hudson's Bay Company's lands and territories heretofore granted to the Hudson's Bay Company; and under the 14th section of that Act the rights and privileges of the Hudson's Bay Company are to remain in full force, virtue and effect. (Ont. Docts., pp. 6-7-10.)

So that in all these Acts they were making provision for the government, or at least for the judicial control of large territories claimed as belonging to the Crown of Great Britain, and which were not included in the Province of Upper Canada.

The sixth clause of the British North America Act, 1867 (Imperial Act, 30th Vic., cap. 3), is as follows:

"The parts of the Province of Canada (as it exists at the passing of this Act) which formerly constituted respectively the Provinces of Upper Canada and Lower Canada shall be deemed to be severed, and shall form two separate Provinces. The part which formerly constituted the Province of Upper Canada shall constitute the Province of Ontario; and the part which formerly constituted the Province of Lower Canada shall constitute the Province of Quebec." (Ont. Docts., p. 11.)

And the 146th section of the same Act, under which Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory could be admitted into the Union, is as follows:

"It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, on addresses from the Houses of Parliament of Canada and from the Houses of the respective Legislatures of the Colonies or Provinces of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, to admit those Colonies or Provinces, or any of them, into the Union, and on addresses from the Houses of the Parliament of Canada, to admit Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory or either of them, into the Union, on such terms and conditions, in each case, as are in the addresses expressed, and as the Queen thinks fit to approve, subject to the provisions of this Act; and the provisions of any Order in Council in that behalf shall have effect as if they had been enacted by the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland." (Ont. Docts., p. 404.)

On the 17th December, 1867, the Senate and Commons of the Dominion of Canada adopted an address to the Queen, praying Her Majesty to unite Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory with this Dominion, and to grant to the Parliament of Canada authority to legislate for their future welfare and good government. (Orders in Council, Dom. Stats., 1872, p. lxxvi.)

In compliance with the terms of the above address, the Rupert's Land Act, 1868 (Imperial Act, 31 and 32 Vic., cap. 105), was passed, and under the second section of that Act the term "Rupert's Land" should include the whole of the lands and territories, held, or claimed to be held, by the said Governor and Company.

On the 19th November, 1869, the Hudson's Bay Company executed a deed of surrender to Her Majesty, of Rupert's Land, which included the whole of the lands and territories, held, or claimed to be held, by the Company, excepting the lands mentioned in the second and fifth paragraphs. Under the second paragraph, the Company might, within twelve months, select a block of land adjoining each of their stations. The schedule of the lands selected is attached to the surrender, and includes about 46,000 acres of land.

Under paragraph No. 5, "the Company may within fifty years after the surrender claim in any township or district within the Fertile Belt, in which land is set out for settlement, grants of land not exceeding one-twentieth part of the land so set out."

Such surrender was accepted by Her Majesty, by an instrument under her sign manual, and signed on the 22nd day of June, 1870.

On the 23rd June, 1870, Her Majesty, by an Order in Council, ordered that, after the 15th July, the said North-Western Territory and Rupert's Land should be admitted and become part of the Dominion of Canada, on the Dominion paying to the Company £300,000, when Rupert's Land should be transferred to the Dominion of Canada; which transfer has been made and the consideration money paid. (Ont. Docts., pp. 405-6-7-8.)

On the very threshold of Confederation, Ontario knew the terms upon which Rupert Land and the North-Western Territory might be admitted into the Union; and during the negotiations that were pending between the Imperial authorities and the Dominion respecting the surrender by the Hudson's Bay Company of their lands and territories, rights and privileges, the Ontario Government never interfered or claimed that what was about being surrendered to Her Majesty for the purpose of admission into the Dominion had at any time formed a part of the Province of Upper Canada—although Ontario must be assumed to have known that the Hudson's Bay Company was, in 1857, claiming under its Charter that the southern boundary of the Company's territory was the height of land dividing the waters which flow into the Hudson's Bay from those emptying into the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes, and that the western boundary was the base of the Rocky Mountains.

In thus lying by while the Dominion was purchasing this territory, and without forbidding the purchase or claiming any interest whatever in the rights and privileges about being acquired, that Province is now estopped from setting up that its western boundary extends beyond the meridian 10 passing through the point of junction of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, north of the United States and south of the Hudson's Bay territories. All the remaining territory was "held, or claimed to be held, by the Governor and Company," and was, as such, paid for by the Dominion. (Gregg v. Wells, 10 A. and E. 90.)

The acceptance by the Imperial Government of a surrender of what the Hudson's Bay Company claimed as territory belonging to them, was an admission that no portions of these territories were ever included in the Province of Upper Canada. The British Government being bound by this admission, surely Ontario must be.

In 1871 a Commissioner was appointed by each of the Governments of the Dominion and Province of Ontario, for the settlement of the northerly and westerly boundaries of the Province. 20

The instructions given to the Commissioners on behalf of the Dominion were that—

"The boundary in question is clearly identical with the limits of the Province of Quebec, according to the 14th Geo. III., ch. 83, known as the "Quebec Act" and is described in the said Act as follows, that is to say: Having set forth the westerly position of the southern boundary of the Province as extending along the River Ohio 'westward to the banks of the Mississippi' the description continues from thence (i.e., the junction of the two rivers) 'and northwards to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay.'

"Having determined the precise longitude, west of Greenwich, of the extreme point of land making the junction of the north and east banks respectively of the said river, you will proceed to ascertain and define the corresponding point of longitude or intersection of the meridian passing through the said junction with the international boundary between Canada and the United States. 30

"Looking, however, to the tracing enclosed, marked A, intending to illustrate these instructions, it is evident that such meridian would intersect the international boundary in Lake Superior.

"Presuming this to be the case, you will determine and locate the said meridian, the same being the westerly portion of the boundary in question, at such a point on the northerly shore of the said lake as may be nearest to the said international boundary, and from thence survey a line due south to deep water, marking the same upon and across any and all points or islands which may intervene, and from the point on the main shore found as aforesaid, draw and mark a line due north to the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Territory before mentioned. This will complete the survey of the westerly boundary line sought to be established.

"You will then proceed to trace out, survey and mark, eastwardly, the aforementioned southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay.

"This is well understood to be the height of land dividing the waters which flow into Hudson's Bay from those emptying into the valleys of the Great Lakes, and forming the northern boundary of Ontario; and the same is to be traced and surveyed, following its various windings, till you arrive at the angle therein between the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, as the latter is at present bounded, having accomplished which, the same will have been completed."

The Privy Council of Ontario on receiving a copy of above instructions advise the Dominion, "That the Province of Ontario claims that the boundary line is very different from the one defined by the said instructions, and cannot consent to the prosecution of the Commission for the purpose of marking on the ground the line so defined, and that the Commissioner appointed by the Government of Ontario should be instructed to abstain from taking any further action under his commission." (Ont. Docts., pp. 340-1.)

The boundaries that Ontario was willing to accept are set forth in an Order in Council. (Ont. Docts., p. 243.)

Until the boundaries could be definitely adjusted, provisional boundaries were agreed upon on the 3rd of June, 1874, as follows:—On the west, the meridian line passing through the most easterly point of Hunter's Island, run south until it meets the boundary line between the United States and Canada and north until it intersects the fifty-first parallel of latitude, and the said fifty-first parallel of latitude shall be the conventional boundary of the Province of Ontario on the north. (Ont. Docts., p. 347.)

SUPPLEMENT TO DOMINION CASE, SUBMITTED TO THE ARBITRATORS, 1878.*

(COPIED FROM DOCUMENTS FURNISHED BY THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

M. de Vaudreuil was Governor of La Nouvelle France in 1755.

General Wm. Shirley (as Mr. Shirley) was Captain-General and Commander-in-Chief of the Province of Massachusetts Bay in 1749, and in July of that year it was agreed that Commissaries should be appointed to define, in an amicable spirit, the boundaries between the colonial possessions of Great Britain and France in North America.

There is proof that Mr. Shirley was originally one of these Commissaries, and that Mr. Mildmay was the other; for on the 21st September, 1750, a mémoire, signed "W. Shirley" and "W. Mildmay," was presented to the French Commissaries, respecting the boundaries of Nova Scotia or Acadia, under Art. 12 of the Treaty of Utrecht; and on the 11th of January, 1751, a second mémoire on the same subject was signed by "W. Shirley" and "Wm. Mildmay," as British Commissaries at Paris; but it is evident that Mr. Shirley had ceased to be a Commissary in April, 1755; for on the 23rd January, 1753, a further mémoire was presented by the British Commissaries to the French Commissaries respecting this same boundary; but instead of its bearing the signatures of Mr. Shirley and Mr. Mildmay, it was signed "Mildmay" and "Ruvigny de Cosne."

Mr. Shirley had therefore no doubt returned to America, and Mr. Ruvigny de Cosne, who was British Chargé d'Affaires at Paris, in the absence of the Earl of Albemarle, had succeeded him as one of the British Commissioners.

In May, 1755, the commission was still sitting at Paris.

On the 14th of May of that year, a mémoire was delivered by the French Ambassador in London (the Duke de Mirepoix) to the British Minister for Foreign Affairs, in which was laid down the following four points of discussion:

1. Limits of Acadia.
2. Limits of Canada.
3. The course and territory of the Ohio.
4. The islands of St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Dominica and Tobago.

With regard to the limits of Canada the mémoire ran as follows:—

"The Court of France have decisively rejected, and will always reject, the proposition which has been made by England, that the southern bank of the River St. Lawrence and Lakes Ontario and Erie shall serve as boundaries between the two nations."

"It is necessary to establish as a base of negotiation relative to this Article, that the River St. Lawrence is in the centre of Canada. This truth is justified by all titles, by all authors, and by possession. All that France will be able to admit, after having established this principle, which cannot be reasonably contradicted, is to examine, in regard to this object, whether the reciprocal convenience of the two nations can exact some particular arrangement thereto, in order to fix invariably the respective boundaries.

"The only pretext the English make use of to colour their pretensions is drawn from Article 15 of the Treaty of Utrecht; but in examining attentively all the expressions of that Article, it is evident that nothing is less founded than the inductions which the Court of London actually wish to draw from it.

"1. It is only a question in this Article of the person of the savages, and not at all of their country, or pretended territory, since they have no determined territory, and the only knowledge they have of property is the actual use they make of the land they occupy to-day, and which they will 10 cease perhaps to occupy to-morrow.

"2. It would be absurd to pretend that everywhere where a savage, a friend or subject of one of the two Crowns, should make a passing residence, that country that he had dwelt in should belong to the Crown of which he might be the subject or the friend.

"3. The savages in question are free and independent, and there are none that could be called subjects of one or the other Crown; the enunciation of the Treaty of Utrecht in this respect is incorrect, and cannot change the nature of things. It is certain that no Englishman would dare, without running the risk of being massacred, tell the Iroquois that they are subjects of England; these savage nations govern themselves, and are as much, and more, friends and allies of France than of England; several French families are even affiliated among the Iroquois, and have dwelt with them 20 during the course of the last war, during which the five nations preserved the most exact neutrality.

"4. Article 15 of the Treaty of Utrecht contains the same stipulations, as much in favour of the French as in favour of the English, and these stipulations are mutual; the French could then sustain with a better title than the English pretend about the Iroquois, that the nations, Abénaquises and Souriquois, otherwise Micmacs, Malécites, Cannibas, etc., are subjects of France, and as there are some Souriquois who inhabit the extremity of the Peninsula of Cote, Cape Fourcher, and Cape Sable, it would follow that the French could pretend to form settlements there, with as much right as the English have formed them at Oswego, or Chouagen on the shores of Lake Ontario, in 1726 or 1727, and consequently long after the peace of Utrecht; France has not ceased since that time to complain of that enterprise and she relies upon the Fort of Chouagen being destroyed. 30

"5. The Treaty of Utrecht has been ill interpreted in pretending that it would authorize the French and English to go and trade indiscriminately amongst all the savage nations, under pretext of subjection, alliance or friendship. This Article, well understood and well expounded, assures only the liberty of commerce which the savages can make among themselves, or with European nations, and does not at all authorize them to leave the confines of their colonies to go and trade with the savages.

"6. Finally, this Article 15 conveys that it shall be settled that the American nations shall be reputed subjects or friends of the two Crowns. This stipulation has not been executed, because, in fact, it is scarcely susceptible of execution, since such a savage nation, which to-day is friendly, to-morrow may become an enemy, and, consequently, the fixation which might have been appointed for it would be continually contradicted by fact.

"All that has just been exposed proves clearly that in discussing concerning the rules of the justice 40 and right of Article 15 of the Treaty of Utrecht, it will be easy to destroy the false interpretations that have been given it; it will not be less easy to demonstrate that the English should not be determined by any motive of interest to put forward the pretensions they have formed; it is not a question in these vast regions of America, to dispute about a little more or a little less land. The essential interest is confined to two objects, that of security and that of commerce; and the Court of France will be always disposed to concert, in these two respects, with that of London, equitable and solid arrangements as well for the present as for the future."

On the 7th of June following, the British Government returned a reply to this mémoire, repeating Article by Article, and with reference to the limits of Canada, said:— 50

"It will be difficult to form a precise idea of what is called in the Memorial the centre of Canada, and still less can it be admitted as a base of negotiation that the River St. Lawrence is the centre of that Province; this is advanced without proof, and it is impossible that the course of a river of that length can form the centre of any country. Besides, Great Britain cannot grant that the country between the northern coast of the Bay of Fundy and the southern bank of the River St. Lawrence, which Great Britain has already offered to leave neutral, and not possessed by either of the two nations, in reserve for the borders that are proposed to be drawn for it, ought to be regarded or has ever been considered as a part of Canada, since the contrary has been demonstrated by authentic proofs. Neither can Great Britain admit that France has right to Lakes Ontario and Erie, and the Niagara River, and 10 to the navigation of these waters exclusively, since it is evident, by incontestable facts, that the subjects of Great Britain and France, as well as the Five Nations Iroquois, have indiscriminately made use of the navigation of these lakes and this river, according as occasions and convenience have required; but as regards a piece situated on the south bank of the River St. Lawrence, exclusive of that already proposed to be left neutral, the boundaries of which are in dispute between the two nations or their respective colonies, the Court of Great Britain is ready to enter into a discussion in regard to this, and to fix the limits of it by an amicable negotiation, but without prejudice, nevertheless, to the rights and possessions of any of these five nations.

"With regard to the exposition that is made in the French Memorial, of the 15th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, the Court of Great Britain does not conceive that it is authorized either by the 20 words or the intention of that Article.

"1. The Court of Great Britain cannot admit that this Article only has regard to the person of the savages, and not their country; the words of that Treaty are clear and precise, viz.: The Five Nations or Cantons Indians are subject to the rule of Great Britain, which, by the accepted exposition of all treaties, must have reference to the country as well as to the person of the inhabitants; France has recognized this most solemnly; she has well weighed the importance of that avowal at the time of the signature of this Treaty, and Great Britain can never depart from it; the countries possessed by these Indians are very well known, and are not at all as indeterminate as is pretended in the Memorial; they possess and transfer them, as other proprietors do every where else.

"2. Great Britain has never pretended that the country in which a savage should make a passing residence would belong to the Crown whose subject or friend he might be.

"3. However free and independent the savages in question may be (which is a point which the Court of Great Britain does not at all wish to discuss), they can only be regarded as subjects of Great Britain, and treated as such by France in particular, since she has solemnly engaged herself by the Treaty of Utrecht, renewed and confirmed in the best form by that of Aix-la-Chapelle, to regard them as such; the nature of things is not changed by the Treaty of Utrecht. The same people, the same country, exist still; but the acknowledgment made by France of the subjection of the Iroquois to Great Britain is a perpetual proof of her right in this respect, which can never be disputed with her by France.

"4. It is true that the 20th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht contains the same stipulations in 40 favour of the French as in favour of the English, with regard to such Indian nations as shall be deemed, after the conclusion of this Treaty, by Commissaries, to be subjects of Great Britain or of France; but as to what is mentioned of the five nations or Cantons Iroquois, France has distinctly and specifically declared by the said 15th Article that they are subjects of Great Britain, 'Magne Britannicæ imperio subjecta,' and consequently this is a point to be no more disputed about.

"5. In whatever manner one interprets the Treaty of Utrecht with respect to the trade which will be permitted the English and French to carry on indiscriminately with the savage nations, it is nevertheless very certain that such a general trade is by no means forbidden by this Treaty. It is an ordinary and natural right to transact business with one's own subjects, allies or friends; but to come in force into the territories belonging to the subjects or allies of another Crown, to build forts there, to 50 deprive them of their territories and to appropriate them, is not and will not be authorized by any pretension, not even by the most uncertain of all, viz., convenience. However, such are the forts of Frederick, Niagara, Presqu'isle, Rivière-aux-Bœufs, and all those that have been built on the Oyo and in the adjacent countries. Whatever pretext France can allege for regarding these countries as dependencies of Canada, it is certainly true that they have belonged to, and (inasmuch as they have not been ceded or transferred to the English) belonging still to the same Indian nations that France has agreed, by the 20th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, not to molest, 'Millo in posterum impedimento aut molestia afficiant.'

"6. It has already been proved that France has, by the express words of the said Treaty, fully and absolutely recognized the Iroquois as subjects of Great Britain. It would not have been as difficult as is pretended in the Memorial to come to an agreement on the subjects of the other Indians, if, among the many Commissions which have emanated to settle this point, there had been a mutual disposition to come to a conclusion. The acts of these Commissions have sufficiently shown the true reasons which have prevented the execution of the 15th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, without recourse to an imaginary supposition, as if the Treaty was not capable of being executed; a supposition which is evidently destroyed by the Treaty itself with regard to the Iroquois nations."

On the 22nd of July, 1755, Monsieur de Mirepoix, the French Ambassador, left England by order of his Court, without taking leave; consequently, on the same day, Mr. de Cosne was instructed by His Britannic Majesty's Government to quit France immediately without taking leave, and to repair to England, which he did on the 25th, and arrived in England, with all his public papers, on the 31st of the same month.

Negotiations were accordingly suspended, and on the 17th of May, 1756, war was declared by Great Britain against France; followed, on the 9th of June, by a French ordonnance declaring war against England.

No further reports than those above described would appear to have been made to the Government by the English Commissaries between the 1st of April, 1755, and March, 1756.

The following is an account of what passed between the 26th March and 20th September, 1761:

On the 26th of March, 1761, the Due de Choiseul, in the name of the King of France, addressed the King of Great Britain, through Mr. Pitt, a letter, communicating proposals as to the basis of negotiations for a separate peace between England and France, in addition to those pending to secure a general European peace.

On the 8th of April, the British reply was forwarded to the Duke, containing the views of the Court of St. James as to the proper basis to be established, in which willingness was expressed to receive an Envoy duly authorized to enter into negotiations. The result of this was, that M. de Bussy was appointed French Minister to London, and Mr. Hans Stanley was sent in a similar capacity from Great Britain to Paris; these diplomatists arriving at their respective posts early in June of the same year.

Negotiations were immediately set on foot for the conclusion of peace between France and England; but the chief difficulty in arriving at an amicable understanding consisted in the desire of the French to retain the fisheries at and near Cape Breton.

On the question of Canada, under date of the 17th June, the Duke de Choiseul had demanded that the boundary of Canada in that part of the Ohio which is regulated by the water-line, and so clearly defined by the treaty under discussion, be so established, that there may not be any contestation between the two nations as to the said boundary.

On the 26th June, the above proposal of the Due de Choiseul, as to the fixation of new limits to Canada towards the Ohio, was rejected by Great Britain on the grounds that it was "captious and insidious; thrown out in hopes, if agreed to, to shorten thereby the extent of Canada, and to lengthen the boundaries of Louisiana, and in the view to establish what must not be admitted, namely, that all that was not Canada was Louisiana, whereby all the intermediate nations and countries, the true barrier to each Province, would be given up to France."

The intentions of the Court of St. James were further fully set forth, as to Canada, in the following passage of the same letter:—

"First, then, the King will never depart from the total and entire cession, on the part of France, without new limits or any exception whatever, of all Canada and its dependencies."

On the 29th June Mr. Stanley reported that "the southern bounds of Canada were to be so settled as to give that Province entire and unmutilated to Great Britain such as France, in short, held it in all respects;" and on the 1st July he stated that "it was agreed that Canada, as that Province was determined by their (French) geographers and historians, as well as by the respective civil and military Departments, should be ceded undismembered and entire to Great Britain."

In his despatch of the 14th July, 1761, Mr. Stanley forwarded a Mémoire containing proposals from the Duc de Choiseul, Art. 1 of which ran as follows:—

"1. The King cedes and guarantees Canada to the King of England, such as it has been, and in right ought to be possessed by France, without restriction, and without the liberty of returning upon any pretence whatever against this cession or guaranty, and without interrupting the Crown of England in the entire possession of Canada."

It must, however, be remembered that other questions of great importance bearing on European interests were involved in these negotiations for peace; and as difficulties were offered by France to the British proposals, on the 25th July, Mr. Stanley was instructed to present an ultimatum from Great Britain, the first point of which related to Canada, and declared that "His Britannic Majesty would never depart from the total and entire cession on the part of France, without new limits, or any exception whatever, of all Canada and its dependencies."

The reply of France to this ultimatum was transmitted home in Mr. Stanley's despatch of the 4th August which contained the following clause with regard to Canada:

"The King consents to cede Canada to England in the most extensive form, as specified in the memorials of propositions."

Nevertheless, the replies of the French Government to the other demands were not deemed satisfactory, and Mr. Stanley, assuming that the Treaty had failed, stated in his despatch of the 6th August, that he was "convinced that the sole cause of the failure was the determined resistance of the French as to the entire concession of the fishery."

M. de Bussy was, as has been stated, at this time French Minister in London, and on the 18th August he furnished to Mr. Pitt a memo. upon the limits of Louisiana, which bore upon the limits of Canada, and ran thus:

"On the limits of Louisiana.

"To fix the limits of Louisiana towards the English Colonies and Canada, a line should be drawn, which will extend from Rio Perdido, between the Bay of Mobile and that of Pensacola, passing by Fort Toulouse in the Alibamons, and which, being prolonged by the western point of Lake Erie, will enclose the river of the Miamis, and by the eastern extremity of Lake Hurou will go and meet the high lands on the side of Hudson's Bay towards the Lake of Abitibis, from whence the line will be continued from east to west up to and comprising Lake Superior."

Instructions, however, accompanied by an ultimatum, were transmitted under date the 27th August, 1761, to Mr. Stanley, in which it was laid down that these limits could not be acceded to, and Mr. Pitt, in alluding to the conduct of France, stated that among the reasons whereby British confidence had been shaken, was "the claiming, as Louisiana, with an effrontery unparalleled, vast regions which the Marquis de Vaudreuil had surrendered to General Amherst, as Canada, and defined himself with his own hand, as comprehended in the government of that Province where he commanded;" and Mr. Pitt gave the following definition of the boundaries of Canada, as set forth by M. de Vaudreuil:

"Canada, according to the line of its limits, traced by the Marquis de Vaudreuil himself, when this Governor-General surrendered, by capitulation, the said Province to the British General, Chevalier

Amherst, comprises, on one side, Lakes Huron, Michigan and Superior, and the said line, drawn from Lake Rouge, embraces by a tortuous course the River Ouabache (Wabash) up to its junction with the Ohio, and from there extends the length of this river inclusively, until its confluence into the Mississippi; and on this definition of the limits of Canada, its cession was claimed; a copy of M. de Vaudreuil's map being sent to Mr. Stanley for reference, together with an extract of a letter from General Amherst, dated 4th October, 1760, bearing upon that subject.

Annexed hereto will be found a further copy of that map of M. de Vaudreuil, to which Mr. Pitt referred, which has been made from the original enclosed by General Amherst in his despatch of 4th October, 1760, from which document also the following extracts have been taken:—

"The Government of Canada includes Lakes Huron, Michigan and Superior, as you will see by 10 the enclosed sketch, the red line being marked by the Marquis de Vaudreuil.

"The above State is taken only from the part beginning above the Island of Montreal, with the Cedars and Vaudreuil on the north-west of the River St. Lawrence, and Chateaugay on the south-east, and ends with Berthier on the north-west of the river, the Island of Dupas and Sorel on the south-east."

"The Government of Trois Rivières joins that of Montreal with Maskenongy on the north-west, and Yamaska on the south-east, and ends with Ste. Anne on the north-west, and Ste. Pierre de Bequit on the south-east of the River St. Lawrence."

"The Government of Quebec begins with Grondines on the north-west and de Chaillon on the south-east, and takes in all the parishes from there down the River St. Lawrence." 20

It is further recorded on the 2nd September, the Marquis de Vaudreuil's map was shown to the Duc de Choiseul by Mr. Stanley, and that the bounds of Canada were agreed upon as therein stated. This fact is further substantiated by a passage in Mr. Stanley's despatch of the 4th of that month which runs as follows:

"The Duc de Choiseul complained that the bounds of Canada were laid down very unfavourably to France in the description which your memorial contains, alleging (sic) that there had been disputes between the Marquis de Vaudreuil and the Governor of Louisiana with regard to the limits of their two Provinces, wherein the former, being the more able and more active, had greatly enlarged his jurisdiction. He added, however, that though many such objections might be made, it had been the intention of the King his master to make the most full and complete cession of Canada, and that he 30 consented in his name to those limits. I then produced the map you sent me, and it was agreed that this Province should remain to Britain, as it is there delineated."

The last Mémoire of France to England, in these negotiations, is dated 9th September, and was delivered by M. de Bussy to Mr. Pitt on the 14th.

The 1st Article fully confirms the acceptance by France of the de Vaudreuil map, and states as follows:—

"The King has declared in his first Memorial of propositions, and in his ultimatum, that he will cede and guarantee to England the possession of Canada, in the most ample manner. His Majesty still persists in that offer, and without discussing the line of its limits marked on the map presented by Mr. Stanley,—as that line, on which England rests its demands, is without doubt the most extensive bound which can be given to the cession,—the King is willing to grant it."

On September 15th, in consequence of the non-acceptance by France of the terms offered by Great Britain, instructions were sent to the British Minister at Paris to demand his passports, and on the 21st a passport was sent to M. de Bussy, the French Envoy in London.

On the 20th, Mr. Stanley received his passport, together with an assurance that the King of France would be found at any time willing to re-open these negotiations, which were in effect resumed the following year; for on the 29th August, 1762, the French King despatched the Duc de Nivernois to London to carry over the peace propositions; and as a result, Preliminary Articles of Peace were signed at Fontainebleau on the 3rd November, 1762.

From these is given the following extract:—

"His Majesty renounces all the pretensions that he had formerly formed, or could form, for New Scotland or Acadia, in all its parts, and guarantees it quite entire and with all its dependencies to the King of Great Britain. Besides, his very Christian Majesty cedes and guarantees to his said Britannic Majesty, in all its entirety, Canada, with all its dependencies, as well as the Island of Cape Breton and all the other Islands in the Gulf and River St. Lawrence, without restriction, without his being free to come back upon this cession and guarantee, under any pretext, nor to trouble Great Britain in the aforementioned possessions.

REPORT OF THE PROCEEDINGS BEFORE THE ARBITRATORS
IN THE MATTER OF THE BOUNDARIES OF THE PROVINCE OF ONTARIO, AT OTTAWA, 1ST, 2ND, 3RD AUGUST, 1878.*

Arbitrators:

The Right Honourable Sir Edward Thornton,

The Honourable the Chief Justice of Ontario.

Counsel for the Dominion:

ARGUMENT OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF ONTARIO.

The Hon. Oliver Mowat, Attorney-General of Ontario, opened the case for Ontario. He said:— I have embodied in the printed "Statement of the Case of the Province of Ontario" the substance of the principal grounds on which I think the Province is entitled to the bounds northerly and westerly which we claim. I have also for facility of reference, had printed in a book, of which the arbitrators have copies, the statutes, documents, and other matter which seemed to bear on the subject, whether favourably or unfavourably to our claim. I do not mean to attempt now an exhaustive statement of all that is material, but purpose confining myself to stating some grounds which seem to me to be quite sufficient, and more than sufficient, to sustain our claim, although there are others of perhaps not less importance that might be dwelt upon. I do not mean even to answer at present all the points which have been set forth in the case for the Dominion; some of them I shall refer to, and if any of those not referred to seem to make any impression upon the arbitrators, I shall have an opportunity in my reply to remark upon them.

The sixth section of the British North America Act provides that that part of the Province of Canada "which formerly constituted the Province of Upper Canada, shall constitute the Province of Ontario;" the Province of Canada was by the Union Act of 1840 constituted of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. The line of division between these Provinces had been settled in 1791 by an Order in Council, and extended in manner therein described to the "boundary line" of Hudson's Bay. By the same Order in Council, Upper Canada was to include "all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada." All of the Province of Canada which lies west of the line of division belongs to Upper Canada, as all which lies east of the same division line belongs to the Province of Quebec. Ontario has the same limits as Upper Canada had, and the same limits as west of the division line the Province of Canada had, and as the Dominion of Canada had before its purchase of the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company. In 1870 the Dominion acquired these rights, as also the "North-Western Territory," in addition to the territory which the Province of Upper Canada and the Province of Canada had had. The question for the arbitrators is as to the westerly and northerly boundaries of the Province of Ontario, or of the Province of Upper Canada.

It will be convenient before entering upon the argument, to point out upon the produced map by Mr. Devine, the principal points which come in question in the discussion. This map has been prepared to assist the arbitrators in following the arguments addressed to them. It is in the main correct, although I have discovered two or three unimportant inaccuracies. On this map is marked the line of division between Upper and Lower Canada, which line runs northerly into Lake Temiscaming and thence due north to the boundary line or shore of Hudson's Bay. In regard to that line, I suppose there will be no dispute.

The westerly boundary of the Province, according to the present claim of the Dominion, has also been marked upon the map; it is a line drawn due north from the confluence of the Ohio and the Mississippi and in longitude about $89^{\circ} 9\frac{1}{2}'$. The provisional line of 1874 is the next on the map westward, but is not of any importance for our present purpose; it was found necessary, until the right boundary should be decided, that a line should be agreed upon provisionally, to the east of which the Province should make its grants of land, and to the west of which grants by the Dominion might be made. (Book of Documents, p. 347.) The next line westwardly is that running to the most north-western angle of the Lake of the Woods, near the Province of Manitoba; that point is very nearly in the meridian of Turtle Lake, and of Lake Itasca, both of which lakes have been regarded as sources of the Mississippi, and are very nearly in the same longitude.

Ontario claims that it is clear that its western boundary line is no farther east than the meridian of the most north-western angle of the Lake of the Woods, and that the only question on the western side of the Province is as to how much (if any) territory we are entitled to west of that meridian.

With regard to the northern boundary, we claim it to be certain that it is not south of the shore of James' Bay, or of the most north-westerly point of the Lake of the Woods; as to the exact extent of the Province to the north of those points there may be more difficulty. The statute of 1774, usually called the "Quebec Act," added a considerable territory to the Province of Quebec, and purported to give as the northern boundary of that Province, the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company; how far that territory extended has never been definitely ascertained. We have examined whatever documentary evidence there is which might throw light on this question, and we have also had a pretty exhaustive examination made of the various maps published before the present century. An analysis of the maps has been printed at p. 135 and on subsequent pages of the Book of Documents; and the produced map by Mr. Devine shows the principal lines. The most northerly is one which, in 1701, the Hudson's Bay Company unsuccessfully claimed for its southern boundary; and the next is the line they had asked for without success in the previous year, 1700. All of the other northerly lines marked on this map are at the westerly side placed to the north of the Lake of the Woods; most of them are several hundred miles to the north of that lake; while on the east they are south of James' Bay and of the point to which the Royal Commissions bring us there. None of these northerly lines has the authority of a treaty or a statute or an agreement. One line is marked on certain maps as "bounds of Hudson's Bay by the Treaty of Utrecht;" but that was a mistake of the geographers; it must be admitted that the bounds were not settled by the Treaty of Utrecht.

The claim of Ontario is precisely the same as had always been made for the Province before the Dominion of Canada purchased the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company. Controversies on the subject took place between the Hudson's Bay Company and the Province of Canada, and afterwards between that Company and the Dominion of Canada. During these Controversies able papers were written wherein the claims of Canada were set forth; and I rely upon the arguments contained in these papers though not now repeating them all.

Opinions of some learned lawyers having been given in favour of the claim of the Hudson's Bay Company, these were controverted in the official papers on behalf of Canada; those opinions were given on inaccurate and partial representations of the facts; new evidence in favour of our claim has been obtained since; but upon the evidence collected before 1856, we have on our side the opinions of other eminent lawyers, and the opinion of the late Chief Justice Draper. The opinion of the Chief Justice was formed and communicated when he was in his prime; he was one of the ablest Judges in Canada, and had given great attention to this subject. He was sent to England by the Canadian Government to watch over the interests of the Province; he had access to private sources of information, some of which we have been able to reproduce now; and the opinion that he formed was arrived at upon a fuller knowledge of the facts than had existed on the part of any court or counsel who had theretofore given attention to the matter, and whose opinions we are in possession of. The opinion was communicated to the Government here, not expressed in controversy with an adversary; and it is very cautiously expressed; it does not go as far as the Province was claiming; he did not think the evidence sufficient to give a line to the Rocky Mountains (as the Province claimed), but expressed the opinion—his "confident hope"—that a decision by the Privy Council would give "to Canada a clear right west to the line of the Mississippi, and some considerable distance north of what the Hudson's Bay Company claim, though not any territory west of the westernmost head of the Mississippi," which is very near the Rocky Mountains. The opinion will be found at page 391 of our Book of Documents.

Sir Edward Thornton.—The law officers of the Crown in England strongly recommended an appeal to the Privy Council, but that was not done. The writer of this extract seems to have expected that there would be a decision of the Privy Council, and I would like to know why the case was not referred.

Chief Justice Harrison.—It was probably delayed by negotiations.

The Attorney-General.—There were constant negotiations going on from that time, and the matter was one which, however clear the right might be thought to be, it was considered desirable to settle by compromise.

Sir Edward Thornton.—But it was not compromised.

The Attorney-General.—It was compromised twelve years afterwards. My learned friend, Mr Hodgins, reminds me that one thing which prevented the reference was that the Government here thought the question ought to be referred by the British Government—that the Province ought not to have the responsibility of it; at all events the delay was only twelve years from this time—not a great while to be negotiating about a continent of territory.

Mr. MacMahon.—I can answer further in regard to that. The Province of Canada refused to submit anything but the validity of the Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company to the Council; they refused to submit the question of the boundaries.

The Attorney-General.—The adverse opinions were founded upon the Company's ex parte statements of the facts, and one of the allegations was that the Hudson's Bay Company had been always in possession of the territory. Now it is a familiar principle with regard to old statutes or charters, that the interpretation of them is governed by the contemporaneous exposition they received, and by the acts of the parties under them. If the fact was, that, from 1670 to the time when these opinions were called for, there had been an actual possession by the Hudson's Bay Company of the whole territory which they claimed, there could be little question of their right to such territory. It would be absurd to suppose that, as a matter of law and legal construction, the Company could be deprived of property which they had for nearly two centuries "claimed and exercised dominion over" under their grants, as absolute and undisputed proprietors of the soil. But we deny that there was any such claim, dominion or possession, by the Company of the territory now in question, for more than a century after 1670; the principal ground upon which the opinions referred to must have proceeded was not in accordance with the facts. We have in our book the Company's statement. I refer to page 288:—

"Under this grant the Company have always claimed and exercised dominion as absolute proprietors of the soil in the territories understood to be embraced by the terms of the grant, and which are more particularly defined in the accompanying map; and they have also claimed and enjoyed the exclusive right of trading in those territories." The map referred to claims up to the height of land. No lawyer, upon that statement, could come to any other conclusion than did the law officers. In some of the earlier as well as the more recent of the legal opinions, express reference was made to the importance of knowing how much of this territory had been in possession of the Hudson's Bay Company, and it was stated in them that an old charter of this kind, especially an ambiguous one, should not be interpreted without reference to that fact.

No adverse legal opinion has been given on the facts that are now before the arbitrators. On the other hand, we have the opinion of a very distinguished judge, who was aware of all the material facts in favour of the Company's contention—although not of all the facts in favour of the Province,—and who gave that opinion after having been exclusively occupied several months with the subject. However, the arbitrators are not bound by that opinion. They will give whatever weight they may consider due to it; but they will consider for themselves whether the opinion was right or wrong.

On entering now upon some discussion of the evidence, I submit that, inasmuch as the Province of Ontario is now claiming what had always been claimed before by the Province of Canada, and by the Dominion of Canada likewise, I am entitled to ask the arbitrators to take that claim to be prima facie correct and well founded. The Dominion is one of the two parties to this controversy, and we put in evidence the official statements of the representatives of the Dominion repeatedly made; we show what position they took in regard to this question, what assertions they made, and what they claimed, up to the very last moment before becoming purchasers of the Hudson's Bay Company's rights. I do not say this is conclusive, that it estops the Dominion from saying that their contention had been wrong, false or mistaken, but I do say that their demands before buying out the Company throw the burden on the Dominion of showing that in all those antecedent discussions and statements they had been wrong. I start with the strongest presumption in my favour when I show that before they made that purchase, the Dominion of Canada had taken the position which I now take, had made the assertions which I now make, had used many of the arguments which I now use, and had considered that those arguments were incapable of being answered. To take a single example, what did the Dominion Ministers say in their letter to the Colonial Minister on the 16th January, 1869? (Book of Documents, p. 324.) They expressly claimed "that the boundaries of Upper Canada on the north and west" included "all the territory to the westward and southward of the boundary line of Hudson's Bay to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada;" and that "Whatever doubt may exist as to the utmost extent of old or French Canada, no impartial investigator of the evidence in the case can doubt that it extended to and included the country between the Lake of the Woods and Red River."

But I shall show that, if I had no presumption in my favour, the conclusions which I desire the arbitrators to arrive at are the conclusions which they cannot but arrive at in view of all the facts

In 1763 France ceded to England "Canada with all its dependencies," reserving only such part of what had been known as Canada as lay west of the Mississippi. The treaty will be found at page 18 of our Book of Documents. The watershed between the Missouri and the Mississippi rivers had been the boundary between Canada and Louisiana when both were owned by France, and by the treaty of 1763 the River Mississippi was agreed to as the future boundary between the English and French possessions in that quarter; the language of the treaty being, "that the confines between [France and England] in that part of the world shall be fixed irrevocably by a line drawn along the middle of the River Mississippi from its source [etc.], to the sea." Very soon after this treaty, viz., on 7th October, 1763, the Province of Quebec was erected by Royal Proclamation, but the Province as then constituted took in very little of what was afterwards Upper Canada and what is now Ontario; the most north-westerly point was Lake Nipissing; the whole of the territory adjacent to the great lakes was excluded. In 1774 the boundaries of Quebec were enlarged by the Quebec Act. That Act recited that "by the arrangements made by the said Royal Proclamation a very large extent of territory, within which were several colonies and settlements of subjects of France, who claimed to remain therein under the faith of the said treaty, was left without any provision being made for the administration of civil government therein." The Act therefore provided that "all the territories, islands and countries in North America belonging to the Crown of Great Britain, bounded on the south by a line" therein described, from the Bay of Chaleurs to "the River Ohio, and along the bank of the said river, westward, to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay," etc., "be, and they are hereby, during His Majesty's pleasure, annexed to and made part and parcel of the Province of Quebec as created and established by the said Royal Proclamation of the 7th October, 1763." What territory was embraced in this description? The Dominion contends now that the expression "northward to the southern boundary" of the Hudson's Bay Territory, meant a line drawn from the confluence of the two rivers due north, which would be in longitude about 89° 9½' west; that the old Province of Quebec contained no territory west of that line; and that the Province of Upper Canada or the Province of Canada contained none. The only pretence for this argument is the word "northward" in this statute. Reasons as strong and indisputable as possible in favour of a more westerly boundary are afforded by the other language of the statute; by the surrounding circumstances; and by subsequent transactions.

Look first at the statute itself. It will be found at page 3 of the Book of Documents. The enactment is as follows:—"That all the territories, islands and countries in North America, belonging to the Crown of Great Britain, bounded on the south by a line from the Bay of Chaleurs," etc., "until it strike the River Ohio, and along the bank of the said river, westward, to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay; and also all such territories, islands and countries, which have, since the 10th day of February, 1763, been made part of the Government of Newfoundland—be, and they are hereby, during His Majesty's pleasure, annexed to, and made part and parcel of the Province of Quebec as created and established by the said Royal Proclamation of the 7th day of October, 1763."

Now, in the first place, the word "northward" does not necessarily mean due north. In descriptions in the ordinary deeds and documents with which we are familiar, the word "northward" is constantly used as meaning any northerly direction—either due north, or towards the north-west or the north-east. Then in another part of the description a corresponding word is used in the sense in which I say this word "northward" should be used, for after the description brings the line to the River Ohio, it goes on thus: "along the river westward to the banks of the Mississippi." Here the word "westward" is used, not in the sense of due west, but of a line following the sinuosities of the River Ohio. Further, we have in the same description the expression "directly west." We have thus a word corresponding to "northward"—namely, "westward"—meaning not due west, but in a westerly direction; and we have the words "due west" and "right line" when Parliament meant due west and in a straight line. These considerations remove any presumption that Parliament meant due west and, must necessarily be taken to have meant due north. All the territories, islands and countries in North America belonging to the Crown of Great Britain, which were assigned in 1774 to the Province of Quebec, are bounded on the south by the line described, to the banks of the Mississippi; and what we say is that "northwards" meant the whole territory northward from the south line so described. The south line is given, and the statute describes what territory that south line is intended to include—all the territories belonging to Great Britain northward to the Hudson's Bay Company's territory.

The surrounding facts bearing on the question place the intention beyond doubt. First, observe that the recital declares the object of the Act to be, to give to the Province more extensive boundaries than it had by the Proclamation: "Whereas, by the arrangements made by the said Royal Proclamation, a very large extent of territory, within which were several colonies and settlements of the subjects of France, who claimed to remain therein under the faith of the said treaty, was left without any provision being made for the administration of civil government therein." Where were these colonies and settlements? There is no room for question that if you take the due north line as the westerly boundary, you do not include in the Province many of these French colonies and settlements. A large number of them, containing a large population, are given in Mr. Mills' book; and by looking at the produced map by Mr. Devine, the arbitrators will see the number of forts which, with the populations in their neighbourhood, would be excluded. It is thus an historical fact, utterly beyond controversy, that a line due north from the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi, would leave between that line and the Mississippi a large number of colonies and settlements for which it was intended by the statute to provide civil government. Assume that the word "northward" is ambiguous, as certainly it does not necessarily mean due north, we remove all doubt by showing from the statute what the intention was, and by showing that that intention would not be carried out by a due north line.

Further, if I had not the recital in the statute; if I did not know from history that there were colonies and settlements there, which the recital shows that it was intended to include; if all I knew was that we had this ambiguous word, and that the British possessions at the time of the passing of, the Act extended along the banks of the Mississippi to its source, that fact would afford sufficient ground for presuming that the word "northward" was intended to include whatever British possessions there were there.

"In the interpretation of statutes, the interpreter must, in order to understand the subject matter and the scope and object of the enactment, call to his aid all those external and historical facts which are necessary for the purpose." (Maxwell on Statutes, pp. 20, 21.) It is presumed that the circumstances which led to the Act, the Bill introduced, and the proceedings of Parliament thereon, can be looked at for the purpose of the present controversy, as the discussions on the negotiations for a treaty are looked at to remove any doubt to which the language of the treaty might give rise. The proceedings in Parliament are printed at page 300 of the Book of Documents; and the debate on the Bill shows that, as a matter of fact, the intention of the measure was understood on both sides of the House to be that the Mississippi, and no due north line, should be the western boundary. The Bill originated in the Lords, and the Bill, as it came down from that House, was clear as to the Mississippi being the western boundary. The Bill described the Province as "all the territories, etc., heretofore forming a part of the territory of Canada in North America, extending southward to the banks of the River Ohio, westward to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company. (Page 302.) Under that description the present question would not be arguable. There is no reference there to a due north line from the confluence of the Ohio and the Mississippi; and it will not be argued that any territory there belonging to Great Britain was to be left without any government or without any provision made by the statute for its government.

The description was altered in the Commons. Why was it altered? Was it in order that the banks of the Mississippi should not be the western boundary? By no means; no member objected to that boundary. It appears beyond question from the debate that all parties, those in favour of and those opposed to the Bill, concurred in regarding the western boundary as being properly the Mississippi River to its source (that being, as I have said, the boundary also between the possessions of France and England), and that the only reason for the change was the desire of Mr. Burke—who was at that time agent for the Province of New York—to settle the boundary between the Province of Quebec and the Province of New York. He thought the Province of New York might suffer if the Crown was left to settle its boundaries, and he therefore wanted the statute to settle them; but no proposal was made by him, or by anybody else, that the territory of the Province of Quebec should be less extensive towards the west. We have Mr. Burke's letter, written after the Act had passed, and in which he gives an account to his constituents of the Province of New York of what he had done for them. He points out what was wrong in the Bill as first introduced—namely, the difficulty as between the French Province of Quebec and the English Province of New York—in a region of country far away from the Mississippi; and he tells what he did for the purpose of removing that difficulty. His letter is dated 2nd August, 1774, and is printed at page 384 of the Book of Documents. He told his constituents that he thought they "might be very much affected by" the clause as it stood in the Bill as it passed the Lords; and explained "the conduct which (he) held in consequence of that view of (their) interests." He informed his clients that "the predominant and declared opinion" was, that "any growth of the [English] colonies which might make them grow out of the authority of this kingdom, ought to be accounted rather a morbid fulness than a sound and proper habit;” that the prevailing habit was to restrain “the colonies from spreading into the back country;” and “that the lines of the plan of the policy just mentioned were very distinguishable in the Bill as it came down to” the House of Commons, and that he had in consequence procured the alterations which had been made in the House of Commons. That “his was not (as it might be between two ancient British colonies) a mere question of geographical distinction, or of economical distribution, where the inhabitants on the one side of the line and the other lived under the same law and enjoyed the same privileges of Englishmen. But this was a boundary discriminating different principles of jurisdiction and legislation; where, in one part, the subject lived under law, and in the other under prerogative.”

10 In the debate the great extent of this territory was objected to by Mr. Townsend, who said that the limits thereby assigned to Canada, and stated in the Bill to have been part of it, were greater than England and France had ever given to Canada. He was answered by Lord North as follows:—

“The first thing objected to by the honourable gentleman is the very great extent of territory given to the Province. Why, he asks, is it so extensive? There are added undoubtedly to it two countries which were not in the original limits of Canada as settled in the Proclamation of 1763—one the Labrador coast, the other the country westward of (to?) the Ohio and Mississippi, and a few scattered posts to the west. Sir, the addition of the Labrador coast has been made in consequence of information received from those best acquainted with Canada and the fishery upon that coast, who deem it absolutely necessary for the preservation of that fishery that the Labrador coast should no longer be considered as part of the Government of Newfoundland, but be annexed to that country. With respect to the other additions, these questions very fairly occur. It is well known that settlers are in the habit of going to the interior parts from time to time. Now, however undesirable, it is open to Parliament to consider whether it is fit there should be no government in the country, or, on the contrary, separate and distinct governments, or whether the scattered posts should be annexed to Canada. The House of Lords have thought proper to annex them to Canada; but when we consider that there must be some government, and that it is the desire of all those who trade from Canada to these countries that there should be some government, my opinion is that, if the gentlemen will weigh the inconvenience of separate governments, they will think the least inconvenient method is to annex those posts, though few in population, great in extent of territory, rather than to leave them without government at all, or make them separate ones. Sir, the annexation likewise is the result of the desire of the Canadians, and of those who trade to those settlements, who think they cannot trade with safety as long as they remain separate.”

Attorney-General Thurlow said—“The honourable gentlemen are mistaken if they suppose that the bounds described embraced in point of fact any English settlement. I know of no English settlement embraced by it. I have heard a great deal of the commencement of English settlements; but as far as I have read they all lie upon the other side of the Ohio. I know at the same time that there have been, for nearly a century past, settlements in different parts of all this tract, especially in the southern parts of it and in the eastern (? western) bounded by the Ohio and Mississippi, but with regard to that part there have been different tracts of French settlements established. As far as they are inhabited by any but Indians, I take those settlements to have been altogether French; so that the objection certainly wants foundation.”

Solicitor-General Wedderburn said—“It is one object of this measure that these persons (the English) should not settle in Canada.”

Mr. Burke said—“In the first place, when I heard that this Bill was to be brought in on the principle that Parliament was to draw a line of circumvallation about our colonies and to establish a siege of arbitrary power, by bringing round about Canada the control of other people different in manners, language and laws from those of the inhabitants of this colony, I thought it of the highest importance that we should endeavour to make this boundary as clear as possible.

The noble lord showed me the amendment, which by no means relieved my apprehensions. The reason why I feel so anxious is that the line proposed is not a geographical distinction merely; it is not a line between New York and some other English settlement; it is not a question whether you shall receive English law and English government upon the side of New York or whether you shall receive a more advantageous government upon the side of Connecticut, or whether you are restrained upon the side of New Jersey. In all these you will find English laws, English customs, English juries, and English assemblies wherever you go. But this is a line which is to separate a man from the rights of an Englishman. First, the clause provides nothing at all for the territorial jurisdiction of the Province. The Crown has the power of carrying the greatest portion of the actually settled portion of the Province of New York into Canada. . . . The Bill turns freedom itself into slavery. These are the reasons that compel me not to acquiesce by any means either in the proposition originally in the Bill, or in the amendment."

Lord Cavendish testifies in so many words that "the difference was whether the tract of country not inhabited should belong to New York or Quebec." The change made was by substituting a long clause drawn by Mr. Burke for the short description of the southern boundary which the Bill had contained. The following words of the Bill from the Lords, "extending southward to the banks of the River Ohio, and westward to the banks of the Mississippi," were cancelled, and for this description the one substituted gave to the Province "all the territories, etc., in North America belonging to the Crown of Great Britain bounded on the south by the line [therein described] to the banks of the Mississippi,"—leaving untouched the remainder of the original description, which was and is as follows:—"and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to" the Hudson's Bay Company, which word "northward" clearly had not in the Bill meant a due north limitary line on the west (to its point of contact with the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company), but had meant northward from the whole described boundary line to the whole southerly boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company; and such southern boundary the Bill had constituted the northern boundary of the newly-created Province. It is thus perfectly clear that the western boundary was, as a matter of fact, intended to be the line of the Mississippi to its source; that as to this there was no difference of opinion.

Then let us look at the subsequent transactions. I have referred to the commissions issued by the Crown immediately after the passing of the Act, and which constitute an authoritative contemporaneous exposition of what the statute meant. In the first commission issued to the Governor-General of Canada after the passing of the Act, the boundaries of the new Province were described. The commission was to Sir Guy Carleton, and it described the line word for word as the Act had described it, to the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi, and northward as in the Act, except that after the word northward the commission had these words, which are not in the Act, "along the eastern bank of the said river" (Mississippi) to (as in the Act) the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company. Thus we have a royal commission issued shortly after the Act, defining the Province as it was the royal will that it should be bounded, and expressly declaring that the line should be along the eastern bank of the Mississippi; such commission having been prepared and issued on the advice of the very Ministers who were responsible for the statute and personally knew what it meant. The fact would possess great force, no matter who the Ministers were or who were their law advisers, and at this date must be held by any tribunal to free the question from the possibility of a doubt, on two grounds. First, because the commission is, as I have said, a conclusive contemporaneous exposition of what the statute meant; and, secondly, because the Crown had a right to add to the territory of the Province. If the statute did not give the territory to the banks of the Mississippi, the Crown had, by virtue of the royal prerogative, a right to add to the limits of the Province; and the commission in which territory up to and along the eastern bank of the Mississippi was given to the Province had the effect of giving to it that boundary, supposing that the statute had not given it.

Chief Justice Harrison—And providing the Crown had not given the territory to the Hudson's Bay Company already.

The Attorney-General—No; because the Crown had the right to place the territory in the Province, though it could be made to appear that the territory in some sense belonged to the Hudson's Bay Company; they were only private persons. If the Crown had chosen to put the whole of the Hudson's Bay Territory into the Province, the Crown had a right to do so. The present is not a question of property, but of government.

Chief Justice Harrison—That of course brings up the old question as to what right the Hudson's Bay Company did acquire.

The Attorney-General—I mean that the Hudson's Bay Company might have the fee, just as a private individual might have the fee in any portion of the territory of the Province; the Crown would not be interfering with their property by placing it under a certain government. That is all I am concerned about now. What I want to know is, how far our Province extends, and what territories are included under the government of the Province; the ownership of the soil may be a distinct question.

It is of some importance to know that the Law Officers of 1774 were men of great eminence. Lord Camden was the Lord Chancellor; Mr. Thurlow was the Attorney-General, and he afterwards became Lord Chancellor; the Solicitor-General was Mr. Wedderburn, and he also afterwards became Lord Chancellor. The Ministry had the highest legal assistance, and their acts upon which I rely are of the highest value. They more certainly shew the intention than a mere exposition by a court, however able, whose members know nothing personally as to why an Act had been passed or what was meant by it; and a contemporaneous exposition by such a court would not be meddled with fifty years afterwards, not to speak of a hundred years afterwards.

The second commission to a Governor-General, after the passing of the Act, was to Sir Frederick Haldimand, and it defined the Province in the same way as the commission to Sir Guy Carleton had done.

I have said that the Crown had a right to include additional territory beyond that given by statute if the Crown thought proper. An illustration of this prerogative is afforded by this Act of 1774, which provides for additions to the Province of Quebec as theretofore given by the Proclamation. The Act provides that these additions, which Parliament itself was making, were to continue during His Majesty's pleasure only; although Parliament was making an addition, the prerogative in regard to even that territory was not interfered with; and a fortiori the prerogative right of giving still further territory to the Province was not intended to have been interfered with by the Act. As the statute provided that the additions thereby specified were to be during His Majesty's pleasure, if His Majesty's pleasure should interfere with that provision being carried out, it would so far be in effect a repeal of the Act, and would be a stronger exercise of the royal prerogative than a further addition to the territory provided by the statute would be.

The Constitutional Act of 1791 implies the same right of the Crown to exercise the royal prerogative in the arrangement of territorial limits. That Act was passed in contemplation of the division of the Province of Canada into the two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and it made provision for the government of each of those Provinces. But the Act did not itself make the division; it provided that when the division was made, the government should be as the Act describes. This is the enactment: "His Majesty has been pleased to signify, by his message to both Houses of Parliament, his royal intention to divide the Province of Quebec into two separate Provinces," etc. It was to be done, if done at all, by the royal prerogative. His Majesty might divide the Province into two in any way he chose; and all that Parliament did by the Act of 1791 was to provide that, in case of such a division by the Crown, each of the two sections should be subject to the government which the statute provided for it.

Another illustration of such an exercise of the prerogative is in the proclamation of 1763, whereby the Crown created four new Provinces; Prince Edward Island, or St. John's Island, as it was sometimes called in those days, with the lesser islands, were added to Nova Scotia by the same prerogative.

Mr. Burke's letter to his constituents (printed in the Book of Documents) contains a reference to this matter—the paragraph is towards the foot of page 385. He says: "My next object of inquiry, therefore, was upon what principles the Board of Trade would, in the future discussions which must inevitably and speedily arise, determine what belonged to you and what to Canada. I was told that the settled uniform practice of the Board of Trade was this: that in questions of boundary, where the jurisdiction and soil in both the litigating Provinces belonged to the Crown, there was no rule but the King's will, and that he might allot as he pleased, to the one or the other. They said also that under these circumstances, even where the King had actually adjudged a territory to one Province, he might afterwards change the boundary; or, if he thought fit, erect the parts into separate and new governments at his discretion. They allege the example of Carolina: first one Province; then divided into two separate governments, and which afterwards had a third, that of Georgia, taken from the southern division of it. They urged, besides, the example of the neutral and conquered islands. These, after the Peace of Paris, were placed under one government. Since then they were totally separated, and had distinct governments and assemblies. Although I had the greatest reason to question the soundness of some of these principles, at least in the extent in which they were laid down, and whether the precedents alleged did fully justify them in that latitude, I certainly had no cause to doubt but that matter would always be determined upon these maxims at the Board by which they were adopted." 10

Mr. Burke did not approve of the extensive claims of the Crown in the matter of prerogative, as maintained by the Board of Trade; he thought the doctrine was carried too far; still, he admitted that it was the uniform settled practice of the distinguished persons who constituted the Board of Trade to act on that principle. I find nothing against that view; there seems to be no doubt that the Crown had the legal power stated, and that, if the Quebec Act did not give to the Province of Quebec as large a territory as the commissions of the Governors afterwards provided for, these commissions were sufficient to give the additional territory to the Province.

By the Treaty of 1783 (printed at page 19 of the Book of Documents) it was agreed between His Majesty and the United States of America that the boundary of the United States should be a line therein particularly described, from the north-west angle of Nova Scotia, through Lakes Ontario, Erie 20 Huron, Superior, Long Lake, etc., to the Lake of the Woods, "thence through the said Lake (of the Woods) to the most north-western point thereof, and from thence on a due west course to the River Mississippi," etc. The effect of this was to transfer a further portion of what was formerly Canada from Great Britain to the United States. It is in this Treaty that we have the first description referring to the Lake of the Woods. It is material to observe the language of the Commissions to the Governors-General after this Treaty. The commission to Sir Guy Carleton three years afterwards, in giving the boundaries of the Province, followed this description of the Treaty, and assigned as the southerly boundary of the Province a line "to the said Lake of the Woods, thence through the said lake to the most north-western point thereof, and from thence on a due west course to the River Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the" Hudson's Bay 30 Company. This was the first commission issued after the Treaty, and will be found at page 49 of the Book of Documents. It is to be observed that a due west line produced from the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods would not strike what is now known as the Mississippi; and as we find that to be so, what is to be done? Various views have been suggested. One is that the line should go on until it reaches the first tributary of the Mississippi.

Chief-Justice Harrison—What was the Mississippi as then understood? That is the first inquiry.

The Attorney-General—I have had that marked on the map. Mr. Dawson, the member for Algoma, has furnished me with an elaborate paper shewing what the Mississippi was as then understood. (Ont. Documents, 273-8.) On this part of the case, I rely on the arguments of Mr. Dawson, and of Mr. Mills in his book at page 67, without repeating them.

Chief-Justice Harrison—They both treat it with great ability. 40

The Attorney-General—The matter is also discussed very ably in a paper by the Hon. Mr. Cauehon, Commissioner of Crown Lands, which has been printed at page 243 of the Book of Documents. If the Arbitrators fail to be satisfied with the reasoning of all these gentlemen, where is the line to go from that point? What alternative is there? When the difficulty on this point occurred between England and the United States, they agreed that the line should be drawn due north or south, as the case might be, to the line 49°. This was by the Treaty of 1818, which will be found on page 21 of the Book of Documents. I shall advert to this point again.

I have referred to the Constitutional Act of 1791, and have read the recital in that Act, to the effect that His Majesty had been pleased to signify his intention to divide the Province of Quebec. A 50 paper was presented to Parliament before the passing of the Act, which described the line proposed to be drawn to divide the Province. (Docts. p. 411.) It traced the line of division into Lake Temiscaming, and thence "by a line drawn due north until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay, including all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line, to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada." That was the description of Upper Canada as given in this paper, laid before Parliament when providing for the government of each of the two sections, and afterwards adopted by an Order in Council passed for the purpose of giving effect to the Act. In August, 1791, the Order in Council was passed, and it recited among other things that this paper had been presented to Parliament previous to the passing of the Act. It was therefore with the knowledge and concurrence of Parliament that the Crown adopted the line of division which I have spoken of, and gave to Upper Canada all of old Canada which was to the westward and southward of the line or lines mentioned in the Order. On 18th November of the same year, General Alured Clarke, Lieutenant-Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Province of Quebec, issued a Proclamation in His Majesty's name; in pursuance of his instructions, declaring when the division should take effect, the Act having provided that the division should take effect, upon a Royal Proclamation being issued, setting forth a day for that purpose. December 26th, 1791, was the date named in the Proclamation. The description of the Province is given in the recital:

"Whereas we have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Privy Council, by our Order in Council dated in the month of August last, to order that our Province of Quebec should be divided into two distinct Provinces, to be called the Province of Upper Canada and the Province of Lower Canada, by separating the said two Provinces according to the following line of division, viz. :— To commence at a stone boundary on the north bank of the Lake St. Francis, at the Cove west of Pointe au Bodet, in the limit between the Township of Lancaster and the Seigneurie of New Longueuil, running along the said limit in the direction of north thirty-four degrees west to the westernmost angle of the said Seigneurie of New Longueuil; thence along the north-western boundary of the Seigneurie of Vaudreuil, running north twenty-five degrees east till it strikes the Ottawas River, to ascend the said river into the Lake Temiscaming, and from the head of the said lake by a line drawn due north until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay, including all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada."

What "territory westward and southward" of the described lines was "commonly called or known by the name of Canada?" I have collected in the Book of Documents a vast amount of evidence on that point, which I will not trouble the Arbitrators with at present. There is no doubt that Canada included the whole of the territory now claimed by Ontario. If I find that my friends dispute that the name had this extensive signification, I shall give references to all sorts of documents which shew that Canada was as extensive as I state it to have been.

Sir Edward Thornton—Are you able to shew any acts of jurisdiction exercised by Canada in the disputed territory?

The Attorney-General—Yes, I shall come to that point directly, and shall shew continued and repeated acts of jurisdiction by the Province in the territory west of the line that the Dominion now contends for.

Before the Proclamation of General Clarke, the commission to Lord Dorchester, who was to be Governor-General, had been issued. It bears date 12th September, 1791, and recited the commission of April 22nd, 1786, to the same Governor-General (as Sir Guy Carleton), and the Order in Council of August, 1791, dividing "the said Province of Quebec" into two separate Provinces, by a line therein specified: "the Province of Upper Canada to comprehend all such lands, territories and islands lying to the westward of the said line of division as were part of our said Province of Quebec." This form of expression shews that Quebec was supposed and intended to include all the territory belonging to England, and formerly known as Canada, for it is impossible to suppose that there was an intention so soon to give to the Province narrower bounds than were indicated by the paper presented to Parliament, adopted afterwards by the King in Council, and then were defined by the Proclamation of Governor Clarke. Some change was required by strict accuracy of expression. By the Treaty of 1763, France had ceded to England "Canada and all its dependencies," but with a limitation: the watershed of the Mississippi and Missouri had been the boundary line between Canada and Louisiana, and by the treaty the part of Canada which was west of the Mississippi had been reserved to France; by the Treaty of 1783, a further part of Canada had been ceded by England to the United States. A description, therefore in 1791 of the Province of Quebec, or of Upper Canada, which would purport to give to the Province all "the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada" would not have been correct; and a form of expression was substituted which was free from this objection. There is not the slightest reason for thinking that there was any intention by the subsequent commissions—in referring to the old Province of Quebec—to limit the territory which was provided for by the paper to which I have referred, by the Order in Council and by the commission first issued. Quebec was evidently understood on all hands as embracing so much of Canada as still belonged to Great Britain.

The subsequent commissions to the Governors-General of Canada, up to and including that of Lord Gosford in 1835, and the Imperial commission to Mr. Caldwell as Receiver-General of Lower Canada, assigned the same line of division between Upper and Lower Canada. I point this out in order to shew that it was not an accident or a mistake which led to the line between Upper and Lower Canada being described as it was; it was evidently the deliberate purpose of the Crown to give that description. The commissions commence with the one issued in 1791 to give that line—the very first commission issued after the Act—and every commission from that time to 1838 assigned the same boundaries. In seven commissions, from that issued to the Earl of Durham, March 30th, 1838, to that to Lord Elgin, October 1st, 1846, and also in the two commissions to Sir John Colborne and the Right Hon. Charles Poulett Thomson, as Captains-General and Governors-in-Chief of Upper Canada, dated respectively December 13th, 1838, and September 6th, 1839, the line of division between Upper and Lower Canada is stated to reach the "shore" of Hudson's Bay: by a line drawn due north from the head of the said lake (Temiscaming) until it strike the shore of Hudson's Bay." These seven commissions use the word "shore." It is not to be supposed that there was a mistake in substituting the word "shore" for the words "boundary line." The two expressions "boundary line of Hudson's Bay" and "shore of Hudson's Bay" evidently meant the same thing.

After Lord Elgin's, the commissions to the Governors-General did not contain any boundary-line descriptions. The other commissions to the Lieutenant-Governors of Upper Canada which have been examined, either do not give the boundaries of Upper Canada or give them partially only, and in such a manner as throws no light on the present question. So also the commissions after the union do not give the western boundary of the Province of Canada. The commissions to Sir John Colborne and Governor Thomson trace the western boundary into Lake Superior, and no farther, saying nothing of the line thence either westerly or northerly.

I was asked just now by Sir Edward Thornton whether acts of jurisdiction were ever exercised within the limits now claimed by the Dominion; and I propose now to answer this question. The first fact I may mention is, that Upper Canada has been in the habit of issuing writs into the territory west of the line 89° 9½', since, at all events, 1818. We have been able to trace the practice back to that date. In 1850 the Province of Canada, with the sanction of the Imperial authorities, entered into a treaty with the Indians, and procured the surrender of the rights of the Indians in the territory as far west as Pigeon River or the international boundary. This territory, it may be observed, is south of the height of land, and includes the territory between the line 89° 9½' and the international boundary; this being territory which the Hudson's Bay Company never claimed, although the Dominion claims it now. The treaty is set forth in pages 22 to 24, Book of Documents. Mr. Robinson, who negotiated the treaty, seems, from the terms of it, to have been of the opinion that the height of land was our northern boundary, but of course his opinion does not bind us. Another way in which jurisdiction has been exercised in this:—From the year 1853 the Province of Canada, continuously and without objection from any quarter, made grants of land in the Queen's name in this territory, west of the proposed line of the Dominion, and up to Pigeon River. Between 1853 and Confederation, no less a quantity than 35,059 acres had thus been granted west of that line. Numerous mining licenses in the same territory were granted in like manner, commencing with the year 1854, the territory embraced in them extending to Pigeon River. The dates and other particulars of all these grants are given in the Book of Documents, pp. 322, 409. In 1868 the Government of the Dominion appropriated $20,000 towards the construction of a road from the Lake of the Woods to Fort Garry, on Red River; the money was expended accordingly.

Sir Edward Thornton—I think that was the money expended in time of great distress, and which led the Hudson's Bay Company to complain of intrusion on their territories.

The Attorney-General—And, on behalf of the Dominion, its Ministers, Sir George E. Cartier and the Hon. William McDougall, ably replied to the complaint, and showed that there was no ground for it. The correspondence will be found at page 323 of the Book of Documents.

10 So far as relates to Ontario's western boundary, it is unnecessary to consider the argument as to the Hudson's Bay Company owning this territory; because the extension of the southerly boundary to the west is not made to depend on the Company's having or not having the territory to which the western extension of the southerly boundary would bring us, and the Crown had power to include within the limits of the Province part of the territory of the Company, as well as that of any private owner of land, if such was the royal will. But the fact that this western territory had been discovered, explored, traded with, occupied and taken possession of by the French before the treaty of cession—which seems now to be admitted on all hands—shows that the Company had no right to this territory, and adds strength to Ontario's claim, even in respect to the western boundary.

The only things that I know of against all this mass of evidence are the decisions of a Lower Canadian Court in 1818, in the cases of De Reinhard and McLellan, which have been cited in favour of the line drawn due north from the confluence of the Ohio and the Mississippi, and stated in the evidence in those cases to be 88° 50' or 88° 58'. In each of those cases the question was whether the locality in which the murder was committed was in Upper Canada or not. The Court was acting under a special statute and commission, which confined its authority to offences committed outside of Upper Canada; the prisoners wished to make out that the scene of the alleged murder was in Upper Canada, and that the court had therefore no jurisdiction. The court naturally leaned against what seemed a technical objection. The investigations and discussions of the last twenty-five years have thrown an immense amount of fresh light on the question; a good deal of the evidence on which I ask the Arbitrators to come to a different conclusion was not before the court; the court seemed also impressed with the erroneous idea that the word "northward," in the Act of 1774, necessarily meant due north, and the argument for another construction from other words in the statute was not presented by counsel, whose contention rather conceded that the Act of 1774 was against them, and they endeavoured to show that the Act of 1791 extended the boundaries; the court had before it the Proclamation of General Alured Clarke, but not the paper which had been submitted to Parliament in 1791, nor the series of commissions which had been issued, and which showed conclusively the intention of the Act and of the Crown; nor had the court its attention called, either to the historical facts referred to in the recital of the Quebec Act, or, to the evidence of intention afforded by the debate on the Act and by Mr. Burke's letter. The court had nothing like the same materials for coming to a correct conclusion as the Arbitrators have; and, having reference to the materials before the Arbitrators, I submit it is quite clear that the conclusion of 40 the court on the point now in question was wrong.

Chief Justice Harrison—Still, it was an important decision.

Sir Edward Thornton—It was a unanimous decision.

Mr. MacMahon—The then Chief Justice said that he had consulted his brother judges, and they were unanimously of opinion that that was the conclusion which ought to be reached.

Chief Justice Harrison—De Reinhard, although convicted, was never executed.

The Attorney-General—No, he was not executed. I have endeavoured to get the despatch which directed that he should be released, but it cannot be found. There is no doubt that the man was not hanged, and no reason has been suggested for this except that the British Government, acting under the advice of the Crown lawyers in England, thought that the ruling of the court on the point in question here was not correct. (Doets, p. 126.) McLellan was acquitted.

Sec. II.

Arbitration.*

Argument of the Attorney-General of Ontario before the Arbitrators, 2nd
August, 1878.

In view of the whole evidence now before the Arbitrators it is apparent that if there is any difficulty, on the westerly side of the Province, it is only as respects the territory west of Lake of the Woods. Is our western line further west than this lake? Does it extend to the first tributary of the Mississippi which a line due west from the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods strikes? Or does our western limit extend to the Rocky Mountains?

I submit that the proper legal way of viewing the matter is, that inasmuch as the Royal Commissions declare that the line is to go due west to the Mississippi, some meaning must be given to that direction, and these words should be construed as referring to either the then supposed locality of the Mississippi, or the first stream the waters of which flow into the Mississippi, no matter by what name the stream may be called. There are various streams which fall into the Mississippi that a due west line would meet; these first fall into the Missouri and then into the Mississippi. We must find some meaning for the words employed; and as what is now called the Mississippi would not be touched by this due west line, we must find another meaning as near to the language used as possible.

I come now to consider the northern boundary, which so far I have only referred to incidentally. I have stated that the Quebec Act, and such of the Royal Commissions to the Governors previous to 1791 as mention the northern boundary, specify for that purpose the southerly boundary of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company; and the principal difficulty here is, that the southerly boundary of this territory was never definitely ascertained.

The claim of the Dominion is that the northern boundary of the Province is the height of land already described. I submit that it is clear that the height of land is not our northern boundary, and on the contrary, is considerably south of our northern boundary. The first fact showing this is, that the easterly and westerly lines assigned to the Province by the Royal Commissions, cut through, and go north of, the height of land. This alone is conclusive on the point. The shore of Hudson's Bay to which our boundary goes on the east is far north of the height of land, and the Lake of the Woods, through which our boundary passes on to the west, is also north of the height of land to which the claim of the Dominion would limit us. It may be said also that the commission which was issued in 1791, and such of the subsequent commissions as mentioned the northerly boundary, declared in effect that the southerly boundary of the Company's territory was not south of those two points, namely the south shore of James' Bay (called there Hudson's Bay) and the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods.

The next point to which I ask the attention of the Arbitrators is, that so southerly a boundary as this height of land was not claimed or suggested by the Company as being within the intention of the charter, or as being the measure of the Company's just rights, until nearly a century and a half after the date of charter. The Company's papers and books have been thoroughly examined, and I do not think my learned friends will be able to show that for a century and a half after the date of the charter the Company claimed the height of land as their boundary. The English Commissioners, in their negotiations with France, made in one instance a proposal something like that, but made it of their own motion, without any authority from the English Government, and without any suggestion from the Company. That proposal will be found printed in the Book of Documents, at page 365, the last paragraph on that page. The language used is this: "The said Commissaries further demand that the subjects of His most Christian Majesty shall not build forts or found settlements upon any of the rivers which empty into Hudson's Bay, under any pretext whatsoever; and that the stream and the entire navigation of the said rivers shall be left free to the Company of English merchants trading into Hudson's Bay, and to such Indians as shall wish to traffic with them." But even that proposal did not claim as the boundary the height of land; it claimed only that the rivers should be free, and that no forts should be built or settlements made upon them, because such would interfere with the freedom of the streams. The proposition had reference only to the rivers, not to the lands. There is no evidence that the land was in the minds of the Commissioners.

The point, however, which I am making is, that the Company themselves did not for one hundred and fifty years make that claim. They made their claim in different forms at different times. Upon the occasion of the Treaties of Ryswick, in 1697, and Utrecht, in 1713, the Company's claim was expressed either in the terms of the charter, or was simply to "the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson," and "to the sole trade thereof." It sufficiently appears from the early documents which emanated from the Company, that this general claim to the whole bay and straits was a claim to the waters and shores only, and to the exclusion of the French therefrom,—the French having been in possession of the forts on the bay until after the Treaty of Utrecht, and the Treaty of Ryswick having in effect given them possession of all places on the bay except, it may be, Fort Bourbon. The Company's object was the trade of the bay, and not the occupation or settlement of the country away from the shores of the bay. The line which the Company itself proposed in 1700 was from the River Albany, on the one side, to Rupert River, on the other side of the bay; but the French rejected the proposal. In 1701 the Company proposed a still more northerly line, namely, from the River Albany on the one side to East Main River on the other; but the French rejected that one also. In 1711-12, the Company proposed a line to run from the Island of Grimington, or Cape Perdrix, on the Labrador coast, south-westerly to and through Lake Mistassin. This line did not extend beyond the south-west shore of the lake; and though the Company made a demand for the surrender of the forts on the shores of the bay, yet they do not appear to have made at that time any proposal as to a line on the west or south side of the bay, and their only claims and contests of this period were about the margin of the bay. In one instance or more they absurdly claimed the whole eastern coast to the Atlantic and the whole western coast to the Pacific; but the specific claim that they were entitled to the height of land, and to the territory along the various rivers which directly or indirectly flow into Hudson's Bay, was not made for one hundred and fifty years after the charter had been obtained.

The ground on which the Company's (and now the Dominion's) claim to the height of land is maintained is, an alleged rule that the discovery and possession of the shore of a new country give a right to the rivers and to the land adjoining. I do not admit that so-called rule. It is stated more strongly than the authorities warrant. My learned friends have in their case referred to Dr. Twiss's book on the Oregon Territory. That book was written by Dr. Twiss as a controversialist. It was published during the discussions on the question of the Oregon Territory, and published to help the English cause. But the view which was taken by Great Britain as to the alleged rule, appears from an extract which my learned friends have printed at page 6* of the Dominion case: "Sir Travers Twiss, in his discussion on the Oregon question, at page 300, states that Great Britain never considered her right of occupancy up to the Rocky Mountains to rest upon the fact of her having established factories on the shores of the Bay of Hudson—that is to say, upon her title by mere settlement, but upon her title by discovery, confirmed by settlements, in which the French nation, her only civilized neighbour, acquiesced, and which they subsequently recognized by treaty." So that it is only to the extent of the actual recognition of the English settlement by the French, subsequently made, that Dr. Twiss was of opinion that the rule had proceeded. At page 148 of the same book the author quotes Mr. Rush as asserting on behalf of the United States, "that a nation discovering a country, by entering the mouth of its principal river at the sea coast, must necessarily be allowed to claim and hold as great an extent of the interior country as was described by the course of such principal river, and its tributary streams." But Dr. Twiss remarks that "Great Britain formally entered her dissent to such a claim, denying that such a principle or usage had been ever recognized amongst the nations of Europe;" and that "in the subsequent discussions of 1826-7 Great Britain considered it equally due to herself and to other powers to renew her protest against the doctrine of the United States."

Suppose, however, the modern rule to be as the Dominion contends; we are now interpreting an old charter, and we cannot interpret it by a new rule. The object is to find out what the intention at the time was; and we are not for that purpose to make use of modern rules not known and acted on at the time the charter was granted. I do not find any ground whatever for holding that the rule which my learned friends contend for was a recognized rule at that time, if there is any reason for maintaining its subsequent adoption and recognition.

Again, all international rules are founded on reason and necessity; it is because they are supposed to be just that the rules are recognized. If in some cases it may be just and reasonable that the possession of the coast should give a title to all the land watered by the rivers, back to the height of land, this cannot apply to a river 3,000 miles long. So far from being a matter of necessity or reason, it is absurd that the possession of a few miles of coast on Hudson's Bay should give the right to a river 3,000 miles long, and to half a continent of territory which that river happens to water. General rules respecting the rights of nations must be applied in a moderate and reasonable way, and not to cases to which the application cannot be defended on grounds of reason and justice. If such a rule exists as my learned friends contend for, there is no reason, justice or good sense in applying it to a case of this kind.

Further, possession as well as discovery is needed in order to give to a nation the rights for which my learned friends contend. The facts are, that the French, from the beginning of the seventeenth century, were in possession of the territory to the south of the lands watered by the rivers flowing into Hudson's Bay, and were from time to time extending their explorations and settlements, as they had a right to do, to the head waters of the rivers flowing into Hudson's Bay, and to the interior of the country. They had various forts and settlements in the interior, and these settlements were not objected to by the English, nor could they have been. Supposing the rule to have been what the Dominion contends that it was, the fact of the French being in possession of the territory to the south of the rivers, and extending their territory from time to time, would bar the discoverers of the bay—if the Company were the discoverers—from saying that, by reason of the discovery, they could stop all further exploration in that direction. The rule, so far as it exists, is of effect only where the interior of the country can be reached only through the coast discovered and settled.

The case of the Dominion is based on the assertion that the English were the first discoverers of the bay, but it is impossible to say with certainty who were the first discoverers; nor was the alleged discovery by the English followed by possession. The voyage of Cabot, "grand pilot to Henry VII." (of England), into the bay, is said to have taken place in 1497; but no sort of possession of any part of the bay by the English before 1667 is pretended; being an interval of 150 years. It would be extraordinary to find a rule by which, after discovery being made and 150 years or more allowed to go by, the advantage of that discovery can then be claimed as giving title to half a continent. Gilham, a British subject, is said to have built, in 1667, Fort Charles (Rupert), which was on the east side of the bay; but in the meantime the bay had become known to the world. In the list of maps at p. 135 of the Book of Documents will be found a number of maps of dates antecedent to the charter, and showing the bay; the country was well known to everybody when Gilham built his fort.

It is not material under the circumstances, but it is reasonably clear as a fact, that the bay was repeatedly visited by Frenchmen from the French settlements on the St. Lawrence between 1656 and 1663. I refer the Arbitrators to page 108 of the Book of Documents, the memoir of Sieur de Callières to the Marquis de Seignelay, the Foreign Minister of France. My learned friends dispute the truth of the statement in the memoir of Sieur de Callières, that Father Dablon and Sieur Couture visited Hudson's Bay in 1661 and 1663. M. de Callières is spoken of as a man of high character, and this memoir was not written for the purpose of controversy, but was a confidential communication to the Minister in France, who was the official superior of the writer. M. de Callières was Governor of Montreal and afterwards of Canada. I apprehend it will be assumed at this late day that his statements were correct. He says:—

"As regards Hudson's Bay, the French settled there in 1636, by virtue of an arrêt of the Sovereign Council of Quebec, authorizing Sieur Bourdon, its Attorney-General, to make the discovery thereof, who went to the north of said Bay, and took possession thereof in His Majesty's name. In 1661, Father Dablon, a Jesuit, was ordered by Sieur d'Argenson, at the time Governor of Canada, to proceed to said country. He went thither accordingly, and the Indians, who then came from thence to Quebec, declared they had never seen any European there. In 1663, Sieur d'Avaujour, Governor of Canada, sent Sieur Couture, Seneschal of the Côte de Beaupré, to the north of the said Hudson's Bay, in company with a number of Indians of that country, with whom he went to take possession thereof, and he set up the King's Arms there. In the same year, 1663, Sieur Duquet, King's Attorney to the Prévôté of Quebec, and Jean l'Anglois, a Canadian colonist, went thither again by order of the said 50

Sieur d'Argenson, and renewed the act of taking possession by setting up His Majesty's Arms there a second time. This is proved by the arrêt of the said Sovereign Council of Quebec, and by the orders in writing of said Sieurs d'Argenson and d'Avau gour." There is a detailed account, of which the Governor of the Province is sending a confidential communication.

I refer also to the statements of M. de Denonville, Governor-General of Canada, to the Foreign Minister. They will be found at page 111 of the Book of Documents. M. de Denonville says:—"On the 29th of April, 1627, a new (company) was organized, to which the King (Louis XIII.) conceded the entire country of New France, called Canada, in latitude from Florida, which His Majesty's royal predecessors had had settled, keeping along the sea coasts as far as the Arctic Circle, and in longitude from the Island of Newfoundland westward to the great lake, called the Fresh Sea, and beyond, both along the coasts and into the interior. Since that time, the French have continued their commerce within the countries of the said grant. In 1656, Jean Bourdon ran along the entire coast of Labrador with a vessel of thirty tons, entered and took possession of the North Bay. This is proved by an extract of the ancient register of the Council of New France on the 26th of August of the said year. In 1661, the Indians of said North Bay came expressly to Quebec to confirm the good understanding that existed with the French, and to ask for a missionary. Father Dablon went overland thither with Sieur de la Vallière and others. Father Dablon has given his certificate of the fact. In 1663 those Indians returned to Quebec to demand other Frenchmen. Sieur d'Avau gour, then Governor, sent Sieur Couture thither with five others. Said Sieur Couture took possession anew of the head (fonds) of said Bay, whither he went overland, and there set up the King's Arms engraved on copper. This is proved by Sieur d'Avau gour's order of May 20th, 1663, and the certificates of those who were sent there." These also are statements made confidentially by a man of high character, who ought to know, to his official superior in France.

I find the following on this subject at page 3 of the Dominion Case:—"It appears that in the year 1656 there was an order of the Sovereign Council of Quebec authorizing Sieur Bourdon, its Attorney-General, to make a discovery thereof. There is no record whatever of his having attempted to make the discovery in the same year in which the order was passed by the Council. There is a record, however, of his having made the attempt in the year following (1657), and he may then have designed carrying out the order. He sailed on the 2nd day of May and returned on the 11th August, 1657; and it is not pretended that he could have made a voyage to Hudson's Bay and return between these dates.

(Journal des Jésuites, pp. 209-218.)" Of course he could not; but then a man may make voyages in different years. It is not to be assumed that he did not make a voyage the year before, because he made a partial voyage in this year, since we have positive testimony that he had also made that previous voyage. If these Governors were making false statements to their superiors in France, they would have referred to 1657; but they referred to 1656, showing that the reference was to a different transaction altogether. It is true there is no entry in the Jesuits' book of this voyage of 1656, but that book is silent in regard to many things which no doubt did occur; and the mere fact of its not mentioning a voyage is no sort of evidence that the voyage did not take place. The printed case for the Dominion comments also on what is said in reference to Father Dablon. It does not appear whether there were two priests of that name or only one. At all events, the mere fact that the journeys which we prove to have been made by a priest of that name were not recorded by the Jesuits is no evidence against the direct authority that we have for the fact. On the whole, there seems to be no reason which would justify us in now doubting that persons acting under the authority of the French Government had repeatedly visited Hudson's Bay in and before 1663; had taken possession in the French King's name, and set up the Royal Arms there.

And, however that may be, the French had certainly before that date established posts at convenient points for trade with the Indians, and had secured the whole trade with the Indians around the Bay. In 1627, long before the date of the Hudson Bay Charter, the King of France gave to the Company of New France the right of trade to an extensive territory—including Hudson's Bay—both along the coasts and into the interior; those words being inserted in the Charter. The French were enjoying the whole trade with the Indians around the Bay at the time the Charter to the Hudson's Bay Company was given. It is said in the books that for the purpose of giving property in a country, the possession needed is a possession having relation to the nature of the country. This was not an agricultural country; settlement for the purpose of agriculture was not expected; all that either party wanted was the trade with the Indians; the French had secured that, and had been in the enjoyment of it long before the Hudson's Bay Company obtained their Charter, and this was sufficient to prevent their rights from being interfered with by the subsequent possession of the coast by the English, after they had allowed one hundred and fifty years to pass without acting on the discovery which they are said to have made.

In the Dominion case, stress is laid on the fact that, by the Treaty of Utrecht (1713), the whole Bay and Straits were ceded or restored to England by France. But it was never intended by either party that so extensive a claim as is now made should be made under any language employed in that Treaty. In the memorial concerted with the Marquis de Torey, January 19th, 1713, and forwarded to Lord Bolingbroke by the Duke of Shrewsbury (Book of Documents, page 153), it is stated:—"The inhabitants of Hudson's Bay, subjects of the Queen of Great Britain, who have been dispossessed of their lands by France in time of peace, shall be entirely and immediately after the ratification of the Treaty, restored to the possession of their said lands; and such proprietors shall also have a just and reasonable satisfaction for the losses they have suffered, with respect to their goods, movables and effects; which losses shall be settled by the judgment of commissaries, to be named for this purpose, and sworn to do justice to the parties interested." And Mr. Prior writes to Lord Bolingbroke on January 8th of the same year (Book of Documents, p. 153):—"As to the limits of Hudson's Bay, and what the ministry here seems to apprehend, at least in virtue of the general expression, tout ce que l'Angleterre a jamais possédé de ce côté la (which they assert to be wholly new, and which I think is really so, since our plenipotentiaries make no mention of it), may give us occasion to encroach at any time upon their dominions in Canada, I have answered, that since, according to the carte which came from our plenipotentiaries, marked with the extent of what was thought our dominion, and returned by the French with what they judged the extent of theirs, there was no very great difference, and that the parties who determine that difference must be guided by the same carte, I thought the article would admit no dispute. In case it be either determined immediately by the plenipotentiaries or referred to commissioners, I take leave to add to your Lordship that these limitations are not otherwise advantageous or prejudicial to Great Britain than as we are better or worse with the native Indians, and that the whole is a matter rather of industry than dominion. If there be any real difference between restitution 30 and cession, queritur?"

It is plain, therefore, that the Treaty was not intended to authorize so large a claim by England against France as the Dominion case contends. We know pretty well what, for the sake of peace, the French were willing to give up—namely, the territory to one or the other of the lines marked on DeLisle's maps, and marked as such on our map—and what I have just read shows that there was not a great difference between what England demanded and what France was willing to give; and it is manifest that would not have been the case if there was anything like what is now demanded.

The testimony, therefore, appears to be abundant that the height of land boundary was what the English had no right to claim. Assuming that to be so, the question is,—What line north of the height of land is to be regarded as the Company's southern boundary? 40

The language of the Charter, by reason of its ambiguity, affords no assistance in this inquiry. The validity of the Charter has always been questioned on the ground of its ambiguity, as well as for other reasons. Assuming that the northern boundary is on one side the shore of Hudson's Bay, say between 51° and 52° of latitude and on the other at least as far north as the most north-western point of Lake of the Woods, say latitude 49° 23' 55"; if these points were clearly in the Hudson's Bay Territory, the northern boundary would perhaps be a line drawn from one of these points to the other. We claim that our boundary is farther north than this, but cannot be south of it. Are these points in what was the territory of the Company? And is the Provincial boundary on farther north? If by reason of the Charter being so old, and having been acted upon in some sort, and of its validity to some extent being implied in certain statutory references to the Company, the instrument cannot be treated as absolutely void, it must, as regards its construction and operation, on well- 50 known and well-settled principles, be interpreted most strongly against the Company, and in favour of the Crown. The object of giving the Charter, as the Charter itself declares, was to encourage discoveries by the Company; and the validity or operation of the instrument is to the extent only of giving (so far as the Crown could give) to the Company whatever of unknown territory the Company, within a moderate and reasonable time should occupy; and all that the Company could be entitled to was what the Company had, in this manner, acquired for themselves and for the Crown previous to the cession of Canada in 1763 by France to England; or what, previous to that time, the Company had been in possession or enjoyment of as their own with the concurrence of the Crown.

- It is a familiar rule that Crown Grants are construed most favourably to the Crown, the grantor.
- 10 The rule is thus stated in Chitty on Prerogative, page 391: "In ordinary cases between subject and subject, the principle is that the grant shall be construed, if the meaning be doubtful, most strongly against the grantor, who is presumed to use the most cautious words for his own advantage and security. But in the case of the king, whose grants chiefly flow from his royal bounty and grace, the rule is otherwise; and Crown grants have at all times been construed most favourably for the king where a fair doubt exists as to the real meaning of the instrument, as well in the instance of grants from His Majesty as in the case of transfers to him." The rule is not new, but was in existence at the time of this Charter and before, and was, perhaps, more stringently acted upon then than it is in the case of modern deeds. Independently of this consideration, legal opinions are uniform that, in the case of an old and ambiguous charter like this, the instrument operates as far as possession and enjoyment have been had under it,
- 20 and no further. I may cite some decided cases bearing on this point. Blankley vs. Winstanley, 3 Term Reports, 288, is one of them. In that case it was observed by one of the learned judges as follows:—"With regard to the usage: usage consistent with the meaning of the Charter has prevailed for one hundred and ninety years past, and if the words of the Charter were more disputable than they are, I think that ought to govern this case. There are cases in which this Court has held that a settled usage would go a great way to control the words of a charter. Such was the case of Gape vs. Handley, in which the Court went much further than is necessary in the present case; and it is for the sake of quieting corporations that this Court has always upheld long usage where it was possible, though recent usage would not perhaps have much weight." So in Wadley vs. Bayliss, 5 Taunt., 753, the case of an award under the Inclosure Acts, it was laid down that "the language of the award being ambiguous,
- 30 it was competent to go into evidence of the enjoyment had, in order to see what was the meaning of those who worded it."

The rule is thus applied by Sir Arthur Pigott, Mr. Spankie, and Mr. Brougham, in the opinion printed at page 198 of the Book of Documents:—"In such a long tract of time as nearly one hundred and fifty years now elapsed since the grant of the Charter, it must now be, and must indeed long since have been, fully ascertained by the actual occupation of the Hudson's Bay Company, what portion or portions of lands and territories in the vicinity, and on the coast and confines of the waters mentioned and described as within the Straits, they have found necessary for their purposes, and for forts, factories, towns, villages, settlements, or such other establishments in such vicinity, and on such coast and confines, as pertain and belong to a Company instituted for the purposes mentioned in their Charter; and 40 necessary, useful or convenient to them within the prescribed limits for the prosecution of those purposes."

In 1857 the Crown Lawyers pointed out (page 202) that the question of the validity and construction of the Company's Charter cannot be considered apart from the enjoyment that had been had under it. "Nothing could be more unjust than to treat this Charter as a thing of yesterday, and upon principles which might be deemed applicable to it if it had been granted within the last ten or twenty years." They likewise say:—"The remaining subject for consideration is the question of the geographical extent of the territory granted by the Charter, and whether its boundaries can in any and what manner be ascertained. In the case of grants of considerable age, such as this Charter, where the words, as is often the case, are indefinite or ambiguous, the rule is that they are controlled by 50 usage and enjoyment." There is no authority or opinion against that.

Again, the Company were certainly not entitled to any of the territory which France owned at the time of the cession, and ceded to England; it is preposterous to suppose that the Charter intended to grant, and did effectually grant to the Company, as against the world, all the territory southerly and westerly of the Bay, to the then unknown height of land (unknown to the Crown and to the Company), though such territory should be, as it was, to the extent of unknown hundreds of thousands of square miles—a third of the continent, that the Charter was intended to give, and did give to the Company, the right to shut up this enormous territory from the Crown and from all British subjects—and from other nations also—for all time; that if the Company should do nothing to discover settle or acquire it for one hundred years or more, nobody else could; and that any portion of it which England should, a hundred years afterwards, acquire by war with another nation, and by the employment of the resources of the whole empire, in Europe as well as America—accrued, when so acquired, and was intended to accrue, to the Company for their own private benefit. Such a claim, cannot be in accordance with a sound interpretation of any authorities which can be found.

It is clear, and indeed has been repeatedly admitted by the Company themselves, that until long after the date of the cession, the Company had no possession of any part of the interior of the country, and that their possession was confined to certain forts on the Bay and two factories not very distant. Henley House was one of these factories, on the Albany, erected in 1744; and France had at the same time forts on the same river. At all events, with these exceptions, no possession of any part of the territory away from the shore was had by the Company until long after the cession.

I have said that the Company have admitted that to be so. A committee of the British House of Commons was appointed in 1749 to enquire into the state and condition of the countries adjoining Hudson's Bay, and of the trade carried on there; and evidence was given before this committee that at that time, the only forts and settlements of the Company were on the Bay. (Book of Documents, 395). Those opposed to the Company at that time were complaining of this, and urging that the Company had not attempted to settle the country.

Again, in a statement of the Hudson's Bay Company, the material part of which is printed in the Book of Documents, page 302, there is this admission: "As long as Canada was held by the French the opposition of wandering traders (Coureurs des Bois) was insufficient to induce the Company to give up their usual method of trading. Their servants waited at the forts built on the coast of the bay, and there bought by barter the furs which the Indians brought from the interior. But after the cession of Canada to Great Britain in 1763, British traders, following in the track of the French, penetrated into the countries lying to the north-west of the Company's territories, and by there building factories, brought the market for furs nearer to the Indian seller." That means British traders unconnected with the Company. "The Company, finding their trade seriously affected, extended the field of their operations, and sent parties to establish themselves in the interior." I need for my purpose nothing more than this statement by the Company themselves. It is an express admission that the French did settle in the territories referred to; that the Hudson's Bay Company confined themselves to the forts on the Bay; and that after the Treaty of 1763, British traders unconnected with the Company commenced to move; that they were first to move; and that it was not until the Company found their trade seriously affected by the acts of these other traders that the Company extended their operations.

Then at page 412, Book of Documents, there is a letter from Mr. Gosehen, then chairman of the Company, telling the result of his researches into the books and papers of the Company. Amongst other things he says: "At the time of the passing of the Quebec Act, 1774, the Company had not extended their posts and operations far from the shores of Hudson's Bay. Journals of the following trading stations have been preserved bearing that date, namely, Albany, Henley, Moose, East Main, York, Severn, and Churchill." The solicitors employed by the Dominion to search the records of the Hudson's Bay Company, wrote as follows (see page 414 Book of Documents):—"From a perusal of the Company's Journals, we find that it was not the practice of the Company's servants to go up country to purchase peltry from the Indians; but the Indians came down to York and other forts on the Bay and there exchanged their furs, etc., for the Company's merchandise." did not establish stations, but did not go up the country. "It appears that the peddlers (French traders—Coueurs des Bois, as they were called), from Quebec, had, for some time prior to the year 1773, gone up into the Red River district, and by so doing had cut off the Indians and bought their furs." Sir John Rose says (his statement is at page 414 of the same book): "I may mention that I do not think that any further research would have thrown more light on the matter than the Ontario Government is already in possession of. I employed a gentleman for several weeks to search at the Colonial Office and Foreign Office, as well as the Rolls' Office and Hudson's Bay Archives, and every scrap of information bearing on it was, I think, sent out either to Mr. Campbell or to Mr. Scott [Dominion Ministers] some months ago. I believe that any further search would be attended with no result." Thus, during the whole period from 1670 to the passing of the Quebec Act, the Hudson's Bay Company had been in no sort of possession of more than their forts and factories on and in the immediate neighbourhood of the Bay.

The Dominion Ministers truly affirmed in 1869, that "the evidence is abundant and conclusive to prove that the French traded over and possessed the whole of the country known as the Winnipeg Basin and 'Fertile Belt,' from its discovery by Europeans down to the Treaty of Paris, and that the Hudson's Bay Company neither traded nor established posts to the south or west of Lake Winnipeg until many years after the cession of Canada to England." The Company's first post—viz., Cumberland House, on Sturgeon Lake—in the vicinity of the region in question—was not built until 1774, and they did not establish any post within this tract of country before 1790.

There has been printed in the Book of Documents, 230, the judgment of the Hon. Mr. Justice Monk, of Lower Canada, in a case of Connolly vs. Woolrich, and the substance of it is this:—He shows, in regard to the French, that as early as 1605, Quebec had been established and had become an important settlement; that before 1630 the Beaver and several other companies had been organized at Quebec for carrying on the fur trade in the west, near and around the great lakes and in the North West Territory; that the enterprise and trading operations of these French companies, and of the French colonists generally, extended over vast regions of the northern and north-western portions of the continent; that they entered into treaties with the Indian tribes and nations, and carried on a lucrative and extensive fur trade with the natives; that in the prosecution of their trade and other enterprises these adventurers evinced great energy, courage and perseverance; that they had extended their hunting and trading operations to the Athabasca country (say 58° north latitude and 111° west longitude); that some portions of the Athabasca country had, before 1640, been visited and traded in, and to some extent occupied by the French traders in Canada and their Beaver Company (which had been founded in 1629); that from 1640 to 1670 these discoveries and trading settlements had considerably increased in number and importance; that Athabasca and other regions bordering upon it belonged to the Crown of France, at that time, to the same extent, and by the same means, as the country around Hudson's Bay belonged to England, viz., by discovery, and by trading and hunting. Judge Monk mentions 1670, because it was the date of the Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company. These were the conclusions to which Judge Monk came judicially.

It may be added, that if the Athabasca country belonged to France at so early a period, so would the whole intermediate country between Athabasca and Hudson's Bay on the east, and between the Athabasca country and the St. Lawrence on the south, because with these parts the French were more familiar, and traded to a much larger extent than further north. Between 1670 (the last date named by Judge Monk) and 1763, the French established posts or forts in that North-West Territory which they had previously explored, and hunted over, and traded with, namely, on Rainy Lake, the Lake of the Woods, Lake Winnipeg, Lake Manitoba, on the Winnipeg River, the Red River, the Assiniboine River, the River aux Biches, and the Saskatchewan, and so west to the Rocky Mountains, where Fort la Jonquière was established by St. Pierre in 1752. All these lakes and rivers are connected by the Nelson River with Hudson's Bay, and are in the territory which, in the following century, the Hudson's Bay Company claimed under their Charter; but confessedly they had constructed in it no post or settlement of any kind until long after 1763.

The subjects of France had also, on the northerly side of the dividing line, Fort Abbitibi, which was north of the height of land, and was built in 1686. It was situate at a considerable distance north of the height of land, and upon the lake of the same name, from which the River Mississippi flows into Hudson's Bay. The French had also Fort St. Germain, on the Albany, which was built in 1684; and still higher up on the same river Fort La Maune, established about the same period; and, to the east, Fort Nemiscan, on the lake of that name, situate on the River Rupert, midway between Lake Mistassin and the Bay; this fort was built before 1695. Of none of these did the English Government or the Company ever complain. The French had also another fort on the Albany, being that mentioned in one of the memorials of the Company as having been built in 1715. The facts enumerated form another conclusive ground against such a claim as is now set up by the Dominion as purchasers from the Company.

The matter is made clear in another way; that is, by the maps which the Company has furnished for the purposes of the present arbitration. We applied to them for what maps they had, and they furnished seven, only two of which seem to be of importance. One of the two, dated 1748, bears the Royal Arms and the Arms of the Company, and seems to have been prepared by the Company in view of the Parliamentary inquiry of that period, and for the purpose of showing the limits which the Company then claimed. The line which this map gives as the Company's southern boundary is considerably north of the height of land, even as shown on this map; for the line is therein made to cut Frenchman's River, and several other rivers shown on the map as flowing into Hudson's Bay. The Company does not by the map claim to the height of land even so far as these comparatively small rivers are concerned. Their southerly line on the map runs to the eastern shore of a lake called Nimigon, thence to and northerly along the eastern shore of Winnipeg, and thence northerly to Sir 20 Thomas Smith's Sound in Baffin's Bay. I am entitled to say that this map demonstrates that the Company, in 1748, did not claim to the height of land, even as the height of land was then supposed to be situated, and did not claim Lake Winnipeg.

The other of the two maps is Mitchell's engraved map, described as published by the author, February, 1755. This copy appears to have been much used and worn; I suppose, therefore, that it is the map to which the Company chiefly referred when they had occasion to examine any map of their territory. There is on it an irregular line marked "Bounds of Hudson's Bay by the Treaty of Utrecht," and the colouring on the two sides of that line is different. This line may therefore be taken as showing the extent of the Company's claim in 1755 and long after. Can there be any doubt that this is a fair conclusion to draw? On what principle can it be said that this map, which has been in the possession 30 of the Company for over a century, should not be taken as showing, not what the bounds were, but what the Company regarded as their bounds? The line is about one-third of a degree north of the Lake of the Woods, and extends to the limit of the map in that direction, being in about the 98th degree of longitude.

Chief Justice Harrison—The height of land does not appear to have been known at the time the first of these two maps was prepared.

The Attorney-General—But these rivers are marked on the map, and the territory marked as the Company's does not extend to the sources of them.

Chief Justice Harrison—Those rivers are undoubtedly to the north of the height of land.

The Attorney-General—In regard to the territory which the Company knew when these maps 40 were prepared, they did not claim to the height of land. On this map of Mitchell's the Company claimed a more southerly boundary than in the other map, but even in this map the line they claimed cut some rivers which flow into Hudson's Bay, instead of extending to their sources. The claim to go to the sources of the rivers is inconsistent with both maps, although the Company claimed larger bounds by the one than by the other. The Lake of the Woods is marked, and the line they claim by the map is north of the Lake of the Woods.

Chief Justice Harrison—There does not appear to be an interval of more than seven years between these two maps. The height of land is marked in some places upon Mitchell's map.

The Attorney-General—Yes; but the map throughout negatives the idea that the Company then claimed to the height of land. After the Treaty of Utrecht (1713), which gave to the British all lands, 50 etc., "on the Bay and Straits, and which belong thereto," the Company, on 4th August, 1714, proposed, for the first time, that the Mistassin line should go as far south-westerly as 49° "north latitude . . . and that that latitude be the limit;" as to how far to the west this line of 49° was to be followed nothing was then said. In 1719 and 1750 the Company proposed the line of 49° generally, but both times the proposition was rejected by the French. This line would have given to the Company a boundary greatly more limited than the boundary of the height of land, which began to be claimed nearly three-quarters of a century later.

It has already been said that the Company could not take advantage of their Charter for the purpose of making any addition to their territory by exploration or settlement after the cession of 1763. The practical result would be nearly the same if this right should be deemed to have ceased at a somewhat later date, viz., the date of the passing of the Quebec Act, 1774, or even the date of the Treaty of 1783, for the Company made no further settlement between 1763 and 1783, except Cumberland House; and it is doubtful whether its locality belongs to the Winnipeg or the Churchill system. Both the Act of 1774 and the Treaty of 1783 obviously require that the Company's southern boundary should be deemed a fixed line, not liable to extension by the mere act of the Company.

These considerations are submitted as showing that the legal rights of the Company did not extend beyond their forts on the shore or in the neighbourhood of Hudson's Bay, and such adjacent territory as these forts may, under the circumstances, have given them a right to; and that Ontario is entitled to have its northerly boundary line drawn accordingly.

If the evidence fails to satisfy the Arbitrators of the right of Ontario to the extent of territory, I refer them to the possible alternative lines mentioned at page 423 and following pages of the Book of Documents; and I will not detain the Arbitrators now by the statement and discussion of these other lines.

If there should seem to the Arbitrators to be too much doubt on the subject to enable them to determine with absolute precision the northern boundary of the Province, a boundary should be assigned, which would give to the Province the full territory which the commissions to the Governors definitely provided for, and such further territory to the north as may be just and reasonable in view of the whole case.

ARGUMENT OF MR. HODGINS, Q.C.

Mr. Thomas Hodgins, Q.C., for the Province of Ontario, next addressed the Arbitrators. He said: In the printed documents submitted by the Government of Ontario, three territories are mentioned, the localities and limits of which must in some measure be ascertained, in order to arrive at a proper solution of the question where the boundaries of Ontario should be traced. These territories are: (1) The Indian Territories; (2) the Territories claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company, and (3) the Territories known as Canada or New France.

The Indian Territories may be shortly described as those extensive tracts of land lying to the westward and northward of Canada and the Hudson's Bay Company's Territory, not actually taken possession of by any civilized government prior to 1763. These Indian Territories are as we contend, the lands described by Sir Alexander Mackenzie in his Travels in North America, published during the early part of the present century, and appear on the map as the Athabasca and Chippawyan Territories. These territories were specially reserved under the sovereignty of the Crown for the use of the Indians by the King's Proclamation of the 7th October, 1763 which established the Provinces of Quebec, East and West Florida, and Grenada, "within the countries and islands ceded to the Crown" by the Treaty of Paris of the 10th February, 1763. That Proclamation describes them as "the lands lying to the westward of the sources of the rivers which fall into the sea from the west and north-west;" and as "such parts of our dominions and territories as, not having been ceded to us, are reserved to the Indians, or any of them, as their hunting grounds;" and again, as "lands which not having been ceded to or purchased by us, are still reserved to the said Indians as aforesaid." They are also described in the first section of the Act of 1803, which extended the jurisdiction of the Courts of Lower and Upper Canada over crimes and offences committed within certain parts of North America, in the following words:—"In the Territories or other parts of America, not within the limits of the Provinces of Lower or Upper Canada, or either of them, or of the jurisdiction of the Courts established in those Provinces, or within the limits of any civil government of the United States of America.* No more clearly defined locality is given to these territories in any of the State Papers relating to North America; but Lord Selkirk in his Sketch of the British Fur Trade in North America, published in 1816, refers to them thus:—"This vague term, 'Indian Territories,' has been used without any definition to point out the particular territories to which the Act is meant to apply." "There are, however, extensive tracts of country to which the provisions of the Act unquestionably do apply, viz., those which lie to the north and west of the Hudson's Bay Territories, and which are known in Canada by the general name of 'Athabasca.' It was here that the violences, which gave occasion to the Act, were committed; and these are the only districts in which a total defect of jurisdiction 10 described in the preamble of the Act was to be found."†

The other territories are those which, prior to the cession of Canada in 1763, formed the possessions of the King of England, and are claimed as the "Hudson's Bay Company's Territory," and the possessions of the King of France, and known as "Canada or New France." That portion of this latter territory lying west of the Ottawa and Lake Temiseaming, and of "a line drawn due north to the boundary line" or "shore" "of Hudson's Bay"—excepting the portion south of the great lakes, and west to the Mississippi, ceded to the United States in 1783—now forms the territory of the Province of Ontario. The diplomatic correspondence and State papers, printed in the Book of Documents, show that for a series of years, prior to 1763, the territory about the shores of Hudson's Bay was a chronic subject of dispute, of diplomatic negotiation, and of treaties, between the English and French Govern- 20 ments. From 1668 to 1755, the chief subject of discussion between the French Ministers and their Governors in Canada, and the English Ministers and the French Plenipotentiaries, was what were the territorial limits or boundaries of the two Sovereigns about Hudson's Bay.

Taking first the question to which Sovereign the southern limits of Hudson's Bay belonged, it will be found that after the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713, the English Ministers asserted that the whole of Hudson's Bay, including of course the southern shore inland to line 49, belonged to Great Britain. On the other hand, the representatives of the Crown of France contended that their earlier discoveries, their prior possession, and their settlements, had made that southern shore part of the territory of Canada. Certainly up to 1700, the Hudson's Bay Company conceded to the French the sovereignty 30 of the southern portion of James' Bay south of the Albany River on the west,—or line 53° north 30 latitude.‡ But subsequently a gradual advance was made in the territorial claims of the Hudson's Bay Company, as follows:—To the Canote or Hudson River in 52° N. latitude§; to Lake Miskosinke or Mistoveny in 51½° N. latitude ¶; although no new possessory rights were acquired by Great Britain or the Company in the disputed territory between 1700 and 1713.

After the Treaty of Utrecht of 1713, the claim presented by the Company to the English Govern- ment advanced the boundary to line 49° N. latitude.∥ That Treaty restored—not surrendered—to England "the Bay and Streights of Hudson, together with all lands, seas, sea coasts, rivers and places situate in the said Bay and Streights which belong thereto," all of which with the fortresses there erected, "either before or since the French seized the same," were to be given up within six months from the ratification of the Treaty. It further provided that the contumacious limits of the territories 40 of the two nations, at Hudson's Bay, should be determined within a year by Commissioners to be named by each Government; so as to fix "the limits between the said Bay of Hudson and the places appertaining to the French—which limits both the British and French subjects shall be wholly forbidden to pass over or thereby to go to each other by sea or land." This Treaty, notwithstanding the exclusion gave to the French a right to use the shores of the Bay, whatever meaning may be attached to the following words: "It is, however, provided that it may be entirely free for the Company of Quebec, and all other the subjects of the Most Christian King whatsoever, to go by land, or by sea, whithersoever they please, out of the lands of the said Bay, together with all their goods, merchandises.

arms, and effects of what nature or condition soever," except munitions of war.* The Commissioners were appointed, but never determined the question of boundary. The British Commissioners, inspired by the Hudson's Bay Company, claimed for the first time as the boundary, the line 49° north latitude.† This the Commissioners of the French King resisted, contending that the territory claimed was part of Canada.

Now at that time the Hudson's Bay Company had not any territorial occupation beyond a few small posts or a widely scattered fringe of settlements, about three or four, on the shores of the Bay, and from which their trade with the Indians was carried on. This fact appears in the evidence taken by a Committee of the House of Commons in 1749. Historically the same fact is stated by writers and officers of the Company who dealt with the question from personal knowledge. In Robson's Account of Hudson's Bay, published in 1753, it is stated:—"The Company have, for sixty years, slept at the edge of a frozen sea. They have shown no curiosity to penetrate further themselves, and have exerted all their art and power to crush the spirit in others." (p. 6.) Further on, in speaking of the Indians, he shows how the French had gone inland, and had—unmolested by the Company—established forts and trading settlements with the Indians, and which, according to the acknowledged rules of international law, had given the French King proprietary and sovereign rights over the territory thus occupied by his subjects. "The French," he says, "live and trade with the Indians within the country at the heads of the rivers that run down to the English factories." In consequence of this narrow spirit of self-interest in the Company, the French have been obliged to travel many hundred miles overland from Canada, and up many rivers that have great waterfalls, in order to make trading settlements; and there they carry on a friendly intercourse with the natives at the head of most of the rivers westward of the Bay, even as far as the Churchill River, and intercept the Company's trade." There are fine improvable lands up the rivers of the Bay, and no British settlements or colonies are made or attempted to be made there." (p. 7.)

Bowen's Geography, published in 1747, says: "The bottom of the Bay is by the French pretended to be part of New France; and, indeed, to cross the country from St. Margaret's River (meaning the St. Maurice or the Saguenay) which runs into the river of Canada or St. Lawrence, to Rupert's River, at the bottom of Hudson's Bay, is not above 150 miles. The French have a house or settlement for trade near the southern branch of Moose River, about 100 miles above the factory, where they sell their goods cheaper than the company do: although it is very difficult and expensive to carry them so far from Canada. . . . The French get all the choice skins, and leave only the refuse for the Company. The French have also got another house (Fort Neviskan) pretty high up, upon Rupert's River, by which they have gained all the trade upon the East Main, except a little the Company get at Slude River, the mouth of which is about thirty leagues to the north of Rupert's River. And further on, referring to the absence of English trade with the interior, the writer says that "The English who trade here have no plantations or settlements within land, but live near the coast within their forts, in little houses or huts."‡ Governor Pownall, in his Report on the French posts in North America, states that by their influence with the Indians, the French had been admitted to a landed possession and had become possessed of a real interest in and a real command over the country.§

The French Government prior to the Treaty of Utrecht claimed the whole of that territory; and after the Treaty they continued to claim it as part of "Canada." They contended:—"The term 'restitution,' which has been used in the Treaty, conveys the idea clearly that the English can claim only what they have possessed; and as they never had but a few establishments on the sea coast, it is evident that the interior of the country is considered as belonging to France."¶ The French King, Louis XIV., in a letter to M. de la Barre, dated the 5th August, 1683, claimed that the actual possession of the territory about the Bay had been taken in his name prior to the possession of the English. His letter states: "I recommend you to prevent the English, as much as possible, from establishing themselves in Hudson's Bay, possession whereof was taken in my name several years ago; and as Col. d'Unguent (Dongan) appointed Governor of New York by the King of England, has had precise orders on the part of the said King to maintain good correspondence with us, and carefully avoid whatever may interrupt it, I doubt not the difficulties you have experienced on the side of the English will cease for the future."||

The facts connected with the right of possession then claimed by the French King, will be found in a letter from M. Talon to the King, dated Quebec, Nov. 2, 1671, in which he states that he had despatched Father Albanel and Sieur de St. Simon to Hudson's Bay.* Then, further on, the result of their journey is thus described: "Father Charles Albanel, Jesuit Missionary, employed in the instruction of the Indian nations and Montagnais, and Paul Denis de St. Simon, commissary, and deputed by M. Talon, Intendant of Canada, to take possession in the King's name of the countries, lands, lakes and rivers, which lie between the banks of the River St. Lawrence as far as the shores of the straits of the Fretum Davis, including Hudson's Bay, and adjacent lands and seas, being at Miskaouto, Nagasit, places where the Indians meet to trade, and at the River Nimiskau (Rupert River) which rises in Lake Nemiskau, the residence of Capt. Kiaskou, Chief of all the Indians inhabiting the North Sea and Hud- 10 son's Bay, and on the 9th of July, 1672, planted the Cross, with the Captain's consent, and in His Majesty's name set up the arms of France, on the said Lake Nemiskau, at the mouth of the river of the same name. On the 19th of the same month, being at the River Minaligouskae, Sossibahourat, captain of the Mistasirenois, having consented, they did set up in like manner the said arms, after having turned up a sod of earth, pulled up some grass, planted some shrubs and performed other necessary ceremonies. They made known to the Indian nations, in their language, that they subjected them to the French nation, and that they should acknowledge in future King Louis XIV., for their Monarch and Sovereign Lord. In witness whereof, the said minute was signed by Father Albanel, Sieur de St. Simon, and by Sebastian Provero; and the chiefs of each Indian nation, to the number of eleven, made their hierogly- 20 phical marks." A similar surrender by the Indians on the west side of Hudson's Bay took place at Sault St. Marie.† In these statements we have not only the actual taking possession, but we have that act of Indian surrender which has been recognized by the Crown of England for years; the actual surrender of the Indian territory by a document signed by the chiefs of those Indians who were the occupants of the territory about Hudson's Bay, acknowledging that they surrendered the territory to the King of France, in the same manner as the Indian territories have been and still are surrendered to the Crown in Canada.

The Treaty of Utrecht did not surrender any portion of the territory of Canada or New France, it only restored the Bay and Straits of Hudson; therefore whatever should be included in that description was ceded to the Crown of England. The English could not claim more territory than that named in 30 the Treaty, and as "Canada" was not named or ceded, no part of it, as such, became the property of the Crown of England. The word used by the French was restituta. The rule of interpretation in regard to such Treaties is that where the Treaty is alleged to be capable of two interpretations, that which is most favourable to the ceding power shall govern. Such was the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of the United States vs. Arredondo.‡ In that case there was a difference between the American and Spanish copies of the Treaty; but the Court held that the version which was most favourable to Spain, the ceding power, should govern. In giving judgment the Court said: "A Treaty of cession is a deed of the ceded territory; the Sovereign is the grantor; the act is his, so far as it relates to the cession; the Treaty is his act and deed." "The King of Spain was the grantor; the Treaty was his deed; the exception was made by him; and its nature and effect depended upon his intention expressed 40 by his words in reference to the thing granted, and the thing reserved, and excepted in and by the grant." "We must be governed by the clearly expressed and manifest intention of the grantor, and not the grantee, in private—a fortiori in public—grants."

Examining this Treaty by the light of this decision, we find that the French King "restored" only that which had been originally English territory—on the Bay and Straits of Hudson; not by name any territory of Canada or New France. The French King, being the ceding power, could not be held bound by a larger cession than the words of the Treaty covered. This view was strongly and effectively maintained by the French Commissioners. In M. de Lamoignon's memoirs to the Duke of Orleans, he reported: "The English have never possessed the lands that the French have at Hudson's Bay, therefore it is impossible for the King of France to restore them to them; for one cannot restore more than that which 50 has been taken by usurpation. The fact is that at the time of the said Treaty of Utrecht, the French possessed one part of the Strait and Bay of Hudson, and the English possessed the other. It is very true that, some time before, the King of France had conquered the English part; and it is of this that it is understood that restitution is to be made.* To the same effect is the memoir of M. D'Auteuil, Attorney-General of Canada: "The Treaty of Utrecht speaks only of restitution; let the English show that which the French have taken from them, and they will restore it to them; but all that they demand beyond this they demand without any appearance of right." "It is well to remark that the English in all the places of the said Bay and Straits which they have occupied, have always stopped at the border of the sea, while the French, from the foundation of the colony of Canada, have not ceased to traverse all the lands and rivers bordering on the said Bay, taking possession of all the places and founding posts and missions. They cannot say that any land, or river, or lake, belongs to Hudson's Bay, because if all the rivers which empty into this Bay, or which communicate with it, belongs to it, it might be said that all New France belonged to them—the Saguenay and the St. Lawrence communicating with the Bay by the lakes. That this being incontestable, it is for France to regulate the limits in this particular quarter, and that of the little which she may cede, she will always cede that which is her own, as the English cannot pretend to anything except a very small extent of the country adjoining the forts which they have possessed at the foot of the Bay."† And consistent with these views, it appears that after the Treaty the French erected a fort at the head of the Albany River.‡ The Hudson's Bay Company claimed that the boundary should be at the 49th parallel, while the French insisted it should be at the 55th parallel. The object of the Company being, as stated by Chief Justice Draper, "to establish an arbitrary boundary and to secure the fur trade from the French."§

The negotiations between the Commissioners appear to have ended about 1720, probably because during that year several of the chief Ministers of State whose names appear in these papers—notably Mr. Secretary Craggs, the Earl of Sunderland, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and others—became implicated in corrupt transactions with the South Sea Company, which caused their expulsion from Parliament the following year. Their successors in the Government appear to have allowed the negotiations to lapse. "Nothing was done," wrote the Duke de Choiseuil in 1761.

The next chapters in this history are the capture of Quebec and the Treaty of Paris of 1763, by which Canada was ceded to England. By the Articles of the Capitulation of Montreal between General Amherst and the Marquis de Vaudreuil in 1760, and the Treaty of 1763, France ceded to England "in full right, Canada and all its dependencies, and the sovereignty and property agreed, by 30 treaty or otherwise," and declared that "a line drawn along the middle of the River Mississippi" should be the limits of the British and French Territories.

Neither in the capitulation between General Amherst and the Marquis de Vaudreuil, nor in the Treaty of 1763, is there any reference to the territories about Hudson's Bay. But I take this ground now: By this capitulation, by this treaty, the English King succeeded to the sovereignty, to the prerogative rights, and to the assertion of title, over the territories which the French King claimed about Hudson's Bay. In addition to his own prerogatives as King of England, he became clothed with the prerogatives which had pertained to the King of France as the Sovereign over this territory; and this double prerogative was to be exercised in such a way as would best maintain the public right of the people to whose allegiance he had succeeded. The claim to the territories about Hudson's Bay had 40 been in contest between the King of France and the Hudson's Bay Company. It now became a question of territorial right between the King of England, as representing the possessory rights and sovereignty of the King of France, on the one side, and the Hudson's Bay Company on the other. Succeeding, therefore, to the French sovereignty over this territory and people, the Crown of England had the right to claim as against the Hudson's Bay Company, and all others, the French sovereignty, as if the French authority had not been suppressed, and as if the French authority was itself seeking to enforce its territorial claims. Viewed in the light of this claim of the double sovereignty which it thus had, the subsequent proceedings of the Crown of England in regard to the boundaries of Upper Canada, should weigh with the Arbitrators in determining what effect and what interpretation should be given to these subsequent proceedings as political acts of State. The interpretation, I take it, of 50 this double sovereignty, must be that which was the largest and most advantageous for the public rights of the Sovereign and people. This doctrine of succession to sovereign rights has received judicial interpretation in regard to the property and territory, and sovereign rights, of a displaced power. On the judicial interpretation which I shall quote is cited with approval in the last edition of Wheaton on International Law, as being a fair and proper exposition of public law on that question. In the case of the *United States vs. McRae, Vice-Chancellor (now Lord Justice) James, says: "I apprehend it to be the clear, public, universal law, that any Government which de facto succeeds to any other Govern-ment, whether by revolution or restoration, conquest or re-conquests, succeeds to all the public property to everything in the nature of public property, and to all rights in respect of the public property of the displaced power—whatever may be the nature or origin of the title of such displaced power." "But this right is the right of succession, is the right of representation; it is a right not paramount but 10 derived, I will not say under, but through the suppressed and displaced authority, and can only be enforced in the same way, and to the same extent, and subject to the same co-relative obligations and rights, as if that authority had not been suppressed and displaced, and was itself seeking to enforce it." The same doctrine had been previously recognized in England, in the case of the King of the two Sicilies vs. Wilcox† United States vs. Prioleau‡, and in Canada in the case of United States vs. Boyd.§ The Supreme Court of the United States has in various cases affirmed the same doctrine: that the new government takes the place of that which has passed away, and succeeds to all the rights and property of the original sovereign.

Now, with reference to the alleged claims of the Hudson's Bay Company to the lands south of Hudson's Bay, to line 49°, it may reasonably be argued that there could be no estoppel between the 20 Crown of England, clothed with the double sovereignty of the French and English Crowns, over this disputed territory, and the Hudson's Bay Company. Whatever representations and claims the Hudson's Bay Company may have induced the English Government to make prior to the cession of the territory, would not estop the Crown of England, having acquired the sovereignty which France had held, in any contention between it and the Hudson's Bay Company.

Chief Justice Harrison—I fancy that Great Britain could not have conferred on the Hudson's Bay Company any greater rights than Great Britain at the time of the grant possessed.

Mr. Hodgins—The cession of the disputed territory would not accrue to the Hudson's Bay 30 Company.

Chief Justice Harrison—Not in the absence of an express grant.

Mr. Hodgins—We say that this territory about the south shore of Hudson's Bay had been surrendered by Indian treaty to the Crown of France prior to the Hudson's Bay Company's claim of title, and had been occupied and thenceforward claimed as French territory up to a period after the Treaty of Utrecht, and therefore could not have been granted to the Hudson's Bay Company. And that there would be no estoppel operating in favour of the Hudson's Bay Company by reason of the subsequent acquirement of that territory, by the Crown of England in 1763.

We come next to the King's Proclamation of the 7th October, 1763, under which the Provinces of Quebec, East and West Florida, and Grenada, were established. In that Proclamation there seems to be an express reservation. The Proclamation is not printed in full in Book of Documents, but it will 40 be found in a work which I obtained from the Education Department of Ontario, in which the terms of Capitulation, the Treaty of Peace, and the Proclamations in regard to the earlier establishment of Quebec and the other Provinces, are collected. That Proclamation reserves out of the extensive and valuable acquisitions in America secured to the Crown by the Treaty of Paris, other territories than those placed under the four Governments then constituted, viz. a territory not yet ceded to the Crown, which, I assume, included the Indian territories before referred to, and a territory beyond the sources of the rivers which fall into the Atlantic. It was assumed at that time, and some of the maps confirmed the assumption, that Lake Winnipeg was connected with Pigeon River, and so through the great lakes with the St. Lawrence. The Crown therefore reserved for future disposition the territories referred to, and expressly limited the jurisdiction of the Governors of the new Provinces in a way 50 markedly different from the commissions which issued subsequently under the Quebec Act: "That no Governor or Commander-in-Chief do presume, upon any pretence whatever, to grant warrants of survey, or pass any patents for lands beyond the bounds of their respective governments, or for lands beyond the heads or sources of any of the rivers which fall into the Atlantic Ocean, from the west or north-west, or any lands whatever, which, not having been ceded to or purchased by us, are reserved to the Indians."

The next document in point of time is the Quebec Act of 1774. The Attorney-General has left me little to add in construing that Act, and he has shown that the words "during His Majesty's pleasure," preserved the future exercise of the Royal prerogative. The Dominion contends for the most limited construction which can be placed upon the term "northward" in that Act—that it means "due north." The rule is otherwise stated by the Supreme Court of the United States: "In great questions which concern the boundaries of States—when great natural boundaries are established in general terms with a view to public convenience and the avoidance of controversy—the great object, where it can be distinctly perceived, ought not to be defeated by those technical perplexities which may sometimes influence contracts between individuals."* But apart from the construction placed by the Crown upon that word "northward," immediately after the passing of the Act, we find in the preamble of the Act, and on the ground within the disputed territory—that is, between the line drawn "due north" from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi, and the line of the "banks of the Mississippi River"—irresistible arguments against the contention of the Dominion. Now, within that disputed territory between the lines referred to, there were, at the time, several well-known settlements and trading forts of the French, as shown on the maps: Forts Kaministiquia, St. Pierre, St. Charles, La Pointe or Chacouamieon, St. Croix, Bonsecour, St. Nicholas, Crevecoeur, St. Louis, De Chartres, and the settlements on Lake Superior, west of this "due north" line.

The preamble of the Act shows that the intention of Parliament was to extend civil government over French settlements left out of governmental control; for after reciting the Proclamation of 1763, it says: "Whereas, by the arrangements made by the said Royal Proclamation, a very large extent of country, within which there were several colonies and settlements of the subjects of France who claimed to remain therein under the faith of the said Treaty, was left without any provision being made for the administration of civil government therein." Now, if the object of the Act, as stated in the preamble, was to extend civil government over the colonies and settlements not theretofore within the limits of any of the Provinces, can any reasonable argument be advanced for excluding from the benefits of that Act a long and narrow strip of territory containing the settlements and forts named, lying between this "due north" line and the eastern banks of the Mississippi? England, at the surrender of Canada, claimed to the line of the Mississippi, and the map produced by the Dominion as the one containing the line traced between General Amherst and the Marquis de Vaudreuil, shows that the line started from Red Lake, one of the sources of the Mississippi. And as if to place the boundary beyond question, the Treaty declares that the limits between the British and French territories shall "be fixed irrevocably by a line drawn along the middle of the River Mississippi from its source to the River Iberville," etc.

But—still keeping in view the object of the Quebec Act as set forth in the preamble, and remembering that the Crown in its negotiations with France had perseveringly insisted upon the line of the Mississippi as the western boundary of Canada, and had obtained that boundary—there is a further point which I would press upon the Arbitrators. The first document promulgated by the Crown immediately after the passing of the Act, was a commission to Sir Guy Carleton, in December, 1774, as Governor-General of the new Province of Quebec, and it gives an authoritative interpretation by the Crown of the indefinite word "northward," used in the Act of Parliament, which was peculiarly within the power and prerogative of the Crown to interpret. That commission gives the boundaries mentioned in the Quebec Act until it comes to the words "westward to the banks of the Mississippi and northward," not "due north," but "northward along the eastern bank or the said river (Mississippi)." This description must be taken to be the Crown's interpretation of the boundaries which the Act of Parliament had established for the Province of Quebec, and was a political act of state within the prerogative right of the Crown—to fix the boundaries where they were uncertain, and even to extend them if necessary; and such act of the Crown is binding upon the Arbitrators and cannot now be questioned. That Governor-General, as well as his successor, had thus from the crown complete jurisdiction over the territory to the line of the banks of the Mississippi. But when the southern portion of the Province of Quebec was ceded to the United States, by the Treaty of 1783, the Crown had again to interpret the Quebec Act as to the remaining territory; and in the commission issued by the Crown in 1786, appointing Sir Guy Carleton, Governor-General over what remained of the Province of Quebec, the Crown defined that Province as extending on the west to the Lake of the Woods and the Mississippi River.*

These commissions to the Governors were political acts of state or of sovereign power over the territory in question, and brought the territory within the jurisdiction of the Civil Government of Quebec delegated to the Governors. The Courts of the United States have been called upon to determine questions of boundaries similar to that now before the Arbitrators; and by a consensus of decisions from 1818 to the present, their courts say that in all these questions affecting boundaries the act is a political act. We call it a prerogative act. They hold that where the political act has been recognized either by the Executive or by Congress, either officially or in legislative documents, or in diplomatic controversies with foreign nations, that the interpretation put upon the boundaries of territories, and the limitation of such boundaries, and the claim in regard to such boundaries, shall govern the civil courts. Chief Justice Marshall, in delivering the judgment of the Supreme Court on the question of the boundaries of Louisiana and West Florida, in the case of Foster v. Neilson,† says: 20
“After these acts of sovereign power over the territory in dispute, to maintain the opposite construction would certainly be an anomaly in the history and practice of nations. If the Government have unequivocally asserted its right of dominion over a country of which it is in possession, and which it claims under a treaty, if the Legislature has acted on the construction thus asserted, it is not in its own courts that this construction is to be denied. A question like this, respecting the boundaries of nations, is more a political than a legal question, and in its discussion the courts of every country must respect the pronounced will of the Government. To do otherwise would be to subvert those principles which govern the relations between the legislative and judicial departments, and mark the limits of each.” This judgment has been cited with approval, and has been followed in all subsequent cases of disputed boundaries of states or territories. 30

But we are not limited to these unquestioned and unquestionable prerogative acts of the Crown in interpreting the statute. We come next to the division of the Province of Quebec into Upper and Lower Canada; and if words mean what they express, then the words used in the Order in Council,‡ in the paper presented to the Houses of Parliament, previous to the passing of the Act of 1791,§ in the proclamation of General Clark,|| and in the Commissions which were subsequently issued to the Governors under that Act¶ show conclusively the intention of the Crown as to the boundaries of the new Province of Upper Canada, whether as dividing the old Province of Quebec, or as settling the uncertain course of the “northward” line of the Quebec Act. The Order of the King in Council and the Proclamation issued immediately after the passing of the Act, were also “acts of sovereign power over the territory” in question, and are, we contend, as binding on the arbitrators as they would be on a 40 court of justice. If these acts of the Crown were more than a division of the Province of Quebec; if they were also an extension of the boundaries of the old Province of Quebec, they are equally acts of the prerogative, done with the concurrence of the other estates of the realm, and are binding upon this Arbitration as a court of justice. Therefore, in whatever light the Order in Council of 1791, and the Proclamation under it, are viewed, that Proclamation—giving the boundaries described in the paper presented to the Parliament, and sanctioned by the Order in Council—is the document which determines what are the boundaries of the Province of Ontario. It determined what were the boundaries of the Province of Upper Canada. The Statute of 1841 united the Province of Upper Canada with the Province of Lower Canada, but did not alter the boundaries of either. The Confederation Act of 1867 declares that the boundaries of the former Province of Upper Canada shall be the boundaries of the Province of Ontario. Thus we are brought back to the Order in Council and Proclamation of 1791, as to what are the true boundaries of Ontario. The paper submitted to Parliament, and the Proclamation, give two limits:

JOINT
APPENDIX.
Sec. II.
Arbitration.*

First.—That the boundary shall commence at the St. Lawrence at Longueuil, thence to the Ottawa River, thence up the Ottawa to the head of Lake Temiscaming, and thence in a line “due north until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson’s Bay”—not, of the Hudson’s Bay Company’s territory. And we have in the commissions to the Governors-General, as the Attorney-General has stated, a further interpretation of the word “Boundary”—the use of the word “shore.” From 1791 to 1846 every commission issued by the Crown contains the expressions—“strikes the boundary line,” or “strikes,” or “reaches” the “shore of Hudson’s Bay.” No less than eighteen commissions issued by the Crown of England to the Governors between those dates, use the terms “strikes” or “reaches” the boundary line or the shore of Hudson’s Bay. Therefore we contend that the Crown of England, having what may be called the double sovereignty of the French and English Crowns in regard to that disputed southern shore of Hudson’s Bay—whether the former sovereignty had been admitted or denied—intended that this new Province of Upper Canada should extend to the southern shore of Hudson’s Bay.

Second.—The Parliamentary paper and the Proclamation say, “westward to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada.” Now the Crown here uses a word which the Crown had knowledge of. In the negotiations with the French King, the Crown had been contending for the cession of the country called or known by the name of “Canada.” It had obtained, first by conquest, and then by treaty, the territory or country called or known by the name of “Canada.” Now, the limits of Canada were known either from descriptions in State documents, or from a known extent of territory—known to the Crown and to the officers of the Crown—or known by localities which had certain names admitted to be within the territory or country called or known by the name of “Canada.” To aid us in finding the extent of Canada we may refer to maps published in England and France prior to and at the time of this Proclamation. We may also refer to the prior admissions or reports by the officers of the English and French Governments; to the works of historians and geographers, and the knowledge acquired by the actual experience of travellers; and from all these we can obtain with tolerable certainty a knowledge of the extent of the territory called or known by the name of “Canada.” Now, it is not necessary, so far as this arbitration is concerned, to consider that portion south of the present boundary between the United States and ourselves, or to determine whether it was part of Canada or not. I have argued that it was; and the United States Courts in dealing with questions of titles there have held that the territory lying to the east of the Mississippi was formerly Canada, and, that the United States had succeeded to the title of the King of France in that part of Canada which he had prior to the conquest by Great Britain in 1759, and which was ceded to England by the treaty of 1763.* So far, therefore, as that territory is concerned, had it remained the property of England it would have become part of the new Province under the term “Canada,” used in the Proclamation of 1791. North of the line of the Mississippi, and north of what is now the international boundary, there were French forts or trading posts. These French forts—Fort Bourbon, Fort Dauphin, Fort La Reine, Fort Rouge, Fort St. Charles, Fort Maurepas, Fort St. Pierre and Fort Kamistikiquia—appear on both French and English maps published prior and subsequent to the surrender of Canada. Now, to what Sovereign did these forts belong? Did they belong to the Sovereign of England or of France? Were they occupied by English or by French subjects? Every record we have, whether taken from English or French sources, admits that these forts were French; that all through that interior western country the French had established their posts, had carried on trade with the Indians, and were more adventurous than the English. The English had simply occupied a scattered fringe of posts on the shores of Hudson’s Bay, while the French had gone into the interior of the country, had established these trading posts, and by virtue of their establishment had occupied the territory with the knowledge and tacit acquiescence of the English—if the English had been entitled by the possession of the coasts to that interior country—had occupied the interior portions of the country and made settlements, and had therefore acquired for the King of France the dominion and sovereignty of that territory. That interior territory, therefore, as part of the territory of Canada, was surrendered under the Treaty of 1763. I think that this is put beyond question by the Articles of Capitulation between the Marquis de Vaudreuil and General Amherst. Article 3 mentions the posts situated on the frontiers—Detroit, Michillimackinac, and other posts. Article 25 provides for the affairs of the trading company known as the Indian or Quebec Company, referred to in the Treaty of Utrecht. Article 37 provides that the Canadians and French "settled or trading in the whole extent of the Colony of Canada," shall preserve peaceable possession of their goods both movable and unmovable; they shall also retain the furs in the "posts above" which belong to them, and those which may be on their way to Montreal; and they shall have leave to send canoes to fetch furs which shall have remained in the posts. These particular references to the settlements and posts in the countries above, clearly point to the French trading posts on Lake Superior and in the country west of that lake. Then we have the map which is printed in the Dominion case, which shows that whatever may have been the dispute between the Marquis de Vaudreuil and General Amherst as to the Mississippi, the Marquis admitted that the western boundary of Canada extended to Red Lake—a lake immediately south of the Lake of the Woods. They did not dispute as to the territories north of that lake; and the terms of the capitulation covered the posts and forts in the countries above, which posts and forts were those I have mentioned, some of which were in what has since been known as the Red River Territory.

After these admissions by the Marquis de Vaudreuil on behalf of the King of France, respecting "the posts and countries above," could the French be heard contending that the country within which these posts and settlements were to be found was not a portion of Canada? French officers had established posts there for the benefit of the Government of Canada. A trade was carried on between those posts and Montreal, and by distinct references, in the terms of the capitulation, provision was made respecting the French subjects and their property and furs therein, which would have been improper unless as referring to the territory of Canada then surrendered to the British Crown. The only dispute between the British and French was whether the south-westerly boundary should be along the River Ohio or along the River Mississippi. Then if those western posts and settlements formed part of the country commonly called or known by the name of "Canada," clearly they were included in the boundaries of Upper Canada by the Proclamation of 1791. Fort Nepigon, Fort Kaminiestiquia—tracing them westward—Forts St. Pierre, St. Charles, La Reine, Maurepas, Dauphin, Bourbon—some of them on Lake Superior, others on Pigeon River and the Lake of the Woods, Lake Winnipeg and Lake Manitoba. The evidence that these forts did exist is found not only in the documents furnished to the Arbitrators, but some of them are referred to in Sir Alex. Mackenzie's travels. The preface to his work contains the following statement at page lxxv.: "Fort Dauphin, which was established by the French before the Conquest;" and again at page lxxiii.: "It may be proper to observe that the French had two settlements upon the Saskatchewan long before and at the Conquest of Canada, the first at the Pasquia, near Carrot River, and the other at Nepawi, where they had agricultural instruments and wheel carriages, marks of both being found about those establishments, where the soil is excellent." The Nepawi settlement mentioned by Mackenzie is Fort St. Louis or Nipeween, on the Saskatchewan. He also refers to Fort Kaminiestiquia as having been under the French Government of Canada.

