From a point east of Lake Mistassin an engraved line follows the watershed westerly to the portage of Temiscaming, and thence, partly along and partly north of the height of land, to a point north-east of Lake Népigon, and thence westerly, (crossing the Alémissaki, a river falling into Lake Népigon from the north, at a point where no stream is in existence), to the limit of the map, (in about the merid. of 88°, west of London) in that quarter; it crosses a branch of the Moose. It is marked "Bounds of Hudson's Bay by the Treaty of Utrecht." Another engraved line commences on the northern limit of the map, east of Hudson's Bay, and runs thence, south-westerly, to a point above the par. of 50°; it is transferred from, and entirely agrees with the like line on the original of D'Anville, (1746, ante). "Canada" has no limits assigned to it on the west; the map extends beyond Lakes Tecamamiouen and Missisacaigan. Fort St. Germain, Abitibis, Le Sueur and Luillier are marked.

A line engraved and coloured, marked "Bounds of Hudson's Bay by the Treaty of Utrecht," follows the height of land from the western limit of the map, in the meridian of L. Népigon, easterly beyond L. Mistassin. The name "Canada" applies to the country westward beyond Rainy Lake, the limit of the map in that quarter.

Shows a line exactly the same as that of Mitchell's map of 1755, already mentioned: it is engraved and coloured, but has no inscription. The map extends further to the westward and to the eastward than Mitchell's, but the line stops, incomplete, at either end, at the same points as on his. The western boundary of the territory north of this line is indicated by the limitation of the colouring to a line commencing at the western termination of the firstly mentioned line and thence northerly to and along the eastern banks of Lakes Sioux and Asseniponnals. The country south of the firstly mentioned line, and south of the parallel of its terminal point, westward to the limit of the map in about 105°, is coloured as a French possession, and named "Canada." This name commences midway between Rainy Lake and Lake Népigon. (Though the text of this map is French, 40 it is an English publication.)

Extends westward to a point a little west of Lake Abbitibis. The height of land is indicated by an engraved line, marked "Hanteurs des Terres." In the corner is a "Supplement pour les Laes du Canada," which shows these lakes, from Ontario to Lake of the Woods, inclusive. The division of the waters between Rainy Lake and Lake Superior is shown. Forts Luillier, Le Sueur, St. Pierre and St. Charles are marked.

- (112) 1755.—"Carte des Possessions Angloises et Françoises du Continent de l'Amerique Septentrionale, 50

Miscellaneous.

A line, engraved and coloured, follows the 49th parallel, from the western limit of the map, in about long. 105° west from Greenwich, to a point immediately west of Lake Abitibi, whence taking a turn to the south-east it follows the watershed, easterly and beyond Lake Mistassin. It bears the inscription "Borne entre la Canada et la terre de la Comp. de la Baie d'Hudson, réglée par les Commissaires après le Traite d'Utrecht." The name "Canada," applied to the country south of this line, commences midway between Rainy Lake and Lake Nipigon. (This appears to be the same map, as the one hereinbefore mentioned (No. 110) of like title and date, but showing a different boundary line.)

- (113) 1756.—"America verfertiget von Joh. George Schribery in Leipsiz," in "Das Britische Reich in America. . . Leipsiz, 1756."

Gives, as the westerly and south westerly boundary of "Canada," a coloured line, commencing at the mouth of the Bourbon [Nelson] River, thence up that river to L. Winnipeg, westerly along the line of the Saskatchewan River (not marked) a short distance, south easterly to the Mississippi at a point due west of L. Superior, and down that river to its confluence with the Ohio. Labrador and Hudson's Bay, except that portion of the west coast north of the Nelson, are included in Canada. The source of the Mississippi is south-west of L. Winnipeg.

A line corresponding to that on De l'Isle's maps already mentioned (ed. 1722), runs from the northern limit of the map (in lat. 52°), east of Hudson's Bay, to a point south of Albany, where it is stopped by the title. The name "Canada," on the face of the map, applies westward to the furthest limit—a little east of Rainy Lake.

- (116) 1756 (about)—"Carte Nouvelle d'Amérique Angloise. . . Amsterdam, Mortier."

The name "Canada ou Nouvelle France," on the face of the map, applies to the country westward to the sources of the Mississippi. Forts Nemiseau and St. Germain, and the Fort on the north shore of Lake Nipigon, are marked.

An engraved line follows the height of land, from the westerly limit of the map, at Lake Nepigon, to a point near Lake Abbitibi, which it approaches and crosses, running thence north-easterly and crossing Rupert R. midway between lakes Mistassin and Nemiscau. The name "Canada ou Nouvelle France" is on the face of the map.

- (120) 1756.—Amerique Septentrionale. par le Docteur Mitchell, traduit de l'Anglois. A Paris par le Ronge, Ingr. Geographe du Roy, . . . 1756." It is stated in the margin that the additional remarks contained in this edition are taken from the maps prepared by "Mr. le Chevalier de Rigaudier etc." Another edition of the same map: "A Paris par le Ronge. . . 1777, corrigée en 1776 par M. Hawkins, Brigadier des Armees du Roi," may be noticed at the same time, as the two practically agree.

New York State Library.

The northerly boundary line on the original of Mitchell, 1755, is here reproduced as shewing the English contention respecting the limits. It bears the inscription "Limites selon Mitchel de la Baie d'Hudson selon le Traitee d'Utrecht." On the one side—the west and south—this line is coloured blue; on the other side, from the Gulf as far west as the merid. of $85\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ it is green; and for the rest of the distance yellow.

Another line commences on the northern limit, east of Hudson's Bay (in about lat. $52^{\circ} 10'$ and long. $75^{\circ} 30'$, and runs southerly, in same position as that on De l'Isle's (ed. 1722), till it touches Mitchell's line (in lat. $50^{\circ} 10'$ and long. $75^{\circ} 30'$ nearly) which it follows to the parallel of 50° , along which it is continued to the westerly limit of the map, north of Lake of the Woods; it intersects Mitchell's line at the height of land, in long. $85^{\circ} 30'$, and again north of the easterly part of Lake of the Woods. On the one side—that nearest the Bay—it is coloured yellow through out; on the other side—from the northern limit of the map, and west as far as $85\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ —it is green, and for the rest of the distance blue. In the small map in the corner, the line from Cape Pentrix, south-west to the parallel of 50° , is green on the easterly, and yellow on the westerly side. It is marked "Limites proposées pour la Baie d'Hudson." In the margin it is explained that the blue colour indicates what is conceded to belong (according to Mitchell) to the French; the yellow what belongs to the English; and the green what is in dispute between them. This would leave in dispute the territory intervening between the two lines as far west as $85\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$, beyond which each concedes what the other claims. The following memo, appear (inter al) in the margin:—"Je l'ai 30 traduit et fait copier exactement, j'ai même laissé les limites selon les pretentions de MM. les Anglois, se qui sera ici sans consequence;" and again: "On seait que les limites supposées dans cette carte sont ici sans consequence et ne servent qu'à donner une idée des différentes pretentions." At the mouth of the River Bagouagahe, on the west bank, is marked "Ancien Fort du Sr. du Luth." This river falls into Lake Superior a little east of the Nepigon.

The lakes to the westward of Lake Superior, together with the French forts on or near them, are 40 correctly marked; except Fort Bourbon, which is cut off by the limit of the map. Partly on, and partly south of the 48th parallel, is shown a portion of a river which corresponds with the upper reaches of the Missouri, the lower parts of which are seen further down. The Mississippi has its source in Lac Rouge, about 2° due south from Lake of the Woods; Lac Rouge is also connected, by a river, with the Asseniboine, and with Lake Winnipeg. On the west coast an island, in the position of Vancouver, is shewn. The line of the main shore south of the Strait of San Juan, is run inwards, in a dotted line, immediately above which, and east of the island, is the inscription, "Mer de l'Ouest, inconnu." The dotted line in question appears to be that erroneously referred to by M. de Mofras as representing the Columbia River.

- (122) 1760.—"A map of Canada and the north part of Louisiana, and the adjacent countries, by Thomas 50

Jefferys," (bound with Jefferys' "History of the French Dominions, in North and South America. London, 1760.")

Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

Gives a pretty accurate representation of the lakes, and river communications, from west of Lake Superior to Hudson's Bay; the French forts in that quarter are marked. An affluent of the Mississippi issues from Red Lake or Missisacigaon, the sources of the main branch being almost due south of the Lake of the Woods, between 44° and 46° north, and 82° west from Ferro. The lower portion only of the Missouri is represented; and higher up, in an incomplete state, the "Manton's River," with the inscription "Some suppose a communication between Manton River and the Missouri and Mississippi." Either of these, produced, would connect with the Manton, which in reality represents the upper Missouri. "Canada" has no limits assigned to it on the north or west; the boundary between it and Louisiana is not shown. "Pointe des Bois Ports," on Red River, is marked.

- (123) 1762—"A map of Canada and the north part of Louisiana, with the adjacent countrys, by Thos. Jefferys, Geographer to His Majesty, 1762, published by Thos. Jefferys...." (copy attached to Mr. Mills' First Report.)

"Canada" is bounded on the north by a coloured line marked "High Lands," which follows the height of land from "Lake des Forts" to a point west of L. Mistassin; its southerly boundary line is along the St. Lawrence, Ottawa and French Rivers, and Lakes Huron and Superior, and (from the head of L. Superior westward to the meridian of 97° west of Ferro) the northern boundary of Louisiana, viz.: the height of land (marked "Land's Height") which divides the waters of the Mississippi and Winnipeg systems; on the west and north-west no boundaries are assigned to it. The western watershed of Lake Superior, and the lake and river communication between it and Hudson's Bay, together with the several French forts in that direction are shown; also Forts Abitibis, L'Hullier, Le Sacur, Perrot and Pte. des Bois. The source of the Mississippi is correctly marked with reference to the Lake of the Woods, but a possible extension is indicated by dots. The Missouri is shown as far as the par. of 44° , where there is a break, north-west of which is seen a portion of a river, and, between the two the inscription, "Some suppose a communication between the Manton River and the Missouri or Mississippi." As already mentioned, this Manton River is the upper part of the Missouri, which the French had explored from the direction of Lakes of the Woods and Winnipeg; their exploration of the lower part of it having proceeded from its mouth upwards. A line due west from the Lake of the Woods would not touch any part of either the Missouri or Mississippi, as here laid down. The name Manton probably proceeds from the name—Maudane, Manton, Mantane—of one of the most powerful of the Indian nations met with by the Chevalier de la Verendrye and other French explorers, on the Upper Missouri. Their chief villages were near the great bend of the river.

Canada extends westward to the Pacific, and northward to the 65th degree. Its southern boundary is shown by a line engraved and coloured, following the southern watershed of the St. Lawrence system, from the Gulf westward to a point due west of Fond du Lac, thence westerly along the northern watershed of the Mississippi [including the Missouri] system which is also here shown as the northern boundary of Louisiana, to the south-easterly corner of "Mer on Baye de l'Ouest." The source of the Mississippi is south-west of Lake of the Woods, in about long. 105° and lat. $45\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$. The Missouri rises in a range of mountains, at about long. 112° , and lat. 44° . Lac Michipipi is in nearly the position of L. Athabasca, which it seems intended to represent. Fort Abitibis and St. Germain are marked. The name "Canada" commences at the merid. of 95° .

Miscellaneous.

Notes on

A line, engraved and in part coloured, follows the parallel of 49° , from the westerly limit of the map (about 3° west of Lake of the Woods) to a point near Lake Mistassin, and thence north-easterly to a point on the Labrador coast, in about lat. 56° .* Here, it is intimated that "Davis ran into a harbour. . . in lat. 58° ." Another boundary line on the north, is indicated by the colouring on the face of the map; this line commences at Hudson's Straits, and passes south-westerly to a point south of Lake Abitibi, thus far conforming to the line on Bellin's map of 1755, already mentioned; it passes thence north-westerly near the estuary of the Moose, crossing the Albany between Lake St. Anne and Hudson's Bay; and running thence to and along the east shore of Split Lake, it ends on the limit of the map north of the Churchill. "Canada" extends westward to the limit of the map; the boundary between it and Louisiana is a line, engraved and coloured, following the 45th parallel from the same western limit easterly to the Mississippi, which it follows southerly. The source of this river is at a point due south of Lake of the Woods."

- (126) 1763 (about).—A map of part of North America, without author's or publisher's name, but clearly a section of the preceding map of Jefferys. On the corner is pasted a piece of paper with the following printed thereon: "The claims of the French in 1756 are coloured yellow." The paper and print of this memo. seem conformable to those of the map, and to have been contemporaneous with it.

New York State Library.

This map has a line starting from Hudson's Straits, passing south-westerly, midway between the Bay and Lake Mistassin and to a point south of Lake Abitibi, and thence north-westerly, crossing the Moose and the Albany, as in the preceding, to Split Lake, and thence, north-westerly, beyond the Churchill. It is marked "Limits of Canada from Bellin's Carte, 1754." Outside this line—westward to the limit of the map, south-westward to the western watershed of the Missouri, south to the Gulf of Mexico, south-easterly to the Alleghanies, and along the rear of the English colonies to the sea at Casco Bay—all is coloured yellow as a French possession. Another engraved line, following the 49th parallel, is shewn, as in the preceding map.

- (127) 1763 (about).—The same section of the same map as the preceding. A piece of paper pasted in the corner has the following printed on it: "Plate II. The French dominions, as proposed by M. de Bussy, in 1761, are coloured yellow, and the lands proposed by M. de Bussy to be neutral are coloured green." The paper and print of this memo. are of the same character as those of the 30 memo. on the preceding map.

New York State Library.

An engraved line follows the parallel of 49° as in the two preceding maps. The southern boundary of Canada is a coloured line, commencing at the western limit of the map in latitude $45\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$, thence easterly between that and the parallel of 46° , and along the northerly watershed of the Mississippi to Fond du Lac, thence through Lake Superior, St. Mary's River, etc. South of this line the yellow colouring extends westward to the westerly watershed of the Missouri.

- (128) 1763 (about).—"A general map of North America. . . from actual surveys and observations made in the army employed there from the year 1754 to 1761. Drawn by the late John Roque, Topographer to His Britannic Majesty, London, published by M. A. Roque and A. Dury." 40

Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

A line, engraved and coloured, runs from a point east of Lake Mistassin, westerly, along the height of land (but crossing the head waters of the Moose on the way) to the north shore of Lake Nipigon, and thence, north-westerly and across the Nelson and Churchill rivers, to the parallel of 60° . All to the north of this line is distinguished by a difference of colour from the territories to the south. On the west shore of the bay is the name "British Canada." Another engraved line follows the 49th parallel, and from a point due south of Moose Port, westward. It is marked "The southern boundary of the Hudson Bay Company's territories settled by the Commissioners after the treaty of Utrecht." The inscription "Hudson's Bay Company's lands," extends on the 50th parallel, from a point 10° west of L. Manitoba, to a point south of Fort Rupert. The sources of 50 the Mississippi are in lat. $45\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ and long. 101° . The Missouri is cut short: it has on it the inscription

"The head not yet discovered." Further north and west, a proportion of a river, corresponding with the Manton River already mentioned, is shown, with the inscription: "It is not yet determined whether this is the source of the Missouri or not." The French forts on the lakes beyond Superior are represented as being in existence.

- (129) 1763 (about).—"A map of the British and French settlements in North America. J. Lodge, delin. et sculp." No author's or publisher's name. It seems to have been specially intended to shew the claims of the English. In the margin reference is made to "The French encroachments."

In possession of the Ontario Government.

An engraved line marked "Bounds of Hudson's Bay by the Treaty of Utrecht" commences at a point north-east of L. Mistassin, and runs westerly, exactly as in Mitchell's map of 1755, to the terminal point of the like line on that map, north of the Lake of the Woods; it is continued thence westerly about a degree, leaving a space of nearly another degree between its terminal point and the western limit of the map. This line crosses a branch of the Moose as in Mitchell's; and from this point westward to near Nepigon river, "The Northern Mountains or Ye Land's Height," are delineated as being considerably below the line. The name "New France or Canada," commences at Rainy River between Rainy Lake and Lake of the Woods; it applies westward to the limit of the map. The sources of the Mississippi are in nearly the proper position with reference to Lake of the Woods. Forts Abitibis, Lullier and Le Sueur are marked as in existence.

- (130) 1763.—"A new map of North America from the latest discoveries, 1763."

Has an engraved line marked "Bounds of Hudson's Bay by the Treaty of Utrecht" * corresponding exactly with that on the preceding map, but here extending to the westerly limit of the map which is on the same meridian as the limit of the preceding. The sources of the Mississippi, in relation to Lake of the Woods, are marked in nearly the proper positions. Forts Abitibis, L'Hullier and Le Sueur are also marked.

1857.

A line, engraved and coloured, commences at the south-easterly point of Labrador, and runs north-westerly and westerly to the Albany River, leaving Lake Mistassin to the north and closely skirting the foot of James' Bay. West of the Bay is the name "Nouvelle Albion"—a name properly applicable to a tract of country on the Pacific.

- (132) 1763.—"A new map of North America. . . 1763. J. Spilsburg, sculpt."

The western limit of the map is a little west of the Lake of the Woods. A line, engraved and coloured, and marked "Bounds of Hudson's Bay by the Treaty of Utrecht," commences at the point in the western limit where the line on Mitchell's map of 1755 (hereinbefore mentioned), produced westerly, would end, and runs thence easterly, and in about the same position as that on Mitchell's, to the eastern limit of the map, beyond Mistassin. The name "New France, or Canada," commences just east of the Lake of the Woods, but refers to the country westward to the limit of the map: the southern boundary, west of Lake Superior, being the parallel of 48°, is here marked "The north bounds of New England by Charter."

- (133) 1763 (about).—"A New map of North America, showing the advantages obtained therein to England by the Peace."

New York State Library;

Has a line corresponding to that on Mitchell's map of 1755 (hereinbefore mentioned), as far west as the terminal point of that line, and running thence south-westerly to the western limit of the map, in about long 103° and lat. 49° 12'. The name "Canada," on the face of the map applies westward to the same limit. The sources of the Mississippi are in about their true position. Lake of the Woods has no feeders.

An engraved line, marked “Bounds of Hudson’s Bay by the Treaty of Utrecht,”* runs from the eastern limit of the map, east of Lake Mistassin, westerly along the height of land (but crossing the Moose on the way), to a point north of Lake Nepigon; thence westerly and south-westerly, north of Lake of the Woods and to the limit of the map, in about 100°, a little below the 50th parallel. The name “New France, or Canada,” commences just east of Rainy Lake. A small river appears as a feeder to the Lake of the Woods, whose discharge is through Rainy and Long Lakes into Lake Superior.

- (135) 1763 (about).—“North America, from the French of Mr. D’Anville, improved with the English surveys made since the Peace.” (Copy attached to Mr. Mills’ first report.)

A line, coloured and marked as a mountain chain, commences east of L. Mistassin, and follows the position of the height of land westerly to the portage of Temiseamingue, thence westerly, partly along and partly north of the position of the height of land, to a point north of Lake Nepigon, and thence (and from this point marked “The Land’s Height,”) north-westerly in the direction of Split Lake to the limit of the map, in about lat. 53° 30’ and long. 96° 30’. The line crosses a branch of the Moose. “Canada” has no limit on the west but that of the map; on the south-west it is bounded by the Mississippi, from its confluence with the Ohio to the point, in lat. 45°, where it is cut short by the border of the map. From the Mississippi eastward, the Ohio forms the 20 boundary.

Has a line, engraved and coloured, corresponding with that on De l’Isle’s map (ed. 1722), but ending on the shore of the Bay, considerably to the west of the mouth of the Churehill. Within this line is the name “Nouvelle Bretagne.” The Mississippi and Poskoyac rise in a chain of mountains; in which other rivers, that flow westward to the sea, have also their sources. The Upper Mississippi is indicated as the boundary between Louisiana and Canada. North of the Poskoyac are two large lakes, one of which, named Michinipi, seems intended, as hereinbefore mentioned, to represent Lake Athabasca.

- (138) 1772.—“A map of the British Dominions in North America, according to the Treaty in 1763. By Peter Bell, Geographer, 1772.” It is bound with the work, “History of the British Dominion in America. . . . London: Strachan. . . . and Beckett & Co., 1773.”

Ottawa, mentioned to Mr. Mill’s Report.

The Mississippi is coloured from its confluence with the Illinois to the point where it stops, incomplete, south-west of Lake of the Woods, in long. 102°, and lat. 47½°. All to the west of it is named Louisiana; north and north-east of it is “Canada,” having for northern boundary a line, engraved and coloured, commencing north-east of Lake Mistassin, and following the height of land (crossing the Moose, however, on the way) westward to a point north of Lake Nepigon, whence it runs south-westerly to the river Winnipeg. West of this point, it is blank and marked, “Parts undiscovered.” These parts would appear by the map to pertain to Canada.

The height of land west of Lake Superior, and also that from Nipigon to Split Lake, are marked. The map extends to the Pacific.

In possession of the Ontario Government.

A line, engraved and coloured, commencing east of Lake Mistassin, takes a sweep northward of that lake to Lake Nemiscau, whence it accords with the line on Bellin's map of 1755, terminating, as in that map, at a point beyond the Churchill. The name "Canada" commences at the Mississippi, north of the Illinois. A line, engraved and coloured, follows the Mississippi to its source (nearly); and thence north-westerly to Red River; thence it is continued as a coloured line to the southerly shore of Lac Ouinipigon, where the River Maurepas [Winnipeg] discharges into it; thence along the westerly shore of that lake to the southerly bank of the river which connects it with Lac des Prairies (Manitoba); and thence along that southerly bank and the easterly shore of Lac des Prairies, to the limit of the map at about the centre of that lake. No boundary is assigned to Canada toward the north-west. The source of the Mississippi is in nearly the right position with reference to the Lake of the Woods; it is marked, "Sources du Mississippi." The waters of the Churchill and Nelson Rivers flow, from the point where they are respectively intersected by the northerly line, on the one hand to Hudson's Bay and on the other to Lac Bourbon.

- (142) 1774.—"A map of the British Empire in North America. By Samuel Dunn, mathematician. London: 10th January, 1774."

Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

The name "Canada" commences east of Rainy Lake. It applies westward to the limit of the map, beyond Lakes Winnipeg and Manitoba. The height of land, marked "The Land's Height" is shewn as running to Split Lake. In the margin is the memo:—"The Hudson's Bay Company's Territories, comprehending New South Wales, New North Wales, Prince William's Land, with the Arctic Lands, down to the London coast in Greenland, and New Britain or Labrador.—Canada, divided into the Government of Quebec and Indian Canada.—The Reserved Lands which contain all the countries comprehended between the Appalaches and the Mississippi." The name Labrador or New Britain is here applied to the territory north of the parallel of the East Main River; New South Wales, to that north of the Albany as far as Nelson River; New North Wales, to that west of Button's Bay.

"Canada" is bounded on the south-west by the Mississippi to its source. No limits are assigned to it on the west or north. The map extends to the Pacific Ocean, into which a river falls, which occupies the position of and is evidently intended to represent the Columbia.

- (144) 1774.—"A map of the British Dominions in North America," (in work, "A complete History of the late War. Dublin: 1774.")

Mr. Lindsay's Report.

Contains a line marked "Bounds of Hudson's Bay by the Treaty of Utrecht." It follows substantially the height of land, from a point west of L. Mistassin to a point north of Lake Nipigon (crossing however a river), whence it runs westerly, passing the Lake of the Woods at a distance of about half a degree north of that Lake.†

Mills' First Report: the original is to be found in the Department of the Secretary of State, at Washington).

Shews the "Province of Quebec," as constituted by the Quebec Bill, 1774. The name commences at the Mississippi. A line, engraved and coloured, follows what are here called "High Lands." It commences south-east of Lake Mistassin, and ends on the limit of the map towards Split Lake, in about $51\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ north, and 94° west. It crosses a branch of the Moose, and the position of the waters of or connected with Long Lake: otherwise it substantially follows the height of land. The southern boundary of the Province from the Bay of Chaleurs, westward to the Mississippi, in that set out in the Act of 1774; it thence follows the Mississippi northerly to the limit of the map in latitude $45\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ and longitude 96° nearly. An affluent of this river issues from Red Lake. 10

(c) Certain Maps mentioned by Mr. Bouchette, shewing the Mississippi, from its confluence with the Ohio to Turtle Lake, to be the western boundary of Upper Canada.

(d) A Map* of Bowen's, not produced at the trial, but said by a witness to have shewn the western boundary of Upper Canada as running due north from the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi. 20

(147-9) 1775 (about).—"An accurate Map of North America, describing and distinguishing the British and Spanish Dominions according to the Treaty of the 10th February, 1763. By Eman. Bowen, Geographer to His Majesty, and Jno. Gibson, Engraver." (From "The Americau Atlas..... engraved by the late Thomas Jefferys, Geographer to the King [and others], London; Sayer and Bennett, 1776.")

New York State Library.

An engraved line follows the height of land, from a point north-east of Lake Mistassin, westerly to the meridian of Moose Fort where it meets the 49th parallel; it is continued thence west, 30 along that parallel to Red River, where the map stops; it is marked "The southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's territories settled by Commissaries after the Treaty of Utrecht."* The Mississippi runs from a short distance north-west of, and into Red Lake; from that lake southward it is indicated by an engraved and coloured line, as the limit between Louisiana and the English possessions; it forms in its upper part the south-western boundary of "Canada;" but north of Red Lake no western limit is assigned to that country. The Mississippi and the Missouri are correctly laid down in relation to each other; there is added after the name of each, "whose head is unknown." The old Province of Quebec is shewn.

Another edition of Bowen and Gibson's map, "London, printed for Thomas Sayer, 2nd July, 1775," practically agrees with the preceding. A space, however, intervenes between Red River 40 and the western limit of the map, and over this space the boundary line of the 49th parallel is not continued; and the colouring (but not the engraving) of the Mississippi line extends a little to the north-west of Red Lake.

In yet another of Bowen and Gibson's maps, without date, but published by Robert Sayer, the boundary line of 49° is carried west to the meridian of about 103°, which is also the limit of the map; and the name "New France or Canada" commences in long. $92\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west of Greenwich.

In Greenhow's History of Oregon, it is stated, (App. F.), that on a certain map therein mentioned,

* This is the only published Map of which mention has been found, made as shewing the westerly boundary to be a line drawn due north from the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi. Search has been made, here and abroad, for any map shewing such a line, but unsuccessfully. 50 of these authors, the boundary line of Hudson's Bay is continued from the point where the 49th parallel intersects the Red River, down that river to Lake Winnipeg. This accords in effect with certain maps wherein the southern boundary terminates at or near the River Winnipeg, and is carried to and along the eastern shore of the lake.

- (150) 1775.—"North America from the French of Mr. D'Anville. London; Sayer & Bennet, 1775." On it is the memo:—"The boundaries of the Provinces, since the conquest of Canada, are laid down as settled by the King in Council."

New York State Library.

"Canada" extends westward to the limit of the map, midway between Rainy Lake and Lake of the Woods. The name commences on the westerly shore of Lake Superior. The height of land, marked, "The Land's Height," is laid down from the limit of the map, in the direction of Split Lake, to a point north-east of Lake Nipigon. So far, it is only a range of mountains. Thence, easterly to a point beyond Mistassin it is doubly coloured; and from thence it proceeds—also coloured—to the limit of the map, in the direction of Davis' Inlet. A division of the waters is marked, though not correctly, between Rainy Lake and Lake Superior. The southern boundary is carried from the Bay of Chaleurs westward to the Ohio, and along the Ohio to its confluence with the Mississippi; and thence the boundary line runs northward along that river to the limit of the map in latitude 45°.

- (151) 1776.—"North America" (from "Jefferys' American Atlas, or a geographical description of the whole continent of America, and chiefly the British colonies, composed from numerous surveys which were made by order of the Government..... engraved by Thomas Jefferys, London, 1776-8.")

This is another of the maps sent by the Hudson's Bay Company, to the Dominion Government, for the purposes of the present arbitration. It has a line, engraved and coloured, which commences at the western limit of the map, in longitude 87°, and runs easterly, partly along and partly north of the height of land, to a point east of Lake Nipigon; whence it runs north-easterly to the limit of the map, in lat. 53° and long. 66°, nearly. It crosses a branch of the Moose. The name "Canada" commences north of this line, midway between Lake Abitibis and Hudson's Bay. Fort Abitibis is marked, as also the "French House," on Lake Mistassin; Fort Rupert is marked "abandoned."

New York State Library.

An engraved line, commencing on the limit of the map, north-east of Lake Mistassin, follows the height of land westward to the portage, of Temiscaming; it is marked "land's height"; it does not extend further west. A stream enters Red Lake from the north-west; it is marked "Mississippi R, whose head is unknown;" a line of dots marked "conjectural" connects it with Red River. From Red Lake downwards its course is marked by a line, engraved and coloured, which would seem to form the south-western boundary of "Canada." North of Red Lake, no western limit is shown, and on the north there is no line except that already mentioned. The map extends westward to Lake Winnipeg, and northward to Cape Henriette Marie.

Has a line corresponding with that on De l'Isle's Map (ed. 1722), but ending at the mouth of R. du Loup, west of the Churchill. Between this line and Hudson's Bay is the name "Nouvelle Bretagne."

- (159) 1778.—"Théâtre de la Guerre en Amérique," from the same Atlas.

New York State Library.

A line corresponding with that on De l'Isle's Map (ed. 1722), runs from the par. of 53°, being the northerly limit of the map east of Hudson's Bay, to the 50th parallel, which it follows to the 30 westerly limit, a little beyond the meridian of Michipicoten.

- (160) 1778.—"The World, with the latest discoveries, from the best authorities... J. Lodge, sculpt.," (in work, "History of America... by William Russel, Esq., of Gray's Inn. London... 1778)."

Shews a line running from about Cape Perdrix direct to Lake Mistassin. Recommencing south of, but not touching, that Lake, it runs westerly in about the same position as that on Mitchell's Map of 1755, to a point north of Lake of the Woods, being the same point at which it stops in Michell's.

- (161) 1778.—"An exact map of the Five Great Lakes... and Hudson's Bay Territories." "J. Lodge sculpt." (in the same work.)

A range of mountains, along portions of which a line of engraved dots appears, extends from the head of Nodway's River, on the eastern limit of the map, westward to a point north of Lake Nepigon; and thence north-westward, in the direction of Split Lake, to the limit of the map in that quarter, in 92° West and 53° North. It crosses the middle branch of the Moose, and is marked "Bounds of the Hudson's Bay Company." The name "Canada" commences midway between Rainy Lake and the R. Nepigon.

- (163) 1778.—"A new Map of North America, from the latest discoveries, 1778. Engraved for Carver's Travels."

Legislative Assembly Library, Toronto.

An engraved line marked "Proposed limits of Hudson's Bay," runs from the position of Cape Perdrix, on a straight course south-west to the north-east shore of Lake Mistassin. This was the line proposed by the Hudson's Bay Company in 1712. Another engraved line commences at a point north-east of this lake, and runs thence westerly, and to the north of what are there called the Northern Mountains, and north of the true position of the height of land, to a point north of Lake Nepigon. From the last mentioned point, the line runs westerly, corresponding exactly with that on Mitchell's map of 1755, and terminating at the same point, north of the Lake of the Woods, as the line on that map. The sources of the Mississippi in reference to the Lake of the Woods, are near their true position. The water communications between this Lake and Hudson's Bay are shown with some approach to correctness. The map extends to the Pacific; an inland sea—"Western Sea,"—being indicated in the same position as on the maps of De l'Isle and Buache. No limits are assigned to "Canada" on the west, nor is the boundary between it and Louisiana shewn. Forts Charles, Maurepas and Bourdon are marked.

- (164) 1778.—"A Plan of Captain Carver's Travels in the interior parts of North America, in 1766 and 1767," (in same work).

The sources of the Mississippi are placed in almost their true position, and due south of L. of the Woods. The division of the waters between Lakes Superior and La Pluie is clearly marked.

- (165) 1779.—A Map in the "History of the American War," published in Dublin, 1779.

Has a line marked "Bounds of the Hudson's Bay by the Treaty of Utrecht." It rises north of lat. 50°, near the merid. of 68°, and terminates on the west at lat. 50° north of Lake of the Woods. (Summarized from Mr. Lindsey's work, p. 99).

- (166) 1780.—"L'Amérique. . . par le Sieur Janvier, à Paris, chez Lattré, graveur. . . .1780."

New York State Library.

Shows "Mer ou Baye de l'Ouest," as in Buache's maps hereinbefore referred to. A coloured line, which seems to indicate the northern boundary of "Canada," runs easterly from this sea, just above the parallel of 50° to the coast of Labrador; the southern boundary is marked by a line, engraved and coloured, which runs from the south-east corner of the sea in question, easterly to and along the watershed between the Mississippi and Winnipeg systems, and thence following the southerly watershed of the great lakes and of the St. Lawrence to the [Atlantic] sea.

New York State Library.

Has a line engraved and coloured, corresponding nearly to that on De l'Isle's map (ed. 1722) but crossing the R. Danoise [Churchill] and terminating at a point north of it, without approaching the Bay. The western watershed of Lake Superior is marked, and, beyond it, the various lakes and rivers which form the communication with Hudson's Bay. The source of the Mississippi is south-west of Lake of the Woods. "Canada" extends to the Western Sea; the name commences at Lake Manitoba. The boundary between it and Louisiana is a line, engraved and coloured, commencing at the Rocky Mountains (not named), and running thence easterly to and along the northerly watershed of the Missouri, to the parallel of the junction of the Illinois and Mississippi, and thence due east of the Alleghanies.

- (169) 1783 (about)—"A new map of the United States . . . with the British Dominions, by Samuel Dunn, improved . . . from . . . Carver. London, Laurie & Whittle."

New York State Library.

A line engraved and coloured, and evidently intended to represent that of the Treaty of 1783, but carried along the Kamanistiquia (named also Long Lake) and north of Rainy Lake, runs to and through the Lake of the Woods, and thence westerly a short distance, with the inscription "To the Mississippi." Canada has no limits on the west or north; the name commences east of Rainy Lake. The limit of the map on the west is beyond Lake of the Meadows [Manitoba]. The land's height, shewn as a range of mountains only, runs to Split Lake.

- (170) 1783.—"America. New and correct map of the United States of North America, agreeable to the Peace of 1783, showing the boundary of Hudson's Bay according to the Treaty of Utrecht. By Abel Buell, New Haven."

Library, London, England.

The southern boundary of Hudson's Bay, extends, by a well-marked red line, north of Lake of the Woods and north of Lake Temiscaming, and does not follow the watershed. The Ohio River and the Mississippi, as far as it runs north, are given as the southern and western boundaries respectively of the Province of Quebec.

- (171) 1785.—"United States of North America, with the British and Spanish Territory, according to the Treaty of 1784, published 1785."

Library, London, England.

Shews the Mississippi as the boundary of "Canada," westward of Lake of the Woods.

- (172) 1785.—"Etats-Unis. . . à Paris, chez De la Marche, 1785."

New York State Library.

The international boundary is shewn, from a point $1\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ due west of Lac des Bois, easterly to the head of the Connecticut River; all north of it, including James' Bay, to the limit of the map, in 53° , is "Canada." A little to the south-west of Lac des Bois is shewn the head of the Mississippi with the memo: "Mississippi tant la source, est encore inconnu." From the westerly termination of the international boundary, already mentioned, a coloured and engraved line is drawn to this supposed source of the Mississippi, and is thence continued down the river to the Illinois, thence eastward to the Alleghanies, and thence northward to the international boundary line in Lake Erie. Across the face of the country enclosed by these lines is the memo: "Cedés aux Etats Unis le 30, 9bre, 1782."

- (173) 1786.—"America Mappa Generalis . . . Honmanianinis Heredibus, 1786."

New York State Library.

Has a line corresponding with that on De l'Isle's map; it is closer, however, to the Bay than is shewn on the edition of 1722, and ends at the mouth of the Churchill. Within it is the name "Nova Britannia." The name "Canada v. Nova Francia" commences west of L. Assinipouals [Winnipeg].

- (174) 1787.—"Mappe Monde. . . Hémisphère Occidental, in the Atlas Encyclopédique. . . par M. Bonne, Ing. Hyd. de la Marine, et par M. Desmarest, de l'Académie Royale des Sciences. A Paris, 1787."

New York State Library.

The name "Canada" commences just east of Lake Winnipeg. That country has no limit on the west, and Hudson's Bay is included in it. (Several other maps in this atlas show the same features).

- (175) 1790.—"A particular map of the American Lakes, Rivers, etc., par le Sr. D'Anville. . . London: Drawn and engraved for John Harrison, 1790."

Legislative Assembly Library, Toronto.

A dotted line, without inscription, follows the watershed, from a point south-east of L. Mistassin,

- westerly and northerly, to a point west of and close to the same lake, in about latitude 50° 40'. "Canada ou Nouvelle France" has no limits on the north or west.
- (176) 1791.—"Sketch of the Western Countries of Canada," bound in work "Voyages and Travels of an Indian Interpreter and Trader. . . By J. Long. . . London, 1791."

Legislative Assembly Library, Toronto.

The map extends to the western watershed of Lake Superior, and includes the Upper Mississippi. There is no boundary line on the west or on the north; but circling James' Bay, from the Albany to the Rupert, is the inscription: "Territories of the Hudson's Bay Company."

- (177) 1791.—"A map of North America. . . by D'Anville. Drawn and engraved by J. Harrison. . . [London] 1791."

Legislative Assembly Library, Toronto.

From the south-east corner of Lake Mistassin a dotted line, marked "Hautours des terres," runs north-easterly a distance of some 7° or 8°; no other limit is shown to "Canada" on the north, nor has it any bounds on the west. A coloured line runs from Lake Superior westerly along the Kamanistiquia (not named) and some streams which run to the north of, and almost parallel with, the line of the international boundary, to a point north of the westernmost point of the Lake of the Woods. This line seems intended to represent the southern boundary of Canada in that quarter. The source of the Mississippi is due south of the Lake of the Woods.

- (178) 1794.—"North America, wherein are particularly distinguished the British Dominions, the United States and the adjacent Spanish Territories, by Thomas Kitchen, Hydrographer to His Majesty. London: Laurie & Whittle. . . 1794."

An engraved line, commencing at a point north-east of Lake Mistassin, runs westerly along the watershed to a point south of Lake Abitibi, thence westerly, partly along and partly north of the watershed, and partly north of what are there called the "Northern Mountains or the Land's Height," to the meridian of 90°, and thence north-westerly in the direction of Split Lake to the limit of the map, in longitude 93° 45', and latitude 52½°, about. It is marked "Boundary of Hudson's Bay Company." This line crosses the middle branch of the Moose and also the head waters of one of the branches of the Albany. The international boundary is run to the limit of the map, nearly 2° west of the Lake of the Woods, at which point is the inscription: "Due west to the Mississippi." The Mississippi is cut off by the same limit in about latitude 46°. At the parallel of 45° is the inscription: "Thus far the Mississippi has been ascended." "Canada" has no limits assigned to it toward the west or north.

- (179) 1795.—"Map exhibiting all the new discoveries in the interior parts of North America, inscribed by permission to the Honourable Governor and Company of Adventurers trading into Hudson's Bay, in testimony of their liberal communications, by A. Arrowsmith, London. . . 1795, corrected to 1802."

Library, London, England.

This map shows the word "Upper" in "Upper Canada," north of Height of Land, the letter "U" being on the 50th parallel, in about longitude 87° 50'. There is no boundary indicated between Hudson's Bay and Canada. The map published in 1804 is the same in these respects. In the map published in 1822, the position of the words "Upper Canada" is changed to south of the Height of Land, the country north of Height of Land being marked as Rupert's Land. In no other of Arrowsmith's maps is any boundary line indicated as between Canada and Hudson's Bay. In an addition of Arrowsmith's said map of 1795, and so dated, but published in 1650, the words "Upper Canada" had been re-engraved along the shores of Lake Superior, instead of being, as in the original, partly above the Height of Land.

- (180) 1798.—"A new map of Upper and Lower Canada, 1798." (In work "Travels through the States of North America, and the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada during the years, 1795, 1796 and 1797, by Isaac Weld, junior. . . London. . . 1799.") commences north of Lake of the Woods; no limits are assigned to that Province on the west or on the north.

The map extends westward and includes part of Lake Winnipeg. The name "Upper Canada"

- (181) 1799.—Map, published by Phillips, London, 1799, in La Rochefoucauld's Travels (Eng. ed.)
New York State Library.

"Upper Canada" extends to the western limit of the map, in longitude 95°. From this limit, in about latitude 51°, a line (which, produced, would probably have gone toward Split Lake), runs easterly, substantially following the height of land to a point near Lake Mistassin, thence northerly, on a winding course, to and a little beyond the River Rupert.

- (182) 1802.—"Northern Hemisphere. London: Faden, Geographer to the King and to the Prince of Wales. 1802." 10

New York State Library.

A line, engraved and coloured, commences north of Lake Mistassin, near the Slude River, and runs thence easterly and southerly to the height of land, which it follows to a point north of Lake Nejeigon, whence it passes westerly and then north-westerly, to a river which runs into Lake Winnipeg from the north-east. The international boundary is run some little distance west of the Lake of the Woods, and forms, to that point, the southern boundary of "Upper Canada" and of "Canada." These names commence—the first, north of Rainy River; the second at Kam-inistiquia.

- (183) 1808.—"Carte des Etats-Unis par Tardieux. Paris, 1808" (being a new edition of his map of 1802). 20

Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

The international boundary line is carried westward to Rainy Lake, where it is stopped by the limit of the map, in lat. 49°. Thus far it is also the southern limit of "Upper Canada." The Mississippi is doubly coloured, as the boundary line between Louisiana and the United States, to its source in White Bear Lake. Here the red colour which indicates the Louisiana side stops, and the green, which indicates the United States side, is carried northerly to a point outside the border of the map, where is the inscription: "Lake of the Woods."

- (184) 1809.—"Map of Canada, etc.," in "Letters from Canada By Hugh Gray London, 1809."

Legislative Assembly Library, Toronto.

The names of "Canada" and "Upper Canada" respectively, commence at the western limit of 30 the map, in about long. 102°.

- (185) 1815.—"Map of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, with the adjacent parts of the United States of America, etc By Joseph Bonchette. Published August 12th, 1815, by W. Faden, London." The dedication is to H. R. H. the Prince Regent, and is signed "Joseph Bonchette, His Majesty's Surveyor-General for Lower Canada and Lieut.-Col. C. M."

Parliamentary Library, Ottawa.

The map extends to the par. of 55° on the north, and to and including a part of Lake Winnipeg on the west. The height of land north of Lake Superior, etc., is clearly marked without being named. The international boundary line is run to the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods, and forms to that point the southerly boundary of "Upper Canada;" no limits are assigned to 40 that Province on the north or west; the name commences at Lake Savane, north of the height of land, and continues so to the north till it deflects to the south on approaching the inter provincial boundary at Teniscaming. The Mississippi is coloured as a boundary line to its source in Turtle Lake, where the line stops.

In the margin is the memo: "On this map the territories claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company, in virtue of the charter granted to them by King Charles the Second, are coloured green; 50

It shows the Company's claim at that date, in respect of limits, to have been to all the lands north of the international boundary line, whose waters flow, directly or indirectly, to Hudson's Bay or Straits, or into the bays and channels which are approachable through these on the north; there is but one exception, viz: east of Lake Nepigon, where the waters of, or to the south of, Long Lake are cut by the line of boundary. On the Labrador coast the line does not approach Cape Perdreux, Grimington's Island, Davis' Inlet or any other point which, in the last century was claimed as its terminal point by the Company or by English Geographers. It runs from Cape Chudleigh (the entrance point of Hudson's Straits) southerly to and along the watershed. The portion of the northern watershed of the Missouri which is north of the international boundary, is not claimed to belong to the Company.

[A map published by the Company in 1850, for the information of Parliament, almost agrees with that of 1857.]

RIGHTS OF POSTLIMINY.

THE DUKE OF YORK'S PATENT OF THE LANDS AND RIVERS FROM THE WEST SIDE OF THE CONNECTICUT RIVER TO THE EAST SIDE OF DELAWARE BAY, ETC., 12TH MARCH, 1664.

By the Treaty of Westminster the United Provinces relinquished their conquest of New Netherland to the king of England. The Sovereign Dutch States-General had treated directly with Charles, as Sovereign. A question at once arose at Whitehall about the subordinate interest of the Duke of York. It was claimed by some that James's former American proprietorship was revived. Yet while the Treaty of Westminster re-established the articles of capitulation agreed to by Nicolls and Stuyvesant, who represented their Sovereigns in 1664, it did not cure the imperfections, subject to which the Duke had for nine years governed his American Province. James's patent had been sealed while the Dutch were in quiet possession of New Netherland, and no new grant was made to him after the Treaty of Breda, which confirmed to the English king his conquest of the Dutch Province. Eminent lawyers "very justly questioned" the Duke's pretension to the territory which England had recently recovered, because its cession to her sovereign by the Dutch Government "had given no strength to original defects." James was now obliged to give up the claim of English right which he and his brother had formerly maintained. Moreover, the Duke wished to regain New Jersey which he had foolishly squandered on Berkeley and Carteret. Besides, the boundary agreement with Connecticut which had been ratified by the Crown or by himself, was a sore point. The opinion of counsel having been taken, they advised that the Duke's proprietorship had been extinguished by the Dutch conquest, and that the king was alone seized of New Netherland, by virtue of the Treaty of Westminster. The Jus Postliminii did not obtain in New York.

A new patent to the Duke of York was therefore sealed [on the 20th June, 1674]. By it the King again conveyed to his brother the territories he had held before, and granted him anew the absolute power of government he had formerly enjoyed over British subjects, with the like additional authority over "any other person or persons" inhabiting his province. Under the same description of boundaries New Jersey, and all the territory west of the Connecticut River, together with Long Island and the adjacent islands, and the region of Pemaquid, were again included in the grant. The new patent did not, as has been commonly, but erroneously stated, "recite and confirm the former." It did not in any way allude to that instrument. It read as if no previous patent had ever existed. It was a second grant, in almost the same terms with the first, and it conveyed to the Duke, ostensibly for the first time, a territory which the Dutch Government, after conquering and holding, had by treaty "restored to His Majesty." * * *

One of the motives to the Duke of York's second patent was the peculiar condition of New Jersey. James considered that his former release of that region to Berkeley and Carteret was annulled by the Dutch conquest—just as his own grant from the King had been. But both his grantees were old courtiers, and more than his match where their own interests were at stake. They played their own separate games, and eventually they beat the Duke.*

[The Duke of York, on the 29th July, 1674, made a new patent† to Sir Geo. Carteret, of the land westward of Long Island, and Manhattas Island, and bounded on the east, part by the main sea and part by the Hudson's River, and extending southward as far as a certain creek called Barnegat, and bounded on the west in a straight line from Barnegat Creek to a creek called Rankokus F'el, in Delaware River, and from thence up the said Delaware River to the northernmost branch thereof, which is in latitude 41° 40', and thence in a straight line to Hudson's River in 41° of latitude. The second grant of the Duke to Sir Geo. Carteret did not give any powers of government, but Sir George Carteret stood in much the same position towards the Dutch conquerors that the Duke did himself, and his title, like the Duke's, was subject to extinguishment by the conquest. There was another ground for granting a second patent: the country not being in possession of the King, but in the possession of Holland at the time the first patent was granted, nothing was conveyed by it, and upon this ground a second patent became necessary.]

King Charles II. having granted what is now the States of New York, New Jersey, and Delaware, to the Duke of York, he sent an armament in 1664 to wrest it from the Dutch. After reducing New York the squadron proceeded to the settlements on the Delaware, which immediately submitted. In the same year the Duke conveyed that portion of his grant lying between the Hudson and Delaware Rivers to Lord Berkeley and Sir Geo. Carteret. The tract was called New Jersey.....The two proprietors formed a constitution for the colony, securing equal privileges and liberty of conscience to all.....A few years afterwards the repose of the colony began to be disturbed by domestic disputes; some of the inhabitants, having purchased their lands of the Indians previous to the conveyance from the Duke, refused to pay rent to the proprietors.....In 1672 an insurrection took place; the people assumed the government and chose a Governor. The former Governor returned to England and obtained from the proprietors such favourable concessions and promises as quieted the people and induced them again to submit to his authority.

York's
March, 1664.

Lord Berkeley disposed of his property, rights and privileges in the territory to Edward Billinge; and he being enveloped in debt, consented that they should be sold for the benefit of his creditors, William Penn, Gaven Lawrie, and Nicholas Lucas, were appointed trustees for that purpose. In 1676, the trustees and Sir Geo. Carteret made partition of the territory, they taking the western and he the 30 eastern portion.

West Jersey was then divided into one hundred shares, which were separately sold. Some of the purchasers emigrated to the country, and all made great exertions to promote its population. Possessing the powers of government as well as the right of soil, they formed a constitution, in which, for the encouragement of emigrants, they secured for them ample privileges.

But previous to the transfer from Berkeley to Billinge, the Dutch being at war with England reconquered the country and retained it, until 1674, when it was restored by treaty. A new patent was then granted to the Duke, including the same territory as the former. In 1678, Sir Edmund Andros who had been appointed the sole Governor in America, claimed jurisdiction over the Jerseys, insisting that the conquest by the Dutch divested the proprietors of all their rights.

He forcibly seized, transported to New York, and there imprisoned those magistrates who refused to acknowledge his authority. He imposed a duty on all goods imported, and upon the property of all who came to settle in the country. Of this injustice the inhabitants loudly complained to the Duke; and at length their repeated remonstrances constrained him to refer the matter to Commissioners.

Before them the proprietors appeared. In strong language they asserted, and by strong arguments supported their claims to the privileges of freemen. They represented that the King had granted to the Duke the right of government as well as the right of soil; that the Duke had transferred the same rights to Berkeley and Carteret, and they to the present proprietors. [That is, under the first grant. Under the second grant the Duke withheld the rights of Government, and granted only property in the soil.]

"That only," they added, "could have induced us to purchase lands and emigrate. And the reason is plain: to all prudent men, the Government of any place is more inviting than the soil; for what is good land without good laws? What but an assurance that we should enjoy civil laws, religious privileges, could have tempted us to leave a cultivated country and resort to a gloomy wilderness? What have we gained, if after adventuring in the wilderness many thousands of pounds, we are yet free to be taxed at the mere will and pleasure of another? What is it but to say, that people free by law under any prince at home, are at his mercy in plantations abroad?

"We humbly say, that we have lost none of our liberty by leaving our country; that the duty imposed on us is without precedent or parallel; that, had we foreseen it, we should have preferred any other plantation in America. Besides, there is no limit to this power; since we are, by this precedent, taxed without any law, and thereby excluded from our English right of assenting to taxes. What security have we of anything we possess? We can call nothing our own, but are tenants at will, not only for the soil, but for our personal estates. Such conduct has destroyed governments, but never raised one to any true greatness."

The Commissioners adjudged the duties illegal and oppressive, and they were not afterwards demanded*.

In following the course of the law of nations, this Court has declared that even in cases of conquest, the conqueror does no more than displace the sovereign and assume dominion over the country (1 Pet. Rep. 86.)

A cession of territory is never understood to be a cession of the property of the inhabitants. The King cedes only that which belongs to him; and lands he had previously granted were not his to cede. Neither party could so understand the treaty. Neither party could consider itself as attempting a wrong to individuals condemned by the whole civilized world. The cession of a territory would be necessarily understood to pass the sovereignty only, and not to interfere with private property. (Ib. 87.)

No construction of a treaty which would impair that security to private property which the laws and usages of nations would without express stipulation have conferred, would seem to be admissible, further than its positive words require. Without it the title of individuals would remain as valid under the new Government as they were under the old; and these titles, at least as far as they were consummate, might be asserted in the Courts of the United States, independently of this article. (Ib. 88.)†

Such is the difference of the rule as between the Rights of the Great Corporations and ordinary private holders.

EXTRACTS FROM BENJAMIN FRANKLIN'S LETTERS TO HIS SON,* 1766-68. 10

Franklin's
son, 1766-68.

May 10, 1766.—I like the project of a colony in the Illinois country, and will forward it to my utmost here.

Aug. 25.—I can now only add that I shall endeavour to accomplish all that you and your friends desire relating to the settlement westward.

Sept. 12.—I have just received Sir William's open letter to Secretary Conway, recommending your plan for a colony in the Illinois, which I am glad of. I have closed and sent it to him. He is not now in that Department; but it will of course go to Lord Shelburne, whose good opinion of it I have reason to hope for—and I think Mr. Conway was rather against distant posts and settlements in America. We have, however, suffered a loss in Lord Dartmouth, who I know was inclined to grants there in favour of the soldiery, and Lord Hillsborough is said to be terribly afraid of dispeopling Ireland. Gen. 20 Lyman has been long here soliciting such a grant, and will readily join the interest he has made with ours; and I should wish for a body of Connecticut settlers, rather than all from our frontiers. I purpose waiting on Lord Shelburne on Tuesday, and hope to be able to send you his sentiments by Falconer, who is to sail about the 20th. A good deal, I imagine, will depend on the account when it arrives of Mr. Crogan's negotiation in that country. This is an affair I shall seriously set about; but there are such continual changes here that it is very discouraging to all applications to be made to the Ministry. I thought the last set to be well established; but they are broken and gone. The present set are hardly thought to stand very firm, and God only knows whom we are to have next. The plan is, I think, well drawn, and, I imagine, Sir William's approbation will go a great way in recommending it, as he is much relied on in all affairs that may have any relation to the Indians. Lord Adam Gordon 30 is not in town, but I shall take the first opportunity of conferring with him. I thank the Company for their willingness to take me in, and one or two others that I may nominate. I have not yet concluded whom to propose to it; but I suppose our friend Sergeant should be one. I wish you had allowed me to name more, as there will be in the proposed country, by reckoning, near sixty-three millions of acres, and therefore enough to content a great number of reasonable people; and by numbers we might increase the weight of interest here. But perhaps we shall do without.

Sept. 27.—I have mentioned the Illinois affair to Lord Shelburne. His Lordship has read your plan for establishing a colony there, recommended by Sir William Johnson, and said it appeared to him a reasonable scheme; but he found it did not quite rate with the sentiments of people here; that their objections to it were, the distance, which would make it of little use to this country, as the ex- 40 pense on the carriage of goods would oblige the people to manufacture for themselves; that it would for the same reason be difficult both to defend it and to govern it; that it might lay the foundation of a Power in the heart of America, which in time might be troublesome to the other colonies, and prejudicial to our government over them; and the people were wanted both here and in the already settled colonies, so that none could be spared for a new colony. These arguments, he said, did not appear of much weight, and I endeavoured by others to invalidate them entirely. But his lordship did not declare whether he would or would not promote the undertaking, and we are to talk further upon it.

I communicated to him two letters of Mr. Crogan's, with his journal, and one or two of yours on the subject, which he said he would read and consider; and I left with him one of Evan's maps of the middle colonies, in the small scale part of which I had marked with a wash of red ink the whole coun- 50 try included in your boundaries. His lordship remarked that this would coincide with General Lyman's project, and that they might be united.

* Spark's "Franklin," Vol. IV., pp. 233-41.

Sept. 30.—I have just had a visit from Gen. Lyman, and a good deal of conversation on the Illinois scheme. He tells me that Mr. Morgan, who is Under-Secretary of the Southern Department, is much pleased with it, and we are to go together to talk to him concerning it.

Oct. 11.—I was again with Lord Shelburne a few days since, and said a good deal to him on the affair of the Illinois settlement. He was pleased to say that he really approved of it; but intimated that every new proposed expense for America would meet with great difficulty here, the Treasury being alarmed and astonished at the growing charges there, and the heavy accounts and drafts continually brought in from thence; that Major Farmer, for instance, had lately drawn for no less than 30,000 pounds, extraordinary charges, on his going to take possession of the Illinois, and that the Superintendents, particularly the Southern one, began also to draw very largely. He spoke, however, handsomely of Sir William on many accounts.

Nov. 8.—Mr. Jackson has now come to town. The ministry have asked his opinion and advice on your plan of a colony in the Illinois, and he has just sent me to peruse his answer in writing, in which he warmly recommends it, and enforces it by strong reasons, which give me great pleasure, as it corroborates what I have been saying on the same topic, and from him appears less to be suspected of some American bias.

June 13, 1767.—The Illinois affair goes forward but slowly. Lord Shelburne told me again last week that he highly approved of it, but others were not of his sentiments, particularly the Board of Trade. Lyman is almost out of patience, and now talks of carrying out his settlers without leave.

Aug. 28.—Last week I dined at Lord Shelburne's, and had a long conversation with him and Mr. Conway (there being no other company) on the subject of reducing the American expenses. They have it in contemplation to return the management of Indian affairs into the hands of the several provinces, on which the nations border, that the colonies may bear the charge of treaties and the like, which they think will be then managed more frugally, the Treasury being tired with the immense drafts of the Superintendents.

I took the opportunity of urging it as one mode of saving expence in supporting the outposts, that a settlement should be made in the Illinois country, expatiated on the various advantages, namely, furnishing provisions cheaper to the garrisons securing the country, retaining the trade, raising a strength there, which on occasion of a future war, might easily be poured down the Mississippi upon the lower country, and into the Bay of Mexico, to be used against Cuba, the French islands, or Mexico itself. I mentioned your plan, its being approved of by Sir William Johnson, and the readiness and ability of the gentlemen concerned to carry the settlement into execution, with very little expense to Government. The Secretaries appeared finally to be fully convinced, and there remained no obstacle but the Board of Trade, which was to be brought over privately before the matter was referred to them officially. In case of laying aside the Superintendents, a provision was thought of for Sir William Johnson. He will be made Governor of the new colony.

Oct. 9.—I returned last night from Paris, and just now hear that the Illinois settlement is approved of in the Cabinet Council, so far as to be referred to the Board of Trade for their opinion, who are to consider it next week.

Nov. 13.—Since my return, the affair of the Illinois settlement has been renewed. The King in Council referred the proposal to the Board of Trade, who called for the opinion of the merchants on two points, namely whether the settlement of colonies in the Illinois country and at Detroit, might not contribute to promote and extend the commerce of Great Britain; and whether the regulation of the Indian trade might not be best left to the several colonies that carry on such trade—both which questions they considered at a meeting, where Mr. Jackson and I were present, and answered in the affirmative unanimously, delivering their report accordingly to the Board.

Nov. 25.—As soon as I received Mr. Galloway's, Mr. S. Wharton's, and Mr. Crogan's letters on the subject of the (Indian) Boundary, I communicated them to Lord Shelburne. He invited me next day to dine with him. Lord Clare was to have been there, but he did not come. There was nobody but Mr. Maelan. My lord knew nothing of the boundaries having been agreed on by Sir William; had sent the letters to the Board of Trade, directing search to be made there for Sir William's letters; and ordered Mr. Maelan to search the Secretary's office, who found nothing. We had much discourse about it, and I pressed the importance of despatching orders immediately to Sir William to complete the affair. His lordship asked who was to make the purchase, that is, who should be at the expense. I said that if the line included any lands within the grants of the charter colonies, they should pay the purchase-money of such proportion. If any within the proprietary grants, they should pay their proportion. But what was within Royal Governments, where the King granted the lands, the Crown should pay for that proportion. His lordship was pleased to say he thought this reasonable. He finally desired me to go to Lord Clare, as from him, and urge the business there, which I undertook to do....

I waited next morning on Lord Clare, and pressed the matter of the boundary closely upon him. . . . He agreed upon settling it, but thought there would be some difficulty about who should pay the purchase-money; for that this country was already so loaded, it would bear no more. We then talked of the new colonies. I found he was inclined to think one near the mouth of the Ohio might be of use in securing the country, but did not much approve that at Detroit. And, as to the trade, he imagined it would be of little consequence, if we had it all, but supposed our traders would sell the peltry chiefly to the French and Spaniards at New Orleans, as he had heard they had hitherto done.

March 13, 1778.—The purpose of settling the new colonies seems at present to be dropped, the change of American administration not appearing favourable to it. There seems rather to be an inclination to abandon the posts in the back country, as more expensive than useful. But counsels are so continually fluctuating here that nothing can be depended on. The new Secretary, Lord H., is, I find, of opinion that the troops should be placed, the chief part of them, in Canada and Florida.

LETTER OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE EDMUND BURKE ON THE QUEBEC BILL, 1774.* 20

Rt. Hon. E.
Burke, on Quebec Bill,
1774.

GENTLEMEN,—I was prevented by pressing business, and by not the best health, from sending you a letter by the July packet. When I had last the honour of writing to you on your affairs, I entertained no strong apprehensions that the clause in the Quebec Bill concerning the boundary of that new Province could materially affect the rights of your colony. It was couched in general and saving terms; it reserved all rights, and confirmed all adjudications; it was in all appearance sufficiently equitable. But upon a close consideration and subsequent enquiry, I found that you might be very much affected by it. I take the liberty of stating to you the light in which it appeared to me, and the conduct which I held, in consequence of that view of your interests.

I must first observe to you, that the proceedings with regard to the Town of Boston and the Province of Massachusetts Bay, had been from the beginning defended on their absolute necessity, not only for the purpose of bringing that refractory town and province into proper order, but for holding out an example of terror to the other colonies, in some of which (as it was said) a disposition to the same or similar excesses had been marked very strongly. This unhappy disposition in the colonies was, by the friends of the coercive measures, attributed to the pride and presumption arising from the rapid population of these colonies, and from their lax form, and more lax exercise, of government. I found it in general discourses, and indeed in public debate, the predominant and declared opinion, that the cause of this resistance to legal power ought to be weakened, since it was impossible to be removed; that any growth of the colonies, which might make them grow out of the reach of the authority of this Kingdom, ought to be accounted rather a morbid fulness than a sound and proper habit. All increase of the colonies which tended to decrease their advantage to this country, they considered as useless and even mischievous.

From this predominant way of thinking, the enormous extent of the colonies was censured. It was not thought wise to make new grants of land but upon the weightiest consideration, if at all. Prerogative was to be strengthened as much as possible, and it was thought expedient to find in the tractable disposition of some provinces, a check upon the turbulent manners, and a balance to the less manageable plan of government, in the others. These principles (whatever their merit may be) became very fashionable during the agitation of the Massachusetts Bill in the House of Commons. A peer, who I think does not always vote in the majority, made a sort of proposition for an address to the King that no more land should be located in America.

This was the substance of the proposition, although it proceeded no further for reasons of decorum. The ministerial side in that House fell in very directly with these sentiments and, as I am told, plainly showed a resolution to act in conformity with them, so far as the power of the Crown in that particular extended. It is true that a few Lords, and Lord Rockingham in particular, objected to the idea of restraining the colonies from spreading into the back country, even if such restraint were practicable; for by stopping the extending of agriculture they necessitated manufactures, contrary to the standing policy of colonization. The general sentiments were, however, as I have stated them.

I mention this disposition of the House of Peers, particularly, (though it prevailed almost equally elsewhere), because the Quebec Bill originated in that House.

Very many thought, on a careful perusal, that the lines of the plan of policy I have just mentioned were very distinguishable in that Bill, as it came down to us. It was for that reason I became more uneasy than at first, about the lax and undeterminate form in which the boundary clause of this new colony was worded in the original Bill: the idea of which (whether seriously adopted by ministry or not) was very prevalent, that the British colonies ought to be restrained, made it necessary that this restraint should not be arbitrary. It was the main ground of the amendment which I proposed and carried with regard to the boundary clause. However, as a mere unconnected arrangement, it is right to define with clearness, although such a plan of policy never had existed or should pass away, as I hope and think in some degree it has, with the first heats. The bill passed through the House of Lords with some opposition, but no amendment, but when it came into the House of Commons, the Ministers confessed that it was hastily drawn, and they professed great candour in admitting alterations. The part by which your province would be directly affected was only the boundary clause.

As the boundary was, in the most material parts, in the original Bill only constructive, and in general words of reference "to the boundary lines of the other provinces, as adjudged or allowed by the Crown," I thought it necessary to know, with regard to you, what lines had been actually drawn, and next, what principles were to guide in adjudging your real boundaries in future.

With regard to the first point, I found that a line of division, between your colony and that of Quebec, had been allowed by the King in Council, to be run from a point on Lake Champlain in forty-five degrees of north latitude. So far had been agreed between the Governors of the two provinces and allowed. But no line had been actually run in consequence of this agreement, except from the River Connecticut to the Lake. Even this line had not been formally allowed; and none at all had been run to the westward of Lake Champlain. So that your boundary on the north had never been perfectly delineated, though the principle upon which it should be drawn had been laid down. For a great part of the northern frontier, and for the whole of the western, until you meet the line of New Jersey, you had no defined boundary at all. Your claims were indeed extensive, and, I am persuaded, just, but they had never been regularly allowed.

My next object of enquiry, therefore, was upon what principles the Board of Trade would, in the future discussions which must inevitably and speedily arise, determine what belonged to you and what to Canada.

I was told that the settled uniform practice of the Board of Trade was this: that in questions of boundary, where the jurisdiction and soil in both the litigating provinces belonged to the Crown, there was no rule but the King's will, and that he might allot as he pleased, to the one or the other. They said also that under these circumstances, even where the King had actually adjudged a territory to one province, he might afterwards change the boundary; or, if he thought fit, erect the parts into separate and new governments at his discretion.

They alleged the example of Carolina: first one province; then divided into two separate governments; and which afterwards had a third, that of Georgia, taken from the southern division of it.

They urged, besides, the example of the neutral and conquered islands.

These, after the Peace of Paris, were placed under one government. Since then they were totally separated, and had distinct governments and assemblies.

Although I had the greatest reason to question the soundness of some of these principles, at least in the extent in which they were laid down, and whether the precedents alleged did fully justify them in that latitude, I certainly had no cause to doubt but that the matter would always be determined upon these maxims at the Board by which they were adopted. The more clearly their strict legality was proved, the more uneasy I became at their consequences. By this Bill a new province under an old name was in fact created. The limits settled by the proclamation of 1763 were cancelled. On your side a mere constructive boundary was established, and the construction, when examined, amounted to nothing more than the King's pleasure. No part of your province (not even the settled quarters of the country, quite to the River Hudson) was secured from the possible operation of such a principle. Besides, there was a possibility (at least) that in the settlement of the boundary, Ministers would naturally lean to extend those limits the most where the Royal prerogative was most extensive, and consequently their power the highest. I do not mean to charge them with that intention. But no laws stood in the way of such an inclination if it ever did exist, or should happen to exist hereafter. This was not (as it might be between two ancient British colonies) a mere question of geographical distinction, or of economical distribution, where the inhabitants on the one side of the line and the other lived under the same law, and enjoyed the same privileges of Englishmen. But this was a boundary discriminating different principles of jurisdiction and legislation; where in one part the subject lived under law, and in the other under prerogative.

From these impressions I proposed my objections on the second reading, reserving a more regular opposition to the Committee. In the interval I conferred with Lord Dartmouth and Mr Pownall, and afterwards with Lord North, upon the subject. But first I formed my plan for an amendment to the clause as it stood in the Bill, before it was committed. I could have wished for a more perfect and authorized information, but I was obliged to act at the instant. The Bill came in late in the session, and if I had let it pass for want of being instructed, the occasion would, in all human probability, never be recovered.

I saw you had claims founded on these grounds,—the old Dutch settlement; the placing of the Five Nations within your government; the boundary line of Governors Moore and Carleton; and the maintenance of the Fort at Oswego during the late war, which carried you to Lake Ontario.

These claims had no fault but the want of definition. To define is to abridge. Something, then must be given up. I was persuaded, that when one negotiates with power, it is policy to give up handsomely what cannot be retained, and to gain that strength which will always more or less attend the reasonableness of a proposition, even when it is opposed by power. I thought that well secured and tolerably extensive boundaries were better than the amplest claims which are neither defined nor allowed. My idea was to get the limits of Quebec, which appeared to many, as well as myself, intended to straiten the British colonies, removed from construction to certainty; and that certainty grounded on natural, indisputable and immovable barriers—rivers and lakes where I could have them; lines where lines could be drawn; and where reference and description became necessary, to have them towards an old British colony and not towards this new and, as was thought, favourite establishment.

I assured the Ministry, that if they refused this reasonable offer, I must be heard by counsel. As they found some opposition growing within and without doors, and they were in haste to carry through their Bill, brought in so late in the session, after some discussion and debate they gave way to the amended clause as you see it.

The work was far more troublesome than those who were not present can well believe. It cost us near two whole days in the Committee. The grand difficulty arose from the very unsettled state of the boundary of Pennsylvania. We could not determine whether it advanced northward beyond Lake Erie, or ran within that Lake, or fell to the south of it; and this uncertainty made the whole matter beyond expression perplexing. Objections on the part of Quebec were raised to the last moment, and particularly to the post of Niagara, which Mr. Carleton, I am told, was very earnest to have within his government; but by the Act it is excluded and is on your side. I believe some imagine that these difficulties would make me give up the point; but it is carried, and if not a perfect arrangement it prevents a very bad one, and may form a basis for a much better in times more favourable to the old colonies.

After the affair was over, it was suggested to me that I ought to have expressly defined this line to be the limits of New York as well as of Canada. To this I answer, that I was aware of the inconveniences which might arise from the want of this clear specification, supposing the Board of Trade to act insidiously, unfairly and captiously, which I have no reason to imagine they will do from anything I have observed in them or in other parts of Ministry.

But I confess, when I consider that Canada is put on the other side of the waters, its bounds being expressly so marked out, it appears to me absolutely impossible to say to whom the land on this side belongs except to you, unless His Majesty should choose to erect a new government, a thing no way likely or convenient for any good purpose. The Quebec line was constantly stated and urged in the House as the boundary between the Provinces of Quebec and New York, in that public discourse (rather than debate) which latterly we had on the subject. I think the line, to all intents and purposes, as much your boundary as if it were ever so expressly set down. Canada, at least, cannot say "this belongs to me."

I did not press to have the line called the boundary between New York and Canada; because we should again fall into discussion about the bounds of other colonies as we had about those of Pennsylvania, which discussion alone had very near defeated me. It would be asked why the line along Nova Scotia, New Hampshire and the Northern Massachusetts Claim was not called the boundary of these Provinces as well as of New York.

It would be said that this Act was to settle a constitution for Quebec, and not for adjusting the limits of the colonies, and in the midst of this wrangle the whole object would have infallibly escaped the House, as it grew quite tired of it. All business stood still whilst we were wording the clause, and, on our difficulties, Lord North proposed to revert to the old words, which, he said, to him were the best, and that he only gave way to the sentiments of other people who, on his concession, found a difficulty in effectuating their own purpose.

I must therefore accept what I could get; and the true method of estimating the matter is to take together—the time, what we escaped, and what we obtained—and then to judge whether we had not had a tolerable bargain. Those who were present congratulated me as on a great advantage. I am sure I acted for the best, with great rectitude of intention and a good deal of assiduity. I send you the Bill with the amendments marked. As to the other parts of the Bill they are matters of more general policy. As I have already given you a great deal of trouble I do not mean to detain you any longer upon foreign matter.

I received your obliging letter of the 31st of May, and am extremely happy in the honour of your approbation.

You undoubtedly may dispose of my letters as you judge proper. I must in this respect confide entirely in your prudence, being fully satisfied that the matter will always direct you sufficiently in what you ought to conceal and what to divulge.

I have sent off long ago the Wawayanda and Chcesecock Acts. I have had the honour of seeing Mr. Cruger at my house on his return to Bristol. I endeavoured to attend to him in the manner to which his merit and connections entitle him.

I have the honour to be, its Acts; the toleration of the Roman Catholic religion, agreeable to the Treaty of Paris; the securing to all the Canadian subjects, except the religious orders and communities, the enjoyment of their properties and civil rights; the re-establishment of their ancient laws and customs, subject to such alterations as the legislature of the Province may think fit to make; the continuation of the administration of the criminal laws of England, subject to the like alteration, and the establishment of a temporary legislature within the Province.

When the lines drawn by the proclamation of 1763 for the boundaries of Quebec and of the Floridas, and for the limitation of settlements under grants from the old Provinces, were resolved upon, a general plan for the regulations of the trade with the savages was under consideration of the Board of Trade, and in great forwardness. To give this plan uniformity and effect, it was thought necessary to exclude all the provinces from jurisdiction in the interior or Indian country; but all persons resorting thither for trade (and no settlements were to be permitted) were to be subject to a police, deriving authority immediately from the Crown, and supported by a revenue, arising from a tax upon the trade, to be imposed by Act of Parliament.

The events of the following year were fatal to this plan, for it was not then judged expedient to lay the tax, and consequently the expense could not be defrayed without an additional charge upon the American contingencies, which were thought to be sufficiently burdened already. This was the reason that so large a part of the ceded territories in America was left without government, and that the new Province of Quebec contained so small a portion of ancient Canada.

It had been the policy of the French Government to possess themselves of the water communications throughout the whole of that vast country, and, for that end, to establish posts at the most important passes; but, being well aware of the great difficulty of supplying these posts with provisions from the inhabited country, they settled a little colony round each post, to cultivate the ground and raise provisions for the garrison. This gave rise to the settlement of Detroit, Missilimakinac and upon the heads of the Mississippi, called the Illinois country, and as these settlers had been put entirely under the direction of the commanding officers of the forts, when the French garrisons were withdrawn, and military orders ceased to be law, they were altogether without law or government, especially as, by the new arrangement, they were excluded every English province. It must be confessed, no great mischief has happened from these people being left in this lawless state. They had been accustomed to obey French military orders, and the English officers who commanded the posts which were continued in their neighbourhood, of their own authority, exercised the same command over them; and as it was not the purpose of the administration to encourage settlements in those remote situations, the arbitrary rule of the military was tolerated, as most likely to prevent an increase of inhabitants.

Objects of the Quebec Act,
1774.

In such parts of this pays deserts as lay more contiguous to the prescribed limits of the old colonies and where there were no military posts kept up, the effects were very different. Emigrants in great numbers flocked thither from the other colonies, took possession of vast tracts of country without any authority, and seated themselves in such situations as pleased them best. As no civil jurisdiction reached these intruders upon the King's waste, and as their number increased every day, insomuch that the native savages, in dread of their power, quitted these lands and removed to others at a greater distance, the case was judged to be without other remedy than that of following the emigrants with government, and erecting a new province between the Alleghany Mountains and the River Ohio for that purpose.

That the mischief might not, however, farther extend itself, and the like reasons for erecting new colonies at still greater distance from the sea coast may not again recur, the whole of the derelict country is by the first clause of the Act, put under the jurisdiction of the Government of Quebec, with the avowed purpose of excluding all further settlement therein, and for the establishment of uniform regulations for the Indian trade.

The Province of Quebec was preferred for these ends before all the others, because the access by water is much easier from Quebec to such parts of this country as are the most likely to be intruded upon than from any one other colony, for emigrants always choose to seat themselves upon places where they can have the advantage of a water communication with the market they intend to traffic at; and if this country had been parcelled out among the several colonies that bounded upon it, experience has fully testified the impracticability of their all agreeing upon one general plan, which would have the effect to prevent settlement, or to enforce any regulations which may be thought necessary for giving security and satisfaction to the savages in their dealings with our traders, the only means to prevent the quarrels and murders which are every day happening, and which are the certain consequences of a fraudulent commerce. Both these objects, it is expected, will be obtained by putting this country under the jurisdiction of Quebec; for, as there is now a legislature in that Province competent to enforce such regulations, administration is pledged to recommend that Acts for those purposes be the first objects upon which the legislative powers shall be exercised.

