VICTORIA, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen Defender of the Faith, to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting: Whereas His Majesty, King Charles the Second, by Letters Patent under the Great Seal of England bearing date at Westminster, the second day of May, in the twenty-second year of His reign, and in the year of our Lord one thousand six hundred and seventy, did incorporate a certain company by the name of "The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay," and did, in and by the said letters patent, among other things, give, grant and confirm to the said Governor and Company "all the lands and territories upon the countries, coasts and confines of the seas, bays, lakes, rivers, creeks and sounds, in whatsoever latitude they shall be, that lie within the entrance of the straits commonly called Hudson's Straits, that were not already actually possessed, or granted to any of his subjects, or possessed by the subjects of any other Christian prince or state;" and did, moreover, ordain and direct that the land within the said limits, territories and places, should thenceforth be reckoned and reputed as one of his plantations and colonies in America, called Rupert's Land; and whereas the doctrine and discipline of the united Church of England and Ireland are possessed and observed by many of our loving subjects resident within the said territories and places called Rupert's Land, and our said subjects are deprived of some of the offices prescribed by the Liturgy and usage of the Church aforesaid, by reason that there is not a bishop residing or exercising jurisdiction and canonical functions within the same, for remedy of the aforesaid inconveniences we have determined to erect the said colony of Rupert's Land into a bishop's see or diocese, to be styled the Bishoprick of Rupert's Land: Now know ye that in pursuance of such Our Royal intention, we, by these our Letters Patent under the Great Seal of Our United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, do erect, found, make, ordain and constitute the said colony of Rupert's Land into a bishop's see or diocese, and do declare and ordain that the same shall be styled the Bishoprick of Rupert's Land, saving, nevertheless, unto us, our heirs and successors, the powers of altering from time to time, with the consent of the Archbishop of Canterbury, for the time being, if the said see be vacant or otherwise, of the said Archbishop and of the Bishop of the see for the time being, the limits of the said diocese or of the jurisdiction of the bishop thereof, and to the end that this our intention may be carried into due effect, we, having great confidence in the learning, morals and probity of our well-beloved David Anderson, Doctor in Divinity, do name and appoint him to be ordained and consecrated Bishop of the said See of Rupert's Land, and we do hereby signify to the most Reverend Father in God, John Bird, by Divine Providence Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England and Metropolitan, the erection and constitution of the said see and diocese, and our nomination of the said David Anderson, requiring and by the faith and love whereby he is bound unto us, commanding the said Most Rever-and we do further by these presents ordain that it shall be competent to the Bishop, from time to time, to select any suitable church already erected, or which may hereafter be erected within the limits of "Rupert's Land" to be used as his cathedral church; and we further ordain and declare that the said Bishop of Rupert's Land and his successors shall be subject and subordinate to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his successors; and we do further will and ordain that every Bishop of Rupert's Land shall take an oath of obedience to the Archbishop of Canterbury, for the time being, as his Metropolitan, which oath shall and may be ministered by the said Archbishop, or by any other person by him duly appointed or authorized for that purpose; and we do further by these presents expressly declare that the said Bishop 30 of Rupert's Land, and also his successors, having been respectively by us, our heirs and successors named and appointed, and by the said Archbishop of Canterbury canonically ordained and consecrated according to the form of the United Church of England and Ireland, may perform all the functions peculiar and appropriate to the office of bishop within the said diocese of Rupert's Land; and for a declaration of the spiritual causes and matters in which the aforesaid jurisdiction may be more specially exercised, we do by these presents further declare that the aforesaid Bishop of Rupert's Land and his successors may exercise and enjoy full power and authority, by himself or themselves, or by the archdeacon or archdeacons, or the vicar-general, or other officer or officers hereinafter mentioned, to give institution to benefices, to grant licenses to officiate to all rectors, curates, ministers and chaplains of all the churches or chapels or other places within the said diocese wherein divine service shall be celebrated 40 according to the rites and liturgy of the Church of England, and to visit all rectors, curates, ministers and chaplains, and all priests and deacons, in holy orders of the United Church of England and Ireland resident within the said diocese, as also to call before him or them, or before the archdeacon or archdeacons or the vicar-general or other officer or officers hereinafter mentioned, at such competent days, hours and places, when and so often as to him or them shall seem meet and convenient, the aforesaid rectors, curates, ministers, chaplains, priests and deacons, or any of them, and to enquire as well concerning their morals as their behaviour in their said offices and stations respectively, subject nevertheless to such rights of review and appeal as are hereinafter given and reserved, and for the better accomplishment of the purposes aforesaid we do hereby grant and declare that the said Bishop of Rupert's Land and his successors may found and constitute one or more dignities in his Cathedral Church, and also one or more 50 archdeaconries within the said diocese, and may collate fit and proper persons to be dignitaries of the Cathedral Church, and one or more fit and proper persons to be archdeacons of the said archdeaconries respectively: provided always that such dignitaries and archdeacons shall exercise such jurisdiction only as

42. For the first election of members to serve in the House of Commons the Governor-General shall cause writs to be issued by such person, in such form, and addressed to such Returning Officers as he thinks fit.

43. In case a vacancy in the representation in the House of Commons of any Electoral District happens before the meeting of the Parliament, or after the meeting of the Parliament before provision is made by the Parliament in this behalf, the provisions of the last foregoing section of this Act shall extend and apply to the issuing and returning of a writ in respect of such vacant District.

- (1.) Quebec shall have the fixed number of sixty-five members.
- (2.) There shall be assigned to each of the other Provinces such a number of members as will bear the same proportion to the number of its population (ascertained at such census) as the number sixty-five bears to the number of the Population of Quebec (so ascertained).
- (3.) In the computation of the number of members for a Province a fractional part not exceeding one half of the whole number requisite for entitling the Province to a member shall be disregarded; but a fractional part exceeding one half of that number shall be equivalent to the whole number:
- (4.) On any such re-adjustment the number of members for a Province shall not be reduced unless the proportion which the number of the population of the Province bore to the number of the aggregate population of Canada at the then last preceding re-adjustment of the number of members for the Province is ascertained at the then latest census to be diminished by one-twentieth part or upwards:
- (5.) Such re-adjustment shall not take effect until the termination of the then existing Parliament.

52. The number of members of the House of Commons may be from time to time increased by the Parliament of Canada, provided the proportionate representation of the Provinces prescribed by this Act is not thereby disturbed.

XIV the governors and officers of the two Kings were to discountenance all pirates; not giving them any aid nor allowing them to take shelter in their ports respectively; "and that the said governors and officers should be expressly ordered to punish as pirates all those who might be found to have armed one or more vessels sailing without commission or legitimate authority."]

XVIII. Further, it has been concluded and agreed that if ever, which God forbid, any rupture should take place in Europe between the said Crowns, the garrisons, armed forces, or subjects of whatever condition of his Most Christian Majesty, being in the isles, colonies, forts, towns and governments which are at present, or may hereafter be, under the dominion of his said Majesty in America, shall not exercise any act of hostility by sea or land against the subjects of his Britannic Majesty, inhabitants of any of the colonies of America. And in like manner, in case of a rupture in Europe, the garrisons, armed forces, or subjects of whatever condition of his Britannic Majesty, being in the isles, colonies, forts, towns and governments which are at present, or may hereafter be, under the dominion of his Britannic Majesty in America, shall not exercise any act of hostility, either by sea or land, against the subjects of his Most Christian Majesty inhabiting any colony whatever in America. But there shall always be a firm peace and neutrality between the said peoples of France and Great Britain, just as if no such rupture had taken place.

XIX. This treaty, not to derogate from the Treaty of Breda, July, 1667, all the articles of which are to remain in force and vigour to be observed.]

The Sieur Barillon and the Sieur De Bonrepaus, Comms. appointed by the Most Christian King, with the Earl of Sunderland, the Earl of Middleton and Lord Godolphin, for Executing the Treaty of Neutrality in America.

At a meeting the 18th May, 1687, Memorials and other papers touching His Majesty's Right to the Hudson's Bay, with the answers of the French Commissioners

THE COMMISSIONERS.

The Most Christian King having empowered the Sieur Barillon, his Ambassador Extraordinary at this Court and the Sieur Dusson de Bonrepaus, his Envoy Extraordinary, to treat as his Commissioners with such as should be appointed by his Majesty in order to the adjusting all differences that have arisen or might arise between both nations in America, and particularly for the better execution of the late Treaty of Neutrality between both Crowns in those parts; and His Majesty having been pleased to appoint the Right Honorable the Earl of Sunderland, Lord President of the Council and principal Secretary of State, the Earl of Middleton, principal Secretary of State, and the Lord Godolphin, one of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, to treat with the said French Commissioners, their Lordships had their first Conference with them on the 18th of May, 1687, and upon the application of the Company of Adventurers trading to Hudson's Bay, their Lordships delivered to the French Commissioners a Representation of His Majesty's Right to the Streights and Bay of Hudson, as likewise a Memorial of Damages the Company had suffered by the invasion of the French, which, with the preceding Papers and the answers of the French Commissioners are as follows:

MEMORIALS WHICH PASSED BETWEEN THE COMMISSIONERS.

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty:

Hudson's Bay Company's petition to the King.

Petition of the Adventurers of England Trading to Hudson's Bay.

The humble Petition of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, most humbly sheweth:—

That the Ports and Places within Hudson's Bay in America, were first discovered by the subjects of the Imperial Crown of this Kingdom, denominated frequented, and sailed to, only by them successively for upwards of one hundred years.

That the Petitioners have traded into those parts above twenty years, and in that time have expended near two hundred thousand pounds sterling in erecting and making Forts and Factories there, and in settling a trade and other necessities thereunto within the limits of their Charter, and have now arrived to a very considerable trade therein to the honour and profit of this Kingdom, and the increase of your Majesty's customs and shipping, and never were disturbed or any way molested therein, until the year 1682, when one Monsieur de la Cheney and other private merchants of Canada without any commission or colour of authority from His Most Christian Majesty, or from the Governor of Canada, did set out ships, and in a piratical manner disturb and annoy the petitioners in their Factories and Settlements at Port Nelson and did burn their houses and robbed them of their trade there, of all which the several memorials were sent to the Court of France by his late Majesty of ever blessed memory in behalf of the petitioners demanding satisfaction for the same, yet none was obtained.

And in November, 1685, the petitioners renewed their complaints by an humble petition to Your Majesty setting forth they had then received fresh intelligence that the French had, in an open hostile manner, in the time of peace and good correspondence of the two Crowns, seized within Hudson's Streights one of the petitioners' ships commanded by one Edward Humes, and carried her, with all her lading and several of your majesty's subjects upon her, prisoners to Quebec.

That His Most Christian Majesty gave answer thereunto and promised that as to the said ship, he would forthwith send necessary orders to Canada to have an account of what had happened in that affair, and after information thereof, would order what should be just and reasonable, but instead thereof Richard Smithsend, mate of the said ship, and some of her crew, were kept prisoners at Quebec for above eleven months, and for the most part were fed only with bread and water, and at last sent away as slaves to Martinico in the West Indies, as the petitioners have been lately assured by the said Smithsend, who made his escape and is within a few days since arrived in London, and his affidavit attesting the same and the French their proceedings against your petitioners in taking the bottom of the Bay is hereunto annexed.

That in February, 1685, the petitioners made reply to the said answer, and at the same time made their petition and memorial of complaint to Your Majesty, setting forth the great injuries and depredations done to the petitioners in their trade, factories and estates in the Hudson's Bay, by the subjects of His Most Christian Majesty, and did annex to the same a deduction of their several losses and sufferings by the French of Canada, amounting to threescore thousand pounds.

That the Petitioners have advice that the Canada ships are this year arrived at Rochelle, and nowise doubt but His Most Christian Majesty has by them received an account about the petitioners' said ship, and other their great sufferings and losses by his subjects.

That the petitioners have had the honour to receive many gracious favours and encouragements from Your Majesty's late royal brother (of over blessed memory), and not only then had the glory to be under your royal care as their Governor, but also lately upon their humble application and complaint to Your Majesty of the continued injuries they yearly receive from the subjects of the French King, Your Majesty was graciously pleased to give them from your own royal mouth, the assurance of Your Majesty's protection and care to see them righted.

And in steadfast assurance of Your Majesty's most gracious and royal word, but in the most humble and dutiful manner,

The petitioners do presume to represent to Your Majesty—

That within these two months the petitioners have received repeated advices and intelligence from France and several other places, whereby it appears that the French of Canada, this year, have in a piratical manner taken and totally despoiled the petitioners of three of their forts and factories in the bottom of Hudson's Bay, three of their ships or vessels, fifty thousand beaver skins, and a great quantity of provisions, stores and merchandizes laid in for many years' trade; and have in a small vessel turned out to sea above fifty of Your Majesty's subjects, who then were in the petitioners' service, to shift for themselves or perish miserably, besides those whom they have either killed or detained prisoners.

And the French of Canada give out to the native Indians, that they, the said French, will have Hudson's Bay and trade into their own hands and utterly out the petitioners of the same, which if they effect, will prove a very great loss to Your Majesty and this kingdom, and will utterly ruin the petitioners.

All which is humbly submitted to Your Majesty's most gracious consideration.

And the petitioners humbly pray, that Your Majesty will be graciously pleased to afford them your royal assistance and protection, and that Your Majesty will demand and procure satisfaction to be made to them for all the losses and damages they have, as well formerly as by this last invasion, sustained from the subjects of His Most Christian Majesty, and that His Most Christian Majesty may be instantly pressed to give effectual commands to his Governor at Canada and other his subjects to quit and deliver up to the petitioners, their agents and servants, all the forts, factories, ships and whatever else they have taken from the petitioners in Hudson's Bay, and for the more sincere and effectual obtaining of the same, that His Most Christian Majesty may now, before the departure of the petitioners' ships this spring, send unto Your Majesty a positive mandate to go by the petitioners' own ships this expedition, commanding all the subjects of His Most Christian Majesty which shall be found in the bottom of the Bay, or any other the factories or territories of the petitioners on sight thereof, to quit and surrender all the said places with all that did to them belong, and to depart from thence and leave the quiet and entire possession of the same to the petitioners, their agents, factors and servants, and that noships or subjects of that Crown may for the future annoy or molest the petitioners in their rights, possessions and trade, and that the petitioners may have the sole trade of Hudson's Bay, according to the purport and gracious intention of Your Majesty's royal charter.

And your Petitioners (as in duty bound) shall ever pray, &c.

CHURCHILL, Governr.

Memorial of the Committee of Hudson's Bay Company to their Lordships.

Your Lordships have doubtless heard of (as well as all Europe admired at) the many insults committed by the French on his Majesty's subjects in Hudson's Bay for five years last past in the time of peace and good correspondence between the two Crowns, after more than an hundred years entire and quiet possession of the said Bay by His Majesty's subjects, your Lordships have also been acquainted with the Company's several Memorials of complaints and repeated petitions to His Majesty to cause restitution to be made of the ships, merchandize, and forts, taken from them, and also for reparation of the vast damage they have sustained thereby; nor can your Lordships (we hope) be ignorant of His Majesty's most gracious answer to our petition delivered in February last, when he was pleased to tell us that his honour was concerned with our interests, and he would have reparation for both, which royal assurance from his sacred mouth had so reanimated our desponding spirits that we have again prepared fresh supplies of provisions for our servants in the Bay (if any survive their miseries) as well as new cargoes of merchandize, for our trade with the natives, the happy success whereof will be entirely owing to your Lordships' favour and despatch, and we cannot but acknowledge it as the first good step to the prosperity of our Company, that Providence hath so kindly inclined His Majesty to refer the Company's welfare, to persons of so much real worth, honour and integrity.

We are sufficiently sensible that it is our duty to wait your Lordships' hours and to attend your motions and commands in all things, but we humbly beg leave also to assure you that the cogency of our affairs is so urgent in this juncture, that we are compelled to make this humble address to beg your Lordships' consideration of these preliminary propositions, viz:—

1st. That it hath been the Company's care to dispatch their ships for the Bay in the beginning of May, because there is but one season of the year to go and come, and if they have not an early dispatch they will be frozen in and lose their voyage.

2ndly. That this year, by reason of the Treaty your Lordships are entering upon, we have delayed our expedition as much as possible, nevertheless, we have contracted by charter party, with the owners and masters of those ships which we hire, that they shall sail before or at furthest on the 25th day of this instant month of May, beyond which time if we detain them, we shall not only break our charter party and pay great demurrage for our delay, but also highly endanger the total loss of our voyage as is aforesaid.

Now because we are sensible that the adjusting of all differences betwixt us and the French (and especially in agreeing to the districts of the Company's country for trade, and the particulars of their damages sustained) may take up too much of your Lordships' time to effect the same before the necessary departure of our ships, at present we can only pray, that your Lordships will endeavour immediately to obtain from the French Plenipotentiaries here a positive mandate to all the French in the Bay to be sent in our vessels, commanding them to deliver us all the ships, factories and merchandizes, &c., which they took from us last year at the bottom of the Bay.

This we are humbly of opinion they will not deny, because they never made any claim nor visited it, till the last summer, when they destroyed His Majesty's subjects there by surprise, even at the instant when a Treaty was on foot for a good correspondence and a perpetual peace between the two Crowns. And this we hope your Lordships will agree to be essentially necessary to the welfare of the Company that it would be very imprudent (if our servants could live there without a supply of provisions from England) to send any ships thither without the said mandate; as well because the French there have doubtless received the publication of the late Treaty for confirming the possessions they had the sixth day of November last, and consequently will treat our servants as enemies, and seize our ships and effects, as heretofore, as also for that we shall find it very difficult to engage hired ships and men to expose themselves to the mercy of the French (who have already treated His Majesty's subjects so ill) and when they carry no force to oppose their violence.

All which we most humbly submit to your Lordships' serious and timely consideration.

E. Dering, Dep.-Governor, Jo. Husband, Wm. Young, Richard Cradock, Jo. Letten, Stephen Pitts, Nic. Hayward, Saml. Clarke.

LES DROITS DE SA MAJESTÉ SUR LA BAIE D'HUDSON.

En l'année 1610 Henry Hudson, sujet de Sa Majesté, navigua dans les détroits et dans la Baie d'Hudson, en prit possession et donna des noms à divers lieux situés dans la Baie et les Détroits, par lesquels ils ont toujours été nommés et connus depuis ce temps là, dans les cartes qui ont été faites tant dans les pays étrangers qu'en Angleterre.

En l'année 1612, le Chevalier Thomas Button, Anglais, fit un voyage dans les détroits et dans la Baie susdite et prit possession de diverses places (et particulièrement de la Rivière du Port Nelson et des Terres voisines au nom du Roi Jacques premier, et nomma la dite rivière et le fort où lui et sa compagnie passèrent l'hiver, Port Nelson, du nom du capitaine du vaisseau qui s'appelait Nelson.

En 1631 le capitaine Luc Fox fit un voyage à Hudson-Bay par ordre du Roi Charles premier et entre plusieurs lieux de la dite Baie où il entra, il alla dans la rivière du Port Nelson et trouvant là une eroix qui avait été plantée par le Chevalier Thomas Button, il la releva et en renouvela l'inscription déclarant le droit et la possession que Sa Majesté y avait et nomma ensuite les pays voisins de cette rivière New-North-Wales.

En 1667 Zacharie Gilham, Anglais, fit un autre voyage dans cette baie et entra dans l'embouchure d'une rivière qui est au fond de la Baie, et la nomma la Rivière de Rupert en l'honneur de feu Son Altesse le Prince Rupert qui était le principal des intéressés dans cette expédition, le dit Gilham bâtit aussi là un fort à qui il donna le nom de Charles, en l'honneur du roi défunt, et ayant pris possession de la dite rivière et des terres voisines, il y établit le commerce et une bonne correspondance avec les naturels du pays.

En 1670 le Roi défunt octroya une Chartre aux dits intéressés et en forma une compagnie leur donnant pouvoir et privilège de trafiquer (l'exclusion de tous autres) dans la dite Baie, Détroits, Terres, Rivières et Iles, qui sont tant au dedans qu'aux environs de la Baie et des Détroits.

En 1672 la compagnie envoya Charles Bayley en qualité de Gouverneur de leurs Factories établies dans la dite Baie, avec qui le Sieur de Frontenac, Gouverneur du Canada, entretint une bonne correspondance sans jamais se plaindre d'aucun dommage ou tort fait par la compagnie ou par ses agents, soit en y établissant son commerce ou en bâtissant des forts au fond de la Baie, et en 1673, le dit Bayley envoya un navire appelé l'Employ au Port Nelson pour y négocier et y faire un établissement comme fit aussi le capitaine Draper, en 1680, qui y envoya un vaisseau nommé l'Albemarle.

En 1682, les agents et les facteurs de la compagnie bâtirent un fort et travaillaient à y établir une factorie dans le Port Nelson quand ils furent troublés pour la première fois par les Français, nonobstant un établissement et une possession continue de vingt ans durant lequel temps les intéressés ont fait une dépense de près 200,000 livres sterling, tant pour bâtir des forts que pour établir des factories.

ruption ni contestation quelconque, jusqu'à l'année 1682, a été aussi confirmé par le Traité conclu entre Sa Majesté et le Roi Très Chrétien le 16 novembre, 1686, par lequel il est stipulé que les deux rois auront et tiendront tous les domaines, droits et pré-éminences dans les mers, détroits et autres eaux de l'Amérique d'une manière aussi ample et étendue qu'ils en jouissaient alors.

Et comme ceci établit et confirme le droit de Sa Majesté sur les places qui sont dans la Baie et dans les Détroits de Hudson, aussi l'établit-il et le confirme sur celles dont les marchands Français se sont depuis quelque temps emparés, lesquelles places à la signature du traité étaient réputées par les deux parties être en possession des sujets de Sa Majesté, la dite saisie étant sans contestation commise en temps de paix, par conséquent ne peut être réputée une juste et légitime possession selon l'intention véritable du Traité.

HIS MAJESTY'S RIGHT TO HUDSON'S BAY.

The Northern part of America, wherein Hudson's Bay is comprised, was discovered in the year, 1497, by Sr. Sebastian Cabot, by particular commission from King Henry the 7th.

In the year, 1610 Mr. Henry Hudson, his Majesty's subject, sailed into the Streights and Bay of Hudson, took possession thereof, giving names to several places therein, by which they have been since called and known in the maps of those parts, as well foreign as English.

In the year 1612, Sir Thomas Button, an Englishman, sailed into the said Streights and Bay, took possession of several places, particularly of the River of Port Nelson, and Territories thereunto belonging, in the name of his master, King James the First, and called the said River and Port, wherein they then wintered, by the name of Port Nelson, from the commander of the ship wherein he sailed, whose name was Nelson.

In the year 1631, Captain Luke Fox, by command of his late Majesty King Charles the First, made a voyage to Hudson's Bay, and amongst other places within the said Bay, he entered the River of Port Nelson, and finding there a cross which had been erected by Sir Thomas Button with an inscription defaced, he set up the said cross again with a new inscription, declaring his Majesty's right and possession, and then named the adjacent countries upon the said River New North Wales, as it is called to this day in the maps of America.

In the year 1667, another voyage was made to the said Bay by one Zachery Gilham, an Englishman who sailed into a river in the Bottom of the Bay, calling it Rupert River, in honour of Prince Rupert who was principally concerned in that expedition with other adventurers, built a Fort there, which he called Charles Fort, in honour of his late Majesty, and taking possession of the river and lands thereabouts, entered into a good correspondence and trade with the natives.

In the year 1669, Captain Newland entered Port Nelson, and declared His Majesty's right thereto by setting up His Majesty's arms as the ensigns of his sovereignty.

In the year 1670, His Majesty was pleased by his royal charter to incorporate the said adventurers, granting them power to trade, exclusively to all others, within the said Streights and Bay, and within all the lands and territories, rivers and islands, in and about the said Streights and Bay.

In the year 1673, Charles Bayley was sent by the Company as Governor of the Factories within the said Bay, with whom Mon. Sieur Frontenac, then Governor of Canada, kept a good correspondence, without complaining of any injury done by the Company or their agents, in settling of commerce or, building of Forts, in the bottom of the Bay.

In the year 1680, Captain Draper, in one of the Company's ships, entered the River of Port Nelson.

In the year 1682, the Company's Agents and Factors built a Fort, and were settling a Factory in Port Nelson, when they were first disturbed by the French, the Adventurers having expended nearly 200,000*l* for twenty years last past, in building of Forts and Factories within the limits of their charter.

His Majesty's Right to Hudson's Bay and Territories thereunto belonging, being thus deduced without any interruption or dispute, until the year 1682, is likewise confirmed by subsequent Treaties, and particularly by the Treaty concluded between His Majesty and the Most Christian King on the 11th November, 1686, wherein it is stipulated that both Kings shall have and retain to themselves all the dominion, rights, and pre-eminences in the American seas, roads and waters, in as full and ample manner, as of right belonged to them, and in such manner as they then possessed the same, which as it certainly establishes and confirms a right in His Majesty to those places in Hudson's Bay and Straights whereof the English were then actually possessed, so doth it likewise of those places which were lately seized by the merchants of France, which, at the signing of the Treaty, were understood by both parties to be in the possession of His Majesty's subjects, such dispossession as lately happened having been certainly made in the time of peace, and therefore cannot be deemed a rightful possession of the French within the genuine intention of the Treaty.

Lastly, if any objections should be made to the facts and arguments herein set forth to prove His Majesty's title to Hudson's Bay and Territories thereunto belonging, or if any right shall be pretended by the French to those places, the Company of Adventurers most humbly pray that leave and opportunity may be given them to make their reply, not doubting to give His Majesty full satisfaction therein.

La partie septentrionale de l'Amérique dans laquelle est la Baie d'Hudson fut découverte vers l'année 1497 par le chevalier Sebastien Cabot en vertu d'une commission du Roi Henri Sept.

Answer of the French Commissioners to the Memorial touching Hudson's Bay.

Ce pays qui est appelé dans toutes les anciennes cartes, la Côte de Labrador a été ainsi nommé par les Espagnols qui en firent la découverte longtems avant que les Anglais y eussent été.

On voit par les Relations que le dit Sebastien Cabot n'y a passé que par occasion comme les autres navigateurs en cherchant un passage du côté de l'Ouest pour aller aux Indes, ce sont des faits connus par tous les navigateurs. Les Français y ont été en divers temps, mais on n'a jamais cru que ces voyages pussent servir de titre.

*ANSWER.

This country, which is called the coast of Labrador in all the old maps, has been so named by the Spaniards, who discovered it long before the English had visited it.

It is seen in the accounts that Sebastian Cabot only touched there occasionally, like other navigators, seeking a passage on the western side, to go to the Indies—these are facts known to all navigators. The French have been there at various times, but they have never thought these voyages could stand instead of title. Henry Hudson may have sailed in the strait of the Bay to the north of Canada, as many others have done, but it is certain that he took no possession of it, having no deed, in which mention was made of it, nor the slightest proof of any settlement made by the English.

Henry Hudson peut avoir navigué dans le Détroit de la Baie du Nord du Canada comme plusieurs autres ont fait, mais il est constant qu'il n'en prit point possession n'y ayant aucun acte qui en fasse mention ni aucun vestige d'établissement fait par les Anglais.

Le droit qu'on voudrait prendre par les cartes modernes et sans aucun fondement, ces sortes d'ouvrages n'étoient point faits par ordre ni par participation des Souverains, ceux qui les composent ne cherchent que la nouveauté pour en avoir un plus grand débit, et prennent les dernières relations qu'ils trouvent sans s'informer d'où elles viennent.

Si on veut admettre ces sortes de preuves, les Français feront voir par plusieurs relations imprimées à Londres avec privilège que tous les pays en question leur ont appartenu avant que les Anglais les eussent connus, et cela seul finirait la contestation; mais il me semble qu'il serait plus convenable et qu'on connaîtra mieux le fond du droit des deux nations en examinant les titres qui seront produits par les deux compagnies de commerce, ceux de la compagnie Française seront mis ci-après.

Les Français occupaient en ce temps là toutes ces terres, et l'on prouvera par les procès-verbaux du Sieur Champlain, qu'il en prit possession et de celles qui sont cinq cents lieues par delà, le pays des Iroquois et de la Rivière de Saguenay, et y fit des établissements qui ont été continués. Au lieu que parceque est dit dans l'article ci-à côté, il paraît qu'après le voyage du Chevalier Thomas Button en 1612, les Anglais n'y sont retournés qu'en 1631, ce qui justifie qu'ils n'ont jamais été en ce pays là pour s'y établir mais seulement par occasion, et comme il a été dit ci-dessus pour chercher un passage du côté de l'Ouest pour aller aux Indes.

The right which it is wished to claim from modern maps is without any foundation, these works not being made by the order or participation of the sovereigns, and those who compose them, seek only innovation, in order to have a larger traffic, and take the latest accounts, without ascertaining from whence they come.

If these sorts of evidences are to be admitted, the French could show, in several accounts, printed by authority in London, that all the countries in question belonged to them before the English ever knew them, and that alone should end the dispute; but, it seems that it would be more suitable, and one would know better the ground of the rights of the two nations, by examining the titles which will be brought forward by the two companies of commerce: those of the French Company will be placed hereafter.

A l'égard du lieu de Nelson, ils peuvent y avoir remouillé par occasion, mais il n'y a jamais eu aucun vestige d'établissement qu'en l'année 1682 qu'ils y vinrent qu'après que les Français y eurent bâti un fort sur la rivière de Bourbon, et une marque certaine qu'ils n'y ont point pris d'établissement ni qu'ils n'ont pas eu dessein de s'y établir en ce temps là, c'est qu'ils n'ont eu le pouvoir de leur Souverain de le faire qu'en l'année 1670 par lettres
10 du Roi Charles Second.

Cette croix n'a pu être plantée que par les Français, et c'est une preuve infallible qu'ils ont été les premiers occupants de ces terres.

Le nom de New-North Wales donné à cette con-trée en 1631 ne prouve rien contre la première possession des Français qui est depuis l'année 1640, outre que ce lieu là ne peut avoir aucun rapport avec celui de Nelson en étant éloigné d'environ 400 lieues. On convient qu'en ce temps là les 20 Anglais entrèrent dans la rivière qu'ils nommèrent Rupert, où ils ont bâti ensuite un fort, mais ce pays leur était si peu connu qu'ils furent obligés de s'y faire introduire par les nommés Grosseliers et Radisson, Français, habitants du Canada, qui quit-

The French occupied at that time all these lands, and they will prove it by the verbal proceedings of Mr. Champlain that he took possession of them, and of those which are five hundred leagues on the other side, the country of the Iroquois, and the Saguenay River, and there made settlements, which have been carried on. Instead of, as is said in the article at hand, it appears that after the voyage of the Knight, Thomas Button, in 1612, the English returned only in 1631, which proves that they had never been in that country to settle themselves, but only occasionally, and, as it has been afore said, to find a passage on the western side to go to the Indies.

As for the place Nelson, they may have occasionally cast anchor there, but there was never any trace of a settlement till the year 1682, when they came there.
After that the French had built a fort upon the Bourbon River; and a proof positive that they made no settlement there, nor had any intention to settle themselves there at that time, is that they had no authority from their King to do so, until the year 1670, by letters from King Charles the Second. This cross can only have been erected by the French, and it is an infallible proof that they were the first possessors of these lands.

The name New North Wales given to this country in 1631, is no proof against the first possession by the French, which is since the year 1640, besides that, this place can have no connection with that of Nelson, being at a distance of about four hundred leagues. It is understood that at that time the English entered the river, which they named Rupert, where they afterwards built a fort, but this country was so little known to them, that they were obliged to gain an

En 1631 le Capitaine Luc Fox fit un voyage à Hudson's Bay par ordre du Roi Charles Premier, et entre plusieurs lieux de la dite Baie où il entra, il alla dans la rivière du Port Nelson, et trouvant là une croix qui y avait été plantée par le chevalier Thomas Button, il la releva et en renouvela l'inscription, déclarant le droit et la possession que Sa Majesté y avait; et nomma ensuite les pays de cette rivière New-North-Wales.

En 1667 Zacharie Gilham, Anglais, fit un autre voyage dans cette baie, et entra dans l'embouchure d'une rivière qui est au fond de la Baie, et la nomma la Rivière Rupert, en l'honneur de feu Son Altesse le Prince Rupert, qui était le principal des intéressés dans cette expédition; le dit Gilham bâtit aussi un fort à qui il donna le nom de Charles, en l'honneur du roi défunt, et ayant pris possession de la dite rivière et des terres voisines, il y établit le commerce et une bonne correspondance avec les naturels du pays.

tèrent pour la première fois la compagnie Française qu'ils servaient.

Il n'est pas vraisemblable que la trahison de ces deux hommes puisse servir de titre contre la compagnie Française qui en fit ses plaintes en ce temps là et a continué depuis à demander raison de cette usurpation ; les affaires qui survinrent en Europe peu de temps après ont fait négliger la poursuite de celle-ci, dont la compagnie Française ne s'est jamais désistée.

Les Français n'ont aucune connaissance de cette prise de possession qui ne pourrait avoir aucun lieu quand elle serait véritable, puisque les Français étaient les premiers occupants fondés en titre, et qu'il n'y avait point de guerre entre les deux rois, et qu'au contraire le traité de Bréda fait en 1667 les maintenait dans leur ancien droit.

Cette concession faite depuis le Traité de Bréda, qui porte que les sujets des deux rois demeureront en possession des terres qu'ils possédaient au premier Janvier, 1665, ne peut avoir lieu contre le droit des premiers occupants, que les Français ont par un titre antécédent.

La négociation qu'il y avait en ce temps là entre les deux rois pour un traité général de commerce, où cette affaire devait être comprise, fit qu'on donna à monsieur de Frontenac de n'entreprendre rien contre les Anglais dans cet établissement jusqu'à nouvel ordre.

En 1670 le roi défunt octroya une Chartre aux dits intéressés et en forma une compagnie, leur donnant pouvoir et privilège de trafiquer, (à l'exclusion de tous autres), dans la dite baie, détroits, rivières et îles qui sont tant au dedans qu'aux environs de la baie et des détroits.

En 1672 la compagnie envoya Charles Bayley en qualité de gouverneur de leurs factoreries établies dans la dite baie avec qui le Sieur de Frontenac, Gouverneur du Canada, entretint une bonne correspondance sans jamais se plaindre d'aucun dommage ou tort fait par la compagnie ou par ses agents, soit en y établissant son commerce ou en bâtissant des forts au fond de la baie, et en 1673 le dit Bayley envoya un navire appelé l'Employ au Port Nelson, pour y négocier et y faire un établissement comme fit aussi le Capitaine Draper en 1680, qui y envoya un vaisseau nommé l'Albemarle.

introduction to it through two Frenchmen, inhabitants of Canada, named Desgrossellier and Radisson, who, for the first time left the French Company which they served.

It is not probable that the perfidy of these two men can be used as a right against the French Company, which at that time made complaints about it, and has since continued to demand an explanation of that encroachment. The matters which happened unexpectedly in Europe shortly afterwards caused the search about this to be neglected, from which the French Company has never desisted.

The French had no knowledge of this taking possession, which could have no place, even if true, since the French were the first possessors, established by title, and that there was no war between the two Kings, and on the contrary, the Treaty of Bréda, signed in 1667, upheld them in their old claim.

This grant made since the Treaty of Bréda, which conveys that the subjects of the two Kings shall remain in possession of the lands which they possess on the 1st of January, 1665, cannot operate against the right of the first possessors, which the French have by a prior title.

Il a déjà été dit ci-dessus que les Français bâtirent près d'un lieu appelé Nelson, sur la rivière de Bourbon, et que les Anglais n'y sont venus qu'après eux, leur premier droit et celui de l'établissement qu'ils venaient d'y faire, les obligea de repousser les Anglais s'il les y venaient troubler, et la Compagnie Française demanda toujours satisfaction de l'enlèvement de ce fort et de tous ses effets pillés en 1683 par la trahison du nommé

Le traité conclu au mois de Novembre 1686, serait plus favorable aux Français qu'aux Anglais, si on voulait l'expliquer par la lettre, mais il me semble que les deux rois étant convenus de décider l'affaire au fond sur les pièces et titres qui seront rapportés par les deux compagnies de commerce, il ne s'agit à présent que d'examiner ces titres et de rendre justice en connaissance de cause à qui il appartiendra.

The negotiation which at that time took place the two Kings for a general Treaty of Commerce, where this matter ought to be included, issued an order to Monsieur de Frontenac not to attempt anything against the English in this settlement until a new order should be issued.

It has already been said above that the French built a fort near to a place called Nelson, upon the Bourbon River, and that the English came there after them, their first claim and that of the settlement they had made, obliged them to repulse the English who came there to disturb them, and the French Company still demand satisfaction for the abduction of this Fort, and of all its belongings, plundered in 1683, by the treason of the man named Radisson. The Treaty signed in the month of November, 1686, would be more favourable to the French than to the English, if it could be explained literally, but it appears that the two Kings having agreed to decide the matter in reality upon the documents and deeds which should be brought by the two Companies of Commerce, it remains only now to examine these deeds, and to render justice in the hearing of the cause, to whom it shall belong.

En 1682 les agents et les facteurs de la compagnie bâtirent un fort et travaillaient à établir une factorie dans le Port Nelson, quand ils furent troublés pour la première fois par les Français, nonobstant un établissement et une possession continue de vingt ans, durant lequel temps les intéressés ont fait une dépense de près de 200,000 livres sterling, tant pour bâtir des forts que pour établir leurs factories.

5. Un Acte tiré des registres du Conseil Souverain de Québec en date du 26 avril 1656, signé Pevoret secrétaire du dit Conseil, par lequel il est prouvé qu'un nommé Jean Bourbon, commandant un vaisseau de la dite compagnie courut toute la côte du Nord du Canada, entra et fit de nouveaux actes de prise de possession dans la dite baie.

* The French Company of the Bay to the north of Canada produces :

1. A commission in the form of an edict from King Francis the First, given in the year 1540, in favour of M Roberval, to take possession of all the lands which the said King had caused to be discovered in the year 1525, by Verazzano Florentin, and by Jacques Cartier, of St. Malo, in 1534 and 1535, in which commission the Bay to the north of Canada, which has since been called "Hudson," is included :—

2. Letters patent of King Henry the Great, in the year 1598, by which he appointed the Marquis de la Roche Cottenmeal, † his Lieutenant in the countries of Canada, Hochelaga, New Lands, Labrador, Great Bay Rivers, Norembegu River, and lands adjoining the said provinces and rivers. These letters patent, in form of commission, are registered in the Parliament of Rouen, and convey in set terms that the said lands at that time were not inhabited by any subjects of the Christian Princes.

3. The deeds of a society of merchants, established under the name of M. de Caën, who did actually trade there until the year 1627.

4. Letters patent from King Louis the Thirteenth, dated the 29th April, 1627, who formed a new company to which he granted all the country of Canada, as much along the coasts from Florida, as the Kings, his predecessors, had caused to be inhabited, coasting along the sea to the Arctic circle for latitude, and longitude from the Island of the New Land, inclining to the west, to the great lake called the "Quiet Sea," [Lake Huron] and beyond, and within the lands, and along the rivers which pass there, and empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence, and into all other streams which carry their waters to the sea. In which extent of country is included, without objection, the bay to the north of Canada, called by the English "Hudson."

5. A deed taken from the records of the Sovereign Council at Quebec, dated the 26th April, 1656, signed by Pevret, Secretary to the said Council, by which it is proved that John Bourbon, commanding a ship belonging to the said Company, sailed along all the coast of the north of Canada, entered, and made new acts of the taking possession of the said bay.

7. Une commission du Sieur d'Avaugour pour lors Gouverneur de la Nouvelle France, en date du 10e Mai 1663, portant ordre et permission au Sieur Couture de se transporter avec cinq hommes au fond de la Baie du Nord du Canada, pour en conséquence de la réquisition des Sauvages qui étaient revenus à Québec pour lui demander secours, les conduire et assister dans leurs affaires. A cette commission est joint un certificat du dit Sieur Couture, portant qu'il fait ce voyage en l'année 1663, et fait planter de nouveau sur les terres du fond de la dite baie une croix et les armes du roi, gravées en cuivre, et placées entre deux plaques de plomb au pied d'un grand arbre.

8. Le procès-verbal du Sieur de la Chesnay de la dite prise de possession.

9. Les lettres patentes de Sa Majesté de l'année 1663 par lesquelles elle réunit à la Couronne la propriété des susdites terres sur la cession de la dite compagnie.

10. Autres lettres patentes du Roi de l'année 1664 par lesquelles Sa Majesté ayant établi une nouvelle compagnie des Indes Occidentales, lui concède la Nouvelle France avec la même étendue que Louis XIII. l'avait concédé à la compagnie qui fut établie en 1627.

Marie du Sault chez les Outouacs, où se rendirent toutes les nations de plus cent lieues à la ronde au nombre de dix-sept, lesquelles se soumettre volontairement à la domination de Sa Majesté. Le dit Sieur de St. Lussou y planta ensuite la croix et y arbora les armes de Sa Majesté. Ces dix-sept nations comprenaient toutes celles des Outouacs et de tout le Lac de Huron, celles du Lac Supérieur, de toutes les terres du Nord et de la Baie d'Hudson, celles de la Baie des Puans et du Lac des Illinois, comme il est amplement justifié par le dit procès-verbal de prise de possession.

6. Certificate of M. de la Vallière, officer, and of Father Dablon, missionary, which prove that in the year 1661, the savages from the bay to the north of Canada, came expressly to Quebec, to confirm that they wished to continue living under the dominion of the French, and to ask for a missionary. The said Father Dablon was sent there by land, with the said M. de la Vallière, accompanied by five soldiers.

7. A commission from M. d'Avaugour then Governor of New France, dated the 10th May, 1663, conveying order and permission to M. Couture to remove, with five men, to the bottom of the bay to the north of Canada, consequent upon the requisition of the savages, who had returned to Quebec to ask for aid to conduct and assist them in their affairs. To this commission is added a certificate from the said M. Couture, conveying that he made this voyage in the year 1663, and erected anew upon the lands at the bottom of the said bay a cross, and the arms of the King engraved on copper, and placed between two plates of lead, at the foot of a large tree.

8. The procès verbal of M. de la Chesnay of the said taking of possession.

9. The letters patent of His Majesty, of the year 1663, by which he re-unites to the Crown the property of aforesaid lands, upon the cession of the said Company.

10. Other letters patent of the King, of the year 1664, by which His Majesty, having established a new Company in the West Indies, concedes New France to it, with the same extension that Louis the Thirteenth had conceded to the Company which was established in 1627.

11. A procès verbal made in the year 1671, by M. de St. Lussou, sent by order of the King to St. Marie du Sault, to the Outouacs, where resorted all the nations for more than a hundred leagues round, numbering seventeen, who willingly submitted to His Majesty's dominion. The said M. de St. Lussou then erected there the cross, and erected the arms of His Majesty. These seventeen nations included all those of the Outouacs, and of Lake Huron, those of Lake Superior, of all the lands in the north, and of Hudson's Bay, those of the Bay des Puans, and the Lake of the Illinois, as is fully proved by the said procès verbal of taking possession.

En l'année 1682 la Compagnie Française équippa deux vaisseaux à Québec, sur lesquels étaient Radisson et de Grosseliers, qui avaient obtenu en France le pardon de la trahison qu'ils avaient faite en l'année 1667, en introduisant les Anglais à la rivière qu'ils appellent Rupert et autres lieux circonvoisins dans la Baie du Nord du Canada.

Ces deux vaisseaux étant arrivés dans la dite baie descendirent à la rivière appelée Bourbon où ils avaient auparavant établis un commerce par terre avec les sauvages des environs qui les reçurent bien et leur facilitèrent le bâtiment d'un fort et d'un magasin qu'ils y établirent pour commencer leur commerce avec les dits sauvages.

Trois jours après cet établissement il y relâcha une barque de Boston, montée de dix hommes, que les Français reçurent comme amis, et quatre jours après on vit paraître au bas de la rivière un grand

*REPLY.

The French Company of Canada maintains, and will prove, that the English have had neither settlement nor factory in Port Nelson before the year 1682. Here is the fact which it certifies as true, and which will serve as an answer to that which is said alongside :

In the year 1682 the said French Company equipped two ships at Quebec, upon which were Radisson and Desgroselliers, who had obtained, in France, pardon for their treason in the year 1667, in introducing the English to the River, which they call Rupert, and to other places adjacent in the Bay to the north of Canada.

These two ships having arrived in the said Bay, descended the river named Bourbon, where they had before established a trade by land with the savages of the vicinity, who received them well, and facilitated their building a fort and a magazine, which they established there in order to begin their trade with the said savages.

Three days after this settlement, there put into port a boat from Boston, manned by ten men, whom the French received as friends, and four days after, in the river below, appeared a large ship from London, of which the English in the boat from Boston were afraid, because, as they have since confessed, they had no Commission. The captain of the said ship of London said he had come there to settle, upon which the French presented to him their

In the year 1682, M. De la Chesnay, and other Canadian merchants, equipped several ships and entered by force into the settlements and factories of the Company at Port Nelson, where they burned their houses, seized their goods and provisions, and ruined the factory which the Company had established there, and led as prisoners to Canada, Mr. Bridgar, Governor of the Factory, and sixteen other persons, subjects of His Majesty.

Besides, the Company lost at the same time the ship named Prince Rupert, commanded by Zachariah Gilham, with its cargo, provisions, and ammunition,—the said Gilham, and five other persons, having perished with the ship, and six other subjects of His Majesty having been also obliged, by this invasion, to withdraw into the woods, where they died of hunger and exposure. vaisseau de Londres dont les Anglais de la barque de Boston eurent peur parcequ'ils n'avaient point de commission, comme ils l'ont avoué depuis. Le capitaine du navire de Londres dit qu'il était venu pour s'y établir, sur quoi les Français lui présen-tèrent leur ancien droit sur ces terres et qu'outre cela ils s'y trouvaient premiers occupants.

Ils en étaient dans cette contestation lorsque les glaces poussées par la marée coupèrent les câbles 10 du vaisseau Anglais, le firent dériver en large, où il fit naufrage, les gens de l'équipage s'étant sauvés à terre dans des chaloupes, demandèrent du secours aux Français, qui le leur accordèrent, et leur donnèrent même une barque et des vivres pour se retirer où ils voudraient aller.

Une partie des Français qui étaient dans le dit fort de la rivière de Bourbon après avoir laissé les gens nécessaires pour la garde de leur poste et pour continuer leur commerce avec les sauvages s'en retournèrent à Québec avec la barque de Boston
20 et son équipage que le Gouverneur de la Nouvelle France fit relâcher, quoiqu'elle fut sans commission et par conséquent sujette à confiscation.

Messieurs les commissaires pourront juger par les faits ci-dessus dont plusieurs Anglais qui en ont connaissance rendront témoignage, si la compagnie d'Hudson's Bay est bien fondée dans les prétendus dommages et intérêts qu'elle doit avoir souffert en 30 cette occasion.

ancient right over these lands, and that moreover they were the first possessors.

They were in this dispute when the ice, driven by the tide, cut the cables of the English ship, caused her to drift from shore, where she was wrecked, the people manning her, getting safe to land in long-boats—asked help from the French, who gave it them, and even gave them a boat and the means to exist, that they might go where they wished.

One party of Frenchmen, who were in the said Fort of
protection of their station, and for continuing their trade with the savages, returned to Quebec with the Boston boat and crew, which the Governor of New France suffered to depart, although being without Commission and consequently subject to confiscation.

The Commissioners can judge, by the above facts, to which several Englishmen, who have knowledge of them, will give testimony, whether the Company of Hudson's Bay is well founded in the damages and interest which it claims to have suffered on that occasion.

It has already been urged in reply to this complaint, that the French ventured nothing against the English in 1684, and that these two ships having found the English

péri avec le vaisseau, et six autres sujets de Sa Majesté ayant été aussi obligés par cette invasion, de se retirer dans les bois où ils moururent de faim et de misère. Ces dommages étant supputés avec toute la modération possible montent du moins à plus de vingt-cinq mille livres sterling de perte aux intéressés.

En 1684 les Français, en vertu d'une commission du Sieur de la Barre, Gouverneur du Canada, entrèrent avec deux vaisseaux et cinquante hommes dans la dite baie et allèrent au Port Nelson, où ils entrèrent avec main-forte et y bâtirent un Fort audessus de celui de la factorie de la compagnie, et par ce moyen firent cette année le commerce avec les Indiens, ce qui est une perte aux intéressés du moins de dix mille livres sterling.

Au mois de juillet de l'année 1685 les deux vaisseaux susdits retournant au Canada rencontrèrent à l'embouchure des détroits un navire de la compagnie nommé le Marchand de Perpetuana, Edouard
Humes, maître, qui allait rendre son bord à Port Nelson avec sa charge et provisions, qui étaient destinées pour le service et pour l'avancement des établissements et factories des intéressés, et s'en étant emparé, ils l'emmenèrent à Québec, en Canada, avec le maître, l'équipage et quatorze passagers qui furent faits prisonniers, ce qui a causé une perte à la compagnie du moins de cinq mille livres sterling, comme aussi aux propriétaires du vaisseau,

In 1684 the French, by virtue of a commission from
M. de la Barre, Governor of Canada, entered the said
Bay with two ships and fifty men, and went to Port Nelson, which they entered with violence, and built a fort above that belonging to the Company's factory, and by this means took that year the Company's trade with the Indians, which is a loss to the parties concerned of at least ten thousand pounds sterling.

In the month of July of the year 1685, the two above-mentioned ships, returning to Canada, met, at the mouth of the Straits, one of the Company's ships, named the Merchant of Perpetuana, Edward Humes, master, who was going to cast anchor at Port Nelson, with his cargo and provisions which were destined for the service, and for the advancement of the settlements and factories belonging to the parties concerned, and having seized upon her, they brought her to Quebec in Canada, with the master, crew, and fourteen passengers, who were made prisoners, which caused a loss to the Company of at least five thousand pounds sterling, likewise to the owners of the ship, for the loss of their sailing vessel, freight, wages and clothes of the master and crew, of at least twelve hundred and fifty-five pieces.

In the year 1686 the French of Canada took and ruined, by violence, three forts and settlements belonging to the Company, situated at the bottom of the Bay, and three of Il a déjà été répondu à cette plainte que les Français n'ont rien entrepris contre les Anglais en 1684, et que ces deux vaisseaux ayant trouvé les Anglais établis par Radisson ne touchèrent ni à leurs forts ni à leurs habitations, quoiqu'ils les possédaient contre toute sorte de justice et de raison, et se contentèrent d'entrer dans une petite rivière nommée La Gargouse à demie lieu de là, où ils furent obligés de passer l'hiver, et ils s'en retournèrent ensuite à Québec.

Ce vaisseau n'a pu être pris par les Français, lesquels au contraire demandent la restitution des agrès, poudres et au munitions enlevées à un bâtiment Français.

La compagnie du Canada convient que n'ayant pu avoir raison en Angleterre ni en France de Milord Preston au sujet de l'enlèvement qui fut fait en l'année 1683 de son fort, magasin et marchandises à la rivière de Bourbon, le dit milord Preston ayant dit à leur agent que cette affaire ne regardait point le roi, son maître, ne s'agissant que des intérêts des marchands. Elle prit la résolution au mois de juin de l'année 1686, n'ayant point assez de vaisseaux pour reprendre son fort de la rivière de Bourbon, d'envoyer quatre vingt-dix hommes par terre aux forts Rupert, Monssipi et Chichitchouan, desquels ils se rendirent les maîtres et enlevèrent les marchandises qu'ils y trouvèrent pour répressailles de ce que la compagnie de la Baie d'Hudson leur avait enlevé au dit fort de la rivière de Bourbon en l'année 1683.

settled by Radisson, touched neither their forts, nor their habitations, although they possessed them contrary to all sort of justice or right, and contented themselves with entering a small river called La Gargouse (the Cartridge), half a league from thence, where they were forced to remain the winter, and then they returned to Quebec. This ship cannot have been taken by the French, who, on the contrary, demand the restitution of rigging, powder and other ammunition carried away from a French ship.

The Company of Canada agreeing that not being able to have satisfaction in England, nor in France, from Lord Preston, upon the subject of the seizure which took place in the year 1683, of its fort, magazine and commodities at the Bourbon River, the said Lord Preston having told its agent, that this matter was no concern of the King his master, as it related only to the interests of merchants, the Company formed the resolution in the month of June, in the year 1686, not having enough ships to retake its Fort on the Bourbon River, to send ninety men, by land, to the Forts Rupert, Monssipi and Chichitchouan, make themselves masters of them, and carry off the goods which they found there in retaliation for what the Hudson's Bay Company had carried off from the said Fort on the Bourbon River in the year 1683.

par la perte de leur bâtiment et de son fret, gages et habits du maître et de l'équipage, du moins de douze cent cinquante-cinq pièces.

En l'année 1686 les Français du Canada prirent et ruinèrent par force trois forts et établissements de la compagnie situés au fond de la baie et trois de leurs vaisseaux, avec une grande quantité d'effets, provisions et munitions que les intéressés avaient amassés pour s'en servir dans leur négoce durant plusieurs années. Ils enlevèrent aussi plus de cinquante mille peaux de castor et exposèrent à la merci des vagues dans un petit et vieux bâtiment tout ruiné environ cinquante sujets de Sa Majesté pour les faire périr misérablement en mer, outre plusieurs autres qu'ils tuèrent ou emmenèrent prisonniers. Cette perte se monte à plus de cinquante mille livres sterling.

their ships with a large quantity of goods, provisions and ammunition that the parties concerned had laid up to be of use for several years in their commerce. They carried away also, more than fifty thousand beaver skins, and exposed to the mercy of the waves, about fifty of His Majesty's subjects, in a small and unseaworthy boat, that they might perish miserably at sea, besides several others they killed or led away as prisoners. This loss amounts to more than fifty thousand pounds sterling.

Et à l'égard des pertes, dommages et intérêts soufferts de part et d'autre, elle consent volontiers qu'ils soient jugés et liquidés par messieurs les commissaires nommés par les deux rois. Il serait à souhaiter, pour l'utilité des deux compagnies, que leurs agents se tinssent chacun dans leurs postes pour faire leur commerce sans se traverser les uns les autres, ce procédé n'étant qu'à l'avantage des sauvages qui, par cet désunion, leur vendent plus cher leurs pelleteries.

Sa Majesté très-Chrétienne a donné en dernier lieu ses ordres pour empêcher les courses de ceux qu'on appelle Coureurs de Bois ou Gens sans aveu qui causent ces déordres. Lorsque Sa Majesté Britannique en aura donné de semblables de sa part, le commerce des deux compagnies en ira beaucoup mieux.

To which papers of the French Commissioners there was delivered the reply following :—

Reply to the answer given by the French Commissioners to the memorial concerning the right of His Majesty of Great Britain to the Bay and Straights of Hudson, and of the damages which His Majesty's subjects have sustained by the violence of the French, together with an answer to what is alleged by the French for justifying the right and title to that country and straits.

Reply to the answer of the French Commissioners to the Memorial touching Hudson's Bay. Sr. Sebastian Cabot discovered this part of America now in question, not by chance, but by particular Order from King Henry the seventh in quality of Great Pilot of England. It would be easy to prove the discovery and taking possession before the Spaniards had set footing in that country should they pretend to dispute the right thereof which they never yet undertook to do to the prejudice of His Majesty's Title.

It is not necessary to prove settlements made by the said Cabot or by Hudson, seeing the French never began to make any till the year 1582, above twelve years after the English had built several forts and established factories under the immediate protection of his present Majesty who was Governor thereof.

There is no intention of establishing a right by maps, yet the names given in them to places and countries are convincing arguments of the propriety.

It would seem very strange that had they some years before had any thoughts of making pretensions to this colony they would have permitted the printing maps at Paris (licensed by the King's authority, and dedicated to the Dauphin in France) in which are seen none but English names for all that part of America.

And as to the losses, damages, and profits on one side or the other, the Company willingly consents that they be judged and liquidated by Messrs. the Commissioners named by the two Kings. It is to be wished, for the benefit of the two companies, that their agents should keep each to his own station, to carry on trade without interfering one with the other, this quarrel being only to the advantage of the savages, who, by reason of the disunion, sell their skins much higher in price.

His Christian Majesty has given, in the last place, his orders to prevent the incursions of those so-called Coureurs de Bois or vagrants, who cause these disorders.

When His Britannic Majesty shall have given like orders, on his part, the trade of the two companies will be carried on much better.

De plus les Français du Canada ont depuis cinq ans négocié et fréquenté dans les limites mentionnés et prescrits dans la chartre de la compagnie se cachant aux environs, et espionnant leurs factoreries s'attirant ainsi indument le commerce des intéressés avec les naturels du pays, par où la compagnie perd du moins dix mille peaux de castor par an de la valeur de vingt mille livres sterling.

Le total des sommes susdites montent à cent onze mille deux cent cinquante-cinq livres sterling.

English reply to the preceding French answer.

Again, the French in Canada have, for five years, traded and frequented in the limits mentioned, and imposed in the Company's Charter, hiding themselves in the vicinity, and spying into their factories, thus unduly attracting to themselves the trade of the parties concerned with the natives of the country, by which means the Company loses at least ten thousand beaver skins a year, worth twenty thousand pounds sterling.

The whole amount of the aforesaid sums is one hundred and eleven thousand two hundred and fifty-five pounds sterling.

Transactions of English and French Commissioners, 1687.

It hath been already said that the French never made any apparent settlements in the Bay and Streights of Hudson before that which they made by force of arms in the year 1682.

If Captain Henry Hudson in the year 1610, Sr. Thomas Button, in 1612, and Captain Luke Fox, in 1631, have made notable voyages into those parts by the express commands of their Sovereigns, it is not to be imagined, but there have likewise been private voyages made within that time, in which as well as in the other, they did not only take possession, but continued there for some time, and left the usual marks of the sovereignty of their masters, besides the names which have not been since changed, there needed not at that time any other so considerable navigators to maintain His Majesty's right which other nations never disputed.

As to the Cross planted and erected by the English Captains, the truth of it is beyond all dispute, 10 this erecting of Crosses having been practised by the English in every reign as the Public Acts of all times do testify on like occasions, and hitherto nothing was ever usurped where the Cross was a certain mark of the taking possession.

English reply to the preceding
French
answer.

The name of the North Wales given by Sr. Thomas Button to the neighbouring country after a formal possession taken of Hudson's Bay and the Streights, doth sufficiently justify His Majesty's right to those parts, and leaves no room for other nations to make their pretensions. The expedition made in 1637, is alone solemn enough to establish the right of the English, and is not the less valid for the service they reaped therein from Grosseliers and Radisson said to be Frenchmen. The Venetians might as well pretend to the English Colonies, because Cabot made the discovery, and the Genoese might demand reason of Spain for their possessions in the Indies, because Colomb was a native of that 20 State. There are few expeditions or voyages, and scarce any conquests made where there is not a mixture of foreigners, 'tis sufficient that those people were not forced but hired into the service of the English nation.

It hath been made appear that the French never had any right to these countries, so that the Treaty of Breda makes nothing for them, but rather confirms His Majesty's right and title.

The right to the Bay and Streights of Hudson, being thus plainly made out, it will not be necessary to prove His Majesty's title to the river, coasts and Port Nelson, which are but members or a small part of the former inclosed within His Majesty's continent under those names. It is likewise needless to rehearse that in the year 1612, Captain Nelson going in person dwelt there till his death, leaving his name to that place; and that the French never came into that river or road before the year 30 1682, when they first began to build a small fort upon the ruins of his Majesty's subjects, after having by mere violence caused great loss and damage to the English nation. It is owned that the two French vessels came in the year 1682 to the western coasts of Hudson's Bay, called by the Indians Kakiakioway, the name of Bourbon being given it upon the spot. But it can at the same time be proved by authentic witnesses that these ships arrived after the vessel from Boston, whereof young Guilham was master, being his Majesty's subject who had no need of commission to verify his Majesty's title, and who, though he did not own the English Company, was nevertheless under the royal protection of England, and as a subject to the Crown, might establish the same right for his nation as the French ships pretended to do for theirs.

This late taking of possession on which there is no necessity of founding our right, was seconded 40 few days after by the arrival of another vessel from England, whereof Guilham the father was master, at which time Mr. Bridgard, Governor for the English Company, made known to the French his Majesty's right and title, and the privileges of the Company to the trade of that country. Notwithstanding which, these new comers overcame by strength or policy, both the father and the son, and destroyed or took their vessels with what they had on board, though in time of peace and within the possessions of the Crown of England, which never were disputed there before, even in time of war.

It is acknowledged that the grant or letters given by his Majesty to the English Company do not of themselves give any right, but the establishment of a Company privileged for so considerable a commerce, and the actual trading they have maintained with the inhabitants in pursuance of the said grant or letters, the forts they have built in several places, and the factories they have kept at so vast 50 a charge, do plainly shew that His Majesty was not deceived, but that the grant was founded in his own right which hath been yet further confirmed by this last taking of possession, and the continual trading of his subjects under his royal authority.

The English Company doth not think itself obliged to answer the damages sustained by the French in 1683, seeing what they did on that occasion was against the intrusion of the French, and in pursuance of the powers and privileges granted them by His Majesty for the trade of those parts.

What is here meant is little to the purpose either in regard to the last treaty or to his Majesty's former or present title, whereof the dispute, and proceeding by such ways in time of peace and under the shadow of a treaty of good correspondence, seem very extraordinary, and may prove of dangerous 10 consequence.

As to the titles produced by the French Commissioners, the commission given by King Francis the First is of no force in respect to these countries, there having never been any actual possession taken, and in effect all the other letters patents can signify nothing in prejudice to his Majesty's right, seeing no prince whatsoever can be hindered from giving to his Governors, Agents and Companies, such titles as he shall think best. Those given by Henry the Great and Louis the 13th, comprehend all that the Crown of England possesses or hath possessed on the Continent of America, together with several large islands, which nevertheless cannot in the least eclipse or diminish His Majesty's claim. Now, if the Commissioners should insist on titles of that nature, there would be no safety for His Majesty's subjects in America. Carolina, Pennsylvania, and other places possessed by His Majesty's 20 subjects even since the Treaty at Breda would be in danger, should the French think fit to surpriso them, after which it would not be difficult for them to allege imaginary discoveries, or even to prove that five or six French had passed that way before, and made some contract with the Indians. It is much more just and reasonable to rely upon actual discoveries, and upon possession taken in view of all the world, and which have continued for a long time together, and are too clearly proved by the violence of the French in their enterprise in the years 1682 and 1686.

As to the damages sustained by the subjects of France, the English Company maintain they are not obliged to indemnify them after so manifest an invasion.

It shall not be the fault of the Company of Hudson's Bay, if their agents and those of the Company of Canada do not keep within their respective bounds, the one pretending only to the trade 30 of the Bay and Streights above mentioned, whilst the other keeps to that of Canada—and that the forts, habitations, factories and establishments of the English Company be restored, and their limits made good as the first discoverers, possessors and traders thither, being the lawful marks of sovereignty, and this for above twelve years together before ever the French thought of attacking it or troubling the trade of the English within the bounds of the said Company, for otherwise how may subjects of England trust to a treaty of neutrality in case of a rupture, if even in time of peace they see themselves bereaved of their possessions and estates without such entire reparation and satisfaction as proceedings so violent and unjust do require.

Replique à la reponse donnée par Messrs. les Commissaires de France, au memoire des droits du Roi de la Grande Bretagne sur la Baie et Détroits d'Hudson, et des dommages que les sujets de Sa 4) Majesté ont souffert par la violence des Français, ensemble la reponse aux titres produits pour la justification des droits de la France sur le même pays et Détroits.

Replique à la reponse donnée par les Commissaires de France au Mémoire touchant Hudson's Baie. Le Chevalier Sebastien Cabot découvrit cette partie de l'Amérique dont il est question non pas à l'aventure mais par ordre expres du Roi Henry Sept en qualité de Grand Pilot d'Angleterre. Il serait facile de justifier cette decouverte et la prise de possession auparavant que les Espagnols eussent mis le pied dans le pays, s'ils s'avisent d'en vouloir disputer le droit, ce qu'ils n'ont jamais entrepris de faire au prejudice des titres de Sa Majesté. Il n'est pas necessaire de prouver des établissements faits par le dit Chevalier Cabot ou par Hudson, puisque les Français n'ont jamais commencé d'en faire avant l'année 1682, plus de douze ans après que les Anglais ont bâti plusieurs forts et établi des factories sous l'aveu et protection particulieré de Sa Majesté qui etait Gouverneur. On ne pretend pas s'établir un droit certain sur les cartes, 50 mais les noms qu'elles donnent généralement aux pays sont des marques convaincantes de la propriété.

Il paraîtrait fort étrange que si l'on avait en il y a quelques années la pensée de former des prétentions sur cette colonie on eût voulu permettre qu'on imprimât à Paris des Cartes dédiées au Dauphin de France même avec privilège du Roi très Chrétien dans lesquelles on ne voit que des noms Anglais pour toute cette partie de l'Amérique.

Il a déjà été dit que les Français n'ont jamais fait aucun établissement apparent sur la Baie et Detroits de Hudson avant eelui qu'ils firent à main armée an l'année 1682.

Si le Capitaine Henry Hudson en 1610, le Chevalier Thomas Button en 1612, et le Capitaine Luc Fox en 1631, on aït des voyages notables dans ces pays et Detroits par les ordres expres de leurs souverains, on ne doit pas conclure qu'il ne s'en est point fait d'autres particuliers. Les uns et les autres n'en prirent pas seulement possession, mais ils y demeurèrent quelque temps et y laissèrent des 10 marques ordinaires de la souveraineté de leurs maitres outre les noms qui n'ont point changé depuis. Il n'est pas nécessaire qu'il y ait eu dans ce temps là d'autres navigateurs si considerables pour soutenir le droit de Sa Majesté que d'autres nations n'ont pas disputé.

Pour ce qui est de la Croix plantée et relevée par les Capitaines Anglais, la verité en est incontestable et cette erection de Croix a été pratiquée par les Anglais dans tous les reignes comme les Actes publiés en font foi de tout temps et en pareilles occasions, et l'on n'a jamais auparavant usurpé sur les prises de possession dont les Croix etaient les marques certaines.

Le nom de North-Wales qu'imposa le Chevalier Thomas Button aux pays voisins après une prise de possession formelle de la Baie et Detroits de Hudson, justifie assez le droit de Sa Majesté sur ces pays contigus et ne laisse aucun moyen aux autres nations, d'y porter leurs pretensions, même au 20 delà sur les possessions de Sa Majesté, l'expédition qui se fit en 1667 est seule assez solemnelle pour etablir le droit des Anglais, et elle n'est pas moins legitime et valable pour le service qu'ils tirèrent des nommés de Grosseliers et Radisson qu'on dit être Français. Les Venitiens pretendront-ils aux colonies d'Angleterre parceque Cabot en fit la decouverte, et les Genoïs demanderont-ils raison de l'Espagne pour leurs possessions aux Indes, parceque Colomb etait natif de leur etat? Il ne se fait gueres ni d'expéditions ni de voyages ni même de conquête où il n'y ait quelque melange de nations étrangères. Il suffit que ces gens n'ont pas été forcés mais reçus à gages au service de la nation Anglaise.

Au reste on fait voir que les Français n'ont jamais eu aucun droit sur le Pays en question, de sorte que le Traité de Breda ne fait rien pour eux et justifie seulement le Droit de Sa Majesté. 30

Tellement que ces droits etant si bien établis sur la Baie et Detroits de Hudson il n'est pas nécessaire d'entrer dans les preuves de ses Titres sur la Rivière, Côte et Port de Nelson qui n'en est qu'un membre et une petite partie renfermée dans l'étendue du Domaine de Sa Majesté sous les sūdits noms. Il est meme inutile de redire qu'en l'année 1612 le Capitaine Nelson y etant en personne et y ayant demeuré jusqu'à sa mort, il y laissa son nom et que les Français ne sont jamais entrés dans cette Rivière et rade avant 1682 quand ils commencèrent d'y bâtir un petit fort sur les Ruines des Sujets de Sa Majesté et après leur avoir causé par des violences extraordinaires des pertes et dommages considerables à la Nation Anglaise. On avoue bien que les deux vaisseaux Français abordèrent en l'an 1682 à la Côte de l'Ouest de la Baie de Hudson appellée par les Indiens Kakiakioway, le nom de Bourbon y ayant été donné sur le champ. Mais on peut aussi prouver par des temoignages autentiques 40 que ces vaisseaux y arrivèrent après le Bâtiment de Boston, monté par le jeune Gilham sujet de Sa Majesté qui n'avait pas besoin de Commission pour faire valoir le Droit de Sa Majesté et qui, quoiqu'il ne reconnu point la Compagnie Anglaise etait toujours sous la Protection Royale d'Angleterre et comme sujet de la Couronne, pouvait établir le même droit pour Sa Majesté que les deux vaisseaux Français pretendaient faire pour la leur.

Cette nouvelle prise de Possession sur laquelle il n'est pas nécessaire d'établir son droit, fut encore secondée peu de jours après par l'arrivée d'un autre navire de Londres monté par Gilham le Père, quand le sieur Bridgard, Gouverneur pour la Compagnie Anglaise, declara aux Français les Titres de Sa Majesté et les Privileges de la Compagnie pour le commeree du dit Pays. Mais nonobstant tout cela nos nouveaux venus acablèrent ou par force ou par surprise les deux Capitaines Père et fils et ruinèrent ou prirent 50 deux vaisseaux avec tout ce qui restait dessus quoiqu'en temps de Paix et sur le Domaine de la Couronne d'Angleterre, qu'on n'avait jamais contesté auparavant même en temps de guerre.

On sait bien que la Concession ou Lettres du Roi octroyées à la Compagnie Anglaise ne peut simplement former un droit, mais l'Etablissement d'une Compagnie privilégiée pour un Commerce si considerable et le Commerce actuel qu'elle a entretenu avec les Naturels du Pays en consequence de cette concession. Les Forts qu'elle a bâtis en plusieurs endroits et les Factories qu'elle a maintenues si long temps avec de si grandes Depenses, font bien voir que Sa Majesté s'est fondée sur son ancien Droit qu'elle a cependant affermi par cette dernière possession et commerce continuel de ses sujets sous la faveur de son Autorité Royale.

10 La Compagnie Anglaise ne croit pas devoir tenir conte aux Français des dommages qu'ils souffrirent en l'an 1683 puisqu'elle n'a agi en cette occasion contre l'Intrusion des Français qu'en consequence des pouvoirs et Privileges donnés par le Roi pour le Commerce de tous ces Pays.

Il importe peu à l'interet de Sa Majesté à qui on se rapporte ou au dernier Traité ou à son ancien et premier droit, dont la Contestation et Procédures par des voies de fait en temps de Paix et sous l'ombre d'un Traité de bonne correspondance parraissent fort extraordinaires et peuvent avoir de fort dangereuses suites.

Pour Reponse aux Titres produits par Messrs les Commissaires de France, on dira que la Commission du Roi Français premier n'est d'aucune valeur à l'égard des pays en question, n'y ayant point eu de Possession actuelle et même toutes les autres Lettres patentes mentionnées ne peuvent rien opérer au prejudice de Sa Majesté puisqu'on ne saurait empêcher que tout autre Prince ne donne à ses Gouverneurs, Agents et Compagnies tels Titres qu'il lui plaira. Ceux que les Rois Henri le Grand et Louis Treize ont donné aux leurs, comprennent tout ce que la couronne d'Angleterre a possédé et possède en la Terre ferme de l'Amérique et plusieurs Grandes Iles ce qui pourtant ne peut rien diminuer du droit de Sa Majesté. Et si Messieurs les Commissaires insistoient sur des Titres de cette nature, il n'y aurait point de sureté pour les sujets de Sa Majesté dans l'Amérique, et il y aurait toujours à craindre pour la Caroline, la Pennsilvanie et autres pays possédés par les sujets d'Angleterre, même depuis le Traite de Breda, si les Français trouvaient seulement à propos de les surprendre après quoi il ne leur serait pas difficile d'alléguer des découvertes imaginaires et de prouver même que cinq ou six Français y auraient passé et fait quelque contrat avec les Indiens quelque temps auparavant. Il est bien plus juste de se fonder sur des découvertes actuelles et sur des prises de possession dont tout le monde est convenu et dont la Continuation pendant une longue suite de temps est trop clairement prouvée par la violence même des Français en ce qu'ils ont entrepris en l'année 1682 et 1686.

Pour ce qui est des Pertes souffertes par les sujets de la France, la Compagnie Anglaise soutient qu'elle n'est pas tenue à les en dedommager après une invasion si manifeste.

Il ne tiendra pas à la compagnie, de la Baie d'Hudson que ses agents et ceux de la Compagnie de Canada ne gardent chacun leurs Postes l'une ne pretendant qu'au Commerce de la Baie et Détroits sudits, pourvu que l'autre ne fasse de son côté que celui de Canada et que les Forts, Habitations, Factories et Etablissement de la dite Compagnie Anglaise soient restitués et ses Limites évacués en consideration de la première occupation, les poursuites et marques legitimes de souveraineté, et la Possession continuelle de plus de douze ans de suite des dits Etablissements avant que les Français eussent songés à les attaquer ou troubler le commerce des Anglais, dans les limites de la dite Compagnie puis qu'autrement comment les sujets d'Angleterre se peuvent-ils fier à un Traité de Neutralité en cas de Rupture, si en temps de paix même, ils se voyent dépouillés de leurs possessions et de leurs Biens sans une Reparation entière et satisfaction telle que demandent des Procédés si violents et si injustes.

Whereupon the French Commissioners delivered the Paper following:—

Anglaise le presuppose, au contraire elle ne veut se servir que de Titres authentiques et des Actes, qui justifient les prises de Possession des Terres, la construction des Forts et Magasins et l'Etablissement effectif des Compagnies qui y ont fait et continué un commerce actuel.

2°. C'est par ces sortes de preuves qu'on pretend détruire ce qui est avancé sans fondement par la Compagnie Anglaise qu'avant l'année 1682 les Français n'avaient aucun Etablissement sur les cotes de la Baie d'Hudsen.

3°. Messrs. les Commissaires pourront examiner comme ils sont suppliés de faire les Faits ci-après rapportés sur les Cartes et pièces que la Compagnie Française produit en benne ferme.

4°. Pour ne plus parler des Anciens Titres qui ont déjà été cités on se reduit à l'Etablissement de la Compagnie Française en l'année 1627 qui avait été précédée par d'autres. Elle fut autorisée par une Déclaration en forme d'Edit de Louis 13 qui lui concéda le Fort et Habitation de l'Edit du Mois de May, Québec avec tout le pays de la Nouvelle France dite Canada, jusques au Cercle Arctique par latitude et de Longitude depuis l'Isle de Terre-Neuve tirant à l'Ouest jusques au Lac dit la Mer douce et audelà plus les Terres et le long des Rivières qui passent et se déchargent dans le fleuve St. Laurens et qui les pertent à la mer.

5°. Et sur ce que les Anglais disent que cette concession comprend toute l'Amérique Septentrionale et que par là les Français seroient en droit de demander la Caroline, Pennsilvanie et autres pays qu'ils y habitent on leur répond que ces terres étant demeurées par le Traité de 1632, les Français n'y prétendent rien, comme les Anglais ne peuvent légitimement rien prétendre sur le Canada et autres Terres des cétés du Nord que les Français occupaient ou dont ils avaient prit possession avant le dit Traité.

6. Chacun sait que les Colonies ne peuvent s'établir dans toute leur étendue qu'avec le temps et les soins que ceux qui en ont la conduite y apportent.

7. La Compagnie Française ayant à établir des Missionnaires pour instruire les Sauvages dans la véritable Religion Chrétienne et des Forts et Factoreries pour son commerce, envoya d'abord les dits Missionnaires avec des Agents dans tous les lieux ou sa concession s'étendait pour en prendre possession, comme il sera justifié par les pièces et commença son Etablissement à Tadoussac, Québec, aux Trois Rivières et à Montreal, en attendant l'occasion de le pouvoir pousser plus avant comme elle a fait dans les suites.

make use of authentic titles, and deeds, which prove the taking possession of the lands, the building of forts, magazines, and the effectual settlement of the Companies, which have made and continued a real trade there.

2. It is by these kinds of proofs that it hopes to destroy that which is put forward, without foundation, by the English Company, that before the year 1682 the French had no settlement upon the coasts of Hudson Bay.

3. The Commissioners can examine, as they are requested to do, the facts hereafter referred to, upon the maps and plans which the French Company produce in good order.

4. Not to speak again of the ancient titles which have already been quoted, they fall back upon the settlement of the French Company, in the year 1627, which had been preceded by others. It was authorized by a declaration in the form of an edict, from Louis XIII., who conceded to it the fort and habitation of Quebec, with all the country of New France, called Canada, to the Arctic circle, by latitude and longitude from the island of Newfoundland, including to the west, to the lake, called the Fresh Sea, and far beyond the lands, and along the rivers which flow and empty themselves into the St. Lawrence River, which carries them to the Sea.

5. And as to what the English say, that this concession includes all Northern America, and that by it the French would have the right to claim Carolina, Pennsylvania and other countries which they inhabit there—it is answered that these lands having remained by the Treaty of 1632, the French lay no claim to them; as the English cannot legitimately lay claim to Canada and other lands on the northern coasts, which the French occupied, or of which they took possession, before the said Treaty.

6. Every one knows that the colonies can only in time establish themselves in all their extent, and with the attention which those who have the command give to them.

7. The French Company having to settle Missionaries to instruct the savages in the true Christian religion, and forts, and factories for its trade, sent first of all the said Missionaries with agents in all the places where its concession extended, to take possession of them, as it will be proved by the plans, and began its settlement at Tadoussac, Quebec, Three Rivers, and at Montreal—waiting the opportunity to be able to push farther, as it has done in the sequel.

9. Pour cet effet en l'année 1661 elle fit bâtir un Fort sur la Rivière Nemiskua appellée par les Anglais la Rivière des Français qui se dégorge dans le Fond de la Baie d'Hudson, à deux ou trois lieues de la Rivière appellée depuis Rupert.

10. Cette meme année 1661 les sauvages de la Baie vinrent expres à Quebec pour confirmer la Resolution qu'ils avoient ci devant prise de vivre sous la domination des Français. Ils demandèrent un Missionnaire pour les Instruire et un officier pour les conduire ce qui fut accordé.

11. En l'année 1663 les dits sauvages étant revenus à Quebec pour demander du secours, et quelques autres personnes pour les conduire et assister dans leurs affaires, le Sieur Couture Missionnaire y fut envoyé avec cinq hommes, lequel fit planter de nouveau sur les Terres du fond de la Baie une Croix et les Armes du Roi de cuivre.

12. En la dite année 1663 Sa Majesté reunint à sa Couronne la propriété de toutes les Terres de la Nouvelle-France sur la cession de la Compagnie qui comprenait toutes les Terres qui lui avoient été concédées par l'Edit de 1628.

13. En 1664 Sa Majesté établit une nouvelle Compagnie des Indes Occidentales à laquelle il conceda toutes les memes Terres qui avoient été concédés à la precedente Compagnie.

14. En 1665 Il fut établi un Fort et une Factorie sur le Lac appellé Superieur ou de Tracy.

8. In the year 1656, the company sent one of its ships, commanded by John Bourbon, round all the coasts in the north of Canada, entered and made new deeds of taking possession in the Bay, now called Hudson, but, as it was more convenient to the said company to make side, rather than the sea side, because of the ease it would have, by means of the lake and rivers, for transporting skins to Quebec, it then made no settlement on the side of the sea, in the said Bay, having always in view to arrive at it by degrees, as it has done since.

9. To this effect, in the year 1661, the company built a fort upon the River Nemiskau, called by the English the Frenchmen's River, which empties itself into the lower part of Hudson Bay, two or three leagues from the river since named Rupert.

10. This same year, 1661, the savages of the Bay came expressly to Quebec, to ratify the resolution they had before taken, to live under the Dominion of the French. They asked for a missionary to teach them, and an officer to conduct them, which was granted.

11. In the year, 1663, the said savages returning to Quebec, asking for help and other persons to conduct and assist in their matters, M. Couture, missionary, was sent with five men, and he erected anew upon the lands at the foot of the Bay, a cross and the arms of the King engraved upon a copper plate.

12. In the said year, 1663, His Majesty re-united to himself the property of all lands of New France, upon the cession of the company, which included all the lands which had been conceded to it by the Edict of 1628.

13. In 1664 His Majesty established a new company of the Western Indies, to which he yielded all the same lands which had been conceded to the former company.

14. In 1665, a fort and a factory were established upon the lake called Superior, or Tracy.

Treaty of 22nd May, 7th July, 13th December, 1665.

Procès verbal of taking possession, October 17th, 1666.

Procès verbal of taking possession, 1671.

18. In 1672, Father Albanel, missionary, and M. de St. Simon, sent by order of the King, took possession anew of the lands which lie between the River St. Lawrence, to Davis and Hudson's Strait. They visited the Nemiskan River, called by the English the Frenchman's River, where the savages generally assembled to sell their skins. The said Father Albanel and the said M. de St. Simon erected there a cross, and engraved the arms of His Majesty, with the consent of Captain Kiaskou, head of all the savages who inhabited the North Sea and Hudson Bay. They then visited the Minahiguskat River, where they performed the same action, with the consent of Captain Sisibahourat, chief of the Mustasirinins.

19. In the year 1673, there was built a fort at Catarakio, upon Lake Ontario, another above the Lake of the Illinois, and another upon the Divine River, which the French named the Fort of Broken-Heart, another upon the Tabitibis River, one on the Piscoutagany Lake, and another between the Autontibis and the Assenipoels. With these forts were established everywhere factories for receiving the skins from the savages.

The French Company, having thus strongly established its commerce on the land side, and having constructed several ships for extending its navigation—built a fort and a warehouse upon the Bourbon River, near Port Nelson.

20. It has been already said that the English had taken no settlement in that place before the said year 1682 ; that there came a ship from Boston, for shelter from the bad weather, and some days after a ship from London put into port, and

15. En la meme année 1665 toutes les Nations Iroquoises se mirent par un Traité solennel sous la protection de Sa Majesté.

16. En l'année 1666 le Sieur du Bois prit possession au nom de Sa Majesté de tous les Forts des Iroquois.

17. En 1671, le Sr de la St-Lusson fut envoyé par ordre du Roi à Ste-Marie du Sault chez les Outaouacs, où se rendirent les 17 Nations qui habitent les Cotés de la Baie, lesquelles se soumirent volontairement à la Domination de Sa Majesté. Ces 17 Nations comprennent celles des Outaouacs, des Lacs de Huron et Superieur des Terres du Nord et de la Baie d'Hudson, celle de la Baie des Puans et du Lac des Illinois.

18. En 1672 le Pere Albanel Missionnaire, et le Sieur de St. Simon envoyés 10 par ordre du Roi prirent de nouveau Possession des Terres qui se trouvent depuis le Fleuve St Laurens, jusqu'au Detroit, de Davis et d'Hudson. Ils se rendirent à la Rivière de Nemiskau, appelée par les Anglais la Rivière des Français où les sauvages s'assemblèrent ordinairement pour vendre leurs Pelleteries. Le dit Père Albanel et le dit Sieur de St-Simon y plantèrent une croix et y arborèrent les armes de Sa Majesté du consentement du Capitaine Kiaskou, chef de tous les sauvages qui habitent la mer du Nord et la Baie d'Hudson. Ils allèrent ensuite à la Rivière de Minahigwskat où ils firent la même chose du consentement du capitaine Sisibahourat, Chef des Mustasirinins.

19. En l'année 1673 il fut bâti un Fort à Catarakio sur le Lac Ontario, un autre au haut du Lac des Illinois et un autre sur la Rivière Divine, que les Français nomment le Fort de Cœur Cœur, un autre sur la Rivière de Tabitibis, un sur le Lac de Piscoutagany et un autre entre les Outoulibis et les Assenipoels.

On établit avec ces Forts des Factories partout recevoir la pelletterie des sauvages.

La Compagnie Française ayant ainsi établi solidement son commerce du côté de Terre et ayant fait construire plusieurs vaisseaux pour étendre sa Navigation fit bâtir un Fort et une Factorie sur la Rivière appelée Bourbon auprès du Port Nelson.

20. Il a été déjà dit que les Anglais n'avaient pris aucun Etablissement en ce lieu là avant la dite année 1682, qu'il y vint une barque de Boston pour se mettre à couvert du mauvais temps et quelques jours après un vaisseau de Londres y relâcha et ses cables ayant été coupés par les Glaces y fit naufrage et bien loin que les Anglais y ayant été maltraités par les Français ils y ont reçu toute sorte de secours. Ce sont des Faits constants et faciles à prouver.

21. Messieurs les Commissaires jugeront si après toutes ces preuves produites en bonne forme la Compagnie Anglaise a raison de dire que les Français n'ont eu aucune connaissance de ce Pays là avant l'année 1682.

23. A l'égard de ce que la dite Compagnie dit pour autoriser son Etablissement dans la Rivière appellée Rupert, qui est dans le fond de la Baie, qu'elle en a obtenu des lettres de concession de Sa Majesté Britannique, en 1670 la Compagnie Française répond que est Etablissement n'a pu être fait à son préjudice dans les maximes même de la Compagnie Anglaise, qui avance que les Concessions des Rois ne prevalent point contre une première Possession puisqu'il est constant que la dite Compagnie Française prouve une possession plus ancienne en ce même lieu là. Ce qui est confirmé par la conduite des Anglais, lesquels pour s'y venir établir ont été obligés de s'y faire conduire par les Grosseliers et Radisson, Habitants de Canada et Domestiques de la Compagnie Française.

23. Et à l'égard de leur paisible Possession sans y avoir été troublés on justifie qu'aussitôt que les Français en ont eu connaissance, Monsieur de Frontenac pour lors Gouverneur de la Nouvelle-France en fit ses plaintes au chef de la Factorie des Anglais qui répondit qu'il n'était là que pour fort peu de temps et qu'il ne troublerait en rien le commerce des Français, de quoi le dit sieur de Frontenac ayant rendu compte à Sa Majesté, Elle en fit ses plaintes à l'Ambassadeur de Sa Majesté Britannique qui était pour lors en France, lequel promit d'en écrire pour savoir la vérité du fait, mais diverses autres affaires plus importantes étant survenues entre les deux Rois, on remit à régler celle là dans un autre temps, ainsi cet Etablissement ayant été fait depuis le Traité de Breda, et ayant été convenu en dernier lieu qu'il serait nommé des commissaires de part et d'autre pour régler les affaires de l'Amérique qui sont en contestation, il n'y a rien qui empêche les Français de demander avec justice la possession de toutes ces Terres comme leur appartenant de Droit.

24. L'ancienne possession et le Droit de premier occupant sur toutes les Terres des environs de la Baie d'Hudson suffisent pour autoriser la plainte que les Français font d'avoir été dépossédés dans un temps de Paix de l'Etablissement fait par eux sur la Rivière de Bourbon près le Port de Nelson et leurs magasins pillés sans que le sieur de Comporte, l'un des Intéressés en la Compagnie Française de Canada, qui vint exprès en France et en Angleterre pour en demander raison, put obtenir aucune justice ni d'autre réponse sinon que c'était une affaire entre marchands. C'est ce qui a obligé la Compagnie Française de prendre les Forts qu'elle a trouvés occupés par les Anglais, et elle continue à demander la paisible possession des Terres qui sont sur les cotés de la Baie du Nord et la restitution du Fort, Magazin, et Marchandises qui leur ont été pris en 1663 par les Anglais à Nelson.

her cables being cut by the ice, was wrecked there, and far from the English being ill-used by the French they received all kinds of succour. These are well grounded and easily proven facts.

21. Messrs. the Commissioners will judge if, after all these proofs, produced in good order, the English Company is correct in saying that the French knew nothing about that country before the year 1682.

22. As to what the said Company says to authorize its settlement on the River, called Rupert, which is at the end of the Bay, that it obtained letters of Concession from His Britannic Majesty in 1670, the French Company replies that this settlement cannot have been made to its prejudice even in the maxims of the English Company, which advance, that the Concessions of Kings does not prevail over a first possession, since it is certain that the said French Company proves a more ancient possession in this same place, which is strengthened by the conduct of the English, who, in order to settle there, were obliged to be guided by Desgrosseliers and Radisson, inhabitants of Canada, and servants in the employ of the French Company.

23. And with respect to their peaceable possession, without having been disturbed there, it is certain, that as soon as the French had knowledge of it, M. de Frontenac, for the time being Governor of New France, made complaint to the Chief of the English Factory, who replied that he was there for only a very short time, and that he would in no way disturb the French trade; upon which the said M. de Frontenac, having rendered an account to His Majesty, he made complaints to His Britannic Majesty's Ambassador, who was then in France, who promised to write to know the truth of the matter; but many other important matters intervening between the two Kings, the regulating of this was put off to another period, so, this settlement having been made since the Treaty of Breda, and having been finally determined that Commissioners should be appointed on each side to regulate the affairs of America which are in dispute, there is nothing to hinder the French from demanding with justice the possession of all these lands as belonging to them by right.

24. The ancient possession, and the right of a first occupant upon all the lands in the vicinity of Hudson Bay, is sufficient to warrant the complaint made by the French, of having been dispossessed in a time of peace, of the settlement made by them upon the Bourbon River, near Port Nelson, and their magazines pillaged without M. de Comporte, one of the parties interested in the French Company of Canada, who came expressly to France and England for an ex-

25. De tout ce qui est contenu ci dessus il resulte que les Français ont de temps en temps fait des Etablissements nouveaux, et se sont etendus dans les lieux qu'ils pretendent leur appartenir, qu'ils n'ont jamais été empêchés de le faire ni troublés que lorsqu'on est venu les depousseder par violence et voie de fait, d'un lieu où ils avaient autant de Droit de s'établir que dans les autres Forts dont la possession ne leur est pas contestée ni pretendue par les Anglais. Que cette violence faite par les Anglais n'a pas dû être exercée en pleine paix.

Que ce qui a été fait par les Français dans la prise des Forts des Anglais en l'année dernière, est de droit naturel, par lequel il est permis de repousser la Force par la Force et d'agir par voie de fait contre ceux qui s'en servent les premiers.

In answer to which His Majesty's Commissioners delivered the paper following:

ANSWER to the last paper delivered in behalf of the French Company of Canada touching the Rights and demands of the English Company of Hudson's Bay. 10

English
answer to the second French
Memorial.

The Company of Canada having already waved the establishment of a Right to Hudson's Bay and Streights from the mere Grants and Concessions of their Kings, which indeed cannot operate to the prejudice of others that have the Right of Discovery and continued possession on their side. It is again averred that His Majesty's subjects only are possessed of such a Right to the coasts, bays and streights of Hudson, and whatever chance voyage may have been made or Missions sent for the sake of religion with soldiers to protect the missionaries, the same could not bring any prejudice to the right of His Majesty's subjects deduced from the time of the first discoveries of America, and that if before the year 1682 any establishments were really made by any other nation upon the said bay and streights (which is yet denied and not proved by the French), yet the same (if any such will appear) subsequent to those of the English, and so be manifest invasions of His Majesty's Sovereignty and property of his subjects. 20

Mention has been made of Carolina and Pennsylvania only to show the insufficiency of grants and concessions not preceded or followed by discoveries and rightful possession, and His Majesty is too much concerned in the consequence of such a position to esteem it of the least validity since at the same time (as hath been already alleged), His Majesty's plantations aforementioned, and other provinces and countries in America would be laid open to the pretensions and like invasions of the French, founded upon so notable a precedent as this would be, if the Crown of England should upon such a suggestion, part with so considerable an extent of her dominions and sovereignty (de ses domaines) nor does the Treaty of 1632, any ways distinguish the rights of England to any lands or possessions in America, as is alleged in the French paper, that treaty concerning Canada barely, and not any countries either southward or northward, which needed no elucidation or concession of the French to establish the English rights, and it will be sufficient answer to the greatest part of the French paper to assert that the country of Canada and that of Hudson's Bay are two different provinces, and have no relation but that of neighbourhood as may appear by ancient and modern maps, nor did the English when they were possessed of Canada itself esteem the country of Hudson's Bay as appertaining to it, and it is to be hoped that it will not now be reputed a dependence of Canada, which would be a pretension not to be advanced between two Crowns that entertain so good a correspondence together, and which would 40

planation, being able to obtain any justice, or other reply, than that it was a matter between merchants only. This is what obliged the French Company to take the forts it found occupied by the English, and it continues to demand the peaceful possession of the lands which are upon the coasts of the North Bay, and the restitution of the fort, magazines and commodities which were taken from it in 1663 by the English at Nelson.

25. Of all which is contained above, it remains that the French have from time to time made new settlements, and have extended into places which they assert belong to them, that they have never been hindered from so doing nor disturbed, until they were dispossessed by violence and unlawful means from one place where they had as much right to settle themselves, as in the other forts of which their possession is neither contested nor disputed by the English. That this violence exerted by the English, should not have been so exercised in a time of peace.

That which was done by the French in taking the English forts in the past year, is a natural right, by which it is allowable to repulse force by force, and to act by unlawful means against those who make use of them first.

quite contrary to the end of the late Treaty of Neutrality, since instead of preserving peace in time of war it will be looked upon as the occasion of the worst effects of war in the time of peace, if so notorious an invasion should remain unpunished or satisfaction refused for the losses that have been sustained.

All that are acquainted with the nature of the Indians well know their wandering and variable dispositions, and it is easy to produce on His Majesty's part submissions and capitulations of those people, which do very much effect the French interest and pretensions in those parts, but it is enough to say that no action or resolution of those savages can alter an established right. The English Company do not pretend that the French had no knowledge of the Bay and Straights of Hudson before the year 1682, being very sensible that the French have of a long time been acquainted with and envied the prosperity of the trade and settlement of the English, and often attempted to undermine then in their commerce with the Indians, which nevertheless they could never accomplish in any part till the assault made upon His Majesty's subjects in 1682 which is averred to be the first pretended settlement of the French upon the bay after twelve years' uninterrupted possession of the English Company of that name.

It is a certain mark that the French stand in need of arguments to maintain their right, since they insist upon the service of des Grosseliers and Radisson made use of and paid by the English, when it is well known that the most famous conquests and discoveries of the world have in all times been carried on with the help of strangers, without diminution of the right of the Prince, under whose banner the same was made.

It may well be that Monsr. Frontenac might have some complaint of the English, but did the French ever openly question the establishment of the English in the bay, or interrupt their trade, till the year 1682? The possession of this trade is of too great a consequence to have been passed in silence upon any such account for so long an interval of time as twelve years. It will rather be believed that the French did not think it seasonable, for other reasons, to make their advances, de proche et proche et s'étendre sur les Lieux appartenants à la Compagnie Anglaise, till the year 1682. Upon further reflection it is to be hoped the French will disown this method of acquisition and taking possession which is so injurious to good neighbourhood and so contrary to the intent and meaning of treaties.

Finally, His Majesty's subjects refer themselves to all the constitutions of right that are allowed by treaties and the law of nations, and could as well as the French have availed themselves even of the law of nature (du droit naturel) if they had not hoped to have received from the justice of the most Christian King (who hath disowned the whole proceedings of his subjects in this affair) entire satisfaction of the injury and losses they have suffered by the invasion of his subjects, which has been often demanded by the reiterated memorials of His Majesty's envoy in the Court of France and is now expected with impatience, lest, by the Company's being kept out of possession of their property by continued delays, their commerce in those parts may suffer irreparable damage.

La Compagnie de Canada ne pretendant plus de s'établir un droit sur la Baie et Detroits d'Hudson par les simples concessions et Lettres Patentes de ses Rois lesquelles ne peuvent véritablement porter aucun préjudice à ceux qui ont de leur côté le Droit de la Découverte et d'une possession continue, on sentient toujours que les sujets de Sa Majesté sont seuls en possession de ce droit sur les cotés, Baie et Detroits d'Hudson, et que tous les voyages qui peuvent y avoir été faits par hasard, ou les missions qu'on y a envoyés pour la religion avec des soldats pour protéger et seconder les missionnaires ne peuvent non plus avoir alteré le droit des sujets de Sa Majesté qui leur a été acquis depuis le temps des premières découvertes de l'Amérique. Et que si même avant l'année, 1682. Il a été faite quelque Etablissement par aucune autre nation sur la dite Baie et Detroits dont on ne demeurera d'accord, qu'après avoir vu les preuves de la Compagnie Française.

maitres et doivent par consequent être reputées pour des attentats manifestes à la Souveraineté de Sa Majesté et à la propriété de ses sujets.

Il a été fait mention de la Caroline et de la Pensilvanie, pour faire voir seulement, l'insuffisance et l'invalidité des concessions et actes publiques qui n'ont été précédés ni suivis d'aucunes découvertes valables ni juste possession.

Une telle possession touche de trop près l'interet de Sa Majesté pour la croire tant soit peu bien fondée puisqu'il faudrait en meme temps comme on a déjà dit que les sud-est plantations de Sa Majesté les autre provinces et pays de l'Amérique fussent toujours sujets aux pretentions et à de pareilles invasions des Français qui auraient encore pour fondement un exemple aussi considerable que celui-ci le serait, si pour des raisons comme celles-ci la couronne d'Angleterre voulait abandonner une si grande étendue de ses terres et domaines.

French copy of the preced-
answer.

Le traité de l'année 1632 ne fait aucune distinction ou concession des droits des Anglais sur aucune pays ou provinces de l'Amérique comme il est rapporté par le Memoire Français. Ce traité là concernant purement le Canada sans qu'il y soit parlé d'aucun autre pays soit du côté du sud, ou du côté du nord, n'étant pas besoin d'éclaircissement la dessus ni de concession des Français pour affermir le droit de Sa Majesté et l'on aura suffisamment répondu à la plus grande partie du mémoire des Français en leur soutenant par des preuves incontestables que le pays du Canada et celui de la Baie d'Hudson sont deux provinces differentes et qu'elles n'ont aucun rapport entre elles, horsmis celui du voisinage, comme on le peut voir par les cartes anciennes et modernes, les Anglais même lorsqu'ils étaient en possession du Canada, n'ayant jamais reputé les côtés, de la baie et detroits d'Hudson pour une partie du Canada. Et il y a aussi lieu d'esperer que ces pays là ne seront point maintenant censes de la dependance ce qui serait assurément une sorte de pretention qu'on ne doit point attendre de l'amitié et bonne correspondance des deux couronnes et qui detruirait entièrement l'intention des derniers traités de neutralité d'autant qu'au lieu de maintenir la paix en temps de guerre, il aurait produit à l'égard des Anglais les plus fâcheux effets de la guerre en temps de paix. Si une invasion si manifeste demeurerait impunie et qu'on refusât de faire satisfaction aux sujets de Sa Majesté pour les dommages qu'ils ont souffert.

Tous ceux qui ont eu affaire avec les Indiens savent combien ils sont inconstants et variables, et il serait facile de produire des soumissions et des capitulations de ces peuples faites en faveur de Sa Majesté qui touchent de fort près l'interet et les pretensions des Français en cette partie du monde, mais il suffira de dire que ni les actions ni les resolutions de ces Sauvages ne peuvent blesser un droit établi.

La Compagnie Anglaise ne pretend pas de dire que les Français n'ont eu aucune connaissance de la baie et detroits d'Hudson avant l'an 1682 etant bien persuadée que par la connaissance qu'ils en ont eue, et l'envie qu'ils ont portée depuis longtemps à la prosperité des Anglais en ces pays là ils ont souvent cuerpris de soustraire et ruiner leur commerce avec les Indiens auquel pourtant ils n'ont jamais peu porter une atteinte considerable avant l'année 1682 qu'on croit pouvoir justifier etre le premier pretendu etablisement des Français sur la Baie d'Hudson, qui ne fut fait qu'après la Compagnie Anglaise de ce nom avait joui d'une possession paisible pendant douze ans consecutifs.

Il parait evidemment que les Français ont une grande disette de raisons pour soutenir leur droit, puisqu'ils insistent sur les services de Grosseillers et de Radisson que les Anglais ont employés et payés dans les occasions, d'autant qu'il est très certain que les plus fameuses conquêtes et découvertes qui ayant été faites dans le monde, ont été de tout temps conduites avec l'aide des étrangers, sans que cela ait en rien diminué les droits du Prince sous le Bannière duquel elles ont été faites.

Il peut etre vrai que Monsieur de Frontenac ait fait quelques plaintes contre les Anglais, mais les Français ont ils jamais contesté ouvertement l'etablisement et le droit des Anglais dans la Baie d'Hudson ou troublé leur commerce avant l'an 1682 la possession de ce commerce était d'une trop grande consequence pour avoir été oubliée ou passée sous silence pendant douze ans pour les considerations qu'on allegue.

Il est bien plus juste de croire que les Français n'ont pas jugé pour d'autres raisons qu'ils fut temps encore de faire leurs établissements de proche en proche ni de s'étendre sur les lieux appartenant à la Compagnie Anglaise on espère qu'après que les Français auront fait de plus grandes réflexions, ils se deporteront de ces manières d'acquisition et de prise de possession si préjudiciables au bon voisinage et si contraires à l'intention et à la nature des traités.

Enfin les sujets de Sa Majesté s'en rapportent à toutes les constitutions de droit qui sont établies par les traités et par le droit des gens, ils auraient pu, encore aussi bien que les Français se servir du droit naturel, s'ils n'avaient pas espéré de recevoir de la Justice du Roi Très Chrétien une entière satisfaction des forts et des pertes qu'ils ont soufferts par l'invasion des Français qui a été sans l'aveu de leur Souverain. Cette justice a souvent été demandée par les mémoires reiterés de l'envoyé de Sa Majesté à la Cour de France, et on l'attend presentement avec impatience, afin qu'après des procédés si violents, les sujets de Sa Majesté qui se trouvent destitués de leur biens ne souffrent pas de plus longs delais des dommages irreparables.

Whereupon His Majesty's Commissioners having fully debated the matter with the Commissioners of France on the 10th of August, 1687, their Lordships desire the said French Commissioners to make some proposal in writing to be sent to Hudson's Bay Company for their answer therein, which proposal was accordingly delivered as follows :*

Les deux compagnies de l'Amérique septentrionale ne pouvant convenir ensemble de la propriété de la Baie d'Hudson, il semble que pour parvenir à un accommodement convenable aux deux nations la Compagnie Française pourrait rendre les Trois Forts qu'elle prit l'année dernière à la Compagnie Anglaise au fond de la baie et que la dit compagnie rendit en même temps à la Française le fort et magasins de Nelson qui furent pris sur les Français en l'année 1683.

Et qu'en conséquence de cet accommodement il fut réglé et fixé des limites dans toute cette partie de l'Amérique en sorte que les deux compagnies ne pussent empiéter à l'avenir l'une sur l'autre et que chacune de son côté fit un commerce utile sans se troubler et sans aucun des embarras qui ne sont que trop souvent arrivés au préjudice des sujets de deux nations.

La compagnie d'Hudson Bay n'a jamais fait un commerce si utile que pendant le temps qu'elle n'occupait que les trois Forts du Fond de la Baie, les Pelleteries y sont à beaucoup meilleur marché parce que les sauvages de ce côté-là n'ont pas tant de chemin à faire pour les transporter jusqu'au bord de la mer aulieu que d'un côté du Port Nelson, il faut que les sauvages viennent de fort loin. Cet échange est l'expédient qui parait le plus convenable pour l'avantage des deux compagnies dans la Résolution où les deux Rois sont de ne se point céder l'un à l'autre la propriété de la Baie entière.

Si la compagnie Anglaise a quelque autre expédient à proposer qui puisse mieux convenir aux deux Nations sur se fondement qu'aucun des deux Rois ne veut céder la propriété de la dite Baie, Elle en peut dresser un mémoire qui sera de nouveau examiné par Messrs les Commissaires.

*The two Companies of Northern America not being able to agree together upon the Hudson Bay property, it appears that in order to arrive at a convenient accommodation to the two nations, the French Company should give up the three forts it took last year from the English Company at the bottom of the Bay, and that the said Company should give up at the same time to the French the fort and magazines of Nelson, which were taken from the French in the year 1683.

And, in consequence of this arrangement, it was resolved and fixed in the limits in all that part of America, so that the two companies could not in the future encroach one upon the other, and that each on its side should make a beneficial trade without hindering the other, and without any troubles which only too often occur to the prejudice of the subjects of the two nations.

The Hudson Bay Company never made so successful a trade, as during the time it occupied only three forts at the bottom of the Bay. The skins there are much cheaper, because the savages of that side have not so great a distance to travel in order to transport them to the sea side, whereas on the side of Port Nelson, the savages are obliged to come a great distance. This exchange is the expedient which seems the most suitable for the advantage of the two Companies, in the resolution which the two Kings maintain not to yield one to the other the whole property of the Bay. If the English Company has any other arrangement to suggest, which may better suit the two nations, with this foundation, that neither King will yield the property of the said Bay, it can prepare a memorial, which shall be examined anew by Messrs. the Commissioners.

To which the Hudson's Bay Company returned the answer following:—

The Hudson's Bay Company having received a paper containing a proposal of an expedient made by the French Commissioners to exchange the three forts surprised by the French the last year in the bottom of the bay, for the Fort and Factory of Port Nelson, altho' the said proposal in it hath neither justice, reason nor equity, and therefore can expect no formal answer, yet that they may know the said English Company's Resolutions, they answer.

That the Hudson's Bay Company having made out His Majesty's right and title to all the bay within Hudson's Streights, with the rivers, lakes and creeks therein, and the lands and territories thereto adjoining, in which is comprehended Port Nelson as part of the whole, and the said Company's right and property being thereby established past all dispute, and to the satisfaction of the Lords Commissioners appointed by His Majesty to examine this matter; it cannot but seem strange and dissonant from all reason that the French Commissioners should now come to offer the said Company their own, which they took by violence in exchange for another part of their own, which the French had never had any colour of right to.

Answer of the Hudson's
Bay Company to the
proposal.

That both places by a proper and genuine construction of the last treaty of the year 1686, as well as by ancient right, must abide and belong to His Majesty in Great Britain.

That the Hudson's Bay Company having evidently made out His Majesty's right and consequently their own, and done all which hath been required on their parts, having nothing more now but with all dutiful submission to wait and expect His Majesty's Justice, for the restitution of their places, and full satisfaction for their damages as they have been exhibited to the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners.

And whereas the said paper doth so often repeat that both Kings are resolved not to part with the entire propriety of the bay, the right being apparently on His Majesty's side as much as any [of] his other plantations in America; this seems only a stiffness in the French to try to get that by treaty which they can no way make out by right.

But the said English Company cannot but hope better from the justice of His Most Christian Majesty, who having declared his disapproval of his subjects' proceedings in this affair in so plain a case, will not infringe the good correspondence that is between the two Crowns.

Upon the whole matter the Hudson's Bay Company cannot accept a proposal of an expedient so much against His Majesty's Honour and their own just right, that after an expense of above two hundred thousand pounds, and many years' establishment (besides the injuries of above one hundred thousand pounds) that the French should come now to reap where the English have sowed, and have the confidence to propound to share the better half of their right and property with them. But the said English Company for obtaining their right and full satisfaction, do humbly cast themselves upon His Majesty's royal favour and protection.

Most humbly representing to His Majesty that in case the French be suffered to be sharers in the Bay and Streights of Hudson, or be permitted to trade therein, the Company cannot any longer subsist, but must inevitably be dissolved; and by the monopoly of the French, a trade of so great importance to this nation be utterly lost, having been hitherto wholly supported by His Majesty's favour to them in the enjoyment of the sole trade of the bay.

REPORT OF THE ENGLISH COMMISSIONERS TO THE KING.

Whereupon their Lordships agree to report their opinions to His Majesty as follows:

Report of the English Commissioners to the King,
ber, 1687.

We your Majesty's Commissioners appointed to treat with the Ambassador and Envoy Extraordinary of his most Christian Majesty concerning the differences that have happened between Your Majesty and the French in America, have had frequent conferences with the said Ambassador and Envoy Extraordinary, in order to obtain satisfaction for the damages your Majesty's subjects have lately sustained from the French in Hudson's Bay, with restitution of the three fort-50 ences depending between the two Crowns, and as to the business of the Hudson's Bay having already acquainted Your Majesty with our proceedings therein, We do further add our humble opinion, that as it plainly appears Your Majesty and your subjects have a right to the whole bay and straits of Hudson, and to the sole trade thereof, so it may be fit for Your Majesty, to support the company of Hudson's Bay in the recovery and maintenance of their right since otherwise that trade will be totally lost and fall into the hands of the French, if they be permitted to continue in the possession of those forts, or of any fort or place of trade within the said bay or straits.

Whereas the French Commissioners have declared that they are ready to do all that is necessary for the regulation of limits between the dominions of both Crowns in America, we humbly propose that Your Majesty be pleased to order and empower us to treat with them for the adjusting the same, which may be the best means to remove the occasion of differences that happen between the two nations.

All which is most humbly submitted, the 16th of November, 1687.

Memorandum. His Majesty's Commissioners and the Commissioners of France, appointed to treat concerning differences in America being met, their Lordships delivered to the French Commissioners a General Memorial declaring his Majesty's pleasure touching the several matters in difference and that his Majesty had empowered them to treat concerning the settling of limits in America whereupon the French Commissioners do promise to return an answer to such points wherein they are enabled so to do and to receive the directions of the King their master concerning the others, and do likewise propose that the subjects of both Kings be restrained from all acts of hostility during their further treaty, wherein the Lords Commissioners undertake to receive his Majesty's pleasure.

THE ENGLISH KING'S RESOLUTIONS.

His Majesty's Commissioners appointed to treat with the Commissioners of the most Christian King for the execution of the Treaty of neutrality in America, have received His Majesty's orders to acquaint the said Commissioners that, having maturely considered his own right and the right of his subjects to the whole Bay and Straights of Hudson, and having been also informed of the reasons alleged on the part of the French to justify their late proceedings in seizing three Forts, which for many years past have been possessed by the English, and in committing several other acts of hostility, to the very great damage of the English Company of Hudson's Bay; His Majesty doth, upon the whole matter, conceive the said Company well founded in their demands, and hath therefore ordered us to insist upon his own right and the right of his subjects, to the whole Bay and Straights of Hudson, and the sole trade thereof, as also upon the demand of full satisfaction, for the damages they have received, and restitution of the three Forts surprised by the French.

The English King's Resolutions.

We are also ordered to declare to the French Commissioners that His Majesty hath given us powers and directions to enter into a Treaty with the said Commissioners, for the adjusting of limits between the dominions of both Crowns in America, and doing everything else that may conduce to the removing all occasion of differences between the two nations.

Hostility and deter-

America.

Whereas the most serene and mighty Princee James the Second King of Great Britain and the most Christian King have thought fit to constitute Commissioners, viz, the said King of Great Britain, the Right Honourable Earl of Sunderland, President of his Majesty's Privy Council and one of the principal Secretaries of State, Charles Earl of Middleton, also principal Secretary of State, and Sidney Lord Godolphin Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, and on the other side the said most Christian King hath thought fit to appoint the Sieur Paul Barillon d'Amoneour Marquis de Brages, one of the Councillors of State in ordinary and his Ambassador Extraordinary, as likewise the Sieur Frances Dussion de Bonrepaus, Councillor in all his Councils, Reader in Ordinary of his Bedchamber and Intendant General of the Marine Affairs for the execution of the treaty concluded the 7th of November in the year 1686, for the guiding and determining all controversies and disputes that have arisen or may hereafter arise between the subjects of both Crowns in America as also to settle and determine the bounds or limits of the colonies, islands, lands and territories belonging to the said kings and governed by their respective governors or otherwise depending on the said kings respectively in America. We the above named Commissioners by virtue of the powers granted unto us by the said kings our masters, do by this present instrument in their names promise, agree and stipulate that until the 1st day of January, 1688, and afterwards from that day forwards until their said most serene Majesties shall send any new and express orders in writing concerning this matter; it shall not be lawful for any Governor or Commander in Chief of the colonies, islands, lands and territories, belonging to either kings' dominions being in America, to commit any act of hostility against or to invade the subjects of the other king, nor shall the said Governors or Commanders in Chief upon any pretence whatever suffer that any violence be done to them under corporal punishment and penalty of making satisfaction with their goods for the damages arising by such contravention nor shall any others do the same under the like penalty.

And to the end the said agreement may have the better effect, we do likewise agree that the said serene kings shall immediately send necessary orders in that behalf to their respective Governors in America, and cause authentic copies thereof to be also forthwith delivered to the other party. In witness whereof we have mutually hereunto set our hands and seals. Given at the Palace at Whitehall, the 1st day of December, 1687.

ROYAL ORDERS TO THE GOVERNORS OF THE ENGLISH COLONIES IN AMERICA.

The Letter appointed to be written to the several Governors in pursuance of the said Treaties is as follows:—

Trusty and well beloved, We greet you well. Whereas for the composing of several disputes and differences that have arisen between our subjects and the subjects of our good Brother the most Christian King in America, and for the preventing further occasions of controversy in those parts, We have lately thought fit to constitute and appoint Commissioners to treat with the Commissioners appointed by our said good brother the most Christian King for the purpose aforesaid, as also to settle and determine the bounds and limits of the colonies, islands and territories within our respective dominions or depending on us in America, for the accomplishment whereof a further time will be requisite in regard of the distance of those places, from whence the necessary informations are to be received. We have therefore authorized and empowered our said Commissioners to sign and seal an instrument with the Commissioners of the most Christian King, for the preventing all acts of hostility 40 or violent proceeding between our respective subjects, a copy whereof is herewith sent to you, and we do accordingly expect from you a conformity to our directions herein by doing all occasions of misunderstandings between our subjects and those of the most Christian King without permitting any hurt to be done them in their persons or estates until the 1^o day of January 1687 and after that time, until we shall send you new orders under our sign manual.

It being our pleasure that you entertain a good correspondence with the Governors and officers of the said King in those parts, and take care that no just complaint be brought unto us against you in

THE TREATY OF RYSWICK, 1697.*

Treaty of Ryswick,

I. That there be an universal perpetual peace, and a true and sincere friendship between the most Serene and Mighty Prince William the Third, King of Great Britain, and the Most Serene and Mighty Prince Lewis the Fourteenth, the most Christian King, their heirs and successors, and between the kingdoms, states and subjects of both; and that the same be so sincerely and inviolably observed¹⁰ and kept, that the one shall promote the interest, honor, and advantage of the other, and that on both sides a faithful neighbourhood, and true observation of peace and friendship, may daily flourish and increase.

II. That all enmities, hostilities, discords, and wars between the said King of Great Britain and the Most Christian King, and their subjects, cease and be abolished so that on both sides they forbear and abstain hereafter from all plundering, depredations, harm-doing, injuries, and infestation whatsoever, as well by land as by sea, and on fresh waters everywhere; and especially throughout all the kingdoms, territories, dominions and places belonging to each other, of what condition soever they be.

III. That all offences, injuries, damages, which the said King of Great Britain and his subjects, or the said Most Christian King and his subjects, have suffered from each other during this war, shall be²⁰ forgotten, so that neither on account of them, or for any other cause or pretence, neither party, or the subjects of either shall hereafter do, cause, or suffer to be done, any hostility, enmity, molestation, or hindrance to the other, by himself or others, secretly or openly, directly or indirectly, by color of right or way of fact.

IV. And since the Most Christian King was never more desirous of anything than that the peace be firm and inviolable, the said King promises and agrees for himself and his successors, that he will on no account whatsoever disturb the said King of Great Britain in the free possession of the kingdoms, countries, lands, or dominions which he now enjoys; and therefore engages his honour upon the faith and word of a king, that he will not give or afford any assistance directly or indirectly to any enemy or enemies of the said King of Great Britain; and that he will in no manner whatsoever favour³⁰ the conspiracies or plots which any rebels, or ill-disposed persons, may in any place execute or contrive against the said king; and for that end promises and engages that he will not assist with arms, ammunition, ships, provisions or money, or in any other way, by sea or land, any person or persons who shall hereafter, under any pretence whatsoever, disturb or molest the said King of Great Britain, in the free and full possession of his kingdoms, countries, lands, and dominions. The King of Great Britain likewise promises and engages for himself and successors, Kings of Great Britain, that he will inviolably do and perform the same towards the said Most Christian King, his kingdoms, countries, and dominions.

V. That there be a free use of navigation and commerce between the subjects of both the said kings as was formerly in the time of peace, and before the declaration of the late war, so that every one⁴⁰ of them may freely come into the kingdoms, marts, ports, and rivers of either of the said kings with their merchandises, and may there continue and trade without any molestation, and shall use and enjoy all liberties, immunities, and privileges, granted by solemn treaties and ancient custom.

VI. That the ordinary administration of justice shall be restored and set open throughout the kingdoms and dominions of both kings, so that it shall be free for all the subjects of either to claim and obtain their rights, pretensions, and actions, according to the laws, constitution, and statutes, of each kingdom.

* Chalmers' Treaties, 1790, Vol. 1, p. 332.

VII. The Most Christian King shall restore to the said King of Great Britain all countries, islands, forts and colonies, wheresoever situated, which the English did possess before the declaration of this present war. And in like manner the King of Great Britain shall restore to the Most Christian King all countries, islands, forts and colonies, wheresoever situated, which the French did possess before the declaration of war; and this restitution shall be made on both sides within the space of six months, or sooner if it can be done. And to that end, immediately after the ratification of this Treaty, each of the said Kings shall deliver or cause to be delivered to the other, or to commissioners authorized in his name for that purpose, all acts of concession, instruments and necessary orders duly made and in proper form, so that they may have their effect.

10 VIII. Commissioners shall be appointed on both sides to examine and determine the rights and pretensions which either of the said Kings hath to the places situated in Hudson's Bay; but the possession of those places which were taken by the French, during the peace that preceded this present war, and were retaken by the English during this war, shall be left to the French by virtue of the foregoing articles. The capitulation made by the English on the 5th September, 1695, shall be observed according to its form and tenor; the merchandise therein mentioned shall be restored; the Governor at the fort taken there shall be set at liberty, if it be not already done; the differences which have arisen concerning the execution of the said capitulation and the value of the goods there lost, shall be adjudicated and determined by the said commissioners; who, immediately after the ratification of the present Treaty, shall be invested with sufficient authority for the settling of the limits and confines of the lands to be restored on either side, by virtue of the foregoing Article, and likewise for exchanging of lands, as may conduce to the mutual interest and advantage of both Kings.

The Treaty of Ryswick,
1697.

And to this end the commissioners so appointed shall within the space of three months from the time of the ratification of the present treaty, meet in the city of London, and within six months be reckoned from their first meeting, shall determine all differences and disputes which may arise concerning this matter; after which the articles the said commissioners shall agree to shall be ratified by both kings, and shall have the same force and vigour as if they were inserted word for word in the present treaty.

[The remaining articles seem immaterial for the present purpose.]

PROPOSED EXCHANGE OF PLACES IN HUDSON'S BAY, 1700.

30 MR. VERNON, SECRETARY OF STATE, TO LORD LEXINGTON, COMMUNICATING TO THE BOARD OF TRADE AND PLANTATIONS THE ALTERNATIVES PROPOSED BY THE AMBASSADOR OF FRANCE REGARDING THE BOUNDARIES BETWEEN FRANCE AND ENGLAND IN AMERICA, APRIL 29, 1700.

My LORD,—Having received the alternative from the French Ambassador, I send your Lordship a copy of it, that it may be considered at your Board by Wednesday next.

I am, my Lord, &c.,

JA. VERNON.

Proposal for exchange of places in
Bay, 1700.

By the first alternative, I propose that France keep Fort Bourbon, and England that of Chichitouan, having for limits between the two nations in that quarter the——, which is exactly half way between the two Forts; and in that case the limits of France on the side of Acadie shall be restricted to the River St. George.

40 By the second alternative, I propose that Fort Chichitouan shall remain with France, and that of Bourbon with England, having for limits the same place of which I spoke above; but in that case I demand that the limits of France, on the side of Acadie, should extend to the River Kenebec.

As to the fishery, as all commerce between the colonies of the two nations is forbidden, and as under the pretext of fishing a contraband trade would be sure to be carried on, it is thought, according to the usage established in that country, the fishery should be prevented, as far as the eye can reach; but as difficulties always arise when a determined distance is not agreed upon, it is proposed to fix it at eight leagues, and that for the same reason, and for fear of the same inconvenience, the islands which are found comprised within this space should belong to whichever of the two nations on the shores of which they are situated.

OBSERVATIONS OF THE BOARD OF TRADE AND PLANTATIONS ON THE ABOVE, 1700.

What the interest of the Hudson Bay Company may be in keeping Fort Chichitouan, alias Fort Albany, or exchanging it for Fort Bourbon, alias York, they themselves can best determine. * *

Proposals for exchange of places in
Bay, 1700.

The proposal for settling limits between the English and French in Hudson's Bay is groundless; for by the late Treaty of Peace, Art. 8, the only right reserved to the French in Hudson's Bay is in relation to those places which were taken from the English by the French during the peace which preceded the late war, and retaken from them by the English during the said war, which cannot imply any extent of territory more than the places so taken and possessed; and the Hudson's Bay Company challenging an undoubted right to the whole Bay, antecedent to any pretence of the French, it is necessary they be consulted before any concession of territories be made to the French in those parts. * * * *

NEGOTIATIONS FOR THE PEACE OF UTRECHT, 1711-1713.

OVERTURE FROM FRANCE.

Negotiations for Peace of Utrecht,
1711-1713:Overture from France, 22nd
April, 1711.

That, as it could not be doubted but the King was in a condition of continuing the war with honour, so it could not be looked on as a mark of weakness in His Majesty to break the silence he had kept since the conference of Gertruydenberg, and that before the opening of the campaign; he now gives farther proof of the desire he always had to procure the repose of Europe. But after what he hath found, by experience, of the sentiments of those persons who now govern the Republic of Holland, and of their industry in rendering all negotiations without effect, His Majesty will, for the public good, offer to the English nation those propositions which he thinks fit to make for terminating the war, and settling the tranquillity of Europe upon a solid foundation. It is with this view that he offers to enter into a Treaty of Peace, founded upon the following conditions:—

First. The English nation shall have real securities for carrying on their trade in Spain, the Indies and the ports of the Mediterranean.

Secondly. The King will consent to form a sufficient barrier in the Low Countries for the security of the Republic of Holland; and this barrier shall be such as England shall agree upon and approve; His Majesty promising at the same time an entire liberty and security to the trade of the Dutch.

Thirdly. All reasonable methods shall be thought of with sincerity and truth, for giving satisfaction to the allies of England and Holland.

Fourthly. Whereas, the affairs of the King of Spain are in so good a condition as to furnish new expedients for putting an end to the disputes about that monarchy, and for the settling it to the satisfaction of the several parties concerned, all sincere endeavours shall be used for surmounting the difficulties arisen upon this occasion; and the trade and interest of all parties engaged in the present war shall be secured.

Fifthly. The conferences, in order to treat of a peace upon these conditions, shall be immediately opened, and the Plenipotentiaries, whom the King shall name to assist thereat, shall treat with those of England and Holland, either alone or in conjunction with those of their allies, as England shall choose.

Sixthly. His Majesty proposes the Towns of Aix-la-Chapelle or Laize for the place where the Plenipotentiaries shall assemble, leaving the choice likewise to England of either of the said Towns, wherein to treat of a general peace.

Done at Marlay, the 22nd of April, 1711.

DE TORCY.

TO LORD RABY.

WHITEHALL, April 27, 1711.

MY LORD,—I send Your Excellency enclosed, by Her Majesty's order, the copy of an overture from France, which came a few days since to our hands.

The Queen's pleasure is, that Your Excellency do take the first opportunity of communicating it to the Pensionary,† and of letting that Minister know, that Her Majesty, who is resolved, in making peace as in making war, to act in perfect consort with the States, would not lose a moment in transmitting to him a paper of this importance.

Your Excellency will please to add that the Queen earnestly desires this secret may be kept among 10 as few as possible, and that she hopes the Pensionary will advise upon this occasion with no person whatever, except such as are by the constitution of that government, unavoidably necessary.

As soon as the matter has been considered in Holland, Your Excellency will please to despatch Barlow, who brings you this pocket-book, with the opinion of the Dutch Ministers.

Mr. Prior is fully instructed and authorized to communicate our preliminary demands to France and to report the answer to us.

A. R.

LORD BOLINGBROKE TO THE QUEEN.

WHITEHALL, September 20th, 1711.

He (M. Mesnager) has put into our hands the answer signed by the King of France to the demands last sent over by Your Majesty's order, and this answer complies with every article except the 20 8th, relating to North America. We find, however, that we shall be able to compound this point with him in the manner which Your Majesty some time ago proposed to pass it in, provided France gave you satisfaction on the 7th article, as she has now entirely done.

PRELIMINARY DEMANDS OF GREAT BRITAIN MORE PARTICULARLY.

1. The succession to the Crown of these Kingdoms, according to the present establishment, shall be acknowledged.
2. A new Treaty of Commerce between Great Britain and France shall be made in the most just and reasonable manner.
3. Dunkirk shall be demolished.
4. Gibraltar and Port Mahon shall remain in the hands of those who now possess them.
- 30 5. The Treaty of the Assiento shall be made with the English in the same manner as the French hold it at present; and such places in Spanish America shall be assigned to those concerned in the traffic, for the refreshment and sale of their negroes, as shall be found necessary and convenient.
6. All advantages, rights and privileges now granted, or which may be hereafter granted by Spain to the subjects of France, or of any other nation whatever, shall be in like manner granted to the subjects of Great Britain.
7. And for the better protection of commerce in Spanish America the English shall then be put into possession of such places as shall be named in the Treaty of Peace. France having offered a real security for the trade of Her Majesty's subjects in Spanish America, no one doubted but that such places were intended; and in confirmation of this opinion, France proposed Gibraltar as a security to 30 the commerce to Spain and the Mediterranean. The advantages and privileges offered by M. Mesnager cannot be considered as real securities; it will always be in the power of Spain to resume them, therefore it is supposed that France is under an engagement either to cause to be ceded to Great Britain the places demanded in that Article, or to procure for that nation some new advantages, such as the love of peace may induce them to look upon as an equivalent; upon this they consider themselves as under an obligation to insist that the Minister aforesaid be furnished with full powers. And to mark still for peace of Utrecht,

1711-1713:

Preliminary demands of
Britain.

plainer the sincerity with which the treaty is carried on, and the desire of her Britannic Majesty to promote a general peace, she judges it expedient to declare that the difficulty which occurs upon that Article may be removed by granting to her the following:—

That the Pacte de Assiento be made with Great Britain for the term of 30 years.

That the entire island of St. Christopher be assured to Great Britain.

That the advantages and exemptions from duties promised by M. Mesnager, and which he affirms to amount to 15 per cent, on all merchandise of the growth or manufacture of Great Britain, be effectually allowed.

Great Britain can refresh the negroes at Jamaica, and there distribute those to be sent to La Vera Cruz, to Portobello, and to the other factories in that part of the Indies. But as on the coast of the River de la Plata the English have no colony, it is required that an extent of land be assigned upon this river, where they may not only refresh their negroes, but keep them in safety until they be sold to the Spaniards. And as in this demand no trick is meant, they shall be in this respect subject to the inspection of an officer to be appointed for this purpose by the King of Spain.

8. Newfoundland, Hudson's Bay and Straits shall be completely restored to the English. Great Britain and France shall respectively keep and possess all the countries, domains and territories in North America that each nation shall be in possession of at the time when the ratification of the treaty shall be published in those parts of the world.

THE ANSWER OF FRANCE TO THE PRELIMINARY DEMANDS OF GREAT BRITAIN MORE PARTICULARLY.

Answer of France.

The King being particularly informed by the last memorial which the British Minister delivered to M. Mesnager, of the dispositions of that Crown to facilitate a general peace to the satisfaction of all parties concerned in the war; and His Majesty finding in effect, as the said memorial declares, that he runs no hazard by engaging himself in the manner therein declared, since the preliminary will be of no force until the signing of the general peace, and being besides sincerely desirous to advance to the utmost of his power the re-establishment of the repose of Europe, especially by a way so agreeable to His Majesty as the interposition of a Princess, whom so many ties of blood ought to unite to him, and whose sentiments for the public tranquillity cannot be doubted.

His Majesty, moved by these considerations, has ordered M. Mesnager, Knight of His Order of St. Michael, Deputy of the Council of Commerce, to give the following answers, in writing, to the articles contained in the memorial transmitted to him, intituled "Preliminary Demands of Great Britain more Particularly."

1. His Majesty will acknowledge the King of Great Britain in that quality, as also the succession of that Crown according to the present establishment.
2. The King consents to make a new Treaty of Commerce with Great Britain in a manner most just, reasonable, and advantageous to both nations.
3. Although Dunkirk has cost His Majesty very large sums, as well in the purchase of it as in its fortifications, and though it be necessary still to be at a considerable charge to destroy the works, the King will, nevertheless, engage to demolish them immediately after the conclusion of a peace, provided that for the fortifications of this place he receive a proper equivalent; and, as England cannot furnish that equivalent, the discussion of it shall be deferred to the conferences to be held for the negotiations of a general peace.
4. The King promises, in the name of his grandson, the King of Spain and pursuant to the power which His Majesty has received from that Prince, that Gibraltar and Port Mahon shall remain in the hands of the English, who at present possess both.
5. After the conclusion of peace, the English shall have the transportation of Guinea negroes to the West Indies, otherwise called the Pacte de Assiento, on the same conditions as were entered into by the King of Spain with the French, so that the company which will consequently be established in England shall be privileged to refresh, sell, and dispose of the negroes in all the towns and ports of America, of the North Sea, Buenos Ayres, and generally in all places and ports where permission was granted to the vessels of the Company established in France, under the title of the Assiento.

6. The King promises, for himself and for the King of Spain, according to the power in His Majesty's hands, that in case a peace is concluded, this Article shall be granted, in like manner as the preceding, and that it shall be punctually executed.

7. Though the King of Spain at the beginning of his reign was induced to favour the French nation when he wanted supplies of money for the expenses of an impending war, that Prince, notwithstanding, granted the privilege of transporting negroes to the French for a term of ten years only; it would therefore be a great favour to the English to give up to them for twenty years a prerogative of which it seems all European nations would wish to partake each in its turn. Nevertheless, His Majesty promises that the King, his grandson, shall grant to the English during twenty successive years, the transportation of negroes from Guinca to the West Indies, otherwise called the Paete de Assiento, with the same conditions, prerogatives, and privileges granted to the French Company, and which they do or might enjoy from the 1st of May, 1702, to the present time.

The King consents to this Article.

His Majesty in like matter promises, in the name of the King of Spain, the advantages and exemptions from duties mentioned in that Article, and which the English shall enjoy immediately after the conclusion of the peace, upon the exchange of the ratifications.

The general peace being effected, an assignment shall be made to the English Assiento Company of an extent of land on the River de la Plata, where they may not only refresh their negroes, but keep them in safety until they be sold, according to the conditions stipulated in the agreement to be entered into for the Assiento. And to prevent any abuse of this concession, the King of Spain will nominate an officer as Superintendent, to whose inspection those interested in the Company, and in general those employed in their service, shall be subject.

8. The discussion of this Article shall be deferred to the general conferences for the peace, it being well understood that the right of fishing and drying eod upon the island of Newfoundland be reserved to the French.

In the execution of the King's order, we, the undersigned, Knight of His Order of St. Michael, Deputy of the Council of Commerce, have stated the present answer to the preliminary demands for Great Britain, to the amount of eight Articles, by virtue of authority from His Majesty, of which we have delivered a copy, signed by us: and we promise, in the name of His said Majesty, that the said answers shall be regarded as conditions which he agrees to grant, the Articles of which shall be put into the common form of treaties, and explained in the plainest and most intelligible manner to the common satisfaction of the Crowns of France and Great Britain, and this in case of the signing of a treaty for a general peace.

In faith of which we have signed and sealed. Done, &c.

MESNAGER.

ACCEPTANCE BY GREAT BRITAIN OF THE ABOVE EIGHT ARTICLES.

The Most Christian Prince having signified to Her Majesty, his sincere desire for the re-establishment of the general tranquility of Europe by a peace definitive, sure, lasting, and suitable to the interests of all the allies, and having expressed his desire that the Queen would promote the negotiations of such a peace, it has been found just and reasonable that the interests of Great Britain should be, in the first place, adjusted and ascertained. On this account His Most Christian Majesty has sent over M. Mesnager, Knight, &c.; he has stated the above eight Articles by authority from His Most Christian Majesty, a copy of which he has given us, signed by him; of which Articles we, the undersigned, declare by virtue of the express order of Her Majesty, her acceptance as preliminaries which contain only those securities and advantages which Her Majesty thinks she has a right to expect, whoever be the Prince who may acquire the monarchy of Spain. PRELIMINARY ARTICLES ON THE PART OF FRANCE FOR THE ATTAINMENT OF A GENERAL PEACE.

The King being willing to contribute all that is in his power to the re-establishment of a general peace, His Majesty declares:—

1st. That he will acknowledge the Queen of Great Britain in that quality, as well as the succession to the Crown according to the present settlement.

2nd. That he will freely and bona fide consent to the taking all just and reasonable measures to prevent the re-union of the Crowns of France and Spain on the head of the same prince, His Majesty being persuaded that that excess of power would be contrary to the welfare and peace of Europe.

Preliminary Articles declared by France.

3rd. The King's intention is, that all the parties engaged in the present war, without excepting any one, may find their reasonable satisfaction in the treaty of peace to be made, that commerce may be re-established and maintained for the future, to the advantage of Great Britain, of Holland, and of other nations who have been accustomed to carry it on.

4th. As the King will also strictly support the observance of the peace when concluded; and as the object of His Majesty is to secure the frontiers of his kingdom without molesting, in the smallest degree, the neighbouring States, he promises to agree by the future treaty of peace that the Dutch shall have in their possession the fortress which shall be named in the Netherlands to serve in future as their barrier, which may secure the quiet of the Republic of Holland against any enterprise from France.

5th. The King consents likewise that a secure and convenient barrier should be formed for the Empire and for the House of Austria.

6th. Though Dunkirk has cost the King large sums, as well in its purchase as in its fortification and though it be necessary still to be at very considerable expense to raze the works, His Majesty will nevertheless engage to demolish them after the conclusion of the peace, on condition that he do receive a proper equivalent for the fortification of that place; and as England cannot provide that equivalent, the discussion shall be deferred to the conference to be held for the negotiation of a peace.

7th. When the conferences for the negotiation of the peace shall be formed, all the pretensions of the Princes and States engaged in the present war shall there be discussed, bona fide and amicably, and nothing shall be omitted to regulate and terminate them to the satisfaction of all parties.

By virtue of the King's authority, we, &c.

GENERAL PLAN OF PEACE, 1712.

[O. Offers of France confidentially communicated to the British Ministry by Count De Torcy. D. Further demands of Great Britain. R. Reply of the King of France to those further demands.]

For Great Britain.

General Plan
of Peace,
1712.

O. 1. The King promises to consent without difficulty to everything contained in the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th Articles of the specific demands of the Queen of Great Britain.

O. 2. The King will demolish the fortifications at Dunkirk, as well those of the town as the citadel, the Rysbanks, and the other forts on the sea side, and in three months after, those on the land side; to be computed from the day of exchanging the ratifications, the whole at his own expense, and with a promise never to repair them, in the whole or in part.

O. 3. The King will give up the island of St. Christopher to Great Britain, as also Newfoundland, on condition that the Town of Placentia be razed, [and] that the French retain the free right to fish and dry cod at Newfoundland, in the place where they have been accustomed so to do. The small islands adjoining, and in the neighbourhood of Newfoundland, shall be likewise ceded to England, it being well understood that the island of Cape Breton, and others in the Gulf and mouth of the River St. Lawrence, of which France is actually in possession, shall remain to the King.

O. 4. The King will give up the Province of Acadia, with the Town of Port Royal and its dependencies, to Great Britain, as also the Straits of Hudson's Bay.*

O. 5. In the countries of North America, ceded to Great Britain, the French shall be at liberty to withdraw their effects, as also His Majesty to withdraw the cannon and warlike stores.