Now the Dominion case asserts a general principle of international law, which, if there was no countervailing doctrine or fact against it, would be held to be clearly applicable to cases where there was only the simple fact of possession. "When a nation takes possession of a country with a view to settle there, it takes possession of everything included in it, as lands, lakes, rivers, etc." That is true to a limited extent; but this other doctrine is also true: that where the subjects of another Crown take possession of the same territory—either close to the settlements originally made by the first discoverers, or get, by some means, into the interior of that territory, to the head waters of the rivers which flow down through the territory first settled—the subjects of the other Crown become entitled to that possession and territory if they are allowed to remain undisturbed, and their sovereign becomes entitled to the dominion over that territory. I quote first from Twiss on the Law of Nations in Times of Peace, page 166: "When discovery has not been immediately followed by settlement, but the fact of discovery has been notified, other nations, by courtesy, pay respect to the notification; and the usage of nations has been to presume that settlement will take place within a reasonable time; but unless discovery has been followed, within a reasonable time, by some sort of settlement, the presumption arising out of notification is rebutted by non-user, and lapse of time gives rise to the opposite presumption of abandonment." He then quotes the argument of the English plenipotentiaries at the conference between great Britain and the United States in 1826, that it is only in proportion at first discovery is followed by exploration; by formally taking possession in the name of the discoverer's sovereign; by occupation, and settlement, more or less permanent; by purchase of the territory on receiving the sovereignty from the nation; or some of these acts that the title is strengthened and confirmed.

Mr. Hodgins,
Q. C. of Counsel for Ontario, before

August, 1878.

10 The rule is further stated in Vattel's Law of Nations, page 170: "If, at the same time, two or more nations discover and take possession of an island or other desert land without an owner, they ought to agree between themselves and make an equitable partition; but if they cannot agree, each will have the right of empire and the domain in the parts in which they have first settled." Apply this to the case of the English and French struggling for the right of possession and sovereignty over this northern continent. Admit that the English did make discoveries and settlements on the shores of Hudson's Bay. The French, prior to that, had made settlements along the St. Lawrence and up towards Hudson's Bay, and subsequently within the interior of the country where the rivers flowing into Hudson's Bay took their rise. The two nations should agree as to their limits; but if they do not, or cannot, agree, each nation has the right of empire in the part respectively first settled by its subjects. The English will thus 20 be entitled to so much of the shores of the Bay and of the interior country as will not interfere with the possessory rights of the French at the Bay and in the west. The French will have the right to the territory they had settled upon, and up to such a line as the Chief-Justice referred to when he suggested the illustration of a line along the middle of a river; so that it must be between the English settlements on the Bay and the French settlements on the Bay and in the interior, that the line should be drawn. The English, after making a few small settlements on the shores of the Bay, rested there for years, and neglected to take possession of the interior. The French then took possession; and the effect of these acts of the two nations is governed by the rule thus stated by Vattel at page 171: "It may happen that a nation is contented with possessing only certain places, or appropriating to itself certain 30 rights in a country which has not an owner, without being solicitous to take possession of the whole country. In this case another nation may take possession of what the first has neglected; but this cannot be done without allowing all the rights acquired by the first to subsist in their full and absolute independence;" that is, to the extent of the territory they have acquired, or to the middle line between the two territories. And it is interesting to find the opinion of an English Sovereign, Queen Elizabeth, affirming a principle which has since been recognized as the correct one by writers on international law.—In Twiss on the Law of Nations, at page 173, we find the following: "When Mendoza, the Spanish Ambassador, remonstrated against the expedition of Drake, Queen Elizabeth replied that she 'knew no right that the Spaniards had to any places, other than those they were in actual possession of. For that they having touched only here and there upon a coast, and given names to a few rivers and capes, were such insignificant things as could in no wise entitle to a propriety, further than in 40 parts where they actually settled and continued to inhabit." Again Twiss says, at page 175: "Settlement, when it has supervened on discovery, constitutes a perfect title; but a title by settlement, when not combined with a title by discovery, is in itself imperfect, and its immediate validity will depend upon one or other condition: that the right of discovery has been waived, de jure, by non-user, or that the right of occupancy has been renounced de facto, by the abandonment of the territory." "Again, the presumption of law will always be in favour of a title by settlement." "Where a title by settlement is opposed to a title by discovery, although no convention can be appealed to in proof of the discovery having been waived, still a tacit acquiescence on the part of the nation that asserts the discovery, during a reasonable lapse of time since the settlement has taken place, will bar its claim to disturb the settlement." Wheaton, referring to this rule, says on page 220: "This rule is founded upon the sup- 50 position, confirmed by constant experience, that every person will naturally seek to enjoy that which belongs to him; and the inference—fairly to be drawn from his silence and neglect—of an original defect in his title or his intention to relinquish it."

JOINT

The Arbitration.

Argument of
Mr. Hodgins,
Q.C. of Counsel for Ontario, before the Arbitra-
tors, 2d
August, 1878.

Thus the Arbitrators will see that the international law has incorporated the same doctrine of prescription as that which prevails in the municipal courts of every civilized community. Assuming that the Hudson's Bay Company had the right under their charter to go up those rivers which flowed into Hudson's Bay, and settle the country, did they exercise that right, or did they acquiesce in another nation taking that right from them? Clearly, they did so acquiesce. They knew that the French had gone inland to the heads of the rivers flowing into Hudson's Bay, and were trading with the Indians there; they knew that the French had established their forts and posts there; and they knew that these forts and posts indicated an occupation and settlement of the territory; and they knew all the legal results flowing from the occupation and settlement, which gave the French King proprietary and sovereign rights there; and they acquiesced in that occupation from the time the French settlements were made, and had acquiesced in it up to the time of the cession of Canada in 1763; and the Hudson's Bay Company, and those who now claim under them, cannot be heard asserting to-day that there was no acquiescence, and that there was no non-user of the right which the charter gave them, of going into the interior and occupying this territory as their own. The Hudson's Bay Company, and the Dominion as claiming under them, assert title to the height of land or watershed line, on the ground that having taken possession of the mouths of certain rivers at Hudson's Bay, they were entitled to all the lands watered by the rivers flowing into the Bay. A similar ground was taken by the United States in 1827, but Twiss (p. 174) combats it, and shows it to be irreconcilable with other rules of international law to which all nations agree. And referring to the argument founded upon the grants in such charters as that to the Hudson's Bay Company, he says (173): "Those charters had no valid force or effect against the subjects of other sovereigns, but could only bind and restrain, vigore suo, those who were within the jurisdiction of the grantor of the charters; and that although they might confer upon the grantees an exclusive title against the subjects of the same sovereign power, they could only affect the subjects of other sovereign powers so far as the latter might be bound, by the common law of nations, to respect acts of discovery and occupation effected by members of other independent political communities."

Apply these doctrines to the case of the Province, and the result is clear. We have established the fact of the early surrender of the Indian title to the territory around the southern shores of Hudson's or James' Bay to the French King; the fact of the actual settlement and occupation of these interior posts by the French, and which, according to the rules of international law, had made that territory part of Canada or New France. We stand on the territorial rights which the French King had thus acquired; which the French King, in 1763, ceded to the English Crown as Canada, with all its dependencies, and its settlements and posts in the whole extent of the Colony of Canada; which, by the Quebec Act and Commissions to Governors, became the north-western part of the Province of Quebec; which, by the Order in Council and Proclamation of 1791, and the commissions to Governors, became the former Province of Upper Canada; and which, by the British North America Act, has now become the territorial extent of the Province of Ontario.

ARGUMENT OF MR. MACMAHON, Q.C.

Argument
of Mr. Mac-
Mahon, Q.C., of Counsel for the Dominion, before the Arbitrators,
2d August,
1878.

Mr. Hugh MacMahon, Q.C., opened the case for the Dominion. He said: A great deal which had been argued upon the other side we have never questioned at all; and a greater part of what has been addressed to the Commissioners by my learned friend Mr. Hodgins, we agree with entirely.

What I propose doing, in the first place, is to glance cursorily at the evidence in regard to the early settlements; although I do not conceive it to have very much bearing on the case, still, as it has been pressed on the Arbitrators by the Attorney-General so very forcibly, I consider it necessary to view the facts as they appear from the historical documents.

France claimed in 1685, and in 1671—1671 to 1685—that she was entitled to the whole North-West, including what is claimed as the Hudson's Bay territory. That claim was set up first by De Callières, when writing to the authorities in France in 1685, and afterwards. His memoir was followed by the Marquis de Denonville's, when communicating with the same Government. It was stated in that memoir just as has been asserted by the Attorney-General, and that memoir is set forth in the New York Historical Documents, Vol. 9, 287, and also at page 304 of the same volume. But in that statement of M. de Denonville, he admits that documentary evidence could not even at that time be adduced in support of those visits having been made to Hudson's Bay. His words are:—"I annex to his letter a memoir of our rights to the entire of that country, of which our registers ought to be full, but no memorials of them are to be found." When we come to examine into the facts of these asserted voyages, it will be found that not one of them was made until the voyage of Albel, in 1672. It is asserted that Jean Bourdon, the Attorney-General, in 1656, explored the entire coast of Labrador and entered Hudson's Bay. Now, there is no record whatever of that—nothing whatever to support it; but there is a record in 1655, that Sieur Bourdon, then Attorney-General, was authorized to make a discovery of the Hudson's Bay, and it will be seen hereafter what he did in order to comply with that arrêt of the Sovereign Council. He made an attempt: he started on his voyage on May 2, 1657. This statement is contained on page 3 of the Dominion Case. He started on May 2, and returned on August 11 of the same year. My learned friend had to admit that there was no possible chance of his making a voyage to Hudson's Bay between those dates. The account of it, as given in the Relations of the Jesuits of 1658, page 9, is this:—"The 11th (August) there appeared the barque of M. Bourdon, which having descended the Grand River on the north side, sailed as far as the 55th degree, where it encountered a great bank of ice, which caused it to return, having lost two Hurons that it had taken as guides. The Esquimaux savages of the north massacred them, and wounded a Frenchman with three arrows and one cut with a knife." Jean Bourdon was of the Province of Quebec; he was well known to the Jesuits and trusted by them, and it is stated in the memoir that he went with Father Jogues on an embassy to Governor Dongan, then Governor of the Province of New York.

The other statement is that Father Dablon and Sieur de Vallière were ordered, in 1661, to proceed to the country about Hudson's Bay, and that they went thither accordingly. Now, all the accounts agree in the statement that Dablon never reached Hudson's Bay. In Shea's Charlevoix, Vol. 3, pp. 39, 40, it is stated that Father Dablon attempted to penetrate to the Northern Ocean by ascending the Saguenay. Early in July, two months after they set out, they found themselves at the head of the Nekauba River, 300 miles from Lake St. John. They could not proceed any farther, being warned of the approach of the Iroquois. In the New York Historical Documents there is a note by the editor of these papers on page 97, which gives an account of the Rev. Father Dablon from the time of his arrival in Canada in 1665. He was immediately sent missionary to Onondaga, where he continued, with a brief interval, until 1658. In 1661 he set out overland for Hudson's Bay, but succeeded only in reaching the head waters of the Nekauba, 300 miles from Lake St. John.

An assertion is also made that some Indians came from about Hudson's Bay to Quebec in 1663 and that Sieur la Couture, with five men, proceeded overland to the Bay, possession whereof they took in the King's name. There is no account of this voyage in Charlevoix or in the Relations of the Jesuits; and the authority relied upon, is the same as my learned friend relies on, as being furnished for the Marquis de Denonville, to which I have already referred as being untrustworthy. M. de Callières in his memoir, written in 1685, was twenty-one years after the time of which he writes. It is asserted in the memoir that Couture made that journey to the Hudson's Bay for the purpose of discovery; and taking that in connection with the fact that the Governor of the Province is compelled to admit that they have no record in any shape to which they could refer, although they ought to have many, and when we come to what really took place in 1671, during Talon's administration, we find that it was then, that the desire existed that some one connected with the French should go to the Hudson's Bay, and, if possible, make a discovery of it; and the design of putting all this forward in 1685, was to make the King of France and his Ministers believe that this country was then in the possession of the French. For what purpose? Because in 1682 they had gone to that territory, had taken possession of the forts built and set up by Gillam and others on behalf of the Hudson's Bay Company, and had destroyed property there; therefore it was necessary that they should account in some way for having gone into that territory and taken possession of it. The next voyage claimed after that of Couture is the voyage of Sieur Duquet.

50 Chief Justice Harrison.—Before these periods there can be no doubt that some Frenchmen had penetrated to Hudson's Bay.

Argument
of Mr. Mac-
Mahon, Q.C., of Counsel for the Dominion, before the

Mr. MacMahon.—No, not one. Fort Rupert was established in 1688; that was Gillam's Fort. It is admitted on all hands that Gillam built the first fort on the Bay. That was the first fort of any account upon the Hudson's Bay, or anywhere in connection with it; this is not questioned by my learned friend. That fort was put up in the interest of Prince Rupert. I am merely going over the arguments of my learned friend in order to show on what a slight basis the historical statements have been built, and how willing the Province of Ontario has been to seize upon such papers, as authentic documents, in order to prove that this territory was French.

In 1663 Sieur Duquet, the King's attorney for Quebec, and Jean L'Anglois, a Canadian colonist, are said to have gone to Hudson's Bay by order of Sieur D'Argenson, and to have renewed possession by setting up the King's Arms there a second time. By reference to page 129 of Mills' revised Report, it will be seen that that order could not have been given by D'Argenson, because he had left Canada on September 16, 1661, two years before this pretended order was given to Sieur Duquet; and there is ample authority for that in Shea's Charlevoix, vol. 3, page 65, note 5, and p. 17. I have given the historical references here in order that, if possible, my learned friends might meet the statement that is made.

The Attorney-General.—Would it not be convenient for my learned friend to answer now the way in which Mr. Mills treats these things?

Mr. MacMahon.—I do not think it is necessary, because Mr. Mills puts the matter on a ground that could hardly be maintained. If he were to look at it now, he would admit that there is not so much in his view as he thought there was at the time he wrote his report. In a note on page 129, Mr. Mills says: "An attempt has been made, on the strength of certain passages in the Relations des Jésuites, to throw doubt on the authenticity of certain of the occurrences mentioned in the memoirs of M. de Callières and the Marquis de Denonville. It is not at all likely that either of these—the one being Governor of Montreal and the other Governor-General of New France, having access to the official documents, and writing within a short time of the date of the events narrated—could by possibility be mistaken." Now, De Callières was writing twenty-one years after the events; Denonville was writing twenty-two years after them, and relying upon the very identical memoir that De Callières had written, and which he said there was not a document to support. If there was not a document on which they could rely, how it is possible that any reliance could be placed upon their statements just at that particular juncture, when it was necessary for them to find some argument upon which they could defend their having sent the French into Hudson's Bay and destroyed these forts? For, in 1686 the Marquis de Denonville had sent two or three companies of Frouchemen to Hudson's Bay and taken three forts in one year; and it was necessary that they should account for these transactions to the Government of France. I will show that the Hudson's Bay Company were at that very time making representations to their Government in regard to the conduct of the French, and to the governors of the French. I think that this is all I need say in regard to Sieur Duquet's voyage. The fact of D'Argenson having left Canada two years before his order is said to have been given to Duquet, shows that the whole thing was, if not a fabrication, a mistake. I am not going to say that it was a fabrication; I am not called upon to account for it in any way; I am only called upon to point out that there is no authority for it; and the whole circumstances go to show that the transaction could not have transpired as it is set forth by the governors at that day. There has been an egregious error committed in some way. That order could never have been given, because we have the most unmistakable evidence that D'Argenson was not in this country then.

When we come to the voyage of Albanel and St. Simon in 1671, which we admit was made, we find in a letter of M. Talon to the King, dated Quebec, November 2, 1671, these words: "Three months ago I despatched with Father Albanel, a Jesuit, Sieur de St. Simon, a young Canadian gentleman recently honoured by His Majesty with that title. They are to penetrate as far as Hudson's Bay, draw up a memoir of all they will discover, drive a trade in furs with the Indians, and especially reconnoitre whether there be any means of wintering ships in that quarter." That is what they were to do; so that if the French Government of the day had, prior to that, caused visits to be made to Hudson's Bay, in the way in which they pretend some years after that to state, all that knowledge and information would have been acquired, and there would have been no necessity for sending a priest there in order to make that discovery. If those statements of the earlier alleged voyages had not been made by the duly constituted authorities of the Government of the country, I think this is almost all the answer it would be needful to make. But Father Albanel says, at page 56 of the Relations for 1672: "Hitherto this voyage had been considered impossible for Frenchmen, who, after having undertaken it already three times, and not having been able to surmount the obstacles, had seen themselves obliged to abandon it in despair of success. What appears as impossible, is found not to be so, when it pleases God. The conduct of it was reserved for me, after eighteen years' prosecution that I had made, and I have very sensible proofs that God reserved the execution of it for me, after the signal favour of a sudden and marvellous, not to say miraculous, recovery that I received as soon as I devoted myself to this mission, at the solicitation of my superior, and in fact I have not been deceived in my expectation; I have opened the road in company with two Frenchmen and six savages." This shows that so far as the Jesuits were concerned, the pioneers of the country, they had never heard of any one having penetrated to Hudson's Bay before them. The very letter that M. Talon was writing to the King shows that he had never heard anything of the kind. There is no doubt, therefore, that Albanel's voyage was the first effort successfully made to reach Hudson's Bay.

The Attorney-General—M. Talon says also, in that letter to the King, that those countries were originally discovered by the French.

Mr. MacMahon—That is the way in which these accounts were made up; but it is evident that the French had not been in Hudson's Bay, and did not know whether it would winter ships or not.

The Attorney-General—M. Talon says that he directed St. Simon to take renewed possession of it.

Mr. MacMahon—It was not necessary to take renewed possession, if they were in possession already, as it is now claimed that they were. There is not a record in existence which will substantiate the claim then made as to former possession. In December, 1711, the Hudson's Bay Company presented a petition to Queen Anne, in which they set forth that the French, in time of perfect peace between the two kingdoms, in 1682, arbitrarily invaded the Company's territories at Fort Nelson, burned their houses, and seized their effects; that in the years 1684 and 1685 they continued their depredations; that in the year 1686 they forcibly took from the Company, Albany Fort, Rupert Fort, and Moose River Fort, and continued their violent proceedings in 1687 and 1688, and the Company lay to the damages at £108,514 19s. 8d. (Mills, 153.)

It is not my intention to take up the time of the Arbitrators in referring to the English discoveries. A series of them will be found at pages 4 and 5 of the Dominion Case. The voyages are those of Sebastian Cabot, in 1517; Sir Martin Frobisher, in 1576, 1577 and 1578; Hudson, 1608-10; Button, 1611; Luke Fox and Thomas James, 1631. Then we come to 1667 and 1668, when we find that Des Grossellières and Radisson (who it is supposed were Coureurs des Bois), were roaming among the Assiniboines and were conducted by them to Hudson's Bay. These two men went to Quebec after their return for the purpose of inducing the merchants there to conduct trading vessels to Hudson's Bay. At page 280 of the Ontario Documents we have the whole transactions during that period fully set forth by the Hudson's Bay Company just as they transpired. The proposal of Des Grossellières and Radisson was rejected, as the project was looked upon as chimerical by the Quebec merchants. Now, if Attorney-General Bourdon, the Attorney-General of the Province, had been there twelve or fourteen years before, and made known what his discovery was, and how he got there and returned from there, it would not have been stated by the merchants of Quebec that the project was chimerical.

The Attorney-General—Nor did they state so. The document merely says that their project was rejected.

Mr. MacMahon—I will furnish the authority for stating that the project was looked upon as chimerical. I think you will find it in Mr. Mills' book.

Des Grosellières was in London in 1667, but before going there he had been in Boston and in Paris, endeavouring to get merchants to assist in reaching the Hudson's Bay by ships. He wished them to fit out an expedition for that purpose, but they refused to join in the undertaking, and he then referred to the British Ambassador at the Court of Paris, who advised him to go to London. He went there, and those who afterwards obtained the patent from Charles II. to the Hudson's Bay Company, employed Des Grosellières and Radisson, with Gillam, who went there and built Fort Rupert in 1667 or 1668. Then Captain Newland was sent out in 1669 by the same parties who sent out Gillam. So far as the Hudson's Bay territory is concerned, the English were first, both as to discovery and occupation.

It is stated in Mr. Mills' book (and not denied) that as long as the English were not there, the Indians came to Montreal and Quebec, and Three Rivers. The whole of the trade was done between Fort Frontenac (Kingston) and Quebec, by the Indians themselves; and with the exception of the 10 Coureurs des Bois, who went into the country some hundred miles, there was no pretence of the French having penetrated into the interior. But as soon as the English commenced occupying the Hudson's Bay territory, as soon as they were intercepting and taking possession of the trade that had formerly belonged to the French merchants, then those who were interested took steps to secure, at Hudson's Bay, the trade which the English were intercepting. The memoirs are full of statements as to the venality of those connected with the French Government in Canada. It is stated that the Governors-General themselves were in league with certain merchants and traders for the purpose of getting possession of as much of the trade as they possibly could, and that none except certain favoured individuals could get licenses from the Governors. The people stated themselves that they were persecuted by the emissaries of the Government, who sought to prevent them going into the interior; and thus the 20 Coureurs des Bois were prevented from going into the interior of the country, and cutting off the trade which would otherwise have gone to Montreal, and which the officials were bound to participate in if they could. That is the reason why the French Governors here thought it necessary to send these memoirs to the Court of France.

Now, having found the English making discoveries, entering into possession, and building forts upon Hudson's Bay, the question suggests itself—a question which ought to be determined—what extent of territory the King of England, as represented by the Hudson's Bay Company, or the discoveries of that Company—what extent of territory the King of England was entitled to by this discovery, possession and occupation. I do not think there can be a doubt about it. Most of the authorities on the point are referred to on page 6 of the Dominion Case. It is laid down in Vattel that "navigators 30 going on voyages of discovery furnished with a commission from their Sovereign, and meeting with islands or other lands in a desert state, have taken possession of them in the name of their nation; and this title has been usually respected, provided it was soon after followed by real possession." Here we have these people sent out under the sanction of the King and of Prince Rupert to make a discovery of Hudson's Bay. They did make that discovery, and entered into possession; and I am going to show to the Commissioners, no matter what the occupation was, that under the law of nations, as interpreted then and since by the highest authorities, they were entitled to the whole of the lands watered by the streams flowing into Hudson's Bay and James' Bay; and more than that, it will be apparent that the Hudson's Bay Company and the English Government were claiming that the whole of these lands belonged to England. Vattel says also: "When a nation takes possession of 40 a country, with a view to settle there, it takes possession of everything included in it, as lands, lakes rivers, etc."

The next authority I shall quote is Phillimore. He says: "In the negotiations between Spain and the United States respecting the western boundary of Louisiana, the latter country laid down with accuracy and clearness, certain propositions of law upon this subject, and which fortify the opinion advanced in the foregoing paragraphs. 'The principles (America said on this occasion) which are applicable to the case, are such as are dictated by reason, and have been adopted in practice by European Powers in the discoveries and acquisitions which they have respectively made in the New World. They are few, simple, intelligible, and at the same time founded in strict justice. The first of 50 these is, that when any European nation takes possession of any extent of sea coast, that possession is understood as extending into the interior country to the sources of the rivers emptying within that coast, to all their branches, and the country they cover, and to give it a right, in exclusion of all other nations to the same. (See Mémoire de l'Amérique, p. 116.) It is evident that some rule or principle must govern the rights of European Powers in regard to each other in all such cases; and it is certain that none can be adopted, in those to which it applies, more reasonable or just than the present one. Many weighty considerations show the propriety of it. Nature seems to have destined a range of territory so described for the same society, to have connected its several parts together by the ties of a common interest, and to have detached them from others. If this principle is departed from it must be by attaching to such discovery and possession, a more enlarged or contracted scope of acquisition; but a slight attention to the subject will demonstrate the absurdity of either. The latter would be to restrict the rights of an European Power who discovered and took possession of a new country to the spot on which its troops or settlement rested—a doctrine which has been totally disclaimed by all the Powers who made discoveries and acquired possessions in America" (Phillimore's International Law, 2nd ed., vol. 1, pp. 277-8-9.)

I wish to draw the Arbitrators' particular attention to this expression in regard to restricting the rights of European Powers, etc., to the spot on which troops or settlement rested, because in dealing with the Treaty of Ryswick, the argument has been advanced that all which was left to the English after that treaty were the settlements in the immediate neighborhood of the fort or two then in their possession; that is, the territory immediately round about, and nothing more; although, as I will afterwards show, I do not think that the Treaty of Ryswick has anything to do with the discussion of this case. At page 223 in the discussion of the Oregon question, Dr. Twiss says; "In the negotiations antecedent to the Treaty of Utrecht, it was expressly urged, in support of the British title to the territories of Hudson's Bay, that M. Frontenac, then Governor of Canada, did not complain of any pretended injury done to France by the said Company's settling, trading, and building forts at the bottom of Hudson's Bay, nor made pretensions of any right of France to that Bay till long after that time." (Anderson's History of Commerce, A. D. 1670, vol. 2, page 516) He goes on to say: "In other words, the title which this charter created was good against other subjects of the British Crown by virtue of the charter itself." That is what Dr. Twiss lays down as a proposition which he says cannot be controverted—that as regards the title created by the charter, it was good against other subjects of the British Crown by virtue of the charter itself; so that in virtue of what has taken place within the last few years it must be good as against the Province of Ontario. He continues: "But its validity against other nations rested on the principle that the country was discovered by British subjects, and at the time of their settlement was not occupied by the subjects of any other Christian Prince or State; and in respect to any special claim on the part of France, the non-interference of the French Governor was successfully urged against that power as conclusive of her acquiescence." That is laid down by Dr. Twiss, and it is a proposition which has been assented to by Phillimore in the quotation just read. The quotation which was made use of by my learned friend the Attorney-General from Twiss' Oregon was not attempted to be controverted by the English authorities at the time of the Oregon difficulty. Mr. Mills, at page 182 of his Report, says: "It can hardly be contended that because the Hudson's Bay Company had established certain posts and forts at the mouths of some of the rivers that empty into the Bay, they could rightfully claim all the country drained by those rivers and their tributaries. A pretension of this kind was put forward by the United States to the whole of Oregon, because of the discovery of the Columbia River by Captain Gray, but it was expressly repudiated at the time by Great Britain. No such rule is recognized by writers on international law." Now, the rule of law, as recognized by international writers and Great Britain, was different from that put forward by Mr. Mills. What was stated by Twiss and what is asserted here is, that it depended upon other considerations. Sir Travers Twiss, in his discussion on the Oregon question, at page 300, states that "Great Britain never considered her right of occupancy up to the Rocky Mountains to rest upon the fact of her having established factories on the shores of the Bay of Hudson, i. e., upon her title by mere settlement, but upon her title by discovery, confirmed by settlements in which the French nation, her only civilized neighbour, acquiesced, and which they subsequently recognized by treaty." That is the ground upon which Dr. Twiss puts it, and it is the groundwork of the whole international law as stated by Phillimore in the quotation that I have already read. The principle is stated in Vattel in the reference I have made; is fully recognized by Great Britain and the United States; and is fully assented to by Twiss and Phillimore.

Argument
of Mr. Mac-
Mahon, Q.C., of Counsel for
the Dominion before the

2nd August,

In reference to the middle distance, my learned friend quoted from Twiss, 148. At 173 and 177, Twiss treats of this middle distance in regard to this very territory. He says: "Again, in the case of a river, the banks of which are possessal by contiguous States, the presumption of law is, that the Thalweg, or mid-channel, is the mutual boundary; since rivers are, in the case of the concernous States, communis juris, unless acknowledged by them to be otherwise, or prescribed for by one of the parties, 'The general presumption,' observes Lord Stowell (in the Twee Gebroeders, 3 Rob., p. 339), 'certainly, bears strongly against such exclusive rights, and the title is matter to be established on the part of those claiming under it, in the same manner as all other demands are to be substantiated, by clear and competent evidence.'

"A title by contiguity, as between conterminous States, would thus appear to be a reciprocal title; it cannot be advanced by one party, excepting as a principle which sanctions a corresponding right in the other. The practice is in accordance with this. Thus, the United States of America, in its discussion with Spain respecting the western boundary of Louisiana, contended that 'whenever one European nation makes a discovery, and takes possession of any portion of that continent (i. e., of America), and another afterwards does the same at some distance from it, where the boundary between them is not determined by the principle above mentioned (i. e., actual possession of the sea coast), the middle distance becomes such a course.'" (British and Foreign State Papers, 1817-18, p. 328.)

Now, here we have taken possession of the sea coast, so that the question of middle distance, or reaching the territory by another route, cannot come in question at all; because, as contended by the United States and Great Britain in the discussion of this question, they have always claimed, and the Hudson's Bay Company have always claimed, that the territorial rights extended to the height of land on all sides: and I will point out to the Commissioners that as early as 1709, before the Treaty of Utrecht, the Hudson's Bay Company were claiming on the east and south, the very line that ran from Grimington's Island down through Lake Mistassiniuc. Now, it is necessary to look at the Company's grant in different aspects. The Charter will be found in Ontario Documents, 29-30. What does the King grant to the Hudson's Bay Company under the name of Rupert's Land? First is granted the sole trade and commerce of all those seas, bays, lakes, rivers, creeks, etc. Then the Company are created the "absolute lords and proprietors of the same territory, limits, and places, etc., etc., in free and common soeage, with power to erect colonies and plantations, etc. So that here was a proprietary government created by the charter. You will see by the charter that the Company had the power to adjudge, to create colonies—the power to do everything, apparently, which any government ought to be called upon to do. And I refer to the fact of its being a proprietary government because it will be necessary to consider that in relation to the bounds which my learned friend the Attorney-General says could be created by the King, notwithstanding that the boundaries might have been limited by the Act of Parliament. The charter is very wide. Although Sir Vieary Gibbs, who gave an opinion in 1804, thought the charter void because it purports to confer upon the Company exclusive privileges of trade, he does not say anything about the proprietary rights; he does not say anything about the right of the King to grant a charter the same as was granted in Pennsylvania; he does not say anything about the right to make a territorial grant; he merely gives the opinion that the charter is invalid because it grants exclusive privileges of trade and thereby creates a monopoly, which they say the King could not grant without the sanction of Parliament.

The next opinion in point of time is that of Sir Arthur Pigott, Sergeant Spankie, and Lord Brougham, 1816; and the next one is that of Mr. Edward Bearcroft, in 1818. In these two opinions they did not for a moment say that the charter is invalid, but they say that the Crown had no right, and could not of itself create a monopoly, and therefore as to that part of the charter it might be invalid; but as to the rest of the charter, they say the only part of it to which a question could be raised was in regard to the extent of the territory covered by the charter. I think I will be able to show the Commissioners that the charter was always considered by the British Government as extending to the full length asserted now by the Dominion, and as was asserted by England shortly after the Treaty of Utrecht.

The Attorney-General urged, with a great deal of force, that the opinions given by the law officers of the Crown in 1850 and 1857, were given upon statements furnished by the Hudson's Bay Company which were ex parte, and that, therefore, the Commissioners are not bound by these opinions. I do not pretend that Ontario is bound by any of these opinions; that is not asserted by the Dominion; but the Province of Ontario is put into a position, which I think the Province is not able to escape from, by the very fact of the proceedings referred to having been instituted, and that the law officers of the Crown stated at that time that the Hudson's Bay Company were entitled to everything that they claimed; and I am going to point out to the Commissioners what the claims were, and upon what these claims were based.

The claim, as furnished by the Hudson's Bay Company, will be found in full in Ontario Documents, 288-90. [Appendix A., ante, pp. 340-2]. That claim was founded—upon what? Upon a document prepared by the Crown itself, and furnished to these very counsel as the title on which they were to rely; and the law officers of the Crown, looking at that document, at the charter itself, could see for themselves, and were giving an opinion in regard to a legal document. The Company import into their statement a part of the charter, and set out by saying in the words of the charter what the King had granted them; and then they say that they "have always claimed and exercised dominion as absolute proprietors of the soil in the territories understood to be embraced by the terms of the grant, and which are more particularly defined in the accompanying map." The map is an exact counterpart of what was used in 1857, and in that map is set forth all that they claim.

Chief Justice Harrison—Each time that they were called upon to give their claim, they appear to have extended their boundaries.

20 Mr. MacMahon—They were determined to claim enough, like my learned friend the Attorney-General, who started out with claiming the line of the Rocky Mountains. They furnished that claim to their grantors; they were furnishing that claim to the Crown, and it was submitted to the Crown officers, who gave an opinion in regard to it, and that opinion I have had copied in the Dominion Case at p. 7, [ante, p. 500.] It was given by Sir John Jervis and Sir John Romilly—of whom one became Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and the other Master of the Rolls. In that opinion, which is addressed to Earl Grey, they say:—"In obedience to your Lordship's command, we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report that, having regard to the powers in respect to territory, trade, taxation and government claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company in the statements furnished to your Lordship by the chairman of that Company, we are of opinion that the rights so claimed by the 30 Company do properly belong to them. Upon this subject we entertain no doubt." The Commissioners will see that that map is attached to the correspondence and papers; and all these papers were brought down, in 1850, to the House of Commons on a return then ordered, and which shows the correspondence which took place between Mr. Isbister, who was representing those who felt themselves aggrieved,—I do not know whether representing a Government or private parties.

Chief Justice Harrison—He was not acting for any Government—he was acting as an individual.

Mr. MacMahon—He was acting for some people who claim to have rights in the Hudson's Bay; and the correspondence took place in respect to the charter, the extent of territory and the trade, taxation and government, as claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company.

Sir Edward Thornton—I should suppose that Mr. Isbister represented the people in Assiniboia—40 the dissatisfied people in the Red River Settlement.

Chief Justice Harrison—Yes; certainly he did not represent any Government. He was one of the first to rouse public opinion about the monopoly, both here and in England.

Mr. MacMahon—I showed the letters and papers attached to the map to the Attorney-General, but we concluded that it was not necessary to have them printed, as part of them appear in the Ontario Documents. The letter I will now read is addressed to Mr. Isbister, dated April 30, 1850, and will be found at pages 12 and 13 of the Hudson's Bay Company's Documents:

"DOWNING STREET, April 30, 1850.

the subject, the course which Her Majesty's Government have adopted and propose to pursue relative to the charges against the Hudson's Bay Company. (2) In pursuance of the address of the House of Commons, praying Her Majesty to take such means as might seem most fitting and effectual to ascertain the legality of certain powers claimed by that Company, Lord Grey called on the Company for a statement of those claims, and laid it before the Attorney and Solicitor-General for their opinion. You are acquainted with their opinion, which was to the effect that the rights so claimed by the Company properly belonged to them. (3) They added a suggestion that yourself, or any other party dissatisfied with their opinion, might be recommended to prosecute complaints against the Company by means of a petition to the Queen, which might be referred to the Judicial or some other committee of the Privy Council. (4) This offer was accordingly made to yourself. You now appear to suppose that Her Majesty's Government, in making the offer, intended to defray out of the public funds the expense which must attend such an investigation. (5) This, however, Her Majesty's Government cannot consent to do. Having been advised by their own law officers that the claims of the Company are well founded, they cannot impose on the public the expense of proceedings which, in the opinion of their own regular advisers, will prove ineffectual. All that is in their power is to recommend that those who are dissatisfied with that opinion should pursue the course pointed out by the law advisers for questioning it, and to assist as far as they may lawfully do in having the question so raised brought to a legal determination. (6) But the expense of the steps necessary for this purpose must be borne by the parties who undertake them; and if none of those who have brought under the notice of Lord Grey, and of Parliament, their exceptions to the jurisdiction and power claimed by the Company, are willing to incur such expense, Her Majesty's Government must consider that there are no further steps which it is in their power to adopt for the purpose of ascertaining the legal validity of the claims of the Company."

Now, here was the British Government being advised by their own legal advisers that any steps they might take in order to test the territorial rights (which I suppose it was designed to test by anything that might go before the Privy Council) would be ineffectual; and at that early date Mr. Isbister, who was moving either on behalf of himself or somebody interested, was told that the Government would not assume the responsibility. And we are told in 1850 that the only way of testing the validity of that charter, or the extent to which the rights of the Company might be narrowed down, was by the legal interpretation to be put upon the charter by the Privy Council. Neither then nor in 1857 did Canada think it proper to test in any way—particularly as suggested by the law officers of the Crown on both of these occasions—the validity of that charter. Following that, there was further correspondence. In 1850, Sir John Pelly, who was then Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company, had written to Lord Grey. The following is an extract from his letter, dated at the Hudson's Bay House, May 31, 1850: "Permit me at the same time to state that the Company's ships for Hudson's Bay are appointed to sail on the 8th June, and that it would be of the utmost importance if the decision of the Privy Council, on the rights and privileges of the Company, were sent out by that opportunity, and the Government directed to issue a Proclamation agreeable to the tenor of the decision, which would in my opinion greatly tend to allay the excitement in which a portion of the half-breed inhabitants have been kept." Now, there the Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company invites Her Majesty's Government to have it decided, and to have the excitement allayed. The reply of Lord Grey will be found at page 8 of the Dominion Case. After pointing out what had been done, Mr. Hawes says that a petition to Her Majesty was suggested, and he goes on to say: "Such a petition was, therefore, essential to the complete prosecution of the inquiry. Lord Grey accordingly gave to certain parties in this country, who had taken an interest in the condition of the inhabitants of the Hudson's Bay Company's Territories, and had questioned the validity of the Company's charter, an opportunity to prefer the necessary petition if they were so disposed; but, for reasons which it is unnecessary to repeat, they respectively declined to do so. Lord Grey having, therefore, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, adopted the most effectual means open to him for answering the requirements of the Address, has been obliged, in the absence of any parties prepared to contest the rights claimed by the Company, to assume the opinion of the law officers of the Crown in their favour to be well founded." Lord Grey at that time was Colonial Minister, and he, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, was obliged to assume that the opinion of the law officers of the Crown in favour of the Hudson's Bay Company was well founded and Her Majesty's Government refused to interfere any further with it, as they were perfectly right in doing.

Chief Justice Harrison—These questions, however, were all questions as to certain rights, more than questions as to boundary.

Mr. MacMahon—The trade, taxation and territory were all included.

Chief Justice Harrison—But the question as to the boundary really never came up, because the persons who were then attacking the Hudson's Bay Company said that the Company had no right to any part of the territory. If the question of boundary had come up, they must have looked at the 10 Quebec Act and to these other Acts. But the question then was not a question of boundary at all; it was a question of whether the Company had any rights.

Mr. MacMahon—They were claiming certain rights, and a certain territory as being incident to or connected with those rights. The whole went together.

Chief Justice Harrison—There was no opinion from the law officers of the Crown as to the boundary.

Mr. MacMahon—The Company claimed those boundaries; their own position supplied boundaries. In 1857 the very same question came before Sir Richard Bethell, and, as reference has been made to the distinguished lawyers who gave opinions on the other side, I may say that I presume Sir Richard Bethell's opinion as Attorney-General would be authority as high as could be got from any source in 20 regard to what was covered by the charter.

Sir Edward Thornton—I do not see that there can be the least doubt that the complaints made in 1850 were from Winnipeg, from the same people who were dissatisfied for a great number of years with the Hudson's Bay Company.

Mr. MacMahon—The question as to territory, as to that portion of territory at least, must have got before the law officers of the Crown in some way.

Chief Justice Harrison—These people at Red River said the Hudson's Bay Company had no rights in any part of this territory, and the law officers were against them.

Mr. MacMahon—We have not the petition presented to the House of Commons, but if Mr. Isbister was acting on behalf of those who were known as the Red River settlers, and if he was their 30 representative, then as far as regards the territory that they were disputing, as being controlled by the Hudson's Bay Company, when they had no right to control it at that time, that must have been a question the law officers considered, and in regard to which they gave an opinion.

Chief Justice Harrison—The Attorney-General, for the sake of this argument, admits that the Hudson's Bay Company had some rights, but that as a matter of boundary they did not extend to certain points.

Mr. MacMahon—The question of boundary must have been considered in regard to that territory, as to whether the Hudson's Bay Company were exercising rights outside of the boundaries that they were entitled to under the charter.

Chief Justice Harrison—The case was not put on that ground; the higher ground was taken that 40 the Company had no right there at all.

Sir Edward Thornton—If I am not mistaken, the territory of Assiniboia was granted to the Earl of Selkirk. It is marked upon this map as the territory of Assiniboia.

Mr. MacMahon—Yes. In 1837—the Arbitrators will remember that that was after a lengthened investigation had been gone into by the House of Commons—when Chief Justice Draper was acting as agent for Canada.

Sir Edward Thornton—That is the first time that Canada as a country appeared in the matter at all; I mean the late Province of Canada.

Mr. MacMahon—Yes. When Chief Justice Draper went to England as the agent of Canada, the whole matter as to the rights of the Company was supposed to have received very close attention by the home authorities, and the strongest possible arguments were adduced by the agent of the Province in order to curtail the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, territorially; and at that time the law officers of the Crown, Sir Richard Bethell and Solicitor-General Keating, were asked for an opinion; the whole of which is in Ontario Documents, 200, 201. In that opinion they say,—“That the validity and construction of the Hudson's Bay Company's charter cannot be considered apart from the enjoyment which has been had under it during nearly two centuries, and the recognition made of the rights of the Company in various Acts, both of the Government and the Legislature.” In their statement of rights the Hudson's Bay Company say, in 1850—“It may be right here to mention that although the original title to the territory and trade in question was derived under the charter above referred to the rights of the Company have, in various instances, received the recognition of the Legislature.”

Chief Justice Harrison—Just confirming what I said; the whole dispute was as to the rights of the Company, not the boundary.

Mr. MacMahon—They also say,—“It may be right here to refer to several Acts of the Legislature which have recognized the general rights and privileges claimed and exercised by the Company:—

“An Act passed in the sixth year of the reign of Queen Anne, c. 37, intituled ‘An Act for the Encouragement of the Trade in America,’ and this Act contains an express proviso that ‘nothing therein contained shall extend or be construed to take away or prejudice any of the estates, rights or privileges of or belonging to the Governor and Company of Adventurers trading into Hudson's Bay.” 20

of Mr. Mac-
Mahon, Q.C., of Counsel for

ion, before the

“In like manner, in 1745, when an Act was passed (18 Geo. II. c. 17) for granting a reward for the discovery of a north-west passage through Hudson's Straits, it was expressly provided that nothing therein contained should extend or be construed to take away or prejudice any of the estates, rights or privileges of or belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company.”

One of the contentions in regard to the rights and privileges of the Hudson's Bay Company was that they had not fulfilled the intent of their charter—that they had not been making any endeavours to discover a passage to the North-Pole; that if the charter was ever valid, they had forfeited it by not fulfilling certain conditions. I refer to that to show that during all that time their rights and privileges were being expressly accepted and held valid by these Acts of Parliament during the reigns of Anne and the Georges—so that they were not to be infringed upon in any way—and that they had been recognized up to the very day when Rupert's Land was surrendered by the Hudson's Bay Company to Her Majesty.

At this point the Arbitrators adjourned until ten o'clock the next morning.

Chief Justice Harrison—Before the argument is proceeded with, I would state, without having any desire whatever to unduly hurry the argument, that if there is any probability of its being concluded by one o'clock or so, there is a prospect of the Arbitrators being able to agree this afternoon.

Mr. MacMahon—I will shorten my argument very much. Before commencing the regular course of the argument, I wish to refer to that matter of Radisson and Des Grosellières. In the printed Case 40 the word “chimerical” is used to express the way in which the merchants of Quebec looked upon the statement of these men. My learned friend the Attorney-General said that that was a statement of Mr. MacMahon's. I thought that that statement would be found in Mr. Mills' book, but I see that I was mistaken in that; the statement is to be found in Harris' Travels, page 286, vol. 2 (reads the passage), so that it was not a statement of my own.

The Attorney-General—The authority is then less than that of my learned friend himself would be

Mr. MacMahon—Not at all.

Chief Justice Harrison—The difference is that Harris is not an advocate.

Mr. MacMahon—Harris is about the best authority that we could get for the statement; his work 50 was published in 1760.

I was referring the Arbitrators last evening to the opinion delivered by Sir Richard Bethell, afterwards Lord Westbury, and Sir Henry S. Keating, delivered in 1857 (Ontario Docts., 200-1). It will be remembered that at the time the whole evidence, and all the correspondence that could be got together in regard to this question, had been submitted to the Committee of the House of Commons, and therefore the law officers of the Crown were fully advised of everything that could be brought to bear upon the subject; and I may say here, as the matter was referred to by the Hon. Chief Justice yesterday, that although, perhaps, the question of boundary did not come up as a square issue at that time, nor in 1850, still the question of boundary must have arisen incidentally when each of these opinions was given, so that the law officers of the Crown at that time were dealing incidentally with the question of boundary, and they could not avoid dealing with it in some way. They say:—"We beg leave to state, in answer to the questions submitted to us, that in our opinion the Crown could not now with justice raise the question of the general validity of the charter; but that, on every legal principle, the Company's territorial ownership of the lands and the rights necessarily incidental thereto (as, for example, the right of excluding from their territory persons acting in violation of their regulations) ought to be deemed to be valid."

They likewise say,—"Nothing could be more unjust, or more opposed to the spirit of our law, than to try this charter as a thing of yesterday, upon principles which might be deemed applicable to it if it had been granted within the last ten or twenty years." In another part of the opinion they say:—"The remaining subject for consideration is the question of the geographical extent of the territory granted by the charter, and whether its boundaries can in any and what manner be ascertained." That is the question they were discussing. "In the case of grants of considerable age, such as the charter, when the words, as is often the case, are indefinite or ambiguous, the rule is that they are construed by usage and enjoyment, including in these latter terms the assertion of ownership by the Company on important public occasions, such as the Treaties of Ryswick and Utrecht, and again in 1750," They refer to these three different periods as points of time, in order to ascertain what ought to be the boundaries allowed to the Hudson's Bay Company in 1857, and show that the enjoyment under that charter, the assertion of rights under that charter, and the claims made by virtue of the charter, must and ought to be taken into consideration when dealing with the question; and the law officers, in giving their opinion, dealt with the subject in that view.

The Treaty of Ryswick I will only refer to very shortly. The Attorney-General, in his argument referred to the forts that had been taken by the French, and to the effect of the Treaty of Ryswick in regard to the possession of these forts. But although the question is somewhat discussed at page 9 of our printed Case, I do not think it necessary that I should elaborate it at all, because in 1857, Chief Justice Draper, acting as agent on behalf of Canada, stated what was in effect, in a very few words, his view of the Treaty of Ryswick, and it was this: "The eighth Article of the Treaty of Ryswick shows that the French at that time set up a claim of right to Hudson's Bay, though that claim was abandoned at the peace of Utrecht, and was never set up afterwards." (Ontario Documents at p. 240.) So that at the peace of Utrecht—and this is nearly the last stage in the argument—any rights that the French might or could have had were abandoned in 1713, and at one bound we get to what was the position of the Government of Great Britain and the Hudson's Bay Company at that time.

It is stated that at a certain time, in 1700, the Company were willing to contract their limits, and the statement is made that because of that, they were precluded at a later date from setting up that they were entitled under the charter to all that the charter could give them. What do they say in 1700—about the earliest date at which they made a claim after the Treaty of Ryswick? They say, "We are willing to contract our limits; but although we are willing to do that, we are entitled of right to the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson." This is like a man who has a suit of ejection, who, in order to avoid the expense and trouble of a law suit, says, "I will be willing to allow you certain bounds, but if you do not accept that, I will insist on getting all my rights, and all that I am entitled to."

There was another statement made at that time to the Lords of Trade and Plantations, in January 1701, when the Hudson's Bay Company again "insist on their undoubted right to the whole Bay and Straits," but are willing to forego their rights to a certain extent, if by that means they can secure a settlement. "But should the French refuse the limits now proposed by the Company, the Company think themselves not bound by this, or any former concessions of the like nature, but must, as they have always done, insist upon their prior and undoubted right to the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson, which the French never yet would strictly dispute, or suffer to be examined into (as knowing the weakness of their claim), though the first step in the said Article of Ryswick directs the doing of it." (Ontario Documents, pp. 124-5.)

In May, 1709, the Company were requested by the Lords of Trade and Plantations to send an account of the encroachments of the French on Her Majesty's dominion in America within the limits of the Company's charter; to which the Company replied, setting forth their right and title, and praying 10 restitution. (Mills, pp. 152-3.)

A further petition was sent by the Hudson's Bay Company to the Queen, 1711. (Ontario Documents, pp. 126-7.)

On February 7, 1712, the Hudson's Bay Company set forth what they desired should be stipulated for them at the ensuing Treaty of Peace. (Ontario Documents, p. 128.)

In this memorandum the Hudson's Bay Company ask "that a line be supposed to pass to the south-westward of Grimington Island, or Cape Perdrix, to the great Lake Miskosinke, alias Mistoverny dividing the same into two parts, (as in the map now delivered), and that the French nor any other employed by them shall come to the north or north-westward of the said lake, or supposed line, by land or water." I believe that the plan now produced is marked as having been prepared in 1709. I refer 20 the Arbitrators to it. There is the Island of Grimington, and they ask that a line be drawn through that lake until it passes south of the 49th parallel; showing that at that time, in 1712, when they were presenting their petition to Queen Anne, that is what they were claiming as their rights at that time. I do not intend to refer to the question of post liminy at all, because the assent of Chief Justice Draper prevents the necessity of our having to discuss that question. Now, Lord Dartmouth's letter after the Treaty of Utrecht, addressed to the Lords of Trade and Plantations, on May 27th, 1713, will be found in Ontario Documents, p. 129. He says:

"MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—The Queen has commanded me to transmit to you the enclosed petition of the Hudson's Bay Company, that you may consider of it and report your opinion what orders may properly be given upon the several particulars mentioned. In the meantime I am to 30 acquaint you that the places and countries therein named, belonging of right to British subjects, Her Majesty did not think fit to receive any Act of Cession from the French King, and has therefore insisted only upon an order from that Court for delivering possession to such persons as should be authorized by Her Majesty to take it; by this means the title of the Company is acknowledged, and they will come into the immediate enjoyment of their property, without further trouble."

Now, the object of that will be seen when we consider that the whole course of these negotiations had been impeded by the French ambassadors claiming that the word "cede" should be used, while the English ambassadors refused to accept it with the word "cede" used at all; they insisted on the word "restore." They said that the territory was being restored to them, claiming that the French never were there, never had a right to be there, and therefore could not cede it, for it was not theirs to 40 cede; but that having taken possession of a part of it in the time of peace, as claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company, the word "restore" was the proper word to use; and a great deal of correspondence took place between the ambassadors in regard to it. Under section 10 of the Treaty of Utrecht, the King of France was "to restore to the Queen of Great Britain, to be possessed in full right forever, the Bay and Straits of Hudson, together with all lands, seas, coasts, rivers, and places situate in the said Bay and Straits, and which belong thereto; no tracts of land or sea being excepted which are at present possessed by the subjects of France." In reference to the discussion just spoken of, Bolingbroke says, in March, 1713, that the truth is so evident, that the Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain at Utrecht always make a distinction between places that should be ceded and those that should be restored. (Bolingbroke's Correspondence, vol. 3, 601.)

of Mr. Mac-
Mahon, Q.C., of Counsel for
the Dominion, before the Arbitrators,

3rd August,

Then we come to the question of the extent of country. Mr. Mills, who prepared this case for the Province of Ontario,* was compelled to admit that all was claimed for England under the Treaty which possibly could be claimed; and that is an admission which my learned friends cannot get over.

10 Now, what was England doing from the very time of the passing of the Treaty, from the very time when the Commissioners were appointed? I will show that she commenced to claim, and that she did claim in 1713, the restitution of these lands to the Company itself; because Lord Dartmouth says that the order was required, so that the Company might be placed in possession; and England went on claiming to the very height of land, and she insisted that France should send her subjects out of that country, or prevent them from building forts or places whereby they could trade in the Hudson's Bay territories. Although it is stated that Commissioners were appointed as provided by the Treaty, it was in some way assumed that the boundary had been settled at the 49th parallel. Everybody seemed to be impressed with the idea that the 49th parallel had been settled by the Treaty of Utrecht. In the United States this was urged. When the States were settling the parallel as to the northern 20 boundary of Louisiana, it was claimed that the 49th parallel was settled at the Treaty of Utrecht, and that the United States, as the proprietors of Louisiana, were entitled to come up to that parallel and the territory of Louisiana. And in this country it was assumed: in a letter that will be found from the late Bishop Strachan to Lord Selkirk, it is stated that the 49th parallel had been settled upon. In some way or other that seemed to be understood, and we find that many of the maps of very early date show that, as will be fully borne out by a reference to the list of the maps in the Ontario Documents. Many of these maps have the 49th parallel upon them as being the bounds between the English and French possessions under the Treaty of Utrecht. There is no doubt it was assumed at that time 30 that that was the parallel; it was insisted upon by the United States, and not denied by Great Britain. The Law Officers of the Crown in Great Britain at that time seemed to have the idea, whether derived from maps or from what source I do not know, but they appeared to have fully believed that the 49th parallel had been settled upon. The reason is, I suppose, because the Hudson's Bay Company always assumed that the height of land was their southern boundary; and Mitchell's map will show that the height of land was about the 49th parallel; and therefore it was taken as if the 49th parallel was about the proper line to be drawn. Now, whether that was the case or not, whether it was ever agreed upon or not, is of very little importance.

The Attorney-General—You admit that it was not, I suppose.

Mr. MacMahon—I admit that it was not. It was never decided upon, and in fact France never intended it. It is stated in Anderson's History that France never desired to settle the boundaries at all under the Treaty of Utrecht; and it was only when she was compelled, after the war of 1759, that 40 any settlement could be got. But it matters very little just now. If the Commissioners will look at the map attached to the Dominion Case, which was furnished at the time of the surrender of Quebec— and that is taken from the map that was sent over by General Amherst to the British Government, furnished to General Halkinard by the Marquis de Vaudreuil—they will find there what France was claiming. She never claimed anything beyond the Red Lake. There never was any pretence, as far as France was concerned, of claiming, as Canada, anything north or west of the Red Lake. That is what the Marquis de Vaudreuil at that time considered was the boundary of Canada upon the north and the west.

(Some conversation took place over the maps, in the course of which Chief Justice Harrison printed out that there were two Red Lakes.)

*By this is meant Mr. Mills' revised Report, published some time previously. The "Case" of Ontario was prepared by the Attorney-General of the Province.

The Arbitration.

Argument
of Mr. Mac-
Mahon, Q. C., of Counsel for the Dominion,
before the Arbitrators,
continued,
3rd August,
1878.

The Attorney-General—The Red Lake referred to by Mr. MacMahon is a little south of Turtle Lake
Mr. MacMahon—It is hardly south; it is more west than south. But for the purposes of my argument it does not matter, because I am addressing myself to that part of the argument of the Attorney-General which lays claim to all that north and west country as belonging to the French, and being part of New France. The map shows that there never was any such claim; and the correspondence which took place with regard to the boundaries shows that after that map was delivered, in 1761, France was claiming, as being part of Louisiana, a large part of the territory that was ceded as a part of Canada—claiming it as being part of the Illinois country. The correspondence shows how anxious the French Government and the French Administration of that day were in regard to acquiring the territory south, or at least retaining the territory south, as part of Louisiana. 10

Mr. Pitt, the Prime Minister of that time, states in an ultimatum which he forwarded to Mr. Stanley at Paris, the following definition of the boundaries of Canada, as set forth by M. de Vaudreuil: “Canada, accordé à la ligne de ses limites tracées par le Marquis de Vaudreuil lui-même, when this Governor-General surrendered, by capitulation, the said Province to the British general, Chevalier Amherst, comprises, on one side, Lakes Huron, Michigan and Superior; and the said line drawn from Lac Poyge, embraces by a tortuous course, the River Ouabache (Wabash) up to its junction with the Ohio, and from there extends the length of this river inclusively until its confluence into the Mississippi.” Then on page 8 of the Supplement will be found what was stated by the Duc de Choiseul, when the map was shown to him by Mr. Stanley. Mr. Stanley's despatch says: “The Duc de Choiseul complained that the bounds of Canada were laid down very unfavourably to France, in the description which your memorial contains, alleging (sic) that there had been disputes between the Marquis de Vaudreuil and the Governor of Louisiana with regard to the limits of their two Provinces, wherein the former, being the more able and the more active, had greatly enlarged his jurisdiction; he added, however, that though many such objections might be made, it had been the intention of the King his master to make the most full and complete cession of Canada, and that he consented in his name to those limits. I then produced the map you sent me, and it was agreed that this Province should remain to Great Britain as it is there delineated.” (Minutes of a Conference at Paris, September 2nd, 1761. Pub. Rec. Off., Vol. 483, France.)

So that was the Province as understood both by the French and English at that time; and according to the claim made at that time, it had not any greater limits or any wider extent. In 1714, the Hudson's Bay Company sent a memorandum to the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations, accompanied by a map in which they claimed that the eastern boundary should be a line running from Grimington's Island through Lake Miscosinke or Mistassanie, and from the said lake by a line run south-westward into 49 degrees north latitude, as by the red line may more particularly appear, and that that latitude be the limit; that the French do not come to the north of it, nor the English to the south of it. [Ontario Documents, pp. 131-2.] In 1719 Commissioners were appointed, and they set forth that “the French since the Treaty of Utrecht had made a settlement at the source of the River Albany; the Commissaries of His Britannic Majesty insist that the French shall quit the said settlement, and that the fort, if there be any such building, shall be given up to the Company of English Merchants trading in Hudson's Bay aforesaid.

“The said Commissaries further demand that the subjects of His Most Christian Majesty shall not build forts or found settlements upon any of the rivers which empty into Hudson's Bay under any pretext whatsoever, and that the stream and the entire navigation of the said rivers shall be left free to the Company of English Merchants trading into Hudson's Bay, and to such Indians as wish to traffic with them." (Ontario Documents, p. 365.)

The Attorney-General stated that it was merely the freedom of the rivers which was required by the English Commissioners at that time. But Lord Dartmouth, in his letter to the Lords of Trade and Plantations, appeared to be anxious in regard to the property that the Hudson's Bay Company had acquired under their charter, and which he wished to be given back to them, in order that they might continue to occupy it.

The Attorney-General—That is not mentioned in the instructions that Lord Dartmouth gave; it was the notion of the Commissioners themselves.

Mr. MacMahon—The Commissioners, I suppose, were instructed.

The Attorney-General—We have their instructions.

Mr. MacMahon—This is the demand they were making. They were insisting that the French should not continue there, and that they should give up all their settlements, and not trade or build forts, and that they should cease to occupy this country altogether. The demand will be found in Ontario Documents, p. 365. Sir Travers Twiss says in regard to that: "By the 10th Article, however, of the Treaty of Utrecht, the French King agreed to restore to the Queen (Anne) of Great Britain, 'to be possessed in full right forever, the Bay and Straits of Hudson, together with all lands, seas, sea coasts, rivers and places situate in the said Bay and Straits, and which belong thereto; no tracts of land or sea being excepted which are at present possessed by the subjects of France.' The only question, therefore, for Commissaries to settle was the limits of the Bay and Straits of Hudson, coastwards, on the side of the French Province of Canada, as all the country drained by streams entering into the Bay and Straits of Hudson were, by the terms of the Treaty, recognized to be part of the possessions of Great Britain.

These are the bounds that Sir Travers Twiss places on the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, saying that all that extent of country to 48° 30', at which the sources of these rivers commence, of right belonged to the Hudson's Bay Company under the Treaty, and that they could claim it, and were claiming it, under the Treaty of Utrecht. Now, speaking of Lake Traverse, he says:—"This last lake would have been the extreme southern limit, in about 45° 40', whence the line would have wound upward to the north-west, pursuing a serpentine course, and resting with its extremity upon the Rocky Mountains, in about the 48th parallel of latitude. Such would have been the boundary line between the French possessions and the Hudson's Bay district; and so we find that in the limits of Canada, assigned by the Marquis de Vaudreuil himself, when he surrendered the Province to Sir J. Amherst, the Red Lake is the apex of the Province of Canada, or the point of departure from which, on the one side, the line is drawn to Lake Superior: on the other, 'follows a serpentine course southward to the River Oubache, or Wabash, and along it to the junction with the Ohio.' This fact was insisted upon by the British Government in their answer to the ultimatum of France, sent in on the 1st of September, 1761, and the map which was presented on that occasion by Mr. Stanley, the British Minister, embodying those limits, was assented to in the French memorial of the 9th of September. (Historical Memorial of the Negotiations of France and England from March 26th to September 20th, 1761, published at Paris by authority; Twiss' Oregon Boundary, pp. 209-211.)

"By the Treaty of Utrecht, the British possessions to the north-west of Canada were acknowledged to extend to the head waters of the rivers emptying themselves into the Bay of Hudson, by the Treaty of Paris they were united to the British possessions on the Atlantic by the cession of Canada and all her dependencies; and France contracted her dominions within the right bank of the Mississippi. That France did not retain any territory, after the Treaty, to the north-west of the sources of the Mississippi will be obvious when it is kept in mind that the sources of the Mississippi are in 47° 35', whilst the sources of the Red River, which flows through Lake Winnipeg, and ultimately finds its way by the Nelson River into the Bay of Hudson, are in Lake Traverse, in about 45° 40'. (Twiss' Oregon, p. 226.)

I have not referred to any of the maps, for the reason stated by Sir Travers Twiss, that it was an impossibility at that time to get any correct maps, few or no surveys having been made.

In 1750—and that date is referred to in the opinion of Sir Richard Bethell and Sir Henry Keating—the Hudson's Bay Company were claiming as their bounds just what they were claiming in 1857. The claim of the Company in 1750 will be found in Mills, 176, 177:—"The line to begin from the Atlantic Ocean on the east side of Grimington's Island, otherwise Cape Perdrix, in the latitude of 58½°, on the Labrador coast, and to be drawn from thence south-westward to the Great Lake Miscosinke, otherwise called Mistoseny, and through the same, dividing that lake into two parts, down to the 49° of north latitude as described in the said map or plan delivered herewith, and from thence to be continued by a meridian line of the said latitude 49°, westward." So that they have been claiming that all along; and, as stated by Sir Richard Bethell and his associates, that is what ought to be taken into consideration in viewing the question.

Argument
of Mr. Mac-
Mahon, Q. C.,

I think I have gone over the whole of the ground as far as regards the treaties, and I have shown that no part of that territory, to the north and the west, ever belonged to France, nor was it claimed by France at the time of the cession of Canada to Great Britain, in 1760. In fact, the French wanted to contract the limits of Canada, and to claim as part of Louisiana the territory up to the line which, in 1760, the Marquis de Vaudreuil had marked out as the limits of Canada; and there was no pretence, no claim of any kind made by France to the northerly and westerly territory, when she could have made the claim, if it was in her power to do so.

The other point is in reference to the Quebec Act.

Sir Francis Hincks—The learned counsel has been speaking for a long time upon the respective claims of the French and English. But it is an important thing to see what the English Government has done with regard to the boundaries of the Province since the whole territory became English. That is what we want to see particularly.

Mr. MacMahon—The Proclamation of 1763 created four separate governments—Quebec, East Florida, West Florida, and Grenada—and provided that all the lands not within the limits of these governments, and not within the limits of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company, should be received for the present under the royal protection and dominion for the use of the Indians.

The Attorney-General—The old Province of Quebec is marked on Devine's map in accordance with the Proclamation.

Sir Francis Hincks—Then the boundaries marked on Devine's map are agreed to as representing that Proclamation?

Mr. MacMahon—Yes. I consider there is no point which turns on the proclamation of 1763; we are both agreed as to the correctness of that. We come now to the Quebec Act of 1774, and that is where the first difficulty occurs, but I think I will be able to show to the Commissioners that there is no difficulty in deciding that question. If we look at the circumstances under which the Act was brought in, and take into consideration the statement, as made by the Attorney-General, of what the object of the Act was, and what the Bill was as originally brought into the House, and how it was amended, we will easily see that the claim of Ontario in regard to the western boundary cannot be supported at all.

Assuming that the claim made by the Province of Ontario is the correct claim, what territory could they possibly acquire by taking the Red Lake—by running through the Red Lake, which is on the boundary there?

Sir Francis Hincks—I do not think you need trouble yourself about the Red Lake; that is not the point; it is the boundary to the south and west of Hudson's Bay; the question of the boundary running to Hudson's Bay.

Mr. MacMahon—I will confine myself to that altogether. If the Commissioners will look at page 77 of Mr. Mills' book, they will find the clause of the Act as originally introduced; and I would draw special attention to it, in order to show what was the design of the Legislature at that time in settling the western boundary of the Province. It reads in this way, "Be it enacted, that all the said territories and islands and countries heretofore a part of the territory of Canada, in North America, extending southward to the banks of the river Ohio, and westward to the banks of the Mississippi." Well 10 now, the House of Commons, or the Committee of the House of Commons, at that time understood that if the description of the Act read in that way, when once the river Ohio was reached the use of the word "westward" would make it on a due west course to the river Mississippi.

Sir Francis Hincks—I think you do not appreciate our difficulty. You are still at the westerly boundary. It is the northern boundary we want to get at.

Mr. MacMahon—You are not troubled about the westerly boundary?

Sir Francis Hincks—Not so much as the northerly. Whatever the westerly boundary line may be there is no doubt that it runs northerly until it reaches the southerly boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company. We want to know what the southerly boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company is.

Mr. MacMahon—In 1703, 1750, and 1857, the Hudson's Bay Company were claiming that the 20 height of land was the southern boundary of their territory. They always claimed that.

Sir Francis Hincks—What you have got to deal with is whether any Acts of Parliament, proclamations, or commissions to Governors, established other boundaries. You are aware of the points in that branch of the case. Some of the commissions, for instance, expressly say "to the shore of the Hudson's Bay."

Mr. MacMahon—Then dealing with the question of the commissions. First we have to look at the Constitutional Act of 1791, because it is asserted that the Proclamation of 1791 enlarged the boundaries of what was previously the Province of Quebec. The Act of 1791 does not itself give boundaries but the Proclamation follows and gives boundaries. My learned friend says it does not matter whether the boundaries were extended by the commissions into the Hudson's Bay Territory or not; that that 50 is not a question for the consideration of the Arbitrators; but I say that it is. The Hudson's Bay Company had a government of their own under the charter as it existed, and the King could not, of his own motion, take from them the proprietary government, that which had been granted to them by the charter, unless they had forfeited the charter in some way.

Chief Justice Harrison—That is assuming that the charter gives them definite boundaries.

Mr. MacMahon—What took place by the acquisition of Rupert's Land, by the Rupert's Land Act, must define the boundaries as far as Great Britain and as far as the Hudson's Bay Company are concerned; and when we come to look at what was being stipulated for by the Hudson's Bay Company under that Act, and the surrender made in consequence of the Act, we shall find exactly what the British Govern- ment were doing and assenting to only ten years ago.

Chief Justice Harrison—What are the boundaries in the Proclamation under the Act of 1791?

Mr. MacMahon—The boundaries under that Act have received judicial interpretation.

Chief Justice Harrison—We want to give them an interpretation.

Mr. MacMahon—The Proclamation will be found in Ontario Documents, 27; and I may say here that the whole trouble results from the use of one word, and it is upon that the Province of Ontario are building their right to go to the west and north of what was the Province of Quebec. The last word in the first clause of the proclamation is "Canada," when it should have been "Quebec." It is altogether in relation to that word; and before we know anything about what was comprised in Canada we have to ascertain what was comprised in the limits of Quebec; that is, if the Commissioners think it proper that I should discuss what was proposed in the Act of 1774. That is what I was doing when Sir Francis spoke of the boundaries under the Acts of the Government as by proclamations, commissions, etc. I considered it necessary to argue that point under the Act of 1774, in order to show that the use of that word in the Proclamation of 1791 was a mistake.

Sir Francis Hincks—Refer to that, please.

Mr. MacMahon—I say that the Act of 1791, in all its provisions, is merely for the purpose of dividing the Province of Quebec, and that the use of the word Canada in the Proclamation was simply a mistake. The commission to Lord Dorchester, in 1791, will be found on page 48, Ontario Documents; that is the first commission issued after the Act; it issued certainly before the Proclamation. But the commission that was issued in 1796 speaks of the Province of Quebec; it does not speak of Canada at all. The third paragraph of Lord Dorchester's commission is this:—"And whereas, we have thought fit by our Order made in our Privy Council on the nineteenth day of August, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, to divide our said Province of Quebec into two separate provinces, to be called the Province of Upper Canada and the Province of Lower Canada, by a line to commence at a stone boundary on the north bank of the Lake St. Francis, at the cove west of the Point au Baudet, in the limit between the Township of Lancaster and the Seigneurie of New Longueuil, running along the said limit in the direction of north thirty-four degrees west to the westernmost angle of the said Seigneurie of New Longueuil; thence along the north-western boundary of the Seigneurie of Vaudreuil, running north twenty-five degrees east, until it strikes the Ottawa River, to ascend the said River into the Lake Tommiscanning, and from the head of the said lake by a line drawn due north until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay; the Province of Upper Canada to comprehend all such lands, territories 20 and islands lying to the westward of the said line of division, as were part of our said Province of Quebec, and the Province of Lower Canada to comprehend all such lands, territories and islands lying to the eastward of the said line of division, as were part of our said Province of Quebec.

Now, if we are to consider the Quebec Act and the Commissions under it, it is necessary to understand what was commissioned in the Province of Quebec under that Act; and it was for that purpose I was referring the Commissioners to what took place on the introduction of the Act in 1774.

Sir Francis Hincks—That is very important.

Mr. MacMahon—The Quebec Bill, as introduced into the House of Lords, contained these words—"Be it enacted, that all the said territories, islands and countries heretofore a part of the territory of Canada, in North America, extending southward to the banks of the River Ohio, and westward to the 30 banks of the Mississippi," etc. I stated that that would mean, from the point at which the line struck the Ohio, a due west course until it reached the Mississippi. What do we find was done in regard to that? The Legislature felt that that was the interpretation which would be put on these words, and they made an amendment. The amendment will be found in Cavendish's debates on the Act. They made this amendment, "Until it strike the River Ohio, westward to the banks of the Mississippi." But they inserted after the word Ohio, "And along the banks of the said river," showing that they intended that the bank should be followed. And if the Commissioners read the whole of that Act, they will see that in every instance the phrase "Along the bank of the river" is used.

The Attorney-General—The Act only professes to describe the south line.

Mr. MacMahon—But when it comes to the junction of the Mississippi and Ohio it describes it in 40 another way, showing that the eastern bank of the Mississippi was not intended by the Legislature at that time to be the eastern boundary of the Province of Quebec. If they had intended that, an amendment would have been made, as was made in regard to the Ohio; they would have put "northerly, along the bank of the Mississippi," just as they did "westerly along the bank of the Ohio." But when it came to the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi, they said "northward;" and it is alleged that because they used that word "northward," it must mean northerly along the banks of the Mississippi River, because a commission was issued to one of the Governors containing in it words to that effect. But the commission of 1796 describes what was intended to be contained as the territorial jurisdiction of the Governors and contains no such words.

In looking at the Reinhard case, it will be found that the whole of that question was very elaborately argued.

Sir Francis Hincks—Yes, we understand the whole of that question. You will see that there is a line drawn in this map of Devine's, professing to be the boundary according to the Commission to Lord Elgin.

The Attorney-General—That is the last commission. The other commissions were substantially in the same terms. One set of commissions says "shore," and the other set says "boundary line" of Hudson's Bay.

Sir Francis Hincks—The Proclamation of 1791 says, "until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay." Now, what is the boundary line of Hudson's Bay?

Chief Justice Harrison—Can you strike the boundary line of Hudson's Bay without going to the shore?

Mr. MacMahon—It is not the Bay which is meant, it is the territory.

Chief Justice Harrison—That is the point we want you to address yourself to. It is a very important point.

Mr. MacMahon—The Commission to Lord Dorechester in 1791 says, "until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay." [Ontario Docts., 48.]

Sir Edward Thornton—The Proclamation of 1791 follows that very commission. The wording is the same—"the boundary line of Hudson's Bay."

20 Mr. MacMahon—The boundary line of Hudson's Bay cannot be anything but the boundary line of the territory, because the King had no authority, no right, under a Proclamation, to enter upon a territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company for the purpose of governing.

Chief Justice Harrison—Of course that is all based upon the assumption that it had been granted. All these proclamations throw light upon the question of whether it had been granted or not.

Mr. MacMahon—They show afterwards how the territory was dealt with, and I will come to that question now.

Sir Francis Hincks—They repeat the expression in 1796, five years later—"the boundary line of Hudson's Bay."

Chief Justice Harrison—All the commissions follow that, down to 1838.

30 Mr. Hodgins—And then, from that down to Lord Elgin's, the language is "strikes the shore."

Mr. MacMahon—Between those dates they understood that there was a difference between the shore and the boundary line.

Sir Francis Hincks—You will observe that the commissions still use the words "due north." In the old commissions the language is "due north to the boundary line of Hudson's Bay;" but afterwards the commissions say—still following the expression "due north"—"expressly to the shore of Hudson's Bay," but which rather conveys the idea that they interpreted the boundary line of Hudson's Bay and the shore of Hudson's Bay to be the same thing.

Sir Edward Thornton—They improved the English a little in that.

40 Mr. MacMahon—The Proclamation is void to a certain extent; it has gone too far. I will show the way in which the Government have dealt with the Hudson's Bay Company in regard to this very territory. I say that where there is a proprietary Government, such as the Hudson's Bay Company was admitted to be—and the British Government have always dealt with the Company as such—neither the Proclamation nor the Act of Parliament could take away the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company in any way; the only way to do so, if the Company had forfeited their charter, would be to bring them into court; and that is the course which in 1859 the law officers of the Crown advised should be pursued if the Company had committed any acts by which their charter ought to be forfeited or abridged in any way. In the case of Campbell v. Hall, in 1 Cowper, 204, cited in Forsyth's Constitutional Law, 401, it is laid down by Lord Mansfield that there cannot exist any power in the King exclusive of Parliament.

Chief Justice Harrison—That depends entirely upon the territory where the power is exercised; if there is no Parliament, there is no power to limit the King's authority. There was no Parliament in the Hudson's Bay territory.

Mr. MacMahon—I cite also the case of Payne against Lord Baltimore, 1 Vesey, 444. That and the case of Campbell and Hall, together with a case in 12 Peters, the State of Rhode Island against the State of Massachusetts, have decided that where there is a proprietary Government existing there is no authority, unless by proceedings under a sci. fu., to take away the territory or to assume any government over it; so that after the grant was made, and confirmed by all these Acts of Parliament, the King had no authority or power to take away the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company that existed.

Chief Justice Harrison—Of course that is assuming one of the things which has been argued before as to the rights, if any, of the Hudson's Bay Company, south of Hudson's Bay, and to what extent north. That is one of the points in controversy. All these documents throw light upon it.

Mr. MacMahon—My learned friends do not claim that they are entitled to any land north of the height of land.

The Attorney-General—I thought I had occupied a good deal of time in showing that I was claiming that.

Chief Justice Harrison—I understood the Attorney-General to claim to the Arctic Ocean.

Mr. MacMahon—I did not know that he meant that.

Sir Francis Hincks—Do I understand that you have no difficulty about the northern boundary?

Mr. MacMahon—The northern boundary is of no great consequence: the trouble is with the western boundary. Then came the Act of Union in 1840, and we will see what was the boundary under that. The first commission to Lord Sydenham is dated August 29, 1840. By that commission, after the line reaches Lake Temiscaming, it is "due north from the head of the same lake until it reaches the shore of Hudson's Bay, and being bounded on the south, beginning at the said stone boundary between Lancaister and Longueuil, by the Lake Saint Francis, the River Saint Lawrence, the Lake of the Thousand Islands, Lake Ontario, the River Niagara, which falls into Lake Erie, and along the middle of that lake; on the west by the Channel of Detroit, Lake Saint Clair, up the River Saint Clair, Lake Huron, the west shore of Drummond Island, that of Saint Joseph and Sugar Island; thence into Lake Superior."

I think you stop there; it just takes you where the due north line of 1774 would strike, and shows that Upper Canada is bounded by that northern line running from the junction of the Ohio River to that point in Lake Superior which would be intersected.

The Attorney-General—The commission does not say that.

Mr. MacMahon—No, but that is declared to be the whole extent of Canada in 1840, and all that was claimed for it by the British Government.

Chief Justice Harrison—Yet that same commission draws a dividing line between the two parts of Canada, Upper and Lower—a line running due north from Lake Temiscaming to the shore of Hudson's Bay.

Mr. MacMahon—Yes, that is a description in that commission—that wrong reading appears to have got into it in some way or other—but no matter what the commission was, the King had no right to draw that line as against the Hudson's Bay Company, if we satisfy you that the Hudson's Bay Company's territory extended south of Hudson Bay to the height of land. The commission that was issued to Lord Elgin in 1846 is somewhat similar: "Thence into Lake Superior." Lord Elgin left in 1852 or 1853; showing that up to that time the jurisdiction of the Governors-General of Canada ended on the shores of Lake Superior, and must have ended just about at the point where the due north line strikes. The Province of Canada afterwards bought from the Indians the territory south of the height of land. I have argued the question about as fully as I can, in regard to the commissions, and in regard to the extent of territory under the jurisdiction of the Governors in 1840, and down to the last commission issued to Lord Elgin, in that year, and up to the time he left in 1852 or 1853. The British Government must have been aware at that time where a line drawn from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers would strike in Lake Superior, and no doubt they intended Upper Canada to be included within that line.

We come now to Confederation. The 146th section of the British North America Act is as follows:

Alter or about that time the Agents of the Government of Canada went to England and made representations in regard to the expenditure of some $20,000 which the Government of Canada thought proper to expend on roads in the territory of Hudson's Bay. In the letter that was addressed to the British Government—by Sir Stafford Northcote, I think, who was then the Governor of the Company—he complained, on behalf of the Company, of trespasses having been committed by the Canadian authorities; and although the Canadian authorities denied that they were committing any trespass whatever in going to the Red River country, still they stated that the people there were in a starving condition, and that as an act of humanity alone the Government was prompted to make this expenditure, so as to give the people employment. That correspondence shows conclusively what was being asserted on the one hand by the Canadian authorities, and being denied by the Hudson's Bay Company on the other—denied with all the force which could be given to a denial. The result was that the British Government, by whom this charter to the Hudson's Bay Company was granted, or at least confirmed—because they did confirm it, in effect, if not in express words, by stating in the numerous Acts of Parliament from 6 Anne to 48 George the Third, c. 138, that all the rights and privileges of the Hudson's Bay Company should be respected—the result was that the British Government took legislative action. What do we find them doing? We find that an Act, known as the Rupert's Land Act, was passed in 1868, after the presentation of an address from the Senate and House of Commons of Canada on Dec. 17, 1866 (Ontario Docts., p. 404-7). What was the agreement between the parties to this transaction? It is necessary to understand what was being surrendered, because the fact of the surrender and the acceptance of that surrender by Her Majesty, was a confirmation of everything that the Hudson's Bay Company had been claiming under their charter; and that is a point which I am sure the Arbitrators will not lose sight of in dealing with this question. The surrender itself, the Act of Parliament itself, the agreement which was come to, not only between the British Government and the Hudson's Bay Company, but between the Canadian authorities,—these all prove the same thing. Under paragraph No. 5 of the Hudson's Bay Company's Deed of Surrender, "the Company may, within fifty years after the surrender, claim in any township or district within the fertile belt, in which land is set out for settlement, grants of land not exceeding one-twentieth part of the land so set out," etc. (6) "For the purpose of the last Article the fertile belt is to be bounded as follows: on the south by the United States boundary; on the west by the Rocky mountains; on the north by the northern branch of the Saskatchewan; on the east by Lake Winnipeg, the Lake of the Woods and the waters connecting them." Now, here are the boundaries of the fertile belt, and there can be no mistaking them. Under the second section of the Rupert's Land Act, it is declared that, for the purpose of this Act, the term "Rupert's Land" should include the whole of the lands and territories held, or claimed to be held by the said Governor and Company. So that all that land which in 1719 and 1850 the Company were claiming, the British Government admitted that they had a right to; and the Dominion accepted the surrender of all that.

Chief Justice Harrison—Of course the British Government, when accepting the surrender, were willing to accept a surrender, not only of all that the Company had, but of all that they claimed to have.

Mr. MacMahon—The Company claimed the fertile belt, and were allowed to participate afterwards in its lands as their own; they were allowed to hold lands there.

Mr. Hodgins—The same as squatters on Crown lands.

Mr. MacMahon—They claimed it as lords of the soil, as entitled to the domain. The Commissioners will see from the map of 1850 what they were claiming. They were claiming down to the 49th parallel, and when they came to the height of land again they went north, showing that they were claiming all that extent of territory to the height of land at the very last moment. Ontario, as a part of the Dominion, knew of all that was going on; knew that the Dominion was entering into these negotiations; but she sat by, and never said a word—never said, "No matter what you do, we are going to claim this land." They said nothing, but agreed that all this should be surrendered. It was surrendered, and paid for by a million and a-half of the Dominion's money, and the surrender was accepted by the Dominion and British authorities as being a part of what was granted to the Hudson's Bay Company. It does not matter whether the Company had a right to it or not—they were claiming it, and claiming to be paid for it; and there is where I say that the Province of Ontario can have no right now to claim any portion of that land that was surrendered—to claim it as being part of the Province. If she had a right to claim it, then was the time to intervene, and say, "This is part of our Province, and if you accept the title to that land you do so at your peril." I need not quote the numerous authorities in support of the proposition as to the Province now being excluded.

The Attorney-General—I should like very much to see them, if there are any.

Mr. MacMahon—I cite tory's Equity, sec. 1,546. "In a late case before the House of Lords, on appeal from the Court of Session in Scotland, the Lord Chancellor discusses this question of estoppel in fact, or acquiescence in adversary's claim of right, somewhat in detail. He is reported thus: 'It is a universal law that if a man, either by words or by conduct, has intimated that he consents to an act which has been done, and that he will offer no opposition to it, although it could not have been lawfully done without his consent, and he thereby induces others to do that from which they otherwise might have abstained, he cannot question the legality of the act he had so sanctioned, to the prejudices of those who have so given faith to his words, or to the fair inference to be drawn from his conduct;' and again: 'If a party has an interest to prevent an act being done, and acquiesces in it, so as to induce a reasonable belief that he consents to it, and the position of others is altered by their giving credit to his sincerity, he has no more right to challenge the act, to their prejudice, than he would have, had it been done by his previous license.'"

Chief Justice Harrison—That is quite clear as between individuals; can you show us that that is part of the law of nations?

Mr. MacMahon—I do not think that the Province can possibly stand in a better position than an individual.

Chief Justice Harrison—One nation is not bound by what two other nations do, unless the third nation is a party to what is going on

Mr. MacMahon—Ontario is a part of the Dominion.

Chief Justice Harrison—It was no party to these negotiations.

Mr. MacMahon—No.

Chief Justice Harrison—Then the arrangement was something that took place between other parties that were strangers to the Province.

Mr. MacMahon—The Province is part of the Dominion; and, knowing that the Dominion was acquiring rights from the Hudson's Bay Company, if the Province had any claim to that territory they should have made the claim then, when the matter was about being settled. The instructions subsequently (1871) given to the Commissioner on behalf of the Dominion, when it was proposed that the boundaries should be settled, will be found on page 20 of the Dominion Case, from which I will read an extract:

"1. The boundary in question is clearly identical with the limits of the Province of Quebec according to the 14th Geo. III., ch. 83, known as the 'Quebec Act,' and is described in the said Act as follows, that is to say: Having set forth the westerly position of the southern boundary of the Province as extending along the River Ohio 'westward to the banks of the Mississippi,' the description continues from thence (i.e., the junction of the two rivers) 'and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay.'" Now, what the territory of the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to the Hudson's Bay was has been fully set forth by them; and, although on the side of the Province of Quebec the line of the Province of Quebec may have struck the shore of Hudson's Bay, still that has nothing to do with this western limit. It can have nothing to do with that, because on the western limit there is no line at all named; and Ontario may get as much from the Province of Quebec, on the easterly side, as they can.

My learned friend Mr. Monk will follow me; and if there is anything that strikes me after my learned friend the Attorney-General has replied, perhaps the Arbitrators will allow me a few words.

ARGUMENT OF MR. MONK.

Mr. E. C. Monk, of the Quebec Bar, followed, on behalf of the Dominion.—I have great difficulty in adding anything to the able and exhaustive argument of my friend and colleague, Mr. MacMahon. I shall limit myself as briefly as possible to a reference to some of the portions of my learned adversary's case upon certain points which, to say the least, are well open to controversy. I find on the third page of his case—and I know that he laid great stress upon it in addressing the Commissioners—a letter written by Sir George E. Cartier and Mr. Meloungall to Sir F. Rogers. I find on the fifth page of the Case the following reference to this letter:—"Ontario claims that the official views of the Government of the Dominion, as thus expressed, should, prima facie, be carried out as between the Dominion and the Province, unless the Dominion proves that the assertions so made by its Ministers were false or mistaken, and that the claim to which they led was unfounded." The second assertion in this letter is that the charter of the Hudson's Bay Company "expressly excluded all lands, etc., then possessed by the subjects of any other Christian prince or state;" and the next paragraph states that "by the treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye (1632) the King of England resigned to the King of France the sovereignty of Acadia, New France and Canada, generally, and without limits." That, I submit, is unfounded. The Treaty of Ryswick is quite different in its terms. The word "resign," or "give up," is not a correct translation for the French version of it as I find it in the Treaty of St. Germain at page 11 of the Ontario Documents. The French words inserted between brackets there are "rendre" and "restituer"—to give back or restore—implying unquestionably a previous possession on the part of France of these territories. New France, Acadia and Canada could not have included Hudson's Bay. The Hudson's Bay territories were never in the possession of France at that time, and, as Mr. MacMahon has established, were not even known or discovered in 1632 by the French.

The Attorney-General also laid particular stress on the memoir of M. De Callières, and I may therefore be allowed to refer the Commissioners to a few notes that I have made on the subject. The first French voyage alluded to by Mr. Mills is that of Attorney-General Bourlon, and Mr. Mills makes the statement upon the authority of a memoir from Sieur De Callières to the Marquis De Seignelay and another memoir from the Marquis De Denonville. This memoir says that in 1656 Jean Bourdon, the Attorney-General of Quebec, explored the entire coast of Labrador and entered Hudson's Bay; and this, M. De Callières says, is proved by an extract from the ancient register of the Council of New France of 1656. Jean Bourdon was a man thoroughly well known in the Province—better known, no doubt, in that part of the country than would be the Attorney-General of the Province to-day—and was a man with whom the Jesuits were on intimate terms, and who is mentioned on almost every page of the Relations written at that time. Yet, notwithstanding these facts, no mention whatever is made in the Relations des Jésuites—and I have read them over with care—no mention whatever is made of Jean Bourdon's voyage to Hudson's Bay. At page 9 of the Relations for 1658, mention is made of an attempted journey which Bourdon made with the intention of reaching Hudson's Bay. Under date of August 11th, we find an entry in which the Father Jesuit, who is reported as keeping the journal at that time, says that the barque of M. Bourdon returned. We have in the Relations no particular date of Bourdon's starting on this voyage; but in the Journal des Jésuites, pages 209-218, the Commissioners will find that he left in the middle of May in the same year. He returned on August 11th; and, as is not controverted, it would have been perfectly impossible for him to have made the voyage to Hudson's Bay in so short a time. But the learned counsel stated that there was no reason why this particular voyage should have been the one mentioned by De Callières. The voyage to which I refer was made in 1657; the extract from the register to which De Callières refers is dated 1656; clearly indicating that what De Callières took as evidence of a voyage having been made was simply an order, an instruction given by the Council to Sieur Bourdon to attempt this voyage. There can be no doubt whatever that the Relations des Jésuites, whatever may have been said of them since, were the only correct record which was kept of the early doings of the colony, and there can be no doubt whatever that had Sieur Bourdon in 1656, as is claimed, made a voyage of this kind, a record of it would have been kept, as I propose to show in a moment. The next voyage to which De Callières refers in his memoir is that of Father Dablon, a Jesuit, who in 1661, as Mr. Mills states in his Report, was ordered by Sieur D'Argenson, Governor of Canada, to proceed to the country about Hudson's Bay. It is stated that Dablon went there with Sieur De Vallière, and that the Indians who came back with them to Quebec declared that they had never seen any Europeans there before. Mr. Mills, in a note on the next page, 127, explains the Relations des Jésuites not mentioning Bourdon's voyage by the assertion that they were naturally anxious that members of their own society should be the pioneers in discovery, and that therefore many important discoveries were never brought to light in their Relations because they were not made by the Jesuits. Of course an argument of this kind cannot apply to the voyage of Dablon, as he was a Jesuit, a man in whom the interests of the society were centred; and if a voyage had been made by him, no doubt a great deal of prominence would have been given to it. On the contrary, in the third volume of the Jesuit Relations, 1662, we find this Jesuit, Father Dablon, describing an unsuccessful voyage that he made. There can be no doubt that he attempted a voyage. A portion of this relation is written by himself, and he calls it "Journal du Premier Voyage Fait Vers la Mer du Nord." This first portion of it is most important and conclusive, as showing that De Callières in his memoir of M. De Seignelay, twenty-one years afterwards, must have been speaking from hearsay and without any authentic documents on which to base his assertions. Dablon says that the highest point which he did reach was Nekauba, a hundred leagues from Tadousac, and that subsequently he returned; and this is from a report of this journey written by himself. I noticed that the Attorney-General attempted to raise a doubt as to the identity of the Dablon in De Callières' memoir with the Dablon of the Relations des Jésuites. I have examined with care, and I find that the end of one of the volumes a complete list of all the Jesuits, pioneers both of the faith and in the way of discovery, and I find that there is only one Dablon mentioned. Another inaccuracy of this memoir is as to the trip of Duquet, under an order said to have been given by Sieur D'Argenson. There can be no doubt that at the time this pretended order was given D'Argenson had left Canada. The Attorney-General must admit now, although he attaches so much importance to this memoir, that it is inaccurate in most important particulars; first as to the voyage of Bourdon, which is shown never to have taken place at all; next as to the voyage of Dablon, which is shown also not to have taken place; then as to the trip of Duquet, under the special instructions of a superior who could not have given them since he had left the country two years before.

My learned friend has attached a great deal of importance, apparently, to the fact that in 1627 a Charter had been granted by Louis XIII. to a number of adventurers sent to discover new lands to the north of the River St. Lawrence. But my learned friends have omitted to verify the fact that in this Charter to the French Company, which the Commissioners will find in the first volume of Edits and Ordonnances, at page 6, the only portions of land granted to the French Company are the lands or portions of lands which had already been occupied by the Kings of France, and the object of the Charter was simply to give them an exclusive right of trade therein. The clause of the Charter reads as follows:—"Le fort et habitation de Quebec, avec tout les pays de la Nouvelle France dite Canada, tante le long des Côtes depuis la Floride que les predecesseurs Rois da Sa Majesté ont fait habiter en rangeant les Côtes de la Mer jusqu'au Cercle Artique pour latitude, et de longitude depuis l'Ile de Terre-neuve tirant à l'ouest au Grand Lac dit la Mer douce et au delà que de dans les terres, et le long des Rivières qui y passent et se declargent dans le fleuve dit St. Laurent, ou autrement la grande Rivière du Canada, et dans tons les autres fleuves qui se portent à la mer;" thereby clearly indicating that the Charter did not go further than the land occupied by the predecesors of Louis XIV. In the case for the Province it is stated at page 3, "La Nouvelle France was then understood to include the whole region of Hudson's Bay, as the maps and histories of the time, English 10 and French, abundantly prove." This is a broad assertion, which is not supported by the early discoverers nor by the historians of that time. Charlevoix described New France as being an exceedingly limited territory. (Reads extract from Charlevoix, in French.) I find also in l'Escharbot, a description which shows that at that time the whole territory known as New France extended but a few miles on each side of the St. Lawrence; and Charlevoix regrets it, and says at that time the giving up of this territory did not amount to much, as New France was circumscribed by very narrow limits on either side of the St. Lawrence. My learned friends say that the right of the French to places in Hudson's Bay was acknowledged by the Treaty of Ryswick. The Commissioners will see, on reference to this Treaty of Ryswick, that a special provision was made, quite distinct from the provision in the Seventh Article of the Treaty. By Article Eight it was specially provided that Commissioners should be appointed, with 20 full powers to settle the limits of the territories of the conflicting nations around Hudson's Bay. The fact of these Commissioners never having met to settle the limits, renders, I respectfully submit, the provisions of the Treaty, so far as the territories around Hudson's Bay are concerned, a dead letter.

Mr. Monk, of Counsel for the Dominion,
before the
Arbitrators,
3rd August,
1878.

Having shown that Sir George E. Cartier and Mr. McDougall were mistaken in most important points, I think that the pretension of my learned friends, that the Dominion should be bound by this letter of its Ministers, is unfounded.

On referring to a map attached to the report made by Mr. Ramsay to the [Government] of Canada some time ago, I find a line which corresponds with the one the Chief Justice referred to at the time, where the Red Lake is shown immediately to the north-west of Lake Superior, at the height of land. I understand that the Commissioners have much less difficulty about the western boundary than 30 the other.

Chief Justice Harrison—It is the northern boundary that we want now to ascertain.

Mr. Monk—My learned friend seemed to attach considerable importance to the Constitutional Act of 1791. The Commissioners were alluding, a few minutes ago, to the fact that in the Proclamation which followed the Constitutional Act (Ontario Documents, 27) the words "until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay" are to be found. Now, this Proclamation was simply declaring when the Constitutional Act would come in force; so that if the Commissioners would take notice of the Constitutional Act itself, which is in Ontario Documents, page 4, they will perceive a frequent recurrence of the words, "Government of the Province of Quebec." It is to be found in the second line of the second paragraph, and is continually mentioned, thereby indicating that by that Constitutional 40 Act there was no intention whatever to enlarge, or vary in any manner, the old limits of the Province of Quebec, as stated in the Quebec Act of 1774. I may be allowed to refer to the remarks of Chief Justice Sewell in De Reinhold's Case, which do not apply to the western boundary, but show that no increase of the limits of the Province of Quebec could have taken place. I am citing from the minutes taken in shorthand under the sanction of the court, printed in a book which I obtained from the parliamentary library, in which the point specially set forth by Mr. Stuart, then representing the prisoner is fully reported.

The case came up specially on two or three occasions. It came up on a motion for arrest of judgment after the verdict had been rendered. On this question as to whether the Constitutional Act of 1791, owing to the use of this word "Canada," might directly or indirectly be accepted as showing what was the Province of Quebec, Chief Justice Sewell was concurred with by Mr. Justice Bowen and Mr. Justice Perrault. I will read from his decision: Chief Justice Sewell—"The Court are most distinctly of opinion, on referring both to the Act of 1791 and that of 1774, that the argument on the defence must fail. What was the object of each Act? Amongst others, that of 1774 was to enlarge the Province of Quebec, which had been created in 1763. That of 1791 was to separate or divide the Province of Quebec into two Provinces, to be denominated Upper and Lower Canada, and make each respectively independent of the other by giving a Legislature to each respectively, but still retaining between or within the two Provinces, the same extent of country, the same space as the one Province contained." What is the Act? What is its object, its avowed object? To repeal certain parts of the Act of 1774; and what is the part repealed? It is that part of it which gives authority to the Council of the Province of Quebec. And what is the reason assigned for so doing? Why, that His Majesty had signified it to be his royal will and pleasure to divide his Province of Quebec. To assert that he intended 10 by this that the limits of the Province should be extended by the separation, appears to me repugnant to the plainest principles of common sense, and therefore I cannot assent to it. The short history of the Act of 1791 is briefly this: The King signifies to Parliament his royal intention of dividing his Province of Quebec, and he calls on the Legislature to provide for this alteration by granting an Act adapted to the change. The Legislature pass an Act providing for the due government of the two Provinces, and under the authority of this Act, and the Royal Proclamation, the Province of Quebec was accordingly divided, the Royal Proclamation being an exercise of sovereign authority. His Majesty in that Act, by and with the consent of his Privy Council, declared what shall be the line of separation between 20 Upper and Lower Canada, and how much of the former Province of Quebec shall belong to the one, and how much to the other. The object of the Act and the object of the Royal Proclamation are so clearly expressed that we cannot for a moment doubt upon the subject. What says the Act? "His Majesty having been pleased to signify his royal will and pleasure to separate and divide the Province of Quebec." What says the Proclamation? Why, the very same words. To divide the Province of Quebec, not to add to it, any more than to take away from it. Therefore Upper Canada, in the purview, could include only that part of the Province so divided as was not contained in Lower Canada but it could not extend beyond those limits which constituted the Province of Quebec, otherwise it would certainly have been an Act to enlarge rather than an Act to divide.

Mr. Monk, of Council for the Dominion, before the Arbitrators,
3rd August,

Sir Francis Hincks—Unfortunately that does not help us one bit, because of the indefinite character of the boundary of Hudson's Bay. We want to know the southern boundary of Hudson's Bay. The Act of 1791 does define it to a certain extent, because it refers to a line drawn due north to a 30 certain point, to the boundary of Hudson's Bay; and then afterwards the commissions come in to assist us, and they say distinctly, "to the shore of Hudson's Bay." If the Act had said, "the boundary line of the territory of Hudson's Bay," it would have been clear; but it says, "the boundary line of Hudson's Bay." This is the difficulty with which we have to deal.

Chief Justice Harrison—From that it may be fairly argued that it was understood at that time that the south shore of Hudson's Bay was the southern limit of the Hudson's Bay Company.

Sir Francis Hincks—The Attorney-General has brought forward his argument very strongly on that point, and I do not think you have answered him by the Act of 1774, because that simply gave an indefinite boundary.

Mr. Monk—If our contention be correct, that it was not intended by the Constitutional Act to 40 extend, in any manner, the limits of the Province of Quebec, we have to examine the Quebec Act of 1774, however indefinite it may be, to see what were considered the southern boundaries of Hudson's Bay at that time. The Quebec Act of 1774, in defining the northern boundary of the extended Province of Quebec, says "northward"—not to Hudson's Bay, as the Proclamation does, but—"to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchant Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay."

Chief Justice Harrison—That, of course, was uncertain at that time. There was no natural boundary referred to there. That has been the dispute all along, and it continued shifting from time to time.

Mr. MacMahon—And that is what is to be decided by the Commissioners now.

Mr. Monk—This would bring us back to the Proclamation of 1763, constituting the four Provinces in the British dominions, and specifying thus—“And we do further declare it to be our royal will and pleasure for the present, as aforesaid, to receive under our sovereignty, dominion and protection, for the use of the said Indians, all the lands and territories not included within the limits of our said three new governments, or within the limits of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company,” not specifying them again, but clearly indicating, by inference, that the territory to the north of the old Province of Quebec up to the limit, to that northern boundary, had been granted to the Hudson's Bay Company, as it was occupied, or supposed to be occupied, by them. I would refer the Commissioners to the tenth article of the Treaty of Utrecht, page 16, Ontario Documents, as follows:—“The said Most Christian King shall restore to the kingdom and Queen of Great Britain, to be possessed in full right forever, the Bay and Straights of Hudson, together with all lands, seas, sea-coasts, rivers and places situate in the said bay and straits, and which belong thereto, no tract of land or of sea being excepted which are at present possessed by the subjects of France.” At that time there were some forts occupied by the French just at the other side of the northern boundary, the height of land. The Eleventh Article of the Treaty provides that “the Most Christian King shall take care that satisfaction be given, according to the rule of justice and equity, to the English Company trading to the Bay of Hudson, for all damages and spoil done to their colonies, ships, persons, and goods by the hostile incursions and depredations of the French.” On reference to this map of Devine's, the Commissioners will see that at that time there were French posts just at the other side of the height of land. For instance, there was one on the south-west corner of Lake Mistassinnie, another just at the other side of the height of land, just above Lake Temisaming, another at the source of Moose River, and another south-east of Lake Joseph, a little above Lake Superior. The stipulation regarding the damages which were to be paid to the Hudson's Bay Company, and the restitution of the forts, constitute as far as we can judge, an acknowledgment of their rights to that portion of the country. The real question, as I understand it, is to ascertain what was understood by the Hudson's Bay Company as their southern boundary, by the authority that fixed that of Upper Canada. Subsequent to this Treaty of Utrecht, in 1711, commissioners were appointed; and, although the first commissioners appointed did not come to any conclusion, owing to the fact of their powers, it would seem, not being sufficiently extensive, other commissioners were appointed, and the Hudson's Bay Company were ordered by the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations to send in their claim as they understood it. The Hudson's Bay Company did send in their claim, and in 1719 instructions were given to Commissioner Bladen regarding the limits of the territory in question, based on the claim of the Hudson's Bay Company; and Commissioner Bladen received certain instructions as to the limits which he was to insist upon. His instructions are at page 362, Ontario Documents. This is important as being a recognition, on the part of England of the claim of the Hudson's Bay Company, such as had been sent in at the time, since they insist upon Commissary Bladen maintaining his position as far as these limits are concerned. The limits, as contained in these instructions, are a line “drawn from the south-western point of the Island of Grimington, or Cape Peabix (so as to include the same within the limits of the Bay), to the Great Lake Miscosinko alias Mistoveny, dividing the said lake into parts (as in the map to be delivered to you); and that where the said line shall cut the 49th degree of northern latitude, another line shall begin and be extended westward from the said lake, upon the 49th degree of northern latitude, over which said line, so to be described as above mentioned, the French, and all persons by them employed, shall be prohibited to pass to the northward of the said 49th degree of latitude.” There can be no doubt whatever that at that time the 49th parallel seemed settled upon as corresponding about with the height of land. Further on in the instructions of the commissary are these words: “But you are to take especial care in wording such articles as shall be agreed on with the commissary of His Most Christian Majesty upon this head, that the said boundaries be understood to regard the trade of the Hudson's Bay Company only,” clearly recognizing in these instructions to their commissary that the charter of the Hudson's Bay Company, such as it had been granted to them, according to their interpretation and recognition of the charter, extended down to the 49th degree of latitude.

Chief-Justice Harrison—For the purposes of trade only.

Mr. Monk—I would respectfully submit that their charter for the purposes of trade did not extend farther than their territorial right went. In 1719 a memoir on the subject of the limits of the Hudson's Bay was sent to the English commissioners through Lord Stair to the Marquis D'Estrées, one of the French commissaries. It states:—"The commissaries named by His Britannic Majesty demand that the said limits may be defined in the following manner, viz.: That the limits shall commence from the north cape of Davis Bay, in latitude 56 degrees 30 minutes, which shall serve as limits between the English and the French on the coast of Labrador." It then describes the coast of Labrador and the 49th parallel as being the limits on which the English commissaries would insist; and proceeds to state that these limits were to be insisted on solely as regards the trade, and that His Britannic Majesty did not thereby accede to the right of the French to any lands in America in the said boundaries. I submit that this was an act on the part of His Majesty's Government clearly showing that in 1719 the interpretation of the Hudson's Bay Charter, and the limits as understood then, were the 49th parallel, or what was corresponding to it, the height of land, as understood at that time. I will not detain the Commissioners any longer on this portion of the case.

Mr. Monk, of Counsel for the Dominion,
before the

If there is any difficulty as to whether this northward line should be drawn due north from the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi, or should follow the course of the Mississippi, I would refer the Commissioners most particularly to the judgment a very exhaustive one, which was rendered by Chief Justice Sewell and his colleagues upon the motion on arrest of judgment in the De Reinhardt case which I have above referred to. It is not reported in full in the Ontario Documents, and is very imperfect as an extract. The point was a most important one, the life of a fellow-being depended on it, and the gentlemen on the bench to whom was entrusted the decision were men of the highest reputation and standing in the legal world.

Chief-Justice Harrison—Notwithstanding the adjudication, the point supposed to be adjudicated upon seems to have been considered so doubtful that the sentence was never acted upon.

Mr. Monk—But the reason I lay some stress upon this is that my learned friend seemed to think that this question at the trial had simply come up incidentally. The fact is that it was argued at great length on the motion for arrest of judgment, and a decision came to after mature consideration of all the documents and treaties, and after as much historical research as was possible. Chief Justice Sewell says: "We have been compelled to give a decision upon the question, not from any wish on our part, but because it has been brought before us and we had no way of evading it." "It is impossible for us to do otherwise; it is a fixed and certain boundary (speaking of the due north line from the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi), and according to the statute we have to the best of our knowledge decided it. In the decision we have made we are supported by the authority of Lord Hardwicke in the disputes between Penn and Baltimore"—where a similar difficulty arose. I have the case at length but there is no use in detaining the Commissioners any longer upon it, if I may be allowed to leave this book with them. The discussion about this northward line is very amply shown in these notes which I hold; much more so than in the Ontario Documents. I do not know from what report that extract was taken. The book I have, contains every point brought up and adjudicated upon, and every argument used in favour of the pretension which my friends are urging, that the Mississippi should be the boundary line.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF ONTARIO IN REPLY.

The Attorney-
General of Ontario in reply, before the Arbitra-
tors, 3rd
August, 1878.

The Attorney-General in reply said:—Most of the arguments of my learned friends which are not covered by the observations that I addressed to the Arbitrators in my opening, have been already considered and answered in Mr. Mills' report, and the documents of which the Arbitrators have been put in possession; and, to avoid prolonging the present discussion, I shall confine my reply to the estoppel which my learned friend, Mr. MacMahon, finds in the settlement made by the Dominion with the Hudson's Bay Company, and in the Imperial Act under which the settlement was effected. My learned friend has pointed out that an individual who, with full knowledge, acquiesces by his silence in what is done by others to his prejudice, cannot afterwards hold the thing so done to have been as against him illegal or void. I do not desire to hold the transaction between the Company and the Dominion to have been illegal or void. It was the pressure from the people of Upper Canada that brought it about; but when all the Company's claims became vested in the Dominion, both those claims that there is a question about and those that there is no question about were expected to enure, and I submit did clearly enure, for the benefit of whatever portions of the Dominion were really entitled thereto as against the Company. The Dominion was acting in the settlement as trustee for all the Provinces which constituted the Dominion. The new territory not within any of the Provinces is, in the common interest, to be divided into provinces as it becomes settled. Ontario did not suppose that any statute obtained from the Imperial Parliament, or anything done by the representatives of the Dominion, was to estop her from claiming what belonged to her as a Province. But there is no proof that Ontario as a Province even knew anything about the matters which are said to estop her, before these matters were finally concluded. In fact, they all took place without any reference to the Local Government. The Dominion Government was understood to be acting for all in good faith, and without prejudice to the rights of the Provinces among themselves; and the Province of Ontario had a right to assume that the Dominion, after settling with the Company, would take the same view of the boundary question which the Dominion had always previously taken, namely, that Canada, and therefore Ontario, extends to the Rocky Mountains on the west and far north of the height of land, no intimation to the contrary having been given to the Provincial Government until long after the acquisition of the Company's claims. The Company had some territory in regard to which there was no dispute; it really did belong to the Hudson's Bay Company; it was thought important that Canada should acquire this territory; and it was desired also to get a clear and undisputed title to both that which the Hudson's Bay Company certainly had, and the further territory in regard to which there was the dispute. The settlement with the Company was not on the assumption that the whole belonged to the Company; the £300,000 paid to the Company would have been a mere bagatelle as purchase money for all that the Company pretended to claim; it would have required several millions to buy all if their title had been clear; but there was a controversy about the title, and it was thought worth while to give that amount of money and certain other advantages to the Company, for the purpose of getting all doubt removed without further delay. The arrangement was a compromise, and understood to be so.

Chief-Justice Harrison—You were acquiring, in fact, a quit claim.

The Attorney-General—That was all. There is another point with reference to my learned friend's estoppel. He says that we stood by and concealed our rights from the Dominion Ministers. But, on the contrary, they knew our rights better, perhaps, than the new Provincial Ministers did. It was Dominion Ministers who had been stating our case against the Company; everything they had stated against the Company was in favour of Upper Canada; whatever they claimed to the north and west as belonging to Canada was in fact a claim for Ontario. Some of these Ministers had indeed been the very agents through whom the facts in our favour had been brought to light and pressed, officially and otherwise, upon public attention. In consequence and by means of this contention they got the surrender from the Company for a comparatively small sum, and they prevented the Province from negotiating on its own account with the Company. If there is any estoppel in the case, it is the Dominion that is estopped from resisting our claim, instead of the Province being estopped from making the claim.

AWARD OF THE ARBITRATORS, 3RD AUGUST, 1878.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME:

The undersigned having been appointed by the Governments of Canada and Ontario as arbitrators to determine the northerly and westerly boundaries of the Province of Ontario, do hereby determine and decide that the following are and shall be such boundaries; that is to say:—

Commencing at a point on the southern shore of Hudson's Bay, commonly called James' Bay, where a line produced due north from the head of Lake Temiscaming would strike the said south shore; thence along the said south shore westerly to the mouth of the Albany River; thence up the middle of the said Albany River, and of the lakes thereon, to the source of the said river at the head of Lake St. Joseph; thence by the nearest line to the easterly end of Lac Seul, being the head waters of English River; thence westerly through the middle of Lac Seul and the said English River to a point where the same will be intersected by a true meridional line drawn northerly from the international monument placed to mark the most north-westerly angle of the Lake of the Woods by the recent Boundary Commission; and thence due south, following the said meridional line to the said international monument; thence southerly and easterly, following upon the international boundary line between the British possessions and the United States of America into Lake Superior.

But if a true meridional line drawn northerly from the said international boundary at the said most north-westerly angle of the Lake of the Woods, shall be found to pass to the west of where the English River empties into the Winnipeg River, then, and in such case, the northerly boundary of Ontario shall continue down the middle of the said English River to where the same empties into the Winnipeg River, and shall continue thence on a line drawn due west from the confluence of the said English River with the said Winnipeg River, until the same will intersect the meridian above described; and thence due south, following the said meridional line to the said international monument; thence southerly and easterly, following upon the international boundary line, between the British possessions and the United States of America, into Lake Superior.

ONTARIO ACT, 42 VIC., CAP. 2 (1879).

AN ACT RESPECTING THE NORTHERLY AND WESTERLY BOUNDARIES OF ONTARIO.

Ontario Act,
42 Vic., Cap.
2, 1879.

Whereas the northerly and westerly boundaries of the Province of Ontario were not determined until lately;

And whereas pending the determination thereof certain provisional lines, which for certain purposes were to be regarded as such boundary lines, were agreed to by the Governments of the Dominion and the Province;

And whereas it was agreed by the Governments of the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Ontario that the true boundaries should be determined by reference to arbitration;

And whereas one of the arbitrators named in the Revised Statutes of Ontario, chapter four, died, and the other resigned without having made any award;

And whereas the Governor-General of Canada in Council afterwards named as arbitrator the Honourable Sir Francis Hincks, of the City of Montreal, Knight, and the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of this Province named as arbitrator the Honourable Robert Alexander Harrison, Chief Justice of Ontario;

And whereas the two Governments further agreed that the Right Honourable Sir Edward Thornton, Knight, should be the third arbitrator, and that the determination of the award of the said arbitrators or a majority of them in the matter of the said boundaries should be taken as final and conclusive;

And whereas on the third day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, the said arbitrators made their award in writing in the words following:—[Here is given the text of the Award]:

And whereas the effect of the said award is to give to this Province less territory than had been claimed on behalf of the Province, and more territory than the Government of Canada had contended to be within the limits of the Province, or than was contained within the provisional boundary lines aforesaid;

And whereas by chapter twenty-eight of the Acts of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the session held in the thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth years of Her Majesty's reign, and intituled "An Act respecting the establishment of Provinces in the Dominion of Canada," it is enacted that the Parliament of Canada may, from time to time, with the consent of the Legislature of any Province in the Dominion, increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the limits of such Province upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said Legislature, and may with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase, or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any Province affected thereby;

And whereas it is proper that the boundaries determined by the said award be adopted and confirmed;

Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Ontario, enacts as follows:—

1. The Legislature of the Province of Ontario consents that the Parliament of Canada may declare that the boundaries which by the award of the arbitrators aforesaid were decided to be the northerly and westerly boundaries, respectively, of this Province, shall be and are the northerly and westerly boundaries thereof, whether the same increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the true northerly and westerly limits of the Province.

LECTURE OF SIR FRANCIS HINCKS (ONE OF THE ARBITRATORS) ON THE NORTHERLY AND WESTERLY BOUNDARIES OF ONTARIO, AND THE AWARD RELATING THERETO, MAY 6, 1881.*

Sir Francis Hincks having been introduced to the meeting by the Chairman, the Hon. Sir W. P. Howland, K.C.M.G., C.B., delivered the following lecture:—

SIR WM. HOWLAND, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—

Before entering on the subject to which I propose to invite your attention this evening, I must express to you the deep gratification which I felt on being invited, during a recent visit, to address a Toronto audience, after the lapse of so many years. Should my life be spared for another twelve months, a period of fifty years will have elapsed since, as a young man, I settled in the old capital of Upper Canada, then popularly known as Little York, but within two years afterwards incorporated as the city of Toronto. Ten years after my first settlement at York, I became a member of the Government of United Canada, and was under the necessity of taking up my residence at the capital, since which time, with the exception of about two years, when the sessions of Parliament were held at Toronto, under the alternate system, I have been a comparative stranger among you, although I have had frequent opportunities of seeing several of my old fellow-pioneers, and have had the gratification of being invariably met with a friendly greeting, not only by my old friends, but by those with whom I had had differences of opinion on what may now be properly termed dead issues.

Having several years ago entirely withdrawn from party connection, a political address would be wholly repugnant to my feelings; but circumstances seem to me to render it desirable that the public should be better informed on a subject which is generally supposed to be imperfectly understood, while it is due as well to my own character, as to the memory of the late lamented Chief Justice Harrison, that a full explanation should be given of the grounds on which the Arbitrators appointed to determine the true boundaries of the Province of Ontario arrived at their decision. Such an explanation is, I think, likewise due to the Right Honourable Sir Edward Thornton, Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, who was good enough, at the joint request of the Governments of the Dominion and of Ontario, to act as third Arbitrator on the occasion referred to. While it is no part of my duty to defend the action of the Dominion and Provincial Governments in agreeing to leave the disputed boundary of the Province of Ontario to be determined by Arbitrators, I may remark that there are many precedents for such a mode of settling conflicting claims. It is fortunate that there is no danger of this question, complicated though it is at present, leading to the fearful consequences which history, as well as our daily observation, teaches us to be the result of territorial disputes. A very large proportion of the wars which have occurred during past centuries, and which have entailed such immense losses of blood and treasure, must be attributed to quarrels regarding boundaries; and in modern times the expediency of resorting to arbitration as the best mode of settling such disputes, has been very generally admitted.

CRITICISMS ON THE AWARD.

Lecture of Sir
Francis Hincks on the subject of the Award,
1881.

In the case of the Ontario boundary arbitration in 1878, the unanimous award, made after a most careful and conscientious examination of the voluminous papers submitted to the Arbitrators, together with the cases of the learned counsel on both sides, has been severely criticized, not only by the Select Committee of the House of Commons in 1880, but by the leaders of the Dominion Government in the Senate and House of Commons, during the last session. It has been stated as an objection to the competency of the Arbitrators, that two of the three were not members of the legal profession, but I have been unable to find any precedent in analogous cases for confining the choice of arbitrators to lawyers. In one of the most recent cases, when arbitrators were appointed to determine the boundaries between Zululand and the Transvaal in South Africa, there was one lawyer, the Attorney-General of the Cape, joined with a civilian, and an officer holding the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. I own that I fail to discover the value of special legal attainments in such a case; and, moreover, there were before the Arbitrators conflicting opinions given by eminent judges and lawyers. The greatest judges are far from being infallible, and are themselves always desirous of the assistance of counsel, whose duty is to submit every point of law, and every fact, in support of their respective clients. Let me, for argument's sake, suppose that in a trial before a judge, a clause in an Act of Parliament had a special bearing on the case in controversy, and that the counsel, whose client would be benefited by that clause, were to fail to bring it to the notice of the Court, and that the judgment afforded proof that this important clause had not engaged the judge's attention, surely it would not be contended that, however eminent the judge might be, his judgment ought to carry as much weight as that of a non-professional arbitrator whose opinion had been formed after a full consideration of circumstances, which had never been brought under the notice of the judge. I shall have to make a practical application of this supposititious case to the disputed boundary of Ontario on the south-west, and as bearing on the judgment of Chief Justice Sewell in the De Reinhard case, which was concurred in by his colleagues. I must, before doing so, notice as briefly as possible some statements, which appear to me to be a sufficient justification of my placing on record the reasons which induced the Arbitrators to make the award which is now the subject of controversy. During the session of Parliament held in 1880, a Select Committee was appointed by the House of Commons to inquire into and report upon all matters connected with the boundaries between the Province of Ontario and the unorganized territories of the Dominion. The report, concurred in by nine out of thirteen members of that Committee, declares that "the award does not declare the true boundaries of Ontario," adding, "it seems to your Committee to be inconsistent with any boundary line ever suggested or proposed subsequent to the Treaty of Utrecht." One of the principal witnesses, Mr. William McD. Dawson, a portion of whose evidence is embodied in the report, stated that the Arbitrators had adopted a boundary "which was not a possible one." Sir John Macdonald is reported in Hansard to have said:—We have only to read the written statement of one of those Arbitrators, Sir Francis Hincks, in which he admitted they did not settle the true boundary, to be convinced." Sir Alexander Campbell was reported to have made substantially the same statement in the Senate. It has seemed to me that such allegations as I have cited, render it desirable that the public should be put in possession of the grounds, on which the Arbitrators concurred in an award, which, although adverse to the claims of the Ontario Government, was promptly accepted by it, and subsequently by the Provincial Legislature.

SOUTH-WESTERN BOUNDARY.

I shall first consider the South-Western Boundary. It is evident from the report of the Select Committee, that its framer attached much greater weight to Commissions to Governors as affecting boundaries, than the Arbitrators did. Commissions may be of assistance in interpreting obscure language in an Act of Parliament, but where the meaning of an Act is free from doubt, it cannot be set aside by a Commission. The south-western boundary of Ontario depends on the construction of the Imperial Act of 1774, on the effect of the subsequent treaty with the United States, of 1783, and on the proclamation issued under the Act of 1791. It is important to consider the circumstances under which the Act of 1774 was passed. In the year 1763 a treaty was concluded at Paris, between England and France, which contained the following provision: "In order to establish peace on solid and durable foundations, and to remove forever all subject of dispute with regard to the limits of the British and French territories on the continent of America, it is agreed that for the future the confines between the dominions of His Britannic Majesty, and those of His Most Christian Majesty, in that part of the world, shall be fixed irrevocably by a line drawn along the middle of the River Mississippi from its source to the River Iberville, and from thence by a line drawn along the middle of that river and the lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain to the sea . . . provided that the navigation of the Mississippi shall be equally free as well to the subjects of Great Britain as to those of France in its whole breadth and length from its source to the sea." The treaty from which I have just quoted was concluded on the 10th February, 1763, and on 7th October, 1763, a proclamation was issued erecting four new Governments, one of which was Quebec, the western boundary of which was fixed at the south end of Lake Nipissing. In the year 1774, in consequence of urgent representations, as to the necessity of establishing a settled government in territories where no government of any kind existed, a bill was introduced by the Government of the day, the object of which was clearly stated by Lord North in language which I shall quote. "It is well known that settlers are in the habit of going to the interior parts from time to time. Now, however undesirable, it is open to Parliament to consider whether it is fit there should be no government in the country, or, on the contrary, separate and distinct governments, or whether the scattered posts should be annexed to Canada. The House of Lords have thought proper to annex them to Canada but when we consider that there must be some government, and that it is the desire of all those who trade from Canada to those countries, that there should be some government, my opinion is that, if gentlemen will weigh the inconveniences of separate governments, they will think the least inconvenient method is to annex those posts, though few in population, great in extent of territory, rather than to leave them without government at all, or make them separate ones. Sir, the annexation likewise is the result of the desire of the Canadians, and of those who trade to those settlements, who think they cannot trade with safety as long as they remain separate." Now, it must be borne in mind, that the principal posts in the unorganized territories, when the Act of 1774 was passed, were situated on the River Mississippi, and of course in British territory by the Treaty of 1763. The pretension of the advocates of the due north line, which is the boundary claimed by the Dominion, is that Parliament deliberately abandoned the natural boundary of the Mississippi, thereby excluding from the benefit of the Act, the very persons for whom it was specially intended, and that it adopted, without a single conceivable motive, a conventional line running due north from the junction of the Ohio with the Mississippi. It is well known that the Bill was introduced in the House of Lords, in 1774, and that as sent down by that House to the Commons the description was "all the said territories, islands and countries, heretofore a part of the territory of Canada in North America, extending southward to the banks of the River Ohio, westward to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay, and which said territories, islands and countries are not within the limits of some other British Colony, and which said territories, islands and countries are not within the limits of some other British Colony, as allowed, and confirmed by the Crown." Now it has never been pretended that there was any ambiguity in that description as to the western boundary, but a discussion was raised in the Commons by Mr. Edmund Burke, then agent for the State of New York, who had doubts whether under the description, Canada might not encroach on territory on the north-east of that State, which had actually been in dispute, and which by amicable agreement had been made over to New York, reserving the rights of Canadian settlers in the disputed territory. The territory on the Mississippi had never been in dispute during the protracted wars between the British and French regarding boundaries in the Ohio valley.

INTENTION OF ACT OF 1774.

There is not the slightest reason to suppose that a single member of the House of Commons desired to alter the natural boundary of the Mississippi, on the banks of which were the principal settlements for the inhabitants of which the Act was specially intended to provide a government. Mr. Burke, as appears from a report of his remarks in a book entitled "The Cavendish Debates," insisted very strenuously on defining the boundaries more precisely. I am not unaware that the framer of the report of the Commons Committee has, on the authority of Mr. Justice Johnson of Montreal, pronounced the Cavendish Debates as of no authority, but the Hon. Wm. McDougall has given most satisfactory reasons for considering them a valuable contribution to the history of the period. There is however a letter in 10 existence, addressed by Mr. Burke to the Legislature of New York, in which he explains with great precision the object of his amendments, and from which it is clear that it never was contemplated to interfere with the Mississippi boundary. The change in the description of the boundary was made while the House was in Committee on the Bill, four members, one of whom was Mr. Burke, having left the House in Committee to arrange the new description. It is said "the difference was whether the tract of country not inhabited should belong to New York or Canada," and most assuredly this difference could not possibly apply to territory on the Mississippi River. I shall now cite the boundaries as finally agreed to by the House, and I request your most particular attention to the first words, which seem to me to deserve much more consideration than has been given to them by the advocates of the 20 due north line, from the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. "That all the territories, 20 islands and countries in North America, belonging to the Crown of Great Britain, bounded on the south by a line from the Bay of Chaleurs, along the high lands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the River St. Lawrence from those which fall into the sea, to a point in forty-five degrees of northern latitude on the eastern bank of the River Connecticut, keeping the same latitude directly west through the Lake Champlain, until in the same latitude it meets the River St. Lawrence, from thence up the eastern bank of the said river to the Lake Ontario, thence through the Lake Ontario and the river commonly called the Niagara, and thence along by the eastern and south-eastern bank of Lake Erie, following the said bank until the same shall be intersected by the northern boundary granted by the Charter of the Province of Pennsylvania, in case the same shall be so intersected, 30 and from thence along the said northern and western boundaries of the said Province until the said western boundary strike the Ohio; but in case the said bank of the said lake shall not be found to be so intersected, then following the said bank until it shall arrive at that point of the said bank which shall be nearest to the north-western angle of the said Province of Pennsylvania, and thence by a right line to the said north-western angle of the said Province, and thence along the western boundary of the said Province until it strike the River Ohio, and along the bank of the said river westward to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay." You will not fail to observe that the intention of the framers of the amendment, as of the original Bill, was to include all the territories 40 belonging to the Crown of Great Britain in the newly constituted Province, which were not already included in the old Provinces. You will notice how precise the definition is until the Ohio is reached, after which there was no territory regarding which there could be a dispute. You will likewise bear in mind that the last clause of the description is precisely the same as in the original Bill, viz., "Westward to the banks of the Mississippi and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay," and that in that Bill "northward" could not have had the meaning which has been claimed for it, and which is that it must necessarily mean "due north," although the meaning of the word is really "towards the north."

THE DE REINHARD CASE.

Great stress has been laid on a decision given in the year 1818 by the Court of Queen's Bench at Quebec, presided over by Chief Justice Sewell, on the trial of a person named De Reinhard, for a murder committed at a place called Dalles, in the vicinity of the Lake of the Woods. Some judges who gave evidence before the Select Committee on the boundaries in 1880, referred to this judgment as conclusive in favour of the due north line. Judge Johnson said that "Chief Justice Sewell, who tried the case, is looked upon as the greatest luminary of the law we ever had in Lower Canada. It may almost be said that he made our laws." Again, Mr. Justice Armour said:—"There is a judicial decision as to the meaning of the word 'northward' in the Quebec Act. The decision was that 'northward' evidently meant 'due north.' That is the De Reinhard case. No doubt about it, it is a clear decision, and were I deciding judicially I would be bound to follow 'that decision.'" As Mr. Justice Armour proceeded to state, that if asked his individual opinion as a person looking into the matter, he would determine that "'northward' had reference to the territory and not to a limitary line," I do not think that his evidence is much in favour of the due north line. I shall state the reasons which led me, and I believe my co-Arbitrators, to attach no importance whatever to the judgment in the De Reinhard case. The question of boundary was never fairly brought before the Court in 1818. It is well known that very high authorities, including the eminent counsel by whom De Reinhard was defended, the Honourable Messrs. Cartier and McDougall, the Honourable David Mills, who has made a most valuable report on the subject the Messrs. Dawson, up to a recent period, and the learned counsel who represented Ontario before the Arbitrators, have all held that the language employed in the Order of Council and the Proclamation of 1791, "including all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line to the utmost extent of the country called or known by the name of Canada," must be interpreted as giving to Ontario, then Upper Canada, a much more extensive territory to the west, than what it would be entitled to according to the interpretation placed on the Act of 1774, by those who hold that the Mississippi River was the boundary of the old Province of Quebec, and that the Act of 1791 was intended to divide that Province, but not to extend it. I refer to this difference of opinion here to show that the view taken by the Arbitrators was never presented to the Court in 1818. Had it been pointed out to the eminent judges who presided on that occasion, that the language of the Act of 1774 made special provision for including in the new Province "all the territories, islands and countries in North America belonging to the Crown of Great Britain," before defining the boundaries, it might have been presumed that the intention of the Act would have been so manifest that even if the language had been deemed ambiguous, its meaning could scarcely have been misunderstood. To my own mind there is no ambiguity in the language. The object of the Act was to provide for the government of all the territories not included in the old Provinces, and not south of the Ohio River. When the Mississippi was reached, the word "northward" was quite sufficient, as the western boundary was that established by the Treaty of 1763. How any one could have imagined that Parliament would have been guilty of the absurdity of excluding the settlements on the river from the benefit of an Act chiefly intended for them, and of abandoning a natural boundary like the Mississippi in order to run a line due north, without any conceivable object, is incomprehensible to me. The point which strikes me as important is that De Reinhard's counsel rested their case on the Act of 1791 and not on that of 1774, and it will be found on reference both to the arguments of counsel, and to the judgment of the Court, that the most important branch of the decision was that the Act of 1791 only authorized the division of the old Province of Quebec into two separate Provinces, and consequently that the Proclamation could not be interpreted to give Upper Canada any territory that had not been included in the old Province of Quebec. Now, the Arbitrators were of opinion that on this point the judgment of the Court delivered at Quebec in 1818 was correct, and consequently that the boundaries of Ontario must be limited to those of the Province of Quebec as defined by the Act of 1774. There have been so many opinions, which I admit to be entitled to great weight, in favour of the boundary which was contended for by the eminent counsel for the prisoner in the De Reinhard case, that it is highly probable that, as lawyers, they held their construction of the Proclamation of 1791 to be correct; I must, however, point out that it is the duty of a lawyer, when defending a criminal, to spare no effort to procure his acquittal, and, in thinking the De Reinhard case over in my own mind, it occurred to me that if counsel had contended for the Mississippi boundary as that established by the Act of 1774, and had concurred with the Arbitrators, that after the treaty of peace with the United States in 1783, the most north-western angle of the Lake of the Woods became the south-west boundary, they might not have saved the prisoner whom they were defending. The evidence on the trial as to the precise locality of Dalles was conflicting, but to a very slight extent. Mr. Sax, a witness for the Crown, held that Portage des Rats was the north-west angle, and that its longitude was $94^{\circ} 6'$ west. Mr. Joseph Bouchette placed Portage des Rats in longitude $94^{\circ} 10'$ west, and the north-western angle in $94^{\circ} 25'$. Now, Dalles is placed in $94^{\circ} 40'$ west longitude, and would consequently have been outside the boundaries of Upper Canada under the award of the Arbitrators. Again, Mr. Coltman, one of the witnesses, stated that Dalles was on the River Winnipeg, about fifteen or eighteen miles from the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods, and that it was on a line "running to the north with a little westing." If, then, it be assumed that the north-western angle of the Lake of the Woods is the true south-western boundary of Ontario, then Upper Canada, it would have been fatal to the prisoner's case for his counsel to have contended for the boundary established by the Act of 1774, and they accordingly argued most strenuously that the Proclamation issued in accordance with the Act of 1791, had considerably extended the boundaries of Upper Canada. I confess I have been a good deal surprised at some of the recent opinions given by gentlemen who claim to be experts, as to the meaning of the term "northward." Mr. Lindsay Russell declares in his evidence that this word "admits of no choice in its interpretation." Such was not the opinion of Mr. Sax, the surveyor examined for the Crown on the trial of De Reinhardt in 1818, which, although instructive, is not a little amusing, and deserves to be noticed in detail.

Lecture of Sir
Francis

MEANING OF NORTHWARD.

Mr. Sax—"A line, supposing it ran due north from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, would leave the River Winnipeg five degrees out of the Province of Upper Canada—not a northward line but a due north line.

Attorney-General—"Do you mean to say that a northward line is not a north line?"

Mr. Sax—"It is not always; it may be north by east, or north by west, or north north-west, or many other points of the compass. A due north line is one that goes direct to the north pole without any deviation whatever.

Attorney-General—"And does not a northward line go to the north pole? If you had a northward line to run would you not run it to the north pole?"

Mr. Sax—"Perhaps I might and perhaps not; I would certainly run it northerly, though I might not run it due north.

Attorney-General—"What is to prevent you taking it due north? If you had a line to run from a given point until it struck a river, and thence to continue along the course of that river northward, would you call that drawing a northern line?"

Mr. Sax—"Undoubtedly it would be a northern line, but not a due north line.

Attorney-General—"Would it not? Could it be east or west?"

Mr. Sax—"It might, according to circumstances, be a north-eastward or north-westerly line, and yet a northern line—that is a line having a northward course or drawing nearer to the north pole as it progressed, though not an astronomical north line.

Attorney-General—"Is not a north line a line northward?"

Mr. Sax—"Certainly, a line running due north is undoubtedly a northward line.

Attorney-General—"And a line true north-westward you would call a north-westward line?"

Mr. Sax—"Certainly, a line due north-west is a north-westward line, but a line, for instance, that runs toward the north, notwithstanding it may gain in its course more northing than westing or easting, is not therefore necessarily a due north line, but is a northern or northward line.

Chief Justice Sewell—"I really do not comprehend the distinction; to say that a northward line is not a north line, I confess, appears to me to approach the reductio ad absurdum. Suppose that we had a compass here, and from a given point I draw a line north-westward, that is to say terminating at a point north-westward, would not that be a due north-west line?"

Mr. Sax—"It would if drawn due north-west, but if in drawing it you gained northerly it would from the course of its deviation be a line northward though not a north line.

Chief Justice Sewell—"Then its course northward must unquestionably be due north if a line north-westwardly is a north-west line. I want to know whether in point of fact, a fact that any man can tell as well as a surveyor, whether a line from the eastern or western point of the compass, drawn northward, is or is not a north line. Just answer that question, yes or no, and then you may explain that answer in any way you think proper.

Mr. Sax—"It certainly must be to a certain extent a north line, but not a due north line.

Chief Justice Sewell—"Why not.

10 Mr. Sax—"A line drawn from any point between two cardinal points of the compass, direct to any cardinal point, is a due north or due west line as the case may be; but a line may be so drawn between two points as to be called by surveyors a northward or a southward line as it may chance to gain in the course of running it upon that point of the compass to which it is approaching; as I might draw a line from a point north-westwardly but gaining a northerly direction in its course, so that at its termination it would be a line northward from having more northing there than at the point from which I started.

I confess that I think that Mr. Sax's opinion is entitled to infinitely more weight than that of Mr. Russell.

IMPORTANCE OF A NATURAL BOUNDARY.

20 I have already stated the reasons which induced the Arbitrators to arrive at the conclusion that the intention of the Act of 1774, and its language, interpreted according to common sense, was to extend the old Province of Quebec, so as to include all the territories belonging to the Crown of Great Britain in America, not included in the old British Colonies, now the United States, nor in the territories belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company, nor in the Indian territories north-west of the Mississippi. The view taken by the Arbitrators was never presented to the Court in 1818, and the territory between the imaginary due north line and the Mississippi having become part of the United States, the absurdity of placing such a construction on the Act of 1774, as would have left an important strip of territory without any government whatever did not strike the learned judges. It must be borne in mind, that although the Commission of a Governor cannot supersede an Act of Parliament, as the framer of the 30 report of the Commons Committee of 1830 seems to imagine, it may fairly be cited as corroborative evidence of the intention of an Act where any ambiguity of language is found to exist. The first Commission issued under the Act of 1774 to Sir Guy Carleton proves conclusively what was understood at the time to be in its meaning. Immediately after the word "northward" the words "along the eastern bank of the said river" were added in the Commission. It really looks as if it had occurred to the framer of the Commission that the hastily prepared amendment to the original Act might create doubt at some future time, and yet Mr. Burke, the framer of the description, thus explained his intention: "My idea was to get the limits of Quebec, which appeared to many as well as to myself intended to straighten the British Colonies, removed from construction to certainty, and that certainty, grounded on natural, indisputable, and immovable barriers—rivers and lakes where I could have them, 40 lines where lines could be drawn, and where reference and description became necessary to have them towards an old British Colony, and not towards this new and, as was thought, favourite establishment." Is it conceivable that the author of this passage I have quoted could have intended to abandon such a natural boundary as the Mississippi for one without sense or meaning, and the adoption of which would have left without any government the very settlements which it was specially intended to include? I need only observe further that I believe that those who maintain that the boundaries were enlarged by the Proclamation issued under the act of 1791, concur with the Arbitrators in the opinion that by the Act of 1774, the Mississippi was the western boundary of the old Province of Quebec.

EFFECT OF THE TREATY WITH UNITED STATES ON THE BOUNDARY.

50 I have now to draw your attention to the effect of the Revolutionary War on the boundary of the old Province of Quebec. When the treaty of peace was concluded at Paris, on 3rd September,

1783, boundaries were established to which I shall briefly refer. It is sufficiently evident that there was a desire to find natural boundaries, if practicable, and accordingly the line of division was carried through Lake Superior to the Long Lake, thence by water communication to the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods, and from thence on a due west course to the River Mississippi. In a paper dated in 1876, written by Mr. S. J. Dawson, the Chairman of the Commons Committee, of 1880, he argued that the diplomatists who framed the Treaty of 1783 had in view, not the Mississippi proper, but "the main artery of the vast river system to which the comprehensive name of the Mississippi was applied in those days." He maintained that "the diplomatists, who framed the treaty, knew perfectly well that the northerly waters of the Mississippi were far to the south, and that they must have meant a branch or tributary of the Missouri, called the White Earth River, which would intersect the due west line at a point over 450 miles west of the Lake of the Woods." Mr. Dawson held that "it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the true intent, meaning, and spirit of the Treaty of 1783, was that the western boundary of Canada and the United States, and the eastern limit of Louisiana on the due west line, should be at a point upwards of 450 miles west of the Lake of the Woods." I have referred to Mr. S. J. Dawson's opinion so late as 1876, to establish that he recognized the north-western angle of the Lake of the Woods, as within the Canadian territory, and further, that he recognized the Mississippi as the western boundary. Mr. Dawson, when he stated with such confidence, that the diplomatists, in 1783, "knew perfectly well" that the northerly waters of the Mississippi proper were far to the south of such a line, must have been unaware that, eleven years after the treaty from which I have quoted, viz., in 1794, another treaty was concluded, which commences as follows:—"Whereas it is uncertain whether the River Mississippi extends so far to the northward as to be intersected by a line to be drawn due west from the Lake of the Woods in the manner mentioned in the treaty of peace between Her Majesty and the United States, it is agreed," etc. The agreement was that the two nations would make a joint survey of the said river from one degree of latitude below the Falls of St. Anthony to the principal source or sources of the said river, and if the result should be that the river would not be intersected by such a due west line, then the two parties would proceed to establish a boundary by amicable negotiation. This was subsequently accomplished by the Treaty of 1818, establishing the 49th parallel of north latitude. At that time, thirty-five years after the period when Mr. S. J. Dawson thought that diplomatists "knew perfectly well" all about localities, it was not known whether the Lake of the Woods was north or south of the 49th parallel, and it was accordingly provided that a line should be drawn due north or due south from the north-western angle to the 49th parallel. The Mississippi of the treaty between England and France, of the Act of 1774, and of the treaty with the United States, has its source almost due south of the Lake of the Woods, where the international boundary is fixed. It seemed to the Arbitrators that under all circumstances of the case, the true south-westerly boundary of Ontario should be held to be at the international boundary, rather than at a point due north of the source of the Mississippi. The latter would have been in nearly the same meridian, I may observe, and would have entailed much useless expense in surveys, besides disputes as which was really the true source of the Mississippi, which according to Mr. S. J. Dawson, is to be found "in numerous brooks and countless lakelets."