DEBATE IN THE HOUSE OF LORDS ON A PROPOSAL TO REPEAL THE QUEBEC ACT OF 1774.†

17TH MAY, 1775.

Lord Camden.—His Lordship arranged his objections to the Act under the three following heads:—

1st. The extension of the limits of Quebec.

2nd. The establishment, &c.

3rd. The civil despotism, &c.

Debate in
Lords on proposal to repeal Quebec
Act, 17th
March, 1775.

Under the first of these heads [the extension of the limits of Quebec] his Lordship proved, that there could be no good reason for so extending the limits of Quebec, as to make them comprehend a vast extent of country two thousand miles in length from north to south, and bounded on the west only by the south sea. That this enlargement could only be intended to extend the shackles of arbitrary power and of popery over all the future settlements and colonies of America. That by drawing the limits of that Province close along the interior settlements of all the old English Colonies, so as to prevent their further progress, an eternal barrier was intended to be placed, like the Chinese Wall, against the further extension of civil liberty and the Protestant Religion. His Lordship then animadverted particularly on the instructions lately transmitted to General Carleton, whereby the regulation of all the Indian trade of North America is put into the hands of the Governor and Council of Quebec, and the other Colonies are obliged, in their intercourse with the Indians, to submit to the Laws, not of the British Parliament, but of a despotic, unconstitutional Legislature in Canada; a measure calculated to produce endless contentions and animosities.

His Lordship concluded by offering the following bill:—

A bill to repeal an act made in the last session of the last Parliament, intituled, An act for making more effectual provision for the government of the province of Quebeck, in North America.

Whereas an act was passed in the last session of the last Parliament, intituled, An act for making more effectual provision for the government of the province of Quebeck, in North America;

And whereas the said act, by enlarging the boundaries of the said province, and making the legislature thereof co-extensive with the same, may put the Indian trade, among other things, under the sole management of that legislature, as in truth appears to be already done, by the instructions lately given to Governor Carleton, by which that trade, which had before been freely carried on by all His Majesty's subjects in North America without restriction, is now to be confined to such regulations as the said legislature may think fit to impose upon it, and thereby the rights of His Majesty's other colonies unwarrantably abridged and invaded; and by a like extension of the said legislature, the said other colonies may come to be excluded from having any intercourse or correspondence whatsoever with the Indian nations of that vast continent, without the leave or permission of the said legislature which would naturally give rise to unnatural divisions and endless controversies between His Majesty's subjects of the old colonies, and the inhabitants of the new province of Quebec;

May it therefore please your most excellent Majesty,

That it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the fifth day of May, 1776, the above 10 mentioned act, and the several matters and things therein contained, shall be, and is, and are, hereby repealed and made void to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

Lord Wycombe [Earl Shelburne]. . . . The peltry or skin trade, my Lords, is a matter which I presume to affirm is of the utmost magnitude, and of the last importance to the trade and commerce of the colonies and this country. The arrangement and regulation of this business has, give me leave to say, cost his Majesty's ministers more time and trouble than any one matter I know of. The noble Earl behind me [Earl of Hillsborough], it is true, differed from me among other of His Majesty's servants on the regulating the trade with the Indians; but it was never so much as dreamed of that the whole skin trade, from Hudson's Bay to the Forks of the Mississippi, should be at once taken from the several American colonies and transferred to the French Canadians; or, which is substantially the same thing 20 that by a royal instruction the sole direction of it should be vested in the Governor of Quebec. For I will be bold to contend that whatever colourable construction may be put upon it, it will operate as a complete exclusion, and total monopoly so far as the Protestant British colonies can possibly be interested.

SIR,—Having received from the Governor and Company of the Hudson's Bay Company a Representation, of which a copy is enclosed, in which they state their apprehensions of an attack from the 30 Indian nations in the neighbourhood of the Red River, and request a small military force for their protection, I am induced to transmit it to you in order that you may make the necessary inquiries as to the grounds of the fears expressed by them on this point; and in the event of your considering them to be founded, furnish such protection and assistance as can be afforded without detriment to His Majesty's service. You will take a special care, whatever measures you may adopt for this purpose, to abstain from doing any act or expressing any opinion which may tend to affect the question in dispute between the Hudson's Bay and North-West Companies; the sole object of the present instruction being to secure the lives and properties of His Majesty's subjects, established on the Red River, from the predatory attacks of the Indian nations in the neighbourhood, with which they state themselves to be threatened pose confidentially to the heads of the North-West Company, who are to be persons of the utmost integrity and respectability, I should not only have the best chance of attaining that object, but of more effectually providing for the security of the lives and property of the settlers on the Red River, than by the adoption of any other means within my reach. These objects have, I trust, been attained as far as they are attainable. Before I call your Lordship's attention to the numerous documents which accompany this letter (more particularly to that from Mr. McGillivray, in answer to that which I caused the Deputy Adjutant General to address to him), it is proper to intimate to your Lordship what I did not think it necessary to communicate to the gentlemen of the North-West Company, viz.: that the plan of affording military protection to the Earl of Selkirk's settlement, is in my opinion decidedly impracticable; but even admitting the practicability of moving a detachment of troops, with the necessary provisions and stores, to that remote territory, the expense attending it would not only be enormous (far beyond any idea your Lordship would form of it), but the first and unavoidable effect of this interference would, I conceive, be to involve us in an Indian war, for objects foreign to the interests of the British Government. It is far from my intention to attempt to influence the judgment which your Lordship may form from an inspection of the papers herewith transmitted. But I think it incumbent on me to remark that I cannot but feel apprehension that the most mischievous consequences are likely to arise from the conduct and character of the individual whom Lord Selkirk has selected for his agent, who styles himself Governor, and from whose intercourse with the persons in the service of the North-West Company it is in vain to look for the spirit of moderation and conciliation which it is so desirable should animate persons situated as these traders and settlers are, cut off as they are from the whole civilized world, and dependent on their union and mutual good offices alone for protection, not only from the savage tribes by which they are surrounded, but against an enemy not less formidable, viz.: famine. The question as to the invasion of rights, of which the North-West and Hudson's Bay Companies mutually complain, appears to me to be entirely one of law, and one in fact on which the law can alone decide; it has therefore very properly been referred by the North-West Company to a legal tribunal.

SIR,—Having received many complaints of the violent proceedings which have taken place in the most remote parts of His Majesty's North American Dominions, and of the outrages committed by the agents and servants of the Hudson's Bay and North-West Companies against each other, it appears highly necessary to adopt some measures for restraining a system of violence which if persevered in may ultimately lead not only to the destruction of the individuals concerned, but of others of His Majesty's subjects. I am therefore to desire that you will without loss of time inculcate upon the servants of the two Companies the necessity of abstaining from a repetition of those outrages which have been latterly so frequent a cause of complaint, and convey to them the determination of His Majesty's Government to punish with the utmost severity any person who may be found to have caused or instigated proceedings so fatal to the tranquillity of the possessions in that quarter, and so disgraceful to the British name.

MY LORD,—It is with much regret that I have to report to your Lordship a continuance of those unhappy dissensions between the Hudson's Bay and North-West Companies, which formed the subject of my despatch to your Lordship, Number 21, of the 24th of August. The enclosed copy of a memorial presented to me on behalf of the North-West Company, will inform your Lordship of the arrest and imprisonment of the principal partners of that body by the Earl of Selkirk, and of the occupation of Fort William (their principal trading establishment) by his Lordship, and the copy of his letter to me of the 3rd of September, will also show your Lordship his further views, and the course he intended to pursue. The memorial of the North-West Company, though drawn, as was to be expected, with a 10 colouring of prejudice and interest, contained a statement of facts which demanded attention. I therefore immediately submitted it to the Executive Council, whom I called upon to advise me as to the best method of restoring tranquillity to the Indian country, and checking the further outrages of both parties.

The acts of the Earl of Selkirk, which the Council had immediately before them, having been done under colour and by process of law as a Magistrate for the western district of Upper Canada; and the whole magistracy of the Indian territory, being formed exclusively of the partners' agents, are partizans of the contending companies, it was evident that both parties would proceed to use their authority as Magistrates in acts of retaliation and annoyance to each other. To deprive them, therefore, of this authority, was the first step to be taken for the restoration of harmony, and this was recommended by 20 the Council. But evils equally great were to be expected to ensue from leaving that territory entirely without magistrates; and the proposed measure would moreover have been ineffectual, without also depriving both parties of the authority they possessed at Fort William, in the western district of Upper Canada, by being Magistrates for that district; and this act of power could only be exercised by the Government of Upper Canada. The Council therefore further recommended that after superseding the commissions of all the Justices of the Peace for the Indian territory, I should appoint two persons of influence and impartiality to be sole magistrates of that territory, and to proceed thither to exercise their functions, and with further powers, as Commissioners of Enquiry, to mediate between the two Companies. But the Council also recommended that neither the supersedeas nor the new commission should take effect unless on a clear understanding with the Government of Upper Canada that the 30 commissions granted to Lord Selkirk and the members and servants of the Hudson's Bay and North-West Companies, as magistrates for the western district of Upper Canada, should be revoked; and that the two new magistrates to be appointed by me should be made Justices of the Peace for that district.

Finding it very difficult, from the extensive influence and connections of the North-West Company to select here two persons impartial enough to be entrusted with the proposed mission to the Indian territory, I referred the matter by a letter, of which I enclose your Lordship a copy, to Lieutenant-Governor Gore; and his answer, of which I also add a copy, will shew your Lordship that he has found the same difficulty of choice, and that consequently I have been unable to carry through the measure which the Council recommended, and which was indeed the only expedient that could be devised for giving peace to the country. In such a deplorable state of things, however painful it is to me to witness 40 proceedings so much to be deprecated, I can do no more; my authority is of no avail over persons at a distance of four thousand miles from me, in a wild and lawless country, at all times difficult to penetrate, and at this advanced season almost inaccessible; and while I beg leave to call your Lordship's serious attention to the forcible, and I fear too just, description given by the Earl of Selkirk, of the state of the Red River territory, I leave your Lordship to judge whether a banditti such as he describes, will yield to the influence, or be intimidated by the menaces, of distant authority.

Castle of St. Lewis, Quebec, 1st October, 1816.

SIR,—I have had the honour of receiving your Excellency's letter of the 14th instant, relating to the late occurrences at Fort William. Concurring in the fullest manner with your Excellency in the views of this difficult subject, which you have submitted to Lord Bathurst, and being equally impressed with the dangerous consequences that may ensue to the country, unless some steps of interference are taken, I sought the advice of my Council on the subject, and have now the honour of transmitting to you a copy of their report. I do not see any method of arresting the progress of the evil, but that which the Council has recommended; and I now enclose to your Excellency an instrument revoking the commissions of all the magistrates of the Indian territory; and two other instruments for the appointment of two persons (for whose names blanks are left) to proceed to that territory, in the double capacity of Commissioners of Inquiry and Justices of the Peace. The extensive influence and connections of the North-West Company, pervading almost the whole society here, I find it extremely difficult to select two persons impartial enough to be intrusted with such an important mission; and I, therefore, with the fullest confidence, leave the selection of them to your Excellency, in the hope that the same causes may not operate in your Government to embarrass your Excellency's choice. Should the same difficulty, however, prevail there, so that this new commission cannot be filled up, your Excellency will clearly understand that the instrument of revocation cannot be acted upon; and moreover, that I have only been induced to transmit these instruments to your Excellency by the hope and expectation that you will consent to the revocation (as suggested by the Council here) of the commissions held by Lord Selkirk, and the members and servants of the Hudson's Bay and North-West Companies, as magistrates in the western district of Upper Canada; and that your Excellency will also appoint the two persons whom you may select as Commissioners of Enquiry, to be Magistrates for the western district of Upper Canada. I have little doubt that your Excellency will see the necessity of these measures; but should it be otherwise, your Excellency will of course consider the instruments now transmitted as of no effect; and I beg that your Excellency will in this case (as well as in the possible event of your not being able to find two persons qualified for the proposed mission to the Indian territory), be good enough to return these documents to me.

The date of the commission of supersedeas being left blank, it is necessary, as your Excellency will no doubt see, that, in filling it up, care be taken that it be subsequent to the date of the commission appointing two Justices of the Peace to proceed to that country, in order that it may not appear that the territory has for a moment been left without the means of the administration of justice. I have the honour to enclose herewith such general instructions to the two new Justices of the Peace (if the appointment takes place) as may be necessary for their guidance; and I have also caused letters to be written to the present magistrates of the Indian territory (to be used of course only in the event of the supersedeas taking effect), apprizing them that their commissions have been revoked; to which letters I request that your Excellency will permit the dates to be affixed, according to the date that the supersedeas may bear; and that your Excellency will have the goodness to inform me what that shall be. It only remains for me to assure your Excellency of my hearty co-operation and support, on this and every other occasion, where the peace of the country and so many of its important interests are at stake.

I have the honour to be, &c.,

J. C. SHERBROOKE.

although I have given the subject a most serious consideration, I cannot propose any two persons of Upper Canada as fit to be intrusted with the important mission referred to in your Excellency's dispatch. I have enclosed the commissions and papers, which your Excellency did me the honour to confide to me. I beg to assure your Excellency, that you may command my co-operation to arrest the evil existing at Fort William and in the Indian territory, in any manner you may be pleased to point out.

EARL BATHURST, TO GOVERNOR-GENERAL SIR JOHN C. SHERBOOKE.*

DOWNING STREET, 6th February, 1817.

to Gov.-Gen.
Sherbrooke,

SIR,—Since I had the honour of addressing you on the subject of the disputes existing between the North-West and Hudson's Bay Companies, I have received intelligence from different quarters, of the continuance of those proceedings which have involved the whole Indian country in disturbance, and which, if a check be not early put to them, threaten to be utterly destructive of the intercourses subsisting between that country and His Majesty's dominions. To prevent consequences so fatal to both parties, and so pregnant with danger to the safety of the Canadas, His Royal Highness the Prince Regent has been pleased entirely to approve of the appointment of Mr. Coltman and Mr. Fletcher, as Commissioners to investigate and report upon the subjects of dispute between the Hudson's Bay and the North-West Companies. But as much time must necessarily elapse before their report can be received and properly considered, I am commanded to signify to you His Royal Highness's pleasure that measures should be immediately taken for putting an end to those violent proceedings which have latterly marked the contest of these two companies; and with this view, that each should be restored to the possessions held by them previous to the commencement of their recent disputes. You will therefore upon the receipt of this dispatch, issue a Proclamation, in the name of the Prince Regent, calling upon the agents of each party, and upon all those whom either may have enlisted or engaged in their service, to desist from every hostile aggression or attack whatever; and in order to prevent the further employment of an unauthorized military force, you will require all officers and men composing such force, to leave within a limited time the service in which they are engaged, under penalty of incurring His Royal Highness's most severe displeasure, and of forfeiting every privilege to which their former employment in His Majesty's service would otherwise have entitled them.

You will also require, under similar penalties, the restitution of all forts, buildings, or trading stations (with the property which they contain) which may have been seized or taken possession of by either party, to the party who originally established or constructed the same, and who were possessed of them previous to the recent disputes between the two companies. You will also require the removal of any blockade or impediment, by which any party may have attempted to prevent or interrupt the free passage of traders, or others of His Majesty's subjects, or the natives of the country, with their merchandise, furs, provisions and other effects, throughout the lakes, rivers, roads and every other usual route or communication heretofore used for the purposes of the fur trade in the interior of North America; and the full and free permission for all persons to pursue their usual and accustomed trade, without hindrance or molestation; declaring at the same time that nothing done in consequence of such Proclamation shall in any degree be considered to affect the rights which may, ultimately be adjudged to belong to either party, upon a full consideration of all the circumstances of their several claims. I trust that the parties themselves will understand their own interests too well, not to yield a ready obedience to the commands of His Royal Highness, but in order to ensure it you will not hesitate to arm the Commissioners with such additional authority as you may consider requisite to enforce the Proclamation, and to take every other measure in your power for securing the objects which His Royal Highness has in view, namely, the cessation of all hostility both in Canada and the Indian country, and the mutual restoration of all property captured during these disputes, and the freedom of trade and intercourse with the Indians, until the trials now pending can be brought to a judicial decision, and the great question at issue with respect to the rights of the two Companies shall be definitely settled.

I have the honour to be &c,

BATHURST.

Lieut.-General Sir John C. Sherbrooke, G. C. B., &c., &c.

EARL BATHURST TO GOVERNOR-GENERAL SIR JOHN C. SHERBROOKE.*

DOWNING STREET, 11th February, 1817.

10 SIR,—I have had the honor of receiving your despatches from No. 67 to No. 72 inclusive, which have been duly laid before the Prince Regent. I learnt with great regret that the commissioners of special enquiry, to the result of whose labors I looked for some more precise information as to the actual state of the Indian country, and the means by which tranquillity might be restored, had been under the necessity of abandoning the object of their mission, and of returning to York, under the untoward circumstances which prevented them from reaching the point of their ultimate destination. I have entirely to approve the measures which they adopted for making known the powers with which they were themselves invested, and for superseding those of the magistrates of the Indian country. And I trust that when the road to Fort William is practicable, they will proceed to the execution of the important charge which has been confided to them. I am fully sensible of the danger which may in 20 the interim result to the commercial and political interests of Great Britain, from the opening which the conduct of Lord Selkirk appears calculated to give to the admission of foreign influence over the Indian nations, to the exclusion of that heretofore exercised by the subjects of Great Britain; and feel the necessity of putting an end to a system of lawless violence which has already too long prevailed in the Indian territory and the more distant parts of Upper Canada. By resisting the execution of the warrant issued against him, Lord Selkirk has rendered himself doubly amenable to the laws, and it is necessary, both for the sake of general principle, and for the remedy of existing as well as for the prevention of further evils, that the determination of the Government to enforce the law with respect to all, and more particularly with respect to Lord Selkirk, should be effectually and speedily evinced. You will, therefore, without delay on the receipt of this instruction, take care that an indictment be preferred 30 against his Lordship for the rescue of himself, detailed in the affidavit of Robert MacRobb, and upon a true bill being found against him, you will take the necessary and usual measures in such cases for arresting his Lordship and bringing him before the Court from which the process issued. Surrounded, as Lord Selkirk appears to be, with a military force, which has once already been employed to defeat the execution of legal process, it is almost impossible to hope that he will quietly submit to the execution of any warrant against himself, so long as any opening is left for effectual resistance. It is, therefore, necessary that the officer to whom its execution is entrusted should be accompanied by such a civil (or if the necessity of the case should require it by such a military) force, as may prevent the possibility of resistance. The officer, however, must be cautioned that the force entrusted to him is not to be employed in the first instance, but is only to be resorted to in aid of the civil authority in case of any opposition 40 being made to the execution of his warrant in the ordinary manner. As it appears not improbable that Lord Selkirk may, previous to the issue of the process against him, have removed from Upper Canada into the territories claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company, it will be necessary, in order in such case to give validity to the warrant against him, that it should be issued or backed by some magistrate appointed under the Act 4th of the King, to act both for Upper Canada and for the Indian territory. By this means the warrant will have, under the provisions of the Act of Parliament, a legal operation, not only in Upper Canada but in any Indian territories, or in any other parts of America (without excepting the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company) which are not within the limits of either of the Provinces of Canada, or of any civil government of the United States; and you will see the importance of not permitting the execution to be defeated by any irregularity in the warrant itself, or by any change of place on the part of Lord Selkirk.

As Captain Mathey appears to have been equally concerned in the rescue of Lord Selkirk, you will take with respect to him the same measures which you are hereby instructed to adopt with respect to Lord Selkirk.

If, however, either from resistance on the part of Lord Selkirk to the execution of the warrant, or from any other cause, the appearance of his Lordship before the Court should not be secured, the Court will proceed to adopt, with respect to his Lordship, such measures as would be taken by them against any other person similarly circumstanced, who, after the issue of such process, should decline or omit to appear. You will not fail to communicate to me the result of these measures, in order that I may, in so extraordinary a contingency, submit to the consideration of Parliament whether the urgency of the case does not require the adoption of some special measure of severity with respect to his Lordship. You will not consider this instruction as in any degree superseding that which I had the honor of conveying to you on the 6th instant.

You will equally call upon the military force employed by Lord Selkirk to abandon the service in which they are at present engaged; and you will acquaint them further that if they permit themselves to be employed in resisting the execution of legal process, they will be exposed to and prosecuted with the utmost severity of the law; and you will equally enforce the mutual restitution of places captured, and the freedom of trade throughout the Indian territory.

I have only further to add, in reply to the inquiry contained in your dispatch, No. 70, that if the 20 Commissioners are appointed magistrates of the Indian countries, in the terms of the 43rd George III., to which I have already referred, and to the terms of which it is important to adhere in their Commission, their powers extend over Upper Canada and all those Indian countries, without distinction, even within the limits of the territory claimed or possessed by the Hudson's Bay Company.

YORK, 12th March, 1819.

Chief Justice
Powell to
Lieut.-Gov.-
Maitland,
12th March,
1819.

May it Please Your Excellency,

I have read the petition and affidavit of Surgeon Allan, which your Excellency had the goodness to communicate for my notice and remark.

So far as relates to the business of the late Assizes in the Western district, I have already had the honour to explain, in answer to the letter presented by Earl Selkirk. To the reproach intended to be conveyed by the Petitioner, as having promoted an act to enquire and try in any district of the province, crimes and offences committed in any district, without the limits of the organized population of the province, I am happy in the occasion, to refer your Excellency to a short history of that Bill.

In the forty-third year of His Majesty, an Act passed the Imperial Parliament, giving conditional jurisdiction to the Court of this province to try offences committed in the Indian territories, without the limits of Upper and Lower Canada. It was not until 1817 that any appeal was made under this Statute, when various charges against many individuals were transmitted under the seal of Lower Canada; conformably to the provisions of the said Statute, to be enquired of, and tried in this province. A vast extent of Indian territory, inhabited only by Indians and their followers, lies within the limits of this province, which are not precisely known, and difficulties were apprehended on the question of jurisdiction. A Bill was introduced into the Legislative Council, to relieve us from the expected embarrassments. This bill was referred to the three Judges, discussed, amended, and approved by them, passed the Legislative Council. but was not returned that session. The House of Assembly having considered the bill during the recess, it was sent up at the next session as having originated in the House of Representatives, passed the Council, and received the Royal assent.

Such a course seems incompatible with the suggestions in the Petition, that your Excellency and the other branches of the Legislature were surprised.

With respect to the construction put upon the bill by the Chief Justice, and complained of by the Petitioner, I am at a loss to discover to what he alludes! No question upon this bill has yet been agitated to call for construction.

At the Assizes for the Home district, a bill of indictment was found against the Earl of Selkirk, the Petitioner, and many others, for a conspiracy; the process of the Court was prayed upon filing the bill, and Surgeon Allan, having attended the Court as an evidence in certain civil returns at Nisi Prius, applied to the Court to be admitted to bail, and traversed the indictment to the next Session. Upon the question of bail it appeared to the Court, from the details of the overt acts charged in the indictment, as read to the traverser, that the bail should not be light, and it directed £1,000 for the traverse, and £500 for each two sureties; which last, by the indulgence of the Court and prosecutor, was admitted to be subdivided, to suit the circumstances of the traverser.

Your Excellency will perceive that in all this, no occasion was offered on either side, to discuss the legality of the proceeding; and, as the traverser had counsel at his side, the Court had no cause to presume any doubt, to form any construction, or pronounce any opinion upon the Act under which the indictment is alleged to have been found.

Any question of expediency or propriety in bringing forward the prosecution in that shape, was for the consideration of the Attorney-General, and not for the Court. I am grateful to your Excellency for the early communication of this and the former letters, and shall ever be so, for occasion to account for my conduct in any of the various relations in which I stand with your Excellency, the Crown, and the Public, conscious of no motive but duty, for my actions as a Magistrate, a Legislator, and Executive Councillor.

I have the honor, &c.,

WM. DUMMER POWELL.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL ROBINSON (UPPER CANADA), TO LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR MAITLAND.*

YORK, March 5th, 1819.

May it please Your Excellency:

I have perused the petition of Mr. John Allan, and the affidavit accompanying it, which I am to thank your Excellency for submitting to me; and to assist your Excellency in forming an opinion on the matters they relate to, I will give a short account of the facts with which I am necessarily conversant respecting the prosecution of John Allan.

Sometime last spring, I think late in April, the agents of the North-West Company and their counsel, placed in my hands, as Crown officer, a great mass of testimony, consisting partly of documents and partly in the handwriting of the accused, and incapable of contradiction, and partly of depositions of a great number of witnesses to facts which they were ready to substantiate, by viva voce evidence in a Court of Justice.

It regarded principally the conduct of the Earl of Selkirk and his followers, in the year 1816, at Fort William in the western district of this province, and charged them among other things, with having, under pretence of enforcing justice, employed an armed and lawless band of discharged soldiers in riotously obtaining forcible possession of the persons, houses, goods, papers, and effects of the Company of Merchants mentioned above; of continuing in such violent and unlawful possession from the month of August, 1816, to the end of May, 1817.

Lieut.-Gov.
Maitland,

1819.

Fortunately for the ends of public justice, a Bill, which originating in considerations purely of a public nature, had passed one branch of the Legislature in March, 1817, precisely in its present form, before the petitioner or this charge of conspiracy against him was under consideration, and would have passed the other, but for the difference between the two houses respecting their privileges, which obstructed public business, was in their next session revived and passed into a law.

It authorized the trial, in any district of this Province, of offences committed in such parts of it as were yet unorganized, and, if I may use the expression, unreclaimed.

The motives which led to this Bill, as I have understood, for it was not of my framing or suggestion, were these considerations of public justice and convenience. It would enable us to submit to the same tribunal all offences charged upon both parties, cognizable by our courts, whether in the Indian territory 10 out of this Province, and placed within our jurisdiction by the provision 43rd George III. or within this Province, in any unorganized part of it. It would relieve the Court from perplexing questions about the limits of this Province, since as to those places doubtfully situated, and supposed by some to be an Indian territory, properly so called, and by others within this Province, it would give to the same Court jurisdiction in either case, and would render the doubt of no weight in defeating the ends of justice * *

Fort William and the wild country surrounding it have no more geographical affinity to the western district than to this, although annexed to it by an Act of our Parliament. The jurors who dispense justice in that district, are divided from Fort William, the scene of the offences charged against Mr. Allan, by as many hundred miles of savage wilderness as are the jurors of this, and know as little of the parties and their offences, or the credibility of the witnesses, except by the pains taken by the Earl 20 of Selkirk to instruct them on those heads by pamphlets industriously circulated at the moment of the sitting of the Court. * * * *

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR MAITLAND TO HENRY GOULBOURN, ESQ.,* UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE.

YORK, 4th May, 1819.

MY DEAR SIR,—Whether the Act against which Lord Selkirk objects in such unmeasured terms be ill-advised or not is a matter of opinion; but in saying it was hastily passed, his Lordship asserts a 30 fact which is capable of most satisfactory contradiction. The Bill in question had met with the concurrence of both Houses the previous session, and but for the abrupt prorogation, would at that time have passed into an Act.

Lieut.-Gov.
Maitland to Under-Secy. of State, 4th
May, 1819.

It appears to me that the necessity for such an Act was abundantly obvious, in the lawless proceedings and sanguinary quarrels between the rival companies; and the bearing of that in question appears to me to be no less salutary than just; but I forbear from any further remarks on the subject, having forwarded for Lord Bathurst's information the observations of the Chief Justice and Attorney-General on a letter of complaint from Lord Selkirk, and on a memorial of Mr. Allan.

I called for these answers with a view of putting Lord Bathurst in possession, as early as possible, of both sides of the question, and for the same reason I send by the present mail certain remarks 40 by the Chief Justice on Lord Selkirk's letter to Lord Liverpool.

SIR,—I have perused with a lively interest the copy of a letter from the Earl of Selkirk to the Earl of Liverpool, dated in Grosvenor Place, the 8th of February last, and beg leave to express my grateful acknowledgment to your Excellency for the communication. On the subject of the bill passed in the last session of the Provincial Legislature, his Lordship has not only handed unfounded surmises, but has advanced as fact that which is not true. He is pleased to say that the Act of the 31st of the King, Cap. 31, divided the Province of Quebec and makes no alteration in the western limits established by the 14th Geo. III., cap. 83. The Canada bill does not divide the Province of Quebec; it premises that it was His Majesty's intention to divide that province into two provinces to be called Upper and Lower Canada, and makes provision for their government when so divided. His Majesty, by his Order in Council, subsequent to the passing the Act, did accordingly separate the Province of Quebec into Upper and Lower Canada, and does make a great alteration in the western limits from those established by the 14th of the King, extending them westward without difference to the limits of Quebec, in such terms as plainly indicate the intention to comprehend all the country conquered from France, under the name of Canada, which had not been relinquished to the United States of America, or secured to the Hudson's Bay Company, or designated as Lower Canada.

Earl Selkirk is pleased to say that the Chief Justice of Upper Canada declared that his jurisdiction extended to the Pacific Ocean; his Lordship must have been misinformed; I never did pretend to pronounce the extent of Upper Canada, but did deem it respectful to pause, when a deliberate act of the King in Council, contemplated and referred to by Parliament, was set at nought by a Provincial Magistrate.

The Earl of Selkirk alluded to legal opinions of the first authority on the jurisdiction of the officers of the Hudson's Bay Company over offences and offenders within its territory. The Chief Justice of Upper Canada had been taught to consider the Parliament of the United Kingdom to be the highest legal authority, and its Act, 43rd of the King, gives jurisdiction over offences committed in the territory of Hudson's Bay to the courts of Lower Canada as occasion may require.

Thirty indictments for felony and murder, in which Earl Selkirk was the prosecutor, had been transmitted for trial in Upper Canada, under the provisions of the last mentioned Act. It was apprehended that the question of jurisdiction might be raised, and if it should turn out that the locus in quo was in the western district of Upper Canada, the court of the home district was incompetent to try them, and they must have been renewed in the western district at a great charge to the prosecutor as well as the culprits, and great inconvenience to the public. The bill in question was to meet this contingency; it was introduced and passed in the Council after mature deliberation and references to the judges.

It was not returned from the Assembly during that session; but after the prorogation it was at the next session sent up as a new bill from that house and passed the Council. It did not receive the Royal assent until it had undergone the consideration of some weeks.

As relates to the general hardships of the bill to the individuals, and injustice to the local jurisdictions, it may be observed that it operates on no organized population of the province subjected to municipal regulations; the territory which it effects is in the Crown, and part of a district, but the soil is in the aborigines and inhabited only by Indians and their lawless followers. As to the removal of prisoners, prosecutors and witnesses to a remote distance, it has not been thought a hardship to subject them to a journey of five times the distance, passing eight districts and a whole province, with the chance of being remanded for trial to the district nearest to which the offence was committed; such is the operation of the 43rd of the King, under which Earl Selkirk prosecuted in Lower Canada the numerous indictments transmitted to Upper Canada for trial.

As to the insinuations by the Earl of Selkirk that the bill was got up through the influence of the North-West Company, and that from the same cause the Spring Assizes for the home district were

SIR,—In closing my letter of the 1st instant, on the subject of the Earl of Selkirk's libel, it occurred to me that a concise report of the two civil actions decided here against his Lordship for false imprisonment, would be a fair and complete confutation of his Lordship's pretension to exclusive merit and suffering from the injustice of others. I now take the liberty to enclose it, not as an official document, but one which may be relied on, and verified by numbers, thinking that the Colonial Department might be willing to know on what rest the pretensions of his Lordship to credit, as an innocent and persecuted man, persecuted by corrupt influence over his Majesty's servants, under the protection of that department.

REPORT REFERRED TO IN THE FOREGOING LETTER OF CHIEF JUSTICE POWELL.*

AND EARL OF SELKIRK. }

False Imprisonment.

Spring Assizes, York, 1815.

Case of Mc-Kenzie and
kirk, 1815.

It was in evidence that plaintiff was a retired partner of the North-West Company, with several other partners at Fort William, in the western district, when they were arrested on a charge of felony by warrant from defendant. That after examination, the other parties were committed to the prison of the district, or sent to Montreal; but that plaintiff was detained at Fort William, and confined in a place called the Black Hole; that bail was offered to defendant and rejected, on pretence that the charge against him was too serious to admit of bail.

That plaintiff was addicted to excess and frequent intoxication, and that his failing was encouraged, while in confinement, until he was prevailed upon to execute, while under duress, a sale of the co-partnership property to defendant, after which he was discharged without bail. That when defendant had committed to prison the other partners, they had left in charge of their concerns two clerks, Vandersluys and McTavish, with powers to act for the Company; that defendant knew that these persons were also entrusted with the affairs of the Company. That he had made proposals to them to transact for the Company, which they had declined; and that after Vandersluys, one of the agents, finding his presence useless to his employers, from the control of defendant, had obtained leave to quit the fort, defendant renewed application to McTavish, the remaining agent, to transact with him on account of the co-partnership, which McTavish still declining, defendant sent him in custody to Montreal, under a pretended charge of being the receiver of stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, but did not take his examination on that charge, or give any warrant of commitment to the person under whose custody he was placed, nor was any further prosecution of the charge carried on.

That after Mr. McTavish was thus got off, there remained in the fort six other clerks of the North-West Company, who had no particular charge of confidence, but adhering to the interest of their employers, and having influence over the common servants of the Company, they were got rid of, by the defendant sending them off to York, under pretence of a subpoena signed by himself, to give evidence before a court at York, on a day when no court was holden, and no trials or prosecutions expected; this latter evidence was submitted in aggravation to show that the imprisonment of the plaintiff without commitment regularly was corrupt as well as illegal, with intention, when all other course failed, to extort from him as a nominal partner of the North-West Company, an exercise of authority over their concerns, which he the plaintiff disowned to possess, and protested against, so soon as he was at liberty, in a place where means for such protest could be found. The defendant's counsel limited themselves to cross-examination of the witnesses, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, and £1,500 damages.

The abuses of the authority of the Magistrate, for corrupt purposes of private interest, were so various and unquestionable that the court, after receiving the verdict, intimated to the Attorney-General the propriety of his official notice; but his Lordship having been discharged from the magistracy, and being no longer within the jurisdiction of the Court of King's Bench of this Province, no further notice was taken of him.

UPPER CANADA, AT THE SPRING ASSIZES, 1819.

WM. SMITH, Plaintiff,
EARL OF SELKIRK. } Trespass, assault and false imprisonment.

The evidence was, that the plaintiff, as deputy sheriff of the western district, arrested the defendant on a warrant for felony; that the defendant being at Fort William in the western district, with many armed men under his command, rescued himself from the arrest, and imprisoned the plaintiff in a house wherein there were other prisoners, one charged with murder and since convicted; that an armed soldier stood sentinel at the door of the room in which plaintiff was confined, whose orders from defendant were not to permit him to go out or receive his visitors.

That the prisoner under charge of murder was indulged to keep a school and walk in the fort; that defendant would have set the plaintiff at liberty if he would engage not to act upon his warrant; that plaintiff was thus imprisoned from the 19th March to the 11th May, when Lord Selkirk still left him a prisoner, but no authority was used to detain him after his lordship's departure.

The defence attempted was, that plaintiff was imprisoned for a breach of the peace, and also that his imprisonment was voluntary, by connivance with defendant to colour his neglect of duty; but no evidence supporting such a conclusion, the jury found a verdict for plaintiff with £500 damages.

OPINION OF SIR ARTHUR PIGOTT, MR. SPANKIE AND MR. BROUGHAM, ON THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY'S CHARTER, 1816.*

IN THE MATTER OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY'S CHARTER AND THEIR GRANT TO LORD SELKIRK.

1st. Whether the exclusive trade, territories, powers and privileges granted by the Charter of Charles the Second, confirmed by the expired Act of King William, is a legal Grant, and such as the Crown was warranted in making; and if it was, whether it entitles the Company to exclude the Canadian traders from entering their territory to trade with the Indians, and authorises the Governors and other officers appointed by the Company to seize and confiscate the goods of the persons so trading without the license of the Company?

The prerogative of the Crown to grant an exclusive trade was formerly very much agitated in the great case of "The East India Company versus Sandys." The Court of King's Bench, in which Lord Jefferies then presided, held and decided that such a grant was legal. We are not aware that there has since been any decision expressly on this question in the Courts of Law, and most of the Charters for exclusive trade and exclusive privileges to Companies or Associations, have, since the Revolution, received such a degree of legislative sanction or recognition, as perhaps to preclude the necessity of any judicial decision on it. Much more moderate opinions were, however, entertained concerning the extent of the prerogative, after the Revolution, than prevailed in the latter part of the reign of Charles the Second, and in the reign of James the Second, and to those is to be attributed the frequent recourse which, after the Revolution, was had to legislative authority on such cases, and particularly in the very case of this Company, evidenced by the temporary Act of the 2nd of William and Mary, "for confirming to the Governor and Company trading to Hudson's Bay their privileges and trade;" a confirmation the duration of which the Legislature expressly limited to seven years and the end of the next session of Parliament and no longer: and part of the preamble of that Act is, in effect, a legislative declaration of the insufficiency and inadequacy of the Charter for the purposes professed in it, without the aid and authority of the Legislature; which legislative aid and authority entirely ceased soon after the expiration of seven years after that Act passed.

In 1745, indeed, the 8th Geo. II., cap. 17, for granting a reward for the discovery of a North-West Passage through Hudson's Straits, enacts, "that nothing therein contained shall any ways extend, or be construed to take away or prejudice any of the estate, rights, or privileges of or belonging to the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay;" but this provision gives no validity whatever to the Charter, and only leaves its effect and authority as they stood before that Act, and entirely unaffected by it.

These parliamentary proceedings may at least justify the inference that the extent of the prerogative in this matter was considered as a subject which admitted of great doubt, in times when the independence of the judges insured a more temperate and impartial consideration of it. They may, however, be perhaps considered as too equivocal to afford any certain and conclusive authority on the strict question of law. Such rights, therefore, as the Hudson's Bay Company can derive from the Crown alone, under this extraordinary Charter, such as it is, may not be affected by these proceedings or declarations, and they may now rest entirely upon and stand or fall by the Common Law Prerogative of the Crown to make such a Grant.

Opinion of Sir
A. Pigott,
Mr. Spankie,
and Mr.
Brougham,
on H. B. Co.'s Charter,

Upon the general question of the right of the Crown to make such a Grant, perhaps it may not be necessary for the present purpose that we should give any opinion. The right of the Crown merely to erect a company for trading, by charter, and make a grant of territory in King Charles the Second's reign, may not be disputable; and on the other hand, besides that this Charter seems to create, or attempt to create a Joint Stock Company, and to grant an exclusive right of trading, there are various clauses in the Charter, particularly those empowering the Company to impose fines and penalties, to seize or confiscate goods and ships, and seize or arrest the persons of interlopers, and compel them to give security in £1,000, &c., which are altogether illegal, and were always so admitted to be, and among other times [things?] even, at the time when the extent of the Prerogative in this matter was maintained at its height, to grant an exclusive right to trade abroad; and even if, by virtue of their Charter, they could maintain an exclusive right to trade, we are clearly of opinion that they and their officers, agents, or servants, could not justify any seizure of goods, imposition of fine or penalty, or arrest or imprisonment of the persons of any of His Majesty's subjects. Probably the Company would have some difficulty in finding a legal mode of proceeding against any of those who infringe their alleged exclusive rights of trading, or violate their claimed territory; for we hold it to be clear that the methods pointed out by the Charter would be illegal, and could not be supported.

But we think that the Hudson's Bay Company and their grantee, Lord Selkirk, have extended their territorial claims much farther than the Charter or any sound construction of it will warrant. Supposing it free from all the objections to which we apprehend it may, in other respects be liable, the words of the Grant, pursuing the recital of the petition of the grantees, with a very trifling variation, and with none that can affect the construction of the instrument, are of "the sole trade and commerce of all those seas, straits, bays, rivers, lakes, creeks, and sounds, in whatever latitude they shall be, that lie WITHIN the entrance of the Straits, commonly called Hudson's Straits, together with the lands and territories UPON the countries, coasts, and confines of the seas, bays, lakes, rivers, creeks, and sounds aforesaid:" that is, within the Straits—and these limits are frequently referred to in the subsequent parts of the Charter, and always referred to throughout the Charter as "the limits aforesaid."

There is, indeed (p. 10), an extension of the right of trade, and His Majesty grants that the Company "shall forever hereafter have, use and enjoy not only the whole, entire and only liberty of trade and traffic, and the whole, entire and only liberty, use and privilege of trading and traffic, to and from the territories, limits and places aforesaid, but also the whole and entire trade and traffic to and from all havens, bays, creeks, rivers, lakes, and seas into which they may find entrance or passage, by water or land, out of the territories, limits, and places aforesaid, and to and with all the natives and people inhabiting, or which shall inhabit WITHIN the territories, limits, and places aforesaid, and to and with all other nations inhabiting any of the coasts adjacent to the said territories, limits, and places aforesaid, which are not already possessed as aforesaid."

It is plain, therefore, that the Territorial Grant was not intended to comprehend all the lands and territories that might be approached through Hudson's Straits, by land or water. The Territorial Grant then appears to be limited by the relation and proximity of the territories to Hudson's Straits. The general description applying to the whole, is the seas, etc., that lie WITHIN Hudson's Straits, and the land, etc., upon the countries, coasts, and confines, of the seas, etc., that is, reddendo singula singulis, the lands upon the countries, coasts and confines of each of the seas, rivers, etc., naturally including such a portion of territory as might be reasonably necessary for the objects in view; but it is not a grant of all the lands and territories in which the seas, rivers, etc., lie, or are situated, or which surround them to any indefinite extent or distance from them. Still less is it a grant of all the lands and territories lying between the seas, straits, rivers, etc., though many hundred or thousand miles or leagues of land and territories might lie between one sea, strait, river, lake, etc., and another sea, strait, river, lake, etc., and though the quantity of land comprised in this interior situation, and far distant from any coast or confine of the specified waters, might exceed in dimensions the extent of many existing powerful kingdoms or states. Within the Straits, must mean such a proximity to the Straits as would give the lands spoken of a sort of affinity or relation to Hudson's Straits, and not such lands as, from their immense distance (in this case the nearest point to Hudson's Bay, being 700 miles, and from thence extending to a distance of 1,500 miles from it), have no such geographical affinity or relation to the Straits, but which are not even approached by the Canadians through or by the Straits in question. The whole Grant contemplates the Straits as the access to the lands and territories therein referred to; and, as there is no boundary specified, except by the description of the coasts and confines of the places mentioned, that is the coasts and confines of the seas, etc., within the Straits, such a boundary must be implied as is consistent with that view, and with the professed objects of a trading company, intending, not to found Kingdoms and establish States, but to carry on fisheries in those waters, and to trade and traffic for the acquisition of skins and peltries, and the other articles mentioned in the Charter; and in such a long tract of time as nearly 150 years, now elapsed since the grant of the Charter, it must now be, and must indeed long since have been, fully ascertained, by the actual occupation of the Hudson's Bay Company, what portion or portions of lands and territories in the vicinity, and on the coasts and confines of the waters mentioned and described as within the Straits, they have found necessary for their purposes, and for forts, factories, towns, villages, settlements or such other establishments, in such vicinity, and on such coasts and confines, as pertain and belong to a company instituted for the purposes mentioned in their Charter; and necessary, useful, or convenient to them within the prescribed limits for the prosecution of those purposes. The enormous extensions of land and territory now claimed appears therefore to us not to be warranted by any sound construction of the Charter; if it could be so, we do not know where the land and territory of the Hudson's Bay Company, granted by this Charter, terminate, nor what are the parts of that vast Continent, on which they have taken upon them to grant 116,000 miles of territory, exempted from their proprietorship under their Charter.

Indeed, there may be sufficient reason to suppose that the territories in question, or part of them, had been then visited, traded in, and in a certain degree occupied by the French settlers or traders in Canada, and their Beaver Company, erected in 1630, whose trade in peltries was considerable prior to the date of the Charter. These territories, therefore, would be expressly excepted out of the Grant; and the right of British subjects in general to visit and trade in these regions would follow the national rights acquired by the King, by the conquest and cession of Canada, and as enjoyed by the French Canadians previous to that conquest and cession.

No territorial right, therefore, can be claimed in the districts in question; and the exclusive trade there, cannot be set up by virtue of the Charter, these districts being remote from any geographical relation to Hudson's Bay, and to the Straits, and not being in any sense within the Straits, and not being approached by the Canadian traders, or other alleged interlopers, through the interdicted regions. Of course no violence to or interruption of trade could be justified there under these territorial claims.

2. Whether the Hudson's Bay Company were warranted in making a Grant to Lord Selkirk, as one of their own body, of the immense district of territory described in Governor McDonell's Proclamation, notwithstanding the opposition of part of the proprietors of Stock; and after making such Grant, has the Company any right to exercise their jurisdiction in appointing Governors and other officers over that district; or can they grant or transfer such power to his Lordship? If you should be of opinion that the grant to his Lordship is illegal, or unwarranted by the Charter, what measures ought to be taken to set aside the same?

The validity of the Grant to Lord Selkirk may be considered both as it affects the members of the Company and the public at large.

If, contrary to our opinion, the land and territory in question were within the Grant, then the Grant of so large a portion of territory as that of Lord Selkirk, being not less than 116,000 square miles, might perhaps seem an abuse of the Charter, which might justify the interference of the Crown. Because, though the Company might have a right to make Grants of land, such Grants must be for the promotion of, or at least must be consistent with, the object of the Institution. But the Grant to Lord Selkirk tends to an establishment independent of the Company, inconsistent with the purposes of their Institution and its effect: erecting a sub-monopoly in one person, to the detriment both of the Company and of the public. The Company could confer no power upon Lord Selkirk to appoint Governors, Courts of Justice, or exercise any independent authority, nor could they, directly or indirectly, transfer their authority to him, to be exercised by him in his own name. Supposing the Grant of land to be such a Grant as falls within the power of the Company to make, their superior lordship and authority would continue as before, and must be exercised through them.

3rd. Whether the jurisdiction given by the Act of 43rd George III., to the Canadian Courts of Criminal Judicature, extends to the Territories of the Hudson's Bay Company, so as to entitle those Courts to try and punish offences committed within those territories. And whether Governor McDonell and Mr. Spenceer, his Sheriff, can legally be tried before the Canadian Courts for the offence with which they now stand charged?

Opinion of Sir
A. Pigott,
Mr. Spankie,
and Mr.
Brougham,
on H. B. Co.'s Charter,

There seems no reason to doubt that offences actually committed in the territories and districts in dispute, where no court of Judicature is or ever has been established, might, in point of jurisdiction, legally be tried by the Courts of Canada, under the 43rd Geo. III., cap. 138; and indeed, unless this district was within the provisions of that Act, we cannot discover what territory was meant to be included in it, but we think that though the jurisdiction might be capable of being supported, the acts done by Messrs. McDonell and Spencer could not be deemed larceny, and that they, or others acting in similar circumstances, ought not to be indicted or brought to a trial for the crime of larceny. They acted, perhaps erroneously, upon a claim of territorial dominion, and of exclusive commercial privilege, and may be liable to be proceeded against as for a trespass or other injury to person or property; but we think they could not be properly convicted on a charge of felony.

4th. Is it competent to the Governors and other officers already appointed, or that may be appointed by the Hudson's Bay Company, to seize and bring to trial before their Courts of Judicature, His Majesty's Canadian subjects who may be found trading within the Company's territories, for infringing the Company's monopoly, or for committing any other alleged crime or offence?

Supposing the Charter of the Company valid, and the districts in dispute to be within their limits we should still doubt whether the Governor and Company have lawful power, by the Charter, to establish Courts for the trial by the laws of England of offences committed therein. That power the Company have never yet attempted to exercise, though nearly 150 years have elapsed since they procured their Charter. But if they should still possess this extraordinary power without further authority, legislative or legal, we should nevertheless think that no courts there established would have authority to try, and punish as an offence, the act of going there simply; which, if the grant be legal, could amount at the 50 most only to a misdemeanour or contempt of the King's lawful authority, to be prosecuted at the suit of His Majesty. But the Charter itself seems to take the offence, as far as the Company are concerned, out of the jurisdiction of the local Courts, by (illegally indeed) prescribing certain forfeitures, and declaring (page 12) "that every the said offenders, for their said contempt, to suffer such punishment as to us, our heirs and successors, shall seem meet or convenient, and not to be in anywise delivered until they and every of them shall become bound unto the said Governor for the time being, in the sum of £1,000 at least, and no time thereafter to trade," etc. A subsequent clause (page 16), authorizes the seizing and sending to England those who come into their territories without authority. It seems, therefore, that the Courts in question would have no power to try, as an offence at Common Law, the mere coming into the Company's territories contrary to the prohibition in the Letters Patent, which point out other modes of proceeding, and legally confer no other powers applicable to the case.

If the question were merely a question of boundary between two acknowledged adjacent colonies or provinces, it might perhaps be determined by the King in Council, where we apprehend such a jurisdiction is vested, and has been exercised, but that probably would not set at rest the principal points, or prevent interference. The validity of the Grant of an exclusive trade right, we apprehend, be tried directly by Scire Facias, or, incidentally, in actions of trespass, which, however, might still leave other main points undecided; and the Company might perhaps be capable of retaining some part of what has been granted to them, and might fail as to many others. In these circumstances, it appears that interests and pretensions so opposite, and which may be productive of so much confusion and disorder, and of consequences so dangerous and destructive to the persons and properties of those who, by reason of the failure of the ordinary means of protection afforded by the law, may be said to be peculiarly under the safeguard of Government, can only be effectually and satisfactorily adjusted and reconciled by Government, with the aid and authority of Parliament; and by that authority (after causing such an investigation into them as Government would, in such a case, probably feel it indispensable to make, and are fully possessed, by the law officers of the Crown and otherwise, of all the means of making,) due allowance would be made for such rights of the Company as were deemed legal and well-founded, and protection and freedom secured to the Canadians as well as to the rest of the King's subjects, in the prosecution of that commerce which the Canadians have long enjoyed, and which the rest of the King's subjects have frequently, and whenever they thought proper, carried on, and which, it is stated to us, they have never been hitherto attempted to be interrupted in by the Hudson's Bay Company.

As public attention has of late been much directed to the Red River and Saskatchewan country, and we may have ere long to take action for its development, and as apparently offering a favorable field for settlement, with that easily cultivated prairie land so desirable to many, it seems appropriate here briefly to notice it.

Including in this territory the valleys of the Beaver River, the Peace River and the Arthabaska, as having a common character with it, the whole presents an area of nearly 500,000 superficial miles. Its extreme length, from the Lake of the Woods westward to the Rocky Mountains, is about 900 miles, and its breadth, from the northern boundary of the United States to the mouth of Peace River, about 700 miles. Indifference as to the maintenance of the territorial extent of the Province, is much to be deplored. We have already had some experience of the serious evils arising from the loss of territory, quite sufficient to be a warning against supineness in future.

It is but a few years, comparatively, since the Province lost what was called the Disputed Territory, on the head waters of the River St. John, of New Brunswick.

A few intelligent persons took an interest in the subject at the time, but the mass of the people of this Province were wholly indifferent to it. The majority of those who thought at all on the subject were satisfied that we had quite enough of land without it.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, CANADA, 1877-8, 19TH FEBRUARY, 1877*

House of Commons,
Canada,
19th Feb.,

MR. MASSON asked what progress had been made towards the settlement of the question of the North-Western boundary of the Province of Ontario.

MR. BLAKE said that, as the hon. gentleman was already aware, arbitrators had been appointed—Judge Wilnot, by the Dominion Government, and the Chief Justice of Ontario, by the Government of Ontario. Upon the latter gentleman assuming a position in the Supreme Court, he resigned, and the Government of Ontario appointed the present Chief Justice of Ontario in his place. An understanding had been reached between the two Governments, by which Sir Edward Thornton, the British Minister at Washington, would probably act as the third commissioner or arbitrator. Considerable progress had been made, and this Government had been for some time investigating the case and mastering the details, which necessitated many papers being searched. Communication had been going on for some time past with the Government agent in England, and other authorities, to complete, as far as possible, the information on that subject, and it was probable that the question might be disposed of in the ensuing summer or fall.

18TH FEBRUARY, 1878.†

House of Commons,
Canada, 18th
Feb., 1878.

MR. MASSON enquired, what progress had been made in the settlement of the North-Western boundary of the Province of Ontario?

MR. MACKENZIE.—The absence of Sir Edward Thornton, who was selected as the third arbitrator, or umpire, until late in the autumn, made it practically impossible for the three gentlemen to meet, but everything has been prepared for their meeting, which will take place immediately after the session.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.—Who are the commissioners? I forget them now.

MR. MACKENZIE.—Chief Justice Harrison, Hon. Mr. Wilnot, late Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, and Sir Edward Thornton.

ON MOTION OF MR. DAWSON

"That a Select Committee be appointed to enquire into, and report to this House, upon all matters connected with the boundaries between the Province of Ontario and the unorganized territories of the Dominion,"

HON. MR. McDONALD, Minister of Justice: Now, the only embarrassment, if embarrassment should be felt on the subject—a subject so important to the whole Dominion and to the Government having charge of the interests of the Dominion, when we are required to abandon a tract of territory large enough to constitute a province equal, as was remarked by the honourable member for Algoma, to the territory of all the lower provinces—I say, if any embarrassment should be felt, it would be from the high standing, the high character, and the great learning of the gentlemen whose award will probably be under review of the committee sought for by this resolution. But it does appear to me that this House would be wanting in its duty to the country if it allowed any decision, coming from men, however eminent, to control the interests of the country and to deprive the Dominion of its territory, if in their opinion the decision arrived at was croneous—not wilfully croneous, for no one would imagine for a moment that either of the eminent men who composed this tribunal, could come to any decision that was not dictated by the purest motives and, I have no doubt, by the most searching enquiry. * * *
If I recollect aright, in the able report of the honourable member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), made at the instance of the Ontario Government, he challenged the validity and force of a judgment bearing on this question given in the Supreme Court of Quebec, on the ground that, at the time the judgment was given, all the facts and circumstances, which have since become available—largely through the industry of the honourable gentleman himself—were not put before the court. Very well, as it is stated on the authority of the honourable member for Algoma, that such information is still open for consideration, I do not really think that the admitted authority of the Arbitrators ought to induce this House to abstain from further enquiry and investigation. * * * * *

There is another reason why I think the Committee ought to be granted, and that is, that many of us think that the conclusion at which that Commission arrived was not justifiable by the evidence. I say this with the greatest possible diffidence, but I am bound to express the opinion which I entertain, and entertain very strongly, though I do so with diffidence, as indeed every lawyer would who felt himself obliged to differ from the opinion of so eminent an authority as Chief Justice Harrison. * * *

and Prairie du Chien—Michael Brisbois of said county, who after being sworn according to law, deponeth and saith that he (this deponent) is sixty years of age; that he has been thirty-nine years in this country; that, from the best information he has been able to obtain, and from his own knowledge, Prairie du Chien, extending from the mouth of the River Wisconsin to the upper part of the prairie, has been occupied and cultivated in small improvements in virtue of sundry claims of French people, both before and since deponent's arrival in the country; that he (deponent) has never heard of any Indian claim to said tract, except that, about eighteen years ago, the French people became somewhat apprehensive as to their title, which fact being made known to the Indians, one of the first chiefs of the Fox nation, named Manponis, ratified at Cahokia, near St. Louis, an ancient sale of said prairie to the French; that in the year seventeen hundred and eighty-one, Governor St. Clair [Sinclair] bought the Island of Machilimackinac, Green Bay and Prairie du Chien; that this deponent saw the papers relating to said purchase executed and folded up to be sent to Montreal or Quebec. Deponent was informed on his first arrival at this place, that it derived its name from a large family called Les Chiens who formerly resided here; that the same family, or the descendants, were here at the time of deponent's arrival, and were called Les Chiens.

INSTRUCTIONS OF THE IMPERIAL GOVERNMENT AS TO EXPLORATIONS OF THE TERRITORIES TO THE WESTWARD OF LAKE SUPERIOR AND OF CERTAIN NORTHERN TERRITORIES AS DISTINGUISHED FROM THE TERRITORIES COMPRISED IN THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY'S CHARTER.*

LORD SHELburnE TO LIEUT.-GOVERNOR CARLETON OF QUEBEC.

WHITEHALL, November 14th, 1767.

SIR,—Your letters of the 8th, 14th July, and 29th August, have been duly received and laid before the King. Your conduct towards Mr. Chabert appears well judged, who, having become obnoxious to the Court of France, must find it his interest to attach himself entirely to the service of Great Britain.

10 His influence among the Indians puts it in his power to be of very essential use, but as the same influence gives him also a power of doing mischief, if ill inclined, a certain degree of caution is requisite, as well as address to prevent his perceiving it. This hint must be applicable to many other persons in your Government, and is left to your own judgment at what times and how far to improve it.

Lord Shelburne to
Lieut.-Gov.
Quebec.

The memorials which you transmitted relative to the Indian trade have with others been referred by His Majesty's commands to the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, and that matter (as well as several other points very essential to the prosperity of the colonies and the advantage of this country) now lies before their Lordships for their consideration and report.

20 As an accurate knowledge of the interior parts of North America would contribute much towards enabling His Majesty's ministers to judge soundly of the true interests of the different provinces, I cannot too strongly recommend to you the encouraging such adventurers as are willing to explore those parts which have not hitherto been much frequented, and consequently are scarcely, if at all, known, particularly towards the territories comprised in the Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company north of the Hudson's Bay Company northward, and the country beyond the Lake Superior westward.

INSTRUCTIONS PASSED UNDER THE ROYAL SIGN MANUAL AND SIGNET TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF DUFFERIN, K.P., K.C.B., AS GOVERNOR-

VICTORIA R.

INSTRUCTIONS to Our Right Trusty and Right well-beloved Cousin and Councillor, Frederick Temple, Earl of Dufferin, Knight of Our Most Illustrious Order of Saint Patrick, Knight Commander of Our Most Honourable Order of the Bath, Our Governor-General in and over Our Dominion of Canada, or in his absence, to Our Lieutenant-Governor, or the Officer administering the Government of Our said Dominion of Canada for the time being. Given at Our Court at Balmoral, this Twenty-second day of May, 1872, in the Thirty-fifth Year of Our Reign. 19

I. Whereas, by a Commission under the Great Seal of Our United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, bearing even date herewith, we have constituted and appointed you, the said Frederick Temple Earl of Dufferin, to be Our Governor-General in and over Our Dominion of Canada, for and during Our Will and Pleasure, and have further authorised and commanded you to do and execute all things in due manner that shall belong to your said command, and the trust thereby reposed in you, according to the several powers and directions therein-mentioned, and particularly according to such Instructions as should therewith be given to you. Now, therefore, We do by these Our Instructions under Our Sign Manual and Signet, being the Instructions so referred to as aforesaid, declare Our Pleasure to be, that you shall with all due solemnity cause Our said Commission to be published in Our said Dominion; and you shall then and there take the oath of allegiance, in the form provided by an Act passed in the 20 Session holden in the thirty-first and thirty-second years of Our Reign, intituled "An Act to amend the Law relating to Promissory Oaths"; and likewise that you do take the usual oath for the due execution of the office and trust of Our Governor-General in and over Our Dominion of Canada, and for the due and impartial administration of justice, which said oaths the Judges of Our Supreme Courts of Record within Our said Dominion, or any three or more of such Judges, are hereby required to tender and administer unto you.

II. And we do authorise and require you from time to time, and at any time hereafter, by yourself or by any other person to be authorised by you in that behalf, to administer to all and to every persons or person, as you shall think fit, who shall hold any office or place of trust or profit, the said oath of allegiance, together with such other oath or oaths as may from time to time be prescribed by any laws or 30 statutes in that behalf made and provided.

III. And We do require you to communicate forthwith to Our Privy Council for Our said Dominion these Our Instructions, and likewise all such others from time to time as you shall find convenient for Our service to be imparted to them.

IV. And We do hereby direct and enjoin, and it is Our Pleasure, that Our said Privy Council shall not proceed to the dispatch of business unless duly summoned by your authority, nor unless four Members of the said Council be present, and assisting throughout the whole of the meetings, at which any such business shall be dispatched.

V. And We do further direct, that if in any case you see sufficient cause to dissent from the opinion of the major part or of the whole of Our said Privy Council so present, it shall be competent for you to execute the powers and authorities vested in you by Our said Commission, and by these Our instructions, in opposition to such their opinion; it being, nevertheless, Our Pleasure, that in every case it shall be competent to any Member of Our said Privy Council to record at length, on the minutes of Our said Council, the grounds and reasons of any advice or opinion he may give upon any question brought under the consideration of such Council. 40

VI. And it is Our pleasure and you are hereby authorized to appoint by an instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, one Member of Our said Privy Council to preside in your absence, and to remove him and appoint another in his stead. And if during your absence the Member so appointed shall also be absent, then the Senior Member of the Privy Council actually present shall preside, the seniority of the Members of the Council being regulated according to the date or order of their respective appointments thereto.

VII. And We do further direct and enjoin that a full and exact journal or minute be kept of all the deliberations, acts, proceedings, votes and resolutions of Our said Privy Council, and that at each meeting of the said Council the minutes of the last meeting be read over, confirmed, or amended, as the case may require, before proceeding to the despatch of any other business.

VIII. And in the execution of so much of the powers as are vested in you by law for assenting to or withholding assent from or of reserving for the signification of Our pleasure, Bills which may have been passed by the Houses of Parliament of Our said Dominion, We do direct and enjoin you to guide yourself, as far as may be practicable, by the following Rules, Directions, and Instructions, that is to say:

IX. You are not to assent in Our name to any Bill of any of the classes hereinafter specified, that is to say:—

1. Any Bill for the divorce of persons joined together in holy matrimony.
2. Any Bill whereby any grant of land or money, or other donation or gratuity, may be made to yourself.
3. Any Bill whereby any paper or other currency may be made a legal tender, except the coin of the realm or other gold or silver coin.
4. Any Bill imposing differential duties.
5. Any Bill, the provisions of which shall appear inconsistent with obligations imposed upon Us by Treaty.
6. Any Bill interfering with the discipline or control of Our forces in Our said Dominion by land and sea.
7. Any Bill of an extraordinary nature and importance, whereby Our prerogative, or the rights and property of Our Subjects not residing in Our said Dominion, or the trade and shipping of the United Kingdom and its Dependencies, may be prejudiced.
8. Any Bill containing provisions to which Our assent has been once refused, or which has been disallowed by Us.

Unless each Bill shall contain a clause suspending the operation of such Bill unto the signification in our said Dominion of Our pleasure thereupon, or unless you shall have satisfied yourself that an urgent necessity exists, requiring that such Bill be brought into immediate operation, in which case you are authorized to assent in Our name to such Bill, unless the same shall be repugnant to the law of England or inconsistent with any obligations imposed on Us by Treaty. But you are to transmit to Us by the earliest opportunity the Bill so assented to, together with your reasons for assenting thereto.

X. You will take care that all laws assented to by you in Our name, or reserved for the signification of Our pleasure thereon, shall, when transmitted by you, be fairly abstracted in the margins, and be accompanied, in such cases as may seem to you necessary, with such explanatory observations as may be required to exhibit the reasons and occasion for imposing such laws; and you shall also transmit fair copies of the Journals and minutes of the proceedings of the Legislative Bodies of Our said Dominion, which you are to require from the clerks or other proper officers in that behalf of the said Legislative Bodies.

XI. And whereas We have by our said Commission authorized and empowered you, as you shall see occasion, in Our name and on our behalf, to grant to any person convicted of any crime in any Court, or before any Judge, Justice, or Magistrate within Our said Dominion, a pardon either free or subject to lawful conditions: Now We do hereby direct and enjoin you to call upon the Judge who presided at

* This charter, which was granted by Henry IV. of France to Pierre du Gast, sieur de Monts, a Protestant member of his suite, embraced the whole of North America between the fortieth and forty-sixth degrees of latitude. An expedition fitted out under it visited Passamaquoddy Bay in 1604, and another explored the coast of Maine in 1605, entering the Penobscot, Kennebec, and Saco Rivers. But in 1606 it was decided to make a permanent settlement at Port Royal, and no further attempt was made to plant colonies under this charter within the limits of the present State of Maine. The French in Canada, however, maintained friendly relations with the Penobscot Indians, and had several missionary and trading stations among them until Great Britain took possession of the country under the treaty of Paris of 1673.

And to that End, and for the more speedy Accomplishment of their said intended Plantation and Habitation there, are desirous to divide themselves into two several Colonies and Companies; the one consisting of certain Knights, Gentlemen, Merchants, and other Adventurers, of our City of London and elsewhere, which are, and from time to time shall be, joined unto them, which do desire to begin their Plantation and Habitation in some fit and convenient Place, between four and thirty and one and forty Degrees of the said Latitude, amongst the Coasts of Virginia, and the Coasts of America aforesaid: And the other consisting of sundry Knights, Gentlemen, Merchants, and other Adventurers, of our Cities of Bristol and Exeter, and of our Town of Plymouth, and of other Places, which do join themselves unto that Colony, which do desire to begin their Plantation and Habitation in some fit and convenient Place, between eight and thirty Degrees and five and forty Degrees of the said Latitude, all amongst the said Coasts of Virginia and America, as that Coast lyeth:

We, greatly commending, and graciously accepting of, their Desires for the furtherance of so noble a Work, which may, by the Providence of Almighty God, hereafter tend to the Glory of his Divine Majesty, in propagating of Christian Religion to such people, as yet live in Darkness and miserable Ignorance of the true Knowledge and Worship of God, and may in time bring the Infidels and Savages, living in those parts, to human Civility, and to a settled and quiet Government: DO, by these our Letters Patents, graciously accept of and agree to, their humble and well-intended desires;

And do therefore, for Us, our Heirs, and Successors, GRANT and agree that the said Sir Thomas Gates, Sir George Somers, Richard Hackluit, and Edward-Maria Wingfield, Adventurers of and for our City of London, and all such others, as are, or shall be, joined unto them of that Colony, shall be called the first Colony; And they shall and may begin their said first Plantation and Habitation, at any place upon the said coast of Virginia or America, where they shall think fit and convenient, between the said four and thirty and one and forty Degrees of the said Latitude; And that they shall have all the Lands, Woods, Soil, Grounds, Havens, Ports, Rivers, Mines, Minerals, Marshes, Waters, Fishings, Commodities, and Hereditaments, whatsoever, from the said first seat of their Plantation and Habitation by the Space of fifty Miles of English Statute Measure, all along the said coast of Virginia and America, towards the West and Southwest, as the Coast lyeth, with all the Islands within one hundred Miles directly over against the same Sea Coast; And also all the Lands, Soil, Grounds, Havens, Ports, Rivers, Mines, Minerals, Woods, Waters, Marshes, Fishings, Commodities, and Hereditaments, whatsoever, from the said Place of their first Plantation and Habitation for the space of fifty like English Miles, all amongst the said coasts of Virginia and America, towards the East and Northeast, or toward the North, as the Coast lyeth, together with all the Islands within one hundred Miles, directly over against the said Sea Coast; And also all the Lands, Woods, Soil, Grounds, Havens, Ports, Rivers, Mines, Minerals, Marshes, Waters, Fishings, Commodities, and Hereditaments, whatsoever, from the same fifty Miles every way on the Sea Coast, directly into the main Land by the Space of one hundred like English Miles; And shall and may inhabit and remain there; and shall and may also build and fortify within

And whereas also for the greater Good and Benefit of the said Company, and for the better Furtherance, Strengthening, and Establishing of the said Plantation, we did further GIVE, GRANT and CONFIRM, by our Letters-patents unto the said Company and their Successors, for ever, all those Lands, Countries or Territories, situate, lying and being in that Part of America called Virginia, from the Point of Land called Cape or Point Comfort all along the Sea Coasts to the Northward two hundred Miles; and from the said Point of Cape Comfort all along the Sea Coast to the Southward two hundred Miles; and all that Space and Circuit of Land lying from the Sea Coast of the Precinct aforesaid, up into the Land throughout from Sea to Sea West and North-west; and also all the Islands lying within one hundred Miles along the Coast of both the Seas of the Precinct aforesaid; with divers other Grants, Liberties, Franchises and Preherainences, Privileges, Profits, Benefits, and Commodities granted in and by our said Letters-patents to the said Treasurer and Company and their Successors for ever.

Mines and Minerals, as well Royal Mines of Gold and Silver, as other Mines and Minerals, Pearls, precious Stones, Quarries, and all and singular other Commodities, Jurisdictions, Royalties, Privileges, Franchises, and Preheminences, both within the said Tract of Land upon the Main, and also within the said Islands and Seas adjoining whatsoever and thereunto or thereabouts, both by Sea and Land being or situate.

And which, by our Letters-Patents we may or can grant, and in as ample Manner as We or any our noble Progenitors have heretofore granted to any Person or Persons, or to any Company, Body Politick or corporate, or to any Adventurer or Adventurers, Undertaker or Undertakers of any Discoveries, Plantations, or Traffick, of, in, or into any foreign Parts whatsoever, and in as large and ample Manner as if the same were herein particularly named, mentioned, and expressed.

Provided always, that the said Islands or any Premises herein mentioned, or by these Presents intended or meant to be granted, be not actually possessed or inhabited by any other Christian Prince or Estate, nor be within the Bounds, Limits, or Territories of the Northern Colony heretofore by Us granted to be planted by divers of our loving Subjects in the North Parts of Virginia.

To HAVE AND TO HOLD, possess and enjoy, all and singular the said Islands in the said Ocean Seas so lying and bordering upon the Coast and Coasts of the said Territories of the said first Colony in Virginia, as aforesaid. With all and singular the said Soils, Lands, Grounds, and all and singular other the Premises heretofore by these Presents granted or mentioned to be granted to them, the said Treasurer and Company of Adventurers and Planters of the city of London for the first Colony in Virginia, and to their Heirs, Successors, and Assigns, for ever, to the sole and proper Use and Behoof of them the said Treasurer and Company, and their Heirs and Successors and Assigns, for ever.

To BE HOLDEN OF US, our Heirs and Successors, as of our Manor of East-Greenwich, in Free and common Soccage, and not in Capite.

YIELDING AND PAYING therefore to Us, our Heirs and Successors, the fifth Part of the Ore of all Gold and Silver which shall be there gotten, had, or obtained for all Manner of Services whatsoever.

And further, Our Will and Pleasure is, and We do by these Presents, GRANT AND CONFIRM, for the Good and Welfare of the said Plantation, and that Posterity may hereafter know who have adventured and not been sparing of their Purses in such a noble and generous Action for the general Good of their Country, and at the Request and with the Consent of the Company aforesaid, that Our trusty and well-beloved Subjects George Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, Henry, Earl of Huntington, Edward Earl of Bedford, Richard Earl of Clanrickard, &c. who since Our said last Letters-Patents are become Adventurers, and have joined themselves with the former Adventurers and Planters of the said Company and Society, shall from henceforth be reputed, deemed, and taken to be, and shall be Brethren and free Members of the Company; and shall and may respectively, and according to the Proportion and Value of their several Adventures, HAVE, HOLD, and ENJOY, all such Interest, Right, Title, Privileges, Preheminences, Liberties, Franchises, Immunities, Profits, and Commodities whatsoever, in as large and ample and beneficial Manner, to all Intents, Constructions, and Purposes, as any other Adventures nominated and expressed in any our former Letters-Patents, or any of them have or may have by Force and Virtue of these Presents, or any our former Letters-Patents whatsoever.

And We are further pleased, and We do by these Presents GRANT and CONFIRM, that Philip Earl of Montgomery, William Lord Paget, Sir John Starrington, Knt. &c. whom the said Treasurer and Company have since the said last Letters-Patents nominated and set down as worthy and discreet Persons fit to serve Us as Counsellors, to be of our Council for the said Plantation, shall be reputed, deemed, and taken as Persons of our said Council for the said first Colony, in such Manner and Sort, to all Intents and Purposes, as those who have been formerly elected and nominated as our Counsellors for that Colony, and whose names have been, or are inserted and expressed in our said former Letters-Patents.

And we do hereby ordain and grant by these Presents, that the said Treasurer and Company of Adventurers and Planters aforesaid, shall and may, once every week, or oftener, at their Pleasure, hold, and keep a Court and Assembly for the better Order and Government of the said Plantation, and such Things as shall concern the same; And that any five Persons of our Council for the said first Colony in Virginia, for the Time being, of which Company the Treasurer, or his Deputy, to be always one, and the Number of fifteen others, at the least, of the Generality of the said Company, assembled together in such Manner, as is and hath been heretofore used and accustomed, shall be said, taken, held, and reputed to be, and shall be a sufficient Court of the said Company, for the handling and ordering, and dispatching of all such casual and particular Occurrences, and accidental Matters, of less Consequence and Weight, as shall from Time to Time happen, touching and concerning the said Plantation. And that nevertheless, for the handling, ordering, and disposing of Matters and Affairs of greater Weight and Importance, and such as shall or may, in any Sort, concern the Weal Publick and general Good of the said Company and Plantation, as namely, the Manner of Government from Time to Time to be used, the ordering and Disposing of the Lands and Possessions, and the settling and establishing of a Trade there, or such like, there shall be held and kept every Year, upon the last Wednesday, save one, of Hillary Term, Easter, Trinity, and Michaelmas Terms, for every, one great, general, and solemn Assembly, which four Assemblies shall be stiled and called, The four Great and General Courts of the Council and Company of Adventures for Virginia; In all and every of which said Great and General Court, so assembled, our Will and Pleasure is, and we do, for Us, our Heirs and Successors, for ever, Give and Grant to the said Treasurer and Company, and their Successors for ever, by these Presents, that they, the said Treasurer and Company, or the greater number of them, so assembled, shall and may have full Power and Authority, from Time to Time, and at all times hereafter, to elect and chuse discreet Persons, to be of our said Council for the said first Colony in Virginia, and to nominate and appoint such Officers as they shall think fit and requisite, for the Government, managing, ordering, and dispatching of the Affairs of the said Company.

And shall likewise have full Power and Authority, to ordain and make such Laws and Ordinances, for the Good and Welfare of the said Plantation, as to them from Time to Time, shall be thought requisite and meet: So always, as the same be not contrary to the Laws and Statutes of this our Realm of England; And shall, in like Manner, have Power and Authority, to expulse, disfranchise, and put out of and from their said Company and Society for ever, all and every such Person and Persons, as having either promised or subscribed their Names to become Adventurers to the said Plantation, of the said first Colony in Virginia, or having been nominated for Adventurers in these or any other our Letters-Patents, or having been otherwise admitted and nominated to be of the said Company, have nevertheless either not put in any adventure at all for and towards the said Plantation, or else have refused or neglected, or shall refuse and neglect to bring in his or their Adventure, by Word or Writing, promised within six Months after the same shall be so payable and due.