D. England demands that the town of Placentia remain in its present state.

That the cannon and warlike stores in Hudson's Bay remain for England.

R. His Majesty offers to let the fortifications of Placentia remain as they are, upon giving up that place to England; to consent to the demand made of the cannon in Hudson's Bay; and, besides, to cede the Island of St. Bartholomew; to give up even the right to fish and dry cod on the coast of Newfoundland—if the English will restore Acadia, for these new concessions proposed as an equivalent.

In this case, His Majesty consents that the River St. George shall be the boundary of Acadia, as England insists.

Should the Plenipotentiaries of that Crown refuse to enter into any expedient for the restitution of Acadia, the King, rather than break off the negotiations, will comply with their demands already made; that is to say, to give up Placentia, fortified, and the cannon in Hudson's Bay; it being well understood that the offer to cede the Islands of St. Martin and St. Bartholomew, and that of the foregoing right to fish and dry cod upon the coast of Newfoundland, are also to be considered as if they had never been made.

O. 6. After the peace, Commissioners shall be appointed on both sides to ascertain, within the compass of a year, the boundaries of Canada, or New France, on one side, and those of Acadia and the lands of Hudson's Bay on the other, and to settle, in a friendly manner, all just and reasonable recompenses insisted upon on both sides for injuries done prejudicial to the rights of peace and war.

O. 7. The boundaries being once settled, the subjects of both Crowns shall be reciprocally prohibited from passing the same, whether by sea or land; as also from disturbing the trade of the subjects of each nation, and molesting the Indian nations, allies or subjects of the Crown.

O. 8. The King will permit the House of Hamilton, Colonel Charles Douglas, and others, to represent to him their several rights and pretensions, and will do them strict justice.

D. That the Duke of Richmond be considered as the heir of his mother.

R. The Duke of Richmond having obtained the King's letters of naturalization, shall, when peace is made, enjoy the privilege attached to the favour granted to him by His Majesty.

D. That the 4th Article of the Treaty of Ryswick be established, and that the King do give no opposition to the regulating of affairs of religion in the empire, pursuant to the Treaty of Munster.

R. In consideration of England, the King wishes this affair should be regulated with the empire; His Majesty having no intention to derogate from the Treaties of Westphalia, on the subject of religion.

O. 9. The King, in the name of the King of Spain, his grandson, promises that Gibraltar and Port Mahon shall remain in the hands of the English.

D. That the extent of country round Gibraltar, equal to two cannon shot, and the whole island of 40 Minorea, be ceded to England.

R. The King had great difficulty to induce the King of Spain to give up Gibraltar to the English, that Prince's intention being, as he often declared, not to yield an inch of land in Spain. It will be still much more difficult to obtain from him the smallest concession, on so important a point, now when he is urged to renounce his rights to the Crown of France, and look upon Spain as the only patrimony he can leave to his descendants.

So that this new demand will be sure of a refusal; and the power which His Majesty has received from the Catholic King is directly contrary to such a pretension.

As he has not explained himself with regard to the entire cession of the Island of Minorea, the King will use his endeavours to obtain it, as a sort of equivalent for territory around Gibraltar; and on this consideration, and from this time, His Majesty promises that the whole Island of Minorca shall be ceded.

O. 10. After the conclusion of peace, the English shall have the transportation of negroes to the West Indies, otherwise called the Assiento Treaty for negroes, upon the same conditions as agreed upon between the King of Spain and the French; so that the Company which for the purpose will be established in England, shall have the privilege of refreshing, selling, and delivering their negroes in all places and ports of America, upon the North Sea, in Buenos Ayres, and generally in all places and ports where the ships of the Company established in France, under the name of Assiento, are permitted to enter.

D. That the French do not withdraw their Assiento effects, otherwise than by English or Spanish 10 vessels.

R. Those concerned in the Assiento Company will strictly observe the terms of their agreement; consequently they cannot, under the pretence of bringing away their effects, trade to the Indies direct and they would absolutely lose them, should they be forced to put them on board other vessels than those of their Company.

General Plan
of Peace,
1712.

The peace having for its object the general benefit of both French and English, it would be unjust that one of the first advantages which results to England, should be to the prejudice of France; if the English will enter into a bargain to purchase the effects of the French Company, this inconvenience will be avoided.

O. 11. The said treaty shall be for thirty years, and there shall be assigned to the English Assiento 20 Company an extent of land upon the River de la Plata, where they may not only refresh their negroes, but keep them in safety until they be sold according to terms to be stipulated in the Assiento contract; and to prevent any abuse of this concession, the King of Spain will appoint an officer to superintend, to whose inspection those concerned in the said Company, and generally those whom they shall employ in their service, shall be subject.

D. That this extent of territory be submitted to the choice of the English, and that the Spanish Inspector be suppressed.

R. The demands made to the King in this Article are known in England: His Majesty obtained them from the King, his grandson, with great difficulty. He can neither demand nor grant in his name any further addition to what has been acceded to for the sake of peace; if the English think proper to insist upon further advantages, they must make a direct application to the Spanish Plenipotentiaries, who, for this purpose, must have the necessary passports sent to them, that they may repair to Utrecht 30

O. 12. All advantages, rights and privileges now granted, or which hereafter may be granted by Spain to the subjects of France, or to any other nation whatever, shall be in like manner granted to the subjects of the Queen of Great Britain.

O. 13. His Majesty promises in like manner that all merchandise of the growth, of Great Britain going from the ports of Spain, from whence vessels are dispatched for the Spanish Indies, shall be free of all duties of import and export, as well in Spain as in the Indies.

O. 14. All the above articles shall be understood in the most ample and proper manner in the treaty of peace, and to them shall be added clauses for the cessation of hostilities, and other mutual assurances, according to the custom of preceding treaties, which shall be acknowledged to possess and have their former force and effect, except where they are repealed by this; and this clause shall be added at the end of each instrument. 40

MEMORIAL SENT BY M. GAULTIER.

March 4th, 1714

Memorial sent by M.
Gaultier, 4th
March, 1712.

From the commencement of the correspondence between Great Britain and France on the subject of peace, it has been an established maxim that we must not, if it can be avoided, expose ourselves to the events of the campaign; the Queen continues of this opinion, and has taken all necessary precautions, on her part, to bring the negotiations at Utrecht to a happy conclusion. From what has lately occurred here, one may have remarked the favourable disposition of the House of Commons, which, according to the constitution of this Government, is principally to be looked up to in concerns of peace and war. . . . Mr. Harley sets off to-morrow for Utrecht; he is amply instructed in Her Majesty's intentions upon all the essential points that may come to be discussed in the negotiations, and he carries their last orders to the Plenipotentiaries. . . . The Queen has been sensibly affected by the misfortunes lately happened to France; she does not doubt that the death of those princes may be used as an argument by those who desire the continuance of the war, but she believes the surest means of rendering their scheme fruitless will be to agree, without loss of time, upon the necessary measures to prevent the union of the two crowns. For this purpose the Queen suggests a proposal that the Prince now in the possession of the Crown of Spain should, for himself and his issue, execute a formal renunciation of that of France, and that the line of succession to both should be declared and fixed in the treaty of peace; it were also to be wished that the Cortes or States of Spain should one way or other concur with this act.

Negotiations

for peace of

Utrecht,

1711-1713 :

REPLY TO THE MEMORIAL DELIVERED BY M. GAULTIER.

March 23rd, 1712.

The Kings desires, as sincerely as the Queen of Great Britain, to prevent the events of the campaign, and to agree, before it opens, on terms of peace. . . . The King is assured that those who with so much ability manage the affairs of the Queen of Great Britain, will know well how to make the party submit, and oblige them to conform to the true interests of the nation, whenever the Plenipotentiaries of France and England at Utrecht shall have agreed upon a just and reasonable plan of peace. To forward this, His Majesty has directed his Plenipotentiaries to grant further compliances, of which they will inform Mr. Harley. He learns with pleasure that the Queen of Great Britain has fully instructed him in her intentions, and has given him her last orders, not doubting that Princes restraining within the bounds of justice and reason, the vague terms, "reasonable satisfaction" and "real security," which her allies extend not only to the most extravagant demands, which they have actually made, but also to those which they have not yet thought of, and which they reserve with the apparent intention of protracting the negotiation. . . . France will never consent to become a Province of Spain; Spain says the same thing with respect to France. The question then is, What well-founded means can be used to prevent the union of the two Monarchies? But we should absolutely go from the point we aim at, and fall into infinite dangers, worse, if possible, than that we anxiously desire to avoid, were we to contravene the fundamental laws of this Kingdom. According to these laws, the Prince next the Crown is the necessary heir to it; it is a patrimony which he receives neither from the King, his predecessor, nor from the people, but by virtue of the law; so that upon the demise of a king, another immediately succeeds him without awaiting the consent of any one. He succeeds not as heir, but as monarch of the kingdom, the lordship of which belongs to him not from election, but from right of birth alone; he is indebted for his crown neither to the will of his predecessor nor to any act or decree, nor, in a word, to the generosity of any one, but to the law; this law we consider as the work of Him who hath founded all monarchies, and we in France are persuaded that God alone can abolish it.

No renunciation can then destroy it, and if the King of Spain gave in his for the sake of the peace, and in obedience to his grandfather, we should deceive ourselves if we received it as a sufficient expedient to prevent the evil we propose to avoid. It would, on the contrary, be the source of the greatest evils; it would open the door for civil war in the kingdom, the flame of which would again spread itself through Europe. We must then look out for other expedients to prevent forever an union equally dangerous to France, to Spain and to all Europe.

As His Majesty cannot suppose your Plenipotentiaries have orders to exact such terms as would prove the ruin of the trade of his subjects and of the navigation of his kingdom, so is he persuaded that these new concessions, both for Great Britain and for those powers whose interests she espouses, will promote the success of the negotiation. But in the meantime, sir, the King expects your Plenipotentiaries will show less eagerness in the support of the demands of the House of Austria, of the States-General, and of many princes of the Empire, who only complain because they are urged so to do by the enemies to the peace. The most effectual way to promote it is for the Queen of Great Britain also to send new directions to her Ministers at Utrecht, to act in future more in concert with the King's Plenipotentiaries.

Report French

taries, 18th
April, 1712.

FROM THE REPORT OF THE FRENCH PLENIPOTENTIARIES TO THE KING, APRIL 18, 1712.
We have made every possible effort to regain Acadia, or at least to retain Newfoundland; but it has been impossible for us to conclude the matter. They (the English Plenipotentiaries) have protested a hundred times that they had express orders to break off the negotiations rather than to give way on either point, or upon that of Hudson's Bay, where they claim even the cannon. We should not have taken their word for this if le Sieur Gaultier had not confirmed what they said.

Count de Pontchartrain remarked, on the project of the English, that it would have to be considered whether the savages were subjects. If so, they could not pass the limits that would afterwards be fixed; if not, there would be no right to make any rule regarding them. Lord Bolingbroke agreed to prohibit the subjects of France and England from passing over the boundary when it had once been established.

LORD BOLINGBROKE TO MARQUIS DE TORCY.—MEMORIAL CONCERNING NORTH AMERICA.

To terminate all existing disputes concerning North America, the Queen proposes:—

Bolingbroke,
to De Torcy,
24th May,
1712.

First.—That His Most Christian Majesty do cede to her the Island of Newfoundland, with Placentia, and the fortifications, artillery, and ammunition thereto belonging; the adjacent small islands nearest to the Island of Newfoundland; as also Nova Scotia or Acadia, according to its ancient boundaries.

Secondly.—That the subjects of His Most Christian Majesty may continue to fish and dry their fish, on that part of Newfoundland which is called the Petit Nord, but upon no other part whatever.

Thirdly.—That the subjects of His Most Christian Majesty may possess, in common with those of the Queen, the Island of Cape Breton.

Fourthly.—That the islands in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and in the mouth of the river of that name, which are now occupied by the French, remain to His Most Christian Majesty; but upon this express condition, that his said Majesty do engage, neither to build or suffer to be built, any fortifications upon those islands or upon those of Great Breton. Her Majesty the Queen, engaging also not to fortify or suffer to be fortified, the islands adjacent and nearest to Newfoundland, or those of Cape Breton.

Fifthly.—The Queen insists to have the guns and ammunition in all the forts and places in Hudson's Bay and Straits. . . .

JOINT APPENDIX,

Sec. VI.
Treaties and Conventions—
(1) Great Britain and France.

Negotiations for Peace of Utrecht, 1711-1713:

THE KING'S ANSWER TO THE MEMORIAL SENT FROM LONDON, MAY 24, O.S., JUNE 5, N.S.—SENT TO LORD BOLINGBROKE BY MARQUIS DE TORCY.

Article 1.—His Majesty consents to cede to the Queen of Great Britain, the Island of Newfoundland, with the town of Placentia, fortified; but the artillery and ammunition in this place shall be withdrawn, and not comprehended in the cession of that place and island, as not being attached to either; and, to use a common comparison, the ammunition and artillery of a place may be considered as the furniture of a house which the individual takes away with him, when by voluntary agreement he gives up the house. The isles adjacent to Newfoundland were neither demanded nor promised in the articles signed at London in October last. As these have been from the beginning considered as the basis of the present negotiations, the King's intention is to comply with them exactly, as the most sure method of arriving at a conclusive treaty; and His Majesty is persuaded that the Queen of Great Britain, true to her word, will not insist upon a new demand, and which cannot be found in the agreement signed in her name. The King will add to that agreement the cession of Acadia, according to its ancient boundaries, as demanded by the Queen of Great Britain.

Answer to foregoing 10th June, 1712.

Secondly.—The articles signed at London, reserve to the King's subjects, the right to fish and dry their cod upon the Island of Newfoundland; an arrangement which both sides have agreed to, cannot be restricted nor altered but by mutual agreement for their common advantage. Upon this plan, His Majesty offers to England to give up the artillery and ammunition of Placentia, the isles adjacent to Newfoundland, to forbid his subjects the liberty of fishing and drying cod on the coast of that island, even the district called the Petit Nord; to add to these conditions the cession of the islands of St. Martin and St. Bartholomew, close to that of St. Christopher, on condition that the Queen of Great Britain do consent to restore Acadia, of which the river St. George is in future to be the boundary, as the English formerly required. It is then submitted to the choice of the Queen of Great Britain, either to abide by the articles signed at London, or to accept the exchange proposed by His Majesty. In the latter case, His Majesty would promote, by every means in his power, the settlement of the business relating to the ransom of Nevis to the satisfaction of Great Britain.

Thirdly.—As one of the chief advantages of the peace will be, if it pleases God, the good understanding which the King proposes to establish between his subjects and those of the Queen of Great Britain, everything which can disturb that happy union should be removed; experience has too well proved how impossible it was to preserve it in places inhabited in common by French and English; this reason alone would therefore be sufficient to prevent His Majesty's consent to the proposal of permitting the English to possess Cape Breton with the French. But a consideration of still greater importance may be urged against the proposition, and as it too often occurs, that nations, the most friendly to each other, become enemies, it is a point of prudence that the King should retain possession of the only island, that can in future keep the river St. Lawrence open to him. It would be absolutely shut to his ships, if, while the English are masters of Acadia and Newfoundland, they should also be in possession of Cape Breton in common with the French; and Canada would be lost to France, as soon as any event should occur to rekindle the war between the two nations, which God long forbid! But the surest method to prevent it, is frequently to call to mind that it may happen.

Fourthly.—We should not dissemble that it is for the same reason, that the King will reserve to himself the liberty natural and general among all sovereigns, to erect in the islands of the Gulf and River St. Lawrence as well as in Cape Breton, such fortifications as His Majesty shall judge necessary. These works, intended solely for the security of the country, can never be of prejudice to the neighbouring islands and provinces. It is just that the Queen of Great Britain should have the same liberty of fortifying where she may judge it necessary, whether in Acadia or in Newfoundland; and upon this Fifthly.—From his particular regard for the Queen of Great Britain, the King will leave to her the artillery and ammunition in the forts and places in Hudson's Bay and Straits, notwithstanding the urgent reasons His Majesty has to withdraw them, and to appropriate them elsewhere. * * *

Bolingbroke
to De Torcy,
November,
1712.

I have examined the projects of treaty drawn up by the Plenipotentiaries of the King as well as by those of the Queen, and I do not find any great difference except in two articles—that on North America and that on Commerce. I do not desire to enter into this detail; it would be too long an affair and too long a discussion, and instead of writing you a letter I should send you a book. Mr Prior will discuss these points with you, and I confine myself to praying you to agree with him upon some expedient, in order that the Ministers at Utrecht, having no subject of dispute, may unanimously entertain pacific sentiments.

MARQUIS DE TORCY TO LORD BOLINGBROKE.

De Torcy to Bolingbroke,

ber, 1712.

In the name of God, sir, order your Plenipotentiaries to be less excellent grammarians. Ours, who also understand the force of Latin expressions, are out of patience when they see difficulties, which have been long adjusted, started again, and the difference between cession and restitution, and the meaning of those terms. In truth, sir, such questions ought not to be the amusement of honourable men. They are at best excusable only to those to whom we may apply amantium ira. Finish these disputes, which, if they continue longer, will only profit our enemies.

There are certain things which derive their consequence purely from being disputed; the difference between the expression cedendis and restituendis, between assumpsit and usurpavit or arrogavit is not very essential; the mind was, however, not a little heated in the dispute, and it required some trouble to convince certain people that the matter was not worthy of attention.

MEMORIAL FROM M. DE TORCY FOR MR. PRIOR. RECEIVED 7TH JANUARY, 1713.

De Torcy to Prior, 7th January,
1713.

The 9th (10th) article of the plan imports, that the King shall give up to the Queen of Great Britain, Hudson's Bay, &c., in the manner they are now possessed by the King and the French.

The Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain insist that it shall be expressed that France shall restore not only what has been taken from the English, but also all that England has ever possessed in that quarter. This new clause differs from the plan, and would be a source of perpetual difficulties; but to avoid them, the King has sent to his Plenipotentiaries the same map of North America as had been furnished by the Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain. His Majesty has caused to be drawn upon this map a line which describes the boundaries in such a manner as he has reason to think they easily may agree [upon] this point on both sides.

If, however, there should be any obstacle which the Plenipotentiaries cannot remove, the decision must be referred to Commissaries to be named for the adjustment of the boundaries of America. The same article says that the King's subjects shall be at liberty to depart from their lands, in places ceded by his Majesty to the Crown of Great Britain, to carry with them their goods and moveables, and to go wherever they please, by sea or land. The Plenipotentiaries of France have also reserved to them the right of disposing of their immoveable effects in the space of three years.

The Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain agree to one year. . . . Under the name of places ceded, they include Acadia and the Island of St. Christopher. Under the name of places restored, Hudson's Bay and Straits, and the Island of Newfoundland.

Upon article 10 (11) the Plenipotentiaries of France demand that the English, obtaining the right to prefer their complaints of loss sustained in Hudson's Bay before the Commissaries, the King's subjects should have the same right with regard to the business of Nevis and Gambia.

10 This mutuality, which the Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain have not yet been willing to grant, seems just. The English shall have the same liberty to represent their losses at Montserrat, and to solicit a reparation, which shall be granted to them.

MR. PRIOR TO LORD BOLINGBROKE, 8TH JANUARY, N.S., 1713.

As to the limits of Hudson's Bay, and what the ministry here seem to apprehend, at least in virtue of the general expression, tout ce que l'Angleterre a jamais possédé de ce côté là (which they assert to be wholly new, and which I think is really so, since our Plenipotentiaries make no mention of it), may give us occasion to enroach at any time upon their dominions in Canada, I have answered, that since, according to the carte which came from our Plenipotentiaries, marked with the extent of what was thought our dominion, and returned by the French with what they judged the extent of theirs, there was no very great difference, and that the parties who determined that difference, must be guided by the same carte, I thought the article would admit no dispute. In case it be either determined immediately by the Plenipotentiaries or referred to Commissioners, I take leave to add to your Lordship that these limitations are no otherwise advantageous or prejudicial to Great Britain than as we are better or worse with the native Indians, and that the whole is a matter rather of industry than dominion. If there be any real difference between restitution and cession, queritur? Yet, since in either case, the right of the inhabitant as to transferring his goods and effects, or disposing of his person and family is always provided for in treaty, I leave it to your Lordship's better judgment if a fixed time in either case (suppose eighteen months or two years), does not put the subject, who is to have the benefit which restitution, or cession grants him, upon a more equal foot, &c.

you have likewise herein enclosed; it certainly is so as to Hudson's Bay in particular. Monsieur de Torcy says that, as far as he knows, the whole affair stands at Utrecht in the manner as this enclosed paper specifies.

The Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain had hitherto made a distinction between places ceded by the King to the Queen of Great Britain, and the places which they denominated restored. Under the name of places restored they included Hudson's Bay and Straits, and the island of Newfoundland. They agreed to allow the French settled in places ceded, the liberty to sell their immoveable effects but insisted that the same liberty ought not to be allowed in places restored, upon a plea that such effects were taken from the English, who had a right to have them restored. The Plenipotentiaries now make no distinction between places ceded and places restored, though the same expression remains in Article 14.

FROM THE MEMOIRS OF THE MARQUIS DE TORCY.*

De Torcy
Memoirs.

His Majesty gave orders to Mesnager to add to the cession of Newfoundland, that of the Bay and Strait of Hudson; and in order to show the Queen of Great Britain and her Ministers the desire which he had to facilitate their intentions, he permitted Mesnager, by private clause, separate from the Memoir, to remit to the general negotiation of the peace the entire discussion on the article of North America. . . .

On the morrow of the second conference, Saint John, on his return from Windsor to London, notified Mesnager that he was awaiting him at Prior's house. . . . The Queen with her Council had resolved not to dwell on (s'arrêter) the observations made on some expressions of the King that appeared ambiguous. The Secretary of State said the desire for peace had obtained the ascendancy in the mind of his Royal mistress over every other consideration; she only desired to change the term from North America (d'Amérique Septentrionale), and confined herself to demanding that this part of America should be designated by the expression America on the North Sea (d'Amérique sur la mer du Nord).

The difficulty of leaving to the French the right of fishing and drying fish on the shores of Newfoundland was raised; the Queen gave her consent. Mesnager was too wise to contest the change of term which this princess desired; thus he and St. John were equally satisfied.

In Monsieur de Pontchartrain's letter to the Marquis de Vaudreuil, the latter is directed to yield the forts and settlements belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company. The merchants therefore desire, and Her Majesty would have your Grace endeavour to obtain, either direct orders to the commanders in these places, or authentic duplicates of the orders sent to the Marquis of Vaudreuil, which may be put into the hands of the officers appointed to go to the Bay of Hudson, and to take possession of the places the French are to evacuate.

THE DUKE OF SHREWSBURY TO LORD BOLINGBROKE.

PARIS, June 23, 1713. N.S.

Concerning the letters which this Court sends to the French Governor of the forts in Hudson's Bay, which your Lordship desires to be transmitted to you, in order to their being sent thither more immediately by the two ships which we dispatched thither, Mr. Prior has spoken to Monsieur Pontchartrain, who promises that your Lordship shall have such letters; but as you say that M. Nicholson will have Her Majesty's orders to give the French subjects the liberty of selling their immoveable estates, Monsieur Pontchartrain desires that authentic copies of such orders may be sent hither, or delivered to the Duke d'Aumont. The Hudson's Bay Company have some moveable effects upon the place, for which they are now sending, and they hope they will find no opposition there on our part to their so doing.

TREATY OF UTRECHT, 1713.

TREATY OF PEACE AND FRIENDSHIP BETWEEN QUEEN ANNE OF GREAT BRITAIN AND KING LOUIS THE XIVTH OF FRANCE, CONCLUDED 31 March, 1713. *
11 April,

IV. Furthermore, for adding a greater strength to the peace which is restored, and to the faithful friendship which is never to be violated, and for cutting off all occasions of distrust, which might at any time arise from the established right and order of the hereditary succession to the Crown of Great Britain, and the limitation thereof by the laws of Great Britain (made and enacted in the reigns of the late King William the Third, of glorious memory, and of the present Queen) to the issue of the above said Queen, and in default thereof, to the most serene Princess Sophia, Dowager of Brunswick-Hanover, and her heirs in the Protestant line of Hanover. That therefore the said succession may remain safe and secure, the most Christian King sincerely and solemnly acknowledges the above said limitation of the succession to the Kingdom of Great Britain, and on the faith and word of a King, on the pledge of his own and his successor's honour, he does declare and engage, that he accepts and approves the same, and that his heirs and successors do and shall accept and approve the same for ever. And under the same obligation of the word and honour of a King, the most Christian King promises that no one besides the Queen herself, and her successors, according to the series of the said limitation, shall ever by him, or by his heirs or successors, be acknowledged or reputed to be King or Queen of Great Britain. And for adding more ample credit to the said acknowledgment and promises, the most Christian King does engage that whereas the person who in the lifetime of the late King James the Second, did take upon him the title of Prince of Wales, and since his decease that of King of Great Britain, is lately gone, of his own accord, out of the Kingdom of France to reside in some other place, he the aforesaid most Christian King, his heirs and successors, will take all possible care that he shall not at any time hereafter, or under any pretence whatsoever, return into the Kingdom of France, or any of the dominions thereof.

VI. Whereas the most destructive flame of war, which is to be extinguished by this peace, arose chiefly from thence, that the security and liberties of Europe could by no means bear the union of the kingdoms of France and Spain under one and the same King; and whereas it has at length been brought to pass, by the assistance of the Divine Power, upon the most earnest instances of her Sacred Royal Majesty of Great Britain, and with the consent both of the most Christian and of the Catholic King, that this evil should in all times to come be obviated, by means of renunciations drawn in the most effectual form, and executed in the most solemn manner, the tenor whereof is as follows:—

Now whereas it is provided and settled by the preceding renunciation (which is always to have the force of a pragmatic, fundamental, and inviolable law) that at no time whatever either the Catholic King himself, or any of his lineage, shall seek to obtain the Crown of France, or ascend the throne thereof, and by reciprocal renunciations on the part of France, and by settlement of the hereditary succession there, tending to the same purpose, the Crowns of France and Spain are so divided and separated from each other that the aforesaid renunciations, and the other transactions relating thereto, remaining in force, and being truly and faithfully observed, they can never be joined in one. Wherefore the most Serene Queen of Great Britain, and the most Serene the most Christian King, engage to each other solemnly, and on their Royal words, that nothing ever shall be done by them, or their heirs and successors, or allowed to be done by others, whereby the aforesaid renunciations and the other transactions aforesaid may not have their full effect; but rather, on the contrary, their Royal Majesties, with joint counsels and forces, will always sincerely take that care, and use these endeavours, that the full foundations of the public safety may remain unshaken, and be preserved untouched for ever. Moreover, the most Christian King consents and engages, that he will not, for the interest of his subjects, hereafter endeavour to obtain, or accept any other usage of navigation and trade to Spain, and the Spanish Indies, than what was practised there in the reign of the late King Charles the Second of Spain, or than what shall likewise be fully given and granted, at the same time, to other nations and people concerned in the trade.

X. The said Most Christian King shall restore to the kingdom and Queen of Great Britain, to be possessed in full right forever, the Bay and Streights of Hudson, together with all lands, seas, sea-coasts, rivers and places situate in the said Bay and Streights, and which belong thereunto,* no tracts of land or of sea being excepted, which are at present possessed by the subjects of France. All which, as well as any buildings there made, in the condition they now are, and likewise all fortresses there erected either before or since the French seized the same, shall, within six months from the ratification of the present treaty, or sooner, if possible, be well and truly delivered to the British subjects having commission from the Queen of Great Britain to demand and receive the same, entire and undemolished, together with all the cannon and cannon-ball which are therein, as also with a quantity of powder if it be there found, in proportion to the cannon-ball, and with the other provisions of war usually belonging to cannon. It is, however, provided, that it may be entirely free for the Company of Quebec, and all other the subjects of the Most Christian King whatsoever, to go by land or by sea whithersoever they please, out of the lands of the said Bay, together with all their goods, merchandizes, arms and effects of what nature and condition soever, except such things as are above referred to in this article. But it is agreed on both sides, to determine within a year, by Commissioners to be forthwith named by each party, the limits which are to be fixed between the said Bay of Hudson and the places appertaining to the French; which limits both the British and French subjects shall be wholly forbid to pass over, or thereby to go to each other by sea or by land. The same Commissioners shall also have orders to describe and settle, in like manner, the boundaries between the other British and French colonies in those parts.

XI. The above mentioned Most Christian King shall take care that satisfaction be given, according to the rule of justice and equity, to the English Company trading to the Bay of Hudson, for all damages and spoil done to their colonies, ships, persons, and goods by the hostile incursions and depredations of the French, in time of peace, an estimate being made thereof by Commissioners to be named at the requisition of each party. The same Commissioners shall moreover enquire as well into the complaints of the British subjects concerning ships taken by the French in time of peace, as also concerning the damage sustained last year in the island called Montserrat and others, as into those things of which the French subjects complain, relating to the capitulation in the island of Nevis, and castle of Gambia, also to French ships if perchance any such have been taken by British subjects in time of peace; and in like manner into all disputes of this kind which shall be found to have arisen between both nations, and which are not yet ended; and due justice shall be done on both sides without delay.

XII. The Most Christian King shall take care to have delivered to the Queen of Great Britain, on the day that the ratification of this treaty shall be exchanged, solemn and authentic letters, or instruments, by virtue whereof it shall appear, that the island of St. Christopher is to be possessed alone hereafter by British subjects, likewise all Nova Scotia or Acadia, with its ancient boundaries, as also the city of Port Royal, now called Annapolis Royal, and all other things in those parts which depend on the said lands and islands, together with the dominion, propriety, and possession of the said islands, lands and places, and all right whatsoever, by treaties, or by any other way obtained, which the Most Christian King, the Crown of France, or any of the subjects thereof, have hitherto had to the said islands, lands and places, and the inhabitants of the same, are yielded and made over to the Queen of Great Britain, and to her Crown forever, as the Most Christian King doth at present yield and make over all the particulars above said, and that in such ample manner and form, that the subjects of the Most Christian King shall hereafter be excluded from all kinds of fishing in the said seas, bays and other places, on the coasts of Nova Scotia, that is to say, on those which lie towards the east within thirty leagues, beginning from the island commonly called Sable inclusively, and thence stretching along towards the south-west.

XIII. The island called Newfoundland, with the adjacent islands, shall from this time forward belong of right wholly to Britain; and to that end the town and fortress of Placentia, and whatever other places in the said island are in the possession of the French shall be yielded and given up, within seven months from the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty, or sooner, if possible, by the Most Christian King, to those who have a commission from the Queen of Great Britain for that purpose. Nor shall the Most Christian King, his heirs or successors, or any of their subjects, at any time hereafter lay claim to any right to the said island and islands, or to any part of it or them. Moreover, it shall not be lawful for the subjects of France to fortify any place in the said island of Newfoundland or to erect any buildings there, besides stages made of boards, and huts necessary and usual for drying of fish; or to resort to the said island beyond the time necessary for fishing and drying of fish. But it shall be allowed to the subjects of France to catch fish and to dry them on land in that part only, and in no other besides that, of the said island of Newfoundland, which stretches from the place called Cape Bonavista to the northern point of the said island, and from thence running down by the western side, reaches as far as the place called Point Riche. But the island called Cape Breton, as also all others both in the mouth of River St. Lawrence and in the gulf of the same name, shall hereafter belong of right to the French, and the Most Christian King shall have all manner of liberty to fortify any place or places there.

XIV. It is expressly provided that in all the said places and colonies to be yielded and restored by the Most Christian King, in pursuance of this treaty, the subjects of the said King may have liberty to remove themselves within a year to any other place as they shall think fit, together with all their moveable effects. But those who are willing to remain there, and to be subjects to the Kingdom of Great Britain, are to enjoy the free exercise of their religion according to the usage of the Church of Rome, as far as the laws of Great Britain do allow the same.

XV. The subjects of France inhabiting Canada, and others, shall hereafter give no hindrance or molestation to the five nations or cantons of Indians subject to the dominion of Great Britain, nor to the other natives of America who are friends to the same. In like manner the subjects of Great Britain shall behave themselves peaceably towards the Americans who are subjects or friends to France; and on both sides they shall enjoy full liberty of going and coming on account of trade. As also the natives of those countries shall with the same liberty, resort, as they please, to the British and French Colonies, for promoting trade on one side and the other, without any molestation or hindrance, either on the part of the British subjects or of the French. But it is to be exactly and distinctly settled by Commissioners, who are, and who ought to be, accounted the subjects and friends of Britain or of France.

MR. BLADEN TO MR. DELAFAYE, SECRETARY OF THE LORDS JUSTICES.

LONDON, July 3rd, 1719.

Mr. Bladen to Mr. Delafaye, July 3, 1719.

SIR,—Since you was pleased to do me the honour to propose, in behalf of their Excellencies, the 30
Lords Justices of Great Britain, that I should go to France in order to Treat there with such persons as shall be appointed by His Most Christian Majesty, concerning the several matters left undecided by the late Treaty of Peace, concluded at Utrecht, and referred to Commissaries to be hereafter named for the purpose,

I take the liberty to acquaint you, that I have perused the said Treaty, and do find that...the twelve articles provide for the surrender of the Island of St. Christopher, and of Nova Scotia in its fullest extent, to the Crown of Great Britain. But, as there have lately happened some disputes between the subjects of the two Crowns upon the interpretation of the thirteenth Article of the said Treaty, relating to the Boundaries of Nova Scotia, (the French Article upon this head being worded very different from the Latin one.) I presume their Excellencies, the Lords Justices, will be of opinion 40 it may be for His Majesty's Service that the said boundaries should be settled, as soon as may be, by Commissaries in behalfe of Great Britain and France; but previous thereunto, it will certainly be necessary that the true sense and meaning of the Treaty of Utrecht upon this subject should be so fully explained that the said Commissaries may have a certain rule to walk by... ..

It will be proper that the person, who shall have the honour to be charged with their Excellencies'
Commands concerning them, should be fully apprized of the demands which the Hudson's Bay Company and His Majesty's subjects of the Island of Montserat, have to make upon those of France, and this will be best done by their Excellencies' Orders to the Board of Trade to examine the same, who may likewise, if their Excellencies please, be directed to make a collection of all such papers and memorials now remaining in the Plantation Office, as may serve to fix the Boundrys of Nova Scotia and of Hudson Bay.

If it should be my lot to go upon this Commission [I shall only ask] that one of my instructions may be to communicate and consult upon all occasions with the Earle of Stairs, His Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, and that the said Earle may be empowered, if he pleases, to be present and assist at all the conferences that shall be held upon the subject matter of my Commission.

REPRESENTATION OF THE LORDS OF TRADE RESPECTING THE POWERS AND INSTRUCTIONS OF THE ENGLISH COMMISSARIES, 26 AUG., 1719.

To Their Excellencies, the Lords Justices:

May it please Your Excellencies:

In obedience to Your Excellencies' Commands signify'd to us by Mr. Delafaye, in his letter of the 16th of July, 1719, we have prepar'd the inclos'd commission and instructions for Mr. Bladen, to treat as His Majesty's Commissary or Deputy, with the Commissary or Commissaries to be appointed on the part of France, concerning several matters left undetermin'd by the 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th and 15th Articles of the Treaty of Peace concluded at Utrecht, the 11 day of ^{March}_{April} 1713, between Her late Majesty and the late French King, Louis the 14th.

The Lords of Trade to the Lords
Justices, 26th
Aug., 1719.

It was not in our power to give more dispatch to this matter, by reason of the multiplicity of books and papers which were necessary to be read and well consider'd upon this subject, besides that we were oblig'd to consult with several persons, and to wait for such lights as the Company of British merchants trading to Hudson's Bay, the African Company and several other parties concern'd in the success of this negotiation could give us, touching their respective interests and demerits, for which we have made the most effectual provision we could think of, in Mr. Bladen's instructions.

We have perus'd and consider'd the several Charters granted by His Majesty's royal predecessors to the respective British Colonies on the Continent of America, from Hudson's Bay and Nova Scotia, as far as the Bay of Mexico, of which many are very extensive, stretching from sea to sea; but as the French would not perhaps be determin'd by these authorities only, and since we have not hitherto been able to get such maps of the said plantations as may be depended on, or to obtain such further informations as might be requir'd to support the right and title of His Majesty or any of his subjects have, to places which the French possess or pretend to, either on the back of the British plantations or westward from New England down to the Gulf of Mexico, we thought it proper to leave out of Mr. Bladen's full powers, that part of the Tenth Article which relates to a general settlement of the boundaries between the colonies of the two nations in America, and to restrain his commission to the boundaries of Hudson's Bay and Nova Scotia only, where we have proofs and authorities against which, we think, no exception can reasonably be made.

In all other matters, Mr. Bladen's commission and instructions are made agreeable to the several Articles of the Treaty of Utrecht above mention'd, comprehending the mutual pretensions of both nations then left undetermin'd; and we hope, may prove to Your Excellencies' satisfaction.

Upon this occasion, we beg leave to represent to Your Excellencies that, considering the several accounts we have receiv'd from the Governors of his Majesty's plantations, as well as from persons with whom we have discours'd, concerning the progress of the French settlements, from the mouth of the River St. Lawrence northward to that of the Mississippi southward, in the Bay of Mexico, and the daily increase of their power in those parts, we cannot but be something alarm'd at a scheme that seems one day to threaten the destruction of all the British Colonies in America, for which reason, we have prepar'd an instruction for Mr. Bladen, directing him to get the best information he can, of the state of the French colonies in those parts, and of the constitution of the Mississippi Company. the meantime, we cannot help observing to Your Excellencies, that among the other grants that we have perus'd upon this occasion, we have seen one from King Charles the First, to Sir Robert Heath, which, by several mean conveyances, is become the property of Doctor Cox, and contains not only the greatest part of Florida, but likewise extends itself westward beyond the River Mississippi.

It were heartily to be wish'd that, in imitation of our industrious neighbours of France, some means cou'd be found to extend our settlements likewise towards the Bay of Mexico, more especially while we are at war with Spain, and might possibly preserve by a future Treaty whatever might be now acquir'd.

Your Excellencies will find by the maps of those countries that the Fort of St. Augustine, which lyes on the coast of Florida to the southward of Carolina, wou'd be a great security to our plantations on that side, and by the best information we have had thereupon, might be reduced at a very small expense.

All which is most humbly submitted.

INSTRUCTIONS TO COMMISSARY BLADEN, 1719.

Instructions for Martin Bladen, Esq., appointed His Majesty's Commissary to treat with the 20 Commissary or Commissaries to be appointed by the most Christian King.—GIVEN.

Instructions to Commissary Bladen,

Together with those instructions, you will receive His Majesty's Commission under the Great Seal of Great Britain, appointing you, the said Martin Bladen, to be His Majesty's Commissary for treating of and concluding, with the Commissary or Commissaries on the part of the French King, all such matters and things as are referred to your cognizance and determination by the said Commission, in pursuance of the 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th and 15th Articles of the Treaty of Peace, coneluded at Utrecht the $\frac{3}{4}$ day of ^{March} _{April}, in the year of our Lord 1713, between Her late Majesty Queen Anne and Lewis the 14th late Most Christian King. * * *

It being provided by the 10th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, that the limits and boundaries between Hudson's Bay and the places appertaining to the French, be settled by Commissaries on each 30 part, "which limits both the British and French subjects shall be wholly forbid to pass over, or thereby to go to each other by sea or by land," you are to endeavour to get the said limits settled in the following manner, that is to say:—

That the same begin from the Island called Grimington's Island, or Cape Perdrix, in the latitude of 58½ north, which the Company desire may be the boundary between the British and French subjects on the coast of Laboradore towards Rupert's Land, on the East Main, and Nova Britannia on the French side; and that no French ships, barque, boat or vessel whatsoever shall pass to the northwestward of Cape Perdrix or Grimington's Island towards or into the Streights or Bay of Hudson, on any pretence whatsoever. And further, that a line be drawn from the south-westward of the Island of Grimington or Cape Perdrix (so as to include the same within the Limits of the Bay) to the great Lake Miscoosinke 40 alias Mistoveny, dividing the said lake into parts (as in the map to be delivered to you); and that where the said line shall cut the 49th degree of northern latitude, another line shall begin, and be extended westward from the said lake, upon the 49th degree of northern latitude; over which said line, so to be described as above mentioned, the French and all persons by them employed, shall be prohibited to pass to the northward of the said 49th degree of latitude, and to the north or north-westward of the said lake or supposed line, by land or water, on or through any rivers, lakes or countries, to trade, or erect any forts or settlements. And the British subjects shall likewise be forbid to pass the said supposed line, either to the southward or eastward.

But you are to take especial care, in wording such articles as shall be agreed on with the Commissary of His Most Christian Majesty, upon this head, that the said boundaries be understood to regard the trade of the Hudson's Bay Company only; that His Majesty does not thereby recede from the right to any lands in America, not comprized within the said boundaries; and that no pretension be thereby given to the French to claim any traets of land in America, southward or south-west of the said boundaries.

And whereas it hath been represented by the said Company that the French have, since the Peace of Utrecht, viz., in 1715, made a settlement at the head of Albany River, upon which river the Company's principal factory is settled, whereby the French may intercept the Indian trade from coming to the said factory, and may in time utterly ruin the trade of the Company if not prevented; you are to insist that the said fort be given up, or demolished by the French, and their subjects be withdrawn from that settlement.

And it being further provided, by the 11th Article of the said Treaty, that satisfaction be made according to justice and equity, to the Hudson's Bay Company for the "damages and spoil done to their colonies, ships, persons and goods, by the hostile incursions and depredations of the French, in time of peace;" and the said Company having delivered to his Majesty's Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, an account under their common seal, of the losses sustained by them from the French in times of peace, which will be delivered to you, with proper vouchers for the same; you are in like manner to insist that satisfaction be made to the said Company pursuant to the said Article. * * *

20 If the French Commissary or Commissaries should pretend to ground a more extensive claim upon the French Treaty than does appertain to them by the Latin one, you are to insist upon it, that the Latin Treaty is to be your guide in all cases, though even by the French Treaty they can have no title to any islands lying in the Bay or Gut of Cancau. . . .

Whereas it has not been thought proper to empower you by your Commission to treat of any boundaries besides those of Hudson's Bay and Nova Scotia; nevertheless, lest the French should take this as a tacit acknowledgment of their pretended right to several settlements they have made on the back and westward of the British Plantations on the continent of America; you are to declare to the French Commissary or Commissaries, that His Majesty has reason to believe the French have made several encroachments upon the British settlements in those parts, which may be discussed when His Majesty shall have received, from the respective Governors of his colonies in those parts, a full and particular account of all such encroachments as they have already complained of. And in the meanwhile, you are to take particular care in the wording of such articles as shall be agreed to between you and the French Commissaries, in relation to the boundaries of Hudson's Bay and Nova Scotia, that His Majesty be not thereby concluded with respect to the boundaries of any other lands or territories His Majesty or his subjects may have a right to on the continent of America.

You are hereby directed, during the time of your residence in France, to get the best information you can concerning the situation, trade, strength, laws and government of the French colonies in America, but more particularly, concerning the establishment and constitution of the Mississippi Company, which you are to transmit to one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, and to His Majesty's Commissioners for Trade and Plantations.

You are hereby required to communicate, from time to time, all your proceedings, during the course of your negotiations, unto the Earl of Stair, His Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary, now residing at the French Court, and to confer and consult with the said Earl on all matters relating thereto.

And whereas divers matters and difficulties may arise during the course of your negotiation, which could not be sufficiently foreseen and provided for by these instructions, you are hereby directed to keep a constant correspondence with one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, to whom you shall by all occasions transmit an exact account of your proceedings, and you are to govern yourself by such further instructions as you shall from time to time receive from him thereupon.

At your return from the French Court, you are to lay before His Majesty a full and particular account of your proceedings in the several matters contained in His Majesty's said Commission and in

MR. BLADEN TO MR. DELAFAYE.

PARIS, November y^e 1st, N.S. 1719. 10

Mr. Bladen to Mr. Delafaye, 1st Nov., 1719. * * * The meeting first intended for Saturday took not place till yesterday. My Lord Stair was present at the opening of the Commissions, and judging their powers to be sufficient, we proceeded to fix the method of treating.

It was agreed to take the several matters separately and distinctly, in the order the Treaty of Utrecht has ranged them, and at our next meeting, which will be on Saturday, we are to enter on the pretensions of the Company trading to the Hudson's Bay.

As you know the particular regard I have for the Earl of Stair, and the great opinion I have of his abilities, you will easily imagine how great a consolation it must be to me to have his assistance in an affair of this consequence.

I am glad to understand, by your favour of the 15th past, o.s., which I received last night, that my brother Pulteney thinks of leaving London. His presence will likewise be of great use to His Majesty's affairs. * * *

MR. BLADEN TO MR. DELAFAYE.

PARIS, November ye 7th, 1719, N.S.

7th Nov., 1719. I was not a little surprized to see the copy of a deposition from Barbadoes this morning in my Lord Stair's hands, relative to the actual seizure of Santa Lucia, by ye French, especially after the answer I had receiv'd from the Abbé Dubois, upon that subject, but it seems he was very little informed of the state of this matter, for the Regent, with whom my Lord Stair had a conversation about it this morning, avows the fact, and says the Marechal d'Estrées assured him the French had a constant possession and an undoubted right to ye said island, by treaty. 20

On Saturday last, my Lord Stair and I met Marechal d'Estrées and Abbé Dubois. Our time was spent in preparatory discourses concerning the intent of the 10th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, relating to the boundaries of Hudson's Bay; and at our next meeting, which will be to morrow, at my Lord Stair's house, we design to give in the claim of the Hudson's Bay Company, in writing, with some few additions pretty material for their service, in case the Abbé Dubois his health will allow him to be there, which I fear it will not, for he is confined at present to his bed. * * *

But I confess, I cannot help thinking it will be to very little purpose to puzzle ourselves about settling boundaries, by treaty, in the North of America, if the French have so concise a way of fixing theirs in the South, without asking our concurrence; it is to be hoped they will have the modesty to recede from this new acquisition, but in the meantime I cannot help saying this gives me no very good relish either of their friendship or discretion. * * *

I cannot leave this subject without observing how much it imports us to be upon our guard in our American Colonys. It were to be wished that the several Governments of his Majesty's plantations would pay the respect they owe to their instructions, and if those of Barbados for some time past had observed theirs, relating to Santa Lucia, the settlement of a hundred French families there could never have been put upon us at this day as a proof of their right to that island. 40

BOUNDARIES CLAIMED BY THE ENGLISH COMMISSARIES, 1719.

MEMOIR ON THE SUBJECT OF THE LIMITS OF HUDSON'S BAY, SENT BY THE ENGLISH COMMISSARIES, THROUGH LORD STAIR, TO THE MARECHAL D'ESTRÉES, ONE OF THE FRENCH COMMISSARIES, 1719.

His Majesty the late Most Christian King having stipulated, by Article 10 of the Treaty of Peace concluded at Utrecht, that Hudson's Bay and Streight, with all the lands, seas, coasts, rivers, and places which appertain to them, shall be restored to the Kingdom of Great Britain; and that Commissaries shall be named on each side to determine the limits of each nation; which limits, the subjects of each nation shall not be permitted to pass by sea or land.

The Commissaries named by His Britannic Majesty demand that the said limits may be defined in the manner following, viz.: That the limits shall commence from the North Cape of Davis' Bay, in lat. 56° 30', which shall serve as limits between the English and the French, on the coast of Laboradore, toward Rupert's Land on the east main, and of New Britain on the French side; and that no French vessel, boat, or ship whatsoever shall be allowed to pass to the north or the west side of the north cape of Davis' Bay, towards or into the Streight or Bay of Hudson, under any pretext whatsoever; and furthermore, that a line shall be drawn from the said north cape of Davis' Bay, towards the great lake Miscosinke or Mistoveny, dividing the said lake in two parts, and that at the place where the said line shall intersect the 49th parallel of north latitude, another line shall commence, and shall be extended on the west side from the said lake along the 49th parallel of north latitude; beyond which lines thus described, neither the French nor any other person employed by them shall pass towards the north of the said 49th parallel of north latitude, or towards the north [or] the north-west of the said lake, or supposed line, neither by land nor by water, nor traverse any river, lake or country, for the purpose of trading, nor build any fort, nor found any settlement.

And forasmuch as the subjects of His Most Christian Majesty have made, since the Peace of Utrecht, a settlement at the source of the River Albany, the Commissaries of His Britannic Majesty insist that the French shall quit the said settlement, and that the fort, if there be any such building, shall be given up to the Company of English merchants trading in Hudson's Bay aforesaid.

The said Commissaries further demand that the subjects of His Most Christian Majesty shall not build forts, or found settlements upon any of the rivers which empty into Hudson's Bay, under any pretext whatsoever, and that the stream, and the entire navigation of all the said rivers,* shall be left free to the Company of English merchants trading into Hudson's Bay, and to such Indians as shall wish to traffic with them.

MR. BLADEN TO MR. DELAFAYE.

PARIS, November 11th, 1719, n.s.

On Wednesday last, my Lord Stair and I delivered to the Marechal d'Estrées the demand of the Hudson's Bay Company, with respect to their limits, and by comparing the inclosed, which is a copy of that demand, with the instruction upon this head, you will perceive the same has been fully comply'd with.*

So soon as I shall have the French Commissarys' answer to our demand, I shall likewise take care to transmit you a copy of it, to be laid before their Excellencies the Lord Justices.

which he promised to do. This is what the Regent has promised my Lord Stair once every week, for four or five months past, without any effect, and His Excellency does not expect any more from the promise now, tho' possibly a Conference may be appointed for form sake. I have been here near six months, and have seen only one Conference, which was appointed by my Lord Stanhope's desire; I think there had been two Conferences before I came; at the first of them the Commissions were read, and at the second my Lord Stair and Mr. Bladen gave in a memorial about the limits of the Hudson Bay Company, to which no answer has been made. . . . I must own that I never could expect much success from this Commission, since the French interests and ours are so directly opposite, and our respective pretensions interfere so much with each other on the several points we were to treat about; but that the French have not been willing to entertain us now and then with a Conference, and try how far 10 we might be disposed to comply with any of the views they had in desiring the Commission, cannot, I should think, be accounted for, but by supposing they knew we came prepared to reject all their demands, and to make very considerable ones for ourselves. . . . I shall expect your further directions as to my stay or return; I cannot help owning I heartily wish for the latter, but I shall always submit to what His Majesty likes best, and shall only desire in this case that I may have a supply from the Treasury, since I have not had the good fortune to be concerned in either of the Misiseppis.

FRENCH MEMOIRS, 1719--20, RELATING TO THE LIMITS OF HUDSON'S BAY UNDER THE TREATY OF UTRECHT. 20EXTRACTS FROM TWO MEMOIRS OF M. D'AUTEUIL, RESPECTING THE LIMITS OF HUDSON'S BAY, 1719--20.

(Copies obtained from the Archives of the Department of Marine and the Colonies, Paris.)

FIRST MEMOIR.

French memoirs relating to limits of
Bay, 1719-20:

* * * All these facts being laid down, of which my Lords the Commissaries will make such use as they may judge proper, I come to that which concerns the limits. On the supposition that it may be necessary, in virtue of the 10th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, to cede to England Fort Bourbon, and all the other establishments which are on the shores of the Bay, I say:

1st. That it is well to remark that the English, in all the places of the said Bay and Streights which they have occupied, have always stopped at the border of the sea, carrying on trade with the 30 savages who went there to find them; whilst the French, from the foundation of the colony of Canada, have not ceased to traverse all the lands and rivers bordering on the said Bay, taking possession of all the places, and founding every where posts and missions.

2nd. They cannot say that any land, or river, or lake belongs to Hudson's Bay; because if all the rivers which enter into this Bay, or which communicate with it, belongs to it, it might be said that all M. D'Auteuil, first Memoir. New France belonged to them, the Saguenay and St. Lawrence communicating with the Bay by the Lakes.

That this being incontestable, it is for France to regulate the limits in this particular quarter (à régler les limites de ce côté là); and that of the little which she may cede, she will always cede that which is her own, as the English cannot pretend to anything except a very small extent of the country 40 adjoining the forts which they have possessed at the bottom of the Bay. Nevertheless their pretensions amount to nothing less than to overrun nearly all the north and west of New France, as they would also do on the south coast by extending the boundaries of Acadia as far as the Fort at Quebec, these being the propositions which the Commissaries named by the King of England have made, but which they have never signed.

[He then quotes the English claims as submitted by Lord Stair.]

The simple reading of these propositions renders it apparent that there can be no other response to make to them than to reject them absolutely, as not having any foundation which can support them. By what right indeed, and in virtue of what Treaty, do these gentlemen break the Treaty of Breda, 50 which placed our limits at the 60th parallel, in order to place them at the 49th, not only from the shores of the Bay which has been ceded to them, but stretching towards the west in every longitude. The Treaty of Utrecht speaks only of restitution—let the English show that which the French have taken from them and they will restore it to them; but all that they demand beyond this, they demand without any appearance of right. Article 10 of the Treaty of Utrecht restores Hudson's Strait; why then wish that the boundary on this side should commence at the North Cape of Davis' Bay in the 56½ degree of latitude, since this cape is more than 120 leagues from the Cape of Button's Island, at the 61st degree or thereabouts, which is the commencement of Hudson's Straits? This excessive claim would carry away a large portion of the land of Labrador, which France has not ceded.

The line of separation should then commence at Cape Bouton, pass through the middle of the territory which is between Port Rupert and Lake Nemiskau, of which Père Albanel, Jesuit, and Mr. de St. Simon, took possession in the name of the King, in 1672; † follow, at the same distance from the Bay, along the eastern side, in such manner as to divide in the middle the territory between the Lake of the Abitibis and Fort Monsipi or St. Louis; continuing, at a similar distance from the shores of the Bay, at the western side, until beyond the rivers of St. Thérèse and Bourbon.

That if on the territory which by these lines belongs to England, there should be found French settlements, they shall be destroyed; but those that may have been founded on our own lands shall be continued, each one being master of his own.

SECOND MEMOIR.

The 10th Article of the Treaty of Peace of Utrecht says, precisely, that the Strait and the Bay of Hudson shall be restored to England. Therefore, there does not appear any reason for the demand that the limits of the territory in question should commence at the North Cape of Davis' Bay, in 56° 30', north latitude, since this cape is more than 120 leagues from the Cape of Isle Bouton, close to the 61st degree or thereabouts, which is the commencement of Hudson's Straits, and this excessive claim which they demand, would carry away a great part of the lands of Labrador, which appertain to the Government of Canada, and which France has neither ceded nor intended to cede. Thus the commencement of the dividing line should be at Cape Bouton, which is the first cape that forms the entrance into Hudson's Straits, as is explained by the preceding memoir: this line should run to the middle of the territory between Fort Rupert and that of Nemiseo, an old French post.

Further, their demand to draw a line from the North Cape of Davis' Bay as far as the Great Lake of the Mistassins, separating the said lake in two parts, has no more foundation, seeing that the King of France has never said that he would give any part of the lands appertaining to the Government of Canada, but that he would restore those which appertain to Hudson Bay; if the English pretend that the territory which they demand should come back to them, it will be for them to prove it.

To conclude, the English Commissaries, not content with wishing to have half of the Lake of the Mistassins, demand that the line shall continue as far as the 49th parallel of north latitude, and that from thence, there shall be drawn a line to the west along the said 49th parallel.

One cannot see upon what ground these gentlemen can authorize this pretension, and demand that France lose all the territory which is to be found between the 60th degree, which belongs to it by the Treaty of Breda, to the 49th degree, in every longitude discovered and to be discovered; this pretension also is a novelty, of which no mention is made in the Articles of the Treaty of Peace of Utrecht.

Lamothe has examined the 10th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, and has remarked that there can be no contestation upon the word Restituera (shall restore), because it is certain that where there has been no unjust possession there is no place for restitution.

The English have never possessed the lands that the French have at Hudson's Bay, therefore it is impossible for the King of France to restore them to them, for one cannot restore more than that which has been taken by usurpation.

The fact is, that at the time of the said Treaty of Utrecht, the French possessed one part of the Strait and Bay of Hudson, and the English possessed the other. It is very true that the King of France had, some time before, conquered the English part, and it [is] of this that it has been understood that restitution is to be made, that is to say to trouble them no more in their enjoyment; but with regard to the said lands possessed by the French in the said Bay, if they have previously belonged to the English, the King will bind himself in the same manner, to make restitution of them. But there must be a real and incontestable proof of proprietorship; and this the Crown of England cannot produce.

Art. V. All the conquests that have been made since the commencement of the present war, or which, since the conclusion of the preliminary articles, signed the 30th April last, may have been or shall be made, either in Europe or the East and West Indies, or in any part of the world whatsoever, being to be restored without exception, in conformity to what was stipulated by the said preliminary articles, and by the declaration since signed, the high contracting parties agree to give orders immediately for proceeding to the restitution, as well as to the putting the Most Serene Infant Don Philip in possession of the states which are to be yielded to him by virtue of the said preliminaries, the said parties solemnly renouncing, as well for themselves as their heirs and successors, all rights and claims, by what title or pretence soever, to all the states, countries, and places that they respectively engage to restore or yield; saving, however, the reversion stipulated of the states yielded to the Most Serene Infant Don Philip.

Having treated of Canada in general, we consider ourselves bound to enter into some details respecting its different parts, and shall commence with those of the north.

Hudson's Bay, which was one of its most lucrative establishments, has been ceded to the English by the Treaty of Utrecht, under the denomination or title of restitution. They carry on a profitable trade there, but the excessive cold and the difficulty of subsistence, will never permit them to form establishments there, capable of affording any uneasiness to Canada; and if the strength of the latter country be agumented, as proposed, it will possibly be in a condition, in the first war, to wrest Hudson's Bay from the English.

The Treaty of Utrecht had provided for the appointment of Commissioners to regulate the boundaries of Hudson's Bay; but nothing has been done in that matter. The term restitution, which has been used in the Treaty, conveys the idea clearly, that the English can claim only what they have possessed, and as they never had but a few establishments on the sea coast, it is evident that the interior of the country is considered as belonging to France.

EXTRACT FROM A MEMOIR, DATED APRIL, 1755, ON THE LIMITS BETWEEN FRANCE AND ENGLAND, AS FAR WELL IN SOUTHERN AS IN NORTHERN AMERICA.

Memoir,
April, 1755.

The 10th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht has stipulated in favour of England, the restitution of the Bay and Strait of Hudson, with the lands, seas, coasts, rivers and places which appertain to them.

* N. Y. Hist. Col., Vol. X., pp. 224-5.

As the English have never occupied more than the lower part and mouth of the rivers, it is to that portion that the restitution which has been made to them has been limited. There are no indications that the English Commissaries who have been named to receive this restitution, have demanded or required that the French should abandon the upper part of the rivers and the lakes which they have occupied of old, or of those more recently occupied, and whose waters, nevertheless flow into Hudson's Bay.

The French have therefore preserved the settlements which they had there, and which have always been regarded as forming part of Canada. It seems that, among others, they have some actually on the Lake of the Abbitibis, and on that of the Mistassins, the waters of which are shewn on some maps as falling into Hudson's Bay.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PRIVATE INSTRUCTIONS TO M. DE VAUDREUIL, DATED VERSAILLES 1ST APRIL 1755.†

By Article 10 of the Treaty of Utrecht, it had been agreed that Commissioners should be named on both sides, to settle the boundaries between the French and British American colonies.

On occasion of an expedition that the English fitted out in 1718, against the fishing posts which the French had in the Islands of Canso, the two Courts did, in fact, nominate Commissioners to decide the property of these islands. The Commissioners met at Paris. At the very first conference, those of the King of England, who claimed that the Islands of Canso were dependent on Acadia, which was ceded to the English by the Treaty of Utrecht, were convinced, on inspecting the map which they presented themselves, that those islands were, on the contrary, included in the reserves expressed in the Article of the Treaty of Utrecht containing the cession of Acadia, and that, consequently, France had retained the property thereof. They withdrew, saying they required new instructions from their Court, and did not again make their appearance. Although there had been question on different occasions that since presented themselves, of naming other Commissioners in execution of the Treaty, the English had always eluded it until the last war; and Sieur de Vaudreuil is better informed than any person how they abused the moderation which had always governed his Majesty's proceedings and views, since he has been a witness of their unceasing usurpations, on the Territory of Canada, during the long peace which followed the Treaty of Utrecht.

Private Instructions to
M. Vaudreuil,
1 April, 1755.

His Majesty did flatter himself that he should eventually succeed in placing bounds to their enterprises, and securing tranquillity to his colonies, by a definite fixation of the respective limits.

In consequence of the last Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, whereby that of Utrecht has been renewed Commissioners have been named on both sides, and did meet at Paris, to regulate all the disputes concerning the French and British possessions.

But whatever earnestness and facilities His Majesty had lent to this settlement, the success of the labour of these Commissaries is far from corresponding, up to the present time, to the hopes he had entertained thereof, from the dispositions his Britannic Majesty had caused to be evinced in that regard.

As yet the Commissioners have not entered upon the limits of Canada, further than what regards Acadia. * * *

They [the English] have not yet explained themselves respecting the extent they propose giving their Hudson Bay boundaries. But it is to be expected that they will wish to stretch them to the centre of the Colony of Canada, in order to enclose it on all sides.

However that be, His Majesty is firmly resolved to maintain his rights and his possessions against pretensions so excessive and so unjust; and whatever be his love for peace, will not make for its preservation any sacrifices, but those which will accord with the dignity of his Crown, and the protection he owes to his subjects.

Such is the principle on which his Ambassador at the Court of England has orders to labour in a negotiation that has been entered into with that Court, for the termination of all those differences, by a provisional or definitive treaty; and it is also on that principle that His Majesty wills that Sieur de Vaudreuil do regulate his conduct, in relation to these objects, until the issue of that negotiation, whereof His Majesty will have him informed.

He is, in consequence, to be on his guard against all attempts the English might make against His Majesty's possessions; carefully to avoid affording them any just cause of complaint; to act on occasions wherein there may possibly be acts of violence, in such a manner that he might not appear the aggressor; and to confine himself to the adoption of all possible measures to enable him to repel force by force.

His Majesty's intention is, in fact, that he confine himself to a strict defensive, so long as the English will not make any attack, which is to be regarded as a rupture on their part.

If, to ensure this defensive, he considers it necessary to make the Indians act offensively against the English, he will be at liberty to have recourse to that expedient.

But His Majesty desires that he do not determine on that course, except so far as the conduct of the English will render it indispensable for the safety and tranquillity of his government.

Supposing, in the mean time, that, notwithstanding what ought to be naturally expected from the equitable and pacific dispositions wherof the King of Great Britain does not cease to give assurances hostilities on the part of England should reach the point that they must be regarded as a rupture he should not, in that case, confine himself to a simple defensive, and His Majesty wills that, in such contingency, he makes use of all the powers that have been confided in him, for the operations which will be best adapted to the good of his service and the glory of his arms.

As these operations must depend on circumstances, His Majesty relies on Sieur de Vaudreuil's zeal and prudence, and experience for undertaking those that will appear to him the most advantageous and the most honourable. He recommends only to him to observe, in the selection of those that he will think he can undertake, to give the preference to such as will have for object the English posts that can be wholly destroyed,—such as that of Choueguen, and even Fort Beaubassin; or which deserve to be preserved, after he shall have become master of them, either for the purpose of increasing the colony of Canada, as would be the case with Acadia; or of being used for exchange, according to the circumstances which will possibly occur or happen, whenever there will be question of a peace, and such would be the capture of Hudson's Bay.

But before coming thus to operations of an open war, His Majesty desires that Sieur de Vaudreuil do assure himself that the English will have in fact committed absolute hostilities, either against the French settlements or forts of Canada, or against some other colonies, or at sea.

In this category may be regarded the usurpations they will possibly attempt on the unsettled lands of Canada, and on which they have undertaken to set up unfounded pretensions. His Majesty's intention meanwhile is, that so long as they will confine themselves to operations of that sort, Sieur de Vaudreuil do content himself with opposing them, and even employ force for that purpose, only after he has protested and made the summons which time and circumstances will have possibly permitted. And in this regard, His Majesty is very glad to enter into a fuller explanation of the pretensions of the English, in order to enable Sieur de Vaudreuil to act more understandingly, on occasions relative thereto.

Independent of the Hudson Bay boundary, of which there has, as yet, been no question with the English, their pretensions, as has been already observed, have for object, to extend the limits of Acadia, on one side as far as the south shore of the River St. Lawrence, and, on the other, as far as the frontiers of New England; to include in those of Virginia the lands that reach to Lake Erie, and those of the Beautiful River [Ohio], and to penetrate into the Lakes of Canada: so that in this system they would wrest from the French all the posts the latter possess south of the River St. Lawrence; and the colony of Canada would find itself reduced to those they have on the north of that river, and wherein it would be soon crippled, in consequence of the extension the English will not fail to desire to give the Hudson's Bay boundary.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GENERALS AMHERST AND HALDIMAND, AND LETTER OF THE MARQUIS DE VAUDREUIL, RESPECTING THE SURRENDER OF CANADA, 1761-2.

M. DE VAUDREUIL TO THE DUC DE CHOISEUL.

October 30, 1761.

M. De Vaudreuil to Duc De Choiseul,
30 Oct., 1761.

MY LORD,—I was astonished to see, by the historical account of the Memorial of the negotiations between France and England, what I am charged with by the English, with regard to the limits of Canada, as it is entirely false and groundless. I shall give your Grace a true account of what passed between Mr. Amherst and me on that head. When I capitulated, I traced no limits whatever, and in all the messages that passed between the English General and me, I made use of the word “Canada” only. Eight or ten days after the surrender of the country, he sent an officer to me for maps, to inform him of the extent of the colony. I returned for answer, that I had none, my maps having been taken away with my baggage at Quebec, in breach of the capitulation of that place; and the officer then showing me a map which he had in his hand, I told him the limits marked on it were not just and verbally mentioned others, extending Louisiana, on one side, to the carrying place of the Miamis, which is the height of the lands whose rivers run into the Ouabache, and on the other, to the head waters of the Illinois.

What I have the honour to tell you, my lord, is strictly true; I am not afraid that the English can produce any proof of the contrary—for nothing passed in writing, on this head, nor was any line drawn on any map. I take the first opportunity to acquaint you with this, to prevent any further imposition.

GENERAL AMHERST TO COL. HALDIMAND.*

NEW YORK, 1st Nov., 1762.

DEAR SIR,—I have been twenty times at the point of writing to you on a subject which, though of no consequence, I should be glad to know the exact transactions that passed. When I made a report of Canada to the Secretary of State, I transmitted a copy of the part of the map where the limits between Canada and Louisiana were marked, which you delivered to me, and which I acquainted the Secretary of State were done by M. de Vaudreuil. Whether by him, or done in his presence by his direction, comes to the same thing, and the thing itself is of no sort of consequence, as the letter and orders he (Monsieur de Vaudreuil) sent to the officers commanding at Michilimackinac, the Bay, Oueciatanon, Miamis, etc., mark out the boundaries and expressly include those posts in Canada, so that there can be no dispute about it; yet as I see some altercation has passed in England and France about Monsieur de Vaudreuil's giving the boundaries, I should be glad to know whether he marked the map himself, or whether it was done in his presence, and what passed on that subject; that I may hereafter be able to say all that was done regarding the whole affair.

I am, with great truth, dear sir,

Your most obedient, humble servant,

JEFF. AMHERST.

COL. HALDIMAND TO GENERAL AMHERST.†

THREE RIVERS, 10th December, 1762.

DESPATCHED 16th do.

SIR,—I have received with pleasure the letter your Excellency did me the honour of writing on the first of December, respecting what passed between Mons. de Vaudreuil and myself on the subject of the limits of Canada. Several times I thought of forestalling it, but I deemed myself obliged to await these orders, to which I intend to conform with all the exactness possible.

About five or six days after I had entered Montreal I asked M. de Vaudreuil if he had no plans, memoirs, or instructive maps concerning Canada. I asked him to let me have them in order that I might forward them to your Excellency; he replied that he had none, having lost their all at Quebec and (to avoid hearing the enumeration he wished to make of his other losses), I contented myself for the time with this reply; but having occasion to speak of it again some days after, he told me that he had found a couple of maps, and passing into another room he had a large map of Western America brought; it was made by hand and folded in the cover of an atlas. There were also some bad plans of forts in a separate roll. Not finding anything instructive on this map, and remembering that I had seen it printed, I called Lieutenant Herring of our battalion, who was in the parlour, and I gave it to him with the other papers which he took to my house. Finally, on the morning of the day that Mons. de Vaudreuil left † [being engaged arranging the rest of the papers I had received from different persons] this map came under my notice and reminded me of the vain attempts I had made to discover from him and from others the extent of this country, and gave birth to the idea of examining it with M. de Vaudreuil. I immediately went to him, getting Ensign Monin to carry the map. I found M. de Vaudreuil, with several members of his household, in the room that overlooks the street; [after having paid my respects] I begged him without any other preamble to be kind enough to show me the limits [that separated] of Canada, [from Louisiana] and conducting him towards the table which was at the end of the room, I opened the map, and after examining it a few moments, I reiterated my request. He appeared very much surprised, and as he did not answer me I passed my finger along the Illinois river, saying: Here is the Illinois. Then he replied that the Illinois had been contested by the two Governors, but that it had been decided they should belong to Louisiana, upon which I took a pencil out of my pocket, and resting my elbows on the map, while M. de Vaudreuil stood beside me, [I marked a spot at the source of the Illinois, and showing him the north, I asked if the line passed that, and having said yes] I asked him, showing him the north of the Mississippi, if the line passed that; and he having said yes, I marked the points from the source of the Illinois, returning up the Mississippi; and asking him once again if I marked correctly, he answered me in these words, (he, M. le Marquis de Vaudreuil, having his eyes fixed upon the map) "take all the north, take all the north." Then I pointed to Red Lake, which seemed to me the natural limit, without his making the slightest objection; after which I returned on the other side of the Illinois, and not fancying that Loio could even be contested, I said to him, Here we undoubtedly take the mouth of the Wabache; and putting my pencil on the confluence of the Loio and the Mississippi, I traced a line, again coming up this first river and the Wabache, and joining the point where I had [marked] commenced at the source of the Illinois, M. de Vaudreuil still stood beside me and looked at the map without making any objection [whatsoever.] This line through its different windings, though made off-hand, (with a simple tracing of the pencil) still gave him plenty of time. But whether being occupied with his departure he said yes, indifferently, [or supposing that what I had been doing was of no consequence, he was careless] and without giving it the necessary attention, [and having said yes too lightly, the account] or that in giving a tacit approbation, he sought to give me an erroneous impression—the account which I have related to you, sir, is none the less [exact] the most exact truth.

M. de Vaudreuil, and all the French who remained at Mont Real, were to leave this [morning] day. The companies of militia having assembled to give up their arms, and to take the oath of allegiance, I had no time to [lose] examine this map, and as I thought I understood what was meant by the name of Canada, and that the line was well marked, I closed the map and sent it home by Ensign Monin. Finally, sir, you may rest assured that the map which you have in your hands is the same that was given to me by M. de Vaudreuil eight or ten days after the taking of Mont Real, and that Lieutenant Herring, who is, I believe, at New York [received from my hand in his room to carry] carried to my house; that it is the same map that was brought back by Ensign Monin to M. de Vaudreuil on the morning of his departure; and that when I opened it in his room, there were neither lines, nor marks nor anything to designate the limits; that the line which now marks them has been traced solely by myself under the eyes of M. de Vaudreuil, to whom alone I addressed myself; and by all that he told me, I never for a moment doubted that he gave me this line as the true limits of Canada; and that from the moment I closed this map in his room until I remitted it to your hands, there has been no alteration of any kind whatsoever made in this line.

This, sir, is, on my word, the simple truth of this transaction.

I must own to you, sir, that being convinced that you would ask for intelligence at an earlier date (of the extent of a country which, I believe, never had any fixed limits) of an authentic Act made in virtue of the capitulation, I did not think it seemly to have the map signed by M. de Vaudreuil, which would have been as easy a matter as to make him give me the limits of Canada in writing, which he could not have refused to do in virtue of the capitulation, and which would have rendered this act incontestable; whilst having no signature to show, he can always make his party believe that we tried to over-reach him.

If I have misunderstood Your Excellency, I am very sorry, and make my apologies; and when I sent the map to Your Excellency, and told you that the limits had been drawn by M. de Vaudreuil, I meant that they had been drawn under his own eyes and received his approbation, which is true to the letter.

I am further much pleased that [this disagreement] this ugly piece of chicanery of M. de Vaudreuil does not prejudice our affairs in the slightest; but, on the other hand, it has given me a good lesson which I will remember, if at any future time I am fortunate enough to be able to put it into practice.

I have, Sir,

the honour to be,

with profound respect,

Your Excellency's most humble and most obedient servant,

FRED. HALDIMAND.

NEGOTIATIONS FOR THE CESSION OF CANADA, 1761.

MEMORIAL OF FRENCH PROPOSITIONS, 15TH OF JULY, 1761.

I. The King cedes and guarantees Canada to the King of England, such as it has been, and in right ought to be possessed by France, without restriction, and without the liberty of returning upon any pretence whatever against this cession or guaranty, and without interrupting the Crown of England in the entire possession of Canada.

Negotiations for cession of Canada, 1761:

II. The King, in making over his full right of Sovereignty over Canada to the King of England, annexes four conditions to the cession:

First.—That the free exercise of the Roman Catholic religion shall be maintained there, and that the King of England will give the most precise and effectual orders that his new Roman Catholic subjects may, as heretofore, make public profession of their religion, according to the rights of the Roman Church.

Secondly.—That the French inhabitants or others, who have been subjects of the King in Canada may retire into the French colonies with all possible freedom and security; that they may be allowed to sell their effects and to transport their property as well as their persons, without being restrained in their emigration, on any pretence whatever (except for debt); and the English Government shall engage to procure them the means of transportation at as little expense as possible.

French Propositions, 15th July, 1761.

Thirdly.—That the limits of Canada, with regard to Louisiana, shall be clearly and firmly established, as well as those of Louisiana and Virginia, in such manner that after the execution of peace there may be no more difficulties between the two nations on the interpretation of the limits relative to Canada, or the other possessions of England.

[N.B.—M. Bussy has a memorial on the subject of the limits of Louisiana, which gives him power to come to a final treaty on that article with the Ministry of his Britannic Majesty.†]

Fourthly.—That the liberty of fishing, and of drying their codfish may, on the banks of Newfoundland, be confirmed to the French as heretofore; and as this confirmation would be illusory if French vessels had not a shelter in those parts appertaining to their nation in these countries, the King of Great Britain, in consideration of the guaranty of his new conquests, shall restore Isle Royal, or Cape Breton, to be enjoyed by France in entire sovereignty. It is agreed to fix a value on this restitution, that France shall not, under any denomination whatever, erect any fortifications on the island, and shall confine herself to maintaining a civil establishment there, and the port, for the convenience of the fishing vessels landing there.

with apprehensions, and give him room to fear that, if they are not adjusted, they will occasion a fresh war in Europe and America. The King of Spain has communicated to his Majesty the three Articles which remain to be discussed between his Crown and the Crown of Britain, which are .

1. The restitution of some captures which have been made during the present war upon the Spanish Flag.

3. The demolition of the English settlements made upon the Spanish territories in the Bay of Honduras.

M. Bussy to Mr. Pitt.

Since the Memorial of the Propositions from France was formed, and at the instant that the courier was ready to set out for London, the King received the consent of the Empress-Queen to a separate peace with England, but upon two conditions :

1. To keep possession of the countries belonging to the King of Prussia.
2. That it shall be stipulated that the King of Great Britain, neither in his capacity of King or Elector, shall afford any succour, either in troops or of any kind whatever, to the King of Prussia; and that His Britannic Majesty will undertake that the Hanoverian, Hessian, Brunswickian, and other auxiliaries in alliance with Hanover, shall not join the forces of the King of Prussia, in like manner as France shall engage on her part not to yield succour of any kind to the Empress-Queen nor her allies.

Both these conditions appear so natural and equitable in themselves, that His Majesty could not do otherwise than acquiesce in them, and he hopes that the King of Great Britain will be ready to adopt them.

Bussy, July
24, 1761.

It is my duty to declare further to you in plain terms, in the name of His Majesty, that he will not suffer the disputes with Spain to be blended in any manner whatever in the negotiation of peace between the two Crowns; to which I must add, that it will be considered an affront to His Majesty's dignity, and as a thing incompatible with the sincerity of the negotiation, to make further mention of such a circumstance.

Moreover it is expected that France will not at any time presume a right of intermeddling in such disputes between Great Britain and Spain. These considerations, so just and indispensable, have determined His Majesty to order me to return you the Memorial which occasions this, as wholly inadmissible.

I likewise return you, Sir, as totally inadmissible, the Memorial relative to the King of Prussia, as implying an attempt upon the honour of Great Britain, and the fidelity with which His Majesty will always fulfil his engagement with his allies.

BRITISH ANSWER TO MEMORIAL OF FRENCH PROPOSITIONS.

British answer to French propositions,
27th April,
1761.

[On the 27th of July, 1761, the answer of the British Court to the Memorial of French propositions was forwarded to Mr. Hans Stanley, the English Envoy at Paris. The first two relate to Canada.]

1. His Britannic Majesty will never recede from the entire and total cession, on the part of France without any new limits, or any exception whatever, of all Canada with its appurtenances; and His Majesty will never relax, with regard to the full and complete cession on the part of France, of the Isle of Cape Breton, and of the other islands in the Gulf and River of St. Lawrence, with the right of fishing which is inseparably incident to the possession of the aforesaid coasts, and of the canals or straits which lead to them.

2. With respect to fixing the limits of Louisiana with regard to Canada, or the English possessions situate on the Ohio, as also on the coast of Virginia, it never can be allowed that whatever does not belong to Canada shall appertain to Louisiana, nor that the boundaries of the last Province shall extend to Virginia, or to the British possessions on the borders of the Ohio; the nations and countries which lie intermediate, and which form the true barriers between the aforesaid Provinces, not being proper, on any account, to be directly or by necessary consequence ceded to France, even admitting them to be included in the limits of Louisiana. * * *

10 10. The demand of the restitution of the captures at sea before the declaration of war cannot be admitted, such a claim not being founded on any particular convention, and by no means resulting from the law of nations, as there is no principle more incontestable than this, viz, that the absolute right of all hostile operations does not result from a formal declaration of the war, but from the hostilities which the aggressor had first offered.

FROM THE ULTIMATUM OF FRANCE IN REPLY TO ENGLAND, AUGUST 6, 1761, REMITTED BY THE DUC DE CHOISEUL TO MR. STANLEY.

The King renews the declaration which he made to His Britannic Majesty, to the Memorial of Propositions for Peace, which has been transmitted to Mr. Stanley, and to which the Court of England has given no answer, either by word of mouth or in writing. His Majesty again declares that if the negotiation entered into at London and Paris for the re-establishment of peace between the two Crowns has not the desired success, all the articles agreed to in that negotiation by France cannot be represented, 20 on any occasion, as settled points, any more than the Memorial of the month of March last, relative to the Uti possidetis.

1. The King consents to cede Canada to England in the most extensive form, as specified in the Memorial of Propositions, but His Majesty will not recede from the conditions which he has annexed to the said Memorial, relative to the Catholic religion, and to the power, facility, and liberty of emigration for the ancient subjects of the King. With regard to the Fishery in the Gulf of St. Lawrence the King means to maintain the immemorial right which his subjects have of fishing in the said Gulf; and of drying their fish on the banks of Newfoundland, as it was agreed by the Treaty of Utrecht. As this privilege would be granted in vain if the French vessels had not some shelter appertaining to France in the Gulf, His Majesty proposed to the King of Great Britain the restitution of the Island of Cape 30 Breton; he again proposes either that Island, or St. John [Prince Edward], or such other port, without fortifications, in the Gulf, or within reach of the Gulf, which may serve the French as a shelter, and secure to France the liberty of fishing, from whence his Majesty has no intention to recede.

11. The King has, in no part of his Memorial of Propositions, affirmed that all which did not belong to Canada, appertained to Louisiana; it is even difficult to conceive such an assertion could be advanced. France, on the contrary, demands that the intermediate nations between Canada and Louisiana, as also between Virginia and Louisiana, shall be considered as neutral nations, independent of the Sovereignty of the two Crowns, and serve as a barrier between them. If the English Minister would have attended to the instructions of M. Bussy on this subject, he would have seen that France agreed with England as to this proposition.

MR. PITT TO M. BUSSY.

August 15th, 1761.

40 It belongs, Sir, to Europe, to judge whether this is the Court which has shown an aversion to peace, or whether it is not that which, after so many variations and delays on her part, arbitrarily continues to insist on objects in America, which we have a right to by the Uti possidetis, and which would make a direct attempt on the essential right of our conquests in Canada and its appurtenances in the Gulf of St. Lawrence; which, in Germany, not only refuses to give up her conquests, gained over His Majesty's allies, as a just compensation for the important restitutions with which His Majesty is willing to accommodate France, but even pretends to impose an obligation on His Majesty not to fulfil the engagements of his Crown towards the King of Prussia; which, moreover, not satisfied with throwing so many obstacles in the way of peace, has not scrupled to interpose new perplexities in opposition to this precious blessing, for which the nation sighs, by intermixing, too late, matters so foreign to the present negotiation between the two Crowns as the discussions between Great Britain and Spain.

FROM THE ANSWER OF THE BRITISH MINISTER TO THE ULTIMATUM OF FRANCE, DELIVERED TO M. BUSSY.

August 16th, 1761.

The British Minister in reply to French ultimatum, 16th
Aug., 1761.

His most Christian Majesty having repeatedly declared, in the ultimatum of the Court of France, remitted to Mr. Pitt by M. Bussy, as well as in the Memorial of the propositions of Peace, which was remitted by the Duke de Choiseul to Mr. Stanley, that if the negotiation entered into between the two Crowns has not the desired effect, all the articles conceded in that negotiation by France cannot be considered in any case as points agreed upon, any more than the memorial of the month of March last, in relation to the Uti possidetis. The King declares, in return, that if the concessions His Majesty has made to bring about peace shall not be accepted by his Most Christian Majesty, the important restitutions offered to France, as well as the other circumstances hereinafter expressed, cannot for the future be considered as given up.

ARTICLE I.—The King will not desert his claim to the entire and total cession of all Canada and its dependencies, without any limits or exceptions whatever; and likewise insists on the complete cession of the Island of Cape Breton, and of other islands in the Gulf and River St. Lawrence.

Canada, according to the lines of its limits traced by the Marquis de Vaudreuil himself, when that Governor surrendered the said Province, by capitulation, to the British General, Sir J. Amherst, comprehends on one side the Lakes Huron, Michigan, and Superior; and the said line, drawn to Red Lake, takes in, by a serpentine progress, the River Ouabaqui [Wabash], as far as its junction with the Ohio, and from thence extends itself along the latter river as far, inclusively, as its influx into the Mississippi.

It is in conformity to this state of the limits made by the French Governor, that the King claims the cession of Canada; a Province which the Court of France, moreover, has offered anew by their ultimatum to cede to His Britannic Majesty, in the most extensive manner, as expressed in the Memorial of Propositions of Peace of 13th July.

As to what concerns the public profession and exercise of the Roman Catholic religion in Canada, the new subjects of His Britannic Majesty shall be maintained in that privilege without interruption or molestation; and the French inhabitants or others, who may have been subjects of the most Christian King in Canada, shall have full power and liberty to sell their effects, provided they dispose of them to the subjects of His Britannic Majesty, and to transport their property, as well as their persons without being restrained from their emigration, under any pretence whatever (unless in case of debt, or for a breach of criminal laws); it being always understood that the time granted for the said emigration shall be limited to the space of one year, to be computed from the day of the ratification of the Definitive Treaty.

ARTICLE II.—As to what respects the line to be drawn from Rio-Perdido, as contained in the note remitted by M. Bussy, of the 18th of this month, with regard to the limits of Louisiana, His Majesty is obliged to reject so unexpected a proposition, as by no means admissible in two respects.

1. Because the said line, under colour of fixing the limits of Louisiana, annexes vast countries to that Province, which, with the commanding posts and forts, the Marquis de Vaudreuil has, by the most solemn capitulation, incontestably yielded into the possession of His Britannic Majesty, under the description of Canada, and that consequently, however contentious the pretensions of the two crowns may have been before the war, and particularly with respect to the course of the Ohio, and the territories in that part, since the surrender of Canada, and the line of its limits has been traced, as aforesaid, by the Marquis de Vaudreuil, all those opposite titles are united, and become valid without contradiction, to confirm to Great Britain, with all the rest of Canada, the possession of those countries on that part of Ohio which have hitherto been contested.

2. The line proposed to fix the bounds of Louisiana cannot be admitted, because it would compromise in another part, on the side of the Carolinas, very extensive countries and numerous nations, who have always been reputed to be under the protection of the King, a right which His Majesty has no intention of renouncing; and then the King, for the advantage of peace, might consent to leave the intermediate countries under the protection of Great Britain, and particularly the Cherokees, the Creeks, the Chicowas, the Chactaws, and another nation, situate between the British settlements and the Mississippi.

ARTICLE IV.—The important privilege granted by the 13th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, under certain limitations and restrictions, to the subjects of France, for fishing and drying their cod-fish on a certain part of the Banks of Newfoundland, has not been refused by Great Britain, but connected with a reciprocal satisfaction on the part of France, with regard to the indispensable object of Dunkirk, which the King has required, and still requires; it is, therefore, on condition that the town and Port of Dunkirk shall be put in the condition it ought to have been in by the last Treaty of Aix la Chapelle, that His Majesty consents to renew to France the privilege of fishing and of drying their fish, by virtue of the Treaty of Utrecht, upon the aforesaid district of Newfoundland.

H. STANLEY.

FROM THE LAST MEMORIAL OF FRANCE TO ENGLAND, DATED SEPTEMBER 9, DELIVERED TO MR. PITT BY M. BUSSY, SEPT. 13, 1761.

The King accepts the declaration of the King of England contained in the preamble of the answer, and renews that which he before made to His Majesty on this head, in such manner that it is concluded between the two Courts finally and without ambiguity, that if peace is not the result of the present negotiation, all that has been said, written and negotiated between the two Crowns, since the memorial of the 26th March inclusive, to the moment of the rupture, shall be void and of no effect, and shall not be brought as an argument in favour of either of the parties in any future negotiation of peace.

Memorial—
France to England—
9th Sept.,
1761.

ARTICLE I.—The King has declared in his first memorial of propositions, and in his ultimatum that he will cede and guarantee to England the possession of Canada, in the most ample manner. His Majesty still persists in that offer, and without discussing the line of its limits marked on a map presented by Mr. Stanley,—as that line, on which England rests its demands, is without doubt the most extensive bound which can be given to the cession,—the King is willing to grant it.

His Majesty has annexed four conditions to his guaranty; it seems that England agrees to them; only the King conceives that the term of one year for the sale of the French effects and for emigration is too short, and his Majesty desires that it may be agreed to extend the term of one year to eighteen months at least.

As the Court of England has added to the first article of its answer to the entire and total cession of Canada, as agreed between the two Courts, the word dependencies, it is necessary that she should give a specific explanation of this word, that the cession might not in the end occasion difficulties between the two Courts with regard to what she understands by the word “dependencies.”

ARTICLE II.—The first paragraph, with regard to the limits of Louisiana, contained in the second article of the answer from England, is agreed to by France. The second paragraph is neither just nor explicit, and it is finally proposed to express it in the following terms:—

The intermediate savage nations between the lakes and the Mississippi, and within the line traced out, shall be neuter and independent, under the protection of the King, and those without the line, on the side of the English, shall likewise be neuter and independent, under the protection of England. The English traders also shall be prohibited from going among the savage nations beyond the line, on either side; but the said nations shall not be restrained in their freedom of commerce with the French and English, as they have exercised it heretofore.

ARTICLE IV.— . . . England always endeavours to connect the liberty of fishing and drying codfish on part of the coast of Newfoundland, granted by the fifteenth article of the Treaty of Utrecht with the ninth article of the same Treaty, which stipulates the demolition of Dunkirk. It is given in answer to England for the fourth and last time that the two stipulations of the Treaty of Utrecht have nothing in common between them, unless that they are both comprised in the said Treaty; and that the concession expressed in favour of the French in the thirteenth article of that Treaty, is a compensation for the cession of Newfoundland and Annapolis Royal, made on the part of France to England by the twelfth and thirteenth articles of the same Treaty.

DUMAS' MEMOIR ON THE BOUNDARIES OF CANADA, 1761.*

*Dumas on the Boundaries
of Canada,
1761.* 'Tis supposed that the Plenipotentiaries named for the future Congress, are incapable of adopting the frivolous ideas entertained in France respecting our possessions in Canada; statesmen have notions different from the simple vulgar. The French are too volatile and too superficial to trouble themselves about the future; but ministers, whom wisdom has selected and ability directs, will of themselves observe that the interests of commerce, the progress of navigation, the good of the State, and the King's glory necessarily require that the restitution of Canada be laid down as a preliminary in the Treaty of Peace.

In more favourable conjunctures, we would be justified in demanding of the English, damages corresponding to the enormous depredation of our marine, as well commercial as national; but the circumstances which will exist at the conclusion of the peace are to decide the sacrifices we shall be obliged to make, or the advantages which are possibly to result therefrom. Commerce has changed the face of Europe; it is now evident that, in the long run, the more commercial nation will become the more powerful.

We can no longer dispense with America, without falling sensibly from our state of splendour.

On the restitution of Canada depends the fate of the rest of our colonies.

These principles, clearer than the day, once admitted, that restitution ought to form the basis and foundation of the Treaty of Peace.

But will the work of our ministers be durable? For want of local knowledge, will they be in a condition to manage beneficially the interests of the King and nation in this regard? Will they prevent the subterfuges in which English trickery will not fail to envelope them? If the English desire peace, do they desire it to be lasting? Will they renounce that system of maritime despotism which constitutes the sole object of their policy? Will they not preserve a constant hankering to render themselves masters of the whole of America? And will they not allow it to appear when we shall be least on our guard? Incapable of accomplishing that project now, in consequence of the exhaustion of their finances, will they not renew it at another time? In front of an enemy so active, so ambitious, so enterprising, conjectures are as good as demonstrations; the past cannot render us too cautious for the future.

By a fatality which cannot be comprehended, the English were better acquainted than we were before the war with the topographical map of our possessions. Aided by similar help, what advantage do they not possess to cheat us? To this object, then, should be directed all the prudence and sagacity of our Plenipotentiaries.

BOUNDARIES.

I limit their labors, respecting Canada to four general objects:

- 1st. The entire property of both shores of the River and Gulf of St. Lawrence.
- 2nd. The property of the lakes and rivers which form the natural communication between Canada and Louisiana; they consist of Lake Ontario, Lake Erie, and the Ohio.
- 3rd. That neither of the two nations can form any establishments on the rivers watering the possessions of the other.

* Paris Documents, XVII., p 1134.

4th. That both colonies shall exist and increase by population without covering their frontiers with advanced posts, which is a principle of jealousy, suspicion, and distrust; an occasion always at hand, or a pretext often specious, for a rupture between the two nations.

As for the first article—to cede to the English, as they pretend, the entire peninsula of Acadia, is to reduce ourselves evidently to a precarious possession. That peninsula is susceptible of an immense population; its position is one of the most advantageous, both for the erection of fortifications, and of posts there; solid settlements of every description can be formed there; agriculture can be followed with the greatest success. In vain would France flatter herself that she should preserve in peace the possessions of the mouth of the river, if the English obtained the entire cession of that peninsula. 10 Already masters of Newfoundland, they should grant us the property of a country whereof they would guard the entrance.

The peace will scarcely be signed, when the activity of that ambitious people will be revived; soon will they be seen establishing themselves on the north side of that peninsula, and neglecting the remainder, if necessary, in order to transport to that quarter all their industry in favour of plantations.

What service would not the Plenipotentiaries be rendering the State if, by their ability, they would induce the English to consent to a division of that peninsula, so that France, should preserve the property of the northern part, from cape Canso to Minas?

But if their zeal become useless, if English firmness leave no hope on that point, they ought to be prepared to rather break all conference, than to give up an inch of ground on that continent. 'Tis 20 evident that our colony would lose thereby all communication with the metropolis; we should no longer possess the free entrance of the river except so far as the English would think proper. The lines of demarcation which separate the respective possessions on the map annexed to this memoir,* are drawn in accordance with the largest sacrifices that it is possible for France to make. 'Tis for the Plenipotentiaries to take advantage of favourable events, to obtain the best terms; but in all possible reverses, 'twill be more advantageous for the King and the State to renounce Canada, and consequently, Louisiana, which cannot exist without it, than to cede an inch of territory beyond that division.

The blue colour indicates the French possessions.

The red indicate the English possessions.

The green, what can be ceded towards Hudson's Bay—should events require France to make further additional sacrifices.

I have said, and repeat it, Louisiana cannot exist for us without Canada. But 'tis more advantageous for France promptly to cede these two colonies to the English, than to accept conditions worse than those indicated by the lines drawn on that map.

On this hypothesis, let the river Pentagouet be the boundary of the English possessions on the continent, on the N. E., and let them be precluded from settling only the right bank.

Let the River St. John bound the French settlements, and let them be precluded from settling only the left bank.

The territory between these two rivers shall perpetually remain neutral and undivided between both nations, as marked on the map by the yellow colour.

40 The second object of the labour of our Plenipotentiaries relative to Canada, regards the communication of that colony with Louisiana. The projects of the English would be accomplished beyond their hopes, were the freedom of that communication not stipulated and solidly established by the treaty of peace; 'twould be separating two colonies, which cannot sustain themselves except by their immediate affinity. Now that communication can occur only by the Ohio: by every other route it is very difficult, often even impracticable. 'Tis essential, then, to insist strongly on the entire possession of the Ohio.

That river, navigable throughout all its course for very large craft, threatens Louisiana afar, and combines the advantage of distance in concealing preparations, with that of extreme rapidity of current for promptitude of execution.

Dumas on the Boundaries
of Canada,
1761.

To make the Ohio the boundary of the respective colonies, is to surrender it entirely to the English. In fact, already the English population is advancing towards that river; it has only one step to take to clear the Apalachies, and that step would be taken on the day after the signing of the treaty. The left bank of the Ohio would be under English cultivation in less than four years, whilst our population would not reach that point in the space of a century. Who does not perceive in that explanation the approaching and inevitable fall of Louisiana?

The entire possession of the Ohio cannot, then, be too much insisted on, the Apalachies constituting the limits; but, if events were such as to force us to give way on that important article, the only middle course to adopt is marked on the map by the yellow colour, viz., to leave the course of that river neutral, unsettled, without ownership, free to both nations to convey on it their goods for moveable trade, with the express reservation to France of the communication between both those colonies.

The possession of Lakes Ontario and Erie, which are the continuation of that communication, is a point of the greatest interest to us, the rather as for want thereof, those lakes assure another passage by the Miamis and Ouabache rivers, more difficult, more uncertain, but which furnishes nevertheless a resource in times of misfortune. I admit that very favourable events would be required to reduce the English to abandon the south shore of Lake Ontario, of which they are a long time in possession, through Fort Chouequen—a possession usurped, but constant, and, as it were, unopposed: an empty protest by the French Government, when the first foundations of that post were laid, is the only contradiction they have experienced.

If circumstances were such, on the conclusion of the peace, as that France had to make good its advantages, that would be the moment to protest against that usurpation. This important object merits the greatest attention of our Plenipotentiaries. It is sufficient to consider the course of the waters to perceive that the lake commands the whole of Canada. General Amherst has found no route more certain for invasion; the event has not over-justified his principles and mind.

If, on the contrary, we are reduced to take back Canada in the same condition that we possessed it before the war, France might consent to confine its cultivated settlements to the north shore of Lake Ontario, leaving the south shore free from the Bay of Niaouré to the River Niagara.

The English would preserve the freedom of conveying their merchandise for moveable trade to the mouth of the Chouequin river, and could extend themselves only to the Onondaga river on one side and as far as the River à la Famine on the other.

But nothing should make France give up the property of the soil, so that the freedom of trade granted to the English could not at any time invest them with a title thereto.

Let their possessions be always confined to the heads of the rivers by which they are watered, and let the height of the land be constantly the limit between the two nations.

The entire possession of Lake Erie ought to belong to France incontestably, up to the head waters of the streams that empty into that lake on the south side; the rivers flowing towards the Ohio are included in the neutrality proposed by that river.

The third object proposed at the head of this Memoir will be rendered clearer by a brief reflection

The English are ten to our one in America. But if passing the height of lands, we should push our posts as far as the heads of the rivers which water the English colonies, all their superiority in numbers, means and resources would not guarantee them against an invasion when it should please us to attempt it.

He who meditates an expedition, prepares it secretly, and when 'tis time to put it in execution, if he have in his favour the current of the stream, which conveys him with rapidity, he surprises his enemy and infallibly succeeds; the same is not the case where the aggressor has to ascend the rivers, has portages to make, lakes to traverse, and mountains to pass. The immense preparations necessary to be made for that purpose discover the movement, and the slowness of the execution affords time of the menaced province to place itself in a state of defence.

The English Colonies are in the latter position in respect to Canada, and Canada would be in the first relative to the English Colonies were the English to advance their settlements on Lake Champlain, Lake Ontario, or the Ohio.

I am fully convinced, and every man of sense who is conversant with the manner in which war can be carried on in that country, will agree with me that all the resources of the State will never preserve Canada if the English are once settled at the head of our rivers. 'Tis, again, one of the conditions that must never be consented to. Should peace be concluded under favourable circumstances to France, I point out the only middle course to be adopted, which is, the neutrality of certain districts; such might Lake St. Sacrament be without prejudice to us, provided the English confine their settlements to the sources of the water flowing into the River of Orange [the Hudson.]

Come we now to the fourth principle :

I know nothing more useless in that country than forts to cover the frontiers; they are equally a burden to both nations, which have an equal interest in demolishing them; they are, in time of peace a source of useless expense, and experience has demonstrated that, in time of war they would be good for nothing. These frontier posts are adapted only to create difficulties, to afford umbrage, and sometimes furnish pretexts for a rupture.

They would favour that nation which would preserve the desire to seize the possessions of the other. By aid of the stand-points, it would pounce on its enemy when least expected, whilst every considerable enterprise becomes more difficult, more tedious, were they no longer in existence. I enterpôts must be established, the step forward is a cry "To arms!"

The French Plenipotentiaries will labour usefully for that Colony, and more profitably still for the Royal Treasury, if they agree with the British Ministers on not preserving any post on the frontiers, either side; thus Chouequen and Niagara will be demolished.

That does not exclude useful settlements in the interior of the possessions, either relatively to trade or otherwise, which each nation is to be at liberty to direct, according to its interests, but merely on what is called frontier, an outlet which may tend to supply means of an invasion.

To place matters at the worst, if the fortune of war be unfavourable to France in this campaign and peace be concluded in an unpropitious moment for us :

If, in order to obtain the conditions I propose, we be under the necessity of making new sacrifices in any part of Canada, the least dangerous for us would be to allow more extent to the English possessions in the direction of Hudson's Bay. Let us cede to them the whole of Lake Superior, rather than one inch of territory in the south part, at this side the height of land or the Apalachies. That sacrifice which is to be made by France at the most critical moment, is marked by the green colour on the map.

Anything beyond those lines of demarcation, and France must give up Canada, inasmuch as it is evident she cannot preserve it; moreover, to maintain ourselves in that state, the Minister must essentially and constantly occupy himself therewith; but above all things must men be carefully selected, to whom the Government, the Police and Finances are to be confided.

Otherwise we shall labour for our enemies. Canada, bathed in the blood of our unfortunate colonists, will soon be the appendage of the English. Our clearances, our settlements, our villages, will be so much fruit to be gathered by them when they have arrived at maturity.

Let the height of land and the Apalachies be the limits between the two peoples. Nature appears to have marked them expressly.

The caprice of man cannot change that barrier, always permanent, and always ready to protest against the usurper. People aspire to a factitious peace when they seek to establish it on arbitrary lines which the revolutions of time or the interests of men can destroy. 'Tis, perhaps, a fault into which have fallen our ablest negotiators, yet 'tis the most important object of a treaty of peace, since it destroys or foment the fatal germ which is the occasion of most wars. The height of land and the Apalachies once determined on as the line of separation between the two colonies, the modifications, the compromises I propose, neutralizing certain districts, may be admitted according as circumstances will be more or less favourable to France, when peace will be concluded.

One reflection more remains to be submitted, which, although not bearing directly on the boundaries, is, nevertheless, very intimately connected with them.

Considering the enormous expense entailed on us by the service of Indians in the war, I have always thought that the King would maintain at much less expense, in Canada, a permanent corps of troops, capable of defending it at all times; and when I have weighed with reflection the utility of their assistance, I have found it to be only one of opinion and prejudice. But this prejudice is founded on the terror inspired by their cruelty and barbarity in their customs; it consequently will preserve its power.

This terror will be always very useful to the nation which will best be able to manage the alliance and attachment of those people. We possess one real advantage over the English in this regard; let us carefully avoid doing it the smallest damage by any convention with our enemies which would cause the Indians to suspect our alliance and good faith. However simple and natural such an accord might be, the English would not fail to present it to the Indians in the light that would render it odious to them. These people are proud, jealous, suspicious, and vindictive; an appearance of defection on our part, after all the blood they have poured out in our defence, would render these irreconcilable to us from generation to generation, and that would be the greatest of misfortunes for both our colonies.

Our Plenipotentiaries ought to be distrustful on this point. I am fully convinced that the British Ministers will set snares for them on this point, which is of more importance for them in America than the gain of many battles.

As for the rest, a Governor-General, instructive and attentive, will know how to maintain the alliance of all the people of this continent, in peace as in war, without those enormous expenses which knavery conducts and ignorance tolerates.

Art. II. The Treaties of Westphalia of 1648; those of Madrid, between the Crowns of Great Britain and Spain, of 1667 and 1670; the Treaties of Peace of Nimeguen, of 1678 and 1679; of Ryswick, of 1697; those of Peace and Commerce of Utrecht, of 1713; that of Baden, of 1714; the Treaty of the Triple Alliance of the Hague, of 1717; that of the Quadruple Alliance of London, of 1718; the Treaty of Peace of Vienna, of 1738; the Definitive Treaty of Aix-La-Chapelle, of 1748; and that of Madrid, between the Crowns of Great Britain and Spain, of 1750; as well as the Treaties between the Crowns of Spain and Portugal, of the 13th February, 1668; of the 6th of February, 1715; and of the 12th February, 1761; and that of the 11th of April, 1713, between France and Portugal, with the Guarantees of Great Britain, serve as a basis and foundation to the peace and the present Treaty; and for this purpose they are all renewed and confirmed in the best form, as well as all the Treaties in general, which subsisted between the high contracting parties before the war, as if they were inserted here word for word, so that they are to be exactly observed for the future, in their whole tenor, and religiously executed on all sides, in all their points, which shall not be derogated from by the present Treaty, notwithstanding all that may have been stipulated to the contrary by any of the high contracting parties; and all the said parties declare that they will not suffer any privilege, favour, or indulgence to subsist, contrary to the Treaties above confirmed, except what shall have been agreed and stipulated by the present Treaty.

Art. IV. His Most Christian Majesty renounces all pretensions which he has heretofore formed, or might form, to Nova Scotia or Acadia in all its parts, and guarantees the whole of it, with all its dependencies to the King of Great Britain; moreover, His Most Christian Majesty cedes and guarantees to his said Britannic Majesty, in full right, Canada, with all its dependencies, as well as the Island of Cape Breton, and all the other islands and coasts in the Gulf and River St. Lawrence, and in general, everything that depends on the said countries, lands, islands, and coasts, with the sovereignty, property, possession, and all rights, acquired by treaty or otherwise, which the Most Christian King and the Crown of France have had till now over the said countries, islands, lands, places, coasts and their inhabitants, so that the Most Christian King cedes and makes over the whole to the said King and to the Crown of Great Britain, and that in the most ample form without restriction, and without any liberty to depart from the said cession and guaranty under any pretence, or to disturb Great Britain in the possessions above mentioned.

Art. VII. In order to re-establish peace on solid and durable foundations, and to remove for ever all subjects of dispute with regard to the limits of the British and French territories on the continent of America, it is agreed that, for the future, the confines between the dominions of His Britannic Majesty and those of His Most Christian Majesty, in that part of the world, shall be fixed irrevocably by a line drawn along the middle of the River Mississippi, from its source to the River Iberville, and from thence by a line drawn along the middle of this river and the Lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain, to the sea; and for this purpose the Most Christian King cedes in full right, and guarantees to his Britannic Majesty the river and port of the Mobile, and everything which he possesses, or ought to possess, on the left side of the Mississippi, except the town of New Orleans, and the island in which it is situated, which shall remain to France; provided, that the navigation of the Mississippi shall be equally free as well to the subjects of Great Britain as to those of France, in its whole breadth and length, from its source to the sea, and expressly that part which is between the said Island of New Orleans and the right bank of that river, as well as the passage both in and out of its mouth.

IX. The most Christian King cedes and guarantees to His Britannic Majesty, in full right, the islands of Grenada and of the Grenadines, with the same stipulation in favour of the inhabitants of this colony, inserted in the IVth article for those of Canada; and the partition of the islands, called Neutral, is agreed and fixed, so that those of St. Vincent, Dominica, and Tobago shall remain in full right to Great Britain, and that of St. Lucia shall be delivered to France, to enjoy the same likewise in full right; and the high contracting parties guarantee the partition so stipulated.

X. His Britannic Majesty shall restore to France the island of Goree, in the condition it was in when conquered; and his most Christian Majesty cedes, in full right, and guarantees to the King of Great Britain, the river Senegal, with the forts and factories of St. Lewis, Podor, and Galam; and with all the rights and dependencies of the said river Senegal.

XI. In the East Indies, Great Britain shall restore to France, in the condition they are now in, the different factories which that crown possessed, as well on the coast of Coromandel and Orixá, as on that of Malabar, as also in Bengal, at the beginning of the year 1749. And His most christian Majesty renounces all pretensions to the acquisition which he had made on the coast of Coromandel and Orixá, since the said beginning of the year 1749. His most Christian Majesty shall restore on his side all that he may have conquered from Great Britain, in the East Indies, during the present war; and will expressly cause Natal, and Tapanouilly, in the island of Sumatra, to be restored; he engages further, not to erect fortifications, or to keep troops in any part of the dominions of the Subah of Bengal. And in order to preserve future peace on the coast of Coromandel and Orixá, the English and French shall acknowledge Mahomet Ally Khan for lawful Nabob of the Carnatic, and Salabat Ging for lawful Subah of the Decan; and both parties shall renounce all demands and pretensions of satisfaction with which they might charge each other, or their Indian allies, for the depredations or pillage committed, on the one side or on the other, during the war.

XII. The Island of Minorca shall be restored to his Britannic Majesty, as well as Fort St. Philip, in the same condition they were in when conquered by the arms of the most Christian King, and with the artillery which was there when the said island and the said fort were taken.

XIII. The town and port of Dunkirk shall be put into the state fixed by the last treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, and by former treaties. The Cunette shall be destroyed immediately after the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty, as well as the forts and batteries which defend the entrance on the side of the sea; and provision shall be made at the same time for the wholesomeness of the air, and for the health of the inhabitants, by some other means, to the satisfaction of the King of Great Britain.

XIV. France shall restore all the countries belonging to the electorate of Hanover to the Landgrave of Hesse, to the Duke of Brunswick, and to the Count of La Lippe Buckebourg, which are or shall be occupied by his most Christian Majesty's arms; the fortresses of these different countries shall be restored in the same condition they were in when conquered by the French arms; and the pieces of artillery which shall have been carried elsewhere shall be replaced by the same number, of the same bore, weight and metal.

XV. In case the stipulations contained in the XIIIth article of the preliminaries should not be completed at the time of the signature of the present treaty, as well with regard to the evacuations to be made by the armies of France of the fortresses of Cleves, Wesel, Guelders, and of all the countries belonging to the King of Prussia, as with regard to the evacuations to be made by the British and French armies of the countries which they occupy in Westphalia, Lower Saxony, on the Lower Rhine the Upper Rhine, and in all the empire, and to the retreat of the troops into the dominions of their respective sovereigns, their Britannic and most Christian Majesties, promise to proceed, bona fide, with all the despatch the case will permit of, to the said evacuations, the entire completion whereof they stipulate before the 15th of March next, or sooner if it can be done; and their Britannic and most Christian Majesties further engage and promise to each other not to furnish any succours of any kind to their respective allies, who shall continue engaged in the war in Germany.

XVII. His Britannic Majesty shall cause to be demolished all the fortifications which his subjects shall have erected in the Bay of Honduras, and other places of the territory of Spain in that part of the world, four months after the ratification of the present treaty; and His Catholic Majesty shall not permit his Britannic Majesty's subjects, or their workmen, to be disturbed or molested, under any pretence whatsoever, in the said places, in their occupation of cutting, loading, and carrying away logwood; and for this purpose they may build without hindrances, and occupy without interruption, the houses and magazines which are necessary for them, for their families and for their effects; and His Catholic Majesty assures to them, by this article, the full enjoyment of those advantages and powers on the Spanish coasts and territories, as above stipulated, immediately after the ratification of the present treaty.

XVIII. His Catholic Majesty desists, as well for himself, as for his successors, from all pretension which he may have formed in favor of the Guipuseoans, and other his subjects, to the right of fishing in the neighbourhood of the Island of Newfoundland.

XIX. The King of Great Britain shall restore to Spain all the territory which he has conquered in the Island of Cuba, with the fortress of the Havana and this fortress, as well as all the other fortresses of the said island, shall be restored in the same condition they were in when conquered by His Britannic Majesty's arms, provided that His Britannic Majesty's subjects, who shall have settled in the said island, restored to Spain by the present treaty, or those who shall have any commercial affairs to settle there shall have liberty to sell their lands and their estates, to settle their affairs, to recover their debts, and to bring away their effects, as well as their persons, on board vessels which they shall be permitted to send to the said island restored as above, and which shall serve for that use only, without being restrained on account of their religion, or under any other pretence whatsoever, except that of debts, or of criminal prosecutions; and for this purpose the term of eighteen months is allowed to His Britannic Majesty's subjects, to be computed from the day of the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty; but as the liberty, granted to His Britannic Majesty's subjects to bring away their persons and their effects, in vessels of their nation, may be liable to abuses, if precautions were not taken to prevent them; it has been expressly agreed between His Britannic Majesty and His Catholic Majesty that the number of English vessels which shall have leave to go to the said island restored to Spain shall be limited, as well as the number of tons of each one; that they shall go in ballast; shall set sail at a fixed time; and shall make one voyage only; all the effects belonging to the English being to be embarked at the same time; it has been further agreed that His Catholic Majesty shall cause the necessary passports to be given to the said vessels; that, for the greater security, it shall be allowed to place two Spanish clerks, or guards, in each of the said vessels, which shall be visited in the landing-places and ports of the said island restored to Spain, and that the merchandise which shall be found therein shall be confiscated.

XX. In consequence of the restitution stipulated in the preceding article, His Catholic Majesty cedes and guarantees, in full right, to His Britannic Majesty, Florida with Fort St. Augustin, and the Bay of Pensacola, as well as all that Spain possesses on the continent of North America, to the east or to the south-east, of the river Mississippi; and, in general, everything that depends on the said countries, and lands, with the sovereignty, property, possession, and all rights, acquired by treaties or otherwise, which the Catholic King and the crown of Spain have had till now, over the said countries, lands, places, and their inhabitants; so that the Catholic King cedes and makes over the whole to the said King, and to the crown of Great Britain, and that in the most ample manner and form. His Britannic Majesty agrees, on his side, to grant to the inhabitants of the countries above ceded, the liberty of the Catholic religion; he will consequently give the most express and the most effectual orders, that his new Roman Catholic subjects may profess the worship of their religion, according to the rights of the Romish church, as far as the laws of Great Britain permit. His Britannic Majesty further agrees, that the Spanish inhabitants, or others, who had been subjects of the Catholic King in the said countries, may retire, with all safety and freedom, wherever they think proper; and may sell their estates, provided it be to His Britannic Majesty's subjects, and bring away their effects, as well as their persons, without being restrained in their emigration, under any pretence whatsoever, except that of debts, or of criminal prosecutions; the term limited for this emigration being fixed to the space of eighteen months, to be computed from the day of the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty. It is moreover stipulated, that His Catholic Majesty shall have power to cause all the effects, that may belong to him, to be brought away, whether it be artillery or other things.

TREATY OF VERSAILLES, 1783.

DEFINITIVE TREATY OF PEACE AND FRIENDSHIP

BETWEEN HIS BRITANNIC MAJESTY AND THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. SIGNED AT PARIS THE 3RD OF SEPTEMBER, 1783.

ARTICLE I.—His Britannic Majesty acknowledges the said United States, viz., New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, to be free, sovereign, and independent States; that he treats with them as such, and for himself, his heirs and successors, relinquishes all claims to the government, propriety, and territorial rights of the same, and every part thereof.

ARTICLE II.—And that all disputes which might arise in future on the subject of the boundaries of the said United States may be prevented, it is hereby agreed and declared, that the following are and shall be the boundaries, viz., from the north-west angle of Nova Scotia, viz., that angle which is formed by a line drawn due north, from the source of St. Croix River to the highlands, along the highlands which divide those rivers that empty themselves into the River St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the Atlantic Ocean, to the north-westernmost head of Connecticut River; thence down along the middle of that river to the forty-fifth degree of north latitude; from thence by a line due west on said latitude until it strikes the River Iroquois or Cataraquy; thence along the middle of said river into Lake Ontario, through the middle of said lake until it strikes the communication by water between that lake and Lake Erie; thence along the middle of said communication into Lake Erie;

East, by a line to be drawn along the middle of the River St. Croix, from its mouth in the Bay of Fundy to its source, and from its source directly north to the aforesaid highlands, which divide the rivers that fall into the Atlantic Ocean from those which fall into the River St. Lawrence; comprehending all islands within twenty leagues of any part of the shores of the United States, and lying between lines to be drawn due east from the points where the aforesaid boundaries between Nova Scotia on the one part, and east Florida on the other, shall respectively touch the Bay of Fundy and the Atlantic Ocean; excepting such islands as now are, or heretofore have been, within the limits of the said Province of Nova Scotia.

ARTICLE IV.—It is agreed that creditors on either side shall meet with no lawful impediment to the recovery of the full value, in sterling money, of all bona fide debts heretofore contracted.

ARTICLE VII.—There shall be a firm and perpetual peace between His Britannic Majesty and the said States, and between the subjects of the one and the citizens of the other, wherefore all hostilities both by sea and land, shall from henceforth cease: All prisoners on both sides shall be set at liberty and His Britannic Majesty shall, with all convenient speed, and without causing any destruction, or carrying away any negroes or other property of the American inhabitants, withdraw all his armies, garrisons, and fleets from the said United States and from every port, place, and harbour within the same; leaving in all fortifications the American artillery that may be therein: And shall also order and cause all archives, records, deeds, and papers, belonging to any of the said States, or their citizens which, in the course of the war, may have fallen into the hands of his officers, to be forthwith restored and delivered to the proper States and persons to whom they belong.

FROM GOVERNOR HOPE, (PRO TEM.) TO EVAN NEPEAN, ESQ., UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE WHITEHALL.

QUEBEC, Sept. 1st, 1785.

*Proceedings in America, 1783-1794 :
Gov. Hope to Under Sec. of State, 1st
Sept., 1785.*

The death of poor Lieutenant-Governor Hay is another event that occasions my deviating from my proposed silence; for, Lieutenant-Governor Hamilton having done me the honor to ask my opinion on the subject of nominating a successor to him in the Civil Government of Detroit, and communicating his own ideas with respect to the person he thought for that situation, it becomes in some degree necessary that I should thus explain the predicament I am still in, when it might so naturally be imagined at home that I was actually in the command, which you have seen is not the case: and since the Lieutenant-Governor has further done me the honour to concur in my opinion so far (which was, to take no resolution in the matter, at least till the arrival of Sir John Johnson), that I should also explain the grounds upon which I gave him that opinion.

Exclusive then, of the considerations that make it eligible, at all events, to defer any partial arrangements for which the necessity was not pressing, till it should be seen if any, or what, general one for the Province at large, and particularly for the upper country, was made at home, and the orders that were accordingly given; there were some others that induced me more immediately to urge that opinion, such as:

20 First—The objections that exist as to there being any such appointment at all as Lieutenant-Governor to any of the upper posts, it having been hitherto (constituted as it is), rather a source of dissension than of any extraordinary benefit, that might not be equally expected from its being entirely military, and consequently vested in the officer sent by the General with the command of the troops in that garrison.

Secondly.—That absolute necessity, in my opinion, if there must be a Lieutenant-Governor, that he should be a person of military education, experience, and character, whom you put into such a situation at such a post. Thereby his commission (as it runs at present), gives him the command, in his own Government, of every officer, under the rank of Brigadier-General, whom the service should require to be stationed at Detroit (though General Haldimand thought it only for the absolute advantage and security of the upper country to give the same powers to the field officer charged with the immediate defence and care of the whole upper posts, as to a Brigadier-General when there was one there), and 30 Lastly—Finding that Governor Hamilton's choice (however plausible in some points of view) was inclined to fall upon a very improper person, according to my conception, in many other most essential ones, viz.: upon a Mr. McGee, the Indian Agent of that post, employed under Sir John Johnson; who though a man of much merit by all accounts, for his loyalty, immediate knowledge of the Indians and their language, as a brave and active partizan in their excursions, yet at the same time who is not of that consideration (nor ever had any rank in the army at all), whilst the troops who actually compose the garrison at Detroit are commanded by an officer of long standing and reputation, Major Ancram, of the 34th Regiment, who has likewise served in the Indian country when that regiment garrisoned the 40 Mississippi, and consequently cannot be deficient in the manner of acting with those people; to whom, or to any other officer of similar services and pretensions, I leave you to conceive whether it must not be most mortifying to come under the immediate orders of a person taken from Mr. McGee's present capacity, to be made a Lieutenant-Governor, even should such an appointment, against which there are so many other objections, be thought at present necessary.

Besides, as Mr. McGee is now the only Indian Agent at that post, which employment he could not continue to exercise with Lieut.-Governor, by the well-judged regulations made by General Haldimand two years ago, in order to strike at the root of the upper country abuses; so, till Sir John Johnson's arrival and being consulted with for a proper person in that event, to supply Mr. McGee's place as Agent, between whom and the Lieut.-Governor of Detroit, there is the source of discord laid by these 50 necessary regulations, unless both are honest, liberal men, with no other views but to promote the service. It was another reason why I could not but think that such a nomination would only increase confusion, that upon the whole, therefore, I hope that since Lieut-Governor Hamilton has so far acquiesced in my opinion as to postpone his intentions till we have accounts by Sir John from England, that he will come into it altogether under present circumstances, and be satisfied that Detroit shall remain under the total direction of Major Aneram, the actual commanding officer, until the pleasure of the government shall be known from home on the subject.

MR. ADAMS, UNITED STATES MINISTER TO ENGLAND, TO LORD CARMARTHEN*.

The subscriber, Minister Plenipotentiary from the United States of America, has the honour to represent to the Ministry of His Britannic Majesty, that by the Seventh Article of the preliminary Treaty of Peace, between His Majesty and the United States of America, signed at Paris on the thirtieth day of November, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-two, confirmed by the Definitive Treaty of Peace, signed at Paris on the third day of September, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three, it was stipulated that His Britannic Majesty should, with all convenient speed, and without causing any destruction or carrying away any negroes or other property of the American inhabitants, withdraw all his armies, garrisons, and fleets from the United States, and from every port, place, and harbour within the same, leaving in all fortifications the American artillery that may be therein

That although a period of three years has elapsed since the signature of the Preliminary Treaty, and of more than two years since that of the Definitive Treaty, the posts of Oswegatchy, Oswego, Niagara, Presque Isle, Sandusky, Detroit, Michillimackinae, with others not necessary to be particularly enumerated, and a considerable territory round each of them, all within the incontestable limits of the said United States, are still held by British garrisons, to the loss and injury of the said United States.

The subscriber, therefore, in the name and on behalf of the said United States, and in obedience to their express commands, has the honour to require of His Britannic Majesty's Ministry, that all His Majesty's armies and garrisons be forthwith withdrawn from the said United States from all and every of the posts hereinbefore enumerated, and from every port, place, and harbour within the territory of the said United States, according to the true intention of the treaties aforesaid.

LORD GRENVILLE TO LORD DORCHESTER.

WHITEHALL, April 5, 1787. 30

Lord Gren-

The affairs of the Indians, from Colonel Brant's letter to Col. Butler, appear to be in a very critical situation, and such as will certainly reduce them to the necessity of taking a decided part one way or the other in a very short time. It is natural for those people to look up to us for those supplies which they have been accustomed to receive, and that they will think themselves neglected and forsaken, whenever such supplies are discontinued, and perhaps may be induced from disappointment to give much perplexity, though they may refrain from committing acts of hostility. Your Lordship has judged very wisely in executing every means to conduce to the war between them and the Americans to as narrow a scale as possible, but if it should extend itself to the northward, which will most likely be the case, and the Americans should carry their threats into execution of attempting to gain the forcible possession of the posts in the upper country, we cannot but look upon the assistance to be derived from the Indians as extremely desirable, and perhaps the most effectual impediment to such an undertaking. Were we to be governed only by the expectation of further advantage from the friendly disposition of the people, it might, even in such case, be prudent to attend to their reasonable wants; but, considering their former services, and the sacrifices many of them have made, there cannot remain a doubt of the conduct we ought to observe towards them.

*Adams' works, Vol. 8.

Whilst the post of Michilimackinac remains in the possession of His Majesty's troops, and Mr. Sinclair continues in the exercise of duty, it is His Majesty's intention that he shall receive his salary; but if it should hereafter happen that His Majesty should withdraw his forces from that post, and Mr. Sinclair's services are unnecessary, it will be proper that his office should be abolished, and in such case His Majesty will have his pretensions to further favour under his Royal consideration.

Proceedings in America,
1783-1794;

MR. ROBERT HAMILTON TO LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR SIMCOE.

NIAGARA, January 4th, 1792.

SIR,—The trouble this letter gives you does not arise from vanity, in wishing to correspond with a person high in office, as you are. My only motives are the good of my native country, and my attachment to the interests of this part of her dominions, in which I have resided for many years. We have just heard of your arrival in America, invested with power to terminate all differences and to form new treaties between Great Britain and these States. The line of division between their western frontiers and our possessions, and between them and our friends the Indians, must necessarily be an object of considerable consequence in your arrangements with them. Any information on these subjects I trust will be acceptable; the obscurity of the source from whence it comes, is not the question.

Mr. Hamilton to Gov.
Simcoe, 4
Jan., 1792.

When Mr. Oswald made a peace with the Americans in 1783, he evinced his total ignorance of this country and its true interests, in the line he fixed as the boundary between us and them, from the place it joins the St. Lawrence, above Montreal, to its termination in the unknown regions of the North-West.

Navigable rivers and lakes surely form the worst possible boundaries betwixt commercial nations settled on the same continent, as on a highway their carriages must certainly meet. They will often jostle, and endless contention and strife must ensue. By this line we should have given up every post and possession we then held in this country, the small picketed posts of Fort Erie only excepted. Oswegatchie, Carleton Island, Oswego, Niagara, Detroit and Michilimackinac, all must have been yielded up to the Americans: nor was this all. By this line, a free opening was afforded our rivals to reach our most distant and most valuable trading posts. In many of the most essential articles for the fur trade, they have considerable advantages over the adventurers in the Province. I shall only mention Spirits, the produce of one of their most considerable manufactures, and East India goods, now a material article in their commerce. Soon, in consequence of this ill-judged line, must our fur trade have been annihilated, had not our rulers, possessed of better information, declined, for this and other reasons, to fulfil that part of the Treaty which respected the surrender of the posts. Thus has the business remained undecided to this day.

On this last point I would gladly hope my present address may be found to have some merit. Between the Americans and the Indians, some line along the Ohio from some determined latitude to its most northerly source, will probably constitute the bounds. Between us and them, this line, continued across the High Grounds, from the northern head of the Ohio to the western head of the Genesee River, and down that stream until it falls into Lake Ontario, about sixty miles east of the Fort of Niagara, would in all probability constitute a boundary which would not encroach on either party's present pretensions, and would secure both from that intervention of mercantile interests which will otherwise involve us in constant disputes, and in eternal quarrels. Neither the higher part of the Ohio, nor any part of the Genesee River, being calculated for the purposes of extension [of] navigation, promise a more peaceful boundary than that fixed by Mr. Oswald.

Let me here observe that long before the English held a foot of land in the Province, the French on this very ground, had formed a plan of an empire, perhaps as grand as was ever devised by man. They projected the site of this on two of the finest rivers in the world—on the banks of the St. Lawrence and of the Mississippi, whose streams in some places almost unite. Such a plan was, however, only calculated for the first commercial country in Europe, and who might command at sea. Possessed of the two ports of Quebec and New Orleans, without any further effort than regulating to the best advantage the internal police of this extensive country, without further expense than might be necessary to render the inhabitants prosperous, happy and free, she would in time enjoy a market for her manufactures, extensive almost beyond calculation. In return, she would exclusively receive the furs of the north, with all the most desirable products of perhaps the finest soil of the world, in all the different latitudes from Michillimackinac to New Orleans. Whether Britain may ever have had this in her power, or whether the day may not yet return with an offer of those manifold advantages, it is not for me to decide. It might be worthy of the exalted character at present at the helm of her affairs, to have so glorious a prospect in his eyes. Already have I sufficiently trespassed on your patience.

That every success may attend your important negotiation, is the sincere prayer of,

Sir,

Your most obedient, very humble servant,

R. HAMILTON.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR SIMCOE TO THE LORDS OF TRADE AND PLANTATIONS.—1792.

Lt.-Gov.
Simcoe to
Lords of
Trade, 1792.

The fur trade has hitherto been the staple of Canada, and the protection of it, until the established Government of Upper Canada, seems to have been the primary object of all the military arrangements and consequent settlements in the Upper Province.

The actual state and general importance of this trade must be perfectly known to their lordships, by the very advantageous circumstance, in all respects, of the port of Quebec being the sole place from whence its produce can be exported to Great Britain. My observations on this head will, therefore, be confined to what may tend to the present protection or future increase of some of its branches. The trade to the North-West, which is carried on by a powerful and enterprising Company, is at the most valuable branch of this commerce. Although the route of this traffic be through the Province of Upper Canada, it is so far without the inhabited part of it that I cannot offer any report on the general state of this branch of the trade, but what your lordships can better collect from that of Lower Canada.

The trade carried on from Michillimackinac, which is at present the general place of deposit upon Lake Huron, to those rivers which flow into the Mississippi, appears of the utmost importance, as offering the greatest probability of future advantages.

I beg leave to submit to your lordships that, under the singular regulations which now subsist between Great Britain, Spain, and the United States, it might be of great public advantage if, without exciting the jealousy of Spain, a British factory could be established on the western banks of Mississippi, perhaps opposite to the mouth of the Ouseconsing, in some spot of land well adapted to the following purposes: general protection, the building of houses, store-houses, and shipping. The factory might be established on nearly the same plan offered to consideration for the Miami.

The lands of the Indians might be purchased by the Crown with all due solemnity, and an annual quantity of goods, to the amount possibly of £500, might be punctually delivered at Michillimackinac, by the King's Superintendent, to the agent of the factory.

The factors should have no monopoly of the trade; their advantages should result from the occupation of such parts of the territory to be purchased, as might not at present, or at any future period, be wanted for the purpose of the Crown, and from the influence which they must naturally acquire as the distributors of the annual presents, which should be given to the savages for the free passage of the British traders by the Fox and Ouseconsing [? Ouseconsing] Rivers. The presents may be deducted from the general allotment made to the Indians, and need not be additional to the annual quantity; means may be easily devised to secure the annual delivery of these presents by the factors to the Indians.

The advantages would be many; a considerable trade might be opened with the Spanish as well as with the Indians; such presents as are suitable to the Indian trade which the Spanish Government annually permit to be sent from Great Britain to New Orleans, would probably, by this channel of communication, operate to a wider extent, and become of greater benefit to the British nation. It is generally asserted, though perhaps without solid foundation, that the subjects of the United States on the Ohio and on the other rivers which flow into the Mississippi, will find it advantageous to build ships, and loading them with the produce of these countries, send them down the Mississippi, and sell both the ships and cargo at a foreign market. The establishment provided would effect a similar advantage and with fewer difficulties, for if, as concurrent circumstances seem to be necessary, the Spanish Government should wish for an open or understood guarantee of her American dominions by Great Britain, it is obvious she would rather encourage than oppose an establishment on the Mississippi, whose object should by no means whatsoever be the extension of territory or of force, but simply of commerce. She would also particularly encourage that commerce if, as is probable, it would alienate the inhabitants of Kentucky and Cumberland Rivers from the United States, and render them totally independent of the Atlantic for their manufactures. This purpose would be effected by the British factory being able to furnish such manufactures in exchange for the cotton, tobacco, and other articles of commerce of those increasing countries, and by such means divert them from their attention to the forcing of the passage of the Mississippi, in opposition to the Spanish interests, but which their present dependency on the United States imposes upon them. The intercourse which this factory would have with Kentucky, etc., might probably contribute to turn the course of trade, in taking articles from the circuitous channel the European commodities must take to pass by the Gulph of Florida into the Mississippi, to the communication of those rivers which intersect with Lake Michigan, the Illinois, or the London market, to the inevitable benefit of Great Britain and her Colonies. The Atlantic Governments of the United States seem totally to have forgotten that their colonies (such may be considered all settlements since the peace of 1783, beyond the Alleganys), in the room of continuing the mediums by which they are to possess themselves of the fur trade, and other imaginary sources of wealth, will most undoubtedly make every due advantage of their own situation, and, in the business of commerce at least, not sacrifice their interests to those of the great Confederacy. If the Atlantic [Governments] cannot subsist, as seems to be admitted, without credit, the principle is applicable in a greater degree to their colonists. If it be the interest of the British merchant to give that credit, he may do it as safely upon the returns of the Cumberland River by the way of the Mississippi and the Ousconsing, as risk it by those of James River in Virginia, or the Delaware. It is true the British merchant is in the habit of giving such to one set of planters but not to the other.

The proposed factory seems to be an advanced station from whence a commerce, its advantages and disadvantages, may be contemplated, duly compared, and properly balanced. To the observations on this important subject, which I respectfully submit to your Lordships' consideration, I beg to make the following deduction,—that as Kentucky establishes her credit or her capital, she will, in setting up for herself, not only make use of all the commercial advantages she can obtain from the United States, but she will extend her views to the fur trade on the western side of the Mississippi, unless some such permanent factory, on a greater or less plan, shall bar the avenues to the ports of the river, by pre-occupying the good will of the nations, and by underselling all rivals, or possibly by diverting the attention and jealousy of those who may be disposed to become rivals, by displaying the advantages that a more general and less precarious traffic shall offer between the colonists on the eastern side of the Mississippi and the British Empire. It may be also of serious consideration that, if the credit and capital of the British merchants invigorate the merchants of Philadelphia, Baltimore, etc., it is evident that the merchants of Kentucky, deriving their means of traffic from the credit which those of Philadelphia, etc., give to them, have no intermediate intercourse with the original fountain of supply, and are totally uninfluenced by any connections with them from whom they draw their primary support. The basis of this traffic arises from the product of the original loan or credit of the British merchants. It seems, therefore, in a national view, that this intermediate agent, the Atlantic American merchant, should, as far as possible, not be the medium through which British credit supports the inhabitant of Kentucky in his mercantile or agricultural pursuits, but that such a medium should be sought for in a British subject, the inhabitant of Upper Canada. By these means the inhabitants of Kentucky, having a nearer interest and more intimate transaction with Great Britain, through her subjects, would naturally be disposed to support a mutual alliance and friendship with that nation beneficial to both countries, so opposite to the views of the popular party, who have given their present supposed leaders. It is generally understood that above half of the inhabitants of Kentucky and the western waters are already inclined to a connection with Great Britain.

Proceedings in

In the course of these observations, the trade of Detroit next comes under consideration. The war that has so long continued on the frontier of this district, has materially affected its commerce with the Indians; in particular, those on the Wabash some time since retired below a post that the United States held at Vincennes, and of course the produce of their hunts centred among those people. It is understood that these nations have now returned to their former place of residence, and that the commerce will revert to its former channel, unless the armies of the United States take post on the Miami River, the channel by which the most considerable part of the peltries are conveyed to Detroit.

It is said that in consequence of the Indian warriors, who are the best hunters, being so often called off to defend their country, the increase of deer, etc., has been prodigious. Some boats are sent from Detroit to the St. Joseph's, on Lake Michigan, as well as to Sandusky [and] Cayahaga [Cleveland], but 10 their returns are of no great value. This settlement supplies the North-West trade annually with eighty thousand barrels of flour, and the quantity is increasing.

Lieut.-Gov.
Simcoe to
Trade, 1792.

The consequence of Detroit, depending on the trade it has hitherto drawn to itself, by being as it were the factory in this part of the country, must necessarily be gradually opening as their settlements are forming by the British or United States in its vicinity in the Niagara district, which may be included from Long Point, on Lake Erie, to York, on Lake Ontario. The peltries are considerable, but in general they are smuggled into the United States, where the high price they bear, added to the facility that a woody and unsettled country gives for contraband traffic, are inducements which there is reason to believe few or none of the traders or factors resist. * *

The inhabitants of Lower Canada are almost entirely settled on the banks of the St. Lawrence, and 20 at no great distance from its waters in the Upper Colonies. Factories in the Upper country were formed on the same system when Upper Canada was erected into a Province. It was apprehended by some merchants that its settlements must be continued in the same manner, and no doubt they would have been so, were such persons to limit the views of mankind by what they fancy to be their own immediate interests. * * *

The regulation of the Indian Traders, when it should be seasonable, so far as to restrain those distant people by the dread of some legitimate authority, will be a work of difficulty, but of the most absolute necessity. The outrages and misconduct of many persons in that country loudly call for intervention; a closer knowledge and communication with those countries within the jurisdiction of Upper Canada, but without its habitable parts, will be acquired by the alteration I have proposed. * * * 30

It would be worthy of mature consideration, whether a systematic extension of factories on the principles which I have submitted as proper on the Mississippi, might not be the means at once of securing the Indians in that quarter, by public benefit, and personal influence, and of opening a vast mart among the inhabitants of Spanish America and those of the United States; and if any savings can be made from the average of public money hitherto allowed to the Indian Department, whether the application of such to the system proposed would not be an object of national policy, add to the strength and power of Upper Canada, and by no means invalidate the system which I must ever contend to be the best policy, that of not permitting any agricultural settlements beyond the peninsula included between the Lakes Ontario, Erie, and Huron.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY DUNDAS TO LORD DORCHESTER.

WHITEHALL, 15th March, 1792.

Right Hon.
H. Dundas to Lord Dorchester, 15
March, 1792.

MY LORD,—Your Lordship being already apprised of the intention of His Majesty's servants to endeavour to secure whatever may operate as an effectual and lasting barrier between the frontiers or territories of the American States and his Majesty's dominions in that quarter, I shall now only refer your Lordship to my letter of the 16th Septembe. last, and to the late unhappy contest between those Indians and the States, to prove the expediency of such a measure.

To obtain so beneficial an end, and at the same time to heal the difficulties which at present exist, a plan was suggested in some late communication between your Lordship and His Majesty's servants, which your Lordship appeared to think extremely advisable, if it could be carried into execution.

The idea suggested was, that His Majesty and the American States should join in securing exclusively a certain portion of territory lying between and extending the whole length of the lines of their respective frontiers, within which both parties should stipulate not to suffer their subjects to retain, or acquire, any lands whatever.