NORTH-EASTERN BOUNDARY.

I shall now proceed to state the grounds on which the Arbitrators arrived at their decision as to the true boundary on the north-east. Up to the time when it became my duty to study the question as an arbitrator, I had been under the prevailing impression that the height of land was the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Territory. It would be impossible, on such an occasion as this, to state all the arguments which have led me to think that the pretensions of the Hudson's Bay Company were without foundation. I may, however, refer to the able papers, which the late Chief Justice Draper prepared, regarding the claims of the Company, and likewise to a memorandum from the Hon. Joseph Cauchon, who was Commissioner of Crown Lands in 1857, and which is printed in the appendix to the report of the Commons Committee as the memorandum of Mr. W. McD. Dawson. I presume that the cause of the action taken at that particular time was the approaching termination of the lease of the Indian territories. The claim of the Hudson's Bay Company, under their original charter, was described in the memorandum prepared by Mr. Dawson under the Commissioner's instructions, to be "to government, jurisdiction, and right of soil over the whole country watered by rivers falling into Hudson's Bay." I have been unable to discover any authority for so extensive a claim. There can be no doubt that the Hudson's Bay Company themselves proposed, after the Treaty of Ryswick, that the French should not trade or build any house, factory or fort to the north of the Albany River on the West Main Coast, or north of Rupert's River on the east Main Coast. It is true that under the Treaty of Utrecht the French were to restore to Great Britain a number of forts, but it does not appear to me that this restoration was ever completed. It was provided by the treaty that "within a year" Commissaries to be named by both parties were to determine the limits between the British and French, and it is notorious that such Commissaries never did determine the boundaries, while the French King, many years after the Treaty of Utrecht, declared, with reference to the pretensions of the Hudson's Bay Company, that he was "firmly resolved to maintain his rights and his possessions against pretensions so excessive and so unjust." The Proclamation under the Act of 1791 establishes the north-east boundary at the termination of a line drawn due north from the head of Lake Temiscamingue, until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay, and it is contended by the very same parties who insist, contrary, as I think, to common sense, that in the Act of 1774, northward must mean due north, that the meaning of words which seem to me sufficiently clear, must have been to the boundary of Hudson's Bay Territory, and not to the bay. Now, in the Act of 1774, when the territories were really meant, and not the bay, the language is not susceptible of misconstruction. The words are, "the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers trading to Hudson's Bay." But, as in the case of the western boundary, the Commissions to various Governors afford a clue to the meaning attached to the language of the Proclamation by the Imperial Government. For a considerable time the Commissions were in the precise words of the Proclamation, "to the boundary of Hudson's Bay," but in 1838 Lord Durham's Commission contained the words, "until it strikes the shore of Hudson's Bay." Now, I wish it to be clearly understood, as Mr. W. McD. Dawson seems to imagine, that the decision of the Arbitrators was founded on the Commission, that such was not the case. In accordance with the Statute of 1791, an Order in Council was passed authorizing the proclamation, which fixed the north-eastern boundary at the boundary line of Hudson's Bay, and that I hold to be a sufficient description of the shore, although it was satisfactory to the Arbitrators to have the additional evidence afforded by the Commissions. I have already adverted to the Albany River having been proposed by the Hudson's Bay Company as their southern boundary, and it seemed to the Arbitrators that a natural boundary, following the course of that river, left to the representatives of the Hudson's Bay Company quite as much territory as they could justly claim. It would be wholly impossible for me, within the limits to which I am necessarily confined, to refer at any length to the numerous documents which led the Arbitrators to reject the pretension of the Dominion Government, that the height of land was the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's territory. The original charter limited the territorial grant to territories not in the possession of any other Christian prince, and although the subsequent Treaties of Ryswick and Utrecht affected the boundaries between France and England, yet there is no evidence of any new grant having been made to the Hudson's Bay Company. In his very able report on the boundaries, the Hon. David Mills has maintained that the effect of the Treaty of Utrecht was not to restore to the Hudson's Bay Company what it had lost by the Treaty of Ryswick. There was a warm controversy between the two Governments as to whether the term "cede" or "restore" should be used, and it is far from improbable that the British Minister may have been inspired by the Hudson's Bay Company to contend for the word "restore" while the French Minister was very urgent for the word "cede." It appears, from a letter of Mr. Prior, that according to the cartes sent by both plenipotentiaries, "there was no very great difference" between the claim of Great Britain and what France was willing to concede, and it is quite certain that the French never contemplated surrendering the territory claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company to the height of land. As a matter of fact, the boundaries under the treaty of Utrecht were to have been settled by Commissaries, who never acted in the matter, and, fifty years later, Great Britain acquired the French title. Chief Justice Draper furnished a number of extracts from documents bearing on the question of title, on which he observed: "They certainly show that neither after the Treaty of Ryswick, nor that of Utrecht, when they stated the boundaries they were either willing to submit to or were desirous of obtaining, nor yet in 1750, when they set forth what they thought themselves entitled to claim under their charter, did they ever think of asserting a right to all the countries the waters of which flow into Hudson's Bay. Their claim to lands lying both northward and westward of the Bay is entirely at variance with any such idea."

OBJECTIONS TO AWARD ANSWERED.

I could not treat the important subject under your consideration with entire satisfaction if I failed to notice the numerous criticisms to which the award of the Arbitrators has been subjected. I shall dismiss very briefly that class that I believe to be numerically the most formidable, whose opposition to the award is based, not on its merits, but on the extent of territory to which Ontario is 10 entitled under it. The decision of the Arbitrators had scarcely been announced in 1878, when an anonymous writer, over the signature "Britannicus," published several letters on the subject, in which he contended that the award was "open to grave objections," the first being that "the region is worth millions." He was told in an article, that I contributed to the press, that "the Arbitrators were appointed to decide on boundary lines, on principles of law and justice, and ought not to have been influenced by the extent or the value of the territory in dispute."

CHIEF JUSTICE HARRISON ON AWARD.

Lecture of Sir
Francis Hincks on the subject of the Award,

I shall offer no apology for citing a few extracts from letters of the late Chief Justice Harrison addressed to me in August, 1878, on the subject of the criticisms made on the award: "I feel satisfied that you can give an answer to all and sundry who attack the award. I believe there never was an 20 award made in a matter of such importance that is so little open to honest criticism. . . . Singular to say, since the award was made, I have received from Judge McDonald, of Guelph, an old lithographed map, without name or date, but evidently made long before the Constitutional Act of 1791, which indicates the northern boundary of Upper Canada to be on the precise line where we have placed it. . . . I also received the Gazette (Montreal) of the 15th August, containing the second letter of 'Britannicus.' These attacks, with the exception of the last, are puerile, and the last is a perfect absurdity. Assume that all which 'Britannicus' says about the territory awarded to Ontario, is true, how does that affect the validity of the award? Our duty was judicial: we had little or nothing to do with questions of policy. By the light of the evidence adduced, and the arguments propounded, we 30 unanimously decided upon certain boundaries, for the north and west of the Province. Whether the land thus given to the Province was full of diamonds, or only of worthless rocks, was no business of ours. The surveyor who finds the boundaries of two lots of land is never influenced by the consideration that one piece is intrinsically more valuable than the other. None of the able counsel who addressed us ventured so far to take leave of his senses as to attempt to take such untenable ground."

JEALOUSY OF ONTARIO.

"Britannicus" is a representative of the class of whose opinions Mr. Royal, M. P., is one of the latest exponents. He was a member of the Select Committee of 1880, and while Mr. S. J. Dawson is the avowed advocate of the formation into a new Province of a large portion of the Province of Ontario, Mr. Royal contends that Manitoba should obtain ports on Lake Superior and Hudson's Bay. The masses outside of Ontario take no other interest in the subject than to oppose the extension of her 40 territory, without the least reference to her legal rights. I may notice in this connection an extraordinary assertion in Mr. W. McD. Dawson's evidence, to the effect that Quebec would not have consented to enter Confederation had the legal boundaries of Ontario been believed to be where they were placed by the award of the Arbitrators, or, perhaps I should rather say, where the witness himself stated them to be in his report in 1857. There is a very simple answer to Mr. McD. Dawson, and all who share his opinions. The boundaries of Ontario depend on the construction placed on the Statute of 1774, the Treaty of Peace of 1763, and the Proclamation in conformity with the Statute of 1791. The claim of the Dominion, as well as that of Ontario, is based on the construction of the law. Mr. McD. Dawson's recent pretension, which I need scarcely remind you, is at complete variance with the former assertions both of himself and of his brother, is based on the omission to define the western 50 boundaries in the Commissions of the Earl of Durham in 1838, and in subsequent Commissions, which, so far as I have any knowledge, is not deemed to have any legal effect by any of the disputants on the boundary question with the exception of the Messrs. Dawson.

CLAIMS TO MORE EXTENDED BOUNDARIES.

Having noticed those opponents of the award, who do not pretend to appeal to the law in support of their pretensions, I shall advert very briefly to the views of those who contend that the Proclamation issued under the Statute of 1791, extended the territories of Ontario beyond the boundaries of the Province of Quebec, as established by the Statute of 1774. The Act of 1791 declares that a message had been sent to both Houses of Parliament, signifying the royal intention to divide the Province of Quebec, and it then makes provision for the future government of the two Provinces to be created out of the old Province of Quebec. It is true that the Proclamation uses the term Canada instead of Quebec. I have already stated that although a Governor's Commission cannot be invoked in opposition to an Act of Parliament, it may fairly be referred to, when the language is at all ambiguous. It seems to me that the Proclamation of 1791 could not be construed to give an extension of territory not contemplated by the Act, but the first Commission issued under it to Lord Dorchester, describes the territory comprised in Upper Canada to be all lying to the westward of the line from Lake Temiscamingue to the boundary of Hudson's Bay, "as were part of our said Province of Quebec." The Arbitrators concurred so far with the judgment of the Lower Canada Court in 1818, as to confine the western boundary to that established by the Act of 1774. I have now to refer to a mild criticism, which I notice merely to draw attention to what I consider a very reasonable view of the south-western boundary. Shortly after the publication of the award, a writer in the Monetary Times, of Toronto, criticised the decision to adopt the north-western angle of the Lake of the Woods as the south-western boundary, on the ground that the true boundary was a point on the meridian of the source of the Mississippi, due west [from] the international boundary. The writer took precisely the same view as the Arbitrators—that under the Statute of 1774, the western boundary was the Mississippi River, and it must be obvious that such was the view of the diplomatists who negotiated the Treaty of Peace between Great Britain and the United States. Moreover, he admitted that the award "cannot be impeached as inequitable," although he gave it as his own opinion that the Arbitrators had "stumbled" on a decision which, "if the work had to be done over again, we fail to see in what respects it could be materially improved." I admit that there is much to be said in favour of the view taken by the writer in the Monetary Times, which I believe was likewise the view of the Hon. Wm. McDougall, who has studied the question very carefully, and who has pronounced himself strongly in favour of the Mississippi having been the western boundary of the Province of Quebec, under the Act of 1774. Practically it is a matter of no importance whether the south-westerly boundary is at the international boundary, or at a point a few miles farther west, that would be intersected by a line on the meridian of the source of the Mississippi.

HON. WM. MCDUGALL'S OPINION.

I have noticed Mr. McDougall's opinion on the south-westerly boundary, and it may be convenient to advert here to his criticism on the award as to the north-easterly boundary. In his speech on the subject in the House of Commons in 1880, Mr. McDougall stated that he had become satisfied that the words "boundary line of Hudson's Bay" had been a clerical error of the Attorney-General, but as he did not state the grounds for that opinion, I am unable to judge whether they are entitled to any weight. It appears, however, from his evidence before the Committee, that when in England, in the year 1869, he took a great deal of trouble to ascertain whether the description was a clerical error, He searched the records of the Colonial Office without success, and then went to the Privy Council Office where he procured the Attorney-General's fiat, which, he said, he opened "with a good deal of anxiety," only to find the same language as in the original Proclamation, "to the boundary line of Hudson's Bay." He still, however, clings to his opinion that "it was an error of the Attorney-General, who, being human in those days, as in these, was liable to err." May it not be possible that Mr. McDougall himself has erred in his conclusion that an error was committed by others? The Arbitrators,

APPENDIX.
Sec. II.
The Arbitration.

I need scarcely add, did not feel themselves justified in assuming that the Proclamation issued in conformity with an Act of Parliament contained an important error. Mr. McDougall likewise stated that the Arbitrators "had found in some communications between the Imperial Government and their officers in this country, the words 'to the boundary line of Hudson's Bay.'" This seems to me an extraordinary mode of describing a Proclamation issued on the authority of the King in Council, for the division of the Province of Quebec, in accordance with an Act of Parliament. Mr. McDougall took no notice of the Commissions in which the shore of Hudson's Bay was declared the boundary, nor does he seem to have recollected that on every occasion when the territorial boundary was meant the description was invariably "the territory belonging to the Merchants Adventurers trading to Hudson's Bay." Mr. McDougall has acknowledged that the Hudson's Bay Company had at one time agreed to accept the Albany River as the southern boundary of their territory; and although it was never agreed to by the high contracting parties, still the fact that the Hudson's Bay Company at that period made no claim to any country south of the Albany River is confirmatory of the correctness of the award.

MR. W. McD. DAWSON'S OPINION.

I shall now proceed to the consideration of another view of the boundary question. In the report of the Select Committee of 1880, the evidence of Mr. W. McD. Dawson is prominently brought forward as that of the person "who was the first to investigate the case on the part of Canada, in 1857, than whom no one should have a more thorough knowledge of the subject." Mr. McD. Dawson himself states in his evidence that he wrote a report in 1857, for the Commissioner of Crown Lands, which, he adds "has been the cause of all the controversy that has since taken place in relation thereto." He 20 gave an interesting account of the circumstances under which he wrote this well-known report, having assured Mr. Cauchon, who was then his chief, "that there was no authority whatever for such a boundary" as the northern watershed of the St. Lawrence.

Lecture of Sir
Francis Hincks on the subject of
the Award,

I may state, before noticing Mr. Dawson's evidence further, that it ought to be carefully read together with his own report of 1857, and I shall be much surprised if any different opinion from my own is arrived at, and that, I must acknowledge, is that it is a mass of inconsistency. Mr. Dawson informed the Committee that "the case presented by the Dominion was no case at all," that the learned Counsel, "after a great deal of desultory reading, failed to seize the true facts of history bearing on it," and he then referred to the prevailing ignorance of the subject, which he illustrated by a quotation from the evidence of his esteemed friend, Col. Dennis, Deputy Minister of the Interior, which I shall 30 have to notice later.

CHARGE AGAINST DOMINION COUNSEL.

Mr. Dawson has not only made the very serious charge against the learned counsel for the Dominion, which I have just cited, but in his answer to a question whether he had himself been consulted, he declared that "it very often seems to be the habit of Governments not to consult those who know most about the case that has to be dealt with." I should feel that an apology was due from me to the learned counsel for the Dominion, Mr. McMahon, Q.C., of Ontario, and Mr. Monk, of Montreal, for noticing such a charge, were it not that it enables me to define clearly Mr. W. McD. Dawson's peculiar position as to this question. It will not, I presume, be denied by a single member of the legal profession, or indeed by anyone else, that the duty of the learned counsel for the Dominion, was to advocate the 40 claim of the Government which they represented, to the utmost extent of their ability. The Dominion claim which was formally made in March, 1872, was to a boundary, on the west, on the meridian due north from the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, and on the north, to the height of land dividing the waters which flow into Hudson's Bay, from those emptying into the Great Lakes. Such was the Dominion claim made in 1872, in the form of a draft of instructions for a Commission to be appointed to survey and locate the boundaries. If the Dominion counsel had neglected to support the pretension, which they were retained to defend, they would of course be liable to censure, but it has never been pretended by any one, until very recently by Sir John A. Macdonald, that they failed for want of zeal. I am sure that the Arbitrators would have unanimously borne testimony to their exertions in support of the boundaries, which they were instructed to contend for. But then they did not 50 consult Mr. W. McD. Dawson. Now it is quite true, that [there] is a very wide divergence between Mr. Dawson's opinions in 1857 and in 1880. Most assuredly, no lawyer who had read Mr. Dawson's report of 1857, would have called on him to support the Dominion claim, and if the learned counsel could have made a forecast of Mr. McD. Dawson's evidence in 1880, he was the last person to whom they would have applied for aid in support of their case. An extract or two from Mr. McD. Dawson's evidence will suffice. He said, "I think, therefore, that in commencing their description at the shore of Hudson's Bay, the Arbitrators were correct." Then having referred to Lord Durham's Commission, in 1838, which only defined the boundary into Lake Superior, Mr. Dawson states in his evidence: "From that date the Province of Upper Canada no longer subsisted as a divisional 10 part of the old Province of Quebec." The Messrs. Dawson avow that they hold the opinion that the language in the Commission of a Governor can supersede an Act of Parliament, although in the report it is said, "it may be remarked that the judges who appeared before your Committee seemed to be strongly of the opinion that the boundaries of provinces, with constituted governments, could not be altered by Commissions to Governors, or Proclamations." I refer to Mr. Dawson's opinion at present, merely to demonstrate the impossibility of counsel employed to advocate the Dominion claim, being guided by his advice, valuable as he himself pronounced to be. Let me suggest a case. Had the Government of Mr. Mackenzie, in 1873, instructed the learned counsel which it employed, to abandon altogether the pretension of Sir John Macdonald in 1872, and to adopt the Dawson theory, if I may so term it, that the true western boundary was to be determined by a 20 Commission to Lord Durham in 1838, as terminating at the east end of Lake Superior, and had the decision been precisely what it was, as it most assuredly would have been, what, I ask, would have been the consequence? Why, from one end of the Dominion to the other it would have been proclaimed that the Government of Mr. Mackenzie had deliberately sacrificed the rights of the Dominion to the Province of Ontario. Between those who contend for the due north line, and for the Mississippi boundary, there is at least one principle held in common. Both profess to be governed by the Statute of 1774, and to claim the boundary prescribed by that Act. They differ as to the interpretation of the Act, but they acknowledge it as their guide. The Messrs. Dawson repudiate it altogether, and claim that the Province of Canada had been deprived, by virtue of the language of a Commission, of territory over which it had exercised jurisdiction during many years. I feel assured that on one point there can 30 be no difference of opinion, and that is, that Mr. Mackenzie's Government acted wisely in instructing their counsel, to maintain the Dominion Claim precisely as it had been put forward by the Government of Sir John Macdonald. Even if Mr. Dawson's view of the question were as sound, as I believe it to be the reverse, it would have been most improper for counsel to have entertained it. Their duty was to defend the Dominion claim, not that of the Messrs. Dawson; and they performed it faithfully.

MR. WM. MCD. DAWSON'S INCONSISTENCY.

In his report in 1857, Mr. Dawson had taken the most extreme view of the claim of Ontario, then part of United Canada, and he felt it necessary to endeavour to reconcile that opinion with the one which he subsequently adopted in 1880. He declares in his last evidence: "I claimed these countries as the birthright of the people of United Canada," but he soon after admitted that "the claim put 40 forward by me would have inured, if properly and efficiently maintained, to the benefit of Upper Canada, but that was not a point of special importance at the time. We were one Province, under one Government and one Legislature, and every acre of those vast regions was as much the property of the one as the other portion of the United Provinces." This is a specimen of Mr. McD. Dawson's mode of reasoning. The claim was either in accordance with the Act of 1774, or it was without foundation. In 1791 Mr. Dawson must admit, that all the territory in the old Province of Quebec, which was not comprised in Lower Canada, became part of Upper Canada. The disputed territory, as I will call it, for the sake of convenience, was, of course, part of the United Province, and when the Provinces were again separated, Ontario retained the precise boundaries of Upper Canada. To do the Dominion Government justice, they have never pretended that Ontario was not entitled to her true boundaries, but have merely 50 disputed what those boundaries really were. Mr. Dawson asserts that the decision of the Arbitrators 'has no basis whatever of history or fact to sustain it,' and he then gives it as his opinion that they had "one of three things open to them to declare," viz.: 1st, "That Ontario embraced the whole North-West Territory under the Proclamation of 1791, which I have just dismissed as untenable." The Arbitrators dismissed it likewise, although Mr. McD. Dawson's report of 1857 was calculated to induce them to adopt that boundary. 2nd, "That it was bounded by the line prescribed by the Quebec Act of 1774." That was precisely what the Arbitrators did decide, although the precise boundary was necessarily governed by the terms of the treaties between Great Britain and the United States, negotiated during the interval. 3rd, "That a more recent definition, which they seemed to have intended to adopt in part, should prevail." Mr. Dawson is completely mistaken if he imagines that the north-eastern boundary was adopted on the ground of the language in the Commissions of Lord Durham and of other Governors. The Proclamation issued under the authority of the Statute of 1791, and of an Order in Council, was the ground of the decision, although the Commissions were held to be corroborative of 10 language, not quite so clear as might have been wished. It appears, then, that, although Mr. W. McD. Dawson stated in his evidence that the decision of the Arbitrators "had no basis whatever of history or fact to sustain it," the south-western boundary was determined on one of the three grounds which he himself stated in his evidence it was "open to them to declare," viz.: "That it was bounded by the line prescribed by the Quebec Act in 1774," while, as regards the north-eastern boundary, his own language in his evidence is: "I think, therefore, that in commencing their description at the shores of Hudson's Bay, the Arbitrators were correct." I think that it will be generally admitted that the evidence of Mr. W. McD. Dawson has no weight whatever, and I shall therefore proceed to consider the course which the Dominion Government has adopted with reference to this boundary dispute.

It will, I presume, be at once admitted that the Province of Ontario is entitled to precisely the same territory west of the Quebec boundary line to which United Canada was entitled prior to Confederation. I have already referred to Mr. Cauchon's report of 1857, which Mr. McD. Dawson claims as his own, and which is published as his in the Appendix to the Report of the Select Committee of 1880. That report, which was adopted by the Government of the day, concludes a long historical statement in the following words—"This brief chronological sketch of the history of the Company, and of the circumstances connected therewith, must sufficiently show that they have acquired no territorial grant whatever under either of the two conditions to which their Charter was subject: first, as regards the countries then known upon 'the coasts and confines' of Hudson's Bay, because they were already in possession of another Christian prince, and were, therefore, excluded from the grant in terms of the 30 Charter itself; and second, as regards discoveries, because when they first penetrated into the interior, one hundred and four years after the date of their Charter, they found the country, and a long-established trade, in the hands of others, unless indeed as regards some discoveries to the north, which are of no special importance to Canada." In his evidence before a committee in 1857, Mr. McD. Dawson stated that for "the boundary designated for us by the Hudson's Bay Company, viz., the water-shed of the St. Lawrence, there is no earthly authority except themselves." Mr. Dawson's view, which gave Canada, now represented by Ontario, much more territory than was given to it by the Arbitrators, was deliberately adopted by the Government of the day. On the 16th January, 1869, a letter was addressed to the Colonial Department by the late Sir George E. Cartier and the Hon. William McDougall, from which I shall make a brief quotation:—"Whatever doubt may exist as to the 'utmost extent' of old 40 or French Canada, no impartial investigator of the evidence in the case can doubt that it extended to and included the country between the Lake of the Woods and the Red River." The chief opposition to the award of the Arbitrators has been raised by the professed admirers of Sir George Cartier, who declared that "no impartial investigator" would hesitate as to giving Ontario a greater extent of territory than that awarded by the Arbitrators. It is evident from another part of the letter, that Sir George E. Cartier and Mr. McDougall held the same views as the counsel for the prisoner in the De Reinhard case, as the counsel for the Ontario Government, as the Hon. Mr. Mills, and as both the Messrs. Dawson, so late as 1876. I shall now advert to the negotiations in 1872 between the Governments of the Dominion and of Ontario. On the 14th March of that year, the Hon. Joseph Howe, the Secretary of State, transmitted to Lieutenant-Governor Howland a draft of instructions to be given to 50 the Commissioner who was to be appointed to locate the boundary line. The instructions prescribed as the westerly boundary the meridian of the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, known as the due north line, and as the northerly boundary the height of land. This was objected to by Ontario, and the boundary has remained ever since in dispute, although, in a report made by Sir John Macdonald on the 1st May, 1872, the importance of establishing it without delay was forcibly urged. It is to be inferred from the evidence of Col. Dennis, Deputy Minister of the Interior, that the Dominion claim made early in 1872, and which was at complete variance with the previous pretensions of that Government, was based on a report from himself to the Minister of Justice, Sir John A. Macdonald, dated 1st October, 1871. In that report it is expressly stated in section 18, that the Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company described their grant "as extending over and including all lands and territories drained 10 by the waters emptying into Hudson's Bay," and reference is made to a copy of the Charter, marked "E." On this Mr. W. McD. Dawson remarks:—"Whereas there are no such words in it, nor anything that, as I would translate that very absurd document, could possibly bear such a construction." Mr. McD. Dawson did not, when pointing out the mistake into which Col. Dennis had fallen, advert to the fact that this misquotation from a document which, it may be presumed, Sir John Macdonald accepted without ascertaining its correctness, was made the ground of a territorial claim which, although nearly ten years have elapsed, is still in dispute.

AWARD SHOULD BE ADOPTED OR SET ASIDE ON APPEAL.

The question at issue between Ontario and the other Provinces comprised in the Dominion is so important that I feel that it would be unbecoming in us to make any complaint of the treatment of the Arbitrators, who faithfully discharged a public duty which they were called upon to perform. Their unanimous award, arrived at after a careful study by each Arbitrator of the evidence in the case, and without previous consultation or communication of any kind with one another, has been attacked in a manner wholly without precedent, to the best of my belief. I am persuaded that no Government in Great Britain would repudiate an agreement entered into by its predecessors to leave a disputed question to arbitration. This, however, is a point which I have no intention of discussing. I merely wish to state that my own anxious desire would be that there should be an appeal to set aside the award to the highest judicial tribunal. In the meantime I desire to record my entire dissent from the statement of Mr. S. J. Dawson, as reported in Hansard, that "the award was made in the absence of anything like full information on the subject, and even without a due consideration of the information 30 that was available;" and having by your indulgence been permitted to explain the grounds on which the award was made, I rely with implicit confidence on the judgment of an enlightened public as to its merits.

SUMMARY OF CHARGES—DEFENCE OF COUNSEL.

I shall be as brief as possible in summing up. I think the charges may be stated as—1st, "The whole case was thrown away—it looks almost as if it was deliberately thrown away." "It was most wretchedly managed on the part of the Dominion." 2nd, "They, the Arbitrators, did not affect to set up the true boundaries according to law; they laid down a mere conventional or convenient boundary." I have given the utterances of Sir John Macdonald in the House of Commons on the 18th March last as I find them in Hansard. In support of the first charge, Sir John Macdonald referred to the Imperial Act authorizing the surrender of Rupert's Land and the North-West to Canada, and stated that "the 40 contention was not raised that the Act says that Rupert's Land shall be held to be whatever was in possession or deemed to be in possession of the Hudson's Bay Company;" and again, "to show how ineffectually the Dominion case was presented, I may say that that view of the subject was never presented before the Arbitrators." I fear very much that, owing doubtless to his more pressing duties, Sir John has been unable to read the papers in the boundary case, and that he has relied on others, as in the case already noticed of Col. Dennis's misquotation in 1871, to supply him with facts. Had he read the parliamentary blue book, he would have found, at page 254 in the Dominion case submitted by Mr. MacMahon, Q.C., the statement that the 2nd section of the Act, 31 and 32 Vic., cap. 105, provides that Rupert's Land "should include the whole of the lands and territories held or claimed to be held by the said Governor and Company." The words underlined were placed in italics, but possibly by the 50 framer of the report or some other official. Mr. MacMahon, however, in his address to the Arbitrators, as will be seen at the foot of pages 283 and 284, specially brought the clause under consideration as being "a confirmation of everything that the Hudson's Bay Company had been claiming under their charter," adding "that is a point which I am sure the Arbitrators will not lose sight of in dealing with the question." And yet Sir John Macdonald stated in the broadest and most explicit terms that Mr. MacMahon never presented this view to the Arbitrators, and consequently deliberately threw away the case. A word now as to the Arbitrators. I can only answer for myself. My interpretation of the Rupert's Land Act is that it was intended to convey to the Dominion the whole property of the Hudson's Bay Company, with certain specified reservations that have no bearing on the point under consideration. I did not imagine that the Act could be so interpreted as to transfer territory belonging to a third party, and I am perfectly certain that if Sir John Macdonald's construction of the statute could be maintained, it would be in direct contradiction to the spirit and intention of the Act, and a gross act of injustice. I proceed to the second charge. The duty of the Arbitrators was to find the true boundaries of Ontario, and they are charged with declaring "a mere conventional or convenient boundary." Now, for my present purpose, I shall refer merely to those pretensions which specially engaged the consideration of the Arbitrators as affecting the south-western boundary. On the claim under the Proclamation of 1791, which the Arbitrators held to be valid, notwithstanding the able arguments of counsel, of the Hon. Mr. Mills and others, including the Messrs. Dawson, one of whom, the Chairman of the Committee of 1880, fixed the boundary at the White Earth River, 450 miles west of the Lake of the Woods, they concurred in the judgment of the Quebec Court in 1818 that no territory could be awarded to Ontario that was not comprised in the old Province of Quebec as created by the Act of 1774, modified by the Treaty of 1783 with the United States and by subsequent treaties. They entirely rejected the Dominion claim to a boundary on what is known as the due north line, and having no doubt whatever that the Mississippi River was the western boundary of the old Province of Quebec by the Act of 1774, and that by the Treaty of 1783 the south-western boundary must be either at the international boundary at the north-western angle of the Lake of the Woods, or still further west, they decided in favour of that boundary which they were clearly of opinion Ontario was entitled to. On the north-east they were clearly of opinion that the height of land boundary could not be sustained, and that the true point of departure was the point on James' Bay due north from the head of Lake Temiscamingue.

CHARGE OF ADOPTING A CONVENIENT LINE REFUTED.

The sole ground for the charge that they adopted a conventional or convenient boundary is, that 30 the line connecting the north-eastern and south-western boundaries was adopted for the sake of convenience. The Arbitrators were guided in their decisions solely by Acts of Parliament, Proclamations authorized by Orders in Council on the authority of Acts of Parliament, and international treaties. They found in the Proclamation of 1791, that after reaching James' Bay, the description proceeded thus: "including all the territory westward and southward of the said line to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada." If the critics of the award believe such language susceptible of the construction that it lays down a precise spot on the north-west as a boundary, then their charge might have some foundation, but the fact is that the language would have justified the Arbitrators in extending the boundaries of Ontario very considerably. They were strongly urged by Col. Dennis, one of the permanent staff of the Department of the Interior, after their decision 40 as to the south-westerly and north-easterly boundaries became known, to connect the two points by a natural boundary; and being aware of the fact that the Albany River had been formerly suggested by the Hudson's Bay Company as a satisfactory southern boundary, they adopted it. It is not a little singular that the award was promptly accepted by Ontario, although the only questions of doubt were decided in favour of the Dominion. Both on the west and north the doubts were whether Ontario should not have had more territory.

THE MANITOBA BOUNDARY ACT.

I must say a few words on the Boundary Act of last session, which appears to me to be a most extraordinary attempt to solve the question in controversy. The objection made to the award of the Arbitrators is that they did not find the true boundaries, but adopted a convenient boundary. I need 50 not repeat my refutation of this allegation, but even on the assumption that it had any force, it would not apply to the western boundary, regarding which the Arbitrators were clearly of opinion that the international boundary at the north-western angle of the Lake of the Woods, was the true point of departure. The northern boundary which, owing to the vagueness of the language employed in the Proclamation issued under the Act of 1791, is more open to doubt, remains still in dispute between the Dominion and Ontario, so that the Act has simply engaged the Province of Manitoba in the controversy as to one branch of the award, and has thus made confusion worse confounded. Moreover, the Dominion is now contending for a territory on the north of Ontario and eastward of Manitoba's new boundary, which could scarcely be erected into a Province. I do not think, however, that the Act of last session will prove disadvantageous to Ontario. It has put an end to the Dawson scheme of a new Province of Algoma, and it has rendered it almost necessary to settle the western boundary, in which Manitoba is interested, without reference to the northern boundary, with which that Province has no special concern. The western boundary is not only the most important, but the least open to doubt, as I think I have already clearly demonstrated. I will only add in conclusion that the Arbitrators were of opinion that having reference to all the facts of the case, the boundaries set forth in the award were supported to a larger extent than any other line by these facts, and by the considerations and reasons which should and would guide and govern the determination of the question by any competent legal or other tribunal.

THE PROVINCIAL SECRETARY (ONTARIO) TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE (CANADA).*

TORONTO, 31st December, 1878.

20 SIR,—I am directed by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor to intimate that a measure will be introduced during the approaching session of the Legislature to give effect by way of declaratory enactment and otherwise, to the award made by the arbitrators appointed by the Governments of Canada and Ontario to determine the northerly and westerly boundaries of the Province of Ontario. The Act, I presume, may be in substance the same as R. S. O., chapter 4, with the variations necessary in consequence of the award having now been made. No proclamation was issued, as had been contemplated when the Act was passed. See section 3.

Correspondence and Documents subsequent to the Award, 1878-9.

I am further directed respectfully to remind the Government of Canada that the territory which was in dispute before the award was made, extends on the easterly side of Ontario from, say, the Rocky Mountains to a line drawn due north from the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi, and extends on 30 the northerly side from, say, the height of land to the most northerly limit of Canada; that the award assigns part of this territory to the Dominion, and part to Ontario, and that the administration of justice will continue to be surrounded with difficulties and uncertainties, especially in the matter of jurisdiction, until the award is confirmed by express legislation at Ottawa and here; and that the subject assumes unusual importance in view of the construction of public works within the territory and the consequent influx of an unsettled and migratory population.

Prov. Sec. (Ont.) to Secretary of State (Can.), 31 December, 1878.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor will be glad to learn that such legislation as may be necessary to give effect to the award will be had at Ottawa at the next session of the Parliament of Canada; as the legislation should, it is respectfully submitted, be as nearly as possible simultaneous and identical.

His Honour will be glad to receive and consider any suggestions in connection with this object, 40 and also to receive as soon as possible the maps, field notes, etc., etc., relative to so much of the territory assigned to Ontario as had been surveyed under the authority of the Dominion.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

ARTHUR S. HARDY,

Secretary.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE PROVINCIAL SECRETARY.*

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,

OTTAWA, 8th January, 1879.

SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 31st December last, addressed to the Honourable the Secretary of State, respecting legislative enactments to give effect to Award made by the Arbitrators to determine the northerly and westerly boundaries of the Province of Ontario, and am directed to state that the same will not fail to receive all due consideration.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

EDOARD J. LANGEVIN,

Under-Secretary of State.

The Honourable A. S. Hardy, Provincial Secretary, Toronto.

OPENING OF THE LEGISLATURE, 9TH JANUARY, 1879.†Lieut.-Gov.'s
Speech, 9th
Jan., 1879.

It is also my pleasing duty to call your attention to the settlement by arbitration of the northern and western boundaries of Ontario, since you last assembled. The decision of the Arbitrators declares the boundaries of the Province to extend to the waters of Hudson's Bay on the north, and to the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods on the west, these limits embracing an area of many thousand square miles beyond the limits to which the claim of the Dominion since 1871 would have confined us. You will be invited to approve of a measure having for its object the preservation of order, the administration of justice, and the encouragement of settlement and enterprise in this territory. I have reason to believe that the outlay necessary to secure these objects will be more than compensated by the revenue to be derived from the country.

SIR,—As in the report of the proceedings in the House of Commons of 1st instant, appearing in the newspapers, it is stated that the papers relating to the North-West boundary question have been mislaid, I am instructed, in order that no time may be lost in introducing the legislation necessary to set at rest any doubts as to the boundaries of Ontario, to forward to you the following documents:—

- 1st. A copy of the printed collection of Statutes, Documents and Papers bearing on the question.
- 2nd. Printed statement of the Case of the Government of Canada.
- 3rd. Printed statement of the Case of the Province of Ontario.
- 4th. A manuscript copy of the Order in Council of the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario with reference to the appointment of arbitrators.
- 5th. A manuscript copy of the Award.
- 6th. Printed copy of correspondence between the Secretary of State of Canada and the Secretary of this Province respecting legislation with reference to the Award.

I am further desired to say, that in order to facilitate the consideration of this matter, copies of the printed documents above mentioned have been forwarded to each member of the Dominion Government.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

Assistant Secretary.

THE ASSISTANT PROVINCIAL SECRETARY TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE,*

TORONTO, 23rd September, 1879.

SIR,—I am directed by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor to call the attention of the Government of Canada to my despatch, dated 31st December last, respecting the legislation needed to put beyond dispute, in civil and criminal cases, any question as to the western and northern limits of Ontario.

The measure therein referred to as intended to be submitted to the Legislature of Ontario was, as you are aware, passed at its last session; but no like Act was passed by the Parliament of Canada at its recent session.

I am to remind you that a report on the subject, by a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, was approved by His Excellency the Governor-General in Council on the 12th November, 1874, and that in this report it was set forth that, in a memorandum dated on that day, the Premier of the Dominion recommended concurrence in a proposition made by the Government of Ontario, to determine, by means of a reference, the northern and western boundaries of that Province relatively to the rest of the Dominion; that the Ontario Government having named the Honourable William Buell Richards, Chief Justice of Ontario, as one of the referees, the Premier submitted the name of the Honourable Lemuel Allan Wilnot, formerly Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of New Brunswick, to act in conjunction with him, and advised that authority should be given them to agree upon a third person, not being a resident of Canada, and that the determination of a majority of such three referees should be final and conclusive upon the limits to be taken as and for such boundaries respectively, and by the report of the Committee of the Privy Council it was recommended that the Dominion should agree to concurrent action with the Province of Ontario, in obtaining such legislation as might be necessary for giving binding effect to the conclusion which should be arrived at, and for establishing the northern and western boundaries of the Province of Ontario in accordance with the award.

A further report of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council was approved by His Excellency the Governor-General in Council on the 31st July, 1878, whereby it was stated that the Committee of the Council had under consideration the subject of the northern and western boundaries of the Province of Ontario, which under previous Orders in Council had been referred to the Honourable W. B. Richards, then Chief Justice of Ontario, named as referee on behalf of that Province, but who was subsequently replaced by the then Chief Justice, the Honourable R. A. Harrison, and to the Honourable Sir Francis Hincks, who had been named on behalf of the Dominion, and that subsequently to the action taken under the Order in Council of 12th November, 1874, it had been mutually agreed between the Governments of the Dominion and Ontario that the Right Honourable Sir Edward Thornton should be selected as third referee, and the Committee recommended that such selection should be confirmed by Minute of Council, and that the determination of such three referees should be final and conclusive upon the limits to be taken as and for such boundaries respectively.

Corresponding Orders in Council were made by this Province.

I am directed to respectfully suggest that an award having, on 3rd August, 1878, been duly made in pursuance of the reference, it is just that there should be no further delay in formally recognizing the award as having definitely settled the matters submitted to the arbitrators.

The Government of Ontario, on its part, acquiesced in the award, not because it was believed to have accorded to this Province all that was claimed on its behalf, or all that the Province might within its strict legal rights have had awarded to it, but because the tribunal appointed jointly by the two Governments was one to whose competency and character no one could take exception, and because according to the judgment of the people of Ontario neither party to the arbitration could consistently with good faith refuse to abide by the decision.

The Government of Ontario does not doubt that the Government and Parliament of Canada will ultimately take the same view, and I have respectfully to represent that the delay in announcing the acquiescence of the Dominion authorities, and in giving full effect otherwise to the award, has been embarrassing and injurious.

JOINT
APPENDIX.Sec. II.
The Arbitration.

Correspondence and Documents subsequent to the Award, 1879:

Ontario despatch, 23rd Sept., 1879.

The present Government of Canada has already been made aware that before the arbitrators met an exhaustive collection had been made by the Governments of Canada and Ontario, severally, of all the facts, documents and evidence bearing upon the controversy; that everything material had been printed, and in a form which facilitated to the greatest practical degree, the full and prompt examination of the question at issue; that cases had been prepared on both sides, containing a summary of the respective claims and the reasons therefor; that these cases also had been printed and that the whole matter had been argued before the arbitrators by counsel.

With respect to the arbitrators it is manifest that no three persons could have been selected whose judgment would be entitled, in such a case, to more unqualified respect than that of the three arbitrators appointed. Sir Francis Hincks, as a Canadian publicist and statesman, is acknowledged to have few equals in shrewdness, industry or ripe experience; the late Chief Justice Harrison was a lawyer of the first rank, and a judge whose method of reasoning was always distinguished for its practical and common sense character; and Sir Edward Thornton, Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, brought to the consideration of the case, not only the aid of the very high abilities, but the absolutely independent judgment of one who could have no partialities or inclinations in favour of either side.

If the merits of the award have been considered by the Government of Canada they will have observed certain preliminary things in connection with the question which were and are beyond controversy. Amongst these are the facts that Ontario is entitled to the same limits as Upper Canada had whatever these were; that these limits embrace so much of the British territory west of the division line between Ontario and Quebec as belonged to France before the cession of 1763, and (what is the same thing) so much as belonged to the Province of Canada before Confederation, or (in other words) so much as belonged to the Dominion before its purchase of the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, and that the single question which the arbitrators had to consider was, what territory Canada had on the Ontario side of the division line before the recent purchase from the Hudson's Bay Company had been made.

It must further have been noticed that the territory awarded to Ontario is considerably less than had been officially claimed and insisted upon by the Province of Canada before Confederation, and by the Dominion afterwards, and considerably less, on the west, than, according to the legal opinion of Chief Justice Draper, in 1857, Canada was clearly entitled to.

Further, the territory so awarded to Ontario is less than was comprised in Upper Canada, according to the true intent and meaning of the Quebec Act (1774), as shown by its recitals, and by its known objects, and its history, including the proceedings thereon in the House of Commons, as reported in "Cavendish's Debates," and as set forth in the letter of the Right Honourable Edmund Burke, dated 2nd August, 1774, to his constituents, the Province of New York, whose agent he was at that time. All these documents are to be found amongst the printed documents already mentioned.

The terms of the Royal Commissions assigning or defining the boundaries of Canada and Upper Canada respectively, appear in the same book; and a reference to them will have shown to the Government of Canada that the territory awarded to Ontario is less than was given to the Province by the express terms of the Royal Commission (27th December, 1774,) which, immediately after the passing of the Quebec Act, was issued to Sir Guy Carleton, as Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of the Province; and also by the express terms of the Commission to his successor, Sir Frederick Haldimand; that the Commission to Sir Guy Carleton, after the treaty of Paris, 1763, expressly gives as one of the boundaries of the Province a line to the Lake of the Woods, thence through said lake to the most north-western point thereof (as the Arbitrators have done), and from thence in a due west course to the River Mississippi. The Arbitrators have not given to the Province any territory west of the Lake of the Woods.

The Government of Canada must also have observed that a paper was presented to Parliament previous to the passing of the Constitutional Act of 1791, describing the line which it was proposed to draw in order to divide the then Province of Quebec into two Provinces; that this line is described as drawn from the head of Lake Temiscaming due north until it should strike the boundary line of Hudson's Bay, including, as the paper stated, all the territory to westward and southward of the said line to the extent of the country commonly known by the name of Canada; that on the 24th August, 1791, an Order in Council referred to this paper, and divided the Province accordingly; that the subsequent Proclamation of General Clarke, in the same year, contained a description in the same words; that the Royal Commissions to Lord Dorechester and subsequent Governors-General, to and including the Commission to Lord Gosford in 1835, described the division line between Upper and Lower Canada in the same way, as extending to the boundary line of Hudson's Bay; and that the Commissions from that to the Earl of Durham, in 1838, to the Commission to Lord Elgin, in 1846, as well as the various other Royal Commissions, described the line of division as striking the shore of Hudson's Bay.

It is also undenied and undeniable that the Province of Upper Canada, for a period long antecedent to its union with Lower Canada, acted whenever there was occasion on the assumption that the boundaries of the Province were those so assigned by the Royal Commissions, and issued writs into the territory west of the line $89^{\circ} 9\frac{1}{2}'$ (which was the line insisted on by the Dominion after the purchase from the Hudson's Bay Company).

It is another significant fact of the same kind that the Province of Canada, as far back as 1850, procured from the Indians the surrender of their rights in the same territory west of that line, and from time to time thereafter made grants in the Queen's name, of the land west of the same line.

In truth, so far as the western boundary is concerned, it was proved to demonstration that the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods was the most easterly limit that could be assigned to the Province under any interpretation of the evidence.

There is an old decision of a Court in Lower Canada in what is called the De Reinhard case, in 20 favour of a more easterly line, viz., $89^{\circ} 9\frac{1}{2}'$ (the meridian of the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers), but on an examination of the case, of which a full report is in print and accessible, it will be found that the decision was come to without the Court being aware of the terms of the Royal Commissions to the Governors hereinbefore mentioned, and without attention having been called to the historical facts which are referred to in the recitals of the Quebec Act, and which give significance to these recitals as bearing on the question of boundary; nor was the Court in possession of the evidence of intention which is afforded by the debate on the Bill and by other means now known and relied upon as demonstrating the other construction. De Reinhard, though clearly guilty, was not executed, and the only known or supposed reason for pardoning him is that the British Government were advised that the conclusion of the Court on the point in question was not maintainable. This is stated in an official paper on the part of the late Province of Canada.

30 Only one of the Royal Commissions hereinbefore mentioned, so far as is known, was in print before the recent investigations; and when copies of these Commissions were procured and examined for the purposes of the arbitration, it became apparent that these Commissions alone set at rest all possible question that the westerly boundary of the Province included the Lake of the Woods; and that the northerly boundary extended to the shores of Hudson's Bay on the east, and to or beyond the most north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods on the west. How far north of these points our northerly boundary was to be found was a fair subject of controversy, but the territory north of these two points is of comparatively little value. It is to be observed that the line of the English and Albany Rivers, which was fixed upon by the Arbitrators as the northerly boundary, is not far north of a straight line connecting the two points mentioned, and has the advantage of presenting an almost 40 unbroken waterline; that it is thus a natural and convenient boundary; and that it gives to Ontario a less aggregate quantity of territory in the north than is assigned to Canada in some of the maps of the Hudson's Bay Company itself; and gives to the Province a less northerly boundary than the Company in 1701, thirty years after the Charter, was content with and unsuccessfully endeavoured to restrict Canada to.

But if it were far less clear than it is that the award does not give Ontario more territory than the Province was entitled to, and if the reasons which justify the conclusions of the Arbitrators were far less clear and strong than they are, it is respectfully submitted that the award demands the active acquiescence and recognition of the parties to the reference. The question of boundaries was in controversy, it was referred by mutual consent to the distinguished gentlemen named, they have made 50 their award and the fact is conclusive in regard to all questions on the subject.

I am further to remind the Government of Canada that the settlement of the controversy, as well as the explorations for railway and other purposes, have drawn public attention to the territory north and west of Lake Superior, that settlement therein is proceeding, that various enterprises are establishing themselves, that speculation is likely to be directed to this region, and that various causes are at work favourable to an influx of population, both of a settled and floating character.

In view of these considerations the Government of Ontario trusts that the Government of Canada will recognize the propriety of announcing without further delay their intention to submit to Parliament, next session, a Bill declaring the boundary established by the Arbitrators to be the true northerly and westerly boundaries of Ontario, and to use the influence of the Government to have the measure accepted by both Houses, and assented to by His Excellency the Governor-General. 10

I am to renew the request contained in a former despatch that the Government of Canada would be pleased at once to forward to this Government the maps, field notes, etc., etc., relative to so much of the territory assigned to Ontario as has been surveyed under the authority of the Dominion.

SIR,—I have the honour to call your attention to my despatch bearing date the 31st day of December, 1878, and to intimate that the Government of Ontario have not yet been favoured with the reply of your Government to the suggestions made and information sought by my communication. I beg further to intimate that the Arbitrators having made their award, the Government of the Province understand that the provisional arrangement theretofore in force between the Province and the Dominion, having reference to the boundary and the north-west portion of the Province is at an end, the award having "definitely settled" the boundaries between the Province and the Dominion. 40

OTTAWA, 12th January, 1880.

With respect to the Statutes passed by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario, in the Month of March, 1879, I have the honour to report as follows:—

Cap. 1.—“An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money to defray the expenses of Civil Government, for the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, and for other purposes therein mentioned.”

Cap. 2.—“An Act respecting the Northerly and Westerly boundaries of Ontario.”

These Acts do not seem to call for the exercise of the power of disallowance. I recommend that they be left to their operation.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO, PASSED ON THE 3RD MARCH, 1880.†

That by an agreement made between the Government of Canada and the Government of Ontario, it was decided that, subject to the approval of the Parliament of Canada and the Legislature of Ontario, the questions which had risen concerning the northerly and westerly boundaries of the Province of Ontario should be determined by arbitration; and that by Orders in Council, passed by the respective Governments, it was declared, that the determination of the Arbitrators appointed to make such award should be “final and conclusive.”

Resolutions
Leg. Ass.,
3 March,
1880.

That in accordance with the agreement entered into by the respective Governments, the Right Honourable Sir Edward Thornton, Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, the late Hon. R. A. Harrison, Chief Justice of Ontario, and the Honourable Sir Francis Hincks, were agreed upon by Orders in Council of the respective Governments, as Arbitrators to determine the northerly and westerly boundaries of the Province of Ontario.

That on the 3rd day of August, 1878, the said Arbitrators delivered their award, wherein they declared and determined what are the northerly and westerly boundaries of the Province of Ontario.

That in a despatch dated 31st December, 1878, from His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, to the Secretary of State for Canada, His Honour intimated to the Government of Canada, that during the approaching session of the Legislature a measure would be introduced “to give effect by way of declaratory enactment or otherwise, to the award made by the Arbitrators to determine the northerly and westerly boundaries of the Province of Ontario;” and that His Honour, in the same despatch, also stated he would be glad to learn that such legislation as might be necessary to give effect to the award would be had at Ottawa in the next session of the Parliament of Canada.

That in a despatch dated 8th January, 1879, the Government of Canada acknowledged the receipt of the despatch last mentioned, and stated that the same would not fail to receive all due consideration, and that no intimation was given, in reply to His Honour's communication, that the Government of Canada would refuse to be bound by the award of the Arbitrators, or to submit to the Parliament of Canada a measure giving effect thereto.

That by an Act of the last session, the Legislature of Ontario did consent that the boundaries of the Province, as determined by the said award, should be declared to be northerly and westerly boundaries of the Province of Ontario, and by a further Act made provision for the Administration of Justice in the northerly and westerly parts of Ontario.

That on the 16th January, 1869, the Government of the Dominion of Canada, through its members and representatives, contended before Her Majesty's Imperial Government that the western boundary

"extended to and included the country between the Lake of the Woods and Red River," and that the northern boundary included the whole region of Hudson's Bay."

That the boundaries then claimed by the Government of the Dominion, on behalf of Canada, as against the pretensions of the Hudson's Bay Company, would, on the same grounds, be the boundaries of the Province of Ontario, and would give to Ontario a territory vastly in excess of that embraced in the award of the Arbitrators.

That by an Order in Council, approved on the 28th November, 1871, the constitutional advisers of His Excellency the Governor-General of Canada, obtained the sanction of the Crown to the statement that "it was of much consequence that the ascertaining and fixing on the ground of the boundary line in question, should be, as far as possible, expedited;" that by another Order in Council, approved on the 9th April, 1872, His Excellency's advisers obtained the assent of the Crown to the opinion that both Governments would "feel it their duty to settle, without delay, upon some proper mode of determining, in an authoritative manner, the true position of such boundary;" that by another Order in Council, approved on the 7th November, 1872, His Excellency's advisers obtained the further sanction of the Crown to the statement that "the importance of obtaining an authoritative decision as to the limits, to the north and to the west, of the Province of Ontario had already been affirmed by a Minute in Council," and "that the establishment of criminal and civil jurisdiction and the necessity of meeting the demands of settlers and miners for the acquisition of titles to lands, combined to render such a decision indispensable."

Resolutions
Leg. Ass.,
3 March,
1880.

That although so long since as the 12th November, 1874, and as the result of protracted negotiations, the Government of Canada, by Order in Council, consented to concur in the proposition of the Government of Ontario to determine the northern and western boundaries of Ontario by means of a reference; and although information was from time to time given to Parliament by the Government of Canada of the progress of the arrangements for such reference, no action was taken, nor was any effort made by or in the Parliament of Canada, previous to the award being given, to arrest or prevent the reference agreed upon by the respective Governments of Canada and Ontario; that in May, 1878, the Parliament of Canada granted $15,000 to defray the expenses of the Ontario Boundary Commission,

That this House regrets that, notwithstanding the joint and concurrent action of the respective Governments in the premises, and the unanimous award of the Arbitrators, the Government of Canada has hitherto failed to recognize the validity of the said award, and that no legislation has been submitted to Parliament by the Government of Canada for the purpose of confirming the said award.

That nevertheless it is, in the opinion of this House, the duty of the Government of Ontario to take such steps as may be necessary to provide for the due Administration of Justice in the northerly and westerly parts of Ontario, and that this House believes it to be of the highest importance to the interests of this Province, and to the securing of the peace, order and good government of the said northerly and westerly parts of Ontario, that the rights of this Province, as determined and declared by the award of the arbitrators appointed by the concurrent agreement and action of the Governments of Canada and Ontario, should be firmly maintained.

That this House will at all times give its cordial support to the assertion, by the Government of Ontario, of the just claims and rights of this Province, and to all necessary or proper measures to vindicate such just claims and rights, and to sustain the award of the Arbitrators by which the northerly and westerly boundaries of this Province have been determined.

The Resolutions were carried on the following division.

Yeas.—Messieurs Appleby, Awrey, Badgerow, Ballantyne, Baxter, Bell, Bishop, Blezard, Boulter, Broder, Calvin, Cascaden, Chisholm, Creighton, Crooks, Dryden, Field, Fraser, Freeman, French, Gibson (Huron), Gibson (Hamilton), Graham, Hardy, Hawley, Hay, Jelly, Kerr, Laidlaw, Lauder, Livingston, Long, Lyon, McCrancy, McKim, McLaughlin, McMahon, Mack, Meredith, Metcalfe, Monk, Morgan, Morris, Mowat, Nairn, Near, Neelon, Pardee, Parkhill, Paxton, Richardson, Robertson (Cardwell), Ross, Sinclair, Springer, Striker, Tooley, Waters, Waterworth, White, Widdifield, Wigne, Wood, Young—64.

DOMINION ACT, 43 VIC., CAP. 36 (1880).

AN ACT RESPECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE IN THE TERRITORY IN DISPUTE BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE PROVINCE OF ONTARIO AND OF THE DOMINION OF CANADA.

Whereas certain territory on the western and northern boundary of Ontario is claimed by the Government of Ontario as being within the said Province, and whereas such claim is disputed; and whereas the Parliament of Canada is desirous of making suitable provision for the Administration of Criminal Justice within the said territory until the dispute is determined;

Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. Every crime or offence committed in any part of the said territory may be inquired of, tried and punished within any county or district in the Province of Ontario or the Province of Manitoba, or in the District of Keewatin, and such crime or offence shall be within the jurisdiction of any court, judge, magistrate or magistrates, or justice or justices of the peace, or other functionary having jurisdiction over crimes or offences of the like nature committed within the limits of the county or district in which such crime or offence is prosecuted; and such court, judge, magistrate or magistrates, justice or justices, or other functionary, shall proceed thereon by way of preliminary investigation, and to trial, judgment and execution, or other punishment, for such crime or offence, in the same manner as if such crime or offence had been committed within the county or district where such trial is had.
- 20 2. Such crime or offence shall be sufficiently laid and charged, whether it is laid and charged to have been committed in Ontario, or in the District of Keewatin, and any sentence which might have been imposed upon the offender had the offence been committed either in an undisputed part of Ontario or in an undisputed part of Keewatin, may be imposed upon an offender convicted under this Act.
3. The next preceding two sections shall apply to any crime or offence heretofore committed, as well as to every crime or offence hereafter committed, in the said territory.
4. Where any person charged with the commission of any crime or offence within the territory above described is in custody in any gaol within the Province of Ontario, or within the Province of Manitoba, charged with the said crime or offence, and it is intended that such person shall be tried in a province other than the province in a gaol of which he is confined, or in a different part of the same province, then any judge of any Superior Court of the province in a gaol of which such prisoner is confined, having criminal jurisdiction, or any such court, on application by or on behalf of the Minister of Justice of Canada, or of the Attorney-General of Ontario, or in case the prisoner is in custody at Prince Arthur's Landing and it is intended to try him at Sault Ste. Marie, then the judge of the District of Algoma, on application as aforesaid, may make an order upon the keeper of such gaol to deliver the said prisoner to the person named in such order to receive him; and such person shall, at the time prescribed in such order, convey such prisoner to the place at which he is to be tried, there to remain in custody, subject to the order of the court by which it is intended he shall be tried, or of any other court which may have jurisdiction to try him. In case the prisoner is confined in any gaol or lock-up in the said disputed territory, any judge of a Superior Court of Ontario or Manitoba having 40 criminal jurisdiction may make the like order.
5. The judge or court, on granting the said order may, if the judge or court thinks fit, direct that unless the prisoner is tried within a time limited in the said order, he shall be either discharged from custody on his own recognizance or on bail, or returned forthwith to the gaol from which he was taken, as the said judge or court may consider proper, and the terms of the said order shall be duly obeyed; provided that the judge, or any other judge of the same court, or the court, may, at any time, upon application made in that behalf, vary the terms of the said order.
6. The provisions of this Act are merely cumulative to the law as it now stands.
7. Whenever, under any law of Canada, any judge, stipendiary magistrate, justice of the peace or other functionary, is authorized to commit to a common gaol, house of correction or lock-up house, or to the custody of the North-West Mounted Police, any person convicted before him of an offence committed in any part of the North-West Territories, or of the District of Keewatin, or in any part of the said disputed territory, then if there be no proper place of confinement for or within the locality in which the conviction is had or the offence was committed, or if for any reason it would, in his opinion, be more convenient or less expensive so to do, the said judge, stipendiary magistrate, justice of the peace or other functionary may commit such person to the gaol at Winnipeg, or to the gaol at Prince Arthur's Landing, whichever may, in his opinion, be nearest to or most conveniently accessible from the place of conviction.

8. Whenever any person is committed to gaol under the preceding section, any constable or other person, in whose charge such person is to be conveyed to the place of imprisonment, shall have the same power to hold and convey such person and to re-take him in case of an escape, and otherwise deal with such person as if he had been committed to such gaol by some court or authority competent (independently of the said section) to so commit him.

9. It shall not be necessary in any warrant of commitment under this Act, or in any conviction or sentence upon which such warrant is issued, that any reason should be stated which renders it more convenient or less expensive, or that it should be stated that, in the opinion of the convicting judge, stipendiary magistrate, justice of the peace or other functionary, it is more convenient or less expensive that the offender should be committed to the gaol mentioned in the warrant, or that such gaol is in his opinion nearer to or more conveniently accessible from the place of conviction.

10. The Governor in Council may, from time to time, make arrangements with the Governments of Ontario and Manitoba, respectively, for the payment of such sums as may be agreed upon for the confinement in the said gaols at Prince Arthur's Landing and Winnipeg, respectively, of such persons as may have been committed to either of such gaols for offences not committed within the Province in which such gaol is situate.

11. This Act shall remain in force until the end of the next Session of Parliament and no longer.

EXTRACT FROM THE SPEECH OF HIS HONOUR THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF ONTARIO, ON THE OPENING OF THE LEGISLATURE, 13TH JANUARY, 1881.*

Lieut.-Gov.
Speech, 13th
Jan., 1881.

It is much to be regretted that the Dominion Government have taken no step to obtain, and have hitherto shown no intention of seeking to obtain, from the Parliament of Canada, legislation confirming the award determining the northerly and westerly boundaries of Ontario, made two years ago by three most distinguished arbitrators chosen by the two Governments, and who had before them all the evidence obtainable from the most diligent researches both in America and Europe, or brought to light during the many discussions bearing on the subject that have taken place during the past century. The result of the inaction of the Dominion Government in this respect is to defer the settlement and organization of a large extent of country; to deprive the inhabitants of that district of those safeguards of peace and order which they, in common with all others, are entitled to enjoy; and to withhold from the people of Ontario the benefits which the possession of that territory would afford.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF ONTARIO TO THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE (CANADA), WITH RESPECT TO INTERIM LEGISLATION.†

TORONTO,

Gen. to Min.

1881.

Dear Sir,—I hope that the present session of the Dominion Parliament will not be allowed to come to an end without the necessary Act being passed adopting and confirming the Boundary Award. If, however, we are again to be disappointed, some additional legislation is absolutely required to mitigate the serious evils consequent upon the unhappy position in which the territory in question is placed. No magistrate or justice of the peace acting in the disputed territory can feel any assurance that his jurisdiction will not be disputed, and his officers set at defiance or sued in trespass; and the doubts which the inhabitants must have as to their position, in view of the delay of the Dominion Parliament to confirm the award, necessarily paralyze the administration of justice in this territory.

Your Act of last session (43 Viet. cap. 36) does not declare what law will govern in the case of civil rights, and makes no provision for the trial of civil matters; nor does it set at rest the very important question as to whether the license law of Ontario or the prohibitory law of Keewatin governs in this territory. In my letter of 23rd April last, I suggested that Parliament should be requested to make some provision in respect of these matters; and I also suggested that authority should be given alike to the justices of the peace of Keewatin and Thunder Bay and Algoma to act in any part of the disputed territory; and that the jurisdiction of the District Court of the District of Algoma, and of the Division Courts established for Thunder Bay, and the judges and officers of such courts, including the Sheriff of Thunder Bay, should have authority and jurisdiction within this territory. The draft Bill which I submitted last session, under the hope that you would introduce it into Parliament, dealt with these matters; the sections relating to them were not in the Bill which you introduced; they seem to me far more important for the due administration of justice than those which the Bill did include; and indeed the latter, to be operative to any great extent, required the aid of some of the omitted provisions. I do not see what valid objection can be urged against the introduction of these provisions. The fact of reciprocal rights being given to the officers of Keewatin and of Ontario would clearly show that you were not by this legislation admitting the right of Ontario.

On account of the omission of the provision giving to the Sheriff of Thunder Bay authority in this territory, it was found necessary, at very heavy expense, to bring the prisoner Horn, who was accused of murder, down to Sault Ste. Marie for trial.

I send you a copy of the clauses in the draft Bill to which I refer above. You are doubtless bearing in mind that the Act of last session expires by limitation upon the rising of Parliament.

I also send herewith for your consideration a new draft Bill embodying the omitted provisions, and containing some further words which, to prevent possible misapprehension on the part of anybody, you may perhaps think it useful to employ.

I trust also that authority will be given to the Ontario Government to deal with the land and timber in the disputed territory, subject to our accounting therefor in case our right to the territory should not be maintained. Though the Parliament of Canada has not yet recognized the award, the award certainly gives to us meantime such a prima facie interest as makes it most reasonable that we should have the necessary means of giving titles to the settlers within the territory, so long as what you deem the possible rights of the Dominion are duly protected in the manner proposed.

I remain, etc.,

O. MOWAT.

The Honourable James McDonald,
Minister of Justice, Ottawa.

ACT OF THE PROVINCE OF MANITOBA, 44 VIC., CAP. 1 (1881).

AN ACT TO PROVIDE FOR THE EXTENSION OF THE BOUNDARIES OF THE PROVINCE.

Whereas by chapter twenty-eight of the Acts of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the session held in the thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth years of Her Majesty's reign, intituled "An Act respecting the establishment of Provinces in the Dominion of Canada," it is enacted that "the Parliament of Canada may, from time to time, with the consent of the Legislature of any Province of the said Dominion, increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the limits of such Province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said Legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to the Province affected thereby;"

And whereas it is expedient and desirable that the boundaries of the Province of Manitoba should be increased on terms and conditions of a just character;

Therefore the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba enacts as follows:

1. The Legislative Assembly of Manitoba consents that the Parliament of Canada may increase or otherwise alter the limits of the Province of Manitoba upon the terms and conditions set out in this Act, and may make provisions respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or alteration of territory; the increase or alteration of the limits of the Province to be so that the boundaries thereof shall be as follows: Commencing at the intersection of the international boundary dividing Canada from the United States of America, by the centre line of the road allowance between the twenty-ninth and thirtieth ranges of townships lying west of the first principal meridian in the system of Dominion land surveys; thence northerly, following upon the said centre line of the said road allowance, as the same is or may hereafter be located, defining the said range line on the ground across townships one to forty-six, both inclusive, to the intersection of the said centre line of the said road allowance by the centre line of the road allowance on the twelfth base line in the said system of Dominion land surveys; thence easterly along the said centre line of the road allowance on the twelfth base line, following the same to its intersection by the easterly limit of the District of Keewatin, as defined by the Act 39 Victoria, chapter 21, that is to say, to a point where the said centre line of the road allowance on the twelfth base line would be intersected by a line drawn due north from where the westerly boundary of the Province of Ontario intersects the aforesaid international boundary line dividing Canada from the United States of America; thence due south, following upon the said line to the international boundary aforesaid, and thence westerly, following upon the said international boundary line dividing Canada from the United States of America, to the place of beginning."

Act of Manitoba, 44 Vic., Cap. 1, 1881.

[The remaining portions of the Act have reference to the terms and conditions upon which such increase or alteration may be made.]

DOMINION ACT, 44 VIC., CAP. 14 (1881).

AN ACT TO PROVIDE FOR THE EXTENSION OF THE BOUNDARIES OF THE PROVINCE OF MANITOBA.

Dominion Act, 44 Vic., Cap. 14, 1881.

Whereas, by an Act of the Legislature of the Province of Manitoba, passed during the session thereof held in the present year of Her Majesty's reign, and intitled "An Act to Provide for the Extension of the Boundaries of the Province of Manitoba," the Legislature of that Province hath consented to the increase of the same by the alteration of its limits, as hereinafter enacted, upon the terms and conditions hereinafter expressed: Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. The Province of Manitoba shall be increased as hereinafter defined, that is to say, so that the boundaries thereof shall be as follows:—"Commencing at the intersection of the international boundary dividing Canada from the United States of America by the centre of the road allowance between the twenty-ninth and thirtieth ranges of townships lying west of the first principal meridian in the system of Dominion land surveys; thence northerly, following upon the said centre of the said road allowance as the same is or may hereafter be located, defining the said range on the ground across townships one to forty-four, both inclusive, to the intersection of the said centre of the said road allowance by the centre of the road allowance on the twelfth base line in the said system of Dominion land surveys; thence easterly along the said centre of the road allowance on the twelfth base line, following the same to its intersection by the easterly limit of the District of Keewatin, as defined by the Act thirty-ninth Victoria, chapter twenty-one, that is to say, to a point where the said centre of the road allowance on the twelfth base line would be intersected by a line drawn due north from where the westerly boundary of the Province of Ontario intersects the aforesaid international boundary line dividing Canada from the United States of America; thence due south, following upon the said line to the international boundary aforesaid; and thence westerly, following upon the said international boundary line dividing Canada from the United States of America, to the place of beginning," and all the land embraced by the said description not now within the Province of Manitoba shall, from and after the passing of this Act, be added thereto, and the whole shall, from and after the said date, form and be the Province of Manitoba.

2. The terms and conditions upon which such increase is made are as follows:—

(a) All the enactments and provisions of all the Acts of the Parliament of Canada which have, since the creation of the Province of Manitoba, been extended into and made to apply to the said Province, shall extend and apply to the territory by this Act added thereto, as fully and effectually as if the same had originally formed part of the Province, and the boundaries thereof had, in the first instance, been fixed and defined as is done by this Act—subject, however, to the provisions of section 10 of this Act.

(b) The said increased limit and the territory thereby added to the Province of Manitoba shall be subject to all such provisions as may have been or shall hereafter be enacted, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway and the lands to be granted in aid thereof.

3. All laws and ordinances in force in the territory hereby added to the Province of Manitoba at the time of the coming into force of this Act, and all courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and all legal commissions, powers and authorities, and all officers, judicial, administrative, and ministerial, existing therein at the time of the coming into force of this Act, shall continue therein as if such territory had not been added to the said Province; subject, nevertheless, with respect to matters within the legislative authority of the Legislature of the Province of Manitoba, to be repealed, abolished or altered by the said Legislature.

4. This Act shall come into force only upon, from and after a day to be appointed in that behalf by Proclamation of the Governor published in the Canada Gazette.

DOMINION ACT, 44 VIC., CAP. 15, 1881.

AN ACT TO CONTINUE IN FORCE FOR A LIMITED TIME THE ACT FORTY-THIRD VICTORIA, CHAPTER THIRTY-SIX.

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. The Act passed in the forty-third year of Her Majesty's reign, chapter thirty-six, and intitled "An Act respecting the Administration of Criminal Justice in the Territory in dispute between the Governments of the Province of Ontario and of the Dominion of Canada," shall continue in force until the end of the now next ensuing session of Parliament.

THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF ONTARIO TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE (CANADA).*

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

TORONTO, 31st December, 1881.

SIR,—I beg to call your attention to the unfortunate condition of that large portion of this Province to which the Federal authorities dispute our right. I desire specially to refer to that part of the disputed territory, comprising about 39,000 square miles, which lies on the westerly side of this Province, and to which, by the Act of last session for the extension of the boundaries of the Province of Manitoba (44 Vic., cap. 14), the Federal Parliament transferred to that Province the claim of the Dominion, so far as relates to the provincial jurisdiction therein.

I beg to remind you that the importance of having settled without further delay all questions in regard to the boundaries of the Province was repeatedly stated, and even insisted upon, by your Government as long ago as the year 1872. Thus in an Order in Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor-General on the 9th April, 1872, it was affirmed to be "of the greatest consequence to the peace and well-being of the country in the vicinity of the dividing line, that no question as to jurisdiction, or the means of prevention or punishment of crime, should arise or be allowed to continue;" and it was not doubted "that both Governments would feel it their duty to settle, without further delay, upon some proper mode of determining, in an authoritative manner, the true position of such boundary."

On the 1st of May in the same year, Sir John A. Macdonald, the Premier, and then Minister of Justice, made a report, which was approved by Order in Council, in which report it was stated, in reference to the disputed territory, that "it was very material that crime should not be unpunished or unprevented;" and in this view it was suggested that "the Government of Ontario be invited to concur in a statement of the case for immediate reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of England." It was further stated that "the mineral wealth of the North-West country is likely to attract a large immigration to those parts; and with a view to its development, as well as to prevent the confusion and strife that is certain to arise among the miners and other settlers so long as the uncertainty as to boundary exists," it was recommended that a course of joint action should meanwhile be adopted by the Dominion and the Province "in regard to the grants of lands and of issuing licenses, reservation of royalties, etc."

By another Order in Council, approved on the 7th of November, 1872, His Excellency the Governor-General's Federal advisers obtained the sanction of the Crown to the statement that "the importance of obtaining an authoritative decision as to the limits to the north and to the west of the Province of Ontario had already been affirmed by a Minute in Council," and that "the establishment of criminal and civil jurisdiction, and the necessity of meeting the demands of settlers and miners for the acquisition of titles to land, combined to render such a decision indispensable."

On the 26th of June, 1874, a provisional arrangement was made for the sale of lands in the disputed territory, which arrangement was in force from its date until August, 1878, when the award was made. By the award so much of the territory theretofore in dispute as was situate east of the meridian of the most north-western angle of the Lake of the Woods (say longitude 95° 14' 38" W.), was awarded to Ontario, and the claim theretofore made on behalf of this section of Canada to the territory beyond that meridian, to either the White Earth River or the Rocky Mountains, was negated by the Arbitrators.

I beg to remind you that from that day to this the Federal Government has made no official communication to the Government of this Province of their intention to reject the award, but my Government has been left to gather this intention from the omission of the Federal Government for the first two sessions of Parliament to bring in any measure for the recognition or confirmation of the award; and from the speeches made in Parliament by Ministers during the last two sessions; and more distinctly from the transfer made last session to Manitoba by the Act already mentioned, and which Act, passed notwithstanding the remonstrances of this Government, had the effect of putting it out of the power of the Dominion to confirm the award without the concurrence of that Province.

My Government cannot doubt that the Federal authorities are aware, and will admit, that the progress of the country in the last nine years, and the realization during this period of the condition of things, which in 1872 was only anticipated, have immensely increased the duty then perceived and expressed by your Government, that "no question as to jurisdiction or the means of prevention or punishment of crime should be allowed to continue;" and that there is a "necessity of meeting the demands of settlers and miners for the acquisition of titles to lands." Immigrants and others have, as anticipated, been attracted to the territory in dispute, in common with the rest of the North-West Territories; numerous settlers, miners and lumberers have now gone into the territory; a large floating population is there; also a considerable number of persons who desire to be settlers; and the lands, mines and timber of the territory are in active demand.

With respect to the timber, enormous quantities of it are being cut and removed by trespassers and others. Some of those engaged in the work assert that they have licenses, permits, or the like, from the Federal Government; and this Government has, in consequence, applied to your Government for information as to how far their proceedings have had the sanction of the Dominion Government; but the information has not been given, nor has any notice been taken of the application for it.

A communication from our stipendiary magistrate in the territory (a copy of which, or of its material part, was transmitted to you on the 8th March, 1881,) shows—what also appears from other quarters—that the explorers and miners on the Lake of the Woods had suffered great disappointments and losses from the continuance of the territorial dispute; that some of them had expended all their money in exploring and surveys, expecting an early return for their investments and toil, but that nothing could be done with mining capitalists because a sure title to lands could not be procured; that the delay of another year would ruin many; that many would be driven from the locality never to return, causing loss to merchants and others who had made advances to them; that the people of the locality were suffering in many ways from the unsettled condition of affairs, there being no civil court of acknowledged jurisdiction to collect debts, no land agent to locate settlers, no registry office to record deeds, and no disinterested timber agent to protect the forests; that all was uncertainty and confusion; that the claims to mineral lands had become so mixed that those who claimed locations would soon be unable to recognize their own property; that some places had been surveyed several times, the surveys covering each other; that the magistrate had no doubt there would be fighting, and perhaps murder, over these claims; that some persons were then armed to defend their supposed or assumed rights against wealthier claimants; and that whiskey sellers were plying their illicit calling with great success, and much to the injury of the district. Since the date of this communication, the Manitoba Act referred to has introduced new elements of confusion and disorder. Two sets of Provincial laws, and two sets of Provincial officers, distract the inhabitants of both the unorganized and the organized parts of the territory.

As regards the organized portions, which lie south and east of the Height of Land—and where, up to the time of Confederation, and for many years before, the authority of the laws, courts and officers of Upper Canada had always been assumed, by the Government and the population, without dispute or question, and where, since Confederation, the authority of Ontario had continued to be assumed in the same manner—the unfortunate position of the inhabitants now, was, (in the debate on the Manitoba Bill), pointed out by the leader of the Government to be this: “The people of Prince Arthur’s Landing may resist the processes of law; they may say to the Sheriff that he is committing an illegality. A man may say to another who brings a suit against him, ‘This is the process of an Ontario Court, and Ontario laws do not extend here, because we are not part of that Province.’” The same things may be said in respect of the officers and courts of Manitoba in the same territory.

I have further to remind you that since the award was made, the Government of Ontario have repeatedly called the attention of your Government to the serious practical evils which were attending the dispute, and to the importance and duty of not delaying a settlement of the question, or of making adequate provisional arrangements if the award was not to be recognized by the Federal authorities; but no measure has ever been recommended to Parliament to remove or alleviate, with reference to civil rights or the trial of civil matters, the evils thus arising from varying laws and disputed jurisdiction.

In criminal matters only has something of a provisional kind been done, namely, by the Dominion Statute 43 Vic., cap. 46, continued until the end of next session by 44 Vic., cap. 15; and this legislation is so defective that no magistrate or justice of the peace acting in this disputed territory can feel any assurance that his jurisdiction will not be disputed, or his officers set at defiance or sued in trespass.

An authoritative determination of the right might be accomplished at once, by the Parliament of Canada and the Legislature of Manitoba passing Acts for this purpose, under the authority of the Imperial Act 34 and 35, Vic., cap. 28; and otherwise. But my Government are aware that the policy of the present Federal Government and Parliament forbids any expectation of that course being adopted.

In 1872 your Government proposed an immediate reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; and it was suggested in a communication to the Government of Ontario that "no other tribunal than that of the Queen in Council would be satisfactory to the other Provinces of the Dominion, in a decision of questions in which they have a large interest, the importance of which is by current events being constantly and repeatedly augmented." My Government have observed also that in the debate in the Senate on the Manitoba Bill last session, Sir Alexander Campbell, speaking for the Government, said: "The boundary line will have to be settled. It will be settled, I suppose, by some reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of England, or some other tribunal. No particular burden will be thrown on Manitoba to procure a settlement." Speaking of the boundary line, the same Minister further observed: "Its location is a matter of dispute; and all we can do is to endeavour to get Ontario to agree to some tribunal by which it can be settled."

In the House of Commons' debate on the same Bill, at a subsequent time, the Premier said, speaking of his predecessors: "The Government were peculiarly bound to see that the question was left to a tribunal that could speak authoritatively; and I do not see, unless they were afraid of their case, why they (the Ontario Government) should have objected to the Imperial tribunal, to which it must go finally. That is the only way of settling the case. All must submit to that, the highest tribunal in the Empire."

Having reference to these observations, and remembering that the award of the distinguished gentlemen who were chosen by the two Governments as Arbitrators, and whose ability and impartiality have always been acknowledged, has not been satisfactory to the Federal authorities, I do not suppose that any tribunal constituted by agreement of the parties would, under all the circumstances, be proper or satisfactory.

A reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, or to any other tribunal, would involve much loss of time; and meanwhile the advices received from the territory indicate that the timber therein is being destroyed; that enormous quantities of it are being practically lost to the Province; and that the development of the territory is arrested, to the permanent injury of this Province, by the continued absence of undisputed authority to enforce order, administer justice, and grant titles. The evils arising from this state of things are so great, and are increasing so rapidly, and it is so important that the Province should, without further delay, secure peaceable possession of whatever limits it is entitled to, that my Government would be willing, with the concurrence of the Legislature, to submit the matter to the Privy Council, on condition of consent being given by the Dominion Government and that of Manitoba, and by the Parliament of Canada and the Legislature of Manitoba, to just arrangements for the government of the territory in the meantime.

Without such provisional arrangements, this Province may as well wait for the confirmation of the award, which (so far as concerns the rights and powers still remaining to the Dominion) my Government confidently expect from another Parliament, as go to the expense, and have the unavoidable delay of a second litigation.

From the time that it became manifest that the Dominion Government did not contemplate an early recognition of the award, provisional arrangements have from time to time been suggested by this Government, and by the Attorney-General on its behalf. I beg to refer you to the communications containing these suggestions; and I may add that your Government has not hitherto made any of them the subject of communication to this Government; nor have any counter propositions hitherto been suggested.

It may be convenient here to state the substance of these suggestions:

(1) By reason of the award, and of its accordance with the contentions of the Province and Dominion of Canada up to 1870, the prima facie title to the territory must be admitted to be in the Province of Ontario; and it was therefore proposed that, pending the dispute, this Province should have the authority of the Dominion to deal with the lands and timber (as in the other parts of the Province), subject to an account if the title is ultimately decided to be in the Dominion, and not in the Province.

(2) As (without a state of practical anarchy) there cannot continue to be two systems of law in this great territory of 39,000 square miles, the law of Ontario should, by proper legislation, be declared to govern in regard to matters which, by the British North America Act, are within Provincial jurisdiction. This, or any other arrangement with regard to these matters, will now require legislation by Manitoba.

(3) It was further proposed that, pending the dispute, the jurisdiction of our Courts and officers should be recognized and confirmed; and that the jurisdiction of our stipendiary magistrates in the disputed territory should be increased to the extent contemplated by the disallowed Act, 42 Vic., cap. 19, Ont. This extended jurisdiction, it may be observed, would not be so great as the jurisdiction which has been conferred by Dominion Statutes upon similar magistrates in the territories of the Dominion. To prevent doubts, there should be legislation by the Federal Parliament, and by the Legislatures of both Manitoba and Ontario.

The Manitoba Act of the last session of Parliament has rendered necessary the concurrence of the Government and Legislature of Manitoba in the provisional arrangements referred to. But it is presumed that such concurrence would, if now desired or approved by the Federal Government, be given gladly; for it is not to be supposed that that Province—with its small revenue, and with the enormous additional demands upon it for the government and development of its undisputed territory, increased by the same Act from 13,464 to upwards of 100,000 square miles—can desire to have the further expense and responsibility of the temporary government of 39,000 square miles of disputed territory, which may never be theirs, and to which such of the people of Manitoba as may take the trouble to learn the facts, must feel it not improbable that Ontario has the right; since such was in effect the view taken and acted upon in every way by the successive Governments of Canada up to 1870; and since such highly competent referees as the Right Honourable Sir Edward Thornton, then Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington, and now her Ambassador to the Court of St. Petersburg, the late Honourable Chief Justice Harrison, and the Honourable Sir Francis Hincks, K.C.M.G. declared and awarded the disputed territory to be within the boundaries of this Province.

I have called the Ontario Legislature to meet for the dispatch of business on the 12th of January. I perceive that the Parliament of Canada is to meet in the following month, and I would respectfully urge the great importance of my being officially informed, before the meeting of our Legislature, whether the Dominion Government is now willing, with the concurrence of the Legislature of Manitoba, so far as such concurrence is necessary, to agree to the arrangements which have been suggested, and to obtain from Parliament at its approaching session the Dominion legislation necessary to give effect to such arrangements. Or, if the Dominion Government is not willing to agree to the arrangements suggested, my Government would be glad to be informed what the best terms are to which your Government is prepared to agree, for the final settlement of the question of right, and for the provisional government of the territory in the meantime. I beg to remind you once more that since the award, no terms have ever been proposed to this Government with reference to either matter, unless it may be in the informal, and so far nugatory, negotiations which have recently taken place with the Attorney-General.

I beg also to renew the request made in a former despatch, but not hitherto noticed by your Government, for information as to the transactions of your Government with respect to the disputed territory since the date of the award. What my Government desire to have is, information of all transactions with respect to the timber and lands respectively, including copies of all grants, licenses, permits, regulations, instructions, letters, documents and papers of every kind relating to the same. This information my Government submit that they are entitled to receive, whether there is to be a provisional arrangement or not.

It has recently been stated in the public journals that the Federal Government had assumed authority to grant to the Pacific Railway Company land for their line of road through the disputed territory, and for timber purposes, a breadth of twenty miles on each side of this road throughout its whole length. No communication on the subject has been received from the Federal Government. If the newspaper statement is correct, my Government respectfully submit that, as the right to the territory is in dispute, no such grant should have been made without the concurrence of the Provincial authorities; and that if their concurrence was not cared for, they should at all events have had previous notice to what was contemplated, that they might have had an opportunity by negotiation or expostulation, of seeing that, if possible, the interests of the Province were not set at naught. I have respectfully to request copies of the Orders in Council and other documents (if any) relating to the transaction.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,

J. B. ROBINSON.

To the Honourable the Secretary of State, Ottawa.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (CANADA), TO THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF ONTARIO.*

OTTAWA, 27th January, 1882.

Federal Despatch, 27th
January,
1882.

SIR,—I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor-General has had under his consideration in Council your despatch bearing date the 31st December, 1881, relating to the disputed territory west and north of the Province of Ontario.

I have now to state for the information of your Government as follows:

1. The position of His Excellency's advisers has been uniform from the beginning. They have on all occasions been anxious to obtain from the highest tribunal approachable, an authoritative decision of the question in dispute, but have been unwilling, and have considered it inconsistent with their duty to treat the matter as one which might be dealt with by arbitration.
2. There is a legal boundary between Ontario and the recently acquired North-West Territories; and as representing the various Provinces of the Dominion who have acquired that territory, it is the duty, it is conceived, of the Government of the Dominion not to give away any part of it, nor to agree to arbitration upon its boundary, but to ascertain what its legal extent is.
3. This disposition on the part of His Excellency's advisers was also the conviction of the Government in office at the time the territory was acquired, and for some years afterwards, and the anxiety which is felt now was expressed then by the several Orders in Council which are referred to in your Honour's despatch.
4. The North-West Territories were acquired in 1870, and on the 9th of April, the 1st of May, and the 17th of November, 1872, the importance of settling the boundary, and of settling it as a question of law, which could be determined by a Judicial Tribunal, was pressed upon the consideration of His Excellency's predecessor, and communicated to the Government of Ontario by the several Orders in Council referred to in your despatch.
5. Had the proposal then made for the submission of the dispute to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council been accepted by Ontario, the delays and inconveniences alleged in the communication under consideration to have occurred would have been avoided. The matter would long since have been settled by the highest authority in the Empire, and the boundary between Ontario and the then recently acquired North-West Territories authoritatively and finally settled.
6. His Excellency's advisers believe that it is much to be regretted, in the interest of Ontario, as well as of the Dominion at large, that a proposal so reasonable in itself, and which would have brought to the consideration of the legal question involved the most learned and accomplished minds in the empire, and given every assurance of a speedy and satisfactory decision, and one which would have commanded universal assent, was not accepted by the Government of Ontario.

* Sess. Papers, Ontario, 1882, No. 23; Return, Ho. Coms., Canada, dated 14th February, 1882.

7. It does not appear that any response was made by the Government of Ontario to the proposal to submit the question to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

8. The proposal of 1874, referred to in your despatch, that the question in dispute should be referred to arbitration, does not seem to have been treated by either Government as a mode of seeking an authoritative decision upon the question involved as a matter of law, but rather as a means of establishing a conventional line without first ascertaining the true boundary. In corroboration of this view it is to be noted, that of the three gentlemen who made the award referred to in your despatch under the reference of 1872, two were laymen, and only one of the profession of the law.

9. His Excellency's advisers are of opinion that in advance of Parliamentary sanction it was not only highly inexpedient, but transcended the power of the Government of the day to refer to arbitration the question of the extent of the North-west Territories acquired by the Dominion by purchase from the Hudson's Bay Company.

10. That territory had been acquired on behalf of, and was in fact held for, all the Provinces comprised in the Dominion, and the extent of it was a question in regard to which, if a dispute arose, Parliament only could have absolved the Government of the day from the duty of seeking an authoritative determination by the legal tribunals of the country. Such a decision having been once obtained, if it had been found that it promised to be to the convenience of Ontario and the adjoining Province that a conventional boundary should be established in lieu of the legal boundary, authority might have been sought from the Legislatures of those Provinces and from the Parliament of the Dominion for the adoption of such a conventional line.

11. That the course pursued was not intended as a means of seeking a legal boundary is further shown by the course pursued by the Legislature of Ontario, who, under the provision contained in the Imperial Act 34 and 35 Vic., Cap. 38, enabling the Parliament of Canada to increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the limits of a Province, with the assent of its Legislature, passed an Act giving their assent to the limits of their Province being changed by Parliament to meet the award, whatever it might be. The passage of such an Act shows that it was not sought that the true boundary line should be ascertained, but that a conventional one should be laid down.

12. It must further be observed that a Committee of the House of Commons has reported as follows, viz. :—

"In reference to the award made by the arbitrators on the 3rd day of August, 1878, a copy of which is appended (p.), your Committee are of opinion that it does not describe the true boundaries of Ontario. It seems to your committee to be inconsistent with any boundary line ever suggested or proposed subsequent to the Treaty of Utrecht (1713). It makes the Provincial boundaries run into territory granted by Royal Charter in 1670 to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading into Hudson Bay, and it cuts through Indian territories which, according to the Act 43 George III., Cap. 138, and 1 and 2 George IV., Cap. 66, formed 'no part of the Provinces of Lower Canada or Upper Canada, or either of them,' and it carries the boundaries of Ontario within the limits of the former colony of Assiniboia, which was not a part of Upper Canada," showing how unwarrantable it would have been for the Government of the Dominion to have undertaken to ask Parliament to adopt the award as one defining the true boundaries.

13. On assuming office, His Excellency's present advisers found that no authority had been obtained from Parliament for the reference made in 1874 of the dispute to arbitration. They themselves were opposed to that mode of disposing of the question, conceiving it to be inexpedient and lacking in legal authority, and that the duty of the Government was to seek for the disposal of the matter as a question of law.

14. It is to be borne in mind that when the proposal of the reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council was suggested, and its expediency enforced by the Dominion Government in 1872, the Supreme Court of Canada had not been brought into existence, and there was therefore no high tribunal other than the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in England by which the question in dispute could have been authoritatively settled.

15. In 1875 the Act creating the Supreme Court was passed by the Parliament of Canada, the British North America Act, 1867, authorizing that Court to be created, inter alia, for the purpose of dealing with inter-Provincial and constitutional questions, and upon the creation of that Court it would seem to have become the tribunal to which both Federal and Provincial Governments should have resorted for the decision of the question now under discussion.

16. As in 1872 the Government of the day was anxious to submit the question to the then highest tribunal, so now His Excellency's present advisers would readily consent to use the influence of the 10 Dominion Government with that of Manitoba to obtain a submission of the whole question as to the boundary to the Supreme Court of Canada, under the 52nd section of the Act of 1875, establishing the Court. They trust with confidence that their exertions with the Government of Manitoba would be attended with success, and that such submission would be agreed to by that Government.

17. Another method of obtaining an authoritative decision was pointed out to the Attorney-General of Ontario at an interview sought for that purpose with him by Sir John Macdonald and the Minister of Justice, who, on the 21st of November last, proposed to Mr. Mowat, at his office in Toronto, that the Government of the Dominion and that of Ontario should unite in soliciting the good offices of some eminent English legal functionary for the purpose of determining the true boundary line. The names of Lord Selborne, who was then, it was reported, likely to seek relief from the fatigues of his office, 20 and of Lord Cairns, were suggested by Sir John Macdonald, who proposed that one or other of these noblemen, or some other distinguished legal functionary, should be invited to come to Canada, to sit in Toronto or elsewhere, for the purpose of hearing the evidence and deciding upon the boundary question, as one of law, susceptible of being determined by evidence as other important questions are.

18. The great advantage in such a submission would be that whilst legal ability and learning of the highest character would be secured for the decision of the question, it would have given both parties the opportunity of submitting such evidence as they might think proper, and the difficulty of agreeing on facts, and settling a case to be submitted to the Privy Council, would have been avoided. Evidence would be heard upon the spot, and the fact of the hearing and the arguments of counsel taking place in the country would have tended to command general assent. 30

19. This proposition was taken into consideration by Mr. Mowat, and it is only recently that he conveyed to the Minister of Justice his indisposition to accede to that proposal; but it is one which His Excellency's Government is still ready to adopt, if their previous suggestion of a submission to the Supreme Court of Canada should not command the assent of the Government of Ontario.

20. As regards the assertion in Your Honour's despatch, that the enlargement of the boundaries of Manitoba has complicated the present question, this Government are unable to adopt the view put forth in the despatch. The original confines of Manitoba were very small, and the rapidly augmenting population of that Province had made the fact a ground of continued complaint, and the Local Government had urged upon the Government of the Dominion that the limited extent of their Province paralyzed their efforts in the development of the Province, in the establishment of municipalities, and the 40 creation of means of communication, and otherwise. It was uncertain how long the disputed boundary question might remain open, and His Excellency's Government felt themselves constrained, finally, to recommend the enlargement of the boundaries of Manitoba, but Parliament did so in such a manner, and in such language, as carefully guarded against the step constituting any interference with the disputed question of the western limits of Ontario.

21. It is believed that the Government of Manitoba would readily acquiesce in the question of the boundary line being brought for decision either before the Supreme Court of Canada or the high legal functionary, as suggested by Sir John Macdonald and the Minister of Justice, to Mr. Mowat on the occasion referred to.

22. His Excellency's advisers look upon this question as one which should be considered rigidly as one of Law, on account of the fiduciary character which they hold in regard to the various Provinces of the Dominion, whose money was expended in the acquisition of the territory, and who are now largely exerting and taxing themselves for the purpose of constructing a line of railway through it, to which the Government of Ontario (although the railway passes for upwards of 600 miles through its territory) have refused to contribute any aid in land, as has so largely been done out of the North-West Territories by the Dominion.

APPENDIX.

Sec. II.
The Arbitration.

Correspondence and Documents subsequent to the Award, 1882.

23. The Government of the Dominion believe that the interests of Ontario are considered by the action which they advise as much and as strongly as the interests of any other Province. Their only anxiety is that at a legal question in which Ontario is interested by itself, and in which it is interested also as a member of the Confederation, should be disposed of by a Legal Tribunal.

24. They heartily wish that the proposal urged by the Dominion Government in 1872 for a submission to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had been accepted by Ontario, and they cannot but attribute much of the inconvenience and delay alleged in your despatch to have occurred to the refusal of Ontario to unite in such a submission.

25. To the arbitration of 1874 His Excellency's Government was unable, for the reasons assigned, to give their adhesion; but, with Ontario, they believe it to be of the greatest importance that the dispute should be settled, and they will be anxious to further in every way in their power the submission of the question either to the Supreme Court of Canada or to an eminent legal functionary, to be mutually agreed upon; or, if it be preferred, by the two Provinces of Ontario and Manitoba, to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, although His Excellency's advisers would prefer that it should be decided in Canada, either by the high legal functionary, as suggested, or by the Supreme Court, with the right of applying to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council for an appeal to the Queen from any decision which may be arrived at, should either Province desire it.

Federal Despatch, 27th Jan., 1882.

26. The question of the title to the land in the disputed territory should not be confused nor mixed up in any way with that relating to the boundaries.

27. The Indians and the Crown, and those claiming under them, have rights which can be decided by the ordinary tribunals of the Province within which the land in dispute may finally be found.

28. With respect to the timber, of which it is said in Your Honour's despatch that enormous quantities are being cut and removed by trespassers and others, this Government have ascertained that no licenses have been issued to cut timber east of that boundary since the establishment of the Conventional line in 1870. Information regarding all permits, licenses, and other transactions would be readily furnished to the Government of Ontario at any time.

29. The assumption in your despatch that the Conventional boundary terminated on the 3rd of August, 1878, the date of the award referred to, seems to be without foundation; but if the Conventional line is to be considered as having been then abrogated, it must be considered as at an end for all purposes, leaving both parties to assert their own rights in reference to all the questions involved.

30. As regards the Government of the country, and the enforcement of law and order in the meantime, it was intimated to Mr. Mowat, at the interview above referred to, that the Government of the Dominion would be ready to agree to such measures as were necessary to prevent confusion in these important respects. The suggestion was then made that all Justices of the Peace residing in the disputed territory should receive commissions from both Ontario and Manitoba, and that all the judges of Ontario and all the judges of Manitoba should be put in a joint commission as regards the disputed territory. The laws of Ontario and Manitoba being alike in most respects, no confusion would probably arise. That in criminal matters the Act 43 Vic., Chap. 36, had made, it was thought, satisfactory provision; or if there was anything deficient, the Government of the Dominion would be ready to ask Parliament to supply it. That where there was found to be a practical difference between the laws of Ontario and those of Manitoba, the Government of the Dominion would use its good offices with the Government of Manitoba to induce them to consent that the law to be administered should be that of

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario,

TORONTO, 18th February, 1882. 10

Ontario Despatch, 18
February,
1882.

SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch dated 27th January last, and for the information of the Government of the Dominion, I beg to submit the following reply.

My Government are glad that, though the Federal Government have for more than three years refrained from noticing requests and suggestions repeatedly made by the Government of Ontario with respect to the disputed territory, and from making any official communication of the views of your Government as to the question of title, or as to provisional arrangements necessary for the government and settlement of the country while your Government were pleased to dispute our title, your despatch has at last placed this Government in official possession of the views of the Federal Government on these subjects. My Advisers deeply regret to find those views so unsatisfactory, and (as they respectfully submit) so unjust to the people of Ontario. But a frank discussion of them may be of service 20 to the interests concerned.

Your despatch intimates distinctly, what had been already perceived, though not before officially stated to this Government, that the policy of your Government is to reject and disregard the Award; and your despatch states the reasons for this course. I notice that among these reasons it is not suggested (as of course it could not be), that the Arbitrators were not able and impartial men, well known, and held in high estimation in this country; or that they had not before them all the known evidence bearing on the subject with the decision of which they had been entrusted; or that they did not do their best to come to a correct conclusion. The reasons which you give are of an entirely different kind, namely, that the reference "transcended the power of the Government of the day;" that the matter should be "considered rigidly as one of law;" that the duty of Government was to seek "an 30 authoritative determination by the legal tribunals of the country;" that the reference "was not intended as a means of seeking a legal boundary," but "that the object of it was that "a conventional line should be laid down;" and that His Excellency's present advisers were "opposed to disposing of the question" by arbitration, conceiving that mode to be "inexpedient and lacking in legal authority." These seem to my Advisers to be, under the circumstances, unprecedented grounds of objection. A difference of opinion between one set of Ministers and their successors as to the expediency of having settled a controversy by arbitration, seems to my advisers to be no sort of justification for the repudiation of an Award after it has been made in good faith.

Awards and Treaties between Governments often require subsequent Parliamentary sanction; but in such cases my advisers claim that, according to the ethics of nations, it is the recognized and bounden 40 duty of the Governments to obtain such sanction, or to do their best to obtain it; nor are changes in the personnel of either Government allowed to affect the obligation.

There are very recent examples of this old-established doctrine. The British Government thought it their duty to obtain the prompt sanction of Parliament to the Alabama Award, though it was not like the present, a unanimous Award and though both the Government and the people regarded the amount awarded as excessive and exorbitant. So, on the other hand, in the United States of America, Congress gave prompt effect to the Fishery Award, though it was not a unanimous Award, and though the people and their representatives regarded it as grossly unjust. In the present case a unanimous Award has for more than three years been disregarded by the Federal authorities of Canada; and, while they contended that it assigned to Ontario more extensive boundries than, as a matter of rigid law, this Province possessed, there is (on the contrary) reason for believing that if the Award errs in that respect, the error is in assigning to Ontario too little territory instead of too much.

It appears to my advisers that many circumstances give exceptional force to the considerations which demanded the acceptance of the Award by the Federal authorities.

The reference was made with the practical concurrence of Parliament; and Ontario had every reason for assuming and relying upon the general acquiescence of the Dominion. The reference had been agreed to in November, 1874. It was embodied in Orders of Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor-General and by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor respectively. The three Arbitrators were immediately notified of their appointments, and their consent to act obtained. The reference was publicly known, and seemed to receive general approval. The Legislature of Ontario, in 1875, passed the Provincial Act to which your despatch refers, and, in common with the Dominion Government, proceeded, at considerable expense, to obtain, for the purposes of the arbitration, from Europe and America, all documentary and other evidence bearing on the question in dispute. The Imperial Government was apprized of the arbitration, and its assistance was given in an exhaustive search of the Colonial Office for State Papers. The fact of the reference was communicated by Ministers to Parliament at its first session after the reference had been agreed to, and it was repeatedly alluded to during the Parliamentary sessions held before the making of the Award. At no one of the four sessions intervening was any motion passed, or even proposed, in either House of Parliament, disapproving of the reference; nor, so far as my advisers are aware, did any member at any one of these sessions contend or suggest that the reference "transcended the power of the Government of the day," as is now alleged. Two or three members expressed an opinion in favour of a different mode of settlement; and even this expression of opinion seems to have occurred in the session of 1875 only. In the session of 1878 an appropriation of $15,000 to pay the expenses incident to the reference was voted by Parliament; and without objection or question by anyone.* The documents and other evidence obtained from time to time were printed; statements of the case of the respective Governments were prepared and furnished to the Arbitrators; the question was argued by Counsel on both sides; and the Award assigned to this Province part only of the territory which the Dominion Ministers, before compromising with the Hudson's Bay Company, had claimed as clearly belonging to this section of Canada.

The Award was made on the 3rd August, 1878. A change of Government took place on the 17th October following. The new Government on coming into office gave no notice to this Province that the Award was to be repudiated. On the 1st November, 1878, a map of that date was "published by order of the Honourable the Minister of the Interior," marking the boundaries of Ontario in precisely the manner assigned by the Award. On the 31st December, 1878, a despatch to your Government stated that a measure would be introduced during the then approaching session of the Ontario Legislature, to give effect to the Award by way of declaratory enactment and otherwise: and the despatch suggested that a like Act should be passed by the Parliament of the Dominion.† In answer to this despatch no notice was given that the Federal Government meant to repudiate the Award; no warning to refrain from passing, or to postpone passing, the proposed Act; and accordingly the Ontario Legislature, at its next session, passed an Act consenting that the boundaries, as determined by the Award, should be the northerly and westerly boundaries of the Province.‡ A like Act not having been passed at the next session of the Federal Parliament, and no reason for the delay or omission having been communicated to this Government, two despatches were addressed to your Government dated respectively 23rd September, and 19th December, 1879. In the despatch of the 23rd September, it was, amongst other things, urged that, an Award having been made in pursuance of a reference by the two Governments, it was just that there should be no further delay in formally recognizing the Award as a conclusive settlement of the matters submitted to the arbitrators; that the Government of Ontario did not doubt that the Government and Parliament of Canada would ultimately take the same view; but it was respectfully represented that the delay in announcing the acquiescence of the Dominion authorities, and in otherwise giving full effect to the Award, had been embarrassing and injurious.* By the despatch of 19th December, 1879, the attention of your Government was called to a former despatch, and it was intimated "that the arbitrators having made their Award, the Government of the Province understand that the provisional arrangement theretofore in force between the Province and the Dominion" was "at an end, the Award having 'definitely settled' the boundaries of the Province and the Dominion," within the meaning of the provisional arrangement.† The receipt of these despatches was formally acknowledged, but neither of them was answered otherwise. No exception was taken to the alleged termination of the provisional arrangement; and the Province was still left without any intimation of an intention to repudiate the Award. The first intimation of this intention was given during the session of Parliament held in the year 1880. Until then there was no known Act of the Federal Government or speech of Federal Ministers which did not consist with an ultimate recognition of the Award by the Government of Canada.

Ontario Despatch, 18 Feb., 1882.

The recognition of the Award by the Parliament of Canada is desirable, to prevent doubts and disputes; but my Government do not admit that the Award has no legal force without such Parliamentary action. It is to be remembered that the British North America Act contains no provision giving authority to Parliament to deal with the boundaries of the Dominion or Provinces; and my Government contend that the reference was within the powers incident to Executive authority. It is admitted in your despatch that a reference to the ordinary legal tribunals would have been within 20 such authority, and it is not easy to see why a reference, made in good faith, and with the acquiescence of Parliament for several years, to a Tribunal created by mutual consent for the purpose, should stand in a different position. Even if the Award is supposed to have no legal effect until sanctioned by Parliament, still it appears to my Government to be inconsistent alike with reason and justice, with British precedent and practice, that the Federal Government should, at this late date, and after all these proceedings, refuse to ask such Parliamentary sanction, or that His Excellency's present Advisers should seek to excuse a repudiation of the Award, by alleging inability in their predecessors to sanction, an arbitration, or by the preference of His Excellency's present Advisers for some other scheme of adjustment. References to arbitration, without previous Parliamentary sanction, of matters involving large sums of money have been frequent; and, for this purpose, between questions of money and 30 questions of territory there is not in reason any solid distinction. If, as your despatch suggests, the Dominion Government occupy a fiduciary position with reference to the territory in question, it is equally true that they occupy a fiduciary position in regard to every power which, as a Government, they possess or exercise.

It seems to my Government that, under all the circumstances, the Award should have been promptly accepted, even if it had appeared that the arbitrators had not found or awarded what they considered to be the legal boundaries, and disregarding these, had merely laid down the boundaries which they deemed most convenient and reasonable. But it so happens that the surmise in your despatch, that the Governments did not contemplate that the arbitrators should find the legal boundaries, is unsupported by evidence, and is entirely without foundation. The Order of the Privy Council of 12th 40 November, 1874,‡ expressly stated the object to be "to determine by means of a reference the northern and western boundaries" of the Province; and the Order provided, that the "determination of a majority of such three referees be final and conclusive upon the limits to be taken as and for such boundaries respectively." The Minister further recommended, and His Excellency approved the recommendation, "that the Dominion agree to concurrent action with the Province of Ontario in obtaining such Legislation as may be necessary for giving binding effect to the conclusions arrived at and for establishing the northern and western limits of the Province of Ontario in accordance there, with." The Order of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council was to the same effect as regards this Province.

‡ Sess. Papers, Ontario, 1875, No. 14, p. 14.

One of the arbitrators who were first named having died, and another having resigned, new arbitrators were appointed in their places—viz., Chief Justice Harrison and Sir Francis Hincks; and, these gentlemen having signified their acceptance, they were promptly put in possession of the documentary and other evidence. The formal Orders in Council appointing them were made some time afterwards, and when the arbitrators met to hear counsel—viz., on the 31st July, 1878. By the Order in Council of that date, approved of by His Excellency, it was again provided "that the determination of the Award of such three arbitrators, or a majority of them, in the matter of the said boundaries respectively, be taken as final and conclusive," with the same agreement as before with respect to legislation.* A like Order in Council was passed by the Ontario Government. It is not pretended that the arbitrators received any instructions beyond the Orders in Council. The statements of the case which were prepared by counsel for the respective Governments, and printed and laid before the arbitrators, discussed the question of boundaries as a matter of law.† The viva voce arguments also of counsel, on both sides, before the arbitrators dealt with the question as a matter of law;‡ and the Award affirms that it determines and decides "what are and shall be the northerly and westerly boundaries of the Province."§

To assume in the face of all this, and without evidence, that the arbitrators did not propose to find, or did not find, what in their opinion were and are THE boundaries, the true boundaries, the legal boundaries, is what, in the view of my advisers, neither Government can possibly do on any principle known in law, or recognized in public or private transactions.

20 The case does not even rest here. Sir Francis Hincks, the Arbitrator for the Dominion, has taken occasion to communicate the facts to the public. In a lecture delivered by him on the 6th May, 1881, he states that "the arbitrators were guided in their decision solely by Acts of Parliament, proclamations authorized by Orders in Council on the authority of Acts of Parliament, and international treaties. . . . The arbitrators were of opinion that, having reference to all the facts of the case, the boundaries set forth in the Award were supported to a larger extent than any other lines by these facts, and by the considerations and reasons which should and would guide and govern the determination of the questions by any competent legal or other tribunal." In the lecture he gives a résumé of the grounds on which the arbitrators proceeded, and all of these go to show the legal boundaries. As to the western boundary, he says that "the arbitrators were clearly of opinion that the international boundary at the north-western angle of the Lake of the Woods was the true point of departure." This point settled the western boundary as awarded, and it is in this district of the Province that the Federal authorities have actively interfered with the rights of the Province, and that the territory is most valuable, and a vigorous administration of justice most needed. The northern boundary (in the opinion of the arbitrators), owing to the vagueness of the language employed in the proclamation issued under the Act of 1791, is more "open to doubt;" but the doubt of the arbitrators was, as Sir Francis Hincks states, "whether Ontario should not have had more territory;" not whether it should have had less. Indeed, the groundlessness of the notion that the Award gives to Ontario more territory than it is entitled to is further demonstrated by the statement of Sir Francis in the same lecture, that "the only questions of doubt were decided in favour of the Dominion; that both on the west and north the doubts were whether Ontario should not have had more territory." Your despatch objects to considerations of "convenience" being taken into account, as if such considerations could have nothing to do with the question of legal boundaries; yet convenience, or the argument ab inconvenienti, is a recognized element of legal interpretation where other considerations leave a question of construction in doubt.

Against all this evidence that the question which the arbitrators considered (whether they were bound to do so or not) was the question of the true legal boundaries, and that what they awarded were what they believed to be the true legal boundaries, your despatch suggests merely two circumstances: (1) that two of the arbitrators were laymen; (2) that the Act of the Ontario Legislature 38 Vic., chap. 6, affords an inference in favour of the Federal assumption. An elaborate argument with regard to either point is unnecessary. As to the first point, four things may be shortly observed: (1) The question to be arbitrated upon involved facts as well as law. (2) If two of the referees were laymen, the remaining arbitrator, the late Chief Justice Harrison, was an able lawyer and Judge—a gentleman, it may be added, who was a Conservative in politics, and an old personal friend of the present First Minister of Canada. (3) The two arbitrators chosen by the Governments in 1874 were Judges—Chief Justice Richards and Judge Wilmut; Sir Edward Thornton was soon afterward selected by the two Governments as the third arbitrator. (4) The case was one in which eminent publicists, like Sir Edward Thornton and Sir Francis Hincks, were, by their training and mental habits, quite as well fitted as any lawyer to ascertain and determine the legal boundaries. Sir Edward Thornton, it may be observed, had four successive times been accredited to great Courts in Europe and America as an Ambassador of the highest rank and with full powers. He possessed, moreover, a most unusual topographical knowledge of this continent. Sir Francis Hincks had spent nearly half a century in colonial life, and had filled positions of the largest responsibility in the public service of Canada.

Then, as to the inference suggested from the Ontario Statute* passed under the provision contained in the Imperial Act, 34 and 35 Vic., chap. 38, which enabled the Parliament of Canada to increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the limits of a Province with the assent of its Legislature, it is only necessary to observe that the British North America Act contained no provision for settling questions of boundaries between Provinces, or between a Province and the Dominion; that, as between Canada and New Brunswick in 1851, a special Imperial Act for a like purpose was deemed expedient; and that by the legal effect of the Imperial Act, 34 and 35 Vic., chap. 38, concurrent Statutes by the Parliament of the Dominion and the Legislature of Ontario, fixing the true legal boundaries, would be as effectual as if a variation of the legal boundaries had been intended.

But would it be correct or proper to repudiate the Award if there had been some reason—which there is not—for assuming or supposing that it gave to Ontario boundaries somewhat more extensive than its strict legal boundaries? Whether the Award has or has not given accurately the true legal boundaries, it certainly does not assign to Ontario as much territory as Canadian Governments of which His Excellency's present Chief Adviser was either the head or a distinguished member, had repeatedly and confidently claimed for this section of Canada from the year 1857 up to the year 1870. Nor so much as was claimed for Upper Canada on the 15th January, 1857, when a Minute of Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor-General, was transmitted to the Colonial Secretary, in which it was stated that "the general feeling here is strongly that the western boundary of Canada extends to the Pacific Ocean."† Nor so much as in an official paper of the same period, the Commissioner of Crown Lands of Canada claimed for us, when he asserted that the westerly boundary of the Province extended "as far as British territory not otherwise organized would carry it, which would be to the Pacific; or, if limited at all, it would be by the first waters of the Mississippi, which a due west line from the Lake of the Woods intersected, which would be the White Earth River;" and when, with respect to the northerly boundary, the Commissioner pointed out that "the only possible conclusion is, that Canada is either bounded in that direction by a few isolated posts on the shore of Hudson's Bay, or else that the Company's territory is . . . a myth, and consequently that Canada has no particular limit in that direction."‡ Nor has so much been awarded to us as Chief Justice Draper was in the same year sent to England by the Canadian Government for the very purpose of claiming or demanding for this section of the Province, as against the Hudson's Bay Company.‡ Nor so much as that distinguished Judge claimed accordingly before a Committee of the British House of Commons in May and June of that year.§ Nor so much as in a letter from him dated 12th June, 1857, after he had elaborately examined the question, he communicated the opinion that we had "a clear right to."¶ Nor so much as the Dominion Ministers, Sir George E. Cartier and the Honourable William McDougall, in an official letter to Sir Frederick Rogers, Bart., Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated 16th January, 1869, insisted that Upper Canada so clearly included that "no impartial investigator of the evidence in the case could doubt it.* But for the circumstance that, as between Great Britain and the United States, by the joint effect of the Treaties of 1794, 1814, 1818 and 1842,† the source of the Mississippi was taken to be, as between the United States and the British possessions, in Turtle Lake, at a point in nearly the same longitude as the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods, the arbitrators could hardly have failed to hold that our westerly boundary was to be found at White Earth River, west of the Province of Manitoba as constituted previously to its extension by the Federal Parliament at its last session.

My Advisers feel surprised that, under all these circumstances, the Federal authorities should appear to have applied themselves for two years and more to the task of finding some plausible ground for repudiating the Award, even though they may hope (what my Advisers deny) that a rigid technical interpretation of the documents, in connection with the other evidence relating to the subject, might possibly limit the boundaries of the Province still further.

Your despatch says that the North-West Territory (of which the now disputed territory is assumed to be part) "was acquired on behalf of, and was in fact held for, all the Provinces comprised in the Dominion." In saying this, the Federal Government overlook the circumstances under which, and the means by which, the so-called acquisition was accomplished. In all the negotiations with the Hudson's Bay Company the Federal Government insisted that almost the whole territory so said to have been acquired belonged already to Upper Canada (now Ontario); that the Hudson's Bay Company, so far as they were in possession of any part of this territory, were but squatters on it; that this was perfectly clear; that "no impartial investigator of the evidence could doubt it." So strong were the grounds on which this contention rested, that the Company, acting under the advice and with the aid of the ablest counsel, and of some of the shrewdest men of business in England, gave up their claim to some 1,300,000 square miles of territory—half a continent—in consideration of being allowed to retain about 12,000 square miles of it, and of receiving for the rest the comparatively paltry sum of £300,000 sterling, § (the United States of America gave to the Russian Government in 1867 nearly five times as much ($7,200,000) for the comparatively barren and valueless territory of Alaska, with an area not nearly half that to which the Hudson's Bay Company released its claim. The comparatively small sum mentioned was accepted by the Hudson's Bay Company because of the reason there was to apprehend that the legal boundaries of Upper Canada would be held, if submitted to a trial, to include all or nearly all the territory which the Canadian Ministers claimed for it, instead of merely the 100,000 square miles, the right of Ontario to which the Federal authorities now persistently resist, in spite of a solemn Award, and in spite also of the previous contentions and demands of Ministers of the Dominion itself,

It is further to be observed that the Hudson's Bay Company never pretended, as against the territorial jurisdiction of Upper Canada, that they had any claim under their Charter to any territory south of the Height of Land.

In the claim against the Hudson's Bay Company, the Dominion Government were trustees for Ontario; and, on principles well recognized in equity jurisprudence, their compromise of the claim should enure to the sole benefit of Ontario, on condition only of this Province making good the paltry sums by which the compromise was effected. On the equitable principles referred to, as these are constantly applied between individuals, the Dominion Government had and have no right, without the consent of the Legislature and Government of Ontario, to hold the territory for the other Provinces of the Dominion. This consideration does not affect the question of what the legal boundaries of Ontario are, but does greatly strengthen the political and moral obligation of the Award being accepted by the Dominion frankly and promptly, and may be important hereafter in determining the questions which may arise between the Dominion and Ontario consequent on the delay which has occurred, and on the use made by the Dominion of the territory acquired by means of the supposed and asserted rights of this Province and otherwise.

It seems to my Advisers incredible that the Federal Government can have had all these considerations in mind when placing so much stress on the supreme "duty" of "rigidly" confining Ontario to its strictly "legal bounds," even at the expense of repudiating a solemn Award, made in good faith by arbitrators, as distinguished, and as well qualified for their office, as could be found on this continent, or indeed anywhere.

The objection of the Federal Government to a settlement of the question by arbitration is further remarkable (in the view of my Advisers), because arbitration has always been a customary mode of settling questions of this very kind between two Governments.

It is scarcely necessary to illustrate so frequent an event in history, or so elementary a principle in international or municipal Law, as the settlement of disputed boundaries by reference. As early as 1697, a portion of the very territory now in dispute was by the Treaty of Ryswick made the subject of an arbitration, the parties submitting to the arbitration being no less personages than William III. of England, and Louis XIV. of France. The commissioners were "to examine and determine the rights and pretensions which either of the said kings hath to the places situated in Hudson Bay;" and the articles agreed to by the commissioners "shall be ratified by both kings, and shall have the same force and vigour as if they were inserted word for word in the present Treaty." Even within the Canadian annals of this century there is a precedent, which is not without significance, for the arbitrated settlement of disputed boundaries between Provinces. In 1846, in order to adjust a boundary dispute which had prevailed since the Ashburton Treaty, between Canada and New Brunswick, Mr. Gladstone, then Secretary for the Colonies, constituted a Boundary Commission of the Attorney-General for Nova Scotia, and two officers of the Royal Engineers. A report was made defining a conventional boundary 20 as the best attainable. The documents chiefly involved in that question were, as in the question now under discussion, the Proclamation of 1763, the Treaty of Utrecht, the Quebec Act of 1774, a Governor's Commission, and contemporary Maps and State Papers. The finding of the Commission was unfavourable to the Province of Canada, and its Executive Council disputed the "justice or equity of the recommendations of the Imperial Commissioner."* In view of the controlling importance attached by the Federal authorities in the present case to the strictly legal boundaries as being those only to which attention should be directed, the reply of Early Grey (2nd June, 1850) reads curiously. His Lordship said that "The decision of a court of justice appears unsuited to the case. The question in a legal point of view seems to turn on the words of the Quebec Act of 1774. But a tribunal could scarcely pronounce a decision which should define the whole line of separation between the Provinces. And, 30 even if it could do so, it could only interpret and follow the letter of the Act, and not adopt any line of compromise which might be most advantageous to both parties." The matter was afterwards submitted to arbitration, the Governor-General selecting one arbitrator, the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick another, and the two arbitrators choosing a third. After some delay a majority Award was rendered, reaffirming in the main the report of Mr. Gladstone's Commissioners, and the Award was enacted into the Imperial Statute 14 and 15 Vic., chap. 63.

Now that you have communicated to the Government of Ontario, for the first time, the grounds on which the opposition of your Government to the Award proceeds, or is supposed to be defensible, and have thus given to this Government the opportunity of discussing the matter with your Government, my advisers are unwilling to think that the overwhelming reasons which this simple statement 40 of the facts affords for a recognition of the Award, may not even now prevail with your Government to acquiesce in the Award, and to obtain from Parliament at its present session the proper legislation, as well as to get the Legislature of Manitoba to abandon the claim which the Federal Parliament transferred to that Province, in regard to the 39,000 square miles on the westerly side of Ontario.

The transfer to Manitoba included the 7,000 square miles of territory lying south of the Height of Land, and west of the line to which the Federal authorities desire to limit this Province. I have said this territory was not claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company under their charter, nor was there any ground or pretence for so claiming it. Before 1870 it had been treated at all times, and for all purposes, as belonging to this section of Canada. As such it had, before Confederation, been the subject of grants, licenses, and other transactions on the part of the Provincial Government. So much of the territory as 50 was from time to time occupied by a white population was governed, without any question on the part of anybody, by the laws, courts and officers of Upper Canada; and since Confederation the same territory has uninterruptedly been governed by the laws, courts and officers of Ontario; it has had municipal organization as part of this Province; the Ontario District of Algoma has for all purposes of the Dominion and Province been considered to include it; and Provincial money has from time to time been expended in making surveys, and in making roads, bridges, and other improvements, and in administering justice, and maintaining peace and order in the territory. The land is part of certain territory which was the subject of an Order in Council of the Government of Canada, and of a treaty by that Government with the Indians, as long ago as 1850. To this territory Mr. Ramsay, counsel for the Dominion, reported (18th March, 1873) that Ontario was equitably entitled. He justly said that "in creating the Province of Ontario, it is not possible to conceive that the Imperial Legislature intended to convey to that Province, and to the Province of Quebec, less territory than the late Province of Canada actually enjoyed. Now, it is incontestable that up to 1867 the Government of Canada de facto extended to the Height of Land which forms the water-shed of the water system of the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes. . . . It would therefore seem that, in fairness to the Province of Ontario the old line of the Height of Land should be adopted as the western as well as the northern boundary of the Province of Ontario." * Thus in refusing to leave this territory with Ontario, and in transferring to Manitoba their claim to it, the Federal authorities have endeavoured to take from Ontario territory which the chosen counsel of the Dominion Government, a Queen's Counsel of the Quebec Bar, had told that Government "it is not possible to conceive that the Imperial Parliament intended" to withdraw from this Province; and to which he declared it to be "incontestable that up to 1867 the Government of Canada, de facto (and therefore Upper Canada, de facto) extended, and which, in "fairness to the Province of Ontario," it should be allowed to retain. But all these considerations have been disregarded.

The only shadow of claim which the Federal Government can have to this portion of the disputed territory appears to be under an Order of Her Majesty in Council, dated 31st July, 1880, annexing to Canada all British territory in North America not already belonging to it (except Newfoundland). * And if the legal interest in the territory in question became thereby vested technically in the Dominion, it is manifest that, both under the Award and independently of it, the authorities of the Dominion should have treated their acquisition as a trust for Ontario, and should at once have transferred the territory to this Province, instead of making it over, or endeavouring to make it over, to another Province.

Your despatch proposes that Ontario should abandon the Award, and submit the question anew to the Supreme Court of Canada for adjudication. This is the mode which your despatch intimates that your Government now prefer to any other for a new litigation of the question of title. It seems to my Advisers to be remarkable that if this mode of settlement is so peculiarly appropriate and desirable as your despatch contends, the question is now made for the first time. A great and obvious difference between a submission to the Supreme Court now and a direct immediate reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, is that the former course would create years of further delay and involve great additional labour and expense; and without any advantage, as the final decision would be by the Privy Council. The proposal implies, too, that your Government contemplate that the evidence shall be taken anew, and according to the usual practice of taking evidence in ordinary cases. A suit, involving facts covering a period of nearly two centuries, and requiring documentary and other evidence from the Imperial archives in London, the archives of the Hudson's Bay Company, the Public and other Records in Paris, Washington, Albany, Quebec, Ottawa, and elsewhere, would afford unusual occasion for repeated and long-continued delays and innumerable harassing questions of procedure. If the object were delay, no better means of delaying a conclusive decision could be devised. My Government decline consenting to the submission.

The proposal for inviting one of the two Law Lords named in your despatch, or "some other eminent English legal functionary," to come to Canada "for the purpose of hearing the evidence and deciding upon the boundary question as one of law," seems to my Advisers to stand next in order as a means of indefinite delay. In view of the objection taken by your Government to any form of arbitration, my Advisers were surprised at the proposal to submit the question to another referee, sitting alone, and without appeal, and who, though an English judge, would in this matter be acting as an arbitrator. Then it is extremely doubtful if either of the noblemen named would accept the invitation, especially in view of the time which taking the evidence might occupy; and if either were willing to accept the reference, my Advisers are of opinion that the decision of the question by any one English Judge, however exalted, would not "command general assent" to the same extent, or anything like the same extent, as the decision of three Arbitrators of such eminent ability, and so well known to our people, and standing so high in public estimation here, as Sir Edward Thornton, Sir Francis Hincks, and the late Chief Justice Harrison. It may further be observed that no English judge has jurisdiction in his own country to adjudicate on the title to an acre of land, except subject to appeal; and that this Province should voluntarily abandon the adjudication of the three Arbitrators named, in order to have another trial and decision by one English judge, without appeal, as to the title to 100,000 miles of territory, is a proposal which does not commend itself to my Advisers as one possible to entertain.

Ontario Despatch, 18 Feb., 1882.

I may refer here to the charge which you make against the Government of Ontario, of refusing to contribute any land of the Province to the construction of the Pacific Railway, while you contrast with this alleged refusal the fiduciary character which your Government hold "in regard to the various Provinces of the Dominion whose money was expended in the acquisition of the territory, and who are now largely exerting and taxing themselves for the purpose of constructing a line of railway through it;" and you also contrast with the assumed refusal of the Ontario Government the course of the Dominion in largely contributing to the work "out of the North-West Territories of the Dominion." My Government are not aware of any application to them by your Government for any contribution, in land or otherwise, to the work mentioned. My Advisers are of opinion also that in making the charge you have forgotten that the greater part of the territory referred to, and by far the more valuable part, was acquired by the Dominion through setting up the title thereto of Ontario in opposition to the Hudson's Bay Company; that so far as regards that portion of the territory which does not in law or equity belong to Ontario alone, Ontario is one of those Provinces of the Dominion to whom the North-West Territories belong, whose money has been expended in their acquisition, and whose people are taxed to construct the railway; and that, in fact, by far the larger part of the money so expended and of the taxes so imposed is contributed by the people of Ontario. It is with their money and their lands, far more than with the money or lands of any of the other Provinces, that the railway is being constructed; and why Ontario should be called on to offer a further contribution out of lands within its own bounds, towards implementing the contract entered into for this Dominion work, my Advisers fail to perceive.

The expressed object of my despatch of the 31st of December last was to ascertain officially whether your Government could not be induced, without making further unnecessary delay, to consent to some just and adequate arrangements for the Government of the country, the preservation of the timber, the granting of titles to settlers, and the recognition of an undisputed authority to enforce order and administer justice. The evils of the existing state of things in the disputed territory are already so great, and are increasing so rapidly, and it had become "so important that this Province should without further delay have peaceable and undisputed possession of whatever limits it is entitled to," that my Government were "willing, with the concurrence of the Legislature, to submit the matter to the Privy Council on condition of consent being given by the Dominion Government, and that of Manitoba, to just arrangements for the Government of the country in the meantime. Without such "provisional arrangements" my despatch stated that the Province might as well wait for the confirmation of the Award by another Parliament, as go to the expense and have the unavoidable delay of a second litigation. I therefore desired to know whether the Dominion Government were willing to agree to the provisional arrangements which had theretofore from time to time been suggested in written communications by this Government, and by the Attorney-General on their behalf, and which my despatch repeated; and if your Government were not willing to agree to the arrangements specified, I desired to be informed what the best terms were to which your Government were prepared to agree.

With respect to provisional arrangements, my Advisers regret to find, from your despatch, that the Federal Government decline to agree to the suggestion that, "pending the dispute, the Province should have the authority of the Dominion to deal with the lands and timber as in other parts of the Province (subject to an account if the title should ultimately be decided to be in the Dominion and not in the Province);" and my advisers further learn with regret that the Federal Government decline to make any arrangement whatever as to either the timber or the lands, and even intimate that if the provisional arrangement of 26th June, 1874, which gave to the Dominion the temporary right of selling lands west of the provisional line is at an end, the effect will be held by the Federal Government to be, "to leave both parties to assert their own rights, in reference to all the questions involved"—an observation which seems to mean that the Federal Government will in that case proceed to deal at their discretion with the lands on both sides of this line, notwithstanding the dispute as to the title.

My Advisers are of opinion that no provisional arrangements can be adequate which do not (amongst other things) include just arrangements regarding the sale of lands, and the preservation of timber. Even to leave to Ontario the sole government of the country pending the dispute, while the Federal Government continue to deny to this Province the right of dealing, provisionally or otherwise, with a single mile of the territory, or a single tree growing thereon, and insist on remaining unshackled in their own dealings with both land and timber to which they have no right, would be a concession of little practical value, and entirely insufficient to justify the abandonment by this Province of the awarded rights which it possesses.

But your despatch does not even propose to leave Ontario the sole government of the territory pending dispute. My Advisers understand from the manner in which your despatch refers to the laws of Ontario, that the meaning of your proposal is, that the two Provincial Governments should have concurrent authority in the territory—an arrangement which my Advisers respectfully think would in practice be absurd and impossible. To remedy, in any adequate way, the present unhappy state of the territory, my Advisers consider it absolutely necessary that (pending the dispute) the Ontario Lieutenant-Governor in Council should, in the territory in question, have the authority which, in the public interests, is exercised in the other parts of this Province, and is no less needed in this unsettled territory. So, the Legislature of Ontario should be at liberty (pending the dispute) to legislate for the territory from time to time, as its needs and interests require. My Advisers are of opinion that for the peace and order of the territory, the due administration of justice, the development of the country, and the interests of settlers and others, nothing short of an unqualified application to the territory of all the laws of Ontario, including the authority of its Government and Legislature, would accomplish the objects in view; and my Advisers entirely fail to see that any legitimate purpose would stand in the way of such a provisional arrangement. As observed in my former despatch, it is not to be supposed that the Province of Manitoba, with its small revenue, and with the enormous demands upon it for the government and development of its undisputed territory, can desire the further expense and responsibility of the temporary government of 39,000 miles of disputed territory, which may never be theirs, and to which such of the people of Manitoba as may take the trouble to learn the facts must feel it not improbable that Ontario has the right.

If a provisional arrangement were made, and confirmed by proper legislation, for the government of the country by Ontario, without dispute, until the settlement, somehow, of the question of title, there might not be excessive embarrassment or inconvenience in giving effect to the suggestion "that all Justices of the Peace residing in the disputed territory should receive commissions from both Ontario and Manitoba;" or, perhaps, in giving effect to the further suggestion, "that all the judges of the two Provinces should be put in a joint commission as regards the disputed territory," if these concessions should be required by the authorities of the Dominion and of Manitoba; but the details necessary for carrying out these suggestions would require careful consideration by all parties concerned.

With reference to your observations on the enlargement of the boundaries of Manitoba by the Act of last session, this Government have made no complaint of the extension of that Province by the addition to it of undisputed territory. On the contrary, in my despatch of the 15th March last, it was observed that "so far as the territory to be comprised within the limits of the Province of Manitoba is clearly and indisputably within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, my Government rejoice at the extension of that Province, as affording a wider scope for the energies of its people and Government, and as giving to a large number of settlers in Keewatin and North-West territories the direct benefit of Provincial and Municipal Government. But while the extension of the boundaries in directions as to which there is no dispute is matter of congratulation," the transfer of the disputed territory to that Province was strongly objected to, for reasons there set forth. A hope was expressed, which the result proved to be vain, that, in view of the representations made in the despatch, your Government might "even yet see fit so to modify the measure before Parliament as to deprive it of its objectionable features, while still conceding all necessary advantages to the Province of Manitoba, in whose rapid progress and development this Province, as a portion of the Dominion, feels profound satisfaction."

The wrong which your Act of last session did, consisted, not in adding to the Province of Manitoba nearly 100,000 miles of undisputed territory, but in making the further unnecessary and objectionable addition of 39,000 miles of territory not only disputed, but in fact belonging to this Province. This feature of your Act greatly complicated matters, inasmuch as the Government of that Province has since assumed to exercise jurisdiction in the disputed territory, with the concurrence and approval of your Government; and inasmuch also as the consent of the Government and Legislature of Manitoba became thenceforward necessary to any arrangements which the Federal authorities and those of Ontario might see fit to make, whether for determining the question of right, or for providing for the government of the country pending the dispute. It is satisfactory to learn from your despatch that your Government are confident that the Government and Legislature of Manitoba would concur in any arrangement of which your Government may approve. But if the Federal Government will make no just provisional arrangement in regard to the lands and timber; and continue, notwithstanding the dispute, to deal with these as subject to their own discretion; and yet demand that this Province abandon the Award, and submit to a new litigation of the question of title, as the condition of making or proceuring the other just and necessary provisional arrangements proposed, my Advisers are of opinion, and feel bound frankly to state it, that Ontario should not and will not submit to a demand which they cannot but consider most unreasonable.

I am advised to remind you that Ontario with its awarded boundaries has not so large an area as either Quebec or Keewatin; or an area much exceeding the undisputed territory given to Manitoba; or much more than half the area of British Columbia.

Your despatch seems to intimate that no licenses have been issued to cut timber east of the provisional boundary line agreed to in 1874 (you mention the year 1870, it is presumed, by mistake); and you add, that information regarding all permits, licenses, and other transactions would be readily furnished to the Government of Ontario at any time. This Government did not suppose that any licenses had been issued by the Federal Government to cut timber east of the provisional line, and will be glad to be furnished with the information promised in respect to their transactions of any kind in this part of the disputed territory.

My Advisers regret that your Government give no information, and do not apparently offer any, with respect to transactions affecting that important part of the disputed territory which lies west of the provisional line, though such information has been repeatedly requested on behalf of the Ontario Government. My Advisers once more respectfully insist that, whether the title of Ontario to the territory is disputed or admitted, and whether the provisional agreement of 1874 is in force or at an end, the Government and people of Ontario are entitled to full information respecting these transactions, including (as my despatch of the 31st December mentioned) copies of all grants, licenses, permits, regulations, instructions, letters, documents, and papers of every kind relating to the same. 50

Bu

My Advisers regret also that your Government have not thought fit to give any answer to that part of my despatch which referred to the reported grant to the Pacific Railway Company of land for their line of road through the disputed territory, and (for timber purposes) a breadth of twenty miles on each side of this road throughout its whole length, or to my request for copies of Orders in Council and other documents, if any, relating to the transaction.

Your despatch refers to an interview of Sir John Macdonald and the Minister of Justice with the Attorney-General on the 21st November last. The Attorney-General considers that there are several (no doubt unintentional) inaccuracies in what is said or implied in your despatch as to this interview, and as to what took place then and afterwards. I do not deem it necessary to refer to any of these inaccuracies further than to observe that the interview was not "sought" by the Ministers named, but by the Attorney-General, in letters to Sir John Macdonald and Sir Alexander Campbell respectively; and that the Attorney-General's communication to the Minister of Justice with respect to the proposed reference to Lord Cairns or Lord Selborne was made on the 30th of the same month, and not at a more recent date. But whatever may or may not have been said at that interview or otherwise, your despatch states what your Government desire now with a view to the settlement of the dispute, and what provisional arrangements your Government are willing now to make; and, while my Government do not approve of either of the two modes of settlement which you prefer in case there should be a new litigation, and though they regard the provisional arrangements which you mention as entirely insufficient to justify (for the sake of such arrangements) a recommendation to the Legislature of Ontario to abandon any of the awarded rights of the Province, and at this late date to voluntarily enter upon a new litigation on the question of Title; still, my Government trust that the Federal authorities will recognize the duty of making the provisional arrangements required, without attempting to exact from the Province as a condition, the abandonment of its awarded rights, and a new litigation of the question of Title.

The evils which the territory is enduring in consequence of the dispute should surely be reduced to a minimum by every means in the power of the Federal authorities. The dispute is by them; the evils are of their creating; and no one can justify leaving this immense territory without settled laws and settled government. Ontario has a special interest in this object, apart from the value of the territory, its lands and minerals and timber, as many of the people of the Province have gone there to settle or to trade, and more desire to go. Some local improvements, too, which Ontario might at once undertake, would serve to open and develop important sections of the country. Municipal organization is already necessary in some localities, and our people in the territory desire the extension to it of our school system, and desire that assistance from our School Funds which our people in the rest of the Province receive. It is with the laws of this Province that the settlers are familiar; the Province has organized courts in the territory, and has appointed officers to administer our laws. My Advisers hope that, without attempting to exact from the Province conditions to which its representatives cannot agree, the Dominion authorities will at last take the "measures necessary to prevent confusion in these important respects;" will, as regards criminal matters, supply by the proper legislation the deficiencies pointed out by this Government in past communications with respect to the Dominion Statute 43 Vic., chap. 36; and will, as regards matters of Provincial jurisdiction, obtain the consent of Manitoba to the legislation immediately required for placing beyond question the subjection of the territory to all the laws of Ontario, until the termination of the dispute which the Dominion authorities have raised. My Advisers respectfully suggest that the simplest and best way of accomplishing the last of these necessary objects would be, by obtaining from the Legislature of Manitoba an Act consenting to the repeal of so much of the Act of last Session as had the effect of assigning to that Province the claim of the Dominion to 39,000 square miles of the disputed territory, and by procuring from the Federal Parliament an Act giving effect to such consent, and containing the other necessary provisions for securing the important objects mentioned.

But I am advised that no provisional arrangement would be so satisfactory, or so beneficial to the development and settlement of the territory, the maintenance of order, and the due administration of justice therein, as the just course of obtaining, without further delay, by proper legislation from the Federal Parliament and the Legislature of Manitoba, the recognition of the Award as a final adjustment of the boundaries of this Province. The evils already endured are beyond recall, but the continuance or aggravation of them from this time forward is in the hands of your Government.

I earnestly commend all these considerations to the best attention of the Federal Government.