And whereas, the Failing and not Payment of such Monies as have been promised in Adventure, for the Advancement of the said Plantation, hath been often by Experience found to be dangerous and prejudicial to the same, and much to have injured the Progress and Proceeding of the said Plantation, and for that it seemeth unto Us a Thing reasonable, that such Persons, as by their Hand Writing have engaged themselves for the Payment of their Adventures, and afterwards neglecting their Faith and Promise, should be compelled to make good and keep the same: Therefore, our Will and Pleasure is, that in any Suit or Suits commenced, or to be commenced in any of our Courts at Westminster, or elsewhere, by the said Treasurer and Company, or otherwise against any such persons, that our Judges for the Time being, both in our Court of Chancery, and at the Common Pleas do favour and further the said suits so far forth as Law and Equity will in any wise further and permit.

And We do, for Us, our Heirs and Successors, further give and grant to the said Treasurer and Company, or their Successors forever, that the said Treasurer and Company, or the greater part of them for the Time being, so in a full and general Court assembled as aforesaid, shall and may from Time to Time, and at all times forever hereafter, elect, choose, and admit into their Company, and Society, any person or persons, as well Strangers and Aliens born in any Part beyond the Seas wheresoever, being in

And we do further of our especial Grace, certain Knowledge and full Power, for Us, our Heirs and Successors, give and grant unto the said Treasurer and Company, and their Successors forever, by these Presents, that it shall be lawful and free for them and their Assigns, at all and every Time and Times hereafter, out of any our Realms and Dominions whatsoever, to take, lead, carry, and transport in, and into the said Voyage, and for and towards the said Plantation of our said first Colony in Virginia, all such and so many of our loving Subjects, or any other Strangers that will become our loving Subjects, and live under our Allegiance, as shall willingly accompany them in the said Voyages and Plantation, with Shipping, Armour, Weapons, Ordnance, Munition, Powder, Shot, Victuals, and all Manner of Merchandises and Wares, and all Manner of Cloathing, Implements, Furniture, Beasts, Cattle, Horses, Mares, and all other Things necessary for the said Plantation, and for their Use and Defence, and for Trade with the People there, and in passing and returning to and from, without paying or yielding any Subsidy, Custom, or Imposition, either inward or outward, or any other Duty to Us, our Heirs and Successors, for the same, for the Space of Seven Years from the date of these Presents.

And We do further, for Us, our Heirs and Successors, give and grant to the said Treasurer and Company, and their Successors forever, by these Presents, that the said Treasurer of that Company, or his Deputy for the Time being, or any two other of the said Council, for the said first Colony in Virginia, for the Time being, or any two other at all Times hereafter, and from Time to Time, have full Power and authority to minister and give the Oath and Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, or either of them, to all and every person and persons, which shall at any Time or Times hereafter, go or pass to the said Colony, in Virginia.

And further, that it shall be lawful likewise for the said Treasurer, or his Deputy for the Time being, or any two or others of our said Council, for the said first Colony in Virginia, for the Time being, from Time to Time, and at all Times hereafter to minister such a formal Oath, as by their discretion shall be reasonably devised, as well unto any Person or Persons employed in, for, or touching the said Plantation, for their honest, faithful and just Discharge of their Service in all such Matters as shall be committed unto them, for the Good and Benefit of the said Company, Colony and Plantation; As also unto such other Person or Persons as the said Treasurer, or his Deputy, with two others of the said Council shall think meet, for the Examination or clearing of the Truth, in any Cause whatsoever, concerning the said Plantation, or any business from thence proceeding, or thereunto belonging.

And furthermore, whereas We have been certified, That divers lewd and ill disposed Persons, both Sailors, Soldiers, Artificers, Husbandmen, Labourers and others, having received Wages, Apparel, and other Entertainment, from the said Company, or having contracted, and agreed with the said Company to go, or to serve, or to be employed in the said Plantation of the said first Colony in Virginia, have afterwards either withdrawn, hid, or concealed themselves, or have refused to go thither, after they have been so entertained and agreed withal: And that divers and sundry Persons also, which have been sent and employed in the said Plantation of the said first Colony in Virginia, at and upon the charge of the said Company, and having there misbehaved themselves by Mutinies, Sedition, or other notorious Misdemeanors, or having been employed or sent abroad by the Governor of Virginia, or his Deputy, with some Ship or Pinnae, for our Provision of the said Colony, or for some Discovery, or other Business and Affairs concerning the same, have from thence most treacherously either come back again, and returned into our Realm of England, by Stealth, or without Licence of our Governor of our said Colony in Virginia, for the Time being, or have been sent thither as Misdoers and Offenders: And that many also of those Persons after their Return from thence, having been questioned by our said Council here, for such their Misbehaviors and Offences, by their Insolent and Contemptuous Carriage in the Presence of our said Council, have shewed little respect and Reverence either to the Place or Authority in which we have placed and appointed them; And others for the colouring of their Lewdness and Misdemeanors committed in Virginia, have endeavoured by most vile and slanderous Reports made and divulged, as well of the Country of Virginia, as also of the Government and Estate of the said Plantation and Colony, as much as in them lay, to bring the said Voyage and Plantation into Disgrace and Contempt; By means whereof, not only the Adventurers and Planters already engaged in the said Plantation, have been exceedingly abused and hindered, and a great number of other, our loving and well-disposed Subjects, otherwise well affected and inclined to join and adventure in so noble, Christian, and worthy an Action, have been discouraged from the same; but also the utter overthrow and Ruin of the said Enterprise had been greatly endangered, which cannot miscarry without some Dishonour to Us, and our Kingdom.

Now, forasmuch as it appeareth unto us, that these Insolences, Misdemeanors, and Abuses, not to be tolerated in any civil Government, have, for the most part, grown and proceeded, in regard our said Council have not any direct Power and Authority, by any express words in our former Letters-patents, to correct and chastise such Offenders; We, therefore, for more speedy Information of so great and enormous Abuses and Misdemeanors heretofore practised and committed, and for the preventing of the like hereafter, do by these Presents for us, our Heirs and Successors, GIVE and GRANT, to the said Treasurer, and Company, and their Successors for ever, that it shall, and may be lawful for our said Council for the first Colony in Virginia, or any two of them (whereof the said Treasurer or his Deputy for the time being, to be always one) by Warrant under their Hands, to send for, or cause to be apprehended, all, and every such Person or Persons, who shall be noted, or accused, or found at any Time or Times hereafter, to offend or misbehave themselves, in any the Offences before mentioned or expressed, and upon the Examination of any such Offender or Offenders, and just Proof made by Oath, taken before the said Council, of any such notorious Misdemeanors by them committed as aforesaid; And also upon any insolent and contemptuous, or indecent Carriage and Misbehaviour, to, or against, any of our said Council, shewed or used by any such Person or Persons so called, convicted, and appearing before us as aforesaid; That in all such cases they our said Council, or any two of them for the time being, shall, and may have full Power and Authority, either here to bind them over with good Sureties for their good Behaviour, and further therein, to proceed to all Intents and Purposes, as it is used in other like Cases, within our Realm of England; Or, else at their Discretions to remand and send back the said Offenders, or any of them, unto the said Colony in Virginia, there to be proceeded against and punished, as the Governor, Deputy or Council there, for the time being, shall think meet; Or otherwise, according to such Laws and Ordinances, as are and shall be in Use there, for the well-ordering and good Government of the said Government.

And for the more effectual Advancing of the said Plantation, We do further, for Us, our Heirs, and Successors, of our especial Grace and Favour, by Virtue of our Prerogative Royal, and by the Assent and Consent of the Lords and others of our Privy Council, GIVE and GRANT, unto the said Treasurer and Company, full Power and Authority, free Leave, Liberty, and Licence, to set forth, erect, and publish, one or more Lottery or Lotteries, to have Continuance, and to endure and be held, for the Space of our whole Year, next after the opening of the same; And after the End and Expiration of the said Term, the said Lottery or Lotteries to continue and be further kept, during our Will and Pleasure only, and not otherwise. And yet nevertheless, we are contented and pleased, for the Good and Welfare of the said Plantation, that the said Treasurer and Company shall, for the Dispatch and Finishing of the said Lottery or Lotteries, have six Months Warning after the said Year ended, before our Will and Pleasure shall, for and on that Behalf, be construed, deemed, and adjudged, to be in any wise altered and determined.

And our further Will and Pleasure is, that the said Lottery and Lotteries shall and may be opened and held, within our City of London, or in any other City or Town, or elsewhere, within this our Realm

And further, our Will and Pleasure is, that in all Questions and Doubts, that shall arise, upon any Difficulty of Construction or Interpretation of any Thing, contained in these, or any other our former Letters-patents, the same shall be taken and interpreted, in most ample and beneficial Manner for the said Treasurer and Company, and their Successors, and every Member thereof. 20

And lastly, we do, by these Presents, RATIFY AND CONFIRM unto the said Treasurer and Company, and their Successors, for ever, all and all Manner of Privileges, Franchise, Liberties, Immunities, Preheminences, Profits, and Commodities, whatsoever, granted unto them in any our former Letter-patents, and not in these Presents revoked, altered, changed or abridged. JAMES, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c., to all whom these Presents shall come, Greeting, Whereas, upon the humble Petition of divers of our well disposed Subjects, that intended to make several Plantations in the Parts of America, between the Degrees of thirty-foure and ffourty-five; We according to our princely Inclination, favouring much their worthy Disposition, in Hope thereby to advance the in Largement of Christian Religion, to the Glory of God Almighty, as also by that Meanes to stretch out the Bounds of our Dominions, and to replenish those Deserts with People governed by Lawes and Magistrates, for the peaceable Commerce of all, that in time to come shall have occasion to traffique into those Territories, granted unto Sir Thomas Gates, Sir George Somers, Knights, Thomas Hamon, and Raleigh Gilbert, Esquires, and of their Associates, for the more speedy Accomplishment thereof, by our Letters-Pattent, bearing Date the Tenth Day of Aprill, in the Fourth Year of our Reign of England, France, and Ireland, and of Scotland the ffourtieth, free Liberty to divide themselves into two severall Collonyes; the one called the first Collonye, to be undertaken and advanced by certain Knights, Gentlemen, and Merchants, in and about our Citty of London; the other called the Second Collonye, to be undertaken and advanced by certaine Knights, Gentlemen, and Merchants, and their associates, in and about our Citties of Bristoll, Exon, and our Towne of Plymouth, and other Places, as in and by our said Letters-Patents, amongst other Things more att large it doth and may appeare.

And whereas, since that Time, upon the humble Petition of the said Adventurers and Planters of the said first Collonye, We have been graciously pleased to make them one distinct and entire Body by themselves, giving unto them their distinct Lymitts and Bounds, and have upon their like humble Request, granted unto them divers Liberties, Priveliges, Enlargements, and Immunities, as in and by our severall Letters-Patents it doth and may appeare.

Now forasmuch as We have been in like Manner humbly petitioned unto by our trusty and well beloved Servant, Sir Ferdinando Gorges, Knight, Captain of our ffort and Island by Plymouth, and by certain the principal Knights and Gentlemen Adventurers of the said Second Collonye, and by divers other Persons of Quality, who now intend to be their Associates, divers of which have been at great and extraordinary Charge, and sustained many Losses in seeking and discovering a Place fitt and convenient to lay the Foundation of a hopeful Plantation, and have divers Years past by God's Assistance, and their own endeavours, taken actual Possession of the Continent hereafter mentioned, in our Name and to our Use, as Sovereign Lord thereof, and have settled already some of our People in Places agreeable to their Desires in those Parts, and in Confidence of prosperous Success therein, by the Continuance of God's Devine Blessing, and our Royall Permission, have resolved in a more plentifull and effectual Manner to prosecute the same, and to that Purpose and Intent have desired of Us, for their better Encouragement and Satisfaction herein, and that they may avoide all Confusion, Questions, or Differences between themselves, and those of the said first Collonye, We would likewise be graciously pleased to make certaine Adventurers, intending to erect and establish fishery, Trade and Plantacion, within the Territories, Precincts, and Lymitts of the said second Colony, and their Successors, one severall distinct and entire Body, and to grant unto them, such Estate, Liberties, Priveliges, Enlargements, and Immunities there, as in these our Letters-Patents hereafter particularly expressed and declared.

And forasmuch as We have been certainly given to understand by divers of our good Subjects, that have for these many Yeares past frequented those Coasts and Territories, between the Degrees of Fourty and Forty-Eight, that there is noe other the Subjects of any Christian King or State, by any Authority from their Sovereignes, Lords, or Princes, actually in Possession of any of the said Lands or Precincts, whereby any Right, Claim, Interest, or Title, may, might, or ought by that Meanes accrue, belong, or appertaine unto them, or any of them.

And also for that We have been further given certainly to knowe, that within these late Yeares there hath by God's Visitation raigned a wonderfull Plague, together with many horrible Slaughters and Murthers, committed amongst the Sauages and brutish People there, heertofore inhabiting, in a Manner to the utter Destruction, Denastacion, and Depopulacion of that whole Territorie, so that there is not left for many Leagues together in a Manner, any that doe claime or challenge any Kind of Interests therein, nor any other Superiour Lord or Souveraigne to make Claime thereunto, whereby We in our Judgment are persuaded and satisfied that the appointed Time is come in which Almighty God in his great Goodness and Bountie towards Us and our People, hath thought fit and determined, that those large and goodly Territoryes, deserted as it were by their naturall Inhabitants, should be possessed and enjoyed by such of our Subjects and People as heertofore have and hereafter shall by his Mercie and Favour, and by his Powerfull Arme, be directed and conducted thither.

In Contemplacion and serious Consideracion whereof, Wee have thought it fitt according to our Kingly Duty, soe much as in Us lyeth, to seconde and followe God's sacred Will, rendering reverend Thanks to his Divine Majestie for his gracious favour in laying open and revealing the sa'ne unto us, before any other Christian Prince or State, by which Meanes without Offence, and as We trust to his Glory, Wee may with Boldness goe on to the settling of soe hopefull a Work, which tendeth to the reducing and Conversion of such Sauages as remaine wandering in Desolacion and Distress, to Civil Societie and Christian Religion, to the Inlargement of our own Dominions, and the Advancement of the Fortunes of such of our good Subjects as shall willingly intresse themselves in the said Employment, to whom We cannot but give singular Commendations for their soe worthy Intention and Enterprize; Wee therefore, of our especiall Grace, mere Motion, and certaine Knowledge, by the Advice of the Lords and others of our Privy Councell have for Us, our Heirs and Successors, graunted, ordained, and established, and in and by these Presents, Do for Us, our Heirs and Successors, grant, ordaine and establish, that all that Circuit, Continent, Precincts, and Limitts in America, lying and being in Breadth from Fourty Degrees of Northerly Latitude, from the Equinoctiall Line, to Fourty-eight Degrees of the said Northerly Latitude, and in length by all the Breadth aforesaid throughout the Maine Land, from Sea to Sea, with all the Seas, Rivers, Islands, Creekes, Inletts, Ports, and Havens within the Degrees, Precincts, and Limitts of the said Latitude and Longitude, shall be the Limitts and Bounds, and Precincts of the second Collony: And to the End that the said Territoryes may forever hereafter be more particularly and certainly known and distinguished, our Will and Pleasure is, that the same shall from henceforth be nominated, termed, and called by the Name of New-England, in America; and by that Name of New-England in America, the said Circuit, Precinct, Limitt, Continent, Islands, and Places in America aforesaid, We do by these Presents, for Us, our Heirs and Successors, name, call, erect, found and establish, and by that Name to have continuance for ever.

And for the better Plantacion, ruling, and governing of the aforesaid New-England in America, We will, ordaine, constitute, asigne, limitt and appoint, and for Us, our Heirs and Successors, Wee, by the Advice of the Lords and others of the said privie Councill, do by these presents ordaine, constitute, limitt, and appoint, that from henceforth, there shall be for ever hereafter, in our Towne of Plymouth, in the County of Devon, one Body politique and corporate, which shall have perpetuall succession, which shall consist of the Number of fourtie Persons, and no more, which shall be, and shall be called and knowne by the Name the Council established at Plymouth, in the County of Devon, for the planting ruling, ordering, and governing of New-England in America; and for that Purpose Wee have, at and by the Nomination and Request of the said Petitioners, graunted, ordained, established, and confirmed; and by these Presents, for Us, our Heirs and Successors, doe grant, ordaine, establish, and confirme, our right trusty and right well beloved Cosins and Councillors Lodowick, Duke of Lenox, Lord Steward of our Household, George Lord Marquess Buckingham, our High Admiral of England, James Marquess Hamilton, William Earl of Pembroke, Lord Chamberlaine of our Household, Thomas Earl of Arundel and our right trusty and right well beloved Cosin, William Earl of Bathe, and right trusty and right well beloved Cosin and Councellor, Henry Earl of Southampton, and our right trusty and right well beloved Cousins, William Earle of Salisbury, and Robert Earl of Warwick, and our right trusty and well

John Colleton, their heirs and assigns, full power and authority, to give and confer, unto and upon, such of the inhabitants of the said province, as they shall think do or shall merit the same, such marks of favour and titles of honour as they shall think fit, so as these titles of honour be not the same as are enjoyed by, or conferred upon any the subjects of this our kingdom of England.

14th. And further also, we do by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, give and grant license to them, the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Lord Craven, John Lord Berkley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir William Berkley, and Sir John Colleton, their heirs and assigns, full power, liberty and license to erect, raise and build within the said province and places aforesaid, or any part or parts thereof, such and so many forts, fortresses, castles, cities, boroughs, towns, villages and other fortifications whatsoever, and the same or any of them to fortify and furnish with ordinance, powder, shot, armory, and all other weapons, ammunition, habilements of war, both offensive and defensive, as shall be thought fit and convenient for the safety and welfare of the said province and places, or any part thereof, and the same, or any of them from time to time, as occasion shall require, to dismantle, disfurnish, demolish and pull down, and also to place, constitute and appoint in and over all or any of the castles, forts, fortifications, cities, towns and places aforesaid, governors, deputy governors, magistrates, sheriffs and other officers, civil and military, as to them shall seem meet, and to the said cities, boroughs, towns, villages, or any other place or places within the said province, to grant "letters or charters of incorporation," with all liberties, franchises and privileges, requisite and usefull, or to or within any corporations, within this our kingdom of England, granted or belonging; and in the same cities, boroughs, towns, and other places, to constitute, erect and appoint such and so many markets, marts and fairs, as shall in that behalf be thought fit and necessary; and further also to erect and make in the province aforesaid, or any part thereof, so many manners as to them shall seem meet and convenient, and in every of the said manners to have and to hold a court baron, with all things whatsoever which to a court baron do belong, and to have and to hold views of "frank pledge" and "court leet," for the conservation of the peace and better government of those parts within such limits, jurisdictions, and precincts, as by the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Lord Craven, John Lord Berkley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir William Berkley, and Sir John Colleton, or their heirs, shall be appointed for that purpose, with all things whatsoever, which to a court leet, or view of frank pledge do belong, the said court to be holden by stewards, to be deputed and authorized by the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Lord Craven, John Lord Berkley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir William Berkley, and Sir John Colleton, or their heirs, or by the lords of other manners and leets, for the time being, when the same shall be erected.

15th. And because that in so remote a country, and scituate among so many barbarious nations, and the invasions as well of salvages as of other enemies, pirates and robbers, may probably be feared; therefore we have given, and for us, our heirs and successors, do give power, by these presents, unto the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Lord Craven, John Lord Berkley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir William Berkley, and Sir John Colleton, their heirs and assigns, by themselves, or their captains, or other their officers, to levy, muster and train all sorts of men, of what condition or wheresoever born, in the said province for the time being, and to make war and pursue the enemies aforesaid, as well by sea as by land, yea, even without the limits of the said province, and by God's assistance to vanquish and take them, and being taken to put them to death by the law of war, or to save them at their pleasure; and to do all and every other thing, which unto the charge of a captain general of an army belongeth, or hath accustomed to belong, as fully and freely as any captain general of an army hath or ever had the same.

16th. Also our will and pleasure is, and by this our charter we give unto the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Lord Craven, John Lord Berkley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir William Berkley, and Sir George Colleton, their heirs and assigns, full power, liberty and authority, in case of rebellion, tumult or sedition, (if any should happen,) which God forbid,

And our further pleasure is, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, we do grant unto the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Lord Craven, John Lord Berkley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir William Berkley, and Sir John Colleton, their heirs and assigns, and to all the tenants and inhabitants of the said province of Carolina, both present and to come, and to every of them, that the said province and the tenants and inhabitants thereof, shall not from henceforth be held or reputed a member or part of any colony whatsoever in America, or elsewhere, now transported or made, or hereafter to be transported or made; nor shall be depending on, or subject to their government in anything, but be absolutely separated and divided from the same; and our pleasure is, by these presents, that they be separated, and that they be subject immediately to our crown of England, as depending thereof for ever; and that the inhabitants of the said Province, nor any of them, shall at any time hereafter be compelled or compellable, or be any ways subject or liable to appear or answer to any matter, suit, cause or plaint whatsoever, out of the Province aforesaid, in any other of our islands, colonies, or dominions in America or elsewhere, other than in our realm of England, and dominion of Wales.

18th. And because it may happen that some of the people and inhabitants of the said province, cannot in their private opinions, conform to the publick exercise of religion, according to the liturgy, form and ceremonies of the church of England, or take and subscribe the oaths and articles, made and established in that behalf, and for that the same, by reason of the remote distances of these places, will, we hope, be no breach of the unity and uniformity established in this nation; our will and pleasure therefore is, and we do by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, give and grant unto the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Lord Craven, John Lord Berkley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir William Berkley, and Sir John Colleton, their heirs and assigns, full and free license, liberty and authority, by such legal ways and means as they shall think fit, to give and grant unto such person or persons, inhabiting and being within the said province, or any part thereof, who really in their judgments, and for conscience sake, cannot or shall not conform to the said liturgy and ceremonies, and take and subscribe the oaths and articles aforesaid, or any of them, such indulgencies and dispensations in that behalf, for and during such time and times, and with such limitations and restrictions as they, the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Lord Craven, John Lord Berkley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir William Berkley, and Sir John Colleton, their heirs or assigns, shall in their discretion think fit and reasonable; and with this express proviso, and limitation also, that such person and persons, to whom such indulgencies and dispensations shall be granted as aforesaid, do and shall from time to time declare and continue, all fidelity, loyalty and obedience to us, our heirs and successors, and be subject and obedient to all other the laws, ordinances, and constitutions of the said province, in all matters whatsoever, as well ecclesiastical as civil, and do not in any wise disturb the peace and safety thereof, or scandalise or reproach the said liturgy, forms and ceremonies, or anything relating thereunto, or any person or persons whatsoever, for or in respect of his or their use or exercise thereof, or his or their obedience and conformity, thereunto.

19th. And in case it shall happen, that any doubts or questions should arise, concerning the true sense and understanding of any word, clause or sentence contained in this our present charter, we will, ordain and command, that at all times, and in all things, such interpretation be made thereof, and allowed in all and every of our courts whatsoever, as lawfully may be adjudged most advantageous and favourable to the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Lord Craven, John Lord Berkley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir William Berkley, and Sir John Colleton, their heirs and assigns, although express mention be not made in these presents, of the true yearly value and certainty of the premises, or any part thereof, or of any other gifts and grants made by us, our ancestors, or predecessors, to them the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Lord Craven, John Lord Berkley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir William Berkley, and Sir John Colleton, or any other person or persons whatsoever, or any statute, act, ordinance, 10 provision proclamation or restraint, heretofore had, made, published, ordained or provided, or any other thing, cause or matter, whatsoever, to the contrary thereof, in any wise notwithstanding.

CHARLES THE SECOND, by the grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c., to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting : Whereas wee have been informed, by the humble petition of our trustie and well beloved subject, John Clarke, on the behalf of Benjamin Arnold, William Brenton, William Codrington, Nicholas Easton, William Boulston, John Porter, John Smith, Samuel Gorton, John Weeks, Roger Williams, Thomas Olnie, Gregoire Dexter, John Cogeshall, Joseph Clarke, Randall Holden, John Greene, John Roome, Samuel Wildbore, William Ffield, James Baker, Richard Tew, Thomas Harris, and William Dyrce, and the rest of the purchasers and free inhabitants of our island, called Rhode-Island, and the rest of the colonie of Providence Plantations, in the Narragansett Bay, in New-England, in America, that they, pursueing, with peaceable and loyall mindes, their sober, serious, and religious intentions, of godlie edifeing themselves, and one another, in the holie Christian faith and worshipping as they were perswaded; together with the gaininge over and conversione of the poore ignorant Indian natives, in those partes of America, to the sincere professione and obedience of the same faith and worship, did, not onlie by the consent and good encouragement of our royall progenitors, transport themselves out of this kingdome of England into America, but alsoe, since their arrival there, after their first settlement amongst other our subjects in those parts, for the avoideing of discorde, and those manie evils which were likely to ensue upon some of those our subjects not beinge able to beare, in these remote parties, their different apprehensions in religious concernementes, and in pursueance of the afforesayd ends, did once againe leave their desirable stationes and habitations, and with excessive labour and travell, hazard and charge, did transplant themselves into the middost of the Indian natives, who, as wee are informed, are the most potent princes and people of all that country; where, by the good Providence of God, from whome the Plantations have taken their name, upon their labour and industrie, they have not onlie byn preserved to admiration, but have increased and prospered, and are seized and possessed, by purchase and consent of the said natives, to their full content, of such lands, islands, rivers, harbours, and roades, as are verie convenient, both for plantations and alsoe for buildinge of shippes, sulye of pype-staves, and other merchandize; and which lyes verie commodious, in manie respects, for commerce, and to accomodate oure southerm plantations, and may much advance the trade of this oure realme, and greatlie enlarge the territories thereof; they havinge, by neare neighbourhoode to and friendlie societie with the greate bodie of the Narragansett Indians, given them encouragement, of their owne accordc, to subject themselves, their people and landes, unto us; whereby, as is hoped, there may, in due tyme, by the blessing of God upon their endeavours, bee layd a sure ffoundation of happinesse to all America :

And whereas, in their humble addresse, they have freely declared, that it is much on their hearts (if they may be permitted), to hold forth a livelie experiment, that a most flourishing civill state may stand and best bee maintained, and that among our English subjects, with a full libertie in religious concernementes; and that true pietye rightly grounded upon gospell principles, will give the best and greatest security to soveraignetye, and will lay in the hearts of men the strongest obligations to true loyaltye :

Now know yee, that wee beinge willinge to encourage the hopefull undertakeinge of oure sayd loyall and loveinge subjects, and to secure them in the free exercise and enjoyment of all their civill and religious rights, appertaining to them, as our loveinge subjects; and to preserve unto them that libertye, in the true Christian faith and worshipping of God, which they have sought with soe much travaill, and with peaceable myndes, and loyall subjectione to our royall progenitors and ourselves, to enjoye; and because some of the people and inhabitants of the same colonie cannot, in their private opinions, conforme to the publique exercise of religion, according to the liturgy, formes and ceremonies of the 10 And that the province or territory hereby granted and described, may be dignified with as large tythes and privileges, as any other parts of our dominions and territories in that region; Know ye, That we, of our further grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, have thought fit to annex the same tract of ground or territory unto the same province of Carolina; and out of the fullness of our royal power and prerogative, we do, for us, our heirs and successors, annex and unite the same to the said province of Carolina.

And forasmuch as we have made and ordained the aforesaid Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs, and assigns, the true Lords and Proprietors of all the province or territory aforesaid; Know ye therefore moreover, That we, reposing especial trust and thing and things, which, unto the compleat establishment of justice, unto courts, sessions, and forms of judicature, and manners of proceeding therein, do belong, although in these presents express mention is not made thereof; and by Judges to him or them delegated, to award process, hold pleas, and determine, in all the said courts and places of judicature, all actions, suits, and causes whatsoever, as well criminal as civil, real, mixt, personal, or of any other kind or nature whatsoever: Which laws so as aforesaid to be published, our pleasure is, and we do enjoin, require, and command, shall be absolutely firm and available in law; and that all the liege people of us, our heirs and successors, within the said province or territory, do observe and keep the same inviolably in those parts, so far as they concern them, under the pains and penalties therein expressed, or to be expressed: Provided nevertheless, That the said laws be consonant to reason, and as near as may be conveniently, agreeable to the laws and customs of this our realm of England.

And because such assemblies of freeholders cannot be so suddenly called as there may be occasion to require the same, we do therefore, by these presents, give and grant unto the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs and assigns, by themselves, or their magistrates, in that behalf lawfully authorised, full power and authority, from time to time, to make and ordain fit and wholesome orders and ordinances within the province or territory aforesaid, or any county, baronny, or province, within the same, to be kept and observed, as well for the keeping of the peace, as for the better government of the people there abiding, and to publish the same to all to whom it may concern: Which ordinances we do, by these presents, straitly charge and command to be inviolably observed within the same province, counties, territories, baronnies and provinces, under the penalties therein expressed; so as such ordinances be reasonable, and not repugnant or contrary, but as near as may be, agreeable to the laws and statutes of this our kingdom of England; and so as the same ordinances do not extend to the binding, charging, or taking away the right or interest of any person or persons, in their freehold, goods, or chattels, whatsoever.

And to the end the said province or territory may be the more happily increased, by the multitude people resorting thither, and may likewise be the more strongly defended from the incursions of savages, and other enemies, pirates and robbers; therefore, we, for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant, by these presents full power, license and liberty, unto all the liege people of us, our heirs and successors, in our kingdom of England, and elsewhere, within any other our dominions, isles, colonies, or plantations, (excepting those who shall be especially forbidden) to transport themselves and families into the said province or territory, with convenient shipping and fitting provision; and there to settle themselves, dwell, and inhabit: Any law, act, statute, ordinance, or other thing, to the contrary notwithstanding.

And we will also, and of our especial grace, for us, our heirs and successors, do straitly enjoin, ordain, constitute, and command, that the said province and territory shall be of our allegiance; and that all and singular the subjects and liege people of us, our heirs and successors, transported, or to be transported into the said province, and the children of them, and such as shall descend from them there born, or hereafter to be born be, and shall be denizens and lieges of us, our heirs and successors, of this our kingdom of England, and be in all things, held, treated and reputed, as the liege faithful people of us, our heirs and successors, born within this our said kingdom, or any other of our dominions; and may inherit or otherwise purchase and receive, take, hold, buy and possess, any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, within the said places, and them may occupy and enjoy, sell, alien, and bequeath; as likewise all liberties, franchises, and privileges, of this our kingdom, and of other our dominions aforesaid, may freely and quietly have, possess, and enjoy, as our liege people, born within the same, without the molestation, vexation, trouble, or grievance, of us, our heirs and successors: Any act, statute, ordinance, or provision, to the contrary, notwithstanding.

And furthermore, that our subjects of this our said kingdom of England, and other our dominions, may be the rather encouraged to undertake this expedition, with ready and cheerful means; Know ye, That we, of our special grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, do give and grant, by virtue of these presents, as well to the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, and their heirs, as unto all others as shall, from time to time, repair unto the said province or territory, with a purpose to inhabit there, or to trade with the natives thereof; full liberty and licence, to lade and freight, in every port whatsoever, of us, our heirs and successors, and into the said province of Carolina, by them, their servants and assigns, to transport all and singular their goods, wares and merchandises; as likewise all sorts of grain whatsoever, and any other thing whatsoever, necessary for their food and clothing, not prohibited by the laws and statutes of our kingdom and dominions, to be carried out of the same, without any let or molestation of us, our heirs and successors, or of any other our officers or ministers whatsoever; saving also unto us, our heirs and successors, the customs and other duties and payments, due for the said wares and merchandises, according to the several rates of the places from whence the same shall be transported.

We will also, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant licence, by this our charter, unto the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, and their heirs and assigns, and to all the inhabitants and dwellers in the province or territory aforesaid, both present and to come, full power and absolute authority, to import or unlade, by themselves or their servants, factors, or assigns, all merchandises and goods whatsoever that shall arise of the fruits and commodities of the said province or territory, either by land or sea, into any the ports of us, our heirs and successors, in our kingdom of England, Scotland, or Ireland, or otherwise to dispose of the said goods in the said ports; and, if need be, within one year next after the unlading, to lade the said merchandises and goods again into the same or other ships; and to export the same into any other countries, either of our dominions or foreign, being in amity with us, our heirs and successors, so as they pay such customs, subsidies and other duties, for the same, to us, our heirs and successors, as the rest of our subjects of this our kingdom, for the time being, shall be bound to pay; beyond which we will not, that the inhabitants of the said province or territory, shall be any ways charged: Provided nevertheless, and our will and pleasure is, and we have further, for the considerations aforesaid, of our especial grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, given and granted, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant unto the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs and assigns, full and free licence, power and authority, at any time or times, from and after the Feast of St. Michael the Archangel, which shall be in the year of our Lord Christ one thousand six hundred and sixty-seven, as well to import and bring into any of our dominions, from the said province of Carolina, or any part thereof, the several goods herein after mentioned; that is to say, silks, wines, raisins, capers, wax, almonds, oil, and olives, without paying or answering to us, our heirs and successors, any custom, impost, or other duty, for or in respect thereof, for and during the term and space of seven years, to commence and be accounted from and after the importation of four tons of any of the said goods, in any one bottom, ship, or vessel, from the said province or territory, into any of our dominions; as also, to export, and carry out of any of our dominions, into the said province or territory, custom free, all sorts of tools which shall be useful or necessary for the planters there, in the accommodation and improvement of the premises: Any thing before in these presents contained, or any law, act, statute, prohibition, or other matter or thing, heretofore had, made, enacted, or provided, in any wise notwithstanding.

And furthermore of our more ample and especial grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, we do, for us, our heirs and successors, grant unto the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs and assigns, full and absolute power and authority, to make, erect, and constitute, within the said province or territory, and the isles and islets aforesaid, such and so many sea-ports, harbours, creeks, and other places, for discharge and unlading of goods and merchandises, out of ships, boats and other vessels, and for lading of them, in such and so many places, with such jurisdictions, privileges, and franchises, unto the said ports belonging, as to them shall seem most expedient; and that all and singular the ships, boats and other vessels, which shall come for merchandises and trade into the said province or territory, or shall depart out of the same, shall be laden and unladen at such ports only as shall be erected and constituted by the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs and assigns, and not elsewhere: Any use, custom, or thing, to the contrary notwithstanding.

And we do further will, appoint, and ordain, and by these presents, for us, our heirs, and successors, do grant unto the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, and their heirs and assigns, that they the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs and assigns, may, from time to time, forever, have and enjoy the customs and subsidies, in the ports, harbours, creeks, and other places within the province aforesaid, payable for the goods, wares and merchandises there laded, or to be laded or unladed; the said customs to be reasonably assessed, upon any occasion, by themselves, and by and with the consent of the free people, or the greater part of them, as aforesaid; to whom we give power, by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, upon just cause, and in due proportion, to assess and impose the same.

And further, of our especial grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, we have given, granted and confirmed, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do give, grant and confirm, unto the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs and assigns, full and absolute power, licence and authority, that they the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs and assigns, from time to time hereafter, forever, at his and their will and pleasure, may assign, alien, grant, demise, or enfeoff, the premises, or any part or parcel thereof, to him or them that shall be willing to purchase the same, and to such person and persons as they shall think fit; to have and to hold to them, the said person or persons, their heirs and assigns, in fee-simple, or in fee-tail, or for term of life or lives, or years; to be held of them the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs and assigns, by such rents, services and customs, as shall seem fit to them the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs and assigns, and not of us, our heirs and successors: And to the same person and persons, and to all and every of them, we do give and grant, by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, licence, authority and power, that such person or persons may have and take the premises, or any part thereof, of the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs and assigns; and the same to hold to themselves, their heirs and assigns, in what estate of inheritance soever, in fee-simple, or fee-tail, or otherwise, as to them the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs or assigns, shall seem expedient; the statute in the Parliament of Edward, son of King Henry, heretofore King of England, our predecessor, commonly called the statute of quia emptores terrarum, or any other statute, act, ordinance, use, law, custom, or any other matter, cause or thing, heretofore published or provided to the contrary, in any-wise notwithstanding.

And because many persons, born and inhabiting in the said province, for their deserts and services, may expect and be capable of marks of honour and favour, which, in respect of the great distance cannot be conveniently conferred by us; our will and pleasure therefore is, and we do by these presents, give and grant unto the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Crave., John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, and their heirs and assigns, full power and authority, to give and confer unto and upon such of the inhabitants of the said province or territory, as they shall think do or shall merit the same, such marks of favour and titles of honour, as they shall think fit; so as their titles of honour be not the same as are enjoyed by or conferred upon any of the subjects of this our kingdom of England.

And further also, we do, by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, give and grant licence to the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, and their heirs and assigns, full power, liberty and licence, to erect, raise and build, within the said province and places aforesaid, or any part or parts thereof, such and so many forts, fortresses, castles, cities, boroughs, towns, villages, and other fortifications whatsoever; and the same, or any of them, to fortify and furnish with ordnance, powder, shot, armour, and all other weapons, ammunition, and habiliments of war, both defensive and offensive, as shall be thought fit and convenient, for the safety and welfare of the said province and places, or any part thereof; and the same, or any of them, from time to time, as occasion shall require, to dismantle, disfurnish, demolish and pull down: And also to place, constitute and appoint, in or over all or any of the said castles, forts, fortifications, cities, towns, and places aforesaid, Governors, Deputy-Governors, Magistrates, Sheriffs, and other officers, civil and military, as to them shall seem meet: And to the said cities, boroughs, towns, villages, or any other place or places, within the said province or territory, to grant letters or charters of incorporation, with all liberties, franchises, and privileges, requisite or usual, or to or within this our kingdom of England granted or belonging; and in the same cities, boroughs, towns, and other places, to constitute, erect and appoint such and so many markets, marts, and fairs, as shall, in that behalf, be thought fit and necessary: And further also, to erect and make in the province or territory aforesaid, or any part thereof, so many manors, with such signories as to them shall seem meet and convenient; and in every of the same manors to have and to hold a Court-Baron, with all things whatsoever which to a Court-Baron do belong; and to have and to hold views of Frank-Pledge and Court-Leets, for the conservation of the peace and better government of those parts, with such limits, jurisdictions and precincts, as by the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, or their heirs, shall be appointed for that purpose, with all things whatsoever which to a Court-Leet, or view of Frank-Pledge, do belong; the same courts to be holden by stewards, to be deputed and authorized by the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, or their heirs, by the Lords of the manors and leets, for the time being, when the same shall be erected.

And because that in so remote a country, and situate among so many barbarous nations, the invasions of savages and other enemies, pirates and robbers, may probably be feared; therefore, we have given, and for us, our heirs and successors, do give power by these presents, unto the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs or assigns, by themselves, or their Captains, or other officers, to levy, muster, and train up all sorts of men, of what condition soever, or wheresoever born, whether in the said province, or elsewhere, for the time being; and to make war, and pursue the enemies aforesaid, as well by sea, as by land, yea, even without the limits of the said province, and, by God's assistance, to vanquish, and take them; and being taken, to put them to death, by the law of war, and to save them at their pleasure, and to do all and every other thing, which to the charge and office of a Captain-General of an army, hath had the same.

Also, our will and pleasure is, and by this our charter, we do give and grant unto the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs and assigns, full power, liberty, and authority, in case of rebellion, tumult, or sedition, (if any should happen, which God forbid) either upon the land within the province aforesaid, or upon the main sea, in making a voyage thither, or returning from thence, by him and themselves, their Captains, Deputies, or officers, to be authorised under his or their seals, for that purpose; to whom also, for us, our heirs and successors, we do give and grant, by these presents, full power and authority, to exercise martial law against any mutinous and seditious persons of these parts; such as shall refuse to submit themselves to their government, or shall refuse to serve in the war, or shall fly to the enemy, or forsake their colours or ensigns, or be loiterers, or stragglers, or otherwise offending against law, custom, or military discipline; as freely and in as ample manner and form, as any Captain-General of an army, by virtue of his office, might or hath accustomed to use the same.

And our further pleasure is, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, we do grant unto the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs and assigns, and to the tenants and inhabitants of the said province or territory, both present and to come, and to every of them, that the said province or territory, and the tenants and inhabitants thereof, shall not, from henceforth, be held or reputed any member or part of any colony whatsoever in America, or elsewhere, now transported or made, or hereafter to be transported or made; nor shall be depending on, or subject to their government in any thing, but be absolutely separated and divided from the same; and our pleasure is, by these presents, that they be separated, and that they be subject immediately to our Crown of England, as depending thereof, forever: And that the inhabitants of the said province or territory, nor any of them, shall, at any time hereafter, be compelled, or compellable, or be any ways subject or liable to appear or answer to any matter, suit, cause or plaint whatsoever, out of the province or territory aforesaid, in any other of our islands, colonies, or dominions in America, or elsewhere, other than in our realm of England, and dominion of Wales.

And because it may happen that some of the people and inhabitants of the said province cannot, in their private opinions, conform to the public exercise of religion according to the liturgy, forms, and ceremonies of the Church of England, or take and subscribe the oaths and articles made and established in that behalf; and for that the same, by reason of the remote distances of those places, will, as we hope, be no breach of the unity and conformity established in this nation; our will and pleasure therefore is, and we do, by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, give and grant unto the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs and assigns, full and free licence, liberty, and authority, by such ways and means as they shall think fit, to give and grant unto such person and persons, inhabiting and being within the said province or territory, hereby, or by the said recited Letters Patents mentioned to be granted as aforesaid, or any part thereof, such indulgences and dispensations, in that behalf, for and during such time and times, and with such limitations and restrictions, as they the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs or assigns, shall, in their discretion, think fit and reasonable: And that no person or persons unto whom such liberty shall be given, shall be any way molested, punished, disquieted, or called in question, for any differences in opinion, or practice in matters of religious concerns, who do not actually disturb the civil peace of the province, county or colony, that they shall make their abode in: But all and every such person and persons may, from time to time, and at all times, freely and quietly have and enjoy his and their judgments and consciences, in matters of religion, throughout all the said province or colony, they behaving themselves peaceably, and not using this liberty to licentiousness, nor to the civil injury, or outward disturbance of others: Any law, statute, or clause, contained or to be contained, usage or custom of our realm of England, to the contrary hereof, in any-wise, notwithstanding.

And in case it shall happen, that any doubts or questions shall arise, concerning the true sense and understanding of any word, clause, or sentence contained in this our present charter; we will, ordain, and command, that in all times, and in all things, such interpretations be made thereof, and allowed in all and every of our courts whatsoever, as lawfully may be adjudged most advantageous and favourable to the said Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albemarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkeley, Anthony Lord Ashley, Sir George Carteret, Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, their heirs and assigns, although express mention, &c.

SUPPLEMENT
APPENDIX.

Charter of Georgia—
1732.

GEORGE the second, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, king, defender of the faith, and so forth. To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting.

Whereas we are credibly informed, that many of our poor subjects are, through misfortunes and want of employment, reduced to great necessity, insomuch as by their labor they are not able to provide a maintenance for themselves and families; and if they had means to defray their charges of passage, and other expences, incident to new settlements, they would be glad to settle in any of our provinces in America where by cultivating the lands, at present waste and desolate, they might not only gain a comfortable subsistence for themselves and families, but also strengthen our colonies and increase the trade, navigation and wealth of these our realms.

And whereas our provinces in North America, have been frequently ravaged by Indian enemies; more especially that of South Carolina, which in the late war, by the neighbouring savages, was laid waste by fire and sword, and great numbers of English inhabitants, miserably massacred, and our loving subjects who now inhabit them, by reason of the smallness of their numbers, will in case of a new war be exposed to the late calamities; inasmuch as their whole southern frontier continueth unsettled, and lieth open to the said savages—

And whereas we think it highly becoming our crown and royal dignity to protect all our loving subjects be they never so distant from us; to extend our fatherly compassion even to the meanest and most infatuated of our own people, and to relieve the wants of our above mentioned poor subjects; and that it will be highly conducive for accomplishing those ends, that a regular colony of the said poor people be settled and established in the southern territories of Carolina.

And whereas we have been well assured, that if we will be graciously pleased to erect and settle a corporation, for the receiving, managing and disposing of the contributions of our loving subjects; divers persons would be induced to contribute to the purposes aforesaid—

Know ye therefore, that we have, for the considerations aforesaid, and for the better and more orderly carrying on of the said good purposes; of our special grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, willed, ordained, constituted and appointed, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do will, ordain, constitute, declare and grant, that our right trusty and well beloved John, lord-viscount Purcival, of our kingdom of Ireland, our trusty and well beloved Edward Digby, George Carpenter, James Oglethorpe, George Heathcote, Thomas Tower, Robert Moore, Robert Hucks, Roger Holland, William Sloper, Francis Eyles, John Laroche, James Vernon, William Beletha, esquires, A. M. John Burton, B. D. Richard Bundy, A. M. Arthur Bedford, A. M. Samuel Smith, A. M. Adam Anderson and Thomas Corane, gentlemen; and such other persons as shall be elected in the manner herein after mentioned, and their successors to be elected in the manner herein after directed; be, and shall be one body politic and corporate, in deed and in name, by the name of the Trustees for establishing the colony of Georgia in America; and them and their successors by the same name, we do, by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, really and fully make, ordain, constitute and declare, to be one body politic in deed and name forever; and that by the same name, they and their successors, shall and may have perpetual succession; and that they and their successors by that name shall and may forever hereafter, be persons able and capable in the law, to purchase, have, take, receive and enjoy, to them and their successors, any manors, messuages, lands, tenements, rents, advowsons, liberties, privileges, jurisdictions, franchises, and other hereditaments whatsoever, lying and being in Great Britain, or any part thereof, of whatsoever nature, kind or quality, or value they be, in fee and in perpetuity, not exceeding the yearly value of one thousand pounds, beyond reprises; also estates for lives, and for years, and all other manner of goods, chattels and things whatsoever they be; for the better settling and

* Georgia was included in a proprietary charter granted to the lords proprietors of Carolina in 1662-63 for which a provincial charter was substituted in 1719. The charter of Georgia, as an independent Colony, was granted to a company organized by James Oglethorpe, esq., who desired to provide in the New World homes for indigent persons. This charter was surrendered June 20, 1732, and a provincial government, with a governor and council, was substituted, on the recommendation of the lords commissioners for trade and plantations.

And we do further grant, for us, our heirs and successors, that the said corporation, and the common council of the said corporation, hereinafter by us appointed, may from time to time, and at all times, meet about their affairs when and where they please, and transact and carry on the business of the said corporation.

And for the better execution of the purposes aforesaid, we do, by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, give & grant to the said corporation, and their successors, that they and their successors forever, may upon the third Thursday in the month of March, yearly, meet at some convenient place to be appointed by the said corporation, or major part of them who shall be present at any meeting of the said corporation, to be had for the appointing of the said place; and that they, or two-thirds of such of them, that shall be present at such yearly meeting, and at no other meeting of the said corporation, between the hours of ten in the morning and four in the afternoon of the same day, choose and elect such person or persons to be members of the said corporation, as they shall think beneficial to the good designs of the said corporation.

And our further will and pleasure is, that if it shall happen that any person hereinafter by us appointed, as the common council of the said corporation, or any persons to be elected or admitted members of the said common council in the manner hereafter directed, shall die, or shall by writing under his and their hands respectively resign his or their office or offices of common council man or common council men; the said corporation, or the major part of such of them as shall be present, shall and may at such meeting, on the third Thursday in March yearly, in manner as aforesaid, next after such death or resignation, and at no other meeting of the said corporation, into the room or place of such person or persons so dead or so resigning, elect and choose one or more such person or persons, being members of the said corporation, as to them shall seem meet: and our will is, that all and every the person or persons which shall from time to time hereafter be elected common council men of the said corporation as aforesaid, do and shall, before he or they act as common men of the said corporation, take an oath for the faithful and due execution of their office; which oath the president of the said corporation for the time being, is hereby authorised and required to administer to such person or persons elected as aforesaid.

SIR E. THORNTON TO THE MARQUIS OF SALISBURY.

Washington,

MY LORD MARQUIS,

On the 26th ultimo I had the honour to ask your Lordship by telegraph to grant me leave of absence in order that I might go to Ottawa on the 8th instant (to-day) with reference to the Arbitration regarding the question of the unsettled Northern and Western Boundaries of the Province of Ontario. Her Majesty's Secretary of State was good enough to grant me the necessary leave.

I had made this request because I had been informed by the Honourable R. W. Scott, Secretary of State of the Dominion of Canada, that the two Arbitrators representing the respective sides would meet at Ottawa on the 10th instant for the purpose of taking the matter into consideration, and were desirous that I should also be present at the meeting as Umpire, which position I had accepted in November 1874.

On the evening of the 2nd instant, however, I received a telegram from Mr. Scott, announcing that the meeting of the Boundary Commission had been postponed, and that he would inform me by letter on what future day it would meet.

Since then I have not received any communication from Mr. Scott.

I have, &c.,

EDWARD THORNTON.

The Marquis of Salisbury,

I shall therefore avail myself of the permission granted me by Her Majesty's Secretary of State, and intend to start to-morrow for Ottawa, leaving Mr. Victor Drummond, First Secretary to this Legation, as Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires during my absence.

MY LORD,

With reference to my despatch, No. 236 of the 29th ult., I have the honour to inform your Lordship that I left Newport for Ottawa on the 30th ult.; Mr. Victor Drummond remaining as Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires during my absence. The Commission, of which I was a member, for deciding upon the Western and Northern Boundaries of the province of Ontario, has come to a unanimous agreement, and has signed its decision, so that having performed the task which was assigned to it, it has dissolved.

I have to-day returned to Washington, and have assumed my duties as Her Majesty's Minister. As my absence from my post was entirely upon official business, I venture to ask that the allowance to which Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires is entitled for the days during which I have been absent may be paid to him, but not deducted from my salary.

I have, &c.,

DOMINION ACT, 45 VICT., CAP. 3 (1882).

AN ACT TO READJUST THE REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES.

(Assented to 17th May, 1882.)

Dominion Act,
45 Vict.,
cap. 3 (1882).

WHEREAS by the Census of the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, and in accordance with "The British North America Act, 1867," the Province of Ontario is entitled to four additional members in the House of Commons, and the Province of Manitoba, by its present population, to one additional member, the same being severally in excess of the number of members of the said House for each of the said Provinces as provided by "The British North America Act, 1867," and "An Act to readjust the Representation in the House of Commons," passed in the thirty-fifth year of Her Majesty's reign; and by reason thereof and of the intended union of the electoral district of the town of Niagara with the township of Niagara thereto attached with the electoral district of the county of Lincoln, and the union of the electoral district of the town of Cornwall with the township of Cornwall thereto attached with the county of Stormont, it is expedient to readjust the boundaries of certain of the electoral districts in the said Provinces of Ontario and Manitoba: Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. The House of Commons shall consist of two hundred and eleven members, of whom ninety-two shall be elected for Ontario; sixty-five for Quebec; twenty-one for Nova Scotia; sixteen for New Brunswick; five for Manitoba; six for British Columbia; and six for Prince Edward Island.

2. The said provinces respectively shall, for the purposes of the election of members to serve in the House of Commons, be divided into the electoral districts established by "The British North America Act, 1867," and the Act above cited readjusting the representation, and the addresses of the two Houses of the Legislature of Prince Edward Island to Her Majesty on the admission of that Province into the Dominion of Canada, and those constituted by this Act,—each of the now existing electoral districts remaining constituted and represented as it now is, except in so far as it may be altered by the following provision of this Act, that is to say:—

ONTARIO.

* * * * *
The settlements westward of the Provisional District of Thunder Bay and eastward of the Electoral Districts of Manitoba, shall, pending the adjustment of the boundaries, be and the same are hereby made part of the Electoral District of Algoma.

THE EARL OF SELKIRK AS TO THE REASONS FOR THE PASSING OF THE IMPERIAL ACT, 43 GEORGE III., CAP. 138 (1803).

APPENDIX.

His Lordship says that the immediate cause for the passage of the Act was the shooting of one King by one Lamotte in the vicinity of Lake Athabasca. He describes the event as follows:—

The Earl of Selkirk as to the Reasons for the passing of the Imperial Act,
43 Geo. III.
cap. 138
(1803).

“ In the winter of 1801-2, Mr. John McDonald managed the affairs of the old North-West Company in the Arthabaska country; Mr. Rocheblave, those of the new company in the same district. Mr. McDonald had under his command a clerk of the name of King, an experienced man, of a bold and active character, and of a herculean figure. Mr. Rocheblave's assistant was Lamotte, a young man of a respectable Canadian family, of a spirited and active disposition, but much younger and of less experience among the Indians, and not to be compared to King in point of personal strength. In the course of the winter two Indians arrived as deputies from a band with which both parties had had transactions, to inform the traders that they had furs ready at an encampment at the distance of four or five days' march. King was sent with four men to collect those due to the old North-West Company—Lamotte with two men for those due to the new Company. Both of them were charged to use the utmost diligence and to defend the rights of their employers with courage. They set out accordingly on their mission, and great activity and address were used by each to get the start of the other, but without success on either side. When they reached the Indian encampment, both parties proceeded to collect the furs due to them, but King, by means of the superior number of his assistants, got possession of all the furs except one bundle which was delivered to Lamotte by the same Indian who had come as a delegate to the new Company. King then came to Lamotte's tent, accompanied by all his men, armed, peremptorily demanding that bundle also; threatening violence and declaring his intention to take the furs by force if they were not given up to him. Lamotte was determined to defend the property of his employers to the last extremity, and warned King, that if he ventured to touch the furs, he should do so at his peril. King, nevertheless, was proceeding to put his threats into execution and to seize the bundle when Lamotte pulled out his pistol and shot the robber dead on the spot. King's men would have revenged his death, but the Indians interfered and expressed their opinion that he had merited his fate. Though it would be difficult to quote an instance of homicide more decidedly justifiable, all Canada rang with the claims of the old North-West Company against this murder, as they chose to term it. It was upon this occasion that the Act of 1803 was obtained, under the idea that the case could not be brought to trial, though it might undoubtedly have been tried at Westminster under the Act of Henry VIII.”

Whereas His Majesty, by His Royal Proclamation, bearing Date the Seventh Day of October, in the Third Year of His Reign, thought fit to declare the Provisions which had been made in respect to certain Countries, Territories, and Islands in America, ceded to His Majesty by the definitive Treaty of Peace, concluded at Paris on the Tenth Day of February, One thousand seven hundred and sixty-three: And whereas, by the Arrangements made by the said Royal Proclamation, a very large Extent of Country, within which there were several Colonies and Settlements of the Subjects of France, who claimed to remain therein under the Faith of the said Treaty, was left, without any Provision being made for the Administration of Civil Government therein; and certain Parts of the Territory of Canada, where sedentary Fisheries had been established and carried on by the Subjects of France, Inhabitants of the said Province of Canada, under Grants and Concessions from the Government thereof, were annexed to the Government of Newfoundland, and thereby subjected to Regulations inconsistent with the Nature of such Fisheries; May it therefore please Your most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted; and be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That all the Territories, Islands, and Countries in North America, belonging to the Crown of Great Britain, bounded on the South by a Line from the Bay of Chaleurs, along the High Lands which divide the Rivers that empty themselves into the River Saint Lawrence from those which fall into the sea to a Point in Forty-five Degrees of Northern Latitude, on the Eastern Bank of the River Connecticut, keeping the same Latitude directly West, through the Lake Champlain, until, in the same Latitude, it meets the River Saint Lawrence; from thence up the Eastern Bank of the said River to the Lake Ontario; thence through the Lake Ontario, and the River commonly called Niagara; and thence along by the Eastern and South-eastern Bank of Lake Erie, following the said Bank, until the same shall be intersected by the Northern Boundary, granted by the Charter of the Province of Pennsylvania, in case the same shall be so intersected; and from thence along the said Northern and Western Boundaries of the said Province, until the said Western Boundary strike the Ohio; but in case the said Bank of the said Lake shall not be found to be so intersected, then following the said Bank until it shall arrive at that Point of the said Bank which shall be nearest to the North-western Angle of the said Province of Pennsylvania, and thence, by a Right Line, to the said North-western Angle of the said Province; and thence along the Western Boundary of the said Province, until it strike the River Ohio; and along the Bank of the said River, Westward, to the Banks of the Mississippi, and Northward to the Southern Boundary of the Territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay; and also all such Territories, Islands, and Countries, which have, since the Tenth of February, One thousand seven hundred and sixty-three, been made Part of the Government of Newfoundland, be, and they are hereby, during His Majesty's Pleasure, annexed to, and made Part and Parcel of, the Province of Quebec, as created and established by the said Royal Proclamation of the Seventh of October, One thousand seven hundred and sixty-three.

Provided always, That nothing herein contained relative to the Boundary of the Province of Quebec, shall in anywise affect the Boundaries of any other Colony.

Provided always, and be it enacted, That nothing in this Act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to make void, or to vary or alter any Right, Title, or Possession, derived under any Grant, Conveyance, or otherwise howsoever, of or to any Lands within the said Province, or the Provinces thereto adjoining; but that the same shall remain and be in Force, and have Effect, as if this Act had never been made.

And whereas the Provisions, made by the said Proclamation, in respect to the Civil Government of the said Province of Quebec, and the Powers and Authorities given to the Governor and other Civil Officers of the said Province, by the Grants and Commissions issued in Consequence thereof, have been found, upon Experience, to be inapplicable to the State and Circumstances of the said Province, the Inhabitants whereof amounted, at the Conquest, to above Sixty-five thousand Persons professing the Religion of the Church of Rome, and enjoying an established Form of Constitution and System of Laws, by which their Persons and Property had been protected, governed, and ordered, for a long Series of Years, from the first Establishment of the said Province of Canada; be it therefore further enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the said Proclamation, so far as the same relates to the said Province of Quebec, and the Commission under the Authority whereof the Government of the said Province is at present administered, and all and every the Ordinance and Ordinances made by the Governor and Council of Quebec for the Time being, relative to the Civil Government and Administration of Justice in the said Province, and all Commissions to Judges and other Officers thereof, be, and the same are hereby revoked, annulled, and made void, from and after the First Day of May, One thousand seven hundred and seventy-five.

And, for the more perfect Security and Ease of the Minds of the Inhabitants of the said Province, it is hereby declared, That His Majesty's Subjects, professing the Religion of the Church of Rome, of and in the said Province of Quebec, may have, hold, and enjoy the free exercise of the Religion of the Church of Rome, subject to the King's Supremacy, declared and established by an Act, made in the First Year of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, over all the Dominions and Countries which they did, or hereafter should, belong to the Imperial Crown of this Realm, and that the Clergy of the said Church may hold, receive, and enjoy their accustomed Dues and Rights with respect to such persons only as shall profess the said Religion.

Provided nevertheless, That it shall be Lawful for His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, to make such Provision out of the rest of the said accustomed Dues and Rights, for the Encouragement of the Protestant Religion, and for the Maintenance and Support of a Protestant Clergy within the said Province, as he or they shall, from Time to Time, think necessary and expedient.

Provided always, and be it enacted, That no Person, professing the Religion of the Church of Rome, and residing in the said Province, shall be obliged to take the Oath required by the said Statute passed in the First Year of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, or any other Oaths substituted by any other Act in the Place thereof; but that every such Person who by the said Statute is required to take the Oath therein mentioned, shall be obliged, and is hereby required, to take and subscribe the following Oath before the Governor, or such other Person in such Court of Record as His Majesty shall appoint, who are hereby authorised to administer the same; videlicet.

I A. B. do sincerely promise and swear, That I will be faithful, and bear true Allegiance to His Majesty King George, and him will defend to the utmost of my power, against all traiterous Conspiracies, and Attempts whatsoever, which shall be made against His Person, Crown, and Dignity; and I will do my utmost Endeavour to disclose and make known to His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, all Treasons, and traiterous Conspiracies, and Attempts, which I shall know to be against Him, or any of Them; and all this I do swear without any Equivocation, mental Evasion, or secret Reservation, and renouncing all Pardons and Dispensations from any Power or Person whomsoever to the Contrary.

So help me GOD.

And every such Person, who shall neglect or refuse to take the said Oath before mentioned, shall incur and be liable to the same Penalties, Forfeitures, Disabilities, and Incapacities, as he would have incurred and been liable to for neglecting or refusing to take the Oath required by the said Statute passed in the First Year of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth.

IN THE MATTER OF THE BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE PROVINCES OF ONTARIO AND MANITOBA, IN THE DOMINION OF CANADA.

BETWEEN THE PROVINCE OF ONTARIO, OF THE ONE PART,

AND

THE PROVINCE OF MANITOBA, OF THE OTHER PART.

APPENDIX OF THE PROVINCE OF MANITOBA.

The claim of the Province of Ontario to extend the western limit of the Province, rests, it is assumed, on the supposed title of France as having been the first discoverers thereof. This will doubtless be urged and the following asserted, viz. :—

10

That L'Escarbot, in 1617, stated that New France has for its limits, on the western side, the lands as far as the sea called the Pacific; on this side, the Tropic of Cancer; on the South, the islands of the Atlantic Sea, in the direction of Cuba and the island of Hispaniola; on the East by the Northern Sea which bathes New France; and on the north that land called "Unknown," towards the Icy Sea, as far as the North Sea.

That in 1626, Louis XII. granted to the Company of New France a charter which, it is asserted included the whole of the country about the Hudson's Bay, and west of it.

That Jean Bourdon, the Attorney-General, in 1656, explored the entire coast of Labrador, and entered Hudson's Bay.

That Father Dablon and Sieur de Valiere were, 1661, ordered by Sieur d'Argenson, 20 Governor of Canada, to proceed to the country about Hudson's Bay, and they went thither accordingly.

That some Indians came from about Hudson's Bay to Quebec, in 1663, and that Sieur la Couture with five men proceeded overland to the Bay, possession whereof they took in the King's name.

That Sieur Duquet, King's Attorney for Quebec, and Jean L'Anglois, a Canadian colonist, are said to have gone to Hudson's Bay in 1663 by order of Sieur D'Argenson, and renewed the act of taking possession by setting up the King's arms there a second time.

ANSWER.

Jean Bourdon, the Attorney-General, never reached Hudson's Bay, as shewn by the records of his attempted voyage.

It appears that in the year 1656 there was an order of the Sovereign Council of Quebec authorizing Sieur Bourdon, its Attorney-General, to make a discovery thereof.

There is no record whatever of his having attempted to make the discovery in the same year in which the order was passed by the Council. There is a record, however, of his having made the attempt in the year following (1657) and he may then have designed carrying out the order. He sailed on the 2nd day of May, and returned on 11th August, 1657; and it is not pretended that he could have made a voyage to Hudson's Bay and return between these dates. As to the extent of this voyage there can be no doubt, as it is thus reported:

"The 11th (August) there appeared the barque of M. Bourdon, which, having descended the Grand River on the north side, sailed as far as the 55th degree, where it encountered a great bank of ice, which caused it to return, having lost two Hurons that it had taken as guides. The Esquimaux savages of the north massacred them and wounded a Frenchman with three arrows and one cut with a knife." (REL DES JÉSUITES, Vol. III, Rel, 1858.)

May 2nd. M. Bourdon loosed anchor from Quebec, for the voyage to the North.

August 11th. At ten o'clock in the evening, M. Bourdon anchored before Quebec, from his voyage to the North. (Journal of the Jesuites, 1657, pp. 209 and 218.) 20

The Jesuits would have known if Jean Bourdon had entered the Straits of Hudson, and would have mentioned it in their relations. On the contrary, they never mention it, and it is to be taken from that that the assertion that he ever entered Hudson's Bay is a myth, because he was of the Province of Quebec, and was a man well known and trusted by the Jesuits, and went with Father Jogues on an embassy to Governor Dongan of New York.

FATHER DABLON AND SEEUR DE VALLIERE.

Respecting the asserted voyage of Father Doblau and Sieur de Valliere there is evidence that he made the attempt but did not succeed. The following is the account of the voyage:

• • • "Fathers Gabriel Druillettes and Claude Dablon set out from here in the month of May last with the greater number of our savages, the one with the intention of wintering in the country and of informing himself at leisure of all things necessary for the resuscitation of this mission; the other, to come to instruct us concerning these new discoveries, and to explain to us the present state of these countries."

"Here is what the Fathers have written from Nekouba, which is the place they have arrived at two months after their departure."

"From Nekouba, 100 leagues from Tadoussac, in the woods, on the journey to the North Sea, July 2nd, 1661."

* * * "At length, with the aid of God, we are nearly half way to the North Sea, in a place which is like the middle point between two seas, that which we have left and that which we are seeking."

Here is a little journal of all our travels.

 "We were detained at Tadoussac three weeks by a sort of contagious and hitherto unknown disease, which carried off the greater part of those who were seized by it. * * *

"The disease having abated a little, we set out at length on the 1st of June of this year, 1661, numbering forty canoes. We left Tadoussac, but not the disease, which followed us. * * * We were obliged to take five days to make a league from Chicoutimi. * * * On the 16th we arrived 10 in good time at Chegontimi, a place noted as being the end of navigation, and the commencement of the portages. * * * We entered into a very narrow lake, about nine leagues long: the savages call it the Long Lake. * * * Lake St. Jean, which is the end of the navigation of the French, no person having dared to pass beyond, whether it was that the roads beyond were too rough, or that they were hitherto unknown. * * * What gave us more trouble was the news which we learned on entering the lake, that the deputies who were to command the nations at the North Sea, and to give them a rendezvous at which to await us, had been killed last winter in an astonishing manner. * * * We did not abandon our journey, advancing towards the end of the latter, where the river which was to bear us into a country hitherto unknown to the French empties. * * * The 26th we encamped at the commencement of a lake which we have called Bonne Esperance, (Good Hope), 20 * * * The three following days were employed in passing lakes, in seeking rivers in the woods, then entering into other lakes and other rivers, which bear us at last to Nekouba, which is, as I have said, the middle point between the two seas, that of the North, and that of Tadoussac. We found its latitude to be 49°, 20', and its longitude 305°."

* * * "Without deducting from our other troubles, it was indeed enough that the Iroquois was always before and behind us, scarcely were we set out from Tadoussac, when the enemy arrived there, and after having massacred our French, if they did not come upon us, it was (only) because God blinded them, and deprived them of all thought of it; before us, and at the termination of our voyage, which is the North Sea, the Iroquois intends to be there at the same time as we, he is set out from his own country for this purpose, finding no other limit to his ravages than the 30 sea, and that most distant from his own country, to which neither the French nor the savages have as yet been able to penetrate. * * * News is brought to us, that the Iroquois has gone before us, and having surprised the nation of the Excurieux, some days journey from here, has entirely defeated it, and has impelled such a terror into all the surrounding peoples, that they are all scattered, seeking other mountains more hidden, and rocks of more difficult of access, to place their lives in safety. It is said that the fear is carried even to the sea, where we are going, and those barbarians intend to carry, during this year, their cruelty, to push their conquest still in advance towards the north, as they have done, during these last years, towards the south."

"At the news of this envied nation, so near where we now are, our savages think only of returning upon their steps, since the peoples whom they were going to seek, are scattered; we 40 find ourselves equally urged to keep them company, regretting the injury the Iroquois are doing to the faith, in hindering the publication, and retarding the course of the gospel. * * *
Relations of the Jesuites, Vol. 3. Rel of 1661, pp. 12-21.

In Shea's Charlevoix, Vol. III, pp. 39 and 40, it is stated that he (Father Dablon) attempted to penetrate to the Northern Ocean by ascending the Saguenay. Early in July, two months after they set out, they found themselves at the head of the Nekauba River, 300 miles from Lake St. John. They could not proceed any further, being warned by the approach of the Iroquois.

Nekruba is a place where a kind of fair was held. Doblan gives it as 49° 20' N. 305° 10' W. (Shea's Charlevoix, Vol. 3, p. 39, note 3.)

On the 27th July, those returned who had gone, or pretended to go, to the North Sea or to the Livistons, Father Doblan, &c. (Journal of the Jesuites, 1661, p. 300.)

Rev. Claud Dablon arrived in Canada in 1655, and was immediately sent missionary to Onondaga, where he continued, with a brief interval, until 1658. In 1661 he set out overland for 10 Hudson's Bay, but succeeded in reaching only the head waters of the Nekauba, 300 miles from Lake St. John. (N. Y. His. Doc., Vol. IX., p. 97, note 2.—Ed.)

SIEUR LA COUTURE AND DUQUET.

There is no record of the voyage of Sieur la Couture, and Duguet in 1663.

No mention is made in Charlevoix or in the Relations of the Jesuits respecting Couture or his expedition.

Touching the assumed voyage of Sieur Duquet, Viscount D'Argenson, who is stated to have given the order to Duquet to proceed to Hudson's Bay, left Canada on 16th September, 1661, two years prior to the giving of the order, which it is stated Sieur Duquet received. (Shea's Charlevoix, Vol. III., p. 38, note 4. 20

"Baron Dubois D'Avaugour succeeded Viscount Argeuson, as Governor of Canada, in 1661. He had already distinguished himself in the wars of Hungary, and brought to the Government of Canada that strictness and inflexibility of character which he originally acquired in the camp. In 1662 he concluded a Treaty with delegates from the Onondaga, Cayuga and Seneca Indians." N. Y. Col. Docts (Paris Docts), vol. IX, p. 17, note.

"In 1660, Mr. Dubois Davaugour was selected as Governor of New France by the Queen, the mother of the King, who filled the office of Grand Master, Chief and Superintendent of the Navigation and Trade of France. He arrived at Quebec in the month of August, 1661. (N. Y. Col. Docts. Paris Doct., Vol. 9, p. 783.)"

VOYAGE OF FATHER ALBANEL AND M. ST. SIMON. 30

Father Albanel and Sieur St. Simon were, in November, 1671, sent by M. Talon to Hudson's Bay, which they reached in 1672.

In the Relations of the Jesuits, Albanel gives an account of his trip, and shows that the English Company were already in possession of Hudson's Bay, having entered there under their Charter.

The following is Albanel's relation of the voyage:

"Voyage to the North Sea by land, and the discovery of Hudson's Bay. Mission of St. Francis Xavier, in 1671 and 1672."

"The sea which we have at the North, is the famous bay, to which Hudson has given his name, and which for a long time has piqued the curiosity of us French, to make the discovery of it by land, and to know its situation as regards ourselves, its distance, and to know who are the people that inhabit it. The desire to make acquaintance with this sea has been increased since we learned from our savages that quite recently some ships had appeared there, and even had commenced commerce with these natives, which we have always been told are numerous and rich in furs."

"It is for that, that M. Talon, our Intendant, has judged that he ought to omit nothing that was in his power to make this discovery; and since he knows that the intention of His Majesty is that all the peoples of Canada may be instructed in Christianity, he has demanded one of our 10 Fathers, who should open the road for us French towards this bay, at the same time that he carried the Gospel there."

"They cast their eyes, then, on Father Charles Albanel, an ancient missionary of Tadoussac, because that for a long time he had had intercourse with the savages, who have knowledge of this sea, and who alone could be guides over these, hitherto unknown, routes."

"M. de St. Simon and another Frenchman having been chosen for this enterprise, and M. the Intendant having furnished them with everything that was necessary to make it succeed, the Father set out from Quebec on the 6th August, 1671, and met them at Tadoussac, where he wishes to make choice of an active and intelligent savage to serve him as guide during the whole voyage."

"We will follow him step by step, thus we will know better all that took place in this 20 expedition, placing his journal here, just as he wrote it during his journey."

"I arrived at Tadoussac, said he, the 8th of August, where I saw myself compelled to sustain many battles, in order to break down the objections which the savages made to this expedition."

"The Captain of the place having died a few days ago, I addressed myself to the uncle of the deceased, who was the most to be relied on; this savage, who had much respect for us, and who has no less affection for all the French, cheerfully consented to oblige me."

"Here, he said, are two of my people that I give you, who are my brothers-in-law, and this other one will be the third, who is my own nephew, they will carefully conduct you."

"The affection of this good man did not stop there, he wished us to embark, with our luggage in his boat, as being more convenient than our canoes, and he would conduct us with his men 40 30 leagues on our way."

"The 29th after having made a considerable present to these good savages, who had carried us in their boat so far, and having thanked them for all the good services they had kindly rendered me, we embarked in our canoes to shoot the first rapids which presented themselves on our journey to the Lake of Kinouganui."

"The 7th of September we reached the extremity of the Lake. Good fortune willed it, that I should meet two savages, who accommodated us with two guns suitable for hunting, four of ours being useless. The 17th. Five canoes of Attikamegues, or white fish, and of Mistassinins came to join us, they brought us for news that two ships had cast anchor in Hudson's Bay, and that they had done great trade with the savages established there for commerce; they shewed us a hatchet 40 and some tobacco, which they had obtained from a Papinachois, who had been trading towards the North sea this very summer. They said enough to cast terror into the minds of all our men, but as it was no longer the season to continue our route, because of the winter which threatened us,

This discourse made no impression on my mind, nevertheless in order not to act without direction in this affair, seeing that I had no passport, I determined to send to Quebec to provide myself with one, at the same time giving advice of all I had just heard, and to ascertain what measures I ought to take under these circumstances."

"Two savages and a Frenchman set out on the 19th September with my letters. In the meantime I occupied myself with instructing this little band, that God had sent me so seasonably: . . . till the 10th October, our canoe having returned on that day, with the patents of Mgr. our Bishop, and passports from M. de Courcelles our Governor, and M. Talon our Intendant. I also received their advice which was of much service to me in this conjunction of affairs."

"The season being too far advanced to proceed to the sea before the snow and ice, by which we were stopped the last day of October, our savages chose this place to pass the winter in, on account of the hunting, which is very plentiful."

"But it is time to resume the course of our voyage. The spring had already succeeded the rigor of the winter, the rivers were free, the ice had melted, when we were obliged to enter into disputes with our guides on the subject of our enterprise."

"It was on the 1st June, 1672, that we set out from Natashigamion to continue our route, to the number of nineteen persons, sixteen of whom were savages and three Frenchmen, in three canoes."

"The 10th, about six o'clock in the morning, we arrived at Pastistaskaw, which separates the lands of the north from those of the south; it is a little tongue of land, about an acre broad and two long. The two extremities of this point are terminated by two little lakes, from whence issue two rivers: one descends to the east, and the other to the north-west; the one enters into the sea at Tadoussac by the Saguenay, and the other into Hudson's Bay by Menskaw which is midway between the seas."

"It is not a new thing that the savages, by a maxim of their policy or of their avarice, are extremely reluctant to give strangers a passage by their rivers, to go to distant nations. Rivers are to them what the fields are to the French."

"On the 13th of June, thirteen canoes arrived, the greater part having painted their faces, and having decked themselves out with all the precious things they had, as head-gear, necklaces, girdles and porcelain bracelets. They disembarked quite close to us, and as the Captain stepped on shore, I saluted him with ten guns, as a sign of rejoicing, and the same evening I summoned him, with his chief men, to speak to them by means of two rich presents."

"The 18th we entered this great lake of the Mistassirinius, which they consider to be so great, that it requires twenty days of fine weather to make the tour of it."