And although, in consequence of such a cession, the frontier posts now in His Majesty's hands would be given up, your Lordship appeared to coincide with them in opinion, that the objection to this measure would be much lessened by the circumstance of their not being to come into the possession of the American States, but for to be ceded for the express purpose of becoming part of such territory as is to be reserved for the undisturbed and independent possession of the Indians. By placing the Indians in such a position, they will become a natural barrier against mutual encroachments, and at the same time hold a situation in which their attachment and friendly disposition to His Majesty's subjects may be capable of the most servicable operation. These and various other considerations, from which the most beneficial consequences must accrue to this country, have induced His Majesty's servants to adopt such measures as appear best calculated to carry the plan into execution. Lord Gronville has in consequence received the King's directions to authorize Mr. Hammond to propose His Majesty's good offices between the American States and the Indians, for the establishment of a permanent peace between them, founded on the principles of securing to the latter such a tract of country as has been already mentioned, and in furtherance of which the King is most graciously pleased to grant his aid and assistance, and to relinquish, if need be, the posts actually in his possession, the more effectually to secure and establish so important an object.

For this purpose, I must desire your Lordship to lose no time in transmitting to me your ideas in respect to such precise limits (whether the same are in a greater or less degree favourable to the interests of this country) as, being secured to the Indians, would in your judgment be sufficient to answer the end proposed.

In doing this, I wish particularly to call your attention to that part of the country in question which lies to the south and south-east of Lake Ontario, and the upper part of the St. Lawrence, as a proposal made to your Lordship on this subject by some of the Indians, previous to your leaving Quebec, does not appear to be quite distinct, and as the near approach of the American frontier, in that quarter, to the settled part of His Majesty's Provinces, appears to render this an object deserving of particular consideration.

Your Lordship's intimate acquaintance with His Majesty's interest in that quarter of the world and with the relative situations of his subjects, and of those who are to form the barrier between them and the American States, makes it unnecessary for me to enter into any detail.

I shall only add that, in ascertaining the territory to be granted to the Indians, three points I can see are principally to be attended to: one, to secure as much as possible our intercourse and trade with the Indians; the second is, that the interposed country, to serve as a barrier, should extend along the whole line of the frontier of His Majesty's dominions, and that of the United States of America. And lastly, to take care that their intervention, and the space to be allotted them, shall be most considerable in such parts of His Majesty's frontier, as from their situation are most obvious to attack or interruption from any quarter belonging to the American States.

I am, &c., &c.,

HENRY DUNDAS.

To Lord Dorchester.

GEORGE HAMMOND, ESQ., TO LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR SIMCOE.

PHILADELPHIA, April 21st, 1792.

I was fully sensible of all the advantages which Great Britain would have derived from her mediation being admitted; but I saw from the first that the jealousy of her acquiring either an additional influence over the Indian tribes, or the right of intervening in any future disputes, would be an insuperable impediment to the request or acceptance of that expedient on the part of this country.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR SIMCOE TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY DUNDAS.

QUEBEC, April 28th, 1792.

I am happy to find that these communications have appeared of importance to Mr. Hammond, as in a letter of the 3rd March, he says: "Capt. Stevenson was so obliging as to leave with me a copy of a representation addressed to you by the merchants of Montreal; and also a map of the country to the northward of Lakes Huron and Superior. When my negotiations with this Government are more advanced than they are at present, these documents will be of essential service to me, as they convey to my mind a much more correct idea of the nature and importance of that country than I had ever before entertained. I could, however, have wished that the position of the Grand Portage, on Lake Superior, had been laid down on the map with somewhat greater precision."

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR SIMCOE TO MR. DUNDAS.

QUEBEC, April 28, 1792.

Lieut.-Gov.
Simcoe to Right Hon.
H. Dundas,
28th April,

I beg to observe that, understanding that the agent of the United States holds out the language that all our trade with the American Indians, in that territory which had been ceded by the treaty of peace to the United States, would become illegal and contraband in case the forts should be given up, I thought it my duty to state to Mr. Hammond such a dangerous assumption unwarranted by the definitive construction placed by the Treaty of Utrecht upon the intercourse which Great Britain and France had with the Indians, and which, considering them as free nations, gave to the subjects of both countries the right of treating with them, and carefully secured to the Indians the liberty attached to independent nations, of carrying their commercial articles to such places in the dominions of either nation as they should prefer. And this Article of the Treaty of Utrecht was never contravened till in the year 1756, when the violation of it on the part of the French, as is generally known (but particularly as stated by an author of the United States, Gordon, professedly writing under the directions of Mr. Washington and Congress), was the occasion of the war that broke out between Great Britain and France; nor can the claims of the American Indians to the natural privileges of independent nations, guaranteed to them by their European neighbours in the compact of Utrecht, be more amply expressed and implied than in the general representation of the state of the Indian Department, by Sir William Johnson, in 1763, to the Lords of Trade, that although fair speeches, promises, and the convenience of trade induced them to afford both us and the French a settlement in the country, yet they never understood such settlements as a dominion. And the Indian sense of their own dependency is brought down to so late a period previous to the late war, as the 2nd of February, 1769, when a Seneca chief, in his complaints against the officer commanding at Niagara, said, as appears by Sir William Johnson's report, "We are free people and accustomed to sell whatever we have, to whom and where we like best." I think it may not be improper to communicate this statement to you, Sir, as elucidating the ground the merchants of Montreal, in their Memoir No. 2, have taken up. At the same time I am well aware that His Majesty's Ministers, being masters of all the documents which establish or counterbalance the value of the fur trade to Great Britain, in that point of view already possess more precise information than can be collected in this country; but it is possible that a particular view of this commerce, considered in the light of an open trade, common to the British colonies, as the representatives of France, and the United States, as those of Great Britain, prior to the year 1763, and subject to no other difficulty than those of amicable competition, appearing to be a matter of great magnitude, may be illustrated by some observations on the actual state of this country..... I consider the fur trade in its present foundation to be of no use whatever to the colony of Upper Canada; an open trade may result from the happy form of Government that is to be established in that country, but it appears doubtful whether even that would add to its prosperity; it certainly would detract from its population, and ultimately, debasing the morals of the country, by the ill habits of the coureurs des bois, would injure its industry, the source of its future revenue. But, Sir, it would appear to me to be productive of great advantages, if, leaving the fur trade of the North-West parts in the hands of the Companies who possess or contend for the monopoly of that trade, the Indians themselves, who live near the settled parts of Upper Canada, will be induced to bring the produce of their hunts to those towns and settlements which are about to arise in their vicinity.

Proceedings in America, 1783-1794.

"The year after the Peace, a grant of 600,000 acres of land, in the neighbourhood of the Ohio, of the finest American land, was made out to certain noblemen, merchants, and others, of Westminster, London, and Virginia, who associated under the title of the Ohio Company. The Governor of Canada obtained early intelligence of it, and was alarmed with the apprehension that a scheme was in agitation which would for ever deprive the French of the advantages arising from the trade with the Twightwees, and cut off the communication so beneficial to the Colonies of Louisiana and Canada. He wrote, therefore, to the Governors of New York and Pennsylvania, acquainting them that the English traders had encroached on the French territories by trading with their Indians, and that if they did not desist, he should be obliged to seize them wherever they were found. This was the first time that either French or British had pretended to any exclusive trade with the Indians, or even the declared friends and allies of either, for it was expressly stipulated at the Treaty of Utrecht that on both sides the two nations should enjoy full liberty of going and coming among the Indians of either side, on account of trade, and that the natives of the Indian countries should, with the same liberty, resort as they pleased to the British or French Colonies for the purposes of trade, without any molestation from either the British or French subjects."

P. CAMPBELL TO ROBERT HAMILTON, Esq., 1792.

I fell in with several gentlemen of the United States.....and officers of all ranksand found that attacking the British outposts would be a very popular measure.....the only stop to it is the war with the Indians, and that they are after to attempt it by a coup de main, or surprise them by open force.

P. Campbell
to R. Hamilton.

They say if the first should fail the last would not. I cannot, therefore, help thinking, that Colonel Simcoe ought to support the Indians openly, even at the risk of being recalled; and if the British Government allow them to be crushed, that they will repent it when too late, and beyond their power to retrieve. It haunts me most to think that these designing political rascals will wrench the outposts out of your hands, probably when least suspected, and brave you to the face when it is done.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR SIMCOE AND COLONEL A. MCKEE TO GEORGE HAMMOND, Esq., 1792.

Suppose a boundary should be settled on the following terms:

1. The Indian territory to form a line separating the British territory and that of the States.
2. The posts of Niagara, Oswego, Detroit, to be demolished and not held by either, and included in the Indian territory.
3. Michillimackinac to be evacuated.
4. The Genessee territory, but no posts, to be continued to the United States, and as a proper balance to Great Britain.
5. From the Rapids of the Miami River, or from the Rivière au Raisin, on the east, to the River St. Clair on the west, and two leagues deep to the south: this seems to have been the original allotment of Congress, therefore, more reasonable to presume that they would admit it. By these proposals being adopted, the settlement of Detroit would be amenable to the British jurisdiction, otherwise they would become lawless vagabonds, and, it is obvious, injurious to the system of peace so necessary to the United States Indians, and the British. The settlements extend to the Miami Rapids.

Lieut.-Gov.
Simcoe and
Col. McKee

This arrangement, it is probable, would perpetuate peace between the different nations.

SIR,—I must beg leave to call Your Excellency's attention to a circumstance that may happen should it be the determination of Washington, as I believe it is, to carry on the Indian war, and in consequence to refuse the British intervention.

In this event, as he seems already to have quitted the original and untenable grounds of the war—that this Indian territory was ceded by Great Britain—he will probably, from our influence with the savages, deduct the necessity of perseverance in his operations.

The main body of General Wayne's army..... I conceive may be employed to cut off all communication between the Six Nations and Western Indians by proceeding up the Alleghany to Fort 10 Franklin, and ultimately to Presqu' Isle. By this position General Wayne.....will be on the most practical and direct route, by land, to NiagaraTheir establishment at Presqu' Isle would include the building of batteries and proper gun-boats, and ultimately the forming an establishment at Miamis Bay. It is in the possible event of the United States equipping a naval armament at this or any part of the Lakes that I wish for Your Excellency's instructions, whether I shall not consider it hostility. That it would be so in the event cannot be denied; that the possession of the Forts has always hitherto been supposed to secure that of the navigation of the lakes is a known fact; and that popular conversation has led the minds of the inhabitants of this country to expect an immediate opposition on our part, of any armament appearing upon the lakes, is a matter of general notoriety. I find no general order to direct my conduct, but that force must be repelled by force; and this interpretation I should 20 certainly place upon any attempt of the United States to pass through those communications, both shores of which are in His Majesty's possession.

June 14th, 1793.

The Commissioners for making peace with the United States have remained in this house since the 17th May. They are in expectation of hearing from Colonel McKee when the Indian nations shall be assembled. All the public conversations that I have had with those gentlemen is detailed in the enclosed papers, to which I am to add that, upon my reading to them Lord Dorchester's speech of the 15th August, 1791, to the deputies of the several nations, and the boundary line then given to Your 30 Excellency, they have desired copies thereof, particularly as it stated those documents to be those on which I founded my answers to the speeches that have hitherto passed between me and the Indian Americans.

LORD DORCHESTER'S ADDRESS TO THE DEPUTIES OF THE INDIAN CONFEDERACY, FEBRUARY, 1794.*

Lord Dorchester's address to Indian Deputies,

I was in expectation of hearing from the people of the United States what was required by them; I hoped that I should have been able to bring you together and make you friends. I have waited long and listened with great attention, but have not heard one word from them. I flattered myself with the hope that the line proposed in the year '83, to separate us from the United States, which was immediately broken by themselves as soon as the Peace was signed, would have been mended or a new one drawn in an amicable manner, but here also I have been disappointed. Since my return I find no appearance of 40 a line remains; and from the manner in which the people of the United States rush on and act and talk on this side, and from what I learn of their conduct towards the sea, I shall not be surprised if we are at war with them in the course of the present year; and if so a line must be drawn by the warriors.

You talk of selling your lands to the State of New York. I have told you that there is no line between them and us. I shall acknowledge no lands to be theirs which have been encroached on by them since the year 1783. They then broke the peace, as they kept it not on their part, it doth not bind on ours. They then destroyed their right of pre-emption. Therefore all their reproaches towards us since that time, and all the purchases made by them, I consider as infringement on the King's rights. And when a line is drawn between them and us, be it peace or war, they must lose all their improvements and houses on our side of it. Those people must all be gone who do not obtain leave to become the King's subjects.

LORD DORCHESTER TO LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR SIMCOE.

QUEBEC, 17th March, 1794.

SIR,—The account received by Lieut.-Col. England of Mr. Wayne's intention to close us up at Detroit, I think the more probable from the conduct which I find has been pursued for the two last summers on the side of Lake Champlain, where the King's sovereignty has been completely overturned within the posts; and they now impudently tell the Commandant that his jurisdiction extends no further than his guns; even this, I expect, in a short time they will not allow.

Self defence, therefore, requires we should prevent similar evils from extending further, and that, for our own security at the Detroit, we should occupy nearly the same posts on the Miamis River which were demolished after the peace. This, I think, would cover Detroit and our communication with that settlement from Lake Erie; but if given up, the post, I apprehend, cannot be maintained. At the same time that all necessary measures for our defence are taken on the land side, the lakes must not be neglected; it may for this purpose be necessary to arm the ships and vessels completely, in order to preserve our command on the water also; and if you find this expedient, you will order it accordingly. Your own experience and local knowledge will point out to you the force to occupy the Miamis, as well as the most advantageous positions, without confining yourself to the spots we occupied in 1783. You will therefore order such force from Detroit to the Miamis River as you may judge sufficient for that service, as soon as the season and other circumstances will permit, observing only the general directions to preserve Detroit from being straightened either by land or water. At the same time that you order a portion of troops from Detroit, with the artillery requisite for that purpose it may not be amiss to consider what reinforcement you may draw from other parts within your command without exposing any to insult, and what assistance you may have from the militia; also whether, by collecting all the force in your power to assemble, you would be in a condition to resist Wayne's attack, should he attempt by force to take possession of the country. I enclose a copy of my answer to the message from the Indians of the upper nations, which will sufficiently explain itself.

I am, with regard, Sir,
Your most obedient, humble servant,
DORCHESTER.

Colonel Simcoe,
Commanding the Forces in Upper Canada.

LORD DORCHESTER TO LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR SIMCOE.

QUEBEC, 16th April, 1794.

SIR,—The frequent frauds and embezzlements of the King's stores belonging to the Indian department at Michilimackinac (notwithstanding the vigilance of the Commandant) have induced me to consign the supplies of this year to Colonel McKee, and I have appointed him Superintendent of Indian affairs for the districts of Michilimackinac and Detroit, that he may the better check all abuses, and introduce due order into the department. * *

The Lieut.-Governor of that Province, Captain Trudeau, who has been remarkably civil to our traders, forwarded the message by a white man, a Shawanese, well known to Colonel McKee. In a very polite letter which he writes to me, this gentleman observes: "Le Gouverneur en a donné connoissance du contenu, ce qui me fait présumer qu'il n'avoit pas des notions bien parfaites du local, lorsqu'il a porté ses vœux sur votre continent." The Shawanese was twenty days from St. Louis, and expected to be only fourteen on his return.

It has been intimated to him that it would be easy for the Spanish, if requisite, to co-operate with us by their gun-boats which they have on the Ohio, and, by occupying the mouth of the Wabash, to give a similar support to the intermediate Indians, as our possessions at the mouth of the Miamis of the Lake affords.

I must observe to your Lordship, that a few days previous to my arrival at the Miamis, a speech had been sent by the Spanish Lieut.-Governor to the neighbouring nations, and which had been transmitted to Detroit, calling upon them for their assistance, and promising the most active support. The speech, it is believed, has produced the most important effects, scarcely leaving a single Indian nation without the determined resolution of attacking the United States; in particular, the Chickasaws, before the departure of the Shawanese, had cut off ten of the Kaskaskias, suspected of being well affected to the United States. It was also intimated to the Shawanese, that by the route of Chicago it was extremely practicable for British troops to pass.

I have always been of opinion that a post at Chicago would be more eminently necessary to His Majesty's interests, in case of war, than that of Michilimackinac. I am confirmed in this belief by existing circumstances as represented by Colonel McKee.

At this place there are some people, refugees from Detroit, and a black chief, who have constantly been in the pay of the United States, and who, by some possible means, have endeavoured to alienate the Indians from the British interests. Colonel McKee thinks it very necessary that an Agent should reside in that quarter, as till of late has been usual.

In my answer to Mr. Trudeau, I enclosed to him your Lordship's late proclamation against the Jacobin emissaries; observed to him that the French inhabitants of the Illinois and at Vincennes were eminently of this description. By the account of the Shawanese, the Spanish Government acts with great vigour in that part of the country, and he expressed his surprise at the very different language which was held by the British Canadians, in respect to the subject of the United States, to what was permitted at St. Louis. * * *

NAVY HALL, July 3rd, 1794.

Lieut.-Gov.
Simcoe to Right Hon.
H. Dundas,
3 July,
1784.

It may not be improper to observe that the original and material aggression of the United States appears to have been their Government immediately changing the relative situation in which the peace of 1783 had left the contending parties, namely, themselves and Great Britain, by endeavouring to possess themselves of the whole of the Indian territories by fraudulent or by forcible means; and in consequence, by the annihilation of this intermediate power between them and the British possessions, occasioning the destruction of the whole of the commerce, and endangering the safety of His Majesty's Provinces. To prove this intended alteration, the Act of Congress for the formation of the new States, and the names given them by the committee of which Mr. Jefferson was President, are sufficient evidences. That it was some fraudulent means used, appears upon the face of the purchases made from the Indians, and His Majesty's honoured name is brought into attain by the governors of the country, to give a sanction to their purposes. The fraud consists in the affirmation that the Indian territory had been given away as "the price of peace." This is the term which Governor St. Clair made use of, and which the Corn Planter in February 8th, 1791, intimates in his speech to the President, Washington, to be the language of the people who purchased the lands from the Indians, and demands from him an explanation. * * *

J. G. SIMCOE.

Rt. Hon. Henry Dundas,

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR SIMCOE TO LORD DORCHESTER.

NAVY HALL, Aug. 18, 1794.

MY LORD,—I do myself the honour of enclosing to your Lordship the communication which I received late last night from Lieut.-Col. England and Col. McKee.

I shall lose no time in proceeding to Detroit with all the force I can muster, leaving the garrison of Niagara with its usual compliment of infantry, and ordering the artillery then at Kingston to supply in part those whom I shall think necessary to carry with me to Detroit.

The whole detail of this arrangement will be transmitted to your Lordship so soon as it shall be decided upon. I cannot flatter myself with much hopes of repelling Mr. Wayne, and feel that my own character as a military officer must suffer in the extreme; but an honourable devotion to the public service bears me up above all personal consideration, and it is possible that my character as Civil Lieut.-Governor may enable me to promote His Majesty's interests. The people of the States, as predicted, have heavy artillery at Le Beuf. The Six Nations, I believe, remain steadfast in their opposition to the establishment at Presque Isle.

Should your Lordship be reinforced, and at this crisis augment the force in this Province so as to enable me to meet Mr. Wayne on equal terms, and His Majesty's troops in such an event be successful I cannot but foresee the perfect safety of the Canadas as the result of such a measure, as, in all probability, if he be permitted to establish himself at the Detroit, it may eventually occasion their loss.

I have the honour to be, etc.,

J. G. SIMCOE.

DESPATCH FROM LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR SIMCOE.

NAVY HALL, August 30, 1794.

SIR,—Since the close of my despatch of the 10th instant, information of the most serious aspect has been received from the Indian country.

General Chapin, the Agent for the United States to the Six Nations, has sent to meet those people immediately at Buffalo Creek; and his messenger intimates that Mr. Washington has complied with their demand so far as to give directions that Presque Isle shall not be occupied, and the Forts at Le Beuf shall be abandoned. Lieutenant-Colonel England informs me that Wayne is rapidly advancing (by report) with near four thousand troops. But what is alarming, the Hurons have peremptorily returned the hatchet which they had formerly received from Governor Hamilton, demanding him to sharpen it and instantly to join them, or they must cease to defend their country. The next step, in all probability, would be to defend ours. The report in Wayne's army is, that he has positive orders to reduce our post at the Miamis, and in the ensuing spring to attack Detroit. I have despatched Captain Bunburg, of the 8th Regiment, to occupy Turtle Island, at the entrance of the Miamis Bay, hoping by a continuation of our gun-boats and vessels at that place to prevent any access to the Miamis River or egress from it. If Mr. Wayne pushes on to Detroit, you, Sir, must of course be prepared to hear that it is in his possession. I have characterized it truly to Lord Dorchester, on his arrival, as a "nominal fortress, with a nominal garrison."

I have the honour to be, with all respect, etc., etc., proper measures shall in the interval be taken by concert between the Government of the United States and His Majesty's Governor-General in America, for settling the previous arrangements which may be necessary respecting the delivery of the said posts; the United States in the meantime, at their discretion, extending their settlements to any part within the said boundary line, except within the precincts or jurisdiction of any of the said posts. All settlers and traders, within the precincts or jurisdiction of the said posts, shall continue to enjoy, unmolested, all their property of every kind, and shall be protected therein. They shall be at full liberty to remain there or to remove with all or any part of their effects, and it shall also be free to them to sell their lands, houses or effects, or to retain the property thereof, at their discretion. Such of them as shall continue to reside within the said boundary lines, shall not be compelled to become citizens of the United States, or to take any oath of allegiance to the Government thereof; but they shall be at full liberty so to do if they think proper, and they shall make and declare their election within one year after the evacuation aforesaid. And all persons who shall continue there after the expiration of the said year, without having declared their intention of remaining subjects of His Britannic Majesty, shall be considered as having elected to become citizens of the United States.

Treaty of 1794.

ARTICLE III.—It is agreed that it shall at all times be free to His Majesty's subjects, and to the citizens of the United States, and also to the Indians dwelling on either side of the said boundary line, freely to pass and re-pass by land or inland navigation, into the respective territories and countries of the two parties on the continent of America (the country within the limits of the Hudson's Bay Company only excepted), and to navigate all the lakes, rivers, and waters thereof, and freely to carry on trade and commerce with each other. But it is understood that this Article does not extend to the admission of vessels of the United States into the sea ports, harbours, bays, or creeks of His Majesty's said territories, nor into such parts of the rivers in His Majesty's said territories as are between the mouth there and the highest port of entry from the sea, except in small vessel trading bona fide between Montreal and Quebec, under such regulations as shall be established to prevent the possibility of any frauds in this respect. Nor to the admission of British vessels from the sea into the rivers of the United States, beyond the highest ports of entry for foreign vessels from the sea. The River Mississippi shall, however, according to the treaty of peace, be entirely open to both parties; and it is further agreed that all the ports and places on the eastern side, to whichever of the parties belonging, may freely be resorted to and used by both parties, in as ample a manner as any of the Atlantic ports or places of the United States, or any of the ports or places of His Majesty in Great Britain.

All goods and merchandize whose importation into His Majesty's said territories in America shall not be entirely prohibited, may freely, for the purposes of commerce, be carried into the same in the manner aforesaid, by the citizens of the United States, and such goods and merchandize shall be subject to no higher or other duties than would be payable by His Majesty's subjects on the importation of the same from Europe into the said territories. And in like manner, all goods and merchandize, whose importation into the United States shall not be wholly prohibited, may freely, for the purposes of commerce, be carried into the same, in the manner aforesaid, by His Majesty's subjects, and such goods and merchandize shall be subject to no higher or other duties than would be payable by the citizens of the United States on the importation of the same in American vessels into the Atlantic ports of the said States; and all goods not prohibited to be exported from the said territories respectively, may in like manner be carried out of the same by the two parties respectively, paying duty as aforesaid.

No duty of entry shall ever be levied by either party on peltries brought by land or inland navigation into the said territories respectively; nor shall the Indians passing or repassing with their own proper goods and effects of whatever nature, pay for the same any import or duty whatever; but goods in bales, or other large packages, unusual among Indians, shall not be considered as goods belonging bona fide to Indians.

No higher or other tolls or rates of ferriage than what are or shall be payable by natives, shall be demanded on either side; and no duties shall be payable on any goods which shall merely be carried over any of the portages or carrying-places on either side for the purpose of being immediately re-imbarked and carried to some other place or places; but as by this stipulation it is only meant to secure to each party a free passage across the portages on both sides, it is agreed that this exemption from duty shall extend only to such goods as are carried in the usual and direct road across the portage, and are not attempted to be in any manner sold or exchanged during their passage across the same, and proper regulations may be established to prevent the possibility of any frauds in this respect.

As this article is intended to render in a great degree the local advantages of each party common to both, and thereby to promote a disposition favourable to friendship and good neighbourhood, it is agreed that the respective Governments will mutually promote this amicable intercourse by causing speedy and impartial justice to be done, and necessary protection to be extended to all who may be concerned therein.

10 ARTICLE IV.—Whereas it is uncertain whether the River Mississippi extends so far to the northward as to be intersected by a line to be drawn due west from the Lake of the Woods, in the manner mentioned in the Treaty of Peace between His Majesty and the United States; it is agreed, that measures should be taken in concert with His Majesty's Government in America, and the Government of the United States, for making a joint survey of the said river from one degree of latitude below the Falls of St. Anthony, to the principal source or sources of the said river, and also the parts adjacent thereto; and that if, on the result of such survey, it should appear that the said river would not be intersected by such a line as is above mentioned, the two parties will thereupon proceed by amicable negotiation, to regulate the boundary line in that quarter as well as all other points to be adjusted between the said parties, according to justice and mutual convenience, and in conformity to the intent

TREATY OF GHENT, BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES, CONCLUDED THE 24TH OF DECEMBER, 1814.

ARTICLE VI.—Whereas by the former Treaty of Peace, that portion of the boundary of the United States from the point where the forty-fifth degree of north latitude strikes the River Iroquois or Cataraguy, to the Lake Superior, was declared to be "along the middle of said river into Lake Ontario through the middle of said lake until it strikes the communication by water between that lake and Lake Erie; thence along the middle of said communication into Lake Erie; through the middle of said lake until it arrives at the water communication between that lake and Lake Huron; thence along the middle of said water communication into the Lake Huron; thence through the middle of said lake to the water communication between that lake and Lake Superior;" and whereas doubts have arisen what was the middle of the said river, lakes, and water communications, and whether certain islands lying in the same were within the dominions of His Britannic Majesty or of the United States. In order therefore finally to decide these doubts, they shall be referred to two Commissioners, to be appointed, sworn, and authorized to act exactly in the manner directed with respect to those mentioned in the next preceding article, unless otherwise specified in this present article. The said Commissioners shall meet, in the first instance, at Albany, in the State of New York, and shall have power to adjourn to such other place or places as they shall think fit. The said Commissioners shall, by a report or declaration, under their hands and seals, designate the boundary through the said river, lakes, and water communications, and decide to which of the two contracting parties the several islands lying 20 within the said river, lakes, and water communications, do respectively belong, in conformity with the true intent of the said Treaty of one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three. And both parties agree to consider such designation and decision as final and conclusive. And in the event of the said two Commissioners differing, or both or either of them refusing, declining, or wilfully omitting to act, such reports, declarations, or statements shall be made by them, or either of them, and such reference to a friendly Sovereign or State shall be made in all respects as in the latter part of the Fourth Article is contained, and in as full a manner as if the same was herein repeated.

It being understood that all the water communications and all the usual portages along the line from Lake Superior to the Lake of the Woods, and also Grand Portage, from the shore of Lake Superior to the Pigeon River, as now actually used, shall be free and open to the use of the subjects and citizens of both countries.

PETITION OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY TO CHARLES II, IN 1682*

May it please Your Majesty:

We, the Governor and Committee of the Company of the Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, have by Your Majesty's gracious allowance seen and preserved an extract of a late letter from Monsieur de la Barre, the present Governor of Canada, which hath been delivered by the French ambassador as a memorial of complaint that the Hudson's Bay Company do begin to make habitations and to erect forts upon the land within the said Bay, of which he assumes that the King, his master, hath taken possession above twenty years since, in which cause if they proceed, he threatens to drive 10 them out of the country by force, but desires Your Majesty should be advertised that he is not willing to do anything which may displease, except he may be forced thereunto.

Hudson's Bay
Company's petition to Charles II
1682.

Whereupon Your Majesty having commanded us, who have the government of the affairs of the said Company, to give an account of their title and to the Bay and to the lands and territories thereabout, and to the trade and commerce which they have with the Indians.

We do in all humility represent to Your Majesty, that the subjects of Your Imperial Crown have for above one hundred years last past, discovered and frequented the said bay and the rivers, islands and territories thereabout, and from time to time in the reigns of several of Your Majesty's Royal predecessors have taken possession of several places there, and that none of the subjects of His Most Christian Majesty have ever been known to sail or traffic within the said Bay.

20 That about fifteen years since, some members of the said Company did adventure to make discoveries within the said bay, and by the good conduct of one Zachary Gillam, in the Nonsuch ketch, they discovered a river at the bottom of the said bay upon the East main, where he met with native Indians, and having made a league of friendship with the captain of the said river, and formally purchased both the river itself and the lands thereabouts, he gave it the name of Rupert's river (his highness Prince Rupert being principally concerned in that expedition), and built a fort, which, in honour of Your Majesty, was called Charles fort, and took possession of the said river and all the land and territory thereabout in the name of Your Majesty, and then and there entered into a trade and commerce with the natives, which hath been ever since maintained without any interruption either from the French or others.

30 That therefore Your Majesty was graciously pleased by Your royal letters Patent under Your great seal of England, to incorporate the said Adventurers, and to grant unto them and their successors for ever, all the said Bay and the streights tending thereunto called Hudson's streights, with all the lands and territories, rivers and islands in and about the said bay, and the sole trade and commerce there.

That the forementioned agreement made by Zachary Gillam with the Indians, was afterwards repeated and confirmed with one Charles Baily, who was sent as Governor of the affairs of the Company within the said Bay, with whom Monsieur Frontenac, by his letters bearing date the 8th October, 1673 did conciliate a good intelligence and amity, without complaining of any injury done by the Company in building forts and making settlements and commerce there, or without making any pretence to the lands thereabout, as Monsieur De la Barre, his successor, hath now done.

That since that time we have erected other forts upon the coasts of the said bay, in places more remote from Canada than Charles Fort is, still making solemn compacts and agreements with the natives for the rivers and territories where we have, with great expense, discovered and maintained a trade and commerce which we hope will in time turn to our benefit, and also produce a considerable emolument to Your Majesty and the nation.

Wherefore we doubt not by Your Majesty's royal authority and protection, the Company which hath been of Your Majesty's creation, shall be enabled to defend Your Majesty's undoubted right and their own, within the said bay—wherein never any nation but the subjects of Your Imperial Crown has made discoveries or had any commerce.

Sept., 1699.*

Since the French desire a more express answer to their First Paper, wherein they demand to be maintained in the possession of Fort Bourbon (which they acknowledge the English called Port Nelson) upon this ground of their having made the first discovery and the first settlements, and being dispossessed thereof by the English in a time of peace, saving the right which the Hudson's Bay Company claims under the Imperial Crown of England, both to this particular place of Port Nelson, and all the rest of the Bay, within Hudson's Straits, by the Law of Nations,—we deny the French to be the first discoverers of that place, or to have made the first settlements there, and are ready to prove the contrary on the English side. And the French, in this paper bringing their pretended right of discovery and settlements no higher than the year 1682, and their being dispossessed in 1684, we shall briefly show what sort of possession that was, and how those two actions were conducted.

Mr. Radisson, mentioned in the French paper to have made this settlement for the French at Port Nelson, in 1682, was many years before in England, settled and married an English wife, Sir John Kerk's daughter, was in the interest and service of the English, upon private adventures, before as well as after the incorporation of the Hudson Bay Company. In 1667, when Prince Rupert and other nobles sett out two shipp, Radisson went in the Eagle, Captain Stanard, commander, and in that voyage the name of Rupert's River was given. Againe [in] 1668, and againe in 1669: in this voyage Radisson directed his course to Port Nelson and east anehore before it, went on shoar with one Baley (designed Governour for the English), fixed the King of England's arms there, and left some goods there for trading. In 1671, three ships were sett out from London by the Hudson Bay Company then incorporated, and Mr. Radisson in one of them, in the Company's service, settled Moose River, went to Port Nelson, left some goods there, and wintered at Rupert's River. In 1673, upon some difference with the Hudson Bay Company, Mr. Radisson returned into France, and is there persuaded to go to Canada againe; there he formed several designs of going on some French private expeditions into Hudson Bay, which the Governour, Mons^r. Frontenac, would by no means permit, as declaring it would break the union between the two Kings. But at last, the said Radisson was secretly sett out with two ships by one La Chaney, and other private persons, without the Governour's knowledge without any orders from any powers; and in August, 1682, arrived at a river to them unknowae, but being in the latitude of Port Nelson; resolved to go in, found an English ship, whose company were building an house; saw another ship coming in, belonging to the Hudson Bay Company of London, which had brought a governour to settle a factorie in that Port. Radisson, and the French with him tooke the English ship, the Company's governour and men, and carried them to Canada, where he found Mons. La Barre governour in the roome of Mons. Frontenac, who ordered the said Radisson forthwith to release the said English ship, and ordered La Chaney [Chesnaye], the merchant who had sett out the said Radisson upon the said expedition, to give satisfaction to the English for some goods disposed of by Radisson, but was never performed.

20 This was the expedition in 1682, and the first time that ever French men or French vessell sailed into Hudson Bay, conducted thas by Radisson in a piraticall manner, without any publick authority, by the experience he had learnt in the voyages for the Hudson Bay Company, and this was y^e man who then designed to have given the name of Fort Bourbon to the place now in question, which had been denominated by the English (and so found in all mapps) by the name of Port Nelson, about 70 years before, and upon such rights of discovery and possession, and of this date, is the title of the French founded to this place of Port Nelson.

The manner how they were dispossessed of this unjust acquisition two years after, in 1684, as they complain in their paper, was as followeth, and right was done to the English by the same hand of Radisson who did us the wrong.

20 Complaint being immediately made by the Hudson Bay Company, Radisson, as soon as he returned into France, in 1683, found the effects of it by the many memorials given in against him at the French Court by the severall public ministers of the King of England from time to time. The action was disowned by his most Christian Majesty, and satisfaction promised, which was directed by a great minister in France in this manner, viz.: That Radisson should goe for London, where he should ship himself on board the Company's ships to goe to Port Nelson and withdraw the French whom he had left there, restore the effects to the English, and the Court of France nor Canada should ever pretend any right to the Bay of Hudson. Accordingly, Radisson came to London, presented himself to King Charles and the Duke of York, then Governor of the Hudson Bay Company; by their recommendation is reconciled to the Company and goes with only two ships in the Company's service, whereof Captain Bond and 30 Captain Outlaw were Commanders, arrived at Port Nelson, where the Sieur Chavert, whom Mr. Radisson had left, and the rest of the men came over to him and complied with the justice to be done to the English (who afterwards took service in the Hudson Bay Company), and brought into England and restored to the Company about 12,000 beaver skins and other furs (short of sixty thousand beavers as the French suggest in their paper), the greatest part of which were traded with English goods taken from them in the expedition before.

And this, we conceive, is a answer to the French paper, whereby they pretend a right to this place of Port Nelson, as it is a true account of the matter-of-fact which we are ready to justifie and prove, and we demand to be restored to the ancient and undoubted right of the Imperial Crowne of England and our own, derivative from thence; and whereas they talk of injuries and dispossessing in 40 a time of peace, who were the first aggressors and begun a private and praticall war is plaine by this narrative, and was the continual subject of our complaints which his Majesty was pleased to take notice of when he declared the warr against France.

reply to some things untruly grounded, and others, improperly inferred, by the French in their said pretended answer.

It is like a willfull shutting their eyes against the light to alleadge that the English know not the northern countries from the years 1497. We appeale to all faithful Relations of forreigne colonies, to all anthanctick mapps, ancient and moderne, and to all histories and books of cosmography, and we are ready to make out the severall discoveries and rightfull possessions made for the Crowne of England, as they are exhibited in our Memorial of Deduction of our title, and we could goe higher, if it were material, and shew that the Brittaines, many hundred years before the Union of England and Wales, made voyages to those Northern countries, which is sufficient to confute the assertion of the French that those countries were unknown to the English. But it will suffice that we maintaine our discoveries, our severall voyages, our taking possession in the right of the Crowne of England, our English denominations of the places, which they justly retain to this day, our trading with the savage nations and our actual settlements in trade, habitations, forts and factories, before ever the French pretend'd, to an emulation or knowledge of the place as we have laid it down in our said Title.

It is not denyed but that some of those ancient voyages we have mentionel might be made in search of a passage into the South Sea, but that doth not hinder but that a discovery might be made of a countrey, seas or bayes, whilst they are in that pursuite is a proper discovery; and the possession taken of such places, in the name of the king or prince of such navigators, is a rightfull possession or the whole tract and territory belonging to such place against any other prince or person whatsoever. But we will maintaine all the marks of our rightfull possession in behalf of the Crowne of England, none of which the French can pretend to but with the same confidence as they may lay claim to all England, which would be dangerous to them since all the world knows with what juster right we might invert that claim upon France.

It may be observed with what caution the French, in this paper, doe industeriously avoid the naming or owning of the Hudson Bay, but all along call it the Bay to the North of Canada, which signifies nothing but to show how ill founded their pretences is to it, and that the very name (which yett they cannot deny) betrays the emptiness of their Title; and yet in all former Memorials, in 1687 and in divers since, they have owned the name of Hudson Bay, and we are not beholden to them whether they will call it so or noe, nor doth it avail them any more than their late giving the name of Fort Bourhon in their St. Thereza River to our York Fort in Port Nelson, and to shew how little knowledge they have had of the place and the man whose name the said Bay bears to this day, they have affirmed in a late memorial that the said Hudson, passing in 1665 towards the North, to search for a passage into the South Sea, discovered the same without entering into it and called it by his name, which contains two notorious errors or falsities in it, first because Hudson's voyage was 55 years before the time alledged, and secondly, because he entered into the Bay, gave it his name and many other English names to other places, wintered there, but perished himself in the voyage. With equal ignorance they alleadge in their said Memorial, that in their said expedition, in 1682, they meeting an English barke from Boston, in New England, in the place, there happened to be one Nelson in the said barke, who upon his arrival called the mouth of that River Port Nelson, which was called so 70 years before by Sr. Thomas Button, from one Nelson his pilott, whom he buried there as we have sett forth, in our Title, but these are sufficient to show the skill and reading of the French in those places as well as their right.

The interruption we mention of prosecuting those voyages, and the formel settling of a trade, by all prudent and rationally men, may well be imputed to the troubles rising and continuing in England, not well quietted till the restoration of King Charles the Second, and then resumed and found most convenient to be managed by a joynt stock, as they were afterwards incorporated. But we ask the French, whether during those troubles here or afterwards, until the year 1682, they ever took the least notice of Hudson's Bay, or visited any part of it, by sea or land, but then it was that their envy began to rise against a trade which we had brought to yield 50,000 beavers a yeare, which never produced one skin before, nor ever had navigation in the Bay but by the English. And we are ready to prove that some private Frenchmen, designing secret expeditions to invade our places, they were forbid by the Governor of Canada, and charged by such an invasion not to disturb the good correspondence between the two Crownes, for that the place belonged to the English, and, though they did afterwards do it in a secret and piraticale way, expressly against orders, in the year 1682, under the conduct of Radisson, yet that and twenty invasions more, and wrongs suffered since, cannot impeach our rights and possessions which we had for so many years before.

How far the French could avail themselves upon pretences to Carrolina we know not, nor is it our present dispute, but we believe it has no better foundation than their pretences to Hudson Bay, and they might with as good presumption lay claim to New England and Virginia and what they pleased. But we doubt not but the one and the other will be equally defended and maintained by His Majesty as the absolute rights of the Imperial Crowne of England. If the authors they mean, who write of 10 Canada or New France, do give it no bounds to the northward as they say, [they] must be taken for partial French authors, or ignorant of that part of the world, the grants of the French Kings signifying nothing to another prince his right, and they may name what they will in their grants, places known or unknown, but nobody is so weak to think that anything passeth by those grants but what the King is rightfully and truly possessed of or intitled to; for Nil dat quod non habet is a maxim understood of all; but whereas the French would have no bounds to Canada to the Northward, nor indeed to any parts of their Dominions in the world if they could, it is plain by all maps that Terra Corterialis and Estotiland are on the north of Canada, both lying northward between Canada and Hudson Bay, and we do not hear that they have yet laid claim to those two countries between us. As for the wrong inference which they make, that if the English had had any knowledge of the Bay or any pretensions 20 to it, they would not have failed to have made a reservation thereof in the Treaty of 1622, for restoring of Canada to the French, what need was there of reserving that which was so remote, not in the least contiguous to or dependant on Canada, the known rights of the Crowne of England, and not so much as known to the French, but navigated in the time of the then King Charles the First, and Canada itself for several years possessed by his subjects. And here we take the occasion they justly give us, to affirme, that if treaties availe anything with them, they are in no just possession of Canada itself, for that there was a great sum of money to be paid to ye Kirks family upon the surrender of it which never was paid to this day, and of which there will be just complaint. The French in the said answer, do confess that they had no forts on the coasts of the said Bay, and as they have confessed in another paper they date their discovery and first settlement but from 1682, but their excuse for it is very 20 weak, because they had a trade by lakes and rivers, since those lakes and rivers were as free a communication to the benefit of the English in Hudson Bay as to the French in Quebec, in Canada, which are 700 leagues distance by sea, and they may as well say because the channel passeth between England and France and is communicable to both, that the French claim the English shore by that contiguity. We believe no authentic acts about taking possession can be produced that the savages acknowledge the sovereignty of the French King, that can any way affect the English to the prejudice of their right in Hudson Bay. We know the French have used many indirect ways and force to oblige the poor Indians not to come to trade at the Company's Factories. But we conceive they ought to be free and are so, to trade where they please and like best, as all other nations doe.

We have said already that several expeditions were sett out, for tryall to find a trade and whither 40 it would be worth the engaging in a Joint Stock before the Company was incorporated; and if Mr. Radisson and Desgrozilliers were entertained as servants to the adventurers in those first endeavours and beginnings, what is to be inferred from that? Had they been Spaniards, Portuguese or Venetians, it was free for any nation to entertaine and employ them in their service. But we deny what is pretended that we had no knowledge of the Bay, before we employed them; for Radisson and Desgrozilliers were no navigators or skilled in sailing to make a discovery, but only usefull when we should arrive there, having the language of the savages, and so capable to invite them downe to trade. But the voyages were conducted by English seamen and English pilotts. We will agree that the Letters of Incorporation or Charter in 1670, by King Charles the Second to the Hudson Bay Company, cannot give them any right, or dispose of any lands or countries whereof France was in legall possession, but 50 we have denied any legall possession of France or that France had ever occupied those places without opposition (as this paper pretends), or at all, till their unjust incroachments and invasions in 1682 aforesaid, to which they have given no answer; which was a private piratical expedition, complained of by us in 1686, and disowned by his most Christian Majesty as we have repeated almost in all our papers. And therefore by their own arguments here laid down, we doe insist upon the validity of the said Charter and Grant, and that King Charles had full power to dispose of those places and countries in the right of his crowne, which France never had, nor can claime or dispose of, and by parity of reason overthrows all pretended Grants of France to places she never was legally possessed of.

The answer saith that in 1675 the inhabitants of Canada sent a ship into the Northern Bay, entered into Bourbon River and wintered there, which the English call Port Nelson. We know nothing of this action but chafing them to name the ship and commander, and we desire to know when they first called it Bourbon River or Fort Bourbon; we maintain that it was never actually called soe until the year 1694, when they tooke it in the late war, and we retooke it in 1696. And if the confident imposing of French names upon places but as yesterday, will create them a title they may soon lay claime not only to Hudson Bay but to half the world besides.

In the next paragraph they recite again the action of 1682, and they speak truly that the habitants of Canada sent two ships with the said Radisson and Desgrozilier, but had they any authority or order from France or from ye Governor of Canada? On the contrary were forbid and afterwards prosecuted in France as pirates. We have often insisted upon this, and wo desire it may be observed that Mr. Radisson will acknowledge that he could not have undertaken that expedition but by the experience he had got by ye voyages he went in the service of the English many years before from England. Tr. Radisson (as the paper saith) is in London. Lett him give a full narrative of that expedition, viva voce or in writing, when the Lords Commissioners shall command it, though we have 20 given a particular account of it in one of our papers lately delivered in. And the French pretensions are very ill grounded, when they are forced to build upon the private undertaking of a merchant of Canada, who went even against command and order, for luere's sake, to robb and to plunder those that were in good amity with his prince, and he was accordingly soe treated when he returned back. Mr. Radisson did not goe over in 1684, in the service of the Hudson Bay Company to surprize and plunder Bourbon Fort as this paper saith; but he went by concert of the Ministers of France and by the derrections of His Majesty of England, to restore those places he unjustly took from the English and those goods he robbed them of in 1682, under the celebrated expedition of the merchants of Canada, which the French make the date of their possession and of their right, and though the French say we make no mention of what passed in 1684 we think they doe not observe that our complaints begun from the injury of 30 that piraticall expedition in 1682, and tho' in some measure we righted ourselves in 1684, yet we had just grounds of continu'd complaints, which we prosecuted in the Court of France; and what passed in the yeares 1686 and 1687, when Messrs. De Barillon and Bonrepos were here on behalf of the French, is to be found on record, as also what the sence of the then Lords Commissioners was upon the whole matter, and the final resolution of the King.

The French reflect upon our surprize in 1684—to recover our right upon their unjust invasions in 1682—as done in a time of peace, and as if their farther injury in 1686, when they dispossessed us of the bottom of the Bay, were the consequences of that. We know the French too well not to be aware that they which invaded us so unjustly in 1682, would prosecute their advantage and pursue us with injury upon injuries. But we admit at their urging that it was a time of peace in 1684. Was it not a 40 time of peace in 1682? Were not they the first aggressors? Wo will put the whole matter upon that issue—who were the first aggressors? If 1682 be before the yeares 1684 and 1686, we think it will need no further examination. Did not they begin a piratical warr, in a time of peace between the two Crownes? Is it not lawful in time of peace as well as warr to repell force with force? This seems to be urged only as it were to prevent our agravating our complaints by such injuries rec'd in a time of peace, which nevertheless hath and will be tooke notice of.

It may be admired at last to see the French pretend their losses at the retaking of Port Nelson, (which they still call Fort Bourbon, without any reason) do exceed the losses suffered by the English in their invasion at the bottom of the Bay, not to insist further that their invasion was in a time of peace, in 1686 as before noted, and our recovery of Port Nelson was in a time of warr, in 1696, besides our 50 damages made out in those yeares, from 1682 to 1687, when the same complaints were under debate.

We have now lately exhibited an account of our losses and damages whereby the truth of the allegation will appear, and we insist upon full satisfaction for the same accordingly; and for the better illustration of all that we have said in point of fact we have hereto annexed an affidavit of Mr Radisson, the person so often mentioned and insisted upon in the French papers for the author of their possession under his conduct of 1682, sworn in 1697, which cannot but be a finale and satisfactory closing of the whole dispute.

Wherefore it being obvious that the Hudson Bay Company have clearly made out the right of the Imperial Crowne of England that the said Company have an indefeazable right from the said Crowne which cannot be alienated, that the French have made out no title, but in this their pretended answer brought only wronge suggestions and undue inferences which are here fully replied to, that there can be no damages given nor restitution of places but what is founded in right, that all the matters in controversie (except what hath fallen out since the late warr) were heard and examined by Commissaries on both sides, whereupon his then Majesty's Commissaries, viz.—The Right Honourable the Earl of Sunderland, the Earl of Middleton, and my Lord Godolphin did, in the year 1687, Report to His Majesty in these words following, viz.—That Your Majesty and your subjects have a right to the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson and to the sole trade thereof, soe it may be fitt for Your Majesty to support the Company of Hudson Bay in the recovery and maintenance of their rights, since otherwise that trade will be totally lost and fall into the hands of the French, if they be permitted to continue in the possession of those forts, or any fort or place of trade within the said Bay or Streights; upon which his then Majesty declared, viz.—That he conceived the said Company well founded in their demands and did therefore order the said Commissioner to insist upon his own right and the right of his subjects to the whole Bay and Streights of Hudson, to the sole trade thereof as also upon ye demand of full satisfaction for the damages they had received and restitution of the 3 forts surprized by the French in the bottom of the Bay.

That the warr falling out since cannot alter the merritts of the case, the injuries done the Company being declared one of the causes of the warr. The said Hudson Bay Company doe therefore demand in their own proper right not only to be maintained in the possession of all their places in the bottom of the Bay but also to be restored to their factory of York Fort in Port Nelson, with satisfaction for all our damages and a full recognition of the said places and territories to the Crowne of England for the future, and the sole trade and sailing to the whole Bay and Streights of Hudson as rightful proprietors of the same.

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY'S STATEMENT OF THEIR TITLE AFTER TREATY OF RYSWICK, 1700.*

A deduction of the Right and Title of the Crown of Great Britain, and therein of Our Most Gracious Sovereign Lady Queen Anne, to all the Streights, Bays, Seas, Rivers, Lakes, Creeks, Islands, Shores, Lands, Territories and Places whatsoever within Hudson's Streights and Hudson's Bay, and of the Rights and Property of the Hudson's Bay Company, derived from the Imperial Crown of Great Britain by Letters Patent of Incorporation, and a Free Grant of all the Premises, from King Charles ye Second, Ao. 1670.

40 That Hudson's Bay (with all that belongs thereto, within Hudson's Streights, in North America) was first discovered by Sr. Sebastian Cabbat, Grand Pilot to King Henry the Seventh, who gave English names to several places of the said Bay.

Sr. Martin Furbisher, in Queen Elizabeth's time, made three voyages to the said Bay in 1576, 1577 and 1578, and gave English names to several places there.

Captain Davis made three voyages thither in the years 1585, 1587 and 1588, and gave English names to several parts of the said Bay.

Henry Hudson, an Englishman, sailed to the Streights and Bay, from him called Hudson's Streights and Hudson's Bay, and keeps that denomination to this day in all the authentic maps in ye world, and even in the maps of the best geographers of France. The said Hudson stayed a whole winter there, took possession thereof in the name of the King of England, traded with the savages, and gave names to several other parts of the Streights and Bay.

Sir Thomas Button pursued the discovery and possessions of the aforesaid Hudson, sailed into the Streights and Bay with two ships and particularly into Port Nelson where he wintered and buried the commander of his ship there, in memory of whom he gave it the name of Port Nelson, and called that particular bay Button's Bay (as it is still called in the maps), took possession thereof in the name of his master, King James the First, and gave several other English names to other places in the bay, and erected a cross there declaring thereon the right of the Crown of England.

Captain Luke Fox, by command of King Charles the First, made a voyage to Hudson's Bay, and amongst other places entered Port Nelson, and finding there the cross erected by Sir William Button, with the inscription defaced, and almost worn-out, he erected it again with a new inscription, declaring the right and possession of his then Majesty King Charles the First, named the adjacent country New North Wales, and published a journal of his voyage.

Note.—That the troubles and civil wars which soon after broke out in England, might be one principal cause why these voyages were not prosecuted, trade in general then failing, and navigation and discoveries wanting the encouragement of the Government—till after the Restoration of King Charles the Second. Yet it is observable that all that while (for so many years) that those places and countries lay neglected and unfrequented of the navigation or commerce of any European nation, the French do not in the least pretend to have then visited those parts, or to have formed a possession, or attempted any commerce with any people upon those coasts, nor do they pretend that ever any French vessel sailed Hudson's Streights or Hudson's Bay till of late years.

It was, then, after the happy Restoration of King Charles the Second, that trade and commerce began to revive, and in particular that from noblemen and other public-spirited Englishmen, not unmindful of the discovery and right of the Crown of England to those parts in America, designed at their own charge to adventure the establishing of a regular and constant trade to Hudson's Bay, and to settle forts and factories, whereby to invite the Indian nations (who live like savages, many hundred leagues up the country), down to their factories, for a constant and yearly intercourse of trade, which was never attempted by such settlements, and to reside in that inhospitable country, before the aforesaid English Adventurers undertook the same.

Wherefore, after a long time of consultation, and the necessary preparations for so great a charge, in the year 1667, one Zachary Gilham was provided of a ship and goods in London, sailed through Hudson's Bay to the bottom of the Bay, settled a trade, and built a fort there, which he called Charles Fort, on a river which he named Rupert's River, in honour to Prince Rupert, who was pleased to be concerned with, and was one of those Adventurers; in which place the Hudson's Bay Company continued a trade, and had there a factory, until the same was unjustly taken from them by the French in time of peace.

Another voyage was undertaken by the same Adventurers, and one Captain Newland was sent, who entered Port Nelson, settled there, and anew declared right and title of His Majesty to that river and the countrys adjacent, and there fixed up His Majesty's Arms, as a mark of his sovereignty over the said places.

After the charge of those voyages, and the experience by these settlements, that a great trade might be brought to England by beavers, furs and other commodities, for the just encouragement of so good and public a benefit, and the persons that had laboured in it, his then Majesty King Charles the Second was graciously pleased, in the year 1670, according to the undoubted and inherent right of His Imperial Crown in England by his Royal Letters Patent to incorporate the said Adventurers, and to grant unto His Highness Prince Rupert, the Duke of Albemarle, Earl of Craven, Lord Arlington, Lord Ashley, and divers others and their successors for ever, all the lands and territories aforesaid, to be reckoned and reputed as one of His Majesty's plantations and colonies in America, by the name of Rupert's Land, and further, to create and constitute them and their successors the true and absolute lords and proprietors of the same, and of all the territories, limits and places thereto belonging to have, hold, possess, and enjoy the same for ever, as of His Majesty's manor of East Greenwich, in free and common socage, &c.

In the same year the Company so incorporated sent out one Charles Baily as Governor of their factories and settlements in the Bay, with whom Monsieur Frontenac, then Governor of Canada, by letters and otherwise, entertained a good correspondence, not in the least complaining in several years of any pretended injury done to the French, by the said Company's settling a trade and building of Forts at the bottom of the Bay.

The said Charles Baily (as the Company's Governor) sent a ship from the bottom of the Bay, called the Imploy, to Port Nelson, to settle a trade there with the natives.

10 As did also Captain Draper, with the ship Albermarle.

But after about fifteen years' labour and charge, continual voyages, Factorys and Settlements, and the trade with the natives established, the French began to annoy this new and growing trade, and thought it worth their while to study some pretences to invade and rob the English, and to deprive them of some part of the said country.

When the English Company were building a Fort and settling a Trade at Port Nelson, the French, having formed a private expedition at Quebec, in Canada, by confederacy of one of La Chanay, and other private persons, came suddenly with two ships into the said river of Port Nelson, and with a stronger force surprised the said Company's men, and dispossessed them of their place and settlement, carried them prisoners to Canada, and pretended to settle a trade there themselves; but this was the first time 20 that ever the French did sail a vessel into the Hudson's Bay since the beginning of the world. This was a piratical expedition, and the authors of it were prosecuted as such, by frequent memorials from hence at the Court of France, where the same was disowned by His Most Christian Majesty, and satisfaction promised by him accordingly.

But as the French seldom want assurance for their pretensions or claim to anything for their advantage, so they never failed of artifice or force (when they can) to back such their pretensions; and when by violence, rapine and murder, they got themselves into an unjust possession, as aforesaid, then they pretended to expostulate all by a treaty (as if they were upon an even foot with the right possessor), and they seconded this injurious invasion and assault, a year or two after, and by taking a ship of the Company's, one Edward Humes, Commander, with the goods, and carried the men away prisoners, 30 and for above a year fed them on bread and water.

They formed a greater design, and went with a considerable force over land from Canada to the bottom of the Bay, and by force or treachery, surprised and took all the Company's factories there, with all the ammunition, goods, stores and merchandize therein, to a very great value, murdered and destroyed many of His Majesty's subjects; and all these invasions, seizures and depredations were in a time of peace, and the best correspondence between the two Crowns; which is an action scarce to be paralleled by any civilized nation, when the way is open for complaints to the Prince on either side.

Upon these repeated injuries, the said Company complained several times to His then Majesty King James the Second. Several memorials were presented at the French Court by the public Ministers then there, My Lord Preston, Sir Wm. Trumbal and Mr. Skelton: at last His Most Christian 40 Majesty did appoint Commissioners to meet at London, to treat of those matters, and Monsieur Bonrepos was sent over thither, to be joined with Monsieur Barillon, the French Ambassador, in that affair, whereas many papers were exchanged on both sides (but were in that reign so advantageous to the French interest), they did not obtain one inch from the right of the Imperial Crown of Great Britain, nor from the property of the Hudson Bay Company. But on the contrary, His then Majesty did declare that his honour and the Company's interest were concerned therein, and would have reparation for both.

At His late Majesty, King William the Third, his happy accession to the throne, the said Company put in a fresh petition and memorial to His Majesty, of their grievous suffering from the French, which His Majesty was greatly pleased to resent so far that he made it one of the articles and grounds of a 50 declaration of war against France.

And then by the late Treaty of Ryswick, Commissioners were appointed on both sides to examine and determine the rights and pretensions which either king had to the places situated in Hudson's Bay; before which Commissioners the right and title of the Crown of England to the whole Streights and Bay of Hudson was then clearly made out, which the French could never disprove; yet they still most unjustly keep possession of the greatest part thereof, which if they be permitted to enjoy, they will become sole masters of all Her Majesty's dominions and territories in those parts, which are of great extent, and the undoubted right of the Crown of Great Britain, and of very great concern to all Her Majesty's subjects, especially to those that inhabit or trade to the northern parts of Her Majesty's plantations in America.

The limits which the Hudson's Bay Company conceive to be necessary as boundaries between the French and them in case of an exchange of places, and that the Company cannot obtain the whole Streights and Bay, which of right belongs to them, viz. :—

1. That the French be limited not to trade by wood-runners, or otherwise, nor build any House Factory, or Fort, beyond the bounds of 53 degrees, or Albany River, vulgarly called Chechewan, to the northward, on the west or main coast.
2. That the French be likewise limited not to trade by wood-runners, or otherwise, nor build any House, Factory, or Fort, beyond Rupert's River, to the northward, on the east or main coast.
3. On the contrary, the English shall be obliged not to trade by wood-runners, or otherwise, nor 20 build any House, Factory, or Fort, beyond the aforesaid latitude of 53 degrees, or Albany River vulgarly called Chechewan, south-east towards Canada, on any land which belongs to the Hudson's Bay Company.
4. As also the English be likewise obliged not to trade by wood-runners, or otherwise, nor build any House, Factory, or Fort, beyond Rupert's River, to the south-east, towards Canada, on any land which belongs to the Hudson's Bay Company.
5. As likewise, that neither the French or English shall at any time hereafter extend their bounds contrary to the aforesaid limitations, nor instigate the natives to make war, or join with either, in any acts of hostility to the disturbance or detriment of the trade of either nation, which the French may very reasonably comply with, for that they by such limitations will have all the country south-east- 30 ward betwixt Albany Fort and Canada to themselves, which is not only the best and most fertile part, but also a much larger tract of land than can be supposed to be to the northward, and the Company deprived of that which was always their undoubted right.

And unless the Company can be secured according to these propositions, they think it will be impossible for them to continue long at York Fort (should they exchange with the French), nor will the trade answer their charge; and therefore if your lordships cannot obtain these so reasonable propositions from the French, but that they insist to have the limits settled between [Albany and] York and Albany Fort, as in the latitude of 55 degrees or thereabouts, the Company can by no means agree thereto, for they by such an agreement will be the instruments of their own ruin, never to be retrieved.

GENTLEMEN,—Upon consideration of what was this day offered to the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, by yourselves and other members of the Hudson's Bay Company, their Lordships have commanded me to acquaint you with their desire, that the Resolution of your Court may be taken and communicated to them, whether (in case the French cannot be prevailed with to consent to the settlement of the boundaries proposed in your Court of the 10th July last), the said Court will not think fit to consent, that the limits on the east side of the Bay be extended to the latitude of $52\frac{1}{2}$ degrees, with whatever further that Court may think advisable to propose, in reference to their own affairs, for the more easy settlement of all disputes between the Company and the French in Hudson's Bay.

Hudson's Bay Company's Rights and Claims.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations.

10 The Hudson's Bay Company having lately exhibited to your Lordships their resolution of their Court, the 10th of July last, concerning limits between them and the French in Hudson's Bay, and though the Company cannot but still insist upon their undoubted right to the whole Bay and Streights of Hudson, as has been clearly made out by them :

*Hudson's Bay Company to Lords Commissioners of

Yet in obedience to your Lordships' letter of the 22nd inst., and to show how desirous they are to comply therewith as much as in them lies, and is consistent with their future safety, they do further offer to your Lordships the following proposals of limits between them and the French in Hudson's Bay, viz. :—

1. That the French be limited not to trade by wood-runners or otherwise, nor build any House, Factory, or Fort to the northward of Albany River, vulgarly called Checheawan, on the west main or 20 coast.

2. That the French be likewise limited not to trade by wood-runners or otherwise, nor build any House, Factory, or Fort to the northward of Hudson's River, vulgarly called Canuse River, on the east main or coast.

3. On the contrary, the English, upon such an agreement, do engage not to trade by wood-runners nor build any House, Factory, or Fort to the southward of Albany River, vulgarly called Checheawan, on the west coast, on any ground belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company.

4. As also, the English be likewise limited not to trade by wood-runners or otherwise, nor build any House, Factory, or Fort to the southward of Hudson's River, vulgarly called Canuse River, on the east coast, on any ground belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company.

30 5. That all the Islands in the said Bay and Streights of Hudson, lying to the northward of Albany River, on the west coast, and of Hudson's River, vulgarly called Canuse River, on the east coast, shall be and remain to the English.

6. Likewise that all the Islands in the said Bay of Hudson, lying to the southward of Albany River, on the west coast, and of Hudson's River, vulgarly called Canuse River, on the east coast, shall be and remain to the French.

7. That neither the French or English shall at any time hereafter extend their bounds contrary to the aforesaid limitations, or instigate the natives to make war, or join with either in any acts of hostility, to the disturbance or detriment of the trade of either nation.

These terms the Company are willing to agree to, upon condition they may be secured from any 40 claim that has been, or may be made on them by virtue of the 8th Article of the Treaty of Ryswick, or by any other matter or thing relating to the said treaty. And if the French think fit to accept thereof, the Company are willing to exchange places with them, but not without settling of limits; for that the said 8th Article which saith there shall be an exchange of places, doth also say, that limits shall be likewise settled, and it would seem very unreasonable that one should be performed without the other. As to the Company's naming of rivers as boundaries, and not latitudes, the same is more certain and obvious, both to the natives as well as Europeans, and the contrary impracticable; for the latitude be so well laid down in that wild country, the Indians well knowing the one, but not the other.

But should the French refuse the limits now proposed by the Company, the Company think themselves not bound by this or any former concessions of the like nature, but must, as they have always done, insist upon their prior and undoubted right to the whole Bay and Streights of Hudson, which the French never yet would strictly dispute, or suffer to be examined into (as knowing the weakness of their claim), though the first step in the said Article of Ryswick directs the doing of it.

To the Deputy Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company.

Hudson's Bay Company to Lord Commissioners of
Trade, 19
Jan, 1701.

The humble representation of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay.

SHEWETH :

That the said Company being required by your Lordships to give in what they thought necessary in relation to their trade, and the security of their factory in Hudson's Bay, do, with all submission, lay before your Lordships the true state and condition thereof.

They will not trouble your Lordships with a repetition of their undoubted rights to all Hudson's Bay, and that the French never laid claim to the same, or ever sailed a ship or vessel into those parts since the creation of the world, till the year 1682 (many years after the incorporation of this Company), and then in a piratical manner, without any commission or authority from His Most Christian Majesty, who was afterwards pleased to disown the said proceeding, as the Company have and are still ready to prove.

These matters have been so fully and clearly made out by them that even the French themselves with all their sophistry and equivocation, have not been able to disprove.

Therefore we shall proceed to inform your Lordships of the present melancholy prospect of their trade and settlement in Hudson's Bay, and that none of His Majesty's plantations are left in such a deplorable state as those of this Company, for by their great losses by the French, both in times of peace as well as during the late war, together with the hardships they lie under by the late Treaty of Ryswick, they may be said to be the only mourners by the peace.

They cannot but inform your Lordships that the only settlement the Company have now left in Hudson's Bay (of seven they formerly possessed) is Albany Fort, vulgarly called Chechewan, in the bottom of the said Bay, where they are surrounded by the French on every side, viz., by their settlements on the lakes and rivers from Canada to the northwards, towards Hudson's Bay, as also from Port Nelson (Old York Fort) to the southward; but beside this, the Company have, by the return of their ship this year, received certain intelligence that the French have made another settlement at a place called New Severn, 'twixt Port Nelson and Albany Fort, wherby they have hindered the Indians from coming to trade at the Company's factory, at the bottom of the Bay, so that the Company this year have not received above one-fifth part of the returns they usually had from thence, insomuch that the same doth not answer the expense of their expedition.

The Company being by these and other their misfortunes reduced to such a low and miserable condition, that, without His Majesty's favour and assistance, they are in no ways able to keep that little remainder they are yet possessed of in Hudson's Bay, but may justly fear in a short time to be deprived of all their trade in those parts, which is solely negotiated by the manufacturers of this kingdom.

Upon the whole matter, the Company humbly conceive they can be no ways safe from the insults and encroachments of the French, so long as they are suffered to remain possessed of any place in Hudson's Bay, and that in order to dislodge them from thence (which the Company are no ways able to do), a force of three men-of-war, one bomb-vessel, and two hundred and fifty soldiers besides the ships' company will be necessary, whereby that vast tract of land which is of so great concern, not only to this Company in particular, but likewise to the whole nation in general, may not be utterly lost to this kingdom.

All of which is humbly submitted to your Lordships' great wisdom and judgment.

By the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay.

DISCOVERIES AND NATIONAL RIVALRIES IN AND AROUND HUDSON'S BAY.*

THE ENGLISH ACCOUNT FROM THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY'S POINT OF VIEW.†

In the year 1576, Cap. Martin Frobisher made his first voyage for the discovery of a passage to China and Cathay by the north-west; and on the 12th of June he discovered Tierra de Labrador in 63 degrees 8 minutes, and entered a Streight which he called by his name. On the 1st of October he return'd to England. In the following year, he went a second time on the same discovery, came to the same Streight, and us'd all possible means to bring the natives to trade, or give him some account of themselves, but they were so wild, that they only study'd to destroy the English. Cap. Frobisher stay'd here till winter drew on, and then he return'd to England. He made the same voyage the following year, and with the like success.

Six years afterwards, A. D. 1585, John Davis sail'd from Dartmouth on the same adventure, came into the latitude of 64 degrees 15 minutes, and proceeded to 66 degrees 40 minutes. In the year ensuing he ran to 66 degrees 20 minutes, and coasted southward again to 56 degrees. Sailing thence in 54 degrees, he found an open sea, tending westward, which he hoped might be the passage so long sought for; but the weather proving tempestuous, he return'd to England. In October, the next year, he did the same. After which there were no more adventures this way, till the year 1607, when Cap. Henry Hudson discover'd as far as 80 degrees 23 minutes. In 1608, he set out again; and, having added little to his former discoveries, return'd. Two years after, he again undertook a voyage to find out the northwest passage, proceeded 100 leagues further than any man had done before him, till he could not go forward for ice and shoal water; and finding himself imbar'd, he resolv'd to winter there. In the spring of 1611, pursuing a further discovery, he and seven more of his company were seiz'd, the rest of his men put into an open boat, and committed to the merey of the waves and savages.

We know 'tis pretended, that a Dane made the Discovery of this Streight, and that he call'd it Christiana, from the King of Denmark, Christian the IVth then reigning. But Cap. Hudson was the man who discovered it to the English, and who indeed first sail'd so near the bottom of the Bay, as he did within a degree or two.

The same year that he dy'd, Sir Thomas Button, at the instigation of Prince Henry, pursu'd the same discovery. He pass'd Hudson's Streights, and leaving Hudson's Bay to the south, settled above 20⁹ leagues to the south-west, and discover'd a great continent, by him called New Wales. He winter'd at the place afterwards call'd Port Nelson, carefully search'd all the Bay, from him call'd Button's Bay, and return'd to Digg's Island.

In 1616, Mr. Baffin enter'd Sir Thomas Smith's Bay, in 78 degrees, and return'd despairing to find any passage that way. All the adventures made to the north-west, were in hopes of passing to China. In 1631, Capt. James sail'd to the north-west, and arrived at Charlton Island, where he winter'd in 52 degrees. Cap. Fox went out this year on the same account, but proceeded no further than Port Nelson

The civil wars in England put discoveries out of men's heads; and we hear of no more such adventures till the year 1667, when Zaehariah Gillam, in the Nonsuch, ketch, pass'd thro' Hudson's Streights, and then into Baffin's Bay to 75 degrees; and thence southward into 51 degrees; where in a river 20 afterwards call'd Prince Rupert's River, he had a friendly correspondence with the natives, built a fort, nam'd it Charles Fort, and return'd with success.

The occasion of Gillam's going was this: Monsieur Radisson and Monsieur Gooselier [de Groisselier], two Frenchmen, meeting with some savages in the Lake of Assiniponals, in Canada, they learnt of them, that they might go by land to the bottom of the Bay, where the English had not yet been. Upon which they desir'd them to conduct them thither, and the savages accordingly did it. The two Frenchmen return'd to the Upper Lake the same way they came, and thence to Quebee, the capital of Canada; where they offer'd the principal merchants to carry ships to Hudson's Bay, but their project was rejected. Thence they went to France, in hopes of a more favourable hearing at court; but after presenting several memorials, and spending a great deal of time and money, they were answer'd as they 30 had been at Quebee, and their project looked upon as chimerical. The King of England's ambassador at Paris, hearing what proposals they had made, imagin'd he should do his country a good service in engaging them to serve the English, who had already pretences to the Bay, persuaded them to go to London, where they met with a favourable reception from some men of quality, merchants and others, who employ'd Gillam, before-mention'd, a New England captain, in the voyage; and Radisson and Gooselier accompanying, they arrived at the bottom of the Bay, and succeeded as we have hinted already.

When Gillam return'd, the adventurers concern'd in fitting him out apply'd themselves to King Charles II. for a patent; who granted one to them and their successors, for the bay call'd Hudson's Bay and the streights called Hudson's Streights. The patent bears date the 2nd of May, in the 22nd year 40 of that King's reign, A.D. 1670.

On the west side of the Bay, the English made a settlement, and built a fort, at Port Nelson. The Bay there is call'd Button's; and Hudson's Bay is broadest in this place. The two opposite shores are call'd the East Main and West Main. The former is Labrador, and the latter New Wales. The continent at the bottom of the Bay is by the French pretended to be part of New France; and indeed to cross the country from the St. Margaret's River, which runs into the River of Canada, to Rupert's River, at the bottom of Hudson's Bay, is not above 150 miles. At Rupert's River, the English built their first fort, which they call Charles Fort.

In the year 1670, the Company sent off Charles Baily, Esq., Governour, with whom went Mr. Radisson and 10 or 20 men, who were to stay on the place; his residence being at Rupert River, where a mean fort has been built. Mr. Baily appointed Mr. Thomas Gorst to be his secretary, and order'd him to keep a journal of their proceedings there, which is now in my custody.

The English had now worse huts, than afterwards, and no covering for them but moose skins. There was at this time a factory at Port Nelson, where Captain Gooselier arrived in August, 1673. He search'd the river for Indians, but met with none. He saw several wigwams, where they had lately been, and suppos'd them to be gone up the country. This captain was order'd to search for Severn River, but could not find it, tho' 'twas in the old draughts of this Bay.

Now Mr. Baily and his little colony fell to patching up their cabbins, and prepare for the enemy. The 23rd of October several Indians came to the Fort to trade, and among others one from Quebee.

Several Indians came in March, and built their wigwams at the east end of the Fort, intending to stay there all winter, that they might be ready for trade in the spring. About the 20th of March it began to thaw; and the Nodways still threatening the English with war, the Governour prepar'd every thing necessary in the Fort for his defence. On the 25th of March, six men, as Ambassadors, came from King Cuseudidah, to notify his approach, and that he would be at the Fort next day, which he made good, and was troubled that the Governour was absent. He brought a retinue with him, but 20 little beaver, the Indians having sent their best to Canada.

The English at the Fort stood on their guard, and Mr. Cole commanded them in the Governour's absence; for whom the King sent two Indians. And the 31st of March, the Governour returned, with a small supply of Moose flesh.

All this while the Indian King stayed at the wigwams, near the Fort; and the reason of it was they were apprehensive of being attack'd by some Indians, whom the French Jesuits had animated against the English, and all that dealt with them. The French us'd many artifices to hinder the natives trading with the English; they gave them great rates for their goods, and oblig'd Mr. Baily to lower the prices of his, to oblige the Indians who dwelt about Moose River, with whom they drove the greatest trade.

The French, to ruin their commerce with the natives, came and made a settlement not above eight days' journey up that river, from the place where the English traded. 'Twas therefore debated whether the Company's agents should not remove from Rupert's to Moose River, to prevent their traffick being intercepted by the French.

On the 3rd of April, 1674, a council of the priniepal persons in the Fort was held, where Mr. Baily the Governour, Capt. Gooselier, and Capt. Cole, were present, and gave their several opinions. The Governour inclin'd to remove. Capt. Cole was against it, as dangerous; and Capt. Gooselier for going thither in their bark to trade, when the Indians belonging to King Cuseudidah were gone a hunting, and there was no fear of the Fort's being surpriz'd.

The Indians went to building their wigwams near the Fort, and rais'd their Wauseoheigin, or fort, near the English, that the palisadoes join'd. On the 20th of May, 12 Indians, subjects to King Cuseudidah, came in seven canoes, and the King meeting them, conducted them to the Fort, where they told him there would be few or no Upland Indians come to trade that season, the French having perswaded them to come to Canada. However, Mr. Baily order'd the sloop to be got ready, and resolv'd to go up the river.

Upon the arrival of this new company, among whom was the King's brother, a feast was made.

The next day (May 23), the Governour, and some English and Indians arm'd, went down to the bottom of the Bay, to Frenchmen's River, to seek for the Nodways, but could meet with none. On the 27th of May, about 50 men, women and children, came in 22 canoos, to trade, but brought little or no beaver with them. They were of the nation called Pishapocanoes, near a-kin to the Eskeimoes, and, both alike, a poor beggarly people: by which we may perceive the French ran away with the best of the trade.

The Governour having got everything ready for a voyage to Moose River, sent Capt. Gooselier 10 Capt. Cole, Mr. Gorst my author, and other English Indians, to trade there. They got about 250 skins and the Captain of the Tabittee Indians informed them the French Jesuits had not brib'd the Indians not to deal with the English, but to live in friend-ship with the Indian nations in league with the French. He blam'd the English for trading with such pitiful nations as the Cuscudidahs and Pishapocanoes advising them to settle at Moose Sebee, and the Upland Indians would come down and trade with them. The reason they got no more peltry now, was, because the Indians thought Gooselier was too hard for them, and few would come down to deal with him.

Mr. Baily sail'd himself for Moose Sebee, and brought home 1,500 skins; the Shechittawams, 50 leagues from that river, having come to trade with him. By the 24th of June all the Indians had left their wigwams near the fort, and were gone abroad to hunt and trade some with the English and some 20 by themselves.

The Governour undertook a voyage to discover Shechittawam River; and thence intended to coast along to Port Nelson, where as yet was no Fort. In the meantime Mr. Gorst, who was left deputy at the fort, sent a yawl, and four men well arm'd, up the Nodways River, which, as high as they could go for the Falis, was 5 miles broad. After about 2 months' voyage, Mr. Baily return'd and gave this account of his voyage in the sloop. On the 16th July he sail'd from Moose River, and arriv'd at Schettawam River on the 18th, where no Englishman had been before. He stayed there till the 21st, but could meet with little or no beaver.

'Tis a fine river, and a good channel to the N. W. in 52 degrees, N. L. He treated with the King, and his son made them a promise to come with a ship and trade with them the next year. In return, 30 they assured him they would provide store of beaver, and bring the Upland Indians down.

On the 27th July, the sloop ran upon ice, and had like to have founder'd.

After he had returned to the fort, on the 30th August, a canoe arriv'd at Rupert's River, with a missionary Jesuit, a Frenchman, born of English parents, attended by one of Cuscudidah's family, a young Indian. The Frier brought a letter to Mr. Baily from the Governour of Quebec, dated the 8th of October, 1673. For the priest should have been at Rupert's River several months before, but that he was stop'd by the Indians. The Governour of Quebec desired Mr. Baily to treat the Jesuit civilly on account of the great amity between the two crowns; and Mr. Baily resolved to keep the Jesuit till 40 ships came from England.

The Tabittee Indians being within the Hudson's Bay Company's Patten, 'twas an encroachment for the French to trade with them; the Jesuit confessed they did it. Mr. Baily clothed him, the Indians having rob'd him; and entertained him with great kindness. The Priest resolving to return to Europe in an English ship, did not like another journey of 400 miles length, thro' many barbarous nations, overland, and a country almost impassible.

The English were frequently alarm'd with reports of incursions from the Nodways and Moose River Indians, whose quarrel with them was their selling too dear.

In the evening, September 24, the sloop appeared in the river, but having no ensign out, they concluded they were all lost men; and in this extremity of sorrow, they were soon revived by the sight of five Englishmen, whom they had not seen before, and from whom they understood the Prince Rupert, Capt. Gillam, commander, was arriv'd, with the new Governour, William Lyddal, Esq.

The next day, the old Governour, and Mr. Gorst, sailed for Point Comfort, where the Shaftsbury, Capt. Shepherd, commander, arriv'd also from England. And the new Governour's commission and instructions being read, all hands set to work, to refit and load the ships home as soon as possible.

On the 18th September, Mr. Lyddal landed and took possession of the fort, Mr. Baily deliver'd him the patent. Mr. Lyddal, finding the season would be so far spent, before the ships could be unladen and laden again, that it would be impracticable to return; after several councils, 'twas resolv'd they should winter at Rupert's River; and Capt. Gillam, and Capt. Shepherd's ships' crews were employed to cut timber, to build houses for them, as also a brew-house and bake-house in the fort.

Mr. Baily, who had very well discharged his trust, returning to England, inform'd the Company fully of their affairs; and now as they advanced in reputation, so they were industrious to increase their trade and settlements. They appointed a trader to act under the Governour, and chiefs of the factories at other rivers, according as they were settled.

Port Nelson was the next settlement which they made, and thither they sent John Bridger, Esq., with the character of Governour for the Hudson's Bay Company, of the West Main, from Cape Henrietta Maria, which was included in the Governour of the East Main's patent.

Mr. Lyddal was succeeded by John Nixon, Esq., in whose time the Company thought of removing their chief factory from Rupert's River to Chickwan River, as the place most resorted to by the Indians. Charlton Island was now frequented by the ships bound to Hudson's Bay, and made the place of rendezvous for all the factors to bring their merchandize to and load it there aboard the Company's ship.

In the year 1682, Mr. Bridger embarked for Port Nelson, where a factory was to be established and a fort built, but before he arrived, Captain Benjamin Gillam, master of a New England ship, and a son of Captain Gillam, commander of the Prince Rupert, then in the Company's service, settled at that factory, but had not been there above fourteen days before Mr. Raddisson and Captain Gooselier, who deserted the English, arrived from Canada.

The Company having dismissed them their service, these two Frenchmen in revenge procured some merchants of Canada to undertake a settlement there. Gillam was not strong enough to repel them, but he remained at Port Nelson, where, ten days after Raddisson and Gooselier's arrival, came Mr. Bridger. The French no sooner perceived he was come, but they sent aboard his ship immediately and commanded him to begone, for that Mr. Raddisson and Captain Gooselier had taken possession of the place for the French King, their master.

Mr. Bridger, being warranted so to do by the Company's commission, unloaded some of his goods and with all hands went to work in order to make a settlement. Raddisson continued at Port Nelson and Mr. Bridger and he became very intimate, which intimacy lasted from October, 1682, to the February following, when Raddisson seized Bridger and Gillam with all their people and effects.

Having kept them some months in a sort of imprisonment, about August, the French put several of the Company's and Gillam's people aboard a rotten bark, and they were taken up by an English ship near Cape Henrietta Maria. Bridger and Gillam they carried with them to Canada, where Raddisson and Gooselier ran some of their cargo ashore, intending to defraud their employers. After which they made their escape and got into France. The Company having notice of it, wrote to him, and he to the Company, promising, if they would forgive the injury he had done them, and employ him again at such a salary, he would undertake to deliver the French, whom he had left there till he came again, to them, and seize all the furs they had traded for, which would make them satisfaction for the wrong he had done them. Accordingly they forgave him and employ'd him again, and he took Port Nelson from his countrymen. But before his arrival Cap. John Abraham had been there with supplies of stores; and finding Mr. Bridger was gone, he stay'd himself and was continu'd Governour by the Company, in 1684.

In the preceeding year, Mr. Nixon, Governour of Rupert's River, was recall'd, and Henry Sergeant, Esq., made Governour, by whose instructions we find the chief factory was remov'd from Rupert's to Moose-sebee, or Chickewan River, which has ever since been call'd Albany River; where a fort was built, a factory settled, and the Governour made it the place of his residence. 'Tis the bottom of the 10 Bay, below Rupert's River.

He was ordered to come every spring, as soon as the trade was over, to Charlton Island and bring what goods he had with him, to wait for the arrival of the Company's ships. From thence he was to visit the other factories, and see that their merchandize was sent in due time to Charlton Island, to attend the ship's arrival.

The Governor of Canada, having given the Hudson's Bay Company to understand the French were very much offended at their discoveries in these parts, Mr. Sergeant was ordered to be careful that he was not surpris'd by them.

There is an island in the bottom of the Bay, called Hayes Island, where a factory had been settled. This isle and Rupert's River were near the French, Albany being more to the southward; and of these 20 factories the Company were most apprehensive that their enemies would endeavour to dispossess them.

The Company intended to plant a colony at Charlton Island, and order'd Mr. Sergeant to build a fort there, and always keep some men upon it. Warehouses were also built to receive the furs that were brought thither from the factories, and conveniences were made for the reception of such as were obliged to winter there.

Orders were also given to dismiss Cap. Gillam from their service for his son's offences and Cap. Sandford had the same usage, on account of his relation to the Gillams. Cap. William Bond, who had been under Mr. Baily, was sent for home; and other regulations made in the management of affairs, but all could not hinder the ruin of them all by the enemy.

The Company, by their Governours and agents, made such compacts with the captains or kings of 30 the rivers and territories where they had settlements, for the freedom of trade there, exclusive of all others, that the Indians could not pretend they had enroach'd upon them. These compacts were rendered as firm as the Indians could make them, by such ceremonies as were most sacred and obligatory among them.

Now were the Company in possession of five settlements, viz., Albany, Hayes Island, Rupert River, Port Nelson, and New Severn. Their trade at each of them was considerable. From Albany River they had generally 3,500 beavers a year; and by Mr. Sergeant's great care and fidelity, their commerce increased so much that the French began to be afraid that all the Upland Indians might be drawn down to the Bay. They knew they could do anything with King James II., who then reigned in England, and that no affront would make that prince break with Louis the XIV. Wherefore they 40 resolved to drive the English out of all their places in the bottom of the Bay. First they took Hayes Island and then the fort on Rupert's River. The French Company at Canada procured a detachment of soldiers to be sent under the Chevalier de Troyes, who came overland from Quebec, and in a time of profound peace committed these acts of hostility.

The 8th of July, 1686, the Chevalier de Troyes came before the fort at Albany River, where the Governour, Mr. Sergeant, then resided. Two Indians had informed him of their having surpriz'd the forts at Hayes Island and Rupert River, and having brought with them the great guns from those places.

Two hours after, the English heard them discharging their guns, and saw some of them at a distance. Upon which, part of the Company's servants declar'd they would not venture their lives unless they might be assur'd of pay, and sent John Parsons and John Garret, two of their number, in all their names, to the Governour, to tell him their resolutions. Mr. Sergeant, by promises and giving them cloaths and other necessaries, prevail'd with them to return to their charge. But in a day or two they mutiny'd again, and Elias Turner, the gunner, possess'd the people with an apprehension that it was impossible to hold out the place, declaring that for his part he would throw himself on the French. Accordingly he went to the Governour, and desir'd leave so to do; but being threat'ned to be shot to death in case he attempted it, he was at last perswaded to return to his post.

The English shot at the French as long as they appeared in the rushes, and forc'd them to retire under the banks, where the guns from the fort could not hit them.

The French had found a way to bring their great guns through the woods, and had planted them on their battery before the English saw them. The enemy's shot had made a breach in the flankers and damaged the houses in the fort; upon which, and the repeated desires of the men, the Governour consented to a parley; Mr. Bridger assuring him the enemy were mining them, and they should certainly be blown up. Cap. Outlaw also agreed to capitulate, and the white flag was hung out; after which a treaty was concluded.

20 At this time Thomas Phips, Esq., was Governour of Port Nelson, which was not then taken by the French; and the Company expected Fort Albany would have been restor'd to them in King James' time; but all their solicitations were in vain, and all the settlements they had, Port Nelson excepted, were abandoned to the French.

The war breaking out, as has been said, between the two nations, the Hudson's Bay Company solicited for soldiers to be sent thither to recover their settlements, and in the year 1693 they retook all the forts and factories which the French had taken from them in time of peace.

In which expedition they met with no more difficulties than the Chevalier de Troyes had met with Capt. Grinnington was the person employ'd for this service; and John Knight, Esq., was appointed Governor of Fort Albany; but his government was of no long continuance, for in a little time the French sent such a power against the English, that they again drove them from all their settlements in the bottom of the Bay.

The French Company made Monsieur de la Force Governour of Fort Albany, and garrison'd all forts they had taken, which made it necessary for the Government to send a stronger power than the Company could raise to recover them.

The King of England, to protect their trade, assign'd two men-of-war for their services in the year 1696, as the Bonaventure, Cap. Allen, Commander, and the Seaford. Cap. Allen coming into the River Hayes, sent to summon all the forts to surrender, and the French Governour finding he could not defend them against the English, capitulated, and on the 2nd of August, 1696, surrender'd Albany Fort.

Cap. Allen took the Governour and some of his men aboard his own ship; some he put aboard the Seaford, and the rest aboard a merchantman call'd the Dering. In his return he fought the Mary Rose, frigate, then a French privateer of 50 guns, and was killed in the engagement, which gave the Frenchman an opportunity to bear away.

As to the other two forts, they followed the fate of Albany, and Mr. Knight was restored to his government; at which time John Geyer, Esq., was Governour of Port Nelson. Mr. Knight had serv'd Mr. Sergeant, while he was Governour of Fort Albany, and was well acquainted with the trade.

In the year 1697, the Hampshire, frigate, and Owner's Love, fire-ship, two of the King's ships, were lost in this Bay, and all the men drown'd. Indeed, the ice renders it so dangerous that the commerce seems to be not worth the risk that is run for it. Whether those two ships ran against those frozen mountains that float in that sea, or founder'd, is not known; but 'tis certain they were lost, and all the men perish'd.

In the present war they lost Port Nelson to the French, and have either given up or deserted all their settlements, except Fort Albany, where Mr. Knight managed their affairs till the year 1706, when he was succeeded by John Fullerton, Esq., the present Governour at Albany River.

CLAIMS AND MEMORIALS OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY, 1711-1714.

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty.

The Petition [1711] of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay.

HUMBLY SHEWETH:

The Company's petition to Queen
Anne, 1711.

That your petitioners are far from enquiring into the great affairs of your Majesty's glorious Government, especially as what relates to war and peace, both which they know your high wisdom will see order as shall be most for the good of your whole people; but believing the justice of your cause and the terror of your arms must soon reduce the French King to sue for such a peace as all Europe desires and wants, your petitioners crave leave with the profoundest duty, to submit the hardships of their case to your Royal consideration.

That the French, in a time of perfect amity between the two kingdoms, viz., Anno 1682, did arbitrarily invade the Company's territories at Port Nelson, burn their houses and seize their effects.

That in the years 1684 and 1685, they continued their depredations.

That in the year 1686, they forcibly took from the Company three Factories, viz.: Albany Fort Rupert and Moose River Fort, which violent proceeding they continued the years 1687 and 1688, the whole damages done by the French to the Company in times of peace amounting to £108,514 19s. 8d. as your petitioners are ready to make appear, besides interest for the same.

That in the year 1685, they supplicated his then Majesty King James the Second to interpose on their behalf, and by his Ambassadors at the French Court to demand reparation for the damages done to the Company, and restitution of the places unjustly taken from them by the French in time of peace, whereupon Commissioners were appointed by His Majesty, viz., the Earl of Sunderland, the Earl of Middleton, and the Lord Godolphin, to treat with the French Commissioners, before whom the Company clearly made out their right to the whole Bay and Streights of Hudson—to the satisfaction of the English Commissioners, who, on the 10th November, 1687, reported the right of your petitioners, upon which King James was pleased to declare, that he conceived the company well founded in their demands, and therefore did insist upon his own right, and the right of his subjects to the whole Bay and Streights of Hudson, and to the sole trade thereof; as also upon the demand of full satisfaction for the damages they had received, &c., the copy of which report and His Majesty's resolutions thereon, is hereby annexed. This was translated and declared towards the latter end of 1687, at which time the Lord Churehill, Duko of Marlborough, was Governor of the Company, and memorials were repeated by the said King's command at the French Court so pressingly for satisfaction and restitution, that your petitioners had certainly been relieved and restored to their rights, but for the war which soon after broke out between the two Kingdoms.

Hudson's Bay Company's Rights and Claims.
The Company's petition to Queen
Anne, 1711.

10 That upon the late King William's accession to the Throne, the Company renewed their claim to their territories and for reparation of damages suffered from the French in times of full peace, of which his said Majesty was so sensible, that he was pleased to make the proceedings of France in that affair one of the causes and articles of his declaration of war against the French King in hæc verba: "But that the French King should invade our Charibee Islands and possess himself of our territories of the Province of New York and Hudson's Bay in an hostile manner, seizing our Forts, burning our subjects' houses, and enriching his people with the spoil of their goods and merchandises, detaining some of our subjects under the hardships of imprisonment, causing others to be inhumanly killed, and driving the rest to sea in a small vessel, without food and necessaries to support them, are actions not even becoming an enemy, and yet he was so far from declaring himself so, that at that very time he was negotiating 20 here in England by his Ministers, a treaty of neutrality and good correspondence in America," so that your petitioners did patiently wait the end of that war, not doubting but to have justice to them, when a peace was concluded.

But so it is, may it please your most Excellent Majesty, that the Company found their interest not comprehended in the Treaty of Ryswick, which they are far from attributing to any want of care in that gracious Prince of this Kingdom's honour and trade, and rather think their rights and claims were then overweighed by matters of higher consequence depending in that juncture; for by the said treaty they found their condition much worse than it was before,—by the 8th article whereof, the French were left in possession of such places situated in Hudson's Bay, as had been taken by them during the peace which had preceeded that war.

30 That at a meeting of Commissioners on both sides (as directed by the said treaty, to adjust these differences) the Company did again set forth the undoubted right of the Crown of England to the whole Bay and Streights of Hudson, against which nothing but sophistry and evails were offered on the French side, and the matter remained undetermined.

That the only settlement now remaining to the Company in those parts (of seven they formerly had) is Albany Fort, on the Cheehewan, where they are surrounded by the French on every side, viz: By their settlements on the lakes and rivers from Canada to the northward towards Hudson's Bay, as also from Port Nelson (at York Fort), to the southward. The French have likewise made another settlement between Port Nelson and Albany Fort, whereby the Indians are hindered from coming to trade with the English factory at the bottom of the Bay, and if they a suffered to fix and fortify in 40 those parts, beyond all question they will deprive your Majesty's subjects of that tract of land, which is so large a part of your American dominions, and rightly belongs to the Crown of Great Britain.

That not only your Majesty's glory is concerned to preserve these plantations, but it very much imports the general trade of your Kingdom, since your petitioners, notwithstanding the losses and discouragements they have laboured under, and during the war, have brought from thence between 30,000 and 40,000 skins per annum, and doubt not if they were reinstated in their possessions, according to their charter, to bring the said importations to 100,000 skins per annum.

That the said country doth abound with several other commodities (of which your petitioners have not been able to begin a trade, by reason of the interruptions they have met with from the French), as with whale-oil, whale-bone, (of which last your subjects now purchase from Holland and Germany, to the value of about £26,000 per annum, which may be had in your own dominions) besides many other valuable commodities, which in time may be discovered.

That if the French come to be once entirely possessed of Hudson's Bay, they will undoubtedly set up whale fishing in those parts, which will greatly tend to the increase of their navigation, and to their breed of seamen.

That there is carried thither, and consumed there, nothing but of the product and manufacture of England, your petitioners encouraging and daily bringing the Indians to wear coarse cloth instead of skins, which in process of time will considerably advance the woollen trade at home.

That it needs must reflect upon the honour of Britain to relinquish to the French that territory of which their violent usurpation in a time of peace was alleged as a main article in the first declaration of war against that Kingdom.

That if the French could pretend to any right to the said territories by the peace of Ryswick this right must needs be determined by their notorious infraction of the said treaty.

The premises considered, when your Majesty, in your high wisdom, shall think fit to give peace to those enemies whom your victorious arms have so reduced and humbled, and when your Majesty shall judge it for your people's good to enter into a treaty of peace with the French King, your Petitioners pray that the said Prince be obliged by such treaty, to renounce all right and pretensions to the Bay and Streights of Hudson, to quit and surrender all posts and settlements erected by the French, or which are now in their possession, as likewise not to sail any ships or vessels within the limits of the Company's charter, and to make restitution of the £108,514, 19s. 8d., of which they robbed and despoiled your petitioners in times of perfect amity between the two Kingdoms.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations.

The Memorandum of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay.

That for avoiding all disputes and differences that may in time to come arise between the said Company and the French, settled in Canada, they humbly represent and conceive it necessary:

Company's memo, as

That no wood-runners, either French or Indians, or any other person whatsoever, be permitted to travel, or seek for trade, beyond the limits hereinafter mentioned.

That the said limits begin from the island called Grimington's Island, or Cape Perdrix, in the latitude of 58½ north, which they desire may be the boundary between the English and French, on the coast of Labrador, towards Rupert's Land, on the east main, and Nova Britannia on the French side and that no French ship, bark, boat, or vessel whatsoever, shall pass to the northward at Cape Perdrix or Grimington's Island, towards or into the Streights or Bay of Hudson, on any pretence whatever.

That a line be supposed to pass to the south-westward of the said Island of Grimington, or Cape Perdrix, to the great Lake Micosinke, alias Mistoveny, dividing the same into two parts (as in the map now delivered), and that the French, nor any others employed by them, shall come to the north or north-westward of the said lake, or supposed line, by land or water, on or through any rivers, lakes, or countries, to trade, or erect any forts or settlements whatsoever; and the English, on the contrary, not to pass the said supposed line either to the southward or eastward.

That the French be likewise obliged to quit, surrender, and deliver up to the English, upon demand, York Fort (by them called Bourbon) undemolished; together with all forts, factories, settlements, and buildings whatsoever, taken from the English, or since erected, or built by the French, with all the artillery and ammunition, in the condition they are now in; together with all other places they are possessed of within the limits aforesaid, or within the Bay and Streights of Hudson.

These limits being first settled and adjusted, the Company are willing to refer their losses and damages formerly sustained by the French in time of peace, to the consideration of Commissioners to be appointed for that purpose.

By order of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England, trading into Hudson's Bay. Hudson's Bay House, 7th February, 1714.

NOTE.—The said Company are by their Charter constituted Lords Proprietors of all those lands, territories, seas, streights, bays, rivers, lakes, and sounds, within the entrance of the Streights, to hold the same, as of Her Majesty's manor of East Greenwich, in the County of Kent.

THE LORDS OF TRADE TO LORD BOLINGBROKE.

To the Right Honourable the Lord Viscount Bolingbroke.

MY LORD,—In obedience to Her Majesty's commands, signified to us by your Lordship's letter of the 13th of the last month, we have considered the memorial of the Governor and Company of Hudson's Bay, and the Petition relating to Mountserrat, and thereupon take leave to offer that Her Majesty be pleased to signify to the Court of France the necessity of appointing commissaries to treat the several matters pursuant to the 10th, 11th and 15th Articles of the Treaty of Peace with France, we being informed that the French commissaries who are here have not full powers to treat on those matters and as soon as we have their answer we shall lay it before your Lordship.

To the Honourable the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations.

The humble representation of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay,

SHIEWETH:

That pursuant to the 10th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, they did, the beginning of June last: send a ship for Hudson's Bay, and therein a Governor, one Captain Knight, and his Deputy, one Mr. Kelsey, to take possession of the whole Bay and Streights of Hudson, together with all other places relating thereto, as mentioned in the said articles, they having not only her late Majesty (of blessed memory) her commission for the same purpose, together with one from the Company, but likewise the most Christian King's order, under his hand and seal, with a power from the Canada Company, to deliver up the same according to the said Treaty, which ship, at the request of the said Canada Company, is not only to bring away the French settled in Hudson's Bay, but likewise their effects, pursuant to the aforesaid treaty, they paying freight for the same, which ship may be expected the latter end of September, or beginning of October next.

They further represent to your Lordships that, according to a memorial formerly delivered this Honourable Board, relating to the limits or boundaries to be settled by commissaries 'twixt the English and French in those parts, they humbly prayed, that for avoiding all disputes and differences that may in time arise between the Company and the French settled in Canada, that no wood-runners, either French or Indians, or any other person whatsoever, be permitted to travel or seek for trade beyond the limits thereafter mentioned.

That the said limits, beginning from the island called Grimington Island, or Cape Perdrix, in the latitude of 58½ north, may be the boundary between the English and the French, on the coast of Labrador towards Rupert's Land on the east main, and Nova Britannia on the French side.

That no French ship, barque, boat or vessel whatsoever, shall pass to the north-westward of Cape Perdrix, or Grimington's Island, towards or into the Streights or Bay of Hudson, on any pretence whatsoever.

That a line supposed to pass to the south-westward from the said island of Grimington, or Cape 20 Perdrix, to the great lake, Miscosinke, alias Mistoveny, dividing the same into two parts (as in the map now delivered), and from the said lake, a line to run south-westward into 49 degrees north latitude, as by the red line may more particularly appear, and that that latitude be the limit; that the French do not come to the north of it nor the English to the south of it.

That the French, nor any others employed by them, shall come to the north or north-westward of the said lake, or supposed line, by land or water, on or through any rivers, lakes or countries, to trade or erect any forts or settlements whatsoever; and the English, on the contrary, not to pass the said supposed line, either to the southward or eastward.

The said Company having already delivered to your Lordships an abstract of the damages sustained by the French in times of peace, amounting to £100,543 13s. 9d., according to the direction of 30 the 11th Article of the aforesaid Treaty, which they humbly entreat your Lordships to take care of, to the relief of the great hardships they have so long labored under.

Secretary.

LORD BOLINGBROKE TO THE LORDS OF TRADE.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of Trade, &c.

Bolingbroke to Lords of
August, 1714.

MY LORDS,—The Lords Justices desire to have an account forthwith laid before them of what has been done since the peace, relating to Hudson's Bay, Nova Scotia and St. Christopher's. Some things 40 have passed in my office, others, I believe, in the Treasury, and a considerable deal I doubt not has been done by your Lordships; wherefore, if your Lordships be pleased to collect a perfect state of the whole I will furnish you with what you want from me.

I am likewise on this occasion to put your Lordships in mind of the point referred by the Treaty of Peace with France, to the discussion of commissaries, that their Excellencies may be acquainted with the orders given to the commissaries of commerce in these matters, and their proceedings thereupon.

Your letter of the 30th July, relating to Captain Van Estegle, has been laid before the Lords Justices, and the orders their Excellencies have been pleased to give thereupon, have been sent to the Treasury and Admiralty. It is likewise thought fit that your Lordships, in your station, should advertise the governors and other officers in the plantations of their duty in the particulars mentioned in your letter, both with respect to the trading to the French settlements and to the illegal landing of goods from thence.

I am,
My Lords,

Your Lordships' most humble servant,

BOLINGBROKE.

THE LORDS OF TRADE TO LORD BOLINGBROKE.

To the Viscount Bolingbroke.

MY LORD,—In obedience to their Excellencies the Lords Justices' commands, signified to us by your Lordship's letter of the 12th inst., requiring to know what has been done since the peace relating to Hudson's Bay, Nova Scotia, and St. Christopher's, we take leave to represent:

Lords of Trade to Lord
Bolingbroke,
14 Aug., 1714.

That upon your Lordship's letter of the 22nd July, requiring us to prepare proper instructions for the British commissaries who are appointed to treat with those of France upon the 10th, 11th, and 15th Articles of the Treaty of Peace, we wrote letters to several persons concerned in the Leeward Islands, and several parts of the continent, for what they might have to offer to such parts of the said Articles as did relate to them respectively, and have received answers from some of them. We pray your Lordship will please lay the enclosed copies thereof before their Excellencies, the Lords Justices, as follows:

Copy of a memorial from the Hudson's Bay Company, describing the limits which they desire may be fixed between them and the French in those parts, as also an abstract of the damages they have sustained by the French in times of peace.

In relation to St. Christopher's we further take leave to represent that upon several references from Her late Majesty in Council, from the Lord High Treasurer, and from the Secretary of State, we prepared a representation relating to the settlement of the French part of that Island, as also a letter to the late Lord Treasurer upon the same subject, copies whereof are here enclosed, which your Lordship will please also lay before their Excellencies the Lords Justices.

Since which time we have received some other petitions from French refugees, also referred to us of the same nature as those mentioned in our above said representations, which we have not yet been able to consider so as to be able to make a report thereon.

We shall take care by the first opportunity to send directions to the governors and other officers in the Plantations, in relation to the illegal trade between the said Plantations and the said French settlements.

We are,

My Lord,

Your most obedient and humble servants,

MEMORIAL OF THE COMPANY, 1719.

The Memorial of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England, trading into Hudson's Bay.

Hudson's Bay
Company's memorial to Lords of
Trade, 1719.

SHWETH:

That at the Treaty concluded at Utrecht, it was agreed between the Crowns of Great Britain and France, that the Straights and Bay of Hudson should be delivered up to the British subjects, and that the limits should be settled between the said Bay of Hudson and the places appertaining to the French, and also that satisfaction should be given to the Company for all depredations committed against them by the French in a time of peace, according to an estimate thereof to be made at the requisition of the several parties.

Now, may it please your Lordships :

The First of these Articles, the surrender of the Straights and Bay aforesaid, has been made according to the tenour of the Treaty, at least in such manner that the Company acquiesce therein, and have nothing to object or desire further on that head.

The other two, viz., the running of a line between the English and French Territories, and the making reparations to the Company for their losses and damages, yet remain to be done.

Whereupon the Governor and Company most humbly present to your Lordships that they conceive it absolutely necessary that the limits between the two nations be settled without delay, for that the French have, since the conclusion of peace, viz., in 1715, made a settlement at the head of Albany River, upon which very river our principal factory is settled, whereby they intercept the Indian trade from coming to the Company's factories, and will, in time, utterly ruin the trade, if not prevented. It is, therefore, proposed and desired that a boundary or dividend may be drawn, so as to exclude the French from coming anywhere to the northward of the latitude of 49, except on the coast of Labrador; unless this be done the Company's factories at the bottom of Hudson's Bay cannot be secure nor their trade preserved.

As to the article of the Company's losses, it will appear by a true and exact estimate, to this memorial annexed, that the French took from the Company, in full peace, viz., between the years '82 and '88, seven ships with their cargoes, and six forts and factories, in which they had carried away great stores of goods, laid up for trading with the Indians, the whole amount to £38,332 15s. principal money, and £62,210 18s. 9d. interest, computed to the year 1713, which two sums being added together make the total amount £100,543 13s. 9d.

The Company, humbly referring your Lordships to the estimate itself for particulars, crave leave to make two remarks upon it.

1st. That the loss of the forts is not charged therein, nor are the damages valued which the Company suffered by the depredations of the French, which must be very great considering how long they held possession of our forts, and enjoyed the trading depending thereon; particularly they held Albany Fort and all the places of trade in the bottom of the Bay for six years. The bare interest only is charged, which is always supposed necessarily to grow out of the principal and to be inseparable from it.

2nd. That the proofs and vouchers which support the account are such as the reason and nature of the thing will admit of, especially considering the distance of time and place where the injuries complained of were committed. The seizure of the several forts, and capture of the respective ships, being acts of a notorious and public nature, it is presumed they will not be denied; besides that there are living witnesses here to some of them. The cost of the ships and goods are extracted out of the Company's books, where every article was fairly entered when there could be no foresight of their misfortunes which afterwards happened; the traasmen's several bills are likewise ready to be produced, to confirm the account.

Wherefore, the Governor and Company most humbly pray, that your Lordships will be pleased to espouse their just cause, and so recommend it to His Majesty that they may have full reparation made as was agreed and promised by the late King of France, at the Treaty of Utrecht.

I have seriously considered your proposition of laying open the Hudson's Bay trade, and settling the country higher up, upon those great rivers which run into the Bay; and though I may agree with you in the great advantage the public would receive from such a settlement (could it be made), both as to their trade, and the cutting off communication with the Mississippi, yet I must declare my opinion that it is altogether impracticable upon many accounts; for I cannot see where we could find people enough that would be willing or able to undergo the fatigue of travelling in those frozen climates, or what encouragements would be sufficient to make them attempt it, with such dangerous enemies on every side; no Europeans could undergo such hardships as those French do intercept the English trade, who are inured to it, and are called by us wood-runners (or coureurs des bois), for they endure fatigues just the same as the native Indians, with whom they have been mixed and intermarried for two or three or more generations.

* Middleton was a Commander in the Royal Navy who had served as master in the employ of the Hudson's Bay Company for many voyages. Mr. Dobbs was the author of "An account of the countries adjoining Hudson's Bay, and of certain voyages thither (1714)..." which he himself had made.

10 As to the rivers you mention, none of them are navigable with anything but canoes, so small that they carry but two men, and they are forced to make use of land carriages nearly the fourth part of the way, by reason of water-falls, during that little summer they enjoy.

Out of 120 men and officers the Company have in the Bay, not five are capable of venturing in one of those canoes, they are so apt to overturn and drown them. Many of our people have been twenty years and upwards there, and yet are not dexterous enough to manage a canoe; so there would be no transporting people thither at way.

20 EXTRACTS FROM THE EVIDENCE OF WITNESSES.

JOSEPH ROBSON:—"Thinks that the beavers which are brought down to the Company are refused by the French from their being a heavy commodity; for the natives who come to trade with the Company dispose of their small valuable furs to the French, and bring down their heavy goods to the Company in summer, when the rivers are open, which they sell, and supply the French with European goods purchased from the Company."

Commons,

RICHARD WHITE:—"The French intercept the Indians coming down with their trade as the witness believes, he having seen them with guns and clothing of French manufacture; and that an Indian told him there was a French settlement up Moose River, something to the southward of the West, at the distance, as the witness apprehends, of about 50 miles. . . . The French deal in light furs, and take all of that sort they can get, and the Indians bring the heavy to us. . . . Sometimes the Indians bring down marten's skins, but that is when they don't meet with the French, . . . he never knew any Indians who had met the French bring down any light furs. . . . The French settlement on Moose River is on Abbitis Lake. . . . The trade might be further extended by sending up Europeans to winter among the natives, which, though the Company have not lately attempted, the French actually do."

ROBERT GRIFFIN:—"The French intercept the trade; to prevent which the Company some time ago built Henly House, which did in some measure answer the purpose; but if they would build further in the country it would have a better effect. The French went there first and are better beloved, but if we would go up into the country the French Indians would trade with us."

ALEXANDER BROWN:—"The French intercepting the southern Indians, and by that means 40 obtaining the valuable furs. . . . Has been informed by the Indians that the French Canadese Indians come within six score miles of the English factories. . . . The French Indians come to Albany to trade for their heavy goods. . . . Has heard Mr. Norton [the Governor] say that the French ran away with our trade. . . . If the trade was opened the French would not intercept the Indians, since in that case the separate traders must have out-factories in the same manner the French have, which the Company have not:” and being asked “In case those out-settlements were erected, whether the same trade could be carried on at the present settlements?” he said “That was impossible, but the trade would be extended, and by that means they would take it from the French. That if these settlements were near the French, they must have garrisons to secure them against the French, and the Indians who trade with and are in friendship with them, (whom he distinguished by the name of French Indians). . . . He heard the Indians tell Governor Norton, in the year 1739, that the French had a settlement at about the distance of 160 or six score miles from Churchill, which had then been built about a year, and contained sixty men with small arms. . . . That the witness was informed by an Indian and his whole family that this settlement was upon Seel River, which was navigable up to it for canoes.”

WILLIAM WANSEY:—“Has been told the French draw the Indians from Hudson's Bay. . . . The 10 creating settlements up in the country would be the most proper method to increase the trade.”

EXTRACTS FROM THE ORDERS GIVEN BY THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY TO THEIR CHIEF FACTORS IN THE BAY, IN ANTICIPATION OF AN ATTACK OVERLAND FROM CANADA.

Mr. Joseph Isbister and Council, at Albany Fort.

LONDON, 10th May, 1744.

Orders of Hudson's Bay Company to Chief Factors:
 To Joseph Isbister and Council, 10 May, 1744.

GENTLEMEN :

5th. The English and French having declared war against each other, and the war with Spain still continuing, we do hereby strictly direct you to be always on your guard, and to keep a good watch, and that you keep all your men as near home as possible.

20 8th. We do also direct that you fix your cannon in the most proper places to defend yourselves and annoy an enemy, after which you are to fire each cannon once with powder to see how they prove, and instruct your men to the use of them without firing; and that you keep them constantly loaded with powder and ball, ready for service. You are also to keep your small arms loaded and in good order and at hand, to be easily come at; and that those loaded arms be drawn or discharged once a month, and be well cleaned; and you are to exercise your men once a week till they are well disciplined, and afterwards once a month. And you are also to keep a sufficient number of your trading guns loaded and at hand in case of an attack; and if there be any Indians you can confide in, and will be of service in your defence, we recommend it to you to employ them in such manner as you think proper.

30 15th. We have wrote to the factory at Moose River, that in case they have any intelligence of the French coming down their river to attack them, they are immediately to send you notice thereof, that you may make the necessary preparations for your defence, and that there be a constant correspondence and intelligence between each factory for the safety of both.

16th. As we rely on the courage and conduct of Mr. Isbister, our chief, in case of an attack from the enemy, which, if done at all on your factory, we apprehend it will be by land, in the winter, from Canada; in which case the enemy not being able to bring down any cannon with them, we doubt not of your frustrating their designs and repulsing them.

40 18th. In case you are attacked at Henly House, and notwithstanding a vigorous resistance you should have the misfortune to be overpowered, then you are to nail up the cannon, blow up the House, and destroy everything that can be of service to the enemy, and make the best retreat you can to the factory.

19th. We direct that you get the best information you can from the trading Indians whether the French are making any preparations to come down to the factory, or have lodged any provisions, stores, or ammunition at certain distances for their supply. We also direct you, for your better security, at all times to keep two Indians in the factory, with civil and kind usage, and send them out every morning, for intelligence to a proper distance, so as that they may return in the evening, and provided they do not return that it be an alarm to you, and that you thereupon prepare yourselves for a vigorous defence. But you must not upon any consideration let those Indians have the least knowledge of the use you intend to make of their not returning.

4th. As the war continues with France and Spain we cannot be too strict in ordering and directing you to be always on your guard, and to keep a good watch and all your men as near home as possible.

11th. We have augmented the complement of men (as you desired) at your factory and Moose Fort, that in case of need you may assist each other, and thereby we hope you will be enabled to baffle the designs of the enemy.

13th. We do direct that not only a continual correspondence be kept between you and Moose Fort but that you correspond with the factory at Slude River, York Fort, and Prince of Wales' Fort as often as you can, and if under any apprehensions of an attack to give immediate notice to Moose Fort.

4th. We again recommend your keeping the land, round the Fort and the Battery at Cape Merry, free from everything that may possibly conceal or shelter an enemy, that you may thereby prevent being surprised.

We do also direct that you constantly keep your great guns loaded with powder and ball ready for service during the time the rivers are open; you are also to keep your small arms loaded and in good order, and at hand, to be easily come at, which loaded arms and cannon are to be drawn once a month and well cleaned, and to exercise your men as often as requisite, whom we expect by this time are artists, not only in the use of small arms but also of cannon, that the great expense we have been at in this particular may answer the end proposed thereby in case of an attack. You are also to keep a sufficient number of your trading guns loaded and at hand, which charges are also to be drawn every month, and if there be any Indians you can confide in, and will be of service to you in your defence, we recommend it to you to employ them in such manner as you think proper.

CHARLTON ISLAND, 13th September, 1683.

20 From Henry Sargeant.

I shall not be neglectful as soon as I find any man capable and willing for to send up into the country with the Indians, to endeavour to penetrate into what the country will and may produce, and to use their utmost in bringing down the Indians to our Factory; but your honours should give good encouragement to those who undertake such extraordinary service, or else I fear there will be but few that will embrace such employment.

From H.
Sargeant,
13th Sept., 1683.

To Henry Sargeant, Esq.

22ND May, 1685.

We perceive our servants are unwilling to travel up into the country by reason of danger and want of encouragement. The danger we judge is not more now than formerly, and for their encouragement we shall plentifully reward them when we find they deserve it by bringing down Indians to our Factories, of which you may assure them. We judge Robert Sandford a fit person to travel, having the lingue and understanding the trade of the country; and upon a promise of Mr. Young (one of our adventurers), that he should travel, for which reasons we have advanced his wages to thirty pounds per annum; and William Arrington, called, in the Bay, Red-Cap, whom we have again entertained in our service, as also John Vincent; both which we do also judge fit persons for you to send up into the country to bring down trade.

To H. Sargeant, 22nd
May, 1685.

CHARLTON ISLAND, August 24th, 1685.

From Governor Sargeant.

Mr. Sandford does not accept the terms your honours propose, but rather chooses to go home. Neither he nor any of your servants will travel up the country, although your honours have earnestly desired it, and I pressed it upon those proposals you have hinted.

Sargeant,

Memorial,
 1752.

The Hudson's Bay Company claim.

The lands to the northward of a line drawn from 59½ degrees of north latitude in the Atlantick Ocean, south-westward to the Lake Miscosink, otherwise Mistoseney, and through the same Lake, down to the 49th degree of north latitude (as described in a mapp delivered to the Lords of Trade), and thence continued by a meridian line of the said latitude of 49 degrees, westward.

These boundaries, together with a demand of £108,514 19s. 8d. sterling, was claimed by the Company in the year 1709, and afterwards by the Commissaries appointed by virtue of the Treaty of Utrecht.

THE COMPANY TO THE LORDS OF TRADE.

Hudson's Bay Company to

 Feb., 1755.

SIR,—I am directed by the Governor and Committee of the Hudson Bay Company to inform His Majesty's Ministers that in the year 1752, by the orders of the Lords of Trade, they laid before their Lordships a statement of their claims, which hath subsisted ever since; and in consequence of the Treaty of Utrecht, and as they are desirous of having your assistance and support, they order me to inform you that they will be ready to give such further information as to their rights as may be wanted to prove the justice of their said claim.

I am with the greatest respect, Sir,

Your most obedient, humble servant,

Hudson's Bay House, 19th Feb., 1755.

CHAS. HAYS.

MEMORIAL OF THE COMPANY REFERRED TO IN THE NEXT SUCCEEDING REPORT, 1759.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations.

The humble Memorial of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay.

May it please Your Lordships :

In prospect of an approaching Treaty of Peace between this nation and France, and in hope that the great success His Majesty's arms have been blessed with, and the many acquisitions that have been thereby gained from the enemy, will enable His Majesty to secure to your memorialists satisfaction [for] the injuries and depredations they have long since suffered from the French, which stands acknowledged by Treaty, and are stipulated to be made satisfaction for, but through the perfidy of the enemy, and in disregard of the Treaty, have hitherto remained unsatisfy'd; in which the honour of the nation, as well as justice to the individuals, loudly call for redress. To that end your memorialists beg leave to represent to your Lordships :

That the French, before the Treaty of Utrecht, in the time of peace, under some pretended claim of right, disturbed the Hudson's Bay Company in the quiet possession of Hudson's Bay and the territories thereto belonging, and in a hostile manner with ships of war and an armed land force, attacked and took several of the Hudson's Bay Company's ships in harbour in the bay, and also took, plundered and dispossessed them of several factories and settlements on the coast thereof, which matters, having been under consideration at the Treaty of Utrecht, were admitted, and agreed to be settled and satisfy'd by the following articles thereof :

That in pursuance of the said Treaty, and an Especial Commission of her said late Majesty, Queen Anne, dated the 20th of July, 1713, the said Bay and lands then in possession of the French, were delivered up to Governor Knight and Kelsey, who took possession thereof for the English Hudson's Bay Company, and Commissarys were appointed to settle the said limits, and adjust the damages the Company had sustained, which for the ships and goods of the Company taken by the French appears by an account stated in the year 1713, and delivered to the then Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations, amounted to upwards of one hundred thousand pounds, besides the damages the Company sustained by the enemies burning three of their forts and factorys at Charlton Island, Moose River, and New Severn. And proceedings were had by the said Commissarys towards settling the same; but they were never able to bring the settlement of the said limits to a final conclusion, nor did the said Hudson's Bay Company ever receive any satisfaction for their said damages.

That the papers which were laid before the said Commissarys and the minutes of their proceedings, as also a memorial relative to this matter, which in the year 1750, after the conclusion of the last war, was presented to your Lordships, remaining, as your memorialists believe, in your Lordships' office, it is conceived from thence will appear the best state of the rights of both Crowns and of the territories and claims of the said Company that can be laid before your Lordships, whereto your memorialists beg leave to refer.

Your memorialists therefore humbly hope, in case any Treaty of Peace shall be set on foot between this nation and France, that your Lordships will intercede with His Majesty to take the premises into His Royal consideration; and that he will be graciously pleased to cause your memorialists to have full satisfaction made them, pursuant to the said Treaty of Utrecht, for the aforesaid depredations they are thereby acknowledged to have sustained from the French in time of peace; and for which satisfaction is by the said Treaty agreed to be made to the Company; and that the limits of the said Company's territory may be settled, as by the said Treaty is also agreed.

All which is humbly submitted to your Lordships' consideration.

By order of the Governor and Committee of the said Company.

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY'S POSTS, 1775-1798.

H. B. Co's Posts,
1775-98.

1775.—“The Hudson's Bay Company has at present four factories: Churchill, Fort York, Albany and that of Moose River. Fort York is reputed the most important: it is situated on the south branch of the Hayes River, five leagues above the point where it runs into the sea, at 37 deg. 20 min. lat., and 93 deg. 58 min. long.”*

1795.—Winterbotham† gives the following as the forts occupied by the Hudson's Bay Company They were all on the shores of the Bay:—

	N. Lat.	W. Lon.
Churchill,	59° 0'	94° 30'
York Fort,	57° 10'	93° 0'

Albany Fort,	52° 18'	85° 18'
Moose Fort,	51° 28'	83° 15'
East Main,	53° 24'	78° 50'

And he adds:

“The country lying round Hudson's Bay, or the country of the Esquimaux, comprehended Labrador, New Britain, and North Wales, has obtained the general name of New Britain, and is attached to the Government of Lower Canada. A superintendent of trade, appointed by the Governor-General of the four Provinces, and responsible to him, resides at Labrador.

“Before the Canadian merchants pursued the fur trade with such diligence as they now do through the lakes, and had penetrated into the interior parts of the Hudson's Bay, a great number of Indians used to come annually down to the Company's settlements to barter their skins; and although the Company have now, in a great measure, lost the benefit of this lucrative traffic, it may not be amiss to mention the manner in which the Indians prosecute their voyages to the factories.

“The merchants from Canada have been heard to acknowledge that were the Hudson's Bay Company to prosecute their inland trade in a spirited manner, they must soon be obliged to give up all thoughts of penetrating into the country, as from the vicinity of the Company's factories to the inland posts, they can afford to undersell them in every branch.

“To explain this emulation between the Company and the Canadian traders, it will be necessary to review the state of the Company in the year 1773. About that time, the Canadian traders from Montreal, actuated by a laudable spirit of industry and adventure, and experiencing the peculiar advantages that resulted from their exertions, had become so numerous and indefatigable at the head of the rivers which led to the Company's settlement, that the trade of the latter was in a great measure cut off from its usual channels. The Indians, being supplied with everything they could wish for at their own doors, had no longer occasion, as they had hitherto done, to build canoes, and paddle several hundred miles, for the sake of cultivating a commerce with the Company, in which peregrination they were frequently exposed to much danger from hunger; so much so, that at one time seven canoes of Upland Indians perished on their return to their own country."

And whereas, the welfare of the families at present forming settlements on the Red River, within the said territory, with those on the way to it, passing the winter at York and Churchill Forts in Hudson's Bay, as also those who are expected to arrive next autumn, renders it a necessary and indispensable part of my duty to provide for their support in the yet uncultivated state of the country, and the ordinary resources derived from the buffalo and other wild animals hunted within the territory are 40 not deemed more than adequate for the requisite supply: Wherefore, it is hereby ordered, that no person, trading in furs or provisions within the territory, for the Honourable Hudson's Bay Company or the North-west Company, or any individual or unconnected traders or persons whatever, shall take out any provisions, either of flesh, fish, grain or vegetables, procured or raised within the said territory, by water or land carriage, for one twelvemonth from the date hereof, save and except what may be judged necessary for the trading parties at this present time within the territory to carry them to their respective destinations, and who may on due application to me obtain a license for the same. The provisions procured and raised as above shall be taken for the use of the colony; and that no loss may

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY'S STATEMENT OF RIGHTS, 1850.

STATEMENT OF THE RIGHTS, AS TO TERRITORY, TRADE, TAXATION, AND GOVERNMENT, CLAIMED AND EXERCISED BY THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY ON THE CONTINENT OF NORTH AMERICA, 1850.*

By the Charter of His Majesty King Charles the Second, dated 2nd May, 1670, by which the Hudson's Bay Company was constituted, His Majesty granted to the Company as follows:—

"We have given, granted and confirmed, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors do give, grant and confirm, unto the said Governor and Company, and their successors, the sole trade and commerce of all these seas, straits, bays, rivers, lakes, creeks and sounds, in whatsoever latitude they shall be, that lie within the entrance of the straits commonly called Hudson's Straits, together with all the lands and territories upon the countries, coasts and confines of the seas, bays, lakes, rivers creeks and sounds aforesaid, that are not already actually possessed by, or granted to any of our subjects, or possessed by the subjects of any other Christian Prince or State, with the fishing of all sorts of fish, whales, sturgeons and all other royal fishes in the seas, bays, inlets and rivers within the premises, and the fish therein taken, together with the royalty of the sea upon the coasts within the limits aforesaid, and all mines royal, as well discovered as not discovered, of gold, silver, gems and precious stones, to be found or discovered within the territories, limits and places aforesaid, and that the said land be from henceforth reckoned and reputed as one of our plantations or colonies in America, called 'Rupert's Land.

And further we do, by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, make, create, and constitute the said Governor and Company for the time being, and their successors, the true and absolute lords and proprietors of the same territory, limits and places aforesaid, and of all other the premises, saving always the faith, allegiance and sovereign dominion due to us, our heirs and successors for the same; to have, hold, possess and enjoy the said territory, limits and places, and all and singular other the premises hereby granted as aforesaid, with their and every of their rights, members, jurisdictions, prerogatives, royalties and appurtenances whatsoever, to them the said Governor and Company, and their successors for ever, to be holden of us, our heirs and successors, as of our manor of East Greenwich, in our County of Kent, in free and common socage, and not in capite or by Knight's service, yielding and paying yearly to us, our heirs and successors, for the same, two elks and two black beavers, whensoever 10 and as often as we, our heirs and successors, shall happen to enter into the said countries, territories and regions hereby granted."

Under this grant the Company have always claimed and exercised dominion as absolute proprietors of the soil in the territories understood to be embraced by the terms of the grant, and which are more particularly defined in the accompanying map; and they have also claimed and enjoyed the exclusive right of trading in those territories.

It may be right here to mention that although the original title to the territory and trade in question was derived under the Charter above referred to, the rights of the Company have, in various instances, received the recognition of the Legislature.

The Act 14 Geo. 3, chap. 83, which is intitled, "An Act for making more effectual provision for 20 the government of the Province of Quebec, in North America," in describing the boundaries of Canada, expressly refers to their lying "northward to the southern boundary of the territories granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay;" thereby distinctly recognizing the existence of such a grant, and referring to the known boundary on the south of the territory so granted

Again, an Act was passed in the 43rd year of the reign of Geo. 3, c. 138, intitled "An Act for extending the Jurisdiction of the Courts of Justice in the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada to the Trial and Punishment of Persons guilty of Crimes and Offences within certain Parts of North America adjoining to the said Provinces;" and this Act, having stated in the preamble that crimes committed in the Indian territories were not then cognizable by any jurisdiction whatever, declares that such crimes should be considered as if committed within the jurisdiction of the Canadian courts. 30

A doubt having arisen whether this provision extended to the territories possessed by the Hudson's Bay Company, because, although they formed part of the Indian territories, crimes therein committed could not be said not to be cognizable by any jurisdiction whatever, inasmuch as the Hudson's Bay Company had a distinct jurisdiction conferred upon it by its Charter, an Act was passed in the 1st and 2nd Geo. 4, c. 66, intitled "An Act for regulating the Fur Trade, and establishing a Criminal and Civil Jurisdiction within certain parts of North America," by which, after reciting that doubts had been entertained whether the provisions of the Act of Geo. 3 extended to the territories granted by charter to the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, and that it was expedient that such doubts should be removed, and the said Act should be further extended, it was declared and enacted, that the provisions of the Act of 43 Geo. 3, should be deemed and construed, "to 40 extend to and over, and to be in full force in and through all the territories theretofore granted to the Hudson's Bay Company," thus again distinctly recognizing the existence of the grant of the soil, as well as the jurisdiction; for the Act contains an express reservation that nothing therein contained should affect the rights, privileges, authority or jurisdiction of the Hudson's Bay Company; and, in consequence, from that period, the Company and the Canadian Courts have exercised a concurrent jurisdiction as to offences committed within the territories of the Company. By this Act also, power was given to the Court to make, grant, or give licenses for the exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America as should be specified in any such grants or licenses not being part of the land and territories granted to the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay, and not being part of any of the Crown Provinces in North America, or of any lands or territories 50 belonging to the United States of America.

By virtue of licenses granted under the powers of this Act, the Company are entitled to certain exclusive rights of trading beyond the limits of their own territories; but this Act is referred to here as distinctly recognizing the rights of the Company to exclusive trade within their own territories.

With regard to taxation and government, the Company under their Charter, are invested with power "to make, ordain and constitute such and so many reasonable laws, constitutions, orders and ordinances as to them, or the greater part of them, being then and there present, shall seem necessary and convenient for the good government of the said Company, and of all governors of colonies, forts and plantations, factors, masters, mariners and other officers employed or to be employed in any of the territories and lands aforesaid, and in any of their voyages, and for the better advancement and continuance of the said trade or traffic and plantations, and the same laws, constitutions, orders and ordinances so made, to put in use and execute accordingly, and at their pleasure to revoke and alter the same or any of them, as the occasion shall require: And it is provided that the said Governor and Company, so often as they shall make, ordain or establish any such laws, constitutions, orders and ordinances, in such form as aforesaid, shall and may lawfully impose, ordain, limit and provide such pains, penalties and punishment upon all offenders, contrary to such laws, constitutions, orders and ordinances, or any of them, as to the said Governor and Company for the time being, or the greater part of them, then and there being present (the said Governor or his Deputy being always one), shall seem necessary, requisite or convenient for the observation of the same laws, constitutions, orders and ordinances; and the same fines and amerciaments shall and may, by their officers and servants from time to time to be appointed for that purpose, levy, take and have, to the use of the said Governor and Company, and their successors, without the impediment of us, our heirs and successors, or of any of the officers or ministers of us, our heirs or successors, and without any account therefor to us, our heirs or successors to be made, so always as the said laws, constitutions, orders and ordinances, fines and amerciaments, be reasonable, and not contrary or repugnant, but as near as may be agreeable to the laws, statutes or customs of this our realm." And it is further provided, "that all lands, islands, territories, plantations, forts, fortifications, factories or colonies, where the said Company's factories and trade are or shall be, within any parts or places afore limited, shall be immediately and from henceforth under the power and command of the said Governor and Company, their successors and assigns; and the said Governor and Company are empowered to appoint and establish Governors and all other officers to govern them." And it is provided, "that the Governor and his Council of the several and respective places where the said Company shall have plantations, forts, fortifications, colonies or places of trade within any of the countries, lands or territories hereby granted, may have power to judge all persons belonging to the said Governor and Company, or that shall live under them, in all causes, whether civil or criminal, according to the laws of this Kingdom, and to execute justice accordingly; and in case any crime or misdemeanor shall be committed in any of the said Company's plantations, forts, factories, or places of trade within the limits of the aforesaid, where judicature cannot be executed for want of a Governor and Council there, then, in such case, it shall and may be lawful for the chief Factor of that place and his Council to transmit the party, together with the offence, to such other plantation, factory or fort where there shall be a Governor and Council, where justice may be executed, or into this kingdom of England, as shall be thought most convenient, there to receive such punishment as the nature of his offences shall deserve."

In pursuance of the authority thus given, the Company have invariably exercised all the power of government necessary for the administration of justice in their territory, and for that purpose have appointed proper officers, who have acted judicially in all matters arising therein.

As already observed, the Canadian Courts have now a concurrent jurisdiction with the Company.

It may be right here to refer to several Acts of the Legislature which have recognized the general rights and privileges claimed and exercised by the Company:

An Act passed in the sixth year of the reign of Queen Anne, c. 37, intituled "An Act for the Encouragement of the Trade to America," and this Act contains an express proviso, that "nothing therein contained shall extend or be construed to take away or prejudice any of the estates, rights or privileges of or belonging to the Governor and Company of Adventurers trading into Hudson's Bay."

In like manner, in 1745, when an Act was passed (18 Geo. 2, c. 17), for granting a reward for the discovery of a north-west passage through Hudson's Straits, it was expressly provided that 'nothing therein contained should extend or be construed to take away or prejudice any of the estates, rights or privileges of or belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company.'

No exact system of taxation has been claimed or exercised by the Company, and until a colony of resident settlers was established other than the Company's own servants, the Company defrayed the whole expenses of the government of their territories without the aid of any contribution whatever; but since a colony was formed, it has been made a stipulation with the community, upon their becoming settlers, and receiving parcels of land, that they should contribute towards the expenses of the government of the colony; but the main charge has continued to be borne by the Company.

THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY'S STATEMENT AS TO THEIR TRADE WITH THE INTERIOR, PRIOR TO 1763.*

As long as Canada was held by the French the opposition of wandering traders (coureurs des bois) was insufficient to induce the Company to give up their usual method of trading. Their servants waited at the forts built on the coast of the bay, and there bought by barter the furs which the Indians brought from the interior.

But after the cession of Canada to Great Britain in 1763, British traders following in the track of the French, penetrated into the countries lying to the north-west of the Company's territories, and by their building factories brought the market for furs nearer to the Indian seller.

The Company finding their trade seriously affected, extended the field of their operations, and sent 20 parties to establish themselves in the interior. In process of time all smaller opposing interests were absorbed either by purchase or coalition in the North-West Company of Montreal, which thus became the sole rival and competitor to the Hudson's Bay Company. During many successive years a most disastrous contest was carried on between these two companies. Wherever one Company established a trading post, there at once the other Company also commenced operations. This system of close competition rapidly produced a general state of disorganization, resulting in scenes of violence and bloodshed between the Indians, the trappers, and the traders, in the interests of the rival Companies.

I have the honour to acknowledge your letters requesting information relating to the boundary between the Province of Upper Canada and the Territory held by the Hudson's Bay Company.

I enclose a map, No. 1, showing the Territories claimed by the Company in virtue of the Charter granted to them by King Charles the Second. The map in question was prepared by Mr. John Arrow-smith, and was ordered by the House of Commons to be printed 31st July, and 11th August, 1857.

I also enclose a statement No. 2, prepared for the Company in 1857, with reference to the Parliamentary enquiry which took place in that year. The boundaries were then asserted to be, on the side of the United States, by the 49th parallel of latitude; on the side of Canada, by the height of land whose waters flow into Hudson's Bay; and on the north by the Arctic Ocean.

At the time of the passing of the Quebec Act, 1774, the Company had not extended their posts and operations far from the shores of Hudson's Bay. Journals of the following trading stations have been preserved, bearing that date, namely: Albany, Henley, Moose, Eastmain, York, Severn, and Churchill.

These Journals give no information upon the subject of the boundaries between Canada and the Territory of the Company, nor was the question raised in 1748, when the House of Lords held an enquiry with reference to the Company's affairs as at that time conducted.

A map No. 3, no doubt prepared for that occasion, and sent herewith, shows the extent of country to which these operations were then confined.

At a subsequent period, namely in 1777, a map was published in London by John Andrews, giving the height of land, near Lake Abitibi and other quarters, and showing certain boundaries for the Province of Upper Canada.

I am to request that the maps and documents accompanying this letter may be returned to the Company when the enquiry to which you refer has been completed.

I shall be glad if you find them useful for the purpose of defining the boundary line between the Dominion and Ontario.

I have, etc.,

GEORGE G. GOSCHEN.

THE LORDS OF TRADE AS TO THE FRENCH POSSESSIONS, AND THE ROUTES THEY HAD TO THE MISSISSIPPI, 1721.*

FROM A REPRESENTATION OF THE LORDS COMMISSIONERS FOR TRADE AND PLANTATIONS TO THE KING, UPON THE STATE OF HIS MAJESTY'S COLONIES AND PLANTATIONS ON THE CONTINENT OF NORTH AMERICA. DATED SEPTEMBER THE 8th, 1721.

The French territories in America extend from the mouth of the River St. Lawrence to the embouchure of the Mississippi, forming one continued line from north to south on the back of your 10 Majesty's plantations, and although their garrisons, in many parts, are hitherto but very inconsiderable, yet as they have, by means of their missionaries, debauched several of the Indian nations to their interest, your Majesty's subjects along the continent have the utmost danger to apprehend from this new settlement, unless timely care be taken to prevent its increase.

Lords of Trade as to the French routes to the Mississippi,
8th September, 1721.

From this lake [Erie] to the Mississippi they have three different routes. The shortest by water is up the River Miamis, or Ouamis, on the south-west of Lake Erie, on which river they sail about 150 leagues without interruption, when they find themselves stopped by another landing of about three leagues, which they call a carrying place, because they are generally obliged to carry their canoes overland in those places to the next river, and that where they next embark is a very shallow one called La Rivière de Portage; hence they row about forty leagues to the River Oubach, and from thence about 20 120 leagues to the River Ohio, into which the Oubach falls, as the River Ohio does, about eighty leagues lower, into the Mississippi, which continues its course for about 350 leagues, directly to the Bay of Mexico.

There are likewise two other passages, much longer than this, which are particularly packed down in Hennipen's map, and may be described in the following manner:—

From the north-west of Lake Erie to a fort on the Lake St. Clair called Pont Chartrin [Detroit], is about eight leagues sail. Here the French have a settlement, and often four hundred traders meet there. Along this lake they proceed about seven leagues further, and thence to the great Lake Huron about ten leagues; hence they proceed to the Straits of Michillimackinack, 120 leagues. Here is a garrison of about thirty French, and a vast concourse of traders, sometimes not less than 1,000, besides 30 Indians, being a common place of rendezvous. At and near this place the Outarwas, an Indian nation, are settled.

From the Lake Huron they pass by the Straight of Michillimackinack four leagues, being two in breadth, and of a great depth, to the Lake Illinois; thence 150 leagues on the lake to Fort Miamis, situated on the mouth of the River Chigagoe; from hence came those Indians of the same name, viz.:
Miamis, who are settled on the forementioned river that runs into Erie.