CANADIAN TREATY WITH THE INDIANS OF LAKE SUPERIOR, 1850.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL (CANADA), APPROVED BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL ON THE 11TH JANUARY, 1850, AUTHORIZING NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE INDIANS.

The Committee of the Executive Council have had under consideration, on your Excellency's reference, a memorandum presented to the Honourable Colonel Bruce, Superintendent Indian Department, from the Hon. W. B. Robinson, on behalf of certain Indian Chiefs lately arrested at Sault Ste. Marie, on a charge of having been implicated in the attack on the property of the Quebec Mining Company, and who are represented to be now in Toronto, anxious to obtain assistance to return to their homes, as well as an assurance that the Government will speedily take measures to adjust the claims of the Indians for compensation, on their renouncing all claims to the occupation of the lands in the vicinity of Lakes Huron and Superior, and portions of which have been occupied for mining purposes.

The Committee of Council having reference to the proceedings already taken with a view of adjusting the claims of the Indians, and also to a late report on the subject from the Commissioner of Crown Lands, which will form the subject of a separate minute, are respectfully of opinion, that a sum not exceeding £100 be advanced to the Indians to enable them to return; and the Committee are further of opinion that Mr. Robinson be authorized on the part of the Government to negotiate with the several tribes for the adjustment of their claims to the lands in the vicinity of Lakes Superior and Huron, or of such portions of them as may be required for mining purposes.

The Committee of Council are further of opinion that Mr. Robinson should be instructed to communicate to the Indians the fact of his appointment, and that it is his intention to proceed to Lake Superior at such time as may be found most convenient for meeting with the Chiefs; and that he be likewise instructed to impress on the minds of the Indians, that they ought not to expect excessive remuneration for the partial occupation of the territory heretofore used as hunting grounds, by persons who have been engaged in developing sources of wealth which they had themselves entirely neglected.

The Committee of Council are further of opinion, that Mr. Robinson should warn the Indians against listening to the counsels of any one who may advise them to resort to criminal proceedings, which will not only render the parties participating in them amenable to the laws of the Province, but likewise entail expenses which will necessarily diminish the fund from which alone the means of affording compensation can be obtained. The Commissioner of Crown Lands will advance to Mr. Robinson the sum required, which must form a charge against any moneys received on account of the mining locations.

THE TREATY.

This agreement made and entered into on the seventh day of September, in the year of our Lord 1850, at Sault Sainte Marie, in the Province of Canada, between the Honourable William Benjamin Robinson, of the one part, on behalf of Her Majesty the Queen, and Joseph Peaudechat, John Ininway, Mishemuckqua, Totomenai, Chiefs, and Jacob Wasseba, Ah Mutehwagabon, Michel Shebageshick, Manitoshainse and Chigenaus, principal men of the Ogibbeway Indians inhabiting the northern shore of Lake Superior, in the said Province of Canada, from Batchewanaung Bay to Pigeon River, at the western extremity of said lake, and inland throughout that extent to the height of land which separates the territory covered by the Charter of the Honourable the Hudson's Bay Company from the said tract, and also the islands in the said lake within the boundaries of the British possessions therein, of the other part;

Witnesseth, that for and in consideration of the sum of £2,000 of good and lawful money of Upper Canada, to them in hand paid, and for the further perpetual annuity of £500, the same to be paid and delivered to the said Chiefs and their tribes at a convenient season of each summer, not later than the first day of August, at the Honourable the Hudson's Bay Company's posts of Michipicoten and Fort William, they, the said Chiefs and principal men, do freely, fully and voluntarily surrender, cede, grant and convey unto Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, for ever, all their right, title and interest in the whole of the territory above described, save and except the reservations set forth in the schedule hereunto annexed, which reservation shall be held and occupied by the said Chiefs and their tribes, in common, for the purposes of residence and cultivation. And should the said Chiefs and their respective tribes at any time desire to dispose of any mineral or other valuable productions upon the said reservations, the same will be, at their request, sold by order of the Superintendent-General of the Indian Department for the time being, for their sole use and benefit and to the best advantage.

And the said William Benjamin Robinson, of the first part, on behalf of Her Majesty and the Government of this Province, hereby promises and agrees to make the payments as before mentioned, and further, to allow the said Chiefs and their tribes the full and free privileges to hunt over the territory now ceded by them, and to fish in the waters thereof, as they have heretofore been in the habit of doing, saving and excepting only such portions of the said territory as may from time to time be sold or leased to individuals, or companies of individuals, and occupied by them with the consent of the Provincial Government.

The parties of the second part further promise and agree that they will not sell, lease or otherwise dispose of any portion of their reservations without the consent of the Superintendent-General of Indian affairs being first had and obtained; nor will they at any time hinder or prevent persons from exploring or searching for minerals or other valuable productions in any part of the territory hereby ceded to Her Majesty, as before mentioned. The parties of the second part also agree, that in case the Government of this Province should, before the date of this agreement, have sold or bargained to sell any mining locations or other property, on the portions of the territory hereby reserved for their use and benefit, then, and in that case, such sale or promise of sale shall be perfected, if the parties interested desire it, by the Government, and the amount accruing therefrom shall be paid to the tribe to whom the reservation belongs.

The said William Benjamin Robinson on behalf of Her Majesty, who desires to deal liberally and justly with all her subjects, further promises and agrees that in case the territory hereby ceded by the parties of the second part shall at any future period produce an amount which will enable the Government of this Province, without incurring loss, to increase the annuity hereby secured to them, then and in that case the same shall be augmented from time to time; provided, that the amount paid to each individual shall not exceed the sum of one pound, provincial currency, in any one year, or such further sum as Her Majesty may be graciously pleased to order; and that the number of Indians entitled to the benefit of this Treaty, shall amount to two-thirds of their present number (which is 1,240) to entitle them to claim the full benefit thereof; and should the numbers at any future period not amount to two-thirds of 1,240, the annuity shall be diminished in proportion to their actual numbers.

Schedules of Reservations made by the above named and subscribing Chiefs and Principal Men.

First.—Joseph Peaudchat and his tribe,—The reserve to commence about two miles from Fort William (inland), on the right bank of the River Kimintiquia; thence westerly six miles parallel to the shores of the lake; thence northerly five miles; thence easterly to the right bank of the said river, so as not to interfere with any acquired rights of the Honourable the Hudson's Bay Company.

Second.—Four miles square at Gros Cap, being a valley near the Honourable Hudson's Bay Company's Post of Michipicoten, for Totomenai and tribe.

Third.—Four miles square on Gull River, near Lake Nipigon, on both sides of said river, for the Chief Mishemuckqua and tribe.

LICENSE TO EXPLORE FOR METALS, MINERALS, ETC., ON THE NORTHERLY SHORE OF LAKE SUPERIOR.

R. R. Nelson, of _____ having paid into this Office the sum of twenty-five pounds, by the hands of Mr. W. H. Jones, (being the authorized charge for this License), is hereby permitted to explore and examine, in accordance with the General Order in Council, dated 21st September, 1853, within the section of country situated between Sault Sainte Marie and Pigeon River, on the Shore of Lake Superior and extending Ten miles in a northerly direction, during a period of six months, from the date hereof, and to mine or quarry for copper ore, lead, iron, tin, marble, gypsum, 10 earths or minerals, upon any unlocated and unoccupied lands within that section of country, and not falling within any Indian or Public Reserve, and to select and take possession of a Tract not exceeding in extent Four Hundred Acres, and of the form of forty chains in front by one hundred chains in depth. And subject to the said R. R. Nelson reporting accurately his discovery, and the selection he has made, to the Commissioner of Crown Lands, within the said period of six months; and furnishing at the same time a Map and Report thereof, together with an affidavit by the License holder and some other credible person proving that no counter occupation or workings exist.

This License to remain in force for the term of two years, and to entitle the party named therein to purchase the Tract he may select; paying the consideration money in one sum, at the rate of seven shillings and six pence per acre, within that period. Or failing to do so, he shall be regarded as having 20 abandoned such right to purchase.

Until a purchase be completed, the License holder shall not convey from the Location which he selects, any copper ore, lead, iron, tin, marble, gypsum, earths or minerals, excepting such specimens as may be necessary for testing the quality and value thereof; nor shall he, until a purchase be completed fell or remove any timber from the location.

Upon a selection being made, the subjoined Certificate of Location will be filled up.

I CERTIFY that R. R. Nelson, mentioned in the preceding License, to explore for metals, minerals etc. having declared his selection under its provisions, and filed the required affidavits, has been entered on the map of this office for a Mining Tract of 400 acres, situated at Thunder Bay, and on the north shore thereof, the outlines of which, pending an actual survey, are calculated by the Office Maps, as follows, that is to say: The southeast angle of the Tract being about seven miles north-easterly from the mouth of the Rivière au Courant, in north latitude 48° 29' 30" and west longitude 49° 16' 40", on Bayfield's Chart of Lake Superior. The Tract being forty chains in perpendicular breadth by one hundred chains in mean depth, the lateral lines running due north and the rear lines at right angles thereto.

Licenses granted by Canada, west of the due north line, 1854-1866.

On the communication from the Crown Land Department, dated 15th September, instant, representing that the existing system, relative to the allotment of mining tracts, not having realized the anticipations formed by the Government of the period of their promulgation, nor, on the other hand, enabled individuals desirous of engaging in mining pursuits to effect their objects, without compelling them to purchase locations of so extensive an area as to occasion a needlessly large expenditure of capital on acquiring a right to explore and mine where the indications were favourable, it is respectfully submitted by the Department whether it may not be desirable, in substitution of the system laid down in the Orders in Council of 18th April, 1846, 9th May, 1846, and 7th October, 1846, to devise regulations, combining with a right to explore, during a limited period, on favourable terms, the privilege of purchasing tracts of very moderate extent, provided the explorations prove satisfactory: 10

The Committee recommend that on payment into the hands of the Commissioner of Crown Lands of the sum of twenty-five pounds, that officer be permitted to issue a license to any individual, authorizing him to explore, upon any unoccupied lands within the limits of any such country, or section of country, as he may desire to be inserted, situate within the boundaries of Upper Canada, for copper, lead, iron, tin, marble, gypsum, earth or minerals. Such license to remain in force for a period of two years, and to authorize the individual in whose favour it issued to take possession of a tract not exceeding four hundred acres, and not already occupied by any other person—such tract to be in the proportion of forty chains front by one hundred chains in depth. The license holder to report his discovery and selection accurately, by letter and map, within six months from the issue of his license, accompanied by an affidavit made by himself and some other credible person, proving that no counter occupation or workings exist. 20

And at the expiration of the said term of two years, during which the license shall have force, he shall complete a purchase, paying the consideration money in one sum, at the rate of seven shillings and six pence per acre, or failing to do so he shall be regarded as having abandoned such right to purchase.

CORRESPONDENCE AND DOCUMENTS.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES* TO THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.† 30

DOWNING STREET, 4th December, 1856.

SIR,—I am desirous of informing you, at the earliest period, of certain important questions which have recently been raised respecting the affairs of the Hudson's Bay Company in British North America, and of the steps which Her Majesty's Government have in contemplation regarding them.

You are aware that the Hudson's Bay Company claim, under the charter of 1670 and the various Acts of Parliament which they consider to have subsequently recognized it, rights of proprietorship, exclusive trade, taxation and government, over all the regions under British dominion watered by streams flowing into Hudson's Bay. The extent and ground of this claim are defined in the "Statement of Rights" printed in the annexed Parliamentary paper, and in the accompanying map.

The Hudson's Bay Company also claim, and actually exercise rights of exclusive trade although 40 not the ownership of the soil, over all the territory comprised in a certain license to trade, granted in the year 1838 by the Crown under the provisions of the Act, "for regulating the fur trade," 1 and 2 George IV., cap. 66, of which license, copy is also annexed to this despatch.

It has been intimated to me on the part of the Hudson's Bay Company, that as their license expires in 1859, and as a very long period is required before any important change of arrangements can be notiried and acted on throughout the vast and distant regions affected by it, it will be very desirable that the views of Her Majesty's Government and of Parliament, as to the renewal of the license, should be ascertained as early as possible.

Her Majesty's Government have therefore determined on bringing the whole subject under the investigation of a Committee of the House of Commons at the earliest convenient time. The enquiry will be mainly directed to the question of the renewal of the license; but it must incidentally embrace the general position and prospects of the Hudson's Bay Company.

As many points may arise in the course of this enquiry which may affect the interests of Canada, I have to instruct you to consider, with the advice of your Council, the question whether it may be desirable to send witnesses to appear before the Committee, or in any other manner to cause the views of the Provincial Government, and the interests of the Canadian community, to be represented before this Committee.

I have, etc,

MINUTE OF COUNCIL, CANADA, DATED 17th JANUARY, 1857, APPROVED BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.*

The Committee of Council have read with great satisfaction the despatch of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, of the 4th of December last, on the subject of the Hudson's Bay Company's occupation of the great north-western territory of America.

Order in Council (Can.),
17th January, 1857.

They rejoice that the important position and advantages of that great portion of the continent have received such prominent attention from the Imperial Government, and are to undergo the examination and consideration of a Committee of the House of Commons in England.

The Committee desire to urge the importance of ascertaining the limits of Canada in the direction of the territory over which the Hudson's Bay Company claim jurisdiction. The general feeling here is strongly that the Western boundary of Canada extends to the Pacific Ocean.

In this, or in any view, the tracing and fixing on the ground the line of separation between the United States and these territories of the north-west, is of great importance. The rapid settlement of Minnesota, shortly to be admitted a State of the American Union, renders this the more necessary, for as civilization approaches the boundary, so will be increased the difficulty of maintaining the distinction between the rights of the two nations on the frontier.

Already the Committee have reason to believe that difficulties in this respect have occurred, or at least have been threatened, and the importance cannot be underrated of early guarding against any such.

The Committee are most anxious that Canadian interests should be properly represented before the proposed Committee of the House, and that opportunity should be afforded for carefully and closely watching any evidence that may be adduced before that body; and they will take the earliest occasion of suggesting to your Excellency the manner in which they conceive this can be best accomplished. Situated as Canada is, she necessarily has an immediate interest in every portion of British North America, and the question of the jurisdiction and title claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company is to her paramount of importance.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL (CANADA), DATED 16TH FEBRUARY, 1857, APPROVED BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.*

In furtherance of the Order in Council of the 27th January ultimo, directing the appointment of a Special Agent to proceed to England to represent Canadian rights and interests before the proposed Committee of the House of Commons, on the subject of the Hudson's Bay Territory, the Committee respectfully recommend that the instructions to be given to such Agent for his guidance in the matter referred to, be as follows:—

cil (Can.),

"The fact that a Parliamentary Committee will probably hear evidence and report to the House of Commons, on the subject of the Hudson's Bay Territory, makes it impossible for His Excellency to convey to you instructions which are not in themselves more or less vague.

"His Excellency cannot anticipate the nature of the evidence to be given, or forestall the conclusion to be arrived at by such a Committee. Even after the Committee shall have reported, the course likely to be taken by Parliament or by Her Majesty's Government can only be conjectured.

"You will not, therefore, expect to receive instructions of a very definite character, but His Excellency has full and complete confidence in your knowledge and discretion, and he confides this mission to you the more readily, because your position in the country is such as to imply an entire estrangement from all the ordinary ties of local or party politics.

"Immediately on your arrival in London, you will place yourself in communication with the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies (to whom these instructions have been communicated), and as soon as any Parliamentary Committee on the subject of the Hudson's Bay Company or territory is constituted, you will take steps for offering to afford all information in your power relating to the interests or claims of Canada.

"You will consider it as part of your duty to watch over those interests by correcting any erroneous impressions, and by bringing forward any claims of a legal or equitable kind, which this Province may possess on account of its territorial position or its past history.

Order in Council (Can.),
16th February,
1837.

"You will not consider yourself as authorized to conclude any negotiation or to assent to any definite plan of settlement affecting Canada, without reporting the particulars of the same, and your own views thereon, to His Excellency in Council.

"His Excellency has full and complete confidence in the justice and consideration of Her Majesty's Government, and he is sure that the interests and feelings of Canada will be consulted, so far as is consistent with right and justice.

"The people of Canada desire nothing more.

"His Excellency feels it particularly necessary that the importance of securing the north-west territory against the sudden and unauthorized influx of immigration from the United States' side, should be strongly pressed. He fears that the continued vacancy of this great tract, with a boundary not marked on the soil itself, may lead to future loss and injury, both to England and Canada. He wishes you to urge the expediency of marking out the limits, and so protecting the frontier of the Lands above Lake Superior, about the Red River, and thence to the Pacific, as effectually to secure them against violent seizure or irregular settlement, until the advancing tide of emigrants from Canada and the United Kingdom may fairly flow into them, and occupy them as subjects of the Queen on behalf of the British Empire.

"With these objects in view, it is especially important that Her Majesty's Government should guard any renewal of a license of occupation (should such be determined on), or any recognition of rights in the Company, by such stipulations as will cause such license or such rights not to interfere with the fair and legitimate occupation of tracts adapted for settlement.

"It is unnecessary of course, to urge in any way the future importance of Vancouver's Island, as the key to all British North America, on the side of the Pacific, situated as it is between the extensive seaboard of Russian America and the vast territory in the hands of the United States.

"His Excellency cannot foresee the course which a Committee of the House of Commons may see fit to pursue in the proposed enquiry, or determine beforehand on what points evidence may be required.

"At any moment, however, His Excellency will be ready to attend to your suggestions, and supply such information, either by documentary evidence, or by witnesses from Canada, as you think necessary, and he may be able to send over.

"You will, of course, act upon such instructions as you may from time to time receive.

SIR,—I have the honour, by command of His Excellency the Governor-General to communicate to you hereby His Excellency's instructions for your guidance in connection with your mission to England, as the Special Agent appointed to represent Canadian rights and interests, before the proposed Committee of the House of Commons, on the subject of the Hudson's Bay Territory.

I am to premise, however, that as it is impossible to anticipate the nature of the evidence that may be taken, or the conclusion that may be arrived at by the Committee, or the course which Parliament or Her Majesty's Government may think proper to adopt on the report of the Committee, it is not in His Excellency's power to convey to you at present any instructions of a precise or definite character. His Excellency has, however, entire confidence in your knowledge and discretion, and he has the more readily entrusted the important mission to you, inasmuch as your high position in the Colony removes you from all the ordinary influences of local or party consideration.

Immediately on arriving in London you will place yourself in communication with the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies (to whom these instructions have been communicated); as soon as any Parliamentary Committee on the subject of the Hudson's Bay Company or Territory is constituted, you will take steps for offering to afford all information in your power relating to the interests or claims of Canada.

MEMORANDUM OF THE HON. JOSEPH CAUCHON, COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS, CANADA, 1857.*

Memorandum of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, Canada, 1857.

The Commissioner of Crown Lands submits the following remarks on the North-West Territories of Canada, Hudson's Bay, the Indian Territories, and the questions of Boundary and Jurisdiction connected therewith.

The question now under special consideration has more particular reference to the subject of the renewal of a Lease held by the Hudson's Bay Company for the "Indian Territories," which are not considered to be within the boundaries of Canada, though subject to Canadian jurisdiction.

But the Hudson's Bay Company's "Map and Statement of Rights," under their original Charter as submitted to the Imperial Government in 1850, by Sir J. H. Pelly, the Chairman of the Company has also, however, to be considered in connection with it.

It becomes necessary, therefore, to expose the fallacies of the "Statement of Rights and Map" referred to, in order that the rights of the Province may not be misunderstood or the pretensions of the Company taken for granted.

The rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the effect of their operations upon the interests of Canada, will best be considered under the following separate heads, viz.:

First—With respect to their operations under the original Charter on the territories affected thereby.

Second—With respect to their operations within the boundaries of this Province.

Third—With respect to their operations on what has been termed the Indian Territories, now under lease to them.

Fourth—Arising out of the foregoing, the more important question of the boundaries of the above Territorial Divisions; and Fifth—With respect to jurisdiction, as exercised, and as sanctioned by law.

Operations of the Company on their own Territories.

On the first head, as regards their operations under their Charter on the territories which, if valid, it would cover, it is a matter of very secondary importance to Canada. The territories of the Hudson's Bay Company, taken at the largest extent which any sound construction of their Charter in connection with international rights would warrant, if not in point of distance so very remote, are nevertheless so situated, that it can only be when all the localities to the south and west, more available for purposes of agriculture and settlement, have been filled to overflowing, that settlers may be gradually forced into that vicinity from the superabundant population of more favoured countries.

The most direct interest that Canada could have in the matter at the present moment, being responsible for the administration of justice there, would be rather of a moral and political than of an interested or commercial character. But as the necessities of the Company, in whose hands a monopoly of the trade has practically existed since the Treaty of Utrecht, together with the powers which they profess to derive from their Charter, has induced them to establish a jurisdiction which, for the moment, seems to have been successful in maintaining tranquillity and order, Canada has had no special reason to intervene, though if any complaints had been made on this score she would of course have felt called upon to exercise the powers vested in her by Imperial Statutes.

It is not, indeed, to be denied that the freedom of the trade, consisting of fur and fisheries, would be of advantage to this country; but as this involves a question of the validity of the Charter, and whether or not, if valid in respect of the territory really affected by it, it would also affect the open sea of the Bay, and seeing that the question is not now raised of any further legislation to give effect to the powers it professes to confer, the consideration of this point is immaterial at the present moment, compared with the more important subjects that have to be treated of.

Operations of the Company on Canadian Territories.

The second point to be taken into consideration, and which is of a more important nature, is that which affects the operations of the Company within the boundaries of Canada, and on this head it must be admitted that they have had every facility they could possibly enjoy in their own territories, if such exist; whether on the coasts of Labrador, Lakes Huron, Superior, or Winnipeg; whether on the Saguenay, the St. Maurice, the Ottawa, the Red River, the Assiniboine, or the Saskatchewan—where ever they have operated within the boundaries of Canada they have had precisely the same scope as within their own territories on the shores of Hudson's Bay; not indeed but what if opposition had sprung up, the same facilities must necessarily have been afforded to any rival traders, had they not been effectually protected from such rivalry by their unlimited means, their extensive ramifications and complete organization, with which no rival traders were able to compete, unless indeed to a very limited extent in the immediate vicinity of the settlements.

Memorandum
of the Commissioner of Crown Lands,
Canada, 1857.

There are indeed parts of the Province so remote from established settlements, and having so little direct intercourse with them, that in former years it might have been to some extent a tax upon the country to have established tribunals sufficient to enforce the laws over regions inhabited only, with one exception, by the servants of the Company and the Indians, though it may now be reasonably questioned whether corresponding benefits would not have accrued from such a course, while it must be admitted that the Company have at all events reaped a profit, taking together the costs they have been put to from the want of legal tribunals and the monopoly of the trade which the non-organization of such tribunals has practically been the means of enabling them to enjoy.

The exception referred to, where a considerable settlement exists, besides the employes of the Company and the Indians, is the Red River Country.

But the time has passed when any considerations of expense, or temporary inconvenience, even if proved to exist, can be allowed to stand in the way of opening up those territories, when indeed the necessity for expansion compels the Provincial Government to create further facilities for it; and as an additional reason why the Government should no longer permit the present state of things to continue, it must be added that rumours have been gaining ground of late years, with a force and clearness which almost compel conviction, that the jurisdiction actually exercised in those remote localities has been as contrary to the wishes of the people as it has been manifestly without the sanction of law, all which has created a necessity for early investigation and action on the part of the Canadian Government.

With this view preparations were made in the Crown Lands Department last summer for a preliminary survey from the head of Lake Superior westward, preparatory to the opening of free grant roads, which have been so successful in other parts of the country, for the purpose of forming the nucleus of a settlement which would gradually penetrate to the valley of the Red River and the prairies beyond; besides which a first-class thoroughfare would be necessary to afford easier means of communication with the navigable waters flowing to the west, etc., to facilitate the administration of justice in the distant settlements, and the necessary intercourse generally between those parts and the more populous districts of the country, and which would at the same time throw open to emigration, agriculture and commerce a far larger area, with at least an equal average mildness of climate, and susceptible of more rapid development (a known characteristic of prairie countries) than all other parts of the Province heretofore rendered available for settlement.

The question of the renewal of the license of exclusive trade for the Indian Territories does not, of course, affect the country above referred to, any more than it does the lands, whatever they be—for they have never been defined upon authority—which the original Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company may, upon investigation, be construed to cover.

Operations of the Company on the Indian Territories.

The third point is, for the moment, of less importance than the last, though within the period of 10 another such lease as the Act 1 and 2 Geo. IV., cap. 66, authorizes, it would be impossible to calculate the immense influence it must have upon the future of this country, and the British institutions which have taken root so deeply and thrive so nobly on its soil. The present operations of the Hudson's Bay Company in these "Indian Territories" are conducted on the same principle precisely as within the boundaries of Canada, the jurisdiction they exercise having heretofore had the excuse of necessity, if not the sanction of law; and so far as it can be shown to have been exercised to the benefit of those countries the Company might fairly claim indemnity for the consequences, should that become necessary, and there is no reason to doubt either the generosity or the justice of the Legislature, if called upon to ratify such a measure.

Memorandum
of the Commissioner of
Crown Lands,
Canada, 1857.

It now becomes necessary, under the fourth head, to treat the questions of boundary arising out of 20 the three foregoing; and these questions have, heretofore, been so little understood, that it will be necessary to enter into the subject at some length.

The difficulty of describing definite boundaries in countries which at the time were but very imperfectly or partially known, has always been a matter of serious embarrassment. In the present instance however, the difficulties can only be in matters of detail, and it may be safely assumed that they will be still further lessened by the fact, that wherever uncertainty can be supposed to prevail in any point of real importance, it can only be between the Province of Canada on the one hand, and the "Indian Territories" on the other (not between Canada and the Territories of the Hudson's Bay Company, unless at a point of comparatively little consequence); and it would be difficult to conceive that it could be adverse to the interests of the Crown or the community, if the principal question of boundary were sunk 30 altogether, and the whole of the "Indian Territories" incorporated with this Province.

Boundary of the Company's Territories under Charter of 1670.

In the first place, then, with respect to the Territory affected by the Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company, it may be admitted that it would not only be difficult but absolutely impossible to define it; it is therefore fortunate that its limited extent renders the question of little importance further than that it becomes necessary to consider and rebut the very large pretensions of the Company.

The extent of the territory affected by the Charter is subject to two distinct conditions:

First—It is confined to all such territory as was then the property of the donor.

Second—It is confined to all such unknown territories as by the discoveries of the Company, his 40 subjects, might become his property.

These distinctions, though not directly expressed, are nevertheless conditions resulting from the circumstances, and necessary to a proper understanding of the case.

With respect to the first, viz., the territory which was the property of the donor, it is necessarily limited by usage and by common sense to what was known or discovered, for the unknown and undiscovered could not be his property, and might never become his property, that being dependent upon circumstances then in the future; it is further limited by specific condition, expressed in the Charter itself, to such portions of what was then known as did not belong to any other Christian Prince or State, which condition, it must be admitted, was an acknowledgment on the part of the donor that some part of the territory he was describing was not his, and of doubt as to what did or did not belong to him.

With respect to the extent of territory *that might have been affected by the second condition above stated (that is as regards exclusive trade, the grant of soil being less extensive and more ambiguous), it has no particular limit, for it embraces all countries which could be reached either by "water or land" through Hudson's Straits, and to limit or extend it merely to the sources of rivers discharging into Hudson's Bay would be a construction which the Charter will in no sense admit of. But while it extends to all unknown countries or infidel nations, which the Company could reach through Hudson's Straits or Bay, it is at the same time inferentially and necessarily restricted from extending to any of those unknown parts which might be first discovered and possessed by the subjects of any other Christian Prince or State. This is not, indeed, expressed in the Charter in relation to undiscovered territories, but it is emphatically so as regards the then state of the rights and possessions of Christian Powers, While the King, therefore, is so careful, at least in the wording of the document, not to infringe upon the rights of others already acquired, it can scarcely be supposed that he meant to infringe upon the rights of others to acquire what then belonged to none. The inference is altogether against the supposition that King Charles meant by his Charter to deny the right of any other civilized nation to make further discoveries and appropriate the countries discovered, and even if he had so intended it, he had not the power to alter the law of nations in this respect. Besides, the Charter is expressly one of discovery as well as trade, etc.; the advantages granted to the "adventurers" are incidental and subordinate to that greater object, but there could be no discovery on their part wherever they were preceded by prior discovery and possession on the part of the subjects of any other Christian Prince. The right of discovery is and was so well established, and wherever considered of any importance, has been so jealously watched that volumes of diplomatic controversy have been written on single cases of dispute, and the King of Great Britain could not by his Charter annul the recognized law of nations, or limit in any degree the right of other States to discover and possess countries then unknown. It may even be considered extravagant to affirm that he could convey a right of property to territories not then, but which might afterwards become his or his successors, by the prior discovery and possession of the Company themselves, his subjects: were it necessary to dwell upon this point, it could easily be shown that most of the territories now claimed under the Charter which were not discovered at that date, the Company were not afterwards the first nor were any other British subjects the first discoverers of; that, in fact, except the Coppermine River, the Company never discovered anything or penetrated beyond the Coasts and Confines of the Bay (to which perhaps they at that time justly considered their rights restricted) for upwards of a hundred years after the date of their Charter, and that when they did so penetrate, the only discovery they made was that the whole country in the interior had been long in the peaceful possession of the subjects of another Christian Prince.*

But the position as regards discovery after the date of the Charter, it is unnecessary to dwell upon particularly as an adverse title can be proved prior to the date of the Charter, and that too sanctioned by treaty.

The early discovery and occupation of the country in and about Hudson's Bay are, as in many other cases, shrouded in a good deal of obscurity. The British claim as the first discoverers of the whole coast of this part of North America, in the persons of John and Sebastian Cabot, about the year 1497; but it is contended on the other hand that their discoveries did not extend to the north of Newfoundland, which still retains the name they gave it, and which they supposed to form part of the main land. It is said, indeed, that the Cabots penetrated to a very high latitude far to the north of the Straits now bearing the name of Hudson; but it must be remarked that there appear to be no authentic records of the two voyages of the Cabots, their journals or observations. There appears to be only hearsay evidence of what they did, or where they went, told afterwards at second-hand to third parties. The voyages of the Cabots, therefore, although they are matters of history, not admitting of any reasonable doubt, in a general way, as to their having reached the coast of America, lose much of their force as the bases of specific territorial claims, from the want of any record of their proceedings. Did they ever land? If so, where? What observations did they make? Did they take formal possession? etc.

The French claim through fishermen of Brittany, who established fisheries on the coast as early as 1504, and through a map published by Jean Deny, of Honfleur, in 1506. The map would be valuable if any authentic copy of it be extant. There does not appear to be any such record of the operations of Ogilby, the Breton fishermen as would fix precisely the spot where their trade was carried on, London, 1671. though a British geographical work, published in 1671, with a map attached, fixes it at Hudson's Straits, naming the country after them, on the south side of the Straits and within the Bay. The next navigator through whom the French claim is maintained is John Verezzani, who visited the country by order of Francis the First of France, in 1523-4. This is the first voyage, in behalf of either France or England, of which any authentic and circumstantial record exists, as written by the navigator himself, who gave the country the name of New France. In 1534 Jacques Cartier's discoveries com- 10 menced, and these are so well known that it is unnecessary to say more of them.

Thus, then, it appears that the Cabots' voyages, unsustained by any authentic record, affording no means of basing even a probable surmise as to whether so much as a landing was effected, formal possession taken, or any act done to constitute the assumption of sovereignty or of territorial dominion, comprise the only grounds on which England can base a claim to the country north of Newfoundland, prior to the voyage of Jacques Cartier. Apart, therefore, from the question of "beneficial interests" (to use the expression of a British diplomatist) which were acquired by France, commencing with the discoveries of Cartier, the preponderance of admissible evidence is altogether in favour of French discovery of that part of the continent between Newfoundland and Hudson's Bay. But even if the question rested altogether between the unauthenticated discoveries of the Cabots and the commencement of set- 20 tlement by Cartier, it would not be inappropriate to assume the British view of a similar question as maintained in the Oregon dispute, in the following words:—

"In the next place, it is a circumstance not to be lost sight of, that it (the discovery by Gray) was not for several years followed up by any act which could give it value in a national point of view; it was not in truth made known to the world either by the discoverer himself or by his Government."

The next English attempts at discovery commenced in 1553, when Willoughby penetrated to the north of Hudson's Bay, which, however, he did not discover or enter. This was nineteen years after Jacques Cartier's first voyage, and was followed by various other attempts at finding a north-west passage, all apparently directed to the north of Hudson's Straits until 1610, the period of Hudson's voyage, in which he perished after wintering in the Bay which bears his name; but by this time it must be 30 observed that Canada was colonized by the French.

In 1540 De Roberval was made Viceroy of Canada, the description of which, as given in his commission, included Hudson's Bay, though not then of course known by that name.

L'Escaobot gives a full description of Canada at the period of De La Roche's appointment in 1598 as follows:—

"Ainsi notre Nouvelle France a pour limites du côté d'ouest les terres jusqu'à la mer dite Pacifique au deçà du tropique du cancer; au midi les îles de la mer Atlantique du côté de Cuba et l'Île Espagnole; au levant la mer du nord, qui baigne la Nouvelle France; et au Septentrion cette terre que est dite inconnue, vers la mer glacée jusqu' au Pole Arctique."*

Notwithstanding failures and difficulties, France continued the effort to colonize Canada, and in 1598 De La Roche was appointed Governor of the whole of Canada as above described; in 1603 or 1604 40 the first exclusive Charter was granted for the fur trade of Canada up to the 54° of north latitude; in 1608 Champlain founded the City of Quebec; and in 1613 he accompanied his Indian allies, to the number of between two and three thousand, up the Ottawa and by Lake Nipissing and the French River, to war with a hostile nation at the Sault Ste. Marie. It must now be observed that the great incentive to the colonization of Canada was the enormous profits of the fur trade, without which it is scarcely likely that such persevering efforts would have been made for that purpose while so many countries with more genial climates remained in a manner unappropriated.

* Therefore New France has for boundaries on the west the Pacific Ocean within the Tropic of Cancer; on the south the Islands of the Atlantic towards Cuba and Hispaniola; on the east the Northern Sea, which washes its shores, embracing on the north the lands called Unknown, towards the Frozen Sea, up to the Arctic Pole.

Tadoussac, at the mouth of the Saguenay River, was the first important post established by the French on the St. Lawrence; it was the entrepôt of the fur trade before Quebec was founded, and continued to be so afterwards. This will not be deemed extraordinary when it is considered that the Saguenay River afforded the best means of access into the interior, and was the best inland route, in fact is the best canoe route yet, to the Great Bay now bearing the name of Hudson. There is indeed no authentic record of any of the French having made an overland journey to the Bay at so early a period, but when it is considered at what an early date the Coureurs des Bois traversed the whole country in search of peltries, how readily they amalgamated with the Indians, who in that locality were in friendly alliance with them, and when it is also considered what extraordinary journeys the 10 Indians undertook, as instanced by the war carried into the enemy's country at the Sault Ste. Marie, already referred to, the presumption is that the fur traders of Tadoussac not only enjoyed the trade of the Great Bay, but must also have penetrated very far in that direction, if not to the Bay itself, a journey at the most of less distance and not greater difficulty than that which Champlain successfully accomplished with an army, while it had the strong incentive of profit to stimulate it. It is not necessary, however, to prove that every corner of the country known to the world as New France or Canada had been first visited by the actual possessors of the region so known.

However strong the probabilities, therefore, of the Coureurs des Bois having been in communication with the great northern Bay before the visit of Hudson in 1610, or of Button, who succeeded him in 1612, it is not necessary to base any argument thereon; nor is it necessary to dwell on the 20 reputed voyage of Jean Alphonse, of Saintonge, in 1545, which, although quoted by French historians, does not appear to be sufficiently authenticated. For, granting that the rights accruing from discovery resulted from the voyages of Hudson and Button, these discoveries were practically abandoned, in fact were never dreamt of being followed up by way of occupation, the finding of a north-west passage having been their sole object; but waiving even this point, it will be found that the rights of France were made good by international treaty long before the Charter of Charles the Second was granted.

It will be seen from L'Escarbot's description, and those contained in the commissions of the Governors already referred to, that France claimed the whole country extending to the north of Hudson's Bay, her title resting in the first instance upon the discoveries already mentioned, of which those of Verezzani, Cartier, and Champlain are of unquestioned authenticity, to which they had added, 30 when L'Escarbot wrote, in 1611, the title resulting from actual possession in the shape of permanent settlement. England, on the other hand, claiming under Cabot's discovery, denied the right of France generally to the whole, and practically to the more southerly parts, where she endeavoured to plant settlements of her own, in which she was successful at a period somewhat later than the French. The fact is, each was trying to grasp more than they could take actual possession of; and if mere discovery of parts of a continent without actual possession or settlement were made the basis of permanent rights, neither of the contending parties would perhaps have had any right at all. Gradually the state of the actual possessions of the two Powers settled down into a sort of intelligible shape, though without any very distinct boundaries, the most northerly of the English possessions being known as New England, and all the country to the north thereof being known as New France or Canada, where the French 40 only were in possession, there being no possession or settlement of any kind to the north of them. Still, had England colonized Hudson's Bay at that period and been successful in keeping actual possession of it, she would just have had the same right to do so that she had to colonize New England. That England persevered with extraordinary energy in trying to find a north-west passage there can be no doubt, nor does it appear that France, though publicly claiming the country, made any objection; but neither country made the most distant attempt at settlement or actual occupation of those remote and inhospitable regions at that period.

In 1615 another expedition was made into Hudson's Bay, in search of a north-west passage, by Paffin and Bylot. In 1627 the Quebec Fur Company was formed under the auspices of Cardinal Richelieu and an exclusive Charter granted to them for the whole of New France or Canada, described 50 as extending to the Arctic Circle. In 1629 Quebec was taken by the British, as were also most of the other principal towns founded by the French, in Acadia and Nurembega (now Nova Scotia and New Brunswick), which were then Provinces of New France, the two nations being then at war. In 1631 Fox and James, on two different expeditions, prosecuted a further search for a north-west passage in Hudson's Bay, and from the latter of these navigators the southerly portion of the Bay takes its name,

At this period the authenticated voyages of the English into Hudson's Bay were Hudson in 1610 Button in 1612, Bylot and Baffin in 1615, and Fox and James in 1631; the numerous other expeditions having been apparently directed to the north of Hudson's Straits. At the same time, the extent of New France or Canada, as claimed by the French, was publicly known throughout the civilized nations of Europe. It is not necessary to say that that claim was admitted by Great Britain; it is sufficient that it was known. British authorities even of a later period, it must be observed, have contended that the French were intruders in America altogether in violation of the title accrued through the discoveries 10 of the Cabots, and had no right whatever to any part of it until acquired by treaty. It therefore becomes immaterial whether the claims of the French were disputed or not, so far as they were afterwards confirmed or a title created by Treaty.

In 1632 peace was concluded, and by the Treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye, Canada or New France was relinquished to the French without any particular designation of its limits, and the British forces were to be withdrawn from the places they had taken, which being the most important, including the seat of Government, might almost be said to have amounted to the conquest of the whole country.

Admitting, then, that but a disputed title of discovery had previously existed on either part—nay, admitting more, that the right vested by prior discovery was in England, this Treaty sets the matter at rest as regards all that was at that time called by the name of New France or Canada. There is 20 indeed no getting behind this Treaty, of which the Charter afterwards granted by Charles the Second was in fact, but for the saving clause it contains, a violation, and Canada might well be content to rest her case here as against a Charter, which, referring to a country previously guaranteed by the Treaty to a foreign power, is expressly conditioned (as a Charter of discovery) not to interfere with what belonged to that other power. If, as is asserted by some English writers, France had no rights in America but such as she acquired by Treaty, what, it may be asked, were the limits of the Territory she acquired by the Treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye, if not all that she claimed under the name of New France? It must be observed, too, that Champlain, the Viceroy of Canada, was made prisoner when Quebec was taken in 1629, and carried to England, where he remained for some time, and that the very year in which the Treaty was entered into, he published a work, containing a map of New France, by 30 which Hudson's Bay was included in the country so called. Can it then for a moment be supposed, with Champlain, the Viceroy of New France, a prisoner in their hands, and their flag floating in triumph from the battlements of its capital, that the British Government and the diplomatists who negotiated the Treaty were ignorant of the meaning attached to the terms "Canada" or "New France," or could attach any other meaning to those terms than that which Champlain's published maps of a previous date indicated, and with which the descriptions of other French writers, whose works were known throughout Europe, coincided? Can it be supposed that in the negotiations preceding the Treaty Champlain's views of the extent or boundaries of his Viceroyalty were wholly unknown, or that the British diplomatists meant something less by the appellation than what was known to be understood by France? If, indeed, something less than the known extent of country called New France had been 40 agreed upon, some explanation would undoubtedly have been contained in the Treaty, or, if there had been any misunderstanding on the subject, the map which issued the same year, in Champlain's work of 1632, would at once have been made a cause of remonstrance, for, coming from the Chief Officer of the Colony, who was re-appointed to or continued in his office after the Peace, and published in Paris under the auspices of the King, it could not be otherwise looked upon than as an official declaration of the sense in which France regarded the Treaty.

Even, then, if the rights of France were wholly dependent upon international Treaties, her right became as good by the Treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye to the shores of Hudson's Bay as to the shores of the St. Lawrence. If she had rights before, the Treaty confirmed them; and if she had no rights before, the Treaty created them; and in either case, the effect was as great in the one locality as the 50 other. Every further step, however, in the history of the country will only tend to show that even if there had been no such Treaty as that of St. Germain-en-Laye, the Charter could not be sustained in opposition to the rights of France.

The provisions of the Treaty of 1632 seem to have been respected for a period of thirty-six years, when, in 1668, the next English expedition entered the Bay, which was the first trading voyage ever made by British subjects to the Bay, and which resulted in the formation of the Hudson's Bay Company and the grant of the Charter two years after. In saying that this was the first purely commercial enterprise of the British in Hudson's Bay, it is not meant to be implied that no trade was had with the Indians by those engaged on the former expeditions, but that such enterprises were undertaken with the definite object of reaching the Pacific, and without the least idea of any practical occupation of, or trade with the country.

The British having ceased any attempt upon Hudson's Bay from the time of Fox and James' voyages and the Treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye, for a period of thirty-six years, it now remains to be seen what the character of this their next attempt was, and what had been the circumstances of the country in the interim.

That the name of Canada or New France continued to attach to the whole country during that period is indisputable; the French published maps of these times leave no doubt upon the subject; and when we find the French not only designating the country by these names in their maps published by royal authority, but also entering upon the practical occupation of the since disputed parts of the country so designated, the carrying on of the trade with it both by sea and land, and the establishing of missions, all within the period intervening between the Treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye and the granting of the Charter, or the voyage which preceded the Charter, and all without interference on the part of Great Britain, we must conclude that the rights of the French were incontestable, and that if ever an adverse claim had been preferred, it was considered to have been abrogated by the Treaty.

In 1656 the first exclusively commercial sea voyage was made into Hudson's Bay by Jean Bourdon who found the trade in furs so profitable that others immediately followed. The first missionary establishment was made there in 1663 by La Couture, who went overland by direction of T. Avaugour, Governor of Canada, who had been twice solicited by deputations of Indians from the Bay to send them missionaries; and now the French being fully established in the trade, and in the occupation of the country, both by sea and land, of the coast and of the interior, the English "Adventurers" first appear upon the scene, in a business way, under the countenance of two Canadians, De Grozelier and Radisson, who, having been already engaged in the trade of the Bay, and having failed in procuring certain privileges they desired from their own Government, went to England and induced some Englishmen to join them in a trading voyage in 1668, which was so successful that, as already stated, it resulted in the formation of a Company, and the grant in 1670 of one of those extraordinary Charters which were so much in vogue in those days that the whole of the Continent of America, north of the Gulf of Mexico, known and unknown, may be said to have been covered by them, and some of it doubly so, if the vague and ambiguous descriptions, of which this was the most vague, could be said to mean anything.

This was the origin of the Hudson's Bay Company, and they immediately commenced to build forts and establish themselves in the trade, but no sooner was this known in France than orders were given to expel them. Accordingly a desultory warfare was kept up for a number of years between the Canadian traders and the Company, in which the latter were nearly expelled, but again recovered themselves and strengthened their position, when it became necessary to take more effective means for their expulsion. Troops were accordingly despatched from Quebec overland for that purpose, under the Chevalier de Troyes, who commenced his work very effectually by taking the principal Forts of the Company. It must be observed that this was in 1686, in time of peace between Great Britain and France, and yet these proceedings were not made a cause of war, which in itself would strongly imply an admitted right on the part of France to extirpate the Company as trespassers upon her territory.

War having afterwards broken out, the Forts on Hudson's Bay were successively taken and retaken till the Peace of Ryswick, in 1697, put a stop to hostilities, at which time the British appear to have been possessed of Fort Albany only, the Canadians having possession of all the other establishments and the trade of the Bay.

By the Treaty of Ryswick, Great Britain and France were respectively to deliver up to each other generally whatever possessions either held before the outbreak of the war, and it was specially provided that this should be applicable to the places in Hudson's Bay taken by the French during the peace which preceded the war, which, though retaken by the British during the war, were to be given up to the French. There could scarcely be a stronger acknowledgment of the right of France to expel the Company as trespassers upon her soil, for it is impossible to construe the Treaty in this particular otherwise than as a justification of the act.

Moreover, commissioners were to be appointed in pursuance of the Treaty to determine the rights and pretensions which either nation had to the places in Hudson's Bay. Had these commissioners ever met, of which there appears to be no record, there might have been a decision that would have set the question at rest as to which were "rights" and which were "pretensions." The commissioners must, however, have been bound by the text of the Treaty wherever it was explicit. They might have decided that France had a right to the whole, but they could not have decided that Great Britain had a right to the whole. They would have been compelled to make over to France all the places she took during the peace which preceded the war, for in that the Treaty left them no discretion. The following are the words of the Treaty:—"But the possession of those places which were taken by the French, during the peace that preceded this present war, and were retaken by the English during the war, shall be left to the French by virtue of the foregoing article." Thus the Treaty of Ryswick recognized and confirmed the right of France to certain places in Hudson's Bay distinctly and definitely, but it recognized no right at all on the part of Great Britain; it merely provided a tribunal to try whether she had any or not.

Memorandum of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, Canada, 1857.

So strongly has the Treaty of Ryswick been interpreted in favour of France in this particular, that some historians merely state the fact, that by it she retained all Hudson's Bay, and the places of which she was in possession at the beginning of the war.

The commissioners having apparently never met to try the question of right, things remained in statu quo, and the most reliable accounts show that the Hudson's Bay Company retained possession of Fort Albany only from that time up to the Treaty of Utrecht, in 1713. Now, whatever the commissioners might have done, had they ever passed judgment on the cause the Treaty provided they should try, they could not have given Fort Albany to the British, for it was one of the places taken by the French during the preceding peace, and retaken by the British during the war, and therefore adjudged in direct terms of the Treaty itself to belong to France.

Thus then it will be seen, that the only possession held by the Hudson's Bay Company during the sixteen years that intervened between the Treaty of Ryswick and the Treaty of Utrecht was one to which they had no right, and which the obligations of the Treaty required should be given up to France.

Here, therefore, for the second time an International Treaty interposes a barrier against the pretensions of the Company.

By the Treaty of Utrecht, in 1713, the whole of Hudson's Bay was ceded to Great Britain without any distinct definition of boundaries, for the determining of which commissioners were to be appointed, No official statement of the action of such commissioners is at present available for reference, but it is stated that no such action threw any additional light upon the subject. Indeed, no such commissions ever had done much to determine boundaries in unexplored countries, as witness, for instance, the dispute so long pending on what was called the North-Eastern boundary question between Great Britain and the United States, which was finally compromised by the Treaty of Washington, concluded by Lord Ashburton; and again, the difficulties arising out of the same ambiguous description, and which so many commissions endeavoured in vain to settle, between the Provinces of Canada and New Brunswick.

There is no denying the fact that the ancient boundaries of Canada or New France were circumscribed by the Treaty of Utrecht, and it is difficult to determine precisely the new boundaries assigned to it. The general interpretation adopted by the British geographers, as the country gradually became better known from that time up to the final cession of Canada, was that the boundary ran along the high lands separating the waters that discharged into the St. Lawrence from those that discharged into Hudson's Bay to the sources of the Nipigon River, and thence along the northerly division of the same range of high lands dividing the waters flowing direct to Hudson's Bay, from those flowing into Lake Winnipeg, and crossing the Nelson, or rather (as it was then known) the Bourbon River, about midway between the said Lake and Bay, thence passing to the west and north by the sources of the Churchill River, etc.; no westerly boundary being anywhere assigned to Canada. It may indeed be held doubtful whether the terms in which Hudson's Bay was ceded could possibly be interpreted to mean more than the Bay and its immediate environs, but whatever the legitimate interpretation of the Treaty, the actual acceptation of it gave to France at least all to the south of the dividing high lands above described, for she remained in undisputed possession thereof until the final cession of Canada in 1763; while on the other hand the acceptation of it on the part of Great Britain, as proved by the same test of occupation, confined her at least to the north of the said high lands, if not to the very shore of the Bay, beyond which her actual possession never extended.

It must here be observed, however, that the Treaty of Utrecht conferred nothing upon the Hudson's Bay Company. It gave them nothing that was not theirs at the Treaty of Ryswick, and the Treaty of Ryswick gave them nothing that was not theirs before. The Charter obtained from King Charles the Second may have granted all that was his (if anything) to grant in 1670, but it would have required a new Charter to have granted what France ceded to Great Britain forty-three years afterwards. No doubt the Treaty of Utrecht had this important bearing upon the Company, that although it conferred no territorial rights upon them, the territory it conferred on Great Britain was then inaccessible to British subjects by any other route than through the Bay and Straits of Hudson, over which (if over anything) the Company's Charter gave exclusive control, and over which, whether rightfully or wrongfully, they have exercised such control.

Matters continued in this state as regards the territorial rights of Great Britain and France for fifty years more, when Canada was ceded to Great Britain by the Treaty of Paris in 1763. During this period the Hudson's Bay Company occupied the posts on the coasts of the Bay, and these only, having made no attempt to penetrate into the interior or occupy even what the British geographers of the time construed the Treaty of Utrecht as conferring, not upon the Company, but upon Great Britain: while on the other hand the French had covered that part of New France which still remained to them (according to the British authorities) with posts or forts from the Lake of the Woods to the lower end of Lake Winnipeg, and remained in peaceable possession thereof, and in the most active prosecution of the trade until the whole country was given up to the British by the Peace of Paris, in 1763; by which, however, nothing was conferred upon the Hudson's Bay Company any more than there had been by the Treaty of Utrecht, the rights acquired by these treaties being simply in common with other British subjects.

For a few years, about the time of the transfer of Canada from French to British dominion, the trade of the western territories languished from a very natural want of confidence on the part of the Canadians by whom it had, up to that time, been carried on, and who now owed a new allegiance and had to seek a new market for the produce of their industry; but a fresh impulse was soon given to it, first by separate individuals, then by small companies, and finally by the great North-West Company of Montreal, who not only spread their operations over all the territories formerly possessed by the French, but explored new countries to the north and west, while the Hudson's Bay Company had not yet made a single establishment beyond the immediate confines of the sea coast.

The temporary depression of the fur trade at the period of the transfer of Canada to British dominion was, of course, advantageous to the Hudson's Bay Company, for the Indians inhabiting those parts of Canada where the French posts were established around Lake Winnipeg and its tributaries, would naturally seek a market in Hudson's Bay during the comparative cessation of demand at the es-establishments in their midst. But when confidence was restored, and a new impulse was given to the trade in the north-west of Canada, the supply was again cut off from Hudson's Bay, and now the Company for the first time entered into competition with the Canadian traders in the interior, where their first establishment was made in 1774. And why, it may be asked, did not the Hudson's Bay Company oppose the French Canadians in the interior a few years earlier, as well as they opposed them (principally the same people) now that they had become British subjects? The answer is very simple. During French dominion they could not do it because the country belonged to France, but by the cession of the country to Great Britain, the Company had acquired the same right as any other British subjects to trade in it, and they availed themselves of that right accordingly.

From this period an active competition was carried on between these companies, but the Canadian 10 North-West Company were everywhere in advance of their rivals. They were the first to spread themselves beyond the limits of the French, over the prairies of the Saskatchewan; they were the first to discover the great river of the north, now bearing the name of McKenzie, and pursue its course to its discharge in the Frozen Ocean; they were the first to penetrate the passes of the Northern Cordilleras and plant their posts upon the shores of the Pacific; and with such indomitable energy did they carry on their business, that, at the period of Lord Selkirk's interference, they had upwards of 300 Canadians, "Voyageurs," employed in carrying on their trade to the west of the Rocky Mountains.

It would be a useless task now to enter into a detail of the attempt made by the Earl of Selkirk, as a partner of the Hudson's Bay Company, to ruin their opponents. It is only necessary to refer to it here as the first endeavour made to exercise the privileges contended for under the Charter over those 20 territories which had not been acquired by Great Britain till the conquest or cession of Canada. Lord Selkirk having become principal partner, and acquired a predominant influence in the affairs of the Hudson's Bay Company, it was determined to assert the assumed privileges of the Company to an extent never before attempted; and for this purpose a grant of the country on the Red River was made to his lordship, who commenced in 1811-12 to plant a colony there.* A Governor was appointed, the colonists and the servants of the Company were armed and drilled, and in 1814 the claims of the Company to soil, jurisdiction and exclusive trade were openly asserted, and for the first time attempted to be enforced by the actual expulsion of the North-West Company, several of whose forts were surprised and taken, their people being made prisoners, their goods seized, and the channel of their trade obstructed by the interception of their supplies. Overawed somewhat for the moment by this bold assumption 30 of authority, the Canadian Company appear to have avoided the contest, but when forced into it they proved the stronger; the Governor was killed in leading an attack upon a party of the North-West Company, who turned and gave battle, and the colony was dispersed. This final catastrophe occurred in the spring of 1816, while in the meantime Lord Selkirk was organizing a more formidable force than had hitherto taken the field. Having procured a commission of the peace from the Government of Canada, he engaged a large force of the disbanded DeMeuron soldiers, equipped them in military style, procured arms, ammunition, artillery even, and started for the interior.

It must be allowed that it was a somewhat anomalous course for the Government of Canada to have pursued, to permit such a force to be organized; but when it is considered that great ignorance 40 prevailed as to the state of those remote localities, that it was known that there had been disturbances and bloodshed the previous year; when also Lord Selkirk's position is considered, and that he went as a pacificator professedly to maintain peace, it may not be deemed so extraordinary that so much confidence should have been placed in him, for he was even granted a sergeant's guard of regular troops. It is not the object here, however, to enter into a discussion of the unfortunate occurrences of that period, or the particular action of the Provincial Government, and the circumstances are only referred to, to show that Canada actually exercised the jurisdiction, that Lord Selkirk's destination was the Red River

* "Who have been the aggressors in their different quarrels, I am not able to determine; however, previous to 1811, at which time Lord Selkirk became connected with the Company trading to Hudson's Bay, and sent settlers from Europe to that country, no great differences existed between the servants of that Company and the fur traders of Canada. There might be difficulties between different posts, but seldom attended with serious consequences."—Despatch of Lieutenant-Governor Gore to Earl Bathurst, 9th September, 1816.

Colony, and that he deemed it necessary to fortify himself doubly with commissions as a Canadian magistrate, first for Canadian territory, and second (under 43 Geo. 3rd) for the "Indian territories," so that those who resisted his authority on the ground that they were in Canada, he could judge under the one commission, and those who resisted on the ground that they were in the Indian Territories, he could judge under the other, while the judicial and governmental attributes claimed for the Company would have served as a third basis of operation; and thus with the actual force at his disposal there was a pretty fair prospect of the Hudson's Bay Company being made the absolute masters of the north-west country.

At the Sault Ste. Marie, however, Lord Selkirk met intelligence of the death of Governor Semple and the dispersion of his colony; nevertheless, he still proceeded with his force as far as Fort William, on Lake Superior, where he arrived about the 11th of August, 1816, and soon after arrested the partners of the North-West Company, who were there at the time, and took possession of the whole establishment, including the merchandise and stores of the Company. The course pursued on this occasion, as appears by documents published at the time, shows the character of the pretensions set up at that period—pretensions which were then and not till then presumed upon.

It will be observed that Fort William was the principal depôt of the Canadian merchants, through which all their supplies for, and peltries from, the North-West had to pass. By seizing on this point, therefore, Lord Selkirk had possession of the key of their whole trade, and was enabled to permit or refuse the transit of their goods as he saw fit. For whatever purpose, therefore, he obtained his two commissions of the peace in Canada, the expedition simply resolved itself into a continuation of the attempt to destroy the North-West Company of Canada, the rivals in trade of the Hudson's Bay Company; for, however desirable it might be to arrest and bring to trial all parties implicated on either side in the death of Governor Semple, there could be no excuse for seizing the persons of those gentlemen who were known not to have been at the time within hundreds of miles of the scene of that catastrophe, merely because they were partners in the North-West Company, nor, even if there were cause for their arrest, did that justify the taking possession of their property without the sanction or the form of law.*

The object of entering upon this brief record is, to point out that all this occurred at Fort William, on the shores of Lake Superior, within what the Hudson's Bay Company, by their map and statement of "rights," now admit to be within the boundaries of Canada. And thus it will be seen that, while the pretension of extending the privileges of the Charter beyond the "coasts and confines" of the Bay to the western territories of Canada was a mere invention of that period, to further their own ends and to destroy the rival Company of Canada, they were as ready to employ force at Fort William as in the Valley of the Red River.

In further proof that the transactions at Fort William were openly done in violation of Canadian law and in defiance of Canadian authority, it is only necessary to add that when Lord Selkirk's proceedings became known, warrants were issued for his apprehension and a party of constables sent to arrest him, and that refusing obedience to the laws of this country, and presuming upon the force for the moment at his command in that remote locality (remote then as regards the time it took to reach it, though at our doors to-day), he caused the constables to be taken prisoners themselves, and treated the Deputy Sheriff of the Western Districts, who afterwards made the attempt, in like manner. This war between the companies, though injurious to both, failed to exterminate either, and the final result was a compromise by which they entered into partnership; and thus the trade has been carried on since, under the name indeed of the Hudson's Bay Company, but expressly in conjunction with the North-West Company of Canada, so that Canada can at no time be said to have been out of possession of her western territories within the limits occupied by the French at the time of the conquest, nor out of possession of the "Indian Territories" beyond, which, after the conquest, were first discovered by the Canadian traders, and for which the License of exclusive trade was granted to the Partners of the North-West Company of Canada, as such, in conjunction with the Hudson's Bay Company.

* "From these Documents it appears, that the Earl of Selkirk, acting in his own cause, aided by an armed force, has not only made the partners of the North-West Company prisoners, but has also seized their Papers and Property."—Lieut.-Gov. Gore to Earl Bathurst, 9th Sept, 1816.

It is true that after the amalgamation of the Companies and the License of exclusive trade granted in 1821, competition became illegal in the "Indian Territories" beyond the boundaries of Canada, as indeed it had always proved impracticable on the part of minor traders either within or beyond the remote parts of the province, small traders being altogether unable to cope with the two great Companies. It is true also that after they, the two great Companies, had been for some time united, and when by the policy pursued by them the trade had ceased to be beneficial to, and had been lost sight of in, Canada, an arrangement was effected between the two sections of the United Company by which the name of the North-West Company was dropped entirely, the lease relinquished, and a new one obtained in which the name of the Hudson's Bay Company alone appeared; but it must be observed that this new arrangement was accepted and entered into by the British Government by consent of the 10 partners representing the original Canadian Company, for although this Lease or License only affects the Indian Territories beyond the actual boundaries of Canada, it can scarcely be supposed that the Government would have agreed to give it, had Canadian traders still remained in the field. The policy of the Companies when joined, has however been so far successful that they have managed heretofore to secure themselves against opposition, many no doubt being imposed upon by the pretentious but erroneous construction put upon their Charter, and the public in general kept in the dark respecting a trade which, though partly carried on in the very centre of Canada and within range of steam navigation, is so managed as to pass by a circuitous route, by means of the primitive canoe and over portages on men's backs, away hundreds of miles into the interior and round by Hudson's Bay.

But the time has come when Canada must assert her rights, not only from that necessity for expansion-20 sion which her growing population and trade require, but also because if she does not now begin to provide for the future by opening up her remote territories to colonization, and securing the loyalty and attachment of the people by extending to them the rights and privileges of her laws and institutions; there is a moral certainty that a power far more formidable than the Hudson's Bay Company must in a very short period acquire the actual possession of those countries.

This brief chronological sketch of the history of the Company and of the circumstances connected therewith, must sufficiently show that they have acquired no territorial grant whatever under either of the two conditions stated, to which their Charter was subject; first as regards the countries then known upon the "coasts and confines" of Hudson's Bay, because they were already in the possession of the 30 subjects of another Christian Prince, and were therefore excluded from the grant in terms of the Charter itself; and second, as regards discoveries, because when they first penetrated into the interior, 10½ years after the date of their Charter, they found the country and a long-established trade in the hands of others—unless indeed as regards some discoveries to the north, which are of no special importance to Canada, such as the Copper Mine River, discovered by Hearne under the auspices of the Company.

Under the first head the most sanguine advocate of the Company, upon a full investigation of all the circumstances, could only urge on their behalf a claim to certain points, or stations, on the sea coasts of the bay, and even to these a doubtful and disputed title.

The high legal authorities that may be quoted in favour of the claims of the Company cannot be held as of weight against the conclusions inevitably resulting from a fuller investigation of the subject, 40 inasmuch as they are merely opinions upon the cases submitted. The latest opinion given upon the subject is that of Sir John Jervis and Sir John Romilly in their letter to Earl Grey, of January, 1850, in which they gave it as their opinion, "That the rights claimed by the Company do properly belong to them." Before arriving at this conclusion, however, these learned gentlemen are careful to specify precisely what papers they had then under consideration, and to which alone they refer as the basis of their opinion. These papers were simply the "Statement of Rights and the Map," submitted by the chairman of the Company, Sir J. H. Pelly.

This opinion, therefore, can only be taken as affirmative of the power of the King to grant such rights and privileges as the Charter specifies, and that the Charter would cover all the territory claimed; 50 but the question of whether that territory belonged to the King to grant was not before them. With respect to the territory which the wording of the Charter would cover, it would be difficult to say what it would not cover; and with respect to the validity of the grant of powers, it is to be remarked that very high authorities have given a directly opposite opinion; and it may be asked why, if the Charter was valid, did the Company procure an Act of Parliament to confirm it in 1690, and why, when that Act expired, which was limited to seven years, did they again ask for an Act to continue it? It is worthy of notice, too, that the seven years' Act was passed during war with France, when it appears that Parliament did not scruple to grant or confirm a Charter for countries to which Great Britain had, at best, but a disputed title, based only upon a very partial, and, even during peace, a very precarious possession; nor is it less worthy of remark, that when Parliament refused to re-grant or continue the Charter, the Treaty of Ryswick had intervened, by which the rights of France were recognized, and those of Great Britain left, at most, in doubt, and when, therefore, any such Act would have been a direct violation of an international Treaty.

Another opinion appears to have been obtained by the Hudson's Bay Company at an earlier period, from Romilly, Holroyd, Cruise, Scarlett and Bell, equally upon the case drawn and without reference to the real points at issue, merely affirming that the grant of the soil contained in the Charter is good, and that it will include all the countries the waters of which flow into Hudson's Bay. This opinion is, therefore, like the other, of no weight on questions which were not before the learned gentlemen who gave it.

Opposite opinions were obtained at an earlier period by the North-West Company, viz., in 1804 from Sir V. Gibbs and Mr. Bearcroft. These opinions however, although they touched the fundamental principles of the Charter, had no reference to the interior countries on the Red River, Lake Winnipeg the Saskatchewan, etc., for the simple reason that no opinion was asked on a case which only arose six or seven years later, when Lord Selkirk came on the field.

The position of the question at this period was that the North-West Company, being in possession not only of all the country formerly possessed by the Canadian-French in that direction, but also of the country first discovered by themselves, to the north-west of the Churchill River, came to the conclusion that their trade could be more conveniently carried on with these more remote parts through Hudson's Bay than through Canada. The question they submitted, therefore, was solely in regard to the validity of the Charter in respect of the navigation, trade, and fisheries of the Bay itself. The North-West Company as little dreamt of asking an opinion respecting the legality of their trade in the interior as the Hudson's Bay Company thought, at that period, of attempting its forcible restraint. In the case put it is to be remarked that no reference is made to the early possessions of the French on the coasts of the Bay, and consequent possession of the Bay itself in communicating therewith, and yet, and even without this, these opinions are entirely adverse to the exclusive privileges claimed under the Charter.

After the difficulties occasioned by the more recent assumption of power in virtue of the Charter to expel the North-West Company from the Red River country, under the auspices of Lord Selkirk, had become serious, another opinion was obtained by that Company in 1816, from Sir Arthur Pigott, Sergeant Spankie and Lord Brougham. This opinion must be held to be more valuable than those obtained by the Hudson's Bay Company, inasmuch as it enters more into the merits of the case, and is therefore more explicit as to the real views of the learned counsel on the subject submitted to them, whereas the opposite opinions are such that the gentlemen who gave them would be at liberty to ignore upon a fuller submission of the case, without incurring a charge of inconsistency.

The opinion under consideration is very decided on the point that the Red River and Saskatchewan countries are not within the limits of the Charter, even upon the merits of the description contained in the Charter itself, apart from the question of prior possession by another State. The question of prior occupation of these localities by the French is indeed lightly touched upon, though the opinion, as above, is definitely given without it; but the rights of Canada now for the first time fully discussed, based on prior discovery, at least of the whole of the interior, prior occupation on the shores of the Bay itself, and international treaties, do not appear to have ever been pronounced upon by any of those high legal authorities who have heretofore been consulted, because no such case has ever been submitted, and yet, based upon history and facts, it may be taken to supersede all necessity for raising any question as to the extent of the royal prerogative in giving validity to such a Charter.

Had the Hudson's Bay Company indeed deemed their position good in law, as against the North-West Company, in respect of the Red River country, it can scarcely be supposed that they would have resorted to force at such a lavish expense (and it must be added, involving no small amount of bloodshed), when the question could have been so easily determined by the legal tribunals, at an expense altogether inconsiderable as compared with the actual losses and costs incurred. They have indeed attempted to show that they had not an equal chance with their rivals in the courts of this Province; but not to speak of the injustice of such an insinuation in itself, the objection is untenable while they had the right of appeal, and to suppose that they were deterred from taking such a course from any difficulty attending the proceeding would be simply absurd, when we find them organizing an army to defend their claims in those remote localities, and thus voluntarily removing the venue from the courts of law, by a far more difficult and expensive process, to the arbitration of force, where the interference of law could not be so readily invoked to check their proceedings.

Memorandum
of the Commissioner of
Crown Lands,
Canada, 1877.

And if any justification of this course could be based on the supposed validity of their Charter and on the ground that it could be construed to cover that locality, why, when they failed to maintain their position by force, when the North-West Company, even after the temporary interruption of their trade through the seizure of Fort William by Lord Selkirk, still continued in the ascendant, why did they not then resort to a trial at law, which, if it had resulted in their favour, would at once have secured a power exactly commensurate with the emergency to maintain their rights. For then, if the civil power had proved insufficient, the whole power of the empire would have been available as far as necessary. But instead of trying the issue in a Court of Law, they finally amalgamated with their rivals, affording thereby a clear proof that they had no hope of being able to treat them otherwise than as possessing equal rights, thus consenting to their opponents sharing with them what they had previously contended to be their private property.

To conclude the question of the Hudson's Bay Company's territories under their Charter, therefore, it is difficult to arrive at the result that they have any territorial rights at all, for in the first place, the country was practically occupied by the French before the date of the Charter, and consequently excluded from it; and in the second place, because the whole country, including Hudson's Bay, was known as New France or Canada, as per maps and descriptions publicly known throughout Europe previous to that date, and therefore, if not so before, became the property of France by the Treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye in 1632, and as such necessarily could not be and expressly was not granted by their Charter; and in the third place, because by the Treaty of Ryswick the right of France to expel them as trespassers on her soil was manifestly admitted. And finally, even assuming that Great Britain originally had acquired a divided right with France, each to the extent of the establishment which their subjects respectively were the first to form, the Hudson's Bay Company would only have a right, under their Charter, to those particular posts, or forts, which they were the first to take possession of in localities previously unoccupied, for the Treaty of Ryswick conferred nothing upon them (if it even permitted them to retain anything, which is doubtful); the Treaty of Utrecht, although it gave Hudson's Bay to the British, conferred nothing upon the Company, apart from other British subjects; and the Treaty of Paris (although it gave Canada to Great Britain) conferred nothing upon them, except rights in common with other British subjects; while until eleven years after the last-named treaty, they never occupied anything beyond their original establishments on the coast, and those (also on the coast) conquered from or ceded by France at the Treaty of Utrecht, but which could not, by such subsequent conquest, or cession, be made subject to their Charter.

Boundaries of Canada.

Having thus disposed of the boundaries of the Hudson's Bay Company's Territories—if such can be said to exist—the boundaries of Canada next come to be considered, and a division of the subject will naturally suggest itself into two heads. First, the original boundaries of Canada under the French; and second the boundaries of Canada as acquired by Great Britain in 1763. The southerly boundaries, when not affecting the present question, need not of course be particularly referred to.

It will not be necessary to enter at length into the question of the original boundaries under the French, as they have already been sufficiently indicated. They claimed all to the north of the St. Lawrence, and were the first to occupy Hudson's Bay. If the British, besides their visits in search of a north-west passage, had seen fit to occupy the country for any practical purpose and been the first to do so, they might no doubt have claimed it for their own. Had any such actual occupation followed the voyages of Hudson and Button, notwithstanding the French footing on and claim to the whole continent north of the St. Lawrence, it must be admitted that a valid title would have been created. But when such occupation was only first attempted some fifty or sixty years later, in support of a commercial project of two Frenchmen, who had been already engaged in the trade, and when France was in formal and actual possession, it cannot be denied that the French title was the preferable one. Of the original territories of Canada, Great Britain therefore acquired a part by the Treaty of Utrecht, the residue remaining to France for fifty years later. On this head there seems to be no dispute, for British authorities designate a part of what they claim to have been acquired by that treaty as Canada.

It now remains to be considered what were the boundaries of the country finally acquired by the Treaty of 1763, which, according to French and other authorities, was much larger than according to British authorities; but it will perhaps be most satisfactory for the present to adopt the latter.

One of the most circumstantial British accounts of the westerly possessions of the French is to be found in a geographical and historical work published by Thos. Jefferys in 1760. After giving the French account of Canada, he proceeds to give the English version of its boundaries in the following 20 words:

"Canada, according to the English account, is bounded on the north by the high lands which separate it from the country about Hudson's Bay, Labrador or New Britain, and the country of the Eskimeaux and the Christeneaux; on the east by the River St. Lawrence; and on the south by the Outawais River, the country of the Six Nations and Louisiana, its limits towards the west extending over countries and nations hitherto undiscovered."

Memorandum
of the Commissioner of
Crown Lands,
Canada, 1837.

The high lands referred to in the above are distinctly delineated on the maps published with the work as the northerly section of the range which, dividing to the north-west of Lake Superior, separates the waters flowing direct to Hudson's Bay from those flowing into Lake Winnipeg, crossing the Nelson River at Split Lake or Lac des Forts, etc. Describing the country from Lake Superior 30 westward, the author goes on, at page 19, as follows:—

"At the mouth of Les Trois Rivières, or the Three Rivers, is a little French Fort called Camenistagouia; and twenty-five leagues to the west of the said Fort, the land begins to slope and the river to run towards the west.

"At ninety-five leagues from this greatest height lies the second establishment of the French that way, called Fort St. Pierre, in the Lake des Pluies. The third is Fort St. Charles, eighty leagues further, on the Lake des Bois. The fourth is Fort Maurepas, a hundred leagues distant from the last, near the head of the Lake of Ouinipigon. Fort La Reine, which is the fifth, lies a hundred leagues further on the river of the Assiniboels. Another Fort had been built on the River Rouge, but was deserted on account of its vicinity to the two last. The sixth, Fort Dauphin, stands on the west side 40 of Lac des Prairies, or of the Meadows; and the seventh, which is called Fort Bourbon, stands on the shore of the Great Lake Bourbon. The chain ends with Fort Poskoyae, at the bottom of a river of that name, which falls into Lake Bourbon. The River Poskoyae is made by De Lisle and Buache to rise within twenty-five leagues of their west sea, which they say communicates with the Pacific ocean. All these Forts are under the Governor of Canada."

The above, it will be observed, is the English account of what was still French Canada in 1760, just after the taking of Quebec and before the final conquest and cession of the country. The River

Poskoyac is that which now bears the name of the Saskatchewan upon which Sir Alexander McKenzie states that the French had another Fort higher up than Fort Poskoyac.*

The same author, Jefferys, in his description of Louisiana, says: "It is bounded on the N. by Canada; on the E. by the British Colonies of New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, etc., etc." The map accompanying this description claims the British Colonies, Virginia, etc., as coming up to the east bank of the Mississippi, and therefore it is Louisiana west of the Mississippi that he refers to as bounded by Canada on the north, that is to say, from the sources of the Mississippi westward.

The same year in which this work was published, all Canada was surrendered to the British, though not finally ceded till three years after.

In surrendering the country to the British, the Marquis de Vaudreuil submitted articles of 10 capitulation which were marked "granted," or "refused," etc., according as they were finally agreed to by General Amherst. In guarding the interests of the Canadian colonists in every part of the country surrendered, the localities above described by English authority as being under the "Governor of Canada," are designated as "the Countries above," and the 46th article of the capitulation is as follows:

"The inhabitants and merchants shall enjoy all the privileges of trade under the same favours and conditions granted to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty as well in the Countries above as in the interior of the Colony.—Granted."

By which these countries were manifestly surrendered along with the rest of Canada, and the future rights of the Canadians guaranteed thereto by the provision that no British subjects should ever enjoy any privileges of trade there in which they did not share; not indeed that this guarantee, although it would decidedly have that effect, could have been foreseen as a safeguard against the Hudson's Bay Company who had never at that period penetrated into the country, it being simply intended to prevent any cause whatever from depriving the French colonists of the benefits of a trade, which had always been one of the most important in the country. 20

In the negotiations for peace that followed in 1761, which were directed on the one part by Mr. Pitt, and by the Duke de Choiseul on the other, and which ended, for the time, in failure, France contending for the boundaries of Louisiana extending to Canada, which Great Britain opposed. Finally, the Treaty of 1763 allowed Louisiana to extend west of the Mississippi to its source, and made that river from its source downwards the boundary between the British and French possessions,—the boundary from the source of the Mississippi westwards being left undetermined, a question which had 30 ultimately to be settled with the United States instead of with France.

The system adopted and industriously followed up by the two rival Companies after their union had indeed so disseminated an erroneous appellation, that the country north and north-west of the Mississippi had come to be commonly called the Hudson's Bay Company's Territories; but when diplomatists and statesmen came to study the subject, tracing up from history and fact their respective claims, as bearing upon the Oregon question, they did not stultify themselves by the use of such an erroneous term; accordingly we find Mr. Buchanan, now President-elect of the United States, using the following language, in concluding a proposition made by him on 1st July, 1846:—

"The line proposed will carry out the principle of continuity equally for both parties, by extending the limits both of ancient Louisiana and Canada to the Pacific along the same parallel of latitude 40 which divides them east of the Rocky Mountains."

The same line of argument sustains the British plenipotentiary when, in arguing the pretensions of his Government to Oregon, he traces the progress of the Canadians westward across the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific.

* "It may be proper to observe, that the French had two settlements upon the Saskatchewan long before, and at the conquest of Canada; the first at the Pasquia, near Carrot River, and the other at Nipawi, where they had agricultural instruments and wheel carriages, marks of both being found about those establishments, where the soil is excellent."—Note to General History of the Fur Trade, p. lxxiii. See McKenzie's Voyages, London, 1801.

The next step in the natural progress of events is the description of Canada under British sway. The first step after the Treaty of Paris was to provide for the government of the settled parts of the country, for which purpose the Government of Quebec was organized, comprising, however, a very limited portion of Canada, as per proclamation of 7th October, 1763, the rest of the country being thereby reserved from survey or settlement, for the moment, for the protection of the Indians. The descriptions of Canada, however, of that period, took in the country to the westward of Pennsylvania, by the Ohio River, to the Mississippi. And the Imperial Statute of 1774, commonly called the "Quebec Act," describes the Province as extending "Northward to the southern boundary of the Territory granted to the Merchant Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay," but does not specify what their boundaries are, and it will be seen, by what follows, that the construction put upon this Act by the British Government, nine years later, was adverse to the present pretensions of the Company. The Treaty of Independence of the United States provided a new southerly boundary for Canada, a part of what had formerly gone under that name having been ceded to the United States; and by the commission issued to Lord Dorechester—the first after this treaty—the same words are used in describing the boundaries of Canada, as in the Treaty, viz.:—

"Through Lake Superior, northwards of the Isles Royal and Philippeaux to the Long Lake; thence, through the middle of the said Long Lake, and the water communication between it and the Lake of the Woods, to the said Lake of the Woods; thence, through the said Lake to the most north-western point thereof, and from thence on a due west course to the River Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territories granted to the Merchant Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay."

This description, it will be seen, leaves the boundaries beyond the sources of the Mississippi indeterminate. On the supposition that a line due west from the Lake of the Woods would intersect the Mississippi, the King was obliged to limit the extent of Canada on such line to the Mississippi proper, because, by the Treaty of Paris, France retained the whole country to the west of the Mississippi from its source downwards. Had the King's commission said from the intersection of the due west line with the Mississippi "due north," it might have been argued that it provided a westerly boundary, but it simply says "northerly," because although it was necessary to limit it to the Mississippi, where Louisiana commenced, there is no need for being specific beyond the sources of that river where the westerly boundary of Canada was yet unknown. Of the extent of Canada to the north by this description, it is enough to say that it was the same as by the Act of 1774, and required the boundaries of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company to be defined first, and if that failed, it had no other limit, short of its original extent under the French.

At the "definitive Treaty of Peace" with the United States, their territory did not extend at any point to the west of the Mississippi, until they acquired Louisiana in 1803. It will be remembered that Mr. Pitt objected to the northerly boundary of Louisiana coming so far north as the southerly boundary of Canada in 1761, that nevertheless it was so settled in 1763 that the Mississippi should be the boundary to its source. This result seems to have been a compromise, by which Louisiana was confined almost entirely to the west of the Mississippi, Great Britain thus gaining her point on the east, which came more nearly in contact with her old possessions, and giving to France entire scope on the west to the very sources of the Mississippi, the boundary from thence westward being left undetermined. This point had accordingly to be afterwards settled with the United States, who had in the meantime acquired the rights of France. This settlement ultimately admitted the 49th parallel of latitude as the northerly boundary of Louisiana, and as such necessarily the southerly boundary of Canada, from the Lake of the Woods due west to the Rocky Mountains, passing north of the source of the Mississippi proper, though intersecting some of its tributary streams, the only error in which was that the line should not have been north of the source of the Mississippi, an error resulting from a previous treaty with the United States, at a time when it was supposed that the parallel of latitude agreed upon east of the Mississippi would intersect that river.

Were the King's letters patent to Lord Dorechester indeed taken literally at the present day in regard to the southerly boundary of Canada, the due west line of the description, not intersecting the Mississippi, would go on as far as British territory, not otherwise organized, would carry it, which would be to the Pacific; or if limited at all, it would be by the first waters of the Mississippi which it did intersect, which would be the White Earth River, and this would in fact correspond with the extent of Canada previously known to the French, faking in all the old forts already mentioned, and leaving out the "countries and nations hitherto undiscovered," that is at the time of the Conquest, though at the period when that description was made, the North-West Company were carrying on an active trade much further to the west: nor is it clear that this would be adverse to the intention of the description, for some of the maps of that period represent the Mississippi as west of the Red River.

The southerly boundary of the British Dominions west of Lake Superior being therefore de- 10 monstrated as identical with the southerly boundary of Canada to some point due west of the Lake of the Woods, the only question is as to where that point is to be found; is it the White Earth River, the first waters of the Mississippi with which the due west line intersects? or is it the summit of the Rocky Mountains, on the same principle that the coterminous boundary of Louisiana was ultimately so construed?

The next point to be determined is the northerly extension of Canada from its southerly boundary. The official description, corresponding with the Act of 1774, carries it to the boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's Territories, but the same official description ignores the boundaries they claim (thus proving so far the construction then put upon the Act of 1774), for it carries the southerly boundary of Canada down the water-shed of Hudson's Bay from two to three hundred miles to the Lake of the 20
Woods, and thence due west; thus making the starting point far within what the Hudson's Bay Company claim, and thus, from a point within what they claim as their territory, it is to extend northerly to their territories. If, then, the "rights" of the Hudson's Bay Company were even far less equivocal than they are, their southerly boundary, as pretended by themselves, is entirely demolished, and the question arises, where is the boundary of their territories so described as the northerly limit of Canada? The question of territorial rights has already been so fully discussed that it is unnecessary to repeat the arguments. The only possible conclusion is, that Canada is either bounded in that direction by a few isolated posts on the shore of Hudson's Bay, or else that the Company's territory is—like the intersection of the due west line with the Mississippi—a myth, and consequently that Canada has no particular limit in that direction. 30

of the Commissioner of
Crown Lands,
Canada, 1877.

The accompanying map illustrates the northerly boundary of Canada, according to British authorities, as ceded by the French in 1763, there being no westerly boundary then known or since provided. This is perhaps all that could, in the first instance, be absolutely claimed as under the Government of Canada, were it not that, since the final determination of the southerly boundary, the Imperial Government merely described the authority of this Government as extending over all the countries theretofore known as Canada, which might fairly be taken to cover the territory acquired by the Treaty of Utrecht, as well as that acquired by the Treaty of Paris.

Boundaries of the Indian Territories.

The boundaries of the Indian Territories need little consideration or explanation, as they simply include all that belongs to Great Britain in North America to the north and west of Canada, excepting 40 the territory (if any) which the Hudson's Bay Company may of right claim. It must not be lost sight of, however, that the great bulk of this territory has been acquired by the Crown of Great Britain, through discoveries of its Canadian subjects, beyond whatever may be determined to be the westerly boundary of Canada, across the Rocky Mountains to the shores of the Pacific, and by the Mackenzie River to the Frozen Ocean. The importance of these discoveries in the negotiations pending the treaty of Oregon cannot be forgotten, for it is in virtue of Canadian Discovery and Canadian Settlement that the British negotiator was enabled to maintain his position in the controversy, and secure a footing for his country in the Pacific. And when, it may be asked, did ever the Hudson's Bay Company afford such an important advantage to British interests?

Sir Alexander McKenzie's journey in 1793 across the Rocky Mountains (the first ever performed 50 north of Mexico) is thus referred to by the British Plenipotentiary, in negotiating the Treaty of Oregon:

"While Vancouver was prosecuting discovery and exploration by sea, Sir Alexander McKenzie, a partner in the North-West Company, crossed the Rocky Mountains, discovered the head waters of the river since called Frazer's River, and following for some time the course of that river, effected a passage to the sea, being the first civilized man who traversed the continent of America from sea to sea in these latitudes. On the return of McKenzie to Canada, the North-West Company established trading-posts in the country to the westward of the Rocky Mountains."

This was the British title to that part of the country, and but for this journey and the establishing of these trading-posts, by which were acquired what the same diplomatist says "may be called beneficial interests in those regions by commercial intercourse," the probability is that Great Britain would now hold no continuous possessions across this continent, if she even held any isolated localities on the Pacific, in virtue of her discoveries by sea.

Lewis and Clark, Americans, descended the southerly branch of the Columbia River, 1805, and in 1811, Mr. Thompson, of the North-West Company, came down the main branch from the north, whose discovery is thus referred to by the British Plenipotentiary:—

"In the year 1811, Thompson, the astronomer of the North-West Company, discovered the northern head waters of the Columbia, and following its course till joined by the rivers previously discovered by Lewis and Clark, he continued the journey to the Pacific."

And again:—

"Thompson, of the North-West Company, was the first civilized person who navigated the northern, in reality the main branch of the Columbia, or traversed any part of the country drained by it."

This is the title by which Great Britain has been enabled to retain the main branch of the Columbia to its intersection with the 49th parallel of north latitude, and the free navigation for her subjects of the whole river from that point to its discharge in the Pacific Ocean, as secured by the Treaty of Oregon, 1846.

With respect to McKenzie's discoveries to the north, no diplomatic reference thereto can be quoted inasmuch as there has been no disputed title on the part of any foreign power to give rise to any controversy on the subject.

It may fairly be urged, therefore, that these "Indian Territories," originally the fruits of Canadian enterprise, perseverance and industry, should no longer be shut out from the Canadian people, but should in fact be united to Canada as a part of the British dominions which Canadian subjects have had the merit of acquiring and retaining for the British Crown.

Jurisdiction.

The question of jurisdiction next comes under consideration, and in this, as regards the Hudson's Bay Company, it is apprehended that the actual exercise of it is widely different from what existing laws would sanction.

The mystery with which this company have managed to shroud their operations in the interior renders it difficult to say what they do or what they do not do, but it is generally understood that they actually exercise unlimited jurisdiction in every respect, civil, criminal, and governmental, and that not only in what has been considered their own territories, but also in the Indian Territories and those parts of Canada not immediately contiguous to settlement; all of which existing law positively forbids them to do, it need not be said, in Canada, but either in their own territories or in the Indian Territories.

By the Imperial Statute 43 Geo. III, cap. 138, the jurisdiction over the Indian Territories and all "parts of America not within the limits of the Provinces of Lower or Upper Canada, or either of them, or within any civil government of the United States of America," is vested in the said Provinces. It is a curious circumstance that the very words of this Act, which seem to have been intended to deny all claim to any jurisdiction on the part of the Hudson's Bay Company, should have been taken hold of as the means of questioning its reference to them. The preamble of the Act, in giving the reason for the enactment, states that offences not committed within the limits of the Canadas or the United States, as above, "are therefore not cognizable by any jurisdiction whatever." This, the Company argued, could not mean their territories, because jurisdiction did exist there. The Act, they said, could not mean all British America not within the limits of the Canadas, for the assertion that no jurisdiction existed was not true of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, and therefore might not be true of Hudson's Bay. Thus, in fact, it appears that the framers of the Act, having their minds directed to the North-West, where the offences referred to had occurred, forgot to exclude the Provinces lying on the opposite side of Canada, on the Atlantic coast, from its operation; and this omission, when the war was carried on between the two Companies in the interior, Lord Selkirk turned to account to throw doubt on the applicability of the Act to the Company's Territories. But the assumption that this Act does not affect their pretensions is doubly futile; for, when more closely considered, it either brings their terri- 10 tories within Canadian jurisdiction or it ignores them altogether, and in either case it contracts the limits they claim. If they make good their assertion that it does not affect their territories, then it destroys their claim to have their limits extended to the boundaries of Canada. The territories referred to in the preamble of the Act are those not within the limits of either Lower or Upper Canada, the two Provinces being treated distinctly as regards the territories not within their limits. Now, taking Lower Canada in the first instance, it is bounded by the Ottawa, and a line due north from the head of Lake Tamiseamingue and the places outside its limits on which the Act would have effect, if not the Company's territories, must certainly be something between those limits and their territories. But the question is more important as regards the places outside of Upper Canada. If the maps accompanying the "Statement of Rights," submitted by Sir J. H. Pelly, be correct, then the territory affected by the Act 20 is about 1,500 miles distant in its nearest part from the most remote point in Canada. In other words, Canada ends at the source of Pigeon River, and the Indian Territories begin at the top of the Rocky Mountains, and we are required, therefore, to assume that the Imperial Legislature meant to commit the absurdity of giving jurisdiction to the Courts of Canada over a territory beginning at a distance of some fifteen hundred miles from her frontier, while a different British jurisdiction (that of the Company) prevailed in the intervening space. But assuming for fact the Company's view of the case, that it did not affect their territories, we find the very purpose for which the Act was passed, as expressed in the title, to be, to provide a jurisdiction for certain parts of North America adjoining to the said Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada. Consequently, if the territory affected by the Act only commences at the summit of the Rocky Mountains, as represented by the map submitted by Sir J. H. Pelly, then as it 30 adjoins this Province, Canada must extend to the summit of the Rocky Mountains; so that, on their own showing, the jurisdiction they exercise in the intervening space, at Red River, for instance, is out of their own territories, and, therefore, not only without the sanction of law, but in violation of a positive enactment. They must thus either ignore their own pretensions to the territory between what they call the westerly boundary of Canada and easterly boundary of the "Indian Territories," or they must admit that the Act under consideration (which is still unrepealed) applies to their territories, in which case their jurisdiction in every part would be in violation of the statute.

But if there was any doubt on the subject before, it was fully removed by the Act 1 and 2 Geo IV., cap. 66, which was passed after all the strife and bloodshed in the North-West, and which, after reciting the doubt raised respecting the former Act being applicable to the Hudson's Bay Company's 40 territories, declares at sec. 5, in the strongest and most comprehensive manner, that the said Act and all its clauses shall be construed to apply to their territories, anything in "any grant or charter to the Company to the contrary notwithstanding."

This Act, 1 and 2 Geo. IV., cap. 66, gives jurisdiction, as full and complete as language can make it, over all the Indian and Hudson's Bay Company's Territories, to the Courts of Canada, and it provides for the appointment of Justices of the Peace by the Crown (both for the Indian Territories and Hudson's Bay Company's Territories), to whom the Canadian Courts are empowered to issue commissions "to take evidence in any cause or suit, and return the same, or try such issue, and for that purpose to hold courts," etc. These courts are most distinctly made subordinate to the Courts of Canada, etc., and can, in fact, be created by and exist through them only. 50

By the 11th and 12th clauses, however, the Crown is empowered to create Courts of Record, without the intervention of the Canadian Courts (but without limiting the power to be exercised through 50 them), for the trial of small causes and petty offences, the former being limited to civil cases not affecting a larger amount than £200, and the latter to cases in which the offence does not subject the person committing the same to capital punishment or transportation.

By this Act it is repeatedly declared and enacted in the most emphatic manner, that its enactments shall have effect "notwithstanding anything contained in any Charter granted to the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay."

It is true the last clause of the Act reserves to the Company, in the most ample manner, all rights and privileges they "are by law entitled to claim and exercise under their Charter." This, it will be observed, is what the "Statement of Rights" refers to when claiming a "concurrent jurisdiction" with the Canadian Courts. Now, when it is observed that the Legislature has refrained from expressing any opinion as to what the rights and privileges of the Company really are, and cautiously abstained from recognizing any but what they already had "by law," it is difficult to suppose that it was the intention of the Act to recognize in them those very powers which it was making the most ample provision for the exercise of by a totally different authority, in strong and repeatedly expressed abnegation of their pretensions.

It is also to be observed that the previous Act, 43 Geo. III., which denies their jurisdiction, is still in force, unrestricted in every particular, and not deriving its force from the subsequent Statute, which is merely declaratory in that particular of its proper construction.

The question of whether the Company can exercise any legal jurisdiction within their own territories—limited to their just extent—loses its importance, however, in face of the more serious question of its actual exercise both in Canada and the Indian Territories, and that even to the extent of life and death, while the intention of the Imperial Legislature in creating a jurisdiction for these territories, reserved all important cases, either civil or criminal, for trial by the regularly constituted legal tribunals of an organized community, where the Charter of British rights would be held as sacred as the interests of a commercial Company who assume to be themselves the judges, where (without any reflection upon them collectively or individually) cases must, in the very nature of things, arise in which they ought to be the judged.

It, therefore, becomes of very great moment to ascertain the truth of certain statements that have been made to the effect that their principal officers at Red River hold their commissions from the Crown, and if so, under what form, for what extent of territory, and how described. Such commissions might, no doubt, have been issued under the Statute 1 and 2 Geo. IV., for the Hudson Bay Company's Territories and for the Indian Territories, for the trial of small causes and offences of a minor nature, as already described, without in the least infringing upon or limiting the right of Canada to intervene; but if the British Government has expressly included the Red River country in any such commissions, it can only have been through a misapprehension of boundaries, which is not to be wondered at from the policy pursued since the union of the Companies, and the erroneous view of the case they have so constantly disseminated; and no doubt any such powers, if they have been granted, would be withdrawn as soon as the case has been brought fully under the consideration of the Imperial authorities.

In concluding the question of Jurisdiction, it is necessary to observe that the Imperial Statutes herein quoted, which vest the jurisdiction in Canada to the shores of the Pacific, have been repealed in so far as they relate to Vancouver's Island by the Act 12-13 Vic., cap. 48, which re-invests the jurisdiction of Vancouver's Island in the Imperial Government until the establishment of a Local Legislature, which the Act contemplates.

At the same time, a Charter was granted to the Hudson's Bay Company for the colonization of the island, conveying a grant of the soil.

Neither the Act nor the Charter, however, confers any jurisdiction upon the Company.

The Company were required by the terms of the grant to colonize the Island within five years failing which the grant was to become void. It was also stipulated that the grant might be recalled at the time of the expiration of their lease for the Indian Territories, upon payment to the Company of the expenses they might have incurred, the value of their establishments, etc.

Before concluding this Report, it is desirable to offer a few general remarks upon the subject, which the policy of the Company has kept out of view, and which consequently is not generally well understood.

The Hudson's Bay Company claim under three separate titles, the first of which is the Charter of Charles II., granted in 1670, forever. The second is the lease originally granted in 1821 to them, in conjunction with the North-West Company of Canada, for the Indian Territories. The third is their title to Vancouver's Island, as explained. Under the first, they base their claim to government, jurisdiction, and right of soil over the whole country watered by rivers falling into Hudson's Bay; at least, such is the theory, although they have abandoned it south of the present southerly boundary of Canada, 10 at Rainy Lake, the Lake of the Woods, and along the 49th parallel, to the south of which those rivers take their rise. Under the second, they claim exclusive trade from the Rocky Mountains west to the Pacific, and from the sources of the McKenzie River to the Frozen Ocean. There is no dispute about their title on this head, but their lease expires in two years, and it is the renewal of this lease for a further period of twenty-one years which they now seek to obtain.

It will be seen by the question of boundary already treated, that the country about Red River and Lake Winnipeg, etc., which they claim under their Charter, absolutely belongs to Canada; and it will be observed that the abstract right, not the value of the territory, has been dwelt upon, but unfortunately the latter has been as little generally understood as the former, the result of the means the Company have taken to conceal it, for seldom if ever has the wisdom and foresight of man devised a 20 policy better calculated to the end for which it was intended than that adopted since the union of the Companies in 1821.

Memorandum
of the Commissioner of
Crown Lands,
Canada, 1837.

Before that union, the Canadian Fur Trade gave employment to some thousands of men as mere carriers, or "Voyageurs" as they were termed.

In endeavoring to depreciate the national services rendered by the North-West Company during the war of 1812, at the capture of Michilimacinae, etc., Lord Selkirk alludes to this body of men as forming the "Voyageurs Corps," but denies credit to the Company for their important services, which he admits "in a great measure secured Canada," because they were not constantly employed by the Company, and effected this service at a season of the year when the Company did not require them. Assuming this to be the fact, however, had there been then, as now, no such Company and no such 30 trade, there would have been no such body of men ready for action in the hour of danger.

Had the circumstances of the trade continued the same to the present day, settlement must have followed the route of such a line of traffic, and the continual intercourse between this country and the fertile plains of the "far West" would have placed us as far in advance of our American neighbours in the colonization of those countries as we are now behind them.

But the policy of the united Companies has been so admirably carried out in all its details, that an erroneous impression respecting the country and everything connected with it had gradually got possession of the public mind, and it is wonderful with what tact such impressions may sometimes be conveyed without any statement being made contrary to truth. The very appellation of "Hudson's Bay Territory" as applied, for instance, to the Red River country, carries a false impression with it, for 40 the waters of the Mississippi and the Red River, the Assiniboine and the Missouri, interlace with each other there, and therefore the designation of "Gulf of Mexico Territory" would be just as correct. But what a different impression it would convey as regards climate. Again, almost every mention of the available parts of the Western Territories, which are well known to possess a soil and climate adapted in the highest degree for successful settlement, is interwoven with some reference to ice in some shape or other, which no doubt the company truly encounter in carrying the trade some eight hundred miles due north through Hudson's Bay.

An admirable specimen of this kind of policy, by which erroneous impressions may be conveyed, is to be found in Sir J. H. Pelly's letter to Lord Glenelg, of 10th February, 1837:—

"For many years prior to the conquest of Canada, French subjects had penetrated by the St. Lawrence to the frontiers of Rupert's Land; but no competition had occurred between the traders of the two countries within the territories of the Hudson's Bay Company previous to the cession of Canada to Great Britain.

JOINT APPENDIX.
Sec. III.
Canadian Documents, and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company, prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

"Subsequent to that period, the greater capital and activity of British subjects led to a competition, first on the frontier parts, then in the interior, and at last to the formation of a Company combining all the individuals at that time engaged in the trade to countries bordering on the west of Lake Superior, under the firm of the North-West Company of Montreal."

This, when dissected, is a significant paragraph. Where are "the frontiers of Rupert's Land," if the French, whose forts were all around Lake Winnipeg, had not reached them before the cession of Canada to Great Britain? This is an important corroboration of the views of the boundary question explained in the present report.

That "no competition had occurred within the Territories of the Hudson's Bay Company" up to that time may be very true, because the Company had never come up from the shores of the Bay, and the French had not gone down—from their places on Lake Winnipeg—to the Bay. The second paragraph above quoted may also be substantially true, but yet it is so framed as to convey to the general reader that the competition arose from the inhabitants of Canada advancing beyond where they had been before; whereas it was the Hudson's Bay Company who then came up, for the first time, from the shores of the Bay, which led to the competition "first on the frontier parts" of Rupert's land, "then in the interior," on lake Winnipeg, the Saskatchewan, etc., where the Canadians had long enjoyed the trade without competition.

Such is the system and policy pursued by the Company to exclude from view and create erroneous impressions respecting the Western portions of this province, than which there is perhaps no finer country in North America. The same course marks their proceedings at the present moment, for no intimation has been given in this country of their intention to apply for a renewal of the lease of the Indian Territories, though, exercising the privileges they do in countries subject to the Canadian Government, it would not have been unreasonable to expect a different course. Neither does it appear that they have taken any means to inform the inhabitants of those countries whose rights and interests are most deeply affected by the action to be taken, that they were to make this early application for renewal of their lease. Had it been effected in the quiet manner they seem to have desired—a consummation which the thanks of the country are due to the Imperial Government for having refused to sanction—they only would have been heard in their own case, and the result would have been, alike to the people here and in the more remote territories, a surprise.

Memorandum of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, Canada, 1857.

Canada has no quarrel with the Hudson's Bay Company, and desires no harsh measures towards them. It would be alike ruinous to them, and injurious to the countries over which they hold either legal or illegal sway, to put a sudden stop to their operations; but it is an error to suppose that the governing of those countries is a task of uncommon difficulty. The state of anarchy which prevailed in those countries during the warfare of the Companies was the result of the strife between them, where there was no sort of authority, except what they seemed equally to wield, and not arising from any turbulent or ungovernable spirit on the part of the native population. On the contrary, the moment a recognized authority stepped in to control both Companies, implicit obedience was at once yielded to it throughout those vast territories, and either party would have found itself powerless to command followers for any purpose of further aggression. This was upon the occasion of the withdrawal of all commissions of the peace, previously granted to the leading people of the two Companies, the appointment of two special Commissioners (one of them a member of the Executive Council of Lower Canada), and the issuing of a Proclamation in the name of the Prince Regent, by authority of a despatch from Earl Bathurst, of 6th February, 1817, requiring the mutual restitution of all the places and property captured during the strife, to the party who had originally possessed the same, and the entire freedom of the trade to each party, until further adjudicated upon. Galling as this restitution must have been in numerous instances, where party feeling, embittered by the loss of many lives, had reached the highest pitch of excitement, it was immediately complied with.

The proper course to pursue, therefore, would be to lay before the Imperial Government the expediency of annexing the Indian Territories to Canada, showing that by this means only can those countries be retained long in the possession of Great Britain. For colonized they must and will be; it is only a question of who shall do it. If we do not, the Americans will, and that in spite of anything the Company can do to prevent it. That these Territories are fit fields for settlement it is useless to dispute, for one physical fact upsets all theories to the contrary. Where a country is found to sustain animal life to such an extent that hundreds of thousands of wild cattle find subsistence there both in summer and winter, there man also can find a home and plenty. Nor is the country possessing this characteristic confined to a narrow strip along the frontier, but continuing to widen to the westward it is found that the climate, even on the east side of the Rocky Mountains and at a depth of seven degrees 10 North of the American Boundary, is milder than the average of the settled parts of Upper Canada.

On the west side of the Rocky Mountains the climate is mild to a still higher latitude, but Vancouver's Island, together with the contiguous mainland, is perhaps one of the finest countries in the world for colonization. The only drawback is the difficulty of access—a difficulty which the present system will never remove, for it looms larger now than it did forty or fifty years ago, when the North-West Company of Canada poured a continuous stream of traffic across the continent. This Island cannot now, of course, be annexed to Canada on the same terms as the other Indian Territories, as the existing Charter under which the Island is held (a different and distinct thing, be it remembered, from either the old Charter or the expiring Lease) entitles the Hudson's Bay Company to payment of the value of their establishments if the grant be rescinded, which Canada would naturally be expected to 20 pay if the Island were conceded to her, and it might be well to see now upon what terms this could be done, because it seems that if it be not done at the expiration of the Lease of the "Indian Territories," it could not be done afterwards, unless indeed the Company have failed to fulfil the conditions required within the first five years.

Twelve years ago the United States had no communication with their territories on the Pacific, except by sea; and during the Oregon negotiations, when proposing strenuous measures upon the subject, the President, in his message to Congress, 2nd December, 1845, says:—

"An overland mail is believed to be entirely practicable; and the importance of establishing such a mail at least once a month, is submitted to the favourable consideration of Congress."

How different the circumstances now, and how "entirely practicable" it has proved, need not be 30 dwelt upon, but it must be remarked that at no other point north of the Gulf of Mexico are the facilities for communication across the continent anything like equal to what they are through Canada, there being good navigation three-fourths, if not more, of the whole distance; first to the head of Lake Superior, from whence the navigation is broken to Lake Winnipeg (though about 150 miles of this distance is navigable); then through that Lake to the Saskatchewan, on which there are obstructions in the lower part near the Lake, from whence the navigation is unimpeded to the very base of the Rocky Mountains.

It would be very desirable, therefore, and quite practicable, if the British Government will consent to annex the Indian Territories, extending to the Pacific, and Vancouver's Island, to Canada, to establish during summer a monthly communication across the continent. It is of incalculable importance that 40 these measures should be most forcibly pressed upon the Imperial Government at the present juncture for on their solution depends the question of whether this country shall ultimately become a Petty State, or one of the Great Powers of the earth; and not only that, but whether or not there shall be a counterpoise favourable to British interests and modelled upon British institutions to counteract the preponderating influence—if not the absolute dominion—to which our great neighbour the United States must otherwise attain upon this continent.

No reference has been here made to the controversy between the Company and those who accuse them of exercising a pernicious influence over the Indian population, nor is it necessary to enter into the subject further than to point out the erroneous impression the Company strive to inculcate, to the effect that they are necessary to the Indians. It may well be that the state of things is better under 50 them than it was when the two powerful Companies were in hostile array against each other; and it may be that their affairs are as well conducted, with reference to their effect upon the native population, as could well be expected of a Commercial Company having the primary question of profit and loss as the object of their association. But the question really comes to be, whether those countries shall be kept in statu quo till the tide of population bursts in upon them, over an imaginary line, from a country where it has been the rule that the Indian must be driven from the lands the white man covets; or be opened up under the influence of the Canadian Government, which has always evinced the greatest sympathy towards the Indian race, and has protected them in the enjoyment of their rights and properties, not only in their remote hunting grounds, but in the midst of thickly-peopled districts of the country.

Commissioner of Crown Lands.

CROWN LANDS DEPARTMENT,

Memorandum of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, Canada, 1857.

CHIEF JUSTICE DRAPER TO THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.*

33 SPRING GARDENS,
6th May, 1857.

SIR,—In the last interview with which you favoured me, I took occasion to advert to the question of boundary between Canada and the Hudson's Bay Territory as one which required to be settled as a necessary preliminary to many other very important inquiries involved in the matters submitted to a Committee of the last House of Commons, and, as I understood, to be again submitted to the new Parliament.

Chief Justice Draper to the Colonial Secretary, 6th May, 1857.

I alluded to the difference between the views of the Hudson's Bay Company, as expressed in former times, and those which are now, and have been within the last forty years, advanced by them on this point; and I stated my readiness to submit a memorandum to you in relation thereto, which you were pleased to signify your readiness to receive and consider. That memorandum I have now the honour to enclose.

As the construction of the language of the Charter, and the extent of the territory purported to be granted, are involved, it may be considered desirable that the matter should be referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In this event, I venture to request that counsel on the part of the Province may be permitted to attend to watch the argument, and, if it be deemed necessary, that they may be heard in support of those views which more immediately affect the interests of Canada.

I have suggested a reference to the Judicial Committee because I think its opinion would command the ready acquiescence of the inhabitants of Canada as to their legal rights, and because I believe they entertain a very strong opinion that a considerable portion of the territory occupied or claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company will be found to lie within the proper limits of that Province.

Whether it would be desirable to sever this from the more general question of the legality and validity of the Charter, is a matter I should desire to leave for your consideration, but in any event I think it expedient that counsel should be permitted to attend to watch the interests of the Province.

The Right Hon. H. Labouchere.

MEMORANDUM FROM CHIEF JUSTICE DRAPER, AGENT OF THE PROVINCE OF CANADA, ENCLOSED IN THE FOREGOING LETTER.*

It is not proposed at present to discuss the validity of the Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company. A careful perusal of it will suggest many doubts whether it be not altogether void. But assuming that it may be sustainable for every or for any of the purposes for which it was intended, and for the moment conceding that the indefinite description of the territory purporting to be granted does not vitiate the grant, there is a question as to the limits of that territory in which the Province of Canada is deeply interested.

Memorandum submitted by Chief Justice Draper to the Colonial Secretary, 6th May, 1857.

Canadian Documents, and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

1.—“All the lands and territories upon the countries, coasts, and confines of the seas, bays, lakes, rivers creeks, and sounds aforesaid” (stated in the preceding part to be those which lie within the entrance of the straits, commonly called Hudson's Straits, in whatsoever latitude such bays, etc., should be), “that are not already actually possessed by or granted to any of our subjects, or possessed by the subjects of any other Christian prince or state, with the fishing of all sorts of fish, whales, sturgeons, and all other royal fishes in the seas, bays, inlets, and rivers within the premises; and the fish therein taken, together with the royalty of the sea upon the coasts within the limits aforesaid, and all mines royal, as well discovered as not discovered, of gold, silver, gems, and precious stones, to be found or discovered within the territories, limits, and places aforesaid; and that the said land be from henceforth reckoned and reputed as 10 one of our plantations or colonies in America, called Rupert's Land; And, further, we do by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, make, create, and constitute the said Governor and Company for the time being, and their successors, the true and absolute lords and proprietors of the same territory, limits, and places aforesaid, and of all other the premises hereby granted as aforesaid, with their and every of their rights, members, jurisdictions, prerogatives, royalties and appurtenances whatsoever, to them, the said Governor and Company, and their successors forever, to be holden of us, our heirs and successors, as of our Manor of East Greenwich, in our county of Kent, in free and common soeagee.

And, 2.—“And furthermore, we do grant unto the said Governor and Company, and their successors, that they and their successors, and their factors, servants, and agents, for them and on their behalf, and not otherwise, shall forever hereafter have, use and enjoy, not only the whole, entire and 20 only trade and traffic, and the whole, entire and only liberty, use and privilege of trading and trafficking to and from the territory, limits and places aforesaid, but also the whole and entire trade and traffic to and from all havens, bays, creeks, rivers, lakes, and seas into which they shall find entrance or passage, by water or land, out of the territories, limits and places aforesaid, and to and with all the natives and people inhabiting within the territories, limits and places aforesaid, and to and with all other nations inhabiting any of the coasts adjacent to the said territories, limits and places, which are not granted to any of our subjects.”

Memorandum submitted by Chief Justice Draper to the Colonial Secretary, 6th May, 1857.

Prior to this Charter, there was little or nothing done within Hudson's Bay in the way of taking any actual possession of the territory granted. The bay had been discovered, several ships from time to time had entered it, and probably some interchange of commodities with the Indians had taken place 30 while the vessels remained within the Straits; but nothing whatever was known of the interior. Charles the Second claimed—for it was no more than a claim—all the territory which the discovery of the Straits and Bay could confer on the British Crown. The French Crown in like manner had claimed, by reason of their actual settlement of Canada, and of their progressive discoveries and trade, not only all the western territory, including that now in dispute, but even the Bay of the North, and thence to the pole; but neither French nor English had, in 1670, actually penetrated, so far as appears, within many hundred miles of the Red River.

The settlements made by the Hudson's Bay Company were at first confined to those on the shores of James' Bay, and at the Churchill and Hayes Rivers. Henley House, which is about 150 miles up the Albany River, was not erected before the year 1740. The company afterwards erected Fort Nelson 40 which is laid down on the maps at about 200 or 230 miles from the mouth of Churchill River, and the fort at Split Lake, which is represented as about 140 miles from the mouth of the Nelson River. It is believed that these two last named forts are of comparatively modern erection, but that, at all events, for more than a century after the date of the Charter, these, together with the forts on or near the shores of the Bay, were the only settled posts of the Hudson's Bay Company.

This throws some light upon the view which the Company practically adopted, of the extent of their territories.

In many written documents they treat Hudson's Straits and Bay as the governing and principal matter, in reference to or for the purpose of securing which the grant of territory was made to them.

In a petition addressed by the Hudson's Bay Company to Charles the Second, in 1682, they say that His Majesty was graciously pleased to incorporate them, and to grant to them forever all the said Bay, and the Straits leading thereunto, called Hudson's Straits, with all the lands and territories, rivers and islands in and about the said Bay, and the sole trade and commerce there; and, referring to a letter of Monsieur de la Barre, the Governor of Canada, threatening to drive them out, they observe, they doubt not but that, by the King's Royal authority and protection, they will be enabled to defend his undoubted right and their own within the Bay, "wherein never any nation but the subjects of your Imperial Crown has made discoveries or had any commerce."

In a letter dated January 25, 1696-7, they urge, "whenever there be a treaty of peace between the Crowns of England and France, that the French may not travel or drive any trade beyond the midway betwixt Canada and Albany Fort, which we reckon to be within the bounds of our Charter."

In 1698, in a letter written by their Deputy-Governor to the Lords Commissioners of Trade, they repeat the same desire.

In a memorial, dated in June, 1699, they represent the Charter as constituting them the true and absolute proprietors of Hudson's Bay, and of all the territories, limits and places thereto belonging. They further set forth the attacks made in 1682 and 1686 by the French from Canada, and their applications for redress, and the declaration made by James the Second that he, upon the whole matter, did conceive the said Company well-founded in their demands, and therefore did insist upon his own right and the right of his subjects to the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson, and to the sole trade thereof; and they pray the then King, William the Third, to insist upon the inherent right of the Crown of England and the property of his subjects not to be alienated, that so considerable a trade might not be lost, and the Hudson's Bay Company "be left the only mourners" in the peace of Ryswick.

At this time all their forts but one (Albany Fort) had been taken by the French; some of them, indeed, while the two Crowns were at peace; an act of aggression specially referred to by His Majesty in the declaration of war in 1689.

In January, 1700, being called upon by the Lords of Trade and Plantations, they offered proposals for limits between them and the French in Hudson's Bay, insisting at the same time upon their undoubted right "to the whole Bay and Straights of Hudson." The proposed limits were to confine the French from trading or building any house, factory, or fort to the northward of Albany River, situated in about 53° of north latitude, on the west main or coast, or to the northward of Rupert's River on the east main or coast of the Bay, binding themselves not to trade or build any house, factory, or fort to the southward of these two rivers "on any ground belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company." They urged that these limits should be settled; stating, that if the French refused, they must insist upon their prior and undoubted right to the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson, which, they observed, the French never yet would strictly dispute or suffer to be examined into, though the first step of the eighth article of the Treaty of Ryswick directs the doing of it. These limits would have given the French access to the Bay by the Moose River.

The French Ambassador did, however, in March 1698-9, set forth the claims of his Sovereign in a long answer to the English memorial, among other things observing that the different authors who have written about Canada or New France gave it no limits northwards, and that it appeared by all the grants or letters of corporation made at several times by the Kings of France to the companies settled in New France, and particularly in 1628, that all the Bay of the North is comprehended in the limits mentioned by the said grants.*

He also further suggested, that if the English had had any knowledge of the Bay, or any claim thereto, they would not have failed to have insisted on it, and expressly to mention it in the Treaty of 1632 (that of St. Germain-en-Laye), when they restored to the French New France. Admitting that the French neither then nor for a long time afterwards had any forts on the coasts of the Bay, he explains it by saying, that being masters of the inland country, the savages, with whom they had a continual trade, brought their furs over lakes and rivers.

* L'Esкарbot describes Canada at the period of the appointment of De la Roche, in 1598, thus: "Ainsi notre Nouvelle France a pour limites du côté d'ouest les terres jusqu'à la Mer Pacifique au delà du Tropicque du Cancer, au midi les îles de la Mer Atlantique du côté de Cuba l'île Espagnole, au levant la Mer du Nord qui baigne la Nouvelle France; et au septentrion celle qui est dite inconnue vers la Mer Glacée jusqu'à la Pole Arctique."

In April, 1714, the Hudson's Bay Company thank the Queen "for the great care Your Majesty has taken for them by the Treaty of Utrecht, whereby the French are obliged to restore the whole Bay and Straights of Hudson; the undoubted right of the Crown of Great Britain."

In August, 1714, in reference to the same treaty, the Hudson's Bay Company proposed that the limits between the English and French on the coast of Labrador should commence from the island called Grimington's Island, or Cape Perdrix, in the latitude of $58\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ N., which they desire may be the boundary between the French and English on the coast of Labrador; and that a line be drawn south-westerly, to pass through the centre of Lake Misassinnie; and from that lake a line to run south-westward into 49° north latitude; and that such latitude be the limit, that the French do not come to the north nor the English to the south of it.

In another paper of about the same period, they give the following account of the motives which induced the formation of the Company: "It was, therefore, after the happy restoration of King Charles II. that trade and commerce began to revive, and in particular that some noblemen and other public-spirited Englishmen, not unmindful of the discovery and right of the Crown to those parts of America designed at their own charge to adventure the establishing of a regular and constant trade to Hudson's Bay, and to settle forts and factories there, whereby to invite the Indian nations (who lived like savages many hundred leagues up in the country) down to their factories."

In August, 1719, the Hudson's Bay Company acknowledges the surrender by the French of the Straits and Bay, in such a manner that they had nothing to object or desire further on that head. But they urged the settlement of the limits between the English and French territories without delay, since the French, subsequently to the conclusion of the peace (in 1715), made a settlement at the head of Albany River, upon which the Company's principal factory was settled, whereby they interrupted the Indian trade from coming to the Company's factories. It was therefore proposed and desired, "that a boundary or dividend line may be drawn so as to exclude the French from coming anywhere to the northward of the latitude of 49° , except on the coast of Labrador; unless this be done, the Company's, factories at the bottom of Hudson's Bay cannot be secure, or their trade preserved."

In all the foregoing documents it will be observed, that whether upon the peace of Ryswick, when 30 English affairs looked gloomy, and those of France were in the ascendant, or after the Treaty of Utrecht, when the power of France was broken, the Hudson's Bay Company sought to have the boundary between the territories they claimed and those forming part of Canada, settled by some defined and positive line which was to be the result of negotiation, not then pretending that there was anything in their Charter which gave them a rule by which they could insist that the extent of their territories to the southward should be ascertained.

Even in October, 1750, they entertained the same views, while at that time they were pushing their pretensions, both to the northward and westward, to the utmost limits. They state that the limits of the lands and countries lying round the Bay, comprised, as they conceived, within their grant, were as follows: All the lands lying on the east side or coast of the said Bay, eastward to the Atlantic Ocean 40 and Davis' Straits, and the line hereafter mentioned as the east and the south-eastward boundaries of the said Company's territories, and towards the north, all the lands that lie "on the north end or on the north side, or coast, of the said Bay, and extending from the Bay northwards to the utmost limits of the lands there towards the North Pole; but where or how these lands terminate is at present unknown. And towards the west, all the lands that lie on the west side or coast of the said Bay, and extending from the Bay westward to the utmost limits of those lands; but where or how those lands terminate to the westward is also unknown, though probably it will be found they terminate on the Great South Sea. And towards the south all the lands that lie on the south end, or south side of the coast of the said Bay, the extent of which lands to the south to be limited and divided from the places appertaining to the French in those parts, by a line," etc., describing the line from Cape Perdrix to the 50

49th parallel, and along that parallel westward, as in their proposals of August, 1719, excepting that they state the starting point to be in latitude $59\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ N. They add, with regard to this boundary, that "to avoid as much as possible any just grounds for differing with the French in agreeing on those boundaries which lie nearest their settlements, it is laid down so as to leave the French in possession of as much or more land than they can make any just pretensions to, and at the same time leaves your memorialists but a very small district of land from the south end of the said Bay necessary for a frontier." It is worthy of remark that this line would have given to France the southerly portion of the Lake of the Woods, Rainy River and Rainy Lake, which are now claimed as within the Company's territories.

Canadian Documents, and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company, prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

10 The foregoing extracts are deemed sufficient to establish what the Company considered their territorial rights in reference to their connection with and proximity to Hudson's Bay itself, where they had planted their factories, and desired to attract the Indian trade. They certainly show that neither after the Treaty of Ryswick, nor that of Utrecht, when they stated the boundaries, they were either willing to submit to, or were desirous of obtaining, nor yet in 1750, when they set forth what they thought themselves entitled to claim under their Charter, did they ever think of asserting a right to all the countries the waters of which flow into Hudson's Bay. Their claims to lands lying both northward and westward of the Bay are entirely at variance with any such idea. Sir J. Pelly, before a Committee of the House of Commons, in March, 1837, seems to have adhered to the views expressed in 1750, when he said "the power of the Company extends all the way from the boundaries of Upper and 20 Lower Canada away to the North Pole, as far as the land goes, and from the Labrador coast all the way to the Pacific Ocean," though he afterwards, explains that the Company claimed in fee-simple all the lands the waters from which ran into the Hudson's Bay.

It is submitted, that if this latter claim were well founded, the further grant in the Charter of exclusive trade beyond the limits of the territories granted in fee-simple would give colour to the assertion of the "power" of the Company extending to the Pacific; assuming that the word "power" was used to designate the exclusive right of trade, and not the ownership of the territory. For if the Charter gives the fee-simple of the lands to the Rocky Mountains the Pacific is a "Sea," and Fraser's and McKenzie's are "rivers," in which "entry or passage by water or land out of the territories" actually granted may be found; though in such case the application for a license for the exclusive trade would, 30 if the Charter be in this respect valid, have been unnecessary.

Memorandum of Chief Justice Draper, submitted to the Colonial Secretary, 6th May, 1857

The French Government, it appears, would not agree to the proposal which would have limited them to the 49th parallel. Colonel Bladen, one of the British Commissioners under the Treaty of Utrecht, wrote from Paris in 1719 in reference thereto: "I already see some difficulty in the execution of this affair, there being at least the difference of two degrees between the last French maps and that which the Company delivered us." No settlement of the boundary could be arrived at.

If the later claim of territorial limits had been advanced during this negotiation, there can be no doubt it would have been resisted even more strenuously than the effort to make the 49th parallel the boundary was, not merely by contending that the territory so claimed formed part of Canada, and had been treated as such by the French long before 1670, but also that the French King had exercised an 40 act of disposition of them, of the same nature as that under which the Hudson's Bay Company claim, by making them the subject of a Charter to a Company under the Sieur de Caen's name, and after the dissolution of that Company had, in 1627, organized a new Company, to which he conceded the entire country called Canada. And this was before the Treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye, by which the English restored Canada to the French. In 1663, this Company surrendered their Charter, and the King, by an edict of March in that year, established a Council for administration of affairs in the colony, and nominated a Governor; and about 1665, Monsieur Talon, the Intendant of Canada, despatched parties to penetrate into and explore the country to the west and north-west, and in 1671 he reported from Quebec that the "Sieur de Lussan is returned, after having advanced as far as 500 leagues from here, and planted the cross, and set up the King's arms in presence of seventeen Indian nations assembled on 50 the occasion from all parts, all of whom voluntarily submitted themselves to the dominion of His Majesty, whom alone they regard as their sovereign protector."

Sec. III.

Canadian Documents and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company, prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

The French kept continually advancing forts and trading posts in the country, which they claimed to be part of Canada; not merely up the Saguenay River towards James' Bay, but towards and into the territory now in question, in parts and places to which the Hudson's Bay Company had not penetrated when Canada was ceded to Great Britain in 1763, nor for many years afterwards.* They had posts at Lake St. Anne, called by the older geographers Alenimipigon; at the Lake of the Woods; Lake Winnipeg; and two, it is believed, on the Saskatchewan, which are referred to by Sir Alexander McKenzie in his account of his discoveries.

Enough, it is hoped, has been stated to show that the limits of the Hudson's Bay Company's territory are as open to question now as they have ever been, and that when called upon to define them in the last century, they did not advance the claim now set up by them; and that even when they were defining the boundary which they desired to obtain under the Treaty of Utrecht, at a period most favourable for them, they designated one inconsistent with their present pretensions, and which, if it had been accepted by France, would have left no trifling portion of the territory as a part of the Province of Canada.

So far as has been ascertained, the claim to all the country the waters of which ran into Hudson's Bay, was not advanced until the time that the Company took the opinions of the late Sir Samuel Romilly, Messrs. Cruise, Holroyd, Scarlett, and Bell. Without presuming in the slightest degree to question the high authority of the eminent men above named, it may be observed that Sir Arthur Piggott, Sergeant Spankie, Sir Vicary Gibbs, Mr. Bearcroft, and Mr. (now Lord) Brougham, took a widely different view of the legal validity of the Charter, as well as regards the indefinite nature of the territorial grant, as in other important particulars.

Of the very serious bearing of this question on the interests of Canada there can be no doubt. By the Act of 1774, the Province of Quebec is to "extend westward to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England, trading to Hudson's Bay."

And in the division of the Provinces under the statute of 1791, the line was declared to run due north from Lake Temiscaming "to the boundary line of Hudson's Bay;" and the Upper Province is declared to consist of or include all that part of Canada lying "to the westward and southward of the said line."

The union of the Provinces has given to Canada the boundaries which the two separate Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada had; the northern boundary being the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company.

It is now becoming of infinite importance to the Province of Canada to know accurately where that boundary is. Plans for internal communication connected with schemes for agricultural settlements, and for opening new fields for commercial enterprises, are all more or less dependent upon or affected by this question, and it is to Her Majesty's Government alone that the people of Canada can look for a solution of it. The rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, whatever they may be, are derived from the Crown; the Province of Canada has its boundaries assigned by the same authority; and now that it appears to be indispensable that those boundaries should be settled, and the true limits of Canada ascertained, it is to Her Majesty's Government that the Province appeals to take such steps as in its wisdom are deemed fitting or necessary to have this important question set at rest.

CHIEF JUSTICE DRAPER TO THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

LONDON, 8th May, 1857.

Chief Justice
Draper to the Governor-
General,
8 May, 1857.

SIR,—I have the honour to enclose for your Excellency's information, copies of a memorandum on the subject of ascertaining the boundary between Canada and the Hudson's Bay Territory, and of a letter with which that memorandum was enclosed to Mr. Labouchere. It would have been easy to have lengthened it by other references, showing that the pretensions of the Hudson's Bay Company to the lands as far south as the Lake Winnipeg, were not advanced or acted upon until after the North-West Company—proceeding in the steps of the French before 1763—had advanced not only as far as the extreme French posts—but also to the west of the Rocky Mountains, and along Mackenzie's River to the Arctic Sea.

* In the evidence given by the Honourable William McGillivray, on one of the North-West trials at York (now Toronto), in 1818, he stated that there were no Hudson Bay traders established in the Indian country about Lake Winnipeg or the Red River for eight or nine years after he had been used (as a partner in the North-West Company) to trade in that country.

My object in writing this memorandum and letter, has been to press on Her Majesty's Government the propriety of their agreeing to decide, or of taking the initiative in procuring the decision of this question of boundary. I have not nearly exhausted the facts and evidence on which, I apprehend, it will be found that by their own construction, and by non user and non claim, the Company should not now be heard to insist on limits to be ascertained by tracing to their extreme sources the waters which flow into Hudson's Bay.

I have endeavoured to avoid placing the question in such a shape as would make the Province of Canada assume the position of seeking to bring the whole validity of the Charter into question. It appears to me quite clear, that whatever the reasons which influence Her Majesty's Government, they are more desirous of seeing an arrangement effected—which, while it will open for settlement such parts of the country as are suitable, and will provide for the administration of the government of such settlement independently of the Hudson's Bay Company, will at the same time leave to that corporation a considerable, and, in reference to the fur trade, the most valuable, of the privileges they enjoy, and, as a consequence, that they would prefer there should be no question raised on the validity of the Charter, and will not be disposed to facilitate proceedings to bring such a question to trial.

I cannot, however, help feeling that Canada would be placed at a disadvantage in becoming party to any arrangement, while the extent of her own boundaries is unascertained. If even the Hudson's Bay Company's claim were sustained, the Province would be in no worse situation than it is at present, and the necessity of a change of system and government as to the Red River settlement, would not be diminished; while, if a large portion of territory between Lake Superior and the Lake of the Woods is Canadian, her claims to an extension westward would be materially strengthened. And instead of such territory being a part of the consideration for her acceding to a compromise, it would put her on stronger ground to dispute concessions in favour of the Hudson's Bay Company.

I am still anxiously waiting the arrival of a reply to my despatches of the 27th March, which I had hoped to receive by last mail.

I have the honour, etc.,

PAPER RELATIVE TO CANADIAN BOUNDARIES, DELIVERED BY CHIEF JUSTICE DRAPER TO THE HOUSE OF COMMONS (ENGLAND) COMMITTEE, MAY 28TH, 1857.*

On the 25th January, 1696—7, not long before the Treaty of Ryswick (which was signed on the 20th September, 1697), the Hudson's Bay Company expressed their "desire that whenever there should be a treaty of peace between the Crowns of England and France, that the French may not travel or drive any trade beyond the midway betwixt Canada and Albany Fort, which we reckon to be within the bounds of our Charter."

The 8th Article of the Treaty of Ryswick shows that the French at that time set up a claim of right to Hudson's Bay, though that claim was abandoned at the peace of Utrecht, and was never set up afterwards.

In 1687, James the Second declared to the French Commissioners, MM. Barillon and Bonrepos, that having maturely considered his own right and the right of his subjects, to the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson, and having been also informed of the reasons alleged on the part of the French to justify their late proceedings in seizing those forts (Fort Nelson and Fort Charles), which for many years past have been possessed by the English, and in committing several other acts of hostility, to the very great damage of the English Company of Hudson's Bay, His Majesty, upon the whole matter, did consider the said Company well founded in their demands, and, therefore, did insist upon his own right and the right of his subjects to the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson, and to the sole trade thereof."

"The grants of the French King signify nothing to another prince his right, and they may name what they will in their grants, places, known or unknown, but nobody is so weak as to think that anything passeth by those grants but what the King is rightfully and truly possessed of or entitled to, for nemo dat quod non habet is a maxim understood of all; but whereas the French would have no bounds to Canada to the northward, nor, indeed, to any parts of their dominions in the world if they could."—Extract from the Reply of the Hudson's Bay Company to the French Answer left with the English Commissioners, 5th June, 1699, under Treaty of Ryswick.

In 1687 there were discussions between the English and French respecting the right to the Bay and Straits, in which it was, among other things, submitted on the part of the Hudson's Bay Company as follows: "It shall not be the fault of the Company of Hudson's Bay if their agents and those 10 of the Company of Canada do not keep within their respective bounds, the one pretending only to the trade of the Bay and Straits above mentioned, whilst the other keeps to that of Canada; that the forts, habitations, factories and establishments of the English Company be restored, and their limits made good, as the first discoverers, possessors and traders thither."

The Company having already waived the establishment of a right to Hudson's Bay and Straits, "from the mere grant and concessions of the King, which, indeed, cannot operate to the prejudice of others that have the right of discovery and continued possession on their side, it is again averred that His Majesty's subjects only are possessed of such a right to the coasts, bays, and straits of Hudson.

"The Hudson's Bay Company having made out His Majesty's right and title to all the bay within Hudson's Straits, with the rivers, lakes and creeks therein, and the lands and territories theroeto adjoining, in which is comprehended Port Nelson as part of the whole."

10th July, 1700,—the Hudson's Bay Company proposed the following limits between themselves and the French, in case of an exchange of places, "and that they cannot obtain the whole of the Straits and Bay which of right belongs to them."

1. That the French be limited not to trade nor build any factory, etc., beyond the bounds of 53° N. or Albany River, to the northward, on the west main or coast, and, beyond Rupert's River, to the northward on the east main or coast.

2. The English shall be obliged not to trade nor build any factory etc., beyond the aforesaid latitude of 53° N. or Albany River, or beyond Rupert's River, south-east towards Canada, on any land which belongs to the Hudson's Bay Company.

3. As likewise that neither the French nor English shall at any time hereafter extend their bounds contrary to the aforesaid limitations, . . . which the French may very reasonably comply with, for that they by such limitations will have all the country south-eastward betwixt Albany Fort and Canada to themselves, which is not only the best and most fertile part, but also a much larger tract of land than can be supposed to lie to the northward, and the Company deprived of that which was always their undoubted right.

By this document it appears the French were insisting on having the limits settled between York and Albany Fort, as in the latitude of 55° or thereabouts.

22nd January, 1701-2, the Lords of Trade and Plantations asked the Company to say "whether in case the French cannot be prevailed with to consent to the settlement proposed on the 10th of July 40 preceding by the Company, they will not consent that the limits on the east side of the Bay be the latitude of 52½°." This proposal would have given the East Main River and Rupert's River to Canada.

On the 29th January, the Hudson's Bay Company alter their proposals, offering the boundary on the east main or coast, to be Hudson's River, vulgarly called Canute, or Canuse River (which I take to be the river now marked on the maps as the East Main River); but they add, should the French refuse the limits now proposed by the Company, the Company think themselves not bound by this or any former concession of the like nature, but must (as they have always done) insist upon their prior and undoubted right to the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson, which the French never yet would strictly dispute or suffer to be examined into (as knowing the weakness of their claim), though the first step in the 8th Article of the Treaty of Ryswick directs the doing of it. If either proposal had been accepted, the French would have had access to James' Bay. The first proposition left them Moose River; the second appears to have given up Rupert's River.

In February, 1711-12, prior to the Treaty of Utrecht, the Hudson's Bay Company proposed that the limits between them and the French in Canada should begin "at Grimington's Island, or Cape Perdrix, in the latitude of $58\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ north, which they desire may be the boundary between the English and French, on the coast of Labrador, towards Rupert's Land, on the East Main, and Nova Britannia on the French River." That a line be drawn from Cape Perdrix to the Great Lake Mistassing, dividing the same into two parts, beyond which line the French were not to pass to the north, nor the English to the south.

In August, 1714, they renewed their application for the settlement of the limits, adding to their former proposition, that from the Lake Mistassing a line should run south-westward into 49° north latitude, and that such latitude be the limit, and that the French do not come to the north, or the English to the south of the boundary.

In August, 1719, in a memorial, they say that "the surrender of the Straits and Bay aforesaid has been made according to the tenure of the Treaty, at least in such manner that the Company acquiesced therein, and have nothing to object or desire further on that head." But they even then complained that since the conclusion of the peace, viz, in 1715, "the French had made a settlement at the head of Albany River, upon which very river our principal factory is settled, whereby they intercept the Indian trade from coming to the factories; and will, in time, utterly ruin the trade, if not prevented. It is therefore proposed and desired, that a boundary or dividend line may be drawn so as to exclude the French from coming anywhere to the northward of the latitude of 49° , except on the coast of Labrador; unless this is done, the Company's factories at the bottom of Hudson's Bay cannot be secure, or their trade preserved." This shows that the Company there sought to establish an arbitrary boundary, and that the object of it was to secure the fur trade from the French.

The English Commissioners made the demand to have limits established according to the prayer of the Hudson's Bay Company, and for giving up the new fort erected by the French; adding a demand that the French should make no establishments on any of the rivers which discharged themselves into Hudson's Bay; and that the entire course of the navigation of these rivers should be left free to the Company, and to such of the Indians as desired to trade with them.

The precise terms of the instructions to the Commissioners hardly seem to have contemplated the latter part of the demand, for they (the instructions of 3rd September, 1719) merely designate the boundaries beyond which the French and English respectively are not to cross. They contain this passage, however: "But you are to take especial care in wording such articles as shall be agreed upon with the Commissioners of His Most Christian Majesty upon this head, that the said boundaries be understood to regard the trade of the Hudson's Bay Company only."

Colonel Bladen, on the 7th November, 1719, wrote to the Lords of Trade that the English Commissioners would that day deliver in the demand, and that he foresaw "some difficulty in the execution of this affair, there being at least the difference of two degrees between the last French maps and that which the Company delivered us, as your Lordship will perceive by the carte I send you herewith."

Colonel Bladen was right. After receiving the English demands, the French Commissioners, the Maréchal d'Estrées and the Abbé Dubois, never met the English Commissioners again, and all the instances of the English Ambassadors failed to procure a renewal of the conferences.

The Company were again called upon, on the 25th July, 1750, to lay before the Lords of Trade an account of the limits and boundaries of the territory granted to them. They replied among other things that the said Straits and Bay "are now so well known, that it is apprehended they stand in no need of any particular description than by the chart or map herewith delivered; and the limits or boundaries of the lands and countries lying round the same, comprised, as your memorialists conceive, in the same

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE OF THE CANADIAN LEGISLATURE, ON THE SUBJECT OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY, WITH THE EVIDENCE ANNEXED.*

(Transmitted by the Government of Canada to England.)

Report of the Select Committee of the Canadian Legislature,
8th June,
1857, with the evidence annexed.

The Select Committee appointed to receive and collect evidence and information as to the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company under their Charter, the renewal of the license of occupation, the character of the soil and climate of the territory, and its fitness for settlement, have the honour to present their First Report, as follows:

Your Committee beg leave to inform your Honourable House that they have examined three witnesses, Messrs. Gladman, Dawson, and Maedonell, upon the matter referred to them for investigation; and Your Committee submit to the consideration of Your Honourable House the evidence hereunto annexed of these three gentlemen.

The whole nevertheless respectfully submitted.

T. LEE TERRILL,
Chairman.

Committee Room,
8th June, 1857.

Minutes of Evidence.

[The two first witnesses were Mr. George Gladman and Mr. Allan Maedonell. Their evidence related principally to a description of the country, of which they had personal knowledge. That portion of the evidence of the remaining witness, Mr. Dawson, which is omitted, related to the same subject.]

MONDAY, 8th June, 1857.

Mr. William McD. Dawson called in and examined.

I am head of the Woods and Forests Branch of the Crown Land Department, and reside in Toronto.

I have never had any difficulty or quarrel with any one connected with the Hudson's Bay Company.

Q.—Have you particularly studied the titles under which the Hudson's Bay Company claim certain rights of soil, jurisdiction, and trade on this continent?

* Sess. Papers Canada, 1857, Vol. xv. App. 17; Report of Committee, Br. Ho. of Coms., 1857, p. 385.

A.—I have made this subject a particular object of study for many years, and have omitted no opportunity of acquiring information upon it, and although with more time than I could devote to it, and a more extended research, much additional information could be obtained, I believe that it would only tend to fill up details, and strengthen and confirm the results of the investigation I have already made.

Q.—Will you state to the Committee the result of your investigation ?

A.—The result of my investigation has been to demonstrate that in the Red River and Saskatchewan countries, the Hudson's Bay Company have no right or title whatever, except what they have in common with other British subjects. Wherever they have any possession or occupancy there they are simply squatters, the same as they are at Fort William, La Cloche, Lake Nippissing, or any of their other posts in Canada.

The Governmental attributes they claim in that country are a fiction, and their exercise a palpable infraction of law.

I am no enemy to the Hudson's Bay Company, nor to any individual connected with it, and I think that there are, at the present day, extenuating circumstances to justify a great degree of forbearance towards them, when their position comes to be dealt with either judicially or legislatively.

Illegal as it undoubtedly is, their present position is a sort of moral necessity with them. The first attempt of the Company, under Lord Selkirk's régime, to assume that position, was no doubt a monstrous usurpation, but it was defeated, though not till it had caused much bloodshed.