"The 28th. Scarcely had we advanced a quarter of a league, when we met on the left hand in a little stream, a hoy with its burden of ten or twelve tons, which carried the English flag and a Latin sail; at a gunshot from there, we entered into two deserted houses. A little further on we discovered that the savages had wintered close by, and that they had left quite recently; we pursued our route then to a point distant six leagues from the house of the Europeans. There, the tide being low, and the wind contrary, we retired into a little river on the right hand, stretching to the north-east, where in turning and seeking, we discovered two or three huts, and an abandoned dog, which made us sure that the savages were near, and that they had only removed two days ago. All that evening we remained there, firing guns to make ourselves heard, and entertaining ourselves by viewing the sea which we had reached so well, and this so famous Hudson's Bay, about which we shall speak by-and-by."

"It pleased God to give us a very good wind; we made sail, and proceeded on our journey to the dwelling of the English, where we slept."

"Before leaving Hudson's Bay, I must give you the plan of it. But the short sojourn that I made at Mestantenasagit, did not give me leisure to visit it, nor to instruct myself thoroughly in the particulars of this Bay, and neighbouring country."

"I shall only say that the river by which we entered the Bay is called Muriskansipion, and retains its name; the river is very beautiful. It is almost half a league broad, and more than that in some places, but it is not very deep: it comes from the south-east, and flows to the north-west about eighty leagues."

"The ebb and flow, which is here very regular, enters four leagues into the river, until it is stopped by a sault, which does not prevent the waters preserving their sweetness, during the highest tides, not only in the river, but also four leagues forward into the Bay."

"It is incredible how far the sea retires at the time of low tide; the savages put it at twenty leagues; we found that the mouth of the river is at the 50° of latitude, and we saw that during its course it cuts the Bay by very many windings, which form islands fit to be inhabited." * *

"Those who imagine that the climate is uninhabitable, deceive themselves." * *

"I can assure you that on the 15th June there were wild roses as beautiful and sweet smelling as at Quebec, the season even appeared to me to be more advanced, the air more mild and agreeable. There was no night when I was there, the twilight from sunset was not quite over, ere the orb of day appeared at sunrise." * *

"We were four days in reaching Nemiskaw, where we hoisted the King's arms on the point of the island, which divides this lake, on the 9th July."

"The 19th, about two o'clock, I planted the arms of our powerful and invincible monarch over the river, to serve as a safeguard to all these people, against all these Iroquois nations."

"The 22nd we arrived at Lake St. John, after many difficulties, I was quite surprised on my arrival to learn that the Mistasirinins had been waiting for me for a month." *

"The 29th, we set out from the Lake to go to Chegoutinick, where M. de St. Denis, captain of Taloussac, was waiting to embark us in his vessel; we arrived there the 1st of August."

"As soon as I arrived in Quebec, I endeavored to state the results of our journey to those persons who had employed me, and who I knew took a great interest in the success of this mission: I informed them of the causes of my so speedy return, of the places I had seen, of all that I had done for the salvation of all these people, for the publication of the gospel, the establishment of our holy faith, and for the glory of our great monarch in all the nations we had had intercourse with, in order to give them an ample and faithful report."

Hitherto, this voyage had been considered impossible for Frenchmen, who after having undertaken it already three times, and not having been able to surmount the obstacles, had seen themselves obliged to abandon it in despair of success. What appears impossible, is found to be very easy when it pleases God. The conduct of it was reserved for me, after eighteen years prosecution that I had made, and I have very sensible proofs that God reserved the execution of it for me, after the signal favor of a sudden and marvellous, not to say miraculous recovery that I received. As soon as I devoted myself to this mission, at the solicitation of my superior, and in fact, I have not been deceived in my expectation. I have opened the road in company with two Frenchmen and six savages."

I finish this recital of our voyage by the number of baptized, which amounts since our departure to two hundred, as well infants as adults. What can not one hope for after such a fine beginning? particularly if one considers the ardent desire that all these people have shown to be instructed, the difficulty they have had to let me depart, the importunities they have made for us to go and establish ourselves in their country, and the pressing solicitations they have made to all Frenchmen to invite them to come and trade with them. Can one wish for anything after so many advantages, except that it may please God to give benediction to all our works? Relations des Jesuites, vol. 3, (1771-2,) p. 42-67.

Up to this time (1672) the Jesuits had not heard of any prior expedition having reached Hudson's Bay; and Father Albanel was led to believe by M Talon the French Intendant at Quebec, that he was the pioneer voyageur.

Mr. De Courcelles to my Lord Colbert, 26th October, 1671:—"Five weeks since, three Frenchmen, with a Father and some Indians, left to go to the Saguenay, and are to proceed thence northward in quest of Hudson's Bay: they cannot be back before the end of Autumn of next year."—(N. Y. Col. Docts. Paris Docts, p. 790.)

M. Talon to the King, 3rd November, 1671.—"Three months ago I sent off Father Albanel, a Jesuit, and Sieur de St. Simon, a young Canadian gentleman recently honored by the King with that title. They are to go as far as Hudson's Bay, draw up an account of all they will discover, establish a fur trade with the Indians, and especially examine whether there be a place to winter some ships, in order to establish an entrepot there which might some day furnish supplies to the vessels that will be able hereafter to discover in that quarter the passage between the two seas, the southern and northern." (Ibid.)

"A proposal has been made me to send from this place to Hudson Bay a bark of 60 tons with which it is pretended to discover something of the communication between the two seas."

"If the adventurers who form this design do not charge the King anything, I shall give them hopes in case of success of some mark of honor in addition to whatever they will be able to gain by the trade in furs that they will carry on with the Indians." (Ibid.)

"Father Charles Albanel, Jesuit Missionary, employed in the instruction of Indian nations and Montagnois, and Paul Denis de St. Simon, Commissary and deputed by Mr. Talon, Intendant of Canada, to take possession, in the King's name of the countries, lands, lakes and rivers, which lie between the banks of the River St. Lawrence as far as the shores of the Strait of the Fretum Davis, including Hudson's Bay and adjacent lands and seas being at Miskaouto, Nagasit, places where the Indians meet to trade, and at the River Nemiskau, which rises in Lake Nemiskau, the residence of Captain Kiaskou, Chief of all the Indians inhabiting the North Sea and Hudson's Bay, did on the 9th of July, 1672, plant the cross with the Captain's consent, and in His Majesty's name set up the arms of France on the said Lake Nemiskau at the mouth of the river of the same name." (Ibid., p. 791.)

"In 1669 Mr. Talon was destined to return to Canada as Intendant. He wrote at Paris to my Lord Colbert, on the 24th February, that he had with him a half-breed of Canada, who had penetrated among the western nations further than any other Frenchman, and had seen the copper mine in Lake Huron. This man offered to go to that mine, and to explore, either by sea or by the lakes and rivers, the communication supposed to exist between Canada and the South Sea; or else to make the voyage of Hudson's Bay, which would be of great use to Canada, because he would send down to Quebec and Tadoussac, the northern nations with their peltry."—(N. Y. Col. Docts. Vol. 9, p. 787.)

"M. Talon to the King, 10th November, 1670.—"Since my arrival I have dispatched some persons of nerve who promise to penetrate farther than any one has yet done; some to the west and north-west, and others to the south-west and to the south of Canada. These adventurers are invariably to prepare journals and reply in writing on their return, to the instructions I have given them, they are everywhere to take possession and to erect the King's arms and to draw up procès-verbaux to serve as titles. His Majesty will not have any news of them, probably before two years from this time, and after I shall have returned to France."—(N. Y. Col. Docts. Paris Docts, p. 789.)

To M. Talon, 11th March, 1671.—"The resolution you have adopted to send Sieur de la Salle towards the South, and Sieur de St. Lusson to the North in order to discover the passage to the South Sea is very good, but the principal thing to which you ought to apply yourself in these sorts of discoveries is to look for the Copper Mine."—(N. Y. Col. Docts, Paris Docts, p. 789.)

What is relied upon by the Province of Ontario, as furnishing evidence of Father Dablon and Sieur Couture having visited Hudson's Bay, is a Memoir of M. de Callières sent to the Marquis de Seignelay on 25th February, 1685, (N. Y. Coll. Paris Docts, Vol. IX., p. 268); and M. de Denonville, on 8th November, 1686, by a memoir sent to M. de Seignelay, appears to have copied the statement made by M. de Callières (See Ibid., p. 304). But in his letter which accompanied the memoir, M. de Denonville says: "I annex to this letter a memoir of our rights to the entire of that country, of which our registers ought to be full, but no memorials of them are to be found." (N. Y. Col. Doc. Paris Docts, Vol. IX., p. 297.) M. de Denonville thereby admits the documentary evidence could not even at that time be adduced in support of these visits having been made to Hudson's Bay.

At the time M. de Collières wrote (in 1685) twenty-one years had elapsed, and M. de Denonville following in 1686 was twenty-two years had passed the events they pretended to chronicle. It was then most important to show if possible that Dablan, Couture, and Duquet had been at Hudson's Bay. The French, before that time, in 1682 and 1684, had driven the English from a number of their forts, burned their houses, and in March, 1686, Canadian troops were sent by Denonville, who surprised and captured Forts Albany, Hayes, and Rupert, belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company. Sheus's Charlevoix Vol. 3, p. 270; Freland 2 partie, pp. 162-6. Vide Petition of H. B. Co. to the Queen in 1711, Joint Appendix p.

It therefore became necessary to show a colour of right for these proceedings, and these memoirs were evidently prepared with that view.

ENGLISH DISCOVERY.

CABOT'S VOYAGE.

Sebastian Cabot, who sailed to Hudson's Bay and Straits under a commission from Henry VII. of England, entered the Bay, which, in 1610, took the name of Hudson.

"For that Cabota was not only a skillful seaman, but a long traveller, and such a one as entered personally that strait, sent by King Henry VII. to make this aforesaid discovery, as in his own discourse of navigation you may read in his card written with his own hand, that the mouth of the northwestern strait lieth near the 318 meridian, between 61 and 64 degrees in the elevation continuing the same breadth about 10 degrees west, where it openeth southerly more and more, until it come under the Tropie of Cancer, and so runneth into Mardel Zur at least 18 degrees more in breadth there than it was when it first began."

"Besides Cabota and all other travellers' navigations, the only credit of M. Frobisher may suffice, who lately through all these islands of ice, and mountains of snow, passed that way, even beyond the gulf that tumbled down from the north, and returning in August came he home safely again."—(Hakluyt, Vol. 3, pp. 26, 27.)

1576—1577—1578.

SIR MARTIN FROBISHER'S VOYAGES.

"He prepared two small barques, wherein he intended to accomplish his voyage. Wherefore, being furnished with the aforesaid two barques and one small pinnace of ten-tons burden, having therein victuals and other necessaries for twelve months' provisions, he departed upon the said voyage from Blackwell, June 15th, A. D. 1576.

"One of the barques was named Gabriel, and the other the Michael, and sailing northwest from England upon the 11th July, he had sight of high and ragged land, which he judged to be Frisland."

"The worthy captain continued his course towards the northwest, knowing that the sea at length must needs have an ending, and that some land must have a beginning that way; and determined, therefore, at the least, to bring true proof what land and sea, some might be so far to the northwestwards, beyond any man that hath heretofore discovered."

"This place he named after his name Frobisher's Strait."

"Captain Frobisher returned homeward, and arrived in England, in Harwich, the 2nd of October following, and thence came to London in 1576, where he was highly commended by all men for his great and notable attempt, but specially famous for the great hope he brought of the passage to Catya."

SECOND VOYAGE—1577

"Being furnished with one tall ship of her majesty's, named The Ayle, and two small barques of thirty ton a piece, being fitly appointed, the said Captain Frobisher, with the rest of his company, came aboard his ships riding at Blackwell."

"On Whitsunday, May 26th, 1577, early in the morning, we weighed anchor at Blackwell, and fell that tide down to Gravesend, where we remained until Monday, at night."

"Tuesday, July 23rd, our general with his soldiers and sailors, to the number of seventy, marched with ensign displayed, upon the continent of the Southerland (the supposed continent of America) where, commanding the trumpeter to sound a call for every man to repair to the ensign, he declared to the whole company how much the cause imparted to the service of Her Majesty And he appointed for leaders Captain Fenton, Captain York, and his Lieutenant George Beste."

"The morning of the 1st of August, Captain York with the Michael came into Jackman's Sound, and declared unto the company there, that the last night passed he came to anchor in a certain bay (which thence was named Yorke's Sound) about four leagues distant from Jackman's Sound."

"Thursday, August 22nd, we plucked down our tents, and every man hasted homeward, and making bonfires upon the highest mound of the island, and marching with ensign displayed round about the island, we gave a volley of shot for farewell, in honour of the Right Honourable Lady Anne, Countess of Warwick, whose name it beareth; and so departed abroad."

"The 23rd of August we set sail out of the Countesses Sound homeward."

"About the 23rd of September we arrived at Millford Haven in Wales."

"About one month after our arrival here, by order of the Lords of the Council, the ship came up to Bristow, where the ore was committed to keeping in the castle there."

THIRD VOYAGE—1578.

"Having received these articles of direction we departed from Harwich on the 31st of May, and sailing along the south part of England westward, we at length came by the coast of Ireland at Cape Clear the 1st of June."

"Having a fair and large wind we on the three and twentieth of June departed toward Frobisher's Straights."

"Now after the general had bestowed these many days here, not without many damages, he returned back again. And by sailing along this coast (being the backside of the supposed continent of America) and the Queen's Foreland, he perceived Frobisher's Straights. Whereupon he sent the Gabriel on the 21st of July to prove whether they might go through, and went again with him in the Straights, which they did."

"August 11th, the captain of the Francis, taking the master of his ship with him, went up to the top of Hatton's Headland, which is the highest land of all the Straights, to the end, to descry the situation. And the rather for the honour the said captain doth owe to that honourable name, he caused his company to make a cross of stone, in token of Christian possession. In this place there is plenty of black ore, and divers pretty stones."

"Having now received articles and directions for our return homewards, August 31st, the whole fleet departed from the Countesses Sound, excepting the Judith, and the Anne Francis, and came 30 the next day, and met the fleet lying off and on, athwart Bear's Sound, who stayed for the General."

"Thanks be to God, all the fleet arrived safely in England about October 1st, some in one place, and some in another."—(Hakluyt, Vol. 3, pp. 55-92.)

DAVIS'S VOYAGES—1585-1586-1587.

"In 1585 Captain John Davis made an attempt to find the North-west passage and discovered a part of Greenland to which he gave the name of the "Land of Desolation." He sailed afterwarde as high as 64 degrees, 15 minutes, through that which has since been called Davis's Straights, and thence to the latitude of 66 degrees 40 minutes. In 1586 he made another voyage in which he made further discoveries, and returned full of hopes that a third voyage would complete his design 40 Accordingly in 1587 he proceeded through Davis's Straights to the height of 72 degrees 12 minutes, and found an open sea to the South-west."—(Harris's Travels, vol. 2, p. 404.)

HUDSON'S VOYAGE.

According to the narrative of Prickett (who was with Hudson during the voyage), Hudson sailed on 17th April, 1610, reached the Bay now known as "Hudson's" in July of that year and wintered in the Bay, and remained there until late in the summer of 1611.

"All the misadventures that had happened in attempting discoveries to the northeast and northwest, could not so far discourage the merchants of England as to oblige them to lay aside their designs of that sort; and, therefore, when any opportunity offered they never failed to lay hold of it, in hopes that some time or other they might accomplish one or both of these great projects. It was with this view that they fitted out captain Henry Hudson in 1607, who undertook to sail directly north, which he did to the height of $81^{\circ} 30'$, on the coast of Greenland, where he was on the sixteenth of July, the weather being pretty warm. His scheme, it seems, was to have passed around that great tract of country, which the Danes call Greenland, and falling into Davis' straits, have returned that way home. After being disappointed in this, he undertook two voyages for the discovery of a north-east passage, in which his conduct was very good, but his success no better than that of those who went before him; upon which he resolved to make an attempt towards the north-west. He sailed on this voyage April 17th, 1610, and thus Mr. Prickett describes the principal events in that undertaking."

"We continued steering north-west: on the 8th July we raised land to the south-west, covered with snow, which our master named 'Desire Prevokes,' lying in the latitude of 60° . We still plied to westward, and fearing a storm we found a harbour at the west end of an island, whereunto we went at a full sea over a rock, which had then two fathoms and a half of water upon it, and the next morning was two fathoms above water. Our master named it 'The Island of God's Mercies.' We then stood to the south-west, until we saw the land, which our master named 'Hold with Hope;' and being gotten again into a clear sea; our master stood to the west along the south shore, and raised three coepes or head-lands, lying one beyond another, which he named Cape Henry, Cape James, and Queen Anne's Foreland; we also raised a high hill, which he called Mount Charles. We passed on in sight of the south shore, until we raised a fair head-land (which our master took to be part of the Mainland, but is an island) and named it Deep's Cape, and the land on the south side now falling away to the south makes another Cape or Head-land, which our master called Worsenham's Cape."

"Then standing southward we lost sight of the mainland we had all this while followed and came into shallow water, broken ground, and rocks, and passed down so far southward, till we had land on both sides, and the water shoaling apace, we came to an anchor."

"On the first of November we found a place whereunto we brought our ship, and hailed her aground; on the 10th we were frozen in, and now it concerned us to take care of what we had, and so to spend, that we might have wherewith to keep us alive, until we should come at the capes where the fowls breed; for they were all the hopes we had of finding subsistence to bring us home. Our master therefore appointed a reward to them that killed most fish or fowl. We were victualled for six months, in good proportion, and of that which was good; and if our master would have had more he might have been supplied at home and at other places, and it is strange he did not prevent the hunger we endured, which occasioned the overthrow of himself, and many other honest men." Harris's Voyage, Vol. 2, pp. 243-4.

BUTTON'S VOYAGE.

It was desired to prosecute the discoveries made by Hudson, and, in 1611, His Royal Highness Henry, Prince, of Wales was applied to by persons concerned in the project, and he resolved to send Captain Button, who penetrated to the Hudson Bay and sailed about 200 leagues to the north-west. He wintered there at Nelson River.

"His Royal Highness Henry, Prince of Wales, was the great patron of virtue and learning at this time: and being applied to by the persons concerned in this project, he resolved to send on Captain Button his own servant, a man of great courage, abilities, and experience, and having the countenance of so great a person, was most likely to maintain discipline among the seamen. Accordingly, in the year 1611, he sailed on this expedition, in which he passed Hudson's 10 Straights, and leaving Hudson's Bay to the south sailed about two hundred leagues to the north-west, through a sea about eighty fathom deep, and discovered a great continent called by him New Wales; where, after much misery and sickness, wintering at Port Nelson, he carefully searched all the Bay, from him called Button's Bay, back again, almost to Digg's Island. He discovered the great Island called Cary's Swans-nest. He lost many of his men during his stay in the River called Port Nelson, in 57° 10' north latitude, though he kept three fires in his ship all winter, and had great store of white partridges, and other fowl, besides deer, bears, and foxes. Upon his return from this voyage he received the honour of Knighthood, and great expectations were raised from his discoveries which certainly had been prosecuted with effect, if Prince Henry had not died soon after." Harris's Voyages, Vol. 2, p. 275-4.

"Mr. Henry Button, (afterwards Sir Henry) in the year 1611, having been encouraged by Prince Henry to attempt a more perfect knowledge of that sea, which had been found by Mr. Hudson, went thither accordingly, and proceeded two hundred league farther to the south-west coasting along a great continent to which he gave name of New South Wales, and wintered at Port Nelson: then sailing across that sea which has since been called Button's Bay, he discovered another country, to which he gave the name of New North Wales, which seems to be only an island in that great sea, which opens into the Northern Ocean by the passes of Hudson Straits and Davis's Straits, and of which Hudson's Bay, Button's Bay, and Baffin's Bay, are only parts, bounded by the continents of Greenland and North America, wintering at Port Nelson, which is in the latitude of 57° 10' north. * * * He, for causes elsewhere related (especially the tides) concluded 30 a northwest passage certain, and thereby restored the hopes of it, then fallen very low." Harris's Voyages, Vol. 2, p. 404.

The instructions under which Sir Thomas Button sailed were recovered. They are considered to be drawn up with considerable skill, to be interesting in various particulars, and to advert to points not devoid of value, even in the present day. That the reader may form a judgment of the character of this document it is subjoined.

Certain Orders and instructions set down by the most noble Prince Henry of Wales, this 5th of April, 1612, under his Highness signature and signe manuell, and delivered unto his servant Captain Thomas Button, General of the Company now employed about ye full and perfect discovery of the North-West passage 40 for the better government, as well of the shippes committed to his charge as of the personnes in them employed upon all occasions whatsoever.

5. More particularlie when you shall be cleare of the Landes End, be careful to have kept a true account of yr wayes to Groinland, and from thence to the streights mouth, and to observe in what latitude it lieth, and what face the coast beareth, what sea seteth into it, and when you are within it, howe the coaste doth biend, the contynance and course of ebbe and fludd, what height it riseth, from whence it cometh, and with what moone; what current, eddie, or overfall you finde, what Islandes or rockes, and howe bearing, and last of all your soundings, which you must trie with good store of faddome once at least everie fforth glasse, and oftener amongst broken landes, rocks, shole, and white waters. Yet remembering that the waie is already beaten to Digges Island, rather than lose tyme, we would have you hasten thither, and have the perfect observation of the things to the Pinnacle in her return.

7. "Let there be care by your order and direction for keeping of your shippes in consort all your course, wherein we wishe you to make all the haste you can to the Streights mouth, but we think your surest way wil be to stand upp to Iseland and see over to Groinland in the heighte of 61 see to fall downe with the current to the most southerlie Cape of that land lying in about 59 called Cape Farewell, which pointe as Ice will give you leave, you must double, and from thence, or rather from some 20 or 30 L. to the northward of it, you shall over fall Davis His Straights to the westerne maine: in the height of 62 degrees or thereabouts you shall finde Hudson's Straights, which you maie knowe by the furious course of the sea and ice into it, and by certaine Islandes in the Northerne side thereof as your carde shewes."

8. "Being in; we holde it best for you to keepe the northerne side as most free from the pester of ice at least till you be past Cape Henry, from thence follow the leading ice betweene King James Cape and Queen Anne's Forelands, the distance of which two capes observe if you can, and what harbour or rode is near them, but yet make all the haste you maie to Salisbury. This Island between which and the Northerne continent you are like to meet a great hollowe billowe from an opening and flowing sea from thence. Therefore, remembering that your end is West, we would have you stand over to the opposite maine in the latitude of some 58 degrees, where riding at some headland observe well the flood of it come in Southwest, then you maie be sure the passage is that waie, from the North or Northwest your course must be to stand upp into it, taking need of following anie flood for feare of entring into Bais, Inlets, or sands (? sounds), which is but losse of time to noe purpose."

11. "Last of all: see that you and all under your charge, doe faithfullie observe and followe all such further directions and instructons as shall be given by the Adventurers. Let this be perticulerly read once everie month, if it can be to your whole Companie."

Sir Thomas Button appears to have felt acutely the disappointment occasioned by his failure to discover the passage of which he was in search, but he does not despair of ultimate success (Rundall's Voyages (printed for the Hakluyt Society) pp. 81 to 90.)

JAMES'S VOYAGE, 1631.

"It appears that the English nation had been trading with Greenland, and those trading, finding that "other nations were interfering with this trade," found themselves under a necessity of having recourse to the crown for protection and assistance as well for defending their fisheries, as for prosecuting their discoveries, and they accordingly addressed themselves to King Charles I., who furnished them with a frigate called the Charles, under the command of Captain Luke Fox, who sailed in the spring of 1631, made a voyage to Hudson's Bay, and finding the cross erected by Sir Thomas Button renewed the same. Captain James and Captain Fox met at Port Nelson in August 1631."

"Captain Thomas James undertook his voyage in 1631 for the satisfaction of Charles I., at the expense of the merchants of Bristol. The account of the voyage was written by himself, and published in 1633. Captain James left England in May, and met Captain Luke Fox on 29th near Port Nelson. He wintered in Hudson's Bay."

"I shall present the reader with an account of Captain James's preface, which is to be found only in his original edition, of the manner in which this voyage was undertaken, containing many particulars that are very well worth notice. Never any enterprise of this kind — better concerted, or more deliberation used in providing for its success. Captain James had been employed, as he tells us, in some Northern voyages before, whence he came to be thought the fittest person in the kingdom. He was not determined to undertake the voyage till it was signified to him on the part of the king, that it would be highly satisfactory to His Majesty, 20 After he was once come to a resolution, he signified to the merchants of Bristol, both his own inclination to venture on this voyage, and the encouragement he received from His Majesty, Captain James desired only a single ship. She was built for this voyage. The number of persons he desired for the execution of the design was twenty-two; and the provisions and necessaries that he required were for eighteen months; and they were provided for him in the full proportions he demanded, and were as wholesome and good as he could wish. He had the free choice of the men that were to serve under him, but he absolutely refused all volunteers that never had been at sea. The qualities that he required were, that they should be unmarried, approved, able, and healthy seamen; he also took care that they should not have the least knowledge or acquaintance with each other. Precautions taken to prevent faction and mutinies, 30 with which, as we will see, he was never troubled."

"When all things were ready he made a short journey to London, to receive His Majesty's last commands, and, upon his return to Bristol, he went directly aboard of his ship, with a resolution of sailing the first fair wind. After his return he drew up a history of his voyage, for his master's satisfaction."

"The 2nd May I took leave of the merchant adventurers: in this action, in the City of Bristol, and being accompanied by the Rev. Mr. Palmer, and several of the merchants, I repaired on board where Mr. Palmer made a sermon. After they had received such entertainment as I could afford they departed for Bristol. The 4th June we made the land of Greenland, standing in with it, to have knowledge of the trending of it.

"From the 29th to the 5th July, we sailed continually, with varying winds and fogs, and sometimes calm. The fifth at noon we had a good observation, and were in latitudo 63° 15', and then we saw Salisbury Island bearing west-by-north, some seven leagues off."

"On the 1st of August the wind came up at the west which drove us to the eastward where our depth increased to thirty-five fathoms."

"On the twenty-ninth in the morning we had driven back again some seventeen or eighteen leagues and in the morning as it cleared we saw a ship to leeward three or four leagues, so we made sail and bore up with her; she was then at anchor, in thirteen fathoms. It was Her Majesty's ship commanded by Captain Fox: I saluted him according to the manner of the sea and received the like of him, so I stood in to see the land, and thought to tack about, and keep the weather of him, and send my boat aboard of him; but the wind shifted, so that for the time I could not. Yet in the evening I came to weather of him, who presently weighed, and stood off with me till midnight, and then we stood in again. In the morning Captain Fox and his friends came aboard of me, where I entertained them in the best manner I could, and with some fresh meat I had gotten from the shore. I told him that I had named the land the Principality of South Wales. I shewed him how far I had been to the eastward, where I had landed, and, in brief, I made known to him all the dangers of the coast, as far as I had been."

"In the evening he departed aboard his ship, and the next morning stood away southward, since which time I never saw him."

"September 1st, we coasted along the shore in ten fathom, when it cleared in sight of land."

"On the first of November I cast up accounts with the steward concerning victuals, the third part of our time being this day out. The first of December was so cold that I went the same way over the ice to the ship where the boat had gone yesterday."

"The 1st of January, 1632, and for the most part of the month, was extremely cold. The 6th I observed the latitude with what exactness I could, it being clear sunshiny weather, which I found to be 51° 52'. July, 1632, the 1st of the month we were up betimes, and I caused the ship to be adorned the best I could. Our flag in the poop, and the King's colours in the main-top."

"I had provided a short account of all the passages of our voyage to this date. I likewise wrote in what state we were in at present, and how I intended to prosecute this discovery, both to the westward, and to the southward, about this island. This brief discourse I had concluded, with a request to any noble minded traveller that should take it down, or come to the notice of it: that if we should perish in the action, there to make our endeavours known to our Sovereign Lord the King."

"The 22nd of October we arrived in the Road of Bristol, having been hindered and crossed with much contrary winds and weather." Harris's Voyages, Vol. 2, pp. 407-434. 30

FOX'S VOYAGE, 1631.

"LUKE FOX, a native of Yorkshire, became associated with M. Henry Briggs, whose name has already been mentioned in connection with Sir Thomas Button's Voyage; and by persuasion of that learned and zealous gentleman, the 'honourable Knight, Sir John Brook,' was induced, with 'divers friends,' to join in the adventure. A petition was presented to Charles I., and that monarch without hesitation gave his countenance to the action, and placed one of the ships of the Royal Navy at the disposal of the applicants."

• • • • •
 'The Masters and Wardens of the Trinity House were, also, commanded to give their aid.'

• • • • •
 A.D., 1631. The ship selected for the service was the Charles, a pinnace of seventy tons burden, carrying a compliment of twenty men and two boys, with an armament of seven guns. The voyage was commenced from Deptford on the 3rd of May.
 • • • • •

No event of importance occurred until the 3rd of June, when somewhat about latitude $58^{\circ} 39'$ N., a storm was encountered.

On the 18th, the 60th parallel was obtained.

Two days afterwards land was made on N. side of Lumley's Inlet, or Frobisher's Straights. At that instant, eleven o'clock, the latitude by dead reckoning was $62^{\circ} 17'$, and by a good observation made presently afterwards $62^{\circ} 25'$, the difference being 8' to the westward.

Fox takes his last departure from latitude N. $58^{\circ} 30'$, on the west coast of Greenland. He calculates the distance he has passed in crossing over Davis's Straights at 220 leagues.

June 22nd. This day we had boarded it up in smooth water, bearing a good sail between Cape Childie and Cape Warwick, and were entering Fretum Hudson; and (near by) the island 10 Resolution, so named by whom I know not. But sure I am, Davis was the first of us that see it, naming the east end thereof Cape Warwick.

On the 15th of July, Fox was in the vicinity of the Islands named respectively, Digges, Salisbury, Nottingham, Mansil, and Southampton; with Cape Pembroke and Carey's Swan's Nest on the latter island. This circumstance affords the navigator an opportunity, of which he readily avails himself, to make honorable mention of the personages, who had been the main support of the successive adventures to the Northwest; and he concludes in the following emphatic words, no less true than just. He says: "They were so named as a small remembrance for the charge, countenance, and instruction given to the search of the enterprise; and which, though smaller, neither time nor fame, ought to suffer oblivion to burie; for whosoever it shall please God to ripen 20 those seedes and make them redie for his sickle, whom he hath appoynted to be the happy reaper of this crop, must remember to acknowledge, that those honourable and worthie personages were the first advancers." This remark applies with no less force to the navigators themselves, than on the parties in whose service they were engaged.

On the 27th, in latitude $64^{\circ} 10'$, an island was descried, which was taken to be the N. E. side of Sir Thomas Button's ut ultra.

On the 8th, Port Nelson was made and having debated the propriety of wintering there, it was determined merely to look in and then proceed on the voyage.

On the 10th of August, Fox entered Nelson River, and plied up about a mile with the flood. He would have gone higher, but was prevented by the shallowness of the water. He was content, 30 however, for he was enabled to moor in a snug berth, which afforded facilities both for refitting the vessel, and for putting together a pinnace, that had been brought out in frame, and of which the navigator was in great need. These necessary proceedings were not completed until about the nineteenth. Both sides of the river are represented to be full of small woods; and the north shore to be a clay cliff, like the naze of Essex, but not so high. On shore was found: good grass, store of wood, black berries, strawberries, and several sorts of shrubs. Various fragments of the timbers of a vessel, of casks, and of chests, were also found. A cross, which, it was conjectured, had fallen down, or had been pulled down; and "a board broken in two, the one half quite gone, whereon had been the Kinges arms, and an inscription of the time of Sir Thomas Button, with his own name; when and why he took harbour, with other expressions," were viewed with great interest. The 40 cross was reerected, and this inscription, on lead, nailed thereon: "I suppose this cross was first erected by Sir Thomas Button, in 1613. It was again raised by Luke Fox, Capt. of the Charles, in the right and possession of my dread sovereigne Charles I., King of Great Brittain, etc., the 15th of August, 1631. This land is called New Wales."

The twenty-first, in about latitude N. 57° 10', it if observed, that since quitting Sir Thoma, Roe's Welcome, not a single indication in favour of the desired passage had occurred.

Three days afterward, Captain James of Bristol, in the Maria, and Captain Luke Fox, in His Majesty's ship, Charles, met in Hudson's Bay. At first some difficulty was experienced in communicating, but at length the Maria's shallop with the lieutenant, coxen, and others on board came alongside the Charles. The rowers were taken between decks, entertained at several messes, most carefully examined as to their proceedings, and every particular extracted from them; though it must be confessed, Fox did not make any attempt to conceal his own proceedings, but, on the contrary, seems to have communicated them without reserve.

The day following that on which the two ships met, the captain of the Charles, dined, by 10 invitatio. on board the Maria. Fox represents his reception to have been cordial, and his entertainment to have been as hospitable as circumstances would permit.

Fox states that he was sent out on the voyage, in consequence of a statement made by Sir Thomas Button, that the tide in the vicinity of Nottingham Ireland came from the north-west, a point, however, which was disputed, on good grounds, but without success, by Bylot, who served in the expedition with Sir Thomas Button. By exact observation, Fox ascertained that the tide came from the S. E., at Nottingham Island; and the same he alleges proved to be the case at the point he designated "his farthest." (Randall's Voyages, (printed for the Hakluyt Society) pp. 152 to 183.)

Des Grosellières and Radisson (who it is supposed were Coureurs des bois) were roaming among 20 the Assiniboines and were conducted by them to Hudson's Bay.

Des Grosellières and Radisson went to Quebec for the purpose of inducing the merchants there to conduct trading vessels to Hudson's Bay. The proposal was rejected, as the project was looked upon as chimerical by the Quebec merchants. (This does not accord with the pretensions of the French that Jean Bourdon had made a voyage there in 1656 or 1657).

Des Grosellières was in London in 1667, and before going there had been in Boston and Paris in search of persons willing to fit out an expedition to explore Hudson's Bay. He met with as favorable reception, and the London merchants employed Z. Gillam, a person long used to the New England trade, to perfect this discovery. Gillam sailed in the "Nonsuch" in 1667, and on his arrival built Fort Charles, said to have been the first fort erected in the Bay, and upon his return 30 those engaged in the enterprise applied to Charles II. for a patent, which was issued on 2nd May, 1670, to Prince Rupert and others.

Thus was the Hudson's Bay Company erected by King Charles II. upon the following occasion: Monsieur Radisson and Monsiner Groselier, two Frenchmen, meeting with some savages in the Lake of Assiniponals in Canada, they learn from them that they might go by land to the bottom of the Bay, where the English had not yet been, upon which they desired them to conduct them thither, and the savages accordingly did it. The two Frenchmen returned to the upper lake the same way they came, and thence to Quebec, the capital of Canada; where they offered the principal merchants to carry ships to Hudson's Bay, but their project was rejected; thence they went to France in hopes of a more favorable hearing in Court; but after presenting several 40 memorials, and spending a great deal of time and money, they were answered as they had been at Quebec, and their project looked upon as chimerical. The King of England's ambassador at Paris, hearing what proposals they had made, imagined he should do his country good service by engaging them to serve the English, who had already pretences to the Bay, persuaded them to go to London, where they met with a favorable reception from some men of quality, merchants, and others, who employed Mr. Gillam, a person long used to the New England trade, to perfect this discovery.

"Médard Chouart des Groselliers was a native of Touraint, and an excellent pilot. He emigrated to Canada quite young, where he married Helen, daughter of Abraham Martin, King's pilot, who has left his name to the celebrated Plains of Abraham, near Quebec. (Ferländ.) Meeting afterwards with some Indians on Lake Assiniboine to the north-west of Lake Superior, he was conducted by them to James' Bay, where the English had not yet been. On his return by Lake Superior to Quebec, Des Groselliers offered the principal merchants to carry ships to Hudson's Bay, but the project was rejected. He thence went to France, where he made similar propositions to the court, but without any better success, and finally passed over to England, where his offers were accepted, and with one Radisson, another Frenchman, conducted an English vessel commanded by Zachariah Gillam, a New England Captain, to the mouth of the river Nemiseau on the east side of James Bay where they built Fort Rupert. This was in 1663 according to Charlevoix I., 476; Oldmixon says in 1667." (British Empire in America 1741, I., 544.)

"In 1673, Capt. des Groselliers made a voyage to Port Nelson; in 1674 he was at Fort Rupert, when he was sent on a trading expedition to Moose River, on the west side of the bay. Having been discovered holding a correspondence with the French, he was dismissed the English service, and soon after went to France, where he was pardoned, and received permission to return to Canada in 1676 with the privilege to establish a fishery for white porpoises and seals. A company was formed in course of a few years which undertook to expel the English from Hudson's Bay. Des Groselliers sailed for that purpose in 1682, found Capt. Benjamin Gillam, son of his old shipmate Zachariah, at Port Nelson, of which place he took possession for the French King, as above stated. He returned to Canada in the following year, bringing with him Governor Bridger and Capt. Gillam, and a large cargo of peltry, but he was so harassed by those who had the monopoly of that trade, that he proceeded once more to France and thence to England. The remainder of his course is narrated in the text, Charlevoix I., 479, says he had married Radisson's sister, perhaps as his second wife." (N. Y. Col. Docts; Paris Doets 797. Eds. note.)

He sailed in the Nonsuch, catch, in the year 1667, into Baffin's Bay, to the height of 75 degrees, and from thence southward to 51 degrees, where he entered a river, to which he gave the name of Prince Rupert's River; and finding the savages disposed to a friendly commerce, he erected a small fortress there, which he named Charles Fort. The success of this expedition was so remarkable that the persons concurred in fitting out this vessel, upon the return of Mr. Gillam, applied themselves to King Charles II. for a patent, who accordingly granted them one, dated 2nd of May, in the 22nd year of his reign, A. D. 1670. The first directors of what was called the Hudson's Bay Company were Prince Rupert, Sir James Hayes, Mr. William Young, Mr. Gerrard Weymans, Mr. Riehard Cradaek, Mr. John Letton, Christopher Wren, Esq., and Mr. Nicholas Haywood.

But to return to our history. In the year 1670 the company sent over Charles Bailey, Esq., as their governor, who, with Mr. Radisson, settled at Rupert's River, and another factory was established at Fort Nelson. In 1683 Henry Sergeant, Esq., was made governor at Rupert's River, with orders to be very careful of the French, who began now to show themselves very jealous of the trade carried on by the English company with the natives; and at the same time they were not a little perplexed by some bad practices among their own servants, who considering the hardships they endured in that miserable cold country, thought they might make bold with some part of the profits, which were entirely owing to their labour and negotiations with the natives; for the company, by their governors and agents, made such contracts with the captains, or kings, of rivers, or territories where they had settlements for the freedom of trade there, exclusive of all others, that the Indians could not pretend they had encroached upon them. These contracts were as firm as the Indians could make them by such ceremonies as were most sacred and obligatory among them.

In the year 1686 we find the Company in possession of five settlements, viz., Albany River, Hayes Island, Rupert's River, Fort Wilson and New Severn. Their trade at each of them was very considerable. From Albany River they had generally three thousand five hundred beavers a year, and by Mr. Sergeant's great care and fidelity, their commerce increased so much, that the French began to be afraid all the upland Indians might be drawn down to the Bay. They knew they could do anything with King James II., who then reigned in England; and therefore they resolved to drive the English out of all their places in the bottom of the Bay. First they took Hayes Island, and then the fort on Rupert's River. The French Company in Canada procured a 10 detachment of soldiers to be sent, under command of Chevalier De Troyes, who came overland from Quebec, and in a time of profound peace committed these acts of hostilities. It is worth observing that the French have so good an opinion of the American Colonies, as to take not only all lawful, but even unlawful means to preserve and enlarge them, as contemptible as they are in themselves; whereas the English who, next the Spaniards, have the richest plantations in this part of the world, have been as negligent of them as if they were not worth keeping.

The 8th July, the Chevalier de Troyes came before the Fort at Albany River, where the Governor, Mr. Sergeant, then resided. Two Indians having informed him of their having surprised the forts at Hayes Island and Rupert River, and had brought with them the great guns from these places, the Governor did all in his power to defend the place, but was not able to keep 20 it above a week, as appears by the articles of his surrender, dated July 16th, 1686, which articles were but indifferently kept. In 1693, the Hudson's Bay Company, being assisted by the Government, retook all the forts and factories of which the French had deprived them in the time of peace; but they were soon after driven out of them again by the French.

In the year 1696, the company applied themselves to King William, representing their own incapacity to maintain themselves against the French, and praying the assistance of the Crown for their support. Upon which two men of war were ordered to their assistance, under the command of Captain Allen—who coming into the River Hayes, sent to summon all the forts to surrender; and the French Governor finding he could not defend them against the English capitulated; and on the second of August, in the same year, surrendered Albany Fort, upon certain 30 articles the chief of which were, that all those in the fort as well French as Indians, and one Englishman, the Governor's servant, should have their lives and liberties: and that no harm should be done to their persons, or to anything belonged to them: That they should march out with their arms, drums beating, colours flying, match lighted at both ends, ball in mouth, and carry with them the two guns brought from France, that they should all embark with their clothes and goods without being visited or pillaged in anything, and, if they met with any French vessels, there should be a truce between the English and them; and the said French vessels should be permitted to take aboard the persons that came out of the same fort, with all that belonged to them. These conditions were a little too honourable to grant, though they were complied with, Captain Allen took the governor and some of his men aboard his own ship, the Bonadventure, 40 some he put aboard the Seaford, and the rest aboard a merchant-man called the Doring.

Zachary Gillam, an Englishman, having run up Baffin's Bay to 75° N., ran down to the bottom of Hudson's Bay, entered a river which rising in Canada, empties there, and which he named the Rupert River. A few years before, some Englishmen had ascended the river to Lake Nemwiscan.

Gillam sailed in the "Nouruch" and built a fort at Prince Rupert's River.

When Gillam returned, the Adventurers concerned, applied to King Charles II. for a patent, which was granted to them on 2nd of May, A. D. 1650. (Shea's Charleroix, Vol. 1, p. 57.)

LICENSE TO SIEUR DE LA SALLE TO DISCOVER THE WESTERN PART OF NEW FRANCE.

Louis, by the grace of God, King of France and of Navarre, To our dear and well-beloved Robert Chevalier, Sieur de la Salle, Greeting: We have favourably received the most humble petition presented to Us in your name, to permit you to endeavour to discover the western part of New France; and we have the more willingly assented to that proposal, as there is nothing we have more at heart than the discovery of that country, where there is a prospect of finding a way to penetrate as far as Mexico, the success of which, to our satisfaction, and the advantage of our subjects in that country. We have every reason to expect from the application you have exhibited in clearing the lands we granted you by the arret of Our Council of the 13th May, 1675, and Letters Patent of the same date, in forming settlements on said lands, and in placing Fort Frontenac, whercof we have granted you the Seigniors and government, in a good state of defence. These and other causes Us moving hereunto. We have permitted, and by these Presents, signed by our hand, do permit you to labor in the discovery of the western part of New France, and for the execution of this undertaking, to construct forts in the places you may think necessary whereof we will that you enjoy the same clauses and conditions as of Fort Frontenac according and conformably to our said letters patent of the 13th May, 1675, which we have, as far as necessary, confirmed, and by these presents do confirm. We will that they be executed according to their form and tenor; on condition, nevertheless, that you complete this enterprise within five years, in default whereof these presents shall be null and void; and that you do not carry on any trade with the savages called Outaoucs and others who carry their beavers and other peltries to Montreal; that you perform the whole at your expense and that of your associates, to whom we have granted, as a privilege, the trade in cibola skins. We command Count de Frontenac, Our Governor and Lieutenant-General, and Sieur Duchesneau, Intendant of Justice Police and Finance, and its Officers comprising the Sovereign Council in said Country, to aid in the execution of these presents. For such is Our pleasure. Given at St. Germain in laye, the 12th of May, 1678, and of our reign the 35th.

LOUIS.

COLBERT.

1687.

In de Comporlé, in the name of the company, had borne to the king complaints against the conduct of the English and obtained permission to retake the fort built by the French on the river Sainte-Thérèse and to drive the English out of it.

An expedition was prepared for this purpose; as it had to be made land, in order to succeed, men were required who were accustomed to long marches, who were trained to manage canoes, able to endure without too much grumbling the sharpest cold and accustomed to plundering—seventy Canadians were chosen. Those of their fellow countrymen brave officers trained in savage warfare, accustomed equally to dangers on land and sea were given to them as leaders. These were the sieurs d'Iberville, de St. Hélène and de Maricourt son of Charles Le Mognac. To this troupe of Canadians thirty soldiers were added commanded by de Troyes, Duchesnil and Catalogue. Father Sylvie accompanied them in the hope of making himself useful not only to the French but also to the Christinas and other savages in the north.

The rivers were frozen and the snow still covered the earth when this little body of active and hardy men left Montreal to ascend the river of the Ontonagois to the height of land and afterwards descend to St. James Bay. More than two hundred leagues must be traversed before reaching the first British post. The voyageurs had to traverse the first portion of their journey on snow shoes dragging provisions and baggage on toboggans. They arrived in the beginning of April at the long Sault where they prepared canoes to ascend the Ontonagois; from Lake Temiscamingue we passed by small rivers and making several portages to the large Lake of Abitibi near the entrance of which they built a small fort of pales, in which they left three Canadians. They afterwards descended towards St. James Bay. This march lasted till the 20th of June, and was accompanied by many fatigues and dangers. "One must be a Canadian," remarks de la Potherie on this subject, "to endure the inconveniences of so long a journey." The Fort of Monsipi built on a height near the river was flanked by four bastions and armed with a dozen cannon. In the middle a small block house had been erected carrying four small pieces of artillery. Saint Hélène and d'Iberville followed by some Canadians, scaled the palisade whilst de Troyes broke in the main gate by blows from a battering ram. The block house was vigorously attacked amid savage war cries. Surprised and frightened by the sudden attack which they had not expected the British yielded to their assailants. The gunner alone sought to defend himself and was killed by a piece which he was about to discharge.

Two other forts remained to the British in St. James's Bay—Fort Rupert, forty leagues from Fort Monsipi, and Quitquitchonane, thirty leagues off. De Troyes decided to attack the former first. A boat found at Fort Monsipi was repaired to transport two small cannon, and the little one followed the sea coast to reach Rupert. A boat manned by fifteen men was anchored opposite the fort; d'Iberville accompanied by seven Canadians seized it without much difficulty whilst De Troyes forced the gates of the fort and made himself master of it; he caused the redoubt to be blown up, and the palisades thrown down.

The boat was sent to Monsipi with the English prisoners; the soldiers of the expedition relieved him soon afterwards. De Troyes, after such auspicious commencement, desired to proceed with his undertaking by seizing Fort Quitquitchonane or Albany. The same success followed this expedition. Sir Henry Sergeant who commanded these was at the same time governor of all the British establishments in Hudson Bay. He was very amiable to the French envoys who were sent to him, but he would neither yield his fort nor fight to defend it. De Troyes had to commence to make a breach in the entrenchments to show that he had decided to take the fort.

When the British commandant perceived that he was in earnest, he hastened to send a man with a white flag to demand quarter and to give up the place.

The conduct of the chevalier de Troyes during this expedition, merits great praise. After having organized the forts he set out for Montreal on the 10th August, 1686.

Having remained on the spot to re-establish the affairs of the Company of the North, d'Iberville sent the British prisoners to France in a ship sent to transport thither the furs taken from the enemy. Six months later he appointed his brother Maricourt to re-place him in the command, and proceeded to Montreal by land. The English Company during this campaign lost all its establishments with the exception of Fort Nelson situated several hundred miles to the north of Fort Albany.

Before returning to Montreal, d'Iberville had news of an English ship being in the ice near Charleston Island; he sent four men to reconnoitre her—one of them died from sickness, the other were surprised taken and bound, one escaped after having been hit by several shots, the others were bound in the bottom of the hold where they passed the winter. drowned himself in spring, when the time came to make sail the pilot and the others to the number of six made the least vigorous of the Canadians assist them. One day when the greater part of the British were aloft the Canadian seeing two only on the deck armed himself with an axe with which he split the heads of both and ran to deliver his comrade, both seized arms and ascended to the deck where they made themselves masters and made the ship take the direction of the French port; on the way they met d'Iberville who had armed a boat to free his men. The British ship was laden with goods and provisions which were of great assistance in the Forts.—Ferland, 162-6.

M. Talon to M. Colvert, November 10th, 1670. "You will understand, My Lord, by the Memoir I furnish the King, that some adventurers have set out to discover unknown countries and to seek out things which may be of use to his state. According as I have advices, I shall I0 despatch others, with the precaution necessary to such enterprises.

"I learn by the return of the Algonquins, who will winter this year at Tadoussac, that two European vessels have been seen very near Hudson's Bay, where they wigwag as the Indians express it. After reflecting on all the nations that might have penetrated as far north as that, I can light only on the English, who, under the guidance of a man named Des Groseillers, formerly an inhabitant of Canada, might possibly have attempted that navigation, of itself not much known, and not less dangerous. I intend dispatching thither overland some man of resolution to invite the Kilistinons, who are in great numbers in the vicinity of that Bay, to come down to see us, as the Ottawas did, in order that we may have the first pick of what the latter savages bring us, who, acting as pedlers between those nations and us, make us pay for a round-about of 3 or 20 4 hundred leagues."—(N. Y. Col. Docts. Paris Docts, vol. 9, p. 67.)

My Lord to M. de Chesneau; 15th May, 1678. "In proof of your representation that Count de Frontenac under pretence of granting passes to go hunting eludes the execution of the order prohibiting trading among the Indians, you send me copy of a pass he gave some private persons to hunt towards Hudson's Bay. On this point you ought to be aware that this pass by no means proves what you advance, because it is of advantage to the King's service to go towards that Bay in order to be able to contest the title thereto of the English who pretend to take possession of it, although it lies within the limits of the countries appertaining to the Crown. His Majesty sails not to transmit you the two annexed Ordinances which he also sends to Count de Frontenac, with orders to see that they be executed."—(N. Y. Col. Docts. Paris Docts, p. 794.) 30

The King to M. de la Barre, 5th of August, 1683. "I recommend you to prevent as much as possible, the English establishing themselves in Hudson's Bay, possession whereof has been taken in my name several years ago."

"He has received His Majesty's instructions respecting Hudson's Bay, and has engaged those who have organized that expedition to form a company and to send and purchase a ship in France." (Ibid., 799.)

M. de la Barre; the 4th and 9th November, 1683. "The people who had been at Hudson's Bay, have returned after having encountered extreme dangers. They erected a small fort in which they left a garrison of a few men, about 4 leagues up a river 200 leagues north of any English settlements. It is expected that communication can be had with it overland, as will be seen by the map he sends."—(N. Y. Col. Docts. Paris Docts, Vol. 9, p. 798.) 40

M. D. Beauharnois to Count de Maurepas, 8th October, 1744. "In regard to the posts on Hudson's Bay and those they have established on this side, in the direction of Temiscaming and which His Majesty has been pleased to recommend me to endeavour to neutralize, or to utterly destroy if possible; I have accordingly Sieur Guillet who farms the post of Temiscaming, and has gained the good opinion and confidence of all the nations thereabouts, to prevail on them to assemble together in the course of this winter in order to fall, at the opening of the spring, as well on Fort Rupert as on the other posts in the direction of Hudson's Bay; I have, in like manner on receiving news of the war, sent orders to Missilimakhnac, to be transmitted to Alepimigon, and the other posts in that neighborhood, so that they may all co-operate in the destruction of the English establishments at the North, and among the rest, of that newly built about twenty leagues Michipicoton, by a Canadian refugee, who has conducted thither seven or eight Englishmen who trade there; and I have ordered not only the forcible destruction of that establishment, but also that the Canadian be killed, if it be impossible to seize him. I have also given Siens Guillet notice, that I should, at the very opening of spring despatch a party of Frenchmen and Indians, under the command of an officer and some others, so as to make a simultaneous attack¹⁰ on those posts. Siens Guillet is to warn these Indians of this expedition, in order that they may hold themselves in readiness to join it, and in fact I calculate on sending it thither as soon as the season will permit, and I beg you, My Lord, to assure His Majesty that I will not neglect anything to utterly destroy, if possible, the English establishments in that quarter, as well as all those the difficulties whereof I shall be able to surmount."—N. Y. Col. Docs. Paris Docs. vol. 9, p. 1105.

M. de Beauharnois to Count de Maurepas, 18th June, 1745. "In other respects everything is quiet on this side. I am on my guard, and merely on the defensive, not being able to act offensively, as I had the honour to inform you, either against New England or the posts on Hudson's Bay, in consequence of the want in the King's stores and even in those of the merchants,²⁰ of the supplies necessary for such expeditions, a circumstance I was not informed of last autumn. Besides, the preservation of our possessions and forts, in the interior of the Colony, being my principal object, I considered it more prudent not to divest ourselves of our small means of resistance in case of attack, and to suspend the other projects, until I am in a condition to execute them."—(N. Y. Col. Docs. Paris Docs. Vol. 1, p. 20.)

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY'S MEMORIAL TO THE LORDS OF TRADE, 1750.

When Commissioners were appointed in 1750 to settle the various disputes relating to the boundaries between the possessions of England and France in America, the Hudson's Bay Company again addressed a memorial to the Lords of Trade and Plantations, relating to the extent of country which they claimed under their charter. It is dated 3rd of October, 1750,³⁰ and reads as follows:—

"The said Governor and Company, in obedience to your Lordships' orders of the 25th July, last, requiring them to lay before your Lordships an account of the limits and boundaries of the territory granted to them, represent to your Lordships:

* * * * *

"The said Straights and Bay, commonly called Hudson's Straights and Bay, are now so well known that it is apprehended they stand in no need of any particular description than by the chart or map herewith delivered to your Lordships; and the limits or boundaries of the lands and countries lying round the same, comprised as your memorialists conceive in the said grant, are as follows, that is to say: All the land lying on the east side or coast of the said bay, and extending⁴⁰ from the bay eastward to the Atlantic Ocean and Davis Straights, and the line hereinafter mentioned as the east and south-eastward boundaries of the said Company's territories; and toward the north all the lands that lie at the north end, or on the north side or coast of the said bay, and extending from the bay northwards to the utmost limits of the lands, then towards the North Pole, but where or how these lands terminate is hitherto unknown; and towards the west, all the lands that lie upon the west side or coast of the said bay, and extending from the bay westward to the utmost limits of those lands but where and how those lands terminate to the westward is also unknown, though, probably, it will be found that they terminate on the Great South Sea; and towards the south, all the lands that lie at the south end or south side or coast of the said bay, the extent of which lands to the south to be limited and divided from the places appertaining to the French in those parts, by a line to be drawn for the purpose, to begin from the Atlantic Ocean on the east side of an island called Grimington's Island, otherwise Cape Perdrix, in the latitude of $53\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ on the Labrador coast, and to be drawn from thence south-westward to the great lake Misecosinke otherwise called Mistoseny, and through the same, dividing that lake into two parts, down to the 49th degree of north latitude, as described in the said map or plan delivered herewith, and from thence to be continued by a meridian line of the said latitude 40° westwards," 10

The memorial complains of the French encroachments before the Treaty of Utrecht, and sets out the Tenth Article of that Treaty thus: "That the French King should restore to the Kingdom and Queen of Great Britain, to be possessed in full right forever, the Bay and Straights of Hudson, together with all lands, seas, sea-coasts, rivers, and places situate in the said Bay and Strait, and which belong thereunto, no tracts of land or sea being excepted which were possessed by the subjects of France, &c., &c."

Also the Eleventh Article, and proceeds—

"That in pursuance of the said Treaty, and the especial commission of Her late Majesty Queen Anne, dated 20th July, 1713, the said bay and lands were delivered up to, &c., and commissioners were appointed to settle the said limits and adjust the damages, &c., and proceedings 20 were had by the said commissioners towards settling the same, but they were never able to bring the settlement of the said limits to a final conclusion," &c.

"The boundary line then proposed by the H. B. Co., to be settled on the limits on the continent between them and the places belonging to the French at the south end of the said Bay, as appears from the several memorials and a map or a plan then presented by the said H. B. Co. to the Lords Commissioners of Trade, and still remaining in Your Lordships' office, was the same as the line now proposed by your memorialists for the south-east and south boundaries; and to avoid as much as possible any just grounds for differing with the French in agreeing on those boundaries, which be nearest the settlements, it is laid down so as to leave the French in possession of as much or more land than they can make any just pretensions to, and at the same 30 time leave your memorialists but a very small district of land from the south end of the said Bay, necessary for a frontier."

It next refers to former memorials setting forth the national rights, and claims that—"Since the Treaty of Utrecht the French and all the other nations have effectually been kept out of Hudson's Bay and Straights, and have never offered to come into or navigate on the same with any ship, vessel, or boat, or carried on any trade there. But the French, since the said Treaty, as has been reported to your memorialists from their factories in the bay, have at different times made some settlements in different parts inland to the west of said bay, within the aforesaid limits of the H. B. Co., and have also carried on some trade within the said company's limits by means of wood-runners in an interloping way, both which are conceived and humbly represented 40 to your Lordships as encroachments on the British territories or trade.

"That your memorialists have used the best endeavours in their power to prevent the French making any encroachments on the British territory in those parts, and particularly at the south end of the said bay, where, by the neighbourhood of the French, there is most to be apprehended Your memorialists have made a settlement many years since upon the principal river there, called Moose River, which runs from a great distance south into the bay, and have also erected a for mounted with cannon for the defence of the settlement, and preventing the French entering the bay by any navigation down that river; and your memorialists, on another principal river, called Albany River, that likewise falls into the bay towards the southward thereof, and comes a great way from the west, erected another fort called Henley, at the distance of 20 miles up that river your memorialists thereby endeavouring to guard their territories both to the south and west against the French frontier, and which forts and settlements of your memorialists, are maintained and supported by them at considerable expense. And your memorialists have, in like manner, for their further defence towards the west, erected a fort at Flamboro', head of Port Nelson River, and have also several other settlements or forts at the entrance of the principal rivers that come into the bay from the west, particularly on Churehill River, Hays River, and the said Albany River, 10 and also on the east side of the bay at Sluide River and Axtinepeck Bay, and have also several hips and vessels navigating the straits and bay at proper seasons, some of which remain there the whole year; and the natives all around the bay, by means of the rivers that fall into the same, on breaking up of the ice come down in canoes from the country several hundred miles inland to trade with the Company, bringing with them large quantities of beavers and other furs, the produce of that cold climate, and taking in exchange British manufactures, which the Company have always ready to supply them with, and which the Indians carry back with them for their own consumption and use, and to dispose of among other natives there, and which it is apprehended is better performed by them than could be done by Europeans, and the rivers that run into the bay admit of no navigation for ships, or any vessel of burden at any considerable distance up the same, and the climate round the bay is so extremely cold as to admit of no agriculture, the Indians of those parts being altogether a wandering people, and wholly subsisting themselves by hunting, living on the wild beasts they kill, and bartering their furs.

"That your memorialists apprehend it will be for the benefit of this kingdom that the limits of the territories granted to your memorialists, and the places appertaining to the French, should be settled upon the footing herebefore mentioned, and that the French should be obliged to remove all enroachments they have made within the said limits, by breaking up their settlements, and restraining the wood-runners from entering the same, &c., &c., &c. Mill's Revised Reports, pp. 176-78.

"Under the seal of the Company,

(COPIED FROM DOCUMENTS FURNISHED BY THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

M. de Vaudreuil was Governor of La Nouvelle France in 1755.

General Wm. Shirley (as Mr. Shirley) was Captain-General and Commander-in-Chief of the Province of Massachusetts Bay in 1749, and in July of that year it was agreed that Commissaries should be appointed to define, in an amicable spirit, the boundaries between the colonial possessions of Great Britain and France in North America.

There is proof that Mr. Shirley was originally one of these Commissaries, and that Mr. Mildmay was the other; for on the 21st September, 1750, a mémoire, signed "W. Shirley" and "W. Mildmay," was presented to the French Commissaries, respecting the boundaries of Nova Scotia or Acadia, under Art. 12 of the Treaty of Utrecht; and on the 11th of January, 1751, a second mémoire on the same subject was signed by "W. Shirley" and "Wm. Mildmay," as British Commissaries at Paris; but it is evident that Mr. Shirley had ceased to be a Commissary in April,

* Entered in Book Plantations General 1-74 O. No. 14, B. T.

1755; for on the 23rd January, 1753, a further mémoire was presented by the British Commissaries to the French Commissaries respecting this same boundary; but instead of its bearing the signatures of Mr. Shirley and Mr. Mildmay, it was signed "Mildmay" and "Ruvigny de Cosne."

Mr. Shirley had therefore no doubt returned to America, and Mr. Ruvigny de Cosne, who was British Chargé d'Affaires at Paris, in the absence of the Earl of Albemarle, had succeeded him as one of the British Commissioners.

In May, 1755, the commission was still sitting at Paris.

On the 14th of May of that year, a mémoire was delivered by the French Ambassador in London (the Duke de Mirepoix) to the British Minister for Foreign Affairs, in which was laid down the following four points of disension:

1. Limits of Acadia.
2. Limits of Canada.
3. The course and territory of the Ohio.
4. The islands of St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Dominica, and Tobago.

With regard to the limits of Canada the mémoire ran as follows:—

"The Court of France have decisively rejected, and will always reject, the proposition which has been made by England, that the southern bank of the River St. Lawrence, and Lakes Ontario and Erie shall serve as boundaries between the two nations.

"It is necessary to establish as a base of negotiation relative to this Article, that the River St. Lawrence is the centre of Canada. This truth is justified by all titles, by all authors, and by possession. All that France will be able to admit, after having established this principle, which cannot be reasonably contradicted, is to examine, in regard to this object, whether the reciprocal convenience of the two nations can exact some particular arrangement thereto, in order to fix invariably the respective boundaries.

"The only pretext the English make use of to colour their pretensions is drawn from Article 15 of the Treaty of Utrecht; but in examining attentively all the expressions of that Article, it is evident that nothing is less founded than the inductions which the Court of London actually wish to draw from it.

"1. It is only a question in this Article of the person of the savages, and not at all of their country, or pretended territory, since they have no determined territory, and the only knowledge they have of property is the actual use they make of the land they occupy to-day, and which they will cease perhaps to occupy to-morrow.

"2. It would be absurd to pretend that everywhere where a savage, a friend or subject of one of the two Crowns, should make a passing residence, that country that he had dwelt in should belong to the Crown of which he might be the subject or the friend.

"3. The savages in question are free and independent, and there are none that could be called subjects of one or the other Crown; the enunciation of the Treaty of Utrecht in this respect is incorrect, and cannot change the nature of things. It is certain that no Englishman would dare, without running the risk of being massacred, to tell the Iroquois that they are subjects of England; these savage nations govern themselves, and are as much, and more, friends and allies of France than of England; several French families are even affiliated among the Iroquois, and have dwelt with them during the course of the last war, during which the five nations preserved the most exact neutrality.

"4. Article 15 of the Treaty of Utrecht contains the same stipulations, as much in favour of the French as in favour of the English, and these stipulations are mutual; the French could, then sustain with a better title than the English pretend about the Iroquois, that the nations Abénaquises and Souriquois, otherwise Micmaes, Malécites, Cannibas, etc., are subjects of France and as there are some Souriquois who inhabit the extremity of the Peninsula of Cote, Cape¹⁰ Foureher, and Cape Sable, it would follow that the French could pretend to form settlements there with as much right as the English have formed them at Oswego, or Chouagen on the shores of Lake Ontario, in 1726 or 1727, and consequently long after the peace of Utrecht; France has not ceased since that time to complain of that enterprise, and she relies upon the Fort of Chouagen being destroyed.

"5. The Treaty of Utrecht has been ill interpreted in pretending that it would authorize the French and English to go and trade indiscriminately amongst all the savage nations, under pretext of subjection, alliance, or friendship. This Article, well understood, and well expounded, assures only the liberty of commerce which the savages can make among themselves, or with European nations, and does not at all authorize them to leave the confines of their colonies to go and trade²⁰ with the savages.

"6. Finally, this Article 15 conveys that it shall be settled that the American nations shall be reputed subjects or friends of the two Crowns. This stipulation has not been executed, because in fact, it is scarcely susceptible of execution, since such a savage nation, which to-day is friendly, to-morrow may become an enemy, and, consequently, the fixation which might have been appointed for it would be continually contradicted by fact.

"All that has just been exposed proves clearly that in discussing concerning the rules of the justice and right of Article 15 of the Treaty of Utrecht, it will be easy to destroy the false interpretations that have been given it; it will not be less easy to demonstrate that the English should not be determined by any motive of interest to put forward the pretensions they have³⁰ formed: it is not a question in these vast regions of America, to dispute about a little more or a little less land. The essential interest is confined to two objects, that of security and that of commerce; and the Court of France will be always disposed to concert, in these two respects, with that of London, equitable and solid arrangements as well for the present as for the future."

On the 7th of June following, the British Government returned a reply to this mémoire repeating Article by Article, and with reference to the limits of Canada, said:

"It will be difficult to form a precise idea of what is called in the Memorial the centre of Canada, and still less can it be admitted as a base of negotiation that the River St. Lawrence is the centre of that Province; this is advanced without proof, and it is impossible that the course of a river of that length can form the centre of any country. Besides, Great Britain cannot grant⁴⁰ that the country between the northern coast of the Bay of Fundy and the southern bank of the River St. Lawrence, which Great Britain has already offered to leave neutral, and not possessed by either of the two nations, in reserve for the borders that are proposed to be drawn for it, ought to be regarded or has ever been considered as a part of Canada, since the contrary has been demonstrated by authentic proofs. Neither can Great Britain admit that France has right to Lakes Ontario and Erie, and the Niagara River, and to the navigation of these waters exclusively, since it is evident, by incontestible facts, that the subjects of Great Britain and of France, as well as the Five Nation Iroquois, have indiscriminately made use of the navigation of these lakes and this river, according as occasions and convenience have required; but as regards a piece situated on the south bank of the River St. Lawrence, exclusive of that already proposed to be left neutral, the boundaries of which are in dispute between the two nations or their respective colonies, the Court of Great Britain is ready to enter into a discussion in regard to this, and to fix the limits of it by an amicable negotiation, but without prejudice, nevertheless, to the rights and possessions of any of these five nations.

"With regard to the exposition that is made in the French Memorial, of the 15th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, the Court of Great Britain does not conceive that it is authorized either by 10 the words or the intention of that Article.

"1. The Court of Great Britain cannot admit that this Article only has regard to the person of the savages, and not their country; the words of that Treaty are clear and precise, viz: The Five Nations or Cantons Indians are subject to the rule of Great Britain, which, by the accepted exposition of all treaties, must have reference to the country as well as to the person of the inhabitants; France has recognized this most solemnly; she has well weighed the importance of that avowal at the time of the signing of this Treaty, and Great Britain can never depart from it; the countries possessed by these Indians are very well known, and are not at all as indeterminate as is pretended in the Memorial; they possess and transfer them, as other proprietors do every- 20 where else.

"2. Great Britain has never pretended that the country in which a savage should make a passing residence would belong to the Crown whose subject or friend he might be.

"3. However free and independent the savages in question may be (which is a point which the Court of Great Britain does not at all wish to discuss), they can only be regarded as subjects of Great Britain, and treated as such by France in particular, since she has solemnly engaged herself by the Treaty of Utrecht, renewed and confirmed in the best form by that of Aix-la-Chapelle, to regard them as such; the nature of things is not changed by the Treaty of Utrecht. The same people, the same country, exists still; but the acknowledgement made by France of the subjection of the Iroquois to Great Britain is a perpetual proof of her right in this respect, which can never be disputed with her by France. 30

"4. It is true that the 15th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht contains the same stipulations in favour of the French as in favour of the English, with regard to such Indian nations as shall be deemed, after the conclusion of this Treaty, by Commissaries, to be subjects of Great Britain or of France; but as to what is mentioned of the five nations or Cantons Iroquois, France has distinctly and specifically declared by the said 15th Article that they are subjects of Great Britain, 'Magna Britannia imperio subjecte,' and consequently this is a point to be no more disputed about.

"5. In whatever manner one interprets the Treaty of Utrecht with respect to the trade which will be permitted the English and French to carry on indiscriminately with the savage nations, it is nevertheless very certain that such a general trade is by no means forbidden by this Treaty. 40 It is an ordinary and natural right to transact business with one's own subjects, allies or friends; but to come in force into the territories belonging to the subjects or allies of another Crown, to build forts there, to deprive them of their territories and to appropriate them, is not and will not be authorized by any pretension, not even by the most uncertain of all, viz, convenience. However, such are the forts of Frederiek, Niagara, Presqu'isle, Rivière-aux-bœufs, and all those that have been built on the Oyo and in the adjacent countries. Whatever pretext France can allege for regarding these countries as dependencies of Canada, it is certainly true that they have belonged to, and (inasmuch as they have not been ceded or transferred to the English) belong still to the same Indian nations that France has agreed, by the 15th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht not to molest, 'Nullo in posterum impedimento aut molestia efficiunt.'

"6. It has already been proved that France has, by the express words of the said Treaty, fully and absolutely recognized the Iroquois as subjects of Great Britain. It would not have been as difficult as is pretended in the Memorial to come to an agreement on the subjects of the other Indians, if, among the many Commissions which have emanated to settle this point, there had been a mutual disposition to come to a conclusion. The acts of these Commissions have sufficiently shown the true reasons which have prevented the execution of the 15th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, without recourse to an imaginary supposition, as if the Treaty was not capable of being executed; a supposition which is evidently destroyed by the Treaty itself with regard to the Iroquois nations."

On the 22nd of July, 1755, Monsieur de Mirepoix, the French Ambassador, left England by order of his Court, without taking leave; consequently, on the same day, Mr. de Cosne was instructed by His Britannic Majesty's Government to quit France immediately without taking leave, and to repair to England, which he did on the 25th, and arrived in England, with all his public papers, on the 31st of the same month.

Negotiations were accordingly suspended, and on the 17th of May, 1756, war was declared by Great Britain against France; followed, on the 9th of June, by a French ordonnance declaring war against England.

No further reports than those above described would appear to have been made to the Government by the English Commissaries between the 1st of April, 1755, and March, 1756.

The following is an account of what passed between the 26th March and 20th September, 1761:

On the 26th of March, 1761, the Duc de Choiseul, in the name of the King of France addressed the King of Great Britain, through Mr. Pitt, a letter, communicating proposals as to the basis of negotiations for a separate peace between England and France, in addition to those pending to secure a general European peace.

On the 8th of April, the British reply was forwarded to the Duke, containing the views of the Court of St. James as to the proper basis to be established, in which willingness was expressed to receive an Envoy duly authorized to enter into negotiations. The result of this was, that M. de Bussy was appointed French Minister to London, and Mr. Hans Stanley was sent in a similar capacity from Great Britain to Paris: these diplomatists arriving at their respective posts early in June of the same year.

Negotiations were immediately set on foot for the conclusion of peace between France and England; but the chief difficulty in arriving at an amicable understanding consisted in the desire of the French to retain the fisheries at and near Cape Breton.

On the question of Canada, under date of the 17th June, the Duke de Choiseul had demanded that the boundary of Canada in that part of the Ohio which is regulated by the water-line, and so clearly defined by the Treaty under discussion, be so established, that there may not be any contestation between the two nations as to the said boundaries.

On the 26th of June the above proposal of the Duc de Choiseul, as to the fixation of new limits to Canada towards the Ohio, was rejected by Great Britain on the grounds that it was

The intentions of the Court of St. James were further fully set forth, as to Canada, in the following passage of the same letter:—

"First, then, the King will never depart from the total and entire cession, on the part of France, without new limits or any exception whatever, of all Canada and its dependencies."

On the 29th June Mr. Stanley reported that "the southern bounds of Canada were to be so settled as to give that Province entire and unmutated to Great Britain, such as France, in short, held it in all respects;" and on the 1st July he stated that "it was agreed that Canada, as that Province was determined by their (French) geographers and historians, as well as by the respective civil and military Departments, should be ceded, undismembered and entire to Great Britain."

In his despatch of the 14th July, 1761, Mr. Stanley forwarded a Mémoire containing proposals from the Duc de Choiseul, Art. I of which ran as follows:—

"1. The King cedes and guarantees Canada to the King of England, such as it has been, and in right ought to be possessed by France, without restriction, and without the liberty of returning upon any pretence whatever against this cession or guaranty, and without interrupting the Crown of England in the entire possession of Canada."

It must, however, be remembered that other questions of great importance bearing on European interests were involved in these negotiations for peace; and as difficulties were offered by France to the British proposals, on the 25th of July Mr. Stanley was instructed to present an ultimatum from Great Britain, the first point of which related to Canada, and declared that "His Britannic Majesty would never depart from the total and entire cession on the part of France, without new limits, or any exception whatever, of all Canada and its dependencies."

The reply of France to this ultimatum was transmitted home in Mr. Stanley's despatch of the 4th August which contained the following clause with regard to Canada:

"The King consents to cede Canada to England in the most extensive form, as specified in the memorial of propositions."

Nevertheless, the replies of the French Government to the other demands were not deemed satisfactory, and Mr. Stanley, assuming that the Treaty had failed, stated in his despatch of the 6th August, that he was "convinced that the sole cause of the failure was the determined resistance of the French as to the entire concession of the fishery."

M. de Bussy was, as has been stated, at this time French Minister in London, and on the 18th August he furnished to Mr. Pitt a memo. upon the limits of Louisiana, which bore upon the limits of Canada, and ran thus:

"On the limits of Louisiana.

"To fix the limits of Louisiana towards the English Colonies and Canada, a line should be drawn which will extend from Rio Perdido, between the Bay of Mobile and that of Pensacola, passing by Fort Toulouse in the Alimabons, and which, being prolonged by the western point of Lake Erie, will enclose the river of the Mianis, and by the eastern extremity of Lake Huron will go and meet the high lands on the side of Hudson's Bay toward the Lake of Abitibis, from whence the line will be continued from east to west up to and comprising Lake Superior."

40

Instructions, however, accompanied by an ultimatum, were transmitted under date the 27th August, 1761, to Mr. Stanley, in which it was laid down that these limits could not be acceded to and Mr. Pitt, in alluding to the conduct of France, stated that among the reasons whereby British confidence had been shaken, was "the claiming, as Louisiana, with an effrontery unparalleled, vast regions which the Marquis of Vaudreuil had surrendered to General Amherst, as Canada, and defined himself, with his own hand, as comprehended in the government of that Province where he commanded;" and Mr. Pitt gave the following definition of the boundaries of Canada, as set forth by M. de Vaudreuil:

"Canada, according to the line of its limits traced by the Marquis de Vaudreuil himself, when this Governor-General surrendered, by capitulation, the said Province to the British General, Chevalier Amherst, comprises, on one side, Lakes Huron, Michigan and Superior, and the said line drawn from Lake Rouge, embraces by a tortuous course the River Onabache (Wabash) up to its junction with the Ohio, and from there extends the length of this river inclusively, until its confluence into the Mississippi;" and on this definition of the limits of Canada, its cession was claimed; a copy of M. de Vaudreuil's map being sent to Mr. Stanley for reference, together with an extract of a letter from General Amherst, dated 4th October, 1760, bearing upon that subject

Annexed hereto will be found a further copy of that map of M. de Vaudreuil, to which Mr. Pitt referred, which has been made from the original enclosed by General Amherst in his despatch of 4th October 1760, from which document also the following extracts have been taken:

"The Government of Canada includes Lakes Huron, Michigan and Superior, as you will see 30 by the enclosed sketch, the red line being marked by the Marquis de Vaudreuil.