Up the River Chigagoe they sail but three leagues to a passage of one-fourth of a league; then enter a small lake of about a mile, and have another very small portage; and again another of two miles to the River Illinois; thence down the stream 130 leagues to the Mississippi.

The next route is from Michillimackinack on the Lake Illinois to the Lake de Puans, ninety leagues;
40 thence to the River Puans, eighty leagues; thence up the same to a portage of about four miles before they come to the River Owisensing; thence forty leagues to Mississippi.

JOINT OPINION OF THE ATTORNEY AND SOLICITOR-GENERAL, SIR DUDLEY RYDER AND SIR WILLIAM MURRAY, ON THE HUDSON'S BAY CO.'S CHARTER, 1748.

To the Right Honourable the Lords of Committee of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council.
May it please your Lordships:

In humble obedience to Your Lordships' Order in Council of the 4th of February last, representing that by an Order in Council, bearing date the 26th day of January last, there was referred to Your Lordships the humble petition of Arthur Dobbs, Esq., and the rest of the Committee appointed by the subscribers for finding out a passage to the Western and Southern Ocean of America, for themselves and the other adventurers, and that Your Lordships having taken the said petition into consideration were pleased to refer the same to us to consider thereof, and to report our opinion thereupon to Your Lordships.

Which petition sets forth that the petitioners, in the year 1746, did, at their own costs and charges fit out two ships upon an expedition in search of the north-west passage to the western and southern ocean of America, in order to extend the trade and increase the wealth and power of Great Britain by finding out new countries and nations to trade with us, as well in the great north-western continent of America, beyond Hudson's Bay, as in countries still further distant and hitherto unknown to the Europeans, and also to many large and populous islands in that great western ocean.

That the petitioners, by means of the said expedition, have made several discoveries of bays, inlets, and coasts, before unknown, and have a reasonable prospect of finding a passage to the Southern Ocean by sea, although the discovery may not be perfected without repeated trials, upon account of the difficulties and dangers of searching different unknown inlets and streights, and sailing through new seas, and of procuring men of resolution, capacity, and integrity to pursue it effectually.

That the petitioners find that the reward of £20,000 given by Parliament is not adequate to the expense the adventurers must be at to perfect the discovery, they having already expended above that sum in their late expedition.

That the petitioners find that upon a former attempt His Majesty's predecessor, King Charles the Second, as a suitable encouragement granted a Royal Charter to the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay, making them a body corporate forever, upon their petition setting forth that they had, at their own proper costs and charges, made an expedition to discover a new passage into the South Sea, and for finding some trade of furs, mines, and other commodities, and gave them the sole property of all the lands they should discover, together with an exclusive trade to all the countries within Hudson's Streights, not in possession of any of his subjects, or of any other Christian power, with the royalties of mines, minerals, gems, and royal fish, to enable them to find out the passage, extend the trade, and to plant the countries they should discover, paying two elks and two black beavers whenever and as often as His Majesty and his successors should enter their territories, granting to them the greatest privileges as lord proprietors, saving only their faith and allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain.

The petitioners beg leave to observe that the said Company have not since effectually or in earnest searched for the said passage, but have rather endeavoured to conceal the same and to obstruct the discovery thereof by others; nor have they made any new discovery either upon the coast or in the inland countries adjoining to Hudson's Bay since the grant of their charter, nor have they taken possession of or occupied any of the lands granted to them, or extended their trade into the inland parts of the adjoining continent, nor made any plantations or settlements, except four factories and one small trading house, in all which they have maintained in time of peace about one hundred and twenty persons, servants to the Company, nor have they allowed any other of His Majesty's subjects to plant, settle, or trade in any of the countries adjoining to the Bay, granted to them by their charter, yet have connived at or allowed the French to encroach, settle and trade within their limits on the south side of the Bay to the great detriment and loss of Great Britain.

That the petitioners being desirous to pursue the discovery of the passage to the Southern Ocean of America, by land or by water, will engage not only to prosecute the same until it be thoroughly discovered as far as practicable, but also to settle and improve the land in all the countries on that northern continent, by making alliances with and civilizing the natives and incorporating with them and by that means lay a foundation for their becoming Christians and industrious subjects of His Majesty, and also extend the British trade into the heart of that northern continent around the Bay, and into such countries as they may discover beyond it in the Western Ocean, and to use their utmost endeavours to prevent the French encroachments upon the British rights and trade in that continent.

In order, therefore, to enable the petitioners to prosecute and bring to perfection so valuable a discovery, and to civilize the natives and settle the lands without loss of time, and that the trade and settlement of such extensive countries may not be longer delayed or perhaps forever lost to His Majesty and his successors by the encroachments of the French.

The petitioners most humbly pray that His Majesty would be graciously pleased to incorporate the petitioners and the other subscribers for finding out the said passage or such of them and such other persons as they shall engage in the said undertaking, and their successors forever, and grant to them the property of all the lands which they shall discover, settle, and plant in a limited time in the northern continent of America, adjoining to Hudson's Bay and Streights, not already occupied and settled by the present Company of Adventurers trading to Hudson's Bay, with the like privileges and royalties as were granted to the said Company, and that His Majesty would be pleased to grant unto the petitioners (during the infancy of their settlements,) an exclusive trade, for such a term of years as may be granted to discoverers of new arts and trade, to all such countries into which they shall extend their trade by land or by water, not already granted by Act of Parliament to other companies, reserving to the present Company of Adventurers trading to Hudson's Bay all the forts, factories and settlements, they at present occupy and possess, with a reasonable district round each of their possessions and factories; or that His Majesty would be pleased to grant the petitioners such other relief and encouragement as to His Majesty in his great wisdom should seem meet.

We have taken the same into consideration, and have been attended by counsel both in behalf of the petitioners and the Hudson's Bay Company, who oppose the petition as it interferes with their Charter.

The petitioners insisted on two general things: that the Company's Charter was either void in its original creation, or became forfeited by the Company's conduct under it.

That the petitioners have by their late attempts to discover the North-West Passage and navigation in those parts merited the favour petitioned for.

As to the first, the petitioners endeavoured to show, that the grant of the country and territories included in the Company's Charter was void for the uncertainty of its extent, being bounded by no limits of mountains, rivers, seas, latitude or longitude, and that the grant of the exclusive trade within such limits as there were, was a monopoly, and void on that account.

With respect to both these, considering how long the Company have enjoyed and acted under this charter without interruption or encroachment, we cannot think it advisable for His Majesty to make any express or implied declaration against the validity of it, till there has been some judgment of a Court of Justice to warrant it; and the rather because if the charter is void in either respect, there is nothing to hinder the petitioners from exercising the same trade which the Company now carries on; and the petitioners' own grant, if obtained, will itself be liable in a great degree to the same objection.

As to the supposed forfeiture of the Company's Charter by non-user or abuser, the charge upon that head is of several sorts, viz.: That they have not discovered nor sufficiently attempted to discover the North-West Passage into the South Seas or Western Ocean.

That they have not extended their settlements through the limits of their Charter.

That they have designedly confined their trade to a very narrow compass, and have for that purpose abused the Indians, neglected their own Ports, ill-treated their own servants, and encouraged the French.

But on consideration of all the evidence laid before us, by many affidavits on both sides (herewith enclosed), we think these charges are either not sufficiently supported in point of fact, or in a great measure accounted for from the nature or circumstances of the ease.

As to the petitioners' merit, it consists in the late attempts made to discover the same passage which, however, as yet unsuccessful in the main point, may probably be of use hereafter in that discovery, if it should ever be made, or in opening some trade or other, if any should hereafter be found practicable; and have certainly lost the petitioners considerable sums of money.

But as the grant proposed is not necessary in order to prosecute any future attempt of the like kind, and the Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company does not prohibit the petitioners from the use of any of the ports, rivers, or seas included in their charter, or deprive them of the protection of the present settlements there, we humbly submit to your Lordships' consideration whether it will be proper at present to grant a charter to the petitioners, which must necessarily break in upon that of the Hudson's Bay Company, and may occasion great confusion by the interfering interest of two companies setting up the same trade against each other in the same parts and under like exclusive charters.

All which is humbly submitted to your Lordships' consideration.

SHOULD THE OBJECT OF VOYAGES BE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT ?

THE FRENCH VIEW.

Memoir of the French Commissioners, October 4, 1751, in reply to the Memoirs of the Commissioners of His Britannic Majesty of the 21st September, 1750, and the 1st January, 1751.

A distinction ought to be made between the voyages that have been directed towards the continent of North America, with the design of making plantations and establishing colonies, and those which have not been undertaken with this view; and among the latter, those which were confined to simple attempts which proved unproductive, with those which have been followed by the formation of solid establishments, actually existing, or which would have subsisted if some European power had not destroyed them.

Memorial presented by His Majesty's Commissaires to the Commissaires of His Most Christian Majesty, in reply to their Memorial of the 4th October, 1751, concerning Nova Scotia or Acadia.

The French Commissaires, in the two first articles of their Memorial, have given an historical summary account of the first voyages made by the English and French, for the discovery and settlement of North America, to which, and to the arguments drawn from it, it would be sufficient to answer in general, that the question now in discussion is not which nation has the right to Acadia or Nova Scotia, but what were the ancient limits of that country; that several treaties between the two Crowns have long since interposed to determine upon, and indeed annul, any claim from the earliest discovery or settlement, and that very little information can be reasonably expected for deciding what were the ancient boundaries of this country from the proceedings of those who first discovered it, or the relations of their voyages, it being well known how indistinctly first discoveries of all countries have been made (every pilot or admiral taking possession of a vast tract of a country he never saw, upon the pretence of having landed in a part of it), and in how very imperfect and suspicious a manner the relations of those voyages have come down to us. [To correct the mistakes and show that they do not acquiesce in the claim of precedency set up by the French Commissaires, the English Commissioners consent to enter into this matter, and for this purpose only.] To enter more minutely than this into the examination of the history contained in these articles, would be to depart from the proper subject before us, to assist in a certain degree towards changing the real object of the present inquiry, and in part to rest the decision of it upon insufficient evidence and improper inquiry.

As to the distinction, in such national discussions, of rights founded upon earliest discovery, was there ever any further enquiry made than which was the earliest discovery?—and such discovery once proved, was it ever afterwards examined whether it was made accidentally in the course of another undertaking, or whether the ships were originally destined for that particular design, or if the single object of the voyage was the settling of a plantation on that particular coast? Surely this way of reasoning is entirely new, nor has any nation ever yet suffered a title founded upon earliest discovery to be arraigned upon such a subtle but groundless distinction. As to the particulars brought in support of it, such of them as would be of any weight if they were true, are mistakes, and such as are true signify nothing. It would be some argument to show this voyage was the adventure of Cabot, not made on the part of Henry VII., if all the ships which sailed under Cabot's command had been defrayed at his expense, and been his property; but it appears from the best authority, that, besides the ships he bought by the King's permission, several others accompanied him, fitted out by private merchants, subjects of Great Britain, who became parties to the undertaking. It would also be a circumstance very favourable to the interpretation the French Commissaires put upon this voyage, if Henry VII. had not in his Letters Patent inserted a word by which he reserves to himself and to his crown, dominion and royalty in all the lands which shall be discovered or settled by Cabot; but it is expressly there said, that Cabot and his heirs shall hold all such lands as he shall discover and settle, as vassals of the Crown, though the immediate profit of the voyage, and various exemptions in holding what lands shall be discovered, are granted to Cabot and his heirs as rewards for their industry, and a recompense for their expense. These two objections, therefore, which if they were well grounded would have some weight, are founded upon circumstances which are not true.

EXTRACTS FROM GOVERNOR POWNALL'S OFFICIAL ACCOUNT OF THE FRENCH POSTS AND THE FRENCH DOMINION IN NORTH AMERICA, 1756.*

The French in their first attempts to settle themselves in these parts, endeavoured to penetrate by force of arms, to fix their possessions by military expeditions. . . . But . . . they fell afterwards into that only path, in which the real spirit and nature of the service led.

Governor
Pownall's account of French posts, etc., 1756.

The native inhabitants (the Indians) of this country are all hunters; all the laws of nations they know or acknowledge are the laws of sporting, and the chief idea which they have of landed possessions is that of a hunt. The French settlers of Canada universally commenced hunters, and so insinuated themselves into a connection with these natives.

While the French kept themselves thus allied with the Indians as hunters, and communicated with them in, and strictly maintained all the laws and rights of sporting, the Indians did easily and readily admit them to a local landed possession; a grant which, rightly acquired and applied, they are always ready to make, as none of the rights or interests of their nation are hurt by it. While, on the contrary, they experience and receive great use, benefits and profits from the commerce which the Europeans therein establish with them. * * *

The French possessions interfere not with the Indians' rights, but aid and assist their interest, and become a means of their support. This will more clearly and better appear, by a more minute and particular attention to the French measures in these matters.

1st. No Canadian is suffered to trade with the Indians, but by license from the Government, and under such regulations as that license ordains. The main police of which is this: The Government divides the Indian countries into so many hunts, according as they are divided by the Indians themselves. To these several hunts there are licenses respectively adapted, with regulations respecting the spirit of the nation whose hunt it is; respecting the commerce and interest of that nation; respecting the nature of that hunt.

The Canadian having such license ought not to trade and hunt within the limits of such hunt, but according to the above regulations; and he is hereby absolutely excluded under severe penalties to trade or hunt beyond these limits, on any account whatever.

It were needless to point out the many good and beneficial effects arising from this police, which gave thus a right attention to the interest of the Indians, which observe the true spirit of the alliance in putting the trade upon a fair foundation, and which maintained all the rights and laws of the hunt, that the Indians most indispensably exact.

But the consequence of the most important service which arises out of this police, is a regular, definite, precise, assured knowledge of the country.

A man whose interest and commerce are circumscribed within a certain department, will pry into and scrutinize every hole and corner of that district. When such a hunt is, by these means, as full of these courseurs des bois as the commerce of it will bear, whoever applies for a license must betake himself to some new tract or hunt, by which again begins an opening to new discoveries and fresh acquisitions.

When the French have by these means established a hunt, a commerce, alliance and influence amongst the Indians of that tract, and have by these means acquired a knowledge of all the waters, passes, portages, and posts, that may hold the command of that country—in short a military knowledge of the ground—then, and not before, they ask and obtain leave of the Indians to strengthen their trading house, to make it a fort, to put a garrison in it.

In this manner, by becoming hunters and creating alliances with the Indians as brother sportsmen, by founding that alliance upon, and maintaining it (according to the true spirit of the Indian law of nations) in a right communication and exercise of the true interest of the hunt, they have insinuated themselves into an influence over the Indians, have been admitted into a landed possession, and by locating and fixing those possessions in alliance with, and by the friendly guidance of the waters [of the St. Lawrence and Mississippi, and of the Winnipeg system] whose influence extends throughout the whole, they are become possessed of a real interest in, and real command over the country.

They have thus throughout the country sixty or seventy forts, and almost as many settlements, which take the lead in the command of the country, not even one of which forts, without the above true spirit of policy could they support, with all the expense and force of Canada; not all the power of France could; 'tis the Indian interest alone, that does maintain these posts.

Having thus got possession in any certain tract, and having one principal fort, they get leave to build other trading houses and entrepôts, at length to strengthen such, and in fine to take possession of more advanced posts, and to fortify and garrison them, as little subordinate forts under the command of the principal one.

Though these principal forts have subordinate forts dependent on them, they are yet independent of each other, and only under the command of the Governor-General; there is a routine of duty settled for these, and the officers and commanders are removed to better and better commands. What the particulars of this are, and of the distribution of the troops, I have not yet learned as to Canada; but in general the present establishment for this service is three thousand men, of which there are generally two thousand three or four hundred effective.

I have not been able yet to get an exact list of the forts in Canada, but the following is sufficient to sketch out the manner in which they conduct this service.

It will be necessary first to describe the line which now divides Canada and Louisiana in the Illinois country. It begins from the Oubasch, at the mouth of Vermillion River, thence to the post called Le Rocher on the River Paeories, and from thence to the peninsula formed at the confluence of Rocky River and Mississippi.

* * * As to the posts in the Illinois country, I am not able to describe them particularly; but what appears to be of more consequence, I collect from Mr. Vaudreuil's letters (from 1743 to 1752) the general idea upon which the fortifying and securing that country is founded.

40 The first fort of their plan in fortifying the Illinois country, was on the peninsula, in latitude 41° 30'. This was a check upon, and a barrier against the several nations of Sioux (not then in confederacy with them). The next post in this plan was on the River Dorias (so called after the junction of the Illinois River and Theakiki), which would be of more especial use, if situated on the north of the lake of that river, whence the roads divide, that lead to Missilimackinac and St. Joseph. This he describes as the key to the Illinois country from Canada.

The next is the garrisoning and fortifying the country, from the mouth of Missonris to Kaskasias, where there are five posts. Mr. Vaudreuil thinks that Kaskasias is the principal, as it is the pass and inlet of the convoys of Louisiana, as also of those of Canada, and of the traders and hunters of the post Detroit, and that of the greatest part of the savage nations.....But Mr. McCarty, who was on the spot, thinks the environs of Chartres a far better situation to place this post in. * * *

Mr. Jonquière proposes another fort at the mouth of Rocky River (this is in the Government of Canada) which, he says, would secure the tranquility of the fourth of Canada. This, says Mr. Vaudreuil, together with the post of the Illinois, would restrain and become a barrier against the English, and cover all our Indian allies to the west from our enemies, the English, the Cherokees, Catawbas and others.

By these posts above, and the posts of the Miamis, this whole country is secured and fortified. * *

Thus the French do not only settle the country but also take possession of it; and by the form, site, and police of such possessions (led on and established by the guidance of, and in alliance with the waters), a natural foundation of a one command, have they acquired and become possessed of the command of this country.

By these means, repeat it, have they created an alliance, an interest with all the Indians on the continent; by these means have they acquired an influence, a command throughout the country.

They know too well the spirit of Indian politics to affect a superiority, a government over the Indians, yet they have in reality and truth of more solid effect an influence, an ascendancy in all the councils of all the Indians on the continent, and lead and direct their measures, not even our own allies, the Five Nations, excepted; unless in that remains of our interest, which partly the good effects of our trading house at Oswego, and partly General Johnson, has preserved to the English, by the great esteem and high opinion the Indians have of his spirit, truth, and honour.

FRENCH SETTLEMENTS OF THE ILLINOIS, 1764.

COLONEL BRADSTREET ON THE FRENCH POPULATION OF THE ILLINOIS AND THE MEANS OF SUBJECTING IT.*

I am assured, by persons lately from Illinois, that exclusively of the French garrison there, the inhabitants are six hundred fighting men, have one thousand negroes, well accustomed to the use of arms, averse to our taking of the country, and having painted us such in colours to the numerous savages near them, that the latter will certainly endeavour to prevent the troops getting there by the Mississippi also, that the Indians near the sea allow them to pass, which they think they will not, unless well paid for it, which will not answer what may perhaps be expected. They add that this is their opinion also, that all attempts to get possession of the Illinois with less than three thousand men will fail, and that those troops should go down the Ohio River, and that the expedition be carried on with such secrecy, that they may enter the Mississippi ninety miles below Fort Chartres, before the inhabitants can have intelligence of it, and time to apprise all the savages.

GOVERNOR MURRAY OF QUEBEC TO THE LORDS OF TRADE.†

QUEBEC, 8th September, 1764.

MY LORDS,—I very lately received your favour of the 29th May, and can with truth assure your Lordships that I have and ever shall pay due obedience to His Majesty's orders and instructions, and that I am not conscious of having any ways failed therein.

Governor

From a true zeal for the service of my Royal Master, I communicated to the Secretary of State my thoughts in a matter entirely foreign to my Government and relative to a country with which I could have little or no communication, that was actually in a hostile state, and where, consequently, the Royal commands only could be conveyed, at least as I apprehended, through the channel of the Commander in Chief.

As to the information your Lordships require of me, I can say nothing further than that I am well assured the lands of Detroit were considered by the French Government as belonging to the King's Domaine, that concessions were granted to individuals who settled there, most of whom were Canadians, on condition, as it is usual elsewhere, of paying cens et rentes, and a twelfth of the purchase money on each mutation of property; they are said to consist of about sixty families, or six hundred souls.

At the Illinois, I am told, are many more.

If it is thought expedient to move the people in question from their present habitations, there is enough of land in the Province of Quebec, not occupied, where they may be advantageously placed, but no doubt they will expect a valuable consideration, as they must leave a fine climate, fine cultivated lands, and comfortable houses, for lands in a frozen region in the state of nature. What that consideration should be your Lordships are the best judges; I know it costs thirty shillings to clear an acre of land fit for the plow, in this part of the world. A Canadian settlement consists, generally, of between three and four hundred acres, two hundred and fifty of which is cleared. The house and offices of such a settlement may be valued at forty pounds at least, to inclose it may cost as much more, which is all the light I can give in answer to your Lordships' demand. And now I am to assure you that in my present station, or any other, I shall ever have a proper deference for the respectable Board which superintends the commerce and Colonies of Great Britain, the true sources of our national wealth and greatness.

I have the honour to be, with great truth and regard, My Lords, Your Lordships' most obedient and most humble servant, †TRANSLATION.

ILLINOIS.—The settlements on the east side of the River Mississipi, ceded to His Britannic Majesty, commenced about 400 leagues from the sea, along the course of the stream to the river called des Kas, where lies a small town which bears that name and which is situated about eight leagues on this same river. Then in going up this river is a narrow belt of settlements having three acres or more of frontage extending a distance of six leagues, to Fort de Chartres, where the troops were stationed. And beyond Fort de Chartres is a similar belt of settlements, covering a part of the space of fifteen leagues, between the fort last named and that called Les Cahos, where there were troops also.

I believe that the lands of the settlers have been granted by the commandants of these forts, in the name of the King, in quit-rent, subject to the same charges as those of Detroit; and that there may be in this district, according to my estimate, 1,000 to 1,200 men, of whom the greater portion are half-breeds. I have not heard it said that lands have been granted under title of seigniorie.

The Jesuit Fathers have a house in the town of Kas, of which they hold the cure. Near the same town is a village of Illinois Indians, served by the house of the Jesuits.

About a league below Fort de Chartres is another Illinois village, served by the priests of the Foreign Missions; and in sight of fort des Cahos is a third village of the same nation, also served by them. Twenty years ago these three villages were composed of about 1,000 men capable of bearing arms.

The lands are generally very productive of all kinds of grain. The inhabitants or half-breeds of the place have many Negroes and Panis, whom they use to cultivate the earth, at which the whites work but little.

DEPUTY-SUPERINTENDENT CROGHAN, ON THE FRENCH SETTLEMENTS OF THE WABASH AND ILLINOIS—1764-5.*

[Colonel George Croghan, the Commissioner of Sir William Johnson, went to the west to learn the disposition of the French inhabitants, and to secure, if possible, their adhesion to the English interest; and to prevent a second Indian War. He left Fort Pitt on the 15th of May, 1764, and was taken prisoner on the 8th of June, by a party of Indians, and was carried to Vincennes. He says]:

Colonel Croghan, on French settlements,
1764-5.

On my arrival there [VINCENNES—POST VINCENT—ST. VINCENNES], I found a village of about eighty or ninety French families settled on the east side of this river, being one of the finest situations that can be found. The country is level and clear, and the soil very rich, producing wheat and tobacco, I think the latter preferable to that of Maryland or Virginia. The French inhabitants hereabout, are an idle, lazy people, a parcel of renegaders from Canada, and are much worse than the Indians. They took a secret pleasure at our misfortunes, and the moment we arrived, they came to the Indians exchanging trifles for their valuable plunder. As the savages took from me a considerable quantity of gold and silver in specie, the French traders extorted two half-johannes from them for one pound of vermilion.

Here is likewise an Indian village of the Pyankeshaws, who were much displeased with the party that took me, telling them 'our chiefs and your chiefs have gone to make peace; and you have begun a war, for which our women and children will have reason to cry.' From this post the Indians permitted me to write to the Commander at Fort Chartres, but would not suffer me to write to any body else (this, I apprehended, was a precaution of the French, lest their villainy should be perceived too soon), although the Indians had given me permission to write to Sir William Johnson and Fort Pitt on our march, before we arrived at this place. But immediately after our arrival, they had a private council with the French, in which the Indians urged (as they afterwards informed me) that as the French had engaged them in so bad an affair, which was likely to bring a war on their nation, they now expected a proof of their promise and assistance. They delivered the French a scalp and a part of the plunder, and wanted to deliver some presents to the Pyankeshaws, but they refused to accept of any, and declared that they would not be concerned in the affair. This last information I got from the Pyankeshaws, as I have been well acquainted with them several years before this time.

Post Vincent is a place of great consequence for trade, being a fine hunting country all along the Ouabache [Wabash], and too far for the Indians, which reside hereabouts, to go either to the Illinois or elsewhere to fetch their necessities.

June 23, [1764].—The distance from Post Vincent to OUCATANON is 210 miles. This place is situated on the Ouabache. About fourteen French families are living in the Fort, which stands on the north side of the river. The Kickapoos and Musquattinees, whose warriors had taken us, live nigh the fort, on the same side of the river, where they have two villages; and the Ouicatanons have a village on the south side of the river. At our arrival at this post, several of the Waweattonans (or Ouicatanons) with whom I had been formerly acquainted, came to visit me, and seemed greatly concerned at what had happened. They went immediately to the Kickapoos and Musquattinees, and charged them to take the greatest care of us till their chiefs should arrive from the Illinois, where they were gone to meet me some time ago, and who were entirely ignorant of this affair, and said the French had spirited up this party to go and strike us.

The French have a great influence over these Indians, and they never fail in telling them many lies to the prejudice of His Majesty's interest, by making the English nation odious and hateful to them. I had the greatest difficulties in removing these prejudices. As these Indians are a weak, foolish, and credulous people, they are easily imposed on by a designing people, who have led them hitherto as they pleased. The French told them that as the Southern Indians had for two years past made war on them, it must have been at the instigation of the English, who are a bad people. However, I have been fortunate enough to remove their prejudice, and in a great measure their suspicions against the English. The country hereabouts is exceedingly pleasant, being open and clear for many miles, the soil very rich and well watered, all plants have a quick vegetation, and the climate very temperate through the winter. This post has always been a very considerable trading place. The great plenty of furs taken in this country, induced the French to establish this post, which was the first upon the Ouabache; and by a very advantageous trade, they have been richly recompensed for their labour.

August 1, [1764].—The TWIGTWEE village is situated on both sides of a river called the St. Joseph. This river, where it falls into the Miami River, about a quarter of a mile from this place, is about one hundred yards wide, on the east side of which stands a stockade fort, somewhat ruinous.

The Indian village consists of about forty or fifty cabins, besides nine or ten French houses, a runaway colony from Detroit, during the Indian War; they were concerned in it and being afraid of punishment, came to this post, where, ever since, they have spirited up the Indians against the English. All the French residing here are a lazy, indolent people, fond of breeding mischief and spiriting up the Indians against the English, and should by no means be suffered to remain here. The country is pleasant, the soil rich and well watered. After several conferences with these Indians, and their delivering me up all the English prisoners they had, on the 6th of August we set out for Detroit, down the Miami River, in a canoe.

August 17, [1764].—In the morning we arrived at the Fort [OF DETROIT], which is a large stockade inclosing about eighty houses; it stands close on the north side of the river, on a high bank, and commands a very pleasant prospect for nine miles above and nine miles below the fort; the country is thickly settled with French; their plantations are generally laid out about three or four acres in breadth on the river, and eighty acres in depth; the soil is good, producing plenty of grain. All the people here are generally poor wretches, and consist of three or four hundred French families, a lazy, idle people depending chiefly on the savages for their subsistence; though the land, with little labour, produces plenty of grain, they scarcely raise as much as will supply their wants, in imitation of the Indians, whose manners and customs they have entirely adopted, and cannot subsist without them. The men, women, and children speak the Indian tongue perfectly well. In the last Indian war, the most part of the French were concerned in it (although the whole settlement had taken the oath of allegiance to His Britannic Majesty); they have therefore great reason to be thankful to the English clemency in not bringing them to deserved punishment. Before the late Indian war, there resided three nations of Indians at this place—the Putawatimes, whose village was on the west side of the river, about one mile below the fort; the Ottawas on the east side about three miles above the fort; and the Wyandottes, whose village lies on the east side, two miles below the fort. The former two Nations have removed to a considerable distance, and the latter still remain where they were, and are remarkable for their good sense and hospitality. They have a particular attachment to the Roman Catholic religion; the French by their priests have taken uncommon pains to instruct them.

July 18, [1765].—I set off for the Illinois with the Chiefs of all those nations, when by the way, we met with Pondiac, together with the deputies of the Six Nations, Delawares, and Shawanees, which accompanied Mr. Frazer and myself down the Ohio, and also deputies with speeches from the four nations living in the Illinois country, to me and Six Nations, Delawares, and Shawanees, on which we returned to Ouitanon, and there held a conference, in which I settled all matters with the Illinois Indians, Pondiac and they agreeing to everything the other nations had done. . . . The French had informed them that the English intended to take their country from them, and give it to the Cherokees to settle on, and that if ever they suffered the English to take possession of their country, they would make slaves of them, that this was the reason of their opposing the English hitherto from taking possession of Fort Chartres. . . . They desired that their Father, the King of England, might not look upon his taking possession of the forts which the French had formerly possessed, as a title for its subjects to possess their country as they have never sold any part of it to the French, and that I might rest satisfied that whenever the English came to take possession, they would receive them with open arms.

Governor
Carleton's Official Report on
posts, 1768.

MY LORD,—I have received your Lordship's letter of the 14th November, and one since, wrote from the office by your directions, dated the 8th of October last. The drawing † hereto annexed is taken from different maps and the best memoirs and relations I have hitherto been able to procure. 'Tis intended chiefly to shew the western posts which the French formerly occupied, and how far they extend beyond Michilimakinac. This end, I believe, it answers tolerably well, though their exact positions on the globe must be erroneous. As I have not met with any of those gentlemen who understand the use of any mathematical instrument, but they all agree that Pascoyat is two and a half or three months' journey beyond Michilimakinac, and reckon the distance about nine hundred leagues. Probably this is far beyond the true distance, as they follow the serpentine course of lakes and rivers. The river on which Pascoyat stands is said to be five hundred leagues long. A fort was erected one hundred leagues beyond Pascoyat, but I have not information enough to put either the fort or the full extent of the river in the map.

The annexed return of the French posts, of the troops for the protection of trade, with the number of canoes sent up in the year 1754 shews in some measure the extent of their trade, and the system pursued by the French Government in Indian affairs; they did not depend on the number of troops, but on the discretion of their officers, who learned the language of the natives, acted as magistrates, compelled the traders to deal equitably and distributed the King's presents. By this conduct they avoided giving jealousy, and gained the affections of an ignorant, credulous and brave people, whose ruling passions are in dependence, gratitude and revenge, with an unconquerable love of strong drink, which must prove destructive to them and the fur trade if permitted to be sent among them; thus managing them by address, where force could not avail, they reconciled them to their troops, and by degrees strengthened the posts of Niagara, Detroit and Michilimakinac without giving offence.

The country was divided into certain districts, and the only restraints laid on the Traders were, first, not to go beyond the bounds of that district they obtained passes for; and secondly, not to carry more spirituous liquors than was necessary for their own use, nor sell any of that to the Indians; the King's Posts, or rather the Intendant's, were the only ones excepted from this general rule.

Under these regulations the canoes went first to the post of the district, from whence they had full liberty to go among the Indians, and accompany them to their hunting grounds; they likewise called on their return. If any were ill-treated they complained to the Commandant, who assembled the Chiefs, and procured redress; the Savages also made their complaints, and obtained immediate satisfaction, an exact report of all which was sent to the Governor. This return may be depended upon for so much as it contains, but as the King of France was greatly concerned in all this trade, a corrupt administration did not think it their interest that all these matters should appear in a full, clear and lasting manner.

Your Lordship will be pleased to observe that the great inlets to the north-east, from the Mississippi, are by the Ohio, and from thence up the Ouabach, which leads towards the sources of the River Miami and Lake Erie, by the Illinois that leads to Fort St. Joseph and Lake Michigan, and the Ouiscouing that leads to Fox River and Bay des Puans; besides these, the different streams that run into the Mississippi carry them towards Lake Superior and the western lakes.

The French or Spaniards have a Settlement two hundred and fifty leagues above New Orleans, at Arkonka, which serves for a deposit, and three, opposite to Fort Chartres, formed since the conquest. From these magazines they are enabled with ease to transport their merchandise into the interior parts of the King's Territory, to the north of the Mississippi, and to the western lakes; while even the extra posts, 1768.

Provincial Canadians in the neighbourhood of our Posts, particularly at Detroit, and those scattered about the country, rather buy the goods that come from New Orleans, tho' at a higher price, than submit to the great restraints on trade at our Posts.

I shall easily find in the troops here many officers and men very ready to undertake to explore any part of this Continent, who require no further encouragement than to be told such service will be acceptable to the King, and if properly executed, will recommend them to his favour; but as they are unacquainted with the country, the Indian languages and manners, 'tis necessary to join with them some Canadians to serve as guides and interpreters. The gentlemen here are mostly poor, and have families; in order to induce them to attach themselves thoroughly to the King's interests, 'tis necessary they should be assured of their being taken into his service for life, and in case they perish on these 10 expeditions, that their widows will enjoy their pay, to support and educate their children.

Should His Majesty think proper to allow the Traders to go up to the western lakes, as formerly, I think a party might winter in one of those Posts, set out early in spring for the Pacific Ocean, find out a good port, take its latitude, longitude, and describe it so accurately as to enable our ships from the East Indies to find it out with ease, and then return the year following. Your Lordship will readily perceive the advantage of such discoveries, and how difficult attempts to explore unknown parts must prove to the English, unless we avail ourselves of the knowledge of the Canadians, who are well acquainted with the country, the language and manners of the natives.

Your Lordship has likewise herewith enclosed the observations of the Traders here on Sir William Johnson's Regulations, together with a petition presented to me at the same time. I was rather displeased with some of the expressions they made use of in their observations, but on close examination, found it was more owing to their not sufficiently understanding the force of their own words than to any unwillingness to submit to proper orders and regulations, for which they seem at present to be perfectly disposed.

I am, with much respect and esteem,

Your Lordship's

Most obedient, humble servant,

GUY CARLETON.

* Thus marked were King's Posts, and the trade thither was carried on for his account, and the furs that were brought in return were disposed of at Montreal by public auction.

The merchants paid from five hundred to one thousand livres for licenses to send to the other posts, and the produce of these licenses formed a fund for pensioning the widows and poor families of deceased officers, at the disposal of the Governor-General; some were farmed out to the commandants themselves or to traders.

The European goods necessary for the equipment of a canoe, in the time of the French, were computed to cost about seven thousand French livres; it is alleged that they now stand in about nine thousand.—G. C.

TREATY OF FORT STANWIX DETERMINING THE BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN THE ENGLISH ATLANTIC PROVINCES AND THE INDIANS, 1768.

DEED DETERMINING THE BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN THE WHITES AND INDIANS.*

Treaty of Fort Stanwix,
1768.

[Plantations General, Vol. 30, v. 8.]

To all to whom these presents shall come or may concern :

We, the Sachems and Chiefs of the Six confederate Nations, and of the Shawanese, Delawares, Mingoese of Ohio, and other dependent tribes, on behalf of ourselves and of the rest of our several nations, the chiefs and warriors of whom are now here convened by Sir William Johnson, Baronet, His Majesty's Superintendent of our affairs, send

GREETING :

WHEREAS, His Majesty was graciously pleased to propose to us, in the year one thousand seven hundred and sixty-five, that a boundary line should be fixed between the English and us, to ascertain and establish our limits and prevent those intrusions and encroachments of which we had so long and loudly complained, and to put a stop to the many fraudulent advantages which had been so often taken of us in land affairs, which boundary appearing to us a wise and good measure, we did then agree to a part of a line, and promised to settle the whole finally whensoever Sir William Johnson should be fully empowered to treat with us for that purpose ;

AND WHEREAS, His said Majesty has at length given Sir William Johnson orders to complete the said boundary line between the Provinces and Indians, in conformity to which orders Sir William Johnson has convened the chiefs and warriors of our respective nations, who are the true and absolute proprietors of the lands in question, and who are here now to a very considerable number ;

AND WHEREAS, many uneasinesses and doubts have arisen amongst us which have given rise to an apprehension that the Line may not be strictly observed on the part of the English, in which case matters may be worse than before, which apprehension, together with the dependent state of some of our tribes and other circumstances which retarded the settlement and became the subject of some debate, Sir William Johnson has at length so far satisfied us upon as to induce us to come to an agreement concerning the Line which is now brought to a conclusion, the whole being fully explained to us in a large assembly of our people before Sir William Johnson and in the presence of His Excellency the Governor of New Jersey, the Commissioners from the Provinces of Virginia and Pennsylvania and sundry other gentlemen, by which Line so agreed upon a considerable tract of country along several Provinces is by us ceded to His said Majesty, which we are induced to and do hereby ratify and confirm to His said Majesty from the expectation and confidence we place in His royal goodness that he will graciously comply with our humble requests as the same are expressed in the Speech of the several Nations addressed to His Majesty through Sir William Johnson on Tuesday, the 1st of the present month of November, wherein we have declared our expectation of the continuance of His Majesty's favour, and our desire that our ancient engagements be observed and our affairs attended to by the officer

That the lands occupied by the Mohocks around their villages as well as by any other Nation affected by this our cession may effectually remain to them and to their posterity, and that any engagements regarding property which they may now be under may be prosecuted and our present grants deemed valid on our parts, which the several other humble requests contained in our said Speech. AND WHEREAS at the settling of the said Line it appeared that the Line described by His Majesty's order was not extended to the northward of Oswego or to the southward of Great Kan- hawa River, we have agreed to and continued the Line to the northward on a supposition that it 55 omitted by reason of our not having come to any determination concerning its course at the Cor- gress 10 held in one thousand seven hundred and sixty-five, and inasmuch as the Line to the northward became the most necessary of any for preventing encroachments at our very towns and residences we have given the Line more favorably to Pennsylvania for the reasons and considerations mentioned in the Treaty. We have likewise continued it south to Cherokee River, because the same is and we do declare it to be our true Bounds with the Southern Indians, and that we have an undoubted right to the country as far south as that river which makes our cession to His Majesty much more advantageous than that proposed.

NOW THEREFORE KNOW YE that we the Sachems and Chiefs aforementioned, native Indians and proprietors of the lands hereinafter described, for, and in behalf of ourselves, and the whole of our confederacy, for the considerations herein before mentioned, and also for and in consideration of a 20 valuable present of the several articles in use amongst Indians, which together with a large sum of money, amounts in the whole to the sum of ten thousand four hundred and sixty pounds, seven shillings and three pence sterling, to us now delivered, and paid by Sir William Johnson, Baronet, His Majesty's sole Agent, and Superintendent of Indian Affairs, for the Northern Department of America; in the name and on behalf of our Sovereign Lord George the Third, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, the receipt whereof we do hereby acknowledge, We the said Indians HAVE for us and our heirs and successors, granted, bargained, sold, released and confirmed, and by these presents DO grant, bargain, sell, release and confirm unto our said Sovereign Lord King George the Third, ALL that tract of land situate in North America, at the back of 30 the British settlements, bounded by a line which we have now agreed upon and do hereby establish as the boundary between us and the British colonies in America, beginning at the mouth of Cherokee or Hogehere River where it empties into the River Ohio, and running from thence upwards along the south side of said river to Kittaning, which is above Fort Pitt, from thence by a direct line to the nearest fork of the west branch of Susquehanna, thence through the Allegheny Mountains along the south side of the said west branch, until it comes opposite to the mouth of a creek called Tiadaghton thence across the west branch and along the south side of that creek, and along the north side of Burnett's Hills to a creek called Awandæ, thence down the same to the east branch of Susquehanna and across the same and up the east side of that river to Oswego; from thence east to Delaware River and up that river to opposite where Tianaderha falls into Susquehanna; thence to Tianaderha and up the west side of its west branch to the head thereof, and thence by a direct line to Carleton Creek, where it, 40 empties into the wood creek at the west of the carrying place beyond Fort Stanwix, and extending eastward from every part of the said line as far as the lands formerly purchased, so as to comprehend the whole of the lands between the said line and the purchased lands or settlements, except what is within the Province of Pennsylvania, together with all the hereditaments and appurtenances to the same belonging or appertaining, in the fullest and most ample manner, and all the Estate, Right, Title, Interest, Property, Possession, Benefit, Claim and Demand, either in Law or Equity, of each and every of us, of, in or to the same or any part thereof, TO HAVE AND TO HOLD the whole lands and premises hereby granted, bargained, sold, released and confirmed as aforesaid, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging, under the reservations made in a treaty unto our said Sovereign Lord King George the Third, his heirs and successors, to and for his and their own proper use and behoof forever.

50 IN WITNESS whereof, We the Chiefs of the Confederacy have hereunto set our marks and seals at Fort Stanwix, the fifth day of November, one thousand seven hundred and sixty-eight, in the ninth year of His Majesty's reign.

SIR WILLIAM JOHNSON ON THE ILLINOIS COUNTRY, 1776.*

SIR WILLIAM JOHNSON TO THE LORDS OF TRADE AND PLANTATIONS.

JOHNSON'S HALL, Jan. 31, 1776.

Sir William Johnson on the Illinois country, 1776.

MY LORDS,—.....I have received the agreeable news of our being in actual possession of the Illinois, the Indians, in consequence of their engagements to Mr. Crogan, having given no obstruction to Captain Stirling or his party, who arrived at Fort Chartres in October last, and were well received.

As the possession of this fine country has been earnestly desired and often in vain attempted since the reduction of Canada, and now proceeds from the late negotiations of my Deputy with the Indians in that quarter, it may not be amiss to offer my thoughts on the best manner for possessing so valuable an acquisition, and render it of real use to the Crown. It will be needless to enlarge upon the natural advantages of soil and situation which this country peculiarly enjoys, these being matters pretty well known; but to avail ourselves of these advantages, it is highly necessary that we should do all in our power to keep the Indians contented, easy, and reconciled to our manners and government, without which we can neither keep up the communication, or retain it for any time, and the difficulties and obstructions which have hitherto prevented our possessing it, by way of the Mississippi, are convincing proof of this. Neither is it in our power, with any force to be spared for that service, to ascend the river or cross the country by land to that settlement, if the Indians are at all disposed to obstruct their progress.

The settlements at the Illinois extend for many miles above the Kaskaski River along the Mississippi; the land is extremely fine, and capable of raising anything. Some of the present inhabitants may possibly incline to go home, and our traders will, I dare say, choose to purchase their rights; this may be a foundation for a valuable colony in that country, which, once established, would prove very beneficial to Great Britain, as well as a great check to large cessions obtained of the natives. But to effect this, and every other purpose, their jealousies and dislikes must be conquered, and they must be convinced by a series of good management and occasional generosity that their suspicions are groundless.

BY THE COMMISSIONERS FOR EXECUTING THE OFFICE OF LORD HIGH ADMIRAL OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND, ETC.

10 The King having judged it expedient that an expedition should be immediately undertaken for acquiring a more complete knowledge, than has yet been obtained, of the north-west coast of America; and the sloop you command, together with the Chatham, armed tender (the Lieutenant commanding which has been directed to follow your orders), having been equipped for that service, you are, in pursuance of His Majesty's pleasure, signified to us by Lord Grenville, one of his principal Secretaries of State, hereby required and directed to proceed without loss of time, with the said sloop and tender, to the Sandwich Islands, in the North Pacific Ocean, where you are to remain during the next winter; employing yourself very diligently in the examination and survey of the said islands; and, as soon as the weather shall be favourable (which may be expected to be in February, or at latest in March, 1792), you are to repair to the north-west coast of America, for the purpose of acquiring a more complete 20 knowledge of it, as above mentioned.

It having been agreed, by the late Convention between his Majesty and the Catholic King (a printed copy of which you will receive herewith), that the buildings and tracts of land situated on the north-west coast above mentioned, or on islands adjacent thereto, of which the subjects of his Britannic Majesty were dispossessed, about the month of April, 1789, by a Spanish officer, shall be restored to the said British subjects, the Court of Spain has agreed to send orders for that purpose to its officers in that part of the world; but as the particular specification of the parts to be restored may still require some further time, it is intended that the King's orders, for this purpose shall be sent out to the Sandwich Islands, by a vessel to be employed to carry thither a further store of provisions for the sloop and armed tender above mentioned, which it is meant shall sail from this country in time to reach those 30 islands in the course of next winter.

If, therefore, in consequence of the arrangement to be made with the Court of Spain, it should hereafter be determined that you should proceed, in the first instance, to Nootka, or elsewhere, in order to receive, from the Spanish officers, such lands or buildings as are to be restored to the British subjects, orders to that effect will be sent out by the vessel above mentioned. But if no such orders should be received by you previous to the end of January, 1792, you are not to wait for them at the Sandwich Islands, but to proceed, in such course as you may judge most expedient, for the examination of the coast above mentioned, comprized between latitude 60 deg. north, and 30 deg. north.

In which examination the principal objects which you are to keep in view, are,

1st. The acquiring accurate information with respect to the nature and extent of any water communication which may tend, in any considerable degree, to facilitate an intercourse for the purpose of commerce, between the north west coast and the countries upon the opposite side of the continent which are inhabited or occupied by His Majesty's subjects.

2dly. The ascertaining, with as much precision as possible, the number, extent and situation of any settlements which have been made within the limits above mentioned by any European nation, and the time when such settlement was first made.

With respect to the first object, it would be of great importance if it should be found that, by means of any considerable inlets of the sea, or even of large rivers communicating with the lakes in the interior of the continent, such an intercourse as hath been already mentioned, could be established; it will, therefore, be necessary, for the purpose of ascertaining this point that the survey should be so conducted as not only to ascertain the general line of the sea coast, but also the direction and extent of all such considerable inlets, whether made by arms of the sea, or by mouths of large rivers, as may be likely to lead to, or facilitate, such communication as is above described.

This being the principal object of the examination, so far as relates to that part of the subject, it necessarily follows that a considerable degree of discretion must be left, and is therefore left to you, as to the means of executing the service which his Majesty has in view; but, as far as any general instructions can here be given on the subject, it seems desirable that, in order to avoid any unnecessary loss of time, you should not, and are therefore hereby required and directed not to pursue any inlet or river further than it shall appear to be navigable by vessels of such burden as might safely navigate the Pacific Ocean; but, as the navigation of such inlets and rivers, to the extent here stated, may possibly require that you should proceed up them further than it might be safe for the sloop you command to go, you are, in such case, to take the command of the armed tender in person, at all such times, and in such situations as you shall judge it necessary and expedient.

The particular course of the survey must depend on the different circumstances which may arise in the execution of a service of this nature; it is, however, proper that you should, and you are, therefore, hereby required and directed to pay a particular attention to the examination of the supposed straits of Juan de Fuca, said to be situated between 48 deg. and 49 deg. north latitude and to lead to an opening through which the sloop Washington is reported to have passed in 1789, and to have come out again to the northward of Nootka. The discovery of a near communication between any such sea or strait, and any river running into or from the Lake of the Woods, would be particularly useful.

If you should fail of discovering any such inlet as above mentioned, to the southward of Cook's River, there is the greatest probability that it will be found that the said river rises in some of the lakes already known to the Canadian traders, and to the servants of the Hudson's Bay Company; which point it would, in that case, be material to ascertain; and you are, therefore, to endeavour to ascertain accordingly, with as much precision as the circumstances existing at the time may allow. But the discovery of any similar communication more to the southward (should any such exist), would be much more advantageous for the purposes of commerce, and should, therefore, be preferably attended to; and you are, therefore, to give it a preferable attention accordingly.....

OPINION OF THE ATTORNEY AND SOLICITOR-GENERAL, SIR RICHARD BETHELL

LINCOLN'S INN, July, 1857.

Opinion of Sir
R. Bethell
and Sir H.
S. Keating
on Hudson's Bay Company's
Charter,
July, 1857.

SIR,—We are favoured with Mr. Merivale's letter of the 9th of June ultimo, in which he stated that he was directed by you to transmit to us copies of two despatches from the Governor of Canada, including the copy of a Minute of his Executive Council, and extract from another Minute of the same, in reference to the questions respecting the affairs of the Hudson's Bay Company, then under investigation by a Committee of the House of Commons.

* Printed with the Report from the Select Committee [of the House of Commons] on the Hudson's Bay Company, etc., 1857, p. 403.

We were also requested to observe, from the former of these Minutes, that the Executive Council suggest, on the part of Canada, a territorial claim over a considerable extent of country, which is also claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company, as owners of the soil, and with rights of government and exclusive trade under their Charter.

We were also requested to observe, by the annexed parliamentary papers of the 12th of July, 1850 that the statement of the Hudson's Bay Company's rights as to territory, trade, taxation, and government, made by them to Earl Grey, as Secretary of the Colonies, on the 13th September, 1849, was submitted to the then law officers of the Crown, who reported that they were of opinion that the rights so claimed by the Company properly belonged to them, but suggested, at the same time, a mode of testing those claims by petition to Her Majesty, which might be referred to the Judicial Committee.

Mr. Merivale was further to annex a Parliamentary Return, made in 1842, containing the Charter of the Company, and documents relating thereto; and another of 23rd April, 1849, containing, among other papers, an Act of 2nd William and Mary, "for confirming to the Governor and Company trading to Hudson's Bay their privileges and trade."

The rights so claimed by the Company have been repeatedly questioned since 1850, by private persons in correspondence with the Secretary of State, and were then questioned to a certain extent, as appears by those despatches, by the present local Government of Canada.

Mr. Merivale was also to request that we should take those papers into our consideration, and report—

Whether we thought the Crown could lawfully and constitutionally raise for legal decision, all or either of the following questions:

The validity, at the present day, of the Charter itself.

The validity of the several claims of territorial right of government, exclusive trade and taxation, insisted on by the Company.

The geographical extent of this territorial claim (supposing it to be well founded to any extent.)

And if we were of the opinion that the Crown could do so, we were requested further to state the proper steps to be taken, in our opinion, by the Crown, and the proper tribunal to be resorted to; and whether the Crown should act on behalf of the local Government of Canada, as exercising a delegated share of the Royal authority, or in any other way.

And lastly, if we should be of the opinion that the Crown could not properly so act, whether we saw any objection to the questions being raised by the local Government of Canada, acting independently of the Crown, or whether they could be raised by some private party, in the manner suggested by the law advisers in 1850, the Crown undertaking to bear the expense of the proceedings.

In obedience to your request, we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the questions of the validity and construction of the Hudson's Bay Company's Charter cannot be considered apart from the enjoyment that has been had under it during nearly two centuries, and the recognition made of the rights of the Company in various acts, both of the Government and the Legislature.

Nothing could be more unjust, or more opposed to the spirit of our law, than to try this Charter as a thing of yesterday, upon principles which might be deemed applicable to it if it had been granted within the last ten or twenty years.

These observations, however, must be considered as limited in their application to the territorial rights of the Company under the Charter, and to the necessary incidents or consequences of that territorial ownership. They do not extend to the monopoly of trade (save as territorial ownership justifies the exclusion of intruders), or to the right of an exclusive administration of justice.

But we do not understand the Hudson's Bay Company as claiming anything beyond the territorial ownership of the country they are in possession of, and the right, as an incident to such ownership, of excluding persons who would compete with them in the fur trade carried on with the Indians resorting to their districts.

Opinion of Sir
R. Bethell
and Sir H.
S. Keating
on Hudson's Bay Company's
Charter, July
1857.

With these preliminary remarks we beg leave to state, in answer to the questions submitted to us, that in our opinion the Crown could not now, with justice, raise the question of the general validity of the Charter; but that on every legal principle the Company's territorial ownership of the lands, and the rights necessarily incidental thereto (as, for example, the right of excluding from their territory persons acting in violation of their regulations,) ought to be deemed to be valid.

But with respect to any rights of government, taxation, exclusive administration of justice, or exclusive trade, otherwise than as a consequence of the right of ownership of the land, such rights could not be legally insisted on by the Hudson's Bay Company as having been legally granted to them by the Crown.

This remark, however, requires some explanation.

The Company has, under the Charter, power to make ordinances (which would be in the nature of by-laws) for the government of the persons employed by them, and also power to exercise jurisdiction in all matters, civil and criminal; but no ordinance would be valid that was contrary to the Common Law, nor could the Company insist on its right to administer justice as against the Crown's prerogative right to establish courts of civil and criminal justice within the territory.

We do not think, therefore that the Charter should be treated as invalid because it professes to confer these powers upon the Company; for to a certain extent they may be lawfully used, and for an abuse of them the Company would be amenable to law.

The remaining subject for consideration is the question of the geographical extent of the territory granted by the Charter, and whether its boundaries can in any and what manner be ascertained. In the case of grants of considerable age, such as this Charter, when the words, as is often the case, are indefinite or ambiguous, the rule is, that they are construed by usage and enjoyment, including in these latter terms the assertion of ownership by the Company on important public occasions, such as the Treaties of Ryswick and Utrecht, and again in 1750.

To these elements of consideration upon this question must be added to the enquiry (as suggested by the following words of the Charter, viz: "not possessed by the subjects of any other Christian Prince or State") whether, at the time of the Charter, any part of the territory now claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company could have been rightfully claimed by the French as falling within the boundaries of Canada or Nouvelle France, and also the effect of the Acts of Parliament passed in 1774 and 1791.

Under these circumstances, we cannot but feel that the important question of the boundaries of the Hudson's Bay Company might with great utility, as between the Company and Canada, be made the subject of a quasi-judicial inquiry.

But this cannot be done except by the consent of both parties, namely, Canada and the Hudson's Bay Company; nor would the decision of a Committee of the Privy Council have any effect as a binding judicial determination.

But if the Hudson's Bay Company agree to the proposal of the Chief Justice of Canada, that the question of the boundaries should be referred to the Privy Council, it being further understood by both parties that the determination of the Council shall be carried into effect by a declaratory Act of Parliament, we think the proceeding would be the best mode of determining that which is, or ought to be, the only real subject of controversy.

The form of procedure might be a petition to the Queen by Chief Justice Draper, describing himself as acting under the direction of the Executive Council of Canada, unless, which would be the more solemn mode, an address were presented to Her Majesty by the Canadian Parliament.

Counsel would be heard on behalf of Canada, and of the Company.

Quebec, Nov. 10, 1670.

I learn by the return of the Algonquins, who will winter this year at Tadoussac, that the two European vessels have been seen very near Hudson's Bay, where they wigwam (cabanent), as the Indians express it. After reflecting on all the nations that might have penetrated as far north as that I can only light on the English, who, under the guidance of a man named Des Grozeliens, formerly an inhabitant of Canada, might possibly have attempted that navigation, of itself not much known—and not less dangerous. I intend despatching thither, overland, some man of resolution to invite the Killistons, who are in great numbers in the vicinity of the Bay, to come down to see us, as the Ottawas do, in order that we may have the first pick of what the latter savages bring us, who, acting as pedlars between those nations and us, make us pay for a round-about of three or four hundred leagues.

On the orders by us received on the third of September last from my Lord the Intendant of New France, signed and paraphéd TALON, and underneath by my Lord VARNIER, with paraph. to proceed forthwith to the countries of the Outaouais, Nesperceez, Illinois, and other nations discovered and to be discovered in North America, near Lake Superior, or the Fresh Sea, to make search and discovery there for all sorts of mines, particularly that of copper; commanding us moreover to take possession in the King's name of all the country inhabited and uninhabited wherever we should pass, planting in the first village at which we land the cross, in order to produce there the fruits of Christianity, and the escutcheon (écu) of France to confirm His Majesty's authority and the French dominion over it.

We having made, in virtue of our commission, our first landing at the village or hamlet of St. Mary of the Falls, the place where the Reverend Jesuit Fathers are making their mission, and the Indian nations called Chepoë's, Malamechs, Noquets and others do actually reside; we caused the greatest portion possible of the other neighbouring tribes to be assembled there, who attended to the number of fourteen nations,

To wit: the Etchipoë's, the Malamechs and the Noquets, inhabiting the said place of St. Mary of the Sault; and the Banabeouiks and Makamitek's; the Poulxtentemis, Ounabonins, Sassassaoua Cottous, inhabiting the bay called des Puants, and who have undertaken to make it known to their neighbours who are the Illinois, Mascoutins, Ontongamis and other tribes; the Christinos Assinipoals, Amoussomniks, Outavialis, Bouscuttous, Nisecks and Masquikoukieoks, all inhabitants of the northern

THE INTENDANT TALON TO THE KING, RESPECTING THE MISSION OF ALBANEL AND ST. SIMON TO HUDSON'S BAY. *

Quebec, Nov. 2, 1671.

M. Talon to the King—
Albanel's Mission to Hudson's Bay, 2nd
November,

Three months ago I despatched with Father Albanel, a Jesuit, Sieur de St. Simon, a young Canadian gentleman recently honoured by His Majesty with that title. They are to penetrate as far as Hudson's Bay, draw up a memoir of all they will discover, drive a trade in furs with the Indians, and especially reconnoitre whether there be any means of wintering ships in that quarter, in order to establish a factory that might, when necessary, supply provisions to the vessels that will possibly hereafter discover, by that channel, the communication between the two seas—the north and the south. Since their 40 departure I have received letters from them three times. The last, brought from one hundred leagues from here, informs me that the Indians whom they met on the way have assured them that two English vessels and three barks have wintered in the neighbourhood of the Bay, and made a vast collection of beavers there. If my letters, in reply, are safely delivered to the said Father, this establishment will be thoroughly examined, and His Majesty will have full information about it. As those countries have been long ago (anciennement) originally discovered by the French, I have commissioned the said Sieur de St. Simon to take renewed possession in His Majesty's name, with orders to set up the escutcheon of France, with which he is entrusted, and to draw up a procès verbal, in the form I have furnished him.

It is proposed to me to despatch a bark of sixty tons hence to Hudson's Bay, whereby it is expected that something will be discovered of the communication between the two seas. If the adventurers who form this design subject the King to no expense, I shall give them hopes of some mark of honour if they succeed, besides indemnifying themselves from the fur trade which they will carry on with the Indians.

The Company's Commissary demanding this year a passport, to winter four men at Lake St. John, on the pretext of the Tadoussac trade, urged me strongly to insert in it a prohibition to all those who would trade on Lake St. John.

In the meantime, in order not to make a noise, M. Talon thought proper that I should grant it to him, with a clause that it would be only for this year, on condition that it would not serve as a precedent for the future so as to confer any title to the places.

[This passport, granted by M. de Frontenac, at Quebec, bears date the twenty-second of September 1672, for Father Crespin, Jesuit, and for Sieurs Montagne, Maquard, Dautray, and Pelletier, sent by the West India Company to trade with the Indians, and to winter at Lake St. John, called Peakouïagamy, about 70 leagues above Tadoussac.]

THE INTENDANT DUCHESNEAU'S† MEMOIR TOUCHING HUDSON'S BAY.‡

13th Nov., 1681.

M. Duchesneau's Memoir, 13th
November,
1681.

They [the English] are still at Hudson's Bay, on the north, and do great damage to our fur trade. The farmers (of the revenue) suffer in consequence by the diminution of the trade at Tadoussac, and throughout that entire country, because the English draw off the Outawa nations; for the one and the other design, they have two forts in the said Bay—the one towards Tadoussac, and the other at Cape Henriette Marie, on the side of the Assinibouetz.

The sole means to prevent them succeeding in what is prejudicial to us in this regard, would be to drive them by main force from that Bay, which belongs to us; or if there would be an objection to coming to that extremity, to construct forts on the rivers falling into the lakes, in order to stop the Indians at these points.

Should the King adopt the resolution to arrange with the Duke of York for his possessions in this quarter, in which case Boston could not resist, the only thing to fear would be that this country might go to ruin, the French being naturally inconstant and fond of novelty.

But as this could be remedied by rigorous prohibitions, that consideration ought not to prevail over the great benefit which would accrue, and the great advantages which His Majesty and his subjects must eventually derive from the transaction.

REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS AT PORT NELSON.§

Proceedings
at Port
Nelson, 1682.

The Ambassador of the King of England, at Paris, complained that the man named Radisson and other Frenchmen having gone with two barks, called Le St. Pierre and La St. Anne, into the river and port of Nelson, in 1682, seized a fort and some property of which the English had been in possession for several years.

Radisson and Desgrozelliens maintained that these allegations are not true; but that having found a spot on the River Nelson adapted to their trade, more than 150 leagues distant from the place where the English were settled in Hudson's Bay, they took possession of it in the King's name, in the month of August, 1682, and had commenced building a fort and some houses there.

But divers little rencontres have occurred between our Frenchmen and the English, of which I send you a particular relation, in order, should any complaint be made to the King of England, and he speak of it to M. It is proper that you let me know early whether the King desires to retain that post so that it may be done, or the withdrawal of the French; for which purpose I shall dispose matters in order to aid them overland beyond Lake Superior, through Sieur Du L'Hut, and to send to them by sea to bring back the merchandize and peltries.

The King of England has authorized his ambassador to speak to me respecting what occurred in the River Nelson, between the English, Radisson and Des Grosselliers; whereupon I am happy to inform you that as I am unwilling to afford the King of England any cause of complaint, and as I think it important, nevertheless, to prevent the English from establishing themselves on that river, it would be well for you to have a proposal made to the Commandant at Hudson's Bay, that neither the French nor the English should have power to make any new establishments; to which I am persuaded he will give his consent the more readily, as he is not in a position to prevent those which my subjects would wish to form in the said Nelson's River.

It is impossible to imagine what you pretended when, of your own authority, without calling on the Intendant and submitting the matter to the Sovereign Council, you ordered a vessel to be restored to one Guillam, which had been captured by Radisson and De Groszeliers, and in truth you ought to prevent these sort of proceedings, which are entirely unwarranted, coming under His Majesty's eyes. You have herein done what the English will be able to make a handle of, since in virtue of your ordinance you caused a vessel to be surrendered which ought strictly to be considered a pirate, as it had no commission; and the English will not fail to say that you so fully recognized the regularity of the ship's papers that you surrendered it to the proprietors, and they will thence pretend to conclude that they had taken legitimate possession of the River Nelson before Messrs. Radisson and De Groszeliers had been there, which will be very prejudicial to the colony.

As I was leaving the Lake of Almepigon I made, in June, all the presents necessary to prevent the savages from further carrying their beaver to the English. I have met the Sieur de la Croix with his two comrades, who gave me your despatches, wherein you tell me to omit nothing in forwarding your letters to the Sieur Chouart, at Nelson River. To carry out your instructions there was but Mons. Péré, who would have to go himself, the savages having all, at that time, withdrawn into the interior to secure their blueberries. The said Sieur Péré will have left in the month of August last. He will have remitted your letters to the said Sieur Chouart.

It remains for me, Sir, to assure you that all the savages of the north have great confidence in me, and that enables me to promise you that, before the lapse of two years, not a single savage will visit the English at Hudson's Bay. This they have all promised me, and have bound themselves thereto by the presents which I have given, or caused to be given to them. The Klistinos, the Assenepolacs, the people from the Sapinière, the Openens, Dachiling, the Outoubouhys and Tabitibis, which comprises all the nations which are to the west of the Northern Sea, have promised to be, next spring, at the fort which I have constructed near the River à la Maune, at the bottom of Lake Almepigon; and next summer, I will construct one in the country of the Klistinos, which will be an effectual barrier. Finally, Sir, I wish to lose my life if I do not absolutely prevent the savages from visiting the English.

It remains for me to request Your Majesty's orders in regard to the English, as well those of New York as those settled on Hudson's Bay. THE SIEUR DE CALLIÈRES, GOVERNOR OF MONTREAL,‡ TO THE MARQUIS DE SEIGNELAY, AS TO THE FRENCH AND ENGLISH CLAIMS TO HUDSON'S BAY.§

Feb. 25th, 1685.

The third pretension of the English is to drive the French|| from Hudson's Bay, the whole of which country they claim as their property. And, in consequence of this pretension, they despatched some vessels last year to that Bay, which carried off several Frenchmen, whom a Company, formed at 20 Quebec, settled in that quarter at a place called the River Bourbon, and conveyed them to London with the beaver and other peltries belonging to the said French Company to the value of nearly two hundred thousand livres. * * * *

M. De Callières 1685, as to title to Hudson's
Bay, 1685.

As regards Hudson's Bay, the French settled there in 1656, by virtue of an arrêt of the Sovereign Council of Quebec, authorizing Sieur Burdon, its Attorney-General, to make the discovery thereof, who went to the north of said Bay, and took possession thereof in His Majesty's name.

In 1661, Father Dablon, a Jesuit, was ordered by Sieur d'Argenson, at the time Governor of Canada, to proceed to said country. He went thither accordingly, and the Indians, who then came from thence to Quebec, declared they had never seen any European there.

In 1663, Sieur d'Avagour, Governor of Canada, sent Sieur Couture, Seneschal of the Côte de 30 Beauré, to the north of the said Hudson's Bay, in company with a number of Indians of that country, with whom he went to take possession thereof and he set up the King's arms there.

In the same year, 1663, Sieur Duquet, King's Attorney to the Prévôté of Quebec, and Jean l'Anglois, a Canadian colonist, went thither again by order of the said Sieur d'Argenson, and renewed the act of taking possession by setting up His Majesty's arms there a second time. This is proved by the arrêt of the said Sovereign Council of Quebec, and by the orders in writing of said Sieurs d'Argenson and d'Avagour.

The English allege that the north coast of Hudson's Bay, where the French established themselves, had been discovered by Chevalier Button, an Englishman, as early as 1621.|| But we answer that he made no record there of taking possession, and that they did not have any settlement there before the year 1667, when the Frenchmen, named Desgrozellers and Radisson, conducted the English thither to a place called Nelson's River: and in 1676 the said Desgrozellers and Radisson, having returned from England, and having obtained pardon for their defection, a company was formed at Quebec who sent them to Hudson's Bay, where they founded a settlement north of the said Bay on the River Bourbon, which is the one the English seized last year, in consequence of a new treachery on the part of said Radisson who re-entered their service and conducted them thither. Meanwhile, the company formed at Quebec sent two ships to the said Bay last year, under the impression that they would find their people, with a quantity of peltries, at the settlement on the River Bourbon, of right belonging to them, where the company is in a condition to maintain itself if protected by His Majesty.

to Hudson's Bay.

We also see them [the English] establishing themselves at the North Bay, where they will be more injurious to us than in the direction of Acadia; for if their establishments continue as they have begun, at the three places on that bay which they actually occupy, and on the River Bourbon, or Port Nelson, we must expect to see all the best of the beaver trade both as to quality and quantity in the hands of the English. If not expelled thence, they will get all the fat beaver from an infinite number of nations in the north, which are being discovered every day; they will abstract the greatest portion of the peltries that reach us at Montreal, through the Ottawas and Assinibois, and other neighbouring tribes, for these will derive a double advantage from going in search of the English at Port Nelson. They will not have so far to go, and will find goods at a much lower rate than with us. That is evident from the fact that our Frenchmen have seen quite recently at Port Nelson some Indians who are known to have traded several years ago at Montreal. The ports at the head of the Bay, adjoining the Rivers Abitibis and Nemisco, can be reached through the woods and seas; our Frenchmen are acquainted with the road. But in regard to the Ports occupied by the English in the River Bourbon, or Port Nelson, it is impossible to hold any posts below them and convey merchandise thither, except by sea. Some pretend that it is feasible to go there overland, but the river to reach that quarter remains yet to be discovered, and when discovered could only admit the conveyance of a few men and not of any merchandise; the best informed on this subject agree herein. In regard to Hudson's Bay, should the King not think proper for enforcing the reasons His Majesty has for opposing the usurpations of the English on his lands, by the just titles, proving His Majesty's possession long before the English had any knowledge of the country—nothing is to be done but to find means to support the Company of the said Bay, formed in Canada, by the privilege His Majesty has been pleased this year to grant to his subjects of New France, and to furnish them for some years a few vessels of one hundred and twenty tons, only well armed and equipped. I hope with this aid, our Canadians will support this business, which will otherwise perish of itself; whilst the English merchants more powerful than our Canadians will, with good ships, continue their trade, whereby they will enrich themselves at the expense of the colony and the King's revenue.

M. DE DENONVILLE'S INSTRUCTIONS TO THE CHEVALIER DE TROYES, COMMANDER OF THE OVERLAND EXPEDITION TO HUDSON'S BAY, FEB. 12TH, 1686.

Instructions to Chevalier De Troyes,
12th Feb.,
1686.

The Marquis de Denonville, Feb. 12, 1686, appointed le Sieur de Trois (sic) to go in search of the most advantageous posts and occupy the shores of the Baie du Nord and the embouchures of the rivers that enter therein, "to entrench and fortify the said posts, to seize the robbers, coureurs des bois and others, whom we know to have taken and arrested several of our French engaged in the Indian trade, whom we order him to arrest, especially the said Radisson and his adherents, wherever they may be found, and bring them to be punished as deserters, according to the rigour of the ordinances."

CAPITULATION OF ALBANY FORT, 1686.*

THE ENGLISH ARTICLES.

Articles agreed upon between the Chevalier de Troyes, Commander-in-Chief of the detachment of the North-West, for the French Company of Canada, and Henry Sergeant, Esq., Governor for the English Company of Hudson's Bay, July 16, 1686.

I. It is agreed upon to deliver up the Fort, together with all the goods belonging to the said Company, which are to be scheduled for the mutual clearing, of us, the forenamed, and satisfaction of all parties.

II. That all the Company's servants at Albany River shall enjoy all wearing apparel belonging to themselves.

10 III. That the aforesaid Henry Sergeant, Esq., Governor, shall enjoy and possess all that belongs to himself; and that his minister, his three men servants and maid servant shall constantly be permitted to remain with him and attend him.

IV. That the Chevalier de Troyes shall convey all the Company's servants to Charleton Island, there to expect English ships for their transportation; and if English ships should not arrive, then the aforesaid Chevalier de Troyes is to assist them with what vessels the country affords, for their conveyance into England.

V. That the said Chevalier de Troyes shall deliver to the said Henry Sergeant, Esq., Governor, or to his storehouse keeper, such provisions as shall be thought fitting and necessary to carry them to England, if no ships come from thence, and in the meantime give them such sustenance as shall be sufficient for them.

VI. That all the storehouses shall be locked up, and the keys delivered to the said Chevalier de Troyes' Lieutenant, that nothing may in the said storehouses be embezzled, till the account be taken, according to the first article.

Lastly. That the Governor and all the Company's servants at Albany River shall come out of the Fort and deliver it up to the said Chevalier de Troyes; all the men, the Governor and his son excepted, being without arms, which is to be forthwith.

[The French version which follows is probably the original, though the heading of the English version is fuller; for the French Commander, who denied the honours of war to the retiring garrison, would not likely allow the capitulation to be drawn up in English, especially as its terms must have been dictated by him. Potherie adds that the Treaty was signed by the two contracting parties; that Ste Hélène and Iberville entered the Fort, and afterwards took the Governor to the Isle of Charles Eston (Charleton), and the rest of the English went to Monsipi. Afterwards Iberville took the English to France.]†

routes to Hudson's
Bay, 1686.

We have experienced that by the Temiskamins and Abitibis, the road is terrible, and that all that could be done would be to carry a sufficient supply of provisions for the round trip. It is believed that that of Nemiseo by Tadousac is better; but in truth it is long and painful enough: besides, the navigation of the rivers is so difficult, that it is only possible to pass underneath the trees that lie across the narrow river; but that may be overcome in time. These, Monseigneur, are the only two roads that lead to the bottom of the Bay [James's Bay].

It is reckoned 250 leagues from the post of Quiechieouanne [Fort Albany] to Port Nelson. The overland road is not yet well known to our French; the next year will not pass without their becoming so acquainted with it; it is not practicable to carry merchandize there.

M. DE DENONVILLE TO M. DE SEIGNELAY, ON THE RIGHT OF THE FRENCH TO HUDSON'S BAY.*

November 8th, 1686.

On the 29th April, 1627, a new [company] was organized, to which the King [Louis XIII.] conceded the entire country of New France, called Canada, in latitude from Florida which His Majesty's Royal predecessors had had settled, keeping along the sea coasts as far as the Arctic Circle, and in longitude from the Island of Newfoundland westward to the Great Lake called the Fresh Sea, and beyond, both along the coasts and into the interior.

Since that time the French have continued their commerce within the countries of the said grant.

In 1656, Jean Bourdon ran along the entire coast of Labrador with a vessel of thirty tons, entered and took possession of the North Bay. This is proved by an extract of the ancient Register of the Council of New France of the 26th of August of said year.

In 1661, the Indians of said North Bay came expressly to Quebec to confirm the good understanding that existed with the French, and to ask for a missionary. Father Dablon went overland thither with Sieur De La Vallière and others. Father Dablon has given his certificate of the fact. In 1663, those Indians returned to Quebec to demand other Frenchmen. Sieur D'Avagour, then Governor, sent Sieur Couture thither with five others. Said Sieur Couture took possession anew of the head (fonds) of said Bay, whither he went overland, and there set up the king's arms, engraved on copper. This is proved by Sieur D'Avagour's order of the 20th May, 1663, and the certificates of those who were sent there.

In 1671, Sieur de Saint Lussou was sent by Sieur Talon, Intendant in Canada, to the Sault Saint Mary of the Outawas, where all the nations a hundred leagues around, to the number of seventeen, repaired and voluntarily submitted themselves to His Majesty's dominion. Said Sieur de Saint Lussou afterwards erected the cross there, and affixed thereto His Majesty's Arms. These seventeen nations included all those of the Outawas, and of the entire of Lake Huron, those of Lake Superior, of the whole northern country and of Hudson's Bay, of la Baie des Puans [Green Bay], and of the lake of the Illinois [Lake Michigan], as is proved by the relations thereof, which were sent by the said Sieur Talon, and by the procès-verbal of the taking of possession.

The English cannot derive any advantage from all their voyages, because those who went as far as the 56th degree have only explored some small portions of the coasts of Labrador without entering into the North Bay, and without making any sojourn or establishment there, and the others who proceeded further, were merely in search of the passage whereby they could go westward to the East Indies without intending to make any settlement, and he who approached the nearest to Port Nelson was only about the 63rd degree. Had the English in making their voyages any other design than to discover the said passages, they would not have failed to obtain grants of the countries they discovered as they had done of Florida in 1607, and of the North Bay when they were conducted thither.

M. De Denonville on the rights of French to Hudson's Bay.

The settlement made by the English in 1662 at the head of the North Bay does not give them any title, because it has been already remarked that the French were in possession of those countries, and had traded with the Indians of that Bay, which is proved still better by the knowledge the men named Desgroselliers and Radisson had of those parts where they introduced the English. They had traded there no doubt with the old French Coueurs des bois. Besides, it is a thing unheard of that rebellious subjects could convey any right to countries belonging to their Sovereign.

20 MARQUIS DE DENONVILLE, 13TH OCTOBER, AND 10TH AND 16TH NOVEMBER, 1686, AS TO THE POSTS ON HUDSON'S BAY.*

M. De Denonville as to the Posts on Hudson's Bay.

Affairs are becoming more and more embroiled, and the English who urge on the Iroquois are but too well aware of their evil design.

The French Coueurs des bois, with 100 men, took from them three forts they were occupying in Hudson's Bay.

The convention concluded with England, that the River Bourbon or Port Nelson shall remain in joint occupation of the two crowns, is not advantageous to the French, for the voyages of the English are too dangerous on account of their attracting the Coueurs des bois as much as possible, besides purchasing the beaver at a higher rate, and furnishing their goods cheaper than the French. In his opinion it would be more beneficial for the company and colony that the French merchants restore the posts at the head of the Bay which they took, than that the French should leave them Port Nelson or River Bourbon. If this arrangement were feasible, the Indians could be thus intercepted by land, for it would be useless to attempt to become masters of the upper part of the Rivers Bourbon and Ste. Thérèse, inasmuch as it is impossible to prevent the Indians trading with the English.

The latter could, by this means, be intercepted by land, and we should have an opportunity of discovering an infinitude of nations yet unknown, through whom a great many peltries can yet be procured, and, possibly, the passage and entrance to the Pacific Ocean eventually discovered.

M. De Denonville on French operations on the Bay, 1687.

Ville Marie, August 25th, 1687.

Du Lhut's brother, who has recently arrived from the rivers above the Lake of the Allencampignons, assures me that he saw more than 1,500 persons come to trade with him. They were very sorry to find he had not sufficient goods to satisfy them. They are of the tribes accustomed to resort to the English at Port Nelson or River Bourbon, where they say they did not go this year, through Sieur du Lhut's influence. It remains to be seen whether they speak the truth.

The overland route to them is frightful, on account of its length and of the difficulty of finding food. He says there is a multitude of people beyond these, and that no trade is to be expected with them except by sea, for by the rivers the expense is too great. * * * *

I have just received news from our forts at the head of Hudson's Bay (du Nord), where d'Iberville is in command. He has had advices this fall that an English ship was in the nip near Charleston Island. He sent four men thither across the ice to reconnoitre. One gave up through sickness; the others were surpris'd, taken, and bound. One of the latter escaped, though fired at several times—he communicated the news—and the other two were put, bound, into the bottom of the hold, where they passed the winter. The commander of the vessel, hunting on the Island in the spring, was drowned, The time being arrived for setting sail, the pilot and the others, to the number of six, caused the weaker 10 of the two Canadians to work, and oblig'd him to assist them. One day whilst most of the English were aloft, the Canadian, seeing only two on deck, grasped an axe with which he split both their skulls, then ran to release his comrade; they seized the arms and went on deck, where from being slaves they became masters. They next steered the ship towards our forts, and met Sieur d'Iberville on the way, who had fitted out a vessel to go and release his men at the moment the ice would permit him. The English ship was laden with merchandize and provisions, which have been of great service to our forts.

Done at Versailles, the 8th March of the present year, 1688.

LOUIS.
COLBERT.

Sieur de Champlain has treated the question very fully in his book entitled, Les Voyages de la Nouvelle France occidentale, dite Canada, par le Sr. de Champlain. A Paris, chez Pierre Le Mur, dans la grande salle du Palais, 1632. At p. 200, towards the end of that work, Sieur de Champlain makes a sort of dissertation which clearly decides the question. He gives it this title: "Abstract of the discoveries of New France, as well what we, as of what the English have discovered, from the Virginias to Davis Strait, as of what they and we can pretend to, according to the report of the historians who have written thereupon, as I report below, which will enable every one to judge of the whole." 30

If a desire exist, then, to treat this matter thoroughly, and to be perfectly informed of the right of the French and of the English, it is necessary only to read that abstract of Sieur de Champlain; everything will be found very well examined, and it will appear that the French have taken possession of all the countries from Florida to Cape Breton, prior to any other Christian Prince. For, to quote only a few words of what that abstract contains, it will be seen there that:

In 1504, the Bretons and the Normans first discovered the Great Bank and Newfoundland, as can be seen in the History of Willet, Sieur de Magin, printed at Douay. 40

In 1523, Jean Varason, in virtue of a commission from Francis I., took possession of the territory beginning at the 33rd degree of latitude, as far as 47th. (1)

In 1535, Gibault and Laudonnière having gone to Florida by authority of King Charles IX., to inhabit and cultivate that country, founded Carolina there in the 35th and 36th degrees. 40

But particularly in 1603 and following years, Sieur de Champlain, being in Canada, was in command of that colony, and in 1609, went with other Frenchmen into Lake Champlain, of which he took possession in the name of King Henry IV., and called it after himself; and he relates in his book of voyages, that after he had discovered Lake Champlain, he was as far as the country of the 50

† Paris Documents, N. Y. Hist. Col., Vol. IX. p. 377.

Iroquois. In the years 1611 and 1612 he ascended the Grand River as far as Lake Huron, called the French Sea; he went thence to the Petun Nation, next to the Neutral Nation, and to the Macoutins, who were then residing near the place called Sakinau; from that he went to the Algonquin and Huron tribes, at war against the Iroquois. He passed by places he has himself described in his book, which are no other than Detroit and Lake Erie.

And as it is an established custom and right recognized among all Christian nations, that the first discoverers of an unknown country, not inhabited by Europeans, who plant the arms of their prince there, acquire the property of that country for that prince in whose name they have taken possession of it: On that principle, and no author being found who states that the English had taken possession of the countries of Canada or discovered them, unless subsequently to the French, they having come to the countries of Canada, Virginia and Florida only in 1594, whilst the French took possession of them in 1504, 1523 and 1564, which fact the English cannot question, inasmuch as Jacques Cartier visited in 1534 all the coasts of that country; his Relations and those of Alphonse Xaintongois and Varason attest it, and are inserted at length in the collection of divers accounts which Purchas and Hackluit, Englishmen, have published in London in their language. And it is notorious that Sieur Champlain did for many years prosecute the fur-trade at the place where Boston now stands, and further down towards the north and east, along the same coast, during more than ten years, before any English or Dutch inhabited that quarter.

The foundation of the English pretences is:—About the year 1594, some Englishmen being on the coast of Florida, arrived at a place called Moëasa, and which they since named Virginia. James, King of England, granted them, for their encouragement, great privileges, among others to extend their right from the 33rd degree to the 45th or 46th. The Royal Charter was issued on the 10th of April, 1607, in these words:—"Potestatem facimus occupandi possidendique tractus omnes ad gradum usque quadragésimum quintum ita si christianorum principe nulli teneantur." This is all the foundation the English have; it is manifestly null, because it is stated in the above letters patent of King James:—"We grant them all the countries up to the 45th degree, not possessed by any Christian Prince. Now it is indubitable that at the date of the aforesaid grant, the King of France was in possession of at least up to the 40th degree of latitude, the place where the Dutch since settled.

And in 1603, Commander de Chastes was Lieutenant-General for the most Christian King in New France, from the 40th to the 52nd degree, and it is even certain, as already stated, that as early as the year 1523, Jean Varason took possession of all the countries from the 33rd to the 47th degree. * * *

In 1656, M. De Lauzon, the King's Governor and Lieutenant-General in New France, sent at the solicitation of the Iroquois themselves, into their country, to a place called Ganentaa, as many as sixty Frenchmen, including a garrison of twelve soldiers under the command of Sieur Dupuis, who caused to be constructed at that place a royal fort, whither were conveyed four pieces of bronze cannon, which have remained there, and will be found again by the French who were there at the time, and are still living. This is proved by said Sieur Dupuis' commission of the 15th May, 1656 (App. D.), by the discharges (congés) granted by said Sieur Dupuis to some of the soldiers of the garrison of Ganentaa, on the 1st and 8th of September, 1657; by the account of the said soldiers; by an Order of the Council of the last of April, 1658, and by another of said Council of the 19th May, 1656 for the payment of the repair (réfraction) of the arms of said soldiers, the whole being on the same sheet, signed Peuveet* (App. E). In which country the said sixty Frenchmen cleared and planted lands with French grain and other legumes, burnt many large houses (statement of the payments and wages made to said Sieur Dupuis and soldiers by the commissary of stores, from 26th November, 1657, also signed Peuveet—App. F.), and lived there peaceably and without any opposition on the part of those who were then in possession of Manat [Manhattan] and Orange [Albany], who, far from being masters of the country of the Iroquois, purchased from them some portion of their lands, when they wished for any, as they do still at present. And what is worthy of remark is that the Iroquois themselves came in 1655 on an embassy to Quebec, to request of said Sieur de Lauzon those sixty soldiers aforesaid, and conducted them, the following year, to the said place of Ganentaa, where they located, established and put them in possession (inquest made by the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, the 29th and 30th October, 1658—App. G.), and where they remained until the Iroquois, having committed some acts of hostility in the direction of Montreal, the commander of said fort thought proper to retire with his garrison, in order to protect the sixty men aforesaid from the wicked designs the Iroquois had concocted against them.

And, in order to show that the country of the Iroquois was at the disposition of the Governor of Quebec to make grants thereof in the same manner as of the other lands of this Government, it is worthy of remark that, at the time Sieur Dupuis was sent with his soldiers on the part of the king, to construct the aforesaid Fort of Ganentaa and garrison it, M. de Lauzon made a grant in due form of a part of said lands to the Jesuit missionary fathers, who were of the sixty Frenchmen aforesaid (the deed is dated the 12th of April, 1656—App. H.)

Since that time our Frenchmen have always carried on trade with the Iroquois: M. Courcelles, 10 having gone up with a number of French to Lake Ontario, to the place named Kataraki [Kingston], where the said Iroquois being, they were (he was) received by the latter as their Father; and in the year 1673, Count de Frontenac having gone to Kataraki, likewise accompanied by a number of Frenchmen, had a royal fort to be erected there, where the king has always kept a garrison and a Governor, whom Sieur de Frontenac caused to build at the said Kataraki divers barks which have always navigated and traded with the Senecas and other Iroquois as far as Niagara, where Sieur de la Salle (as is proved by two writings drawn up by Sieur de la Salle for the benefit of Moyses Hilsler, dated at Fort Crèveceur, the 1st and 2nd March, 1680, which affords evidence of said Sieur de la Salle's residence and trade at Niagara in 1676—App. N.), had built in 1676, a store, a forge, and other buildings for the greater accommodation of the trade with the said Senecas and other Iroquois, who used to come to 20 us in the French settlements at Kataraki and Niagara (see the Procès Verbal, of the new entry into possession of said place of Niagara by the Marquis de Denonville, last July, 1687, on the return march of the army commanded by him against the Senecas, signed by collation, Penvecet—App. O.), and this trade has continued, and our Frenchmen have always had peaceable possession of the Iroquois country going and coming to their villages, and many residing with the missionaries there, until the war with the Iroquois having broke out, the Frenchmen, missionaries and others, were obliged to withdraw (see also the last two depositions in said inquest theretofore lettered G., and by the Act of the new entry into possession of the country of the Senecas, dated 19th July, 1687—App. 21), whereupon Colonel Dongan, Governor of New York, took occasion, in 1684, to send to the Iroquois' village to set up the 30 arms of the King of England therein and to take possession thereof, offering them powder and other munitions of war, to induce them to admit the necessity that existed of giving themselves to him. But this entry into possession being illegitimate and posterior, by so many years, to that of the French cannot convey any right to the English over those lands, which already belong to the French by so many anterior titles, as has been previously remarked, and by so many lawful and incontestable rights.

The futility of Sieur Dongan's claim to the property of the country of the Iroquois, and that the latter are within his Government (that is proved by the said pieces signed by collation, Penvecet, and lettered P.), is manifest, according to what Sieur de Champlain hath done and what has been heretofore stated, and, among other things, by a letter written by the Council of Quebec, the 20th of June, 1651, to the Commissioners of New England, to the effect that the Iroquois had no connection with nor dependence on the English, which is sustained by the commission to the Deputies therein named, from 40 M. d'Aillebont, then Governor of New France. (This is again confirmed by the articles of peace made with M. de Tracy and the Iroquois in 1665, lettered already I, and by the Act and Declaration recently made by them at Montreal, the 15th June, 1688—App. L.) For, as regards Colonel Dongan's assertions that the country of the Iroquois belongs to his Government, because, according to him, it is south of his jurisdiction, we answer, in the first place, that it is not south, but in fact west-north-west of Manatte. Secondly, though it were south, that cannot derogate from the rights of the French, who had taken possession of it even before the Dutch or English had set foot at Manatte, and who, since they are there, never opposed it, until within three or four years, which cannot confer any right on them.

To come now to the possessions and establishments (these will be proved by the Acts which M. 50

* The name, Penvecet, in this document—and so spelled in the N. Y. Hist. Col.—should doubtless be Peuvret—Jean Baptiste Louis Peuvret, Sieur de Meau, Greffier et Secrétaire du Conseil Supérieur de Quebec.—(Edits, &c.)

Talon has in Paris), which have been acquired in ascending the St. Lawrence, besides the post of Niagara;—Sieur de la Salle, with thirty Frenchmen, of which number was M. Jollier, priest, Superior of the Seminary of Montreal, made the tour of Lake Erie, and took possession of the circumjacent lands, after Sieur Jollier, with Father Marquet, Jesuit, had long before done the same thing, in order to renew the entry into possession of Sieur de Champlain in 1612.

And, after that in 1676, (proved by a writing of said Sieur de la Salle, for the benefit of Moyses Hillers, in March, 1860, App. N.; by the procès verbal of the M. de Denonville, of last July, 1687, App. O.; and by the inquisition of the said Lieutenant-General of Quebec, also App., supra, G.), said Sieur de la Salle caused a ship and a large house to be built above the Falls of Niagara, within three or four leagues of Lake Erie, where are still visible the stocks whereon was built the said vessel, which having been completed in 1677, about the feast of St. John the Baptist, was conducted, freighted with merchandise, into the said Lake Erie, and thence passed through the Detroit, where Fort St. Joseph or Du Luth is built (where Sieur de la Durantaye renewed the entry into possession, which is dated 7th June, 1687, App. R.), and navigated Lake Huron as far as Missilimakinac, and thence through that of the Illinois, or Missagans, beyond the Huron Islands. Which said bark was erected for the greater convenience of trading with the French, who inhabited the said place of Missilimakinac for more than forty years, some French established at the Bay des Puans, with those at Fort St. Louis, established by Sieur de la Salle, who had discovered the great river of Mississippi, and descended it as far as the South Sea. For the continuation of which trade he caused a fort and buildings to be erected, and a bark to be begun at a place called Crève-cœur, in order to proceed as far as the said South Sea, two-thirds of which bark only were built, the said Sieur de la Salle having afterwards employed canoes for his trade in said countries, as he had already done for several years in the rivers Oyo, Ouabache, and others in the surrounding neighbourhood, which flow into the said river Mississippi, whereof possession was taken by him in the King's name, as appears by the relations made thereof. The countries and rivers of Oyo, or Abache, and circumjacent territory were inhabited by our Indians, the Chaouanous, Miamis and Illinois.

It is to be remarked that, as early as the year 1633, a good many Frenchmen having gone up to the Hurons with the Jesuit Fathers and missionaries, settled there; and ten years afterwards the King sent thirty soldiers thither, who remained there until the destruction of all the Hurons by the Iroquois obliged the French to retire for a time; but they returned thither shortly afterwards in a much more considerable number, and spread themselves throughout those vast countries. (It is proved by an Arrêt of the Council of State of the 5th March, 1648, that His Majesty had authorized the sending to the Huron country a company of thirty men, commanded by a captain, for the purpose of escorting the Hurons and other Indian tribes, and to accompany the missionaries, who were no longer able to continue their missions without aid.)

Thirdly, what is more authentic in this matter, is the entry into possession of all those countries, made by M. Talon, Intendant of New France, who, in 1671, sent Sieur de St. Lussou, his sub-delegate, into the country of the Ontaouas, who invited the deputies of all the tribes within a circumference of more than a hundred leagues, to meet at Ste. Mary of the Sault. On the 4th of June of the same year, fourteen tribes, by their ambassadors, repaired thither, and in their presence and that of a number of Frenchmen, Sieur de St. Lussou erected there a post, to which he affixed the King's arms, and declared to all those people that he had conveyed them in order to receive them into the King's protection, and in his name to take possession of all their lands, so that henceforth ours and theirs should be but one; which all those tribes very readily accepted. The commission of said sub-delegate contained these very words, viz.: That he was sent to take possession of the countries lying between the east and west of Montreal to the South Sea, as much and as far as was in his power. This entry into possession was made with all those formalities, as is to be seen in the Relation of 1671, and more expressly in the record of the entry into possession, drawn up by the said sub-delegate. (See hereupon, M. Talon, who must have the procès verbal of the entry into possession by Sieur de St. Lussou.)

The next year, 1672, the River Mississippi, and, at the same time, the Illinois, Chaouanous and other tribes unknown to Europeans, were discovered by Sieur Jollier and the Jesuit Father Marquet, who were as far as the thirty-second degree, and set up the King's arms, taking possession in his name of all those recently discovered nations.

And, some years after, Sieur de la Salle extended the same discovery farther, even unto the sea taking everywhere possession by the King's arms, which he erected there.

All the foregoing demonstrates sufficiently the incontestable rights the French have to the Iroquois lands, to those of the Outaouas, and all the other tribes inhabiting the countries aforementioned, and others whereof possession has also been taken in His Majesty's name, along the River St. Lawrence, the lakes it forms, and the rivers discharging therein, which constitute the continuation of the waters of the said River St. Lawrence (the River St. Lawrence is proved by the concession of M. de Lauzon of the 15th May, 1656, to Sieur Dupuy, already mentioned under App. D.), from the Gulf, always following the same point of the compass, and extends beyond Lake Superior, proceeding from the Lake des Alépinigons (Nepigon), without any interruption of the navigation. Our barks have always sailed from lake to lake along said river, the one making the voyage from the place called La Galette, to Niagara, on Lake Ontario, or Frontenac, and the others from above the Falls of Niagara unto the head of Lake Missigamé, or Illinois, passing through that of Erié; then following said River St. Lawrence by the Detroit and Fort St. Joseph, or Du Luth, and thence into Lake Huron, or the Fresh Sea, which communicates (respond) with the said Lake of the Illinois, as well as the said Lakes Superior and Des Alépinigons, where the French actually are trading and have divers establishments, and it demonstrates their possession of the great River Mississippi, which they have discovered as far as the South Sea, on which river also they have divers establishments, as well as on that of Oyo, Ouabache, &c., which flow into the said River Mississippi, and of the countries and lands in the vicinity of said rivers, where they actually carry on trade, which countries are easily recognized on the general maps of North America.

Our affairs at Hudson's Bay will prosper if the Northern Company continue to co-operate with, and second the designs of D'Iberville, one of the sons of the late Le Moyne, whom I left resolved to go and seize Port Nelson, the only remaining post in the possession of the English. For that purpose it is absolutely necessary, I believe, that my Lord the Marquis de Seignelay inform Monsieur de Lagny that the King intends that the Northern Company undertake the capture of that post, and furnish said Iberville with everything he requires to render his design successful. He will want two ships. He has already, at Quebec, one that he took this winter from the English. In truth, my Lord, it would be very advantageous to the King's service had said Iberville some honourable rank in the navy, in order to excite emulation among the Canadians who will follow the sea. A commission of lieutenant would work marvels. He is a very fine fellow, and very capable of rendering himself expert, and doing good service.

The Iroquois war continuing, as there is every appearance it will, both against us and the Indians, in the direction of the Outawas who traffic with us, the greatest part of the trade will be diverted towards Port Nelson, on the River Bourbon. What I have learned of the facilities possessed by the Indians beyond Lake Superior to reach the sea in that direction, very strongly convinces me of the necessity we are under to bethink ourselves of driving the English from that commerce. But it must be effected without fail, for they will get up this year some expeditions against us.

MEMORIAL OF LA COMPAGNIE DU NORD, NOV. 17TH, 1690, AS TO PROCEEDINGS OF THE ENGLISH IN HUDSON'S BAY.

Memorial of Compagnie du Nord,
15th November, 1690.

The commercial Company of the North, established at Quebec, by permission and patent of His Majesty, has had the misfortune, after having taken possession of the north country, and the rich and large river of Bourbon, in 1682, to have been robbed, on land, in 1683, by the English, when their vessel had returned to Quebec, by whom were taken from their magazine more than 200,000 livres of beavers, martin and other peltries, at a time when there was no war between the two nations, and by means of bribing two or three Frenchmen in whose charge the peltries in the magazine were.

This occurred at the time when His Majesty had agreed with the King of England that the boundaries of their territories should be fixed by Commissioners, to be appointed on the part of the two kingdoms; they had, however, forbidden their subjects to commit any act of hostility, in which respect the English proved disobedient; arriving, near the end of the year 1688, at the foot of la Baie Du Nord [James' Bay], occupied by the French, they wintered there with two vessels and about a hundred men belonging to the ships, and built a fort to the north of that of the French.

LA COMPAGNIE DU NORD OF CANADA TO MONSIEUR DE PONTCHARTRAIN, 1693, RESPECTING OPERATIONS IN THE BAY.

The favour which your Excellency has granted to the Compagnie du Nord of Canada of the King's vessel, the Poli, did not produce the effect intended, owing to Captain Iberville having arrived at Quebec only on the 8th of August, too late to undertake anything against the English.

It is hoped you will continue your protection, Monseigneur, in favour of this company, which is ruined and suffers greatly from the necessity of carrying on the war against the London company, by whom, in a time of peace, Port Nelson, one of the most considerable on the great Bay, was taken from them with 400,000 livres of effects.

This London company, composed of merchants and noblemen of the first quality, estimate at so high a price the commerce of the Bay, that they had given orders to the Commander of the Fort to burn all their effects if the French made their appearance. At the sight of a single vessel of the company, in 1690, they effectively burnt the fort and over 30,000 écus worth of merchandise, which fort, to show this esteem, they rebuilt the next year, because the Company of Quebec was not in a condition to occupy it.

It is difficult to speak in terms of deserved eulogy of this great Bay in respect to the commerce which has already been carried on there, and which might be established on the sea coast and in the interior, and as a basis of new discoveries.

The Company could hold everything there if it could seize Port Nelson; but the expense of the war sustained against England has greatly weakened it, and obliged it to have recourse to your Excellency, to obtain sufficient force, and in a suitable time to drive out the English.

SAME SUBJECT.

The enterprise of Port Nelson could not be carried out in 1691, because M. du Tas, since dead arrived at Quebec on the 1st of July, to whom you had ordered to make this voyage, alleged, when here, that it was too late to set out for the north.

Your Excellency, in 1692, gave the Sieur d'Iberville, Captain of His Majesty's vessel the Poli, his orders for this voyage and the management of the fleet of merchant vessels of this country, who did not arrive till the 18th August, at which season it was absolutely impossible to think of this enterprise.

Why, Monseigneur, this single Fort, which remains in possession of the English, is of so much importance that the gain or loss of everything in Hudson's Bay depends upon it. The Company's establishment at Quebec, to carry on this commerce, claims anew the protection of Your Excellency, that you may give it a sufficient force to enable it to become master of Port Nelson, which the English took by an Act of Treason against this company in a time of peace. This they hope from the strong desire which you have for the aggrandizement of the kingdom and from your affection for this colony.

August 7th, 1693.

M. De Frontenac,
7th August,

His Majesty having made known to us by his despatch of the 28th March last, that it was his intention that we should cause Sieur d'Iberville to set out without delay, with his vessels, the Poli, the Intendant, and that of the Compagnie du Nord to go to Hudson's Bay, in order to attack Fort Nelson, according to the private memoir which His Majesty has sent us to this effect, and the instruction of the said Sieur d'Iberville, captain of the Poli, we have conferred with Monsieur de Champigny 20 Intendant of the country, on the execution of the said orders, and on the 26th of July ordered the said Sieur d'Iberville, charged with the said expedition to the said Fort Nelson, and the gentlemen interested in la Baie du Nord (Hudson's Bay), to set out on that expedition.

We shall have the full exercise of our religion, and the Jesuit priest, our missionary, shall publicly perform the functions of his ministry.

20 FRENCH ANSWER TO THE MEMORIAL PRESENTED BY THE COMMISSARIES OF THE KING OF ENGLAND,
THE 7 OF MARCH, 1698.

(Copy obtained from the Public Record Office, London.)

It will appear by the contents of this Memorial that the French made the first discovery of the Bay to the North of Canada, that they made the first settlements to maintain their trade there, and that the trouble hath happened only from the English.

We shall not insist to dispute about the voyages mentioned in the Memorial, from 1497 to the year 1631, but shall only say, in general, that it is not seen in any relation about the foreign colonies that the English knew the Northern countries from the year 1497. On the contrary it is observed that the Normans and Basques went, at that time, on fishing voyages to Newfoundland, to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the Coast of Labrador and to the North of the Island of Newfoundland, and of this an infinite number of voyages might be quoted. It is certain that if any English or Danish navigators or those of other nations did make any voyages thither, it was only to seek a passage into the South, Sea, and it cannot be proved that any of the said navigators did ever make any settlements nor trade in the Bay of the North of Canada nor even knew the places mentioned in the old Charts or Maps of which they now pretend to make use, for that those Charts were not made till within these 30 or 40 years, that is to say, since the English were introduced into the said Bay. French

It cannot be denied but that for establishing the right upon the possession of a country is not sufficient to have discovered the same, and to have lived there some time, but there must be an ancient possession and a continued habitation, or at least a Trade maintained, to enable the parties to claime or contest the property, which the English cannot maintain as to the Bay to the North of Canada. There was an interruption even of their possession from the year 1631 to 1667. The troubles and evil wars which they allege as a pretence of this interruption, did not begin till towards the year 1640, and during those troubles they maintained their other colonies and did also augment the trade and extent thereof.

If the French, according to the example of the English, would insist on or make use of the several voyages which they have made at several times, and of the possessions by them taken of countries where they have been, [they] might rightfully at this day claime Carolina, for that they have had Forts there ever since the time of Francis the First, Henry the Second, and Charles the Ninth; and also of all New England and the New Netherlands, it being evident that they have had Commanders and Settlements there from 1604 to 1610, and that the English, who at that time possessed Virginia, only began to settle on those coasts but about the year 1626.

The several authors who write of Canada or New France, give it no bounds to the northward; and by the Letters of Corporation or grants at severall times granted by the King of France to the Companies established in New France, and particularly in the year 1628, all the Northern Bay [Baie du Nord] was comprehended in the limitts therein sett downe and described. If the English had had any knowledge of the said Bay, or any pretentions thereunto, they would not have failed to make a reservation thereof, and cause particular mention to be made of the same in the Treaty, in 1632, for restoring to the French the New France which they had possessed during the warr. 10

It is true that at that time, and a long time afterwards, the French had no Forts on the coast of the said Bay. For that they being masters of the country within-land, the Savages, with whom they kept a continual trade, br^ot their skins, by Lakes and Rivers. The communication from Tadousa to the Bottom of the Bay, hath allways been easy by the River of Saguenay; they goe thither also by the other Rivers and Lakes on the other side of Montreal; and those places are not above 120 leagues distance on that side. There are also Rivers that lead into the Lakes of the Hurrones and into the Upper Lake [Superior], on the upper part whereof the French have always had settlements for carrying on the trade of skins with the natives who are to the westward of the Northern Bay. Several acts about taking possession might be produced, to prove that all the savages acknowledged the Sovereignty of the King before the English ever thought of going thither, and there needs no more to be convinced 20 of the truth of these facts than only to examine the scituation of the countrie, as also of the reasons which the French had not to have any Forts along the coast.

The English pretend in their Memorial, that in 1663 they formed the designe of, going to settle in the Northern Bay, and that in 1667, one Zachary Gilham went first to the Bottom of ye said Bay, where he built ye Fort Charles on Rupert River, but they take no notice that the designs of those settlements were suggested to them, in 1662, by one Radisson and Desgroziliers, subjects of the King, and inhabitants of Canada, who conducted them to the Bottome of the Bay, of which the English had no knowledge.

The Letters of Corporation or Charter granted in 1670, by Charles the Second, to the Hudson Bay Company, cannot give them any right, by reason that Prince could not dispose of any lands or country 30 whereof France was in legall possession, and which France had always occupied without any opposition.

The warrs which France had afterwards to maintaine against almost all Europe, hindred the French from opposing the new enterprizes of the English, and the engagements to which we were entered into, with King Charles the Second, did not permit the going about to revive matters of dispute. However, in the year 1675, the inhabitants of Canada sent a ship into the Northern Bay to putt a stopp to the undertakings of the English. The French who were sent thither entered into Bourbon River and wintered there. This is the River which the English call Port Nelson, in which, at that time, there [was] no signe of settlement or habitation.

The inhabitants of Canada, in 1682, sent two ships more thither with the said Radisson and Desgroziliers, who were return'd to New France, the King having pardoned them for their desertion. They arrived in the month of August, and made a settlement in the River of St. Thereza [Hayes 40 River], a league and a half distant from the River Bourbon, calling it Bourbon Fort. The English had not yet at that time any knowledge of this River St. Thereza. In the same year, at the same time, when the French were busied in making their establishments, an English ship, coming from England, arrived there, and afterwards a barke from Boston, which were left in the ice. The French gave leave to the men to winter in Bourbon River on their promise they should not fortify themselves; but the men of the ship that came from England breaking their word, they were made prisoners. When the ice was open the French gave them one of their ships, in 1683, to returne to England. As to the men belonging to the barque from Boston, they were taken up out of charity, carried to Quebec, and from thence sent to Boston.

It was settled, in the memorial already delivered, how Radisson went over again into England and engaged himself to the Hudson Bay Company to go and surprize and plunder, in 1684, Bourbon Fort. The said Radisson is still in London, and the said Company actually payes him part of the pension which they promised him at the time of his becoming ingaged.

The English make no mention in the memorial of what passed in 1684, although in the years 1686 and 1687, Messrs. De Barrillion and Bonrepos made strong instances for ye restitution of Bourbon Fort and the effects carried thence.

The enterprize of the English, in 1684, in the time of peace, engaged those of Canada to goe, in 1686 to attack the posts at the bottom of the Bay, from whence the English were driven.

- 10 The losses sustained by the French by the taking of Fort Bourbon, and of the effects which were there, doe farr exceed the losses suffered by the English by their being driven from ye Forts at the bottom of the Bay, and they must impute the fault to themselves, they being the first agressors, and for that they would, contrary to all manner of justice, disturb the trade of the French and settle themselves on the lands of which the French had peaceable possession.

Wherfore, it being certaine that the old voyages made at several times, were not undertaken but onely to seek a passage into the South Sea—that the like voyages doe not give a right without a possession, habitation or trade continued; that the Northern Bay has allways been comprehended within the limitts of New France; that the restitution made by the English by so solemne an Act as the Treaty of 1632, without reserving any pretentions to themselves, is a certaine prooffe that they had none to make. That on the other side, the French have traded continually with all the savages who live on the Coast of the said Bay, in which Trade they have not been troubled but only since the English were introduced by two deserters, subjects of the King.

The said French do demand, not only to be maintained in the possession of Fort Bourbon, but also [that] all the bottom of the Bay of the North of Canada may be restored to them.

GOVERNOR THE MARQUIS DE VAUDREUIL AND THE INTENDANT BEAUHARNOIS, AS TO ASSISTING LA COMPAGNIE DU NORD AT HUDSON'S BAY.

19th September, 1705.

The Compagnie du Nord is not in a condition to send next year a vessel to Hudson's Bay with necessary provisions for the garrison, and to bring back beaver skins and other furs which have been obtained in trade, and to take there new merchandize; and as the armaments raised in this country cost immense sums, and as this post is in a better position to be conducted from France than this country we pray you, Monseigneur, to send a vessel there; for without such assistance the garrison will perish for lack of provisions: Sieur de Grandville, Keeper of Marine, has already made this voyage.

Though it would not be possible to prevent all the inconveniences that might ensue on re-establishing the licenses in the manner I propose, I believe it will be indispensable to do it, in consequence of the greater inconveniences which would inevitably result. Firstly, it must not be expected to oblige all the Coueurs des bois to return to the colony, nor even to retain in it those who are obedient there, except by re-establishing the licenses. Those people not being accustomed to till the soil, will never submit to do so, however they may be punished. This country is composed of persons of various characters and of different inclinations; one and the other ought to be managed, and can contribute to render it flourishing. The Coueurs des bois are useful in Canada for the fur trade, which is the sole branch that can be relied on, for it is certain that if the articles required by the upper nations be not sent to Michilimakinak, they will go in search of them to the English at Hudson's Bay, to whom they will convey all their peltries, and will detach themselves entirely from us, which would inflict a notable prejudice on that colony. Experience sufficiently proves that it is not to be expected that these nations will come in quest of them to Montreal; witness the few canoes that have come down within eight or nine years, except in 1708, when about 60 descended. When these Indians will be obliged to go to a great distance to get their necessaries, they will always go to the cheapest market; whereas, were they to obtain their supplies at their door, they would take them, whatever the price may be. Moreover, the means of preventing them waging war against one another is to be continually carrying on trade with them; for by that means the commandant at Michilimackinac can be informed of everything that happens, and by his mediation terminate all differences that might arise. Religion will derive an advantage therefrom, for the more French there are among these nations, the greater will be the authority of the Missionaries there. This active intercourse may afford them also facilities to learn our language, and render them more docile and submissive to the instructions which will be given them.

M. DE JÉRÉMIE, FRENCH COMMANDANT AT FORT NELSON (BOURBON), IN REFERENCE TO THAT POST.*

M. Jérémie—
Fort Bourbon, 1708-1714.

The Fort was named Bourbon, and the river on which it was situated was named Ste. Therese because the Fort was brought under the authority of the French on the day of St. Therese, October 14. . . . I had the honour to be in command of the Fort for six years, and I had the honour to be stationed there by express orders of the King, whose commissions I still preserve. None of my predecessors had been appointed in the same way.

In 1714 I received the orders of the Court, with letters from the Count de Pontchartrain, to hand over the post to the English, according to the terms of the Treaty of Utrecht.

Though the fort was built on the River Ste. Therese, it is by the River Bourbon that the savages come to trade. The first great lake through which this river passes is called by the savages Tatasquoyou Secahigan, which signifies the Lake of Forts, in which discharges a river called Quissiquatchiouen, or strong current.

[Jérémie estimates the annual profit of the trade of Fort Bourbon to the French at 100,000 livres. In 1713 the goods they brought out cost 8,000 livres, and in 1714 he made over 120,000, which he took away when relieved by the English.]

NORTH-WEST, 1717. 30

Conseil De

establishing Posts in the North-West,
1717.

Messieurs de Vaudreuil and Begon having written last year that the discovery of the Western Sea would be advantageous to the colony, it was approved that, to reach it, M. de Vaudreuil should establish three posts, which he had proposed, and he was instructed at the same time to have the same established without any expense accruing to the King—as the person establishing them would be remunerated by trade—and to send a detailed schedule of the cost of continuing the discovery. In reply it is stated that M. de Vaudreuil in the month of July last caused the Sieur de la Noüe, Lieutenant, to set out with eight cannon to carry out this scheme of discovery. He gave him instructions to establish the first post at the River Kamanistiquoya, to the north of Lake Superior, after which he 40 is to go to Takamanigen [Takamamionio],* near the Lake of the Christineaux to establish a second, and to acquire through the Indians the information necessary for the establishment of the third at the Lake of the Assinipoëlles [Winnipeg].

This journey costs the King nothing, because those engaged in it will be remunerated for their outlay by the trade which they will engage in; but to follow up the discovery it is absolutely necessary that His Majesty should bear the expense, because the persons employed in it will have to give up all idea of trade.

They estimate that 50 good voyageurs will be required; of these, 24 will occupy the three posts, and the 26 others will be engaged in making the discovery from the Lake of Assenipelles to the Western Sea. They calculate the wages of these men at 300 francs a year each, and estimate that the expenditure, as well for provisions and canoes, as for goods for presents, will amount to . . . f.29,023 10

There will have to be added, for supplementary outfit, 600 francs for each of the six officers employed in the discovery 3,600 00

10 Total f.32,623 10

As it will take about two years to make this journey, they estimate that the expenditure may amount to fifty thousand francs.

M. BEGON TO THE MINISTER RESPECTING POSTS IN THE NORTH-WEST, 1718.

Quebec, December 11, 1718.

30 Le Sieur de Vaudreuil has been informed by the letters of Sieur de la Noüe, that having arrived very late at Kaministiquoya, where he found but few Indians, he was unable to send any of the canoes to Kamanionen,* and that he will send them after the return of those which he sent this spring to Michilmakinac, in search of provisions; he adds that the Indians of his post were well satisfied with this establishment, and promised to bring there all those who have been accustomed to trade at Hudson's Bay; that he wrote through a Frenchman, who was at Point Chagouamigon, to a chief of the Scioux Nation, and he hopes to succeed in making peace between this nation and that of the Christieux; the accomplishment of which would put him in a condition to pursue with less risk the execution of his orders for the discovery of the Western Ocean.

M. Begon, respecting Posts in the North-West, 1718.

40 MM. DE VAUDREUIL AND BEGON TO THE CONSEIL DE MARINE RESPECTING THE PROGRESS OF LA NOÛE, TOWARDS THE WEST, 1719.*

Quebec, 14th October, 1719.

The Sieur de Vaudreuil has not received, in the present year, any letter from the Sieur de la Noüe; he has only learnt, by way of Chagouamion, which is to the south of the bottom of Lake Superior, and where, since last year, the Sieur de St. Pierre commands, that the Sieur Pachot had passed through there on his way to the country of the Scioux, where he had been sent by the Sieur de la Noüe, with respect to the peace that he was trying to bring about between that nation and that of the Christineaux; but that the Sieur Pachot not having returned to Chagoamion at the date when the last canoes left, no information as to the result of his voyage had been there obtained. The silence of the Sieur de la Noüe creates the belief that he has preferred to await the return of the Sieur Pachot, before giving account to the Sieur de Vaudreuil of what he has done in execution of the orders which he had given him, and that he was not able to do so at the date of the Sieur Pachot's arrival at Gamanistigoya because the season was then too far advanced.

The Sieur de Vaudreuil believes that the absence of the Sieur Pachot will have prevented the Sieur de la Noüe from sending this year to Takamamionen, but that that officer will have found means to attract to his post the savages who were in the habit of trading at Hudson's Bay.

GOVERNOR THE MARQUIS DE BEAUHARNOIS AND THE INTENDANT HOCQUART TO THE MINISTER, AS TO THE CLAIMS OF THE LATE FARMER OF TEMISCAMINGUE.

Oct. 15, 1730.

Claims of the Farmer of Fort Temiscamingue,
1730.

The Post of Temiscamingue had been taken from the Sieur Gorgendière, who claims to have incurred considerable expense during his year of possession, in presents which he had caused to be given to the savages of the different nations living in the neighbourhood of his post, in order to attract them there, and also in the advances which he had made to them, according to the usual custom of traders. [They urged that as one or even two years' possession of a post give no chance of profit, he ought to be relieved from the obligation to pay 200 livres for goods furnished from the King's stores.]²⁰

M. DE BEAUHARNOIS TO COUNT DE MAUREPAS, RESPECTING THE PROPOSED ATTACK ON THE ENGLISH POSTS IN HUDSON'S BAY.*

October 8, 1744.

De Beauhar-
nois, proposed attack on the English, 1744.

In regard to the posts on Hudson's Bay and those they [the English] have established on this side in the direction of Temiscaming, and which His Majesty has been pleased to recommend me to endeavour to neutralize, or to utterly destroy if possible: I have accordingly instructed Sieur Guillet, who farms the post of Temiscaming, and has gained the good opinion of all the nations thereabouts, to prevail on them to assemble together, in the course of this winter, in order to fall, at the opening of the spring, as well on Fort Rupert as on the other posts in the direction of Hudson's Bay. I have in like manner, on receiving news of the war, sent orders to Missilimakinac, to be transmitted to Alepimegon and the other posts in that neighbourhood, so that they may all co-operate in the destruction of the English establishments at the north, and among the rest, of that newly built, about twenty leagues above Michipicoton, by a Canadian refugee, who has conducted thither seven or eight Englishmen who trade there; and I have ordered not only the forcible destruction of that establishment, but also that the Canadian be killed, if it be possible to seize him. I have also given Sieur Guillet notice that I should, at the very opening of spring, despatch a party of Frenchmen and Indians, under the command of an officer and some others, so as to make a simultaneous attack on those posts. Sieur Guillet is to warn those Indians of this expedition, in order that they may hold themselves in readiness to join it, and, in fact, I calculate on sending it thither as soon as the season will permit, and I beg you, my Lord to assure His Majesty that I will not neglect anything to utterly destroy, if possible, the English establish-³⁰ ments in that quarter, as well as all those the difficulties whereof I shall be able to surmount.

M. DE BEAUHARNOIS TO COUNT DE MAUREPAS, AS TO HIS INABILITY, FOR WANT OF SUPPLIES, TO ACT ON THE OFFENSIVE AGAINST THE ENGLISH.†

Montreal, June 18, 1745.

De Beauhar-
nois to De Maurepas,

I am on my guard and merely on the defensive, not being able to act offensively, as I had the honour to inform you, either against New England or the posts on Hudson's Bay, in consequence of the want in the King's stores, and even in those of the merchants, of the supplies necessary for such expeditions, a circumstance I was not informed of last autumn. Besides, the preservation of our possessions and forts in the interior of the Colony being my principle object, I consider it more prudent not to divest ourselves of our small means of resistance in case of attack, and to suspend the other projects until I be in a condition to execute them.

M. BELLIN, AS TO THE FRENCH POSTS IN THE WEST AND NORTH-WEST AND NORTH, 1755.

Albany River, when the French settled upon it, was called Quitcheide Chouen by the Indians; but we gave the name of Ste. Anne to the fort and river. That name long existed, and it is to be found in old maps. The river flows out of a lake of the same name, on the shores of which we had a post called St. Germain. The English built a factory there, and called it Henley, but it amounted to very little.

M. Bellin—the

West, 1755.

Moose River, situate at the head of Hudson's Bay, is not the only stream flowing into the bay, at the entrance to which Fort Moose is built. On the western shore of that bay, River Perré is found flowing from the west, and connecting with Lake Alimipegon about one hundred leagues from Fort Moose. The river derives its name from its discoverer—a Canadian—who reached Hudson's Bay by that route.

A large number of rivers, some of considerable size, flow into Lake Superior. About half-way up the north shore are situated St. Ignace Islands, opposite the entrance of a river through which Lake Alimipegon, 25 to 30 leagues from Lake Superior, is reached. Although those parts have long been occupied by our traders and missionaries, my knowledge of the subject lacks the requisite precision. I am ignorant of the size or configuration of Lake Alimipegon or its tributary rivers, or even of the greater part of the rivers flowing into Lake Superior.

On the west coast of Lake Alimipegon, there is a river through which the head of Hudson's Bay may be reached. A Frenchman, from Canada, named Perray, was the first discoverer of that route, and gave his name to the river. On leaving the lake, the river is ascended for about forty leagues, several small lakes crossed, and a few portages made; then comes a more considerable lake whence the water flows east, into the head of the bay, at the entrance of which the English Fort, Moose is built.

We have long been aware of the existence of an extensive chain of lakes, and river connections, to the west and north-west of Lake Superior, forming a convenient highway to the far West; it was even supposed the ocean might be reached in that direction; hence the later discoveries of the French in those parts have only confirmed our previous conjectures, and almost converted them into certainty.

In a MS. map deposited in the Map Department of the Marine Bureau, and drawn in 1687, by Sieur Franquelin, geographical engineer employed in New France, are found, to the west of Lake Superior, certain rivers communicating with two large and contiguous lakes, respectively named Assiniboile and Christinaux; from the latter a river (Bourbon) runs to Fort Nelson, on Hudson's Bay. These two lakes are now called Lakes Ouinipique and Bourbon, and we have factories on both.

Another map, fully as interesting as the former, is that drawn up from information received from Indian Ochagat, the original copy being deposited in the office, which indicates several lakes and river connections tending far towards the west. Although the distances are derived from approximations liable to error, a certain vein of truth is observed and confirmed by more recent investigations in those parts, such as furnished by the memoirs of MM. de la Veranderie, father and son, sent to establish various forts for the protection of the newly-discovered territory; and the journal of M. le Gardeur de St. Pierre an officer of the troops in Canada, who visited the forts in 1750, with instructions to extend his discoveries to the utmost practicable extent, make treaties, and establish trading relations with the most distant Indian nations.

Although I have said the sources of the Missouri were unknown, the French ascended that river, to a great distance, and formed several establishments; one, especially, named Fort Orleans, over 80 leagues from the sea, in the midst of the Missouri, Osage, Kansés and other Indian tribes.

The Illinois River is only a few leagues distant from the Missouri, but on the other side. We have already seen the forts built in 1679 on that river by M. de la Salle; and in addition, we have since built a fort at Peoria, 20 leagues from its mouth.

On the east side of the Mississippi is found the River Ouisconsin, at the mouth of which Sieur Perrot, a Canadian, built Fort St. Nicolas. Lead mines are found on both sides of the main stream below that point. From River Ouisconsin to Lake Pepin, the distance is about 30 leagues; that lake is merely an expansion of the river, about a league in width, by 5 or 6 in length. A small fort was built at its entrance by Sieur Perrot, and another a little higher, on account of the adjacent lead mines; he named them respectively de Bonsecours and de Lac des Pleurs. A few leagues further are several islands, on the largest of which Fort Le Sueur was built in 1695. The River St. Croix flows from the east, a little above that place, its sources not being far distant from Lake Superior. A fort, also named St. Croix, has been built on that river, about forty leagues from its mouth, and not more than 25 leagues from Lake Superior, which was easily reached from there. Thence remains but a small portage of some leagues, a little beyond which is found the River de Neouatsicotén, or Neouissacouat, which discharges itself near the foot of the lake. The distance from the River St. Croix to the River St. Pierre is estimated at 5 to 6 leagues. The stream is studded in this interval with a number of beautiful islands of varying size. The River St. Pierre, thus named by the French, but by the savages called Oualebamenisouté [Minnesota], flows from the west. It rises in Lake des Tintons, flows over 50 leagues to the east, and then turns and runs at least 30 leagues north-east to the Mississippi. At the elbow it receives Rivers Verte and St. Rémi. At this point old Fort L'Hullier or Fort Vert—thus called on account of a deposit of green earth in the neighbourhood—was built by us. The latitude of Fort Vert is 44° 20'; the mouth of River St. Pierre, 44° 55'. The latitudes are from observations taken in 1700, by Sieur Le Sueur.

COLONEL DE BOUGAINVILLE'S ACCOUNT OF THE FRENCH POSTS, 1757.*

De Bougainville's account of the French
Posts, 1757.

MICHILLIMAKINAC.—Michillimakinac is distant from Montreal, travelling by the Grande Rivière some three hundred leagues, and some one hundred leagues and more from Detroit. This post is situated between Lake Michigan and Lake Huron. . . . The Governor-General receives generally from the voyageurs five hundred francs upon each canoe laden with merchandizes, and the proceeds thereof are distributed among the officers and the poor families. In ordinary times, six or seven hundred bundles (paquets) of furs are forwarded from the fort per annum. . . . Michillimackinac is the entrepôt of all the northern posts, as Detroit is of the southern ones.

ILLINOIS POST.—The principal entrepôt of the post of Illinois is Fort Chartres, situated upon the Mississippi. There are, for all these posts, a garrison of six companies, furnished, as is also the commandant, by New Orleans. The divisions of the Illinois are . . . the Cahoo [Cahokias] . . . the Metchi . . . the Kas [Kaskaskias] . . . These three nations are now comprised under the name of the Illinois. This post is worked by means of licenses, whose price is six hundred francs per canoe. . . . There is another post on the River of the Illinois, where resides a commandant in a fort called Piniteoui. The tribes which trade there are the Peorias. Seven hundred men produce two hundred bundles of furs.

POST OF THE WESTERN SEA (LA MER DE L'OUEST).—The post of the Western Sea is the most advanced towards the north; it is situated amidst many Indian tribes, with whom we trade, and who have intercourse also with the English towards Hudson's Bay. We have there seven forts built of stockades, trusted, generally, to the care of one or two officers, seven or eight soldiers, and eighty engaged Canadiens. We can push further the discoveries we have made in that country, and communicate even with California.

The post of La Mer d'Ouest includes the forts ST. PIERRE, ST. CHARLES, BOURBON, DE LA REINE DAUPHIN, POSKOIA, [and] DES PRAIRIES, all of which are built with palisades that can give protection only against the Indians. Fort St. Pierre is situated on the left shore of Lake Tekamamiouen, or Lac de la Pluie [Rainy Lake], at 500 leagues from Michilimakinak and 300 from Kamanistigoyia, or Les Trois Rivières [Three Rivers], to the north-west of Lake Superior. Fort St. Charles is situated sixty leagues from Fort St. Pierre, on a peninsula that goes far into Lac Des Bois [Lake of the Woods]. Fort Bourbon is at one hundred and fifty leagues from the preceding one, and at the entrance of Lake Quinipeg. Fort la Reine is situated on the right shore of the River of the Assiniboëls, at seventy leagues from Fort Bourbon. This country is composed of vast prairies; it is the route to go through to the upper part of the Missouri. Fort Dauphin at eighty leagues from the preceding one, on the River Minanghenachequeké, or Eau Trouble. Fort Poskoia is built on the river of that name [now 10 Saskatchewan], at 180 leagues from the preceding one; it takes ten days from this fort to reach Nelson River. The Fort des Prairies is at eighty leagues from Fort Poskoia, in the upper part of the river of that name. This post has been farmed in consideration of a sum of eight thousand francs; the commandant is its farmer, with a fourth interest in its trade. The Indians who trade there are the Christinaux and the Assiniboëls; these two tribes form each twelve villages inhabited respectively by two hundred and fifty men (hommes.) This post produces usually from three to four hundred bundles of furs; we must take into account also fifty to sixty slaves, Rouges or Panis, of Jatihilinine, a nation situated on the Missouri, and which plays the same rôle in America that the negros do in Europe. This is the only post where this traffic takes place.

The post of La Mer d'Ouest merits special attention for two reasons—the first, that it is the 20 nearest to the establishments of the English at Hudson's Bay, and from which their movements can be watched; the second, that from this post the discovery of the Western Sea may be accomplished; but to make this discovery it will be necessary that the travellers (voyageurs) give up all views of personal interest.

NÉPIGON.—Les Népignons, a post established to the north of Lake Superior; the commandant is its farmer, and pays for that privilege about 4,000 francs; it includes the Lake à la Carpe. . . . The Indians who trade at the post are the Saulteux; this tribe, one of the most numerous in these regions, is wandering, plants nothing, and subsists solely by the chase and fishing. The post produces generally every year from eighty to one hundred bundles of fur.

TEMISCAMINGUE.—A post situated on a lake of that name, and farmed in consideration of the sum 30 of 7,000 francs; the Indians call the place where stands the post Aubatswenanek. The tribes that trade there are the Têtes de Boule, or Gens des Terres and the Namosakio who come from the shores of Hudson's Bay.

TABITIBI is a post dependent upon Temiscamingue, situated at one hundred and twenty leagues from the preceding fort, towards Hudson's Bay; each post may contain one hundred men; they subsist on game and fish; they sow no grain, and have no village. All this country is mountainous and not at all fertile. The post produces about 120 bundles of furs.

TRADING POSTS.

Northern Posts.—1. Themiskaming (no commandant there); 2. Michilimakinac; 3. La Baie; 4. La Mer d'Ouest; 5. Sault Ste. Marie (the seigniory and the exclusive trade are granted in perpetuity to 40 M. Debonne or his heirs); 6. Chagouamigon; 7. Kamanistigouya; 8. Népigon; 9. Michipicoton (no commandant); 10. St. Joseph; 11. The River of the Illinois (no commandant has yet been appointed for that post). The General sells licenses to the traders in order to allow them to trade with the Indians.

M. De Montcalm on the state of Canada, 1753.

The English have 60,000 men, we, at most, from 10 to 11,000. Our Government is good for nothing; money and provisions will fail. Through want of provisions, the English will begin first; the farms scarcely tilled, cattle lack; the Canadians are dispirited; no confidence in M. de Vaudreuil or in M. Bigot. M. de Vaudreuil is incapable of preparing a plan of operations; he has no activity; he lends his confidence to empirics rather than to the General sent by the King. M. Bigot appears occupied only in making a large fortune for himself, his adherents and sycophants; cupidity has seized officers, store-keepers; the commissaries also, who are about the River St. John or the Ohio, or with the Indians in the upper country, are amassing astonishing fortunes. It is nothing but forged certificates, legally admitted. If the Indians had a fourth of what is supposed to be expended for them, the King would have all those in America; the English, none.

This interest has an influence on the war. M. de Vaudreuil, with whom men are equal, led by a knavish Secretary and interested associates, would confide a vast operation to his brother, or any other colonial officer, the same as to Chevalier de Levis. The choice concerns those who divide the cake; therefore has there never been any desire to send M. de Bourlamaque, or M. de Senezergues, commandant of the battalion of La Sarre, to Fort Duquesne. I did propose it; the King had gained by it; but what Superintendents in a country whose humblest cadet, a sergeant, a gunner, returned with twenty, thirty thousand livres in certificates, for goods issued for the Indians on account of His Majesty. * *

Everybody appears to be in a hurry to make his fortune before the Colony is lost, which event many perhaps desire as an impenetrable veil over their conduct. The craving after wealth has an influence on the war, and M. de Vaudreuil does not doubt it. Instead of reducing the expenses of Canada, people wish to retain all; how abandon positions which serve as a pretext to make private fortunes. Transportation is distributed to favourites. The agreement with the contractor is as unknown to me as it is to the public. It is reported that those who have invaded commerce participate in it. Has the King need of purchasing goods for the Indians? Instead of buying them directly, a favourite is notified, who purchases at any price whatever. Then, M. Bigot has them removed to the King's stores, allowing a profit of one hundred and even one hundred and fifty per cent. to those who it is desired to favour. Is artillery to be transported, gun-carriages, carts, implements to be made? M. Mercier, Commandant of the Artillery, is the contractor, under other people's names. Everything is done badly and at a high price. This officer, who came out twenty years ago a simple soldier, will be soon worth about six or seven hundred thousand livres, perhaps a million, if these things continue. I have often respectfully spoken to M. de Vaudreuil and M. Bigot of these expenses; each throws the blame on his colleague. The people, alarmed at these expenses, fear a depreciation in the paper money of the country; the evil effect is, the Canadians who do not participate in those illicit profits, hate the Government. * *

It is foreign to my character to blame M. de Vaudreuil and M. Bigot, depositaries of His Majesty's authority in Canada. I am even attached to M. Bigot, who is an amiable man and a near relative of M. de Fussieux and Marshal D'Estrees, who honour me with their friendship. * * *

If there be peace, the Colony is lost if the entire government is not changed. The maxims of the book entitled L'ami de l'homme must be followed: to disgrace those who will return from Colonies with wealth, and to reward those who will return from them with the staff and scrip with which they had gone forth.

The general census of Canada has been at last completed. Though it has not been communicated to me, I think I'm correct, that there are not more than 82,000 souls in the Colony; of these, twelve thousand at most, are men capable of bearing arms; deducting from this number those employed in works, transports, bateaux, in the upper countries, no more than seven thousand Canadians will ever be collected together, and then it must not be either seed time or harvest, otherwise by calling all out, the ground would remain uncultivated, famine would follow. Our eight battalions will make three thousand two hundred men; the Colonials, at most fifteen hundred men in the field. What is that against at least fifty thousand men, which the English have?

Charter of Louisiana,
Louis XIV.
to M. Crozat,
Sept., 1712.

We, by these presents, signed by our hand, have appointed and do appoint the said Sieur Crozat solely, to carry on a trade in all the lands possessed by us, and bounded by New Mexico, and by the lands of the English of Carolina, all the establishments, ports, havens, rivers, and principally the port and haven of the Isle Dauphine, heretofore called Massacre; the River of St. Louis, heretofore called Mississippi, from the edge of the sea as far as the Illinois; together with the River of St. Philip, heretofore called the Missouri, and of St. Jerome, heretofore called Ouabache, with all the countries, territories lakes within land, and the rivers which fall directly or indirectly into that part of the River St. Louis.

I.—Our pleasure is, that all the aforesaid Lands, Countries, Streams, Rivers and Islands be and remain under the Government of Louisiana, which shall be dependent upon the General Government of New France, to which it is subordinate; and further, that all the lands which we possess from the Illinois be united, so far as occasion requires, to the General Government of New France, and become part thereof, reserving, however, to ourselves the liberty of enlarging, as we shall think fit, the extent of the Government of the Country of Louisiana.

LETTERS PATENT GRANTED TO THE WESTERN COMPANY, 1717.†

II.—We grant to the said Company, for the space of twenty-five years, beginning from the day of the registration of the present Letters, the exclusive right of trading in our Province and Government of Louisiana, and also the privilege of receiving, to the exclusion of all other persons, in our colony of Canada, from the 1st of January, 1713, until and including the last day of December, 1742, all the beaver, fat and dry, which the inhabitants of the said colony shall have traded for, whilst we shall regulate, according to the accounts which shall be sent over to us from the said country, the quantities of the different sorts of beaver that the Company shall be bound to receive each year from the said inhabitants of Canada, and the prices they shall be bound to pay for them

V. With a view to give the said Western Company the means of forming a firm establishment and enable it to execute all the speculations it may undertake, we have given, granted, and conceded, do give, grant, and concede to it, by these present letters, and for ever, the same way and extent as we have granted them to M. Crozat, by our letters patent of 14th September, 1712, to enjoy the same in full property, seignior, and jurisdiction, keeping to ourselves no other rights or duties than the fealty and liege homage the said Company shall be bound to pay us, and to the kings our successors at every new reign, with a golden crown of the weight of thirty marks.

X. The said Company shall be at liberty to establish such governors, officers, majors, and others as they may think fit, to command the troops, and the said governors and major officers shall be presented to us by the directors of the Company, in order that we may deliver to them our commissions.

PAPERS RELATING TO THE POST OF TEMISCAMINGUE, 1722-1725.

MEMOIR AS TO THE LIMITS, 1722.

Limits of
gue, 1722.

His (the King's) intention was to settle the single post of Temiskamingue within the limits to which it ought naturally to be confined, to the land watered by the river of this name, and others that discharge therein, without comprising the lands that are below or above the said river.—Mémoire des Représentations sur l'adjudication qui vient d'être faite du poste de Temiskamingue, 1722.

June, 1725.

It was agreed (convenu) at the time of the adjudication in regard to the limits of the post of Temiscamingue, that it is necessary to embrace the River Lièvre, as well to give certain limits for the front and the depth, as because if the river did not belong to it (n'en dépendait point), those who may have permission to carry on this trade there would be able to attract there a part of the savages of the post of Temiscamingue. It is for the same reason that Lake Nepissingue and a part of the grand river of the Ottawa, from the River du Lièvre, which also discharges into the Ottawa River, on the south side was included.

THE INTENDANT BEGON, EXPLAINING THE ANCIENT LIMITS, OCTOBER 20, 1725.

Begon describes the ancient limits, 20th
October,

The ancient limits of this post were, on the front, from and comprising the River du Lièvre, which discharges in the grand river of the Ottawas, on the north side as far as and comprising Lake Nepissingue, and in depth up to Hudson's Bay, where it is possible to go only by the River Monsiey or Monsipy, which discharges into the sea at the head of the said bay. [From Mataouan to Temiscamingue the Ottawa River used to be called la Rivière de Temiscamingue.] The height of land is at the Rivers Labyrinthe and Tabitibis, sixty leagues from Lake Temiscamingue. At this portage is a post for trading with the Indians of the environs and those of Hudson's Bay, and who come up the River Monsiey. The course of this river to the ocean is about eighty leagues.

This is the most advanced post towards Hudson's Bay. The French, in order not to expose themselves to the insults of savages who may be in the pay of the English on Hudson's Bay, where Fort Monsiey is situated, do not go further for fur trading. This is the only river of the post which conducts to Hudson's Bay.

When one is at Matacuan, in order to reach Lake Nepissingue, it is necessary to ascend, for fourteen leagues, a river, called La Petite Rivière, as far as a place known as the Portage des Vases, where is the height of the lands. Three portages, amounting together to five quarter-leagues, are here made. Afterwards, for the space of two leagues, the descent is through a small river which empties itself in Lake Nepissingue, at the head of which, at its northern extremity, is a river called La Fontaine. The course of this river is ascended for about forty leagues to within about ten leagues of Lake Temiscamingue.