The Hudson's Bay Company and the Canadian traders (North West Company) afterwards amalgamated, and then, in pursuance of a policy, most dexterously planned and executed, carried the trade away back into the interior, from the very shores of the Lakes and Rivers adjoining the settlements of Canada, and took it round by Hudson's Bay to keep it out of view, to lessen the chances of a new opposition springing up.

They also gave out that it was their country—a fiction which the License of exclusive trade for the Indian territories helped to maintain—and they industriously published and circulated Maps of it, as such, which, being copied into other Maps and Geographical works, strengthened the delusion, till it became very general indeed.

When therefore by this means they had been left alone in these remote territories, without any intercourse with the organized tribunals or legitimate Government of the country—an intercourse which their monetary interests forbade them to seek—it became a sort of necessity for them to establish a jurisdiction of their own.

It is true that they have gone to an extreme in this matter which it would be difficult to excuse; but in such a case it is hard to take the first step and be able to stop afterwards, more particularly when it consists in a total antagonism to existing law, or rather in assuming to themselves the functions of constituted authorities where they legally possess only the rights of subjects and traders, in common with the rest of the community.

But having once assumed and exercised such powers, and thereby made themselves amenable to the laws of the country, it is not to be wondered at that they have sought to justify it on the pretence that they possess those powers of Government which, (doubtful at best, even in those localities where they have some show of title) are without the least foundation on the Banks of the Saskatchewan or Red Rivers.

In thus palliating the tenacity with which the Hudson's Bay Company cling to their fictitious title, I may be accused of being their apologist, but I am so only to the extent that, at the present day their position has become a necessity, for, in so far as they have affected the rights of others, they have rendered themselves liable to the most serious consequences, should any party aggrieved see fit to appeal to the legal tribunals of the country, and it is but natural to suppose that they will endeavour to maintain the fiction long enough to enable them to effect a compromise.

Any number of individuals might associate themselves together for mining, hunting or agriculture, say at Lake Nipissing or on Anticosti, and finding no legal tribunals there, or within their reach, they might establish a jurisdiction of their own and execute their judgments. Circumstances may be imagined in which such a course, if resulting from the necessity of their position, might be morally right though legally wrong, but nothing short of an act of indemnity could save them from the consequences if pursued at law, by those whose rights they had affected.

Such is exactly the position of the Hudson's Bay Company at the Red River, and for the judgments they have rendered there they are undoubtedly amenable to be judged by the legally constituted tribunals of this country; and those whom they have condemned or punished, or whose rights or interests they have adjudicated upon can certainly obtain redress. And to this extent I would be their 10 advocate, that in so far as their assumption of jurisdiction has been, in a manner, a necessity resulting from the acts of former years, the Legislature should pass an Act of indemnity to shield them from the consequences—the circumstances to be first investigated, however, by a commission appointed by the Government for that purpose.

It may seem presumptuous in me to put the case so strongly in opposition to the general view of their territorial rights, but it is not a matter of opinion, it is a matter of fact. I could have no hesitation to state as a fact, that the County of York and the District of Montreal are not portions of the Company's Territory, but the fact that the Red River and Saskatchewan are not in their Territory is just as strong and absolute, and the circumstance that the one happens to be better known than the other, does not alter the fact in the one case more than the other. 20

mittee of the

But the generally received view of the subject is but of recent date and simply the result of the circumstance, that no one in particular has taken any interest in denying it. It is only since the union of the Companies in 1821 that there has been no obstacle to the continuous imposition of the Company's views upon the public till they ultimately became rather unopposed than accepted; and in denying their title now, (on the Saskatchewan and Red River), I am simply in accord with the highest authorities whose province it has been to treat the question judicially.

It must be remembered that the Company did not attempt to even enter upon these countries until 104 years after the date of their charter, viz.; in 1774, and that they then did so, not as taking possession under their charter, but only to participate in a traffic then in the hands of British subjects trading from Canada in virtue of the conquest or cession of the country, through which, and not in 30 virtue of their charter, the Company also had, of course, a right to trade as British subjects.

A rivalry having been kept up for many years in the trade, and the absurd construction of the charter now contended for having been invented, the attempt to exercise the powers claimed was made by the Company through Lord Selkirk, first theoretically about the years 1811-12 and practically about 1814, by warning off the North-West Company and obstructing the channel of their trade, and the result was a great deal of strife and bloodshed. In the course of this strife various appeals were made to the Provincial and Imperial Governments and to the legal tribunals, and in every instance the decisions were directly or constructively adverse to the pretensions of the Hudson's Bay Company.

In a despatch to the Governor-General from Earl Bathurst, by order of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, under date 6th February, 1817, I find the following instructions in relation to these 40 events:

"You will also require under similar penalties the restitution of all forts, buildings, or trading stations, with the property which they contain, which may have been seized or taken possession of by either party, to the party who originally established or constructed the same and who were possessed of them previous to the recent disputes between the two Companies.

"You will also require the removal of any blockade or impediment by which any party may have attempted to prevent or interrupt the free passage of traders or others of His Majesty's subjects or the natives of the country with their merchandize, furs, provisions, and other effects, throughout the lakes, rivers, roads and every other usual route or communication heretofore used for the purposes of the fur trade in the interior of North America, and the full and free permission for all persons to 50 pursue their usual and accustomed trade without hindrance or molestation."

And in the conclusion this object is again peremptorily insisted on, viz.: "the mutual restoration of all property captured during these disputes, and the freedom of trade and intercourse with the Indians, until the trials now pending can be brought to a judicial decision, and the great question at issue with respect to the rights of the two Companies shall be definitively settled."

the Hudson's Bay Company, prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

The trials then pending to which the above allusion has reference were those instituted by Lord Selkirk against the partners and employes of the North-West Company, who had resisted the pretensions of the Hudson's Bay Company, and in consequence of which a battle was fought on the Frog Plains, at the Red River, in which some 20 of the Hudson's Bay people were killed, including the "Governor," as they styled their chief officer. These trials were for murder, (some of the parties as principals and some as accessories) for arson, robbery, (stealing cannon) and other high misdemeanours, and were held in this City, then the Town of York, in October 1818, and resulted in the acquittal of all the parties on all the charges, though it was not denied that some of them had been in the battle, in which, however, they contended that they were in defence of their just rights.

These trials were held under the Canada Jurisdiction Act, (43 Geo. III., cap. 138) by authority of a commission from Lower Canada, but the jurisdiction under that Act being questioned on the ground that Frog Plains were in Upper Canada, and therefore not in the territories affected by the Act, the Court was so doubtful on the question of boundary that the charge to the jury directed that in case of finding the prisoners guilty, they should return a special verdict, setting forth that "they could not see from any evidence before them, what were the limits of Upper Canada." The Attorney-General was unable to define these limits, but appealed to the Court to decide, as they were deducible from treaties, Acts of Parliament, and Proclamations, &c., and the judgment of the Court was as above stated; the following passage occurring in the charge of the Chief Justice.

"Mr. Attorney-General has put in evidence the latitude and longitude of the Frog Plains, but he does not put in evidence whether this latitude and longitude be without or within the boundaries of Upper Canada, and I do not know whether from 90° to 100° or 150° form the western limit of Upper Canada."

Report of Select Committee of the Canadian Legislature, 8th June, 1857, with the evidence annexed.

In other words, the Court could not affirm that Upper Canada had any Western limit on this side of the Pacific; and the Court was right, its westerly limit never had been assigned, and absolute evidence, of the very nature which the Attorney-General (now Chief Justice, Sir J. B. Robinson) admitted would be proof upon the subject, existed, so far as to prove that the Province extended beyond the Lake of the Woods, without determining how far beyond, but it was not his duty to quote it as he was prosecuting for a conviction as directed by a special commission from Lower Canada under a particular Act. An acquittal, however, rendered any special verdict unnecessary, and the question was not therefore further tried on these cases.

I must remark, however, that the question raised, was solely whether the scene of the outrage at Red River was in Canada or the Indian Territory, not whether it was in Canada or the Hudson's Bay Company's Territory; the latter alternative was not even entertained, having been almost entirely ignored on the trials as too manifestly absurd to make any legal fight upon at all. In short the case for the defence was based on a justification of resistance to the assumed authority of the Company, whose preposterous pretensions on the Red River with "Governors, Sheriffs &c.," were treated with ridicule; without, however, detracting from the individuals, "Governor" Semple who was killed, or his predecessor, McDonell, who were worthy of the highest respect, though, like many others, imposed upon in the first instance by the specious pretences of the Company and Lord Selkirk.

Other actions and trials took place in Upper Canada, all of which, so far as I have been able trace them, were adverse to the Hudson's Bay Company. In February 1819, in this city, William Smith, Under-Sheriff of the then Western District, obtained £500 damages against Lord Selkirk, then at the head of a large armed force, for resisting him in the execution of a writ of restitution founded upon a verdict obtained at Sandwich in 1816, and resistance also to a warrant for his Lordship's arrest.

Sec. III.

Canadian Documents, and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company, prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

At the same time Daniel McKenzie obtained £1,500 damages for forcible detention, &c., by Lord Selkirk.

Criminal proceedings were also instituted and a bill of indictment found against Lord Selkirk himself and the leaders of his party, for their illegal transactions in the Western Territories; but I have not yet been able to trace up the result of this case, and no doubt much valuable information could be obtained by some one having more time than I have had to hunt up the records of these proceedings.

The latter trials, I believe, were in the ordinary course of procedure of Upper Canada, and not under the Special Act for the Indian Territories, &c., and the proceedings taken extended to transactions which occurred far within the territories drained by waters discharging into Lake Winnipeg. 10

Having shewn the views of the Judicial authorities of Upper Canada, I would advert for a moment to those of Lower Canada.

In May, 1818, Charles De Reinhard was tried at Quebec for murder committed in 1816 on the River Winnipeg, under the Canada Jurisdiction Act. Exception was taken to the Jurisdiction of the Court on the ground that the locality was not in the Indian Territory, but within the limits of Upper Canada. The Court overruled the objection and decided that the westerly boundary of Upper Canada was a line on the meridian of 88° 50' west longitude from London. I hardly think that any surveyor, geographer or delineator of boundaries of any experience or scientific attainments would concur in that decision.

Report of the Select Committee of the Canadian Legislature, 8th June, 1857, with the evidence annexed.

The question would be too long, however, to discuss now, and I shall only say that it was based on the assumption that, of the territory previously belonging to, and acquired from France in 1763, only a part was organized as the Province of Quebec, and that the two Provinces of Canada, after the division, were confined to the same limits provided for the former by the Act of 1774. The Court, the Attorney-General and the Counsel for the prisoner, alike concurred in the fact that the River Winnipeg was a part of the country previously belonging to France and ceded by the treaty of Paris in 1763, and at no stage of the proceedings was the question of its being a part of the Hudson's Bay Company's Territories for one moment entertained.

De Reinhard was found guilty and sentenced to death, but although the Court refused to reconsider its decision, yet the reasoning of Messrs. Stewart and Valliere was so clear, that the Judges deemed it expedient that the execution should be delayed till the decision of the Imperial Government could be had upon the question of Jurisdiction. 30

The actual reasons given by the Imperial Government I have not been able to get at, but I know that when the decision was given, the prisoner was released, and that the question submitted was that of Jurisdiction, as above stated.

I must here remark, however, that notwithstanding the able and convincing arguments of Messrs. Stewart and Valliere, they omitted one point which the Court would have been obliged, by its own admissions, to have accepted as conclusive against the judgment it gave. The decision given was based upon the technical construction put by the Court upon the actual wording of an Act of Parliament, but it was admitted (by the Court) that the country to the West only "came into the possession of the British Crown at the treaty of Paris in 1763," and it was also admitted that the king could, by 40 "an Act of Sovereign Authority," have placed that country under the Government of Canada. It was merely denied that he did so, not asserted that he could not. The counsel for the prisoner did not have a chance to come upon the Commissions of the Governors, or they would have found that there had been such an "Act of Sovereign Authority," distinctly describing that country to the West of the Lake of the Woods as attached to the Government of Canada, and the Court, by its own admission, must have been bound by it.

I may also remark that the decision of the Court at Quebec would have made the westerly limit of Upper Canada, a long way east of the United States boundary at Lake Superior, leaving out the shores of the Lake (where we are now selling mining lands), and its westerly tributaries, and has therefore nothing in common with the boundary designated for us by the Hudson's Bay Company, viz: the 50 water-shed of the St. Lawrence, and for which there is no earthly authority except themselves.

On this head I must advert to one other authority which is of the highest importance at this moment, when troops are about to be sent to the Red River, and who, if they carry with them the erroneous views which, of late years, have been with some success imposed upon the public by the assiduous promulgation of the Company, may unfortunately be placed in a position of antagonism to the civil power. There were indeed some troops there not very many years ago, and no such evils, as might be apprehended now, resulted; but the circumstances are changed; the scenes of an earlier period may come back if the attempt be made, wholly unsustained by law, to repress a legal right. If such should be the case, it would be unfortunate if Her Majesty's soldiers were found on the wrong side, acting against law, for the subject is now being so well discussed that the people will know their rights, and will appeal to the legal tribunals and the civil powers of the State to sustain them. Better that military rule prevailed entirely, for then the officers would know their duties and their responsibilities. If they go under the impression that they are to be subject to the supposed civil officers of a self-constituted Government which has no legal existence, they may find themselves called upon to enforce behests which are not law, which are infractions of law; they may be called upon to subdue resistance to illegal acts to which resistance is a duty and a right; and if, for acting on these behests, they are ultimately brought before the Courts of Justice, they will find that they have acted under those whose powers will be treated as a nullity; whose civil officers will be held a mockery. This has been so before; it may be so again, if due precaution be not observed; and I state it thus strongly now because the more it is known, the less will be the chance of its recurrence.

20 If proper civil officers, magistrates, &c., were appointed by His Excellency the Governor-General, for the Red River country, to whom alone the troops could look in case of emergency, as vested with authority, the difficulty and danger would be obviated; for without this there is no authority in that country, by, through, or in any person connected with the Hudson's Bay Company, as such, to which any officer or soldier in Her Majesty's service would be justified in yielding obedience.

To revert to the authority upon this subject, I was about to quote; it will be remembered that during the troubles which formerly took place upon special representations made by Lord Selkirk that he was not safe in proceeding to the Red River settlement, some troops were sent with him, and the instructions given to them by order of His Excellency, Sir Gordon Drummond, are so clear and decisive that no one can mistake their purport. They were as follows:

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,

Quebec, 17th April, 1816.

SIR:—THE EARL OF SELKIRK having represented to the ADMINISTRATOR IN CHIEF, and Commanding General of the Forces that he has reason to apprehend that attempts may be made upon his life, in the course of the journey through the Indian country which he is about to undertake, His Excellency has in consequence, been pleased to grant his Lordship a Military Guard for his personal protection against assassination. This party, which is to consist of two serjeants and twelve Rank and File of the Regiment De Meuron, is placed under your command, and I am commanded to convey to you the positive prohibition of His Excellency the Lieutenant-General Commanding the Forces, against the employment of this force for any other purpose than the personal protection of the EARL OF SELKIRK. 40 You are particularly ordered not to engage yourself, or the party under your command, in any disputes which may occur betwixt the EARL OF SELKIRK and his engagés and employés, and those of the NORTH-WEST COMPANY, or to take any part or share in any affray which may arise out of such disputes.

By such an interference on your part, you would not only be disobeying your instructions, but acting in direct opposition to the wishes and intentions of the Government, to the COUNTENANCE, SUPPORT and PROTECTION of which, EACH PARTY has an equal claim.

The EARL OF SELKIRK has engaged to furnish the party under your command with provisions during the time of your absence; you are on no occasion to separate from your party, but to return with his Lordship, and on no account to suffer yourself or any of your detachment to be left at any settlement or post in the Indian country.

This is another emphatic declaration that the Government held the Hudson Bay Company and the 10 Canadian traders as possessed of equal rights, and that His Majesty's troops at least were not to be used against the one to sustain the ridiculous pretensions of the other.

Notwithstanding the stringency of these instructions, however, Lord Selkirk, having a number of the disbanded DeMeuron soldiers in his pay, it was difficult for the regulars to resist being led along with them, to enter upon the North-West Company's property, &c., and which involved them in legal difficulties, after their return, from which it was not easy to extricate them.

I have confined myself in the foregoing remarks to the Red River and Saskatchewan countries which were the principal scenes of the disputes which have heretofore called for action, and it will be seen that the imperial authorities, the military authorities, and the courts of justice, have all ignored the pretensions of the Hudson's Bay Company as regards those countries. 20

Report of Select Committee of the Canadian Legislature, 8th June, 1857, with the evidence annexed.

The great danger in renewing the Company's lease of the Indian territories, however, would be that they might drop the pretence that the Red River, &c., is covered by their charter, and claim it as part of the Indian territories, a plea which, though erroneous, might be more easily sustained by technicalities, inasmuch as some of the remote parts of Canada, perfectly understood to be such, have nevertheless sometimes been designated as the "Indian countries," in official documents.

I have not referred to the validity of the Company's charter, either to deny or admit it; I merely deny that it has effect on the countries I have spoken of.

In support of this I have quoted more recent authorities, but for a more particular investigation of their title, its extent and origin, I beg to refer to a Report which I wrote for the Commissioner of Crown Lands, some months ago, the substance of which appears in the shape of a Memorandum in the 30 Return to an Address of the Honourable Legislative Assembly, dated 15th March, 1857, for certain papers connected with the Hudson Bay question. It embodies the views I have entertained for many years, and is the result of much careful study.

Q. Have you made the early and present boundaries of Canada a particular subject of study; if so state the result?

A. The early boundaries of Canada or New France included I think the whole of Hudson's Bay, for I find all that part of the country granted to a trading Company by the King of France, in a charter somewhat similar, but forty-three years earlier than the charter of the Hudson's Bay Company. I find the country also confirmed by Treaty to France, at St. Germain-en-Laye, thirty-eight years before the last named charter, but the investigation of this part of the subject is fully stated in the Memorandum 40 referred to.

I find that from the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713 to the Treaty of Paris in 1763, the boundaries between the French possessions in Canada and the British possessions in Hudson's Bay were not defined. The lines claimed by both parties are distinctly laid down on the Map lately prepared by Mr. Devine in the Crown Land Department. Both, it will be seen, give the Red River and Saskatchewan to France, and the line laid down from British authorities is from those least favorable to French pretensions of that period. All the country south of that line is of course what was ceded by France, as Canada, in 1763, and was in her undisputed possession up to that time. There was never any 40 westerly limit assigned to Canada either before or since the Treaty of Paris. The French claimed to the Pacific though they never explored the whole way across, which, however, the Canadians (British and French) were the first to effect after the Treaty.

Some British authorities of a more recent date claimed under the Treaty of Utrecht from Hudson's Bay to latitude 49° as having been so determined by Commissioners; but no such decision was ever given. I have searched every book I could find upon the subject, and have communicated with those who have searched the best libraries of France and England with the same object, but no authority can be found for such a boundary. * * *

HUDSON'S BAY HOUSE,

18th July, 1857.

SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, communicating a passage from the statement you have received from the Law Officers of the Crown, in reference to the question of the geographical extent of the territory granted by the Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company, and suggesting that such question might with great utility, as between the Company and Canada, be made the subject of a quasi judicial enquiry, and desiring to be informed whether I think it probable that the Hudson's Bay Company would consent to appear before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in the manner and for the purpose suggested.

I have submitted this communication to my colleagues, the Directors of the Hudson's Bay Company, and as we are desirous to throw no obstacle in the way of settlement of the doubts that have been raised by the people of Canada, as to the extent of the territory to which the Company are entitled under their Charter, we shall be prepared to recommend to our shareholders to concur in the course suggested. At the same time, you will not fail to see that other interests than those of the Company may be involved in the enquiry, as there are many persons, not now members of the Company, who have acquired by grants from the Company, or otherwise, a title to large portions of the land in question.

Assuming, however, that the object of the proposed enquiry is to obtain for Canada land fit for cultivation, and the establishment of agricultural settlers, I would observe, that the Directors are already prepared to recommend to the shareholders of the Company to cede any lands which may be required for that purpose. The terms of such cessions would be a matter of no difficulty between Her Majesty's Government and the Company.

The Board, having in view the present condition of the enquiry before the Committee of the House of Commons, and the agitation which prevails on the question in Canada, are desirous of availing themselves of the opportunity your letter affords, to state clearly, for your information, the principles which will guide them in their future proceedings.

The board will be ready to bow to any decision which Her Majesty's Government may consider it for the public interests to take with regard to the maintenance or abolition of the exceptional rights and trade of the Hudson's Bay Company, relying confidently on the justice of Her Majesty's Government, and of Parliament, for just compensation to the present stockholders, and a due consideration of the claims of their factors, traders, and servants in the Indian country, if the time shall have arrived in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government for the abolition of the monopoly.

The present holders of the capital of the Company, 274 in number, are of the usual class of persons holding stock in other chartered companies, who have invested their money on the faith of the Company's Charter, and in confidence of the permanent character of their rights and property, and are in general indifferent to any other question in the present discussion than the security of their capital and dividends.

The situation of the factors, traders, and servants of the Company is described in the evidence taken before the Committee. As no change in the condition or settlement of the country could well be carried into effect without their willing co operation and assistance, their just claims must be considered in any new arrangements to be submitted to Parliament.

As respects the Board of directors, of which I have the honour to be chairman, their situation is peculiar, and their future conduct must be guided by the disposition of Her Majesty's Government to support them in the future administration of their affairs. They have been rewarded so far, since the union of the Hudson's Bay and North-West Companies, by the success of their administration, as proved not alone by the results of their trade, but by the condition in which they will leave, if they now retire, the government of the whole Indian Territories entrusted to their care, as well as by the 10 express approbation of every succeeding Secretary of State for the Colonies for the last thirty-seven years.

*Hudson's Bay
Company to Colonial Secretary, 18
July, 1857.*

Looking to the future, they will only consent to undertake the future charge of the Indian Territories, which would devolve upon them on the renewal of the license, on the faith of being firmly supported by Her Majesty's Government in maintaining their present establishments in full efficiency. It would be inexpedient, in their opinion, to enter upon a new and further term of their administration without the fullest and most explicit assurance of that support. The Directors have always considered that the settlement of 1821 was sanctioned by the Government and the Legislature, and the monopoly of the Hudson's Bay Company then re-established and extended, quite as much, if not more, as the best instrument the Government could employ for the administration, security, and peace of the Indian 20 country, as for the advantage of the parties whose interests were united by that settlement. These parties and these interests have been long since replaced by others, and are now represented by the present holders of the stock of the Company.

We do not consider any further legislative measures necessary at present for the government of the Indian Territories. The powers under the Charter have hitherto proved sufficient for the ordinary purposes of administration, and the Government have full powers, under the Act of 1821, to appoint Justices and establish Courts, independent of the Company, when and where they shall think it expedient. All the new establishments of this description will create expense, which must be paid by this country or by Canada, as neither the Red River Settlement nor the Indian country have taxable 30 means for the purpose.

We beg to be allowed to add the expression of our opinion, that in whatever arrangements which may now be made for the future government of the country, any mixed authority or combination of agents appointed to act with those of the Company will only weaken an administration which it is essential to strengthen in the present state of affairs.

No competent persons would be found to abandon civilized life to accept such situations, with such salary as will be found reasonable; and if they could be found, the probability is that the want of sufficient occupation will soon engage them in antagonistic discussions with one another, not conducive to the general order or cordiality of the small community whose affairs they will be sent to direct.

The Board is willing to remain in the exercise of its present functions, to concur in any arrangements proposed by Government or Parliament, which will not interfere with or obstruct their power 40 of independent management of the concerns of the Company; and to give assistance and support to any magistrates appointed by the Government in endeavouring to maintain the present undisturbed state of the Indian Territories. But they will decline to undertake a divided administration of carrying on the government of the country, under the exceptional circumstances of the case, unless assured of the same cordial and unhesitating support from Her Majesty's Government which they have hitherto enjoyed.

I have, etc.,

JOHN SHEPHERD,
Governor.

INSTRUCTIONS TO MR. GLADMAN, DIRECTOR OF THE PARTY ENGAGED, UNDER AUTHORITY OF THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA, IN EXPLORATION OF THE COUNTRY BETWEEN LAKE SUPERIOR AND THE RED RIVER, AUTHORIZED BY ORDER IN COUNCIL OF 18TH JULY, 1857.*

SECRETARY'S OFFICE,

TORONTO, 22nd July, 1857.

SIR,—I have the honour to acquaint you that, confiding in your integrity, judgment and energy, together with your acquaintance with the Red River Territory, your knowledge of the communication with that country, and with the tribes of Indians which traverse it, His Excellency the Administrator of the Government has been pleased to appoint you to the chief direction and control of the party about to be sent there.

The party organized consists of the following:

Mr. Gladman, Chief Director and Controller of the expedition, and his assistant.

Professor Hind, Geologist and Naturalist, and his assistant.

Mr. Napier, Engineer, with his assistant and staff-men; and Mr. Dawson, Surveyor, with his assistants and chain-men.

Also, such voyageurs or canoe-men as in your judgment may be necessary, the probable number of canoes being assumed at four, with four voyageurs in each; such men to be selected with a view to their being capable of assisting the engineering and surveying branches of the expedition, as axe-men, etc., when required.

The primary object of the expedition is to make a thorough examination of the tract of country between Lake Superior and Red River, by which may be determined the best route for opening a facile communication, through British territory, from that lake to the Red River Settlements, and ultimately to the great tracts of cultivable land beyond them. With this view the following suggestions are offered for your guidance, so far as you will find them practicable, and supported by the topography.

In the first place, after being landed at Fort William, to proceed by the present Hudson's Bay canoe route—by Kaministiquia River, Dog Lake, Lake of the Thousand Islands, etc.—to Lac la Croix, and thence by Rainy Lake, Lake of the Woods, Winnipeg River to Lake Winnipeg, and up the Red River to Fort Garry.

From Rainy Lake to Lake Winnipeg, the route as at present affords a good navigation for boats of considerable size, with the interruption, however, of some short portages: but from Rainy Lake eastward to Lake Superior the route is very much interrupted, and rendered laborious, tedious and expensive by the great number of portages, some of considerable length, which have to be encountered to avoid the falls and rapids in the ravines and creeks which this route follows.

For the establishment of a suitable communication for the important objects aimed at, it is believed that the construction of a road throughout, from some point on Lake Superior, probably either at Fort William or at or near the mouth of the Pigeon River to Rainy Lake, must be undertaken. To ascertain, therefore, at present, by general exploration, what the route for this road should be, whether in the vicinity of the Hudson's Bay route, or by the line of country in which lies the chain of waters from Rainy Lake to the mouth of Pigeon River, this question can obviously be only satisfactorily determined by the difficult portions of both being tested instrumentally; but in either case, as the construction of such road would be a matter of time and much expense, it is considered necessary that the portages, etc., of either of the routes above described should be improved, so as to be made more available and facile, and to be auxiliary to the works of the road by facilitating the transport of men, supplies, etc.

To determine, therefore, the portages to be improved, and the best mode of doing so, and whether the present reaches of canoe or boat navigation may not be further extended by the removal of shoals or the erection of dams, will be points to which you will direct the attention of the engineering and surveying branches of your party.

From Rainy Lake, by Lake of the Woods and Lake Winnipeg, to Fort Garry, as before described, is now comparatively a good water communication, but very circuitous; and should the character of Rat River, which rises at no great distance from the Lake of the Woods, and falls into the Red River above Fort Garry, be found susceptible of its being made a boat channel, a saving probably of 150 miles in length might be effected; or on an exploration of the country through which that river flows, it may be found more desirable to construct a road along it from Red River; and should this be so, the nature of the communication between Red River and Lake Superior, eventually, would be about 100 miles of road from Red River to Lake of the Woods, thence about 140 miles of water communication to the eastern end of Rainy Lake, and from that point a continuous road to Lake Superior of from 160 to 200 miles in length.

When you shall have reached Rainy Lake by the Hudson's Bay canoe or northern route, it is left to your discretion whether you should or not leave the engineering party with sufficient force to return and explore back to Lake Superior, the Southern or Pigeon River route, while you proceed with the surveying party by Lake Winnipeg to Red River, and return by Rat River.

All the members of the party, with the exception of the Geologist and his assistant, are, it is understood, to winter on the expedition if required. The expediency of adopting that course can only be determined by you some time hence; but should you decide upon so doing you will, of course take due precautions for the safety and comfort of the party, and for their effective and profitable employment.

Instructions respecting explorations by Canada west of Lake Superior, 22nd July, 1857.

As director and leader of the party, you will govern all matters whatsoever connected with the conducting and provisioning of it—the hiring, discharging and payment of men. The lines to be explored, and the water examinations to be made will be determined by you, on consultation with the gentlemen conducting the engineering and surveying branches. You will also decide the times and places for separating the party or parties, and for their re-union. The Engineer and Surveyor have been instructed to afford you all the assistance in their power, and have been informed that they are to consider themselves under your guidance and direction. Any occasional additional assistance they may require will be obtained through you, as well as all necessaries whatever; but the conducting of their immediate professional duties will, of course, be regulated by themselves.

At the very outset, it is important that you should regulate the number of fire-arms that you may consider it necessary to take, which it is believed should not exceed six—one with the Director, one with the Geologist, two with the Engineer, and two with the Surveyor. You will adopt, also, full precautions against any spirits, etc., of any description being carried, except what shall be under your own sole charge and control, and such as you may consider necessary to have in case of illness.

With regard to the procuring of canoes, camp equipage, medicine, etc., etc., for the expedition, it is not considered necessary, from your experience in such matters, to offer any suggestion further than to draw your attention to some Crimean rations of pressed vegetables, now in the commissariat store which occupy but little space, and a small portion of which makes in a short time excellent soup.

In order further to give effect to your control and authority, a commission of magistracy will be conferred upon you.

About the time of your reaching Rainy Lake, or at such period as you may deem proper, you will send a messenger with despatches, reporting upon your progress, etc., etc., and whether you find it necessary or desirable to winter in the territory, etc.

Finally, you will impress on each member of your party that no communications or information whatsoever, with regard to the progress or results of the expedition, are to be transmitted, by writing or otherwise, except to the Honourable Provincial Secretary.

The ad interim reports of the Geologist, Engineer, and Surveyor, you will enclose with your own, and transmit by the messenger above adverted to.

You will also peremptorily require that the weight of all personal effects taken by each of the party, including that of the bag or leathern valise containing them, shall not exceed ninety pounds.

E. PARENT,
Assistant Provincial Secretary.

George Gladman, Esquire,
Port Hope, U. C.

[Here follow special instructions to Professor Hind, Mr. Napier, and Mr. Dawson, respectively, together with voluminous reports showing that the objects of the expedition had been successfully attained. The papers also show that the explorations were continued and extended in the following year under Messrs. Hind and Dawson. See Sessional Papers, 1858, Vol. 16, No. 3. FINAL REPORT OF CHIEF JUSTICE DRAPER RESPECTING HIS MISSION TO ENGLAND, 1857.*

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Sir Edmund Walker Head, Baronet, Governor-General, etc.

The following report is respectfully added to the various despatches and communications heretofore written by me on the subject of my mission to England, having been drawn up in the hope of pre-10 senting a connected statement of the proceedings—while for elucidation and fuller details, I beg permission to refer Your Excellency to all that has been previously submitted by me.

The instructions of the 20th February, 1857, with which I was honoured, referred to the leading subjects which subsequently engaged attention; among them are the following:

The duty of attending on the Parliamentary Committee, of watching over the interests of Canada by correcting erroneous impressions, and by bringing forward any claims of a legal or equitable kind which the Province might possess on account of its territorial position or past history.

This duty was limited by an express restriction to conclude no negotiations and assent to no definite plan of settlement affecting Canada, without reporting the particulars of the same, and the views entertained by me thereon.

20 The expediency of marking out the limits between the British possessions and the United States, was strongly pointed out, from the importance of securing the North-West territory against sudden and unauthorized intrusion, as well as of protecting the frontier of the lands above Lake Superior, and about the Red River, and thence to the Pacific, so as effectually to secure them against violent seizure, and irregular settlement, until the advancing tide of immigration from Canada and the United Kingdom might fairly flow into them, and occupy them as subjects of the Queen, and on behalf of the British Empire.

That any renewal of a license of occupation (if determined on at all) or any recognition of rights in the Hudson's Bay Company should be guarded by such stipulations as would prevent interference on their part with the fair and legitimate occupation of tracts adapted for settlement.

30 The importance of Vancouver's Island, as the key to all British North America on the side of the Pacific, was alluded to as being too self-evident to require any advocacy.

I lost no time after the receipt of those instructions in setting off for Europe. On my arrival in London, on the afternoon of the 9th of March, I found that, owing to the vote on the Chinese war, Parliament was about to be dissolved, and that the Committee on the Hudson's Bay affairs and territory had held its last sitting on that day, and would merely report the evidence they had taken, the enquiry being incomplete and insufficient as the foundation of any report.

I certainly felt great momentary disappointment since I saw that my stay in London would be thereby greatly prolonged. But a little reflection, and some information which I obtained as to the course the enquiry had taken, soon brought me to view the delay as likely to be an advantage, by 40 affording time that might be put to a very profitable use.

My first interview with the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies gave no reason to apprehend any indisposition on his part to take a just view of the interests of Canada in the matter. His language, though general, was favourable and I thought I could safely infer that any obstacles that might arise would not originate with him, however he might be affected by pressure and urgency from other quarters.

Enquiries in other places, together with a perusal of the evidence taken before the Committee (which Mr. Labouchere promptly communicated to me), led me to the conclusion that the only party desirous of maintaining things in their present position was the Hudson's Bay Company, though, as I afterwards ascertained more distinctly, very different opinions were entertained as to the course which it would be most wise to adopt in the future government of that portion of British territory.

My first duty, therefore, appeared to be to take steps with a view to meet the resistance which the Hudson's Bay Company were opposing to any change. This resistance took, as I thought, two forms—one, resting generally on the rights claimed under their charter from Charles II.; the other more particularly directed against the claims of this Province, by setting up an alleged impossibility arising from geographical and physical causes, to the Government of the territory being administered by Canada. The first was obviously to be met by an examination of the foundation on which they relied, the second by endeavouring to obtain more accurate knowledge of the formation and accessibility of the country lying between Lake Superior and Fort Garry, and by postponing any final arrangements until this should be fully investigated.

I was aware of the correspondence which took place, in 1850, bearing upon the first of these points, and that the late Sir John Jervis (afterwards Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas) and Sir John Romilly (now Master of the Rolls) had reported their opinion that "having regard to the powers in respect of territory, trade, taxation, and government, claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company," the rights so claimed properly belonged to that Company. They had, however, accompanied this opinion with their advice that the questions should be referred to a competent legal tribunal for consideration and decision, and they suggested the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as the tribunal best fitted for the discussion of the case. Her Majesty's Government adopted the advice, but, as they refused to have the proceedings carried on at the public expense, the matter was then dropped.

*Final Report of Chief

Impressed with the idea that a similar reference would receive the approval of the Government, and that it was on every account desirable that the validity of these claims should be submitted to the test of judicial investigation, I applied for and obtained leave to make searches among the public documents and State papers, where I hoped I should obtain some information respecting the original granting of the Charter, as well as some reliable account of the construction put upon it in times when no such questions had arisen as now presented themselves. Several points with respect to the Hudson's Bay Company's rights and claims, on which doubts had been suggested, might probably be elucidated by this enquiry, and materials might be found to narrow the pretensions set up by them.

But while engaging in this research, which proved much more long and laborious than I at first supposed, I felt it my duty, at an early date after my arrival in London, and as soon indeed as I had sufficiently reflected on the information which I could immediately gather, to submit for the consideration of Your Excellency such views as up to that time impressed themselves on my mind on the subject, in order that Your Excellency in Council might be in a situation to exercise your judgment upon them.

The enquiry before the Committee had taken a much wider range than fell within the limit of my instructions, but the information elicited in regard to the Indians, and the trade carried on by them with the Hudson's Bay Company, had a very important though a collateral bearing upon the preservation of British authority within, and the settling and government of, the North-West Territory. In my despatch of the 20th March, I pointed out the course which the evidence had so far taken, as well as some of the views and reflections to which it was calculated to give rise.

There seemed to be an almost settled conclusion that a change had become necessary—that the Hudson's Bay Company could not be permitted to maintain a territorial monopoly for their own benefit, to the exclusion of the rest of the Queen's subjects from the occupation and cultivation of such lands as were fitted for agricultural purposes; and with regard to Vancouver's Island, its value, in a political point of view, seemed so well understood, that there appeared no room for doubt that it was deemed inexpedient to suffer it to continue in the hands and under the control of that corporation.

As to the mainland, I gathered that the impression entertained by Her Majesty's Government was in favour of placing such portion of it as was fitted for settlement, to the west of the Rocky Mountains, under the control of the Colonial Government proposed to be established at Vancouver's Island; while, as to such portion of it similarly fitted for settlement as lay to the eastward of that mountainous chain, there was a readiness to meet the views of Canada—by placing it under the control of the Government of this Province, if the practicability of opening communication between Lake Superior and Red River and so to connect this more distant territory with Canada, under one general Administration, were established, also subject to the rights (whatever they were) of the Hudson's Bay Company—and to an adjustment of compensation for that which it might be found necessary to take from them.

10 Although conflicting opinions existed as to the mode in which the settlement and administration of affairs in this territory should be effected, the prevalent, as I have already stated, was in favour of an entire change of system, and I could anticipate an enquiry whether Canada would be disposed at once to assume the charge of settling and governing and (except as to foreign aggression) of maintaining peace in the territory indicated, accepting the burden of adjusting such claims as might appear on enquiry to be well founded, and if not, what other arrangements would be suggested in contemplation of its ultimate cession to her.

I endeavoured to point out to Your Excellency, in my despatch of the 27th March, the question which I deemed of the most prominent importance, and I discussed therein, at some length, some of the leading considerations involved in them, and I submitted such conclusions as (so far as I could then 20 perceive) I thought it would be for the interests of the Province to arrive at. As to the validity of the claims of the Hudson Bay Company under their charter, I assumed the Government at home entertained the same views as to the propriety of a reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as had been expressed in 1850.

During the residue of the session of Parliament, and from the dissolution until after the elections, I had but little opportunity of communicating with any of the authorities on these points. I took, however, the earliest convenient occasion to ascertain, as well at the Colonial Office as elsewhere, what opinions prevailed with regard to them, and was surprised and disappointed to find that doubts had been suggested and difficulties raised to following out the course previously suggested by the law advisers of the Crown, and sanctioned by Earl Grey. It was intimated to me, that possibly the Judicial 30 Committee might decline pronouncing any opinion upon the validity of the claims of the Company, when no parties were before them, whose right would be bound by their decision, and that it was more fitting the judgment should be given in a case where the rights of parties were in actual dispute upon which their decision would be strictly judicial and binding. I could perceive plainly that the difficulties, which it was supposed might be met with in the Judicial Committee, must have been suggested since the correspondence of 1850, and that they were deemed of some importance at the Colonial Office. A brief interview with Sir R. Bethel, the Attorney-General, led me to believe that he thought, that after so long an enjoyment on the part of the Hudson's Bay Company, it was not by the Crown that the validity of their charter should be brought into discussion. From all this, I drew the conclusion, that, unless I could raise a question of legal right in which the Province of Canada had a direct inter- 40 est, there was very little prospect of any reference to the Judicial Committee, while I felt a very strong conviction that no other judgment would be satisfactory on the validity of the Company's claims, or if adverse to the claims of the Province (which, however, I did not believe possible) would receive a respectful submission.

With this impression, I considered that vague and indefinite as the southern boundary of the territory mentioned in the Company's charter is, the limits of the Province of Canada in that part are made dependant on it. I observed also, that this same boundary had been a matter of lengthened dispute between Great Britain and France, finishing only by the treaty of 1763. That at various periods subsequently to 1670, and to 1759, the Hudson's Bay Company had been called upon to point out the extent of their territorial claims under the charter, and to define the boundary which they claimed, and 50 that on no one occasion during all that period had they advanced the claim they now insist upon, namely, that the charter gave them the ownership of all lands, the water from which flows into the Hudson's Bay or Straits, and therefore extending as far as the head waters of the Red River, and east and west of that stream to the sources of its tributaries, though the Ashburton treaty has, of course disposed of so much of that claim as lies south of the 49th parallel of latitude. And I prepared a memorandum on the subject, which I forwarded to the Secretary of State for the Colonies in a letter, a copy of which letter and its enclosures was transmitted to Your Excellency in my despatch of the 8th of May, 1857.

Final Report
of Chief Jus-

My object was to place the question on a footing by which the Crown would be called upon to determine the boundary between the Colony and Rupert's Land, as it is styled in the charter of 1670, and, for its own information and guidance, would find it desirable, I might almost say indispensable, to obtain the advice and opinion of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Of the right of the Crown to take this course under the Imperial statute 3 and 4 William IV., there can, I apprehend, be no doubt. It is treated as clear by Mr. MacQueen, in his "Practice of the House of Lords and Privy Council," and on such a reference, I presume, the Judicial Committee would simply make a report, and not pronounce a judgment; upon which report Her Majesty might issue an Order in Council, establishing the boundaries, in virtue of her prerogative royal. Such a declaration would, I venture to submit, meet with respect and obedience in all Her Majesty's Courts of Justice. But if there was a shadow of doubt of the full authority of such an order, a declaratory Act of Parliament, founded upon it, or upon the report of the Judicial Committee, would set the question at rest forever. I thought that Counsel for the Province, as well as for the Hudson's Bay Company, would be heard, and I did not see how it would be possible to exclude the former from contesting the validity of the charter, when it was to be used for the purpose of limiting Canada on the north.

Parliament was opened on the 8th of May, and a Committee of the House of Commons was named to continue the enquiry. Before that Committee met, I received (the 12th May) the minute of Your Excellency in Council, of the 27th April preceding, which expressed a fixed opinion that no immediate charge should be taken of any territory in a form which would throw upon the Province the cost of administration and defence, while in an unsettled state, until the sanction of the Provincial Legislature was obtained, and that in the meantime I should see—1st. That Canada should be secured the reversion of such territory north and west of Lake Superior as experience may show to be fit for settlement, contingent on the opening of such communication from Canada as may prove sufficient to allow their future union with the Province. 2nd. That immediate steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government to prevent the absorption of the territory west of Lake Superior by unauthorized emigration from the United States. 3rd. That every facility should be secured for enabling Canada to explore and survey the territory between Lake Superior and the Rocky Mountains—and if the Provincial Legislature should think fit to provide the means of so doing, no obstacle should be thrown in the way of the constructing of roads or the improvement of water communication, or the promotion of settlement beyond the line supposed to separate the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company from that of Canada."

The first meeting of the Committee was on the 15th of May, when no business except the appointment of the Chairman was transacted. I submitted the names of several witnesses whose evidence I thought would be found valuable; and I received an unofficial intimation of the intention of the Committee to call me before them as a witness. I saw at once the embarrassing position in which this would place me, for it must have been well known that I had no personal knowledge of the territory, and I was therefore certain that my opinions and not my knowledge must form the subject of examination, and that questions might very easily be put to me, which it would be difficult, bearing in mind the restrictive character of my instructions, to answer. I almost determined—if the matter were in any way left open to me, as a matter within my own discretion—not to appear as a witness, though I felt such a course might be open to great misconstruction, and might create impressions unfavourable to the interests of the Province. However, at the meeting of the Committee on 21st May, the Chairman expressed his opinion that I should be called before them, in which all present apparently concurred, and it was formally stated to me that the Committee desired my attendance at their next meeting. I took an opportunity, as soon as the Committee broke up, of stating to the Chairman my objections; but (if he felt there was any force in them) he left me no reason to doubt that in his opinion I should comply with the expressed desire of the Committee.

In the meantime, however, I had learned, through the public press, that an expedition had been set on foot to conduct a geographical survey through a part of the territory in question. I addressed a letter on this subject to the Secretary of State for the Colonies (16th May, 1857—separate, No. 5), a copy of which I enclosed to Your Excellency in my despatch of the 21st May. To this I received a reply from Mr. Merivale, one of the Under-Secretaries of State, bearing date the 25th May, and on the 27th May I received a reply from Mr. Fortescue, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, in reply to my letter of the 6th May, copies of which were transmitted by me to Canada, in my despatch of the 29th of the same month. (Separate, No. 6).

On the 28th of May I was examined before the Committee. I took particular care to have it understood that I had no instructions to appear before them as a witness. Examined repeatedly as to my individual opinions on the subjects of enquiry, I could not avoid stating what I sincerely thought; but while I felt bound to reply without reserve, I was solicitous to impress that I stood alone responsible for such views, that I pretended no authority to advance them in the name of the Province, and that they were in some instances opposed to what I believed many people in the Province thought.

I addressed a reply on the 5th June to the letter which I had received from Mr. Fortescue on the subject of the suggested reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and in this letter I took occasion to present, as succinctly as possible, the points which I thought it most material for the interests of Canada should be treated in the Report of the Committee, and disposed of by Parliament. I felt the more imperatively called upon to take this step at once, lest any answer of mine in the course of a lengthened examination should give rise to misapprehensions as regarded the claims of the Province. A copy of this letter was sent by me to the Provincial Secretary in my despatch of the 5th of June. I received on the evening of the 6th of June a note from Mr. Labouchere's private secretary, respecting my official letter of the 5th of June, to which I replied on the following Monday, and I forwarded copies of those two notes in my despatch to the Provincial Secretary of the 12th of June.

To this despatch I beg to make especial reference. It contains a resumé of my reasons for pressing the reference to the Judicial Committee; a statement of the boundaries, which, for the present, and without reference to the legal adjudication, I was of opinion might answer; as also a recapitulation of some of the proposals made by me for dealing with the questions before the Committee and the Government.

On the 3rd of July I received a copy of the evidence taken before the Select Committee of the House of Assembly, which I immediately transmitted to Mr. Labouchere, as chairman of the Committee. It is printed in the Appendix to the Report of that Committee.

In the meantime (as I learned through private channels of information) the Attorney and Solicitor-Generals had been called upon to report their opinion whether the Crown could lawfully or constitutionally raise for legal decision all or either of the following questions: 1. The validity, at the present day, of the charter of the Hudson's Bay Company; 2. The validity of the several claims of territorial right, of government, of exclusive trade and taxation claimed by that Company; 3. The geographical extent of this territorial claim, supposing it to be well founded to any extent; and, if the Crown could do so, then to state the proper steps to be taken, and the proper tribunal to be resorted to, and whether the Crown should act on behalf of the local Government of Canada, as exercising a delegated share of the Royal authority, or in any other way; and if the Crown could not properly so act, whether they saw any objections to the questions being raised by the local Government of Canada, acting independently of the Crown, or by some private party, in the manner suggested by the law officers in 1850—the Crown undertaking to bear the expense of the proceedings.

I was on the 11th of July favoured by Mr. Labouchere with a copy of the report in reply, but the communication to me was marked "Private and Confidential" (8th July, 1857). A few days prior to its receipt, however, I addressed a letter to Mr. Labouchere, again pressing for a reference and decision on the subject of boundaries. A copy of this letter was transmitted by me to the Provincial Secretary on the 10th of July.

In reference to the opinion of the law advisers of the Crown, I cannot abstain from remarking that it does not appear to me to meet the questions submitted. The general question put was, whether the Crown could lawfully or constitutionally raise for legal decision,—1. The validity of the charter at the present day. 2. The validity of the several claims of territorial right, of government, exclusive trade and taxation, insisted on by the Company. 3. The geographical extent of the territorial claim, supposing it to be well founded to any extent.

1. As to the validity of the charter. The answer in fact is (if I do not misunderstand it), the Crown cannot justly raise this question, because, taking into consideration the enjoyment that has been had under the charter, and the recognition made of the right of the Company under various Acts, the judgment of any tribunal ought to be in favour of upholding it, although, if principles which govern a 10 charter of recent date were applied, it must be deemed invalid. With great submission, this appears to me to savour much more of an opinion on what should be a result of a reference, than an opinion on the power of the Crown to refer. And, if this be the true sense of the answer, then it is difficult to avoid the reflection that such a determination, coming from a high and impartial tribunal, would carry more weight and conviction with it than an opinion, which, if followed, prevents such an adjudication being obtained. And the adoption of that opinion by the Government becomes virtually an assertion by the Government of the validity of the charter—while the argument, resting upon long enjoyment, and parliamentary recognition, seems almost to involve the admission of its invalidity.

Final Report
of Chief Justice Draper,

2. The answer to the second branch of the enquiry is open, as appears to me, to similar objection. If it be admitted—and the opinion given involves the admission—that rights of government, taxation, 20 exclusive administration of justice, or exclusive trade, cannot be legally insisted upon by the Hudson's Bay Company, as having been legally granted by the Crown; and if, as is notoriously the fact, the Hudson's Bay Company have assumed and asserted all these rights, the answer to the question put ought, I humbly conceive, to have been that the Crown could legally and constitutionally raise this question for legal decision, instead of anticipating the judgment by an opinion that the charter should not be deemed invalid, because it professes to grant those powers, inasmuch as to a limited extent those powers may be lawfully used.

I cannot say the result of the reference, so far, was any matter of surprise to me. On whatever grounds the opinion might be rested, I had, as I have already stated, satisfied myself that there would be no facility afforded for raising either of these questions, and I was the more fully satisfied that I 30 had taken a right course in submitting a proposition which it was impossible to negative on any such reasoning as the report contains in regard to the first two questions.

Even on that proposition, however, the opinion given hardly appears to me to afford a full answer.

I concede fully that the Crown could not, of its inherent authority, and by any mere command, bring the Province of Canada and the Hudson's Bay Company, as two contending parties, before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to submit their respective claims for final decision. For this purpose the consent of both parties would be indispensable. But I fail to perceive, and on this point the opinion throws no light, that the Crown could not obtain the opinion and advice of the Judicial Committee upon all the existing facts as to the boundaries between Canada and the territories of the Hudson's Bay Company, supposing their claim "to be well founded to any extent," and that such 40 opinion and advice might be made the foundation for determining those boundaries, with the aid, if requisite, of a declaratory Act of Parliament. It has not yet been denied on any hand that the Crown can legally and constitutionally take that course, and I continue to think this is a more safe and will be a more satisfactory mode of determination than a quasi-judicial enquiry, in which the Province of Canada is to be made to assume the position of a plaintiff in ejectment, and in that character to prove a title to turn the Hudson's Bay Company out of an imaginary possession.

The committee held their last sitting for the examination of witnesses on the 23rd June. Their next meeting was on the 20th July, with closed doors, and so their meetings continued until their report was finally adopted. Before this I had several interviews with Mr. Labouhere, in which, among other things, the opinion of the law advisers of the Crown was spoken of. These interviews, as I was 50 informed by a letter of Mr. Under-Secretary Merivalo, rendered it unnecessary, in Mr. Labouchere's opinion, to address any reply to my letter of the 8th July. The substance of what took place at these interviews is contained in my last despatch to the Provincial Secretary. I felt it right to send a copy of this letter without delay to Mr. Labouchere, in order that he might be fully aware in what light I viewed, and how I had understood what passed between us. It will be observed that Mr. Labouchere made no direct proposition to me founded on the report of the law advisers of the Crown. On the contrary, so far as I could understand, though I may be in error, I thought him much more desirous of seeing the points in doubt or dispute settled by some compromise than of having them left for legal adjudication, while I represented that a determination of the rights conferred by the charter would tend to facilitate the settlement of the other questions which were raised. I had the opportunity of again pressing the necessity that I thought existed, that the authority of the Hudson's Bay Company should at once be put an end to, over such portions of the territory as might be ceded to Canada. And I took occasion, when the question of compensation to the Company was referred to, to state my unqualified opinion that Canada would never consent to pay any portion of it.

The report of the Committee confirms my early impression of the opinions entertained as to the future government of Vancouver's Island and the territory west of the Rocky Mountains. The importance of Vancouver's Island seems to be fully estimated, and the necessity of administering its government and providing for its settlement otherwise than by the agency of the Company. That colony is also viewed as the most convenient headquarters for settlements on the adjacent mainland, especially about Frazer's River and Thompson's River (on or near which it is said there are indications of gold), and generally as far as the Rocky Mountains. The distance, judging from maps, and taking a direct line without reference to the difficulties of communication and necessary divergencies, by rivers and lakes, are from Victoria, on Vancouver's Island, to the junction of the Frazer and Thompson Rivers, 180 miles; thence to Fort Thompson, 80 miles; thence to Mount Brown, 170 miles; thence to Red River, at Fort Garry, near 900 miles; and thence to Fort William, 300 miles, or 500 miles if the canoe route is followed. The Frazer River empties itself opposite the south-easterly part of Vancouver's Island, a little to the north of the 49th parallel. The parts of this country best fitted by climate and soil for agricultural settlement, as well as the points where it was asserted gold had been discovered, were, according to the evidence of Mr. Cooper, situated upon these rivers. They are also not far from the boundary line of Oregon. The greater facilities of obtaining information and of speedy communication and intervention (if intervention were necessary), from Vancouver's Island to these rivers and the country they drain, had very great influence on the minds of those who were of opinion the settlement and protection of these parts of the territory should be managed by the Government of that Colony. On the other hand, there were those (and I understand Mr. Roebuck to be strongly of that opinion) who thought that the territory lying between the Province of Canada and the Pacific far too extensive to be united to Canada and Vancouver's Island, but that it should be divided into several colonies to be settled under the authority of the British Crown, with local Governments which might in time form part of the confederacy of the British possessions on the North American continent, maintaining their connection with the British Empire.

There were not wanting some who would have been disposed to cede to this Province the territorial right of the Crown on condition that Canada should relieve Great Britain of all future charge of its government, defence and administration, and take upon its own resources the burden of any arrangement which the claims of the Hudson's Bay Company might give legitimate rise to. The express instructions I had in no way to pledge the Province to incur any expenditure until the sanction of the Provincial Parliament was obtained, was sufficient without any other reason to prevent my entering upon this topic, to which, I may be permitted to add, I saw what appeared to me to be the gravest objections. I refer to these matters in connection with the amendments which were made in the draft report first submitted to the Committee, to show that there was a wide difference of opinion in that body as to the best mode of dealing with the subject under consideration.

The recommendation of the report was in effect:—

1st. That the Province should be free to annex to her territory such portions of the land in her neighbourhood as may be available to her for the purposes of settlement—with which lands she is will-ling to open and maintain communication, and for which she will provide the means of local administration. The districts on the Red River and the Saskatchewan are those particularly referred to, and the recommendation, therefore, involves the giving to Canada power to assume the whole of the extensive territory bounded on the south by the United States, and on the west by the Rocky Mountains, and as far north as the soil and climate fit for agricultural settlement extends, leaving to Her Majesty's Government to effect any necessary arrangements with the Hudson's Bay Company, whose authority over the country annexed to Canada would entirely cease.

2nd. The reassuming by the Imperial Government of Vancouver's Island, and the making provision for developing the natural resources of that colony, and extending it over any portion of the continent to the west of the Rocky Mountains, on which permanent settlement may be found practicable. 10

3rd. Subject to these recommendations, the continuance of the privilege of exclusive trade to the Hudson's Bay Company.

On this latter recommendation I would remark, that for the reasons set forth in my despatch of the 27th March, 1857, I thought temporary renewal of the license of exclusive trade would be advisable. It also appeared to me, that to throw that trade at once and unreservedly open, would be, in effect, to give an immediate advantage to the fur traders from the United States, while its benefit to the people of Canada was remote and contingent. For the former, with establishments near the frontier (at Pembina, for instance), already obtaining a considerable number of furs from the British territory, would be ready at once to extend their operations—to enter into active arrangements with the half-breeds and Indians, and to lay the foundation for an immediate connection with them, and so to gain a start of our own people that must be extremely disadvantageous to the latter. And there is a further danger, the apprehension of which arises from an answer given by the Right Hon. Edward Ellice, in his examination before the Committee, when he says in reference to the "servants" of the Hudson's Bay Company in the interior, "Even if it was necessary, and if the attempt were made to deprive them" (as, for instance, by taking away the exclusive right of trade) "of what are, in short, their sole means of existence, they would find means, either by communication with America or somewhere else" (possibly Russia, whose possessions join the British territories on the north), "to carry on the trade and exclude every other party." This warning or covert menace (for it is capable of that construction, though unintentionally) from a gentleman who must know the disposition of those of whom he speaks, and the influence their intercourse with the Indians has given them, is not to be overlooked, and it will not have the less point and significance when it is remembered that though settlements within the Oregon Territory had been formed under the protection of the Hudson's Bay Company's "servants;" and though that Company had no chartered rights there, but only such privileges as the exclusive right of trade gave them; yet when the Ashburton Treaty was made, and the north branch of the Columbia River yielded up to the United States, the transfer of these settlements created no difficulty, while an article was inserted into the treaty by which the possessory rights of the Company were to be respected, under which article the Company have now a great claim in discussion "before the Congress, for indemnity for the surrender of their possessory rights." These reflections are calculated to add to the importance of interposing a body of British settlers between the line of 49° north, and the most valuable fur-bearing country, before the privilege of exclusive trade is entirely abrogated, and strengthen the suggestions offered in favour of a temporary renewal of the license for exclusive trade. 30

The report points also to the necessity of making communications to the Government of Canada—as well, I apprehend, on the subject of boundary, as respecting such other arrangements for the settlement and administration of the territory as may be deemed expedient. Its language and expression evince a disposition to sustain and advance the welfare of the Province, and to strengthen its position as a part of the British Empire. 40

I cannot better conclude this report than by recapitulating the points which, appearing to me to come within the scope of my instructions, seemed to be of the greatest present importance, and were presented by me in that light in my communications with the Home authorities. 50

1. The determination of the proper limits between Canada and the territories (whatever they may be) belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company.

2. The marking out the boundary between the possessions of Great Britain and the United States to the Pacific.

3. The adoption of measures to protect the possessions of the Crown from intrusive settlement.

4. The granting to Canada, for a fixed period, powers to explore and survey, to open communications by land and water, and to lay out and settle townships to become, as fast as they are laid out and settled, integral portions of the Province, and, over the territory in which Canada is to possess these powers, to abrogate at once every right and privilege of the Hudson's Bay Company, excepting the right to their factories and other buildings erected within the same, with a sufficient portion of land immediately attached to such factories, etc., necessary for their convenient enjoyment and occupation.

5. The making a provisional arrangement for the government of the Red River Settlement entirely independent of the Hudson's Bay Company, until that settlement can be incorporated with the Province of Canada.

6. The reservation to the Crown of a power to lay out a line of railway, and to use all lands necessary for that purpose throughout the whole territory to the Pacific Ocean.

All which is respectfully submitted.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNOR OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.*

DOWNING STREET,

January 20, 1858.

SIR,—Her Majesty's Government have had under their consideration your letter of the 22nd December, 1856, containing an application on behalf of the Governor and Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company, for a renewal of their license for exclusive trading with the Indians in the North-Western Territories of America. They have also, since the receipt of that letter, paid full attention to the Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons appointed during the last Session of Parliament to consider the state of the British Possessions under the administration of the Hudson's Bay Company, and I have now to acquaint you, by direction of Mr. Secretary Labouchere, with the result of their deliberations on the whole subject.

2. They are disposed to advise Her Majesty to execute the powers vested in her by the Act 1 and 2 Geo. IV., c. 66, by renewing the existing license of the Hudson's Bay Company for the further term of twenty-one years from its approaching expiration on the 30th May, 1859, on the following conditions

3. The reservation, as in the present license, of any territories which may be formed by Her Majesty's Government into colonies.

4. Vancouver's Island to be exempted from the license as already constituted into a colony. On the subject of this Island I am to refer you to another letter of even date herewith, in which the views of Her Majesty's Government in relation to it are communicated to you.

I am further to state that Her Majesty's Government consider it very desirable to ascertain, by the decision of some competent authority, the boundary between the Province of Canada and the Territories claimed by the Company under their charter.

5. It has been suggested by Her Majesty's law advisers that this might be effected through the intervention of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on their being moved to entertain the question. You stated in your letter addressed to me on the 18th of July last, that the Directors of the Company were prepared to recommend to their shareholders a concurrence in this course. But I have no authority to state that the Province of Canada is also prepared to concur in it unless allowed at the same time to discuss the farther validity of the charter itself, a question which, on public grounds, Her Majesty's Government do not consider themselves authorized to raise. If, therefore, any parties in Canada propose to take measures towards contesting the Company's rights to the full extent before a legal tribunal, Her Majesty's Government must leave them to take that course on their own responsibility. If, on the other hand, Canada thinks it expedient to agree to the course now proposed, namely, that of trying the question of boundary alone with the consent of the Hudson's Bay Company, Her Majesty's Government will afford every facility in their power for its determination. It is, therefore, Mr. Labouchere's intention, in the first place, to submit this proposal to the option of the colony.

6. But supposing that no such proceedings were taken, and that the colony declines to contest the naked question of boundary in the manner suggested, Mr. Labouchere is of opinion that the objects recommended by the Committee may be attained by another course. He will then be prepared to propose to Canada, and to the Company, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, as a further condition for the renewal of the license, that the Company should surrender to the Crown such portions of the Territory now claimed by it under the Charter as may be available to and required by Canada for purposes of settlement.

7. It is stated in the report that the districts likely to be required for early occupation are those on the Red River and Saskatchewan. If that should be the case, the portion of territory thus generally indicated should be rendered free for annexation to Canada; such annexation to take place whether in this or any other direction, when Canada has made a road or any other line of communication connecting the territory she requires, and when Canada has given satisfactory evidence of her intention to take steps for laying out townships, and settling and administering the affairs of these districts. Thus the annexation might be gradual in case it should be found to suit the convenience of the several parties interested.

8. For the purpose of ascertaining the satisfactory performance by Canada of the terms thus required, the period when such annexation should consequently commence, and the manner in which it should be carried into execution, Mr. Labouchere would propose the appointment of a Board of three Commissioners, one to be nominated by the Province of Canada, one by the Company, and one by Her Majesty's Government.

9. The same Board should be authorized to consider and report on the following question, namely, —the amount of pecuniary compensation which, under all the circumstances of the case, may become justly payable to the Company in consequence of such contemplated annexation, and in respect of property which they may be required to surrender.

10. The Commissioners should be instructed to dispose of further questions connected with the transfer which, in the course of these proceedings, it may appear desirable to refer to them.

11. Her Majesty's Government have further to propose that, if it should at any time be made known to them that there is a good reason to believe that mining operations or fisheries may be advantageously conducted in any portion of the territory held by the Hudson's Bay Company under their charter, facilities should be afforded to Her Majesty's subjects for engaging in these pursuits within limited districts. For this purpose it would be necessary that Her Majesty's Government should be authorized to grant licenses or leases, or in some other manner which may be arranged by mutual consent, to place the parties engaged to prosecute such undertakings in possession of the land required or the purpose, any territorial rights of the Company notwithstanding. On the other hand, it should be fully understood that Her Majesty's Government will not grant any such facilities unless the parties applying for them give to Her Majesty's Government and the Company substantial proof of their competency, and of the bona fide nature of their intentions; nor unless proper security be taken against the interference of such parties with the fur trade of the Company with the Indians. The mode of carrying into execution these arrangements would be matter for subsequent consideration if the Company should agree to the principles now suggested.

12. If the Company should signify through yourself their willingness to consent to these proposals, Her Majesty's Government will proceed forthwith to submit them to the Local Government of Canada for their consideration, and in the event of their concurrence, they will be prepared to take the necessary means for carrying them into effect.

I have, etc.,

H. MERIVALE.

John Shepherd, Esq.

HUDSON'S BAY HOUSE,

21st January, 1858.

SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Merivale's letter of the 20th instant, communicating the result of the consideration which Her Majesty's Government had given to my letter of the 22nd December, 1856, and advertising to the full attention paid to the report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons, which inquired last session into the state of the British possessions under the administration of the Hudson's Bay Company, detailing the conditions on which Her Majesty's Government are prepared to advise Her Majesty to renew the existing license for a further term of twenty-one years, and informing me that if the Company should signify their willingness to consent to these proposals, Her Majesty's Government will proceed forthwith to submit them to the local Government of Canada for their consideration, and in the event of their concurrence, will be prepared to take the necessary measures for carrying them into effect.

In reply, I beg leave to state, that after full consideration with my colleagues in the direction, we shall be prepared to recommend to our proprietary body:

1st. To agree to the reservation, as in the present license, of any territories which may be formed by Her Majesty's Government into colonies.

2nd. To agree to the proposed exception of Vancouver's Island from the license; and upon this subject we beg to refer you to the answer to the communication which you have forwarded to us, conveying the views of Her Majesty's Government in relation thereto.

3rd. We concur in your suggestion that in the event of the Government of Canada declining to be a party to the proposed reference of the Boundary question to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council upon the footing which Her Majesty's Government are prepared to recommend, and which this Company has already expressed their willingness to adopt, the objects recommended by the Committee of the House of Commons may be attained by another course, the detailed arrangements of which should be carried out under the supervision of three Commissioners, one to be appointed by the Crown, one by the Canadian Government, and one by the Hudson's Bay Company.

I trust that the ready acquiescence of the Hudson's Bay Company in the plan proposed for meeting the requirements of the Canadian Government, will be accepted as an earnest of their desire to be on terms of harmony and friendship with their countrymen in Canada.

4th. In communicating this assent on the part of the Hudson's Bay Company, it is, however, right to notice that the territories mentioned as those that may probably be first desired by the Government of Canada, namely, the Red River and Saskatchewan districts, are not only valuable to the Hudson's Bay Company as stations for carrying on the fur trade, but that they are also of peculiar value to the Company, as being the only source from which the Company's annual stock of provisions is drawn, particularly the staple article of Pemican, a regular supply of which is absolutely necessary to enable the officers of the Company to transport their goods to the numerous inland and distant stations, and to feed and maintain the people, both European and Indians, stationed thereat. It is proper, therefore, that I should draw your attention to the fact that the ultimate loss of these districts will most probably involve the Hudson's Bay Company in very serious difficulties, and cause a great increase of expense in conducting their trade. The Company assume that the Canadian Government will be responsible for the preservation of peace, and the maintenance of law and order in all the territories ceded to them, and that they will prevent lawless and dishonest adventurers from infringing from thence the rights of the Company over the remaining portions of their territories.

5th. With respect to the eleventh paragraph of your letter, in which it is proposed that "Her Majesty's Government should be authorized at any time to grant licenses or leases, or in some other manner which may be arranged by mutual consent, to place parties engaging to prosecute mining operations or fisheries in possession of the land required in any portion of our territory for the purpose, any territorial rights of the Company notwithstanding,"—assuming that the principles stated in the 9th paragraph, as applicable to cessions to Canada, apply equally to any cessions which may take place in virtue of the 11th clause, I beg to state that we shall be prepared to recommend our shareholders to 10 concur in this proposal.

6th. In conclusion, allow me to refer to the sentiments expressed in the fifth and last paragraph of my letter of the 18th of July last, as explanatory of the continued views of myself and colleagues. We are willing to enter upon a new tenure of our engagements under the renewed license, upon being assured of the support of Her Majesty's Government, and of the cordial co-operation of the neighbouring Government of Canada, in maintaining tranquillity and order among the Indian tribes, and protecting the frontiers of the whole adjacent British territories from foreign encroachment.

The interests of the Hudson's Bay Company, we are convinced, are closely united with the real prosperity of Canada, and we trust that the humane and beneficent objects of Her Majesty's Government will prosper under our united exertions. 20

SIR,—In sending for your consideration and that of your Council, a correspondence which has recently passed between the Directors of the Hudson's Bay Company and this Department (Colonial Office to Hudson's Bay Company, 20th January, 1858; do. do. Hudson's Bay Company, 21st January, 30 1858; do. do.) on the subjects embraced by the investigation of a Committee of the House of Commons in the last year's session of Parliament, it is not necessary that I should add much to the information which that correspondence conveys.

The relations in which the Company is placed, both towards Canada and towards Her Majesty's Government in this country, have naturally attracted in no common degree the attention of the Canadian community, and they were also carefully investigated by the Committee to which I have referred.

It is the anxious desire of Her Majesty's Government to take the opportunity afforded by the approaching termination of the Company's license of exclusive trade over what is termed the Indian Territory, for placing these relations upon such a footing as shall be consonant with justice, and at the 40 same time conducive to the satisfaction and to the interests of the great Province under your government.

It is for the purpose of promoting these objects that I have carried on the correspondence which I now transmit to you, and I make no question but that it will be considered in a similar spirit by the Legislature and people of Canada.

I do not propose to discuss the question of the validity of the claims of the Company, in virtue of their charter, over the whole territory known as Rupert's Land. Her Majesty's Government have come to the conclusion that it would be impossible for them to institute proceedings with a view to raise this question before a legal tribunal, without departing from those principles of equity by which their conduct ought to be guided. If, therefore, it is to be raised at all, it must be by other parties on their own responsibility.

With regard to the question of boundary, as distinguished from that of the validity of the charter, Her Majesty's Government are anxious to afford every facility towards its solution, a mode of accomplishing which is indicated in the correspondence, if such should be the desire of Canada.

But I trust that in any case a machinery may be provided through the course now proposed which will afford to Canada the means of obtaining any districts which she may require for the purpose of settlement, and to which she may be able to afford the benefits of administration and protection. The tracts claimed by the Company under its charter are continuous on the north and west with the whole of that great Province which is now united under your government. I therefore look to the gradual aggregation of such portions of these tracts as may be found available to that Province which contains within its limits the noble water communication afforded by the Lakes and the St. Lawrence to the Atlantic.

I recommend this important subject to the early consideration of yourself and your advisers. Her Majesty's Government can have no other wish regarding it than, consistently with the principles of good faith, to promote the prosperity and consult the feelings of the people of Canada in this matter, as well as to provide for the security of law and order in these vast regions, in the maintenance of which Canada has herself so deep an interest.

I have, etc.,

H. LABOUCHERE.

Governor the Right Honourable Sir E. W. Head, Bart., etc., etc., etc.

ADDRESS OF THE CANADIAN PARLIAMENT TO HER MAJESTY, 13TH AUGUST, 1858.*
To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty.

Most Gracious Sovereign,—

We, Your Majesty's most-dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Council and Assembly of the Canadian, in Provincial Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, for the purpose of representing—

That the approaching termination of the License of Trade granted by Your Majesty's Imperial Government to the Hudson's Bay Company over the Indian Territories, a portion of which, in our humble opinion, Canada has a right to claim as forming part of her territory, renders imperative the adoption of such measures as may be necessary to give effect to the rights of the Province, and presents a favourable opportunity for obtaining a final decision on the validity of the Charter of the Company and the boundary of Canada on the north and west.

That Canada, whose rights stand affected by that Charter, to which she was not a party, and the validity of which has been questioned for more than a century and a half, has, in our humble opinion, a right to request from Your Majesty's Imperial Government a decision of this question, with a view of putting an end to discussions and questions of conflicting rights, prejudicial as well to Your Majesty's Imperial Government as to Canada, and which, while unsettled, must prevent the colonization of the country.

That the settlement of the boundary line is immediately required, and that therefore we humbly pray Your Majesty that the subject thereof may be forthwith submitted to the opinion of the Judicial Committee of Your Majesty's Privy Council, but without restriction as to any question Canada may deem it proper to present on the validity of the said Charter, or for the maintenance of her rights.

Canadian Documents, and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company, prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

That any renewal of the license to trade over the Indian Territories should, in our humble opinion, be granted only upon the conditions that such portions thereof, or of the other territories claimed by the Company (even if their Charter be held valid), as may be required from time to time to be set apart by Canada, or by Your Majesty's Government, into settlements for colonization, should, as so required, be withdrawn from under any such license and the jurisdiction and control of the said Company; and that Your Majesty's Government, or the Governor-General in Council, should be permitted to grant licenses to trade in any portions of the territories while held by or in occupation of the said Company, upon such conditions for the observance of law and the preservation of the peace, for the prohibition or restriction of the sale of ardent spirits, for the protection of Indian tribes from injury or imposition, and with such other provisions as to Your Majesty's Government, or to His 10

Excellency in Council, may seem advisable.

Address of the Canadian Parliament, 18th August, 1858.

That in our humble opinion Canada should not be called upon to compensate the said Company for any portion of such territory from which they may withdraw, or be compelled to withdraw, but that the said Company should be allowed to retain and dispose of any portion of the lands thereof on which they have built or improved.

All which we humbly pray Your Majesty to take into Your Majesty's gracious and favourable consideration.

THE DEPUTY GOVERNOR OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY TO THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.*

HUDSON'S BAY HOUSE,

12th October, 1858.

Hudson's Bay Company to Colonial Secretary, 12 October, 1858.

SIR,—With reference to a communication addressed to me, under date of the 3rd ultimo, the receipt of which I had the honour to acknowledge on the 7th of that month, I beg now to state that this Company can only re-assert their right to the privileges granted to them by their Charter of Incorporation, the extent and nature of which they have already fully explained in the papers which will be found amongst those printed by order of Parliament. I refer particularly to a letter addressed by Sir J. Henry Pelly to Earl Grey, dated 13th September, 1849, enclosing a paper entitled "Statement of the Rights as to Territory, Trade, Taxation, and Government, claimed and exercised by the Hudson's Bay Company, on the Continent of North America," and marked No. 2, among the papers on the affairs of the Hudson's Bay Company, printed by order of the House of Commons, on the 12th of July, 1850..

This Company cannot, therefore, be a consenting party to any proceeding which is to call in question rights so long established and recognized, but they will, of course, be prepared to protect themselves against any attempt that may be made on the part of the Canadian authorities to deprive them, without compensation, of any portion of the territory they have so long been in possession of.

DOWNING STREET, 3rd November, 1858.

Under Secretary to Hudson's Bay Company, 3 November, 1858.

SIR,—I am directed, by Secretary Sir E. B. Lytton, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th October.

Sir E. Lytton will not conceal the disappointment and regret with which he has received that communication, containing, if he understands its tenor correctly, a distinct refusal on the part of the Hudson's Bay Company, to entertain any proposal with a view to adjusting the conflicting claims of Great Britain, of Canada, and of the Company, or to join with her Majesty's Government in affording reasonable facilities for the settlement of the questions in which Imperial, no less than colonial interests, are involved.

* Sess. Papers, Canada, 1859, Vol. 17, No. 7.

It is Sir E. Lytton's anxious desire to come to some equitable and conciliatory arrangement by which all legitimate claims of the Hudson's Bay Company should be fairly considered with reference to the Territories or the privileges they may be required to surrender; but if the decision as conveyed in your letter, be regarded as final, all power to facilitate such an arrangement is withdrawn from his hands.

By that decision, Sir E. Lytton sees with regret, that a process of temperate and amicable enquiry into antagonistic and even hostile relations, and where it is manifest that the terms of compensation, compromise, and mutual convenience, which Her Majesty's Government would, under other circumstances, have been able to negotiate, must become far more difficult of attainment, if not actually unattainable.

Unsatisfactory as this result would be, Sir E. Lytton will not feel at liberty to decline it. He desires that the Hudson's Bay Company should distinctly understand, that, in his opinion, the time for arriving at some authoritative definition of conflicting claims can no longer be postponed with safety, or in justice to public interests; and both Canada and the British Parliament might justly complain of further and unnecessary delay. But before deciding finally upon the course to be pursued, he desires to place once more the question before the Hudson's Bay Company, with a sincere hope that on a further consideration they may see the expediency of modifying the determination which your letter announced.

Where on all sides interests so great and various are concerned, the wisest and most dignified course will be found, as Sir E. Lytton has on previous occasions pointed out, in an appeal to, and a decision by, a Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, with the concurrence alike of Canada and of the Hudson's Bay Company.

If the adoption of such a procedure be advantageous to the interests of all parties concerned, Sir Edward cannot but think it would be particularly for the interest of the Hudson's Bay Company.

It would afford a tribunal pre-eminently fitted for the dispassionate consideration of the questions at issue; it would secure a decision which would probably be rather of the nature of an arbitration than of a judgment; and it would furnish a basis of negotiation on which reciprocal concession and the claims for compensation could be most successfully discussed.

In such an event, Sir E. Lytton would be prepared to agree that the Company, if they succeed in maintaining the full rights which they claim, should be indemnified against the costs, and that in any other result it should be understood that each party should bear its own expenses incident to the proceeding.

It is not for Sir E. Lytton to dictate to the Company the course which they should pursue, but I am to place distinctly before them his own intentions, and to leave them to decide.

If, on the one hand, the Company will meet Sir E. Lytton in finding the solution for a recognized difficulty, and will undertake to give all reasonable facilities for trying the validity of their disputed Charter, they may be sure that they will meet with fair and liberal treatment, so far as Her Majesty's Government are concerned; but if, on the other hand, the Hudson's Bay Company persist in declining these terms, and can suggest no other practicable mode of agreement, Sir E. Lytton must hold himself acquitted of further responsibility to the interests of the Hudson's Bay Company, and will take the necessary steps for closing a controversy too long open, and for securing a definite decision which is due to the material development of British North America, and the requirements of an advancing civilization.

It is only fair to add, that in such case the renewal of the exclusive license to trade in any part of the Indian Territory, a renewal which could only be justified to Parliament as part of a general arrangement, adjusted on the principles of mutual concession, must become impossible.

Captain Berens.

I have, etc.

THE DEPUTY-GOVERNOR OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY TO THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.*

HUDSON'S BAY HOUSE,

10th November, 1858.

SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Lord Carnarvon's letter of the 3rd instant, to which I now beg to reply, as I am anxious that the views and intentions of this Company should not be misunderstood.

In the year 1850 a correspondence passed between the Colonial Office and this Company in reference to the objections raised by certain parties in regard to the validity of the rights claimed by this Company under their Charter, and, under date of the 24th January, 1850, Mr. B. Howes, by desire of Lord Grey, transmitted to Sir H. Pelly, the then Governor of this Company, a copy of a letter proposed to be 10 addressed by his Lordship to Mr. Isbister, the person bringing forward the complaints referred to. In answer to that communication, the Secretary of this Company, under date the 29th January, 1850, stated that there was nothing in the letter so proposed to be addressed to Mr. Isbister, to which the Directors of the Company had the least objection.

At that period the consent of this Company was not asked, and the Law Officers of the Crown stated as their opinion that the proper mode for raising the question for discussion would be to embody in a petition to the Queen any complaints urged against the Company; and they recommended that any such petition should be referred by Her Majesty to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. On that occasion it was distinctly stated that the petition must be confined to the subject to which the Resolution of the House of Commons of 5th July, 1849, extended—that subject being an enquiry into 20 the legality of certain powers claimed and exercised by the Hudson's Bay Company, under their Charter, but not questioning the validity of the Charter itself.

No petition, however, was then presented, and there the matter rested until the year 1857, when a select committee of the House of Commons was appointed "to consider the state of the British possessions in America, under the administration of the Hudson's Bay Company, or over which they possessed a license to trade."

In the month of July, 1857, a communication was made to this Company by Mr. Labouchere, the then secretary of State for the Colonies, calling the attention of the Company to a statement received from the Law Officers of the Crown, having reference solely to the question of the geographical extent of the territory claimed by this Company, as included in the grant by their Charter, recommending that 30 the subject should be referred to the Privy Council, and stating that this could not be done, except by the consent of both parties, namely, Canada and this Company. In reply to this communication, the Governor of the Company informed Mr Labouchere, under date 18th July, 1857, that the Directors of this Company would be prepared to recommend to their shareholders to concur in the course suggested

The suggestion now made to the Company, as set forth in the Address to Her Majesty from the Canadian Legislature, and to which my letter of the 12th ultimo had reference, is that they should give their consent to an inquiry before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which inquiry is to involve not merely the question of the geographical boundary of the Territories claimed by them, but to challenge also the validity of the Charter, and, as a consequence, all the rights and privileges which it professes to grant, and which have been exercised by the Company for a period of nearly 200 years. 40

If such an inquiry should be gone into in the manner suggested by the Law Officers of the Crown, in 1850, the Company will now, as it was then, be prepared to appear on that inquiry, in support of their rights, but in that event no consent on their part will be necessary, nor, as I have already observed, was any consent asked for or suggested when the former inquiry was contemplated. But if the validity of their Charter itself is to be called in question, the Committee feel that in justice to their Shareholders it would be impossible for them to be consenting parties to proceedings instituted with such an object.

* Seas. Papers, Canada, 1859, Vol. 17, No. 7.

Hudson's Bay Company to Colonial Secretary—10th November, 1858.

The Company has at all times been willing to entertain any proposal that might be made to them for the surrender of any of their rights or of any portion of their territory; but it is one thing to consent, for a consideration to be agreed upon, to the surrender of admitted rights, and another to volunteer a consent to an enquiry to call those rights in question.

While, therefore, I and my colleagues in the Direction of the Hudson's Bay Company, are anxious to do all that we can, consistently with our duty to our shareholders, to meet the wishes both of Her Majesty's Government and of the Canadian Legislature, we feel that we cannot return any answer to your letter of the 3rd instant, than that which is conveyed by the letter on the same subject, which I had the honour of addressing to you on the 12th ultimo.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL AND SOLICITOR-GENERAL (ENG.) TO THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.*

TEMPLE, 16th December, 1858.

SIR,—We were favoured with your commands signified in Mr. Elliot's letter of the 2nd December inst., in which he stated that with reference to the opinion received from us dated the 30th October, ultimo, relative to certain questions pending with the Hudson's Bay Company, he was directed by you to transmit to us the accompanying copies of a correspondence with that Company, and that we should perceive that the Directors of the Hudson's Bay Company decline to be consenting parties to a reference of the proposed questions respecting the validity and extent of their Charter and respecting the geographical extent of their Territory, to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Under these circumstances it was understood from our former opinion that no other course remains open for trying those questions than a proceeding by scire facias.

Mr. Elliot was also pleased to state that you inferred from the views which have been expressed on the subject by the Government and Parliament of Canada, that the Canadian Government will be prepared, if necessary, to take steps for organizing that mode of procedure.

Mr. Elliot was also pleased to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour you with our opinion whether it will be expedient to apply to the Government of Canada to take such steps as may be requisite for the purpose of commencing the proceeding by scire facias, and, if so, what those steps should be; or if it should be our opinion that there are any difficulties in the way of the commencement of that proceeding by the Government of Canada, that we would advise what steps should be taken in this country for accomplishing the intended object.

In obedience to your commands, we have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report that the Directors of the Hudson's Bay Company having declined to become parties to the proceeding before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, to which they were invited, we apprehend that the only course open for the determination of the questions arising on their charter, is by scire facias brought to repeal the Charter, as suggested in our report of the 30th October ultimo.

This proceeding may be instituted by the Canadian Government in the name of any individual subject of Her Majesty, and we apprehend it will now be proper to ascertain from the Canadian Government whether they are willing and ready to commence such proceeding.

If the Canadian Government think fit to proceed by scire facias, and to authorize some agent in this country to apply for the writ, there will be no difficulty in obtaining the writ; but we think that, in the first instance, all necessary steps should be taken with the aid of their own legal advisers, by the Canadian Government.

We have, etc.,

Canadian Documents, and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

Colonial Secretary to Governor-General, 22nd December, 1858.

DOWNING STREET, 22nd December, 1858.

SIR,—I duly received your despatch, No 106, of the 16th August last, and laid before the Queen the Joint Address to Her Majesty, which accompanied it from the Legislative Council and Assembly of Canada, relative to the Territory of the Hudson's Bay Company.

The subject of this Address has occupied my careful consideration, and I transmit to you the copies of a correspondence respecting it, which has taken place between the Company and this Department.

From this correspondence you will perceive that the Hudson's Bay Company decline to be consenting parties to a reference of questions respecting the validity or extent of their Charter to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and under these circumstances the Law Advisers of the Crown, whom I have consulted in the matter, have stated in an opinion, of which I forward a copy, that the only course open for the determination of these questions is by writ of scire facias brought to repeal the Charter.

I have, therefore, to request that you will submit the accompanying papers to your Government and invite them to take steps to obtain the writ in accordance with the suggestion of the Law Advisers, and that you will inform me, as soon as practicable, of the course which the Government of Canada may resolve to adopt in this matter.

Parliament will doubtless meet in the first week of February, and I need not say how desirable it would be if Her Majesty's Government could then be prepared to notify the decision of Canada.

DOWNING STREET, 28th January, 1859.

SIR,—With reference to former correspondence on the pending questions between Her Majesty's Government and the Hudson's Bay Company, I am directed by Secretary Sir E. Bulwer Lytton, to request you will inform the Directors of the Hudson's Bay Company, that Her Majesty's Government, after the maturest consideration, are not prepared to grant to the Company a renewal for a term of years of the license of exclusive trade which they now enjoy over the Territories of North-Western America, but which is not claimed under their Charter, and not included in British Columbia.

At the same time, regard being had to the proximity of the period at which the present license will expire, namely, in May next, and the injury to the public interest in the regions comprised in the license which might in the present state of things arise from its termination at that date, Her Majesty's Government are willing to grant the Hudson's Bay Company a fresh license for one year, to commence from the expiration of the present license.

SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the Earl of Carnarvon's letter of the 28th ultimo, informing me that Her Majesty's Government are not prepared to grant to this Company a renewal, for a term of years, of the license of exclusive trade over the Indian Territory, but that they are prepared to grant a fresh license for one year, commencing from the expiry of the present license.

The subject being one of deep importance, and requiring the consideration of the full Board, the Directors now in London feel that in the absence of the Deputy-Governor, who is in Scotland, but who is expected to arrive in London to-morrow, they ought to postpone coming to a decision until they have been able to consult with him. I have, however, called a special meeting of the Committee for Friday next, when the subject will be fully considered, and on Saturday I hope to have the honour of transmitting to you the result of their deliberations.

HUDSON'S BAY HOUSE,

LONDON, 8th February, 1859.

SIR,—With reference to my letter of the 2nd instant, I have now the honour to inform you that I have this day laid before the Board of Directors of the Hudson's Bay Company, the letter addressed to me by Lord Carnarvon on the 28th ultimo. His Lordship, by your directions, therein informs me, that Her Majesty's Government are not prepared to grant to the Company a renewal of the license under the Act of 1st and 2nd Geo. IV., cap. 66. But regard being had to the expiration of the present license in May next, and the injury to the public interests in the region comprised in the license which might in the present state of things arise from its termination at that date, Her Majesty's Government are willing to grant to the Hudson's Bay Company a fresh license for one year, to commence from the 30th expiry of the present license.

Hudson's Bay Company to Colonial Secretary, 8th Feb., 1859.

The Board direct me respectfully to decline that offer. The acceptance on their part of the license for any period of shorter duration than that which has been usually granted since the passing of the Act above mentioned, would, in their opinion, only further increase the inconveniences resulting from the state of suspense in which the question has been kept for the last two years; so far from strengthening, it would paralyze their authority even within their own Territory, from the impression it would create of the approaching termination of that authority. They do not require, and never have applied for, the license for the purposes of their trade. The Act passed at their suggestion in 1821 was intended for the preservation and maintenance of peace and order in the whole of the Indian Territories. These had been grievously compromised by conflicts of the servants of rival traders, whose interests were about that time united; no means are provided in the Act for the enforcement of its provisions, so as to give additional protection to the trade. The intelligence of the renewal of the license for a year would not even reach a large portion of the posts of the Company before that period had expired.

The Board beg respectfully again to bring under your review the whole of the correspondence and proceedings which have had reference to this subject since their first application, dated December 22nd, 1856, for a renewal of the license.

Sec. III.

Canadian Documents, and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company, prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

In consequence of that application, and of the approaching period of the expiration of the existing license, the late Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr. Labouchere, referred the matter to the consideration of a Committee of the House of Commons. Much evidence was taken before that Committee. The Board, through the medium of their late Chairman, Mr. Shepherd, communicated fully their opinions and intentions with respect to the past and future interests of the Hudson's Bay Company, in a letter to Mr. Labouchere, dated the 18th July, 1857, which was laid before that Committee. For fear that that letter may have escaped your recollection, they think it essential at this moment to transmit a copy of it for your information; no change has taken place in the situation of the Company, nor in any circumstances connected with their affairs, to induce the Directors to change in any respect the course which they have announced to Her Majesty's Government it was their intention to pursue. Nor have they at any time, in any subsequent communication, departed, or intended in any respect to depart, from the principles on which they then intended, and still intend to act.

Hudson's Bay Company to Colonial Secretary, 8th February, 1859.

The Board were then as much aware as they are now of the unpopularity attaching to the existence of the monopoly. That consideration made it more essential that they should weigh with the greatest caution every step in their proceedings which might entail further personal responsibility upon them. No monopoly can be upheld on any ground short of a conviction of its necessity as the best if not the only means of accomplishing some exceptional object. The Board have therefore entreated that the Government might, in the first instance, decide the question of the maintenance or abolition of the monopoly, either for the present or for any future purposes for which it may be required. If better means can be devised of maintaining order and peace in the Indian country, and for the protection of the Indian Tribes from the evils which have hitherto been found inseparable from competition in the trade, as well as for the colonization and agricultural improvement of the Territory, the question of the abolition of the Hudson's Bay Company should only be one of just indemnity to the shareholders for their legal rights and interests.

If, on the other hand, it should be found impossible to devise better means for the Government of the country the hands of the Directors should be strengthened to enable them to fulfil the public purposes for which their services have been considered efficient and satisfactory for the last forty years; any diminution of the confidence and support they have hitherto received from the Government, or even any appearance of it, would weaken their power both with Indians and settlers in the country. The above course would not be inconsistent with any extension of colonization or settlement which either Her Majesty's Government or the Government of Canada can have in view in that part of Her Majesty's dominions now possessed or occupied by the Company, or with the accomplishment of all the objects recommended in the Report of the Committee of the House of Commons.

The Board lamented to see, and have hitherto abstained from adverting to some expressions in your letter of the 3rd November last, imputing to them unreasonable conduct in not accepting some terms of compromise which it is alleged had been offered to them.

In that letter it is stated, "that you entertain an anxious desire to come to some equitable and conciliatory arrangement by which all equitable claims of the Hudson's Bay Company should be fairly considered, in reference to the privileges they may be required to surrender."

Only two propositions have been made to the Board. The first is a letter from Mr. Merivale, under date the 20th January, 1858, by which it was proposed to refer the question of the Company's boundaries to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, but distinctly stating that Her Majesty's Government, on public grounds, did not consider themselves authorized to raise the question of the validity of the Charter itself, and that if any parties in Canada proposed to take measures for that purpose, Her Majesty's Government must leave them to take that course on their own responsibility. To that proposition the Board gave their unhesitating consent. The other proposition to this Company which was conveyed by your letter of the 3rd September, 1858, and subsequently by that of the 3rd November following, was to the effect, that this Company should voluntarily concur in some inquiry having for its object to raise the question of the validity of their Charter, and should give facilities for that purpose; thus altogether repudiating the proposition previously received from Her Majesty's Government, and seeking to do the very thing to which on public grounds the Government had previously declined to be a party. This latter proposition therefore the Directors could not, in justice to their constituents, for one moment entertain, and they confidently appeal to all their previous communications with Her Majesty's Government as justifying that refusal.

Both the present Directors and their predecessors in the management of the affairs of the Company, have been advised by lawyers of the first eminence and authority, that the grant of their land and Territories by the Crown was indisputable and unavoidable. As Trustees, they should feel as little justified in consenting to a reference of the proprietary rights of their shareholders as in gratuitously disposing of their property. The conviction of the Directors of the firm position on which they stand, has not been shaken by the opinions of the late Attorney and Solicitor-General, laid before the Committee.

The Board have heard of no "conciliatory arrangement by which the equitable claims of the Hudson's Bay Company may be fairly considered, in reference to the privileges they may be required to surrender." But the Hudson's Bay Company have invariably expressed their readiness to comply with the conditions on which the Committee of the House of Commons recommended the renewal of the license.

They are most willing to concede immediately, or gradually, as the same may be wanted, for the purposes of actual settlement, portions of their Territories on the Red River or Saskatchewan, which may be available for cultivation and settlement, on "equitable principles." They are ready to leave those principles to the decision of Commissioners to be indifferently appointed. They are willing, if it is considered desirable, to remain in temporary possession of those parts of the Territories until adequate arrangements shall be made for their settlement and administration by some other authority, and to concede, in the meantime, lands to settlers on such terms as may be recommended by Her Majesty's Secretary of State, and in any other way to assist Her Majesty's Government in such ulterior views as they may entertain, whether for the purpose of establishing those territories as an independent colony, or of placing them under the Government of Canada.

The Hudson's Bay Company have done what was in their power to promote settlement in such parts of their land as appeared to them most suitable for agricultural improvement. They have been careful at the same time not to involve the capital of the shareholders in hopeless speculations of this description. Their principal object has certainly been the fur trade of the country. They made a grant to Lord Selkirk, who established the agricultural settlement of the Red River, and made arrangements with the Puget Sound Company for same purpose on the territories beyond the Rocky Mountains.

When the disorders and troubles broke out in the Red River country, which led to the union of the North-West and Hudson's Bay Companies, and to the passing of the Act under which the license of trade was granted, it was thought better to put an end to separate interests, so that the administration both of colony and trade might be conducted under one authority. The Hudson's Bay Company then re-purchased the Red River Settlement, and have since endeavoured to encourage and protect settlers in it. But owing to the circumstances of the country, the inclemency of the climate, the remoteness of markets, and the difficulty of communication, they acknowledge that their efforts have been attended with but little success.

After the notice given to them in your letter of the 3rd November, of the intention wholly to withdraw the license, the Board had taken measures to adapt the administration of their affairs to the altered circumstances in which they would then be placed. They had decided to diminish their establishments in Canada, and to bring their expenditure within the strict limits required by their trade. Further arrangements of this description will become necessary, if the colony on the Red River is no longer to be dependent on their ships and means of conveyance for supplies.

If, however, the Secretary of State sees fit to reconsider his decision to withdraw the license, the Board will willingly endeavour to concur in any measures by which the hands of the Government may remain unfettered, with respect to any policy which changes in America might hereafter recommend, and the credit and authority of the Company might at the same time be maintained.

For fear of further misunderstanding on that point, they think it right to protect themselves, in a suggestion they would respectfully make to Her Majesty's Government, from any supposition that they still desired the renewal of the license for the purposes of their trade. It is certainly very essential that there should be no interval between the cessation of their authority and the substitution of some other to prevent or regulate, in as far as that may be possible, the interference of strangers with the Indian tribes, and the renewal of the disorders for the prevention of which the Act of 1 and 2 Geo. IV., 10 cap. 66, was passed. The suggestion they would submit to your consideration is, that the license might be renewed to the Hudson's Bay Company for the usual period of 21 years, with a reservation of power to the Crown to withdraw it at any time on a notice of two years. They make this suggestion to shew their disposition to assist the Government in the difficulties which they are fully aware beset this question. But the Board direct me to repeat, that they cannot undertake the responsibility of remaining charged with the care of order and peace in the Indian country, under the temporary grant of a license which would almost carry with it an acknowledgment of the doubts which have been thrown upon their rights, and convey an impression of the weakness and willing submission of the Board to the clamour by which their administration has unjustly been assailed.

SIR,—In the course of the interview which passed between Messieurs Cartier, Ross, and Galt, and myself, during the visit of those gentlemen to this country in October last, I understood from them that it was the intention of the Government of Canada to undertake legal proceedings in this country against the Hudson's Bay Company, if that Company should refuse to allow the validity of their Charter to be tested by agreement before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

It was in consequence of this understanding that I addressed to you my despatch of the 22nd December last, informing you of their refusal.

It was my hope that I should receive an answer to that despatch, expressing in definitive terms the resolution arrived at by the Canadian Government, before the meeting of the Imperial Parliament, and it now becomes necessary that I should press on you the importance of my receiving such an answer immediately, in order that Her Majesty's Government may determine on the course to be taken by themselves.

DOWNING STREET, 9th March, 1859.

SIR,—I am directed by Secretary Sir E. B. Lytton to acknowledge your letter of the 8th February last, conveying on the part of the Directors of the Hudson's Bay Company their refusal to entertain the proposal which he had caused to be submitted to them, that Her Majesty should be advised to renew their license of exclusive trade with the Indians for a year.

Your letter, however, goes also at considerable length into a general statement of the present position of the Hudson's Bay Company, and defence of its conduct; and it becomes necessary that Sir E. Lytton should enter upon that wider field of discussion, so far at least as may be required in order to justify the proceedings of Her Majesty's Government, before he replies to the more urgent part of your communication.

I am to state at the outset, that Sir E. B. Lytton has received from the Governor of Canada a despatch, copy of which is enclosed, informing him that the Local Government require to consult the Legislature before deciding whether they will or will not undertake legal proceedings against the Company.

Sir E. B. Lytton, in regretting this delay, trusts that it will not be much prolonged. It is obviously due to Canada, on a matter in which she is so much concerned, to grant a reasonable time for a definite answer from the Province; but as it is also desirable that the whole question regarding the Charter Territories should be settled in the course of the present session, it is Sir Edward's intention to inform the Governor-General of Canada, that if the answer does not arrive by the 1st of May, Her Majesty's Government must feel themselves free to act.

To return to the general subject of your letter.

The late Government, as your letter recites, were willing to test before the Judicial Committee, not the existence but the extent of the rights claimed under the Charter. To this proposal the Company assented. But Canada declined to take part in an enquiry so limited. Whatever the original advantages of such a scheme may have been, the refusal of Canada to take part in the proceedings absolutely nullified it. A decision as to the limits of the Charter waiving the question as to its general validity, could, after that refusal, have bound no one except the mere parties to the proceeding, and would have been practically useless.

That refusal was only conveyed to Sir E. B. Lytton by despatch from Canada of the 16th August last. I am to notice this only to shew that Her Majesty's Government are chargeable with no unnecessary delay, having, notwithstanding the great importance of the subject, allowed as little time as possible to elapse without taking steps in the transaction.

Her Majesty's Government had now to consider what effect they could give to the 13th Resolution of the Committee of the House of Commons, in which, after specifying the principal objects which they thought desirable, added—"How far the chartered rights claimed by the Company may prove an obstacle to their attainment, they are not able with any certainty to say. If this difficulty is to be solved by amicable adjustment, such a course will be best promoted by the Government, after communication with the Company, as well as with the Government of Canada, rather than by detailed suggestions emanating from this Committee."

With the best attention which they could give to this recommendation, Her Majesty's Government could not but see that the fairest and most direct method to accomplish it was to test, not the limit, but the validity of the Charter itself; and they were, and remain, of opinion that this was best done by the consent of the three parties concerned.

Sir E. B. Lytton is well aware of the proposals made by the Company in Captain Shepherd's letter of 18th July, 1837, which are referred to, and a little extended as regards Saskatchewan, in yours, which he is now answering. He must be permitted to say that those proposals, though conceived with the sincerest desire to avoid litigation, by no means met the exigencies of the case.

Those proposals simply were (for the present purpose) to relinquish to Government "land fit for cultivation and the establishment of agricultural settlers,"—land as yet unascertained, and in all probability, for the present, but trifling in extent.

Such an offer he could hardly have considered from the beginning sufficient, but it has become, from subsequent causes (using the phrase without the slightest imputation on the motives of those who made it), illusory. The occupation of British Columbia has rendered more urgent than ever a policy even before that time recommended by the course of events, namely, to connect the two sides of British North America, without the obstacle interposed by a proprietary jurisdiction between them. The difficulty of maintaining the jurisdiction of the Hudson's Bay Company over that intervening region became daily more evident, and the certainty also that if any attempt were made to maintain it, Her Majesty's Government would be called on to furnish the means. On the other hand, it appears to be the general opinion among lawyers, that the monopoly of trade claimed by the Company (under the Charter) is invalid altogether, and that this monopoly could only be defended directly, by pushing to extreme limits the consequence of a most invidious territorial grant, enabling the Company, as landlords, to exclude traders as trespassers. Sir E. B. Lytton cannot at all, therefore, agree with the Directors in referring the precarious position of the Company to the mere general unpopularity of monopolies. The weakness of their case arose, and still arises, from causes far more special and urgent, and it was obviously to be apprehended that Her Majesty's Government might, as protectors of the right of her subjects generally throughout the empire, be called on to defend the claimants of assumed rights, which had never been fairly submitted to investigation. It was quite impossible for them to be contented in the interest of the public with such offers as the Company had made, and to leave the general question unsettled; and to settle it without the consent of the Company was at least to be avoided, until that assent had been formally invoked.

Under-Secretary to Hudson's Bay Company, 9th March, 1859.

It was with this view that the letters addressed to you from this Department, on the 3rd September and 3rd November last, to which you refer, were written; and it was with the same view that Sir E. Lytton endeavoured, during the stay of the Canadian Ministers in England last autumn, to induce them to bring Canada to a decision as to her part in the proceedings to be taken.

And Sir E. Lytton feels it due to himself and his colleagues to disclaim most distinctly the supposition expressed or implied, that the proposal conveyed to the Company in those letters was conceived in any spirit of hostility. On the contrary, it is his conviction now, as it was when those letters were written, that the Directors would consult the interest of their shareholders most effectively by causing it to be accepted. In this way all outstanding questions could be solved. Sir E. B. Lytton felt that if the decision of the Judicial Committee was in favour of the Company, and to the full extent claimed, then the Company would stand in a more advantageous position before the country, in claiming compensation for ascertained rights, if required to relinquish them for the public benefit, than they possibly could at present. If, on the other hand, the decision of that Committee were unfavorable to the Company, they would at all events still possess that claim to equitable consideration to which long usage and the investment of extensive capital on the faith of supposed rights might fairly entitle them; and although Her Majesty's Government could not of course give any distinct pledge in this latter event, no one acquainted with the general desire of Parliament to do justice to vested interests would be likely to apprehend serious danger.

In short, as the main and perhaps the sole practical difficulty in coming to the most amicable arrangements with the Company appears to lie in ascertaining, not so much the amount of compensation as the principle and mode on which it can be assessed with the approval of Parliament, so that difficulty appeared at once to be surmounted by ascertaining without dispute the nature of the right upon which claims for compensation may be fairly based.

The directors, however, judged differently from Sir E. B. Lytton on this question. Sir Edward does not question their right to decide as they thought best for the interests of their shareholders. He can only express his regret at a determination which retains the very difficulty in the way of speedy and amicable settlement, which he had sought to remove.

As the case now stands, should Canada resort to legal proceedings, negotiation is of course at an end, until the result of such proceedings is known; should she refuse to do so, it will then be for Sir E. B. Lytton to consider whether negotiation with the Company can be resumed, or whether, in the last resort, Her Majesty's Government must take the matter into their own hands, and proceed on their own account as they may be advised. But in any case, he can with justice assure the Directors that his determination will be founded on a regard to public interests only, and without the slightest bias of hostility towards the Company.

It remains for me to convey Sir E. B. Lytton's reply to the immediately practical part of your letter, that referring to the renewal of your license over the non-Charter Territories. The Directors reject his offer of a year's license, but they are ready (in the public interest) to accept a renewal for 21 years, terminable at two years' notice.

Sir E. B. Lytton is sorry he cannot meet their views by acceding to this proposal, although he can well conceive, and would indeed desire, arrangements by which the Indian Territory, and all land not likely to be soon colonizable, might be left to the jurisdiction of the Company, provided, on the other hand, the lands adapted for colonization were surrendered to the Crown; yet, while the latter object remains unachieved, he does not believe that Parliament, or the public, would be inclined or ought to assent to a measure which would give Her Majesty's Government, in concert with the Company, the power of continuing the license for 21 years.

But he wishes to show every reasonable respect to the argument which you draw from the distance of many of the posts in the license territory, which, by rendering communication with them extremely slow, would make a year's extension of comparatively trifling importance for the purposes in view. The delay in obtaining the decision of Canada may also be fairly taken into consideration as opposing obstacles to arrangements with the Company by which the objection to an ultimate extension of the license might be removed. He is ready, therefore, to make the extension of two years' duration instead of one.

In making this proposal, he believes he is acting in the interest of the Company, even in a pecuniary sense alone; that, however, is a question for the directors and shareholders, and not for himself. He only refers to it in order to shew how far he is from being actuated by any motives inimical to the Company. But the really important aspect of the question (as the directors will fully agree with him) is that which regards the maintenance of peace and order, and the welfare of the Indian race; and while he believes that the dangers represented as likely to arise if the trade of the Company ceased to be protected by license are much exaggerated, yet he is desirous to guard against the possibility of such dangers during the interval that must elapse, necessarily without any fault of his own, between the abrupt termination of the Company's jurisdiction in parts so remote, and the establishment of any other machinery for the safety of the Indians which it might be in the power of the Government to devise. He is certain that the Directors will take a similar view of this part of the question, and he is satisfied that if they reject the present offer, they will do so on full conviction, from their own superior knowledge, that no evil consequences are to be apprehended from the sudden termination of their license. But should this be an error in judgment on their part, the responsibility for the consequences will not lie with Her Majesty's Government.

Sir Edward Lytton trusts that as early an answer as practicable may be returned to this letter, as little [time] is left for communicating with the Governor of British Columbia before the termination of the license, and as it may be necessary (in the event of your refusal) to apply to Parliament for an amendment of the present Acts.

DOWNING STREET,

10th March, 1859.

SIR,—With reference to former correspondence on the subject of the affairs of the Hudson's Bay Company, I now transmit to you a copy of a correspondence which has taken place between this Department and the Governor and Committee of that Company, on the subject of the approaching expiration of their trading license in North-Western America. You will observe that, as that license expires in May next, Her Majesty's Government could not avoid entertaining the question, although they would have preferred waiting for the decision of the Canadian Government as to trying the validity of the Charter, in order that the whole subject might be disposed of together. 10

With respect to this latter question, it is impossible for Her Majesty's Government to allow the present session of Parliament to pass by without endeavouring to use it for the settlement of pending questions. I have, therefore, to add, that unless I receive by the 1st of May next the decision of the Canadian Government and Legislature, whether they will or will not contest the validity of the Charter, Her Majesty's Government must proceed, though with reluctance, to take such steps as to the Charter Territory, whether in the way of negotiation, legislation, or legal proceedings, as they may be advised. Ample care will, however, in any case, [be taken] to reserve and protect whatever claims of right Canada may hereafter establish.

HUDSON'S BAY HOUSE,

March 15, 1859.

Hudson's Bay Company to Colonial-Secretary,
15th March,

SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge Mr. Under-Secretary Merivale's letter of the 5th instant and lose no time, after consulting with my colleagues, in replying to it. With respect to the chartered rights of this Company, I can only repeat that my colleagues and myself are unanimous in considering that we cannot, in justice to our proprietors, be consenting parties to any inquiry which shall have for its object to challenge the validity of the charter; and we feel convinced that in any discussion that may arise before Parliament, that body will be prepared to act upon the maturely considered opinion which was given by the then Law Officers of the Crown, when the whole matter was submitted to their consideration. I refer to the opinion of Sir Richard Bethell and Sir Henry Keating, in July, 1857, in which they state that "the questions of the validity and construction of the Hudson's Bay Company's charter cannot be considered apart from the enjoyment that has been had under it during nearly two centuries, and the recognition made of the rights of the Company in various Acts both of the Government and the Legislature;" and "that nothing could be more unjust or more opposed to the spirit of our law, than to try this charter as a thing of yesterday, upon principles which might be deemed applicable to it if it had been granted within the last ten or twenty years."

They then go on to state, that in their opinion the Crown could not now with justice raise the question of the general validity of the charter, but that on every legal principle the Company's territorial ownership of the lands granted and the rights necessarily incidental thereto (as, for example, the right of excluding from their territory persons acting in violation of their regulations), ought to be deemed to be valid.

* Seas. Papers, Canada, 1859, Vol. 17, No. 7.

The Board are aware that it is competent to the Canadian Government to disregard these principles, however just and well founded; but they cannot but lament to see, by a despatch, under date December 22, 1858, and published by the Provincial Legislature, that the Canadian Government should have been invited by Her Majesty's Government to adopt such a policy—a course so opposed to that which was enunciated by Mr. Labouche, in his despatch to Sir Edmund Head of the 22nd January, 1858, in which he distinctly states that he did not propose to discuss the question of validity of the claims of this Company over the whole territory known as Rupert's Land, Her Majesty's Government having come to the conclusion that it would be impossible for them to institute proceedings with a view to raise this question before a legal tribunal, without departing from those principles of equity by which their conduct ought to be guided. It is to be regretted that delay should arise on the part of the Canadian Government in determining the course which they have thus been invited to take. If such proceedings are ultimately determined upon for the purpose of contesting the validity of the charter, we shall be prepared to maintain the rights of our proprietors.

With regard to your suggestion that the license should be extended for a period of two years instead of for one year, as before proposed, I beg to state that all the material objections to such a proposal which were pointed out in my former letter (8th February, 1859), with respect to the proposed extension of one year, apply equally to an extension for two years. I beg, however, distinctly to state, that in declining to accept a renewal of the license for a period of two years, that refusal in no way proceeds, as you propose to assume, upon a conviction in our minds that injury to the public interest may not be the consequence of the absence of proper measures for maintaining peace and order in the territories in question; on the contrary, our reason for declining to undertake the preservation of peace upon an extension of the license for the period of two years, only arises from our conviction that such an extension would not secure to the Company a continuance of the weight and influence they have hitherto enjoyed, and to enable them to prevent the threatened mischief so short an extension would be considered as evidence of the intention of Her Majesty's Government to determine their privileges altogether at the end of that term, and would deprive them of all moral influence over the parties frequenting those territories.

Hudson's Bay
Company to Colonial Secretary,
15 March,

We consider that the proposed extension would only give so much more time for excitement and agitation, and would produce a state of things among the unsettled population on the frontier which might with difficulty be controlled by any subsequent administration to be established on the removal of the authority of the Company.

In the opinion of the Board, there is no alternative between maintaining the present system in its former efficiency, or providing by legislation a totally different Government, which should possess the means of ensuring a proper administration in the Indian territories.

Should the latter alternative be decided upon, our Board will lend their most zealous assistance towards promoting any measures which may be adopted for the purpose.

You cannot fail to observe that this circumstance renders the disposal of the pending questions relative to the charter of even more urgent necessity than it was before. The question as to the future management of the license territories and of the charter territories being so closely connected, it becomes even more essential that I should have the immediate answer of your Government, whether it is their intention or not to try the validity of the charter by scire facias, and if such is their intention, whether they will at once either send a delegate, or in any other manner initiate the necessary proceedings.

SIR,—I regret very much that I have not been able before this to send any definite reply to your despatches (the dates and numbers of which are marked on the margin), relating to the charter of the Hudson's Bay Company. The first of these despatches was laid before my Council on the 11th January, and I have 20 repeatedly pressed the members of that body for their formal opinion on this important matter. They have frequently discussed the subject, and I fully admit that it is one which requires careful consideration.

I am now, for the first time, able to inform you, that the Executive Council will not advise steps to be taken for testing the validity of the charter by scire facias, but they are strongly of opinion that it is most desirable on all accounts that the boundaries of Canada should be accurately and speedily defined.

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Council and Assembly of Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty for the purpose of repre- 40
senting:—

That having had under consideration the subject of the Hudson's Bay Company, and, in connection therewith, the various despatches from the Colonial Secretary, dated respectively the twenty-second day of December last, the eleventh of February last, the tenth of March last, and the eighteenth of † Journals Legislative Assembly, Canada, 1859, p. 454.

March last, and the Address to Your Majesty by the Legislature of Canada in its last Session, we adhere to the propositions contained in that Address, and desire respectfully to urge them upon the consideration of Your Majesty's Government.

That, in our opinion, Canada ought not to be called upon to litigate the question of the validity of the Charter claimed by the Company, inasmuch as such portion of Territory as the Charter covers is not part of Canada, and is, if the Charter be invalid, subject to Imperial and not Provincial control; and that, in our opinion, the question of the future of that Territory should not be made to depend on the mere legal view which may be taken by a Court of Law on the validity or extent of the Charter, but that there are considerations involved higher than those of strict legal rights, and which can be dealt with by the Imperial Government alone.

That the formation of a British Province on the shores of the Pacific, and the prospect of immediate and extensive settlement therein, render it of imperative necessity that the vast extent of country lying between that Province and Canada, should come under immediate organization, with a view to colonization.

That while the important objects above alluded to can only be accomplished by the interference and action of the Imperial Government, yet Canada feels that, as a portion of the Empire in whose rule she rejoices, and from the almost direct interest she has in the future of the vast territory contiguous to her on the West, she is justified in urging upon Your Majesty's Government the final disposition of these great questions; and in doing so, she desires to acknowledge the great interest therein which Your Majesty's Government have already evinced, and the prompt and energetic action which they have taken in the matter.

All of which we humbly pray Your Majesty to take into Your Majesty's most gracious and favourable consideration.

MY LORD DUKE,—I have the honour to enclose to your Grace a Minute of the Executive Council, approved by myself, in reference to the propriety of taking some steps towards carrying into effect, in the Saskatchewan territory, the provisions of the Act of the Imperial Parliament, 22 and 23 Victoria, Chapter 26.

The Minute states so fully the reasons for present action in this matter in which I fully concur, that I do not think it necessary to trouble your Grace with any observations of my own on the subject.

MY LORD,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch, No. 44, of the 8th March, forwarding a Minute of a Committee of the Executive Council of Canada, in reference to the propriety of taking some steps towards carrying into effect, in the Saskatchewan territory, the provisions of the Imperial Act, 22 and 23 Viet., Cap. 26.

This Minute proceeds on an assumption that a certain Act of Parliament was passed in order to organize the Saskatchewan country. But I have to explain that this was not the effect of the Act referred to. It contained an enactment, in the concluding section, that it should not be applicable to territories heretofore granted to the Hudson's Bay Company. Those territories not having fallen under the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Government, the Act in question does not in any degree facilitate the acquisition or government of the territory claimed by the Company under this grant, nor until the claim of the Company is shown to be groundless will Her Majesty's Government be in a position to take any step in that direction.

PROVINCIAL SECRETARY'S OFFICE,

QUEBEC, 15th April, 1862.

Provincial-Secretary
(Canada), to Hudson's
Bay Company's Governor of Rupert's
Land, 15th
April, 1862.

SIR,—The Government of Canada have had their attention very strongly directed to the important subject of an overland communication with British Columbia through the Hudson's Bay Territory, via the Red River, and I am now commanded by His Excellency the Governor-General to inform you of the steps proposed towards effecting this object, and to seek the co-operation of the Hudson's Bay Company therein.

The Canadian Government do not wish at present to raise any question as to the rights of the Company, who must be regarded as de facto in possession of the country intervening between Canada and British Columbia. They consider that most important public interests demand the establishment of a practicable line of communication across the continent, and they desire to have the practical aid of your Company in carrying it into effect.

Arrangements were made within the last four years for postal service with Red River, but the want of territorial rights at Red River and along the greater part of the route defeated the plans of the Canadian Government, and, after a very considerable outlay, the line had to be abandoned. Another effort is now being made in the same direction, and, as the Hudson's Bay Company claims the right of territory and government over this region, it is hoped they will also assume their correlative duties, and unite with Canada in opening up the country.

The Canadian Government are about to establish steam communication with Fort William, on Lake Superior, immediately. A large tract of land at this point has been surveyed, and a Crown Land Agent has recently been appointed to reside there. Appropriations have been made by the Legislature for roads towards Red River, on which free grants will be made to settlers, and every effort will be made to attract settlement—the ultimate object being the connection with the Red River and Saskatchewan. Canada is, therefore, now prepared to guarantee that, so far as her undisputed boundary extends, every facility will henceforward exist towards a communication with the west.

* Scss. Papers, Can., 1863, V. l. 22, No. 31.† Ibid., No. 29.

The Canadian Government cannot doubt that the Hudson's Bay Company are fully alive to the vast importance of such a communication.

The recent gold discoveries on the Saskatchewan cannot fail to attract many adventurers, who must at present be principally drawn from the United States.

The Settlement of Red River itself has now its sole communication with Minnesota, and will naturally imbibe American principles and views, unless brought in connection with the British settlements east and west. Canada must look with some apprehension to the probable result that, in a very few years, the population lying to her west will be wholly foreign, and that (unless facilities for settlement be afforded from Canada equal to those enjoyed from the United States, and unless efficient civil government be speedily established) British rule over this part of the continent will virtually have passed away, and the key of the trade to British Columbia, and ultimately China, have been surrendered to our rivals. The Hudson's Bay Company cannot desire a result that would equally militate against their own interests; and the Canadian Government, therefore, hopes for their hearty co-operation in the opening of the Red River and Saskatchewan Territories by a communication from Canada to British Columbia.

The Government of Canada considers that, in connection with the means of transport across the continent, a telegraphic communication should be established as especially necessary for Imperial interests, inasmuch as both the United States and Russia possess telegraphic lines to the Pacific, while Great Britain has no other mode of doing so but through the Hudson's Bay Territory. Recent events have proved the paramount importance of such a line.

Leaving untouched, therefore, all disputed questions, I am commanded by His Excellency the Governor-General, to state that the Canadian Government have decided at once to establish steam and stage communication to the extreme limit of the territory under their government, and are ready to unite with the Hudson's Bay Company in a mail service and post route to British Columbia.

The Canadian Government is also prepared to guarantee the construction of a telegraph line to the extreme western limits of the Province.

I request that you will inform me how far you will be prepared to act for the Hudson's Bay Company in carrying out objects of such great national importance, and which cannot be long delayed without the most serious injury to the interests of the Empire, and especially to the future progress and security of Canada.

Governor in Chief of Rupert's Land, Montreal.

C. ALLEYN.

THE GOVERNOR OF RUPERT'S LAND TO THE PROVINCIAL SECRETARY (CANADA).*

MONTREAL,

16th April, 1862.

SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of the important communication which you have addressed to me by command of His Excellency the Governor-General, under date of the 15th instant, wherein you intimate the desire of the Government of Canada to establish an overland communication with British Columbia through the Hudson's Bay Territory, as well as the steps proposed towards effecting that object; and further request the co-operation of the Hudson's Bay Company therein.

After stating that the Government of Canada, regarding the Company as de facto in possession of the intervening territories, does not wish to raise any question as to its rights, you proceed to point out the great public interests which are involved by the formation of a chain of settlements, connecting Canada with British Columbia, by postal and telegraphic services, the paramount importance of which is proved by recent events. You also point out the danger of the Red River Settlement, from its close connection with Minnesota, consequent on its isolated position with regard to Canada, becoming imbued with American principles and views, and passing away from us to our rivals, thus depriving the country of the key of the trade to British Columbia, and ultimately to China.

Canadian Documents, and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company, prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

Hudson's Bay Company's Governor Rupert's Land to Provincial Secretary, 16 April, 1862.

While fully admitting the force of the above arguments, and the immediate necessity of some arrangements being come to, I am reluctantly compelled to admit my inability to meet the Government of Canada in this forward movement, for the following reasons:—

First.—The Red River and Saskatchewan valleys, though not in themselves fur-bearing districts, are the sources from whence the main supplies of winter food are procured for the northern posts, from the produce of the buffalo hunts. A chain of settlements through these valleys would not only deprive the Company of the above vital resource, but would indirectly in many other ways so interfere with the northern trade as to render it no longer worth prosecuting on an extended scale. It would necessarily be divided into various channels, possibly to the public benefit, but the Company could no longer exist on its present footing.

The above reasons against a partial surrender of our territories may not appear sufficiently obvious to parties not conversant with the trade or the country; but my knowledge of both, based on personal experience, and from other sources open to me, point to the conclusion that partial concessions of the districts which must necessarily be alienated, would inevitably lead to the extinction of the Company

Second.—Granting that the Company were willing to sacrifice its trading interests, the very act would deprive it of the means to carry out the proposed measures. There is no source of revenue to meet the most ordinary expenditure, and even under present circumstances the Company has practically no power to raise one. The co-operation proposed, in calling on the Company to perform its co-relative duties, presupposed it to stand on an equal footing with Canada.

It is not to be supposed that the Crown would grant more extensive powers to the Company than those conveyed by the Charter. If any change be made, it is presumed that direct administration by the Crown would be resorted to as the only measure likely to give public satisfaction.

Not having anticipated the present question, I am without instructions from the Board of Directors in London for my guidance. I believe I am, however, safe in stating my convictions that the Company will be willing to meet the wishes of the country at large by consenting to an equitable arrangement for the surrender of all the rights conveyed by the Charter.

I shall by the next mail forward copies of this correspondence to the Board of Directors in London, who will thus be prepared in the event of the subject being referred to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies.

I may state that it is my intention to make immediate arrangements at the existing settlement of 30 Red River for the sale of land, on easy terms, free from any restrictions of trade. It would, I believe be impolitic to make any distinction between British subjects and foreigners. The infusion of a British element must be left to the effects of a closer connection and identity of interests with Canada and the mother country.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your most obedient servant,

A. G. DALLAS.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

QUEBEC, April 25th, 1862.

MY LORD DUKE,—I have the honour to forward to your Grace a Minute of the Executive Council, approved by me, on the subject of the establishment of a postal communication through the Hudson's Bay Territory, between Canada and British Columbia, containing a letter from the Provincial Secretary to the Manager of the Hudson's Bay Company, and that gentleman's reply.

Governor-General to Colonial Secretary, 25 April, 1862.

* Ses. Papers, Canada, 1863, Vol. 22.

The subject is one of considerable importance, both in an Imperial point of view and as regards the particular interests of this Province; but the letter of Mr. Alleyn enters so fully into the merits of the question on both grounds, that I do not think it necessary to trouble your Grace with any observations of my own.

The answer of Mr. Dallas would seem to imply that the existence of the present rights of the Hudson's Bay Company will prove a permanent obstacle to the realization of the views which the Canadian Government entertain in reference to the proposed communication.

As the Government of the Province have no means of acting upon the Hudson's Bay Company except through Her Majesty's ministers, I would, on its behalf, ask of your Grace to take such steps as may enable the authorities here to carry into execution their desire for an extension of postal communication between this Province and the shores of the Pacific.

HUDSON'S BAY HOUSE,

LONDON, May 19th, 1862.

MY LORD DUKE,—I have the honour to enclose, for your Grace's information, copy of a correspondence that has passed between Mr. Charles Alleyn, Secretary to the Government of Canada, and Mr. Dallas, who has lately succeeded Sir George Simpson in the Government of the Hudson's Bay Territory, in North America, on the subject of a proposed road and line of telegraphic communication between Canada and the gold regions of British Columbia.

Hudson's Bay Company to Colonial Secretary, 19th May, 1862.

I take the liberty of forwarding this correspondence to your Grace, because my colleagues agree with me that any negotiation on the subject should be carried on, not with the Colonial authorities, but with Her Majesty's Government in this country.

The Canadian Government propose, in the first instance, to establish steam communication on Lake Superior, and to open up roads from Fort William in the direction of Red River, and they appear to consider that it is the duty of the Hudson's Bay Company to undertake the further prosecution of the work through their territories. Of course there is no difficulty as far as steamers on Lake Superior are concerned, but between Fort William and the height of land the natural difficulties of the country will make road-making a very expensive business, while the soil, which consists chiefly of rock and swamp, will offer no inducement to settlers, even if they obtain the land for nothing.

Within the last few years a considerable sum of money has been granted and expended by the Canadian Government for the purpose of opening this route, but I am not aware that there has been any practical result.

Beyond Red River to the base of the Rocky Mountains the line will pass through a vast desert, in some places without wood or water, exposed to the incursions of roving bands of Indians, and entirely destitute of any means of subsistence for emigrants, save herds of buffalo, which roam at large through the plains, and whose presence on any particular portion of these prairies can never be reckoned on. These again are followed up by Indians in pursuit of food, whose hostility will expose travellers to the greatest danger.

With regard to the establishment of a telegraphic communication, it is scarcely necessary to point out at the prairie fires, the depredation of natives and the general chapter of accidents, as presenting almost unsurmountable obstacles to its success.

19 May, 1862.

I have thought it my duty thus slightly to sketch the difficulties in the way of the enterprise, the subject of the correspondence which I have brought under your Grace's notice; but if it be thought that the interests of Canada and British Columbia, or of this country, require that the experiment should be made, the Hudson's Bay Company will most readily acquiesce in the decision of Her Majesty's Government. At the same time it is my duty to state that, in justice to our proprietors, the Directors of the Hudson's Bay Company cannot risk their capital in doubtful undertakings of this description, spread over such vast distances, through a country where the means of maintaining them, if once made, will lead to an expenditure scarcely to be contemplated. Although, therefore, the Directors, on behalf of the Company, are ready to lend Her Majesty's Government all the moral support and assistance in their power, it must be distinctly understood that the Company have no means at their disposal beyond those employed in carrying on their trade, and cannot consequently undertake any outlay in connection with the schemes suggested by the Canadian Government.

I think it may not be improper to take this opportunity of referring your Grace to former communications between the Hudson's Bay Company and the Colonial Office on the subject of settlement in their territories.

The Company have always expressed their willingness to surrender the whole or any part of their territorial rights upon terms that would secure fair compensation to the proprietors, as well as to the officers and employes in the country.

The Governor at Red River Colony has instructions to make grants of land to settlers, on easy conditions, without any restrictions as to the Company's right of exclusive trade, and if Her Majesty's Government, with reference to the interests of the public, consider more extensive plans for the improvement of the country expedient, the Directors of the Company will be quite ready to entertain them, with the desire to meet the wishes of Her Majesty's Government in any manner not inconsistent with the vested rights of their constituents.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL (CANADA), APPROVED BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL ON THE 18TH FEBRUARY, 1864.*

30

Order-in-Council,
(Canada) 18th
February,
1864.

The Committee of the Executive Council have had under consideration a despatch, No. 49, from His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, dated 1st May, 1863, with enclosures, on the subject of a proposal of the "Atlantic and Pacific Transit and Telegraph Company," to establish telegraphic and postal communication from Lake Superior to New Westminster, in British Columbia.

The Committee have not been able to persuade themselves that the people of Canada would be likely to receive benefits corresponding to the cost of constructing a line of telegraph from the seat of government to the head of Lake Superior, and guaranteeing half the interest of the cost of constructing a line from that point to the Pacific Coast, unless at the same time the fertile valleys and plains of the Great North-West are made accessible to Canadian settlers, and to European emigrants, who are in quest of cheap lands under the protection of the British flag and a free Constitutional Government.

A "telegraph line" will not accomplish these objects, though it may serve an important purpose and lead ultimately to their attainment. But unless "The Atlantic and Pacific Transit and Telegraph Company" are prepared to undertake the construction of a road pari passu with the telegraph line, the Committee cannot, in the present condition of the Canadian exchequer, and with the important questions of boundary, territorial jurisdiction and form of government in the vast territory proposed to be opened, still unsettled, recommend acceptance of the heads of proposal as submitted by them, and conditionally approved by His Grace.

*Sess. Papers, Canada, 1864, Vol. 23, No. 62.

The Committee are of opinion that in view of the recent change in the constitution and objects of the Hudson's Bay Company, which, from the correspondence laid before the House of Lords, appears to have been effected, and the claims which the new organization have reiterated with the apparent sanction of His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, to territorial rights over a vast region not included in their original Charter, it is highly expedient that steps be taken to settle definitely the North-Western boundary of Canada.

The Committee therefore recommend that correspondence be opened with the Imperial Government with a view to the adoption of some speedy, inexpensive and mutually satisfactory plan to determine this important question, and that the claim of Canada be asserted to all that portion of Central British America which can be shown to have been in the possession of the French at the period of the cession, in 1763.

Certified.

WM. H. LEE, C.E.C.

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.*

DOWNING STREET,

1st July, 1864.

MY LORD,—I have had under my consideration your Lordship's despatch, No. 18, of the 19th of February, enclosing to the Duke of Newcastle the Minute of your late Executive Council on the subject of the pending negotiation between Her Majesty's Government and the Hudson's Bay Company, for the cession of the rights of that Company in the Hudson's Bay Territory to the Crown.

In that Minute the Executive Council say they "are of opinion that, in view of the recent change in the constitution and objects of the Hudson's Bay Company, which, from the correspondence laid before the House of Lords, appears to have been effected, and the claims which the new organization have reiterated, with the apparent sanction of His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, to territorial rights over a vast region not included in their original Charter, it is highly expedient that steps be taken to settle definitely the North-Western boundary of Canada.

If the proposed cession shall take place, it will be necessary to make provision for the future government of the Red River Settlement, and prospectively of such parts of the Territory as may from time to time become the seats of settled occupation and industry.

The Committee of the House of Commons, which in the year 1857 considered the state of the British possessions in North America which are under the administration of the Hudson's Bay Company, expressed themselves in the following terms:—"Your Committee consider that it is essential to meet the just and reasonable wishes of Canada, to be enabled to annex to her territory such portion of the land in her neighbourhood as may be available to her for the purposes of settlement, with which lands she is willing to open and maintain communication, and for which she will provide the means of local administration. Your Committee apprehend that the districts on the Red River and the Saskatchewan are among those likely to be desired for early occupation. It is of great importance that the peace and good order of those districts should be effectually secured.

"Your Committee trust that there will be no difficulty in effecting arrangements, as between Her Majesty's Government and the Hudson's Bay Company, by which these districts may be ceded to Canada on equitable principles; and within the districts thus annexed to her, the authority of the Hudson's Bay Company would, of course, entirely cease."

Before taking any further steps in the negotiations with the Company, I am desirous of being informed whether your advisers are prepared to assist in these negotiations, with a view of accepting the government of any portion of the territory, and undertaking the duties contemplated by the Committee, in case sufficiently favourable terms can be obtained. If they are prepared to do so, it will be desirable that they should send over to this country some person duly authorized to communicate with me upon the subject, in order that the negotiations may be proceeded with during the recess, and the necessary measures prepared for obtaining the sanction of the Imperial Parliament and of the Legislature of Canada. 10

11TH NOVEMBER, 1864.*

Order-in-Council,
Canada, 11th
Nov., 1864.

The Committee of Council have had under their consideration the despatch of the Right Honourable Edward Cardwell, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, of 1st July, 1864, in reply to your Excellency's despatch of 19th February, 1864, transmitting Minute of Council on the subject of the pending negotiations between Her Majesty's Government and the Hudson's Bay Company, for the cession to the Crown of the rights of that Company in the North-Western Territories,

In the Minute of Council transmitted by your Excellency, the Government of Canada recommended that "correspondence be opened with the Imperial Government, with a view to the adoption of some speedy, inexpensive, and mutually satisfactory plan" to "settle definitely the north-western boundary of Canada," and that "the claim of Canada be asserted to all that portion of Central British America which can be shown to have been in the possession of the French at the period of the cession in 1763."

Mr. Cardwell, in acknowledging this Minute, remarks, that "if the proposed cession shall take place, it will be necessary to make provision for the future government of the Red River Settlement and prospectively of such parts of the territory as may from time to time become the seats of settled occupation and industry." He quotes from the Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons of 1857, in which it is said:—"Your Committee consider that it is essential to meet the just and reasonable wishes of Canada, to be enabled to annex to her territory such portion of the land in her neighbourhood as may be available to her for the purpose of settlement, with which lands she is willing to open and maintain communications, and for which she will provide the means of local administration."

"Your Committee apprehend that the districts on the Red River and the Saskatchewan are among those likely to be desired for early occupation. It is of great importance that the peace and good order of those districts should be effectually secured. Your Committee trust that there will be no difficulty in effecting arrangements as between Her Majesty's Government and the Hudson's Bay Company, by which those districts may be ceded to Canada on equitable principles, and within the districts thus annexed to her the authority of the Hudson's Bay Company would, of course, entirely cease."

And Mr. Cardwell concludes by asking, whether the Government of Canada are prepared to assist in those negotiations with the view of accepting the government of any portion of the territory, and undertaking the duties contemplated by the Committee, in case sufficiently favourable terms can be obtained; and he suggests that if prepared so to do, it would be desirable that some person duly authorized to communicate the views of the Canadian Government, should be sent to England for that purpose.

The Committee of Council recommend that Mr. Cardwell be informed that the government of Canada is more than ever impressed with the importance of opening up to settlement and cultivation the lands lying between Lake Superior and the Rocky Mountains. The great extent of these lands and their adaptability for settlement are now established beyond a doubt; and it is not to be contemplated that a region so fertile, and capable of sustaining so vast a population, should longer be closed to civilization for the benefit of a trading company, however long established and respectable that company may be. The rapid progress of British Columbia adds to the expediency of opening, without delay, an overland route to the Pacific, and gives feasibility to the hope, long cherished by many, that the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, ere many years elapse, may be connected by one direct line of railway through British territory, from Halifax to British Columbia. The close relations springing up between the Red River settlers and the Americans of Pembina and St. Paul, and the removal of many Americans into the territory, render it doubly expedient that a settled government, under the British Crown, should be established in the country at an early date. The effort now being made, with every prospect of success, by the Governments of Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, for the union of all these Provinces under one Government, presents another strong reason for settling now the future position of the North-West country, more especially as the parties to the proposed British American Federation have unanimously agreed that the people of the North-West Territory, and of British Columbia and Vancouver, may, at any time, join the Federation on equitable terms, and the whole British America thus become united in one system of government under the protecting rule of Great Britain.

The Government of Canada, is ready and anxious to co-operate with the Imperial Government in securing the early settlement of the Territory and the establishment of local government in its settled portions. The Government looks forward with interest to the day when the valley of the Saskatchewan will become the back country of Canada, and the land of hope for the hardy youth of the Province when they seek new homes in the forest; and it anticipates with confidence the day when Canada will become the highway of immigration from Europe into those fertile valleys. To attain these ends the Government is prepared to render all the aid in its power towards opening up the country.

The Committee of Council are, however, clearly of the opinion that the first step towards the settlement of the territory is the extinction of all claim by the Hudson's Bay Company to proprietary rights in the soil or exclusive right of trade. The Committee do not deem it necessary now to raise the question of the validity or invalidity of the Company's charter. Were all the pretensions of the Company as to their title fully admitted for the sake of argument, the necessity of its speedy extinction would still remain. It is not to be entertained for a moment, that half a continent should continue to be shut off from the world on the strength of a parchment title, however good.

The Committee are, however, conscious that it is for the Imperial Government, and not for the Government of Canada, to assume the duty of bringing to an end a monopoly originating in an English charter, and exercised so long under Imperial sanction; and while acknowledging with thanks the courtesy of Mr. Cardwell, in inviting the Government of Canada to assist in negotiations with the Hudson's Bay Company for the cession to the Crown of their claims, the Committee are of the opinion that the negotiations will be advantageously left in the hands of the Imperial Government. When the negotiations have been brought to a close the Government of Canada will be ready to arrange with the Imperial Government for the annexation to Canada of such portion of the land in her neighbourhood as may be available for settlement, as well as for the opening up of communications into the territory and providing means of local administration; or should the Imperial Government prefer to erect the territory into a Crown colony, the Government of Canada will gladly co-operate in the opening up of communication into the territory and the settlement of the country.

The Committee express the hope that until the Government of Canada has been communicated with, no cession of large sections of land will be made by the Imperial Government for any purpose, or any right of way granted through the territory. The history of the American continent is replete with examples of the great evils resulting from the locking up of extensive tracts of land in the hands of wealthy corporations, whose whole object is the realization of large profits. The existence of such an evil in these North-Western regions would seriously embarrass the efforts of any Government for the early and satisfactory settlement of the country.

Canadian Documents, and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company, prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

Order-in-Council, Canada, 11th November, 1864.

In suggesting that the negotiations with the Hudson's Bay Company should remain in the hands of the Imperial Government, the Committee are anxious that Mr. Cardwell should not interpret this as arising from any diminution of interest on the part of Canada in the just and speedy settlement of this great question; on the contrary, the public interest in the question, and the desire for the early occupation of the country, have of late much increased, and the best proof of this is furnished in the desire unanimously expressed by the recent Conference of the Atlantic Provinces, for a political union with the great Western Territories. The Government will observe the progress of the negotiations with profound interest, and will most gladly communicate with Mr. Cardwell on any point which he may deem proper to submit to it. The Honourable the President of the Executive Council of Canada, [Mr. Brown] sails for England on the 16th instant; he has given much attention to the Hudson's Bay question, and will be able to communicate more fully to Mr. Cardwell the views of the Government on the subject, of which he is fully possessed.

REPORT OF THE HONOURABLE GEORGE BROWN, PRESIDENT OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OF CANADA.*

QUEBEC, 26th January, 1865.

To His Excellency the Governor-General of Canada in Council.

Report of the Canadian Delegate to England, 26th January, 1865.

MY LORD,—I have the honour to report that while recently in England, in compliance with your Excellency's instructions, I placed myself in communication with Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, on the subject of opening up to settlement the North-Western Territories.

In Your Excellency's despatch of 19th January, 1864, to the Colonial Secretary, the anxious desire of the Canadian Government was communicated "for some speedy, inexpensive, and mutually satisfactory plan for settling definitely the North-Western boundary of Canada," and the claim of Canada was asserted to "all that portion of Central British America which can be shown to have been in the possession of the French at the period of the cession in 1763."

In reply to this despatch, Mr. Cardwell, on 1st July, 1864, requested to be informed whether the Government of Canada was prepared to assist in negotiations with the Hudson's Bay Company, with the view of accepting any portion of the territory now claimed by that Company, and providing the means of local administration therein; and he suggested that if so prepared it would be desirable that some person duly authorized to communicate the views of the Canadian Government should be sent to England for that purpose.