"The above State is taken only from the part beginning above the Island of Montreal, with the Cedars and Vaudreuil on the north-west of the River St. Lawrence, and Chateau-Gay on the south-east, and ends with Berthier on the north-west of the river, the Island of Dupas and Sorel on the south-east."

"The Government of Trois Rivieres joins that of Montreal with Maskenongy on the north-west, and Yamaska on the south-east, and ends with Ste. Anne on the north-west, and Ste. Pierre de Bequit on the south-east of the River St. Lawrence."

"The Government of Quebec begins with Groulins on the north-west and de Chaillon on the south-east, and takes in all the parishes from there down the River St. Lawrence." 40

It is further recorded on the 2nd September, the Marquis de Vaudreuil's map was shown to the Duc de Choiseul by Mr. Stanley, and that the bounds of Canada were agreed upon as therein stated. This fact is further substantiated by a passage in Mr. Stanley's despatch of the 4th of that month, which runs as follows:—

"The Duc de Choiseul complained that the bounds of Canada were laid down very unfavourably to France, in the description which your Memorial contains, alleging (sic) that there had been disputes between the Marquis de Vaudreuil and the Governor of Louisiana with regard to the limits of their two Provinces, wherein the former, being the more able and the more active, had greatly enlarged his jurisdiction. He added, however, that though many such objections might be made, it had been the intention of the King his master to make the most full and complete cession of Canada, and that he consented in his name to those limits. I then produced the map you sent me, and it was agreed that this Province should remain to Britain, as it is there delineated."

The last Mémoire of France to England, in these negotiations, is dated 9th September, and was delivered by M. de Bussy to Mr. Pitt on the 14th.

The 1st Article fully confirms the acceptance by France of the de Vaudreuil* map, and states as follows:—

"The King has declared in his first Memorial of propositions, and in his ultimatum, that he will cede and guarantee to England the possession of Canada, in the most ample manner. His Majesty still persists in that offer, and without discussing the line of its limits marked on a map presented by Mr. Stanley,—as that line, on which England rests its demands, is without doubt the most extensive bound which can be given to the cession,—the King is willing to grant it." 20

On September 15th, in consequence of the non-acceptance by France of the terms offered by Great Britain, instructions were sent to the British Minister at Paris to demand his passports, and on the 21st a passport was sent to M. de Bussy, the French Envoy in London.

On the 20th, Mr. Stanley received his passport, together with an assurance that the King of France would be found at any time willing to re-open these negotiations, which were in effect resumed the following year; for on the 29th August, 1762, the French King despatched the Duc de Nivernois to London to carry over the peace propositions; and as a result preliminary Articles of Peace were signed at Fontainebleau on the 3rd November, 1762.

From these is given the following extract:—

"His Majesty renounces all the pretensions that he had formerly formed, or could form, for 30 New Scotland or Acadia, in all its parts, and guarantees it quite entire and with all its dependencies to the King of Great Britain. Besides, his very Christian Majesty cedes and guarantees to his said Britannic Majesty, in all its entirety, Canada, with all its dependencies, as well as the Island of Cape Breton and all the other islands in the Gulf and River St. Lawrence, without restriction, without his being free to come back upon this cession and guarantee, under any pretext, nor to trouble Great Britain in the aforementioned possessions."

EDWARD HERTSLET.

Foreign Office, April 27th, 1878.

* Yet, on the 30th November, weeks after the cessation of these negotiations, M. de Vaudreuil addressed a letter to the Duc de Choiseul, which was published, as stated in the Annual Register of 1761, "to quiet the minds of the people," and in which the Marquis stated that what he was charged with by the English as regards the limits of Canada was entirely false and groundless, and that nothing passed in writing on that head, nor was any line drawn on any map.—An. Reg., 1761, pp. 267, 268. 40

COPY, FURTHER QUERIES AND OPINIONS OF MR. HOLROYD.

QUERIES.

1. Whether any objection can be made to the grant of the soil contained in the Charter, and whether the grant will include all the country, the waters of which run into Hudson's Bay, as ascertained by geographical observations?

OPINION.

To 1st. I am not aware of any objection that appears to me to be a valid one to the grant of the soil contained in the Charter. I think the grant will include all the countries, the waters of which run into Hudson's Bay, as ascertained by geographical observation, that were not at the time of the Charter actually possessed by the subjects of any foreign prince, and which have not been possessed of any foreign trade previous to actual or virtual possession thereof being taken under the Charter, or by or on behalf of the Crown of England.

2nd. Whether as proprietors of the soil, the company may exclude all other persons from residing therein, and dispossess the Canadian traders of the posts already occupied by them and used for the purposes of trade with the native Indians.

3rd. Though the company may not be entitled to prevent other persons from using the navigation of Hudson's Bay, or of navigable rivers within their territories, are they entitled to prevent all persons from landing upon the shores of the bay, or the banks of the rivers, and in those places where the navigation of a river is interrupted by falls; may the company prevent any person from passing over their land for the purpose of transporting himself and his merchandise to another point, where the river may again become navigable.

To 2nd and 3rd. I think that as proprietors of the soil of the Company may not exclude all other persons from residing thereon, and dispossess the Canadian traders of the posts occupied by them, and used for the purposes of trade with the native Indians, notwithstanding the grant of a sale trade and the consideration mentioned in the Charter for the same, and though such a grant for such consideration may formerly have been thought good, yet, I am inclined to think that all the King's subjects have a right there, and that the grant of an exclusive trade is in that respect void. See Skin, 334, 361. It appears to me, too, that the grant of the territory must be taken subject to the rights of the King's subjects to go into that country to trade there, and to their rights of passing and repassing through the country for that purpose, and doing what is necessary for the enjoyment of their rights of trade in like manner as they would be entitled to if the soil had remained the King's, and the grant had not been made. Though these may be regulated in a reasonable manner by the King or his grantees of the territory and soil, yet I am inclined to think the King's subjects cannot by law be deprived of their rights of trading there, and incidentally of doing what is necessary and reasonable for that purpose. I am inclined to think, therefore, that the King's subjects have, as necessarily to their right of trade, a right to pass and cross along the navigable rivers, and in those places where the navigation is interrupted by falls, to pass over the company's land in a proper course for the purpose of transporting themselves and their merchandise to another point where the river may again become navigable. I think, therefore, that the company have no right to prevent the Canadian traders from doing these things, or from landing on the banks of the bays or the shores of the rivers.

4th. Whether the company by virtue of their right of property may prevent the Canadian traders from passing through their territories to arrive at Athabaska, or other countries not included in the Charter, or will the use which these traders have enjoyed for nearly forty years of travelling through the company's territories entitle them to its continuance. that it is impossible for the Canadian traders to traverse the companies territories without cutting wood or using the water found in the course of their journey and pitching their tents upon the company's lands, and on this head you will further please to say whether there are rights which the Canadian traders can acquire by any, and what length of possession ?

To 4th.—I think that the company have not any right by law to prevent this. In the infancy of a country, all these things may be necessary to be done in order to exercise the right of trade, and so long as they are necessary, and without which the country cannot be traversed for the purposes of trade, so long as the right to do these things are, as it seems to me, upon the principles of reason and law and from necessity increased to the right of trade, without which it cannot exist. I am inclined to think, therefore, that until these conveniences are otherwise provided, can be otherwise had, traders may, in traversing the company's territories, provide themselves in a reasonable manner with what is necessary for fire, water and temporary habitation, though this be done upon and from lands granted to or appropriated to other purposes. Twenty years exclusive enjoyment will give, I think, a right of possession, from which the party cannot be removed by ejection or otherwise than by a real action, and 60 years like enjoyment of any lands or tenements will give, I think, a complete title against the company. No action will, however, lie in the courts of law in England to recover lands or tenements abroad, or for trespass committed upon them. See 4 Term, Rep. 503.

5. Supposing the company entitled to dispossess the Canadian traders and to maintain an exclusive right to trade within their territories, what steps do you advise as the best to be purchased for making the right effectual ?

To 5th. Supposing the company were so entitled, this is a query embracing considerations of prudence, policy and discretion, and which must depend, in every instance, upon the circumstances attending it and connected with it, which I, therefore, cannot take upon me to answer further than that an application may be advisable to the King's Ministers upon the subject, or to the King in Council in whom the original jurisdiction as to the boundaries of our Provinces in America is said to be rested. See 1, Vez. 4, 44.

6. Does it appear to you that the civil and criminal jurisdiction granted to the company, is valid ?

To 6th. It appears to me that the civil and criminal jurisdiction granted to the company is valid, but I am not so clear in this as to advise it being carried into execution in any case of life or limb, without the express authority of the Crown in the particular instance or more explicit powers by Charter.

7. If valid, how is it to be exercised ? May the company erect Courts of Justice or authorize any person or persons to administer the laws of England as they might be administered in England ?

To 7th. I think it can only be exercised by the Governor and his Council. The company cannot, I think, erect Courts of Justice or authorize any person or persons to administer the laws of England as they might be administered in England.

8. May the company appoint a Sheriff to execute the judgment of their Court and to do the duty of a Sheriff as performed in England ?

To 8th. I incline to think that the Governor and his Council, who have the power of judicature, may as incident to that power, appoint such an officer, who, in similar cases is, I believe, usually called the Provost Marshall. See 4, Meod., 222.

9. May such Sheriff, in case of resistance to his authority, call out the population to his assistance, and may the company put arms in the hands of their servants and those who live under them, as well as for their defence against attack as to assist in enforcing the judgments of their Courts?

To 9th. I incline to think that all this may lawfully be done.

10. Supposing the company to hold Courts of Justice, who will be subject to their jurisdiction, will it be only their own servants and persons residing within their territories by their permission, or will these words of the Charter, viz.: those that live under them—include Canadian traders who have established themselves intrusively on the lands of the company, and who dispute their rights? 10

To 10th. I think that all those persons including the Canadian traders will be subject to the jurisdiction of the Governor in Council.

11. Supposing these traders were to resist the sheriff in the execution of a warrant and death should ensue, would the servants of the company or others acting in support of the warrant be responsible for the consequences, and in like manner would the servants of the company be responsible for the consequences of a forcible resistance against an attempt of the Canadian traders to trespass on the company's territories.

To 11th. I am inclined to think that the servants of the company or others acting in support of the warrant, supposing it to be made out in proper form, would be equally protected from the consequences of the execution of the warrant with persons executing on similar civil or criminal²⁰ warrant in England. The servants of the company may resist with force, not directly tending to the loss of life or limb, any illegal attempt of the Canadian traders to trespass upon the company's property, but a man's house, which is his castle, he may defend, even with the direct destruction of life if he cannot otherwise defend his possession of it, but not to that extent with respect to lands or other property, as to which he must appeal to the laws in preference to taking away life for its protection.

12. Supposing that in the course of such resistance or trespass on the part of the Canadian traders, any of them should be guilty of crime or misdemeanor, would the company be justified in terms of a clause in their Charter above cited, in transmitting the party or parties to England, and could the case there be brought to trial so as to subject the offenders to the punishment prescribed³⁰ by law for the same offence in England.

To 12th. I think the company would not be justified in sending the parties to England in this case, unless in cases where a party is authorized by an Act of Parliament to be seized and sent to England for trial. The cause of seizure of the persons and sending them to England in the Charter is, I think, invalid.

13. Seeing the territories within which criminal jurisdiction is given by the 43rd Geo. III., c. 138, to the Courts of Lower and Upper Canada, are "the Indian territories or parts of America not within the limits of either the said Provinces," can this Act be stated to give to these Courts jurisdiction within the territories of the Hudson's Bay Company?

To 13th. I am inclined to think that this Act does not extend to give to these Courts juris-⁴⁰ diction over the territories belonging to and in the possession of the Hudson's Bay Company. It extends, I think, only to the Indian territories, not to those belonging to England or held of its Crown.

14. If the company were to erect Courts for the punishment of crimes, or if they were to send home offenders to England to be tried, would the criminal jurisdiction given to the Courts of Lower and Upper Canada by the 43rd Geo. III., c. 138 (supposing it to extend to their territories) be thereby superseded?

To 14th. Supposing the criminal jurisdiction given by Act of Parliament to the Courts of Upper and Lower Canada, to extend to these territories of the Hudson's Bay Company, I think it would not be superseded by any Act that the Hudson's Bay Company might do.

15. There are partners of the North-West Company resident in London, who concur in sending persons from Canada into the company's territory, for the purpose of trade. Does it appear to you that the company can bring and maintain a special action of damages on the case in England against such partners of the North-West Company resident in London?

To 15th. I think that no such action is maintainable against them in England for any of the acts above alluded to in the case.

16. What would be the effect in such an action if it could be established that the traders employed by the North West Company, not content with a fair participation in the trade, are in the practice of maltreating the native Indians to deter them from dealing with the Hudson's Bay Company, and likewise of using violence and threats to intimidate the servants of the Hudson's Bay Company from prosecuting their trade?

To 16th. If the action was maintainable against the above partners, these circumstances would I think, increase the damages.

17. Nothing is said in the Charter in regard to the amount of the capital of the company, or the manner of raising it. But in the year 1700 the original stock of the company subscribed at the date of its Charter, was trebled out of the profits by adding the amount of the latter to the former, without dividing them. In the year 1720 it was again trebled, and a further subscription was opened, but it does not appear that subscriptions were received from any persons excepting proprietors of stock, who were allowed to subscribe in proportion to their stock.

It is now proposed to raise a further capital, for which purpose two modes have been suggested:—

Firstly: To offer to each proprietor who may be inclined to subscribe permission so to do in a given proportion to his existing stock, subject to the condition of his declaring his acceptance of this offer within a limited time, and in case of his failure or refusal to accept such offer, then his share of the new stock to be offered to the other stockholders, and in case of their failure or refusal to accept it, then such share of the new stock to be offered to public sale to the highest bidder.

Secondly: It has been proposed to make a call on the present stockholders, pro rata of their stock, with a declaration that, if they do not satisfy the call, their stock will be forfeited.

You are requested to say whether either mode is within the powers given to the company by their Charter?

The first of these modes is, I think, within the powers given to the company by their charter, but not the 2nd.

COPY, QUERIES AND OPINIONS OF MR. CRUISE.

1. Does the right of the company to the property of the soil appear to be open to any material objection?

Some very difficult points arise in this case, which have not been discussed in modern times, 1st, as to the validity of the exclusive right of trading and fishing, granted by the Charter. In the case of the East India Company v. Sandys, which arose in 32 Charles II., reported by Skinner 132, and Shower v. 2, 366, but more fully in the State Trials v. 7, 494, where the East India Company brought an action on the case against Mr. Sandys, for invading their rights under several Charters to the sole and exclusive trade to the East Indies. It was held by the Court of K. B., after great consideration, that the East India Company had an exclusive right, by their Charter, to the trade to the East Indies, and judgment was given for them. Lord Chief Justice Jeffries gave his opinion at great length, and stated that, though by the law of England monopolies were prohibited, yet societies to trade such as the pets to certain places was exclusive of others, were no monopolies, but were allowed to be erected here, and were strengthened by usage and practice in all times.

The period when this judgment was given and the characters and principles of the judges who gave it, are circumstances which do not add to its authority. But in the case of Nightingale v. Bridges, reported by Shower, v. 1, 135, which arose in 2nd William and Mary, a time when the prerogative had suffered a considerable diminution, and Lord Holt was Chief Justice, the Court of K. B. did not deny the validity of the judgment in the case of the East India Company v. Sandys, though they held that a clause in the Charter of the Royal African Company, by which certain regions in Africa were granted to them for 1,000 years, prohibiting other persons to trade within their limits, under pain of imprisonment and forfeiture of their ships and goods, and giving power to enter into and search and seize their ships and goods, was void, because the King could not, by letters patent, create a forfeiture of or any way by his own act confiscate a subject's property. Although the decision in the case of the East Indian Company v. Sandys does not appear to have ever been directly contradicted, yet I apprehend that the doctrine then established is not now considered as law. Lord C. B. Comyns appears to have doubted it, Digest Tit. Trade, D 1, and it is said in Bacon's Ab. Tit. Merchant, that nothing can exclude the subject from trade but an Act of Parliament.

As to the exclusive right of fishing, it has been long settled (vide Warren v. Matthews, 6 Mod. 30 Rep. 73) that the King's grant of an exclusive fishery in the sea or in rivers where the tide flows and ebbs, only extends to royal fish, namely, whale and sturgeon, and does not exclude any British subject from taking all other kinds of fish.

There is, however, a very important difference between the Charters upon which the case of the East India Company v. Sandys arose, and the Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company. In the former, only an exclusive right to trade was given, whereas, in the latter, the company are made the proprietors of the soil, to hold to them and their successors forever, of the Crown in fee and common soeage. This places the Governor and company in a very different situation from that in which the East India Company stood.

I am, therefore, of opinion, 1st. That no objection can be made to the grant of the soil contained in the Charter; and that as proprietors of the soil they may exclude all persons from entering their territories and trading therein. The right of fishing in the rivers where the tide does not flow, also belongs to the company, as proprietors of the banks, and they may in that character prevent those who fish in the sea or in the mouths of the rivers from landing their fish. Ipswich v. Brown, Sar. 11, 14.

2. Will that right be held to include all the country, the waters of which run into Hudson's Bay?

The description of the lands granted is, by reference to the grant of an exclusive trade, where the words are: "All those seas, straits, bays, rivers, lakes, creeks, sounds in whatsoever latitude they shall be, within the entrance of the straits commonly called Hudson's Straits, together with all the lands and territories upon the countries, coasts, and confines of the seas, bays, lakes, rivers, creeks and sounds aforesaid."

The objection to this description is that it is too general, there being no boundaries mentioned. But I apprehend that as the Charter is granted by the King's especial grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, it would be construed liberally, and in favour of the grantees, vide Bacon's Al., 10 vol. 5, 603, 8 vo. edition, and that therefore the opinion of the geographers would be adopted, namely, that all the countries lying upon the waters which run into Hudson's Bay are included within the Charter for therein it will be ineffectual.

3. Are the company as proprietors of the soil entitled to prevent the British subjects from building and occupying house, cutting wood and doing other acts of property?

The Hudson's Bay Company as proprietors of the soil are clearly entitled to exclude all persons as well British subjects as foreigners from occupying any part of their land.

4. Are they entitled to dispossess the Canadian traders of the posts already occupied by them intrusively without legal title?

They may certainly dispossess the Canadian traders by legal process of the posts occupied by them, and may pull down any buildings erected by them.

5. In this case, what are the legal steps necessary for carrying into effect the rights of the company, vide answer to Query 9.

Supposing that those clauses of the Charter by which the exclusive navigation of the Hudson's Bay, and the exclusive trade of the adjacent country, is granted to the company, should be found of no avail, how far are other British subjects entitled to make use of the internal navigation of rivers and creeks which run through the Company's Territories?

Supposing the grant of an exclusive trade to be void, as a monopoly, still the company, as proprietors of the soil, may exclude all persons from navigating the inland rivers and creeks within their limits.

7. On the other hand, how far have the company a right, as proprietors of the land, to prevent that trespass which must be committed on their property by other traders, in using the navigation of these rivers where it is interrupted by falls, and where it is necessary to carry the goods, etc., by land.

The company, as proprietors of the soil, have a right to protect and preserve their property, and to use all lawful means for that purpose.

8. Supposing a forcible attempt on the part of the Canadian traders to trespass where they have no right to go or to maintain their intrusive and illegal professions, would the servants of the Hudson's Bay Company be legally responsible for the consequence of asserting by force the rights of the company?

If the Canadian traders should be guilty of any violence, the proper remedy will be by action or indictment.

9. Is the civil and criminal jurisdiction granted to the company valid, and, if valid, to what extent will the Governors and Council appointed by the company be authorized to punish offences against the law, and will their power be limited to the servants of the company only, or will it extend to settlers holding lands by grants from the company, or to any other description of people residing in the Territory?

The civil and criminal jurisdiction granted by the Charter may be exercised by the company by authorizing their Governor and Council to hold a Court of Justice in which the English law may be administered, and by the appointment of a Sheriff to execute the judgments of such Court, the individuals subject to the jurisdiction of this Court, will be according to the words of the Charter: "All persons belonging to the said Governor and Company, or that shall live under¹⁰ them," so that as to Canadians entering the territories of the company and violating their property, the prosecution must be either in the Courts of Upper or Lower Canada, or in the Courts of Westminster, and I think that a special action on the case would lie, and might be brought by the company in the Courts of Upper Canada. As to the Courts of Lower Canada, they proceed according to the French law, and, therefore, I cannot point out the mode in which redress may be obtained in them. If any of the persons who are partners in the North-West Company are resident in England, and it could be proved that the traders violating the territories and properties of the Hudson's Bay Company acted by the authority and direction of the Hudson's Bay Company, may bring a special action on the case in Westminster against them in the same manner as the East India Company brought an action of that kind against Mr. Sandys.

LINCOLN'S INN, 22nd February, 1812.

COPY QUERIES AND FURTHER OPINIONS OF MR. WM. CRUISE.

1. You are of opinion that the Hudson's Bay Company, as proprietors of the soil, are clearly entitled to exclude all persons from occupying any part of their lands, and that they may certainly dispossess the Canadian traders by legal process of the posts occupied by them.

Now, under this head the Hudson's Bay Company wish to be informed.

1. What is the legal process by which this may be effected? It is to be done by holding a Court of Justice, and by the appointment of a sheriff to execute the judgments of such Court which it is stated they may do in your answer to Query 9th? But it is also stated that the individuals subject to the jurisdiction of such court, will be "All persons belonging to the said Governor and company, or that shall live under them." Will these last words apply to Canadian traders who have established themselves upon the territory, but who reside there in opposition to the company, and dispute their rights altogether.

I think the words of the charter "or who shall live under them," must be construed to extend to Canadian traders, or any other persons residing within the territories of the company, or even passing through. For otherwise the words of the charter would be nugatory. Canadian traders might enter the territories of the company, commit depredations on their property and disturb the peace of the country, without being amenable to their laws, this would be absurd.

2. The Hudson's Bay Company are further desirous of knowing what is the extent of the civil and criminal jurisdiction which may be exercised by a Court of Justice, established under their authority. Will it be warranted in trying all sorts of felonies and inflicting capital punishments, or to what offences will their power extend?

It is admitted by all legal writers that the Crown has a right to erect Courts of Justice; but that such Courts must proceed according to the rules of the Common Law. In this case the Crown has already authorized the Hudson's Bay Company to hold a Court of Justice, with power to judge in all causes, whether civil or criminal, and therefore the Governor and his Council, residing in America, may try felonies, and inflict capital punishments. This appears clearly from the clause in the charter, page 184: That in case any crime is committed where there is no Governor and Council, the Chief Factor of that place shall transmit the party to where there shall be a Governor and Council, where justice may be executed.

3. Supposing your opinion to be that the words "or that shall live under them" will apply to the Canadian traders; and supposing the sheriff to proceed under a warrant from a Court of Justice, to be held by the authority of the Governor and Council, to dispossess any of the Canadians from their intrusive possessions, and that the intruders shall resist; will the sheriff be justified in using force; and in case death should ensue, will the sheriff or any other party concerned be liable to indictment in the Courts of Upper or Lower Canada, under the 43 Geo. III., c. 138?

A sheriff duly appointed by a Governor and Council residing at Hudson's Bay, would have the same power and authority as a sheriff of an English county; and such a sheriff would not be liable to an indictment in the Courts of Upper or Lower Canada. The introductory clause of the Statute 43 Geo. III., c. 138, shews that the intention of the Legislature was only to give a power of acting where a crime was not cognizable by any jurisdiction whatever; by which means great offences went unpunished, and certainly did not affect the power of erecting a Court of Justice given to the Hudson's Bay Company. Now, if a Court of Justice be established in Hudson's Bay, the jurisdiction given by the above Act to the Courts of Upper and Lower Canada will become unnecessary.

4. Will the company be warranted in establishing and maintaining a body of armed men to defend their exclusive right to the soil and to act as a police guard and support the sheriff whom they appoint in the discharge of his duty; and if such armed body may be established, may the company direct it to be subject to and be governed by the British articles of war.

I do not think the company would be warranted in establishing an armed force. The sheriff, if resisted, may call out the posse comitatus, which comprises all the gentlemen yeomen, laborers, servants, apprentices, and all others above the age of 15 years, within the county, who will be obliged to assist him in enforcing the judgments of the court.

5. Will the company be entitled to prevent the Canadian traders from continuing to use the roads or tracts which they have traversed through the company's territories to arrive at Athabaska or the country west of the great chain of mountains, which bound the company's territory, or will the use which they have enjoyed of travelling through the company's territories, or such use for any and what length of time, entitle them to its continuance? You will observe that it is impossible for the Canadian traders to traverse the company's territories without cutting wood for firewood, using the water found in the course of their journey, and pitching their tents upon the company's territory, and you will further say whether these are rights which the Canadian traders can acquire by any and what length of possession?

If a highway were made through the Province, all British subjects would have a right to travel on it; but a track made by the Canadians is not a highway, and no prescriptive right to traverse the territories of the company, or to cut wood or pitch tents, can exist in this case, because such a prescriptive must be founded on immemorial usage.

6. There are individuals of the North-West Company who reside in Upper Canada, and also in the City of London. The Hudson's Bay Company would not incline to proceed against them by action on the case in Upper Canada from the influence of the Canadian traders there, and from the effect which that influence will have upon a Provincial jury, if not upon the judge. But they would wish to bring a special action on the case against the partners of the North-West Company who reside in London, and they will be much obliged to you for any suggestions which may enable them by its consequences to prevent the Canadian traders from continuing to intrude upon their territories. They will have no difficulty they believe, in proving that their territories are violated by the authority and direction of the North-West Company.

I can add nothing to what I have said on my former opinions on this point. Since the case of the East India Company v. Sandys I have not been able to find any other of the same nature. I should, as to this point, recommend the opinion of a special pleader should be taken.

II. There is another point which is connected with the former, and that is the pecuniary¹⁰ means of enabling the company to avail themselves of all the right conferred upon them by their charter.

There is no restraint or limit imposed by the charter with respect to the amount of the capital stock of the company, or the manner of raising it. In the year 1700 the original stock of the company, subscribed at the date of its charter, was trebled out of the profits, by adding the amount of the latter to the former, without dividing them. In the year 1720, it was again trebled, and a further subscription was opened, but it does not appear that the subscriptions were received from any persons excepting proprietors of stock, who were allowed to subscribe in proportion to their stock.

In the view of raising a further capital, two modes have been suggested. 20

First.—To offer to each proprietor, who may be inclined so to do, permission to subscribe in a given proportion to his existing share of stock, subject to the condition of his declaring his acceptance of this offer within a limited time; and in case of his failure or refusal to accept such offer, then his share of the new stock to be offered to the other stockholders, and in case of their failure or refusal to accept it, then such share of the new stock to be offered to public sale to the highest bidder.

Secondly.—To make a call on the present stockholders pro rata of their stock, with the declaration that if they do not satisfy the call, their stock will be forfeited.

You are requested to say whether either mode is within the powers given to the company by their charter? 30

The charter is silent as to the quantum of capital stock which the company may create, or the mode of raising it, and therefore I see no objection to the company calling on the proprietors for an additional sum, and, in case of refusal, to offer new shares to public sale. But I do not see how the company can forfeit the stock of the present proprietors, though I understand that the York Buildings Company have lately acted on that principle, and have forfeited the shares of those proprietors who refused to advance an additional sum of money. This should be enquired into.

III. There is a third point arising out of an act of Parliament which appears to have been passed in the reign of William and Mary, of which a copy is herewith laid before you. This Act confirmed the charter of the Hudson's Bay Company and the rights and privileges thereby granted, but its endurance was limited to seven years, and you are requested to say whether this Act can be stated to have now any, and what effect with reference to the Hudson's Bay Company and⁴⁰ their charter.

The Act is clearly expired, and can now have no effect. If a renewal of it could be obtained, it would be extremely advantageous to the company, as they might then seize all the property of the North-West Company found within their territories, under the clause in page 181 of the charter.

(Signed) WILLIAM CRUISE.

COPY QUERIES AND OPINION OF MR. SCARLETT.

QUERIES.

1. Whether any objection can be made to the grant of the soil contained in the charter, and whether the grant will include all the country, the waters of which run into Hudson's Bay, as 10 ascertained by geographical observation.

2. Whether, as proprietors of the soil, the company may exclude all other persons from residing thereon, and dispossess the Canadian traders of the posts already occupied by them and used for the purposes of trade with the native Indians.

3. Though the company may not be entitled to prevent other persons from using the navigation of Hudson's Bay, or of navigable rivers within their territories, are they entitled to prevent all persons from landing upon the shores of the bay of the banks of the rivers; and in those places where the navigation of a river is interrupted by falls, may the company prevent any person from passing over the land for the purpose of transporting himself and his merchandise to any other point where the river may again become navigable. 20

4. Whether the company, by virtue of their right of property, may prevent the Canadian traders from passing through their territories to arrive at Athabaska or other countries not included in the charter, or will the use which the traders have enjoyed for nearly 40 years of travelling through the company's territories, entitle them to its continuance. You will observe that it is impossible for the Canadian traders to traverse the company's territories without cutting wood for firewood, using the water found in the course of their journey, and pitching their tents upon the company's lands; and on this head you will further please to say whether these are rights which the Canadian traders can acquire by any and what length of possession.

5. Supposing the company entitled to dispossess the Canadian traders and to maintain an exclusive right to trade within the territories, what steps do you advise as the best to be pursued for making this right effectual. 30

6. Does it appear to you that the civil and criminal jurisdiction granted to the company is valid.

7. If valid, how is it to be exercised. May the company erect Courts of Justice, or authorize any person to administer the laws of England as they might be administered in England.

8. May the company appoint a sheriff to execute the judgments of their courts, and to do the duty of a sheriff as performed in England.

9. May such sheriff, in case of resistance to his authority, call out the population to his assistance, and may the company put arms in the hands of their servants and those who live under them, as well for their defence against attack, as to assist in enforcing the judgments of their courts.

10. Supposing the company to hold courts of justice, who will be subject to their jurisdiction? Will it be only their own servants and persons residing within their territories by their permission and direct authority, or will these words of the charter, viz.: "those that live under them," include the Canadian traders who have established themselves intrusively on the lands of the company and who dispute their rights.

11. Supposing these traders to resist the Sheriff in the execution of his warrant, and death should ensue, would the servants of the company or others acting in support of the warrant, be responsible for the consequences, and, in like manner, would the servants of the company be responsible for the consequences of a forcible resistance against an attempt of the Canadian traders to trespass on the company's territory.

12. Supposing that in the course of such resistance or trespass on the part of the Canadian traders, any of them should be guilty of crime or misdemeanor, would the company be justified, in terms of a clause in their charter above cited, in transmitting the party or parties to England, and could the case be there brought to trial so as to object the offenders to the punishment prescribed by law for the same offence in England.

13. Seeing the territories within which criminal jurisdiction is given by the 43 Geo. III. c. 138, to the courts of Lower and Upper Canada are the Indian territories, or parts of America not within the limits of either the said Provinces, can this Act be stated to give to these courts jurisdiction within the territories of the Hudson's Bay Company.

14. If the company were to erect courts for the punishment of crimes, or if they were to send home offenders to England to be tried, would the criminal jurisdiction given to the courts of Lower and Upper Canada by the 43 Geo. III., c. 138 (supposing it to extend to their territories), be thereby superseded.

15. There are partners of the North-West Company resident in London who concur in sending persons from Canada into the company's territory for the purpose of trade. Does it appear to you that the company can bring and maintain a special action of damages on the case in England against such partners of the North-West Company resident in London.

16. What would be the effect in such an action, if it could be established that the traders employed by the North-West Company, not content with a fair participation in the trade, are in the practice of maltreating the native Indians, to deter them from dealing with the Hudson's Bay Company, and likewise of using violence and threats to intimidate the servants of the Hudson's Bay Company from prosecuting their trades.

17. Nothing is said in the charter in regard to the amount of the capital of the company or the manner of raising it. But in the year 1700 the original stock of the company subscribed at the date of its charter was trebled out of the profits, by adding the amount of the latter to the former without dividing them. In the year 1720, it was again trebled and a further subscription was opened, but it does not appear that subscriptions were received from any persons excepting proprietors of stock who were allowed to subscribe in proportion to their stock.

1. It appears to me that no other objection can be made to the grant of the soil to the extent stated in the charter, except that his His Majesty could not make a valid grant of territory occupied by any other nation, though not Christian. I apprehend the grant is good of all such part of the territory in question as was really unoccupied, and of which a sort of possession had been taken for His Majesty by the first English Adventurers. I believe that the title of all the owners of lands in the British plantations is desired, this grant similar to the present made either to inhabitants or to a company.

2. As I do not find, from the case, that the company have established any regulations to govern the possession or title of lands within their territories, I know not how otherwise to answer this query than by reference to the law of this country; and I am of opinion that they could not at this time receive any aid from the law of this country to dispossess those whose occupation has continued above 20 years without any disturbance from the company, their acquiescence in so long an adverse possession would afford a sufficient presumption of an actual grant from them of the portions of territory so occupied, together with all the necessary means of occupation and access which have been hitherto enjoyed.

3. Generally speaking, I apprehend the company have by their charter, and their territorial rights under it, a legal authority to restrain persons from the Acts stated in this query. But this authority, I think, must be qualified in particular instances by the sort of usage referred to in the answer to the preceding question.

4 and 5. I am of opinion that the usage of the right of passage for the space of 40 years, with the knowledge of the company, and without interruption by them, will establish the right for the King's subjects in Canada to use the passage in the same manner and for the same purposes as hitherto. I should here observe that in this opinion I support the question upon this right to arise before some tribunal in England, though I am not aware how this is possible, except by a feigned issue to try it.

6, 7, 8, 9 and 10. It appears to me that the civil and commercial jurisdiction granted to the company is valid, except in such instances where the powers seem to be more extensive than the King could by his prerogative exercise himself, or grant to a subject, some of them will be noticed. And I am rather inclined to think the company have authority, by the terms of their charter, to enact laws not only for the government of their own body, but of such persons as are resident within their jurisdiction, supposing those laws and regulations to be merely local and consistent with the laws of this country. I observe that, by a clause in the charter (page 15 of the copy left herewith) the company have authority to appoint Governors of forts, factories, etc., and other officers, and that the Governors so appointed, and their council, have each within the limits of his own jurisdiction, which the company of course must assign, power to judge all causes, civil or criminal according to the law of England. I apprehend, therefore, that the said company have no right to appoint judges in nounce, for that is incidental to the Sovereign dominion, which the King expressly reserves in the charter, and which I conceive he cannot part with by law, yet when they have appointed a Governor of a fort that the charter invests that Governor with a judicial power to administer the law of England; and I think the company may by the charter appoint such officers subordinate to the Governor, as may assist him in the executive part of his administration. The power of the officer corresponding to the sheriff, would be analogous to the power of that officer in England, and I apprehend that the subjects of the plantation would be bound by the same rules of civil obedience as prevail in England to support the officers of justice in the execution of legal process or judgments. But, though it appears to me that those powers are granted 10 by the charter, and that it was competent to the Crown to grant therein this form; yet, if they have not hitherto been exercised, if this part of the charter has not been acted upon, I should not think it expedient at this time, after the various changes which have taken place in the circumstances of the colony, and in the opinions of men since the time of Charles II., to put these powers into activity without some sanction from the Legislature. The jurisdiction which would have been submitted to at the first will now be resisted, and the whole machinery for the administration of justice must at the present day be so much more complicated and extensive than it would have been thought requisite to make it at the date of the charter or the commencement of the adventure, that it is likely to encounter more difficulty in its operation, and may possibly fail of its intended effect. 20

11. The particular case must occur before any answer can be given. There may be circumstances where, those acting under the orders of the Sheriff, in England, might be responsible in case of death. Generally speaking, however, the parties acting in the case supposed in this query strictly within the limits of a lawful authority from the Sheriff, would not be responsible for the death of a person resisting that authority. The present state of trade, as appears from this case, seems likely to give rise to disputes. The Judge, the Sheriff, and his posse comitatus will in a great measure be the parties to in the cause, and the resisting intruders are likely to give very early occasion for investigating whether the legal authority of the new functionaries and their subjects has been strictly pursued with all due form. The probability of some error, where there has been no previous habit of observing any forms and of a disposition to take advantage of error 30 wherever it can be found, leads me to apprehend that the Sheriff and those acting under his warrant might incur considerable risk in the event supposed.

12. I am of opinion that the company would not be justified in sending the supposed offender to England, and that he could not be there tried by any known law. The clause alluded to in this query seems to me not to be justified by the mere prerogative of the King, and I should think it very unsafe to act upon it without the sanction of the Legislature.

13. I am inclined to think that this Act does not give the jurisdiction here supposed.

14. I think not; the company having now no courts, the jurisdiction given by the Legislature, which might be necessary by reason of the company's omission, cannot be affected by any subsequent exercise of their powers under the charter. 40

15 and 16. The particular case must be stated before these queries can be answered. The partners of the North-West Company resident here may be answerable in an action upon the case for any infringement of the charter authorized by them individually and which has not power into a right by usage. The maliciously deterring the Indians from having prejudice of the company would be actionable and brought home to the parties in evidence.

17. It appears to me that the first mode above suggested of raising a further capital is quite unexceptionable. The present members of the company may undoubtedly increase the capital by a voluntary subscription among themselves, or they may admit any new member who chooses to subscribe. They have, by the charter, a general power of admitting whom they please, agreeably to the orders and regulations made by them at a general court.

They may therefore make an order to admit any person who subscribes a certain sum a member. The second mode proposed involves a question of the jurisdiction of the company over their own body, I doubt very much whether they could impose the penalty of forfeiture for not subscribing a further sum. There is an express instance of a cause of forfeiture stated in the charter, which is, where a party who has voluntarily subscribed, refuses afterwards to pay; and I therefore doubt whether the company could, by law or order of their own, create a new case of forfeiture. Much, however, may depend upon the actual regulations or by-laws under which the company now are governed, to which no allusion has been made in this case.

TEMPLE, January 22nd, 1813.

COPY QUERIES AND OPINION OF MR. JUSTICE HOLROYD, SIR SAMUEL ROMILLY, MR. CRUISE, Mr. SCARLETT, AND MR. BELL.

1. Whether any objection can be made to the grant of the soil contained in the charter, and whether the grant will include all the country the waters of which run into Hudson's Bay, as ascertained by geographical observations?—We are of opinion that the grant of the soil contained in the charter is good, and that it will include all the country the waters of which run into Hudson's Bay, as ascertained by geographical observation.

2. Whether as proprietors of the soil the company may exclude all other persons from residing thereon, and dispossess the Canadian traders of the posts already occupied by them and used for the purposes of trade with the native Indians?—We are of opinion the company may exclude all persons from residing on the lands granted to them, and not already settled there. But we are of opinion they cannot dispossess the Canadian traders of the posts already occupied by them where there has been 20 years' quiet possession, and by making use of their grant only for the purpose of exclusion, and not to encourage settlers they may possibly endanger the grant.

3. Though the company may not be entitled to prevent other persons from using the navigation of Hudson's Bay or of navigable rivers within their territories, are they entitled to prevent all persons from landing upon the shores of the bay or the banks of the rivers; and on those places where the navigation of a river is interrupted by falls, may the company prevent any person from passing over the land for the purpose of transporting himself and his merchandize to any other point where the river may again become navigable?—We are of opinion the company are not entitled to prevent other persons from using the navigation of Hudson's Bay and of the navigable rivers within their territories, or to prevent persons from landing upon the shores of the bay or banks of rivers, or from passing over their land where it is desert and uncultivated, and where the King's, whether native Indians or others, have been accustomed to pass for the purpose of transporting themselves and their merchandize where no roads or passage must be subject to the reasonable regulations of the company.

4. Whether the company, by virtue of their right of property, may prevent the Canadian traders from passing through their territories to arrive at Athabaska or other countries not included in the charter; or will the use which these traders have enjoyed for nearly 40 years, of travelling through the company's territories, entitle them to its continuance. You will observe that it is impossible for the Canadian traders to traverse the company's territories without cutting wood for firewood, using the water found in the course of their journey, and pitching their tents upon the company's lands; and, on this head, you will further please to say whether these are rights which the Canadian traders can acquire by any and what length of possession?—It follows from what we have said in answer to the last query that, we think the Canadian traders are entitled to this right of passage, and we think that as incident to it they must have such right of pitching tents, using water and cutting firewood as necessity requires.

5. Supposing the company entitled to dispossess the Canadian traders and to maintain an exclusive right of trade within the territories, what steps do you advise as the best to be pursued for making the right effectual?—We are of opinion the company cannot maintain a right to an exclusive trade.

6. Does it appear to you that the civil and criminal jurisdiction granted to the company is valid?—We are of opinion that the grant to the civil and criminal jurisdiction is valid, but it is not granted to the company, but to the Governor and Council at their respective establishments; but we cannot recommend it to be exercised so as to affect the lives or limbs of criminals.

7. If valid, how is it to be exercised? May the company erect courts of justice, or authorize any person or persons to administer the laws of England as they might be administered in England?—It is to be exercised by the Governor and Council as judges, who are to proceed according to the laws of England.

8. May the company appoint a sheriff to execute the judgments of their court, and to do the duty of a sheriff as performed in England?—The company may appoint a sheriff to execute judgments and to do his duty, as in England.

9. May such sheriff, in case of resistance to his authority, call out the population to his assistance, and may the company put arms into the hands of their servants and those who live under them, as well for their defence against attack as to assist in enforcing the judgments of their courts?—We are of opinion that the sheriff, in case of resistance to his authority, may call out the population to his assistance, and may put arms into the hands of their servants for defence against attack, and to assist in enforcing the judgments of the court, but such powers cannot be exercised with too much circumspection.

10. Supposing the company to hold courts of justice, who will be subject to their jurisdiction: Will it be only their own servants and persons residing within their territories by their permission and direct authority, or will the words of the charter, viz.: "those who live under them," include the Canadian traders who have established themselves intrusively on the lands of the company, and who dispute their rights?—We are of opinion that all persons will be subject to the jurisdiction of the courts, who reside or are found within the territories over which they extend, including the Canadian traders.

11. Supposing these traders to resist the sheriff in the execution of his warrant, and death should ensue, would the servants of the company or others acting in support of the warrant, be responsible for the consequences; and, in like manner, would the servants of the company be responsible for the consequences of a forcible resistance against an attempt of the Canadian traders to trespass on the company's territories?—We think the sheriff and those assisting him, acting in support of a warrant made out by due authority and in proper form, would be equally protected from the consequences of the execution of the warrant with persons executing a similar warrant in England.

We also think the servants of the company may resist with force, not directly tending to loss of life or limb, any illegal attempt of persons to trespass on the company's property, and if an attack is made on a man's house, he may defend it, even to the destruction of life, if he cannot otherwise defend the possession of it. But such powers cannot be executed with too great moderation. Though the general law may be such as is above laid down, it is impossible, in our opinion, to give those directions which are necessary for its safe application in each particular case, independently of the difficulty which may arise from want of evidence or imperfect evidence of what happens in so distant a quarter, and from the circumstances that the company's servants, the judges, sheriff and posse comitatus, in disputes with Canadian traders, will be, in some measure, parties interested, and their conduct may thereof be more strictly invested. Nothing should be done to endanger either life or limb, unless in cases of most extreme necessity.

12. Supposing that, in the course of such resistance or trespass on the part of the Canadian traders, any of them should be guilty of crime or misdemeanor, would the company be justified, in terms of a clause in their charter above cited, in transmitting the party or parties to England, and could the case be there brought to trial, so as to subject the offenders to the punishment prescribed by law for the same offence in England?—Parties can only be sent to England for murder. For other offences they must be tried by the courts of the territory. 20

13. Seeing the territories within which criminal jurisdiction is given by the 43 Geo. III., c. 138, to the Courts of Upper and Lower Canada, are "The Indian Territories, or parts of America, not within the limits of either the said Provinces," can this Act be stated to give to these courts jurisdiction within the territories of the Hudson's Bay Company?—We do not think this Act gives jurisdiction within the territories of the Hudson's Bay Company, the same being within the jurisdiction of their own Governor and Council.

14. If the company were to erect courts for the punishment of crime, or if they were to send home offenders to England to be tried, would the criminal jurisdiction given to the Courts of Lower and Upper Canada by the 43 Geo. III., c. 138 (supposing it to extend to their territories), be thereby superseded?—If the Act gives the Courts of Upper and Lower Canada jurisdiction, 30 that would not be superseded in the manner here suggested.

15. There are partners of the North-West Company resident in London, who concur in sending persons from Canada into the company's territory for the purposes of trade. Does it appear to you that the company can bring and maintain a special action of damages on the case in England against such persons of the North-Western Company resident in London?—We are of opinion the grant to the company of an exclusive trade is not valid, and we conceive that no action will be against any one moiety for trading, though the trade of the company should thereby be rendered less profitable.

16. What would be the effect in such an action if it could be established that the traders employed by the North-Western Company, not content with a fair participation in the trade, are in the practice of maltreating the native Indians, to deter them from dealing with the Hudson's Bay Company, and likewise of using violence and threats to intimidate the servants of the Hudson's Bay Company from prosecuting their trades? If it could be shewn that any parties made use of improper means to injure the company in their trade, an action on the case might be maintained against those persons, or any by whose direction such acts are done to the injury of the company. 40

17. Nothing is said in the charter in regard to the amount of the capital of the company or the manner of raising it; but in the year 1700 the original stock of the company, subscribed at the date of its charter, was trebled out of the profits by adding the amount of the latter to the former without dividing them. In the year 1720 it was again trebled and a further subscription was opened, but it does not appear that subscriptions were received from any persons excepting proprietors of stock, who were allowed to subscribe in proportion to their stock.

It is now proposed to raise a further capital, for which purpose two modes have been suggested:—

First. To offer each proprietor, who may be inclined to subscribe, permission so to do on a given proportion to his existing stock, subject to the condition of his declaring his acceptance of this offer within a limited time, and in case of his failure or refusal to accept such offer, then his share of the new stock to be offered to the other stockholders, and in case of their failure or refusal to accept then such share of the new stock to be offered to public sale to the highest bidder.

Second. It has been proposed to make a call on the present stockholders pro rata of their stock, with a declaration that if they do not satisfy the call their stock will be forfeited.

You are requested to say whether either mode is within the power given to the company by their charter?

The first of these modes seems the most proper mode of proceeding. The charter does not appear to warrant the second mode proposed.

QUERIES.

Whether the Hudson's Bay Company, or their officers or servants, or any of the settlers before mentioned, are entitled to any and what redress against the North-West Company, or any of their servants, or persons acting under their authority or against any other persons, for any of the numerous acts of robbery, imprisonment and aggression committed on them as stated in the several instances set forth in this case and in the documents therein referred to; as well in respect of the acts committed within the limits of the Hudson's Bay Company's charter, as those committed in the County of Athabaska and other parts of the Indian territory not within the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company?

And whether the Hudson's Bay Company can adopt any and what course of proceedings by which the validity of their charter, and of the rights claimed by them under the same, may be put in a train for judicial decision, either by a petition to the Prince Regent in Council, or a petition to Parliament, or by any and what other proceedings, either before any of the Departments of Government or in any of the Courts of Law or equity, in order that the disputes which have taken place and still continue between the Hudson's Bay Company and the North-West Company may be discussed, and the rights of the parties satisfactorily ascertained and established by some competent tribunal, and to advise the Hudson's Bay Company generally as to their rights, and the measures it will be most advisable for them to adopt under the particular circumstances before mentioned.

OPINION.

I. I am of opinion that all crimes and offences committed either within the limits of the Hudson's Bay Charter, or in the County of Athabaska, and other parts of the Indian Territory, 10 may be prosecuted under the Canada Jurisdiction Act (Stat. 43, Geo. III, c. 138), in the Courts of the Province of Lower Canada, or in those of Upper Canada, if so directed by the Governor of the former Province. Crimes and offences committed within the Hudson's Bay Territory, might, I apprehend, be prosecuted before the Governor and Council of Rupert's Land, if such Governor was appointed by the Hudson's Bay Company, and allowed by the Prince Regent, for the jurisdiction which is given to the Governor and Council by the charter, would, I conceive, be perfectly valid, although it appears to me that the Statute of the 43rd of the King gives a concurrent jurisdiction in such cases to the Courts of Canada, with respect to murders and manslaughters, in particular if committed in any part of the Indian Territory not within His Majesty's dominions, nor subject to any European State, nor within the territory of the United States of America. It seems, that 20 these, if perpetrated by any person that may have sailed in any British vessel, fall under the Revision of Stat. 47 Geo. III, c. 58, and may therefore be tried in any of His Majesty's colonies under the King's commission, issued for such a purpose. Murders committed in any of the places before specified, whether within or without the King's dominions, may be tried in England according to the provisions of Stat. 33, Henry VIII, c. 23, but other crimes and offences committed in those places could not easily be tried in England. If any partners of the North-West Company or others, could be proved to have conspired in England to bring about crimes or offences in Rupert's Land, the Indian Territory, or the Canadas, I apprehend that such conspirators may be proceeded against in this country. On the whole of this part of the case, however, I desire to be understood as speaking with great diffidence, since it does not relate to those branches of the law 30 to which my professional practice is confined.

For civil injuries done out of the limits of the two Canadas, I apprehend the courts of these Provinces can afford no address, but some of the civil injuries done to the Hudson Bay Company and their servants appear to have been consummated within those limits, and may consequently become the subject of civil actions there.

From the criminal proceedings of the British Courts of North America, there is no appeal to this country, but in regard to civil actions the case is somewhat different. From the courts of civil jurisdiction in Upper Canada, an appeal lies only where the question is matter of law, as in the case of Gray v. Welcoks, which was carried by writ of error from a decision of the King's Bench of Upper Canada in 1807, to the Governor and Council, and from thence to the King in 40 Council.

In Lower Canada the courts appear to proceed, in most cases, according to the old French laws, upon written evidence, and where that is the case an appeal seems to lie from the judgments, both on matter of law and fact, to the King in Council, as in the case of Sheppard v. Maclure, which was merely an appeal from the judgment of the Court of King's Bench of Lower Canada in 1812, first to the Governor and Council, and then to the King in Council.

2nd. The validity of the Hudson's Bay charter having been so frequently recognized by the most solemn Acts of State, the objections made against it would seem scarcely deserving of any serious notice if it were not that they are in some degree supported by the opinions of the learned gentlemen who appear to have been consulted by the North-West Company. It is not necessary to the general validity of a charter that every particular clause in it should be valid, and it will hardly be contended that in the Hudson's Bay charter there are not some things granted which it was fully in the power of the Crown to grant. As to nonuse or misuse of a charter these do not annul it ipso facto, whatever weight they may have if proved in a proceeding by scire facias or quo warranto. Therefore, it must be taken that unless some Legislature or Judicial Act has declared the charter void, it stands good in its generality, notwithstanding any specific invalidity 10 as to its provisions. Doubts, for instance, may exist as to the grant of exclusive trade, but these it is not material at present to consider, more especially as it is stated that no attempt has been made to prevent the Canadian traders from resorting to the same places as the servants of the Hudson's Bay. A more important question is that of the territorial limits.

I am clearly of opinion that the grant of lands is not void for uncertainty. A mode of construing it has indeed been suggested in the opinion of the learned gentlemen, before alluded to from which I must, with all deference to them, beg leave to dissent. They argue that the words "within the strait," imply such a proximity to the straits as would give the lands spoken of a sort of affinity or relations to Hudson's Straits; but I think that if these last quoted words had been actually inserted in the charter they would only have introduced an uncertainty which does not 20 now appear to me to exist, for every river which discharges its waters into the sea, in Hudson's Bay, is a river within the entrance of Hudson's Straits, and all lands from the mouth of such river to its sources are lands which lie upon the river, and the limit of the lands so granted is a precise and definite limit, namely, the height of land from which the river flows, and, as the grant gives all the lands upon all such rivers, it follows that all the lands between all such heights and the bay are within the limits of the charter; and it is not necessary that all those heights should have been specifically known either to the grantor or grantee, for they both knew that such heights must exist, and that they were capable of ascertainment et id certum est quod certum riddi potest. Indeed, this was a mode of fixing the limits of new colonies very frequently adopted by foreign Sovereigns as well as our own, and it is particularly observable in the case of Canada, a province 30 directly bordering on the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company. (See the commission of M. Champlain, Lieutenant-Governor of the French Province of Canada in 1625, the expressions of Davity the Topographist 1643, His Britannic Majesty's Proclamation, 7th October, 1763, Stat. 14 Geo. III., c. 83, etc.) Geographers, it is true, have differed in opinion as to the precise heights from which the waters flowed into Hudson's Bay, but they have uniformly considered some ridge of high lands real or imaginary to be the boundary of the company's territory.

The objection that is founded on the large extent of the grant appears to me to be of little weight. The word lands is coupled with territories and countries, and that the whole were meant to be very comprehensive and reach far inland, appears from the grants of fishing and miners, and from the power to erect and build castles, fortifications, forts, garrisons, colonies or plantations, 40 towns and villages in any parts or places within the limits and bounds granted; as well as from the original objects of the undertaking, viz., to discover a passage into the South Sea and to find some trade for fur, minerals and other considerable commodities, and lastly, from the high rank of the original grantees, particularly of Prince Rupert, who was Count Palatine of the Rhine, Duke of Bavaria, Cumberland, etc.

Similar grants at various periods of history have embraced very extensive tracts of land. The Caroline charter (1663) granted all the lands from Tucker Island on the east "to the westward as far as the South Seas." The Legislature distinctly recognized a still larger grant in case of the South Sea Company, who, by Statute 9, Ann. c. 21, were made sole owners of all the places they should discover on the east side of America, from the River Oronoco to the southernmost part of the Terra del Fuego, and from that point westward to the northernmost part of America. So the first Massachusetts charter (18 Ja., c. 1) extended throughout all the mainland from "sea to sea," and the objects of these charters, as stated in that of Pennsylvania, were "to enlarge the English empire, and promote such useful commodities as might be of benefit to the King and his dominions, as also to reduce the savage nations by gentle and just manners to the love of civil society and christian religion.

If any authoritative decision could be obtained settling the territorial limits of Rupert's Land on the principles by which it appears to me that they should be regulated, I think the subordinate questions, such as those of jurisdiction, etc., would afford comparatively little trouble. I am therefore of opinion that the company should use every exertion to obtain a settlement of those limits by competent authorities, judicial or legislative. The only original jurisdiction for that purpose appears to be in the Prince Regent in Council, I am not aware that the Board of Trade has any such jurisdiction, although it was formerly much in the habit of having similar questions referred to it by the King in Council, or by the Committee of Council, for plantation affairs, and of reporting on them accordingly, which report was usually adopted as a ground of decision by the King in Council. The Court of Chancery has no original jurisdiction of boundaries, but may consider them incidentally where the jurisdiction is otherwise founded, as in the case of Penn v. Lord Baltimore (1 Ves. 444), which was a bill for a specific performance of articles between the plaintiff and defendant to settle the boundaries of two contiguous proprietary Governments. It might perhaps deserve consideration whether the Hudson's Bay Company could offer any sufficient inducement to the individual partners of the North-West Company (including those who are in England) to enter into articles recognizing the boundaries of Rupert's Land, and binding themselves to do or cause to be done by persons under their influence or control, certain acts in recognition of the rights of the Company. Perhaps such articles might not only be enforced in Chancery, but if secured by a penalty might be brought under the consideration of the Courts of Common Law. On the latter point, however, I speak with much hesitation, as I do when I say it appear to me that the action for slander of title, above suggested, could not be successfully maintained.

I am, however, of opinion that the Hudson's Bay Company should present a petition to the Prince Regent in Council, praying for a settlement of boundaries and for such other relief as to wisdom of His Royal Highness in Council might seem meet. In support of such petition affidavits should be prepared setting forth the injuries already sustained by the company, and also describing the limits which the company consider to be those of the plantation or colony of Rupert's Land, with reference to the unfortunate occurrences which have taken place at the Red River. I think it material to prove that the waters of that river fall into the sea within the entrance of Hudson's Straits, and adverting to the maps which I have seen, I conceive that for the satisfactory determination of this point, it would be necessary to shew that the Saskatchewan River flows into, and the Nelson River out of Lake Winipee; for the real and only question, as far as I have been able to consider the subject, is whether the heights of land in which the Severn and Hill Rivers have their sources, or that more southerly range in which the Red and Winipee rise, are the proper boundaries of Rupert's Land. To the Company, however, it would be of incalculable advantage to obtain a decision of the Prince Regent in Council recognizing either, but more especially the latter, and in case a doubt should remain, after considering the evidence, it might be advisable to petition the Council to appoint Commissioners to make a survey and report, in consequence of which a dividing line might be run between Rupert's Land and the adjoining territories; such was the course adopted in the case of Lord Fairfax against the Governor and Council of Lord Virginia before the King in Council, 1745, when the Committee of Council for plantation affairs, after hearing counsel for several days, reported in favour of a survey made by certain Commissioners who had been named some years before by an Order in Council on his Lordship's petition.

It might be made part of the company's prayer that, during the pendency of proceedings, instructions should be issued to His Majesty's Governor of Upper and Lower Canada to afford protection to the servants, grantees, etc., under the Hudson's Bay Company against any forcible dispossession or other violence. A petition to this effect was presented to the King in Council in 1743 by the Governor and Council of Rhode Island in their dispute respecting boundaries with Massachusetts's Bay. I am not aware that the hearing or determining on a petition to the Prince Regent in Council is a matter that can be demanded as to the right by the Hudson's Bay Company, but I rather conceive that these are matters of grace and favour, the granting or withholding which are in the discretion of His Royal Highness as he may be advised by his Council. I apprehend, however, that if a strong case be made out and in evidence tendered thereon to the Council, without obtaining any hearing or decision from the High Tribunal, within a reasonable time, it will then be proper on the part of the Hudson's Bay Company to implore the interference of the Legislature.

DOCTORS' COMMONS, 29th November, 1819.

Extract from His Majesty's instructions to His Excellency, Lord Dorchester, dated at St. James', the 16th September, 1791, viz. :—

SUPPLEMENTAL APPENDIX.

APPENDIX OF MANITOBA.

Sec. I.

Account of
Forts, 1760-1.

It was on the twenty-ninth of November, 1760, that Detroit fell into the hands of the English. The garrison were sent as prisoners down the lake, but the Canadian inhabitants were allowed to retain their farms and houses, on condition of swearing allegiance to the British Crown. An officer was sent southward to take possession of the forts Maimi and Ouatanon, which guarded the communication between Lake Erie and the Ohio; while Rogers himself, with a small party, proceeded northwards to relieve the French garrison of Michillimackinac. The storms and gathering ice of Lake Huron forced him back without accomplishing his object; and Michillimackinac, with the three remoter posts of St. Marie, Green Bay and St. Joseph, remained for a time in the hands of the French. During the next season, however, a detachment of the 60th regiment, then called the Royal Americans, took possession of them; and nothing now remained within the power of the French, except the few posts and settlements on the Mississippi and the Wabash, not included in the capitulation of Montreal. 10

The work of conquest was finished. The fertile wilderness beyond the Alleghanies, over which France had claimed sovereignty,—that boundless forest, with its tracery of interlacing streams, which, like veins and arteries, gave it life and nourishment,—had passed into the hands of her rival. It was by a few insignificant forts, separated by oceans of fresh water and uncounted leagues of forest, that the two great European powers, France first, and now England, endeavoured to enforce their claims to this vast domain. There is something ludicrous in the disparity between the importance of the possessions and the slenderness of the force employed to maintain it. A region embracing so many thousand miles of surface was consigned to the keeping of some five or six hundred men. Yet the force, small as it was, appeared adequate to its object, for there seemed no enemy to contend with. The hands of the French were tied by the capitulation, and little apprehension was felt from the red inhabitants of the woods. The lapse of two years sufficed to show how complete and fatal was the mistake. * 20

DESCRIPTION OF FRANQUELIN'S MAP, 1684.

"Carte de la Louisiane ou des Voyages du Sr de la Salle et des pays qu'il a découverts depuis la Nouvelle France jusqu'au Golfe Mexique les années 1679, 80, 81, et 82, par Jean Baptiste Louis Franquelin. Van 1684, Paris." Franquelin was a young engineer, who held the post of hydrographer to the king, at Quebec, in which Joliet succeeded him. Several of his maps are preserved, including one made in 1681, in which he lays down the course of the Mississippi,—the lower part from conjecture,—making it discharge itself into Mobile Bay. It appears from a letter of the Governor, La Barre, that Franquelin was at Quebec in 1683, engaged on a map which was probably that of which the title is given above, though, had La Barre known that it was to be called a map of the journeys of his victim La Salle, he would have been more sparing of his praises. "He" (Franquelin), writes the governor, "is as skilful as any in France, 30 but extremely poor and in need of a little aid from his Majesty as an Engineer: he is at work on a very correct map of the country, which I shall send you next year in his name; meanwhile, I shall support him with some little assistance."—Colonial Documents of New York, IX. 205.

The map is very elaborately executed, and is six feet long and four and a half wide. It exhibits the political divisions of the continent, as the French then understood them; that is to say, all the regions drained by streams flowing into the St. Lawrence and the Mississippi are claimed as belonging to France, and this vast domain is separated into two grand divisions, La Nouvelle France and La Louisiane. The boundary line of the former, New France, is drawn from the Prenobscot to the southern extremity of Lake Champlain, and thence to the Mohawk, which it crosses a little above Schenectady, in order to make 10 French subjects of the Mohawk Indians. Thence it passes by the sources of the Susquehanna and the Alleghany, along the southern shore of Lake Erie, across Southern Michigan, and by the head of Lake Michigan, whence it sweeps north-westward to the sources of the Mississippi. Louisiana includes the entire valley of the Mississippi and the Ohio, besides the whole of Texas. The Spanish province of Florida comprises the peninsula and the country east of the Bay of Mobile, drained by streams flowing into the Gulf; while Carolina, Virginia, and the other English provinces, form a narrow strip between the Alleghanies and the Atlantic.

The Mississippi is called "Missisipi, ou Rivière Colbert;" the Missouri, "Grande Rivière des Emis-sourittes, ou Missourits;" the Illinois, "Rivière des Illinois, ou Macopins;" the Ohio, which La Salle had before called by its present name, "Fleuve St. Louis, ou Chueagoa, ou Casquiampogamon;" one of 20 principal branches is "Ohio, ou Olighin" (Alleghany); the Arkansas, "Rivière des Acausea; the Red River, "Rivière Seignelay," a name which had once been given to the Illinois. Many smaller streams are designated by names which have been entirely forgotten.

The nomenclature differs materially from that of Coronelli's map, published four years later. Here the whole of the French territory is laid down as "Canada, ou La Nouvelle France," of which "La Louisiane" forms an integral part. The map of Homannus, like that of Franquelin, makes two distinct provinces, of which one is styled "Canada" and the other "La Louisiane," the latter including Michigan and the greater part of New York. Franquelin gives the shape of Hudson's Bay, and of all the Great Lakes, with remarkable accuracy. He makes the Mississippi bend much too far to the West. The peculiar sinuosities of its course are indicated; and some of its bends, as, for example, that at New 30 Orleans, are easily recognized. Its mouths are represented with great minuteness; and it may be inferred from the map that, since La Salle's time, they have advanced considerably into the sea.

Perhaps the most interesting feature in Franquelin's map is his sketch of La Salle's evanescent colony on the Illinois, engraved for this volume. He reproduced the map in 1688, for presentation to the king, with the title Carte de l'Amerique Septentrionale, depuis le 25 jusqu'au 65 degré de latitude et environ 140 et 235 degrés de longitude, etc. In this map, Franquelin corrects various errors in that which preceded. One of these corrections consists in the removal of a branch of the river Illinois which he had marked on his first map,—as will be seen by referring to the portion of it in this book,—but which does not in fact exist. On this second map, La Salle's colony appears in much diminished proportions, his Indian settlements having in good measure dispersed.

40 Two later maps of New France and Louisiana, both bearing Franquelin's name, are preserved in the Dépôt des Cartes de la Marine, as well as a number of smaller maps and sketches, also by him. They all have more or less of the features of the great map of 1684, which surpasses them all in interest and completeness.*

6. And whereas the said Commissioners have proceeded to negotiate a treaty with the said Indians, and the same has been finally agreed upon and concluded as follows, that is to say :

The Saulteaux tribe of the Ojibbeway Indians, and all other the Indians inhabiting the district hereinafter described and defined, do hereby cede, release, surrender, and yield up to the Government of the Dominion of Canada, for Her Majesty the Queen and her successors forever, all their rights, titles, and privileges whatsoever to the lands included within the following limits, that is to say :

Commencing at a point on the Pigeon River route where the international boundary line between the territories of Great Britain and the United States intersects the height of land separating the waters running to Lake Superior from those flowing to Lake Winnipeg, thence northerly, westerly and easterly, along the height of land aforesaid, following its sinuosities, whatever their course may be, to the point at which the said height of land meets the summit of the water-shed from which the streams flow to Lake Nipigon, thence northerly and westerly, or whatever may be its course, along the ridge separating the waters of the Nipigon and the Winnipeg to the height of land dividing the waters of the Albany and the Winnipeg; thence westerly and north-westerly along the height of land dividing the waters flowing to Hudson's Bay by the Albany or other rivers from those running to English River and the Winnipeg to a point on the said height of land bearing north forty-five degrees east from Fort Alexander at the mouth of the Winnipeg; thence south forty-five degrees west to Fort Alexander at the mouth of the Winnipeg; thence southerly along the eastern bank of the Winnipeg to the mouth of White Mouth River; thence southerly by the line described as in that part forming the eastern boundary of the tract surrendered by the Chippewa and Swampy Cree tribes of Indians to Her Majesty on the third of August, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, namely, by White Mouth River to White Mouth Lake and thence on a line having the general bearing of White Mouth River to the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude; thence by the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude to the Lake of the Woods, and from thence by the international boundary line to the place of beginning.

The tract comprised within the lines above described embracing an area of fifty-five thousand square miles, be the same more or less.

To have and to hold the same to Her Majesty the Queen and her successors forever.

ON THE ACQUISITION OF TERRITORY BY OCCUPATION.

"When a nation takes possession of a country to which no prior owner can lay claim, it is considered as acquiring the empire or sovereignty over it, at the same time with the domain. For, since the nation is free and independent, it can have no intention, in settling in a country, to leave to others the rights of command, or any of those rights that constitute sovereignty? The whole space over which a nation extends its government, becomes the seat of its jurisdiction, and is called its territory." (Vattel, b. i. § 205.)

Vattel (b. i. l. xviii. § 207) discusses this title at large:—

"All mankind have an equal right to things that have not yet fallen into the possession of any one, and those things belong to the person who first takes possession of them. When therefore a nation finds a country uninhabited, and without an owner, it may lawfully take possession of it, and after it has sufficiently made known its will in this respect, it cannot be deprived of it by another nation. Thus navigators going on voyages of discovery, furnished with a commission from their sovereign, and meeting with islands or other lands in a desert state, have taken possession of them in the name of the nation; and this title has been usually respected, provided it was soon after followed by a real possession."

According to this statement, the act of discovery must be sanctioned by a commission from the sovereign, and the will of the nation to take possession must be by its agent sufficiently made known. What acts should be respected by the courtesy of nations, and be held sufficient to make known formally the will of a nation to avail itself of a discovery, has been a subject of much dispute.

The framers, however, of the second article of the Treaty of 1793, were ignorant of the true position of the sources of the Mississippi. It was in consequence stipulated by the fourth article of the subsequent Treaty of 1794, that a "joint survey of the river from one degree below the falls of St. Anthony, to the principal source or sources of the said river, and of the parts adjacent thereto," should be made; and if, on the result of the survey, it should appear that the river could not be intersected by the above-mentioned line, the parties were to regulate the boundary line by amicable negotiation, according to justice and mutual convenience, and in conformity to the intent of the Treaty of 1793.

It is to this treaty that President Jefferson alludes in his letter of August, 1803, referred to by Mr. Pakenham, in his letter of September 12, 1844:—"The boundaries (of Louisiana), which I deem not admitting question, are the high lands on the western side of the Mississippi, enclosing all its waters (the Missouri of course) and terminating in the line drawn from the north-west point of the Lake of the Woods to the nearest source of the Mississippi, as lately settled between Great Britain and the United States."

Mr. Greenhow (p. 281.), in alluding to the negotiations antecedent to this convention, states that Mr. Monroe, on the part of the United States, proposed to Lord Harrowby the 49th parallel of latitude, upon the grounds that this parallel had been adopted and definitely settled, by commissaries appointed agreeably to the tenth article of the treaty concluded at Utrecht in 1713, as the dividing line between the French possessions of Western Canada and Louisiana on the south, and the British territories of Hudson's Bay on the north; and that this treaty, having been specially confirmed in the Treaty of 1763, by which Canada and the part of Louisiana east of the Mississippi and Iberville were ceded to Great Britain, the remainder of Louisiana continued as before, bounded on the north by the 49th parallel. The same fact was alleged by the commissioners of the United States, in their negotiations with Spain in 1805, respecting the western boundary of Louisiana. APPENDIX OF MISSOURI.
Sec. I.Twiss, O. Q.,
Cap. xii., p. 219
p. 220.

* Louisiana, it will be thus seen, according to this authoritative document of the French crown, was the country watered by the Mississippi, and its tributary streams from the sea-shore to the Illinois: such was the limitation affixed to the province by the French themselves; and, by the same public instrument, all the rest of the French possessions were united under the government of New France. It is true that the Illinois were subsequently annexed to Louisiana by a royal decree in 1717, after Crozat had relinquished his charter, and the whole region was granted to Law's Mississippi Company; but the Illinois were still spoken of as the Illinois, and the district was not merged in Louisiana, though it was annexed to that province, to give the company access to Canada, in which the monopoly of the beaver-trade had been granted to them. It has been already observed, that the limits of the Hudson's Bay territories and French Canada were settled by the peace of Utrecht, in 1713: one great object of that treaty was to provide against the commercial disputes of the subjects of the two crowns, which had led to a series of conflicts on the shores of Hudson's Bay; it was in furtherance of this object that the fur-trade of Canada was now diverted from the St. Lawrence to the Mississippi, by this grant of the monopoly of the beaver-trade to the Compagnie d'Occident, and the annexation of the Illinois country to Louisiana.

Cap. xii., p. 221

The treaty of Paris, however, has not furnished the only occasion upon which intricate discussions have arisen respecting the limits of Louisiana. By a secret treaty with Spain, made in 1762, but not signed till 1764, France ceded to her all the country known under the name of Louisiana. This transfer, however, was not promulgated till 1765, two years after the Treaty of Paris had been signed by France, Spain, and Great Britain; nor did the Spaniards obtain possession of the country till 1769.

Twiss, O. Q.,
Cap. xvi.,
p. 307-8.

Mr. Gallatin says, in alluding to royal charters:—"In point of fact, the whole country drained by the several rivers emptying into the Atlantic Ocean, the mouths of which were within those charters, lies from Hudson's Bay to Florida, and it is believed without exception, been occupied and held by virtue of those charters. Not only has this principle been fully confirmed, but it has been notoriously enforced, much beyond the sources of the rivers on which the settlements were formed. The priority of the French settlements on the rivers flowing westwardly from the Alleghany Mountains into the Mississippi, was altogether disregarded; and the rights of the Atlantic colonies to extend beyond those mountains, as growing out of the contiguity of territory, and as asserted in the earliest charters, was effectually and successfully enforced." In reply to these remarks it may be observed, that the limits of the Hudson's Bay territory were settled by the Treaty of Utrecht, in 1713, those of the Atlantic colonies by the Treaty of Paris, 1763, and in the preliminary negotiation no allusion is anywhere made to rights founded on charters, or to rights of contiguity. On the contrary, in regard to the Hudson's Bay territories, the peaceable acquiescence of the Marquis de Frontenac, then Governor of Canada, in the settlement of the Bay of Hudson by the English company, was maintained to be a bar to any claims on the part of the French to question, at a subsequent period, the title which the British crown asserted on the grounds of discovery.

p. 309.

The cession by France of all that she possessed, or was entitled to possess, on the left bank of the River Mississippi, would convey to Great Britain all her title to the Illinois and other districts north of the Illinois country, if she possessed any; but she could only possess any title to them as forming part of the dependencies of Canada or New France. Out of these, indeed, the province of Louisiana had been carved by the grant to Crozat in 1712, and from these the Illinois territory had been detached in 1717, by the charter of Law's Mississippi Company; the remainder, such as it was, had retained its original character of New France or Canada unchanged, as well as its original limits, such as they had been determined to be, either by special commissioners, in pursuance of the provisions of the Treaty of Utrecht, or by an understanding between the crowns of France and Great Britain. If therefore the French had any possessions in America, north of the sources of the Mississippi, as Louisiana did not extend further north than those sources, they must have been part of the original province of Canada, and have been ceded to Great Britain with Canada and all her dependencies. The western boundary of Louisiana was never attempted to be extended by the French beyond the limits of Crozat's grant, by which Louisiana was expressly defined to be bounded by New Mexico on the west, and impliedly by the head-waters of the Missouri river.

"The actual possession," Mr. Gallatin maintained, "and populous settlements of the valley of the Mississippi, including Louisiana, and now under one sovereignty, constitute a strong claim to the westwardly extension of that province over the contiguous vacant territory, and to the occupation and sovereignty of the country as far as the Pacific Ocean. If some trading factories on the shores of Hudson's Bay have been considered by Great Britain as giving an exclusive right of occupancy as far as the Rocky Mountains; if the infant settlements on the more southern Atlantic shores justified a claim thence to the South Seas, and which was actually enforced to the Mississippi, that of the millions already within the reach of those seas cannot consistently be resisted. For it will not be denied that the extent of contiguous territory, to which an actual settlement gives a prior right, must depend, in a considerable degree, on the magnitude and population of that settlement, and on the facility with which the vacant adjoining land may, within a short time, be occupied, settled, and cultivated by such population, as compared with the probability of its being thus occupied and settled from another quarter"

In reference, then, to the original title of the United States, Mr. Calhoun, in his letter of September 3, 1884, grounded it on the prior discovery of the mouth of the Columbia River by Captain Gray, on the prior exploration of the river from its head-waters by Lewis and Clarke in 1805-6, on the prior settlement on its banks by American citizens in 1809-10, and by the Pacific Fur Company at Astoria in 1811, which latter establishment was formerly restored by the British Government in 1818 to the Government of the United States. Mr. Buchanan, in his letter of July 12, 1845, having briefly recapitulated these alleged facts, says:—"If the discovery of the mouth of a river, followed up within a reasonable time by the first exploration of its main channel and its branches, and appropriated by the first settlements on its banks, do not constitute a title to the territory drained by its waters in the nation performing these acts, then the principles consecrated by the practice of civilised nations ever since the discovery of the New World must have lost their force. Those principles were necessary to procure the peace of the world. Had they not been enforced in practice, clashing claims to newly-discovered territory, and perpetual strife among the nations, would have been the inevitable result."

Cap. xvii.,
p. 328.