ORDINANCE OF THE INTENDANT HOCQUART ON THE LIMITS OF TADOUSSAC, 1733

ORDINANCE ON THE SUBJECT OF THE BOUNDARIES OF THE KING'S DOMAIN, CALLED THE LIMITS (TRAITE) OF TADOUSSAC, MAY 23RD, 1733.*

10 GILLES HOCQUART, † ETC.

Reference being had to the request presented to us by M. Pierre Carlier, Adjudicator-General of the united farms of Franco and of the domain of the West, stipulating for himself and Sieur Cugnet director of the said Western domain in this country, seeing that for the reasons therein contained, it is our pleasure (reference being had to the decree (arrêt) of the King's Council of State, May 16, 1677, and the decree of the Superior Council of Quebec, of the 19th October, 1358, giving control of the trade of Tadoussac to Sieur Demaure, the ordinance of M. Raudot of the 25th September, 1707, and the ordinance of M. Begon of the 5th April, 1720), to ordain that the said Carlier, his successors, farmers of the said Western domain, their attorneys, deputies, and overseers, continue to enjoy (faire) alone, to the exclusion of all others, the trade (traite), hunting, fishery, in the extent of the King's domain, from the 20 Isle aux Coudres to a point two leagues below the Seven Islands, and in the posts of Tadoussac, Chekoutiny, Lake St John, Nekonbau, Mistassinoc, Papinachois, Naskapis, River Moisy, the Seven Islands, and the places dependent on them, comprising the lands and Seigneurie of Malbaye ;

Ordinance on the limits of Tadoussac,
1733.

Consequently all persons, of whatever quality and condition they may be, as well merchants and habitants of the colony, captains and masters of fishing-boats, barques, bateaux, ships, crews and passengers, and all others whomsoever, are forbidden to trade, hunt, fish, or to carry on any commerce under any pretext, directly or indirectly, by themselves or by sending merchandise, provisions, liquors, or ammunition through friendly Savages, in the country dependent on the said limits (traites) of His Majesty's domain, without the express commission in writing of the said Carlier, the farmers his successors, their attorneys, deputies, overseers, on pain of the confiscation of the arms, products of the hunt 30 (chase), merchandise intended to be used in trade, furs and other effects obtained in trade, canoes, large boats, barques, fishing-boats, bateaux, and all other vessels whatever, and a fine of two thousand livres, which can neither be remitted nor lessened under any pretext whatever ; of which confiscations and fines two-thirds shall belong to the said Carlier, and the other one-third to the informer ;

All persons, of whatever quality and condition, who descend the river St. Lawrence in canoes, large boats, fishing-boats, or other small vessels, are equally forbidden to land on this domain otherwise than at the posts and French establishments on the said river, on pain of being regarded as having traded with the Savages, in fraud of the privilege of the said Carlier and the penalties above mentioned ;

The said Carlier is to have the liberty of sending to the posts dependent on the domain, such 40 persons and by such routes as he may judge proper, to guard the limits and to prevent trading that might be made to his prejudice ; but they are not to trade on the way, outside of the bounds of the domain, under the penalties which such illicit trading would incur ;

The said Carlier, his attorneys, deputies or overseers are to be empowered to seize all canoes found within the extent of the said domain, laden with merchandise, suitable for trading, or with furs and other objects of trade, wines and liquors (boissons) and ammunition and other effects, whether concealed (en cache) or exposed, in the country dependent on the said domain, to whomsoever they may belong, and also to seize and arrest all vessels whatever which are found trading or have traded with the Savages in the extent of the said domain, and the confiscation of the goods is to be made public by a minute of the transaction drawn up by the deputies of the said Carlier and affirmed by them ;

And for the execution of our ordinance, the said Carlier is permitted to cause it to be posted up where it may be, or he may judge it to be, necessary ;

Our ordinance delivered on the said request of March 30, 1731, by which, before giving judgment, and in execution of private orders which we have received from His Majesty on the subject, to fix in an invariable manner the boundaries of the Limits of Tadoussac, in the country reserved for the domain of His Majesty, according to the said arrêt of the King's Council of State of the 16th May, 1677, and the 10th ordinance of M. Begon of the 5th April, 1720 ;

We have ordered that the diligence of Sieur Cugnet should be engaged to make an exact map of the extent of the said domain, on which shall be designated the banks of the river Saint Lawrence from the Isle aux Coudres to the River Moisy and, in the interior of the country, the rivers and lakes which discharge into the Saguenay River, with their magnetic bearings, the extent of the country through which they run, from their source to their embouchure, and the names of the principal posts where trading is or can be carried on with the Savages ;

In consequence of which we have commissioned Sieur Louis Aubert de la Chenaye to reckon up and measure the banks of the River Saint Lawrence, comprised in the extent of the said domain of His Majesty, from the Isle aux Coudres to the River Moisy, as well as the Saguenay River and the rivers 20 and lakes which discharge into it, with their magnetic bearings and the extent of ground through which they run from their source to their embouchure ; to make figured plans, and to draw up an account of the same in the form of a journal, marking the points to which navigation by barques, bateaux or canoes extends ; the falls or rapids where portages have to be made ; the names of the lakes and rivers, and the countries situated upon them ; the establishments and magazines where trade is carried on with the Savages, and the seal and salmon fishing ; together with the ancient establishments where trade was previously carried on, the vestiges of which still remain ; the names of the Savage nations inhabiting the country ; and generally everything which can contribute to determine precisely the extent of the said limits, and make their advantages known, according to the private instruction annexed to our said ordinance ;

Another ordinance rendered by us, May 12th, 1732, by which we named and destined Sieur 30 Joseph-Laurent Normandin to execute, conjointly with Sieur de la Ganière, our ordinance of 30th March, 1731, instead of the Sieur Aubert de la Chenaye, who was obliged to return to Quebec, having broken his thigh at the Petit Rivière, at the house of a person named Simard, in the same way it would have been done by the said Sieur de la Chenaye, conformably to our instruction of the said day, March 30, 1731 ; and for this purpose they are to traverse all the rivers and lakes which discharge into the River Saguenay, taking a westerly direction, from the post of Checontiny to the height of land, marking the limits there by placing the lilies of France (fleur-de-lis) on the trees, and keeping a journal containing all the observations mentioned in our said ordinance and instruction ;

The procès verbaux of the said Sieurs de la Chenaye and Normandin, in the form of a journal, the 40 map which we have caused to be drawn up therefrom ;

Reference being had also to our ordinance of the twelfth of the present month, between M. Pierre Carlier, Adjudicator-General of the united farms of France and of the domain of the West, stipulating by the said Sieur Cugnet, Plaintiff, to reply to us on the 26th September, 1732, of one part, and Francis Bissoe, as much in his own name as having had ceded to him the rights of the deceased Sieur de Vallereenne, and Jeanne Bissoe his wife, and of the deceased Sieur Charles Bissoe, Sieur Joseph Fleury de Logorgendière and Claire Jolliet, his wife, daughter of the deceased Louis Jolliet, and Claire François Bissoe, as much for themselves as for the co-heirs of the said deceased Sieur and Madame Jolliet, Defendants, and Sieur Jacques Gourdeau, son of the deceased Jacques Gourdeau and Marie Bissoe, heir of his said father, acting as much for himself as for the co-heirs of the said deceased Bissoe, his mother also 50

Defendant, of the other part, by which we have given effect to the abandonment made by them, in writing of the 12th April last, of the land conceded to the deceased François Bissot, Sieur de la Rivière by the Company of New France, of the 25th February, 1661, from the Isle-aux-Ceufs to the Rieer Moisy; and have in consequence regard to the demand of the said Sieur Cugnet, in said name, conveyed by his written reply of the 31st March last;

We have, as far as necessary, re-united to the domain of His Majesty, the land granted to the said Sieur Bissot, from the said Isle-aux-Ceufs inclusive, to Point des Cormorans, which is five or six leagues below the said River Moisy; doing this.

We have forbidden the said defendants and intervenants, as well as all others to carry on, directly or indirectly any trade, hunting, fishing, commerce, or establishments within the extent of this land, either in the Rivar Moisy or other lakes and rivers which form its affluents, or to disturb Monsieur Cugnet in the enjoyment, possession and improvement of the said land and rivers, under the penalties which the law provides:

The arrêt of the Superior Council of Quebec, vesting Sieur Demaure with jurisdiction over the farm of the limits of Tadoussac, containing the limits and privileges of the said trade;

The arrêt of the King's Council of State, of May 16th, 1677;

Ordinance of Monsieur Raudot, of September 26th, 1707, forbidding all persons, even foreign Savages, to trade or hunt within the extent of the Limits of Tadoussac;

Another ordinance of my said Sieur Raudot, of the 7th September, 1709, prohibiting all persons to treat (faire festin) the Savages of Tadoussac, or to draw them away in any manner, and permitting the sub-farmers of the limits of Tadoussac to plunder the French whom they shall find trading within the extent of the said limits;

Another ordinance of my said Sieur Raudot, of April 7th, 1710, giving permission to seize merchandise found in the hands of the French who had traded within the extent of the Limits of Tadoussac, even that which may be found concealed in the said limits;

Ordinance of M. Begon, of April 5th, 1720, prohibiting, trading, hunting, and fishing within the extent of the Limits of Tadoussac;

And every thing considered:

We have bounded the extent of the domain of the King called the Limits of Tadoussac, that is to say, on the north bank of the river Saint Lawrence from the bottom of the seignory of Eboulemens, which is opposite the north-east point of the Isle-aux-Coudres, to the Point or Cape of Cormorans, being about ninety-five leagues of front, with the Isle-aux-Ceufs and other isles, islets, and shallows adjacent; on the western side, by a supposed line drawn east and west, to commence from the bottom of the Seignory of Eboulemens to the height of land at the portage of Lake Patitachekao, latitude $47^{\circ} 15'$, on which portage the said Sieur Normandin has planted four fleurs-de-lis on four balsam firs, in which Lake Patitachekao the River Metabetchouanon has its source, and discharges into Lake St. John, whence it falls into the Saguenay; further to the west by Lakes Spamoskoutin, Sagaigan, and Kaouakounabiscat, at the height of lands, in the latitude of $47^{\circ} 27'$, where the said Sieur Normandin has also placed four fleurs-de-lis on four balsam firs; the said Lake Kaouakounabiscat forming other lakes, and the River Quiatechouanon, which discharges into the Saguenay through the said Lake St. John, which two lakes form the boundary of the hunting country in the depths of Batiscan; and running still to the west, beside Three Rivers, and in depth by the height of land, about two leagues from the little lake Patitaouaganiche, latitude $48^{\circ} 18'$, where the said Sieur Normandin has also placed four fleurs-de-lis on four balsam firs, which lake flows through Lake Askatiche where it falls into the River Nekoubau, where flow also the waters of Lake Nekoubau; all of which lakes and rivers pass through Lake St. John into the Saguenay, and form the boundary which separates the lands of the domain from the hunting country of Three Rivers and Rivière-du-Lièvre; the said boundaries above designated, according to the journals of the said Sieur de la Chenaye and Normandin, and the map which we have caused to be made therefrom, the minutes of which will remain deposited in our Secretary's office; in the extent of which boundaries are found the posts of Tadoussac, Malbaie, Bondésir, Papinachois, Islets-de-Jérémie and Pointe-des-Bersiamites, Chekoutimy, Lako St. John, Nekoubau, Chomonthouane,

Mistassins, and behind the Mistassins as far as the Hudson's Bay; and on the lower part of the river, the domain will be bounded, in consequence of our said ordinance of the twelfth of the present month, by Cape Cormorans as far as the height of land, in which extent will be comprised the River Moisy, the Lake of the Kichestigaux, the Lake of the Naskapis, and other rivers and lakes which discharge therein

We ordain that the said M. Pierre Carlier, his successors, farmers of the western domain, their attorneys, deputies and overseers, continue to carry on alone, to the exclusion of all others, the trade, hunting and fishing, in the whole extent of the country, included within the limits above designated.

We forbid all persons of whatever quality and condition, as well merchants as habitants of the colony, captains and masters of fishing-boats, bateaux and vessels, the men employed to manage them and passengers, and all others whomsoever, even foreign Savages who do not reside in the lands of the domain, to trade, hunt, fish, or carry on any commerce under any pretext whatever, directly or indirectly, whether by themselves or by sending in merchandise, victuals, liquors and ammunition, through friendly Savages, in any part of the country designated by our present ordinance, and generally in any rivers or lakes of which the waters flow through the Saguenay River, and the River Moisy, though they may not be specially named in our said ordinance; to treat the Savages who live in the same extent of country, or to draw them away in any manner, or even to approach within ten leagues of the limits above drawn in the lands, for the purpose of trading with the Savages or other establishments without the express permission in writing of the said Carlier, the farmers his successors, their attorneys, deputies, and overseers, on the pain of the confiscation of the arms, products of the hunt merchandise for trading, furs and other objects obtained in trade, canoes, large boats, barques, fishing boats, bateaux, and other vessels of whatever kind, and a fine of two thousand livres, which can neither be remitted nor lessened under any pretext, of which confiscation and fine two-thirds are to belong to the said Carlier, and the other third to the informers.

We permit the said Carlier, the farmers his successors, their attorneys, deputies and overseers, to send into the said posts dependent on the domain, to guard its limits, and to prevent trading which might be made to the prejudice of the above prohibition, such persons and by such roads, as they shall judge proper, but they are to be charged not to pass beyond the limits assigned by our present ordinance, without having previously obtained permission from us in writing, on pain of all the costs, damages, and interests payable to those to whom it belongs.

We also permit the said Carlier, his successors, their attorneys, deputies and overseers, to seize and hold all the canoes which shall be found within the extent of the said domain laden with merchandise, provisions, liquors, and ammunition suitable for trade, or furs and negotiable effects, which shall be found hidden or not hidden in the country dependent on the said domain, to whomsoever they may belong; as also to seize and hold all vessels whatever which shall be found trading, or to have traded, with the Savages, within the extent of the said domain, and to proceed before us, with the confiscation of the articles seized, upon the procès verbaux of the said attorneys and overseers duly affirmed.

And our present ordinance shall be read, published and posted up wherever need be.

We order, &c.

The Commission of M. BIGOT, January 1st, 1748, makes him Intendant of Justice, Police, Finances, and Marine, in "our country of Canada, Louisiana, and in all the lands and islands dependent on New France."

GRANT OF THE POST À LA CARPE—GOVERNOR LA JONQUIÈRE TO SIEUR
SIMBLIN, 1751.

(Copy obtained from the archives of the Department of the Marine and Colonies, Paris.)

DECREE OF M. DE LA JONQUIÈRE, WHICH PERMITS SR. SIMBLIN, ENSIGN OF THE TROOPS IN CANADA, TO CONSTRUCT AT HIS OWN EXPENSE AT LAC A LA CARPE, A FORT, A HOUSE AND A STOREHOUSE, WITH THE POWER TO COMMAND THEM, AND THERE TO CARRY ON EXCLUSIVE COMMERCE DURING THE TERM OF SIX YEARS.

27th February, 1751.

SEEING THE PETITION which has been presented to us by the Sr. de Simblin, second ensign in the 10 troops of this colony, with the petition [?plan] appended to it, after having given attention to the reasons contained in the said petition, and having seen with evidence, by the said plan, that the savage nations which are in the interior of the northern part of the said lands, and of whom certain are yet to be known, the French are obliged to supply their need at Hudson's Bay, and there to carry on their commerce with the English in passing by way of the three arms of the river marked on the said plan not being in a position to carry on their traffic elsewhere. We, having been assured that they have never carried it on at Nepigon, nor in any other French post, that it would be very possible to cut all commerce and connection of the savages with the English in establishing a fort at the lake called Lac à la Carpe, which has not been up to the present occupied by the French, nor comprised in the limits of any of our posts, and we not being able ourselves to refuse the invitation which a chief of the said 20 savages has given to us by the Sr. de Simblin, in the name of the said nations, to found the said establishment;

Persuaded in other respects that the said establishment could not but be, in every way, very advantageous to the benefit of the King's service, to the interests and to the service of the colony;

Taking into account the excellent evidence which has been given to us of the zeal, the fidelity, the experience, the credit which the said Sr. de Simblin has acquired amongst these savage nations, and that he is very capable of forming the said establishment, and the closest alliance between the said nations and the French;

We, in virtue of the power which has been given to us by the King, have received and receive the offer which has been made to us by the said Sr. de Simblin, to found the said establishment at his own 30 expense; and in consequence have appointed, and appoint him, under the good pleasure of His Majesty, to proceed next spring to the said Lac à la Carpe, there to establish a fort, a house, and a storehouse, the whole to be built of logs; of which we have given to him, and give by these presents, the command and the exclusive trade from the said Lac à la Carpe, extending from the shore of Hudson's Bay in the eastern section, and from the west to 30 leagues of distance, for the time and term of six consecutive years, which shall commence in the spring-time of the next year, 1752, and will finish in the spring-time of the year 1758;

ON CONDITION:

First, that he will bear the expenses of the said establishment at his risk and with his fortune, without His Majesty being liable on anything, directly or indirectly; that he will not lay claim to any 40 annual indemnification during the said six years, nor to any compensation when the said six years are finished; that he will not carry on any trade except with the nations which shall go to the said post.

Second, that he shall have caused the said fort, house, and storehouse, to be constructed in the spring-time of the next year, 1752; that he shall have there during the said year, and until the end of his command, the merchandise necessary to carry on trade with the savages; and that he shall not found any establishment, nor winter on the River du Cassetête, having only the liberty to pass by the Lake of the Nepigon and the said River du Cassetête in order to proceed to his post; and neglecting one of these conditions these presents will remain void.

And on this condition we shall send forward to him, gratis, each year, our permission for the departure of the canoes which shall make the transport of the said merchandise, and it will be free to him 50 to buy the bark canoes and his provisions at Missilimakinac for these purposes. In testimony whereof, etc.

THE CASE OF CHARLES DE REINHARD, 1818.*

*Judicial Proceedings involving the question
Boundaries.*

[Charles De Reinhard was tried in the District of Quebec on the 18th day of May, 1818, before Chief Justice Sewell and Mr. Justice Bowen, under the authority of a Special Commission, issued by Hon. John C. Sherbrooke, Governor of Lower Canada, dated 29th April, 1818, and authorizing such trial under the Act, 43 Geo. III, chap. 138, for murder committed at the Dalles, on the assumption that this place was situate in the Indian Territory, or parts of America not within the limits of Upper or Lower Canada, or of any Civil Government of the United States of America; and the jurisdiction depended on whether the place where the murder was committed was within Upper Canada. The following evidence on this point was given:—

The De Rein-
hard case,

THE EVIDENCE.

WILLIAM SAX, Sworn—I am a surveyer; I am acquainted, according to the map which I have here, with the limits of Upper Canada, that is to say, of the old Province of Quebec; the western limit, the mouth of the River Ohio, is in longitude 88° 50' west from Greenwich, and latitude 37° 10' north. That appears by a map which I have made and have in my hand, to be the latitude and longitude of the junction of the Ohio River with the Mississippi. The evidence.

Chief Justice Sewell.—When you speak of the junction of the Ohio River with the Mississippi River, do you mean where the Ohio River empties itself into the banks of the Mississippi?

20 Mr. Sax.—That is the understanding, and the statute provides also—

Chief Justice Sewell.—We do not require any information or assistance in the construction of the statute; we require it as to the fact. The construction of the statute, it is our province to decide on.

Attorney-General.—Would a line running north, from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers strike, in its passage to the Hudson's Bay territory, the great lakes, and where would it strike Lake Superior? And where would it leave Fort William?

Mr. Sax.—Such a line drawn due north, would strike Lake Superior on its passage, and at or about a degree east of Fort William, or perhaps three-quarters of a degree.

Attorney-General.—That is to say, the west end of Lake Superior?

30 Mr. Sax.—Yes, nearly so—when I say that such a line would strike east of Fort William, I mean that it would leave Fort William about three-quarters of a degree to the west of it. It is so laid down in all the maps.

Attorney-General.—From your knowledge of maps, will you then explain in French to the jury, this line?

Mr. Sax having done so, continued his evidence. I am acquainted with the River Winnipic by the maps, and it is between the 50th and 51st degree of north latitude. The Portage des Rats is in 49½° by this map, or 49° 45', and longitude 94° 6' west from Greenwich, and the River Winnipic is consequently about 5° west of the line running north from the junction of the Rivers Ohio and Mississippi, and certainly, without the old Province of Quebec.

Chief Justice Sewell.—What are you speaking of now?

40 Mr. Sax.—That a line, supposing it ran due north from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi, Rivers, would leave the River Winnipic five degrees out of the Province of Upper Canada,—not a northward line, but a due north line.

Attorney-General.—Do you mean to say that a northward line is not a north line?

The De Rein-
hard case,
1818:

Mr. Sax.—It is not always; it may be north by east, or north by west, or north-north-west, or many other points of the compass. A due north line is one that goes direct to the north pole without any deviation whatever.

Attorney-General.—And does not a northward line go to the north pole? If you had a northward line to run, would you not run it to the north pole?

Mr. Sax.—Perhaps I might, and perhaps not; I would certainly run it northerly, though I might not run it due north.

Attorney-General.—What is to prevent you taking it due north? If you had a line to run from a given point till it struck a river, and thence to continue along the course of that river northward, would you call that drawing a northern line. 10

Mr. Sax.—Undoubtedly it would be a northern line, but not a due north line.

Attorney-General.—Would it not? Could it be east or west?

The evidence. Mr. Sax.—It might, according to circumstances, be a north-eastward or north-westwardly line, and yet a northern line, that is a line having a northward course, or drawing nearer to the north pole as it progressed, though not an astronomical north line.

Attorney-General.—Is not a north line a line northward?

Mr. Sax.—Certainly, a line running due north is undoubtedly a northward line.

Attorney-General.—And a line due north-westward you would call a north-westward line?

Mr. Sax.—Certainly; a line due north-west is a north-westward line, but a line, for instance, that runs towards the north, notwithstanding it may gain in its course, more northing than westing or easting, is not therefore necessarily a due north line, but is a northern or northward line.

Chief Justice Sewell.—I really do not comprehend the distinction; to say that a northward line is not a north line, I confess appears to me to approach the "reductio ad absurdum." Suppose that we had a compass here, and from a given point I draw a line north-westward, that is to say, terminating at a point north-westward, would not that be a due north-west line?

Mr. Sax.—It would, if drawn due north-west, but if in drawing it you gained northerly, it would from the course of its deviation, be a line north-westward, though not a north line.

Chief Justice Sewell.—Then its course northward must unquestionable be north—if a line north-westwardly is a north-west line.

Mr. Vallière de St. Réal.—Your honour will observe that he added, "but if it deviated so as to 30 gain a little north, it would then be a northward line."

Chief Justice Sewell.—If a line is to be drawn from a given point of the compass, say from the west in a northward direction, to say that such a line would not be a due north line, appears to me to be a contradiction to the plainest principle of common sense, and totally irreconcilable. I will put the question to you again, Sir. Do I understand you to say, that a line drawn from a given point northward is not a north line?

Mr. Sax.—Surveyors usually call lines running—

Chief Justice Sewell.—I am not asking you what surveyors usually call—I want to know whether in point of fact, a fact that any man can tell as well as a surveyor, whether a line from the eastern or western point of the compass, drawn northward, is, or is not a north line? Just answer that question, 40 yes or no, and then you may explain that answer in any way you think proper.

Mr. Sax.—It certainly must be, to a certain extent, a north line, but not a due north line.

Chief Justice Sewell.—Why not?

Mr. Sax.—A line drawn from any point, between two cardinal points of the compass, direct to any cardinal point, is a due north or west line, as the case may be; but a line may be so drawn between two points as to be called by surveyors a northward or a southward line, as it may chance to gain, in the course of running it, upon that point of the compass to which it is approaching; as I might draw a line from a point north-westwardly, but gaining in a northerly direction in its course, so that at its termination it would be a line northward, from having more northing there than at the point from which it started.

Chief Justice Sewell.—Would not a line drawn from a westerly point, one half north and one half east, be a due north-east line, or must not lines drawn from any point in one half the compass between east and west be north, and, in the other half, a south line?

Mr. Sax.—Certainly, while progressing north or south, but they might be gaining east or west.

Chief Justice Sewell.—Is it then equally true, that lines running east from points between north and south are due east lines?

10 Mr. Sax.—Yes, if progressing east.

Attorney-General.—Then they cannot be northward any more than north.

Mr. Sax.—An identical line from any point running a direct course east is undoubtedly an eastern line, but if inclining in its course half north and half east it is a north-east line.

Chief Justice Sewell.—Am I to understand you that one and the same line can be a northern and eastern line?

Mr. Sax.—The same line may be a north-east line.

Chief Justice Sewell.—Let me be clearly understood by you, because at present I do not at all comprehend what you mean. Taking as a point of departure a centre, and travelling on the radius of a circle, would not the line, according to what you say, be at one and the same time a due north-east and 20 a due north-west line—which appears to be completely a "reductio ad absurdum," though you certainly have said so.

Attorney-General.—If your Honour will permit me, I will ask him a question.—If you were directed simply to draw a boundary line northward, would you qualify it in any way by drawing it to the east or west, or would you go as nearly in a direct north course as possible?

Which question being repeated in French—

Mr. Sax.—If I were directed to draw a northward line, without any other instruction, I should draw it as due north as I could. It would also depend upon whether I was desired to draw it astronomically or magnetically, for the variations between an astronomical and a magnetic line extend in some places from twenty to thirty degrees, and in some places they agree. The astronomical line is the 30 true parallel.

Attorney-General.—But whether you run the line astronomically or magnetically, still in running an unqualified northward line, you would get as much to the north as you could?

Mr. Sax.—Yes; if I had to draw a line northward, without other instruction, I should draw it due north, either astronomically or magnetically; magnetically if there was any variation, and astronomically if there was none.

Attorney-General.—Will the Court have the goodness to take that down? How, Sir, would a line drawn due west from the Portage des Rats strike the River Mississippi?

Mr. Sax.—A line drawn due west from the Portage Des Rats would never strike it at all.

Chief Justice Sewell.—What line are you speaking of now—the American line?

40 Attorney-General.—Yes; your Honour. Well, but if a line was drawn from Portage des Rats, any way, to the Mississippi, would it in its passage strike the lake or River Winnipic, or how would it leave them?

Mr. Sax.—A line drawn from Portage des Rats to the River Mississippi would leave the whole of the River Winnipic to the north-west of such a line.

Chief Justice Sewell.—But Portage des Rats is not the point of departure; it is "the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods" which we want.

Attorney-General.—The most north-western corner of the Lake of the Woods is Portage des Rats. Do not the English and American maps agree in that particular?

Mr. Sax.—Yes; they both make that the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods; and a line drawn from there to the Mississippi would leave both the lake and River Winnipic entirely to the north-west of it.

Attorney-General.—And if a line were drawn due west, as the Americans contend it ought to be, would the effect be the same?

Mr. Sax.—Yes; a line drawn due west would leave the whole of the River Winnipic to the north-west.

[Mellish's Map of the United States produced by the Attorney-General.]

Attorney-General.—Are you acquainted with the map which Mr. Mellish has published, under the auspices of the Government of the United States? Look at it, if you please, and tell the Court and the gentlemen of the jury how it lays down the Portage des Rats or the River Winnipic.

Mr. Sax.—The map leaves it wholly to the north-west, excepting perhaps a particular elbow, where the River runs into the Lake of the Woods.

Attorney-General.—It must be so entirely, for if not, you do not draw your line correctly after the statute; it must be from the dead water of the lake you start, or you take your departure from a river.

Mr. Sax.—It may be and actually is the proper point of departure, at the very point where the two join. And that is in conformity with the best charts or maps, both English and American.

Attorney-General.—Will your Honour please to take that down?

Cross-examined by Mr. Vallière de St. Réal.

Mr. Sax.—I have seen many charts and maps, and it is from them I derive my knowledge of the latitudes and longitudes of which I spoke. The maps of Jefferys and Bouchette, I believe, agree, and in these maps the western limit of the old Province of Quebec runs from the junction of the Ohio and the Mississippi, following the Mississippi until its source, which is called Turtle Lake, in latitude $47^{\circ} 38'$ north, and longitude 94° , or more correctly, 95° west.

Mr. Vallière de St. Réal.—Of Greenwich?

Mr. Sax.—Yes, west from Greenwich.

Mr. Justice Bowen.—What did you say was the latitude?

Mr. Sax.— $47^{\circ} 38'$ north.

Chief Justice Sewell.—Do I understand you right, Sir, when I take you to say that the head of the 30 Mississippi in Turtle Lake has about $47^{\circ} 38'$ northern latitude, and about 95° western longitude, calculating it from the meridian of Greenwich?

Mr. Sax.—Yes, that is about the latitude and longitude.

Mr. Justice Bowen.—From whence does the line go?

Mr. Vallière de St. Réal.—Northward or due north, is it?

Attorney-General.—I beg my learned friend will permit the Court to put their own questions as they think proper.

Chief Justice Sewell.—You are certainly right. The Court can have no desire but that which is common to all parties—that of obtaining truly and correctly the facts of the case, and if, Mr. Vallière, the Court does not obtain thereby the information you think important to obtain, you can extract it 40 yourself. Our question does not deprive you of your right of cross-examination. How does the line run?

Mr. Sax.—From the source of the River Mississippi it runs by a line due north to Hudson's Bay. It is thus drawn in Bouchette's map—it stops in Jeffery's map at Turtle Lake—and consequently it will leave the source (beginning) of the Lake of the Woods to the east of such a line, and the Dalles is also to the east.

Mr. Vallière de St. Réal.—You only know that from maps, I believe; you were never there, I imagine?

Mr. Sax.—I was never there; it is only from maps that I speak.

Mr. Vallière de St. Réal.—I have done with Mr. Sax.

Attorney-General.—Respecting these maps—what nation does Jefferys belong to?

Mr. Sax.—Jefferys is an English author or geographer.

Mr. Vallière de St. Réal.—I wish that to be taken down.

Attorney-General.—Where was his map published?

Mr. Sax.—I do not know; it does not mention on the map.

MR. JOSEPH BOUCHETTE, JUN., SWORN.

Attorney-General.—You, Sir, are, I believe, Deputy Surveyor-General of this Province, and can you give us the western line of Upper Canada?

Mr. Bouchette.—I am Deputy Surveyor-General of this Province. The western limit of Upper Canada is a line running due north from the junction of the Rivers Ohio and Mississippi to the southern limits of the Bay of Fundy.

Attorney-General.—Not Fundy, I believe?

Mr. Bouchette.—No, Hudson's Bay; and the latitude of the junction of those rivers is 37° 10' north, and the longitude is 88° 58' west from the meridian of Greenwich; and this line will leave the whole of the River Winnipic to the west. The Portage des Rats is in latitude 49° 51' north, and longitude 94° 10' west from Greenwich. The evidence.

Attorney-General.—Do you know the Dalles?

Mr. Bouchette.—I have discovered it laid down in Arrowsmith's chart, as being about twelve miles above, that is further north than Portage des Rats. The place called the Dalles is twelve miles to the north of Portage des Rats, according to Arrowsmith. The most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods is in latitude 49° 28' north, and longitude 94° 25' west from Greenwich.

Attorney-General.—How would a line drawn from there to the Mississippi leave the Winnipic, as it relates to the United States of America?

Mr. Bouchette.—It would leave the whole of the River Winnipic to the north, and consequently out of the limits of the United States of America; it would leave the head of the Mississippi to the south.

Attorney-General.—Yes, but I want the Winnipic only; and also tell us what would be the effect of a line drawn due west from the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods?

Mr. Bouchette.—A line running from the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods to any part of the River Mississippi will leave the whole of the River Winnipic to the north, and the same thing will happen if a line be drawn due west; and consequently that river is without the boundaries of the United States of America.

Attorney-General.—Now, Sir, you say you know the Dalles?

Mr. Bouchette.—According to Mr. Arrowsmith's map, they are four leagues to the north of Portage des Rats, and consequently not within the United States.

Chief Justice Sewell.—The Dalles, are they on the Winnipic?

Mr. Bouchette.—Yes; to the north of the Lake of the Woods, and also of Portage des Rats.

Cross-examined by Mr. Stuart.

Mr. Stuart.—What age are you, Sir?

Mr. Bouchette.—I am nineteen years old.

Mr. Stuart.—I observe you have a map before you; what map is it?

Mr. Bouchette.—It is the map lately published by my father, the Surveyor-General.

Mr. Stuart.—I believe you never were at any of these places beyond Upper Canada, or at the mouth of the Ohio, or ever out of Lower Canada; never I believe in the United States?

The De Rein-

1818:

Mr. Bouchette.—I never was at the mouth of the River Ohio, nor at the Lake of the Woods, nor at the River Winnipic; I have been out of Lower Canada, and in the United States, but not in that part. My sole knowledge of the latitudes and longitudes is derived from my father's map now before me, and Mr. Arrowsmith's, published in 1795.

Mr. Stuart.—You have spoken of a line as being the boundary of Upper Canada. Does it appear upon your father's map?

Mr. Bouchette.—The green line upon the manuscript map before me prolonged from longitude 88° 58' west and running due north, was copied from a map by Emanuel Bowen, in 1775, at London. It runs due north from the confluence of the rivers. In other maps the western limit of Upper Canada is drawn as running from the mouth of the River Ohio in the Mississippi until its source in Turtle Lake. 10

Mr. Stuart.—Here is a purple line, what does that show?

Mr. Bouchette.—That is principally for a heading to the map; it is, however, copied from some map, but I do not recollect of what geography.

Mr. Stuart.—I observe another line, but I hardly know what colour to call it (though blue I believe) as marking some boundary.

Mr. Bouchette.—It is a line denoting the boundary fixed by the Treaty of Utrecht, and is taken also from Emanuel Bowen, and there is also a line in the map taken from Bennett's, being the boundary of the Hudson's Bay territory.

Mr. Stuart.—I imagine, Sir, you know nothing of the correctness of any line under the Treaty of Utrecht. 20

Mr. Bouchette.—No, I have read the treaty, that is all.

Mr. Stuart.—The same I presume, with respect to the Hudson's Bay territory?

Mr. Bouchette.—Yes, certainly; I never was there.

Attorney-General.—I really do not see what we have to do with the Hudson's Bay territory or Mr. Bouchette's knowledge of it.

Mr. Stuart.—It may probably appear very immaterial to my learned friend, the Attorney-General, but it is very material to us.

[The map was here handed to the Court].

Mr. Justice Bowen.—From what geographer is the south boundary of the Hudson's Bay taken?

Mr. Bouchette.—From Emanuel Bowen. 30

Chief Justice Sewell.—I thought, and you certainly did say just now, that that line was copied from Bennett.

Mr. Bouchette.—No, Sir, the line from Bennett is the line running from St. Croix River to the high lands, and thence along them.

Chief Justice Sewell.—Here is a line on 49° latitude.

Mr. Bouchette.—That is from Emanuel Bowen also, and drawn by the Commissioners, under the Treaty of Utrecht, and the line coloured violet, is the southern limit of the territory of Hudson's Bay, according to Emanuel Bowen's map.

WM. BACHELOR COLTMAN, ESQ., SWORN.

Attorney-General.—Are you, Sir, a magistrate for the Indian territories, as well as for this District? 40

Mr. Coltman.—I am a magistrate for this District, and a Commissioner in the Indian territory.

Mr. Justice Bowen.—Let the examination be in French, if you please.*

Attorney-General.—Have you been in the Indian territory, and when?

Mr. Coltman.—I have been in the Indian territories; I was there last year.

Attorney-General.—What do you consider the most north-west point of the Lake of the Woods?

Mr. Coltman.—My mind being occupied by the business of my mission, I did not make any particular local observations, but I always understood, and I myself consider, the Portage des Rats to be the most north-western part of the Lake of the Woods, and that also according to what I observed; but I had no opportunity of making exact observations on the spot.

* This was done, but it has been thought sufficient to print here the English translation.

Attorney-General.—You have, no doubt, a knowledge of the River Winnipic. Does it run out of the Lake of the Woods, or into it?

Mr. Coltman.—It is true that the River Winnipic runs out of the Lake of the Woods, and into Lake Winnipic.

Attorney-General.—What is the distance between them?

Mr. Coltman.—I cannot say exactly.

Attorney-General.—Not exactly; but how many leagues do you think; twenty or thirty?

10 Mr. Coltman.—I think about one hundred leagues; probably from eighty to a hundred leagues.

Attorney-General.—What is the general course of the River Winnipic?

Mr. Coltman.—The general course of the River Winnipic is north-west, or about that course; but it is necessary that I should repeat, that I had no time to make particular observations.

Attorney-General.—Is any part south of a line drawn due west from the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods?

Mr. Coltman.—I think assuredly not. I do not believe that any part of the River Winnipic would be to the south of a line running west from the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods, or at most a very small portion. The evidence.

Attorney-General.—It is hardly necessary to ask you if a line drawn from that point to the Mississippi would leave any part of the Winnipic to the south?

Mr. Coltman.—Without doubt it would not. It is more to the south, and a line running from the Lake of the Woods to the Mississippi will leave the whole of the River Winnipic to the north-west of such a line.

Chief Justice Sewell.—Such a line must necessarily run due south.

Attorney-General.—Do you know a place called the Dalles?

Mr. Coltman.—I do know a place called the Dalles: I passed it twice.

Chief Justice Sewell.—Are the Dalles upon the River Winnipic?

Mr. Coltman.—The spot called the Dalles is part of that river.

Attorney-General.—At what distance are the Dalles from the Portage des Rats?

30 Mr. Coltman.—I cannot say with accuracy, being always accustomed to read whilst travelling in a canoe in the Indian countries; but the places are not very near to each other; they are, I should think, at the distance of two or three hours' march.

Attorney-General.—At what rate, Sir, do you generally travel in the canoes?

Mr. Coltman.—We go just according to the currents we meet with. Our progress is entirely regulated by them, but perhaps generally a league and a half or two leagues per hour.

Chief Justice Sewell.—Then it is perhaps about fourteen miles?

Mr. Coltman.—I should think it more; I should imagine it to be about five or six leagues from Portage des Rats.

40 Mr. Justice Bowen.—To the north, Sir, of Portage des Rats and Lac des Bois?

Mr. Coltman.—It is by a line running to the north with a little westing, and they are distant from five to six leagues, I believe, from Portage des Rats and the Lake of the Woods.

Attorney-General.—Are you, Sir, acquainted with the place where Owen Keveny was killed, or said to be killed?

Mr. Stuart.—I object to that question being put, for, if answered, it could not be made evidence. The place must have a name, and must be identified before any question can be put relative to anything whatever that may be supposed to have occurred there.

Chief Justice Sewell.—It can be a matter of no consequence to put the question; we know enough of this case to know that if the murder was committed at all, it was committed at the Dalles, or very near to them; but you must first establish the fact.

Attorney-General.—For the present I have done with Mr. Coltman, reserving to myself the right hereafter, should it be necessary, to examine Mr. Coltman again.

Chief Justice Sewell.—Certainly, Mr. Attorney-General.

Cross-examined by Mr. Stuart.

Mr. Stuart.—You speak, I think you have said, Mr. Coltman, about the boundaries, and other places you have mentioned in your examination in chief, only from belief?

Mr. Coltman.—I speak about the lines and other places, only from belief.

Chief Justice Sewell.—But from having been there also?

Mr. Stuart.—Yes, your Honour, but Mr. Coltman adds to his having been there, from belief only. Will you give your former answer to the jury, in French, Sir?

The evidence. Mr. Coltman.—I speak only according to my belief, being generally engaged in reading whilst travelling in those parts, and I had not an opportunity of making particular observations in the localities of the River Winnipic.

Mr. Stuart.—Am I to understand you as speaking in the same way, when you say that the 20 Portage des Rats is the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods?

Mr. Coltman.—Yes. I speak according to the same belief, a belief likewise founded upon this circumstance. I was told that it was the most north-western point, and when I passed it I saw nothing that could make me call this in doubt. I was informed that that was the point whence the boundary line ran between the United States of America and the English, agreeably to the treaty of 1783.

Mr. Stuart.—Can you say, Sir, where it was you were told this, or at what time, whether before or after passing it?

Mr. Coltman.—I cannot say, but it was on the passage, or during the time I was in the upper country, that I was informed it was the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods.

Mr. Stuart.—You made no astronomical observations, or any other, so as accurately to ascertain 30 the latitudes and longitudes?

Mr. Coltman.—None whatever; my only observations were those of the eye, in passing accidental remarks.

Chief Justice Sewell.—Then I will add, Sir, "according to my observations, or remarks made in passing."

Mr. Stuart.—Your Honour will remark that my question was not only whether Mr. Coltman made any astronomical observations on the places, but also whether they came under his eye in such a manner as accurately to observe these two places, and Mr. Coltman's answer is in the negative—they did not.

Chief Justice Sewell.—You spoke of Portage des Rats.

Mr. Stuart.—I spoke, or intended to speak, of both places, your Honour, and Mr. Coltman's answer 40 referred to both. Is not Fort William, Sir, reputed generally to be in the Province of Upper Canada?

Mr. Coltman.—Yes; Fort William is usually considered to be in the Province of Upper Canada, and I understand it to be so.

Solicitor-General.—I submit to your Honour, that there is nothing in this case to which this can apply.

Mr. Stuart.—We are not called upon at present to show its application; it is a fact, and therefore evidence.

Solicitor-General.—But I contend that my learned friend, Mr. Stuart, ought to show how he intends to apply evidence, which prima facie has no bearing on the case, before he is entitled to proceed in such a course of examination; I therefore thought it right to check it in the commencement.

Chief Justice Sewell.—All that Mr. Stuart has obtained, is the naked fact that Fort William is, according to general repute, in Upper Canada. Whether any or what use he may propose to make of it, we cannot say; as a fact it is evidence.

Mr. Stuart.—Do not writs issue in the Western District of Upper Canada on that presumption?

Mr. Colman.—The Chief Justice of Upper Canada told me—

Solicitor-General.—You must not tell us that, Mr. Colman.

10 Mr. Stuart.—I will ask you, Sir, is it not a matter of public notoriety, that the processes of the magistrates of the Western District, are issued for offences at Fort William, and executed there?

Mr. Colman.—Yes, it is a matter of notoriety that writs are issued by the magistrates of the Western District of Upper Canada, to be executed at Fort William.

Mr. Stuart.—You have traversed a good deal, Sir, in that country; did you observe any vestiges of French Forts above Fort William in your way to Red River?

Mr. Colman.—I do not recollect that I did; I do not think I did.

Chief Justice Sewell.—Is it worth while to take that?

Mr. Stuart.—No, it is not necessary. I have done with Mr. Colman at present; we propose to examine him on the defence.

SAMUEL GALE, ESQ., SWORN.

Attorney-General.—You have been in the Indian territory, I believe, Sir?

Mr. Gale.—I was in the Indian territory last summer.

Attorney-General.—Did you go down the River Winnipeg?

Mr. Gale.—Yes, I went down the River Winnipeg, from the Lake of the Woods, to within Lake Winnipeg.

Attorney-General.—Do you know the Portage des Rats?

Mr. Gale.—I do know Portage des Rats.

Attorney-General.—What course has the River Winnipeg from Portage des Rats to Lake Winnipeg?

Mr. Gale.—Its course from Portage des Rats to Lake Winnipeg is the same as before, north of north-west.

Chief Justice Sewell.—North, tending a little west.

Mr. Gale.—Yes; nevertheless, less to the west than to the north.

Attorney-General.—Then the whole is north; is it not?

Mr. Gale.—I should not like to speak positively, but I believe that a line drawn from the source (beginning) of the River Winnipeg to Lake Winnipeg, would be to the north of north-west, but, as a lawyer, I would not say that such a line was a north line.

Chief Justice Sewell.—From what we have heard this morning, I should think it would puzzle a dozen lawyers to describe a line.

Attorney-General.—Are you, Sir, acquainted with the Hudson's Bay territory, and its line of separation from the Province of Upper Canada, by maps or any other way?

Mr. Gale.—I have never seen a map in which they were correctly delineated, according to my idea.

Attorney-General.—By the Treaty of Utrecht, was not the boundary established?

Mr. Gale.—I know that by the Treaty of Utrecht no line was given, nor any boundary fixed as to the Hudson's Bay territory south, or on the side of Upper Canada. I have examined that treaty for the purpose of ascertaining. I do not know that any line has been drawn between the territories of Hudson's Bay and Canada in pursuance of the Treaty of Utrecht, and that treaty did not describe a boundary line.

Argument of Counsel—
Mr. Stuart.

Mr. Stuart.—Do you mean, Sir, to say positively that no part of the River Winnipic is in a more southern latitude than Portage des Rats ?

Mr. Gale.—I, perhaps, do not know precisely where it commences. I considered that I entered it at Portage des Rats, and I do not think that any part is more south ; but it may perhaps begin a mile or two before.

Mr. Stuart.—Will you undertake to say positively, one way or the other ?

Mr. Gale.—I should not like to be positive, but I will mention why I think I am correct as to its course. [Intimated to speak French.] I had a small compass before me, and I observed that the general course of the River Winnipic is, as I have said, for a short distance, more north than afterwards, 10

Chief Justice Sewell.—For what distance, Sir, does its progress preserve the more northerly course ?

Mr. Gale.—Perhaps about ten or twelve leagues from the Portage des Rats. The whole course of the river is certainly not due north, but if a line was drawn from its commencement at the one lake to its discharging itself into the other, the course of the river would certainly be more north than any other

THE ARGUMENT.

[The following was the argument on the point on a subsequent day :]—

Mr. Stuart.—In excepting to the jurisdiction of the Court, I beg leave to remark, that the exception is made as an exception by the counsel of the prisoner only. Our opposition does not arise from any apprehension as to the verdict of the jury ultimately being that De Reinhard is innocent ; but we are counsel for the prisoner, and your Honours know that even of technical objections, where the life 20 of a defendant is at stake, it is the duty of his counsel to avail themselves ; and, although they entertain no doubt of the acquittal of the prisoner, in the duty which, as his legal advisers, we have to perform, and a trying and distressing duty it is, we feel ourselves compelled to neglect nothing that, by possibility can lead to his acquittal ; we therefore except to the jurisdiction of the Court ; and as I shall have the honour of being followed by a learned friend with me, who has bestowed considerable time and attention to the subject, I shall trouble the Court very shortly in opening, as I shall have an opportunity of again addressing the Court in reply to the Crown officers. The first objection I shall have the honour to submit is, that the offence charged in the indictment, if committed at all, was not committed in the Indian territory as alleged, but in His Majesty's Province of Upper Canada.

Chief Justice Sewell.—Will you stay one moment. If I understand you correctly, it is a geograph-30 ical objection you make. You argue that the spot, “ en haut des Dalles,” is not in the Indian territory, but in the Province of Upper Canada ?

Mr. Stuart.—That is my proposition, and in support of it, I proceed to remark that the first enactment relative to the management of this portion of His Majesty's Dominions took place in 1763. It is known to all of us, that the conquest of this portion of North America by the British arms took place in 1759 and 1760, but from that period to 1763, nothing was done to provide a government for, or to regulate, this conquered country. In that year (1763) a Province called Quebec was created by Proclamation. The affairs of this territory, notwithstanding the Proclamation of 1763, remained in a very unsettled state till the year 1783, when the whole of the country called Canada was ceded to the English, who have retained possession ever since. According to the most respectable historians, we 40 contend that the portion of country thus ceded was exceedingly extensive, going, agreeably to some writers, as far as the River Ohio. The pretensions of the French, as we gather from history, carried them into countries distant, remote, and, in fact, unconnected altogether with the Province created in 1763. The people of Montreal and Quebec, we shall show, had long traded in those wilds which are now so fancifully called the Hudson's Bay Territory, and from which, after an uninterrupted enjoyment of traffic for ages by the French traders, it is now sought to exclude enterprise and competition. It must be apparent to every one, that after the conquest, this immense tract of country required a government adapted to the change which had taken place in its circumstances by becoming a Province of another nation. Its remote situation from the parent state, rendered it impossible, as well as unad-visible, to legislate hastily for its necessities, but the Parliament proceeded to provide what it stood most in need of. Accordingly, by the 14th of the King, the Province of Quebec was enlarged. And here let me remark that a great deal of the misapprehension which exists on the subject, arises from confounding the Province of Quebec as thus erected and enlarged, with what, under the French régime, was denominated Canada. This Act merely provided a government for a portion of the conquered country, as will immediately appear on referring to history. Adverting to the 14th of the King, the Act of 1774, it will be seen that the country, erected and enlarged thereby into the Province of Quebec, was not commensurate to the country known by the name of Canada as a French colony, and recognized as such by the French and British governments. The object of this legislative provision was to provide a government for that portion of His Majesty's Province whose necessities required it. It was to establish a temporary government for a portion of an immense continent larger than England herself that this Act of the British Parliament provided. As settlers pushed themselves into the settlements of Upper Canada, as civilization extended its stride, it became necessary to adopt a government for the whole, and the interval from 1774 to 1791 afforded time to maturely form a suitable government for the immense territory known as Old Canada.

Chief Justice Sewell.—You are making a small mistake; it was not to provide a government for Old Canada that the Act of 1791 provided, but for the new Province of Quebec.

Mr. Stuart.—I know the Act of 1791 mentions the Province of Quebec, and it speaks also of Canada. The Proclamation issued in consequence of this Act, I contend, must be construed liberally. It must be looked at, not as a deed of property, in which only a minute survey can be taken; we must not look at it like lawyers, in our study; we must not contemplate it as the act of an attorney surrounded by his musty papers and parchments; but we must view it as the Act of great and enlightened statesmen legislating for the population of an immense and distant territory, with whose wants they were acquainted, and whose affections they were desirous of securing by liberal and magnanimous policy. But even looking into this Proclamation strictly and minutely, we shall find this country, where it is alleged the offence was committed, to be strictly and minutely the Province of Upper Canada, agreeably to the Act of 1791, upon which the Proclamation was grounded. This Act, in providing for the more suitable government of the Province, created by the former one of 1774, divided it into two parts, and we think, even in a strict construction of the provisions of that statute, and the Proclamation issued in consequence of it, that, if this offence had been committed at all, it had been committed in the Province of Upper Canada, and consequently beyond the jurisdiction of this Court. But let us look into this Act and Proclamation with a broad, liberal and enlarged disposition, and we must arrive at the same conclusion, that, agreeably to this Act, this country must form a part of the Province of Upper Canada. I am well aware that in the preamble to this Act, the Province of Quebec is adverted to, but the preambles of Acts of Parliament are never looked at as explaining the design of the Legislature, except doubt arises in the construction of the enacting clauses. It is almost superfluous to remark that, for ascertaining the spirit of an Act of Parliament, we must refer to its enacting clauses; if they are clear, there is no necessity for reference to the preamble, which is but an introduction—a sort of preface, setting forth the necessity for legislative provision on the subject of the Act, but not making the provision. On the other hand, I freely admit, if the words of the Act are uncertain, if different constructions may be put on the enacting sections, then we ought to go back to the preamble for the intention of the Legislature; but that should never be done except doubt and uncertainty prevail in the body of the Act. Adopting this sound principle, let us take up the Act we are at this moment considering, and we shall find it so clear that misunderstanding cannot exist for a moment. In the Proclamation issued in consequence of the 31st of the King, cap. 31, we find the boundaries of His Majesty's Province of Upper Canada thus set forth: After a short introduction, stating that His Majesty had thought fit, by and with the advice of His Privy Council, by an Order of Council, to divide his Province of Quebec into two distinct provinces, to be called the Province of Upper Canada, and the Province of Lower Canada, by separating the said line of Provinces according to the following line of division, viz: "To commence at a stone boundary on the north bank of Lake St. Francis, at the cove west of Point au Bodet, in the limit between the Township of Lancaster and the seigneurie of New

Longueuil, running along the said limit in the direction of north, thirty-four degrees West, to the westernmost angle of the said seigneurie of New Longueuil, thence along the north-western boundary of the seigneurie of Vaudreuil, running north, twenty-five degrees East, until it strikes the Ottawas river, to ascend the said river into the Lake Temiscaming, and from the head of the said lake, by a line drawn due north, until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay, including all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada."

Now, what was the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada, we all know. It is that territory conquered by British arms in 1759, and ceded finally in 1763 to the British Crown; it was Canada, recognized as such in treaties of peace, and other most important documents entered into between France and England. This is Canada; the whole of which, after the act of the thirty-first of the King, by the advice of his Privy Council, His Majesty declared it his royal will and pleasure, should form the Province of Upper Canada, with the exception of the comparatively small part situated to the north and east of those boundaries, which constitutes the Province of Lower Canada. The Province of Quebec was quite another thing, and could not have been meant as designating the boundaries of Upper Canada. If that had been intended to form its limits, that is, the limits of the new province, the course was simple and easy: it was to have said, the utmost extent of country commonly known as His Majesty's Province of Quebec; but that is not the case; the boon was not so circumscribed. Let us now, for a moment, examine the fact strictly and minutely, according to rigorous municipal principles, and we shall, I think, arrive at a similar result. His Majesty's Province of Quebec was always defined, whereas Canada was more undefined. Had the Province of Quebec been intended as exhibiting the proposed boundaries of the about-to-be-created province, a word could have sufficed to express His Majesty's pleasure. It would merely have been necessary to have referred to the royal Proclamation of 1763, founded on the Treaty of Paris, in conjunction with the Act of 1774, and we should immediately have known the extent of Upper Canada; but it is manifest that such was not the intention, but that instead of the then Province of Quebec, as established by the Act of 1774, it was intended, as clearly expressed in the Proclamation issued in consequence of the 31st of the King—the Act by which it was constituted a Province—that Upper Canada was to include "all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line" (the line of its boundaries), "to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada." I am fully aware that I may be told that in the preamble of this Act and of the Proclamation, the term "His Majesty's Province of Quebec" is made use of. It is almost unnecessary for me again to remark that the preambles of Acts of Parliament are, in general, loosely and vaguely drawn up, and ought to form no criterion by which to estimate the objects contemplated by the Acts themselves. That this is the case is known to every lawyer and every legislature. It is to the enacting clauses of any statute that we must refer to ascertain with accuracy the provisions of the Act. Adopting this certain rule for our guide here, we have a clear manifestation of the intention of Parliament in the Act of 1791; it was to create two Provinces of Canada, and, in defining the limits of the Upper, it declares that it shall, in a certain direction, include "the utmost extent of the country commonly called"—what?—the Province of Quebec? no; it shall include "the utmost extent of country commonly called and known by the name of Canada;" the utmost extent of that country which, as I have before remarked, was the conquest, of British valour in 1759, by force of arms, and which finally ceded to Britain by the Treaty of Paris, of 1763; of that immense territory which has never, by any treaty, been surrendered, which as it is, and has, from the time of its discovery, as well as its cession, been known as Canada, must be the territory which was intended by this municipal enactment to form the Province of Upper Canada. That being the case (and I think it is the only construction, even in a minute point of view, that can with propriety be given to the statute), we find that the Dalles was strictly within the Province of Upper Canada, consequently out of the jurisdiction of this Court, and the offence charged, if committed at all, is not cognizable under the Act upon which the indictment is founded.

I come now to the more broad and liberal interpretation of the Act, and I shall, as I apprehend, have no difficulty in showing that we can not arrive at any other conclusion. The 14th of the King was evidently intended to provide a temporary government for that part of the newly-acquired terterritory, which stood most in need of it. It was passed at a season of great difficulty, when anxiety and alarm pervaded all classes of society in England relative to the issue of the disputes between the parent state and those of the colonies which she has since acknowledged as the United States of America; at a period when the intercourse between the Province and the mother country was so limited that it could hardly be said to belong to it. Such was the moment in which the Act erecting the Province of Quebec was passed—an Act whose temporary nature may be clearly deduced upon a single reference thereto. This Province was to subsist only, by the Act of 1774, till the King should see fit to alter its limits. In 1791, the situation of affairs relative to this portion of the British possessions was widely different, and the British Parliament proceeded to form a people whose loyalty entitled them to be distinguished, and distinguishing privileges secured to them, by the munificent Act of 1791. Refer to the Acts of 1774 and 1791, and surveying the difference, is it possible for a moment to imagine that the government of 1791 intended only to legislate for a part of Canada? Is it, I would ask, reasonable to consider that the Minister of a great nation such as England,—contemplating an extensive and valuable, though distant territory, belonging alike by conquest and affection to the mother country, and entitled to protection in time of war from its superior strength, in time of peace from its extensive and unequalled trade, entitled to receive and have secured to it the due administration of justice and the unrestricted enjoyment of religious freedom,—is it, I ask, reasonable to suppose that from 1763 to 1791, the great men who presided over the councils of Britain, intended at that period to propose a government for a part of Canada? To suppose so is to suppose they were sleeping at their post. Can it, I ask, be imagined that a Minister could be found so regardless of his duty, so ignorant of the necessities, so insensible to the loyalty, of this country, or so negligent to the interests of his master as, in 1791, to propose a government to a part of Canada? We cannot suppose it; they have not so neglected us. They have given us a government, and a constitution, superior to any on earth, excepting their own, after which it was modelled; a government suited to our necessities and gained by our unshaken and persevering loyalty, when revolution tore our sister provinces from their allegiance, and strove to associate us in the revolt. I ask, then, is it for a moment to be believed, that such magnanimity would be tarnished by these advantages being confirmed to only a part of a people of the same blood, equally brave, loyal, and grateful, and equally standing in need of, and equally entitled to all, these privileges? If any should be found disposed to support by argument a contrary opinion, they ought to be confident, before they make so heavy a charge as is involved therein, that they can substantiate it beyond the power of contradiction. But there is no occasion to apprehend such an argument, for the Proclamation is clear as the noon-day sun upon the subject. It tells us that the Act of 1791 has provided a liberal and equitable, and a permanent Government for the brave, the loyal, and grateful population of an extensive tract of country, within certain latitudes and longitudes, “including all the territory to the westward and southward of a line drawn due north from the head of the Lake Temiscaming until it strikes the boundary of Hudson’s Bay, to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada.” What that country consisted in I have had the honour of submitting to the Court, in the early part of the argument I have had the honour of addressing to the Court. In conclusion, I contend on this part or view of the subject, namely, the broad and liberal construction of the Act of 1791, that by Canada must be meant Canada as known to the French, from whom it was taken, and who, in ceding this part of North America to the British Crown, in 1763, actually, as a part of Canada, ceded the Dalles. Reverting to the whole question, I contend that, whether the Act of 1791 is construed according to strict, rigid, municipal rules, or contemplated with a broad, liberal and statesman-like spirit, the Dalles form a part of His Majesty’s Province of Upper Canada, and if the offence has been committed at all, it has been committed out of the jurisdiction of this Court.

Argument of Counsel—

Mr. Vallière de St. Réal.—May it please the Court; I have the honour to submit that it appears to me that the statute of the fourteenth of the King (upon which the Crown officers rely) must instantly strike the reader as being a temporary Act, and that it never was intended to be a permanent one. It is true that the boundaries were given by this Act to the old Province of Quebec, but these boundaries were only to remain during the King’s pleasure, and his will is clearly made known by the Act of 1791. But the principal objection which my learned brethren, the counsel for the Crown, make to our construction of that Act is this, that in the preamble or title to it, the Province of Quebec is mentioned. But it was well remarked by my learned brother Stuart, that the preamble of an Act is nothing, that it is like the preface of a book, but that we must look at the enacting clauses to discover its spirit. We know that it is necessary in the preamble of one Act to recite the title of the old Act which is amended, and it is perhaps to that circumstance that may be ascribed the introduction of the words, "the Province of Quebec," in the Act of 1791. But that does not signify; it is impossible to consider the Proclamation of the King, or his Order in Council, otherwise than as giving to the Province of Upper Canada, "All the country to the west of a line drawn due north, from the head of Lake Temiscaming to the boundary of Hudson's Bay, which was known as Canada." Let us look at the boundaries and we shall see that the boundary line between the Provinces is this, namely, from "a stone 10 boundary on the north bank of the Lake St. Francis, at the Cove West of Pointe au Bochet, in the limit between the Township of Lancaster and the seignory of New Longueuil, running along the said limit in the direction of north thirty-four degrees West, to the westernmost angle of the said seignory of New Longueuil, thence along the north-western boundary of the seignory of Vaudreuil, running north twenty-five degrees East, until it strikes the Ottawas River, to ascend the said river into Lake Temisaming, and from the head of the same Lake by a line drawn due north until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay, including all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada." I beg to remark that these limits are very well known, and also that they were well known before the Proclamation. My learned brother, Stuart, has well explained the extent of these limits, and he has not taken 20 too wide a purview of them. The words of the Proclamation are very remarkable. After having described the lines which separated the Province of Upper Canada from the Province of Lower Canada it adds, "including," (a very remarkable expression) "including all the territory to the west and south of the said line," (the line drawn due north from the head of Lake Temisaming until it strikes the boundary of Hudson's Bay), "to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada." Let us consider these words, "the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada." The words are not "of the country commonly called or known by the name of the Province of Quebec;" no, not at all; but they say: "by the name of Canada." The question therefore is, what is the utmost extent of the country known as Canada? The Abbé Raynal in his "History of the Indies," speaking of this country, vol. 8, book 17, page 238, says, "the year 1764 30 beheld the rise of a new system. Canada was dismembered of the coast of Labrador, which was added to Newfoundland; of Lake Champlain and the whole tract of land to the south of the 45° of latitude with which New York was augmented; of the immense territory to the westward of Fort Golette and of Lake Nipissim, which was left without a Government; and the remainder, under the designation of the Province of Quebec, was placed under one governor." The description which this respectable historian here gives of the territory thus dismembered gives a correct idea of the country known as Canada. This new system, he says, gave a part of Canada to Newfoundland. New York was increased by another part, namely, the tract to the southward of the 45° of latitude. "The immense territory to the west of Fort Golette and of Lake Nipissim was left without any government," (and as my learned brother Stuart has well maintained, it is this immense territory which the Proclamation of the year 1791 gave to 40 Upper Canada as being a part of the country called or known by the name of Canada) "whilst the remainder" (to wit, of the country known by the name of Canada) "was placed, under the designation of the Province of Quebec, under one governor." I have the honour to submit to your honours, that looking at the words of the Proclamation of 1791, and comparing them with this description of the Abbé Raynal, of the territory left without any government, we shall find it to be the country which, by this Proclamation, it was proposed to make a part of Upper Canada, at the time when it was declared that the line should be "drawn from the head of Lake Temisaming due north until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay," and moreover, "including all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada." This territory was then known by the name of Canada, it is situated 50 to the westward of that line, and therefore it proves to be a part of Upper Canada. Again I beg the attention of the Court to the work of Mr. Pinkerton, a well-known English geographer. This distinguished author, speaking of the extent of Canada, gives very large bounds to it; vol. 3rd, page 234, he says: "This country" (Canada) "is computed to extend from the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Isle of Anticosti, in the east, to the Lake of Winnipeg in the west, or from longitude 64° to 97° west from London: 33°, which, in that latitude, may be about 1,200 geographical miles. The breadth from the Lake of Erie in the south or latitude 43°, may extend to latitude 49°, or 360 geographical miles, but the medial breadth is not above 200." So far he speaks of the absolute geographical extent of Canada; the subsequent observation which he makes, relative to the original population of the country, strongly supports the argument which we have the honour to submit to the Court, viz.—that this country described by the Abbè Raynal as "l'immense territoire qui fut laissè sans aucun gouvernement," is the very country intended by the Proclamation of 1791, to receive a government and become a part of Upper Canada. "The original population," (says Mr Pinkerton,) "consisted of several savage tribes, whose names and manners may be traced in the early French accounts, which may also be consulted for the progressive discovery, the first settlement being in Quebec in 1608. During a century and a half that the French possessed Canada, they made many discoveries towards the west, and Lahontan, in the end of the 17th century, has given a tolerable account of some lakes beyond that called Superior, and of the River Missouri. Quebec being conquered by Wolfe, in 1759, Canada was ceded to Great Britain by the Treaty of Paris, in 1763." I therefore confidently submit that this western territory which had been discovered by the French, and is described by Lahontan, and other writers, under the name of Canada, became in reality a part of Upper Canada by the Proclamation of 1791, and consequently does not form a part of the Indian territory, nor is it within the jurisdiction of this Court. The Abbè Raynal and Mr. Pinkerton agree in their description of the western boundary of Canada, and for the southern boundary of Canada let us again look at the Abbè Raynal's work. This writer, in the same volume of his "History of the Indies," treating of the extent, soil and climate of Louisiana, says (book xvi., page 111);—"Louisiana is a vast country, bounded on the south by the sea, on the east by Florida and Carolina, on the west by New Mexico, and on the north by Canada, and by unknown lands which may extend to Hudson's Bay. It is not possible to fix its length with precision, but its medium breadth is 200 leagues." Here we see that the northern limit of Louisiana is Canada and unknown lands, which may extend to Hudson's Bay. With the Proclamation of 1791 before our eyes, which tells us that the boundaries of Upper Canada include the whole of the country to the west and south known under the name of Canada to the utmost extent of that country, it is impossible to say but that that country which bounds Louisiana to the northward according to the Abbè Raynal, must at this moment form, in conformity with that Proclamation, a part of Upper Canada. The country known as Canada extends to the south as far as Louisiana, and to the west as far as the 97° of longitude. There remains now for us to consider the northern limits of Canada, and here we have not the same certainty. In the maps of New France, it is true that the whole of the River Winnipie is included in it, and the northern boundary line is drawn in conformity with the interpretation of the limits of Canada which we have submitted to the Court. To prove that this interpretation is a correct one, and that it in effect agrees with the limits of Canada as they were known to the French Government, I will take the liberty of praying the attention of the Court to what we look upon as a very strong authority. It is an Act of the Duke of Ventadour, dated in 1625, and will be found in the "Edicts and Ordinances," vol. 2, page 11, under the title of "Commission of Commandant in New France, of the 15th February, 1625, by his Grace the Duke of Ventadour, who was Viceroy of the country, in favor of the Sieur de Champlain." This instrument begins by reciting other patents of Commission obtained by him, and proceeds in the 12th page, to declare in the most precise manner, the view taken by the Government of France, of the extent of this part of their possessions. This instrument will support the position that the territory which the French knew as being called by the name of Canada, to the south and west of the line so frequently mentioned in the course of my speech, proves to be ordered, by the King's Proclamation of 1791, to make, and that it will be found actually to make part of his Province of Upper Canada "as far as the utmost extent of that country." Let us look at this Act, and we shall perceive from it, that the most extended powers were given to the Sieur de Champlain, powers which, it must also be maintained, did not at the time awaken any doubts as to the right which France had to grant them, nor any impediment to their exercise, on the part of any other nation. first place, ordains and deputed, "The Sieur de Champlain, our Lieutenant, to represent our person in the country of New France, and to that effect, we have ordered him to go and reside with all his people at the place called Quebec, being within the River St. Lawrence, otherwise called the great river of Canada, in the said country of New France." Now, we will look at the powers which were granted by this Commission: "and in the said place, and in other places which the said Sieur de Champlain may think fit, to cause to be erected, and built, such forts and fortresses as may be wanted, and necessary to him for the preservation of his people, which fort or forts he shall keep for us in his power, in order, at the said place of Quebec, and other places and stations within the extent of our said power (vice-royalty), as much and as far as may be, to establish, extend and make known the name, power and authority of His Majesty, and in the premises to conquer, subject, and bring to obedience all the people of the said country, and of the circumjacent countries, and by means thereof, and of other lawful means, to call them, cause them to be instructed, excited, and moved towards the knowledge and service of God, and of the Catholic, Apostolic, and Roman religion; to establish it there, and in the exercise and profession thereof to maintain, guard, and keep the same places, under the obedience and authority of his said Majesty; and in order to have regard thereunto, and more surely to fulfil the same, we have in virtue of our said authority (vice-regal) permitted to the said Sieur de Champlain, to commission, appoint and substitute such captains and lieutenants for us as need may be, and in the like manner to commission officers for the distribution of justice, and the observance of the police regulations and ordinances, until by us otherwise may be provided; to treat for and contract, to the same effect, peace, alliances, confederations, good friendship, correspondence and communication with the said people and their princes or others having the command over them; to maintain, observe, and carefully keep, the treaties and alliances which he may enter into with them, provided that they fulfil the same on their parts, and in default thereof to make open war upon them, to constrain them, and bring them to such terms as he shall deem requisite for the honour, the obedience, and the service of God, and the establishment, maintenance, and preservation of the authority of his said Majesty amongst them; at least, to reside amongst, haunt, and frequent them, in all safety, freedom, frequentation and communication; to trade and traffic amiceably and peaceably; for that purpose to cause to be made discoveries in the said countries, and specially from the said place of Quebec, until as far as he may be able to penetrate beyond the same, within the lands and rivers which discharge themselves into the River St. Lawrence, in order to endeavour to discover a convenient way to go through the said country into the Kingdom of China and the East Indies." Here may it please your Honours, we hold powers the most extensive, granted by the Government of France for all the objects which might require attention; to make peace or war; to spread the name, power, and authority of the King of France over a country, the bounds of which were not exactly known to themselves; to establish religion; to commission and in the like manner establish military and civil officers; to treat for and contract peace, alliances, and good friendship with other nations and their princes, and on their being in default thereof, to wage open war against them. In fine, powers are granted by this Commission which would not have been granted unless by a government which, by the law of nations, was entitled to grant them. These powers extend over all the lands and rivers which discharge themselves into the River St. Lawrence. Assuredly the river Winnipic does not discharge itself into that river, but by the old maps that river (Winnipic) is situated within the country known to the French as Canada. After this proof of what was at the time considered as the territories of France by herself, it is only necessary to inquire whether the possession thereof was actually held by that kingdom. The species of possession, which the law of nations admits as a proof of actual sovereignty, will equally appear to be maintained. We see that by this commission, power is given to cause to be erected and built such forts and fortresses as may be wanting and necessary to him, the Sieur de Champlain; now forts and fortresses were erected, and to this day there are ruins of French forts remaining in that country which incontestably prove actual possession. We therefore now take up this position; that, neither at the time of the actual possession of the country by the French, nor since its conquest by the English, have the boundaries of Canada been actually defined. In support of this position, which is especially true as regards the northern limits, I submit that Charlevoix, the Abbé Raynal, Mr. Pinkerton, and all authors agree in representing that the boundaries of Canada under the French régime were not positively fixed or known. As an authority for saying that they are not fixed even at the present time, I produce the Topography of Mr. Bouchette, the Surveyor-General of this Province, who has bestowed great attention to everything that is interesting on this subject. I flatter myself that his work must be esteemed very strong authority. Mr. Bouchette, speaking of Upper Canada, says, page 590 of his Topography, "on the west and north-west no limits have been assigned to it." I pray the particular attention of the Court to the expression "no limits have been assigned to it; therefore it may be supposed to extend over the vast regions that spread towards the Pacific and the Northern Oceans. The separation between it and the United States is so vague and ill-defined, and the prolific source of so many disagreements between the two powers, that it has long called for the revision which is now about to be performed in fulfilment of the fourth and fifth articles of the Treaty of Peace of 1815." Here we have the declaration of the Surveyor-General of this Province, that on the west and north-west no limits have been assigned to the country called Canada. Mr. Bouchette speaks of the Proclamation of 1791, but this is his opinion. In case there are no precise limits fixed, we must inquire how those who were contemporaries, and who had a knowledge of the country—how the geographers of those days understood the matter. Let us look at the maps and we shall find that the whole of the River Winnipeg is delineated as belonging to Canada. When Mr. Bouchette, speaking of this country in his Topography, says that it has no limits assigned to it, and adds, "therefore it may be supposed to extend over the vast regions that spread towards the Pacific and the Northern Oceans," it is very certain, as it appears to me, that he alludes to the Proclamation of 1791, which bestows the whole country, to its utmost extent, commonly called or known by the name of Canada, upon the Province of Upper Canada. The Indian Territories are to the north of a line drawn as above, because the whole of the country to the south and to the west is within Upper Canada. The only point to consider seems to me to be this: that the Proclamation of 1791 did not give the boundary of the Province of Quebec for the limits of the two Provinces, but, that, in the actual words of the Proclamation the limits of Upper Canada extend on the one side from the head of the Lake Teniseaming by a line drawn due north until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay, including all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line, to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada.

By Fort Bourbon and Fort Dauphin, and by many other circumstances, it is also beyond a doubt that the country where the Dalles are situated was in possession of the French, and, as we say, and as I hope, we have proved by the maps and by enlightened authors (with whom the Surveyor-General of this Province agrees) the country to the southward and westward was called and known by the name of Canada. In conclusion, I say the French knew the country as Canada, and that nothing to the contrary can be brought forward, and moreover, that if we do not produce positive evidence that the Dalles are within the limits of Upper Canada, we have proved that no fixed limits have been assigned to it, and, by the same authority (an authority well entitled to respect on account of the official situation held by the writer), that it is considered to extend over the vast regions to the west and north-west. It is for your Honours to decide whether the Dalles are within it or not.

Attorney-General.—The point before the Court appears to me to be so clear that it is almost unnecessary to argue it. A great deal of learning has been produced, and much ingenuity exercised by my learned friends to prove the point with which they set out, viz., that if the offence alleged in the indictment to have been perpetrated, and that by the prisoner at the bar, has been committed at all, it must have been in the Province of Upper Canada, and consequently out of the jurisdiction of this Court. In support of this position, a variety of arguments have been resorted to, and numerous authors have been referred to. Fortunately for us, standing in a Court of law, there is positive law upon the subject; there is, therefore, no occasion to have recourse to the Abbé Raynal, or to Charlevoix, or any other of the speculative writers (writers, at the same time, for whom I entertain great respect), to whom my learned friend who last addressed the Court has referred as furnishing authorities upon the question. It is our advantage that, in this case, without referring to authors who, however respectable they may be, were exposed to the too common failing of endeavouring to secure the favour of their respective Governments. I do not intend to throw the slightest imputation on the veracity of the very eminent writers whose opinions and arguments have been with so much ability brought forward, but merely to state that reference to them is completely unnecessary, as we have positive Acts of the British Parliament to guide both the examination and decision of the question. But we do not differ at all with our learned friends as to the extent of territory formerly claimed by the French, and which, undoubtedly, came into the possession of the British Crown at the Treaty of Paris of 1763; but all we submit to the Court is, that the whole of the French possessions did not constitute Canada, but that the country known by the name of Canada was much more circumscribed in its extent than my learned friends have described (and, I doubt not, very accurately, too,) the old French possessions to have been. The argument of my learned friend who opened this question is, that in construing this and every other Act of Parliament, we should proceed in a liberal and statesmanlike manner to apply its provisions. If we trace the movements of the British Government, we shall see the impossibility of that construction, which my learned friends contend for, being admitted to be correct. In 1760 these colonies were conquered and capitulated to the British forces. By the Treaty of Paris, 1763, the whole conquest was finally ceded to His Majesty. In 1763 a part of this conquest was, by Proclamation, erected into a Province, denominated the Province of Quebec. By the Act of 1774, the Province of Quebec was enlarged. By the Treaty of Peace with the United States of America, the situation and boundaries between the late Colonies and Province of Quebec and other of His Majesty's dominions in North America were clearly defined, and in 1791 this series of legislative and diplomatic measures were completed by His Majesty dividing his then Province of Quebec into his two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. Let us for a moment look at what the Act of 1791 proposes to effect, and everything like difficulty disappears in a moment. It was to divide a large Province, namely, that of Quebec, into two small ones, to be called Upper and Lower Canada: and consequently the boundaries of these two Provinces could only be commensurate to that of Quebec and Upper Canada must be a part of the former Province, and of that only; otherwise the Act, instead of being an Act to divide the Province of Quebec, ought to have been denominated an Act to enlarge its boundaries, and from its extended limits to form the two Provinces therein created. The error of my learned friend is this: that because Canada happens to be mentioned, therefore the avowed object of the Act, viz, that of dividing the Province of Quebec, must be abandoned, or give place to what my learned friend calls the broad and enlightened policy of providing a government for the whole of His Majesty's dominions in North America. I again take up the Act, and looking at its title, I find it to be an Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the 14th year of His Majesty's reign, entitled an Act for making more effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec in North America. What the Province of Quebec comprehended is as well known as the limits of this room. The Act of the 14th of the King, commonly called the Quebec Act, defines them precisely, and how then did this Act of 1791 amend that of 1774? Why, His Majesty having been pleased to signify by Message to both Houses of Parliament his royal intention to divide his Province of Quebec into two Provinces, it was enacted by this statute that it should be so divided, and that two Provinces should be created. If my learned friend's observations are correct, then the 14th of the King amounts to nothing, because, though the Act of 1791 is professedly an Act to amend, not to repeal, the Act of 1774, still it is indispensable to a correct interpretation of the Act to divide the Province of Quebec, (according to my learned friend's doctrine,) that you add a very considerable territory to it—a mode of division I confess I am not acquainted with. The Act being to divide the Province of Quebec, I contend that the limits of the two Provinces must be found in those which constitute the Province out of which they were formed, and that whilst on the one hand they must be commensurate to those limits, so on the other hand they cannot exceed them; that more cannot be included in the two than in the one Province; and, that being the case, the Province of Upper Canada can consist only of that part of the former Province of Quebec which does not form the Province of Lower Canada. This proposition I consider so clear—that a Province, any more than anything else, cannot comprehend or contain more when divided into two Provinces than it did when a whole—that I should feel myself very unjustifiably taking up the time of the Court were I to pursue the argument further: If any other construction is to be given to the Act, then the 14th of the King, defining the Province of Quebec, amounts to nothing, and the Act of the 31st, instead of being an Act to divide, is in reality an Act to enlarge the Province of Quebec under the new title of Upper and Lower Canada.

Solicitor-General.—I consider the point so extremely plain, that it is not only wasting, but almost trifling with, the time of the Court, seriously to argue whether the division of a Province into two parts can, by any possibility, be construed to mean the addition thereto of a vast and almost (according as my learned friends contend) immeasurable territory. In support of this apparently most novel and extraordinary proposition, my learned friend, Stuart, contends that the expression in the designation of the boundaries, "the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada," is conclusive that it was in this manner that His Majesty intended to divide the Province of Quebec. The enquiry, and the only enquiry upon the subject, appears to me to be one extremely easy of decision. It is simply whether that one sentence is to preclude or set aside the whole of the first clause of the Act in which the intention of His Majesty and Parliament is so clearly expressed. The Act of 1791, after reciting the title of the fourteenth of the King, assigns the reason which induced the Legislature to pass the Act for the internal regulation of the two separate Provinces, which His Majesty had signified his royal intention of forming, by the division of his then Province of Quebec, namely, "that the said Act is, in many respects, inapplicable to the present condition and circumstances of the said Province, and that it was expedient and necessary that further provision should now be made for the good government and prosperity thereof." It is not said that it is necessary or expedient to enlarge the said Province of Quebec but that further provision should be made for the good government thereof; of it, as it thus stood: of that Province which had, by Proclamation, been created in 1763 and whose limits have been extended to what they then were by the Act of the 14th of the King, commonly called the Quebec Act. My learned friend must most surely be driven to the last state of despair, when he sets up a loose expression in a declaratory Act which he well knows is the weakest of all Acts of the Crown, in affording a just ground or foundation for such an opinion. I know that it is not to the preamble of an Act of Parliament that we generally must look for a clear exposition of its objects; but, whilst I admit the correctness of that position, I would also remind my learned friend, that there is a wide difference between the enacting and declaratory clauses of a Statute, and that we ought not to set aside the obvious meaning, and overturn the avowed intention of an Act of Parliament because of a loose expression in the declaratory clause. I cannot think so meanly of the whole French nation as to suppose they ever claimed these territories and wildernesses, as belonging to or forming a part of Canada. As to the authorities my learned friend who spoke second has advanced, they cannot, in a court of law be styled authorities. I have a very great respect for the Abbé Raynal, but his work is merely speculative and philosophical, and is no geographical authority upon a question of territory; the same remark will apply to Pinkerton,—we all esteem it as a very useful work, but it forms no geographical authority in a court. Upon the whole, I contend, with the Attorney-General, that the former Province of Quebec, must be found in the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and that no more can be included in them than what was contained in that Province; for the Act by which they were created into Provinces was nothing more but an Act to divide it into two parts thereafter to be designated Upper and Lower Canada. Again, the learned gentlemen say, that all to the south and west of this line, from Temiscaming Lake to Hudson's Bay, must be esteemed Canada; what then was the use of this Act of the forty-third of the King? The Legislature, if my learned friends' argument was correct, were idly passing an Act that could have no object. Instead of Indian territories it is all Upper Canada, according to my learned friends' statement. But it is a position completely untenable for a moment. Upper Canada extends no farther south and west than the Province of Quebec did, any more than does Lower Canada to the north and east. In the two Provinces are now to be found that which before the separation constituted the Province of Quebec, and Upper Canada consists of that part, and of that part thereof only, which is south and west of the Province of Lower Canada. I refrain from enlarging, confident that, in the view we take of the subject, we are correctly construing the intention of the Legislature, and that we shall have our own opinion strengthened and confirmed by your Honours' decision.

Mr. Stuart.—I confess I look in vain for those grounds of confidence on which my learned friends rely. If supporting their opinions by confident assertions entitle them to expect the result they anticipate, they have certainly gone a good way towards obtaining it; but I look in vain for anything that can be called argument upon the question that is now before the Court, in the observations that have been submitted by the officers of the Crown. If there was anything that demanded attention, it was the remark of my learned friend the Solicitor-General, on the Act of the 43rd of the King; but in that the learned gentleman has made a mistake; for if my learned friend referred to the chart, he would perceive that nine-tenths of the whole Indian territories, according to the description of them, lie beyond the boundary which we claim as that given to the Upper Canada by the Act of 1791. If my learned friend traced the parallel of 52° he would perceive that nearly the whole of the North-West Company's stations, and the whole of those of the Hudson's Bay Company, are to the north of that line. Then surely it is obvious that this was not an Act without an object. It was an Act to extend the jurisdiction of the Provincial Courts to the trial and punishment of offences committed in the Indian territories, and they are to be found in the immense and almost boundless wilderness to the north and the west of the Province of Upper Canada, as established by the Act of 1791. The Act of the 14th of the King was obviously temporary; the Proclamation of 1791, defining the boundaries of the two Provinces—and which, I must confess, I was extremely surprised to hear so slightly spoken of by the Crown officers—was founded upon an act of a very different description. The former was merely a temporary, whilst this was a permanent, Act.

Mr. Justice Bowen.—From what part of the Act of 1774 do you conclude that it was only a temporary Act? I see no part of it that warrants such a conclusion, except with reference to the last clause.

Argument of Counsel—
Mr. Stuart.

Mr. Stuart.—The words there made use of are general, and, as I conceive, must be understood to refer to the whole of the Act. I mean, however, independently to contend that the time at which that Act was passed, and the situation of England with reference to her American Colonies, concur to show that this Act was merely temporary. But it is needless to refer to the Act of 1774, as it does not bear upon the case, being completely done away with by the broad and liberal Proclamation of 1791. That Proclamation created two Provinces. I am surprised that the Crown officers should treat so lightly His Majesty's Proclamation; it is certainly not the quarter from which we should expect it. How was the Province of Quebec created? By Proclamation—and surely my learned friends will allow as much weight to one of His Majesty's Proclamations as to another. They will not deny the same power to His Majesty in 1791 which he exercised in 1765 [1763?]. If Proclamations are such weak acts, what are we to think of the Proclamation that has been put in evidence on the present trial and has been resorted to upon all occasions as the justification for all the apparent aggressions which have marked the progress of these unfortunate disputes? But I differ in opinion with my learned friends on that point; if, in 1763 His Majesty could create a Province by Proclamation, he, in 1791, could divide and enlarge a Province in the same way. This he has been pleased to do, and all we have to do with this expression of the royal will and pleasure is, to adopt it as the rule by which we are to be governed in considering and deciding the question of jurisdiction now before the Court; and we contend that, looking at this Proclamation, it is impossible to say that this offence, if committed at all, was committed within the jurisdiction of this Court, being perpetrated at the Dalles, which form a part of His Majesty's Province of Upper Canada, as created by his Royal Proclamation of 1791.

Friday, 29th May, 1818.

Chief Justice
Sewell.

Chief Justice Sewell.—The Court are most distinctly of opinion, on referring both to the Act of 1791 and that of 1774, that the argument on the defence must fail. What was the object of each Act? Amongst others, that of 1774 was to enlarge the Province of Quebec, which had been created in 1763. That of 1791 was to separate or divide the Province of Quebec into two Provinces, to be denominated Upper and Lower Canada, and make each respectively independent of the other, by giving a Legislature to each respectively, but still retaining between or within the two Provinces, the same extent of country, the same space as the one Province contained. What is the Act? What is its object, its avowed object? To repeal certain parts of the Act of 1774; and what is the part repealed? It is that part of it which gives authority to the Council of the Province of Quebec: and what is the reason assigned for so doing? Why, that His Majesty had signified it to be his royal will and pleasure to divide his Province of Quebec. To assert that he intended by this that the limits of the Province should be extended by the separation appears to me repugnant to the plainest principle of common sense, and therefore I cannot assent to it. The short history of the Act of 1791 is briefly this: The King signifies to Parliament his royal intention of dividing his Province of Quebec, and he calls on the Legislature to provide for this alteration by granting an Act adapted to the change. The Legislature pass an Act providing for the due government of the two Provinces, and under the authority of this Act, and the Royal Proclamation, the Province of Quebec was accordingly divided, the Royal Proclamation being an exercise of sovereign authority. His Majesty in that Act, by and with the consent of his Privy Council, declared what should be the line of separation between Upper and Lower Canada, and how much of the former Province of Quebec shall belong to the one, and how much to the other. The object of the Act and the object of the Royal Proclamation are so clearly expressed that we cannot for a moment doubt upon the subject. What says the Act? "His Majesty having been pleased to signify his royal will and pleasure to separate and divide the Province of Quebec." What says the Proclamation?

10 Why, the very same words. To divide the Province of Quebec, not to add to it, any more than to take, away from it. Therefore Upper Canada, in the purview, could include only that part of the Province so divided as was not contained in Lower Canada; but it could not extend beyond those limits which constituted the Province of Quebec, otherwise it would certainly have been an Act to enlarge, rather than an Act to divide. In delivering this opinion I am speaking our unanimous sentiment, for we have consulted our brother Perault upon the subject, and he clearly concurs with us. According to our understanding of the Act and the Royal Proclamation, we are bound to say, that we consider the argument of the gentlemen concerned for the prisoner, though presented with great ability and ingenuity, must fail, because the western boundary of the Province of Upper Canada is "a line drawn due north from the head of Lake Temiscaming till it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay."* The question of fact will remain with the jury; it is they who are to say whether this place, the Dalles, is or is not to the west of the line which we now declare to be the western boundary of His Majesty's Province of Upper Canada. If they are of opinion that it is within, or to the east of this western line, then it is in the Province of Upper Canada, and not within our jurisdiction; but if they are of the opinion that it is to the west of this line, then I am giving you our unanimous opinion when I declare that the Dalles are in the Indian territory, and not within the limits of the Province of Upper or Lower Canada but clearly within the jurisdiction of this Court by the Act 43rd of the King, cap. 138, which extends our power to "the trial and punishment of persons guilty of offences within certain parts of North America."

CHARGE OF CHIEF JUSTICE SEWELL TO THE JURY.

30 GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY: The prisoner at the bar is accused of having killed and murdered Owen Keveney in the Indian Territories. The substance of this long indictment is this, that Charles de Reinhard, the prisoner, and one named Mainville (who is not here), killed him with a gun, or a sword, or both, and that the others, McLellan, Grant, Cadotte and Desmarais, were accomplices, that is to say, that they did, before or at the time of the murder, aid in or advise the same, but at present it is only with De Reinhard that you have to do. The indictment comprehends several counts, which is usual, because the officers of the Crown do not always know to what part of the case they apply, or what proof they are able to produce. The charge is contained, generally, in the eight counts, of which I will give you an abstract. The charge in the first count is, that De Reinhard killed Owen Keveney, with a sword, and that the others were present, that is to say, actually assisted in the murder, or ready to have 40 assisted if it had been necessary.

Before reciting the evidence, it will be necessary to take notice of the authority by which the court possesses the right of judging the prisoner's case. By the statute of 1803, power was given to the Court of Upper Canada and to the Court of Lower Canada, to try and punish those persons who had committed crimes in the Indian Territories, and the statute clearly explains what was meant by the Indian

*A manifest error, probably on the part of the person who prepared the report for the press. It may be presumed that the description of the western boundary given by the Chief Justice on this occasion was in the words which he subsequently employed in describing it in his charge to the jury (p. 445 of the Report), viz. — "La limite ouest du Haut Canada est une ligne tirée vers le nord de la jonction des Rivières Ohio et Mississippi, dans la latitude de 37° 10' nord, et la longitude de 88° 50' ouest." [The western boundary of Upper Canada is a line drawn due north from the junction of the Rivers Ohio and Mississippi, in the latitude of 37° 10' north, and the longitude of 88° 50' west.]

Territories. It says: "Whereas crimes and offences have been committed in the Indian Territories, and " other parts of America not within the limits of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, or either of " them, or of the jurisdiction of any of the courts established in those Provinces, or within the limits of " any civil government of the United States of America, and are therefore not cognizable by any jurisdic" tion whatever, and by reason thereof great crimes and offences have gone, and may hereafter go, unpun-
" ished, and greatly increase. For remedy whereof, may it please your Majesty, that it may be enacted, " and be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the consent and advice of the " Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in the present Parliament assembled, and by the " authority of the same, that from and after the passing of this Act, all offences committed within any " of the Indian Territories, or parts of America, not within the limit of either of the said Provinces of 10
" Upper and Lower Canada, or of any civil government of the United States of America, shall be, and be " deemed to be offences of the same nature, and shall be tried in the same manner, and subject to the same " punishment, as if they had been committed within the Province of Upper or Lower Canada." It is in consequence, absolutely necessary to know whether the place where the death occurred, where the murder was committed, is without the limits of Upper or Lower Canada, or of the United States of America, for if it is without those limits we have the power of trying the prisoner, and on the contrary if it is not so, then we have not the right of trying him. The first question for you, therefore, to determine will be, where was it that Keveney met his death? Not in the Province of Lower Canada certainly. First, Upper Canada, the western boundary of Upper Canada is a line drawn due north from the junction of the rivers Ohio and Mississippi, in the latitude 37° 10' north, and 88° 50' west 20 longitude. I am bound to tell you that it is we who are to decide upon the law, and you who are to judge of the facts, and, according to law, we have heard the arguments of counsel on the subject yesterday, and to-day we decided that the western limit of Upper Canada is such a line, and if the Dalles are to the east of such a line, they are in the Province of Upper Canada, and consequently not within our jurisdiction. Let us now look at the evidence. The first witness on the part of the Crown is Mr. Sax. He said, "I am acquainted with the boundary of the Province of Upper Canada, according to " the map. A line drawn due north from there will cross Lake Superior and will leave Fort " William three-quarters of a degree to the westward. Lake Winnipeg is between the 50th and 51st " degrees of north latitude. The Portage des Rats is in the latitude of 49° 45' north, and longitude
" 94° 6' west. The whole of the River Winnipeg is, at least, five degrees to the west of the line drawn due 30
" north from the mouth of the Ohio." It is, therefore, manifest that a spot which is in the longitude of 94° 6', west, must be much to the westward of the boundary of Upper Canada. There is another witness, Mr. Joseph Bouchette, who says the same thing. "The boundary of the late Province of Quebec is a " line drawn from the mouth of the River Ohio, to the north, unto the boundary of the territory of the " Hudson's Bay Company. The latitude of this mouth is 37° 10' north., and the longitude, 88° 58' west " from Greenwich. The place called the Dalles is upon the River Winnipeg, four leagues beyond, and to " the northwards of Portage des Rats." But that belongs to another part of the evidence. You see that Mr. Bouchette and Mr. Sax entirely agree. There was some other evidence to this point, but perhaps you have no doubt of the Dalles being to the westward of the line of which these gentlemen spoke. If you have any doubt, I will read other evidence to you.

Mr. L. V.—It is not necessary.

Another matter for your consideration is, whether the Dalles are to the north of the line between the United States, and the Province of Upper Canada. It is of importance to ascertain this, because if the spot is to the north of such a line, it is in truth in the Indian Territories, and if it is to the south of such a line, it is in the United States, and consequently not within our jurisdiction. On this point the evidence is equally as strong as on the other. Mr. Bouchette's evidence is as follows:—"The " place which is called the Dalles, is upon the River Winnipeg, four leagues beyond, and to the north of " Portage des Rats, and of the Lake of the Woods, according to Arrowsmith's Map, in latitude 49° 51'
" north, and longitude 94° 10' west." This evidence is most distinct; but I wish now to explain the evidence of Mr. Coltman. He says, "I do not believe that any part of the River Winnipeg will be 50
" found to be to the southward of a line running west from the Lake of the Woods, or, at least only a " very small part, and most certainly a line running from the Lake of the Woods to the River Missis"sippi, will leave the whole of the River Winnipeg to the north-west of such a line. I twice passed the place called the Dalles, which is part of the River Winnipeg. They are from five to six leagues distant from Portage des Rats, and from the Lake of the Woods to the north, tending a little towards the west." Mr. Gale, who was examined after Mr. Coltman, says the same thing, and confirms Mr. Coltman in every particular. This is all the evidence with respect to our jurisdiction, and to the locality of the Dalles, and it proves that the Dalles lie to the west of the boundary of Upper Canada, and to the north of the United States, consequently it is in the country designated in the Act of 1803, as Indian Territories.

OFFICIAL PAPERS RELATING TO THE CASE OF DE REINHARD, 1819-1821.

CASTLE OF ST. LEWIS,

QUEBEC, 17th November, 1819.

MY LORD,—I have the honour to transmit to your Lordship an authenticated record that exhibits the charge, plea, trial and judgment upon the case of De Reinhard. I have endeavoured for several weeks passed to obtain the state of the evidence and proceedings in detail from the Judge's notes, but have not been able to accomplish it. As soon as it may be in my power I shall lose no time in transmitting it, and hope it will be done before the closing of the navigation of the River St. Lawrence.

The DeReinhard case, 1818. Official papers, 1819-21. Mr. Administrator Monk to Earl Bathurst, 17 Nov., 1819.

The Chief Justice assures me that he delivered to Sir John Sherbrooke soon after the trial, about the 18th of July, 1818, a state of the case and proceedings unto the final judgment, for the express purpose of being transmitted to your Lordship, and that he entertained no doubt that the same were soon after transmitted by a vessel from Quebec; but no trace of any such transmission being made appears among the copies of Sir John Sherbrooke's despatches to your Lordship (nor has his late private secretary any knowledge of any such transmission of the trial being made) altho' several copies of despatches from Sir John Sherbrooke are entered in his Copy Book from the 6th of June to the 30th of July, 1818, when Sir John resigned his situation of Governor in Chief, nor is there any trace to be discovered among his private papers left in this country of any such transmission being made to your Lordship.

The miscarriage of that trial is the more to be regretted as your Lordship will perceive that the execution of sentence on De Reinhard was respited over to afford time for your Lordship's directions upon the subject (as I understand) in respect to the Court's competency of jurisdiction.

The commission of Oyer and Terminer was dated the 19th of April, 1818, and has by several adjournments been kept open to this time, where prosecutions are carried on by the Solicitor General.

Your Lordship will perceive from the Judge's notes of the trial that De Reinhard's sentence is further respited by the Court over to the twenty-first day of January next, to which day the said Court is further adjourned, and I must conclude that the execution of the sentence of De Reinhard will be further respited over as it is scarcely possible to receive your Lordship's instructions on the points submitted by that period. I need not express to your Lordship how important it will be that an early determination should be made upon the doubts that have arisen and induced the Court of Oyer and Terminer to suspend the execution of its sentence, as that determination will operate upon future cases, where similar cases may arise.

The record and case of Colin Robertson and others, for a riot and pulling down and destroying houses, etc., accompanies the present dispatch, lest the same (altho' the defendants were acquitted) should prove useful to be laid before your Lordship, which was the only prosecution for crimes and aggressions in the Indian territories that came to issue and trial before the Courts at Montreal.

I have the honour to be,

Your Lordship's most obedient servant,

I. MONK.

Earl Bathurst, K.C., etc., etc., etc.

EXTRACTS FROM CHIEF JUSTICE SEWELL'S CHARGE.

Extracts from C. J.
Sewell's Charge.

The indictment now under trial is founded upon the Act of the forty-third of the King, which extends the jurisdiction of the Courts of Justice of the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, to the trial and punishment of persons guilty of crimes and offences within certain parts of North America adjoining to the said Provinces. In the recent trial we had an opportunity largely to consider the boundaries of Upper Canada, as settled by the statute of 1791. We were called upon then to declare or decide, what was the western boundary of that Province, and, as in duty bound, according to the light we possessed upon the subject, we charged the jury that the western boundary of the Province of Upper Canada was, "a line drawn from the head of Lake Tomisecanning, due north, till it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay,"‡ but also including "all the territory to the westward and southward of such line, to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada;" and we are also clearly of opinion that in so charging the jury, we only gave them as the western boundary of Upper Canada that which formed part of the western boundary of the ancient Province of Quebec. In this opinion the Court are unanimous, for I have consulted my learned brothers who sat with me in the late trials. We also concur in declaring that the western boundary of Canada is a line drawn astronomically "North from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, till it strikes the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay territory," and we consider the point of departure to be in 88° 58' of western longitude. As we, gentlemen, are bound to take from you all decisions upon questions of fact, so you are bound to receive from us decisions upon questions of law. Having given you our decision as to the limits of Upper Canada, and the line of separation between the United States and the two Provinces, it remains only for you to settle one point: are, or are not, the Dalles within those limits? That is a question completely with you. It is a matter of fact, and is exclusively your province to decide. I shall now call your attention to the evidence that has been produced, as it relates to locality, because by that will, indeed I might say must, your judgment be guided, in declaring whether the Dalles are or are not without the lines which separate the United States and the Province of Upper Canada from the Indian territories. Upon this subject, we have first the evidence of Mr. Coltman, who knows and has visited the spot. He tells us that "during the last year he has passed through the Lake of the Woods into the River Winnipic, that the course of that river is northerly, inclining a little west, and that he conceives the Dalles to be from twelve to perhaps twenty miles from the beginning of the river at the Lake of the Woods," and Mr. Coltman also states that "he always considered and understood Portage des Rats to be the north-westernmost point of the Lake of the Woods," and on this part of the question he concludes his evidence by saying, "a due west line from Portage des Rats would leave, as he thinks, the whole of the river Winnipic to the north of it."

- 10 Mr. Bouchette's testimony corroborates that of Mr. Coltman as to the locality of the Dalles, which are therefore stated to be situated from twelve to fifteen leagues (miles) farther north than the boundary line described. We, therefore, think it right to tell you (as we told the jury in the late case), that if, in examining the fact, you find that the Dalles are to the north of a line drawn due west from the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods, then you are bound to say that it is not in the United States of America; for whether such a line would reach the Mississippi or not is of no consequence to this trial, as a line drawn to that river would have just the same effect. It remains only to inquire: Is it within the Province of Upper Canada? As I abstain from reading more evidence than I consider necessary to show, and I presume satisfy you on, the point to which I am directing your attention, upon this branch of the question, involving our jurisdiction, I shall read you the testimony of 20 Mr. Bouchette, which is exceedingly clear as to the locality of the Dalles in reference to Upper Canada. Mr. Bouchette says, "from different authors and maps I am acquainted with the latitude of Portage des Rats. It is in 49° 39' north latitude, and 94° 5' western longitude, calculating from the meridian of Greenwich." He says further, "that the western boundary of Canada is a line drawn astronomically north from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers to the Hudson's Bay territory, and that such a line would leave the Lake of the Woods, and the River Winnipic entirely to the west; about six leagues to the west." You have now, gentlemen, before you, the whole of the evidence on the subject of the jurisdiction, and there can be no manner of doubt, if you credit the testimony, that the Dalles are to the north and west of these lines which we have, as the expositors of the law, felt ourselves bound to tell you, constitute the boundaries of Upper and Lower Canada in relation to each other and to the 30 United States of America. This question will be submitted to the decision of His Majesty in Council, as it is only by His Majesty, with the assistance of his Council, that the boundaries or limits of his territories can be legitimately and permanently defined. The question, however, having been incidentally brought before us, we have been compelled to declare the limits of Upper Canada. As judges of the law we have done that which we could not avoid; and as the same authority which appoints you the sole judges on matters of fact, constitutes us equally so on points of law, we are bound to tell you that our decision upon the law of the case must be your guide; for, if, on the one hand, we are bound to receive your decisions on matters of positive evidence, so on the other, you are equally obligated to adopt our decisions on points of law, as your only guide. If, ultimately, our judgment, or rather decision, should be set aside, by the competent authority, any inconvenience which may result from our 40 erroneous direction will assuredly be obviated, but at present we feel it our duty thus to define the boundary lines: and, comparing our decision with the evidence which I have recapitulated, it is, I think, apparent that the spot, "en haut des Dalles," is from eighteen to twenty miles beyond the American line, and from four to five leagues without the boundary of the Province of Upper Canada. Relative to the Lower Province, it is unnecessary to say anything.

Brown and Boucher, 1818

The Honourable WM. BACHELOR COLTMAN, sworn.

Examined by the Attorney-General.

Mr. Coltman.—I went up into the Indian country in the year 1817, and to the place where the settlement at the Red River was established. I never made any survey of the distance which it was from Lake Winnipie, but I should think that it was about sixty miles, and having about a south bearing from the nearest point, but as to distance I cannot speak so positively. It was situated at the Forks of the Red and Assiniboine Rivers, which I have generally understood to be in about 49° 30' north latitude, and the Red River Settlement commenced at a short distance below the Forks. Its longitude I do not recollect, so as to speak with any degree of certainty, but I should judge it to be in between 90° to 100° of west longitude; my recollection, however, is very imperfect, but I should think it had something more than 90°; it certainly was more than 80°, and according to my recollection and own idea, rather more than 90°. The Red River Settlement was to the west of the River Winnipie, to the south-east of the Lake Manitobah, and between that lake and the River and Lake Winnipie. Upon consideration I should think, according to the best of my recollection, that its longitude must have been nearly 100° west * * *

Cross-examination conducted by Mr. Sherwood.

Evidence of Mr. Coltman.

Mr. Coltman.—I have been at Fort Douglas, and also at the spot where it was represented to me that the affair of the 19th June took place. I did not go farther north into the Indian country than into the Red River country, through the River Winnipie and part of the lake of that name. It is certainly a matter of notoriety that the Red River country was formerly frequented by the French traders, that is, before the conquest by the English; but I do not know whether Nouvelle France was considered as taking in this part of the Indian territory.

Chief Justice.—I am tolerably conversant with maps myself, but not sufficiently so as to say whether this part of the country was or was not a part of Canada. I never understood, extensive as were the limits of what the French called Louisiana, that they spread so far north as this; nor can I say distinctly that it formed a part of Canada. Relative to Nouvelle France, it was never, I believe defined with sufficient accuracy to enable us to say what were its limits. If they have been, it is beyond my knowledge.

Attorney-General.—There is one more question, Mr. Coltman, which I will trouble you with, whether as a magistrate of the Indian territory you acted at Red River in virtue of your commission under the Act of the 43rd Geo. III.

Mr. Coltman.—Yes, it was in prosecution of my duties under the commission that I went into that country, and proceeded to the investigation of the difficulties which had occurred there.

EXTRACTS FROM CHIEF JUSTICE POWELL'S CHARGE.

Chief Justice
Sewell's
Charge.

It only remains that we consider our jurisdiction, connected with locality, to give us a right to try them under the Act upon which they are indicted. The offence must have been committed out of the limits of this Province; whether we have a right or not, I declare I am at a loss to decide. Mr Attorney-General has put in evidence the latitude and longitude of the Frog Plains, but he does not put in the evidence whether this latitude and longitude is without or within the boundaries of Upper Canada, and I do not know whether from 90° to 100° or 150° from the western limit of Upper Canada, nor do I know whether a place at that longitude, and having 49° or 49½° north latitude, is within the Province of Upper Canada or beyond its boundaries.

Attorney-General.—Your Lordships will remember that by the questions which I put to Colonel Coltman, I ascertained the precise situation of the place in which Mr. Semple was killed; that is, I proved it be somewhere between 90° and 100° west longitude, nearer, as Mr. Coltman said, to 100°, and in 49½° north latitude. I proved it to be at the Forks of the Red River, formed by its junction with the Assiniboine, and that it was situated between the River Winnipie and Lake Manitouba, about twenty miles west of the former. I had thus established the situation of the place by immutable boundaries, and I conceive it is for your Lordship to instruct the jury, whether a place so situate, be or be not, without the Provinces of Upper or Lower Canada, and part of the Indian territories. This I conceive to be a matter of law, and not matter of fact, deducible from treaties, acts of parliament and proclamations, a point self-evident, and not depending upon extrinsic testimony.

Your Lordship sees that the opinion of an illiterate, uninformed man upon this point would have been in fact no evidence. Mr. Coltman was the most proper person to interrogate on the subject. I therefore ascertained from him the exact situation of the locus in quo and thus laid the foundation for future discussion, if there appeared to be doubt on the subject of jurisdiction. I also prove by him that, when at the Forks, commissioned to investigate offences that had arisen out of the unhappy differences in that country, he had acted, by virtue of his commission as a magistrate of the Indian territories, and not as a justice of either province of Canada; this showed, at least, his impression. I could push him no 10 further. I could not, my lord, ask Mr. Coltman to swear positively an oath respecting a matter of opinion, which I have reason to know engages at this moment the doubt of many men who have given the matter most serious investigation; and, even if he had, I conceive it would not have been conclusive evidence. I have proved the latitude and longitude of the Red River settlement; it is for the Court to instruct the jury within what territory a place so situated is comprehended, by treaties or acts of parliament, which are matters of public law; and I have always considered that, if this appeared to the Court to require discussion, they would direct the jury, if they should find the prisoner guilty, to bring in a special verdict, declaring them guilty of murder at a place situated as I have proved by the witnesses, but whether the said place so situated be without the limits of the Provinces of Upper or Lower Canada and of any civil government of the United States of America, and therefore within the jurisdiction of 20 this Court, by virtue of the Great Seal instrument, produced in evidence, the jury pray the advice of the Court; a special verdict would be drawn up in form, and then the question of jurisdiction would come fairly in discussion before the Court upon the facts of locality found by the jury; and of course guilty, or not guilty, would depend upon the decision of that point.

Chief Justice.—That is what I was about saying. Brown, from their being no evidence against him, must be acquitted. If, on the testimony that has been produced, the jury shall be of opinion that the homicide was murder, and that Boucher was a principal, present, aiding, helping, abetting, comforting, assisting, and maintaining the person who committed the murder, from malice aforethought, in himself, or in those that sent him, and that this lamentable effusion of blood did not arise from a sudden impression on rude and half savage minds, from seeing their comrades assailed, or from any 30 apprehension of death to themselves, but that it was the result of a felonious intention, then you will find him guilty on a special verdict to this effect: "We find François Firman Boucher guilty of the "murder of Robert Semple. We cannot see from any evidence before us what are the limits of Upper "Canada." Then, when the case is made up for argument, it will be set forth that the spot was in about 49½° north latitude, and between 90° and 100° west longitude, and a solemn decision being had upon it, justice will eventually be administered according to the decision.

[The verdict was "Not Guilty."]

CASE OF CONNOLLY VS. WOOLRICH, 1867.*

[The question in this case, which was tried before the Honourable Justice MONK, of the Superior Court, Province of Quebec, 9th July, 1867, was as to the legality of a marriage by a Lower Canadian, 40 which took place according to the Indian customs at Rat River, in the Athabasca District (latitude 58° north, and 111° west longitude), in the North-West Territory; and one point in the case was, whether this place was within the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company. The learned Judge held that it was not and the following are extracts from his judgment on this point]:—

It will be necessary for me, in the first place, to advert briefly to the discoveries made and trading posts established in those vast and remote regions of the North-West previous to the charter granted by Charles II. to the Hudson's Bay Company, in 1670.

Spain, England, and France have been the most conspicuous among the European States in the 50 discovery and colonization of America. About the year 1627, the authority of France was successfully establi. hed on the banks of the St. Lawrence, though discovery, hunting, and trading by these Europeans had extended farther west previous to that time. Forty-three years after this date, the Charter of King Charles II. was granted to the Hudson Bay Company; and one hundred years later, the whole of North America belonging to France was ceded to Great Britain. Long prior to 1670, and so far back as 1605, Quebec had been established, and had become an important settlement. In the early part of the seventeenth century, anterior to 1630, the Beaver and several other companies had been organized in Quebec for carrying on the fur trade in the west, near and around the great lakes and in the North-West Territory. The enterprise and trading operations of these companies and the French colonists generally, extended over vast regions of the northern and western portions of this continent. They entered into treaties with the Indian tribes and nations, and carried on a lucrative and extensive fur trade with the natives. Neither the French Government nor any of its colonists or their trading associations, ever attempted, during an intercourse of over two hundred years, to subvert or modify the laws and usages of the aboriginal tribes, except where they had established colonies and permanent settlements, and then only by persuasion and as the fiercer and more barbarous of the Indian nations receded, or in the lapse of time, when their barbarism had been subdued by contact with the whites, or mitigated by the influences of European civilization. It is quite true, it is contended, they had no right, no lawful authority to do so, yet, as a matter of fact, they appear to have wholly abstained from the exercise of any unjust or arbitrary power in this respect. In the prosecution of their trade and other enterprises, these adventurers evinced great energy, courage and perseverance. How far they carried their hunting and trading explorations into the interior, I am unable precisely to determine; but I am inclined to think they had extended them to the Athabaska country, though perhaps not to Rivière aux Rats, where Connolly was stationed in 1803. The Rat River locality is, so near as I can ascertain, situate in latitude 58° north, and longitude west from Greenwich about 111°. It is on the north shore of the lake, and about 600 miles from the Hudson Bay coast. It is due east 300 miles from the Rocky Mountains, and due north from the boundary line of the United States 650 miles; and it is nearly the same distance, due south, from the Arctic or Frozen Ocean. Of course, the deviations along the existing lines of travel would make the distances by these routes much greater than the estimate here made. As before stated, I have no positive evidence that any French trader or hunter visited Rivière aux Rats during the sixteenth or the first half of the seventeenth century, though there is every reason to believe they had been there. It is, in my opinion, more than probable, from all I can collect or learn from a careful examination of the authorities at my command, that some portions of the Athabaska country had, before 1640, been visited and traded in, and to some extent occupied by the French colonists and traders in Canada, and their Beaver Company, formed in 1629. From that date, during the thirty years which immediately preceded the grant of King Charles II., in 1670, these discoveries and trading settlements had considerably increased in number and importance. If this be true it will be seen hereafter that, apart from the question of the Company's limits, the Athabaska region was, by a general clause, excepted from the grant of King Charles; for although neither the laws of France nor those of her contiguous colonies, may have obtained at those distant posts in 1670, the date of the Hudson Bay Charter, yet I think it is beyond all doubt that the Athabaska, and other regions bordering on it, belonged to the Crown of France at that time, to the same extent and by the same means as the countries around Hudson Bay belonged to the Crown of England—that is to say, by discovery, by hunting and trading explorations—with this difference, that in the case of the French traders there was a kind of occupation, whereas the English never occupied or settled any part of the Hudson Bay coast till 1669.

In the celebrated case of Worcester against the State of Georgia (6th Peters' Reports, pages 515-542, Chief Justice Marshall—perhaps one of the greatest lawyers of our time—in delivering the judgment of Court, said:—

“The great maritime powers of Europe discovered and visited different parts of this continent at nearly the same time. The object was too immense for any of them to grasp the whole; and the claimants were too powerful to submit to the exclusive or unreasonable pretensions of any single potentate. To avoid bloody conflicts, which might terminate disastrously to all, it was necessary for the nations of Europe to establish some principle which all would acknowledge, and which would decide their respective rights as between themselves. This principle, suggested by the actual state of things, was, 'that discovery gave title to the government by whose subjects or by whose authority it was made, against all other European governments, which title might be consummated by possession.' Johnson vs. McIntosh, 8 Wheaton's Reports, 543.

"This principle, acknowledged by all Europeans, because it was the interest of all to acknowledge it, gave to the nation making the discovery, as its inevitable consequence, the sole right of acquiring the soil and of making settlements on it. It was an exclusive principle which shut out the right of competition among those who had agreed to it. * * *

19 "Soon after Great Britain determined on planting colonies in America, the King granted charters to companies of his subjects who associated for the purpose of carrying the views of the Crown into effect, and of enriching themselves. The first of these charters was made before possession was taken of any part of the country. They purport, generally, to convey the soil from the Atlantic to the South Sea. The soil was occupied by numerous and warlike nations, equally willing and able to defend their possessions. The extravagant and absurd idea, that the feeble settlements made on the sea coast, or the companies under whom they were made, acquired legitimate power by them to govern the people, or occupy the lands from sea to sea, did not enter the mind of any man. They were well understood to convey the title which, according to the common law of European sovereigns respecting America, they might rightfully convey, and no more. This was the exclusive right of purchasing such lands as the natives were willing to sell. The Crown could not be understood to grant what the Crown did not affect to claim, nor was it so understood."

Phillimore in his International Law, CCXLI, p. 208, Ed. of 1854, says:—"The nature of occupation is not confined to any one class or description; it must be a beneficial use and occupation (le travail d'appropriation), but it may be by a settlement for the purpose of prosecuting a particular trade, such as a fishery, or for working mines, or pastoral occupations, as well as agriculture, though Bynkershoek is correct in saying 'cultura utique et curaagri possessionem quam maxime indicat.'"

Vattel justly maintains that the pastoral occupation of the Arabs entitled them to the exclusive possessions of the regions which they inhabit. "Si les Arabes pasteurs voulaient cultiver soigneusement la terre, un moindre espace pourrait leur suffire. Cependant, aucune autre nation n'est en droit des les ressevier, à moins qu'elle ne manquât absolument de terre; car enfin ils possèdent leur pays; ils s'en servent à leur manière ils en tirent un usage convenable à leur genre de vie; sur lequel ils ne reçoivent la loi de personne."

It has been truly observed that, "agreeably to this rule the North American Indians would have been entitled to have excluded the British fur-traders from their hunting-grounds; and not having done so, the latter must be considered as having been admitted to a joint occupation of the territory, and thus to have become invested with a similar right of excluding strangers from such portions of the country as their own industrial operations pervade."

Authorities might be accumulated on this point, concerning which all writers agree.

Hudson's Bay had been discovered prior to the attempt in which Hudson perished in 1610; but from the voyage of Sir Thomas Button, 1611, till the year 1667, it appears to have been wholly neglected by the English Government and nation. In the latter year, the communication between Canada and the Bay was discovered by two Canadian gentlemen, Messrs. Radisson and DeGroselliers, who were conducted thither across the country by Indians. Succeeding in this, they returned to Quebec, and offered the merchants to conduct ships to Hudson's Bay, the proximity of which to the principal fur districts was now ascertained. This proposal was rejected, as well as a subsequent one to the French Government at Paris; there they were persuaded by the English Ambassador to go to London, where they were favourably received by some merchants and persons of high rank, who commissioned a Mr. Gillam, long accustomed to the Newfoundland trade, to prosecute the discovery. Mr. Gillam sailed in the Nonsuch, in 1667, into Baffin's Bay, to the height of 75° north latitude, and thence 50 to 51°, where he entered a river, to which he gave the name of Prince Rupert's; and, finding the Indians

It is no part of my duty, upon the present occasion, to offer any opinion upon the validity of this extraordinary Charter, though that point is not without interest in this case; and it is worthy of note, that some of its clauses have given rise to doubts among lawyers, and has been the occasion for considerable controversy both in England and in this country. Several modes of testing the question have been suggested; but, as yet, none have been adopted. Apart from the immense and irresponsible powers conferred upon the Company, it has been contended that the grant in free and common soeage, in fee simple, of such extensive regions of territory in the actual possession of aboriginal and powerful nations, was not in the power of the Crown, and was a violation of the plainest principles of public international law. Some have gone further, and contended that, without the authority of Parliament, such a grant of land and exclusive privileges and monopoly could not be made; that the concession of the exclusive right of trade with the Indian tribes, was an illegal exercise of the Royal Prerogative; that the Company have never carried out the intentions of the Crown, either by proper attempts to find a north-west passage to the Southern Ocean, or by making useful discoveries, and planting, settling, and colonizing the territory; that they have not attempted, by even ordinary means, to civilize the natives; nor have they by judicious and appropriate regulations, laws and government, endeavoured to render such a vast and important dominion of the Crown beneficial to the Parent State. The Company, when called upon, from time to time, have answered these charges more or less successfully, and they have further urged, that in the reign following that in which this Charter was granted, the session received the confirmation of Parliament; however, it was specially provided that the Act of confirmation should only remain in force for the period of seven years, "and from thence to the end of the next session of Parliament and no longer." After this no re-confirmation of the Charter by Parliament ever took place, though its existence has frequently been incidentally recognized in Acts of that body, and among others may be noticed the following:—By an Act of Parliament of Great Britain (43 George III., chap. cxxxviii), passed in August 1803, it was provided that crimes committed within the Indian territories which, though not conveyed by Charter to the Company, have long been leased to them, should be cognizable by the Courts of Upper and Lower Canada. The preamble of this Act recites that crime, and offences committed within the Indian territories were not cognizable by any jurisdiction whatever In 1821, an Act (1 and 2 George IV., ch. lxvi.) was passed, extending the provision of the above-named Act to crimes and offences committed within the territory covered by the Company's Charter, anything "in any Grant or Charter to the Company to the contrary notwithstanding.

This latter Act also gave to the Canadian Courts a right of jurisdiction within the Indian territory, as well as over Rupert's Land, which is covered by the Company's Charter. The existence of the Charter has also been referred to in Royal Proclamations.

All this may give rise to interesting investigation hereafter. * * *

Lord Brougham and his associate counsel, consulted, in 1814, by the North-West Company, were of opinion that the territorial grant was not intended to comprehend all the lands and territories that might be approached through Hudson's Straits by land or by water, but must be limited to the relation of proximity to the Straits, and to the confines of the coasts of the Bay within the Straits; and likewise that the boundary must not be such a one as is inconsistent with that view, and with the professed objects of a trading Company, intended not to found Kingdoms and establish States, but to carry on fisheries in their waters, and to trade and traffic for the acquisition of furs, peltries, etc.; and they add, that as one hundred and fifty years had then elapsed since the grant of the Charter, it must have been ascertained by the actual occupation of the Company what portion or portions of lands and territories in the vicinity, and on the coasts and confines of the waters mentioned and described as within the Straits, they had found necessary for their purposes and for forts, factories, towns, villages, settlements, or such other establishments in such vicinity and on such coasts and confines as pertain and belong to a Company established for the purposes mentioned in their Charter, and necessary, useful and convenient to them, within these prescribed limits, for the prosecution of these purposes; and they say, that the enormous extension of land now claimed (and they had reference only to the Red River District transferred in 1812 by the Company to Lord Selkirk; for no pretence was ever made by the Hudson's Bay Company that Rebasca, Rat River, or Athabaska, was within the chartered boundaries, till it was first put forth in this case), appears therefore, not to be warranted by any sound construction of the Charter. Sir Samuel Romilly, Scarlett, afterwards Lord Abinger, and others, consulted in 1814 by the Hudson's Bay Company, were of opinion that the grant of land contained in the Charter was good, and that, moreover, it would include all the countries the waters of which flow into Hudson's Bay.

All this is pretty vague; and what is most apparent and precise, in these opinions, is the different way in which they view the Charter and the western limits of the Company's territories. The Charter grants the right of exclusive trade and commerce of all seas, straits, rivers, etc., that lie within the entrance of Hudson's Straits; also together with all lands and territories upon the countries, coasts and confines of the seas, bays, lakes, rivers, creeks, and sounds aforesaid. It seems to me, if these words, taken together, are susceptible of any reasonable construction or interpretation, they were intended to concede a vast extent of country round the whole coast of Hudson's Bay and the rivers flowing into it; that all the regions westward from the shores of the Bay along the great rivers, tributaries of that inland sea, so far as those streams are navigable for the purpose of trade and commerce are included in the grant; in other words, their limits extended as far west as the head of the water shed where navigation ceases, in longitude west, 95°.

Assuming this view to be correct, yet the Athabaska region would not be included within the western boundaries of the Company's territory. The Elk, or Athabaska River, rises in the Rocky Mountains, and, after flowing north and west 300 miles, discharges its waters into Lake Athabaska, otherwise known as the Lake of the Hills. By two outlets, the waters of Lake Athabaska flow into Peace River, an affluent of the MacKenzie, through it to the Frozen Ocean. It is idle, therefore, in the opinion of the Court, to contend that Rat River or the Athabaska country are or were ever within the chartered limits of the Hudson's Bay territories.

By the 10th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht it is provided that:—"X. The said Most Christian King shall restore to the Kingdom and Queen of Great Britain to be possessed in full right forever, the Bay and Straits of Hudson, together with all lands, seas, sea-coasts, rivers, and places situate in the said bay and straits, and which belong thereunto, no tracts of lands or of sea being excepted, which, are at present possessed by the subjects of France."

The Hudson's Bay territory, as described in the latter treaty, would seem to be restricted to the limits contended for by Lord Brougham, rather than to those laid down by Sir Samuel Romilly; and in any case, I believe, as before stated, that the Athabaska region was beyond and without the chartered limits of the Company, and could not, therefore, come under the operation of that grant. There may, moreover, be urged another reason, and in my opinion successfully, why the Athabaska country should be excluded from the limits of the Hudson's Bay territory, and an argument more cogent than that to be found in the vague and doubtful terms of the Charter. It is declared by that remarkable instrument, that the grant is made of all those seas, bays, straits, etc., together with all lands and territories, etc., that are not already actually possessed by or granted to any of our subjects, or possessed by the subjects of any other Christian Prince or State. Now, as I have before remarked, it appears to me to be beyond controversy that in 1670 the Athabaska country belonged to the Crown of France.

It had previously been discovered by French colonists, and been more or less explored by these adventurers and the trading companies of New and Old France. It is true their settlement and occupation was not precisely that of colonists; but they were traders with trading posts, explorers, hunters, discoverers, carrying on a trading intercourse with the natives. If this be true, and there can be no doubt of it, the region in question was expressly excepted out of that grant; and such was the opinion of Lord Brougham and his associate counsel.

It will be observed that between 1670 and 1763, nearly one hundred years had elapsed, and during that period the French colonists and French trading companies had made settlements and established trading posts as far as the Rocky Mountains; that these countries were in the occupation of the French.

ALLEGED DISCOVERY OF HUDSON'S BAY BY THE DANES AND SPANIARDS.

The Danes pretend that this Bay had already been discovered by one of their nation, by whom the name of Christiania, after Christian IV., King of Denmark, was given. They say that the Danes, having passed the strait, continued their voyage towards the north, and finally reached the mainland at the mouth of the river, which they called the Danish River, and which the Indians called Monotousiki, which signifies the Strangers' River. They all perished during the winter.*

Another writer, who has paid particular attention to North America, believed the fable of a Spanish vessel having crossed the continent from the Pacific Ocean to Hudson's Bay: "It is alleged that the Spaniards have recently found an entrance in the latitude of 47° 55' north, which in twenty-seven days brought them to the vicinity of Hudson's Bay; this latitude exactly corresponds to the ancient relation of John de Fuca, the Greek pilot, in 1592." †

CHARTER FROM QUEEN ELIZABETH TO SIR WALTER RALEIGH, 1584.*

ELIZABETH, by the Grace of God, of England, France and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith, etc.

Charter from Queen Elizabeth to Sir Walter Raleigh, 25th
May, 1584.

To all people to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Know ye that of our especial grace, certain science, and mere motion, we have given and granted and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, we give and grant to our trusty and well-beloved servant, Walter Raleigh, Esq., and to his heirs and assigns forever, free liberty and license, from time and at all times forever hereafter, to discover, search, find out and view such remote, heathen and barbarous lands, countries and territories not actually possessed of any Christian prince, nor inhabited by Christian people, as to him, his heirs and assigns, and to every or any of them shall seem good, and the same to have, hold, occupy and enjoy to him, his heirs and assigns forever, with all prerogatives, commodities, jurisdictions, royalties, privileges, franchises and pre-eminences, thereto or thereabouts, both by sea and land, whatsoever we, by our letters patents, may grant, and as we or any of our noble progenitors have heretofore granted to any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate; and the said Walter Raleigh, his heirs and assigns, and all such as from time to time, by license of us, our heirs and successors, shall go or travel thither to inhabit or remain there to build and fortify: at the discretion of the said Walter Raleigh, his heirs and assigns, the Statutes or Act of Parliament made against fugitives, or against such as shall depart, remain or continue out of our Realm of England without license, or any other statute, act, law, or any ordinance whatsoever to the contrary, in anywise notwithstanding.

And we do likewise, by these presents, of our especial grace, mere motion, and certain knowledge for us, our heirs and successors, give and grant full authority, liberty and power to the said Walter Raleigh, his heirs and assigns, and every of them, that he and they, and every or any of them, shall and may at all and every time and times hereafter, have, take and lead in the said voyage and travel thereafter, or inhabit there with him or them, and every or any of them, such and so many of our subjects as shall willingly accompany him or them, and every or any of them, to whom also we do by these presents, give full liberty and authority in that behalf, and also to have, take and employ, and use sufficient shipping and furniture for the transportations and navigations in that behalf, so that none of the same persons, or any of them, be such as hereafter shall be restrained by us, our heirs or successors.

And further, that the said Walter Raleigh, his heirs and assigns and every of them, shall have and hold, occupy and enjoy to him, his heirs and assigns and every of them for ever, all the soil of all such lands, territories and countries, so to be discovered and possessed as aforesaid, and of all such cities, castles, towns, villages and places in the same, with the right, royalties, franchises and jurisdictions, as well marine as other within the said lands or countries, or the seas thereunto adjoining, to be had or used, with full power to dispose thereof, and of every part in fee simple or otherwise, according to the laws of England, as near as the same conveniently may be, at his and their will and pleasure, to any persons then being, or that shall remain within the allegiance of us, our heirs and successors, reserving always to us, our heirs and successors, for all services, duties and demands, the fifth part of all the ore of gold and silver, that from time to time, and at all times after such discovery, subduing and possessing,

And that, if the said Walter Raleigh, his heirs and assigns, shall not make or cause to be made satisfaction accordingly, within such time so to be limited, that then it shall be lawful to us, our heirs and successors, to put the said Walter Raleigh, his heirs and assigns and adherents, and all the inhabi- 40 tants of the said places to be discovered (as is aforesaid) or any of them out of our allegiance and protection; and that from and after such time of putting out of protection the said Walter Raleigh, his heirs, assigns and adherents, and others so to be put out, and the said places within their habitation, possession and rule, shall be out of our allegiance and protection, and free for all princes and others, to pursue with hostility, as being not our subjects, nor by us any way to be avouched, maintained or defended, nor to be holden as any of ours, nor to our protection or dominion, or allegiance any way belonging, for that express mention of the clear yearly value of the certainty of the premises, or any part thereof, or of any other gift or grant by us, or any of our progenitors or predecessors, to the said Walter Raleigh, before this time made in these presents be not expressed, or any other grant, ordinance, King JAMES the First's Second Charter to the Treasurer and Company for Virginia, erecting them into a Corporation and Body-politic, and for the further enlargement and explanation of the privileges of the said Company and first Colony of Virginia. Dated March 23, 1609.

I. JAMES, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To all, to whom these presents shall come, greeting. Whereas, at the humble suit and request of sundry of our loving and well-disposed subjects, intending to deduce a colony, and to make habitation and plantation of sundry of our people, in that part of America, commonly called Virginia, and other parts and territories in America, either appertaining unto Us, or which are not actually possessed of any Christian Prince or people, within certain bounds and regions, we have formerly, by our letter patents, bearing date the tenth day of April, in the fourth year of our reign of England France, and Ireland, and of Scotland the nine-and-thirtieth, granted to Sir Thomas Gates, Sir George Somers, and others, for the more speedy accomplishment of the said plantation and habitation, that they should divide themselves into two colonies, the one consisting of divers knights, gentlemen, merchants, and others, of our city of London, called the first colony; and the other consisting of divers knights, gentlemen, and others, of our cities of Bristol, Exeter, and town of Plymouth, and other places, called the second colony; and have yielded and granted many and sundry privileges and liberties to each colony, for their quiet settling and good government therein, as by the said letters patent more at large appeareth.

Virginia
Charter, 23rd
March, 1609.

II. Now, forasmuch as divers and sundry of our loving subjects, as well adventurers, as planters of the said first colony, which have already engaged themselves in furthering the business of the said colony and plantation, and do further intend, by the assistance of Almighty God, to prosecute the same to a happy end, have of late been humble suitors unto Us, that (in respect to their great charges and the adventure of many of their lives, which they have hazarded in the said discovery and plantation of the said country). We would be pleased to grant them a further enlargement and explanation of the said grant, privileges, and liberties, and that such counsellors, and other officers, may be appointed amongst them, to manage and direct their affairs, as are willing and ready to adventure with them, as also whose dwellings are not so far remote from the city of London, but that they may, at convenient times, be ready at hand, to give their advice and assistance, upon all occasions requisite.

III. We, greatly affecting the effectual prosecution and happy success of the said plantation, and commending their good desires therein, for their further encouragement in accomplishing so excellent a work, much pleasing to God, and profitable to our kingdom, do, of our especial grace, and certain knowledge, and mere motion, for Us, our heirs, and successors, give, grant, and confirm, to our trusty and well-beloved subjects, [here follow the names;] and to such, and so many, as they do, or shall hereafter, admit to be joined with them, in form hereafter in these presents expressed, whether they go in their persons, to be planters there in the said plantation, or whether they go not, but adventure their moneys, goods, or chattels; that they shall be one body or commonalty perpetual, and shall have perpetual succession, and one common seal, to serve for the said body or commonalty: and that they, and their successors shall be known, called, and incorporated by the name of The Treasurer and Company of Adventurers and Planters, of the City of London, for the first Colony in Virginia.

IV. And that they, and their successors, shall be, from henceforth, for ever enabled to take, acquire, and purchase, by the name aforesaid, (license for the same, from us, our heirs or successors, first had and obtained) any manner of lands, tenements, and hereditaments, goods and chattels, within our realm of England, and dominion of Wales.

VI. And we do also, of our special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, give, grant, and confirm, unto the said treasurer and company, and their successors, under the reservations, limitations and declarations, hereafter expressed, all those lands, countries, and territories, situate, lying, and being, in that part of America called Virginia, from the point of land called Cape or Point Comfort, all along the sea coast, to the northward two hundred miles, and from the said Point of Cape Comfort, all along the sea-coast, to the southward two hundred miles, and all that space and circuit of land, lying from the sea-coast of the precinct aforesaid, up into the land, throughout from sea to sea, west and north-west; and also all the islands, lying within one hundred miles, along the coast of both seas of the precinct aforesaid, together with all the soils, grounds, havens, and ports, mines, as well royal mines of gold and silver, as other minerals, pearls, and precious stones, quarries, woods, rivers, waters, fishings, commodities, jurisdictions, royalties, privileges, franchises, and pre-eminences, within the said territories and the precincts thereof, whatsoever, and thereto and thereabouts, both by sea and land, being, or in any sort belonging or appertaining, and which we, by our letters patent, may or can grant, in as ample manner and sort, as we, or any of our noble progenitors, have heretofore granted to any company, body politic or corporate, or to any adventurer, or adventurers, undertaker, or undertakers, of any discoveries, plantations, or traffic, of, in or into any foreign parts whatsoever, and in as large and ample manner, as if the same were herein particularly mentioned and expressed: To have and to hold, possess and enjoy, all and singular the said lands, countries and territories, with all and singular other the premises, heretofore by these presents granted, or mentioned to be granted, to them, the said Treasurer and Company, their successor: and assigns for ever; to, the sole and proper use of them, the said Treasurer and Company, their successors and assigns for them: To be holden of us, our heirs, and successors, as of our manor of East-Greenwich, in free and common socage, and not in capite; Yielding and paying, therefore, to us, our heirs and successors, the fifth part only of all ore of gold and silver, that from time to time, and at all times hereafter, shall be there gotten, had, or obtained, for all manner of services.

MARYLAND CHARTER, 1632,

GRANTED BY KING CHARLES THE FIRST, TO CÆCILIUS, LORD BARON OF BALTIMORE.

Maryland
Charter granted to Lord
Baltimore,
28th June,

CHARLES, by the grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, etc. To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas our right trusty and well-beloved subject Cæcilius Calvert, baron of Baltimore, in our kingdom of Ireland, son and heir of Sir George Calvert, knight, late baron of Baltimore, in the same kingdom of Ireland, pursuing his father's intentions, being excited with a laudable and pious zeal for the propagation of the Christian faith, and the enlargement of our empire and dominion, hath humbly besought leave of us, by his industry and charge, to transport an ample colony of the English nation unto a certain country hereafter described, in the parts of America not yet cultivated and planted, though in some parts thereof inhabited by certain barbarous people, having no knowledge of Almighty God; and hath humbly besought our royal Majesty to give, grant, and confirm the said country, with certain privileges and jurisdictions, requisite for the said government and state of his colony and country aforesaid, to him and his heirs for ever.

Know ye therefore, That we, favouring the pious and noble purpose of the said barons of Baltimore, of our special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, have given, granted, and confirmed, and by this our present charter, for us, our heirs and successors, do give, grant, and confirm, unto the said Cæcilius, now Baron of Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, all that part of a peninsula, lying in the parts of America, between the ocean on the east, and the bay of Chesapeake on the west, and divided from the other part thereof by a right line drawn from the promontory, or cape of land, called Watkin's Point (situate in the aforesaid bay, near the river of Wighco) on the west, unto the main ocean on the east; and between that bound on the south unto that part of Delaware Bay on the north, which lieth under the fortieth degree of northerly latitude from the equinoctial, where New England ends; and all that tract of land between the bounds aforesaid; that is to say, passing from the aforesaid unto the aforesaid bay called Delaware Bay, in a right line by the degree aforesaid, unto the true meridian of the first fountain of the river Potowmack, and from thence tending toward the south unto the further bank of the aforesaid river, and following the west and south side thereof unto a certain place called Cinquack, situate near the mouth of the said river, where it falls into the bay of Chesapeak, and from thence by a straight line unto the aforesaid promontory and place called Watkin's Point (so that all that tract of land 10 divided by the line aforesaid, drawn between the main ocean and Watkin's Point, unto the promontory called Cape Charles, and all its appurtenances, do remain entirely, excepted to us, our heirs and successors, for ever).

We do also grant and confirm unto the said Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, all islands and islets within the limits aforesaid, and all and singular the islands and islets which are or shall be in the ocean, within ten leagues from the eastern shore of the said country towards the east, with all and singular ports, harbours, bays, rivers and inlets, belonging unto the country and islands aforesaid; and all the soil, lands, fields, woods, mountains, fens, lakes, rivers, bays, and inlets, situate or being within the bounds and limits aforesaid; with the fishing of all sorts of fish, whales, sturgeons, and all other royal fishes in the sea, bays, inlets, or rivers, within the premises, and the fish therein taken. And 20 moreover, all veins, mines, and quarries, as well discovered as not discovered, of gold, silver, gems and precious stones, and all other whatsoever, be it of stones, metals, or of any other thing or matter whatsoever, found, or to be found, within the country, isles and limits aforesaid. And furthermore, the patronages and advowsons of all churches, which (as Christian religion shall increase within the country, isles, islets, and limits aforesaid) shall happen hereafter to be erected; together with licence and power, to build and found churches, chapels, and oratories, in convenient and fit places within the premises, and to cause them to be dedicated and consecrated according to the ecclesiastical laws of our kingdom of England: together with all and singular the like, and as ample rights, jurisdictions, privileges, prerogatives, royalties, liberties, immunities, royal rights and franchises, of what kind soever, temporal, as well by sea as by land, within the country, isles, islets, and limits aforesaid; to have, exercise, use 30 and enjoy the same, as amply as any bishop of Durham, within the bishoprick or county palatine of Durham, in our kingdom of England, hath at any time heretofore had, held, used, or enjoyed, or of right ought or might have had, held, used, or enjoyed.

And him the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, we do by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, make, create, and constitute the true and absolute lords and proprietaries of the said country aforesaid, and of all other the premises, (except before excepted) saving always the faith and allegiance, and sovereign dominion due unto us, our heirs and successors. To have, hold, possess, and enjoy the said country, isles, inlets, and other the premises, unto the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, to the sole and proper use and behoof of him the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, for ever.