On the 11th November, 1864, a Minute of Council was approved by Your Excellency, in reply to Mr. Cardwell's despatch. It set forth that the Government of Canada was ready and anxious to co-operate with the Imperial Government in securing the early settlement of the North-West Territories, and the establishment of local government in its settled portions; but that in its opinion the first step towards that end was the extinction of all claim by the Hudson's Bay Company to proprietary rights in the soil or exclusive rights of trade. It suggested that it was for the Imperial Government, and not for the Government of Canada, to assume the duty of bringing to an end a monopoly originating in an English charter, and exercised so long under Imperial sanction; but that when the negotiations were brought to a close, the Government of Canada would be ready to arrange with the Imperial Government for the annexation to Canada of such portions of the territory as might be available for settlement, as well as for the opening up of communications into the territory and providing means of local administration; or should the Imperial Government prefer to erect the territory into a Crown colony, the Canadian Government would gladly co-operate in the opening up of communication into the territory, and the settlement of the country. The Minute finally suggested that the undersigned, while in England, would communicate more fully to Mr. Cardwell the views of the Canadian Government.

While in London I had the honour of several interviews with Mr. Cardwell, at which the whole question was fully discussed; and I gratefully acknowledge the courtesy and attention extended to me by that gentleman.

* Journals, Leg. Assembly, Canada, 1865, Vol. 25, p. 45.

I found that negotiations for the cession to the Crown of the territorial claims of the Hudson's Bay Company had been proceeding for a year past between the Colonial Minister and the Company; and it may not be without advantage that I should state here briefly the point to which these negotiations had been brought:—

I. In July, 1863, the whole interests of the Hudson's Bay Company were transferred to Mr. Edward W. Watkin and certain gentlemen acting with him; and Sir Edmund Head was elected Governor of the Company. The capital stock of the old Company was £500,000 sterling, but at the time of the sale and for some time previous each £100 share was worth £200 on the London Stock Exchange. The market value of the Company's interests was therefore £1,000,000 sterling. The new Company agreed to pay £1,500,000, and did pay that sum, for the transference to them of all the interests of the old Company.

II. On the 28th of August, 1863, Sir Edmund Head, as Governor of the new Hudson's Bay Company, communicated to His Grace the Duke of Newcastle a resolution expressive of the conviction that the time had arrived for introducing into the North-West Territories the direct authority of the Crown.

III. On the 9th of October, 1863, Sir Frederick Rogers, by instruction of the Duke of Newcastle, informed the Company that His Grace was ready to consider proposals submitted to him by the Hudson's Bay Company with reference to the introduction of the direct authority of Her Majesty's Government in Rupert's Land.

IV. On 11th November, 1863, Sir Edmund Head acknowledged the receipt of Sir Frederick Rogers' communication, and proceeded to explain the views of the Company in the following terms:—

"With regard to the extent of the proposed colony, of which the seat of government would be Red River (or Fort Garry), the Committee presume that His Grace would wish it to include the whole country from the frontier of the United States to the north branch of the Saskatchewan, and to extend eastward towards Lake Superior, as far as the frontier of Canada, wherever the precise line of that frontier may be found. Perhaps the most convenient limit for the northern boundary would be either the Saskatchewan itself, or a line running from the Rocky Mountains eastward through Edmonton House and Fort Cumberland, and, from the latter, following the Saskatchewan down to Lake Winnipeg. Nothing would be gained by going further to the northward, nor by including the eastern side of Lake Winnipeg; but from the mouth of the Winnipeg River, where it enters the lake, the line of demarcation might be run eastward until it cut the Canadian frontier somewhere north of Lake Superior or Lake Huron."

After hinting at the purchase by Government of the whole territorial claims of the Company for a sum of money, payable down or by instalments—but which he admits is probably an impracticable solution—Sir Edmund Head goes on to propose, as the condition of the Company's consent to the erection of a Crown colony, that "the Company should retain the ownership in fee simple of one half of the lands in the colony, and the other half should be conveyed by the Company to the Crown." And this compromise he explains the Company suggests, only subject to the following stipulations:—

"1st. The Hudson's Bay Company should have the sole right to erect, and should bind themselves to complete within five years, an electric telegraph to connect British Columbia and Canada. The line for this telegraph should be approved by the Secretary of State, and it should be maintained by the Company, who would, of course, engage to convey the messages of the Imperial and Colonial Governments at a fixed and moderate rate.

"It would be necessary as a condition precedent to the erection of the telegraph,—

"(a) That the Government of British Columbia and Canada should pledge their faith respectively to the Secretary of State to pay the yearly sum set forth in the enclosures to the despatch of July 31, 1862, with all the advantages as to lands to be granted by Her Majesty's Government, and other terms therein specified.

"(b) That a road should be laid out along the line of telegraph, but the soil on which the telegraph stands, and the space, say one mile in width, on one side of its course, should belong to the Hudson's Bay Company, to be reckoned as part of the half of the land which they would retain. The other side of the road might be included in the half belonging to the Crown.

"(c) That the Company in constructing the telegraph should be entitled to use wood or other materials taken from ungranted land.

"2nd. The Crown shall resume the grant of mines, and diggings of gold and silver throughout the colony, on condition of paying to the Hudson's Bay Company one-third of the receipts of all dues, royalties, rents, etc., from such mines or diggings, whether raised by way of export duty or otherwise, but the Company should not be liable for expenses of collection or escort.

"3rd. The buildings required for military or Government purposes at Fort Garry or Red River should be valued and purchased of the Company.

"4th. The Company should retain as a portion of their half of the lands, all lots already laid out and surveyed, as well as five thousand acres round each of their forts as posts."

V. On 11th March, 1864, Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, by direction of the Duke of Newcastle, rejected the proposal of the Company. In the course of his communication the following passages occur:—

"In an unsettled colony, there is no effectual mode of taxation for purposes of government and improvement, and the whole progress of the colony depends on the liberal and prudent disposal of its land. These considerations afford decisive reasons against leaving that land in the possession of a corporation. And I am to observe that these objections, conclusive in any case, are greatly enhanced in the case of the Hudson's Bay Company, as I learn from your letter that it has been the 'unvarying opinion' of the Committee on whose behalf you speak that the Company would 'lose fully as much as they would gain by the increase of settlement in the chartered territory.' It is therefore (to say the least) a question whether the Company would not be under a direct inducement to use their proprietary rights to thwart the colonizing efforts of the Government. The conclusive objection to the scheme is that it would reproduce in a gigantic shape the inconveniences which, on a far smaller scale, were found intolerable in Canada. It is evident as a matter of reasoning, and notorious as a matter of fact, that the interposition of large blocks of property between tracts or districts of Crown land must obstruct the opening up of those districts, unless it fortunately happens that the private proprietor is ready to expend money pari passu with the Government in the construction of roads and other improvements, and to conform his land policy to that of the authorities. It is also clear that colonists of the Anglo-Saxon race look upon the land revenue as legitimately belonging to the community; and that the diversion of half or more than half of that revenue to the purpose of increasing the dividends of a private corporation would cause a continual and growing discontent which could not be allayed by any abstract argument of right, and the full force of which the Government would be expected by the Company to sustain. His Grace cannot consent to make himself responsible for these consequences, and he is therefore obliged to treat as inadmissible any proposal for the proprietary partition of those territories which may be placed under the Government of the Crown."

Mr. Fortescue then proceeds to state, "the only terms which, after very grave consideration, His Grace feels himself able to propose for the acceptance of the Company," as follows:—

"1. That within certain geographical limits (coinciding more or less with those laid down in your letter) the territorial rights of the Company should be surrendered to the Crown.

"2. That the sum of 1s. per acre on every acre sold by Government should be paid to the Company, and payment to cease when their aggregate receipts from this source shall exceed £150,000, or on the expiration of 50 years.

"3. That one-fourth of the sum received by the Government as an export duty for gold, or on leases of gold mines, or licenses for gold mining, shall be payable to the Company for 50 years, or until the aggregate receipts shall amount to £100,000.

"4. That on these conditions a Government be established in the ceded territories—Great Britain undertaking the expense and risk of that Government until the colony is able to support it, as in British Columbia and other colonies.

Report of the Canadian Delegate to England, 26 January, 1865.

"It must be clearly understood that the payments contemplated in the second and third of these articles are entirely dependent on the Government receipts, and that the Government will not be pledged to any particular form of levying a tax upon gold."

Appended to Mr. Fortescue's letter was the following postscript:—

"P.S.—Since the above letter was drafted, His Grace has received from the Governor-General of Canada a despatch, from which it appears that the Canadian Government contemplate the assertion of a claim to all that portion of Central America which can be shown to have been in the possession of the French in 1763. It must, of course, be understood that the above suggestions are made on the supposition that the cession by the Company will place Her Majesty's Government in possession of an indisputable title to the territory ceded by them."

VI. On the 14th March, 1864, Sir Edmund Head replied to Mr. Fortescue's letter of the 11th March, taking strong exception to the postscript of that letter. Among other passages was the following:—

"We believe the title of the Hudson's Bay Company to be good, and we are prepared to defend it in any court in which it may be impugned; but we are not prepared to originate any enquiry of the kind, or to undertake to give any guarantee, or to present to the Secretary of State any title other than that which I have already said is as well known to His Grace as it is to ourselves. Such as it is, it must be taken for better for worse, for we have no other to offer, and we believe that to be sufficient. If, therefore, any such guarantee or undertaking is a condition precedent to the completion of an arrangement on the basis suggested in your letter of the 11th instant, it will, we fear, be wholly useless for us to enter into the consideration of the principle of that offer, or any discussion how far the details involved in it are or are not acceptable to the Company, or how far the amount of compensation would be sufficient. If indeed the question were one only of some few miles, more or less, of boundary, the case would be wholly different. But in the form in which the claim is presented to us in your postscript, it appears to the Committee to make all further action impracticable."

Sir Edmund Head goes on to say:—

"But for this preliminary difficulty arising from the postscript to your letter, it would now be my duty to call your attention to the fact that that letter makes no allusion to a substantive portion of our offer, to which we attach great importance, that, namely, of erecting on certain terms, an electric telegraph across the Hudson's Bay Territory. We have ceded to no one the right to do this, and we are perfectly ready, on fair conditions, and as part of the arrangement, to undertake to do it ourselves. Nor is anything said in the counter proposal made by you as to the portions of land which the Company might be allowed to retain as private property, nor as to the manner in which their buildings and improvements would be dealt with."

VII. On the 5th April, 1864, Sir Frederiek Rogers addressed Sir Edmund Head, in rejoinder to his letter of the 14th March. In reference to the Company's objection to the postscript of Mr. Fortescue's letter, he said:—

"It appears to the Duke of Newcastle that the Company has somewhat misapprehended the intention with which that postscript was written. It is assumed, for the present purpose, that the grant to the Hudson's Bay Company is a valid grant. But it appears to be contended on the part of Canada that whether valid or not, an instrument which only granted to the Company land not in possession of a foreign power in the year 1670, could not, from its very terms, comprehend, in 1763, a territory which then belonged to the French, and which it is contended must therefore have then belonged and belongs now to Canada. If this claim on the part of Canada were established, it would be evidently impossible for Her Majesty's Government to secure that land to which it is extended, should, when sold, be subject to a payment of 1s. an acre to the Hudson's Bay Company. It is therefore impossible for His Grace to make any pledge of this kind except as to land which is beyond the scope of the Canadian claim."

Sir Frederiek Rodgers, however, then went on to modify somewhat this position. He said:—

"As regards the territories west of the Mississippi, to which the present negotiation in the main relates, the Duke of Newcastle, after a careful examination, is prepared, for the purpose of the present negotiation, to assume that the Canadian claim is groundless. And he therefore authorizes me to renew the proposals contained in the body of my letter of the 11th, subject to the following stipulation:—That in case it should be found advisable to cede or annex to Canada any territory lying eastward of a line passing through Lake Winnipeg, and from thence to and through the Lake of the Woods, Her Majesty's Government should be at liberty to exempt the annexed territory from all payments to the Hudson's Bay Company, which payments would thenceforth be exclusively leviable (without any deduction from their amount) on the territories acquired by the Crown to the west of the above line of demarcation."

In regard to the second part of Sir Edmund Head's letter of 14th March, Sir Frederiek Rogers explained that the Duke of Newcastle was quite willing to recognize the transference to the Hudson's Bay Company of the rights and responsibilities of the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph and Transit Company—"if it is recognized by the colonies concerned." And he goes on to say, that His Grace "is 10 further willing that on the completion of the road and telegraph from the frontier of Canada to that of British Columbia, lands adjacent to the line shall be granted to the Company at the rate of one square mile for every lineal mile of road and telegraph constructed on Crown lands between the line of demarcation above described and the frontier of British Columbia."

VIII. On the 13th April, the Company accepted the offer of Government in principle, but considered that the amount of the payments within fifty years out of the land and gold revenues should not be limited, or if limited, should be limited to £1,000,000 instead of £250,000. They asked in addition 20 to be allowed—

(1) To retain as private property their "Posts and Stations" (on which buildings had been erected) outside the Red River Settlement, with an area of 6,000 acres round each such post."

(2) To retain "all lots set out and occupied by them."

(3) To receive for every 50,000 acres of land sold by the Crown, "a grant of 5,000 acres of wild land" of their own choice.

They also require exemption from exceptional taxation and relief from every expense of government.

As the basis of an arrangement for "through communication," they expressed their readiness to adopt Mr. Watkin's plan (modified, as it necessarily would be by the amalgamation of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the Transit and Telegraph Company), but they required five square miles of land per lineal mile of telegraph and road, instead of one square mile as offered by Government.

IX. On the 6th of June, Mr. Cardwell declined to accept these proposals without considerable 30 modifications, but deferred any counter-proposal until after consultation with the Treasury and with the Canadian Government.

This was the position of the negotiation when the undersigned reached London, early in December, 1864, and when Mr. Cardwell placed in his hands the papers of which a summary has been given.

Mr. Cardwell, in explaining verbally the state of the negotiations, added, that in case the Hudson's Bay Company's offer of 13th April, 1864, was accepted by the Government of Canada, as containing in principle a basis on which negotiations might be continued with the hope of a satisfactory solution, he was of opinion that considerable modifications of the terms might be obtained.

That there might be no misunderstanding as to the offer of the Company, I requested that a map might be obtained from Sir Edmund Head, so coloured as to show clearly the territory now claimed by 40 the Hudson's Bay Company as their property; and also a second map so coloured as to show what portion of the land claimed to be theirs, they now proposed to surrender to the Crown. Two maps, coloured in this manner, were accordingly obtained from the Company, and are appended to this report.

Accompanying these maps was a letter from Sir Edmund Head, dated 7th December, 1864, which, without abating his proposal of 13th April, offered as an alternative:—

1. That the Company be paid £1,000,000 sterling.
2. That the Government of British North America acknowledge the Company's right to trade, without exclusive privileges of any kind, within the territory.

Report of the Canadian Delegate to England,
26 January,
1865.

3. That the Company should hold in fee simple all their posts now occupied, with a reasonable area round each post. All previous sales and bargains made by them at Red River shall be confirmed.

4. That the Government of British North America shall impose no exceptional taxes on the Company, its property or its servants.

5. That the disputed matter of the Company's lands in Canada be settled by issuing grants on the footing formerly agreed upon between Mr. Vankoughnet and Mr. Hopkins.

6. That the Company shall be bound to hand over to the Government of British North America all the materials for the construction of the telegraph on the payment of the cost price and expenses already incurred.

10 In discussing with Mr. Cardwell these demands of the Hudson's Bay Company, I pointed out what appeared to me the utterly untenable character of their pretensions. I endeavoured to show that they were seeking to sell to Her Majesty's Government, for an enormous sum, territory to which they had no title under their charter; and I contended that if the solution of the question was to be sought in the purchase of a portion of the Company's territorial claims, the first step was clearly to ascertain what validity there was in those claims—what land the Company really had to sell.

I further stated, as my personal view of the matter, that no solution would be satisfactory to the people of Canada short of the entire extinction of the Hudson's Bay Company's territorial claims and exclusive rights of trade. I pointed out, that to recognize and maintain the exclusive pretensions of the Company over a large portion of the continent, and to give it thereby a monopoly of the lucrative fur trade, would be simply erecting a barrier in the way of the rapid settlement of the country, and laying the foundation for serious difficulty when the country became settled, and for a further demand on the part of the Hudson's Bay Company, some years hence, for the final extinction of its claims.

I urged that in view of the present unsettled position of the American continent, it was of the highest importance to attract to British America as large a share as possible of the European emigration—that the opening up of the North-West Territories, with all their agricultural, mineral and fur-trading advantages, would conduce vastly to that end—and that a further delay of this step would (from the immigration of Americans now going on into the territory) render the establishment of British institutions in the settled portions of the country much more difficult than if action were taken now.

Denying the claims set up by the Hudson's Bay Company, I further contended that, even were all their pretensions admitted for the sake of argument, the sum demanded by the Company—namely, one million sterling—was much more than they are entitled to receive for the entire extinction of their claims from the Atlantic to the Rocky Mountains, and from the American line to the extreme north. I pointed out, that it was only eighteen months since the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company had passed by purchase into the hands of the present proprietors; that they paid £1,500,000 for those rights, which was fifty per cent. above the then market value of the property; and I referred to the official prospectus on which the new company was formed in July, 1863, for proof that the demand now made on Her Majesty's Government by the Company was utterly unreasonable. I drew Mr. Cardwell's attention to the fact, that the prospectus declared that the assets of the new Hudson's Bay Company, exclusive of the landed territory, had been "recently valued by competent valuers at £1,023,400 569 sterling," and that these assets were further explained to consist of "goods in the interior, on ship-board, and other stock in-trade, including shipping, business premises, and other buildings necessary for carrying on the fur trade." I pointed out that in addition to this large amount of convertible property, "a cash balance" derived from the old Hudson's Bay Company was spoken of in the prospectus; and that other large landed possessions, besides those in the east of the Rocky Mountains and north of the American line, were thus set forth in the prospectus as being part of the property purchased by the new Company.

"In addition to its chartered territory, the Company possess the following valuable landed property:—Several plots of land in British Columbia, occupying most favourable sites at the mouths of rivers, the titles to which have been confirmed by Her Majesty's Government; farms; building sites in Vancouver's Island; and in Canada, ten square miles at LaCloche, on Lake Huron, and tracts of land in fourteen other places."

Canadian Documents, and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company, prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

Report of the Canadian Delegate to England 26th January, 1865.

In addition to all this, I directed Mr. Cardwell's attention to the fact that the Hudson's Bay Company held a claim against the American Government, and which was at that moment under consideration by arbitrators, for the surrender of their rights on the Pacific, south of the boundary line established under the Oregon Treaty. I stated, on information that had reached me, but without personal knowledge of its correctness, that the American Government had expressed its willingness to pay $1,000,000 for the extinction of that claim, but that the Company rejected it, and were in expectation of receiving a much larger sum.

In view of all these facts, I contended that it was utterly unreasonable on the part of the Company to claim any such sum as £1,000,000 sterling, even for the entire extinction of their territorial and trade claims east of the Rocky Mountains. But I admitted that it was for Her Majesty's Imperial Government to settle with the Hudson's Bay Company the consideration to be paid for the extinction of their claims, as it could not be expected that the people of Canada should bear the burden of extinguishing a monopoly that they did not create and have never recognized, and the advantages from the extinguishing of which they would only share in common with the rest of Her Majesty's subjects. I urged that the Imperial Government should, without delay, secure the extinction of the Company's claims; and that the Government of Canada would be prepared to assume the duty and cost of opening up communications into the country and establishing local government in the settled portions.

I had the honour of interviews with several of Her Majesty's Ministers, who were then in London, in which I was permitted to urge these views to a greater or less extent. But the Christmas holidays having intervened, and being compelled to leave England in time to be present at the opening of the Canadian Parliament on the 19th January, I was unable to press the matter to a close. I therefore suggested to Mr. Cardwell that I would report to Your Excellency the point to which the discussion had been brought, and that when the proposed deputation of members of the Canadian Government visited England in spring, the negotiation might be resumed, and, if possible, brought to a satisfactory termination. Mr. Cardwell kindly consented to this arrangement.

THE 24TH MARCH, 1865.*

Order in Council, (Canada), 24th March, 1865.

The Committee respectfully recommend that four Members of Your Excellency's Council do proceed to England to confer with Her Majesty's Government:—

1st. Upon the proposed Confederation of the British North American Provinces, and the means whereby it can be most speedily effected.

2nd. Upon the arrangements necessary for the defence of Canada, in the event of war arising with the United States, and the extent to which the same should be shared between Great Britain and Canada.

3rd. Upon the steps to be taken with reference to the Reciprocity Treaty, and the rights conferred by it upon the United States.

4th. Upon the arrangements necessary for the settlement of the North-West Territory and Hudson's Bay Company's claims.

5th. And, generally, upon the existing critical state of affairs by which Canada is most seriously affected.

The Committee further recommend that the following members of Council be named to form the delegation, viz:—Messrs. Macdonald, Cartier, Brown and Galt.

The Committee have under consideration the Report (hereunto appended) of the Honourable the President of the Executive Council, on the subject of his communications with the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, in London, in reference to the opening up to settlement the North-West Territories.

The Committee respectfully recommend that the negotiations be taken up, by the deputation of Members of Council now about to proceed to London, at the point to which they had been so ably brought by the President of the Council, and carried, if possible, to a successful termination.

DOWNING STREET,

17th June, 1865.

MY LORD, I have the honour to inform your Lordship that several conferences have been held between the Canadian Ministers who were deputed, under the Minute of your Executive Council of March 24th, to proceed to England to confer with Her Majesty's Government on the part of Canada, and the Duke of Somerset, the Earl De Grey, Mr. Gladstone, and myself, on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

On the fourth point, the subject of the North-West Territory, the Canadian Ministers desired that that Territory should be made over to Canada, and undertook to negotiate with the Hudson's Bay Company for the termination of their rights, on condition that the indemnity, if any, should be paid by a loan to be raised by Canada under the Imperial guarantee. With the sanction of the Cabinet, we assented to this proposal, undertaking that if the negotiation should be successful, we, on the part of the Crown, being satisfied that the amount of the indemnity was reasonable, and the security sufficient, would apply to the Imperial Parliament to sanction the agreement and to guarantee the amount.

REPORT OF THE CANADIAN DELEGATES TO ENGLAND.‡

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Viscount Monck, Governor-General of British North America, etc., etc.

May it please Your Excellency,

The undersigned having, by Order in Council of 24th March, 1865, been appointed a Committee of the Executive Council of Canada to proceed to England and confer with Her Majesty's Government on certain subjects of importance to the Province, sailed for England in April last; and having discharged the duty entrusted to them and returned to Canada we now beg to submit, for Your Excellency's information, a statement of our proceedings while in London.§

The important question of opening up to settlement and cultivation the vast British Territories on the north-west borders of Canada next obtained the attention of the Conference. Your Excellency is aware that the desire of the Government of Canada for a satisfactory and final adjustment of this matter has been often formally expressed. In Your Excellency's despatch of the 19th February, 1864, to the Colonial Secretary, the anxious desire of the Canadian Government was communicated "for some speedy, inexpensive, and mutually satisfactory plan" for settling definitely "the North-western boundary of Canada," and the claim of Canada was asserted to "all that portion of Central British America which can be shown to have been in the possession of the French at the period of that cession in 1763."

Report of the Canadian Delegates to England 12th
July, 1865.

In reply to this despatch, Mr. Cardwell, on 1st July, 1864, requested to be informed whether the Government of Canada was prepared to assist in negotiations with the Hudson's Bay Company, with the view of accepting any portion of the territory now claimed by that Company, and providing the means of local administration therein; and he suggested that if so prepared it would be desirable that some person duly authorized to communicate the views of the Canadian Government should be sent to England for that purpose.

On the 11th November, 1864, a Minute of Council was approved by Your Excellency, in reply to Mr. Cardwell's despatch. It set forth that the Government of Canada was ready and anxious to co-operate with the Imperial Government in securing the early settlement of the North-West Territories, and the establishment of local government in its settled portions; but that in its opinion the first step towards that end was the extinction of all claim by the Hudson's Bay Company to proprietary rights in the soil and exclusive rights of trade. It suggested that it was for the Imperial Government, and not for the Government of Canada, to assume the duty of bringing to an end a monopoly originating in an English charter, and exercised so long under Imperial sanction; but that when the negotiations were brought to a close, the Government of Canada would be ready to arrange with the Imperial Government for the annexation to Canada of such portions of the territory as might be available for settlement, as well as for the opening up of communications into the territory and providing means of local administration. Or should the Imperial Government prefer to erect the territory into a Crown colony, the Canadian Government would gladly co-operate in the opening up of communication into the territory, and the settlement of the country. The Minute finally suggested that the Honourable President of the Council while in England would communicate more fully to Mr. Cardwell the views of the Canadian Government.

The negotiations that followed on this despatch satisfied us of the impossibility of enforcing the end sought by Canada without long-protracted, vexatious and costly litigation. The Hudson's Bay Company were in possession, and if time were their object, could protract the proceedings indefinitely; and Her Majesty's Government appeared unwilling to ignore pretensions that had frequently received quasi recognition from the Imperial authorities. Calling to mind, therefore the vital importance to Canada of having that great and fertile country opened up to Canadian enterprise, and the tide of immigration into it directed through Canadian channels—remembering also the danger of large grants of land passing into the hands of mere moneyed corporations and embarrassing the rapid settlement of the country—and the risk that the recent discoveries of gold on the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains might throw into the country large masses of settlers unaccustomed to British institutions—we arrived at the conclusion that the quickest solution of the question would be the best for Canada. We accordingly proposed to the Imperial Ministers that the whole British territory, east of the Rocky Mountains and north of the American and Canadian lines, should be made over to Canada, subject to such rights as the Hudson's Bay Company might be able to establish; and that the compensation to that Company (if any were found to be due) should be met by a loan guaranteed by Great Britain. The Imperial Government consented to this, and a careful investigation of the case satisfies us that the compensation to the Hudson's Bay cannot, under any circumstances, be onerous. It is but two years since the present Hudson's Bay Company purchased the entire property of the old Company: they paid £1,500,000 for the entire property and assets—in which were included a large sum of cash on hand, large landed properties in British Columbia and elsewhere not included in our arrangement, a very large claim against the United States Government under the Oregon Treaty; and ships, goods, pelts, and business premises in England and Canada valued at £1,023,569. The value of the territorial rights of the Company, therefore, in the estimation of the Company itself, will be easily arrived at.

The results of our communications with the Committee of Her Majesty's Government were placed, by Mr. Cardwell, in the form of a despatch to Your Excellency; that document bears date the 17th June, 1865, and has already reached Your Excellency's hands. It contains a correct statement of the result of the conference.

QUEBEC, 12th July, 1865.

DOWNING STREET,

20th February, 1866.

SIR,—I am directed by Mr. Secretary Cardwell to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th inst., enclosing a copy of one addressed to you by Mr. McEwen, enquiring if the Hudson's Bay Company are willing to dispose of such portion of their Territory as is capable of cultivation to a party of Anglo-American capitalists.

You also enclose a copy of the reply which the Company have returned to this enquiry.

Having regard to the reference you have made in your letter to the probable concurrence of Her Majesty's Government in the establishment of some new government, Mr. Cardwell is desirous of reminding you that at the conferences which took place during last summer, between the Canadian Ministers and certain members of Her Majesty's Government, the Provincial Ministers expressed their desire that the North-Western Territory should be made over to Canada, and they undertook to negotiate with the Hudson's Bay Company for the termination of their rights, on condition that the indemnity, if any, should be paid by a loan to be raised by Canada under the Imperial guarantee. To this proposal, Her Majesty's Ministers assented, engaging that if the negotiation should be successful, they, on the part of the Crown, being satisfied that the amount of the indemnity was reasonable, and the security sufficient, would apply to the Imperial Parliament to sanction the arrangement and guarantee the amount.

Until this engagement shall have been disposed of, it will be necessary for Her Majesty's Government to keep it in view in any steps which they may be called upon to take in the matter.

I am, etc.,

E. E. FORSTER.

Rt. Honourable Sir E. Head, Bart., etc., etc.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL, (CANADA,) APPROVED BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL ON THE 22ND DAY OF JUNE, 1866.*

The Committee of the Executive Council have given their careful consideration to the despatches of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, bearing date the 24th February and 3rd March last, relative to a proposal made to the Hudson's Bay Company by a party of Anglo-American capitalists, for the purchase "of such portion of the territory claimed by the Company as may be capable of cultivation;" and they have the honour to submit to Your Excellency the following remarks on the subject:—

In the first place, the Committee do not admit that the Company have a legal title to that portion of the North-Western Territory which is fit for cultivation and settlement.

This fertile tract is a belt of land stretching along the northern frontier of the United States to the base of the Rocky Mountains, and Canada has always disputed the title of the Company to it.

Even if it be admitted that the Charter of 1670, recognized as it has been by several Imperial Statutes, gives to the Company a freehold right in the soil in Rupert's Land, Canada contends that the cultivable tract in question forms no part of that land.

It is not now necessary to repeat the grounds on which this opinion is founded, as they have been already more than once submitted to Her Majesty's Government, and it is only alluded to lest silence on the subject might be assumed as an acquiescence on the part of Canada in the right of the Company to sell. Assuming, however, that such right exists, the Committee see grave objections to the proposition of Mr. McEwen being entertained. Canadian experience has shown that sales of large tracts of land to individuals, or commercial corporations, have operated prejudicially to the best interests of the Province, and retarded rather than promoted its settlement and progress. Companies or individuals purchasing for the purpose of speculation, are governed solely by the one view of obtaining a profitable return of the money invested in the purchase. All other considerations are set aside. No general or comprehensive system of settlement is or can be established. The best tracts are withheld from settlement in order that their value may be increased by the improvement of the surrounding country, and by the labour of the settlers, and the price paid to the Company for the lands, instead of being expended in the opening up of roads and in developing the resources of the country, is divided among a number of non-resident shareholders having no interest in the prosperity of the country further than as such prosperity contributes to the value of their shares.

In the correspondence which took place in 1863 and 1864 between the Hudson's Bay Company and the Colonial Office, with reference to the introduction of the direct authority of Her Majesty's Government in Rupert's Land, it appears that the Company proposed, as a condition of their assenting to the erection of a Crown colony, that they should retain the ownership in fee simple of one-half of the lands of the colony. This proposition was rejected by the Duke of Newcastle, in language which appears to the Committee to be conclusive:

Order-in-Council,
Canada,
22nd June,

"In an unsettled colony there is no effectual mode of taxation for purposes of government and improvement, and the whole progress of the colony depends on the liberal and prudent disposal of its land. These considerations afford decisive reasons against leaving that land in the possession of a corporation. And I am to observe that these objections, conclusive in any case, are greatly enhanced in the case of the Hudson's Bay Company, as I learn from your letter that it has been 'the unvarying opinion' of the Committee on whose behalf you speak that the Company would 'lose fully as much as they would gain, by the increase of settlement in the chartered Territory.' It is, therefore, to say the least, a question whether the Company would not be under a direct inducement to use their proprietary rights to thwart the colonizing efforts of the Government. . . . The conclusive objection to the scheme is that it would reproduce in a gigantic shape the inconveniences which, on a far smaller scale, were found intolerable in Canada. It is evident as a matter of reasoning, and notorious as a matter of fact, that the interposition of large blocks of property between tracts or districts of Crown land must obstruct the opening up of those districts, unless it fortunately happens that the private proprietor is ready to expend money pari passu with the Government in the construction of roads and other improvements, and to conform his land policy to that of the authorities. It is also clear that colonists of the Anglo-Saxon race look upon the land revenue as legitimately belonging to the community, and that the diversion of half or more than half of that revenue to the purpose of increasing the dividends of a private corporation would cause a continual and growing discontent, which could not be allayed by any abstract argument of right, and the full force of which the Government would be expected by the Company to sustain. His Grace cannot consent to make himself responsible for these consequences and he is therefore obliged to treat as inadmissible any proposal for the proprietary partition of those territories which may be placed under the government of the Crown."*

If such objections exist to the tenure of large tracts of land by so ancient and responsible a corporation as the Hudson's Bay Company, with large powers of government, and a political as well as a commercial status, with how much greater pressure must they weigh against the transfer of such tracts to a private association of speculators.

The Committee are of further opinion that before any steps are taken to introduce a large body of settlers into that country, provision should be made for the efficient administration of the government there.

So long as the Great North-West is only occupied by the Hudson's Bay Company's servants, and by the few scattered settlers at Fort Garry, the system of government now obtaining there may work sufficiently well; but whenever a large population shall settle in the country, it is to be feared that the Company's power will be altogether insufficient to preserve order and good government, and that its authority will be set at naught.

*From letter of Mr. Fortescue, Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, of 11th March, 1864, quoted in Report of Hon. George Brown, ante.

It is evident that the old policy of exclusion of strangers from the Territory must shortly be at an end.

The neighbouring territories belonging to the United States are fast being settled up to the boundary line, and if the statements as to the existence of gold in the Valley of the Saskatchewan be at all verified, there will, ere long, be an influx of population which no power that can be exerted by the Hudson's Bay Company can either resist or control. This population will mainly come from the United States, and although there may be a good many of Her Majesty's subjects among them, by far the greater portion will be aliens, ignorant and regardless of the laws of England, and perhaps hostile to the British Government. They will utterly disregard the authority of the Company, will endeavour to establish a government and tribunals of their own, and, as similar bodies have done elsewhere on this continent, assert their political independence.

Such a community would sever the British North American possessions in twain and be the means of retarding, if not altogether preventing, the formation of a railway connection between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

The future interests of Canada and all British North American possessions are, therefore, vitally concerned in the immediate establishment of a strong Government there, and in its settlement as a part of the British colonial system.

Impressed with this conviction, Canada would ere this have opened negotiations with the Hudson's Bay Company for the extinction of their claims, had it not been for the prospect of her speedy absorption in the proposed Union of the British North American Colonies. It would obviously have been improper for the Canadian Government to commence negotiations which they could not hope to complete, or to enter into engagements, the fulfilment of which must fall on the whole Confederated Provinces. At the same time, the Committee beg leave to observe that if the Company had thought proper to submit for consideration formal proposals for the transfer of their claims, the final settlement of the question would have been greatly advanced.

Recent events serve to shew that in a few months that union will be effected, and the Committee have no doubt that the Confederate Government and Legislature will feel it to be one of their first duties to open negotiations with the Hudson's Bay Company, for the transfer of their claims to the territory. Meanwhile Canada invites the aid of Her Majesty's Government in discountenancing and preventing any such sales of any portion of the territory as is now applied for.

Hudson's Bay
Company to
Under Sec.,
17th July,
1866.

This pamphlet purports to be a report addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and it contains certain statements to which the Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company desire to call the special attention of the Earl of Carnarvon.

At page 26 the following passage occurs:—

"Twenty years later, in 1865, the American territory of Montana adjoins the region which excited the enthusiasm of DeSmet. Its population of 25,000, to be increased during 1866 to 50,000, have been drawn to the sources of the Missouri by discoveries of gold and silver mines close to the international border, and rumours of gulches and ledges in the Saskatchewan District, yielding even greater prizes to the prospector, are already rife, and will soon precipitate a strong, active and enterprising people into the spacious void. What is called the 'Americanization' of the Red River Settlements has been slow, although sure, since the era of steam navigation; but the Americanization of the Saskatchewan will rush suddenly and soon from the camps of treasure-seekers in Montana."

You, Sir, are aware of the correspondence which during the last three years has passed between myself as Governor of this Company and the Colonial Office, on the subject of establishing in the Hudson's Bay Territory some government administered in the name of Her Majesty. You know also that Mr. Cardwell decided to offer to Canada an option of acquiring the rights of this Company, and that so far back as the 1st of March last I ventured respectfully to ask the question (which has not yet been answered) how long this option was to remain open.

In a letter addressed to me by Mr. Forster, and dated the 20th of February last, we were told:—

"Having regard to the reference you have made in your letter, to the probable concurrence of Her Majesty's Government in the establishment of some new government, Mr. Cardwell is desirous of reminding you, that at the conferences which took place during last summer between the Canadian Ministers and certain Members of Her Majesty's Government, the Provincial Ministers expressed their desire that the North-Western Territory should be made over to Canada, and they undertook to negotiate with the Hudson's Bay Company for the termination of their rights, on condition that the indemnity, if any, should be paid by a loan to be raised by Canada, under the Imperial guarantee. To this proposal Her Majesty's Ministers assented, engaging that if the negotiation should be successful, they, on the part of the Crown, being satisfied that the amount of the indemnity was reasonable and the security sufficient, would apply to the Imperial Parliament to sanction the arrangement and guarantee the amount."

"Until this arrangement shall have been disposed of, it will be necessary for Her Majesty's Government to keep it in view in any steps which they may be called upon to take in the matter."

Under these circumstances, it is clear that the Company thus cautioned can take no steps of themselves to meet any inroad or immigration within their territory, if it be on their territory that it will first take place—a point to which I shall afterwards revert.

Indeed, the powers of the Charter were probably not given to be used for any such purpose; but if they were sufficient for such an emergency, our hands are at the present moment tied by Mr. Forster's letter.

We think, therefore, that we are the more bound most respectfully to suggest whether, if it is intended to retain the territory north of the 49th parallel as British soil, some steps ought not to be taken for asserting its British character, and maintaining law and order within it.

This may, no doubt, either be effected by the direct action of the English Government, or be attempted by the agency of Canada; but as we understand the latter course to have been deliberately selected, the Committee (provided this Company are fairly dealt with in the matter of compensation) can have no right to offer any remarks on the subject.

In the face, however, of the confident predictions and statements contained in this report to the Secretary of the United States Treasury, we should not be justified if we failed to point out the necessity of speedy action of some kind.

With regard to the particular strip of country where the first overflow of settlers or miners may be expected from the United States Territory of Montana, I think it probable that the Hudson's Bay Company have no immediate interest or responsibility connected with it. So far as I can judge from the imperfect maps accessible to us, I believe that on the north of Montana there is a narrow belt running along the 49th parallel, watered by streams, which fall not into Hudson's Bay but into Milk River, a tributary of the Upper Missouri. If this be so, this strip of land, though British ground, as being north of the 49th parallel, is not included in the grant made by the charter of Charles II. to the Hudson's Bay Company.

I have, etc.,

EDMUND HEAD,
Governor.

Approved by Order in Council (Canada) of 18th June, 1867.

The Commissioner of Crown Lands has the honour to submit to Your Excellency in Council, that in the year 1859, the section of country between Lake Superior and Dog Lake was thoroughly explored by Provincial Land Surveyors Lindsay Russell and J. F. Gaudet, under the command of Mr. Simon Dawson, Civil Engineer, and a fair line of road marked out (shewn on the accompanying tracing), from Thunder Bay to Dog Lake, a distance of twenty-five miles.

having been for some time used as a mail route will not be difficult to trace, the bridging will be inconsiderable, and a good waggon road may be constructed for about fourteen hundred dollars a mile.

3. The outlet of Dog Lake presents facilities for raising the waters thereof from seventeen to twenty feet, by means of dams across the two channels into which the outlet is divided—which increased elevation the banks of the lake will, it is reported to the Commissioner, admit of. It is estimated that the necessary dams could be constructed for $6,000. The effect of the work would be to render Dog River navigable for craft drawing six feet of water as far as Jourdain's Rapid, about thirty-seven miles by the windings of the river, or twenty in a direct line from Dog Lake.

4. From Jourdain's Rapid, on Dog River, to the dépôt, on Savanne River, is in a direct line eight miles and three-quarters, and forms the height of land dividing the waters which run to Lake Superior from those flowing to Lake Winnipeg. A good waggon road could be constructed for $900 a mile; but as it would have to pass about two miles beyond the dépôt, the distance must be reckoned at eleven miles.

5. The drift flood-wood in the Savanne River would require to be cleared out, at a probable cost of $1,000.

6. The total cost to reach the waters of the Savanne River would be, therefore, as follows:

Thunder Bay to Dog Lake, twenty-five miles, at $1,400 a mile.....	$35,000 00
Dams at the outlet of Dog Lake.....	6,000 00
Jourdain's Rapid to dépôt on Savanne River, eleven miles of road, at $900 a mile..	9,900 00	20
Savanne River, clearing out flood-wood in.....	1,000 00
	$51,900 00
Superintendence and contingencies	4,000 00

7. The above is the approximate estimate of Mr. Simon Dawson, C.E., who was in command of the Red River Exploring Expedition in 1858-9, and who now reports to the Commissioner of Crown Lands that he believes the necessary works, of suitable character and strength, can be constructed for the sums named; and that the materials, as well stone as wood, required therefor, can be readily procured in the neighbourhood of the works, with hardly any transportation that cannot be done in scows constructed on the spot.

8. The result of the improvements above estimated for, would be that 120 miles of the route from Lake Superior to Red River would be thrown open, giving easy access to Lac des Mille Lacs, the western extremity of which is within 70 miles of Rainy Lake, from whence the navigation is uninterrupted (save by a short portage at Fort Francis) to the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods, a point distant about 90 miles from Fort Garry.

9. The Colonization Road Fund of Upper Canada has a sum at its credit, from Parliamentary votes, sufficient to meet the expenditure contemplated by this Memorandum, in case your Excellency in Council should deem it expedient, for the present, to devote it to this object, on the assumption that the amount now expended will form a claim upon the new Dominion of Canada, and that proper accounting shall be had between the present Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, as to the sum now taken from the Colonization Funds of Upper Canada for general purposes, the equivalent votes for Lower Canada having been heretofore therein expended.

10. The Commissioner of Crown Lands humbly recommends to your Excellency that the course above suggested be adopted, and that the improvements described be immediately undertaken, and carried out during the present season.

DEPARTMENT OF CROWN LANDS,

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO,

TORONTO, 4th October, 1867.

To the Hon. S. Richards, Commissioner of Crown Lands.

SIR,—I have the honour to report to you my return from Thunder Bay, on Lake Superior, whither I had been directed to proceed by the former Commissioner of Crown Lands, the Hon. Alexander 20 Campbell.

My instructions from the above named Minister directed me to organize and supply a party of labourers, with overseers and assistants, for the purpose of commencing and forwarding a scheme of works, intended to open a regular transit line of communication between Thunder Bay, on Lake Superior, and Fort Garry, on the Red River, estimates and appropriations having been made for the above work, as far as the Savanne River, amounting to $55,900.

My instructions further directed me to operate in concert with Mr. S. J. Dawson, who was charged specially with the construction of the dams necessary to raise the waters of Dog Lake and River, in order to complete the first navigable reach upon the said waters.

[Here follow details of the work, and information respecting the soil, etc.]

All of which is respectfully submitted by

Your obedient servant,

To the Queen's most Excellent Majesty.

Most Gracious Sovereign,—

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate and Commons of the Dominion of Canada, in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty for the purpose of representing:

That it would promote the prosperity of the Canadian people, and conduce to the advantage of the whole Empire, if the Dominion of Canada, constituted under the provisions of the British North America Act of 1867, were extended westward to the shores of the Pacific Ocean.

That the colonization of the fertile lands of the Saskatchewan, the Assiniboine, and the Red River 10 Districts,—the development of the mineral wealth which abounds in the regions of the North-West,—and the extension of commercial intercourse, through the British possessions in America, from the Atlantic to the Pacific,—are alike dependent upon the establishment of a stable government, for the maintenance of law and order in the North-Western Territories.

That the welfare of a sparse and widely-scattered population of British subjects, of European origin, already inhabiting these remote and unorganized territories, would be materially enhanced by the formation therein of political institutions bearing analogy, as far as circumstances will admit, to those which exist in the several Provinces of this Dominion.

That the 146th section of the British North America Act of 1867 provides for the admission of Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory, or either of them, into Union with Canada, upon terms 20 and conditions to be expressed on Address from the Houses of Parliament of this Dominion to Your Majesty, and which shall be approved of by Your Majesty in Council.

That we do therefore most humbly pray that Your Majesty will be most graciously pleased by and with the advice of Your Most Honourable Privy Council, to unite Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory with this Dominion, and to grant to the Parliament of Canada authority to legislate for their future welfare and good government; and we most humbly beg to express to Your Majesty that we are willing to assume the duties and obligations of government and legislation as regards these territories.

That in the event of Your Majesty's Government agreeing to transfer to Canada the jurisdiction and control over the said region, the Government and Parliament of Canada will be ready to provide 30 that the legal rights of any corporation, company, or individual within the same, shall be respected and placed under the protection of Courts of competent jurisdiction.

And furthermore, that upon the transference of the territories in question to the Canadian Government, the claims of the Indian Tribes to compensation for lands required for purposes of settlement, will be considered and settled in conformity with the equitable principles which have uniformly governed the British Crown in its dealings with the aboriginals.

All which we humbly pray Your Majesty to take into Your Majesty's most gracious and favourable consideration.

The Senate, Tuesday, December 17th, 1867.

10 REPORT OF A COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL (CANADA), APPROVED BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL
ON THE 28TH DECEMBER, 1867.*

The Committee have had under consideration the annexed Memorandum from the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, submitting, for the approval of Your Excellency in Council, certain recommendations on the subject of the negotiation with the Imperial Government for the transfer of Rupert's Land and the North-West Territory to Canada, and they respectfully advise that a copy of the same, when approved by Your Excellency, be forwarded to his Grace the Secretary of State for the Colonies, as embodying the views of the Canadian Government on that important question.

20 REPORT OF THE DOMINION MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS, 28TH DECEMBER, 1867.*

The undersigned has the honour to submit, for the consideration of Your Excellency in Council, the following recommendations on the subject of the negotiation with the Imperial Government for the transfer of Rupert's Land and the North-West Territory to Canada.

Report
Dominion
Minister of Public Works, 28th December, 1867.

I. That in addition to the joint Address of both Houses on the subject, Your Excellency will be pleased to transmit to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the resolutions as they were finally adopted by the House of Commons and the Senate, with the votes and proceedings of both Houses thereon.

II. That the attention of his Grace the Duke of Buckingham be specially called to the Eighth Resolution, which was not embodied in the Address, and was not intended by the Canadian Parliament to express a term or condition of the Order in Council, authorized by the 146th Section of the British North America Act.

III. That Your Excellency will be pleased to express to his Grace, as the opinion of the Canadian Government, that it is highly expedient that the transfer, which the Imperial Parliament has authorized and the Canadian Parliament approved, should not be delayed by negotiations or correspondence with private or third parties, whose position, opinions and claims have heretofore embarrassed both Governments in dealing with this question.

IV. That in the opinion of the Canadian Government, the terms of the Address cannot be materially altered or extended without causing injurious delay, and greatly embarrassing the people and Government of Canada in their efforts to open communications with the Territory, to encourage 40 emigration and settlement, to establish law and order, and to provide for the speedy organization of Municipal and Local Governments therein.

V. That recent proposals of the Congress of the United States in reference to British America, the rapid advance of mining and agricultural settlements westward, and the avowed policy of the Washington Government to acquire territory from other powers by purchase or otherwise, admonish us that not a day is to be lost in determining and publishing to the world our policy in regard to these Territories.

VI. That Your Excellency will be pleased to request his Grace to inform Your Excellency by Atlantic Cable (if the information can be so communicated), whether the Imperial Cabinet will at once

HUDSON'S BAY HOUSE, LONDON,

15th January, 1868.

MY LORD DUKE,—In addressing this letter to your Grace on behalf of the Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company, I think that some apology is necessary for anticipating the official communication from the Colonial Office, of the Resolutions passed in the Parliament of Canada, as well as the Address to be founded upon them; but as from the tone of the debate in the Canadian Parliament, and from the terms of the Resolutions passed there, it is manifestly the object of that Parliament to have the power to establish in the Dominion of Canada, including the territory of Rupert's Land, Courts which shall have jurisdiction in all matters arising in any part of British North America, and thus to give power to the tribunals so constituted to determine upon the rights claimed by this Company under their Charter a course of proceeding which this Committee consider to be so injurious to the interests of the Hudson's Bay Company, they are desirous to bring the matter before your Grace, and to submit their views upon the subject to Her Majesty's Government, before any assent is given or determination come to in reference to Her Majesty's approval of the proposed admission of Rupert's Land into the Union of British North America.

I beg to remind your Grace that the rights of this Company, under their Charter, have at various times been brought under the consideration of the Government, and that the result of those discussions has been a clear and distinct recognition on the part of the Crown that the general validity of the Charter cannot now be called in question, and, in particular, that the territorial ownership of the lands granted by the Charter and the rights necessarily incidental thereto, must now be considered as valid.

It is true that questions have from time to time been raised in Canada as to the extent of the territory claimed by this Company under their Charter, and in some respects as to other rights which the Charter confers; but while Her Majesty's Government have at all times declined to be any party, to proceedings on the subject, the opportunity has always been afforded to the authorities of Canada to bring any questions for adjudication before Her Majesty in Council—a course to which this Company have always been prepared to accede, and which appears to be the only legitimate mode of deciding their rights, if they are to be called in question.

The Canadians have altogether abstained from availing themselves of the opportunity thus afforded them; but it is now obviously the object of the Canadian Legislature to secure to tribunals of their own nomination the decision of those rights.

I may here state that, so far as the mere political powers granted by the Charter are concerned, such as the rights of government, taxation, and exclusive administration of justice, the Company have long since expressed their willingness that these powers should be vested in officers deriving their authority directly from the Crown; but before any such powers can with justice be transferred to the Colonial Government, I submit that the extent of the territorial rights of the Company should either be fully recognized, or that if the Canadian Government are desirous of procuring those rights for the benefit of Canada in general, they should in the first instance arrange with the Hudson's Bay Company the terms upon which they should be so acquired.

But should the Canadian Legislature still desire that any judicial investigation into the territorial rights of the Company should take place, such inquiry should be referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in accordance with the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown, given so long ago as July, 1857, as the only tribunal to which ought to be delegated the construction of a Charter emanating from the Sovereign of Great Britain. This opinion your Grace will find at page 404 of the

HUDSON'S BAY HOUSE, LONDON,

25th January, 1868.

MY LORD DUKE,—I have the honour to acknowledge Mr. Elliot's letter, of the 18th instant, enclosing a copy of Address to the Queen, forwarded by the Governor-General of Canada, and to thank your Grace for communicating these papers to the Hudson's Bay Company.

On this Address I beg to request your Grace's attention to the following observations on behalf of myself as Governor, and the Committee of the Company:—

1. It seems necessary in the first place to distinguish the two classes of rights conferred on the Company by the Charter. Some of these are, no doubt, of a public or political character, such as belong to a proprietary government; but others are practically of a private nature, such as might have been vested in any individual subject, or any private corporation clothed with no public functions of any kind. Of these latter, it is only necessary at present to refer to the right of private property in the soil and in the mines and minerals.

2. It may be that the public or political rights of the Company, are in the Charter ill-defined and of doubtful expediency at any time. It may be, too, as the Law Officers in their letter of 1857 appear to hint, that for any effectual exercise they require the aid of the right of private property, as vested in the Company by the same instrument.

3. The Committee need scarcely remind your Grace that, so far from opposing a resumption by the Crown of the political powers of the Company, almost the first important step taken by them in 1863 was the adoption of the following resolution:—"Resolved that the time has come when, in the opinion of this Committee, it is expedient that the authority, executive and judicial, over the Red River Settlement and the south-western portion of Rupert's Land, should be vested in officers deriving such authority directly from the Crown, and exercising it in the name of Her Majesty.

"That the Governor be empowered to communicate this resolution to his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, and to discuss the subject with him, or with the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, reporting from time to time to this Committee thereon."

4. In the correspondence which ensued with the Colonial Office, it appears to be implied on the part of his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, that the fact of the right of private property in the soil being no longer possessed by the Crown, was one of the chief obstacles to a compliance with the suggestion made in the above resolution. If this be so, the very fact of making this objection involves an admission in favour of the Company. Most assuredly if the Crown had alienated its right of property in the soil and minerals of the Hudson's Bay Territory, it had granted it to no other party than the Hudson's Bay Company, and by no instrument other than the Charter of Charles II.

5. On Mr. Fortescue's letter of March 11, 1864, an offer of a contingent money payment, as the consideration for the cession of the territorial rights of the Company, was distinctly made by the Secretary of State. The proviso inserted in the postscript to that letter will be adverted to afterwards, and had reference only to the supposed rights of Canada.

6. It is unnecessary for the Committee to refer to the undisputed enjoyment of these rights, at any rate since the time of the Treaty of Utrecht.

Letter of the Law Officers to Mr. Merivale, Appendix to Report, 1857, page 404, last paragraph.

7. In addition to all this, it remains, to quote the express words of the Law Officers in their letter of 1857, already referred to. They say, "In our opinion the Crown could not now, with justice, raise the question of the general validity of the Charter; but that on every legal principle the Company's territorial ownership of the lands granted, and the rights necessarily incidental thereto, ought to be deemed to be valid."

Moreover, in a passage alluded to above, the Law Officers imply indirectly their belief in the validity of this right of private property, when they say that "rights of government, taxation, exclusive administration of justice, or exclusive trade, otherwise than as a consequence of the right of ownership of the land, could not legally be insisted on by the Company." What other opinions of the Law Officers of the Crown may be found in the records of the Colonial Office it is not for us to say, but the evidence given by the Right Honourable Edward Ellice before the Committee of 1857, as to the opinions taken by him both for and against the Company, is well worth referring to.

8. One other point is a mere technicality no doubt, but it may be worth observing that the title of the Company to their land is an English title, since it is granted "to be holden as of the Manor of East Greenwich, in our County of Kent, in free and common soccage."

9. The Committee do not intend to impute to the Parliament or the Ministry of Canada, any deliberate intention of violating such rights of the Hudson's Bay Company as they admit to exist, but it must be remembered that a theory has been started, and is referred to in the debate on this Address by which the admissions of the English Government and the opinion of the English Law Officers as to the right of ownership in the soil are directly negatived. It has been supposed, we believe, that France was in possession of these territories, or a large portion of them, when the Charter was granted; that they were therefore within the exception which that Charter contains with regard to other territories belonging to "any other Christian Prince;" and that this French title remained good and was transferred to the English Crown with Canada at the final cession of that Province by France.

10. This is not the place for entering on a discussion of the facts and law involved in this argument,—an argument, as we have said, inconsistent with the continued recognition of the Company's rights in various ways by the English Government and their legal advisers for a long series of years; but if this objection to the Company's title shall be presented in a tangible form before a proper tribunal, the Hudson's Bay Company will be quite ready to meet it and demonstrate its futility.

11. The very existence, however, of such a theory in the minds of the Canadian Ministers or the Canadian people, is a sufficient reason why, in justice to the Company, it should be set aside, or its truth or falsehood should be conclusively tested before their rights of property under the Great Seal of England, and in fact their future existence, is placed under the legislation and the absolute control of Canada.

Despatch of Mr. Cardwell to Lord Monck, June 17, 1865.

Letter of Mr. Forster to Sir E. Head, 20th February, 1866.

Minute, June 22, 1866.

Letter from Sir F. Rogers, to Sir E. Head, 31st July, 1866.

Mr. Elliot to Sir E. Head, April 15, 1867.

12. The Committee cannot but feel that the Company has already had great reason to complain of the course pursued during the last few years. In 1865 the Canadian Delegates sent to this country to promote the scheme of Confederation solemnly "undertook," with Mr. Cardwell, to negotiate with the Hudson's Bay Company. The answer given by the Committee was that they would be ready to consider any proposal. The fact of this undertaking was recited again in a subsequent letter, as a reason why no other step should be taken. No negotiation, however, was opened, and, in 1866, the Canadian Council resolved that such negotiation must devolve on the Government of the Confederation when constituted, rather than on the Government of Canada. This was confirmed by the resolutions of the Delegates in England, of April 3rd, 1867. After all, when the Confederation is formed, and the Parliament has met, 50 resolutions are passed, and an Address to the Queen is adopted, praying that the powers of legislation and government over the Hudson's Bay Territory and the North-Western Territory may be conveyed to Canada first, and that the judicial decisions or negotiations as to the Company's rights should take place afterwards.

13. We desire in the first place to remark that this inversion of the order of proceeding is entirely contrary to the expectation raised by the acts of the delegates, and by the communications from the Colonial office to us. We may have erred in thinking so, but certainly we conceived that the negotiations which the delegates, in 1865, undertook to initiate were intended, under the Act of last session, to form the preliminary step for transferring the supreme control to Canada, not to follow after such transfer with all the disadvantages to the Company which must then ensue from the change of the relative position of the parties. It would appear, too, from a passage in a speech of the Honourable Mr. Holton in the Canadian Parliament, as reported in the Canadian News, as per extract herewith, that the Committee were not the only parties who supposed this to be the intention of the Government.

The Committee, moreover, thought that it was expressly in anticipation of this original undertaking to negotiate being thus carried out, that the Secretary of State for the Colonies intimated his wish in the following terms that the Company should abstain from any other arrangements likely to interfere with the views then entertained :

"It is of course for the Hudson's Bay Company to consider for themselves what course is most proper and conducive to their own interests. But it appears to Lord Carnarvon that any effective negotiation being for the moment impossible, it is for the interest of both parties that the question should remain open for arrangement so soon as an authority exists capable of dealing with it on the part of the Colony or Colonies interested. He would therefore regret to learn that the Company contemplates any immediate action which was calculated to embarrass the negotiations, which would then become possible, and which in the opinion of the Executive Council it would be the duty of the Confederate Government to open."

14. The Committee felt no anxiety respecting the wide powers of transfer conferred on the Crown by the Act of last session, because they did not believe that their rights of ownership in the soil and minerals could be affected by it; and because, after the undertaking to negotiate formally communicated to them, and the correspondence relating to it, they relied, as they continue to rely, on the honour and good faith of the English Government.

15. But the case assumes a very different aspect if the plan of giving to the Canadian Parliament and Government legislative and administrative control over these territories, without defining and providing for the rights and interests of the Company as a condition precedent should be carried out. So far as we now see, no security of any kind would exist against such a use of this control in taxation and other matters as might be thought best fitted for compelling the Company to accept any terms, however disadvantageous. No specific guarantee it seems is proposed to be given as to the legislation which might take place before these claims were finally disposed of, or as to the impartiality and competence of the Courts before which the Company, if aggrieved, would have to seek redress. At any rate, the relative position of the two parties to any such suit or discussion respecting these rights would, after the transfer of the legislative and administrative control, be one which must leave the Company as defendant, more or less at the mercy of the plaintiff, and would, to say the least, taint the voluntary character of any agreement to be subsequently arrived at. The only reliance of the Company would be on the honesty and the considerate disinterestedness of the Canadian Parliament and people.

The Committee, moreover, venture to think that their apprehensions on this score are reasonably increased, rather than diminished by all that is reported to have passed in the debates, and especially by the extract of the accompanying report of the speech of Sir John A. Macdonald, K.C.B., the Canadian Premier. The Report is taken from the Canadian News. It is probably condensed, and, as a matter of course, it may be more or less inaccurate.

16. The Act of last Session provides that the incorporation of Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory with Canada may be made by the Queen "on such terms and conditions in each case as are in the Addresses expressed and as the Queen thinks fit to approve, subject to the provisions of this Act; and the provisions of any Order in Council in that behalf, shall have effect as if they had been enacted by Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland."

Now, looking to the previous correspondence between the Hudson's Bay Company and the Colonial Office, it is not unreasonable to suppose, that so far as regards the Territory of the Company, the Act contemplated the insertion of certain terms and conditions in any Address relating to the transfer of such Territory.

But the Address, a copy of which your Grace has had the goodness to transmit to us, contains no "terms and conditions" whatever, except a vague assurance that the "Parliament of Canada will be ready to provide that the legal rights of any corporation, company, or individual within the same shall be respected and placed under the protection of courts of competent jurisdiction."

Such an assurance is of little value, when the party making it disputes the very existence of the rights in question, and at any rate it amounts to no more than a statement that British subjects on British soil shall be entitled to the protection of a Court of Law of some kind, hereafter to be established by the act of one of the parties.

It might be presumed that redress before a competent tribunal would be the right of any one who was wronged, and such an assurance can hardly be deemed a "term or condition" of the kind which the Statute intended to be set out specifically in the Address from the Legislature.

17. The Committee trust it may not for one moment be supposed that they arrogate to themselves any right or entertain the smallest desire to impede or even to comment on the general policy of transferring the government of the North-Western Territory and of the Hudson's Bay Territory to the Confederate Government of Canada. In this, as in everything else, they would bow with submission to the authority of the Crown, and rejoice in any measure which was really calculated to strengthen loyalty and promote union in British North America.

18. What is asked for as a matter of justice to a proprietary consisting of upwards of 1,700 shareholders, who have paid a very large sum on the faith of our Charter, and of the protection of their rights of property in the soil by English law, is the adoption by Her Majesty's Government of one of 30 the following alternatives:—

1st. That some conclusive agreement as to the extent, value and compensation to be made for the claims of the Company, as owners of the soil and minerals of the Hudson's Bay Territory, and some arrangement, by which burthens assumed by them in their political capacity, such as the endowment of the bishoprics, may, when that capacity ceases, be transferred to others, should be completed before not after, the transfer of the government of the North-Western Territory or Hudson's Bay Territory to Canada.

2nd. That before any incorporation of Rupert's Land or the North-Western Territory with Canada, the rights of private property vested in the Company, and the exact limits of such rights, should be ascertained, acknowledged and efficiently protected by law, in a manner binding on any Colonial Government, so that they should not be at any time hereafter impeached or violated without proper compensation.

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.*

DOWNING STREET,

23rd April, 1868.

Colonial Secretary to Governor-General, 23rd April, 1868.

My LORD,—I have already acknowledged, on the 18th of January, Your Lordship's despatch, No 107, of the 21st of December, transmitting a Joint Address from the Senate and House of Commons of Canada to Her Majesty, praying the annexation to Canada of Rupert's Land and the North-West Territory. Your Lordship will have the goodness to inform the Senate and House of Commons that their Address has been duly laid before the Queen.

Her Majesty's Government will be willing to recommend a compliance with the prayer of the Address so soon as they shall be empowered to do so with a just regard to the rights and interests of Her Majesty's subjects interested in those territories. They are advised, however, that the requisite powers of government and legislation cannot, consistently with the existing Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company, be transferred to Canada without an Act of Parliament. Before such an Act can be obtained it is necessary to consider the position of the Hudson's Bay Company.

10 The Company have held their Charter, and exercised privileges conferred by it, for 200 years, including rights of government and legislation, together with the property of all the lands and precious metals; and various eminent Law Officers consulted in succession have all declared that the validity of this Charter cannot be justly disputed by the Crown.

I have, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, called upon the Company to state the terms on which they would be prepared to surrender to the Crown whatever rights they have over the lands and precious metals, including the rights of government, with the intimation that no present payment in money will be made to them, but that in the transference of their rights to Canada they might have a reservation made to them of defined portions of land, and of a share of the future proceeds of the lands and precious metals of the territory up to a certain fixed amount.

20 I enclose copies of the letters which have passed up to the present time between the Company and this Department upon the subject.

I purpose to introduce a Bill into the Imperial Parliament with the view of authorizing any arrangement which may be effected on the basis thus indicated; of defining the territory over which it extends; and authorizing the subsequent transfer to the Canadian Government of the rights and powers to be acquired by the Crown in respect to government and property, in accordance with the prayer of the Address.

30 With respect to the North-West Territory, the same obstacles do not exist to the transfer of the greater part by the Crown to Canada at the present time, subject to proper reservations of the rights and property of Her Majesty's subjects now settled therein, and for the protection of Her Majesty's native subjects; but I apprehend that while it remains separated from Canada by the Hudson's Bay Company's Territory, still under the Company's government, it will not be the desire of Canada to undertake the government of this more remote country. A portion of the North-West Territory immediately adjacent to British Columbia, I am of opinion that it will be necessary for the public advantage to retain in the possession of the Crown, with a view to its incorporation with British Columbia.

I have the honour to be,

My Lord,

Your Lordship's most obedient, humble servant,

SIR,—I am directed by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos to acquaint you that he has had under his consideration the Address from the Parliament of Canada to Her Majesty, praying that Rupert's Land and the North-West Territory may be united with the Dominion of Canada, and placed under the authority of the Canadian Parliament, and the letter from the Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company, dated the 25th of January, on that subject.

They desire, however, to pay due regard to the interests of Her Majesty's subjects already concerned in the Territory; and with that view they will be prepared to make provision for any reasonable terms which may be agreed upon with the Hudson's Bay Company.

I am directed to call your attention to the negotiations which took place in 1864 between the Secretary of State and the Company, as recorded in the correspondence referred to in the margin, and I am to request that you will state what are the terms which the Company would be prepared to accept, proceeding 10 on the principles then adopted—namely, that the compensation should be derived from the future proceeds of the lands, and of any gold which may be discovered in Rupert's Land, coupled with reservations of defined portions of land to the Company.

MEMORANDUM OF SIR GEORGE E. CARTIER AND THE HON. WILLIAM McDOUGALL,

We have the honour to acknowledge communication of a Minute of Council of this day's date, appointing us a Delegation to England to arrange with the Imperial Government the terms upon which Canada may acquire Rupert's Land, and to state that we have much pleasure in accepting the mission.

We would, however, beg to call the attention of the Committee to the terms of the recent Act of the Imperial Parliament to "enable Her Majesty to accept a surrender upon terms of the lands, privileges and rights" of the Hudson's Bay Company which declares that Rupert's Land for the purposes of that Act "shall include the whole of the lands and territories held or claimed to be held" by the Company.

We would also call the attention of the Committee to the terms of the British North America Act, which provides for the admission of Rupert's Land and the North-West Territory, or either of them, into the Union.

We respectfully recommend that we be authorized to arrange with the Imperial Government for the admission of the North-West Territory into union with Canada, either with or without Rupert's Land as may be found practicable and expedient.

October 1st, 1868.

GEO. ET. CARTIER.
W. McDOUGALL.

ON THE 1ST OCTOBER, 1868.*

The Committee have had under consideration a memorandum dated this day from the Hon. Sir George E. Cartier, Bart., and the Hon. Wm. McDougall, stating that they have received communication of the Minute in Council appointing them a delegation to England to arrange with the Imperial Government the terms upon which Canada may acquire Rupert's Land, and expressing their readiness to accept that mission.

They however bring under the notice of the Government the terms of the recent Act of the Imperial Parliament, to enable Her Majesty "to accept a surrender upon terms, of the lands, privileges, and rights" of the Hudson's Bay Company, which declares that "Rupert's Land" for the purposes of that Act "shall include the whole of the lands and territories held or claimed to be held" by the Company.

They also call Your Excellency's attention to the terms of the British North America Act, which provides for the admission of Rupert's Land and the North-West Territory, or either of them, into the Union, and they recommend that they be authorized to arrange with the Imperial Government for the admission of the North-West Territory into union with Canada, either with or without Rupert's Land as may be found practicable and expedient.

The Committee advise that the authority requested by the delegates be granted, and that a copy of this Minute, if approved by Your Excellency, be transmitted to his Grace the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

THE GOVERNOR OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY TO THE UNDER-SECRETARY.*

HUDSON BAY HOUSE, LONDON,

October, 27th, 1868.

Sec. III.

Canadian Documents, and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company, prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

Hudson's Bay Company to Under-Secretary, 27th October, 1868.

SIR,—The Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company have received from Sir C. Lampson and myself reports of the interviews which we have had the honour to have with his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, on the subject of the proposed cession to Canada of the Company's territorial rights, and they have anxiously considered how far they would be justified in altering the terms proposed in my letter of May 13th, with a view to meet the objections which have been raised to them.

They understand his Grace to suggest that instead of the Company being entitled to a free grant of 5,000 acres, to be selected by them for every 50,000 acres which shall be alienated by the Government, the whole territory should be at once divided into sections on the map, and that a certain portion of each section should be allotted to the Company by fixed geographical rules, the Company taking the chance as to the value of the land which might fall to its share; and further, that in order to meet the evils which might arise from the existence of so many blocks of wild land free from taxation, the exemption of the Company's wild land from taxes should continue only for a limited period, say for example, twenty years.

The Committee regret that they are unable to agree to this mode of allotment. One of the chief inducements to their shareholders to accept the proposed arrangements would be that, according to the plan of the Committee, if, as it is hoped, the colonization of the country proceeded rapidly under the new government, the Company would receive blocks of land of moderate size in the vicinity of the new settlements, which would possess an actual value in the market. But if the plan suggested by the Duke of Buckingham were adopted, instead of the grants to the Company proceeding equally with the progress of colonization, the whole country would be dotted over with isolated tracts of wild land belonging to the Company, many of which, even if ultimately available for settlement, must necessarily remain entirely valueless until long after the expiration of the twenty years, and if taxed would be a heavy burden instead of a source of profit to the Company.

The Committee are willing, however, to agree that the exemption from taxes on the Company's wild land should only apply to each block of 5,000 acres; which they may be entitled from time to time to select, for a period of twenty years from the date of selection. This would give the Company a reasonable time within which to turn each block to profitable account, and at the same time the ultimate liability to taxation would prevent these lands from becoming an obstruction to the free progress of settlement.

The Committee think it right to add that they do not propose that land purchased by the Company should be reckoned in the 50,000 acres; and that the selection of the land by the Company naturally implies that the Company shall bear the cost of such a survey as may be necessary to define the land selected, it being understood that the Company shall have the option of making the survey by means of their own officers.

The Committee are quite willing that land granted for such purposes as roads, churches or schools shall not be liable to the payment of one shilling per acre to the Company, provided that the exemption is restricted to the land actually used in the construction of the work, and that the exceptions are specified in the agreement with the Government for the cession of the Company's rights. They also admit that it is proper that a similar exemption should apply to land set apart as Indian Reserves, on the understanding that these reserves will be made by Her Majesty's Government, as they are informed it is his Grace's intention they shall be, before the Company's territory is transferred to Canada, and that, if at any time before the million sterling is paid to the Company, such land shall be used or granted for other purposes, it shall become liable to the payment of a shilling an acre in common with other land.

With respect to the land which the Committee have asked that the Company may retain as private property round their posts and stations, if 6,000 acres are thought to be too much in that part of Rupert's Land which is suited for settlement, the Committee will consent that the 6,000 acres shall only apply to posts which do not lie within the limits referred to under article 10, in my letter of May 13th, as laid down in Sir E. Head's letter of November 11th, 1863, and that within these limits the extent of land to be retained round each post shall not exceed 3,000 acres, all the lands retained to be free from taxation, except when reclaimed from a wild state.

Lastly, the Committee cannot deny that the stipulation that the Committee shall have power to bring before the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council matters in dispute, is open to the objection that the Privy Council acts only as a Court of Appeal, and as they presume that the Company would be entitled to appeal from the local Courts to the Privy Council, they do not think it indispensable to insist on this demand.

The Committee, in declaring their willingness to make these alterations in the terms which they proposed, are actuated by a sincere desire to arrive at an agreement with Her Majesty's Government; but they are conscious that they would be wanting in their duty if they did not add that at the half-yearly meeting of shareholders, held since my letter of May 13th was written, opinions were expressed strongly adverse to any arrangement for the cession of the Company's territorial rights which did not secure the payment as compensation of a sum of hard money.

Sir Edmund Head, in the concluding paragraph of his letter of April 13th, 1864, in which terms were proposed similar to those now under discussion, but involving the cession of a part only of the Company's Territory, avowed to the Duke of Newcastle the apprehensions of the Committee that it might be difficult to convince the shareholders that the offers then made were to their advantage; and although the Committee have felt bound not to recede from the terms contained in my letter of May 13th, which were based on their former offers, they cannot conceal from his Grace that they anticipate a very serious opposition on the part of their shareholders to any such arrangement as that which they have put forward.

His Grace will recollect that at our first interview, before the Canadian delegates had started for England, Sir C. Lamson and I strongly insisted upon this point, and that we suggested that if Canada would agree to pay to the Company one million sterling in bonds, such a settlement might be acceptable to our proprietors.

The Committee entirely share this view. The more they consider the very complicated arrangements which have been devised as a substitute for the payment of a sum of money at once, the more they are convinced that it is as much for the interest of Canada as of the Company, that the claims of the Company should be provided for by a direct compensation, and not by contingent payments extending over a long series of years, and by grants of land under stipulations, which, although indispensable to protect the Company from spoliation, would be invidious in the eyes of the future settlers and embarrassing to the Colonial Government.

At the same time the Committee desire me to assure his Grace, that if their terms as now modified are agreed to by Her Majesty's Government, the Committee will use all their influence to induce the proprietors to confirm them.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

KIMBERLEY.

The Right Honourable C. B. Adderley, M.P.,

1st December, 1868.

MY LORD,—I am directed by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's letter of the 27th October, and to express his Grace's regret that the serious illness of Mr. McLougall, one of the two delegates sent from Canada, which prevented his Grace from communicating with him, should have caused so long a delay in the answer.

APPENDIX.

Sec. III.

Canadian Documents, and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company, prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

His Grace regrets to perceive that the letter under reply does not afford much prospect of an arrangement being come to.

Her Majesty's Government, in the letter of Mr. Adderley of 23rd April to Sir Curtis Lamson, referring to the negotiations which took place in 1864, requested to be informed "what terms the Company would be prepared to accept, proceeding on the principles then adopted, namely, that the compensation should be derived from the future proceeds of the lands, and of any gold which may be discovered in Rupert's Land, coupled with reservations of defined portions of land to the Company."

To this your Lordship replied that the Committee were prepared to recommend—

1. That the Company shall surrender all the territory which they hold under their charter, with the reservation of all their posts and stations, with an area of 6,000 acres round each such post or station; 10 this reservation of 6,000 acres, however, not to apply to the Red River Settlement.

2. That the Company shall be entitled to receive 1s. for every acre of the land surrendered, which shall be disposed of by the Government whether by sale, lease, or free grant, or parted with in any other manner.

3. That one quarter of the sum received by the Government as an export duty for gold and silver, or on leases of gold and silver mines, or for licenses for gold and silver mining, shall be paid to the Company, the amount to be received under this and the preceding article being limited to a total sum, conjointly of £1,000,000 sterling.

4. That the Canadian Government shall confirm all titles to land that has been alienated by the Company at Red River, or elsewhere.

5. That whenever the Government shall have sold, leased, granted, or otherwise parted with 50,000 acres, the Company shall be entitled for every such 50,000 acres to a free grant of 5,000 acres of wild land to be selected by them.

6. That no tax be imposed upon any land belonging to the Company not under cultivation, and no exceptional tax shall be imposed upon the Company's other lands or property, or upon the Company's servants.

7. That the disputed matter of the Company's lands in Canada be settled by issuing grants on the footing formerly agreed upon by Mr. Vankoughnet and Mr. Hopkins.

8. That the Canadian Government shall take over from the Company all the materials for the construction of the telegraph now in Rupert's Land, and the North-West Territory, on payment of the 30 cost price, and the expenses already incurred, with interest.

9. That full liberty to carry on their trade shall be secured to the Company, free from any special or exceptional taxation.

10. That until £1,000,000 sterling, stipulated by articles 2 and 3, shall be paid to the Company, no export duties shall be levied by Canada upon furs exported by the Company, and no import duties shall be levied upon articles imported by the Company into the North-Western Territory, and into that part of Rupert's Land which is not included within the geographical limits laid down in Sir E. Head's letter of 13th November, 1863, the Company to be further entitled to import goods in bond free of duty, through any part of the surrendered territory into the North-Western territory and the aforesaid part of Rupert's Land.

Lastly. That in order to afford to the Company a guarantee for the due fulfilment of these provisions by the Canadian Government, power shall be given to the Company to bring before the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council for decision any matters connected with the carrying into effect the foregoing provisions, in respect of which they may consider themselves aggrieved.

His Grace intimated in reply, that there were "certain points in the terms set forth to which he would not feel at liberty to agree in their present shape," and at the meetings which ensued his Grace expressed his strong objections to the principle of the proposals of the Company respecting reserves of land to be selected from time to time at the discretion of the Company, and to the principle of special exemption from taxation in their favour, and expressed his opinion that there were many points in the other proposals requiring material modification.

Under-Secretary to Hudson's Bay Company, 1st December, 1868.

Your Lordship's present letter intimates that the Company are unable to agree to certain modifications which suggested themselves during the discussions as modes of avoiding the objections entertained by his Grace, and proceeds to state the changes which the Company are willing to agree to, and which his Grace understands to be as follows :

- 1st. That the exemption from taxes on the Company's wild lands shall only last for a period of 10 twenty years from the date of selection.
- 2nd. That any lands purchased by the Company shall not reckon in the quantities of 50,000 acres, in respect of which the Company should be entitled to select 5,000 acres.
- 3rdly. That the Company shall bear the expense of surveying their blocks of 5,000 acres.
- 4thly. That lands granted for such purposes as roads, churches or schools, shall not be liable to the payment of one shilling per acre to the Company.
- 5thly. That the same exemption shall apply to land set apart by Her Majesty's Government as Indian Reserves before the Company's territory is transferred to Canada.
- 6thly. That with regard to land around posts beyond what is designated the fertile belt, 6,000 acres shall be granted, and that only 3,000 acres shall be the quantity within that belt.
- 7thly. That the proposed recourse to the Privy Council as a Court of first instance, shall be abandoned.

His Grace is unable to recommend the adoption by Her Majesty's Government of such terms for the surrender of the territorial rights of the Company. Whatever be the future government of the territory, whether by the Hudson's Bay Company, or by Canada, or by any other authority, very considerable annual outlay will have, as in all other unsettled countries, to be incurred in clearing roads, maintenance and opening of navigation, etc., and surveying.

For these charges, the produce of the early sales of land is the natural resource.

But by the Company's proposals they would deprive the future Government of any prospect for a long time at least of receiving any income.

- 1st. They first stipulate, not for a share of the receipts from land, but for a definite sum per acre a sum in all probability far in excess of what is likely in practice to be obtained for a greater portion.
- 2ndly. They stipulate that they shall retain certain reserves around their posts, amounting, therefore, according to the lists of posts handed in by Sir C. Lampson, to upwards of 500,000 acres of the land most likely to be made available for settlement and sale, as being the land surrounding the established posts of the Company, they have, after long experience, retained as the most advantageous positions for trade and occupation, and of which nearly 100,000 acres surround the posts in what is called the fertile belt of the territory.
- 3rdly. And that they shall also receive a share of mineral rights, and confirmation of all titles.
- 4thly. They proceed to stipulate for a further reserve of one-tenth of the whole territory, and that the Company shall have this tenth in blocks of 5,000 acres to be selected as each successive 50,000 acres is alienated, and not more to select in the same locality, but anywhere; so that for instance, if land is alienated on the higher parts of the Rocky Mountains, at Jasper House for example, in consequence of the mining operations in that district, or for fishing stations or for mining purposes on the coast of Hudson's Bay or Labrador, the Company should be entitled to select the proportionate reserve in such part of the most fertile region as they may consider will realize the utmost profit to them, whether by its cultivation or development, or by its power of obstruction to others,

These lands moreover are to be exempt from taxation for a period of 20 years from selection, and the lands retained round the posts to be entirely free from taxation unless reclaimed.

These conditions His Grace cannot accede to. His Grace would, however, recommend Her Majesty's Government to agree to a surrender on the following conditions:

1st. That the land to be retained by the Company in the neighbourhood of their posts shall vary according to the importance of the post: in no case whatever exceeding 6,000 acres in all for any one post, including the cultivated or reclaimed land now occupied, and in no case exceeding 3,000 acres within the fertile belt for principal posts, and 500 acres for minor posts; the additional land to be set out so as not to include frontage to rivers or tracks, roads, or portages.

2nd. The company to receive one-fourth share of all receipts from land. If any free-grants of land be made for other than public purposes, such lands shall be deemed to have been sold at one shilling per acre.

3rd. That one quarter of the sum received by the Government as an export duty for gold and silver mines, or for licenses for gold and silver mining, shall be paid to the Company, the amount to be received under this and the preceding article being limited to a total sum co-jointly of £1,000,000 sterling.

4th. That the Imperial Government shall confirm all titles to land that has been alienated by the Company at Red River or elsewhere.

5th. That the Company shall have the option of selecting five lots of not less than 200 acres each in each township, whenever it is set out, on payment of rateable cost of survey.

6th. That no exceptional tax shall be imposed on the Company's lands, trade, or servants.

7th. That full liberty to carry on their trade shall be secured by the Company.

8th. The Company to have similar reserves granted them in connection with their posts in the North-West Territory.

9th. The boundary lines between Hudson's Bay and Canada to be defined, and between Hudson's Bay and North-West Territory to be defined by a natural or geographical boundary agreed on.

10th. No wild lands to be taxable until surveyed and marked.

11th. That whenever the payment of £1,000,000 sterling under Article 3 shall have been made as therein provided in cash, or otherwise extinguished by any payment or commutation by Canada to the satisfaction of the Company, the rights of the Company to further selections of lots, to royalties, and share of land receipts shall cease.

12th. Such lands as Her Majesty's Government shall deem necessary to be set aside for the use of the native Indian population shall be reserved altogether from this arrangement, and the Company shall not be entitled to the payment of any share of receipts or any royalty therefrom, or right of selection in respect thereof under previous articles, unless for such part, if any, of these lands as may be appropriated with the consent of the Crown to any other purpose than that of the benefit of the Indian natives.

If these terms are approved, Her Majesty's Government will be prepared to conclude an arrangement, and to submit it to the Canadian Government for their favourable consideration; but if the Company shall not assent to these conditions, Her Majesty's Government will consider themselves unpledged by any of the offers that have been made.

I am, etc.,

The Earl of Kimberley.

THE DEPUTY-GOVERNOR OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY TO THE UNDER-SECRETARY.*
HUDSON'S BAY HOUSE,

LONDON, 22nd December, 1868.

SIR,—I have the honour to enclose for the information of the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, extracts of letters recently received from Governor Mactavish, dated Fort Garry, Red River Settlement, October 10th and November 11th, from which it will be seen that the Canadian Government have intimated through an agent sent to Red River by the direction of the Canadian Commissioner for Public Works, their intention to construct a road from Fort Garry to the Lake of the Woods, through the territory of the Company. A trespass upon the freehold territory of the Company must be committed in order to carry out this intention.

The Committee cannot but look upon this proceeding as a most unusual and improper one, especially as negotiations are at present pending for the transfer of the territory of the Company to Canada. This trespass will be an actual encroachment on the soil of the Company, and that too by a Government which has constantly up to this time and still disputes the right of this Company over that soil.

The Committee therefore ask for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government, but at the same time they beg leave to say that any application by Her Majesty's Government or the Canadian Government for permission to make this road will be favourably entertained.

I have, &c.,

C. M. LAMPSON,

Deputy-Governor.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY TO SIR GEORGE E. CARTIER, ONE OF THE CANADIAN DELEGATES.*

DOWNING STREET,

30th December, 1868.

SIR,—I am directed by Earl Granville to transmit to you a copy of a letter which his Lordship has received from the Deputy Chairman of the Hudson's Bay Company, relating to some steps which have been taken under authority of the Canadian Government, and from which they apprehend some invasion of their territorial rights.

His Lordship will be glad to receive from you or from Mr. McDougall any explanation with which you or he may be able to furnish him of the steps taken by the Canadian Government.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

FREDERIC ROGERS.

SIR,—We have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 30th ult. (with its enclosures), stating that you were directed by Earl Granville to transmit to us a copy of a letter which his Lordship had received from the Deputy Chairman of the Hudson's Bay Company, relating to some steps which have been taken under the authority of the Canadian Government, and from which the Company apprehended some invasion of their territorial rights.

JOINT
APPENDIX.

Sec. III.

Canadian Documents, and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company, prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

Canadian Delegates to Sir J. Rogers, 16 January, 1869.

You inform us that his Lordship will be glad to receive from us any explanation which we may be able to furnish him of the steps taken by the Canadian Government.

We have read the letter of the Deputy Chairman, and extracts from the letters of Governor Mac-tavish, and have much pleasure in being able to furnish his Lordship with what we hope will prove satisfactory information on the subject of the Hudson's Bay Company's complaint.

1. In the month of September last, very precise information reached the Canadian Government that, in consequence of the complete destruction of their crops by locusts, the people of the Red River Settlement, numbering probably from 12,000 to 15,000 souls, were in imminent danger of starvation during the winter about to set in.

2. Numerous and earnest appeals for aid had already been made to the Canadian public by writers in the newspapers, and by clergymen and others acquainted with the country. The Right Reverend Robert Machray, Lord Bishop of Rupert's Land, a member of the Council of Assiniboia, and so far a representative of the Company, visited Ottawa, and urged upon members of the Canadian Government the duty of prompt assistance to avert the threatened calamity.

3. No steps had been taken (so far as the Government could learn) by the Hudson's Bay Company to provide supplies, and aware that a few days' delay at that season might render it impossible to get provisions to Red River in time to afford relief, the Canadian Government appropriated the sum of twenty thousand dollars ($20,000) towards the construction of a road from Lake of the Woods to Fort Garry. The Minister of Public Works (one of the undersigned) was directed to expend the principal part of this sum in the purchase of provisions, which were to be forwarded with all possible despatch to the Red River settlement, and offered to the settlers, not as alms, but in exchange for their labour on a public work in their own vicinity, and of the highest utility to their settlement.

4. A confidential and experienced agent proceeded at once to St. Paul's, Minnesota, and succeeded in forwarding a considerable supply of provisions before the close of navigation. A further quantity has reached Fort Abercrombie, an American post in Dakota Territory, from which point it can be sent to the settlement in the spring.

5. Information has reached the undersigned since their arrival in England, that the Government Agent had, in accordance with his instructions, conferred with the local authorities on his arrival at Fort Garry; that he had received their approval and promise of assistance; that his timely aid was a cause of much joy and thankfulness in the settlement, and that he had proceeded with a large force of labourers to the limit of the prairie country, some thirty miles from Fort Garry, towards Lake of the Woods, and had there commenced the construction of the road.

6. The immediate object of the Canadian Government in taking the steps complained of, was, to supply food to a starving community about to be imprisoned for six months in the heart of a great wilderness, without roads, or means of communication with their fellow-subjects, and to supply it in the way most acceptable to a high-spirited people, viz, in exchange for their labour. It was thought that even the Hudson's Bay Company might look, with favour upon a public work which, when completed, will prove a valuable protection to those under their government against similar dangers in the future. On behalf of the Canadian Government, we deny that a "trespass" has been committed, or that our action in this matter was intended to forestal or embarrass negotiations which the Imperial Parliament had directed to be undertaken for the transfer of the North-Western Territories and Rupert's Land to the Dominion of Canada.

The foregoing explanation may perhaps be deemed sufficient to enable Earl Granville to answer the complaint of the Hudson's Bay Company against the Canadian Government, but the undersigned beg leave to add one or two observations which in their opinion this extraordinary demand for the "intervention of Her Majesty's Government," both invites and justifies. If the Hudson's Bay Company, who claim the right to hold and govern the territory in which the alleged "trespass" has taken place, had performed the first duty of a government towards its people, by providing them with easy means of communication with the outer world, or if they had shown themselves either able or willing to meet the threatened calamity by a prompt effort to forward sufficient supplies to the settlement before the close of navigation, the Canadian Government would have rested happy in the belief that neither humanity nor public policy required or justified their interference.

The assertion of the deputy Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company that the country between Lake of the Woods and Red River is "the freehold territory of the Company," and that the so-called "trespass" of the Canadian Government in sending provisions to the starving settlers, and assisting them to make a road for their own convenience and safety hereafter, is "an actual encroachment on the soil of the Company," might, if unnoticed by us, be claimed as another proof or admission of the rights of the Company in that part of the Continent. We, therefore, beg to remind his Lordship that the boundaries of Upper Canada on the north and west were declared under the authority of the Constitutional Act of 1791, to include "all the territory to the westward and southward" of the "boundary line of Hudson's Bay, to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of 10 Canada." Whatever doubt may exist as to the "utmost extent" of old or French Canada, no impartial investigator of the evidence in the case can doubt that it extended to and included the country between Lake of the Woods and Red River.

The Government of Canada, therefore, does not admit, but, on the contrary, denies, and has always denied the pretensions of the Hudson's Bay Company to any right of soil beyond that of squatters, in the territory through which the road complained of is being constructed.

We have, etc.,

G. E. CARTIER,

WM. McDOUGALL.

20 Sir Frederic Rogers, Bart., etc., etc., etc., Colonial Office.

THE GOVERNOR OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY TO THE UNDER-SECRETARY,*
HUDSON'S BAY HOUSE,

LONDON, February 2nd, 1869.

SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 28th January, addressed to the Deputy-Governor of this Company, enclosing a communication from Sir G. Cartier and Mr. McDougall, on the subject of the recent proceedings of the Canadian Government in the matter of the construction of a road through the Company's territory between Fort Garry and the Lake of the Woods.

After the distinct statement contained in Sir Curtis Lamson's letter of the 22nd December, that the Company, while protesting against a trespass on their land, were prepared favourably to entertain any application for permission to make such a road, either on the part of the Imperial or of the Canadian Government, the Committee think it unnecessary to discuss the greater portion of the letter of the Canadian Ministers. Their objection is not to the road being made, but to its being undertaken by the Canadian Government as a matter of right, as though the territory through which it is to pass were Canadian. Such a step taken at a moment when negotiations are in progress for the transfer of the Company's possessions to Canada, and taken by a Government which openly disputes their title to this portion of them, could not have been allowed to pass unchallenged without derogating from the Company's rights. The Canadian Government themselves seem to have been alive to this. Mr. McTavish states that the agent of that Government (Mr. Snow) on arriving at the Red River, communicated to him his instructions from the Commissioner of Public Works in Canada, containing the expression of 30 "a hope on the part of the Commissioner that the Company's agent here would offer no opposition to Mr. Snow's operations, but would leave the matter entirely in the hands of the Imperial Government." Governor McTavish, upon this, very properly allowed Mr. Snow to commence his operations; and so far as this Company is concerned, no impediment has been, or will be, offered to the prosecution of the work.

If it were worth while to discuss that part of the letter of the Canadian Ministers which refers to the circumstances under which the construction of the road was ordered, the Committee would be able to show that the Company had in no way failed in their duty to the colony; but that they had promptly taken measures for the relief of its inhabitants and had supplied large sums, both by direct grants and by subscriptions raised under their auspices for that purpose, at a period anterior to the appropriation of the Canadian road grant. They would also be able to point out how the delay which has occurred in opening up communication and otherwise developing the resources of the Red River Settlement is due to the restraint which has been imposed upon them by Her Majesty's Government at the request of Canada, and not to any negligence or indifference of their own.

But the Committee desire to avoid the raising of a false issue, and they accordingly instruct me to re-state to Earl Granville the precise complaint which they have to make. It is this:—that while negotiations are going on for the acquisition of their territory by Canada, the Canadian Government are endeavouring to exercise rights of ownership over a portion of that territory, to the exclusion of the Company, and to the prejudice of their title. This they are doing by virtue of an old claim which they have repeatedly advanced, which the Company have invariably disputed, and have declared themselves ready to contest before a court of law, and which Her Majesty's Government, acting under the advice of various law officers of the Crown, have declined to endorse.

The Canadian Government have hitherto shown no inclination to bring their claim to the test of a judicial decision, and in the absence of any such decision, the Committee consider it not unreasonable to ask that due respect should be paid to the Company's uninterrupted possession of the territory for two centuries, and to the numerous and weighty legal opinions which have from time to time been given in their favour.

In appealing to Earl Granville for support in this matter, instead of entering into a controversy with Canada, or taking legal steps to enforce the Company's rights, the committee have been actuated by a desire to proceed as far as possible in accordance with the views and wishes of Her Majesty's Government, as they have endeavoured to do throughout the pending negotiations for the establishment of a settled form of Government at the Red River. They desire now respectfully, but confidently, to claim the support and protection of the Colonial Minister against any invasion of the Company's rights which may have been prompted or facilitated by the policy which they have adopted in order to meet the wishes of the Colonial Office.

I have, etc.,

STAFFORD H. NORTHCOTE.

Hudson's Bay Company
to Sir F.
Rogers,
13 January,
1869.

SIR,—I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of Earl Granville, that I was elected by the shareholders of this Company on Tuesday, the 5th instant, to the office of Governor, vacant by the resignation of the Earl of Kimberley.

It now becomes my duty to address you in reply to Mr. Adderley's letter, dated the 1st December, 1868, which was received by my predecessor on the eve of his resignation, and to which, in consequence of that event, the Committee have not been able to send an earlier answer.

Before making any observations upon the particular topics discussed in Mr. Adderley's letter, I am desired by the Committee to assure Lord Granville that they continue sincerely anxious to promote the object with a view to which this Company was reconstructed five and a half years ago, viz., the gradual settlement of such portions of their territory as admit of colonization; that they adhere to the opinion expressed in their resolution of the 28th August, 1863, viz., that the time has come when it is expedient that the authority, executive and judicial, over the Red River Settlement and the southwestern portion of Rupert's Land, should be vested in officers deriving such authority directly from the Crown; and that they cheerfully accept the decision of Her Majesty's Government, communicated to them in Mr. Adderley's letter of the 23rd April, 1868, viz., that the whole of the Company's territory should, under proper conditions, be united with the Dominion of Canada, and placed under the authority of the Canadian Parliament.

Hudson's Bay Company to Sir F. Rogers, 13 January, 1869.

Acting in accordance with the wish of Her Majesty's Government as conveyed to them in Mr. Elliott's letter of the 23rd January, 1867, the Committee have declined to encourage overtures which have been made to them by private persons for the purchase of portions of the Company's Territories with a view to their colonization, and have kept the whole question in abeyance during the time that the negotiations which have led to the confederation of the British Provinces constituting the Dominion of Canada were proceeding. In the whole of that time they have taken no steps which could give rise to fresh complications, or could place any new difficulty in the way of the admission of their territory into the Confederation when the proper moment should arise; and when they were informed by Mr. Adderley's letter, of the 23rd of April, that the Parliament of Canada had addressed Her Majesty upon this subject, and were requested to state the terms which the Company would be prepared to accept, proceeding upon the principle adopted in the interrupted negotiation of 1864, they unhesitatingly complied with the desire of the Government.

It is therefore with surprise, as well as with regret, that they have learnt from the letter now under reply by the terms proposed by them, even when most strictly in conformity with the principles adopted in 1864, are considered by Her Majesty's Government to be inadmissible, and not to afford much prospect of an arrangement being come to. They find, for instance, that the stipulation that the Company should receive one shilling per acre on lands hereafter sold, which was originally suggested to the Committee by his Grace the late Duke of Newcastle, in Mr. Fortescue's letter of March 11th, 1864, and which has never hitherto been called in question, is the first point to which exception is now taken. Objections are also raised against several other proposals which have been long before the Government, while no notice at all is taken of some which have been made for the first time with a view to the protection of the Company's trade, and with regard to which the Committee are left in ignorance, whether they are considered admissible or not.

The Committee, although somewhat embarrassed by this apparent change in the spirit of the correspondence, desire me, however, to make the following observations upon some of the remarks contained in Mr. Adderley's letter, in order that there may be no misapprehension as to the bearing of their proposals:

The Committee are aware that, as is stated in Mr. Adderley's letter, in order to prepare the country for settlement, very considerable annual outlay will have to be incurred, and that for this charge, the produce of the early sale of land is the natural resource; but they are at a loss to understand upon what ground it is alleged that their proposals would deprive the future Government of the ceded territory of "any prospect, for a long time at least, of receiving any income."

The only part of the territory in which it is probable that any early or extensive settlement will take place is the part known as the fertile belt. It has been confidently asserted by independent persons who have travelled through the country, that a great part of this land is not inferior in quality, or in advantages of climate, to the adjoining United States territory now forming the State of Minnesota, and it has been justly pointed out that, being prairie land, it does not require much labour to render it fit for cultivation. But the price of land in Minnesota ranges, as the Committee are informed from five shillings to one pound per acre. The Committee think, therefore, that the fixed payment of one shilling per acre, proposed by the Duke of Newcastle, and accepted by them as a basis of compensation, cannot be deemed to be unreasonable, in so far as related to land sold within the limits set forth in Sir Edmund Head's letter of the 11th of November, 1863.

As regards any portions of land lying outside those limits which may possibly be sold, the Committee think it very improbable that such sales will take place except for mining purposes, in which case the payment of a shilling per acre could hardly be deemed excessive. In order to save trouble and to obviate disputes, therefore, the Committee proposed the fixed payment of one shilling per acre in respect to all sales wherever they may take place, and they believe that the arrangement would have been, on the whole, more favourable to Canada than that suggested by Mr. Adderley.

Mr. Adderley proceeds to remark, with reference to Lord Kimberley's proposal that the Company should retain certain reserves around their posts, that the reservations would amount to upwards of 500,000 acres. It was, however, stated by Lord Kimberley and the Deputy-Governor at an interview with the Duke of Buckingham upon this subject, that the Committee were willing to confine their claim for reserves to the limits defined by Sir Edmund Head's letter of the 11th November, 1863; that they were prepared to agree that such reservations should be measured by the importance of the posts to which they were to be attached, and should in no case exceed 3,000 acres. The total quantity of land to be retained by the Company under this arrangement, would not exceed 50,000 acres. The Committee cannot agree to the absolute exclusion of these reserves from all frontage to "rivers or tracks, roads or portages" which would render them entirely valueless, although they would have been ready to consider any reasonable limitation of these special advantages.

As regards the right of selecting lands for the Company in proportion to the quantities sold from time to time by the Government, the Committee desire to call Lord Granville's attention to the reasons given in Sir E. Head's letter of the 13th April, 1864, for adopting this mode of reservation in preference to that of "setting apart beforehand a number of isolated tracts of wild land, dotted over the surface of the colony, and calculated to impede the free flow of settlement in the territory." Their proposal was framed with reference to sales in the fertile belt only, and it never entered into their minds to contemplate such contingencies as those suggested in Mr. Adderley's letter. In order, however, to obviate all cavil upon this point, they would have been quite willing to limit the Company's right of selection to the case of lands sold or alienated within Sir E. Head's limits, provided that it were agreed that no alienations should take place beyond those limits, except either for distinctly public purposes or for the bona fide carrying on of agricultural or mining operations. As regards Mr. Adderley's proposal that the right of selection should be confined to five lots of 200 acres each in each township, as it is set out, the Committee can only remark that the character of this proposal must depend upon the size of the township, of which no indication has been given.

The Committee still adhere to the opinion that under the peculiar circumstances of the proposed transfer of their territory, it would be reasonable that their wild lands should for a limited time be exempt from taxation, in order to allow them a fair opportunity of bringing them into profitable cultivation.

They observe that Mr. Adderley makes no reference to the tenth stipulation contained in Lord Kimberley's letter of the 13th May, viz., that until the stipulated sum of £1,000,000 sterling has been paid to the Company, no export duties shall be levied by Canada upon furs exported by the Company nor any import duties on articles imported by them into the North-Western Territory, and into that part of Rupert's Land which is not included within the geographical limits laid down in Sir Edmund Head's letter of November 11th, 1863. This is a point to which the Committee attached very great importance. If it had been proposed by the Canadian Government to make a direct purchase of the Company's territory, and to pay the price of it at once, the Company would, of course, have accepted their fair share of the burdens which annexation might be expected to involve. But if the purchase money is to be withheld until the Canadian Government have sold off 20,000,000 acres of the land, or have realized a considerable sum by the produce of mining operations, it is reasonable that the pressure of the fiscal burdens, which would fall almost exclusively upon the Company's trade, should be suspended also. Otherwise it might happen that, in consequence of the neglect or the inability of the Canadian Government to proceed with the settlement of the territory, the Company would be subjected to very heavy contributions to the colonial treasury without receiving the smallest benefit in return. As an illustration of the extent to which they might thus be injured, were no limitation placed upon the colonial power of taxation, I may observe that according to the present Canadian tariff, the duty upon the value of the Company's imports alone would amount to about £20,000 a year, while any export duty that might be laid upon their furs would operate still further to their disadvantage. The Committee feel confident that Lord Granville will acknowledge the reasonableness of their taking precautions against such a contingency.

The Committee have desired me to offer to Lord Granville these explanations of their proposals, in order to show that they have done their best to comply with the desire [of Her Majesty's Government that they should submit a scheme founded on the principles of the negotiations of 1864. They have not, however, failed to perceive from an early period of the lengthened correspondence which has taken place between them and the Government, that those principles necessarily gave rise to many difficulties; and they have felt this the more strongly since the negotiations, originally commenced between the Company and Her Majesty's Government, have virtually become negotiations between the Company and the Government of Canada. They cannot disguise from themselves the danger which exists that arrangements so complicated, and involving so many topics for future discussion, are likely to lead to the Company's being placed in a position of antagonism to the Government of Canada, and to the creation of a state of things injurious not only to their own interests, but to the welfare of the country itself.

10 They are sincerely anxious to co-operate with the Canadian Government in the settlement, development, and improvement of the territories with which they have been so long connected, and they believe that if the arrangement between them can be placed on a satisfactory footing, it will be in their power to render material assistance to the colonial authorities in this respect. They believe that if a simpler arrangement than that which has recently been under discussion, could be adopted, and if the Canadian Government were prepared to complete the purchase of the territory at once by the payment of a sum of money or by the delivery of bonds, it would conduce to a more satisfactory result than the prolongation of a controversy as to the minute points of such a scheme as has been under consideration.

Should Lord Granville be of this opinion, and should his Lordship think it desirable to recommend any proposal of the kind to the Canadian delegates, this Committee will gladly place themselves in 20 fuller communication with him on the subject.

GENTLEMEN,—I am directed by Earl Granville to transmit to you, for any observations which you may wish to offer upon it, the enclosed copy of a letter from the Hudson's Bay Company in answer to 30 the proposals made to them by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos in the letter from this Department of the 1st of December last, with respect to the proposed cession to the Crown of the Company's territorial rights in British North America.

40 SIR,—We have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th ultimo, enclosing a copy of Sir Stafford Northcote's letter of the 13th ultimo, in reply to proposals made to the Hudson's Bay Company for the cession to the Crown of their territorial rights in British America, by his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, in the letter of Mr. Adderley of the 1st December last.

You state that Earl Granville directed you to transmit this document to us for any observations which we may wish to offer upon it. His Lordship's courtesy and consideration in sending us a copy of Sir Stafford Northcote's letter and inviting us to express our views upon it are gratefully acknowledged, but upon reflection we thought it would be expedient to refrain from any formal expression of our opinion on new and indefinite propositions, until we had received some intimation of the view which his Lordship was likely himself to take of them, or of the policy in respect to the general question which Her Majesty's present advisers intend to adopt.

At an interview with which we were favoured by Earl Granville on the 26th ultimo, he expressed his preference for a less complicated mode of dealing with the Hudson's Bay question than that proposed by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, and requested us to communicate to him our observations on the reply of Sir Stafford Northcote, and especially on the proposition with which his letter concludes, viz, that the Canadian Government should "complete the purchase of the territory at once, by the payment of a sum of money or by the delivery of bonds."

As we have had but few opportunities to confer with his Lordship since his accession to office, it may be proper, before considering Sir Stafford Northcote's letter, to state the position of the Canadian Government, as we apprehend it, in this negotiation.

The Canadian Delegates to Sir Frederic Rogers, 8 February, 1869.

The British North America Act of 1867 affirmed the policy of uniting under one Government all the colonies, provinces, and territories of British North America. Three provinces were united at once and provision was made by the 146th section, for the admission into the union of the remaining colonies, on address to Her Majesty by their respective Legislatures and the Parliament of Canada.

The North-west Territories and Rupert's Land, or either of them, are to be admitted on the address of the Parliament of Canada alone, and on such terms and conditions as the Canadian Parliament may in its address express, and Her Majesty approve.

In pursuance of the policy of the Imperial Parliament thus distinctly affirmed, the Canadian Parliament at its first session under the new constitution, adopted an address to Her Majesty for the incorporation of the North-west Territory and Rupert's Land with the Dominion of Canada. The terms and conditions expressed in the address were,—

1st. That Canada should undertake the duties and obligations of Government and legislation in respect of those territories.

2nd. That the legal rights of any corporation, company, or individual within the territories should be respected, and that provision should be made for that purpose by placing those rights under the protection of courts of competent jurisdiction.

3rd. That the claims of the Indian tribes to compensation for lands required for purposes of settlement should be considered and settled, in conformity with the equitable principles which have uniformly governed the British Crown in its dealings with the aborigines.

The above were the only terms and conditions which, in the opinion of the Canadian Parliament, it was expedient to insert in the Order in Council, authorized by the 146th section.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, on receiving the address of the Canadian Parliament, consulted the law officers of the Crown, who advised, among other things, that "there would be much difficulty created by the existence of the charter" of the Hudson's Bay Company, "to putting into execution the powers of the 146th section of the British America Act, 1867, assuming that the Hudson's Bay Company were adverse to the union."

A Bill was thereupon carried through the Imperial Parliament, apparently to remove the "difficulties" which the law officers had discovered. It reverses the order of procedure contemplated by the Act of 1867, and observed by the Canadian Parliament in its address, and makes the assent of the Company a condition precedent to the transfer.

The Canadian Government were not consulted as to the terms of this Act; they could not understand why it was necessary, and greatly doubted the expediency of passing it.

The Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, having opened negotiations with the Hudson's Bay Company under the authority of the Act last mentioned, invited a delegation from the Canadian Government to confer with him in this country. The undersigned, duly commissioned for that purpose, repaired to London in October last, and had frequent interviews with his Grace before his retirement from office.

The proposals submitted to the Company by the late Government in the letter of Mr. Adderley of the 1st of December last, were not made at our suggestion, although we were disposed to think (and so informed His Grace) that if the Company accepted them, the Canadian Parliament might be persuaded to undertake the duties of legislation and government in the territories on the conditions specified.

The Company, through Sir Stafford Northcote, have declined to accept either the principle or the mode of settlement proposed by the late Government, but suggest a new and summary method of closing the negotiations, by demanding that the Canadian Government should, by a payment in cash or bonds, "complete the purchase of the territory at once." No sum is mentioned, and no data given from which it can be inferred. Under these circumstances, we are asked, as representatives of the Canadian Government, to communicate to Earl Granville any observations we may wish to offer on this reply and proposition of the Company.

His Lordship will readily perceive from the foregoing recital, that, as representatives of the Canadian Government, we are in the position of spectators of a negotiation begun and carried on upon principles and under conditions to which we are strangers, rather than that of assenting principals, responsible for its initiation, and bound by its result.

Without undertaking, therefore, that our views on every point will be approved by the Canadian Government, we proceed most respectfully to offer a few observations on Sir Stafford Northcote's reply to the recent proposals of the Imperial Government.

It will be observed that two things are assumed in these proposals to the Company, which the Canadian Government have always disputed.

1st. That the charter of Charles II. is still valid, and grants the right of soil, or freehold, of Rupert's Land to the Company.

2nd. That Rupert's Land includes the so-called "Fertile Belt," extending from the Lake of the Woods to the Rocky Mountains.

The law officers of the Crown in England have, on two or three occasions, given their opinion in favour of the first assumption, but never, so far as we are aware, in favour of the second. The report of the law officers in 1857 admits that the geographical extent of the territory granted must be determined by excluding the country that "could have been rightfully claimed by the French as falling within the boundaries of Canada" (which the charter itself excludes by express words), and states that "the assertion of ownership on important public occasions, as at the treaties of Ryswick and Utrecht," should be considered; and also "the effect of the Acts of 1774 and 1791." The most recent opinion of the law officers of the Crown which we have seen (January 6th, 1868), as to the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, does not even by implication support their present claim to the fee simple of nearly one-third of the American continent. On the contrary, Sir John Karslake and his colleagues conclude their report with the emphatic statement that it is "very necessary, before any union of Rupert's Land with Canada is effected, that the true limits of the territory and possessions held under the charter should be accurately defined." An assumption, therefore, which covers so much ground, and is unsupported by any competent legal authority; which ignores the repeated protests and claims of Canada; and seeks to supply a basis upon which a surrender for valuable consideration may be made,—is, to say the least, a most favourable assumption for the Company. We notice these points in Mr. Adderley's letter before mentioned on Sir Stafford Northcote's reply, to prevent the possible inference that we have acquiesced in them.

Sir Stafford Northcote assures Lord Granville that the Company "continues sincerely anxious to promote the object with a view to which the Company was reconstructed five and a-half years ago, viz: the gradual settlement of such portions of their territory as admit of colonization." It would be tedious to quote the numerous and positive averments by members and governors of the Hudson's Bay Company, in the course of official inquiries during the last fifty years, that their territories (in which they included the Red River and the Saskatchewan districts) are totally unfit for colonization. The evidence of Sir George Simpson before the House of Commons Committee of 1857, is a fair sample of the views heretofore entertained and avowed by the representatives of the Company. (Vide Commons Report, 1857; Questions 716, 717, 718, 719, etc.) Mr. Ellice, for many years the ruling spirit of the Company, declared before the same Committee that the Red River Settlement was an "unwise speculation," and "had failed;" that "the climate is not favourable;" that the Saskatchewan is a country capable of settlement only when "the population of America becomes so dense that they are forced into situations less fit for settlement than those they occupy now;" that the winters are "rigorous," and the country badly off for "fuel," etc. (Questions 5340 and 5347.)

With such views of the unfitness of the country for settlement, and avowing their belief that colonization and the fur trade could not exist together, it is not surprising that the Company have always cherished the latter, which was profitable, and discouraged, and, as far as possible, prevented the former, which had proved an "unwise speculation." It is true that the company was "re-constructed" in 1863, with loud promises of a new policy. A great road across the continent was to be made, a telegraph line was to be put up, and emigration and colonization developed on a large scale. The Duke of Newcastle, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, was so much impressed by the zeal and public spirit of the gentlemen who effected the reconstruction, that he wrote despatches to the Canadian Government on their behalf, and evidently believed that a new era was about to open in the North-West, and the wild animals and fur traders retreat before the march of "European" settlers. The stock of the old Company, worth in the market about £1,000,000, was bought up, and by some process which we are unable to describe, became £2,000,000. A show of anxiety to open postal and telegraphic communication was made, and "heads of proposals" were submitted to the Governments of Canada and British Columbia, which on examination were found to embrace a line of telegraph only, with the modest suggestion that the two Governments should guarantee the Company a profit of not less than 4 per cent. on their expenditure! A proposal so absurd could only have been made to be rejected, and it was rejected accordingly. The surplus capital of the reconstructed Company, which was called up for the avowed purpose of opening their territories to "European colonization, under a liberal and systematic scheme of land settlement," has never been applied to that purpose. Five and a half years have passed since the grand scheme was announced to the world, but no European emigrants have been sent out, no attempts to colonize have been made. Sir Stafford Northcote was not probably aware, when he vouched for the bona fides of the Hudson's Bay Company as promoters of colonization, that a solemn vote of the shareholders was taken in the month of November, 1866, which condemned and rejected the policy of colonization, absolutely and definitively.

While unable, for the reasons stated, to concur in Sir Stafford Northcote's assurance that the Hudson's Bay Company are anxious to promote colonization, we are gratified to learn that they "adhere" to the resolution of 28th August, 1863, that the time has come when it is expedient that "the authority, executive and judicial, over the Red River Settlement and the south-western portion of Rupert's Land, should be vested in officers deriving such authority directly from the Crown."

The first remark we have to make upon this reference to the resolution of 1863 is, that it admits the continued incapacity of the Company as a governing power; the second, that if this was true in 1863,—if at that time it had become expedient to substitute the authority of the Crown for that of the Company,—it is much more expedient, if not absolutely necessary, now; and third, that if the Company are to be relieved of the duty and cost of government which their charter imposes, and which they admit they do not and cannot properly discharge, compensation should be made, not to the Company, as is claimed, but by the Company to those who take the burden off their shoulders.

We confess we have failed to discover any evidence, and therefore cannot believe, that the Company have "cheerfully" accepted the decision of Her Majesty's Government, "that the whole of the Company's territory should, under proper conditions, be united with Canada." A brief notice of the acts, in contrast with the professions of the Company, will, we think, account for the ill success of our researches and justify our incredulity.

The representatives of the Company, while declaring before the House of Commons Committee in 1857 (as we have already shown) that their territories were "unfit for settlement," professed their readiness to surrender any portion of them that might be desired by the Imperial or Canadian Government for that purpose.

Mr. Ellice declared in the most unqualified terms, not only that the Company was willing to surrender, but that it was the duty of the Government to see that no mere trading corporation obstructed "for one moment," nor to the extent of "one acre of land fit for settlement," the "dominion of the actual settlers." (Commons Report, 1857; questions 5359, 5360, and 5933.)

February,

The Governor of the Company informed the Colonial Secretary (18th July, 1857) that an inquiry into the "geographical extent of the territory granted by their charter," which the law officers had recommended, was of little importance, because, if the object of the inquiry was "to obtain for Canada land fit for cultivation and the establishment of agricultural settlers, the Directors are already prepared to recommend to the shareholders of the Company to cede any lands which may be required for that purpose. The terms of such cession," he assured Mr. Labouchere, "would be a matter of no difficulty between Her Majesty's Government and the Company."

Mr. Ellice had previously told the House of Commons Committee, that the question of boundary was "of no importance at all," because "if the Province of Canada requires any part of the territory, or the whole of it for purposes of settlement, it ought not to be permitted for one moment to remain in the hands of the Hudson's Bay Company." He added that "less money than would be spent in litigation upon the subject would be sufficient to indemnify the Hudson's Bay Company for any claim which they could have on giving up any disputed part of their territory."

These assurances induced the Committee to negative propositions for ascertaining by a judicial inquiry the validity of the charter, or the position of boundaries, and to report in favour of annexing to Canada "such portion of the land in her neighborhood as may be available to her for the purposes of settlement, with which she is willing to open and maintain communication, and for which she will provide the means of local administration." The Committee "trusted" that there would be "no difficulty in effecting arrangements as between Her Majesty's Government and the Hudson's Bay Company," for ceding the territory on "equitable principles."

It may be proper to remind Earl Granville, that leading members of the Committee of 1857, taking the offers of the Company on the subject of colonization to mean what the language of their representatives imported, strongly opposed the recommendation to leave the question open for "amicable adjustment" upon "equitable principles," with the certainty of protracted negotiation and a chance of ultimate disagreement. Mr. Gladstone accordingly submitted resolutions for a prompt and definitive settlement of the whole question. He proposed—

1st. "That the country capable of colonization should be withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the Hudson's Bay Company."

2nd. "That the country incapable of colonization should remain within their jurisdiction."

He proposed that in the country remaining within their jurisdiction power should be reserved to Her Majesty's Government to make grants "for the purposes of mines and fisheries, but with due regard to the immunities and trade of the Company." No "immunities" were even suggested with respect to the country which was to be withdrawn from colonization. He proposed to ignore the charter, by declaring that the jurisdiction of the Company "should rest henceforth upon the basis of Statute." He quoted the Governor's letter above referred to, "as an expression of the willingness of the Company to accept in principle the arrangement" he proposed, and ended with the suggestion that, "as the Company had tendered concessions which may prove sufficient to meet the case," no decision seemed necessary as to the question of raising "a judicial issue with the view of ascertaining the legal rights of the Company." The propositions of Mr. Gladstone were only lost in the Committee by the casting vote of the chairman.

Twelve years have passed since these offers were made by the Company and accepted by a committee of Parliament. Every Colonial Secretary, from 1858 to the present moment, has attempted to carry out the recommendation of the committee, with the assent of the Company, but without success. Two Acts of the Imperial Parliament have been passed, with provisions to facilitate the arrangement, but are yet without fruit. Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton characterized the offers of the Company during his administration as "illusory," and declared that they "by no means met the exigencies of the case." He expressed his regret at a determination on their part which "retains the very difficulty in the way of speedy and amicable settlement which he had sought to remove," and stated that if Canada declined to resort to "legal proceedings" (which he had recommended) "it would be his duty to consider whether negotiations with the Company can be resumed or whether in the last resort Her Majesty's Government must take the matter into their own hands and proceed on their own account." (Mr. Merivale's letter to H. H. Berens, 9th March, 1859.) Sir Edward remained in office long enough to put an end to the Company's license of exclusive trade in British Columbia and the Indian territories, but not long enough to carry out his policy of "connecting the two sides of British North America without the obstacle interposed by a proprietary jurisdiction between them."

The Duke of Newcastle opened negotiations with the Company, in 1863-4 with much vigour. But after various proposals and counter-proposals including the "reconstruction" of the Company, he was obliged to treat their propositions as "inadmissible."

Mr. Cardwell, during his administration, could not accept their proposals "without considerable modifications."

The Duke of Buckingham, after many discussions with the representatives of the Company regretted to perceive that their proposals "did not afford much prospect of an arrangement being come to"; and in the communication to which the letter of Sir Stafford Northcote is a reply, declared himself "unable to recommend the adoption" of the terms demanded by the Company.

The Canadian Delegates to
Sir F. Rogers,
8th February,
1869.

Our notice of what, in Sir Stafford Northcote's opinion, constitutes a "cheerful acceptance of the 10 decision of Her Majesty's Government, would be incomplete, if we did not remind Earl Granville that the Company's "proper conditions" for the surrender of that portion of the North-Western Territories, established there within the last fifty years, rose from a question of "no importance at all" in 1857, or at most, of "less money than would be spent in a litigation on this subject," (House of Commons Report, Question 5834,) to the retention, in 1863, in fee simple, of half the land proposed to be surrendered, with various other conditions, including a guarantee by the Governments of Canada and British Columbia of an annual profit on the Company's expenditures for improvements on their own property! In 1864 these conditions took the form of a demand, first, to be paid £1,000,000 sterling from sales of 20 lands and mines, with large reservations "to be selected by them," etc.; and, secondly, to be paid £1,000,000 sterling in cash, with other terms and reservations favourable to the Company.

In 1868 these conditions for the surrender of territorial and governing rights over the whole territory remained at £1,000,000, as in the first proposition of 1864, with large reservations of land at "selected" points, specially exempted from taxation, and with full liberty to carry on their trade free from the export and import duties to which all other subjects of Her Majesty in that country would be exposed.

In 1869 these various proposals, which no Secretary of State could possibly entertain, have all been apparently merged in one grand proposition to sell out "the territory at once for a sum of money," in cash or bonds, the amount of which is not stated.

We content ourselves under this head with the observation, that whatever others may be able to see in all these transactions, we are utterly unable to discover either a cheerful acceptance of the decision of any Government, or an honest disposition to fulfil the solemn pledges made to Parliament in 1837, on the faith of which the Company was unquestionably saved from judicial or legislative extinction.

Sir Stafford Northcote claims credit for the Company because they have "declined to encourage overtures which have been made to them by private persons for the purchase of portions of the Company's territory with a view to their colonization." Our information is (and we can give Earl Granville names and dates, if the point is deemed of any importance) that the only "overtures" of the kind mentioned which the Company have received, were not merely "encouraged," but suggested and concocted by prominent members of the Company, for the purpose of producing an impression on the Government, 40 and with a view, not to colonization, but to negotiation and the stock market.

We are not sure that we understand the statement of Sir Stafford Northcote that the Company "have taken no step which would give rise to fresh complications or place any new difficulty in the way of the admission of their territory into the Confederation." The sale of land to private parties for colonization (assuming that bona fide offers have been received from such parties) could not give rise to much complication, except in the affairs of the Company. If Sir Stafford hints at the negotiations which were lately reported to be going on with certain American speculators in London for denationalizing and Americanizing the Company with a view to the "admission of their territory" into the United States, instead of the Confederation, we respectfully submit that while such a difficulty might indeed be "new," the proper person to solve it would be Her Majesty's Attorney-General with the aid of 50 a court and jury of competent jurisdiction.

We do not understand that Earl Granville expects us to defend in detail the Duke of Buckingham's proposals, or to answer all the objections made to them by Sir Stafford Northcote. The Government of Canada, as we have already reminded his Lordship, neither suggested the Act of Parliament nor the terms of the negotiation, which the late Secretary of State for the Colonies attempted to carry out under its authority. The Canadian plan of dealing with the question of the North-Western Territory and Rupert's Land is set forth in the address of the Canadian Parliament to Her Most Gracious Majesty, and we do not feel at liberty, as representatives, to suggest any other mode, until we are informed by Her Majesty's Government that the one proposed is deemed impracticable.

Sir Stafford Northcote's suggestion that "the payment of a sum of money" for the purchase of the territory would conduce to a more satisfactory result, is, we believe, the point upon which Earl Granville specially desires to have our views. Assuming that by "territory" he means the whole territory to which the Company lay claim, and that they are to continue as a trading corporation, retaining their posts, and allotments of land in their neighborhood, as he states was agreed upon by the Duke of Buckingham and Lord Kimberley, we have to observe:—

1. This proposition involves an abandonment of the principle which two Secretaries of State (and it must be presumed, two successive administrations), declared after much consideration, and in view of the transactions of 1857, was properly and justly applicable to this case, viz.: That the compensation should be derived from the future revenue of the territory itself, and payable only as it came into the hands of the Government. This principle was also accepted by the Company in their communication of 13th April, 1864.

2. On the other hand, the principle of ascertaining and fixing a money value upon the territorial rights of the Company "in the British territory east of the Rocky Mountains and north of the American and Canadian lines," and of extinguishing those rights by a payment "at once," was suggested, in 1865, by a delegation from the Canadian Government of that day, and assented to by Mr. Cardwell, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, and his colleagues

If the latter principle and mode of settlement is now to be adopted, it is obvious that the first question is, What is the nature of these "rights" and what territories do they affect? And the second, What are the rights, separated from the duties and burdens attached to them by the Charter, fairly, worth?

We shall not attempt to answer these questions fully in the present communication, but we venture to submit for Earl Granville's consideration a few facts and inferences, which cannot, we believe be disputed, and which are essential elements in any calculation which may be attempted on the basis of a money purchase.

1. The Charter of Charles II. (and for the present we raise no question as to its validity) could not and did not grant to the Hudson's Bay Company any territory in America which was not then (1670) subject to the Crown of England.

2. The Charter expressly excluded all lands, etc., then "possessed by the subjects of any other Christian prince or state."

3. By the Treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye (1632), the King of England resigned to the King of France the sovereignty of Acadia, New France and Canada, generally, and without limits.

4. "La Nouvelle France" was then understood to include the whole region of Hudson's Bay, as the maps and histories of the time, English and French, abundantly prove.

5. At the Treaty of Ryswick (1697), twenty-seven years after the date of the Charter, the right of the French to "places situated in Hudson's Bay" was distinctly admitted; and although commissioners were appointed (but never came to any agreement) to "examine and determine the pretensions which either of the said kings hath to the places situate in Hudson's Bay," and with "authority for settling the limits and confines of the lands to be restored on either side," the places taken from the English (i. e. from the Hudson's Bay Company) by the French previous to the war, and "retaken by the English during this war, shall be left to the French by virtue of the foregoing (the 7th) article." In other words, the forts and factories of the Hudson's Bay Company established in Hudson's Bay under pretence of their Charter and taken possession of by the French in time of peace, on the ground that they were an invasion of French territory, were restored, by the Treaty of Ryswick, to the French and not to the Company.

6. By the Treaty of Utrecht, 1714, "the Bay and Straits of Hudson, together with all lands, seas, sea coasts, rivers, and places situate in the Bay and Straits, and which belong thereto," were finally ceded to Great Britain.

7. As no definite boundary was ever established between the possessions of the French in the interior and the English at Hudson's Bay, down to the Treaty of Paris, 1763, when the whole of Canada was ceded to Great Britain, the extent of the actual possession by the two nations for some period, say from the Treaty of Utrecht to the Treaty of Paris, affords the only rational and true basis for ascertaining that boundary.

8. The evidence is abundant and conclusive to prove that the French traded over and possessed the whole of the country known as the Winnipeg Basin and "Fertile Belt," from its discovery by the Europeans down to the Treaty of Paris, and that the Hudson's Bay Company neither traded nor established posts to the south or west of Lake Winnipeg, until many years after the cession of Canada to England.

9. No other or subsequent grant to the Company was ever made which could possibly extend their territorial rights under their Charter. The license to trade in the Indian territories, which they obtained in 1821, was revoked in 1858, and has not been renewed.

10. The country which, in view of these facts, must be excluded from the operation of the Charter, includes all the lands fit for cultivation and settlement in that part of British America.

It will be for Earl Granville to consider whether this Company is entitled to demand any payment whatever for surrendering to the Crown that which already belongs to it. We confess our utter inability, upon any principle of law, or justice, or public policy, with which we are acquainted, to estimate the amount which ought to be paid under such circumstances. The only basis of computation we can discover, applicable to such a case, is the cost of the legal proceedings necessary, if any be necessary, to recover possession. A person has taken possession of a part of your domain under the pretence that it is included in a deed which you gave him for some adjoining property before you purchased the domain. You want to get rid of him, but will be compelled to bring an action. He is artful, stubborn, wealthy and influential. He will be able to worry you with a tedious litigation. How many acres will you allow him to "reserve," and how much will you pay to save yourself the cost and trouble of a law suit? Compromises of this kind are not unknown in private life, and the motives and calculations which govern them may be applicable to the present case. We recommend this mode of computing the amount of the payment to be made for the surrender of the North-West Territory, as distinguished from Rupert's Land, with all the more confidence, because it has already been suggested by one of the ablest and most trusted of the representatives of the Company. (Vide evidence of Right Honourable E. Ellice, House of Commons Report, 1857, question 5834.)

With respect to Rupert's Land, or the "lands and territories," "upon the coasts and confines of the seas, bays," etc., "that lie within the entrance of the straits commonly called Hudson's Straits," "not possessed by the subjects of any other Christian prince or state," a different rule, we admit, may be held to apply. Giving to the words of the grant the widest construction, territorially, that could possibly be admitted by any judicial body with the facts of the case in evidence before it, or, giving to these words the construction which the Company themselves applied for a hundred years from the date of their Charter, the "rights" they propose to sell are of little commercial value. No revenue, we feel assured, will ever be derived from them. The fur trade is the only industry the country offers as a source of profit, and this, if we rightly understand Sir Stafford Northcote's suggestion, the Company wish to retain.

It has never been alleged, even by the most sanguine advocates of the new theory of the Company respecting land sales, that any revenue can be derived from that source within the limits which we have assigned to Rupert's Land. The cost of government there, inconsiderable though it may be, will always exceed any possible revenue. We are thus led to the same conclusion as in the case of the territory claimed, but not owned, by the Company, viz., that what they propose to sell has no pecuniary or commercial value. They are there, however, by at least a show of right. Being there, they obstruct the progress of Imperial and Colonial policy, and put in jeopardy the sovereign rights of the Crown over one-third (and as some think, even a larger portion) of the North American Continent. "What is it worth to have this obstruction quietly removed?" This is, perhaps, the true question; but the answer, we submit, belongs rather to Her Majesty's Government—which has the power, in the event of resistance, to remove the evil by a summary process—than to those who are a little more than spectators of the negotiation.

Earl Granville is aware that several attempts have been made since 1857 to arrive at a definite agreement on the subject of compensation. The suggestions and proposals on each side, together with the actual market value of the Company's stock at different periods, supply data which his Lordship may deem of importance; and we therefore respectfully submit our views as to the conclusions which may be deduced from them.

The first attempt of the Imperial Government to estimate, and express in pounds sterling, the compensation which it would be reasonable to offer to the Company, was made by the Duke of Newcastle in 1864. The greatest sum which, after "very grave consideration," his Grace felt himself able to propose for the surrender of the country west of Lake Winnipeg was £250,000. But the payment was subject to the following conditions:—

1. £150,000 was to be derived from the sale of lands by the Government within the territory
2. The payment was to be made at the rate of 1s. per acre sold, but to be entirely dependent on the Government receipts.
3. Payments were to cease whenever they reached £150,000; and absolutely at the end of fifty years.
4. The company was to be paid one-fourth of the sum received by the Government for export duty on gold or for mining licenses or leases for gold-mining in the territory, for fifty years, or until the aggregate amounted to £100,000.
5. The payment of any part of the £250,000 was contingent on the ability of the Company to place Her Majesty's Government in possession of an "indisputable title" to the territory ceded by them as against the claims of Canada.

The last condition was objected to by the Company on the ground that they could only give such title as they had, which they contended "must be taken for better for worse." The Duke of Newcastle renewed his offer, modifying the last condition into a stipulation that, in case it should be found inadvisable, the territory eastward of a line passing through Lake Winnipeg and Lake of the Woods, might be ceded or annexed to Canada, in which case nothing would be payable to the Company in respect of that territory.

The present value in cash of such an offer, subject to the conditions and contingencies specified, would be very difficult to ascertain. The revenue from export duty on gold and for licenses would probably be nil. The revenue from land sales, if the cost of surveys, management, and necessary roads were deducted, would be nil also. It is very doubtful whether, if these deductions be made, the revenue from land sales in the Provinces of Canada, from the cession in 1763 to the present time, would show a surplus.

Sir Stafford Northcote quotes the price of land in Minnesota, and thence infers the value of lands in the Red River and Saskatchewan districts, which lie from five to ten degrees further north and are still in the possession of the wild Indians of the plains. But we think it will be found that the lands in Minnesota, which sell for "one pound per acre," are either private lands in the neighbourhood of towns, or the property of railway companies, on or near which millions of dollars have been expended to make them saleable. They are certainly not public lands unimproved by public expenditure. Sir Stafford ought to have mentioned at the same time a fact, which we believe is known to every emigrant who leaves the British Isles for America, that, in the Western States of the Union, and in the Provinces of Canada, wild lands are now given to settlers as "free grants," and we may add, this policy is more likely to be extended than reversed. To talk of the value of public lands as a source of revenue, distant from one to two thousand miles from available markets, and without roads or navigable waters by which to approach them, is to contradict all experience, or to assume that the cost of surveys and management, and of canals, roads, and other improvements for their development and settlement, will be supplied by those who do not own them for the benefit of those who do.

But in order to arrive at some result that can be expressed in figures, we will assume that the sum ascertained by the Duke of Newcastle to be a sufficient "compensation" would under his proposition have been paid within fifty years, and at an average rate per annum. We thus give the Company the benefit of all the doubts in the case, and reduce the question to a simple problem in arithmetic: What 10 is the present value of an annuity of £5,000 per annum for fifty years?

That value, we submit, is the highest amount in cash that can be claimed as an equivalent for the offer made to the Company in 1864, by his Grace the Duke of Newcastle.

The next offer of the Imperial Government which mentions a specific sum, is that made by his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, on the 1st December last. It differs from the previous offer in several important particulars.

1. It embraces the whole of the territory claimed by the Company.
2. It proposes to allow the Company to retain their "posts" and certain allotments of land in their vicinity, with a small reservation in each township as it is surveyed.
3. It proposes to allow the Company one quarter of the receipts from land (free grants being 20 treated as sales at 1s. per acre), and one quarter of the sum received by Government as an export duty for gold and silver.

4. It limits the amount to be received under these heads conjointly at £1,000,000 sterling.

The other stipulations are unimportant for the purpose of ascertaining the cash equivalent of the proposition.

It is evident that the "unknown quantities" in this equation are as difficult to find as in the first. We know the total sum to be paid, and the proportion of the receipts from lands and mines applicable for its payment; but we do not know the average annual sum likely to be realized from their sale. The minimum price is fixed at 1s. per acre, and it is doubtful, if under the proposed arrangement, the price would ever be found to exceed that sum. There is one term still to be ascertained—the average 30 number of acres per annum likely to be sold and granted. A crude guess is all that the case admits of. If we take Upper Canada, possessing many advantages for early and rapid settlement of which unfortunately, the remote territories of the North-West are deprived, we find that from its erection into a separate province, down to 1868, about twenty-two millions of acres had been disposed of by sale and grant, or an average of about 286,000 acres per annum.

Assuming that the same rate of sale, etc., is maintained in the North-West Territories (which all the old Hudson's Bay authorities who know the country, would pronounce a bold assumption), we have reduced the question to a simple reference to the annuity tables as before, viz., What is the present value of an annuity of £3,575 per annum for 280 years?

We have omitted from the last term the one-fourth of the Government receipts from gold and 40 silver, for two reasons. 1st, It has not been shown that there are any gold or silver mines in the territory that will pay for working. 2nd, All the attempts heretofore made to obtain a revenue from such sources, in Canada, have failed, and public opinion has forced the local Governments to adopt the policy of what may be called "free mining," or cheap lands for the miners, and abolition of royalties and imposts, except to meet the cost of preserving the peace, and of surveys and necessary supervision.

There is another proposition on the Government side which bears on the question of "compensation." It results from the agreement between the representatives of the Government of Canada and Her Majesty's Government in 1863, and, containing fewer elements of uncertainty than propositions which involve questions of Government policy, emigration, land sales, etc., it can be reduced to a cash value with greater exactitude.

Mr. Cardwell describes the agreement as follows:—"On the fourth point, the subject of the North-Western Territory, the Canadian Ministers desired that that territory should be made over to Canada, and undertook to negotiate with the Hudson's Bay Company for the termination of their rights, on condition that the indemnity, if any, should be paid by a loan to be raised in Canada under the Imperial guarantee. With the sanction of the Cabinet, we assented to this proposal—undertaking, that if the negotiation should be successful, we, on the part of the Crown, being satisfied that the amount of the indemnity was reasonable, and the security sufficient, would apply to the Imperial Parliament to sanction the agreement, and to guarantee the amount."

The Canadian delegates reported on the subject with a little more detail. "We accordingly proposed to the Imperial Ministers that the whole British territory east of the Rocky Mountains and north of the American or Canadian lines should be made over to Canada, subject to such rights as the Hudson's Bay Company might be able to establish, and that the compensation to that Company (if any were found to be due) should be met by a loan guaranteed by Great Britain. The Imperial Government consented to this, and a careful investigation of the case satisfies us that the compensation to the Hudson's Bay Company cannot, under any circumstances, be onerous. It is but two years since the present Hudson's Bay Company purchased the entire property of the old Company; they paid £1,500,000 for the entire property and assets in which were included a large sum of cash on hand, large landed properties in British Columbia and elsewhere, not included in our arrangement, a very large claim against the United States Government under the Oregon Treaty; and ships, goods, pelts, and business premises in England and Canada, valued at £1,023,569. The value of the territorial rights of the Company, therefore, in the estimation of the Company itself, will be easily arrived at."

The principle which this agreement between the two Governments recognizes as applicable to the case, appears to be compensation in money for the ascertained rights of the Company, after deducting the value of the property retained by them. The words "if any," and "if any were found to be due" import that, in the opinion of both parties, it was possible if not probable that, after making the deductions, no compensation would be "due."

The basis of the calculation which seems to have been made, or agreed upon, is very simple. The old Hudson's Bay Company had recently sold all the rights and property of the Company of every description for the sum of £1,500,000. An inventory, agreed to by both sellers and purchasers, set down the assets, exclusive of "Territorial Rights," as follows:—

1. The assets (exclusive of Nos. 2 and 3) of the Hudson's Bay Company, recently and specially valued by competent valuers, at	£1,023,569
2. The landed territory (not valued)
3. A cash balance of	370,000

On the face of their own statement, £1,500,000, less the above sum, or £106,431, was the amount which the new purchasers actually paid for the "landed territory." Under the agreement of 1865 this seems to be the highest sum which Mr. Cardwell and the representatives of the Canadian Government thought could in any event be demanded by the Company, as indemnity or compensation for the surrender of the rights they "would be able to establish."

We have thus attempted to convert into their equivalents in cash the two offers made to the Company since 1857 by the Imperial Government, and to ascertain the amount of the indemnity contemplated by Mr. Cardwell and the Canadian delegates in the arrangements of 1865. To arrive at any result, we have had to assume figures which, according to our experience, the facts of a new country will be more likely to reduce than to increase. We have also omitted conditions, either implied or expressed, in the proposals of 1864 and 1865, which we believe would have imposed considerable expense upon the Company.

There is another mode of estimating the amount to be paid, on the principle of compensating for actual loss only, which remains to be considered.

The stock of the Company has for some time been quoted at an average of 13½. The capital is, nominally, £2,000,000, and the shares £20,—the value of the stock, therefore, in cash, assuming that the whole of it could be sold at the market rate, is £1,350,000, or £43,509 less than the value, according to their own estimate, in 1863, of the Company's assets, exclusive of the "landed territory." The money obtained from the public for shares, beyond the £1,500,000 paid to the old shareholders, will no doubt be amply sufficient to make good any deficiency in the valuation of 1863.

From a consideration of these data we submit, that, if the validity of the Charter is not now to be questioned; if the territorial extent of the country affected by it is not to be defined; if the claim of Canada to include, within her boundaries, a large portion, if not the whole, of the country occupied by the French at the time of the cession in 1763, is not to be investigated, and finally determined; if 10 the admitted incapacity and the notorious neglect of the Company to perform the duties of government (which were part of the consideration for the rights conceded by the Charter), are not to be taken as sufficient, on public grounds, to justify cancellation and re entry by the Crown,—then the very highest indemnity which ought to be paid, in cash, for a surrender of the territorial claims of the Company, with the reservations and other privileges offered by his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, is the sum indicated by the foregoing computations.