30

The Commissaries on both sides were appointed, and they met, but whether they agreed on such a boundary and the position thereof, or did not, is disputed. Phillimore, in his great work on International Law (Vol. I, p. 341, 3rd Ed.) says,—

Phill. Int. Law

"In conformity with the 10th Article of the first-mentioned Treaty (Utrecht), the boundary between Canada and Louisiana, on the one side, and the Hudson's Bay and North-western Companies, on the other, was established by Commissaries by a line to commence at a Cape or Promontory on the Ocean in 58° 30' north latitude, to run thence South-westwardly to latitude 49° north from the Equator, and along that line definitely westward."

Evidence given before Committee of House of Commons, Canada, March, 1880. Evidence of Hon. Donald A. Smith, M.P.

Hon. DONALD A. SMITH, M.P., called and Examined.

By the Chairman :

179. I suppose that previous to the time of the Treaty of Utrecht, the Hudson's Bay Company's possession was rather uncertain?—It had been disputed.

180. But subsequent to that Treaty, in the neighbourhood of Hudson's Bay it was undisputed?—The Hudson's Bay Company always held it to be so.

181. Since the Treaty of Utrecht there has been no dispute as to the possession on the confines of the Bay?—Not that I am aware of; never.

182. The possession of the Hudson's Bay Company originated under a charter?—This is the charter of the Company granted by King Charles II.

183. In 1670?—Yes.

By Mr. Robinson :

184. In what year was the Treaty of Utrecht?—In 1714.

By the Chairman :

185. What territory do you consider the Charter held by the company extended over and embraced?—All the lands of North America, the waters of which empty themselves into Hudson's Bay and Hudson's Straits, bounded by what is usually known as the height of land.

186. Then, you consider the height of land or St. Lawrence watershed to be the southern boundary of the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company?—The Hudson's Bay Company have always held it to be so. I might say that the opinions they have had from learned counsel confirm them in that view.

By Mr. Trow :

187. The Hudson's Bay Company did not confine themselves to those particular limits which you now describe?—They did not, because they held a license to trade in the territory beyond that as well, in what is known as the Indian country, outside of Rupert's Land, as well as in their territory proper, which is all that country, the waters of which empty themselves into Hudson Bay's and Hudson's Straits. They had a special license from the Imperial Government.

By the Chairman :

188. Might it not be well to submit that Special Licence; I think it is dated 1821; it was granted when the Hudson's Bay and North-West Companies ceased.

189. You spoke about the opinions of counsel; I presume they were English counsel learned in the law. You have, I suppose, some of those opinions?—Yes, Lord Mansfield, Mr. Scarlett, Lord Abinger, Lord Romilly, and other most eminent counsel were consulted by the Hudson's Bay Company. I think the names of some of them are given here (page 327, House of Commons Report, 1857.) Lord Mansfield, Lord Romilly, Erskine, Scarlett, Holroyd, and several others. (Opinions produced.)

By Mr. Weldon :

190. Where are those opinions to be found?—Some of them are here.

191. Does the case submitted by the Hudson's Bay Company accompany the opinion?—Yes; the case of the Company is given.

By Mr. De Cosmos :

192. Were there not legal opinions given in England against the Hudson's Bay Company?—There were opinions given at the instance of the North West Company, those of Lord Brougham, and one or two others, which were not so favourable.

193. Could you state the names of the others?

The Chairman—They are in the Ontario documents here.

By Mr. Robinson :

194. As to the boundary?—In some cases—as to the boundary. The boundary was held to be by those who were consulted to be the height of land.

By Mr. Trow :

195. Does Lord Brougham's opinion take in the boundary?—I am not very sure; I think it 20 does.

196. What were those opinions which were given adversely to those previous decisions in favour of the company?—They are to the effect that, with regard to trade, the company could not claim an exclusive right to trade in the country, as being the Government of the country, but that as to their territorial rights there could be no question.

By the Chairman :

197. They all agreed that the charter was valid as to territorial rights?—Yes; and that their right to exclude other traders from the country would be merely as the proprietors, in a matter of trespass.

198. With regard to the charter of the Hudson's Bay Company, I believe that part of the condition 30 on which it was granted was that the Company should establish colonies within the territory which it covered. I believe that in carrying out this condition the Company established a colony called the colony of Assiniboia. Is not that the case?—It is.

199. As to whether that colony was recognized by the Imperial Government or not, that is an important question? I believe that on two occasions the Imperial troops were sent out to maintain order in the territory; is that so?—Yes; that colony was recognized by the Imperial Government, and Her Majesty's troops were sent out there. The 6th Regiment and the Canadian Rifles were there at different times.

By Mr. Weldon :

200. At what time was the 6th Regiment there?—I think in 1846, under Colonel Crofton. 40

201. And the Canadian Rifles, when?—In 1857 the Canadian Rifles were sent there under Major Seaton, and afterwards under Captain Hibbert. The Home Government also assisted in forming a body of pensioners for service in Red River after that time. Those pensioners were sent out there, and I believe some of them are, at this moment, in the Red River country, although not employed as a force.

By Mr. De Cosmos :

202. Who paid the force?—The Imperial Government paid the troops and the company contributed to their sustenance.

203. Did the Imperial Government also contribute to the expenses of the pensioners?—Not further than their pensions.

By the Chairman :

204. The Imperial Government corresponded with the Governors and the Government of the new colony of Assinibioia, I presume?—With the Governors of the Hudson's Bay Company.

205. Had the Government of that colony Courts established and power to administer the law; had it, for instance, the power of life and death?—It had the power of life and death. There was a Council of Assinibioia, and a Recorder who was Judge—Judge Thom.

By Mr. Royal :

296. He was the first Recorder?—Yes; as I have said, the Government had power of life and death, and one person was executed.

By Mr. De Cosmos :

207. What was the date of these appointments?—The appointment of the first Recorder must have been in 1838 or 1839.

By the Chairman :

208. The colony, I believe, had clearly defined boundaries?—It had.

209. And these boundaries are given in Mr. Mills' report?—Yes.

By Mr. Trow :

210. I suppose the old boundaries cover the whole of Dakotah?—A portion of Dakotah.

211. And also Minnesota?—Some part of Minnesota.

By Mr. De Cosmos :

20 212. What was the ascertained boundary of the Colony of Assinibioia?—I don't recollect exactly. I should state that I have given no particular attention to this subject for many years past.

The Chairman read from the proclamation of Governor McDonell, as follows:—

“Whereas the Governor and Company of Hudson's Bay have ceded to the Right Honourable Thomas, Earl of Selkirk, his heirs and successors, for ever, all that tract of land or territory, bounded by a line running as follows, viz.:—Beginning on the western shore of Lake Winnipie, at a point in fifty-two degrees and thirty minutes north latitude; and thence running due west to Lake Winnipigashish, otherwise called Little Winnipie; then in a southerly direction through the said lake, so as to strike its western shore in latitude fifty-two degrees; then due west to the place where the parallel of fifty-two degrees north latitude intersects the western branch of Red River, otherwise called 30 Assiniboine; then due south from that point of intersection to the height of land which separates the waters running into Hudson's Bay from those of the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers; then in an easterly direction along the height of land to the source of the River Winnipie (meaning by such last-named river the principal branch of the waters which unite in the Lake Saginagas); thence along the main stream of those waters and the middle of the several lakes through which they pass, to the mouth of the Winnipie River; and thence in a northerly direction through the middle of the Lake Winnipie, to the place of beginning; which territory is called Assiniboia, and of which I, the undersigned, have been duly appointed Governor.”

213. Mr. Weldon.—What date was that given?

The Chairman.—It says, “Given under my hand at Fort Daer (Pembina), the 8th day of January,

By the Chairman, to witness :

214. So that the colony existed for a long time, and was recognized by the Imperial Government as a Crown colony, in fact?—It was. The Hudson's Bay Company had a council called the Northern Council. Their factors or officers were the Council of Rupert's Land for all the purposes of Government. Besides having their officers and government at Red River, the company had Sheriffs for Rupert's Land.

215. Outside of the colony?—Yes.

216. So they had all the powers of Government?—Yes.

supposed to be the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's territory?—Yes; the height of land.

218. But the eastern boundary did not in any way correspond with what was supposed to be the eastern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company?—It did not.

219. Then it was only the boundary of the colony on the south side that corresponded with the boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company?—Yes; the boundaries of the colony were made simply for its convenience.

By the Chairman :

220. Another important point is this, was the height of land recognized as a boundary by Upper Canada. Have you any documents showing that it was so recognized?—Yes, there was the Robinson Treaty.

221. I believe that the Imperial Government, in proclamations and otherwise, recognized the validity of the Company's charter and the existence of their claims up to the time the country passed to Canada?—Yes; on many occasions, up to the last moment before the transfer. At the latter time I was acting, not as Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company, for the Governor is the Chairman of the Company in England, but as territorial Governor, and the then commander of the forces insisted that I, acting as Governor of Hudson's Bay, should administer the Government when the forces went in in 1870. I did, in fact, administer the Government until Lieutenant-Governor Archibald arrived.

The Chairman :—The treaty referred to by Mr. Smith is that made by Upper Canada with the Lake Superior Indians. It provides: "That for and in consideration of the sum of £2,000 of good and lawful money of Upper Canada, to them in hand paid, and for the further perpetual annuity of £500, the same to be paid and delivered to the said Chiefs a their tribes at a convenient season of each summer, not later than the first day of August, at the Honourable the Hudson's Bay Company's posts of Michipicoten and Fort William, they, the said Chiefs and principal men, do freely, fully, and voluntarily surrender, cede, grant and convey unto Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, for ever, all their right, title, and interest in the whole of the territory above described, save and except the reservations set forth in the schedule herewith annexed, which reservation shall be held and occupied by the said Chiefs and their tribes in common for the purposes of residence and cultivation. And should the said Chiefs and their respective tribes at any time desire to dispose of any mineral or other valuable productions upon the said reservations, the same will be, at their request, sold by order of the Superintendent-General of the Indian Department for the time being, for their sole use and benefit and to the best advantage."

Here is the description of the territory: "From Batchewanaung Bay to Pigeon River, at the western extremity of said lake, and inland throughout that extent to the height of land which separates the territory covered by the Charter of the Honourable the Hudson's Bay Company from the said tract and also, the islands in the said lake within the boundaries of the British possessions therein, of the other part."

The Chairman, to witness :

222. In the old descriptions which are here and in the commissions to Governors, there is a boundary line of Hudson Bay referred to. In the descriptions of the boundary between Upper and Lower Canada the line is always referred to as running due north from the head of Lake Temiscaming, until it strikes the boundary of Hudson's Bay. That continued for a very long period, up to 1838, to be the description contained in the commissions to Governors. Subsequent to 1838 the description given is from the head of Lake Temiscaming due north, until it strikes the shore of Hudson's Bay. The question I wish to ask is: was the boundary line of Hudson's Bay identical with the shore of Hudson's Bay, or was it not?—Not with the shore. It was understood that the height of the land was the boundary line of Hudson's Bay, or the Hudson's Bay Company's territory. I have noticed what the Chairman has mentioned, with respect to the change which, I think, was made when Lord Durham was appointed Governor and Commissioner. I can only account for it as being a mistake on the part of some one in one of the offices of the English Government, who took this to be the shore of Hudson's Bay.

By Mr. Robinson :

223. But if it was a mistake it was repeated in the commissions of half a dozen Governors?—In those of four.

224. In the commission of Lord Gosford in 1836 or 1837, of Lord Elgin as late as 1846, and in that of Lord Durham, also, the expression "shore" was used?—I do not think there was ever any correspondence with the Hudson's Bay Company at home on the subject, nor that they were aware of any cause for the change. And from that I suppose that it occurred accidentally, the official not having any knowledge whereby to distinguish between the boundary and the shore.

By Mr. Ross :

225. Did any dispute ever arise on account of that supposed clerical error?—Not that I am aware of.

By Mr. Onimet :

226. The Hudson's Bay Company always had possession of the territory to the height of land?—Yes.

227. Suppose the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's territory should be the shore of Hudson's Bay, where would be the territory; would it consist of any land of importance?—There really would be no territory; there really would be nothing worth having. The Charter says most explicitly they shall have all lands the waters of which empty into Hudson's Bay and Hudson's Straits.

By Mr. Weldon :

228. Are those exactly the words?—It is more general afterwards. It says all such lands not possessed by any other Christian power which they can have access to from those.

229. Then the question arises whether France or England was in possession of the land at Albany River?—That question was supposed to have been decided by the Treaty of Utrecht. The Hudson's Bay Company put forward their claim and it was not questioned.

230. At the time of the Treaty of Utrecht it was surrendered to Great Britain?—Certain portions.

231. But previous to the Treaty of Ryswick those portions of the country were given up to France?—They were.

By Mr. Royal :

232. I suppose, under the interpretation given by the Hudson's Bay Company to that part of their Constitution, they never considered they were limited for trading purposes to the shores of Hudson's Bay?—Never.

233. And particularly, they had the right to build forts and fur trading establishments within the water-shed of Hudson's Bay?—Yes.

234. That was never questioned?—It was not questioned except by rival companies at the time, nothing more; and the Hudson's Bay Company resisted what they believed to be the encroachments of the North-West Company. On one occasion they took prisoner the principal officer of the North-West Company, J. C. McTavish.

By Mr. De Cosmos :

235. Where was that?—Near Hudson's Bay, on one of the islands.

236. What part of Hudson's Bay?—St. James' Bay.

By Mr. De Cosmos :

237. Who appointed the magistrates around the shores of James' Bay?—The Hudson's Bay Company. The chief factors of the company were already magistrates, ex-officio, under the charter, and they exercised all the powers of magistrates under the charter, in conformity, as near as the circumstances would permit, with the laws of England.

238. Did the Canadian Government, so far as you are aware, ever appoint any magistrates or other officers of Canada to perform magisterial duties within the territory, commencing at the northern and western boundaries of Quebec; that is within, and west of a line drawn from Temiscaming to James' Bay?—My own impression was that the magistrates they appointed were for that district lying outside of Rupert's Land for all the district of Athabaska and Mackenzie River, including what is now called British Columbia. The Hudson's Bay Company's officers of a certain position were appointed magistrates, for that district of country; principally those who were magistrates under the charter for Rupert's Land.

By Mr. Ouimet :

239. By what Government?—By the British Government in one instance, and I think, then, by the Governor General.

By Mr. Ross :

240. I understand you to say that the claim of the Hudson's Bay Company to the trade of the territory lying south of Hudson's Bay was disputed by the North-West Company?—The North-West Company were rivals in trade of the Hudson's Bay Company, and they certainly did trespass on many occasions within that territory, that is, they committed what was considered trespass by the Hudson's Bay Company. 10

241. You stated they took a prisoner, Mr. McTavish?—Yes; the Hudson's Bay Company did.

242. In what way was the dispute settled?—It was settled amicably. They went on opposing each other until there was nothing left to oppose; they were completely run down, and besides there were some very influential men in England who took an interest in the Hudson's Bay Company, one of whom was the Right Honourable Mr. Ellis, who had, perhaps, more influence with the British Government than any man of that time.

243. The matter never went into Court to determine the relative jurisdiction of the two companies?—No. 20

244. Do you know of any papers in which the Hudson's Bay Company set forth their respective claims?—No; nothing further than the opinions of counsel in England, which they have kept. These opinions were adverse to the claims of the North-West Company, which failed on every occasion to establish their case. As Mr. Ellis afterwards stated, they had no case against the Hudson's Bay Company which would stand good in court.

By Mr. Trov :

245. Had the North-West Company forts erected at the west end of Lake Winnipeg prior to the surrender by the Marquis of Vaudreuil to General Amherst?—The North-West Company was only formed in 1783. 30

246. Have you any knowledge of what territory they occupied?—I cannot say exactly from recollection.

247. They describe certain forts on the west end of Lake Winnipeg that were then acknowledged to be within the territory occupied by the North-West Company?—I am quite aware that the North-West Company traded within that territory until 1816.

By Mr. Royal :

248. What was the origin of the North-West Company; was it organised under a license from the Crown in England?—No.

249. Or under an Act of the Canadian Parliament?—No; it was organised as a Joint Stock Company. 40

250. Under what law?—Under Canadian law, and it was principally composed of Canadians.

By Mr. Robinson :

251. In Montreal?—Yes.

By Mr. Royal :

252. Their place of business was in Montreal?—Yes, but they had no territory assigned to them for the exercise of their charter.

253. None whatever?—Simply the right of trading; the privilege as a Company of carrying on business as traders, nothing more.

254. In what year were they incorporated?—In 1782-3.

By Mr. Ross :

255. You said the Hudson's Bay Company took advice of counsel as to what their claim was to the territory on which the North-West Company was encroaching. Is that in print?—It is among these papers, which are opinions of English counsel on the case. There can be no question that, as a whole, the North-West Company were much more able traders than the Hudson's Bay Company, and ultimately compelled the latter to combine with them and form one company. The North-West Company went in and availed themselves of the privileges of the Hudson's Bay Company's charter.

By Mr. Royal :

10 256. I understand that the North-West Company, when organized, was chiefly composed of French, that is, Canadian traders who had some years previously discovered that part of the country, established forts there, and carried on a very good trade with the Indians?—Yes.

257. The French or Canadian traders organised themselves into a company and transferred the ownership of these forts to the new company, as well as the different staffs of officers?—Yes; French and Scotch.

258. Do you know if there were any fur trading posts established within the limits of the territory of Rupert's Land at the time the North-West Company was formed?—I am not aware that there were any near to Hudson's Bay. There were some further inland.

259. In fact there were two companies, one known as the X. Y. Company and the other as the 20 North-West Company?—Yes.

260. The X. Y. Company was a company which had been trading in the North-West, but the X. Y. Company and the North-West Company were in existence at the same time and amalgamated afterwards?—I think what was known as the X. Y. Company was simply a co-partnership, not under any Act of Parliament or joint-stock arrangement.

261. After the amalgamation of the two companies, was an Imperial Act passed to regulate the fur trade?—Yes.

262. Do you know if, in that Act, the limits of the territories ceded to the Hudson's Bay Company and the new company, are given?—They are spoken of; to the best of my recollection they are mentioned as the territories of the Hudson's Bay Company.

30 By Mr. Trow :

263. The Hudson's Bay Company, I suppose, took up the control of all unsettled portions under the license they had in 1821 for the united Company from the Imperial Government?—They occupied all what was known as the Indian territory outside of Rupert's Land; it was for these territories, as I mentioned before, that magistrates were appointed by the Crown or by the Governor-General, that is for outside territories.

By the Chairman :

264. For what cause was the Imperial Act of 1803 passed?—It was evidently passed to provide against certain disturbances.

40 265. In what part of the territory were the disturbances?—Principally in the outside territory of Athabaska and the North-West generally; also, down in the direction of Hudson's Bay, but more to the south and the west.

266. On the upper sections of the Albany River, I understand, there were disturbances?—Yes; and, I believe, the reason of the passing of the Act was that the Hudson's Bay Company being the only governing body that had magisterial rights, their position was rather an anomalous one with regard to others going in and opposing them. Through the influence of Mr. Ellice, and others, this Act was passed, extending the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada to that country. The Company otherwise would not only have been the governing body, but the traders also.

By Mr. Weldon :

267. That the reason for the passing of this Act were disturbances committed in the territory would appear from despatches between Canada and the Imperial Government?—It would, no doubt.

By the Chairman :

268. I believe some of the Hudson Bay Company's officers were killed about Brunswick House previous to 1803?—Yes, there were several.

269. One, Mr. Courtney, I think was killed?—I do not remember the name.

By Mr. DeCosmos :

270. Were there disturbances at the mouth of the Kaministiquia and the Eastern Boundary of Manitoba?—There were disturbances subsequently within the Red River Colony itself. There was what was known as the battle of Red River or Seven Oaks, in which the territorial Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company was killed with twenty-one others. Mr. Semple was the Governor.

271. That was within the present boundaries of Manitoba?—Yes, some three or four miles below the City of Winnipeg.

272. Could you cite documents showing that battles had occurred between parties east of Manitoba?

By the Chairman :

273. That is all contained in this book?—Yes, that contains the evidence taken before the House of Commons in 1857.

By Mr. DeCosmos :

274. Could you furnish us with a copy of that book?—Yes.

By the Chairman :

275. Some statements of very great importance made by Mr. Ellice are contained in this book?—Mr. Ellice had great influence at that time in England, being a successful politician as well as trader; but, although he was known as the Minister maker, he could not influence prejudicially any of the rights of the Hudson's Bay Co. against the opinions given by counsel and those of Ministers.

By Mr. DeCosmos :

276. Could you inform the Committee whether there was any Act of Parliament or Order in Council of the Imperial Government fixing the boundaries of Assiniboine?—It was arranged between the Hudson's Company and the Government that these should be the boundaries, as given here; but I am not aware that there was any Act to that effect.

277. I understand you to say Assiniboine was a Crown colony?—Not precisely, except as being under the authority of the Crown as delegated to the Hudson's Bay Company.

By the Chairman :

278. It was fully recognised as a Crown colony?—It was recognised as a colony.

By Mr. DeCosmos :

279. Was it created independent of the Hudson's Bay Company?—No.

By Mr. Royal :

280. Do you know if, from reading all the documents in which the limits of the Assiniboine Government were given, that in giving those limits attention was paid to the limits of the Hudson's Bay Company territory itself, or whether it was a part of the territory that was erected into a separate Government?—Simply a part.

281.—So that the southern or eastern limits of Assiniboia might not correspond with the southern limits of the Hudson's Bay Company's territories as ceded by the charter?—Not necessarily, as regards 40 the eastern limits.

By Mr. Trow :

282. What are the circumstances that brought about the ceding of that portion of the Assiniboine colony south of the 49th parallel; was it that the Hudson's Bay Company abandoned their claim to that?—It was because it became a portion of the United States under treaty.

283. Then the company had no prior claim, only an imaginary one?—It was believed, and I think we still believe, that it ought, in justice, to be a portion of English territory and now of Canadian territory.

By Mr. DeCosmos :

284. That is the portion south of the 49th parallel?—Yes.

285. But, at the peace after the war between Great Britain and the United States, when the country south passed to the United States, did that change the right of the company to the soil under the charter of Charles II. ?—That has never been put forward by the company. They had quite enough to look after in the portion of the territory they still held.

By Mr. Roy :

286. Is it not a fact that the Hudson's Bay Company had trading posts south of 49th parallel on the Red River?—Yes; they had trading posts south, and the North-West Company had trading posts 10 south of the line.

By Mr. Ouimet :

287. Will you name some of the posts?

By Mr. Royal :

288. Fort Graham was one?—Yes; and Georgetown was a later fort.

289. Fort Graham, which afterwards became Fort Abercrombie, was a trading post on the Red River?—Yes.

By the Chairman :

290. On the south coast of James Bay, how long did the company maintain posts?—Some 200 years.

291. And for 150 years their claim was never disputed?—No; not seriously.

By Mr. DeCosmos :

292. Do you mean disputed by the Government?—Yes; it was never disputed by the Government.

By the Chairman :

293. Nor subsequent to the Treaty of Utrecht, by France?—No; not as regards the confines of James' and Hudson's Bays.

By Mr. Robinson :

294. Touching the question of boundaries, are not these boundaries authoritatively set out on the maps now in possession of the Hudson's Bay Company at the different times to which you have referred?—The boundaries appear on maps in possession of the company, known as Arrowsmith's, and 30 these are given as the height of land.

295.—Were you examined before the Arbitrators?—I was not.

296. Do you know whether these different maps were produced before the arbitrators?—I think they must have been, many of them. I know there were several papers furnished by the company at the instance of the Government, and these maps were no doubt among them.

297.—Have you been much on the Coast of James' Bay?—No.

HON. MR. JUSTICE JOHNSON was examined as follows:—

By the Chairman :

298. You were at one time Governor of Assiniboia, I understand?—Yes; from 1855 to the end of 1858.

299. You were also Chief Justice of Rupert's Land?—Not Chief Justice; Recorder was the title of the office.

300. That was under the old system?—Yes. The old laws were enforced until altered, and the office of Recorder was continued until the Chief Justice was appointed, Mr. Morris.

301. You were appointed to Manitoba by the Dominion Government?—I was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba, but never entered on the duties of the office and never was sworn in, because it was found that, by the laws of Lower Canada, my holding the office of Judge of the Superior Court prevented my holding any other, so I resigned the Lieutenant-Governorship.

With respect to the matter of the northern and western boundaries of Ontario having regard to the Quebec Act of 1774, with which, of course, you are familiar, would you favour the Committee with your opinion as to what would be the true northern and western boundaries of the old Province of Quebec as constituted by that Act?—Yes. The northern and western boundaries—

By Mr. Weldon.—The question is whether this is proper evidence to be brought before the Committee. Any information that can be furnished ought to be received, but we must form our own opinions thereon, and not be guided by the opinions of witnesses.

By the Chairman.—The order of reference is to enquire into all matters connected with the boundaries of Ontario. Judge Johnson has been Governor of the territory covering the disputed grounds, and has had a great deal to do with the question.

By Mr. Weldon.—Facts, information, and documents would be proper evidence, but we must form our opinion from the facts presented and the documents submitted.

By Mr. Robinson.—The witness will, no doubt, state on what grounds his opinion is formed.

By Mr. Royal.—I believe that indiscriminate opinions by every man on this subject should not be taken as evidence; but the opinions of certain men as to the correct meaning of certain Statutes are, I believe, very important, from their experience, learning, and position. I believe what is called jurisprudence in our courts is nothing but the opinion of judges. It might be very proper to have the opinion of men of standing, such as the Hon. Justice Johnson, especially considering that he has long resided in the Red River country and been long connected with the administration of justice there. With all due deference to the opinions of other members of the Committee, I believe we ought to have an expression of the opinion of the witness. 20

By Mr. Ouimet.—I think the technical objection of Mr. Weldon has some force, but the question might be put to the witness in a different way, so as to make it a proper question. The Statutes which we shall have to consult, and from which we will have to form our opinions, are well-known Statutes. They were passed a long while ago. It might be, and I think it is, of very great interest and importance, to this Committee to know how these Statutes have been interpreted, and more especially how they have been interpreted by those who have administered justice in the North-West, and who, consequently, have been in the habit of looking at these Statutes, and have seen for themselves sur les lieux how they ought to be interpreted. I think, in this respect, Judge Johnson's opinion would be of very great weight, and that it is very important to have it; although the form in which the Chairman has put the question might be objectionable in a strictly technical sense. 30

By the Chairman.—Probably the Judge will inform us as to the way in which the Statute has hitherto been interpreted, and the way in which it has been interpreted more especially as affecting the western and northern boundaries of the old Province of Quebec.

By Mr. Weldon.—If we lay down the principle that some opinions ought to be given, I do not see exactly where we ought to draw the line.

By the Chairman.—What we want is information as to the way in which the matter was regarded at a period not very remote, and this information we wish to elicit from the Judge. These questions were very much discussed at the time he was Governor, and at the time troops were being sent to the North-West. If he could give us information as to the opinions of counsel and as to the views held in respect to the northern and western boundaries as constituted by the Quebec Act, would not that be within the scope of the order of reference?—I can give you evidence of the authoritative recognition of the District of Assiniboia by the Crown of England. I have always understood that the original Province of Quebec, as constituted by the Act of 1774, was bounded to the north by the southern boundary of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company, and I have always understood that that southern boundary was the height of land separating the basin of Hudson's Bay from the chain of great lakes and the St. Lawrence, and constituting a water-shed on one side and on the other. I have always understood that to be the case. I have further understood that when the Constitutional Act came to be passed in 1791, and the Provinces divided, it was judicially held in the deReinhardt case by Chief Justice Sewell, that although that Act divided the Provinces, it did nothing to extend either of them. I think that is self-evident.

303. Was the Colony of Assiniboia recognized by the Imperial Government, and in what way?—The existence de facto of the Colony of Assiniboia was certainly recognized in a variety of ways, and in the most authoritative manner by the Crown of England in a series of Acts that admit of no doubt whatever. They sent the 6th Regiment there in 1846 or 1847, under Colonel Crofton. They were sent by orders of the Duke of Wellington to occupy that place, so that in view of any trouble in respect to the Oregon question, they might be made available on the other side of the mountains. However that was, they were sent there. After that, when I was sworn in as Governor in 1855, after the retirement of Colonel Crofton and the troops, I made a demand for troops for the purpose of keeping order, and I got troops commanded by Major Seaton. They sent out a company of 100 men of the Canadian Rifles, British troops in the pay of the British Government, and they were quartered there some years.

B Mr. Oviimet :

304. You were sent there in 1855 as Governor of Assiniboia?—Yes. Besides the troops, the Crown of England sent out a number of pensioners whom they re-enrolled in a permanent form, to whom the Hudson's Bay Company agreed to give land on their becoming settlers there. That was done on the retirement of the 6th Regiment, about the year 1850 or 1851, and those pensioners were there with their families, while I was there a Governor. Some of them and their descendants are still there. But I found a more important recognition accidentally yesterday evening on the part of the English Crown, of the fact that the Colony of Assiniboia was a colony, the existence of which they not only knew of but with respect to which they reserved to themselves the right to establish, of their prerogative, Courts of Justice whenever they should see fit.

305. You mean the Imperial Government?—Yes. The way I came across that was in referring to some old notes which I kept when I was in Assiniboia in 1857 or 1858. In turning them over I found the opinions given by the Attorney and Solicitor-Generals of England of that day, Sir Richard Bethel and Sir Henry Keating. I found that I had extracted from a newspaper the opinions which those gentlemen were supposed to have given. I also found that I had made this note: "There is an all-important paragraph omitted," and I find the paragraph is inserted in my handwriting." Then to verify it I looked at the opinion as it is published by authority in this country, and contained in the book entitled "Statutes, documents and papers bearing on the discussion respecting the northern and western boundaries of the Province of Ontario, compiled by direction of the Government of Ontario." I found that the paragraph which was omitted in publication, probably for some party purpose, at that time, was this: [to be found on page 200 of the book referred to] "The company has, under the charter, power to make ordinances (which would be in the nature of bye-laws) for the government of the persons employed by them, and also power to exercise jurisdiction in all matters civil and criminal; but no ordinance would be valid that was contrary to the common law, nor could the company insist on its right to administer justice as against the Crown's prerogative right to establish Courts of Civil and Criminal Justice within the territory." Here then, in 1857, you have the two law officers of the Crown in England, stating it was the Crown's prerogative right, at that time, if they should see fit, to establish Courts of Civil and Criminal Justice in Assiniboia. Now, that is a declaration entirely at variance with the possibility of its being part of Upper Canada, because to Upper Canada had been granted legislative powers and a constitution of its own, and in its legislature had been vested the right to constitute Courts of Justice. That was a decisive recognition of the fact by the law officers in England that that colony de facto existed, that the Crown recognised it, and not only had the power but possibly at that time contemplated the exercise of the power of making it a Crown colony, and establishing Courts of Justice there irrespective of Upper Canada, to which it was not considered to belong at all.

306. It was considered that the water-shed formed the northern boundary line of Upper Canada?—Undoubtedly, and it was considered that the western boundary was the line running due north, as it was

By Mr. Trow :

307. Is the word due north used?—No; the word northward is used, but that has been interpreted by the most eminent Judge who ever lived in Lower Canada, Chief Justice Sewell, to mean undoubtedly north.

By Mr. De Cosmos :

308. What do you consider the eastern boundary of Assiniboia?—I do not exactly remember at this minute, but I could easily verify it. The question as to how Assiniboia was erected is a long story. The Earl of Selkirk affected to surrender or did surrender, to the Hudson's Bay Company a large tract of country which is now comprised in the State of Minnesota; no doubt of that. But the limits of Assiniboia, while I was there, I do not now exactly remember. I could, however, verify it in a moment by my report, because when I was sent up as Commissioner in 1870 or 1871, to report upon the state of the laws that existed previous to the establishment of Manitoba, I considered that question involved, in a certain degree, the geographical extent of the country; and although the title of the Hudson's Bay Company had been admitted by the surrender which was accepted of their title by the Crown of England and by Canada, still I had to report what the laws were, and in my report I find that the district of Assiniboia, long after the Earl of Selkirk had surrendered his rights to the Hudson's Bay Company, was constituted and defined by the Board of Directors of the Hudson's Bay Company in London. I have that here.

By Mr. Robinson :

309. There never was any setting out by stakes and bounds officially of the district of Assiniboia?—I am not able to say whether there was or not; my impression is there was. There were two eminent surveyors in olden times, Messrs. Thomson and Taylor, and I always understood a survey had been made. But I will not answer the question with certainty. I always took it for granted such had been done.

By the Chairman :

310. You say that the surrender of the title of the Hudson's Bay Company to the Crown of England and to Canada, and its acceptance by them, established its validity. Have you opinions of learned counsel as to the validity of the Hudson's Bay Company's charter, and the extent of territory it covered?—There have been a series of opinions from the earliest times, going back to the day of Lord Mansfield, then, Mr. Murray, and coming down to the present day, which, with very little variation, have always maintained the right of the company to the soil, and to the territory; but have not maintained with equal certainty their right to exclusive trading privilege. I take it that the Crown of England had the same right to grant land when it was granted by King Charles, that the Crown in Canada has to grant land now apart from exclusive trade privilege. It was in the year 1839, on the 13th March, at a general court held in the Hudson's Bay House, London, that the district of Assiniboia was erected and was declared "co-extensive with such portions of the territory (these are the words of the order) granted to the late Thomas, Earl of Selkirk, on the 12th June, 1811, as is now within the domains of Her Britannic Majesty." That is what constituted the district of Assiniboia, and it so constituted de facto, whatever its precise extent, it has certainly been recognised by a series of Acts by the British Government. I may say more than that: I came down from the Red River country in the fall of 1858. Mr. Watkin was in this country, and was associated with Sir Edmund Head in connection with the interests of the Hudson's Bay Company, or with respect to some proposition for establishing a Government in that territory by-and-bye. It was felt it could no longer be held as a monopoly. I was, at the request of the Duke of Newcastle, called upon to draw up a report and make a recommendation as to the form of Government which was desirable. This was in 1863. I reported in favour of a Crown colony. I believe Sir Edmund Head did so too. Most certainly the Duke of Newcastle recognised as a possible event that the Crown of England might make a Crown Colony of it. I believe it was a mere accident that it was not done. At one time it was considered not only desirable, but almost certain, that it would be made a Crown colony, which is perfectly at variance with its being part of Upper Canada.

Sec. II.
Evidence

House of

Canada, 1880.
Evidence of
Hon. Mr.
Justice
Johnsen.

311. You had a judicature established there for the trial of criminal cases?—Yes. The validity of the company's charter, in that respect, has always been acknowledged by the law officers of England. They administered justice there, perhaps in a ready, but in a very efficient manner; and on one occasion, I am happy to say not in my time, but in that of my predecessor, an Indian was tried for his life. He was found guilty by a jury, condemned to be executed, and was executed just outside Fort Garry.

312. So that it was de facto a separate colony?—It was unquestionably. It was de facto a separate colony, and recognized as such by the Crown of England, which intimated more than once the possibility of their exercising their authority there quite independent of Canada.

By Mr. De Cosmos :—

10 313. I understood that the territory of Assiniboia was the same as that which had been granted to Lord Selkirk?—Partly so.

314. What I desire to have is a description of those boundaries.—No doubt what Lord Selkirk assumed to own, and the country he intended to settle, extended over a very great part of what is now Minnesota, and which before it became Minnesota, was the territory of Dakota and Minnesota, now forming two States.

By Mr. De Cosmos :

315. The international boundary fixes conclusively the fact that the territory of Upper Canada cannot go further south; but what we want to know is, what documentary evidence can be produced to show how far the boundary of Assiniboia went east along the international boundary, or how far the boundary of Upper Canada went west along the international boundary—I take it everything that was west of a due north line from the confluence of the Mississippi and Ohio was Assiniboia?—I think so.

By the Chairman :

316. Or Hudson's Bay Company's territory?—Or Hudson's Bay Territory, but Assiniboia certainly used to bring in criminals from some distance and try those criminals from Bout de la Rivière, at the foot of Lake Winnipeg, and Winnipeg River, just where the river runs into the lake.

By Mr. De Cosmos :

317. Are there any records of criminals having been brought in from the Lake of the Woods?—Not that I know of.

318. Or east of the water-shed?—Not that I know of. I know of no instance in which it was found necessary to do that. I do not know that the authority of Assiniboia would have been assumed. I think probably one of the Statutes vesting jurisdiction in the Province of Lower and Upper Canada would have been invoked. There were two Acts, and one of them would probably have been invoked; but at all events, whichever was invoked, it was not considered Upper Canada, or it would not have been necessary to give jurisdiction to the Provinces.

By Mr. Ousimet :

319. How did Lord Selkirk come into the possession of that vast territory called Assiniboia, and how did it pass afterwards into the hands of the Hudson's Bay Company?—The old Canada Company, called the North-West Company, gave certain rights in the first instance; what they were I do not know, and I have never seen any instrument attesting them to Lord Selkirk, who brought out a number of Scotch and Shetland Island emigrants and settled them there.

By Mr. De Cosmos :

320. In other words it was merely a quit claim. They surrendered their possessory rights?—The North-West Company assumed to be trading there, and the Hudson's Bay Company said the country was theirs, and there was a battle fought at the Frog Plains between them, but the country eventually came back to the Hudson's Bay Company.

By Mr. Robinson :

321. The North-West Company always disputed that the Hudson's Bay Company had territorial rights, and maintained that they should confine themselves to the shores of Hudson's Bay?—I do not know of any pretension of that kind. The North-West Company took all they could, and as fur traders they rather beat the Hudson's Bay Company.

By Mr. Ouimet :

322. But what territorial rights had Lord Selkirk, and were these territorial rights recognized by the Crown of England?—They were not recognized by the Crown of England, so far as I know, in Lord Selkirk's time, only after the establishment by the Company of the colony there under the charter, because under that charter they had two distinct rights; they had not only the right of governing and exercising jurisdiction over servants and employes, but another part of the charter distinctly recognized the possibility of a colony being established.

By Mr. Trow :

323. The allotments given by Lord Selkirk to settlers were recognized at all time afterwards, were they not?—Yes. The Hudson's Bay Company always exercised the greatest good faith with respect to the land grants. What was called the land system was most imperfect, consisting of a book kept by a clerk; but any representation made or fact ascertained was always at once recognized by the Hudson's Bay Company, and a sort of title given. The settlers always had their rights respected; nobody ever lost land they occupied.

324. These settlements were confined to the Red River bottom lands as a rule?—Yes.

325. They did not extend to any districts outside?—Originally they were settled for twenty miles on the banks of the Red River between Lower Fort Garry and Upper Fort Garry. The Kildonan settlement was an offshoot from the old settlement.

By Mr. Royal :

326. Did Lord Selkirk get any charter from any power?—Lord Selkirk was an usurper. He wanted to do good to some of his Scotch countrymen, and to exclude the North-West Company, if he could, from that country. He was a very energetic man; but from the moment Assiniboia was established as a colony the British Government dealt with it as a colony, and as a separate thing altogether from Upper Canada.

By Mr. Ouimet :

327. When was it established as a colony?—In 1839. That is to say, that de facto it existed before then; but on the 13th March, 1839, this governing power, the Hudson's Bay Company, made laws for that place.

Witness handed in papers and documents to accompany his evidence.

Examination continued:—

By Mr. Ouimet :

328. You have told us that after the 6th Regiment was withdrawn by the English Government, pensioners were left there with the understanding that the Hudson's Bay Company would give them lands to settle upon, and also on the condition that they would serve in case of emergency?—Yes; that was the arrangement made between the English War Office and the Hudson's Bay Company. They continued to draw their pay, the Hudson's Bay Company being the agents of the War Office for that purpose, Col. Caldwell and Captain Hill being the officers of the pensioners there. They were regularly paid for years, and called out annually for drill. They had a uniform, and were to all intents and purposes a military force employed by the Crown of England.

329. Were lands given to them according to agreement?—Yes.

330. In what portion of the settlement?—Generally up the Assiniboine, from Fort Garry up as far as where Burke's used to be, round the bend of the Assiniboine. Some of their descendants now hold those lands.

331. This, according to your judgment, would show that the Crown recognized that the Hudson's Bay Company had the right to dispose of the land; that they had possession of the land and the right to dispose of it?—No doubt of it. No English lawyer has ever given an opinion that the grant was invalid as regards the land. In the very early days of the controversy, there were some gentlemen who were of the opinion that the extent of the territory granted meant only the immediate shores of Hudson's Bay.

Evidence
given before

House of Commons,
Canada,
March, 1880.
Evidence of
Hon. Mr.
Johnson.

That was immediately refuted by the words, "lakes, rivers, and inlets," and the extent of their occupation would necessarily be the points to which they could penetrate by these rivers; that is to say, the height of land. That deed existed. When the Act of 1774 came to be passed, that deed was recognized; and it is stated there that their southern boundary should be the northern boundary of the Province of Quebec; and when the Province was divided nothing was said about it at all. Nothing was added to Upper Canada, only it was divided from Lower Canada.

By Mr. Trow :

332. Are you of opinion that the Hudson's Bay Company's Charter gave them an absolute right to the soil, or gave them rights merely for trading purposes?—I believe it gave them an absolute right to the soil.

By Mr. Robinson :

333. What was the opinion of Sir Arthur Pigott, Sergeant Spankey and Lord Brougham?—There were some early opinions of counsel, and Lord Brougham's was one of them, that the title was circumscribed with respect to the rights of discovery, and limited to the immediate shores of the Bay. I know such opinions were given.

334. Did those opinions not touch the territorial rights of the Company?—I don't remember at this moment; but the opinions are all printed.

By Mr. Ouimet :

335. Could you find the agreement between the War Office and the Hudson's Bay authorities about those pensioners and their being given land to settle upon by the Hudson's Bay Company?—You will find in the archives at Fort Garry those people's titles to those lands. As to the dispatches which passed between the War Office and the Hudson's Bay Company, they are to be found in London.

336. The lands were given as an inducement to send out the military?—The English Government said: "We will send out soldiers and pay them, but in order to ameliorate their lot, you must give them grants of land."

By Mr. De Cosmos :

337. Are you aware whether there is any deed of surrender in existence between Lord Selkirk and his heirs and the Hudson's Bay Company?—I am not aware of that. There must have been something, I take it.

338. Are you aware whether there is any deed passing the rights of the North-West Company to Lord Selkirk?—I am not.

By the Chairman :

339. Are you aware whether, subsequent to the Treaty of Utrecht, when the French, by that treaty, restored all their possessions on the Bay to the English, whether the Hudson's Bay Company were ever afterwards disturbed in possession on the immediate confines of the Bay?—As a matter of curious history, I do not know whether it can be exactly ascertained or not. I have known a great many old people in that country, full of traditions, one of which is that the Hudson's Bay Company had establishments on the Albany River at a very early period.

340. I speak of the mere confines of the Bay?—I have never heard that the French had really any establishments there after the Treaty of Utrecht.

341. Not subsequent to the Treaty of Utrecht?—They had before they took the forts in 1686.

342. The object of my question is this: there is, on that map on the wall and all the maps of the time, a line called the boundary line of Hudson's Bay. In the instructions to Governors from 1791 to 1838, in describing the dividing line, they say a line drawn due north from the head of Lake Temiscaming to the boundary line of Hudson's Bay; subsequent to 1838 the wording of the Commissions ran "to the shore of Hudson's Bay." Was that boundary line of Hudson's Bay held to be identical with the height of land or the shore?—I have always considered it to be the height of land.

343. The country of the Illinois, was it considered a part of Canada at the time of the cession, or was it considered a part of Louisiana?—This is a subject which is rather nebulous in my mind. I have always had an idea that the Illinois country was a sort of offshoot or territory of Louisiana in ancient times. I do not know that it was ever considered a part of Canada at all, but I would not profess to give a reliable opinion on the subject. My recollection has been that it was something quite apart from Canada.

By Mr. De Cosmos :

344. That is, French Canada?—Yes.

By Mr. Trow :

345. I consider Judge Johnson to say that the colony of Assiniboia was acknowledged by the British Government, but I do not see that that gives us much information respecting the northern limits of Quebec or Canada?—No; merely with respect to the northern boundary.

346. You have not given us the western limits, because you have not told us how far east that colony was acknowledged to extend?—It was always considered to extend to the boundary of Upper Canada on the south and south-east, namely, the height of land.

347. Were any settlements made on Rainy River or Lake of the Woods?—You cannot call them settlements. I have known eccentric individuals who settled there, one of whom was a Mr. McLeod, but there were no settlements of any importance. About the Rat Portage and Fort Frances, there were several French half-breed families settled.

348. That is at the head of Rainy River?—The head of Rainy Lake.

The Chairman:—Rainy River, or rather its waters, have their source 200 miles to the east of that.

By Mr. Royal :

349. Do you think that General Alured Clark's proclamation of 18th Nov., 1791, considering it in connection with the Orders of Council of the 19th and 24th August, 1791, and the Royal Instructions of 12th and 16th September of the same year, to Governor General Lord Dorchester, could have the effect of enlarging the Province of Upper Canada beyond the limits assigned to it by the Act and the Order in Council and instructions based thereon?—Of course any Statute may have been interpreted rightly or wrongly by the Executive, but the interpretation would not alter the Statute.

350. But these instructions must have been based on the Statutes?—Yes.

351. Therefore they could not in any way extend or diminish the territory of the Province of Quebec?—Clearly not.

352. You spoke, some time ago, of the opinions of Lord Brougham; I see the Cavendish papers 30 are often quoted in these volumes. Do you consider them very valuable as an authority on the matter we are considering?—Lord Brougham was asked by the adversaries of the Hudson's Bay Company to give an opinion; it is published in the volumes before us. The Cavendish papers were published in 1839, 65 years after the debates of 1774, and were never considered to be of any importance, but rather hazy. They would have the authority of any report, if published at the time, subject to contradiction or correction by people who could contradict or correct them. But when published 65 years afterwards, when the people who could contradict or correct them were dead, they could not possess any value. They were looked upon as the gossipy production of an old gentleman, who was not very eminent, Mr. Henry Cavendish, afterwards Sir Henry Cavendish.

By Mr. Robinson :

353. Still they agree very much with the letter of Mr. Burke to his then constituents in York State?—The impression of Cavendish was evidently that it was intended to go to the Mississippi, but I believe it is considered a mistake.

By the Chairman :

354. Is there anything about the Mississippi in the Cavendish papers?—I have not seen them for years. I remember when they appeared, I was young at the time; the people looked for them as if they were going to throw light on a number of things, but they did not throw any light that I know of.

By Mr. Robinson :

355. You spoke of the decision in the de Rheinhardt case. I judge from what you have said, you have given that judgment some consideration.—Yes, but not very lately. I had occasion to look at it in reference to occurrences of many years ago.

356. You mentioned it as settling the question of boundary in your mind?—The question of boundary was specifically raised in that case before Chief Justice Sewell.

357. How was it no force was given to that decision by the executive of the Reinhardt?—I forget whether he was acquitted or found guilty.

358. Do you know whether it was upon an objection taken by the Crown officers in England that the decision was not justified?—I do not know; I forget what the verdict was.

*Mr. Caron :—*He was found guilty, but his case was submitted to the Privy Council?—He was pardoned.

*Witness, continuing :—*The line of defence taken by Stuart and Valliere was that this murder, having been committed at the Dalles on the Winning River, was committed in Upper Canada. They failed to establish that. The court was dead against them; no doubt about that. Chief Justice Sewell, who tried the case, is looked upon as the greatest luminary of the law we ever had in Lower Canada. It may almost be said that he made our laws.

By Mr. Robinson :

359. I see that Sir George Carter in a despatch which he sent to the English in 1869, when he was associated with Mr. McDougall, styled the Hudson's Bay Company, touching the territory which they claimed from Lake Superior to Winnipeg, as squatters?—That was with the view of getting the title as cheaply as he could.

360. He gave his reasons?—He was treating with them and was prepared to give them money £300,000. Of course he wanted to cheapen their title as much as he could. I do not want to say that, in giving that opinion, he was not quite sincere. The view he and Mr. McDougall took was propounded with a great deal of force by Mr. McDougall, but all with the object of buying the territory.

By Mr. Royal :

361. In the instructions that were given to you as Recorder, was any territorial jurisdiction assigned?—The district of Assiniboia; I had to find that out for myself; I never gave myself much trouble to find it out.

By Mr. Robinson :

362. The demand you made, when you were sworn in as Governor, for troops: did you make it direct to the English or Canadian Government?—I was instructed to make it to the Hudson's Bay Company, who were my immediate superiors, and they applied to the English Government, and the troops were sent out. They came out by York Factory, and proceeded by way of Nelson River up to Fort Garry.

Original paper handed in by the Honourable Mr. Justice Johnson.

5th. To make similar inquiry and report with respect to the North-West Territories, suggesting such amendments as I might judge proper to facilitate the administration of civil as well as criminal law in those territories.

These several subjects will now be noticed seriatim :

The State of the Laws in Force in Manitoba up to the 15th of July, 1870.

King Charles the Second, in the year one thousand six hundred and seventy, granted to the Hudson's Bay Company, under the name of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, a Charter of incorporation with very extensive privileges and powers the whole or oven the greater part of which it is not necessary for the purpose of this report to describe.

The Charter ordained, amongst other things, that the territory granted to the Company was to be reckoned one of His Majesty's plantations or Colonies in America, and called Rupert's Land, and that the Company were to be the absolute lords proprietors of the same for ever. With respect to the power of making laws, the language used in the Charter seems to contemplate, in the first instance, merely the power of making and enforcing such regulations and imposing such penalties and punishments not repugnant to the Laws of England, as the Company might deem necessary for the good government of the territory in respect to their own officers and servants and the protection of their trade,

These powers are conferred in the following words of the Charter :—

"And further we do, by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, make, create, and constitute the said Governor and Company for the time being, and their successors the true and absolute Lords and proprietors of the same territory, limits and places aforesaid, and of all other the premises, saving always the faith, allegiance and Sovereign dominion due to us, our heirs and successors, for the same to have, hold, possess and enjoy the said territory, limits and places, and all members, jurisdictions, prerogatives, royalties and appurtenances whatsoever, to them the said Governor and Company and their successors for ever, to be holden of us our heirs and successors, as of our Manor of East Greenwich, in our County of Kent, in free and common socage, and not in capite or by Knights service; yielding and paying yearly to us, our heirs and successors for the same, two elks and two black beavers, whensoever and as often as we, our heirs and successors, shall happen to enter into the said countries, territories and regions hereby granted; and further our will and pleasure is, and by these presents for us our heirs and successors, we do grant unto the said Governor and Company, and to their successors, that it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Governor and Company, and their successors from time to time to assemble themselves for or about any matters, causes, affairs or business of the said trade in any place or places for the same convenient within our dominions or elsewhere, and there to hold Court for the said Company, and the affairs thereof; and that also it shall and may be lawful to and for them and the greater part of them, being so assembled and that shall then and there be present in any such place or places whereof the Governor or his Deputy for the time being to be one, to make, ordain and constitute such and so many reasonable laws, constitutions, orders and ordinances as to them or the greater part of them being then and there present shall seem necessary and convenient for the good government of the said Company and of all Governors of colonies, forts and plantations, factors, masters, mariners, and other officers employed or to be employed in

- 20 The powers and privileges granted with such amplitude of expression, seem, nevertheless, to apply more particularly to the government of the Company's officers and servants, as far as one object only of the Charter was concerned, viz., that of extension of trade, and the regulations necessary for carrying it on at forts, factories and other places, where a large number of persons of different rank in the service were employed. Accordingly, in a subsequent part of the instrument, as if in contemplation of a future when, as a natural consequence of the establishment of forts and factories, and the employment of numerous officers and servants, settlements should come to be formed, as well as persons who had ceased to be in the service, as of their descendants and other powers to legislate and to administer justice, civil and criminal, as regards all other persons living within the territories, are expressly conferred in the following terms: “And further of our special grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, we do for us,
- 30 “our heirs and successors, grant to and with the said Government and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, that all lands, islands, territories, plantations, forts, fortifications, factories or colonies where the said Company's factories and trade are or shall be within any of the forts, or places afore limited, shall be immediately from henceforth under the power and command of the said Governor and Company, their successors and assigns, saving the faith and allegiance due to be performed to us, our heirs and successors, as aforesaid; and that the said Governor and Company shall have liberty, full power, and authority to appoint and establish Governors and all other officers to govern them, and that the Governor and the Council of the several and respective places where the said Company shall have plantations, forts, factories, colonies, or places of trade within any of the countries, lauds, or territories hereby granted, may have power to judge all persons belonging to the said Governor,
- 40 “and Company, or that shall live under them, in all causes, whether civil or criminal, according to the laws of this Kingdom, and to execute justice accordingly; and in case any crime or misdemeanour shall be committed in any of the said Company's plantations, forts, factories, or places of trade within the limits aforesaid, where judicature cannot be executed for want of a Governor and Council there, then in such case it shall and may be lawful for the Chief Factor of that place, and his Council to transmit the party, together with the offence, to such other plantation, factory or fort where there shall be a Governor and Council, where justice may be executed, or into the Kingdom of England, as shall be thought most convenient, there to receive such punishment as the nature of his offence shall deserve.”

existing and administered up to the 15th of July, 1870. I therefore purposely abstain from offering any remarks upon a question which, but for recent events, would have been one of great interest and importance, that is to say, the question of the geographical limits and extents of Rupert's Land, within which the rights and powers of the Hudson's Bay Company were to be exercised.

That question, depending as it did upon historical facts, treaties and Statutes, for the determination of what extent of country was occupied by the subjects of the King of France at the time the Charter of Charles the Second was granted, and also upon the effect of the Acts of Parliament of 1774 and 1791, in fixing the boundaries of Canada, was one of great importance in its time, but is not embraced in the objects of this commission.

Whatever interest may formerly have attached to that question, has, of course, been superseded by the recent public acts of the Executive, both in England and in Canada, and by the authority of Imperial and Canadian legislation.

It is enacted in the 2nd section of the Rupert's Land Act (Imperial), 1863, that for the purpose of that Act, "the term Rupert's Land shall include the whole of the land and territories held or claimed to be held by the said Governor and Company;" and the 5th section provides that "until otherwise enacted by the Parliament of Canada, all the powers, authority, and jurisdiction of the several courts of justice now established in Rupert's Land, and of the several officers thereof, and of all magistrates and officers thereof, and of all magistrates and justices now acting within the said limits shall continue in force and effect therein."

The Act of the Canadian Parliament, 32 and 33 Vic., c. 3 (1869), provides that all existing laws are to remain in force until otherwise ordered by the Lieutenant-Governor under the authority of that Act; and public officers and functionaries are to retain their offices and continue to exercise their functions.

The Statute of the Canadian Parliament to amend and continue the last mentioned Act, and to establish and provide for the Government of the Province of Manitoba, creates a Province consisting of the greater part of the former district of Assinibonia, the principal settlement or colony under the Government of the Hudson's Bay Company in that part of the country, and which the opponents of their rights had formerly maintained to be within the limits of Canada; and, finally, the Parliament of Canada and Local Parliament of the Province of Manitoba have part of them, in various statutory enactments, recognised and continued throughout the entire Province the authority of the laws passed by the Governor and Council of Assiniboina, and of the courts of justice formerly existing in that district under their authority.

Without, therefore, expressing any opinion upon the merits of a former controversy, it seems clear that at the present time the Dominion of Canada has established the Province of Manitoba upon the recognition of the Company's title which is involved in the surrender to the Crown of the whole territory that was occupied by them, and which was the basis of the Order in Council of Her Majesty admitting the country into the Union or Dominion of Canada.

By Royal Charter, then, Rupert's Land was constituted one of Her Majesty's colonies, or plantations in America, and by the words of the Charter above quoted, power was given to the Company to administer Justice civil and criminal, according to the laws of this Kingdom. Even if the Charter had been silent on this subject, there is no doubt that in the case of an English Colony of this kind, as contradistinguished from colonies acquired by the conquest, cession, or descent, the English laws, so far as they are applicable to the condition of an infant settlement, are ipso facto in force, for the reason that there can at first be no existing law to contest the superiority. (1)

Under the authority of the Charter (2) also, the Hudson's Bay Company, from the time they acquired that portion of the country from the Earl of Selkirk () to whom they had made a grant of it in 1811, made some regulations suited to the state of the country through a Governor and Council for the government of the settlers in the Selkirk or Red River Settlements, the only settlement then existing in the territories where any considerable number of persons had their abode.

This state of things continued up to the year 1839.

On the 13th of March of that year, at a General Court held at the Hudson's Bay House in London, by the Governor and Committee, "the District of Assiniboia was erected, and was to be co-extensive with such portion of the territory granted to the late Thomas, Earl of Selkirk, on the 12th day of June, 1811, as is now within the Dominions of Her Britannic Majesty." (1)

At the same time, and by the same authority, a Governor and Council of Assiniboia were appointed, and also a judicial officer by the style of "Recorder," who thereafter administered justice at regular 10 quarterly courts, in all cases civil and criminal, as nearly as possible in accordance with English Law, and with the aid of the jury. (2)

The Governor and Council of Assiniboia soon recognised the necessity of adopting the alterations and improvements that had been made in the laws of England since the time of King Charles II., and desired to introduce, as far as they could be made applicable to the circumstances of the country, the English law as it existed at the time of her present Majesty's accession, and subsequently they wished to extend the modern laws still further by introducing the existing laws of England for the time being.

With this view they passed the 53rd Article of the Laws of the Governor and Council of Assiniboia, as revised on the 11th April, 1862, and afterwards the amendment of the 7th January, 1864.

20 The first of these enactments was in the following words: "In place of the laws of England of the date of the Hudson Bay Company's charter, the laws of England at Her Majesty's accession, so far as they may be applicable to the condition of the colony, shall regulate the proceedings of the General Court, till some higher authority or this Council itself shall have expressly provided, either in whole or in part, to the contrary."

The amendment is in the language following: "To remove all doubts as to the true construction of the 53rd Article of the Code of the 11th April, 1862, the proceedings of the General Court shall be regulated by the laws of England, not only of the date of Her present Majesty's Accession, so far as they may apply to the condition of the colony, but also by all such laws of England of subsequent date as may be applicable to the same. In other words, the proceedings of the General Court shall be regulated by the existing laws of England for the time being, in as far as the 30 same are known to the Court and are applicable to the condition of the colony."

(3) It is obvious that the language of either and both of these enactments is inadequate to extend the laws of England of either of the periods therein mentioned to the rights and obligations of the inhabitants; the express terms, both of the one and of the other, being restricted to the regulations of the proceedings of the court. Contemporaneous English law was, nevertheless, deemed to have been introduced and was considered to be applied by the Court to the cases that came before it.

40 The general principles of English law, as understood to have been modified as above by the action of the Governor and Council of Assiniboia, together with such local regulations as that body made from time to time, constituted the body of law existing in the District of Assiniboia.

These laws of the Governor and Council were enregistered in a book as they were passed, and were in the form of resolutions until the year 1862. On the 11th of April of that year they were revised; that is to say, all local enactments that were in force on the 13th of March, 1862, were repealed, and the Revised Laws of Assiniboia were enacted. Subsequently to that time, amendments and alterations of the Revised Laws continued to be made by the Governor and Council. The whole of these laws are comprised in the appendix to this report under the third head of enquiry, indicated by my commission, and directing me to furnish copies of the laws in force up to the 15th of July, 1870.

I should observe that the revision of 1862, though it repealed the laws in force on the 13th of March of that year, and re-enacted most of them, omitted to re-enact a law of the Governor and Council of the 4th of July, 1839, by which trial by jury in all criminal cases, and in civil cases for more than ten pounds sterling, was established. The qualification of petit jurors had been also fixed, and the mode of making the lists defined by regulations of the same date (4th July, 1839).

These regulations remained in force and were acted upon up to the date of the revision (11th of April, 1862). They were then repealed, but no other regulations on these subjects were made. From the 11th of April, 1862, up to the 15th July, 1870, petty jurors were summoned under the assumed authority of the old law, or under the common law of England, as understood to prevail, and there never was in the laws of Assiniboia any law whatever respecting grand jurors, their qualification or the mode of making the list. (1)

In the year 1867 the British North America Act was passed by the Imperial Parliament, which so far affected the laws in force in that part of the territory which is now the Province of Manitoba, that amongst other things it made provision for the eventual admission into the Union of other parts of British America besides Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and in the execution of that purpose the Rupert's Land Act of 1868 (Imperiali), was enacted, and in express terms continued in full force and effect "until otherwise enacted by the Parliament of Canada, all the powers, authorities and jurisdiction of the several Courts of Justice now established in Rupert's Land, and of the several officers thereof, and of all Magistrates and Justices now acting within the said limits."

The Parliament of Canada, on the 22nd June, 1869, enacted the Statute 32 and 33 Vic., c. 3, for the temporary Government of Rupert's Land and the North-West Territory when united with Canada, which contained similar provisions, recognizing and continuing established institutions and existing offices. Besides the general body of law existing, as above described, up to 15th July, 1870, some Imperial legislation from time to time took place, which though it can hardly be said to have had any practical effect in the country now constituting Manitoba, nevertheless extended to it.

This legislation is comprised (1863) in the Imperial Statutes 43rd Geo. III., c. 138, the 1st and 2nd Geo. IV., c. 66 (1821) and the 22nd and 23rd Vic. c. 26, 1859.

The first of these Statutes enacted that all offences committed within any of the Indian territories, or parts of America not within the limits of either of the Provinces of Upper or Lower Canada, or of any Civil Government of the United States of America, shall be, and be deemed to be offences of the same nature, and shall be tried in the same manner, and subject to the same punishment as if the same had been committed within the Provinces of Lower or Upper Canada. It also gave power to the Government of the then Governor of the then Province of Lower Canada to appoint persons to act as Justices for the Indian territories for the purpose merely of hearing and committing for trial in Lower Canada, whereof the Governor, if the circumstances of the case made it more convenient to have the trial in Upper Canada, could send the offender to that Province, and by instrument under the Seal of the Province of Lower Canada, cause him to be tried in the Upper Province.

The second Statute (1st and 2nd Geo. IV., c. 66), enacted that the Act of the 43rd of Geo. III. should be extended to, and be in full force in and through all the territories of the Hudson's Bay Company.

Sec. 5. It further gave jurisdiction in civil cases in these territories to the Courts of Upper Canada.

(1) The Supreme Court Bill of the Manitoba Parliament has supplied their deficiencies, and empowered the General Quarterly Court to exercise at its usual sittings the authority of the Supreme Court, until a Chief Justice shall be appointed by the Government of Canada.

Sec. 6. It also conferred power on the Government of Lower Canada to name Commissioners in the Territories for the execution of the processes of the Canadian Courts.

Sec. 10. It gave power to the Crown to appoint Justices of the Peace in these territories on special terms, including the Territories granted to the Hudson's Bay Company, with power to such Justices to take evidence in the country, to be used in the Courts in Upper Canada.

Sec. 11. It gave further power to the Crown to issue commissions under the Great Seal, empowering Justices to hold Courts of Record for the trial of criminal offences and misdemeanours, and also of civil cases, notwithstanding anything contained in the Hudson's Bay Company's Charter.

Sec. 12. Such Courts as to the number of justices, and as to the times and places of holding them, either within or beyond the territories of the Company, were to be constituted as His Majesty should direct, but their power was not to extend to the trial of capital offences, nor to civil actions wherein the amount in issue exceeded two hundred pounds.

Sec. 14. By the last section, all the rights, privileges, authorities and jurisdictions which the Hudson's Bay Company could by law claim and exercise under their Charter were to remain in as full force, virtue and effect as if the Act had never been made.

The third, in this series of Imperial Statutes, is the 22nd and 23rd Vict., c. 26.

This Act recites the main provision of the 43rd Geo. III., and of the 1st and 2nd Geo. IV., and empowers the Crown either by commissions appointing justices under the latter Statute, or by subsequent commission, or by Order in Council, to authorize such Justices to try in a summary way all crimes, misdemeanours, and offences whatsoever, and to punish by fine or imprisonment, or both. In cases punishable by death, or in which, in the Justice's opinion, fine and imprisonment were inadequate to the offence, they might either try the offender in the ordinary way, or send him to Upper Canada, to be tried there under the Act of Geo. IV., or if they saw fit, to British Columbia, to be tried by any Court having cognizance of a like offence committed there. This last mentioned Act, however, in the final section is declared not to extend to the territories granted to the Hudson's Bay Company. The reason of this exception is apparent in the preamble of the Statute which recites, that although the Acts of 1803 and of 1821 had been passed, the Crown had never given effect to those laws. No Justices had been appointed, and no Courts of Record established by the Crown, nor had the Governor of Lower Canada ever appointed any Commissioners to execute the processes of the Canadian Courts, and therefore it became necessary to make provision for the Indian territories that were not included in the limits of the Charter, leaving to the courts established by the Hudson's Bay Company in their territories the authority and jurisdiction that belongs to them.

II.

The mode of administering justice in the General Quarterly Court has been indicated under the preceding head of this report.

It is proper, however, to observe that the authority to administer justice under the Charter was conferred upon the Governor and his Council, and they, in their own persons, in the early history of the colony, administered justice without the aid of a judicial officer.

On the 12th of February, 1835, it was resolved by the Governor and Council of Assiniboia: "That a General Court of the Governor and Council shall be held at the Governor's residence on the last Thursday of every quarter, at which the Magistrates shall attend, where cases of a more serious nature, cases of debt exceeding forty shillings, and all appeal cases from the decisions of Justices of the Peace, shall be examined into, and court to be adjourned from day to day until all the cases in hand be disposed of; and as a check on frivolous and vexatious litigation, that the prosecutor shall pay into Court a fee of three shillings before any warrant shall be issued, and in cases of appeal from the Justice of Peace Court to the Court of the Governor and Council, a fee of five shillings be paid into Court by the appellant."

After the appointment of a Recorder (1839), the administration of justice in the General Quarterly Court practically devolved upon that officer.

Although the provisions of the 1st and 2nd Geo. IV., c. 66, section 12, limited the jurisdiction of the Courts to be created under that statute, in criminal cases to non-capital offences, and in civil cases to the amount of two hundred pounds, no such limit had ever been imposed upon the courts existing under the Royal Charter, and they exercised civil and criminal jurisdiction without any limitation as to the amount demanded or the character of the offence. The form of trial was in accordance with English practice, viz.,—with the aid of a jury, and either party might make the other a witness. These courts had also, under the Charter, the power to try offenders who were sent to them from the distant parts of the country where there might be no Governor and Council to try them. The words of the charter that gave this power are as follows:—"That the Governor and his Council of the several and respective places where the said Company shall have plantations, forts, factories, colonies or places of trade within any the countries, lands or territories hereby granted may have power to judge all persons belonging to the said Governor and Company, or that shall live under them in all causes, whether civil or criminal according to the laws of this Kingdom, and to execute justice accordingly; and in case any Crime or Misdemeanour shall be committed in any of the said Companies, plantations, forts, factories or places of trade within the limits aforesaid where Judicature cannot be executed for the want of a Governor and Council there, then in such case, it shall and may be lawful for the Chief Factor of that place and his Council to transmit the party, together with the offence to such other plantation, factory or fort where there shall be a Governor and Council, where justice may be executed or into this Kingdom of England, as shall be thought most convenient." 20

By the local laws, Constables to the number of twelve, holding office for three years, and at an annual salary of twelve pounds sterling, were appointed by the Magistrates who assembled once in each year (on the last Thursday) for the purpose of appointing to vacancies and considering complaints. The constables were liable for misconduct to be suspended by the Petty Courts or by the magistrate, and to be dismissed by the General Court.

2. Petty Courts were constituted under the authority of the same laws, having cognizance of debts (except those due to the public revenue) not exceeding five pounds sterling; and also of all petty offences punishable by not more than forty shillings fine or penalty, and had special jurisdiction of cases arising from breach of the liquor laws, and of the laws respecting the supplying of intoxicating drinks to Indians. 30

For the purposes of these Petty Courts, the district was divided into three sections, defined in the law, for each of which a presiding and three other Magistrates were assigned, at salaries varying according to the extent of the duty to be performed in each section. The President and two Magistrates constituted a quorum, and there was an appeal to the General Court given from their judgments where they exceeded two pounds. The Petty Court of each section had jurisdiction co-extensive with the limits of such section only, and in these, as in the General Court, either party to a suit might be made a witness by the other.

Measures expedient for introduction into Province of Manitoba of the Criminal Law in force in the other Provinces of Canada.

On the 4th of January, 1871, I had the honour to make a preliminary report under this head, of my commission, and to recommend, first, that the system of criminal law and criminal procedure existing throughout the rest of the Dominion, under the Statutes of Canada of 1869, should be extended with all convenient celerity to the Province of Manitoba, to the extent, and with the amendments which I then suggested, that is to say, that the thirteen consecutive chapters of the Statutes of the Parliament of Canada of the 32nd and 33rd Viet., from chapter 18 to chapter 30 inclusively; 2ndly, that the General Court now existing, and any Court that might be constituted by the Local Legislature to supersede it, should be empowered to take cognizance of all criminal offences committed either in the Province of Manitoba or in any part of the North-West Territories; 3rdly, that in the circumstances of this country, the right possessed by the Queen's subjects in the Province of Quebec, speaking either the English or the French language, to elect to be tried by a jury composed one-half of persons speaking the language of the defence, should be extended to the inhabitants of Manitoba and the rest of the Territories.

As these suggestions and amendments have been adopted by the Parliament of Canada, since I had the honour of making that report, it becomes unnecessary that I should now repeat the reasons of law and expediency upon which they were based.

Hon. JOHN DOUGLAS ARMOUR, Judge of the Court of Queen's Bench, Ontario, Examined.

By the Chairman :

573. The Act of 1803 extended the jurisdiction of Quebec to the Indian Territories?—Yes, I was going to say this: It struck me when I was acting for the Dominion in the matter. I wrote to see if they could not get information from the Executive Council of the old Province of Quebec from 1774 to 1791, to show what view obtained, so far as the authorities were concerned, with regard to the construction of the Quebec Act, whether it meant due north or northward. The answer I got was that they had examined and there was nothing to be found there. You will find, however, the proclamation of Lord Dorchester of 24th July, 1788, divided the country into districts. The western district is the district of Hesse. He does not describe the western boundary there, but extends the district to the northward and west. Then, in 1791, the name of Hesse, Lunenburg, Nasseau, &c., were changed, Hesse becoming the western district. Then to the western district was added all other parts of Canada not already divided into districts. I thought that perhaps having found the proclamation of Lord Dorchester in 1788 dividing the country, that probably between 1774 and that time something might be found in the Executive Council office showing the view Lord Dorchester and his officers held as to the limits of the country on the west and north.

574. The commission of 1786 to Lord Dorchester ran the western limit of Quebec to the Mississippi, the commission of Lord Durham carried the western boundary of Upper Canada into Lake Superior only. Do you think that such Commissions and Proclamations could really alter boundaries established by Act of Parliament?—I do not think that any lawyer will be found who will affirm seriously that any proclamation for the purpose of dividing the Province, or any commission issued to a Governor of the Province, can have any effect whatsoever on the territorial rights of the proprietors of the country dealt with.

By Mr. Brecken :

575. Of course, it would not prejudice the rights of outside parties, but would it not be looked upon as a sort of corroborative evidence?—Of course, it would throw light upon contemporary opinion, but it could not interfere with territorial rights. When they were dividing Quebec into two Provinces I do not think they ever thought of the Hudson's Bay Company's territory at all; and the boundary line of Hudson's Bay was considered as the boundary line of the territory and not of the sheet of water. That is the view which I entertain. Some time ago I was anxious to get the return made by the Commissioners, Captain Knight and Mr. Kelsey, who accepted a commission from Queen Anne to receive possession of the forts on Hudson's Bay after the Treaty of Utrecht. Letters were sent by the King of France to Quebec, directing these forts to be given up; and I thought that the letters and the return made by these Commissioners of what they did would be important. Both Knight and Healey, I think, were Hudson's Bay people; they were both employed by the Company, and the commission was issued by the Crown to them to receive possession of these forts, not for Great Britain, but for the Hudson's Bay Company.

By Mr. Ross :

576. That is a question which is disputed; it is said they were acting for the Queen—I think there is no doubt that they were acting for the Hudson's Bay people, because they were named in the Commission as the Hudson's Bay people, to receive the forts.

By Mr. Troie :

577. Your researches have all been, I suppose, to make out a case with some degree of colour in the interests of the Dominion, and I think it is perfectly justifiable that a solicitor employed to do so should do so?—I want it to be understood, because there is sometimes a misconception when a lawyer speaks, that I am not stating the case as I would have argued it before the Commission. I am giving my conscientious view.

578. I am aware of that, but I have reference to the report read?—That report was a guide for Mr. MacMahon, who was innocent of any knowledge of the thing at all. He came to me for any notes I might have made and I gave them to him, reciting them to a shorthand writer in the rather disconnected way in which they are before the Committee.

By Mr. Robinson :

579. Let me ask you whether, upon the best consideration you can give to this question, you are not of the same opinion as you were when you prepared that statement?—Yes, I am of the same opinion.

580.—Your opinion is now the same then both as to the western and northern boundaries?—Of course the height of land forms, in my opinion, both the westerly and northerly boundaries.

Extracts from Twiss, Oregon, and some of the other memorandum left by Judge Armour, now follow:—

Twiss.

"The difficulty in executing the provisions of boundary treaties in America has arisen chiefly from adopting the data which incorrect maps have furnished, to which there has been nothing in nature corresponding, and from agreeing to certain parallels of latitude, as appearing from these maps to form good natural frontiers, but which have been found, upon actual survey, to frustrate the intentions of both parties."—Twiss, Oregon, 212.

"Maps, however, are but pictorial representations of supposed territorial limits, the evidence of which must be sought for elsewhere. There may be cases, it is true, where maps may be evidence; when, for instance, it has been specially provided that a particular map, such as Mitchell's map of North America, shall be the basis of a convention, but it is to be regretted that maps of unsurveyed districts should - “ever have been introduced into diplomatic discussions, where limits conformable to convenient physical outlines, such as head-lands or water-courses, are really sought for, and are understood to be the subject of negotiation. The pictorial features of a country which, in such cases, have been frequently assumed as the basis of the negotiation, have not unusually caused greater embarrassment to both the parties in the subsequent attempt to reconcile them with the natural features than the original question in dispute, to which they were supposed to have furnished a solution. That the name of Nouvelle France should have been applied by French authors and French maps to the country as far as the shores of the Pacific Ocean was as much to be expected as that the name of California should have been extended by the Spaniards to the entire north-west coast of America, which we know to have been the fact, from the negotiations in the Novtka Sound Controversy.”—Twiss, Oregon, page 228.

- “This is another very remarkable instance of the danger of referring even to the best maps, when territorial limits are to be regulated by the physical features of a country. There must have been a monstrous error in Mitchell’s map, which the Spanish Commissioner had before him, if such a line could have been drawn upon it from the source of the Arkansas due west to the source of the Multonarnah, the modern Willauette River.”—Twiss, Oregon, page 235.
- “The claim, however, to the westwardly extension of New France to the Pacific Ocean, requires some better evidence than the maps of the French geographers. A map can furnish no proof of territorial title; it may illustrate a claim, but it cannot prove it. The proof must be derived from facts which the law of nations recognizes as founding a title of territory. Maps, as such, that is, where they have not had a special character attached to them by treaties, merely represent the opinions of the geographers who have constructed them, which opinions are frequently founded on fictitious or erroneous statements. An examination of the collection in the King’s Library at the British Museum will remove all scepticism on this head.”—Twiss, Oregon, page 306.