40 To be holden of us, our heirs and successors, Kings of England, as of our castle of Windsor, in our county of Berks, in free and common socage, by fealty only, for all services, and not in capite, or by knight's service; yielding and paying therefore to us, our heirs and successors, two Indian arrows of those parts, to be delivered at our said castle of Windsor, every year the Tuesday in Easter week, and also the fifth part of all gold and silver ore, within the limits aforesaid, which shall, from time to time, happen to be found.

Now, that the said country, thus by us granted and described, may be eminent above all other parts of the said territory, and dignified with large titles, Know ye, that we, of our further grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, have thought fit to erect the same country and islands into a province; as out of the fulness of our royal power and prerogative, we do for us, our heirs and 50 successors, erect and incorporate them into a province, and do call it Maryland, and so from henceforth we will have it called.

And forasmuch as we have hereby made and ordained, the aforesaid now Lord Baltimore, the true lord and proprietary of all the province aforesaid: Know ye, therefore, that we, reposing special trust and confidence in the fidelity, wisdom, justice, and provident circumspection of the said now Lord Baltimore, for us, our heirs and successors, do grant free, full, and absolute power, by virtue of these presents, to him and his heirs, for the good and happy government of the said country, to ordain, make, enact, and under his and their seals to publish, any laws whatsoever appertaining either unto the public state of the said province, or unto the private utility of particular persons, according to their best discretion, by and with the advice, assent, and approbation of the freemen of the said province, or the greater part of them, or of their delegates or deputies, whom for the enacting of the said laws, when and as often as need shall require, we will, that the said now Lord Baltimore, and his heirs, shall assemble 10 in such sort and form as to him and them shall seem best, and the said laws duly to execute upon all people within the said province and limits thereof, for the time being, or that shall be constituted under the government and power of him or them, either sailing towards Maryland, or returning, from thence towards England, or any other of ours or foreign dominions, by imposition of penalties, imprisonment, or any other punishment: yea, if it shall be needful, and that the quality of the offence require it, by taking away members or life, either by him the said now Lord Baltimore, and his heirs, or by his or their deputies, lieutenants, judges, justices, magistrates, officers, and ministers, to be ordained or appointed according to the tenor and true intention of these presents; and likewise to appoint and establish any judges, justices, magistrates, and officers, whatsoever, at sea and land, for what cause soever, and with what power soever, and in such form as to the said now Lord Baltimore, or his heirs 20 shall seem most convenient; also to remit, release, pardon, and abolish, whether before judgment or after, all crimes and offences whatsoever, against the said laws, and to do all and every other thing or things, which unto the complete establishment of justice unto courts, prætories, and tribunals, forms of judicature, and manners of proceedings, do belong, altho' in these presents express mention be not made thereof; and by judges by them delegated to award process, hold pleas, and determine, in all the said, courts and tribunals, all actions, suits, and causes whatsoever, as well criminal as civil, personal, real, mixt, and prætorial, which laws, so, as aforesaid, to be published, our pleasure is, and so we enjoin, require, and command, shall be most absolute and available in law; and that all the liege people and, subjects of us, our heirs and successors, do observe and keep the same inviolably, in those parts, so far as they concern them, under the pains therein expressed, or to be expressed; provided nevertheless, 30 That the said laws be consonant to reason, and be not repugnant or contrary, but, as near as conveniently may be, agreeable to the laws, statutes, and rights of this our kingdom of England.

And forasmuch as in the government of so great a province, sudden accidents do often happen whereunto it will be necessary to apply a remedy, before the freeholders of the said province, or their delegates or deputies, can be assembled to the making of laws; neither will it be convenient, that instantly upon every such emergent occasion, so great a multitude should be called together; therefore, for the better government of the said province, we will and ordain, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do grant unto the said now Lord Baltimore, and his heirs, by themselves, or by their magistrates and officers, in that behalf duly to be ordained, as aforesaid, to make and constitute fit and wholesome ordinances, from time to time, within the said province, to be kept and observed, as 40 well for the preservation of the peace, as for the better government of the people there inhabiting, and publicly to notify the same to all persons, whom the same doth or may any way concern; which ordinances, our pleasure is, shall be observed inviolably, within the said province, under the pains therein to be expressed; so as the said ordinances be consonant to reason, and be not repugnant nor contrary, but so far as conveniently may be, agreeable to the laws and statutes of the kingdom of England; and so as the said ordinances be not extended in any sort, to bind, charge, or take away the right or interest of any person or persons, or of their life, members, freehold, goods or chattels.

Furthermore, that this new colony may the more happily increase by the multitude of people resorting thither, and may likewise be the more strongly defended from the incursions of savages, or other enemies, pirates and robbers: therefore we, for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant, by 50 these presents, power, licence, and liberty, unto all the liege people and subjects, both present and future, for us, our heirs and successors (excepting those who shall be specially forbidden), to transport, themselves and families unto the said province, with convenient shipping, and fitting provisions, and there to settle themselves, dwell and inhabit, and to build and fortify castles, forts, and other places of strength for the public, and their own private defence, at the appointment of the said now Lord Baltimore, and his heirs, the statute of fugitives, or any other whatsoever, the contrary of the premises in any wise notwithstanding.

And we will also, and of our more special grace, for us, our heirs and successors, we do strictly enjoin, constitute, ordain and command, That the said province shall be of our allegiance, and that all and singular the subjects and liege people of us, our heirs and successors, transported or to be transported into the said province, and the children of them, and of such as shall descend from them, there already born or hereafter to be born, be and shall be denizens and lieges of us, our heirs and successors, of our kingdoms of England and Ireland, and be in all things held, treated, reputed and esteemed, as the liege faithful people of us, our heirs and successors, born within our kingdom of England; and likewise, any lands, tenements, revenues, services and other hereditaments whatsoever, within our kingdom of England, and other our dominions, may inherit, or otherwise purchase, receive, take, have, hold, buy, and possess, and them may occupy and enjoy, give, sell, alien and bequeath, as likewise all liberties, franchises and privileges, of this our kingdom of England, freely, quietly and peaceably, have and possess, occupy and enjoy, as our liege people, born, or to be born, within our said kingdom of England, without the lett, molestation, vexation, trouble or grievance of us, our heirs and successors; any statute, act, ordinance or provision to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

And furthermore, that our subjects may be the rather encouraged to undertake this expedition with ready and cheerful minds, know ye, That we, of our special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, do give and grant, by virtue of these presents, as well unto the said now Lord Baltimore, and his heirs, as to all others who shall, from time to time, repair unto the said country with a purpose to inhabit there, or to trade with the natives of the said province, full licence to lade and freight in any ports whatsoever, of us, our heirs and successors, into the said province of Maryland, by them, their servants, or assigns, to transport all and singular their goods, wares, and merchandises, as likewise all sorts of grain whatsoever, and all other things whatsoever necessary for food or clothing, not prohibited by the laws and statutes of our kingdoms and dominions to be carried out of the said kingdoms, any statute, act, ordinance, or other thing whatsoever to the contrary notwithstanding, without any let or molestation of us, our heirs and successors, or of any the heirs of us, our heirs and successors: saving always to us, our heirs and successors, the legal impositions, customs, and other duties and payments for the said wares and merchandize, any statute, act, ordinance, or other thing whatsoever to the contrary notwithstanding.

And because in so remote a country, and situate near so many barbarous nations, the incursions as well of the savages themselves, as of other enemies, pirates, and robbers, may probably be feared, therefore we have given, and for us, our heirs and successors, do give power, by these presents, unto the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, by themselves or their captains, or other their officers, to levy, muster, and train all sorts of men, of what condition, or wheresoever born, in the said province of Maryland, for the time being, and to make war, and pursue the enemies and robbers aforesaid, as well by sea as by land, yea, even without the limits of the said province, and (by God's assistance) to vanquish and take them; and being taken, to put them to death, by the law of war, or to save them, at their pleasure; and to do all and every other thing which unto the charge and office of a captain-general of an army belongeth, or hath accustomed to belong, as fully and freely as any captain-general of an army hath ever had the same.

Also, our will and pleasure is, and by this our charter, we do give unto the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, full power, liberty and authority, in case of rebellion, tumult or sedition, if any should happen (which God forbid) either upon the land, within the province aforesaid, or upon the main sea, in making a voyage thither, or returning from thence by themselves, or their captains, deputies, or other officers, to be authorized under their seals for that purpose (to whom we also for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant by these presents, full power and authority) to exercise martial law against mutinous and seditious persons of those parts, such as shall refuse to submit themselves to his or their government, or shall refuse to serve in the wars, or shall fly to the enemy, or forsake their ensigns, or be loiterers or stragglers, or otherways however offending against the law, custom, and discipline military, as freely and in as ample manner and form as any captain-general of an army, by virtue of his office, might, or hath accustomed to use the same.

Furthermore, that the way to honours and dignities may not seem to be altogether precluded and shut up to men well-born, and such as shall repair themselves unto this present plantation, and shall desire to deserve well of us and our kingdoms, both in peace and war, in so far distant and remote a country: Therefore we, for us, our heirs and successors, do give free and absolute power unto the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, to confer favours, rewards and honours, upon such inhabitants, within the province aforesaid, as shall deserve the same, and to invest them with what titles and dignities soever as he shall think fit (so as they be not such as are now used in England,) as likewise to erect and incorporate towns into boroughs, or boroughs into cities, with convenient privileges and immunities, according to the merit of the inhabitants, and fitness of the places; and to do all and every other thing or things, touching the premises, which to him or them shall seem meet and requisite; albeit they be such as of their own nature might otherwise require a more special commandment and warrant than in these presents is expressed.

We will also, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant license, by this our charter, unto the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, and to all the inhabitants and dwellers in the said province aforesaid, both present and to come, to import, unlade, by themselves or their servants, factors or assigns, all merchandizes and goods whatsoever, that shall arise of the fruits and commodities of the said province, either by land or sea, into any of the ports of us, our heirs and successors, in our kingdoms of England or Ireland, or otherwise to dispose of the said goods, in the said ports, and if need be, within one year next after the unlading of the same, to lade the said merchandizes and goods again, into the same or other ships, and to export the same into any other countries, either of our dominion or foreign (being in amity with us, our heirs and successors). Provided always, that they pay such customs, impositions, subsidies and duties for the same, to us, our heirs and successors, as the rest of our subjects of our Kingdom of England, for the time being, shall be bound to pay; beyond which, we will not that the inhabitants of the aforesaid province of Maryland shall be any way charged.

And furthermore, of our more ample and special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, we do, for us, our heirs and successors, grant unto the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, full and absolute power and authority to make, erect, and constitute, within the said province of Maryland, and the isles and islets aforesaid, such and so many sea-ports, harbours, creeks, and other places, for discharging and unlading of goods and merchandizes out of the ships, boats and other vessels, and lading them in such and so many places, and with such rights, jurisdictions, and liberties, and privileges unto the said ports belonging, as to him or them shall seem most expedient; and that all and singular the ships, boats and other vessels, which shall come for merchandize and trade into the said province, or out of the same, shall depart, shall be laden or unladen only at such ports as shall be so erected and constituted by the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns; any use, custom, or other things to the contrary notwithstanding: saving always unto us, our heirs and successors, and to all the subjects (of our kingdoms of England and Ireland) of us, our heirs and successors, free liberty of fishing for sea fish, as well in the sea, bays, inlets, and navigable rivers, as in the harbours, bays, and creeks of the province aforesaid, and the privileges of salting and drying their fish on the shores of the said province, and for the same cause, to cut and take under-wood or twigs there growing, and to build cottages and sheds necessary in this behalf, as they heretofore have, or might reasonably have used; which liberties and privileges, nevertheless, the subjects aforesaid of us, our heirs and successors, shall enjoy without any notable damage, or injury to be done to the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs or assigns, or to the dwellers and inhabitants of the said province, in the ports, creeks, and shores aforesaid, and especially in the woods and copses growing within the said province. And if any shall do any such damage or injury, he shall incur the heavy displeasure of us, our heirs and successors, the punishment of the laws, and shall moreover make satisfaction.

We do furthermore will, appoint and ordain, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, we do grant unto the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, that he the said Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, may from time to time, for ever, have and enjoy the customs and subsidies in the ports, harbours, and other creeks and places aforesaid, within the province aforesaid, payable or due for merchandizes and wares there to be laded and unladed; the said customs and subsidies to be reasonably assessed (upon any occasion) by themselves and the people there, as aforesaid, to whom we give power, by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, upon just cause, and in a due proportion, to assess and impose the same.

And further, of our special grace, and of our certain knowledge, and mere motion, we have given and granted, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant, unto the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, full and absolute power, licence, and authority, that he the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, from time to time hereafter, for ever, at his and their will and pleasure, may assign, alien, grant, demise, or enfeoff of the premises, so many and such part or parcels to him or them that shall be willing to purchase the same, as they shall think fit; to have and to hold to them the said person or persons willing to take or purchase the same, their heirs and assigns, in fee simple, or in fee tail, or for the term of life or lives, or years, to be held of the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, by such services, customs, and rents, as shall seem fit to the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, and not immediately of us, our heirs or successors: And to the same person or persons, and to all and every of them, we do give and grant, by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, licence, authority and power, that such person or persons may take the premises, or any parcel thereof, of the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs or assigns, and the same hold to themselves, their heirs or assigns, in what estate of inheritance soever, in fee simple, or in fee tail, or otherwise, as to them and the now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, shall seem expedient; the statute made in the parliament of Edward, son of King Henry, late King of England, our predecessor, commonly called the statute "Quia emptores terrarum," lately published in our kingdom of England, or any other statute, act, ordinance, use, law or custom, or any other thing, cause or matter thereupon heretofore had, done, published, ordained or provided to the contrary, in any wise notwithstanding.

And by these presents we give and grant licence unto the said now Lord Baltimore and his heirs' to erect any parcels of land within the province aforesaid into manors, in every the said manors to have and to hold a court of Baron, with all things whatsoever which to a court Baron do belong, and to have and to hold view of frank pledge (for the conservation of the peace, and the better government of those parts) by themselves or their stewards, or by the lords, for the time being, of other manors to be deputed, when they shall be erected, and in the same to use all things belonging to view of frank pledge.

And further our pleasure is, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, we do covenant and grant to and with the said now Lord Baltimore, and his heirs and assigns, that we, our heirs and successors, shall at no time hereafter set, make, or cause to set any imposition, custom or other taxation, rate, or contribution whatsoever, in and upon the dwellers and inhabitants of the aforesaid province, for their lands, tenements, goods, or chattels within the said province, or in or upon any goods or merchandize within the said province, or to be laded or unladed within the ports or harbours of the said province. And our pleasure is, and for us, our heirs and successors, we charge and command, that this our declaration shall henceforward, from time to time, be received and allowed in all our courts, and before all the judges of us, our heirs and successors, for a sufficient and lawful discharge, payment and acquittance; commanding all and singular our officers and ministers of us, our heirs and successors, and enjoining them, upon pain of our high displeasure, that they do not presume, at any time, to attempt any thing to the contrary of the premises, or that they do in any sort withstand the same; but that they be at all times aiding and assisting, as fitting, unto the said now Lord Baltimore, and his heirs, and to the inhabitants and merchants of Maryland aforesaid, their servants, ministers, factors, and assigns, in the full use and fruition of the benefit of this our charter.

And further, our pleasure is, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, we do grant unto the said now Lord Baltimore, his heirs and assigns, and to the tenants and inhabitants of the said province of Maryland, both present and to come, and to every of them, that the said province, tenants, pleasure is, and so we injoin, require, and command, shall be most absolute and available in law; and that all the liege people and subjects of us, our heirs and successors, do observe and keep the same inviolably, in those parts, so far as they concern them, under the pain therein expressed or to be expressed; provided nevertheless, that the said laws be consonant to reason, and be not repugnant or contrary, but, as near as conveniently may be, agreeable to the laws, statutes, and rights of this our kingdom of England; and saving and reserving to us, our heirs and successors, the receiving, hearing, and determining of the appeal and appeals of all or any person or persons of, in, or belonging to the territories aforesaid, or touching any judgment to be there made or given.

And forasmuch as in the government of so great a country, sudden accidents do often happen, whereunto it will be necessary to apply a remedy before the freeholders of the said province, or their delegates or deputies, can be assembled to the making of laws; neither will it be convenient, that instantly, upon every such emergent occasion, so great a multitude should be called together; therefore, for the better government of the said country, we will and ordain, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do grant unto the said William Penn, and his heirs, by themselves, or by their magistrates and officers, in that behalf duly to be ordained, as aforesaid, to make and constitute fit and wholesome ordinances, from time to time, within the said country, to be kept and observed, as well for the preservation of the peace, as for the better government of the people there inhabiting, and publicly to notify the same, to all persons whom the same doth or may any way concern; which ordinances, our will and pleasure is, shall be observed inviolably within the said province, under pains therein to be expressed; so as the said ordinances be consonant to reason, and be not repugnant nor contrary, but, so as may be agreeable to the laws of our kingdom of England; and so as the said ordinances be not extended in any sort, to bind, charge, or take away the right or interest of any person or persons, for or in their life, members, freehold, goods or chattels.

And our further will and pleasure is, That the laws for regulating and governing of property, within the said province, as well for the descent and enjoyment of lands, as likewise for the enjoyment and succession of goods and chattels, and likewise as to felonies, shall be and continue the same as they shall be for the time being, by the general course of the law in our kingdom of England, until the said laws shall be altered by the said William Penn, his heirs or assigns, and by the freemen of the said province, their delegates or deputies, or the greater part of them. And to the end the said William Penn, or his heirs, or other the planters, owners, or inhabitants of the said province may not, at any time hereafter, by misconstruction of the powers aforesaid, through inadvertency or design, depart from that faith, and due allegiance which, by the laws of this our kingdom of England, they and all our subjects in our dominions and territories always owe unto us, our heirs and successors, by colour of any extent or largeness of powers hereby given, or pretended to be given, or by force or colour of any laws hereafter to be made in the said province, by virtue of any such powers; our further will and pleasure is, that a transcript or duplicate of all laws which shall be so as aforesaid made and published within the said province, shall, within five years after the making thereof, be transmitted and delivered to the privy council, for the time being, of us, our heirs and successors; And if any of the said laws, within six months after that they shall be so transmitted and delivered, be declared by us, our heirs and successors, in our or their privy council, inconsistent with the sovereignty or lawful prerogative of us, our heirs or successors, or contrary to the faith or allegiance due by the legal government of this realm, from the said William Penn, or his heirs, or of the planters and inhabitants of the said province; and that thereupon any of the said laws shall be adjudged and declared to be void by us, our heirs and successors, under our or their privy seal; that then and from thenceforth such laws, concerning which such judgment and declaration shall be made, shall become void; otherwise the said laws so transmitted shall remain and stand in full force, according to the true intent, and meaning thereof.

Furthermore, that this new colony may the more happily increase by the multitude of people resorting thither, therefore we, for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant, by these presents, power, licence, and liberty, unto all the liege people and subjects, both present and future, of us, our heirs and successors, (excepting those who shall be especially forbidden) to transport themselves and families unto the said country, with such convenient shipping, as, by the laws of this

And furthermore, that our subjects may be the rather encouraged to undertake this expedition with ready and cheerful minds, know ye, That we, of our special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, do give and grant, by virtue of these presents, as well unto the said William Penn, and his heirs, as to all others, who shall, from time to time, repair unto the said country, with a purpose to inhabit there, or to trade with the natives of the said country, full licence to lade and freight in any ports whatsoever, of us, our heirs and successors, according to the laws made, or to be made, within our kingdom of England, and into the said country, by them, their servants, or 10 assigns, to transport all and singular their goods, wares, and merchandize, as likewise all sorts of grain whatsoever, and all other things whatsoever necessary for food or clothing, not prohibited by the laws and statutes of our kingdoms and dominions to be carried out of the said kingdoms, without any lett or molestation of us, our heirs and successors, or of any the heir of us, our heirs and successors; saving always to us, our heirs and successors, the legal impositions, customs, and other duties and payments for the said wares, and merchandize, by any law or statute due, or to be due, to us, our heirs or successors.

And we do further for us, our heirs and successors, give and grant unto the said William Penn, his heirs and assigns, free and absolute power to divide the said country and islands into towns, hundreds, and counties, and to erect and incorporate towns into boroughs, and boroughs into cities, 20 and make and constitute fairs and markets therein, with all other convenient privileges and immunities, according to the merit of the inhabitants, and the fitness of the places, and to do all and every other thing and things touching the premises, which to him or them shall seem meet and requisite, albeit they be such as of their own nature might otherwise require a more especial commandment and warrant than in these presents is expressed.

We will also, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, we do give and grant licence by this our charter, unto the said William Penn, his heirs and assigns, and to all the inhabitants and dwellers, in the province aforesaid, both present and to come, to import and unlade, by themselves, or their servants, factors or assigns, all merchandize or goods whatsoever, as shall arise of the fruits and commodities of the said province, either by land or sea, into any the ports of us, 30 our heirs and successors, in our kingdom of England, and not into any other country whatsoever; and we give him full power to dispose of the said goods in the said ports, and if it need be, within one year next after the unlading of the same, to lade the said merchandizes and goods again into the same or other ships, and to export the same into any other countries either of our dominions or foreign, according to law; provided always, that they pay such customs and impositions, subsidies and duties, for the same, to us, our heirs and successors, as the rest of our subjects of our kingdom of England for the time being, shall be bound to pay; and do observe the acts of navigation, and other laws in that behalf made.

And furthermore, of our ample and special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, we do, for us our heirs and successors, grant unto the said William Penn, his heirs and assigns, full and absolute 40 power and authority to make, erect, and constitute, within the said province, and the isles and islets aforesaid such and so many seaports, harbours, creeks, havens, keys, and other places, for discharging and unlading of goods and merchandizes out of the ships, boats, and other vessels, and lading them in such and so many places, and with such rights, jurisdictions, and liberties, and privileges unto the said ports belonging, as to him or them shall seem most expedient; and that all and singular the ships, boats, and other vessels, which shall come for merchandize and trade unto the said province, or out of the same shall depart, shall be laden or unladen, only at such ports as shall be erected and constituted by the said William Penn, his heirs or assigns, any use, custom, or other things to the contrary notwithstanding; provided that the said William Penn, and his heirs, and the lieutenants and governors for the time being, shall admit and receive, in and about all such ports, havens, creeks, and keys, all officers and their 50 deputies, who shall from time to time be appointed for that purpose, by the farmers or commissioners of our customs for the time being. And we do further appoint and ordain, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, we do grant unto the said William Penn, his heirs and assigns, that he the said William Penn, his heirs and assigns, may from time to time, for ever, have and enjoy the customs and subsidies in the ports, harbours, and other creeks and places aforesaid, within the province aforesaid, payable or due for merchandizes and wares there to be laded and unladed; the said customs and subsidies to be reasonably assessed (upon any occasion) by themselves and the people there, as aforesaid, to be assembled; to whom we give power, by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, upon just cause, and in a due proportion, to assess and impose the same; saving unto us, our heirs and successors, such impositions and customs, as by act of parliament are and shall be appointed.

And it is our further will and pleasure, That the said William Penn, his heirs and assigns shall, from time to time, constitute and appoint an attorney or agent, to reside in or near our city of London, who shall make known the place where he shall dwell, or may be found, unto the clerks of our privy council for the time being, or one of them, and shall be ready to appear in any of our courts at Westminster, to answer for any misdemeanors that shall be committed, or by any wilful default or neglect permitted by the said William Penn, his heirs or assigns, against our laws of trade and navigation; and after it shall be ascertained in any of our said courts what damages we, or our heirs or successors, shall have sustained by such default or neglect, the said William Penn, his heirs and assigns, shall pay the same within one year after such taxation and demand thereof, from such attorney; or in case there shall be no such attorney, within the space of one year; or such attorney shall not make payment of such damages within the space of one year, and answer such other forfeitures and penalties within the said time, as by the acts of parliament in England are or shall be provided, according to the true intent and meaning of these presents; then it shall be lawful for us, our heirs and successors, to seize and resume the government of the said province or country, and the same to retain until payment shall be made thereof; but notwithstanding any such seizure or resumption of the government, nothing concerning the propriety or ownership of any lands, tenements, or other hereditaments, or goods, or chattels, of any of the adventurers, planters, or owners, other than the respective offenders there, shall be in any way affected or molested thereby.

Provided always, and our will and pleasure is, that neither the said William Penn, nor his heirs, nor any other the inhabitants of the said province, shall at any time hereafter have or maintain any correspondence with any other King, Prince or State, or with any of their subjects, who shall then be in war against us, our heirs or successors; nor shall the said William Penn, or his heirs, or any other the inhabitants of the said province, make war, or do any act of hostility against any other King, Prince, or state, or any of their subjects, who shall then be in league or amity with us, our heirs, or successors.

And because in so remote a country, and situate near so many barbarous nations, the incursions as well of the savages themselves, as of other enemies, pirates, and robbers, may probably be feared, therefore we have given, and for us, our heirs, and successors, do give power by these presents, unto the said William Penn, his heirs and assigns, by themselves or their captains, or other their officers, to levy, muster, and train all sorts of men, of what condition, or wheresoever born, in the said province of Pennsylvania, for the time being, and to make war, and pursue the enemies and robbers aforesaid, as well by sea, as by land, yea, even without the limits of the said province, and (by God's assistance) to vanquish and take them; and being taken, to put them to death, by the law of war, or to save them, at their pleasure; and to do all and every other thing, which unto the charge and office of a captain-general of an army belongeth, or hath accustomed to belong, as fully and freely as any captain-general of an army hath ever had the same.

And furthermore, of our special grace, and of our certain knowledge, and mere motion, we have given and granted, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant unto the said William Penn, his heirs and assigns, full and absolute power, licence, and authority, that he the said William Penn, his heirs and assigns, from time to time hereafter, for ever, at his and their will and pleasure, may assign, alien, grant, demise, or enfeof of the premises, so many and such part or parcels to him or them that shall be willing to purchase the same, as they shall think fit; to have and to hold to them the said person or persons willing to take or purchase, their heirs and assigns, in fee simple, or in fee tail, or for the term of life or lives, or years, to be held of the said William Penn, his heirs and assigns, as of the seignory of Windsor, by such services, customs, and rents as shall seem fit to the said William Penn, his heirs and assigns, and not immediately of us, our heirs and successors: And to the same person or persons, and to all and every of them, we do give and grant, by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, licence, authority and power that such person or persons may take the premises, or any parcel thereof, of the said William Penn, his heirs, or assigns, and the same hold to themselves, their heirs or assigns, in what estate of inheritance soever, in fee simple, or in fee tail, or otherwise, as to him the said William Penn, his heirs and assigns, shall seem expedient; the statute made in the parliament of Edward, son of King Henry, late King of England, our predecessor, commonly called the statute "Quia emptores terrarum," lately published in our kingdom of England, in any wise notwithstanding.

And by these presents, we give and grant licence unto the said William Penn, and his heirs, likewise to all and every such person or persons, to whom the said William Penn, or his heirs, shall, at any time hereafter, grant any estate of inheritance as aforesaid, to erect any parcels of land within the province aforesaid, into manors, by and with the licence to be first had and obtained for that purpose, under the hand and seal of the said William Penn, or his heirs, and in every of the said manors to have and to hold a court of Baron, with all things whatsoever which to a court Baron do belong, and to have and to hold view of frank pledge (for the conservation of the peace, and the better government of those parts) by themselves or their stewards, or by the lords, for the time being, of other manors to be deputed when they shall be erected, and in the same to use all things belonging to view of frank pledge. And we do further grant licence and authority, that every such person or persons who shall erect any such manor or manors as aforesaid, shall or may grant all or any part of his said lands to any person or persons in fee simple or any other estate of inheritance, to be held of the said manors respectively, so as no further tenures shall be created; but that upon all further and other alienations thereafter to be made, the said lands so aliened shall be held of the same lord, and his heirs, of whom the alienor did then before hold, and by the like services, which were before due and accustomed.

And further our pleasure is, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, we do covenant and grant to and with the said William Penn, and his heirs and assigns, that we, our heirs and successors, shall at no time hereafter set or make, or cause to set any imposition, custom, or other taxation, rate, or contribution whatsoever, in and upon the dwellers and inhabitants of the aforesaid province, for their lands, tenements, goods, or chattels within the said province, or in and upon any goods and merchandize within the said province, or to be laden or unladen within the ports or harbours of the said province, unless the same be with the consent of the proprietary, or chief governor, and assembly, or by act of parliament in England. And our pleasure is, and for us, our heirs and successors, we charge and command, that this our declaration shall from henceforward, from time to time be received and allowed in all our courts, and before all the judges of us, our heirs and successors, for a sufficient discharge, payment and acquittance, commanding all and singular the officers and ministers of us, our heirs and successors, and enjoining them, upon pain of our high displeasure, that they do not presume, at any time, to attempt any thing to the contrary of the premises, or that they do in any sort withstand the same; but that they be at all times aiding and assisting, as fitting, unto the said William Penn, and his heirs, and to the inhabitants and merchants of the said province aforesaid, their servants, ministers, factors, and assigns, in the full use and fruition of the benefit of this our Charter.

And our further pleasure is, and we do hereby, for us, our heirs and successors, charge and require, that if any of the inhabitants of the said province (to the number of twenty) shall, at any time hereafter, be desirous, and shall by any writing, or by any person deputed by them, signify such their desire to the Bishop of London, for the time being, that any preacher or preachers, to be approved of by the said Bishop, may be sent unto them for their instruction, that then such preacher or preachers shall and may be and reside within the said province, without any denial or molestation whatsoever.

And if perchance hereafter it shall happen, any doubts or questions should arise concerning the true sense and meaning of any word, clause, or sentence contained in this our present Charter, we will, ordain, and command, that at all times, and in all things, such interpretations be made thereof and

MEMORANDUM BY S. J. DAWSON, ESQ., M.P.P. FOR ALGOMA, ON EARLY MAPS OF THE DISPUTED TERRITORY.

Mr. S. J. Dawson on early maps of disputed territory.

THE WESTERN LIMIT OF CANADA, ON A LINE DUE WEST FROM THE LAKE OF THE WOODS, ACCORDING TO THE TREATY OF 1783, CONSIDERED IN CONNECTION WITH THE MAPS AFFIXED TO THE OFFICIAL REPORTS ON THE "BOUNDARIES OF ONTARIO." 30

The Treaty of 1763, commonly known as the Treaty of Paris, by which Canada was finally ceded to Great Britain, left the territory known at that time as Louisiana in the possession of France.

This extensive country had the Mississippi, from its source downwards, for its eastern and north-eastern boundary, dividing it from Canada, up to the date of the Treaty of 1783, and from Canada and the United States, for a period of twenty years subsequent to that time.

The vast regions now forming, in whole or in part, the States or Territories of Nebraska, the western portions of Minnesota and Dakota, Iowa, Montana, Wyoming and Colorado, to the summit of the "Stony Mountains," with several other States to the south, and a portion of the Dominion of Canada, near the Rocky Mountains, to the north, are within the territory which, at the date of the Treaty of 1783, was known as Louisiana. By the second article of the Treaty of 1783, the Boundary estab- 40 lished between the British possessions and the United States, in as far as regards the part of the continent under consideration, was a line "from the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods, on a due western course to the Mississippi;" and in a Royal Commission issued to Governor Lord Dorchester, in 1786, the part of Canada forming the then Province of Quebec is described as being bounded by a line "from the most north-western point thereof (i.e. the Lake of the Woods) in a due west course to the River Mississippi, and northward to the Southern Boundary of the Territories granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay."

It will thus be seen that the western limit of Canada, on the line running due west from the Lake of the Woods, was at that time a matter of interest to three nations. The United States could not go west of the Mississippi, or the boundary recognized as representing that river, nor the nation possessing Louisiana come east of it; while as regards Canada the Province of Quebec was to have both her western limit on the due west line, and her entire western boundary, running north to the territories granted to the Merchant Adventurers, determined by the point at which the boundary between the United States and Louisiana should meet the due west line from the Lake of the Woods.

It is well known that the tributary of the Mississippi system, now called "the Mississippi," is but a small stream in its upper reaches, having its source a little to the north of the parallel of 47°, in numerous brooks and countless lakelets, far to the south and east of a due west line from the Lake of the Woods.

It does not, therefore, meet the description, and the question arises as to whether it really is the Mississippi meant by the diplomatists who framed the Treaty of 1783, or whether it is not more reasonable to believe that both they and their predecessors who negotiated the Treaty of 1763, had in view the main artery of the vast River System to which the comprehensive name of the Mississippi was 20 applied in those days.

The maps which it is now proposed to consider throw a good deal of light on this important question, and in reviewing the evidence to be gathered from them, it may safely be assumed that, taken collectively, they exhibit all that was known of the geography of the north-western parts of Canada and the adjoining territory of Louisiana, at the time at which the treaties to which reference has been made were entered into.

These explanations seem necessary to a full understanding of the matter at issue, for the fact that Louisiana was of such extent, and bore at one time such important relation to Canada and the United States (and the then boundaries of which are of importance even now), has been lost sight of in late years.

30 To avoid ambiguity, the parallel of 49° north lat., which is now the international boundary, from the Lake of the Woods westward, will be referred to, in what follows, as one and the same thing with the "due west line," although the latter is somewhat farther north. The Mississippi must necessarily be mentioned often, but only in reference to its north-western tributaries.

Mr. Mills has annexed to his report seven maps issued between the dates of 1710 and 1794, namely.

1. "A Map of North America, corrected from the observations communicated to the Royal Society at London, and the Royal Academy at Paris. By John Senex, F.R.S., 1710."

This map places the sources of the Mississippi at about 100° west longitude and 48° north latitude, and to the north-west of this point is marked "a river whose beginning or ending is unknown." A height of land, not far from being in a correct position, is indicated as existing to the north-east of 40 the Mississippi, but the map is of too early a date to afford much information regarding a region in the interior which was but little explored in 1710, the date at which it was issued.

2. "Delisle's Map of North America, &c., Chief Geographer of His Majesty, and the Royal Academy of Sciences. Amsterdam, 1739."

This small map is by a very distinguished French author, and it is valuable as showing that the Missouri of the present day was the boundary between Louisiana and the Canada of the French.

The evident meaning of the Treaty of 1783 was, that the due west line from the Lake of the Woods should meet the boundary of Louisiana, and on this map that boundary is unmistakably indicated by the first French geographer of his day.

The east Branch of the Mississippi is set down as issuing from "Lac Missisacaigan," while a very 50 much larger river, with the words "Mississippi Riv." over it, is indicated as coming in from the north-west.

JOINT APPENDIX.
Sec. XII.
Miscellaneous.

Mr. S. J. Dawson on early maps of disputed territory.

It therefore follows that the east or Missisacaigan branch, although called the Mississippi now, was not the Mississippi of Delisle's time. The large river referred to corresponds apparently, in its lower sections, with what is now called the Minnesota River. The St. Croix River is represented with wonderful accuracy for such an early map. It is to be regretted that this map—being by so distinguished a geographer—is on so small a scale.

3. "A map of Canada and the north part of Louisiana, with adjacent countries. By Thos. Jefferys, Geographer to His Majesty, 1762. Published by Thos. Jefferys, Charing Cross, London."

This map is by an English author of some eminence, who, in 1760, had published a geographical and historical work on North America. It is but reasonable to believe that the representatives of Great Britain and the United States, in framing the Treaty of 1783, would have had the map of so distinguished a geographer before them. If they had, and were in any way guided by it, they would not have supposed that a due west line from the Lake of the Woods would intersect the waters of the stream now called the Mississippi, for the map shows a height of land and the waters of the Red River intervening between its sources and the parallel of 49°, or the due west line—and in this it is correct although, as might be expected from its early date, in error in detail.

On the map is a note from which it may be inferred that at the date at which it was issued (1762) the "Missouri" or "Mississippi" indicated one and the same river, or that the Missouri was known by the name either of "Missouri" or "Mississippi." The east branch—evidently the stream now known as the Mississippi—is represented as issuing from Lake Missisacaigan, while the main river is marked as coming from the west, with the words "Mississippi R." written over it. From this it is evident that the easterly branch was not known as the Mississippi in 1762.

4. "A map of the British Dominions in North America, according to the Treaty in 1763. By Peter Bell, Geographer, 1772."

On this map, what evidently is the tributary now known as the Mississippi, is called Lake River and it is represented as issuing from Lake Missisacaigan, which, from its position in reference to the waters near it, appears to be the Leech Lake of modern maps; from this lake it has a course of some two hundred miles to its confluence with the Mississippi.

The main river, marked as the boundary of Louisiana, extends north-westward to the parallel of 47° and meridian of 102°. To continue it still further, in the same direction, on the course of its general bearing, it would intersect the parallel of 49° west of the meridian of 106°, or nearly 500 miles west of the Lake of the Woods. This map was issued subsequent to the Treaty of Paris (1763), and it is remarkable, in so far as that it extends the supposed Mississippi, marking it as the boundary between Louisiana and Canada, further to the west, although much in the same direction as that indicated on previous maps; and this position for the boundary line and supposed Mississippi is kept up in the maps issued subsequently to Bell's—as will be seen on reference to Powaall's, D'Anville's and Kitchin's maps. In this it is reasonable to assume that he had been guided by the information which had then, no doubt, become general among geographers, as to the line of demarcation agreed upon, as the boundary of Louisiana, at the Treaty of Paris.

It is worthy of remark that the course of this supposed Mississippi of the Treaties, following it to the north westward, would make it coincide with the actual position of the Missouri for a considerable distance, at the great bend between the parallels of 47° and 48°, and the meridional lines of 101° and 104°.

5. "North America, from the French of M. D'Anville, improved with the English surveys made since the Peace."

This map, in so far as it shows the upper waters of the Mississippi and the boundary of Louisiana, is very like Bell's. The eastern branch, or Lake River, now called the Mississippi, issues from Lake Missisacaigan, with tributaries from the north flowing into that lake.

The Mississippi of the Treaty of Peace is represented as stretching off, at an angle of about 15° or 20° to the north of west, which would carry it to the parallel of 49°, about the meridian of 105°, or over four hundred and fifty miles to the west of the Lake of the Woods. As if to mark emphatically which branch was to be known as the Mississippi, the words "Mississippi R." are set down over the west branch—above its confluence with the east branch.

These two maps—Bell's and D'Anville's—published after the Peace of Paris, afford conclusive evidence as to the line intended for the boundary between Louisiana and Canada. It certainly was not the tributary to which the term Mississippi is applied at the present time.

6. "Pownall's Map of the British Possessions in North America, A.D. 1775."

This map shows the eastern branch of the Mississippi issuing from "Red Lake," evidently the Missisacagan of Jeffery's, Bell's, and D'Anville's maps. It is, like the two last, quite conclusive as to the boundary of Louisiana running off to the west, and it is equally clear as to the sources of the eastern branch (or Mississippi of the present time) falling short of the latitude of the Lake of the Woods. Governor Pownall would likely have had access to official documents bearing on the matter, and with his map of 1775 before them, it will hardly be supposed that the framers of the Treaty of 1783 could have been led away with the idea that a due west line from the Lake of the Woods could intersect the river now called the Mississippi.

7. "North America, wherein are particularly distinguished the British Dominions, the United States, and the adjacent Spanish Territories. By Thomas Kitchin, Hydrographer to His Majesty. London: Published by Laurie & White, No. 53 Fleet Street, as the Act directs, 12th May, 1794."

This is an elaborate map, carefully compiled no doubt from all the sources of information available at the time at which it was issued.

It derives additional interest from having been published subsequent to the Treaty of 1783, between Great Britain and the United States, for all the others were published before that date. It is consequently the only one of the series on which the due west line from the Lake of the Woods, forming the boundary between Canada and the United States, in that section could have been exhibited.

The eastern branch of the Mississippi, or Lake River, is shown as having its source a little to the north of the parallel of 47°, in Lake Missisacagan, and this lake corresponds very nearly with the actual position of Leech Lake, so that there can be no doubt of this Lake River being the tributary now known as the Mississippi.

As regards the upper waters generally, this map differs but little from Bell's map, and the Mississippi—marked on it as the boundary of Louisiana—would, if produced north-westward, on the general bearing on which the upper part is projected, as in the case of Bell's projection, reach the parallel of 49° west of the meridian of 105°.

It will be seen that on this map a line, marked as the boundary of the United States, is drawn due west from the Lake of the Woods, and that this line—applying the scale set down on the map—would be over two hundred miles north of the Mississippi, about the meridian of Fort Garry.

Regarding the position of the Mississippi, this map agrees with Bell's map of 1772, and with D'Anville's and Pownall's maps, while Jeffery's map of 1762 is perfectly clear as to a height of land and another river system intervening between the sources of the stream now known as the Mississippi and the due west line from the Lake of the Woods. [How, then, could those who framed the Treaty believe in the existence of a Mississippi east of the Red River, which would be cut by a due west line from the Lake of the Woods?]

8. "Delisle's Map of Canada, or New France, 1703." (Mr. Lindsey's Report.)

This map shows that at even as early a date as 1703, the Mississippi had been to some extent explored, as far at least as the latitude of Lake Superior.

What appears to be its principal easterly branch, is marked as issuing from "Missisacagan on Lac Buade," and flowing south-easterly to the main Mississippi. Its name on this map is Mendeouacanton, and it is clearly distinguished from the Mississippi, which latter is set down as coming, for a great distance, from the north-west.

This map is referred to chiefly to show that the tributary now called the Mississippi was not the Mississippi of the early explorers. In 1703, exploration had not extended so far to the north-west as to show much of the northern water-shed; but this early map of Delisle's contains a great deal that is valuable, although it does not further bear on the immediate question under consideration.

Mr. S. J. Dawson on early maps of disputed territory.

9. "Carte des Nouvelles découvertes dans l'ouest du Canada, dressée sur les Mémoires de M. de la Vérandrie et donnée au Dépôt de la Marine par M. de la Galissonière, 1750." (Mr. Lindsey's Report.)

This chart shows clearly that, in 1750, it was known that the country, for a considerable distance to the south of the latitude of the Lake of the Woods, was occupied by the water system of the Winnipeg; so that, with this map, or the information it conveys, before them, as it is reasonable to suppose it was, the representatives of Great Britain and the United States in framing the Treaty of 1783, could not have adopted a Mississippi as existing between the Lake of the Woods and Red River. Otherwise, it must be supposed that they believed in the strange phenomenon of a large river flowing for hundreds of miles to the south, between the two neighbouring rivers—one on either side of it—running to the north.

The description in the Treaty is however, perfectly intelligible, and would never have been misconstrued had these maps, now submitted to the Legislature, been generally accessible.

In reference to these maps, generally, they point to the Missouri, west of the great bend, as having been the Upper Mississippi of the Geographers of the last century, and this is accounted for by the fact that it was first explored from the direction of the Assiniboine, the tributaries of which interlace with those of the Missouri.

As early as 1742, the Chevalier de la Verandrie had crossed over from the Assiniboine, and explored the Upper Mississippi, as he named it, to the Rocky Mountains. On the 12th March, 1743, he took formal possession of the country, and interred a plate, bearing the arms of the King of France, on an eminence near his encampment.

At the date of the Treaty of 1763, the French traders, whose head-quarters were on the Red River of the North, had establishments on the Upper Mississippi (or Missouri of the present time), as well as on the neighbouring tributaries of the Assiniboine; but there seems then, and even to a much later period, to have been a considerable interval of unexplored country between the great bend of the Missouri, near the meridian of 100°, and the Mississippi, near its point of junction with the Minnesota River; and hence the error, continued on all the maps of the time, of making the Missouri or Upper Mississippi join the easterly branch, or what is now called the Mississippi, near its confluence with the Minnesota River.

In view of all the facts, there can be no doubt that the Missouri of the present time was the Upper Mississippi of the Geographers of the last century.

THE NORTH-WEST BOUNDARY OF CANADA, ON THE PARALLEL OF 49° NORTH LATITUDE, ACCORDING TO THE TREATY OF 1783, BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES.

It will doubtless be admitted that the maps to which reference has been made, extending, as to date, over a considerable period of time, and by different authors, some of whom were highly distinguished as geographers in their day, represent fairly the geographical knowledge existing at the date of the Treaty of 1783. Admitting this, it follows:

1st. That the diplomatists who framed the Treaty, knew perfectly well that the branch of the Mississippi River system, now called "the Mississippi," would not and could not have been intersected by a line running due west from the Lake of the Woods, because the maps of the time, which were their sole sources of information, agree in representing its most northerly waters as being far to the south of such a line.

2nd. That from the evidence of the maps, it is seen that they (the framers of the Treaty) had in view a supposed river, forming the boundary of Louisiana, which would be intersected by the due west line in question, somewhere about the meridian of 105° or 106°, or at a point over four hundred and fifty miles west of the Lake of the Woods.

3rd. That a branch or tributary of the Mississippi (or Missouri, rather, which is itself a branch of the Mississippi) called the White Earth River, is actually intersected by the due west line in question, within a comparatively short distance of the point at which the supposed river, represented on the maps as the boundary of Louisiana, and which it is evident they had in view, would have been intersected by that line.

Judging from these maps it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the true intent, meaning and spirit of the Treaty of 1783 was, that the western boundary of Canada and the United States, and the eastern limit of Louisiana, on the due west line, should be at a point upwards of four hundred and fifty miles west of the Lake of the Woods.

The assumption that the framers of the Treaty had in view any Mississippi to the east of the Red River, is quite untenable, for some of the best maps of the time, issued by the most distinguished geographers, represent the country east of the Red River, and far to the south of the due west line, as being occupied by another river system, as it really is; and all of them agree in marking the boundary of Louisiana, which was the real line to be reached, as leading far to the west of the Red River.

In view of these maps, it cannot for a moment be conceived that the geographers of those days had any idea, or ever represented, that a due west line from the north-west point of the Lake of the Woods would intersect the Mississippi, east of the Red River; nor can it be imagined that diplomatists, in framing an international Treaty, would adopt a conclusion relative to a matter of geography, different from that presented by the most eminent geographers of the nations interested.

It has been suggested that the difficulty would be best met by drawing a line due north from the source of what is now called the Mississippi to the parallel of 49°, but such a line would intersect that parallel, to the east of the west coast of the Lake of the Woods, so that a due west line from that lake would meet neither this north line nor the Mississippi.

But what need to make or adopt imaginary lines, or quibble about the word "Mississippi," which is in fact the general name of an immense river system, when the true spirit and even letter of the Treaty can be met by adopting the line already run on a due west course, as expressed in the Treaty, "to the Mississippi," or at least to its first waters at the White Earth River, which this "due west line" does intersect, only a little way to the west of the supposed Mississippi which the representatives of the nations interested, as shown by the maps of the time, intended as the western boundary of Canada and the United States, and the eastern limit of Louisiana, on a "due west line from the Lake of the Woods."

They would not surely have come four hundred miles to the eastward of the boundary recognized on the maps, to adopt a Mississippi where they knew that no such river existed, and give a vast extent of territory to Louisiana, which was then in the possession of a foreign European Power, and the enlargement of which might have affected both British and United States interests.

RESEARCHES IN ENGLAND AND FRANCE BY THE DOMINION AND ONTARIO GOVERNMENTS RESPECTIVELY, 1877-1878.

FROM MESSRS. BISCHOFF, BOMPAS AND BISCHOFF, AGENTS OF THE DOMINION.

4 GREAT WINCHESTER STREET,
LONDON, E. C., 22nd March, 1877.

SIR,—We beg to report that we have been engaged almost continuously since the date of your last letter in searching the records of the Hudson's Bay Company, and regret that our efforts have not been crowned with more satisfactory results.

Researches in England,
1877-78.

The only important documents which we have found are two maps, which we did not get in time to despatch by this mail, but which shall be forwarded to you by the next.

The first and smaller of these maps defines the boundary of the Province of Quebec as settled after the Treaty of Utrecht,—a red line being drawn, and the words "The French and English respectively not to pass this line" being written thereon.

Messrs. Bis-
chhoff, Bompas

The second is a large map of North America, published in 1755, by one Mitchell, pursuant to Act of Parliament, and under authority of the Board of Trade. This map draws the boundary line between the Hudson's Bay Territory and New France as extending along "the height of land" as far as the "Lake of the Woods," and there stops, owing as we imagine to there not being at that period any accurate knowledge of the country lying westward of that point. You will observe that at the point where the boundary line stops, it is running in a south-westerly direction, and here consequently, if continued, would completely cut off from New France the whole of the Red River Territory.

* Both these maps are important, as showing that after the Treaty of Utrecht a boundary was fixed between the English and French Territories, as far as knowledge of the country would enable it to be done, and that the claims of the French westward so far as the Rocky Mountains, and northward to the Saskatchewan, must be without foundation, as that at the date of the map (1755) the country was only known to geographers to points far short of the pretended limits.

We also found another map of the Province of Quebec, according to Royal proclamation, of 7th October, 1763, from the French surveys. We have not sent this map, as the north-westerly boundary is the same as in the first above-mentioned map, ending at the corner of Lake Nipissing, lat. 46°, long. 78°.

Messrs.
Bischoff, Bompas and Bischoff to
Hon. R. W.
Scott, 22nd
March, 1877.

From a perusal of the Company's journals, we find that it was not the practice of the Company's servants to go up country to purchase peltry from the Indians; but the Indians came down to York and other forts on the bay and there exchanged their furs, etc., for the Company's merchandise. It appears that the "pedlers" [French traders—Coureurs des Bois], as they were called, from Quebec had for some time prior to the year 1773 gone up into the Red River district, and by so doing had cut off the Indians and bought their furs, and so prevented their taking them to York Fort and the other settlements and forts on the Bay.

It was to prevent this that in the year 1774, one Mr. Hearne was sent down to establish a station up country, which he accordingly did at Cumberland House. In the same year, Matthew Cocking started on a journey to the Red River district, but no settlement was made there until some 15 years later. In his journal of this journey he mentions "that pedlers swarmed there every year." "An old pedler called 'Young Deer' residing there;" that "the natives were corrupted by the pedlers having so long resided there," and speaks of Franceways settlement on the Saskatchewan River.

These pedlers were both English and French, but seem to have come from Quebec, though there does not seem to be any authority for alleging that they were the discoverers of this Territory.

One Joseph La France, a French Canadian [Canadese] Indian, passed through the Red River territory and Saskatchewan, on his way to York Fort, in the years 1739-42, and in his account of the 30 journey makes no mention of having met any pedlers, or other foreigners, but only natives.

This story is set out in the Appendix No. 2, to the report of the Committee of the House of Commons, in 1749, a copy of which has been sent by the Secretary of the Hudson's Bay Company. A map of the country was also prepared by a Mr. Dobbs, who published the story, under the instructions of Joseph La France. It is fairly accurate, but of course shews no boundaries. The whole country westward of Lake Winnipeg is left blank. The principal importance attaching to this story, we think is that it precludes the Quebec pedlers from claiming that district by right of discovery. In one part he says the French never pass into the countries adjoining Lac la Pluie.

The following are the dates of the establishment of the earlier posts of the Hudson's Bay Company in this district:—

We apprehend the maps, as coming direct from the custody of the Hudson's Bay Company, prove themselves. We have not taken extracts from the Post diaries, inasmuch as we can trace no direct evidence calculated to support counsel's theory of prior discovery by the Hudson's Bay Company, and the foregoing repulses [reflects] the general impression produced upon our minds by perusal of the Post 50

Diaries, as also of sundry published histories of the district, in the Company's Library, such as "Robson's Hudson's Bay," published 1752, "Remarks upon Captain Middleton's Defence, by Arthur Dobbs," 1744, and "Carver's Travels in North America," 1766.

As we have given the Company an undertaking that the two maps shall be returned to them when done with, we should deem it a favour if you will give directions for their receipt to be acknowledged on arrival, and for their return to us when done with.

FROM THE HON. SIR JOHN ROSE TO THE HON. ALEX. MACKENZIE.

BARTHOLOMEW LANE, E. C.

Sept. 26th, 1877.

The Minute of Council requesting that Mr. Crooks be accredited in reference to the boundary between Ontario and the Dominion, has reached me by last mail.

Sir John Rose to Hon. Alex. Mackenzie, 26th September, 1877;

You have already heard by my previous letter that Mr. Crooks had sailed. I may mention, however, that even if he had remained, I do not think any search would have thrown more light on the matter than his Government is already in possession of. I employed a gentleman for several weeks to search at the Colonial Office and Foreign Office, as well as the Rolls' Office, and the Hudson Bay archives, and every scrap of information bearing on it was, I think, sent out, either to Mr. Campbell, whilst he was Minister of the Interior, or to Mr. Scott some months ago. I mention this to satisfy the Ontario Government; as I believe that any further search would be attended with no result.

Believe me to be,

Yours ever faithfully,

JOHN ROSE.

The Hon. Alex. Mackenzie,

FROM MR. McDERMOTT, AN AGENT OF SIR JOHN ROSE.

SIR JOHN ROSE:

In accordance with your instructions, I have been engaged for some time past in searching among public documents, for papers or maps defining the western and northern boundaries of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. McDermott to Sir John Rose.

Having been informed that you had yourself investigated the collection of maps in the Foreign Office Library, the greater portion of which had been removed to the National Record Office in Rolls' Court, I commenced my search in the library of the latter department, receiving for several days the sole attention of Mr. Kingston, the librarian, whose assistance, I need hardly say, saved much time and labour. I may at once state that my search has been unsuccessful. The facts and quotations supplied by you have all been easily verified, but the closest search has given no clue to the discrepancies, and no additional information in regard to disputed points.

In the first place, with regard to the western boundary line of the Province of Ontario, as laid down by 14 George III. Cap. S3, no minute of the Privy Council, nor any public documents of that time, give any definition of the vague term "Northwards," nor do any of the maps of Canada indicate any boundary whatever in this region. The Second Edition of Mitchell's Map of 1755, in this respect does not differ in any particular from the First Edition. One of Mitchell's maps in the collection, I may add, is the identical one used by the Commissioners in settling the boundary line after the revolutionary war, and on it the western boundary line of the United States follows the course of the Mississippi, northwards from its conflux with the Ohio.

Researches in

Mr. McDermott to Sir
John Rose.

With reference to the district in Michigan governed by Mr. Kay, I found among the papers of Governor Haldimand a Petition from the inhabitants of Detroit, forwarded in 1783 by a Lieutenant-Governor Hay; but amidst this very voluminous correspondence I could find no further mention of this gentleman; and no patent of his appointment exists. Such patent, I am told, would certainly be upon the Rolls, had his appointment emanated from this side.

As to the line of division between Upper Canada and Hudson's Bay Territory, I can find no explanation of the discrepancy pointed out by you between the definitions of the boundaries of Upper and Lower Canada, as given in the Proclamation of Governor Alured Clarke in 1791, and that assigned in the Letters Patent of the Earl of Elgin in 1846. I have read carefully through the draft instructions to the Earl of Elgin and all the correspondence relating to his appointment, but can find no mention of any reason for extending his jurisdiction to the shores of Hudson's Bay, nor indeed any allusion to boundaries other than incidentally to matters in dispute between Canada and New Brunswick. The explanation given by you that the difference may be due to a slip of the pen would seem to be correct. Subsequent research among the papers at the Colonial Office affords no other explanation. I may mention here that the Order in Council dividing Upper and Lower Canada is dated 24th August, 1791, upon a report from the Lords of Committee of Council, dated 17th August, 1791.

The boundaries of the Hudson's Bay Company, as defined by the Treaty of Utrecht, are shown on both editions of Mitchell's Map as following the height of land which forms the watershed of rivers running southward to the Lakes or northward to the Bay. I do not find, however, in the Records and Correspondence of the Commissioners of Trade and Plantations (which consists of documents in French, Latin and English) any mention of a decision arrived at by the Commissioners appointed to fix this boundary matter and other disputed questions. Neither could the Secretary of the Hudson's Bay Company afford me any information on this point. He states that the Company have no maps illustrating the question, and that it was always understood that their territory comprised the land in which the waters flowed to the northwards, thus fixing the boundary at the height of land before mentioned. He says he will look through the documents of the Company, but he holds out no expectation of finding anything conclusive of the matter. Should he do so, he will at once communicate with you.

Under these circumstances I have thought it best to communicate at once to you the result of my enquiries. Mr. Kingston, the Librarian of the Record Office, joins me in the belief that no more precise information exists on the subject, and all older maps show that so little was known at the time, of the regions in question, that inaccuracies and discrepancies in the description of boundaries would appear to be inevitable.

FROM LIEUT.-COL. SCOBLE, AGENT OF THE GOVERNMENT OF ONTARIO.

TORONTO, March 18th, 1878.

SIR,—It having been deemed important that a search should be made for further evidence bearing on the limits of Ontario to the west and north, I received instructions from you on the 16th October last, to proceed to Paris and London for the purpose of searching the archives relating to the history of the country, with a view to procure such further evidence.

Arriving in London on the 30th October, I presented my letter of credence to Sir John Rose, and by him was furnished with a letter to the Secretary of State for the Colonies; by whom, upon learning that my immediate intention was to proceed to Paris, I was furnished with a letter to Lord Trenton, Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, who gave me letters to the British Ambassador in Paris. With these credentials, I left London for Paris on the 3rd November, and on the 5th November I presented my letters to Lord Lyons, and was furnished by him with letters to the Minister of Marine and Colonies, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and the Minister of the Interior. I lost no time in presenting these, and stating the objects of my visit to the various Ministers; but owing to the unsettled state of French politics, and the changes in the personnel of the Ministry (there having been five successive changes of Ministry during the month of November), I found it very difficult to procure immediate attention. Pending the official permission to search the public archives, I busied myself in the splendid libraries of Paris, where I found much information which was collaterally useful to me, and where I saw and made notes of large numbers of maps published between 1713 and 1763. I was also sufficiently fortunate to establish friendly relations with M. Pierre Margry, whose historical writings upon the early history of North America are so well known. Through his advice, and aided by his extensive knowledge of all matters relating to the early history of Canada, I was enabled to commence my researches at a point very far in advance of that which I should otherwise have done.

Having at last procured the required permission to search the archives of the Marine and Colonies, a new difficulty presented itself. Monsieur Le Bon, the Sous-Directeur of the Department, was one of the Commissioners appointed to arbitrate between France and England upon the question of the Newfoundland Fisheries, and I found it difficult to disabuse his mind of the idea that my investigations had some relation to this subject. Consequently, my researches were carried on under certain restrictions. All the extracts I required were submitted to his eyes before I was allowed to use them, and copies were made, by the clerks of the Department, of such matter only as he judged could not be used in relation to Newfoundland. I am of the opinion, however, that the copies of the documents which I forwarded to you contain all the evidence that can be procured from that source which is material for the present purpose. I am sustained in this belief by the opinion of Mons. Margry, who was aware of the nature of my mission, and with whom I conversed frequently as to the discoveries I made, and at the existence of farther evidence.

With respect to the reference which was made in letters that passed between the Marquis de Torey and Mr. Prior, and between Mr. Prior and Lord Bolingbroke in 1713, to a map or maps that had been furnished to the Commissioners of both countries, defining the extreme pretensions of each, the most diligent search on my part, both in London and Paris, failed to bring these maps to light, although I was sufficiently fortunate to discover the original letters which accompanied them. I found a map, however, in the Depôt des Cartes de la Marine, in Paris, which bore certain autograph lines upon it, that were marked as lines "according to the pretensions of the English" and "according to the memoir of M. D'Auteuil" respectively. The first of these lines is that claimed by the memorial of the British Commissaries presented through Lord Stair in 1719, as being the boundary desired by the Commissaries appointed by Great Britain under the Treaty of Utrecht. The second is probably that boundary which France, as a last resort, was willing to concede. The lines are drawn upon a map published by Guillaume de L'Isle in 1703, and the lines in question doubtless furnished the data for the lines shewn in the subsequent editions of De L'Isle's maps, which, however, followed D'Auteuil's memoir more closely than the original map. M. D'Auteuil was, at the time of his "Memoires," "Procureur-General in Canada, and was engaged in Paris, in and after 1719, in the preparation of the French case for consideration of the Commissaries under the Treaty of Utrecht.

During my stay in Paris I examined some hundreds of maps, many of them original, relating to French discoveries in N. America, and made full notes as to the information furnished by upwards of sixty of them. As, however, subsequent research proved many of them to have been geographically incorrect, and they bore little or no value as historical references, I did not consider it necessary to send you more than a few of the most important.

Returning from Paris to London on the 9th December, I commenced my researches by looking at the maps in the Colonial and Foreign Offices, but without finding any maps of special value in reference to boundaries.

I received much assistance in my search in the Foreign Office from E. Hertslet, Esq., C.B., whose acquaintance with the Treaties concluded by Great Britain, enabled him to give me much valuable information. My researches served to prove that no authentic map exists in the Colonial Office, the Foreign Office or the Public Records Office, defining the extent of country ceded by the French in 1763

I found a map published by Arrowsmith, in 1795, in the Foreign Office. This map is inscribed "By permission to the Hon. Governor and Company of Adventurers trading into Hudson's Bay, in testimony of their liberal communications," and gives no boundary under the Treaty of Utrecht, but bears the letter U in Upper Canada, on the parallel of 50°, and the whole word "Upper" north of the height of land; whilst in an edition of the same map, dated 1795, but, as I ascertained from the publisher, published in 1850, the words "Upper Canada" have been erased from their original position, and re-engraved close to the shore of Lake Superior, south of the height of land.

My researches in the Public Records Office were materially aided by Mr. Kingston, the librarian, through whose kindness I procured copies of important documents and correspondence having reference to the English Commission, under the Treaty of Utrecht.

Some of the documents forwarded from France having failed to reach you, I returned to Paris on the 11th January, completed my researches, and going back to London, left for Canada on the 25th February, arriving here on the 15th inst.

In conclusion, I beg respectfully to point out the difficulties which encompass research into such a matter as that with which I have been charged. The examination of the records of nations like those of Great Britain and France, must needs be laborious, even under the most favorable circumstances, but considering that I had been preceded in my researches by many gentlemen, who gave much time and study to the subject, I feel that I have been fortunate in being able to bring to your notice documents that have never been produced before in all the course of the discussion of the Boundary question, as to the claims of the Hudson's Bay Company, and as between the Dominion and this Province.

EXTRACTS FROM THE SPEECHES OF THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF ONTARIO ON THE OPENING OF THE LEGISLATURE, 1874-1878,

AS TO THE REASONS FOR DELAY IN THE MATTER OF THE BOUNDARY ARBITRATION.

Speeches of the Lieut.-
Gov., 1874-8.

1874.—The collection of evidence with respect to our North-West boundary is still going on, and the evidence for and against our claims will soon, I trust, be in a position to be referred to some tribunal for adjudication. * * * * *

1875.—Since the dissolution of the last House, the question of the northerly and westerly boundaries of the Province has continued to receive the attention of the Government. Informal negotiations have taken place with respect to both a compromise line and the arbitration which the Legislature authorized, but no final result has been arrived at; meanwhile, steps have been taken for obtaining some additional evidence expected to be of value.

1877.—For the determination of the Provincial Boundaries by the agreed method of an arbitration the appointment of a new arbitrator on behalf of the Province recently became necessary, the distinguished Judge who was to occupy that position having requested to be relieved from it. Meanwhile, a provisional line had been mutually determined upon, in terms of the resolution of the Legislative Assembly at a former session; a considerable amount of additional materials for the ascertainment of the ultimate boundaries had been collected; a new and an exhaustive statement of the case of Ontario had been prepared; and a considerable part of the documentary and other evidence affecting the questions at issue had been printed. Almost everything is now ready for the final decision, within a few months, by able and competent referees, of questions which for two centuries have given occasion to keen controversy, and often to fierce conflicts, between the nations, as well as the great public bodies, who have from time to time claimed portions of the disputed territory.

1878.—There has been another unexpected delay in procuring a settlement of the important subject of the boundaries between Ontario and the adjoining territories of the Dominion; the absence from America of the distinguished gentleman selected as third arbitrator having made a settlement during the year impossible. The delay has been made use of to collect further facts and documents from the public archives in London and Paris, as well as from the records in possession of the Hudson's Bay Company, and from various public libraries in Europe and America. The result of these and other investigations have been embodied in an important supplement to the papers already printed for the use of the arbitrators. Copies will be laid before you. The three arbitrators are believed to be now ready to enter on the arbitration as soon as may suit the arrangements of the two Governments.

SURRENDER OF LOUISIANA AND THE ILLINOIS TO THE CROWN—LOUISIANA A DEPENDENCY OF CANADA—1731.

Louis XV. to M.M. Beauharnois and Hocquart.

Marly, May 8, 1731.

They (M.M. Beauharnois and Hocquart) are to be informed that His Majesty has accepted the surrender of the Province of Louisiana and of the Illinois country, from the Company of the Indies, to date from 1st of July next. They will find hereunto annexed copies of the arrêt on the subject. That Province will in future be dependent on the General Government of New France, as it was previous to the grant to the Company.

His Majesty has not determined whether the Illinois country is to remain dependent on the Government of Louisiana. That may, nevertheless, be most convenient, as the Governor-General will always be equally able to send his orders to it, and to be informed of what occurs there in regard to the Indians. M.M. de Beauharnois and Hocquart will examine whether it be proper to leave this country in its present state, or to disconnect it from the Government of Louisiana, as was the case before it had been granted to the Company. They will be careful to report on that point, and to state the reasons for and against, whereupon His Majesty will communicate his intentions. (Book Arb. Docs. p. 43.)

TAKING POSSESSION OF THE COUNTRIES OF THE OUTAOÛAS AND OF THE INDIAN NATIONS OF THE NORTH AND WEST, AT SAULT STE. MARIE, 1671.

M. PERROT'S ACCOUNT.*

M. Intendant Talon asked me if I would consent to go up the country of the Outaoûas, as interpreter, and to lead there a sub-delegate that he would appoint, in order to take possession of the same. I told him that I was always ready to obey him, and that my services were at his disposal. Therefore I left with M. de Saint Lusson, his sub-delegate, and we reached Montreal, where we remained till the beginning of October (1670). We were compelled, in the course of our journey, to winter amongst the Amikouïets; the Saulteurs spent the winter also in the same localities.

They were notified to go back to their homes as early in the spring as possible, in order to listen to what M. de Saint Lusson had to say to them and to all the tribes in the name of the King. I despatched Indians also to inform the Northern tribes that they should not fail to be in their country. I dragged and removed afterwards a canoe on the other side of the island, where I landed. . . . Thence we left for La Baye des Renards et Miamis, which is not very far, and I made all the chiefs come to the Sault Ste. Marie, where we intended to erect the posts and affix the arms of France, in order to take possession of the country of the Outaoûas. That event took place in the year 1669 [1671].

I went, on the fifth of the month of May, to the Sault Ste. Marie, accompanied by the principal Chiefs of the Pontéiatamis, Sakis, Puans, and Malhommis (Malouminés or Folles-Avoines); those of the Foxes (Outagamis), Mascouetechs (Mascoutins), Kikabous and Miamis did not go beyond La Baie. . . . I found at my arrival, not only the Chiefs of the North, but also all the Kiristinons, Monsonis, and the Indians of entire neighbouring villages; the Chiefs of the Nepissings were there also, as well as the Amikouïets and all the Saulteurs who inhabited the locality. The post was set up in their presence, and the arms of France were affixed thereto with the assent of all the tribes, who, not being able to write, gave us presents instead of their signatures; they declared thus that they were putting themselves under the protection and dominion of the King. Procès verbaux were drawn on the subject of this taking of possession, upon which I signed as interpreter, with Sr. de Saint Lusson as sub-delegate; the Revd. Father Missionaries Dablon, Allouex, Dreüillette and Marquet [Marquette] signed afterwards, and, below, the Frenchmen who were on the spot, engaged in the fur trade. The proceedings were in conformity with the instructions given by M. Talon. All those tribes went back afterward to their homes, and lived during many years without any trouble on either side.

I have omitted to say that the Hurons and the Outaoûas did not arrive until after the taking of possession; because they had fled from Chagouamikon. . . . They were informed of what had taken place, and they assented, like all the others, to all that had been decided or concluded.†

* Mémoire sur les Mœurs, Coutumes, et Religion des Sauvages de l'Amérique Septentrionale, par Nicholas Perrot, pp. 126-8.

† M. Nicholas Perrot, a man of good family, was born in Canada. He was accustomed from childhood to the excitements and incidents of border life. Being for a time in the service of the Jesuits, he became familiar with most of the Indian tribes upon the borders of the Great Lakes, and with their customs and language. These held him in extraordinary esteem, and accorded him the same rights and prerogatives as their native chiefs. He appears to have established the first trading post on the Upper Mississippi. From 1665 to 1701 his name was a familiar one to both French and natives, and he used his influence with the latter largely in the interests of Canada, whose successive Governors courted his services. His family resided at Beaneourt (near Three Rivers), where he himself died during the first years of the 18th century. (Mémoire sur les Mœurs; Neill's Hist. of Minnesota.)

M. PIERRE MARGRY'S ACCOUNT.

[M. Margry is custodian of the Archives of the Department of Marine and Colonies at Paris. The present is from his article on Louis Joliet.]

Joliet witnessed on the 16th July, 1671, the act by which Simon François d'Aumont, Sieur de Saint Lusson, took possession at the Sault Ste. Marie of all the adjacent country. Saint Lusson had been ordered to go to this country in order to try to discover mines of any kind, especially those of copper. Talon, besides, had instructed Saint Lusson, wherever he would pass, to take possession of the country inhabited, and to plant there the cross of Christ and the arms of France.....

Saint Lusson, on his arrival at Sault Ste. Marie, a Jesuit mission, met the Achiponai, the Malomechs, and the Nougets, who inhabited the vicinity. There he had collected as many of the surrounding tribes as he could; they were fourteen in number, as follows: besides the nations of Lake Superior,¹⁰ the Banabeouik, the Makousitck, the Poulteatomis, the Oumamominis, the Sassassonacottons, which inhabited the Baie des Puants.

These Indians promised to inform the Illinois, Maskoutins, Outagomis, and other tribes of that taking of possession; whilst the Christinaux, the Assenipoels, the Oumonsomi, the Outawas, Bousscottons the Niscaks, and Masquikonkioeks, all inhabiting the Northern lands, and present at the Sault, were instructed to announce the same to the tribes with which they were in relations, and that were supposed to reside in great numbers on the shores of the sea.

Saint Lusson having done, read his commission by Nicholas Perrot, King's interpreter, in the presence of these Indians, the Jesuit Fathers and a few Frenchmen; erected a cross as a proof of his desire that Christianity should be fruitful in these localities. The Arms of France had been affixed²⁰ near this cross on a cedar tree.

Saint Lusson had said three times, and with a loud voice: That in the name of the Most High, Mighty and Most Powerful King Louis, fourteenth of that name, Most Christian King of France and Navarre, he took possession of the place of Sainte Marie du Sault, as well as of Lake Huron, Lake Superior, Ecaontoton Island, and of all the other countries, rivers, lakes, and streams contiguous and adjacent to those already discovered or to be discovered, limited on one side by the seas of the North and West, and on the other by the Sea of the South, in all their length. Every time that Saint Lusson uttered these words he concluded them, raising a piece of turf, with a shout of Vive le Roi, which was repeated by the whole assembly of French and Indians. He declared afterwards to all those present that in the future they would be subjects of the King, that they would be governed by his laws, and³⁰ that no other power could occupy this country without incurring his displeasure and the effect of his arms.

Joliet signed, on this occasion, after Nicholas Perrot, the act that was drawn of this taking of possession. The other Frenchmen were, the Rev. Father Claude d'Ablon, Superior of the Missions of those countries; the Rev. Father Gabriel Dreüillettes, the Rev. Father Claude Allouez, the Rev. Father André, Jacques Maugras, inhabitant of Three Rivers, Pierre Moreau, Sieur de la Taupine, soldier of the garrison of the Castle of Quebec, Denis Masse, Thanevis de Chavigny, Sieur de la Chevrière, Jacques Lagillier, Jean Mayséré, Pierre Porteret, Robert Duprat, Vital Oriol, Gabriel Bonhomme, &c.

Talon, Intendant of Canada, to take possession, in the King's name, of the countries, lands, lakes and rivers, which lie between the banks of the River St. Lawrence as far as the shores of the Straits of the Fretum Davis, including Hudson's Bay, and adjacent lands and seas, being at Missknouto, Nagasit, places where the Indians meet to trade, and at the River Némiskau, which rises in Lake Némiskau, the residence of Captain Kiaskou, Chief of all the Indians inhabiting the North Sea and Hudson's Bay, and on the 9th of July, 1672,

On the 19th of the same month, being at the River Minahigouskaé, Sossibahourat, Captain of the Mistasirenois, having consented, they did set up in like manner the said arms, after having turned up a sod of earth, pulled up some grass, planted some shrubs, and performed other necessary ceremonies. They made known to the Indian Nations, in their language, that they subjected them to the French nation, and that they should acknowledge in future King Louis XIV. for their Monarch and Sovereign Lord.

In witness whereof, the said minute was signed by Father Albanel, Sieur de St. Simon, and by Sebastian Provero; and the chiefs of each Indian nation, to the number of eleven, made their hieroglyphical marks.

ORDINANCE OF THE FRENCH KING RESPECTING THE FUR TRADE, 1683.†

During this year an Ordinance of the King was promulgated, relating to the tax upon the fur trade, which provided, that all merchants and settlers of New France, who purchase beaver, moose, and peltries, in Hudson's Bay, Percé Island, and other parts of New France, Acadia excepted, shall be bound to bring said beaver and moose to Quebec, that they may be paid for them, and one-fourth retained for the Farmers of the Revenue.

MILITARY EXPEDITION OF THE CHEVALIER DE TROYES, OVERLAND TO HUDSON'S BAY, 1686.‡

Seventy Canadians had been selected to form part of the expedition, and they were to be commanded by the Sieurs d'Iberville, de Sainte Hélène and de Marincourt, all sons of Charles Le Moine. Thirty soldiers were added to them, and they were under the command of MM. de Troyes, Duchesnois and Catalogne. Father Sylvie accompanied them, trusting to be useful not only to the French but also to the Christianaux, and other northern tribes. The river were frozen, and the earth was covered with snow when that small party of vigorous men left Montreal in order to ascend the Ottawa River as far as the height of land, and, thence, to go down to St. James' Bay. . . . They arrived in the beginning of April at the Long Sault, where they prepared some canoes in order to go up the Ottawa River; from Lake Temiscamingue they went through small rivers, and after having passed many portages they reached the great Lake Abbitibi, near the entrance of which they built a small fort of stockades, where they left three Canadians; they continued then their course towards St. James' Bay.

GOVERNOR D'IBERVILLE ON THE COUNTRY OF THE MISSISSIPPI, 1702.||

THE RIVER WABASH.—The River Wabash, as far as I know, for more than one hundred and twenty miles, is not inhabited. I wish to possess it, and have it occupied by the Illinois, who will hunt buffalo, deer, and similar animals which swarm the environs. Where the Illinois now are they are of no service, being unwilling any longer to enry on the beaver trade. Some people may say, as I have heard it said, that they can hunt buffalo in their own country, but I do not think it would be possible. If they hunt on the Wabash it will be easy to transport the hides and tallow.

MASCOUTENS, KIKAPOUS, MIAMIS.—The Illinois having removed, we would cause it to be occupied by the Mauseoutens and Kikapous. This would bring four hundred and fifty men upon the rivers which empty into the Illinois and Mississippi. They now can only hunt the beaver, which they sell at the Bay of the Puans and in the country of the Illinois.

The Miamis, who have left the banks of the Mississippi and gone to Chicago on account of the beaver, and those who are at Ortithipeatony, and at the St. Joseph, could readily remove to the Illinois, where they would join one hundred of their nation who are still at Ouseonsin, on the Mississippi.

The Miamis, Mauseoutens, and Kikapous, who were formerly on the Mississippi, placed upon the Illinois or lower down, will withdraw from Canada yearly a commerce of fifteen thousand livres, the Illinois ten thousand, and the Sioux thirty thousand yearly. If Canada did not desire to trade with the Fox tribe, they would return to the Mississippi, and that would take away from the Canadian trade ten thousand yearly.

D'Iberville on the country of the Mississippi, 1702.

THE SIOUX.—If the Sioux remain in their own country they are useless to us, being too distant. We could have no commerce with them except that of the beaver. M. Le Sueur, who goes to France to give an account of this country, is the proper person to make these movements. He estimates the Sioux at four thousand families, who could settle upon the Missouri.

MAHAS, OTTOES, IOWAYS.—He has spoken to me of another, which he calls the Mahas, composed of more than twelve hundred families; the Ayooes (Ioways) and the Octootatas, their neighbours, are about three hundred families. They occupy the lands between the Mississippi and the Missouri, about one hundred leagues from the Illinois. These savages do not know the use of arms, and a descent might be made upon them in a river, which is beyond the Wabash on the west.

ASSINIBOIN, CNISTINEAUX.—The Assinibouel, Quenistinos, and people of the north, who are upon the rivers which fall into the Mississippi, and trade at Fort Nelson (Hudson's Bay), are about four hundred men. We could prevent their going there if we wish.

VALUE OF INDIAN COMMERCE.—In four or five years we can establish a commerce with these savages of sixty or eighty thousand buffalo skins; more than one hundred thousand deer skins, which will produce, delivered in France, more than two million four hundred thousand livres yearly. One might obtain from a buffalo skin, four or five pounds of wool, which sells for twenty sous; two pounds of horse hair at ten sous. Besides, from smaller peltries, two hundred thousand livres can be made yearly.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE DOMESTICATION OF THE TRIBES.—The savage tribes located in the places that I have marked out, make it necessary to establish three posts on the Mississippi; one at the Arkansas, another at the Wabash, and the third at the Missouri. At each post it would be proper to have an officer, with a detachment of ten soldiers, with a sergeant and corporal. All Frenchmen should be allowed to settle there with their families, and trade with the Indians, and they might establish tanneries for properly dressing the buffalo and deer skins for transportation.

No Frenchman should be allowed to follow the Indians in their hunts, as it tends to keep them hunters, as is seen in Canada; and when they are in the woods, they do not desire to become tillers of the soil. * * *

I have said nothing in this memoir of which I have not personal knowledge, or the most reliable sources. The most of what I propose is founded upon personal reflection, in relation to what might be done for the defence and advancement of the colony. * * *

It will be absolutely necessary that the King should define the limits of this country in relation to the Government of Canada. It is impossible that the Commandant of the Mississippi should have a report of those who inhabit the rivers that fall into the Mississippi, and principally those of the River Illinois.

The Canadians intimate to the savages that they ought not to listen to us, but to the Governor of Canada, who always speaks to them with large presents; that the Governor of the Mississippi is mean and never sends them anything. This is true, and what I cannot do. It is imprudent to accustom the savages to be spoken to by presents, for, with so many, it would cost the King more than the revenue derived from the trade. When they come to us it will be necessary to bring them in subjection, make them no presents, and compel them to do what we wish, as if they were Frenchmen.

The Spaniards have divided the Indians into parties on this point, and we can do the same. When one nation does wrong we can cease to trade with them, and threaten to draw down the hostility of other Indians. We rectify the difficulty by having missionaries, who will bring them into obedience secretly.

The Illinois and Maseoutens have detained the French canoes they find upon the Mississippi, saying that the Governors of Canada have given them permission. I do not know whether this is so; but if true it follows that we have not the liberty to send any one on the Mississippi.

M. le Sueur would have been taken if he had not been the strongest. Only one of the canoes he sent to the Sioux was plundered.....

LA HARPE ON THE FRENCH IN LOUISIANA, 1699-1721.*

(1690.) M. le Sueur also came passenger in Gionde [Dec.]. He had acquired celebrity by his travels in Canada, and was now sent on the part of M. L'Huillier, Farmer-General, to make a settlement on the Mississippi, and to work some mines there which he had discovered some years.

(1700.) On the 19th [Feb.], MM. d'Iberville and Bienville, with M. Dugué and ten marines, arrived at the village of the Bayagoulas. On the same day M. le Sueur, who had set out on his journey to the Scioux Nations, also arrived there.

(1705.) On the 16th November, two canoes with voyageurs arrived from the Illinois. One of them was M. Lauraine, who had been to the Missouri River. He gave an account of the nations that inhabited that country, as well as some Spanish settlements on the frontier of Mexico.

(1706.) On the 16th [Jan.] Father Gracio, a Jesuit, returned from the Illinois, severely wounded. He had much trouble in making his escape, as that nation had declared war against the French.

(1713.) At the time of the transfer [to M. Crozat] there were in the colony four hundred persons, including twenty negroes, and three hundred head of cattle.

(1717.) In the month of August, 1717, a company was formed in France under the title of the "Western Company." At this period there were in the colony seven hundred persons, and four hundred head of cattle. They had entirely neglected to cultivate the land.

(1718.) In the beginning of October, M. de Boisbrillant [sic] set out to take command in the Illinois; and at the same time M. de la Harpe embarked with fifty men for his concession at Cadodouquia, on Red River, with orders to establish a post there and to ascertain the number of Indian tribes in that country.

(1719.) On the 29th December, M. de Bienville, received a letter from M. Dutisne, dated Kaskaskias, November 22, 1719, with an account of his travels to the village of the Missouris by the river and to the villages of the Osages and the Panis by land. He observed that the water of the Missouri had a strong current, was muddy, and filled with floating timber. The country was beautiful and well wooded. That two rivers from the west, the Osage and Blue Rivers, emptied into the Missouri. At a distance of eighty leagues from the mouth of the Osage are situated the village of that nation, in the neighbourhood of which there are a great number of lead mines. In travelling west he crossed very high mountains, and many streams falling into the Missouri and the Mississippi. That from Kaskaskias to the Osages is 120 leagues. This nation is not stationary like the Missouris, but spend the winter in hunting buffalo. They are stout and well made, and great warriors. The chiefs are absolute in their villages. Lead mines are abundant in their country, but they are unacquainted with the uses of

M. Bernard de la Harpe was a French officer of distinction, who went to Louisiana in 1718, to settle a colony on the Red River. He built a fort in 1719 near Natchitoches, whence he explored the country of Texas, as far as the Rio Grande. He returned to France in 1723, where he wrote his Journal.

it. From the Osages to the Pinis villages is forty leagues in a north-west direction, and he passed over prairies and plains filled with buffalo. They are not civilized, but are accessible by making them a few presents. In fifteen days he reached the Padouchas, who are a very brave and warlike nation. Here M. Dutisne erected the arms of the King, 27th September, 1719. . . .

M. Bena d de la Harpe returned to Mobile from Red River on the 26th January, 1720, after having established a post at the village of Cadodaquious, (sic).

It has been previously stated that he arrived in Louisiana in the Month of August, 1718, and set out for Red River with fifty men. He returned to New Orleans the following October, and on the 10th December again he set out for Red River, with a detachment of troops, to establish a fort among the Cadodaquious. When he arrived at Natchitoches (where a fort is built), he found M. Blondel in command, and Father Manual at the mission of the Aayes, about nine leagues distant.

(1720). The Western Company recommended them (the Company's directors) to have a good understanding with M. de Vandreuil, Governor of Canada, in regard to the wars with the Indian; ordered that the post established by M. de Boisbriant, nine leagues above the village of the Kaskaskias, should be called Fort Charters; that at Biloxi, Fort Louis; that at Mobile, Fort Condé.

(1721). On the 24th [April], M. de Boisbriant wrote to M. de Bienville from the Illinois, that three hundred Spaniards had left Santa Fé, the capital of New Mexico, for the purpose of conquering the colony, but only seventy had put their threat into execution, who had arrived at the Kansas River where they encountered the Oetotata and Panis Indians, who massacred all except a priest who had made his escape on horseback.

LA HARPE ON UPPER MISSISSIPPI TRADE, 1723.*

La Harpe on Upper Mississippi Trade, 1723.

With respect to the lay of the lands, the longitude of Louisiana, up to the height of 39°, extends from the limits of New Mexico, that is to say, from 275°, to the frontiers of New England in about the 307th degree of longitude; but this extent varies after passing the 38th degree of latitude, because beyond this distance from the pole, we are entitled to extend westward as far as our discoveries may lead us.

The breadth of Louisiana is better ascertained. It can be run from the 29th degree of latitude, which is that of the entrance of the river, up to 42° 30', which is the height of the Strait [Detroit.] This Province is exclusively situated between the fourth and eighth zones (climats); and this accounts for the length of the days and the nights. Where they are the shortest, they scarcely exceed fourteen hours thirty minutes; and where they are the longest, not above fifteen hours, thirty minutes. * * *

This position of Louisiana, well described on the map which has been prepared by the Sieur de la Harpe, renders it easy of comprehension, that the first benefit from this discovery has been communication from Canada with the Gulf of New Mexico, through a wild country of nearly five hundred leagues in extent; and nevertheless, it has been very easy to establish this by the River Mississippi which runs from north to south, and finds its exit in the Gulf of Mexico, and by the rivers Ouabache and Illinois, which, taking their rise on the Canada side, empty themselves in the Mississippi. * *

The English have allied themselves to a great many savage nations of America, and daily contract fresh alliances with the Iroquois, the Charaquis, the Chaouanons, the Chieachas, the Cahutas, the Alibamons, and many other nations bordering on Louisiana; where we have seen them push their trade even up to the Mississippi and the gates of the Mobile. If they had carried out their project of establishing themselves on the river of the Ouabaches [Ohio,] which takes its rise in the neighbourhood of New England, but a short space of time would elapse before they appeared and enlisted on their side the Illinois, the Miamis, the Oetotata, the Foxes, the Sioux, and the other nations of Upper Canada. This would greatly prejudice New France, of which the Island of Cape Breton is a dependency which is the only one where we can, with safety, fish for cod. * * *

* Memorandum intended to set forth the importance of the Colony of Louisiana and the necessity of continuing its establishment. By Benard de la Harpe. Printed in Historical Collections of Louisiana, By B. F. French, part. iii., note pp. 112-113.

From Louisiana will be obtained skins of wild bulls, the wool of which can be turned into use. No difficulty need be experienced, since M. de Juchereau, Lieutenant-General of the jurisdiction of Montreal, who in 1702, had, with thirty-four Canadians established a post on the Ouabache, in the name of a company, where he had collected in a short space of time fifteen thousand skins of bulls, as detailed in the narration in the Historical Journal of the month of January, 1705.

From this colony will be obtained skins of fallow deer, bear, red deer, and finer peltries than from Canada, because the upper part of the Mississippi River communicates with several northern nations who reside at too great a distance from the lakes by which the descent is effected towards the St. Lawrence River, and it is for the self-same reason that these skins of bulls cannot be obtained from Canada, as the Canadians have not pushed their trade so far as that. The Sioux savages and the Assinipolis are those who, by means of the Christinaux, carry the largest part of their finest peltries to the English at Hudson's Bay; but it would be easy to renew alliances with them, and to attract their trade by the Mississippi; because in order to go to Hudson's Bay, it is necessary to make a long journey through a country always frozen and without edibles, carrying their merchandize on their backs, whilst to trade with us, they would only have to descend the Mississippi in their canoes, so far as the entrance of the River St. Pierre, where they would find a more genial climate, and a country with a greater abundance of all sorts of things. But, in this case, it would be necessary to found establishments on the banks of this river, and adhere to the plan of the late M. le Sueur in the manner agreed on with M. L'Huillier, the Farmer-General.

EXPLORATIONS AND DISCOVERIES OF THE VERENDRYES, 1728-1750.

IN 1703, Peter Gaultier de Varenne, Sieur de la Verendrye, one of the sons of the Chevalier René Gaultier, Seigneur de Varenne, and for 22 years Governor of the City of Three Rivers, in New France, continued in sad obscurity, in the territories which surround Lake Superior, a career which had commenced brilliantly on the battle-fields of Europe.

Explorations
of the Verendryes,
1728-1750.

A cadet in 1697, after two campaigns in America—the one in 1704, in New England, the other in Newfoundland in 1705—he spent the following year in Flanders, in the Grenadiers of the 1st Battalion of the Bretagne Regiment, in which his eldest brother, afterwards killed in Italy, was then captain. His conduct in this regiment merited for him the most honourable mention. Notably at Malplaquet, finding the means of distinguishing himself amongst his comrades, “who themselves did wonders,”† he won the rank of Lieutenant, having received nine wounds, from which he recovered, contrary to every hope, after having been left as dead upon the battle-field. This commencement gave promise of a brilliant future for one so young; but war had never been as destructive to the officers, of whom a great many perished of hunger.‡

M. de la Verendrye's father, a very fine man, who, according to M. de Denonville, had no fault, except the poverty which he bequeathed to his sons, forced him to return to Canada, there to accept a simple ensigncy to enable him to live.

This rank, which he owed to the recommendation of the Marquise de Vaudreuil,§ was inferior to the one he had so gallantly purchased with his wounds.¶ Notwithstanding these claims to a better fortune, he, for seventeen years, vainly strove to obtain for his zeal and services a position equal to the one he had held under the Marshal de Villars. He had even several times requested permission to go to France, to obtain at Court reparation for the oblivion in which he lived; and he grieved deeply at being unable to succeed.

* From the French of M. Pierre Margry.—As already stated, M. Margry is custodian of the Archives in the Department of Marine and the Colonies, at Paris, and the correspondence which passed between the French officials in Canada and the King and his Ministers, are in his custody. This account appeared as a series of articles in the Moniteur during the Autumn of 1852.

But our misfortunes often form the path we have to traverse in order to attain a success we had never hoped for. M. de la Verendrye gave new proof of this. He had at length obtained leave to go to France; and his first hopes would perhaps have been realized there, when, fortunately, he was detained by a circumstance which promised him glory conjoined with suffering. He went to the confines of the world whither he had been banished, and found the opportunity of making his name illustrious by the services he rendered his country—an advantage which men of mind esteem above honors, riches, and repose. The circumstance I refer to was one of those enterprises which the conqueror of Bing, Roland, Baron de la Galissonnière,* then Governor of Canada, pronounced to be, "because of its dangers, its fatigues, and its cost, nobler than open war." As that with which M. de la Verendrye's name is associated is but little known, even to those who speak of it, I will here give a slight sketch of it, preliminary to a longer account which will appear elsewhere.

Explorations
of the Verendryes,
1728-1750.

In 1728, M. de la Verendrye, who was then in command at Lake Nepigon, to the north of Lake Superior, having received divers accounts of a river, whose course was westward, thought it might lead to the discovery of the Western Sea; in like manner as illustrious explorers had, in the preceding century believed—some that the Chiekhominy, a river of Virginia,† and others, the Ohio and Mississippi,‡ would conduct them to the Southern Ocean. Consequently he thought to utilize these accounts; and with a man of energy, action speedily follows mature consideration.

The project of discovering, by the interior, a passage to the Grand Ocean, and by that to China which was proposed by our officers under Henry IV., Louis XIII., and Louis XIV., had been taken up with renewed ardour during the Regency. Memorial upon memorial had been presented to the Conseil de Marine respecting the advisability and the advantages of making this discovery. Indeed the Père de Charlevoix was sent to America, and made his great journey from the north to the south of New France for the purpose of reliably informing the Council as to the most suitable route to pursue in order to reach the Western Sea. But the ardour which, during the life of Philip of Orleans, animated the Government regarding the exploration of the West, became feeble, and at length threatened to be totally extinguished, without any benefit being derived from the posts which they had already established in the country of the Sioux and at Kamanistigoya. When M. de Verendrye came down to Michilimakinac with the intention of letting the Governor of the Colony know what information he had obtained from the savages respecting the River of the West, he met Father Gonor, who had just arrived from the recently established posts of the Sioux, whither he had been sent during the preceding 30 years as missionary.

The Regent, in choosing between the two plans that Father Charlevoix presented to him, at the close of his journey, for the attainment of a knowledge of the Western Sea, through an unfortunate imprudence rejected the plan which it is true was the most expensive and uncertain—an expedition up the Missouri to its source and beyond—and decided to establish a post amongst the Sioux. The Regent thus set aside the scheme which afterwards led Lewis and Clark to the Columbia; but he thought that through the establishment of this post more certain accounts than those already to hand would be obtained respecting the route to the Grand Ocean, and that then would be the time to incur the expense of the exploration. The post of the Sioux was consequently established in 1727, by Boueher de Montbrun and Father Guignas.§ Father Gonor, however, was obliged to return without having been able to discover anything that could satisfy the expectations of the Court respecting the Western Sea. The meeting at Michilimakinac with M. de la Verendrye, who, on his part was anxious to communicate to the Father the knowledge he sought, was equally pleasing to both the missionary and the officer. Each obtained what he desired—the one information, the other protection. Father Gonor took charge of the memorials of M. de la Verendrye, and promised to support them; which he afterwards really did.

Entering into the same idea as M. de la Verendrye, he concluded it would be preferable, in the interests of the discovery they had in view, to establish themselves with the Cristinaux or with the Assiniboëls, than to remain with the Sioux. "This was also," wrote he, "the sentiment of Father Guignas, whom I have often heard say that it was a vain endeavor to seek through the Sioux a path to the Western Sea." The discovery of this sea, which for the fifty years following the death of Chevalier de la Salle had been incessantly sought after, thus touched upon a new and most interesting epoch. Action and research were now to replace theory and conjecture. It is of these actions and researches that I now desire to give a summary

Not contented with his first step, and having obtained other information respecting the River of the West (Rivière du couchant), and having secured amongst the Indians a brave and faithful guide, capable of conducting a convoy,* M. de la Verendrye himself went to Quebec to discuss with the Governor of New France the project he had formed of going to explore first the River of the Assiniboëls, and then the rivers situated towards Lake Ouinipigon, to within 500 leagues of Kamanistiguoya, thinking that at this distance one would be found leading to the sea.

The Governor who succeeded the Marquis de Vaudreuil (whose death occurred in 1725), was the Marquis Charles de Beauharnois, a member of a family that through its services, and its relationship to the Pontchartrains, held the highest position in both the naval and colonial services. As captain of his ship, remarkable for his bravery in several combats, and particularly in 1707, on board the Achille,† he was not less distinguished by his extensive knowledge. For these several reasons he was not in-20 different to the projects of M. de la Verendrye. In the preceding year even, M. de Beauharnois had already shown his sympathy, by restoring him to the rank he held in 1710. But he was induced also by another consideration to patronize the scheme.

The glories of discovery were not unknown to the Beauharnois family. One of the Governor's brothers, Claude de Beauharnois de Beaumont, had, as captain of a ship, taken an active part in the discovery of the Mississippi, an enterprise undertaken by the uncle D'Iberville and De Surgères; and, in listening to M. de la Verendrye he must have conceived the wish to add to this precedent in the history of his family the honour to be derived from promoting an undertaking of this kind. M. de Beauharnois had, as an incentive, the thought which formerly animated Samuel Champlain, the Récollets, the Jesuits and the Sulpicians, Jean Talon, the Count de Frontenac, Chevalier de la Salle, the Marquis de 30 Vaudreuil, and the Intendants Raudot, in the execution or protection of those enterprises of which this last was a continuation. He hoped that from this expedition New France would gain considerable advantages as regarded both trade and science, and that great light would be thrown upon the geography of the new continent, even if the problem of the separation of America and Asia towards the north was not solved on this occasion,—a problem proposed from the time of Cabot's voyage in 1497, and whose solution should have been the principal object of the expedition.

The West and the North-West of America being still unknown, from California to Hudson's Bay and the remote east of Asia being equally so, as well as the sea which in that direction divided the old world from the new, there were learned men who agreed with the navigators of the 16th century, that the union of the two continents was to be found in the latitude where Behring subsequently dis-40 covered the straits that bear his name.

In 1718, Father Bobè, a priest of the Congrégation, who had strongly incited the Regent and his ministers to the discovery of the Western Sea, considered the space between New France and the Straits of Uriez as a vast territory.‡ This ecclesiastic, who in other respects was a very learned man, thought that in travelling between the 47th and 70th degrees of latitude no sea would be found until the Gulf of Amur was reached, "which was formed by the countries of Japan, Tartary and Bourbonie." The latter name he gave to that imaginary country which it appeared to him should join America and Asia, and "by which," he says, "the Tartars and the Tartarized Israelites passed, after the dispersion of Salmanazar, as is proved by the appearance of the Sioux, who resemble the Tartars." These chimæras of an enlightened man, believed in also by others no less so, led to the wish that France, placed by her possession of Canada in a position to realize the error, would send across to North America an exploring expedition, which might dissipate the darkness resting upon the north-west of the continent.

M. de Beauharnois perceived without difficulty the importance of such an exploration, and by favourably receiving the proposal of M. de la Verendrye, he hoped to lift the veil which hid the ends of the world. Unfortunately, not daring to take that initiative which at this time, and under the pretext of this discovery, was taken by the Governor of Louisiana, M. de Bienville, a man less honest than he, he found himself unable to do anything, except under conditions which would take the honour of making the discovery of the Western Sea from France. The Russians were our rivals in the project. Before his death Peter the Great, who came to Paris in April, 1717, two months after William Delisle had presented his memoir on the Western Sea to the Regent, called to mind as well his conversations with that great geographer, as his promises to the Academy of Sciences,* and he determined that the space between Asia and America should be explored by the east. His successors, in compliance with the orders contained in his will, which was his last act on behalf of Russia, concluded to despatch Vitus Behring and Thschirikoff, who were to advance eastwards to the Western Sea, and so reach America, while the French officers, by a singular coincidence, would (under the government of one whose grand-nephews were to approach the throne of Peter the Great), explore the interior of the western territories.

But the one party were to be aided by their Princes whilst the others would have to depend solely on themselves, notwithstanding the kindness of the Governors of Canada, who were unable to proffer them anything but sympathy.

After M. de Beauharnois† had examined, with Chaussegros, de Lery, the engineer, the map which had been made by the savage Oshagach, whom M. de la Verendrye chose as guide, he agreed with that engineer that New France "being traversed by two large streams having their sources in the centre, the one—the St. Lawrence—flowing to the east, and the other—the Mississippi—to the south, there could not be a tract of the width of 700 or 800 leagues to the westward without being likewise crossed by a large river." Such a thing would be contrary to all that had been ascertained in other countries, where so extensive a tract is always traversed by a large river. This argument rendered the reports of the savages probable, from which, and considering the rumb line they gave the river, M. de Beauharnois and M. de Lery thought they could reach either the estuary discovered by D'Aguilar, or some other below California.

These considerations gave the Governor some hopes of success, which were increased by the character and tried intrepidity of M. de la Verendrye, whose family held distinguished positions in the army and church, and even in the Sovereign Council, where one of his brothers held the position of Conseiller-clerc. To him therefore he confided the execution of the enterprise of which he himself was the patron. Still, as he was not blind to the many difficulties of such an enterprise, he deemed it prudent that the explorer, before travelling through such extensive and unknown countries, should feel his way and at all events establish a post beyond the known limits, so that after having entered into relations with the Indians he might penetrate further. M. de Beauharnois doubtlessly hoped that when he would be able to speak with a better knowledge of facts, he would obtain the King's protection for the men who so generously devoted themselves to this enterprise. He commanded M. de la Verendrye to first establish a post on Lake Ouinipigon with 50 men and a missionary, and he gave him‡ in order to surmount the difficulties of the establishment, the profits of the exclusive right to the fur trade. Anxious to commence, M. de la Verendrye, by an agreement, signed on the 19th May, 1731, in presence of M. de Chassaigue, Governor of Montreal, entered into partnership with certain persons who advanced goods and equipments, and on the 26th August, after having passed Michilimackinac, where he secured Father Messenger as missionary, he found himself at the Grand Portage of Lake Superior, 15 leagues to S.S.W. of Kamanistigoya.

These beginnings of his enterprise proved to M. de la Verendrye how great the dangers and expense entailed by such an exploration. He had taken but a few steps in the wilderness when he again placed himself, his nephew, and his two sons at the disposal of the ministry for the purpose of commencing the expedition. On the 10th of October, 1733, two years after the departure of M. de la Verendrye, the Governor and his administrator, Hocquart, wrote to M. de Maurepas: "M. de la Jemerays, a nephew of M. de la Verendrye, informed us that if His Majesty would bear the expense, it would be easy to succeed in discovering the Western Sea; that at present they are at Lake Ouinipigon, but that they and their companions were perfectly unable to undertake this enterprise, having lost more than 43,000 livres, and the voyageurs would not go further without being paid what was due them, nor would those who had equipped the expedition advance any more goods to enable them to continue their journey. The outlay, monseigneur," added they, "will not be great; the cost of the engagés for three years, taking into account what can be furnished from the king's stores, would not, according to the calculations we made in presence of M. de la Jemerays, exceed 30,000 livres at the most. We have the honour to mention that by the agreement we cannot oblige them to go beyond Lake Ouinipigon, which we did not believe was at so great a distance." A reply was received from the Court that it was not expedient for the King to undertake the expense proposed by MM. de Beauharnois and Hocquart, and that those who had undertaken the enterprise should be in a condition to continue it by means of the profits derived from their privilege of the fur trade. The same words pretty nearly were repeated on the 12th April, 1735.

The die was cast. M. de la Verendrye had either to abandon the enterprise or continue it alone, at his own risk and peril, without any other means than the privilege of trade. With only this alternative, he followed the dictates of honour, which bade him brave dangers and impose self-sacrifices. He was already burdened with the debt of the first equipment, and he now assumed that of the second. He employed his nephew and three of his sons, and prepared a fourth, 18 years old, to accompany his brothers the following year, causing him to be taught the art of making plans and drawing maps; and he busied himself with this enterprise, which, notwithstanding all obstacles, enabled him to obtain, by his energy, such great results as to shed a lasting brilliancy upon his own name and upon that of the man who had encouraged his efforts.

II.

The chief honour won by M. de la Verendrye from his enterprise was owing not to his success, but to his struggles against obstacles more easily imagined than understood at this distant day. However, we must remark that his greatest trials were not due to his enterprise in itself, but to the false and embarrassing position in which he continually found himself, without other provision than the fur trade and its profits.

The fur trade, imposed or accepted as the means of meeting the expenses of the discovery, had in countries so distant as those into which he was to penetrate, the disadvantage of retarding the explorers: a precious portion of the time, strength and energy which might have been employed in pressing forward, was consumed in travelling between Montreal and the countries they were exploring, obtaining subsistence and provisions. The necessity of trading brought with it that of the establishment of befitting posts to attract the savages, and of placing landmarks on the route, which, as it took men, time, and money, tightened the circle of difficulties by which M. de la Verendrye was surrounded. As he was inevitably obliged to obtain by trade all the means required for advancing his explorations, he was compelled to see himself by turns tormented on the one hand by the Ministry, which was dissatisfied with the progress of the exploration, and on the other hand by his covetous associates, who were anxious to recover, with high interest, the price of the equipments.

Thus it happened that M. de la Verendrye was incessantly harrassed by his associates, and reproached nearly as often by the ministry whose half protection he had obtained. In fact, if M. de Maurepas had but given even the degree of protection which should have been accorded the explorer on the advice of Father Charlevoix*—who spoke with the same freedom with which he wrote his History of New Franco—ho might have concluded that he had done enough. The Reverend Father, to whom the project of M. de la Verendrye had been communicated, at first failed to realize that as the measure of the King's protection was greater or lesser, so would the execution of the enterprise be affected; and finally he made light of the difficulties of the exploration. He said "that these establishments were useless; although they caused but small expense they prolonged the period of exploration; that they might cause it to degenerate to a fur-trading scheme, and that it was best to pursue the discovery at once and without consuming more than two years, aided by the fresh accounts received at the advanced posts, in thoroughly determining its route. Thus it would follow that the expense which such an expedition required would be reduced to some easily carried victuals, some ammunition, whereof a portion would serve for necessary hunting and as presents for the savages." The opinion of Father Charlevoix must have been of great weight, for he had been sent some years previously by the Duke of Orleans and the Count Toulouse to obtain information regarding the Western Sea. We have seen that it was on his advice that the establishment amongst the Sioux had been founded. His judgment in the case may have been that of one who, regretting that he had not been able to make the discovery himself, sought to depreciate beforehand the merits of those who would undertake it. I do not believe it was; but truly the Reverend Father expatiated too much upon the reminiscences of a man who in his travels had only traversed countries which had long been accessible. He thus gave countenance to the rumours which were spread by the envious and the ignorant; and M. de Maurepas, who had extended protection to so many other expeditions, having scientific purposes in view, may have regretted having given M. de la Verendrye the privilege of the trade—a privilege which the latter would willingly have exchanged for a well-equipped company of 100 men as in the case of Lewis and Clark. In fact there is nothing more disagreeable than these half-favours, which having provided wind for a man's sails desert him when he has nearly reached port, and which the donors believe give them the right of reproaching the recipient, without realizing that their assistance had, in truth, none the less condemned their protégé to the torments of Tantalus. Such was nearly the treatment experienced by M. de la Verendrye in his enterprises. M. de Beauharnois, however, seeing this officer sinking under the trouble, thought well to give him, from 1735, permission to farm, during three years, to some merchants, the posts which he had established, on condition that he would not undertake, directly or indirectly, any kind of commerce; that so he might be able to pursue his enterprise with all possible diligence, as he would have nothing else to see to. But M. de la Verendrye was none the less dependent for supplies upon traders or farmers, who were impatient to receive, but slow to remit. Besides, they did not forward all that he needed; they sent only in proportion to their own earnings, and it followed that M. de la Verendrye was obliged personally to incur debts in order to provide for all—considering himself fortunate when he escaped the most cruel privations.

This officer (left for dead upon the battle-field of Malplaquet 30 years before) pursued his project with an admirable courage and constancy, which called to mind the energy of the great discoverer and with a disinterestedness which was real although strongly attacked. Notwithstanding this and the generous aid of his four sons and his nephew, M. de la Jemerais,—all five indefatigably and fearlessly devoted to his enterprise,—he could not, after twelve years of trouble and sacrifice, because of the peculiar circumstances of his position, do more than accomplish the discovery of the territories enclosed between the Rocky Mountains, on the west, and Lakes Superior and Winnipeg on the east.

Although I cannot speak at any length in this article, I must mention a few occurrences which will throw some light upon the attractive tableau of their efforts. Therefore I will give, though briefly and drily, a few details of their journey.

If we follow M. de la Verendrye from Kaministigoya, a post near Lake Superior, established for the second time in the year 1717, by Lieutenant Robutel de la Noüe, and where the discoverer arrived in the year 1731,* we shall see their parties, the same year, successively pass through Lac du Pluic, or Tekamamiouen, at the outlet of which they established Fort St. Pierre; cross Lake Minitie, or Des Bois, on one of the shores of which Fort St. Charles was erected in 1732; Lake Ouinipigon, within five leagues of which, on their way up the river, they established a fort; Ouinipeg River, which they called Rivière Maurepas, and which, in 1734, they protected by a fort, also designated by the name of the minister; 50 the River of the Assiniboëls, otherwise called the River St. Charles, where Fort de la Reine, which was built on the 3rd October, 1738, served as an advanced post; then the River St. Pierre, a branch of the River of the Assiniboëls. This river, to which the Christian name of M. de la Verendrye and M. de Beauharnois was given, was the centre of the establishments and the point of departure of the expeditions which the explorers intended to make to the north and to the south. It is by this river that we see them, at the close of 1738, descend to the Mantannes, and in 1742 to the Upper Missouri; then re-ascend to the Yellowstone, and finally arrive, by this route, at the Rocky Mountains, amongst the Gens des Serpents, whose countries formed the limit of their explorations towards the south.

Towards the north, in expeditions, which precise dates I cannot yet determine, they crossed Lake 10 Dauphin and Swan Lake, reached Rivière des Biches, and ascended to the fork of the Saskatchewan which they named the Poskoiec. In these countries they established two forts—one on Lake Dauphin, and the other, which they called Fort Bourbon, on the Rivière des Biches.

In considering this simple narrative of their doings, and viewing the length of time which marked each advance, showing so clearly the efforts the explorers had to make—when the miseries they endured and the dangers which they ran, and in which some of them perished, are taken into account; and finally, when the results of their enterprise are compared with the means they had at their command—the accusations that were made against them would really astound us were we not accustomed to the criminal follies of envy. But to whom did envy ever allow either honours or profit with impunity?

Explorations
of the Verendryes, 1728-1750.

In the laborious efforts of the Varennes of Verendrye to extend the dominion and commerce of 20 American France to the Grand Ocean, the honour of the discovery of the most westerly regions belongs chiefly to M. de la Verendrye's sons. He himself had taken a most difficult task, and one that suited his age best,—that of directing the enterprise, of superintending the trade, of creating and maintaining friendly relations with the Indians, of stimulating the zeal of the ever tardy equipers, of having roads opened, and of sustaining the establishments which he had ordered to be commenced. He was always ready to help in person when occasion required, and the distances which he travelled on foot, in frightful weather and through wild countries, in the midst of privations, would terrify the imagination of a European. It was with truth his sons could say, "He marched, and made us march in such a way that we should have reached our goal, wherever it might be found, had he been better aided."* But his sons and his nephew most frequently went in advance to reconnoitre the route; and their journeys, always 30 full of danger and among tribes constantly at war, sometimes extended over whole years.

One of these journeys cost one of the sons his life; for the Sioux, the enemies of our allies, the Christineaux, massacred him with his whole party of twenty-one men, in June, 1736, on an island of the Lake of the Woods. Amongst the slain was Father Anneau, a Jesuit. A party of five Canadian voyageurs discovered their bodies several days after the event. The heads of the Frenchmen were placed upon beaver skins, the greater number of them scalped. The missionary had one knee in the ground, an arrow in his head, his breast cut open, his left hand upon the earth, and his right uplifted. The Sieur de la Verendrye lay face downward, his back hacked with a knife, a hoe buried in his loins, and his headless body ornamented with porcupine garters and bracelets.†

M. de la Verendrye, who was at this time in great destitution at Fort St. Charles, heard of the 40 massacre of his son and of the death of his nephew, La Jemerays, at the same time. The latter was the son of a sister of M. de la Verendrye—Marie-Rènee de Varenne—and the brother of Mme. Youville, the foundress of the Hospitalières de Montreal. M. Dufrost de la Jemerays had associated himself with the labours and the fortunes of his uncle from the very commencement of his enterprise. Two years afterwards he had, on M. de Beauharnois' recommendation,‡ been recompensed with a second ensigncy, for services rendered in these difficult commencements. When the innumerable obstacles that arose in the three and a quarter leagues of the Portage of Nantaouagan disheartened the engagés, he had the honour of passing beyond and of commencing the first establishment at Lac de la Pluie, or Tekamamiouen. His intelligence, his devotion, and his courage, undismayed by neither dangers nor fatigues, gained him the most complete confidence of M. de la Verendrye, who, at his death, had cause to mourn not only a very dear relation, but also a lieutenant invaluable to him in his enterprise.

If it had been possible to remedy such a loss, the courage and the ardour of M. de la Verendrye's sons would have repaired it; but their party was so small that the enterprise could not but suffer. However, the following year they found themselves with the Mandanes, a people who have been rendered most interesting to us through a book by Mr. Catlin,* the distinguished traveller. Clark thought himself to be the first to see them. As early as the year 1743, the eldest son of M. de la Verendrye, with the chevalier, his brother, reached the Rocky Mountains, in a journey that lasted from the 29th of April, 1742, to the 2nd July in the following year, by which time they had returned to Fort St. Charles, whence they had started.

I will here give some details of this journey, which must always remain famous, as the courageous action of only four men, who preceded, by nearly sixty years, the visit of the numerous troop of Lewis and Clark to the same place.† The eldest son of M. de la Verendrye having reached the Mandanes, could not, for want of the guides he had hoped to meet, advance beyond; so he returned to his father, who, however, immediately sent him back with the chevalier, his brother, and two other Frenchmen.

Explorations
of the Verendrye,

This time they succeeded in reaching the Rocky Mountains, after having met on the way the villages of the Beaux-Hommes, the Pioyas, the nation of Petits-Reynards and the Gens de l'Arc (Bowmen). Some of these names, which are found on the maps of Lewis, lead one to suppose that they arrived at the Rocky Mountains by the Yellowstone. On the 1st of January, 1743, these mountains rose before their eyes, and on the 12th of the same month they reached them, and the Chevalier de la 20 Verendrye, who must have left his brother at some distance, prepared to ascend them. He was disappointed at always being led to the South by the guides whom he had asked to conduct him to the sea; he feared that by the route which he had followed he would only find a sea already known—however, he wished to contemplate it from the height of the mountains. Unfortunately, besides the natural obstacles that opposed his design, and which perhaps he did not foresee, a difficulty suddenly arose, of which he could still less have had any idea. So far, he had been led by the great Chief of the Bowmen, who, followed by other tribes, numbering 2,000 warriors, chiefly horsemen, accompanied by their families, was marching against the Gens des Serpents (Snake tribe) inhabiting these mountains. This nation was the terror of its neighbors. The Bowmen were the only ones who did not fear it. It had carried destruction everywhere, as the Chevalier de la Verendrye had witnessed. When he reached the 30 nation of Les Gens des Chevaux he found nothing but grief and desolation, their villages having been entirely destroyed by the Gens des Serpents. In 1741, these latter had completely ruined seventeen villages and killed all the old men, and made slaves of the women and children, whom they sold on the coast in exchange for horses and other merchandise.

The march of the Bowmen against them was occasioned as much by a desire for the welfare of these countries as by a common desire for vengeance. But it seemed on this occasion, that with savages as with civilized people, it is unwise for brave men to depend upon the support of those who have nothing but numbers to recommend them. When the warriors came near the principal village they were warned by their scouts that the enemy had precipitately fled, abandoning their baggage. This news, instead of rejoicing, created disorder and division amongst them. They feared that the enemy had 40 discovered them, and would profit by their absence to make a descent upon their own villages, and might reach them before they did. The Chief of the Bowmen, conspicuous by his intellect, nobility of manner and bravery, endeavoured to dissuade them, and incited them to follow the enemy, but in vain. No one listened to him, and the Chevalier de la Verendrye was forced to return with them, without beholding that sea the sight of which had so greatly rejoiced Balboa and Cortez two centuries before. No four men could have done better; and indeed it required immense courage on their part to penetrate to these mountains, which they had the honour of reaching sixty years before the great expedition sent thither by Jefferson.

† Journal du Voyage fait par M. le Chevalier de la Verendrye, en 1742, pour parvenir à la découverte de la Mer de l'Ouest, adressé à M. le Marquis de Beauharnois.

That was the chief result of their journey. But there was another, which, although only secondary, must not be overlooked. On the return the Chevalier and his brother were careful to take possession of the countries of the Upper Missouri, where they arrived on the 19th March, 1743, amongst the Gens de la Petite Cerise, a nation encamped on the banks of the river. They interred to this end, on an eminence near their fort, a leaden plate inscribed with the arms of the king, and as a memorial of their journey they erected pyramids of stones in honour of the Marquis de Beauharnois. So that if the object of the enterprise had been postponed in one sense, it had in this particular the effect of establishing the rights of France on the borders of this great river, which, according to certain geographers, may be regarded as a principal branch of the Mississippi. This opinion admitted, the name of Beauharnois, already connected with the discovery of its mouth, becomes doubly associated with the discovery of both extremities of this American Nile.

Even if these expeditions, in some measure, justified the thought which made Nicholas de la Salle and Hubert, Commissioners of Louisiana, as well as Bobè and Father Charlevoix, request that the Missouri should be ascended in order to reach the ocean, still this success was not sufficient for M. de la Verendrye, nor did it satisfy the Chevalier or his brother, since by this route they feared to meet the establishments of the Spaniards, and besides they had not solved the problem of the Western Sea one of the principal objects of the enterprise. Consequently they determined to proceed by the north where, five years later, they discovered the Saskatchewan. That this discovery was not made earlier and the explorers had not advanced further, was not their fault but that of others.

M. de la Verendrye was preparing to send his sons back to the north, when the conduct of the Ministry, who refused him every preference, disgusted him. He considered that they treated him with systematic injustice. However, the Ministry were not as guilty as they seemed to M. de la Verendrye. They were excited against him by false accounts and by envious imputations. "When the discoverers outdid themselves in their fatigues and expenditures, their expeditions were represented as chiefly directed to the discovery of the beaver, their large expenditure as dissipation, and their statements as falsehoods." The Ministry might, without meaning any harm, accuse of mismanagement and negligence the men who were more occupied with work and travel than with the puffing of themselves by means of memoirs.*

On the 22nd April, 1737, apropos of the massacre of M. de la Verendrye's son, M. de Maurepas wrote to the Marquis de Beauharnois, who had defended the explorer against these accusations.† "All that has come to my ears concerning this accident confirms me in the suspicion I always had, and which I have not even disguised from you, that the beaver trade had, on the part of M. de la Verendrye, a larger share than anything else in the enterprise of the discovery of the Western Sea." The Minister, judging at a distance, and upon the reports of men whose interest it was to disparage, could doubtlessly be pardoned for misjudging; but for the explorer the result was the same, and this did not render the blow any the less painful. He was the oldest of the lieutenants in Canada, and he seemed to the Governor "the most worthy of the King's favours." His rare patience as a leader of men failed him when it came to a rivalry about ranks and titles. Besides, if the patience of a man who has only to think of himself can be unlimited, that of a father succumbs in the presence of the sufferings of his children. Probably, less wearied of sacrificing himself than of compromising the well-being, the advancement, and even the lives of his sons in an enterprise which had already deprived him of one of them; tired of seeing himself and them forgotten, not in the dispensation of favours, but in an equitable division of rewards due to the oldest and most meritorious services; above all, being pressed by want and sickness as well as by his creditors, he finally resolved to satisfy the envious. So, in 1743, he returned to Quebec to show what advantages he had personally gained in his many years of trials. "If," wrote he,‡ "40,000 livres of debt that I have over my head are an advantage, I can compliment myself on being very rich, and I would have been much more so in the end if I had continued."

Conscious that he had done all in his power for the service of the King and the good of the colony, he resigned his charge, that so the Governor might give it to those who thought themselves more worthy and more capable of fulfilling it. He did not exaggerate his own merits. Lewis and Clark, who were much better sustained, had not, in order to be successful, to make an eighth part of the efforts which M. de la Verendrye made to go half the distance.

III.

However, the Marquis de Beauharnois, who appreciated M. de la Verendrye's character at its true worth, deeply regretted* to see him desist from his enterprise. M. de Beauharnois depicted to the Ministry the explorer's mortification because of the attempts made "to give to his purity of design in seeking to compass the discovery of the Western Sea, a character so opposed to his real views." He spoke of the advantages that had been secured by the posts he had established; "finally," said he, "the idea which had been current as to his having amassed wealth in these places falls to the ground in view of his indigence. We can assure you, Monseigneur, without any favour or predilection for him, that the twelve years spent by him at these posts did not yield him nearly 4,000 livres, which is all that can remain to him after he has paid the debts contracted on behalf of this enterprise. And finally, Monseigneur, the state in which he has left matters seems to make him worthy of your bounty." But as the Ministry could not overcome its prejudices so easily, M. de Beauharnois, in order to get rid of the evil rumours propagated by the envious, appointed M. de Noyelles to pursue the discovery. The little done by this officer, who was generally looked upon as a man of courage, accustomed to long marches and acquainted with the Upper Countries, must have made the intelligent inhabitants of the colony understand that, considering the conditions M. de la Verendrye had accepted, he had obtained great results, and that no one could do better, or even as well as he. M. de Beauharnois, satisfied with this trial which justified him in his first choice, again fixed his eyes upon the discoverer, and once more assured M. de Maurepas that this officer had been accused unjustly—that he had given himself entirely up to the discoveries, and had sacrificed to them all the proceeds of the new posts established by his care with much trouble and at great risks, and that, finally, this man united to great experience a firm yet gentle character, by which he had obtained over the savages of the West an ascendancy which he found it necessary to exercise. M. de Beauharnois had returned to France with the rank of Lieutenant-General in the army as a reward for his services, and M. de la Galissonnière, his successor, took the same stand as he, adding "that discoveries caused greater expenses, and expose to greater fatigues and greater dangers than do open wars," and, apropos of this, he recalled the death and ruin of Cavalier de la Salle, and many others. The Ministry gave way to these repeated assurances.† They first gave M. de la Verendrye a captaincy, and some time afterwards, the decoration of the Cross of St. Louis, which he had sufficiently merited since 1709, by his wounds at Malplaquet. But, at the same time they asked him to make fresh efforts for the achievement of his enterprise. As much as this even was not needed to stimulate the generous hearts of the old officer and his sons.

As early even as 1748, the Chevalier de la Verendrye had set out to continue his discoveries in the West, and he had reascended the Saskatchewan to its fork, where, every spring, the Christinaux of the mountains, of the lakes and of the prairies had their rendezvous. There they heard from the savages that this river came from a great distance—from the height of the lands, where there were very lofty mountains, and that they knew of a great lake on the other side of the mountains, whose waters could not be drunk.‡ Inspired by the acts of the Ministry, which had at last rendered him justice, M. de la Verendrye, whose sons kept him aware of all that transpired, prepared, notwithstanding his age, to leave Montreal in the month of May, 1750, at a time when navigation would be open in the upper countries, that he might reach Fort Bourbon in the first days of the month of December, whence with his sons he was to navigate for the first time the River Poskoyac. There he intended to construct a convenient fort. In the following spring, he was to send to ascertain the altitude of the mountains near which the lake in question was situated. "I intend," said he, "to be as diligent as possible, in order to winter at Fort Bourbon at the base of the River aux Biches, which is the last of all the forts I have established, being too happy, if at the end of all the troubles, fatigues and risks I have undergone in this long discovery, I can succeed in proving my own and my children's disinterestedness, and our great zeal for the glory of the king and the welfare of the colony." He wrote these words to Quebec on the 17th September, 1749; but in making this promise, he counted without that host whose name is Death, and who is ever faithful to man. On the 6th of the following December he died, taking with him, so to say, the success of the enterprise. M. de la Galissonnière had just left Canada, to give place to M. de la Jonquière; and the corruptions which were to contribute to the loss of the colony by France, commenced in the painful developments which led to the condemnation of the Intendant Bigot to exile. 10 M. de la Verendrye were to be this Intendant's first victims. Assuredly, after the death of their father, no one in the colony was as capable of continuing and achieving the discovery which they had so far advanced. The sons of M. de la Verendrye claimed the honour of completing this enterprise as the most precious portion of their inheritance. Furthermore, it seemed impossible to refuse this to men who had already made the greater part of the preparations, and undertaken engagements which absorbed their little fortune, and even more. But the Intendant Bigot and the Governor had formed an association for these discoveries and for the development of the Posts of the West; and the Varennes had to yield to their all-powerful rivals, who were more greedy of profit than of the honour imposed upon them by their high rank. M. Bigot never had money enough to waste, nor M. de la Jonquière to save, Neither of them recognized any principle of right, but entirely forgot their duty.

20 Having in view the two extreme points traversed, or intended to be traversed by the Verendryes, they thought to find the Western Sea by the Mississippi and Saskatchewan. Father Coquart, a companion of M. de la Verendrye, had about this time come to the conclusion that it would be necessary in order to reach this sea to seek the sources of the Missouri and to cross the Rocky Mountains, if it were found impossible to penetrate the defiles with their canoes, and so reach the great salt water lake. He wrote that his idea had been rejected, because here, added he,* "discoveries are wanted that cost no money except the returns from the beaver, and I have been told that any project proposed to the Court, if it required funds for its execution, would not be listened to." However, his proposition was remembered, and these projects, born of the discoveries of the Chevalier de la Verendrye, were united to those that he and his companions had intended to carry out by the Saskatchewan. The enterprise thus conceived was confided to two officers: M. Lamargue de Marin was directed to the Upper Mississippi and the Missouri, while the north was the destination of Jacques Legardeur de Saint Pierre. These two officers, whose intrepidity was beyond question, do not seem to me, if I am to believe certain indications, to have been equally commendable in character. At all events, on this occasion they considered their desire for advancement and gain more than the feelings of delicacy which should have obliged them to have been careful of the interests and honour of M. de la Verendrye.

An enterprise conceived and conducted by covetous men is at all events generally advantageous to those interested; and so it proved here. If it was said without reason concerning M. de la Verendrye, that the hunting of the beaver delayed the discovery, it could be said with truth in this case. The colony seemed to gain no advantage from this expedition, excepting the establishing of a fort near 40 the Rocky Mountains by a detachment of men, who, in accordance with the plans of the Chevalier de la Verendrye, followed the Saskatchewan.† Still the officers themselves who commanded the establishment of this post, were only honoured indirectly by it, neither of them being present. M. de Saint Pierre, who from the first steps he took on the road prepared by his predecessors, recognized all the difficulties of their enterprise, must, in meeting the unexpected obstacles which victoriously refuted all those calumnies through which doubtlessly he had supplanted them, have felt the injustice of his conduct towards them. He traversed a road which had already been opened by them, yet he owned that at each step there was risk of losing not only provisions and effects, but even life itself. He realized the covetousness of the populations through which he had to pass, although he attributed it to the lenity which he pretended had been shown them. "No matter what presents are made them they would exhaust," said he, the "king's storehouses." These facts, of which M. de St. Pierre only spoke to magnify the difficulties of his enterprise, proved a great set off to the acts of M. de la Verendrye, whose merits had been hidden by the modesty of his recital; as did also the conduct by which the new chief of the exploration, in alienating the Christinaux, compromised all the work of the first explorers, and proved that he was wrong in accusing them of lenity; the truth being that they were much more prudent and skilful than he in dealing with these nations. The Christinaux burned Fort la Reine, and nearly killed M. de St. Pierre himself. The illness, also, of his lieutenant, the Chevalier Boucher de Niverville, showed how much he had not only prejudiced his own honour, but also the success of the enterprise, in refusing the earnest request of MM. de la Verendrye to be allowed to accompany him. The Chevalier de Niverville having been sent by him to found a post at the source of the Saskatchewan or Poskoyac, had been obliged to stop on the way, exhausted by the fatigues and miseries to which MM. de la Verendrye had become accustomed, and only some of his men could reach the Rocky Mountains, where they established Fort la Jonquière, in 1752. The expedition does not seem to have passed the mountains when M. de St. Pierre, who had been recalled by the Marquis Duchesne de Menneville, who succeeded M. de la Jonquière, saw M. de la Corne arrive, in 1753, to replace him in the Posts of the West. The Seven Years' War, which was about breaking out, prevented the pursuit of this enterprise, of which the English colonies, victorious over ours, were at a future day to reap the benefit.

Thus the covetousness and envy of a few agents, who were but fitting instruments of a Government that everywhere provoked its own decadence, caused France to lose the honour of a discovery which science expected of some of her sons, at the very moment when this honour, which was so earnestly wished for by MM. de la Verendrye, was snatched from them. But how could they hope for it when even their very property was at this time delivered up to shameless pillage. The sic vos non vobis of the poet was here realized in all its severity. Nothing can be more pathetic than the complaints of the two brothers on this subject. "At the very time," wrote the elder,* "when they all intended to pursue their discoveries, they had not only suffered considerable losses in establishing the Posts of the West, but they had also been deprived of the enjoyment of a property which they had come to regard as the reward of their labours, having spent their youth and their fortune, and even sold what they had in Canada, to complete an undertaking so beneficial to the colony. After all these expenses, they had the pain of seeing strangers gather the harvest of which they had sown the seeds the influence they had gained lost; the merchandise they had left in the posts given away without whilst the engagés whom they had to pay were still made use of." The complaints of the Chevalier being more poignant and better expressed, are still more heartrending.† "I, too, am ruined," said he "My returns of this year being but half gathered, after a thousand inconveniences, my ruin is accomplished. My father's affairs and mine being settled, I remain without either funds or patrimony. I am simply second ensign. My elder brother holds the same rank as myself, and my other brother is only a cadet l'aiguillette, and this is the actual fruit of all that my father and my brothers and I have done. My brother, who was assassinated some years ago by the Sioux, is not the most unfortunate of us." He was so reduced as to speak thus of death.

For a much lesser cause, in 1809, Lewis, the companion of Clark, with whom it is said the American Government refused to fulfil its engagements, blew out his brains. But MM. de la Verendrye, awaited with more christian resignation, the end of their misfortunes; they left it in the hands of God. It soon arrived. They re-entered the army, and the Seven Years' War, which occasioned to us notwithstanding the heroism of Montcalm, the loss of Canada, gave them an opportunity of ending their lives nobly. In this war, several Varennes were killed, but I have been unable to discover whether they were the sons of M. de la Verendrye, or of his brother. The fate of the Chevalier alone is certain. He and another Lieutenant named Varenne perished on the 15th November, 1761, by drowning, in the wreck of the Auguste, a vessel armé en cartel. This wreck, which was an image of the fate of the French power in America, was terrible. Some Canadians, however, who in exile sought to escape the yoke of the stranger, envied them their destiny. The Chevalier needed no longer to envy his brother who was killed by the Sioux, and in dying, he could say, as Camoëns did at the sight of the misfortunes of his country, "I die, but I die with it."

Such was, given as briefly as possible, the unhappy, but not inglorious life of these brave officers, who through the ignorance of history in regard to our ancient colonies, have not even received a memento. Doubtless when it obtains a better knowledge of their enterprise and efforts, they will obtain a fame proportionate to their labours and their sacrifices, and to the advantages which must result to America from the interior routes of communication between the Atlantic and the Great Ocean— which will enable that continent, aided by the audacity of its genius, to dispute with Europe the commerce of Asia. Whatever the result, even if the explorers did not entirely succeed in the execution of their plans, their names, after that of Cavalier de la Salle, and before those of Mackenzie, Lewis, and Clark, should, to the honour of France, be respected as those of the first discoverers of the West. The courage and constancy which they displayed; the privations which they endured; their life so laboriously sad, entirely devoted to their work, and their pitiful end, will form one of the most interesting episodes as well in the memorial of that enterprise, as in the mournful history of the discoveries in which European civilization advanced against barbarism only by the sacrifice of its noblest children; and this posthumous glory will be but a just and tardily granted compensation to men whose only reward for patriotic devotion was misery.

20 OFFICIAL STATEMENT OF OCCURRENCES IN CANADA, 1746-1748.

EXTRACT FROM AN ABSTRACT, &C., OF OCCURRENCES IN THE COLONY, AND OF THE VARIOUS INTELLIGENCE RECEIVED SINCE THE DEPARTURE OF THE SHIPS IN NOVEMBER, 1746.*

August 13, 1747.—Captain de Noyelle and Sieur de la Verendrye arrive from Michilimakinac, and deliver to the General a letter dated at that post, on the 23rd July, and addressed to him by Sieur de Noyelle, junr., commanding, in the absence of M. de La Corne, senior, and by other officers, who arrived from other upper posts, and happened to be then at Michilimakinac.

Occurrences in the Colony, 1746-8.

The General is informed by this letter of the confusion that prevails among all the nations of that post and neighbourhood, Outaouais, Sauteurs, and Mississaguès. The Outaouas of Saguinam have killed three Frenchmen who were coming from Detroit to Michilimackinac.

30 Two French canoes which had gone en prime from Montreal to the West Sea, La Mer de l'Ouest, have been attacked by the Sauteurs, above the place called La Cloche, † near Lake Michigan; one, containing eight men, have been wholly defeated; the second, by striking out into the lake and throwing its cargo overboard, escaped to Michilimakinac. Another Frenchman has been stabbed by the Sauteurs at a place called La Grosse Isle, ‡ only two leagues distant from the post. These Indians have offered divers insults and threats at the fort and in the vicinity; they killed all the horses and other cattle that they could not catch; they designed to surprise the fort, but were discovered and obliged to leave, by ringing the bell and beating the tattoo as usual, and even by making some defensive demonstrations. There had been greater reason for presuming bad intentions on the part of the Indians, inasmuch as a crowd of young men had armed themselves with knives, in a council 40 which had been held at their request on the 3rd July, and which terminated in recrimination. The Indians have not been since permitted to enter the fort, except under certain restrictions.

Some Frenchmen from Point Chagouamigon, and M. de Noyelle, senr., on his usual return from La Mer de l'Ouest, arrived a few days after.

Certain intelligence has also been received there from Detroit. This reinforcement will somewhat tranquilize the fort, which contained before this arrival only twenty-eight men. An Outaoua Indian, named Nequiouanin, arrived on the 2nd July at the post to communicate in secret to the Commandant and the Missionary, that the Iroquois, the Huron, and the Flat-head, had come to an understanding with the English to destroy the French, and drive them to the other side of the Sea; that the Outaoua of Detroit is in the plot; that the Poutouatami will co-operate; that the Mississague and Sauteur are gained over; that the Outaoua of Saguinam has already struck; that the Outaoua of Michilimackinac would have taken part against us had it not been for the position of the village which is at Montreal, and that they would yet possibly declare against us on the arrival of seventy men from Saguinam, who are to be reinforced by the Sauteurs of Grosse Isle; that they were to leave in a few 10 days, and to come in the night to speak to the Outaouas of the post, and that it were well to allow no person to go hunting, and to keep strict watch.

M. de Noyelle, junr, adds that he will detain, until further orders, at Michilimackinac, the canoes which were to come from Montreal to the different posts, unless affairs changed and it became certain that the dispositions of the Indians at these posts were altered. We are co-operating in the adoption of the most effectual measures either to restore tranquility at the post of Michilimackinac, or at least to place in a proper state of defence against all attacks of the Indians.

October 14th.—Sieur Masse, who has been the whole year at Capo Chat, has returned. We receive letters from Michilimackinac, informing us of the arrival of Chevalier de la Verendrye, who has found that post very quiet; the Outaouacs are beginning to be sorry for what occurred last year. 20

News from Michilimackinac.

Nov. 10.—We are in receipt of letters from Michilimackinac. Lieutenant de St. Pierre, who had been selected to command the convoy sent to that post, arrived there, without any accident, in 45 days. Captain de Verhères, appointed commandant at La Baye, and who was to remain at Michilimackinac with his traders from Montreal, had taken his departure thence for his post, with his voyageurs. M. de St. Pierre writes us on October 22nd that he has not been able to speak to the Indians, who were, when he arrived, all gone to their winter quarters, without having given any token of repentance for the outrage they had perpetrated. It is hence to be presumed that they persist in their evil dispositions; that the Marquis de Beauharnois' orders, sent with Sieur de La Verendrye, in the month of August, have been badly executed; that 'twas the only means of reducing those nations; that he does not anticipate success otherwise than by depriving them of the supplies they derive for the support of their families and which they cannot dispense with. This might have been effected, were the traders prevented going to the different posts, according to the [Marquis de Beauharnois' intentions; and this officer takes this occasion of saying that it would be well not to allow the canoes to leave Montreal next spring for Michilimackinac and other posts, until he have informed us of the sentiments in which the nations of that country will then be, and as soon as he shall have learned their intentions, he will take occasion to report them to us.

Sieur de La Verendrye.

March 29.—Sieur de La Verendrye, junior, has returned to Montreal with the Christinaux and other warriors of his party. In the neighborhood of Corlae [Scheneectady] he fell in with a party of Mohawks and Dutchmen, who were coming to Sarastua, on a scouting party. He brought two Mohawk scalps, among which is that of the principal chief of that nation; one of a Dutchman; and a Dutch prisoner, who reports nothing of interest—only says that there is considerable talk about peace. This first blow on the Mohawks will not fail to frighten them.

Convoy to Michilimakinac.

June 20.—Count de la Galissonière orders the dispatch from Montreal of the convoy for Michilimakinac, under the command of Lieutenant de St Vincent. This convoy is well escorted and sufficiently well provided with provisions and merchandise to supply the post abundantly. The General writes to Lieutenant de St. Pierre, Commandant there, that the convoy was delayed in the hope of receiving news from Michilimakinac, but that the advanced season obliged him to order its dispatch, though he is uninformed of what is passing at that post; that, should the troubles continue nothing remains to be done than to abandon, as already proposed, those posts which are exposed to danger, in order to oblige the guilty to come to Michilimakinac, and even to Montreal, in search of what they want; that he must exact the surrender of the murderers, and should circumstances force him, grant peace on the same conditions as those accorded to the Hurons of Nipigon who were to bring two English prisoners for every Frenchman they had killed; the promises must, first of all, be performed, in order that these nations may not betray us, as the Hurons have done. The General leaves this officer at liberty to determine, according to circumstances, the carrying into execution the different licenses granted for the northern posts, and observes to him, nevertheless, in regard to the West Sea and Nipigon, that in case these posts were abandoned, it would be to be feared that the English might irretrievably monopolise the entire of that trade which they now share with sufficient advantage. Demands some Panis, in order to indemnify the Indians who have surrendered some English prisoners. Ensigns Laronde and Chevalier de La Verendrye have also taken their departure; the first for Point Chagouamigon, and the second for the West Sea.