We must, in conclusion, express to Earl Granville our strong conviction that no money offer, which either the Imperial or the Canadian Government would deem reasonable, will be accepted by the Company, and that, to delay the organization of constitutional Government in the North-West Territory until the Hudson's Bay Company consent to reasonable terms of surrender, is to hinder the success of 20 Confederation in British America, and to imperil the interests and authority of the British Crown in the territories now occupied by the Company.

We therefore respectfully submit for Earl Granville's consideration, whether it is not expedient that the Address of the Canadian Parliament be at once acted upon, under the authority of the Imperial Act of 1867.

But, if his Lordship should see any sufficient legal or other objection to that course, then we ask, on behalf of the Dominion Government, for the immediate transfer to that Government of the "North-West Territory," or all that part of British North America, from Canada on the east, to British Columbia, Alaska, and the Arctic Ocean, on the west and north, not heretofore validly granted to and now held by "The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay," by virtue of 30 a Charter of King Charles II., issued about the year 1670.

We have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servants,

THE UNDER-SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNOR OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.*

DOWNING STREET,

22nd February, 1869. 40

Sir Frederic
Rogers to Hudson's Bay Company, 22nd
February,
1869.

SIR,—I am directed by Earl Granville to enclose, for the information of the Directors of the Hudson's Bay Company, the copy of a letter which his Lordship has received from Sir G. Cartier and Mr. McDougall. As the greater part of that letter relates to matters on which the Company and the colony cannot be expected to agree, and on which Her Majesty's Government has no authority to decide their differences, Lord Granville has felt some doubt whether the settlement of the question would be advanced by forwarding this letter. He considers it, however, necessary to do so; and in doing so, to explain clearly the position which he considers himself to occupy.

*Sess. Papers, Canada, 1869, No. 25.

It appears that His Lordship's predecessor entertained the hope that he would be able to arrange the terms of a compromise, under which, with consent of both parties, the sovereignty of the Hudson's Bay Company's Territory would be transferred to the Dominion of Canada.

With this view His Grace made to the Company a proposal, respecting which Sir G. Cartier and Mr. McDougall write as follows:—

"The proposals submitted to the Company by the late Government in the letter of Mr. Adderley of the 1st December last, were not made at our suggestion, although we were disposed to think (and so informed His Grace) that if the Company accepted them the Canadian Parliament might be persuaded to undertake the duties of legislation and government in the territories on the conditions specified."

Your letter of the 13th inst., may be considered as a rejection of those proposals, and as thus terminating the negotiations instituted by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos. But in your letter you propose that the matter should be settled by the immediate payment of a fixed sum of money, or by the delivery of bonds, and you express yourself prepared to enter into further communication with Lord Granville on this subject.

It is of course obvious that this negotiation for the purchase of the Hudson's Bay Company's territory is really between the seller and the buyer, the Company and the colony, and Lord Granville is of opinion that if the negotiation is revived on this or any other basis, Her Majesty's Government, can, at present, do no good by assuming to frame or suggest terms of accommodation; but can merely offer to act as a channel of communication between these two real parties to the transaction, using its best endeavours to remove any difficulties not inherent in the nature of the case.

Acting on this view, Lord Granville communicated to Sir G. Cartier and Mr. McDougall a copy of your letter of the 13th. The enclosure of this letter is the answer which he has received.

The material sentences, for the present purpose, are those with which the letter concludes.

You will observe that the representatives of the colony state the principles on which they consider the cost of the territory should be calculated, indicating the opinion that the sum of £106,431 is the highest which could on any hypothesis properly be demanded by the Company; and express their strong conviction that no money offer, which either the Imperial or Canadian Government would deem reasonable, would be accepted by the Company. Assuming this to be the case, they ask on the part of the Dominion Government either the immediate transfer of the whole territory, subject to the rights of the Company, or a transfer of the sovereignty and property of all the territory not heretofore validly granted to, and now held by, the Company under its Charter.

Under these circumstances, Earl Granville directed me to communicate to you the enclosed letter which, taken in connection with previous correspondence, appears to him to leave little present hope of bringing matters to a settlement by way of compensation. If the Directors of the Company should still think any such arrangement possible, His Lordship will of course be prepared to transmit to the Canadian representatives any modified proposal on the part of the Company. Failing this, he thinks it proper to invite from the Directors, not any argument respecting the true nature and extent of the Company's claims from which, as not being before a court of law, he could anticipate no result, but a statement of any objections they may have, whether of principle or detail, to the two counter proposals now made by Sir G. Cartier and Mr. McDougall on behalf of the Canadian Dominion.

And it might not be immaterial to add what course the Company would propose to take, for securing that life and property are adequately protected, and international obligations duly performed in their territory, so long as they remain responsible for its government.

I am, Sir, your most obedient Servant,

FREDERIC ROGERS.

Canadian Documents, and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company, prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

Governor Hudson's Bay Company to Sir Frederic Rogers, 26th February, 1869.

SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 22nd inst., transmitting, by Earl Granville's direction, a copy of a letter addressed to His Lordship by Sir George Cartier and Mr. McDougall, on the subject of my letter to yourself, dated the 13th. ultimo.

The Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company understand from your letter, that it is not Earl Granville's wish that they should enter into a discussion of the communication from the Canadian delegates, and they therefore refrain from making any comments upon its tone or criticising and correcting its assertions. If there are any of those assertions to which Earl Granville himself attaches weight, the Committee will gladly, on their being pointed out to them, offer such observations upon them as may appear to be necessary.

As regards the manner in which the Canadian delegates treat the suggestions contained in my letter of the 13th ultimo,—that the Canadian Government should complete the purchase of the Company's territory at once, by the payment of a sum of money or by the delivery of bonds,—the Committee desire me to observe that they might have had some difficulty in gathering, from the terms in which the delegates express themselves, whether they were or were not prepared to entertain that suggestion, and to open a negotiation with this Company. But as Earl Granville, who has had personal communication with the delegates, is of opinion that their letter, taken in connection with previous correspondence leaves little present hope of bringing matters to a settlement by way of compensation, the Committee are forced to adopt the conclusion that it is intended as a virtual refusal on the part of the delegates to entertain the question in a serious spirit.

Should Earl Granville at any time come to the conclusion that it is desirable that the Committee should renew the offer of fully communicating with him on the subject of a money sale which they made in my letter of January 13th, they will hold themselves prepared to do so. For the present, and in accordance with what they gather to be his Lordship's views, they consider this matter at an end.

It becomes my duty, then, to answer Earl Granville's questions, (1) Whether the Committee have any objections, either of principle or of detail, to make to the "counter proposals" of Sir G. Cartier and Mr. McDougall, and (2) What course the Company would propose to take for securing that life and property are adequately protected, and international obligations duly performed in their territory, so long as they remain responsible for its government.

With regard to the first of the two counter proposals, viz., that the sovereignty of the whole of the territory in question should be immediately transferred to the Dominion Government "subject to the rights of the Company," the Committee desire to ask whether it is intended that the rights of the Company should be ascertained and defined before the transfer takes place, or after it. If the former be Earl Granville's intention, the Committee have no kind of objection to offer to the proposal; but if it be meant that the transfer should take place first, and that the rights of the Company should then be made the subject of litigation in Canada, with a right of appeal to the courts of this country, I must remark that such a course is likely to lead to much inconvenience, expense and annoyance to all parties concerned, as well as to prove detrimental to the interests of the settlement itself by the prolongation of an irritating and disturbing controversy. As regards the injustice to this Company involved in such a proposal, I beg leave to refer Earl Granville to Sir E. Head's letter of the 25th January, 1868, to the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, in which a similar proposal is very ably discussed, and to which, and to the extracts from speeches delivered in the Canadian Parliament which it encloses, the Committee desire to invite Earl Granville's particular attention.

The second counter-proposal is for a transfer to the Dominion Government of both the sovereignty and the property of "all the territory not heretofore validly granted to, and now properly held by the Company under its Charter." Upon this proposal also the Committee desire respectfully to ask whether the limits of the territory so to be transferred are to be distinctly set out in the instrument of transfer, so that there may be no room for disputes as to the limits of the respective jurisdictions. Even with the utmost care in this respect, the Committee cannot but feel apprehensive that difficulties will arise in dealings with the Indians and with the various classes of hunters and traders frequenting those distant regions, if two different systems of administration are introduced into those portions of the extreme North-Western Territory which would be affected by the proposed transfer, especially as the great distance of that territory from Canada, and the difficulty of the communications, will render its administration by the Dominion Government very troublesome. Should, however, Her Majesty's Government decide on this measure, the Committee will do all in their power to arrive at a good understanding with the Dominion Government as to the details of the arrangements which should be made in the two portions of the now united territory, and to facilitate the establishment of a strong administrative system in both.

As regards any transfer of the sovereignty without a distinct definition of the limits to be assigned to it, and by virtue merely of vague general words, the Committee feel that they need not point to Earl Granville that such a step would not only be open to the objections which I have already mentioned in the case of the former counter-proposal, but to the further, and very serious one that it must lead to constant conflicts of authority and to frequent political embarrassments. The Company can hardly be expected to provide for the security of life and property, and the due performance of international obligations if their boundary is left unsettled, and their title to important parts of their territory unrecognized. It is probably unnecessary for me to pursue this argument at any length.

I have now to advert to the last question put by Earl Granville,—that relating to the course which the Company would propose to take for the government of their territory, so long as they remain responsible for it.

The Committee desire me, in the first place, to remind his Lordship that they have no authority to give a pledge on the part of the shareholders of the Company, and that they can only undertake to submit certain proposals to them, and to use their own influence to secure their adoption. Subject to this reservation, the Committee are prepared to enter at once into communication with Earl Granville, as to the measures which should be adopted for the purpose to which he adverts. As his Lordship is aware, a resolution was agreed to by this Committee, as long ago as in August, 1863, to the effect that in the opinion of the Directors it was expedient that the authority, executive and judicial, over Red River settlement and the south-western portion of Rupert's Land, should be vested in officers deriving such authority directly from the Crown, and exercising it in the name of Her Majesty. In adopting this resolution, the Committee intended to indicate their desire for the establishment of a Crown colony in this portion of their territory. They still believe that this would be the most satisfactory plan that could be pursued, and they are prepared to discuss it with Her Majesty's Government, if they are encouraged to do so.

I am to state that the Committee would be willing either to advise the surrender of such proportion of the Company's proprietary rights as might be found to be a fair equivalent for the charge which the establishment of a Crown colony would throw upon the Imperial Exchequer, or to recommend the Company, retaining its proprietary rights, to take upon itself the whole of the pecuniary burden. The Committee are satisfied that a territory, which in the present undeveloped state of its communications supports a trade of the annual value of more than £400,000, and which possesses a large amount of highly fertile soil requiring no great expenditure for its clearance and cultivation, is perfectly capable of supporting the expense of any government that it may be required to maintain; and they have little doubt that if the state of the case were fairly laid before the shareholders, and if the moral support of the Imperial Government were distinctly assured to them, the necessary funds would readily be forthcoming.

Of course, if Her Majesty's Government should be of opinion that the great objects in view could be equally well attained by the exercise of the powers actually possessed by, or which might be granted to the Company, and should consider that it would be preferable to adopt this method of government rather than to erect the territory into a Crown colony, the Committee would at once fall in with such a suggestion, and would request Earl Granville to state to them what establishment would, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, be sufficient to meet the necessities of the case.

It can hardly be necessary for me to add that, in the event of such an arrangement being made, the Company would rely upon the cordial co-operation of the Government in submitting any needful measure to Parliament, and in protecting the settlement from any trespass or interference on the part of Canada.

In conclusion I am to observe that it is on many accounts important that the Directors of this Company should soon communicate to the shareholders the progress of this negotiation, and should lay the correspondence before them. They trust that Earl Granville will have no objection to their doing so.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNOR OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.*

DOWNING STREET,

9th March, 1869.

Under-Sec.
to H. B. Co.,
9th March,

SIR,—Earl Granville has had under review the correspondence which has passed respecting the proposed transfer to Canada of the jurisdiction and territorial rights of the Hudson's Bay Company in North America.

It is, in Lord Granville's opinion, of very great importance that this question should be settled on a permanent footing, and with little delay. He does not disguise the interest which Her Majesty's Government have in this settlement. It is not creditable to this country that any inhabited part of Her Majesty's dominions should be without a recognized Government capable of enforcing the law, and responsible to neighbouring countries for the performance of international obligations. The toleration of such a state of things in parts of the Hudson's Bay Territory is unjust to the inhabitants of that territory, and is not without danger to the peaceful relations between this country and the United States; and this danger and injustice are likely to increase in proportion as the mining and agricultural capabilities of what is called the "Fertile Belt" begin to attract settlers from the east and south.

To Canada the settlement of the question is not less important, as removing a cause of irritation between it and its neighbours, and even with the mother country itself; as destroying an obstacle to that which has been looked upon as the natural growth of the Dominion; as likely to open an indefinite prospect of employment to Canadian labour and enterprise; and lastly, as enlarging the inducements which Canada is able to offer to the British immigrant. It is no small matter that it would enable Her Majesty's Government at once to annex to the Dominion the whole of British North America proper except the colony of British Columbia.

To the Hudson's Bay Company it may almost be said to be necessary.

At present the very foundations of the Company's title are not undisputed. The boundaries to its territory are open to questions of which it is impossible to ignore the importance. Its legal rights, whatever these may be, are liable to be invaded without law by a mass of Canadian and American settlers, whose occupation of the country on any terms they will be little able to resist; while it can hardly be alleged that either the terms of the charter, or their internal constitution, are such as to qualify them under all these disadvantages for maintaining order and performing the internal and external duties of government.

The prejudicial effect that all these uncertainties must have on the value of the Company's property is but too evident.

The interests of all parties thus evidently pointing towards an immediate and definite adjustment, Lord Granville has been most unwilling to abandon the hope of bringing it about by way of amicable compromise. He is fully alive to the difficulties of such a compromise. He does not conceal from himself that the estimate which the Company form of the nature and value of their rights is widely different from that which is formed by the gentlemen who represent Canada; nor can he undertake to express any opinion whatever as to the relative correctness of those estimates. Indeed, it would be impossible to do so without knowing to what extent the claims of the Company would be supported by the judgment of a court of law.

But after repeated communications with both parties, his Lordship is convinced that he will be serving the interests of the Dominion, of the Company, and of this country, by laying before the Canadian representatives and the directors of the Company a distinct proposal, which, as it appears to be, it is for the interest of both parties to accept, and in support of which Her Majesty's Government would be prepared to use all the influence which they could legitimately exercise.

If the proposal is really an impartial one, Lord Granville cannot expect that it will be otherwise than acceptable to both the parties concerned. But he is not without hope that both may find, on consideration, that if it does not give them all that they conceive to be their due, it secures to them what is politically or commercially necessary, and places them at once in a position of greater advantage with reference to their peculiar objects than that which they at present occupy.

The terms which his Lordship now proposes are as follows:—

1. The Hudson's Bay Company to surrender to Her Majesty all the rights of government, property, etc., in Rupert's Land, which are specified in the 31 and 32 Vic., c. 105, sec. 4; and also all similar rights in any other part of British North America, not comprised in Rupert's Land, Canada, or British Columbia.
2. Canada is to pay the Company £300,000 when Rupert's Land is transferred to the Dominion of Canada.
3. The Company may, within twelve months of the surrender, select a block of land adjoining each of its stations, within the limits specified in Article 1.
4. The size of the blocks is not to exceed ——— acres in the Red River Territory, nor 3,000 acres beyond that territory, and the aggregate extent of the blocks is not to exceed 50,000 acres.
5. So far as the configuration of the country admits, the blocks are to be in the shape of parallelograms, of which the length is not more than double the breadth.
6. The Hudson's Bay Company may, for fifty years after the surrender, claim in any township or district within the Fertile Belt, in which land is set out for settlement, grants of land not exceeding one-twentieth part of the land so set out: the blocks so granted to be determined by lot, and the Hudson's Bay Company to pay a ratable share of the survey expenses, not exceeding ——— an acre.
7. For the purpose of the present agreement, the Fertile Belt is to be bounded as follows:—On the south by the United States boundary; on the west by the Rocky Mountains; on the north by the northern branch of the Saskatchewan; on the east by Lake Winnipeg, the Lake of the Woods, and the waters connecting them.
8. All titles to land up to the 8th of March, 1869, conferred by the Company, are to be confirmed.
9. The Company is to be at liberty to carry on its trade without hindrance, in its corporate capacity, and no exceptional tax is to be placed on the Company's land, trade, or servants, nor any import duty on goods introduced by them previous to the surrender.
10. Canada is to take over the materials of the electric telegraph at cost price, such price including transport, but not including interest for money, and subject to a deduction for ascertained deteriorations.
11. The Company's claim to land under agreement of Messrs. Vankoughnet and Hopkins to be withdrawn.
12. The details of this arrangement, including the filling up the blanks in articles 4 and 6, to be settled at once by mutual agreement.

It is due, both to the representatives of Canada and to the Company, to add—that these terms are not intended by Lord Granville as the basis of further negotiation; but a final effort to effect that amicable accommodation of which he has almost despaired, but which he believes will be for the ultimate interest of all parties.

If this be rejected either on the part of the Dominion or Company, his Lordship considers that his next step must be to procure an authoritative decision as to the rights of the Crown and the Company, and with this object he will recommend Her Majesty to refer their rights for examination to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, whose decision will form a basis for any future legislation or executive action which Her Majesty's Government may find necessary.

Whatever may be the result of this proposal, his Lordship desires to express his sense of the openness and courtesy which he has experienced throughout these negotiations, both from the representatives of Canada and from the Governor and Deputy-Governor of the Company, and the patience with which they have entertained proposals which, from their point of view, must no doubt have appeared inadequate.

Lord Granville is aware that a proposal of this kind will require consideration; but he hopes that you will lose no time beyond what is necessary in acquainting him with your decision.

GENTLEMEN,—Lord Granville transmitted to the Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company a copy of your letter of 8th February, and I enclose, by his Lordship's direction, a copy of the answer which he has received.

The conclusion to which he has been led, after a careful consideration both of the correspondence which has passed and of the various representations made orally to him by yourselves and by the Governor and Deputy-Governor of the Company, are embodied in the enclosed letter, which he has directed me to address to Sir S. Northcote, and which you will be good enough to consider as conveying to yourselves also the views of Her Majesty's Government. His Lordship is confident that you will give it your earliest attention.

His Lordship desires me to add that, in case the terms suggested in this letter should be accepted by the parties concerned, Her Majesty's Government would be prepared to fulfil the expectations held out in Mr. Cardwell's despatch of 17th June, 1865, and to propose to Parliament that the Imperial guarantee should be given to a loan of £300,000, the sum which is proposed to be paid over by Canada to the Company on the transfer of the Company's rights. As this is a matter in which the Company has no interest, it is not adverted to in my letter to Sir Stafford Northcote.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE GOVERNOR AND COMMITTEE OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY, PASSED MARCH 12TH, 1869, TRANSMITTED TO THE CANADIAN DELEGATES.*

Resolved, that the Committee will recommend the shareholders to accept the proposal of Lord Granville, if the Canadian Ministers will agree to the following modifications:—

* Seas. Papers, Canada, 1869, No. 25.

1. That Canada will lay no export duty on furs.
2. That the 6th Article be modified so as to allow the Company to defer exercising their right of claiming their proportion of each township for not more than ten years after it is set out.
3. That no charges be made upon the Company for the expenses of survey.
4. That the proportion of land which they are to be allowed to claim be increased from one-twentieth to one-tenth.
5. That York and Moose Factories be retained as ports of entry.
6. That Canada undertakes to pay the £300 a year now paid to the Bishop of Rupert's Land, and other charges of a public character now borne by the Company.
7. That some provision be made for referring to arbitration any question which may arise out of the agreement.

WESTMINSTER PALACE HOTEL,

LONDON, March 13th, 1869.

SIR,—We have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a copy of certain Resolutions adopted by the Governor and Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company, on the 12th inst., suggesting important modifications of the proposal of Lord Granville for the transfer of Rupert's Land to Canada.

Canadian Delegates to
H. B. Co.,
13th March,

We beg you will inform the Committee that, in our opinion, the proposal of Lord Granville, is much more favourable to the Hudson's Bay Company than any previous proposal of the Imperial Government, and much more onerous to Canada than its Government and people have been led to expect. With great reluctance we have consented to recommend Lord Granville's proposal, if accepted by the Company pure et simple, but not otherwise, to the favourable consideration of the Canadian Government. The modifications and additions proposed by the Committee are not, in our judgment, "details" within the purview of the 12th article of Lord Granville's proposal, but substantive and material changes affecting the very basis of the arrangement. We cannot, therefore, assent to them, or undertake to recommend their acceptance by the Canadian Government.

We have further to observe that, in making these demands upon us, the Committee assume that the changes they propose will be accepted, or approved by the Imperial Government. If we are correctly advised, the Committee are not warranted to make that assumption. In the letter of Sir Frederic Rogers, communicating to us a copy of Lord Granville's proposal, we are assured that it conveys "the views of Her Majesty's Government;" and in the letter conveying these views to the Company it is stated that "these terms are not intended by Lord Granville as the basis of further negotiations." It follows, we think, that Lord Granville's proposal is to be regarded as the ultimatum of the Imperial Government, and must be accepted or rejected in its entirety. The Act 31 and 32 Victoria, Chapter 105 (which was not introduced at the instance, or passed in the interest of the Canadian Government), placed the negotiation of the terms of surrender by the Company to the Crown in the hands of Her Majesty's Imperial Government, where, until the Act is repealed, or the negotiation fails, we are of opinion it must remain.

We shall be glad to confer with you upon all questions of "detail," which by the terms of Lord Granville's proposal are left to be adjusted between the Canadian Government and the Hudson's Bay Company.

We have the honour to be, Sir,

Your very obedient servants,

THE GOVERNOR OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY TO THE CANADIAN DELEGATES.*
HUDSON'S BAY HOUSE,

LONDON, March 16th, 1869.

GENTLEMEN,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, in reply to my letter to Sir George Cartier, in which I enclosed to you a copy of the Resolutions adopted at the meeting of the Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company on the 12th instant.

It is unnecessary for me to enter into the question you raise, as to whether Earl Granville would or would not accept any modifications of the terms set forth in his Lordship's recent communication to this Committee, if they should be agreed to by this Committee on the one hand, and by yourselves on the other. While stating that he regarded these terms as not being intended as the basis 10 of further negotiations, Lord Granville added that he left the details of the arrangement to be settled by mutual consent. The greater part of the resolutions transmitted to you in my letter of the 12th were resolutions intended to lead to a settlement of certain details, on which it will be necessary for the Committee to offer full explanation to the shareholders of the Company, if they decide on submitting Earl Granville's proposals to a general meeting.

If in your opinion any of them go further than this, the Committee will be ready to reconsider them, and to confer with you upon them.

As regards the resolution by which the Committee proposed that the amount of land to be left to the Company should be one-tenth, instead of one-twentieth, I am to state that the Committee have rescinded that resolution.

They will await a communication from you with regard to the other resolutions before coming to a conclusion as to the course they should adopt.

I am, Gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

STAFFORD H. NORTHCOTE.

WESTMINSTER PALACE HOTEL,
March 18th, 1869.

Canadian Delegates to H. B. Co., 18th March, 1869.

Sir,—We have the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 16th inst., in which you inform us that the Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company has rescinded the Resolution adopted on the 12th inst. asking for one-tenth instead of one-twentieth, as proposed by Lord Granville, of the land which may be surveyed for settlement in the North-Western Territory. You further state that if the other resolutions transmitted to us go further than the "details of the arrangement," left by Lord Granville to be "settled by mutual consent," the Committee are ready to reconsider them.

With reference to the first resolution, "That Canada will lay no export duty on furs," we beg you will inform the Committee that it is not the policy or practice of the Canadian Government to resort to "export duties" as a source of revenue. We feel no hesitation in stating our belief that no such duties 10 as the Committee wish to prohibit, will be levied, but it would obviously be improper for us to consent to any arrangement which would fetter the free action of the Canadian Parliament in respect to modifications of the tariff which the future exigencies of the country may render necessary.

2. The proposal to modify the 6th article so as to permit the Company to defer the exercise of the right of claiming their proportion of lands in any township for a period of ten years after survey, might, we think, be agreed to, on condition that they limit their claim to allotment from the lands which may be unsold at the time they declare their intention to take their proportion in that township.

3. The demand to be relieved from the expenses of survey, which Lord Granville proposed the Company should bear, is not, we think, a "detail," within the meaning of the 12th article. But if 30 it will remove the apprehension that charges under this stipulation may become excessive, we see no objection to a proviso, that the expense to the Company for the survey of the lands allotted to them shall in no case exceed eight cents per acre.

4. We have no doubt that York and Moose Factories will be retained as ports of entry if goods continued to be imported there. But if by the opening of interior communications trade should be diverted to other ports, it would not seem reasonable that the Government should be bound to maintain customs establishments at Hudson's Bay. The practice of the Canadian Government is to establish ports of entry wherever the interests of trade and commerce require them, and we do not, therefore, see that it is necessary or expedient to make any stipulation on the subject.

5. The demand that the salary of the Anglican Bishop of Rupert's Land should hereafter be charged upon the Canadian Treasury cannot, we think, be regarded as a "detail" within the 12th article of Lord Granville's proposal. The surrender of the rights and powers of government by the Company will necessarily involve the assumption of "all charges of a public character" by the new Government. But an agreement to continue the charges now borne by the Company, eo nomine, would so far perpetuate a system which the transfer of the territory to Canada is intended to supersede.

6. The last proposal of the Committee is open to very serious objection. The surrender of the powers of government, and of territorial jurisdiction by the Company to the Crown, and the transfer of these powers to the Canadian Government, are acts of State, authorized by imperial Statute, and will have all the force and permanence of fundamental law. The proposal to refer all questions which may arise under this law to some extra-constitutional tribunal is not warranted by the British North America Act and would, we fear, if adopted, create confusion and embarrassment, and postpone indefinitely the establishment of a satisfactory government in Rupert's Land.

We must decline to admit, even by implication, that the judicial tribunals and the general and local authorities of the Dominion will fail to understand, or hesitate to respect and carry out, in good faith, all the terms and conditions of the proposed arrangement.

We have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servants,

GEO. ET. CARTIER.

W. McDOUGALL.

DETAILS OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE DELEGATES OF THE DOMINION AND THE DIRECTORS OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.*

1. It is understood that in surrendering to Her Majesty all the rights, etc., of the Company in any part of British North America not comprised in Rupert's Land, Canada, or British Columbia, the Company are to retain the posts they actually occupy in the North-West Territory.

2. It is understood that it will be a sufficient act of selection under Article III. that the Company should, within twelve months, name the number of acres which they will require adjoining each post. The actual survey to be proceeded with with all convenient speed.

3. It is understood that, in the Red River Settlement, the size of the blocks to be retained round upper Fort Garry shall not exceed (ten) acres; and that round Lower Fort Garry shall not exceed (three hundred) acres.

4. It is understood that a list of the stations round which the Company will require blocks of land, with the size of the blocks they will require, shall be made out forthwith and communicated to the Canadian Ministers.

THE CANADIAN DELEGATES TO THE UNDER-SECRETARY.*

WESTMINSTER PALACE HOTEL,

LONDON, 27th March, 1869.

Canadian Delegates to Under-Sec., 27th March, 1869.

SIR,—Your letter of the 9th inst., enclosing a copy of proposals made by Lord Granville to the Hudson's Bay Company in your letter to Sir Stafford Northcote of the same date, has not been formally acknowledged by us, in consequence of a doubt, not yet removed, as to the acceptance of these proposals 20 by the Company. We stated verbally to Lord Granville our objections to his proposals, but finally consented to recommend them to the Canadian Government, on condition that the Company first signified their acceptance of them. Sir Stafford Northcote has since opened communication with us directly, and proposed important modifications of Lord Granville's terms, to which we could not assent. In some points of detail we agreed that the terms might be varied or qualified, if such variation or qualification would be likely to make the arrangements, as a whole, more acceptable to the shareholders of the Company. We understand Sir Stafford Northcote has acquainted Lord Granville with the correspondence which has passed between us on the subject. The Company having, at the meeting on the 24th inst., postponed for a fortnight the question of accepting Lord Granville's proposals, we regret that we are unable to await their decision. Our public duties require that we should immediately return to Canada. 30 We have now the honour to repeat the request contained in our letter of the 8th February—viz., that immediate action may be taken by the Imperial Government upon the address of the Canadian Parliament of December, 1867, or that pending the negotiations for the transfer of Rupert's Land, the North-Western Territory, or all that part of British North America from Canada on the east, to British Columbia, Alaska and the Arctic Ocean on the west and north, not heretofore validly granted to, and now held by the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, may be immediately transferred to the Dominion of Canada, under the authority of the British North America Act, 1867.

MEMORANDUM OF A FURTHER AGREEMENT BETWEEN SIR GEORGE E. CARTIER (ONE OF THE CANADIAN DELEGATES) AND THE GOVERNOR OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.*

Agreement, Canadian Delegates, and H. B. Co., 29th March, 1869.

Inasmuch as the northern branch of the Saskatchewan River is the northern boundary of the fertile belt, and therefore any land on the northern bank is not within the Territory of which the Company are to have one-twentieth part, it is understood that in forming the townships abutting on the northern bank, the Company shall be at liberty to take their one-twentieth of any such townships, giving up to the Canadian Dominion an equal quantity of the portion of lands coming to them of townships established on the southern bank.

* Sess. Papers, Canada, 1869, No. 25.

It is understood that the townships on the northern bank shall not for the above purpose extend more than five miles inland from the river.

It is understood that in laying out any public roads, canals, etc., through any block of land reserved to the Company, the Canadian Government may take without compensation such land as is necessary for the purpose, not exceeding one twenty-fifth of the total acreage of the block; but if the Canadian Government require any land which is actually under cultivation, or which has been built upon, or which is necessary for giving the Company's servants access to any river or lake, or has a frontage to any river or lake, they shall pay the Company the fair value of the same, and shall make compensation for any injury done to the Company or their servants.

It is understood that the whole of the land to be appropriated within the meaning of the last preceding clause shall be appropriated for public purposes.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNOR OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.*

DOWNING STREET,

April 3rd, 1869.

I am directed by Earl Granville to enclose for your information a copy of a letter addressed by him to Sir G. Cartier and Mr. McDougall, and a letter which he has received from them in reply, in which they intimate their acceptance of the terms proposed to you and them for the surrender of the territorial and other rights of the Hudson's Bay Company in Rupert's Land. I am to add that his Lordship has been informed in conversation by the above gentlemen that they believe the Canadian Government will agree to those terms, and have a confident hope that their Parliament will not reject them, and they added that in the event of the transfer taking place, the Hudson's Bay Company might rely upon the justice and good will of the Government and the Parliament of Canada.

F. ROGERS.

THE GOVERNOR OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY TO THE UNDER-SECRETARY.

HUDSON'S BAY HOUSE,

LONDON, 10th April, 1869.

SIR,—I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of Earl Granville, that at a meeting of the Hudson's Bay Company, held on the 9th inst., the following resolution was adopted by a large majority of the proprietors specially summoned to consider the proposal contained in your letter of the 9th ulto, for the surrender of the Company's territory, etc., to Her Majesty:—

That it is expedient to accede in the terms proposed in the communication above referred to, and to surrender to Her Majesty all this Company's territorial rights in Rupert's Land, and in any other part of British North America not comprised in Rupert's Land, Canada or British Columbia, and that the Governor and Committee be and they are hereby authorized to make such surrender on being assured that the terms have been agreed to by the Government and Parliament of Canada, provided that the acceptance of the terms by the Government and Parliament of Canada shall have been signified to them by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, within six months after the passing of this resolution, and that for that purpose the Governor and Committee concur in all such measures as may be found necessary for effecting such surrender, and for securing to the Company the rights and reservations to which, by the terms of the letter from Sir Frederic Rogers, the Company will be entitled.

I have, etc.,

STAFFORD H. NORTHCOTE,
Governor.

Sec. III.

Canadian Documents, and Correspondence between the Colonial Secretary and the Hudson's Bay Company, prior to the surrender of the Company's claims.

Colonial Sec. to Governor-General, 10th April, 1869.

SIR,—The proprietors of the Hudson's Bay Company have considered at a special meeting the terms on which they have been invited to transfer their territorial rights to the Dominion of Canada, and I enclose the copy of a letter addressed to me by Sir Stafford Northcote, from which you will perceive that those terms have been accepted.

You will observe that the Governor and Committee of the Company are authorized to concur in all such measures as may be found necessary for effecting this transfer, and for securing to the Company all the rights and reservations to which they will be entitled, provided that the acceptance of the terms 10 by the Government and Parliament of Canada is duly signified to them within six months.

I trust that this acceptance may be confidently anticipated, and that by it an opening will be made for extending the benefits of a regular Government to those British subjects who at present occupy the Company's territory; for settling the tracts of fertile land which lie in the centre of the continent; and for the consolidation of British North America, under one Central Government.

On one point which has not been hitherto touched upon, I am anxious to express to you the expectations of Her Majesty's Government. They believe that whatever may have been the policy of the Company, and the effect of their chartered rights upon the progress of settlement, the Indian tribes who form the existing population of this part of America have profited by the Company's rule.

They have been protected from some of the vices of civilization; they have been taught to some 20 appreciable extent to respect the laws and rely on the justice of the white man; and they do not appear to have suffered from any causes of extinction beyond those which are inseparable from their habits and their climate. I am sure that your Government will not forget the care which is due to those who must soon be exposed to new dangers, and in the course of settlement be dispossessed of the lands which they are used to enjoy as their own, or be confined within unwontedly narrow limits.

This question had not escaped my notice while framing the proposals which I laid before the Canadian delegates and the Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company. I did not, however, then allude to it, because I felt the difficulty of insisting on any definite conditions without the possibility of foreseeing the circumstances under which those conditions would be applied, and because it appeared to me wiser and more expedient to rely on the sense of duty and responsibility belonging to the Government and people of such a country as Canada.

That Government, I believe, has never sought to evade its obligations to those whose uncertain 30 rights and rude means of living are contracted by the advance of civilized men. I am sure that they will not do so in the present case, but that the old inhabitants of the country will be treated with such forethought and consideration as may preserve them from the dangers of the approaching change, and satisfy them of the friendly interest which their new governors feel in their welfare.

With the expression of this hope, I will close my despatch, merely repeating my sincere desire that the annexation of the great territory may be speedily accomplished, and may bring to the Dominion all the advantages which the statesmen of Canada not unreasonably anticipate.

I have, etc.,

Governor the Right Honourable Sir John Young, Baronet,
G. C. B., etc., etc., etc.

GRANVILLE 40

REPORT OF THE CANADIAN DELEGATES.*

To His Excellency the Right Hon. Sir John Young, Bart., G. C. B., G. C. M. G., Governor-General of Canada.
May it Please Your Excellency,—

We have the honour to submit for Your Excellency's consideration the following Report of our negotiations with Her Majesty's Imperial Government for the transfer to the Dominion of Canada of Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory:—

Report, Canadian Delegates, 8th May, 1869.

* Sess. Papers, Canada, 1869, No. 25.

Under the authority of an Order in Council of the 1st October, 1868, we were appointed a delegation to England to arrange the "terms for the acquisition by Canada of Rupert's Land," and by another Order in Council of the same date, we were authorized to arrange, "for the admission of the North-West Territory into union with Canada, either with or without Rupert's Land, as may be found practicable and expedient." We proceeded at once to execute the important mission confided to us, and on presenting ourselves at the Colonial Office, were invited by his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, to visit him at Stowe, for the purpose of discussing freely and fully the numerous and difficult questions which were involved in the transfer of these great territories to Canada. We found that his Grace had already made some progress in the preliminaries of a negotiation (under the Act 31 and 32 Vic., cap. 105) with the Hudson's Bay Company, for the surrender to Her Majesty of the territorial and political rights which they claimed in Rupert's Land. We objected very earnestly to some of the demands of the Company which were communicated to us by his Grace, but after much consideration and important modifications of the Company's demands, we agreed that if they would surrender the territory on the conditions which his Grace proposed, we would recommend the acceptance of these conditions by the Canadian Government.

The Duke of Buckingham's proposals will be found in the letter of Mr. Adderley, of the 1st December, 1868, addressed to the Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company.

Considerable delay in the negotiations was occasioned by the retirement from office of the Duke of Buckingham and his colleagues, and also by the resignation of Lord Kimberley, the then Governor of the Company.

On the 18th January, 1869, Earl Granville, who had acceded to office as Secretary of State for the Colonies, transmitted to us the reply of the Company, declining the proposals of the Duke of Buckingham. His Lordship subsequently requested us to communicate to him any observations which we might desire to offer upon this reply of the Company and upon certain counter-proposals which it contained. We felt reluctant, as representatives of Canada, to engage in a controversy with the Company concerning matters of fact, as well as questions of law and policy, while the negotiation with them was being carried on by the Imperial Government in its own name and of its own authority. But we did not feel at liberty to decline Lord Granville's request, and on the 8th of February stated at length our views upon the various points raised in the letter of Sir Stafford Northcote, the new Governor of the Company, in answer to the proposals of the Duke of Buckingham. We beg to refer Your Excellency to the correspondence for full information as to the positions taken and the opinions expressed by us at this stage of the negotiation.

Lord Granville, being of opinion that the rejection by the Company of the proposals of his predecessor had terminated the negotiations instituted by him, submitted for our consideration proposals of his own, based on a different principle from that which had been laid down by the Duke of Buckingham.

We felt it our duty to state to his Lordship that these proposals would not be acceptable to the Canadian Government. They were subsequently modified, and in the form in which they appear in the letter of Sir Frederick Rogers, of the 9th March, were conditionally accepted by us, subject to the approval of Your Excellency in Council.

Certain details were left by Lord Granville to be settled between the representatives of the Company and ourselves, which led to interviews and discussions with them, and to a correspondence, which is also submitted herewith.

During the progress of the negotiations, a formal complaint was made to the Colonial Secretary by the representatives of the Company against the Canadian Government, for undertaking the construction of a road between Lake of the Woods and the Red River Settlement without having first obtained the consent of the Company. The letter conveying this complaint was referred to us by Earl Granville for such explanations as we were able to offer. The correspondence on this subject is also respectfully submitted.

MESSAGE OF THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL TO THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.*

JOHN YOUNG.

The Governor-General transmits, for the consideration of the House of Commons, the report of the 20 delegates appointed to negotiate for the acquisition of Rupert's Land and the North-West Territory. GOVERNMENT HOUSE, OTTAWA, 17th May, 1869.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS OF CANADA OF 28TH MAY, 1869.†

Resolutions of Parliament of Canada, 28th May, 1869.

Resolved,—That the Senate and Commons of the Dominion of Canada, during the first session of the first Parliament of Canada, adopted an Address to Her Majesty, praying that Her Majesty would be graciously pleased, by and with the advice of Her Most Honourable Privy Council, under the provisions of the 146th section of "The British North America Act, 1867," and on the terms specified in that Address, to unite Rupert's Land and the North-west Territory with this Dominion, and to grant to the Parliament of Canada authority to legislate for their future welfare and good government, and assuring Her Majesty of the willingness of the Parliament of Canada to assume the duties and obligations of government and legislation as regards those territories.

Resolved,—That the Joint Address of the Senate and Commons of Canada was duly laid at the foot of the Throne, and that Her Majesty, by despatch from the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor-General of Canada, under date of 23rd of April, 1868, signified her willingness to comply with the prayer of the said Address; but she was advised that the requisite powers of government and legislation could not, consistently with the existing charter of the Hudson's Bay Company, be transferred to Canada without an Act of Parliament, which Act was subsequently passed by the Imperial Parliament, and received Her Majesty's assent on the 31st July, 1868.

Resolved,—That by despatch dated 8th August, 1868, from the Honourable Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Governor-General was informed, that in pursuance of the powers conferred by the Act for the surrender of the Hudson's Bay Territories to Her Majesty, he proposed to enter into negotiations with the Company as to the terms of such surrender, whereupon, under authority of an Order of the Governor-General in Council of the 1st October, 1868, the Honourable Sir George Et. Cartier, Baronet, and the Honourable William McDougall, C.B., were appointed a delegation to England, to arrange the terms for the acquisition by Canada of Rupert's Land, and by another Order in Council of the same date, were authorized to arrange for the admission of the North-west Territory into union with Canada, either with or without Rupert's Land, as it might be found practicable and expedient.

Resolved.—That the delegates proceeded on their mission to England and entered into negotiations afterwards with the Right Honourable Earl Granville, his successor in office, for the acquisition by Canada of the territorial and other rights claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company in Rupert's Land, and in any other part of British North America, not comprised in Rupert's Land, and British Columbia. That terms of agreement were conditionally assented to by the delegates on behalf of the Dominion, and on their return to Canada were submitted with a Report dated 8th May, 1869, which was approved by His Excellency the Governor in Council, on the 14th day of the same month.

Resolved.—That the Senate will be prepared to concur in accepting the transfer of the territorial and other rights of the Hudson's Bay Company in Rupert's Land, and in any other part of British North America, not comprised in Rupert's Land, Canada or British Columbia, on the terms conditionally agreed to on behalf of the Government of Canada, by the Hon. Sir George Et. Cartier, Baronet, and the Hon. William McDougall, C.B., and on behalf of the Hudson's Bay Company, by Sir Stafford H. Northcote, Governor of that Company, and approved by His Excellency in Council as aforesaid, which terms are set forth in a letter from Sir Frederick Rogers, Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, of the 9th March, 1869, communicated to the delegates by direction of Earl Granville, and in two subsequent memorandums dated respectively 22nd and 29th March, 1869, containing a modification of such terms, and are in the words and figures following;—[See this letter of 9th March, 1869, containing the terms, numbered therein 1 to 12 inclusive, and the memorandum of 22nd March, 1869, and the subsequent memorandum of 29th March, 1869, in the order of their respective dates, ante.]

Resolved.—That this House learns with satisfaction, by letter from the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, of 9th March last, that, in fulfilment of the expectations held out in Mr. Cardwell's despatch of 17th June, 1865, Her Majesty's Government will be prepared to propose to Parliament that the Imperial guarantee be given to a loan of £300,000, the amount which is proposed to be paid over by Canada on the transfer of the Company's rights.

Resolved.—That the Senate will be ready to concur with the House of Commons in an Address to Her Majesty, that she will be graciously pleased, by and with the advice of Her Most Honourable Privy Council, under the 146th clause of "The British North America Act, 1867," and the provisions of the Imperial Act, 31 & 32 Viet., cap. 105, to unite Rupert's Land on the terms and conditions expressed in the foregoing Resolutions, and also to unite the North-Western Territory with the Dominion of Canada, as prayed for by, and on the terms and conditions contained in the joint Address of the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada, adopted during the first session of the first Parliament of Canada and hereinbefore referred to.

Resolved.—That upon the transference of the territories in question to the Canadian Government it will be the duty of the Government to make adequate provision for the protection of the Indian tribes whose interests and well-being are involved in the transfer.

Resolved.—That the Governor in Council be authorized and empowered to arrange any details that may be necessary to carry out the terms and conditions of the above agreement.

ADDRESS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS OF CANADA TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.*

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty.

Address
Canadian Parliament to Her Majesty,
29th and 31st
May, 1869.

That, during the first session of the first Parliament of this Dominion, we adopted an Address to Your Majesty, praying that Your Majesty would be graciously pleased, by and with the advice of Your Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, under the provisions of the 146th Section of "The British North America Act, 1867," and on the terms specified in that Address, to unite Rupert's Land and the North-West Territory with this Dominion, and to grant to the Parliament of Canada authority to legislate for their future welfare and good government, and assuring Your Majesty of the willingness of the Parliament of Canada to assume the duties and obligations of Government and legislation as regards those territories.

That our joint Address was duly laid at the foot of the Throne, and that Your Majesty, by despatch from the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor-General of Canada, 10 under date of the 23rd April, 1868, signified Your Majesty's willingness to comply with the prayer of the said Address, but that Your Majesty was advised that the requisite powers of government and legislation could not, consistently with the existing charter of the Hudson's Bay Company, be transferred to Canada without an Act of Parliament, which Act was subsequently passed by the Imperial Parliament, and received Your Majesty's assent on the 31st July, 1868.

That by a despatch dated 8th August, 1868, from the Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Governor-General was informed that in pursuance of the powers conferred by the Act for the surrender of the Hudson's Bay territories to Your Majesty he proposed to enter into negotiations with the Company as to the terms of such surrender, whereupon, under authority of an Order of the Governor-General in Council of the 1st October, 1868, the Honourable Sir George Et. Cartier, Baronet, 20 and the Honourable William McDougall, C.B., were appointed a delegation to England to arrange the terms for the acquisition by Canada of Rupert's Land, and by another Order in Council of the same date, were authorized to arrange for the admission of the North-West Territory into union with Canada either with or without Rupert's Land, as might be found practicable and expedient.

That the delegates proceeded on their mission to England, and entered into negotiations with his Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, and afterwards with the Right Honourable Earl Granville, his successor in office, for the acquisition by Canada of the territorial and other rights claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company in Rupert's Land, and in any other part of British North America not comprised in Rupert's Land, Canada, or British Columbia, on the terms conditionally agreed to on behalf of the Government of Canada by the Honourable Sir George Et. Cartier, Baronet, and the Honourable William McDougall, C.B., and on behalf of the Hudson's Bay Company by Sir Stafford H. Northcote, Governor of that Company, and approved by His Excellency in Council as aforesaid, which terms are set forth in a letter from Sir Frederick Rogers, Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, of the 9th March, 1869, communicated to the delegates by direction of Earl Granville, and in two subsequent memorandums dated respectively 22nd and 29th March, 1869, containing a modification of such terms, and are in the words and figures following;—[This letter of 9th March, 1869, containing the terms numbered 1 to 12 inclusive, and the memorandum of 22nd March, 1869, and the subsequent memorandum of 29th March, 1869, are to be found in order of date, ante.]

That we learn with satisfaction by letter from the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, of the 9th March last, that in fulfilment of the expectations held out in Mr. Carlwell's despatch of the 17th of 40 June, 1865, Your Majesty's Government will be prepared to propose to Parliament that the Imperial guarantee be given to a loan of £300,000, the amount which is proposed to be paid over by Canada on the transfer of the Company's rights.

That upon the transference of the territories in question to the Canadian Government it will be our duty to make adequate provision for the protection of the Indian tribes whose interests and well-being are involved in the transfer; and we authorize and empower the Governor in Council to arrange any details that may be necessary to carry out the terms and conditions of the above agreement.

We therefore most humbly pray that Your Majesty will be graciously pleased, by and with the advice of Your Most Honourable Privy Council, under the 146th clause of "The British North America Act, 1867," and the provisions of the Imperial Act, 31 and 32 Vict., cap. 105, to unite Rupert's Land on the 50

terms and conditions expressed in the foregoing resolutions, and also to unite the North-Western Territory with the Dominion of Canada, as prayed for by and on the terms and conditions contained in our joint Address adopted during the first session of the first Parliament of this Dominion, and hereinbefore referred to.

DOMINION ACT, 32-33 VIC., CAP. 3, (1869).

AN ACT FOR THE TEMPORARY GOVERNMENT OF RUPERT'S LAND AND THE NORTH-WESTERN TERRITORY WHEN UNITED WITH CANADA.

Whereas it is probable that Her Majesty the Queen may, pursuant to "The British North America Act, 1867," be pleased to admit Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory into the Union or Dominion of Canada, before the next Session of the Canadian Parliament; And whereas it is expedient to prepare for the transfer of the said territories from the local authorities to the Government of Canada, at the time appointed by the Queen for such admission, and to make some temporary provision for the Civil Government of such territories until more permanent arrangements can be made by the Government and Legislature of Canada; Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

Dominion Act, 32-33 Vic., cap. 3, 1869.

1. The said territories when admitted as aforesaid, shall be styled and known as "The North-West Territories."

5. All the laws in force in Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory, at the time of their admission into the Union, shall, so far as they are consistent with "The British North America Act, 1867,"—with the terms and conditions of such admission approved of by the Queen under the 146th section thereof,—and with this Act, remain in force until altered by the Parliament of Canada, or by the Lieutenant-Governor under the authority of this Act.

6. All public officers and functionaries holding office in Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory, at the time of their admission into the Union, excepting the public officer or functionary at the head of the administration of affairs, shall continue to be public officers and functionaries of the North-West Territories with the same duties and powers as before, until otherwise ordered by the Lieutenant-Governor, under the authority of this Act.

7. This Act shall continue in force until the end of the next Session of Parliament.

DEED OF SURRENDER OF RUPERT'S LAND, 19TH NOVEMBER, 1869.

THE GOVERNOR AND COMPANY OF ADVENTURERS OF ENGLAND TRADING INTO HUDSON'S BAY TO HER MAJESTY QUEEN VICTORIA.*

To all whom these presents shall come unto, or concern, the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, send greeting.

Whereas the said Governor and Company were established and incorporated by their said name of "The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay," by letters patent granted by His late Majesty King Charles the Second, in the twenty-second year of his reign, whereby His said Majesty granted unto the said Company and their successors the sole trade and commerce of all those seas, straits, bays, rivers, lakes, creeks and sounds in whatsoever latitude they should be, that lay within the entrance of the straits commonly called Hudson's Straits, together with all the lands and territories upon the countries, coasts and confines of the seas, bays, lakes, rivers, creeks, and sounds aforsaid, that were not already actually possessed by, or granted to, any of His Majesty's subjects, or possessed by the subjects of any other Christian Prince or State, and that the said land should be from thenceforth reckoned and reputed as one of His Majesty's plantations or colonies in America, called Rupert's Land; and whereby His said Majesty made and constituted the said Governor and Company and their successors the absolute lords and proprietors of the same territory, limits and places aforesaid, and of all other the premises, saving the faith, allegiance and sovereign dominion due to His said Majesty, his heirs and successors for the same; and granted to the said Governor and Company and their successors such rights of government and other rights, privileges and liberties, franchises, powers and authorities in Rupert's Land as therein expressed. And whereas ever since the date of the said letters patent, the said Governor and Company have exercised and enjoyed the sole right thereby granted of such trade and commerce as therein mentioned, and have exercised and enjoyed other rights, privileges, liberties, franchises, powers and authorities thereby granted; and the said Governor and Company have exercised or assumed rights of government in other parts of British North America, not forming part of Rupert's Land, or of Canada, or of British Columbia. And whereas by the "British North America Act, 1867," it is (amongst other things) enacted that it shall be lawful for Her present Majesty Queen Victoria, by and with the advice and consent of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, on address from the Houses of Parliament of Canada, to admit Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory or either of them, into the Union of the Dominion of Canada, on such terms and conditions as are in the Address expressed, and as Her Majesty thinks fit to approve, subject to the provisions of the said Act. And whereas, by the "Rupert's Land Act, 1868," it is enacted (amongst other things) that for the purposes of that Act, the term "Rupert's Land," shall include the whole of the lands and territories held or claimed to be held by the said Governor and Company, and that it shall be competent for the said Governor and the Company to surrender to Her Majesty, and for Her Majesty, by any instrument under Her Sign Manual and Signet, to accept a surrender of all or any of the lands territories, rights, privileges, liberties, franchises, powers and authorities whatsoever, granted or purported to be granted by the said letters patent to the said Governor and Company within Rupert's Land, upon such terms and conditions as shall be agreed upon by and between Her Majesty and the said Governor and Company; provided however, that such surrender shall not be accepted by Her Majesty until the terms and conditions upon which Rupert's Land shall be admitted into the said Dominion of Canada shall have been approved of by Her Majesty, and embodied in an Address to Her Majesty from the Houses of the Parliament of Canada, in pursuance of the 146th section of the "British North America Act, 1867," and that upon the acceptance by Her Majesty of such surrender, all rights of government and proprietary rights, and all other privileges, liberties, franchises, powers and authorities whatsoever granted or purported to be granted by the said letters patent to the said Governor and Company within Rupert's Land, and which shall have been so surrendered, shall be absolutely extinguished; provided that nothing in the said Act contained shall prevent the said Governor and Company from continuing to carry on in Rupert's Land, or elsewhere, trade and commerce. And whereas Her said Majesty Queen Victoria and the said Governor and Company have agreed to terms and conditions upon which the said Governor and Company shall surrender to Her said Majesty, pursuant to the provisions in that behalf in the "Rupert's Land Act, 1868," contained, all the rights of government and other rights, privileges, liberties, franchises, powers and authorities, and all the lands and territories (except and subject as in the said terms and conditions expressed or mentioned) granted or purported to be granted by the said letters patent, and also all similar rights which have been exercised or assumed by the said Governor and Company in any parts of British North America not forming part of Rupert's Land, or of Canada, or of British Columbia, in order and to the intent that, after such surrender has been effected and accepted under the provisions of the last-mentioned Act, the said Rupert's Land may be admitted into the Union of the Dominion of Canada, pursuant to the hereinbefore mentioned Acts or one of them. And whereas the said terms and conditions on which it has been agreed that the said surrender is to be made by the said Governor and Company (who are in the following articles designated as the Company) to Her said Majesty are as follows, that is to say:—

1. The Canadian Government shall pay to the Company the sum of £300,000 sterling, when Rupert's Land is transferred to the Dominion of Canada.

2. The Company to retain all the posts or stations now actually possessed and occupied by them, or their officers or agents, whether in Rupert's Land or in any other part of British North America, and may within twelve months after the acceptance of the said surrender select a block of land adjoining each of their posts or stations, within any part of British North America not comprised in Canada and British Columbia, in conformity, except as regards the Red River Territory, with a list made out by the Company and communicated to the Canadian Ministers, being the list in the annexed schedule. The actual survey is to be proceeded with, with all convenient speed.

3. The size of each block is not to exceed in the Red River Territory an amount to be agreed upon between the Company and the Governor of Canada in Council.

4. So far as the configuration of the country admits, the blocks shall front the river or road by which means of access are provided, and shall be approximately in the shape of parallelograms, and of which the frontage shall not be more than half the depth.

5. The Company may, at any time within fifty years after such acceptance of the said surrender claim in any township or district within the fertile belt in which land is set out for settlements, grants of land not exceeding one-twentieth part of land so set out, the blocks so granted to be determined by lot, and the Company to pay a rateable share of the survey expenses, not exceeding eight cents Canadian an acre. The Company may defer the exercise of their right of claiming their proportion of each township or district for not more than ten years after it is set out, but their claim must be limited to an allotment from the lands remaining unsold at the time they declare their intention to make it.

6. For the purpose of the last article the fertile belt is to be bounded as follows:—On the south by the United States' boundary; on the west by the Rocky Mountains; on the north by the northern boundary of the Saskatchewan River; on the east by Lake Winnipeg, the Lake of the Woods, and the waters connecting them.

7. If any township shall be formed abutting on the north bank of the northern branch of the Saskatchewan River, the Company may take their one-twentieth of any such township, which, for the purposes of this article, shall not extend more than five miles inland from the river, giving to the Canadian Dominion an equal quantity of the portion of land coming to them of townships established on the southern bank of the said river.

8. In laying out any public roads, canals or other public works, through any block of land reserved to the Company, the Canadian Government may take, without compensation, such land as is necessary for the purpose, not exceeding one-twenty-fifth of the total acreage of the block; but if the Canadian Government require any land which is actually under cultivation, which has been built upon, or which is necessary for giving the Company's servants access to any river or lake, or has a frontage to any river or lake, the said Government shall pay to the Company the fair value of the same, and shall make compensation for any injury done to the Company or their servants.

9. It is understood that the whole of the land to be appropriated within the meaning of the last preceding clause, shall be appropriated for public purposes.

10. All titles to land up to the eighth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine conferred by the Company, are to be confirmed.

11. The Company is to be at liberty to carry on its trade without hindrance in its corporate capacity; and no exceptional tax is to be placed on the Company's land, trade, or servants, nor any import duty on goods introduced by the said Company previously to such acceptance of the said surrender.

12. Canada is to take over the materials of the electric telegraph at cost price; such price including transport, but not including interest for money, and subject to a deduction for ascertained deterioration.

13. The Company's claim to land under an agreement of Messrs. Vankoughnet and Hopkins is to be withdrawn.

14. Any claims of Indians to compensation for lands required for purposes of settlement shall be disposed of by the Canadian Government in communication with the Imperial Government; and the Company shall be relieved of all responsibility in respect of them.

Deed of Surrender, H. B. Co. to Her Majesty, 19th November, 1869.

And whereas the surrender hereinafter contained is intended to be made in pursuance of the agreement, and upon the terms and conditions hereinbefore stated.

Now know ye, and these presents witness, that in pursuance of the powers and provisions of the "Rupert's Land Act, 1868," and on the terms and conditions aforesaid, and also on condition of this surrender being accepted pursuant to the provisions of that Act, the said Governor and Company do hereby surrender to the Queen's Most Gracious Majesty, all the rights of government, and other rights, privileges, liberties, franchises, powers and authorities, granted or purported to be granted to the said Governor and Company by the said recited letters patent of His late Majesty King Charles the Second; and also all similar rights which may have been exercised or assumed by the said Governor and Company in any parts of British North America, not forming part of Rupert's Land or of Canada, or 10 of British Columbia, and all the lands and territories within Rupert's Land (except and subject as in the said terms and conditions mentioned) granted or purported to be granted to the said Governor and Company by the said letters patent. In witness whereof, the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, have hereunto caused their Common Seal to be affixed, the nineteenth day of November, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine.

DOMINION ACT, 33 VIC., CAP. 3, (1870).

AN ACT TO AMEND AND CONTINUE THE ACT 32 AND 33 VICTORIA, CHAPTER 3; AND TO ESTABLISH AND PROVIDE FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PROVINCE OF MANITOBA.

Whereas it is probable that Her Majesty the Queen may, pursuant to the "British North America Act, 1867," be pleased to admit Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory into the Union or Dominion of Canada, before the next session of the Parliament of Canada:

And whereas it is expedient to prepare for the transfer of the said territories to the Government of Canada at the time appointed by the Queen for such admission:

And whereas it is expedient also to provide for the organization of part of the said territories as a Province, and for the establishment of a Government therefor, and to make provision for the civil government of the remaining part of the said territories, not included within the limits of the Province:

Therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. On, from and after the day upon which the Queen, by and with the advice and consent of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, under the authority of the 146th section of the "British North America Act, 1867," shall, by Order in Council in that behalf, admit Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory into the Union or Dominion of Canada, there shall be formed out of the same a Province, which shall be one of the Provinces of the Dominion of Canada, and which shall be called the Province of Manitoba, and be bounded as follows: that is to say, commencing at the point where the meridian of ninety-six degrees west longitude from Greenwich intersects the parallel of forty-nine degrees north latitude; thence due west along the said parallel of forty-nine degrees north latitude (which forms a portion of the boundary line between the United States of America and the said North-Western Territory) to the meridian of ninety-nine degrees of west longitude; thence due north along the said meridian of ninety-nine degrees west longitude, to the intersection of the same with the parallel of fifty degrees and thirty minutes north latitude; thence due east along the said parallel of fifty degrees and thirty minutes north latitude to its intersection with the before-mentioned meridian of ninety-six degrees west longitude; thence due south along the said meridian of ninety-six degrees west longitude to the place of beginning.

2. On, from and after the said day on which the Order of the Queen in Council shall take effect as aforesaid, the provisions of the "British North America Act, 1867," shall, except those parts thereof which are in terms made, or by reasonable intendment, may be held to be specially applicable to, or only to affect one or more, but not the whole of the Provinces now composing the Dominion, and except so far as the same may be varied by this Act, be applicable to the Province of Manitoba, in the same way, and to the like extent as they apply to the several Provinces of Canada, and as if the Province of Manitoba had been one of the Provinces originally united by the said Act.

30. All ungranted or waste lands in the Province shall be, from and after the date of the said transfer, vested in the Crown, and administered by the Government of Canada for the purposes of the Dominion, subject to, and except and so far as the same may be affected by, the conditions and stipulations contained in the agreement for the surrender of Rupert's Land by the Hudson's Bay Company to Her Majesty.

31. And whereas it is expedient, towards the extinguishment of the Indian title to the lands in the Province, to appropriate a portion of such ungranted lands, to the extent of one million four hundred thousand acres thereof, for the benefit of the families of the half-breed residents, it is hereby enacted, that, under regulations to be from time to time made by the Governor-General in Council, the Lieutenant-Governor shall select such lots or tracts in such parts of the Province as he may deem expedient, to the extent aforesaid, and divide the same among the children of the half-breed heads of families residing in the Province at the time of the said transfer to Canada, and the same shall be granted to the said children respectively, in such mode and on such conditions as to settlement and otherwise as the Governor-General in Council may from time to time determine.

32. For the quieting of titles, and assuring to the settlers in the Province the peaceable possession of the lands now held by them, it is enacted as follows:—

30 (1) All grants of land in freehold made by the Hudson's Bay Company up to the eighth day of March, in the year 1869, shall, if required by the owner, be confirmed by grant from the Crown.

(2) All grants of estates less than freehold in land made by the Hudson's Bay Company up to the eighth day of March aforesaid, shall, if required by the owner, be converted into an estate in freehold by grant from the Crown.

(3) All titles by occupancy with the sanction and under the license and authority of the Hudson's Bay Company up to the eighth day of March aforesaid, of land in that part of the Province in which the Indian title has been extinguished, shall, if required by the owner, be converted into an estate in freehold by grant from the Crown.

34. Nothing in this Act shall in any way prejudice or affect the rights or properties of the Hudson's Bay Company, a contained in the conditions under which that Company surrendered Rupert's Land to Her Majesty.

35. And with respect to such portion of Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory, as is not included in the Province of Manitoba, it is hereby enacted, that the Lieutenant-Governor of the said Province shall be appointed, by Commission under the Great Seal of Canada, to be the Lieutenant-Governor of the same, under the name of the North-West Territories, and subject to the provisions of the Act in the next section mentioned.

36. Except as hereinbefore is enacted and provided, the Act of the Parliament of Canada, passed in the now last session thereof, and entitled "An Act for the Temporary Government of Rupert's Report Minister Justice (Can.), 29th December, 1870.

Land, and the North-Western Territory when united with Canada," is hereby re-enacted, extended and continued in force until the first day of January, 1871, and until the end of the session of Parliament then next succeeding.

REPORT OF THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE (CANADA).*

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,

OTTAWA, Dec. 29th, 1870.

The undersigned has the honour to report to Your Excellency that during the last session of the Canadian Parliament, while the Act 33 Vic, cap. 3, providing for the establishment and government of the Province of Manitoba was under consideration, the question was raised as to the power of Parliament to pass the Act, and especially those of its provisions which gave the right to the Province to have 10 representatives in the Senate and House of Commons of the Dominion.

"The British North America Act, 1867," provides that:

"The Queen in Council on address from the Houses of Parliament of Canada, may admit Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory, or either of them, into the Union on such terms and conditions as are in the address expressed, and as the Queen thinks fit to approve, subject to the provisions of this Act; and any Order in Council in that behalf shall have effect as if it had been enacted by the Parliament of the United Kingdom."

The address, which was passed by the Parliament of Canada, contained no provisions with respect to the future government of the country, the only terms and conditions contained in it being those agreed upon between the Hudson's Bay Company and Canada as the conditions of their surrender of 20 their Charter to Her Majesty. Even if the terms of the address had included a new constitution for the North-West, it must, under the above cited section, have been subject to the provisions of the Imperial Act of Union.

The Rupert's Land Act, 1868, passed by the Imperial Parliament, provides (5 Section) for the admission of Rupert's Land (but not of the North-Western Territory) into the Dominion of Canada; and that, "thereupon, it shall be lawful for the Parliament of Canada, from the date aforesaid, to make, ordain and establish, within the land and territory, so admitted as aforesaid, all such laws, institutions and ordinances, and to constitute such a court and officers as may be necessary for the peace, order, and good government of Her Majesty's subjects and others therein."

This provision of the Act may fairly be held to have authorized the Canadian Parliament to pass 30 the Act, giving a constitution to a portion of Rupert's Land; but still the question remains, whether, under the two Imperial Acts referred to, it had the power to give the people of the new Province representation in the Senate and House of Commons of Canada.

The general purview of the "British North America Act, 1867," seems to be confined to the three Provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, originally forming the Dominion.

In the constitution of the Senate the Dominion was divided into three divisions, each division having equal representation in that body. It fixes the normal number of the Senate at seventy-two, subject to the provisions of the Act; and the 28th clause provides that the number of Senators shall not at any time exceed seventy-eight; the 147th clause, however, enacting that in case of the admission of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, the normal number of Senators shall be seventy-six, and 40 the maximum eighty-two.

In like manner the clauses of the Act relating to the constitution of the House of Commons give a certain proportionate representation to the Provinces originally constituting the Dominion, and make no reference to the increase of numbers from any addition to the territory of the Dominion.

There is in the Act no provision whatever for representation in the Senate or House of Commons, of Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory, or British Columbia.

* Sess. Papers, Canada, 1871, No. 20.

Under these circumstances, as the question as to the constitutionality of the Act of the Canadian Parliament has been raised, and as the doubt may cause grave disquiet in the territories which have been or may hereafter be added to the Dominion, and in order also to prevent the necessity of repeated applications to the Imperial Parliament for legislation respecting the Dominion, the undersigned has the honour to recommend that the Earl of Kimberley be moved to submit to the Imperial Parliament, at its next session, a measure,

1. Confirming the Act of the Canadian Parliament, 33 Vic., cap. 3, above referred to, as if it had been an Imperial Statute, and legalizing whatever may have been done under it according to its true intent.

10 2. Empowering the Dominion Parliament from time to time to establish other Provinces in the North-Western Territory, with such Local Government, Legislature and constitution as it may think proper; provided that no such Local Government or Legislature shall have greater powers than those conferred on the Local Governments and Legislatures by the "British North America Act, 1867," and also empowering it to grant such Provinces representation in the Parliament of the Dominion; the Acts so constituting such Provinces to have the same effect as if passed by the Imperial Parliament at the time of the Union.

3. Empowering the Dominion Parliament to increase or diminish, from time to time, the limits of the Province of Manitoba, or of any other Province of the Dominion, with the consent of the Government and Legislature of such Province.

10 4. Providing that the terms of the suggested Act be applicable to the Province of British Columbia, whenever it may form part of the Dominion.

All which is respectfully submitted.

[After some correspondence, the Imperial Act, 34 and 35 Vic., cap. 23, was passed to give effect to the above recommendations.]

MINUTE OF COUNCIL (ONTARIO), APPROVED BY THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR ON THE 19TH
SEPTEMBER, 1871.*

The Committee of Council have had under consideration a communication of the Secretary of State for the Provinces, dated 31st July last, in reply to Your Excellency's despatch of the 17th of the same month, in relation to the appointment of a Commission, one member of which should be appointed by the Dominion, and the other by the Ontario Government, to determine the boundary line between the Province of Ontario and the North-West Territories, in which the Secretary of State announces that Eugene E. Taché, Esquire, of the city of Quebec, has been named, on the part of that Government, as its Commissioner for that purpose, and the recommendation of the Honourable the Attorney-General, dated 18th September, 1871, in respect thereto.

Order in Council (Ontario), 19th September, 1871.

The Committee advise that a Commissioner, to act for and on behalf of the Ontario Government, be appointed by Your Excellency, to confer with and act in the premises with the Dominion Commissioner, and they further respectfully advise that it be an instruction to the said Commissioner to report concerning the western as well as the northern boundary of this Province, and the territory of the Dominion, and that the Honourable William McDougall, C. B. be the said Commissioner for this Province.

REPORT OF COL. DENNIS, DOMINION SURVEYOR-GENERAL, PREPARED AT THE REQUEST OF SIR JOHN 10

OTTAWA, 1st October, 1871.

Report of Col.
Dennis, 1st
October,
1871.

Remarks on the question of the boundary between the Province of Ontario and the Dominion Lands or North-West Territories.

1. The above limit is identical with the westerly boundary of the Province of Quebec as the same was fixed in the Quebec Act in 1774.
2. In describing the boundary of Quebec, in the Act referred to, having commenced at the Bay of Chaleurs and continued westerly to the north-west angle of the Province of Pennsylvania, it goes on in the following language: "And thence along the western boundary of the said Province (Pennsylvania) until it strikes the River Ohio, and along the bank of the said river westward to the banks of the 20
Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchant Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay."
3. The above phraseology (underlined), in describing the westerly boundary of Quebec, has been, and is still, interpreted in different ways according to the private opinions or prejudices of parties.
4. Those interested in locating the boundary of Ontario as far as possible to the west, argue that the term "to the banks of the Mississippi and northward to the southern boundary of the territory, etc., etc.," means that in going northward, the banks of the Mississippi are to be followed to its source, and that they were in fact so intended in the Act.
5. On the other hand, it is contended, in the interest of the Dominion, that the language "to the banks of the Mississippi," simply means to the banks of the said river at the point where it is joined by 30 the Ohio, and the words which follow, "and northward to the southern boundary, etc.," was intended to be construed as upon a due north line.
6. There is no evidence forthcoming which would show clearly what was intended by the Act, and in considering the question, therefore, we are left to draw conclusions from co-relative circumstances; a consideration of these have led the writer to believe that a due north line from the forks of the Ohio was intended as the westerly boundary of Quebec, in support of which he would submit:—
7. Had such not been the intention, that is to say, had it been intended that the Mississippi River should be the west boundary, inasmuch as the evident intention to make the Ohio River the southern boundary, west of Pennsylvania, was thus definitely expressed: "and along the banks of the said river westward to the banks of the Mississippi," then such intention would have been expressed in corres- 40 ponding terms, that is to say, the boundary would have been described as "northward along the banks of the Mississippi, etc., etc."
8. This argument has the more force from the fact stated as follows:—The Bill, as submitted to the House, described the boundaries as "heretofore part of the territory of Canada in North America, extending southward to the banks of the River Ohio, westward to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchant Adventurers, etc., etc."
9. Mr. Burko, in the interests of the Provinces of New York and Pennsylvania, moved in amendment (the House being in Committee) to substitute the following for the boundary, viz.: after North America "by a line drawn, etc., etc., to the north-west part of the boundary of Pennsylvania, and down the west boundary of that Province by a line drawn thence till it strike the Ohio."

* Report, House of Commons (Canada) Committee, 1880, p. 1.

The above words were inserted.

10. Then followed another amendment, which was adopted, and after "Ohio" should be inserted "and along the banks of the said Ohio."

Now, had the banks of the Mississippi been intended to be adhered to in going "northwards," is it not clear that the necessity of an amendment to that effect would similarly have made itself evident at the time, and does not the absence of any reference to the point, or discussion whatever upon it, go to show that "northwards" was intended to be on a due north line?

11. The map which was used in the House of Commons to illustrate the question of the boundaries of Quebec in the debate on the Act, is said to have been one known as Mitchell's map, dated February 13th, 1755.

12. It is stated that there were two editions of this map, the first one being withdrawn on the publication of the second, which latter contained "numerous important corrections, but the date was not altered."*

13. The only copy of Mitchell's map available is in the library here, and, on inspecting the River Mississippi on it, we find that the course of that river is taken up abruptly at a point in 47° 12' north latitude and 101° 30' west longitude, at which point we further find on the map the following note by the author:

"The head of the Mississippi is not yet known. It is supposed to arise about the 50th degree of latitude and the west bounds of this map," etc., etc., etc.

14. Now it is not at all probable that with the uncertainty asserted to exist on the map itself used by the House of Commons at the time the boundaries were debated and settled, with regard to the source and direction of a great part of the course of the Mississippi, that the House intended its banks as the boundary of Quebec.

15. Such a theory, leaving as it would, one of the principal boundaries of the Province in great uncertainty, would be entirely inconsistent with the minuteness and precision of language insisted on in settling the Ohio as the southern boundary.

16. Taking the strictly legal construction of the description, it is claimed that the direction expressed as "northwards" is upon a due north line, in favour of which see the decision on this specific case in the judgment of Chief Justice Sewell in connection with the trial of Charles de Reinhard in Quebec, 1817, for murder committed on the Winnipeg River.†

17. The northerly boundary of Ontario, between it and the Dominion lands, is undoubtedly the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's possessions. It is possible that some difference of opinion may arise as to where this boundary should be located on the ground.

18. The Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company, dated 2nd May, 1670 (see paper marked F), described their grant as "extending over and including all lands and territories drained by the waters emptying into Hudson's Bay."

19. The boundary in such case would be the ridge dividing the water-sheds north and west of Lake Superior, which intersects the Dawson route at height of land portage, and crosses the international boundary between South Lake and Gunflint Lake.

20. It may be argued on behalf of Ontario that the dividing ridge which should bound the Hudson's Bay Company's possessions on the south is that which may be described as the northerly section of the‡ "range which, dividing to the north-west of Lake Superior, separates the waters flowing direct to Hudson's Bay from those flowing into Lake Winnipeg, crossing the Nelson River at Split Lake, or Lac des Forts, etc.;" and it will probably be urged in favour of this view that the grant to the Company only covered "such lands and territories as were not already actually possessed by the subjects of any other Christian Prince or State," and that inasmuch as the country to the south of the range of high lands last described was considered to belong to France, that therefore King Charles would give no title in what he did not own, and certain old maps (see B and C) are referred to in support of this view.

21. It is not important to discuss this view, if it is conceded that a due north line from the forks of the Ohio bounds Ontario to the west; as in such case the height of land would be intersected just north-west of Lake Nipigon at a point about which there can be very little dispute.

22. If, on the other hand, the contention of Ontario is allowed, that is to say, that the banks of the Mississippi should be followed to their source, and that a line should be drawn thence due north to intersect the height of land alluded to in paragraph 20, then the westerly boundary would extend over 300 miles north of the Lake of the Woods, and the Province would be made to include a territory which, as regards form and extent, could not, in the opinion of the undersigned, have been at all contemplated or intended at the time of passing the Quebec Act.

23. But the undersigned assumes, on the strength of opinions to such effect, given by eminent counsel to whom the question had been submitted, that the "southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchant Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay" was, and is, the height of land bounding the watershed of the basin of Hudson's Bay; and, even admitting that the banks of the Mississippi, to the source of the said river, were intended by the Act, a due north line from the latter would, in the course of a very few miles, intersect such height of land, as the same is in the immediate vicinity of the source of the Mississippi, and between it and the Lake of the Woods, the waters in which latter drain into Hudson's Bay.

24. The only territory, therefore, affected by the question of the due north boundary from the forks of the Ohio, as against the Mississippi, as the boundary, is that coloured yellow on the tracing marked A herewith, shown as contained between the due north line from the forks of the Ohio and the curved line defining the height of land to the south and west; because even construing the west limit of Ontario in the Quebec Act as the banks of the Mississippi, and a line due north from the source of that river to the height of land forming the southern boundary of Hudson's Bay Company's territory, such description would only take effect where, and to the east and north of where, such height of land crosses the international boundary between Gunflint and South Lakes, as before mentioned, confirming, in fact, the western and northern boundaries of the Province, in accordance with their description by Bouchette, and which usage had established up to the acquisition of the territories in 1869.

25. Looking at the very irregular character of the boundary which would be formed by following the ridge between the watersheds, it is suggested by the writer, whether it would not be better for Ontario and the Dominion to agree on a conventional boundary, for instance, in some way as shown on tracing lettered C.

26. The saving, in such case, in the expense of surveying and defining the boundaries on the ground, would be at least one-half; besides which, making the limits of this regular character, would facilitate the laying out of the lands adjoining them in future times.

INSTRUCTIONS TO THE BOUNDARY COMMISSIONER FOR THE DOMINION.*

DRAFT of Instructions to be given to the Commissioner appointed to act on behalf of the Dominion of Canada in the survey and location of the boundary line between the North-West Territories and the Province of Ontario, in conjunction with a Commissioner to be appointed by the Government of Ontario.

Instructions to Dominion Boundary
Commissioner,
1872.

The boundary in question is clearly identical with the limits of the Province of Quebec, according to the 14th Geo. III., cap. 83, known as the "Quebec Act," and is described in the said act as follows, that is to say: Having set forth the westerly portion of the southern boundary of the Province as extending along the River Ohio "westward to the banks of the Mississippi," the description continues 20 from thence (i.e., the junction of the two rivers) "and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay."

Having determined the precise longitude west of Greenwich of the extreme point of land marking the junction of the north and east banks respectively of the said rivers, you will proceed to ascertain and define the corresponding point of longitude of the intersection of the meridian passing through the said junction with the international boundary between Canada and the United States.

Looking, however, at the tracing enclosed, marked A, intended to illustrate these instructions, it is evident such meridian would intersect the international boundary in Lake Superior.

Presuming this to be the case, you will determine and locate the said meridian, the same being the westerly portion of the boundary in question, at such a point on the northerly shore of the said lake as 30 may be nearest to the said international boundary, and from thence survey a line due south to deep water, marking the same upon and across any and all points or islands which may intervene; and from the point on the main shore, found as aforesaid, draw and mark a line due north to the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Territory before mentioned.

This will complete the survey of the westerly boundary line sought to be established.

You will then proceed to trace out, survey and mark, eastwardly, the aforementioned "southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay."

This is well understood to be the height of land dividing the waters which flow into Hudson's Bay from those emptying into the valley of the great lakes, and forming the northern boundary of Ontario; and the same is to be traced and surveyed, following its various windings till you arrive at the angle 40 therein between the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, as the latter is at present bounded; having accomplished which, the service will have been completed.

Your requisition for such assistance, scientific and otherwise, as may be necessary to enable you to determine the necessary longitude with precision, and to effect the practical surveying operations in the field, and for such instruments as may be required will receive due consideration.

Further instructions relating to the character of the boundary marks to be erected, and conveying other information which you will probably require, will be duly sent you.

The Committee have had before them a memorandum, dated 11th March, 1872, from the Honourable the Minister of Justice, stating that reference having been made to him of the Order in Council of the 28th November last, on the subject of applications for mining locations and patents for land in the neighbourhood of Lake Shebandowan, and about the head of Lake Superior, and also of the despatch of the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario on such Order in Council; he reports,

That the Lieutenant-Governor in his despatch of the 6th of January, states as follows:—"In the meantime I concur in the views expressed in the Minute of the Privy Council that the boundary line in question should be ascertained and fixed with all possible speed, and to prevent unnecessary delay, would suggest that a draft of the instructions proposed to be given by the Government of the Dominion to the Commissioner appointed be transmitted for the consideration of the Government of this Province at the earliest moment."

That with the view, therefore, of meeting the desire expressed by the Lieutenant-Governor, and after consultation with Surveyor-General Dennis, he, the Minister of Justice, recommends that a copy of the draft instructions annexed to his memorandum be transmitted to the Government of Ontario.

The Committee submit the above recommendations for Your Excellency's approval.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL (CANADA), APPROVED BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL, ON THE 9TH APRIL, 1872.†

Order in Council (Can.),
29th April,
1872.

On the despatch of the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, dated 26th March last, on the subject of the location of the boundary line between the Province of Ontario and the North-West Territories, the Committee of the Privy Council beg leave to report:—

That in a despatch from the Secretary of State for the Provinces to the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, dated 30th November last, based upon a Minute of Council of the 28th November, it was suggested to the Government of Ontario that it was of great consequence that the ascertaining and fixing on the ground of the boundary line in question should be, as far as possible, expedited.

That the Lieutenant-Governor, in his despatch of the 6th of January last, expressed his concurrence in the necessity for immediate action, and to prevent unnecessary delay, suggested that a draft of the instructions proposed to be given to the Commissioner appointed on behalf of the Dominion to locate the line, should be transmitted for the consideration of the Government of Ontario at the earliest moment.

That with the view of meeting the desire so expressed, a draft of the proposed instructions was transmitted to the Lieutenant-Governor by despatch dated the 14th of March last, and

That the Lieutenant-Governor, in reply, transmitted with the despatch of the 26th of March now under consideration, an Order of his Executive Council to the following effect:—

“The Committee advise that the Government of Canada be informed that the Province of Ontario claims that the boundary line is very different from the one defined by the said instructions, and cannot consent to the prosecution of the Commission for the purpose of marking on the ground the line so defined, and that the Commissioner appointed by the Government of Ontario should be instructed to abstain from taking any further action under his Commission.”

The Committee of the Privy Council regret that the Government of Ontario, while expressing their difference of opinion from that of the Dominion, omitted to give their own views on the subject, and they did not state what their claim as to the location of the boundary line was.

As it is of the greatest consequence to the peace and well-being of the country in the vicinity of the dividing line, that no questions as to jurisdiction, or the means of prevention or punishment of crime should arise or be allowed to continue, the Committee recommend that the Government of Ontario be invited to communicate their opinion on the subject to Your Excellency, together with a description of the boundary line which they would suggest as the correct one. Should it be found, after an interchange of opinions, that the two Governments cannot agree as to the location of the line, the Committee do not doubt that both Governments will feel it their duty to settle without delay upon some proper mode of determining, in an authoritative manner, the true position of such boundary.

SIR,—I have the honour to transmit for the consideration of your Government, a certified copy of an Order of His Excellency the Governor-General in Council, on your despatch of the 24th ult., on the subject of the location of the boundary line between the Province of Ontario and the North-West Territories.

Permit me to call your attention to the concluding paragraph of the Order in Council, and for the reason therein set forth, to invite your Government to communicate their opinion on the subject discussed in the Order, together with a description of the boundary line which they could suggest as the correct one.

ORDER IN COUNCIL (ONTARIO), APPROVED BY THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR ON THE 19TH APRIL, 1872.†

The Committee of Council have had under consideration the despatch from the Secretary of State for the Provinces of the 10th instant, on the subject of the boundary line of Ontario, and the copy of an approved Minute of the Privy Council of Canada enclosed. In this Minute the Privy Council regrets, "That the Government of Ontario, while expressing their difference of opinion from that of the Dominion, omitted to give their own views on the subject, and did not state what their claim as to the location of the boundary was."

Order in Council (Ont.),
19th April,
1872.

The Committee would observe that the despatch on which their Minute was founded did not contain any invitation to the Government of Ontario to express its views or state its claim.

The Government of Ontario is now invited to do so, and the Committee advise that the Government of Canada should be informed that this Government proposes the boundary contained in the annexed description.

The Committee further advise that the Government of Canada should be informed that as to the western limit, in the opinion of this Government, there are grounds for maintaining the contention of former Governments of Canada, that the limit of Ontario is further west than the one proposed in the description, and that, while this Government is prepared, in view of all the circumstances, to agree to the western limit so proposed, in case the same is accepted by the Government of Canada, this Government does not consider itself bound by the proposal in any other event.

As to the northern limit it will be observed from the description that this Government maintains the position which is supported by the contentions of all former Governments, and by the indisputable facts that the northern boundary lies north of the watershed of the St. Lawrence system, the line of which watershed is the northern boundary laid down by the Government of Canada; and the Committee advise that the Government of Canada should be informed that, in view of all the circumstances, this Government will be prepared, in case its position as to the northern boundary is agreed to by the Government of Canada, to consider any proposal which may be made by that Government for the establishment of a conventional limit to the north of that watershed.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,

OTTAWA, 1st May, 1872.

*Report of Minister of Justice (Can.),
1st May, 1872.*

With reference to a despatch of the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, of the 19th April, transmitting an Order in Council of that Province of the same date, on the subject of the northern and western boundaries of the Province of Ontario, and in which the Government of that Province transmits a description of what it holds those boundaries to be,

The undersigned has the honour to report that a considerable difference exists between the Government of Canada and that of Ontario, in respect to the said northern and western boundaries of Ontario, and until such boundaries are properly ascertained and defined, no criminal jurisdiction can be effectively established or exercised in the disputed territory.

Having reference to the prospect of a large influx of people into the North-West Territories, it is very material that crime should not go unpunished or unprevented, and in this view the undersigned has the honour to suggest that the Government of Ontario be invited to concur in a statement of the case for immediate reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of England, with a view to the settlement, by a judgment or decision of that tribunal, of the western and northern boundaries of Ontario.

This is the more necessary as no conventional arrangement between the two Governments, as to boundary, can confer criminal jurisdiction on the Courts of Ontario, unless the place where any crime may be committed is, by law, within the Province.

The undersigned has the honour also to call attention to the fact that the mineral wealth of the North-West country is likely to attract a large immigration into these parts, and, with a view to its development, as well as to prevent the confusion and strife that is certain to arise and continue among the miners and other settlers so long as the uncertainty as to boundary exists, the undersigned begs leave to recommend that the Government of Ontario be urged to arrange with that of the Dominion for some joint course of action as to the granting of land and of mining licenses, reservation of royal ties, etc., and for this purpose he would suggest that the Government of Ontario be moved to appoint a Commissioner to meet the Hon. J. C. Aikins, and arrange some joint system; and that any such arrangement, when ratified by the two Governments, shall be held to bind both, and shall be subject to the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council upon the question of the boundary; and that after such decision, titles to lauds or mining rights shall be confirmed by the Government, whether of Canada or of Ontario, as shall, under the decision of the Judicial Committee, be the proper party to legalize the same.

All which is respectfully submitted.

SIR,—Referring to your despatch of the 19th ultimo, covering an Order in Council of the Government of Ontario, of the same date, on the subject of the northern and western boundaries of that Province, I have the honour to enclose, for the information of your Government, a copy of an Order of the Ontario to concur with the Government of Canada in a statement of the case now in dispute between the said Governments, respecting such boundaries, for immediate reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, with the view to a settlement, by a judgment or decision of that tribunal, of the western and northern boundaries of Ontario.

3. I am also to urge upon the Government of Ontario the necessity, in view of the facts stated in the last paragraph of the accompanying memorandum, of arranging with the Government of the Dominion for some joint course of action as to the granting of land and of mining licenses, reservation of royalties, etc., in the portion of territory in controversy, and for this purpose I have to request you to move your Government to appoint a Commissioner to meet the Honourable J. C. Aikins to arrange such joint system, on the understanding that any such arrangement when ratified by the two Governments shall be held to bind both, and shall be subject to the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council upon the question of the boundaries, and that after such decision titles to lands or mining rights western boundaries of the Province of Ontario. The Committee of Council regrets that the Government of Canada does not propose in any respect to modify its views with reference to these boundaries, opposed as these views are to the general tenor of the expressions and conduct of the Governments of the late Province of Canada, and of the Dominion in the past. The Committee of Council also regrets that the Government of Canada is not prepared to negotiate for the arriving at a conventional arrangement as regards the boundaries. The Committee infers that the Government of Canada disapproves of that course in consequence of the difficulty stated in the following extract from the memorandum of the Minister of Justice.

"This is the more necessary as no conventional arrangement between the two Governments, as to boundary, can confer criminal jurisdiction on the Courts of Ontario, unless the place where any crime 10 may be committed is, by law, within the Province."

The Committee desires to call attention to the third clause of the Act of the Imperial Parliament, passed 29th June, 1871, chap. 28, which is in these words :

"The Parliament of Canada may, from time to time, with the consent of the Legislature of any Province of the said Dominion, increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the limits of such Province upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said Legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any Province affected thereby."

It appears to the Committee that under the operation of this clause it is quite possible to arrive at a conventional settlement of the question by the joint action of the Executive and Legislative authori- 20 ties of the Dominion and of the Province.

With reference to the emergency arising out of the expected immigration during this spring and summer, it appears to the Committee that a short Act of the Parliament of Canada, providing that the boundaries of the Province of Ontario should, for the purposes of criminal jurisdiction, and so far as the Parliament of Canada can provide, be deemed, pending the settlement of the question, to extend as far as the limits which are specified in the memorandum transmitted to the Government of Canada by this Government, would, though open to some objection, afford the best practicable solution of that difficulty.

With reference to the proposed submission to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, this Committee begs to observe that the solution of the boundary question depends upon numerous facts, the evidence as to many of which is procurable only in America, and the collection of which would 03 involve the expenditure of much time; and upon the whole the Committee is of opinion that the more satisfactory way of settling the question, should the Government of Canada still decline to negotiate for a conventional boundary, would be by reference to a Commission sitting on this side of the Atlantic, and the Committee recommends that, without for the present dealing definitely with the proposal of the Government of Canada for a reference to the Judicial Committee, this counter-suggestion should be made to that Government.

The Committee of Council entertains a strong conviction that it is the duty of the Government of Ontario to retain in the meantime the control of the lands within the boundaries claimed by it; but as it is anxious that the policy of the Government with reference to the disposition of these lands should, so far as practicable, conform to the views of the Government of Canada, the Committee agrees that an 40 effort should be made to avoid the possible difficulties arising from the claims put forward by that Government, and with this view the Committee recommends that the Honourable R. W. Scott should be requested to confer with the Honourable J. C. Aikins, as proposed by the despatch of the 16th May.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL, (CANADA,) APPROVED BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL
ON THE 7TH NOVEMBER, 1872.*

The Committee of Council have had under consideration the despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario of the 31st May last, transmitting a further Order in Council of that Province on the subject of its northern and western boundaries.

The Committee have the honour to report that the importance of obtaining an authoritative decision as to the limits, to the north and to the west of the Province of Ontario, has already been affirmed by Minute in Council.

That the establishment of criminal and civil jurisdiction, and the necessity of meeting the demands of settlers and miners for the acquisition of titles to lands, combine to render such a decision indispensable.

In reference to the northern boundary, the Government of Ontario contend that it lies to the north of the watershed which divides the waters running to the south from those which run towards Hudson's Bay, and offer, "should this view be acceded to by the Government of the Dominion, to consider any proposal which may be made to them by that Government for the establishment of a conventional limit to the north of that watershed"—and as regards the western boundary line, they state that it may be defined by a line drawn north from a point west of the Lake of the Woods and on the 49th parallel of north latitude, where that parallel would be intersected by a line drawn north from the source of the Mississippi River, and from thence to the point of intersection with the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Territory, but reserve, in the event of such a line not being agreed to by the Canadian Government, the right to contend that the boundary of Ontario is still farther to the west.

The northern boundary of Ontario, the Government of the Dominion believe to be the line of the watershed separating the waters which run towards Lake Superior from those which run towards Hudson's Bay; and the western boundary, a line drawn in accordance with the provisions of 14 George III, chapter 83, from the conflux of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers northward (i.e., by the shortest northward course) to the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's Territories.

With the divergent views thus held by the respective Governments, and considering the limits within which the Government of Ontario propose to circumscribe the possible conventional boundaries, the difficulties which would attend an attempt to arrive at a settlement of the present difficulties between the two Governments in that mode are manifest, and in the opinion of the Committee too great to render such an attempt expedient.

To place the territory in dispute, pending the settlement of the question, within the limits of Ontario for criminal purposes, as suggested in the Order in Council of that Province of the 31st May, whilst not at all providing for the sale or management of lands or granting titles thereto, or for civil jurisdiction, would, there is good reason to apprehend, be beyond the powers conferred by the "British North America Act, 1867," and would be objectionable, not only as tending to render one party to the dispute less anxious possibly for its settlement, but, also, as calculated to exercise a prejudicial influence on the ultimate assertion of the rights of the Dominion.

The Government of Ontario without, for the time, definitely dealing with the proposal of the Government of Canada for a reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, observe that "the solution of the boundary question depends upon numerous facts, the evidence of many of which is procurable only in America, and the collection of which would involve much time, and suggest that the more satisfactory way of settling the question, should the Government of Canada still decline to negotiate for a conventional boundary, would be by a reference to a Commission sitting on this side of the Atlantic."

The Committee are of opinion that the evidence upon which the decision of the boundaries in question would depend, is chiefly, if not altogether, of a documentary character, and would be found rather in the Imperial Archives than in America, and that any which exists here might readily be supplied, whilst an authoritative decision by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council would be final, and command that general assent which is so important in endeavouring to adjust questions of an inter-provincial character.

There are objections also to this proposal as regards the mode of conferring legal powers upon such a Commission, which it would be found very difficult, if not impossible to deal with, and the Committee doubt whether any other tribunal than that of the Queen in Council would be satisfactory to the other Provinces of the Dominion in the decision of questions in which they have a large interest, the importance of which is, by current events, being constantly and rapidly augmented, and they respectfully recommend that the proposition for a reference to Her Majesty in Council be renewed to the Government of Ontario.

They recommend, therefore, that a copy of this Minute, if approved, be transmitted to the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario by the Secretary of State for the Provinces.

BEARING ON THE QUESTION OF THE BOUNDARIES.

THE CHARTER INCORPORATING THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY,

GRANTED BY HIS MAJESTY, KING CHARLES THE SECOND, IN THE 22ND YEAR OF HIS REIGN, 2ND MAY, 1670.

CHARLES THE SECOND, by the grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

10 WHEREAS our dear entirely beloved Cousin, Prince Rupert, Count Palatine of the Rhine, Duke of Bavaria and Cumberland, &c.; Christopher Duke of Albermarle, William Earl of Craven, Henry Lord
Arlington, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir John Robinson, and Sir Robert Vyner, Knights and Baronets; Sir Peter Colleton, Baronet; Sir Edward Hungerford, Knight of the Bath: Sir Paul Neele, Knight;
Sir John Griffith and Sir Philip Carteret, Knights; James Hayes, John Kirke, Francis Millington, William Prettyman, John Fenn, Esquires, and John Portman, Citizen and Goldsmith of London, have, at their own great cost, and charges, undertaken an expedition for Hudson's Bay, in the north-west part of America, for the discovery of a new passage into the South Sea, and for the finding some trade for furs, minerals, and other considerable commodities, and by such their undertaking have already made such discoveries as to encourage them to proceed further in pursuance of their said design, by 20 means whereof there may probably arise very great advantages to us and our kingdom.

AND WHEREAS the said undertakers, for their further encouragement in the said design, have humbly besought us to incorporate them, and grant unto them and their successors the sole trade and commerce of all those seas, straits, bays, rivers, lakes, creeks, and sounds, in whatsoever latitude they shall be, that lie within the entrance of the straits, commonly called the Hudson's Straits, together with all the lands, countries and territories upon the coasts and confines of the seas, straits, bays, lakes, rivers, creeks, and sounds aforesaid, which are not now actually possessed by any of our subjects, or by the subjects of any other Christian Prince or State.

NOW KNOW YE, that we, being desirous to promote all endeavours tending to the public good of our people, and to encourage the said undertaking, HAVE, of our especial grace, certain knowledge, and 30 mere motion, given, granted, ratified and confirmed, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, DO give, grant, ratify and confirm, unto our said Cousin, Prince Rupert, Christopher Duke of Albermarle, William Earl of Craven, Henry Lord Arlington, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir John Robinson, Sir Philip Carteret, James Hayes, John Kirk, Francis Millington, William Prettyman, John Fenn, and John Portman, that they and such others as shall be admitted in the said society as is hereafter expressed, shall be one body corporate and politic, in deed and in name, by the name of "The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay," and them by the name of "The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay," one body corporate and politic, in deed and in name, really and fully forever, for us, our heirs, and successors, WE DO make, 40 ordain, constitute, establish, confirm and declare by these presents, and that by the same name of The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, they shall have perpetual succession, and that they and their successors, by the name of The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, be, and at all times hereafter shall be personable and capable in law to have, purchase, receive, possess, enjoy and retain lands, rents, privileges, liberties, jurisdictions, franchises and hereditaments, of what kind, nature or quality soever they be, to them and their successors; and also to give, grant, demise, alien, assign and dispose lands, tenements and hereditaments, and to do and execute all and singular other things by the same name that to them shall or may appertain to do; and that they and their successors, by the name of The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, may plead and be impleaded, answer and be answered, defend and be defended, in whatsoever courts and places, before whatsoever judges and justices, and other persons and officers, in all and singular actions, pleas, suits, quarrels, and causes demands whatsoever, of whatsoever kind, nature, or sort, in such manner and form as any other our liege people of this our realm of England, being persons able and capable in law, may or can have, purchase, receive, possess, enjoy, retain, give, grant, demise, alien, assign, dispose, plead, defend and be defended, do, permit and execute; and that the said Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, and their successors, may have a common seal to serve for all the causes and businesses of them and their successors, and that it shall and may be lawful to the said Governor and Company, and their successors, the same seal from time to time, at their will and pleasure, to break, change, and to make anew or alter, as to them shall seem expedient.

AND FURTHER WE WILL, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, WE DO ordain that there shall be from henceforth one of the same Company to be elected and appointed in such form as hereafter in these presents is expressed, which shall be called the Governor of the said Company; and that the said Governor and Company shall or may select seven of their number, in such form as hereafter in these presents is expressed, which shall be called the Committee of the said Company, which Committee of seven, or any three of them, together with the Governor or Deputy-Governor of the said Company for the time being, shall have the direction of the voyages of and for the said Company, and the provision of the shipping and merchandizes thereunto belonging, and also the sale of all merchandizes, goods and other things returned, in all or any the voyages or ships of or for the said Company, and the managing and handling of all other business affairs and things belonging to the said Company; AND WE WILL, ordain and grant by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, unto the said Governor and Company, and their successors, that they the said Governor and Company, and their successors, shall from henceforth for ever be ruled, ordered and governed according to such manner and form as is hereafter in these presents expressed, and not otherwise; and that they shall have, hold, retain and enjoy the grants, liberties, privileges, jurisdictions, and immunities only hereafter in these presents granted and expressed, and no other: And for the better execution of our will and grant in this behalf WE HAVE ASSIGNED, nominated, constituted and made, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, WE DO ASSIGN, constitute and make our said Cousin PRINCE RUPERT, to be the first and present Governor of the said Company, and to continue in the said office, from the date of these presents until the 10th November then next following, if he, the said Prince Rupert, shall so long live, and so until a new Governor be chosen by the said Company in form hereafter expressed: AND ALSO WE HAVE assigned, nominated and appointed, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, WE DO assign, nominate and constitute, the said Sir John Robinson, Sir Robert Vyner, Sir Peter Colleton, James Hayes, John Kirk, Francis Millington, and John Portman to be the seven first and present Committees of the said Company, from the date of these presents until the said 10th day of November then also next following, and so on until new Committees shall be chosen in form hereafter expressed: AND FURTHER WE WILL and grant by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, until the said Governor and Company, and their successors, that it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Governor and Company for the time being, or the greater part of them present at any public assembly, commonly called the Court General, to be holden for the said Company, the Governor of the said Company being always one, from time to time to elect, nominate and appoint one of the said Company to be Deputy to the said Governor, which Deputy shall take a corporal oath, before the Governor and three or more of the Committee of the said Company for the time being, well, truly, and faithfully, to execute his said office of Deputy to the Governor of the said Company, and after his oath is so taken, shall and may from time to time, in the absence of the said Governor, exercise and execute the office of Governor of the said Company, in such sort as the said Governor ought to do: AND FURTHER WE WILL and grant by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, unto the said Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, and their successors, that they, or the greater part of them, whereof the Governor for the time being or his Deputy to be one, from time to time, and at all times hereafter, shall and may have authority and power, yearly and every year, between the first and last day of November, to assemble and meet together in some convenient place, to be appointed from time to time by the Governor, or in his absence by the Deputy of the said Governor for the time being, and that they being so assembled, it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Governor or Deputy of the said Governor, and the said Company for the time being, or the greater part of them which then shall happen to be present, whereof the Governor of the said Company or his deputy for the time being to be one, to elect and nominate one of the said Company, which shall be Governor of the said Company for one whole year then next following, which person being so elected and nominated to be Governor of the said Company, as is aforesaid, before he be admitted to the execution of the said office, shall take a corporal oath before the last Governor, being his predecessor, or his Deputy, and any three or more of the Committee of the said Company for the time being, that he shall from time to time well and truly execute the office of Governor of the said Company in all things concerning the same; and that immediately after the said oath so taken, he shall and may execute and use the said office of Governor of the said Company for one whole year from thence next following: And in like sort we will and grant that as well every one of the above-named to be of the said Company of fellowship, as all others hereafter to be admitted or free of the said Company, shall take a corporal oath before the Governor of the said Company or his Deputy for the time being to such effect as by the said Governor and Company or the greater part of them in any public Court to be held for the said Company, shall be in reasonable and legal manner set down and devised, before they shall be allowed or admitted to trade or traffic as a freeman of the said Company: AND FURTHER WE WILL and grant by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, unto the said Governor and Company, and their successors, that the said Governor or Deputy Governor, and the rest of the said Company, and their successors for the time being, or the greater part of them, whereof the Governor or Deputy Governor from time to time, to be one, shall and may from time to time, and at all times hereafter, have power and authority, yearly and every year, between the first and last day of November, to assemble and meet together in some convenient place, from time to time to be appointed by the said Governor of the said Company, or in his absence by his Deputy; and that they being so assembled, it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Governor or his Deputy, and the Company for the time being or the greater part of them which then shall happen to be present, whereof the Governor of the said Company or his Deputy for the time being to be one, to elect and nominate seven of the said Company, which shall be a Committee of the said Company for one whole year from thence next ensuing, which persons being so elected and nominated to be a Committee of the said Company as aforesaid, before they be admitted to the execution of their office, shall take a corporal oath before the Governor or his Deputy, and any three or more of the said Committee of the said Company, being their last predecessors, that they and every of them shall well and faithfully perform their said office of Committees in all things concerning the same, and that, immediately after the said oath so taken, they shall and may execute and use their said office of Committees of the said Company for one whole year from thence next following: AND MOREOVER, our will and pleasure is, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, WE DO GRANT unto the said Governor and Company, and their successors, that when and as often as it shall happen, the Governor or Deputy Governor of the said Company for the time being, at any time within one year after that he shall be nominated, elected and sworn to the office of the Governor of the said Company, as is aforesaid, to die or to be removed from the said office, which Governor or Deputy Governor not demeaning himself well in his said office WE WILL to be removable at the pleasure of the rest of the said Company, or the greater part of them which shall be present at their public assemblies commonly called their General Courts, holden for the said Company, that then and so often it shall and may be lawful to and for the residue of the said Company for the time being, or the greater part of them, within a convenient time after the death or removing of any such Governor or Deputy Governor, to assemble or therein contained, shall be visited, frequented or haunted by any of the subjects of us, our heirs or successors, contrary to the true meaning of these presents, and by virtue of our prerogative royal, which we will not have in that behalf argued or brought into question: WE STRAIGHTLY charge, command and prohibit for us, our heirs and successors, all the subjects of us, our heirs and successors, of what degree or quality soever they be, that none of them, directly or indirectly do visit, haunt, frequent or trade, traffic, or adventure, by way of merchandise, into or from any of the said territories, limits or places hereby granted or any or either of them, other than the said Governor or Company, and such particular persons as now be or hereafter shall be of that Company, their agents, factors and assigns, unless it be by the license and agreement of the said Governor and Company in writing first had and obtained, under their common seal, to be granted, upon pain that every such person or persons that shall trade or 10 traffic into or from any of the countries, territories, or limits aforesaid, other than the said Governor and Company, and their successors, shall incur our indignation, and the forfeiture and the loss of the goods, merchandizes and other things whatsoever, which so shall be brought into this realm of England, or any of the dominions of the same, contrary to our said prohibition, or the purport or true meaning of these presents, or which the said Governor and Company shall find, take and seize in other places out of our dominion, where the said Company, their agents, factors or ministers shall trade, traffic or inhabit by the virtue of these our letters patent, as also the ship and ships, with the furniture thereof, wherein such goods, merchandizes and other things shall be brought and found; and one-half of all the said forfeitures to be to us, our heirs and successors, and the other half thereof WE DO, by these presents, clearly and wholly, for us, our heirs and successors, give and grant unto the said Governor and Company, and 20 their successors: AND FURTHER, all and every the said offenders, for their said contempt, to suffer such other punishment as to us, our heirs and successors, for so high a contempt, shall seem meet and convenient, and not be in any wise delivered until they and every of them shall become bound unto the said Governor for the time being in the sum of One thousand pounds at the least, at no time then after to trade or traffic into any of the said places, seas, straits, bays, ports, havens or territories aforesaid, contrary to our express commandment in that behalf set down and published: AND FURTHER, of our more especial grace, WE HAVE descended and granted, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, DO grant unto the said Governor and Company, and their successors, that we, our heirs and successors, will not grant liberty, license or power to any person or persons whatsoever, contrary to the tenor of these our letters patent, to trade, traffic or inhabit, unto or upon any of the territories, limits 30 or places afore specified, contrary to the true meaning of these presents, without the consent of the said Governor and Company, or the most part of them: AND, of our more abundant grace and favour of the said Governor and Company, WE DO hereby declare our will and pleasure to be, that if it shall so happen that any of the persons free or to be free of the said Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, who shall, before the going forth, of any ship or ships appointed for a voyage or otherwise, promise or agree, by writing under his or their hands, to adventure any sum or sums of money towards the furnishing any provision, or maintenance of any voyage or voyages, set forth or to be set forth, or intended or meant to be set forth, by the said Governor and Company, or the most part of them present at any public assembly, commonly called their General Court, shall not, within the space of twenty days next after warning given to him or them by the said Governor or Company, or 40 their known officer or minister, bring in and deliver to the Treasurer or Treasurers appointed for the Company, such sums of money as shall have been expressed and set down in writing by the said person or persons, subscribed with the name of said Adventurer or Adventurers, that then and at all times after it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Governor and Company, or the more part of them present, whereof the said Governor or his Deputy to be one, at any of their General Courts or general assemblies, to remove and disfranchise him or them, and every such person and persons at their wills and pleasures, and he or they so removed and disfranchised, not to be permitted to trade into the countries, territories, and limits aforesaid, or any part thereof, nor to have any adventure or stock going or remaining with or amongst the said Company, without the special license of the said Governor and Company, or the more part of them present at any General Court, first had and obtained in that behalf, 50 any thing before in these presents to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding. AND OUR WILL AND PLEASURE IS, and hereby we do also ordain, that it shall and may be lawful to and for the said

Governor and Company, or the greater part of them, whereof the Governor for the time being or his Deputy to be one, to admit into and to be, of the said Company all such servants or factors, of or for the said Company, and all such others as to them or the most part of them present, at any Court held for the said Company, the Governor or his Deputy being one, shall be thought fit and agreeable with the orders and ordinances made and to be made for the government of the said Company: AND FURTHER our will and pleasure is, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, WE DO grant unto the said Governor and Company, and to their successors, that it shall and may be lawful in all elections and by-laws to be made by the General Court of the Adventurers of the said Company, that every person subscribed or brought into the present stock, one vote, and that any of those that have subscribed less than One hundred pounds, may join their respective sums to make up one hundred pounds, and have one vote jointly for the same, and not otherwise: AND FURTHER, of our especial grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, WE DO, for us, our heirs and successors, grant to and with the said Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, that all lands, islands, territories, plantations, forts, fortifications, factories or colonies, where the said Company's factories and trade are or shall be, within any of the ports or places afore limited, shall be immediately and from henceforth under the power and command of the said Governor and Company, their successors and assigns; SAVING the faith and allegiance due to be performed to us, our heirs and successors, as aforesaid; and that the said Governor and Company shall have liberty, full power and authority to appoint and establish Governors and all other officers to govern them, and that the Governor and his Council of the several and respective places where the said Company shall have plantations, forts, factories, colonies or places of trade within any of the countries, lands or territories hereby granted, may have power to judge all persons belonging to the said Governor and Company, or that shall live under them, in all causes, whether civil or criminal, according to the laws of the kingdom, and to execute justice accordingly; and in case any crime or misdemeanor shall be committed in any of the said Company's plantations, forts, factories, or places of trade within the limits aforesaid, where judicature cannot be executed for want of a Governor and Council there, then in such case it shall and may be lawful for the chief Factor of that place and his Council to transmit the party, together with the offence, to such other plantation, factory or fort where there shall be a Governor and Council, where justice may be executed, or into this kingdom of England, as shall be thought most convenient, there to receive such punishment as the nature of his offence shall deserve: AND MOREOVER, our will and pleasure is, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, WE DO GIVE and grant unto the said Governor and Company, and their successors, free liberty and license, in case they conceive it necessary, to send either ships of war, men or ammunition into any of their plantations, forts, factories, or places of trade aforesaid, for the security and defence of the same, and to choose commanders and officers over them, and to give them power and authority, by commission under their common seal, or otherwise, to continue to make peace or war with any prince or people whatsoever, that are not Christians, in any place where the said Company shall have any plantations, forts or factories, or adjacent thereto, and shall be most for the advantage and benefit of the said Governor and Company, or of their trade; and also to right and recompense themselves upon the goods, estates, or people of those parts, by whom the said Governor and Company shall sustain any injury, loss, or damage, or upon any other people whatsoever, that shall in any way, contrary to the intent of these presents, interrupt, wrong or injure them in their trade, within the said places, territories and limits granted by this Charter: And that it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Governor and Company, and their successors, from time to time, and at all times from henceforth, to erect and build such castles, fortifications, forts, garrisons, colonies or plantations, towns or villages, in any parts or places within the limits and bounds granted before in these presents unto the said Governor and Company, as they in their discretion shall think fit and requisite, and for the supply of such as shall be needful and convenient, to keep and be in the same, to send out of this kingdom, to the said castles, forts, fortifications, garrisons, colonies, plantations, towns or villages, all kinds of clothing, provisions or victuals, ammunition and implements necessary for such purpose, paying the duties and customs for the same, as also to transport and carry over such number of men being willing thereunto, or not prohibited, as they shall think fit, and also to govern them in such legal and reasonable manner as the said Governor and Company shall think best, and to inflict punishment for misdemeanours, or impose such fines

FORASMUCH as His late Majesty King Charles the Second, by his Letters Patent or Charter, under the Great Seal of England, bearing date the second day of May, in the two-and-twentieth year of his reign, reciting, or taking notice, that his then Highness Prince Rupert, Christopher Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, and divers other Lords therein particularly named had, at their own great charges, undertaken an expedition to Hudson's Bay, in the north-west parts of America, for the discovery of a new passage into the South Seas, and for finding some trade for furs, minerals and other considerable commodities, and that by such their undertaking they had made such discoveries whereby might probably arise much advantage to his said Majesty and this Kingdom; for which, an

for other reasons and motives in the said Charter mentioned, his said late Majesty was graciously pleased thereby to incorporate, create and make the said Prince Rupert, Duke of Albemarle, Earl of Craven, and other the Lords and persons therein particularly named, and such others as should be admitted into the Society (as therein is mentioned), one body corporate and politic in deed and name, by the name of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, and by that name to have perpetual succession, and to sue and be sued, take, purchase or grant; and by the said Letters Patent or Charter of incorporation provision was made as well for the appointment and constitution of the first and present, as well as for the choosing, appointing and admitting of all future governors, deputy-governors, committees, members and officers of the said Company, and for the making of laws, constitutions and ordinances, and for the government of the said Company and trade, and otherwise, and the sole trade and commerce of all the seas, straights, bays, lakes, rivers, creeks and sounds, in whatsoever latitude they shall be, that are within the entrance of the straights commonly called Hudson's Straights, together with all the lands and the territories upon the countries, coasts and confines of the seas, bays, lakes, rivers, creeks and sounds aforesaid, which were not then actually possessed by or granted to any of his said late Majesty's subjects, or possessed by the subjects of any other Christian prince or state, with divers and sundry privileges, liberties, jurisdictions, franchises, powers and authorities to punish offenders, to sue for and recover penalties, with other powers and authorities, matters and things, in the said Letters Patent or Charter of incorporation mentioned and expressed, were thereby granted to and invested in the same said Company and their successors for ever, in such sort, manner and form as in and by the said Charter or Letters Patent, or enrollment thereof, is mentioned and expressed, and as thereby more fully appears: And forasmuch as the said Governor and Company, at their great charges and with much difficulty and hazard, have settled and made great improvements of the trade to the said seas, straights and places aforesaid, which as now and for several years past hath been found to be useful and profitable to this Kingdom, and the navigation thereof, for furs, minerals and other considerable commodities; and it appearing that the said trade cannot be carried on or managed so advantageously either to the honour or interest of this realm as in a Company and with a joint stock, and it being necessary that such a Company should have sufficient and undoubted powers and authorities, privileges and liberties to manage, order and carry on the said trade, and to make by-laws, orders, rules and constitutions for the due management and regulation as well of the said Company as trade, and for the punishment of offenders, and recovering of forfeitures and penalties, which cannot be so effectually done as by authority of Parliament: Be it therefore enacted by the King and Queen's most excellent Majesties, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that the present Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, and their successors, shall at all times from henceforth stand, continue and be a body politic and corporate in deed and name, by the name aforesaid, and according to the purport and effect of the said Letters Patent or Charter hereinbefore mentioned, and that the said Letters Patent or Charter hereinbefore mentioned, bearing date the said second day of May, in the two-and-twentieth year of the reign of his said late Majesty, King Charles the Second, and all things therein contained, be, and by virtue of this present Act shall be from henceforth ratified, established and confirmed unto the present Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, and to their successors for ever, and also that the said Governor and Company and their successors shall and may have, do, use, exercise and enjoy all and singular the liberties, privileges, powers, authorities, matters and things in the said Letters Patent or Charter mentioned to be granted to them, and also that the said Letters Patent or Charter mentioned to be granted to be given, immunities, privileges, jurisdictions, powers, royalties, hereditaments, matters and things whatsoever, and of what nature and kind soever thereby given, granted or demitted, or mentioned to be given, granted or demitted to the said Prince Rupert, Duke of Albemarle, Earl of Craven, and other the Lords and persons therein particularly named, and thereby incorporated, and to the Governor and Company and committees, and other members, officers and servants of or upon the said Governor and Company the time being, and their successors, or otherwise howsoever, with and under such restraints and prohibitions, and subject and liable to such forfeitures and remedies for recovering thereof, as in the said

ROYAL PROCLAMATION OF 1763. ESTABLISHING QUEBEC AND OTHER PROVINCES.

GEORGE R.

Whereas we have taken into our royal consideration the extensive and valuable acquisitions in 40 America, secured to our Crown by the late definitive treaty of peace, concluded at Paris the 10th day of February last; and being desirous that all our loving subjects, as well of our kingdoms as of our colonies in America, may avail themselves, with all convenient speed, of the great benefits and advantages which must accrue therefrom to their commerce, manufactures, and navigation, we have thought fit, with the advice of our Privy Council, to issue this our Royal Proclamation hereby to publish and declare to all our loving subjects that we have, with the advice of our said Privy Council, granted our letters patent under our great seal of Great Britain, to erect within the countries and islands ceded and confirmed to us by the said treaty, four distinct and separate governments, styled and called by the names of Quebec, East Florida, West Florida, and Grenada, and limited and bounded as follows, viz. :

First, The government of Quebec, bounded on the Labrador coast by the river St. John, and from thence by a line drawn from the head of that river, through the lake St. John, to the south end of the lake Nipissim; from whence the said line, crossing the river St. Lawrence and the lake Champlain in forty-five degrees north latitude, passes along the high lands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the said river St. Lawrence from those which fall into the sea; and also along the north coast of the Baye des Chaleurs, and the coast of the gulph of St. Lawrence to cape Rosiers, and from thence crossing the mouth of the river St. Lawrence by the west end of the island of Anticosti, terminates at the aforesaid river St. John.

Secondly, The government of East Florida, bounded to the westward by the gulph of Mexico and the Apalachicola river; to the northward by a line drawn from that part of the said river where the Catahouchee and Flint rivers meet, to the source of St. Mary's river, and by the course of the said river to the Atlantic ocean; and to the east and south by the Atlantic ocean and the gulph of Florida, including all the islands within six leagues of the sea coast.

Thirdly, The government of West Florida, bounded to the southward by the gulph of Mexico, including all islands within six leagues of the coast from the river Apalachicola to lake Pontchartrain; to the westward by the said lake, the lake Maurepas, and the river Mississippi; to the northward by a line drawn east from that part of the river Mississippi which lies in thirty-one degrees of north latitude, to the river Apalachicola, or Catahouchee; and to the eastward by the said river.

Fourthly, The government of Grenada, comprehending the island of that name, together with the Grenadines, and the islands of Dominica, St. Vincent, and Tobago.

And to the end that the open and free fishery of our subjects may be extended to, and carried on upon, the coast of Labrador and the adjacent islands, we have thought fit, with the advice of our said Privy Council, to put all that coast, from the River St. John's to Hudson's Streights, together with the islands of Anticosti and Madelaine, and all smaller islands lying upon the said coast, under the care and inspection of our Governor of Newfoundland.

We have also, with the advice of our Privy Council, thought fit to annex the islands of St. John and Cape Breton, or Isle Royale, with the lesser islands, adjacent thereto, to our Government of Nova Scotia.

We have also, with the advice of our Privy Council aforesaid, annexed to our Province of Georgia all the lands lying between the rivers Attamaha and St. Mary's.

And, whereas, it will greatly contribute to the speedy settling our said new governments, that our loving subjects should be informed of our paternal care for the security of the liberty and properties of those who are and shall become inhabitants thereof; we have thought fit to publish and declare, by this our proclamation, that we have, in the letters patent under our great seal of Great Britain, by which the said governments are constituted, given express power and direction to our governors of our said colonies respectively, that so soon as the state and circumstance of the said colonies will admit thereof, they shall, with the advice and consent of the members of our Council, summon and call general assemblies within the said governments respectively, in such manner and form as is used and directed in those colonies and provinces in America which are under our immediate government; and we have also given power to the said governors, with the consent of our said Council and the representatives of the people so to be summoned as aforesaid, to make, constitute, and ordain laws, statutes, and ordinances for the public peace, welfare, and good government of our said colonies, and of the people and inhabitants thereof, as near as may be agreeable to the laws of England, and under such regulations and restrictions as are used in other colonies; and in the meantime, and until such assemblies can be called as aforesaid, all persons inhabiting in, or resorting to, our said colonies, may confide in our royal protection for the enjoyment of the benefit of the laws of our realm of England, for which purpose we have given power under our great seal to the governors of our said colonies respectively, to erect and constitute, with the advice of our said Councils respectively, courts of judicature and public justice within our said colonies, for the hearing and determining all causes, as well criminal as civil, according to law and equity, and, as near as may be agreeable to the laws of England, with liberty to all persons who may think themselves aggrieved by the sentence of such courts, in all civil cases, to appeal under the usual limitations and restrictions, to us in our Privy Council.

We have also thought fit, with the advice of our Privy Council as aforesaid; to give unto the 10 governors and councils of our said three new colonies upon the continent, full power and authority to settle and agree with the inhabitants of our said new colonies, or any other person who shall resort thereto, for such lands, tenements, and hereditaments, as are now, or hereafter shall be, in our power to dispose of, and them to grant to any such person or persons, upon such terms, and under such moderate quit-rents, services, and acknowledgments as have been appointed and settled in other colonies, and under such other conditions as shall appear to us to be necessary and expedient for the advantage of the grantees, and the improvement and settlement of our said colonies.

And whereas we are desirous, upon all occasions, to testify our royal sense and approbation of the conduct and bravery of the officers and soldiers of our armies, and to reward the same, we do hereby command and empower our governors of our said three new colonies, and other our governors of 20 several provinces on the continent of North America, to grant, without fee or reward, to such reduced officers and soldiers as have served in North America during the late war, and are actually residing there, and shall personally apply for the same, the following quantities of land, subject, at the expiration of ten years, to the same quit-rents as other lands are subject to in the Province within which they are granted, as also subject to the same conditions of cultivation and improvement, viz. :

To every person having the rank of a field officer, 5,000 acres.

To every captain, 3,000 acres.

To every subaltern or staff-officer, 2,000 acres.

To every non-commissioned officer, 200 acres.

To every private man, 50 acres.

30 We do likewise authorize and require the governors and commanders in chief of all our said colonies upon the continent of North America, to grant the like quantities of land, and upon the same conditions, to such reduced officers of our navy of like rank as served on board our ships of war in North America at the times of the reduction of Louisbourg and Quebec, in the late war, and who shall personally apply to our respective governors for such grants.

And whereas it is just and reasonable, and essential to our interest, and the security of our colonies, that the several nations or tribes of Indians, with whom we are connected, and who live under our protection, should not be molested or disturbed in the possession of such parts of our dominions and territories as, not having been ceded to us, are reserved to them, or any of them, as their hunting grounds; we do therefore, with the advice of our Privy Council, declare it to be our royal will and 40 pleasure, that no governor or commander-in-chief in any of our colonies of Quebec, East Florida or West Florida, do presume, upon any pretence whatever, to grant warrants of survey, or pass any patents, for lands beyond the bounds of their respective governments, as described in their commissions; as also that no governor or commander-in-chief of our other colonies or plantations in America do presume, for the present, and until our further pleasure be known, to grant warrants of survey, or pass patents, for any lands beyond the heads or sources of any of the rivers which fall into the Atlantic Ocean from the west or north-west, or upon any lands whatever, which, not having been ceded to or purchased by us as aforesaid, are reserved to the said Indians or any of them.

And we do further declare it to be our royal will and pleasure, for the present, as aforesaid, to reserve under our Sovereignty, protection, and dominion, for the use of the said Indians, all the land and territories not included within the limits of our said three new Governments, or within the limits of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company; as also all the land and territories lying to the westward of the sources of the rivers which fall into the sea from the west and north-west as aforesaid; and we do hereby strictly forbid, on pain of our displeasure, all our loving subjects from making any purchases or settlements whatsoever, or taking possession of any of the lands above reserved, without our especial leave or license for that purpose first obtained.

And we do further strictly enjoin and require all persons whatsoever, who have either wilfully or inadvertently seated themselves upon any lands within the countries above described, or upon any other lands which, not having been ceded to or purchased by us, are still reserved to the said Indians as aforesaid, forthwith to remove themselves from such settlements.

And whereas great frauds and abuses have been committed in the purchasing lands of the Indians, 10 to the great prejudice of our interests, and to the great dissatisfaction of the said Indians, in order therefore to prevent such irregularities for the future, and to the end that the Indians may be convinced of our justice and determined resolution to remove all reasonable cause of discontent, we do, with the advice of our Privy Council, strictly enjoin and require, that no private person do presume to make any purchase from the said Indians of any lands reserved to the said Indians within those parts of our colonies where we have thought proper to allow settlement; but if at any time any of the said Indians should be inclined to dispose of the said lands, the same shall be purchased only for us, in our name, in some public meeting or assembly of the said Indians, to be held for that purpose by the Governor or Commander-in-Chief of our colony respectively within which they shall lie: and in case they shall lie within the limits of any proprietaries, conformable to such 20 directions and instructions as we or they shall think proper to give for that purpose. And we do, by the advice of our Privy Council, declare and enjoin, that the trade with the said Indians shall be free and open to all our subjects whatever, provided that every person who may incline to trade with the said Indians do take out a license for carrying on such trade from the Governor or Commander-in-Chief of any of our colonies respectively where such person shall reside, and also give security to observe such regulations as we shall at any time think fit, by ourselves or commissaries to be appointed for this purpose, to direct and appoint for the benefit of the said trade: and we do hereby authorize, enjoin, and require the Governors and Commanders-in-Chief of all our colonies respectively, as well those under our immediate government, as those under the government and direction of proprietaries, to grant such licenses without fee or reward, taking especial care to insert therein a condition 30 that such license shall be void, and the security forfeited, in case the person to whom the same is granted shall refuse or neglect to observe such regulations as we shall think proper to prescribe as aforesaid.

And we do further expressly enjoin and require all officers whatever, as well military as those employed in the management and direction of the Indian affairs within the territories reserved as aforesaid, for the use of the said Indians, to seize and apprehend all persons whatever, who standing charged with treason, misprision of treason, murder, or other felonies or misdemeanors, shall fly from justice and take refuge in the said territory, and to send them under a proper guard to the colony where the crime was committed of which they shall stand accused, in order to take their trial for the same.

Given at our Court at St. James's the 7th day of October, 1763, in the third year of our reign. 40 bitants of that settlement, to St. Louis, where he exercised the duties of commandant by the general consent of the people, till he was superseded by the Spanish governor, Piernes, in 1770. Upon assuming the government of the country, Captain Stirling published the following proclamation from General Gage, who was at this time the Commander-in-Chief of the British forces in North America:—

Whereas by the peace concluded at Paris, the tenth day of February, 1763, the country of Illinois has been ceded to His Britannic Majesty, and the taking possession of the said country of the Illinois by the troops of His Majesty, though delayed, has been determined upon: We have found it good to make known to the inhabitants—

That His Majesty grants to the inhabitants of the Illinois the liberty of the Catholic religion, as 10 has already been granted to his subjects in Canada. He has consequently given the most precise and effective orders to the end that his new Roman Catholic subjects of the Illinois may exercise the worship of their religion according to the rites of the Romish Church, in the same manner as in Canada.

That His Majesty moreover agrees that the French inhabitants or others, who have been subjects of the Most Christian King, may retire in full safety and freedom wherever they please, even to New Orleans, or any part of Louisiana, although it should happen that the Spaniards take possession of it in the name of his Catholic Majesty; and they may sell their estates, provided it be to the subjects of His Majesty, and transport their effects as well as their persons, without restraint upon their emigration, under any pretence whatever, except in consequence of debts or of criminal processes.

That those who choose to retain their lands and become subjects of His Majesty shall enjoy the 20 same rights and privileges, the same security for their persons and effects, and the liberty of trade, as the old subjects of the King.

That they are commanded by these presents to take the oath of fidelity and obedience to His Majesty in presence of Sieur Stirling, Captain of the Highland Regiment, the bearer hereof, and furnished with our full powers for this purpose.

That we recommend forcibly to the inhabitants to conduct themselves like good and faithful subjects, avoiding, by a wise and prudent demeanor, all causes of complaint against them.

That they act in concert with His Majesty's officers, so that his troops may take possession of all the forts, and order be kept in the country. By this means alone they will spare His Majesty the 30 necessity of recurring to force of arms, and will find themselves saved from the scourge of a bloody war, and of all the evils which a march of an army into their country would draw after it.

We direct that these presents be read, published and posted up in the usual places.

Done and given at head-quarters, New York, signed with our hand, sealed with our seal at arms, and countersigned by our Secretary, this 30th of December, 1764.

By His Excellency:

BOUNDARY DESCRIPTION IN IMPERIAL COMMISSION TO THE GOVERNOR OF QUEBEC, 1768.

12TH APRIL, 1768.

SIR GUY CARLETON, *Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of the Province of Quebec.

Our Province of Quebec in America, bounded on the Labrador Coast by the River St. John, and from thence by a line drawn from the head of that river through the Lake St. John to the south end 10 of Lake Nipissim, from whence the said line crossing the River Saint Lawrence and the Lake Champlain in forty-five degrees northern latitude, passes along the high lands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the said River Saint Lawrence from those which fall into the sea, and also along the north coast of the Bay Des Chaleurs and the coast of the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Cape Roziers, and from thence crossing the mouth of the River Saint Lawrence by the west end of the Island of Anticosti, terminates at the aforesaid River of St. John, together with all the rights, members, and appurtenances whatsoever thereto belonging.

IMPERIAL ORDER IN COUNCIL, 1768,

CONFIRMING THE BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN THE PROVINCES OF NEW YORK AND QUEBEC, FIXED BY SIR HENRY MOORE, THE GOVERNOR OF NEW YORK, AND BRIGADIER-GENERAL CARLETON, 20 LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF QUEBEC, AT A MEETING HELD FOR THAT PURPOSE; AND REGULATING THE CLAIMS MADE BY HIS MAJESTY'S NEW CANADIAN SUBJECTS TO LANDS SITUATED ON THE SOUTH SIDE OF THAT LINE.

At the Court of St. James, the 12th day of August, 1768:

*Imperial Order-in-Council, 12th
August 1768.*

Present,—The King's Most Excellent Majesty, Duke of Grafton, Duke of Rutland, Duke of Queensbury, Marquis of Granby, Earl of Litchfield, Earl of Hillsborough, Earl of Shelburne, Viscount Weymouth, Viscount Falmouth, Viscount Barrington, Viscount Villiers, Lord North, James Stewart McKenzie, Esq., Thomas Hartley, Esq., Sir Edward Hawke.

Whereas there was this day read at the Board a report from the Right Honourable the Lords of the Committee of Council for Plantation affairs, dated the ninth of this instant, upon considering a 30 report made by the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, upon an extract of a letter from Sir Henry Moore, Governor of New York, to the Earl of Shelburne, dated the 16th January last, relative to the settling of the boundary line between that Province and Quebec; by which report it appears that it having been mutually agreed upon between Sir Henry Moore and the Commander-in-Chief of the Province of Quebec, at a meeting for that purpose appointed, that the line of division between these provinces should be fixed at the 45th degree of north latitude, conformable to the limits laid down in His Majesty's proclamation of October, 1763; and it having been ascertained and determined by proper observations where the said line would pass, it is therefore proposed that these proceedings above 40 stated should be confirmed by His Majesty.

His Majesty, taking the said report into consideration, was pleased, with the advice of His Privy 40 Council, to approve thereof, and doth hereby confirm the said proceedings above stated, and order that the said line of division be run out and continued as far as each Province respectively extends.

Provided that nothing herein contained shall extend to affect the properties of His Majesty's new subjects having possessions under proper titles on those parts of the lands on the south side of the line, the dominion of which was not disputed on the part of the Crown of Great Britain.

* Lib. c. (3), Imperial Commissions, fol. 33.

* New York Council Minutes, xvi. London Documents, xli. N. Y. Hist. Coll., Vol. i., p. 560.

And provided also that this determination shall not operate wholly to deprive His Majesty's new subjects of such concessions on the south side of the said line, on which they may have made actual settlement and improvement, although the lands may have been disputed by Great Britain; but that such possessors shall be entitled to so much of the said concessions as shall be proportioned to their improvements, at the rate of fifty acres for every three acres of improvements, provided they take out grants for the same under the seal of the Province of New York, subject to the usual quit rents.

And provided also that the grant to no one person shall exceed twenty thousand acres.

And the governors or commanders-in-chief of His Majesty's said Provinces of New York and Quebec for the time being, and all others whom it may concern, are to take notice of His Majesty's pleasure hereby signified, and govern themselves accordingly.

PAPERS AS TO THE ESTABLISHING OF CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN THE ILLINOIS, 1773.

THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO LIEUTENANT-GENERAL GAGE.*

WHITEHALL, March 3rd, 1773.

SIR,—Your dispatches of the 5th and 6th of January, No. 4 and 5, have been received and laid before the King.

The propositions towards forming a Government for the Illinois Country, suggested to you long ago by the inhabitants of that District, were certainly in the outline of them too absurd and extravagant to afford the least ground for consideration; but it has always appeared and does still appear to me that if those inhabitants have (as I conceive they have) a right, under the Treaty of Paris, to continue in their possessions, it is both dangerous and disgraceful to leave that district without such regulations, as may on the one hand ensure to the inhabitants that protection in their civil rights which they are entitled to expect, or on the other hand, secure their allegiance as subjects. I shall, therefore, think it my duty to make this an object of my attention, and I shall hope, upon your return to England, to receive such lights from you as may direct my judgment in a business of so great intricacy, and enable me to form an opinion of what may be finally proper to be done.

Papers as to Civil Government in the Illinois, 1773.

Earl of Dartmouth to Lieutenant-General
Gage, 3rd
March, 1773.

You will therefore not omit to bring with you every paper relative to that country which you think may be useful in such a consideration, and that may be necessary to explain, as well the causes as the effects of those abuses and disorders, which, in some of your former dispatches you say had prevailed to a great degree of enormity in that country.

The state of the settlement at Post St. Vincent on the Ouabach, will necessarily make a part of this consideration, seeing that the inhabitants there no longer appear a lawless vagabond banditti, as they have been represented to be, but in the light of subjects claiming the King's protection and countenance in right of possessions held under regular titles.

When I reflect upon the importance of the objects I have already mentioned, and view the danger to which the interior of America is exposed from the appearance of ill-humor and confederacy amongst the Savages, I feel impatient for the advice and information I may expect to receive from you on subjects of so much importance, and I very much lament that the business respecting the question that has arisen touching the legality of General Haldimand's taking the command should be still in such a state as to make it necessary for me to desire your longer continuance in America, but as the Bill which is prepared for removing this difficulty has but just found its way to the House of Commons, I am unavoidably obliged to desire you will not leave your command till you hear further from me; in the meantime you will inform General Haldimand that it will be highly necessary that he should, as soon as possible, transmit to me a proper certificate of his having qualified himself to enjoy the benefits of a

I am, &c.,

Lieutenant-General Gage.

M. DANIEL BLOUIN, AGENT FOR THE ILLINOIS COMPANY, TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.*

MY LORD:

I have delivered to General Haldimand a literal copy of the Sketch I mentioned to your Lordship in the Letter, of which I now enclose the duplicate, with another copy and translation of that Sketch. 10

We cannot believe the possibility of that Form of Government ever being adopted, unless our enemies succeed in falsely representing, that it is earnestly desired by the inhabitants.

However, it is so evidently tyrannical that, should it be established, it could be of no long duration; for, the disgrace which Great Britain must necessarily undergo, by establishing, in a country ceded to her, a form of government, much worse than those which now exist in any of the French, or even of the Spanish Colonies, would soon make His Majesty sensible of the necessity of its being for ever abolished.

Selfish men, who endeavoured to disguise their motives, when opposing the establishment of a civil government in the Illinois country, have artfully insinuated, that the expense would be too great for such an inconsiderable settlement: it is not even improbable, that they may have found many, who were so weak and unguarded as to suffer themselves to be deluded by their sophistry. But, My Lord, besides the justice that there is in fulfilling the repeated promises made to us, "that we would enjoy that blessing," we know how much France and Spain dread that event; and, therefore, we can easily conceive that the expense attending that Measure would be most amply compensated by advantages of the highest nature, and of which narrow minds can have no idea.

As justice, humanity, and policy itself, concur in defeating the opposition of our enemies, we trust that your Lordship will patronize our cause; and, instead of establishing in the Illinois country and under the sanction of His Majesty's authority an absurd and oppressive form of government, we hope that those despotic states, that may at any time become the enemies of Great Britain, will be terrified at the effects, which liberty, legally established in the most inconsiderable countries acquired 30 by her, will naturally produce in the minds of their unhappy and oppressed subjects.

I have the honour to be, with unbounded confidence and the greatest respect,

My Lord, your Lordship's most humble, most obedient and most devoted servant,

DANIEL BLOUIN.

A PLAN OF GOVERNMENT FOR THE ILLINOIS COUNTRY.

Of the Officers of the Government.

The Governor; one Magistrate for Kaskaskias; one Magistrate for Kahoquia; one Magistrate for the Three Villages of the Rock's Meadow, St. Philip, and Fort Chartres.

Five or Six Persons, chosen amongst the principal Merchants or Inhabitants of the Country, are to be appointed Members of the Council, and shall, together with the Governor, form the Great Council.

There will be an inferior Magistrate in each of the villages of Kaskaskias and Kahoquias, and a third for the villages of the Rock's Meadow, St. Philip, and Fort Chartres. They are to obey and assist the others; they shall be annually taken amongst the Inhabitants in their turn, and serve one year.

The Magistrates are to keep the Peace, each in his respective District; they are to have the right of imprisoning for specified crimes, of punishing for the Contempt of Authority; they may determine Causes under the value of Fifty Livres, without appeal, and impose small Fines for slight offences, as may be regulated by the Governor in Council.

As to Causes above the value of Fifty Livres, the Magistrates shall endeavour to settle them in a friendly manner, by procuring Arbitrators chosen by the Parties; otherwise, the Parties shall be referred to the Chamber of Kaskaskias, where the Three Magistrates shall be under the obligation of meeting and holding Four Sessions every Year.

The Party who shall lose the Action may appeal from the Chamber of Kaskaskias to the Governor and Council, the Sentence of whom shall be definitive.

The Chamber may decree pecuniary Penalties or bodily Punishments, as may be enacted by the Governor and Council, in Criminal Cases; but they shall not sentence any one to Death, except only for murder.

Report shall be made to the Governor in Council of all the Proceedings in Criminal Cases, and no Punishment shall be inflicted without their approbation.

As Mercy is the Prerogative of the Head of any Government whatever, the Governor shall have the right of mitigating the Punishments which may be decreed, or grant Pardon, even in case of Death.

The Governor, with the advice of the Council, may make Ordinances for the good Government of the Country; which Ordinances every one, without exception, shall be obliged to obey. He shall likewise limit Fines, which, never, under any pretence, shall be;* and he shall publish Edicts to that Fines, as also Forfeitures, shall be applied to the extraordinary Exigencies of Government.

The Governor and Council shall likewise limit the Fees to be paid, which are to defray the Expense of the Chambers, Clerk's Office, &c., &c.

The Governor for the time being, as Commander in Chief in and over the Country, shall command the Militia; and, being vested with the Executive Power, shall take care that the Laws be executed effect.

and good order maintained; and he shall watch over the conduct of the Magistrates; and, whenever necessary, he shall publish suitable Proclamations.

The ancient Laws and Customs of the Country shall be the Basis of whatever may be commanded by the Governor and Council.

All the Officers of the Government, before they enter into Office, are to take the Oath of Allegiance to His Majesty, and swear also that they will discharge the Duties of their respective Offices for the good of the Public, and administer Justice faithfully and impartially, &c., &c.

I, the underwritten Notary Public, in the Illinois Country, do hereby certify to all those whom it may concern, that I have copied word for word the preceding writing from a similar piece, exhibited to me without Date and Signature by some of the Inhabitants of this country, to one of whom, they have declared to me that Captain Lord, our Commandant, delivered the same to him for the purpose

NEW YORK. S.S.