TITLE BY DISCOVERY.

Great Britain alone, of all countries, was the only nation whose ships discovered the Bay and Straits of Hudson, or sailed into them, till after the granting of the Charter.

- John Cabot, a Venetian living in London, had three sons, Lewis, Sebastian, and Samlus, commissioned by the King, Henry VIII. Set sail May, 1497, and 24th June, 1497, discovered Newfoundland and the coast of Labrador, and sailed thence about as far as Chesapeake Bay. Edward VI. made him Grand Pilot of England in 1549, and pensioned him.

Sir Martin Frobisher, sent out by Queen Elizabeth with small ships in 1567, saw the coast of Labrador. Went out following year with three ships, 1577, discovered Frobisher’s Straits. Natives had arrows armed with iron points.

Queen sent him out with 15 small vessels to establish a fort on the land which she named “Meta Newguita.” Sailed May 31, 1578. Hakluyt was with him, assisted nothing.

In 1585 John Davis set out. Discovered Davis Straits and Cumberland Straits.
1586 set out on second voyage. Discovered Cumberland Island. Touched at Newfoundland on the coast of Labrador.

1587 he set out again. Named Cape Chudley and Warwick’s Forland.

- 40 In 1589 Weymouth sailed in the Discovery to Warwick’s Forland, which he found to be an island, and entered Sumley’s Inlet.

Hudson’s first voyage in 1607 discovered Hold with Hope six or seven degrees to the north of Inland, on east of Greenland. Tried to get round Greenland and return by way of Davis Straits.

Second voyage, 1608, reported nothing.

Third voyage, April 17, 1610, discovered Hudson’s Straits, named Cape Diggs and Cape Walsingham. Wintered in the Bay.

In 1612 Button set sail. Wintered at Nelson River, which he named from his mate. Resolution commanded by Button. Discovered by Ingram.

that no weather could hurt them. Betwixt both these I affixed His Majesty's Royal titles, viz. : Charles the First, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland; as also of Newfoundland and of these territories; and to the westward as far as Nova Albion; and to the northward to the latitude of 80 degrees, etc.

On the outside of the lead, I fastened a shilling and a sixpence of His Majesty's coin; under that we fastened the King's Arms fairly cut in lead, and under that the Arms of the City of Bristol. And, this being mid-summer day, we raised it on the top of the bare hill, where we had buried our dead fellows, formally by this ceremony taking possession of these territories to His Majesty's use.

October 22nd. Arrived at Bristol. Reasons that as North-West Passage can be found and that there is a good deal of land between Hudson's and Passage.

Mr. MURDOCH, C.E. and D.L.S., was examined and testified as follows:—

581. I am acquainted with the territory in dispute. I am a civil engineer in the employ of the Government. I have travelled from Winnipeg through that country to Lake Superior at different times, 20 I have travelled from Manitoba in a line almost direct to the north of Lake Nipigon, to Nipigon Bay by those routes (pointing out routes on map); also, from Thunder Bay to a point called Sandy Bay, about midway between Nipigon and Manitoba; also, further to the north, again midway between Sturgeon Lake and Sandy Lake. I have also gone by land and water as far as Fort Frances from Thunder Bay by water route. On the north of Lake Nipigon is generally a flat country, covered, immediately, to the north of the Lake, densely with spruce timber and evergreens of that description. The land is low, and in the spring of the year, swampy. As you ascend from the low grounds around the lake, you come into higher grounds. Proceeding westward, you come into portions where the soil is rich, that of the valleys in all these rocky countries being very fertile. Between the valleys, the country is rocky. As you go still further west, say to the shores of Eagle Lake, you come to a more level country.

30 By Mr. Wetton:

582. This is a hilly country throughout here?—Yes, near Sturgeon and Seady Lakes.

By Mr. De Cosmos:

583. What is the elevation of these hills?—They vary in height from 25 to 100 feet, the latter being the maximum.

By the Chairman:

584. After leaving Sandy Lake and going along the tributaries of the Winnipeg you get into a better country?—Yes; immediately around Eagle Lake, the country is more flat. You can call it a level country.

585. Into what river system does Eagle Lake run?—It runs into the English River, which runs into 40 Winnipeg.

586. What do you consider the climate in that region; is it such as to admit of the growth of wheat? I should undoubtedly say so.

587. Do not the Indians grow Indian corn at Wabegon Lake, near Gull Lake?—I think they do. I know they grow it at Fort Frances.

By Mr. Wetton:

588. You have been there in winter?—Yes; both in winter and summer.

589. How is the winter?—It is, I suppose, about the same as Quebec winters are.

590. Much snow?—Yes; a good deal.

591. At what time does spring open about the Lake of the Woods and Lake Nipigon?—At Lake Nipigon the spring does not open sometimes by two weeks as early as at Thunder Bay.

592. But at Lake of the Woods it opens quite early?—At the time I was there in March, 1873, I had to be very careful in crossing at Rat Portage, owing to the opening of the water. In fact, I saw open water at that time.

593. Do you know anything of the old colony of Assiniboia, that was established by Lord Selkirk?—As to its boundaries?

594. The Chairman :—About it generally?—I know something of the character of the soil and country. I have lived there for the last year.

595. You have, I understand, a commission from Her Majesty to the Bishop of Rupert's Land?—Yes; here is the document. It is a copy of letters patent from the Queen to the Bishop of Rupert's Land, in 1849.

596. Are you aware what extent of territory the See covered?—As given in those letters patent it extends over the entire water-shed from the Hudson's Bay coast south to the height of land, and the height of land would be the boundary.

597. Would you read the document?—

BISHOP'S COURT, March 20th, 1880.

DEAR MR. MURDOCH,—

The following is the reference in the Letters Patent founding the See of Rupert's Land to the Boundaries:—

“Whereas His Majesty King Charles the Second, by letters patent under the Great Seal of England, bearing date at Westminster, the second day of May, in the twenty-second of His Reign, and in the year of Our Lord one thousand six hundred and seventy, did incorporate a certain Company by the name of ‘The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay,’ and did in and by the said letters patent, among other things, give, grant, and confirm to the said Governor and Company, ‘All the lands and territories upon the countries, coasts, and confines of the seas, bays, lakes, rivers, brooks, and sounds in whatsoever latitude they shall be that lie within the entrance of the Straits commonly called Hudson's Straits, that was not already actually possessed or granted to any of His subjects, or possessed by the subjects of any other Christian Prince or State,’ and did, moreover, ordain and direct that the land within the said limits, territories, and places should thenceforth be reckoned and reputed as one of His plantations and Colonies of America called ‘Rupert's Land.’ * * * * *

We have determined to erect the said Colony of Rupert's Land into a Bishop's See or Diocese, to be styled the Bishopric of Rupert's Land. Now know ye, that in pursuance of such, our Royal intention, We, by these our letters patent, under the Great Seal of our United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, do erect, found, make, ordain and constitute the said Colony of Rupert's Land into a Bishop's See or Diocese, and so declare and ordain that the same shall be styled ‘the Bishopric of Rupert's Land.’”

The above description extends Rupert's Land to the sources of the rivers in any latitude. It, therefore, carries the Colony of Rupert's Land to the Rocky Mountains, to the source of the Saskatchewan and along the height of land very near to Lake Superior at some point on to the Labrador coast. Of course there is the exception of any part previously granted, etc.

But in ecclesiastical matters I never heard, and I think I may say my predecessor never heard, of any exception, and as far as we have had the means we have visited and directed the whole Colony of Rupert's Land from the height of land; and the members of the Church of England within that whole district have latterly, by mutual consent of bishops, clergy and laity, formed the Province of Rupert's Land, inclusive of only such Colony of Rupert's Land, with the knowledge and approval of the English authorities, being enabled to do so by the said authorities. The Archbishop of Canterbury, by the Queen's mandate, having consecrated additional bishops for the colony, one to reside at Moose, the Bishop of Moosenee; one to reside in the Saskatchewan, the Bishop of Saskatchewan; one to reside in the far north, the Bishop of Athabasca. And the part of the Colony of Rupert's Land still under my own care, extends east to the height of land somewhere between 70 and 40 miles from Lake Superior. I have one of my clergy stationed at Fort Frances. As for the Diocese of Moosenee, it has been practically worked and visited all round, I believe, to the height of land.

I send with this a copy of Synod reports and documents. On page 3 and 4 you will find marked the limits of the several dioceses. The Diocese of Athabasca, however, is an addition to the Colony of Rupert's Land, being under the care of the Bishop of Rupert's Land, not by letters patent, but from evangelical efforts. That district was never placed by the Queen in any See.

- 10 What I have written above upon the question of the effect of old grants, or French possessions, but it shows what was the practical of the case for many years. The Church has acted on that state of things and settled itself by it. I cannot but think it is a pity that the Province of Ontario, which is already so large and powerful in comparison with other provinces, should open up this matter of old grants, &c., for I presume the Hudson's Bay Company practically managed all the colony temporally, as the Church did spiritually.

I am, faithfully yours,

R. RUPERT'S LAND.

W. MURDOCH, Esq.

By the Chairman :

- 20 598. You have been in communication, I believe, with the Archbishop also?—Yes; his Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface, in a conversation we had on the subject, furnished me with a plan of his own, which I now exhibit.

599. Would you show the extent of his diocese and say how long it has been recognised as a diocese?—Here is a line drawn by his Grace along the international boundary line to the height of land, thence by the sinuosities of the height of land to the height of land between Hudson's Bay and Lake Winnipeg, and thence following the sinuosities of the height of land you can take in the whole extent.

By Mr. De Cosmos :

- 30 600. Where is the written or printed description of these?—It is in these maps which were furnished me by his Grace. They have been handed from Vicar to Vicar, as far back as all records they have, as the eastern boundaries of the diocese.

By the Chairman :

601. From what date back does that reckon?—His Grace does not know how far back it does extend. It was given him by his predecessor.

602. From the first missionaries, I suppose?—Yes, from the first who went there and occupied it as a diocese.

603. It is a diocese connected with Lower Canada?—I suppose so.

- 40 604. There is no incorporation by Royal charter or proclamation or anything of that kind?—Their records were lost at the time of the fire. Their records came down from the time of the old French occupation, very likely.

605. There was an Act passed in 1803 providing for the administration of justice in the Indian territories. Have you anything to show where these Indian territories were, or what was considered Indian territory by the Canadian authorities?—I have the proclamation of Sir John Coape Sherbrooke, who was then Governor General of Canada.

606. The Chairman :—In 1816, there were troubles occurring at Red River, and after the Act of 1803, the Canadian authorities were making arrests and endeavouring to maintain order in these territories?—This is the proclamation issued by Sir John Coape Sherbrooke, in English and French, which clearly shows the territory to which the Act was intended to apply:—

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas in and by a certain Statute of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, made and passed in the forty-third year of His Majesty's Reign, intituled: "An Act for extending the Jurisdiction of the Courts of Justice in the Provinces of Lower Canada and Upper Canada to the Trial and Punishment of persons guilty of Crimes and Offences within certain parts of North America, adjoining the said Provinces," it is amongst other things enacted and declared that from and after the passing of the said Statute, "All Offences committed within any of the Indian Territories or parts of America, not within the limits of either of the said Provinces of Lower or Upper Canada, or of any Civil Government of the United States of America, shall and be deemed to be Offences of the same nature, and shall be tried in the same manner and subject to the same Punishment as if the same had been committed within the Province of Lower or Upper Canada."

And whereas under and by virtue of the above in part recited Statute, Justices of the Peace have been duly nominated and appointed with power and authority to apprehend within the Indian Territories aforesaid, and to convey to this Province of Lower Canada for trial, all and every person and persons guilty of any crime or offence whatever :

And whereas there is reason to believe that divers breaches of the Peace, by acts of force and violence, have lately been committed within the aforesaid Indian Territories, and jurisdiction of the aforesaid Justices of the Peace :

I have therefore thought fit, and by and with the advice of His Majesty's Executive Council, of and for the Province of Lower Canada, to issue this Proclamation, for the purpose of bringing to punishment all persons who may have been or shall be guilty of any such act or acts of force or violence as aforesaid, or other crime and offence whatever, and to deter all others from following their pernicious example, thereby requiring all His Majesty's subjects and others within the said Indian Territories, to avoid and to discourage all acts of force and violence whatsoever, and all proceedings whatever tending to produce tumults and riots, or in any way to disturb the public peace.

And I do hereby strictly charge and command all Justices of the Peace so as aforesaid nominated and appointed under and by virtue of the above-mentioned Statute, and all Magistrates throughout this Province, and do require all others of His Majesty's subjects generally in their several and respective stations to make diligent enquiry and search to discover, apprehend and commit, or cause to be committed to lawful custody for trial, in due course of Law, pursuant to the provisions in the above-mentioned Statute contained, all persons who have been, or shall be guilty of any act or acts of force or violence as aforesaid, or of any other crime or crimes, offence and offences within the said Indian Territories, to the end that the laws may be carried into prompt execution, against all such offenders, for the preservation of peace and good order therein.

Given under my Hand and Seal at Arms, at the Castle of St. Lewis, in the city of Quebec, in the said Province of Lower Canada, this Sixteenth Day of July, in the Year of Our Lord One Thousand Eight Hundred and Sixteen, and in the Fifty-sixth Year of His Majesty's Reign.

J. C. SHERBROOKE.

Deputy Secretary.

Evidence of
Mr. Murdoch,
C.E. & D.L.S.

By the Chairman:

607. This is a very important document, because it shows clearly that the Provinces exercised jurisdiction under the Act of 1803, in the Indian territories where those troubles were taking place.

By Mr. Mousseau:

608. Where was that document deposited?—I got it from an Indian Chief called Henry Prince, who lives down on the shores of Lake Winnipeg, and it was given to him by his father.

By Mr. Ouimet:

609. What meaning would you attach to the word "northward," used in the Quebec Act, as the direction in which the western boundary of the Province should run?—As a professional man, running a line or determining a boundary of that description, as given in that Act, there is no other meaning I could put upon it but due north.

By Mr. De Cosmos:

610. Why?—Because, if anything else had been used in connection with it, such as north-east or north-west, it would define that the line tended either to the east slightly or to the west slightly, but it says distinctly northward, and it distinctly defines, in the opinion of a surveyor, that no other meaning can be attached to it, except a due north direct line.

By Mr. Ouimet:

611. Can you point out on the map at what point of a boundary between the United States and Canada would this due north line strike?—A true meridional line drawn from the junction of the Mississippi and Ohio, would pass through Lake Superior, cutting the south-westerly portion of Isle Royale, intersecting the international boundary in the sound between Isle Royale and the mainland, thence across Thunder Bay, a little to the east of Prince Arthur's Landing, running northward, thence northward a little to the west of Lake Nipigon, and thence still northward to the height of land, or the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's Territories, as shown on Devine's map of part of North America, dated 1878.

612. Does the line you have drawn as your interpretation of that due north line pass on the same boundary as that presumed to exist before the award of 1878?—Certainly, as by the Quebec Act.

By Mr. Weldon:

613. You treat the word "northward" as the direction of a line not referring to the location?—
30 Yes, as a boundary line.

P. L. MORIN called and examined:

614. I was formerly director of the Cadastral Office at Quebec, and am now a Crown Lands officer. I beg to hand the Committee a copy of the original map of Varennes de la Verandrye, the first discoverer of the Rocky Mountains. I made this copy from the original at Paris.

By the Chairman:

615. I suppose your professional duties have made you acquainted with maps?—Yes; I have had a good deal to do with maps.

616. Can you tell us anything about the country lying between Lake Superior and Hudson's Bay?—This map of Mitchell's, to which you refer me, does not appear to be correct, according to the maps I have copied at Paris. It puts the territorial line of Hudson's Bay farther south.

617. You observe in this map of Mitchell's that the rivers are made continuous from Lake Superior to Hudson's Bay.—That arises from an error in lithographing; any one can see where the height of land passes.

By Mr. Tron:

618. Were you employed by the Government to secure these papers?—Yes.

619. Under what circumstances?—They wanted to know about the affairs of the country and they sent me to Paris, two years ago.

620. Have you been employed in that section of the country?—Yes; I travelled from York, on Hudson's Bay, by way of Lake Winnipeg and Rainy River. This memorandum contains an account of my journey, and my impressions in respect to the country.

(Witness handed in his memorandum, but it does not bear on the subject of the boundaries.)

621. What were these lines drawn for on this map which you have handed in?—The one represents the line claimed by the French after the Treaty of Utrecht; the other, the line insisted on by the English. The latter, being near the water-shed, seems the most natural.

622. The French Commissioners wanted this, and the English the other line?—The English made this line, thinking it the height of land. The spirit of the treaty is to go to the height of land.

By Mr. Royal:

623. Here is Mitchell's original map, published in England. Looking at the rivers as laid down on it, you cannot tell which way they run; they are all joined together. How do you account for that?—It is simply an error of the lithographers. He has marked the heights of land, which you can easily trace. Looking at that map, no one would suppose that the Lake of the Woods or Lake Winnipeg sent their waters south to Lake Superior, but north to Hudson's Bay, as they really do.

Mr. Wm. McD. DAWSON, of Three Rivers, was examined as follows:

By Mr. Mousseau:

111. Have you any special knowledge of questions of disputed territorial boundaries, or practical experience in describing or delineating the same?—Yes. At a very early date, I had the direction of the surveys of the Ottawa River and its tributaries in connection with the lumber trade, the describing of the boundaries of timber limits and supervising their survey when required, under circumstances of great difficulty and complication in the then unexplored condition of almost the whole Ottawa Valley, and in the face of as eager contestants, with as great a variety of conflicting pretensions, and of precisely the same character as could arise with regard to the boundaries of a whole country.

112. Have you in any way specially studied the northern and western boundaries of Canada in connection with the claims of the Hudson's Bay Company as the question stood before the purchase of the rights of the company?—Yes. I wrote a report upon the subject for the Commissioner of Crown Lands at Toronto in 1857, which, I may say, has been the cause of all the controversy that has since taken place in relation thereto. It was the first paper since 1821 through which the just claims of Canada had been asserted and maintained; it has been continually used by quotation or plagiarism throughout every phase of the controversy since, and, I think I may safely say, is mainly the cause that we have redeemed and possess the vast and fertile regions of the North-West to-day.

113. Under what circumstances did you come to write that report and for what object?—I was, at that time, occupying an important position in the Crown Lands Department. Mr. Cauchon was Commissioner of Crown Lands, and a Cabinet Minister. I was generally working late at night, and was then frequently visited by Mr. Cauchon for consultation on public affairs under his surveillance, and one night, before leaving, he incidentally mentioned that a despatch had just been laid before Council by His Excellency the Governor General, from the Colonial Office, the purport of which was that the Hudson's Bay Company had made application to be allowed to resign their lease of the Indian territories, and obtain a renewal, and that it was suggested that the answer should be that it was no concern of ours, as the country did not belong to us, &c. I at once told him, I dare say somewhat excitedly, that this was a subject I had been watching for years in the interest of Canada; that the licence the Company already had did not expire for two years; that they were but playing the same game they had successfully done once already by resigning the lease before it expired, so as to get the crisis quietly over without

- any one knowing it; that the country was ours, and our future greatness and prosperity depended on reclaiming it as the just inheritance of the people of Canada. Mr. Cauchon was very much astonished, as the subject had never come under his notice before; he at once took a very warm interest in the matter, but said that in the conversation they already had on the subject there seemed to be no doubt entertained of the "validity" of the Hudson's Bay Company's Charter, and that it did not need renewal. I then explained to him the hue and cry that had been got up about the "validity of the Charter," which was a false issue, for the most part absurd and unfounded, as the Charter, so far as making them a chartered Company, was as valid as any other Royal Charter; that if any point in it were invalid as beyond the constitutional powers of the King to grant, such as the exclusive right of trade in Hudson's Bay, etc., it was a matter of secondary importance to us; but that it was not the Charter, as he had at first supposed, that they were seeking a renewal of, but a license of exclusive trade with the Indians under a special Act covering a large area of what was properly Canada, under the name of the "Indian Territory." That this Indian territory had already the nucleus of settlement established at Red River, and embraced a great part of the most fertile regions of the continent, which were the just inheritance of the people of Canada, secured to them at the surrender of the country and by the Treaty of Paris. The question then came up of the boundary of Canada, as represented on every map that hung upon the walls or met the eye everywhere, giving the northern watershed of the St. Lawrence from the United States limits as the boundary of Canada, and I explained that there was no authority whatever for such a boundary, and that it was not to be found on maps anterior to 1821. That since the date of the lease of the Indian territories granted jointly to the
- 20 North-West Fur Company of Montreal and the Hudson's Bay Company, the surveys made by the Canadian Company (a large manuscript map of which was in the Department) had been used for publication in London, and the boundaries laid down as shown at the instigation of the united lessees of the said territories as a blind which had succeeded in course of a generation in habituating people to the belief that these boundaries were real instead of imaginary. Mr. Cauchon became quite excited and entered warmly into the subject, expressing the strongest determination to defend the rights and interests of the Province—as I must do him the justice to say he always did during the period I served under him in the Crown Land Department. It was then arranged that, as a territorial matter, he was to claim the despatch as appertaining to his Department, and bring it to me to report upon. These are the circumstances, and I would only add that from the discussions that arose among Ministers, and the sending of
- 30 Judge Draper to England to appear before the Committee of Parliament, the report was very much pressed for, and was in fact written against time, which may fairly account for anything that is obscure or imperfect in it.

714. Did you then take the ground that the North-West country, embracing the Red River, the Saskatchewan, etc., were within the boundaries of Upper Canada?—Not exactly. I claimed these countries, and was sustained in that claim by the highest authorities, as the birth-right of the people of United Canada, the just inheritance of the early French settlers who had traded, settled in, and originally owned undisputedly these territories as well as the British who had succeeded unitedly with them in possessing, and unitedly with them, as for instance under Sir Alexander McKenzie, extended those territories to the Pacific and to the North Sea, without any intervention or interference, either in the way of prevention or aid from the Hudson's Bay Company, who had then made
- 40 no such pretension as they did at a later period. It might indeed seem that the claim put forward by me (and which became the ground-work of all that Canada claimed and has accomplished since) would have inured, if promptly and efficiently maintained, to the benefit of Upper Canada, but that was not a point of special importance at the time—we were one province, under one Government and one Legislature, under the same laws (except in some particulars of French and English law which did not seem to me to be of much importance), and every acre of those vast regions was as much the property of the one as the other portion of the United Province. I simply demonstrated that the country was part of that acquired by Great Britain as Canada, or la Nouvelle France, and that as such, it was the duty of our Government to claim it, whether it was technically within our Provincial boundaries, or as a dependency of Canada formed part of the "Indian territories," to which the then expiring lease gave us the opportunity of maintaining our original title.

15. What do you mean by the "Indian territories;" can you state definitely what they were?—When the first province of Quebec was constituted in 1673, it embraced a very limited portion of the country just then acquired from France, the great bulk being reserved for the benefit of the Indian nations, who were its principal inhabitants. In 1774 an Act was passed extending the boundaries of the Province of Quebec, and whatever this Act did not embrace within these boundaries continued to be reserved for the benefit of the Indians, and would therefore be the "Indian territories."

1716. How do you define the boundary prescribed by the Quebec Act of 1774, as the western boundary of the Province?—That point might be deemed sufficiently clear by itself, in the terms of the Statute, but seems to be involved in some difficulty by reason of official mistakes. The other boundaries of the Province are described with such minute accuracy of detail that the vagueness of "northward" taken by itself, would, in my mind, imply some condition by which its precise direction would be guided. It would not necessarily be a due north line. It might be to the east or to the west of north, according, as these conditions prevailed, the one way or the other; but if all conditions failed it would, of necessity, be due north. The conditions are:—1st, that starting from the Mississippi at its junction with the Ohio, it runs northward; and 2nd, that it strikes the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Co.'s territories. Taking the first, if the commission, issued immediately after the passing of the Act, was meant to interpret it, then the Mississippi would be the westerly boundary of the Province as far as it went. There is not, however, the slightest doubt but what the upper waters of the Missouri were, at that time, taken to be the Mississippi, and such a boundary would, in no sense, be called "northward," as it would be about north-west. Such a boundary would not, therefore, fulfil the first condition, and still less would it fulfil the second, as a line in continuation of the general bearing of the Mississippi, as laid down on the maps of the day, would never strike the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's territories, as then understood. Assuming, however, that the Governor's commission gave so much of the boundary as was intended to run along the Mississippi River, and that the "northward" meant from its source to the southern boundary of the Company's territories, it would equally fail in fulfilling the second condition, as, to do so, the line would require to take a new departure and a new course, and run north-easterly. Failing, therefore, in both conditions, we necessarily fall back upon a due north line, which does fulfil these conditions, as it is "northward," and strikes the southerly boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's territories, though it does not accord with the terms of the Governor's commission, which I shall deal with presently. It is hardly worth while to advert to the fact that the Mississippi, taking simply what is so designated at the present day, would fulfil the first part of the condition of the boundary in being sufficiently near north to be called "northward," but even that would not fulfil the second condition, as a continuation of the line on its general bearing would not strike the Hudson's Bay Company's territories, as then recognized, but would pass to the westward thereof. It is needless to discuss this, however, as that was not the Mississippi mentioned in the Act—neither was it the Mississippi meant or intended, even at a later period, when the independence of the United States pushed our southern boundary up to the 49th parallel on a due west course from the Lake of the Woods, as it was perfectly well known, at both those periods, that the source of the Mississippi, as now known by that name, lay to the south, or even east of south from the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods, and could not, therefore, be the Mississippi the due west line from that point was intended to intersect.

Notwithstanding, however, that these conditions fail to give the line a direction either to the east or to the west, I would not construe the Act rigidly as meaning a due north line if any contemporaneous Act of the Imperial Government had otherwise construed it, and at first sight, the Governor's commission, first issued thereafter, would seem to imply such a construction.

The instructions to the Governor simultaneously issued with that commission, would seem indeed to account for the difference between the Act and the commission, and indicate that the distinction was not matter of accident or oversight, but of design. I have already adverted to the fact that on the formation of the first Province of Quebec, in 1763, all the then recently acquired territories of Canada or New France, were reserved for the use and protection of the Indians, and only so much as was deemed necessary for the purposes of civil Government affecting the European population, erected into a Province. As a better acquaintance with the actual circumstances of the country grew up, it became expedient to extend and enlarge the Province of Quebec, and hence the Act of 1774. This Act did one of two things. It either on the one hand, abolished all separate autonomy of the Indian nations (so carefully guarded in the proclamation of 1763), abrogated all special charge of the Indians as the wards of the Crown, and extended the Province of Quebec over all the territories acquired from France by the Treaty of Paris, without any limitary line whatever; or, on the other hand, it presented a positive and defined limitary line, dependent as to its exact position upon conditions already explained, but absolute in its essential characteristics.

If the latter of these propositions were unconditionally true, I argued in the report written for the Government and signed by Mr. Cauchon in 1857, that the Act would have so expressed it by saying "due north," and read by the light of the commission and proclamation of 1791 (to be further adverted to), which were then before me, I would say so still.

If the former of these propositions were true, the converse of this might as well be assumed, and that the Act would have so expressed it as covering the whole of the acquired territory, especially as the distinction seems to have been quite well understood at the time, as evidenced by the commission and certain instructions that issued simultaneously therewith, and which, differing from the Act, undoubtedly did put the whole of the ceded territory under the Governor as "dependencies" of the province, created or enlarged by the statute. And here I think may be found the solution of the difficulty that confronted me in the hurried composition of the report of 1857, and which I had not then the time to study up, viz., as to the division between the Indian territories and Canada. A glance at that report will show that it was intended to prove, and did prove, that no part of the territory ceded by France by the treaty of 1763, including the countries on the Red River and the Saskatchewan, could possibly belong to the Hudson's Bay Company, that they simply held a license of exclusive trade with the Indians since 1821, under a specific Act for a specific and limited time, in that part of the ceded country called the "Indian territories," and that as the lease was about to expire, and United Canada then in a position to assume control of these territories, it should not be renewed.

I think it must be clearly seen that by the authority of the Imperial Government, either with or without Parliamentary sanction (although the Quebec Act of 1774 may not be held to have done so), the whole of the territory acquired from France by the Treaty of Paris was put under the Governors of Quebec, and afterwards of Lower Canada, as it was done after as well as before the division of the Province, until 1821.

The Province of Quebec and its dependencies were thus manifestly two distinct things. The "dependencies" were part of the territory acquired from France, as well as the enlarged Province of Quebec, legally constituted and bounded by the statute, was: but the Province of Quebec did not cover all, else there would have been no Indian Territories and no dependency. The Proclamation of 1763 clearly reserved the whole acquired territory as Indian territory, except the small Province of Quebec then constituted. The enlargement of that small Province was cut out of that Indian territory, the remainder of which, in the more settled state of things that was succeeding to military occupation, was naturally placed under the Governor-General as a dependency, but not as part of the Province constituted by the Act.

This leads to the inquiry of how the Proclamation of 1791, dividing the Province of Quebec, came to be issued. I have shown that there two distinct things: 1st, the Province of Quebec; and 2nd, its dependencies. By its dependencies, I apprehend there can be no difficulty in distinguishing the "Indian territories," set aside and recognized by the first act of Government performed towards the country acquired under the treaty by the Proclamation of 1763, and afterwards encroached upon, but not absorbed by the Quebec Act of 1774. The Commission issued to Lord Dorchester in the period intervening between the independence of the United States and the division of the Province of Quebec (1786) necessarily prescribed the international boundary (I here drop the word and state the fact) to the waters of the Missouri, supposed at that time to be the true Mississippi. This was no more than his previous commission in 1774 had done, and was certainly within the prerogative right of the Crown to do, even though the extreme limit of his jurisdiction may thus have gone far beyond the boundary legally provided by Statute for the Province of Quebec. In fact, it was a necessity of the case that the supreme authority, the only authority representing the territorial rights of the Crown in the country, should cover the whole of the acquired territory, whether within or without the Province constituted by the Statute, otherwise the whole country outside of the Province would have been practically abandoned.

With these precedent facts established, though the order in Council of 19th of August, and the Commission to Lord Dorchester of 12th September, 1791, very clearly defined what was to be done, it devolved upon the Lieutenant-Governor, temporarily administering the Government in the absence of his chief, to issue the proclamation for the division of the Province, which he did under date of 18th November, 1791, and expressed one part of it in words which may have a presumptive, but certainly have no intelligent meaning. It is impossible, without any data to go by, to realize how the wording of the proclamation came to be adopted. Possibly Lieut.-Governor Clarke may have been advised that the Order in Council and Commission did not cover all the territory already placed under the jurisdiction of his chief, as, for instance, by the Commission of 1786, and not realizing the distinction between the legal boundaries of the Province and its dependencies, this gentleman, who was a soldier and not a statesman, seems to have conceived the idea of adding to the act he was required to accomplish, and giving as a quotation from the verbal definition of it, words which it did not contain, and not only so, but suppressing the words which it did contain. It was this ill-conceived proclamation that seems to have exercised the Bar and the Bench in the De Reinhardt trial at Quebec in 1818, and without sifting the discrepancy, of which the above appears to be the only possible explanation, the judges held to their interpretation of the Act, pure and simple, as they found it in the Statutes. I must confess that taking the proclamation of 1791, as elaborated by Messrs. Stuart and Vallière de St. Réal, then reputed the ablest counsel in the country, and not noticing that it was in conflict with every other official act of the time, so far as these acts have yet become available, and which were not, in fact, available at that time for reference, I was thereby influenced in the indecision or doubt I expressed regarding the precise division between Canada and the Indian territories; but I must here add that it had no effect whatever upon the conclusions I then arrived at, and still adhere to, as absolutely beyond the possibility of intelligent contradiction, upon the true extent of Canada unitedly with its dependencies, the "Indian territories," as against the pretensions of the Hudson's Bay Company, which was a matter of undoubted historical fact, public law, long acknowledged possessory right, and fully admitted alike by the Bench and the Bar on the occasion referred to.

I would here call attention to the fact that the sole pretension of the defence in the De Reinhardt trial was, not that the Province of Quebec, as constituted by the Act of 1774, covered the territory in question; on the contrary, it was clearly admitted that it did not, but that in the division of the Province of Quebec, under the Act of 1791, the King not only divided the Province of Quebec, but by the exercise of His Royal Prerogative, added to that part of it which became Upper Canada.

This was the pretension, and it rested solely upon the Proclamation of 1791.

It, therefore, becomes a matter of the first importance to ascertain what this Proclamation amounted to, on which two pertinent questions arise:—

1st. Was it authentic—by which I do not mean any question as to its having gone through all the forms and been duly promulgated, as it professes to have been, but as to any authentic authority given to the Lieut.-Governor by the Crown, to add the words, or rather substitute the words which have been the cause of all the controversy, and which differ from every other authentic authority of the day that has yet been brought to light?

2ad. Assuming its authenticity and authority as proved, does it really do that which has been attributed to it and add to Upper Canada more than a specific allotment out of the pre-existing Province of Quebec?

If either of these conditions fail, the whole fabric on which the pretension of claiming a boundary, beyond that assigned by Statute to the Province of Quebec, has been raised, that would embrace the Indian territories in Upper Canada, crumbles to the ground.

On the first of these it may not be surprising that in the De Reinhardt trial neither the Bench nor the Bar seem to have questioned the authenticity of the authority under which Lieut.-Governor Clarke issued the Proclamation in question, containing the added words; it was, as a matter of course, taken for granted that it issued in its entirety under the direct mandate of the Crown. And yet we have the fact now plainly established, that every contemporary act of authority was in direct contradiction of the meaning attributed to the words added or substituted. The Order in Council of 24th August, the commission to Lord Dorchester of 12th September, clearly describing Upper Canada as comprehending such territories west of the dividing line, "as were part of our Province of Quebec," and no more, and the instructions to his Lordship, again stating the boundary to be "as in our said commission is particularly expressed," must all have reached Quebec just shortly before the Proclamation issued on 18th November, 1791, and were all in direct contradiction of it; and not only so, but every subsequent commission up to that of the Earl of Durham in 1838, contained precisely the same definition and in the same words, making the westerly boundary of Upper Canada identical with that of the pre-existing Province of Quebec as constituted by the Statute of 1774.

The words added by Lieutenant-Governor, General Alured Clarke, were therefore without authority, and, consequently, were and are without effect.

But, on the second of these points, do the words substituted by Governor Clarke really convey the meaning so extensively attributed to them? A vaguely-expressed idea, indistinct and meaningless, may sometimes, rashly interpreted, get hold of men's minds and become widely expatiated upon, while no one ever thinks of any close analysis of the original, but takes for granted any supposed meaning that may have been once attached to it, and makes that instead of the real meaning the ground of long disputation. Any one accustomed, however, to the delineation of complicated boundaries, on sitting down, pencil in hand and map before him, to apply specific words with mathematical precision to intelligent results, will very soon come to a point of error, if it exists, that will bring the matter to a stand. Such seems to be the case with regard to the Proclamation of 1791, and the unauthorized words it contains, which, when tried by the test of the most superficial analysis are found to be utterly meaningless.

Let anyone read the proclamation and see whether it says that Upper Canada shall have an extent greater than its allotted portion of the divided Province of Quebec. The description is precisely the same as in all the other authorities up to the words "boundary line of Hudson's Bay." The other authorities continue: "The Province of Upper Canada to comprehend all such lands, territories, and islands lying to the westward of the said line of division as were part of our Province of Quebec; and the Province of Lower Canada to comprehend all such lands, territories, and islands lying to the eastward of the said line of division as were part of our said Province of Quebec." That is at least clear and explicit, but instead of this the proclamation continues, "including all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada."

These words do not follow, they are substituted, for the words that declare what shall be Upper and what shall be Lower Canada. Had the declaration of what should be Upper Canada been inserted and followed by these words, the meaning would at least have been intelligible and apparent, and it would have only remained to consider whether Governor Clarke had the power to make the change.

But as the words stand, let me ask, in what was this territory "to the westward and southward, etc.," included? Not in the Province of Upper Canada! The proclamation does not say so. Let me read from the document itself, leaving out the mere description of the line, "that our Province of Quebec

"should be divided into two distinct Provinces, to be called the Province of Upper Canada and the Province of Lower Canada, by separating the said two Provinces according to the following line of division"—"including all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada." Now, the introduction of the description of the line does not alter the sense in the least; it is still the "line of division," (as described) "including all the territory, etc." What is it, then, that has the privilege of "including" all that territory? Is it Upper Canada or is it Lower Canada? The proclamation does not say, and the only grammatical solution the construction of the sentence is susceptible of is that the "line of division" includes itself and all the territory to the westward and southward of itself. And yet it is on such nonsense as this, substituted for language the most clear and definite that could be put in words, that the claim has been preferred to half a continent.

There may, indeed, be a presumption that it was the intention to include all the territory, etc., within the limits of Upper Canada, but the intention of the writer, if such it was, has not been expressed in intelligible language. It is not, however, clear that it was even the intention, as there may have been some correspondence indicating that the unorganized or Indian territories should remain in some way under the Governor General (as they did before and as they did after), and which, misinterpreted, may have caused the error, for, according to the words used, and the only possible grammatical application of them, it is Lower Canada as well as Upper Canada and the line of division that includes all the territory, etc. The proclamation does not say that Upper Canada is to the west of the line of division, nor that Lower Canada is to the east of it. It simply describes the line of division as including all the territory, etc.

To elucidate any intention that may have existed by the correspondence of that day, there seems to have been no inquiry or investigation by the Dominion, and the volumes published by Ontario have not resulted from researches made on every point in the right direction. The inquiry would only be interesting, however, as affecting matters of historic research, as the facts already available are quite sufficient to establish the point now in controversy.

I need only further remark on the Indian territories that they were, though vaguely, defined by the proclamation of 1763, as embracing all the lands not covered by the Province then constituted, including the lands to the north-west beyond the sources of the rivers flowing from that direction. They were encroached upon to some extent by the Quebec Act in 1774, and by instructions of that date put as "dependencies" under the Governor of Quebec. In 1803 they were legislated specially for, and again put more particularly under the jurisdiction of Lower Canada, in virtue of which commissions of the peace were issued and criminals arrested and brought therefrom for trial in the courts of that Province. On one of these trials a question arose as to whether the boundary between Upper Canada and the Indian territories was governed by the Quebec Act of 1774 or by the Proclamation of 1791, and a judicial decision was then rendered that such boundary was governed by the Act, and that the interpretation of the word "northward," as used in the Act, was due north. This decision was taken to England by appeal, or reference by consent, to the Imperial authorities, but was not reversed, and therefore remains of binding force as to what was then the boundary, unless and until some constituted tribunal of higher authority declares otherwise.

Trials took place about the same time in Upper Canada for offences committed in the same region west of Lake Superior, as being within that Province, but without result or judicial decision on the point involved. By the Act of 1821, the "Indian territories" were put more particularly under the jurisdiction of Upper as well as Lower Canada, but without further definition of their boundaries, and by the exclusive license of trade with the Indians granted jointly to the fur companies of Montreal and Hudson's Bay, were practically lost sight of by the people of Canada for, I may say, more than a generation, when the application of the company for a new lease, the action taken in Canada as already described, and the inquiry before a committee of the House of Commons in England brought on the agitation that has ultimately—though not so soon, nor on the terms we should have had it—put us in possession of the country.

Evidence given before Committee of House of Commons, Canada, March, 1880. Evidence of Mr. Wm. McD. Dawson of Three Rivers.

I submit copy of the report I wrote for the Commissioner by which this matter was first brought into notice in 1857, the evidence I gave before a Committee of the Legislature the same year, and also a set of resolutions I moved during the following year in Parliament, to which I had been elected for Three Rivers in the interim. These resolutions were negatived through influence it is not necessary now to dwell upon, but I may call attention to the fact, that these papers maintain the just rights of Canada, unfettered by sectional divisions, just as I maintain them to-day; and if any sectional discrepancy appears as to the division between Canada and the Indian territories, it will scarcely seem strange that a document—the Proclamation of 1791—emanating from the highest authority in the country, professedly under the Order of the King in Council, after having been argued upon before the court of highest jurisdiction, without exception being taken by the Bench or the Bar as to the authority from which it professed to emanate, or the meaning that was attributed to its verbal construction, should have been taken by me in the light which it was thus placed before the world, notwithstanding that a scrutiny, to which I had not then subjected its contents, and examination of the documents on which it was founded now show that it had neither the authority claimed for it, nor conveyed the meaning attributed to it.

Q. Have you examined the boundary prescribed by the Arbitrators appointed by the Dominion of the Province of Ontario, and can you state upon what ground of history or fact it rests, or can be maintained?—With all possible respect for the Arbitrators, two of whom I have known well and esteemed highly, and the other of whom, occupying a diplomatic position that commands the confidence and respect of two great nations, is entitled to the highest consideration, I must nevertheless candidly say that their decision has no basis whatever of history or fact to sustain it. If the Arbitrators conceived that they were to make a boundary, it was, of course, a matter of opinion as to where it would be suitable to place it, in which they would be right to exercise their own judgment and views of expediency; but if they had merely to examine and declare where the boundary was, or where it had ever been, they have adopted that which was not a possible one. They had, I think, one of three things open to them to declare. 1st. That Ontario embraced the whole North-West Territory under the Proclamation of 1791, which I have just dismissed as untenable. 2nd. That it was bounded by the line prescribed by the Quebec Act in 1774; or 3rd. That a more recent definition which they seem to have intended to adopt in part, should prevail. The boundary they have adopted was not a possible one under any circumstances.

As to the first, apart from the untenable character of any proposition based upon the proclamation of 1791, with the analysis I have just given of its contents, I think that Ontario practically entered confederation without it, as well as that Confederation would have been practically impossible with it, as the smaller Provinces would not have consented to stand like pigmies beneath the shadow of a colossus; assuredly objection would have been taken by Lower Canada, already stripped by the division of the Province in 1791 of the just inheritance of her people (jointly considered as regards both races), and a new Province established in the very garden of the then available country, whose people, rapidly accumulating the wealth that soil and climate poured for them into the lap of plenty, have been sometimes but too ready to decry the less rapid advance of those whose lot has been cast in the more sterile regions of the north; and finally, if Ontario even had any such colourable claim, she abandoned it when a majority of her representatives voted for the erection of the Province of Manitoba.

As to the 2nd, had the British North America Act declared that the Province of Ontario should consist of Upper Canada as it had existed for 47 years, (from 1791 till 1838), instead of as it existed at the passing of that Act, it would very clearly have embraced all that it had originally possessed as the western division of the former Province of Quebec; but its description having been changed by competent authority at the last-named date, it ceased to have the same boundaries as before and entered confederation as it then existed.

On the 3rd alternative, therefore, that was open to the Arbitrators, and which they seem to have intended to, and did in part, adopt, I would observe:—that, for a consecutive period of 47 years, in every document issued by competent authority, after describing the divisional line drawn due north from the head of Lake Temisamingue “to the boundary line of Hudson’s Bay,” the Province of Upper Canada was declared in the most brief and intelligible language as simply "to comprehend all such lands, territories, and islands lying to the westward of the said line of division as were part of our Province of Quebec." Its boundary on the north, therefore, was the "boundary line of Hudson's Bay," which, by the Statute which gave a limit to its boundary in that direction, necessarily was the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company territories, wherever that might be found. It was positively restricted by Statute from going further. Its westerly extension has already been fully dealt with.

In 1838, however, the description was entirely remodelled, all reference to what it had been as a division of the former Province of Quebec expunged, a new description formulated and a new, distinct and in some respects, entirely different boundary given to Upper Canada by competent authority, as embodied in the commission to Lord Durham, and continued in every succeeding description thereafter.

By this new boundary the Province of Upper Canada was extended on the north to the "shore" of Hudson's Bay, and curtailed on the west to the entrance "into Lake Superior."

I observe that it has been contended that "the boundary line of Hudson's Bay" and "the shore of Hudson's Bay" were convertible terms and meant one and the same thing. I cannot admit this; the law does not admit it, for it has declared that a territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company existed, and if it existed it had to be found somewhere between its southern boundary and the shore of Hudson's Bay, and its southern boundary being, by Statute law, the northern boundary of the Province of Upper Canada, it could not be identical with the shore of Hudson's Bay.

The question then arises, had the Crown the prerogative right to extend the boundary of Upper Canada to the north beyond that provided by Statute, and if so did that right include the power to extend it over any part of the Hudson's Bay Company's territories? On this point, it may be observed that the Hudson's Bay Company's territories had already been put by law (Act of 1821) very effectually under the Government of Upper as well as Lower Canada—reserving whatever peculiar rights may have appertained to them under their charter. The Hudson's Bay Company were a trading concern, having certain rights, but they were not a government—notwithstanding that they made some pretensions in that direction, and, I see nothing in the law, as it then stood, to render it incompatible for the Royal prerogative to have extended the limits of Upper or of Lower Canada over these territories, reserving the rights of the Company as the law already did.

This seems to have been the view taken by the Arbitrators, for they commence their description at the shore of Hudson's Bay where an extension of the due north line from the head of Lake Temisamingue would reach it.

It would not, however, appear to be the view taken by the Department of the Interior, if I may judge by the Dominion maps issued since the sitting of the Arbitrators, for these maps carry the boundary of Ontario to the shore of Hudson's Bay as if the Arbitrators had made a boundary line there, but do not carry the contiguous boundary of Quebec to the same point, but indicate it as extending only to what may have been considered "the boundary line of Hudson's Bay." The Department must necessarily be in error in this, for the Arbitrators have not made nor declared a boundary for Ontario between these points. They have assumed it as existing by commencing at the shore of Hudson's Bay; but if the Department is right, there is a hiatus and no legal boundary whatever provided for Ontario in the large gap between the point where the boundary of Quebec is made to terminate and the point where the Arbitrators commence their description; for if they were right in commencing there, Quebec also extends contiguously to the same point, as the same extension of Lower Canada to the North was made in 1838 as of Upper Canada in a separate and distinct description.

I think, therefore, that in commencing their description at the shore of Hudson's Bay, the Arbitrators were correct, and that the Crown had the prerogative right to extend the boundary to that point, just as the first Province of Quebec was created in 1763, and as the extended province of Quebec might have been further added to by Proclamation in 1791, had it been so done by proper authorization, and conveyed in intelligible language, which it was not.

I now come to the other point, the curtailment of the Province on the West by the same instrument the Arbitrators have recognized as extending it on the North.

By that instrument it will be seen that all reference to the former Province of Quebec, to be found in every antecedent descriptive act of authority for the preceding forty-seven years, is entirely dropped, and a new description, complete within itself, formulated, not resting upon any previous law, proclamation, or order. From that date, the Province of Upper Canada no longer subsisted as a divisional part of the old Province of Quebec; it subsisted from that date independently, on the merits of the description by which it was duly designated by competent authority, and by which its limits were extended to the "shore" of Hudson's Bay on the north, and curtailed to the entrance "into Lake Superior" on the west. I apprehend that there can be no constitutional objection to the prerogative right of the Crown to make the extension. Those who maintain that the Province of Quebec was extended by the Proclamation of 1791 cannot, at least, controvert it. If, then, it was a constitutional exercise of the prerogative to extend it to the north, as assumed by the Arbitrators and acquiesced in by Ontario, how can the legal exercise of the prerogative, authorised by a specific provision of statute law to curtail it in the west, be denied? That specific provision of law will be found in the Quebec Act of 1774, enlarging the Province by certain additions that were to subsist only "during His Majesty's pleasure," by which power was undoubtedly given to the Crown to curtail it again, which was done by the new and specific description most carefully and minutely drawn up for the Earl of Durham, in 1838, and continued thereafter.

I conclude, therefore, that the Arbitrators were right in their construction of that part of the description of Upper Canada, existing at the time of the passing of the B. N. A. Act—as it was, in fact, contemplated for by the Ontario Government—by which the Province had been, about thirty years before, extended to the shore of Hudson's Bay; and that, whether from their not being experts in matters of the kind, accustomed to deal with questions of boundary, or from the exceedingly defective manner in which the case for the Dominion was placed before them—which was, in fact, no case at all—they failed to give effect to the whole description, on one part of which they acted, and consequently failed to define correctly the western limit of the Province.

The following is the description of Upper Canada as it entered Confederation:—

"The said Province being bounded on the east by the line dividing that Province from Lower Canada, beginning at a stone boundary on the north bank of the Lake St. Francis, at the cove west of the Point au Beaudet, in the limit between the Township of Lancaster and the Seigneurie of New Longueuil, running along the said limit in the direction of north thirty-four degrees west, to the westernmost angle of the said Seigneurie of New Longueuil; thence along the north-western boundary of the Seigneurie of Vaudreuil, running north twenty-five degrees east, until it strikes the Ottawa River, to ascend the said river into the Lake Temiscamingue; the said Province of Upper Canada being also bounded by a line drawn due north from the head of the said lake until it reaches the shore of Hudson's Bay; the said Province of Upper Canada being bounded on the south, beginning at the said stone boundary between Lancaster and Longueuil, by the Lake St. Francis, the River St. Lawrence, the Lake of the Thousand Islands, Lake Ontario, the River Niagara, (1), Lake Erie, and along the middle of that Lake; on the west by the channel of Detroit, Lake St. Clair, up the River St. Clair, Lake Huron, the west shore of Drummond Island, that of St. Joseph and Sugar Island, thence into Lake Superior."

That description gives as its easterly boundary from the Ottawa, a due north line to the shore of Hudson's Bay, and as its westerly limit the commencement of Lake Superior; and taking the description simply on its own merits, on the one point as well as the other, its westerly boundary must run from its extreme westerly extension, where it enters Lake Superior, parallel to its eastern, due north to the shore of Hudson's Bay.

By Mr. Ross:

717. Does that agree with your contention as to the northward line from the confluence of the Mississippi; it will be 200 miles short of that?—That was previous to 1838. I take the ground that

718. Why due north from the east end of Lake Superior, instead of striking a line from the east end of Lake Superior diagonally across the country to the shore of Hudson's Bay? What authority have you for going due north?—Because, as a general principle, if you give a description due east or due west or due north, say, for instance, due north from the head of Lake Temiscamingus, and extend the Province so far westward, then your western boundary is naturally a boundary parallel to the eastern, unless otherwise described.

719. That is merely an inference. Where would that line due north from Lake Superior terminate?—At the shore of Hudson's Bay.

720. It would strike Hudson's Bay?—Certainly; it would still go parallel to a due north line from the confluence of the Mississippi and Ohio. I was going to remark, in reply to the suggestion that I differed so much from everybody else, that I did so also when I wrote that report in 1857, if other had given the subject any consideration. I might turn out as near right now as then.

721. You were the first explorer. Does that statement substantially agree with your report of 1857?—Yes; except in this, that I did not raise then the question of inter-provincial boundary. I was claiming the country for Canada as a whole.

By Mr. De Cosmos:

722. You stated that licenses were granted to Montreal Companies to trade in the Indian territory. Who granted the licenses, to whom were they granted, and where was the eastern boundary of the territory?—The licenses were granted under the Imperial Act of 1821, which had been passed in consequence of the troubles and bloodshed that had occurred there between the two companies, the North-West Company of Montreal and the Hudson's Bay Company. The license was granted by the Imperial Government, and these two companies united and settled their differences. The first license to exclusive trade with the Indians was granted to the North-West Company of Montreal, the Right Honorable Edward Ellis and others (conjointly with the Hudson's Bay Company), who afterwards became the strongest advocates of the claims of the Hudson's Bay Company, of which they had previously been the strongest opponents. The actual boundaries of the territory were not definitely described any more than they had been at any previous period.

Committee adjourned.

The Committee met.

Mr. W. McD. Dawson re-called and further examined:—

By Mr. Ross:

723. Did you ever see the lease that was made to the North-West Fur Company of Montreal for trading in furs in the Indian territories?—You mean the lease that was made to them jointly with the Hudson's Bay Company?

724. Yes?—I have seen it. It was made on December 6th, 1821, and was resigned in 1838, two years before the time at which it would have expired.

By Mr. Trov:

725. What object had the company in resigning the lease?—The object stated was that the North-West Company had sold out to the Hudson's Bay Company, but in fact the former company became incorporated with the latter.

By Mr. Ross:

726. What powers, under the joint lease to the North-West Fur Company, and to the Hudson's Bay Company, did these companies exercise in the country in question; were they territorial powers or powers to trade?—They were simply and exclusively powers to trade with the Indians. The true object of resigning the lease was, I may say, to blind the eyes of the Canadian people by making it appear that all this country that had been leased to them as Indian territory came in fact under their charter.

Sec. II.
Evidence given before Committee of
House of Commons,
Canada,
March, 1880.
Evidence of
Mr. Wm. McD.
Dawson of Three Rivers.

727. Will you explain as near as you can over what area of country they traded; and over what area you think they had a right to trade?—You mean the two companies jointly.

728. Yes?—They traded over precisely the same country as the two companies had traded over before when separate. The North-West Company traded, for instance, in succession to the French over the whole country from Lake Superior, first to the Rocky Mountains, and afterwards through the discoveries of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, to the North Sea by the Mackenzie River, and to the Pacific by the Fraser River and the Columbia.

729. So that they traded over all that is now Canada with the exception of Quebec and the Maritime Provinces?—They traded from Lake Superior to the Pacific and to the North Sea. The North-West Company, in succession to the French, were the first to do so. The Hudson's Bay Company made their first post in the interior in 1774. They had never gone into the interior from the shores of Hudson's Bay before that.

By Mr. Royal :

730. But it is a fact that the fur-trading posts of the French had been established in that part of Canada before the cession of the country to England? Most undoubtedly. There was Fort Bourbon, near the mouth of the Saskatchewan, Fort La Reine, Fort Maurepas, Fort Rouge, and others on the Red River, the Winnipeg, Rainy Lake, etc.; all these were established before the French ceded the country.

By Mr. Trow :

731. Did you, in your report, question the validity of the Hudson's Bay Company's Charter? I explained that in the first part of my evidence. The validity of the Hudson's Bay Company's Charter had been a subject of question before. I ignored that controversy altogether. I admitted the validity of their Charter so far as it made them a chartered company, but I denied that it covered the territories ceded by France, which were occupied in succession to the French by Canadians, British and French together, and became known as the Indian territories.

By Mr. Royal :

732. I suppose you have noticed the evidence given before this Committee by judges on the effect of proclamations and commissions to Governors. You have in your last evidence referred to these commissions in connection with this question?—Yes, I remark upon it, that since I was before the Committee on Friday, my attention has been called to the fact that some hon. judges who were examined do not attach much importance to descriptions in Governor's commissions or even proclamations that would over-ride boundaries established by law. But my contention does not conflict with this: When Upper Canada was curtailed on the west by the commission issued to Lord Durham in 1838, it was in strict accordance with a specific provision of law; and when it was by the same instrument extended on the north over a part of what could not but be deemed as appertaining to the Hudson's Bay Company's Territory, there not only was no law violated, but the deed had been already, in effect, accomplished and all but completed by the Act of 1821 extending the jurisdiction of the Province over it.

I assume that Lord Durham's commission correctly designated the limits of the Provinces, to the government of which he was appointed under very exceptional circumstances. It is needless to refer to these circumstance further than to say that they were such as to cause the deepest anxiety to the British Government, and to ensure to every act affecting the interests of the country, the closest and most careful supervision. When, then, we find under these circumstances a most careful and studied revision of the boundaries by which these Provinces had been continuously designated for 47 years previous, I am compelled to assume that the change was an intentional, a deliberate, and a legal one, effected at a time when the state of this country made every Act in relation to it a matter of great care and anxiety. It must therefore have undergone the most anxious consideration of the whole Cabinet, and been found both expedient and entirely within the powers of the Crown, under the ablest advice and the best legal acumen the British Government could command.

With these facts established, therefore, no expert in such matters, with this description before him, can, I think, for a moment hesitate in laying down the boundaries of Upper Canada, under which her distinct autonomy, both separate and in Union with Lower Canada, had been continuously recognised for about 30 years before the passing of the B.N.A. Act, with that mathematical precision that leaves no doubt. There may be room for argument on one point, on which the description is not fully closed, but not of sufficient force to create a rational doubt. The northerly and easterly boundaries are first described, and the most northerly limit is the shore of Hudson's Bay on a line continued due north from the head of Lake Temiscamingue; the south and south-westerly boundaries are then described, and the most westerly limit is the commencement of Lake Superior; you can go no farther, the shore of Hudson's Bay is the limit on the north; the entrance to Lake Superior is the limit on the west; you can only close the boundaries by connecting these two points, and there is but one rational way to do it, by producing from your last-named western limit a westerly boundary, parallel to the eastern, to the other objective point, the shore of Hudson's Bay: your only alternative would be to connect your two objective points by a direct line; but I don't think it admissible. When you have got an eastern boundary distinctly described, and a westerly extension to a given spot specially named, a parallel line to your eastern necessarily becomes your western boundary. You certainly cannot go west of it.

Upper Canada, then, ceased to be a constituent part of the former Province of Quebec in 1838. From that time it had a separate and distinct identity with which, with that specific description and these boundaries, it entered Confederation, and no pre-existing state of things or past history can shake it.

I would only further observe that the large northerly addition thereby made to the Province of Upper Canada embraces a very extensive and valuable territory, a considerable portion of it lying south of some very fine Lower Canada settlements, with a degree of westing that also favors its climatic character, while it abounds with coal or lignite and other minerals of great economic value.

I would call the attention of the Committee to another point that may have escaped notice, which is, that at the very time when this somewhat revised boundary was made in 1838, the affairs of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the joint lessees representing the Canadian interest were also under discussion before the Imperial Government on the question of resigning the first lease and obtaining a renewal, which renders it all the more unlikely that there was any misunderstanding on the part of the Imperial Ministers as to what they were doing.

It will also be observed that the Act of 1821, authorised the license of trade in the Indian territories, "not being part of the lands or territories heretofore granted" to the Hudson's Bay Company, and yet, the license when issued, while making all the other exceptions named in the Act, did not except the Hudson's Bay Company's territories; and why this was so, as must strike the most casual observer, was that to get a share in the trade of the Canadian North-West, the Hudson's Bay Company consented to the Canadian Company sharing the trade of their chartered territory, and the fact that this was all a second time under discussion during the great crisis in Canadian history (in 1838) when the amended boundaries of the Provinces were described, shows that the matter obtained the fullest consideration.

By Mr. Ross:

733. In what year did that description first appear?—1838.

734. That was Lord Durham's commission. In subsequent changes from 1838 to 1867, the year of Confederation, the Government of the old Parliament of Canada exercised jurisdiction north of Lake Superior—did they not—in the region of Thunder Bay?—They did, I think, justifiably.

735. You say they did, according to the commission of Lord Durham?—They did, notwithstanding the commission.

736. On your contention now, they would have no right to exercise jurisdiction north of Lake Superior, that is, it was outside their commission if they did. On what ground do you consider they exercised jurisdiction?—By the Act of 1803 and the Act of 1821, which were not repealed.

737. That Act of 1803 was the Act which gave them a criminal jurisdiction, and the Act of 1821 was confirmatory of that. But, besides, did not the two Provinces exercise jurisdiction in another way? Did they not expend money in the construction of works in that part of the country, on the Dawson route, for instance? How could they tax people of the old legislative union for the construction of public works outside of what was part of either the Province of Ontario or of Quebec?—I think they were justified in doing so, seeing that the jurisdiction of the country was entirely in their hands. I have discussed the subject very thoroughly in 1859 with the Colonial Minister, Lord Lytton, who coincided with me thoroughly in everything that is written in the report of 1857, heretofore referred to, and wished that Canada would go on and occupy the whole.

738. But still that would have no legal weight. We want to know the legal status of Ontario in the West?—It was the United Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada that exercised that jurisdiction, and the law gave civil as well as criminal jurisdiction over that and the whole of the Indian territories.

739. Lord Durham's commission, according to your contention, would entitle him to exercise jurisdiction to the extreme east of Lake Superior. In the face of that commission, however, he and successive governors have exercised jurisdiction all along the north shore. For instance, the uncle of my hon. friend (Mr. Robinson) entered into a treaty with the Indians along the north shore, and that is the treaty that sometimes gives us a little trouble, the treaty of 1850 with regard to the contention of the Hudson's Bay Company, because there is a tacit admission in that treaty that the company had a right to come down to the height of land for which they (the Canadian authorities) negotiated with the Indians for the disposal of a part of those lands. On what authority could they act if they did not feel their Commissions entitled them to go further west?—It is stated, in the case made for Ontario in the present controversy, that this purchase was made under a special permission granted by the British Government in 1850. The height of land being the limit of that purchase, creates no title in the territory beyond it for the Hudson's Bay Company, and the mere statement in the Treaty is only a part of the prevailing ignorance on the subject that had got hold of men's minds since 1821. Had the Treaty said territory covered by the "lease" instead of "charter," it would have been more accurate. The distinction had simply been lost sight of.

740. While you were in England, did you ever discuss these matters with other persons in authority besides Lord Lytton?—I have discussed this matter in regard to the boundaries, as regards the view I have taken of the past history of it in my reports, with the gentleman who had been principal geographer of the British Empire for a very lengthened period, Mr. Arrowsmith, and who had made all the maps and plans for the Hudson's Bay Company which designated our boundaries as being the height of land; and he entirely and absolutely concurred with me that there was no authority whatever for making the height of land the boundary. He said he had put that boundary, simply at their (the united Company's) request, upon the map of the old North-West Company of Canada, a copy of which I have referred to in the first part of my evidence as having been long on record in the Crown Lands Department.

By Mr. Ross :

741. What maps do you think the members of the English Parliament had before them when they passed the Quebec Act of 1774—when they then settled a boundary? I could not say, excepting from what information is before the Committee, more than that I presume all previous maps of the French and English were before them. I think the investigation made by Mr. Devine, which he has consolidated in the map now before the Committee, seems on the whole to be very correct.

742. I see you made some reference to the Mississippi as then known?

Mr. Weldon :—He says what was then the Mississippi is now the Missouri.

Witness :—All the maps, without exception, confirm that view.

By Mr. Ross :

743. You make the statement further in your evidence that a line drawn northward along the Mississippi, now the Missouri, would not reach the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's territory as then known?—Certainly not; neither would the line on the course of what is now recognised as the actual Mississippi strike the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company.

745. And along the Missouri it would go further west of the Hudson's Bay Company's territory?—Yes, very far; but by the Mississippi, as it is now, the line would go, though of course not so far, still a long way west of what was then recognised as the Hudson's Bay Company's territories.

746. Can a Governor's commission alter a boundary?—As an exercise of the royal prerogative, when the law specially allows it, I think so; where it is an extension out of territory not otherwise organized, and the law does not forbid it, I think so too. I would beg to state that I give these answers without having any more interest in Quebec than in Ontario, and simply as an expert giving the only possible definition of the descriptions laid before me.

By Mr. Trour :

747. The intention of the Quebec Act in defining the western boundary was for the purpose of including certain settlements west of Lake Superior, was it not?—I could not say what the intention was in that way. There was a distinct province, Illinois, at that period, which lies east of the Mississippi, and was undoubtedly part of New France, but may not have been part of Canada.

748. It was part of New France, but not of Illinois. The Mississippi was the boundary between New France and Louisiana?—It became the boundary between Canada and Louisiana by treaty afterwards.

749. What was called New France by the French extended to the Mississippi?—New France was the generic term for the whole of the French possessions, which included Louisiana.

750. But it did not include Louisiana?—It included Louisiana and Canada both; the whole was called New France.

By Mr. Robinson :

751. In your statement to us the other day you said that the Arbitrators, Sir Edward Thornton, Sir Francis Hincks, and Chief Justice Harrison, had no proper case presented to them. I think you went as far as to say that they had no case at all before them. Why do you say that?—In reply to Mr. Robinson, I may remark that, in saying the case presented by the Dominion was no case at all, I do not wish to cast any imputation upon the learned gentleman whose name is at the case, with whom I am not acquainted, but who had, evidently, after a great deal of desultory reading, failed to seize the true facts of history bearing upon it, neither do I wish to impute any dereliction to the late Ministers who placed the case in his hands, and for some of whom I entertain the highest respect, but simply that they had not made themselves masters of the subject; in which they were only like some of their predecessors, for I cannot but remember that in 1858, after the report I had written one year previous was fully before the country, the then Provincial Secretary, speaking in Parliament as the mouthpiece of the Government, after a very eloquent speech on the beauties of the North-West Territories, and a truthful assertion of my conclusions that they were part of French Canada at the time of the cession in 1763, nevertheless read the description of the boundaries of the first Province of Quebec as conveying the only title we had, and declared that we were not legally entitled to a foot of territory beyond it. I asked him under what title we held Toronto, in which the Legislature was then sitting, which, of course, gentlemen here now are well aware, was not within the first Province of Quebec, but so great was the ignorance prevailing at the time he did not even know what I meant. I am bound to say, therefore, that the Dominion case is utterly unsound and something more than that, for, after Canada, before Confederation, and the Dominion after it, had claimed the North-West Territories, and acquired whatever interest the Hudson's Bay Company had there or elsewhere, it amounts to this, that by the pressure of two powerful Governments we had compelled them to part with their possessions, and now acknowledged that their title was undisputable, that we had, in fact, bullied these gentlemen into parting with property for a song which was worth hundreds of millions, and made it the basis of an empire. To show how strong impressions sometimes get hold of men's minds that cannot easily be got rid of, I notice that my esteemed friend, the Deputy Minister of the Interior, has given evidence before this Committee in which he gives as a quotation from the Hudson's Bay Company's charter, the following words:—"Extending over and including all lands and territories drained by the waters emptying into Hudson's Bay;" whereas there are no such words in it, nor anything that, as I would translate that very absurd document, could possibly bear such a construction.

By Mr. Ross :

752. You say there are no such words in the charter?—There are no such words. You will find something else in the charter by which, provided they could reach it through Hudson's Straits, they could just as rightly claim Hong Kong, which Great Britain had since taken possession of. The charter provided that the company could make war on any heathen nation, and acquire their territory, but it restricted them from acquiring a right to any territory they found in possession of a Christian Prince or People.

753. You gave evidence before a Committee in June, 1857. You then stated as follows, speaking of the De Reinhardt trial: "De Reinhardt was found guilty and sentenced to death, but although the court refused to re-consider its decision, yet the reasoning of Messrs. Stuart and Vallière was so clear that the judges deemed it expedient that the execution should be delayed till the decision of the Imperial Government could be had upon the question of jurisdiction. The actual reasons given by the Imperial Government I have not been able to get at, but I know that when the decision was given, the prisoner was released, and that the question submitted was that of jurisdiction, as above stated." Where did you get that information?—I searched for the despatch by which De Reinhardt had been released. I searched the Governor General's office, where I found an index giving its number; but that alone of all the papers was wanting from the place where it should have been. I have since heard that the late Colonel Gogy of Quebec made a search in the records of the Quebec Court House, since burnt, and there discovered that the cause given for the release of De Reinhardt was that the murder resulted through what was known as a private war.

By Mr. Royal :

754. Between two civil companies?—Yes, the North-West and Hudson's Bay Companies. I am aware, otherwise, from reading other authorities on the subject, that it was known by the British Government as a private war.

By Mr. Weldon :

30
755. It seems that you were leaving the question of jurisdiction open here. The contention seems to have been whether the place where this murder was committed was in the Indian Territory or within the Province of Upper Canada. The whole question turned upon that, and Messrs. Stuart and Vallière's argument is entirely upon that point, and so was the decision of Chief Justice Sewell. I thought you might give us some information as to whether that question had been before the Imperial Government?—No doubt it had, but there appears to have been no decision further than that the man was released upon the other ground.

40
756. I see you, on the same occasion, when the question, "Have you made the early and present boundaries of Canada a particular subject of study; if so, state the result?" was put to you, your answer was, "The early boundaries of Canada or New France included, I think, the whole of Hudson's Bay, for I find all that part of the country granted to a trading company by the King of France, in a charter somewhat similar, but forty-three years earlier than the charter of the Hudson's Bay Company." How did you ascertain that?—It is in the history of the time that France had granted charters extending to the North Sea—wherever it might be found—previous to that. I have also shown in the document I had written previous to that evidence that such a charter was granted by France, and that the maps of Hudson's Bay produced by the French previous to the existence of the Hudson's Bay Company were the first that really showed the conformation of Hudson's Bay at all.

By Mr. Royal :

757. Those charters given by the French were merely trade licences for a very short period—five years, I think?—Precisely.

By Mr. Ross :

50
758. You have no other written documents in your possession containing your opinions on the question than this report?—No. I discussed the subject a great deal (and there are some documents

By Mr. Ross :

759 The general consensus of opinion here was that the northern boundary of Ontario was the height of land; Mr. Dawson evidently goes to the shore of Hudson's Bay?—I do that under the commission to Lord Durham. Previous to that I hold it only extended to such point as France occupied under the Treaty of Utrecht, in contradistinction to what was then ceded to England.

760. I am glad we have got that out. I wanted to know on what grounds you based that contention; you contend that we go now to the shore of Hudson's Bay, on Lord Durham's commission?—Precisely. We did before go to whatever might be considered to have been the boundary created by the Treaty of Utrecht, between the French possessions and the English; but the height of land was never made a boundary.

By Mr. Weldon :

761. Mr. Dawson's pretension is that the boundary of Upper Canada was defined by Lord Durham's Commission of 1838, was recognized and continued down to Confederation, and the Province of Ontario went into Confederation as the Province of Upper Canada, defined in Lord Durham's Commission?—Yes; the Ontario case, I would observe, accepted that definition on one point, but seems to evade it on the other.

By Mr. Ross :

762. I suppose it accepts it on the north?—Yes; but it seems to evade it on the west.

By Mr. Weldon :

763. I see in the Ontario case the description of Lower Canada taken from Lord Durham's Commission; but not the description of Upper Canada; we should also have a description of Upper Canada from Lord Durham's Commission?—I have put it in my previous evidence.

By Mr. Royal :

764. In conversation a few minutes ago, Mr. Chairman, you related the facts that led to the passing of the Imperial Act of 1803. Do you know anything further than was stated to the Committee?

The Chairman :—I have here a complete list of facts that led to it—the disturbances from 1765 to 1803.

765. Mr. Royal : Some witnesses in their evidence stated what was not exactly correct regarding the reason for the passage of the Act.

The Witness :—I may here observe to the Committee that when I wrote this report and gave that evidence I was an officer of the Government, and had full access to all the papers in the Executive Council office, had seen the early manuscripts of trials and everything else there, and was quite aware that the disturbances referred to at the time of the passing of the Act of 1803 occurred from the shores of Lake Superior back through the interior to James' Bay, and that the disturbances which caused the second Act of the same nature to be passed in 1821, were the disturbances that occurred at Red River, where the Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company and some nineteen or twenty of his people were killed in battle. It was such incidents as these that caused these troubles to be recognized as a private war.

766. Can you tell us what effect the report you wrote in 1857 had upon the state of the case as it then stood?—I am very certain that, backed by the very energetic support of Mr. Canehon, it had the effect of preventing the renewal of the lease of the Indian Territories to the Hudson's Bay Company, as I think the answer to the despatch from the Colonial Office would otherwise have been that we had no objection to the renewal of the lease, and its renewal would have been for 21 years, which would have shut us out of that country at least till it expired, say two years ago. There were many facts and circumstances, however, of that time that I do not know that I can properly divulge without much consideration. I was not, of course, sworn to secrecy, but there are many things 50 that a Minister may find it necessary to discuss with a confidential officer of the Department over which he presides, involving Cabinet secrets that require at least great circumspection on the part of such officer. I should like to add that having very strong convictions against the former pretensions of the Hudson's Bay Company (which are now but matters of history), any remark of mine that may seem harsh, does not in any way apply to individuals connected with that Company, from whom I have never received anything but the utmost courtesy, even to the extent of local assistance when pushing the opening of the route by the sending of the mail, and making preliminary improvements between Thunder Bay and Red River.

By Mr. Robinson:

Were you consulted by or did you furnish any information to the authorities of either the Local or Dominion Governments to be made use of by the Arbitrators in the matter?—No; I must say it very often seems to be the habit of Governments not to consult those who know most about the case that has to be dealt with.

REPORT OF T. K. RAMSAY, Esq., Q.C., ON THE NORTHERN AND WESTERN LIMITS OF ONTARIO.

MONTREAL, 18th March, 1873.

SIR.—I beg leave to enclose my Report on the question submitted to me as to the Northern and Western Limits of the Province of Ontario.

- 20 I have condensed the Report as much as possible; but as my statements may not appear altogether satisfactory, not being always based on precise authority, I have added notes containing proofs and illustrations in support of the conclusions at which I have arrived. Some of these may, perhaps, go into greater detail than is absolutely required, but in my investigations of the confused and often contradictory narratives of the early voyages to, and settlements in Hudson's Bay, I was obliged to examine all these details, and having done so, it was scarcely more difficult to reduce the whole result of my researches to writing than to separate the more from the less essential parts.

In the form in which these notes are presented, it is hoped they may interest, even where they do not instruct, those who may hereafter require to make use of the accompanying work.

I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

T. K. RAMSAY.

REPORT.

A difficulty having arisen as to what are the true Northern and Western boundaries of the Province of Ontario, and the question having been referred to me for my opinion, I beg leave to report the result of my investigations.

1. The limits of the Province of Ontario are defined in The British North American Act, 1867, as being such part of the Province of Canada, at the passing of the said Act, as formerly formed the Province of Upper Canada. We have, therefore, to enquire what were the limits of Upper Canada prior 40 to the Legislative Union of Upper and Lower Canada in 1840.

2. The position taken by the Government of Canada is, that the Northern and Western boundaries of the Province of Ontario are identical with so much of those laid down in the Quebec Act (14 Geo. III., cap. 83), as being the limits of the old Province of Quebec, as would not include the former Province of Lower Canada. That is to say, the western boundary of Ontario is the meridian passing through the point of junction of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers (now ascertained to be 89° 9' 27"

It is further contended that the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay territory is the height of land dividing the waters which flow into Hudson's Bay from these emptying into the valley of the St. Lawrence and the great lakes.

Report of
T. K. RAINSBY,
Q.C., March,
1873.

3. The Government of Ontario claims that the boundary is "very different" from the one set forth by the Government of Canada ; and that the western boundary is at least to be determined (north of the United States and south of Hudson's Bay territory), by a line drawn north from the source of the Mississippi, and that the northern boundary of Ontario is the southern boundaries of the Hudson's Bay 10 territories, west of the line of division between the former Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. While agreeing with the Government of Canada, in general terms, that the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay territories is the northern boundary of Ontario, the Government of that Province does not, however, admit that the height of land dividing the waters falling into Hudson's Bay from the waters falling into the St. Lawrence and the great lakes is that boundary. On the contrary, they claim that the boundary is to the north of the watershed, according to the contentions of all former Governments, and by the indisputable facts that the northern boundary lies north of the watershed of the St. Lawrence system.