COLONEL DE BOUGAINVILLE ON THE FRENCH POSTS OF CANADA, 1757.*

[A portion only of this article appears in the Joint Appendix.]

DETROIT.—Detroit is an important post; it is the entrepôt of the southern forts, which communicate with the Illinois. The lands there are fertile and of easy cultivation; the sky beautiful and serene; the climate magnificent. There is almost no winter; very little snow; animals winter in the fields, where they find their feed; there are already two hundred habitations, or about that number, full of food and cattle, and which furnish supplies for the different posts of the upper countries. This fort is situated on the shore of the river which separates Lake Erie from Lake Huron. . . . The post of Detroit, entrepôt of the southern posts, is a large town, situated between Lake Erie and Lake Saint Claire. From the entrance of Lake Erie to Detroit, there is a distance of six leagues; from Detroit to Lake Saint Claire, two leagues; from the outlet of this lake, which extends seven leagues, to Lake Huron, there is a distance of eleven leagues. The site of the post is a very beautiful one, the climate is pleasant, the atmosphere very healthy, the soil excellent and good for any productions; the game is abundant. . . . On the north there are three leagues of land, inhabited by Frenchmen, and on the south two leagues and a half. . . . This post has a commandant, a major, etc.; the garrison comprises men belonging to the companies detached from the marine. This post is worked by means of licenses (congés), whose price is generally five hundred francs, payable in cash, and whose number is not determined.

some three hundred leagues, and some one hundred leagues, and more, from Detroit. This post is situated between Lake Michigan and Lake Huron. . . . The Governor-General receives generally from the voyageurs five hundred francs upon each canoe laden with merchandizes, and the proceeds thereof are distributed among the officers and the poor families. In ordinary times, six or seven hundred bundles (paquets) of furs are forwarded from the fort per annum. . . Michilimackinac is the entrepôt of all the northern posts, as Detroit is of the southern ones.

MIAMIS POST.—The post of the Miamis (Bellestre, Lieutenant), is situated on the right shore of the river of that name, and has a fort built with palisades. . . . This fort is farmed to the commandant for three years, in consideration of a sum of twelve hundred francs per annum. He has the control of the fur trade; the King delivers neither certificates nor presents to the Indians; the farmer must bear these expenses, and, moreover, pay the salary of the interpreter; he receives no gratuity. . . . This post produces generally from two hundred and fifty to three hundred bundles of furs.

Col. De Bougainville on the French posts in Canada, 1757.

OUYATANONS.—The post of Ouyatanons (Camet Bayeul, Ensign), is situated on the right shore of the River Ouabache, or St. Jerome; the fort is built with palisades. This post is on the same footing with that of the Miamis; the commandant is its farmer, and pays on that account twelve hundred francs annually. . . . This post, and those that are dependent upon it, produce generally from four hundred to four hundred and fifty bundles of furs per annum.

VINCENNES.—The post of Vincennes is a pretty village subject to New Orleans, which sends there a commandant. It has three horse-mills, and contains seventy-five inhabitants, who labour and reap corn.

ILLINOIS POST.—The principal entrepôt of the post of Illinois is Fort Chartres, situated upon the Mississippi. There are, for all these posts, a garrison of six companies, furnished, as is also the commandant, by New Orleans. The divisions of the Illinois are . . . the Cahoo [Cahokias] . . . the Metchi . . . the Kas [Kaskaskias] . . . These three nations are now comprised under the name of the Illinois. This post is worked by means of licenses, whose price is six hundred francs per canoe. . . . There is another post on the River of the Illinois, where resides a commandant in a fort called Pimiteoui. The tribes which trade there are the Peorias. Seven hundred men produce two hundred bundles of furs.

KANSÉS.—In ascending this stream [the Missouri River] we meet the village of the Kansés. We have there a garrison with a commandant, appointed, as is the case with Pimiteoui and Fort Chartres, by New Orleans. This post produces one hundred bundles of furs.

FORT DUQUESNE.—Fort Duquesne is situated on the left bank of Belle-Rivière [Ohio], at the confluence of the Malangucule [Monongahela]. This post is worked by means of licenses, which are distributed free in order to encourage traders to forward furs there. It produces generally, per annum, from two hundred to two hundred and fifty bundles of furs.

FORT OF LA PRESQU' ISLE.—La Presqu' Ile is a square fort, built with squared timbers, situated on Lake Erie, at a distance of seven leagues from Rivière au Boeuf and Niagara, almost at the entrance of a large bay, about one league and a-half long, with a width of half a league. There are at the post a commandant, who receives a salary of 1,000 francs, and a garrison of from fifty to sixty men. This post is for the fur trade in the same position with the two preceding ones; it is important as a necessary entrepôt, and the first between Niagara and the Belle-Rivière.

FORT OF THE RIVIÈRE AU BOEUF.—The Fort of the Rivière au Boeuf, a square fort built with palisades, is situated at thirty leagues from Fort Machault, on the river of which it bears the name. This post is a necessary entrepôt for Fort Duquesne, but it should be rebuilt in order to be protected against a coup de main. This post is not a trading one.

FORT MACHAULT.—Fort Machault is situated at the confluence of the Rivers au Boeuf and Ohio. It is the last entrepôt towards Fort Duquesne. . . . It is not a trading post.

NIAGARA.—Niagara may be considered as a strong place; it is situated at the head of Lake Ontario to the south, at the confluence of Niagara River. This post is the key of the upper countries.

The soil being most fertile, the climate mild, and game and fish abundant, we should attempt to establish there a town, or at least a village. . . . The King controls the fur trade of this post, and consequently pays the salaries of the commandant and other employés, but the trade is badly managed. The post produces generally per annum from two hundred and fifty to three hundred bundles of furs.

TORONTO.—Situated to the north of Lake Ontario, opposite Niagara, has been established in order to prevent the northern Indians from going to trade at Choueguen. Choueguen existing no more, this post becomes useless. The King controls its trade. It produces about one hundred and fifty bundles of furs.

FRONTENAC.—Frontenac, or Katarakoui, a fort in bad condition, situated at the entrance of Lake Ontario; had Choueguen not been destroyed, it would have been necessary to repair it. It has a commandant, with some officers under his orders, and a garrison of soldiers. . . . This post is managed by the King, who consequently defrays all its charges. It can produce annually from twenty to thirty bundles of furs.

LA PRÉSENTATION.—A Mission for the Indians of the Five Nations, established by M. l'Abbé Piquet, on the right shore of the River St. Lawrence, at . . . leagues from Montreal. There are now about one hundred Indians of the Five Nations assembled under his care. It has a fort in bad condition, built with palisades, with a commandant and a small garrison. This fort is worked for the King. It produces generally from thirty to forty bundles of furs per annum.

BAYE DES PUANTS.—The post of Baye des Puants [Green Bay] (Monsieur de Rigaud) is farmed in consideration of nine thousand francs; every expense on account of the King has been suppressed; the King delivers neither presents nor certificates, and does not pay the salaries of the interpreters; the farmers must bear all those expenses. The commandant (Lieut. Coutrol) is interested in the farming, and manages the trade for his own account as well as for his associates; he receives a gratuity of two thousand francs. The post produces usually from five to six hundred bundles of furs per annum.

RIVER ST. JOSEPH.—The fort of River St. Joseph (Monsieur le Verrier) is situated on the right of the river of that name, at a distance of twenty leagues from the place of its discharge into Lake Michigan. This post is on the same footing with that at La Baye; the commandant is its farmer in whole or in part, according to the pleasure of the Governor-General; all the expenses rest upon him; he receives a gratuity of two thousand francs. . . . It can produce four hundred bundles of furs.

30 POST OF THE WESTERN SEA (LA MER DE L'OUEST).—The post of the Western Sea is the most advanced towards the north; it is situated amidst many Indian tribes, with whom we trade, and who have intercourse also with the English, towards Hudson's Bay. We have there seven forts built of stockades, trusted, generally, to the care of one or two officers, seven or eight soldiers, and eighty engagés Canadiens. We can push further the discoveries we have made in that country, and communicate even with California.

The post of La Mer d'Ouest includes the forts ST. PIERRE, ST. CHARLES, BOURBON, DE LA REINE, DAUPHIN, POSKOIA, [and] DES PRAIRIES, all of which are built with palisades that can give protection only against the Indians. Fort St. Pierre is situated on the left shore of Lake Tokamamiouen, or Lac de la Pluie [Rainy Lake], at 500 leagues from Michilimakinak and 300 from Kamanistigoya, or les 40 Trois Rivières [Three Rivers], to the north-west of Lake Superior. Fort St. Charles is situated sixty leagues from Fort St. Pierre, on a peninsula that goes far into Lac des Bois [Lake of the Woods]. Fort Bourbon is at one hundred and fifty leagues from the preceding one, and at the entrance of Lake Quinipég. Fort la Reine is situated on the right shore of the River of the Assiniboels, at seventy leagues from Fort Bourbon. This country is composed of vast prairies; it is the route to go through to the upper part of the Missouri. Fort Dauphin at eighty leagues from the preceding one, on the River Minanghenahequekd, or Eau Trouble. Fort Poskoia is built on the river of that name [now Saskatchewan], at 180 leagues from the preceding one; it takes ten days from this fort to reach Nelson River. The Fort des Prairies is at eighty leagues from Fort Poskoia in the upper part of the river of that name. This post has been farmed in consideration of a sum of eight thousand francs; the com- 50 mandant is its farmer, with a fourth interest in its trade. The Indians who trade there are the Christinaux and the Assiniboels; these two tribes form each twelve villages inhabited respectively by two hundred and fifty men (hommes). This post produces usually from three to four hundred bundles of furs; we must take into account also fifty to sixty slaves, Rouges or Panis, of Jatihilinine, a nation situated on the Missouri, and which plays the same rôle in America that the negroes do in Europe. This is the only post where this traffic takes place.

The post of La Mer d'Ouest merits special attention for two reasons—the first, that it is the nearest to the establishments of the English at Hudson's Bay, and from which their movements can be watched; the second that from this post the discovery of the Western Sea may be accomplished; but to make this discovery it will be necessary that the travellers (voyageurs) give up all views of personal interest.

The one who advanced this discovery most was the Sieur de la Verandrye; he went from Fort de la Reine to reach the Missouri. Upon this river he first met the Mandanes or Blancs-Barbus, numbering seven villages surrounded by forts of staked earthworks with a moat; then the Kinongewiniris or Brochets, composing three villages; at the upper part of the river he found the Mahantas, also composing three villages, and along the Missouri in descending it to the discharge of the River Wabiek, or to the Coquille, twenty-three villages of Panis.

gainville on the French posts in Canada, 1757.

To the south-west of this river, and on the two shores of Ouonaradaba, or à la Graisse, are the Hactannes or Gens du Serpent. They extend from the foot of a chain of very high mountains [the Rocky Mountains], which run north, east and south, and to the south of which is the River Karoskiou or Cerise-Pelé, which is supposed to reach California.

He continued his journey, and found in those vast territories, where the Missouri has its sources, opposite to, and about forty leagues from the Mahantas, the Owilinicé or Beaux-Hommes, four villages; opposite the Brochets the Macateonalasites or Pieds-Noirs [Blackfeet], three villages of about 100 cabins each; opposite the Mandanes are the Osepakaaerenousques or Gens du Plat Côté, four villages; opposite the Panis are the Gens de l'Arc, named the Atehapciviniouques by the Christianaux, and Utasibaoutchactas by the Assiniboels, three villages; after these are found the Makesch or Petits Renards, two villages; the Privassa or Grands-Parleurs, three villages; the Kakakoschena, or Gens de la Pie, five villages; the Kiskipisounouinini or Gens de la Jarretière, seven villages.

He could not go further on account of the war which was then being waged between the Gens de la Jarretière and the neighbouring nation. I may here observe, that it is perhaps improper to use the term villages as I have done, for all these nations which inhabit the prairies form, like the Tartars, wandering hordes, live by the chase, and dwell in huts covered with skins.

NÉPIGON.—Les Népigons, a post established to the north of Lake Superior; the commandant is its farmer, and pays for that privilege about 4,000 francs; it includes the Lake à la Carpe. . . . The Indians who trade at the post are the Saulteaux; this tribe, one of the most numerous in these regions, is wandering, plants nothing, and subsists solely by the chase and fishing. The post produces generally every year from eighty to one hundred bundles of fur.

CHAGOAMIGON POINT.—The post of point de Chagoamigon [La Pointe] (Monsieur de Beaubassin) . . . is farmed in consideration of a sum of eight thousand francs, to Sieur de saint Luc, until 1758; there are neither presents nor certificates sent, only the interpreter to be paid. The commandant receives a gratuity of three thousand francs. The Indians who trade at the post are the Saulteaux. Generally, the post produces each year about two hundred and fifty bundles.

KAMANISTIGOYA.—The post of Kamanistigoya, or Les Trois Rivières (Monsieur de Repentigny) was farmed to the late M. Cugnet in consideration of a sum of four thousand francs. He having sub-farmed the same to M. Toussaint Portier, the Crown has granted him the surplus in order to indemnify him for the loss of the licenses of the Saint Maurice. The King bears no other expense than a gratuity of two thousand francs to the commandant; there are neither presents nor certificates; the farming of this fort will expire in 1758. The Indians who trade are the Saulteaux. The fort produces annually from sixty to seventy bundles.

MICHIPICOTON.—A post situated to the north-east, as that of Kamanistiguia is to the north-west, of Lake Superior. The Saulteaux trade at this post. It produces from fifty to sixty bundles of furs.

SAULT STE. MARIE.—Fort built with palisades, situated on the strait which unites Lake Superior to Lake Huron, established in 1750. The fur trade was granted gratis to the commandant in order to promote the settlement. The King gives 400 francs of gratuity charged against Michilimakinac, on which this post depends. The Indians who trade there are the Saulteaux. The post produces annually one hundred bundles. The Sieur Debonne and the Sieur de Repentigny have obtained its possession by way of a grant, as an hereditary seigniory.

TEMISCAMINGUE.—A post situated on a lake of that name, and farmed in consideration of the sum of 7,000 francs; the Indians call the place where stands the post Aubatswenanek. The tribes that trade there are the Têtes de Boule, or Gens des Terres and the Namcosakio, who come from the shores of Hudson's Bay.

TABITIBI is a post dependent upon Temiscamingue, situated at one hundred any twenty leagues from the precedent fort, towards Hudson's Bay; each post may contain one hundred men; they subsist on game and fishing; they sow no grain, and have no village. All this country is mountainous and not at all fertile. The post produces about 120 bundles of furs.

FUR TRADE AND LICENSES (Congés).—In almost every post, the house occupied by the commandant, being surrounded with palisades, is honoured with the name of Fort. People in Canada give this name to public stores, (comptoirs), where the fur trade with the Indians takes place, who in exchange for their peltries, receive the goods wanted by them. In earlier times these posts were sold by auction, and the traders could obtain their possession, but the Governor-General disposes of them now for his favourites, with the approbation of the Court. The most important are La Mer d'Ouest, La Baye [des Puants], St. Joseph, Népigon, and Michilimakinac. The post of Detroit is granted to no one; the system of license (conges) prevails there.

There are posts where the fur trade goes on for the benefit of the King, such as Toronto, Frontenac, Niagara, Petit Portage, Presqu' Isle, Rivière au Boeuf, Fort Machault, Fort Duquesne. The traffic in these posts is not a profitable one for the King, who always loses money in this way; he retains it only to preserve the alliance of the Indians; the storekeepers and the commandants know, however, how to enrich themselves.

We call conge the licenses or permits that are granted by the Governor-General for a canoe laden with six thousand pounds of merchandizes intended to be sold in one of the posts indicated; such a license costs fifty pistoles.

The Governor-General, who is at liberty to give more or less, applies these funds for the maintenance of poor families of officers. Account is given to the King of only twenty-two licenses; the Governor sometimes gives as many as forty; the half of the fifty pistoles goes to the King, and the other half is at the disposal of the Governor for gratuities.

The post of La Baie has given in three years to M.M. Rigau and Marin three hundred and twelve thousand francs, and at the time of M. Marin, the father, who was associated with M.M. de la Jonquiére and Bigot, it produced more than one hundred and fifty thousand francs per annum all expenses paid.

TRADING POSTS.

Northern Posts.—1. Themiskeming (no commandant there); 2. Michilimakinac; 3. La Bais; 4. La Mer d'Ouest; 5. Sault Ste. Marie (the seigniory and the exclusive trade are granted in perpetuity to M. Debonne or his heirs); 6. Chagouamigon; 7. Kaministigouya; 8. Népigon; 9. Michipicoton (no commandant); 10. St. Joseph; 11. The River of the Illinois (no commandant has yet been appointed for that post). The General sells licenses to the traders in order to allow them to trade with the Indians.

Southern Posts.—La Présentation, Frontenac, Toronto, Niagara, (the small Fort of Niagara,—the Indian trade is for the King's benefit); Detroit (Licenses are sold to the traders); The Miamis, sixty CIVIL AND MILITARY DIVISIONS OF LOUISIANA IN 1723.*

Louisiana, in 1723, was divided into nine civil and military districts, as follows, viz: 1st, the district of the Alibamons; 2nd, of Mobile; 3rd, of Biloxi; 4th, of Natchez; 5th, of New Orleans; 6th, of Yazoo; 7th, of Illinois; 8th, of Arkansas; and 9th of Matchitoches. Each was protected by a fort, and under the jurisdiction of a commandant and judge, who administered the military and civil concerns of 10 each.

Civil and military divisions of Louisiana,

FORT CHARTRES was the headquarters of the commandant of Upper Louisiana, and was deemed one of the strongest French posts in North America. It was erected in the vicinity of Prairie du Rocher (in 1720), about one mile and a half from the river bank, about twenty-five miles below Kaskaskia. Its form was quadrilateral, with four bastions built of stone, and well cemented with lime. Each side was three hundred and forty feet in length; the walls were three feet thick and fifteen feet high. Within the walls were spacious stone barracks, a spacious magazine, well, etc. The cornices and casements, port-holes or loops were of solid blocks of stone. In 1770, the river broke through its banks, and in two years afterwards two of its bastions fell into the river. It was then suffered to fall into decay, and it is now one of most beautiful and picturesque ruins in the valley of the Mississippi. 20

FORT ROSALIE, at the Natchez, stood on the summit of a hill about six hundred and seventy yards from the shore of the river, and about one hundred and eighty feet above the surface of the water, overlooking a beautiful champaign country, and the river for many miles both up and down. It was an irregular pentagon without bastions, and built of thick plank. The buildings within consisted of a stone house, magazine, houses for the officers, and barracks for soldiers. The ditch surrounding it was partly natural and partly artificial, and in most places nineteen feet from the bottom to the top of the rampart. M. de Bienville named it Rosalie in honour of Madame la Duchesse de Pontchartrain. By the sliding and caving in of the banks of the river, its huge bastions became nearly all destroyed; still it is one of the most interesting and picturesque spots that the traveller can visit in the delta of the Mississippi. 30

The fort at POINT COUPEE was a quadrangle with four bastions, built with stockades, on the west bank of the Mississippi River. 30

FORT ARKANSAS was erected in 1685, about three leagues from the mouth of that river, and about two hundred yards from the water side. It was built of stockades, and the interior sides of the polygon measured about one hundred and eighty feet long, mounted with cannon. The Arkansas, or Quapas Indians, lived about three leagues above it, where the celebrated John Law had his concession, which he settled with Germans. After the failure of his great financial schemes the Germans deserted the settlement, and located themselves on the Mississippi, about thirty miles above New Orleans, on small plantations, which has ever since borne the name of the German Coast.

FORT CREVECEUR, afterwards called St. Louis, was built by De la Salle, in the country of the Illinois, on his first visit to that country. It was seated on the top of a steep bluff, about two hundred feet high, with a spacious esplanade, and the river washing its base. 40

M. de la Salle likewise built a stockade fort at St. Bernard's Bay, Texas, in 1685, claiming possession and jurisdiction over all the country from the mouth of the Mississippi to the Rio Grande, or Rio Bravo del Norte, of Mexico.

FORT ST. LOUIS DE CARLORETTE was built in 1719, by the orders of M. de Bienville, on the right bank of Red River, in north latitude 33° 55', as a sign of the jurisdiction of France in that part of Louisiana, since called Texas.

* Historical Collections of Louisiana, By B. F. French, part iii., note, pp. 84-86.

The first old FORT BILOXI has been placed by Major Stoddard, in his work on Louisiana, on Perdido Bay, the ancient boundary line of the French and Spaniards, about twelve miles west of Pensacola Bay, where he says M. d'Iberville erected a fort with four bastions, on which he mounted twelve cannons, and where it is said some remains of it may still be seen. But be this true or not, M. d'Iberville, before he sailed for France in 1699, built a fort upon the north-east shore of the Bay of Biloxi, about fifteen miles north of Ship Island, of four bastions and mounted with twelve cannons (the remains of which are still to be seen), which was the sign of the jurisdiction of France from the Rio Perdido to the Rio Bravo del Norte, and appointed M. de Sauvolle its commander, who kept a journal or history of the colony up to the day of his death.

10 The BALIZE FORT, at the mouth of the Mississippi River, was built about the same time on an island, and mounted with cannon to protect the French ships that anchored there, and to drive off the Spaniards.

FORT LOUISE DE MOBILE, or CONDE, was built upon the River Mobile, and below the town and about fifteen or sixteen leagues from the fort on Dauphin Island. It was constructed of bricks, with four bastions mounted with cannons, after the manner of Vauban, with half moons, deep ditches, covered ways and glacis, with houses for the officers and barracks for the soldiers. The foundations of this fort are still to be seen, occupying a considerable space in the City of Mobile. Although this was the headquarters of the French Governor for many years, they were afterwards removed to NEW ORLEANS, on the banks of the Mississippi, which the French, and afterwards the Spanish, fortified after the manner 20 of Vauban. A ditch was extended round the city of about eighteen feet in width, with ramparts of earth, and palisades nearly six feet high along the interior or inner side of them. Five large bastions were erected at proper distances, and likewise five intervening redoubts. The bastions were regularly constructed: each of them was furnished with a banquette, rampart, parapet, ditch, covered way, and glacis. The curtains were wholly formed with palisades at a small distance from each other, and were musket proof; they had a banquette within, and ditch and glacis without. A small redoubt, or ravelin, was placed in the centre of each bastion, and all the latter were of sufficient size to admit of sixteen embrasures—four in each face, three in each flank, and two in the gorge facing the city—the whole of which was mounted with heavy cannon; the south-west bastion with a counter-guard and traverses, and a small redoubt on the bank of the river. The two forts (St. Charles and Conde) at the angles 30 facing the river, likewise mounted with heavy Spanish ordnance, constituted the defence of the city when Louisiana was ceded to the United States.

[CANADA OR NEW FRANCE].—The limits of this large country are variously fixed by our 40 geographers, some of them extending them quite from Florida to the northern boundaries of America or from 33 to 63 degrees of north latitude.... Others bound it on the north by the land called Labrador, or New Britany; on the east by the Northern Sea and New England, etc.; on the south by Florida; and on the west by New Mexico, and the unknown tracts north of it. According to which, it will extend itself from the 25th to the 53rd degree of latitude, and from 76 to 93 of west longitude. But its greatest extent is commonly taken from south-west to north-east, that is, from the Province of Padoua, in New Spain, to Cape Charles, near the Bay of St. Lawrence, which is reckoned near 900 leagues [The preceding includes, whilst the following excludes, Louisiana.] Baron Hontan,.....makes it to reach only from 39 to 65 degrees of latitude; that is, from the south side of the Erie Lake to the north-side of Hudson's Bay, and in longitude from the River Mississippi to Cape Race in Newfoundland.

CANADA, in its largest sense, is commonly divided into Eastern and Western, the former of which is commonly known by the name of Canada, or New France, and the latter, which is of much later discovery, Louisiana, in honour of the late Lewis XIV. The former of these, including all to the north and west of the great river and lakes, contains twenty-eight tribes [the following, among others]—Illinois, Miamis, Maskoutens, Outovagamis, Hurons, Outaouatz, Nipissinians, Algonkins Nadouessoueronous, Kiristinoas. SAGUENAY contains the four following nations or tribes, viz: 1, The Esquimaux; 2, Bersiamites or Oupapinachois; 3, Oumionquois; and 4, Cacouchagois.

It may not be improper to give a farther list of the wild nations of these parts. Round the Hurons' Lake, the Hurons. the Outatouas, Nokes, Missisaques, Atticunekes, and the Outchipones, surnamed Leapers. About the Lake of the Illinois, some Illinois, the Oumamis, Maskoutens Kikapous, Outagamis, Malomismis, Pouteuotamis, Ojatinous, and the Sakis. All these speak the Algonkin. Along the River of the Outaouas are seated the Tabitibi, Monzoni, Machacandibi, Neopemen of Achirim, Nepisirin, and Temiskamink—all speak Algonkin. About the Upper or Superior Lake, in north of the Mississippi, live the Assimpoals, Soukaskitons, Ovadbatons, Atintons, Clistinos, and the Esquimaux.

CANADA PROPER hath on the north the Terra de Labrador, Hudson's Bay and New Wales. On the east the great River Saguenay divides it from the Province of that name; on the south the great Province of Louisiana, and the Iroquois and Etechemins. As to the northern boundaries, they are not known, and must be left to time to discover.

THE PROVINCE OF LOUISIANA.—This vast tract is bounded on the south by the Gulph of Mexico, 20 on the north by the Illinois. and by the Territories of the Panissus, Paoducas, Osages, Tionontecagas, Chavanons, and other wild nations; on the east, by a part of Florida, Georgia, and Carolina; and on the west, by New Mexico and New Spain. The maps of the accurate Mr. de Lisle give those boundaries a much greater extent, especially on the north side, where they make it contiguous to Canada.

FIRST VISIT OF RADISSON AND DESGROISSILIER TO HUDSON'S BAY, 1666.—Two French gentlemen meeting with some savages in the Lake of Assimponals [Winnipeg], in Canada, they learned of them, that they might go by land to the bottom of the Bay, where the English had not yet been; upon which, the Frenchmen desired the Indians to conduct them thither, which the savages accordingly did. The Frenchmen returned to the Upper Lake [Superior] the same way they came, and from thence to 30 Quebec, the capital of Canada; where they offered the principal merchants to carry ships to Hudson's Bay, but their project was rejected. Hence they went to France in hopes of a more favourable hearing at Court. but they were answered as they had been at Quebec. The King of England's Ambassador at Paris persuaded them to go to London, where they met with a favourable reception from some men of quality, merchants and others, who employed Mr. Gillain, a person long used to the New England trade, to perfect this discovery.

OPERATIONS OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY IN THE BAY, 1670-86.—In the year 1670, the Hudson's Bay Company sent over Charles Baily, Esq., as their Governor, who, with Mr. Radisson, settled at Rupert's River; and another factory was established at Fort Nelson. In the year 1683, Henry Serjeant, Esq., was made Governor at Rupert's River, with orders to be very careful of the 40 French, who now began to shew themselves very jealous of the trade carried on by the English Company with the natives. In the year 1686, we find the Company in possession of five settlements, namely: Albany River, Hayes Island, Rupert's River, Fort Nelson (or York), and New Severn.

NO FORT OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY BUILT INLAND ON NELSON OR HAYES RIVERS, 1747.—If a fort were built at the Great Fork, sixty leagues above York Fort, towards the south-west, and a factory with European goods fix'd there, and a reasonable price put upon the: the trade would be wonderfully increas'd. The Great Fork is that part where the Rivers Nelson and Hayes join, and having run a little way together, separate again, forming an Island, which is called Hayes Island.

FRENCH POSTS AND TRADE NORTH OF THE HEIGHT OF LAND, SOUTH AND EAST OF THE BAY, 1747.—The bottom of the Bay is by the French pretended to be part of New France; and indeed, to cross the 50 country from St. Margaret's River, which runs into the River of Canada, or St. Lawrence, to Rupert's River, at the bottom of Hudson's Bay, is not above 150 miles.

The French have a house or settlement for trade near the southern branch of Moose River about one hundred miles above the factory, where they sell their goods cheaper than the Company do; altho' it be very dillicent and expensive to carry them so far from Canada. . . . The French get all the choice skins, and leave only the refuse for the Company. The French have also got another house pretty high up, upon Rupert's River, by which they have gain'd all the trade upon the East Main, except a little the Company get at Slude River, the mouth of which is about thirty leagues to the north of Rupert's River.

10 TRADE OF THE REMOTE INDIANS WITH MONTREAL, 1747.—Montreal drives a vast trade with the natives, whose chiefs go first to pay their duty to the governor and make him some presents. . . . This concourse begins about June, and some of them come hither from places distant about five hundred leagues. The fair is kept along the bank of the river, and those natives are suffered to go and exchange their wares with the French. . . . This concourse lasts off and on near three months. The natives bring thither all sorts of furs, which they exchange for guns, powder, ball, great-coats, and other French garments, iron and brass works, and trinkets of all sorts.

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY'S TRADE WITH THE INTERIOR, 1747.—The English who . . . trade here [New South Wales], have no plantations or settlements within land, but live near the coast within their forts, in little houses or huts.

20 MEMORIAL OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY TO THE LORDS OF TRADE AND PLANTATIONS, 3RD OCTOBER, 1750.

The said Governor and Company, in obedience to your Lordships orders of the 25th July, last, requiring them to lay before your Lordships an account of the limits and boundaries of the territory granted to them, represent to your Lordships :

The said Streights and Bay, commonly called Hudson's Streights and Bay, are now so well known that it is apprehended they stand in no need of any particular description than by the chart or map herewith delivered to your Lordships; and the limits or boundaries of the lands and countries lying round the same, comprised as your memorialists conceive in the said grant, are as follows, that is to say: All the land lying on the east side or coast of the said bay, and extending from the bay eastward to the Atlantic Ocean and Davis Streights, and the line hereinafter mentioned as the east and south-eastward boundaries of the said Company's territories; and toward the north all the lands that lie at the north end, or on the north side or coast of the said bay, and extending from the bay northwards to the utmost limits of the lands, then towards the north pole, but where or how those lands terminate is hitherto unknown; and towards the west, all the lands that lie upon the west side or coast of the said bay, and extending from the bay westward to the utmost limits of those lands, but where or how those lands terminate to the west-ward is also unknown, though, probably, it will be found that they terminate on the great South Sea; and towards the south, all the lands that lie at the south end or south side or coast of the said bay, the extent of which lands to the south to be limited and divided from the places appertaining to the French in those parts, by a line to be drawn for the purpose, to begin from the Atlantic Ocean on the east side of an island called Grimington's Island, otherwise Cape Perlix, in the latitude of $58\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ on the Labrador coast, and to be drawn from thence south-westward to the great lake Miscosinke otherwise called Mistoseny, and through the same, dividing that lake into two parts, down to the 49th degree of north latitude, as described in the said map or plan delivered herewith, and from thence to be continued by a meridian line of the said latitude 49° westward.

[The memorial complains of the French encroachments before the Treaty of Utrecht, and sets out the tenth Article of that Treaty thus: "That the French King should restore to the Kingdom and Queen of Great Britain, to be possessed in full right forever, the Bay and Streights of Hudson, together with all lands, seas, sea-coasts, rivers, and places situate in the said Bay and Streight, and which belong

That in pursuance of the said Treaty, and the especial commission of Her late Majesty, Queen Anne, dated 20th July, 1713, the said bay and lands were delivered up to, etc., and commissaries were appointed to settle the said limits and adjust the damages, etc., and proceedings were had by the said commissaries towards settling the same, but they were never able to bring the settlement of the said limits to a final conclusion, etc.

The boundary line then proposed by the Hudson's Bay Company, to be settled on the limits on the continent between them and the places belonging to the French at the south end of the said bay, as 10 appears from the several memorials and a map or a plan then presented by the said Hudson's Bay Company to the Lords Commissioners of Trade, and still remaining in your Lordships' office, was the same as the line now proposed by your memorialists for the south-east and south boundaries; and to avoid as much as possible any just grounds for differing with the French in agreeing on those boundaries which be nearest the settlements, it is laid down so as to leave the French in possession of as much or more land than they can make any just pretensions to, and at the same time leave your memorialists but a very small district of land from the south end of the said bay, necessary for a frontier.

[It next refers to former memorials setting forth the national rights, and that—]

Since the Treaty of Utrecht the French and all the other nations have effectually been kept out of Hudson's Bay and Streights, and have never offered to come into or navigate on the same with any 20 ship, vessel, or boat or carried on any trade there. But the French, since the said treaty, as has been reported to your memorialists from their factories in the bay, have at different times made some settlements in different parts inland to the west of the said bay, within the aforesaid limits of the Hudson's Bay Company, and have also carried on some trade within the said company's limits by means of wood-runners in an interloping way, both which are conceived and humbly represented to your Lordships as encroachments on the British territories or trade.

That your memorialists have used the best endeavours in their power to prevent the French making any encroachments on the British territory in those parts, and particularly at the south end of the said bay, where, by the neighbourhood of the French, there is most to be apprehended. Your memorialists have made a settlement many years since upon the principal river there, called Moose River, which runs 30 from a great distance south into the bay, and have also erected a fort mounted with cannon for the defence of the settlement, and preventing the French entering the bay by any navigation down that river; and your memorialists, on another principal river called Albany River, that likewise falls into the bay towards the southward thereof, and comes a great way from the west, erected another fort called Henley, at the distance of 120 miles up that river, your memorialists thereby endeavouring to guard their territories both to the south and west against the French frontier, and which forts and settlements of your memorialists, are maintained and supported by them at considerable expense. And your memorialists have, in like manner, for their further defence towards the west, erected a fort at Flamboro', head of Port Nelson River, and have also several other settlements or forts at the entrance 40 of the principal rivers that come into the bay from the west, particularly on Churchill River, Hays River, and the said Albany River, and also on the east side of the bay at Sluid River and Axtinepeck Bay, and have also several ships and vessels navigating the straits and bay at proper seasons, some of which remain there the whole year; and the natives all round the bay, by means of the rivers that fall into the same, on breaking up of the ice come down in canoes from the country several hundred miles inland to trade with the Company, bringing with them large quantities of beavers and other furs, the produce of that cold climate, and taking in exchange British manufactures, which the Company have always ready to supply them with, and which the Indians carry back with them for their own consumption and use, and to dispose of among other natives there, and which it is apprehended is better performed by them than could be done by Europeans, and the rivers that run into the bay admit of no navigation for ships, or any vessel of burden at any considerable distance up the same, and the climate 50 round the bay is so extremely cold as to admit of no agriculture, the Indians of those parts being altogether a wandering people, and wholly subsisting themselves by hunting, living on the wild beasts they kill, and bartering their furs.

That your memorialists apprehend it will be for the benefit of this kingdom that the limits of the territories granted to your memorialists, and the places appertaining to the French, should be settled upon the footing hereinbefore mentioned, and that the French should be obliged to remove all encroachments they have made within the said limits, by breaking up their settlements, and restraining the wood-runners from entering the same, etc., etc., etc.

10 Under the seal of the Company.

JEFFERYS' ACCOUNT OF THE FRENCH POSTS OF THE WEST, 1761.*

A number of rivers, some of which are very considerable, discharge themselves into this Lake [Superior]. One of these, which falls into it, near the middle of its northern shore, rises about 25 or 30 leagues north of Lake Superior, from a lake called Alimipegon [Nepigon], near which are the sources of a river that falls into Hudson's Bay. Another river that falls into Lake Superior, near the last mentioned, is called, in the French maps, Natouagan [Pigeon River] and communicates, if we may believe the inhabitants, by a chain of rivers and smaller lakes, with a considerable lake called Lake Bourbon, which is made to communicate, in like manner, by Port Nelson River, called by the French Bourbon River, with Hudson's Bay to the north-east. The French likewise suppose that it communi-

20 cates westward with the great sea, commonly called the South Sea or Pacific Ocean.

At the mouth of Les Trois Rivières, or the Three Rivers, is a little French fort, called Camanistogouia; and twenty-five leagues to the west of the said fort, the land begins to slope, and the river to run towards the west.

At ninety-five leagues from this greatest height lies the second establishment of the French that way, called Fort St. Pierre, in the Lake des Pluies. The third is Fort St. Charles, eighty leagues farther, on the Lake de Bois. The fourth is Fort Maurepas, a hundred leagues distant from the last near the head of the Lake Quinipigon. Fort la Reine, which is the fifth, lies a hundred leagues farther, on the river of the Assiniboels [Assiniboine.] Another fort had been built on the river Rouge [Red, River of the North], but was deserted on account of its vicinity to the two last. The sixth, Fort 30 Dauphin, stands on the west side of Lac des Prairies, or of the Meadows [Lake Manitoba]. And the seventh, which is called Fort Bourbon, stands on the shore of the great Lake Bourbon [the northern part of Winnipeg]. The chain ends with Fort Poskoyae, at the bottom of a river of that name, which falls into Lake Bourbon. The river Poskoyae is made by Delisle and Buache to rise within twenty-five leagues of their West Sea [Gulf of Georgia], which, they say, communicates with the Pacific Ocean.

All these Forts are under the Governor of Canada.

On the southern coast of Lake Superior, which extends almost due east and west, are the Isle de St. Michel, and the Bay of Chaouamigon, at the bottom of which was formerly a small Indian town, where a missionary and some other French came to settle in 1661, by means of which this place, at first scarce worth notice, soon became very remarkable. The Outagami, Saki, Outawai, Huron and Illinois 40 Indians resorted thither so early as 1668, for the sake of trade, and many of them settled there; and the traffic is still pretty considerable. This settlement was called La Mission du St. Esprit.

this country. The fort is an irregular quadrangle; the sides of the exterior polygon are 490 feet. It is built of stone, is plastered over, and is only designed as a defence against the Indians. The walls are two feet two inches thick, and are pierced with loop-holes at regular distances, and with two port-holes for cannon in the faces, and two in the flanks of each bastion. The ditch has never been finished. The entrance to the fort is through a very handsome rustic gate. Within the walls is a banquettes, raised three feet, for the men to stand on when they fire through the loop-holes. The buildings within the fort are—a commandant's and a commissary's house, the magazine of stores, corps de garde, and two barracks; these occupy the square. Within the gorges of the fort are a powder magazine, a bake-house and a prison, in the lower floor of which are four dungeons, and in the upper two rooms, and an out-house belonging to the commandant. The commandant's house is thirty-two yards long and ten broad, &c. The commissary's house (now occupied by officers) is built on the same line as this, and its proportion and the distribution of its apartments are the same. Opposite these are the store-house and the guard-house; they are each thirty yards long and eight broad. The former consists of two large store-rooms, under which is a large vaulted cellar, a large room, a bed-chamber, and a closet for the store-keeper; the latter, of a soldiers' and officers' guard-room, a chapel, a bed-chamber a closet for the chaplain, and an artillery store-room. The lines of barracks have never been finished; they at present consist of two rooms each for officers, and three rooms each for soldiers. They are each twenty feet square, and have betwixt them a small passage. There are five spacious lofts over each building, which reach from end to end; these are made use of to lodge regimental stores, working and entrenching tools, &c. It is generally believed that this is the most convenient and best built fort in North America.

[In 1756, Fort Chartres was rebuilt by order of the French Government, in view of the war with England. It was then half a mile from the Mississippi. In 1766 it was but eighty yards from the bank. In 1768 Captain Pitman writes]:—

Capt. Pitman on French settlements in the Illinois, 1763.

The bank of the Mississippi, next the fort, is continually falling in, being worn away by the current, which has been turned from its course by a sand bank, now increased to a considerable island, covered with willows. Many experiments have been tried to stop this growing evil, but to no purpose. Eight years ago the river was fordable to the island; the channel is now forty feet deep.

In the year 1764, there were about forty families in the village near the fort, and a parish church, served by a Franciscan friar, dedicated to Ste. Anne. In the following year, when the English took possession of the country, they abandoned their houses, except three or four poor families, and settled in the villages on the west side of the Mississippi, choosing to continue under the French Government.

[In 1772, the channel of the river reached the fort and the wall, and two bastions upon the west side were undermined and fell, and the British garrison abandoned the place, and Kaskaskia became the seat of government for the Illinois country.]

The village of NOTRE DAME DE CASCASQUIAS is by far the most considerable settlement in the country of Illinois, as well for its number of inhabitants, as for its advantageous situation.

Mons. Paget was the first who introduced water-mills in this country, and he constructed a very fine one on the river Cascasquias, which was both for grinding corn and sawing boards. It lies about one mile from the village. The mill proved fatal to him, being killed as he was working in it, with two negroes, by a party of Cherokees, in 1764.

The principal buildings are the church and Jesuits' house, which has a small chapel adjoining it; these, as well as some other houses in the village, are built of stone, and, considering this part of the world, make a very good appearance. The Jesuits' plantation consisted of two hundred and forty arpents of cultivated land, a very good stock of cattle, and a brewery, which was sold by the French commandant, after the country was ceded to the English, for the Crown, in consequence of the suppression of the Order. Mons. Beauvais was the purchaser, who is the richest of the English subjects of this country. He keeps eighty slaves; he furnishes eighty-six thousand weight of flour to the King's magazine, which was only a part of the harvest he reaped in one year.

Sixty-five families reside in this village, besides merchants, other casual people, and slaves. The fort, which was burnt down in October, 1766, stood on the summit of a high rock opposite the village and on the opposite side of the Koskaskin river. It was an oblongular quadrangle, of which the exterior polygon measured two hundred and ninety feet by two hundred and fifty-one feet. It was built of very thick squared timber, and dovetailed at the angles. An officer and twenty soldiers are quartered in the village. The officer governs the inhabitants, under the direction of the commandant at Chartres. Here are also two companies of militia.

LA PRAIRIE DE ROCHES [Du Rocher], is about seventeen miles from Cascaquias. It is a small village, consisting of twelve dwelling-houses, all of which are inhabited by as many families. Here is a little chapel, formerly a chapel of ease to the church at Fort Chartres. The inhabitants here are very industrious, and raise a great deal of corn, and every kind of stock. The village is two miles from Fort Chartres. It takes the name from its situation, being built under a rock that runs parallel with the river Mississippi, at a league distance, for forty miles up. Here is a company of militia, the captain of which regulates the police of the village.

SAINT PHILIPPE is a small village about five miles from Fort Chartres, on the road to Kaoquias. There are about sixteen houses and a small church standing. All the inhabitants, except the captain of the militia, deserted it in 1765, and went to the French side. The captain of the militia has about twenty slaves, a good stock of cattle, and a water-mill for corn and planks. This village stands in a very fine meadow, about one mile from the Mississippi.

The village of SAINTE FAMILLE DE KAOQUIA [Cahokia] is generally reckoned fifteen leagues from 20 Fort Chartres, and six leagues below the mouth of the Missouri. It stands near the side of the Mississippi, and is marked from the river by an island nearly two leagues long. The village is opposite to the centre of this island; it is long and straggling, being three-quarters of a mile from one end to the other. It contains forty-five dwelling-houses and a church near its centre. The situation is not well chosen, as in the floods it is generally overflowed two or three feet. This was the first settlement on the Mississippi. The land was purchased of the savages by a few Canadians, some of whom married women of the Kaoquias nation, and others brought wives from Canada, and then resided there, leaving their children to succeed them. The inhabitants of this place depend more on hunting and their Indian trade, than on agriculture, as they raise scarcely corn enough for their own consumption; they have a great plenty of poultry, and good stocks of horned cattle. The Mission of Saint Sulpice had a 30 very fine plantation here, and an excellent house built on it. They sold this estate, and a very good mill for corn and planks, to a Frenchman who chose to remain under the English Government. They also disposed of thirty negroes, and a good stock of cattle to different people in the country, and returned to France in 1764. What is called the Fort, is a small house standing in the centre of the village. It differs nothing from the other houses, except in being one of the poorest. It was formerly enclosed with high palisades, but these were torn down and burnt. Indeed, a fortress at this place could be of little use.

MICHIGAN COMMISSION ON LAND CLAIMS.

Extract from the letter of instructions to the Agent appointed to receive claims and take evidence concerning land claims at Green Bay and Prairie des Chiens.*

TERRITORY OF MICHIGAN,

Land District of Detroit, August 8, 1821.

It is not practicable for the Commissioners to prescribe the period of time which, by your notices, you will assign at Green Bay and Prairie des Chiens respectively, for receiving the evidences of claims and titles. The law requires reasonable notice; what may be deemed reasonable notice must depend upon the number of claimants and the remoteness of their relative situations. You must judge of it.

Though the settlement of Green Bay is spoken of by Charlevoix as early as 1720, yet it is believed the whole number of claimants there cannot exceed one hundred and fifty. The settlement at Prairie des Chiens is supposed to have been some thirty years later, though the number of claimants is believed to be considerably greater; but, in respect to both, it is said the settlements are quite compact. All the traditional or other information which can be procured by you concerning the origin and history of these settlements would be very desirable, and may be of much use in the ultimate investigation of their land claims.

*Report of Michigan Commissioners concerning the land titles at Prairie des Chiens, in the County of Crawford, and Territory of Michigan. (1828).

Few difficulties have been met with by the Commissioners in their investigation of these titles; they are not individually intricate. The determination of a few principles of general applicability, has furnished a rule by which they have all been decided, for they rest upon long continued possession.

Notwithstanding the high antiquity which may be claimed for the settlement of Prairie des Chiens, 20 and the very considerable numbers of which it has so long consisted, no one perfect title, founded upon French or British grant, legally authenticated, has been successfully made out; comparatively but few deeds of any sort have been exhibited to us. To an American, unacquainted with the astonishing carelessness of the Canadians in respect to whatever concerns their land titles, this fact must seem unaccountable. It nevertheless accords with whatever is known in this regard of the French population throughout this country.

Michigan
Commissioners' Report on land titles at Prairie des
Chiens, 1828.

It became manifest, therefore, immediately after the Commissioners were possessed of the report of the Agent, that whatever claim the people of Prairie des Chiens might have for a confirmation of their land titles, must be founded upon proof of continued possession since 1796,—a basis sufficiently broad to have comprehended perhaps all their claims, but for the changes which have occurred within a few 30 years among them, and the interruptions and occasional evictions from their possessions, consequent upon the establishment there, since the late war, of bodies of American troops.

Such interruptions and evictions, though frequent since the period alluded to, seem never, among the French population, to have excited a spirit of resistance, but to have been submitted to in silence. Since their ancestors were cut off, by the treaty which gave the Canadas to the English, from all intercourse with their parent country, the people, both of Green Bay and Prairie des Chiens, have been left, until within a few years, quite isolated, almost without any government but their own. And although the present population of these settlements are natives of the countries which they inhabit, and consequently are by birth citizens of the United States, yet, until within a few years, they have had, apparently, as little political connection with its Government as their ancestors had with that of the 40 British. Ignorance of their civil rights, carelessness of their land titles, docility, habitual hospitality, cheerful submission to the requisitions of any Government which may be set over them, are their universal characteristics. With those who know them, their quiet surrender of their fields and houses upon the demand of those who came ostensibly clothed with authority, would constitute no evidence of the illegality of their titles, or of the weakness of their claims.

A few additional remarks, in conclusion, might seem sufficient to satisfy the requisition of the law, and to explain adequately the grounds of the decisions the Commissioners have made. A circumstance has occurred, however, which seems to call for a more detailed exposition of their views. After the Agent had returned from Green Bay and Prairie des Chiens, and when it seemed too late to obtain rebutting or further testimony, a caveat was filed with the Commissioners, at the instance of the Superintendent of Indian trade, by John W. Johnson, Esq., Indian Factor, against the claim to Village Lot No. 14, preferred by the American Fur Company. The principles upon which that caveat is founded, and by which it is endeavored to be supported, apply with equal force to all the other land claims at Prairie des Chiens. The objections against the claim, and the documents adduced in support, consist in this—that the settlement at Prairie des Chiens is of recent origin; that its residents have intruded upon the public lands in violation of the laws of the United States, and that, in truth, the Indian title to the country in question has not been extinguished; objections which, if sustained in one case, must conclude all cases there. Upon a critical examination of this matter, so unexpectedly and so recently presented to them, the Commissioners have not been able to discover anything in the protest of the United States Indian Factor, in the documents he has adduced, or in his own fair and candid statement, which could sanction a doubt as to the propriety of confirming the claim set up by the American Fur Company.

It appears to have been in the spring of 1673 that Père Marquette and Mons. Juliet took their departure from the French establishment at Green Bay, on a voyage of discovery up the Fox River, and down the Wisconsin to the Mississippi. This channel of communication between the great lakes and the Mississippi, from about that period, had attracted a considerable portion of public attention. The French voyageurs continued afterwards generally to take that route; their Indian traders most usually did; and it is the same channel through which Carver also penetrated into the Mississippi country in 1766.

Michigan
Commissioners Report on land titles at Prairie des
Chiens, 1828.

Although the Commissioners have not, on this head, been able in so short a time to procure that ample and certain information which is desirable, yet it is believed that not very many years after its first discovery in 1673, by the French, a permanent establishment was made by them at the Prairie des Chiens. Vestiges of an old and strong French fort [Fort St. Nicholas] are still discernable there, although it is stated to have been destroyed so early as in the first years of the Revolutionary War.

When in 1805, the late General Pike was on his voyage up the Mississippi, he computed the fixed white population of the place, in the absence of the traders and those connected with them, at 370, and the total number at from 500 to 600. Mr. Schoolcraft, in 1820, estimates the population of the place at 500. No evidence can be obtained from the traditional history of the country that, at any one period, that settlement has received, by emigration, any sudden and large augmentation in the number of its inhabitants. It has never been characteristic of the French Canadian settlements to increase rapidly, and it is considered a fair inference, from all that can be learned on the subject, that for a long and indefinite time its numbers have been considerable, and increasing only at a tardy pace. This consideration is supposed to be eminently corroborative of the position the Commissioners have assumed, of the antiquity of this settlement.

With what propriety the inhabitants of Prairie des Chiens who were born there, and whose ancestors have for more than a century resided there, may be said to have "taken possession of the public lands in violation of the laws," how they may be said to be "intruders" who, and whose ancestors through so many political changes, have, with the assent, express or implied, of each successive sovereignty, continued to inhabit the country which gave them birth, it is hard to imagine.

It has been urged against them that their only right to the soil which they occupy consists in the permission accorded them by the Indians to remain there. Surrounded as that settlement always has been, by numerous hordes of ferocious savages, quite well disposed at all times to cause their power to be felt, it may, perhaps, be emphatically said (especially since the power of the French Government here was overthrown), that the inhabitants have occupied their lands "by permission of the Indians." Left with none to defend them, they must have accommodated themselves to their humours; it has from necessity resulted that they have been compelled to submit to their commands, and, however reluctantly, to subserv, perhaps often, their vindictive views. But it is not considered that anything in their history, in such respects, detracts from the force of their present claims.

The Commissioners have not had access to any public archives by which to ascertain, with positive certainty, whether either the French or English Government ever effected a formal extinguishment of Indian title at the mouth of the Wisconsin; yet the same observation, with the same truth, may be made in relation to the land now covered by the City of Detroit. It is believed that the French Government particularly, was not accustomed to hold formal treaties for such purposes with the Indians. And when lands have been anciently procured from them, either in virtue of the assumed right of conquest or by purchase, evidence of such acquisition is rather to be sought for in the traditional history of the country, or in the casual and scanty relations of travellers, than among collections of State papers. Tradition does recognize the fact of the extinguishment of the Indian title at Prairie des Chiens by the old French Government before its surrender to the English. And by the same species of testimony, more positive because more recent, it is established also that, in the year 1781, Patrick Sinclair, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, while the English Government obtained over this country, made a formal purchase from the Indians of the lands comprehending the settlement of Prairie des Chiens.

Michigan
Commissioners' Report on land titles at Prairie des
Chiens, 1828.

In Pike's Journal allusion is made to the last-mentioned purchase (Pike's Journal, appendix to part I. page 47). The agent also took down some testimony concerning the same facts, which may be found in the subjoined abstracts.

Whatever purchases may thus have been made by the French or British authorities, have since been sanctioned by the Treaty of St. Louis, holden June 3, 1816; and by another treaty (see Acts of 2nd Session of the 14th Congress, pp. 307-309), concluded also at St. Louis, on the 24th of August, 20 of the same year. It is provided (Art. 2) that the United States relinquish to the tribes with whom that treaty was holden, a certain tract of country lying north of a west line from the south bend of Lake Michigan, "excepting out of said relinquishment a tract of three leagues space at the mouth of the Wisconsin, including both banks," &c.; thus giving additional sanction to the allegation of a previous acquisition of the country comprehending the Prairie des Chiens settlement. For it will not escape observation, upon a reference to the Treaty of November 3, 1804 (U. S. Laws, Vol. I., p. 428), that the last-mentioned Treaty does not contain a cession of the tract thus excepted by the United States for their relinquishment. The real object of the clause alluded to in the Treaty of the 3rd November, it is apprehended, was to enable the United States, in its election, to erect a fort on the west bank of the Mississippi, where the Indian title has not yet been extinguished, and where a more eligible site, it 30 is supposed, could be selected.

If further evidence were necessary on this head, it might be found perhaps in the provisions of the Fourth Article of the Treaty of Greenville. The settlement of Prairie des Chiens lies "east of the Mississippi;" it is "west" from Detroit. It was certainly "in the possession of the French people," who, or whose children, still inhabit it. It is believed to be comprehended within both the words and the spirit of the provisions of the third and fourth Articles of that Treaty.

After all, it is not deemed important (except so far as it may seem to strengthen the equity of the claimants) to establish the proposition of an early extinguishment of the Indian title. There can be no doubt but that the Indian title is now extinguished. It would be hardly admissible to suppose that the American Government have been themselves guilty of an act of oppressive usurpation and violence; 40 and yet it cannot otherwise be if the Indian title be not extinguished—for they have erected forts and established garrisons there. It would equally violate every principle of decorum for the Commissioners to suppose that they had no power, and that the people of Prairie des Chiens had no right in relation to this matter, when the law of May 11, 1820, under which they act, expressly extends to that people all the benefits and all the rights which, in virtue of former Acts of Congress, the people residing within the Detroit land district heretofore possessed in relation to their land titles; and also imperatively requires of the Commissioners that they give effect to that Act.

The Act of March 3rd, 1807, vested in those for whose benefit it was passed, a right to be confirmed in their claims upon the exhibition of proof of continued possession from July 1st, 1796, to March 3rd, 1807, inclusive. The extension to the people of Green Bay and Prairie des Chiens, of the provisions of that Act, it is presumed, conferred upon them, upon the exhibition of like proof, a like 50 right. Proof of this tenor has been adduced by John Jacob Astor, Ramsay Crooks, and Robert Stewart, co-partners under the firm of "The American Fur Company," (formerly styled "The South-West Company,") as well as by others whose claims they have confirmed, and the Commissioners have not felt themselves justified in adopting any course of reasoning which would frustrate the object of that law from which they derive all the power they have possessed.

A majority of the Commissioners have felt obliged nevertheless, to withhold from many of the claims the sanction of their confirmation; not because those claims were less equitable but because the proof adduced of occupancy, possession and improvement did not reach far enough back; they considered that the possession, etc., contemplated by the law was an individual and exclusive possession, from 10 July, 1796, to March, 1807. The fact in relation to the claims not confirmed seems to have been that the lands so claimed had been immemorially occupied by the villagers in common, or as a common, and that they had not been individually and exclusively appropriated until after July, 1796.

As no dissent on the part of the villagers was at any time expressed, or rather as none was proved, or attempted to be proved, one of the Commissioners was willing to deduce from circumstances appearing a presumption of assent, equivalent to a formal conveyance. Upon such hypothesis the present claimants, combining their own exclusive possession with the antecedent occupancy of the villagers in common, "under whom" they might be considered to claim, would be respectively entitled under the law to confirmations; but a majority of the Commissioners, believing that such construction was at least obnoxious to much doubt, felt obliged reluctantly to reject it, and without further difference of 20 opinion, they all resolved to present, with these cases to the revising power, their respectful and most earnest petition in behalf of the unsuccessful claimants, that their claims may be confirmed. Although 30 some of these claimants have been in the exclusive occupancy of their possessions but for a very short space of time, yet their claims are considered not the less meritorious, for those who have thus remained in possession for the shortest period, would seem to have been removed from their former and older possessions, because those possessions were deemed necessary for the convenience of the troops by whose permission they have located themselves on the tracts now claimed.

Few cases have occurred at Prairie des Chiens, in which different claimants have applied for the same tract. In regard to other districts of country, much perplexity has been experienced in the selection among many, of that claimant in whose favour the title of right should be confirmed. The Com- 30 missioners have uniformly acted upon the principle that their power was intended to be exercised only as between the Government and the claimants, and not as between several conflicting claimants. Doubts having been expressed, however, by members of the Supreme Court, as to the power of that tribunal to interfere after the emanation of patents, the Commissioners have become sensible that, without intending it, they might effect injustice by confirming the title in one whose claim, when exhibited before a court having chancery powers, might prove to be much less meritorious than the conflicting claim of some other person. It is most manifest, nevertheless, that a Board of Commissioners constituted as this Board is, are not competent to the undertaking of deciding, in the last resort, between contending individuals. Their proceedings are, of necessity, summary. They cannot administer supplementary oaths to the contending parties, and they have no control over their consciences. Their forms of 40 proceeding are utterly unlike those which obtain in regularly constituted Courts: forms which, however slow in their operations, are yet the surest guarantee of justice.

They therefore respectfully submit to the revising power, in order to obviate all doubt, the propriety of causing to be inserted in the patents which may issue, clauses saving by express words the rights of all individual claimants; such saving clauses will be in conformity with every decision which has been made.

It only remains for the Commissioners further to remark that, in making abstracts from the testimony adduced, they have felt disposed, in order that their report may be less encumbered with useless matter, to exclude as well copies of all deeds of individuals in cases where they have been

*Report of Michigan Commissioners concerning the Land Titles at Green Bay, in the County of Brown, 10
Territory of Michigan. (1828.)

Except that this French settlement is older than that of the Prairie des Chiens, the claims of its present inhabitants rest upon the same basis.

As the same general observations will apply to each class of cases indiscriminately, the Commissioners beg leave to refer to the views they have submitted in their report relative to the Prairie des Chiens titles.

Père Allowez, an enterprising Catholic missionary, became located at Green Bay, superintending a religious establishment there in 1668; and from that period the settlement at "La Baye" does not seem to have been discontinued while the French remained masters in Canada. The Chevalier de Tonti, having under his command a military force, was stationed there in the winter of 1680. The 20 Lieutenant de Luth, a few years afterwards, held military occupancy of the post under the superintendency of the Commandant of Michilimackinac, of which it was a dependency.

Michigan
Commissioners' Report on land titles at Green Bay,
1828.

During the whole period alluded to, the Fox Indians (by Charlevoix called the Outgamies) seemed to have been deemed the proprietors of the country comprehending this settlement. (The Winnebagoes may rather be considered sojourners, their establishment there being of recent origin, than proprietors of the soil.) These (the Fox Indians) were attacked and signally defeated by the French troops under Captain Morand, with the aid of their allies, the Chippewas, in the winter of 1706, at a place called "La Butte des Morts." A great proportion of them were destroyed in this engagement, and many driven from the country. Upon this historical fact is probably founded the frequent assertion that the country of Green Bay accrued to the French by conquest. 30

It has been asserted, however with more positiveness, that the French Missionary, Père Roquette very many years ago, obtained the possession of several leagues square of this country, comprehending the fort and the whole French settlement. This fact it would have been desirable more fully to establish; but having had access to but few books which treat of the early history of this country, no further light could be obtained on the point, except the above isolated assertion.

But, however this fact may be, "La Baye" was continually occupied as a military post and a missionary establishment, until the Canadas were by treaty surrendered to the British. It seems a fact equally well established, that the latter continued for some time after their acquisition of the country to keep a military force at Green Bay as a dependency of their more important one at Michilimackinac. The same evidence which tends to establish the fact of the purchase by Lieutenant-Governor Patrick 40 Sinclair, by a Treaty holden in 1781, at Michilimackinac, of the country at Prairie des Chiens, establishes also the further one of the purchase of the country of Green Bay.

The antiquity of this settlement being, in the view of the Commissioners, sufficiently established, and they being also satisfied (especially when the subject is considered in connection with the references and the matter contained in their report, concerning the land titles of Prairie des Chiens), that the

*Am. State Papers, Vol. V., pp. 283-4.

Indian title must be considered to have been extinguished, little further, on the part of the Commissioners, seems requisite to elucidate the governing principles of their discussions; a repetition here of the matter of their report of the Prairie des Chiens claims can hardly be esteemed necessary.

It will be perceived that a few claims have been confirmed at a place called the Kakalin. Those claims are considered to have been comprehended within the settlement of Green Bay. (See Schoolcraft, 368). Those at the Portage between the Wisconsin and Fox Rivers have not been considered as comprehended within the limits either of the Green Bay or Prairie des Chiens settlements.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

TERRITORY OF MICHIGAN, COUNTY OF CRAWFORD, ss:*

Be it remembered, that on this day personally appeared before me, Isaac Lee, a Justice of the Peace in and for said County, and Agent duly appointed to ascertain the title to lands at Green Bay and Prairie du Chien—Denis Courtois, of said County, who after being sworn according to law, deposed and saith that he is fifty-two years old; that he has been a resident of Prairie du Chien twenty-nine years; that according to the best information that he has been able to obtain from the tradition of the inhabitants at Prairie du Chien, the old French Fort was burned during the second year of the revolutionary war; that he has no knowledge of any building or fence being erected on the same ground since that time, but that the land between the said fort and the hills or bluffs was occupied before and since the time that deponent arrived in this country; that Prairie du Chien has been formerly occupied much in the manner of an Indian village, the lands being alternately in common, and improved in detached parts as each should please, and this by the common consent of the villagers since deponent's arrival in the country; that he (deponent) has been uniformly told by the old French inhabitants of the Prairie, that it was bought and paid for by the French many years ago; that he has never heard any Indian make claim to said lands.

L'ESCARBOT, 1609.

L'Escarbot, an advocate of Paris, in his Histoire de la Nouvelle France, published in 1609, L'Escarbot, defines the boundaries of the French possessions in North America as extending "on the West to the Pacific Ocean, on the South to the Spanish West Indies, on the East to the North Atlantic, and on the North to the Frozen Sea."

THE BARON LA HONTAN, 1683-1693.

10 Baron La Hontan, whose *Memoirs of Travels in North America embraced the decade between 1683 and 1693, says: "All the world knows that Canada reaches from the 39th to the 65th degree of North Latitude, that is from the South of Lake Erie to the North side of Hudson's Bay, and from the 284th to the 336th degree of longitude, viz., from the River Mississippi to Cape Race. . . . Were I to reckon in all the countries that lie in the north-west of Canada, I should find it larger than Europe; but I confine myself to what is discovered, known and owned—I mean to the countries in which they have forts, magazines, missionaries, and small settlements." Baron La Hontan, 1683-1693.

VAISETTE, 1755.†

LA NOUVELLE FRANCE.—We comprise, under this general name, that part of North America Vaisette, 1755. situate between the 27th and 55th degrees of latitude, and from the 270th to the 325th of longitude. . . .
20 We divide it into two principal parts, which are Canada and Louisiana.

LE CANADA.—Under the name of Canada, we comprehend, in our best and latest maps, that part of North America situate between the 40th and 55th degrees of north latitude, and the 270th and 325th of longitude. This country is bounded, on the north, by Terre de Labrador and the countries of the Eskimaux and of the Christinaux; on the east, by the ocean, or North Sea, and New England; and on the south by Louisiana. Its limits on the west extend into countries unknown.

LA LOUISIANE.—We comprise, under this name, that part of America which extends from the southerly point of the peninsula of Florida, in the 26th degree of latitude, to nearly the 45th, in its western part, and the 39th in the eastern. . . . It is bounded on the north by Canada. . . . To-day Louisiana is subject to the General Government of Canada.

30 [A map, "L'Amerique Septentrionale par le Sr Robert, . . . 1748,"—bound with Vaisette's work, —explains these boundaries of Canada and Louisiana, and the apparent contradiction. The source of the Missouri is in the meridian of 270°, and the most easterly point of Labrador is 325°. The northerly watershed of the Missouri is marked, by an engraved line, as the boundary between the two countries: it runs easterly—to the west above, and to the east below, the parallel of 45°, which it crosses—to the junction of that river with the Mississippi, and thence easterly, partly on, partly above, and partly below, the 40th parallel, to the English colonies where it descends to 39°.]

OGILBY ON THE BOUNDARIES OF CANADA, LABRADOR, ETC., 1671.*

The farthest part of land northward, between Hudson's Gulf and Hudson's Straight, betwixt fifty-seven and sixty degrees of northern latitude, goes generally by the name of Estotiland, . . . and, according as Nova Britannia is placed in some charts, might very well be taken for the same, though it hath not been so termed by any author, but rather Terra Laboratoris, Corterealis and Nova Britannia† are generally received to be all one. Terra Laboratoris . . . comprehended, according to Peter Du Val under Nova Britannia, as the more general province,—or, according to Cluverius, under Canada,—lies from about fifty-four to fifty-seven degrees of northern latitude.

CANADA, OR NEW FRANCE.

Canada, as it is taken for one and the same Province with New France, contains New France, properly so called, Nova Scotia, Norumbega, and some adjoining Islands; as the Canada of Cluverius, lying more north-westerly, comprehends (as we have already intimated) Estotiland, Laboratoris and Corterealis; and, according to the most modern divisions, hath on the north Terra Corterealis, on the south New England, and on the east the Ocean, and hath between forty-five and fifty-two or fifty-three degrees of northern latitude. The River Canada [St. Lawrence] rises in the western parts of this Province, which remain yet undiscovered, and in some places spreads itself into huge lakes.

Canada is by some accounted a general Province, containing New France, L'Accadie, Norumbega, and other places.

CAPTAIN VETCH'S DESCRIPTION, 1708.

1708.

Captain Vetch (a British officer, and at one time Governor of Nova Scotia), writing in 1708, says: "As to the situation of the country possessed by the French in North America, and commonly all comprehended under the prevailing name of Canada, the seat and residence of their Governor-General being upon the place properly so called, its situation is from about 54° of north latitude to the eastward of Port Nelson, in the country of the Esquimaux, extending itself all the way south-west to the mouth of the Mississippi River, which falls into the Bay of Appalachio, in the Great Bay of Mexico, about the latitude of 28° 30', comprehending as it goes, their part of Newfoundland, the Island of St. Peter, Acadia or Nova Scotia, which borders on the British Province of New Hampshire, whose boundary to the eastward is the little River St. Croy (as the French allege.)"

EXTRACTS FROM SALMON'S MODERN HISTORY, 1743.

Salmon's

"As to Canada, or New France, the French would scarce admit it had any bounds to the north on this side the pole, till they were limited on that side by an article in the Treaty of Utrecht, which assigns New Britain and Hudson's Bay, on the North of Canada, to Great Britain. And Commissioners on both sides afterwards ascertained the limits,‡ by an imaginary line running from a cape or promontory of New Britain in the Atlantic Ocean, 58° 30' north latitude, and running from thence south-west to the Lake of Misoensink, or Mistassin, and from thence further south-west indefinitely to the latitude of north of the said line being assigned to Great Britain, and all to south of the said line, as far as the 49°, all the lands to the St. Lawrence, to the French.

"The eastern boundary of New France or Canada, the French admit, are the British plantations of Nova Scotia, New England, &c.; the southern boundary, the line which divides New France from Louisiana; and to the westward, the French extend the country of New France as far as the Pacific Ocean; and the Asiatic continent of Asia shall be found hereafter to be contiguous to North America.

‡ This is an error, though the statement seems to have been generally believed.

" However, as they (the French) have actually been possessed of some countries in Canada between the River St. Lawrence and New Britain or Hudson's Bay, for about one hundred years, and those countries seem to be confirmed to them, as far as the English had a right to confirm them, I shall readily allow their title to that part of Canada. But as to the rest of Canada and Louisiana, they cannot have a right to any part of them, notwithstanding the posts they have erected on those rivers. The eastern side of the Mississippi is the property of those Indians subject to Great Britain, and the western side of it belongs to the Indians who are under the dominion of the Spaniards; and we find the Spaniards asserting their title to it by demolishing the forts of Mons. de Salle and Mons. d'Iberville, erected on the west side of the river, and have as much right to demolish the forts the French have erected on the east side of it."

And the error about the boundary line of Canada having been determined, is repeated: "and it was agreed [at Utrecht] that commissaires on the part of Great Britain and France should determine within a year the limits to be fixed between the said Bay of Hudson and the places appertaining to the French, which limits the subjects of Great Britain and France were not to pass over to each other by sea or land. And the commissaires did afterwards settle the limits by an imaginary line, drawn from a promontory situate on the Atlantic Ocean, in 58° 30', and running from thence south-west to the Lake of Misconsink, or Mistassin, and from thence south-west, indefinitely, to the latitude of 49°; all the countries to the north being assigned to Great Britain, and all on the south, between that line and the River of St. Lawrence or Canada, to France."

JEFFERYS ON THE ENGLISH VIEW OF THE BOUNDARIES OF CANADA, 1761.

For the English version of the boundaries of Canada, as given by Jefferys, see p. 73, ante. A further quotation from his work may be here given: "The country subject to the Crown of France on the Continent of America, which is larger than the Roman Empire ever was, in its most flourishing times, is divided into two parts, the Northern, named Canada, and the Southern, Louisiana. . . . Under the name of Canada, the French would comprehend all that part of North America situated between 40 and 55 degrees of north latitude," etc. (p. 1).

Canada, 1761.

1761.—"Canada, according to the English accounts, is bounded on the North by the high lands which separate it from the country about Hudson's Bay, Labrador, or new Britain, and country of the Eskimeaux, and the Christineaux; on the East, by the River St. Lawrence; and on the South, by the Outawai River, the country of the Six Nations, and Louisiana; its limits towards the West extending over countries and nations hitherto undiscovered."*

JEFFERYS ON THE LIMITS OF LOUISIANA, 1761.†

The Province of Louisiana, or the southern part of New France, extends, according to the French geographers, from the Gulph of Mexico, in about 29 degrees, to near 45 degrees of north latitude, on the western side, and to near 39 degrees, on the eastern; and from 86 to near 100 degrees W. longitude, from London. It is bounded on the north by Canada; on the east by the British Colonies of New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, and by the peninsula of Florida; on the south by the Gulph of Mexico; and, lastly, on the west by New Mexico. It contains, properly, the French settlements on both sides of the Mississippi, and is, by some, said to be the noblest and richest province of all North America.

BOUCHETTE ON THE BOUNDARIES OF UPPER CANADA, 1815.*

The Province of Lower Canada lies between 45° and 52° N. Latitude, and 63° and 81° W. Longitude, nearly, from Greenwich. It is bounded on the north by the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company on the East Main; ...and on the west by a line which separates it from Upper Canada as fixed by...Act of Parliament, and promulgated by Proclamation in the Province on the 18th day of November, 1791, as follows:—[Then follows the description from the Proclamation, including the words] "From the head of the said lake [Temiscaming] by a line drawn due north until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay, including all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada."

UPPER CANADA.—Since the year 1791, the Province of Upper Canada has been bounded in the following manner, viz.: on the east by Lower Canada; on the north-east by the Grand or Ottawa River, which in that direction separates it from the Lower Province; on the north by the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company.....On the west and north-west no limits have been assigned to it, therefore it may be supposed to extend over the vast regions that spread towards the Pacific and the Northern Oceans.

EXTRACTS FROM HENRY'S TRAVELS IN CANADA AND THE INDIAN TERRITORIES, 1761-1776.*

(1761.) FORT MICHILIMACKINAC was built by order of the Governor-General of Canada, and garrisoned with a small number of militia, who, having families, soon became less soldiers than settlers. Most of those whom I found in the fort had originally served in the French army.

The fort stands on the south side of the strait which is between Lake Huron and Lake Michigan. It has an area of two acres, and is enclosed with pickets of cedar wood (Thaya occidentalis); and it is near the water's edge, that, when the wind is in the west, the waves break against the stockade. On the bastions are two small pieces of brass English cannon, taken some years since by a party of Canadians who went on a plundering expedition against the posts of Hudson's Bay, which they reached by the route of the River Churchill.

Within the stockade are thirty houses, neat in their appearance, and tolerably commodious; and a church, in which mass is celebrated by a Jesuit Missionary. The number of families may be nearly equal to that of houses; and their subsistence is derived from the Indian traders who assemble here in their voyages to and from Montreal. Michilimackinac is the place of deposit and point of departure between the Upper countries and the Lower. Here the outfits are prepared for the countries of Lake Michigan and the Mississippi, Lake Superior and the North-West, and here the returns in furs are collected and embarked for Montreal.

Relieved as I now imagined myself from all occasion of anxiety as to the treatment which I was to experience from the Indians, I assorted my goods, and hired Canadian interpreters and clerks, in whose care I was to send them into Lake Michigan and the RIVER ST. PIERRE, in the country of the Nadowessies [Sioux]; into LAKE SUPERIOR, among the Chippeways; and to the GRAND PORTAGE, for the North-West. Everything was ready for the departure when new dangers sprung up and threatened to overwhelm me.

Extracts from Henry's
travels, 1761
1776.

At the entrance of Lake Michigan, and at about twenty miles to the west of Fort Michilimackinac is the Village of L'ARBRE CROCHE, inhabited by a band of Ottawas, boasting of two hundred and fifty fighting men. L'Arbre Croche is the seat of the Jesuit MISSION OF ST. IGNACE de Michilimackinac, and the people are partly baptized and partly not. The Missionary resides on a farm attached to the Mission and situated between the village and the fort, both of which are under his care.

At noon three hundred troops of the sixtieth regiment, under the command of Lieutenant Leslie, marched into the fort; and this arrival dissipated all our fears from whatever source derived. After a few days detachments were sent into the BAY DES PUANS, by which is the route to the Mississippi, and to the mouth of the St. JOSEPH, which leads to the Illinois. The Indians, from all quarters, came to pay their respects to the commandant; and the merchants despatched their canoes, though it was now the middle of September and therefore somewhat late in the season.

The Village of L'Arbre Croche supplies, as I have said, the maize, or Indian corn with which the canoes are victualled. This species of grain is prepared for use by boiling it in a strong lye, after which the husk may be easily removed; and it is next mashed and dried. In this state it is soft and friable like rice. The allowance for each man on the voyage is a quart a day; and a bushel, with two pounds of prepared fat, is reckoned to be a month's subsistence. No other allowance is made of any kind; not even of salt; and bread is never thought of. The men, nevertheless, are healthy, and capable of performing their heavy labour. This mode of victualling is essential to the trade, which, being pursued at great distances, and in vessels so small as canoes, will not admit of the use of other food. If the men were to be supplied with bread and pork, the canoes could not carry a sufficiency for six months; and the ordinary duration of the voyage is not less than fourteen. The difficulty which would belong to an attempt to reconcile any other men than Canadians to this fare, seems to secure to them and their employers a monopoly of the fur trade.

(1762.) On the 19th (May) I reached the SAULT [STE. MARIE.] Here was a stockade fort in which¹⁰ under the French Government there was kept a small garrison, commanded by an officer who was called the governor, but was in fact a clerk, who managed the Indian trade here on government account. The houses were four in number, of which the first was the governor's, the second the interpreter's and the other two, which were the smallest, had been used for barracks. The only family was that of M. Cadotte, the interpreter, whose wife was a Chipeway.

(1763.) Of the English traders that fell into the hands of the Indians at the capture of the fort [of Michilimackinac], Mr. Tracy was the only one who lost his life. Mr. Ezekiel Solomons and Mr. Henry Bostwick were taken by the Ottawas, and, after the peace, carried down to Montreal and there ransomed. Of ninety troops, about seventy were killed, the rest, together with those of the posts in the Bay des Puants and at the River St. Joseph, were also kept in safety by the Ottawas till²⁰ the peace, and then either freely restored or ransomed at Montreal.

(1764.) On the day [Aug. 9th] following that of the Treaty of Peace, Captain Howard was detached with two companies and three hundred Canadian Volunteers for Fort Michilimackinac, and I embarked at the same time.

Extracts from Henry's
travels, 1761-
1776.

(1765.) Under the French Government of Canada, the FUR TRADE was subject to a variety of regulations, established and enforced by the royal authority; and in 1765, the period at which I began to prosecute it anew, some remains of the ancient system were still preserved. No person could go into the countries lying to the north-westward of Detroit unless furnished with a license, and the exclusive trade of particular districts was capable of being enjoyed in virtue of grants from military commanders.³⁰

The exclusive trade of Lake Superior was given to myself by the Commandant of Fort Michilimackinac, and to prosecute it I purchased goods which I found at this post, at twelve months' credit. My stock was the freight of four canoes, and I took it at the price of ten thousand pounds weight of good and merchantable beaver. It is in beaver that accounts are kept at Michilimackinac; but in defect of this article, other furs and skins are accepted in payments, being first reduced into their value in beaver. Beaver was at this time at the price of two shillings and sixpence per pound, Michilimackinac currency; otter skins six shillings each; marten, at one shilling and sixpence, and others in proportion.

To carry the goods to my wintering ground in Lake Superior, I engaged twelve men at two hundred and fifty livres, of the same currency, each; that is a hundred pounds weight of beaver. For⁴⁰ provisions, I purchased fifty bushels of maize, at ten pounds of beaver per bushel. At this place specie was so wholly out of the question that in going to a cantine you took with you a marten's skin to pay your reckoning.

(1765.) On my arrival at Chagouemig [CHAGOUAMIGON], I found fifty lodges of Indians there. These people were almost naked, their trade having been interrupted, first by the English invasion of Canada, and next by Pontiac's war.

Adding the Indians at Chagouemig to those which I had brought with me, I had now a hundred families, to all whom I was required to advance goods on credit. At a council which I was invited to attend, the men declared that unless their demands were complied with, their wives and children would perish; for that there were neither ammunition nor clothing left among them. Under these circumstances I saw myself obliged to distribute goods to the amount of three thousand beaver skins. This done, the Indians went on their hunt at the distance of a hundred leagues. A clerk acting as my agent accompanied them to Fond du Lac, taking with him two loaded canoes. Meanwhile, at the expense of six days' labour, I was provided with a very comfortable house for my winter's residence.

(1767.) On reaching the trading post [of MICHIPICOTON] which was an old one of French establishment, I found ten lodges of Indians. These were Gens de Terres or O'pimittish Ininiwac [also called Tetes de Boule] of which nation I have already had occasion to speak. It is scattered over all the country between the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Lake Arabuthcow [Athabasca] and between Lake Superior and Hudson's Bay.

(1768.) On the twentieth day of the month [May] the first party of Indians came in from their winter's hunt. During the season some of them had visited one of the factories of the Hudson's Bay Company. Within a few days following, I had the satisfaction of seeing all those to whom I advanced goods, return. Out of two thousand skins, which was the amount of my outstanding debts, not thirty remained unpaid; and even the trivial loss which I did suffer was occasioned by the death of one of the Indians for whom his family brought, as they said, all the skins of which he died possessed, and offered to pay the rest from among themselves. His manes, they observed, would not be able to enjoy peace, while his name remained in my books, and his debts were left unsatisfied.

(1775.) On the 10th day of June, I left the Sault [for the North-West] with goods and provisions to the value of three thousand pounds sterling, on board twelve small canoes and four larger ones. The provisions made the chief bulk of the cargo; no further supply being obtainable till we should have advanced far into the country. Each small canoe was navigated by three men, and each larger one by four.

It was by the River Pijitie* that the French ascended in 1750, when they plundered one of the factories in Hudson's Bay, and carried off the two small pieces of brass cannon, which fell again into the hands of the English at Michilimackinac. On the river are a band of Wood Indians, who are sometimes troublesome to the traders passing.

By this river [NIPIGON] the French carried on a considerable trade with the Northern Indians. They had a fort or trading-house at its mouth, and annually drew from it a hundred packs of beaver of a quality more in esteem than that from the north-west. They had another trading house at Caministiquia. As we proceed north-west along the lake, the mountains recede widely from the beach.

The LAKE OF THE WOODS is thirty-six leagues long. On the west side is an old French fort or trading-house, formerly frequented by numerous bands of Chipeways, but these have since been almost entirely destroyed by the Nadowessies.

I kept the north side of the lake [WINNIPEGON], and had not proceeded far before I was joined by Mr. Pond, a trader of some celebrity in the north-west.

On the seventh of September we were overtaken by Messrs. Joseph and Thomas Frobisher and Mr. Patterson. On the twentieth we crossed the Bay together, composing a fleet of 30 canoes and 130 men.

On the first October we gained the mouth of the RIVER DE BOURBON, Pasquayah, or Sascatchiwaive,† and proceeded to ascend its stream.

At the north end [of lake de Bourbon, called by the English, after the Indians, Cedar Lake] there was, in the French time, a fort or trading-house called FORT DE BOURBON, and built by M. de St. Pierre, a French officer, who was the first adventurer into these parts of the country.

On the twenty-sixth [October] we reached CUMBERLAND HOUSE, one of the factories of Hudson's Bay Company, seated on Sturgeon Lake, in about 54° north latitude, and 102° longitude, west from Greenwich. This house had been built the year before by Mr. Hearne, who was now absent on his well-known journey of discovery. We found it garrisoned by Highlanders from the Orkney Islands, and under the command of a Mr. Cockings, by whom, though unwelcome guests, we were treated with much civility. The design in building this house was to prevent the Indians from dealing with the Canadian merchants, and to induce them to go to Hudson's Bay.

* [Note by Henry.]—According to Carver, it was by the Michipicoten. If he is correct, it must have been from Moose Fort, in James' Bay, and not from Churchill, that they took the cannon.

At Cumberland House the canoes separated; M. Cadotte going with four to Fort des Prairies; Mr. Pond, with two, to FORT DAUPHIN, and others proceeding on still different routes; Messrs. Frobisher retaining six, and myself four; and we resolved on joining our stock and wintering together. We steered for the River Churchill, or Missinipi, to the east of Beaver Lake, or Lake aux Castors.

Our first object, after crossing BEAVER LAKE, was to procure food. We had only three days' stock remaining, and we were forty-three persons in number. Our forty men were divided into three parties, 10 of which two were detached to the River aux Castors, on which the ice was strong enough to allow of setting the nets in a manner heretofore described. The third party was employed in building our house or fort, and in this, within ten days, we saw ourselves commodiously lodged. Indeed, we have almost built a village, or, in soberer terms, we had raised buildings around a quadrangle such as really assumed, in the wilds which encompassed it, a formidable appearance. In front was the house designed for Messrs. Frobisher and myself, and the men had four houses, of which one was placed on each side and two in the rear.

(1776.) On the first day of January, I left for our fort, on Beaver Lake, attended by two men, and provided with dried meat and frozen fish. . . . On the fourth of the month we arrived at Cumberland House. . . . The next morning [5th] I took leave [for FORT DES PRAIRIES.]

No trace of anything human presented itself on our road except that we saw the old wintering ground of Mr. Finlay, who had left it some years before, and was now stationed at Fort des Prairies. 20 This fort was the stage we had to make before we could enter the prairies or plains, and on examining our provisions we found only sufficient for five days, while even at the swiftest rate we had travelled, a journey of twelve days was before us.

At Fort des Prairies I remained several days, hospitably entertained by friends, who covered their tables with the tongues and marrow of wild bulls. The quantity of provisions which I found collected here exceeded everything of which I had previously formed a notion. In one heap I saw fifty ton of beef, so fat that the men could scarcely find a sufficiency of lean.

Fort of the Prairies, as already intimated, is built on the margin of the Pasquayah or Sasatchi-30 waine, which river is here two hundred yards across, and flows at the depth of thirty feet below the level of its banks. The fort has an area of about one acre, which is inclosed by a good stockade though formed only of poplar or aspen-wood, such as the country affords. It has two gates, which are carefully shut every evening, and has usually from fifty to eighty men for its defence.

Four different interests were struggling for the Indian Trade of the Saskatchewan, but fortunately they had this year agreed to join their stock, and, when the season was over, to divide the skins and meat,

On the 7th [April] we left Cumberland House; and on the 9th, in the morning, we reached our fort on Beaver Lake, where I had the pleasure of finding my friends well. . . .

On the 12th, Mr. Thomas Frobisher, with six men, was despatched to RIVER CHURCHILL, where he 40 was to prepare a fort, and inform such Indians as he might see on their way to Hudson's Bay, of the approaching arrival of his partners.

On the 15th June we reached the River Churchill, Missinibi, or Missinipi, where we found Mr. Thomas Frobisher. . . . The river is called the Churchill River from Fort Churchill, in Hudson's Bay, the most northerly of the Company's factories or trading-houses, and which is seated at its mouth. By Mr. Joseph Frobisher it was named English River. . . . We are estimated by the Indians to be distant 300 miles from the sea. Cumberland House was to the south of us, distant 400 miles. . . . We resolved on ascending the river, and to go as far westward as Lake ARABUTHCOW (called also Athapuscow and Athabasca), distant . . . 450 miles. With these views we embarked on the 16th with six Canadians, and also one Indian woman in the capacity of a guide. . . . On the fifth 50 day we reached the Rapide du Serpent, which is supposed to be 300 miles from our point of departure.

EXTRACTS FROM CARVER'S TRAVELS, 1766-8.*

The latter end of July, I arrived, after having coasted through West Bay, at the GRAND PORTAGE, 10 which lies to the north-west borders of Lake Superior. Here those who go on to the North-West Trade, to the Lakes DePluie, Dubois, etc., carry over their canoes and luggage about nine miles, till they come to a number of small lakes, the waters of some of which descend into Lake Superior, and others into the River Bourbon. Lake Superior, from West Bay, is bounded by rocks, except towards the south-west part of the bay where I first entered it, there it was tolerably level. . . .

Here I met a large party of Killistinoe and Assinipoil Indians, with their respective kings and their families. They will come to this place in order to meet the traders from Michillimaekinae who make this their road to the north-west. From them I received the following account of the lakes that lie to the north-west of Lake Superior :

LAKE BOURBON, the most northern of those yet discovered, received its name from the French 20 traders who accompanied a party of Indians to Hudson's Bay some years ago; and was thus denominated by them in honour of the Royal Family of France. It is composed of the waters of the Bourbon River, which, as I have before observed, rises a great way to the southward, not far from the northern heads of the Mississippi. This lake is about 80 miles in length, north and south, and is nearly circular. The land on the eastern side is very good; and to the south-west there are some mountains. In many other parts there are barren plains, bogs and morasses. Its latitude is between fifty-two and fifty-four degrees north, and it lies nearly south-west from Hudson's Bay. As through its northern situation the weather there is extremely cold, only a few animals are to be found in the country that borders on it.

LAKE WINNIPECK, or as the French write it, Lake Ouinipique, which lies nearest to the foregoing, 30 is composed of the same waters. It is in length 200 miles, north and south; its breadth has never been properly ascertained, but it is supposed to be about 100 miles in its widest part. This lake is very full of islands; these are, however, of no great magnitude. Many considerable rivers empty themselves into it, which, as yet, are not distinguished by any names. . . .

Extracts from
1768.

The land on the south-west part of it is very good, especially about the entrance of a large branch of the River Bourbon (Assiniboine), which flows from the south-west. On this river there is a factory that was built by the French, called FORT LA REINE, to which the traders from Michillimaekinae resort to trade with the Assinipoils and Killistinoes. To this place the Mahahs, who inhabit a country 250 miles south-west, come also to trade with them; and bring great quantities of Indian corn to exchange for knives, tomahawks, and other articles. . . .

Lake Winnipeck has on the north-east some mountains, and on the east many barren plains. 40 On the waters that fall into this lake, the neighbouring nations take great numbers of excellent furs. Some of these they carry to the factories and settlements belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company, situated above the entrance of the Bourbon River; but this they do with reluctance on several accounts; for some of the Assinipoils and Killistinoes, who usually traded with the Company's servants, told me that if they could be sure of a constant supply of goods from Michillimaekinae, they would not trade anywhere else. They showed me some cloth and other articles that they had purchased at Hudson's Bay, with which they were much dissatisfied, thinking that they had been greatly imposed upon by the barter.

Allowing that their accounts were true, I could not help joining in their opinion. But this dissatisfaction might probably proceed, in a great measure, from the intrigues of the Canadian traders; for whilst the French were in possession of Michillimackinac, having acquired a thorough knowledge of the trade of the north-west countries they were employed on that account, after the reduction of Canada, by the English traders there, in the establishment of this trade, with which they were themselves quite unacquainted. One of the methods they took to withdraw these Indians from their attachment to the Hudson's Bay Company, and to engage their good opinion in behalf of their new employers, was by depreciating on all occasions the Company's goods, and magnifying the advantages that would arise to them from traffieking entirely with the Canadian traders. In this they too well succeeded and from this, doubtless, did the dissatisfaction the Assinipois and Killistinoes expressed partly proceed. But another reason augmented it, and this was the length of their journey to the Hudson's Bay factories, which, they informed me, took them up three months of the summer heat to go and return, and from the smallness of their canoes they could not carry more than a third of the beavers they killed. So that it is not to be wondered at, that these Indians should wish to have traders come and reside among them. . . .

The French always kept a small schooner on Lake Superior whilst they were in possession of Canada.

*Extracts from Carver's
1768.*

Two very large rivers empty themselves into this lake on the north and east sides; one is called the NIPAGON RIVER, or as the French pronounce it, the Allanipegon, which leads to a band of the Chipeways, inhabiting a lake of the same name; and the other is termed the MICHIPICOOTON RIVER, the source of which is situated towards James' Bay, from whence there is but a short carriage to another river, which empties itself into that bay, at a fort belonging to the Company. It was by this passage that a party of French from Michillimackinac invaded the settlements of that society in the reign of Queen Anne. Having taken and destroyed their forts, they brought the cannon which they found in them to the fortress from whence they had issued; these were small brass pieces, and remain there to this present time.

At the upper end of the Straits of STE. MARIE stands a fort that receives its name from them, commanded by Mons. Cadot, a French Canadian, who, being a proprietor of the soil, is still permitted to keep possession of it.

The banks of the RIVER DETROIT, both above and below these towns, are covered with settlements that extend more than twenty miles; the country being exceedingly fruitful and proper for the cultivation of wheat, Indian corn, oats, and peas. The inhabitants, who are chiefly French that submitted to the English Government, after the conquests of these parts by General Amherst, are more attentive to the Indian trade than to farming. It is badly cultivated.

ORIGIN AND PROGRESS OF THE NORTH-WEST COMPANY OF CANADA.*

Origin and progress of the North-West Company.

Montreal was taken in the year 1760; and in the spring of the following year a few English and French traders sent goods to the borders of Lake Superior, and a few went as far north as the Rainy Lake, where they continued till the year 1763, when the post at Michillimackinac was taken by the Indians. This event and the Indian war, by which it was occasioned, produced a temporary suspension of the trade; and it was not till the year 1771 that the British traders could safely traffic as far as the Saskatchewan, on which river the most remote of the French posts was situated. The subsequent progress of the fur traders in the interior has corresponded with the wishes of the Indians to deal with them, and the success they met with in their first enterprises in a new region.

At the commencement of the English trade, the whole was conducted by the unsupported efforts of individuals. The trader who passed one winter with a newly discovered nation or band of Indians, or on some spot favourable to his traffic, heard in the course of it, of Indians still more remote, among whom provisions might be obtained and trade pursued, with little danger of competition. To the neighbourhood of these he removed, and, while he was suffered to remain alone, generally preserved good order and obtained the furs at a reasonable rate. But as every person had an equal right to sell goods at the same place, the first discoverer of an eligible situation soon saw himself followed by other traders who were ready to undersell him, with a view to reap the harvest which he had sown at so much peril, and with so much difficulty. Thus circumstanced, he, in his turn, resorted to every means for securing to himself the preference of the Indians and for injuring his competitor. This conduct provoked retaliation. The Indians were bribed with rum, and the goods were bartered away for a consideration below their value. The consequence was that the traders ruined each other, the Indians were corrupted and the English character brought into contempt. In the struggle innumerable disorders took place, and even blood was often spilt; till at length, after a competition injurious to all parties, mutual interest suggested the necessity of establishing a common concern, subject to general rules.

Accordingly, in the year 1779, the persons composing nine distinct interests, became parties to an agreement for one year, by virtue of which the whole trade was rendered common property. The success which attended this measure, led to a second and nearly similar agreement in the succeeding year, and to which a further duration of three years was given. As the parties to this agreement were less anxious, however, to fulfil it while it lasted than to prepare themselves for the event of its termination, and for the consequent return of things to the original state of competition, all the benefit that was expected from it was not obtained, and at the end of two years it was renounced. The separate traders renewed, for a time, their feeble and unprofitable efforts; but the value of the principle, upon which the two agreements had been founded, was generally acknowledged; and in the year 1784, to avoid the evils which they threatened the British subjects engaged in the fur trade, a third agreement, for five years, was entered into by them. The association of the traders, parties to this agreement, assumed the name of the North-West Company; and the compact was renewed, from time to time, till the year 1802, when a more permanent one was executed, for twenty years from 1803. The trading body thus constituted, is the present North-West Company of Canada.

The disorders incident to competitions in the trade, that is, to departures from the principle upon which the company was established, are manifest from the history of the Indian Territory during the years 1802, 1803 and 1804, in which period they became the object of a parliamentary proceeding.* So numerous were the acts of violence then committed (the recurrence of which is only prevented by the existence of the present company), that, in compliance with a petition from Canada, the Legislature of Great Britain was induced to pass an Act by which the whole of the Indian Territory was placed under the jurisdiction of the Courts of Justice in Upper and Lower Canada; in order that the perpetration of crimes in those countries should be restrained by the terror of a contiguous tribunal.

EXTENT OF COUNTRY WHICH THE NORTH-WEST COMPANY OCCUPIED.†

[Mr. David Thompson, astronomer and surveyor of the North-West Company, commenced in 1796 to survey the positions of its posts, some of which had been placed as far south as the source of the Mississippi, or even further, when that point was supposed to be the northern boundary of the United States. But when the 49° became the northern boundary line, it was necessary to ascertain what posts were on the south of it, as the Company would be required to vacate them. Mr. Thompson had previously been in the employ of the Hudson's Bay Company; but the aversion of that organization to new discoveries caused him to accept employment under the North-West Company, when his first engagement had expired. In the summer of 1795, he had, with no other aid than that of two young Indians, who knew nothing about the country to be travelled over, and one Irishman, made his way from the shores of Hudson's Bay to the east end of Athabaska Lake. He has left behind him a manuscript, giving an account of his travels when he determined the position of the North-West Company's posts; and it is of great importance as showing exactly what extent of country was still held by that Company, the successor of the original discoverers of the North-West, some of whose posts it still continued to keep up. This country, so held, and of which the Hudson's Bay Company had not taken possession, had not ceased to be part of Canada at a period later than 1791. I shall follow Mr. Thompson's MS. closely; and it may be advisable to resort to some details connected with this official survey of the country, on account of the great importance of the subject.]

After returning from Athabaska, Mr. Thompson was informed by a letter from Mr. Joseph Colen, the resident at York Factory, with whose sanction the expedition to Athabaska Lake had been undertaken, that he could not sanction any more surveys, whatever might be the extent of the territory still unknown to the H. B. Company. Mr. Thompson's term of service had expired, and his thirst for further discoveries determined him to seek employment from the North-West Company, composed of Canadian 10 merchants, and carrying on their traffic with the Indians from Lake Superior. Accompanied by two Indians, he proceeded to the nearest trading-house of that company, which was under the charge of Mr. Alexander Fraser; and thence, by the usual canoe route, to the Great Carrying Place on the north shore of Lake Superior, then the depôt of the Company's treasures: of merchandize from Montreal and furs from the interior. The agents of the Company, the Hon. William McGillivray and Sir Alexander McKenzie, were also partners; men of enlarged views: one of them had already crossed the Rocky Mountains, by the Peace River, and had proceeded far by the Fraser towards the Pacific Ocean, when the hostility of the natives, and want of provisions, had obliged him to return, and who was destined to make discoveries in these countries that would render his name immortal.

The services of Mr. Thompson were very acceptable to these gentlemen. They desired to learn the 20 position of their trading-houses, with respect to one another, and also to the 49° of north latitude, become, since the treaty of 1792, the boundary line between Canada and the United States, from the north-west corner of the Lake of the Woods to the Rocky Mountains, in lieu of a line from the former point to the head of the Mississippi, as designated by the treaty of 1783. The source of the Mississippi was then known only to the Indians and a few fur-traders, and was supposed to be further north than the Lake of the Woods. Mr. Thompson was instructed to survey the 49th parallel of latitude, to go as far as the Missouri River, visit the ancient villages of the agricultural natives who dwell there, to inquire for the fossils of large animals, and to search for any monuments that might throw light on the ancient state of the countries to be travelled over and examined. He received orders on all the agents and trading posts of the company for men and whatever else he might require. This liberality and display of public spirit he could not help contrasting with the stinginess of the Hudson's Bay Company, who had done little in the way of discovery which had not been forced on them by the demands of the British Government. 30

But the way in which it performed this duty was calculated to conceal the very knowledge which it was desired to obtain. It had, in 1785, been requested to send out a competent person to ascertain the latitude and longitude of the west end of Athabaska Lake. Mr. Peter Pond, one of the clerks of the North-West Company, who had wintered three years at Fort Chippewyan, on the north side of the Athabaska Lake, had made a rough map of the country, which placed the west end of the Athabaska Lake near the Pacific Ocean. If this were true, the route across the continent, at this point, might be made available for one purpose or another. Pond had taken his distances from the suppositious leagues 40 of the canoe-men, which Mr. Thompson found to average only two miles each. The agents of the company sent a copy of this map to Sir Hugh Dalrymple, who was then in office; and he, by comparing it with the charts of Captain Cook, found that it brought the west end of Athabaska Lake within less than one hundred miles of the Pacific Ocean. This was the point which the British Government required the Company to determine by actual survey.

And Mr. Thompson relates how the Company performed this duty. It sent out a boy, fifteen years of age, first making him an apprentice for seven years, of the name of George Charles. Having spent one year at a mathematical school, and, armed with a quadrant, had thrice performed the feat of bringing down the sun to a chalk line on a wall, he was forthwith pronounced competent for the duty required. The result of entrusting this lad with a duty which he was quite incompetent to discharge, was to keep 50 from the Colonial Office the required knowledge for five years; and it was not till 1790 that it was obliged, by the pressing instance of the Colonial Department, to send out a properly qualified person, Mr. Philip Turner, by whom the desired information was obtained.

This Peter Pond, who had so inaccurately laid down the west end of Athabaska Lake, was a violent and unprincipled character, became implicated in the death of Mr. Ross, a fur trader, and was afterwards accused as principal in the murder of Mr. Wadden, another fur trader. He was sent to Quebec, to be tried on the latter charge; but was released on the ground that the jurisdiction of the court did not extend to these distant territories. Being set at liberty, he went to Boston, Massachusetts, his native city, in 1782. Next year brought peace between the thirteen old colonies and England. The British Commissioners, who had to deal with the boundary question, were ignorant of the geography of the country beyond Lake Ontario; and they had but wretched assistance for their guidance in the shape of maps; one of them, by Farren, dated 1773, stopped short, in any actual information, at Toronto; the whole country to the west being represented as alternations of rock and swamp, and uninhabitable. Mitchell's was somewhat better, and was the best to which they had access. The American Commissioners had Pond at their elbow; and though his knowledge of the true position of places was extremely inaccurate, he had much knowledge of the value of the interior countries. Pond is said to have designated to the American Commissioners a boundary line through the middle of the Upper St. Lawrence and the lakes, and through the interior countries to the north-west corner of the Lake of the Woods, and thence west to the Mississippi; a line that was accepted by the British Commissioners.

20 Before proceeding to give an account of Mr. Thompson's survey of the boundary line, we must trace the route of the North-West Company of those days from Lake Superior to Winnipeg. In August, 1796, Mr. Thompson started from the south-east end of the Great Carrying Place on Lake Superior, in latitude 47° 58' 1" north, longitude 89° 44' 10" west of Greenwich. To this point came the canoes from Montreal, each one carrying from forty to forty-five pieces of merchandise, each piece weighing from ninety to one hundred pounds, besides spirituous liquors; the return cargoes consisting of furs. Then the merchandise was made into assorted packages of ninety pounds each. The canoes 25 destined to carry them into the interior were of less capacity, but each one was capable of carrying twenty-five pieces, besides the necessary provisions for the voyage, and the baggage of the men; making altogether a weight of about 2,900 lbs.; to which add five men, and the complete canoe load will 30 reach 3,700 lbs.

These moved in brigades of four to eight canoes, to different points in the interior country. That on which Mr. Thompson embarked contained four, and was under charge of Mr. Hugh McGillis; the day of starting being August 9, 1796. His instruments consisted of a sextant of ten inches radius, with quicksilver and parallel glasses, an excellent achromatic telescope, one of a smaller kind, drawing instruments, and thermometers; all by Dolland. They proceeded over the Great Carrying Place, which takes a north-west direction from the starting point, and is eight miles and twenty yards long, to Pigeon River. This point is about three hundred feet above Lake Superior. These eight miles odd consumed five days—days of severe labour to the men. From Pigeon River to the height of land the distance is thirty-eight miles, in which there are twelve carrying places, which are together five and a 40 half miles of the distance. The height of land to which we have now come is in latitude 48° 6' 43" north, longitude 90° 34' 38" west, variation six degrees east. South-east from this dividing ridge the streams run into Lake Superior; north-east by east into Lake Winnipeg, and thence into Hudson's Bay.

The country passed over in the forty-eight miles between here and Lake Superior contains many brooks and small lakes of good clear water, and parts of it seem adapted for pasturage.

The country now declines to the north-east, and is intersected by many streams having the same direction, they collect finally in a fine river. Rainy Lake is a fine body of water, nine or ten miles in length, and emptying into Rainy River by a descent of about ten feet. Here, below this fall, stood a trading-house of the North-West Company, in latitude 48° 36' 58" north, longitude 93° 19' 30" west. 50 The distance from the height of land to this point is one hundred and seventeen miles. The country is more favourable for agriculture than the previous section from Pigeon River to the height of land; and "in several places good farms can be made." Rainy River is a fine stream, about two hundred yards wide, interrupted in its course by only one rapid; at the foot of which, in the season, the natives spear, or used to spear, many fine sturgeon. By this river we travel fifty miles and a-half to the Lake of the Woods. The banks present all the appearance of a country capable of cultivation but the rock lies at no great distance from the surface. The Lake of the Woods is thirty-two and a-half miles long, and contains many bays. Its area may be estimated at about eight hundred square miles, over which are scattered many islets. The north-east shores are of granite; the western, of limestone, touch on the great alluvial.

The Lake of the Woods is memorable in geographical and diplomatic history. It has been the starting point in every treaty of the boundary line between the dominions of Great Britain and the territories of the United States. It is the southernmost lake of the Stony Region; the first that having limestone on its western side, has granite, greenstone and clay slate on the north and the east.

Out of the lake flows the river Winnipeg (sea river) in a north-western direction, into Lake Winnipeg. It is a bold deep stream about three hundred yards in width, contains many isles, and has thirty-two falls and several channels. It is of granite formation throughout its whole course of one hundred and twenty-five miles. At the point of its entrance into Lake Winnipeg, the North-West Company had a trading-house, which owed its origin to the French. Its position was latitude $50^{\circ} 37' 46''$ north, longitude $95^{\circ} 59' 34''$ west, variation nine degrees east. Though the falls are so numerous, the aggregate length of the carrying places is only three miles.

From Grand Portage to Lake Winnipeg the country was probably never rich in fur-bearing animals; and it has now long since been exhausted as a hunting ground either for fur-bearing or food-producing animals, but few of either remaining. The natives, who are Chippeways, drew their chief means of substance from the waters: sturgeon, white-fish, pike, mackerel, and carp being the principal kinds of fish found there. Winnipeg House was an important depot of provisions, which were brought in canoes from the bison countries that surround the Red River (of the North) and the Saskatchewan, and distributed to the canoes and boats for the several wintering places on Lake Winnipeg. Red River enters the lake at a distance of forty-two miles from Winnipeg House; further north the Dauphin contributes its waters, and at the north-west corner of the lake the Saskatchewan, in latitude $53^{\circ} 43' 45''$, longitude $98^{\circ} 31'$ west, comes in on its way to Hudson's Bay. This lake receives many lesser streams both on the east and on the west. All these waters were valuable as highways for fur-traders. From Winnipeg House to the lower end of the Saskatchewan, the western coast line, which runs north thirty-six degrees west, is two hundred and thirty-one miles; the western side is longer, being about two hundred and seventy miles; the width at either end is about forty-five miles. The area of this lake, with its islands, is about ten thousand and eighty square miles. The woods all round the lake are composed of small trees, full of branches. Neither deer nor other animals were abundant, but the waters abound with good fish.

Mr. Thompson set out from Winnipeg House, coasting along the limestone shores of the lake, mostly low, but sometimes forming cliffs fifty feet high, to the mouth of the Dauphin River. The course, in a straight line, was north 43° west, one hundred and twenty-seven miles. He then proceeded up the Dauphin River, which is about thirty yards wide and three deep, and runs through a forest. Both the soil and the timber improved in quality as he proceeded, but deer and beaver were scarce. The general course for the first eight miles was south by west; but there were many turnings in the river. This brought him to the Meadow Carrying Place, two thousand seven hundred and sixty yards long, which took him to Lake Winepagos (the little sea). It would have been practicable to reach the lake by continuing on the river, but it was so circuitous as to cause the carrying-place to be preferred. On this lake he went a distance of fifty-nine miles to Swan River, a small stream only about fifteen yards wide and three deep, and which runs with a gentle current through a fine country. He was now among low hills and the heights, which the deer, after spending the summer there, were beginning to leave. Beaver now became plentiful.

Having proceeded twelve miles up the river, he came to Swan River House, of the North-West Company, in latitude $52^{\circ} 24' 5''$ north, longitude $100^{\circ} 36' 52''$, variation 13° east. There were but two families of the native tribe to whom those countries belong, Nathaways. Several Chippeways had lately come from the south, their own country being exhausted of beaver and deer.

From Swan River (date September 26th, 1796) he proceeded with horses across the country, to the Stone Indian River, on which the North-West Company had several trading-houses, to the upper house, in charge of Mr. Cuthbert Grant; course forty degrees and a half West, ninety miles; most of the way through fine forests, the ground being very good for the horses, except a few pieces of wet meadow, and even here they did not sink ankle deep.

He now made for the trading-house, in charge of M. Belleau, between Swan River and Stone Indian River, which by observation was found to be in latitude $51^{\circ} 51' 9''$, longitude $102^{\circ} 3' \text{ West}$; course for the last thirty miles having been north 12° West . This stretch contains much wet ground and ponds occasioned by beaver dams. He now returned and proceeded to the Upper trading-house, in charge of Mr. Hugh McGillies, latitude $52^{\circ} 59' 7''$, longitude $102^{\circ} 3' 27''$, on a course north ten degrees East, a distance of one hundred and eleven miles in a direct line, the travelled distance, owing to the détours occasioned by the beaver ponds, being one hundred and fifty miles. These animals held full possession of the country; but they were being rapidly destroyed. All these trading-houses of the North-West Company were on the south side of the range of hills which border on the great plains.

These countries were the hunting grounds of the Nathaway Indians. Mr. Thompson was disappointed in not finding numerous mineral springs in a country having such variety of hill and plain, forest and prairie; beyond the saline brooks of the Red River, from which even then salt was obtained by evaporation, he learned of none.

The Nepissings, Algonquins, and Iroquois, their own countries being exhausted of animals, spread themselves over this country, with destructive march, as far as the beaver was concerned, northward and westward, meeting no molestation from the native Nathaways. The Chippeways and other tribes used the fatally baited steel-trap. The bait was castarum, and was quite irresistible. While the great beaver harvest lasted, the Indians were rich; and they all, men, women, and children, made a barbaric display of their wealth, in the use of silver brooches, earrings, wampum, beads and other trinkets. They wore fine scarlet cloth mantles, and sported other absurd fineries in dress. The canoes of the fur-traders were loaded with beaver packs; and the supply outran the demand so far as to bring down the price in the London market. But neither the inflated prosperity nor the excess of production could last long. Over countries of such vast extent as these, four years sufficed almost to complete the work of destruction. The Indians fell back into worse than their original poverty.

Mr. Thompson proceeded to the trading-house in charge of Mr. Thornburn, in latitude $50^{\circ} 28' 58''$, longitude $101^{\circ} 45' 45''$. Having determined the position of this place, he went down the Stone Indian River to the house in charge of Mr. John McDonell, latitude $49^{\circ} 40' 56''$, longitude $99^{\circ} 27' 15''$, the course being south by east, and the distance in a straight line one hundred and thirty-one miles. This river is about thirty yards in width, and as it derives its water from the rains and snows, is of varying depth, according to the seasons. Its course is on the east side of the great plains and the west side of the low hills, whence it receives several brooks, and from the plains of Calling River a few. In addition to its being always shoal in autumn, its course is very sinuous. The Stone Indian River everywhere runs through an agreeable country with a good soil, well adapted for agriculture.

The bison, the moose, the red deer, and two species of antelope, here gave the Nathaways an easy means of subsistence.

The Stone Indians, a numerous tribe of the Sioux nation, possessed the country south and west of this river to the Missouri; but the more southerly and western parts they shared in common with several other tribes.

Mr. Thompson's journals, surveys, and sketches, having been translated out of crayon into ink, and there being nothing more to be done there, he set out from Mr. McDonell's on a winter's journey for the Mandan villages, on the banks of the Missouri, the 28th November, 1797. The guide and interpreter, Monsieur René Jussomme, had resided eight years in those villages, and spoke the Mandan language with fluency. There were also in the party, Mr. Hugh McCracken, a good-hearted Irishman, who had been to the villages many times, and even resided there for weeks and months; seven French Canadians, good-humored fellows, willing to hunt for the means of securing their greatest enjoyment—eating—who possessed not the least tincture of education, and did not see its value. All these, except Mr. Thompson's servant man, A. Brossman, were for the time free-traders, on their own account, each of them having taken from Mr. McDonell, on credit, a venture in goods to the value of forty to sixty skins, to be paid for in kind. Having been supplied with ammunition, tobacco and trinkets to pay expenses on the way, Mr. Thompson provided with two horses, and Mr. Jussomme with one, the men having their own dogs, to the number of thirty, to haul their goods on flat sleds, everything was now ready for the journey. The half-wolf dogs had all been obtained in trade from the Stone Indians, by whom numbers are kept in their encampments. These brutes are extremely voracious.

After thirty-three days' travel, with the thermometer nearly always below zero, and sometimes descending to 36° below, having encountered high winds and blinding snowdrifts, depending chiefly on the precarious chase for means of subsistence, and sometimes being in danger from hostile Indians, the party arrived at the village of the Fall Indians, lat. $47^{\circ} 25' 11''$, long. $101^{\circ} 21' 5''$, the whole distance travelled in that time being two hundred and eighty miles.

Although few of the Mandans had guns, they had already received some from trading parties of the Hudson's Bay Company, who had probably straggled through the country in a favourable season, much as the men belonging to Mr. Thompson's party were doing; or, more likely, they obtained them from traders they had met at a distance from their villages. This does not prove that that Company had any substantial occupation of this part of the country. The lower village of the Mandans was found to be in lat. $47^{\circ} 17' 22''$, long. $101^{\circ} 14' 24''$, variation ten degrees East.

The road from the Mandan villages to Stone Indian River House, travelled by Mr. Thompson, may be thus divided. Following from one piece of woods to another, where fuel and shelter could alone be obtained, the course to the Dog Tent Hill, twenty-eight degrees East, was fifty miles; thence to the elbow of the Moose River, north forty-nine degrees East, twenty miles; then to the south end of Turtle Hill, north nine degrees West, fourteen miles; thence to the Ash House, on Moose River, north three degrees West, twenty-four miles; thence to the house of Mr. McDonell, north sixty-nine degrees East, forty-five miles. A straight line between the two extreme points would run north twenty-six degrees East, one hundred and eighty-eight miles.

Mr. Thompson spent three weeks in calculating the astronomical observations made in the late journey. Stone Indian River House was, by a series of observations, found to be in latitude $49^{\circ} 40' 56''$, longitude $99^{\circ} 27' 15''$, variation eleven degrees East.

On the 26th February, 1798, Mr. Thompson took leave of his hospitable friend, Mr. John McDonell, by whom he was furnished with everything necessary for his journey of survey. He was accompanied by three Canadians and an Indian guide, and six dogs hauled three sleds laden with provisions and baggage. The course was sometimes on the ice of the Stone Indian River, but, to avoid its windings, mostly on the north side. In the afternoon the Manito Hills were reached—a long, low ridge of sand knolls, steep on the west side, sloping more gradually on the east, growing only a few patches of grass, and retaining no snow during the whole winter; which phenomenon the Indians regard as preternatural and fix that idea in the name. Except the sand ridge, the country is very fine, especially at the junction of the Moose River, about half a mile below the trading-house.

As the journey proceeded day after day, the snow was found to increase in depth, and it was no easy task to beat a path for the dogs and sleds, the snow shoes of the foremost man sinking six inches at every step. The guide became so fatigued that he had to be relieved two or three hours every day.

On the 7th March he arrived at the junction of Stone Indian with Red River, in latitude $49^{\circ} 53' 1''$, longitude 97° , variation nine degrees East. In a straight line the course is north, 82° east, one hundred and twelve miles; the windings of the river are more than three times this distance, and the distance travelled was one hundred and sixty-nine miles.

On the 7th March, 1798, Mr. Thompson began the survey of the Red River, and on the 14th he arrived at the trading-house of the North-West Company, under charge of Monsieur Charles Chaboiller, by whom the party were kindly received. The travelling during these eight days was very difficult. The snow was fully three feet deep, and the surface of the river ice was covered by water the weather being mild, with showers of rain. The snow, mixed with water, stuck to the sleds, and made it impossible for the dogs to haul them. Many times a couple of men had to assist the dogs in extricating them. In wet weather everything was soaked, and had to be dried. To beat the road was slavish work. Ankles and knees were sprained by the weight of wet snow that adhered to the snow-shoes; and the difficulty was increased by the long grass that had to be walked over.

Mr. Thompson had to take the place of the guide. He tied a string to the toe of each snow-shoe, and holding the opposite ends in his hands, lifted them out of the soft snow. In this way, with his gun slung on his back, the party marched on the west side of the river. The whole distance was over 10 long prairie grass, very difficult to walk among. The only trees were of oak, ash, alder and nutwood; but the numerous charred stumps afforded evidence that on this side of the river had once grown a pine forest. In the more northern regions the pines, when destroyed by fire, have been succeeded by aspens poplars and alders; but along the Red River, the excellence of the soil and the mildness of the climate made the successors of the pines similarly destroyed, oak, ash, alder and nutwood.

At this trading-house, where he arrived on the 14th, Mr. Thompson remained for six days. He determined its position to be latitude $48^{\circ} 58' 24''$, longitude $97^{\circ} 16' 40''$, variation of the compass eight and a-half degrees East, being one minute and thirty-six seconds south of the United States boundary line, which Mr. Thompson pointed out, in order that the trading-house might be removed beyond it. This line was, several years later, confirmed by Major Long, of the United Corps of Engineers. From 20 the junction of the Stone Indian with the Red River, it is south eleven degrees and a quarter, West sixty-five and a half statute miles; to the boundary line sixty-four miles.

The number of Indians (Chippeways) who traded at this house was ninety-five men; and supposing every one of them to represent a family of seven souls, we have an aggregate of 665. At Rainy River House, in latitude $48^{\circ} 36' 58''$, longitude $93^{\circ} 19' 30''$, on a course hence south eighty-two degrees East, a distance of one hundred and eighty-four miles, sixty of the same tribe traded, representing four hundred and twenty more. If we divide the families by the mileage of the hunting-ground, every seven souls will be found to have had a hunting-ground of one hundred and fifty to one hundred and eighty square miles. And yet they had very little provisions to spare; proof that this part of the country did not even then abound in wild animals. This circumstance would furnish a reason why 30 the Hudson's Bay Company would not care to extend their operations there. The beaver had become scarce; not being obliged to use the same hard materials in building his house as are necessary further north, this animal had been a comparatively easy prey to the Indian. In summer these Indians subsist on fish, and in autumn, part of them on wild rice.

The Red River is here one hundred and twenty yards wide. Eleven miles further down it receives the waters of the Reed River, from the eastward. It is about the same width, but less deep. This part of the river is called Pembina, from a small stream that comes in. The deep rich soil of the Red River is everywhere fit for cultivation.

York Factory, on Hudson's Bay, was distant north, twenty-four degrees East, six hundred and sixteen miles in a straight line, and not less than nine hundred miles by the only practicable route. The 40 obstructions occasioned by carrying places would greatly lengthen the time and labour of the voyage.

On the 21st March, Mr. Thompson and party started on their journey down the banks of the river, and on the 25th arrived at the North-West Company's house, under charge of Monsieur Baptiste Cadotte, latitude $47^{\circ} 54' 21''$, longitude $96^{\circ} 19'$, variation 10° East. The weather was fine during the journey, and the frosts of night made the snow firm several hours of the day. In some places there was a fine border of woods along the river, from thirty to three hundred yards wide. Among the varieties were oak, ash, elm and basswood; the aspens become more frequent. There is a fine rich, deep soil the whole distance.

On the 9th April, the Red River being clear of ice, Mr. Thompson left the trading-house in charge of M. Cadotte, whither he had returned in a canoe, eighteen feet long, accompanied by three Canadians and a native woman, the wife of one of the men, provided with a stock of twelve days' provisions. 50 The object of the expedition was to survey the country to the source of the Mississippi River. was a choice of two routes; that direct to Red Lake, where the current was moderate, but liable to be encumbered with ice from the lake; or Clear Water River, where the current was swift, but where there was no fear of ice. The latter was chosen, and a slow progress up it commenced. This river was fifty yards wide, and now, from the melting of the snow, about eight feet deep, though in August and September its depth is not over two feet.

On the 11th, the junction of Wild Rice River was passed; after which the current became more moderate and the quantity of water less. Next day the carrying place which leads to Red Lake River was reached, a distance of sixty-four miles up this sinuous river having been made. The east or right bank was covered with a fine forest of pine, but higher up the aspen prevailed. On the west bank grew patches of hard-wood, with a rich soil and fine meadows leading to the plain. The carrying place is four miles long, part marsh and part ground; it leads to the bank of the Red Lake River, in latitude $48^{\circ} 0' 55''$, longitude $95^{\circ} 54' 28''$, variation ten degrees East.

The course now lay up this river to Red Lake, a distance of thirty-two miles. Both banks were well timbered, oak, ash and other hard woods being intermixed with aspen and poplars, the rich deep soil everywhere covered with water from the melting of the snow. So level was the surface that only here and there a bit of dry land was to be seen. At night the party cut down trees to sleep upon.

The head of this river, at its junction with the lake, was found by observation to be in latitude $47^{\circ} 58' 15''$, longitude $95^{\circ} 35' 37''$. To make a distance in a straight line north 82° East, it was necessary to travel one hundred and seventeen statute miles, and consume seven days of fourteen hours each.

At this lake, the old Chief She-she-she-pas-kut, with six lodges of Chippeways, was encamped. The Chippeways being without a canoe, Mr. Thompson lent them his, with which to spear fish in the night.

Three sturgeon, weighting sixty pounds each, were caught. They were good for clear water lake sturgeon; this fish, like the hog, being most at home in mud.

Red Lake is a fine sheet of water, about thirty miles in length and ten in breadth; the banks twenty to thirty feet high; the soil, somewhat sandy, produces fine firs and other woods; in some places dwarf white cedar. The North-West Company occasionally has a trading-house here for a winter. The country, poor in furs, would be exhausted by a winter's hunt, and would require to lie fallow for some time. The lake being partly covered with ice, the canoe was paddled in open places, and hauled on a rude sled, extemporized for the occasion, over patches of ice. This amphibious kind of travelling was continued over a distance of seventeen miles; wet, laborious work, performed amid many showers of rain and sleet.

A carrying-place, six miles long, had now to be passed, in a southerly direction, the road leading through a forest of firs and aspen, with a sprinkling of oak and ash. The ground in the middle of the carrying-place presented numerous ascents and descents of from twenty to forty feet; the first met since Red River was left. By nine o'clock P.M., April 23, everything had been carried overland to Turtle Lake. The source of the Mississippi River was reached four days later. The journey was very fatiguing. The country travelled over presented a succession of lakelets or ponds, some of which were open and some partly covered with ice, winding brooks and carrying-places. The low level country everywhere presented the appearance of an immense marsh, growing an abundance of wild rice over an area of at least 6,000 square miles.

The distance from Red River, south 70° East, fifty-six statute miles, was made in nineteen days— not quite three miles in a direct line, a day. Owing to the winding character of the brooks, an hour's paddling would sometimes produce scarcely any progress.

Turtle Lake, the head of the Mississippi River, is about four miles square. Its small bays give it the shape of a turtle. This lake was supposed, in 1783, to be further north than the north-west corner of the Lake of the Woods, and this supposition led to the error in the treaty of that year. The error arose from the fur-traders who ascended the Upper Mississippi counting every pipe a league, at the end of which it was the habit to take a rest. Mr. Thompson found these pipe distances to be as unsubstantial as the smoke itself, and that each instead of three only measured two miles. And the 50 error was, not to make due allowance for the sinuosities of the river. By this false method of reckoning the notion had arisen that the head waters of the Mississippi was 128 geographical miles farther north than Mr. Thompson's survey proved them to be. The north bank of the lake is in latitude $47^{\circ} 38' 20''$, longitude $95^{\circ} 12' 4''$.

Mr. Thompson here fell in with two canoes of Indians on their way to Red Cedar Lake, and as his own canoe was leaking he went with them in one of theirs. On the south-west corner of Turtle Lake is Turtle Brook, three yards wide, two feet deep, and having a current of two and-a-half miles an hour. Rather than follow its windings, they made a portage of 180 yards to a small lake out of which they emerged into a brook, the fantastic windings and turnings of which they followed through a country of grass and marsh. Three portages had to be made to avoid as many falls, and several rapids, with a gravelly bottom, were passed over. On approaching Red Cedar Lake, several brooks from either side contributed their waters; the stream at the entrance of the lake being fifteen yards wide, two feet deep, and having a current of three miles an hour. Crossing the lake, a distance of five miles, Mr. Thompson reached a trading-house of the North-West Company, in charge of John Sayer, one of the partners, which was found to be in latitude $47^{\circ} 27' 56''$, longitude $94^{\circ} 52'$, variation six degrees East. From the mouth of Turtle Lake to this trading-house the distance is south, 58 degrees East, 25 miles; but the windings of the river more than treble the distance to be travelled. On each side of the valley grew oak, ash, elm, birch, pine, aspen, and, where there was a little elevation, fine maple; soil deep, grass long. Mr. Sayer and his men had passed the whole winter here, on no more substantial food than wild rice and maple sugar. The rice made good soup, but when Mr. Thompson tried to live on it he soon became ill. About sixty heads of families traded at this house, and Mr. Sayer estimated each Indian family at seven persons, which would make the whole number 420.

On the 3rd May, Mr. Thompson started down the river, now expanded to twenty-six yards in width by three deep, and having a current of two miles an hour. The Valley of the Mississippi had here the appearance of a meadow of long, half-dried grass, free from water, and scarcely half a mile wide, gradually expanding as it descends. At the mouth of Sand Lake River the river becomes sixty-two yards wide and twelve feet deep. Sand Lake River, south, 48 degrees East, is sixty-eight miles from Red Cedar Lake. In this distance there are ten miles of lake and fifty-eight of river. The windings on the river make the distance to be travelled on it two hundred miles. The descent from Turtle Lake to Cedar Lake is ninety-seven feet nine inches, and from Cedar Lake to Sand Lake River 333 feet 4 inches, making a change of level of no less than 431 feet in an apparently even country.

Arriving at Sand Lake River, on the 6th, Mr. Thompson entered it to make his way to Lake Superior. This river is twenty yards wide, five in depth, and runs a mile and a half an hour. When he had proceeded a mile, half the distance to Sand Lake, Mr. Thompson arrived at another trading-house of the North-West Company, under charge of Mr. Boisiké. Here were the women and children of about twenty families. All the furs bought at his post were the produce of the country between the Mississippi River and Lake Superior. Twenty heads of families brought their furs here; reckoning seven to a family, this post must have been supported by the labour of two hundred and ninety-four Indians, men, women and children. This trading-house was found to be in north latitude $46^{\circ} 46' 30''$, longitude $93^{\circ} 44' 17''$ West.

Mr. Thompson had now to cross the country to reach the river St. Louis, by which he was to descend to Lake Superior. Crossing Sand Lake, May 7th, which is about four miles in length and one wide, to Savannah Brook, he proceeded eight geographical miles—made nine by detours—to a great swamp, a mile wide, in a north, 81 degrees East, direction, the latter portion consisting of a bog, being passed over by means of a few sticks to form a road, to slip from which entailed the penalty of sinking down to the waist. Across this description of country, growing scrubby pines a few feet high, all the baggage of the party had to be carried. Over this route the North-West Company had to carry all the furs, provisions, baggage, goods, and canoes connected with their trade between Lake Superior and the Mississippi. The custom was for the person in charge of the brigade to cross this bog and swamp as rapidly as possible, leaving the men to take their own time. It was so difficult to get canoes or goods over this swamp, of which no one standing in the middle could see the end, in any direction, it was the custom of the North-West Company to keep canoes at both ends. The swamp having been crossed after a hard day's work, and with the aid of an extra man, Mr. Thompson found the latitude to be $46^{\circ} 52' 3''$ North, longitude $92^{\circ} 28' 42''$ West, variation six degrees East.

Passing through a small brook a distance of twelve miles in a direct line, but twenty by its course, Mr. Thompson entered the River St. Louis, a stream about one hundred yards wide and eight deep. The men of his party, who had been in the habit of navigating this river for years, assured him that in August and the two following months it has only eighteen inches of water, running among stones, which it is often necessary to turn the canoe aside to avoid. In one of the many rapids of this river the canoe filled with water. Then came cataracts formed by a series of small steps round a point of rock necessitating resort to a carrying place 1,576 yards long. Then, after four miles more, another carrying place of seven miles, where, on the left of the travellers, the river has a series of falls estimated at one hundred and twenty feet, below which the river flows with a moderate course into Lake Superior. Near the mouth of the river was a trading-house of the North-West Company, under charge of M. Lemoine, in latitude $46^{\circ} 44' 33''$, longitude $92^{\circ} 9' 45''$, variation five and a half degrees East. M. Lemoine's returns were six hundred pounds of furs, and he expected to obtain four hundred pounds more, nine kegs of gum from the fir trees to staunch the canoes, and one hundred and twenty gallons of maple sugar.

"I have," says Mr. Thompson, "only set down my observations made at certain places, but they are numerous all over the survey, as every clear day no opportunity was omitted of taking observations for latitude and longitude to correct the course and distances of the survey."

It was] eustomary to lay up the canoes that descend the river to Lake Superior, as well as those that came up the lake. Mr. Thompson's party had to take a northern canoe, twenty-eight feet in length, in a state of dilapidation. They repaired it and fitted it up with two oars, as there were only three men to encounter the winds and yaves of Lake Superior.

In canoes such as that Mr. Thompson here obtained, the fur trade was carried great distances into the interior; in his own words, it "extended to within two or three days' march of the shores and factories of Hudson's Bay."

History of Trade.

[Sir Alexander Mackenzie, in A General History of the Fur Trade, from Canada to the North-West,† shows how the Canadian traders preceded the Hudson's Bay Company in the North-West. The following is extracted from his work:—

The Indians, therefore, to procure the necessary supply, were encouraged to penetrate into the country, and were generally accompanied by some of the Canadians, who found means to induce the remotest tribes to bring the skins which were most in demand, to their settlements, in the way of trade.

At length, military posts were established [by the French] at the confluence of the different large lakes of Canada, which, in a great measure, checked the evil consequences that followed from the improper conduct of these foresters [coureurs des bois], and at the same time protected the trade. Besides a number of able and respectable men, retired from the army, prosecuted the trade in person, under their respective licenses, with great order and regularity, and extended it to such a distance, as in those days was considered to be an astonishing effort of commercial enterprise.

They [the Missionaries] were, during their mission, of great service to the commanders who engaged in those distant expeditions, and spread the fur trade as far west as the banks of the Saskatchewan river, in 53° north latitude and longitude 102° West. * * *

Notwithstanding all the restrictions with which commerce was oppressed under the French Government, the fur trade was extended to the immense distance which has been already stated; and surmounted many most discouraging difficulties, which will be hereafter noticed; while at the same time, no exertions were made from Hudson's Bay to obtain even a share of the trade of a country which, according to the Charter of that Company, belonged to it, and from its proximity, is so much more accessible to the mercantile adventurer. * * *

For some time after the conquest of Canada this trade was suspended, which must have been very advantageous to the Hudson's Bay Company, as all the inhabitants to the westward of Lake Superior were obliged to go to them for such articles as their habitual use had rendered necessary. Some of the Canadians who had lived long with them, and were become attached to a savage life, accompanied them thither annually, till mercantile adventurers again appeared from their own country, after an interval of several years, owing, as I suppose, to an ignorance of the country in the conquerors, and their want of commercial confidence in the conquered. There were, indeed, other discouragements, such as the immense length of the journey necessary to reach the limit beyond which this commerce must begin; the risk of property; the expenses attending such a long transport; and an ignorance of the language of those who from their experience must be necessarily employed, as the intermediate agents, between them and the natives. But, notwithstanding these difficulties, the trade by degrees began to spread over the different parts to which it had been carried by the French, though at a great risk of the lives, as well as the property, of their new possessors, for the natives had been taught by their former allies to entertain hostile feelings towards the English, from their having been in alliance with their natural enemies the Iroquois; and there were not wanting a sufficient number of discontented, disappointed people to keep alive such a notion; so that for a long time they were considered and treated as objects of hostility. To prove this disposition of the Indians, we have only to refer to the conduct of Pontiac at Detroit, and the surprise and taking of Michilimackinac about this period.

Hence it arose that it was so late as the year 1766, before which the trade I mean to consider commenced at Michilimackinac. The first who attempted it were satisfied to go the length of the River Camenistiquia, about thirty miles to the eastward of the Grande Portage, where the French had a principal establishment and was the line of their communication with the interior country. It was once destroyed by fire. Here they went, and returned successful in the following spring to Michilimackinac. Their success induced them to renew their journey, and invited others to follow their example. Some of them remained at Camenistiquia, while others proceeded to and beyond the Grande Portage, which since that time has become the principal entrepôt of that trade, and is situated in a bay, in latitude 48° 30' north and longitude 90° West. After passing the usual season there, they went back to Michilimackinac as before, and, encouraged by the trade, returned in increased numbers. One of these, Thomas Curry, with a spirit of enterprise superior to that of his contemporaries, determined to penetrate to the furthest limits of the French discoveries in that country; or at least till the frost should stop him. For this purpose he procured guides and interpreters, who were acquainted with the country, and with four canoes arrived at Fort Bourbon, which was one of their posts at the west end of Cedar Lake, on the waters of the Saskatchewan. His risk and toil were well recompensed, for he came back the following spring with his canoes filled with fine furs, with which he proceeded to Canada, and was satisfied never again to return to the Indian country.

From this period people began to spread over every part of the country, particularly where the French had established settlements.

Mr. James Finlay was the first who followed Mr. Curry's example, and with the same number of canoes, arrived in the course of the next season at Nipawee, the last of the French settlements on the bank of the Saskatchewan River, in latitude nearly 43½° [53½?] North, and longitude 103° West; he found the good fortune, as he followed in every respect the example of his predecessor.

As may be supposed, there were now people enough ready to replace them, and the trade was pursued with such avidity and irregularity, that in a few years it became the reverse of what it ought to have been. An animated competition prevailed; and the contending parties carried the trade beyond the French limits, though with no benefit to themselves or neighbours, the Hudson's Bay Company; who in the year 1774, and not till then, thought proper to move from home to the east bank of Sturgeon Lake, in latitude 53° 56' North, and longitude 102° 15' West, and became more jealous of their fellow subjects, and, perhaps, with more cause, than they had been of those of France. From this period to the present time, they have been following the Canadians to their different establishments, while on the contrary, there is not a solitary instance that the Canadians have followed them; and there are many trading posts which they have not yet attained. This, however, will no longer be a mystery when the nature and policy of the Hudson's Bay Company is compared with that which has been pursued by their rivals in this trade.

This competition which has been already mentioned, gave a fatal blow to the trade from Canada and, with other incidental causes, in my opinion, contributed to its ruin. * * *

Thus was the trade carried on for several years, and consequently becoming worse and worse, so that the partners, who met them at the Grande Portage, naturally complained of their ill-success.

It was about this time that Mr. Joseph Frobisher, one of the gentlemen engaged in the trade, 10 determined to penetrate into the country yet unexplored, to the north and westward, and, in the spring of the year 1775, met the Indians from that quarter on their way to Fort Churchill, at Portage de Traite, so named from that circumstance on the banks of the Missinipi or Churchill River, latitude 55° 25' North, longitude 103½° West. It was indeed with some difficulty that he could induce them to trade with him, but he at length procured as many furs as his canoes could carry. * * * He then sent his brother to explore the country still further west, who penetrated as far as the Lake of Isle à la Crosse, in latitude 55° 26' North, and longitude 108° West.

The success of this gentleman induced others to follow his example, and in the spring of the year 1778, some of the traders on the Saskatchewan River, finding they had a quantity of goods to spare, agreed to put them into a joint stock, and gave the charge and management of them to Mr. Peter 20 Pond, who, in four canoes, was directed to enter the English River, so called by Mr. Frobisher, to follow his track, and proceed still further, if possible to Athabasca, a country hitherto unknown but from Indian report. In this enterprise he at length succeeded, and pitched his tent on the banks of the Elk River, by him erroneously called the Athabasca, about thirty miles from the Lake of the Hills, into which it empties itself.

Here he passed the winter of 1778-9; saw a vast concourse of the Knisteneaux and Chepewyan tribes, who used to carry their furs annually to Churchill; the latter by the barren grounds, where they suffered innumerable hardships, and were sometimes even starved to death. The former followed the course of the lakes and rivers, through a country that abounded in animals, and where there was plenty of fish; but though they did not suffer from want of food, the intolerable fatigue of such a jour- 30 ney could not be easily repaid to an Indian; they were, therefore, highly gratified by seeing people come to their country to relieve them from such long, toilsome, and dangerous journeys; and were immediately reconciled to give an advanced price for the articles necessary for their comfort and convenience. Mr. Pond's reception and success was accordingly beyond his expectation; and he procured twice as many furs as his canoes would carry. They also supplied him with as much provisions as he required during his residence among them, and sufficient for his homeward voyage. Such of the furs as he could not embark, he secured in one of his winter huts, and they were found the following season, in the same state in which he left them.

These, however, were but partial advantages, and could not prevent the people of Canada from seeing the improper conduct of some of their associates, which rendered it dangerous to remain any 40 longer among the natives.

Most of them who passed the winter at the Saskatchewan, got to the Eagle Hills, where, in the spring of the year 1780, a few days previous to their intended departure, a large band of Indians being engaged in drinking about their houses, one of the traders, to ease himself of the troublesome importunities of a native, gave him a dose of laudanum in a glass of grog, which effectually prevented him from giving further trouble to any one, by setting him asleep forever. This accident produced a fray in which one of the traders and several of the men were killed, and the remainder saved themselves by precipitate flight.