Personally appeared before me, Francis Filkin, Esquire, one of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the City and County of New York, in the Province of New York, Matthew Kennedy, late of the Village of Kaskaskias, in the British part of the Illinois Country, Merchant, who, being duly sworn on the Holy Evangelists of the Almighty God, deposeth and saith, that Vieault L'Espérance was, to the best of this Deponent's understanding and belief, a Notary Public in the said Illinois Country, on the seventeenth day of June last past, and that this Deponent believeth that the said Notary subscribed the same, for that his hand-writing is well known to this Deponent. Furthermore, this Deponent saith, that he hath heard from sundry of the said Inhabitants, that none of them had signed any Paper tending to solicit the Government therein described and sketched out; and, that the said Inhabitants were, on the contrary, averse to the Proposal made to them to that effect; that this Deponent hath heard, understands, and believes that Captain Hugh Lord, of His Majesty's Eighteenth Regiment of Foot, and Commandant in the said Illinois Country, delivered to one or more of the said Inhabitants an anonymous Paper, of which the within Copy, attested by the Notary aforesaid, is a true Copy, to the best of this Deponent's remembrance or belief; and that the said Captain Lord delivered it so, as by the direction of His Excellency General Gage, late Commander-in-Chief of His Majesty's Forces in North America; and that this Deponent understood that the sundry of the said Inhabitants disbelieved that the said General Gage had given any such directions, yet they imputed nothing to the said Captain Lord, as he did not act in a clandestine manner in communicating the said Paper, but, on the contrary, in an open and public Assembly or Meeting of the Inhabitants, whom he called to that effect. And further this Deponent saith not.

Sworn before me this 9th day of October, 1773.

WHITEHALL, 1st December, 1773.

MR. BLOUIN:

SIR,—Your letter of the 16th of October, which I received on the 17th of last month, states to me two very different objects of consideration.

The papers which have been communicated to me, respecting complaints against Colonel Wilkins, for injuries done by him to individuals during his command in the Illinois country, are very general in their contents, and do not answer to the description of those which you say you delivered to General Gage; but if they had been ever so particular and minute, as Colonel Wilkins is no longer in the service of the Crown, injuries done by him to individuals cannot be redressed by any authority of my office.

With regard to the wishes of the inhabitants in the several districts in the Illinois country, to be put under some form of Civil Government, neither the Memorial to the Lords of Trade, nor any other

Some form of government, however, seems essentially necessary; and though I cannot think that a civil establishment independent of any other of the King's Colonies ought to be adopted, yet I can venture to assure you, that the interests of His Majesty's new subjects there will not be neglected, and they may rest assured of the King's protection and the enjoyment of every privilege that their situation can, with propriety, admit of.

SIRE,—Your most humble and very faithful new subjects of the Province of Canada take the liberty to prostrate themselves at the foot of the Throne, to make known the sentiments of respect, of love, and of submission in their hearts towards your august person, and to render you most humble thanks for your fatherly care. * * * *

In the year 1764, your Majesty deigned to bring to a close the military Government in this Province for the purpose of introducing the civil government, and from the time of this change we realized the inconvenience which resulted from the British laws, which until that time were totally unknown to us. Our ancient citizens who had regulated our difficulties without expense were barely thanked; the militia, whose glory it was to bear that name under your Empire, was disbanded. It is true we were granted the right to be jurors, but at the same time we were made to feel that there were obstacles to our holding certain positions. The proposed introduction of the laws of England, infinitely wise and useful for the mother country, could not be made to accord with our customs, without reversing our fortunes and entirely destroying our possessions.

Such have been up to this time, and such are yet our just subjects of fear, tempered nevertheless by the kindness of your Majesty's Government.

Deign Illustrions and Generous Monarch, to dissipate these fears, in according us our ancient laws, customs, and privileges; with the boundaries of Canada such as they have formerly been. * * * *

We are with the most profound submission your Majesty's most obedient, most zealous, and most faithful subjects.

† MEMORIAL to support the demands of the humble and very faithful new subjects of His Majesty in Canada.

The addition of so vast a territory as that which was formerly under the French Government of which the number of inhabitants actually exceeds a hundred thousand souls, of whom nineteen-twentieths are new subjects; the advancement of its agriculture; the encouragement of its navigation and of its commerce; an arrangement to be placed on immovable foundations, which would disentangle the confusion which reigns there for the want of fixed and authorized laws—these are points presented for consideration as worthy of the wisdom of the Government. * * * *

The colony as it is now limited, by latitude forty-five degrees, is too restricted in its boundaries. The parallel which bounds it passes about fifteen leagues below Montreal, and yet it is at this side alone that the lands are fertile, and capable of being placed under cultivation with advantage.

We beg that, as under the French Government, all the upper districts known under the names of Missilimakinac, Detroit, and other adjacent places as far as the River Mississippi, may be left to our colony. The reunion of these posts will be so much more necessary to our country, as there being no laws established there, dishonest traders, to whom we furnish merchandise to barter with the Indians, remain there with our goods with impunity, which entirely ruins this colony, and makes these posts a refuge for robbers, capable of inciting the Indian nations to insurrection. * * * *

THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR CRAMAHÉ OF QUEBEC, IN REFERENCE TO THE TWO PRECEDING PETITIONS.

WHITEHALL, 4th May, 1774.

Earl of Dartmouth to the Lieut-Governor Cramahé, 4th May, 1774

SIR,—I have received your letters, No. 13 and 14, and have laid them before the King, together with the two Petitions transmitted therewith.

The manner in which the Petitioners have expressed their wishes, is decent and respectful, but I am fully convinced from your account of the steps taken to procure these Petitions, that it was become highly necessary that the arrangements for the government of Quebec should be no longer delayed, and I have the satisfaction to acquaint you that I did on Monday last present to the House of Lords a Bill for the Regulation of that Government, which is calculated to lay the foundation for those Establishments, that I hope will give full satisfaction to all His Majesty's [sic.] and remove those difficulties with which the administration of the Government in that Province has been so greatly embarrassed.

IMPERIAL ACT, 14 GEO. III, c. 83 (1774)—THE QUEBEC ACT.

AN ACT FOR MAKING MORE EFFECTUAL PROVISION FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC IN NORTH AMERICA.

The Quebec Act, 1774.

WHEREAS His Majesty, by His Royal Proclamation, bearing date this Seventh day of October, in the third year of his Reign, thought fit to declare the provisions which had been made in respect to certain countries, territories and islands in America, ceded to His Majesty by the definitive Treaty of Peace concluded at Paris on the Tenth day of February, one thousand seven hundred and sixty-three; and whereas by the arrangements made by the said Royal Proclamation, a very large extent of country, within which there were several colonies and settlements of the subjects of France, who claimed to remain therein under the faith of the said Treaty, was left without any provision being made for the administration of civil government therein; and certain parts of the territory of Canada, where sedentary fisheries had been established and carried on by the subjects of France, inhabitants of the said Province of Canada, under grants and concessions from the government thereof, were annexed to the government of Newfoundland, and thereby subjected to regulations inconsistent with the nature of such fisheries: May it therefore please Your Most Excellent Majesty, that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same,

That all the territories, islands and countries in North America, belonging to the crown of Great Britain, bounded on the south by a line from the Bay of Chaleurs, along the high lands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the River St. Lawrence from those which fall into the sea, to a point in forty-five degrees of northern latitude, on the eastern bank of the River Connecticut, keeping the same latitude directly west, through the Lake Champlain, until, in the same latitude, it meets the River St. Lawrence; from thence up the eastern bank of the said river to the Lake Ontario; thence through the Lake Ontario and the river commonly called Niagara; and thence along by the eastern and south-eastern bank of Lake Erie, following the said bank until the same shall be intersected by the northern boundary granted by the charter of the Province of Pennsylvania, in case the same shall be so intersected; and from thence along the said northern and western boundaries of the said Province, until the said western boundary strike the Ohio; but in case the said bank of the said lake shall not be found to be so intersected, then following the said bank until it shall arrive at that point of the said bank which shall be nearest to the north-western angle of the said Province of Pennsylvania, and thence, by a right line, to the said north-western angle of the said Province of Pennsylvania, and thence along the western boundary of the said Province until it strike the River Ohio; and along the bank of the said river, westward, to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay; and also all such territories, islands, and countries, which have, since the Tenth of February, one thousand seven hundred and sixty-three, been made part of the Government of Newfoundland, be, and they are hereby, during His Majesty's pleasure, annexed to, and made part and parcel of the Province of Quebec as created and established by the said Royal Proclamation of the Seventh of October, one thousand seven hundred and sixty-three.

20 II. Provided always that nothing herein contained relative to the boundary of the Province of Quebec shall in any wise affect the boundary of any other colony.

III. Provided always, and be it enacted, that nothing in this Act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to make void, or to vary, or alter any right, title, or possession derived under any grant, conveyance, or otherwise, howsoever of or to any lands within the said Province, or the Provinces thereto adjoining, but that the same shall remain and be in force, and have effect as if this Act had never been made.

DEBATE ON THE QUEBEC BILL, 1774.

EXTRACTS FROM THE DEBATE IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS ON THE BILL, SO FAR AS RELATES TO THE BOUNDARIES.*

30 Mr. T. Townshend, Jun.—Although I bow very low to all great authorities, I must venture to mention one thing, that when I was calling for regulations for Canada, little did I think that I was calling for regulations for a country much larger than Canada, a country "extending," in the words of the Bill, "southward to the banks of the River Ohio, westward to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay." I say, Sir, that when I was calling for regulations for Canada, little did I think that I was calling for an arrangement which, I will venture to say, is oppressive to the English subject, and disagreeable and hateful to the Canadian. . . . I know there prevails an opinion that the best thing that you can do with this country is to make it a French colony, to keep the English 40 out of it as much as possible, that they may not mix with the Canadians. . . . Now, for what purpose are they (the English settlers) to be placed under French laws, unless it is meant to be laid as a foundation that, for the future, French laws are to be the laws of America? If this is to be the case, Sir, that may be a good reason for extending French law to the whole of Illinois, and to all that is intermediate between Illinois and Canada. You have given up to Canada almost all that country which was the subject of dispute, and for which we went to war. We went to war calling it the Province of Virginia. You tell the French it was only a pretext for going to war; that you knew then, you know now, that it was a part of the Province of Canada. . . . I should wish to know why

Canada may not be reduced to some less limits; why not the same limits England and France have ever given it; and why not within some bounds, a little less than that which is given to it here?

Lord North.—The first thing objected to by the honourable gentleman is the very great extent of territory given to the Province. Why, he asks, is it so extensive? There are added undoubtedly to it two countries which were not in the original limits of Canada, as settled in the Proclamation of 1763; one, the Labrador coast, the other, the country westward of the Ohio and Mississippi, and a few scattered posts to the west. Sir, the addition of the Labrador coast has been made in consequence of information received from those best acquainted with Canada and the fishery upon that coast, who deem it absolutely necessary, for the preservation of that fishery, that the Labrador coast should no longer be considered as a part of the government of Newfoundland, but be annexed to that country. 10 With respect to the other additions, these questions very fairly occur. It is well known that settlers are in the habit of going to the interior parts from time to time. Now, however undesirable, it is open to Parliament to consider whether it is fit there should be no government in the country, or, on the contrary, separate and distinct governments; or whether the scattered posts should be annexed to Canada. The House of Lords have thought proper to annex them to Canada; but when we consider that there must be some government, and that it is the desire of all those who trade from Canada to those countries, that there should be some government, my opinion is that if gentlemen will weigh the inconvenience of separate governments, they will think the least inconvenient method is to annex those posts, though few in population, great in extent of territory, rather than to leave them without government at all, or make them separate ones. Sir, the annexation likewise is the result of the desire 20 of the Canadians and of those who trade to those settlements, who think they cannot trade with safety as long as they remain separate.

Mr. T. Townshend, Jun.—Near the Illinois and Fort Du Cape, I am informed, there are at this time upwards of five-and-twenty thousand British settlers.

Mr. Dunning.—The first object of this Bill is to make out that to be Canada, which it was the struggle of this country to say was not Canada. Now, Sir, if this Province should ever be given back to its old masters—and I am not without an inclination to think that the best way would be to give it back to its old masters—if it should ever become right to give back Canada, with what consistency can its future negotiator say to France: We will give you back Canada; not that Canada which you asserted to be Canada, but that stated in the proclamation, having discovered that we were mistaken in the 30 extent of it, which error has been corrected by the highest authority in this country? Then, suppose Canada, thus extended, should be given back to France, the English settled there will then have a line of frontier to an extent undefined by this Bill; for this country is bounded by the Ohio upon the west—God knows where! I wish God alone may not know where. I wish any gentleman would tell us where. I observe in this description of the frontier a studied ambiguity of phrase. I cannot tell what it means; but I conjecture that it means something bad. The Ohio is stated as a boundary confirmed by the Crown; but what act, what confirmation by the Crown has passed upon this subject? I know of no such act, of no such confirmation. I know, by the terms of the Charter, the colonists suppose, and I think they are well grounded in the supposition, that they are entitled to settle back as far as they please to the east [? west] to the sea, their natural boundary. They did not like a different 40 barrier. I know some assert this right, and others content themselves with a less extensive claim. Whether so extensive a claim has been allowed, I know not; but I do understand, in point of fact, that there has been long subsisting a dispute about the western frontier, which was never discussed, still less decided, and when this Bill shall become a law, those colonists will then learn that this Parliament, at this hour, have decided this dispute without knowing what the dispute was, and without hearing the parties. Looking, Sir, at the map, I see the River Ohio takes its rise in a part of Pennsylvania, and runs through the Province of Virginia; that, supposing myself walking down the river, all the country to the right, which is at this moment a part of the Province of Virginia, has been lopped off from this part, and has become instead a part of Canada; for, we tell them, the instant they pass that river, which by the terms of the Charter they may pass, that matter is now forever at rest: 50 the moment, say we, you get beyond that river, you are in the condition in which this Bill professes to put Canada—the Indian finds himself out of the protection of that law under which he was bred.

Sir, do we treat the proprietors of the next province, Indiana, well? Some of them are resident in this country. I apprehend, at this very hour they are unapprised of this Bill to stop them. To decide questions without exactly knowing whether such questions are existing, is an obvious injustice. I should be glad to learn what is the good intended to be effected by this extent of territory? The noble lord says it is to comprise a few straggling posts under some form of government. If I should admit the necessity of so comprising a few straggling posts, does it follow that this is a form of government fit to be established? Does it follow from any local reasons why Canada should be so extensive, or that the English settlers should be likewise involved? What objections are there to making more settlements? Whatever they are, they will be found trivial compared to the consequence of involving this whole region in this form of government.

Attorney-General Thurlow.—The honourable gentlemen complain that the bounds of Canada extend a great way beyond what they were acknowledged to do formerly, and that it was peculiarly bad policy, as far as it regarded the French, to give the limits so great an extension. Now, the House will remember that the whole of Canada, as we allowed it to extend, was not included in the proclamation; that the bounds were not co-equal with it as it stood then, and that it is not included in the present Act of Parliament, if that were material. But I will not, Sir, consider it as the Province that formerly belonged to France, nor as called by the same name: it is a new scheme of a constitution adapted for a part of the country, not that part only which was under French government, but embracing many other parts of great extent which were formerly not under French government, but were certainly occupied in different parts by French settlers, and French settlers only. The honourable gentlemen are mistaken if they suppose that the bounds described embrace in point of fact any English settlement. I know of no English settlement embraced by it. I have heard a great deal of the commencement of English settlements; but as far as I have read, they all lie upon the other side of the Ohio. I know at the same time, that there have been for nearly a century past, settlements in different parts of all this tract, especially in the southern parts of it and in the eastern (? western) bounded by the Ohio and Mississippi; but with regard to that part, there have been different tracts of French settlements established. As far as they are inhabited by any but Indians, I take those settlements to have been altogether French; so that the objection certainly wants foundation. . . . It is undoubtedly true, if you read the French history, that the bounds prescribed neither are nor ever were the bounds of the Province of Canada, as stated by the French; and therefore the argument is not itself a proper one to proceed upon. . . . With regard to the more southern part of the country, I do not take it that Virginia has ever made a single claim within more than a hundred miles of the bounds prescribed for the present Province. The most extensive claim I ever heard of went to what is called the Endless Mountains, just in a nook of the Province of Virginia. I know of none that ever pretended to exceed that, nor ever heard that some new settlements, which were applied for between these mountains and the Ohio, have ever been looked upon as an invasion of the rights of those who have claims upon the Province of Virginia. . . . I have always understood, also, that it was under that authority, and in conformity with the rule and measure of law, that in every instance, through every period of English history, the King has given to newly-conquered countries their constitution; subject to be corrected by the joint interposition of the King, Lords, and Commons of the country; and that such a constitution might be reformed, by correcting the ill advice, if any ill advice had been given, under which the King had acted in giving them a constitution upon the event and at the moment of the conquest.

Col. Barré.—The honourable and learned gentleman was not precise in stating the limits of our colonies. He seemed unwilling for the House to think that any one of the colonies, especially Pennsylvania and Virginia, had a right to settle beyond the Endless Mountains [Alleghanies]; as if the honourable and learned gentleman could be ignorant of the fact that many thousands of English subjects are established some hundred miles beyond the Endless Mountains, upon the very spot which you are now going to make a part of this country of Canada. . . . It was, says the noble lord, necessary to take in and to annex the scattered Posts in the neighbourhood of Detroit and Lake Michigan. If the noble lord will be so good as to look at the map, he will find he could have taken in every one of those Posts, and never thrown out any doubt about the shape of Canada, at the same time that all that part between the lake and the Ohio would have been kept out by this Bill—and all the purposes of the Bill, except the reference to settling upon the Ohio, would have been answered by his taking that boundary. If there had been any doubt, what would have removed that doubt, would have been looking at the course pursued between the English and French negotiators, when the French offered to withdraw from that part of the country which they had taken possession of on the south of the Ohio, and retire to the north side, making that river the boundary of the colony. The English Minister said, "No; we will not submit to those terms. They are not the boundaries; the River St. Lawrence and the lakes are our boundary—we will agree to no other." Their language now is, "the River St. Lawrence is the centre, not the frontier; we will not be deprived of our property in the country."

Mr. Sergeant Glynn.—You are incompetent to decide upon the limits of the country, or whether the description of it in the Bill is most conformable to the claim of the French, or to our claim before the war; but I shall take it as I find it stated on both sides of the House, namely, that there is to be a newly-erected Province, comprehending a great part of North America, partly inhabited, partly uninhabited; that such parts are to be erected into a Province, in hopes that the population will increase, and that all those parts by degrees will become peopled. . . . In times past, a Minister of the Crown was censured for proposing an arbitrary form of government for the colonies. However objectionable that proposed form of government may have been, we do not find that the powers given to the governor, on that occasion, were so extensive as those vested in him by this measure. The principles which prevailed in the days of Charles the Second will not, I trust, receive the sanction of the legislature of the present day.

Solicitor-General Wedderburn.—It is one object of this measure that these persons (the English) should not settle in Canada. The subjects of this country, in Holland, in the Baltic, and in different parts of the world, where they may go to push their commercial views, look upon England as their home; and it should be our care to keep alive in their breasts this attachment to their native soil. With regard to the other portion of the inhabitants of North America, I think the consideration alters; if the geographical limits are rightly stated, I think one great advantage of this extension of territory is this, that they will have little temptation to stretch themselves northward. I would not say, "Cross the Ohio; you will find the Utopia of some great and mighty empire." I would say, "This is the border beyond which, for the advantage of the whole empire, you shall not extend yourselves." It is a regular government; and that government will have authority to make inquiry into the views of native adventurers. As to British subjects within the limits, I believe that there are not five in the whole country. I think that this limitation of the boundary will be a better mode than any restriction laid upon government. In the grant of lands, we ought to confine the inhabitants to keep them, according to the ancient policy of the country, along the line of the sea and river.

Mr. Charles Fox.—It is not right for this country to originate and establish a constitution in which there is not a spark of semblance of liberty. A learned gentleman has said that by this means we should deter our own countrymen from settling there. Now, Sir, as it is my notion that it is the policy of this country to induce Englishmen to mix as much as possible with the Canadians, I certainly must come to a different conclusion.

Monday, June 6.

The House resolved itself into a Committee upon the Bill, Sir Charles Whitworth in the Chair. The first clause was read, viz: "And whereas, by the arrangements made by the said Royal Proclamation, a very large part of the territory of Canada, within which there were several colonies and settlements of the subjects of France, who claimed to remain therein under the faith of the said treaty, was left without any provision being made for the administration of civil government therein, and other parts of the said country, where sedentary fisheries had been established and carried on by the subjects of France, inhabitants of the said Province of Canada, under grants and concessions from the government thereof, were annexed to the government of Newfoundland, etc., be it enacted that all the said territories, islands, and countries heretofore a part of the territory of Canada, in North America, extending southward to the banks of the River Ohio, westward to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay, and which said territories, islands, and countries are not within the limits of some other British colony, as allowed and confirmed by the Crown, or which have, since the 10th of February, 1763, been made part of the government of Newfoundland, be, and they are hereby, during his Majesty's pleasure, annexed to and made part and parcel of the Province of Quebec, as created and established by the said Royal Proclamation of the 7th of October, 1763."

Lord North.—There are great difficulties as to the best mode of proceeding. I apprehend the alteration I am about to propose will save every right where there is a right. I will explain the amendment I intend to make; if that should not give satisfaction, gentlemen will state what it is they propose to substitute in its stead. We shall then ascertain how far we shall be able to make anything more precise. The question is an extremely difficult one. It is usual to have different boundaries laid down in different manners. Where the King is master of the country, then they are drawn by his Majesty's officers only; where there has been any grant or charter, and it has been necessary to draw any boundary line; then not only his Majesty's officers, but commissioners have been appointed, and together they draw a line, subject afterwards, to an appeal to the Privy Council—wherefore that distinction is made here. It is intended, immediately after the passing of this Act, to go on with the project of running the boundary line between Quebec and New York and Pennsylvania, etc., belonging to the Crown. This is made to prevent the Province of Quebec from encroaching on the limits of any of those grants where no boundary has been settled. I find many gentlemen are desirous of having something more precise, if possible. To this I have no objection; but we are so much in the dark as to the situation of this country, that it is not possible to do anything more safe than saving the rights of the other colonies, leaving them to be settled on the spot by commissioners. Persons possessing local knowledge can act better than we can. For that reason I propose to leave out the words "heretofore part of the territory of Canada," and insert "extent of country," and also leave out the words "said country," and insert "territory of Canada."

Governor Johnston.—My objection to it is, you are going to extend a despotic government over too large a surface; and that you are going to establish a boundary line, with a pretence of bringing it within the line of justice, where God and nature, are against you. The pretence that is held out, to induce this House to accede to the measure is, first, that with the former government of Quebec, Canada did extend so far, and that as we are about to give the Canadians back their old laws, we ought at the same time to give them back what has been asserted in this House to have been their ancient territory. . . . Now, Sir, as I had the honour of being appointed Governor of West Florida, it became my duty to make myself acquainted with the boundaries of Louisiana, and I accordingly endeavoured to obtain the best information upon that subject. I was surprised, therefore, to hear it given in evidence, not directly, but insinuated, that the former Government of Canada extended as far as you propose to make it. One of the reasons given by General Carleton for this extension of country, was that the inhabitants of these remote parts might be under the direction of the Government of Canada.

Mr. Edmund Burke.—If we had originated this measure above stairs, where maps might have been laid upon the table, no doubt the whole dispute of this day would have been avoided. I shall ask for the attention of the Committee, partly that they may understand me; partly that I may understand myself. In the first place when I heard that this Bill was to be brought in on the principle that Parliament were to draw a line of circumvallation about our colonies, and to establish a siege of arbitrary power, by bringing round about Canada the control of other people, different in manners, language, and laws from those of the inhabitants of this colony, I thought it of the highest importance that we should endeavour to make this boundary as clear as possible. I conceived it necessary for those who are to be besieged in this manner; and also necessary for the British subject, who should be restricted, and not be allowed unknowingly to venture into the colony to disturb its possessors. I wish these limits to be ascertained, and fixed with precision, for the sake of both parties. Having this object in my view, I shall first consider the line drawn in the proclamation of 1763. It was drawn from a point taken in the lake called Nipissim; that lake stands to the north of this point. I entreat the attention of the Committee; for the escape of a word is the escape of a whole argument. Sir, this boundary was fixed by a line drawn obliquely from Lake Nipissim, which line, crossing the St. Lawrence and the Lake Champlain, formed an angle in the latitude of forty-five degrees. This constituted the south-west boundary of Canada; beyond that the Province was to extend no further—and confined within this limit it remained from the year 1763 to this time. That was then the boundary of Canada; and when that boundary was formed, that was the boundary of the Government—and that boundary was fixed there because it was the boundary of the possession. There was then no considerable settlement to the south-west of that line. This line the people of Canada acquiesced in. They have since come before His Majesty's government, and have laid before it a complaint in which they state that this was a line drawn especially for the purpose of territorial jurisdiction, and the security of property; but they represent that it is a line ill-suited for a growing country. They do not complain that they have not the legal limits, but they complain of the climate to which they are restricted. "The Province," they say, "as it is now bounded, by a line passing through the forty-fifth degree of north latitude, is confined within too narrow limits; this line is only fifteen leagues distant from Montreal, and yet it is only on this side that the lands of the Province are fertile, and that agriculture can be cultivated to much advantage." Sir, if no injustice will thereby be done to any one, I don't know a more reasonable request than that their complaints should be attended to. . . . The noble lord showed me the amendment, which by no means relieved my apprehensions. The reason why I feel so anxious is, that the line proposed is not a line of geographical distinction merely; it is not a line between New York and some other English settlement; it is not a question whether you shall receive English law and English government upon the side of New York, or whether you shall receive a more advantageous government upon the side of Connecticut; or whether you are restrained upon the side of New Jersey. In all these you will find English laws, English customs, English juries, and English assemblies wherever you go. But this is a line which is to separate a man from the right of an Englishman. First, the clause provides nothing at all for the territorial jurisdiction of the Province. The Crown has the power of carrying the greatest portion of the actually settled portion of the Province of New York into Canada. . . . The Bill turns freedom itself into slavery. These are the reasons that compel me not to acquiesce by any means, either in the proposition originally in the Bill, or in the amendment. Nay, the proposition in the amendment is a great deal worse, because you therein make a saving of the right of interference with, and may fix your boundary line at the very gates of New York, perhaps in the very town itself and subject that colony to the liability of becoming a Province of France. It was this state of things Sir, that made me wish to establish a boundary of certainty. The noble lord has spoken upon this subject with a great deal of fairness. He says that if any gentleman will find a boundary of certainty, he will accept it. Whether, if we should be able to find such a boundary, the colony of New York will be satisfied with it I know not; but speaking here as a member of Parliament, I do think the colony had better have a boundary much less in extent, yet reduced to such a certainty that they may exactly know when and where they cease to be English subjects. The boundary originally settled between Canada and New York was entitled to contest with the Crown under the first proclamation That was given up. I am glad the noble lord has got a map before him. They gave up a vast extent of country. I recommended them to give up for peace all that part which lies between that country and the River St. Lawrence, and to take their departure from a line drawn through Lake Champlain in forty-five degrees of latitude, as far as the River St. Lawrence, then following the course of that river through Lake Ontario and Lake Erie, to make it the western bound of the colony of Pennsylvania. These limits and bounds would give New York a territory sufficient to enable it to meet every exigency of government. It would give the Crown a boundary of certainty; it would give the people of Canada a certainty of knowing upon what side of the water their territory began; and it would give the subjects of Great Britain the power of knowing where they can be free. . . . He does not know enough of the state of that country to be able to adopt the line which he has drawn; whereas nothing can be more geographically distinguished than water and land. This boundary is physically distinguished; it is astronomically distinguished. It has been fixed by actual observation, and agreed upon by the surveyors. We have everything that geography, astronomy, and general convenience, stronger sometimes than either, can give to make this boundary definite. I shall therefore now move the boundary which I have proposed, viz., by a line drawn from a point on the east side of Lake Champlain, in 45 degrees north latitude, and by a line drawn in that parallel west to the River St. Lawrence, and up that river to Lake Ontario, and across that Lake to the River Niagara, and from Niagara across Lake Erie to the north-west point of the boundary of Pennsylvania, and down the west boundary of that Province, by a line drawn from thence till it strikes the Ohio. If the noble lord admits this proposition, the Committee will no doubt be able to express it in proper words; if not, I must beg that we may receive information from a gentleman who can abundantly inform the House, and who is as ready to communicate it as any man I ever knew.*

Lord North.—We agree in principle, and I hope we shall succeed in drawing a clear boundary line; but I am doubtful whether a clear boundary line can be drawn by Parliament. It strikes me that the only method is to leave it to be drawn after the passing of the Act, leaving it in such a manner that the line when drawn shall actually form a clear line between the Province of Canada and New York. The line as far as it appears by the map is very distinct. The objection I have is precisely what the honourable gentleman has mentioned. I am not clear whether there are not on the south-east part of the River St. Lawrence, Canadian settlements. I have been informed there are. I am sure there are no New York settlements in that part of the world. I think it more prudent to have the boundary line settled upon the spot, reserving, in the Act, all those lands that have been granted, under any authority, to the old settlers. . . . It is my opinion that all this uninhabited country added to Canada or added to New York should not be immediately considered as country which the Government are to grant away. . . . I rise up at present to confirm the declaration I have made, that if a clear line can be made to the satisfaction of gentlemen, so that they are not likely to involve themselves by drawing a line in Westminster which would be better drawn in America, I shall not opiniâtre it, but shall be very thankful to the gentleman who can draw that line.

Mr. Burke.—If Canada is in future to have boundaries determined by the choice of the Crown, the Crown is to have the power of putting a great part of the subjects of England under laws which are not the laws of England. The government of France is good—all government is good—but compared with the English government, that of France is slavery. . . . The parties here are, English liberty and French law; and the whole province of New York, further than it is defined by actual bound, is in the power of the Crown, not to adjudicate, but to grant, and hand over to the French. I do not suppose that if the Crown were under the necessity of adjudging that it would adjudge amiss; but it is in the power of the Crown to grant even its power of adjudging. Where put on the English side, they are put in the power of the laws; where put on the French side, they are put out of the power of the laws. Let us consider, then, whether it is not worth while to give a clear boundary, and let the man know whether he is or is not an Englishman. I shall take the sense of the Committee upon it. I am as much in earnest as ever I was in my life. I have produced a practical idea; I can produce practical words.

After a long and desultory conversation, the words proposed by Mr. Burke were inserted. The words—“Until it strike the Ohio; and along the bank of the said river, westward to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory of the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson’s Bay; and also all such territories, islands and countries, which have, since the 10th of February, 1763, been made part of the government of Newfoundland, be, and they are hereby, during His Majesty’s pleasure, annexed to and made part and parcel of the Province of Quebec.”—were next read.

On June 10th, Sir Charles Whitworth reported to the House the amendments which the Committee had made to the Bill. The first clause being read there was much puzzling about settling the boundary line. Mr. Edmund Burke, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Barker, and Sir Charles Whitworth went up stairs, in order to settle it, while the House was supposed to be proceeding upon it. The House continued for at least half an hour, doing nothing in the meantime. The difference was, whether the tract of country not inhabited should belong to New York or Canada? At five o’clock, Mr. Burke returned with the amendments, some of which were agreed to, others not. The following is the clause, as finally agreed to by the House:

“That all the territories, islands, and countries in North America, belonging to the Crown of Great Britain, bounded on the south by a line from the Bay of Chaleurs, along the high lands which divide the rivers, that empty themselves into the River St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the sea, to a point, in forty-five degrees of northern latitude, on the eastern bank of the River Connecticut, keeping the same latitude directly west, through the Lake Champlain, until, in the same latitude, it meets the

His Majesty having been pleased by His Order in Council, of the 9th of this instant, to refer unto this Committee a representation from the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, setting forth that in obedience to His Majesty's commands, signified to them by the Earl of Dartmouth, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, the said Lords Commissioners had prepared the draught of a Commission revoking the present Commission, by which Guy Carleton, Esquire, is appointed Governor of the Province of Quebec, in North America, and re-appointing him to that command in such manner and form, and with such powers and authorities as correspond with the provisions made for the Government of that Province by an Act passed in the last session of the late Parliament, and the only case in which this draught either contains anything further than what that Act provides for or differs from such of the powers given to the Governor by his present Commission, do not require to be altered or omitted in consequence of the said Act, is in the clause which provides for the devolution of Government upon the eldest Councillor, when, upon the death or absence of the Governor, there shall happen to be no Lieutenant-Governor upon the spot; and in this clause the said Lords Commissioners have thought fit to insert a proviso, that in such case the eldest Councillor being a Canadian, professing the religion of the Church of Rome, shall not be capable of taking the Administration of Government, upon which the said Lords Commissioners submit as in their opinion a necessary and proper restriction.

The Lords of the Committee this day took the said representation and draught of a Commission into consideration, and are hereby pleased to refer the same to His Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor-General to consider thereof, and report their opinion forthwith, whether the powers and authorities inserted in the said Commission, so far as the same have reference to the Act passed in the last Session

SIRE,

May it be permitted to us, your most faithful subjects, the Canadian citizens of the City of Montreal, to prostrate ourselves at the foot of your Majesty's throne to prove the deep feeling of gratitude with which we are penetrated, in view of the favours and inexpressible advantages heaped upon us by the Act of your august Parliament, to which, by a singular affection for your Canadian people, it has pleased you, Sire, to grant your Royal assent. Words fail us in which to convince your Majesty of the plenitude of our obligation for the bestowal of so many benefits; but we say, from the bottom of our hearts, sincerely and deliberately, that our lives, our fortunes, and all else that we hold dear are devoted to your Majesty, who will be convinced thereof when the occasion arises; as we presume to flatter ourselves he is already convinced of our fidelity, of our submission, and of our obedience, during, alas! a trial of fourteen years. To thus compare ourselves is a first duty, in which we will not fail.

What satisfaction are we not about to taste! We are adopted as sons, and as English citizens. We are maintained in the religion of our fathers; our civil laws are restored to us; our country remains according to its ancient limits. And to all these favours your Majesty has added the return—so earnestly desired amongst us—of our worthy and generous Governor.

Behold us then, Sire, in the highest degree of happiness, with nothing left for us to desire, if your Majesty will but preserve the Seminary of Montreal, even as it has subsisted since its establishment; it is useful for the consolation of the widow and the orphan and for the education of our children. We also ask a similar favour for our hospitals, founded solely for the relief of our poor and our sick.

May Heaven, in hearing our prayers, grant that your Majesty may enjoy a reign as long as glorious. We also pray to the Eternal for the preservation of our illustrious Queen and of the Royal Family.

And with these sentiments, we have the honour to call ourselves, with the most profound respect and the greatest veneration, Sire, your most Excellent Majesty's most humble, most submissive, most obedient and most faithful servants and subjects.

OFFICIAL PAPERS RELATING TO THE ROYAL INSTRUCTIONS TO GOVERNOR
CARLETON OF QUEBEC, 1774.

THE LORDS COMMISSIONERS FOR TRADE AND PLANTATIONS TO THE KING.*

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty.

May it please Your Majesty.

30 In obedience to Your Majesty's commands signified to us by the Earl of Dartmouth, one of Your Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, we have prepared, and herewith humbly beg leave to lay before Your Majesty a draught of general instructions to Guy Carleton, Esquire, whom Your Majesty has been pleased to appoint to be Governor of Your Majesty's Province of Quebec.

This draught contains not only such instructions as are usually given to other Governors, so far as the same are applicable to this Province under its new constitution of government; but also such other directions for the establishment of Judicature; the reform and regulation of ecclesiastical matters; and the arrangements proper to be made in respect of the coast of Labrador, and the interior country, as appear to us to be necessary in consequence of the Act passed in the last session of the late Parliament; it also contains an appointment of the Council conformable to that Act, and directs the provi-40 sions to be made for the support of the civil establishment of government.

We also humbly beg leave to lay before Your Majesty a draught of such instructions to Your Majesty's Governor of Quebec, as are usually given to the Governors of Your Majesty's other colonies respecting the observance and the execution of the laws for regulating the plantation trade.

All which is most humbly submitted.

REPORT OF THE LORDS OF COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL FOR PLANTATION AFFAIRS TO THE KING.*

AT THE COUNCIL CHAMBER, WHITEHALL,

the 28th day of December, 1774.

By the Right Honourable the Lords of the Committee of Council for Plantation Affairs.

Present—Archbishop of Canterbury, Bishop of London, Lord President, Wellbore Ellis, Esq., Earl of Dartmouth, Sir Gilbert Elliott, Viscount Clare, Charles Jenkinson, Esq.

Your Majesty having been pleased by your Order in Council of the 23rd of this instant to refer unto this Committee a representation from the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, setting forth, That in obedience to Your Majesty's commands, signified by the Earl of Dartmouth, one of Your Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, they had prepared a draught of general instructions for Guy Carleton, Esquire, whom Your Majesty has been pleased to appoint to be Governor of Your Majesty's Province of Quebec; That this draught contains not only such instructions as are usually given to other governors so far as the same are applicable to this Province under its new constitution of government, but also such other directions for the establishment of judicature, the reform and regulation of ecclesiastical matters, and the arrangements proper to be made in respect the coast of Labrador and the interior country as appear to the said Lords Commissioners to be necessary in consequence of the Act passed in the last session of the late parliament; That it also contains an appointment of the council conformable to that Act and directs the two provisions to be made for the support of the civil establishment of government; That the said Lords Commissioners also beg leave to lay before Your Majesty a draught of such instructions to Your Majesty's Governor of Quebec, as are usually given to the governors of Your Majesty's other colonies respecting the observance and the execution of the laws for regulating the Plantation Trade. The Lords of the Committee in obedience to Your Majesty's said order of reference, this day took the said representation and draughts of instructions into consideration and do agree humbly to report as their opinion to Your Majesty that the said instructions do appear to contain the several regulations necessary in consequence of the Act passed in the last session of the late parliament, intituled "An Act for the making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec in North America," and are applicable to the said province under its new constitution of government. But the Lords of the Committee upon considering the 56th article of the draught of general instructions which provides for the support of government within Your Majesty's Province of Quebec, by fixing the salaries and allowances to the several officers therein mentioned are of opinion that it may greatly tend to the good of the Province, to increase the salaries of the six judges of the Common Pleas from three hundred pounds to five hundred pounds per annum each, and that the two schoolmasters should be allowed a stipend of one hundred pounds per annum each, and that the respective offices may be more readily supplied by persons of learning and abilities; with which alterations the Lords of the Committee do agree humbly to lay the said draughts of instruction before Your Majesty as proper for Your Royal approbation.

IMPERIAL ORDER IN COUNCIL, 28 DECEMBER, 1774,

Present—The King's Most Excellent Majesty, Archbishop of Canterbury, Viscount Falmouth, Lord Chancellor, Lord President, Lord Chamberlain, Earl of Suffolk, Earl of Bristol, Viscount Clare, Bishop of London, Wellbore Ellis, Esq., Humphrey Morris, Esq.

WHEREAS, there was this day read at the Board a report from the Right Honourable the Lords of the Committee of Council for Plantation Affairs, dated this day, in the words following, viz :

* From Privy Council Register.

[Here the foregoing Committee Report upon the draughts of new instructions for Guy Carleton, Esquire, Governor of the Province of Quebec, inserted at length].

His Majesty, taking the said report into consideration, is pleased, with the advice of the Privy Council, to approve thereof, and also of the said draughts of instructions so amended and altered, and to order, as it is hereby ordered, that the Right Honourable the Earl of Dartmouth, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, do cause the said draughts of instructions to be prepared for His Majesty's Royal Signature.

ROYAL INSTRUCTIONS TO GOVERNOR-GENERAL CARLETON, 3RD JANUARY, 1775.*

GEORGE R.

10 [L. S.]

INSTRUCTIONS to Our Trusty and Well-beloved Guy Carleton, Esquire, Our Captain General and Governor in Chief in and over Our Province of Quebec, in America, and of all Our Territories dependant thereupon. Given at Our Court at St. James's, the 3rd Day of January, 1775, in the Fifteenth Year of Our Reign.

Royal Instructions to Governor-
General
Carleton,
1775.

1. WITH these Our Instructions you will receive Our Commission under Our Great Seal of Great Britain, constituting you Our Captain General and Governor in Chief in and over Our Province of Quebec, in America, and all Our Territories thereunto belonging, as the said Province and Territories are bounded and described in and by the said Commission; You are therefore to take upon you the Execution of the Office and Trust We have reposed in you, and the Administration of the Government, and to do and execute all Things in due Manner that shall belong to your Command, according to the several powers and Authorities of Our said Commission under Our Great Seal of Great Britain, and these Our Instructions to you, or according to such further Powers and Instructions as shall at any time hereafter be granted, appointed under Our Signet or Sign Manual, or by Our Order in Our Privy Council; and you are to call together at Quebec (which We do hereby appoint to be the Place of your ordinary Residence and the principal Seat of Government) the following persons:— * * *

14. With regard to the nature and number of the Courts of Justice which it may be proper to establish either for the whole Province at large or separately for its dependencies and the times and places for holding the said Courts, no certain rule can be laid down in a case in which the judgment must, in many respects at least, be altogether guided by circumstances of local convenience and con-

30 sideration.

15. In general it may be proper that there should be a Superior or Supreme Court of criminal justice and jurisdiction for the cognizance of all pleas of the Crown and for the trial of all manner of offences whatsoever, to be held before the Chief Justice for the time being, at such times and places as shall be most convenient for the due and speedy administration of justice, and the preventing long imprisonments,—the said Court to be called and known by the name of the Court of King's Bench. That for the more orderly establishment and regulation of Courts of civil jurisdiction the Province of Quebec as limited and bounded by the aforesaid Act of Parliament, "for making more effectual provisions for the Government of the Province of Quebec, in North America," be divided into two districts, by the the names of Quebec and Montreal, each district to be limited and bounded in such manner as shall be thought best adapted to the object of the jurisdiction to be established therein. That there be established in each of the said districts a Court of Common Pleas to be held at such times and places as shall be judged most convenient, and to have full power, jurisdiction and authority to hear and determine all civil suits and actions cognizable by the Court of Common Pleas in Westminster Hall according to the rules prescribed by the said Act of Parliament "for making more effectual provisions for the government of the Province of Quebec in North America," and according to such laws and ordinances as shall from time to time be enacted by the Legislature of the said Province in manner therein directed. That there be three judges in each of the said Courts of Common Pleas, that is to say, two of our natural born subjects of Great Britain, Ireland or our other plantations, and one

Canadian, and also one Sheriff appointed for each district. That besides the foregoing Courts of criminal and civil jurisdiction for the Province at large, there be also an Inferior Court of criminal and civil jurisdiction in each of the districts of the Illinois, Saint Vincenne, Detroit, Missilimakinac and Gaspé, by the names of the Court of King's Bench for such district, to be held at such times as shall be thought most convenient; with authority to hear and determine in all matters of a criminal nature according to the laws of England, and the laws of the Province hereafter made and passed, and in all civil matters according to the rules prescribed by the aforesaid Act of Parliament "for making more effectual provision for the government of Quebec in North America," and each of the said Courts shall consist of one Judge, being a natural born subject of Great Britain, Ireland, or our other plantations; and of one other person, being a Canadian, by the name of assistant or assessor, to give advice to the Judge in any matter when it may be necessary, but to have no authority or power to attest or issue any process, or to give any vote in any order, judgment or decree. That the said Judges to be appointed as aforesaid for each district shall have the same power and authority in criminal cases as is vested in the Chief Justice of our said Province, and also the same power and authority in civil cases as any other Judge of Common Pleas within our said Province excepting only that in cases of treason, murder or other capital felonies the said Judges shall have no other authority than that of arrest and commitment to the gaols of Quebec or of Montreal, where alone offenders in such cases shall be tried before our Chief Justice. That a Sheriff be appointed in each of the said districts for the execution of civil and criminal process; that the Governor and Council (of which, in the absence of the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, the Chief Justice is to be President) shall be a Court of civil jurisdiction for the hearing and determining all appeals from the judgment of the other Courts where the matter in dispute is above the value of ten pounds. That any five of the said Council, with the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Chief Justice, shall constitute a Court for that purpose, and that their judgment shall be final in all cases not exceeding the value of five hundred pounds sterling, in which cases an appeal from their judgment is to be admitted to us in our Privy Council. It is, however, our will and pleasure that no appeal be allowed unless security be first duly given by the appellant that he will effectually prosecute the same, and answer the condemnation, as also pay such costs and damages as shall be awarded by us in case the sentence be affirmed. Provided, nevertheless, where the matter in question relates to the taking or demanding any duty payable to us, or to any fee of office or annual rents, or other such like matter or thing where the rights in future may be bound; in all such cases appeal to us in our Privy Council, is to be admitted, though the immediate sum or value appealed for be of less value. And it is our further will and pleasure, that in all cases where appeals are admitted unto us in our Privy Council execution be suspended until the final determination of such appeal, unless good and sufficient security be given by the appellee to make ample restitution of all that the appellant shall have lost by means of such decree or judgment in case upon the determination of such appeal such decree or judgment should be reversed and restitution awarded to the appellant. Appeals unto us in our Privy Council are also to be admitted in all cases of fines imposed for misdemeanors, provided the fines so imposed amount to or exceed the sum of one hundred pounds sterling, the appellant first giving good security that he will effectually prosecute the same, and answer the condemnation, if the sentence by which such fine was imposed in Quebec be affirmed.

30. The Extension of the Limits of the Province of Quebec necessarily calls forth your attention to a variety of new matter and new objects of consideration; the protection and controul of the various settlements of Canadian subjects, and the regulation of the Peltry trade in the upper or interior country on the one hand, and the protection of the Fisheries in the Gulph of St. Lawrence, and on the Labrador Coast, on the other hand, point to Regulations that require deliberation and dispatch.

31. The institution of inferior judicatures with limited jurisdiction in criminal and civil matters for the Illinois, Poste Saint Vincenne, the Detroit, Missilimakinac and Gaspé has been already pointed out, and the appointment of a Superintendent at each of those posts is all that is further necessary for their civil concerns; but it will be highly proper that the limits of each of those posts and of every other in the interior country should be fixed and ascertained, and that no settlement be allowed beyond those limits, seeing that such settlements must have the consequence to disgust the savages, to excite their enmity, and at length totally destroy the peltry trade, which ought to be cherished and encouraged by every means in your power.

32. It is Our Royal Intention that the Peltry trade of the interior country should be free and open to all our subjects, inhabitants of any of Our colonies, who shall, pursuant to what was directed by Our Royal Proclamation of 1763, obtain Licenses from the Governors of any of Our said Colonies for that purpose, under penalties to observe such regulations as shall be made by Our Legislature of Quebec for that purpose; these Regulations, therefore, when established, must be made public throughout all Our American possessions, and they must have for their object the giving every possible facility to that trade which the nature of it will admit, and as may consist with fair and just dealing towards the savages with whom it is carried on: The fixing stated times and places for carrying on the trade, and adjusting modes of settling tariffs of the prices of goods and furs, and above all the restraining the sale of spirituous liquors to the Indians, will be the most probable and effectual means of answering the ends proposed: these and a variety of other regulations, incident to the nature and purpose of the Peltry trade in the interior country, are fully stated in a plan proposed by Our Commissioners for Trade and Plantations in 1764, a copy of which is hereunto annexed, and which will serve as a guide in a variety of cases in which it may be necessary to make provision by law for that important branch of the American Commerce.

56. And whereas We are desirous that a proper Provision should be made for the Support of Our Government within Our said Province of Quebec, We do therefore hereby declare it to be Our Royal Intention, that the following Annual Salaries and Allowances be discharged and paid out of any Revenues arising to Us within the same, or out of such other moneys as shall be granted or appropriated to the uses and services of Our said Province of Quebec, (that is to say:)

CASE OF M. DE ROCHEBLAVE, COMMANDANT OF THE ILLINOIS, 1785.

MINUTES OF THE COUNCIL OF STATE FOR THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC, 23rd May, 1785.*

On Monday, the 23rd May, 1785, at the council chamber in the Bishop's Palace :

Present,

The Honourable Henry Hamilton, Esq., Lieutenant-Governor and Commander-in-Chief.

Hugh Finlay, Thomas Dunn, Edward Harrison, John Collins, Adam Mabane, George Pownall, J. G. C. DeLevy, Henry Caldwell, Francis Baby, and Samuel Holland, Esqrs.

Mr. Finlay, chairman of the committee on the Public Accounts of the Province, presented a further Report, which was read together with the former Report.

Mr. Mabane read, and delivered to be entered on the minutes, the following paper, viz. :

"I observe in the Acting Receiver-General's account current, an article of the 3rd March, 1785, viz. :

"To Philip De Rocheblave, Esq., for his salary as commandant of the Illinois from the 13th of January, 1784, to the 15th January, 1785, pursuant to Lieutenant-Governor Hamilton's warrant, dated 2nd March, 1785..... £200.

"To this article I cannot assent, as it is unprecedented, and as it introduces a new appointment upon the Civil Establishment of the Province, and the more especially as His Excellency Governor Haldimand declined issuing warrants for the six months ending 1st of November, 1784, for the salaries of Lieutenant-Governors Abbot and Johnson, though commissioned by the King, as St. Vincent and the Illinois were without the limits assigned to the Province by the definitive Treaty, and not occupied by the King's troops or subjects.

"A. MABANE."

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR HAMILTON, OF QUEBEC, TO LORD SYDNEY, SECRETARY OF STATE.*

QUEBEC, 9th June, 1785.

MY LORD,—Having on the 23rd day of May laid before His Majesty's Council of State for this Province the public accounts for their approbation and consent agreeable to His Majesty's additional instruction, and objection having been made to the payment of the appointments formerly allowed and paid to Phillip Rocheblave, Esq., as will appear from the minutes, I think myself called upon to state as fully as possible that gentleman's actual situation, his pretensions, and the grounds on which I humbly presume to solicit His Majesty's most gracious favour in behalf of a person, from absence unable to vindicate his character, or reclaim His Majesty's bounty, of which his numerous family so greatly stand in need.

In displaying the following facts as far as come within my own knowledge, I but do my duty to a meritorious person to whose sufferings I have been in part an eye witness, and of whose zeal for His Majesty's service, Sir Guy Carleton's letters accompanying this will be the most satisfactory proofs.

Mr. Rocheblave having been honoured with Sir Guy Carleton's commands after the recall of Captain Lord of the Royal Irish, who had the command of two companies at Kaskaskias, was left without defence. Being attacked by a party of the rebels in the night, he was carried off from his wife and family, thrown into a sty, and treated with every severity and indignity, till at length he was marched to Williamsburg in Virginia, where being at a distance from all means of relief, he was hard pressed by his necessities, the rebels having sold or pillaged his stock and effects, and left Mrs. Rocheblave to the precarious support of the charitably disposed people at the Illinois. This happened in the year 1778.

In the year 1780 he effected his escape from Williamsburg to the eastern shore of the Bay of Chesapeake, from whence he proceeded in an open boat to New York. In what manner Mr. Rocheblave made his way to Canada I know not, but at New York Sir Henry Clinton honoured my drafts upon the Commander-in-Chief in Canada, and I continued to pay him his appointments of £200 per annum as allowed by Sir Guy Carleton.

I have always understood that honours or emoluments granted by the King can only be resumed by him or forfeited by the crimes or misdemeanours of the grantee. Major Matthew Johnston, to my particular knowledge, received his salary as Lieutenant-Governor of the Illinois while residing in London, and enjoying a post about the Court—this for several years.

General Haldimand had ordered payment of his appointments to Mr. Rocheblave, and I cannot find that any conduct of Mr. Rocheblave has given room to a retrenchment of his appointments, the accounts in which they are included, having passed the Treasury repeatedly.

I have the honour to submit most humbly the above in a perfect reliance on your Lordship's impartiality, and beg leave to subscribe myself

IMPERIAL ORDER IN COUNCIL, 7TH APRIL, 1786, APPROVING OF THE DRAFT COMMISSION TO GOVERNOR CARLETON OF QUEBEC.*

AT THE COURT AT ST. JAMES'S, the 7th of April, 1786.

Present—The King's Most Excellent Majesty, Lord President, Lord Privy Seal, Marquis of Carmarthen, Viscount Howe, Lord Sydney, Sir George Yonge.

Whereas there was this day read at the Board a report from the Right Honourable the Lords of the Committee of Council, appointed for the consideration of all matters relating to Trade and Foreign Plantations, dated the 6th of this instant, in the words following, viz.:

“Your Majesty having been pleased by your Order in Council, of the 13th January last, to refer unto this Committee a letter from the Right Honourable Lord Sydney, one of Your Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, to the Lord President of the Council, in the words following, viz.:

“My Lord,—His Majesty having been graciously pleased to appoint Sir Guy Carleton, Knight of the Order of the Bath, to be Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of the Province of Quebec, in America, and also to be Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of the Provinces of Nova Scotia (including therein the Islands of St. John and Cape Breton) and of New Brunswick, I must request your Lordship will lay before His Majesty in Council, for His Royal approbation, the several draughts of the Commission to be given to Sir Guy Carleton upon this occasion, and which I have the honour to transmit.

“I must beg leave to observe to your Lordship that the Commissions for the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are in every respect similar to those under which the present Governors of those Provinces now act; but as it may happen in case of the death, removal, or absence of a Lieutenant Governor, when the administration of Government would, by the power of the Commissions, devolve upon the eldest councillor, that such a succession may not appear to be for the good of His Majesty's service. It is judged expedient that in such an event the Governor may be authorized to appoint any member of the Council he may think most fit to be Lieutenant-Governor until His Majesty's pleasure therein shall be known. I therefore transmit your Lordship clauses proposed to be inscribed for that purpose in the Commissions for these provinces, as well as in that for Quebec, if they shall be approved by His Majesty in Council.

* From Privy Council Register.

"Exclusive of the addition above proposed in the Commission for Quebec, it was necessary to describe and ascertain the boundaries of that Province, as settled by the Treaty with the United States of America; And also to direct that no leases of the trading posts should in future be made or granted to any persons whatsoever, until His Majesty's pleasure in that respect should be signified: These are the only particulars in which it differs from the Commission given to the late Governor Sir Frederick Haldimand."

"The Lords of the Committee in obedience to Your Majesty's said Order of reference have taken the said letter from the Right Honourable Lord Sydney, together with the said Draughts of Commissions, into their consideration, as also the Clause proposed to be inserted in each of the said Commissions, giving authority to Your Majesty's Governor in case of the death, absence or removal of the Lieutenant-Governor of either of the said Provinces, to appoint any member of the Council for the said Province, to be Lieutenant-Governor thereof until Your Majesty's pleasure be known; And the Committee having received the opinion of Your Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor-General, that there was not any legal objection to the said Draughts of Commissions, but that Your Majesty's Governor cannot legally exercise the authority intended to be given him by the above recited clause, during his residence in another province; the Committee thereupon thought it expedient further to consult Your Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor-General whether Your Majesty could, by your Commission, give to the Governor of any of Your Majesty's Provinces, even during their residence in the said Province, a power of appointing Lieutenant-Governors in case of a vacancy, upon which question Your Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor-General have reported to this Committee "that if it shall be deemed necessary to vest so great a power in Sir Guy Carleton, Your Majesty may by your Letters Patent authorize the said Sir Guy Carleton, in case of the death, absence or removal of any of the Lieutenant-Governors, to appoint or nominate by a Commission under the great seal of the Province where such vacancy shall happen, any member of the Council of the said Province whom he shall judge most proper and fitting to be Lieutenant-Governor thereof, until Your Majesty's pleasure shall be known; And that in the year 1714 the same powers were granted to Robert Hunter, Esquire, who was appointed Governor of New York, and likewise by separate Letters Patent of the same date, Governor of New Jersey."

"Upon full consideration, therefore, of the whole matter, this Committee concurring in opinion with Your Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor-General, have altered the proposed clause giving authority to Your Majesty's Governor to nominate or appoint a Lieutenant-Governor in case of a vacancy, so as to make the same conformable to the above opinion, and do agree humbly to lay the said Draughts of Commissions, with the said clause so altered before Your Majesty for Your Royal approbation."

His Majesty having taken the said Report into consideration was pleased, with the advice of His Privy Council, to approve thereof, as also of the said Draughts of Commissions, and the clause proposed to be inserted in each of the said Draughts, and to order as it is hereby ordered, that the Right Honourable Lord Sydney, one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, do cause the said clause to be inserted in each of the said Commissions; and that His Lordship do also cause Warrants to be prepared for passing Commissions agreeable to the said Draughts (which are hereunto annexed) under the Great Seal of Great Britain.

OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO THE PROPOSED BOUNDARIES OF UPPER 40
CANADA, 1789-1791.†

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE W. W. GRENVILLE TO GOVERNOR LORD DORCHESTER.

WHITEHALL, 20th October, 1789.

MY LORD,—It having been determined to bring under the consideration of Parliament early in the next Session, the propriety of making further provision for the good government of the Province of Quebec, I enclose to your Lordship the draught of a Bill prepared for this purpose.

*Mr. Grenville to Lord Dorchester,
20th October,
1789.*

With respect to the intended Boundaries of these Provinces a blank is left in the Bill in order that your Lordship may, with the assistance of the Surveyor General, who is now in Quebec, consider of such a description of those Boundaries as may be sufficiently intelligible and certain, so as to leave no room for future difficulties on that subject. The division between the two Provinces is meant to be the same as is mentioned to your Lordship in Lord Sydney's letter of 3rd September, 1789, with the alteration suggested by your Lordship in your letter of the 8th November following.

There will, however, be a considerable difficulty in the mode of describing the Boundary between the District of Upper Canada and the Territories of the United States, as the adhering to the line mentioned in the Treaty with America would exclude the Posts which are still in His Majesty's possession, and which the infraction of the Treaty on the part of America has induced His Majesty to retain, while on the other hand, the including them by express words within the limits to be established for the Province by an Act of the British Parliament would probably excite a considerable degree of resentment among the inhabitants of the United States, and might, perhaps, provoke them to measures detrimental to our commercial interests.

Possibly the best solution for this difficulty might be to describe the Upper District by some general words, such as "All the territories &c. &c. &c., possessed by, and subject to His Majesty, and being to the West or Southwest of the Boundary Line of Lower Canada, except such as are included within the present Boundaries of the Government of New Brunswick."

I am, etc.,

W. W. GRENVILLE.

QUEBEC, 8th February, 1790.

Sir,

I received the triplicate of your despatch No. 2, on the 20th of last month, and avail myself of the first opportunity to submit to His Majesty's Ministers such observations on the proposed Bill, as occur to me in the moment.

The inclosed draught comprehends the corresponding alterations engrafted upon the Bill transmitted in your letter.

The attainment of a free course of Justice throughout every part of His Majesty's possessions, in the way least likely to give umbrage to the United States appears to me very desirable. For this reason the Boundaries of the two proposed Provinces are described by a precise partition line only of the country of Canada, with the addition of such general words, as I hoped might include the Territories subject to, or possessed by, His Majesty, to the southward of the forty-fifth degree of north latitude on the side of Lake Champlain, as well as on the side of Oswego, Niagara, Detroit, and Michilimakinac, corresponding as nearly as could be, with the idea expressed in your letter.

But upon consulting the Chief Justice relative to the operation of this description of the Boundary I find that he does not think it will answer the desired end. * * *

I inclose a copy of a letter from the Chief Justice, with some additional clauses, upon this subject prepared by him at my request, together with his draught of another proposed addition to the Bill to provide for the trial of foreign treason and murder, as also a copy of his letter respecting the operation of the Boundary, as described in the Bill, with his idea of the addition necessary to give free scope to our Courts of Justice. The clause above referred to under the letter B. was also prepared by him at my request.

I am with much respect and esteem, Sir,

Your most obedient, and most humble servant

DORCHESTER.

CHIEF JUSTICE SMITH TO LORD DORCHESTER.

(Enclosed in the above Despatch of Lord Dorchester.)

QUEBEC, 6th February, 1790.

MY LORD,

Chief Justice
Smith to Lord Dorchester, 6th
February,
1790.

I suppose it is intended, that Upper and Lower Canada shall divide between them, what remains of His Majesty's Dominions in this quarter of North America, and is not part of Newfoundland, nor of other British Provinces, and shall include portions, at least for a time of what was ceded to the United States. 30

Care is to be had therefore not to estopp ourselves in our claims against Spain, south and west. Beyond the Mississippi the United States have no claim; but His Majesty has the double title to be argued from the old grants of the English Colonies to the South Sea, and the conquest of New France, and I have learnt, that there is a Canada Grant for Lands on the Missouri. There is a use therefore in that part of your Lordship's description of the new Provinces, which supposes the Province of Quebec to be not the whole, but a Parcel of Canada.

The retention of the first clause of Mr. Grenville's Bill to repeal the Boundaries in the Quebec Act of 1774 will make it necessary to adopt the words of that Act, so far as to give certainty to the limits of Lower Canada on the side of the sea, and Newfoundland.

It will be very difficult to frame any clause to continue our dominion over the lines of the late 40 cession, that will not be complained of by the neighbouring States, and the words proposed of "subject to and possessed by, etc.," will not free the new provinces from an uncertain boundary, embarrassing both to their Legislatures and their Courts.

The difficulty will remain as to any territory, of which we have not a Pedis positio, by Fort, Post or settlement, at the passing of the Act; and supposing that so much southing is to be our extent in the part possessed, what shall be the eastern and western breadths from the possessed spots, as at Oswego, Niagara, Detroit, and Point au Fer; which are not to have one line of latitude to include whatever is on the north side of that, which shall be most south.

If to your Lordship's description, there be an addition, importing, that by Canada is meant whatever the French claimed as New France, until His Majesty shall otherwise declare by Proclamation, the Boundaries of the new Provinces will be what the wisdom of the Crown shall see expedient, without waiting for the intervention of Parliament, and the Colony Legislatures and Courts be unembarrassed; the French Government having made grants down to the south end of Lake George, and asserting a dominion all round the Inland Great Lakes. A clause to this effect is inclosed and submitted to your Lordship's pleasure.

All this is upon the supposition, that it is necessary to parcel out His Majesty's Dominions by Act of Parliament. If not, then Mr. Grenville's first clause for the Repeal will stand unaltered, and the two provinces take such limits, as the Royal Commissions to their Governors shall assign, Before these will create alarm to our neighbours the provinces may be organized, and the instructions accompanying the commissions, and from time to time issuable according to His Majesty's wisdom and pleasure will be equal to the exigencies of the day.

I have the honour to be, my Lord,

Your Lordship's most obedient, humble servant,

Right Hon. Lord Dorchester.

WM. SMITH.

PROPOSED ADDITIONAL DESCRIPTION OF THE BOUNDARIES OF UPPER AND LOWER CANADA.

(Referred to in the above Despatch of Lord Dorchester.)

And the country of Canada hereinbefore mentioned shall be deemed and adjudged to include all the Dominions of New France, as claimed by the French Crown before the conquest, until His Majesty shall otherwise declare by an Instrument to be issued with the advice of His Privy Council under the Great Seal of Great Britain.

MR. GRENVILLE TO LORD DORCHESTER.*

WHITEHALL, 5th June, 1790.

MY LORD,—Your Lordship's despatch, No. 15, was not received here till the 18th of April. The session of Parliament was then so far advanced that it was not thought proper to bring forward at that time the proposed bill for regulating the Government of Quebec, especially as several of the observations stated by your Lordship on the subject were of a nature to require previous consideration, and as it then appeared probable that I might receive from your Lordship any further suggestions which might occur on a fuller examination of the plan, and that I might perhaps be able to avail myself of your Lordship's personal assistance in the course of the summer.

The discussions which have arisen with Spain, having induced His Majesty to direct me to state to your Lordship the necessity of your continuing for the present in Quebec, and it being uncertain whether even in the supposition of an amicable adjustment of that business, it could be terminated soon enough to allow of my transmitting to your Lordship this season His Majesty's permission to return to England, I have thought it right to state to your Lordship in this manner some particulars which have occurred to me on the subject of your Lordship's despatch above mentioned, and its enclosures. There will certainly be considerable difficulty in any mode of describing the boundaries of Upper Canada, till some precise adjustment is made with the United States relative to those points in which the Treaty of 1783 has not been carried into execution by the contracting parties. This subject is now under the consideration of Government, and it is not improbable that some person may be sent from this country with powers to settle those points. But if such settlement shall not have taken place previous to the time of bringing forward the Quebec Bill in the next session of Parliament; I am inclined to believe the most advisable mode of avoiding the difficulty in question, will be that of leaving the boundaries to be fixed by His Majesty. This would enable the King to provide for the point to which the Clause B inclosed in your Lordship's despatch relates. If any other mode should be adopted the object of that clause will be attended to.

Proper attention will be paid to your Lordship's suggestions with respect to the commencement of the Bill, but the intermediate establishment of a separate Government in Upper Canada, according to the form of that created by the present Quebec Act, does not appear advisable.

The formation of a general Legislative Government for all the King's Provinces in America is a point which has been under consideration, but I think it liable to considerable objection. The principle of uniting the Executive Government, has already been acted upon, and is one which I think of material importance to the British interests in America.

The other clauses suggested by the Chief Justice, will be considered by His Majesty's law servants.

7th March,
1791.

MY LORD,—I have the honour to inclose to your Lordship a copy of His Majesty's most gracious message to both Houses of Parliament on the subject of the proposed division and new constitution of the Province of Canada.

This message was presented by Mr. Pitt to the House of Commons on 25th of last month; and being taken into consideration on Friday, the 4th instant, Mr. Pitt then moved for leave to bring in a Bill to repeal certain parts of the Quebec Act of 1774, and to make further provision for the government of that Province.

The Bill will be presented in the course of the present week, and I have herewith the honour of transmitting to your Lordship a copy of the Bill in its present state.

I am, etc.,

MY LORD,

Mr. Lym-

Lord Grenville, 5th
April, 1791.

I am sorry to find that other business has deprived me of the honour of seeing your Lordship to-day, as the report of the Quebec Bill is appointed by the House to be received this evening.

Though I am satisfied that your Lordship is fully sensible of the importance of the object of that Bill yet I wish to impress on your Lordship the propriety of some further consideration before the report of the committee is received, or any debate has ensued thereon.

If the division of the Province is resolved on, which is an operation that I consider will materially injure the Province—that it will involve the people of the whole country in difficulties, and at same time must be injurious to the interests of Great Britain, I apprehend there may be more difficulty about the division than is expected from the complexion of the Bill. This it is scarcely possible to state to your Lordship without laying certain papers before your Lordship, which from accident time will not now permit. If the report is deferred to-night I will attend your Lordship any day that may suit your Lordship's convenience.

I have the honour to be,

Imperial Act,
31 Geo. III.,
Cap. 31,

WHEREAS an Act was passed in the fourteenth year of the reign of His present Majesty, entitled "An Act for making more effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec, in North America;" and whereas the said Act is in many respects inapplicable to the present condition and circumstances of the said Province: and whereas it is expedient and necessary that further provision should now be made for the good government and prosperity thereof; may it therefore please your most excellent Majesty that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that so much of the said Act as in any manner relates to the appointment of a Council for the affairs of the said Province of Quebec, or to the powers given by the said Act to the said Council, or to the major part of them, to make ordinances for the peace, welfare and good government of the said Province, with the consent of His Majesty's Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Commander-in-Chief for the time being, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

II. And whereas His Majesty has been pleased to signify, by his Message to both Houses of Parliament, his royal intention to divide his Province of Quebec into two separate Provinces, to be called the Province of Upper Canada, and the Province of Lower Canada; be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, that there shall be within each of the said Provinces respectively, a Legislative Council, and an Assembly, to be severally composed and constituted in the manner hereinafter described; and that in each of the said Provinces respectively, His Majesty, His heirs or successors, shall have power during the continuance of this Act, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of such Provinces respectively, to make laws for the peace, welfare, and good government thereof, such laws not being repugnant to this Act; and that all such laws being passed by the Legislative Council and Assembly of either of the said Provinces respectively, and assented to by His Majesty, His heirs or successors, or assented to in His Majesty's name, by such person as His Majesty, His heirs or successors, shall from time to time appoint to be the Governor, or Lieutenant-Governor of such Province, or by such person as His Majesty, His heirs and successors, shall from time to time appoint to administer the government within the same, shall be, and the same are hereby declared to be, by virtue of and under the authority of this Act, valid and binding to all intents and purposes whatever, within the Province in which the same shall have been so passed.

As you were pleased, when I had the honour of waiting on you on Wednesday last, to express a desire for some information on the articles usually exported from the Province of Quebec, for the reimbursement of the advances made by the British merchants for the annual supplies they send there, I take the liberty of enclosing copies of the exports of the years 1787 and 1788, to which I have added valuation which I suppose will be found, on the general scale, very near the truth. I also likewise inclose two papers concerning the general affairs of the Province for your consideration, and I request I may be permitted the honour of waiting on you next week, if convenient, on these affairs.

I have the honour to be with respect, between the township of Lancaster and the Seigneurie of New Longueuil, and to proceed in a northerly direction along the western or inland bounds of the said Seigneurie of New Longueuil and the Seigneurie of Vaudreuil, according to the various courses, until it strikes the Ottawa River, thence in a direct line to the middle of the navigable channel of the said River, thence ascending the middle of the navigable channel of the said river to the Portage of La Gallette, thence by the nearest and most common line of communication to the Lake Nipissing; thence through the middle of the navigable channel of the said Lake Nipissing to the middle of the navigable channel at the head of the River des François, thence descending the middle of the navigable channel of the said River des François to the Lake Huron, and from thence by a straight line to the nearest southern boundary of His Majesty's dominions in the middle of the said Lake Huron.

Sir,

The reason why I propose a deviation in the boundary line between the two provinces from that laid before Parliament, is because the whole trade with the savages in the northern and western parts of the British Territories is carried on from Montreal, and, as far as I can judge of futurity, must continue to be carried on from thence. If the boundary line is carried up as it stands at present, to the Lake Temiscaming, some impediments may be thrown in the way of the trade by the Government of Upper Canada, which may be extremely injurious to it without benefiting them; in case of murder or other crimes being committed in the Indian countries, the traders must bring the culprits to Montreal; but as the line now stands these people could not be tried at that place; but must be sent to Detroit for that purpose, which is nearly 600 miles distance, and when delivered there the criminal courts of that Province will not have the power to summon and command the attendance of the necessary witnesses from Montreal. In cases of account or debt the same difficulties will arise. I do not desire to deprive the Upper Province of any lands or countries which can be supposed advantageous or profitable to their province; but the land to the north of Lake Nipissing, Riviero des François and Lake Huron are not worth cultivating, and from their situation cannot be settled or cultivated for several centuries.

(Enclosure in the foregoing letter.)

OBSERVATIONS ON MATTERS RELATING TO THE TWO NEW PROVINCES.

It is admitted that the prerogative may, by the Act of the 14th of His Majesty, separate from the Province of Quebec those countries or territories which were annexed by that Act to the Province during pleasure. It must at the same time be granted that the prerogative is not authorized by that Act to alter, change, or divide the Province of Quebec, properly so called. His Majesty, in his message to Parliament, says that it was his intention (i. e. desire) to divide the Province of Quebec whenever His Majesty shall be enabled by Act of Parliament; and the whole of the Act of this year proceeds upon the idea that the Province of Quebec actually would be divided. But Parliament has not in any part of the new Act given His Majesty any power to divide the Province or to alter it in any manner, or to change the name of the Province of Quebec.

The Province of Quebec was clearly established and fully recognized by the Act of the 14th of His Majesty to be, and consist of, all the lands, countries, and territories comprehended within the lines or bounds marked out and described by the Royal Proclamation of the 7th October, 1763—those countries or lands which were joined to it by the Act of the 14th of His Majesty were not blended with the Province of Quebec and made an absolute constituent part thereof—but were only to remain annexed thereto, or dependent thereon, so long as it pleased His Majesty, for a month or a year, in short, during His Majesty's pleasure, that union thereof could only be considered as a temporary expedient until it was convenient to Government to provide a proper establishment for those countries so annexed.

Parliament has by the new Act arranged two Legislatures, and enacted other regulations for two Provinces, which are intended by the Act to be formed out of the Province of Quebec, and are to be called the Province of Upper Canada and the Province of Lower Canada, but Parliament has not settled to what part or parts of that country those legislatures and regulations, or either of them, are to extend or be applied. The Act supposes the Province of Quebec is to be divided, but no power is given to make the division, and a Province cannot be done away or annihilated by an inuendo, or by implication, or by forced explanation. The name of the Province of Quebec has not been taken away or annulled, and nothing less than an Act of Parliament, in express and clear terms, can do away with the existence of the Province of Quebec.

As the Prerogative has not the power to divide the Province of Quebec, it cannot be supposed that His Majesty can in any manner alter, or change the name of that Province, for the boundaries which were described by the proclamation of 1763, and recognized by the Act of 1774, were for a Province therein particularly mentioned by name, but the moment the name is taken away the province so described, and so bounded and called the Province of Quebec, will be annihilated and extinguished. By the first clause of the Act of the present year, the present legislature of the Province of Quebec is expressly repealed or destroyed. But as the Act has not annulled or destroyed the Province of Quebec, nor has authorized any person for that purpose, neither the new legislature, nor any of the regulations provided by the Act can be applied to that Province or to any part thereof, nor can the name of Upper Canada, or of Lower Canada, be applied or substituted for that of the Province of Quebec.

There is no part of the Act of the 14th of His Majesty repealed, except that clause which established a Legislative Council for the affairs of the Province, and that clause is near the end of the Act. Now it is by the first clause of the Act of 1774, and which remains unrepealed, that certain countries were fully established and recognized under the name of the Province of Quebec. If therefore it was considered necessary to insert in the new Act an express clause to repeal or destroy a part of the form of the civil constitution of the Province, that is the present legislature, it must surely require as much, if not more, formality to destroy or annihilate the whole Province. At the same time, it is evident from the Act, that both Upper Canada and Lower Canada should consist or be formed of part or parts of the present Province of Quebec, for it was on the supposition that the Province of Quebec was to be divided, that the establishments for these two new provinces have been enacted; but if the Province of Quebec cannot be divided neither of these two new provinces can be brought into existence.

The legislature and regulations enacted by the new Act for the new province which is to be called Upper Canada, cannot be applied to the countries west of the Province of Quebec, which were annexed thereto by the Act of 1774 during His Majesty's pleasure. These countries are not mentioned in the Act. They do not form any part of the Province of Quebec, they were only annexed to it and made subject to its government while or so long as it should please His Majesty. The legislature and regulations for Upper Canada cannot therefore be construed as applicable to those countries, for that new province is clearly to be formed out of the Province of Quebec; for a similar reason the legislature and regulations enacted for the Province of Lower Canada cannot be applied to the countries now properly called the Province of Quebec, for until the name of the Province of Quebec is constitutionally taken away and the countries which now form the Province of Quebec are legally divided, His Majesty's intentions, as expressed in the royal message to Parliament and as they are recited in the second clause of the new Act, will not be carried into effect, and the two new Provinces of Upper Canada and Lower Canada which His Majesty proposed to form out of the Province of Quebec, and for which the legislatures and regulations enacted in the Act of this year, are intended, cannot be brought into existence. The whole of that country must, therefore, remain as it is for the present. His Majesty may, in consequence of the reservation in the Act of 1774, subtract or take away a part, or the whole of those countries which by that Act were conditionally joined to the Province of Quebec. But those countries when so separated cannot by any construction of the law be understood to form what was intended by the Act of the present year to be the Province of Upper Canada. If these countries were intended to form that upper province the clause should have been very differently worded.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY DUNDAS TO THE LORD PRESIDENT.*
(Being the letter referred to in the Imperial Order in Council of 24th August, 1791.)

WHITEHALL, 17th August, 1791.

LORD PRESIDENT,

MY LORD,—An Act having passed in the last Session of Parliament entitled "An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the Fourteenth year of His Majesty's Reign, intituled an Act for making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec in North America, and to make further Provision for the Government of the said Province," and it being provided by the 48th Section of the said Act, that by reason of the distance of the said Provinces from this country, and of the change to be made by this Act in the Government thereof; it may be necessary that there should be some interval or time between the notification of this Act to the said provinces respectively, and the day of its commencement within the said Provinces respectively, it shall and may be lawful for His Majesty with the advice of His Privy Council to fix and declare, or to authorize the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, or the person administering the Government there, to fix and declare the day of the commencement of the said Act within the said Provinces respectively, provided that such day shall not be later than the 31st December, 1791.

I transmit to your Lordship herewith, by His Majesty's command, a printed copy of the said Act, together with a copy of a paper presented to Parliament previous to the passing of the said Act, describing the line proposed to be drawn for separating the Province of Upper Canada and Province of Lower Canada; and I am to desire that your Lordship will be pleased to lay the same before His Majesty in Council, for His Royal consideration with respect to the fixing and declaring the day of the commencement of the said Act, as well as the Boundaries of the said Provinces respectively.

I have, etc.,

HENRY DUNDAS.

chester, 1791.*

WHEREAS, We did by Our Letters Patent, under Our Great Seal of Great Britain, bearing date the twenty-second day of April, in the twenty-sixth year of Our reign, constitute and appoint you Guy, Lord Dorchester [then Sir Guy Carleton], to be our Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief in and over Our Province of Quebec in America, comprehending all Our Territories, Islands, and Countries in North America, then bounded as in Our said recited Letters Patent was mentioned and expressed.

Now Know Ye, that we have revoked, determined, and by these presents do revoke and determine the said recited Letters Patent, and every clause, article or thing therein contained.

And Whereas, we have thought fit by Our order, made in Our Privy Council on the nineteenth day of August, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, to divide Our said Province of Quebec into two separate Provinces, to be called the Province of Upper Canada and the Province of Lower Canada, by a line to commence at a stone boundary on the north Bank of the Lake St. Francis at the Cove west of the Pointe au Boudet, in the limit between the Township of Lancaster and the Seigneurie of New Longueuil, running along the said limit in the direction of North thirty-four degrees West to the westernmost angle of the said Seigneurie of New Longueuil; thence along the north-western boundary of the Seigneurie of Vaudreuil, running North twenty-five degrees East, until it strikes the Ottawas River, to ascend the said river into the Lake Tomiscanning, and from the head of the said lake by a line drawn due north until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay; the Province of Upper Canada to comprehend all such lands, territories and islands, lying to the westward of said line of division, as were part of Our said Province of Quebec, and the Province of Lower Canada to comprehend all such lands, territories and islands lying to the eastward of the said line of division, as were part of Our said Province of Quebec.

And whereas, by an Act passed in the present year of Our Reign, intituled "An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the fourteenth year of His Majesty's Reign, intituled 'An Act for making more effectual provision for the Government of Quebec, in North America,' and to make further provision for the Government of the said Province," further provision is thereby made for the good government and prosperity of Our said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada.

Further, Know Ye that we, reposing especial trust and confidence in the prudence, courage and loyalty of you, the said Guy, Lord Dorchester, of Our especial Grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, have thought fit to constitute and appoint you, the said Guy, Lord Dorchester, to be our Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of Our said Province of Upper Canada, and of Our said Province of Lower Canada, respectively, bounded as hereinbefore described.

PROCLAMATION OF LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR ALURED CLARKE, 1791, DECLARING WHEN THE CONSTITUTIONAL ACT SHALL HAVE EFFECT IN THE PROVINCES OF UPPER AND LOWER CANADA.

ALURED CLARKE :

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth.

To all our loving subjects whom these presents may concern, greeting :

Whereas we have thought fit by and with the advice of our Privy Council, by our Order in Council, dated in the month of August last, to order that our Province of Quebec should be divided into two distinct Provinces, to be called the Province of Upper Canada and the Province of Lower Canada, by separating the said two Provinces according to the following line of division, viz :—" To commence at a stone boundary on the north bank of the Lake St. Francis, at the Cove West of Pointe au Boudet, in the limit between the Township of Lancaster and the Seigneurie of New Longueuil, running along said limit in the direction of north thirty-four degrees West to the westernmost angle of the said Seigneurie of New Longueuil; thence along the north-western boundary of the Seigneurie of Vaudreuil, running north twenty-five degrees East until it strikes the Ottawas River to ascend the said river into the Lake Tomiscanning, and from the head of the said lake by a line drawn due north until it strikes the boundary line of the Hudson's Bay, including all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada."

Proclamation
of Lieut-Gov.
Alured
Clarke, 1791.

And whereas by an Act passed in the last session of Parliament, intituled, "An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the fourteenth year of His Majesty's reign, intituled, 'An Act for making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec, in North America,' and to make further provision for the Government of the said Province," it is provided that by reason of the distance of the said Provinces from Great Britain, and the change to be made by the said Act in the Government thereof, it may be necessary that there should be some interval of time between the notification of the said Act to the said Provinces respectively, and the day of its commencement within the said Provinces respectively; and that it should be lawful for us, with the advice of our Privy Council, to fix and declare, or to authorize the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor of our Province of Quebec, or the person administering the Government there, to fix and declare the day of the commencement of the said Act within the said Provinces respectively, provided that such day shall not be later than the thirty-first day of December, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one. And whereas, in pursuance of the said Act, we have thought fit by another Order in Council, bearing date the twenty-fourth day of August last, to authorize our Governor, or, in his absence, our Lieutenant-Governor, or the person administering the Government of our said Province of Quebec, to fix and declare such day as he should judge most advisable for the commencement of the said Act within the Province of Upper Canada and the Province of Lower Canada respectively, and to that effect have, by SIR,—Herewith you will receive duplicate of my letter (No. 11) of the 23rd ult., inclosing a copy of a proclamation issued for dividing the Province of Quebec into two distinct provinces, and fixing and declaring the day of the commencement of the Act passed in the last Session of Parliament relative to this Country.

Although I have every reason to believe it has not escaped the observation of His Majesty's Ministers, I think it my duty to remark to you, Sir, that the terms in Lord Dorchester's Commission describing the boundaries of Upper and Lower Canada are not the same as those used in the Order in Council of the 24th August.

I have the honor to be with great respect, Sir,

Sir,—I have received your letters No. 9 and from No. 12 to 20 inclusive and have had the honour of laying them before His Majesty.

* Public Record Office—Colonial Correspondence, Lower Canada, 1791-1792. Vol. 58.

Upon examination, I observe, that Lord Dorchester's commission and the Order of Council respecting the boundaries of the two Provinces, are not precisely the same, but as the difference lies only in what is explanatory, it does not, I conceive, amount at all to a variance between them, and is therefore perfectly immaterial.

The warrant which I transmit you respecting a Provincial Great Seal for Lower Canada will obviate all difficulties on that head.

I am, etc.

PROCLAMATION OF LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR SIMCOE, DIVIDING UPPER CANADA INTO COUNTIES, 1792.

J. GRAVES SIMCOE.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c., &c. To all our loving subjects whom these presents may concern:

WHEREAS, in pursuance of an Act of Parliament lately made and provided, passed in the thirty-first year of our reign, and of authority by us given for that purpose, our late Province of Quebec is become divided into the two Provinces of Upper Canada and Lower Canada, and our Lieutenant-Governor of the said Province of Upper Canada, by power from us derived, is authorized in the absence of our right trusty and well-beloved Guy, Lord Dorchester, Captain General and Governor-in-Chief of our right province of Upper Canada, to divide the said Province of Upper Canada into districts, counties, circles or towns and townships, for the purpose of effectuating the intent of the said Act of Parliament, and to declare and appoint the number of representatives to be chosen by each to serve in the Assembly of the said Province.

Proclamation of Lieut.-Gov. Simcoe, 1792.

Know ye, therefore, that our trusty and well-beloved John Graves Simcoe, Esquire, our Lieutenant-Governor of our said Province of Upper Canada, in the absence of the said Governor-in-Chief, hath and by this Our Proclamation doth divide the said Province of Upper Canada into counties, and hath and doth appoint and declare the number of representatives of them and each of them to be as hereinafter limited, named, declared, and appointed; that is to say: That the first of the said counties be hereinafter called by the name of the county of Glengarry, which county is to be bounded on the east by the lines that divide Upper from Lower Canada, on the south by the river St. Lawrence, and westerly by the easternmost boundary of the late township of Cornwall, running north twenty-four degrees west until it intersects the Ottawa or Grand River, thence descending the said river until it meets the divisional lines aforesaid; the said county is to comprehend all the islands in the said river St. Lawrence nearest to the said county, and in the whole or greater part fronting the same. * * * *

That the seventeenth of the said counties be hereinafter called by the name of the County of Suffolk: which county is to be bounded on the east by the county of Norfolk, on the south by Lake Erie, until it meets the carrying-place from Point au Pins unto the Thames; on the west by the said carrying-place, thence up the said river Thames until it meets the northwesternmost boundary of the county of Norfolk.

That the eighteenth of the said counties be hereafter called by the name of the county of Essex: which county is to be bounded on the east by the county of Suffolk, on the south by Lake Erie, on the west by the river Detroit to Maisonville's Mill, from thence by a line running parallel to the river Detroit and lake St. Clair, at the distance of four miles, until it reaches the river La Tranche or Thames, thence up the said river to the northwest boundary of the county of Suffolk.

That the nineteenth of the said counties be hereafter called by the name of the county of Kent: which county is to comprehend all the country not being territories of the Indians not already included in the several counties hereinbefore described, extending northward to the boundary line of Hudson's Bay, including all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line, to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada. * * * *

XIV. And whereas His Majesty by his Proclamation of the seventh day of October one thousand seven hundred and sixty-three, was pleased to declare that he had put the Coast of Labrador from the River Saint John to Hudson's Streights, with the Islands of Anticosti and Madelaine, and all other smaller islands lying on the said coast, under the care and inspection of the Governor of Newfoundland: And whereas by an Act passed in the fourteenth year of the reign of his present Majesty, intituled, An Act for making more effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec in North America, all such territory, islands and countries, as since the tenth day of February one thousand seven hundred and sixty-three had been made part of the government of Newfoundland were, during His Majesty's pleasure, annexed to and made part of the Province of Quebec, as created by the said Proclamation: And whereas, in pursuance of an Act passed in the thirty-first year of his present Majesty's reign, intituled, An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the fourteenth year of His Majesty's reign, intituled, 'An Act for making more effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec in North America,' and to make further provision for the government of the said Province, the said Province of Quebec was divided into two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, the latter including the parts of the coast of Labrador and the said islands so formerly annexed to the government of Newfoundland: And whereas it is expedient that the said coast of Labrador, and the adjacent islands (except the Islands of Madelaine) should be re-annexed to the government of Newfoundland:

Be it therefore enacted, that such parts of the coast of Labrador from the River St. John to Hudson's Streights, and the said island of Anticosti, and all other smaller islands so annexed to the government of Newfoundland by the said Proclamation of the seventh day of October one thousand seven hundred and sixty-three, (except the said Islands of Madelaine) shall be separated from the said government of Lower Canada, and be again re-annexed to the government of Newfoundland; any thing in the said Act passed in the thirty-first year of his present Majesty's reign, or any other Act, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Proclamation
of Gov.-Gen.
Sherbrooke,
1816.

By His Excellency Sir JOHN COPE SHERBROOKE, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief in and over the Provinces of Lower Canada, Upper Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and their several dependencies, Vice-Admiral of the same, Lieutenant-General and Commander of all His Majesty's Forces in the said Provinces of Lower Canada and Upper Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and their several dependencies, and in the Islands of Newfoundland, Prince Edward, Cape Breton and Bermuda, etc., etc.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, in and by a certain Statute of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, made and passed in the forty-third year of His Majesty's Reign, intituled: 'An Act for extending the Jurisdiction of the Courts of Justice in the Provinces of Lower Canada and Upper Canada to the trial and punishment of persons guilty of crimes and offences within certain parts of North America, adjoining the said Provinces,' it is amongst other things enacted and declared that from and after the passing of the said Statute, 'All offences committed within any of the Indian territories or parts of America, not within the limits of either of the said Provinces of Lower or Upper Canada, or of any Civil Government of the United States of America, shall and be deemed to be offences of the same nature, and shall be tried in the same manner and subject to the same punishment as if the same had been committed within the Province of Lower or Upper Canada.'

Proclamation
of Gov.-Gen.
Sherbrooke,
1816.

And whereas, under and by virtue of the above in part recited Statute, Justices of the Peace have been duly nominated and appointed, with power and authority to apprehend within the Indian territories aforesaid, and to convey to this Province of Lower Canada for trial, all and every person and persons guilty of any crime or offence whatever;

And whereas, there is reason to believe that divers breaches of the peace, by acts of force and violence, have lately been committed within the aforesaid Indian territories, and jurisdiction of the aforesaid Justices of the Peace;

I have therefore thought fit, and by and with the advice of His Majesty's Executive Council, of and for the Province of Lower Canada, to issue this Proclamation for the purpose of bringing to punishment all persons who may have been or shall be guilty of any such act or acts of force or violence as aforesaid, and other offence whatever, and to deter all others from following their pernicious example, thereby requiring all His Majesty's subjects and others within the said territories, to avoid and discourage all acts of force and violence whatsoever, and all proceedings whatever tending to produce tumult and riots, or in any way to disturb the public peace.

And I do hereby strictly charge and command all Justices of the Peace as aforesaid, nominated and appointed under and by virtue of the above mentioned Statute, and all Magistrates throughout this Province, and do require all others of His Majesty's subjects generally in their respective stations, to make diligent enquiry and search to discover, apprehend and commit, or cause to be committed to lawful custody for trial, in due course of Law, pursuant to the provision in the above-mentioned Statute contained, all persons who have been, or shall be guilty of any act or acts of force or violence as aforesaid, or of any other crime or crimes, offence or offences, within the said Indian territories, to the end that the laws may be carried into prompt execution, against all such offenders, for the preservation of peace and good order therein.

Given under my Hand and Seal at Arms, at the Castle of St. Lewis, in the City of Quebec, in the said Province of Lower Canada, this 16th Day of July, in the Year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixteen, and in the Forty-sixth year of His Majesty's reign.

PETITION OF THE EARL OF SELKIRK, 30th JULY, 1819,*

IN REFERENCE TO THE FOREGOING ACT OF UPPER CANADA AND THE EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION BY THAT PROVINCE TO THE WESTWARD OF LAKE SUPERIOR.

To the Right Honourable the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for the affairs of Trade and Foreign Plantations.

The Memorial of Thomas, Earl of Selkirk—

SHEWETH:

Petition, Earl of Selkirk,
30th July,
1819.

That in the month of September, one thousand eight hundred and eighteen, a Bill of Indictment was preferred against your memorialist at Sandwich, in the Western District of Upper Canada, for a conspiracy to destroy the trade of certain fur traders calling themselves the North-West Company of Montreal.

That when the said Bill was before the Grand Jury, the Attorney-General of the Province claimed a right to attend them in their private room, and to examine the witnesses for the prosecution.

That your memorialist appealed to the Court against this proceeding, which appeared to him highly irregular * * * but the Chief Justice declared from the Bench that the Attorney-General, as a law officer of the Crown, had a right to examine the witnesses before the Grand Jury, and that such was the practice in England.

That though your memorialist took the liberty of contradicting this assertion in open court, the Grand Jury in obedience to the authority of the Chief Justice, was induced to permit the Attorney-General to attend them three days successively, for the purpose of marshalling and examining his witnesses; all of whom were partners, clerks or hired servants of the said Fur Traders, or otherwise paid by or dependent upon them; That after the Attorney-General had finished this examination, the Grand Jury continued two days more deliberating upon the said Bill, during which time they called in other evidence, and also again questioned several of the same witnesses who had already appeared before them; That on the morning of the sixth day, when it was generally believed, from the purport of several questions publicly put by the Foreman to the Chief Justice, and from other circumstances, that the Bill against your memorialist would be immediately thrown out. The Chief Justice, without calling before him the Grand Jury (who were sitting in the adjoining room), or enquiring of them, if they had any presentment to make, and without permitting them to fulfil the duties required of them, or regularly discharging them from their legal functions, unexpectedly and suddenly broke up the Court, thereby improperly interrupting and putting a total stop to the proceedings of the Grand Jury.

That upon the Chief Justice thus breaking up the Court, the Attorney-General immediately went into the room where the Grand Jury were sitting, and carried off the Bill of Indictment upon which they were then legally summoned and sworn to deliberate.

That your memorialist humbly conceived the Chief Justice of Upper Canada, in thus abruptly breaking up the Court, acted in a manner highly unbecoming as a judge, and most improperly and unjustly towards your memorialist; and particularly so as he was not called away by any other judicial engagement, having himself appointed the assizes then held at Sandwich to be the last in relation upon that circuit, expressly and avowedly in order that no other business might interfere with or interrupt the necessary proceedings to be then held at that place.

That after this failure on the part of the Attorney-General and the North-West Company to procure a true Bill for the alleged conspiracy, your memorialist did not suppose that any prosecution of a similar description would be again contemplated against him; and he therefore permitted his witnessess (who in consequence of numerous vexatious proceedings instituted by the said Company had been long detained by him in Canada at a heavy expense) to go back into the interior, or otherwise to disperse upon their own concerns; and that shortly afterwards your memorialist himself returned to England.

That soon after his return, however, he received information that in order to give another chance, and to afford a better opportunity of having an indictment found against your memorialist in some other district, a Bill was brought into the Legislature of Upper Canada which, it was expected, would produce that result. It was introduced into the House of Assembly at the very commencement of the session (held in October last), and passed through that House with unusual rapidity, without waiting for the arrival of the members who represented the distant districts of the Province, or who were peculiarly interested in the question, and who it was generally understood would have opposed the Bill.

That the Bill having passed the House of Assembly, was immediately sent up to the Legislative Council, where, in order to prevent it having a retrospective effect (which it bore as originally framed), an amendment leaving out the word "heretofore" before the word "committed," was moved and carried, notwithstanding the opposition of the Chief Justice, under whose auspices the Bill had been originally introduced; the Bill so amended was then taken back to the House of Assembly and passed: after which it received the assent of the Provincial Government.

That by the said Act (a copy of which accompanies this memorial) a most unusual and dangerous power is given to the law officers of the Crown in Upper Canada, in removing at pleasure the trial of alleged offences to a distance of many hundred miles from the District Courts before which they are regularly and constitutionally cognizable; and of dragging accused persons, to the most remote parts of the Province, where juries, not of their own districts, may be packed for the purpose of convicting them, and where the prisoners, from the great distance, and expense of conveyance, may be unable to bring with them any witnesses to prove their innocence, or to obtain any Counsel to assist them in their defence.

That in the said Act no reason is given for the alteration thus made in the established Law and Judicature of Upper Canada, unless indeed the vague words appearing in the preamble, namely—"that it might be inconvenient" (to try offences in the courts where they ought to be tried) can be deemed a reason for such an extraordinary and unconstitutional innovation.

Your memorialist submits that not only is this Act in itself highly unjust and contrary to any principle of the Law of England—which is the recognized law of Upper Canada—but that in spite of the amendment made upon it for the purpose of preventing it having the effect of an ex post facto enactment, the Chief Justice of the Province and the Attorney-General have thought fit to interpret, and act upon it as having a retrospective effect.

That as they could not succeed in their endeavours to obtain from the Grand Jury in the Western District a true bill against your memorialist for the alleged conspiracy, another bill was, immediately after the passing of this new Act, preferred against him on the same charge, and supported by the very same witnesses, before a Grand Jury of the Home District, and for offences alleged to have been committed no less than two years before the passing of the said Act had given jurisdiction to the courts of that District.

That the Grand Jury at York, before whom this second Bill of Indictment was preferred as above 10 mentioned, were prevailed upon, at the instance and upon the opinion of the said Attorney-General, to admit into their private room the principal agent and partner of the North-West Company, for the purpose of assisting as interpreter and examiner of the witnesses, most of whom spoke a language not understood by the jurors, in consequence of which improper and irregular proceedings the Bill has been found against your memorialist and nineteen other persons, most of whose names have been inserted in the Indictment evidently for no other purpose than to prevent them being called as witnesses in your memorialist's defence.

That your memorialist further submits that Fort William, a trading post occupied by the said North-West Company, and the place where the alleged offences charged against him are stated to have been committed, is not situated within the jurisdiction of the Courts of Upper Canada, as settled by the 20 Act of Parliament of 14 George 3rd, c. 83, which defines the boundary of that Province, and therefore that these charges cannot be legally brought to trial in any Court of Upper Canada.

That the Chief Justice of Upper Canada, in defiance of the Act of Parliament which declares the western boundary of Canada to be a line drawn northward from the point of junction of the Rivers Ohio and Mississippi, and in opposition to the unanimous decision of the Court at Quebec, asserts that the western district of Upper Canada extends westward to an indefinite distance. That, in consequence of this extraordinary doctrine, your memorialist is apprehensive that under the provisions of this New Provincial Act, the Chief Justice will not hesitate to issue Bench Warrants for the purpose of arresting several persons now resident at the Red River settlement, and that if such warrants are submitted to, or enforced, he will bring away the parties to a distance of two thousand miles, without their having 30 any opportunity of bringing witnesses along with them, or the means for obtaining an impartial jury, or a fair trial. Your memorialist ought also to observe that as the settlers at Red River have obtained the opinion of several of the most eminent counsel in England, declaring that the Red River cannot be considered as in Canada, it is not unlikely that warrants issued (under the new Act) for the apprehension of any of the settlers at that place will be forcibly and, as your memorialist conceives, lawfully resisted.

That your memorialist further submits that as the provincial enactment above mentioned is of an unusual and extraordinary nature, your memorialist conceives that the Lieutenant-Governor ought not to have expressed the Royal assent to the Bill, without seeing that it contained a clause to suspend its operation till the pleasure of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent should be known; that in consequence of the omission of such a clause and the opportunity thereby allowed for the Bill to be 40 immediately acted upon, your memorialist has sustained grievous prejudice; that though the Bill in question was passed in the month of November last it appears that no copy thereof, as directed by the Act of 31 George 3rd, has yet been transmitted to this country, by which omission a further opportunity has been afforded of carrying the same into effect before His Royal Highness the Prince Regent can have an opportunity of exercising his constitutional prerogative on the subject, and of determining whether the Act shall be allowed or disallowed.

Your memorialist therefore prays that your Lordships will take the said Provincial Act into consideration as early as possible, and will advise His Royal Highness the Prince Regent in Council to disallow the same, and your memorialist further prays that when the said Act is to be taken under your Lordships' consideration he may be heard by Counsel on the subject.

PETITION OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY, 3RD AUGUST, 1819,*

IN REFERENCE TO THE UPPER CANADA ACT, 59 GEO. 3, CAP. 10 (1818), AND THE JURISDICTION OF THAT PROVINCE TO THE WESTWARD OF LAKE SUPERIOR.

To the Right Honourable the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade and Foreign Plantations.

The Memorial of the Hudson's Bay Company—

SHEWETH :—

That His Majesty, King Charles the Second, by His Royal Charter dated the second day of May, in the twenty-second year of His Reign, incorporated your memorialists by the name of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, constituting them to be a Body Corporate and Politic for ever, and granting to them various lands, rights, immunities and privileges, as may particularly appear by reference to their Charter, a copy of which accompanies this memorial.

That the territory so granted to your memorialists forms the northern and north-western boundary of the Province of Upper Canada, and that your memorialists have been in the practice of carrying on trade in that part of Upper Canada which borders upon their territories.

That the parts of Canada in which your memorialists have traded are not situated within the limits of any described township or county therein.

That in the month of November last, an Act passed through the several branches of the Legislature of that Province, a copy of which is hereunto annexed, entitled "An Act to authorize the enquiry and trial of crimes and offences committed within this Province, without the limits of any described township or county to be had in any district thereof;" but that your memorialists understand that no regular copy thereof has been received in this country so as to enable His Royal Highness, the Prince Regent in Council, to exercise his constitutional power of signifying his pleasure with respect to the said Act.

That it appears to your memorialists that by this Colonial Law, which was acted upon as soon as it was assented to by the Provincial Government, not only a most essential innovation is made in the long established system of Judicature in Upper Canada, but by the interpretation which has been put upon it by the Chief Justice and the Law Officers in that Province, it has had the effect of operating, as an ex post facto law with respect to several of your memorialists' officers and servants, contrary to the established principles of justice and to the law of England. For in consequence of such interpretation criminal prosecutions were immediately commenced, and a Bill of Indictment preferred against certain of their officers and servants for a conspiracy to destroy the trade of the North-West Company in having committed certain acts alleged to have taken place at Fort William (a trading post of that Company), two years prior to the passing of the said Colonial Law.

Your memorialists further submit that Fort William, where the said acts were alleged to have been committed, is not in Upper Canada, being situated to the west of the boundary line of that Province (as established by Act of Parliament, 14th Geo. 3rd, c. 83), and therefore not within the jurisdiction or subject to the Legislature of that Province.

That in the proceedings which have thus been taken against your memorialists' officers and servants as last mentioned, it appears that the principal agent and partner of the North-West Company was permitted, at the instance of the Attorney-General, to examine before the Grand Jury the witnesses for the prosecution, almost all of the said witnesses being clerks, servants and dependants of the said Company; That in consequence of these improper proceedings, a Bill of Indictment has been found against several of your memorialists' officers and servants, who may accordingly be called upon to appear in Upper Canada, and take their trial for offences alleged to have been committed long prior to the passing of the said Act.

Your memorialists therefore humbly pray that they may be heard by their Counsel, for the purpose of stating fully the reasons why the assent of His Royal Highness, the Prince Regent in Council, should not be given to the Act so passed by the Legislature of Upper Canada.

DESPATCH OF LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND TO EARL BATHURST, 30TH NOVEMBER, 1819.*

CONCERNING THE UPPER CANADA ACT 59 GEO. III, CAP. 10, COMPLAINED OF IN THE FOREGOING PETITIONS OF THE EARL OF SELKIRK AND THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

UPPER CANADA,

YORK, 30th November, 1819.

Lieut.-Gov.
Maitland to Earl Bathurst,
30th November, 1819.

MY LORD,—I have had the honour of receiving Your Lordship's despatch of the 6th of August, with its enclosures, respecting an Act passed by the Legislature of this Province, entitled "An Act to authorize the inquiry and trial of crimes and offences committed within this Province, without the limits of any described township or county, to be had in any district thereof," and I hasten to comply with your Lordship's commands by communicating such circumstances within my knowledge, respecting the passing of the Bill in question, as may afford the information required by Your Lordship's letter.

The session of the Legislature in which that Bill was passed was opened on the 12th of October, and closed on the 27th of November. In the course of the session, about the 29th of October, the date of Mr. Gale's letter to me, which has been submitted to Your Lordship, it was communicated to me in the common official way, that a Bill for authorizing the trial in any district of this Province of offences committed in those wild and unorganized parts of it, which by a Provincial Statute of 1798 had been made part of the Western District, had passed both branches of the Legislature and was ready for the Royal assent.

I had been informed that the year before (previous to my arrival in the Province) a bill of the same nature had passed the Legislative Council, at the suggestion of the Judges, and had been sent down to the House of Assembly, where, after having been taken up, gone through two readings, and passed into Committee, it shared the fate of other Bills, which a difference on a question of privilege had caused to be postponed.

At the time of my receiving notice of this Bill having passed, the Assizes were sitting in this district, and the Court, in obedience to Great Seal Instruments transmitted from the Government of Lower Canada, under the British Act of 1803, were then actually occupied in trials in which I understood the Earl of Selkirk and his agents were prosecutors, and some partners of the North-West Company, and persons engaged in their service, were defendants.

It was matter of notoriety that the defendants under trial had preferred various charges against the persons who were now their prosecutors, for offences stated to have been committed at Fort William upon Lake Superior, in a country considered to be within the limits of Upper Canada, but as completely removed from all connexion with any inhabited or organized part of this Province, and as little within the knowledge of its inhabitants, as the scene of the offences which they were then investigating.

I had been informed that the agents of the North-West Company had, in the year 1817, brought down a great number of witnesses from the interior of the country to Sandwich, in the Western District, to prefer charges of alleged violence against the Earl of Selkirk and other persons; but that they arrived a few days after the termination of the assizes, which are there held annually, and which happened to be that year somewhat earlier than usual. I knew that at the assizes of 1818 the same witnesses were again assembled at Sandwich, having travelled many hundred miles to prefer the same charges, and that their object was then defeated by the adjournment of the court while the proceedings were depending, under circumstances of which former communications will enshew your lordship to judge.

No other tribunal was open, because the Legislature in dividing this Province into districts, in 1798 having found it necessary to attach the unorganized territories to some district, had attached them to the Western by a general clause in the Bill for that purpose, which declares that "so much of this Province as is not included within any other district thereof, do constitute and form part of the Western District." Therefore, without a contrary provision, while offenders in the Indian territories out of the limits of this Province, which it seems are not very certainly defined, may, under the British Act of the 43rd of the King, be tried in any district of either Province; crimes committed at Fort William, situate in the midst of territories equally wild and uninhabited by any civilized population, can be tried nowhere but at Sandwich.

Both parties complained that an opportunity was not afforded them of bringing these charges to an end. The Bill just passed at the suggestion of the Judges appeared to me obviously intended to guard against further inconveniences and delays from a restraint for which I can see no substantial reason or necessity, and it occurred to me that, by assenting to the Bill before the termination of the session, and while the assizes were sitting, the witnesses, prosecutors, and defendants being assembled, it would admit of the immediate trial of every criminal charge between the parties at a time when they were better prepared with witnesses than it was probable they ever would be again. * * *

As it may be satisfactory to Your Lordship to learn the impression made on my mind by what I have observed connected with this Bill, I state to Your Lordship without hesitation that my own conviction is decidedly in favour of its propriety and expediency; and nothing could have more tended to confirm me in this opinion than the anxiety betrayed by Lord Selkirk, and the perseverance manifested, by his agents and friends in opposing it in every stage. It is a Bill which originated with the Judges, upon considerations of general expediency, before any prosecution against the Earl of Selkirk had been preferred. It passed not hastily, nor by surprise, but in the usual manner, and after having been discussed by a committee of the whole house in the preceding session. * * *

The Bill had no sooner passed, however, than the Earl of Selkirk's law agent entreated me to withhold the Royal assent.

In the recess between the two sessions an indictment of the same nature with that which had been preferred against Lord Selkirk and his followers for their proceedings at Fort William, had been found in this district, by a grand jury, as free, I believe, from any connexion with either party as any that could have been empanelled in England. * * *

It is observable that the Earl, in a letter of which Your Lordship was pleased to send me a copy, some months ago, remonstrates against this Bill upon grounds at which Mr. Halket does not even hint, at the same time that he objects to the Bill as affecting rights which are in this case entirely imaginary and consist only in words, as Your Lordship will be convinced by an inspection of the map, which shows that Fort William is about the same distance from York as it is from the only place at which Lord Selkirk seems willing to be brought to trial, and that it is at least eight hundred miles distant from either.

How far it would tend to the pure administration of justice, were the cognizance of offences arising out of this contest confined to the officers of the Hudson's Bay Company, as spoken of in the Earl of Selkirk's letter to my Lord Liverpool, will appear to Your Lordship from a perusal of the documents marked No. 3, civil proceedings, accompanying the Attorney-General's report of the judicial proceedings in Upper Canada. These very extraordinary papers, to which I wish to direct Your Lordship's particular attention, will shew how far the views of the Earl and those employed under him are confined to colonization, and what probability there would be of their disinterested decision upon matters affecting the interests of the North-West traders.

Since Your Lordship has submitted to me the letters of the Earl of Selkirk and Mr. Halkett, I cannot forbear remarking upon those passages in them which may be considered as charges against the Chief Justice and Attorney-General of this Province, that they are persons who, in the discharge of their public duties, have ever hitherto maintained characters above reproach and suspicion, and that, as

STATEMENT OF CHIEF JUSTICE POWELL, OF UPPER CANADA, 27TH OCTOBER, 1819,*

IN REFERENCE TO THE MATTERS COMPLAINED OF IN THE FOREGOING PETITIONS OF THE EARL OF SELKIRK AND THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

(Transmitted in the foregoing despatch of Lieutenant-Governor Maitland.)

Statement
Chief-Justice
Powell, (U.
C.), 27th
October,
1819.

In 1803 an Act passed the Parliament of the United Kingdom, giving jurisdiction to the Courts of Upper Canada, over offences committed in the Indian Territory in North America, not being within the limits of any civil government of the United States of America, or of Upper or Lower Canada. By this description the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company was not excepted. The limits of Upper Canada were unsettled, at least there was great difference of opinion on that point. Under the provision of 43rd of His Majesty about thirty indictments, chiefly for capital crimes, had been preferred by the Earl of Selkirk in Lower Canada, for offences supposed to have been committed in the Indian Territory, and had been transmitted to be tried in Upper Canada. These thirty indictments might be supposed to attract an immense concourse of parties and witnesses at a great expense from distances of one and two thousand miles. The whole business was of the first impression there had been an adjudication upon the Act in Upper Canada. It was natural to consider the difficulties probably to arise in its execution. Amongst others, the question of jurisdiction was the most prominent.

The outrages at Fort William were presented in the Western District of Upper Canada, that Post having been ever considered part of that district by the proprietors of the Governments and the Courts, yet the Supreme Court of Lower Canada had adjudged that it was without the Province of Upper Canada, and that offences committed there were, under the 43rd of His Majesty, to be tried there. In every point of view it was desirable that the trials should be had at the seat of Government, where all the Judges could attend to consult each other on points arising under a new and peculiar jurisdiction.

When these considerations are fully comprehended, it may be fair to consult the map of the two Canadas, and of the Indian Territory, when it will be seen that a great part of Upper Canada, and especially the Western District, is not organized into townships or counties, and has no population but Indians, and the traders, their followers. That from the last organized population to Fort William there is an interval of a thousand miles without white inhabitants, excepting the Military Post at Drummond's Island. So that the legal idea of vicinage in the ancient estimation of civil jurisdiction is lost, and it must be indifferent to offenders at that distance to be conveyed for trial at York or Sandwich, and by inspecting the map it will be seen that York is nearest. * * * *

IMPERIAL ORDER IN COUNCIL, 9TH JUNE, 1821, RATIFYING AND CONFIRMING THE ACT OF UPPER CANADA, 59 GEO. III., CAP. 10.*

At the Court at Carlton House the 9th of June, 1821:

Present,

The King's most Excellent Majesty,

Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord President, Lord Privy Seal, Duke of Montrose, Duke of Wellington, Lord Steward, Lord Chamberlain, Earl Bathurst, Earl of Liverpool, Lord Charles Bentinck, Viscount Melville, Mr. Wellesley Pole.

WHEREAS, there was this day read at the Board a Report from a Committee of the Lords of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, dated the 23rd of last month, in the words following, viz :

"Your Majesty having been pleased by your Order in Council, of the 20th of November, 1819, to refer unto this Committee an Act, passed by the Legislature of the Province of Upper Canada, in the month of November, 1818, intituled, 'An Act to authorize the enquiry and trial of crimes and offences committed within this Province, without the limits of any described township or county,' to be had in any district thereof, and Your Majesty having also been pleased to refer unto this Committee, sundry memorials praying to be heard by counsel against the confirmation of the said Act; the Lords of this Committee, in obedience to Your Majesty's said Order of Reference, did on the 28th December, 1819, take the said Act, and memorials in objection thereto in consideration, and heard counsel on behalf of the several memorialists, and their Lordships having this day resumed the consideration of the said Act and memorials, do agree humbly to report, as their opinion to Your Majesty, that the said Act ought to be confirmed."

His Majesty having taken the said Report into consideration, was pleased by and with the advice of His Privy Council, to approve thereof, and doth hereby declare his approbation of the said Act, and pursuant to His Majesty's royal pleasure thereupon expressed, the said Act is hereby confirmed, finally enacted, and ratified accordingly. Whereof the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Commander-in-Chief of His Majesty's said Provinces of Upper Canada, for the time being, and all other persons whom it may concern, are to take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

IMPERIAL ACT, 1-2 GEO. IV., C. 66 (1821).

AN ACT FOR REGULATING THE FUR TRADE, AND ESTABLISHING A CRIMINAL AND CIVIL JURISDICTION WITHIN CERTAIN PARTS OF NORTH AMERICA.

WHEREAS the competition in the Fur Trade between the Governor and the Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, and certain associations of persons trading under the name of "The North-West Company of Montreal," has been found for some years past to be productive of great inconvenience and loss, not only to the said Company and associations but to the said trade in general, and also of great injury to the native Indians, and of other persons subjects of His Majesty: And whereas the animosities and feuds arising from such competition have also for some years past kept the interior of America, to the northward and westward of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and of the territories of the United States of America, in a state of continued disturbance: And whereas many breaches of the peace, and violence extending to the loss of lives and considerable destruction of property, have continually occurred therein: And whereas for remedy of such evils, it is expedient and necessary that some more effectual regulations should be established for the apprehending, securing, and bringing to justice all persons committing such offences, and that His Majesty should be empowered to regulate the said trade: And whereas doubts have been entertained whether the provisions of an Act passed in the forty-third year of the reign of His late Majesty King George the Third, intituled, "An Act for extending the Jurisdiction of the Courts of Justice in the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, to the trial and punishment of persons guilty of crimes and offences within certain parts of North America adjoining to the said Provinces," extended to the territories granted by Charter to the said Governor and Company, and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed, and that the said Act should be further extended: Be it therefore enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the passing of this Act, it shall be lawful for His Majesty, his heirs or successors, to make Grants, or give His Royal License, under the hand and seal of one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to any body corporate, or company, or person or persons, of or for the exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America as shall be specified in any such Grants or Licenses respectively, not being part of the lands or territories heretofore granted to the said Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay, and not being part of any of His Majesty's Provinces in North America, or of any lands or territories belonging to the United States of America; and all such Grants and Licenses shall be good, valid and effectual for the purpose of securing to all such bodies corporate, or companies, or persons, the sole and exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America (except as hereinafter excepted) as shall be specified in such Grants or Licenses; anything contained in any Act or Acts of Parliament, or any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

II. Provided always, and be it further enacted, that no such Grant or License, made or given by His Majesty, his heirs or successors, of any such exclusive privileges of trading with the Indians in such parts of North America as aforesaid, shall be made or given for any longer period than twenty-one years; and no rent shall be required or demanded for or in respect of any such Grant or License, or any privileges given thereby under the provisions of this Act, for the first period of twenty-one years; and from and after the expiration of such first period of twenty-one years, it shall be lawful for His Majesty, his heirs or successors, to reserve such rents in any future Grants or Licenses to be made to the same or any other parties, as shall be deemed just and reasonable, with security for the payment thereof; and such rents shall be deemed part of the land revenues of His Majesty, his heirs and successors, and be applied and accounted for as the other land revenues of His Majesty, his heirs or successors, shall at the time of payment of any such rent being made, be applied and accounted for.

III. And be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this Act, the Governor and Company of Adventurers trading to Hudson's Bay, and every body corporate and company and person to whom every such Grant or License shall be made or given as aforesaid, shall respectively keep accurate registers of all persons in their employ in any part of North America, and shall, once in each year, return to His Majesty's Secretary of State, accurate duplicates of such registers, and shall also enter into such security as shall be required by His Majesty for the due execution of all processes, criminal and civil, as well within the territories included in any such grant as within those granted by Charter to the Governor and Company of Adventurers trading to Hudson's Bay, and for the producing or delivering into safe custody, for purposes of trial, of all persons in their employ or acting under their authority, who shall be charged with any criminal offence, and also for the due and faithful observance of all such rules, regulations, and stipulations as shall be contained in any such Grant or License, either for diminishing or preventing the sale or distribution of spirituous liquors to the Indians, or for promoting their moral and religious improvement, or for any other object which His Majesty may deem necessary for the remedy or prevention of the other evils which have hitherto been found to exist.

IV. And whereas, by a Convention entered into between His Majesty and the United States of America, it was stipulated and agreed that any country on the north-west coast of America to the westward of the Stoney Mountains, should be free and open to the citizens and subjects of the two Powers, for the term of ten years from the date of the signature of that Convention; be it therefore enacted, that nothing in this Act contained shall be deemed or construed to authorize any body corporate, company or person, to whom His Majesty may have, under the provisions of this Act, made a Grant or given a License of exclusive trade with the Indians in such parts of North America as aforesaid, to claim or exercise any such exclusive trade within the limits specified in the said Article, to the prejudice or exclusion of any citizens of the said United States of America, who may be engaged in the said trade: Provided always, that no British subject shall trade with the Indians within such limits, without such Grant or License as is by this Act required.

V. And be it declared and enacted, that the said Act passed in the forty-third year of the reign of His late Majesty, intituled "An Act for extending the Jurisdiction of the Courts of Justice in the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, to the Trial and Punishment of persons guilty of crimes and offences within certain parts of North America, adjoining to the said Provinces," and all the clauses and provisos therein contained, shall be deemed and construed, and it is and are hereby respectively declared, to extend to and over and to be in full force in and through all the territories heretofore granted to the Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay; anything in any Act or Acts of Parliament or this Act or in any grant or Charter to the Company, to the contrary notwithstanding.

VI. And be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this Act, the Courts of judicature now existing, or which may be hereafter established in the Province of Upper Canada, shall have the same civil jurisdiction, power and authority, as well in the cognizance of suits as in the issuing process, mesne and final, and in all other respects whatsoever, within the said Indian Territories and other parts of America not within the limits of either of the Provinces of Lower or Upper Canada, or of any civil government of the United States, as the said Courts have or are invested with within the limits of the said Provinces of Lower or Upper Canada respectively; and that all and every contract, agreement, debt, liability and demand whatsoever, made, entered into, incurred, or arising within the said Indian Territories and other parts of America, and all and every wrong and injury to the person or to property real or personal, committed or done within the same, shall be and be deemed to be of the same nature, and be cognizable to the same Courts, Magistrates, or Justices of the Peace, and be tried in the same manner and subject to the same consequences in all respects as if the same had been made, entered into, incurred, arisen, committed or done within the said Province of Upper Canada, anything in any Act or Acts of Parliament or Grant, or Charter, to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided always, that all such suits and actions relating to lands or to any claims in respect of land not being within the Province of Upper Canada, shall be decided according to the laws of that part of the United Kingdom called England, and shall not be subject to or affected by any local Acts, Statutes, or Laws of the Legislature of Upper Canada.

VII. And be it further enacted, that all process, writs, orders, judgments, decrees, and acts whatsoever, to be issued, made, delivered, given and done by or under the authority of the said courts, or either of them, shall have the same force, authority, and effect within the said Indian Territory and other parts of America as aforesaid, as the same now have within the said Province of Upper Canada.

VIII. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Governor, or Lieutenant-Governor, or person administering the Government for the time being of Lower Canada, by Commission under his hand and Seal, to authorize all persons who shall be appointed Justices of the Peace under the provisions of this Act, within the said Indian Territories, or other parts of America as aforesaid, or any other person who shall be specially named in any such Commission, to act as a Commissioner within the same, for the purpose of executing, enforcing and carrying into effect, all such process, writs, orders, judgments, decrees and acts which shall be issued, made, delivered, given or done by the said Courts of judicature, and which may require to be enforced and executed within the said Indian Territories, or such other parts of North America as aforesaid; and in case any person or persons whatsoever, residing or being within the said Indian Territories, or such other parts of America as aforesaid, shall refuse to obey or perform any such process, writ, order, judgment, decree, or act of the said Courts, or shall resist or oppose the execution thereof, it shall and may be lawful for the said Justices of the Peace or Commissioners, and they or any of them are and is hereby required, on the same being proved before him, by the oath or affidavit of one credible witness, to commit the said person or persons so offending as aforesaid, to custody, in order to his or their being conveyed to Upper Canada; and that it shall be lawful for any such Justice of the Peace or Commissioner, or any person or persons acting under his authority, to convey or cause to be conveyed such person or persons so offending as aforesaid to Upper Canada, in pursuance of such process, writ, order, decree, judgment, or act, and such person and persons shall be committed to

XI. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for His Majesty, notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, or in any Charter granted to the said Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay, from time to time by any Commission under the Great Seal, to authorize and empower any such persons so appointed Justices of the Peace as aforesaid, to sit and hold Courts of Record for the trial of criminal offences and misdemeanors, and also of civil causes; and it shall be lawful for His Majesty to order, direct and authorize the appointment of proper officers to act in aid of such Courts and Justices within the jurisdiction assigned to such Courts and Justices in any such Commission; anything in this Act or in any Charter of the Governor and Company of the Merchant Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay, to the contrary notwithstanding. 50

XII. Provided always, and be it further enacted, that such Courts shall be constituted, as to the number of Justices to preside therein, and as to such places within the said territories of the said Company, or any Indian territories or other parts of North America as aforesaid, and the times and manner of holding the same, as His Majesty shall from time to time order and direct; but shall not try any offender upon any charge or indictment for any felony made the subject of capital punishment, or for any offence or passing sentence affecting the life of any offender, or adjudge or cause any offender to suffer capital punishment or transportation, or take cognizance of or try any civil action or suit, in which the cause of such suit or action shall exceed in value the amount or sum of two hundred pounds; and in every case of any offence subjecting the person committing the same to capital punishment, or transportation, the Court or any Judge of any such Court, or any Justice or Justices of the Peace, before whom any such offender shall be brought, shall commit such offender to save custody, and cause such offender to be sent in such custody for trial in the Court of the Province of Upper Canada.

XIV. And be it further enacted, that nothing in this Act contained shall be taken or construed to affect any right, privilege, authority or jurisdiction, which the Governor and Company of Adventurers trading to Hudson's Bay are by law entitled to claim and exercise under their Charter, but that all such rights, privileges, authorities and jurisdictions shall remain in as full force, virtue and effect, as if this Act had never been made; anything in this Act to the contrary notwithstanding.

LICENSE OF EXCLUSIVE TRADE TO THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY AND THE NORTH-WEST COMPANY, JOINTLY, 5TH DECEMBER, 1821.

GEORGE R.

GEORGE THE FOURTH, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King Defender of the Faith.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

WHEREAS an Act passed in the second year of our reign, intituled, "An Act for regulating the Fur Trade, and for establishing a Criminal and Civil Jurisdiction within certain parts of North America;" wherein it is amongst other things enacted, that from and after the passing of the said Act, it should be lawful for us, our heirs or successors, to make Grants or give our Royal License, under the hand and seal of one of our Principal Secretaries of State, to any body corporate or company, or person or persons of or for the exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America as should be specified in any such Grants or Licenses respectively, not being part of the lands or territories heretofore granted to the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay, and not being part of any of our provinces in North America, or of any lands or territories belonging to the United States of America, and that all such Grants and Licenses should be good, valid, and effectual, for the purpose of securing to all such bodies corporate, or companies, or persons, the sole and exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians, in all such parts of North America (except as therein-after excepted) as should be specified in such Grants or Licenses, anything contained in any Act or Acts of Parliament, or any law to the contrary notwithstanding; and it was in the said Act further enacted, that no such Grant or License made or given by us, our heirs or successors, of any such exclusive privileges of trading with the Indians in such parts of North America as aforesaid, should be made or given for any longer period than 21 years, and that no rent should be required or demanded for or in respect of any such Grant or License, or any privileges given thereby, under the provisions of the said Act, for the first period of 21 years; and it was further enacted, that from and after the passing of the said Act, the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay, and every body corporate, and company, and person, to whom every such Grant or License should be made or given as aforesaid, should respectively keep accurate registers of all persons in their employ, in any parts of North America, and should once in each year return to our Principal Secretaries of State accurate duplicates of such registers, and should also enter into such security as should be required by us for the due execution of all criminal processes, and of any civil process in any suit where the matter in dispute shall exceed £200, and as well within the territories included in any such Grant as within those granted by Charter to the Governor and Company of Adventures of England trading to Hudson's Bay, and for the producing and delivering into safe custody for the purpose of trial, all persons in their employ, or acting under their authority, who should be charged with any criminal offence, and also for the due and faithful observance of all such rules, regulations and stipulations as should be contained in any such Grant or License, either for gradually diminishing and ultimately preventing the sale or distribution of spirituous liquors to the Indians, or for promoting their moral and religious improvement; or for any other object which we might deem necessary for the remedy or prevention of any other evils which have been hitherto found to exist: And whereas it was also in the said Act recited, that by a Convention entered into between his late Majesty and the United States of America, it was stipulated and agreed, that every country on the north-west coast of America, to the westward of the Stoney Mountains should be free and open to the citizens and subjects of the two powers for the term of ten years from the date of the signature of that Convention; and it was therefore enacted, that nothing in the said Act contained should be deemed or construed to authorize any body corporate, company or person to whom His Majesty might, under the provisions of the said Act, make or grant or give a License of exclusive trade with the Indians in such parts of North America as aforesaid, to claim or exercise any such exclusive trade within the limits specified in the said Article, to the prejudice or exclusion of any citizens of the said United States of America, who might be engaged in the said trade: Provided always that no British subject should trade with the Indians within such limits without such Grant or License 20 as was by the said Act required.

And whereas the said Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, and certain associations of persons trading under the name of the "North-west Company, of Montreal," have respectively extended the fur trade over many parts of North America, which had not been before explored: And whereas the competition in the said trade has been found for some years past to be productive of great inconvenience and loss, not only to the said Company and associations, but to the said trade in general, and also of great injury to the native Indians, and of other persons our subjects: And whereas the said Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, and William M'Gillivray, of Montreal, in the Province of Lower Canada, esquire, Simon M'Gillivray, of Suffolk Lane, in the City of London, merchant, and Edward Ellice, of Spring Gardens, in the County 30 of Middlesex, esquire, have represented to us; that they have entered into an agreement, on the 26th day of March last, for putting an end to the said competition, and carrying on the said trade for 21 years, commencing with the outfit of 1821, and ending with the returns of 1841, to be carried on in the name of the said Governor and Company exclusively:

And whereas the said Governor and Company and William M'Gillivray, Simon M'Gillivray, and Edward Ellice, have humbly besought us to make a Grant, and give our Royal License to them jointly, of and for the exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in North America, under the restrictions and upon the terms and conditions specified in the said recited Act: Now Know YE, That we, being desirous of encouraging the said trade and remedying the evils which have arisen from the competition which has heretofore existed therein, do grant and give our Royal License under the hand and seal of 40 one of our Principal Secretaries of State, to the said Governor and Company, and William M'Gillivray, Simon M'Gillivray, and Edward Ellice, for the exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America to the northward and westward of the lands and territories belonging to the United States of America as shall not form part of any of our provinces in North America, or of any lands or territories belonging to the said United States of America, or to any European government, state or power; and we do by these presents give, grant and secure to the said Governor and Company, William M'Gillivray, Simon M'Gillivray, and Edward Ellice, jointly, the sole and exclusive privilege, for the full period of 21 years from the date of this our Grant, of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America as aforesaid [except as therein after excepted]; and we do hereby declare that no rent shall be required or demanded for or in respect of this our Grant and License, or any privileges given thereby, 50 for the said period of 21 years, but that the said Governor and Company, and the said William M'Gillivray, Simon M'Gillivray, and Edward Ellice shall, during the period of this our Grant and License, keep accurate registers of all persons in their employ in any parts of North America, and shall once in each year return to our Secretary of State accurate duplicates of such registers, and shall also enter in and give security to us, our heirs and successors, in the penal sum of £5,000, for ensuring, as far as in them may lie, the due execution of all criminal processes, and of any civil process in any suit where the matter in dispute shall exceed £200, by the officers and persons legally empowered to execute such processes within all the territories included in this our Grant, and for the producing and delivering into safe custody, for purposes of trial, any persons in their employ, or acting under their authority within the said territories, who may be charged with any criminal offence.

And we do also hereby require, that the said Governor and Company, and William M'Gillivray, and Edward Ellice shall, as soon as the same shall be conveniently done, make and submit for our consideration and approval such rules and regulations for the management and carrying on the said fur trade with the Indians, and the conduct of the persons employed by them therein, as may appear for us to be effectual for gradually diminishing or ultimately preventing the sale or distribution of spirituous liquors to the Indians, and for promoting their moral and religious improvement.

And we do hereby declare that nothing in this our Grant contained shall be deemed or construed to authorize the said Governor and Company, or William M'Gillivray, Simon M'Gillivray, and Edward Ellice, or any person in their employ, to claim or exercise any trade with the Indians on the north-west coast of America to the westward of the Stony Mountains, to the prejudice or exclusion of any citizens of the United States of America who may be engaged in the said trade: Provided always that no British subjects other than and except the said Governor and Company, and the said William M'Gillivray, Simon M'Gillivray, and Edward Ellice, and the persons authorized to carry on exclusive trade by them on Grant, shall trade with the Indians within such limits during the period of this our Grant.

Given at our Court at Carlton House, the 5th day of December, 1821, in the second year of our reign.

By His Majesty's command,
BATHURST.

NEW LICENSE OF EXCLUSIVE TRADE TO THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY, (REPRESENTING AS WELL THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY AS THE NORTH-WEST COMPANY), UPON THE SURRENDER OF THE FORMER LICENSE, 30TH MAY, 1838.

30 VICTORIA R.

VICTORIA, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith.

To all to whom these Presents shall come, greeting.

WHEREAS by an Act passed in the Session of Parliament holden in the first and second year of the reign of his late Majesty, King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act for regulating the Fur Trade, and establishing a Criminal and Civil Jurisdiction within certain parts of North America," it was amongst other things enacted, that from and after the passing of the said Act, it should be lawful for His said Majesty, his heirs or successors, to make grants, or give His or their Royal License, under the hand and seal of one of His or their Principal Secretaries of State, to any body corporate or company, or person or persons, of or for the exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America as should be specified in any such grants or licenses respectively, not being part of the lands and territories theretofore granted to the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson Bay, and not being part of any of our Provinces in North America, or of any lands or territories belonging to the United States of America, and that all such grants and licenses should be good, valid and effectual for the purpose of securing to all such bodies corporate, or companies, or persons, the sole and exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America (except as thereinafter excepted) as should be specified in such grants or licenses, anything contained in any Act or Acts of Parliament, or any law to the contrary notwithstanding; and it was further enacted, that no such grant or license made or given by His said Majesty, His heirs or successors, of any such exclusive privileges of trading with the Indians in such parts of North America as aforesaid, should be made or given for any longer period than 21 years, and that no rent should be required or demanded for or in respect of any such grant or license, or any privileges given thereby under the provisions of the said Act, for the first period of 21 years; and it was further enacted, that from and after the passing of the said Act, the Governor and Company of Adventurers trading to Hudson Bay, and every body corporate and company and person to whom any such grant or license should be made or given as aforesaid, should respectively keep accurate registers of all persons in their employ in any parts of North America, and should once in each year return to the Principal Secretaries of State accurate duplicates of such registers, and should also enter into such security as should be required for the due execution of all processes criminal and civil, as well within the territories included within any such grant, as within those granted by charter to the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson Bay, and for the producing or delivering into safe custody, for the purpose of trial, all persons in their employ or acting under their authority, who should be charged with any criminal offence, and also for the due and faithful observance of all such rules, regulations and stipulations as should be contained in any such grant or license, either for gradually diminishing and ultimately preventing the sale or distribution of spirituous liquors to the Indians, or for promoting their moral and religious improvement, or for any other object which might be deemed necessary for the remedy or prevention of any other evils which had hitherto been found to exist: And whereas it was in the said Act recited, that by a convention entered into between His said late Majesty and the United States of America, it was stipulated and agreed, that every country on the north-west coasts of America to the westward of the Stony Mountains should be free and open to the citizens and subjects of the two powers for the term of ten years from the date of the signature of that convention; and it was therefore enacted, that nothing in the said Act contained should be deemed or construed to authorize any body corporate, company or person to whom His said Majesty might, under the provisions of the said Act, make or grant or give a license of exclusive trade with the Indians in such parts of North America as aforesaid, to claim or exercise any such exclusive trade within the limits specified in the said article, to the prejudice or exclusion of any citizens of the said United States of America who might be engaged in the said trade; with a proviso, that no British subject should trade with the Indians within such limits without such grant or license as was by the said Act required.

And whereas by an instrument under the hand and seal of the Right Honorable Earl Bathurst then one of His said late Majesty's Secretaries of State, and dated the 6th day of December, 1821, after reciting therein, as or to the effect aforesaid, and also reciting that the said Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson Bay, and certain associations of persons trading under the name of "The North-West Company of Montreal," had respectively extended the fur trade over many parts of North America which had not been before explored, and that the competition in the said trade had been found, for some years then past, to be productive of great inconvenience and loss, not only to the said Company and associations, but to the said trade in general, and also of great injury to the native Indians and of other persons, His said Majesty's subjects; and that the said Governor and Company of Adventurers trading to Hudson Bay; and William M'Gillivray, of Montreal, in the Province of Lower Canada, Esquire; Simon M'Gillivray, of Suffolk-lane, in the City of London, merchant; and Edward Ellice, of Spring-gardens, in the County of Middlesex, Esquire; had represented to His Majesty that they had entered into an agreement, on the 26th day of March last, for putting an end to the said competition, and carrying on the said trade for twenty-one years, commencing with the outfit of 1821, and ending with the returns of the outfit of 1841, to be carried on in the name of the said Governor and Company exclusively, and that the said Governor and Company, and William M'Gillivray, Simon M'Gillivray and Edward Ellice had humbly besought His said late Majesty to make a grant and give His Royal License to them jointly of and for the exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in North America, under the restrictions and upon the terms and conditions specified in the said recited Act: His said late Majesty, being desirous of encouraging the said trade, and remedying the evils which had arisen from the competition which had theretofore existed therein, did give and grant his Royal License, under the hand and seal of one of his Principal Secretaries of State, to the said Governor and Company, and William M'Gillivray, Simon M'Gillivray and Edward Ellice, for the exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America to the northward and to the westward of the said lands and territories belonging to the United States of America, as should not form part of any of His said Majesty's Provinces in North America, or of any lands or territories belonging to the said United States of America, or to any European Government, state or power; and His said late Majesty did also give and grant and secure to the said Governor and Company, and William M'Gillivray, Simon M'Gillivray and Edward Ellice, the sole and exclusive privilege, for the full period of 21 years, from the date of that grant, of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America as aforesaid (except as hereinafter excepted), and did thereby declare that no rent should be required or demanded for or in respect of that grant and license, or any privileges given thereby for said period of 21 years, but that the said Governor and Company of Adventurers trading to 10 Hudson Bay, and the said William M'Gillivray, Simon M'Gillivray and Edward Ellice, should, during the period of that grant and license, keep accurate registers of all persons in their employ in any parts of North America, and should once in each year return to His said Majesty's Secretary of State accurate duplicates of such registers, and enter into and give security to His said Majesty, his heirs and successors, in the penal sum of £5,000 for ensuring, as far as in them might lay, or as they could by their authority over the servants and persons in their employ, the due execution of all criminal processes, and of every civil process in any suit where the matter in dispute shall exceed £200, by the officers and persons legally empowered to execute such processes within all the territories included in that grant, and for the producing or delivering into custody for purposes of trial all persons in their employ or acting under their authority within the said territories, who should be charged with any criminal 20 offence; and His said Majesty did thereby require that the said Governor and Company, and William M'Gillivray, Simon M'Gillivray and Edward Ellice, should, as soon as the same could be conveniently done, make and submit for His said Majesty's consideration and approval, such rules and regulations for the management and carrying on of the said fur trade with the Indians, and the conduct of the persons employed by them therein, as might appear to His said Majesty to be effectual for diminishing or preventing the sale or distribution of spirituous liquors to the Indians, and for promoting their moral and religious improvement; and His said Majesty did thereby declare, that nothing in that grant contained should be deemed or construed to authorize the said Governor and Company, and William M'Gillivray, Simon M'Gillivray and Edward Ellice, or any persons in their employ, to claim or exercise 30 any trade with the Indians on the north-west coast of America, to the westward of the Stoney Mountains, to the prejudice or exclusion of any citizens of the United States of America who might be engaged in the said trade; and providing also by the now reciting grant, that no British subjects other than and except the said Governor and Company, and the said William M'Gillivray, Simon M'Gillivray and Edward Ellice, and the persons authorized to carry on exclusive trade by them on grant, should trade with the Indians within such limits during the period of that grant.

And whereas the said Governor and Company have acquired to themselves all the rights and interests of the said William M'Gillivray, Simon M'Gillivray and Edward Ellice, under the said recited grant, and the said Governor and Company having humbly besought us to accept a surrender of the said grant, and in consideration thereof to make a grant to them, and give to them our Royal License and authority of, and for the like exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in North America, for 40 the like period, and upon similar terms and conditions to those specified and referred to in the said recited grant. Now, know ye, that in consideration of the surrender made to us of the said recited grant, and being desirous of encouraging the said trade, and of preventing as much as possible a recurrence of the evils mentioned or referred to in the said recited grant; as also in consideration of the yearly rent hereinafter reserved to us: We do hereby grant and give our License, under the hand and seal of one of our Principal Secretaries of State, to the said Governor and Company, and their successors, for the exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America, to the northward and to the westward of the lands and territories belonging to the United States of America, as shall not form part of any of our provinces in North America, or of any lands or territories belonging to the said United States of America, or to any European government, state or power, but subject nevertheless 50 as hereinafter mentioned: And we do by these presents give, grant and secure to the said Governor and Company, and their successors, the sole and exclusive privilege, for the full period of 21 years from the date of this our grant, of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America, as aforesaid (except as hereinafter mentioned): And we do hereby declare, that no rent shall be required or de-