The Provincial Government further contends that there are grounds for maintaining the contention of former Governments of Canada, that the western boundary is further west than the line drawn due north from the source of the Mississippi (1). 20

4. It is important, before proceeding further, to clear the way, as far as possible, the vagueness created by the reference to the pretensions of former Governments of Canada. For this purpose, it is necessary to examine what they contended, in order to know what the Government of Ontario now claims. Except for the purpose of limiting the indefinite description of the pretensions of the Ontario Government, the enquiry as to the contentions of former Governments of Canada, prior to confederation, will be barren of results. Former contentions cannot bind in any way the Dominion Government, and this appears from every consideration. (a) Former Governments were not urging precisely the same question. Incidentally they may have represented a right to a greater extent of territory than that which they possessed ; but the actual question formerly was the resistance of the claims of the Hudson's Bay Company to the renewal of a lease held by them of the Indian territories (2). The real question 30 now is, as to what was understood to be the Hudson's Bay Company's southern boundary, by the authority which fixed that of Upper Canada. (b) The Dominion Government is not liable for the opinions of former Governments ; but only for their debts and liabilities. (c) The pretensions of the Government of the Province of Canada were not admitted. On the contrary, the title of the Hudson's Bay Company was maintained ; and the Dominion Government actually paid a large sum of money for the expropriation of the Company, besides leaving them a considerable estate (3).

5. The most extreme pretension of the former Government of a portion of the now Dominion of Canada, so far as I can learn, is that put forth by the Commissioner of Crown Lands, in 1857, in a report which was not considered conclusive, in spite of its unquestionable ability. It was there 40 incidentally contended that to the north Canada was either bounded by a few isolated posts on the shore of Hudson's Bay, or that it had no particular limit in that direction, that to the west Canada includes the country about Red River and Lake Winnipeg.

6. The line of argument usually adopted turns on priority of discovery. So long as the content was carried on between two independent nations, the title derived from conquest or discovery, however unsatisfactory, was the only possible subject of discussion. But when the whole title centres in one supreme power, the question becomes simplified, and the facts to be considered acquire a more conclusive

(1) Correspondence between the Dominion Government and the Government of the Province of Ontario.

(2) M. Cauchon's Report in 1857.

(3) In a Treaty between the Government of the late Province of Canada and the Indians, "the height of land" is described as that which separates the territory covered by the Charter of the Honourable the Hudson's Bay Company from the tract over which the Government was to acquire the rights of the Indians. 50 character. It is the neglect to observe this distinction which gives the difficult aspect to the question before us. The attempt has been to submit to legal appreciation, pretensions which after years of fruitless diplomacy, were only disposed of by force (note A). Were the question a new one, I should not stop even for an instant, to enquire who first discovered and took possession of the lands round Hudson's Bay, or how far the French pushed their discoveries in the west; but from the bent given to the discussion, I cannot wholly ignore the line of argument involving these matters, although the conclusions at which I arrive will not be materially influenced by it.

7. The historical argument of those who seek to give the greatest extension to the limits of the former Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada seems to be, that these Provinces were co-extensive with La Nouvelle France. They say that the Hudson Bay charter was, if not wholly bad, at all events limited by its terms, which only grant those territories not already actually possessed by the subjects of any other Christian Prince or State, (note B) that by the right of discovery, and as part of La Nouvelle France, all the county up to the Arctic Circle belonged to France, and that in the west, Canada extended to the furthestmost post ever held by the French, which would include Red River (1).

8. It will at once strike those who examine this pretension, that it is one thing to say that Canada extended to the Arctic Ocean, and quite another to say that the territories around Hudson's Bay were first discovered by the French, independently of any connection with La Nouvelle France or Canada. Of course if the discovery of La Nouvelle France gave the King of France a right to the whole continent north of the St. Lawrence, it is idle to waste time discussing the question of particular discoveries on the side of Hudson's Bay. But this pretension is utterly untenable and an after-thought. The Commission to De Lauzon as Governor, 20th March, 1651, gives him authority—"dans toute l'étendue du dit fleuve St. Laurent en la Nouvelle France, Isles et Terres adjacentes de part et d'autre du dit fleuve et autres Rivières qui se déchargent en celui jusqu'à son Embouchure à prendre dix lieues près de Miscou du côté du Sud et du côté du Nord autant que s'étendent les terres du dit pays—De la même sorte et toute ainsi que l'avoit, tenoit et exerçoit le Sr. d'Aillebout." A similar commission was also given to De Mézy in 1663. It is therefore plain that at that time the King of France did not think that La Nouvelle France extended beyond the water-shed of the St. Lawrence (note C). It would not be difficult to make numerous extracts from ancient grants in unsettled countries to show that the grant of lands adjacent to a river was understood to be those drained by such river. A few instances will suffice. In a letter in the Paris MS. Vol. 8, p. 990, limiting the extent of the post of Temiskamingue, we find: "Ce n'est point l'intention de Sa Majesté d'affermir sous le nom de Temiskamingue plus de deux cent lieues des pays qui faisoient ci-devant la majeure partie du commerce de Montreal, puisque cela tend à la ruine de cette ville. Son intention étoit d'affermir le seul post de Temiskamingue dans ces limites qui naturellement doivent consister dans les terres arrosées de la rivière de ce nom et des autres qui se déchargent dans la dite rivière; sans que l'on puisse comprendre les terres qui sont au dessus ni au dessous de la dite rivière." The grant to the Hudson's Bay Company was of the lands and territories on the confines of certain Bays, Lakes, Rivers, Creeks, and Sounds. So completely was it understood that the watershed is the limit of a grant described by rivers, lakes, or bays, that even the use of the word "highlands" in such a grant or in a treaty will be controlled so as to mean such an elevation as divides the flow of the waters. In the decision of the King of the Netherlands upon the disputed points of Boundary under the Fifth Article of the Treaty of Ghent, between Great Britain and the United States of America, H.M. said: "Selon les exemples allégués le terme Highlands s'applique non seulement à un pays montueux ou élevé, mais encore à un terrain qui sans être montueux, sépare des eaux coulant dans une direction différente, et qui ainsi le caractère plus ou moins montueux et élevé du pays à travers lesquelles sont tirées les deux lignes respectivement réclamées, au nord et au midi de la Rivière St. John, ne saurait faire la base d'une option entre elles." In M. Bobé's (? Bolé) memoir (1) respecting the boundaries, prepared in 1723, the name of "La Nouvelle

9. The question of priority of discovery of the Hudson's Bay, and of the territories on the confines of the rivers and bays connected with the Hudson's Bay, does not appear to be in favour of French pretensions. If discovery alone is to convey a title to either nation, the French pretensions must fail.

10. It is not denied (note E) that Hudson discovered the bay which bears his name, (1) and that he wintered there in 1610-11. In the following year, Button, following in the path already traced by Hudson, discovered Nelson River, which he named after his pilot, who died during the expedition, and he passed the winter of 1612-13 in the bay. It would seem the failure of these discoverers, in their main object, to find a north-west passage, discouraged further enterprise in this direction, and (2) "the business slept from 1616 to 1631," while their attention was turned towards the South. In 1631 Luke Fox went and wintered at Nelson River. James wintered in the Bay in 1631-32 (note F.) In 1667 or 1668, Gillam, with Des Grozeliers and Radisson, (note G) went to Hudson's Bay and established himself at Rupert's river. On his return to England a Company was formed which, under the name of "The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay," obtained from Charles II. the famous Charter bearing date the 2nd May, 1670.

In the same year the Company sent out an expedition to make a permanent establishment, with Mr. Bailey as Governor, and Fort Nelson was founded as the principal post.

11. The French meet this, without denying the early discoveries of Hudson, Button, Fox, and James, by saying (3) that possession of unknown countries must be taken by some formal act, such as planting the arms of the King who claims a title to it; that those travellers have left no account of their discoveries, and consequently it is not established that they ever took possession of the countries they are said to have visited, in the name of their Sovereign. They further pretend that in 1656 Jean Bourdon sailed from Quebec and took possession of the Baie du Nord, and that this is proved by the register of the Council of New France of the 26th August, 1656. That in 1661 the Indians of the North Bay came expressly to confirm the good understanding between them and the French, and asking for a Missionary, and that Father Dablon went there in the same year. That there were expeditions of Couture and Duquet in 1663; and that the expedition at Gillam was led there by rebellious subjects, who could convey no title, and that the very fact of Des Grozeliers and Radisson being able to lead the English Captain Gillam there, shows that they had themselves been there before, and consequently had acquired the territory for the King. The French then proceed to relate the voyage of De Lauson to Sault Ste Marie in 1671, and his formal taking possession in the name of the King of France with the consent of seventeen nations, among whom were the Indians from Hudson's Bay. They also insist on the voyage of P. Albanel and St. Cimon in 1671-72.

12. This is an unfortunate answer. It either goes too far or not far enough. To get over Hudson's and Button's discoveries, it cuts off the expeditions of Couture and Duquet, of which there are no formal records. The same may be said of the overland expedition of Des Grozeliers and Radisson. Prior to the voyage of Gillam in company with them, there is no record whatever of Des Grozeliers and Radisson ever having been at Hudson's Bay, nor is it even now said in what year they were there. It is a mere rumour, in no way proved by their conducting Gillam to Hudson's Bay. The experience derived from an overland journey, even if it had taken place, could not have aided them in a voyage by sea. Again, if anything were to be drawn from the quality of these two adventurers as Frenchmen, by parity of reasoning, we should have to deprive Spain of the results of Columbus' discoveries. The presence of a foreigner, even were he the leader of the expedition, would not alter its national character. However, no mystery attends the history of Jean Bourdon's voyage in 1656 (note H). The evidence is complete that neither ever reached Hudson's Bay. Albanel's (note J) journey again, is too late to affect the question, and trading with the Indians (note K) from other countries in Canada cannot give a title to their country.

10 13. The answer of the French to the early discoveries of Hudson, Button (note L) Fox, and James, is unfounded. In the work attributed to Champlain, already quoted, (1) the map published by "the English Captain" of his discoveries in 1612 is referred to in 1632. Purchas also saw this map, and Jeremie (2) speaks of the taking possession of Bourbon river by Nelson, and says that he planted a post on which he exposed the arms of England, and a great board on which a ship was drawn. He also left some trifling articles of which the Indians profited in the spring. Jeremie says, also, that the English returned the following year; but it is more probable that they wintered at the Bay, for there it is said Nelson died, and Button gave his name to the river they discovered. Again, Fox, when he went there in 1631, saw "quelques petits monumens du sejour que Thomas Button (y) avoit autrefois," (3) In 1635 Luke Fox published "The North-West," with a map; and in 1633 James had already published his adventures with a map. James' work was republished in 1740.

20 14. We have therefore two English voyages of discovery (those of Hudson and Button) well authenticated, more than forty years before the voyage of Bourdon, of which there is no authentic mention till 1686, and then the account is evidently incorrect and written with a purpose. Fox and James' voyages to Hudson's Bay were both in 1661, the year of the pretended journey of Dablon, and two years previous to the totally authenticated journeys of Couture and Duquet. Again, the English Company was established and had built forts in 1670, whereas the Canadian Company did not begin its operations till 1682, and was not chartered till 1685. Whether then we consider priority of discovery, or discovery backed by actual acts of possession, the English claim to the country round Hudson's seems to be superior to that of the French (note M).

30 15. But it is still more worthy of note that the activity displayed by the French in the direction of Hudson's Bay dates from the time they heard that ships had been seen in the neighbourhood of the Bay (note N.) They learned this from some Algonquins (4), and they immediately became alarmed. The next year, 1671, Father Albanel was despatched with St. Cimon to take possession of the country anew. (5) It was only, however, in 1685 that the Canadian Company de la Baie du Nord was formed, (6) and the following year the Governor of Canada sent de Troyes and d'Iberville to attack the English posts in Hudson's Bay. (7) These attempts to recover lost time were such flagrant violations of international law, that the Governor was obliged to disavow the object he really had in view, and to pretext the desire to capture Radisson. (8) The excuse was a bad one, even if it had been true, and it would have been more to the purpose if he had said that the Treaty of Neutrality was not signed till the 16th November, 1686, and that his commission to de Troyes was dated the 12th February, 1686.

40 16. The effect of the Treaty of Neutrality (note O) was not, however, much felt in these out-of-the-way places, and the war between the English and French companies progressed while the Commissaries hunted up titles and exchanged statements of pretensions. Reciprocal complaints having been made, the French and English Commissaries met in London, but not being able to agree as to the facts, they adjourned until the first of January, 1689. (9) In the meantime the revolution took place, and Williams, profiting by the invasion of the Caribee Islands of the State of New York, and of the Territories of Hudson's Bay, declared war on the 8th May, 1689. On the 7th June, the King of France, presuming that owing to "the present troublesome conjuncture" in England, the English would not have adopted "great precautions in those parts" (Hudson's Bay) desired de Frontenac to afford the Canadian Company the protection it might need "as well for the expulsion of the English from the posts they occupy at Hudson's Bay as for the continuation of trade." 17. Hostilities which had been carried on at Hudson's Bay in spite of the Treaty of Neutrality, sanctioned by the Declaration of War, continued with all the force the rival Companies could command. The dashing courage of d'Iberville turned the scale in favour of the French, and the English Companies loudly complained of their losses (note P). In Europe William's appeal to arms had not produced all the results he desired, and the Treaty of Ryswick (3), by which his title to the English throne was acknowledged, was concluded with a total disregard of the rights and interests of "The Merchants Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay." Most dolefully did they complain that in the general rejoicings at peace, they alone were left to grieve (4). Nevertheless it would seem that their sufferings were not altogether insupportable, for the Commissaries named never reported (note Q), and things went on at Hudson's Bay pretty much as they had done before, until the Treaty of Utrecht (5) transferred to the English the "Bay and Straits of Hudson, together with all lands, seas, sea-coasts, rivers and places situate in the said Bay and Straits, and which belong thereunto, no tracts of land or of sea being excepted which are at present possessed by the subjects of France." But it is agreed on both sides to determine within a year by Commissaries, to be forthwith named by each party, the limits which are to be fixed between the said Bay of Hudson and the places appertaining to the French. And "the above-mentioned most Christian King" undertook that satisfaction should be given according to the rule of justice and equity, to the English Company trading to the Bay of Hudson, for all damage and spoil done to their colonies, ships, persons, and goods, by the hostile incursions and depredations of the French in time of peace, an estimate being made thereof by Commissaries to be named at the requisition of each party (6).

18. The stipulation to surrender the posts near Hudson's Bay, in the possession of the French at the time of the Treaty was at once carried out, the forts being delivered up under orders from the King of France in 1714 (7).

19. Commissaries were appointed to define the limits, but they never arrived at any decision (note R); but both countries seem to have acquiesced in the idea that the watershed, or the height of land dividing the waters which flow north from those which flow south, was the real boundary between Canada and the Hudson's Bay territory.

20. This conclusion, with only slight variation, is supported by numerous maps, both French and English, by Douglas, who gives the whole line from the Atlantic Coast; by Bellin (8), who gives the limits of Canada, and by Mr. Bouchette, Surveyor General of Canada. In the map published by the Government of Quebec in 1870, the same line of highlands is unhesitatingly adopted. As it has been already shown, the principle that the watershed was the natural limit of an unexplored country was generally acquiesced in. The rivers were the only highways, and the utmost limit of a possession could hardly be interpreted to extend further than those claiming it could go.

21. Nor is there anything to contradict this view to be found in the voluminous correspondence between the authorities in Canada and the Government of France, from the time of the Treaty of Utrecht (note S) till the Treaty of Paris, by which England acquired Canada, put an end to the possibility of a question arising between the two countries as to the boundaries of the Hudson's Bay Territories.

22. But whether the conclusion at which we have arrived be legally correct or not, in so far as regards the right of the Hudson's Bay Company to the territory claimed by them, it is clear it was so understood by the Government in England; and, being so understood, a description in a document by competent authority, giving the Hudson's Bay territory as the northern limit of Canada, would limit Canada to the line understood to be the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay territory. In other words, if the Hudson's Bay claim had been proved to be wholly unfounded, this would not of itself have extended the limits of Canada.

23. By laying down the height of land or watershed as the general rule by which the territory of Canada was to be distinguished from that of Hudson's Bay, results more important than any contemplated at that time were attained. The actual flow of the river was not then known, and it could not readily be imagined that the height of land which forms the watershed of the system of the St. Lawrence and the great lakes, should hem in as closely as it does the waters of Lake Superior. This fact, now perfectly established, reduces to very moderate proportions any claim the province of Ontario could put forward, based on the idea that the western limits of la Nouvelle France, were also those of the late Province of Canada. The Treaty of 1783, which fixes the line of division between the British possessions and the United States, cuts this height of land, and with it defines the whole boundaries of the province—north, west and south—even if the extreme pretension to which allusion has just been made were adopted.

24. But looking at the question from a strictly legal point of view, this pretension cannot be maintained. The terms of the Treaty of Paris, conveying certain territory to the Crown of England, could not possibly convey to the people of Canada, much less to any portion of them, any absolute territorial right to any particular extent of territory further than what they actually occupied, or what was afterwards conferred by competent authority (note T). They might seek to have certain limits granted them as a matter of sentiment or convenience (1), but no one has ever pretended that the English Government was obliged to maintain under one government the whole territory ceded to the Crown of England as Canada; and, in effect, no such unity has ever been attempted. The whole territory ceded by Vaudreuil as Canada, and claimed by England as such, has never for a moment been all included in any Government of Canada (note U).

25. It is unquestionable law that after the cession of Canada, and until a regular Government was conferred by Statute, the Province remained a Crown Colony, and was subject to be governed under the special ordinances and instructions of the King. Hence it is we must turn to the Proclamation of 1763, to ascertain what was thenceforward to be considered as the Province of Quebec or Canada.

26. That Proclamation sets forth that the King, with the advice of his Privy Council, had granted letters patent, creating four distinct and separate governments within the countries and islands ceded and confirmed to the Crown in England by the Treaty of Paris (1763).

27. The first of these governments, that of Quebec, was declared to be bounded on the Labrador coast by the River St. John, and from thence by a line drawn from the head of that river through the Lake St. John to the south end of the Lake Nipissing, from whence the said line, crossing the River St. Lawrence and the Lake Champlain in 45 degrees of north latitude, passes along the highlands which divide the rivers which empty themselves into the said River St. Lawrence from those which fall into the sea, and also along the north coasts of the Baie des Charleux, and the coast of the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Cape Rosier, and from thence, crossing the mouth of the River St. Lawrence by the west end of the Island of Anticosti, terminates at the aforesaid River St. John, (note V). 28. Several maps, published subsequent to the Treaty, give the limits thus described to Canada. (note W.) (1)

29. The boundary to the south-west remained unchanged till 1774 (2). It included all the settlements of any importance at that time (note X). Burke (3) says "this boundary, fixed for the Government, was so because it was the boundary of the possession, and that the people of Canada acquiesced in it." (4) But on this point, perhaps, Burke was not a totally impartial witness, and he probably expressed the extreme pretensions of the Government he represented. At any rate the people of Canada did not approve of the limitation, and by their petition in 1773, they prayed that as under the French Government, their boundaries might be extended to the Mississippi. (5) (note Y.)

30. It seems, however, of very little importance in a legal point of view, whether the old Government of Canada as a French Province, really extended to the Mississippi, or whether the people of Canada acquiesced in the limits given by the King in his letters patent constituting the Government of Quebec or not; nor indeed does it signify, for the discussion at present, how far constitutionally the King had a right to carve Provinces and Governments out of the possessions of the Crown, for we are now arrived at the time when the limits of Canada were determined by Act of Parliament.

31. The 14 Geo. III. C. 83, (1774) called the Quebec Act, after setting up the eastern boundaries, continues, and "thence along by the eastern and south-eastern bank of Lake Erie, following the said bank until the same shall be intersected by the northern boundary granted by the Charter of the Province of Pennsylvania, in case the same shall be so intersected; and from thence along the said northern and western boundaries of the said Province, until the said western boundary strike the Ohio; but in case the said bank of the lake shall not be found to be so intersected, then following the said bank until it shall arrive at that point of the said bank which shall be nearest to the north-western angle of the said Province of Pennsylvania, and thence by a right line to the said north-western angle of the said Province, and thence along the western boundary of the said Province (Pennsylvania) until it strike the Ohio; and along the bank of the said river westward to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to "The Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay." Section 2 of this Act contains the only limitation to this description; Provided always, that nothing herein contained relative to the boundary of the Province of Quebec, shall in anywise affect the boundaries of any other Colony."

32. The boundaries laid down by the Act were deliberately adopted after much discussion (6). All the parties were either represented directly in the house or were heard by petition; and very notably the petition of the Canadians of the previous year had received due attention. The only difficulty which remained was foreseen. The unsurveyed boundary of the Province of Pennsylvania might, or it might not strike the bank of Lake Erie, and both cases were provided for; but about the line of the Ohio there could be no doubt. From the point at which it cut the western line of the Province of Pennsylvania, it constituted the boundary of Canada, until its confluence with the Mississippi. From that point the line was clearly defined; it was a due north line, for that is the only interpretation which can be given to the words "northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to 'Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay.'" (note Z.)

This opinion, which indeed recommends itself naturally, is supported by the decision of Chief Justice Sewell, in the trial of De Reinhard at Quebec in 1818 (7), which judicially interprets the Act of 1774 in this sense. Nor can there be any doubt that the effect of these words in the Statute, was matter of law for the court to decide (8).

Report of T.
K. Ramsay,
Q.C., March,

33. Curious to say, in the new Commission to Sir Guy Carleton, rendered necessary by the Act of 1774, a somewhat different boundary is described. After following the description of the Statute till the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi, the Commission goes on: "and northward along the eastern bank of the said river to the southern boundary of the territory granted to 'The Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay.'" The words in italics are an evident and every material addition to the Statute: and they either fell in with or created the general impression that Canada, before the treaty with the United States (1783), extended to the Mississippi. This description also appears in a Commission of two years later date to Sir Frederick Haldimand, and very probably in other Commissions between 1774 and 1783; but no words in letters patent could alter the express dispositions of an Act of Parliament. The only manner in which the effect of the Act of 1774 could be destroyed would be by another Act of Parliament. Was there any such?

34. The Act of 1791 does not deal with the question of the western boundaries of the Province of Quebec. The subject of the precise boundaries of Upper Canada was then of some difficulty, for the Treaty of 1783 had not made clear the line which was to divide the British possessions from the United States. In this dilemma it was thought advisable to describe "the Upper District by some general words." (1) But whether, owing to the difficulties occasioned by the Treaty of 1783 or not, all description was omitted in the Act, and the King, by his Message of the 25th February, 1791, announced his intention of dividing "the Provinces of Quebec into two Provinces to be called the Province of Upper Canada and the Province of Lower Canada," whenever His Majesty shall be enabled by Act of Parliament to establish the necessary regulations for the Government of said Provinces. The Act being passed, the King, by proclamation, declared what should be the division line, but he abstained most carefully from entering into any other description of the two Provinces, and as Lord Grenville had suggested, used "some general words." Having established the boundary line of Hudson's Bay as the northern limit, the Upper Province is said to include "all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada."

35. It is maintained that what is called or known by the name of "Canada" must be taken to mean what was then known by law (i.e., by the Act of 1774) as Canada, less the reductions under the Treaty of 1783, which are provided for by Section 2 (2) of the Act of 1774. But even if the words had another and more extended sense, it is further maintained that in so far they would be inoperative. The King's authority to make any proclamation at all to divide the Province depended on the implied consent of Parliament by the Act of 1791. He could only divide the Province of Quebec—he could not extend it by proclamation. (Note AA.)

36. This view is supported by Chief Justice Sewell in the case of De Reinhard, already cited. He said: "The intention of the Proclamation and Act of 1791 was to divide the Province, not to add to it." (Note BB.)

37. The Act (3) reuniting the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada simply declared "that it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, with the advice of Her Privy Council, to declare or to authorize the Governor General of the said two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada to declare, by Proclamation, that the said Provinces, upon, from and after a certain day, in such Proclamation to be appointed, which day shall be within fifteen calendar months next after the passing of this Act, shall form and be one Province, under the name of 'the Province of Canada.'"

38. The British North America Act, 1867, is equally unambitious. The Province of Canada was divided by it, and the part which formerly constituted the Province of Upper Canada was declared to constitute the Province of Ontario.

39. Canada, then, as it stood after the Act of 1774, was divided into two Provinces, the two were again re-united; but the limits of the whole were not changed in so far as regards the north-western boundaries, until the Act constituting the New Dominion became law.

40. The limits of Ontario are, therefore, to the east, the Province of Quebec; to the north, the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay territory (shown to be the height of land dividing the waters which fall into the Hudson's Bay from those which fall into the St. Lawrence and the great Lakes); to the south, the northern boundary of the United States and longitude $89^{\circ} 9' 27''$ 16 west of Greenwich to the west.

MEMO.

In the report submitted the strictly legal view has alone been considered, because it alone seemed to be within the scope of my instructions: but from the course of my investigations I could not fail to see that beyond this there is another consideration not less important, and that is the equitable side of the question. In creating the Province of Ontario it is not possible to conceive that the Imperial Legislature intended to convey to that Province and to the Province of Quebec less territory than the late Province of Canada actually enjoyed. Now it is incontestable that up to 1867 the Government of Canada, de facto, extended to the height of land which forms the watershed of the water system of the St. Lawrence and the great Lakes. This is made apparent by the registers of the Executive Council, by which we find that a Commissioner was appointed to obtain the surrender of the claims of the Indians to the lands in the vicinity of Lakes Superior and Huron, or of such of them as may be required for mining purposes. The Commissioner executed a treaty by which he obtained a portion of the very territory that would be cut off from the Province of Ontario if the dispositions of the Act of 1774 were literally observed. "From Batchewanoning Bay to Pigeon River, at the western extremity of the said Lake (Superior), and inland to that extent to the height of land which separates the territory covered by the Charter of the Honorable the Hudson's Bay Company from the said tract and also the islands in the said lake within the boundaries of the British possessions therein." 20

There are doubtless other acts of authority beyond the meridian indicated in the foregoing report. In the De Reinhard trial, Mr. Coltman, a magistrate for the District of Quebec, and a Commissioner in the Indian territory, in his evidence said: "Il est notoire que les writs des Magistrats du District ouest du Haut Canada sont émanés pour être exécutés à Fort William." It would, therefore, seem that in fairness to the Province of Ontario the old line of the height of land should be adopted as the western as well as the northern boundary of the Province of Ontario. 30

NOTES.

Note A.—"They (France and England) prepared to cut the gordian knot of this long and intricate negotiation with the sword." ("The history of the present war," by Burke, in the first number of the Annual Register. Republished separately in 1774.) 40

Note B.—It is quite unnecessary now to discuss the validity of the Charter. It should, however, be remarked that the words "limiting the grant to such territories as are not already actually possessed by the subjects of any other Christian Prince or State," ceased to have any legal value after the Treaty of Utrecht. As between the King of England and the Hudson's Bay Company there could be no contest as to the rights of the French. I do not know whether the value of the particular words "actually possessed" has ever been commented. They exclude the idea of a claim of title by simple discovery or by any naked formality, and there can be no question that in 1670 the French had no actual possession of any part of the lands round Hudson's Bay.

Report of T.
K. Ramsay,
Q.C., March,

Note C.—The report of the Commissioners of Crown Lands in 1857 is incorrect in saying that the commission to Roberval "included Hudson's Bay, though not then, of course, known by that name." The writer would have extended geographical knowledge had he told us by what name it was, and by whom known in 1540. It is possible the official writer mistook "The Great Bay," which is mentioned by Jeffrey (from whom he quotes), as the name by which Hudson's Bay was known in 1540? Then, and long after, "La grande baie" was the name given to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, from "le cap de St. Louis à l'entrée de la baie des Chaleurs." (Denis' Description de l'Amérique Septentrionale, 1672. Tom. I., p. 164, chap. 7.)

In the same report it is said that in "1627 the Quebec Fur Company was formed under the auspices of Cardinal Richelieu, and an exclusive charter granted to them for the whole of New France or Canada, described as extending to the Arctic Circle." This is incorrect. At the time it is not unlikely that the French Government knew little or nothing of the two early English voyages of discovery to Hudson's Bay, and they could not have known anything of these parts from their own voyages, for no French expedition had ever then been there. But the arrêt of 1627 does not mention Hudson's Bay. It gives the Company the whole country from Florida, "en rangeant les Côtés de l'Amérique jusqu' au Cercle Arctique." (Ed. and Ords., Tom. I, p. 7. Quebec, 1854.)

Note D.—In the oft-repeated description by L'Escurbot it is said that La Nouvelle France is bounded to the north by "cette terre qui est dite inconnue vers la mer glacée jusqu' au pôle arctique." Thus he does not pretend that La Nouvelle France stretches to the Frozen Ocean (L'Escurbot, vol. I, p. 31, ed. 1611), as Mr. Cauchon's Report seems to imply, but only to the unknown lands, which, in their turn, extend to the Frozen Ocean. Having quoted the passage of L'Escurbot referred to, Garnieu adds: "Mais ces limites étaient plus imaginaires que réelles, puisque l'on ne donnassait pas alors même la vallée entière du St. Laurent."

Note E.—"Il est certain que ce fut Henry Hudson, anglais qui en 1611 donna son nom et à la Baie et au détroit par où il entra." (Charlevoix I, p. 476.)

Note F.—Mr. Justice Monk, in the case of Connolly vs. Woolrich, p. 14, says: "From the voyage of Sir Thomas Button in 1611 till the year 1667, it (Hudson's Bay) appears to have been wholly neglected by the English Government and Nation." There is, however, no doubt about the voyages of Fox and James.

Note G.—Medard Chouard des Grozeliers ("the name is spelled in a variety of ways;" L'Abbé Tanquay writes, "Medard Chouart des Grozelliers,") Pierre Esprit Hayet-Radisson, and Pierre LeMoyne d'Iberville. These three names are intimately connected with the history of the early settlement of Hudson's Bay. Des Grozeliers came from Touraine when very young and became a voyageur of some repute. (Ferland, 2^{de} Pie, p. 80. Jermie Rel. de la Baie d'Hudson, p. 14. Mere de l'Incarnation Lettre d' Août, 1670.) He reported that, being to the north of Lake Superior, he met some Indians who led him to James' Bay. Subsequently, he endeavoured to induce the principal merchants in Quebec to fit out an expedition to visit the North Sea; but failing in this, (1) he went to Boston, and from thence to Paris, (2) and finally to London, in search of persons sufficiently adventurous to carry out his scheme. In London his representations were favourably listened to, and a New England captain, Zacariah Gillam, was sent off with des Grozeliers in 1668 or 1664. (3) They built a fort, which they called Charles or Rupert.

(1) Jeremie says that he did induce the Merchants in Quebec to fit out a bark with which he went to the Bay and discovered Nelson River; but the whole of his narrative up to the expedition of 1694, in which he was engaged, is totally worthless. He is, however, followed by Murray, who adopts the account of a sea voyage by des Grozelliers from Canada, and gives other details; for all of which he dares not quote any authority. 2 p. 132.

(2) De la Potherie omits the going to Paris.

(3) Oldmixon says 1667; so does M. de Callières in a letter to M. de Seignelay, 25th February, 1685, Doc. Hist. 9, p. 797; Ferland says 1668, 2^{de} pie, p. 80; Murray also says 1668, 2, p. 132. In the French Memoir of the 8th November, 1686, the year at the mouth of the Nemisco River. On their return, the Hudson's Bay Company was formed and obtained a charter, dated 2nd May, 1670. (1) Nowhere is any date given to des Grozelier's alleged first journey overland to James' Bay; indeed it was only formally put forward in 1686 (French Memoir, 8th November, 1686, Doc. Hist. 9) to sustain the French claim to be the first discoverers of the Bay. But, curious to say, in the French Memoir, the year of the Gillam expedition is stated to be 1662. It is, however, perfectly certain that he did not go to the North in 1662, and that the Gillam expedition did not start before 1667—perhaps only in 1668. It seems more than probable that the story of the overland journey to James' Bay was an invention of des Grozeliers in order to draw the Quebec morehants into his scheme. Probably he had heard of Hudson's Bay from the Indians he met in the North-West; for difficult and tedious as was the overland journey, it was not impossible; and occasionally there was some intercourse between those living in Canada and Indians from the neighbourhood of the Bay. Thus, in 1657, eight Canadians went up to the Bastican with twenty canoes of Algonquins. The voyage was rough, long, and dangerous, though prosperous, and they met with the Kiristinons "qui sont proche de la mer du Nord." (Journal des Jesuites, p. 217.) Again, in 1664, it is said 80 Kiristinons came as far as Montreal to look for a Missionary. (Ibid.) But it seems very odd if he had really made any such journey that the records of the Jesuits should be silent on the subject. From their journal we learn that, in 1659, des Grozeliers did go up to Lake Superior, and passed the winter with the Nation de Boeuf, returning the following year to Canada with 300 Ottawas and a great quantity of fur. He was at Three Rivers on the 24th August, 1660. Again we hear of him on 3rd May, 1662, and he then said he was going to La Mer du Nord. He passed the night at Quebec, and he wrote to the Governor from Cap Tourmente (2). We know nothing positive of his subsequent movements for some time; but it is not unlikely that after leaving Quebec, he passed the years from 1662 to 1667 advocating his project of a voyage to Hudson's Bay. This conjecture would also account for the error of the French Memoir in placing the date of the Gillam expedition in 1662. It would appear that des Grozeliers was accompanied by Radisson, to whose sister he was married, and that Radisson was married to an English woman. (De Frontenac's letter, 2nd Nov., 1681.) This marriage of Radisson is involved in great confusion. De la Potherie tells us that Lord Preston, who was Ambassador at Paris, promised to make a servant of his named Godet perpetual Secretary of the Embassy, if he could prevail on Radisson to go to England, and that Godet, as an inducement to Radisson, promised him his daughter in marriage (1,145). Charlevoix says that the negotiation took place through a servant of Lord Preston, called "Cads," (1, p. 481), and that Radisson was then married to a daughter of Chevalier Kirke; that he went to London, where he was cordially received by his father-in-law, and that he was granted a pension of 12,000 livres a year. Shea, in a note to his translation of Charlevoix (3,233), says that it was Sir David Kirke's daughter he married. Another account (Murray, 2,131) is that des Grozeliers was induced to go to England by Mr. Montague, the English Ambassador, who gave him a letter to Prince Rupert. Murray gives no authority for his version; but it is possible there may be some truth in all these stories, though certainly not all true. The following dates are correct, and contradict much of them. Des Grozeliers' first expedition to England must have been prior to the summer of 1668. Ralph Montague was Ambassador at Paris from September, 1668, to 1678. Radisson was married to an Englishwoman before November, 1681. (De Frontenac's letter, 40 2nd November, 1681.) Radisson's second visit to England was in 1684, and then Sir David is given twice as 1662, Doc. Hist. 9; Charlevoix gives the year as 1663, vol. 1., p. 476; and in this he is followed by Garneau, 2, p. 126; but in the Fautes Chronologiques Charlevoix says 1668; again Dobbes says 1667, but later he says Gillam was there from 1668 to 1673; in the description of the right and title of the Crown of Great Britain to Hudson's Bay, June 2, 1709, Eng. MSS. vol. 1., p. 64, it is said that Saclary Gillam went there in 1667, in the "Nonsuch," to explore and make a settlement in Hudson's Bay, and built Charles Fort at Rupert River.

(1) Ferland says 1669. He is not the originator of this error. I have seen it elsewhere. It arises from a miscalculation of the year of the King's reign. The charter is dated the 2nd day of May, in the two and twentieth year of the King's reign. Charles the 1st was beheaded the 30th January, 1649; the 22nd year, therefore, began on the 31st January, 1670.

(2) Under date May, 1662, in the Journal des Jesuites, there is this entry: "Je partis de Quebec le 3 pour les Trois Rivières, je retrai de Groseliers qui s'en alloit à la Mer du Nord. Il passa la nuit devant Quebec avec 10 hommes et étant arrivé au Cap Tourmente, il l'escrivit à Mons. le Gouverneur," p. 308.

Kirke had been dead nearly thirty years. He died in 1655 or 1656 (Shea's translation of Charlevoix 3,232-6—6, 124.) In 1670, Radisson accompanied the new Governor back to Hudson's Bay. We hear of him, and also of des Grozeliens, at Fort Nelson, in 1673, and at Fort Rupert in 1674. They obtained their pardon in 1676 from the King of France, and returned to Canada. I do not know when they returned to Canada, nor can the date be given by M. de Callieres in his letter to M. de Seignelay, 25th February, 1685, he relied on, for he goes on to speak of the Canadian Company having been formed in 1676. This is evidently an error, if not an intentional mis-statement, for in a memoir of the Compagnie du Nord établie en Canada, 1698, P. M. S. VIII. 265, it is said: "Elle la Compagnie commença cette entreprise en 1682." Before we have anything more to do with Radisson in Hudson's Bay, he served under Marshal d'Estrées in the West Indies, and obtained permission from him to go in a vessel belonging to S. de la Chesnay ("Aubert de la Chenayo" is one of the signatures to the Memoire de la Compagnie du Nord, 15 November, 1690, Paris, M. S. V., p. 156), to make settlements along the coast leading to Hudson's Bay. This was prior to November, 1681. (M. de Frontenac, 2nd Nov., 1681, Doe. Hist. 9.) In 1682 a company was formed at Quebec to trade to Hudson's Bay. This was the commencement of this enterprise. (Memoire de la Cie. du Nord, établie en Canada, 1698, P. M. S. VIII., p. 265.) There was a complaint by the English Ambassador that in 1682, Radisson and other Frenchmen had gone with two barks, called the "St. Pierre" and the "Ste. Anne," to Fort Nelson, and seized the fort and the property found there. (The King to M. de la Barre, 10th April, 1684.) They also took Benjamin Gillam, son of their old captain, prisoner. They also captured a Boston ship, and took it to Quebec. (De la Potherie I, 143.) M. de la Barre caused the ship to be restored to the owners, for which he was severely reprimanded by the Minister (10th April, 1684).

Des Grozeliens and Radisson, from some cause or other, became dissatisfied with their partners in the Hudson's Bay trade. It is not unlikely they were not over-pleased with the restitution of their capture. At all events, Radisson went to France in 1684. From France he went to London, induced by Lord Preston, as some say, and there he succeeded so well that the same year he sailed from Hudson's Bay with five ships. He captured Fort Nelson by surprise, 16th August, 1684,—(Instructions from M. de Dononville, 12th February, 1686), took prisoner his own nephew, together with all the Frenchmen he found there, and carried them to London. He also carried off an immense quantity of furs, and did the Canadian Company £400,000 worth of damage. De la Potherie says 300,000 livres, which is more credible. After this, we hear very little of MM. Des Grozeliens and Radisson. It would appear, however, that Radisson wintered in the Bay in 1685-'6, for the excuse for de Troyes' expedition was the capture of Radisson. (Instructions of M. de Dononville to de Troyes', 12th February, 1686; letter of de Dononville, 10th November, 1686.) In 1685, the Canadian Company obtained a charter (20th May). In 1686, de Troyes and d'Iberville went overland to Hudson's Bay. They first attacked Fort Mississippi or Moose Fort, which they took. They next surprised Fort Rupert. On the 16th July, they took Fort Chechouan or Albany. On the 10th August, 1686, de Troyes started on his return journey to Montreal. (Do la Potherie, I, p. 147; Ferland, 2de partie, 164.) M. de la Potherie says that six months after, having sent the English prisoners home, d'Iberville went to Quebec; but it would appear, from a letter from M. de Dononville to M. de Seignelay, he was still supposed to be in command of the forts at Hudson's Bay on the 25th August, 1687. On the 31st October, 1688, M. de Dononville announces the return of d'Iberville, but says he was to return to the Bay. In 1688, it would seem, the English built Fort Churchill, towards the end of the year. (Memoire de la Cie. du Nord, 15 November, 1690.) In 1688 d'Iberville took two English ships. (See the account given of it in the letter of Sr. Patu de Quebec, 14th November, 1689, and in d'Iberville's letter of the 17th, in which he promised to go back next year and take Fort Nelson, if he could obtain the assistance he required.) Fort Churchill was captured by the French in 1689 (Memoire de la Cie du Nord, 15 November, 1690.) In 1690 d'Iberville returned, intending to take Fort Nelson, but being repulsed he landed and forced the English to abandon Fort Nieu Savanne. He had gone there with three ships called "La Sainte Anne," "Les Armes de la Compagnie," and "Le Saint Francois." In 1693, the English re-took the Forts Chechouan or Albany, Mississippi or Moose Fort, and

Rupert. (De la Potherie I, 165.) No one but de la Potherie mentions the retaking of Moose Fort and Fort Rupert, and in 1700 the Hudson's Bay Company complain of the French encroachments, saying that, owing to them, they have only one settlement remaining out of seven they had. It would, therefore, seem that if the English re-took Moose and Rupert Forts, they lost them before 1700. In 1694, d'Iberville, in command of two of the King's ships, which were lent to the Company, sailed for Hudson's Bay to retake Fort Nelson. Jeremie, who was in the expedition, says the two ships were the "Poli" and the "Charente." He is followed in this by l'Abbé Ferland (2 Pie, p. 278.) P. Marest, who was also in the expedition as "aumonier," says de Serigny commanded the "Salamandre," and his relation is called "voyage du Poli et Salamandre." (Lettres Ed. Nouv. Ed. vol. VI., p. 4.) In the letter of MM. de Frontenac et de Champigny to the Minister, 5th Nov., 1694, 10 it is said that de Serigny commanded the "Salamandre." De Baequeville de la Potherie, who was the King's Commissioner in the expedition of 1697, say that the ships sent out in 1694, were the "Poli" and "Salamandre" (vol. I, 1661.) He says they sailed from Quebec on the 8th August, de Frontenac et de Champigny says the 9th August, and Jeremie says the 10th August, jour de St. Laurent (p. 17.) MM. de la Potherie and Jeremie agree that they reached Fort Nelson the 24th September; L'Abbé Ferland says the 20th September. The Fort capitulated on the 12th October. D'Iberville remained at Fort Nelson fifteen months. He then returned to Canada, leaving La Forest as Governor. In 1696 the English returned, recaptured Fort Nelson, and carried off the Governor and all the Beaver. The capitulation by La Forest of Fort Nelson (alias York, alias Bourbon), is that mentioned in the 8th Article of the Treaty of Ryswick. The capitulation was dated 31st August, 1696, but it is spoken of as 20 the capitulation of the 1st September, and in the Treaty as of the 5th September. In 1697 a fleet of five ships sailed from La Rochelle to retake Fort Nelson, namely, "Le Profond," "Le Palmier," "Le Weesph," "Le Pelican," and "Le Violent." M. de la Potherie went as the King's Commissioner. "Le Violent" was crushed in the ice. Action between the "Pelican," the "Hampshire," the "Dering," and the "Hudson's Bay," 3rd September. The "Hampshire" was sunk by the French ships; the "Hudson's Bay" was captured, and the "Dering" escaped. "Le Pelican" was very much shattered in the action with the English ships, and went ashore next day in a storm and was lost. The other three French ships coming up, d'Iberville attacked Fort Nelson, which he took about the 12th September. D'Iberville left his brother, de Serigny, in command of the Fort, and sailed on his return voyage on the 24th September. (De la Potherie, I, p. 183; Jeremie, who was also in this expedition, and who remained 30 with de Serigny at the Fort). At this point M. Garneaux exclaims, "Ainsi le dernier poste que les Anglais avaint dans le baie d'Hudson tomba en notre pouvoir, et la France resta seule maitresse de cette région." (2 p. 137). M. Garneau totally overlooked the three forts in James' Bay retaken by the English in 1693, and one of which, Fort Anne or Chechouan, he mistook for Fort Nelson. At any rate Fort Anne or Chechouan remained in possession of the English from 1693, and they never lost it. It was unsuccessfully attacked by de Menthel in 1709. (Paris M.S. 11, p. 123; Letter of de Vaudreuil to the Minister, 25th October, 1710, p. 139.)

To avoid confusion, it may be well to enumerate the forts, and to give their different names. In 1700, the company said that they had had seven forts, and that by the encroachments of the French there remained to them only one. (Pownall papers MMS.) Six of the seven only 40 appear to have given rise to any contest; the seventh I presume to be East Main. The six others are—

1st. Fort Rupert, called by the French St. Jacques, founded in 1667 or 1668 by Gillam. Taken by the French under de Troyes and d'Iberville July, 1686. Retaken by the English in 1693.

2nd. Fort Mississippi, Monsonis, St. Louis, or Moose Fort, taken by de Troyes and d'Iberville about the 20th June, 1686. Retaken in 1693.

3rd. Fort Chechouan, Ste. Anne, or Albany, taken by de Troyes and d'Iberville in 1686. Retaken in 1693.

4th. New Severn, or Nien Savanne, taken by d'Iberville in 1690.

5th. Fort Bourdon, Nelson on York, founded in 1670. Taken by des Grozeliers and Radisson, 50 acting for the French, in 1682; retaken by Radisson, acting for the English, in 1684; retaken by d'Iberville 12th October, 1694; retaken by the English 1696, and again by the French in 1697. It remained in the possession of the French until 1714, when it was given up under the Treaty of Utrecht.

6th. Fort Churchill, built 1688, and taken by the French in 1689.

Note H.—In the memoir of the French right to the Iroquois country and Hudson's Bay of the 8th November, 1686, it is said that in 1656 Jean Bourdon ran along the entire coast of Labrador with a vessel of 30 tons, entered and took possession of the North Bay, and that this is proved by an extract of the ancient register of the Council of New France of the 26th of August of the said year (1656.)

- 10 Unfortunately the register in question is not now in existence; but if it were, it could not prove what the writer of this memoir pretends. At most it was but an authorization (1) to Jean Bourbon to undertake the voyage to the coast of Labrador, and not a recital of what he actually did, for Bourdon's voyage was in 1657 and not in 1656. He sailed from Quebec on the 2nd May, 1657, and returned on the 11th August of the same year at ten at night. (Journal des Jésuites pp. 209-218.) But we are not left in any doubt as to the extent of Bourdon's voyage. On reference to the "Relations des Jésuites," vol. III., 1658-9, we find this entry: "Le 11 (August) parut la barque de Monsieur Bourdon, lequel estant descendu sur "le grand fleuve du côté du Nord, voyage à jusques au 55 degré, ou il rencontra un grand banc de glace, "qui le fit remonter aiant perdu deux Hurons qu'il avait pris pour guides. Les Esquimaux sauvages du "Nord les massacrèrent et blessèrent un François de trois coups de flèches et d'un coup de couteau."

- 20 Note I.—Dablon never reached Hudson's Bay; the extreme limit of his journey being only 100 leagues from Tadousac. We learn from the "Journal des Jésuites," that he started for "la Mission St. Fr. aux Keristinons" the 11th May, 1661, p. 296. He left Tadousac on the 1st or 2nd June. On the 6th, the Iroquois attacked Tadousac, and drove away all the Canadians. They even came up to the Isle d'Orleans and the Côte Beupré, and killed several persons. At page 300 of the Journal, there is this entry: "1661, Juillet le 27, retournèrent ceux qui étoient allés on prétendoient aller à la mer du Nord ou aux Kiristinons P. Dablon, &c." In the "Relation des Jésuites," we have the relation of this voyage, which is called "Journal du premier voyage fait vers la mer du Nord." (12 août 1661.) The account dated from the highest point they reached, "Nekouba 100 lieues de Tadousac, 2 Juillet, 1661." See also Journal of Count of Frontenac, 1673, when the importance of making it appear that Dablon had been at Hudson's Bay was fully understood. (Doc. Hist., vol. 9.)

Note J.—The voyage of Albanel and St. Simon is not open to the same objections as that of Dablon. It would appear that they performed the whole journey from Canada to Hudson's Bay, and that they took formal possession in the King's name. (Relation de 1672.) The difficulty to this voyage as giving a title to the King of France, is that it came too late (1671-'2), and after the English were in possession of Hudson's Bay. Besides, it was only a formality, for the French took no steps towards making a settlement there till 1682. (Ferland, 2nde partie, p. 83.)

- Note K.*—The dealings with the Indians from Hudson's Bay cannot be relied on as a title. Besides, we have the repeated assurance that trade with Hudson's Bay could only be carried on by sea. (Denonville on State of Canada, 12th Nov., 1685, Doc. Hist. 9; Letter from Denonville au Ministre, 10th Nov., 1686; Paris, Doc. MS. V; same to de Seignelay, 25th August, 1687, Doc. Hist. 9; Memorial de la Cie du Nord, 1698.) This conclusion had not been arrived at without an effort to keep up communication by land. M. de la Barre, on the 9th November, 1783, writes: "The people who have been at Hudson's Bay have returned after having encountered extreme dangers." * * * "It is expected that communication can be had with it overland, as will be seen by the maps he sends."

(1) Besides, see letter of M. de Callieres to M. de Seignelay, 26th February, 1685.

Note L.—Dobbes says that Hudson's and Button's Journals are not to be found. Murray says: "It is remarkable that no original of this voyage (Button's) has been published, and that it is not even mentioned by Purchas, who made it his business to collect accounts of all voyages made at this era." (Vol. 2, p. 56.) In Rose's Biographical and Geographical Dictionary, it is said there is an extract of Button's Journal in Purchas. Both the Biographical Dictionary and Mr. Murray are in error. There is no extract of the Journal in Purchas. On the contrary, Purchas says he had not seen the Journal, but he had seen the chart, which was also seen by Champlain, p. 926, ed. 1617. Murray, probably, had only looked at the first edition of Purchas, which was printed in 1613, so that it was hardly possible for it to contain any mention of Button's voyage, which only terminated that year. Although not in Purchas, a fragment of Button's Journal was communicated to Fox by Sir Thomas Roe. (Hakluyt 10 Society Papers. See also Appendix.) Even in the absence of any mention of Button's Journal in Purchas, there is no doubt of the voyage having taken place. It is not questioned by foreign writers. As an example, see Anecdotes Americaines, Paris, 1776, by Hornot.

It is hardly necessary to answer the doubt thrown out by the French Memoir and by Dobbes on Hudson's voyage. If we have not Hudson's Journal, which, under the circumstances, is not very remarkable, we have, at all events, the account of Pricket, who, in his own justification, wrote an account of the mutiny; and, in doing so, he mentions Hudson's discoveries. (Harris' complete collection of Voyages and Travels, 2, p. 244.)

Note M.—There is a great uncertainty as to what sort of discovery or occupation gives a title.

In the report of the Commissioner of Crown Lands in 1857, it is maintained, citing the Oregon 20 dispute as an authority, that a discovery "not made known to the world either by the discoverer himself or by his Government, has no value." This would destroy one of the Commissioner's own pretensions.

M. Denonville, in a memoir on the French limits in North America, in 1688, makes the right depend on discovery, and "planting the arms of the King or Prince." But the French officials urged claims, owing to voyages where no such formality was or could be complied with.

Note N.—In 1671, the French authorities in Canada could not venture to fix a date for the first taking possession of Hudson's Bay. In Tallon's Memoir to the King, 2nd November, 1671, he says: those countries were anciennement discovered by the French. (Doc. Hist. vol. 9.) It seems to be only in February, 1685, that the French detailed their pretensions. The 15th May, 1678, the French Minister, writing to M. du Chesneau, takes exception to what du Chesneau had written about giving passes to 30 private persons, and remarks: "It is of advantage to the King's service to go towards that Bay, in order to be able to contest the title thereto of the English, who pretend," etc. On the 15th August, 1683, the King, writing to M. de la Barre, recommends him "to prevent as much as possible the English establishing themselves in Hudson's Bay, possession whereof has been taken in my name several years ago." (Doc. Hist. 9.) In the Relations des Jésuites, the narrative of the voyage of P. Dablon is called "Journal du premier voyage fait vers la mer du Nord." This was in 1661. In the relation of 1667, they say they know nothing of the country, but the reports of the Indians. (1667, 23.) On the 18th March, 1688, M. Denonville is instructed to make the strictest search possible for titles. In a letter of August, 1670, la Mère de l'Incarnation, who knew des Grozeliens well, because he was from Touraine, from which Province she came, mentions the expedition of des Grozeliens in the English ship, and speaks 40 of him on that account, as being the discoverer of the Bay.

Note O.—Commissaries were named under the Treaty of Neutrality, on the part of England. They were the Earl of Sunderland, Lord President of the Council and Principal Secretary of State; the Earl of Middleton, Principal Secretary of State; and Lord Godolphin, one of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury. On the part of France, the Pr. Barillon, Ambassador, and the Pr. Bonrepaux, Envoy Extraordinary. They had their first conference 18th May, 1687. (Doc. Hist. 3, p. 506.) In 1687, complaints were made of the injuries done by the French. (Collection of Treaties, 1648 to 1710.) It would seem the Commissaries arrived at no conclusion, and in 1687 the English Commissaries report that the Company have full right to the Bay and Straits of Hudson, and to the trade thereof. (1 vol. Trade and Plantations, MS. p. 89; Pownall papers in Lib. of Parl.)

Note P.—They lost all their forts save Nelson in 1686, and Garneau says they lost their last fort in 1697. (Garneau, vol. 1, p. 137.) But this is an error. (See note G.) On the 20th, 1701, the Governor and Company of Hudson's Bay petitioned the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations on the subject of their losses in the Bay. In this petition they say they have lost all their settlements but one out of seven, namely, "Albany, vulgarly called Chechonan."

10 Note Q.—The Treaty of Ryswick was not altogether so disastrous to the Hudson's Bay Company as it is represented. In order fully to understand its operations, its terms must be brought into relation with the position of the contending parties there.

Article VII. stipulated that within six months, or sooner if it could be done, the King of France should restore to the King of England all countries, islands, forts, and colonies wheresoever situated, which the English possessed before the declaration of the war (1689), and that, on the other hand, the King of England should do likewise for the French possessions.

By Article VIII. it was stipulated that Commissioners should be appointed to examine and determine the rights and pretensions which either of the said Kings had to the places situated in Hudson's Bay. But the places taken by the French during the peace preceding the present war, and retaken by the English during the war, should be left to the French. The capitulation of the 5th September, 1696, was to be carried out, the Governor then taken released, and the merchandize to be valued by commissioners who were also to decide what lands belonged to the French and what to the English.

From these two articles we deduce, first, the general principle that there should be a mutual restoration of conquests made during the war; second, that the affairs of Hudson's Bay gave rise to a question, to be settled by a joint commission, which might make it an exception to the general principle in so far as regards English conquests during the war; third, that until the Commissioners should decide as to the merits of this question, English conquests during the war should follow the general principle; fourth, that the capitulation of the 5th September, 1696 (during the war), should be carried out.

Commissaries were appointed, but it does not appear that they settled anything. Their dilatoriness caused some comment. (Letter of Frontenac to Bellomont, 21st September, 1698; Lords of Trade to Bellomont, 5th January, 1698-9, the King to Frontenac, 25th March, 1699; letter from de Callières to Governor Nanfan, 6th August, 1699.) While the Commissaries negotiated, events in Europe were preparing the way for a new war. By his will, Charles II., who died 1st November, 1700, bequeathed the Crown of Spain to the grandson of Louis XIV. On the 24th November the King of France accepted the succession for his nephew. This led, early in 1701, to the negotiations for the Grande Alliance, which was signed 7th September, 1701. On the 16th September James II. died, and Louis XIV. recognized his son as King of Great Britain, in violation of the Treaty of Ryswick. This caused the Emperor to add another article, to the effect that he would not treat of peace with France until she had offered England reparation for this affront. France having refused to do this, war was declared by the States General, 8th May, by Great Britain 14th May, and by the Emperor 15th May, 1702. (Garden Hist. des Traités de paix, Tom. 2, ch. x.)

Note R.—Both the Treaties signed at Utrecht—the Treaty of Commerce and the Treaty of Peace—required the appointment of commissaries to regulate certain questions that could not be determined summarily. The treaties were signed on the 13th April, 1713, and no great time was lost in appointing commissaries. Those representing the King of France were MM. Anison and Fenelon, Deputez au Conseil de Commerce, whom Lord Bolingbroke had, on a previous occasion, contemptuously styled "Mercantile Politicians," and M. d'Arville, a diplomatist of some note, who must not be confounded with the Canadian sailor of that name, who died in 1706 at Havana. (Pownall papers, v. 7.) Messrs. Anison and Fenelon arrived in London on the 17th February, 1713-4 (Lord Bolingbroke's letter of the 19th, Pownall papers, v., p. 19.) M. d'Iberville, who had preceded them, arrived before the 17th December, 1713, on which day he had an interview with Lord Bolingbroke, to whom he brought a special letter of introduction from M. de Torey, dated the 14th December. (Letter to the Queen 8th December, 1713; Ibid, 17th December, Bolingbroke's correspondence, vol. IV., p. 387.) The English Commissioners were Charles Whitworth, James Murray, Esq., Sir Joseph Martin, Kt., and Frederick Herne, Esq. (Letter to Mr. Whitworth, December 23rd, 1713, correspondence IV., 408). There was no mention of M. d'Iberville in the commission of the King of France, dated Versailles, 10th February, 1714; but he desired to take part in the discussions under his private instructions. It appears that this difficulty was overcome by the issue of a new Commission including M. d'Iberville, of the same date as the other. Another difficulty soon presented itself. The inhabitants of Montserrat had sent a petition to the Queen, and the Hudson's Bay Company sent a memoir, setting forth their claims. The petition and memoir were forwarded by Lord Bolingbroke to the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations, who at the same time intimated that the commissaries "now here" have not "any powers to treat upon the said matters." (Pownall papers, v., p. 35.) It would seem that the difficulty as to powers had been already raised, and been admitted by the French commissaries who wrote to the King for "more ample powers." (London, 11-12th March, 1714; Ibid, p. 22.) In May the Commissioners of Trade and Plantation wrote to Mr. Martin, Secretary to the English commissaries, to know whether the French commissaries were empowered to treat upon the subject matter of the memorial and petition pursuant to the 10th, 11th, and 15th Articles of the Treaty of Peace with France. (Minutes of the 11th May, 1714. Ib.) Mr. Martin answered on the 12th, saying, that the French commissaries were not empowered to treat about Hudson's Bay and the Island of Montserrat; but that the Envoy of France, M. d'Iberville, had told Mr. Whitworth that a general mention thereof was made in his instructions, and he should receive more particular orders from his Court, whenever demanded. (Minutes of the 13th. Ibid.) The Commissioners of Trade and Plantations immediately resolved that the commissaries of France should be notified that the commissaries should be named to treat of these matters pursuant to the 10th, 11th, and 15th Articles of the Treaty of Peace.

It is somewhat odd that there should have been any question on this point, for neither in the Queen's instructions to the English commissaries, nor in the commission of the French commissaries, was there any reference to the Treaty of Peace. It does not appear that more ample powers were ever accorded to those commissaries, and on the 9th June, 1714, the English commissaries report the deliberations "at a stand." Thus the first effort to establish the limits of Hudson's Bay failed.

The death of the Queen, and the change of policy which followed on the succession of the House of Hanover, put an end to any immediate prospect of settling these delicate questions as to boundaries. The Treaty of Utrecht was no longer popular, and nothing seems to have been done in the matter for some years. The next mention of the subject, I have found, is contained in a despatch to M. de Vaudreuil and Begon, dated 23rd May, 1719. (Doc. Hist. 9.) In this despatch, the King says he has instructed his Ambassador in England to propose the nomination of commissaries on both sides agreeably to the Treaty of Utrecht, for the settlement of the boundaries of New France. With the materials within my reach, I have not been able to trace the steps taken to fix these boundaries; but having had communication of the notes of Chief Justice Draper, who went to England in 1857, to represent the late Province of Canada before a Committee of the House of Commons, I take the liberty of copying from him. The Chief Justice says: "On 3rd September, 1719, instructions were given to Daniel Pulteney and to Martin Bladen, Esqrs., as Commissioners for Great Britain, under several Articles of the Treaty of Utrecht which, after a special reference to the 10th Article of the Treaty, proceeds thus: 'You are to endeavour to get the said limit settled in the following manner, that is to say,' giving a particular description, and then adding: 'But you are to take especial care in wording such articles as shall be agreed on with the commissary or commissaries of His Most Christian Majesty on this head that the said boundaries be understood to regard the trade of the Hudson's Bay only; that His Majesty does not thereby recede from his right to any lands in America, not comprised within the said boundaries." In a letter, dated Paris, 7th Nov. (N.S.), 1719, Colonel Bladen writes to the Lords of Trade: "And this day we shall deliver in the Company's demand upon that subject (the boundary of Hudson's Bay) in the terms of our instructions, although I already foresee some difficulty in the execution of this affair, there being at least the difference of two degrees between the best French maps and that which the Company delivered us."

"Again, in November, 1719, Lord Stair and Colonel Bladen delivered to the Mareschal d'Estrees, one of the French Commissaries, the demand of the H. B. Company. The other French Commissary, the 10 Abbe Dubois (afterwards Cardinal), was prevented by indisposition from attending.

"On the 3rd January, 1720, Lord Stair wrote to Secretary Craggs: 'J'ay parlé aussi touchant la "commission pour les limites son A. R. ma assuré qu'on tiendroit incessamment des nouvelles conférences.'"

"Similar assurances were transmitted to Lord Stair from the French Regent in several letters."

"On the 29th February, 1720, Lord Stair wrote: 'De la manière que Mons. le Maroschal d'Estrees, m'a parlé aujourd'hui nous seront encore du temps sans voir renner les conférences sur les limites en Amerique.'"

(The French spelling is Lord Stair's. I copied from originals. Note by Chief Justice Draper.)

"14th April, 1718, Mr. Secretary Craggs writes to Mr. Pulteney, then at Paris: 'As my Lord Stair is on the point of leaving Paris, H. My. would have you use this occasion, either yourself directly or by 20 His Excellency, as you shall judge proper, to demand some peremptory answer upon the subject of your commission, and whether the French Court will renew the conférences with you; which, if you find they will not, H. My. thinks it needless, in that case, for you to make any longer stay at Paris, and would have you say you are to come away, but not come away until such time as you shall have further orders from hence.'"

"Mr. Pulteney's letters, which I have examined, showed that he and Lord Stair made many fruitless attempts to get the French Commissaries to meet them, but though repeated promises were made, there was no meeting after Colonel Bladen had submitted the British proposals and the map."

"Colonel Bladen was again in Paris in 1722, but his letters made no allusions whatever to the limits in America. They refer to some matters connected with Ste. Lucie, as to which it does not appear 30 whether any arrangement was made."

"By a letter from Sir Robert Sutton to Secretary Craggs, dated Paris, 8th September, 1720, it appears nothing had been done in regard to 'settling the limits in America, beginning with Hudson's Bay.'"

"I could not trace any further correspondence on this subject in the State Paper Office until after the Treaty of Aix la Chapelle (October, 1748). But in July, 1750, the H. B. Company were again called upon to lay before the Lords of Trade an account of the boundaries granted to them, and they repeat what their former memorials stated on the negotiations for carrying out the Treaty of Utrecht. They refer to their proposals as what they still desired, and they stated that the Commissioners under that treaty were never able to bring the settlements of those limits to a final conclusion."

"But there is a letter from the Duke of Bedford to the Earl of Albemarle, dated 12th February, 40 1749-50, stating that the commissaries for settling the limits will be ready to set out for Paris as soon as Governor Shirley has finished some affairs now depending with the Board of Trade, and on the 16th
April, 1750, the Duke of Bedford writes to the Earl of Albemarle to the effect that Mr. Shirley and Mr.
Mildmay, or one of them, will be in Paris 'as soon as this letter,' to act as Commissioners, there to settle the difference between England and France as to encroachments of the latter in North America."

The French commissaries were M. Silhouette and M. de la Galissonnière. They sailed from Quebec in the "Leopard," on the 24th September, 1749, to return to France to meet the English commissaries, General Shirley and Mr. Mildmay (Ferland, 2^{de} Pie, p. 495). These Commissaries had no greater success than those who preceded them. In the private instructions from the King to M. de Vandreuil, of the 1st April, 1755 (Doc. Hist. 10), it is stated that commissaries had been appointed on both sides, that they did meet at Paris to regulate all the disputes concerning the French and British possessions. The King regrets that the success of the labours of these commissaries to the present time did not correspond to the hopes he had entertained, and that as yet the commissaries had not entered on the limits of Canada further than what regards Acadia. It seems they never did enter seriously on the question of the limits of Canada. Several bulky volumes made known to the world what they did. The first of the papers exchanged is dated September, 1750, and the last the 7th June, 1755; by a strange coincidence, the very day Boscawen captured the "Lys" and the "Aleide." The only tangible proposition I have found in all these volumes is that the St. Lawrence is to be the centre of Canada. The English commissaries say they do not know what is meant by that; neither do I.

The capture of the "Lys" and the "Aleide" was really the commencement of hostilities 10 between France and England, but the formal declaration of war was not until the 18th May, 1756. There was, however, an end of negotiation until after the taking of Quebec, when negotiations were recommenced. They lasted from the 26th March to the 20th September, 1761. See the "Mémoire historique sur les négociations de la France et de l'Angleterre," prepared by the King's order by the Duc de Choiseul, Paris, 1761.) Those were, I believe, the last negotiations until the Treaty of Paris (1763).

In the meantime, it would appear, that so far as the Hudson's Bay territory was concerned the limits were practically settled.

In a map by John Senex, F.R.S., 1711 (A 3) we find a dotted line indicating a division between Canada and the Hudson's Bay territories, similar to the one described and claimed by the Hudson's Bay 20 Company. In a map in Carver's travels (1778) this is carried out to the Atlantic. In Mitchell's map (1755), (A 4), there is a line similar to that on Senex's map, with the words "Bounds of Hudson's Bay by the Treaty of Utrecht." Bennett's map of 1770 coincides with Mitchell's. (Bouchette's British Dominions, I, p. 30.) In a map published from 1754 to 1761, by John Roque, Topographer to His Britannic Majesty, we have much the same line, called "Southern boundaries of Hudson's Bay territories as settled by the commissaries of the Treaty of Utrecht." In Vaugondy's map (i.e. was son of the geographer to the King of France), in 1750, we find a similar line, but without any words explaining it. (A 5.) Douglas in his summary, published in 1747, says: "By the Treaty of Utrecht the Canada or French line with Hudson's Bay Company or Great Britain was ascertained, viz., from a certain promontory upon the Atlantic Ocean in lat. n. 56 deg. 30 min. run s.w. to Lake Mistassin (which communicates 30 by Indian water carriage by P. Rupert's River with Hudson's Bay, and by Saguenay River with St. Lawrence River at the Port of Tadoussac, thirty leagues below), and from thence continued s.w. to lat. n. 49 deg., and from thence due west indefinitely."

It is not maintained that the lines shown on these different maps are identical. Mr. Bouchette has remarked on the difference between Mitchell's and Bowen's, the latter giving the 49th parallel. But it is evident they were all aiming at the same natural division—the height of land dividing the waters flowing to the north from those which flow to the south.

The subject of maps would not be fully disposed of without some allusion to the map accompanying the Report of the Commissioner of Crown Lands in 1857, and which appears at the end of the Hudson's Bay Report of the House of Commons of that year. A dotted line enclosing Hudson's Bay is given 40 with the following description: "Boundary of Hudson's Bay after the Treaty of Utrecht, 1703 (sic), according to maps published at Paris in 1720, 1739 and 1771. Another line, giving a little more space to the Hudson's Bay Territory, is thus described: "Northern boundary of Canada at the conquest, according to British geographers." Nothing is more easy than to manufacture history thus. Who are the British geographers? I presume the French maps alluded to are—1720, Delisle's map of the Western hemisphere; 1739, map by the same, published not at Paris, but at Amsterdam; and Vaugondy's map of 1771. Neither of the two first give any boundaries to Hudson's Bay territory. Vaugondy's map of 1771 is, of course, no authority, for it comes after the Treaty of Paris.

Note S.—In the correspondence between Canada and France I have found two allusions to Hudson's Bay after 1713. On the 8th October, 1741, M. de Bemharois, in writing to Count Maurepas, says that the King recommended him to neutralize or utterly destroy the English Ports at Hudson's Bay (Doc. Hist. 9). And the following year (18th June, 1745) M. de Beauharnois explains why he could not carry out the King's orders in this respect.—Ibid.

Note T.—This did not escape the perspicacity of the author of Crown Lands Report of 1857. He says: "The most direct interest that Canada could have in the matter at the present moment, being responsible for the administration of justice, would be rather of a moral and political than of an interested or commercial character."

Note U.—La Nouvelle France, as understood by the French, has never been under one government. The Province of Quebec was first limited in the east by the River St. Jean, in the west by the line from Lake Nipissing, which struck the St. Lawrence about 15 leagues from Montreal. It was then extended, but the extension did not include the territory ceded by Vaudrenil, and claimed by England as Canada; a part was then ceded to the United States by Treaty (1783). What remained was divided into two Provinces (1791), again reunited into one (1840), and lastly, the remnant is joined at once or prospectively to the whole of B.N.A. (1867.)

Note V.—In Dunn's map, 1776, this boundary is given as the "Old Boundary by which the French possessed Canada." It is curious that in Vaugondy's map of 1750 (A 5) a similar line is marked out without anything to show what it was intended to limit, and the paucity of materials prevents our finding out the history of this line. Vaugondy's father was historiographer to the King of France.

Note W.—By the Act of 1774 all the territories and countries heretofore part of the territory of Canada which are within the limits of some other British Colony, or which have, since the 10th February 1763, been made part of the Government of Newfoundland, during His Majesty's pleasure, are annexed to and made part of the Government of Canada. In conformity with this disposition, so much of the Commission of the Governor of Newfoundland was revoked "as related to the Coast of Labrador, including the Island of Anticosti, with any other of the said small islands on the said Coast of Labrador."

Note X.—In 1721 Charlevoix writes: "Jusqu' à présent la Colonie Française n'allait pas plus loin à l'ouest," than the Lake of the Two Mountains and Isle Perrot.

Note Y.—It is curious how deeply rooted was the desire to have the Mississippi recognized as the western boundary of Canada. The people of Canada claimed this in 1773, and the King immediately after the Act of 1774 describes the limits of Canada in his Commissions as following the banks of the Mississippi. Mr. Bouchette, however, did not fall into this error, and in his later and more important work he quotes and comments a document, which negatives this pretension in the most formal manner. Up to the time of ceding Canada to England it was the interest of France to make its limits as extensive as possible, while the interest of England was directly the reverse; but when the negotiations which led to the Treaty of Paris were being carried on, the interest changed. France sought to circumscribe the limits of the provinces she had promised to cede, while England sought to extend them. England, by its answer of 1st September, 1761, to the French ultimatum, claimed "d'un côté le lac Huron, Michigan et Supérieure et la dite ligne (la ligne de ces limites) tirée depuis le lac Rouge, embrasse par un cours tortueux la rivière Ouabache jusqu' à sa jonction avec l'Ohio et de là se prolonge long de cette dernière rivière inclusivement jusqu' à son confluence dans le Mississippi," being the limits as traced by the Marquis de Vaudrenil in capitulating. (13th Sep., 1761, Mémoire du Duc Choiseul, 1761.) Le Duc de Choiseul in his memoir, p. 139, says: "Il était prescrit à M. de Bussy de convenir des limites du Canada et de la Louisiane d'après la carte anglaise quoique très de favorable aux droits et aux possessions de la France." Vandreuil denied having made the tracing in question, and the map has not been found. Was it that mentioned in the French reply as having been presented by Mr. Stanley? On the annexed map A 2, the green line marks the probable "cours tortueux" to the Wabash.

Report of T.
K. Ramsay,
Q. C., March,

Note Z.—In the original draft of the bill the words were "southward to the banks of the River Ohio, westward to the banks of the Mississippi, and northward to the southern boundary." It is therefore probable that the amendment passed unperceived by those who drew the new Commissions; or the Commissions may have been engrossed from drafts made prior to the passing of the Act. In Lord Elgin's Commission, 1846, there is also a curious mistake. The western boundary of Lower Canada is made to extend to the shore of Hudson's Bay. I call it a mistake, for no account can be given of it at the Colonial Office; and by comparing it with the Proclamation of 1791, it will be observed that the alteration consists in using the word "shore" for the words "boundary line." It was not unnatural to say that the "shore" was the "boundary line" of Hudson's Bay.

Note A.A.—I did not fail to notice the words "During His Majesty's pleasure" in the Act of 1774. I take it these words, if more than deferential, cannot be extended, and therefore they would not give the King the power to add to the Province of Quebec. But at all events, he never attempted it for extending the authority of the Governor to the Mississippi cannot be converted into an extension of the province to that line. Otherwise Lord Elgin's commission would have extended Canada to the shore of Hudson's Bay.

Note B.B.—It has been attempted to throw some ridicule on the decision in the De Reinhard case, and it may therefore be worth mentioning that Chief Justice Sewell was probably the man at the time in Canada best fitted to preside in such a case, and that the Bar of Lower Canada could not then, or indeed at any other time, have been more brilliantly represented. The prisoner's counsel, who desired to have the western boundary of Canada extended beyond the due north line from the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, were Andrew Stuart, the equal, if not superior, of his brother, the well-known Sir James Stuart, Vallières de St. Real, afterwards Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, Montreal, and Vanfelson, one of the first-named Judges of the Superior Court after its organization in 1849.

ADDITION TO NOTE Y.

Since my report was sent in, I have received a letter from the Abbé Verreau, now in London prosecuting historical investigations on behalf of the Government, enclosing a correspondence between General Haldimand and Sir Jeffrey Amherst, with respect to the limits of Canada alleged to have been traced by Mr. de Vandreuil, on a map which he gave to General Haldimand, and which has not yet been found. The letters forming this correspondence were copied by the Abbé Verreau from the Haldimand papers in the British Museum.

The Abbé Verreau gives the following account of the work he has obligingly volunteered to perform: "J'ai tenu à copier cette lettre moi-même. Je n'ai trouvé que le projet de Haldimand, corrigé et ratifié avec un soin qui montre l'importance attachée par lui à ce qu'il écrivait. C'est ce qui m'a engagé à copier les ratures; je les ai mises entre parenthèses. Il y a bien deux parenthèses de Haldimand, mais j'en ai indiquée qu'elles sont de lui."

Sec. III.

Report of T.K.
Ramsay, Q.C.,
March, 1873.

DEAR SIR,—I have been twenty times at the point of writing to you on a subject which, though of no consequence, I should be glad to know the exact transactions that passed. When I made a report of Canada to the Secretary of State, I transmitted a copy of the part of the map where the limits between Canada and Louisiana were marked, which you delivered to me, and which I acquainted the Secretary or State were done by Monsieur de Vaudreuil. Whether by him, or done in his presence by his direction, comes to the same thing, and the thing itself is of no sort of consequence, as the letter and orders he (Monsieur de Vaudreuil) sent to the officers commanding at Michillimakinach, the Bay, Oocciatanou, Miannis, &c.,

10 mark out the boundaries and expressly include those posts in Canada, so that there can be no dispute about it; yet as I see some alteration has passed in England and France about Monsieur de Vaudreuil's giving the boundaries, I should be glad to know of you whether he marked the map himself, or whether it was done in his presence, and what passed on that subject, that I may hereafter be able to say all that was done regarding the whole affair.

I am, with great truth, dear Sir,

Your most obedient humble servant,

JEFF. AMHERST.