About the same time, two of the establishments on the Assiniboine River were attacked. . . . Nothing but the greatest calamity that could have befallen the natives, saved the traders from destruc- 50 tion: this was the small-pox which spread its destructive and desolating power, as the fire consumes the dry grass of the field. The fatal infection spread around with baneful rapidity which no flight could escape, and with a fatal effect that nothing could resist. * * *

The consequence of this melancholy event to the traders must be self-evident; the means of disposing of the goods were cut off; and no furs were obtained but such as had been gathered from the habitations of the deceased Indians, which could not be very considerable; nor did they look for the losses of the present year with any encouraging expectations to those which were to come. The only fortunate people consisted of a party who had again penetrated to the northward and westward, in 1780, at some distance up the Missinipi, or English River, to Lake la Rouge. Two unfortunate circumstances, however, happened to them, which are as follows:

10 Mr Wadin, a Swiss gentleman, of strict probity and known sobriety, had gone there in the year 1779, and remained during the summer of 1780. * * *

The other circumstance was this. In the spring of the year, Mr. Pond sent the above-mentioned clerk to meet the Indians from the northward, who used to go annually to Hudson's Bay; when he easily persuaded them to trade with him, and return back, that they might not take the contagion which had depopulated the country to the eastward of them; but most unfortunately they caught it here, and carried it with them, to the destruction of themselves and the neighbouring tribes.

The country being thus depopulated, the traders and their friends from Canada, who, from various causes, already mentioned, were very much reduced in number, became confined to two parties, who began seriously to think of making permanent establishments on the Missinipi River, and at Athabasca; 20 for which purpose, 1781-2, they selected their best canoe-men, being ignorant that the small-pox penetrated that way. The most expeditious party got only in time to the Portage la Roche, or Mithy-Oninigan Portage, which divides the waters of the Missinipi from those that fall into the Elk River, to despatch one canoe, strong-handed, and light-loaded, to that country; but on their arrival there, they found, in every direction, the ravages of the small-pox; so that, from the great diminution of the natives, they returned in the spring with no more than seven packages of beaver. The strong woods and mountainous countries afforded a refuge to those who had fled from the contagion of the plains; but they were so alarmed at the surrounding destruction that they avoided the traders, and were dispirited from hunting, except for their subsistence. The traders, however, who returned into the country in the year 1782-3, found the inhabitants in some sort of tranquillity, and more numerous than they had reason to 30 expect, so that their success was proportionally better.

During the winter 1783-4, the merchants of Canada engaged in this trade formed a junction of interests, under the name of the North-West Company, and divided into sixteen shares, without depositing any capital; each party furnishing a proportion or quota of such articles as were necessary to carry on the trade; the respective parties agreeing to satisfy the friends they had in the country, who were not provided for according to this agreement, out of the proportions of which they held. * * *

In the spring, two of those gentlemen went to Grand Portage with their credentials, which were confirmed and ratified by all parties having an option, except Mr. Peter Pond, who was not satisfied with the share allotted to him. Accordingly, he and another gentleman, Mr. Peter Pangman, who had 40 right to be a partner, but for whom no provision had been made, came to Canada with a determination to return to the country, if they could find any persons to join them and give their scheme a proper support.

[The traders in the country, and merchants in Montreal, entered into a co-partnership, and were successful. Pond joined them; but Pangman, Gregory and McLeod formed a separate business. Mackenzie had been five years in Gregory's counting-house, and now left him to seek his fortune at Detroit, where Gregory established an agency, admitted Mackenzie as a partner, and sent him to the Indian country. After the murder of one of the partners, the laming of another, and the narrow escape of one of the clerks who received a bullet through his powder-horn, in the execution of his duty, those who were in possession of the trade of the country were compelled to allow Mackenzie and his partners a share of the trade, and a union was completed in July, 1787. In 1788, the gross adventure 50 for the year did not exceed £40,000. In 1798, the number of shares was increased from 20 to 46. The French, when in possession, had several trading establishments upon the islands and banks of Lac Bois

Blanc, and also several settlements in and about Lake du Bois, which is in latitude 49° 37', longitude 94° 31'. The northernmost branch of the source of the Mississippi is in latitude 47° 38', longitude, 95° 6'.]

On these waters [those of the Dauphin River, etc.] are three principal forts for trade—Fort Dauphin, which was established by the French, before the conquest; Red Deer River and Swan River forts, with occasionally posts detached from these. The inhabitants are the Knistineaux, from the north of Lake Winnipic; and Algonquins, from the country between Red River and Lake Superior. * * *

There are on this River [Saskatchiwine] five principal factories for the convenience of the trade with the natives—Nepawi House, South-Branch House, Fort George House, Fort Augustus House, and 10 Upper Establishment. There have been many others which for various causes have been changed for these.

It may be proper to observe that the French had two settlements upon the Saskatchiwine long before, and at the conquest of Canada—the first at the Pasquia, near Carrot River, and the other at Nipawi, where they had agricultural instruments and wheel-carriages, marks of both being found about those establishments, where the soil is excellent.

Till the year 1782, the people of Athabasca sent or carried their furs regularly to Fort Churchill Hudson's Bay; some of them have since that time repaired thither, notwithstanding they could have provided themselves with all the necessaries which they required.....At present, however, this traffic is in a great measure discontinued.

Monday, 4th August.—At day break we embarked and passed the old Hudson's B. C. establishment which has now been abandoned for several years.†

Tuesday, 19th August.—We began early this morning to unpack the goods, to assort and divide them, the one-half being intended for Portage la Prairie, and the remainder for the Red River. This employed us the greatest part of the day, settling the men, delivering the baggages, and attending to the Indians, who were still drinking. At twelve o'clock, five Hudson Bay Company's boats from Albany Factory, or rather Martin's Falls, arrived here,—Mr. Robert Goodwin, Master, assisted by a Mr. Brown; they put ashore and remained with us until four o'clock, when they embarked and proceeded up the Assiniboine River. Their boats carry about forty-five packages of unequal weight, but may be said to average eighty pounds each, conducted by four oars and a steersman; they are neatly built and painted, and sharp at both ends.....

Upon this point, in the time of the French, there was a trading establishment, traces of which are still to be seen. Their chimneys and cellars stood. I am also informed that there was at the same time a chapel and a missionary here for several years, but I don't believe they ever made much progress towards civilizing the nations... Brigade of canoes and boats overtook and camped with us, with Mr. John McDonell, one of the proprietors of the North-West Company... He proposes to winter himself at Rivière Qu'Appelle.

Friday, 5th September.—Early this morning I sent off the Indians ahead on discoveries. We came to the Paubian River and crossed over to the old fort which was built in 1797-8 by Mr. Chollailier, opposite to the entrance of the river. On the east side of the Red River are the remains of an old fort built by Mr. Peter Grant some years ago, and was the first establishment ever built on the Red River.

The whole of this year appears to have been spent at the old settlement of Kaministiquia, on the north-west of Lake Superior.....

At this period, scattered around the country, was a population of about 80,000, which he has noted down as follows:—

August 31st.—This season we were troubled by an augmentation of freemen from Canada, etc.; their total numbers now in this [Paubian] river amount to forty-five men. More worthless fellows could not be found in the North-West.

September 14th.—I sent off a boat for above, Wm. Henry, master, with T. Veaudrie, interpreter, and seven men, to build at the Grande Fourche.

August 22nd.—We passed old Fort Bourbon, near which we entered one of the channels of the Saskatchewan.

24th.—At eleven o'clock we entered the main channel of the Saskatchewan, and soon after we arrived at the Opas. This place may be said to be the first spot of real dry land we have seen since we left Lac Bourbon. The little river of the Montagne du Pas [or Pasquaw Mountain] comes in here on the south side. Formerly the French had an establishment at this spot, some trails of which are to be seen. It was also a place of general rendezvous for the different tribes of Indians previous to the small-pox.

26th.—We came to the entrance of Sturgeon Lake, where we put ashore on an island, whose black, rocky shore gave us every reason to suppose we have our feet once more on a spot of terra firma. Upon this island our northern-bound brigades generally unload, and proceed to Cumberland House for their supply of provisions, which having brought, they loaded and proceeded along the lake in a northern direction to the entrance of Rivière Matine, about twelve leagues from this; then up this river, and through a succession of lakes and rivers to their respective destinations, some even to the Columbia on the westward, and others to the McKenzie River to the north-west. It is from this vast extent of country from which the North-West Company may be said to draw their treasures. It is true, profits arise from the trade in other parts of the country to the eastward, but nothing in comparison to what we obtain from the Athabasca country.

Tuesday, 30th August.—At twelve o'clock we passed the old establishment at the Nepawee, which stands on the south side [of the River Saskatchewan].

Wednesday, 31st August.—At 6 o'clock we encamped at the spot where the French formerly had an establishment, called Fort St. Louis, built by Lue La Corne.* It stands in a low bottom, south side. At this place, some years ago, were to be seen agricultural instruments and remains of carriage wheels. Their road to the open plains is still to be seen, winding up a valley on the south side.

Thursday, September 1st.—At 4 o'clock we were again upon the water, and at 9 o'clock we arrived at an old establishment of our own, which has been abandoned since 1805, called Fort St. Louis, from its proximity to the old French Fort below.

Saturday, 3rd September.—At 2 o'clock we passed old Fort Providence, which stands upon an island, and soon after we came to the Sturgeon Fort, where there still appeared the remains of several old establishments. . . . We passed those ruins, and soon after came to the entrance of the Setting River, or Pucketowasipi, where we found a camp of twenty leather tents of Crees, a few Saulteaux, and two Freemen on the south side. I crossed over and camped upon the north side, upon a beautiful small meadow, on the banks of the river, where there was every appearance of a range of forts having stood many years ago. . . . Among them were several Mongrels, who were very troublesome during the night. I was frequently on the point of chastising one of them in particular, for his insolence. I had always observed in this country that whenever any of these people are living among the Indians, and have abandoned themselves entirely to the savage life, they are the worst of Indians, given to all kinds of roguery, and incite the natives to be more troublesome than they would otherwise be. 20

Sunday, 4th September.—Having finished my business with those troublesome fellows, and purchased three horses from them, and hired one of those rascals as hunter, to go up in company with us, I packed up the skins I had traded and gave them in charge of the Freemen, to be delivered at my house at the South Branch, which is only one day's journey from this across by land. At seven o'clock I sent the hunter and my guide off by land, on the north side, with the horses, as the country above will not admit of travelling by horses near the river, being covered with pine and brushwood, and over-run by swamps and marsh-grasses. . . . At two o'clock we passed Hudson's House on the north side, an old establishment of the Hudson's Bay Company, and at sunset we arrived at Les Ecores Jaunes, which is open on the north side. Here we found a camp of ten Crees and a few Saulteaux and Freemen, who had a number of horses belonging to them. I gave them liquor for some provisions they gave me, and I purchased three horses from them. They were not so troublesome as those we left this morning. . .

Wednesday, 7th September.—On our coming to the canoes, we met a Freeman from above, who had been sent down in a small canoe to inform us that Crees having fled from above had assembled at the Battle River, and had determined to prevent us from passing upwards, to keep the Slave Indians from receiving any supplies from us in arms or ammunition, as they were apprehensive that a serious war would be the consequence.

Thursday, 8th September.—Passed the old Fort of Montagne D'Aigle, which is now only a heap of ruins, which lays in a low bottom on the north side of the river. It was at this place where the traders who then wintered here and the Crees had a battle, in the spring of the year 1780, when one of the traders was killed by a Canadian, and one Cree. The traders were obliged to fly, and abandon their property to the mercy of the Indians, who pillaged and destroyed the major part.

Sunday, 11th September.—We found them [our men] encamped near the Old Fort Brulé which has been abandoned for some years past. It was built on a presqu'isle on the north side. At this place the H. C. Co. servants were plundered by the Fall Indians, and narrowly escaped being all murdered. The same attempt was made upon the N. W. Co. establishment, but by the intrepid behaviour of one of the clerks, they were repulsed, and obliged to retire with the booty they had got from the H. B. Co. house.

* See Col. de Bougainville's Mémoire.

Tuesday, 13th September.—At sunset arrived in front of our establishment of Fort Vermillion, which lays in a low flat bottom of meadow directly opposite the Vermillion River, on the south side, where we observed a large camp of Slave Indians, who, on observing us coming down the hills, began to whoop and halloo, and appeared rejoiced at seeing us. We passed the H. B. Co. fort, and soon after entered our own, where all hands were happy to see us. . . . Soon after my arrival I was visited by our H. B. neighbors, MM. Hallette and Longmore, who were anxious to hear the news from Europe, having been deprived that satisfaction since this time last year. Nothing extraordinary had occurred here in the course of the summer, further than the disturbances between the Slave Indians and the Crees. The former were still exasperated against the treacherous behaviour of the latter, and threatened to be revenged. . . .

In the dressing and preparing of their robes, they [the Big Bellies or Rapid Indians] are far superior to the Slave Indians, and fully equal to the Mandanes. They are a most audacious and turbulent race, and have repeatedly attempted to destroy and massacre us all. The first glaring attempt was made at old Fort Brulez, in 1793, when they pillaged the H. B. Co. fort instantly, and were proceeding to commit a similar outrage upon that of the N. W. Co., but through the spirited conduct of one of the clerks they were repulsed, and fled with the booty they had already acquired from the H. B. Co. establishment. The summer following, they assembled and made a formal attack upon the H. B. Co. Fort at the South Branch, which they destroyed, massacred, and took away everything they could find, leaving the place in ashes. At the same time they attempted to destroy the N. W. Co. Fort, which stood near that of the H. B. Co., but meeting with an unexpected resistance, they retired with the loss of one of their principal chiefs, and some others killed and wounded, since which period they have been more peaceable.

Tuesday, 24th.—I invited the H. B. Co. agents to breakfast, and settled with them concerning our trade with the natives for the winter. I determined upon taking a jaunt up to Fort Augustus, took inventories, etc., and packed up the property for that purpose, that nothing might be given out in my absence.

Friday, 27th.—Passed the ruins of old Fort George, the chimneys of which are now only to be seen. At five o'clock it began to snow and blow hard. The country here is more level than this morning. At dark we came to the Dog Rump River, which having crossed, we stopped for the night. This river comes from the north-west and falls into the Saskatchewan, which is about two leagues south from us. The Moose River, where my horse-keeper is tented, takes its rise in the hills of that name, and empties itself into the Saskatchewan also, below Fort George.

Monday, 30th.—This may be said to be the final termination of the plains in this direction to the west, on the north side of the Saskatchewan River. We now meet a long string of Indians on their march, mostly of them intoxicated; they wished us to stop, and called loudly for rum, but we continued on until we came to the very entrance of the strong wood, where the track brought us upon the bank, in sight of the river, between which and us lay a flat bottom, on which the two establishments presented themselves at our feet. The hill was steep and slippery. At 4 o'clock we entered the fort, after a tedious but expeditious journey from Fort Vermillion to Fort Augustus.

Tuesday, 31st.—They [the Blood Indians] appear much more troublesome here at present than they were when at Fort Vermillion, in September last. The Saskatchewan River is only 15 yards wide; the current is very swift, and bound in by high banks at no great distance from each other the flat bottoms are not so extensive as below, but the banks are more steep and elevated, and covered with wood. . . . The ice is generally from ten to fifteen days later thawing here than at Fort Vermillion.

Wednesday, 1st November.—Early, the Blood Indians were crossed over, and began to trade. Forty principal men at our Fort [Augustus], and the sixty others at the H. B. . . . This afternoon two of our men arrived with a large gang of horses from the Rocky Mountain portage, where they had left our Columbia canoes safely embarked on the west side of the mountain, twenty-seven days ago. They would not have been more than half that time had they passed by the usual route on the south side of the Saskatchewan, but it would have been dangerous on account of the trouble among the natives last summer. They came through a most dreadful country, on the north side.

Tuesday, 7th.—Here [Moose Creek] we had proposed sleeping, but an old woman arriving from the fort brought us news that all the Assiniboines and Crees had declared war upon us, and were every moment expected to arrive at the fort, as they were coming up on both sides of the river, and determined to go up to Fort Augustus also, and sweep the river clear of all the whites they could find, and take every horse that was belonging to us.

EXTRACTS FROM GENERAL PIKE'S TRAVELS,* 1805-1807.

Observations on the Trade, Views, and Policy of the North-West Company, and the National Objects connected with their Commerce as it interests the Government of the United States, 1806.

The fur trade in Canada has always been considered as an object of first importance to that colony, and has been cherished by the respective governors of that Province by every regulation in their power, under both the French and the English administrations. The great and almost unlimited influence the traders of that country had acquired over the savages was severely felt, and will long be remembered by the citizens on our frontiers.

Gen. Pike's
observations
on the N. W.
Co.'s trade,
1805-1807.

Every attention was paid by the Cabinet of St. James, in our Treaty with Great Britain, to secure to their Canadian subjects the privilege of the Indian trade within our territories; and with what judgment they have improved the advantages they obtained, time will soon unfold.

In the year 1766, the trade was first extended from Michillimackinac to the north-west by a few desperate adventurers, whose mode of life on the voyage, and short residence in civil society, obtained for them the appellation of Courcours d'Poiss. From this trifling beginning arose the present North-West Company; who, notwithstanding the repeated attacks made on their trade, have withstood every shock; and are now, by the coalition of the late X. Y. Company, established on so firm a basis as to bid defiance to every opposition that can be made by private individuals. By a late purchase of the King's posts in Canada, they extended their lines of trade from Hudson's Bay to the St. Lawrence, up that river on both sides to the lakes, from thence to Lake Superior,—at which place the North-West Company have their head-quarters,—from thence to the source of Red River and on all its tributary streams, through the country to the Missouri, through the waters of Lake Winipic to the Saskatchewan, on that river to its source, up Elk River to the Lake of the Hills, up Peace River to the Rocky Mountains, from the Lake of the Hills, up Slave River to the Slave Lake; and this year they have despatched a Mr. Mackenzie on a voyage of trade and discovery down Mackenzie's River to the North Sea; and also a Mr. McKay to cross the Rocky Mountains, and proceed to the Western Ocean with the same objects. They have had a gentleman by the name of Thompson making a geographical survey of the north-west part of the continent, who for three years, with an astonishing spirit of enterprise and perseverance, passed over all that extensive and unknown country. His establishment, although not splendid, (the mode of travelling not admitting it), was such as to allow of the most unlimited expenses in everything necessary to facilitate his inquiries; and he is now engaged in digesting the important results of his undertaking. I find from the observations and suggestions of Mr. Thompson, that when at the source of the Mississippi, it was his opinion the line of limits between the United States and Great Britain must run such a course from the head of the Lake of the Woods as to touch the source of the Mississippi; and this I discovered to be the opinion of the North-West Company, who, we may suppose, or reasonably conclude, speak the language held forth by their Government. The admission of this pretension will throw out of our territory all the upper part of Red River, and nearly two-fifths of the territory of Louisiana; whereas if the line is run due west from the head of the Lake of the Woods, it will cross Red River nearly at the entrance; and, it is conjectured, strike the Western Ocean at Birch Bay, in Queen Charlotte Sound. These differences of opinion, it is presumed, might be easily adjusted between the two Governments at the present day; but it is believed that delays, by unfolding the true value of the country, may produce difficulties which do not at present exist. The North-West Company have made establishments at several places on the south side of Lake Superior, and at the head waters of the rivers Sauteaux and St. Croix, which discharge themselves into the Mississippi. The first I met with, on the voyage up, was at Lower Red Cedar Lake, about one hundred and fifty miles above the Isle de Corbeau, being on the eastern side of the river, and distant therefrom six miles. It is situated on the north point of the lake, and consists of log buildings, flanked by picketed bastions on two right angles. The next establishment I met with was situated on Sandy Lake.

observations
on the N. W.
Co.'s trade,
1806-1807.

The Fort at this place is situated on the south side of the lake near the east end, and consists of a stockade of one hundred feet square with bastions, and the south-east and north-west angles pierced for 20 small arms. The pickets are squared on the outside, and round within, of about one foot in diameter and are thirteen feet above ground. There are three gates. The principal one fronts the lake on the north, and is ten feet by nine; the one on the west, six feet by four; the one on the east, six feet by five; as you enter by the main gate you have, on the left, a building of one story twenty feet square the residence of the superintendent; opposite to this house, on the left of the east gate, is a house twenty-five feet by fifteen, the quarters of the men; on entering the west gate you will find the store-house on the right, thirty feet by twenty, and on your left a building, forty feet by twenty, which contains rooms for clerks, a workshop and a provision store.

On the west and north-west is an enclosure of about four acres picketed in, in which last year they raised four hundred bushels of potatoes, cultivating no other vegetable; in this enclosure is a very ingeniously constructed vault to contain the potatoes, but which likewise has secret apartments to conceal liquors, dry-goods, etc.

Midway between Sandy Lake and Leech Lake is a small house worthy of notice. On the south-west side of the latter lake from the outlet of the Mississippi, stand the headquarters of the Fond du Lac department.

The fort is situated on the western side of the lake, in $47^{\circ} 16' 13''$ north latitude; it is built near the shore on the declivity of a rising ground, having an enclosed ground of about five acres on the north-west. It is a square stockade of one hundred and fifty feet, the pickets being fifteen feet in length, three feet under, and thirteen above ground, and are bound together by horizontal bars, each ten feet long; pickets of ten feet are likewise driven into the ground on the inside of the work, opposite the apertures between the large pickets. At the west and east angles are square bastions pierced for fire-arms. The main building in the rear, fronting the lake, is sixty feet by twenty-five, one-and-a-half stories high, the west end of which is occupied by the director of the Fond du Lac department: he has a hall, eighteen feet square, bedroom and kitchen, with an office. The centre is a trading-shop of twelve-and-a-half feet square, with a bedroom in the rear, of the same dimensions; the east end is a large store, twenty-five feet by twenty, under which there is an ice-house well filled; the loft extends over the whole building, and contains bales of goods, packs of peltries, also chests containing wild rice; besides the ice-house, there are cellars under all the other parts of the building. The door and window-shutters are musket proof.

On the western side is a range of buildings, fifty-four by eighteen feet, fronting the parade, the first end of which is a cooper's shop, eighteen feet by fourteen, with a cellar; adjoining to which is a room called the Indian Hall (expressly for the reception of the Indians, and in which the chiefs who met me in council were entertained). In this hall are two close bunks for interpreters; its dimensions are twenty-two feet by eighteen. Adjoining to this is a room, eighteen feet square, for the clerks (in which my small party were quartered); under both of the latter rooms are cellars. On the eastern side is a range of buildings fifty feet by eighteen, which has one room twenty feet, and one of fifteen feet, for quarters for the men; also a blacksmith's shop of fifteen feet, which is occupied by an excellent workman. On the left of the main gate, fronting the river, is a flag-staff of sixty feet in height.

10 They intend building a small block-house over the main gate fronting the lake, to place a small piece of artillery in. There are likewise gates on the north and east flanks, of about ten feet by eight.

Here resides the director of this department. This department brings in annually forty canoes, and it appears by a calculation made by a gentleman of veracity and information, who has been eighteen years in the Indian trade, and in the habit of importing goods by Michillimackinac, that the annual amount of duties would be about thirteen thousand dollars. The Lower Red River, which I conceive to be within our territory, would yield about half that sum, viz.: six thousand five hundred; and the Hudson Bay Company servants, who import by the way of Lake Winipic, six thousand five hundred more.

Thus is the United States defrauded annually of about twenty-six thousand dollars.

20 From my observations and information, I think it will be an easy matter to prevent the smuggling of the Fond du Lac department, by establishing a post with a garrison of one hundred men, and an office of the customs, near the mouth of the River St. Louis, where the Fond du Lac department must enter. This is at present the distributing point, where the Company have an establishment, and the goods, on being received from Kamanistiquia, are embarked for their different destinations. That point also commands the communication with Sandy Lake, Leech Lake, Red Lake, etc., etc. I am also of the opinion that the goods for Red River (if it is within our boundary) would enter here, in preference to being exposed to seizure. It is worthy of remark that the charter of the Hudson's Bay Company extends to all its waters; and if the British Government conceive they have authority to make such a grant, they must certainly claim the country therein specified, which would extend far south of the west line from the head of the Lake of the Woods. The North-West Company were about to push their trade down the Mississippi until they should meet the traders of Michillimackinac, but I gave them to understand this could not be permitted.

To HUGH MCGILLIS, Esq., Proprietor and Agent of the North-West Company established at Fond du Lac.

NORTH-WEST ESTABLISHMENT ON LAKE LEECH,

February, 1806.

SIR,—As a proprietor of the North-West Company and director of the Fond du Lac department, I conceive it my duty as an officer of the United States (in whose territory you are) to address you solely on the subject of the many houses under your instructions. As a member of the greatest commercial nation in the world, and of a company long renowned for their extent of connection and greatness of views, you cannot be ignorant of the rigour of the laws of the duties of imports of a foreign power.

Mr. Jay's treaty, it is true, gave the right of trade with the savages to British subjects in the United States territories, but by no means exempted them from paying the duties, obtaining licenses, and subscribing to all the rules and restrictions of our laws. I find your establishments at every suitable place along the whole extent of the south side of Lake Superior to its head, and from thence to the source of the Mississippi, down Red River, and even extending to the centre of our newly-acquired territory of Louisiana, in which it will yet probably become a question between the two Governments if our treaties will authorize the British subjects to enter into the Indian trade on the same footing as in the other parts of our frontiers, this not being an integral part of the United States at the time of the said treaty. Our traders to the south, on the lower Mississippi, complain to our government with justice, that the members of the North-West Company encircle them on the frontiers of our north-west territory, and trade with the savages upon superior terms to what they can afford, who pay the duties of their goods imported from Europe, and subscribe to the regulations prescribed by law; these representations have at length attracted the attention of our government to the object in question, and with an intention to do themselves as well as their citizens justice, they the last year took some steps to ascertain the facts, and make provision against the growing evil. With this, some geographical, and also local objects in view, was I despatched, with discretionary orders, with a party of troops to the source of the Mississippi. I have found, Sir, your commerce and establishments extending beyond our most exaggerated ideas, and in addition to the injury done our revenue by the evasion of the duties, other acts which are more particularly injurious to the honour and dignity of our government.

The transactions alluded to are, the presenting medals of his Britannic Majesty, and flags of his government, to the chiefs and warriors resident in the territory of the United States. If political subjects are strictly prohibited to our traders, what would be the ideas of the Executive to see foreigners making chiefs and distributing flags, the standard of a European power? The savages being accustomed to look on that standard which has been the only prevailing one for years, as that which alone has authority in the country, it would not be in the least astonishing to see them revolt from the limited subjection which is claimed over them by the American Government, and thereby be the cause of their receiving chastisement, although necessary, yet unfortunate, as they have been led astray by the policy of the traders of your country. I must likewise observe, Sir, that your establishments, if properly known, would be looked on with an eye of dissatisfaction by our government, for another reason, viz., there being so many furnished posts. In case of a rupture between the two powers, the English Government would not fail to make use of these as places of deposit for arms, ammunition, etc., to be distributed to the savages who joined their arms, to the great annoyance of our territory, and the loss of the lives of many of our citizens. Your flags, Sir, when hoisted in enclosed works, are in direct contradiction to the laws of nations, and their practice in the like cases, which only admits of a foreign flag being expanded on board of vessels, and at the residence of Ambassadors or Consuls.

I am not ignorant of the necessity of your being in such a position as to protect you from the sallies of drunken savages, or the more deliberate plans of the intended plunderer, and under these considerations have I considered your stockades. You, and the Company to which you belong, must be conscious, from the foregoing statement, that strict justice would demand, and I assure you the law directs under similar circumstances, a total confiscation of your property, personal imprisonment, and fines; but having discretionary instructions, and no reason to think the conduct above noticed was dictated through ill-will or disrespect to our Government, and conceiving it in some degree departing from the character of an officer to embrace the first opportunity for executing those laws, I am willing to sacrifice my prospect of private advantage, conscious that the Government looks not to interest but to its dignity in the transaction.

I have therefore to request of you assurances on the following heads, which, setting aside the chicanery of law, as a gentleman you will strictly adhere to, viz.: That you will make representations to your agents at your head-quarters on Lake Superior, of the quantity of goods wanted the ensuing spring for your establishment in the territory of the United States, time sufficient, or as early as possible, for them to enter them at the Custom House at Michillinaekinae, and obtain a clearance and license to trade in due form, and that you will give immediate instruction to all your party in the said territory under your direction, and at no time and under no pretence whatever, to hoist, or suffer to be hoisted, the English flag: if you conceive a flag necessary, you may make use of that of the United States,—it is the only one which can be admitted; that you will on no future occasion present a flag or medal to an Indian, hold Councils with them on political subjects, or others foreign from that of the trade; but on being applied to on those heads, will refer them to the American Agents, informing them that they are the only persons authorized to hold Councils of a political nature with them. There are many other subjects, such as the distribution of liquor, etc., which would be too long to be treated of in detail; but the Company will do well to furnish themselves with our laws, regulating the commerce with the savages, and regulate themselves in our territories accordingly.

I embrace this opportunity to acknowledge myself and command under similar obligations to yourself and agents for the assistance which you have rendered us, and the polite treatment with which I have been honoured. With sentiments of high respect for the establishment and yourself,

I am, Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

To LIEUTENANT PIKE, First Regiment United States Infantry.

LEECH LAKE, 15th February, 1806.

SIR,—Your Address, presented on the 6th instant, has attracted my most serious consideration to the several objects of duties on importations; of presents made to, and our consultations with, the Indians; of enclosing our stores and dwelling houses; and finally, of the custom of hoisting the British flag on the territory belonging to the United States of America. I shall, at as early a period as possible, present the agents of the North-West Company with your representations regarding the payment of the duties on the importation of goods to be sent to our establishments within the boundaries of the territories of the United States, as also their being entered at the Custom House at Michillimackinac; but I beg to be allowed to present for consideration, that the major part of the goods necessary to be sent to the said establishment for the trade of the ensuing winter, are now actually in our stores at Kamanistigua, our headquarters on Lake Superior, and that it would cause us vast expense and trouble to be obliged to convey those goods to Michillimackinac, to be entered at the Custom House office: we therefore pray that the word of a gentleman with regard to the quantity and quality of the said goods to be sent to the said establishment, may be considered as equivalent to the certainty of a Custom House register. Our intention has never been to injure your traders, paying the duties established by law, and hope those representations to your government respecting our concerns with the Indians may have been dictated with truth and not exaggerated by envy, to prejudice our interests, and throw a stain upon our character which may require time to efface from the minds of a people to whom we must ever consider ourselves indebted for the lenity of procedure, of which the present is so notable a testimony. The inclosures to protect our stores and dwelling-houses from the insults and barbarity of savage rudeness, have been erected for the security of property and person, in a country till now exposed to the wild will of the frantie Indians. We never formed the smallest idea that the said inclosures might ever be useful in the event of a rupture between the two powers, nor do we now conceive that such poor shifts will ever be employed by the British Government. In a country overshadowed with wood, so adequate to every purpose, forts might in a short period of time be built far superior to any stockades we may have occasion to erect.

H. McGillis
to Lieut.
Pike, 15th
Feb. 1806.

We were not conscious, Sir, of the error I acknowledge we have been guilty of, by exhibiting to view on your territories any standard of Great Britain. I will pledge myself to your government, that I will use my utmost endeavors, as soon as possible, to prevent the future display of the British flag, or the presenting of medals, or the exhibiting to public view any other mark of European power, throughout the extent of the territory known to belong to the dominion of the United States. The custom has long been established, and we, innocently and inoffensively (as we imagined), have conformed to it till the present day.

Be persuaded that on no consideration shall any Indian be entertained on political subjects, or on any affairs foreign to our trade; and reference shall be made to the American Agents should any application be made worthy such reference. And be assured that we, as a commercial Company, must find it ever our interest to interfere as little as possible with affairs of Government in the course of trade, ignorant as we are, in this rude and distant country, of the political views of nations.

We are convinced that the inestimable advantages arising from the endeavours of your Government to establish a more peaceful course of trade in this part of the territory belonging to the United States, are not acquired through the mere liberality of a nation, and are ready to contribute towards the expense necessarily attending them. We are not averse to pay the common duties established by law, and shall ever be ready to conform ourselves to all rules and regulations of trade that may be established, according to common justice.

I beg leave to be allowed to say that we have reason to hope that every measure will be adopted to secure and facilitate the trade with the Indians, and these hopes seem to be confirmed beyond the smallest idea of doubt, when we see a man sent among us who, instead of private consideration to pecuniary views, prefers the honour, dignity and lenity of his Government, and whose transactions are in every respect so conformable to equity.

When we behold an armed force ready to chastise or protect, as necessity or policy may direct, we know not how to express our gratitude to that people whose only view seems to be to promote the happiness of all—the savages that rove over the wild confines of their domain, not excepted.

H. McGillis
to Lieut.
Pike, 15th
Feb. 1806.

It is to you, Sir, we feel ourselves most greatly indebted, whose claim to honour, esteem and respect will ever be held in high estimation by myself and associates. The dangers and hardships by your fortitude vanquished and by your perseverance overcome, are signal, and will ever be preserved in the annals of the North-West Company. Were it solely from the consideration of those who have exposed their lives in a long and perilous march, through a country where they had every distress to suffer and many dangers to expect (and this with a view to establish peace in a savage country), we should think ourselves under the most strict obligations to assist them; but we know we are in a country where hospitality and gratitude are to be esteemed above every other virtue, and therefore have offered for their relief what our poor means can allow.

And, Sir, permit me to embrace the opportunity to testify that I feel myself highly honoured by your acceptance of such accommodations as my humble roof could afford.

With great consideration and high respect for the Government of the United States, allow me to express my esteem and regard for you.

I am, Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

H. MCGILLIS,

of the North-West Company.

THE THREE CHARTERS TO SIR WILLIAM ALEXANDER.

CHARTER*

IN FAVOUR OF SIR WILLIAM ALEXANDER, KNIGHT, OF THE LORDSHIP AND BARONY OF NEW SCOTLAND IN AMERICA, 10TH SEPTEMBER, 1621.

Translated by the Rev. Carlos Stafler, A.M., of Dedham.†

JAMES, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, and Defender of the Faith, to all good men, clerical and lay, of his entire realm, greeting :

Charter from
King James
I. to Sir
William
Alexander,
10th September, 1621.

10 Know ye, that we have always been eager to embrace every opportunity to promote the honour and wealth of our Kingdom of Scotland, and think that no gain is easier or more safe than what is made by planting new colonies in foreign and uncultivated regions, where the means of living and food abound, especially, if these places were before without inhabitants, or were settled by infidels whose conversion to the Christian faith most highly concerns the glory of God.

But whilst many other kingdoms, and not very long ago, our own England, to their praise, have given their names to new lands, which they have acquired and subdued ; we, thinking how populous and crowded this land now is by Divine favour, and how expedient it is that it should be carefully exercised in some honourable and useful discipline, lest it deteriorate through sloth and inaction, have judged it important that many should be led forth into new territory, which they may fill with colonies, 20 and so we think this undertaking most fit for this kingdom, both on account of the promptness and activity of its spirit, and the strength and endurance of its men against any difficulties, if any other men anywhere dare to set themselves in opposition, and as it demands the transportation only of men and women, stock and grain, and not of money, and can not repay, at this time when business is so depressed, a troublesome expenditure of the treasures of this realm ; for these reasons, as well as on account of the good, faithful, and acceptable service of our beloved counsellor, Sir William Alexander, Knight, to us rendered and to be rendered, who, first of our subjects at his own expense, attempted to plant this foreign colony, and selected for plantation the divers lands bounded by the limits hereafter designated.

We, therefore, from our sovereign anxiety to propagate the Christian faith, and to secure the wealth 30 prosperity and peace of the native subjects of our said Kingdom of Scotland, as other foreign princes in such cases already have done, with the advice and consent of our well-beloved cousin and counsellor, John, Earl of Mar, Lord Erskine and Garchoch, etc., our High Treasurer, Comptroller, Collector and Treasurer of our new revenues of this our Kingdom of Scotland, and of the other Lords, Commissioners of our same Kingdom, have given, granted and conveyed, and, by the tenor of our present charter, do give, grant and convey to the aforesaid Sir William Alexander, his heirs or assigns, hereditarily, all and single, the lands of the continent, and islands situated and lying in America, within the head of promontory, commonly called Cape of Sable, lying near the forty-third degree of north latitude, or thereabouts ; from this cape stretching along the shores of the sea, westward to the roadstead of St. Mary, commonly called St. Mary's Bay, and thence northward by a straight line, crossing the entrance or mouth of that great roadstead which runs towards the eastern part of the land between the countries of the Suriqui and Etechemini, commonly called Suriquois and Etechemines, to the river generally known by the name of St. Croix, and to the remotest springs, or source, from the western side of the Seine, which empty into the first mentioned river; thence by an imaginary straight line which is conceived to extend through the land, or run northward to the nearest bay, river or stream emptying into the great river of Canada; and going from that eastward along the low shores of the same river of Canada, to the river, harbour, port or shore commonly known and called by the name of Gathepe or Gaspie, and thence south south-east to the isles called Bacalaos, or Cape Breton, leaving the said isles on the right and the mouth of the said great river of Canada, or large bay, and the territory of Newfoundland with the islands belonging to the same lands, on the left; thence to the headland or point of Cape Breton aforesaid, lying near latitude 45°, or thereabouts; and from the said point of Cape Breton toward the south and west to the above-mentioned Cape Sable, where the boundary began; including and containing within the said coasts and their circumference, from sea to sea, all lands of the continent with the rivers, falls, bays, shores, islands, or seas, lying near or within six leagues on any side of the same, on the west, north, or east sides of the same coasts and bounds; and on the south south-east (where Cape Breton lies) and on the south side of the same (where Cape Sable is) all seas and islands southward within forty leagues of said sea-shore, thereby including the large island commonly called Isle de Sable, or Sablon, lying towards Carban, in common speech, south south-east, about thirty leagues from the said Cape Breton seaward, and being in latitude 44°, or thereabouts.

The above-described lands shall in all future time bear the name of New Scotland in America, and also the aforesaid Sir William shall divide it into parts or portions as seemeth best to him, and shall give names to the same at his pleasure.

With all mines, both the royal ones of gold and silver, and others of iron, lead, copper, tin, brass, and other minerals, with the power of mining, and causing to dig them from the earth, and of purifying and refining the same, and converting to his own use, or that of others, as shall seem best to the said Sir William, his heirs or assigns, or to whomsoever it shall have pleased him to establish in said lands, reserving only to us and our successors, a tenth part of the metal vulgarly known as ore of gold and silver, which shall be hereafter dug or obtained from the land: leaving the said Sir William and his aforesaid whatever of other metals of copper, steel, iron, tin, lead, or other minerals, we or our successors may be able in any way to obtain from the earth, in order that thereby they may the more easily bear the large expense of reducing the aforesaid metals: together with margarite, termed pearl, and any other precious stones, quarries, forests, thickets, mosses, marshes, lakes, waters, fisheries in both salt and fresh water, and of both royal and other fish, hunting, hawking, and anything that may be sold or inherited: with full power, privilege, and jurisdiction of free royalty, chapelry, and chancery, for ever: with the gift and right of patronage of churches, chapels, and benefices: with tenants, tenancies, and the services of those holding the same freely: together with the offices of justiciary and admiralty within all the bounds respectively mentioned above: also with power of setting up states, free towns, free ports, villages, and barony towns, and of establishing markets and fairs within the bounds of said lands: of holding courts of justice and admiralty within the limits of such lands, rivers, ports, and seas: also with the power of improving, levying and receiving all tolls, customs, anchor dues, and other revenues of the said towns, marts, fairs, and free ports: and of owning and using the same as freely in all respects as any greater or lesser Baron in our Kingdom of Scotland has enjoyed in any past, or could enjoy in any future time: with all other prerogatives, privileges, immunities, dignities, perquisites, profits, and dues concerning and belonging to said lands, seas, and the boundaries thereof, which we ourselves can give and grant, as freely and in as ample form as we or any of our noble ancestors granted any charters, letters patent, enfeoffments, gifts, or commissions to any subjects of whatever rank or character, or to any society or company leading out such colonies into any foreign parts, or searching out foreign lands, and in as free and ample form as if the same were included in this present charter: also, we make, constitute, and ordain the said Sir William Alexander, his heirs and assigns, or their deputies, our hereditary Lieutenants-General, for representing our royal person, both by sea and by land, in the regions of the sea, and on the coast, and in the bounds aforesaid, both in seeking said lands and remaining there and returning from the same; to govern, rule, punish, and acquit all our subjects who may chance to visit or inhabit the same, or who shall do business with the same, or shall tarry in the said places; also, to pardon the same; and to establish such laws, statutes, constitutions, orders, instructions, forms of governing, and ceremonies of magistrates in said bounds, as shall seem fit to Sir William Alexander himself, or his aforesaid, for the government of the said region, or of the inhabitants of the same, in all causes, both criminal and civil; also, of changing and altering the said laws, rules, forms and ceremonies, as often as he or his aforesaid shall please for the good and convenience of said region; so that said laws may be as consistent as possible with those of our realm of Scotland. We also will that, in case of rebellion or sedition, he may use martial law against delinquents, or such as withdraw themselves from his power, as freely as any lieutenant whatever of our realm or dominion, by virtue of the office of lieutenant, has, or can have, the power to use, by excluding all other officers of this our Scottish realm, on land or sea, who hereafter can pretend to any claim, property, authority, or interest in and to said lands or province aforesaid, or any jurisdiction therein by virtue of any prior disposal or patents; and that a motive may be offered to noblemen for joining this expedition and planting a colony in said lands, we, for ourselves and our heirs and successors, with the advice and consent aforesaid, by virtue of our present charter, do give and grant free and full power to the aforesaid Sir William Alexander and his aforesaid, to confer favors, privileges, gifts, and honors on those who deserve them, with full power to the same, or any one of them, who may have made bargains or contracts with Sir William, or his deputies, for the said lands, under his signature, or that of his deputies, and under the seal hereinafter described, to dispose of and convey any part or parcel of said lands, ports, harbors, rivers, or of any part of the premises; also, of erecting machines of all sorts, introducing arts or sciences, or practising the same, in whole or in part, as he shall judge to be for their advantage; also, to give, grant, and bestow such offices, titles, rights, and powers, make and appoint such captains, officers, bailiffs, governors, clerks, and all other officers, clerks, and ministers of royalty, barony, and town, for the execution of justice within the bounds of said lands, or on the way to these lands by sea, and returning from the same, as shall seem necessary to him, according to the qualities, conditions and deserts of the persons who may happen to dwell in any of the colonies of said province, or in any part of the same, or who may risk their goods and fortunes for the advantage and increase of the same; also, of removing the same persons from office, transferring or changing them, as far as it shall seem expedient to him and his aforesaid.

And, since attempts of this kind are not made without great labour and expense, and demand a large outlay of money, so that they exceed the means of any private man, and on this account the said Sir William Alexander and his aforesaid may need supplies of many kinds, with many of our subjects and other men for special enterprises and ventures therein, who may form contracts with him, his heirs, assigns or deputies, for lands, fisheries, trade, or the transportation of people and their stocks, goods and effects to the said New Scotland, we will that whoever shall make such contracts with the said Sir William and his aforesaid under their names and seals, by limiting, assigning and fixing the day and place for the delivery of persons, goods and effects on shipboard under forfeiture of a certain sum of money, and shall not perform the same contracts, but shall thwart and injure him in the proposed voyage, which thing will not only oppose and harm the said Sir William and his aforesaid, but also prejudice and damage our so laudable intention; then it shall be lawful to the said Sir William and his aforesaid, or their deputies and conservators hereinafter mentioned, in such case to seize for himself, or his deputies whom he may appoint for this purpose, all such sums of money, goods and effects forfeited by the violation of these contracts. And that this may be more easily done, and the delay of the law be avoided, we have given and granted, and by the tenor of these presents do give and grant full power to the Lords of our Council that they may reduce to order and punish the violators of such contracts and agreements made for the transportation of persons. And although all such contracts between the said Sir William and his aforesaid and the aforesaid adventurers shall be carried out in the risk and the conveyance of people with their goods and effects at the set time; and they with all their cattle and goods arrive at the shore of that province with the intention of colonizing and abiding there; and yet, afterwards, shall leave the Province of New Scotland altogether, and the confines of the same, without the consent of the said Sir William and his aforesaid, or their deputies, or the society and colony

And that all our beloved subjects, as well of our kingdoms and dominions, so also others of foreign birth who may sail to the said lands, or any part of the same, for obtaining merchandise, may the better know and obey the power and authority given by us to the aforesaid Sir William Alexander, our faithful counsellor and his deputies, in all such commissions, warrants and contracts as he shall at any time make, grant, and establish for the more fit and safe arrangement of offices, to govern said colony, 10 grant lands, and execute justice in respect to the said inhabitants, adventurers, deputies, factors, or assigns, in any part of said lands, or in sailing to the same, we, with the advice and consent aforesaid, do order that the said Sir William Alexander and his aforesaid shall have one common seal, pertaining to the office of lieutenant of judiciary and admiralty, which by the said Sir William Alexander and his aforesaid or their deputies, in all time to come, shall be safely kept: on one side of it our arms shall be engraved, with these words on the circle and margin thereof: "Sigillum Regis Scotie Anglie Francie et Hibernie;" and on the other side our image, or that of our successors, with these words: "Pro Nova Scotie Locum Teneite;" and a true copy of it shall be kept in the hands and care of the conservator of the privileges of New Scotland, and this he may use in his office as occasion shall require. And as it is very important that all our beloved subjects who inhabit the said Province of New Scotland or its 20 borders may live in the fear of Almighty God, and at the same time in His true worship, and may have an earnest purpose to establish the Christian religion therein, and also to cultivate peace and quiet with the native inhabitants and savage aborigines of these lands, so that they, and any others trading there, may safely, pleasantly, and quietly hold what they have got with great labor and peril, we, for ourselves and our successors, do will and decree, and by our present charter give and grant to the said Sir William Alexander and his aforesaid and their deputies or any other of our Government officers and ministers whom they shall appoint, free and absolute power of arranging and securing peace, alliance, friendship, mutual conferences, assistance, and intercourse with those savage aborigines and their chiefs, and any others bearing rule and power among them; and of preserving and fostering such relations and treaties as they or their aforesaid shall form with them; provided those treaties are, on the other side, 30 kept faithfully by these barbarians; and, unless this be done, of taking up arms against them, whereby they may be reduced to order, as shall seem fitting to the said Sir William and his aforesaid and deputies, for the honor, obedience, and service of God, and the stability, defence, and preservation of our authority among them; with power also to the said Sir William Alexander and his aforesaid, by themselves, or their deputies, substitutes, or assigns, for their defence and protection at all times and on all just occasions hereafter, of attacking suddenly, invading, expelling, and by arms driving away, as well by sea as by land, and by all means, all and singly, those who, without the special license of the said Sir William and his aforesaid, shall attempt to occupy these lands, or trade in the said Province of New Scotland, or in any part of the same, and in like manner all other persons who presume to bring any damage, loss, destruction, injury, or invasion against that province, or the inhabitants of the same: 40 And that this may be more easily done, it shall be allowed to the said Sir William and his aforesaid, deputies, factors, and assigns, to levy contributions on the adventurers and inhabitants of the same; to bring them together by proclamations, or by any other order, at such times as shall seem best to the said Sir William and his aforesaid; to assemble all our subjects living within the limits of the said New Scotland and trading there, for the better supply of the army with necessaries, and enlargement and increase of the people and planting of said lands; with full power, privilege, and liberty to the said Sir William Alexander and his aforesaid by themselves or their agents, of sailing over any seas whatever under our ensign and banners, with as many ships, of as great burden, and as well furnished with ammunition, men, and provisions as they are able to procure at any time, and as often as shall seem expedient; and of carrying all persons of every quality and grade who are our subjects, or who wish to 50 submit themselves to our sway, for entering upon such a voyage with their cattle, horses, oxen, sheep, goods of all kinds, furniture, machines, heavy arms, military instruments as many as they desire, and other commodities and necessaries for the use of the same colony, for mutual commerce with the natives of these provinces, or others who may trade with these plantations; and of transporting all commodities and merchandise, which shall seem to them needful, into our kingdom of Scotland without the payment of any tax, custom, and impost, for the same to us, or our custom-house officers, or their deputies; and of carrying away the same from their offices on this side, during the space of seven years following the day of the date of our present charter; and to have this sole privilege for the space of three years next hereafter we freely have granted, and by the tenor of our present charter grant and give to the said Sir William and his aforesaid, according to the terms hereinafter mentioned.

Miscellaneous

And after these three years are ended, it shall be lawful, to us and our successors, to levy and exact from all goods and merchandise which shall be exported from this our kingdom of Scotland to the said Province of New Scotland, or imported from this province to our said kingdom of Scotland, in any ports of this our kingdom, by the said Sir William and his aforesaid, five per cent. only, according to the old mode of reckoning, without any other impost, tax, custom, or duty from them hereafter, which sum of five pounds per hundred being thus paid by the said Sir William and his aforesaid, to our officers and others appointed for this business, the said Sir William and his aforesaid may carry away the said goods from this our realm of Scotland into any other foreign ports and climes, without the payment of any other custom, tax, or duty to us or our heirs or successors or any other persons; provided also that said goods, within the space of thirteen months after their arrival in any part of this our kingdom, may be again placed on board a ship. We also give and grant absolute and full power to the said Sir William and his aforesaid, of taking, levying, and receiving to his own proper use and that of his aforesaid, from all our subjects who shall desire to conduct colonies, follow trades, or sail to the said lands of New Scotland, and from the same, for goods and merchandise, five per cent. besides the sum due to us; whether on account of the exportation from this our kingdom of Scotland to the said Province of New Scotland, or of the importation from the said province to this our kingdom of Scotland aforesaid, and, in like manner, from all goods and merchandise which shall be exported by our subjects, leaders of colonies, merchants, and navigators, from the said Province of New Scotland, to any of our dominions or any other places; or shall be imported from our realms and elsewhere to the said New Scotland, five per cent. beyond and above the sum before appointed to us; and from the goods and merchandise of all foreigners and others not under our sway which shall be either exported from the said Province of New Scotland, or shall be imported into the same, beyond and above the said sum assigned to us, ten per cent. may be levied, taken, and received, for the proper use of the said Sir William and his aforesaid, by such servants, officers, or deputies, or their agents, as they shall appoint and authorize for this business. And for the better security and profit of the said Sir William and his aforesaid, and of all our other subjects desiring to settle in New Scotland aforesaid, or to trade there, and of all others in general who shall not refuse to submit themselves to our authority and power, we have decreed and willed that the said Sir William may construct, or cause to be built, one or more forts, fortresses, castles, strongholds, watch-towers, block-houses, and other buildings, with ports and naval stations, and also ships of war; and the same shall be applied for defending the said places, as shall, to the said Sir William and his aforesaid, seem necessary to accomplish the aforesaid undertaking; and they may establish, for their defence there, garrisons of soldiers, in addition to the things above mentioned; and, generally, may do all things for the acquisition, increase, and introduction of people, and to preserve and govern the said New Scotland and the coasts and land thereof, in all its limits, features and relations, under our name and authority, as we might do if present in person; although the case may require a more particular and strict order than is prescribed in this our present charter; and to this command we wish, direct, and most strictly enjoin all our justices, officers and subjects frequenting these places to conform themselves, and to yield to and obey the said Sir William and his aforesaid in all and each of the above-mentioned matters, both principal and related; and be equally obedient to them in their execution as they ought to be to us whose person he represents, under the pains of disobedience and rebellion. Moreover, we declare, by the tenor of our present charter, to all Christian Kings, princes, and states, that if, hereafter any one, or any from the said colonies, in the Province of New Scotland aforesaid, or any other persons under their license and command, exercising piracy at any future time, by land or by sea, shall carry away the goods of any person, or in a hostile manner do any injustice or wrong to any of our subjects, or those of our heirs or successors, or of other kings, princes, governors, or states in alliance with us, then, upon such injury offered, or just complaint thereupon, by any king, prince, governor, state, or their subjects, we, our heirs and successors, will see that public Proclamations are made in any part of our said Kingdom of Scotland, just and suitable for this purpose, that the said pirate or pirates, who shall commit such violence, at a stated time, to be determined by the aforesaid proclamation, shall fully restore our goods so carried away; and for the said injuries shall make full satisfaction, so that the said princes and others thus complaining shall deem themselves satisfied. And, if the authors of such crimes shall neither make worthy satisfaction, nor be careful that it be made within the limited time, then he, or those who have committed such plunder, neither are, nor hereafter shall be under our government and protection; but it shall be permitted and lawful to all princes, and others whatsoever, to proceed against such offenders, or any of them, and with all hostility to invade them.

And though it is appointed that no nobleman and gentleman may depart from this country without our consent, yet we will that this our present charter be a sufficient permission and assurance to all engaging in the said voyage, save those who may be accused of treason, or retained by any special order; and, according to our present charter, we declare and decree that no person may leave this country and go to the said region of New Scotland unless they have previously taken the oath of allegiance to us; for which purpose, we, by our present charter, give and grant the said Sir William and his aforesaid, or their conservators and deputies, full power and authority to exact the said oath from and administer it to all persons proceeding into the said lands in that colony. Moreover, we for ourselves and our successors, with the advice and consent aforesaid, declare, decree, and ordain that all our subjects, going to the said New Scotland, or living in it, and all their children and posterity born there, and all adventuring there, shall have and enjoy all the liberties, rights and privileges of free and native subjects of our Kingdom of Scotland, or of our other dominions, as if they had been born there.

Charter from
King James
I. to Sir
William
Alexander,
10th September,
1621.

Also we, for ourselves and our successors, give and grant to the said Sir William and his aforesaid, the free power of regulating and coining money for the freer commerce of those inhabiting the said Province, of any metal, in what manner and of what form they shall choose and direct for the same.

And if any questions or doubts shall arise on the meaning and construction of any clause in our present charter, all these shall be taken and explained in their amplest form, and in favor of the said Sir William and his aforesaid. Besides, we, of our certain knowledge, proper motive, legal authority, and kingly power have made, united, annexed, erected, created, and incorporated, and, by the tenor of our present charter, do make, unite, annex, erect, create and incorporate, the whole and undivided, the said province and lands of New Scotland, with all the seas and limits of the same, and minerals of gold and silver, lead, copper, steel, tin, brass, iron, and any other mines, pearls, precious stones, quarries, forests, thickets, mosses, marshes, lakes, waters, fisheries, as well in fresh water as in salt, as well of royal fishes as of others, cities, free ports, free villages, towns, baronial villages, seaports, roadsteads, machines, mills, offices and jurisdictions, and all other things generally and particularly mentioned above, in one entire and free lordship and barony which shall be called in all future time by the aforesaid name of New Scotland.

And we will grant, and for ourselves and our successors decree and order, that one seisin now made by the said Sir William and his aforesaid, upon any part of the soil of the said land and upon the province before described, shall in all future time be effective; and shall be a sufficient seisin for the whole region, with all the parts, appendages, privileges, accidents, liberties, and immunities of the same mentioned above, without any other special and definite seisin to be taken by himself or his aforesaid on any other part or place of the same. And concerning this seisin and all things which have followed it, or can follow it, we, with the advice and consent above mentioned, for ourselves and our successors, have dispensed, and by the tenor of our present charter, in the manner hereafter mentioned, do dispense forever: To hold and to possess, the whole and undivided, the said region and lordship of New Scotland, with all the bounds of the same within the seas above mentioned, all minerals of gold and silver, copper, steel, tin, lead, brass and iron, and any other mines, pearls, precious stones, quarries, woods, thickets, mosses, marshes, lakes, waters, fisheries, as well in fresh water as salt, as well of royal fishes, as of others, states, free towns, free ports, towns, baronial villages, seaports, roadsteads, machines, mills, offices and jurisdictions, and all other things generally and specially mentioned above; with all other privileges, liberties, immunities and accidents, and other things above mentioned, to the aforesaid Sir William Alexander, his heirs and assigns, from us and our successors, in free covenant, inheritance, lordship, barony and royalty, for ever, through all their just bounds and limits, as they lie in length and breadth, in houses, buildings erected and to be erected, bogs, plains and moors, marshes, roads, paths, waters, swamps, rivers, meadows and pastures; mines, malt houses and their refuse, hawkings, huntings, fisheries, peat-mosses, turf-bogs, coal, coal-pits, coney, warrens, doves, dove-cotes, workshops, 10 maltkilns, breweries and broom; woods, groves and thickets; wood, timber, quarries of stone and lime; with courts, fines, pleas, heriots, outlaws, rabbles of women, with free entrance and exit, and with fork, foss, sok, sac, theme, infangtheiff, outfangtheiff, wrak, wair, veth, vert, venneson, pit and gallows; and with all other and singly, the liberties, commodities, profits, easements, and their rightful pertinents of all kinds, whether mentioned or not, above or below ground, far and near, belonging, or that can belong to the aforesaid region and lordship, in any manner, for the future, freely, quietly, fully, wholly, honourably, well, and in peace, without any revocation, contradiction, impediment, or obstacle whatever.

Annually, at the festival of Christ's nativity, on the soil of the said lands and of the province of New Scotland, the said Sir William Alexander and his aforesaid shall pay to us and our heirs and successors, under the name of quit-rent, one penny of Scottish money, if so much be demanded.

20 And because the tenure of the said lands, and of the Province of New Scotland, and the quit-rent above-mentioned, may fail through want of the timely and lawful entry of any heir or heirs of the said Sir William succeeding him, a thing which they may not easily accomplish on account of the great distance from our Kingdom; and these same lands and Province on account of the non-entrance, may come into our hands and those of our successors until the lawful entrance of the legitimate heir; and we being unwilling that the same lands and region at any time should fall into non-entry, or that the said Sir William and his aforesaid should be thus deprived of the benefits and profits of the same, therefore we, with the advice aforesaid, have dispensed with the said non-entry whenever it shall occur, and, by the tenor of this our charter, we, for ourselves and our successors, do dispense; and also we have renounced and exonerated, and by the tenor of our present charter, with the consent aforesaid, we 30 do renounce and exonerate the said Sir William and his aforesaid in respect to the above-mentioned non-entrance of the said Province and region whenever it shall come into our hands, or, by reason of non-entry, may fall, with all things that can follow therefrom; provided, however, that the said Sir William, his heirs and assigns, within the space of seven years after the decease and death of their predecessors, or entry to the possession of said lands, and of other things aforesaid, by themselves or their lawful agents holding powers for this purpose, do homage to us and our successors, and come to, and receive through us, the said lands, lordship, barony, and other things aforesaid, according to the laws and statutes of our said Kingdom of Scotland. Finally, we, for ourselves and our successors, do will, decree, and ordain that this our present charter and enfeoffment above written of the lands aforesaid, lordship, and region of New Scotland, and the privileges and liberties of the same, shall be ratified 40 approved, and established in our next Parliament of our said Kingdom of Scotland whenever it shall meet, so that it shall have therein the force and efficacy of a decree; and for this we, for ourselves and our successors, declare that this our charter shall be a sufficient warrant; and, as a Prince, we promise that the same shall be ratified and approved, and also we promise to alter, renew, increase, and extend the same into the most ample form, as often as it shall seem necessary and expedient to the said Sir William and his aforesaid.

Moreover it has seemed best to us, and we order and enjoin our beloved . . . our sheriffs especially appointed on our part, on seeing this our charter under our great seal, so to give and grant to the aforesaid Sir William and his aforesaid, or their attorney or attorneys, possession and seisin, actual and real, of the lands, lordship, barony, and other things mentioned above, with all privileges, immunities, liberties, and other things above expressed; and this seisin we, by the tenor of our present charter, declare to be as lawful and regular as if he had a precept, under proof of our Great Seal, and in the most ample form, with all clauses requisite for the aforesaid purpose; which we, for ourselves and successors, do 50

The following note is there appended: “This translation of the Novodamus Charter is taken from the Appendix to a narrative of Law Proceedings privately printed at Edinburgh in 1836. ‘New Scotland’ has been introduced wherever Nova Scotia occurs, to prevent any confusion with the present province of that name, the boundaries of the two being widely different.”

Moreover, we, with advice before written, for the good, faithful, and willing service performed and rendered to us by the said Sir William Alexander, and respect being had to the great and manifold expenses and charges bestowed and expended in the plantation of the said bounds of the lordship and country of New Scotland, and reduction of them, under our obedience, and for other weighty and onerous causes, have of new given, granted, and disposed, and by our present charter, give, grant, and dispose to the before-mentioned Sir William Alexander, and his heirs and assignees, heritably, all and sundry the foresaid lands, lordship, and country of New Scotland, together with all and sundry castles, towns, fortalices, manor places, houses, buildings, built and to be built, gardens, orchards, planted and to be planted, tofts, crofts, meadows, grazings, woods, shrubs, mills, multures, mill lands, fishings, as well of red as of other fishes, salmon, large fish as small, in salt water as in fresh, together with all and sundry kind sheaves thereof included, as well great as small, with the presentation, gift of benefices, churches, and chapels, and rights of patronage thereof, annexes, connexes, dependencies, tenants, tenandries, and services of free tenants of the same; together with all and sundry precious stones, jewels, crystal, alum, coral, and others, with all and sundry minerals, veins, and quarries thereof, as well of regal and royal metals and minerals of gold and silver within the said bounds and lordship of New Scotland, as of other minerals of iron, steel, tin, copper, brass, mountain brass, and other minerals whatsoever, with all and sundry parts, pendicles, pertinents, privileges, liberties, and immunities of all and sundry the aforesaid lands, lordship, and country of New Scotland, with full power and privilege to the said Sir William Alexander, his heirs and assignees, of trying and searching, digging and examining the ground for the same, and extracting, cleansing, refining and purifying them, and using, converting, and applying them to their own proper uses, (the tenth part of the royal metals, commonly called the ore of gold and silver, hereafter to be found and extracted out of the said lands and country, only, being reserved to us and our successors), and the remainder of the said metals, minerals, precious stones, jewels, and others whatsoever, to belong to the said Sir William Alexander, and his heirs and assignees, to remain forever with them, and be, with all profits and duties thereof, converted to their own proper uses; with power to the same Sir William Alexander, and his heirs and assignees, of building, constructing, and erecting upon and within all the bounds of the said country, as shall seem to them expedient, cities, free boroughs of barony, towns, villages, harbours, ports, naval stations; and on appointing fairs and markets, as well within the town as without, and imposing, levying, and receiving all and whatsoever tolls, customs, anchorages, and other dues of the said cities, boroughs of barony, towns, villages, fairs, markets, free ports, harbors, naval stations, with all and sundry casualties, profits, and duties whatsoever; and furnishing the said cities and boroughs, as well within borough as without, with sufficient and able magistrates, justices of the peace, provosts, bailies, aldermen, constables, and other officers, citizens, free burgesses, and manufacturers, crafts of all kinds, with their deacons, and others, thereto requisites, with full power, privilege, and liberty to them, or their children, citizens, and burgesses, to sell wine and wax, salmon, herrings, and other staple goods and merchandises, as well great as small, and constructing churches, chapels, hospitals, maison dieux, market crosses, belfrys, bells, and all other ordinary ornaments thereto belonging, and planting the said churches, and sufficiently providing them with sufficient teachers, preachers, pastors, and ministers: And in like manner of erecting, founding, and constructing common schools, colleges, and universities, sufficiently provided with able and sufficient masters, rectors, regents, professors of all sciences, letters, languages, and instruction; and of providing for sufficient maintenance, salaries, and living for them to this effect: As also of erecting prelates, archbishops, bishops, rectors, and vicars of parishes, and parish churches, and distributing and dividing all the aforesaid bounds of the said country into divers and distinct shires, provinces, and parishes, for the better provision of the churches and ministry, division of the shires, and all other civil police.

Charter to Sir

Alexander,

And, likewise, of gathering, collecting, and appointing meetings and assemblies of ecclesiastical persons and prelates, as well general, special, or provincial meetings as others, for ecclesiastical police and discipline, and authorizing, ratifying and confirming the said meetings, councils, and assemblies, with acts, statutes, and decrees thereon concluded, for the better authority of the same; Further, we have made, constituted, and appointed, and by our present charter, make, constitute, and appoint the said Sir William Alexander, and his heirs and assignees, our and our heirs' and successors' Lieutenants-General to represent our royal person, as well by sea as by land, of all and whole, the said country and lordship of New Scotland, as well during the space in which he shall remain there, as on his or their voyage to the said country, or from it, and forever, after their return, without interval of time or place excluding all others from the usurpation thereof, or from a claim to any right, benefit, authority, and interest within the said bounds and lordship of New Scotland, or to any judicature or jurisdiction heretofore in virtue of any foregoi... or subsequent right or title whatsoever; And with special power to the said Sir William Alexander, and his foresaids, of governing, ruling, punishing, and pardoning all our subjects, and other inhabitants of the said bounds and country of New Scotland, or persons going thither, violators of the peace, or of the laws, and of making, sanctioning, and establishing laws there, as well civil as criminal, with laws of justiciary, admiralty, stewardship, regality, and sheriffship, at 20 their good pleasure, provided the said laws be as conformable as possible to the laws of Scotland, respect being had to circumstances, place, country, persons, and their qualities; And, likewise, of appointing rulers, commanders, and heads of all and sundry the foresaid cities, boroughs, ports, naval stations, and harbors, and also eaptains of castles, fortalices, and fortresses, as well by sea and near the shore as by land, well and sufficiently provided, appointed, and fortified with troops of soldiers and forces, for the maintenance, defence, and preservation thereof, and the repelling of all domestic as well as foreign invasions of the same; and of gathering, assembling, and making all the inhabitants of the said country meet together, for the purpose before written, on all necessary occasions, and for the repelling and resisting of all other foree and violences whatsoever; And with power to the said Sir William Alexander, and his foresaids, for the better fortifying of the said lordship and country of New Scotland, of trans- 30 porting from the said Kingdom, and other bounds convenient, all sorts of munitions, great and small greater ordnance, cannons, demi-cannons of east-iron, swords, guns of brass and iron, and other instruments and engines of war, with small guns, commonly called muskets, hagbuts, half hagggs, pistols, powder, balls, and other necessary provision and arms, as well offensive and defensive, and wearing and using such arms, as well within the said country of New Scotland, as in their passage and progress to the said land, or from them, with their companions, associates, and dependants.

Also we, with advice foresaid, have made, constituted, and appointed the said Sir William Alexander and his heirs and assignees heritably, our Justices General, in all criminal causes, with the said country and lordship of New Scotland, High Admiral, and Lord of Regality and Admiralty, within the said country, hereditary High Steward, also, thereof, and of all and sundry such regalities, with power 40 to him and his heirs and assignees, of using, exercising, and enjoying all and sundry the foresaid jurisdiction, judicatures, and offices, with all and sundry privileges, prerogatives, immunities, and casualties thereof, in like manner, and as freely as any other Justice, or Justices General, High Stewards, Admirals, Sheriffs, or Lords of Regalities, had, or can have, or possess, and enjoy the said jurisdiction, judicatures, offices, dignities, and prerogatives, in any of our kingdoms, bounds, and dominions whatsoever; with power to the said Sir William Alexander, and his heirs and assignees, of constituting, erecting, nominating, and creating clerks, officers, macers, apprizers, and all other members of court of all and sundry the foresaid judicatures and jurisdictions respectively, with all fees, dues, and emoluments thereto belonging, as shall seem to them expedient; without prejudice always to all other infetments rights, or dispositions, by us, or our predecessors, to whatsoever person or persons, who are or shall be 50 portioners of the said plantation of New Scotland, proceeding upon the resignation of the said

Sir William Alexander only, and not otherwise, of whatsoever parts or portions of the said country and lordship of New Scotland, with the privileges and immunities mentioned in their infestments.

And seeing by reason of the great remoteness and distance of the said country and lordship of New Scotland, from our said ancient Kingdom of Scotland, both that the said country can neither easily nor conveniently be reached except in the summer time; and that the said country is altogether destitute of public scriveners and notaries, requisite for taking seisins, so that seisin, at all times, cannot conveniently be taken on the ground of the said country; and also, respect being had to the great and manifold disadvantages which may result, by default, of timely seisin being taken upon this present patent, and upon other charters, and similar infeoffments granted, and to be granted, of the aforesaid lands and lordship of New Scotland, or any part thereof; Therefore that this, our present charter, may be more effectual, and that seisin thereupon may be more conveniently taken, it is necessary that seisin of all and sundry the aforesaid lands of the said country and lordship of New Scotland be taken within our said Kingdom of Scotland, and on the grounds and lands of the same, in the most eminent place thereof, which can neither conveniently nor lawfully be done without an express union of the said country and lordship of New Scotland to the said Kingdom of Scotland; Wherefore, and for the advantage and readier convenience of the aforesaid seisin, we, with advice aforesaid, have annexed, united, and incorporated, and by our present charter, unite, annex, and incorporate, with our said Kingdom of Scotland all and sundry the aforesaid country and lordship of New Scotland, with the teinds and teind sheaves thereof included, and all and sundry parts, pertinents, privileges, jurisdictions, and liberties of the same, and others generally and specially above mentioned; and by our present charter, will, declare, decree, and ordain that one seisin, now to be taken at our Castle of Edinburgh, as the most eminent and principal place of our said Kingdom of Scotland, of all and sundry the said lands, country, and lordship of New Scotland, or any part of the same, with teinds and teind sheaves thereof included, respectively, is, and shall be sufficient seisin for all and whole the aforesaid lands, country, and lordship of New Scotland, with the teinds and teind sheaves thereof included, or any part of the said lands and country aforesaid, and all the privileges, jurisdiction, and liberties thereof respectively, and others specially and generally above mentioned, notwithstanding the said lands, country, and lordship of New Scotland are far distant, and lie discontinuous from our said Kingdom of Scotland; as to which, we, with advice and consent aforesaid, have dispensed, and by our present charter for ever dispense; without prejudice and derogation always to the said privilege and prerogative granted to the aforesaid Sir William Alexander and his heirs and assignees, of making and establishing laws, acts, and statutes, concerning all and sundry the aforesaid lands, country and lordship of New Scotland, as well by sea as by land: And by our present charter we declare that notwithstanding the said union (which is declared to be granted solely to the advantage and convenience of seisin) the said country and lordship of New Scotland shall be judged, ruled, and governed by the laws and statutes made, and to be made, constituted, and established by the said Sir William Alexander, and his heirs and assignees, relating to the said country and lordship of New Scotland, in like manner, and as freely, in that respect, as if the said union had never been made or hitherto granted: And further, notwithstanding the foresaid union, it shall be lawful to the foresaid Sir William Alexander, and his heirs and assignees, to give, grant and dispone any parts or portions of the said lands, country and lordship of New Scotland, heritably belonging to them, to and in favour of whatsoever persons, their heirs and assignees, heritably, with the teinds and teind sheaves thereof included (provided they are our subjects), to be holden of the said Sir William Alexander, or of us and our successors, either in blench farm, few farm, or in ward and relief, at their pleasure; and to entitle and denominate the said parts and portions by whatsoever styles, titles and designations shall seem to them fit, or be in the will and option of the said Sir William, and his foresaids, which infestments and dispositions shall be approved and confirmed by us or our successors freely, without any composition to be paid therefor: Moreover, we, and our successors shall receive whatsoever resignations shall be made by the said Sir William, and his heirs and assignees, of all and whole the aforesaid lands and lordship of New Scotland, or of any part thereof in our hands, and (those) of our successors and Commissioners aforesaid, with the teinds and teind sheaves thereof included, and others generally and specially above mentioned, to and in favour of whatsoever person or persons (provided they are our subjects, and live under our obedi-

CHARTER *

20 IN FAVOUR OF SIR WILLIAM ALEXANDER, KNIGHT, OF THE COUNTRY AND LORDSHIP OF CANADA IN AMERICA, 2ND FEBRUARY, 1628-9.

†NOTE.—This translation is taken from the Appendix to a narrative of Law Proceedings privately printed at Edinburgh in 1836. No revision has been made except that "New Scotland" is introduced instead of "Nova Scotia" wherever the Latin form occurs.

CHARLES, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, and Defender of the Faith, to all good men of his whole land, clergy and laity, Greeting: Know ye, that we, being perfectly mindful by what engagement our faithful and well-beloved Councillor, Sir William Alexander, of Menstrie, Knight, our Principal Secretary for our kingdom of Scotland, and Hereditary Lieutenant 30 of our country and dominion of New Scotland, in America, has sustained great charges and expenses in his various undertakings in the providing of ships, engines of war, ordnance and munitions, in the conducting of colonies; as also, in exploring, settling and taking possession of the said country; and whereby he and our other subjects who amongst with him were to find a settlement in the said country might be assisted by the further diffusion of the Christian religion in those parts of our dominions, its propagation therein, and the expected revealing and discovery of a way or passage to those seas which lie upon America on the west, commonly called the South Sea, from which the head or source of that great river or Gulf of Canada, or some river flowing into it is deemed to be not far distant; and since by the example already exhibited by the said Sir William in the exploring and settling of the said country of New Scotland terminating at the aforesaid Gulf and River Canada, he has proposed establishments by him in those parts of the plantat. — which seem to be favourable for the propa- 40 gation of the said religion, and tending only to the great honour and profit of our ancient kingdom of Scotland, whence it may come to pass that the said colonies to be planted by him and his successors may by this means in process of time discover the foresaid way or passage to the said seas, much hitherto for very weighty consideration desired and so often by various persons undertaken; Therefore, and for exciting the more earnest resolutions of the said Sir William, his heirs, assignees, portioners and associates, to further progress in such and so great an enterprise, we, with the special advice and consent of our very faithful and well-beloved Cousin and Councillor, John, Earl of Mar, Lord Erskene and Gareoch, our High Treasurer, Comptroller, Collector and Treasurer of our new augmentations of our kingdom of Scotland; our faithful and well-beloved Councillor, Archibald, Lord Napier of Merchings- 50 toun, our deputy in the said offices, and the remanent Lords of our Privy Council, our Commissioners of our

- (1) 1632.—"Carte de la Nouvelle France" in Champlain's Works, ed. 1632. [Facsimiles in the works of O'Callaghan and Laverdière.] Notes on Maps, 1632-1857.

New York State Library, Albany.

In this map Labrador and Hudson's Bay and Straits, and westward, the country to the limit of discovery, are included in Nouvelle France; that name commences north of Grand Lac [Superior], and north-west of Mer Douce [Lake Huron], and, skirting the foot of James' Bay, terminates at the Saguenay. The route between the St. Lawrence and Hudson's Bay, by the Rivers Saguenay and Rupert and Lake Mistassin, clearly appears. This, which was at all times the chief overland route followed by the French, and by the great Fur Companies, was evidently well known even at this early date.

- 40 (2) 1635.—Maps "of the World" and "of America," in Mercator's Atlas, English ed. 1635, and second ed., 1637.

New York State Library.

In these maps the name "Nouvelle France" extends northward to Davis' Straits: the name commences, on the last mentioned map, on the south side of these Straits.

- (3) 1643.—"La Nouvelle France, dressée sur dernières relations modernes, 1643," (MS. in Library of Parliament, Ottawa.)
- 50 Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

* There is a valuable collection of maps in the Library at Ottawa. In the case of such of them as are in MS., the originals have, in most cases, been, since these notes were put in type, consulted at Paris and elsewhere.

The name Nouvelle France commences north of Grand Lac des Nadouessioux [Superior]; and the name Canada commences east of James' Bay, and north of Lake Mistassin. That country has no limits indicated towards the north; and none to the west, other than the bounds of discovery.

- (4) 1650.—“L'Amérique Septentrionale, par N. Sanson. . 1650.” This is the original edition.

At Paris.

The name Canada extends across Hudson's Bay, no northern limit being shewn. “Estotilande Terre de Labrador ou Nouvelle Bretagne,” are named east of Hudson's Bay, and north of lat. 54°.

- (5) 1660.—“Tabula Novæ Franciæ, anno 1660,” in “Historia Canadensis seu Novæ Franciæ: auctore P. Francisco Creuxio. Paris, 1664.” [Fac simile.]

St. Mary's College, Montreal.

Hudson's Bay and Straits, and, towards the west, the country to the limit of the map, (the meridian of the centre of Lake Superior), are included in this map as part of New France.

- (5a) [Before 1662].—“L'Amérique Septentrionale, par le Sr. Sanson d'Abbeville [Geographe Ordinaire du Roy]. Paris, A. Perouynin, Sculp.”

Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

In this map “Canada ou Nouvelle France” has no limits on the North; it extends south-westerly to the eastern boundary of Mexico; on the west appears a coloured line, which may represent the then limits of discovery, running, from such last-mentioned boundary, north-easterly to the western shore of Hudson's Bay, in the latitude of Port Nelson. The name runs across Hudson's Bay, Labrador, and the great Lakes. The name “Canadicne” also extends from the west shore of Lake Superior (produced), north-easterly and across Hudson's Bay.

- (6) [Before 1662].—“Le Canada ou Nouvelle France, par N. Sanson.”

“Canada ou Nouvelle France” extends westward to the limit of the map, (the meridian of the centre of Lake Superior); and southward to the parallel of the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi. This map has a line (engraved and coloured) commencing at the western limit of the map, between Hudson's Bay and Lake Superior, and running thence easterly, in about the position of what is now known as the height of land, to a point near Lake Mistassin, and thence, almost due east, to the ocean. North of this line—east of the Bay—are the names “Estotilande ou Terre de Labrador et Nouvelle Bretagne.” The map would seem to be, in part, a reproduction of an English one; this idea is confirmed by finding on it the inscription, “James, his Bay.”

- (7) 1662.—“Amerique, par P. du Val, Geogr. du Roy.” From “Cartes du Monde, Paris 1660-1,” and “Le Monde Chrestien, par P. du Val. Paris, 1662.”

New York State Library.

On this map Canada has no bounds on the north other than the limit of the map, which limit is on the parallel of Hudson's Straits. There is on the map a line (engraved and coloured) which commences on the northern limit, to the west of Hudson's Bay, and runs thence southerly and south-easterly to about the position of the point of confluence of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. The easterly boundary is the ocean. The first part of the name, “Canada ou N. France,” commences west of Hudson's Bay; the second part commences at a point north-west of Lake Superior, near the westerly line above mentioned.

- (8) 1662.—“Canada,” (another map in the same work).

New York State Library.

By this map Canada includes the country westward to the limit of the map, (a part only of Lac Supérieur and of Lac des Puants [Michigan] being shown), and also Hudson's Bay and Labrador. The names “Canada” and “Nlle France” respectively, are on the face of the map in similar type, the first (Canada) commencing near the mouth of the Rupert, and the other (Nlle France) further south, east of the Ottawa.

- (9) 1662.—“La Virginie par P. du Val, Geographe du Roy, a Paris.” (In same work).

New York State Library.

The name "Canada" is applied to the country back of the English Atlantic Colonies, to the northern limit of the map in $41\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$; "Lac Erie ou du Chat," being included.

- (10) 1662.—"La Floride par P. du Val Geographe Ordinaire du Roy." (In same work).

Miscellaneous.

Canada is bounded on the south-west by a line commencing on the westerly limit of the map, in about latitude 40° ; thence south-easterly, along the north-eastern boundary of New Mexico, to the north-western angle of Florida, in about latitude 39° ; and thence easterly, along the northern boundary of Florida, to the boundary of Virginia.

- (11) 1662.—"Nouveau Mexique." (No other title; but it is in the same work, and clearly attributable to Du Val).

New York State Library.

The line referred to as being on the preceding map, is here taken up at the parallel of 40° , and is continued thence north-westward to the limit of the map, in lat. 48° . The territory lying to the north-east of this line is named "Canada ou Nouvelle France."

- (12) 1664.—"Le Canada, fait par le Sr. de Champlain, . . . selon les memoires du P. du Val, 1664."

Hudson's Bay is included in "Nouvelle France ou Canada;" but on James' Bay, between Charleston Island and some islands to the north-west, is the figure "31," referring to the same number in the margin, under which is found the name "Jamestan, lieu des Anglais."

- (13) 1673.—"Carte de la nouvelle découverte . . . 1672 et 1673. 1673," (MS. Lib. Parl.)

Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

This map illustrates the voyage of Marquette and Joliet, on the occasion of their discovery of the Mississippi, under the commission, in that behalf, of the Governor of Canada. They reached the great river by way of Green Bay and the Wisconsin, and descended it as far as the Arkansas, the return to Lake Michigan being by the Rivers Illinois and Chicagou.

- (15) Shows the Mississippi (here called R. de la Conception) from the Wisconsin to the Arkansas; also the southern and western shores of Lake Superior, and the Missions of Ste. Marie St. Ignace [Michillimackinac], and Du St. Esprit [Chagouamigon or la Point]. On the main shore, opposite Ile Royale, is the note "Chemin aux Assinipoulak à 120 lieues vers le Nord-Ouest." It evidently refers to the route, by the Pigeon or the Kamanistiquia River, to the country of these Indians.

- (15) [1678].—"Novissimæ Americæ descriptio. F. de Witt, Amsteldami."

New York State Library.

A line, engraved and coloured, runs from the easterly point of Labrador, to the height of land east of Mistassin, and thence along the same height of land to a point near Lake Nepigon, which is shown as the westerly limit of discovery. A line of dots is thence continued, not coloured, for about 12° westward. North of this line; and running across Hudson's Bay, is the name "Canada," and south of the line, and extending from beyond Lac des Puans, is the name "Nova Francia."

- (16) [1680].—"Carte d'une grande partie du Canada, depuis Quebec jusq'au fond du Lac Superieur . . . 1680." (MS. Lib. Parl.)

Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

This date is given in the catalogue, but does not appear on the face of the map, which, however, is evidently referable to a very early and probably this date. The great lakes are shown. The Kamanistiquia or the Pigeon River is represented with the inscription "Par cette rivière ou va aux Assinepoulaes à 150 lieues vers le Nord-Ouest ou il y a beaucoup de castors;" and the St. Louis River (that which falls into Lake Superior at Fond du Lac) is represented with the inscription

"Par cette rivière ou va au pays des Nadouessiens à 60 lieues au couchant. . . ." In reference to these inscriptions, it is well established that the French of Canada had, long before the date of this map, considerable intercourse for the purposes of trade and otherwise, with the Assiniboine and the Sioux Indians, and exercised a large influence over them, as mentioned in the note to No. 14. The country of the latter about the sources of the Mississippi, had even been formally taken possession of, in 1679, on behalf of the Governor of Canada. The map shows establishments at Sault Ste. Marie, Michilimakinac and Green Bay.

- (17) [1682.]—"Parties les plus occidentales du Canada" by Father "Pierre Kuffieux, J.," whose signature it bears. (MS. Lib. Parl.)
Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

This map purports to be founded on the discoveries of Marquette, Joliet, "Dulude," La Salle and Hennepin. Of Du Luth it is stated on the map, in a note, "qui le premier a esté chez les Sioux ou Nadouessiou en 1678 et qui a esté proche la source du Mississippi, et qui ensuite vint retiré le P. Louis [Hennepin] qui avait esté fait presonnier chez les Sioux. . . ." Shews the great lakes, the rivers St. Louis, Wisconsin, Illinois and Ohio, and the Mississippi, from a point N. W. of Fond du Lac, to a point below its Junction with the Ohio; also the missions "Du Sault," "St. Ignacé ou Michilimakina," and "des Postes Outa[ga]mi" [Green Bay].

- (18) 1688.—"Carte de l'Amérique Septentrionale, contenant le pays du Canada ou la Nouvelle France, la Louisiane . . . Acadie et Ile Terreneuve . . . en l'année 1688. Par Jean Baptiste Louis Franquelin, Hydrographe du Roi, à Quebec, en Canada." (MS., Lib. Par.)
Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

This map shews, correctly, the two chief routes of communication between the St. Lawrence and Hudson's Bay (here called Baie du Nord)—that by the Saguenay, Mistassin and Rupert, and that by the Ottawa, Labirinth, Lake Abitibis and the River Monsony.

From Lac Buade [Red Lake or Leech Lake], situate N. W. of Fond du Lac, a river [the Red River] runs almost due north to Lac des Assinebouels; out of which the River Bourbon or Nelson issues and, passing through Lac des Christenaux on the way, runs to Hudson's Bay. The two lakes, last mentioned, appear to represent the southerly and northerly parts respectively of Lake Winnipeg. The main branch of the Mississippi (here called Rivière des François ou des Sioux) has its source in the same L. Buade. Forts St. Croix, St. Antoine,* and St. Nicolas,† (on or near the Upper Mississippi,) St. Louis and Crèveceur (on the Illinois,) and Chicagou (at the mouth of the river of that name), as also the Missions of the Sault and St. François Xavier [Green Bay] are represented. Fort Abitibis and [Maison] François, on L. Abitibis, and Fort Latourette, on the north shore of Lake Nepigon, are also shewn. The name "Canada ou Nouvelle France," extends across the country, from the pole to the lakes, and from the western limit of the map to the east coast of Labrador: that country has, therefore, no limits on the north or towards the west.

M. Bellin in his "Remarques sur la Carte," published in 1755, refers to another MS. map of this author as being in the "Dépôt des Plans de la Marine" it bears date 1687, and is stated to shew, "to the west of Lake Superior, branches of rivers which communicate with two great lakes, close to each other, which he [Franquelin] names, the one, Lac des Assiniboels, and the other Lac des Cristinaux; and from this last there issues a river by which it discharges itself into Hudson's Bay at Port Nelson (this is the Bourbon River). It is certain that these two great lakes are the same which we to-day call Lac Onipigon and Lac Bourbon,‡ and upon which we have establishments."

- (19) 1688.—"Carte generale de la France Septentrionale contenant la découverte du pays des Illinois, fait par le Sr. Joliet." It is dedicated to Colbert, and signed by Du Chesneau, the then Intendant of Canada. (MS., Lib. Parl.)

The name "Partie du Canada" commences, on this map, five degrees west of the Mississippi, on the par. of 47°; "Nouvelle France" commences on the same meridian, in about lat. 41°. Hudson's Bay is included in Canada.

- (22) 1689.—["Carte de la partie occidentale du Canada ou de la Nouvelle France, par le Père Coronelli, 1689."] (MS., Lib. Parl.) This title is in the catalogue, but not on this copy of the map.

Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

This map purports to have special reference to the discoveries of Marquette, Joliet and LaSalle. An affluent of the Mississippi issues from Lac Buade, which is situate due west of L. Nepigon; the main stream marked "Fleuve Miss." comes from the N. W., and is joined by that affluent on the parallel of Fond du Lac. The inscription "Partie du Canada ou Nouvelle France" stretches, from beyond the Mississippi, eastward to the St. Lawrence, and extends south as far as the Ohio.

- (23) 1690.—"Mondo Nuovo," by Coronelli, in his Atlas, "Venice, 1690."

Legislative Assembly Library, Toronto.

This map has an engraved line which commences at the most easterly point of Labrador, in lat. 54°, and runs south-westerly, passing close to (and south of) the foot of James' Bay and the mouth of the Albany river (not shewn), and thence westerly to the merid. of Fort Nelson (not shewn), thence due south to the Gulf of Mexico, —leaving the Mississippi and Lago di Nadouessans, (probably intended for Lake of the Woods), to the east. This western line is probably intended to indicate the limit of the most advanced discoveries in that direction, at the time. North of the line, west of the Bay, New South Wales and New North Wales are shewn; and east of the Bay "Estotilandia... Scoperta da Antonio Zeno, nel 1390." The northern part of the Atlantic is named "Mare di Canada, o della N. Francia."

- (24) 1690.—"America Septentrionale" by Coronelli (in the same Atlas).

Legislative Assembly Library, Toronto.

This map has the same engraved line as the preceding. The name "Canada o Nuova Francia," commences at the Mississippi, north of the Ohio, and ends at the Labrador Coast, and is partly above the line in question, which, therefore, could not be intended as a boundary of Canada on the north. "New South Wales" is named, with the memo: Scoperta dagl'Inglisi. "R. Frenchman" is the river next south-west of the Rupert. East of the Bay are the names "Estotilandia or the new Bretagne et Terra di Labrador," but printed in characters less prominent than "Canada," and apparently included in, and subordinate to that country. This map would appear to be founded, in part, on an English map.

- (25) 1692.—"Carte Generale de la Nouvelle France, 1692," designed to shew (inter al.) the situation of the several Missions. (MS. Lib. Parl.)

Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

The sources of the Mississippi are laid down in this map at about the par. of Nepigon Bay, extending over a space of six degrees—from about 97° to 103° of west long. Lac des Assinebouels

*This name for the north Atlantic, near the American shores, is frequently to be found in ancient maps. It is sometimes referred to as Mer du Canada simply.

is north of these sources, and between it and them, among the Nadouessens [Sioux], a Mission of the Recollects. In this it accords with the map in Hennepin's book, (English ed.) The lower part of Hudson's Bay is shewn, and is included in New France: that country has no limit on the west.

- (26) 1695.—"Carte d'une partie de l'Amerique Septentrionale, tirée des Manuscrits de M. Guill. de l'Isle, où l'on voit son système en 1695, sous les pays située au Nord-Ouest (publiée par M. de l'Isle, Professeur Royale. . . . 1752.)"

New York State Library.

This map contains what appears to be the first representation of the idea of "La Mer de l'Ouest," of which such frequent mention is made in French memoirs and documents, in connection with explorations west of Lake Superior, during the first half of the 18th century. It is here shewn as an inland sea, east of California and north of New Mexico, and the idea may, as here represented, have been founded on the Indian account of the Great Salt Lake or of the Mer Vermillion [Gulf of California.] Any subsequent representations of it on maps, place it in or about the position of the Gulf of Georgia. (See further reference to this sea, under dates 1700, 1717, 1746, and 1752, when the idea had taken better shape).

- (27) 1696.—"Le Canada, ou partie de la Nouvelle France, par H. Jaillot, Paris, 1696, et Amsterdam, chez Ottens."

At Paris.

Fort Dauphin, and an inscription referring to it, viz: "Poste François decouvert et occupié par la compagnie qui s'est formée en Canada pour la Baye d'Hudson," are given in MS., but no indication is given as to when this addition was made. It is not at all improbable, however, that the French, who at this time, and up to the Treaty of Utrecht, carried on a large trade between Winnipeg and the other Western Lakes, and Hudson's Bay, may have erected Fort Dauphin at this early period, and that Verendrye's Fort of the same name was simply a re-building of it on the same site.

- (28) 1699.—"Amérique Septentrionale par le Sieur Sanson, Geographe du Roy, Paris, 1699."

A line engraved and coloured, which appears to be intended to indicate the south-westerly boundary of Canada, commences on the western limit of the map, and runs southerly, at a considerable distance west of the Mississippi, to the parallel of the confluence of that river with the Ohio and thence easterly to the English Colonies. The name "Canada ou Nouvelle France" commences at this line, south-west of L. Winnipeg, and terminates at the easterly point of Labrador, and clearly includes Hudson's Bay.

- (29) 1700.—"Mappe Monde, dressée sur les observations, etc. . . . à son Altesse Royal, Monseigneur le Duc de Chartres, par. . . G. de l'Isle, Geographe. . . . Paris, chez l'auteur."

Canada includes Hudson's Bay; it has no western limit. The name "Canada ou Nouvelle France," on this map commences west of the Bourbon [Nelson] R. The sources of the Mississippi are south-west of a lake which occupies nearly the position of L. Winnipeg. The Bourbon River does not issue from or have on its course any lake.

- (30) 1700.—"L'Amerique Septentrionale. . . . par G. de l'Isle. A Paris, chez l'auteur. 1700."

The name "Canada ou Nouvelle France" commences on this map at Lac des Assenipoils
New York State Library.

[Winnipeg] and runs easterly, on and below the par. of 50°; it includes Hudson's Bay and all to the north except, "Terres Arctiques;" and all to the west, to the limit of discovery, viz: beyond the Mississippi and L. Winnipeg; the southern boundary is a line, engraved and coloured, running easterly from the border of New Mexico, on about the par. of 36°. The source of the Mississippi is about 15° west of Lac des Assenipoils. Lac des Assenipoils does not discharge into Hudson's Bay, but into Lake Superior, thus forming a part of the St. Lawrence system. All the forts on Hudson's Bay, and Fort de Bonsecours, on the Mississippi, are shewn.

- (31) 1700.—“Carte dressée par M. Guillaume de l'Isle, au commencement de ce siècle, pour servir à ses conjectures sur l'existence de la Mer de l'Ouest. Publiée par Mr. Joseph Nicolas de l'Isle 1752.”*

The “Mer de l'Ouest” is shewn in part—an inland sea, with a strait connecting it with the [Pacific] ocean. “Canada” includes Hudson's Bay and the country westward to the sea: the name commences west of Lake Superior.

- (32) 1700.—“Partie de la Nouvelle France. dédiée à Monseigneur le Marquis de Seignelay, par Hubert Jaillot. A Paris, 1700.”

10 New York State Library.

This map includes Hudson's Bay. “Poste du Sr. de St. Germain,” on Lake St. Anne, on the Albany River; “Poste du Sur. du Luth” † on the north shore of L. Nepigon; and a Fort on the south-east shore of L. Nemiscau are marked: the latter with the memo: “Poste pour couper les sauvages par le haut de la Traite de Tadoussac, et les empêcher de descendre à la Baye de Hudson.” Fort Nemiscau, and also some French establishments on Lake Mistassin—all north of the height of land—were within the Royal (French) Domain of Tadoussac; and appear to have been centres of a large trade with the Indians. Fort Nelson is marked “Post François;” and Forts Albany, Moose and Rupert, respectively, “Anglois;”—an error, as all the Hudson's Bay forts, with perhaps one exception, were at this time in the hands of the French.

- 20 (33) 1703.—“Carte du Canada ou de la Nouvelle France, par Guillaume de l'Isle, de l'Académie Royale des Sciences, et premier Geographe du Roy. A Paris, chez l'auteur, 1703.”

* In possession of the Ontario Government.

The name “Canada ou Nouvelle France” commences, on this map, south-west of the southern portion of Lac des Assenipoils, and runs easterly, partly to the north of the height of land. It includes Hudson's Bay, and, westward, the whole country as far as shewn, viz., beyond the Mississippi, Lake Winnipeg and the Bourbon [Nelson] River. The sources of the Mississippi are indicated at a point about 5° S.W. of L. Winnipeg. Forts L'Huilier, Le Sueur and des Abitibis as also French establishments (“Maison Française”) on the S.W. shore of L. Mistassin, the north-west shore of L. Abitibis and at Chagouamigon, are marked. ‡ Several engraved lines appear within the limits of Canada, and merely denote boundaries of tribes.

Maps, 1682-

- 30 On an original proof copy of this map, now deposited in the Bureau de la Marine, at Paris, there appears, as an autograph addition of the author and his brother, a line marked “Ligne selon le memoire de M. d'Auteuil.” This line commences at the entrance to and on the south shore of Hudson's Strait, and runs thence south-westerly (crossing the Rupert River) to about lat. 50½°; thence due west to a point south-west of Fort St. Louis [Moose Fort]; thence north-westward on a direct course to the parallel of 60°.

- 40 Another autograph addition to the same map is a line marked “Ligne selon la pretension des Anglois” and “Ligne selon les Anglois:” it runs from the north shore of Davis' Inlet on the Labrador coast, (in about lat. 56½°), south-westward, and through Lake Mistassin, to the 49th parallel, which it thence follows to the westerly limit of the map.

* “La Mer de l'Ouest,” so frequently mentioned in French official and other documents, between 1700-1763, was the name given by the French geographers, commencing with William de l'Isle, in 1695, to a supposed inland sea near the western coast of America. On the maps, it is represented as connected with the Ocean (Mer du Sud), at first by one passage, and subsequently by two passages or straits. The position of this sea, in the later maps, agrees with that of the Gulf of Georgia (Vancouver's Straits), and the two passages represent, respectively, the two entrances to the latter, north and south of Vancouver's Island.

† Otherwise known as Fort Latourette.

‡ Fort L' Huillier was on the St. Peter's, now the Minnesota River; Fort Le Sueur on the Upper Mississippi, below the St. Peter's: Fort Abitibis on the south-east shore of the lake of that name, north of the height of land: it was built by the Chevalier de Troyes in 1686, on the occasion of his overland expedition for the capture of the English forts on Hudson's Bay, and was thenceforward occupied, continuously, by the French, till 1763. Chagouamigon (or la Pointe) was situate on the southerly shore of Lake Superior, not far from Fund du Lac.

The source of the St. Peter's [Minnesota] River, and the great bend of the Missouri, are on the westerly limit of the map. "Canada ou Nouvelle France" has no other limit in that direction. The name commences west of the Missouri.

- (35) 1708.—"A new map of North America, by H. Moll, Geographer," bound with "The British Empire in America [by Oldmixon]."

"Canada" has no bounds towards the west; its southern limit is the northern boundary of ancient Florida. The source of the Mississippi is in about lat. 55°, and long. 265° east. The "St. Laurens River" passes through Lakes Assinipouals and Nemepigon to Lake Superior.

In a copy of Brotherton's edition of the book, (London, 1741), the map is given in colours, and the southerly boundary of Canada is the same St. Laurens River, from its source, and through the Great Lakes, to the sea; the northerly boundary being the westerly and southerly shore of Hudson's Bay, easterly to a point near Rupert River; thence to and along the Saguonay R. to its mouth N.E. of this line is "Ter. de Labrador or New Britain. . . ."

- (36) 1709.—Map endorsed "14. Draft of the Bay with the limits prescribed by the treaty of Utrecht," but marked on its face "made by Saml. This map contains Labrador and Hudson's Bay and Straits. A coloured line runs direct fr a "Grimington's I," in about lat. 59½° south-westerly to the north-east shore of the "Grand Lake of Miscosink," and thence, on almost the same course, through the centre of the lake to its south-western shore, and thence, on the same course, to the limit of the map in about lat. 45½°. On the westerly side of this line is the inscription, commencing at the same limit of the map, "The French not to go to the westward of this line;" and on the east side the inscription "The English not to come to the eastward of this line." The country north of Rupert's River, between 30 the line and the bay, is named "Rupert's East Land," and is coloured yellow; that east of the line —on which are the names "Nova Britannia," "Laboradore," and "New France,"—is red, as is also the whole Hudson's Bay coast from Rupert River westward.*

This map is an almost servile copy of De l'Isle's, of 1703, and gives, engraved and coloured, certain dotted lines, which appear on De l'Isle's as boundaries of tribes, &c., and have no other significance. The skeleton copies of this map, attached to the report of Mr. Ramsay, and to the first report by Mr. Mills, do not convey a correct idea of these lines of the original. The sources of 40 the Mississippi, Lake of the Assenipolis, and the Bourbon River, are as on De l'Isle's. Canada, or New France, extends southward to Florida, and has no limits assigned to it on the west; the name commences west of the Missouri, on about the parallel of 42°.

The south-westerly boundary of "Canada" is a line, engraved and coloured, commencing at the south-west angle of Lake Superior: and drawn thence, north-westerly, along what is shewn as the northerly watershed of the Mississippi system, to the limit of the map, west of Lac des Assenipoils.

The name "New France or Canada" is on the face of the map. The western watershed of Lake Superior is shown, though badly laid down. The first part of the name "Canada ou Nouv. 1857.

The name "Canada" is on the face of the map, and applies to the country west to the "Mer de l'Ouest." In the margin is quoted a memoir of de l'Isle, of 1706, wherein he claims "cette mer de l'Ouest" as a discovery of his, and that he had refrained from marking it on his published maps for fear that foreign nations would benefit by it to the prejudice of France; that he had laid it down on a MS. Map of the World given by him to the Chancellor Boucherat, in 1697, and had given to Pontchartrain, in 1700, proofs of its existence.

- (47) 1718.—"Carte de la Louisiane et cours de la Mississippi. par Guillaume de l'Isle...à Paris, chez l'auteur...1718."

Libraries, Albany and Ottawa.

The name "Partie du Canada au Nouvelle France" commences at the Portage between the Fox and Ouisconsin Rivers; and the name "La Louisiane," at the Red R. (lat. 37°): the boundary between the two countries is not exactly indicated, but each would seem to extend westward to the borders of New Mexico. At the great bend of the Missouri R. (about par. 45°) is the memo: "Les Français n'ont remonté le Missouri que jusqu'ici." Fort L'Huilier, and two forts on or near Lake Pepin are shown.

From the Mississippi, at a point opposite the Ouisconsin, a road is shown as running westerly to the same bend, marked "Chemin des Voyageurs."

- (48) 1719.—"Amérique Septentrionale...par le Sieur Sanson, Geographe Ordinaire du Roi, présenté à Monseigneur le Dauphin...par Hubert Jaillot...Paris, 1719."

New York State Library.

A line engraved and coloured runs from the easterly point of Labrador to the height of land, which it follows to a point near L. Abbitibis, which, with the fort of that name, it leaves to the south, and passing north-westerly, close by the shore of James's Bay, at the mouth of the Moose R., proceeds to a point south-west of Lake Winnipeg, whence it runs south-westerly to the par. of 45°; and thence south-easterly to a point 5° west of the Mississippi, on the parallel of its confluence with the Illinois; and thence, easterly, to the English colonies—Florida being to the south and New Mexico to the west of the line. East of the line, at Lac des Sioux—the source of one of the branches of the Mississippi—the name "Canada ou Nouvelle France" commences; it crosses the foot of James's Bay, and ends on the Labrador coast, being partly above the line described, which cannot therefore be intended as a northern boundary. Sanson's original map, 10 "L'Amérique Septentrionale," (see date 1662), does not contain this northern line; but one like it appears on his map of "Le Canada ou Nouvelle France" (same date).

- (49) 1719.—MS. Line showing the English claims and what are supposed to have been the French concessions as to the limits of Hudson's Bay, under the Treaty of Utrecht. (See notes on "L'Isle's map of 1703, No. 33 ante).

(Amsterdam, Couvens et Mortier.) 20

Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

Canada extends westward to the limit of discovery, and south-westward to the northern watershed of the Missouri, from its source to its confluence with the Mississippi; a line, engraved and coloured, commences at a point on the shore of Hudson's Bay, north-west of R. Danoise [Churchill] and runs south-westerly to, and then easterly along, the said watershed. Another line (engraved and coloured) runs from Ungava Bay (Hudson's Straits) south-westerly to the shore of Hudson's Bay at a point immediately north of the East Main River. Recommencing on the same shore, at a point immediately south of Rupert River, it runs westerly and north-westerly, at no great distance from that shore, to Bourbon [Nelson] River, which it follows to the Bay. This line appears intended to represent the limits of the territories of Hudson's Bay and Straits, as the French then understood them. 30

- (51) 1722.—"Carte d'Amérique, dressée pour l'usage du Roy, par Guillaume Delisle, premier Géographe de sa Majesté, de l'Académie des Sciences, à Paris, chez l'auteur. . . 1722."

In possession of Ontario Government.

This map has a line, engraved and coloured, commencing on the south side of Hudson's Straits thence westerly, nearly on the line of the 60th parallel, to within 3 or 4 degrees of the eastern shore of the Bay; thence south-westerly, getting closer to the shore and crossing the Rupert R. near its mouth; thence westerly, skirting closely the foot of the Bay, to the Moose R., just above the parallel of 50°; and thence north-westerly and across the Ste. Thérèse [Hayes] and Bourbon [Nelson] Rivers, to and along the Danoise [Churchill], to its mouth. This is the only 40 limit to Canada towards the north; and no bounds are assigned to it on the west—the map extending to "La Grande Mer du Sud." Its southern boundary is a line, engraved and coloured, commencing at the mouth of the Kennebec, and running along the back of the English Provinces, to the point where it meets the northern boundary of Louisiana, between the 39th and 40th parallels; thence, following the last boundary, to the confluence of the Mississippi and Missouri, and along the northerly watershed of the Missouri to its source in the [Rocky] Mountains, where it meets the northern boundary of "California;" and thence due west along such last-mentioned boundary, and in about lat. 43°, to the Grande Mer du Sud, at Cap Blanc. The name "Canada" is on the face of the map; it commences at about the meridian of 95°, present reckoning. The main source of the Mississippi is in about lat. 49° and long. 105°, present reckoning; it is also connected with Lac Teca- 50 mamiouen [Rainy Lake], which is 6° to the north-east, and entirely misplaced. Lake of the Woods is not shown.

The original copy of this map, in the Depôt des cartes et affaires Etrangères, shows a dotted line starting from Fort Bourbon, and running to a point on the 50th parallel, west of Lake Christinaux, thence along that parallel to the south end of James's Bay, then coasting along, partially conforming to the shore line, northerly to the intersection of lat. 55° with long. 403° W.

Canada has no other limits on the north and west than those of the map, which extend beyond the meridian of Fort Nelson on the north, and considerably beyond Lake Superior on the west and north west. The name "Canada" commences north-west of Lac Alepimigon, and terminates north of the source of the Albany; it clearly includes Hudson's Bay.

"Canada" extends westward of Lake Superior, some 5°, and northward to the limit of the map, about C. Henriette Mary; but Forts Rupert and Moose are marked with a mens. to the effect that they are alternately in the hands of the French and English respectively. Fort St. Germain is also shown.

- (57) This tracing shows the waters from Lake Superior westward to Lake Winnipeg; there being a division in these waters between Ruiny Lake and Lake Superior, on both the Kamanistiquia and Pigeon River routes. (This map is on the same sheet as Bache's "Carte Physique," 1754.)

- (58) 1731.—"Carte du Domaine en Canada," dedicated to the Dauphin, and signed by "P. Laure, J., à Chikontini, 231 Aout, 1731." (MS. Lib. Parl.)

This map shows—presumably as included in the Royal Domain of Tadoussac†—the Saguenay and its various affluents; the country, lakes and rivers between its head waters and Lake Mistassin; and that lake and the Rupert R. (at whose mouth is Fort Rupert), to its discharge in Hudson's Bay. A French establishment, "Maison des Dorvals," is on the S. W. Shore of the Lake. The author, who describes himself as the Missionary of the Domain, states, in a marginal note, that the portion of the map "depuis Pikongami jus' au X miskam," was prepared with the aid of the Srs. Dorval Desrosiers, who had spent, the one two and the other three, winters with success at the Grand Mistassin, on behalf of the Western Company; and he further states, in the dedication, that the savages, with constant fidelity, and notwithstanding innumerable hardships, &c., bring their furs to the posts of the French domain, in preference to giving them to "their neighbours, the English.

Two more MS. Maps by the same author—one with the title "Carte du Domaine du Roi en Canada," and date 1732—are more elaborate, but contain no new feature, except that they show more of the bay.

- (59) 1732-3.—"A map of the British Empire in America, with the French and Spanish settlements adjacent thereto, by Hen. Popple." (Not dated, but the correct date must be 1732 or 1731. Rich gives the latter.)

Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

The British Dominions are bounded on the north by the St. Lawrence Gulf and River, Lake Ontario, the River Niagara, the south-east shore of Lake Erie to the north-westerly angle of Pennsylvania; thence by a line running due south to Virginia; thence by a line running due west to the limit of the map, in 107° of west longitude, and which appears to be an extension of the northern boundary of Virginia. The whole country to the north of these lines, though without a name, is indicated by the colouring to be a French possession. The source of the Mississippi is on the parallel of 50° , and in about long. 105° , with the inscription "The head of the Mississippi in about the 50^{th} degree north latitude, and in a very boggy country." There is no boundary between Canada and Hudson's Bay. The two French establishments on Lake Abôitibis are marked.

This map is dedicated "to the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty;" and, in a note, it is stated that it was undertaken with the approbation of the Lords of Trade, and that the authentic records and actual surveys transmitted to them by the Governors, had been used in its preparation.

On this map forts are marked on the north shore of Lake Nepigon, and at the position of Lake Nemiseau. "Nouvelle France ou Canada," includes Hudson's Bay; on the west no limits are assigned to it. The name commences east of Hudson's Bay, just south of parallel 53° .

- (60) 1757.—"Carte contenant les nouvelles découvertes de l'Ouest, en Canada, mers, rivières, lacs et nations qui y habitent, en l'année 1737. This is a sketch of the country from Lake Superior westward to, and including, Lakes des Prairies [Manitoba] and Winnipeg; the communication between the latter and Hudson's Bay, by the Nelson River, being also shown. From Lac Rouge issues a branch of the Mississippi, as does also the Red River. The other sources of the Mississippi are in about their proper position. Forts Kamanistiquia, St. Pierre (on Rainy Lake), St. Charles (on Lake of the Woods), and La Reine, here called Maurepas (on the Assiniboine, south of Lake Manitoba,) Pointe du Bois Fort (midway 30 up the Red River), and a fort at the mouth of the Assiniboine, marked "abandoned," are all shewn: these formed, at the time, the most advanced posts of Canada towards the west; a few years later, Forts Dauph. on the northern part of Lake Manitoba, and Forts Bourbon, Poskeyae, des Prairies, La Corne and Jonquière—all on the Saskatchewan—were added to them.

- (61) 1738.—"A new and correct map of America, laid down according to the accurate improvements of Senex, Moll and other modern Geographers. Humbly inscribed to His Royal Highness Frederick, Prince of Wales, 1738" (in Sir William Keith's History of Virginia, who says of it, in his address to the reader, that it is "the latest and best of the kind that could be got.")
Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

The map extends to the Great South Sea and to the North Pole. "Canada, or New France," is 40 bounded on the south by Louisiana; on the north and west no limits are assigned to it. A part of the name commences west of the Missouri, in long. 105° and lat. 41° nearly.* The St. Lawrence River has its source north-west of Port Nelson, and passes through Lakes Assinipouals [the northerly part of Lake Winnipeg] and Nempigon [the southerly part of Winnipeg] to the Upper Lake [Superior].

- (62) 1739.—"Carte d'Amérique, dressée pour l'usage du Roi, par Guillaume de l'Isle, premier Geographe de sa Majesté. Amsterdam, Couvens et Mortier, 1735."

* In the body of the work, p. 53, the author says:—"Hitherto, Virginia was understood to extend from thirty-four to forty-five degrees of northern latitude, bounded by the ocean to the east, Florida to the South, and Canada, or New France, to the north, but towards the west unlimited and unknown.... That part.....planted by the English in the year 1606, reaching only from thirty-seven to thirty-nine degrees of latitude... continues at this day to be the proper bounds of the ancient colony and Dominion of Virginia."

This map has a line, engraved and coloured, running from Ungava Bay, south-westerly, crossing the East Main and Rupert Rivers, a short distance from their mouths, and thence westerly and north-westerly, at no great distance from the shores of Hudson's Bay, to the Churchill River, whose eastern bank it follows to the Bay. "Canada" has no limits towards the west: its south-west boundary is the northern watershed of the Missouri, from its source to its junction with the Mississippi.

- (63) [1740, about.]—"Carte d'une partie du Lac Supérieur, avec la découverte de la rivière depuis le Grand Portage, jusqu'au Lac des Bois, et de là jusqu'au Missouri, dressée par M. de la Gémerye" (MS. Lib. Parl.)

10 Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

Shews the discovery of the Verendryes west of Lake Superior, and the Forts established by them, including Fort Bourbon; also, the Assiniboine and its affluent, the St. Pierre, and, south-west of the former, a portion of the Upper Missouri, which must have been reached by way of the Assini line. It is marked "Rivière qui on croit être le Missouri." La Gémerye was the nephew, and acted under the orders of M. de la Verendrye, to whom his services, in the explorations which he was pursuing, were invaluable.

- 20 The Mississippi has its source in a lake north-west of Lake Superior. The name "Canada" commences just east of this point, and runs across the foot of Hudson's Bay, which it includes. The boundary between Louisiana and Canada is an engraved line, following the northern watershed of the Missouri, to its junction with the Mississippi.

- (65) 1740.—"America, laid down from the observations of the Royal Academy of Sciences. . . London, printed for John Bowles. . . 1740. Engraved by Emanuel Bowen, Geographer."

A portion of the name "Canada or New France," commences between the Missouri and the Mississippi. The south-western boundary is, partly, the eastern limit of New Mexico, and a line continued thence, north-westerly; the country west of this line is marked "unknown." North of the terminal point of the line, Canada appears to extend indefinitely westward.

The name "Canada or New France" extends from a point west of the Mississippi, near the Missouri. The "Heads of the Mississippi" are shewn in lat. 55° and in long. 275° East. On the west shore of Hudson's Bay, the Albany River, and a line continued from its source north-westerly, and on the east shore, the Pitehbourini [East Main] River, and a line continued thence south-easterly to the Gulf of St. Lawrence—are coloured as if to indicate boundaries; Canada has no other limit towards the north; nor are any limits assigned to it on the west.

"Nouvelle France ou Canada," has no limits on the West or North. The first part of the name commences west of the Lake of the Woods; and the second part commences on the east bank of the Missouri, in about lat. 45°. Between Lake Superior and "Lac Tecumamouen" [Rainy Lake] there is no division of the waters—these flow from that lake, on the one hand to Lac des Bois and on the other to Lake Superior. The Mississippi has its source in about lat. 47½°, due south of Lac des Bois.

The Mississippi is cut by the northern limit of the map, viz: the parallel of 46°, in long. 96° 40', and the Mis-ouri by the same limit, in long. 107°, west of the meridian of Paris. On the latter river is the memo: "Le Missouri dont tous le cours, n'est pas connus." Forts L'Huillier and Vert are marked. Shews the Lakes west of Lake Superior, and a communication with Hudson's Bay by the Nelson River. These are put down "as described by Joseph La France, a French Canadese Indian, who travelled through those countries and lakes, for three years, from 1739 to 1742." The height of land between Lakes Superior and Du Pluis is also shewn.

- (75) 1746.—"Carte Du Globe Terrestre. . . par Buache, premier Geographe. . . 1746. A Paris, chez l'auteur."

New York State Library.

"Canada" includes Hudson's Bay, on the north; extends westward to Mer de l'Ouest, here clearly shewn as occupying the position of the Gulf of Georgia (Straits of Vancouver); and extends Southward to Louisiana. The name stands midway between the western sea and the St. Lawrence.

- (76) 1746.—"Amérique Septentrionale, publiée sous les auspices de Monseigneur le Due d'Orleans, premier Prince du Sang. Par le Sr. d'Anville, 1746. . . A Paris, chez l'auteur. . . Gravé par Guill. Delahaye."

In possession of the Ontario Government.

A dotted line commences on the northern limit of the map, in lat. 54°, about 1½° east of Hudson's Bay, and runs thence south-westerly, in about the same position as the line on De l'Isle's map, (ed. 1722)—crossing the Rupert between Lake Nemiscan and the Bay—to a point in about latitude 50° 15', and longitude 59° 40', west of Ferro, where it touches the height of land, and there os. This height of land is continued thence southerly to the portage of Temiscamingue and 50 thence south-easterly, indicating the division of the waters of the Ottawa from those of Siguenay. The western limit of this map is beyond Rainy Lake; and "Canada" has no other boundary in that direction; nor has it on the north, except as already indicated. Forts St. Germain, Abitibis, Le Sueur and L'Hullier are marked. The Mississippi is cut off by the border of the map in lat. 45° and long. 89° 5'.

The author of the work, "Remarks in support of the New Chart of North and South America, by F. Green, Esq., London, printed by Thomas Jefferys, 1753," states that "M. D'Anville runs the partition line [between the English and French possessions] through the parallel of fifty, and to the south of Hudson's Bay, makes it turn off with a sweep northward, and continues it in that direction at the distance of about 20 leagues only, from the eastern coast of the Bay, to the latitude of 54 degrees" (p. 26); and in the English reproduction of "D'Anville's Map of North America, greatly improved by Mr. Bolton...1752," the same line east of the Bay, is shown as terminating at the 50th parallel, with a note by the editor, "Mr. D'Anville's line east of James' Bay is false." According to these authorities then, the line in question must appear, on some edition of D'Anville, as running to, and westward along the 50th parallel; but how far is not stated. The continuation may have been in colours only, which are not shown on the copy in hand.

"Canada" has no bounds here assigned to it on the north or west; on the south and south-west, it is bounded by the northern boundary of ancient Florida—or more properly of Louisiana, viz.: an engraved line, following the northern watershed of the Missouri, from its source to a point above its junction with the Mississippi, and thence easterly, partly along and partly south of the parallel of 40°, to the Appalachian Mountains, here shown as the westerly bounds of Virginia and Pennsylvania.

- (78) 1747.—"A New General Map of America, by Emanuel Bowen," (in same work.)
Legislative Assembly Library, Toronto.

"Canada or New France," has no limits on the north or west; on the south and south-west, they accord with those mentioned in the preceding map. A part of the name, however, commences west of the Missouri, in lat. 42°, thus indicating that Louisiana was a dependency of Canada.

- (79) 1747.—"A New and accurate Map of Louisiana, with part of Canada and Florida. . . by Emanuel Bowen," (in same work.)

Legislative Assembly Library, Toronto.

All the territories from the northern limit of the map, which is north of the height of land, to the Gulf of Mexico on the south, and from the "Appalachian Mountains" to the eastern bounds of New Mexico, are comprised in Canada and Louisiana; but no boundary is run between these two Provinces. The name, "Part of Canada," commences south of Lake Superior, at about 89° West, and striking the southern shores of Lakes Michigan, Erie, and Ontario, ends between Lake George and the St. Lawrence River. The Mississippi and Missouri respectively have their sources south of the 40th parallel. Forts Camanestigonia, Chagouamigon, Luillier, Verte, Maehilimakinæ, St. Mary, La Baye, Chiegon, St. Joseph, and those in the Illinois country, are marked.

- (80) 1748.—"A Map of North America, with Hudson's Bay and Straits, anno. 1748. R. W. Seale, sculp."

In possession of the Ontario Government.

This is another of the maps sent by the Hudson's Bay Company to the Dominion Government for the purpose of the present Arbitration. It bears the Royal Arms and the Arms of the Company. It was undoubtedly prepared by direction in the interests of the Company, in view of the proceedings of the Parliamentary Committee appointed (in the same year that this map is dated) to enquire into their affairs, and appears intended to show the extent of the limits claimed by the Company for trading purposes. These are indicated by a coloured line which commences at the most easterly point of Labrador, and runs thence south-westerly (crossing Frenchman's River in the parallel of 50°, and leaving Lake Tabitabi considerably to the south-east), to about the parallel of 48°, at a point due south of Moose Fort; thence north-westerly to a point a little north of Lake Superior; thence due west to the eastern shore of a Lake, here called Ninigon, but which represents the Lake of the Woods; thence along the easterly banks of that lake, and of a river that connects it with Lake Wini Pegon [the southerly part of Lake Winnipeg], and along the easterly shores of that lake and of another lake (not named), which is intended to represent the northerly part of Lake Winnipeg; and thence northerly to the head of Ballin's Bay. The only forts of the Company marked are York, Albany, Henley, and Moose; at the mouth of 10 the Slude [East Main] River, a fort is indicated to which no name is attached.

- (81) 1748.—“Mappe Monde par le Sr. Robert. . 1748” (found in Vaisette's “Geographie. . Paris 1755.”)

“Canada” extends to the Western Ocean, and includes Hudson's Bay. The name commences midway between that ocean and Lake Superior.

- (82) 1748.—“L'Amérique Septentrionale, par le Sr. Robert, Geographe Ordinaire du Roi, 1748.”
New York State Library.

“Canada” extends, as in the preceding, to the Western Ocean, and includes Hudson's Bay; and, in this instance, the name crosses the foot of James' Bay. Its south-westerly boundary, which is the northern boundary of Louisiana, is an engraved line which runs from the Rocky Mountains 20 (not named) easterly, along the northerly watershed of the Missouri, to its junction with the Mississippi; thence easterly, partly on, partly above and partly below the parallel of 40°, to the English colonies, where it descends to 39°.

- (83) 1749.—A MS. Map, on parchment, by William Morris, dedicated to His Excellency William Shirley Esq., Captain-General and Commander-in-Chief, in and over His Majesty's Province of Massachusetts Bay in New England, Vice-Admiral of the same, dated Boston, August 6th, 1749. (In the Library of the Foreign Office, London.)

Library, London, England.

A line is drawn through Lake Mistassin, to the 49th parallel marked, “1712. This line by the Treaty of Utrecht was settled as the dividing line between Canada and Hudson's Bay.” Another 30 line drawn along 48th parallel to the River St. Lawrence has on it the inscription: “This line of north latitude, 48°, was the northern boundary of the grant made by King James the 1st, to the Council of Plymouth, in 1621; but, in the year 1632, King Charles the 1st ceded all the lands lying to the northward of Canada [St. Lawrence] River to the French, and Canada or New France was indefinite in its northern boundaries till the year 1712.”

There is also on the map this further inscription: “By the treaty of Utrecht, the lines between the English and French were thus adjusted: Beginning on the North Atlantic Ocean, in north latitude 58° 30'; thence running south-west to Lake Mistassin; and thence continuing south-west till the line touched 49°, north latitude; and thence west indefinitely.”

- (84) 1750.—“Carte des nouvelles Découvertes dans l'Ouest du Canada, dressée sur les Mémoires de 40 M. de la Veranderie, et donnée au Dépôt de la Marine par M. de la Galissonnière, 1750.” (Facsimile in Mr. Lindsey's Report.)

Department of Marine, Paris.

Shews the lakes, and connecting rivers, west of Lake Superior, and the division of the waters between that Lake and Lac de la Pluie. The Red, Assiniboine, Poskoyae [Saskatchewan], and Nelson Rivers, are also marked—the latter carrying the waters of Lac Oninipigon to Hudson's Bay. Forts St. Pierre on Lac de la Pluie, St. Charles on Lac du Bois, Maurepas at the foot of Lac Oninipigon, La Reine on the Assiniboille, Dauphin on the north-west shore of Lac des Prairies, and Bourbon at the mouth of the Rivière aux Biches, are also shewn. It will be noticed, that whereas, in 1737, Fort La Reine was the most advanced of the Canadian posts towards the west, we have now reached the Saskatchewan, which, within two years afterwards, was ascended to its source.

Another MS. Map, now in the Dépôt de la Marine, at Paris, and also bearing the date 1750, with the following title, viz: "Carte des nouvelles découvertes dans l'Ouest du Canada, dressée, dit'on, sur les mémoires de la Verendrye, manuscrit de M. de la Gallissonière," shews, as occupied by the French at that time, as well the Forts above mentioned as Forts Gamanistoquoya, on the river of that name, Ronge, on the Assiniboine River, and also Poskoyae. Two forts only—Albany and Nelson—and marked as occupied by the British.

The height of land between these two rivers is marked by a dotted line, evidently meant as a boundary—the name "Louisiana" being applied to the country west of it; and "Nouvelle France ou Canada" to the country north and east. - (93) 1752.—"Carte des nouvelles découvertes... par Phil. Buache, premier Geographe du Roy, présentée à l'Acad. des Sciences, le 9 Aout, 1752, et approuvée dans son assemblée du 6 Septembre suivant..... à Paris."

New York State Library.

This map has an engraved line agreeing with that on De l'Isle's map, (ed. 1722, heretofore mentioned); it terminates at the Bourbon River. The name "Nouvelle France ou Canada" commences just east of Lake Winnipeg, and applies to the country outside of the line mentioned; south-west to the northern watershed of the Missouri, which is indicated by an engraved line, continued westward to the head of the Colorado River; and west as far as discovery is shown, viz: a chain of mountains in which the R. de Poskoyac [Saskatchewan] and the R. des Assiniboels [Assiniboine] have their source. The height of land west of Lake Superior is shown, and beyond that, the various rivers and lakes which discharge by the Nelson into Hudson's Bay. The sources of the Missouri and Mississippi are south of Lake Manitoba, and south-west of the Lake of the Woods. [On this, as on many other maps before and after this date, an imaginary lake is shewn on the Nelson River between Lake Winnipeg and Split Lake: the error seems to have arisen from a mistaken reading of Jérôme, or by the taking the southern and northern portions respectively of Lake Winnipeg, as two separate lakes.]

- (94) 1752.—"Carte des découvertes de l'Amiral de Fonte..... par Buache 1752."

New York State Library.

Shews the line of De l'Isle's Map, (ed. 1722), but ending at the Churchill; the height of land west of Lake Superior; the communication with Hudson's Bay by Nelson River; the engraved line representing the northern watershed of the Missouri; and the name "Nouvelle France ou Canada" almost exactly as in the preceding map.

- (95) 1752.—"Carte Geometrique des decouvertes de l'Amiral de Fonte... Buache... 1752."

New York State Library.

"Nouvelle France ou Canada" extends westward to the ocean. The name commences near the "Mer de l'Ouest," represented on this and the two preceding maps as being connected with the ocean by two passages, and occupying the position, nearly, of the Gulf of Georgia, (Straits of Vancouver). See note to map of 1700.

- (96) 1752.—"Carte des Terres nouvellement connues au nord de la Mer du Sud..... Buache..... 1752." 50

New York State Library.

Shews the line on De l'Isle's Map, (ed. 1722), from Hudson's Straits to a point south of the Albany. "Canada ou Nouvelle France" extends westward to the ocean. The name commences at "Mer de l'Ouest." Close to this sea is a chain of mountains in which the Saskatchewan (not named) has its source.

- (97) 1752.—"Carte marine des parties septentrionales de la Grand Mer [du Sud]... Buache... 1752."

New York State Library.

"Canada ou Nouvelle France" extends westward to "Mer de l'Ouest." The name commences north of Lake of the Woods. The map shews, as in the title it professes to shew, the various mountain chains of North America, as far as then known. The watershed of the St. Lawrence—40 north, south, west and south-west—is faithfully given; also, the height of land which divides the waters of the Mississippi and Missouri on the one hand, from those of the Winnipeg system on the other, extending from near Lake Superior to a chain of mountains near Mer de l'Ouest. These mountains run southerly to the tropic of Cancer, and northerly and north-easterly to the parallel of 64°—the Saskatchewan and R. Danoise [Churchill] having their sources in them.

son's Bay; also on the west side, terminating at the mouth of the Churchill; the foot of the bay is cut off, because of the peculiar configuration of the map. The name "Canada" commences north of Lake of the Woods, but applies westward to the sea. An engraved line, intended to represent the boundary between Canada and Louisiana, follows the northern watershed of the Missouri to the Rocky Mountains, close by the sea. In these same mountains, rivers which fall into Lake Winnipeg take their rise. The source of the Mississippi is due south of that lake, and west by south of Lake of the Woods.

- (99) 1752.—"North America, by the Sr. d'Anville, greatly improved by Mr. Bolton. Engraved by R. W. Seale, 1752." It is also marked on the corner, "North America, plate I, for Mr. Postlethwait's Diet. of Commerce."

In the possession of the Ontario Government.

An engraved dotted line, commencing on the limit of the map, N. E. of Lake Mistassin, runs, on an irregular course, to a point near Lake Abitibi, which it strikes, on the east shore, in about lat. 49°. Recommencing on the west shore it is continued westward (but not on a straight course) to the limit of the map, 15° beyond Kaministiquia. From the northern limit of the map, east of Hudson's Bay, in lat. 53½°, another line, corresponding to De l'Isle's (ed. 1722) runs south-westerly to the par. of 50°, which it strikes half way between the Rupert and the Moose, where it stops. On the face of the map is the memo: "The line that parts French Canada from British Canada was settled by Commissaries after the peace of Utrecht, making a curve from Davis' Inlet, in the Atlantic Sea, down to the 49°, through the Lake Abitibis, to the N. W. Ocean; therefore Mr. D'Anville's dotted line east of James' Bay is false." Fort St. Germain is marked.

- (100) 1752.—"Mappe Monde, par le Sr. Robert de Vaugondy, fils. A Paris, chez les Srs. Robert, Googs, Ords. du Roy. 1752."

New York State Library.

- (101) 1753.—"Carte du Pays connu sous le nom du Canada... par le Sr. Robert de Vaugondy, fils, Geographe Ordinaire du Roi. Paris, 1753."

New York State Library.

The title claims that the English and French possessions are distinguished in the map; it is dedicated to Monseigneur D'Argenson. An engraved line, not coloured, commencing a little east of Lake Mistassin, follows the height of land (nearly to a point close to Lake Nepigon, whose easterly shore it strikes and there stops: it has on it, in two places, the inscription, "Hautours des Terres:" it would appear to have no other signification than as representing this height of land. The English colonies are coloured red, and all to the north of these, and westward to the limit of the map, at Lake Winnipeg, is, as indicated by the blue colour, included in Canada—except, perhaps, the mere shores of Hudson's Bay, which are of the same colour as the English colonies.

- (102) 1753.—"New Chart of North and South America, by F. Green, Esq."

New York State Library.

Our knowledge of this map is derived from the author's "Remarks in support, etc. London, printed for Thomas Jefferys, 1753," in which he says: "I have drawn the line which parts the French from English Canada, by beginning it at Davis' Inlet, on the east coast of Labrador, or New Britain (in the latitude of about 56°), and drawing it with a curve through the Lake Abitibis down to the 49th degree of latitude; from thence to be continued to the north-west ocean, as it was settled by commissioners after the Treaty of Utrecht...." (See note to No. 83.)

- (103) 1754.—"Carte Physique des terrains les plus élevés de la partie occidentale du Canada... par Philippe Buache... publiée sous le privilège de l'Académie... 1754."

New York State Library.

A line, engraved and coloured, and conforming nearly to De l'Isle's (ed. 1722) commences at the eastern limit of the map, a little west of the Rupert River and north of the 50th parallel. It follows this parallel irregularly (crossing the Moose about a degree from its mouth), to the source of the River Perrai, in the height of land, which it touches at no other point; it here abruptly turns and runs north-westerly and northerly, following the windings of, and at almost even distance from the shores of the Bay, to a point north of the Churchill, where it terminates without approaching the Bay. Within the line is the inscription, "Terres Angloises." The height of land runs from the Perai north-westerly to a point near Split Lake—the line in question being about midway between it and the bay. The height of land west of Lake Superior is also shewn, as is that which divides the waters of the Mississippi and Missonri on the one hand, from those of the Winnipeg system on the other. This latter reaches a range of mountains which runs northerly, near "Mer de l'Ouest." In them the Missonri, Saskatchewan, Churchill, etc., take their rise. From these mountains another great river flows, westerly, into the Western Sea; its lower part and its eastern branch in the mountains are represented by dots, but its western and longest branch is 10 marked as if well known, and corresponds with the main branch of the Columbia River, which this was probably intended to represent. A branch of the Mississippi has its source in Lac Rouge, but the main branch rises in the same mountains as the Missonri. The northerly watershed of the latter has a line engraved and coloured, running westward to the mountains; it forms the limit between Louisiana and "Nouvelle France ou Canada." The first part of this latter name commences north of Rainy Lake and the other part west of the Mississippi; it applies to all the territories westward, to the sea. The water communication from west of Lake Superior to Hudson's Bay is correctly shewn, except as to the imaginary lake already mentioned; and the French forts are marked. "Gle. Eau, on Lac Michinipi" is situate north-west of Split Lake; it is probably intended to represent Lake Athabasca, the region around which the French are said have visited 20 to and traded in at a period long anterior to and up to this date.

- (104) 1755.—"A map of the British and French Dominions in North America. .inscribed to...the Earl of Halifax, and the other...the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations...by Jno. Mitchell. . published by the author, Feb. 13th, 1755...and sold by Andrew Millar. .Thos. Kitchin, sculp."
In possession of the Ontario Government.

It appears from a printed memo. of the author, on the face of the map, that this is the second edition, and contains matter not in the first edition. In the margin is also printed the following:—

"This map was undertaken with the approbation and at the request of the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, and is chiefly composed from draughts, charts and actual surveys of different parts of His Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in America; great part of which have 30 been lately taken by their Lordships' orders and transmitted to this office by the Governors of the said Colonies and others.

"JOHN POWNALL,
"Secretary."

"Plantation Office, Feb. 13th, 1755."

This is another of the maps sent by the Hudson's Bay Company to the Dominion Government for the purposes of the present arbitration.

A line, engraved and coloured, commences on the limit of the map, north-east of Lake Mistassin, and runs thence westerly, partly along and partly north of the height of land, and north of what are there called the Northern Mountains or the Land's Height—[it crosses one of the branches 40 of the Moose at something more than a degree from its source; it also crosses the waters of, or connected with Long Lake]—to a point north of Lake Nepigon, and thence, westerly and south-westerly, to a point on the limit of the map in that quarter, north of the Lake of the Woods, and, in about latitude 49° 48', and longitude 97° 40' west from London. A copy of this map was used by the negotiators of the Treaty of 1783, whose intention being to run the international boundary line to the head waters of the St. Lawrence system, so ran it through Long Rainy Lakes and Lake of the Woods, which all here appear as discharging into Lake Superior.

This line is truly marked "Bounds of Hudson's Bay by the Treaty of Utrecht" in one place, and in another "Bounds of Hudson's Bay." It forms the Northern limit of "New France or Canada;" that country has no limit on the west, than that of the map, which is 50 in about longitude 103°; the name commences north-west of Kamanistiquia, in about longitude

92°. Canada is bounded on the south by the St. Lawrence River, the "bounds of the Six Nations," and (from the meridian of 85° westward) the 40th parallel of north latitude, which is also marked as the "northern bounds of Virginia by charter." The main branch of the Mississippi is cut off by the limit of the map at about latitude 47° 11' and longitude 101° 30': near it is the memo: "The head of the Mississippi is not yet known. It is supposed to arise about the 50th degree of latitude and western bounds of this map," &c. The western bounds of the map at that latitude would be in the meridian of between 105° and 106°. The Missouri is cut off by the western limit of the map, in latitude 44° 30'. The Missouri is the inscription "Missouri River is reckoned to run westward to the mountains of New Mexico," &c. At latitude 43° and longitude 100° is the inscription: "Thus far the French ascend the Missouri." Between that river and the western bank of the Mississippi, opposite the Ouisconsin, a track is laid down with the inscription: "Route of the French to the western Indians." Forts Abitibis Le Sueur and Lullier and the French establishment on Lake Mistassin, are marked as subsisting. Fort Rupert is marked "abandoned." On the westerly margin of the map is the memo: "... We see that Louisiana, which was granted by Louis XIV. [westward] to New Mexico, is much larger, west of the Mississippi, than all our Colonies taken together would be if extended to the Mississippi. Canada, again, is larger than either of these..."

"A new map of Hudson's Bay and Labrador" occupies a corner of the larger map. It shows a line, engraved and coloured, and marked "Proposed limits of Hudson's Bay," running from "Grimington I. or C. Perdrix," (which point is marked "extent of Sir Hunphrey Gilbert's grant, 1578,") on a direct course south-westerly to the limit of the map, being the parallel of 50°: it divides Lake Mistassin into two parts in its course.

- (105) 1755.—"Carte des Possessions Angloises et Françaises du continent de l'Amerique Septentrionale, 1755, à Amsterdam, chez R. & J. Ottens, Geographes."

New York State Library.

Has an engraved and coloured line, corresponding exactly with that on Mitchell's map of 1755, just mentioned, and terminating at the same point, north of the Lake of the Woods, although the limit of the map is considerably west of that point. The territory north of this line to Hudson's Bay, is coloured yellow, such colouring not extending west of the westerly point of such line, or of the westerly shores of Lakes Sioux and Assenipouals. The territory south of the line is coloured green, such colouring being continued westerly to the limit of the map, in about the meridian 100°. The name "Canada" commences midway between Rainy Lake and Lake Nipigon. In the margin it is explained that the yellow and green colours indicate the English and French colonies, respectively. Canada has therefore no western limit: the western limit of the Hudson Bay territory is the eastern shore of Lake Winnipeg.

New York State Library.

A line, engraved and coloured, runs from Hudson's Straits south-westerly (at a greater distance from Hudson's Bay than a similar line on De l'Isle's and other maps) to and through Lake Nemiscan, and thence southerly to the height of land, south-east of Lake Abitibis, thence along the watershed, westerly to a point north of Lake Nipigon, and north-westerly to the Bourbon (Nelson) River, which it crosses at about the position of Split Lake, and thence north-westerly to and beyond the Churchill. A division of the waters of the Nelson and Churchill is indicated at these points of crossing, flowing on the one hand to Hudson's Bay, and on the other to Lac Bourbon. The first part of the name "Nouvelle France ou Canada" commences at Fort Dauphin near Lac des Prairies [Manitoba], and the second part commences west of the Mississippi, south of the St. Pierre [Minnesota] River. The south-western boundary of both Canada and Louisiana is the easterly boundary of New Mexico. The westerly watershed of Lake Superior is indicated.—In the margin is the memo: "Nota qu'on n'a point marque de limites."

New York State Library.

An engraved line, untruly marked "Bounds of the Hudson's Bay Company according to the Treaty of Utrecht," commences on the limit of the map, north-east of Lake Mistassin, and runs thence on a straight course south-westerly to the 49th parallel, which it follows to the westerly limit of the map, at about 100°.
